Date and Time: Tuesday, September 26, 2023 1:01:00 PM CST

Job Number: 206613606

Documents (100)

1. Shell Oil Co. v. FTC, 360 F.2d 470

   Client/Matter: -None-

   Search Terms: "antitrust law"

   Search Type: Natural Language

   Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

2. United States v. General Motors Corp., 384 U.S. 127

   Client/Matter: -None-

   Search Terms: "antitrust law"

   Search Type: Natural Language

   Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

3. American Infra-Red Radiant Co. v. Lambert Indus., 360 F.2d 977

   Client/Matter: -None-

   Search Terms: "antitrust law"

   Search Type: Natural Language

   Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

4. United States v. Von's Grocery Co., 384 U.S. 270

   Client/Matter: -None-

   Search Terms: "antitrust law"

   Search Type: Natural Language

   Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

5. FTC v. Brown Shoe Co., 384 U.S. 316

   Client/Matter: -None-

   Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

6. Florida E. C. R. Co. v. United States, 259 F. Supp. 993

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

7. FTC v. Dean Foods Co., 384 U.S. 597

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

8. United States v. Marshall & Ilsley Bank Stock Corp., 255 F. Supp. 273

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

9. Cedar Crest Hats, Inc. v. United Hatters, etc., 362 F.2d 322

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

10. Schulman v. Burlington Industries, Inc., 255 F. Supp. 847

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

11. Automated Bldg. Components v. Hydro-Air Eng'g, 362 F.2d 989

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

12. Lewis v. Pennington, 257 F. Supp. 815

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

13. State v. Milwaukee Braves, Inc., 31 Wis. 2d 699

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

14. Rutherford v. United States, 365 F.2d 353

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

15. Wash. v. Am. Pipe & Constr. Co., 41 F.R.D. 59

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

16. [Malco Mfg. Co. v. Nat'l Connector Corp., 1966 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7220]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

17. [United States v. Johns-Manville Corp., 259 F. Supp. 440]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

18. [Ayers v. Pastime Amusement Co., 259 F. Supp. 358]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

19. [United States v. Crocker-Anglo Nat'l Bank, 263 F. Supp. 125]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

20. [United States v. Provident Nat'l Bank, 259 F. Supp. 373]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

21. [Peelers Co. v. Wendt, 260 F. Supp. 193]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

22. Otto Milk Co. v. United Dairy Farmers Cooperative Asso., 261 F. Supp. 381

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

23. Case-Swayne Co. v. Sunkist Growers, Inc., 369 F.2d 449

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

24. United States v. Third Nat'l Bank, 260 F. Supp. 869

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

25. Lloyd A. Fry Roofing Co. v. Federal Trade Com., 371 F.2d 277

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

26. Nichols v. Spencer International Press, Inc., 371 F.2d 332

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

27. K-91, Inc. v. Gershwin Publ'g. Corp., 372 F.2d 1

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

28. Y & Y Popcorn Supply Co. v. ABC Vending Corp., 263 F. Supp. 709

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

29. L. S. Good & Co. v. H. Daroff & Sons, Inc., 263 F. Supp. 635

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

30. Quinn v. Mobil Oil Co., 375 F.2d 273

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

31. Nelson v. Berry Petroleum Co., 242 Ark. 273

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

32. Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 377 F.2d 776

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

33. Royal Crown Cola Co. v. Coca-Cola Co., 1967 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11191

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

34. Holmes v. Struthers Scientific & International Corp., 268 F. Supp. 122

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

35. Denver & R. G. W. R. Co. v. United States, 387 U.S. 485

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

36. United States v. Reed Roller Bit Co., 274 F. Supp. 573

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

37. [Old Dominion Box Co. v. Cont'l Can Co., 273 F. Supp. 550]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

38. [Hawaiian Oke & Liquors, Ltd. v. Joseph E. Seagram & Sons, Inc., 272 F. Supp. 915]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

39. [Lewis v. Seanor Coal Co., 382 F.2d 437]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

40. [Clausen & Sons, Inc. v. Theo. Hamm Brewing Co., 284 F. Supp. 148]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

41. [United States v. Concentrated Phosphate Export Asso., 273 F. Supp. 263]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

42. [Wash. v. Am. Pipe & Constr. Co., 274 F. Supp. 961]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

43. Hensley Equip. Co. v. Esco Corp., 383 F.2d 252

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

44. Trucking Unlimited v. California Motor Transport Co., 1967 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11536

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

45. Bracken's Shipping Center, Inc. v. Ruwe, 273 F. Supp. 606

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

46. Shoaf v. Triangle Publications, Inc., 43 F.R.D. 10

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

47. Barr Rubber Prods. Co. v. Sun Rubber Co., 277 F. Supp. 484

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

48. United States v. Crocker-Anglo Nat'l Bank, 277 F. Supp. 133

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

49. Austin v. House of Vision, Inc., 385 F.2d 171

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

50. Kaplan v. Lehman Bros., 389 U.S. 954

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

51. Wurzberg Bros., Inc. v. Head Ski Co., 276 F. Supp. 142

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

52. Reimel v. Alcoholic Beverage Control Appeals Board, 256 Cal. App. 2d 158

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

53. Southern Pacific Co. v. United States, 277 F. Supp. 671

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

54. American Mfrs. Mut. Ins. Co. v. American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres, Inc., 388 F.2d 272

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

55. Otto Milk Co. v. United Dairy Farmers Cooperative Asso., 388 F.2d 789

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

56. Vornado, Inc. v. Corning Glass Works, 388 F.2d 117

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

57. United States v. Provident Nat'l Bank, 280 F. Supp. 1

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

58. [United States v. Third Nat'l Bank, 390 U.S. 171]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

59. [State v. McBride Transp., Inc., 56 Misc. 2d 90]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

60. [Iowa v. Union Asphalt & Roadoils, Inc., 281 F. Supp. 391]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

61. [American Safety Equip. Corp. v. J. P. Maguire & Co., 391 F.2d 821]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

62. [Checker Motors Corp. v. Chrysler Corp., 283 F. Supp. 876]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

63. [Woods Exploration & Producing Co. v. Aluminum Co. of America, 284 F. Supp. 582]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

64. Alabama Power Co. v. Alabama Elec. Coop., 394 F.2d 672

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

65. United States v. Olympia Provision & Baking Co., 282 F. Supp. 819

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

66. United States v. Tidewater Marine Service, Inc., 284 F. Supp. 324

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

67. Aimcee Wholesale Corp. v. Tomar Products, Inc., 21 N.Y.2d 621

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

68. Original Tractor Cab Co. v. United States, 286 F. Supp. 281

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

69. National Dairy Products Corp. v. Federal Trade Com., 395 F.2d 517

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

70. Minnesota v. United States Steel Corp., 44 F.R.D. 559

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

71. Perma Life Mufflers v. International Parts Corp., 392 U.S. 134

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

72. Hanover Shoe v. United Shoe Mach. Corp., 392 U.S. 481

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

73. Northern Natural Gas Co. v. Federal Power Com., 399 F.2d 953

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

74. Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Great Western Financial Corp., 69 Cal. 2d 305

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

75. Premier Electrical Constr. Co. v. Miller-Davis Co., 292 F. Supp. 213

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

76. Rader v. Balfour, 1968 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12145

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

77. Stanton v. Texaco, Inc., 289 F. Supp. 884

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

78. Pacific Seafarers, Inc. v. Pacific Far East Line, Inc., 404 F.2d 804

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

79. [Research Frontiers, Inc. v. Marks Polarized Corp., 290 F. Supp. 725]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

80. [Klinger v. Rose, 291 F. Supp. 456]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

81. [Sahm v. V-1 Oil Co., 402 F.2d 69]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

82. [Bela Seating Co. v. Poloron Prods., 297 F. Supp. 489]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

83. [Boise Cascade International, Inc. v. Northern Minnesota Pulpwood Producers Asso., 294 F. Supp. 1015]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

84. [International Tel. & Tel. Corp. v. General Tel. & Electronics Corp., 296 F. Supp. 920]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

85. Interphoto Corp. v. Minolta Corp., 295 F. Supp. 711

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

86. Alberto-Culver Co. v. Andrea Dumon, 295 F. Supp. 1155

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

87. Hiram Walker, Inc. v. A & S Tropical, Inc., 407 F.2d 4

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

88. Arthur Murray, Inc. v. Reserve Plan, Inc., 406 F.2d 1138

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

89. Stiftung v. Zeiss, 298 F. Supp. 1309

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

90. Attorney-General of New York v. Lundy, 59 Misc. 2d 436

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

91. Water Servs. v. Tesco Chems. Co., 410 F.2d 163

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

92. Carl N. Swenson Co. v. E. C. Braun Co., 272 Cal. App. 2d 366

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

93. Simpson v. Union Oil Co., 411 F.2d 897

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

94. TNT Communications, Inc. v. Management Television Systems, Inc., 32 A.D.2d 55

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

95. [United States v. Uniroyal, Inc., 300 F. Supp. 84]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

96. [Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, 395 U.S. 100]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

97. [Std. Pressed Steel Co. v. Astoria Plating Corp., 1969 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10541]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

98. [Kolene Corp. v. Motor City Metal Treating, Inc., 307 F. Supp. 1251]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

99. [Cosentino v. Carver-Greenfield Corp., 1969 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13134]

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

100. Gottesman v. General Motors Corp., 414 F.2d 956

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

Shell Oil Co. v. FTC

United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit

April 18, 1966

Nos. 18967 and 18969

Reporter

360 F.2d 470 *; 1966 U.S. App. LEXIS 6460 ; 1966 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,744

Shell Oil Company, Petitioner v. Federal Trade Commission, Respondent, The Firestone Tire & Rubber Company, Petitioner v. Federal Trade Commission, Respondent dealers, sales commission, sponsored, oil company, overt, economic power, coercion, tires, suppliers, effects, percent, service station, anti-competitive, cases, wholesale, oil, outlets, sales, rubber company, distributors, batteries, contracts, petroleum, coercive, products, station, buy, tying arrangement, manufacturers, orders

Core Terms

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN1[] Tying Arrangements, Clayton Act

Tying arrangements are per se violative of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq. whenever a party has sufficient economic power with respect to the tying product to appreciably restrain free competition in the tied product and a not insubstantial amount of interstate commerce is affected.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Oil & Petroleum Products > Gasoline Fuels > Gasoline Dealers & Distributors

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN2[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A tying arrangement is an agreement by a party to sell one product but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different or tied product. The lack of an express tie is unimportant; a tying arrangement may be found in a course of dealing between the parties.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Federal Trade Commission Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN3[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Federal Trade Commission Act

The words "unfair practices" and "unfair methods of competition" are not limited to precise practices that can readily be catalogued. They take their meaning from the facts of each case and the impact of particular practices on competition and monopoly.

Judges: [1] Brown and Wisdom, Circuit Judges, and Johnson, District Judge.

Opinion by: WISDOM

Opinion

[*471] WISDOM, Circuit Judge:

This case is one of a trilogy of cases the Federal Trade Commission brought in January 1956 against (1) Atlantic Refining Company and Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company (Atlantic-Goodyear), (2) Texaco (Texas) Company and Goodrich Tire and Rubber Company (Texaco-Goodrich) and (3) Shell Oil Company and Firestone Tire and Rubber Company [*472] (Shell-Firestone). In each complaint the FTC challenged the validity of a sales commission contract between the oil company and the rubber company, alleging that the contract was an unfair method of competition in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. [1]

As everyone who drives a car knows, [2] service stations usually carry tires, batteries, and automobile accessories (TBA). [2] [3] The most widely used plans for marketing TBA are the (1) purchase-resale and (2) sales commission systems. Under the purchase-resale plan, the oil company purchases TBA from the manufacturers and resells the TBA to its service station dealers and wholesale distributors. Under the sales commission plan, the manufacturers sell TBA directly to the oil company's dealers and wholesalers. This system is based on a contract: In return for promoting sales of the rubber company's TBA the oil company receives an overall commission (override) [3] [4] on all the supplier's TBA sold at the oil company's wholesale and retail outlets. Shell, Texas

[1] "Unfair methods of competition in commerce and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce are hereby declared unlawful." Federal Trade Commission Act, § 5(a)(1), 66 Stat. 632; 15 USC § 45(a)(1).

[2] Since World War II, service stations have become increasingly important as TBA outlets. Their large number, the convenient location of the usual station, the availability of TBA for immediate installation at a station, and the possibility of the "single stop" at one station for all automotive needs contribute to the still rising importance of gasoline service stations as market outlets for TBA. Shell's evidence indicates that in 1958 about 45 per cent of all TBA was sold through service stations, a figure representing an estimated increase of 14 per cent in ten years. Shell estimates that in 1955 about 50 per cent of the sales of replacement tires was made through service stations.

Company, and Atlantic use the sales commission system. [4] They contract [*473] with Firestone, Goodrich, and Goodyear, the three largest TBA suppliers, and with other tire and rubber companies; Shell, for example, has a sales commission contract with Goodyear as well as with Firestone.

---

[3] Shell receives 10 per cent of the gross sales made by Firestone to Shell dealers and 7 1/2 per cent of the gross sales to Shell jobbers. To simplify bookkeeping, each Shell dealer is assigned to a specific Firestone wholesale "supply point ". Since Shell sells no TBA itself, the Commission accurately, if pejoratively, terms these payments an "override ".

There is a spirited difference between the parties as to whether the commission represents compensatory payments or a windfall. One ancient intra-company letter dating from 1947 suggests that the payments were "almost all net profit ". In 1956 Shell received about $3.6 million in commissions from Firestone and Goodyear. If indeed this sum represented "almost all net profit" it was a healthy profit for a company that allegedly entered the TBA jungle only to insure its market position in the sale of gasoline and other petroleum products. However, uncontradicted evidence of Shell's promotional costs in 1956 demonstrates that the commission payments were no windfall. Shell's promotional activities in 1956 cost $3.2 million, leaving it with a mere $400,000 profit from TBA, a negligible sum considering the magnitude of its petroleum enterprises. Shell estimated the costs as follows:

Credit costs from the use of credit cards and deferred payment plan

$ 500,000

Maintenance, repairs, and depreciation on displays and promotional equipment

600,000

Promotion and advertising

2,225,000

Total

$ 3,325,000

Strangely, this accounting does not even include the cost of personnel involved in TBA promotion. This cost was estimated at $1,875,000 for 1956 and would have raised Shell's TBA costs to $5,260,000, or $1,600,000 in excess of its commission revenue. There is of course no way of knowing in dollar and cents the extent to which Shell's TBA program promoted its sales of gasoline. Shell was satisfied with its program; at any rate, it preferred that program to any other.

[4] In order to offer a sales commission plan, a tire manufacturer must be able to offer a complete line of TBA to its service station customers; those items which it does not manufacture must be purchased and stocked (usually under its own private brand name). Furthermore, the company must have distributive facilities at least as widespread as are the dealers of its customers.

[5] The same examiner heard all three cases. In each case he found that the sales commission plan was lawful [5] [6] but that in certain instances the oil companies had used overt coercive tactics. [6] The Commission adopted the findings of overt coercion. More importantly, in Atlantic-Goodyear and Shell-Firestone the Commission ruled that, considering the "competitive effects resulting from respondent's use" of the sales commission system, the system itself was an "unfair method of competition". The novelty in these rulings was the Commission's rationale: [7]

> "Shell has sufficient economic power over its wholesale and retail distributors to cause them to purchase substantial amounts of sponsored TBA even without the use of overt coercive tactics. For reasons set forth hereinafter, we conclude that the exercise of this power by Shell through the use of the sales commission plan in favor [*474] of Firestone (Goodyear) constitutes an unfair method of competition and an unfair act or practice in commerce within the meaning of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act."

[7] March 9, 1961, in Shell-Firestone, the Commission issued broad orders prohibiting Shell's using coercion in marketing TBA; outlawing the oil company's use of the sales commission plan with Firestone or "any other rubber company or tire manufacturer, or any other [TBA] supplier"; and outlawing the rubber company's use of the plan with Shell or any other oil company. Similar orders were issued in Atlantic-Goodyear. Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company, 58 F.T.C. 309; Firestone Tire and Rubber Company, 58 F.T.C. 309.

This means a national distribution system. Only four, possibly three, tire manufacturers (Goodyear, Firestone, Goodrich, and, possibly, U.S. Rubber) satisfy these requisites. They are dominant in the area of sales commission plans. But the smaller companies, as well as the giants, may participate in purchase-resale plans whereby the oil companies assemble their own TBA package. Most of the tire manufacturers, and here Firestone is a notable exception, do in fact participate to some extent in purchase-resale programs.

The gasoline market is a rough-tough competitive struggle pitting a few giants struggling against each other and against a large number of pigmy producers. In this context the purchase-resale and the sales commission programs work in opposite directions. To enter into a purchase-resale program, an oil company must have resources large enough to finance an extensive TBA inventory. It must also have sales and distributive facilities for marketing these products. And, of course, the oil company must have an established reputation for quality, if it seeks to market TBA under a private label. As a result, the small companies prefer the less burdensome sales commission plans; the giants, notably Standard Oil, are capable of purchasing and reselling a complete line of TBA under their own brand names. In Atlantic the Supreme Court expressly refrained from passing on the merits of the purchase-resale plan.

The amicus curiae brief of Champlin Oil & Refining Co. (concurred in by Ashland Oil & Refining Company, Continental Oil Company, Jenney Manufacturing Company, Inc., Leonard Refineries, Inc., Shell Oil Company, South Penn Oil Company, and Sunray D-X Oil Company) makes the point that "virtually every marketing oil company in the United States provides a TBA program for the benefit of its marketing outlets ". Champlin and other small or relatively small companies use the sales commission plan because it enables them to provide the necessary TBA program without having to invest in a large TBA inventory. Champlin avows that a per se approach to the problem will force it to use the purchase-resale system, make unnecessary demands on its capital, and place it at a disadvantage in competing with large oil companies having a nationwide system of distribution.

[5] The examiner found as to Shell: "No inference or implication can be drawn simply from the contractual relationship between Shell and its dealers that the degree of control by Shell over its dealers is sufficient to force dealers to purchase only sponsored TBA."

[6] The examiner found that there was "no evidence" that Firestone "participated" in any coercive practices. But as to Shell: "Shell representatives . . . did . . . force Shell dealers to purchase substantial quantities of Goodyear and Firestone TBA . . . [by] demands that dealers discontinue the purchase or display of non-sponsored TBA under threat of lease cancellation or other corrective action."

[7] Courts have looked with disfavor on arrangements by oil companies to sponsor TBA, but until Atlantic-Goodyear no court had gone further than to enjoin overt coercive acts. Osborn v. Sinclair Refining Co., 4 Cir. 1960, 286 F.2d 832, cert. denied, 1961, 366 U.S. 963, 81 S. Ct. 1924, 6 L. Ed. 2d 1255; United States v. Sun Oil Co., E.D. Pa. 1959, 176 F. Supp. 715. But see Simpson v. Union Oil Co., 1964, 377 U.S. 13, 12 L. Ed. 2d 98, 84 S. Ct. 1051 and Broussard v. Socony Mobil Oil Company, 5 Cir. 1965, 350 F.2d 346 viewing the dealer-oil company relationship as inherently coercive. See also Note, 63 Mich. L. Rev. 713 (1965).

In Texaco-Goodrich, unlike the companion cases, the 1961 Commission reached a result the 1966 Commission described as "enigmatic": [8] "[Although] 'Texaco has sufficient economic power over its wholesale and retail petroleum distributors to cause them to purchase substantial amounts of sponsored TBA even without the use of overt coercive tactics', the record did not contain 'sufficient market data to enable the Commission to assess the competitive effects of the sales commission method of distributing TBA'." The Commission therefore remanded the case to the hearing examiner for the taking of additional evidence on that issue. [8] [9] B.F. Goodrich, 58 F.T.C. 1176. On remand, the examiner found that the Texaco-Goodrich plan was unlawful; the Commission entered orders identical with those entered in the two companion cases. (B.F. Goodrich, Docket 6485, April 15, 1963).

[9] When these cases reached the courts, the Seventh Circuit affirmed the Commission in Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, (Atlantic-Goodyear), 1964, 331 F.2d 394; the District of Columbia Circuit reversed the Commission in Texaco-Goodrich [10] [10] and ordered the complaint dismissed, 1964, 118 U.S. App. D.C. 366, 336 F.2d 754. The Supreme Court granted certiorari in both cases. This Court withheld its decision pending final action by the Supreme Court in the companion cases. In Atlantic-Goodyear the Court affirmed the judgment. Atlantic Refining Company v. Federal Trade Commission, 1965, 381 U.S. 357, 85 S. Ct. 1498, 14 L. Ed. 2d 443; reh. denied 382 U.S. 873, 86 S. Ct. 18, 15 L. Ed. 2d 114. In Texaco-Goodrich the Court vacated the judgment with instructions that the case be remanded to the Commission for further proceedings, "in light" of Atlantic. [11] [*475] Federal Trade Commission v. Texaco, Inc., 1965, 381 U.S. 739, 85 S. Ct. 1798, 14 L. Ed. 2d 714.

The parties differ widely in their understanding of Atlantic. The respondent asserts that under Atlantic, a TBA sales commission contract is unlawful per se; the petitioners assert that the Supreme Court decided Atlantic not on any generalized theory of per se illegality but on specific findings of fact supported in that case by substantial evidence. The petitioners' contention serves as the predicate for their argument that the facts here are unlike the controlling facts in Atlantic-Goodyear; the orders against Shell and Firestone should be set aside for lack of substantial evidence; in the alternative, this Court should remand the proceeding to the Commission for further consideration.

On the record before us, the difference between the two interpretations of Atlantic may be more verbalistic than real. Even assuming the correctness of the petitioners' interpretation and even admitting that there are some differences between the Atlantic-Goodyear system and the Shell-Firestone system, the [11] controlling facts in this case are so similar to those in Atlantic that the same result should be reached in both cases. The importance, however, of judicially declaring or not declaring a new category of per se violations affecting every oil company,

---

[8] Opinion on remand in Texaco-Goodrich, FTC Docket 6485, Jan. 14, 1966.

[9] In remanding the case to the examiner, the Commission said:

> "The determination of whether Texaco's exercise of such economic power in favor of Firestone and Goodyear under the oil company's sales commission contracts with these rubber companies constitutes an unfair method of competition depends, therefore, upon the competitive effects of these sales commission contracts; not upon whether Texaco has exercised its power to implement such contracts through the use of overt coercive tactics, or by more subtle, but equally effective, means. . . . Whether the sales commission agreements between Firestone and Texaco and Goodrich and Texaco are unlawful must depend, therefore, upon the characteristics and the competitive effects of these sales commission agreements. For reasons set forth hereinafter, we conclude that this case must be remanded in order that market data may be introduced to show the competitive effects of Texaco's sales commission agreements with Goodrich and Firestone upon competing suppliers of tires, batteries and accessories at the manufacturing, wholesale and retail levels." 58 F.T.C. 1176.

[10] Texaco-Goodrich also involved the question whether the Chairman of the Commission was disqualified from participating in the decision because he had indicated in a speech made while the case was pending that he had prejudged it. The Court dismissed the case because the Commission's orders were not supported by the record and because of the undue protraction of the administrative process.

[11] And without the participation of the Chairman of the Commission.

every TBA supplier, and every car-owner requires the Court to give careful consideration to the factual background and to the conflicting contentions. [12]

I.

A. In Atlantic-Goodyear and Shell-Firestone the Commission, using virtually identical language in the two opinions, found that the oil companies had exercised their economic power "to cause [their] dealers to purchase substantial amounts of a different class of products, TBA, as a condition to their continuance as . . . [12] lessees and dealers". This finding, "in conjunction with their 'market position and the volume of TBA affected, would bring them within the Supreme Court's ruling in Northern Pacific Ry. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514 (1958) and the more recent decision in Osborn v. Sinclair Refining Co., 4 Cir. 1960, 286 F.2d 832'". And, as the Commission noted, "The Court held in the Northern Pacific case that HN1[] tying arrangements are per se violative of Section 1 of the Sherman Act 'whenever a party has sufficient economic power with respect to the tying product to appreciably restrain free competition in the tied product' and a 'not insubstantial' amount of interstate commerce is affected". The Commission looked to Osborn, a case involving an implied tie-in, for the content of the phrase "sufficient economic power". Comparing Sinclair Refining Company, the oil company in Osborn, with Shell and Atlantic, the Commission found that these two companies had "sufficient economic power" in the tying commodity -- petroleum products -- [13] to bring the case within the doctrine of tying arrangements. At that point in the opinion one would have to conclude that the Commission regarded the sales commission system as a tying arrangement per se illegal [13] on a showing of the oil company's requisite economic power in the tying product.

Precisely at this point in both opinions, however, the Commission broke new ground with the statement: "But we do [*476] not rest our decision on a mechanical application of the rule of the Northern Pacific and Osborn cases". [14] Abandoning the tie-in and overt coercion contentions, the Commission stated the issue as "the legality of a particular method of distributing TBA products used by the respondents". This issue, the Commission said, requires an examination and assessment of the anti-competitive effects of the oil company's use of its economic power by means of the sale commission method. In Atlantic-Goodyear therefore the Commission said:

> Atlantic has sufficient economic power with respect to its wholesale and retail petroleum distributors to cause them to purchase substantial quantities of sponsored TBA even without the use of overt coercive tactics or of written or oral tying agreements, and this power is a fact existing independently of the particular method of distributing or sponsoring TBA used by Atlantic. Determination of illegality in this context requires an evaluation of competitive effects resulting from the sales commission method of distributing TBA used by these respondents.

In view of this reasoning, the Commission's action in Texaco-Goodrich is not "enigmatic". Texas Company uses a TBA plan with Goodrich that is substantially the same as the Shell-Firestone [15] and Atlantic-Goodyear plans. The Commission's remand of Texaco-Goodrich carries the necessary implication that the Commission did not treat the sales commission arrangement as a tying scheme and did not condemn the system as per se illegal. [14] If it had, the remand would have been pointless. An "inquiry into effect upon competition . . . [would have been] irrelevant". White Motor Company v. United States, 1963, 372 U.S. 253, 265, 9 L. Ed. 2d 738, 83 S. Ct. 696. (Concurring opinion.)

---

[12] The Supreme Court excepts from its ruling oil companies able to show that they are "not possessed of economic power over their dealers". 381 U.S. at 377-78. The nature and extent of this exception is of course beyond the scope of this opinion.

[13] "It is generally agreed that tying arrangements are illegal per se. While examination of a particular tying arrangement is not limited to the characterization of the practice, as has traditionally been the case with price fixing and group boycotts, judicial inquiry is nevertheless confined to the determination of a single fact: the amount of commerce affected in the tied product." Pearson, Tying Arrangements and Antitrust Policy, 60 N.W.L. Rev. 626 (1965).

[14] See footnote 9.

B. When the TBA cases reached the circuit courts, General Counsel for the FTC took the flat position that the sales commission contract was illegal per se -- as a tying arrangement and in itself. [15] [17] In Atlantic-Goodyear the Seventh Circuit recognized that "Goodyear's contract with Atlantic in itself has no tying features", but "considered contextually with the oil company-dealer relationship and the economic power that Atlantic has over its dealers does its tying features [16] emerge". 331 F.2d at 402. The "tying arrangement is the sales commission system operated by Goodyear and Atlantic". Ibid. "The heart of this case is the economic power Atlantic possesses over its service station dealers. Ostensibly, they are independent businessmen; but behind the legalistic facade of independence, there exists a servitude caused by the coercive pressures which Atlantic exerts upon its dealers." 331 F.2d at 400. In accepting more or [*477] less completely the tying and per se arguments, the court seems to have shifted the emphasis from avoiding anti-competitive effects to protecting the dealers against exploitation by the oil company. [16]

The District of Columbia Circuit, on the other hand, held for Texaco and Goodrich. According to that court, the "keystone of the Commission's ultimate decision" was the "unwarranted assumption", for which there was "no basis in the record", that Texaco [18] has "sufficient economic power over its dealers to compel them to handle Goodrich tires exclusively." 336 F.2d at 766.

C. As we read Atlantic, the Supreme Court approached only to the brink of holding TBA sales commission contracts per se unlawful. True enough, on the record before it, the Court might have held that the Atlantic-Goodyear distribution system, as distinguished from the bare contract, was a tacit but true tying arrangement. [17] But the Court, like the Commission in its 1961 decision, declined to classify the sales commission "arrangement" as

---

[15] The complaint did not allege, in terms, a tying arrangement or a per se violation. Counsel for Shell asserts in his brief in this Court that during the trial neither theory was mentioned. The briefs filed with the examiner and, on appeal, with the Commission, do not discuss tying or per se arguments.

Mr. Justice Goldberg, in his dissent in Atlantic, said: "In short, the Commission opinions in this and the related cases are bathed in confusion and leave unanswered a number of questions necessarily involved in the decision of these cases. Are TBA sales-commission plans only unfair methods of competition if the oil company has used coercive tactics on its dealers? If they are illegal without past or present evidence of coercion, are they illegal for oil companies which do not have the same relation with their dealers as Atlantic has with its dealers? Are they illegal for oil companies which do not have the same market position as Atlantic? Has the Commission drawn a distinction between sales commission and purchase-resale TBA promotion plans, condemning the former but approving the latter? If it has, is there a rational basis, consistent with the policies of § 5, for such a distinction? All of these questions appear to me to be inadequately answered by the Commission's opinion. . . . Moreover, if in these and the related cases the Commission is laying down the broad rule that all sales-commission TBA promotion arrangements in the oil industry are per se unfair methods of competition, such a rule has neither been clearly articulated nor supported with adequate economic analysis."

[16] One commentator has observed: "[A distinction should be drawn between] restraints of trade, which constitute clear public injury, with mere restrictions on the freedom of the dealer to act as an independent businessman. This is where the approach of the Seventh Circuit would seem to differ significantly from the approach of the Commission. The Commission accepted the fact that the oil companies enjoyed controlling economic power over their dealers but did not condemn its use as such; it condemned only the abuse of this power. Only when it resulted in anti-competitive effects did the Commission step in. By applying the tying arrangement analogy, the Seventh Circuit effectuated an important shift in emphasis from preventing anti-competitive effects toward protecting the dealers." Note, 63 Mich. L. Rev. 713, 719 (1965).

[17] HN2[] A tying arrangement is "an agreement by a party to sell one product but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different (or tied) product." Northern Pac. Ry. v. United States, 1958, 356 U.S. 1, 5, 78 S. Ct. 514, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545. TBA sold to dealers is tied to gasoline and oil or to the leasing of service stations, or to both. Goodyear's TBA sales, therefore, do not result from competition in the open market, but from Goodyear's purchasing a captive market. The lack of an express tie is unimportant; a tying arrangement may be found in a course of dealing between the parties. McElhenney Co. v. Western Auto Supply Co., 4 Cir. 1959, 269 F.2d 332. The Court has treated tying arrangements generally as per se violations of antitrust law because they necessarily restrict a buyer's freedom of choice between competing products in the market for tied products. See United States v. Loew's Inc., 1962, 371 U.S. 38, 83 S. Ct. 97, 9 L. Ed. 2d 11; International Salt Co. v. United States, 1947, 332 U.S. 392, 68 S. Ct. 12, 92 L. Ed. 20.

a "tying scheme". And nowhere in the opinion can be found the words "per se". This could hardly have been an accident. The Court specifically said:

> "At the outset we must stress what we do not find present here. We recognize that the Goodyear-Atlantic contract is not a tying arrangement. Atlantic is not required to tie its sale of gasoline and other petroleum products to purchases of Goodyear tires, batteries, and accessories. Nor does it expressly require such purchases of its dealers. But neither do we understand that either the Commission or the Court of Appeals held that the salescommission [19] arrangement was a tying scheme." 381 U.S. at 369.

"What the Commission and the Seventh Circuit did find", the Supreme Court said, "was that the central competitive characteristic was the same in both cases -- the utilization of economic power in one market to curtail competition in another". (381 U.S. at 369)

[20] The rationale for the Atlantic decision may be broken down into three essential components, [18] each of which depends on the facts of the case before the court:

(1) the oil company's dominant economic power over its dealers;
(2) the exercise of that power over its dealers;
(3) the anti-competitive effects of using that power.

The first need not detain us. The Court determined that "there is 'warrant [*478] in the record' for the findings of the Commission" as to Atlantic's economic powers. (381 U.S. at 368) Atlantic, as "a major producer, refiner and distributor of oil and its by-products" (381 U.S. at 363) and its dealers "simply do not bargain as equals ". (381 U.S. at 368) This power exists independently of any particular plan for distributing TBA.

Second, as is demonstrated by the success of the sales commission system, Atlantic [21] exercised its economic power over its dealers by forcing them to sell sponsored TBA. The very purpose of the system was to exploit that power. As the Court observed: "The Commission was well justified in concluding that Goodyear had in effect purchased a captive market." (381 U.S. at 375) "It is difficult to escape the conclusion that there would have been little point in paying substantial commissions to oil companies were it not for their ability to exert power over their wholesalers and dealers . . ." (381 U.S. at 376) Since "persuading" its dealers to buy Goodyear TBA was "a natural incident of [Atlantic's] power" (381 U.S. at 368) proof of specific acts of overt coercion was not essential to the holding.

Atlantic did not seek review of that part of the Commission's order relating to overt acts of coercion. The Supreme Court however did not ignore the evidence of overt coercive acts. The Court noted that "utilization of economic power in one market to curtail competition in another" exists here as in tie-ins, but here "that lever was bolstered by actual threats and coercive practices." (381 U.S. at 369) "The long [22] existence of the plan itself, coupled with the coercive acts practiced by Atlantic pursuant to it, warranted a decision to require more" than enjoining the use of overt coercive tactics. Atlantic's overt coercion however was simply "symptomatic of a more fundamental restraint of trade." (381 U.S. at 361) Successful operation of the TBA commission plan did not depend on overt coercion. It did not depend on any express provision in the sales commission contract compelling Atlantic to require its dealers to purchase Goodyear's TBA. To its dealers, Atlantic's wish was Atlantic's command.

The Supreme Court's action in Texaco-Goodrich clarifies the rationale in Atlantic-Goodyear. There the Court summarily vacated the judgment upon a petition for writ of certiorari raising the question of the legality of the sales commission system in the absence of any acts of overt coercion. The petition alleged: "Texaco has sufficient economic power over its wholesale and retail petroleum distributors to cause them to purchase substantial amounts of TBA even without the use of overt coercive tactics ".

---

[18] In its brief the Commission uses this breakdown to show that the Court applied tying principles.

Third, in determining the anti-competitive effects, the Court noted that [23] the Commission "looked to the entire record" and concluded that "the activity of Goodyear and Atlantic impaired competition at three levels of the tires, batteries and accessories industry." The Court went into considerable detail in showing Goodyear's close cooperation with Atlantic. It was "of little consequence that Atlantic actually applied the pressure ". There "was ample evidence establishing on Goodyear's part a course of conduct lasting over 14 years aimed at utilizing oil company structures to curtail competition in tires, batteries and accessories ". In affirming the Commission's order against Goodyear, the Court noted that the sales commission plan "enabled Goodyear to integrate its own nationwide distribution system with the economic power possessed by Atlantic over its wholesale and retail petroleum outlets." (381 U.S. at 373).

In approving the breadth of the order the Court relied on the fact that Goodyear had contracts with 20 oil companies in addition to Atlantic. Nine of the contracts were before the Commission; all were similar to the Atlantic-Goodyear contract. "Upon considering the destructive effect on commerce that would result from the widespread [24] use of these contracts by major oil companies and suppliers, we conclude that the Commission was clearly justified in refusing the participants an opportunity to offset [*479] these evils by a showing of economic benefit to themselves." (381 U.S. at 371) Goodyear complained that "there is no evidence of the economic power of many of the companies with which it has sales-commission plans ". The Court did not discount this argument; it looked to the record:

> This order does not necessarily prohibit Goodyear from making contracts with companies not possessed of economic power over their dealers. The evidence in this particular record, however, does involve relationships such as it has enjoyed with Atlantic and its propensity to use those relationships for an unfair competitive advantage. Goodyear offered no evidence that it has arrangements differing from those mentioned in the instant case. . . . On this record we cannot say that the Commission's remedy is unreasonable . . ." (381 U.S. at 377)

The Court's approach in Atlantic is consistent with the broad scope of a Section 5 proceeding. Section 5 is intended to [25] halt practices in their incipiency that may show promise of developing into violations of the Sherman and Clayton Acts and to defeat practices not specifically proscribed by those laws but contrary to the principles animating the Sherman and Clayton Acts. [19] [26] The approach is also consistent with the Court's usual reluctance to adopt a per se rule until it can be supported by a series of decisions. [20]

---

[19] " . . . HN3[] The words 'unfair practices' and 'unfair methods of competition' are not limited to precise practices that can readily be catalogued. They take their meaning from the facts of each case and the impact of particular practices on competition and monopoly." Pan American World Airways v. United States, 1963, 371 U.S. 296, 307, 83 S. Ct. 476 9 L. Ed. 2d 325. See also Federal Trade Commission v. Motion Picture Advertising Service Co., Inc., 1953, 344 U.S. 392, 73 S. Ct. 361, 97 L. Ed. 426; Federal Trade Commission v. Cement Institute, 1948, 333 U.S. 683, 68 S. Ct. 793, 92 L. Ed. 1010; Fashion Originators' Guild of America v. Federal Trade Commission, 1941, 312 U.S. 457, 61 S. Ct. 703, 85 L. Ed. 949; Federal Trade Commission v. Beech-Nut Packing Co., 1922, 257 U.S. 441, 42 S. Ct. 150, 66 L. Ed. 307. See also Oppenheim, Guides to Harmonizing Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act With the Sherman and Clayton Acts, 59 Mich. L. Rev. 821 (1961).

[20] "The cases also show that generally a restraint of trade in the past has been declared to be per se unlawful only after a cumulative series of rulings -- adverse to the practice -- had given the courts a solid basis for arriving at per se condemnation. For example, tying arrangements had so frequently been found unreasonably to restrain trade that the courts finally declared that they hardly serve any purpose beyond the suppression of competition." Van Cise, The Future of Per Se in Antitrust Law, 50 Va. L. Rev. 1165, 1172 (1964). In White Motor Co. v. United States, 372 U.S. 253, 261, 83 S. Ct. 696, 9 L. Ed. 2d 738, the Supreme Court reversed a district court which had developed a per se rule of antitrust liability without regard to the economics of the situation: "This is the first case involving a territorial restriction in a vertical arrangement; and we know too little of the actual impact of both that restriction and the one respecting customers to reach a conclusion on the bare bones of the documentary evidence before us."

The door allowing escape to [27] the rule of reason is ajar. At this stage in the development of anti-trust law applicable to TBA distribution plans of oil companies, courts may not adopt a doctrinaire approach. Courts must look to the record, at least to the extent the Supreme Court relied on the record in Atlantic.

II.

The three essential elements on which the Supreme Court based its decision in Atlantic-Goodyear are present in Shell-Firestone.

A. First, Shell has dominant economic power over its dealers similar to Atlantic's power over its dealers. Shell too is a major integrated producer, refiner, and distributor of petroleum products. In 1955, when the record closed, Shell sold about 5 per cent of the total gasoline sold in the United States, [21] and had annual [*480] operating revenues exceeding $1,700,000,000.

[28] In 1957 Firestone, the second largest tire manufacturer in the United States, sold 17 per cent of all replacement tires sold; Goodyear, the largest manufacturer, sold 24 per cent. Shell has had sales commission arrangements with Firestone and Goodyear since 1940; written contracts since 1951.

At the time the FTC hearings were held, Shell marketed its products in 41 states and the District of Columbia through a network of 23,000 service stations. [22] Shell had more than 10,000 direct [*481] dealers; Atlantic had about 5,500 direct dealers.

---

[21] The statistical picture is muddy. The Commission estimates that in 1955 about 34,795,000,000 gallons of gasoline were sold at retail in the United States. This figure is based on the total sales of gasoline (46,394,000,000 gallons) published by the Ethyl Corporation and the assumption that 75 per cent of the gasoline sold in the United States is sold at retail. In 1954 Shell sold 1,890,491,000 gallons of gasoline to service stations (about 5 per cent of the 1955 total) and it sold an additional 1,039,344,000 gallons to jobbers. There is no indication of how much of the gasoline sold to jobbers ultimately is sold at retail. (The Commission, in its opinion, seemed to indicate that all of this gasoline would be sold at retail. It also picked up the figure as 1.4 billion gallons instead of the proper 1.04 billion gallons. Nevertheless, the Commission finally found that Shell sold about 5 per cent of the national market, a figure that indicates the Commission's view that only the gasoline sold directly to retailers was considered relevant.) In addition to the gasoline sold to retailers and to jobbers, Shell sold 5,486,000 gallons of gasoline at stations Shell owned and operated. In light of the lack of certainty behind the statistical analysis, it is improper to be more specific than to say that in the years of 1954 and 1955 Shell supplied in excess of 5 per cent of the gasoline sold at retail in the United States.

[22] Four different types of service station operators acquire their gasoline directly from Shell. (1) At one extreme are the commission stations, designated as "C" stations. These stations are owned by Shell and operated by managers who sell gasoline and petroleum products as commission agents. They are independent businessmen as to TBA and other products, except that they are restricted to selling "such merchandise as Shell may approve". (2) Next, there are lessees, "L" dealers, who rent their stations, including the pumps and tanks, from Shell. Ostensibly, "L" dealers are independent of their supplier-landlord. The leases are usually for one year and are automatically renewed; no cause is necessary for refusal to renew a lease at the end of its term. (3) "DL" stations are similar to the "L" stations. DL operators own their own stations, but lease them to Shell. Shell, in turn, leases these stations back to their owners for the same period of time and at the same rental. This procedure is used for the purpose of providing collateral -- the Shell lease -- upon which the operator can borrow money to finance the construction or improvement of his station. In some cases Shell does this financing itself. The leases are for varying lengths of time and are automatically renewed from year to year after the initial period. (4) Finally, there are the other dealers, "OD" dealers, who either own their own stations outright or lease them from some third party. OD dealers purchase gasoline from Shell through yearly contracts (dealer sales agreements) terminable by Shell. Many OD stations are not gasoline stations as such, but are restaurants, garages, parking lots, or other businesses that incidentally have gasoline pumps. The TBA sales potential from an "OD" station is usually smaller than it is from other Shell outlets. In addition to selling through service stations, Shell sells through jobbers.

In 1955 Shell's direct outlets and their relative importance as purchasers of gasoline were as follows:

"C"

"L"

[29] The Supreme Court referred to three sources of an oil company's power over dealers: (1) control of the dealers' oil and gasoline supply; (2) control over dealers through short-term leases and equipment loan contracts renewable year-to-year and terminable at year's end upon ten days notice; (3) control over advertising on the premises of service stations. The first provides inherent leverage; the two others are "control devices" available to the oil company. The first two sources of power are unquestionably present in Shell-Firestone. The record is unclear as to the extent of Shell's control of advertising on the premises of its service stations although there is no

---

"DL"

"OD"

Total

Number of stations

999

3910

1922

3231

10,062

Percentage of the total for direct dealers

9.9

38.8

19.1

32.2

100.0

Percentage of gasoline sold to direct dealers (1.9 billion gallons)

14.7

46.7

20.2

18.4

100.00

The picture of Shell's distributive system is completed by adding sales to 847 jobbers who supply, among others, about 13,000 retail gasoline stations, and the sales made by Shell in its few wholly owned and operated retail outlets. In 1955 Shell's sales to jobbers amounted to around 1.04 billion gallons; direct retail sales amounted to around 5 million gallons.

doubt as to the close cooperation between Shell and Firestone in arranging the displays at Shell stations. Other sources of power are (4) the leverage when Shell finances a station or owns the site, [23] and (5) the control device of house-keeping requirements concerning the station's use, maintenance, and appearance which, if breached, could result in immediate cancellation of a lease without notice. Cf. Broussard v. Socony Mobil Oil Co., 5 Cir. 1965, 350 F.2d 346. In final analysis, the dominance [30] of a major oil company over its dealers comes from the leverage inherent in the structure and economics of the petroleum distribution system and from the company's firm velvet-gloved grip on control devices.

[31] B. Second, the record shows that in performing its obligations to the rubber company under the sales commission agreement, Shell, like Atlantic, did indeed use its economic power over its dealers to cause them to buy sponsored TBA.

The following acts of persuasion or promotion which the Supreme Court noted in its Atlantic opinion are matched by corresponding acts of Shell in the instant case:

> Announcement to dealers of sponsorship of Goodyear TBA; suggestion to dealers that they maintain adequate stocks of sponsored TBA; maintenance of service station identification and advertising relating to Goodyear TBA; oil company salesman representation of, and assistance to, Goodyear in sponsored TBA promotions; maintenance by oil company of dealer training programs in sale of sponsored TBA; "double-teaming" solicitation of dealers; projection of dealer sponsored TBA quotas; assignment of each dealer to specified sponsored TBA supplier; reporting technique whereby oil company may determine exact amount of sponsored TBA purchased by each dealer; rubber company reporting to oil company of names of noncooperative dealers for appropriate action by oil company; advance notice to Goodyear [32] supply points of identity of new selected Atlantic dealers.

Firestone makes the point that what the Supreme Court said in condemnation of Goodyear cannot be said of Firestone. Here the examiner found that there was "no evidence" that Firestone "engaged in, or participated in, any acts of or practices designed to force dealers and distributors [*482] of Shell Oil Company to purchase Firestone TBA products ". Nevertheless, Firestone took advantage of Shell's acts of persuasion and integrated its promotion plans with Shell's system. [24] As the Supreme Court commented in the parallel situation in the companion case, "It was for this bundle of persuasion that Goodyear paid Atlantic its commission ". (381 U.S. at 368)

---

[23] The relatively heavy cost of constructing a modern service station accounts in part for the dealers' (retailers) high degree of financial dependence on major oil companies. In 1957 the average total cost of construction of a Shell station, including land costs, was $92,000. When an untrained man is accepted by Shell as a dealer, the usual procedure is to start him off as a commission agent. The C operators usually have no investment in the service station itself; they are responsible for furnishing any inventory of TBA. This, together with tools and equipment, means an investment of about from $3,000 to $7,000. C operators are completely dependent upon remaining in the good graces of their Shell employers; for any reason at all, Shell may change or remove a C dealer upon only twelve hours notice. After a C dealer is initiated into his operation, Shell often converts the station into an L station, thereby giving its operator a good deal more freedom and security along with considerably more financial responsibility. Personal investments in L and DL stations (exclusive of land) are usually between $5,000 and $15,000 on which $2,000 and $4,000 represents TBA inventory.

[24] Shell promotes Firestone and Goodyear TBA in a number of ways. (1) Shell informs these companies when new service stations will be opened and new dealers initiated, enabling the nominee rubber company to start soliciting the new business far in advance of its other competitors. (2) Shell operates dealer training schools and dealer clinics and holds sales meetings where Firestone and Goodyear TBA products are strongly recommended and are invariably used in demonstrations. (3) Because of the tremendous variety of automotive replacement parts, service station dealers, particularly newcomers, need expert advice on inventory. Firestone and Goodyear prepare elaborate inventory guides geared to their TBA. Shell distributes these guides to its dealers carrying Firestone or Goodyear TBA. (4) Shell dealers are authorized to sell TBA to motorists on Shell credit cards on ordinary credit terms or on a six month deferred payment credit plan; however, the dealers may sell all TBA, whether sponsored or not, on such credit. (5) Shell representatives and the rubber company representatives participate in advertising and other promotional activities for the sale of TBA. Some promotions are sponsored jointly; some are paid for by Shell alone. The promotion may take the form of an advertising campaign or the distribution of Goodyear or Firestone signs, racks, or window decals to the Shell service stations. (6) The activity considered most valuable and relied upon to bring fast results is " double-

[33] Shell contends that the Supreme Court would not have decided Atlantic as it did but for the findings showing widespread overt coercion sufficient to convince the Court that Atlantic had indeed abused its power by forcing its dealers to buy sponsored TBA. Making bad matters worse, Atlantic did not contest these findings and Goodyear called no witnesses in defense of the Atlantic-Goodyear plan. On the other hand, Shell denies the use of coercion and insists that there is no substantial evidence to support a finding of coercion; that the evidence, taken in a light most favorable to the Commission, established only isolated complaints by eleven dealers among 30,000 dealers during the relevant period of time. Shell and Firestone produced an array of witnesses, including 127 dealers, who testified in defense of their TBA plan.

It is certainly true that the Supreme Court larded and interlarded its opinion with references to Atlantic's "admitted overt coercive practices ". (381 U.S. at 374) It is also true, as we see it, that here, although the evidence seems to support the findings as to certain isolated acts of overt coercion, taking the record as a whole the evidence [34] discloses no pattern of overt coercion. These arguments, however, bear on the issue of overt coercion; they do not bear directly on the principal issue, the Company's use of its economic power through the sales commission plan to cause its dealers to buy [*483] sponsored TBA even in the absence of overt coercion.

Shell and Firestone contend that in structure and operation their plan is basically different from Atlantic's and Goodyear's plan. Shell, for example, emphasizes that it does not attempt to allocate TBA by geographical areas. Atlantic sponsored one TBA supplier in half of its marketing area and another TBA supplier in the other half of the area, foreclosing each from the other's territory; Shell sponsors two TBA suppliers throughout its entire marketing area. The evidence, however, shows that each Shell dealer was expected to choose between the two sponsored suppliers to the exclusion of all others. Once the dealer chose one company, the other company did not compete for any part of the dealer's business.

Shell points to certain facts peculiar to Atlantic-Goodyear showing beyond a doubt that Atlantic forced Goodyear TBA on unwilling dealers. In late 1950 Atlantic [35] switched from a purchaser-resale plan of selling Lee tires and Exide batteries to a sales commission plan of sponsoring Goodyear and Firestone TBA. Before making this switch, Atlantic conducted a survey of its dealers: 67 per cent preferred Lee tires, 76 per cent preferred Exide batteries over competing brands; only 11 per cent preferred Goodyear tires and 4 per cent Firestone tires. Within nine months after the switch, Lee and Exide lost 75 per cent of their Atlantic business. Shell, on the other hand, adopted its sales commission plan in 1940, has not changed its system, has not shifted TBA suppliers, and contends that there is no evidence that the wishes of Shell dealers were ignored. Undoubtedly, Atlantic's switch of suppliers shows that company's economic dominance over its dealers and the use of that power to promote sponsored TBA -- to say nothing of anti-competitive effects. No such striking example of abuse of power by an oil company can be found in the Shell-Firestone record. But that does not detract from the less spectacular but solid evidence supporting the Commission's finding that Shell used its economic dominance to cause a substantial number of its dealers [36] to purchase sponsored TBA.

C. Third, the anti-competitive effects of the Shell-Firestone system are comparable with those the Commission found in evaluating the Atlantic-Goodyear system. (There is necessarily an overlap between this subsection and the preceding subsection of this opinion.)

---

teaming" by salesmen from Shell and Firestone or Goodyear. A Shell salesman supervises 15 or 20 stations. He is Shell's link with its dealers, handling negotiations for lease renewal, rental changes, or other adjustments. The salesmen assist in adjusting complaints of Shell dealers against Firestone and Goodyear and gives merchandising advice to dealers. The Commission's brief characterizes the Shell salesman as the "big brother" of the dealer, although this characterization was used by only one witness and then, perhaps, not with an Orwellian connotation. In any event, when a TBA representative finds difficulty in moving his line to a nominated dealer, he calls upon the Shell salesman to accompany him on his sales rounds. Their joint solicitation makes clear to a dealer Shell's interest in TBA and, to no one's surprise, the team produces excellent results. The Commission contends that the salesmen go beyond the proper limits of salesmanship and promotion by threatening that Shell will not renew leases or will increase the rents or turn down equipment loans or in other ways injure a balky dealer, if dealers do not carry and sell a sufficient quantity of Firestone (and Goodyear) TBA. Shell and Firestone vigorously deny any coercion through threats or otherwise.

In Atlantic, by recognizing the effect of the sales commission plan as "similar to that of a tie-in," the Supreme Court simplified the problem of proving market foreclosure. "Extensive ["full-scale"] economic analysis of the competitive effect" based on "examining the entire market in tires, batteries and accessories" was unnecessary. Evidence of "economic justification" or "economic benefit" to the parties was immaterial. It was "enough that the Commission found that a not insubstantial portion of commerce" was affected. Nevertheless, in summarizing its position the Court looked to the record. "The short of it" was that Atlantic, with Goodyear's aid, had "marshaled its full economic power in a continuing campaign to force its dealers" to buy Goodyear TBA. " The anti-competitive effects" were "clear on the record."

In Atlantic the Court found that the effect on commerce [37] was not insubstantial where Firestone and Goodyear sales with Atlantic outlets exceeded $11,000,000 in 1955 and $50,000,000 in six years. The comparable figures here are much greater. In 1957 Firestone and Goodyear sales with Shell outlets amounted to $47,000,000; in eight years the sales reached $290,000,000. In 1957 Firestone sales were $6,190,000 to Atlantic's dealers; $21,000,000 to Shell's dealers; $91,300,000 to dealers of all 16 contracting oil companies.

Before this Court the Commission lists certain "highlights of anti-competitive effects ". [25] These "highlights" show the [*484] "dramatic and immediate" anti-competitive pressures on dealers. "Yet ", as the Commission pointed out in its original opinion, "from the point of view of the anti-trust laws, it is the devastating competitive effects of the sales commission system on competitors of Firestone and Goodyear which raise the most grave questions in this proceeding." It is these destructive effects on TBA competition that submerged the tie-in issue and that most concerned the Commission and the Supreme Court.

[38] As in Atlantic, competition was impaired at three levels. (a) Wholesalers and manufacturers of competing brands were foreclosed from Shell's market. Even Firestone dealers who were not authorized supply points were cut off from Shell's outlets. (b) Firestone and Goodyear were excluded from competing with each other after a dealer had selected his supplier. [26] (c) Shell's dealers, who were limited to sponsored TBA were placed at a competitive disadvantage in having to compete with dealers free to stock several brands of TBA.

[39] Neither party has convincing figures on the relative success of the sales commission plan in terms of the amount of Shell business Firestone captured. Shell contends that its direct dealers bought no more than one-third of their TBA from sponsored outlets in 1954 and that this fact alone shows that Shell did not coerce its dealers or cause them to buy sponsored TBA. Shell's statistical method has deep holes in it. [27] [40] And the Commission's

---

[25] Shell dealers understand they are required to purchase sponsored TBA; they believe failure to cooperate may result in franchise termination; Shell dealers generally purchase substantial quantities of sponsored TBA and correspondingly refuse to purchase TBA from nonsupported sources; the purchase of nonsponsored TBA is something "tolerated" by Shell in emergencies; Shell stations generally are identified "Firestone" or "Goodyear"; Shell, Firestone and Goodyear understand that, under the system, Shell is the "customer" or "account" and that its stations will automatically follow; Firestone understands that its only competitor with Shell is Goodyear; Firestone and Goodyear do not compete for the TBA business of a Shell station once it is assigned to the other; Firestone signs contracts with virtually all of the Shell stations assigned to it which have TBA potential; and Goodyear has sold more TBA to Shell stations than has Firestone; intrabrand competitive injury results from the system's requirement that each Shell station may purchase only from its designated supply point.

[26] Shell maintains that many stations are "nominated" to serve as supply points of both Goodyear and Firestone. The Commission, however, found that less than ten per cent of the Shell stations with any TBA potential were nominated by both manufacturers. The Commission found also that usually stations are nominated before they are opened, and once one manufacturer secures the nomination the other company will not solicit the dealer's business. Although Goodyear and Firestone are far and away the largest competitors in the replacement tire market, a market known for its keen competition, the record shows that any competitive activity between them is aimed only at influencing Shell to change a nomination.

[27] In 1954 Shell sold 2,824,407,000 gallons of gasoline to its service stations and jobbers. During that same year, these outlets purchased $33,798,000 in sponsored TBA from Firestone and Goodyear. By dividing the latter figure into the former, Shell derives $11.97 as a dollars per 1,000 gallons of gasoline figure for sponsored TBA in 1954.

[*485] statistics are not free from holes. [28] The Commission could not make up its mind between asserting that there was two-thirds coverage and one hundred per cent coverage. It decided, somewhat uncertainly, that 68 per cent was the share of Shell TBA sales Firestone and Goodyear gained from their arrangements with Shell.

[41] Goodyear and Firestone are chiefly manufacturers and sellers of tires and tubes. Almost 80 per cent of the sponsored TBA sales by both companies constituted sales of tires and tubes. These companies purchased batteries and many other accessories from other companies and sell them under their own brand name in order to have a complete line of TBA to offer to any service station. In 1957 Firestone and Goodyear were responsible for selling 41 per cent of the replacement tires in the country. This market share is particularly impressive when we recognize that Sears, Roebuck & Co. (All State) and Montgomery Ward & Co. (Riverside) together sold another 11

Total sales of tires and tubes from service stations in 1954 were $290,620,000. This volume was sold by 124,548 service stations. In that the Census Bureau listed some 182,000 service stations in 1954, it is indicated that about 57,500 service stations sold no tires and tubes in 1954. Of those that did sell them, the average sales per station was $2,333 in 1954.

In this same year service stations sold $355,202,000 in batteries and accessories. In this case 135,791 stations handled these items indicating that more than 46,000 did not. For the stations which handled batteries and accessories, the average sales per station was $2,616.

Shell adds the figure of $2,333 to $2,616, the sum of which is $4,949. This is purported to be total TBA sales per station. That is, of course, a bastard figure in that its components come from arithmetic divisions which were made with different divisors. Even if it were possible to assume that all stations handling tires and tubes also handled batteries and accessories, this figure would still be a false one. Nevertheless, Shell braves along and divides this figure into the figure representing the average gasoline gallonage per service station in 1954 (137,972 gallons). This division brings it a purported national TBA sales per 1,000 gallons of gasoline of $35.87. By comparing $35.87 with $11.97, Shell is happily able to assert that Firestone and Goodyear supplied 1/3 of the Shell service station market.

Two errors cast doubt on the Shell statistical analysis. Even if we were to close our eyes to the manner in which the average total TBA sales were compiled, the fact remains that the national figures involved only service stations which carried TBA. There is no telling from the statistics offered how many of the stations carried tires alone, how many carried only batteries and accessories, and how many carried a full line of TBA. The figure of $35.87 serves no useful purpose.

If total sales of tires and tubes were added to total sales of batteries and accessories, the total for 1954 would be $645,822,000. Using Shell's figures for the total amount of gasoline sold by service stations in 1954 (25,176,029,000 gallons), we could divide the gallonage total into the TBA volume amount in order to get a nationwide dollar per 1,000 gallon figure, not taking into account the fact that some stations sold no TBA (irrelevant for this analysis unless it can be shown that Shell stations are more likely to handle TBA than non-Shell stations -- a fact which is certainly likely but never shown). The resulting figure is $25.65.

The figure would possibly be comparable to the $11.97 figure for sponsored TBA were it not for Shell's second basic error. In establishing the sponsored figure, Shell used its total sales to service stations and jobbers. There is no question that much of the gasoline sold to jobbers is not ultimately sold at service stations but is sold to motor fleet owners, airlines, and other direct purchasers. The $11.97 figure is therefore, too low for service stations, but there is no evidence in the massive record to indicate just how low it is.

In summary, we can gain very little positive knowledge from Shell's laborious statistical analyses.

[28] The Commission's method of computation involves the comparison of Shell's percentage share in the national gasoline market (sold through service stations) with the share of its sponsored TBA in the national TBA market (sold through service stations). The underlying assumption is that a service station will have TBA potential in relation to its gasoline sales and this assumption is accepted by all parties. The Commission offers 5 per cent as Shell's share in the national service station gasoline market. See Footnote 12. The major error is that it takes into account only the sales to direct dealers and ignores sales through jobbers. This glaring omission indicates that Shell's share in the market is in excess of 5 per cent although it is impossible to estimate to what extent.

At the same time, the Commission offers 3.4 per cent as Shell's sponsored TBA share in the national service station TBA market. Although there is some indication that some sponsored TBA is sold to non-service station outlets, the division of Shell's sponsored sales volume into the national service station TBA volume would appear to be a warranted statistical method were it not for the fact that the Commission chose to use figures from the year 1947. It thus attempts to compare a percentage from 1947 with one from 1954; the TBA market saw such revolutionary changes during this period that it is impossible to determine the distortion which results from this comparison.

per cent of the national market. Against these figures, Shell's contention that Firestone and Goodyear supplied [*486] only one-third of the TBA at Shell's stations loses most of its relevancy. Firestone and Goodyear could sell considerably less than 100 per cent of service station TBA to their Shell outlets and still maintain complete dominance in the tire field, the market area in which they are primarily interested. A device which enhances the position of two or three leading TBA suppliers vis-a-vis smaller competitors cannot [42] be defended on the ground that the device was not completely effective. The Commission's and the Court's ultimate concern was with the cumulative danger presented by the "widespread use" of the plans, rather than the relative effectiveness of particular plans.

Indeed, it is not even necessary to show open or veiled threats of cancellation to mark the sales commission plan as anti-competitive. While Shell may not punish dealers for failure to purchase sponsored TBA, there are many ways in which Shell may help its dealers over the course of a long term relationship. It may extend payment periods, extend credit, renew leases without rental increases. All of these are reasons for a dealer to curry favor with Shell. At the very least, Shell's economic position inclines a dealer to purchase sponsored TBA when it costs him no more to do so. But even this intervention into the process of competitive choice has been prohibited. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. United States, supra. As long as Shell's goodwill is worth having, its dealers will purchase sponsored TBA, at least when it costs them no more to do so. Competition in TBA is thus displaced; sales are, in some part, determined [43] not by the market but by oil company favor purchased by Firestone.

III.

Taking the record as a whole, we reach the following conclusions.

A. Nothing in the record or in Atlantic suggests that the case should be remanded to the Commission.

B. We are not impressed by the evidence showing overt coercion. The Commission introduced testimony of eleven ex-Shell dealers purportedly coerced by Shell. All of these dealers mentioned threats of some type but in no instance was a dealer's lease cancelled or was renewal refused; in no instance was a lease rental increased because of recalcitrance in buying sponsored TBA. None of these eleven dealers bought his entire TBA requirements from a sponsored source. The testimony of these eleven witnesses, supplemented by such documentary evidence as was adduced, was not enough to show a pattern or practice of overt coercion throughout Shell's nationwide network of dealers. When we reflect that the Commission had over 10,000 active dealers and over 20,000 former dealers to draw from in producing evidence, we conclude that the record evidence of overt coercion slims to invisibility -- even after making allowances for the difficulties in [44] finding dealers, past or present, willing to testify against Shell.

Shell produced thirty-two former Shell dealers and ninety-five present dealers to testify that their purchase of TBA was wholly free and uncoerced. Shell bolstered this evidence with testimony of seventeen competing suppliers who said that they had no problem selling to Shell dealers; testimony showing a Shell policy to encourage initiative and independence of the part of its dealers; documents indicating that Shell's official TBA policy, known to dealers, was based on the dealers' freedom to purchase any TBA. It is true that the examiner discredited Shell's witnesses or minimized the effect of their testimony. It is not our province to substitute our judgment for his in this matter. Nevertheless, his failure to mention the mass of countervailing evidence, when taken with the slimness of the evidence upon which he did rely, leaves us with the definite conviction that the record, when taken as a whole, does not support the finding of fact that overt coercion of dealers to buy from sponsored TBA outlets was a prevailing Shell business practice.

C. The lack of testimony showing overt coercion and the affirmative [45] testimony [*487] showing that Shell encouraged initiative and independence in its dealers make even more impressive the evidence establishing that the sales commission system is inherently coercive and results in foreclosure of competition in the TBA market. We find it unnecessary to require the Commission to present a precise measure of the system's effectiveness.

The relationship of a major oil company to its service station dealer goes beyond the bigness-littleness antithesis that exists in innumerable contract negotiations and in the operations of a modern, large business. [29] The inherent leverage a major oil company has over its dealers results from the market structure of the industry and the special dependence on the company of the service station dealer (who is usually also a lessee). The classic market factors of price, quality, attractiveness, and whatever enables a retailer to resell goods at a profit are pre-empted by the TBA distribution system superimposed from on high by deus ex machina. A man operating a gas station is bound to be overawed by the great corporation that is his supplier, his banker, and his landlord. When he hears that Shell will benefit [46] from his patronage of sponsored TBA outlets, the velvet glove of request has within it the mailed fist of command. His interest in catering to Shell's sponsorship of certain TBA will be especially strong when the time for lease renewal approaches (once a year) or when a change in rental or commission appears in sight. The run of the mill service station dealer is a man of limited means who has, for him, a sizeable investment in his station. Much of the value of that investment is in goodwill attached to the gasoline he sells, the TBA he stocks, and the location of the station where he sells these products. While it is true that it is expensive for Shell to switch dealers, it is far more expensive, in relative terms, for a dealer to lose his station.

[47] The per se doctrine has a charm all its own in antitrust litigation. When a per se rule is applicable in a given situation, businessmen know where they stand. Lawyers, for the government or for private clients, are saved the necessity of building a record bulging with complicated facts, statistical analyses, market data and other formidable economics material. Here, with the proper authorization, the incantation of two words would enable the Court to sweep most of nine volumes of record under the rug. We hold, however, that in the circumstances this case presents the Supreme Court has not yet authorized that incantation.

In the light of Atlantic but based on the record as a whole, we conclude that substantial evidence supports the Commission's basic findings. Within the factual context of this case, Shell (a) had dominant power over its dealers and (b) exerted that power through natural leverage and through control devices in carrying out its TBA sales commission plan, (c) causing adverse competitive effects on a not insubstantial portion of the TBA market. The Shell-Firestone sales commission system is inherently coercive upon its dealers and innately anticompetitive [48] in its effect. Its precise harm is hard to measure. But here the Commission has shown enough harm, existent and potential, to require the Court to condemn the Shell-Firestone TBA sales commission plan as an unfair method of competition under Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

The first four numbered paragraphs of the Commission's orders against Shell and Firestone deal with the sales commission contract and the sales commission system. Those portions of the Commission's orders are affirmed and will be enforced. Since we have found that the record fails to support the Commission's finding that Shell overtly coerced any substantial number of dealers or that there was any pattern of overt coercion [*488] by Shell, we do not approve or affirm paragraphs five and six of the orders, except to the extent that all coercion intended to promote sponsored TBA in accordance with a sales commission plan is prohibited.

End of Document

[29] Congress dealt with a somewhat similar situation in enacting a statute to protect automobile dealers from coercive practices of manufacturers. 15 U.S.C. §§ 1221- 1225. See The Automobile Dealer Franchise Act: A "New Departure" in Federal Legislation, 52 Nw. U.L. Rev. 253 (1957).

United States v. General Motors Corp.

Supreme Court of the United States

December 9, 1965, Argued ; April 28, 1966, Decided

No. 46

Reporter

384 U.S. 127 *; 86 S. Ct. 1321 ; 16 L. Ed. 2d 415 ; 1966 U.S. LEXIS 2960 *; 1966 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,750; 10 Fed. R. Serv. 2d (Callaghan) 1245

UNITED STATES v. GENERAL MOTORS CORP. ET AL.

Prior History: [1] APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA.

Disposition: 234 F.Supp. 85, reversed and remanded.

Core Terms

dealers, discounters, associations, conspiracy, sales, franchised, Sherman Act, customer, collaborative, unilateral, promise, prices, manufacturer, price competition, establishments, repurchase, antitrust, retailing, referral, concert, outlets

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN1[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

HN2[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Explicit agreement is not a necessary part of a Sherman Act conspiracy, and certainly not where joint and collaborative action was pervasive in the initiation, execution, and fulfillment of the plan.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > Antitrust Issues

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > General Overview

HN3[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

There are statutory inhibitions on the right of an automobile manufacturer to terminate dealer franchises. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1222.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN4[] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Per Se Violations

Elimination, by joint collaborative action, of a group of automobile discounters from access to the market is a per se violation of the Sherman Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN5[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

Where businessmen concert their actions in order to deprive others of access to merchandise which the latter wish to sell to the public, the court need not inquire into the economic motivation underlying their conduct to find a violation of the Sherman Act.

Lawyers' Edition Display

Summary

Upon complaint by its dealers in the Los Angeles area about sales by some of the dealers through discount houses, the defendant automobile manufacturer elicited from each dealer a promise not to do business with the discounters; three dealer associations, which were also defendants, undertook jointly to police the agreements so obtained; the associations, as requested by the manufacturer, supplied information to the manufacturer for use by it in bringing wayward dealers into line; and as a result of this collaborative effort, a number of dealers were induced to repurchase cars they had sold through discounters and to promise to abjure such sales in the future.

In the present civil action brought by the United States in the United States District Court for the Southern District of California to enjoin the defendants from participating in an alleged conspiracy to restrain trade in violation of 1 of the Sherman Act, the court concluded that the proof failed to establish the alleged violation, and entered judgment for the defendants. (234 F Supp 85.)

Upon direct appeal, the Supreme Court of the United States reversed. In an opinion by Fortas, J., expressing the view of eight members of the Court, it was held that the joint activities of the defendants constituted "a classic conspiracy in restraint of trade," and that the evidence was sufficient to prove such a conspiracy.

Harlan, J., concurred in the result, feeling bound by a precedent even though he had dissented from its holding.

Headnotes

MONOPOLIES §30 > collaboration between manufacturer and dealers -- elimination of discounters -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[1][] [1]

Joint collaborative action by an automobile manufacturer, its franchise dealers, and associations of these dealers to eliminate discount houses as competitors by terminating business dealings between them and a minority of the dealers and to deprive the dealers of their freedom to deal through discounters if they so choose, is a conspiracy in restraint of trade in violation of 1 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act (15 USC 1), it being immaterial whether the clause in the franchise agreement which prohibits a dealer from moving to or establishing a new or different location without the manufacturer's prior written approval may be construed to prohibit the dealers from selling through discounters.

EVIDENCE §991.5 > sufficiency -- violation of antitrust laws -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[2][] [2]

A conspiracy to restrain trade by eliminating discount houses is proved where the evidence shows that an automobile manufacturer to which its dealers had complained about sales through discounters elicited from every dealer in the area a promise not to do business with the discounters; that three associations of the dealers undertook jointly to police these agreements obtained and, as requested, supplied information to the manufacturer for use by it in bringing wayward dealers into line; and that as a result of this collaborative effort, a number of dealers were induced to re-purchase cars they had sold through discounters and to promise to abjure such sales in the future.

ERROR §1477 > review of findings -- antitrust action -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[3A][] [3A]LEdHN[3B][] [3B]

Federal Civil Procedure Rule 52 (a), under which findings of fact shall not be set aside unless clearly erroneous, has no application to a finding by the District Court that defendants' conduct did not constitute a combination in violation of the Sherman Act, where the District Court premised its finding on an erroneous interpretation of the standard to be applied.

MONOPOLIES §14 > test of combination -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[4][] [4]

For purposes of determining whether there has been a combination or conspiracy in violation of 1 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act (15 USC 1) it is of no consequence that each party acted in its own lawful interest; nor is it of consequence, where an automobile manufacturer and its dealers are charged with collaborative action to eliminate discounters from access to the market, whether their franchise system and a clause contained in the franchise agreement prohibiting a dealer from moving to or establishing a new or different location without the manufacturer's prior consent are lawful or economically desirable.

MONOPOLIES §10 > conspiracy -- explicit agreement -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[5][] [5]

An explicit agreement is not a necessary part of a conspiracy in violation of 1 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act (15 USC 1), and certainly not where joint and collaborative action was pervasive in the initiation, execution, and fulfilment of the plan.

MONOPOLIES §29 > elimination of competition -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[6][] [6]

Elimination, by joint collaborative action, of discounters from access to the market is a per se violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act.

EVIDENCE §343.5 > MONOPOLIES §30 > group boycotts -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[7][] [7]

Group boycotts are a class of restraint of trade which, from their nature or character, are unduly restrictive and, because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue, are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use.

MONOPOLIES §14 > economic motivation -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[8][] [8]

Where businessmen concert their actions in order to deprive others of access to merchandise which the latter wish to sell to the public, the courts need not inquire into the economic motivation underlying the conduct.

MONOPOLIES §29 > exclusion of traders from market -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[9][] [9]

Exclusion of traders from the market by means of combination or conspiracy is so inconsistent with the free-market principles embodied in the Sherman Anti-Trust Act that it is not to be saved by reference to the need for preserving the collaborators' profit margins or their system for distributing goods, any more than by reference to the allegedly tortious conduct against which a combination or conspiracy may be directed.

MONOPOLIES §36 > price control -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[10][] [10]

A substantial restraint upon price competition is a goal unlawful per se under the antitrust laws when sought to be effected by combination or conspiracy; the per se rule applies even when the effect upon prices is indirect.

MONOPOLIES §6 > purpose of antitrust laws -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[11][] [11]

The protection of price competition from conspiratorial restraint is an object of special solicitude under the antitrust laws.

MONOPOLIES §29 > elimination of competitors -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[12][] [12]

The Sherman Anti-Trust Act prohibits conspiracies or combinations to put competitors out of business entirely, as well as conspiracies to fix prices at which competitors may sell.

Syllabus

This is a civil action to enjoin General Motors Corporation (GM) and three associations of Chevrolet dealers in the Los Angeles area from participating in an alleged conspiracy to restrain trade in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act by eliminating sales of new Chevrolets through "discount houses" and "referral services." The District Court found, among other things, that the Losor Chevrolet Dealers Association in the summer of 1960 complained to GM personnel about sales to discounters; that at a Losor meeting in November 1960 member dealers agreed to embark on a letter-writing campaign to enlist GM's aid; that in December and January GM personnel talked to every dealer in the area and obtained promises not to deal with discounters; that representatives of the three dealer associations met on December 15, 1960, and created a joint investigating committee; that the associations then undertook to police the agreements so obtained [*2] by GM; that the associations supplied information to GM for use in bringing wayward dealers into line, and that the Chevrolet zone manager asked them to do so; that as a result a number of dealers were induced to repurchase cars they had sold to discounters and agreed to refrain from making such sales in the future; and that by spring 1961 sales through discounters seem to have ended. However, the District Court found no conspiracy in violation of the Sherman Act, holding that each alleged conspirator acted to promote its own self-interest and that in seeking to vindicate these interests the alleged conspirators entered into no "agreements" among themselves, although they may have engaged in "parallel action." Held: This is a classic conspiracy in restraint of trade: joint, collaborative action by dealers, associations, and GM to eliminate a class of competitors by terminating dealings between them and a minority of Chevrolet dealers and to deprive franchised dealers of their freedom to deal through discounters if they so choose. Pp. 138-148.

(a) The District Court's conclusion that appellees' conduct did not amount to a conspiracy within the meaning of the Act was not the kind [*3] of fact-finding shielded from review by the "clearly erroneous" test embodied in Rule 52 (a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, since the question involved the application of a legal standard to undisputed facts and since the bulk of the case was presented to the trial judge in the form of documents, depositions, and written statements. P. 141, n. 16.

(b) In determining whether there has been a conspiracy or combination under § 1 of the Sherman Act it is of no consequence that each party acted in its own lawful interest or whether the franchise system is lawful or economically desirable. P. 142.

(c) Even if it were assumed that there had been no explicit agreement among the appellees and their alleged co-conspirators, such an agreement is not a necessary part of a Sherman Act conspiracy -- certainly not where, as here, joint and collaborative action was pervasive in the initiation, execution and fulfillment of the plan. United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., 362 U.S. 29, 43. Pp. 142-143.

(d) The joint and interrelated activities of GM and the co-conspirators in obtaining the agreements not to deal with discounters and in policing such agreements cannot [*4] be described as "unilateral" or merely "parallel." Pp. 144-145.

(e) The elimination, by joint collaborative action, of businessmen from access to the market is a per se violation of the Act. Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207. Pp. 145-146.

(f) The economic motivation of those who by concerted action seek to keep others from trading in the market is irrelevant. Pp. 146-147.

(g) Inherent in the success of the combination in this case was a substantial restraint upon price competition, a goal unlawful per se when sought to be effected by combination or conspiracy. United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., supra. P. 147.

Counsel: Daniel M. Friedman argued the cause for the United States. On the brief were Solicitor General Marshall, Assistant Attorney General Turner, Lionel Kestenbaum, Richard A. Posner and Robert C. Weinbaum.

Homer I. Mitchell argued the cause for appellee General Motors Corp. With him on the brief were Warren M. Christopher, Marcus Mattson, Aloysius F. Power, Robert A. Nitschke, Nicholas J. Rosiello, Henry C. Thumann, Donald M. Wessling and Robert W. Culver. Victor R. Hansen argued the cause [*5] for appellees Losor Chevrolet Dealers Association et al. With him on the brief were Glenn S. Roberts and Henry F. Walker.

Thomas A. Rothwell and William C. Hillman filed a brief for O. M. Scott & Sons Co. et al., as amici curiae.

Judges: Warren, Black, Douglas, Clark, Harlan, Brennan, Stewart, White, Fortas

Opinion by: FORTAS

Opinion

[*129] [417] [1322] MR. JUSTICE FORTAS delivered the opinion of the Court.

This is a civil action brought by the United States to enjoin the appellees from participating in an alleged conspiracy to restrain trade in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. [1] The United States District Court for the Southern District of California concluded that the proof failed to establish the alleged violation, and entered judgment for the defendants. The case is here on direct appeal under § 2 of the Expediting Act, 32 Stat. 823, 15 U. S. C. § 29 (1964 ed.). We reverse.

[6] I.

The appellees are the General Motors Corporation, which manufactures, among other things, the Chevrolet line of cars and trucks, and three associations of Chevrolet dealers in and around Los Angeles, California. [2] All of the Chevrolet dealers in the area belong to one or more of the appellee associations.

[*130] Chevrolets are ordinarily distributed by dealers operating under a franchise from General Motors. The dealers purchase the cars from the manufacturer, and then retail them [418] to the public. The relationship between manufacturer and dealer is incorporated in a comprehensive uniform Dealer Selling Agreement. This agreement does not restrict or define those to whom [*7] the dealer may sell. Nor are there limitations as to the territory within which the dealer may sell. Compare White Motor Co. v. United States, 372 U.S. 253. The franchise agreement does, however, contain a clause (hereinafter referred to as the "location clause") which prohibits a dealer from moving to or establishing "a new or different location, branch sales office, branch service station, or place [1323] of business including any used car lot or location without the prior written approval of Chevrolet."

Beginning in the late 1950's, "discount houses" engaged in retailing consumer goods in the Los Angeles area and "referral services" [3] began offering to sell new cars to the public at allegedly bargain prices. Their sources of supply were the franchised dealers. By 1960 a number of individual Chevrolet dealers, without authorization from General Motors, had developed working relationships with these establishments. A customer would enter one of these establishments and examine the literature and price lists for automobiles produced by several manufacturers. In some instances, floor models were available for inspection. Some of the establishments negotiated [*8] [*131] with the customer for a trade-in of his old car, and provided financing for his new-car purchase.

The relationship with the franchised dealer took various forms. One arrangement was for the discounter to refer the customer to the dealer. The car would then be offered to him by the dealer at a price previously agreed upon between the dealer and the discounter. In 1960, a typical referral agreement concerning Chevrolets provided that the price to the customer was not to exceed $ 250 over the dealer's invoiced cost. For its part in supplying the customer, the discounter received $ 50 per sale.

Another common arrangement was for the discounter [*9] itself to negotiate the sale, the dealer's role being to furnish the car and to transfer title to the customer at the direction of the discounter. One dealer furnished Chevrolets under such an arrangement, charging the discounter $ 85 over its invoiced cost, with the discounter getting the best price it could from its customer.

---

[1] The statute reads in relevant part: HN1[] "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal. . . ." 26 Stat. 209, 15 U. S. C. § 1 (1964 ed.).

[2] Named as co-conspirators but not as defendants are "the officers, directors, and members of [the three associations], certain officers and employees of such members, certain officers and employees of General Motors, other Chevrolet dealers in the Southern California area, and others to the plaintiff unknown . . . ."

[3] Since the evidence does not consistently distinguish between "discount houses" and "referral services," based either on the variety of goods offered to the public or on the nature of the arrangement between the establishment and the franchised dealer which supplied it with cars, we shall hereinafter use the term "discounter" to embrace all such establishments.

These were the principal forms of trading involved in this case, although within each there were variations, [4] [*10] and there were schemes which fit neither pattern. [5] [*132] By 1960 these methods for retailing new cars [419] had reached considerable dimensions. Of the 100,000 new Chevrolets sold in the Los Angeles area in that year, some 2,000 represented discount house or referral sales. One Chevrolet dealer attributed as much as 25% of its annual sales to participation in these arrangements, while another accounted for between 400 and 525 referral sales in a single year.

Approximately a dozen of the 85 Chevrolet dealers in the Los Angeles area were furnishing cars to discounters in [1324] 1960. As the volume of these [*11] sales grew, the nonparticipating Chevrolet dealers located near one or more of the discount outlets [6] [*12] began to feel the pinch. Dealers lost sales because potential customers received, or thought they would receive, [7] a more attractive deal from a discounter [*133] who obtained its Chevrolets from a distant dealer. The discounters vigorously advertised Chevrolets for sale, with alluring statements as to price savings. The discounters also advertised that all Chevrolet dealers were obligated to honor the new-car warranty and to provide the free services contemplated therein; and General Motors does indeed require Chevrolet dealers to service Chevrolet cars, wherever purchased, pursuant to the new-car warranty and service agreement. Accordingly, nonparticipating dealers were increasingly called upon to service, without compensation, Chevrolets purchased through discounters. Perhaps what grated most was the demand that they "precondition" cars so purchased -- make the hopefully minor adjustments and do the body and paint work necessary to render a factory-fresh car both customer- and road-worthy.

[13] On June 28, 1960, at a regular meeting of the appellee Losor Chevrolet Dealers Association, member dealers discussed the problem and resolved to bring it to the attention of the Chevrolet Division's Los Angeles zone manager, Robert O'Connor. Shortly thereafter, a delegation from the association called [420] upon O'Connor, presented evidence that some dealers were doing business with the discounters, and asked for his assistance. O'Connor promised he would speak to the offending dealers. When no help was forthcoming, Owen Keown, a director of Losor, took matters into his own hands. First, he spoke to Warren Biggs and Wilbur Newman, Chevrolet dealers who were then doing a substantial business with discounters. According to Keown's testimony, Newman

---

[4] One dealer, for example, paid its referral service one-third of the gross profit on each sale, up to $ 75, there being no fixed price at which the sale was to take place. The same dealer earlier had paid a flat fee of $ 17.50 for every referral, whether or not the sale was consummated.

[5] At least one discount house actually purchased its cars from cooperative dealers, then resold them to its customers. In this situation, which in the trade is referred to as "bootlegging," the customer does not receive a new-car warranty. General Motors, while disapproving of the practice, does not assert that it violates the "location clause." In those arrangements against which General Motors and the associations did direct their efforts, title to the new car passed directly from dealer to retail customer, who thus obtained a new-car warranty and service agreement.

There must also be distinguished the ubiquitous practice of using "bird dogs" -- informal sources who steer occasional customers toward a particular dealer, in return for relatively small fees -- often a bottle of liquor. This practice is not only deemed by General Motors not to violate the "location clause," but has the corporation's endorsement as a desirable sales device.

[6] As the District Court found, 70% of the local Chevrolet dealers were located within five miles of one or more of the 23 discount house or referral outlets.

[7] There is evidence in the record that discount sales undercut the prices at which franchised dealers were able to, or chose to, compete. Two purchasers of Chevrolets, one on referral and the other in a discount house "sale," testified that they had "shopped" other dealers but found the discount and referral prices lower. Dealers and their salesmen complained to General Motors about sales lost through inability to meet the discounters' price. Moreover, the discounters advertised and actually provided auto loans at interest rates substantially lower than those offered by G. M. A. C., General Motors' financing subsidiary.

There is also evidence that it was not just price itself which induced customers to purchase Chevrolets through the discounters. One customer testified that he preferred the discount house because he thereby avoided the haggling over price which seems an inevitable facet of purchasing a car in the orthodox way. Others apparently assumed, without bothering to confirm by comparison shopping, that "discount" stores would offer lower prices. This assumption was fed by discount house advertising which promised "the lowest price anywhere" and "savings of hundreds of dollars."

told him that he would continue the practice "until . . . told not to by" Chevrolet, and that "when the Chevrolet Motor Division told him not to do it, he [*134] knew that they wouldn't let some other dealer carry on with it." [8]

[14] Keown then reported the foregoing events at the association's annual meeting in Honolulu on November 10, 1960. The member dealers present agreed immediately [1325] to flood General Motors and the Chevrolet Division with letters and telegrams asking for help. Salesmen, too, were to write. [9]

Hundreds of letters and wires descended upon Detroit -- with telling effect. Within a week Chevrolet's O'Connor was directed to furnish his superiors in Detroit with "a detailed report of the discount house operations . . . as well as what action we in the Zone are taking to curb such sales." [10]

[15] By mid-December General Motors had formulated its response. On December 15, James M. Roche, then an executive vice president of General Motors, wrote to some of the complaining dealers. He noted that the [*135] practices to which they were objecting "in some instances represent the establishment of a second and unauthorized sales outlet or location contrary to the provisions of the General Motors Dealers Selling Agreements." (Emphasis supplied.) Recipients of the letter were advised that General Motors personnel proposed to discuss that matter with each of the dealers. [11] O'Connor in Los Angeles was apprised of the letter's content and instructed to carry on the personal discussions referred to therein. With respect to the offending dealers, he was to work with Roy Cash, regional manager for the Chevrolet Division. Cash had been briefed on the subject in Detroit on December 14.

[16] General [421] Motors personnel proceeded to telephone all area dealers, both to identify those associated with the discounters and to advise nonparticipants that General Motors had entered the lists. The principal offenders were treated to unprecedented individual confrontations with Cash, the regional manager. These brief meetings were wholly successful in obtaining from each dealer his agreement to abandon the practices in question. Some capitulated during the course of the four- or five-minute meeting, or immediately thereafter. [12] [*17] One dealer, who met not with Cash but with the city sales manager for [*136] Chevrolet, put off

---

[8] Dealer Biggs put the same sentiments into a letter to both Keown and Chevrolet's zone manager O'Connor, written on November 5, 1960. The day before, in O'Connor's presence, Keown had challenged Biggs to justify his dealings with the discounters. Biggs wrote: "We would be most reluctant to discard an account as good as this one without rather concrete assurance that it would not immediately be picked up by another Chevrolet dealer." Two weeks later, O'Connor forwarded Biggs' letter to General Motors officials in Detroit.

[9] In Keown's words, "We were seeking the assistance of the higher echelon officials of Chevrolet and General Motors in bringing about an end to the discount house sale of Chevrolets."

[10] O'Connor's report, dated November 22, recounted that "zone management" had talked with the offending dealers "in an attempt to have them desist," and that "our Dealer Associations have formed a committee to call on the supplying dealers and have asked them and have attempted to persuade them to discontinue this practice." Supported by a copy of dealer Biggs' letter, see n. 8, supra, O'Connor predicted that "many dealers will cease this type of business if they had any assurance that the account would not be picked up by some other dealer, immediately upon relinquishment."

[11] Roche wrote to those dealers who had complained directly to John Gordon, then president of General Motors. On December 29, 1960, a virtually identical letter went out to all General Motors dealers throughout the Nation, under the signature of the general sales managers for the respective divisions.

[12] One dealer testified that he abruptly terminated arrangements long maintained with two discount houses, despite the fact that one of these connections owed him $ 20,000 and the other $ 28,000. In the preceding four weeks the latter had reduced its indebtedness by $ 52,000 and could reasonably have been expected to erase it completely within a few weeks. The dealer anticipated that upon cancellation of the accounts these debts would become uncollectible. His fears were justified. The accounts were terminated. The debts remained unpaid.

decision for a week "to make sure that the other dealers, or most of them, had stopped their business dealings with discount houses." [13]

There [1326] is evidence that unanimity was not obtained without reference to the ultimate power of General Motors. The testimony of dealer Wilbur Newman was [*18] that regional manager Cash related a story, the relevance of which was not lost upon him, that in handling children, "I can tell them to stop something. If they don't do it . . . I can knock their teeth down their throats."

By mid-January General Motors had elicited from each dealer a promise not to do business with the discounters. But such agreements would require policing -- a fact which had been anticipated. General Motors earlier had initiated contacts with firms capable of performing such a function. This plan, unilaterally to police the agreements, was displaced, however, in favor of a joint effort between General Motors, the three appellee associations, and a number of individual dealers.

On December 15, 1960, representatives of the three appellee associations had met and appointed a joint committee to study the situation and to keep in touch with [*137] Chevrolet's O'Connor. [14] Early in 1961, the three associations agreed [422] jointly to finance the "shopping" of the discounters to assure that no Chevrolet dealer continued to supply them with cars. Each of the associations contributed $ 5,000, and a professional investigator was hired. He was instructed [*19] to try to purchase new Chevrolets from the proscribed outlets, to tape-record the transactions, if any, and to gather all the necessary documentary evidence -- which the associations would then lay "at the doorstep of Chevrolet." These joint associational activities were both preceded and supplemented by similar "shopping" activities by individual dealers and by appellee Losor Chevrolet Dealers Association.

[20] General Motors collaborated with these policing activities. There is evidence that zone manager O'Connor and a subordinate, Jere Faust, actively solicited the help of individual dealers in uncovering violations. Armed with information of such violations obtained from the dealers or their associations, O'Connor or members of his staff would ask the offending dealer to come in and talk. The dealer then was confronted with the car purchased by the "shopper," the documents of sale, and in most cases a tape recording of the transaction. In every instance, the embarrassed dealer repurchased the car, sometimes at a substantial loss, and promised to stop such sales. At the direction of O'Connor or a subordinate, the checks with which the cars were repurchased were [*138] made payable to an attorney acting jointly for the three defendant associations.

O'Connor testified that on no occasion did he "force" a dealer to repurchase; he merely made the opportunity available. But one dealer testified that when an assistant zone manager for the Chevrolet [1327] Division asked him to come in and talk about discount sales, "he specified a sum of money which I was to bring with me [*21] when I came down and saw him. . . . I kept the appointment and brought a cashier's check. I knew when I came down to Los Angeles that I was going to repurchase an automobile . . . ." Another dealer testified that upon being confronted with evidence that one of his cars had been purchased through a referral service, he not only bought it

---

[13] According to Francis Bruder, a dealer who had been doing business with the discounters since 1957, "Cash told me that he felt certain that the other dealers would discontinue dealing with discount houses and referral services as well. I left this meeting with the impression that every dealer who had been doing business with a discount house or referral service would soon quit."

This was precisely the impression General Motors had intended to implant. As was explained in an inter-office memorandum to the general sales manager of General Motors' Chevrolet Division, "[All dealers were talked to] in order that every dealer with whom the subject was discussed would know that a similar discussion was being held with all other dealers so that, if certain dealers should elect to discontinue their cooperation with a discount house, we might be able to discourage some other dealer who might be solicited from starting the practice."

[14] The District Court characterized this December 15 meeting as the first between representatives of the three associations, pertaining to the problem of discount house and referral sales. However, as we have previously noted, n. 10, supra, O'Connor reported to General Motors three weeks earlier, on November 22, that the three associations had formed a committee which already had called upon nonconforming dealers. The record does not enable us to resolve this factual conflict, nor is its resolution important. On either version, the appellee associations entered into an explicit agreement to act together to eliminate the new mode of intrabrand competition.

back (without questioning the correctness of the price exacted) but also fired the employee responsible for the transaction -- although the employee had been commended by the Chevrolet Division a few weeks earlier as the "number one fleet salesman" in the 11-state Pacific region.

By the spring of 1961, the campaign to eliminate the discounters from commerce in new Chevrolet cars was a success. Sales through the discount outlets seem to have come to a halt. Not until a federal grand jury commenced an inquiry into the matters which we have sketched does it appear that any Chevrolet dealer resumed its business association with the discounters.

II.

On these basic facts, the Government first proceeded criminally. A federal grand jury in the Southern District of California returned an indictment. After trial, the defendants were found not guilty. [*22] The present civil action, filed shortly after return of the indictment, was then brought to trial.

[*139] Both the Government and the appellees urge the importance, for purposes of decision, of the "location clause" in the Dealer Selling Agreement which prohibits a franchised dealer from moving to or establishing [423] "a new or different location, branch sales office, branch service station, or place of business . . . without the prior written approval of Chevrolet." The appellees contend that this contractual provision is lawful, and that it justifies their actions. They argue that General Motors acted lawfully to prevent its dealers from violating the "location clause," that the described arrangements with discounters constitute the establishment of additional sales outlets in violation of the clause, and that the individual dealers -- and their associations -- have an interest in uniform compliance with the franchise agreement, which interest they lawfully sought to vindicate.

The Government invites us to join in the assumption, only for purposes of this case, that the "location clause" encompasses sales by dealers through the medium of discounters. But it urges [*23] us to hold that, so construed, the provision is unlawful as an unreasonable restraint of trade in violation of the Sherman Act. [15]

LEdHN[1][] [1]We need not reach these questions concerning the meaning, effect, or validity of the "location clause" or of any other provision in the Dealer Selling Agreement, and we do not. We do [*24] not decide whether the "location [*140] clause" may be construed to prohibit a dealer, party to it, from selling through discounters, or whether General Motors could by unilateral action enforce the clause, so construed. We have here a classic conspiracy in restraint of trade: joint, collaborative action by dealers, the appellee associations, and General Motors to eliminate a class of competitors by terminating [1328] business dealings between them and a minority of Chevrolet dealers and to deprive franchised dealers of their freedom to deal through discounters if they so choose. Against this fact of unlawful combination, the "location clause" is of no avail. Whatever General Motors might or might not lawfully have done to enforce individual Dealer Selling Agreements by action within the borders of those agreements and the relationship which each defines, is beside the point. And, because the action taken constitutes a combination or conspiracy, it is not necessary to consider what might be the legitimate interest of a dealer in securing compliance by others with the "location clause," or the lawfulness of action a dealer might individually take to vindicate this interest.

[25] The District Court decided otherwise. It concluded that the described events did not add up to a combination or conspiracy violative of the antitrust laws. But its conclusion cannot be squared with its own specific findings of fact. These findings include the essentials of a conspiracy within § 1 of the Sherman Act: That in the summer of 1960 the Losor Chevrolet Dealers Association, "through some of its dealer-members," complained to General Motors personnel about sales through discounters (Finding 34); that at a Losor meeting in November 1960 the dealers there present agreed to embark on a letter-writing campaign directed at enlisting [424] the aid of [15] The Government's complaint contains no reference to the "location clause," and the Government concedes that its case was tried on a conspiracy theory, the defendants injecting the contractual issue by way of defense. Trial counsel for the Government did advert to the clause in the District Court, but it does not appear that he challenged its validity, as construed, in the same sense that the Government does here. See Trial Transcript, pp. 9, 17-18. In light of our disposition of the case, we have no occasion to consider whether the Government's argument directed to the clause, as construed, is properly before us.

General Motors (Finding 35); that in December and January General Motors personnel discussed the matter with every Chevrolet dealer in the Los Angeles area and elicited from [*141] each a promise not to do business with the discounters (Finding 39); that representatives of the three associations of Chevrolet dealers met on December 15, 1960, and created a joint investigating committee (Finding 40); that the three associations then undertook jointly to police the agreements obtained from each of the dealers by General [*26] Motors; that the associations supplied information to General Motors for use by it in bringing wayward dealers into line, and that Chevrolet's O'Connor asked the associations to do so (Findings 41 and 42); that as a result of this collaborative effort, a number of Chevrolet dealers were induced to repurchase cars they had sold through discounters and to promise to abjure such sales in future (Finding 42).

LEdHN[2][] [2]LEdHN[3A][] [3A]These findings by the trial judge compel the conclusion that a conspiracy to restrain trade was proved. [16] [1329] The [*142] error of the trial court lies in its failure to apply the correct and established standard for ascertaining the existence of a combination or conspiracy under § 1 of the Sherman Act. See United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., 362 U.S. 29, 44-45.The trial court attempted to justify its conclusion on the following reasoning: That each defendant and alleged co-conspirator acted to promote its own self-interest; that General Motors, as well as the defendant associations and [*27] their members, has a lawful interest in securing compliance with the "location clause" and in thus protecting the franchise system of distributing automobiles -- business arrangements which the court deemed lawful and proper; and that in seeking to vindicate these interests the defendants and their alleged co-conspirators entered into no "agreements" among themselves, although they may have engaged in "parallel action."

LEdHN[3B][] [3B]

[28] LEdHN[4][] [4] LEdHN[5][] [5]These factors do not justify [425] the result reached. It is of no consequence, for purposes of determining whether there has been a combination or conspiracy under § 1 of the Sherman Act, that each party acted in its own lawful interest. Nor is it of consequence for this purpose whether the "location clause" and franchise system are lawful or economically desirable. And although we regard as clearly erroneous and irreconcilable with its other findings the trial court's conclusory "finding" that there had been no "agreement" among the defendants and their alleged co-conspirators, it has long been settled that HN2[] explicit agreement is not a necessary part of a Sherman [*143] Act conspiracy -- certainly not where, as here, joint and collaborative action was pervasive in the initiation, execution, and fulfillment of the plan. United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., supra, at 43; United States v. Bausch & Lomb Optical Co., 321 U.S. 707, 722-723; [*29] Federal Trade Comm'n v. Beech-Nut Packing Co., 257 U.S. 441, 455.

---

[16] We note that, as in United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., 362 U.S. 29, 44-45, the ultimate conclusion by the trial judge, that the defendants' conduct did not constitute a combination or conspiracy in violation of the Sherman Act, is not to be shielded by the "clearly erroneous" test embodied in Rule 52 (a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. That Rule in part provides: "Findings of fact shall not be set aside unless clearly erroneous, and due regard shall be given to the opportunity of the trial court to judge of the credibility of the witnesses." As in Parke Davis, supra, the question here is not one of "fact," but consists rather of the legal standard required to be applied to the undisputed facts of the case. See United States v. Singer Mfg. Co., 374 U.S. 174, 194, n. 9; United States v. Mississippi Valley Co., 364 U.S. 520, 526, and cases there cited.

Moreover, the trial court's customary opportunity to evaluate the demeanor and thus the credibility of the witnesses, which is the rationale behind Rule 52 (a) (see United States v. Oregon State Med. Soc., 343 U.S. 326, 331-332), plays only a restricted role here. This was essentially a "paper case." It did not unfold by the testimony of "live" witnesses. Of the 38 witnesses who gave testimony, only three appeared in person. The testimony of the other 35 witnesses was submitted either by affidavit, by deposition, or in the form of an agreed-upon narrative of testimony given in the earlier criminal proceeding before another judge. A vast number of documents were also introduced, and bear on the question for decision.

In any event, we resort to the record not to contradict the trial court's findings of fact, as distinguished from its conclusory "findings," but to supplement the court's factual findings and to assist us in determining whether they support the court's ultimate legal conclusion that there was no conspiracy.

Neither individual dealers nor the associations acted independently or separately. The dealers collaborated, through the associations and otherwise, among themselves and with General Motors, both to enlist the aid of General Motors and to enforce dealers' promises to forsake the discounters. The associations explicitly entered into a joint venture to assist General Motors in policing the dealers' promises, and their joint proffer of aid was accepted and utilized by General Motors.

Nor did General Motors confine its activities to the contractual boundaries of its relationships with individual dealers. As the trial court found (Finding 39), General Motors at no time announced that it would terminate the franchise of any dealer which furnished cars to the discounters. [17] The evidence indicates that it had no intention of acting in this unilateral fashion. [18] On the contrary, overriding [1330] corporate policy with respect to [*144] proper dealer relations [19] dissuaded General Motors from engaging in this sort of wholly unilateral conduct, the validity of which under the antitrust [*30] laws was [426] assumed, without being decided, in Parke Davis, supra.

[31] As Parke Davis had done, General Motors sought to elicit from all the dealers agreements, substantially interrelated and interdependent, that none of them would do business with the discounters. These agreements were hammered out in meetings between nonconforming dealers and officials of General Motors' Chevrolet Division, and in telephone conversations with other dealers. It was acknowledged from the beginning that substantial unanimity would be essential if the agreements were to be forthcoming. And once the agreements were secured, General Motors both solicited and employed the assistance of its alleged co-conspirators in helping to police them. What resulted was a fabric interwoven by many strands of joint action to eliminate the discounters from participation in the market, to inhibit the free choice of franchised dealers to select their own methods of trade and to provide multilateral surveillance and enforcement. This process for achieving and enforcing the desired objective [*145] can by no stretch of the imagination be described as "unilateral" or merely "parallel." See Parke Davis, supra, at 46; Federal Trade Comm'n v. Beech-Nut Packing Co., 257 U.S. 441, 453; [*32] United States v. Bausch & Lomb Optical Co., 321 U.S. 707, 722-723; Interstate Circuit, Inc. v. United States, 306 U.S. 208, 226; United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U.S. 265, 275; Turner, The Definition of Agreement Under the Sherman Act: Conscious Parallelism and Refusals to Deal, 75 Harv. L. Rev. 655 (1962). [20]

---

[17] The December letters to all dealers said only that "in effect, in some instances" the arrangements in question might violate the unauthorized location clause of the Dealer Selling Agreement. No dealer was told, either by letter or in person, that its conduct violated the franchise agreement, and no dealer was warned that continuance of discount house or referral sales would result in termination of its franchise. Zone manager O'Connor did not regard his instructions from Detroit as authorizing him to go that far, and he was of the view that "the general letter [to all dealers] didn't suggest any such thing."

[18] We refer to this without considering whether General Motors could lawfully have taken such action.

[19] James Roche testified, "It is not [General Motors'] practice to threaten dealers with termination of their franchise." Good dealers and dealer locations, he said, are hard to come by. In many dealerships, General Motors itself has invested substantial funds. Therefore, said Roche, "we would not want our people to go in and wave the franchise agreement, selling agreement, and threaten the dealer with termination in the event he didn't agree, after following -- after reading a letter he was violating our agreement and should change his practice. Instead we expected that this would be handled on a sound, calm, sensible business-like approach."

HN3[] There are also statutory inhibitions on the right of an automobile manufacturer to terminate dealer franchises. See Act of Aug. 8, 1956, c. 1038, § 2, 70 Stat. 1125, 15 U. S. C. § 1222 (1964 ed.); Kessler & Stern, Competition, Contract, and Vertical Integration, 69 Yale L. J. 1, 103-114 (1959).

[20] Compare Klein v. American Luggage Works, Inc., 323 F.2d 787 (C. A. 3d Cir. 1963), and Graham v. Triangle Publications, Inc., 233 F.Supp. 825 (D. C. E. D. Pa. 1964), aff'd per curiam, 344 F.2d 775 (C. A. 3d Cir. 1965), discussed in Fulda, Individual Refusals to Deal: When Does Single-Firm Conduct Become Vertical Restraint? 30 Law & Contemp. Prob. 590, 592-597 (1965).

LEdHN[6][] [6]HN4[] There [*33] can be no doubt that the effect of the combination or conspiracy here was to restrain trade and commerce within the meaning of the Sherman Act. Elimination, by joint collaborative action, of discounters from access to the market is a per se violation of the Act.

LEdHN[7][] [7]In Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207, the Court was confronted with the question whether "a group of powerful businessmen may act in concert to deprive a single merchant, like Klor, of the goods he needs to compete effectively." 359 U.S., at 210.The allegation was that manufacturers and distributors of electrical appliances had conspired among themselves and with a major retailer, Broadway-Hale, "either not to sell to Klor's [Broadway-Hale's next-door neighbor and competitor] or to sell to it only at discriminatory prices [1331] and highly unfavorable terms." 359 U.S., at 209. The Court concluded that the alleged group boycott of even a single trader violated the statute [21] without regard to the [*146] reasonableness [427] of the conduct in the circumstances. [*34] Group boycotts of a trader, said the Court, are among those "classes of restraints which from their 'nature or character' were unduly restrictive . . . ." 359 U.S., at 211. This was not new doctrine, for it had long been recognized that "there are certain agreements or practices which because of their pernicious effect on competition and lack of any redeeming virtue are conclusively presumed to be unreasonable and therefore illegal without elaborate inquiry as to the precise harm they have caused or the business excuse for their use," and that group boycotts are of this character. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5. See also Fashion Originators' Guild of America, Inc. v. Federal Trade Comm'n, 312 U.S. 457, and Eastern States Retail Lumber Dealers' Assn. v. United States, 234 U.S. 600, 613-614, neither of which involved price-fixing.

[35] LEdHN[8][] [8]LEdHN[9][] [9]The principle of these cases is that HN5[] where businessmen concert their actions in order to deprive others of access to merchandise which the latter wish to sell to the public, we need not inquire into the economic motivation underlying their conduct. See Barber, Refusals To Deal Under the Federal Antitrust Laws, 103 U. Pa. L. Rev. 847, 872-885 (1955). Exclusion of traders from the market by means of combination or conspiracy is so inconsistent with the free-market principles embodied in the Sherman Act that it is not to be saved by reference to the need for preserving the collaborators' profit margins or their system for distributing automobiles, any more than by reference to the allegedly tortious conduct against which a combination or conspiracy may be directed -- as [*147] in Fashion Originators' Guild of America, Inc. v. Federal Trade Comm'n, supra, at 468.

LEdHN[10][] [10] [*36] We note, moreover, that inherent in the success of the combination in this case was a substantial restraint upon price competition -- a goal unlawful per se when sought to be effected by combination or conspiracy. E. g., United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., 362 U.S. 29, 47; United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 223. And the per se rule applies even when the effect upon prices is indirect. Simpson v. Union Oil Co., 377 U.S. 13, 16-22; Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., supra.

There is in the record ample evidence that one of the purposes behind the concerted effort to eliminate sales of new Chevrolet cars by discounters was to protect franchised dealers from real or apparent price competition. The discounters advertised price savings. See n. 7, supra. Some purchasers found and others believed that discount prices were lower than those available through the franchised dealers. Ibid. Certainly, complaints about price competition were prominent in the letters and telegrams with which the individual dealers and salesmen bombarded General Motors in [1332] November 1960. [22] [*37] (Finding 38.) And although the District Court found to the [21] The complaint in Klor's charged a violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act, as well as of § 1. In the present case, the Government did not charge the appellees under § 2, which provides that "Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor . . . ." 15 U. S. C. § 2 (1964 ed.).

[22] Evidence on this subject was admitted solely for the purpose of showing the dealers' state of mind, rather than to prove the existence of actual price-cutting by the discounters. But the collaborators' state of mind is of significance here.

contrary, there is evidence in the record that General Motors itself was not unconcerned about the effect [428] of discount sales upon general price levels. [23]

[38]

[*148] LEdHN[11][] [11] LEdHN[12][] [12]The protection of price competition from conspiratorial restraint is an object of special solicitude under the antitrust laws. We cannot rspect that solicitude by closing our eyes to the effect upon price competition of the removal from the market, by combination or conspiracy, of a class of traders. Nor do we propose to construe the Sherman Act to prohibit conspiracies to fix prices at which competitors may sell, but to allow conspiracies or combinations to put competitors out of business entirely.

Accordingly, we reverse and remand to the United States District Court for the Southern District of California in order that it may fashion appropriate equitable relief. See United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., supra, at 47-48.

It is so ordered.

Concur by: HARLAN

Concur

MR. JUSTICE HARLAN, concurring in the result.

Although I consider that United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., 362 U.S. 29, decided in 1960, represents basically unsound antitrust doctrine, see my dissenting [*39] opinion, 362 U.S., at 49, I see no escape from the conclusion that it controls this case. Parke Davis held that a manufacturer cannot maintain resale prices by refusing to sell to those who do not follow his suggested prices if the refusal is attended by concerted action with his customers, even though he may unilaterally so conduct himself. See United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U.S. 300. Although Parke Davis related to alleged price-fixing, I have been unable to discern any tenable reason for differentiating it from a case involving, as here, alleged boycotting. [*149] The conclusion that Parke Davis governs the present case is therefore unavoidable, given the undisputed evidence that General Motors acted in concert with its dealers in enforcing the location clause. In my opinion, however, General Motors is not precluded from enforcing the location clause by unilateral action, and I find nothing in the Court's opinion to the contrary.

On this basis I concur in the judgment of the Court.

References

Annotation References:

Extent of trader's [*40] right to exercise his own discretion as to persons with whom he will or will not deal. 68 L ed 448.

End of Document

[23] In an inter-office memorandum, circulated among General Motors officials immediately prior to formulation of corporate policy vis-a-vis the discounters, it was stated that "It would appear that one of the real hazards of condoning this type of operation is that discounted prices are freely quoted to a large portion of the public." Moreover, we note that some discounters advertised that they would finance new-car purchases at an interest rate of 5 1/2%, a rate substantially lower than that available at franchised Chevrolet dealers through G. M. A. C., a subsidiary of General Motors Corporation. See n. 7, supra. Finally, it is conceded that General Motors is intensely concerned that each of its dealers has an adequate "profit opportunity" (see Finding 17), a concern which necessarily involves consideration of the price realized by dealers.

American Infra-Red Radiant Co. v. Lambert Indus.

United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit

May 20, 1966,

Nos. 18054, 18055

Reporter

360 F.2d 977 *; 1966 U.S. App. LEXIS 6080 ; 149 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) 722 ; 1966 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,777

AMERICAN INFRA-RED RADIANT CO., Inc., a Delaware Corporation, and Hupp Corporation, a Virginia Corporation, Appellants, v. LAMBERT INDUSTRIES, INC., a Minnesota Corporation, Industrial Ceramics, Inc., a Minnesota Corporation, and Agard L. Lambert, Appellees. LAMBERT INDUSTRIES, INC., a Minnesota Corporation, Industrial Ceramics, Inc., a Minnesota Corporation, and Agard L. Lambert, Appellants, v. AMERICAN INFRA-RED RADIANT CO., Inc., a Delaware Corporation, and Hupp Corporation, a Virginia Corporation, Appellees Disposition: [1] Affirmed in part. Reversed in part.

Core Terms

patent, burner, invention, plate, infringement, anti-trust, plaintiffs', teaching, prior art, perforations, block, mixing, trial court, ceramic, surface, ratio, invalid, novelty, patent office, heat, tile, Infra-Red, air, specifications, variables, inventor, counterclaim, damages, figures, anticipated

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Patent Law > Nonobviousness > Elements & Tests > General Overview

Patent Law > Anticipation & Novelty > General Overview

Patent Law > Utility Requirement > Proof of Utility

HN1[] Nonobviousness, Elements & Tests

For a patent to be valid it must demonstrate three separate and distinct elements: "novelty," "utility," and "invention."

Patent Law > Anticipation & Novelty > Description in Prior Patents

Patent Law > Anticipation & Novelty > General Overview

Patent Law > Anticipation & Novelty > Description in Publications

Patent Law > Statutory Bars > General Overview

HN2[] Anticipation & Novelty, Description in Prior Patents

Under patent law, the requirement of "novelty" means the patent must be new. As required by the statute, to be patentable the device must not have been known or used by others in this country, or patented or described in a printed publication in this or a foreign country. 35 U.S.C.S. § 102(a).

Patent Law > Nonobviousness > Elements & Tests > Claimed Invention as a Whole

Patent Law > ... > Specifications > Enablement Requirement > General Overview

Patent Law > Nonobviousness > General Overview

Patent Law > Nonobviousness > Elements & Tests > General Overview

Patent Law > Nonobviousness > Elements & Tests > Ordinary Skill Standard

Patent Law > Nonobviousness > Elements & Tests > Prior Art

HN3[] Elements & Tests, Claimed Invention as a Whole

Under 35 U.S.C.S. § 103, the third statutory requirement of patentability is called invention, or non-obviousness. The statute states in effect that a patent is not valid if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. In interpreting this statute, the United States Supreme Court refers to this requirement as the "test of obviousness."

Patent Law > Anticipation & Novelty > General Overview

Patent Law > ... > Specifications > Description Requirement > General Overview

Patent Law > Nonobviousness > Elements & Tests > Prior Art

HN4[] Patent Law, Anticipation & Novelty

To determine if a patent was anticipated because of its obviousness or lack of novelty, it is necessary to compare the various claims of the patent with the teachings of the prior art.

Patent Law > Anticipation & Novelty > General Overview

HN5[] Patent Law, Anticipation & Novelty

A patent cannot be properly granted for the discovery of a result that would flow naturally from the teaching of the prior art.

Patent Law > Nonobviousness > Elements & Tests > Ordinary Skill Standard

Patent Law > Nonobviousness > Elements & Tests > General Overview

HN6[] Elements & Tests, Ordinary Skill Standard

"Invention" or "nonobviousness" of a patent will not be decided on the narrow issue of degree, and the mere changing of form, proportions, or size will not alone constitute "invention" or "nonobviousness." This is true even though the change brings about better results.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Clearly Erroneous Review

Patent Law > Nonobviousness > Elements & Tests > General Overview

Patent Law > Jurisdiction & Review > Standards of Review > General Overview

HN7[] Standards of Review, Clearly Erroneous Review

Under patent law, the issue of whether an improvement constitutes mere mechanical skill or involves the exercise of invention is a question of fact which is conclusive unless clearly erroneous.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions > Preservation for Review

Governments > Courts > Authority to Adjudicate

HN8[] Reviewability of Lower Court Decisions, Preservation for Review

An appellate court has the prerogative to interpret exhibits for itself.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Clearly Erroneous Review

Patent Law > ... > Claims > Claim Language > Duplication & Multiplicity

Patent Law > Jurisdiction & Review > Standards of Review > General Overview

HN9[] Standards of Review, Clearly Erroneous Review

Application of erroneous standards of invention, or nonobviousness, or misconceptions as to applicable patent law, in themselves make factual conclusions of patentability clearly erroneous.

Patent Law > Jurisdiction & Review > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Patent Invalidity > Presumption of Validity

HN10[] Jurisdiction & Review, Subject Matter Jurisdiction

Although a patent is presumably valid, the ultimate question of patentability is for the courts. However, the court is not obliged to yield its judgment to a presumption that merely arises from the patent itself.

Patent Law > Jurisdiction & Review > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Appeals

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Patent Invalidity > Presumption of Validity

Patent Law > Nonobviousness > Elements & Tests > General Overview

Patent Law > US Patent & Trademark Office Proceedings > General Overview

HN11[] Subject Matter Jurisdiction, Appeals

The United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit holds that, when what is considered the most relevant of all prior art in a patent is not considered by the United States Patent and Trademark Office when examining the patent's application, the subsequent presumption of the patent's validity may be greatly weakened, if not destroyed.

Patent Law > Anticipation & Novelty > Elements

Patent Law > Nonobviousness > Elements & Tests > General Overview

Patent Law > ... > Elements & Tests > Graham Test > Secondary Considerations

HN12[] Anticipation & Novelty, Elements

While a court may consider commercial success in determining whether a patent is void for obviousness, it certainly is not a prime consideration. Commercial success without invention, also known as nonobviousness, undoubtedly cannot support a patent. While commercial success may help in close questions, commercial success is certainly not decisive within itself. The relevancy of "commercial success" is based upon the assumption that public acceptance of a device is indicative of that device's novelty and invention over prior art in the field. Therefore, when explanations other than invention are brought forth to indicate reasons for the commercial success, the evidentiary weight of this factor is all but destroyed.

Patent Law > Nonobviousness > Elements & Tests > General Overview

Patent Law > Anticipation & Novelty > General Overview

HN13[] Nonobviousness, Elements & Tests

Under patent law, even an unsuccessful effort to embody a concept will suffice as invention so long as this effort discloses that the inventive idea was complete. Anticipation is not avoided by showing of lack of prior success if all that remains to be done to make the device successful are changes involving the application of mere mechanical skill.

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Patent Invalidity > Fact & Law Issues

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Patent Invalidity > General Overview

HN14[] Patent Invalidity, Fact & Law Issues

There can be no infringement upon an invalid patent.

Patent Law > Statutory Bars > Prior Patents & Publications > Foreign Patenting

HN15[] Prior Patents & Publications, Foreign Patenting

See 35 U.S.C.S. § 102(d).

Patent Law > ... > Utility Patents > Product Patents > Compositions of Matter

Patent Law > Statutory Bars > Prior Patents & Publications > Foreign Patenting

HN16[] Product Patents, Compositions of Matter

Germany has two distinct classes of invention protection. The Gebrauchsmuster gives a measure of, though limited, protection to useful or petty models which do not possess a sufficiently high standard of invention to meet the requirements of the regular German patent laws.

Patent Law > US Patent & Trademark Office Proceedings > Filing Requirements > Drawings

Patent Law > Statutory Bars > Prior Patents & Publications > Foreign Patenting

HN17[] Filing Requirements, Drawings

The German Gebrauchsmuster possesses the elements of the more conventional form of patent. The rights granted an inventor under the Gebrauchsmuster law gives a monopoly for a term of three years, renewable for an equivalent period, thus giving a total of six years of protection. The Gebrauchsmuster gives the inventor the exclusive right of use of the article and to recover damages for infringement, with the claims made and accepted measuring the scope of the protection afforded. There is also a limited publication of the Gebrauchsmuster. If the application is granted, the title, inventor, date, and file number are published in the official Patentblatt. Though specifications and drawings are not disclosed in any official publication, the application, which contains the specifications, drawings, and claims, is registered and the entire file is open to public examination in the patent office.

Patent Law > Statutory Bars > Prior Patents & Publications > Foreign Patenting

HN18[] Prior Patents & Publications, Foreign Patenting

Courts treat a German Gerbrauchsmuster as a foreign patent.

Patent Law > Invention Date & Priority > Activities Abroad

Patent Law > Statutory Bars > Prior Patents & Publications > Foreign Patenting

Patent Law > US Patent & Trademark Office Proceedings > General Overview

HN19[] Invention Date & Priority, Activities Abroad

The United States Patent and Trademark Office considers an application for a German Gebrauchsmuster to be an application for a patent in a foreign country, and consequently the right of priority of 35 U.S.C.S. § 119 can be based upon such an application. Additionally, patent examiners may use the Gebrauchsmuster as a prior patent effective as of the date of registration, in the same manner as they would use the patents of countries which do issue specifications in printed form.

Patent Law > Statutory Bars > Prior Patents & Publications > Foreign Patenting

HN20[] Prior Patents & Publications, Foreign Patenting

See 35 U.S.C.S. § 119.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Assignments

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

Patent Law > Jurisdiction & Review > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Appeals

Patent Law > Ownership > General Overview

Patent Law > Ownership > Patents as Property

Patent Law > Statutory Bars > Prior Patents & Publications > Foreign Patenting

HN21[] Ownership & Transfer of Rights, Assignments

The United States Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals holds that the general definition of the term "patent" includes a document granting the monopoly right to produce, use, sell, or get profit from an invention, process, etc. for a certain number of years, or a grant of some privilege, property, or authority, made by the government or sovereign of a country to one or more individuals. The United States Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals holds the German Gebrauchsmuster falls within this definition of a patent.

Patent Law > Statutory Bars > Prior Patents & Publications > Foreign Patenting

Patent Law > ... > Specifications > Enablement Requirement > General Overview

HN22[] Prior Patents & Publications, Foreign Patenting

Congress makes no differentiation in the type of foreign patent that is affected by the statutes.

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Copyright & Patent Clause

HN23[] Congressional Duties & Powers, Copyright & Patent Clause

In allowing for the issuance of patents, the United States Constitution commands no precise length of time for the possession of a patent, only "limited times."

Patent Law > Jurisdiction & Review > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Appeals

Patent Law > Statutory Bars > General Overview

Patent Law > Statutory Bars > Prior Patents & Publications > Foreign Patenting

HN24[] Subject Matter Jurisdiction, Appeals

The United States Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals holds that a German Gebrauchsmuster is a foreign patent within the purposes of 35 U.S.C.S. §§ 102(d), 119.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Lease Agreements > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Royalties > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Clayton Act

HN25[] Remedies, Damages

Exclusive dealing contracts, especially when tied to another product's lease or sale, while not illegal per se, are carefully scrutinized by courts. When the effect of such arrangements may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly, they are made unlawful by § 3 of the Clayton Act. However, proof of an isolated violation of substantive law will not entitle a defendant to recovery. Before a party recovers treble damages he must be able to plead and prove actual monetary injury to his business or property resulting from the illegal act. 15 U.S.C.S. § 15. Damages that are purely speculative, remote, or based upon conjecture cannot serve as a base for anti-trust recovery. Although the mere difficulty of exact proof will not deprive a party of relief, damages to be awarded must be susceptible of expression in figures founded upon some reasonable basis of computation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Prioritizing Resources & Organization for Intellectual Property Act

HN26[] Clayton Act, Claims

Section 3 of the Clayton Act, which affords the private cause of action, clearly requires a causal connection between the injury in business or property and the anti-trust violation in order to recover damages. 15 U.S.C.S. § 15.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Counterclaims > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Defenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Patent Law > ... > Damages > Collateral Assessments > Attorney Fees

Patent Law > ... > Damages > Collateral Assessments > Costs

HN27[] Remedies, Damages

Patent litigation expense may only be considered in anti-trust counterclaims, where an infringement suit is brought as part of and in furtherance of a combination and conspiracy. Therefore, whenever the patent litigation is initiated pursuant to a lawful purpose and there is no causal connection between the bringing of the action and the illegal conduct, the cost of the defense of the suit cannot become an element of damage which is tripled under the Clayton Act.

Judges: Vogel, Chief Judge, and Blackmun and Gibson, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: GIBSON

Opinion

[*724] [*981] GIBSON, Circuit Judge.

This appeal and cross-appeal from the United States District Court, District of Minnesota, concerns a patent infringement case filed pursuant to Title 35, U.S.C., § 271 in which also is injected the issue of patent misuse and anti-trust. Jurisdiction is established by Title 28, U.S.C., § 1338. At issue is the validity of two patents, the alleged infringement thereof, the alleged patent misuse, and the alleged anti-trust violation.

The District Court [1] (the Honorable Dennis Donovan) held the patents valid but not infringed, and found no patent misuse or anti-trust violation.

The patents in question were issued to plaintiff American Infra-Red Radiant Co., Inc., as assignor of the inventor, Gunther Schwank, with [2] plaintiff Hupp Corporation serving as a nonexclusive licensee of American Infra-Red, with right to sue for patent infringement. Defendants are engaged in making and marketing devices similar to those covered in the patents and are charged by plaintiffs with infringement of both patents.

The subject matter of this litigation is an infra-red gas burner. U.S. Patent No. 2,775,294 ('294) is for the burner tile or plate, and U.S. Patent No. 2,870,830 ('830) is for the burner housing, exclusive of the burner plate. The two units when placed together constitute the operational infra-red gas burner device. Difficult as it is, we will attempt to be accurate, brief and intelligible in our description of the device.

The burner utilizes a dish-shaped housing assembly which contains at one end a venturi or mixing tube which is in open communication with a gas nozzle and an air intake space. The gas and air are partially mixed in this mixing tube and then [*982] discharged on to a deflecting and guiding surface at the opposite side of the unit. This surface reverses the flow of the gaseous mixture and guides it into a separate mixing chamber and in so doing effects a thorough [3] and uniform distribution of the gas-air mixture within the chamber (Patent '830). This dish-shaped housing unit has a flat planer open top on which are mounted the perforated ceramic plates of the '294 patent. The plates are mounted individually or in multiples of two, four, six, etc., but will be hereafter referred to as the plate or ceramic plate. The plate covers the entire opening, thus making a confined chamber except for the mixing tube, which is in open communication with the air and gas inlets. The pressure in the mixing tube caused by the incoming gas and air is somewhat greater than the pressure in the mixing chamber immediately beneath the perforated ceramic plate which causes all of the combustible mixture to be expelled under low pressure through the apertures in the plate. This ceramic plate resembles a perforated disc that contains many small holes allowing the gas to pass to the outer side thereof, at which point combustion takes place. The burning of this gas-air mixture at the surface of the ceramic tile is almost flameless and it heats the surface of the tile to a reddish incandescent glow, which in turn radiates infra-red heat waves. These rays travel through [4] the surrounding air without heating it. Upon striking an opaque object these infrared rays are then converted into heat.

[1] The trial court's decision is reported in 238 F. Supp. 176 (1965).

In order for the burner to successfully operate, it is necessary that the gaseous mixture be ignited only on the surface of the ceramic plate and not in the mixing chamber behind the plate. When this premature ignition occurs in the mixing chamber it is known as "backfiring." To prevent this "backfiring" the ceramic burner plate must be of sufficiently low thermal conductivity to insulate the red hot outer surface (1500 to 1700 degrees Fahrenheit) from the necessarily cool interior. Furthermore, the perforations in the tile must be small enough to prevent heat from the burning gas to travel back into the mixing chamber, yet large enough to eliminate too much pressure from building up in the mixing chamber.

Another characteristic of this type of infra-red burner is that it is intended to operate at the relatively low "ordinary town gas pressures", with all of the air required for combustion being inspired into the mixing tube without the use of a compressor. If the perforations in the ceramic plate are too small in relation to the pressure of the incoming gas, [5] the continuous and even flow of the gas and air through the perforations in the burner plate is restricted, thus causing a "back pressure." This "back pressure" results in insufficient inspiration of air into the mixing tube. So, the diameter and number of perforations in the burner plate are important in two respects: One, they must [725] be small enough in size to prevent "backfire" from the hot surface of the plate, and two, they must be large enough in size and sufficient in number to keep "back pressure" from preventing inspiration of sufficient air into the mixing tube.

In addition to the above factors, due to the complex nature of gas flow, the thickness of the burner plate and consequently the length of the perforations through which the gas flows on its way to the burner surface is an important factor in the burner's efficient operation.

Finally, since different gaseous fuels have different ignition temperatures, ignition speeds, and inspirating qualities the type of fuel used is a factor to correlate with the other considerations mentioned. A change in the chemical composition of the gas may require a change or variation in the size and number of the holes in the ceramic tile. [6] Thus the size of the perforations, the number, and the length thereof are of vital importance and must be properly correlated with each other and the other variables mentioned to achieve the desired result.

Patent '294 issued December 25, 1956, covering the ceramic burner plate, requires that the tile have generally parallel passages through which the gaseous mixture [*983] may pass, which passages must be evenly distributed over the area of the tile with the total cross-sectional area of the passages being not less than "about 20 per cent" of the total radiation area of the surface of the burner plate. The individual passages are to be not less than 5 millimeters (about 6/32 of an inch) in length and a cross-sectional area of not more than 4 square millimeters (about 6/1000 of an inch) each. A heat retarding medium of substantially lower thermal conductivity than the clay or refractory material of the plate is to be distributed throughout the plate with the thermal conductivity not exceeding "0.5 kc/hr. m. degree c." (.5 kilocalories per hour, per meter, per degree, centigrade). The heat retarding medium is composed of pockets of air or voids within the ceramic itself. The [7] pockets are produced by sintering the clay or other material used to form the tile block; that is, by incomplete firing of the clay ceramic during its construction. The impurities in the clay are burned out without fusing the remaining material together in a solid mass. The result is small pockets or voids containing air which has 10 to 100 times less thermal conductivity than the surrounding solid ceramic.

Patent No. '830 issued January 27, 1959 is concerned with the general housing of the burner plate, including the positioning of the component parts and structural arrangement of the burner. The aim of the patent is to provide a maximum burning surface while having minimum overall dimensions, particularly depth, thus providing maximum heat while taking up a minimum of space.

Defendants manufacture and sell three types of ceramic burner plates, two with cylindrical passages and one with slotted passages; all of which allegedly infringe upon plaintiffs' '294 patent. The housing unit for the burner plate manufactured and sold by defendants is somewhat similar in design to the specifications in plaintiffs' patent, but there is some variation in the overall dimension.

In defending [8] this infringement case, defendants have alleged that both of plaintiffs' patents are invalid and even if valid there was no infringement. In addition, they have asserted the affirmative defense of patent misuse and have counterclaimed for damages, alleging that the patent misuse was a violation of the antitrust laws entitling recovery of treble damages. The basis of the closely related patent misuse defense and the antitrust counterclaim is the license and sales agreement between American Infra-Red and Hupp Corporation. Defendant contends that the agreements constitute illegal exclusive dealing contracts and tie-in agreements.

The trial court held the patents valid on the ground that the "very heavy burden" [2] imposed on defendants to overcome the statutory presumption of validity was not met by defendants and on the basis of the admitted commercial success of the plaintiffs' commercial burner. The trial court went on to declare that neither patent had been infringed upon and that plaintiffs had not violated the anti-trust laws with their licensing and sales agreement.

[9] Plaintiffs applaud that portion of the trial court's decision holding their patents are valid and that there has been no patent misuse or anti-trust violation, but assert that the holding of non-infringement is clearly erroneous. Defendants in turn applaud the court's decision of no infringement, but contend that the decision holding the patents [726] valid and the holding of no anti-trust violation is clearly erroneous.

There being dual issues of validity and infringement, the proper procedure demands that we first determine the validity of the patents in question before [*984] we can approach the issue of infringement. We will first consider the validity of Schwank patent '294 (ceramic burner plate), after which we will discuss Schwank patent '830 (housing unit).

Validity of '294

It is fundamental that HN1[] for a patent to be valid it must demonstrate three separate and distinct elements: "novelty," "utility" and "invention." We are concerned herein only with the elements of "novelty" and "invention" as "utility" is admitted or evident. [10] When we say that a patent must possess HN2[] "novelty" we mean that it must be new. As required by the statute, to be patentable the device must not have been "known or used by others in this country, or patented or described in a printed publication in this or a foreign country * * *." 35 U.S.C. § 102(a). In addition to "utility" the statutes have always demanded that a patent be novel. However, in addition to these two statutory elements of patent-ability the courts for over a hundred years have demanded of all patents an additional requirement of "invention." The exact definition of "invention" has varied from time to time and from court to court. However, it was generally agreed that a mere improvement over prior art which involved nothing more than what would have been obvious to a person skilled in the art and requiring nothing more than the application of mechanical skill could not be considered as "invention." See 2 Deller's Walker on Patents, § 104-106 (2nd Ed. 1964). The Patent Act of 1952 (35 U.S.C. § 103) codified this general judicial [11] requirement as HN3[] the third statutory requirement of patentability. The statute states in effect that a patent is not valid "if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains." In interpreting this statute the Supreme Court in the recent case of Graham v. John Deere Company of Kansas City, 383 U.S. 1, 86 S. Ct. 684, 15 L. Ed. 2d 545 (February 21, 1966) (cert. from 8 Cir., 333 F.2d 529) prefers to call this time honored, now codified, judicial requirement, heretofore known as "invention," the "test of obviousness." The Court made it clear that the statute merely codified the decisional law and the necessary level of innovation previously demanded by the courts had not been changed by the statute. However, the Court felt that "obviousness" should be emphasized rather than "invention" and that the "test of obviousness" as set out in the statute be applied as the sole test for the third element of patentability. Therefore, in addition to "utility" [12] and "novelty" patents must contain "non-obviousness."

[2] In Mumm v. Jacob E. Decker & Sons, 301 U.S. 168, 171, 57 S. Ct. 675, 81 L. Ed. 983 Chief Justice Hughes said: "* * * The burden of proving want of novelty is upon him who avers it * * * [and] his burden is a heavy one, as it has been held that 'every reasonable doubt should be resolved against him.'"

The thrust of defendants' attack on the validity of patent '294 is concentrated on a demonstration of prior art not considered by the patent examiner. Defendants contend that this prior art conclusively demonstrates a lack of novelty and inventiveness in the Schwank patent. As prior art defendants rely primarily upon a 1915 British Patent Number 6312 by McCourt. This patent is admittedly very similar to the Schwank patent, a similarity that will soon be demonstrated in full. In addition to this McCourt patent, defendants cite two articles, one by Keller in 1949 and one by Trinks in 1942. Neither the McCourt patent or the prior art publications by Keller and Trinks were cited nor considered by the patent examiner.

HN4[] To determine if the Schwank patent has been anticipated because of its obviousness or lack of novelty, it is necessary to compare the various claims of the patent with the teachings of the prior art. Our attention is first directed to the general or broad characteristics of this patent as compared with the prior art in [13] the field. In making such a comparison it clearly appears to us that the Schwank patent has all of the broad characteristics found in the prior McCourt patent, many of which also appear in the Keller and Trinks publications.

[*985] 1. Both patents deal with gas burners which produce infra-red heat rays using the same principles of physics.

2. As a heating unit both employ a block of refractory ceramic material.

3. Both construct their heating blocks with cavities or voids filled with air which serve as a heat retarding medium to lower the block's thermal conductivity.

4. Each perforates his block with uniformly distributed passages through which the fuel mixture flows to the surface of the block.

5. At the surface of the block the fuel mixture is ignited, causing the face of each of the blocks to become heated to incandescence.

6. Both mount this heating unit at the top of a chamber, in which air and [727] gas are mixed before reaching the surface of the unit.

Not only are all of these general characteristics of Schwank anticipated by the McCourt patent, but all of the major problems and objectives of the burner were foreseen not only by McCourt but also by the [14] Trinks and Keller publications.

1. The burners are designed to operate at normal "town" gas pressure.

2. The burners are designed to inspirate all of the air necessary for successful combustion without the need of a blower or compressor.

3. The burners are designed to prevent "backfiring."

In order to attain these three goals and to construct a successful radiant burner, Schwank set forth in his patent four specifications for his burner plate. 1) The cross-sectional area of each perforation in the block should be below a 4 sq. mm. maximum. 2) The thermal conductivity of the block should be less than.5 kilocalories per hour per meter per degree centigrade. 3) The thickness of the plate should be at least 5 mm. (6/32 of an inch). 4) The ratio of the perforation area to the surface area should be not less than "about 20%."

In comparing each of these four specifications for a successful burner set out by Schwank with the teachings of McCourt, the similarity between the patents is evident.

1. Cross-Sectional Area of the Individual Perforations. McCourt taught a measurement of 1.17 sq. mm. which clearly anticipated the 4 sq. mm. maximum set out by Schwank. (Plaintiffs' commercial [15] block is very near the McCourt teaching with measurements of.8 sq. mm. and 1.3 sq. mm.).

2. Thermal Conductivity. A block constructed in accordance with the specifications of McCourt had a thermal conductivity of.181. Schwank taught a.5 maximum and was thus anticipated by the McCourt disclosure. (Duplicating almost exactly the McCourt figure, plaintiffs' commercial tile has a conductivity of.180).

3. Thickness of the Burner Plate. McCourt's block measured 12/32 of an inch, again anticipating the Schwank disclosure calling for an excess of 6/32 of an inch. (The thickness of the McCourt block is almost duplicated by plaintiffs' present block which measured 15/32 of an inch).

4. Ratio of Perforation Area to Surface Area. While Schwank calls for a ratio of not less than "about 20%", McCourt in his specific examples only had ratios of 14.3% and 16.2%. (Commercial blocks are manufactured by plaintiffs with various different ratios, such as 25%, 35% and 40%).

It is clear from the above comparison, from the statements of plaintiffs' own expert witnesses, and from the admission found in plaintiffs' supplemental brief, [3] that the Schwank patent has been anticipated in all [16] ways save the possibility of one; this one being Schwank's teaching of a ratio of not less than "about 20%" while McCourt's patent [*986] lists ratios of only 14.3% and 16.2%. Our task then is to determine if this single difference found in the stated ratios as they appear on the face of the patents entitles Schwank to a patent monopoly on his burner plate. We do not believe that it does. We have two basic reasons for this conclusion. One, given a proper interpretation of the entire teachings of McCourt the conclusion is inescapable that the Schwank patent was invalid for want of novelty. Two, even if we were to rule that the apparent difference is novel, we believe that the advance would have been obvious to one skilled in the art. Therefore, this obvious step cannot constitute "invention" necessary to allow a patent monopoly.

Considering first "novelty", if all of the claims of the Schwank patent were first taught by McCourt, the law demands that the Schwank be held invalid. It is admitted that all but one of the Schwank claims have in fact been anticipated by the McCourt teaching. [17] Further, upon close analysis of the sole alleged differences in the patents it is equally clear that no true difference actually exists. What appears at first glance to be a difference is illusionary. In all respects, therefore, McCourt anticipates the teaching of Schwank.

To illustrate, we believe it would be a mistake to interpret McCourt, as have the plaintiffs, as teaching nothing more in the area of ratios than the bare figures of 14.3% and 16.2%. On the contrary, McCourt gave complete general teachings in the area of radiant burners. The detail explanation of the experimentation process which McCourt sets out is as much a part of the existing art as the figures he gives. In this case the process is far more important than the figures.

In his patent McCourt taught that to construct a successful burner one had to account for a number of variables, such as the chemical composition of the gas, [728] the pressure of the gas, the desired surface temperature, and the thickness of the block. To compensate for these variables he taught that it would be necessary to either change the number or the diameter of the perforations, which of course consequently alters the perforation to surface [18] ratio. He specifically illustrated his discovery by teaching that if you changed the composition of the gas you would need to change the diameter of the perforations, but if you used a thicker block you had to increase the number of perforations. In order to determine the correct diameter and number of perforations under a given set of these variables McCourt taught that one had to construct a number of test burner plates and empirically experiment with each plate under each set of circumstances. The figures of 14.3% and 16.2% represent the results of two of these experiments. In themselves they were not considered to be teachings or rigid specifications. They were only the results of experiments with given variables and with variation in the variables the ratio figures would necessarily change. The importance of McCourt's teaching is found not in the illustrative figures, but in the discovery of the various factors that influence the operation of radiant gas burners and the teaching of empirical experimentation to obtain a workable burner plate when these factors are varied.

---

[3] Plaintiffs-Appellees' brief, p. 10: "Since the greater than 20 per cent passage area to tile surface area ratio is the sole and outstanding structural difference over McCourt * * *"

Having concluded that the difference in the ratio figures does not of itself indicate that the Schwank [19] patent was novel, and that the ratio figures set out by McCourt were not a definitive part of his teachings, we must now examine the McCourt teachings themselves on the issue of ratio to see if they encompass the later ratio teachings of Schwank. "It is well settled that HN5[] a patent cannot be properly granted for the discovery of a result which would flow naturally from the teaching of the prior art." Application of Libby, 255 F.2d 412, 45 CCPA 944 (1958). As we have seen the McCourt patent pointed out the numerous variables to be considered. It told us how to compensate for these variables by changing either the diameter or the number of holes according to the variable affected. Finally, he taught that to correctly correlate [*987] a number of variables one had to resort to empirical experimentation. Therefore, given correct information on a set of variables and using this teaching, it appears to us that a mechanic could well construct a burner within the "about 20%" minimum ratio set out by Schwank. This opinion is to a large degree confirmed by one of plaintiffs' own [20] expert witnesses and by the record fact that it is the McCourt method of empirical experimentation that is followed by the industry today when confronted with an untested variable. It is our conclusion that since a mechanic would be able to construct a burner following only the teachings of the prior McCourt patent, and the burner so constructed could well fall within all of the specifications and claims of the later Schwank patent, Schwank was not entitled to patent protection. If we were to hold otherwise, McCourt himself would be deprived of the right to exploit his invention in the face of the later Schwank patent. Such is clearly not the law. Therefore, it is our opinion that the burner described in the Schwank patent '294 "would flow naturally from the teaching of the prior art" and as such lacked the necessary "novelty" for patentability under 35 U.S.C. § 102(a).

Even were we to assume arguendo the ratio specified by Schwank as a minimum was not first taught in principle by McCourt, we do not believe that the addition of a few more holes per block or increasing the diameter of the existing holes can be considered "a creation of the inventive faculty" [21] as set out in Aro Equipment Corporation v. Herring-Wissler Co., 84 F.2d 619, 622 (8 Cir. 1936). In fact in applying the test of "obviousness" as promulgated by the Supreme Court in the Graham case, supra, we believe that such an advance, if any, would have been obvious at the time it was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art. The "obviousness" of Schwank's step is further emphasized when viewed in the light of McCourt's patent which clearly taught variation in the number and diameter of the perforations. We have held in the past and we continue to hold that HN6[] "invention will not be decided on the narrow issue of degree", and that the mere changing of form, proportions, or size will not alone constitute "invention." Swenson v. Boos, 156 F.2d 338 (8 Cir. 1946). This is true even though the change brought about better results. Midland Flour Milling Co. v. Bobbitt, 70 F.2d 416 (8 Cir. 1934). Society has an interest to protect in patent litigation and its interests demand that the complete protection afforded by a patent not be allowed for [22] petty, insignificant, and obvious advances. Cuno Engineering Corp. v. Automatic Devices Corp., 314 U.S. 84, 62 S. Ct. 37, 86 L. Ed. 58 (1941); Ditto, Incorporated v. Minnesota Mining & Manufacturing Co., 336 F.2d 67 (8 Cir. 1964). Therefore, we conclude that even if "novel", patent '294 lacked [729] the necessary "invention" or "nonobviousness" required by 35 U.S.C. § 103 and Graham v. John Deere Company of Kansas City, supra.

Though not to be considered as prior art, we could not help but note the decision of the patent offices of the countries of Western Germany and the Netherlands which were in evidence before the trial court. In lucid opinions following adversary type proceedings the patent offices of these two countries denied to Schwank a patent on a burner plate identical to the '294 patent. In March 1955 the German Patent Office denied Schwank a patent primarily on the basis of the McCourt patent. In a September 1959 decision the Netherlands Patent Office concluded "that the burner according to the application was known from Keller's paper." "The application does not * * * contain any other indications than those [23] already given by Keller." These decisions, while certainly not controlling, are evidence on the factual issue of "invention."

In reaching our conclusions herein we have not been unmindful of the rule set out in Rota-Carb Corporation v. Frye Manufacturing Co., 313 F.2d 443 (8 Cir. 1963), that HN7[] the issue of whether an improvement constitutes [*988] mere mechanical skill or involves the exercise of invention is a question of fact which is conclusive unless clearly erroneous. In the first place the validity of the Schwank patent did not revolve solely around the issue of "invention" versus "mechanical skill." Involved first was the question of "novelty" as set out in 35 U.S.C. § 102(a). A determination of this issue involved primarily a comparison of the prior McCourt patent with the later Schwank patent to ascertain if the teachings of the former were repeated in the latter. We concluded after making such a comparison that the Schwank device was in fact fully described in the McCourt patent and thus lacked the necessary "novelty" of patentability. [24] Such a determination was based upon an examination and interpretation of two legal documents to determine if the statutory requirements of patentability had been fulfilled. Inasmuch as these documents are equally available to this Court, we do not believe that the trial court's particular interpretation is a factual conclusion binding under Rule 52(a). HN8[] The appellate court has the prerogative to interpret the exhibits for itself. Nicholson v. Carl W. Mullis Engineering and Mfg. Co., 315 F.2d 532, 536 (4 Cir. 1963); New Wrinkle, Inc. v. John L. Armitage & Co., 277 F.2d 409, 412 (3 Cir. 1960); Kiwi Coders Corporation v. Acro Tool & Die Works, 250 F.2d 562, 568 (7 Cir. 1957).

Secondly, the part of the trial court's decision which found the element of "invention" in the Schwank patent we believe was induced by an erroneous view of the law. Even accepting "invention" as being a question of fact, [4] HN9[] application of erroneous standards of invention or misconceptions [25] as to the applicable law, in themselves make factual conclusions of patentability clearly erroneous. Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Co. v. Supermarket Equipment Corp., 340 U.S. 147, 71 S. Ct. 127, 95 L. Ed. 162 (1950); Selmix Dispensers, Inc. v. Multiplex Faucet Co., Inc., 277 F.2d 884 (8 Cir. 1960).

[26] There can be no doubt that the trial court applied an erroneous standard of invention in determining the validity of the Schwank patent. The trial court stated "A new combination resulting in improved construction which brings forth a new and more efficient result than prior art devices in patentable." The Supreme Court in the Graham case determined on this issue that a somewhat similar standard was incorrect and held that the "test of obviousness" was the only correct test to be applied in determining whether a new combination of known components amounts to "invention." The decision of the trial court clearly indicates that no standard of obviousness was applied.

Furthermore, in reaching its decision the trial court seemed to rely heavily on two conclusions of law. On the basis of 35 U.S.C. § 282 the trial court correctly ruled that the Schwank patent was presumed valid. Defendant, it said must bear a "very heavy burden" in overcoming this presumption of validity. Due to the conflict of expert testimony, the court said, that defendants had failed to shoulder this "very heavy burden." As a second point the trial court placed heavy emphasis on the [730] [27] commercial success of the Schwank commercial burner and on the fact that the McCourt burner did not work properly. Under the unique circumstances of this case we believe that the trial court's heavy reliance on the above law was misplaced.

[*989] HN10[] Although a patent is presumably valid, the ultimate question of patentability is for the courts. Continental Farm Equipment Co., Inc. v. Love Tractor, Inc., 199 F.2d 202 (8 Cir. 1952). This rebuttable presumption cannot be allowed to stand in the face of compelling contrary facts as we have herein. In such a case the court is not obliged to yield its judgment to a presumption which merely arises from the patent itself. Crosley Corporation v. Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co., 152 F.2d 895 (3 Cir. 1945).

---

[4] There is considerable doubt that "invention" should always be treated as a question of fact. See: 2 Deller's Walker on Patents § 105 (2nd Ed. 1964) pg. 67. United States v. Esnault-Pelterie, 303 U.S. 26, 30, 58 S. Ct. 412, 82 L. Ed. 625 (1938); Sbicca-Del Mac. Inc. v. Milius Shoe Co., 145 F.2d 389, 396 (8 Cir. 1944); Rohr Aircraft Corporation v. Rubber Teck, Inc., 266 F.2d 613, 618 (9 Cir. 1959); Hanovia Chemical & Mfg. Co. v. David Buttrick Co., 127 F.2d 888, 890 (1 Cir. 1942); Fritz W. Glitsch & Sons v. Wyatt Metal & Boiler Works, 224 F.2d 331, 335 (5 Cir. 1955); Nickerson v. Bearfoot Sole Company, Inc., 311 F.2d 858, 882 (6 Cir. 1962).

Not only has this presumption of validity been overcome by the great weight of the evidence, but perhaps of prime importance, the presumption itself has been very much weakened, if not completely destroyed, by defendants' proof of pertinent prior non-considered art. We have already seen that the McCourt patent [28] is an extremely relevant prior art reference. Even by plaintiffs' own charts in evidence McCourt is far more relevant than any art cited by the patent examiner. In addition, there were introduced the Keller and Trinks articles which demonstrate general principles later incorporated in the Schwank patent. It is clear that none of this very pertinent art was before the patent examiner when he granted the Schwank patent. Even without the benefit of this very pertinent art the patent office only granted Schwank his patent after considerable debate, hesitation, and discussion. Therefore, we have before us a borderline case in a crowded art, in which three pieces of extremely relevant prior art were not before the patent office. In such a case we believe that there is every possibility that the prior art of McCourt, Keller, and Trinks would have heavily tipped the scales against the granting of the patent had this prior art been known to the patent examiner. HN11[] With a showing that this most relevant of all prior art was not considered by the patent office, we believe the normal presumption of [29] validity was greatly weakened if not completely destroyed. L. S. Donaldson Company v. La Maur, Inc., 299 F.2d 412 (8 Cir. 1962); Heyl & Patterson, Incorporated v. McDowell Company, 317 F.2d 719 (4 Cir. 1963); Cornell v. Adams Engineering Company, 258 F.2d 874 (5 Cir. 1958). In fact it is difficult to imagine how a patent has any presumption of validity over pertinent prior art references when these references were not before the patent examiner. A.R. Inc. v. Electro-Voice Incorporated, 311 F.2d 508 (7 Cir. 1962); Rohr Aircraft Corporation v. Rubber Teck, Inc., 266 F.2d 613 (9 Cir. 1959); Mohasco Industries, Inc. v. E. T. Barwick Mills, Inc., 221 F. Supp. 191 (N.D.Ga.1963) affirmed per curiam 340 F.2d 319 (5 Cir. 1965). Therefore, we are no longer dealing with a strong presumption of validity on the part of the Schwank patent, but with a presumption of validity that was greatly weakened. In such a situation the defendants obviously do not have to bear the heavy burden necessary to overcome a presumption at its full strength.

As a second pillar for its decision the trial court placed [30] great reliance on plaintiffs' commercial success. As applied to the facts of this case, we believe that this reliance, too, was misplaced. HN12[] While we recognize that a court may consider this factor, it certainly is not a prime consideration. Commercial success without invention undoubtedly cannot support a patent. Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Co. v. Supermarket Equipment Corp., supra; Jungersen v. Ostby & Barton Co., 335 U.S. 560, 69 S. Ct. 269, 93 L. Ed. 235 (1949). While commercial success may help in close questions, commercial success is certainly not decisive within itself. L. S. Donaldson Company v. La Maur Inc., 299 F.2d 412 (8 Cir. 1962); Tropic Aire, Inc. v. Sears Roebuck & Co., 44 F.2d 580 (8 Cir. 1930). The relevancy of "commercial success" is based upon the assumption that public acceptance of a device is indicative of that device's novelty and invention over prior art in the field. Therefore, when explanations other than invention are brought forth to indicate reasons for the commercial success, the evidentiary weight [31] of this factor is all [*990] but destroyed. Day-Brite Lighting, Inc. v. Sandee Manufacturing Co., 286 F.2d 596 (7 Cir. 1960); 69 C.J.S. Patents § 70 at pages 323-324. We believe that there are many explanations for plaintiffs' commercial success other than the claimed invention or novelty of this particular patent.

In the first place there are a number of explanations why the McCourt burner never achieved financial success. In 1915 there was difficulty in mass producing on today's scale. The record contains evidence that McCourt's procedure for making these tiles was necessarily crude [731] and time consuming. This, in itself, would make successful marketing unlikely. Secondly, it appears from the record that there was no widespread availability of inexpensive and constant quality gas until relatively recent times, which too would inhibit commercial exploitation of the device. Finally, there is every likelihood that in McCourt's time our society had not developed to the point where there was a substantial demand or market for radiant gas burners.

On the other side of the picture there are even more numerous explanations for the particular commercial success [32] of plaintiffs. Perhaps foremost among these is the fact that the chemical composition and manufacturing process of the ceramic tile is a trade secret of plaintiffs not covered by the patent. In addition plaintiffs have made many modifications in the housing unit that, of course, are not covered by this patent. For instance we find a reduction in the size of the mixing chamber as found in patent '830 and many other non-patented modifications in the internal arrangement of the unit. In addition we see the addition of metal reflectors and protective screen. All of this has contributed to the effective and efficient operation of the burner, yet none are related to the invention of the patent in question. We also note that the burner plate used by plaintiffs vary markedly from the figures set forth in their patent. In addition we see that plaintiffs manufacture various sizes and types of burners thus appealing to a wide market. Some of the burners are very large, designed for use in industrial heating, and using natural gas as a fuel. Others are very small, use bottled gas, and are designed to warm the hands of the outdoor sportsman. In association with this adaptation to various [33] uses, plaintiffs have undertaken an extensive advertising and promotion campaign. They have developed different models of burners for various uses and have extensively advertised and energetically promoted these markets. Last, but not least, plaintiffs have developed an organization for the manufacture and sale of these devices that is international in scope.

There being numerous explanations for the commercial success of plaintiffs' burner, it is difficult to say with any force that this success was due to the invention of the burner plate patent. Under the circumstances, commercial success is not a weighty factor in deciding the issue of patentability.

Finally, the trial court seemed to be strongly influenced by the feeling that the McCourt device did not work. Plaintiffs' evidence of the unworkability of the McCourt burner is far from being conclusive. In his patent, McCourt gave every indication that it worked properly, describing with particularity the red glow. The tests conducted by plaintiffs' experts, indicated that it did not work as well as plaintiffs' burner, but nonetheless did admit that it did gain some incandescence. Finally, as taught by McCourt the type [34] of block for successful use will greatly be influenced by the type of gas you utilize. Knowing this, there is nothing to indicate that the tests conducted by plaintiffs in their laboratory or the tests conducted before the court utilized the type of gas necessary for the successful operation of the burner under the circumstances.

Furthermore, even if we accept the proposition that the McCourt burner did not work, we do not believe that undue emphasis should be placed on this factor. HN13[] Even an unsuccessful effort to embody the concept will suffice as invention so long as this effort discloses that the inventive idea was complete. Anticipation [*991] is not avoided by showing of lack of prior success if all that remains to be done to make the device successful are changes involving the application of mere mechanical skill. Simmons v. Hansen, 117 F.2d 49 (8 Cir. 1941); 1 Deller's Walker on Patents § 57 (2nd Ed. 1964) at page 240.

It is our conclusion, therefore, that the Schwank patent '294 is invalid for want of "novelty"; and even if novel, the patent certainly lacked [35] the necessary "invention." The trial court's finding on this point is clearly erroneous in light of the evidence and in view of an application of erroneous standards of invention, and therefore must be reversed. Rule 52(a), Fed.R.Civ.P. Since '294 is invalid as a matter of law, the question of infringement is rendered moot. HN14[] There can be no infringement upon an invalid patent. Ditto Incorporated v. Minnesota Mining & Manufacturing Company, 336 F.2d 67 (8 Cir. 1964).

'830 Validity

Having thus disposed of patent '294 (burner plate), we now must determine the validity of the '830 (housing unit) patent. Defendants assert a statutory bar against the '830 patent based on 35 U.S.C. § 102(d). Apparently the inventor Gunther Schwank had the device, structure, or design of the burner housing which is the basis of the '830 patent also patented in Germany under a Gebrauchsmuster which is a lesser type of patent issued for petty or useful models and designs. Defendants contend that, if [732] Gebrauchsmuster No. 1,660,844 issued to Schwank is a patent, United [36] States Patent '830 is invalid under provisions of 35 U.S.C. § 102(d) which holds in its pertinent part:

> "Sec. 102 HN15[] A person shall be entitled to a patent unless --
> "(d) the invention was first patented * * * in a foreign country prior to the date of the application for patent in this country on an application filed more than twelve months before the filing of the application in the United States,"

This contention is correct. It is admitted that the Gebrauchsmuster application was made in Germany on May 22, 1953 which is more than twelve months prior to the application in the United States on October 28, 1954. The registration was effective or granted on July 9, 1953 with the name of the inventor, title, and registration number being published in the Patentblatt (Official Journal) on August 6, 1953. Obviously then the Gebrauchsmuster was granted prior to the United States application in October 1954. Although plaintiffs make some contention that defendants have not shown that the exact type of structure as is represented in the '830 patent is [37] the basis of the Gebrauchsmuster, we feel that the record clearly discloses that the structures are the same. [5] In fact Schwank in his '830 application stated:

> "That no application for patent on this invention or discovery has been filed by me * * * in any foreign country * * * except as follows: Germany May 22, 1953."

The crucial premise, therefore, is whether a Gebrauchsmuster is a patent within the meaning of aforesaid § 102(d). If it is, § 102(d) is a statutory bar to its validity. The District Court did not consider or rule on this issue.

Unlike the law in this country in which we generally only have one class of patent [38] covering all types of patentable structures, processes, or compositions of matter, [6] HN16[] Germany has two distinct classes of invention protection. It appears that in Germany the standard as regards patentable invention for regular patents is very high, making it difficult to secure such a patent for minor or simpler inventions. To meet this situation [*992] the Gebrauchsmuster law was adopted as supplementary legislation to give a measure of, though limited, protection to useful or petty models which do not possess a sufficiently high standard of invention to meet the requirements of the regular patent laws. Gebrauchsmusters, however, cover only structures, not processes, formulas, or compositions of materials; and there is no examination by the patent office for novelty, thus leaving the question of novelty to first arise when suit is brought.

[39] In addition to being an important and integral part of the patent law of Germany it is apparent that HN17[] the Gebrauchsmuster has the elements of the more conventional form of patent. The rights granted an inventor under the Gebrauchsmuster law gives a monopoly for a term of three years, renewable for an equivalent period, thus giving a total of six years of protection. The Gebrauchsmuster gives the inventor the exclusive right of use of the article and to recover damages for infringement, with the claims made and accepted measuring the scope of the protection afforded. There is even a limited publication of the Gebrauchsmuster. If the application is granted, the title, inventor, date and file number are published in the official Patentblatt. Though specifications and drawings are not disclosed in any official publication, the application which contains the specifications, drawings and claims is registered and the entire file is open to public examination in the patent office.

There are no judicial cases indicating how a Gebrauchsmuster should be treated under the provisions of § 102(d), and only scant authority as to how Gebrauchsmusters are to be treated under other provisions [40] of our patent law. What authority there is, however, seems to indicate that the HN18[] Gebrauchsmuster should be treated as a foreign patent. Judge Lindley in Permutit Co. v. Graver Corporation, a District Court decision reported at 37 F.2d 385, at page 390 (N.D.Ill.1930) observed:

> "Evidently a Gebrauchsmuster is a patent within the meaning of the federal statute, as Judge Haight said in the case of Safety Gas Lighter Co. v. Fischer Bros. & Corwin (D.C.) 236 F. 955, 962: 'The rights conferred on an inventor by a German Gebrauchsmuster, except as to time, seem to be quite as extensive as those guaranteed by a patent in this country. Its grant is the act of the government. Although only the title is published, in the sense that it is printed in an [733] official publication, the specifications and drawings of the patent are open and accessible to the public, as are also the claims, which measure the scope of the protection afforded to the inventor, as soon as the title, date of application, and registration are published in the Patentblatt. As it is not

---

[5] A comparison of the drawings and disclosures of Gebrauchsmuster No. 1,660,844 (Ex. S-1) with the original application claims and drawings of the '830 show conclusively that the same device of a gas burner housing is the basis for both the Gebrauchsmuster and patent '830.

[6] The exception being ornamental design patents under 35 U.S.C. §§ 171- 173.

essential that [41] a foreign patent, to have the effect mentioned in section 4886 of the Revised Statutes, should be printed, but that the act of the officials in granting it and accessibility of its disclosures to the public are the decisive factors, I am at a loss to understand how the fact that only a title is printed, or how the scope of the invention which it protects, or that the examination made in the Patent Office before it is granted is limited, can have any effect on it under our laws.'"

This case was affirmed by the Seventh Circuit, 43 F.2d 898 on other grounds and affirmed by the Supreme Court at 284 U.S. 52, 52 S. Ct. 53, 76 L. Ed. 163. Certiorari was apparently granted by the Supreme Court because of holdings in other Circuits which had sustained the patent in question. Speaking for the Court, Mr. Justice Brandeis held the patent invalid without discussing the force and effect of a German Gebrauchsmuster.

In Safety Gas Lighter Co. v. Fischer Bros. & Corwin, 236 F. 955 (D.C., D.N.J., 1916), affirmed 247 F. 1005 (3 Cir. 1918), the Court held a Gebrauchsmuster was available as a reference to anticipate and limit a later [42] United States Patent and should be considered as part of the prior art.

Of considerable interest to us is the position of the United States Patent Office in regard to Gebrauchsmusters. It [*993] appears that for many years the Patent Office has treated the Gebrauchsmuster as a patent. This policy is illustrated by a discussion in the Official Gazette under date of November 2, 1965. In discussing the status of the Gebrauchsmuster the Gazette reads:

"1. Right of priority. -- HN19[] An application for a Gebrauchsmuster is considered to be an application for a patent in a foreign country, and consequently the right of priority of 35 U.S.C. 119 can be based upon such an application. This was decided by the Board of Examiners-in-Chief (now Board of Appeals) in 1908 * * * and has been consistent practice ever since."

"3. Prior patents. -- The Examiners may use the Gebrauchsmuster, however, as a prior patent effective as of the date of registration, in the same manner as they would use the patents of countries which do issue specifications in printed form; * * [43] *"

After making reference to Ex Parte Smith 82 USPQ 83 (Board of Appeals) which held that Gebrauchsmusters were not patents under § 4886 (present § 102(a)(b)(c)), it said:

"* * * But after this decision [Ex Parte Smith] Examiners have nevertheless used Gebrauchsmusters as prior patents, after consultation with the Solicitor's office, to reject applications or dissolve an interference for unpatentability of the counts."

The Gazette then sets forth an amendment to § 901.05(b) of the Patent Regulations by adding the following after the second paragraph on page 139:

"German Utility Models (Gebrauchsmuster) may be used as references as prior patents, but not as prior printed publications, effective as of their registration date. When necessary the Librarian will obtain the complete text of the specification from the German Patent Office. * * *"

From the entire publication we believe that it has been the past and the present practice of the Patent Office to treat the Gebrauchsmuster as a patent. We are not giving any retroactive effect to the recent amendment. We only believe that this amendment and the accompanying explanation [44] codify what has been the historical practice of the Office when confronted with a Gebrauchsmuster.

Section 119 of Title 35 establishes a right of priority for foreign filed patents. Its pertinent part states:

HN20[] "An application for patent for an invention filed in this country by any person who has, * * * previously regularly filed an application for a patent for the same invention in a foreign country * * *, shall have the same effect as the same application would have if filed in this country on the date on which the application for patent for the same invention was first filed in such foreign country, if the application in this country is filed within > twelve months from the earliest date on which such foreign application was filed; but no patent shall be granted on any application for patent for an invention which had been patented * * * more than one year before the date of the actual filing of the application in this country, * * *."

As we have seen it has long been the policy of the Government, both through international convention and [734] internal policy to treat the Gebrauchsmuster [45] as a patent entitled to the priority granted under § 119. Since the Gebrauchsmuster is considered a patent for the purpose of § 119 in obtaining the benefit of an earlier filing date to establish its priority, the same construction should be placed on the word "patent" as used in § 102(d). It is receiving the advantage of being a patent under § 119, therefore, it should be subject to the disadvantages imposed under that same section and under § 102(d).

The word "patent" has many general connotations and nuances but must be considered in the context in which it is used by Congress in implementing the Constitutional grant of authority conferred by Article I, Section Eight, Par. 8 of the Constitution: "To [*994] promote the Progress of Science and useful Arts, by securing for limited Times to Authors and Inventors the exclusive Right to their respective Writings and Discoveries; * * *." As used by Congress in the different sections dealing with the establishment of a patent system we must apply the particular connotation, which is to a certain extent a word of art, that would make effective the Congressional intent. Webster's [46] HN21[] New World Dictionary defines "patent" as (among other definitions) " n.1. A document open to public examination and granting a certain right or privilege; letters patent; especially, a document granting the monopoly right to produce, use, sell, or get profit from an invention, process, etc. for a certain number of years." Black's Law Dictionary generally defines a patent as "A grant of some privilege, property, or authority, made by the government or sovereign of a country to one or more individuals." The German Gebrauchsmuster falls within these accepted definitions of a patent.

We note that HN22[] Congress made no differentiation in the type of foreign patent that would be affected by the statutes. Therefore, we may assume that Congress intended to include in the term "patents" all foreign patents that fall within the well known classical definitions. Obviously the length of the period of protection is not decisive on this issue. Each country has the right to its own view and policy on this point. In fact our policy as expressed by Congress [47] has changed, once granting only fourteen years of protection, now granting seventeen years; and is susceptible to further variation as a matter of legislative policy. HN23[] Our Constitution commands no precise length of time, only "limited times." Therefore, as a matter of policy or Congressional intent it would not seem that the brevity of the Gebrauchsmuster would alter its essential nature.

For the above reasons HN24[] we have concluded that a Gebrauchsmuster is a foreign patent within the purposes of § 119 and § 102(d). It is an important part of the German patent system. It has all of the attributes normally attributed to a patent which include an application setting forth claims, protection granted by the Government for a limited time, a right of action in the inventor to protect the invention against infringement, notice to the public in an official publication, and availability to the public of the specifications and claims. Furthermore, the Gebrauchsmuster falls within the general definition [48] of "patent" in that it does command a sovereign grant of right of exclusive use for limited periods. Finally, the United States Patent Office has long treated it as a patent, granting it full rights of priority, with there being no statutory or Constitutional policy which would deny a lesser form of patent the force of a regular patent. We are, therefore, of the opinion that the Gebrauchsmuster No. 1,660,844 obtained by Schwank prior to his United States application on an application filed more than twelve months before the United States filing is a patent within the meaning of the patent law and as such is a statutory bar to the validity of patent '830 under 35 U.S.C. § 102(d).

Defendants have also argued the patent's invalidity due to want of invention (35 U.S.C. § 103), absence of proper oath (35 U.S.C. § 115), and lack of definiteness in description (35 U.S.C. § 112). We are of the opinion that none of these arguments possess substantial merit. Our above holding, however, renders these questions moot and consequently they will not be discussed further.

'830 Infringement

Since [49] we have held patent '830 to be invalid because of 35 U.S.C. § 102(d) any discussion of infringement is normally unnecessary because there can be no infringement of an invalid patent. Nonetheless, we would like to make a brief observation on this point. We believe that the trial court's finding of no infringement was proper. Though the Lambert burner manufactured by defendants is visibly similar to plaintiffs' structure, the depth of defendants' device [*995] is greater than the diameter of the mixing tube. Inventor Schwank, however, conditioned each of his claims on the "depth of the said dish-shaped body member between said wall and said flat fuel-outlet burner means being not substantially greater than the diameter of the said mixing [735] tube. * * *" After being denied a patent by the Examiner, Schwank appealed to the Board of Appeals emphasizing this particular dimensional characteristic. The Board was favorably impressed and primarily on the basis of this dimensional achievement the patent was granted. Therefore, plaintiffs having been granted a patent in a very crowded field of art on the very narrow ground of dimensional variation are not in an equitable [50] position to object when another party substantially varies these dimensions. Smith v. Mid-Continent Inv. Co., 106 F.2d 622 (8 Cir. 1939). A person having a valid patent only by virtue of narrowly limited and strictly construed claims cannot expect the courts to construe a broad interpretation of the patent in order to find infringement. Dominion Magnesium Limited v. United States, 320 F.2d 388, 162 Ct.Cl. 240 (1963); Industrial Instrument Corporation v. Foxboro Company, 307 F.2d 783 (5 Cir. 1962). Under the circumstances of this case we believe that even if the patent were valid, plaintiffs have not borne their burden of proving infringement.

Anti-Trust Counterclaim

As a counterclaim for affirmative relief defendants have alleged that the licensing agreement between plaintiffs, American Infra-Red and Hupp Corporation, is a violation of the anti-trust law entitling them to treble damages.

We observe from the record that American Infra-Red, as the assignee of the inventor, granted to Hupp Corporation a so-called nonexclusive license to manufacture and sell radiant gas burners within the claims and specifications of patent '830. With [51] the granting of this license Hupp agreed to purchase all of the tile (patent '294) that was resold to third parties or used in the manufacture of the burner from American Infra-Red. [7] Since there was no apparent payment for the license nor any agreement to pay royalties it would seem that the consideration for the license was Hupp's agreement to purchase all the necessary tile exclusively from American Infra-Red. This agreement, then, has the appearance of an exclusive dealing contract which was "tied", as a condition, to the issuance of the license. It is well known that HN25[] exclusive dealing contracts, especially when tied to the lease or sale of another product, while admittedly not illegal per se, are carefully scrutinized by the courts. "When the effect of such arrangements 'may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly' they are made unlawful by section 3 of the Clayton Act." 2 Toulmin's Anti-Trust Laws, § 15.7 (1950).

[52] We note, however, that proof of an isolated violation of substantive law will not entitle defendants to an affirmative recovery. Before a party is entitled to recover treble damages he must be able to plead and prove actual monetary injury [*996] to his business or property resulting from the illegal act. 15 U.S.C., § 15; Duff v. Kansas City Star Company, 299 F.2d 320 (8 Cir. 1962). It has long been the law that damages which are purely speculative, remote, or based upon conjecture cannot serve as a base for anti-trust recovery. Siegfried v. Kansas City Star Company, 298 F.2d 1 (8 Cir. 1962). Although the mere difficulty of exact proof will not deprive a party of

---

[7] The pertinent part of the licensing agreement dated July 1, 1956 is as follows:

"American Infra-Red hereby grants and agrees to grant to Hupp the following:

"(a) A royalty free, non-exclusive license to use and/or sell said radiant plates ['294] and a royalty free, non-exclusive license to make, have made, use and/or sell said gas burning equipment ['830] (but not including the license to make or have made said radiant plates, * * *)"

Section (b) provides that Hupp has the right to make or have made the radiant plates in the event that American Infra-Red is unable to supply them in the prescribed numbers. The pertinent part of the sales agreement dated July 1, 1956 is as follows:

"Buyer agrees to purchase and Seller agrees to sell to Buyer * * * all said radiant plates required for use or replacement in radiant gas burners * * * made by or for Buyer and all said radiant plates which Buyer resells to third parties."

relief, still damages to be awarded must be susceptible of expression in figures founded upon some reasonable basis of computation. National Wrestling Alliance v. Myers, 325 F.2d 768 (8 Cir. 1963).

The trial court held, "That there has been a failure of proof required to establish any violation of either the Sherman Act * * * or the Clayton Act * * * that would permit awarding damages to Defendants. Both of these Acts require damages to be proved [53] beyond any evidence submitted and relied upon by Defendants." Upon reviewing the evidence and the arguments in this case we are in agreement with the finding of the trial court. Defendants have, indeed, failed to produce any concrete evidence of monetary damage and as a consequence are not entitled to recovery.

[*736] As an element of damage defendants have argued that the agreement between American Infra-Red and Hupp has precluded them from selling tiles to Hupp. This allegation, however, does not serve as a basis for computing monetary loss. This mere reiteration of the substantive charge leaves the finder of fact completely at sea without any guide for effective assessment of actual injury. Defendants have produced no facts or figures as to how much business was lost due to being precluded from this part of the market or how many tiles they would have sold to Hupp had it not been for this agreement. The finding of monetary damage, under the circumstances, would have to be purely speculative and without evidentiary support in the record. Something more definite than this must be produced to show actual injury to defendants' business or property.

As a second point defendants allege [54] that the expense of defending the patent infringement segment of this litigation could serve as a basis for awarding treble damages and cite three cases in support of this theory. Clapper v. Original Tractor Cab Company, 270 F.2d 616 (7 Cir. 1959); Kobe, Inc. v. Dempsey Pump Co., 198 F.2d 416 (10 Cir. 1952); Dairy Foods, Incorporated v. Dairy Maid Products Cooperative, 297 F.2d 805 (7 Cir. 1961).

In examining this contention we see that the HN26[] statute, which affords the private cause of action, clearly requires a causal connection between the "injury in his business or property" and the anti-trust violation. 15 U.S.C. § 15; [8] Royster Drive-In Theatres, Inc. v. American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres, Inc., 268 F.2d 246 (2 Cir. 1959) cert. denied 361 U.S. 885, 80 S. Ct. 156, 4 L. Ed. 2d 121. It follows, therefrom, that the expense of defending a patent infringement suit could not be considered as a per se element in determining treble damages in an anti-trust counterclaim. As stated in the Kobe [55] case, supra, cited by defendants in 198 F.2d at p. 425, "If there was nothing more than the bringing of the infringement action, resulting damages could not be recovered. * *." In order, therefore to recover damages the law requires there be a showing of a causal connection between the infringement suit and the anti-trust activities. Upon a showing that the infringement litigation was initiated as part of the illegal scheme, it is conceivable that its defense could be considered as an "injury" under the anti-trust statutes. This, in fact, is exactly what defendants' cases say. HN27[] Patent litigation expense may only be considered in anti-trust counterclaims, "Where an infringement suit is brought as part of and in furtherance of a combination and conspiracy * * *." [*997] Dairy Foods, Incorporated v. Dairy Maid Products Cooperative, 297 F.2d 805, 809 (7 Cir. 1961). Therefore, whenever the patent litigation is initiated pursuant to a lawful purpose and there is no causal connection between the bringing of the action and the illegal conduct, the cost of the defense [56] of the suit cannot become an element of damage which is tripled under the Clayton Act. See, Malta Manufacturing Company v. Osten, 215 F. Supp. 114 (E.D.Mich.1963).

Applying this law to the facts of this case, there is no indication that the initiation of this suit was inspired by any monopolistic conspiracy or was a veiled attempt to unjustly drive plaintiffs' competitors to the wall. In fact, all indications point out that this suit was brought with clean hands in a good faith attempt to protect plaintiffs' patent rights, which they were fully entitled to do under the patent law. Indeed, the trial court specifically found that plaintiffs had been guilty of no patent misuse in the initiation of this suit. Further, it is our belief that this litigation was not precipitated by any monopolistic activity, but [57] rather the dispute over the validity and infringement of these patents would have existed regardless of the particulars of the licensing agreement between the individual plaintiffs. The defense of this suit is, therefore, an expense attributable, not to the allegedly illegal contracts but solely to a dispute over the two patents. There being no proof of any causal connection between the patent litigation and the allegedly illegal contracts, and it not being shown that the suit was initiated in furtherance of any monopolistic scheme or conspiracy, we believe that defendants have failed to prove these litigation expenses are anti-trust damages.

[8] 15 U.S.C. § 15 provides in part: "Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue * *."

In addition we recognize the fact there is authority that no patent litigation expense may be recovered as treble damages in an anti-trust counterclaim. The leading case taking this approach is Straus v. Victor Talking Machine Co., 297 F. 791 (2 Cir. 1924) and cited with approval by Malta Manufacturing Company [737] v. Osten, 215 F. Supp. 114 (E.D.Mich.1963). The rationale of these cases is that allowance of such a recovery would inhibit free resort to the courts.

Although we do recognize the abstract possibility that [58] the contractual arrangements of plaintiffs, in their totality, might come into conflict with provisions of the anti-trust law, we have based our decision herein solely upon the judgment of the trial court on the basis that the ruling was not clearly erroneous. In no way is our decision to be interpreted as indicating whether we believe there has been a substantive violation of the anti-trust law. On this basis the judgment of the trial court on this issue is affirmed.

Costs

The trial court ruled that each party was to bear his own costs and disbursements. In view of the outcome of this appeal it is our conclusion that this division of costs should be modified.

Neither party has prevailed in his claim for affirmative relief. We have held both of plaintiffs' patents invalid, and even if not invalid aside from the statutory bar patent '830 could not be considered infringed upon. Defendants, on the other hand, have wholly failed to prove damages which would entitle them to recover on the anti-trust counterclaim. In this connection we observe that the bulk of this litigation was devoted to the patents, their validity and infringement, with only a minority of the courts' and [59] parties' time being directed to the anti-trust allegations. We believe, therefore, that three-fourths of the cost of printing 30 copies of the record shall be borne by and assessed against plaintiffs, who initiated the patent litigation, and the remaining one-fourth of said cost shall be borne by and assessed against defendants, who are responsible for the anti-trust litigation.

Plaintiffs' appeal No. 18054 seeks reversal of the portion of the District Court's judgment finding no infringement upon the patents. Since we have held that U.S. Patents No. 2775294 and [*998] No. 2870830 are invalid and an invalid patent cannot be infringed, the awarding of judgment to defendants-appellees on the patent infringement action is affirmed.

Defendants' appeal No. 18055 seeks reversal of the portions of the District Court's judgment holding the two patents to be valid and denying relief on the anti-trust counterclaim. For the reasons set out herein the District Court's determination of validity is reversed and its denial of relief on the counterclaim is affirmed.

Therefore, on the patent infringement suit judgment shall be entered in favor of defendants-appellants on the basis that [60] the patents in question are invalid. On the anti-trust counterclaim judgment shall be entered in accordance with the judgment of the District Court in favor of plaintiffs-appellees on the basis of failure of proof on damages.

Affirmed in part. Reversed in part.

United States v. Von's Grocery Co.

Supreme Court of the United States

March 22, 1966, Argued ; May 31, 1966, Decided

No. 303

Reporter
384 U.S. 270 *; 86 S. Ct. 1478 ; 16 L. Ed. 2d 555 ; 1966 U.S. LEXIS 2823 *; 1966 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,780

UNITED STATES v. VON'S GROCERY CO. ET AL.

Prior History: [1] APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA.

Disposition: 233 F.Supp. 976, reversed.

Core Terms

merger, chains, Markets, concentration, Food, competitors, acquisitions, grocery, firms, Shopping, retail, largest, sales, single-store, top, market share, horizontal, Giant, lessen competition, grocery store, Clayton Act, combined, market-extension, monopoly, chain store, incipiency, arresting, smaller, legislative history, large number

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN1[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 18.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > Clayton Act

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

HN2[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 18, as amended in 1950 by the Celler-Kefauver Anti-Merger Act, requires not merely an appraisal of the immediate impact of the merger upon competition, but a prediction of its impact upon competitive conditions in the future; this is what is meant when it is said that the amended § 7 was intended to arrest anticompetitive tendencies in their "incipiency."

Lawyers' Edition Display

Summary

The United States brought an action in the United States District Court for the Southern District of California charging that the acquisition by a corporation of its direct competitor, both large retail grocery companies in Los Angeles, California, violated 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended in 1950, which proscribes the acquisition by one corporation of the assets of another corporation where the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition or to tend to create a monopoly. After the District Court refused to grant the government's motion for a temporary restraining order, one of the corporations took over all of the other's capital stock and assets, including 36 grocery stores in the Los Angeles area. After hearing evidence, the District Court entered judgment for the defendants, concluding as a matter of law that there was not a reasonable probability that the merger would tend substantially to lessen competition or create a monopoly in violation of 7. (233 F Supp 976.)

On the government's direct appeal, the Supreme Court of the United States reversed. In an opinion by Black, J., expressing the view of six members of the Court, it was held that the merger violated 7, in view of the merging companies' share of the market, the substantial decrease of the number of single-store grocery firms in the market, both before and after the merger, and the concentration of the grocery business into the hands of fewer and fewer owners. The District Court was directed to order divestiture without delay.

White, J., joined the Court's opinion in a separate concurring opinion, pointing out that the merger not only disposed of a substantial competitor but increased the concentration in the leading firms.

Stewart, J., joined by Harlan, J., dissented on the ground that it was not shown that the effect of the merger may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly, as required by 7.

Fortas, J., did not participate.

Headnotes

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §34.5 > merger of grocery chain stores -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[1][] [1]

The prohibition in 7 of the amended Clayton Act (15 USC 18) of the acquisition by one corporation of the assets of another corporation where the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition or to tend to create a monopoly is violated by a merger of two large retail grocery companies in Los Angeles, where the record showed that in the year of the merger (1960) the sales of the combined companies were 7.5 percent of the total $ 2,500,000,000 of retail groceries sold in the Los Angeles market each year; the merger created the second largest grocery chain in Los Angeles, with sales of almost $ 172,488,000 annually; the number of single-store grocery firms decreased from 5,365 in 1950 to 3,818 in 1961, and by 1963 had dropped still further to 3,590, while from 1953 to 1962 the number of chains with two or more grocery stores increased from 96 to 150; the small companies were continually being absorbed by the larger firms through mergers, 9 of the top 20 chains acquiring 126 stores from their smaller competitors in the period from 1949 to 1958.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §6 > purpose of antitrust acts -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[2][] [2]

The purpose of the Sherman Antitrust Act and of the Clayton Act is to prevent economic concentration in the American economy by keeping a large number of small competitors in business.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §34.5 > prohibition of mergers -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[3][] [3]

The 1960 Amendment (64 Stat 1125) of 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18) broadens its scope so as to prohibit not only mergers between competitors the effect of which "may be substantially to lessen competition or to tend to create a monopoly" but to prohibit all mergers having that effect; these terms look not merely to the actual present effect of a merger but instead to its effect upon future competition.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §34.5 > mergers -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[4][] [4]

Where concentration is gaining momentum in a market, the Supreme Court of the United States must be alert to carry out Congress' intent to protect competition against ever increasing concentration through mergers.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §34.5 > mergers -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[5][] [5]

If ever a merger of two already powerful companies in a way which makes them even more powerful than they were before would not violate 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18), it does when it takes place in a market characterized by a long and continuous trend toward fewer and fewer owner- competitors.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §34.5 > merger -- impact on competition -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[6][] [6]

Determination of the question whether the effect of a merger "may be substantially to lessen competition" in the relevant market, so as to bring the merger within the prohibition of 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18), requires not merely an appraisal of the immediate impact of the merger upon competition, but a prediction of its impact upon competitive conditions in the future.

APPEAL §1701 > RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §78 > reversal of dismissal of complaint -- divestiture order -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[7][] [7]

In a civil action charging a violation of 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18) by one grocery company merging with another, wherein the defendants had knowledge of the antitrust charge prior to the effectuation of the merger, but the Federal District Court dismissed the complaint after a trial, the Supreme Court of the United States, determining that the merger violates 7, will not only reverse the District Court's judgment, but also direct it to order divestiture without delay.

Syllabus

The United States charged that the acquisition in 1960 by Von's Grocery Company of Shopping Bag Food Stores, a competitor in the retail grocery market in the Los Angeles area, violated § 7 of the Clayton Act. After a hearing the District Court concluded that there was "not a reasonable probability" that the merger would tend "substantially to lessen competition" or "create a monopoly" in violation of § 7 and entered judgment for the appellees. Held: The merger of two of the largest and most successful retail grocery companies in a market area characterized by a steady decline, before and after the merger, in the number of small grocery companies, combined with significant absorption of small firms by larger ones, is a violation of § 7 of the Clayton Act. Pp. 274-279.

(a) By the enactment of the Celler-Kefauver amendment to § 7 in 1950 Congress sought to preserve competition among small businesses by halting a trend toward concentration [*2] in its incipiency and thus the courts must be alert to protect competition against increasing concentration through mergers especially where concentration is gaining momentum in the market. Pp. 276-277.

(b) This case presents the precise situation which Congress intended to proscribe, where two powerful companies merge to become more powerful in a market exhibiting a marked trend toward concentration. Pp. 277-278.

(c) Section 7 requires not only an appraisal of the immediate impact of the merger on competition but a prediction of the merger's effect on competitive conditions in the future, to prevent the destruction of competition. United States v. Philadelphia Nat. Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 362. P. 278.

(d) Since the appellees were on notice of the antitrust charge, the judgment is reversed and the District Court is directed to order divestiture without delay. P. 279.

Counsel: Richard A. Posner argued the cause for the United States. With him on the brief were Solicitor General Marshall, Assistant Attorney General Turner, Robert B. Hummel, James J. Coyle and John F. Hughes.

William W. Alsup argued the cause for appellees. With him on the brief were Warren M. [*3] Christopher and William W. Vaughn.

Henry J. Bison, Jr., argued the cause and filed a brief for the National Association of Retail Grocers of the United States, as amicus curiae, urging affirmance.

Judges: Warren, Black, Douglas, Clark, Harlan, Brennan, Stewart, White; Fortas took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

Opinion by: BLACK

Opinion

[*271] [557] [1479] MR. JUSTICE BLACK delivered the opinion of the Court.

On March 25, 1960, the United States brought this action charging that the acquisition by Von's Grocery Company of its direct competitor Shopping Bag Food Stores, both large retail grocery companies in Los Angeles, California, violated § 7 of the Clayton Act which, as amended in 1950 by the Celler-Kefauver Anti-Merger Act, provides in relevant part:

HN1[] "That no corporation engaged in commerce . . . shall acquire the whole or any part of the assets of another corporation engaged also in commerce, where in any line of commerce in any section of the country, the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly." [1]

On March 28, 1960, three days later, the District Court refused to [*4] grant the Government's motion for a temporary restraining order and immediately Von's took over all of Shopping Bag's capital stock and assets including 36 grocery stores in the Los Angeles area. After [*272] hearing evidence on both sides, the District Court made findings of fact and concluded as a matter of law that there was "not a reasonable probability" that the merger would tend "substantially to lessen competition" or "create a monopoly" in violation of § 7. For this reason the District Court entered judgment for the defendants. 233 F.Supp. 976, 985. The Government appealed directly to this Court as authorized by § 2 of the Expediting Act. [2] The sole question here is whether the District Court properly concluded on the facts before it that the Government had failed to prove a violation of § 7.

[5] LEdHN[1][] [1]The record shows the following facts relevant to our decision. The market involved here is the retail grocery market in the Los Angeles area. In 1958 Von's retail sales ranked third in the area and Shopping Bag's ranked sixth. In 1960 their sales together were 7.5% of the total two and one-half billion dollars of retail groceries sold in the Los Angeles market each year. For many years before the merger both [558] companies had enjoyed great success as rapidly growing companies. From 1948 to 1958 the number of Von's stores in the Los Angeles area practically doubled from 14 to 27, while at the same time the number of Shopping Bag's stores jumped from 15 to 34. During that same decade, Von's sales increased fourfold and its share of the market almost doubled while Shopping Bag's sales multiplied seven times and its share of the market tripled. The merger of these two highly successful, expanding and aggressive competitors created the second largest grocery chain in Los Angeles with sales of almost $ 172,488,000 annually. In addition the findings of the District Court show that [*273] [*6] the number of owners operating single stores in the Los Angeles retail grocery market decreased from 5,365 in 1950 to 3,818 in 1961. By 1963, three years after the merger, the number of single-store owners had dropped still further to 3,590. [3] During roughly the same period, [1480] from 1953 to 1962, the number of chains with two or more grocery stores increased from 96 to 150. While the grocery business was being concentrated into the hands of fewer and fewer owners, the small companies were continually being absorbed by the larger firms through mergers. According to an exhibit prepared by one of the Government's expert witnesses, in the period from 1949 to 1958 nine of the top 20 chains acquired 126 stores from their smaller competitors. [4] Figures

---

[1] 38 Stat. 731, as amended by 64 Stat. 1125, 15 U. S. C. § 18 (1964 ed.).

[2] 32 Stat. 823, as amended by 62 Stat. 989, 15 U. S. C. § 29 (1964 ed.).

[3] Despite this steadfast concentration of the Los Angeles grocery business into fewer and fewer hands, the District Court, in Finding of Fact No. 80, concluded as follows:

"There has been no increase in concentration in the retail grocery business in the Los Angeles Metropolitan Area either in the last decade or since the merger. On the contrary, economic concentration has decreased . . . ."

This conclusion is completely contradicted by Finding No. 23 which makes plain the steady decline in the number of individual grocery store owners referred to above. It is thus apparent that the District Court, in finding No. 80, used the term "concentration" in some sense other than a total decrease in the number of separate competitors which is the crucial point here.

[4] Appellees, in their brief, claim that 120 and not 126 stores changed hands in these acquisitions:

of a principal defense witness, set out below, illustrate the many acquisitions and mergers in the Los Angeles grocery industry from 1954 through 1961 including acquisitions made by Food Giant, Alpha Beta, Fox, and [*274] Mayfair, all among the 10 leading chains in the area. [5] Moreover, a table prepared by the Federal Trade Commission appearing in the Government's reply brief, but not a part of the record here, shows that [*7] acquisitions and mergers in the Los Angeles retail grocery market have continued at a rapid rate since the merger. [6] These facts alone are enough to cause us to conclude contrary to the District Court that the Von's-Shopping Bag merger did violate § 7. Accordingly, we reverse.

From this country's beginning there has been an abiding and widespread fear of the evils which flow from monopoly -- that is the concentration of economic power in the hands of a few. On the basis of this fear, Congress in 1890, when many of the Nation's industries [559] were already concentrated into what it deemed too few hands, passed the Sherman Act in an attempt to prevent further concentration and to preserve competition among a large number of sellers. Several years later, in 1897, this Court emphasized this policy of the Sherman Act by calling attention to the tendency of powerful business combinations to restrain competition "by driving out of business the small dealers and worthy men whose lives have been spent therein, and who might be unable to readjust themselves in their altered surroundings." United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Assn., 166 U.S. 290, 323. [*9] [7] The Sherman Act failed to protect the smaller businessmen [*275] from elimination through the monopolistic pressures of large combinations which used mergers to grow ever more powerful. As a result in 1914 [1481] Congress, viewing mergers as a continuous, pervasive threat to small business, passed § 7 of the Clayton Act which prohibited corporations under most circumstances from merging by purchasing the stock of their competitors. Ingenious businessmen, however, soon found a way to avoid § 7 and corporations began to merge simply by purchasing their rivals' assets. This Court in 1926, over the dissent of Justice Brandeis, joined by Chief Justice Taft and Justices Holmes and Stone approved this device for avoiding § 7 [8] and mergers continued to concentrate economic power into fewer and fewer hands until 1950 when Congress passed the Celler-Kefauver Anti-Merger Act now before us.

LEdHN[2][] [2]LEdHN[3][] [3]LEdHN[4][] [4]Like the Sherman Act in 1890 and the Clayton Act in 1914, the basic purpose of the 1950 Celler-Kefauver Act was to prevent economic concentration in the American economy by keeping a large number of small competitors in business. [9] In stating the purposes of their bill, both of its sponsors, Representative Celler and Senator Kefauver, emphasized their fear, widely shared by other members of Congress, that this concentration was rapidly driving the small businessman out of the market. [10] The period from 1940 to

---

"It should also be noted here that the exhibit is in error in showing an acquisition by Food Giant from itself of six stores doing an annual volume of $ 31,700,000. Actually this was simply a change of name by Food Giant . . . ."

[5] [*8] These figures as they appear in a table in the Brief for the United States show acquisitions of retail grocery stores in the Los Angeles area from 1954 to 1961: See Appendix, Table 1, substantially reproducing the above-mentioned table.

[6] See Appendix, Table 2.

[7] Later, in 1945, Judge Learned Hand, reviewing the policy of the antitrust laws and other laws designed to foster small business, said, "Throughout the history of these statutes it has been constantly assumed that one of their purposes was to perpetuate and preserve, for its own sake and in spite of possible cost, an organization of industry in small units which can effectively compete with each other." United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F.2d 416, 429.

[8] [*10] Thatcher Manufacturing Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 272 U.S. 554, 560.

[9] See, e. g., U.S. v. Philadelphia Nat. Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 362-363; United States v. Alcoa, 377 U.S. 271, 280.

[10] Representative Celler, in introducing the bill on the House floor, remarked:

1947, which was at [*276] the center of attention throughout the hearings and debates on the Celler-Kefauver bill, had been characterized [560] by a series of mergers between large corporations and their smaller competitors resulting in the steady [*11] erosion of the small independent business in our economy. [11] As we said in Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 315, "The dominant theme pervading congressional consideration of the 1950 amendments was a fear of what was considered to be a rising tide of economic concentration in the American economy." To arrest this "rising tide" toward concentration into too few hands and to halt the gradual demise of the small businessman, Congress [1482] decided to clamp down with vigor on mergers. It both revitalized § 7 of the Clayton Act by "plugging its loophole" and broadened its scope so [*277] as not only to prohibit mergers between competitors, the effect of which "may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly" but to prohibit all mergers having that effect. By using these terms in § 7 which look not merely to the actual present effect of a merger but instead to its effect upon future competition, Congress sought to preserve competition among many small businesses by arresting a trend toward concentration in its incipiency before that trend developed to the point that a market was left in the grip of a few big [*12] companies. Thus, where concentration is gaining momentum in a market, we must be alert to carry out Congress' intent to protect competition against ever-increasing concentration through mergers. [12]

LEdHN[5][] [5] [*14] The facts of this case present exactly the threatening trend toward concentration which Congress wanted to halt. The number of small grocery companies in the Los Angeles retail grocery market had been declining rapidly before the merger and continued to decline rapidly afterwards. This rapid decline in the number of grocery store owners moved hand in hand with a large number of significant absorptions of the small companies by the larger ones. In the midst of this steadfast trend toward concentration, Von's and Shopping Bag, two of the most successful and largest companies in the area, jointly owning 66 grocery stores merged to become the second largest chain in Los Angeles. This merger cannot be defended on the ground that one of the companies was about to fail or that the two had to merge to save themselves from destruction by some larger and more powerful competitor. [13] What we have on the contrary [*278] is simply the case of two already powerful companies merging in a way which makes them even more powerful than they were before. [561] If ever such a merger would not [*15] violate § 7, certainly it does when it takes place in a market characterized by a long and continuous trend toward fewer and fewer owner-competitors which is exactly the sort of trend which Congress, with power to do so, declared must be arrested.

"Small, independent, decentralized business of the kind that built up our country, of the kind that made our country great, first, is fast disappearing, and second, is being made dependent upon monster concentration." 95 Cong. Rec. 11486.

Senator Kefauver expressed the same fear on the Senate floor:

"I think that we are approaching a point where a fundamental decision must be made in regard to this problem of economic concentration. Shall we permit the economy of the country to gravitate into the hands of a few corporations . . . ? Or on the other hand are we going to preserve small business, local operations, and free enterprise?" 96 Cong. Rec. 16450.

References to a number of other similar remarks by other Congressmen are collected in Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 316, n. 28.

[11] [*13] H. R. Rep. No. 1191, 81st Cong., 1st Sess., p. 3, described this characteristic of the merger movement as follows:

". . . the outstanding characteristic of the merger movement has been that of large corporations buying out small companies, rather than smaller companies combining together in order to compete more effectively with their larger rivals. More than 70 percent of the total number of firms acquired during 1940-47 have been absorbed by larger corporations with assets of over $ 5,000,000. In contrast, fully 93 percent of all the firms bought out held assets of less than $ 1,000,000. Some 33 of the Nation's 200 largest industrial corporations have bought out an average of 5 companies each, and 13 have purchased more than 10 concerns each."

[12] See, e. g., Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S., at 346; U.S. v. Philadelphia Nat. Bank, 374 U.S., at 362. See also United States v. du Pont & Co., 353 U.S. 586, 597, interpreting § 7 before the Celler-Kefauver Anti-Merger amendment.

[13] See Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S., at 319.

LEdHN[6][] [6]Appellees' primary argument is that the merger between Von's and Shopping Bag is not prohibited by § 7 because the Los Angeles grocery market was competitive before the merger, has been since, and may continue to be in the future. Even so, § 7 HN2[] "requires not merely an appraisal of the immediate impact of the merger upon competition, but a prediction of its impact upon competitive conditions in the future; this is what is meant when it is said that the amended § 7 was intended to arrest anticompetitive tendencies in their 'incipiency.'" U.S. v. Philadelphia Nat. Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 362. [*16] It is enough for us that Congress feared that a market marked at the same time by both a continuous decline in the number of small businesses and a large number of mergers would slowly but inevitably gravitate from a market of many small competitors to one dominated by one or a few giants, and competition would thereby be destroyed. Congress passed the Celler-Kefauver Act to prevent such a destruction of competition. Our cases since the passage of that Act have faithfully endeavored to enforce [1483] this congressional command. [14] We adhere to them now.

[*279] LEdHN[7][] [7] [*17] Here again as in United States v. El Paso Gas Co., 376 U.S. 651, 662, since appellees "have been on notice of the antitrust charge from almost the beginning . . . we not only reverse the judgment below but direct the District Court to order divestiture without delay." See also United States v. du Pont & Co., 366 U.S. 316; United States v. Alcoa, 377 U.S. 271, 281.

Reversed and remanded.

[*562] MR. JUSTICE FORTAS took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

APPENDIX TO OPINION OF THE COURT.

TABLE 1.

Food store acquisitions in the Los Angeles metropolitan area 1954-61

Year	Acquiring firm	Acquired firm	Numberof stores acquired
1957	Piper Mart	Bi-Right & Big Bear	3
1958	Mayfair	Bob's Supermarket	7
1961	Better Foods	Border's Markets	3
1954	Kory's Markets	Carty Brothers	8
1958	Food Giant	Clark Markets	10
1956	Fox	Desert Fair	4
1959	Lucky	Hiram's	6
1958	Fox	Iowa Pork Shops	11
1961	Food Giant (and others)	McDaniel's Markets	16
1957	Food Giant	Panorama Markets	3
1958	Pix	Patton's Mkts	3
1958	Alpha Beta	Raisin Markets	13
1960	Piggly Wiggly	Rankins Markets	4
1959	Pix	S & K Markets	2
1960	Von's	Shopping Bag	37

[14] See, e. g., Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294; U.S. v. Philadelphia Nat. Bank, 374 U.S. 321; United States v. El Paso Gas Co., 376 U.S. 651; United States v. Alcoa, 377 U.S. 271; United States v. Continental Can Co., 378 U.S. 441; FTC v. Consolidated Foods, 380 U.S. 592.

TABLE 1.

Food store acquisitions in the Los Angeles metropolitan area 1954-61

Year	Acquiring firm	Acquired firm	Numberof stores acquired
1959	Pix	Shop Right Markets	3
1958	Yor-Way	C. S. Smith	5
1957	Food Giant	Toluca Marts	2
1957	Mayfair	U-Tell-Em Markets	10
	Total		150

[18] [*280]

TABLE 2.

[1] Food store acquisitions in the Los Angeles metropolitan area 1961-64

Year	Acquiring company	Acquired company (or stores)			Type of acquisition
		Name	Number of stores	Sales (thousands)[2]	Horizontal	Other
1961	Acme Markets	Alpha Beta Food Markets	45	$ 79,042		X
1961	Boys Markets	Korys Markets	5	10,000	X
	Food Giant Markets	McDaniels Markets	9	21,500	X[3]
	Mayfair Markets	Yorway Markets	1	1,500	X
		Alpha Beta Food Markets	1	1,700	X
1962	Mayfair Markets	Schaubs Market	1	1,800	X
		Fox Markets	1	2,200	X
	Ralph's Grocery Co	Imperial Supreme Markets	1	916	X
1963	Food Fair Stores	Fox Markets	22	44,419		X
	Kroger	Market Basket	53	110,860		X
	Mayfair Markets	Bi Rite Markets	1	2,569	X

[1] Consists of Los Angeles and Orange Counties. (1963 census defined the Los Angeles metropolitan area as Los Angeles County only.)

[2] In most cases, sales are for the 12-month period prior to acquisition.

[3] According to a statement made by Von's counsel at oral argument, this acquisition did not take place in 1961, but instead Food Giant bought seven of McDaniel's stores in 1964. The acquisition in 1964 is listed in this table.

TABLE 2.

[1] Food store acquisitions in the Los Angeles metropolitan area 1961-64

Year	Acquiring company	Acquired company (or stores) Name	Number of stores	Sales (thousands)[2]	Type of acquisition Horizontal	Other
		Dales Food Market	1	2,200	X
		Food Giant Markets	1	1,700	X
1964	Albertson's, Inc	Greater All American	14	30,308		X
	Mayfair Markets	Gateway Market	4	8,000	X
		Pattons Markets	4	10,400	X
	Ralph's Grocery Co	Cracker Barrel Super-market.	1	1,000	X
	Food Giant Markets	McDaniels Markets	7	18,350	X
	Total horizontal mergers.		38	83,835
	Total market extension mergers.		134	264,629

[19]

Concur by: WHITE

Concur

[*563] [1484] MR. JUSTICE WHITE, concurring.

As I read the Court's opinion, which I join, it does not hold that in any industry exhibiting a decided trend towards concentration, any merger between competing firms violates § 7 unless saved by the failing company doctrine; nor does it declare illegal each and every merger in such an industry where the resulting firm has as much [*281] as a 7.5% share of the relevant market. But here, in 1958 before the merger, the largest firm had 8% of the sales, Von's was third with 4.7% and Shopping [*20] Bag was sixth with 4.2%. The four largest firms had 24.4% of the market, the top eight had 40.9% [564] and the top 12 had 48.8% as compared with 25.9%, 33.7% and 38.8% in 1948. All but two of the top 10 firms in 1958 were very probably also among the top 10 in 1948 or had acquired a firm that was among the top 10. Further, all but three of the top 10 had increased their market share between 1948 and 1958 and those which gained gained more than the three lost. Also, although three companies declined in market share their total sales increased in substantial amounts.

Given a trend towards fewer and fewer sellers which promises to continue, it [1485] is clear to me that where the eight leading firms have over 40% of the market, any merger between the leaders or between one of them and a lesser company is vulnerable under § 7, absent some special proof to the contrary. Here Von's acquired Shopping Bag. Both were among the eight largest companies, both had grown substantially since 1948 and they were substantial competitors. After the merger the four largest firms had 28.8%, the eight largest had 44% and the 12 largest had 50%. The merger not only disposed of a substantial [*21] competitor but increased the concentration in the leading firms. In my view the Government sufficiently proved that the effect of this merger may be substantially to lessen competition or to tend to create a monopoly.

Dissent by: STEWART

Dissent

MR. JUSTICE STEWART, with whom MR. JUSTICE HARLAN joins, dissenting.

We first gave consideration to the 1950 amendment of § 7 of the Clayton Act in Brown Shoe Co. v. [United States, 370 U.S. 294]. The thorough opinion THE CHIEF JUSTICE wrote for the Court in that case made two [*282] things plain: First, the standards of § 7 require that every corporate acquisition be judged in the light of the contemporary economic context of its industry. [1] [*22] Second, the purpose of § 7 is to protect competition, not to protect competitors, and every § 7 case must be decided in the light of that clear statutory purpose. [2] Today the Court turns its back on these two basic principles and on all the decisions that have followed them.

The Court makes no effort to appraise the competitive effects of this acquisition in terms of the contemporary economy of the retail food industry in the Los Angeles area. [3] Instead, through a simple exercise [565] in sums, it finds that the number of individual competitors in the market has decreased over the years, and, apparently on the theory that the degree of competition is invariably proportional to the number of competitors, it holds that [*283] this historic reduction in the number of competing units is enough under § 7 to invalidate a merger within the market, with no need to examine the economic concentration of the market, the level of competition in the market, or the potential adverse effect of the merger on that competition. This startling per se rule [*23] is contrary not only to our previous decisions, but contrary to the language of § 7, contrary to the legislative history of the 1950 amendment, and contrary to economic reality.

Under § 7, as amended, a merger can be invalidated if, and only if, "the effect [1486] of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, [*24] or to tend to create a monopoly." No question is raised here as to the tendency of the present merger to create a monopoly. Our sole concern is with the question whether the effect of the merger may be substantially to lessen competition.

---

[1] "[A] merger had to be functionally viewed, in the context of its particular industry." Brown Shoe Co. v. [United States, 370 U.S., at 321-322]. "Both the Federal Trade Commission and the courts have, in the light of Congress' expressed intent, recognized the relevance and importance of economic data that places any given merger under consideration within an industry framework almost inevitably unique in every case." [Id., at 322, n. 38].

[2] "Taken as a whole, the legislative history illuminates congressional concern with protection of competition, not competitors, and its desire to restrain mergers only to the extent that such combinations may tend to lessen competition." Brown Shoe Co. v. [United States, supra, at 320].

[3] This is the first case to reach the Court under the 1950 amendment to § 7 that involves a merger between firms engaged solely in retail food distribution. Kaysen & Turner, Antitrust Policy 40 (1959), have discussed this industry in the following terms:

"As a guess, we can say that the most important distributive trades, especially the food trades, are structurally unconcentrated in the metropolitan areas . . . . The significance of structural oligopoly in terms of policy is far different in [these trades] than in manufacturing and mining. . . . The traditional view that the local market industries are essentially competitive in character is probably correct . . . ."

The principal danger against which the 1950 amendment was addressed was the erosion of competition through the cumulative centripetal effect of acquisitions by large corporations, none of which by itself might be sufficient to constitute a violation of the Sherman Act. Congress' immediate fear was that of large corporations buying out small companies. [4] A major aspect of that fear was the perceived trend toward absentee ownership of local business. [5] Another, more generalized, congressional [*284] purpose revealed by the legislative history was to protect small businessmen and to stem the rising tide of concentration in the economy. [6] These goals, Congress thought, could be achieved by "arresting mergers at a time when the trend to a lessening of competition in a line of commerce was still in its incipiency." Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, supra, at 317.

The concept of arresting restraints of trade in their "incipiency" was not [*26] an innovation of the 1950 amendment. The notion of incipiency was part of the report on the original Clayton Act by the Senate Committee on the Judiciary in 1914, and it was reiterated in the [566] Senate report in 1950. [7] That notion was not left [1487] undefined. [*285] The legislative history leaves no doubt that the applicable standard for measuring the substantiality of the effect of a merger on competition was that of a "reasonable probability" of lessening competition. [8] The standard was thus more stringent than that of a "mere possibility" on the one hand and more

---

[4] See, e. g., H. R. Rep. No. 1191, 81st Cong., 1st Sess., p. 3, quoted in footnote 11 of the Court's opinion. Mention of the retail food industry is notably absent in the legislative history. Although it is clear that, in addition to the already highly oligopolized industries, Congress was also concerned with trends toward concentration in industries that were still highly fragmented, this case involves not even a remote approach to the "monster concentration" of which Representative Celler spoke in introducing the 1950 amendment in the House of Representatives. 95 Cong. Rec. 11486.

[5] [*25] See, e. g., Hearing before Subcommittee No. 3 of the House Committee on the Judiciary on H. R. 2734, 81st Cong., 1st Sess., p. 12 (remarks of Senator Kefauver).

[6] Much of the fuel for the congressional debates on concentration in the American economy was derived from a contemporary study by the Federal Trade Commission on corporate acquisitions between 1940 and 1947. See Report of the Federal Trade Commission on the Merger Movement: A Summary Report (1948). A critical study of the FTC report, published while the 1950 amendment was pending in Congress, concluded that the effect of the recent merger movement on concentration had been slight. Lintner & Butters, Effect of Mergers on Industrial Concentration, 1940-1947, 32 Rev. of Econ. & Statistics 30 (1950). Two economists for the Federal Trade Commission later acquiesced in that conclusion. Blair & Houghton, The Lintner-Butters Analysis of the Effect of Mergers on Industrial Concentration, 1940-1947, 33 Rev. of Econ. & Statistics 63, 67, n. 12 (1951).

[7] See S. Rep. No. 698, 63d Cong., 2d Sess., p. 1:

"Broadly stated, the bill, in its treatment of unlawful restraints and monopolies, seeks to prohibit and make unlawful certain trade practices which, as a rule, singly and in themselves, are not covered by the act of July 2, 1890 [the Sherman Act], or other existing antitrust acts, and thus, by making these practices illegal, to arrest the creation of trusts, conspiracies, and monopolies in their incipiency and before consummation."

See also S. Rep. No. 1775, 81st Cong., 2d Sess., pp. 4-5: "The intent here, as in other parts of the Clayton Act, is to cope with monopolistic tendencies in their incipiency and well before they have attained such effects as would justify a Sherman Act proceeding;" id., p. 6: "The concept of reasonable probability conveyed by these words ['may be'] is a necessary element in any statute which seeks to arrest restraints of trade in their incipiency and before they develop into full-fledged restraints violative of the Sherman Act."

Thus, the Senate Reports on both the original Clayton Act and the 1950 amendment carefully delineate the "incipiency" with which the provisions are concerned as that of monopolization or classical restraints of trade under the Sherman Act. The notion that "incipiency" might be expanded to refer also to a lessening of competition first appeared in Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 317.

[8] [*27] The Senate Report is clear on this point:

"The use of these words ['may be substantially to lessen competition'] means that the bill, if enacted, would not apply to the mere possibility but only to the reasonable probability of the prescribed [sic] effect . . . . The words 'may be' have been in section 7 of the Clayton Act since 1914. The concept of reasonable probability conveyed by these words is a necessary element in any lenient than that of a "certainty" on the other. [9] I cannot agree that the retail grocery [*286] business in Los Angeles is in an incipient or any other stage of a trend toward a lessening of competition, or that the effective level of concentration in the industry has increased. Moreover, there is no indication that the present merger, or the trend in this industry as a whole, augurs any danger whatsoever for the small businessman. The Court has substituted bare conjecture for the statutory standard of a reasonable probability that competition may be lessened. [10]

The [567] Court rests its conclusion on the "crucial point" that, in the 11-year period between 1950 and 1961, the number of single-store grocery firms in Los Angeles decreased 29% from 5,365 to 3,818. [11] Such a decline [*287] should, of course, [1488] be no more [*29] than a fact calling for further investigation of the competitive trend in the industry. For the Court, however, that decline is made the end, not the beginning, of the analysis. In the counting-of-heads game played today by the Court, the reduction in the number of single-store operators becomes a yardstick for automatic disposition of cases under § 7.

[30] I believe that even the most superficial analysis of the record makes plain the fallacy of the Court's syllogism that competition is necessarily reduced when the bare number of competitors has declined. [12] In any statute which seeks to arrest restraints of trade in their incipiency and before they develop into full-fledged restraints violative of the Sherman Act." S. Rep. No. 1775, 81st Cong., 2d Sess., p. 6.

---

See also 96 Cong. Rec. 16453 (remarks of Senator Kefauver). Cf. 51 Cong. Rec. 14463-14464 (amendment of Senator Reed).

[9] Although Congress eschewed exclusively mathematical tests for assessing the impact of a merger, it offered several generalizations indicative of the sort of merger that might be proscribed, e. g.: Whether the merger eliminated an enterprise that had been a substantial factor in competition; whether the increased size of the acquiring corporation threatened to give it a decisive advantage over competitors; whether an undue number of competing enterprises had been eliminated. H. R. Rep. No. 1191, 81st Cong., 1st Sess., p. 8. See Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 321, n. 36. Only the first of these generalizations is arguably applicable to the present merger; the market-extension aspects of the merger, as well as the evidence of Shopping Bag's declining profit margin and weak price competition, suggest that any conclusion under this test would be equivocal. See infra, pp. 295-296; 298, n. 30. Senator Kefauver stated explicitly on the Senate floor that the mere elimination of competition between the merged firms would not make the acquisition illegal; rather, "the merger would have to have the effect of lessening competition generally." 96 Cong. Rec. 16456.

[10] [*28] Eighteen years ago, a dictum in Federal Trade Commission v. Morton Salt Co., 334 U.S. 37, 46, adverted to a "reasonable possibility" as the appropriate standard for the corresponding language ("may be to substantially lessen competition") under § 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. § 14. The dictum provoked a sharp dissent in that case, id., at 55, 57-58, and the Court subsequently withdrew it, Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 337 U.S. 293, only to reinstate it again today. This issue, which appeared settled at the time of the 1950 amendment, provoked an acrimonious exchange during the Senate hearings. Hearings before a Subcommittee of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary on H. R. 2734, 81st Cong., 1st & 2d Sess., pp. 160-168.

[11] The decline continued at approximately the same rate to 1963, the last year for which data are available, when there were 3,590 single-store grocery firms in the area. The record contains no breakdown of the figures on single-store concerns. In an extensive study of the retail grocery industry on a national scale, the Federal Trade Commission found that between 1939 and 1954 the total number of grocery stores in the United States declined by 109,000, or 28%. The entire decrease was suffered by stores with annual gross sales of less than $ 50,000. During the same period, the number of stores in all higher sales brackets increased. The Commission noted that the census figures, from which its data were taken, included an undetermined number of grocery firms liquidating after 1948 that merely closed their grocery operations and continued their remaining lines of business, such as nongrocery retailing, food wholesaling, food manufacturing, etc. Staff Report to the Federal Trade Commission, Economic Inquiry Into Food Marketing, Part I, Concentration and Integration in Retailing 48, 54 (1960).

[12] The generalized case against the Court's numerical approach is stated in Bok, Section 7 of the Clayton Act and the Merging of Law and Economics, 74 Harv. L. Rev. 226, 312, n. 261:

"There are serious problems connected with the use of this yardstick. First, not every firm contributes equally to competition. In particular, there may be a fringe of firms too small to be able to affect price and production policies in the market as a whole. Alternatively, certain firms may be marginal in the sense that their costs and financial situations preclude them from having much, if any, impact on market conditions; indeed they may be able to remain in operation only because excessive profits are meaningful sense, the structure of the Los Angeles grocery market remains unthreatened by concentration. Local competition is vigorous to a fault, not only among chain stores [*288] themselves but also between chain stores and single-store operators. The continuing population explosion of the Los Angeles area, which has outrun the expansion plans of even the largest chains, offers a surfeit of business opportunity for stores of all sizes. [13] Affiliated [568] with cooperatives that give the smallest store the buying strength of its largest competitor, new stores have taken full advantage of the remarkable ease of entry into the market. And, most important of all, the record simply cries out that the numerical decline in the number of single-store owners is the result of transcending social and technological changes that positively preclude the inference that competition has suffered because of the attrition of competitors.

Section 7 was never intended by Congress for use by the Court as a charter to roll back the supermarket revolution. Yet the Court's opinion is hardly more than a requiem for the so-called "Mom and Pop" grocery stores -- the bakery and butcher shops, the vegetable and fish markets -- that are now economically and technologically obsolete in many parts of the country. No action by this Court can resurrect the old single-line Los Angeles food stores that have been run over by the automobile or obliterated by the freeway. The transformation of American society since the Second World War has not completely shelved these specialty stores, but it has relegated them to a much less central role in our food economy. Today's [*32] dominant enterprise in food [1489] retailing is the supermarket. Accessible to the housewife's automobile from a wide radius, it houses under a single roof [*289] the entire food requirements of the family. Only through the sort of reactionary philosophy that this Court long ago rejected in the Due Process Clause area can the Court read into the legislative history of § 7 its attempt to make the automobile stand still, to mold the food economy of today into the market pattern of another era. [14] being earned by the stronger firms. An [exit] of companies of this sort would have much less significance than a counting of corporate heads would imply."

---

[13] [*31] Between 1953 and 1961, the population of the Los Angeles metropolitan area increased from 4,300,000 to 6,800,000 and the average population per grocery store increased from 695 to 1,439. Additional opportunity for new stores in the area results from the geographical division of the city into numerous suburbs, as well as from the lack of specific store loyalty among new residents.

[14] Cf. Ferguson v. Skrupa, 372 U.S. 726. In criticizing a recent decision of the Federal Trade Commission, one commentator has stated, in terms applicable mutatis mutandis to the Court's decision in the present case:

". . . Any child alive in the 1950's could see that a restructuring of food retailing was then going on. The business was adjusting itself, through market mechanisms that included merger, to vast and profound changes in the American way of life. There is not a word in the FTC majority opinion that relates changes in the number of stores and chains to the proliferation of suburbs, the construction of shopping centers, and the final triumph of the supermarket -- an innovation in retailing that has since spread across the Western world. The most important single cause of these changes was the automobile revolution . . . which not even the FTC can stop.

. . .

". . . Plenty of living American men and women remember an era when virtually all groceries were sold through very small stores none of which had 'any significant market share.' Was this era the high point of competition in food retailing? Many little towns had, in fact, only one place where a given kind of food could be bought. In a typical city neighborhood, defined by the range of a housewife's willingness to lug groceries home on foot, there might be three or four relaxed 'competitors.' If she did not like the price or quality offered by them, she could take her black-string market bag, board a trolley car, and try her luck among the relaxed 'competitors' of some other neighborhood." Ways, A New "Worst" in Antitrust, Fortune, April 1966, pp. 111-112.

In the present case, the District Court found that in the era preceding the rise of the supermarkets, "the area from which the typical store drew most of its customers was limited to a block or two in any direction and if a particular grocery store happened to be the only one in its immediate neighborhood, it had a virtual monopoly of local trade." Thus, the Court's aphorism in U.S. v. Philadelphia Nat. Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 363 -- that "competition is likely to be greatest when there are many sellers, none of which has any significant market share" -- is peculiarly maladroit in the historic context of the retail food industry. See also Hampe & Wittenberg, The Lifeline of America: Development of the Food Industry 313-372 (1964); Lebhar, Chain Stores in America 1859-1962, pp. 348-390 (1963).

[33] [*290] This [569] is not a case in which the record is equivocal with regard to the status of competition in the industry in question. To the contrary, the record offers abundant evidence of the dramatic history of growth and prosperity of the retail food business in Los Angeles.

The District Court's finding of fact that there was no increase in market concentration before or after the merger is amply supported by the evidence if concentration is gauged by any measure other than that of a census of the number of competing units. Between 1948 and 1958, the market share of Safeway, the leading grocery chain in Los Angeles, declined from 14% to 8%. The combined market shares of the top two chains declined from 21% to 14% over the same period; for the period 1952-1958, the combined shares of the three, four, and five largest firms also declined. It is true that between 1948 and 1958, the combined shares of the top 20 firms in the market increased from 44% to 57%. The crucial fact here, however, is that seven of these top 20 firms in 1958 were not even in existence as chains in 1948. Because of the substantial turnover in the membership of the top 20 firms, the increase [*34] in market share of the top 20 as a group is hardly a reliable indicator [1490] of any tendency toward market concentration. [15]

[*291] In addition, statistics in the record for the period 1953-1962 strongly suggest that the retail grocery industry in Los Angeles is less concentrated today than it was a decade ago. During this [*35] period, the number of chain store firms in the area rose from 96 to 150, or 56%. That increase occurred overwhelmingly among chains of the very smallest size, those composed of two or three grocery stores. Between 1953 and 1962, the number of such "chains" increased from 56 to 104, or 86%. Although chains of 10 or more stores increased from 10 to 24 during the period, seven of these 24 chains were not even in existence as chains in Los Angeles in 1953.[16]

Yet even these dramatic statistics do not fully reveal the dynamism and vitality of competition in the retail grocery business in Los Angeles during the period. The record shows that at various times during [*36] the period 1953-1962, no less than 269 separate chains were doing business in Los Angeles, of which 208 were two- or three-store chains. During that period, therefore, 173 new chains made their appearance in the market area, and 119 chains went out of existence as [570] chain stores.[17] The vast majority of this market turbulence represented turnover in chains of two or three stores; 143 of the 173 new chains born during the period were chains of this [*292] size. Testimony in the record shows that, almost without exception, these new chains were the outgrowth of successful one-store operations.[18] There is no indication that comparable turmoil did not equally permeate single-store

---

[15] See Joskow, Structural Indicia: Rank-Shift Analysis as a Supplement to Concentration Ratios, VI Antitrust Bulletin 9 (1961). In addition, the overall market share of the top 20 firms in fact showed a slight decline between 1958 and 1960. The statement in the concurring opinion in the present case, that "All but two of the top 10 firms in 1958 were very probably also among the top 10 in 1948 or had acquired a firm that was among the top 10," is based on conjecture. The record demonstrates only that the top four firms in 1948 were among the top 10 firms in 1958; the record neither identifies the remaining six of the top 10 firms in 1948 nor charts their subsequent history.

[16] For a similar study of the retail food industry at the national level, see Lebhar, Small Chain Virility a Bar to Monopoly, Chain Store Age, Jan. 1962, p. E20. See also Gould, The Relation of Sales Growth to the Size of Multi-Store Food Retailers 6 (1966) (inverse correlation found between sales growth and size of chains with four or more stores).

[17] Of these latter 119 chains, 66 went out of business altogether, 28 reduced their operations to a single store, and 25 were eliminated as separate competitors as a result of acquisitions by other chains.

[18] [*37] On the basis of these facts, one witness concluded:

"The apparent willingness and ability of grocers to expand and create new chain entities at the staggering rate of more than 17 a year, and the growth potential of new chains, precludes in my opinion the possibility that the retail grocery business in Los Angeles will become either monopolistic or oligopolistic in the foreseeable future. It must be remembered that in 1953, only 10 chains with as many as 10 stores each were operating in the area. These chains are recognized as being among the best managed, most successful and most aggressive supermarket operators in the country. They themselves have engaged in expansion programs of significant proportions since 1953. Yet, 10 years later, instead of having swept aside all competition and being left alone to compete among themselves, these same 10 chains are now faced with the necessity of competing against no less than 14 new chains of 10 or more stores each, a significantly greater number of smaller chains and a host of successful single store operators, of whom many are affiliated with powerful voluntary chains or other cooperative groups. . . . The growth operations in the [1491] area.[19] In fashioning its per se rule, based on the net arithmetical decline in the number of single-store operators, the Court completely disregards the obvious procreative vigor of competition in the market as reflected in the turbulent history of entry and exit of competing small chains.

To support its conclusion the Court invokes three sets of data regarding absorption of smaller firms by merger with larger firms. In each of the acquisitions detailed [*293] in the Appendix, Tables 1 and 2 of the Court's opinion, the acquired units were grocery chains. Not one of these acquisitions was of a firm operating only a single store.[20] The Court cannot have it both ways. It is only among single-store operators that the decline in the unit number of competitors, so heavily relied upon by the Court, has taken place. Yet the tables reproduced in the Appendix show not a trace of merger activity involving the acquisition of single-store operators. And the number of chains in the area has in fact shown a substantial net increase during the period, in spite of the fact that some of the chains [*39] have been absorbed by larger firms. How then can the Court rely on these acquisitions as evidence of a tendency toward market concentration in the area?

The Court's use of market-acquisition data for the period 1954-1961,[21] prepared by the Government from [571] the work sheets of a defense witness, is also questionable for another reason. During that period, Food Giant, Alpha Beta, Fox, and Mayfair were ranked 7th, 8th, 9th, and 10th, respectively, on the basis of the percentage of their sales in Los Angeles in 1958, so that the impact of their acquisitions, made in the face of competition by the top six chains, is considerably blunted. The remarkable feature disclosed by [*40] these data is that none of the top six firms in the area expanded by acquisition during the period.[22]

[*294] The Court's reliance on the fact that nine of the top 20 chains acquired 120 stores in the Los Angeles area between 1949 and 1958 does not withstand analysis in light of the complete record. Forty percent of these acquisitions, representing 48 stores with gross sales of more than $ 71,000,000, were made by Fox, Yor-Way, and McDaniels, which ranked 9th, 11th, and 20th, respectively, according to 1958 sales in the market. Each [*41] of these firms subsequently went into bankruptcy as a result of overexpansion, undercapitalization, or inadequate managerial experience. This substantial postacquisition demise of relatively large chains hardly comports with the Court's tacit portrayal of the inexorable march of the market toward oligopoly.

Further, the table relied on by the Court to sustain its view that acquisitions have continued in the Los Angeles area at a rapid rate in the three-year period following this merger indiscriminately lumps together horizontal and [1492] market-extension mergers.[23] Only 29 stores, representing 13 acquisitions, were acquired in horizontal mergers, and the record reveals that nine of these 29 stores were acquired in the course of dispositions in bankruptcy. Such acquisitions of failing companies, of course, are immune from the Clayton Act. International Shoe Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 280 U.S. 291, 301-303. Thus, at a time when the number of single-store concerns was well over 3,500, horizontal mergers over a three-year period between going concerns achieved at of independents into chains and of small chains into larger ones . . . demonstrates convincingly that small concerns don't have to remain small in Los Angeles."

---

[19] [*38] Data for 1960, the only year for which such figures are available in the record, reveal a comparable agitation of entry and exit among operators of single stores. Although there was a net loss of 132 single-outlet stores in 1960, 128 new single-outlet stores opened during the year.

[20] As to Table 1 in the Appendix of the Court's opinion, this fact is obvious on the face of the table. As to Table 2 in the Appendix, examination of the record discloses that each of the nine acquisitions listed as involving a single store represented purchases of single stores from chains ranging in size from two to 49 stores.

[21] See Table 1 in the Appendix of the Court's opinion.

[22] Table 1 in the Appendix of the Court's opinion is somewhat misleading in that it weights the data from which it is drawn in favor of the acquisition by grocery chains of other chains consisting of relatively larger numbers of store units. The complete data of the witness included several acquisitions of one- and two-store concerns, together with the disposition of one ten-store chain to various individuals.

[23] See Table 2 in the Appendix of the Court's opinion. This table, not a part of the record, was submitted by the Government in its reply brief, filed on the eve of oral argument.

most only the de minimis level of 10 acquisitions involving 20 stores. It cannot [*42] seriously be maintained that [*295] the effect of the negligible market share foreclosed by these horizontal mergers may be substantially to lessen competition within the meaning of § 7. Cf. Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 329.

The great majority of the post-merger acquisitions detailed in Table 2 in the Appendix of the Court's opinion, ante, were of the market-extension type, involving neither the elimination of direct competitors in the Los Angeles market nor increased concentration of the market. There are substantial economic distinctions between such market-extension mergers and classical horizontal mergers. [24] Whatever the wisdom or logic of the Court's assumed [572] arithmetic proportion between the number of single-store concerns and the level of competition within the [*43] meaning of § 7 as applied to horizontal mergers, it is simply not possible to make the further assumption that the mere occurrence of market-extension mergers is adequate to prove a tendency of the local market toward decreased competition.

Moreover, contrary to the assumption on which the Court proceeds, the record establishes that the present merger itself has substantial, even predominant, market-extension overtones. The District Court found that the Von's stores were located in the southern and western portions of [*44] the Los Angeles metropolitan area, and that the Shopping Bag stores were located in the northern and eastern portions. In each of the areas in which Von's and Shopping Bag stores competed directly, there were also at least six other chain stores and several [*296] smaller stores competing for the patronage of customers. On the basis of a "housewife's 10-minute driving time" test conducted for the Justice Department by a government witness, it was shown that slightly more than half of the Von's and Shopping Bag stores were not in a position to compete at all with one another in the market.[25] Even among those stores which competed at least partially with one another, the overlap in sales represented only approximately 25% of the combined sales of the two chains in the overall Los Angeles area. The present merger was thus three parts market-extension and only one part horizontal, but the Court nowhere recognizes this market-extension aspect that exists within the local market itself. The actual market share foreclosed by the elimination of Shopping Bag as an independent competitor was thus slightly less than 1% of the total grocery store sales in the [1493] area. The [*45] share of the market preempted by the present merger was therefore practically identical with the 0.77% market foreclosure accepted as "quite insubstantial" by the Court in Tampa Electric Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 331-333.

The irony of this case is that the Court invokes its sweeping new construction of § 7 to the detriment of a merger between two relatively successful, local, largely family-owned concerns, each of which had less than 5% of the local market and neither of which had any prior history of growth by acquisition. [26] In [573] a sense, the defendants [*297] are being punished for the sin of aggressive competition. [27] The Court is inaccurate in its suggestions, ante,

---

[24] See Foremost Dairies, Inc., 60 F. T. C. 944; Beatrice Foods Co., F. T. C. Docket No. 6653 (April 26, 1965); National Tea Co., F. T. C. Docket No. 7453 (March 4, 1966). Cf. United States v. Penn-Olin Chemical Co., 378 U.S. 158; Procter & Gamble Co., F. T. C. Docket No. 6901 (Nov. 26, 1963), rev'd 358 F.2d 74 (C. A. 6th Cir.); Turner, Conglomerate Mergers and Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 78 Harv. L. Rev. 1313.

[25] Evidence introduced by the defendants indicated that the overlap between the Von's and Shopping Bag stores was significantly smaller than that proposed by the government witness.

[26] At the time of the merger in 1960, Von's operated 28 retail grocery stores in the Los Angeles area. It commenced operation as a partnership of the Von der Ahe family in 1932, during the depression, with a food concession in a small grocery store. Shopping Bag operated 36 stores in Los Angeles at the time of the merger; it commenced operation as a partnership in a small grocery store in 1930. So far as the record reveals, the competitive behavior of these firms was impeccable throughout their expansion, which took place solely by internal growth. In discussing the success of comparable firms vis-a-vis the Sherman Act, Judge Learned Hand stated, "The Act does not mean to condemn the resultant of those very forces which it is its prime object to foster: finis opus coronat. The successful competitor, having been urged to compete, must not be turned upon when he wins." United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F.2d 416, 430.

[27] [*47] Nor is it altogether easy to escape the feeling that it is not so much this merger, but Los Angeles itself, that is being invalidated here. Cf. Adelman, Antitrust Problems: The Antimerger Act, 1950-60, 51 Am. Econ. Rev. 236, 243 (May 1961): "In pp. 277-278, that the merger makes these firms more "powerful" than they were before, and that Shopping [*46] Bag was itself a "powerful" competitor at the time of the merger. There is simply no evidence in the record, and the Court makes no attempt to demonstrate, that the increment in market share obtained by the combined stores can be equated with an increase in the market power of the combined firm. And, although Shopping Bag was not a "failing company" within the meaning of our decision in International Shoe Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 280 U.S. 291, 301-303, the record at [*298] least casts strong doubt on the contention that it was a powerful competitor. [28] The District Court found that Shopping Bag suffered from a lack of qualified executive personnel [29] [1494] and that, although overall sales of the chain had been increasing, its earnings and profits were declining. [30] Further, the merger clearly comported with "the desirability of retaining 'local control' over industry" that the Court noted in Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 315-316.

With regard to the "plight" of the small businessman, the record is unequivocal that his competitive position is strong and secure in the Los Angeles retail grocery industry. The most aggressive competitors against the larger retail chains are frequently the operators of single stores. [31] The vitality of these independents is directly [*299] attributable to [574] the recent and spectacular growth in California of three large cooperative buying organizations. Membership in these groups is unrestricted; [*49] through them, single-store operators are able to purchase their goods at prices competitive with those offered by suppliers even to the largest chains. [32] The rise the antitrust dictionary, 'powerful' has no necessary connection with monopoly power or market control or even market share. It means . . . one four-letter word: size." Los Angeles is, to be sure, a big place. Although Shopping Bag's share of the Los Angeles market was only 4.2%, its sales in 1958 totaled $ 84,000,000. Compare the Court's statement in Tampa Electric Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 333-334:

---

"It is urged that the present contract pre-empts competition to the extent of purchases worth perhaps $ 128,000,000, and that this 'is, of course, not insignificant or insubstantial.' While $ 128,000,000 is a considerable sum of money, even in these days, the dollar volume, by itself, is not the test . . . ."

[28] This is not a "merger between two small companies to enable the combination to compete more effectively with larger corporations dominating the relevant market," Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 319; cf. House Hearing, supra, n. 5, pp. 40-41; Senate Hearings, supra, n. 10, pp. 6, 51; 95 Cong. Rec. 11486, 11488, 11506; 96 Cong. Rec. 16436; H. R. Rep. No. 1191, 81st Cong., 1st Sess., pp. 6-8; S. Rep. No. 1775, 81st Cong., 2d Sess., p. 4. However, the Court today in a gratuitous dictum, ante, p. 277, undercuts even that principle by confining it to cases in which competitors are obliged to merge to save themselves from destruction by a larger and more powerful competitor.

[29] [*48] Mr. Hayden, the president and principal stockholder of Shopping Bag, was advanced in years and was concerned over the absence of a strong management staff that could take over his responsibilities.

[30] Von's was a considerably more successful competitor than Shopping Bag. Shopping Bag's net income as a percentage of total sales declined from 1.6% in 1957 to 0.9% in 1959, and its net profit as a percentage of total assets declined from 6.6% to 3.2%. During the same period, the net income of Von's increased from 2.1% to 2.3%, and its net profits declined from 12.7% to 10.8%.

[31] One single-store operator, located adjacent to one supermarket and within a mile of two others, testified, "I have often been asked if I could compete successfully against this sort of competition. My answer is and always has been that the question is not whether I can compete against them, but whether they can compete against me."

Another single-store operator testified, "Competition in the grocery business is on a store-by-store basis and any aggressive and able operator like myself can out-compete the store of any of the chains because of personalized service, better labor relations, and being in personal charge of the store and seeing that it is run properly."

A third single-store operator testified, "The chains in this area are good operators, but when they grow too large, they are actually easier to compete with from an independent's viewpoint. If I had a choice, I would rather operate a store near a chain unit than near another independent."

[32] [*50] See generally Staff Report to the Federal Trade Commission, Economic Inquiry Into Food Marketing, Part I, Concentration and Integration in Retailing, c. VI, "Retailer-owned Cooperative Food Wholesalers"; c. VII, "Wholesaler-sponsored Voluntary Retail Groups" (1960). The annual sales of Certified Grocers of California, Ltd., a retailer-owned cooperative whose members do business principally in the Los Angeles area, rose fourfold from $ 87,000,000 in 1948 to $ 345,000,000 in 1962,

of these cooperative organizations has introduced a significant new source of countervailing power against the market power of the chain stores, without in any way sacrificing the advantages of independent operation. In the face of [*300] the substantial assistance available to independents through membership in such cooperatives, the Court's implicit equation between the market power and the market share resulting from the present merger seems completely invalid.

Moreover, it is clear that there are no substantial barriers [*51] to market entry. The record contains references to numerous highly successful instances of entry with modest initial investments. Many of the stores opened by new entrants were obtained through the disposition of unwanted outlets by chains; frequently the new competitors were themselves chain-store executives who had resigned to enter the market on their own. Enhancing [1495] free access to the market is the absence of any such restrictive factors as patented technology, trade secrets, or substantial product differentiation.

Numerous other factors attest to the pugnacious level of grocery competition in Los Angeles, all of them silently ignored by the Court in its emphasis solely on the declining number of single-store competitors in the market. Three thousand five hundred and ninety single-store firms is a lot of grocery stores. The large number of separate competitors and the frequent price battles between them belie any suggestion that price competition in the area is even remotely threatened by a descent to the sort of consciously interdependent pricing that is characteristic of a market turning the corner toward oligopoly. The birth [575] of dynamic new competitive [*52] forces -- discount food houses and food departments in department stores, bantams and superettes, deli-liquor stores and drive-in dairies -- promises unremitting competition in the future. In the more than four years following the merger, the District Court found not a shred of evidence that competition had been in any way impaired by the merger. Industry witnesses testified overwhelmingly [*301] to the same effect. By any realistic criterion, retail food competition in Los Angeles is today more intense than ever.

The harsh standard now applied by the Court to horizontal mergers may prejudice irrevocably the already difficult choice faced by numerous successful small and medium-sized businessmen in the myriad smaller markets where the effect of today's decision will be felt, whether to expand by buying or by building additional facilities. [33] And by foreclosing future sale as one attractive avenue of eventual market exit, the Court's decision may over the long run deter new market entry and tend to stifle the very competition it seeks to foster.

[53] In a single sentence and an omnibus footnote at the close of its opinion, the Court pronounces its work consistent with the line of our decisions under § 7 since the passage of the 1950 amendment. The sole consistency that I can find is that in litigation under § 7, the Government always wins. The only precedent that is even within sight of today's holding is U.S. v. Philadelphia Nat. Bank, 374 U.S. 321. In that case, in the interest of practical judicial administration, the Court proposed a simplified test of merger illegality: "We think that a merger which produces a firm controlling an undue percentage share of the relevant market, and results in a significant increase in the concentration of firms in that market, is so inherently likely to lessen competition substantially that it must be enjoined in the absence of evidence clearly showing that the merger is not likely to have such anticompetitive effects." U.S. v. Philadelphia Nat. Bank, supra, at 363. [34] The merger [*302] between Von's and Shopping and the volume of its purchases exceeded that of all but the largest national chains doing business in Los Angeles. Most of the leading chains in the area began development in association with Certified Grocers, called the "mother" of the industry. In some cases the cooperatives were able to offer even lower prices to their members than competing chains could obtain. The District Court found that the cooperatives also provided their members with assistance in merchandising, advertising, promotions, inventory control, and even the financing of new entry.

---

[33] See Bok, Section 7 of the Clayton Act and the Merging of Law and Economics, 74 Harv. L. Rev. 226, 302-303 (1960).

[34] In a footnote, the Court emphasized the corollary principle that, "if concentration is already great, the importance of preventing even slight increases in concentration and so preserving the possibility of eventual deconcentration is correspondingly great." U.S. v. Philadelphia Nat. Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 365, n. 42. That corollary, of course, has no application here, since the Los Angeles retail grocery market can in no sense be characterized as one in which "concentration is already great." Compare United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 377 U.S. 271; United States v. Continental Can Co., 378 U.S. 441. The importance of a trend toward concentration in the particular industry in question was recognized in Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370

[1496] Bag produced a firm with 1.4% of the grocery stores and 7.5% of grocery sales in Los Angeles, and resulted in an [*54] increase of 1.1% in the market share enjoyed by the two largest firms in the market and 3.3% in the market share of the six largest firms. The former two figures are hardly the "undue percentage" of the market, nor are the latter [576] two figures the "significant increase" in concentration, that would make this merger inherently suspect under the standard of Philadelphia Nat. Bank. Instead, the circumstances of the present merger fall far outside the simplified test established by that case for precisely the sort of merger here involved. [35]

[56] [*303] The tests of illegality under § 7 were "intended to be similar to those which the courts have applied in interpreting the same language as used in other sections of the Clayton Act." H. R. Rep. No. 1191, 81st Cong., 1st Sess., p. 8. In Philadelphia Nat. Bank, the Court was at pains to demonstrate that its conclusion was consistent with cases under § 3 of the Clayton Act. See U.S. v. Philadelphia Nat. Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 365-366. The Court disdains any such effort today. Untroubled by the language of § 7, its legislative history, and the cases construing either that section or any other provision of the antitrust laws, the Court grounds its conclusion solely on the impressionistic assertion that the Los Angeles retail food industry is becoming "concentrated" because the number of single-store concerns has declined.

[*304] The emotional impact of a merger between the third and sixth largest competitors in a given market, however fragmented, is understandable, but that impact cannot substitute for the analysis of the effect of the merger on competition that Congress required by the 1950 amendment. Nothing in the present record indicates [*57] that there is more than an ephemeral possibility that the effect of this merger may be substantially to lessen competition. Section 7 clearly takes "reasonable probability" as its standard. That standard has not been met here, and I would therefore affirm the judgment of the District Court.

References

Annotation References:

Construction, by Supreme Court of the United States, of 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18), dealing with acquisition by one corporation of stock of another. 14 L ed 2d 784.

Right of one corporation to acquire stock in another as affected by the anti-trust acts. 74 L ed 431.

U.S. 294, 332. See also Pillsbury Mills, Inc., 50 F. T. C. 555, 572-573; United States v. Bethlehem Steel Corp., 168 F.Supp. 576, 604-607 (D. C. S. D. N. Y.); U.S. Atty. Gen. Nat. Comm. to Study the Antitrust Laws, Report 124 (1955).

[35] [*55] As a result of the merger, the market share of the two largest firms increased from 14.4% to 15.5%, and the share of the six largest firms increased from 32.1% to 35.4%. The merger involved in Philadelphia Nat. Bank produced a single firm controlling 30% of the market, and resulted in an increase from 44% to 59% in the market share of the two largest firms in the market. The Court's opinion is remarkable for its failure to support its conclusion by reference to even a single piece of economic theory. I shall not dwell here on the barometers of competition that have been suggested by the commentators. But it seems important to note that the present merger falls either outside, or at the very fringe, of the various mechanical tests that have been proposed. See, e. g., Kaysen & Turner, Antitrust Policy 133-136 (1959) (horizontal merger with direct competitor is prima facie unlawful where acquiring company accounts for 20% or more of the market, or where merging companies together constitute 20% or more of the market; acquisitions producing less than 20% market control unlawful only where special circumstances are present, such as serious barriers to entry or substantial influence on prices by the acquired company); Stigler, Mergers and Preventive Antitrust Policy, 104 U. Pa. L. Rev. 176, 179-182 (1955) (acquisition unlawful if it produces a combined market share of 20% or more; acquisition permitted if the combined share is less than 5-10%); Bok, Section 7 of the Clayton Act and the Merging of Law and Economics, 74 Harv. L. Rev. 226, 308-329 (1960) (no merger by the dominant firm in an industry if its market share is increased by more than 2-3%; no merger by other large firms in the industry where the combined market shares of the two-to-eight largest firms after the merger are increased by 7-8% or more over the shares that existed at any time during the preceding 5-10 years; no merger where acquired firm has 5% market share or more). See also Markham, Merger Policy Under the New Section 7: A Six-Year Appraisal, 43 Va. L. Rev. 489, 521-522 (1957). The 40% rule promoted by the concurring opinion in the present case seems no more than an ad hoc endeavor to rationalize the holding of the Court.

FTC v. Brown Shoe Co.

Supreme Court of the United States

April 25, 1966, Argued ; June 6, 1966, Decided

No. 118

Reporter

384 U.S. 316 *; 86 S. Ct. 1501 ; 16 L. Ed. 2d 587 ; 1966 U.S. LEXIS 2948 *; 1966 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,785

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION v. BROWN SHOE CO., INC.

Prior History: [1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE EIGHTH CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 339 F.2d 45, reversed.

Core Terms

shoes, unfair, franchise, dealers, retail, customers, franchise agreement, practices, declare, Federal Trade Commission Act, competitors, lines

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > US Federal Trade Commission Actions > General Overview

Banking Law > Federal Acts > Federal Trade Commission Act > Unfair Competition & Practices

Antitrust & Trade Law > Federal Trade Commission Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Federal Trade Commission Actions > Remedial Powers > General Overview

HN1[] Public Enforcement, US Federal Trade Commission Actions

Section 5(a)(6) of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 45 (a)(6), empowers and directs the Federal Trade Commission to prevent persons, partnerships, or corporations from using unfair methods of competition in commerce and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce. 15 U.S.C.S. § 45(a)(6).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > Federal Trade Commission Act

Banking Law > Federal Acts > Federal Trade Commission Act > Unfair Competition & Practices

Antitrust & Trade Law > Federal Trade Commission Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Federal Trade Commission Act > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN2[] Trade Practices & Unfair Competition, Federal Trade Commission Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 45(a)(1).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Federal Trade Commission Actions > Remedial Powers > General Overview

HN3[] US Federal Trade Commission Actions, Remedial Powers

The Federal Trade Commission (Commission) has broad powers to declare trade practices unfair. This broad power of the Commission is particularly well established with regard to trade practices which conflict with the basic policies of the Sherman and Clayton Acts even though such practices may not actually violate these laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Federal Trade Commission Actions > Remedial Powers > Federal Trade Commission Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Federal Trade Commission Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Federal Trade Commission Act > Remedies > Injunctions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > US Federal Trade Commission Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Federal Trade Commission Actions > Remedial Powers > General Overview

HN4[] Remedial Powers, Federal Trade Commission Act

The Federal Trade Commission has power under § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15, U.S.C.S. § 45, to arrest trade restraints in their incipiency without proof that they amount to an outright violation of § 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 14, or other provisions of the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Federal Trade Commission Actions > Remedial Powers > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > Restraints of Trade

HN5[] US Federal Trade Commission Actions, Remedial Powers

The Federal Trade Commission acted well within its authority in declaring a franchise program unfair whether it was completely full blown or not.

Lawyers' Edition Display

Summary

The Federal Trade Commission enjoined a large manufacturer of shoes from entering into franchise contracts with retail shoestore operators which obligated the manufacturer to give to the dealer, but not to the manufacturer's other customers, valuable services, and in return required the dealers not to purchase conflicting lines of shoes from the manufacturer's competitors. On review, the Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit set aside the Commission's order on the ground that the manufacturer's practice was not an unfair method of competition in violation of 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. (339 F2d 45.)

On certiorari, the Supreme Court of the United States reversed. In an opinion by Black, J., expressing the unanimous view of the Court, it was held that the Commission acted well within its authority in declaring the manufacturer's franchise program unfair.

Headnotes

PRACTICES §56 > order of FTC -- review of findings -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[1][] [1]

A general conclusionary statement--made by a Court of Appeals in setting aside an order of the Federal Trade Commission which enjoined, as an unfair method of competition, a shoe manufacturer's entering into franchise contracts with retail shoestores requiring them not to purchase conflicting lines of shoes from competitors--that there was a complete failure to prove an exclusive dealing agreement which might be held violative of 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 USC 45) cannot be treated by the Supreme Court of the United States as intended to be a rejection of the Commission's findings of fact, where neither this statement nor any other statement in the opinion of the Court of Appeals indicates a purpose to hold that the evidence failed to show an exclusive dealing agreement as alleged in the complaint of the Commission, and moreover the crucial facts were admitted in the manufacturer's formal answer to the complaint.

PRACTICES §48 > unfair methods of competition -- powers of FTC -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[2][] [2]

Subject to judicial review, the Federal Trade Commission has power to find a shoe manufacturer guilty of an unfair method of competition in violation of 5(a)(6) of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 USC 45 (a)(6)) upon a record showing that the manufacturer admitted to have entered into exclusive franchise agreements with a substantial number of retail shoestore operators and that the trial examiner found that the manufacturer's franchise program effectively foreclosed its competitors from selling to a substantial number of retail shoe dealers.

PRACTICES §44 > powers of FTC -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[3][] [3]

The Federal Trade Commission has broad powers to declare trade practices unfair, including trade practices which conflict with the basic policies of the Sherman (15 USC 1 et seq.) and Clayton (15 USC 14) Acts, even though such practices may not actually violate these laws.

MONOPOLIES §54 > PRACTICES §48 > exclusive franchise agreements -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[4][] [4]

A shoe manufacturer's program of making exclusive franchise agreements with retail shoestore operators requiring them not to purchase conflicting lines of shoes from the manufacturer's competitors, while conflicting with the central policy of both 1 of the Sherman Act (15 USC 1) and 3 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 14) against contracts which take away freedom of purchasers to buy in an open market, can be enjoined under 3 of the Clayton Act only upon proof by the government that the effect of the program may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly; however, no such proof is necessary where the government proceeds to enjoin this program as an unfair method of competition under 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 USC 45).

PRACTICES §44 > powers of FTC -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[5][] [5]

Under 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 USC 45), dealing with unfair methods of competition and unfair trade practices, the Federal Trade Commission has power to arrest trade restraints in their incipiency without proof that they amount to an outright violation of 3 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 14) or other provisions of the antitrust laws.

PRACTICES §43 > Trade Commission Act -- function -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[6][] [6]

The Federal Trade Commission Act is designed to supplement and bolster the Sherman Act and the Clayton Act by stopping incipient acts and practices which when full blown would violate those acts, as well as to condemn as "unfair methods of competition" existing violations of them.

PRACTICES §48 > unfair methods of competition -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[7][] [7]

The Federal Trade Commission acts well within its authority in declaring that a shoe manufacturer's franchise program is an unfair method of competition violating 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 USC 45), where under that program the manufacturer entered into franchise contracts with retail shoestore operators which obligated the manufacturer to give to the dealer, but not to the manufacturer's other customers, valuable services, and in return require the dealers not to purchase conflicting lines of shoes from the manufacturer's competitors.

Syllabus

The FTC filed a complaint against respondent, the country's second largest shoe manufacturer, under § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, charging unfair trade practices by the use of a "Franchise Stores Program" through which respondent sells its shoes to more than 650 retail stores. In return for special benefits from Brown Shoe Company, the franchise stores agree to buy Brown shoe lines and to refrain from buying competitive lines. After hearings the FTC concluded that the restrictive contract program was an unfair method of competition and ordered respondent to cease and desist from its use. The Court of Appeals set aside the FTC's order, holding that there was "complete failure to prove an exclusive dealing agreement" violative of § 5 of the Act. Held: The FTC acted well within its authority under the Act in declaring respondent's franchise program an unfair trade practice. Pp. 319-322.

(a) On this record the FTC has power to find [*2] such anticompetitive practice unfair. Federal Trade Comm'n v. Gratz, 253 U.S. 421, relied on by the Court of Appeals, has been rejected by this Court. Pp. 320-321.

(b) The franchise program conflicts with the policy of § 1 of the Sherman Act and § 3 of the Clayton Act against contracts which remove freedom of purchasers to buy in an open market. P. 321.

(c) Under § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act the FTC has power to arrest restraints of trade in their incipiency without proof that they are outright violations of § 3 of the Clayton Act or other antitrust provisions. F. T. C. v. Motion Picture Adv. Co., 344 U.S. 392, 394-395. Pp. 321-322.

Counsel: Ralph S. Spritzer argued the cause for petitioner. On the brief were Solicitor General Marshall, Assistant Attorney General Turner, Robert S. Rifkind, Howard E. Shapiro, Milton J. Grossman, James McI. Henderson, Thomas F. Howder and Gerald J. Thain.

Robert H. McRoberts argued the cause for respondent. With him on the brief were Gaylord C. Burke and Edwin S. Taylor.

Judges: Warren, Black, Douglas, Clark, Harlan, Brennan, Stewart, White, Fortas

Opinion by: BLACK

Opinion

[*317] [589] [*3] [1502] MR. JUSTICE BLACK delivered the opinion of the Court.

Section 5 (a)(6) of the Federal Trade Commission Act HN1[] empowers and directs the Commission "to prevent persons, partnerships, or corporations . . . from using unfair methods of competition in commerce and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce." [1] [*6] Proceeding under the authority of § 5, the Federal Trade Commission filed a complaint against the Brown Shoe Co., Inc., one of the world's largest manufacturers of shoes with total sales of $ 236,946,078 for the year ending October 31, 1957. The unfair practices charged against Brown revolve around the "Brown Franchise Stores' Program" through which Brown sells its shoes to some 650 retail stores. The complaint alleged that under this plan Brown, a corporation engaged in interstate commerce, had "entered into contracts or franchises with a substantial number of its independent retail shoe store operator customers which require said customers to restrict their purchases of shoes for resale to the Brown lines and which prohibit them from purchasing, stocking or reselling shoes manufactured by competitors of Brown." Brown's customers who entered into these restrictive [*4] franchise agreements, so the complaint charged, were given in return special treatment and valuable benefits which were not granted to Brown's customers who [*318] did not enter into the agreements. In its answer to the Commission's complaint Brown admitted that approximately 259 of its retail customers had executed written franchise agreements and that over 400 others had entered into its franchise program without execution of the franchise agreement. Also in its answer Brown attached as an exhibit an unexecuted copy of the "Franchise Agreement" which, when executed by Brown's representative and a retail shoe dealer, obligates Brown to give to the dealer but not to other customers certain valuable services, including among

[1] 38 Stat. 719, as amended, 15 U. S. C. § 45 (a)(6) (1964 ed.).

Section 5 (a)(1) of the Federal Trade Commission Act provides that HN2[] "Unfair methods of competition in commerce, and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce, are declared unlawful."

others architectural plans, costly merchandising records, services of a Brown field representative, and a right to participate in group insurance at lower rates than the dealer could obtain individually. In return, according to the franchise agreement set out in Brown's answer, the retailer must make this promise:

"In return I will:

"1. Concentrate my business within the grades and price lines of shoes [1503] representing Brown Shoe Company Franchises [*5] of the Brown [590] Division and will have no lines conflicting with Brown Division Brands of the Brown Shoe Company."

Brown's answer further admitted that the operators of "such Brown Franchise Stores in individually varying degrees accept the benefits and perform the obligations contained in such franchise agreements or implicit in such Program," and that Brown refuses to grant these benefits "to dealers who are dropped or voluntarily withdraw from the Brown Franchise Program . . . ." The foregoing admissions of Brown as to the existence and operation of the franchise program were buttressed by many separate detailed fact findings of a trial examiner, one of which findings was that the franchise program [*319] effectively foreclosed Brown's competitors from selling to a substantial number of retail shoe dealers. [2] Based on these findings and on Brown's admissions the Commission concluded that the restrictive contract program was an unfair method of competition within the meaning of § 5 and ordered Brown to cease and desist from its use.

On review the Court of Appeals set aside the Commission's order. In doing so the court said:

"By passage of the Federal Trade Commission Act, particularly § 5 thereof, we do not believe that Congress meant to prohibit or limit sales programs such as Brown Shoe [*7] engaged in in this case. . . . The custom of giving free service to those who will buy their shoes is widespread, and we cannot agree with the Commission that it is an unfair method of competition in commerce." 339 F.2d 45, 56.

LEdHN[1][] [1]LEdHN[2][] [2]In addition the Court of Appeals held that there was a "complete failure to prove an exclusive dealing agreement which might be held violative of § 5 of the Act." We are asked to treat this general conclusion as though the court intended it to be a rejection of the Commission's findings of fact. We cannot do this. Neither this statement of the court nor any other statement in the [*320] opinion indicates a purpose to hold that the evidence failed to show an agreement between Brown and more than 650 franchised dealers which restrained the dealers from buying competing lines of shoes from Brown's competitors. Indeed, in view of the crucial admissions in Brown's formal answer to the complaint we cannot attribute to the Court of Appeals a purpose to set aside the Commission's findings [*8] that these restrictive agreements existed and that Brown and most of the franchised dealers in varying degrees lived up to their obligations. Thus the question we have for decision is whether the Federal Trade Commission can declare it to be an unfair practice for Brown, the second largest manufacturer of shoes in the Nation, to pay a valuable consideration to hundreds of retail [591] shoe purchasers in order to secure a contractual promise from them that they will deal primarily with Brown and will not purchase conflicting lines of shoes from Brown's competitors. We hold that the Commission has power to find, on the record here, such an anticompetitive [1504] practice unfair, subject of course to judicial review. See Atlantic Rfg. Co. v. FTC, 381 U.S. 357, 367.

[2] In its opinion the Commission found that the services provided by Brown in its franchise program were the "prime motivation" for dealers to join and remain in the program; that the program resulted in franchised stores purchasing 75% of their total shoe requirements from Brown -- the remainder being for the most part shoes which were not "conflicting" lines, as provided by the agreement; that the effect of the plan was to foreclose retail outlets to Brown's competitors, particularly small manufacturers; and that enforcement of the plan was effected by teams of field men who called upon the shoe stores, urged the elimination of other manufacturers' conflicting lines and reported deviations to Brown who then cancelled under a provision of the agreement. Compare Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294.

LEdHN[3][] [3]LEdHN[4][] [4]LEdHN[5][] [5]LEdHN[6][] [6]LEdHN[7][] [7]In holding [*9] that the Federal Trade Commission lacked the power to declare Brown's program to be unfair the Court of Appeals was much influenced by and quoted at length from this Court's opinion in Federal Trade Comm'n v. Gratz, 253 U.S. 421.That case, decided shortly after the Federal Trade Commission Act was passed, construed the Act over a strong dissent by Mr. Justice Brandeis as giving the Commission very little power to declare any trade practice unfair. Later cases of this Court, however, have rejected the Gratz view and it is now recognized in line with the dissent of Mr. Justice Brandeis in Gratz that HN3[] the Commission has [*321] broad powers to declare trade practices unfair. [3] This broad power of the Commission is particularly well established with regard to trade practices which conflict with the basic policies of the Sherman and Clayton Acts even though such practices may not actually violate these laws. [4] The record in this case shows beyond doubt that Brown, the country's second largest manufacturer of shoes, has a program, which requires shoe retailers, unless faithless to their contractual obligations with Brown, substantially to limit their trade [*10] with Brown's competitors. This program obviously conflicts with the central policy of both § 1 of the Sherman Act and § 3 of the Clayton Act against contracts which take away freedom of purchasers to buy in an open market. [5] [*12] Brown nevertheless contends that the Commission had no power to declare the franchise program unfair without proof that its effect "may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly" [*322] which of course would have to be proved if the Government were proceeding against Brown under § 3 of the Clayton Act rather than § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. We reject the argument that proof of this § 3 element must be made for as we [592] pointed out above our cases [6] hold that HN4[] the Commission has power under § 5 to arrest trade restraints in their incipiency without proof that they amount to an outright violation of § 3 of the Clayton Act or other provisions of the antitrust laws. This power of the Commission was emphatically stated in F. T. C. v. Motion Picture Adv. Co., 344 U.S. 392, at pp. 394-395:

"It is . . . clear that the Federal Trade Commission Act was designed to supplement and bolster [*11] the Sherman [1505] Act and the Clayton Act . . . to stop in their incipiency acts and practices which, when full blown, would violate those Acts . . . as well as to condemn as 'unfair methods of competition' existing violations of them."

We hold that the HN5[] Commission acted well within its authority in declaring the Brown franchise program unfair whether it was completely full blown or not.

Reversed.

References

Annotation References:

---

[3] See, e. g., Federal Trade Comm'n v. R. F. Keppel & Bro., Inc., 291 U.S. 304, 310; Trade Comm'n v. Cement Institute, 333 U.S. 683, 693; Atlantic Rfg. Co. v. FTC, 381 U.S. 357, 367.

[4] See, e. g., Fashion Guild v. Trade Comm'n, 312 U.S. 457, 463; Atlantic Rfg. Co. v. FTC, 381 U.S. 357, 369.

[5] Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 26 Stat. 209, 15 U. S. C. § 1 (1964 ed.), declares illegal "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations . . . ."

Section 3 of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 731, 15 U. S. C. § 14 (1964 ed.), provides in relevant part:

"It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce . . . to . . . make a . . . contract for sale of goods . . . for . . . resale within the United States . . . on the condition, agreement, or understanding that the . . . purchaser thereof shall not use or deal in the goods . . . of a competitor or competitors of the . . . seller, where the effect of such . . . condition, agreement, or understanding may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce."

[6] See cases cited in note 4, supra.

Validity and construction of statute creating Federal Trade Commission. 6 ALR 366, 11 ALR 797, 18 ALR 549, 30 ALR 1129, 32 ALR 792, 51 ALR 331, 68 ALR 847, 79 ALR 1200.

What constitutes false, misleading, or deceptive advertising or promotional practices subject to action by Federal Trade Commission. 65 ALR2d 225.

Validity, under 3 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 14), of contract by purchaser of goods to take his entire requirements from the seller. 5 L ed 2d 1105.

Contract by one party to sell his entire output to or to take his entire requirements of a commodity from the other party as contrary to public policy or anti-monopoly statute . 83 ALR 1173.

Right to enjoin business competitor from illegal acts or practices. 90 ALR2d 7.

Florida E. C. R. Co. v. United States

United States District Court for the Middle District of Florida, Jacksonville Division

June 8, 1966

No. 64-64-Civ. J.

Reporter

259 F. Supp. 993 *; 1966 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8224 **

FLORIDA EAST COAST RAILWAY COMPANY, a corporation, et al., Plaintiffs, v. UNITED STATES of America and Interstate Commerce Commission, et al., Defendants merger, railroads, carriers, conditions, transportation, anti trust law, monopoly, employees, antitrust, public interest, Railway, consolidation, facilities, interstate commerce, elimination, benefits, provisions, approve, national transportation policy, present case, preserving, regulation, transit service, district court, instant case, Sherman Act, geographic, terminals, healthy, plenary

Core Terms

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Restraints of Trade

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Regulated Industry Mergers

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > US Interstate Commerce Commission

HN1[] Interstate Commerce, Restraints of Trade

Although 49 U.S.C.S. § 5(11) of the Interstate Commerce Act, does not authorize the Interstate Commerce Commission (ICC) to "ignore" the antitrust laws, there can be little doubt that the ICC is not to measure proposals for acquisitions by the standards of the antitrust laws. The problem is one of accommodation of 49 U.S.C.S. § 5(2) and the antitrust legislation. The ICC remains obligated to estimate the scope and appraise the effects of the curtailment of competition which will result from the proposed acquisition and consider them along with the advantages of improved service and other matters in the public interest to determine whether the acquisition will assist in effectuating the over-all transportation policy.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Rail Transportation > Rates & Tariffs

Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Federal Powers

HN2[] Railroads & Rail Transportation, Rates & Tariffs

A rail carrier cannot change rates without approval from the Interstate Commerce Commission (ICC), and the ICC can on its own initiative investigate and alter rates after proper findings. 49 U.S.C.S. § 15.

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > Standards of Review > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > US Interstate Commerce Commission

Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > General Overview

HN3[] Judicial Review, Standards of Review

The Interstate Commerce Commission is the expert in the field of transportation. And its judgment is entitled to great deference because of its familiarity with the conditions in the industry which it regulates.

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > Reviewability > Questions of Law

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > US Interstate Commerce Commission

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > Standards of Review > Substantial Evidence

Civil Procedure > ... > Standards of Review > Substantial Evidence > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Restraints of Trade

HN4[] Reviewability, Questions of Law

On review, the court must find substantial evidence in the record to support the reasoning of the Interstate Commerce Commission (ICC) in clear and precise terms, and determine whether the ICC has correctly applied the proper standards in accord with that familiarity with the problems in the transportation industry which Congress anticipated the ICC would achieve from its particularized experience.

Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Federal Powers

HN5[] Interstate Commerce, Federal Powers

See Interstate Commerce Act, 49 U.S.C.S. § 5(2)(c).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Transportation > Railroads

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Federal Powers

HN6[] Transportation, Railroads

Section 5(11) of the Interstate Commerce Act, 49 U.S.C.S. § 5(11), exempts participants in an approved merger from the operation of the antitrust laws and of all other restraints, limitations, and prohibitions of law, Federal, State, or municipal, insofar as may be necessary to enable them to carry into effect the transactions so approved and to hold, maintain, and operate any properties and exercise any control or franchises acquired through such transaction.

Transportation Law > Commercial Vehicles > Traffic Regulation

HN7[] Commercial Vehicles, Traffic Regulation

See 49 U.S.C.S. § 1, historical note.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Transportation > Railroads

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Rail Transportation > Consolidation & Merger

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Restraints of Trade

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Rail Transportation > Rates & Tariffs

HN8[] Transportation, Railroads

The Reed-Bulwinkle Act explicitly exempts rate agreements and rate bureau accords approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission from the antitrust laws. 49 U.S.C.S. § 5b.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Restraints of Trade

Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Federal Powers

HN9[] Interstate Commerce, Restraints of Trade

The Interstate Commerce Commission (ICC) should be empowered to approve transactions which otherwise would be violative of the antitrust laws, if it is convinced that the public interest would thus be best served.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Restraints of Trade

Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Federal Powers

HN10[] Interstate Commerce, Restraints of Trade

Whether the proposed unification would be consistent with the public interest involves consideration not only of the competition that would be eliminated, but also of the competition that would remain, and the advantages which would result from the unification.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Restraints of Trade

Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Federal Powers

HN11[] Interstate Commerce, Restraints of Trade

In passing upon a proposed consolidation, the Interstate Commerce Commission (ICC) is required to give weight to the following considerations, among others: the effect of the proposed transaction upon adequate transportation service to the public; the total fixed charges resulting from the proposed transaction; and the interest of the carrier employees affected. The foregoing provisions supply the general statutory standards for guiding the ICC's judgment, and within their broad limits, its authority is exclusive and plenary.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Restraints of Trade

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Federal Powers

Administrative Law > Agency Adjudication > Review of Initial Decisions

HN12[] Interstate Commerce, Restraints of Trade

The Interstate Commerce Commission (ICC) is to weigh, as an administrative matter, the effect of the merger on competitors, and on the general competitive situation in the industry.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Restraints of Trade

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Abuse of Discretion

Civil Procedure > ... > Standards of Review > Substantial Evidence > General Overview

HN13[] Interstate Commerce, Restraints of Trade

The wisdom and experience of the Interstate Commerce Commission (ICC), not of the courts, must determine whether the proposed consolidation is consistent with the public interest. If the ICC did not exceed the statutory limits within which Congress confined its discretion, and its findings are adequate and supported by evidence, it is not the function of the court to upset its order.

Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Federal Powers

HN14[] Interstate Commerce, Federal Powers

49 U.S.C.S. § 5(3) of the Interstate Commerce Act permits the Interstate Commerce Commission (ICC) "to the extent" it deems appropriate to designate a person who is not actually a carrier as a carrier for the purpose of the Act, if such person is authorized to acquire control of an actual carrier in a transaction approved under § 5(2). Under § 5(3), it is clear that the ICC need not designate every person obtaining such control as a carrier.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Rail Transportation > Consolidation & Merger

Transportation Law > Rail Transportation > Personnel > General Overview

Transportation Law > Commercial Vehicles > Traffic Regulation

Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Federal Powers

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Restraints of Trade

HN15[] Railroads & Rail Transportation, Consolidation & Merger

No merger may be approved that does not provide for a fair and equitable arrangement to protect the interests of the railroad employees affected. Moreover, Congress provided that the Interstate Commerce Commission (ICC) must insure that during the period of four years from the effective date of such order, such transaction will not result in employees of the carrier or carriers being in a worse position with respect to their employment.

Counsel: [1] Robert W. Ginnane, Gen. Counsel, Interstate Commerce Commission, Washington, District of Columbia, Edward F. Boardman, U.S. Atty., Jacksonville, Florida, Lionel Kestenbaum, Antitrust Division, Dept. of Justice, Washington, District of Columbia, for defendants.

Prime F. Osborn, Phil C. Beverly, Jacksonville, Florida, Dennis G. Lyons, Arnold & Porter, Washington, District of Columbia, William H. Maness, Jacksonville, Florida, Richard A. Hollander, Richmond, Virginia, John S. Cox, Jacksonville, Florida, Walter H. Brown, Jr., New York, New York, for Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. and Seaboard Air Line R. Co.

Edwin H. Burgess, Baltimore, Maryland, for Mercantile-Safe Deposit and Trust Co.

Fred H. Kent, Jacksonville, Florida, A. Alvis Layne, Washington, District of Columbia, for Florida East Coast R. Co.

Wm. Graham Claytor, William D. McLean, John K. Mallory, Jr., Washington, District of Columbia, H. P. Osborne, Jr., Jacksonville, Florida, for Southern Railway System.

William G. Mahoney, Washington, District of Columbia, William H. Adams, III, Jacksonville, Florida, for Railway Labor Executives' Assn.

William Reece Smith, Jr., City Atty., Carlton, Fields, Ward, Emmanuel, Smith & Cutler, [2] Tampa, Florida, for City of Tampa.

MacFarlane, Ferguson, Allison & Kelly, Tampa, Florida, for petitioner Port Sutton Inc.

Judges: Rives, Circuit Judge, and Simpson and McRae, District Judges.

Opinion by: RIVES

Opinion

[*995] RIVES, Circuit Judge:

Our first opinion [1] [3] in this case was vacated and remanded by the Supreme Court and we have now considered the Interstate Commerce Commission's action anew. The Interstate Commerce Commission, [2] by an order entered in December 1963, authorized the merger of the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company [3] with the Seaboard Air Line Railroad Company, [4] subject to certain routing and gateway conditions and employee protective

---

1 Florida East Coast Ry. Co. v. United States, D.C., 242 F. Supp. 14, rev., Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. United States, 382 U.S. 154, 86 S. Ct. 277, 15 L. Ed. 2d 223 (1965).

2 Hereafter Commission or ICC.

3 Hereafter Atlantic or ACL.

conditions. Related acquisition of control by Seaboard of carriers subsidiary to or affiliated with Atlantic, most prominently including the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company, was also authorized. 320 I.C.C. 122 (1963). Florida East Coast Railway Company [5] brought suit in this Court asking that the ICC's order be enjoined, annulled and set aside.

A three-judge district court was convened pursuant to 28 U.S.C.A. § 2325. The Attorney General, representing the United States, opposed the merger and therefore the United States was realigned as a party-plaintiff. The Railway Labor Executives' Association, the Southern Railway Company, [6] and its affiliated companies in the Southern Railway System intervened as parties-plaintiff. At the hearing on remand the City of Tampa also intervened as a party-plaintiff. In addition to defendant ICC, the Mercantile-Safe Deposit and Trust Company, the Seaboard and the Atlantic, all intervened as parties-defendant. In this posture issue was joined.

After submission of briefs and full argument, in our first opinion we set [*996] aside the ICC's order and remanded the case to the [4] Commission for further proceedings. Our reasoning was two-fold. First, we determined that the ICC's analysis of the merger was defective because it failed to apply proper product and geographic market criteria as explicated in Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962). Second, we held that the Commission erred in not specifically determining whether the merger violated section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.A. § 18 (1964 ed.). The Supreme Court vacated our judgment and remanded "for a full review of the administrative order and findings pursuant to the standards" they had previously "enunciated." 382 U.S. 154, 86 S. Ct. 277, 15 L. Ed. 2d 223 (1965). [7]

[5] This case presents a head-on-collision between the antitrust laws and the Interstate Commerce Act. It is incumbent upon us to seek to rationalize the statutes involved here and make of them, to the extent that what Congress has written will permit, a harmonious functional body of law. Section 5(2) directs the Commission to approve voluntary rail mergers which it finds to be "consistent with the public interest," but reserves to the Commission power to approve the merger subject to such "terms and conditions" as it may find to be "just and reasonable." Section 5(2)(c) of the Interstate Commerce Act, which sets forth certain factors which must be considered by the ICC in passing upon any proposed railroad merger or affiliation, does not expressly require that the Commission consider the antitrust laws as a factor in the public interest. However, since section 5(11) exempts carriers and individuals participating in an approved merger from the antitrust laws, the ICC has long been required

---

[4] Hereafter Seaboard or SAL.

[5] Hereafter FEC.

[6] Hereafter Southern.

[7] In explaining the proper scope of review, the Supreme Court said:

"We believe that the District Court erred in its interpretation of the directions this Court set forth in McLean Trucking Co. v. United States, 321 U.S. 67 [64 S. Ct. 370, 88 L. Ed. 544] (1945), and Minneapolis & St. Louis R. Co. v. United States, 361 U.S. 173 [80 S. Ct. 229, 4 L. Ed. 2d 223] (1959). As we said in Minneapolis at 186 [80 S. Ct. at 237]:

> HN1[] "'Although § 5(11), does not authorize the Commission to "ignore" the antitrust laws, McLean Trucking Co. v. United States, 321 U.S. 67, 80 [64 S. Ct. 370, 88 L. Ed. 544], there can be "little doubt that the Commission is not to measure proposals for [acquisitions] by the standards of the antitrust laws." 321 U.S., at 85-86 [64 S. Ct. at 379]. The problem is one of accommodation of § 5(2) and the antitrust legislation. The Commission remains obligated to "estimate the scope and appraise the effects of the curtailment of competition which will result from the proposed [acquisition] and consider them along with the advantages of improved service [and other matters in the public interest] to determine whether the [acquisition] will assist in effectuating the over-all transportation policy." 321 U.S. at 87 [64 S. Ct. at 381].'" (382 U.S. at 156, 86 S. Ct. at 278.)

to give weight to the antitrust policy of the Nation in approving mergers. [8] It is the accommodation [*997] of the national transportation policy with the national antitrust policy with which [6] this litigation is chiefly concerned.

[7] The records and briefs in this case read far more like an antitrust case or FTC review proceeding than like an action to set aside an order of the ICC. This aspect can only be indicative of one fact - at some point the orderly administrative process envisioned by Congress has been derailed. All too much time has been consumed in showing a violation of the antitrust laws and too little time devoted to assessing the "public interest" as expressed in the Interstate Commerce Act. Review of ICC proceedings, while in many respects quite similar in appearance to FTC review, is substantially different.

It is not without significance that Congress placed review of proceedings of the FTC in the Courts of Appeals and those of the ICC in a three-judge district court. Each has three judges, but there the comparison ends. The FTC is to administer a group of statutes whose meaning and content are primarily entrusted to the judiciary for rational extrapolation. There was no intention on the part of Congress that the FTC should become a plenary body, reshaping American industry to a model which the Commission in its own wisdom decided best served the Nation. On the contrary, the FTC was to [8] prevent "unfair competition" in widely divergent industries, preserving the existing price system so fundamental to the American way of life.

Review of such proceedings could easily be fitted into the normal appellate process. A one-hour argument coupled with briefs sufficient to phrase out the issues with which courts of appeals routinely deal, allow a circuit court to give a carefully studied review.

The ICC stands in a uniquely different posture. Congress has vested the Commission with "exclusive and plenary" powers in the regulation of rail mergers. No one who reviews the history and language of the Interstate Commerce Acts can doubt that Congress has entrusted the ICC with plenary power to regulate almost every aspect of the rail industry and, for that matter, almost every aspect of the transportation industry save the airlines. [9] [9] The ICC is in many ways a super-management, often making managerial-type decisions affecting the transportation industry, with but one overriding duty - to protect the public interest. [10] HN2[] A rail carrier cannot change rates without ICC approval, and the ICC can on its own initiative investigate and alter rates after proper findings. [11]

---

[8] Georgia v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 324 U.S. 439, at 456, 65 S. Ct. 716, 89 L. Ed. 1051 (1945); McLean Trucking Co. v. United States, 321 U.S. 67 at 79-80, 87, 64 S. Ct. 370, 88 L. Ed. 544 (1944). The Commission in the instant case clearly recognized this duty when it said (320 I.C.C. at 128-29, 206):

> "However, we may not disregard the policy underlying the antitrust laws even though carriers participating in a merger are relieved by section 5(11) from the operation of such laws. Minneapolis & St. Louis R. Co. v. United States, supra [361 U.S. 173, 80 S. Ct. 229]. Our primary task is to reconcile the objective of 'preventing injurious waste and in securing more efficient transportation service,' New York Central Securities Corp. v. United States, supra, [287 U.S. 12], at 26, [53 S. Ct. 45, 77 L. Ed. 138], with the general concern of Congress 'that tendencies toward concentration in industry are to be curbed in their incipiency, particularly when those tendencies are being accelerated through giant steps striding across a hundred cities at a time.' Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 346, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962). In short, our 'problem is one of accommodation of section 5(2) and the antitrust legislation.' Minneapolis & St. Louis R. Co. v. United States, supra, [361 U.S.] at 186, 80 S. Ct. at 237
>
> * * *
>
> "Although section 5 transactions are immunized from the operation of the antitrust laws, the policy reflected by such laws is nevertheless an important element in determining public interest. As we have stated, we are confronted here with the task of accommodating section 5 and the antitrust laws, and in so doing, we must reconcile the numerous conflicting considerations that are inevitably involved."

[9] 49 U.S.C.A. § 1 et seq.

[10] In United States v. Pierce Auto Lines, 327 U.S. 515 at 536, 66 S. Ct. 687, at 698, 90 L. Ed. 821 (1946), the Supreme Court said: "We think the court [below] misconceived * * * its own function. It is not true, as the opinion stated, that '* * * the courts must in a litigated case, be the arbiters of the paramount public interest.' This is rather the business of the Commission, made

[*998] New services cannot be provided nor old ones discontinued [10] without Commission approval. [12] No new railroad may enter the field without ICC permission; the Commission may compel an existing railroad to extend its line and provide new service. [13] We have, in effect, a government-protected monopoly for those already providing service. In the area of rail mergers and consolidations, Congress' intention to let the ICC plan the structure of the national transportation industry has long been apparent. [14] World War I with the government takeover of the rail system had left this Nation's primary transportation system in a state of dilapidation. War needs had diverted critical materials to other areas of the economy and needed rail repairs had been neglected.

Congress, therefore, determined that the [11] health and vitality of the Nation's railroads could best be restored by merging them into fewer, more efficient systems than then existed. Congress realized that it was functionally not the appropriate body to study and determine which railroads should be combined. It had neither the time nor the facilities. The Transportation Act of 1920 thus for the first time conferred upon the ICC "exclusive and plenary" power over rail mergers. The Commission was directed to "prepare and adopt a [master] plan for the consolidation of the railway properties of the continental United States into a limited number of systems". [15] However, the Commission was not given power to force consolidation. It had to come voluntarily. Only mergers which were in harmony with the master plan could be approved. Approved mergers were exempt from the antitrust laws.

It was apparent almost from the outset that the master plan approach had set an impossible pattern. The Transportation Act of 1940 took a more realistic [12] view. [16] It abandoned the idea of a master plan, as such, and adopted a more flexible approach which authorized the ICC to approve carrier-initiated voluntary plans for mergers if those plans conformed to a public interest test prescribed by the Act. A requirement relating to the preservation of competition contained in the 1920 Act was deleted by the 1940 Act. The initiative to formulate plans for consolidation or merger thus passed from the Commission to the rail carriers; but exclusive and plenary power to grant permission for such mergers subject to such conditions as might be prescribed was left with the ICC. [17]

[13] Unlike review of FTC proceedings, review of ICC approved mergers involves the review of intricate, expert plenary judgments in a highly specialized area of our economy that has long been subject to direct precise regulation. [18] The ICC [*999] was authorized to make ad hoc determinations within the interstices of individualized such by the very terms of the statute. The function of the reviewing court is much more restricted." See United States v. Chicago Heights Trucking Co., 310 U.S. 344, 60 S. Ct. 931, 84 L. Ed. 1243 (1940). This was the role in which the ICC saw itself cast in the instant case (320 I.C.C. at 206): "In fact, as guardian of the public interest, it is our responsibility to determine whether the proposed merger will, as required by the national transportation policy, contribute to the development and maintenance of a public transportation system which will meet the needs of our Nation's commerce and or national defense."

---

[11] 49 U.S.C.A. § 15.

[12] 49 U.S.C.A. §§ 1, 13a.

[13] 49 U.S.C.A. § 1.

[14] For a brief background note on the present section 5, see appendix to Justice Frankfurter's opinion in St. Joe Paper Co. v. Atlantic Coast Line Co., 347 U.S. 298, at 315, 74 S. Ct. 574, at 584, 98 L. Ed. 710 (1954).

[15] 41 Stat. 481.

[16] 54 Stat. 905.

[17] While there were many who desired to give the Commission power to compel mergers, Congress declined the invitation to confer that power. St. Joe Paper Co. v. Atlantic Coast Line Co., 347 U.S. 298, 74 S. Ct. 574, 98 L. Ed. 710 (1954); Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employees v. United States, 221 F. Supp. 19 (E.D.Mich. 1963), aff'd, 375 U.S. 216, 84 S. Ct. 341, 11 L. Ed. 2d 270.

[18] In Ayrshire Corp. v. United States, 335 U.S. 573 at 592-593, 69 S. Ct. 278, at 288, 93 L. Ed. 243 (1949), the Supreme Court stated:

records. It is appropriate that initial review should be in a district court, where each case may be set for hearing individually with as much time as necessary allotted. This case is a good illustration. Our last hearings took a full day, and could not have been compressed into the short time usually provided for appellate arguments.

[14] This Court must not shirk its duty by providing only a perfunctory review. But we are equally bound to keep our review within the limits intended by the statutory scheme of this particular agency. [19] [15] We would be no friend of the administrative process if we were to leave the Commission at large, free to roam from one arbitrary or capricious act to another. If judicial review is to have a basis for functioning, the ICC must do more than announce its ultimate conclusions by way of unrationalized fiat. [20] HN4[] The Commission must explain its reasoning in clear and precise terms. It must support its application of that reasoning to the instant case by substantial evidence in the record on which we must base our review. [21] [16] It is for us to determine whether the ICC has correctly applied the proper standards, and thus exhibited that familiarity with the problems in the transportation industry which Congress anticipated the ICC [*1000] would achieve from its particularized experience. [22]

> "Rate structures are not designed merely to favor the revenues of producers and carriers. The Commission has the consumer interest to safeguard as well. And when it undertakes to rationalize the interests of the three, great complexities are often encountered. The economics of the bituminous coal industry have baffled even experts. We would depart from our competence and our limited function in this field if we undertook to accommodate the factors of transportation conditions, distance and competition differently than the Commission has done in this case. That is a task peculiarly for it. In fashioning what the Commission called a differentially related and finely balanced rate structure for this coal, there is no place for dogma or rigid formulae. The problem calls for an expert, informed judgment on a multitude of facts. The result is that the administrative rate-maker is left with broad discretion as long as no statutory requirement is overlooked. Yet that is, of course, precisely the nature of the administrative process in this field. See Board of Trade v. United States, 314 U.S. 534, 548 [62 S. Ct. 366, 372, 373, 86 L. Ed. 432]; [State of] New York v. United States, 331 U.S. 284, 347-349 [67 S. Ct. 1207, 1240, 1241, 91 L. Ed. 1492]."

See ICC v. Parker Motor Freight, 326 U.S. 60, 65 S. Ct. 1490, 89 L. Ed. 2051 (1945); American Trucking Association v. United States, 344 U.S. 298, 73 S. Ct. 307, 97 L. Ed. 337 (1952); Hudson & Manhattan R. Co. v. United States, 313 U.S. 98, 61 S. Ct. 884, 85 L. Ed. 1212 (1941); Carolina Scenic Stages v. United States, 202 F. Supp. 919 (W.D.S.C.1962); Penn. R. Co.-Merger-N.Y. Central Ry. Co., 327 I.C.C. 475 (1966), at 505. In East Texas Motor Freight Lines Inc. v. Frozen Food Express, 351 U.S. 49 at 54, 76 S. Ct. 574, at 577, 100 L. Ed. 917 (1956), the Supreme Court said: HN3[] "The Commission is the expert in the field of transportation. And its judgment is entitled to great deference because of its familiarity with the conditions in the industry which it regulates."

[19] See, for example, comment in dissenting opinion of Justice Frankfurter, Stark v. Wickard, 321 U.S. 288 at 311, 64 S. Ct. 559, 88 L. Ed. 733 (1944).

[20] Florida v. United States, 282 U.S. 194, at 208, 211-212, 215, 51 S. Ct. 119, 75 L. Ed. 291 (1930); S.E.C. v. Chenery Corp., 318 U.S. 80, 63 S. Ct. 454, 87 L. Ed. 626 (1943); Cf. Brooks v. N.L.R.B., 348 U.S. 96, 75 S. Ct. 176, 99 L. Ed. 125 (1954); United States v. American Sheet & Tin Plate Co., 301 U.S. 402, 57 S. Ct. 804, 81 L. Ed. 1186 (1937); Morehouse v. United States, 194 F. Supp. 940 (D.Neb.1961), aff'd, 368 U.S. 348, 82 S. Ct. 385, 7 L. Ed. 2d 342; Ayrshire Corp. v. United States, 335 U.S. 573, 69 S. Ct. 278, 93 L. Ed. 243 (1949); Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employees v. United States, 221 F. Supp. 19 (E.D.Mich.1963), aff'd, 375 U.S. 216, 84 S. Ct. 341, 11 L. Ed. 2d 270; Ace Lines, Inc. v. United States, 197 F. Supp. 591 (S.D.Iowa 1960); Southern Railway Co. v. United States, 167 F. Supp. 747 at 753, (M.D.Ga.1958).

[21] See United States v. Pierce Auto Lines, 327 U.S. 515, 66 S. Ct. 687, 90 L. Ed. 821 (1946); Boston & M. R.R. v. United States, 208 F. Supp. 661 (D.Mass.1962), aff'd, 371 U.S. 26, 83 S. Ct. 117, 9 L. Ed. 2d 95; Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employees v. United States, 221 F. Supp. 19 (E.D.Mich.1963), aff'd, 375 U.S. 216, 84 S. Ct. 341, 11 L. Ed. 2d 270; Atchison T. & S.F. Ry. v. United States, 244 F. Supp. 955 (N.D.Ill.1965), appeal pending. Cf. Gray v. Macy, 239 F. Supp. 658 (D.Or.1965).

[22] See Ayrshire Corp. v. United States, 335 U.S. 573, at 592-593, 69 S. Ct. 278, 93 L. Ed. 243 (1949); American Trucking Association v. United States, 344 U.S. 298 at 313-314, 73 S. Ct. 307, 97 L. Ed. 337 (1953); see also, United States v. Chicago Heights Trucking Co., 310 U.S. 344, 60 S. Ct. 931, 84 L. Ed. 1243 (1940); Hudson & M. R. Co. v. United States, 313 U.S. 98, 61 S. Ct. 884, 85 L. Ed. 1212 (1941); Chicago S.S. & S.B. R.R. v. United States, 221 F. Supp. 106 (N.D.Ind.1963); Stark v.

The plaintiffs, and particularly the United States through the Antitrust Division of the Justice Department, vigorously attack the standards applied by the ICC in this case. They argue that the ICC failed to properly assess the dangers of this merger, because it failed to apply or misapplied the teachings of modern sophisticated antitrust principles. To understand how national antitrust policy comes into play, it is well at this point for us to review the relationship [17] of section 5(2)(c) and section 5(11) of the Interstate Commerce Act. In approving a rail merger or consolidation the ICC is required by section 5(2)(c) to

> HN5[] "give weight to the following considerations, among others: (1) The effect of the proposed transaction upon adequate transportation service to the public; (2) the effect upon the public interest of the inclusion, or failure to include, other railroads in the territory involved in the proposed transaction; (3) the total fixed charges resulting from the proposed transaction; and (4) the interest of the carrier employees affected."

Any reference to antitrust policy must be read into the words "among others" by implication, since section 5(11) HN6[] exempts participants in an approved merger

> "from the operation of the antitrust laws and of all other restraints, limitations, and prohibitions of law, Federal, State, or municipal, insofar as may be necessary to enable them to carry into effect the transactions so approved * * * and to hold, maintain, and operate any properties and exercise any control or franchises acquired through such transaction."

There is and could be no dispute that, in determining whether [18] a given merger is in the public interest, the Commission should take into account the national antitrust policy of the United States. [23] Mr. Justice Black, speaking for the Court in Northern Pacific Railway Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1 at 4, 78 S. Ct. 514, at 517, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545 (1958), clearly stated the essence of antitrust policy as follows:

> "The Sherman Act was designed to be a comprehensive charter of economic liberty aimed at preserving free and unfettered competition as the rule of trade. It rests on the premise that the unrestrained interaction of competitive forces will yield the best allocation of our economic resources, the lowest prices, the highest quality and the greatest material progress, while at the same time providing an environment conducive to the preservation of our democratic political and social institutions."

The Congress in 1940 enacted the following "National Transportation Policy":

> HN7[] "It is hereby declared to be the national transportation [19] policy of the Congress to provide for fair and impartial regulation of all modes of transportation subject to the provisions of this Act, so administered as to recognize and preserve the inherent advantages of each; to promote safe, adequate, economical, and efficient service and foster sound economic conditions in transportation and among the several carriers; to encourage the establishment and maintenance of reasonable charges for transportation services, [*1001] without unjust discriminations, undue preferences or advantages, or unfair or destructive competitive practices; to cooperate with the several States and the duly authorized officials thereof; and to encourage fair wages and equitable working conditions; - all to the end of developing, coordinating, and preserving a national transportation system by water, highway, and rail, as well as other means, adequate to meet the needs of the commerce of the United States, of the Postal Service, and of the national defense. All of the provisions of this Act shall be administered and enforced with a view to carrying out the above declaration of policy." (49 U.S.C.A. Historical note following table of contents.)

The main [20] thrust of plaintiffs' argument is that this merger eliminates substantial competition between Seaboard and Atlantic, and in some areas even creates an effective monopoly over the transportation of certain products. This it is argued violates not only the antitrust policy but also the transportation policy of the United States since it fails to "preserve the inherent advantages of each" mode of transportation. Proof of these allegations is sought in a resort to modern sophisticated antitrust principles.

Wickard, 321 U.S. 288 at 309-310, 64 S. Ct. 559, 88 L. Ed. 733 (1944); Nashua Motor Express, Inc. v. United States, 230 F. Supp. 646 (D.N.H.1964).

[23] See n. 8, supra.

On remand the plaintiffs deny any intention to force the ICC to decide whether a violation of section 7 of the Clayton Act or of the Sherman Act has taken place. But at the same time they argue that the Commission must apply modern sophisticated antitrust market analysis and point to cases like Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962) and the concepts of market definition there expressed as examples of how the ICC should have analyzed this merger. [24] It seems pointless to say that the Commission must employ market definition tools calculated to show whether an antitrust violation has taken place, and when it reaches the point where a [21] conclusion may be properly drawn, it may then stop since it need not draw any conclusions. But this illogical mode of behavior would be the result of following both the plaintiffs' rationale and the Supreme Court's recent opinion in this case.

[22] [*1002] Much confusion would have been eliminated in this case had everyone agreed that market analysis has but one function - to help pinpoint the danger areas. This tool is not a qualitative tool. It tells where one may expect a monopoly or a substantial lessening of competition in a given line of commerce carried on in a given geographical area. It does not tell whether this is good or bad. For purposes of the antitrust policy, Congress through its statutes has told us at what point restraints and monopolies are bad. For the purpose of the national transportation policy, Congress has told us that not all restraints and monopolies which violate the antitrust laws are bad. [25] [23] The ICC in its wisdom, and not this Court, is to determine which are to be allowed and which are to

---

[24] The Commission has recently rejected the plaintiffs' demand that it slavishly adhere to the Brown Shoe market analysis, Penn. R. Co.-Merger-N.Y. Central Ry. Co., 327 I.C.C. 475 (1966), at 509. In Great Northern Pacific & Burlington Lines, Inc.-Merger-Great Northern Railway Co., I.C.C. (1966), (F.D. No. 21478) ms. pp. 65-66, the Commission, explained: "Since the McLean case [321 U.S. 67, 64 S. Ct. 370, 88 L. Ed. 544] requires an appraisal of adverse competitive effects following the merger, Justice and other opponents of the merger assert that it is appropriate, if not necessary, to determine the areas of effective competition through an analysis of the relevant geographic and product markets, as those terms are used in antitrust cases. Cf. Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294 [82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962). The Supreme Court in Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. United States, 382 U.S. 154, [86 S. Ct. 277, 15 L. Ed. 2d 223] in reversing Florida East Coast Ry. Co. v. United States, 242 F. Supp. 14 (M.D.Fla.1965), clearly held that the Commission need not determine whether the proposed merger, absent Commission approval, would violate Section 7 of the Clayton Act, and that in appraising the competitive effects of a proposed rail merger the Commission need not apply yardsticks developed for the purposes of the antitrust laws. The market criteria of Brown Shoe can be applied here, if at all, only with great caution and substantial qualification." Later in the report it said (ms. p. 91): "In making the necessary accommodation, the Commission is not required to employ market analysis techniques such as those described in Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294 [82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510] (1962); nor is the Commission required to determine whether, but for the presence of section 5(11), the proposed merger would violate the antitrust laws of the United States. These questions were recently settled in Seaboard Airline R. Co. v. United States, 382 U.S. 154 [86 S. Ct. 277, 15 L. Ed. 2d 223] (1965), affirming the McLean case and extending its rationale to mergers alleged to be inconsistent with the policy of section 7 of the Clayton Act."

[25] Compare the statement of the Commission in Penn. R. Co-Merger-N.Y. Central Ry. Co., 327 I.C.C. 475 (1966), at 505:

> "The major goals of the antitrust laws are to preserve the independent competitive status of individual firms and to curb the undue concentration of the American economy without any special regard for the effects of this policy in a particular industry. Cf. Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 316-323 [82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510] (1962); United States v. ALCOA, 377 U.S. 271, 279-280, [84 S. Ct. 1283, 12 L. Ed. 2d 314] (1964). By contrast, in the transportation industry which is subject to extensive economic regulation, the worth of competition and not merely its preservation must be considered within the regulatory scheme enacted by Congress. The very fact that Congress has seen fit to enter into the comprehensive regulation of transportation contradicts the notion that competition is favored without qualification. Federal legislation affecting railroads is one of many areas of economic activity in which serious inroads have been made on an original policy favoring competition. F.C.C. v. RCA Communications, Inc., 346 U.S. 86, 92-93 [73 S. Ct. 998, 97 L. Ed. 1470] (1952). It is only in a blunt, undiscriminating sense that we can speak of competition as an ultimate good. Ibid, 92 [73 S. Ct. 998]."

The history of the relationship between the Central Pacific Railway Co. (hereafter C.P.R.) and the Southern Pacific [Railroad] Company (hereafter S.P.) is a case in point. In 1914 the United States instituted suit to enjoin the S.P. from controlling the C.P.R., because it violated the antitrust laws. In 1917 the district court dismissed the suit. On direct appeal, the Supreme Court held that the combination of the two railroads "fetters the free and normal flow of competition * * * tends to monopolization [of the be considered bad. Our task is at an end when we satisfy ourselves that the Commission has made adequate findings supported by substantial evidence, that it has perceived the danger areas, and judging by the statutory standards has concluded that the public interest is best served by allowing the merger. [26]

[*1003] We had felt that there is value in applying rational economic concepts embodied in modern sophisticated antitrust principles. This was what we undertook to demonstrate in our first opinion. However, as Justice Frankfurter aptly stated in his dissent in [24] ICC v. J-T Transport Co., 368 U.S. 81 at 129-130, 82 S. Ct. 204, at 235, 7 L. Ed. 2d 147, (1961),

> "An order of the Commission cannot stand, it is true, if we cannot tell what has been decided or if it leaves unclear the basis for its conclusions. United States v. Chicago, M., St. P. & P.R. Co., 294 U.S. 499, 510-511 [55 S. Ct. 462, 467, 79 L. Ed. 1023]. Findings are no doubt judicially more persuasive the more felicitously they are formulated and the less they require extraction from a diffuse report. But the Commission is not under statutory duty to set forth its findings in serried array. It is the Court's duty to sustain the Commission's findings if, as here, there is no real difficulty in determining what was decided and on what grounds.
> "It is not the Court's function to impose our standards of lucidity or elegance in exposition upon the Commission."

This proposition is one of the things that the Supreme Court told us when it vacated our first decision in this case. Therefore, while rational economic principles contained in antitrust cases may aid us in pinpointing the danger areas, we may not require the ICC to travel to its conclusions only by this route. [25] [27]

One example of the use of rational economic criteria should suffice to demonstrate the problems engendered by this case. Brown Shoe adopts these criteria (370 U.S. at 325-326, 82 S. Ct. at 1524):

> [Product Market]
>
> "The outer boundaries of a product market are determined by the reasonable interchangeability of use or the cross-elasticity of demand between the product itself and substitutes for it. However, within this broad market, well-defined submarkets may exist which, in themselves, constitute product markets for antitrust purposes. The boundaries of such a submarket may be determined by examining such practical indicia as industry or public recognition of the submarket as a separate economic entity, the product's peculiar characteristics and uses, unique production facilities, distinct customers, distinct prices, sensitivity to price changes, and specialized vendors." [26]

The Court went on to define the Geographic Market (370 U.S. at 336, 82 S. Ct. at 1530):

---

affected rail traffic]." United States v. Southern Pacific Co., 259 U.S. 214 at 229, 42 S. Ct. 496, at 498, 66 L. Ed. 907 (1922). The Supreme Court went on to say (259 U.S. at 230-232, 42 S. Ct. at 499): "We reach the conclusion that the stock ownership in the Central Pacific acquired by the Southern Pacific is violative of the Sherman Act within the principles settled by this court * * * [which] collectively, establish that one system of railroad transportation cannot acquire another, nor a substantial and vital part thereof, when the effect of such acquisition is to suppress, or materially reduce the free and normal flow of competition in the channels of interstate trade." Following the remand of the Southern Pacific case, the C.P.R. and the S.P. applied for and received approval of their transaction by the ICC under section 5 of the Transportation Act of 1920. 76 I.C.C. 508 (1923). In United States v. Southern Pacific Co., 290 F. 443 (D.Utah 1923), the district court sustained the ICC's ruling and entered an order effectuating the transaction even though it found it to be in violation of the Sherman Act.

[26] American Trucking Ass'n, Inc. v. United States, 364 U.S. 1, 80 S. Ct. 1570, 4 L. Ed. 2d 1527 (1960); East Texas Motor Freight Lines v. Frozen Food Express, 351 U.S. 49, 76 S. Ct. 574, 100 L. Ed. 917 (1956); Ayrshire Corp. v. United States, 335 U.S. 573, at 592-593, 69 S. Ct. 278, 93 L. Ed. 243 (1949); United States v. Pierce Auto Freight Lines, 327 U.S. 515, at 535-536, 66 S. Ct. 687, 90 L. Ed. 821 (1946); Black Ball Freight Service v. United States, 223 F. Supp. 191 (D.Idaho 1963); Lester C. Newton Trucking Co. v. United States, 209 F. Supp. 600 (D.Del. 1962), aff'd, 372 U.S. 702, 83 S. Ct. 1017, 10 L. Ed. 2d 124; Nashua Motor Exp., Inc. v. United States, 230 F. Supp. 646 (D.N.H.1964); Carolina Scenic Stages v. United States, 202 F. Supp. 919 (W.D.S.C. 1962); Ace Lines, Inc. v. United States, 197 F. Supp. 591 (S.D.Iowa 1960).

[27] See United States v. Pierce Auto Lines, 327 U.S. 515 (1946), at 529, 523-533, 66 S. Ct. 687, 90 L. Ed. 821.

> "The criteria to be used in determining the appropriate geographic market are essentially similar to those used to determine the relevant product market. * * * The geographic market selected must, therefore, both 'correspond to the commercial realities' of the industry and be economically significant."

Part of the confusion in the present case is occasioned by the assumption that Brown Shoe brought something new to the analysis of antitrust problems, i.e., markets, submarkets, geographic area analysis originated with the approach adopted by Brown Shoe. This idea is erroneous. The exact same definitional approaches were long ago adopted to test Sherman Act violations. United States v. Corn Products Refining Co., 234 F. 964 (S.D.N.Y.1916), 975-977 (per J. Learned Hand), appeal dismissed by agreement, 249 U.S. 621, 39 S. Ct. 291, 63 L. Ed. 805 (1919), cited United States v. Aluminum Company of America, 377 U.S. 271, 84 S. Ct. 1283 at 1286, n. 3. 12 L. Ed. 2d 314 (1964). The only difference between the Sherman Act approach and [*1004] the Clayton Act approach is [27] the quantum of effect necessary before a violation is proved.

It is argued that the ICC's failure to utilize sophisticated antitrust market definition tools is evidence that it failed to properly assess the merger. This contention must be rejected. The ICC has never applied this approach formally, and yet, in spite of the fact that Judge Learned Hand used it as early as 1916, the Supreme Court has never considered this as evidence of the ICC's failure to properly consider a merger.

It may be helpful to apply this tool in the present case. Railroads have a decided economic advantage in carrying long-haul, heavy bulk products, e.g., phosphate rock mined principally in the western portion of central Florida. In terms of antitrust analysis, we submit that this service is a separate product market and Florida is the proper geographic area.

Some illustrations should demonstrate the point. Let us assume that railroads can haul phosphate rock 50% more cheaply than the next alternative mode of transportation, trucks. This means that if a truck could haul rock at $1 per pound, railroads could carry it at 50 cents per pound. Physically both of these services are interchangeable. If [28] both modes set the price of hauling at $1, there would be "cross-elasticity of demand" between both.

However, if the railroad companies were owned separately from the trucks and if no products were available to bring a higher return and if space were available, railroads would set their price below $1 but above 50 cents, thus taking the business away from the trucks. Railroads are a submarket of long-haul, heavy, bulk products.

If there were competition by two or more railroads for the bulk business, the price would be set somewhere between $1 and 50 cents, but at such a price as would allocate the business between the roads based on market conditions. If, however, a monopoly is created, the monopoly may set the price at any level between $1 and 50 cents that will maximize its return, because it experiences no competition until the price reaches $1. The monopoly price may in fact be lower than the competitive price, depending on whether a change in the cost of transportation will appreciably affect the ultimate cost of the end product and thus increase or decrease its consumption. Thus a monopolist may pass on cost savings to achieve higher profits where a competitor will take [29] the cost savings as higher profits without passing them on. The record in the present case gives us no data on which to predict what action will be taken by a railroad possessing a monopoly in the bulk-haul products market of central Florida. [28]

[30] While railroads are able to take the long bulk-haul business from trucks, barges or water carriers enjoy a considerable cost advantage over railroads. Since shipment by barge takes longer than shipment by rail, the

---

[28] With reference to revenue from phosphate rock, the Commission said (320 I.C.C. at 153):

> "The competition faced by the railroads from other modes of transport in the Tampa area is most apparent with respect to the movement of phosphate rock. While the tonnage of phosphate rock rail shipments increased from 9.8 million tons in 1956 to 11 million tons in 1960, the revenue of the applicant railroads from phosphate rock was less in 1960 than in 1956 by approximately $1.1 million, or 4.5 per cent. This revenue decline is attributable in part to the fact that in 1960, the revenue per ton on phosphate rock was $2.21 as compared with $2.61 in 1956."

This, of course, may only indicate that railroads have priced themselves at a level where cross-elasticity of demand with other modes of carriage will take place.

cheaper cost is somewhat offset. The record in this case does demonstrate that barges are not physically interchangeable with railroads as a major competitive mode of phosphate transportation. Barges are not able to serve interior points on phosphate, [*1005] nor are they able to serve facilities that have special equipment designed solely for loading or unloading rail shipments. See 313 I.C.C. 495 (1961) (railroads able to divert traffic from water carriers even at $1 higher rate than water transportation); 291 I.C.C. 689 (1954) (railroads able to divert traffic from water carriers even at 35 cents higher rate than water transportation). It is, we think, accurate to say that railroads enjoy a decided economic advantage over all other modes of transport on heavy, long, bulk-haul products in central and western Florida. Before we could assess the meaning of any such monopoly, we would have to know much more about the competition experienced by phosphate rock and [31] its end-products. If there are readily ascertainable substitutes, even a monopoly as to phosphate rock might have little meaning. Compare the discussion of bulk, heavy-loading and low-rate coal by rail in Pennsylvania R. Co.-Merger-New York Cent. R. Co., 327 I.C.C. 475 (1966) at 516-517.

The purpose of this example is to demonstrate that the plaintiffs' briefs are correct when they analyze the market structure and conclude that the merger, if allowed, creates a monopoly in parts of Florida and that that monopoly can have significant effects. But that is all market analysis shows. A careful reading of the ICC decision shows that the ICC clearly recognized this fact. The Commission referred to phosphate rock as "essentially a commodity normally handled by rail." 320 I.C.C. at 151. Throughout its report, the ICC recognized that a "monopoly" would be created in parts of Florida. It went on to say: "There is no question that there will be a significant reduction in rail competition in Florida." 320 I.C.C. at 166. [29] [*1006] Therefore, the ICC reached the same conclusion that the

---

[29] In explaining the objections to the examiner's report, the Commission observed (320 I.C.C. at 139):

> "Of these exceptions, many of which obviously overlap, the most important relate to the anti-competitive consequences of the merger upon the shipping public, communities, and competing railroads. Justice and others contend that the examiner failed to make appropriate findings with respect to the anti-competitive effects and monopolistic consequences of the merger in Florida and in the Southeastern States generally. Their main argument on this issue is that the merger would eliminate or substantially reduce competition and create a potential monopoly in the Southeastern States. * * * Justice emphasizes that the merged company would operate 81 percent of all the class I railway mileage in Florida and would control 54.52 percent of the total southern region class I railroad mileage."

And at 163, the Commission found: "In both the 6-and 8-State areas the merged company would have more than 54 percent of the total railroad mileage, while Southern, its nearest competitor, would have about 34 percent. In Florida the merged company would have approximately 81 percent of the railway mileage in the State." The Commission did go into more detail on Florida (320 I.C.C. at 164-66):

> "The record here shows that rail competition will exist at every major city with a population in excess of 200,000 except at Tampa. The situation at Tampa and in the central and western portions of Florida is unique in that those areas are served by no other railroads except Seaboard and Coast Line. It is to be observed that in much of Florida, Seaboard and Coast Line heretofore have had what might be described as an imperfect monopoly, or an oligopoly if East Coast is included. On the basis of data contained in the the Official List of Open and Prepay Stations, 78 I.C.C. A-43, effective April 15, 1953, and considering only those points at which agents are maintained, Seaboard has been the only railroad serving approximately 60 points in Florida, whereas Coast Line has been the only railroad serving approximately 70 Florida points. Thus, the number of Florida points at which there has been no competition is about 4 times as great as the number of Florida points at which Seaboard and Coast Line have heretofore competed. In our opinion, the diminution of competition within the State of Florida that would result from the proposed merger is largely a matter of degree. At most, the rail monopoly that would result from the merger in portions of Florida would merely supplant the duopoly which has long existed there and from which there have been no appreciable adverse competitive effects upon communities or the shipping public.
>
> "Although the merged company would have a preponderance of the railway mileage in Florida, its lines would connect with other rail carriers in that State at the following points:

"East Coast

Benson Junction, West Plam

Beach, Jacksonville, Lake

application of Brown Shoe type analysis would have reached, even though the ICC did it in a [32] practical, not a theoretical, manner. Once we accept the fact that the Commission saw this problem, we can set to one side the mechanics of antitrust law and look to the only real issue, the accommodation of the national antitrust policy with the national transportation policy.

Harbor, Marcy Miami.

"GS&F (Southern subsidiary)

Jacksonville, Crawford,

Hampton, Lake City, Jasper,

Lake Butler, Palatka.

"L&N

Chattahoochee.

"Live Oak, Perry & Gulf

(Southern subsidiary)

Live Oak, Perry, Slade.

"South Georgia

(Southern subsidiary)

Perry, Greenville.

"Southern Railway

Jacksonville.

> "To illustrate further the anticipated effect of the merger upon the public in Florida, at the hearings in Tampa, the area in which the concern of monopoly is most prevalent, 19 shippers testified in support of the merger and 47 others would also have testified in support of it had the examiner not invoked the cumulative evidence rule. By contrast, only four shippers in the area testified in opposition to the merger. In any event, the percentage of railway mileage which would be operated by the merged company in Florida or the 6-and 8-State areas involved does not, standing alone, provide a suitable criterion for determining the sufficiency of the rail competition that would remain after the merger."

The Commission again noted the effect in Florida (320 I.C.C. at 211): "Except in portions of Florida, the overall reduction in rail competition in the Southeastern States will be relatively moderate and inconsequential when viewed in the light of the alternative rail service that will be provided by competitors of the merged company at most of the major industrial centers in the affected area."

[33] As shown by the record, these railroads receive a substantial increment of their revenue from traffic originating in Florida. It is precisely on this traffic that the monopoly created by the merger will have its greatest impact. [30] The Commission appears to have assumed that the equivalent of a conspiracy to fix prices in Florida already exists. The Commission said (320 I.C.C. at 164-165): "It is to be observed that in much of Florida, Seaboard and Coast Line heretofore have had what might be described as an imperfect monopoly * * *. At most, the rail monopoly that would result from the merger in portions of Florida would merely supplant the dupoly which has long existed there * * *."

[34] In Georgia v. Pennsylvania R.R. Co., 324 U.S. 439, 65 S. Ct. 716, 89 L. Ed. 1051 (1945), the State of Georgia invoked the original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court with a complaint against 20 railroads. Georgia alleged that the railroads had conspired together, through [*1007] the use of rate bureaus, committees, conferences, associations, etc., to establish arbitrary and unreasonable rates to and from the State of Georgia. These conspiracies, it alleged, had eliminated substantially all rail competition. The Supreme Court held that Georgia could pursue its request for an injunction. What Georgia won in the Supreme Court, it promptly lost in Congress. HN8[] The Reed-Bulwinkle Act explicitly exempts rate agreements and rate bureau accords approved by the ICC from the antitrust laws. 49 U.S.C.A. § 5b.

For our purposes, it is important to remember that the Reed-Bulwinkle Act preserves the potential of competition since individual railroad initiative is a legal requirement. If the instant merger is permitted, then that initiative will be irrevocably lost. Cf. Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U.S. 197, 24 S. Ct. 436, 48 L. Ed. 679 (1904). (This case may be viewed as [35] advancing the proposition that a merger to solidify a conspiracy is illegal under the antitrust laws.) This Court has absolutely no doubt that, judged by the standards of the antitrust laws, the instant merger would fail at least as to Florida. But whether this merger violates the antitrust laws by eliminating competition or potential competition is not the question before us.

The relationship of section 5 of the Interstate Commerce Act and the antitrust laws has been commented on by the ICC, the district courts and the Supreme Court on a number of occasions. In New York Central Securities v. United States, 287 U.S. 12, 53 S. Ct. 45, 77 L. Ed. 138 (1932), the Supreme Court dealt with the predecessor of the present act, the Transportation Act of 1920. The ICC authorized the New York Central Railroad Company to acquire control, by lease, of the railroad systems of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway, and the Michigan Central Railroad Company. A minority stockholder of each sought to attack the ICC's order. The authority to acquire control was sought on the ground that it would facilitate revision of routes, and the physical improvements needed for new routes, [36] and would make possible important economies in operation. The question presented was whether the control granted was in the "public interest," and whether that term was so vague as to make it an unconstitutional delegation. The Court said (287 U.S. at 24-25, 53 S. Ct. at 48):

> "Appellant insists that the delegation of authority to the Commission is invalid because the stated criterion is uncertain. That criterion is the 'public interest.' It is a mistaken assumption that this is a mere general reference to public welfare without any standard to guide determinations. The purpose of the Act, the requirements it imposes, and the context of the provision in question show the contrary. Going forward from a policy mainly directed to the prevention of abuses, particularly those arising from excessive or discriminatory rates, Transportation Act, 1920, was designed better to assure adequacy in transportation service. This Court, in New England Divisions Case, 261 U.S. 184, 189, 190 [43 S. Ct. 270, 273, 67 L. Ed. 605], adverted to that purpose, which was found to be expressed in unequivocal language: 'to attain it, new rights, new obligations, new machinery, were created.' The Court [37] directed attention to various provisions having this effect, and to the criteria which the statute had established in referring to 'the transportation needs of the public,' 'the necessity * * * of enlarging (transportation) facilities,' and the measures which would 'best promote the service > in the interest of the public and the commerce of the people.' Id. p. 189, note [43 S. Ct. p. 273]. See, also, Texas & Pacific Ry. Co. v. Gulf, Colorado & Sante Fe Ry. Co., 270 U.S. 266, 277 [46 S. Ct. 263, 70 L. Ed. 578]. The provisions now before us were among the additions made by Transportation Act, 1920, and the term 'public interest' as thus used is not a concept without ascertainable criteria, but has direct relation to adequacy of transportation service, to its essential [*1008] conditions of economy and efficiency, and to appropriate provision and best use of transportation facilities, questions to which the Interstate Commerce Commission has constantly addressed itself in the exercise of the authority conferred. * * *"

---

[30] As pointed out by the Southern Railway System at oral argument, nine bulk commodities handled by the merging railroads account for approximately 75-77% of their business. See dissent of Commissioner Webb, 320 I.C.C. 214, 230-32. The record does not show what portions of the merging companies' revnues or profits are generated by the carriage of long-haul bulk products originating in Central and Western Florida. Nor does the record show that effective competition for this type of carriage presently exists in Florida.

In the view of the Supreme Court, "The public interest is served by economy and efficiency in operation." 287 U.S. at 23, 53 S. Ct. at 47.

In New York [38] Central the carriers' lines were parallel and the plaintiffs argued that the acquisition would thus eliminate competition between the carriers. The Court answered (287 U.S. at 25-26, 53 S. Ct. at 48):

> "The fact that the carriers' lines are parallel and competing cannot be deemed to affect the validity of the authority conferred upon the Commission. The Congress, which had power to impose prohibitions in the regulation of interstate commerce, Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U.S. 197 [24 S. Ct. 436, 48 L. Ed. 679], had equal power to foster that commerce by removing prohibitions and by permitting acquisition of control where that was found to be an aid in the accomplishment of the purposes in view in the enactment of Transportation Act, 1920. See New York v. United States, 257 U.S. 591, 601 [42 S. Ct. 239, 66 L. Ed. 385]; Colorado v. United States, 271 U.S. 153, 165 [46 S. Ct. 452, 70 L. Ed. 878]. Exercising this paramount power, the Congress expressly provided in subdivision (8) of § 5, which has direct reference to subdivision (2), that 'the carriers affected by any order made under the foregoing provisions of this section' are 'relieved from the operation [39] of the "antitrust laws,"' and 'of all other restraints or prohibitions by law, State or Federal, in so far as may be necessary to enable them to do anything authorized or required by any order made under and pursuant to the foregoing provisions of this section.' The question whether the acquisition of control in the case of competing carriers will aid in preventing an injurious waste and in securing more efficient transportation service is thus committed to the judgment of the administrative agency upon the facts developed in the particular case."

The principal precedent and first case to deal with the scope of review in the context of modern antitrust law was Associated Transport, Inc., 38 M.C.C. 137 (1942), injunction denied, McLean Trucking Co. v. United States, 48 F. Supp. 933 (S.D.N.Y.1942), aff'd, 321 U.S. 67, 64 S. Ct. 370, 88 L. Ed. 544 (1944). The ICC authorized seven large motor carriers (originally Arrow Carrier was to be an eighth, but dropped out after the ICC approved the consolidation) to merge, forming the largest motor carrier in the United States and the only "end-to-end" motor carrier from New England to Florida.

In the course of three pages of generalized language, [40] the ICC detailed the benefits which it believed would accrue from the merger (38 M.C.C. 143-146): 1. Consolidation would result in a higher load factor on vehicles with a concomitant reduction in the number of vehicles required for service. 2. Unified garage and testing facilities would lead to safer operation. 3. Vehicles could be shifted more readily from one end of the system to the other in order to meet peak demands. 4. In some cities terminals could be consolidated; additional terminals could be established where before there was not enough traffic for any one of the companies to establish a terminal. 5. Relations with shippers and public regulatory bodies would be simplified. 6. Tracing of shipments and settlement of claims would be facilitated. 7. Economy would result by combining administration. The Commission concluded (38 M.C.C. 146):

> "We find: That the consolidation would result in improved transportation service, and that through movement of freight would be simplified and expedited, equipment would be more efficiently utilized, terminal facilities [*1009] would be improved, the handling of shipments would be reduced, relations with shippers and public [41] regulatory bodies would be simplified, and safe operation would be promoted."

In the present case the ICC considered the benefits more carefully than in Associated, but concluded that they were present, citing almost the same factors. The ICC found the following benefits: 1. Consolidation of stations and terminals. 2. Consolidation of switching facilities and elimination of yard engines and yard diesels. 3. Consolidation would result in higher load factor on freight trains between major terminals with a concomitant reduction in the number of trains required. 4. Economy would result by combining administration. 5. Unified repair shops would result in more economical and safer operation, including the reduction of stores facilities (320 I.C.C. 154-59). The Commission concluded (320 I.C.C. 160-61):

> "In addition to the specific benefits above discussed, many other benefits can reasonably be expected to result from the elimination of wasteful and duplicative facilities and an overall improvement in operations. These benefits can be grouped as follows. In the area of improved service, it can be anticipated that benefits will be derived from (1) more flexible schedules [42] and more direct routes; (2) the elimination of interchanges and delays in transit; and (3) the simplification of transit arrangements and greater flexibility in arranging stopoff points. Reduction in shipping costs can be anticipated from the elimination of wasteful and unneeded transport facilities, the substitution of single-line rates on certain commodities, and the elimination of certain switching charges. A more adequate car supply, the availability of more specialized equipment, and more efficient utilization of equipment should result. There also are a number of advantages in dealing with a single corporate entity, such as convenience in the settlement of claims and the tracing of cars. Additionally, the merged company will make a significant contribution to the economic and industrial development of the Southeastern States through the promotion of new industrial sites, improvements in port terminal facilities, and in the stabilization of employment which will flow from greater financial stability of the merged company."

If it were only necessary that the Commission find what it perceived to be benefits "securing more efficient transportation service," our inquiry would [43] be at an end. The ICC's decision is no more vague or speculative in the present case than it was in Associated.

One real difference between Associated and the instant case is in the facts surrounding the post-merger competitive picture. In their first brief, filed June 8, 1964, the United States cites Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U.S. 197, 24 S. Ct. 436, 48 L. Ed. 679 (1904) and its progeny for the proposition that "elimination of competition between Seaboard and Coast Line" violates the antitrust laws and is so significant that it prevents the ICC from allowing a merger. Clearly, the Government is correct that the elimination of significant competition, as here, violates the antitrust laws. But New York Central Securities, supra, 287 U.S. at 25, 53 S. Ct. 45, 77 L. Ed. 138, cites Northern Securities to demonstrate that Congress had power to authorize the ICC to waive the antitrust laws and allow a combination that would eliminate significant competition between the parties.

Associated clearly authorizes the ICC to eliminate competition between the parties to the merger. In answering a contention by the Antitrust Division similar to that made [44] in the present case, the ICC said (38 M.C.C. at 150):

> "Undoubtedly, substantial competition exists between certain of the carriers involved, and consummation of the instant transactions would eliminate such competition. However, such fact alone is not controlling. We are [*1010] unable to agree with the argument of the Antitrust Division that it was the intention of Congress in enacting section 5 that we approve only such transactions as would not result in an 'unreasonable' restraint of competition within the meaning of the antitrust laws, regardless of benefits that might result or the adequacy of remaining competition."

The Commission stated its understanding of the test to be applied as follows (38 M.C.C. at 150-151):

> "In our opinion, the Congress intended to place wholly within our judgment the granting or denying of authority for these transactions under section 5. The specific reference to the antitrust laws only emphasizes the Congressional intent that HN9[] we should be empowered to approve transactions which otherwise would be violative of the antitrust laws, if we are convinced that the public interest would thus be best served. Stated differently, [45] section 5 authorizes us to permit unifications which would, except for such approval, result in restraining competition contrary to the antitrust laws, where the disadvantages of such restraint are overcome by other advantages in the public interest, such as direct betterment in the public service of the carriers or indirect betterment through stabilization of the industry. Determination of the larger question as to HN10[] whether the proposed unification would be consistent with the public interest involves consideration not only of the competition that would be eliminated, but also of the competition that would remain, and the advantages which would result from the unification."

Therefore, the affirmance of these principles in operation by both the district court and the Supreme Court should put to rest the argument that the elimination of competition between the parties is in itself enough to prevent an ICC approved merger where sufficient outside competition remained.

Before reaching the crux of the matter, "the competition that would remain," one other issue must be dispatched. The Government argues that the present merger is different in that it involves two healthy, stable [46] railroads and not a failing company. Associated involved not only seven healthy trucking companies, but probably seven of the most healthy trucking companies in the United States. The national transportation policy and the Commission have always looked at benefits going far beyond the saving of a failing company. By restricting their authority to such companies, we would allow them to approve only those mergers that do not violate the antitrust laws. So far no court has been willing to take such a position and the Supreme Court has rejected it specifically. McLean Trucking Co. v. United States, 321 U.S. 67 at 85-86, 64 S. Ct. 370, 88 L. Ed. 544 (1944).

The major difference between the record in Associated and that in the instant case is the substantial competition that remained after the merger in Associated. The Commission divided the Eastern United States into three regions - New England, Middle Atlantic, and the South. The ICC then analyzed the remaining competition in each of these regions in great detail. The Commission's analysis is subject to some criticism but it does show that substantial intramodal competition remained. The Commission concluded (38 M.C.C. [47] at 159-160):

> "The foregoing clearly shows that, if the proposed transaction is consummated, there would remain ample competitive motorcarrier service throughout the territory involved. In addition, all of the principle points and many others are served by one or more rail carriers. Competition is also afforded by motor-vehicle contract carriers and by carloading and forwarding companies."

The ICC also recognized that trucking, unlike railroading, was an industry affording ease of entry. 38 M.C.C. at 161. It should be apparent that there are two [*1011] important differences between Associated and the present case - ease of entry and remaining competition.

The district court in McLean refused to enjoin the ICC order approving the Associated merger, explaining the problem of accommodating the antitrust laws and the Interstate Commerce Act as follows (48 F. Supp. 933 at 936 (S.D.N.Y.1942):

> "Considerable light will be thrown on this problem at once by noticing the plain fact that while the Antitrust Acts and the Interstate Commerce Act are designed to bring about the conduct of business for the common good the former are also penal and are aimed at the [48] evils of monopolies as such which unreasonably restrain trade or business while the latter, though it does not disregard such evils, is primarily concerned with creation and maintenance of adequate transportation service to the public."

The court went on to say (48 F. Supp. at 937):

> "What is needed for adequate service is a matter for the Commission to decide and it is likewise free to decide what amount of competition is in furtherance of the public interest and what is not. It is not bound to preserve or foster competition to a degree that will not best serve the public interest from the standpoint of adequate public transportation service and whether competition as such is adequate or not must depend upon its effect in furtherance of the attainment of the ends Congress sought to accomplish under the Interstate Commerce Act administered by the Commission. * * *
>
> "* * * We cannot review the weight of the evidence or the wisdom of the order."

In affirming the district court, the Supreme Court recognized that the merger would eliminate competition between the parties. McLean Trucking Co. v. United States, 321 U.S. 67 at 71, 64 S. Ct. 370, at 372 (1943).

The Supreme [49] Court said (321 U.S. at 76, 64 S. Ct. at 375):

> "In HN11[] passing upon a proposed consolidation the Commission is required to 'give weight to the following considerations, among others: (1) The effect of the proposed transaction upon adequate transportation service to the public; * * * (3) the total fixed charges resulting from the proposed transaction; and (4) the interest of the > carrier employees affected.' Section 5(2)(c). The foregoing provisions supply the general statutory standards for guiding the Commission's judgment; and within their broad limits, its authority is 'exclusive and plenary.' § 5(11)."

In discussing the accommodations of the antitrust laws and the Interstate Commerce Act, the Court said (321 U.S. at 85, 64 S. Ct. at 379):

> "And in authorizing those consolidations it did not import the general policies of the antitrust laws as a measure of their permissibility. It in terms relieved participants in appropriate mergers from the requirements of those laws. Section 5(11). In doing so, it presumably took into account the fact that the business affected is subject to strict regulation and supervision, particularly with respect to rates charged the [50] public - an effective safeguard against the evils attending monopoly, at which the Sherman Act is directed."

Later the Court explained (321 U.S. at 86, 64 S. Ct. at 380): "Congress recognized that the process of consolidating motor carriers would result in some diminution of competition and might result in the creation of monopolies." The Court says to "prevent the latter effect" the Commission was given "power to control such developments." One interpretation of this wording is that the Commission cannot allow monopolies to be formed. But the words are subject to a different explanation. The use of the word "effect" may mean the Commission's power to regulate monopoly [*1012] power, not a prohibition of the creation of any monopolies. The Commission was given broad, plenary powers and was to look at mergers as a part of the "national" transportation problem. Thus, there could be local or limited monopolies so long as they were controlled and contributed to the attainment of the national transportation policy objectives. Therefore, a limited monopoly, such as the one in the present case, might be allowed.

HN12[] The Commission is to weigh, "as an administrative [51] matter," "the effect of the merger on competitors and on the general competitive situation in the industry." As the Supreme Court said (321 U.S. at 87, 64 S. Ct. at 381):

> "Resolving these considerations is a complex task which requires extensive facilities, expert judgment and considerable knowledge of the transportation industry. Congress left that task to the Commission 'to the end that the wisdom and experience of that Commission may be used not only in connection with this form of transportation, but in its coordination of all other forms.' 79 Cong.Rec. 12207. HN13[] 'The wisdom and experience of that commission,' not of the courts, must determine whether the proposed consolidation is 'consistent with the public interest.' If the Commission did not exceed the statutory limits within which Congress confined its discretion and its findings are adequate and supported by evidence, it is not our function to upset its order."

In the instant case, the Commission looked at and weighed all the factors it had examined in Associated. It is this weighing of factors and not the result that the statute comples. [31] The ICC considered those areas in Florida where a monopoly would [52] be created, including the size of the cities involved and their relative importance. If we say that the Commission may do this where competition remains but not where some monopoly areas are produced, we will create an anomolous situation. Section 1 of the Sherman Act makes combinations in restraint of trade unlawful. The transactions involved in New York Central Securities, supra, and Associated-McLean, supra, by restraining trade would possibly violate Section 1, and on a proper finding, as there made, the Commission could waive this violation. Section 2 of the Sherman Act makes attempts to monopolize illegal. Therefore, to strike down the Commission's action in the instant case will, in effect, say it can waive Section 1 of the Sherman Act or the more stringent Clayton Act, but not Section 2 of the Sherman Act. Nothing in the legislation admits that interpretation. Compare the situation where the ICC grants the right to extend rail service to newly-discovered phosphate deposits to one railroad but not to its competitor. Atlantic Coast Line R.R. v. United States, 243 F. Supp. 945 (E.D.Va.1965).

---

[31] Cf. Ayrshire Corp. v. United States, 335 U.S. 573 at 592-593, 69 S. Ct. 278, 93 L. Ed. 243 (1949), quoted supra, n. 18.

[53] At oral argument the government attempted to clarify its "failing company" proposition. Counsel explained that not all healthy competitors should be prevented from merging. It was explained that the government's position really was that where two healthy competitors are involved economies or "dollar savings and other alleged benefits, transportation, service, and such other things" should never be enough to overcome severe "elimination of competition," such as here involved. This argument is cogent, and if made before the Commission would doubtless be given weight. [32] It [*1013] distinguishes the Associated-McLean case, supra, where substantial competition remained. But this argument cannot, as a matter of law, be used to rewrite the statute.

[54] Congress has directed the ICC to give primary weight to four factors. McLean Trucking Co. v. United States, 321 U.S. 67 at 76, 64 S. Ct. 370, at 375, 88 L. Ed. 544 (1943) (quoted supra, p. 1011). To allow the government's argument to override those statutory standards even when the Commission has carefully applied them and found the merger justified would be, as the Supreme Court said in ICC v. J-T Transport Co., 368 U.S. 81 at 89-90, 82 S. Ct. 204, 7 L. Ed. 2d 147, (1961), equivalent to loading the scales in favor of but one factor.

In the present case it may not be entirely accurate to refer to Seaboard and Atlantic as financially healthy railroads. The Commission found (320 I.C.C. at 149): "While the past earnings record of both Seaboard and Coast Line is impressive, their rate of return has not been significantly high. Although it is above the average norm for class I railroads, it does not compare favorably with returns on investments in other industries or in other modes of transport." The ability of railroads to earn a rate of return sufficiently high to enable them to obtain funds for needed facilities in the capital market is a subject to which Congress has specifically [55] directed attention. Congress in 1958 passed legislation designed to make funds available to railroads by allowing the ICC to guarantee loans in the aggregate amount of 500 million dollars. 49 U.S.C.A. § 1231, et seq. [33]

In describing the significance of Congress' action, the courts have said (Southern Railway Co. v. United States, 167 F. Supp. at 754 (M.D.Ga.1958): "The whole import of this legislation is that funds for the development of needed facilities for the railroads are not available at current interest rates or in the capital market from ordinary commercial sources." Given this background, we must conclude that the ICC has broad discretion in determining how financially healthy railroads should be before their merger ceases to be in the public interest.

Minneapolis & St. Louis R. Co. v. United States, [56] 361 U.S. 173, 80 S. Ct. 229, 4 L. Ed. 2d 223 (1959), is of little help to the plaintiffs. That case did little more than repeat what was said in McLean Trucking, supra. In Minneapolis, the ICC had to choose between two possible mergers. The Supreme Court agreed that the ICC was correct in choosing the merger that maintained the greatest degree of competition. In the instant case there is no choice between equally advantageous mergers. If there is to be any "benefits" at all, competition must be reduced.

---

[32] Cf. the Commission's statement in Great Northern Pacific & Burlington Lines, Inc. - Merger - Great Northern Railway Co., I.C.C. (1966) (F.D. No. 21478) ms. p. 90:

> "The second general observation we wish to make is that the financial strength of the applicants is not a bar to merger. Cf. Norfolk & Western Ry. Co. and New York, Chicago & St. Louis Ry. Co. - Merger, 324 I.C.C. 1 (1964). Section 5(2) of the Act is not limited to transactions involving a union of the weak and the weak, the strong and the weak or the large and the small. On the other hand, the prosperous condition of the major applicants is a highly material fact. Where carriers are so impoverished that they are unable, individually, to constantly improve their transportation services and facilities, the public interest involved in a pooling of their resources is obviously stronger than in a case where, as here, the applicants are financially able to improve their plants and facilities in step with advances in rail technology."

See also the Commission's Discussion I.C.C., ms. pp. 96-97.

[33] See 1958 U.S.Code Cong. & Admin.News, p. 3456, for the legislative history of the Transportation Act of 1958. The Commission has now guaranteed loans in the aggregate of about 225 million dollars.

In our opinion, the ICC has clearly realized the danger zones in this merger and after analyzing the problem has chosen what it concludes to be more important public benefits. [34] The voluminous record amply supports its findings. The greatest problem that we have experienced [*1014] is that none of the plaintiffs in this case chose to build a record before the Commission on which to support their contentions.

[57] Before this Court the government has presented able arguments. Had these been made before the Commission and had the government availed itself of the opportunity to build a record showing the basic facts it claims could be shown, this record might be made to tell a different story.

The government intervened before the ICC on the grounds that this merger was inconsistent with the antitrust policy of the United States. It was admitted at oral argument that out of 35 hearing days, the government managed to be represented only on 5 days. The government asked for an opportunity to have a special hearing at which it desired to produce evidence to support its contentions. The Commission granted that request and set a hearing in Washington, D.C. The government then decided not to present any evidence.

In reaching the conclusion that this merger was in the public interest, the ICC reviewed at some length the competitive growth of other modes of transportation and their impact on the rail industry. The Commission voiced the railroads' contentions as follows (320 I.C.C. at 151):

> "* * * the applicants emphasize that the railroads have not participated proportionately in the country's [58] economic growth, and that competition from other modes of transport contribute to a large extent to the financial problems now plaguing the railroad industry."

The ICC went on to announce its policy on intermodal competition in the following terms (320 I.C.C. at 166-167):

> "While we recognize in general the desirability of preserving intramodal rail competition, it is no longer the all-important factor that it once was in the days when the railroads had a virtual monopoly in all inter-city freight traffic. With the development of intense competition in recent years from other modes of transport, the preservation of intramodal rail competition has lost much of its significance in the furtherance of the overall national transportation policy. Even after the merger herein is approved, effective competition among railroads will continue in most of the major industrial centers. * * *
>
> "In other regulated industries, typically gas, electric, and telephone utilities, a single company frequently serves large metropolitan areas and often even significantly larger geographic or market areas. As public utilities are affected with a public interest and are essentially monopolistic [59] by nature, they are subjected to strict regulation and supervision by State and Federal regulatory agencies. Under regulation, their services, as a general rule, are efficient and reasonably priced despite the absence of competition. While exact comparability does not exist between railroads and public utilities generally, it must be recognized that railroads are subject to equally stringent regulation. Moreover, as railroads have the basic economic characteristics of public utilities and are subject to regulation in the public interest at both the Federal and State levels, it is not realistic to insist that intramodal rail competition must be preserved at all places, at all times, and under all circumstances. For these reasons and weighing all the factors previously discussed, plus the further consideration that railroads today encounter increasingly strong competition from other modes of transportation, we conclude and specifically find that (1) the reduction of rail competition caused by the proposed merger will not be substantial; (2) ample competitive rail service will remain after the merger throughout most of the affected area, and (3) such reduction in competition as will [60] result from the merger will have no appreciably injurious effect upon shippers and communities."

[*1015] Thus, the ICC in an attempt to insure "adequate transportation service to the public" has focused on that phase of the transportation problem President Kennedy emphasized in his transportation message to Congress - intermodal competition. [35] The Commission reasoned that to maintain healthy railroads in the long run, it must foster competition at that level where it will have its most decisive effect. It reasoned that it could waive the antitrust laws where they prevent a rational transportation policy, and here it did waive those laws. The Commission took the position that the greatest good came from increasing competition in the Southeast as opposed to maintaining it in but a part of Florida. The plaintiffs object to these policy determinations because in their view they allow the Commission to resort to a broader statistical universe that minimizes the anticompetitive impact.

---

[34] "We have carefully evaluated the effects of the curtailment of competition that will result from the merger and when considered in connection with the advantages of the merger, including improved services, safer operations, and lower costs, we are convinced that the advantages of the merger far outweigh the potential disadvantages." 320 I.C.C. at 212.

[61] Of course, if judicial review is to have any meaning, extension of principles to meet new situations, such as the new policy on intermodal competition announced here, must be based on some minimum demonstration to the courts that the Commission has relied on relevant criteria to conclude that the new policy is in the public interest. Such a demonstration was made here. The Commission reviewed the impact of other modes of transportation on railroads. The ICC looked at the long-run needs of the different areas of the South to determine which was most important. We cannot say that based on this record a reasonable man could not reach the same conclusion which the Commission has reached. [36] [62] Nor can we say its policy is inconsistent with the scheme of the regulatory statute. In short, nothing in the record before us indicates that the action taken by the Commission in accommodating the antitrust laws and the Interstate Commerce Act is arbitrary or capricious. That we may not have reached the same conclusion does not make the ICC wrong. [37]

[63] Plaintiff, Florida East Coast Railway, attacked the protective provisions [*1016] announced by the ICC to shield this plaintiff from the effects of the merger. Businessmen, like government agencies, talk about business in the flowing terms that generals reserve for their favorite war maneuvers. As a Nation, we find ourselves today involved in a "war in Viet Nam," a "war on poverty," a "war on ignorance," et cetera. The ICC is no exception to this masculine jargonic function. In speaking of East Coast's ability to survive any aggressive tendencies of the newly-merged railroad, the Commission spoke of its "potentially strong counteroffensive weapon."

At oral argument the FEC bitterly attacked the use of such language, asserting it was devoid of any real substance and so were the protective provisions. The retaliatory language used by the Commission is expressive and to that end acceptable. In short, Southern and the FEC would have us substitute our ability to predict future effects for that of the Commission. The ICC is far more experienced in this area than any one given court. The Commission, and not we, must tailor the protection to fit its expert prediction of the [64] future. On this record, we are in no position to say that its careful study has led to capricious results. When not plainly unreasonable, we must leave to the agency vested with congressionally assumed expertise this type of decision. [38] The question boils down to whether

---

[35] 1962 U.S.Code Cong. & Admin.News, p. 4148, 108 Cong.Rec. 5509 (H.Doc. No. 384), Message of April 8, 1962; see also House Rep. No. 1922, 1958 U.S.Code Cong. Admin.News, pp. 3456, 3469-3471; 1955 Weeks Committee Report (Presidential Advisory Committee on Transport Policy and Organization).

[36] It is not our function to decide whether the Commission's conclusions as applied in this case were wise. It may be that more, not less, intramodal competition was needed in Florida. We are not at all certain that the government, had it availed itself of the opportunity provided, could not have shown how ineffective intermodal competition is in Florida. But the Commission went so far as to conclude that a monopoly in Florida was not too high a price to pay for increased intra and intermodal competition in the southeastern part of our Nation where improved transportation is needed. This was not an unreasonable conclusion for one to reach after reading the record in this case.

[37] See Ayrshire Corp. v. United States, 335 U.S. 573 at 592-593, 69 S. Ct. 278, 93 L. Ed. 243 (1949); United States v. Louisville & Nashville R. Co., 235 U.S. 314, 35 S. Ct. 113, 59 L. Ed. 245 (1914); Gray v. Macy, 239 F. Supp. 658 (D.Or.1965); Consolidated Freightways v. United States, 83 F. Supp. 811 (E.D.Wash.1949); Assigned Car Cases, 274 U.S. 564, 47 S. Ct. 727, 71 L. Ed. 1204 (1927); United States v. Chicago Heights Trucking Co., 310 U.S. 344 at 352-354, 60 S. Ct. 931, 84 L. Ed. 1243 (1940); United States v. Pierce Auto Freight Lines, 327 U.S. 515, 66 S. Ct. 687, 90 L. Ed. 821 (1946); United States v. New River Co., 265 U.S. 533, 44 S. Ct. 610, 68 L. Ed. 1165 (1924); Black Ball Freight Service v. United States, 223 F. Supp. 191 (D.Idaho 1963); Cardinale Trucking Co. v. United States, 232 F. Supp. 339 (N.N.J.1964); National Motor Freight Traffic Ass'n v. United States, 242 F. Supp. 601 (D.D.C.1965); Willey v. United States, 245 F. Supp. 669 (E.D.Ill.1965); Legge v. United States, 244 F. Supp. 878 (W.D.Pa.1965); Florida East Coast Ry. Co. v. United States (I), 242 F. Supp. 14, rev. on other grounds, 382 U.S. 154, 86 S. Ct. 277, 15 L. Ed. 2d 223 (1965); Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. United States, 243 F. Supp. 945 (E.D.Va.1965).

[38] See n. 37, supra.

the ICC acted wisely in not providing more protection. Statutorily we are not the all-wise of this field, and, while our crystal ball might indicate a different result than that of the Commission, [39] the record in this case supports its action.

[65] The Commission determined that subsequent to the merger Mercantile-Safe Deposit and Trust Company [40] would have "power to control the merged company." 320 I.C.C. at 197. In reaching this ultimate conclusion the Commission detailed the relationship between Mercantile, Coast Line Company, the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, and the merging carriers. 320 I.C.C. at 142, 193-97.

By a combination of direct and indirect stock control, Mercantile will have control over the largest single block of stock in the merged company. The Commission's primary factual findings are supported by substantial evidence in this record. Its ultimate conclusion that control will result is a reasonable one, well within the province of its statutory power.

The Commission also concluded that (320 I.C.C. at 197):

> "Mercantile is an investment company engaged exclusively in the banking and trust business. Its direct interest in the merged company is merely incidental to its primary business of managing [66] trusts and estates."

Section 5(3) HN14[] permits the ICC "to the extent" it deems appropriate to designate a person who is not actually a carrier as a carrier for the purpose of the Interstate Commerce Act, if such person is authorized to acquire control of an actual carrier in a transaction approved under section 5(2). Under section 5(3) it is clear that the ICC need not designate every person obtaining such control as a carrier. United States v. Marshall Transport Co., 322 U.S. 31, 41, 64 S. Ct. 899, 88 L. Ed. 1110; Wellsville A. & G. Corp., Purchase and Control, 295 I.C.C. 115, 129.

[*1017] Under the "circumstances" of the instant case, the Commission decided not to exercise its section 5(3) power. The Commission's primary factual findings as to the character of Mercantile's activities are supported by substantial evidence in this record. We see no abuse of discretion in the Commission's ultimate conclusion based on those primary facts.

The Commission noted that the merger will have substantial adverse effects upon many railroad employees and their families, but in the long run the merger will provide greater job security and more stabilized conditions of employment [67] for employees of the merged company. See 320 I.C.C. at 200. Approximately 4,257 jobs will be abolished and the location of employment will be changed for 4,439 other employees. 320 I.C.C. at 154. One of the four primary criteria to which section 5(2)(c) directs the ICC's examination is "the interest of the carrier employees affected" by the merger.

In our first opinion, since we remanded the case to the ICC for further proceedings, we did not find it appropriate to reach the question of employee protection. The policy adopted by Congress clearly contemplated that the accomplishment of economies and improved transportation through consolidation of the Nation's rail carriers will have an impact upon rail employees. In section 5(2)(f), Congress provided for the protection of employees by the Commission. HN15[] No merger may be approved that does not provide for "a fair and equitable arrangement to protect the interests of the railroad employees affected." Moreover, Congress provided that the Commission must insure "that during the period of four years from the effective date of such order such transaction will not result in employees of the carrier or carriers * * * being in a worse position [68] with respect to their employment."

---

[39] The Commission concluded (320 I.C.C. at 188):

"It is important to note that the conditions we have devised represent neither mere acceptance of the minimum concessions offered by the applicants nor full acquiescence in the demands of the intervening railroads, but rather are the product of our exhaustive study of the competitive situation in the Southeast. We are convinced that these routing and gateway conditions will establish two balanced competitive systems in that area and will result in an increase rather than decrease in intramodal rail competition that will contribute to the present and future economic development of this important section of the Nation."

[40] Hereafter Mercantile.

The intervening plaintiff, Railway Labor Executives' Association, [41] bitterly attacks as inadequate the protective conditions adopted by the ICC. In the instant case the Commission adopted the protective conditions it announced in Southern Railway Co.-Control-Central of Georgia Ry. Co., 317 I.C.C. 557, 729, 320 I.C.C. 377. The Association paints a sorry picture of confusion and utter chaos which it claims shrouds the Southern Railway conditions.

The Association points out that the Southern Railway conditions were imposed in a "control" case and argues that they cannot rationally be applied in a consolidation case. This contention is without merit. The problem created by acquisition of control or merger from the standpoint of affected employees is identical. This fact is amply demonstrated by the expected problem discussed by the district court which reviewed the Southern Railway conditions. That court commented (Railway Labor Executives [69] Ass'n v. United States, 226 F. Supp. 521 at 522, (E.D.Va.1964) vacated on other ground, 379 U.S. 199, 85 S. Ct. 307, 13 L. Ed. 2d 338 (1964)):

> "The Commission, in approving the transaction, was fully advised of the proposed consolidation of Central's freight agencies, yards, shops and accounting department into those of Southern, together with the resultant job losses entailing substantial hardship to many employees and their families. In the alleviation of these hardships the Commission imposed conditions for the protection of the employees thus affected, which it determined more than met the statutory requirements of Section 5(a)(f) and would be fair and equitable."

The major argument of the Association is that the Southern Railway conditions are confusing and inadequate. The Southern Railway conditions codify the labor conditions previously employed by the Commission and are intended to provide a shorthand means of referring to those conditions when cited in cases such as the present merger. The basic employee [*1018] protection conditions may be traced to the ICC's 1941 decision in Texas & P. Ry. Co. Operation, 247 I.C.C. 285. That decision set forth conditions [70] to protect affected employees who were displaced or dismissed during the four-year period following the effective date of the Commission's order.

In Oklahoma Ry. Co. Trustees Abandonment, 257 I.C.C. 177 (1944) at 199-201, the ICC refined the protection contained in the Texas & P. conditions. Employees receiving the Oklahoma conditions were, in addition to the Texas & P. conditions, allowed moving expenses and losses on the sale of homes. The Southern Railway conditions in Article I carry forward the Oklahoma conditions as the Commission's basic four-year protective provisions.

In the New Orleans Union Passenger Terminal case, 282 I.C.C. 271 (1952), the Commission went a step further and extended financial compensation beyond the four-year period provided in the Oklahoma conditions. These protections are carried forward in Article II of the Southern Railway conditions. Thus, employees who are first affected during the first five years [42] after the effective date of the Commission's order are protected until they obtain the full benefits of what is called the Washington Agreement. [43] Moreover, the Southern Railway conditions provide a stronger [71] arbitration provision than did earlier provisions.

---

[41] Hereafter Association.

[42] This was conceded by the ICC's General Counsel at oral argument when he said: "In other words, we say that the employees first affected in the fifth year after the effective date of the Commission's Order get the same Washington agreement protection that they would have obtained under the New Orleans conditions. Nothing has been taken away from such an employee." (R. p. 143.)

[43] The "Washington Agreement," or the "Agreement of May 1936, Washington, D.C.," as it is sometimes called, is an agreement that was entered into by virtually all the railroads and railroad unions in the United States. This collective bargaining agreement provides some protection to employees affected by "coordinations" of facilities between two or more carriers. The Supreme Court ordered the Commission to clarify the relationship of the Southern Railway conditions and the Washington Agreement in Railway Labor Executives' Association v. United States, 379 U.S. 199, 85 S. Ct. 307, 13 L. Ed. 2d 338 (1964). See Pittsburgh & Lake Erie Railroad Co., a Delaware Corporation - Merger - Pittsburgh & Lake Erie Railroad Co., a Pennsylvania Corporation, 324 I.C.C. 198 (1964), at 204; Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Co. - Merger - Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fe Railway Co., 324 I.C.C. 254 (1965), at 260-61.

[72] The Association seems to place a strained interpretation on the Commission's action. After reading the ICC's decision in this case and reviewing the background of the Southern Railway conditions, we do not think the Association's interpretation should prevail. Nor do we think there is merit in the argument that the Association never had an opportunity to argue against the Southern Railway conditions.

The Association had ample opportunity to argue for conditions it thought appropriate, and did in fact argue for an attrition clause. We must realize that the Commission's citation of the Southern Railway conditions is just a shorthand method of saying that, after consideration of all arguments, it applies the same conditions here as in Southern.

Some confusion may be engendered by the fact that the Virginia court [44] construed the Southern Railway conditions more narrowly than the Commission later said it had intended. The Commission has now abandoned any contention that it only went as far as the Virginia court thought, and we should not be confused by that interchange of occurrences. Read carefully and applied rationally, the use of the Southern Railway [73] conditions in this case need cause no confusion. [45]

[*1019] After carefully examining the contentions of Railway Labor Executives' Ass'n, the Commission concluded (320 I.C.C. at 201):

> "We are unable to conclude that conditions requiring the retention of unnecessary employees in unnecessary positions [or the equivalent alternatives suggested by the Association] would be consistent with the public interest or sound business policy. The imposition of such conditions would unduly restrict carriers in the establishment of more economical operations, and would be in conflict with the objectives of the national transportation [74] policy."

Based on the record in this case, we cannot say that the Commission's action has created inequitable or unfair labor conditions. What was said in Brotherhood of Maint. of Way Employees v. United States, 221 F. Supp. 19 (E.D.Mich.1963) at 29, aff'd, 375 U.S. 216, 84 S. Ct. 341, 11 L. Ed. 2d 270 (1963), is applicable here:

> "It is recognized that even though there will be some immediate hurt to railroad employees in the approval of mergers and affiliations, railroad employees, as well as all other members of the public, will, in the long run, find more and better opportunities if the country's total economic health is protected. We cannot say that the conditions imposed by the Commission do not adequately protect the rights of the employees in this situation."

The Association also argues that the ICC misconstrued its statutory authority in one important respect. As the Association reads the words "employees of the carrier or carriers by railroad affected," the statute requires the Commission to protect not only the employees of the merging roads but also the employees of their competitors who may be affected.

The Commission has consistently construed this [75] language as only requiring protection for the employees of carriers involved or participating in the transaction. [46] This consistent practice lends weight to what seems the logical interpretation of the statute. Taken in context, the provision is but one of many dealing with the Commission's treatment of merger applicants. When Congress spoke of "carriers" in section 5(2), it referred to the participants. For example, in section 5(2)(a)(i) the statute required ICC approval for "two or more carriers to consolidate or merge." In section 5(2)(c) the statute speaks of the "interest of the carrier employees affected,"

---

[44] Railway Labor Executives' Ass'n v. United States, 226 F. Supp. 521 (E.D.Va.1964), vacated in part, 379 U.S. 199, 85 S. Ct. 307, 13 L. Ed. 2d 338 (1964).

[45] See, for example, Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Co. - Merger - Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fe Railway Co., 324 I.C.C. 254 (1965), at 260-61 (clarifying the use of such terms as "home road" in the Southern Railway conditions).

[46] See Detroit, Toledo & Ironton Railroad Co. - Control - Ann Arbor Railroad Co., 320 I.C.C. 325 (1964); Texas & Pacific Railway Co. - Control - Kansas, Oklahoma & Gulf Railway Co., 324 I.C.C. 309 (1964), at 339.

obviously meaning participating carrier. And when Congress wished to refer to nonparticipating carriers in 5(2)(d), it said "another railroad or other railroads." Taken in context, we think it clear that the "carrier or carriers" referred to in section 5(2)(f) are the carriers involved in the merger and most immediately affected by the Commission's action. We, therefore, hold that the statutory protection requirement is restricted to the carriers involved in the transaction.

[76] We conclude that in formulating employee protection the Commission has not transcended its statutory bounds. Based on the record in this case, we also conclude that the Commission in approving this merger has not failed to "give weight to" "the interests of the carrier employees."

After considering the arguments which we have discussed and all other arguments in this case, we conclude that the ICC explained its reasoning and supported its application of that reasoning by substantial evidence. Since the ICC correctly applied the proper standards and thus exhibited that familiarity with the complex problems in the transportation industry which Congress anticipated the ICC would achieve from its particularized experience, we must and do sustain its order. The injunction prayed for is therefore denied.

District Judge SIMPSON concurs in the result.

FTC v. Dean Foods Co.

Supreme Court of the United States

March 28, 1966, Argued ; June 13, 1966, Decided

No. 970

Reporter

384 U.S. 597 *; 86 S. Ct. 1738 ; 16 L. Ed. 2d 802 ; 1966 U.S. LEXIS 2985 *; 1966 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,788

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION v. DEAN FOODS CO. ET AL.

Prior History: [1] CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SEVENTH CIRCUIT.

Disposition: 356 F.2d 481, reversed and remanded.

Core Terms

court of appeals, merger, Writs, district court, injunction, proceedings, cases, preliminary injunction, enjoin, Clayton Act, appellate jurisdiction, preliminary relief, courts, acquisition, temporary, merits, orders, consummation, restraining, appeals, parties, administrative agency, appellate court, antitrust, decisions, vested, staff, authorization, vertical, milk

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Writs > All Writs Act

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Writs > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Appellate Jurisdiction > General Overview

HN1[] Writs, All Writs Act

The All Writs Act, 28 U.S.C.S. § 1651(a), empowers the federal courts to issue all writs necessary or appropriate in aid of their respective jurisdictions and agreeable to the usages and principles of law. The exercise of this power is in the nature of appellate jurisdiction where directed to an inferior court, and extends to the potential jurisdiction of the appellate court where an appeal is not then pending but may be later perfected.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Writs > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Appellate Jurisdiction > General Overview

HN2[] Remedies, Writs

Where a case is within the appellate jurisdiction of the higher court a writ may issue in aid of the appellate jurisdiction which might otherwise be defeated.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Writs > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Appellate Jurisdiction > General Overview

HN3[] Remedies, Writs

The authority of the appellate court is not confined to the issuance of writs in aid of a jurisdiction already acquired by appeal but extends to those cases which are within its appellate jurisdiction although no appeal has been perfected.

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > Reviewability > Jurisdiction & Venue

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > Reviewability > Reviewable Agency Action

HN4[] Reviewability, Jurisdiction & Venue

There is a limited judicial power to preserve the court's jurisdiction or maintain the status quo by injunction pending review of an agency's action through the prescribed statutory channels. Such power has been deemed merely incidental to the courts' jurisdiction to review final agency action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Procedural Matters > Jurisdiction > Exclusive Jurisdiction

Banking Law > Types of Banks & Financial Institutions > National Banks > Affiliates & Subsidiaries

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > Reviewability > Jurisdiction & Venue

Administrative Law > Separation of Powers > Primary Jurisdiction

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Jurisdiction

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > Exclusive Jurisdiction

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

HN5[] Jurisdiction, Exclusive Jurisdiction

Section 11(c) of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 21(c), gives exclusive jurisdiction to review final orders by the Federal Trade Commission against illegal mergers, on application of any person required by such order to cease and desist from any such violation, to the courts of appeals for any circuit within which such violation occurred or within which such person resides or carries on business. This grant includes the traditional power to issue injunctions to preserve the status quo while administrative proceedings are in progress and prevent impairment of the effective exercise of appellate jurisdiction.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Federal Trade Commission Actions > Remedial Powers > General Overview

HN6[] US Federal Trade Commission Actions, Remedial Powers

The ancillary power to bring contempt actions in the appropriate court of appeals when the court's enforcement orders were violated have always been treated as essential to the effective discharge of the Federal Trade Commission's responsibilities.

Administrative Law > Separation of Powers > Legislative Controls > General Overview

HN7[] Separation of Powers, Legislative Controls

Courts do not draw the inference that an agency admits that it is acting upon a wrong construction by seeking ratification from Congress. Public policy requires that agencies feel free to ask legislation which will terminate or avoid adverse contentions and litigation. Courts do not construe such requests by government agencies and the resulting nonaction of the Congress as affirmative evidence of no authority.

Lawyers' Edition Display

Summary

The Federal Trade Commission, which had commenced administrative action to determine whether a merger of two companies violated 7 of the Clayton Act, applied to the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit for a temporary restraining order and a preliminary injunction to maintain the status quo until it determined the legality of the merger, alleging that if the merger was allowed to be completed, an effective remedial order would be virtually impossible, and the Court of Appeals would be deprived of its appellate jurisdiction over final Commission orders. The Court of Appeals entered a temporary restraining order, but after a hearing for a preliminary injunction, dissolved the restraining order and dismissed the petition, on the ground that the Commission had no authority to institute the proceedings. (356 F2d 481.)

On certiorari, the Supreme Court of the United States reversed and remanded. In an opinion by Clark, J., expressing the views of five members of the Court, it was held that (1) the Court of Appeals had the power under the All Writs Act to issue a preliminary injunction upon a showing of the allegations in the Commission's petition, and (2) notwithstanding the absence of express statutory authority to request preliminary relief from a Court of Appeals under the All Writs Act, the Commission had standing to seek such relief under the circumstances alleged in the case at bar.

Fortas, J., joined by Harlan, Stewart, and White, JJ., dissented, expressing the view that the Commission had no power to seek a temporary injunction in any court, and that the Court of Appeals had no jurisdiction under the All Writs Act, or otherwise, with regard to such relief.

Headnotes

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §68 > temporary injunction against merger -- power of Court of Appeals -- All Writs Act -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[1A][] [1A]LEdHN[1B][] [1B]

A Court of Appeals has the power under the All Writs Act (28 USC 1651(a)), which authorizes the federal courts to issue all writs necessary or appropriate in aid of their respective jurisdictions and agreeable to the usages and principles of law, to temporarily enjoin the consummation of a merger of two companies upon the Federal Trade Commission's application for an injunction to maintain the status quo until the Commission determined the legality of the merger in proceedings before the Commission attacking the merger as violative of 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18), upon a showing that an effective remedial order would be virtually impossible if the merger was allowed to be completed, thus rendering the enforcement of any final decree of divestiture futile and depriving the court of its appellate jurisdiction over final Commission orders.

APPEAL §1293 > dismissal of application for injunction -- considering allegations as true -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[2][] [2]

The Supreme Court of the United States must take as true the allegations of the Federal Trade Commission's application to a Court of Appeals for a preliminary injunction against the consummation of a merger, where the case comes to the Supreme Court from the lower court's dismissal on jurisdictional grounds.

COURTS §505 > All Writs Act -- appellate jurisdiction -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[3][] [3]

The exercise of the power under the All Writs Act, which authorizes the federal courts to issue all writs necessary or appropriate in aid of their respective jurisdictions and agreeable to the usages and principles of law (28 USC 1651(a)), is in the nature of appellate jurisdiction where directed to an inferior court, and extends to the potential jurisdiction of the appellate court where an appeal is not then pending but may be later perfected.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §68 > injunction against merger -- power of Courts of Appeals -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[4][] [4]

The grant of exclusive jurisdiction to the Courts of Appeals, under 11(c) of the Clayton Act (15 USC 21(c)), to review final orders by the Federal Trade Commission against illegal mergers on application of any person required by such an order to cease and desist from any such violation, includes the traditional power to issue injunctions to preserve the status quo while administrative proceedings are in progress and prevent impairment of the effective exercise of appellate jurisdiction.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §70 > temporary injunction against merger -- Federal Trade Commission's power to seek -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[5A][] [5A]LEdHN[5B][] [5B]

Notwithstanding the absence of an express statutory grant of authority to the Federal Trade Commission to request preliminary relief under the All Writs Act (28 USC 1651(a)), the Commission, which has been entrusted with the enforcement of the Clayton Act, has the incidental power to seek such preliminary relief from a Court of Appeals, which has jurisdiction to review final Commission action, where the Commission alleges that a temporary injunction against the merger of companies to maintain the status quo until the Commission determines the legality of the merger under 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18) is necessary to allow entry of an effective divestiture order and to insure effective judicial review; the fact that Congress had not acted on requests of the Commission for statutory authority to issue preliminary relief itself, or to proceed in the District Courts for such purpose, has no relevance, since Congress gave no attention to the exercise of judicial power by the Courts of Appeals under the All Writs Act, leaving that power intact and the standing of the Commission to invoke it undiminished.

ADMINISTRATIVE LAW §109 > PARTIES §3.5 > temporary injunction -- agency's power to seek -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[6][] [6]

Absent explicit direction from Congress, a federal agency charged with protecting the public interest can request that a Court of Appeals having jurisdiction to review administrative orders, exercise its express authority under the All Writs Act (28 USC 1651(a)) to issue such temporary injunctions as may be necessary to protect its own jurisdiction.

EVIDENCE §167 > inference -- Congressional intent -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[7][] [7]

It cannot be inferred from the fact that Congress took no action on the Federal Trade Commission's request to grant the Commission or a District Court the power to issue a preliminary injunction against the merger of companies as violative of the Clayton Act that Congress thereby expressed an intent to circumscribe traditional judicial remedies.

Syllabus

Respondents, two substantial competitors in the sale of packaged milk in the Chicago area, signed a merger agreement following meetings with representatives of the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) who indicated that the merger would raise serious questions under the antitrust laws. At the time of the merger one of the respondents was the third or fourth largest packaged milk distributor in the area, the other at least the second largest, and together they accounted for 23% of area sales of packaged milk. The FTC filed a complaint charging that the agreement violated § 7 of the Clayton Act and § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. Thereafter the FTC, under the All Writs Act, 28 U. S. C. § 1651 (a), petitioned the Court of Appeals for a temporary restraining order and a preliminary injunction to maintain the status quo until the FTC determined the merger's legality. The FTC alleged the probability of its [*2] finding an antitrust violation and that the need for injunctive relief was "compelling" since under the merger one of the respondents would no longer exist, its milk routes and certain of its plants and equipment would be sold and its remaining assets would be consolidated, precluding its restoration as a viable independent company if the merger were subsequently ruled illegal. The petition alleged that the Court of Appeals would consequently be deprived of its appellate jurisdiction over final FTC orders and the opportunity to enter a meaningful order of its own. The Court of Appeals on the hearing for a preliminary injunction dismissed the petition on the ground that the FTC had not entered a cease-and-desist order and had no authority to institute the proceeding, Congress having failed to enact bills introduced for such a purpose. The contract was then closed. MR. JUSTICE CLARK on application issued a preliminary injunction against material corporate changes in the acquired company and subsequently this Court granted certiorari. Held:

1. The Court of Appeals has jurisdiction to issue a preliminary injunction to prevent consummation of the merger agreement upon a showing [*3] that an effective remedial order would otherwise be virtually impossible once the merger had been implemented, thus rendering a final divestiture decree futile. Pp. 603-605.

(a) The All Writs Act extends to the potential jurisdiction of an appellate court where an appeal is not then pending but may later be perfected. Pp. 603-604.

(b) The grant in § 11 (c) of the Clayton Act to courts of appeals of jurisdiction to review final orders of the FTC against illegal mergers on application of any person required thereby to cease and desist such violations includes the traditional power to preserve the status quo while administrative proceedings are in progress to prevent impairment of the effective exercise of appellate jurisdiction. Cf. Whitney Nat. Bank v. New Orleans Bank, 379 U.S. 411. Pp. 604-605.

2. The FTC, under the circumstances alleged in this case, has standing to seek preliminary relief under the All Writs Act. Pp. 605-612.

(a) It would stultify Congress' purpose in entrusting the FTC with enforcement of the Clayton Act and granting it the power to order divestiture if the FTC did not have the incidental power to ask the courts of appeals to [*4] exercise their authority under the All Writs Act. Pp. 606-612.

(b) The power of the courts of appeals to grant preliminary relief here derives from the All Writs Act, not the Clayton Act. P. 608.

(c) Congress' failure to enact proposals that the FTC be empowered itself to issue preliminary relief or to proceed in district courts for that purpose reflects no intent to circumscribe traditional judicial remedies. Pp. 608-611.

Counsel: Solicitor General Marshall argued the cause for petitioner. With him on the brief were Assistant Attorney General Turner, Richard A. Posner, Howard E. Shapiro and James McI. Henderson.

Hammond E. Chaffetz argued the cause for respondents and filed a brief for respondent Dean Foods Co.

L. Edward Hart, John Paul Stevens and Edward I. Rothschild filed a brief for respondent Bowfund Corp.

Judges: Warren, Black, Douglas, Clark, Harlan, Brennan, Stewart, White, Fortas

Opinion by: CLARK

Opinion

[*599] [804] [1740] MR. JUSTICE CLARK delivered the opinion of the Court.

At issue here is the power of the Court of Appeals under the All Writs Act, 28 U. S. C. § 1651 (a) (1964 ed.), to temporarily enjoin the consummation of a [*5] merger that is under attack before the Federal Trade Commission as violative of § 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended, 64 Stat. 1125, 15 U. S. C. § 18 (1964 ed.). This case arose on the application of the Commission for a temporary restraining order and a preliminary injunction against respondents Dean Foods Company and Bowman Dairy Company to maintain the status quo until the Commission determined the legality of their merger. The Commission alleged that it had issued a complaint against respondents under § 7 of the Clayton Act and § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 38 Stat. 719, as amended, 52 Stat. 111, 15 U. S. C. § 45 (1964 ed.), and that from the facts underlying the complaint "it is probable that the Federal Trade Commission will enter an order finding a violation of these laws." The petition stated that there was a "compelling" need for preliminary relief since the "acquisition itself" will split Bowman in two -- Dean will acquire fixed assets, receivables and good will; Bowman will retain all cash, government and other marketable securities, and some real estate investments" for distribution to its stockholders. [1] In [*6] addition, it was alleged that Dean planned to dispose of most of Bowman's retail milk routes, certain of its plants and equipment, and to consolidate the remaining assets. The Commission thus argued that if the merger were [805] allowed to be completed, "Bowman as an entity will no longer exist," and that it "will be 'extremely difficult and very probably impossible'" [*600] to restore Bowman as "a viable independent" company if the merger were subsequently ruled illegal. In other words, consummation of the agreement would "prevent the Commission from devising, or render it extremely difficult for the Commission to devise, any effective remedy after its decision on the merits." As grounds for issuance of an extraordinary writ, the Commission asserted that the Court of Appeals "will, in effect, be deprived of its appellate jurisdiction [over final Commission orders] and of the opportunity to enter a meaningful final order of its own in respect to this acquisition, since the res in custodia legis -- Bowman -- will have vanished."

[7] The Court of Appeals entered a temporary restraining order against respondents, as prayed. On the hearing for a preliminary injunction, however, it dissolved the temporary restraining order and dismissed the petition for the reasons that "no cease and desist order has been entered by the Commission relative to the subject matter in the case at bar and . . . we now hold that the Commission did not have authority to institute this proceeding in this court . . . ." In its final judgment the Court of Appeals supported [1741] its refusal to grant relief at the request of the Commission by reference to the fact that:

"in the 84th Congress and in the 89th Congress bills sponsored by the said Commission were introduced, which bills if enacted into law would have conferred upon the Commission such authority as it is attempting to exercise in the case now before this court, but that said measures were not enacted into law and Congress has not provided otherwise for bestowing this authority upon said Commission." 356 F.2d 481, 482.

LEdHN[1A][] [1A]

A few hours after the Court of Appeals entered its [*8] order on January 19, 1966, the contract was closed and Dean acquired legal title to Bowman's operating assets. [*601] Upon application by the Solicitor General on behalf of the Commission, MR. JUSTICE CLARK, after consulting the other members of this Court, entered a preliminary injunction on January 24, 1966, restraining respondents from making any material changes with respect to Bowman's corporate structure or the assets purchased. This order provided that Dean might sell Bowman's retail home delivery routes upon terms and conditions acceptable to the Commission, but that any milk supplied by Dean to the purchasers of the routes must continue to be delivered under the Bowman label and from former Bowman plants. We granted certiorari on February 18, 1966, 383 U.S. 901, and expedited consideration of this case. We conclude that the Court of Appeals erred and reverse its judgment.

I.

LEdHN[2][] [2]Since the case comes to us from a dismissal on jurisdictional grounds we must take the allegations of the Commission's application for a preliminary injunction as true. We need not detail the facts [*9] further than to say that Dean and Bowman were substantial competitors in the sale of packaged milk in the Chicago area, one of the largest markets in the United States for packaged milk. On November 2, 1965, attorneys for Dean and Bowman [806] met with representatives of the Commission to discuss a proposal by Dean to purchase all of Bowman's plants and equipment, the Bowman name, all customer and supplier lists together with the benefit of their relationships, and various other assets, all of which were situated in the Chicago area. Bowman would consequently cease doing a dairy business there. It was emphasized that the inquiry was merely to ascertain the views of the staff of the Commission and not to secure a formal advisory opinion. After investigation, on December 3, 1965, the Commission's staff advised Dean's counsel that it believed the acquisition would raise serious questions under the [*602] antitrust laws, and that on the basis of existing information the staff would recommend that the Commission issue a complaint against the acquisition if consummated. After further meetings, Dean's counsel informed the Commission's staff on December 14, 1965, that the agreement [*10] had been signed. A week later the Commission issued a formal complaint charging that the agreement violated § 7 of the Clayton Act and § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

[1] Since consummation of the merger all assets of Bowman, with the exception of cash and marketable securities which were exempted from the purchase agreement, have been transferred to Dean. Bowman has ceased dairy operations and now acts as an investment fund, having received and invested the proceeds of the sale.

It appears that at the time of the merger Dean was the third or fourth largest distributor of packaged milk in the Chicago area; Bowman was at least the second largest in that market; and together they enjoyed approximately 23% of the sales of packaged milk in the same area, while the four largest dairy companies had a 43% share thereof. Affidavits attached to the Commission's application alleged that between 1954 and 1965 the number of packaged milk sellers in the Chicago market had declined from 107 to 57, and that in the four months prior to the filing of the complaint four more firms had been eliminated by acquisitions. From these statistics it was concluded that the effect of Dean's acquisition of Bowman would be to substantially [1742] lessen competition. We place in the margin the Commission's summation of its complaint. [2]

[11] [*603] II.

LEdHN[3][] [3]HN1[] The All Writs Act, 28 U. S. C. § 1651 (a), empowers the federal courts to "issue all writs necessary or appropriate in aid of their respective jurisdictions and agreeable to the usages and principles of law. [807] " The exercise of this power "is in the nature of appellate jurisdiction" where directed to an inferior court, Ex parte Crane, 5 Pet. 190, 193 (1832) (Marshall, C. J.), and extends to the potential jurisdiction of the appellate court where an appeal is not then pending but may be later perfected. Cf. Ex parte Bradstreet, 7 Pet. 634 (1833) (Marshall, C. J.). These holdings by Chief Justice Marshall are elaborated in a long line of cases, including McClellan v. Carland, 217 U.S. 268 (1910), where Mr. Justice Day held: "we think it the true rule that HN2[] where a case is within the appellate jurisdiction of the higher court a writ . . . may issue in aid of the appellate jurisdiction which might otherwise [*12] be defeated . . . ." At 280. And in Roche v. Evaporated Milk Assn., 319 U.S. 21 (1943), Chief Justice Stone stated that HN3[] the authority of the appellate court "is not confined to the issuance of writs in aid of a jurisdiction already acquired by appeal but extends to those cases which are within its appellate jurisdiction although no appeal has been perfected." [*604] At 25. Likewise, decisions of this Court

[2] The Federal Trade Commission alleged:

"(a) Actual or potential competition in the sale and distribution of packaged milk in the Chicago Area will be eliminated or prevented;

"(b) Dean, a major competitive factor in the sale and distribution of packaged milk in the Chicago Area, will eliminate Bowman, another major competitive factor in the sale and distribution of packaged milk in the Chicago Area;

"(c) Concentration in the sale and distribution of packaged milk in the Chicago Area will be increased and deconcentration will be prevented;

"(d) The restraining influence on non-competitive behavior in the sale and distribution of packaged milk in the Chicago Area, which existed by reason of the independent operation of Bowman, will be eliminated;

"(e) The acquisition will contribute to the over-all trend toward concentration in the sale and distribution of packaged milk in the United States . . . thereby tending to bring about the adverse competitive effects described [elsewhere in the complaint];

"(f) The emergence or growth of smaller packaged milk companies in the Chicago Area will be retarded, discouraged or prevented;

"(g) The members of the consuming public, in the Chicago Area and throughout the United States, will be denied the benefits of free and open competition in the sale and distribution of packaged milk."

"have recognized HN4[] a limited judicial power to preserve the court's jurisdiction or maintain the status quo by injunction pending review of an agency's action through the prescribed statutory channels. . . . Such power has been deemed merely incidental to the courts' jurisdiction to review final agency action . . . ." Arrow Transp. Co. v. Southern R. Co., 372 U.S. 658, 671, n. 22 (1963). There the Court cited such authority as Scripps-Howard Radio, Inc. v. Federal Communications Comm'n, 316 U.S. 4 (1942); West India Fruit & S. S. Co. v. Seatrain Lines, Inc., 170 F.2d 775 (C. A. 2d Cir. 1948); and Board of Governors v. Transamerica Corp., 184 F.2d 311 (C. A. 9th [*13] Cir.), cert. denied, 340 U.S. 883 (1950).

LEdHN[4][] [4]Section 11 (c) of the Clayton Act, as amended, 73 Stat. 243, 15 U. S. C. § 21 (c), HN5[] gives exclusive jurisdiction to review final orders by the Commission against illegal mergers, on application of "any person required by such order . . . to cease and desist from any such violation," to the courts of appeals "for any circuit within which such [1743] violation occurred or within which such person resides or carries on business." This grant includes the traditional power to issue injunctions to preserve the status quo while administrative proceedings are in progress and prevent impairment of the effective exercise of appellate jurisdiction. Cf. Continental Ill. Nat. Bank v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 294 U.S. 648, 675 (1935). A recent case involving a similar statutory proceeding is dispositive of this issue. Whitney Nat. Bank v. New Orleans Bank, 379 U.S. 411 (1965), raised the [*14] question whether holding companies were "lawfully entitled" to operate subsidiary banks within Louisiana, a question we held should be determined in the first instance by the Federal Reserve Board. We further concluded that the Board should reconsider its initial approval of such a plan in light of [*605] an intervening Louisiana statute, and so gave the parties, who had sought review of the Board's order before the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, an opportunity to move that the case be remanded to the Board. It was noted that the [808] Court of Appeals had authority "to issue such orders as will protect its jurisdiction pending final determination of the matter," at 415, and that § 1651 (a) empowered it to stay "the order of approval of the Federal Reserve Board pending final disposition of the review proceeding." At 425. In response to the argument that the stay would not be sufficient because the Comptroller of Currency nonetheless intended to issue a certificate to the bank, we stated that if "the Court of Appeals should find it necessary to take direct action to maintain the status quo and prevent the opening of the bank, it has ample power to do so" by [*15] an injunction against the applicants before the Federal Reserve Board themselves. At 426. Such action would be analogous to the relief requested here by the Commission. [3]

LEdHN[1B][] [1B]

These decisions furnish ample precedent to support jurisdiction of the Court of Appeals to issue a preliminary injunction preventing the consummation of this agreement upon a showing that an effective remedial order, once the merger was implemented, would otherwise be virtually impossible, thus rendering the enforcement of any final decree of divestiture futile.

III.

[16] LEdHN[5A][] [5A]

Dean and Bowman insist, however, that as a creature of statute the Commission may exercise only those functions delegated to it by Congress, and that Congress has [*606] failed to give the Commission express statutory authority to request preliminary relief under the All Writs Act. [4] [*18] But the Commission is a [1744]

---

[3] Of course, the courts of appeals have traditionally framed § 1651 (a) writs in the form of compulsory injunctions aimed at private parties. E. g., Application of President & Directors of Georgetown College, 118 U. S. App. D. C. 80, 331 F.2d 1000, cert. denied, 377 U.S. 978 (1964). See Recent Cases, 77 Harv. L. Rev. 1539, 1542 (1964).

[4] For the proposition that the Commission must have express statutory authority to seek injunctions in the courts of appeals two cases are cited. The first, Humphrey's Executor v. United States, 295 U.S. 602 (1935), has no relevance to our problem. And the other, Federal Trade Comm'n v. Eastman Kodak Co., 274 U.S. 619, 623-625 (1927), even though apposite, has been repudiated. It held that in fashioning a final decree the Commission "exercises only the administrative functions delegated to it governmental agency to which Congress has entrusted, inter alia, the enforcement of the Clayton Act, granting it the power to order divestiture in appropriate cases. At the same time, Congress has given the courts of appeals jurisdiction to review final Commission action. It would stultify congressional purpose to say that the Commission did not have the incidental power to ask the courts of appeals to exercise their authority derived from the All Writs Act. [5] Indeed, [809] the opinions [*607] in Arrow Transp. Co. and Whitney Nat. Bank necessarily recognized the standing of administrative agencies to seek such preliminary relief to ensure effective judicial review. Both decisions referred to Board of Governors v. Transamerica Corp., supra, [*17] where the Court of Appeals stayed a merger on application by the Federal Reserve Board. See also Public Utilities Comm'n v. Capital Transit Co., 94 U. S. App. D. C. 140, 214 F.2d 242 (1954), and West India Fruit & S. S. Co. v. Seatrain Lines, Inc., 170 F.2d 775, 779 (C. A. 2d Cir. 1948). There is no explicit statutory authority for the Commission to appear in judicial review proceedings, but no one has contended it cannot appear in the courts of appeals to defend its orders. Nor has it ever been asserted that the Commission could not bring contempt actions in the appropriate court of appeals when the court's enforcement orders were violated, though it has no statutory authority in this respect. HN6[] Such ancillary powers have always been treated as essential to the effective discharge of the Commission's responsibilities.

[19]

[*608] LEdHN[6][] [6]It must be remembered that the courts of appeals derive their power to grant preliminary relief here not from the Clayton Act, but from the All Writs Act and its predecessors dating back to the first Judiciary Act of 1789. Congress has never restricted the power which the courts of appeals may exercise under that Act. Nor has it withdrawn from the Commission its inherent standing as a suitor to seek preliminary relief in courts of appropriate jurisdiction. [6] In the absence [1745] of explicit direction from Congress we have no basis to say that an agency charged with protecting the public interest cannot request that a court of appeals, having jurisdiction to review administrative orders, exercise its express authority under the All Writs Act to issue such temporary injunctions as may be necessary to protect its own jurisdiction.

---

by the Act," and, therefore, could not order divestiture of laboratories acquired through a stock purchase. This view was rejected in Pan American World Airways, Inc. v. United States, 371 U.S. 296, 312-313, nn. 17-18 (1963), the Court holding that "the power to order divestiture need not be explicitly included in the powers of an administrative agency to be part of its arsenal of authority," citing Gilbertville Trucking Co. v. United States, 371 U.S. 115 (1962).

[5] Such a holding would especially interfere with the functions Congress has given the Commission in the merger field. As THE CHIEF JUSTICE stated in Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294 (1962), the Congress "sought to assure the Federal Trade Commission and the courts the power to brake this force [business concentration] at its outset and before it gathered momentum." At 317-318. But without standing to secure injunctive relief, and thereby safeguard its ability to order an effective divestiture of acquired properties, the Commission's efforts would be frustrated. As MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS said in United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U.S. 173, 186 (1944):

"The acquisition of a competing theatre terminates at once its competition. . . . And where businesses have been merged or purchased and closed out it is commonly impossible to turn back the clock."

Here the plan of merger itself contemplates the sale of the acquired home delivery milk routes and certain milk plants. In addition, Bowman has retained its cash and securities, with the intention ultimately to distribute them to its stockholders. If consummation of the merger is not restrained, the restoration of Bowman as an effective and viable competitor will obviously be impossible by the time a final order is entered. This is not unusual. Administrative experience shows that the Commission's inability to unscramble merged assets frequently prevents entry of an effective order of divestiture. E. g., Ekco Products Co., Trade Reg. Rep. para. 16,879 (1964) (1963-1965 Transfer Binder), aff'd, 347 F.2d 745 (C. A. 7th Cir. 1965); Foremost Dairies, Inc., 60 F. T. C. 944, order modified per stipulation (C. A. 5th Cir. 1965) (Docket No. 18,815).

[6] Cf. Public Utilities Comm'n v. Capital Transit Co., 94 U. S. App. D. C. 140, 214 F.2d 242, 245 (1954), where the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit gave as one of its reasons for granting an injunction the fact that "the moving party in the litigation was the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia, a governmental agency clothed by Congress with special responsibility in the matters involved."

[20] Respondents point -- as did the Court of Appeals -- to the fact that the Commission sought authority from the Eighty-fourth through the Eighty-ninth Congresses to grant preliminary injunctions itself or to [810] proceed in the district court as the Department of Justice can under the Clayton Act. [7] [*21] Both former Chairman Gwynne and Chairman Dixon appeared in support of the measures, [8] and referred to *Federal Trade Comm'n v. International [609] Paper Co., 241 F.2d 372 (C. A. 2d Cir. 1956), which held the Commission had no standing to seek preliminary injunctions from the courts of appeals. [9] [*22] In addition, several Congressmen made statements regarding the need for statutory amendment. [10] However, no proposal was put before the Congress relating to the authority of the Commission to secure preliminary relief before the courts of appeals in accordance with § 1651 (a). The proposals concerned only the power of the Commission itself to issue preliminary relief or to proceed in the district courts for that purpose.

LEdHN[7][] [7]Congress neither enacted nor rejected these proposals; it simply did not act on them. [11] Even if it had, the legislation as proposed would have had no effect whatever on the power that Congress granted the courts by the All Writs Act. We cannot infer from the fact that Congress took no action at all on the request of the Commission [*610] to grant it or a district court power to enjoin a merger that Congress thereby expressed an intent to circumscribe traditional judicial remedies. Cf. Scripps-Howard Radio, Inc. v. Federal Communications Comm'n, 316 U.S. 4, 11 (1942). The decision in Wong Yang Sung v. McGrath, 339 U.S. 33 (1950), [*23] is apposite. Following an adverse decision in Eisler v. [1746] Clark, 77 F.Supp. 610 (D. D. C. 1948), the Department of Justice asked Congress for legislation exempting the Immigration Service from the Administrative Procedure Act. 60 Stat. 237, 5 U. S. C. § 1001 (1964 ed.). As was the case here, the appropriate committees of both Houses reported the proposal favorably but Congress adjourned without taking any action. The Department nonetheless insisted in Wong Yang Sung that hearings in deportation cases did not have to conform to the requirements of the Administrative Procedure Act. In [811] his discussion of legislative history, Mr. Justice Jackson wrote for a unanimous Court that HN7[] "we will not draw the inference, urged by petitioner, that an agency admits that it is acting upon a wrong construction by seeking ratification from Congress. Public policy requires that agencies feel free to ask legislation which will terminate or avoid adverse contentions and litigations." At p. 47. This Court has consistently refused to construe [*24] such requests by government agencies and the [7] E. g., H. R. 9424 and S. 3341 and 3424, 84th Cong., 2d Sess. (1956); H. R. 49 and 1574, 89th Cong., 1st Sess. (1965).

[8] Hearings before the Antitrust Subcommittee of the House Committee on the Judiciary, 84th Cong., 2d Sess., ser. No. 15, p. 35 (1956); Hearings before the Subcommittee on Antitrust and Monopoly of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary on S. 198, S. 721, S. 722 and S. 3479, 85th Cong., 2d Sess., 42-45 (1958) (testimony of Chairman Gwynne). Hearings before the Antitrust Subcommittee of the House Committee on the Judiciary, 87th Cong., 1st Sess., ser. No. 5, pp. 85-86 (1961) (testimony of Chairman Dixon).

[9] They also directed attention to the denial of injunctive relief in Federal Trade Comm'n v. Farm Journal, Inc. (C. A. 3d Cir. 1955) (unreported). Both men failed to mention the contrary decision in Board of Governors v. Transamerica Corp., 184 F.2d 311 (C. A. 9th Cir.), cert. denied, 340 U.S. 883 (1950). In Ekco Products Co., Trade Reg. Rep. para. 16,879 (1964) (1963-1965 Transfer Binder), aff'd, 347 F.2d 745 (C. A. 7th Cir. 1965), Commissioner Elman stated that the question of the Commission's ability to obtain a preliminary injunction under the All Writs Act "has not been authoritatively answered." At 21,905, n. 10.

[10] Hearings before the Subcommittee on Antitrust and Monopoly of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary on S. 198, S. 721, S. 722 and S. 3479, 85th Cong., 2d Sess., 156-157 (1958) (testimony of Congressman Celler). Hearings before the Antitrust Subcommittee of the House Committee on the Judiciary, 87th Cong., 1st Sess., ser. No. 5, pp. 42-45 (1961) (statement of Congressman Patman).

[11] Cf. Helvering v. Hallock, 309 U.S. 106, 120 (1940), where it was said that to give weight to the nonaction of Congress was to "venture into speculative unrealities."

resulting nonaction of the Congress as affirmative evidence of no authority. [12] Thus, in United States v. du Pont & Co., 353 U.S. 586 (1957), MR. JUSTICE BRENNAN held:

"During the 35 years before this action was brought [in 1949], the Government did not invoke § 7 against vertical acquisitions. The Federal Trade Commission has said that the section did not apply to vertical acquisitions. See F. T. C., Report on [*611] Corporate Mergers and Acquisitions, 168 (1955), H. R. Doc. No. 169, 84th Cong., 1st Sess. Also, the House Committee considering the 1950 revision of § 7 stated that '. . . it has been thought by some that this legislation [the 1914 Act] applies only to the so-called horizontal mergers. . . .' H. R. Rep. No. 1191, 81st Cong., 1st Sess. 11. The House Report adds, however, that the 1950 amendment was purposed '. . . to make it clear that the bill applies to all types of mergers and acquisitions, vertical and conglomerate as well as horizontal . . . .' (Emphasis added.)

"This Court has the duty to reconcile administrative interpretations with the broad antitrust policies laid down by [*25] Congress. . . . The failure of the Commission to act is not a binding administrative interpretation that Congress did not intend vertical acquisitions to come within the purview of the [1914] Act." At p. 590.

Despite the representations of the Commission that the 1914 Act did not apply to vertical mergers, its sponsorship of legislation to so enlarge its coverage, and the passage of the 1950 Act by the Congress for this purpose, this Court nonetheless held that the 1914 Act included vertical mergers from its very inception, and thus required du Pont to divest its interest in General Motors stock, which had been acquired in 1915.

LEdHN[5B][] [5B]

[26] It is therefore clear that the "proceedings" in the Congress with reference to the authority of the Commission itself to issue or apply to the district courts for the issuance of preliminary injunctions in merger cases have no relevance whatever to the question before us. In short, Congress gave no attention to the exercise of judicial power by the courts of appeals under the All Writs Act, leaving that power intact and the standing of the Commission to invoke it undiminished. We thus hold [*612] that the Commission has standing to seek preliminary relief from the Court of Appeals under the circumstances alleged. As stated earlier, we must take the allegations of the Commission as true, and so do not pass upon whether a preliminary injunction should be issued. That is for the Court of Appeals [1747] to decide on remand, as it would decide any application to it for relief under the All Writs Act.

Reversed and remanded.

Dissent by: FORTAS

Dissent

[*812] MR. JUSTICE FORTAS, with whom MR. JUSTICE HARLAN, MR. JUSTICE STEWART and MR. JUSTICE WHITE join, dissenting.

The Court today decides that the courts of appeals must entertain original applications by the Federal [*27] Trade Commission for the issuance of preliminary injunctions to restrain mergers alleged to violate § 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. § 18 (1964 ed.), pending proceedings before the Commission to determine whether such mergers violate that section.

In so deciding, the Court determines that the Commission -- an administrative agency with defined and circumscribed powers -- is authorized to seek such relief in the courts of appeals; and that the courts of appeals, under the All Writs Act, 28 U. S. C. § 1651 (a) (1964 ed.), have power to entertain the Commission's petition and to grant the injunctive relief.

[12] Cf. United States v. Philadelphia Nat. Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 348-349 (1963).

This decision cannot be supported. Not a single one of the prior decisions of this Court cited as authority sustains it, either specifically or indirectly, or by principle or analogy. No statute of the Congress can be appropriately summoned to the Court's aid. The plain, unmistakable intent of the Congress in defining the Commission's powers and the jurisdiction of the courts of appeals is that no such threshold injunctive power is available at the Commission's behest. The Act plainly and explicitly vests the governmental power [*28] to restrain and enjoin violations of the Act in the district courts, [*613] not in the court of appeals; and it plainly and explicitly empowers the United States attorneys "under the direction of the Attorney General" -- and not the Federal Trade Commission -- to institute such proceedings. 15 U. S. C. § 25 (1964 ed.).

Since 1956, the Federal Trade Commission has persistently requested the Congress to enact legislation giving the Commission itself the power to enjoin, or alternatively, to seek a district court order to enjoin mergers pending the outcome of the Commission's proceedings. Congress has just as persistently refused to do so.

Beginning in 1956, at least 37 bills have been introduced in the Congress, directed to providing the Commission with a threshold, temporary remedy. None has been enacted, despite the unequivocal statements of the three chairmen of the Commission who served during those years that the agency presently has no power to seek relief ancillary to its administrative proceedings. This Court now bestows what the Congress has withheld.

The statements in the Court's opinion indicating that its result is necessary unless we are [*29] to "stultify congressional purpose" fly in the teeth of the record, plainly written and repeatedly reiterated. Congress is keenly interested in enforcement of § 7. But it has demonstrated over and over again that it has no interest in arming the Commission with the power today conferred upon it. It created and equipped the Commission with administrative and quasi-judicial powers to serve a function quite distinct from that of a prosecutor or litigant. It has repeatedly declined the urgent request to revise the Commission's role and function. Indeed, Congress has refused to empower the Commission to ask for this relief in an otherwise suitable forum -- the district [813] courts. But the Court today gives this agency, which Congress obviously regards as unsuitable for the purpose, power to resort to an unsuitable forum -- the courts of appeals -- for the same purpose.

[*614] The Commission, the Executive Branch of the Government, the Congress and all courts which have passed upon the point have until today proceeded on the expressed [1748] premise that the Federal Trade Commission has no authority to seek such relief. [1] [*31] I have not found a single commentator [*30] in this much-

---

[1] See Federal Trade Comm'n v. International Paper Co., 241 F.2d 372 (C. A. 2d Cir. 1956); Federal Trade Comm'n v. Farm Journal, Inc. (C. A. 3d Cir. 1955). In In the Matter of A. G. Spalding & Bros., Inc. (F. T. C. Docket No. 6478), the Commission failed to obtain preliminary relief in the First Circuit, but did get respondent's commitment not to alter the status quo save on 30 days' notice. See A. G. Spalding & Bros., Inc. v. F. T. C., 301 F.2d 585 (C. A. 3d Cir. 1962).

The sole instance where injunctive relief was obtained is Board of Governors v. Transamerica Corp., 184 F.2d 311 (C. A. 9th Cir. 1950), cert. denied, 340 U.S. 883. In Transamerica the threatened action would have defeated the Board's jurisdiction entirely. The Board (whose role in § 7 enforcement is like the FTC's) argued both in the Court of Appeals and in opposition to the petition for certiorari, that if Transamerica were not restrained from disposing of stock holdings the legality of whose acquisition was in issue in the administrative proceedings, the effect under the pre-1950 version of § 7, as construed by this Court in Arrow-Hart & Hegeman Electric Co. v. F. T. C., 291 U.S. 587, would be to "oust the Board of its jurisdiction under Section 11 of the Clayton Act . . . [and to] defeat the exclusive jurisdiction of the Court of Appeals to enforce or affirm such order as the Board might make . . . ." Government's Brief in Opposition in Transamerica Corp. v. Board of Governors (Nos. 322 and 323, October Term, 1950), at pp. 5, 8-9, 15. See also United States v. Philadelphia Nat. Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 339, n. 17, where Transamerica appears to have been distinguished from International Paper, supra, precisely on the ground that the writ there was necessary to protect the "jurisdiction" both of the agency and of the Court of Appeals -- a conventional use of the All Writs Act.

discussed field of law who has suggested that the Commission has such authority, and none is cited in the Court's opinion or in the briefs of the parties. [2]

[*615] I can only assume that the majority is motivated by a desire to lend all assistance to the Federal Trade Commission in its administration of § 7. However commendable this motivation may be in general, it is here entirely misdirected. Indulgence in this generous spirit unjustifiably burdens the courts of appeals with a fact-finding duty which they are unable to perform; disrupts the statutory division of functions between the Commission and the Department of Justice; and deprives parties of the opportunity for fair and careful consideration of their proposals which is promised by our law, by the decisions of this Court and the economic needs of the Nation.

The Clayton [*32] Act contains specific and comprehensive enforcement provisions. There is no vacuum to be filled by ingenuity. There is no room for improvisation. The Act is fully armed with a triple arsenal. Enforcement powers with respect to mergers under § 7 are vested in the Department of Justice, the Federal Trade Commission and private persons who claim injury as a result of the merger. Both the Department [814] of Justice and private litigants are authorized to seek injunctive relief in the district courts. But the role and function of the Federal Trade Commission is differently conceived.

The powers of the Commission and the manner of their exercise and of review and enforcement of Commission orders are set out in meticulous detail. Whenever the Commission "shall have reason to believe that any person is violating or has violated" § 7, it shall issue a complaint. The complaint is to be served upon "such person and the Attorney General." [1749] The Attorney General may intervene in the Commission's proceeding. He may institute actions in the district court for injunctive relief. [*616] The Commission is to hold a hearing; testimony is to be taken; the Commission is [*33] to "make a report in writing"; and it is empowered to issue an order to cease and desist and to compel the respondent to "divest itself of the stock . . . or assets . . . held . . . contrary to the provisions of [§ 7]." 15 U. S. C. § 21 (b) (1964 ed.). (Emphasis supplied.) The respondent may obtain review of the order in an appropriate court of appeals in the manner and with the consequences meticulously defined in the Act, as hereinafter discussed.

There is no question -- I submit that there can be no question -- that Congress from the outset intended that the Federal Trade Commission should not have other or different or supplementary or additional power to enforce § 7. [3] [*35] The Commission was created in the same [*617] year that the Clayton Act was adopted. It was

[2] On the contrary, the common view is that such authority is entirely lacking. See, e. g., Kaysen & Turner, Antitrust Policy 258 (1959); Duke, Scope of Relief Under Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 63 Col. L. Rev. 1192, 1206, n. 85 (1963); Note, 79 Harv. L. Rev. 391, 404 (1965); Note, 40 N. Y. U. L. Rev. 771 (1965); Comment, 32 N. Y. U. L. Rev. 1297 (1957).

[3] The Court's opinion asserts, in alleged demonstration of the "ancillary powers" which have been inferred on the Commission's behalf, that it may bring "contempt actions in the appropriate court of appeals when the court's enforcement orders were violated, though it has no statutory authority in this respect." The Court errs. The Commission's powers in this respect are not "implied." The machinery by which the Commission procures compliance with its orders is, and always has been, spelled out by statute. Until 1959, one could with impunity violate an FTC Clayton Act order. Such an order was not final until the respondent sought judicial review and a Court of Appeals granted enforcement. Disobedience thereafter was a contempt of court. In the event the respondent did not seek review, the Commission was required to ascertain that he was violating its order and then proceed, pursuant to express statutory provision (15 U. S. C. § 21), to seek enforcement in the courts of appeals. See 28 U. S. C. § 2112 (1964 ed.), authorizing the courts of appeals to promulgate rules for enforcement proceedings; and see, e. g., 1st Cir. R. 16. Cf. Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 70. A violation thereafter constituted contempt of court. The courts declined to infer any more convenient substitute for this three-step process. See Federal Trade Comm'n v. Henry Broch & Co., 368 U.S. 360, 365; Federal Trade Comm'n v. Ruberoid Co., 343 U.S. 470, 477-479.

The statute was amended in 1959. An FTC order under the Clayton Act is now final upon expiration of the time allowed respondent to seek judicial review. If he does not appeal the order and violates its terms after it becomes final, the Government may proceed, pursuant to statute (15 U. S. C. §§ 21 (g) and (l)), to seek civil penalties of up to $ 5,000 per violation.

In short, and contrary to the suggestion in the Court's opinion, the Commission's power to enforce compliance with its orders is and has been wholly statutory. Nothing has been left to implication.

supposed to be an expert, administrative agency. It was not intended to be a litigation arm of the United States except as its own final orders might be involved. [4] It was not intended to have power to seek or deliver the quick result, even in emergencies. This power, so far as the Government is concerned, was explicitly, carefully confined to the district courts on application [*34] of the [815] United States attorney "under the direction of the Attorney General."

Section 15 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. § 25, expressly authorizes the Department of Justice to proceed in the district courts of the United States to obtain preliminary relief against allegedly unlawful mergers. Section 16 makes the same remedy available on application of private litigants. 15 U. S. C. § 26 (1964 ed.). Nowhere is such power given to the Commission. It would be incredible to suggest that this omission was an oversight -- or even an error. It was by design -- and, I suggest, by rational design.

The Commission was not intended to -- it has no power to -- it should not -- [1750] make a judgment on the merits prior to notice and hearing. To sanction its doing so is to strike a devastating blow at the fundamental theory upon which the exercise of both prosecutorial and adjudicatory functions by an administrative agency is based. Cf. [*618] § 5 (c) of the [*36] Administrative Procedure Act of 1946, 5 U. S. C. § 1004 (c) (1964 ed.).

The Commission, prior to taking evidence and writing a report, is supposed to make only a very limited judgment: that there is "reason to believe" the law is being violated. But to obtain a preliminary injunction, it must -- without hearing the other side, and ordinarily merely on its staff's recommendation, necessarily based upon a quick exposure of the facts -- file affidavits or produce evidence with the calculated purpose of demonstrating to the court of appeals that consummation of the merger will have such adverse effects that it must be halted in limine. In fact, and in all realism, it must take positions and establish, with sufficient positiveness to overcome strenuous opposition, that the merger will tend substantially to lessen competition or create danger of monopoly, that it is harmful to the economy, immediately threatening in its consequences, and that it is unlawful. There must be Commission conclusions, not merely the views of the staff. Their assertion and necessarily stout advocacy make a mockery of a subsequent quasi-judicial proceeding in which the Commission [*37] is supposed objectively to consider the same issues on the basis solely of the record.

The clear design of the statute is that the authority to decide, on behalf of the Government, to seek the powerful remedy of preliminary injunction, and the power to do so, are vested in the Attorney General. That is his business -- his type of function. It is deliberately withheld from the Commission. That is not its business. The Commission is supposed to be an expert agency, acting deliberately, bringing to bear upon the complex economic problems of a merger, that judgment and experience which can emerge only from careful factual inquiry, the taking of evidence and the formulation of a report. The Federal Trade Commission was not intended [*619] to be a gun, [5] [*38] a carbon copy of the Department of Justice. [6]

[*816] It has steadily been acknowledged by spokesmen for the Commission, by leading members of the Congress, and by officials of the Executive Branch that the FTC has no basis in statute to seek the relief the Court today makes available to it. In the Appendix to this opinion, I refer to these acknowledgments and I describe the

---

[4] See 51 Cong. Rec. 1963, 13047, 8977 (1914); Rublee, The Original Plan and Early History of the Federal Trade Commission, 11 Acad. Pol. Sci. Proc. 666 (1925).

[5] Where Congress has determined that it is appropriate for the Commission to seek threshold relief in order to protect the public, it has expressly so provided -- directing that the Commission proceed in an appropriate tribunal, the United States District Courts. See § 13 (a) of the Federal Trade Commission Act (Wheeler-Lea amendments), 15 U. S. C. § 53 (a) (1964 ed.); § 302 of the Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, 21 U. S. C. § 332 (1964 ed.); § 7 (b) of the Wool Products Labeling Act, 15 U. S. C. § 68e (b) (1964 ed.); § 9 (b) of the Fur Products Labeling Act, 15 U. S. C. § 69g (b) (1964 ed.); § 6 (a) of the Flammable Fabrics Act, 15 U. S. C. § 1195 (a) (1964 ed.); and § 8 of the Textile Fiber Products Identification Act, 15 U. S. C. § 70f (1964 ed.).

[6] See Elman, Rulemaking Procedures in the FTC's Enforcement of the Merger Law, 78 Harv. L. Rev. 385, 387-388 (1964).

unsuccessful, oft-repeated efforts of the Commission to obtain legislation to give it the power it has now successfully obtained from this Court. [7]

[39] [*620] In [1751] short, the Commission has no power to decide that a proposed merger should be enjoined pendente lite; it has no authority to seek such relief, temporary or permanent, in any court -- trial or appellate; and Congress has repeatedly turned a deaf ear to its requests for such power.

It should not be given such jurisdiction by fiat of this Court. It should do what Congress intended it to do -- upon determining that it has "reasonable cause to believe" that § 7 is being or has been violated, it should issue a complaint, hold a hearing, make a report, and issue an order. If exigencies require, it may refer the matter to the Attorney General for consideration as to whether the Department of Justice should seek a preliminary injunction in the appropriate district court. [8] If [*621] the merger is consummated, [817] the Commission should, if warranted, exercise the enormous power that the statute expressly gives it: to require the offender to "divest itself of the stock, or other share capital, or assets, held . . . contrary to the provisions" of § 7. It is a cliche of doubtful truth in this situation that an omelette cannot be unscrambled. [*40] This Court, as well as the Commission, has entered such orders of divestiture after -- and sometimes long after -- the merger has been consummated. See, e. g., United States v. Von's Grocery Co., ante, p. 270 (decree six years after merger); United States v. El Paso Gas Co., 376 U.S. 651 (decree seven years after merger). Unscrambling may be difficult; but Congress may well have been justified in the view that the extra effort is warranted in the interests of securing what it hoped would be careful administrative consideration of the merits of proposed mergers. Not every merger deserves sudden death. In many situations, mergers serve no purpose except the pursuit of bigness. But some are distinctly beneficial to the achievement of a competitive economy. [9] [*42] [1752] I respectfully submit that this Court should not encourage the machinegun approach to the vastly important and difficult merger problem. It should indulge the [7] The Court declares that these materials are irrelevant because Congress had before it proposals to authorize the Commission itself to issue restraining orders pendente lite or to apply to the district courts for such relief. But the fact that no one proposed and Congress did not consider providing that the Commission might have recourse to the courts of appeals merely emphasizes the extreme and extraordinary nature of the device which the Court today creates. The plain fact, and the short answer, is that Congress refused to authorize preliminary restraints at the command of the Commission. Its refusal to authorize such relief in the district courts demonstrates, a fortiori, that it would not create such a remedy in the courts of appeals.

---

The Court also suggests that it would be improper to draw conclusions from congressional inaction. The inference that I draw from congressional refusal to make preliminary injunctive relief available to the FTC is that such inaction confirms (a) that Congress in devising the statutory plan did not intend the Commission to have such power, and (b) that the relief sought is not consonant with the congressional plan for administering § 7. In fact, this is not a situation where the agency went to Congress in the belief that its authority was unclear, or to remove doubts concerning it. Compare United States v. Speers, 382 U.S. 266, 274-275; United States v. du Pont & Co., 353 U.S. 586, 590; Wong Yang Sung v. McGrath, 339 U.S. 33, 47-48. Here, there is no doubt that the agency sought additional powers, not clarification. It admitted -- it asserted -- that it had no present authority to obtain preliminary relief (see Appendix to this opinion). It sought what it confessedly did not have. It sought this not once, but repeatedly, over a period of 10 years. Congress did not grant its request. Nor should we. See Fribourg Navig. Co. v. Commissioner, 383 U.S. 272, 279-286; Blau v. Lehman, 368 U.S. 403, 412-413.

[8] Spokesmen for the FTC have frequently acknowledged the availability of such a course. See, e. g., Hearings before the Antitrust Subcommittee of the House Committee on the Judiciary, 87th Cong., 1st Sess., ser. No. 5, pp. 101-102 (testimony of Paul Rand Dixon) (1961); Kintner, The Federal Trade Commission in 1960 -- Apologia Pro Vita Nostra, 1961 Antitrust Law Symposium 21, 41.

The Commission also has on occasion successfully employed the technique of obtaining an agreement of the parties to segregate assets so as to facilitate divestiture should it be decreed. See, e. g., A. G. Spalding & Bros., Inc. v. F. T. C., 301 F.2d 585, 588 (C. A. 3d Cir. 1962).

[9] For example, in some situations the merger of relatively small competitors may result in creation of an enterprise capable of meaningful competition with a company otherwise in unchallenged domination of an industry. See Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 319, and legislative materials therein cited.

Congress in its desire that at least the Federal Trade Commission should be required to move with caution and deliberation. A "preliminary" injunction, in effect during the years required to complete the Commission's proceedings, [*41] often -- probably usually -- means that [*622] the plans to merge will be abandoned. [10] We should not beguile ourselves by ignoring this point. "Preliminary" here usually means final. And I respectfully suggest that it is permissible for Congress to insist that the merits of mergers should be carefully considered.

I come now to the second phase of the Court's opinion. Having satisfied itself that the Commission may apply to the courts of appeals for preliminary injunctions, the Court turns to the question of the jurisdiction of the appellate courts to entertain such applications. It finds jurisdiction in the courts of appeals by reason of the All Writs Act: "The Supreme Court and all courts established by Act of Congress may issue all writs necessary or appropriate in aid of their respective jurisdictions and agreeable to the usages and principles of law." 28 U. S. C. § 1651 (a).

This is, in my opinion, a totally unjustified employment of the All Writs Act. That Act is an implementing statute, designed to authorize the courts to supply deficiencies in procedure so as to enable them effectively to exercise their jurisdiction. The Act is abused where, as here, it is contorted to confer jurisdiction where Congress has plainly withheld it. [*43] The reason why this Court may not command or vindicate the exercise of [818] jurisdiction by the courts of appeals to issue, as an original matter, injunctions against claimed violations of § 7 are overwhelming. In summary, they are:

1. The courts of appeals have no jurisdiction with respect to § 7 except to review an order entered by the Commission after statutory proceedings. Until such an order is entered, they have no jurisdiction, either existing or potential, which an injunctive order may implement.

[*623] 2. By express statutory provision, even after a Commission order has been entered, the courts of appeals have no jurisdiction as to the merits of the merger, on application of the Commission. Only a party affected by the Commission's order may file a petition to review. If one does not, the Commission's sole remedy is to seek penalties in the district courts under 15 U. S. C. § 21 (l). [11]

3. The statute contains its own "all writs" [*44] provision which is clearly and specifically limited to instances in which the court of appeals' jurisdiction has already attached upon petition to review a Commission order filed by a person who is the target of that order.

4. There is not a single precedent of this Court which supports the Court's conclusion. None of the cases of this Court cited in the majority opinion lends it the slightest support.

5. Exclusive jurisdiction to issue preliminary injunctions against mergers is vested in the district courts, upon application of the Department of Justice or a private person. The courts of appeals have no jurisdiction to enter such orders.

6. The courts of appeals are not equipped to make the original, complex factual determinations necessary to decide whether a prospective merger should [1753] be enjoined. To burden them with this task is to distort their function; to saddle them with a function which they cannot perform; to load upon them the necessity of twice passing upon a challenged merger; and to deprive the parties of an opportunity for a hearing in a forum equipped to make original factual determinations.

. . . . .

The jurisdiction and powers of the courts of [*45] appeals with respect to Commission proceedings under § 7 are defined by the statute in specific and exhaustive detail. [*624] A petition to review may be filed with an appropriate court of appeals by "any person required by [an] order of the commission" to cease or desist or to divest itself of stock or assets. 15 U. S. C. § 21 (c). The Court's jurisdiction attaches upon the filing of the petition, ibid., and becomes exclusive upon filing of the record with it. 15 U. S. C. § 21 (d). The Commission's findings as to the facts are conclusive if supported by substantial evidence. 15 U. S. C. § 21 (c). If additional evidence is to be taken, the Court must remand to the Commission; it cannot itself take evidence. Ibid. The Court may affirm, modify or set aside the Commission's order. It may enforce the Commission's order as affirmed and may "issue such writs as are ancillary to its jurisdiction or are necessary in its judgment to prevent injury to the public or to competitors pendente lite." Ibid.

[10] See Kaysen & Turner, Antitrust Policy 248 (1959); Note, 40 N. Y. U. L. Rev. 771, 772, n. 7 (1965), and cases cited therein.

[11] See note 3, supra.

The Court does not -- it could not -- contend that these provisions lend the slightest support [*46] to its conclusion. [819] They clearly, emphatically, and pointedly contradict it. The courts of appeals have jurisdiction when and if, and only if and when, a Commission order has been entered and a petition for review is filed -- not by the Commission but by the aggrieved person. [12] When a petition for review [*625] is filed, the court of appeals has "plenary" jurisdiction, implemented by the self-contained all-writs provision; and when the record is filed, that jurisdiction is exclusive. Prior to the entry of the Commission's order, the courts of appeals simply have no jurisdiction, existing or potential. The general All Writs Act is limited to writs "in aid of their respective jurisdictions." It is not a charter to be used at the behest of an administrative agency in order to supply it with a weapon which Congress has withheld. This is clear enough; and nothing in our prior decisions expands the meaning of the All Writs Act to cover the present situation.

[47] The Court cites a number of cases to prove that an appeal need not have been perfected to call into play the power of the appellate courts to issue protective writs. This is clear and obvious as applied in those cases. Each of them involved issuance of a writ to prevent action or inaction by a trial court which would otherwise mean that the case would not be adjudicated on its merits and therefore could not be reviewed on appeal. The typical case involves the issuance of mandamus to the trial court to compel it to proceed with the adjudication of a pending [1754] case. In this category are the first three cases cited on the point by the Court. [13]

[48] The fourth case cited by the Court clearly demonstrates the correct principle and the error of the Court's decision in the present case. In Roche v. Evaporated Milk Assn., 319 U.S. 21 (1943), the respondent was [*626] indicted for price fixing. It filed a plea in abatement based upon an alleged fault in the authorization of the indictment. The District Court dismissed the plea. On application for a writ of mandamus, the Court of Appeals reversed, but this Court reversed the Court of Appeals because whatever might have been the merits of the District Court's dismissal of the plea in abatement, that dismissal did not defeat appellate jurisdiction. The District Court would proceed to adjudicate the [820] merits of the case, and appellate jurisdiction would thereafter be available. The Court (per Chief Justice Stone) stated that "while a function of mandamus in aid of appellate jurisdiction is to remove obstacles to appeal, it may not appropriately be used merely as a substitute for the appeal procedure prescribed by the statute." Id., at 26. The Court said that "The traditional use of the writ in aid of appellate jurisdiction [*49] . . . has been to confine an inferior court to a lawful exercise of its prescribed jurisdiction or to compel it to exercise its authority when it is its duty to do so." Ibid. Since the District Court was proceeding to adjudicate the case, and any error it might have committed would come to the appellate courts upon appeal, the Court held that the Court of Appeals erred in issuing the writ.

---

[12] Indeed, there is no certainty that the particular court of appeals selected by the FTC on its application for preliminary relief will ever undertake to review an ultimate cease-and-desist order. Section 11 (c) of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. § 21 (c), provides that a person against whom such an order is entered may appeal "in the court of appeals . . . for any circuit within which such violation occurred or within which such person resides or carries on business." In the present case, review of any final FTC order might lie not in the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, but in the Sixth or Eighth Circuit where both Dean and Bowman carry on business. See Transamerica Corp. v. Board of Governors, 206 F.2d 163 (C. A. 3d Cir. 1953), cert. denied, 346 U.S. 901, setting aside an injunction issued by the Ninth Circuit; A. G. Spalding & Bros., Inc. v. F. T. C., 301 F.2d 585 (C. A. 3d Cir. 1962), enforcing an FTC order as to which an injunction unsuccessfully had been sought in the First Circuit seven years earlier.

[13] Ex parte Crane, 5 Pet. 190, 193; Ex parte Bradstreet, 7 Pet. 634; McClellan v. Carland, 217 U.S. 268. From its excerpt from McClellan, the Court omits the italicized portion: "[A] writ of mandamus may issue in aid of the appellate jurisdiction which might otherwise be defeated by the unauthorized action of the court below." 217 U.S., at 280.

These decisions, therefore, are far from supporting the Court's decision in the present case. They are to the precise contrary. They demonstrate the obvious meaning of the language of the All Writs Act: that it is to be employed "in aid of" appellate jurisdiction -- not to vest general restraining power in the courts of appeals, but to authorize them to overcome action or inaction which would prevent the case from proceeding to judgment and then to appellate review in the ordinary course. Nothing of the sort -- nothing resembling it -- appears in the present situation. The Commission may proceed with its hearings, as provided by statute. As provided by [*627] statute, it may enter an order requiring respondents to divest themselves of the acquired assets. It may even -- although [*50] I express no opinion on the issue -- require action by the respondents, if they have irretrievably disposed of some or all of the assets, to take additional action to make available assets, customers, etc., for purchase by others so as to re-create a competitor, perhaps even if such action involves disposition of nonacquired assets. [14] And the appropriate court of appeals and this Court will have full, complete appellate jurisdiction with respect to its order.

The Court cites four of its prior decisions involving the availability of the All Writs Act in connection with administrative proceedings. These provide no assistance to it. First, it refers to Arrow Transp. Co. v. Southern R. Co., 372 U.S. 658. [*51] This case is precisely contra to the Court's conclusion here. After a "brief and informal" hearing which led to a tentative conclusion that the increase was "unreasonable," [1755] the ICC suspended respondent's proposed rate increase and instituted a formal proceeding to adjudicate the reasonableness of the increase. The proceeding was still in progress when the maximum time provided by statute for suspension of the increase expired. Petitioner sued in the District Court, seeking an injunction pending the Commission's decision. This Court sustained denial of the injunction. It held that the Commission's jurisdiction was exclusive of any power in the courts to grant the relief, and that Congress' action in vesting power in the Commission left no latitude for court action even though it might mean that the small shipper could not continue in business under the higher rate. MR. JUSTICE BRENNAN, speaking for [*628] the Court, observed, in words that are [821] applicable here, that if the courts were to entertain petitioner's application for an injunction against the effectiveness of the rates pending Commission decision, they would in effect be prejudging the [*52] case and prejudicing administrative action. "Such consideration," he said, "would create the hazard of forbidden judicial intrusion into the administrative domain." Id., at 670. Correspondingly, I suggest that it is unlikely in the real world that if the Federal Trade Commission made representations to a court of appeals that a merger should be enjoined pending Commission proceedings, and if the court issued such an injunction, the Commission's ultimate determination would be uninfluenced by these powerful factors. I respectfully suggest that this is not a tolerable result. [15]

[53] I come now to the case which the Court's opinion characterizes as "dispositive" of "this issue." Whitney Bank v. New Orleans Bank, 379 U.S. 411. [16] It is indeed a [*629] square holding on an issue that is not anywhere near the problem of this case. Whitney holds that a court of appeals may enter such orders as will protect its

---

[14] Compare United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 247 F.Supp. 308, 316 (D. C. E. D. Mo. 1965), aff'd, 382 U.S. 12, with Reynolds Metals Co. v. F. T. C., 114 U. S. App. D. C. 2, 309 F.2d 223 (1962). See Duke, op. cit. supra, note 2.

[15] The Court's opinion today eschews the result in Arrow Transportation and fastens instead on footnote 22, 372 U.S., at 671, which merely reserves judgment as to "decisions which have recognized a limited judicial power to preserve the court's jurisdiction or maintain the status quo by injunction pending review of an agency's action through the prescribed statutory channels. . . ." The footnote adds that "such power has been deemed merely incidental to the courts' jurisdiction to review final agency action, and has never been recognized in derogation of such a clear congressional purpose to oust judicial power as that manifested in the Interstate Commerce Act." (Emphasis supplied.) The cases cited demonstrate the conventional use of the extraordinary writs referred to in the footnote. In Scripps-Howard Radio, Inc. v. F. C. C., 316 U.S. 4, a stay was issued ancillary to an appeal already taken pursuant to statute. Its purpose was to suspend, pending action by the court in which the appeal was lodged, changes authorized by completed agency action. For the thoroughly conventional nature of Transamerica, also cited in the footnote, see note 1, supra.

[16] Continental Ill. Nat. Bank v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 294 U.S. 648, 675, cited by the Court in connection with its assertion that courts have power to preserve the status quo while administrative proceedings are in progress, relates instead to the power of a bankruptcy court to enjoin the sale of collateral pledged by a debtor.

jurisdiction -- its jurisdiction having fully attached by a prior appeal from a final order of the Federal Reserve Board, in accordance with statute. Briefly stated, the Federal Reserve Board had entered an order permitting a New Orleans bank to operate a subsidiary in Louisiana through a holding company. A petition to review that order was duly filed, pursuant to statute, in the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit. While this was pending, Louisiana enacted a statute bearing on the problem. Meanwhile, the Comptroller of the Currency indicated that he would issue a certificate to the new bank. Competing banks filed in the District Court for the District of Columbia an action for injunction [1756] against the Comptroller. The injunction was granted and the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit [*54] affirmed. It was the latter action that was before this Court, on certiorari. This Court held that the District Court had no jurisdiction to pass on the merits of the controversy by enjoining the Comptroller; that exclusive jurisdiction as to the authorization of the new bank was vested in the Federal Reserve Board. But it stayed its mandate for 60 days to [822] give the parties time to move in the Fifth Circuit for a remand to the Federal Reserve Board for reconsideration of its order in light of the subsequent Louisiana statute. On remand, the Court stated, "the Fifth Circuit's power to protect its jurisdiction is beyond question," id., at 426 -- this in a case which had been in the Court of Appeals for three years following final agency action.

[55] [*630] This is entirely in accord with the traditional and established construction of the All Writs Act, and with the statute governing proceedings of the Federal Reserve Board. Jurisdiction had properly been acquired by the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit. Of course, it had power to issue whatever orders were necessary to preserve its jurisdiction, pending remand or otherwise. The Court's statement that it is "analogous" to the relief requested by the Commission is simply in error. It is analogous only if we disregard the facts that in Whitney, a final order had been entered by the administrative agency, appeal taken and the jurisdiction of the Court of Appeals had attached. Whereas in the present case none of these has occurred and we are bluntly asked to vest the courts of appeals with authority to consider issuing an injunction as a matter of original jurisdiction -- without an agency order, without an appeal, and without statutory jurisdiction.

The net of the matter is simply, plainly and clearly that the decision of the Court in this case is novel -- totally novel. It is in direct contravention of the careful, specific plan and directions of the Congress [*56] with respect to the administration of § 7 of the Clayton Act. It is in direct conflict with the purpose and office of the All Writs Act. It is totally unsupported by prior decisions of this Court and contrary to both Roche, supra, and Arrow Transportation, supra. It is unwise in terms of the administration of § 7. It places an unwise, unjustified and disruptive burden on the courts of appeals and saddles them with original jurisdiction which they cannot properly exercise and a fact-finding function in elaborate, complex situations, which they should not be asked to undertake.

The courts of appeals are not courts of original jurisdiction. They have neither the facilities nor the institutional aptitude for determining in the first instance [*631] whether a particular merger should be halted. This is always intensely a question of fact -- hotly controverted -- turning upon factual-economic problems such as the ascertainment of facts as to the "line of commerce," the "section of the country" and the probable effect upon competition. And these are questions committed in the first instance to the FTC and not to the courts. See Whitney Bank v. New Orleans Bank, supra, at 421. [*57]

Without any findings of the Commission or a court, the courts of appeals are now burdened with the task of deciding these questions. The fact of the matter is that the Court's decision commands the courts of appeals to be trial courts for purposes of those § 7 cases which the Commission chooses to bring before them. I share the view expressed by my Brother BLACK and joined by my Brother DOUGLAS that:

"The business of trial courts is to try cases. That of appellate courts is to review the records of cases coming from trial courts below. In my judgment it is bad for appellate courts to be compelled to interrupt [823] and delay [1757] their pressing appellate duties in order to hear and adjudicate cases which trial courts have been specially created to handle as a part of their daily work." United States v. Barnett, 376 U.S. 681, 724 (dissenting opinion).

Yet the responsibility today imposed upon appellate courts requires them to try cases. This is precisely what is required in determining whether a merger should be restrained during the years required to complete an FTC hearing on the merits. [17] [*59] Frequently, perhaps generally, [*632] [*58] to enjoin a merger "temporarily" is equivalent to entering a final order. The financial and commercial commitments involved in an agreement to acquire or to merge are apt to be so restrictive of the managerial flexibility of the parties, and so dependent upon transient circumstances, that they cannot be maintained in limbo while an FTC proceeding wends its leisurely way toward a wearying conclusion. Because the result of the application for temporary relief may be conclusive for all time, there is a discernible and understandable tendency on the part of the parties to put in a full case. [18]

Few § 7 cases are so simple that summary treatment is appropriate. See, e. g., United States v. Bethlehem Steel Corp., 157 F.Supp. 877, 879 (summary judgment denied), 168 F.Supp. 576 (D. C. S. D. N. Y. 1958) (merger enjoined after full factual hearing). The risk involved in deciding an application for "preliminary" injunction on affidavits is so great that to invite it, as the Court here does, is to invite the administration of justice which is rough and ready, to say the least. On the other hand, to impel the courts of appeals to take testimony in these cases is an anomaly [*60] that should not be tolerated.

[*633] This Court has recognized that there is no quick and easy, short and simple way to resolve the complexities of most antitrust litigation. In White Motor Co. v. United States, 372 U.S. 253, the Court reversed summary judgment for the Government. It held that summary judgment was inappropriate and a trial should be had with respect to the Government's charge of illegal vertical territorial limitations. It specifically relied upon the "analogy from the merger field that leads us to conclude that a trial should be had." Id., at 263. The Court said (per DOUGLAS, J.) that in cases "involving the question whether a particular merger will tend 'substantially to lessen competition'" or whether "the acquired [824] company was a failing one," "a trial rather than the use of the summary judgment is normally necessary." Id., at 264. See also United States v. Diebold, Inc., 369 U.S. 654, where factual issues paralleling those in the present case were held unsuitable for summary judgment.

[1758] Similarly, in La Buy v. Howes Leather Co., 352 U.S. 249, [*61] this Court refused to permit reference of antitrust cases to a master. It held (per CLARK, J.) that "most litigation in the antitrust field is complex," and that this is "an impelling reason for trial before a regular, experienced trial judge" rather than a master. Id., at 259.

By its decision today, however, this Court commands that these admittedly difficult, complex cases be heard and adjudicated by the courts of appeals on original applications for "temporary" injunctions. I cannot reconcile this result with the facts, with this Court's awareness of the complexity of the task, or with proper regard for the courts of appeals. Apart from the judicial problem which this invention creates, we must recognize that the interposition of the courts, without congressional direction, at the threshold of the administrative process [*634] is contrary to the congressional plan and the reiterated holdings of this Court. As the Court said in Arrow Transportation, supra, judicial "consideration," prior to final administrative adjudication, "would create the hazard of forbidden judicial intrusion into the administrative domain." 372 U.S., at 670. [*62] This Court's insistence upon the "primary jurisdiction" of administrative agencies illustrates its sensitivity to the point. The Court has even insisted that "Dismissal of antitrust suits, where an administrative remedy has superseded the judicial one, is the usual course."

---

[17] The Commission's estimate in the present case that its proceedings would endure for at least one year seems unprecedentedly optimistic. In A. G. Spalding & Bros., Inc. v. F. T. C., 301 F.2d 585 (C. A. 3d Cir. 1962), where the FTC unsuccessfully sought an injunction pendente lite, more than seven years elapsed between complaint and enforcement. Pillsbury Mills, Inc. (FTC Docket No. 6000) was in the Commission for eight and one-half years; Crown Zellerbach Corp. v. F. T. C., 296 F.2d 800 (C. A. 9th Cir. 1961), for nearly four years, and it was another four years before the Commission's order was affirmed. These delays were not unknown to Congress. See Hearings before the Antitrust Subcommittee of the House Committee on the Judiciary, 87th Cong., 1st Sess., ser. No. 5, p. 86 (1961).

[18] See United States v. Ingersoll-Rand Co., 218 F.Supp. 530 (D. C. W. D. Pa.), aff'd, 320 F.2d 509 (C. A. 3d Cir. 1963), where the hearing on an application for preliminary relief took five days. See also United States v. FMC Corp., 218 F.Supp. 817 (D. C. N. D. Cal.), appeal dismissed, 321 F.2d 534 (C. A. 9th Cir.), application for preliminary injunction denied, 84 Sup. Ct. 4 (1963) (Goldberg, J., in chambers).

Pan American World Airways v. United States, 371 U.S. 296, 313, n. 19; see also United States v. Western Pac. R. Co., 352 U.S. 59; Far East Conference v. United States, 342 U.S. 570; United States Nav. Co. v. Cunard S. S. Co., 284 U.S. 474.

The present case illustrates the profound difficulties that the Court of Appeals will face in reaching a decision, within the practical limits of its available time and procedures, as to whether it should issue a "preliminary" injunction. There are here sharp factual disputes concerning the financial status of Bowman and the availability to it of the so-called "failing company" defense. There is a claim that Dean Foods is about to lose its largest customer and that as a result the merged company will be smaller than Bowman was before the merger. And the bona fides of the "interested" prospective [*63] purchaser uncovered by the Commission's staff is in dispute.

The Court of Appeals will have to make a judgment concerning these issues, as well as the other, complex factors that are determinative. It will get little comfort from the label of the relief sought as "preliminary" because it will know that the patient may die while the "temporary" anesthesia is in effect. And it will know that, realistically, it has no control over the length of the proceedings -- whether the Commission's hearings will [*635] last a year or eight years, or something in between. [825] By contrast, when the Department of Justice or a private person seeks a "preliminary" injunction in a district court, as provided by statute, the proceedings on the merits are in the same court. That court controls the proceedings, and it is admonished by the statute to proceed "as soon as may be, to the hearing and determination of the case." 15 U. S. C. § 25. This is an essential admonition, insisted upon by the Congress to mitigate the consequences of preliminary restraints imposed by the district courts upon effectuation of mergers. The courts of appeals will be in the unhappy position [*64] of either attempting to supervise Commission proceedings in the predictably vain effort to secure expedition, or accepting the fact that the "preliminariness" of their order is totally subject to the destructive delays characteristic of Commission procedures. See Kaysen & Turner, Antitrust Policy 248-249 (1959).

In effect, today's decision represents radical surgery upon the administration [1759] of § 7 of the Clayton Act. This is done contrary to statute, without basis in law or precedent, and is motivated by reasons, which while they may have superficial appeal, are unwise and disruptive. In effect, the Court condones and encourages the Commission to turn aside from its designated function as an expert, administrative agency to become a prosecutor and litigant.

When the Commission was established in 1914, it was not intended to duplicate the functions of existing agencies, but rather to bring to bear on the problems of antitrust and unfair competition the "specialized knowledge and expert judgment, continuity of experience and political independence, flexible procedures and efficient fact-finding methods -- [hopefully] characteristic of the administrative process." Elman, [*65] Rulemaking Procedures [*636] in the FTC's Enforcement of the Merger Law, 78 Harv. L. Rev. 385, 387 (1964).

Every conceivable merger case involves the danger that the merger, unless enjoined, will be effectuated, and the incentive to the Commission to shop among the statutorily available courts of appeals and to seek "preliminary" injunctions will be great. This, I repeat, is a radical change from the pattern that Congress has ordered, and one which is profoundly undesirable in its effects upon the parties, the courts of appeals, and upon the national interest in a careful assessment of mergers for the purpose of tolerating those which are permissible and liquidating those which violate the national policy expressed in § 7.

I would affirm the decision below.

APPENDIX TO OPINION OF MR. JUSTICE FORTAS, DISSENTING.

The FTC first solicited the assistance of Congress in 1956. In January of that year it submitted to the appropriate committees of the Eighty-fourth Congress a staff study containing various legislative proposals. The study observed that "A very serious loophole in the Antimerger Act [§ 7] is the lack of a provision which enables the Federal Trade [*66] Commission either to take action to prevent mergers prior to consummation or, after consummation, to take action to preserve the status quo until completion of administrative proceedings before the Commission." [1]

[*826] The study informed the committees that in 1955 the FTC had twice sought to secure preliminary injunctions from courts of appeals, but that the courts had found [*637] no basis in existing law to authorize such applications. [2] In hearings conducted upon proposals of the FTC and others, the Commission through its then chairman, John W. Gwynne, urged Congress to enact legislation which would empower it in § 7 cases to apply to United States District Courts for preliminary relief. [3] [*68] Chairman Gwynne was pessimistic [1760] about the prospects for success under the all-writs statute, noting that it "is a very general statute and is designed to protect [*67] not the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission but the jurisdiction of the circuit court of appeals to which the case might finally get." [4]

Both Senate and House Judiciary Committees accepted the view, repeatedly stated by spokesmen for the FTC, [*638] that it lacked any authority to enjoin or seek a court order to enjoin mergers prior to an FTC adjudication of their illegality, and that this gap in the Commission's arsenal was crippling its efforts to enforce § 7. Both Committees reported out H. R. 9424, which contained an amendment to § 15 of the Clayton Act authorizing the FTC to seek preliminary relief in the United States District Courts. S. Rep. No. 2817, 84th Cong., 2d Sess. (1956); H. R. Rep. No. 1889, 84th Cong., 2d Sess. (1956). [5] The bill passed the House, but failed of passage in the Senate.

Similar legislative proposals have been introduced in subsequent sessions, but always with less success than in 1956. In all of these legislative [*69] proceedings, the position of the FTC has been steadfast: consistently, it has insisted that without new legislation it lacks authority to enjoin mergers pending completion of agency action. In March of 1957, FTC Chairman Gwynne informed the appropriate Committees of the decision in Federal Trade Comm'n v. International Paper Co., 241 F.2d 372 (C. A. 2d Cir. 1956), that the all-writs statute would not support an FTC application for preliminary relief. To the House Committee he forwarded a copy of the opinion, describing it as "even more conclusive" than the earlier unreported decisions of the Courts of Appeals for the First and Third Circuits. [6] [*70] In [827] the Senate, Chairman Gwynne characterized his Commission's application in International Paper as "something of a forlorn hope." [7] When Senator Kefauver, the Committee Chairman, asked

---

[1] Hearings before the Antitrust Subcommittee of the House Committee on the Judiciary, 84th Cong., 2d Sess., ser. No. 15, p. 29 (1956).

[2] The cases referred to were Federal Trade Comm'n v. Farm Journal, Inc. (C. A. 3d Cir. 1955) (unreported); and In the Matter of A. G. Spalding & Bros., Inc. (C. A. 1st Cir. 1955) (unreported). They are discussed in H. R. Rep. No. 486, 85th Cong., 1st Sess., 8-9 (1957); Hearings before the Subcommittee on Antitrust and Monopoly of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary on S. 198, S. 721, S. 722 and S. 3479, 85th Cong., 2d Sess., 42-45 (testimony of FTC Chairman Gwynne), 156-157 (testimony of Congressman Celler) (1958).

[3] The FTC proposed that § 11 of the Clayton Act be amended to read: "Whenever the Federal Trade Commission has reason to believe --

"(1) That any corporation is acquiring, has acquired or is about to acquire the stock or assets of another corporation in violation of the provisions of section 7 of this Act, and

"(2) That the enjoining thereof pending the issuance of a complaint by the Commission under this section and until such complaint is dismissed by the Commission or set aside by the court on review, would be to the interest of the public,

"the Commission . . . may bring suit in a district court of the United States . . . to prevent and restrain violation of section 7 of this Act. Upon proper showing a temporary injunction or restraining order shall be granted without bond. . . ." Hearings, supra, note 1, at 29-30.

[4] Id., at 35.

[5] H. R. 9424, although worded in greater detail, was in substance like the FTC proposal.

[6] Letter to Chairman Celler, in Hearings before the Antitrust Subcommittee of the House Committee on the Judiciary, 85th Cong., 1st Sess., ser. No. 2, p. 103 (1957).

him whether the FTC had sought [*639] review of the decision in this Court, Chairman Gwynne answered: "No, we did not. We talked that over. I could not help but agree with the court, frankly. I think the remedy is to amend the law. . . ." The Senator replied, "I think you are right about it." [8]

Nor was Gwynne the only FTC spokesman to represent to Congress that legislation was essential if the Commission, like the Department of Justice and private parties, was to be able to maintain the status quo pending determination of a merger's legality. The present chairman, Paul Rand Dixon, who as committee counsel had participated in Senate proceedings on this matter since 1956, informed the Eighty-seventh Congress that "It is clear that the Commission has no such authority," citing International Paper. [9] [*71] Leading Members of Congress [10] [1761] and key representatives of the Executive Branch [11] expressed the same view.

A third FTC Chairman, Earl Kintner, explained to the bar rather than directly to Congress, that in 1960 the FTC had intervened as amicus curiae in a private suit to enjoin a merger, [12] which suit paralleled a pending [*640] Commission inquiry. This was done, he said, because the FTC was "lacking any statutory authority to seek a temporary injunction." Kintner, The Federal Trade Commission in 1960 -- Apologia Pro Vita Nostra, 1961 Antitrust Law Symposium 21, 38. He noted that the FTC was pressing for legislative authorization, and that until the effort succeeded the FTC would be confined to intervention in occasional private suits and to reliance upon the Justice Department "where a temporary [*72] restraining order is peculiarly appropriate." Id., at 41. [13]

References

Annotation References:

Construction, by Supreme Court of the United States, of 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18), dealing with acquisition by one corporation of stock of another. 14 L ed 2d 784.

Right of one corporation to acquire stock in another, as affected by the antitrust acts. 74 L ed 431.

Administrative or practical construction of statute as precedent for judicial construction. 73 L ed 322, 84 L ed 28.

End of Document

---

[7] Hearings, supra, note 2, at 45.

[8] Ibid.

[9] Hearings before the Antitrust Subcommittee of the House Committee on the Judiciary, 87th Cong., 1st Sess., ser. No. 5, pp. 87, 107 (1961). It was in this session that the FTC abandoned its prior advocacy of proposals that it seek relief in the district courts, urging instead that it be given power to issue its own injunctions and restraining orders. Id., at 88, 91. Compare testimony of FTC Chairman Gwynne, Hearings, supra, note 2, at 49-59.

[10] See, e. g., statement of Congressman Celler, Hearings, supra, note 2, at 156-160; statement of Congressman Patman, Hearings, supra, note 9, at 45; statement of Senator Kefauver, id., at 46.

[11] E. g., The President's Economic Report, submitted to Congress on January 23, 1957, p. 51; Letter from Attorney General Kennedy, May 2, 1961, in Hearings, supra, note 9, at 58.

[12] Briggs Mfg. Co. v. Crane Co., 185 F.Supp. 177 (D. C. E. D. Mich.), aff'd, 280 F.2d 747 (C. A. 6th Cir. 1960).

[13] FTC Chairman Dixon utilized the same forum the following year to plead for legislation which would authorize the Commission to issue its own temporary relief. See Dixon, The Federal Trade Commission in 1961, 1962 Antitrust Law Symposium 16, 19-21.

United States v. Marshall & Ilsley Bank Stock Corp.

United States District Court for the Eastern District of Wisconsin

June 15, 1966

No. 61-C-54

Reporter

255 F. Supp. 273 *; 1966 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10180 ; 1966 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,827

United States of America, Plaintiff v. Marshall & Ilsley Bank Stock Corporation, Marshall & Ilsley Bank, Northern Bank and the Bank of Commerce , Defendants.

Core Terms

bank holding company, banking, acquisitions, Clayton Act, concentration, monopoly, stock, provisions, anti trust law, antitrust, commerce, district court, monopolistic, regulation, merger, Pages, Hearings, factors, legislative history, public interest, bank stock, court of appeals, holding company, consolidation, proceedings, facilities, violating, acquire, cases, saving clause

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Procedural Matters > Jurisdiction > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Regulated Industry Mergers

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Jurisdiction

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > General Overview

Banking Law > Types of Banks & Financial Institutions > Bank Holding Companies > General Overview

Banking Law > Federal Acts > General Overview

Banking Law > ... > Banking & Finance > Federal Acts > Bank Holding Company Act

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Federal Questions > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

HN1[] Procedural Matters, Jurisdiction

The jurisdiction of district courts under 15 U.S.C.S. § 25 to enforce 15 U.S.C.S. § 18 of that act against bank holding company acquisitions on complaint of the United States has been plainly supplanted by the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956, 12 U.S.C.S. §§ 1841, et seq. This does not mean that 15 U.S.C.S. § 18 is inapplicable to bank holding companies. Rather, it means that the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System alone can apply and enforce that section against bank holding company acquisitions which it is asked to approve under the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956, and must do so in ruling on applications under that Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN2[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 18.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > US Department of Justice Actions > General Overview

Banking Law > Types of Banks & Financial Institutions > Bank Holding Companies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Jurisdiction

HN3[] Public Enforcement, US Department of Justice Actions

The Clayton Act, as originally passed, provided a system of dual enforcement of 15 U.S.C.S. § 18 as to banks, banking associations and trust companies. 15 U.S.C.S. § 21 vested authority to enforce compliance with 15 U.S.C.S. § 18 in the Federal Reserve Board where applicable to banks, banking associations and trust companies, directed the Board to commence proceedings pursuant to that authority if it had reason to believe § 18 was violated, and set forth the procedure to be followed. 15 U.S.C.S. § 25 conferred jurisdiction to prevent and restrain violations of 15 U.S.C.S. § 18 on district courts of the United States and imposed a duty on United States district attorneys, under the direction of the Attorney General, to institute proceedings to prevent and restrain such violations.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > General Overview

Banking Law > ... > Banking & Finance > Federal Acts > Bank Holding Company Act

Banking Law > Types of Banks & Financial Institutions > Bank Holding Companies > General Overview

Banking Law > Types of Banks & Financial Institutions > Bank Holding Companies > Formation

HN4[] Regulated Industries, Financial Institutions

See 12 U.S.C.S. § 1842(b).

Banking Law > ... > Banking & Finance > Federal Acts > Bank Holding Company Act

Banking Law > Types of Banks & Financial Institutions > Bank Holding Companies > General Overview

Banking Law > Types of Banks & Financial Institutions > Bank Holding Companies > Formation

HN5[] Federal Acts, Bank Holding Company Act

See 12 U.S.C.S. § 1842(c).

Banking Law > Types of Banks & Financial Institutions > Bank Holding Companies > General Overview

HN6[] Types of Banks & Financial Institutions, Bank Holding Companies

See 12 U.S.C.S. § 1828(c).

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > Reviewability > Standing

Banking Law > ... > Banking & Finance > Federal Acts > Bank Holding Company Act

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > Reviewability > Jurisdiction & Venue

Banking Law > Types of Banks & Financial Institutions > Bank Holding Companies > General Overview

HN7[] Reviewability, Standing

See 12 U.S.C.S. § 1848.

Banking Law > Types of Banks & Financial Institutions > Bank Holding Companies > General Overview

HN8[] Types of Banks & Financial Institutions, Bank Holding Companies

See 12 U.S.C.S. § 1850.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > Bank Holding Company Act

Banking Law > ... > Banking & Finance > Federal Acts > Bank Holding Company Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > General Overview

Banking Law > Types of Banks & Financial Institutions > Bank Holding Companies > General Overview

Banking Law > ... > Business & Corporate Compliance > Banking & Finance > Bank Holding Companies Regulation

HN9[] Financial Institutions, Bank Holding Company Act

The legislative history of the Bank Holding Company Act reveals without question that in acting in this area Congress was motivated by a concern over concentration in banking and a desire to control bank holding company expansion and prevent monopoly in this field.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Banking Law > ... > Banking & Finance > Federal Acts > Bank Holding Company Act

Banking Law > Types of Banks & Financial Institutions > Bank Holding Companies > General Overview

HN10[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

The purpose of 12 U.S.C.S. §§ 1841, et seq., is in substantial part identical with that of 15 U.S.C.S. § 18.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Regulated Industry Mergers

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

Banking Law > Types of Banks & Financial Institutions > Bank Holding Companies > General Overview

Banking Law > Types of Banks & Financial Institutions > Bank Holding Companies > Formation

HN11[] Regulated Industries, Financial Institutions

It was the intent of Congress in enacting holding company legislation to strengthen, or activate, not repeal 15 U.S.C.S. § 18. To attain this result, Congress chose to prohibit completely acquisitions by bank holding companies of a certain percentage of the voting shares of any bank unless prior approval was obtained from the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, which Board was charged with the duty of enforcement of § 18. It instructed the Board to consider five factors in determining whether approval should be granted, each factor being a significant consideration in a § 18 case, and, in order that all relevant competitive factors not specifically set forth could be considered, directed the Board in general terms to consider whether the effect of the acquisition would be to expand the bank holding company system involved beyond limits consistent with the preservation of competition in the field of banking.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Procedural Matters > Jurisdiction > General Overview

Banking Law > ... > Banking & Finance > Federal Acts > Bank Holding Company Act

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Regulated Industry Mergers

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Jurisdiction

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > Bank Holding Company Act

Banking Law > Types of Banks & Financial Institutions > Bank Holding Companies > General Overview

Banking Law > Types of Banks & Financial Institutions > Bank Holding Companies > Formation

Banking Law > ... > Business & Corporate Compliance > Banking & Finance > Bank Holding Companies Regulation

HN12[] Procedural Matters, Jurisdiction

Congress intended that the Federal Reserve Board of Governors, while ruling on acquisition subject to the Bank Holding Company Act, 12 U.S.C.S. §§ 1841, et seq., simultaneously perform its duties under the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 18, and that the Board alone retain Clayton Act jurisdiction with respect to acquisitions subject to the Bank Holding Company Act.

Banking Law > ... > Banking & Finance > Federal Acts > Bank Holding Company Act

Governments > Legislation > Expiration, Repeal & Suspension

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Regulated Industry Mergers

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > Bank Holding Company Act

Banking Law > Types of Banks & Financial Institutions > Bank Holding Companies > General Overview

Banking Law > ... > Business & Corporate Compliance > Banking & Finance > Bank Holding Companies Regulation

HN13[] Federal Acts, Bank Holding Company Act

Repeals of the antitrust laws by implication from a regulatory statute are strongly disfavored, and have only been found in cases of plain repugnancy between the antitrust and regulatory provisions. No repeal of the substantive provisions of 15 U.S.C.S. § 18 is intended and that the Bank Holding Company Act, 12 U.S.C.S. §§ 1841, et seq., effected a change only in the manner in which 15 U.S.C.S. § 18 was to be enforced. A holding that 15 U.S.C.S. § 25 is repealed as to acquisitions subject to the Bank Holding Company Act is compelled by the existence of plain repugnancies between the two provisions.

Banking Law > ... > Banking & Finance > Commercial Banks > Mergers & Consolidations

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Mergers > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > Bank Mergers

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > Clayton Act

Banking Law > Commercial Banks > Bank Expansions > General Overview

Banking Law > Types of Banks & Financial Institutions > Bank Holding Companies > General Overview

Banking Law > ... > Banking & Finance > Federal Acts > Bank Holding Company Act

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Regulated Industry Mergers

HN14[] Commercial Banks, Mergers & Consolidations

15 U.S.C.S. § 21, vests the Federal Reserve Board (FRB), with authority to enforce 15 U.S.C.S. § 18 where applicable to banks. This provision has been in the Act since it was first passed in 1914 and was not changed by the 1950 amendments. The Bank Merger Act of 1960, assigning roles in merger applications to the FDIC and the Comptroller of the Currency as well as to the FRB, plainly supplanted whatever authority the FRB may have acquired under 12 U.S.C.S. § 21 by virtue of the amendment of 15 U.S.C.S. § 18, to enforce § 18 against bank mergers. Since the Bank Merger Act applies only to mergers, consolidations, acquisitions of assets, and assumptions of liabilities but not to outright stock acquisitions, the FRB's authority under 12 U.S.C.S. § 21, as it existed before the 1950 amendment of 15 U.S.C.S. § 18 remains unaffected.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > General Overview

Banking Law > ... > Business & Corporate Compliance > Banking & Finance > Bank Holding Companies Regulation

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Regulated Industry Mergers

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Banking Law > Types of Banks & Financial Institutions > Bank Holding Companies > General Overview

Banking Law > Federal Acts > General Overview

Banking Law > ... > Banking & Finance > Federal Acts > Bank Holding Company Act

HN15[] Regulated Industries, Financial Institutions

Congress intended that when performing its function under the Bank Holding Company Act, the Federal reserve Board should simultaneously exercise its authority to enforce 15 U.S.C.S. § 18, preventing before they occur acquisitions which would violate that section, and that the Board alone should have such enforcement powers.

Banking Law > ... > Banking & Finance > Federal Acts > Bank Holding Company Act

Banking Law > Types of Banks & Financial Institutions > Bank Holding Companies > General Overview

Banking Law > ... > Business & Corporate Compliance > Banking & Finance > Bank Holding Companies Regulation

Banking Law > ... > Banking & Finance > Regulators > US Office of the Comptroller of the Currency

HN16[] Federal Acts, Bank Holding Company Act

The hearing provisions of 12 U.S.C.S. § 2 are somewhat sparse. No hearing need be held if the Comptroller of Currency or State banking authority does not disapprove the application. However, that such provisions are adequate to enable the Federal Reserve Board to resolve the issues involved and make its determination is demonstrated by the provisions for a full administrative proceeding before the Board in which all interested persons may participate and the views of the interested supervisory authorities may be obtained.

Banking Law > ... > Banking & Finance > Federal Acts > Bank Holding Company Act

Banking Law > Types of Banks & Financial Institutions > Bank Holding Companies > General Overview

Banking Law > Types of Banks & Financial Institutions > Bank Holding Companies > Formation

Banking Law > ... > Business & Corporate Compliance > Banking & Finance > Bank Holding Companies Regulation

HN17[] Federal Acts, Bank Holding Company Act

Congress intended the statutory proceedings before the Federal Reserve Board to be the sole means by which questions as to the organization or operation of a new bank by a bank holding company may be tested. Admittedly the acquisition of an existing bank is exclusively within the jurisdiction of the Board. It is the exclusive function of the Board to act in such cases and contests must be pursued before it.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > General Overview

Banking Law > ... > Banking & Finance > Federal Acts > Bank Holding Company Act

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > Reviewability > Jurisdiction & Venue

Banking Law > Commercial Banks > Bank Expansions > Bank Creations & Reorganizations

Banking Law > Types of Banks & Financial Institutions > Bank Holding Companies > General Overview

Banking Law > ... > Business & Corporate Compliance > Banking & Finance > Bank Holding Companies Regulation

Governments > Federal Government > US Congress

HN18[] Regulated Industries, Financial Institutions

Congress intended that challenges to Federal Reserve Board approval of the organization and operation of a new bank by a bank holding company be pursued solely as provided in 12 U.S.C.S. §§ 1841, et seq. Congress has set out in the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 a carefully planned and comprehensive method for challenging Board determinations. That action by Congress was designed to permit an agency, expert in banking matters, to explore and pass on the ramifications of a proposed bank holding company arrangement. To permit a district court to make the initial determination of a plan's propriety would substantially decrease the effectiveness of the statutory design.

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > Reviewability > Exhaustion of Remedies

Banking Law > ... > Banking & Finance > Federal Acts > Bank Holding Company Act

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Enforcement of Bargaining Agreements > Exhaustion of Remedies

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > General Overview

Banking Law > Types of Banks & Financial Institutions > Bank Holding Companies > General Overview

Banking Law > ... > Business & Corporate Compliance > Banking & Finance > Bank Holding Companies Regulation

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Exhaustion of Remedies > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Exhaustion of Remedies > Administrative Remedies

Governments > Federal Government > US Congress

HN19[] Reviewability, Exhaustion of Remedies

The Federal Reserve Board's determination regarding a holding company acquisition may not be collaterally attacked in a district court by a suit against the Comptroller of the Currency. Opponents of the opening of a new bank by a bank holding company must first attack the arrangement before the Board, subject only to review by the Courts of Appeals. That Congress has not expressly provided that the statutory procedure is to be exclusive does not require a different conclusion. For Congress has expressly rejected proposed provisions for review in these cases in the district courts. Moreover, it has enacted a specific statutory scheme for obtaining review, and where Congress has directed such a procedure as that found in the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956, 12 U.S.C.S. §§ 1841, et seq., the doctrine of exhaustion of administrative remedies comes into play and requires that the statutory mode of review be adhered to notwithstanding the absence of an express statutory command of exclusiveness.

Administrative Law > Separation of Powers > Primary Jurisdiction

Antitrust & Trade Law > Procedural Matters > Jurisdiction > Exclusive Jurisdiction

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Regulated Industry Mergers

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > Bank Holding Company Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Procedural Matters > Jurisdiction > General Overview

Banking Law > Types of Banks & Financial Institutions > Bank Holding Companies > General Overview

Banking Law > ... > Banking & Finance > Federal Acts > Bank Holding Company Act

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > Exclusive Jurisdiction

HN20[] Separation of Powers, Primary Jurisdiction

Although it is true that the savings clause of the Bank Holding Company Act, 12 U.S.C.S. § 21, states that nothing contained in the Act shall constitute a defense in any suit arising out of any prohibited antitrust or monopolistic act, action or conduct. It also provides, however, that nothing contained in the Act shall be interpreted as approving any act, action or conduct in violation of existing law. The Federal Reserve Board has exclusive jurisdiction to determine the legality of an acquisition.

Judges: [1] Tehan, Chief Judge.

Opinion by: TEHAN

Opinion

[*273] TEHAN, C.J.:

On March 2, 1961, the United States of America filed a complaint in this court against Bank Stock Corporation of Milwaukee, now Marshall & Ilsley Bank Stock Corporation, Marshall & Ilsley Bank, Northern Bank and The Bank of Commerce, all Wisconsin corporations, alleging that the cumulative effect of acquisitions by Bank Stock of more than 80% of the outstanding voting stock of Marshall & Ilsley Bank and Northern in December of 1959 and of 80% or more of the outstanding common stock of Commerce in January of 1961 may be substantially to lessen competition or to tend to create a monopoly in commercial banking in the City and County of Milwaukee in violation of § 7 of the Clayton Act (Title 15 U.S.C. § 18), and asking that Bank Stock be adjudged to have violated that section, be required to divest itself of the stock unlawfully acquired, and be enjoined from acquiring stock in any other commercial bank in Milwaukee County without court approval. [1] Preceding this action and the acquisitions complained of, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, acting pursuant to the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956, had [2] approved the applications of Bank Stock to become a bank holding company and to acquire the stock of Marshall & Ilsley Bank, Northern and Commerce.

The defendants' answer to the complaint was filed on May 22, 1961; trial [*274] was held in June, July and November, 1963; briefs were filed, the last being briefs requested by the court and filed in May of 1966, oral argument was heard, and the court is prepared to render its decision.

Reflecting as it does disagreement between two executive agencies, both charged with the duty of enforcing § 7, as to the advisability and propriety of acquisitions of bank stock by a bank holding company, this case arises in a maze of legislative and judicial pronouncements relative to jurisdiction. Our examination of those authorities convinces us that this court has [3] no jurisdiction under § 15 of the Clayton Act (Title 15 U.S.C. § 25), the jurisdictional basis relied upon by the plaintiff, to enjoin or undo stock acquisitions by bank holding companies which must be or have been approved by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System under the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 and HN1[] that the jurisdiction of district courts under § 15 of the Clayton Act to enforce § 7 of that act against such bank holding company acquisitions on complaint of the United States has been "plainly supplanted" [2] by the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956. This conclusion is not to be interpreted as a ruling that § 7 is inapplicable to bank holding companies. Rather, it means that the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System alone can apply and enforce that section against bank holding company acquisitions which it is asked to approve under the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956, and must do so in ruling on applications under that Act. A discussion of the authorities which compel this conclusion follows.

---

[1] This prior approval, if required, would be the second approval since, as will later appear, approval of any substantial acquisition must be obtained from the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System.

[2] United States v. Philadelphia National Bank (1963), 374 U.S. 321 at 344, footnote 22, 10 L. Ed. 2d 915, 83 S. Ct. 1715.

[4] The Clayton Act, §§ 7, 11 and 15 of which here concern us, became law in 1914. Paragraph 2 of § 7 thereof provided:

> "No corporation shall acquire, directly or indirectly, the whole or any part of the stock or other share capital of two or more corporations engaged in commerce where the effect of such acquisition, or the use of such stock by the voting or granting of proxies or otherwise, may be to substantially lessen competition between such corporations, or any of them, whose stock or other share capital is so acquired, or to restrain such commerce in any section or community, or tend to create a monopoly of any line of commerce."

and remained unchanged until 1950 when it was amended to read as follows:

> HN2[] "No corporation shall acquire, directly or indirectly, the whole or any part of the stock or other share capital and no corporation subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission shall acquire the whole or any part of the assets of one or more corporations engaged in commerce, where in any line of commerce in any section of the country, the effect of such acquisition, of such stocks or assets, or of the use of such stock by the voting or granting [5] of proxies or otherwise, may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly."

This amendment, while substantial, is not relevant to the jurisdictional problem here presented.

Unquestionably, banks and bank holding companies fall within the purview of § 7 as originally enacted and as amended. Transamerica Corp. v. Board of Governors (C.A. 3, 1953) 206 F.2d 163, United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, supra. The authorities do not so clearly reveal, however, the manner in which § 7 must be enforced.

HN3[] The Clayton Act, as originally passed, provided a system of dual enforcement of § 7 as to banks, banking associations and trust companies. § 11 thereof (Title 15 U.S.C. § 21) vested authority to enforce compliance with § 7 in the Federal Reserve Board where applicable to banks, banking associations and trust companies, directed the Board to commence proceedings pursuant to that authority if it had reason to believe § 7 was violated, [*275] and set forth the procedure to be followed. § 15 conferred jurisdiction to prevent and restrain violations of § 7 on district courts of the United States and imposed a duty on United States district [6] attorneys, under the direction of the Attorney General, to institute proceedings to prevent and restrain such violations. Both sections were thereafter amended in particulars not here material.

On this thus far fairly uncomplicated legislative scene appeared the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 (Title 12 U.S.C. § 1841- § 1848) which became law on May 9, 1956. This Act which at various stages in its legislative history was referred to as a bill "To define bank holding companies, control their future expansion, and require divestment of their nonbanking interests" prohibited in relevant part formation of bank holding companies, as defined in the Act, and acquisitions by bank holding companies of a certain percentage of the voting shares of any bank without prior approval of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System. [3] [9] The manner in which approval is to be sought is set forth in Paragraph (b) of § 3 of the Act, (Title 12 U.S.C. § 1842(b)) as follows:

> HN4[] "(b) Upon receiving from a company any application for approval under this section, the Board shall give notice to the Comptroller of the Currency, if the applicant company or any bank the voting shares or assets [7] of which are sought to be acquired is a national banking association or a District bank, or to the appropriate supervisory authority of the interested State, if the applicant company or any bank the voting shares or assets of which are sought to be acquired is a State bank, and shall allow thirty days within which the views and recommendations of the Comptroller of the Currency or the State supervisory authority, as the case may be, may be submitted. If the Comptroller of the Currency or the State supervisory authority so notified by the Board disapproves the application in writing within said thirty days, the Board shall forthwith give written notice of that fact to the applicant. Within three days after giving such notice to the applicant, the Board shall notify in writing the applicant and the disapproving authority of the date for commencement of a hearing by it on such application. Any such hearing shall be commenced not less than ten nor more than thirty days after the Board has given written notice to the applicant of the action of the disapproving authority. The length of any such hearing shall be determined by the Board, but it shall afford all interested parties a reasonable [8] opportunity to testify at such hearing. At the conclusion thereof, the Board shall by order grant or deny the application on the basis of the record made at such hearing." [4]

[3] This provision is unlike the Bank Merger Act of 1960 considered by the United States Supreme Court in Philadelphia Bank which assigned roles in bank merger applications, depending on the nature of the institution, to either the Board, the Comptroller of the Currency, or the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, the latter two of which have no enforcement power whatsoever under the Clayton Act.

The factors to be considered by the Board in granting or denying approval are set forth in Paragraph (c) of § 3 as follows: (Title 12 U.S.C. § 1842(c))

> HN5[] "(c) In determining whether or not to approve any acquisition or merger or consolidation under this section, the Board shall take into consideration the following factors: (1) the financial history and condition of the company or companies and the banks concerned; (2) their prospects; (3) the character of their management; (4) the convenience, needs, and welfare of the communities and the area concerned; and (5) whether or not the effect of such acquisition or merger or consolidation would be to expand the size or extent of the bank holding company system involved beyond limits consistent with adequate and sound banking, the public [*276] interest, and the preservation of competition in the field of banking." [5]

[10] Section 9 of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 as amended, provides for judicial review as follows: (Title 12 U.S.C. § 1848)

> HN7[] "Any party aggrieved by an order of the Board under this chapter may obtain a review of such order in the United States Court of Appeals within any circuit wherein such party has its principal place of business, or in the Court of Appeals in the District of Columbia, by filing in the court, within sixty days after the entry of the Board's order, a petition praying that the order of the Board be set aside. A copy of such petition shall be forthwith transmitted to the Board by the clerk of the court, and thereupon the Board shall file in the court the record made before the Board, as provided in section 2112 of Title 28. Upon the filing of such petition the court shall have jurisdiction to affirm, set aside, or modify the order of the Board and to require the Board to take

---

[4] In contrast, the Bank Merger Act of 1960 involved in Philadelphia Bank provided for no hearing whatsoever.

[5] These tests are not unlike those set forth in the Bank Merger Act involved in Philadelphia Bank which provided: (Title 12 U.S.C. § 1828(c)):

> " . . . HN6[] In granting or withholding consent under this subsection, the Comptroller, the Board, or the Corporation, as the case may be, shall consider the financial history and condition of each of the banks involved, the adequacy of its capital structure, its future earnings prospects, the general character of its management, the convenience and needs of the community to be served, and whether or not its corporate powers are consistent with the purposes of this chapter. In the case of a merger, consolidation, acquisition of assets, or assumption of liabilities, the appropriate agency shall also take into consideration the effect of the transaction on competition (including any tendency toward monopoly), and shall not approve the transaction unless, after considering all of such factors, it finds the transaction to be in the public interest. . . ."

Although counsel for the plaintiff here has argued that the factors set forth in § 3 differ from the considerations under § 7 of the Clayton Act, the Attorney General himself, in commenting prior to recent amendment of the Bank Merger Act on that Act's similar factors, stated in a letter of September 24, 1965, printed in the 1966 U.S. Code Congressional and Administrative News at Page 340:

> "While there are those in the banking industry and, indeed, in Government who differ with me, I strongly believe that objective analysis will disclose that in actual practice the differences in the standards applied by the banking agencies and by the courts, if any, have been overstated. In fact, the Supreme Court in the leading case has made it clear that all or most of the factors specified in the Bank Merger Act are relevant to a determination under section 7 of the Clayton Act or section 1 of the Sherman Act. . . ." (Page 341) and in a letter dated January 5, 1966, printed at Page 346:

> " . . . I should like to repeat here my strong belief that the differences, if any, in the standards applied to bank mergers by the courts and the standards applied by the agencies have been overstated. . . ." (Page 347)

> such action with regard to the matter under review as the court deems proper. The findings of the Board as to the facts, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive." [6]

[11] [*277] § 11 of the Act, the savings clause, provides:

> HN8[] "Nothing herein contained shall be interpreted or construed as approving any act, action, or conduct which is or has been or may be in violation of existing law, nor shall anything herein contained constitute a defense to any action, suit, or proceeding pending or hereafter instituted on account of any prohibited antitrust or monopolistic act, action, or conduct." [7]

From the foregoing it can be seen that many problems of statutory construction relating to jurisdiction exist in this case that have not been settled by the Philadelphia Bank decision, which decision was concerned with the Bank Merger Act and in no way considered the substantially different Bank Holding Company Act. These problems are made more difficult by the fact that § 11 of the Bank Holding Company Act did not appear in the original bills and § 9 of the Bank Holding Company Act, providing for judicial review [12] in the appropriate Court of Appeals with a substantial evidence test applying to findings of the Board, was substantially different from earlier proposals for review pursuant to the Administrative Procedure Act with trial de novo provided. Because this court believed that the legislative history of the Bank Holding Company Act might prove of some aid in the solution of these problems, it recently asked the parties to furnish material and comments relating thereto, more particularly, relating to § 9 and § 11.

HN9[] The legislative history of the Bank Holding Company Act reveals without question that in acting in this area Congress was motivated by a concern over concentration in banking and a desire to control bank holding company expansion and prevent monopoly in this field. For example, in the Report of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency on this legislation, Senate Report No. 1095, 84th Cong., 1st Session (1955) the following statements appear:

---

[6] The Bank Merger Act of 1960 contained no provision whatsoever for judicial review, a fact which, together with its lack of provision for hearing was considered significant by the Supreme Court in Philadelphia Bank (See Page 351 of that opinion, 374 U.S. 321). When that Act was recently amended, provision for review similar to the Bank Holding Company provision was proposed. With respect to that provision, the Attorney General stated in the letter of September 24, 1965, referred to previously: (Page 342, 1966 U.S. Code Congressional and Administrative News):

> "I am opposed to particular procedures set forth in H.R. 11011. The bill provides for review in a court of appeals on the basis of a 'record' upon which the order complained of was entered, and further provides that on review the findings of the agency as to the facts, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive. This type of review is normally used for determinations by such agencies as the Federal Power Commission and the Federal Trade Commission who, pursuant to the Administrative Procedure Act, have held full public adversary hearings on a public record, with full opportunities to all parties to develop evidence as to rebut evidence produced by the others. No such procedures for the full development of a record are provided for by the Bank Merger Act or by any current proposal, and indeed there are important considerations that make the more summary handling of merger applications particularly appropriate. Since the vast majority of applications raise no serious problems of an antitrust nature, there would seem to be no little point in subjecting all merger applications before the regulatory authorities to all of the requirements of the Administrative Procedure Act in order to lay the groundwork for court review in those few instances where serious questions of competition are presented.
>
> Consequently, while I am sympathetic to efforts to clarify through legislation the application of antitrust law to banks, I believe that the current practice, whereby the Department of Justice institutes proceedings in Federal district courts against mergers which it believes to be unlawful, should be allowed to continue; so that there could be a trial de novo of all issues in any such suit."

This statement seems to us to clearly infer the Attorney General's belief that such a provision for review such as in the Bank Holding Company Act would abolish the duty of the Attorney General under § 15 of the Clayton Act to commence an action in district court concerning approved bank mergers and, consequently, the jurisdiction of the court to entertain such an action.

[7] The Bank Merger Act of 1960 had no savings clause.

"In the opinion of your committee, public welfare requires the enactment of legislation providing Federal regulation of the growth of bank holding companies . . ." (Page 1)

" . . . It is not the committee's contention [13] that bank holding companies are evil of themselves. However, because of the importance of the banking system to the national economy, adequate safeguards should be provided against undue concentration of control of banking activities. The dangers accompanying monopoly in this field are particularly undesirable in view of the [*278] significant part played by banking in our present national economy. . . ." (Page 1)

* * *

"Testifying before your committee for the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, Chairman William McChesney Martin, Jr., stated:

'Existing provisions of law, originally enacted in the Banking Act of 1933, have proved entirely inadequate to deal with the special problems presented by bank holding companies. It has been, and still is, the Board's view that additional legislation is essential to deal effectively with these problems.'

Chairman Martin noted that the principal problems in the bank holding company field arise from two circumstances:

(1) The unrestricted ability of a bank holding company group to add to the number of its banking units, making possible the concentration of commercial bank facilities in a particular area [14] under a single control and management; . . . (Page 2)

* * *

"Thus, under the bill, the growth of bank holding companies in the banking field would be regulated but not prohibited." (Page 2)

* * *

"The committee is of the opinion that the bill now favorably reported to the Senate represents adequate and fair legislation to regulate the future expansion of bank holding companies . . ." (Page 4)

* * *

"The factors required to be taken into consideration by the Federal Reserve Board under this bill also require contemplation of the prevention of undue concentration of control in the banking field to the detriment of public interest and the encouragement of competition in banking. It is the lack of any effective requirement of this nature in present Federal laws which has led your committee to the conviction that legislation such as that contained in this bill is needed. Under its provisions, the expansion of bank holding companies in the banking field would not be prohibited, but would be regulated in the public interest." (Page 10)

* * *

"The provisions of this bill, in the opinion of your committee, provide adequate safeguards so that the maintenance or expansion [15] of such bank holding companies can be regulated in the public interest." (Page 10)

The House Committee Report, House of Representatives Report No. 609, 84th Cong., 1st Session (1955) contains the following statements:

"Your committee believes that the destruction of the American unit banking system, resulting in the further concentration of credit facilities, would have revolutionary effects upon our free-enterprise system. Ultimately, monopolistic control of credit could entirely remold our fundamental political and social institutions." (Page 2)

* * *

"Your committee is convinced from the evidence presented during its recent hearings that this bill represents the minimum legislation necessary to deal with the bank holding company problem. The committee wishes to make clear that the legislation which it proposes is not designed to abolish bank holding companies or to prohibit the expansion, within certain limits, of existing bank holding companies. The bill would impose controls which the committee deems desirable over the creation and expansion of bank holding companies . . . ." (Page 11)

> "The bill would control the future expansion of bank holding [16] companies. The problem of how far bank holding company systems should be permitted to expand has long been of serious concern. It is in this area that one of the greatest potential evils of bank holding [*279] company operations exists." (Page 14)

Records of Committee and Subcommittee hearings on the legislation also reveal this Congressional concern and purpose. During the House Committee on Banking and Currency Hearings held on February 28, March 1, 2, 3, 4, 7, 8 and 9, 1955, William McChesney Martin, Jr., Chairman, Board of Governors, Federal Reserve System, stated:

> "In the first place, there is nothing in present law which restricts the ability of a bank holding company to add to the number of its controlled banks. Consequently, there can well be situations in which a large part of the commercial banking facilities in a large area of the country may be concentrated under the management and control of a single corporation." (Pages 13-14)

and Representative Multer stated:

> "Now what we are trying to do here now is to see what part, if any, of the antitrust laws, as they apply to banks, need correction or extension or revision. Isn't that the main [17] purpose of this legislation? Isn't it into that field that we are actually delving?" (Page 111)
>
> "The point I was making was this: This legislation we have before us now is part and parcel of the antitrust theory of legislation. If that principle is good, we have got to work it out here, too, and see that it is made to work in this field of our economy as it works in the other fields. That is the thing we have got to keep in mind when we try to put this bill in shape." (Page 117)

and Representative Spence, Chairman of the Committee, stated:

> "So competition is one of the most essential things in the banking business, and I think it should be encouraged, and I think this bill will do that." (Page 128)

During the Senate Subcommittee Hearings of July 5, 6, 7, 11, 12 and 14, 1955, Chairman Martin stated:

> "We believe, as we have said previously, that the principal problems in the bank holding company field arise from two circumstances:
>
> (1) The unrestricted ability of a bank holding company group to add to the number of its banking units, thus making possible the concentration of commercial banking facilities in a particular area under a single [18] control and management; . . ." (Page 44)

and in a written report on views of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System added:

> "(1) In the first place, there is nothing in present law which restricts the ability of a bank holding company to add to the number of its controlled banks. Consequently, there can well be situations in which a large part of the commercial banking facilities in a large area of the country may be concentrated under the management and control of a single corporation. " (Page 75)

Floor debate in the House and Senate, appearing in Volume 101, Part 6 and Volume 102, Part 5 of the Congressional Record similarly disclose the intent of Congress, in enacting legislation dealing with bank holding companies, to prevent undue concentration or monopoly in banking. In Volume 101 at Page 8023, Representative Wolcott stated:

> " Mr. Chairman, I think we should perhaps clear up, as far as we can, a little of the misunderstanding in respect to what the bill seeks to accomplish. In the bill there is the usual declaration of policy. It is the policy, as explained by the esteemed chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. [19] Spence] that the primary purposes of the bill are to control the expansion and creation of so-called bank holding companies and separate banking from the nonbanking activities. They go on to say, however, that it is generally to maintain competition among the banks and to minimize the danger inherent in the concentration of economic power through centralized control of banks."

[*280] Representative Rains stated at Page 8030:

> "But we did not harken to the soothing sirup of those who cautioned delay. We satisfied ourselves, after long and conscientious study of the facts, that the loopholes in our banking laws which permit - rather, which encourage - the alarming growth of monopoly and concentration of control in banking should be closed, and promptly so. Thus this bill. Thus this recommendation of the Committee on Banking and Currency to restore a greater measure of competition to banking, . . .".

* * *

"Mergers and extension of holding company influence into our banking system across State lines give us a frightening picture of concentration in this most fundamental area of our economy."

Representative O'Hara stated at Page 8034:

"It [20] is the policy of the Congress in the enactment of the proposed legislation to maintain competition among banks. It also is the policy to prevent a concentration of economic power in the giving of credits. I take it that there is no disagreement there."

Representative Marshall stated at Page 8034:

"By proper regulation and control of bank holding companies, the bill is intended to preserve the ideal of independent banking and prevent monopolistic centralization of credit."

Representative Brown stated at Pages 8037-8038:

"Mr. Chairman, unless something is done to control bank holding companies, there probably would result increased monopolistic concentrations of power in the financial world. Such concentrations of power in any field long have been characterized by their strong inclination to bad practices.

We have witnessed in this country monopolistic developments in various fields. Our policy has always been to discourage them because they are diametrically opposed to our cherished system of free competitive private enterprise. This bill is designed to carry out this policy, and if it is necessary to amend the bill for such purpose, I hope [21] no crippling amendments will be adopted. In a democratic way, we are merely urging rules for the game that will preserve our traditional freedoms. Monopoly in banking - the very lifeblood of all commerce - would bring in its wake vast political and financial influence. History has proven that the step from private monopoly to Government monopoly is short."

Representative Johnson stated at Page 8176:

"Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words in support of H.R. 6227, the bill to provide for control and regulation of bank holding companies. I believe this legislation is essential to prevent a most dangerous type of monopoly, the banking monopoly. In my opinion, the bank holding company device leads to uncontrolled branch banking, resulting in an undesirable concentration of economic power. Unless restrictions, such as provided by H.R. 6227, are adopted, I think that the present system of independent, community banks will be endangered and ultimately banking will be in the hands of a few, with several superbank holding companies extending across the country.

The old saying, 'An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure,' is very applicable to the banking situation. [22] I believe it is in the public interest that we check a banking monopoly before it gains a firm foothold and thus help to preserve our traditional American system of independent competitive banking."

(See also statement of Representative Multer to the Antimonopoly Subcommittee of the House Judiciary Committee reprinted at Pages 8052-8057)

In Volume 102, Senator Robertson introduced a statement at Pages 6750-6751, containing the following:

"S.2577, the bank holding company bill, which will be on the Senate Calendar [*281] when Congress convenes in January, represents the culmination of 18 years of effort to control expansion of bank holding companies and to require such companies to divest themselves of nonbanking investments."

* * *

"Our bill recognizes that bank holding companies are legitimate business organizations entitled to fair and equitable treatment, but that they should be subject to proper regulation by the Federal Reserve Board to prevent unfair competition and undue concentration of banking activities."

Senator Capehart stated at Page 6854:

> "I favor 100 percent the purpose of the proposed legislation. I introduced proposed legislation [23] on this subject about 3 years ago. The purpose of it is to prevent bank holding companies from expanding, except under controlled conditions. I think that is the best way to put it."

Senator Douglas stated at Page 6857:

> "For here, as elsewhere, the control over credit is moving into fewer and fewer hands.
>
> At the same time, industry has been moving out of competition into closer and closer concentration - monopoly and quasi-monopoly. This has been helped by the big banks. If we do not wish to travel the path of Canada, Great Britain, and Germany, we should do something effective to check and, if possible, to roll back the concentration of banking and credit. For he who controls the credit of a country controls the industry of that country and, ultimately, the political life of the Nation as well."

Senator Bricker stated at Page 6861:

> "Under the bill, a bank holding company must obtain prior approval from the Federal Reserve Board before it can acquire a bank. The Federal Reserve Board in considering an application for an acquisition must take into consideration five factors. These factors are, first, the financial history and condition of [24] the company or companies in the banks concerned; second, their prospects; third, character of their management; fourth, convenience, needs, and welfare of the communities in the area concerned; and, fifth, whether or not the effect of such acquisition would be to expand the size or extent of the bank holding company system involved beyond limits consistent with adequate and sound banking, the public interest, and the preservation of competition in the field of banking.
>
> The last factor I named is the most important and requires the Federal Reserve Board to consider the question of the public interest and the preservation of competition in the field of banking. This provision gives the Federal Reserve Board power to prevent undue concentrations of banking activities and at the same time permits the strengthening and expansion of banking facilities when needed."

The foregoing excerpts, which are a few examples only and not an exhaustion of statements relating to the problem which the Bank Holding Company Act was designed to solve, [8] establish that HN10[] the purpose of that legislation is in substantial part identical with that of § 7 of the Clayton Act. Despite this common purpose, [25] the legislative history affords little enlightenment concerning Congressional intent as to the relationship of the two statutes or the effect of the Bank Holding Company Act upon § 7 of the Clayton Act and its enforcement provisions, § 11 and § 15. [9]

[*282] As some of the statements above quoted reveal, the existence [26] of § 7 of the Clayton Act and its applicability to bank holding company acquisitions was, by some, virtually unrecognized. [10]

Other statements reveal that some believed the Federal Reserve Board alone had jurisdiction to enforce § 7. Thus, in an exhibit at Pages 27 and 28 of the House Committee Hearing, the following appears:

> "That Congress intended to protect the American banking system against overconcentration and monopoly was made manifest when it passed the Clayton Act in 1914. In that act the Federal Reserve System was

---

[8] There is no reason in this discussion to cover other problems facing Congress, such as interests by bank holding companies in nonbanking companies, etc.

[9] In considering this question it is well to remember that in 1955 and 1956, when the Bank Holding Company Act was being considered, no action involving bank holding companies had been commenced under § 15 by the Department of Justice to enforce § 7, and only one proceeding, the Transamerica case, supra, had been commenced under § 11, which proceeding resulted in a determination that a violation of § 7 had not been proved. Also, the recent Supreme Court decisions regarding the scope of § 7 were of course not available.

[10] See also the statement of Governor Robertson at Page 112 of the House Committee Hearings:

> "As was stated this morning, there are really two gaps in existing legislation. One is with respect to expansion. You have no control over it whatsoever. The other relates to combining of different businesses under the same roof. There is no control there. Those gaps should be covered and this legislation purports to do that."

> charged with responsibility for enforcing [27] the prohibitions against stock acquisitions of banks whenever the effect might substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly."

At Page 110, Representative Multer made this statement:

> "Let me make this observation and then either you or Governor Robertson can pick it up from there: As I understand it, when the antitrust laws were written, the Congress took into account that banking was a very specialized part of our economy, and they have deliberately said that the Federal Reserve Board would have jurisdiction over all antitrust violations in the banking field. Isn't that so?"

And at Page 315 of the Senate Subcommittee Hearings, J. Cameron Thomson, President of Northwest Bancorporation, said:

> "No holding company objects to control of acquisitions of bank holding companies if the test is based on sound banking considerations and the antitrust provisions of the Clayton Act, which, so far as banks are concerned, is the responsibility of the Federal Reserve Board."

Still other statements recognize § 7, but express dissatisfaction with the enforcement thereof. For example, at the Senate Subcommittee Hearings, Representative Multer stated: [28]

> "You will remember that there was written into the law provisions giving jurisdiction to the Federal Reserve Board to review those matters and take action with reference to any possible attempts to create a trust or monopoly in the banking field. There has not been a single recommendation all through the years by the Federal Reserve Board to the Attorney General for prosecution in that field. There has not been a single attempt all through the years by the Federal Reserve Board to do anything or, for that matter, by the Comptroller of the Currency to attempt to restrain expansion of banks. Not a single application for permission to merge or consolidate has been disapproved by either of them." (Page 361)
>
> "Yes. I am of the opinion that the Federal Reserve Board entirely overlooked their duties as imposed upon them by the Clayton Act through the years until the clamor arose against bank mergers and bank consolidations as they are happening in the present era. I think they entirely overlooked the fact that they had the right to say 'There shall be no merger or no consolidation because of the provisions of the Clayton Act.' Their entire tendency as indicated by their constant [29] approvals, their failure to stand up and say, 'No, this merger shan't go through, and that consolidation shan't go through,' indicates a sympathy for [*283] the colossus, for the stupendous, in the banking industry." (Page 367)
>
> "With reference to that specific matter, I think it is important to emphasize that with the strengthening of the antitrust laws so far as banks, bank stocks and bank acquisitions are concerned, and if our Federal agencies will now be alerted to their duty to step in and make sure that there are no violations of the antitrust law - and the whole history of it up to date shows that there has been no attempt to look at this situation up to the present moment so far as banks are concerned with any view as to whether or not they will be monopolistic or in violation of the antitrust laws - the minute we strengthen those laws and the minute our enforcement agencies begin to look into this situation of bank-stock acquisition and bank-asset acquisition and begin to bring to bear the full force of the antitrust laws, then bank holding companies must become the device to evade the law unless we enact a bill such as this. They can accomplish the identical thing [30] through the bank holding company that you are seeking to prevent by regulating bank acquisitions and bank-stock acquisitions." (Pages 368-369)

Others indicated that it was believed that § 7 lacked effectiveness in the area of bank holding company acquisitions. Thus during the Senate Subcommittee Hearings, the following colloquy took place at Page 316:

> "SENATOR ROBERTSON. What is the largest bank holding company?
>
> MR. THOMSON. Transamerica is still the largest. Marine Midland second.
>
> SENATOR ROBERTSON. The Federal Reserve Board accused them of violating the antitrust laws.
>
> MR. THOMSON. That is right.
>
> SENATOR ROBERTSON. What was the outcome?
>
> MR. THOMSON. In layman's language, they did not prove their case. But it did prove they did not have the right to bring action under the antitrust laws.

> SENATOR ROBERTSON. Then, Tom McCabe, Chairman of the Federal Reserve, proceeded against the biggest one?
> MR. THOMSON. That is correct.
>
> SENATOR ROBERTSON. On the ground that it was violating the antitrust law? And did not prove the case?
> MR. THOMSON. That is my understanding.
>
> SENATOR ROBERTSON. Then you would assume from [31] that that at the present time there is no bank holding company that could be successfully prosecuted as violating the antitrust laws of the Nation?
> MR. THOMSON. Just as a layman, I would assume that, having started out on that course, if there are others, they would have brought action."

and during the House Committee Hearings, Harry J. Harding, President of the Independent Bankers Association of the 12th Federal Reserve District said at Page 187:

> "Now, on all sides we see the signs of holding-company acquisitions, and a striving for a bigger and bigger share of the country's bank deposits. Does this sound like inertia, or is it the beginning of another mad scramble for banks, the aftermath of the Court's decision in the Transamerica case that the tool the Federal Reserve Board had leaned on, the Clayton Act, was no tool at all with which to combat a tendency toward monopoly?"

and during the House debates at Page 8033 of Volume 101 of the Congressional Record, Representative Rhodes stated:

> "I wonder if the committee has considered that banks are subject to the Sherman Act and they are subject to the Clayton Act. I know there are some loopholes [32] which now exist in the Clayton Act which make it impossible at the present time to treat as fully as they should be treated the monopolistic tendencies, if any there are, in the [*284] banking business. But would not the better approach be to amend the Clayton Act and the Sherman Act, so that this tendency toward monopoly, if it exists, could be handled in the ordinary subjective way by the Attorney General of the United States and the United States attorneys, instead of having the Congress say, 'This is a situation which must by its very nature be monopolistic and, therefore, bad. We will make sure it does not happen any more?' I do not think that is the proper way to legislate on a subject such as this."

Another indication of Congressional intent regarding the relationship between the Bank Holding Company Act and the Clayton Act appears in Volume 102, Part 11 of the Congressional Record at Page 14346 when Senator Fulbright, discussing bank merger legislation considered the same year the Bank Holding Company Act was passed, by the same Congress, stated:

> "In this connection, it should be noted that there was an unsuccessful attempt to enforce the stock acquisition [33] provisions of section 7 against a bank holding company. The enactment of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 earlier this year provides effective regulation of all acquisitions by bank holding companies, and thus eliminates the necessity of resorting to the Clayton Act in such cases."

and in Senate Report No. 2583, 84th Congress, 2nd Session (1956) on that merger legislation at Page 4, the following appears:

> "As was stated previously, the attempt to enforce the stock acquisition provisions of section 7 against the Transamerica Corp. was unsuccessful. The Bank Holding Company Act by requiring advance approval by the Federal Reserve Board of all acquisitions by bank holding companies eliminates the necessity of resorting to section 7 in such cases. Thus, section 7 of the Clayton Act is actually an insignificant factor in the control of acquisitions by either banks or bank holding companies."

Our conclusions after studying the legislative history are as follows:

1. When it enacted the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956, Congress believed that the Clayton Act could not effectively cope with concentration in banking or with the danger to competition among banks which [34] might result from bank holding company acquisitions.

2. HN11[] It was the intent of Congress in enacting holding company legislation to strengthen, or activate, not repeal, § 7 of the Clayton Act. [11] [36] To attain this result, [*285] Congress chose to prohibit completely acquisitions by bank holding companies of a certain percentage of the voting shares of any bank unless prior approval was obtained from the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, which Board was charged with the duty of enforcement of § 7 of the Clayton Act. [12] It instructed the Board to consider five factors in determining

---

[11] At Page 325 of the Senate Subcommittee Hearings Mr. Thomson stated:

> "There may be another and more simple method of dealing with this question. Expansion of bank holding companies is primarily a question of competition and monopoly. Acquisitions by bank holding companies are subject to the Sherman Act and, as recently decided in the Transamerica litigation, to the Clayton Act insofar as stock acquisitions are concerned.
>
> There are now pending in Congress S. 2075 introduced by Senator Sparkman and H.R. 5948 introduced by Mr. Celler which would complete the coverage by bringing asset acquisitions within section 7 of the Clayton Act. This problem might and perhaps should be dealt with directly as one of monopoly and competition. The indirect approach adopted by H.R. 6227 has resulted in a bill which will lead to confusion in the field of bank regulation, unnecessary conflict between State and Federal authorities, and restrictions on normal growth far more severe than those of the antitrust laws."

and during the House Committee Hearings, R. M. Evans, former Governor of the Federal Reserve System, stated:

> "During all the years that the Board was working with bank holding company legislation, and all the years they were working with bank holding companies, we always had it in our minds that in the Clayton Antitrust Act we had some powers that could compel these people to observe the rules and regulations of the administrative body. It was only after we tried the case and submitted it to the courts, and the courts turned it down, that the question became really urgent, because as of today there is no regulation available, no regulating power available to the Board of Governors to stop the increase in bank holding company acquisitions of independent banks.
>
> Just to give you one little paragraph from the bank holding company hearings on S. 76 and S. 1118, we quote from the court's decision:
>
> 'We agree that this quantitative analysis -'
>
> that is simply a statistical analysis to show the immense concentration of power in this Transamerica Corp. -
>
> 'we agree that this quantitative analysis discloses a tremendous concentration of banking capital and thereby of economic power in the hands of the Transamerica group, which may be unwise and against sound public policy. It may well be in the public interest to curb the growth of this banking colossus by appropriate legislative or administrative action. This, however, is not for us to decide. Our only question is whether the theory upon which the Board based its decision meets the legal tests which are required under section 7 of the Clayton Act, to determine whether Transamerica's bank stock acquisitions tend to create a monoply of commercial banking. We are compelled to agree with Transamerica that they do not.'
>
> So the court told the banking industry, and they told the Congress, that the Clayton Antitrust Act, under which these hearings were held, is not an adequate tool to accomplish the result that I have an idea Congress intended it should take care of in the basic legislation." (Page 507)
>
> * * *
>
> "The worst part about the whole hearing was that when this law came up for a test in court it was found to be inadequate to do the job it was supposed to do. That is the great tragedy of the whole Transamerica hearing. " (Page 508)

and the following colloquy took place (Pages 509-510):

> "THE CHAIRMAN. You think the Clayton Antitrust Act is entirely inadequate to meet the situation, don't you?
>
> MR. EVANS. There is no longer the slightest question in my mind, Mr. Chairman. I was the hearing officer. I recommended the divestment of this whole thing. I thought the evidence was overwhelmingly that way and yet the court said that we did not have the authority to make our position stick. So the thing is inadequate and ineffective.
>
> THE CHAIRMAN. And if there is any regulation of holding companies, it ought to be written into the banking law which directly affects these institutions and governs their activity.
>
> MR. EVANS. Absolutely. I think it is basically wrong to permit any group of people to evade the law. " whether approval should be granted, each factor being a significant consideration in a § 7 case, [13] and, in order that all relevant competitive factors not specifically set forth could be considered, directed the Board in general terms to consider whether the effect of the acquisition would be to expand the bank holding company system involved beyond limits consistent with the preservation of competition in the field of banking.

3. HN12[] Congress intended that the Board, while ruling on acquisition subject to the Bank Holding Company Act, simultaneously perform its duties under the Clayton [35] Act and that the Board alone retain Clayton Act jurisdiction with respect to acquisitions subject to the Bank Holding Company Act.

We realize that this conclusion in effect repeals § 15 of the Clayton Act. We also realize, as stated in Philadelphia Bank, at pages 350-351, that

> HN13[] "Repeals of the antitrust laws by implication from a regulatory statute are [*286] strongly disfavored, and have only been found in cases of plain repugnancy between the antitrust and regulatory provisions."

We wish to emphasize, therefore, that no repeal of the substantive provisions of § 7 is here intended and that in our opinion the Bank Holding Company Act effected a change only in the manner in which § 7 was to be enforced. [14] A holding that § [37] 15 is repealed as to acquisitions subject to the Bank Holding Company Act is, in our opinion, compelled by the existence of plain repugnancies between the two provisions.

[38] In urging that determinations by the Board on the propriety of acquisitions under the Bank Holding Company Act are distinct from or do not involve § 7 determinations, the plaintiff in effect asks us to rule that the Board, after performing its duty under the Bank Holding Company Act, considering the factors therein specified, and finding that an acquisition should be approved, has, in circumstances such as the plaintiff claims exist in the instant case, a duty under § 11 of the Clayton Act to challenge that same acquisition on the grounds that it is violative of § 7. Any construction of the statutes which would place the Board in that self-contradictory role would, in our opinion, be absurd. [15] [39] Rather, we believe that HN15[] Congress intended that when performing its function under the Bank Holding Company Act, the Board should simultaneously exercise its authority to enforce § 7, preventing before they occur acquisitions which would violate that section, and that the Board alone should have such enforcement powers. [16]

---

[12] In this way, Congress could insure examination by an enforcement agency of the competitive effect of each acquisition. Until passage of the Bank Holding Company Act, despite the existence of the Clayton Act with its dual enforcement provisions, no such examination inevitably occurred. As stated previously, no action and only one proceeding involving bank holding companies had been commenced charging violation of § 7 of the Clayton Act.

[13] See footnote 5, supra.

[14] As footnote 22 on pages 344 and 345 of the Philadelphia Bank case reveals, repeal by implication of enforcement provisions of the antitrust laws is not unique. The Supreme Court there stated:

> HN14[] "Section 11 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 21, vests the FRB with authority to enforce § 7 'where applicable to banks.' This provision has been in the Act since it was first passed in 1914 and was not changed by the 1950 amendments. The Bank Merger Act of 1960, assigning roles in merger applications to the FDIC and the Comptroller of the Currency as well as to the FRB, plainly supplanted, we think, whatever authority the FRB may have acquired under § 11, by virtue of the amendment of § 7, to enforce § 7 against bank mergers. Since the Bank Merger Act applies only to mergers, consolidations, acquisitions of assets, and assumptions of liabilities but not to outright stock acquisitions, the FRB's authority under § 11 as it existed before the 1950 amendment of § 7 remains unaffected."

[15] It might be argued, to remove this absurdity, that the Bank Holding Company Act repealed the Board's authority to enforce the Clayton Act by implication rather than repealing § 15. We believe it would be equally absurd to hold that Congress, in directing the Board to examine proposed acquisitions in the light of the factors specified in the Bank Holding Company Act, intended to divest it of the authority and duty to enforce § 7.

[16] In other words Congress abandoned the theretofore ineffective system of dual enforcement as to acquisitions covered by the Bank Holding Company Act in favor of required examination and enforcement by the Board prior to the acquisitions.

The nature of proceedings before the Board with respect to bank holding company acquisitions and of the review of Board orders provided by the Bank Holding Company Act also compels the conclusion that action taken by the Board with respect to a bank holding company acquisition and appellate review thereof was intended by Congress to be a final determination of the legality of that acquisition in all respects.

Admittedly, HN16[] the hearing provisions of § 3 of the Act, quoted previously, are somewhat sparse. No hearing need be held if the Comptroller of Currency or State banking authority does not disapprove the application. [17] However, that such provisions are adequate to enable the [*287] Board to resolve the issues involved and make its determination is demonstrated by the following statement by the United States Supreme Court in the Whitney Bank case, [40] at page 417:

> "Provision is made (under the Bank Holding Company Act) for a full administrative proceeding before the Board in which all interested persons may participate and the views of the interested supervisory authorities may be obtained."

See also, as to adequacy of Board proceedings, Northwest Bancorporation v. Board of Governors, etc., (C.A. 8, 1962) 303 F.2d 832; First Wisconsin Bankshares Corp. v. Board of Governors (C.A. 7, 1963) 325 F.2d 946. And the plaintiff here has never pointed to any position it could not have enlarged and presented adequately before the Board. [18]

[41] Likewise the plaintiff has never claimed that it did not have the right to seek review of the Board's orders under § 9 of the Bank Holding Company Act and clearly, where plaintiff's contentions are rejected by the Board, it must be considered a "party aggrieved" within the meaning of that section. Had it sought review, which it did not, the plaintiff would have had the burden of convincing the Court of Appeals that the Board's findings were not supported by substantial evidence or that its conclusions therefrom were erroneous. We find it repugnant to hold that Congress contemplated that the plaintiff could ignore this right of review completely, when its § 7 contentions unsuccessfully raised before the Board can be presented to the Court of Appeals, and commence an action in the district court. Particularly is this true since Congress rejected provisions permitting trial de novo in the Bank Holding Company Act in favor of the far more limited court review permitted under § 9.

In the Court's opinion, the jurisdictional question here presented has been decided by the Supreme Court in the Whitney Bank case. In that case, the Supreme Court held that the district court [42] had no jurisdiction to pass on the merits of a holding company proposal, and that original exclusive jurisdiction with respect thereto rested in the Federal Reserve Board. It stated:

> "We believe HN17[] Congress intended the statutory proceedings before the Board to be the sole means by which questions as to the organization or operation of a new bank by a bank holding company may be tested. Admittedly the acquisition of an existing bank is exclusively within the jurisdiction of the Board." (page 419)
> * * *
>
> " . . . it is the exclusive function of the Board to act in such cases and contests must be pursued before it, not before the Comptroller. This position is also supported by legislative history which shows that Congress rejected a proposal for a de novo review in the district courts of Board decisions on holding company proposals. Compare 12 U.S.C. § 1848 (1958 ed.) and S. Rep. No. 1095, pt. 1, 84th Cong., 1st Sess., 9 and pt. 2, 84th Cong., 2d Sess., 5, with § 9 of H.R. 6227, 101 Cong.Rec. 8187, and H.R. Rep. No. 609, 84th Cong., 1st

---

[17] As a matter of practice, however, it appears that the Board does hold hearings even though no disapproval by the Comptroller or state banking authority is filed. See Whitney National Bank in Jefferson Parish v. Bank of New Orleans & Trust Co. (1964) 379 U.S. 411, at page 416, 13 L. Ed. 2d 386, 85 S. Ct. 551.

[18] In this case the plaintiff deliberately chose not to attack the defendant holding company's acquisition of stock of Marshall & Ilsley Bank and Northern. When the holding company sought approval of acquisition of the stock of Commerce, the Department of Justice filed statements with the Board opposing the acquisition and in a petition for reconsideration urged its position that the acquisition violated § 7 of the Clayton Act. The state banking authorities had recommended that the Board approve the acquisitions.

> Sess., 22, 25-26. Such a procedure would have been similar to that employed here against the Comptroller by respondents. However, [43] the Congress decided otherwise, providing instead for review in the courts of appeals based on the facts found by the Board supported by substantial evidence. We think these congressional actions point clearly to the conclusion that it HN18[] intended that challenges to Board approval of the organization and [*288] operation of a new bank by a bank holding company be pursued solely as provided in the statute. This view is confirmed by our cases holding that where Congress has provided statutory review procedures designed to permit agency expertise to be brought to bear on particular problems, those procedures are to be exclusive. See, e.g., Callanan Road Improvement Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 507, 97 L. Ed. 1206, 73 S. Ct. 803 (1953); Myers v. Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corp., 303 U.S. 41, 82 L. Ed. 638, 58 S. Ct. 459 (1938); Texas & Pac. R. Co. v. Abilene Cotton Oil Co., 204 U.S. 426, 51 L. Ed. 553, 27 S. Ct. 350 (1907). Congress has set out in the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 a carefully planned and comprehensive method for challenging Board determinations. That action by Congress was designed to permit an agency, expert in banking matters, to explore and pass on the ramifications [44] of a proposed bank holding company arrangement. To permit a district court to make the initial determination of a plan's propriety would substantially decrease the effectiveness of the statutory design." (379 U.S., pages 419-420)
> * * *
>
> "Moreover, we reject the notion that HN19[] the Board's determination may be collaterally attacked in the District Court by a suit against the Comptroller. Opponents of the opening of a new bank by a bank holding company must first attack the arrangement before the Board, subject only to review by the Courts of Appeals. City of Tacoma v. Taxpayers of Tacoma, 357 U.S. 320, 2 L. Ed. 2d 1345, 78 S. Ct. 1209 (1958); United States v. Corrick, 298 U.S. 435, 80 L. Ed. 1263, 56 S. Ct. 829 (1936). That Congress has not expressly provided that the statutory procedure is to be exclusive does not require a different conclusion. For Congress has expressly rejected proposed provisions for review in these cases in the district courts. Moreover, it has enacted a specific statutory scheme for obtaining review, and where Congress has directed such a procedure as that found in the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956, the doctrine of exhaustion of administrative remedies [45] comes into play and requires that the statutory mode of review be adhered to notwithstanding the absence of an express statutory command of exclusiveness.
> A rejection of this doctrine here would result in unnecessary duplication and conflicting litigation. Some opponents might participate before the Board; others might well wait for termination of the Board's activities and then sue in the district courts for an injunction accomplishing the same ultimate end. The different records, applications of different standards and conflicting determinations that would surely result from such duplicative procedures all militate in favor of the conclusion that the statutory steps provided in the Act are exclusive." (379 U.S. pages 421-422)
> * * *
>
> "We have discussed earlier the importance which Congress has attached in the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 to the principle that the Federal Reserve Board, with its expertise in the banking field, should make the initial determination of the propriety of the plan of organization giving full consideration to the legislative guidelines set out in the Act." (379 U.S. page 424)

In a brief filed April 1, 1966, the plaintiff belittles the [46] defendants for their reliance on the Whitney Bank case as follows:

> "The repeated citation to the Court by the defense counsel in current and previous correspondence of the statement in Whitney National Bank v. Bank of New Orleans & Trust Co., et al, 379 U.S. 411, 414, 13 L. Ed. 2d 386, 85 S. Ct. 551, to the effect that the Federal Reserve Board has 'original exclusive jurisdiction' under the Bank Holding Company Act is [*289] peculiarly misplaced, and demonstrates manifest misunderstanding of the doctrine of 'primary jurisdiction.' In the first place, use of the statement in the Whitney case must be read in light of the fact that the particular litigation was not an antitrust one and involved no proceeding under any antitrust statutes." (Page 5) and in a brief filed May 9, 1966, it attempts to distinguish that case and states:

"What the whole Whitney Bank dispute was really about, therefore, was the question of alleged illegality of the de novo bank under state anti-branch banking laws. It was not concerned with anti-trust in general, Section 11 in particular, or with any question of Section 9 versus Section 11. The various statements [47] in the Supreme Court's decision, whether they be about primary jurisdiction, exhaustion of administrative remedies, appellate review or the like, must be regarded in light of this fundamental fact." (Pages 7-8)

The plaintiff's attempts to distinguish the Whitney Bank case are without merit. Contrary to plaintiff's statement, that case did not in our opinion involve any application of the doctrine of primary jurisdiction and defendants have demonstrated no misunderstanding of that doctrine. Rather, it dealt with the exclusive jurisdiction of the Board. We find nothing in the decision indicating that the fact that a new bank rather than an existing bank was being acquired was significant, particularly since the Court stated clearly that acquisition of an existing bank was exclusively within the Board's jurisdiction.

Neither do we consider the fact that the Whitney Bank case was not an antitrust action a relevant distinction. HN20[] It is true that the savings clause of the Bank Holding Company Act, § 11, quoted previously, states that nothing contained in the Act shall constitute a defense in any suit arising out of any prohibited antitrust or monopolistic act, action or conduct. [48] It also provides, however, that nothing contained in the Act shall be interpreted as approving any act, action or conduct in violation of existing law. Despite this latter mentioned provision of the savings clause, the Supreme Court held that the Board had exclusive jurisdiction to determine the legality of an acquisition which the Court of Appeals had held to be in violation of the Banking Act of 1933. We see no reason for giving the savings clause a greater effect when an antitrust violation is claimed than when violation of other existing law is alleged.

The savings clause upon which the plaintiff relies did not appear in bank holding company legislation as originally introduced in the House and Senate and there is little in the legislative history regarding its significance. In our view this section does not as the plaintiff claims reserve to it the right to challenge in a separate action acquisitions approved by the Board solely on the ground that the acquisitions violate § 7, and neither the Senate nor House Reports support that view. [19] This provision is entirely consistent [*290] with our view that the Federal Reserve Board must consider § 7 in making its determination [49] on applications under the Bank Holding Company Act and that the Board alone, subject to review, can enforce that section with respect to acquisitions subject to that Act.

[50] The plaintiff had an opportunity to present its § 7 contentions before the Board when the acquisitions here involved were under consideration. It failed to object to the defendant holding company's acquisition of stock of Marshall & Ilsley Bank and Northern. When it chose to oppose the later acquisition of the stock of Commerce its position was considered by the Board and it was permitted to advance for consideration whatever material it desired. While it may be true that § 7 was not extensively discussed by the Board, the plaintiff's grievances in regard to its application should properly have been expressed to the Court of Appeals pursuant to § 9 of the Bank Holding Company Act and, for reasons heretofore stated, cannot be indirectly presented to this court.

---

[19] With respect to that section, House Report No. 609 states at Page 34:

"Section 12. This section contains a savings clause to make clear that nothing in this act shall be construed as approving any act, action, or conduct in violation of existing law or constituting a defense in antitrust or monopolistic proceedings."

and Senate Report No. 1095 states at Page 19:

"The bill provides that none of its provisions are to be construed as approving any act, action or conduct in violation of existing law. It also provides that nothing in the bill shall constitute a defense to any action, suit, or proceeding pending or later instituted on account of any prohibited antitrust or monopolistic act, action or conduct. In the opinion of your committee, approvals granted and action permitted under the provisions of this bill are not to supersede the provisions of other Federal laws, particularly those designed to control monopoly or break up trusts. For example, the Clayton Act has been judicially determined to apply to banks. Under the provisions of that act, the Federal Reserve Board has an administrative role to play in determining whether banks comply with the requirements of the Clayton Act. Under the provisions of this bill, any action taken by the Federal Reserve Board in accordance with its terms is not to interfere in any manner with the performance by the Board of such functions as may be assigned to it under the Clayton Act."

In their answer the defendants challenged the jurisdiction of the court under § 15 of the Clayton Act. No jurisdictional defense was pressed, however, until after the trial had been completed. Since it must hold that it is without jurisdiction, the court believes a discussion of the merits would be improper. This is especially true since the Board having jurisdiction has rendered its decision.

Action dismissed. [51]

Cedar Crest Hats, Inc. v. United Hatters, etc.

United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit

June 16, 1966

No. 21590

Reporter

362 F.2d 322 *; 1966 U.S. App. LEXIS 5800 ; 62 L.R.R.M. 2441; 53 Lab. Cas. (CCH) P11,309; 1966 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,808

Cedar Crest Hats, Inc., et al., Appellants v. United Hatters, Cap and Millinery Workers International Union, AFL-CIO, Appellee

Disposition: [1] Affirmed

Core Terms

labor dispute, district court, manufacturers, leaf-letting, buy, millinery, non-union, retailers, antitrust violation, restraint of trade

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

HN1[] Exemptions & Immunities, Labor

In order for union activity to constitute a violation of antitrust laws, there must be a combination of union and nonunion business groups to create a monopoly, resulting in a restraint of trade or interstate commerce.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

HN2[] Exemptions & Immunities, Labor

Where a union acts solely in its own self-interest and makes no attempt to create a monopoly, there is no antitrust violation.

Civil Procedure > ... > Jury Trials > Jury Instructions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Standards of Review > Harmless & Invited Errors > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Standards of Review > Harmless & Invited Errors > Harmless Error Rule

HN3[] Jury Trials, Jury Instructions

Judgment notwithstanding the verdict may be entered as if the requested verdict had been directed. Fed. R. Civ. P. 50(b).

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > General Overview

HN4[] Labor & Employment Law, Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations

See 29 U.S.C.S. § 113(c).

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Unfair Labor Practices > Union Violations > Secondary Activities

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Unfair Labor Practices > General Overview

HN5[] Union Violations, Secondary Activities

See 29 U.S.C.S. § 158(b)(4)(ii)(B).

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Protected Activities

HN6[] Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations, Protected Activities

The lawful purpose of leaf-letting a secondary distributor is to encourage the public to cease purchasing non-union goods and thus discourage the distributor from buying them.

Judges: Jones, Senior Judge, * and Gewin and Bell, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: GEWIN

Opinion

[*324] GEWIN, C.J.:

This is an appeal from a judgment rendered for the Union defendant in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Texas in a suit seeking an injunction and damages for alleged antitrust violations and illegal labor practices.

Appellee, United Hatters, Cap and Millinery Workers International Union, AFL-CIO (Union), is a labor organization representing ladies' hat and millinery workers throughout the United States. Until the time of the institution of this lawsuit, it had been unsuccessful in attempts to organize the workers of millinery manufacturers in the Dallas, Texas, area, except in the plant of one Bierner & Son.

* Of the United States Court of Claims, sitting by designation.

In 1962, the Union began a nationwide membership and public education drive. It was the stated goal of the Union to condition the hat-wearing public to buy only those hats bearing union labels so that all manufacturers would be forced to unionize. The Union contacted a number of national retailers of ladies' hats and stated that if they continued to buy [2] and retail non-union goods, it would distribute leaflets in front of their stores urging customers to buy only union-made hats. One such retailer, Joseph Rabinovich, owner of Ogus, Rabinovich & Ogus, Inc. (ORO) and Rhealee Stores, Inc. (Rhealee), acquiesced in Union demands and instructed the personnel in his two companies to stop purchasing from non-union shops when buying in the Dallas market. There was no labor dispute between Rabinovich and the Union, as ORO and Rhealee had already unionized their shipping and handling departments.

Soon thereafter, nine non-union millinery manufacturers [1] in Dallas (appellants) became cognizant of the Union pressure on retailers and filed suit in the district court, seeking an injunction and damages against the Union, ORO and Rhealee. Four counts in the complaint alleged:

> I. A conspiracy between the Union, and ORO and Rhealee to restrain interstate [*325] trade or commerce in violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.A., SS 1 and 2.
> II. A common law conspiracy between the same parties to damage the business of appellants without justification and with malice.
>
> III. Violation of the secondary boycott provisions [3] of the Labor Management Relations Act, 29 U.S.C.A. § 158(b)(4)(ii)(B). [2]
> IV. A common law action for unlawful and malicious interference with the business relationships of the manufacturers and their customers.

The Union denied each of the allegations. Prior to the trial, ORO and Rhealee were dismissed from the case with consent of appellants.

Upon the trial special issues were submitted to a jury, pursuant to Rule 49(a) F. R. Civ. P. As to Count III, the District Court denied appellants' request to submit to the jury the question of whether there existed a "labor dispute" between appellants and the Union as defined [4] in 29 U.S.C.A. § 113 (Norris-LaGuardia Act).

The jury found for appellants on Count I and for the Union on Counts II, III and IV. Both parties made motions for judgment notwithstanding the verdict under Rule 50 F. R. Civ. P. The District Court granted the Union's motion and entered judgment for it notwithstanding the jury verdict on Count I, Texas Millinery Co. v. United Hatters, 229 F. Supp. 341. This appeal followed. [3]

---

[1] Texas Millinery Company; Sue Ellen Hat Co., Inc.; Cedar Crest Hats, Inc.; Parke Layne Hats; Jan Leslie Hats, Inc.; Goldstein Hat Manufacturing Company; Pete Brooks Hat Company, Inc.; Bernstein Millinery Company; and Frank M. Benson.

[2] The District Court concluded it had jurisdiction under the provisions of 29 U.S.C.A. § 187(b).

[3] By order of this Court five of the appellants were voluntarily dismissed from the appeal: Texas Millinery Co.; Sue Ellen Hat Co., Inc.; Jan Leslie Hats, Inc.; Pete Brooks Hat Co., Inc.; and Bernstein Millinery Co. As to the four appellants remaining, the jury found damages in the following amounts:

Cedar Crest Hats Inc.

$ 501.00

Parke Layne Hats

$ 681.00

Goldstein Hat Mfg. Co.

Appellants here contend the District Court erred as follows: (1) in granting judgment for the Union notwithstanding [5] the verdict of the jury on Count I because there was sufficient evidence to support the verdict; (2) by refusing to submit to the jury under Count III the question of whether there existed a "labor dispute" between appellants and the Union as defined by 29 U.S.C.A. § 113; and (3) the verdict of the jury on Count III was contrary to a preponderance of the evidence and therefore, their motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict should have been granted.

The answer to appellants' first contention can be found in the Court's charge to the jury on union antitrust violation, the pertinent portion of which is as follows:

> "The antitrust law seeks to maintain free competition in interstate commerce in order to protect the public interest. The end sought by the antitrust law is the prevention of unreasonable restraints in business and commercial transactions which tend to restrict production, raise prices or otherwise control the market to the detriment of purchasers or consumers of goods and services; the public is to be protected in order to secure to them the advantages which accrue to them from free competition in the market. A concerted refusal to [6] deal, which tends to restrict free and open access to the market is a restraint of trade, since it is one of those situations where the law presumes a public injury. You must decide under the evidence whether any refusal to deal here is a restraint of trade. Not all restraints of trade are unreasonable restraints. All business action affects trade in some way. Therefore, in determining whether a restraint of trade exists, you must decide whether the particular conduct is reasonably calculated to prejudice the public interest, which the antitrust law is designed to protect; that is, you must decide whether the conduct which you have found tends to restrict or otherwise control free and [*326] open competition. In determining whether or not such an unreasonable restraint exists, you need not find a specific public injury, but you must find that the conduct tends or is reasonably calculated to prejudice the public interest."

We find this charge to be inadequate to describe a labor union antitrust violation, because it merely defines an antitrust violation in the broadest possible terms without giving any consideration to the special exemptions which labor unions [7] enjoy under the law. Our reading of the Supreme Court decisions in Allen Bradley Co. v. Local Union No. 3, 325 U.S. 797, 89 L. Ed. 1939, 65 S. Ct. 1533 (1945), and the more recent cases of United Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626, 85 S. Ct. 1585 (1965) and Amalgamated Meat Cutters Union v. Jewel Tea Co., 381 U.S. 676, 14 L. Ed. 2d 640, 85 S. Ct. 1596 (1965), convinces us that HN1[] in order for union activity to constitute a violation of antitrust laws in the circumstances here presented, there must be a combination of union and nonunion business groups to create a monopoly, resulting in a restraint of trade or interstate commerce. [4] For example, in Bradley, the union entered into a "program in which contractors and

---

$2,201.00

Frank M. Benson

$ 621.00

[4] In Bradley the Court stated:

> "The difficulty of drawing legislation primarily aimed at trusts and monopolies so that it could also be applied to labor organizations without impairing the collective bargaining and related rights of those organizations had been emphasized both by congressional and judicial attempts to draw lines between permissible and prohibited union activities. There is, however, one line which we can draw with assurance that we follow the congressional purpose. We know that Congress feared the concentrated power of business organizations to dominate markets and prices. It intended to outlaw business manufacturers united with one another to monopolize all the business in New York City, to bar all other business men from that area, and to charge the public prices above a competitive level." 325 U.S. at 809, 89 L. Ed. at 1949, 65 S. Ct. at 1540. In Pennington, the Court said a violation would [8] arise if the union were to become a party to a collusive arrangement among large coal producers designed to drive smaller competitors from the market, even though the union's part in the scheme was a bona fide undertaking to secure better wages for its members. 381 U.S. at 663-666, 14 L. Ed 2d at 632-634. In other words, the union must join in a conspiracy to create a monopoly among fellow-conspiratory business interests. This interpretation is reinforced by the statement of Mr. Justice Black in Allen Bradley at 325 U.S. at 809, 89 L. Ed. at 1948, 65 S. Ct. 1533 that "Employers and the union did here make bargaining agreements in which the employers agreed not to buy goods manufactured by companies which did not employ the members of Local 3. We may assume that such an agreement standing alone would not have violated the Sherman Act." We, in turn, may assume that HN2[] where a union acts solely in its own self-interest and makes no attempt to create a monopoly, there is no antitrust violation.

[9] The District Court seems to have recognized the error in its charge when it nullified the jury's verdict under Count I for the following reasons stated in its written findings:

> "2. The purpose of the Union in advising Rabinovich of its intention to leaflet being to further legitimate union activity -- that of unionizing employees of plaintiffs and promoting the sale of union-made goods and discouraging the sale of non-union-made goods -- and there being no other purposes, the Union, in inducing O.R.O. and Rhealee to cease doing business with plaintiffs, acted solely in its self interest and with justification."
>
> [*327] "3. Rabinovich's agreement with Rose that O.R.O. and Rhealee would cease buying non-union goods does not violate the Sherman Act."

For appellants to have prevailed under Count I it would have been necessary for them to prove facts showing that the Union conspired with certain business interests to create a monopoly for such business interests. We have diligently searched the record and conclude that no such facts were proved.

This case presents a rather unique situation. While there is substantial evidence to sustain the verdict of the [10] jury under the erroneous charge, Count I should not have been submitted to the jury in the first place if the issue had been properly stated. Since the Union requested a directed verdict and such clearly would have been proper, the judgment of the District Court as to Count I is affirmed. HN3[] Judgment notwithstanding the verdict may be entered "as if the requested verdict had been directed." Rule 50 (b) F.R. Civ. P. It is our conclusion that in these circumstances the incorrect charge was "harmless error." Rule 61 F. R. Civ. P.

In Count III of their complaint appellants alleged a violation of the secondary boycott provisions of the Labor Management Relations Act, 29 U.S.C.A. § 158(b)(4)(ii) (B). [5] [12] The Union responded by claiming that their leaf-letting activity was protected by the publicity proviso to that Section. [6] Appellants here complain that the District > monopolies. A business monopoly is no less such because a union participates, and such participation is a violation of the [Sherman] Act."

---

[5] § 158(b)(4)(ii)(B):

> HN5[] "(b) It shall be an unfair labor practice for a labor organization or its agents --
>
> (4) (ii) to threaten, coerce, or restrain any person engaged in commerce or in an industry affecting commerce, where in either case an object thereof is --
>
> (B) forcing or requiring any person to cease using, selling, handling, transporting, or otherwise dealing in the products of any other producer, processor, or manufacturer, or to cease doing business with any other person, or forcing or requiring any other employer to recognize or bargain with a labor organization as the representative of his employees unless such labor organization has been certified as the representative of such employees under the provisions of section 159 of this title: Provided, That nothing contained in this clause (B) shall be construed to make unlawful, where not otherwise unlawful, any primary strike or primary picketing;"

Court erred in refusing to submit to the jury the question whether there existed a "labor dispute" between themselves and the Union. [11] 29 U.S.C.A. § 113(c) defines "labor dispute" as follows:

> HN4[] "The term 'labor dispute' includes any controversy concerning terms or conditions of employment, or concerning the association or representation of persons in negotiating, fixing, maintaining, changing, or seeking to arrange terms or conditions of employment, regardless of whether or not the disputants stand in the proximate relation of employer and employee."

[13] It is quite clear from the evidence that a "labor dispute" existed between appellants and the Union. Strong undisputed evidence shows that the Union has been attempting to organize millinery [*328] workers in the Dallas area almost continuously since 1937. In 1957 the Union won a representation election from one manufacturer, Bierner & Son. As late as 1962 union representatives were obtaining authorization cards from appellants' employees, and only six months prior to the filing of this suit, a full-time organizer was stationed in Dallas who was in constant contact with millinery workers. No citation of authority is actually needed to hold this situation to be a "labor dispute," and the District Court is affirmed. See Marine Cooks & Stewards v. Panama Steamship, 362 U.S. 365, 4 L. Ed. 2d 797, 80 S. Ct. 779 (1960); East Texas Motor Freight Lines v. International, etc., 163 F.2d 10 (5th Cir. 1947). Indeed, we find it unusual to say the least, that in these circumstances appellants would deny the existence of a labor dispute.

Appellants concede that it would be lawful for the Union to leaflet the retail stores peacefully in order to advise [14] the public of a labor dispute. However, they contend that a preponderance of the evidence shows that the motive of the Union was not to advise the public, but to effect a secondary boycott. Therefore, it is argued that the Union is not protected by the publicity proviso of Section 158(b)(4). We cannot agree to such a limited and unrealistic interpretation of that section. As the Supreme Court pointed out in NLRB v. Fruit & Vegetable Packers, 377 U.S. 58, 12 L. Ed. 2d 129, 84 S. Ct. 1063 (1964), HN6[] the lawful purpose of leaf-letting a secondary distributor is to encourage the public to cease purchasing non-union goods and thus discourage the distributor from buying them. The only distinction between the Fruit & Vegetable Packers case and the present situation is that ORO and Rhealee acquiesced before the leaf-letting ever began. This was simply an act of foresight. The jury had abundant, undisputed evidence in the form of testimony from retailers themselves to conclude that the only pressure brought against them was the threat of leaf-letting. Therefore, the verdict and [15] judgment thereon shall stand. NLRB v. Fruit & Vegetable Packers, supra. See also NLRB v. Servette, Inc., 377 U.S. 46, 12 L. Ed. 2d 121, 84 S. Ct. 1098 (1964).

The judgment is Affirmed.

End of Document

---

[6] "Provided, That nothing contained in this subsection shall be construed to make unlawful a refusal by any person to enter upon the premises of any employer (other than his own employer), if the employees of such employer are engaged in a strike ratified or approved by a representative of such employees whom such employer is required to recognize under this subchapter: Provided further, That for the purposes of this paragraph (4) only, nothing contained in such paragraph shall be construed to prohibit publicity, other than picketing, for the purpose of truthfully advising the public, including consumers and members of a labor organization, that a product or products are produced by an employer with whom the labor organization has a primary dispute and are distributed by another employer, as long as such publicity does not have an effect of inducing any individual employed by any person other than the primary employer in the course of his employment to refuse to pick up, deliver, or transport any goods, or not to perform any services, at the establishment of the employer engaged in such distribution."

Schulman v. Burlington Industries, Inc.

United States District Court for the Southern District of New York

June 28, 1966

No. 66 Civ. 130

Reporter

255 F. Supp. 847 *; 1966 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10179 ; 1966 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,822

Emilie Schulman, Hosiery by Emilie, Inc., and Harem Hosiery, Inc. , Plaintiffs v. Burlington Industries, Inc., et al. , Defendants

Core Terms

hosiery, allegations, conspiracy, customers, interstate, antitrust, counts, induce, retail, commerce

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > Failure to State Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN1[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

In appraising the sufficiency of a complaint a trial court follows the accepted rule that a complaint should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief. This general principle applies with at least its customary force in suits under the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

Patent Law > ... > Damages > Collateral Assessments > General Overview

HN2[] Regulated Practices, Private Actions

In complaint based on anti-trust violations, allegations adequate to show a violation and, in a private treble damage action, that plaintiff was damaged thereby are all the law requires, for the cases, whatever their factual and verbal diversities, make clear at a minimum that one qualifies as a private antitrust plaintiff when the violation is directly aimed" at him or he has been "directly harmed" by it.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN3[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Unlawful conspiracies commonly consist in part of conduct entirely lawful in itself. Thus, there is no actionable wrong in the mere fact that a competitor sets up shop in close proximity to an existing enterprise. The same may be said of alleged special benefits and advantages extended by a distributor to a retailer to make the latter a more effective competitor. But these steps may serve as part of the sum of the acts which are relied upon to effectuate the conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN4[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

That wholly local business restraints can produce the effects condemned by the Sherman Act is no longer open to question. This principle applies even without reference to the clearly interstate aspects of a defendant's business and the allegations that this business and its revenues are being employed to effect the wrongs that local plaintiffs charge.

Judges: [1] Frankel, D.J.

Opinion by: FRANKEL

Opinion

[*849] Memorandum

FRANKEL, D.J.:

Plaintiffs, who own and operate in Chicago stores selling women's hosiery at retail, have filed a four-count complaint against (1) Burlington Industries, Inc., a manufacturer of women's hosiery, among other products, (2) Parklane Hosiery Company, Inc., which is both a wholesale distributor and an operator of retail stores selling women's hosiery, and (3) several officers and employees of these defendant corporations. [1] The second and third counts, which are not of direct concern at this time, allege, respectively, breach of a restrictive agreement by Parklane and wrongful inducement of that breach by Burlington. The first and fourth counts, which do concern us now, seek treble damages under Section 4 of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. § 15) for various alleged violations of the antitrust laws. The Burlington defendants (except for one individual) have moved under Rule 12(b)(1) and (6) to dismiss the first and fourth counts for lack of jurisdiction over the subject matter and failure to state claims upon which relief can be granted. Alternatively, under Rule 12(f), these defendants move to strike, in whole or [2] part, sundry paragraphs of the first and fourth counts as well as one paragraph (59) of the third count. [2]

[1] It will be sufficient for most purposes to refer hereafter to Burlington and Parklane as the defendants.

I.

The first count, involving Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. §§ 1 and 2), Sections 2(a), (d), (e), and (f) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act (15 U.S.C. § 13(a), (d), (e), and (f)), and Sections 4, 12 and 15 of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. §§ 15, 22, and 26), after identifying the parties, alleges the following facts to be taken as true for purposes [3] of the motion: Plaintiffs, variously styling their stores as "Albert's," "Albert's Hosiery," or "Albert's Hosiery Stores," purchase substantial quantities of the hosiery they sell from one Albert Hayes, who distributes in interstate commerce to plaintiffs and other retailers throughout the United States. The stores plaintiffs operate, along with those of defendant Parklane and other competitors selling women's hosiery exclusively, "constitute a separate, substantial and distinct area of competition * * *." [3] Burlington and Parklane (in its role as distributor) compete with Albert Hayes.

Before 1954, the first count continues, Albert Hayes bought substantial quantities of hosiery from Burlington, but such purchases became only occasional thereafter. From 1953 to 1957 Albert [4] Hayes sold to Parklane substantially all of the latter's hosiery requirements. In the years covered by the complaint, and until the present time, Burlington has attempted "to coerce and induce said Albert Hayes to purchase all or substantially all of his hosiery requirements from defendant Burlington." As part of this attempt, Burlington induced Parklane to cease buying from Albert Hayes and to buy from Burlington instead. At the same time the several defendants entered into a "combination, conspiracy, contract and plan" the purposes of which included, unless Albert Hayes agreed to purchase all his requirements [*850] from Burlington, action "to injure or to destroy the businesses of plaintiffs and other customers of said Albert Hayes so as to coerce and induce them to cease doing business with him and instead to do business with defendant Burlington, * * * [and] to injure and prevent competition in the sale of women's hosiery at retail between customers * * * of said Albert Hayes, including, among others, the * * * plaintiffs herein, * * * and the stores owned, controlled by or affiliated with defendant Parklane * * *." In further implementation of the conspiracy, Burlington [5] agreed to and did extend credit to Parklane on terms more favorable than those given to other Burlington customers, financed the opening of new Parklane stores, gave discriminatorily favorable prices to Parklane, and extended other benefits and assistance to Parklane "which were not available, or not available on proportionately equal terms, to all of defendant Burlington's other hosiery customers." [4] Also in pursuance of the conspiracy, paragraph 31 of the complaint alleges, Parklane agreed to and did open retail stores close to plaintiffs' "for the purpose of injuring them and coercing and inducing them to cease dealing with * * * Albert Hayes and to deal instead with defendant Burlington." Since the opening of these Parklane stores (in 1960), defendants Burlington and Parklane have pressured plaintiffs either to sell their stores to defendants "or to agree to buy * * * all or substantially all of the hosiery requirements for said stores from the defendants Parklane and Burlington." Parklane has, as part of this effort, interfered with plaintiffs' leasing agreements and "engaged in other unfair methods of competition." Moreover, the pattern of tactics described in

---

[2] Parklane and its president have made no formal motion, but have filed a brief memorandum offered "as evidencing their joinder" in the Burlington motion. Plaintiffs, pointing out that the motion papers are drafted with focused concern only for the Burlington movants, resist the proposed joinder. Since the motion is being denied, it is not vital to decide how many of the defendants may claim a share in the result.

[3] The complaint (par. 17) adds alleged factual detail to support the quoted conclusion. We accept this conclusion, like others, for now. Cf. United States v. DuPont & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 395 & n. 22, 76 S. Ct. 994, 100 L. Ed. 1264 (1956).

[4] Four paragraphs of the first count, detailing discriminatory pricing and other practices by Burlington in favor of Parklane, rest explicitly on the Robinson-Patman Act. The first of these (par. 38) refers to discriminations by Burlington "between plaintiffs, on the one hand, and defendant Parklane and others * * *." Defendants say in their Memorandum that this reference to "plaintiffs" must be an inadvertence because (1) it is the only place in the long complaint where plaintiffs are suggested to be Burlington customers and (2) the paragraph is copied from the complaint in another pending action (S.D.N.Y., 63 Civ. 2043) brought by Albert Hayes and others against the defendants herein. Defendants' observation is highly plausible; it is not mentioned in the thorough memoranda for plaintiffs.

paragraph 31 is [6] said (par. 32) to have been duplicated by defendants in other cities around the country. Other acts of unfair competition - threats, misrepresentations, interference with employees and customers - all in furtherance of the conspiracy, are also alleged.

[7] The first count ends with allegations of damage to plaintiffs, injuries to purchasers of women's hosiery, and public injury in the form of obstructions and restraints in interstate commerce.

The fourth count, also attacked by defendants' motion, incorporates the first, and adds the second (breach of covenants) and third (inducement of the breach) as being additional "acts * * * in furtherance of the aforesaid conspiracy."

II.

HN1[] "In appraising the sufficiency of the complaint we follow, of course, the accepted rule that a complaint should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief." Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-6, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 (1957). This general principle applies with at least its customary force in suits under the antitrust laws. E.g., United States v. Employing Plasterers Assn., 347 U.S. 186, 98 L. Ed. 618, 74 S. Ct. 452 (1954); cf. Nagler v. Admiral Corporation, 248 F.2d 319, 322-24 (2d Cir. 1957); Poller v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., 368 U.S. 464, 473, 7 L. Ed. 2d 458, 82 S. Ct. 486 (1962). [*851] Its application [8] requires denial of defendants' motion. [5]

1. Defendants argue that plaintiffs are really complaining about alleged injuries to Albert Hayes and fail to "allege some direct injury to themselves caused by defendants' violation of the antitrust laws." It is not necessary in disposing of this contention to conjure with the legal subtleties generated by rules couched in terms of "direct" versus "indirect" consequences. Nor is it necessary to consider [9] whether this notion of "direct" injury has any place at all in this context when HN2[] "allegations adequate to show a violation and, in a private treble damage action, that plaintiff was damaged thereby are all the law requires." Radiant Burners v. Peoples Gas Co., 364 U.S. 656, 660, 5 L. Ed. 2d 358, 81 S. Ct. 365 (1961); and see Note, 64 Colum. L. Rev. 570, 581-88 (1964). For the cases, whatever their factual and verbal diversities, make clear at a minimum that one qualifies as a private antitrust plaintiff when "the violation is directly aimed" at him or he has been "directly harmed" by it. Productive Inventions v. Trico Products Corp., 224 F.2d 678, 679 (2d Cir. 1955), cert. denied, 350 U.S. 936, 100 L. Ed. 818, 76 S. Ct. 301 (1956); see also Steiner v. 20th Century-Fox Film Corporation, 232 F.2d 190, 193 (9th Cir. 1956); cf. South Carolina Council of Milk Producers v. Newton, 360 F.2d 414 (4th Cir. 1966). [6] Plaintiffs allege enough to meet even this debatably stringent test.

[10] The complaint charges a conspiracy expressly and purposefully aimed at coercing and injuring the plaintiffs as identified targets. It does not matter that defendants, under the allegations, may be conspiring to produce the restraints hurting plaintiffs only as part of an overall scheme to reach still bigger game. A conspiracy, in antitrust law as elsewhere, may have a variety of objects and victims. Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 698-99, 8 L. Ed. 2d 777, 82 S. Ct. 1404 (1962). The complaint alleges injury direct and specific enough when it charges that defendants conspired by a course of predatory tactics to put plaintiffs out of business and thereby destroy the interstate trade between plaintiffs and Albert Hayes.

---

[5] The movants assert lack of jurisdiction over the subject matter as well as failure to state claims in counts I and IV. They make no separate points under this branch of the motion, seemingly implying that, since federal jurisdiction is claimed only under the Clayton Act, failure of the claim on the merits inevitably entails failure of jurisdiction. While this assumed premise is dubious, Bell v. Hood, 327 U.S. 678, 90 L. Ed. 939, 66 S. Ct. 773 (1946), it makes no difference. The conclusion that the motion must be denied on the merits is dispositive in any event.

[6] In South Carolina Council of Milk Producers, the Fourth Circuit said that some of the case law unduly "straitens the intent of the Clayton Act" in requiring "directness of injury" as a condition for suing. See 360 F.2d at 417. The Court formulated the test as one of "proximate cause," leaving for judicial determination in each case whether particular plaintiffs should be barred as being "only distantly or tenuously hurt." Id at 419-420.

2. Defendants argue that plaintiffs lack standing to complain of the alleged Robinson-Patman violations because they are neither competitors nor customers of Burlington. In considering this point, we assume with defendants that paragraph 38 states an inadvertent falsehood when it describes plaintiffs as purchasers from Burlington (see note 4, supra), although it may be doubted, strictly speaking, whether such an assumption is [11] permitted on a motion to dismiss. We assume further - as plaintiffs also do, at least arguendo - that plaintiffs have no right of action for Robinson-Patman violations in the form of discriminations among Burlington customers if they neither buy from nor compete with Burlington. See Klein v. Lionel Corporation, 237 F.2d 13, 14-15 (3d Cir. 1956); Bolick-Gillman Company v. Continental Baking Company, 206 F. Supp. 151 (D. Nev. 1961). These premises do not lead to the dismissal defendants seek.

[*852] HN3[] Unlawful conspiracies commonly consist in part of conduct entirely lawful in itself. Thus, there is no actionable wrong in the mere fact that a competitor (here, Parklane) sets up shop in close proximity to an existing enterprise. The same may be said for present purposes of the alleged special benefits and advantages extended by Burlington to Parklane to make the latter a more effective competitor. But these steps may serve as "part of the sum of the acts which are relied upon to effectuate the conspiracy * * *." American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 809, 90 L. Ed. 1575, 66 S. Ct. 1125 (1946).

The gist of the case is the alleged agreement or combination to monopolize [12] and restrain trade. If the otherwise lawful actions the complaint describes have been taken under an agreement to injure or destroy plaintiffs' business, and in this way to restrain competition in, and monopolize, the "distinct area of competition" alleged in the complaint, then plaintiffs have a Sherman Act claim. Schine Chain Theatres v. United States, 334 U.S. 110, 119, 92 L. Ed. 1245, 68 S. Ct. 947 (1948); Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 8 L. Ed. 2d 777, 82 S. Ct. 1404 (1962). Because they are sufficient in this respect, the counts in question cannot be dismissed if they fail to allege in addition claims warranting independent relief under Robinson-Patman.

3. Defendants are also wrong in their contention that the two antitrust counts must fall because plaintiffs "have totally failed to show any impact on or relationship with interstate commerce * * *." The complaint amply alleges that the commerce affected is the interstate sales and shipments from Albert Hayes to plaintiffs. The fact that plaintiffs' business is retail selling within Chicago does not diminish the sufficiency of the alleged impact upon their purchases in commerce. HN4[] "That [13] wholly local business restraints can produce the effects condemned by the Sherman Act is no longer open to question." United States v. Employing Plasterers Assn., 347 U.S. 186, 189, 98 L. Ed. 618, 74 S. Ct. 452 (1954). See also Klor's v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741, 79 S. Ct. 705 (1959); United States v. Women's Sportswear Assn., 336 U.S. 460, 464, 93 L. Ed. 805, 69 S. Ct. 714 (1949). This principle applies even without reference to the clearly interstate aspects of defendant's business and the allegations that this business and its revenues are being employed to effect the wrongs plaintiffs charge. Cf. Moore v. Mead's Fine Bread Co., 348 U.S. 115, 119-20, 99 L. Ed. 145, 75 S. Ct. 148 (1954).

4. Finally, we reject the alternative prayer that numerous allegations of the complaint be stricken at this stage. One category against which this attack is leveled consists of allegations relating to defendants' war on Albert Hayes and their attempts generally to destroy his custom. It cannot be said with assurance that these averments are wholly immaterial in describing and defining the conspiracy plaintiffs charge. See Atlantic City Electric Co. v. General [14] Electric Co., 207 F. Supp. 620, 629-30 (S.D.N.Y. 1962). Similarly, the Robinson-Patman allegations, already discussed, have at least some "possible bearing on the issues of the trial * * *." Fleischer v. A.A.P., Inc., 180 F. Supp. 717, 721 (S.D.N.Y. 1959). The claim of prejudice because plaintiffs have adopted allegations from the pending complaint of Albert Hayes against these same defendants is not impressive. If the allegations fit, as they seemingly do, they may serve in more than one lawsuit. The task of answering them, already accomplished, is not oppressive. This is, in short, not one of the rare cases in which the early surgery allowed by Rule 12(f) seems helpful. See 2 Moore, Federal Practice 2317-19 (2d ed. 1965).

The motion is denied.

It is so ordered.

End of Document

Automated Bldg. Components v. Hydro-Air Eng'g

United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit

July 7, 1966

Nos. 17985, 18103, 18104, 18004, 18105

Reporter
362 F.2d 989 *; 1966 U.S. App. LEXIS 5580 ; 150 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) 421 ***

AUTOMATED BUILDING COMPONENTS, INC., Appellant, v. HYDRO-AIR ENGINEERING, INC., Appellee. HYDRO-AIR ENGINEERING, INC., Appellant, v. AUTOMATED BUILDING COMPONENTS, INC., Appellee

Disposition: [1] These cases are in all things affirmed

Core Terms

Patent, ordinary skill, subject matter, counterclaim, invention, plates, prior art, pertain, cases, antitrust violation, expert witness, patent misuse, Clayton Act, infringement, allegations, questioning, appeals, damages, invalid, nailing, perfect

Judges: Vogel, Chief Judge, Blackmun, Circuit Judge, and Stephenson, District Judge.

Opinion by: VOGEL

Opinion

[*421] [*990] VOGEL, Chief Judge.

Automated Building Components, Inc. (hereafter Automated), the assignee of the entire interest in United States Letters Patent No. 2,877,520 (hereafter the Jureit Patent), has appealed from the District Court's determination that Claims 1, 3 and 4 of the Jureit Patent are invalid because of being obvious to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which the claims pertain and also because of having been anticipated by the prior art. This determination effectively curtails a patent infringement action brought on the Jureit Patent by Automated against Hydro-Air Engineering, Inc. (hereafter Hydro-Air). Hydro-Air itself appeals from a dismissal of its counterclaim against Automated [422] or treble damages under the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 731, 15 U.S.C.A. § 15. [1] Hydro-Air's counterclaim is based on allegations of patent misuse and antitrust law violations by Automated through the use of illegal tying agreements entered into between Automated and its customers. Without deciding if there [2] were such antitrust violations, Judge Regan determined that Hydro-Air proved no damages so as to be entitled to recover under the Clayton Act. Certain procedural questions are also involved on these appeals.

---

[1] As provided in the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 731, 15 U.S.C.A. § 15:

"Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides or is found or has an agent, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee."

The District Court's opinion, published at 237 F. Supp. 247, sets out the facts of these cases in sufficient detail so as to make any further statement [*991] unnecessary. With a few additional comments, we affirm the District Court on the basis of Judge Regan's opinion. See, also, Automated [3] Bldg. Components, Inc. v. Structomatic, Inc., Civil No. 61 C 262, N.D.Ill., March 25, 1965, an unreported case which also holds Claims 1, 3 and 4 of the Jureit Patent invalid in law.

§ 103 of the Patent Act of 1952 provides as follows, at 66 Stat. 798, 35 U.S.C.A. § 103:

> "A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains."

The Supreme Court recently rendered its first patent decisions since the enactment of the Patent Act of 1952 in the cases of United States v. Adams, 1966, 383 U.S. 39, 86 S. Ct. 708, 15 L. Ed. 2d 572, and Graham v. John Deere Co., 1966, 383 U.S. 1, 86 S. Ct. 684, 15 L. Ed. 2d 545. Mr. Justice Clark interpreted § 103 in the Graham case, at 383 U.S. at 14, 86 S. Ct. at 692, 15 L. Ed. 2d at 554, as follows:

> "The section is [4] cast in relatively unambiguous terms. Patentability is to depend, in addition to novelty and utility, upon the 'non-obvious' nature of the 'subject matter sought to be patented' to a person having ordinary skill in the pertinent art."

At page 252 of 237 F. Supp. Judge Regan stated, in regard to the Jureit Patent:

> "* * * It was not only obvious to one skilled in the art in 1956 and within the ordinary skill of a worker in the nailing art to modify nail-like fasteners to vary withdrawal resistance but was actually demonstrated in prior art patents, i.e., Kalischer and Berthaud. Without going into what is obvious to this Court but by way of illustration it certainly does not take inventive genius to make joints with plates differing from the French connector plates only in that the Jureit plates have nails struck out from the plate instead of being welded to the plate as shown by Berthaud.
>
> "This Court finds that substantial evidence has been introduced attacking the validity of the Jureit claims and that defendant has overcome the presumption of validity by showing that the subject matter of Jureit's Claims 1, 3, and 4 as a whole was obvious, at the time the alleged [5] invention occurred, to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which the Claims pertain."

From a careful reading of the entire record we agree with Judge Regan's conclusion. His opinion, not being clearly erroneous, is conclusive on appeal. Steffan v. Weber Heating & Sheet Metal Co., 8 Cir., 1956, 237 F.2d 601, 602; Trico Products Corp. v. Delman Corp., 8 Cir., 1950, 180 F.2d 529, 530. Though drafted before Graham and Adams, the opinion clearly follows the dictates of § 103, as interpreted by the Supreme Court, in discussing a proper standard of invention.

Automated's allegations questioning the qualification of Hydro-Air's expert witness, Donald A. Fischer, the Dean of the School of Engineering at Washington University, to testify as to the art here involved, clearly must relate to credibility rather than to the admissibility of Fischer's testimony, since the trial court has determined that Fischer qualified as an expert witness. See, generally, 2 Wigmore, Evidence, § 561 (3d Ed. 1940), as supplemented, and the authorities cited therein.

Automated challenges the right of [423] ydro-Air to appeal on the denial of its counterclaim [6] since Hydro-Air did not present a timely appeal thereon after the entry of judgment by the District Court on December 14, 1964. Hydro-Air's appeal was perfected only after Judge Regan vacated the initial judgment and purported to reenter it on June 4, 1965, under Rule 60(b) of the Fed.Rules of Civ. Proc., 28 U.S.C.A., on the grounds that [*992] counsel for Automated violated an oral agreement entered into with counsel for Hydro-Air. Such agreement allegedly provided that Automated would not appeal on its infringement claim if Hydro-Air would not appeal on its counterclaim. Automated filed an appeal at the last possible moment, thus leaving Hydro-Air no time to perfect its own appeal. [2] While we have serious doubts concerning the jurisdiction of the District Court to grant the re-entry of judgment once an appeal had been taken by Automated, [3] we do not deem it necessary to rule on this point since on the basis of the record, as ably interpreted in Judge Regan's opinion, Hydro-Air's counterclaim must fail in any event. A viewing of the record as a whole can yield no logical or reasonable inference that Hydro-Air's damage, if any, was caused by patent misuse or antitrust violations, [7] if any, on the part of Automated.

These cases are in all things affirmed.

---

[2] The amended Rule 73(a) (3) of the Fed. Rules of Civ.Proc., effective July 1, 1966, prevents this situation from arising as it gives "any other party" 14 additional days to file an appeal after the first notice of appeal is filed.

[3] See, e.g., Janousek v. Doyle, 8 Cir., 1963, 313 F.2d 916, 920. But cf. Oliver v. City of Shattuck ex rel. Versluis, 10 Cir., 1946, 157 F.2d 150.

Lewis v. Pennington

United States District Court for the Eastern District of Tennessee, Northern Division

July 15, 1966

Civil Nos. 3431, 3432, 3433, 3446, 3493, 3579, 3591, 4385, 4463, 4988

Reporter

257 F. Supp. 815 *; 1966 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8297 ; 62 L.R.R.M. 2604; 53 Lab. Cas. (CCH) P11,371; 1966 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,842

John L. Lewis, et al., Plaintiffs v. James M. Pennington, et al., Defendants. Harry P. Stansberry t/a Stansberry Coal Company, Plaintiffs v. Same. Jesse C. Fesler, et al., t/a Fesler Coal Company, Plaintiffs v. Same. U. R. Arnold, et al., t/a Arnold Strip Mining Company, a partnership, Arnold Coal Company, Inc., Plaintiffs v. Same. Tennco, Inc., Plaintiff v. Same. W. R. Parton t/a W. R. Parton Coal Company, Plaintiff v. Same. E. C. McPherson t/a E. C. McPherson Coal Company, et al., Plaintiffs v. Same. White Oak Coal Company, Inc., Plaintiff v. Same. Dean Coal Company, Plaintiff v. Same. W. R. Parton dba W. R. Parton Coal Company, Plaintiff v. Same coal, coal company, bid, plant, tons, contracts, negotiations, prices, producers, steam, bargaining, per ton, opening, employees, spot market, conspiracy, bituminous coal, supplied, shipped, sales, wages, signatory, shipment, tonnage, stock, wage agreement, seam, spot, collateral, damages

Core Terms

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Duty to Bargain

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Right to Organize

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

HN1[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

Section 20 of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 738, and § 4 of the Norris-LaGuardia Act, 47 Stat. 70, permit a union, acting alone, to engage in the conduct therein specified without violating the Sherman Act, but that neither of these sections expressly deals with arrangements or agreements between unions and employers. Neither section states whether any or all such arrangements or agreements are barred or permitted by the antitrust laws. So long as a union acts in its self-interest and does not combine with non-labor groups, the licit and the illicit under § 20 are not to be distinguished by any judgment regarding the wisdom or lack of wisdom, the rightness or wrongness, the selfishness or unselfishness of the end of which the particular union activities are the means.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Duty to Bargain

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Right to Organize

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

HN2[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

When unions participate with a combination of business men who have complete power to eliminate all competition among themselves and to prevent all competition from others, a situation is created that is not included within the exemptions of the Clayton and Norris-LaGuardia Acts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Bargaining Units

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Bargaining Subjects

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

HN3[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Wages lie at the heart of a collective bargaining between employers and unions and the law contemplates agreements on wages not only between individual employers and a union, but agreements between the union and employers in a multi-employer bargaining unit. The union benefit from the wage scale is direct and complete and the effect on the product market results from the elimination of competition based on wages among the employers in the bargaining unit, which is not the kind of restraint Congress intended the Sherman Act to proscribe. A union may conclude a wage agreement with a multi-employer bargaining unit without violating the antitrust laws and it may as a matter of its own policy, and not by agreement with all or part of the employers of that unit, seek the same wages from other employers.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > Statutory Exemptions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Penalties

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Duty to Bargain

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Bargaining Subjects

HN4[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Exemptions & Immunities

Unilaterally, and without agreement with any employer group to do so, a union may adopt a uniform wage policy and seek vigorously to implement it even though it may suspect that some employers cannot effectively compete if they are required to pay the wage scale demanded by the union. The union need not gear its wage demands to wages that the weakest units in the industry can afford to pay. Such union conduct is not alone sufficient evidence to maintain a union-employer conspiracy charge under the Sherman Act. There must be additional direct or indirect evidence of the conspiracy. A union forfeits its exemption from the antitrust laws when it is clearly shown that it has agreed with one set of employers to impose a certain wage scale on other bargaining units. One group of employers may not conspire to eliminate competitors from the industry and the union is liable with the employers if it becomes a party to the conspiracy. This is true even though the union's part in the scheme is an undertaking to secure the same wages, hours or other conditions of employment from the remaining employers in the industry. The policy of antitrust law is clearly set against employer-union agreements seeking to prescribe labor standards outside the bargaining unit.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Bargaining Subjects

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Duty to Bargain

HN5[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

If there is an industry-wide collective bargaining agreement whereby employers and a union agree on a wage scale that exceeds the financial ability of some operators to pay and that if it is made for the purpose of forcing some employers out of business, the union as well as the employers who participated in the arrangement with the union are to be found to have violated the antitrust laws. An industry-wide agreement containing those features is prima facie evidence of a violation. Acceptance by competitors, without previous agreement, of an invitation to participate in a plan, the necessary consequence of which, if carried out, is restraint of interstate commerce, is sufficient to establish an unlawful conspiracy under the Sherman Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > Statutory Exemptions

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Mining Industry > Coal Mining > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Unfair Labor Practices > General Overview

HN6[] Labor, Statutory Exemptions

It is necessary to find predatory intent to drive small coal operators out of business in order to hold an employer and a union for a violation of the Sherman Act. The antitrust law is not designed to protect marginal operators; ill effects alone on the marginal operators are not enough to show intent.

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Unfair Labor Practices > General Overview

HN7[] Evidence, Burdens of Proof

Section 6 of the Norris-LaGuardia Act states in effect that no association participating in a labor dispute shall be held liable for the unlawful acts of individual officers, members, etc., except upon clear proof of actual participation in, or actual authorization of, such acts, or of ratification of such acts after actual knowledge thereof.

Civil Procedure > ... > Jury Trials > Jury Instructions > General Overview

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > General Overview

HN8[] Jury Trials, Jury Instructions

If a contract is subject to two reasonable constructions, the one to be given is the one that does not result in a violation of law. Where two reasonable constructions of a written contract can be made, preference is given to that construction of such contract that does not result in a violation of law. A court will not construe a contract to violate the law if it can by reasonable construction construe it to come within the purview of the law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN9[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A conspiracy need not be proved by formal agreement or by direct evidence. It is rare that a conspiracy is proved by direct evidence. Unity of purpose or a common design is sufficient. If the necessary result of a combination or agreement unreasonably restrains trade, it violates the Sherman Act.

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Strikes & Work Stoppages

Torts > Intentional Torts > Assault & Battery > General Overview

HN10[] Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations, Strikes & Work Stoppages

The states grant compensation for the consequences, as defined by the traditional law of torts, of conduct marked by violence and imminent threats to the public order. State jurisdiction has prevailed in these situations because the compelling state interest, in the scheme of federalism, in the maintenance of domestic peace is not overridden in the absence of clearly expressed congressional direction.

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > General Overview

HN11[] Subject Matter Jurisdiction, Supplemental Jurisdiction

State law claims are appropriate for federal court determination if they form a separate but parallel ground for relief also sought in a substantial claim based on federal law. The federal claim must have sufficient substance to confer jurisdiction on the federal court before it can try the state claim. In addition state and federal claims must derive from a common nucleus of operative fact. And pendent jurisdiction is a matter of sound judicial discretion and not a right of plaintiffs.

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Unfair Labor Practices > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Strikes & Work Stoppages

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Contracts > General Overview

HN12[] Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations, Unfair Labor Practices

It is a violation of Tennessee law to interfere maliciously or intentionally with the business and contractual relations of another, except under certain circumstances and for certain purposes. It is not a violation of state law for a union intentionally to cause harm to an employer in interrupting its business and contractual relations by peaceably inducing its employees to go on strike for the purpose of obtaining better wages and working conditions. It is the acts of violence that result in damages to the plaintiffs' property or business that are the basis of a state law claim.

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Strikes & Work Stoppages

HN13[] Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations, Strikes & Work Stoppages

A union has the right under state law to induce employees by fair persuasion to withhold their services from an employer in order to obtain a collective bargaining agreement. By fair persuasion is meant argument, exhortation, or entreaty addressed to a person without threat of physical harm. A union has the right under state and federal law to induce employees to leave their work and to remain away from their work by paying or by giving such employees strike benefits or other moneys or things of value, § 20 Clayton Act, 29 U.S.C.S. § 52; § 4 Norris-LaGuardia Act, 29 U.S.C.S. § 104.

Business & Corporate Law > Agency Relationships > Establishment > Consent

Business & Corporate Law > Agency Relationships > Authority to Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Establishment > Elements > General Overview

HN14[] Establishment, Consent

Necessarily, any acts performed by a union are done by its individual officers, agents, or members. A defendant union is not liable for any act merely because it has been done by a member of the union, for union membership alone does not constitute the member an agent of the union.

Business & Corporate Law > Agency Relationships > Establishment > Consent

Business & Corporate Law > Agency Relationships > Authority to Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Establishment > Elements > General Overview

HN15[] Establishment, Consent

The mere fact that a member of a defendant union is an officer in a local union affiliated with the defendant union does not, in itself, constitute such local union officer an agent of the defendant union and in the absence of evidence establishing such agency, the defendant union is not responsible for any acts performed by such local union officer.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Establishment > Estoppel, Necessity, & Ostensible Agency > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Unfair Labor Practices > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Duties & Liabilities > Unlawful Acts of Agents > General Overview

HN16[] Establishment, Estoppel, Necessity, & Ostensible Agency

The custom or traditional practice of a union can be the source of actual authorization of an agent to act for and bind a union. If the union is guilty of causing harm to plaintiffs' businesses, under circumstances whereby either the object or the means is illegal, the defendant is liable for the entire resulting damages.

Judges: [1] Taylor, D.J.

Opinion by: TAYLOR

Opinion

[*817] TAYLOR, D.J.:

These cases are the last chapter in a spate of litigation between coal operators in Scott, Anderson and Campbell Counties, Tennessee, and United Mine Workers of America (hereinafter sometimes referred to as UMW or the Union) resulting from labor disputes that arose in 1955 and continued intermittently through 1959.

Case No. 3431 was tried by a jury and a verdict and judgment rendered in favor of the coal operator. The judgment was affirmed by the Court of Appeals. Pennington v. UMW, Lewis, et al., Trustees, 325 F.2d 804 (C.A. 6). The Supreme Court granted certiorari and reversed the judgment of the Court of Appeals holding as error the instruction of this Court to the jury that the approach of the Union and operators to the Secretary of Labor and TVA officials for the purpose of having a wage determination by the Secretary of Labor under the Walsh-Healey Act so as to prohibit governmental purchases of coal mined by miners paying wages under the minimum fixed by the Secretary of Labor, was legal unless made pursuant to a conspiracy to put the small coal operators out of business. It also held that the trial court erred [2] in not telling the jury to exclude any damages which the operators may have suffered as a result of the Secretary's Walsh-Healey determination. United Mine Workers of America v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 670, 671, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626, 85 S. Ct. 1585.

By agreement, these cases were consolidated for trial and by agreement were tried without a jury. More than 4400 pages of testimony were introduced with 219 exhibits in a trial that lasted approximately four weeks.

In the suits brought by Lewis, Roche and Schmidt, as Trustees of the United Mine Workers of America, Welfare and Retirement Fund, in another phase of Cases No. 3431, 3432, 3433, 3446, 3493, 3579, 3591 and 4385, the Trustees sued for amounts alleged to be due pursuant to the terms of the trust provisions contained in the National Bituminous Coal Wage Agreement of 1950, as amended, for royalties due from each of the defendants in those cases on the respective tonnage of coal mined by each under the Collective Bargaining Agreement. Those suits were defended on the theory that the Bituminous Coal Wage Agreement of 1950, as amended, was an instrument used in a conspiracy which violated the antitrust laws and that the contracts violated [3] the National Labor Relations Act, as amended.

It was held by the Court of Appeals in the case of Lewis v. Pennington, (6 Cir. Tenn.) 325 F.2d 804, cert. den. Pennington et al. v. Lewis et al., Trustees, 381 U.S. 949, 14 L. Ed. 2d 723, 85 S. Ct. 1796, that regardless of the factual contentions of the defendants under these defenses, the Trustees were entitled to recover the royalties contracted for which were based on the tonnage mined by the defendants during the period of time involved. Judgment for the Trustees has been entered in that case.

The defendants in the other cases insisted that the Pennington decision was erroneous. But they argued even if they were wrong in that insistence, still the enforcement of the provision for royalties, which was forced on them pursuant to an illegal agreement or conspiracy caused them damage. And they insist they are entitled to recover, as an item of damage, the royalties paid, in addition to other damages arising from the alleged conspiracy in the cross-claims or actions against UMW.

In Case No. 4385, White Oak Coal Company, Inc. v. United Mine Workers of America, White Oak made additional defenses but this case was disposed of and [4] is no longer before the Court for consideration.

Case No. 3579, W. R. Parton, Individually and t/a W. R. Parton Coal Company v. United Mine Workers of America, has likewise been disposed of.

In Cases No. 3431, 3432, 3433, 3446, 3493, 3579, 3591 and 4385, the defendants filed cross-claims against the Trustees [*818] based upon the alleged participation by the Trustees in the alleged conspiracy in violation of the antitrust laws. A voluntary dismissal without prejudice of the suits against the Trustees was entered in each of these cases.

In Cases No. 3431, 3432, 3433, 3446, 3493 and 3591, the defendants filed cross-claims against the UMW. In the case of Lewis et al. v. Parton, No. 3579, by order entered prior to the order consolidating these cases for trial, the cross-claim of the defendant Parton against UMW was assigned a new docket number, namely, No. 4988, and the order recited that the cross-claim was to be considered an original complaint against the Union.

The case of Dean Coal Company v. United Mine Workers of America, No. 4463, constituted an original action against the UMW.

The claims against UMW in all of these cases are based on an alleged conspiracy in which [5] it is charged that UMW participated with major coal operators to drive small coal operators, including each of the parties to this suit (hereinafter sometimes referred to as plaintiffs or operators), out of business, in violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act.

Damages are sought against UMW in each of these cases.

Theories Upon Which Cross-Plaintiffs and Plaintiffs Expect to Recover Against UMW as Set Forth in the Pre-Trial Order

Plaintiffs (and it will be understood this term includes all cross-plaintiffs) contend that UMW engaged in a conspiracy, agreement or understanding with the major coal companies in the United States and their representatives, particularly Bituminous Coal Operators Association (hereinafter called BCOA), Consolidation Coal Company, Peabody Coal Company, West Kentucky Coal Company, Nashville Coal Company, Island Creek Coal Company, Pittston Company and Pittsburgh-Midway Coal Company, and others, to stabilize the prices of coal, to restrain the trade of small coal producers and to monopolize the bituminous coal industry for the major coal producers.

Background of the Alleged Conspiracy

After World War II, the economics of the bituminous [6] coal industry became unstable on account of more coal being produced than the markets required; that before 1950, the major coal producers and the Union were in agreement that the major problem of the industry was over-production and that the growth of small, independent and non-union producers was contributing to the problem; that the major companies and the Union disagreed on how the problem should be handled in the period right after World War II; that on its side the Union was contending that the answer was to cut down on the working time of all producers; that the Union urged a three-day work week and for many months before the 1950 contract was signed, the Union took the initiative on this question and directed the working time of the men in the industry, its officials setting on some weeks, three-day work weeks, and other times a no-day work week; that the major coal companies were opposed to the Union's dictating the working time of the men in the industry because it cut into their profits; that both the Union and major coal companies were concerned with the prospects of a repetition of the depressed conditions in the industry that occurred in the 1920's after the "Jacksonville [7] scale" period, which was precipitated by companies in the South that refused to recognize the Union contract; that in 1949, in the course of the bargaining sessions over the contract that became the National Bituminous Coal Wage Agreement of 1950, major coal producers were discussing among themselves how to accomplish the stabilization of the industry and the establishment of an organization to deal with the UMW so that agreements could be worked out that would be binding upon the entire industry and to accomplish the settlement of national problems in the industry on an authoritative basis that [*819] would govern all coal producers, thereby eliminating the chances, or greatly reducing the prospects, of some producers escaping the uniform terms of a national union contract and precipitating conditions comparable to those of the 1920's.

Formation of the Alleged Conspiracy

After the signing of the 1950 National Bituminous Coal Wage Agreement, the major producers who had engaged in the discussions referred to above commencing in 1949, formed the Bituminous Coal Operators Association in 1950 and a marked change was noted in the relations between the Union and the major coal [8] companies as disclosed in the bargaining relations before and after 1950; that the express understanding at the time of the signing of the 1950 Bituminous Coal Wage Agreement was that the major coal companies themselves were to decide on the working time for their employees; that this was a surrender on the part of the Union of its previous policy of seeking to control the working time, and of its efforts to give more equitable working opportunities for its members throughout the industry; that the understanding between the Union and the Bituminous Coal Operators Association was that the problem of stabilizing the economics of the industry, the problem recognized by both the Union and the major coal companies, was to be taken care of by establishing national contract amendments that would be applied to all bargaining units throughout the industry and these agreements were to be tailored to the abilities of the major coal companies without regard to the abilities of the smaller companies or the companies working in marginal seam areas, in spite of the fact that there were great divergencies in the geological conditions in the various fields of coal mining and a great disparity in the [9] means and methods of production, leaving great numbers of companies that would be unable to operate under the contract and leaving their share of the markets to the major coal companies who could successfully operate under the contract as it was amended.

Use of the National Bituminous Coal Wage Agreement in the Alleged Conspiracy

The conspiracy as alleged involved the use of the National Bituminous Coal Wage Agreement and its successive amendments as an instrument in accomplishing the purposes of the conspiracy; that by successive amendments to the Uniform National Bituminous Coal Wage Agreement's terms, the wage scale and the Welfare Fund payments per ton were raised to exceedingly high levels; that the mechanization program of the major coal companies was to go ahead rapidly and the successive increases in wage scale and Welfare Fund payments were designed and tailored to meet the abilities of the major coal companies to mechanize and not have their profits affected by the increasing labor costs in the successive amendments; that these amendments to the labor contract were made after careful consideration of the abilities of the major coal companies to make the increases without [10] affecting their profits; that the Union knew that many weaker companies could not pay the increases, but had no concern as to whether they could pay; that the Union favored the taking over of the industry by the large combines of coal producers and that the Union worked toward this end; that the campaign to impose the wage contracts upon the smaller, independent and non-union mines was intense after 1950 and paralleled the formation of the International Organizing Committee by the Union; that in areas of strong resistance mobs and terrorism were used; that the Trustees of the Welfare Fund stood by and benefited, as pensioners under the Welfare Fund were organized into bands which had as their purpose the imposition of the uniform contract upon the smaller and non-union companies; that benefits under the Fund were held out to the men in the industry as being under Union control so as to regain their fading allegiance to the Union as unemployment spread; that the finances of the Union and the finances of major coal companies have been used [*820] to further the drive to bring all production under the contract; that one or more major coal companies have assisted in crushing the opposition [11] of the principal union competitor of United Mine Workers in the bituminous coal labor fields; that the result of this conspiracy and of these activities has been that large numbers of small companies have been driven out of the industry and that thousands of men in the industry have been driven into unemployment; that when these men are put out of the industry, they cease to participate in Welfare Fund benefits and the Fund remains as a source of benefit only for the employees of those companies that survive.

To accelerate the demise of the smaller companies devices were inserted into later amendments of the National Bituminous Coal Wage Agreement which further restrained their trade; that companies which could not afford to pay the wage scale under the contract were barred from operating on the lands of signatories to the Agreement; this device which was inserted in the National Agreement was effective because the major companies have acquired great tracts of the coal lands of the country and there is little coal land left for the small companies to operate upon under conditions which would make it possible to abide by the Agreement; that in the Protective Wage Clause of 1958, the [12] small companies were prohibited from selling coal to the signatories to the Agreement, including the major companies which supplied coal to the large markets under long-term contracts, when they could not abide by the terms of the Agreement.

Protective Wage Clause in the Amendment of 1958

In 1958 the bituminous coal industry felt a recession and decreasing demand for coal so that the price of coal in the markets was to some degree affected; that this induced United Mine Workers and Bituminous Coal Operators Association and the major companies to seek a strengthening and extension of the understandings which they had between themselves with respect to the duties of the Union and the duties of the major coal companies under the conspiracy; that in December of 1958 the National Agreement was again amended, principally by the insertion of the "Protective Wage Clause" under which the Union bound itself not to enter into, be a party to, or permit any other kind of labor contract in the industry except the National Agreement which it signed with Bituminous Coal Operators Association; the Union further bound itself to enforce fully the terms of the National Agreement with respect to [13] all signatories; on the other hand, the Bituminous Coal Operators Association and the other major coal companies who successfully signed the National Agreement bound themselves to engage in the boycott of " sub-standard coal" or coal not mined under the terms of the National Agreement; that thereby the Union expressly put upon itself a strait jacket which required it to impose upon all operators in negotiations in which it represented bargaining units of employees, the same terms which it negotiated with Bituminous Coal Operators Association; thereafter the enforcement and policing of the National Agreement terms were intensified and the efforts to force the 1958 amendment upon the industry resulted in the destruction of many of the companies and the severe damaging of many of the other companies in the industry, including the coal companies in these cases.

The TVA Market

That the development of the Tennessee Valley Authority as the principal purchaser of coal in the entire country caught the attention of the conspirators to the Southern Appalachian Region when TVA opened up many of its coal-using generating units in 1954, 1955 and 1956; that in 1955 the conspirators manifested [14] their intent and purpose to take over the TVA market by working together to obtain a determination by the Secretary of Labor that the prevailing wage in the bituminous coal industry under the Walsh-Healey Act was the UMW contract scale that had been forced [*821] onto the industry, as described above; that while such joint activity with respect to such determination by the Secretary of Labor was not itself a violation of the antitrust law, the purpose and character of other activities of the conspirators to use the UMW's scale as a competitive lever by forcing it upon competitors is manifested by these particular activities and statements made in connection therewith; because contracts for less than $10,000 were exempted from the prevailing wage determination under Walsh-Healey, small companies were able to ship coal on TVA spot orders; that the conspirators further showed their purpose and state of mind by setting about to eliminate or drastically reduce the spot market of TVA; in addition, the conspirators adopted the practice of bidding low prices to drive the TVA coal market price down to a price which a small producer could not meet at a profit; in this phase of the campaign [15] the West Kentucky Coal Company and its subsidiary, Nashville Coal Company, took the most prominent part; the Union had over $25,000,000 of risk capital invested in these companies; that large tonnages were dumped upon the coal market of TVA by these companies at low prices; that the immediate competitors of West Kentucky Coal Company in the West Kentucky field followed the lead of the company in pricing in order to obtain TVA business and prices of the West Kentucky field fell to very low levels with the inevitable result that sales prices in the TVA coal market became depressed; that the TVA provided the principal market of the companies in these cases and the TVA prices were beaten down to such an extent that these companies suffered large losses trying to retain their position in that market and lost contracts by reason of the low pricing; that the conspiracy manifested itself in the field in East Tennessee by a squeeze applied to the local operators from the market side and the labor side; that while a price wall or ceiling was imposed upon them in its principal market, the Union, pursuant to agreement with Bituminous Coal Operators Association and other major producers, raised [16] the labor costs on the local producers by forcing terms and labor contracts that were unreasonable in this field and by interferences with production; that the Union used force and violence, seeking to force the 1958 amendment upon this coal field, a practice which had been followed in previous years, and the Union refused to bargain with local producers with respect to the labor terms.

In the cases of W. R. Parton, No. 4988, and Dean Coal Company, No. 4463, the aforesaid violence employed by the Union is asserted as an additional basis for claims of violation of the state law and common law. However, it is expected that all damages sustained by these two plaintiffs will, as in the other cases, be shown to have resulted also from the aforementioned violation of the antitrust law; and only in the event of the failure of Parton and Dean Coal Company to recover damages arising from violence under the antitrust claim, will it be necessary for the Court to pass upon their common law or state law claims as such.

Theories of United Mine Workers of America As Set Forth, in Part, in the Pre-Trial Order

UMW says that it has acted to further the best interest of its members through [17] arms-length bargaining with representatives of coal operators within the framework of the Federal Labor Law throughout the pertinent period. Its objectives in negotiating and executing the various wage agreements have been to achieve a uniform living wage, decent and safe working conditions and various fringe benefits. It has made no agreement with any coal operator at any time to impose a wage agreement upon other operators. Its wage agreements have resulted from its own policies and not by agreement with any of the coal operators of one unit to seek the same wages or benefits from other operators.

From its origin as a labor union in 1890, UMW has endeavored to unite in [*822] one organization all workers employed in and around coal mines, coal washeries, coal processing plants and coke ovens and has sought to obtain a uniform wage scale for all its members so employed.

UMW Objectives and Policy

UMW strives for national equality of compensation for its members because it believes that miners should receive the same wage for his labor wherever he happens to work, regardless of the particular economic circumstances of an individual operator. Wage differential should [18] not be the basis for affording to one operator a competitive advantage over another. Removal of differences in labor standards as an element of competition is at the core of UMW policy.

UMW does not subsidize marginal operators through substandard labor conditions.

UMW denies that it entered into any contract or joined in any combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce in violation of the Sherman Act and denies that it has monopolized or attempted to monopolize or that it combined or conspired with any other person or persons or group of persons to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several states.

The 1950 agreement resulted from arms-length collective bargaining over a long period of time during which UMW was restricted in its bargaining efforts by federal court decrees and both UMW and coal operators were mandated to settle their disputes. The 1950 agreement was the only understanding between UMW and operators and was not an instrument of conspiracy.

Under District Court scrutiny, NLRB and Attorney General surveillance, with assistance of members of the Presidential Inquiry Board, and with UMW's bargaining abilities circumscribed by judicial [19] restraints, UMW and operators, bargaining in good faith, achieved the 1950 Agreement, which, obedient to the February 11, 1950 injunction, created a union security clause to comply with Taft-Hartley, made Fund benefits available to signatories' employees regardless of UMW membership, and eliminated the "able and willing" clause and amended the "memorial period" clauses, which had been disputed issues in the bargaining negotiations.

UMW denies that the provisions of the 1950 Agreement and its amendments violated the Sherman Act.

In 1950, as in all proceedings and subsequent negotiations, UMW formulated its wage demands based upon its view of what the industry as an entirety could afford to pay and of what the miner needed to maintain and improve his standards of living, in conformity with UMW's policy of national uniformity of labor standards.

UMW denies that the successive increases in the wage scale and Welfare Fund payments were tailored to meet the abilities of the major coal companies to mechanize and thus not to have their profits affected by the increased labor costs in the amendments to the National Agreement after 1950. UMW has regarded mechanization to be an exclusive [20] management prerogative in which it in no way participates. UMW has never opposed mechanization. Mechanization was a normal procedure long prior to 1950 and was not an issue in the 1940-1950 negotiations.

Prior to 1950 and since, there has been a direct relationship between wages and the expansion of mechanization in the coal industry. As output per miner increases through mechanization, UMW insisted through collective bargaining, that the higher productivity justified a higher wage rate.

Between June 30, 1949 and March 5, 1950, there was no collective bargaining agreement and thus no obligation for UMW members to produce any coal. During this period, UMW directed for some weeks a working period of three days a week in mines east of the Mississippi River, but the directive was not effective west of the River.

UMW neither sought nor wanted a contractual three-day work week and it was not a bargaining issue for inclusion [*823] in the 1950 Agreement. The reasons for the directive of the three-day work week were (1) to abate the public concern as to any alleged possible shortage of coal, (2) as a bargaining tactic and (3) to spread available work among normal labor forces [21] to enable each miner to have some income during negotiations.

Mine workers knew that bargaining negotiations would not terminate as long as miners worked full time during the bargaining process.

The 1950 Agreement did not turn over to the UMW responsibility for the administration of the UMW Welfare and Retirement Fund. Administration of this Fund was the joint responsibility of the employer and employee representatives, with tie-breaking authority vesting in a neutral as required by Section 302(c)(5) of the National Management Relations Act of 1947.

The law required and the Agreement provides that all employees of signatory operators are eligible to participate in the Fund as beneficiaries.

Employees in the industry were not led to believe that the Fund was under UMW control. Fund Trustees exercised every reasonable means to inform signatory employees of their rights in the Fund.

Trustees of the Fund did not institute suit for delinquent royalties to eliminate small operators.

Major coal companies have not fostered UMW's domination in the industry. UMW's bargaining history has remained substantially the same since 1890.

As early as 1897, and since, UMW has bargained on a [22] multi-employer basis in a geographic interstate area representing the largest production area in the industry, known as the central competitive field, which has changed from time to time as the volume of production shifted. The Agreement thus achieved by UMW representatives with operators' representatives in the particular central competitive field became the guide for negotiating contracts between UMW and operators in other districts.

In all negotiations, both prior to and after the 1950 Agreement's execution, UMW, in Convention and pursuant to its constitution, has constituted and authorized its Policy Committee to deal with negotiations between the meetings of its quadrennial Conventions, and bargaining agreements can be finalized only when authorized by the UMW Policy Committee.

Since 1947, the Taft-Hartley Act has mandated UMW to bargain collectively with representatives selected by the operators. In all negotiations, both prior to and after 1950, UMW negotiated with the authorized representatives of operators. In negotiations for the 1950 Agreement, UMW met and bargained separately with (1) representatives of the northern operators, (2) representatives of the southern operators, [23] and (3) representatives of captive operators. Since 1950, it has bargained collectively with BCOA as the bargaining representative of the northern group of operators and captive mine owners producing the largest tonnage of coal in the competitive market for bituminous coal. The BCOA was in the process of being formed long prior to the 1950 Agreement's execution and was established as a labor relations agency to give to the largest group of coal operators a single voice in negotiating a collective bargaining agreement with UMW. Any agreement must have operator approval and the UMW Policy Committee's authorization. Southern coal producers have not been members of BCOA. Western operators have been in and out of BCOA. Generally, BCOA has been the first to sign. With the legal authority to demand that UMW bargain with it as Taft-Hartley mandates, southern producers have historically preferred to bargain as a separate unit and to negotiate a labor agreement after UMW has executed with other groups. Consonant with its basic policy of seeking a uniform agreement, the agreement first achieved by UMW has served as a guide for other groups. [*824] UMW has not agreed with any operator [24] or group of operators to impose upon other groups the agreement first executed.

Since 1941, UMW has sought to protect the integrity of the labor standards contained in UMW's collective bargaining agreement and thus preserve work opportunities for its employee members covered in the contract unit. A 1943 order of the National War Labor Board directed that each UMW contract include a provision relating to leased mines, that "Operators agree that they will not lease any operating mines subject to this Agreement as a subterfuge" to avoid the Agreement's provisions. This clause by reference was contained in the Ickes-Lewis Agreement in 1943 and in the National Bituminous Coal Wage Agreement of 1945. The 1952 Agreement provides that operators "agree that they will not lease out any coal lands as a subterfuge for the purpose of avoiding the application of this Agreement." It expresses a covenant which the basic agreement would in any event imply.

The subterfuge provisions proved inadequate. To root out circumvention, a "protective wage clause" (sometimes called PWC) was negotiated in 1958. UMW proposed it and the operators refused to accept it and offered counter-proposals which UMW [25] rejected; and when agreement was reached, operators professed reluctant acceptance to avoid an interruption in the supply of coal. The clause was a continuation of UMW's efforts to prevent operators from vitiating the agreement signed by them by subleasing practices.

The clause's purpose had to do with substandard wages and conditions. In negotiating the 1958 Agreement, UMW complained that signatory operators were subleasing their coal lands to individuals and newly formed corporations and other business organizations controlled by themselves and using other, variant devices and schemes, all geared to obtaining coal produced under substandard labor conditions and thereby depriving their employees of work opportunities and labor standards required under the UMW Agreement. These complaints brought counter-charges from some signatories that UMW field representatives were entering into agreements whereby other signatories were excused from paying wage scale or the royalty payments required by the UMW Agreement. Though UMW denied the counter-charges, operators insisted upon assurances from UMW.

Thus, two promises were made: First, as provided in PWC's paragraph A, UMW assured operators [26] signatory to the Agreement that it would not, during the Agreement's term, enter into or permit any agreement covering labor standards applicable to employees covered by this contract on any basis other than those specified by the Agreement or applicable district agreement and that UMW would perform and enforce the paragraph's term "without discrimination or favor" and that it (UMW) "will use and exercise its continuing best efforts to obtain full compliance therewith by each of the parties signatory hereto," which provision it alleges emphasizes that such assurances did not run to those coal producers not yet signatory. UMW is free to negotiate a labor agreement at variance with the national agreement. Second, operators promised that if they obtained coal from others not mined by themselves, it would be obtained from operators who maintained labor standards "as favorable to the employees as those provided for in this contract," thus assuring UMW that acquisition of coal from others would not be used by a signatory operator as a device to undercut the labor standards to which it has promised to adhere. This second provision is known as the work standards clause. The clause does [27] not prohibit dealings between any persons. Signatories must assure themselves that coal in which they deal has been produced under labor standards at least equal to those set forth in UMW's contract. A non-union producer need only to see that coal is produced under standards equivalent to those in the Agreement if he wishes to sell coal to a signatory, and the clause does not impose either the [*825] UMW or its agreement on a non-signatory. It does, however, protect the job opportunities of the unionized worker and safeguards his employment and his wage and benefit scale by removing the economic inducement to signatory producers to purchase coal under substandard conditions. PWC was never enforced. The PWC was executed on December 3, 1958. Its legality was not questioned under the NLRB at the time it was executed. However, on September 14, 1959, effective sixty days later, the National Labor Relations Act was amended by the addition of a section 8(e) which invalidated the so-called "hot cargo" agreement by which an employer, in the statutory language, "ceases or refrains or agrees to cease or refrain from handling, using, selling, transporting, or otherwise dealing in any [28] of the products of any other employer, or to cease doing business with any other person . . ." The purpose of Section 8(e) is to bar an agreement which sanctions a secondary boycott.

On August 27, 1963, the National Labor Relations Board found that the work standards provision of PWC violated Section 8(e). But on judicial review, the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit on August 4, 1965, concluded that the Board applied incorrect legal principles in reaching its decision and remanded the case to the Board for redetermination in accordance with proper standards.

Meanwhile, the Board having invalidated the work standards clause, UMW negotiated a substitute for it, designated to meet the same problem to which the earlier clause had been directed. The substitute clause, known as the Welfare Fund clause, required a signatory operator to pay into the UMW Welfare and Retirement Fund the sum of 80 cents per ton for each ton of coal acquired by it on which the sum of 40 cents per ton had not previously been paid into the Fund.

The Welfare Fund clause requiring signatories to pay 80 cents on coal procured or acquired from non-signatories is devoid of secondary pressures [29] and does not fall within the targets at which 8(e) was aimed.

Though UMW had investments in stock ownership of West Kentucky Coal Company, and loans to other stockholders secured by shares of that company's common stock, it was not a Sherman violation to make such investments; such investments were made subsequent to the alleged conspiracy in 1950 when West Kentucky was not a UMW signatory; West Kentucky became such a signatory only upon evidence that its employees had, in writing, selected UMW as bargaining agent and its execution of the UMW agreement accorded with national labor policy. UMW made no suggestions and proposed no policies with reference to West Kentucky's management, marketing or pricing policies. West Kentucky bids on the TVA market were formulated by West Kentucky personnel without consultation or knowledge of UMW.

There was no collusion among businessmen to drive small operators from the market by predatory price-cutting or like anti-competitive business behavior. No individual coal company has a dominant share of the market. Dependable capacity to furnish the quality and quantity at a reasonable price governs the share of the market that any mine operator obtains. [30] There are no sheltered markets for small or large operators.

The 1950 and successor Agreements, like all preceding agreements, are the product of UMW's independent judgment obtained by the independent efforts acting unilaterally and alone and in its own self-interest, free of any alliance or combination with any employer or employers for a predatory anti-competitive purpose.

UMW denies that it violated the laws of the State of Tennessee with respect either to Parton Coal Company or Dean Coal Company. It denies that any of the companies are entitled to damages.

[*826] Issues

The issues as formulated in the pre-trial order are:

(1) Did the UMW engage in a combination or conspiracy, as alleged by the coal companies, so as to unreasonably restrain trade or to monopolize commerce among the several states, outside or beyond the exemption granted by the antitrust statutes to a labor organization?

(2) Did UMW violate any duty under Tennessee law to plaintiffs, Parton Coal Company and Dean Coal Company, and if so, was such violation or violations the proximate cause of the claimed damages sustained by them, or either of them?

(3) If the answer to the foregoing issues, or either [31] of them, is in the affirmative, what damages, if any, resulted to the individual plaintiff coal companies by reason thereof?

Guidelines Fixed by the Supreme Court in the Pennington Case

The guidelines for the decision of the antitrust phase of these cases are set forth by the majority opinion of the Supreme Court in the case of United Mine Workers of America v. Pennington, et al., supra.

The Supreme Court held that under the circumstances of the case the Union is not exempt from liability under the antitrust laws and that the action of the District Court in overruling UMW's motion for a directed verdict and for judgment notwithstanding the verdict was proper. 381 U.S. 657 at 661, 85 S. Ct. 1585.

The Court observed that HN1[] Section 20 of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 738, and Section 4 of the Norris-LaGuardia Act, 47 Stat. 70, permit a union, acting alone, to engage in the conduct therein specified without violating the Sherman Act, but that neither of these sections expressly deals "with arrangements or agreements between unions and employers. Neither section tells us whether any or all such arrangements or agreements are barred or permitted by the antitrust laws. Thus Hutcheson [32] (U.S. v. Hutcheson, 312 U.S. 219, 85 L. Ed. 788, 61 S. Ct. 463) itself stated: 'So long as a union acts in its self-interest and does not combine with non-labor groups, the licit and the illicit under § 20 are not to be distinguished by any judgment regarding the wisdom or unwisdom, the rightness or wrongness, the selfishness or unselfishness of the end of which the particular union activities are the means.'" Pennington, supra at 662.

The Court pointed out that the Allen Bradley Company v. Union, 325 U.S. 797, 89 L. Ed. 1939, 65 S. Ct. 1533, decision made explicit what had theretofore been merely a qualifying expression in Hutcheson and held that HN2[] "when the unions participated with a combination of business men who had complete power to eliminate all competition among themselves and to prevent all competition from others, a situation was created not included within the exemptions of the Clayton and Norris-LaGuardia Acts." It further pointed out that subsequent cases have applied the Allen Bradley doctrine to such combinations without regard to whether they found expression in a collective bargaining agreement, and even though the device for effectuating the purpose of [33] the combination was an agreement on wages. Supra, at 663.

The Court also pointed out that if the UMW in this case in order to protect its wage scale had presented a set of prices at which the mine operators would be required to sell their coal, the Union and the employers who happened to agree could not successfully defend this contract provision if it were challenged under the antitrust laws by the Government or by some party injured by the arrangement. In such a situation, said the Court, the restraint on the product market is direct and immediate, and is of the type characteristically deemed unreasonable under the Sherman Act and the Union gets from the promise nothing more concrete than a hope for better wages to come.

The Court further observed that if the Union became a party to a collusive bidding arrangement designed to drive Phillips and others from the TVA market, as [*827] charged in the complaint, any claim to exemption from antitrust liability would be frivolous at best.

It was also observed that the major part of Phillips' case was the claim that the Union entered into a conspiracy with the large operators to impose the agreed-upon wage and royalty scales upon [34] the smaller, non-union operators, irrespective of their ability to pay and regardless of whether or not the Union represented the employees of these companies, all for the further purpose of eliminating them from the industry, limiting production and pre-empting the market for the large unionized operators. Supra, at 664.

The Court then observed that HN3[] wages lie at the heart of collective bargaining between employers and unions and the law contemplates agreements on wages not only between individual employers and a union, but agreements between the union and employers in a multi-employer bargaining unit. Labor Board v. Truck Drivers Union, 353 U.S. 87, 94-96, 1 L. Ed. 2d 676, 77 S. Ct. 643; UMW v. Pennington, supra at 664; and that the union benefit from the wage scale is direct and complete and the effect on the product market results from the elimination of competition based on wages among the employers in the bargaining unit, which is not the kind of restraint Congress intended the Sherman Act to proscribe. Apex Hosiery Co. v. Leader, 310 U.S. 469, 503-504, 84 L. Ed. 1311, 60 S. Ct. 982; Adams Dairy Co. v. St. Louis Dairy Co., 260 F.2d 46 (C.A. 8); Pennington, supra at 664. . [35]

The Court stated that a union may conclude a wage agreement with the multi-employer bargaining unit without violating the antitrust laws and it may as a matter of its own policy, and not by agreement with all or part of the employers of that unit, seek the same wages from other employers. Supra at 664.

Negotiations between Union and employers are not automatically exempt from Sherman Act scrutiny simply because the "negotiations involve a compulsory subject of bargaining, regardless of the form and content of the agreement." The Board's demarcation of the bounds of the duty to bargain has relevance to any consideration of the sweep of labor's antitrust immunity, for the Court is concerned with harmonizing the Sherman Act with the national policy expressed in the National Labor Relations Act or promoting "the peaceful settlement of industrial disputes by subjecting labor-management controversies to the mediatory influence of negotiation." Fibreboard Paper Prods. Corp. v. Labor Board, 379 U.S. 203, 211, 85 S. Ct. 398, 13 L. Ed. 2d 233.

But there are limits to what a union or an employer may offer or extract in the name of wages and just because they must bargain does not mean that [36] the agreement reached may disregard other laws. Teamsters Union v. Oliver, 358 U.S. 283, 296, 3 L. Ed. 2d 312, 79 S. Ct. 297; Brotherhood of Carpenters v. United States, 330 U.S. 395, 399-400, 91 L. Ed. 973, 67 S. Ct. 775.

The Court further observed that a union may make wage agreements with a multi-employer bargaining unit and may in pursuance of its own union interests seek to obtain the same terms from other employers. No case under the antitrust laws could be made out on evidence limited to such union behavior. Immediately following this statement, Justice White, in footnote 2 of the opinion, stated:

> HN4[] "Unilaterally, and without agreement with any employer group to do so, a union may adopt a uniform wage policy and seek vigorously to implement it even though it may suspect that some employers cannot effectively compete if they are required to pay the wage scale demanded by the union. The union need not gear its wage demands to wages which the weakest units in the industry can afford to pay. Such union conduct is not alone sufficient evidence to maintain a union-employer [*828] conspiracy charge under the Sherman Act. There must be additional direct or indirect [37] evidence of the conspiracy. There was, of course, other evidence in this case, but we indicate no opinion as to its sufficiency."

The Union, it said, forfeits its exemption from the antitrust laws when it is clearly shown that it has agreed with one set of employers to impose a certain wage scale on other bargaining units. One group of employers may not conspire to eliminate competitors from the industry and the Union is liable with the employers if it becomes a party to the conspiracy. This is true even though the union's part in the scheme is an undertaking to secure the same wages, hours or other conditions of employment from the remaining employers in the industry. Supra, at 666.

The policy of antitrust law is clearly set against employer-union agreements seeking to prescribe labor standards outside the bargaining unit.

> "From the viewpoint of antitrust policy, moreover, all such agreements between a group of employers and a union that the union will seek specified labor standards outside the bargaining unit suffer from a more basic defect, without regard to predatory intention or effect in the particular case. For the salient characteristic of such agreements is [38] that the union surrenders its freedom of action with respect to its bargaining policy . . ." Supra, at 668.

Mr. Justice Douglas interpreted Mr. Justice White's majority opinion by suggesting to the trial court how under the opinion it should charge the jury on the retrial.

First, HN5[] if there were an industry-wide collective bargaining agreement whereby employers and the union agreed on a wage scale that exceeded the financial ability of some operators to pay and that if it was made for the purpose of forcing some employers out of business, the union as well as the employers who participated in the arrangement with the union should be found to have violated the antitrust laws.

Second, an industry-wide agreement containing those features is prima facie evidence of a violation. Justice Douglas added a footnote to this statement to the effect that acceptance by competitors, without previous agreement, of an invitation to participate in a plan, the necessary consequence of which, if carried out, is restraint of interstate commerce, is sufficient to establish an unlawful conspiracy under the Sherman Act. In support of the principle contained in the footnote, he cited a number of cases, [39] not one of which involved a union. [1]

---

[1] Eastern States Lumber Assn. v. U.S., 234 U.S. 600, 58 L. Ed. 1490, 34 S. Ct. 951; Lawlor v. Loewe, 235 U.S. 522, 534, 59 L. Ed. 341, 35 S. Ct. 170; American Column Co. v. U.S., 257 U.S. 377, 66 L. Ed. 284, 42 S. Ct. 114; U.S. v. American Linseed Oil Co., 262 U.S. 371, 67 L. Ed. 1035, 43 S. Ct. 607; Interstate Circuit v. U.S., 306 U.S. 208, 227, 83 L. Ed. 610, 59 S. Ct. 467.

It is to be observed that Mr. Justice Douglas under paragraph 1 stated that if the agreement contained the two factors mentioned in that paragraph, namely, an industry-wide agreement whereby employers and the union agreed on a wage scale that exceeded the financial ability of some operators to pay and that it was made for the purpose of forcing some employers out of business, both the employer and the union [parties] to the agreement would be guilty of violating the antitrust law. Yet, in the second sentence, he says that such industry-wide agreement containing those features is only prima facie [40] evidence of a violation of the antitrust laws.

We believe that Justice Douglas meant that in order for an employer and a union to be guilty of violating the antitrust laws, the industry-wide agreement must exceed the financial ability of some operators to pay and it must be made for the purpose of putting some employers out of business.

[*829] This presents a question upon which the attorneys are in disagreement. The attorneys for the operators insist that if the effect of the agreement is to force a certain number of operators out of business, regardless of the intent of the parties, the employer and the Union violated the Sherman Act. Attorneys for the Union maintain that the effect of the agreement of forcing some employers out of business is not sufficient to show an antitrust violation; that the other element of predatory intent must be present.

This question has given the Court much concern. The preponderance of the proof shows that the smaller eastern Tennessee operators, including plaintiffs, with the exception of plaintiff Tennco Corporation, could not pay the wages provided in the 1950 Agreement, as amended from time to time until 1964, including the 40 cents royalty [41] on each ton of coal produced.

Upon careful consideration, the Court has reached the conclusion that the Pennington case teaches that HN6[] it is necessary to find predatory intent to drive small coal operators out of business in order to hold the employer and Union for a violation of the Sherman Act.

Justice White's Footnote No. 2 indicates that the antitrust law is not designed to protect marginal operators; that ill effects alone on the marginal operators are not enough to show intent.

The standard of proof necessary to show predatory intent is governed by the recent decision of the Supreme Court in United Mine Workers of America v. Paul Gibbs, (C.A. 6, March 28, 1966), 383 U.S. 715, 86 S. Ct. 1130, 16 L. Ed. 2d 218, 34 Law Week, 4335.

This case involved interpretation of HN7[] Section 6 of the Norris-LaGuardia Act which states in effect that no association participating in a labor dispute shall be held liable for the unlawful acts of individual officers, members, etc., "except upon clear proof of actual participation in, or actual authorization of, such acts, or of ratification of such acts after actual knowledge thereof."

In the ordinary case, proof would be simply by a preponderance [42] of the evidence and in the criminal case guilt would have to be established beyond a reasonable doubt. Under Section 6 of the Norris-LaGuardia Act, as interpreted by the Supreme Court in the Gibbs case, a middle ground is reached with respect to the quantum of proof necessary for civil liability.

Justice Brennan suggested that Congress meant "at least to signify meaning like that commonly accorded such similar phrases as 'clear, unequivocal and convincing proof' . . . He is required to persuade by a substantial margin, to come forward with 'more than a bare preponderance of the evidence to prevail.'"

Justice Harlan, who was joined by Justice Clark, concurred in the decision, but felt that the statute was simply directed against a particular type of inferential proof of authorization or ratification unacceptable to those who framed the law. "For me [that is Harlan], the gist of the statute is that in the usual instance a union's carrying on of its normal strike functions and its failure to take affirmative action to dispel misconduct are not in themselves proof of authorization or ratification of the wrong-doing."

It seems apparent that the Court in the Gibbs case, by [43] interpretation of the statute, has placed a heavier burden of proof upon a plaintiff in this type of case.

Position of Coal Companies with Respect to the Proof of Violation of Sherman Act

The main proof relied upon by plaintiffs, if we interpret their position correctly, is the statement by Mr. Moses that one of the reasons for the establishment of BCOA was to avoid the possibilities of a recurrence of the effect of the Jacksonville scale in the 1920's when southern companies got out from under the UMW contract and engaged in price cutting. It is said that this showed a purpose upon the part of the strongest companies and the Union to get together and fix wages in a national contract so [*830] as to avoid price competition; that Mr. Love made the statement in effect that BCOA and the Union had worked out a contract to stabilize prices in the industry and that that was a per se violation.

It is said that the Union prior to the formation of the BCOA was urging the operators to adopt some sort of protective plan to stop the dropping prices which was a matter of concern to the Union because of the history of the 1920's; that one of the reasons for the formation of the BCOA [44] was to avoid price war of 1920's; that the meaning of Mr. Moses' statement was that the southern companies were going to be kept in line under the contract so that the 1920's situation would be avoided; that the spokesman for BCOA and the Union felt free to discuss these matters openly as being a reasonable proposition, but that the purposes to stabilize prices encroach upon an area of per se violation; that an effort to force uniform wages throughout the industry to avoid price competition does not eliminate wages as leverage in price competition; that the working conditions in the East Tennessee mines - thin seams of coal - rough terrain, methods of production, differences in working conditions, made a uniform wage for the miners who worked in this area a tremendous disadvantage to the Tennessee operators and a great advantage to the stronger operators; that the alleged boycott provision of the land-lease clause of the 1952 contract and the alleged boycott provision contained in paragraph B of the Protective Wage Clause of the 1958 contract were Sherman violations; that a similar protective wage clause was found in violation of the Sherman Act in Brotherhood of Carpenters v. United [45] States, 330 U.S. 395, 398-400, 91 L. Ed. 973, 67 S. Ct. 775.

The attacks of UMW on TVA for buying coal from the producers of the East Tennessee field and the investments of UMW in the West Kentucky Coal Company, the second largest producer selling coal to TVA, and the practices of that company, aided by finances from UMW, and working with other major producers in taking over markets, including 3/4ths of the TVA market, constitute proof, plaintiffs alleged, of purposeful acts to drive the East Tennessee companies out of business.

Oral Argument of Counsel for Plaintiffs

In oral argument, counsel for plaintiffs stated that there are many desperate men in the coal fields of Tennessee; that there has been a great deal of violence; that there is something wrong in the industry; that the names of the dead mines, plaintiffs' being on the list, have been listed in the trial; that the real question is whether this condition should be brought about by a small combination of men in large cities who sit down and make arrangements with respect to the destiny of these people. He contended that the first question for consideration is whether there was an arrangement or a combination or agreement [46] with business men by the Union to fix wages that small operators could not pay. He argued that the evidence showed such an arrangement by the UMW and BCOA and that this combination worked for the establishment of national agreements for the years 1951, 1952, 1955, 1956, 1958 and 1964. Mr. Moses, one of the leading negotiators for BCOA, stated that the purpose of BCOA was to negotiate national agreements and to settle industry problems on an authoritative basis. That is what happened in the East Tennessee coal fields.

Mr. Love, who was the prime mover in setting up BCOA, stated that his purpose was to see that his competitors in the coal business paid the same wage as he paid regardless of the circumstances.

From these facts, it is argued that there was a clear understanding that the contract was to be applied nationally.

Counsel asserted that the effect of the combination or arrangement was to force small coal operators out of business and that the law supplied the specific intent to drive them out of business. In addition, he argued that there is clear proof [*831] in the record of a purposeful understanding to eliminate the smaller companies from having any fair chance [47] of survival. In support of this argument, he stated that when the BCOA emerged the Union ceased to be concerned for job opportunities for its members. Concern by the Union for the smaller companies was abandoned with the emergence of BCOA. There was a joint effort of BCOA and UMW to avoid, in the negotiations, large scale negotiations in which the interest of such small companies would be given expression and publicity. On the contrary, negotiations were taken out of the public view and conducted in secret conferences between a handful of negotiators - actually a two-man bargaining team. Harry Moses used the term "two-man bargaining team."

The stated purpose of the BCOA and the Union was to maintain a stabilization of production and prices so that a recurrence of the Jacksonville situation of the 1920's would be avoided. Moses stated that this was one of the reasons for the establishment of BCOA. Another reason for the formation of BCOA was to avoid the price war of the 1920's. The boycott provision and the land-lease provision in the 1952 contract are evidence of the purposes of the BCOA and the Union.

Counsel argued that these matters show a clear violation of the Sherman [48] Act under the opinions of Mr. Justice White and of Mr. Justice Douglas.

Oral Argument of Counsel for Defendant

Counsel for the defendant stated in oral argument that adversary counsel had repeatedly claimed and repeatedly attempted to prove that contemporaneously with the negotiations of the 1950 Bituminous Coal Wage Agreement, a side agreement was made, but that they have failed to prove it.

Counsel stated further that the Supreme Court commented that "a major part of Phillips' case, however, was that the union entered into a conspiracy with the large operators to impose the agreed-upon wage and royalty scales upon the smaller, non-union operators, regardless of their ability to pay and regardless of whether or not the union represented the employees of these companies, all for the purpose of eliminating them from the industry, limiting production and pre-empting the market for the large, unionized operators."

That BCOA was the same group of operators that had been bargaining with the Union since 1924, namely, the Pennsylvania, Ohio, West Virginia, northern Virginia group of operators, the old competitive field. After the 1950 Agreement, the BCOA was formed in July, 1950. [49] Fifty per cent or a little bit more than that of the national tonnage was represented by the BCOA. That tonnage was produced in Ohio, Pennsylvania, northern West Virginia, Tennessee, Virginia and Kentucky. Two hundred sixty-two individual companies composed the membership of BCOA, 130, or about half of them, were companies that mined less than 100,000 tons a year. The record indicates that a concern that mines less than 100,000 tons a year is a small operator. After the 1950 negotiations, UMW contracts represented about 77% or 78% of the coal produced.

That the Union operated through a policy committee which designated a subcommittee to negotiate with the BCOA. In June 1949, the southern group of operators terminated their contract pursuant to its terms. The northern operators did not terminate the contract. After the southern group had terminated its contract, the Union terminated the contract with the northern group.

Mr. Lewis, according to defendant, then suggested to the southern and northern groups that they work three days a week in order to provide the country with coal until they could reach a successor agreement. The operators refused. Mr. Lewis then instructed the [50] miners to work the three days a week and that is all they worked. In the meantime, the negotiators had conferences at White Sulphur Springs and at Bluefield, West Virginia, that lasted through December. They couldn't agree. Both the southern and [*832] northern coal operators walked out of the meeting. In December, the whole mining industry was down because the miners were not working. They did not have a contract. In 1950, the coal operators filed an unfair labor practice complaint. Public concern was voiced about the shortage of coal and the President appointed a fact-finding board and the Attorney General and the Labor Board obtained injunctions to compel the groups to get back together and bargain in good faith.

The Government, defendant argued, instituted contempt proceedings against the Union and its leaders. Before that the Union had been summoned into the federal court for contempt proceedings because the men were not working. It was under these conditions that the 1950 Agreement was reached. It would seem a bit unusual that the Union and the operators who had been fighting each other for some fifteen years would enter into a conspiracy to violate the antitrust [51] laws.

The Southern Coal Producers and the Southern Tennessee Coal Producers signed the 1950 Agreement. They also signed it in 1951 and 1952. The 1952 Agreement was disapproved by the Wage Stabilization Board and the Southern Coal Producers filed a petition with the Board for approval and the Southern Tennessee Coal Producers signed it. The 1958 Agreement was also signed by that association.

Counsel argued that the first indication of any charge of a conspiracy about the 1950 Agreement was when the plaintiffs were sued for the 1958 delinquent royalties. They filed the counterclaim raising this defense.

The policy committee of the Union designated a subcommittee to bargain with the operators and to negotiate a contract and to report back to the policy committee for its approval or disapproval. Mr. Love, negotiator for the BCOA, had to report back to the representatives of their 262 companies as to his success or lack of success in trying to work out a contract with the Union.

Messrs. Lewis, Kennedy and Owens represented the Union in the negotiations. Counsel argued that there was no evidence of a conspiracy.

Mining Conditions in Tennessee

The production of coal in Tennessee [52] during the World War II years ranged between 7,000,000 and 8,000,000 tons per year. From 1945 to 1948, the production was in the vicinity of 6,000,000 with a drop off in 1949 to slightly more than 4,000,000.

With the growth of the TVA steam plants, and the increasing market offered by those plants, the first half of the 1950's showed increasing production until in 1956, the peak tonnage year, production reached 8,747,000 tons in Tennessee. There was then a rapid decline from 1957 through 1959. The production in 1959 fell to roughly 6,000,000 and that tonnage was maintained roughly in the period of 1960 through 1964.

Since the signing of the National Bituminous Coal Wage Agreement of 1950, there has been a tremendous increase in the number of small mines in classes 5 and 6 and also an increase in the percentage of the production for these classes, with a corresponding drop in the number and the production share of the middle-sized mines, classes 2, 3 and 4. This held true until 1960 and from that point through 1964 the numbers of these smaller mines have diminished without any substantial increase in the number of the middle-sized mines. There was no class 1 mine in Tennessee, [53] that is, one producing as much as 500,000 tons of coal per year, except for one which showed up on the statistical record for the years 1942, 1943, 1956, 1962, 1963 and 1964. In the latter years this mine, the largest mine in the State, was operated by Consolidated Coal Company at Trimore, in Anderson County, Tennessee.

The middle-sized mines of the State employed relatively large numbers of men and as these mines passed out of existence in the late 1940's and early 1950's the men from these mines moved [*833] over into the small mines that were being opened, thus giving employment to men who would otherwise be idle.

The Tennessee seams of coal average in thickness far less than the average in any other of the major producing states. In Tennessee only 32% of the coal is over four feet thick; in Pennsylvania, 55%, in West Virginia, 69%, in Ohio, 47%, in Kentucky, 65%, and in the country as a whole 64% of the coal comes from seams thicker than four feet.

The thickness of a coal seam has a great effect on the adaptability of that seam to mechanization and increased productivity, and the thinness of the Tennessee seams has resulted in difficulties and delay in mechanization.

[54] Tennessee is considerably behind the other major coal producing states in employing the most modern mechanization. In the Tennessee seams of coal it is impossible to mechanize to the degree possible in areas where the thicker seams of coal exist. In Tennessee, manpower rather than heavy machinery must be resorted to, to a far greater degree than in other major coal producing states.

Development of the TVA Steam Plant Market

The increased use of electricity in homes, industry and on farms in the Tennessee Valley and the great expansion of the AEC facilities in the Valley created a great increase in the demand for electricity from TVA. The sale of power by TVA to AEC was a very modest part of the total sales of TVA in 1951, but by 1956 the sales to AEC were greater than the total of all other sales of electricity throughout the area served by TVA power. And by 1956 TVA was delivering to AEC more than twice as much steam-generated electricity as the entire system of TVA-Hydro Plants was able to produce.

The first Widows Creek steam-generating unit was in service on July 1, 1951; the first Kingston Plant unit, on February 8, 1954; and the first John Sevier unit, on July 12, [55] 1955. The last of the original units at Widows Creek was in service on July 7, 1954. The last unit at John Sevier was in service on October 31, 1957. The last unit at Kingston was in service on December 2, 1955.

The construction program for the major steam plants of TVA began about 1948 and has been going on constantly up to the present date. However, the period of 1951-1961 was the period of fastest growth and it is not expected that the future growth will be comparable to this earlier period.

The growth and the generation of power by the steam plants of TVA was from two and one-half billion kilowatt hours in 1951 to forty-eight billion kilowatt hours in 1961.

The steam plant system of TVA (the major plants constructed by TVA) consists of the John Sevier Plant, in Upper East Tennessee; the Kingston Plant, near Kingston, Tennessee; the Widows Creek Plant in Alabama, just south of South Pittsburgh, Tennessee; the Colbert Plant in Alabama, situated in the Tri-cities area; the Johnsonville Plant, near Johnsonville, Tennessee; the Shawnee Plant in Kentucky, near where the Tennessee River empties into the Ohio; the Gallatin Plant on the Cumberland River near Gallatin, Tennessee; [56] and the Paradise Plant in Ohio County, western Kentucky.

TVA steam plants burn coal exclusively. TVA is the largest purchaser of coal in the country. TVA purchases one-tenth of all the coal sold to all of the nation's power systems.

The publication of TVA "Facts about TVA Steam Plants," published April 11, 1956, states that TVA expanded its coal purchases in less than five years "from about 1,000,000 tons a year to about 18,000,000 tons during the current year."

In 1953 TVA received 6,415,000 tons of coal and it burned 5,765,000 tons. In 1954, TVA received 10,196,000 tons of coal and burned 9,301,000. In 1955 TVA received 14,377,000 tons and burned 14,210,000. In 1956 TVA received 20,354,000 tons and burned 18,134,000. In [*834] 1957 TVA received 19,481,000 tons and burned 17,672,000. In 1958 TVA received 17,033,000 tons and burned 17,278,000. In 1959 TVA received 17,808,000 tons and burned 18,815,000 tons. In 1960 TVA received 18,886,000 tons and burned 19,035,000 tons.

With the development of the Steam Plant system, TVA made strenuous efforts to encourage coal operators to enlarge old mining facilities and to develop new mining facilities, and encouraged the operators [57] in other areas to move into the TVA area to increase production. Many operators took advantage of the situation and developed and expanded mining facilities in the area.

In 1953, TVA received 2,262,000 tons from Tennessee, approximately 40% of the state's production; in 1954 TVA received 4,291,000 tons from Tennessee, 66.7% of the state's production; in 1955 TVA received 4,531,000 tons from Tennessee, 64.2% of the state's production. (It is to be seen that 1956 was the year the market fully developed.) In 1957 TVA received 5,664,000 tons from Tennessee, 71.2% of the state's production. In 1958, TVA received 4,763,000 tons from Tennessee, 70.2% of the state's production. In 1959 TVA received 4,311,000 tons from Tennessee, 72.9% of the state's production. In 1962, TVA received 4,814,000 tons from Tennessee, 64.3% of the state's production.

Only rarely does TVA buy coal on a negotiated basis and that is only where there is an emergency situation in circumstances under which competitive bidding had not produced ample and timely supply. An emergency apparently occurred only once in major proportions and that was in the period 1955-56, when emergency purchases were made for the Kingston [58] Plant in tonnages aggregating 500,000 tons, at the time when the Kingston Plant first became fully operative.

Outside of emergencies, TVA is required by statute to obtain its coal by advertising and sealed bids opened in public.

TVA analyzes the bids received and determines the bid with the lowest cost with respect to the amount of heat to be generated from the coal. The amount of heat is determined by the btu content of the coal. Also included in the computation of cost is the transportation cost. The quality of the coal is guaranteed by bidders. Thus, quality, the cost of transportation, together with the price of the coal, are the three elements the TVA uses in analyzing cost and this cost is analyzed on the basis of cost per million btu's at the plant.

TVA buys coal on spot contracts and on term contracts. The greatest share of the coal is bought on term contracts. The amount of coal the TVA buys on the term market was originally established at 75% by TVA policy but by 1962 this amount had risen to 88%. Generally, the invitations for bids for the term market specify that TVA will receive on a contract not less than 500 tons per week and not more than 10,000 tons per week [59] for a period of not less than six months. The length of the term varies. Generally, TVA buys on term contracts of one to three years. However, TVA does issue from time to time invitations to bid in which the term is limited, not for three years, but four, five or ten years, or longer.

The balance of the TVA coal is purchased on spot bidding. The invitations for this bidding call for much smaller quantities and for delivery within a few weeks after the contract is executed. The invitations for the spot bids generally go out at the end of each month reflecting the amount of spot coal that the TVA expects to buy the succeeding month. The purchases are then made under the resulting bidding on a week to week basis.

The spot buying program is designed primarily to gear the receipt of coal more closely to actual needs. The coal burned at the various plants is not uniform throughout the year. It varies, depending upon the load that is supplied by each plant, and the load is determined by many factors, including the weather. The term contracting program is used to fill the primary supply; and then, in order to reduce the peaks and valleys of [*835] burn and receipts of coal, [60] the spot program is used to fill the gaps in the supply of term coal.

Whether or not a bid is submitted for delivery to a particular plant of TVA generally depends upon the method of transportation. In the case of rail deliveries the bidders generally offer the coal f.o.b. rail cars at origin and then TVA computes the applicable transportation cost to any plants where the coal might be competitive in determining the cost under the bid. In the case of truck deliveries, the bidder specifies a particular plant to which the coal is offered and the transportation cost is included in the bid price. In the case of large deliveries the bids include a price sometimes f.o.b. the origin and sometimes f.o.b. barge at the plant.

The TVA steam plant system was designed to draw, and is capable of drawing, coal from ample deposits in several coal fields. Some of these fields lie in southern Illinois, Indiana and western Kentucky, this being part of the midwestern basin deposit. Another field is in Southern Appalachia, including the eastern part of Kentucky, southwest Virginia and upper east Tennessee, extending over into the Monterey area. Another field is in southeastern Tennessee and northern [61] Alabama.

No field is situated so as to supply all of the TVA plants because of transportation distances involved under normal competitive situations. Generally, each plant can draw competitively from two or more areas. It was the intent and expectation of TVA to obtain coal from the fields nearest to the particular plant. The John Sevier Plant is normally supplied from southwestern Virginia; and from Middlesboro, Kentucky-Jellico, Tennessee, origins on the Southern railroad. The Kingston Plant is generally serviced from the Jellico-Middlesboro-Pineville field in east Kentucky and from the upper east Tennessee field. Since 1959 large shipments have been from the Hazard field in east Kentucky; also coal moves to Kingston from the southeastern Tennessee field to a limited extent and some coal has moved to the Kingston Plant from the west Kentucky field, generally in emergencies. One other field supplying Kingston is the Monterey field in Middle Tennessee. The Widows Creek plant is generally supplied from the southeastern field in Marion, Grundy and Sequatchie Counties, Tennessee, with some coal moving there from the Alabama Sand Mountain Plateau field; also coal moves to the Widows [62] Creek plant from the western Kentucky mines by train and coal can move into Widows Creek by barge from the middle-western fields. The western Kentucky field supplies the coal to the Gallatin Plant. The Paradise Plant receives coal from mines adjacent to the plant in western Kentucky. The Shawnee and Johnsonville Plants are supplied from the middle-western fields in Illinois, Indiana and western Kentucky. Plants capable of receiving coal by barge are Widows Creek, Colbert, Johnsonville, Shawnee and Kingston.

There is one other plant in the TVA system recently constructed which came into service only toward the end of this trial - the Bull Run Plant in east Tennessee, near Clinton. This plant has been designated as the destination for coal from the Hazard field in east Kentucky, under a fifteen year contract for 30,000 tons per week.

The TVA steam plants generally maintain a storage of coal in quantities sufficient to supply the requirements of the plant for 60 to 90 days.

As stated above, the bids specifying shipment by rail to the TVA steam plants do not generally specify a particular plant but are filed with the price fixed at the point of origin and the rail shipments make [63] up the greatest bulk of the shipments to the TVA steam plant system. The TVA steam plants are connected with transmission lines and the entire system makes a large network supplying power to the whole TVA area. The TVA maintains in Chattanooga an IBM 704 electronic data processing machine or computer, which, on the basis of cost factors at the various plants, determines [*836] the loading of the TVA power plants and comes up with the lowest total cost of generating power at any particular time. This machine determines at which plant the load should be increased and at which plant the load should be decreased.

Factors that go into the cost computation and the determination of the allocation of load between the plants include: The location of the demand and the loss by transmission, the economies or efficiency of the various steam plant generating units; the amount of water in the reservoirs of TVA lakes and the season of the year; and the cost of the coal used in the various plants. The cost of coal represents approximately one-half of the generating cost.

The TVA steam plant system was so designed as to be able to draw coal from several coal fields, as stated above, and be [64] able to shift over the years the relative volume of coal obtained from the various fields.

The TVA officials made it clear in discussions with the coal suppliers in Tennessee, that the TVA steam plant system was part of an inter-connected power system in which the use of the various plants was determined by the relative economics of the plants and that if a plant became less economical to operate than others because of its relative coal costs, then this plant naturally would be operated less heavily than other plants that might be operated more cheaply because of cheaper sources of coal. The TVA officials explained to the operators in Tennessee that these determinations were made by feeding data into the electronic computer.

UMW Investments in West Kentucky Coal Company, which was Strategically Located With Respect to the TVA Market

By July 1, 1958, United Mine Workers had made the following investments in West Kentucky Coal Company and Nashville Coal Company: (Nashville Coal Company was purchased by West Kentucky Coal Company in 1955.)

In Nashville Coal Company
25,000 shares (Chertsey loan collateral)	$ 2,625,000.00

In Nashville Coal Company
10,000 shares (Sagamore loan collateral)		1,050,000.00
10,000 shares (Tower loan collateral)		1,050,000.00
	Total	$ 4,725,000.00
In West Kentucky Coal Company
875,000 common shares owned		$ 2,354,522.04
50,000 preferred shares owned		2,500,000.00
Pledge of assets on bank loan		5,200,000.00
90,600 shares (Cyrus Eaton Loan collateral)		2,513,895.18
84,560 shares (Chertsey loan collateral)		2,153,279.50
84,912 shares (Sagamore loan collateral)		2,287,809.32
25,300 shares (Tower Loan collateral)		443,223.90
5,200 shares (Tower Loan collateral)		77,938.32
1,300 shares (Tower Loan collateral)		18,847.04
8,128 shares (Tower Loan collateral)		176,461.07
20,000 shares (Tower Loan collateral)		491,430.00
50,000 shares (Colton Loan collateral)		1,506,875.00
25,000 shares (Combs Loan collateral)		1,006,875.00
	Total	$20,731,156.37
Total investment in both companies		$25,456,156.37

[65] [*837] Loans to Cyrus Eaton, secured by West Kentucky stock tabulated above, commenced October 9, 1951. The Sagamore-Summit Corporation loans, secured by West Kentucky stock, started the same date as also did the Tower Industries, Inc. loans, secured by West Kentucky stock. The Colton loans, secured by West Kentucky stock, started October 28, 1955. The Chertsey Corporation loans, secured by West Kentucky stock, started October 4, 1954. The Chertsey Corporation loans secured by Nashville stock, started September 5, 1955. The Sagamore-Summit Corporation loans, secured by Nashville stock, started September 6, 1955, as also did the loans to Tower Industries, Inc., secured by Nashville stock. The September 5 and 6, 1955 loans were made in connection with the acquisition of Nashville Coal Company by West Kentucky Coal Company.

The foregoing loans were evidenced by promissory notes, all of which were demand notes.

Chertsey Corporation, Sagamore-Summit Corporation and Tower Industries, Inc. were corporations affiliated with Mr. Cyrus Eaton. Mr. Cyrus S. Eaton, Jr. owned all of the outstanding stock of Sagamore-Summit Corporation. Tower Industries, Inc. stock was all owned by [66] Mr. Eaton's children, their spouses or business associates. All of the stock of Chertsey Corporation was owned by Mr. Eaton and his children. Mr. Eaton handled the various transactions involved in these loans and the loans were spread between these various corporations for the convenience of these companies.

Each of the notes evidencing the above loans provided that the borrower might surrender the collateral to the holders of the note and relieve himself, or itself, from any further personal liability. However, according to Mr. Eaton it was not the understanding that United Mine Workers would suffer all the loss or that he or his companies would take all the gain under these transactions.

These demand notes were renewed annually and there was no understanding as to how long the process of replacing notes annually would continue. It was the understanding that UMW would retain the collateral until payment or surrender.

Some of the notes provided that interest would be one-half of the dividends paid under the collateral. In other notes interest was provided for but if no dividends were paid under the collateral, interest was not paid and it was the understanding that no interest [67] would be paid if there were no dividends.

The Combs' loan was foreclosed by UMW. The form of the obligation under the Colton notes was identical with that under the Eaton and affiliated corporation notes. Mr. Colton was the President of the National Bank of Washington in which UMW at one time held the majority stock and UMW, in addition, loaned many millions of dollars to Mr. Colton in connection with the acquisition of the bank shares. Under the Colton notes the holder of the note was to receive any dividends under the collateral and no other provision was made for interest.

One of the most frequently stated reasons given by witnesses in interrogatory answers for the investments of UMW in West Kentucky Coal Company was that of giving employment to members of the Union. However, the President of West Kentucky Coal Company, Mr. Eastin, testified that in 1950, West Kentucky had 3,000 miners. He testified that there was a gradual reduction of the men as the mechanization program of the company had gone forward. He testified that in 1960 West Kentucky had 2,000 to 2,200 men. When Mr. Lewis was asked about the investments on cross-examination he testified that the company had been [68] paying substandard wages and had substandard working conditions.

The reason, frequently mentioned, that the working conditions and terms were substandard and far below the UMW [*838] contract terms, was given by both Mr. Lewis and Mr. Owens. Mr. Eastin, however, testified that the West Kentucky Coal Company maintained a Welfare Fund into which the company paid the same amount as was paid under the UMW contract, even before the company signed a UMW contract. Mr. Eastin also testified that the wage scale of West Kentucky Coal Company was equal to or better than that in the UMW Agreement. Mr. Owens, on cross-examination, maintained that Mr. Eastin's testimony in this regard was not factually true. However, UMW counsel later produced as their own witness Mr. McMahon, who was Vice-President and Controller of West Kentucky Coal Company, and he substantiated the testimony of Mr. Eastin on cross-examination. Mr. McMahon further testified on cross-examination that Nashville Coal Company also paid a wage equal to the UMW scale, except for the omission of travel time.

A reason given to the membership for the investments by the International officers of the Union at the International [69] Convention of 1960 was that "The West Kentucky Coal Company was breaking the price of coal down in every market that it could penetrate. The Indiana and Illinois production was constantly being attacked by the low wage scales paid in those mines and the sales marketing policy of this non-union coal company." Asked about this speech by him at the Convention, Mr. Owens testified: "What I was trying to convey in my humble way was that the wages paid to those men down there made it possible for this corporation to market coal under the wage structure that was affecting the employees that we represented in those markets where they were marketing their coal and as an institution we had a right to use the money to do it." Thus there is no conflict in the evidence that a reason for the acquisition of the West Kentucky investments was the previous policy of the company in dumping coal at low prices into the market, particularly the Illinois and Indiana market.

Another reason given for the investments upon which there is no dispute in the record, is that the Union had excess funds that it wanted to invest in order to make a profit. It is to be noted that if the profit-making motive was the [70] sole motive, the form of the investment took a peculiar turn. A number of the notes show that the interest on the loans was to be only one-half of the dividends paid on the collateral and profits would have been greater, demonstrably, if the stock had been directly acquired rather than going through Mr. Eaton.

Mr. Lewis testified in 1961: "The Trustees of the United Mine Workers are satisfied with the investment in West Kentucky Coal Company and are quite content in the belief that, in the end, it will prove to be immensely profitable to the United Mine Workers of America in a financial sense; a wise investment of the funds."

Mr. Lewis' final testimony on this point was: Mr. Eaton was a man of acknowledged industrial success and one of the leaders in the financial and industrial world of the country whom I had known for a long time, and we invited him to make a joint venture with us in the West Kentucky purchase of stock, and we loaned him some money to buy stock - any profits occurring from the joint enterprise in the investment were to be split mutually, 50% to each. We could not ask Mr. Eaton to do so and lose his own money, so we divided the profit like joint partners in any [71] enterprise.

West Kentucky Coal Company had 857,264 common shares of stock outstanding. The voting stock consists of the common stock and 50,000 shares of preferred stock.

The listing of the investments in West Kentucky Coal Company above shows that UMW owned the 50,000 preferred shares and owned or held as collateral 480,400 shares of the 857,264 outstanding common shares. Mr. Eaton and his associates assumed control of the Board of [*839] Directors of West Kentucky Coal Company. Mr. Eaton was made a Director December 12, 1952. Mr. Cyrus Eaton, Jr. came on the Board March 9, 1953; Mr. Daley and Mr. LeFevre came on May 12, 1953; and Mr. Kaiser came on the Board May 15, 1958. Mr. Eaton became Chairman of the Board of Directors May 12, 1953.

That there was control here capable of being wielded in the direction of union policy is shown by Mr. Lewis' statement at the 1956 Convention: "When Mr. Eaton's interests bought the West Kentucky Coal Company, which was operating non-union for more than fifty years, his first official act was to have that corporation sign the industry agreement with United Mine Workers of America."

Counsel for UMW in oral argument stated that he was [72] of the opinion that the loans and investments in West Kentucky and Nashville were for organizational purposes. With this opinion, the Court concurs.

Justice Goldberg stated in his dissenting opinion in the Pennington case, and found in his dissent in Meat Cutters v. Jewel Tea Co., 381 U.S. 676, 734, 14 L. Ed. 2d 640, 85 S. Ct. 1596, that the UMW had a right to make substantial investments in West Kentucky Coal Company and neither that nor its financing others in their acquisition of stock in West Kentucky Coal Company was a violation of the Sherman Act. He further stated that ownership of a controlling or substantial interest in a company which conspires with others in a violation of the antitrust laws does not in itself impose liability on the owner. The owner must be shown to have participated knowingly and actively in the alleged illegal activity. See United States v. Wise, 370 U.S. 405, 8 L. Ed. 2d 590, 82 S. Ct. 1354.

On the bid opening of April 15, 1954, TVA awarded term contracts to a large number of eastern Kentucky and eastern Tennessee small producers. Under these contracts the average cost at the plant was approximately $4.50 per ton. This price is to be compared [73] with the prices of West Kentucky Coal Company hereinafter listed on TVA contracts. In the Edition of the United Mine Workers Journal for July 15, 1954, there appeared an article which tabulated the awards by TVA of contracts to these east Tennessee and east Kentucky producers at the aforesaid bid opening. This article stated: "Evidence that TVA is still pursuing its short-sighted and dog-eat-dog policy of buying coal, is offered by the latest contract figures of coal bids awarded in early June for delivery to the Kingston, Tennessee Plant. Analysis of the coal awards above, most of which went to non-union companies and brokers who buy from small dog-hole mines that do not observe union wages, hours, welfare or conditions, and also disregard state and federal safety codes and the Walsh-Healey Act, shows how the TVA coal purchase policy operates. Note the low prices of coal at the mines which even after transportation costs are still below the prices quoted by established operators and generally recognized as standard prices for the industry, . . ."

After the award of a TVA coal contract to Whitwell Coal Corporation one of the small mines in southeastern Tennessee after bid opening [74] of December 16, 1954, there appeared an article in United Mine Workers' Journal, Edition of April 15, 1955, attacking TVA for this contract awarded to Tennessee small mines.

Mr. Kampmeier, a consulting engineer in private practice in Chattanooga, formerly worked for TVA as Assistant Manager of Power. He stated that TVA tried to build large steam plants near two or more coal fields; that it considered coal the more attractive fuel because of price. The steam plants were designed to burn a large variety of coal. Much of the coal was bought on long term. TVA encouraged the national competition in suppliers. Some of the bids were for spot orders. They were made so as to invite as many bidders as possible. TVA worked out transportation arrangements [*840] with railroads and large barge lines. These things enabled TVA to purchase at lower prices than other utilities. It purchased coal at 15 cents or 20 cents per ton less at the mine than did other utilities. He saw no evidence that UMW or any coal operators were trying to hold down prices. The suppliers tried to get as high a price as they could. The availability of the spot and term markets was beneficial to suppliers. [75] The market made the expansion in the use of coal possible.

Consolidation Coal Company played a small part in the TVA market. TVA tried to get it interested in the market. From 1952 to 1962, Consolidation never showed much interest in the market and supplied less than 10% of the coal even with its Pocahontas Mine. West Kentucky supplied about 5% and Nashville supplied less than West Kentucky. West Kentucky was less aggressive and not eager to go after the business. West Kentucky and Nashville combined supplied between 8% and 9%. Peabody was interested in the TVA market and expanded in the market. Its whole business was built on the steam market. Generally, Peabody expanded from 0 per cent to about 10 per cent as a result of the Paradise market. Island Creek was never important. It supplied less than 10% until it bought West Kentucky's coal properties. Pittston supplied about 5%. It had a mine in Monterey, Tennessee. Pittston's business with TVA diminished. The eight companies that are charged with being conspirators with the UMW to lower the price of the TVA coal to squeeze the small operators out of business furnished less than 25% of coal to TVA during the period of [76] 1952 to 1962. The coal from the west Kentucky fields does not compete with east Tennessee coal at the Kingston and John Sevier plants because of transportation costs. Prices at Kingston dropped faster and further than the prices dropped in the west Kentucky area because the price was very high in 1956 in the Kingston area. The Kingston plant operated at a higher capacity than the other TVA steam plants. That was because it was near Oak Ridge. Kingston Steam Plant built up an adequate stock pile by 1957 and this caused a cut back on purchases of coal by TVA. The transportation costs of coal purchased by TVA averaged less than one-half that of other utilities. The transportation costs of other utilities averaged more than $1.00 per ton.

Mr. Kampmeier testified that the quality of coal is a material element in its price. There is a big difference in the price of steam coal and metallurgical coal, the latter being about 50% higher.

TVA's attitude toward term contracts has changed. It at first thought that its original view of long term contracts was a mistake. This caused it to turn to a three-year contract. Later it began to make longer term contracts because it had learned [77] more about the coal business.

TVA located its Paradise Steam Plant adjacent to the coal properties of Peabody Coal Company. Peabody is to furnish 65,000,000 tons over a period of over fifteen years at a price of $2.90.

[*841] Below is a tabulation of the contracts awarded to West Kentucky Coal Company (and Nashville Coal Company after its acquisition by West Kentucky) by TVA on the term market after competitive bidding in the period of 1954 through May of 1959.

TVA Requisition 21-825509,

West Kentucky Coal Company, 7,000 tons to 27,500 tons at $2.90, Sept. 15, 1954;

TVA Requisition 21-825509, West Kentucky Coal Company, 7,000 tons to 27,500 tons, at $2.67, Sept. 15, 1954;

TVA Requisition 16-831970P, West Kentucky Coal Company, 3,000 tons per week for 21 months, at $2.32, May 19, 1955;

TVA Requisition 364, West Kentucky Coal Company, 2,000 tons per week for 18 months, at $2.68, Sept. 23, 1955;

TVA Requisition 364, Nashville Coal Company, 1500 tons per week for 30 months, at $2.31, Sept. 23, 1955;

TVA Requisition 364, Nashville Coal Company, 2,000 tons per week for 12 months at $2.72, Sept. 23, 1955;

TVA Requisition 364, Nashville Coal Company, [78] 1,500 tons per week for 18 months at $2.49, Sept. 23, 1955;

TVA Requisition 11180, West Kentucky Coal Company, 3,000 tons per week for 36 months, at $2.80 July 12, 1956;

TVA Requisition 11180, Nashville Coal Company, 1500 tons per week for 12 months, at $3.21, Nov. 16, 1956;

TVA Requisition 23923, Nashville Coal Company, 4,000 tons per week for 36 months at $2.58, Oct. 24, 1957;

TVA Requisition 23923, Nashville Coal Company, 1,000 tons per week for 36 months, at $2.54, Oct. 24, 1957;

TVA Requisition 23923, Nashville Coal Company, 2,000 tons per week for 15 months, at $2.75, Oct. 24, 1957;

TVA Requisition 99095, Nashville Coal Company, 6,000 tons per week for 24 months, at a barge delivered price at Johnsonville of $3.95, May 20, 1958;

TVA Requisition 25, West Kentucky Coal Company, 5,000 tons per week for 18 months, at $2.66, May 5, 1959.

West Kentucky became the second largest shipper of coal to the TVA system. Several of the immediate competitors of that company in the west Kentucky field followed the lead of West Kentucky Coal Company with low bids, but generally less frequently and for smaller tonnage.

While this was going on UMW pledged $5,200,000.00 [79] of its assets for a loan by the National Bank of Washington to West Kentucky Coal Company, September 21, 1956, for capital to expand the company's operations.

According to Mr. Kampmeier the price of steam coal in the West Kentucky field has been lower than in any other of the TVA supplying coal fields. Using statistics from the Federal Power Commission, Mr. Kampmeier pointed out that the average price for steam coal in western Kentucky District 9 was 12.56 cents per million BTU. In the eastern Kentucky, northern Tennessee, southwest Virginia [*842] and southern West Virginia District 8, it was 14.34 cents per million. In Illinois District 10, it was 15.03 cents per million. In Ohio District 4, it was 15.20 cents per million. In Indiana District 11, it was 15.56 cents per million and in southeastern Tennessee-Alabama District 13 it was 15.82 cents per million. (The foregoing cost evaluations were f.o.b. the mines.) The average f.o.b. mine price for steam coal in western Kentucky according to Mr. Kampmeier was $2.95. Although TVA was an integrated system, with respect to the purchasing of coal for delivery to various plants of the system, TVA officials made it clear to the [80] operators in Tennessee that if the Tennessee price was not competitive with the price at other plants the Tennessee market would be curtailed.

The history of Kingston pricing is:

Bid Opening	Average cost per million BTU (in cents)	Typical Price per ton FOB mine	Company receiving this price	National Average price of Coal
4/15/54	$18.65	$3.48	Royal Fuel	1954-$4.52
11/26/54	18.27	3.55	Capitol
4/28/55	18.10	3.45	Ramco	1955-$4.50
8/30/55	19.04	3.41	G & R
12/21/55	22.16	3.88	Dean
2/21/56	23.49	4.15	Straight Fork	1956-$4.82
8/26/56	21.71	3.70	Pemberton
11/16/56	21.69	3.72	Kay
2/26/57	21.41	3.80	Straight Fork	1957-$5.08
5/8/57	20.93	3.90	Clinchfield
6/6/57	20.04	3.84	Holmes Darst
8/14/57	No Awards
10/24/57	19.80	3.23	Dean

Bid Opening	Average cost per million BTU (in cents)	Typical Price per ton FOB mine	Company receiving this price	National Average price of Coal
5/20/58	20.18	3.55	Whitley Strip	1958-$4.86
10/7/58	20.24	3.45	Southern C & C
12/9/58	20.49	3.49	Straight Fork
2/5/59	20.80	3.43	Dean	1959-$4.77

The problem with the Tennessee field in its competition with the west Kentucky field was in the difference in productivity. Mr. Kampmeier stated: "A southern Tennessee miner may produce 10 [81] tons per day and a western Kentucky miner 20 tons. On this basis, the labor cost in a ton of Tennessee coal is about twice as high, perhaps as much as $2.50 a ton versus $1.25, plus 40 cents in each case for the UMW Welfare Fund. Such a difference is, indeed, a serious matter to the southern Tennessee producer, especially as wages increase. The April 1 increase of 80 cents a day is equivalent to about 8 cents per ton in southern Tennessee versus 4 cents per ton in western Kentucky."

With costs of production being raised year after year under the UMW contract, the Tennessee producers could not recover these increasing costs from the market, even though they had some of the largest steam plants in the country at their door steps.

Relationship of West Kentucky Coal Company and Peabody Coal Company in the Marketing of Coal

The West Kentucky Coal Company produces its coal from underground mines. [*843] West Kentucky Coal Company has been engaged in the mining of coal since 1904, operating in Hopkins and Muhlenberg Counties, and also having operated at some times in Union County, with additional property in Webster County, Kentucky. Nashville Coal Company, acquired by [82] West Kentucky Coal Company on September 13, 1955, likewise operated in Muhlenberg, Hopkins and Union Counties in West Kentucky. West Kentucky Coal Company sells to middle western utilities, chemical, cement and other industrial users, to an important Canadian clientele and to a strong group of retail and wholesale distributors to the commercial and domestic markets in the Great Lakes area, as well as in the south. Its primary market has been in the northwest, in the Chicago area and Iowa and Wisconsin. Other principal areas are western Tennessee and western Kentucky, in addition to Canadian customers to whom the coal is shipped through a terminal in Chicago.

Peabody Coal Company produces most of its coal by strip mining in the states of Oklahoma, Missouri, Illinois, Indiana, western Kentucky and Ohio. It has one large underground mine at Springfield, Illinois. It formerly sold its coal through its sales subsidiary, Southern Coal Company, but in recent years has abandoned that agency and sells itself, through its own sales department. Peabody serves most of the important electric utilities in the middle western area, including the Commonwealth and Edison System. The company has [83] approximately 30 mines.

There are close operating and selling relationships between Peabody Coal Company and West Kentucky Coal Company. West Kentucky Coal Company, with enormous reserves of coal in the western part of Kentucky, leases land to Peabody, as well as to other companies, and retains an option to sell the coal produced on that land. West Kentucky Coal Company and Peabody Coal Company buy and sell substantial quantities of coal to and from each other.

The exchange of coal between the two companies for application on particular contracts is exemplified in the Tampa and Memphis utility markets. When West Kentucky Coal Company acquired Nashville Coal Company, it also acquired the Nashville contract with Tampa Electric Company, which called for the shipment of coal by Nashville to Tampa Electric Company on a long term contract for the requirements of the generating plant at Tampa. After the acquisition of Nashville Coal Company, West Kentucky spent many months of intensive work getting the facilities ready to handle the coal by the water shipment to Tampa. When time came to ship on the contract West Kentucky reneged on this contract and Tampa Electric Company brought a [84] suit against the Company. West Kentucky took the position that the contract was invalid under the antitrust law because it had a monopoly on requirements of the electric company. There were factors in the contract that were not satisfactory to West Kentucky Coal Company. It developed that the company was disappointed in the prospects for back haul of phosphate by water on the barges that brought in the coal. Also, West Kentucky desired to substitute an escalation clause that would tie increases of coal price to the rapid UMW contract cost increases. When West Kentucky renounced the contract, it was ready to ship the coal after spending many months in getting prepared. Other shippers would have to go through the same period of preparation. In this situation, the coal from the Uniontown mine of West Kentucky, which was supposed to supply the contract, was largely diverted to the TVA spot market. After this development an arrangement was made by Tampa to obtain coal from the eastern Tennessee and east Kentucky area by rail, with a greatly reduced rail rate having been worked out. Under this arrangement Phillips Brothers Coal Company started shipping coal to Tampa. Then Peabody [85] Coal Company came into the picture and obtained a term contract for supplying Tampa Electric Company. [*844] It resulted that West Kentucky leased its water coal handling facilities in Louisiana to Peabody and West Kentucky was to share in the contract to the extent of one-half of the tonnage. After the Peabody contract Phillips Brothers Coal Company lost out in the Tampa market.

When the bid invitations came out from the Memphis Power plant contract for coal, according to the sales representative of Peabody Coal Company, there possibly were discussions about the invitations between Peabody, West Kentucky Coal Company, Pittsburgh-Midway Coal Company and Kirkpatrick Coal Company: "We might possibly have because there was a lot of negotiations down there selling it to them. If they could have, they would have bought the coal without submitting it to bids. They were just in that mood, and they made it clear - but at any rate, I don't recall discussing it or not. We might have. It would be a little natural down there we run together down there and have a drink or two together and we get pretty talkative. We might have talked to any of them. The City Manager was going to buy [86] some coal, and we hoped we could get it and you discuss what you do and what they do - the competition was so hot that they split it. We had so many friends behind us all that they split it up." Both Peabody and West Kentucky obtained contracts at Memphis and Peabody is applying coal from West Kentucky Coal Company on its Memphis contract.

It is mentioned above that substantial quantities of Uniontown coal were diverted by West Kentucky Coal Company from the Tampa contract to the spot market of TVA. As stated above, the spot market of TVA was designed for small amounts of coal to fill in on requirements of plants where term contracts did not meet the requirements. In the years 1956, 1957 and 1958, including the period that the Uniontown mine coal was going into the spot market, West Kentucky and Peabody were bidding large quantities of coal on the TVA spot market and West Kentucky Coal Company, particularly, was doing this. An analysis was made of the spot award sheets of TVA and a tabulation was made of the extraordinarily large spot bids filed by West Kentucky and Nashville Coal Companies, Pittsburgh-Midway and Peabody Coal Company and Debardeleben and Truax-Traer Coal Companies. [87] (The bids of the last two companies did not show dropping prices.) These were the only operating companies that repeatedly bid over 10,000 tons on the spot market with the exception of Old Ben Coal Company which bid a few times in 1958. West Kentucky and Nashville Coal Companies were bidding extraordinarily large quantities on the TVA spot market in comparison with all other companies. Their bids show a downward trend in the pricing and a number of contracts were awarded them on the basis of their bids for these extraordinarily large tonnages.

It was inevitable that this kind of bidding would have a depressing effect on the spot market of TVA. The kind of bidding the West Kentucky and Nashville companies were engaging in on the spot market is shown by the size of their actual sales on the spot market. As examples: In September, 1957, TVA purchased from Nashville and West Kentucky Coal Companies 38,000 tons of coal on the spot market. TVA purchased 38,000 tons from these companies in October, 1957. TVA purchased 60,000 tons from these companies in December, 1957, on the spot market. TVA purchased 66,000 tons of coal from these companies on the spot market in January, 1958. In [88]

May of 1958 TVA purchased 36,500 tons from these companies. In June, 1958, TVA purchased 28,000 tons of coal on the spot market from these companies.

A comparison of the average cost of coal at the Kingston Plant for the term and spot contracts shows that the spot market was depressed considerably below the term market. Bearing in mind that [*845] a difference in cost per million BTU of one full cent is roughly equivalent to a difference of 25 cents per ton in price, this comparison is as follows:

Term Bid Opening Date	Term Average Cost per Million BTU (in cents)	Spot Average Cost per million BTU this month (in cents)
2/21/56	23.49	22.08 23.43 (April)
8/26/56	21.71	20.06
11/16/56	21.69	19.54
2/26/57	21.41	19.61
5/9/57	20.93	18.98
6/6/57	20.04	19.17
8/14/57	No awards	18.50
10/24/57	19.80	17.92
1/30/58	19.88	18.71
5/20/58	20.18	19.02
10/7/58	20.24	18.45
12/9/58	20.49	18.31
2/5/59	20.80	18.78

TVA took into consideration the advantages of this kind of a market (the spot market) to small coal producers in establishing the spot bidding program. However, the UMW attacked the spot bid program of TVA. Mr. Lewis, [89] in the 1956 Convention, charged that the spot market program was an effort to avoid the minimum wage under the Walsh-Healey Act (which permitted an exemption of contracts for less than $10,000.00 in amount) and an effort to buy coal at a price less than what the "organized mines" were charging. Mr. Lewis said that this kind of program was "anti-social, un-American and double-dealing" on the part of TVA.

Drive Staged by West Kentucky Coal Company and Peabody Coal Company in 1959 and Later Years for the TVA Market

On February 19, 1959, the Pleasant View mine of West Kentucky Coal Company worked out of its No. 11 seam and drove down into the underlying No. 9 seam, opening this lower seam for operations on October 14, 1959. On July 27, 1959, West Kentucky Coal Company submitted a bid under TVA requisition 27, proposing to sell 16,347 tons per week for fifteen years from the Pleasant View mine, at a price of $2.90. TVA awarded a contract on this bid evaluating the bid for shipment to Shawnee Steam Plant. This was the West Kentucky Coal Company T-3 contract. As stated, the price of this coal was $2.90, which was substantially higher than the earlier contracts of West Kentucky [90] with the TVA, as tabulated above.

After the award of the above contract, Mr. Hoffman, Vice-President for sales of West Kentucky Coal Company, approached TVA with respect to the selling of additional coal from the Pleasant View Mine. At the bid opening of February 9, 1960, under requisition 32, West Kentucky Coal Company filed a bid for the sale of coal from the Pleasant View Mine in the amount of 34,616 tons per week for a period up to 15 years, at the same price of $2.90. This time the other producers in the middle western field bid under West Kentucky's price of $2.90 and West

Kentucky obtained no contract on this bid. At the same time West Kentucky bid at the same price for the same mine, in much smaller quantities and a much shorter term, without success. [*846] West Kentucky Coal Company allowed TVA to keep this bid alive for a full year to be accepted at the option of TVA.

There ensued discussions concerning a much lower rail rate to the eastern TVA plants from the western Kentucky field to be negotiated by the rail carrier, L&N Railroad, with TVA under Section 22 of the Interstate Commerce Act. Discussions centering on the Widows Creek Plant were going on about this [91] proposed rate for six months to a year before it was finally made official on August 29, 1960, effective October 1, 1960. The new rate for shipments was established at a flexible scale of $1.45 per ton, to $1.60 per ton, depending upon the tonnage carried on the L&N to the Widows Creek Plant. The amount of tonnage to determine which rate applied would include the coal shipped on the L&N from the southern Tennessee field to the Widows Creek Plant. Before this rate, the lowest transportation cost from the West Kentucky fields to Widows Creek was $2.07 by using combined rail and barge movement through Grand Rivers, Kentucky.

Officials of West Kentucky Coal Company had discussed with the L&N Railroad this change in the rates to Widows Creek and also new rates to Kingston and the sales department of West Kentucky Coal Company had been very active in bringing about the Widows Creek Section 22 rate. West Kentucky Coal Company wanted to take credit for this reduced rate with TVA. In later testimony, Mr. Eastin, President of West Kentucky Coal Company, repeated that West Kentucky Coal Company considered that getting rate reductions was normal and that they wanted to get credit for this [92] rate with TVA and that is what they did with respect to this Section 22 rate. At the time of the taking of Mr. Eastin's prior deposition the West Kentucky Coal Company had bids in with the TVA and this coal might be awarded at Widows Creek if the rate were established. About that time or on October 6, 1960, TVA had made awards based upon the bids filed and opened on September 1, 1960, and West Kentucky Coal Company was not successful on that bidding, it having bid 19,250 tons per week for five years, with an option for an additional 19,250 tons a week from the Pleasant View Mine but this time the bid went up to $3.00 on its price from the previous $2.90 figure.

At the February 14, 1961 bid opening West Kentucky Coal Company again filed a $2.90 bid for the Pleasant View Mine for 19,250 tons per week, for ten years, with an option to TVA to elect to take an additional 19,250 tons per week for nine years by notice given prior to January 1, 1962. TVA elected to take the coal in the amount of 19,250 tons per week for ten years at the Gallatin Steam Plant. At the time TVA did not need the extra 19,250 tons per week and left the option dangling. Mr. Kampmeier pointed out that TVA had [93] the right to move the coal under the West Kentucky Coal Company contracts to any other plant besides the plant at which the contracts were awarded. On December 29, 1961, TVA elected to take the extra 19,250 tons under the West Kentucky bid option.

At the bid openings of September 19, 1962, West Kentucky Coal Company obtained another contract for 9,700 tons per week for ten years at the $2.90 price from the Pleasant View Mine and the East Diamond Mine. The East Diamond Mine had worked out the No. 11 seam on December 23, 1960 and it opened the underlying No. 9 seam on July 25, 1962.

At the bid opening of October 15, 1963, West Kentucky Coal Company obtained another contract for 10,000 tons per week for ten years at the price of $2.90.

By 1964, under the foregoing contracts West Kentucky Coal Company was shipping to the TVA System 3,900,000 tons per year at the $2.90 price. Mr. Hicks points out that with the addition of the Memphis Steam Plant to the TVA System the total annual shipments to TVA from West Kentucky Coal Company aggregated 4,240,000 tons.

In the meantime, Peabody Coal Company had been greatly increasing its participation in the TVA market. For the July 27, 1959 bid [94] opening, TVA issued an invitation in routine fashion stating [*847] its intention to buy up to approximately 3,000,000 tons of coal a year and that it would consider bids for terms up to twenty years. In a lower paragraph there was language to the effect that in addition to the foregoing, TVA would consider other bids if operators wished to offer tonnage for a starting date later than that specified. Peabody Coal Company was the only company that responded to the language in the lower paragraph and filed a bid for $2.95 under this language. As a result of this invitation and bid, and as noted previously, a contract was entered into calling for the shipment of 65,000,000 tons of coal by Peabody Coal Company to TVA for a new steam plant, one of the largest ones in the system, to be established by TVA adjacent to Peabody's property from which the coal was to be mined. The tonnage of 65,000,000 was to be shipped at a rate of 80,000 tons per week until the contract was completed. This would mean an annual shipment to TVA of 4,000,000 tons for this one contract.

At the same bid opening of July 27, 1959, Peabody Coal Company received another contract awarded September 30, 1959 [95] for a five year term for 20,000 tons per week. This meant an additional 1,000,000 tons per year from Peabody Coal Company to the TVA system until October of 1964.

In addition, on the bid opening of July 17, 1961, Peabody Coal Company received a contract dated August 10, 1961, for a three-year term of 3,000 tons per week, making an additional 150,000 tons a year to expire in August of 1964. Also, at the bid opening of December 7, 1961, for a three-year term for 1,500 tons per week, making 75,000 tons annual shipments to expire in December, 1964. Then at the bid opening of October 15, 1963, Peabody Coal Company received a contract dated December 12, 1963 for a ten-year term for 15,000 tons per week, making an annual shipment of 750,000 tons. Thus the total shipments that Peabody Coal Company had to the TVA System through most of the year 1964 was at the rate of 5,975,000 tons per year.

Adding the annual shipments of West Kentucky Coal Company in 1964, of 4,240,000 tons to the Peabody Coal Company annual shipment of 5,975,000 tons, would make an annual shipment of 10,215,000 tons per year for these two companies alone. In 1963, the total amount of coal received by all of the TVA [96] plants was 20,717,000 tons. Accordingly, Peabody Coal Company and West Kentucky Coal Company together had built up a tonnage to TVA of approximately 50% of the total receipts.

In addition, Pittsburgh-Midway Coal Company secured a contract under the bid opening of June 19, 1963, for 12,500 tons a week for fifteen years; the contract under the bid opening of October 15, 1963 for 12,500 tons for fifteen years; a contract under the bid opening of October 20, 1960 for 5,000 tons per week for ten years. These contracts aggregated 1,500,000 tons per year for Pittsburgh-Midway Coal Company in the TVA market for many years into the future.

And, also, Kentucky Oak Mining Company now provides 2,000,000 tons per year to the TVA market by reason of contracts one of which was awarded on the bid opening of July 27, 1959, for 8,500 tons per week for ten years and on bid opening of February 20, 1962, another contract for 30,000 tons per week for 15 years. This is the company that acquired leases in the Hazard field of East Kentucky from North Fork Coal Company after North Fork received a loan of $1,500,000.00 from the National Bank of Washington, secured by pledge of equivalent assets of United [97] Mine Workers for the purpose of accumulating the leaseholds in the Hazard field.

Thus, between 1959 and 1964 the four companies, West Kentucky Coal Company and Nashville, Peabody, Pittsburgh-Midway, and Kentucky Oak, took approximately 13,700,000 tons of TVA's annual requirements of approximately 21,000,000 tons, leaving the balance to be scrambled for by the many smaller companies for whom TVA was the principal market. The effect on prices at Kingston [*848] in this period is shown by the average term contract costs at that plant as follows:

Bid Opening Date	Average Cost per Million BTU (in cents)
5/5/59	21.57
7/27/59	21.62
9/17/59	20.96
2/9/60	20.08
9/1/60	No awards
2/14/61	18.97

Bid Opening Date	Average Cost per Million BTU (in cents)
7/17/61	18.55
12/7/61	No awards
2/20/62	18.85
9/18/62	18.65
1/15/63	18.72
6/19/63	19.61
10/15/63	No awards
3/3/64	19.36
10/20/64	18.82

Before UMW started making its investments in West Kentucky Coal Company, that Company had a profitable business. It made a profit of $4,645,000.00 in 1950 and a profit of $4,223,000.00 in 1951. Thereafter its profit declined sharply and in 1958 and 1959 it had very substantial operating losses.

Obviously, the [98] West Kentucky Coal Company has concentrated on the TVA market. In 1964, West Kentucky was shipping 4,240,000 of TVA out of a total production of 8,000,000 tons of the company. This was true although the prices the company was getting for coal in the other markets were higher. The annual report of the company for 1958 reported an impressive and diversified roster of customers in the middle western and Canadian markets. This was a true description of the clientele of the company. The Western Kentucky coals are prominent in the mid-western utility market and that market has held up well price-wise. But, West Kentucky Coal Company was concentrating on the TVA market, which was a depressed market considerably below the middle western utility market.

The record contains an exhibit which includes the contracts for the sale of coal by West Kentucky Coal Company six months prior to, and six months after, the making of the February 14, 1961 contract with TVA. It contains the sales of coal in excess of 10,000 tons (excluding retail or domestic coal) to other customers besides TVA for that period of time. There was only one sale of coal in that entire period at a price as low as the 4,000,000 [99] tons that West Kentucky sold to TVA at $2.90. The prices in the exhibit range from $2.90 to $7.15. The exhibit contains 300 sales.

UMW sought to bring out that different coals bring different prices according to size and treatment. But, the last mentioned exhibit includes all kinds of sales, including all of the sales to utilities by West Kentucky Coal Company in the period involved. It includes the sales of carbon coal which is the lowest form of coal and these sales were made at prices ranging from $2.90 to $3.85. But the contracts of West Kentucky Coal Company with TVA did not call for carbon coal. They required run-of-mine coal and carbon coal was not allowed to be shipped on these contracts.

The $2.90 price that West Kentucky charged TVA in the 1959-1963 period was considerably higher than many contracts West Kentucky bid for and secured from TVA in the earlier period when it established itself as the largest shipper to TVA.

The market quotations give no price nearly as low for western Kentucky coal as the $2.90 price, even for screenings. Mr. Eastin testified that the Company was making no analysis of profit on TVA contracts. Mr. Bowden, Vice-President in charge of [100] sales, testified that he knew the prices were low.

Through all of this, UMW held securities representing the control of the company. Through the downward spiral of the West Kentucky profits, the sales department of West Kentucky was given an absolutely free hand to conduct the enormous low-priced sales to TVA.

[*849] When West Kentucky Coal Company acquired Nashville Coal Company it inherited from the latter a contract with Louisville Gas and Electric Company under which Louisville bought coal from West Kentucky Coal Company at a price originally at $3.21 but which raised by escalation to $3.55. Louisville owned the Cherry Hill mine and under the contract the West Kentucky Coal Company was obligated to sell as sales agent 200,000 tons of the Cherry Hill coal at a price 15 cents higher than the price charged Louisville for the coal shipped by West Kentucky to Louisville. In August and September of 1960, substantial quantities of the Cherry Hill coal were applied on the TVA contracts of West Kentucky and the price that West Kentucky received under the TVA contracts for this coal was approximately $39,000.00 less than the price that West Kentucky paid to Louisville for this [101] coal. In August through December of 1962 considerable quantities of the Cherry Hill coal were applied by West Kentucky on the TVA contracts and the loss suffered on this coal amounted to approximately $111,000.00.

The West Kentucky witnesses maintained that the Cherry Hill coal was difficult to sell, even at the $2.90 price. However, the Cherry Hill tonnage was shipped to Louisville Gas and Electric Company and also was sold to the general market, industries, retail dealers, etc. The larger sizes of the Cherry Hill coal were screened off and sold at higher prices and the evidence contained at least one sale of the residual unwashed carbon coal from Cherry Hill, sold in the Louisville market for $2.95. Moreover, it is to be observed that West Kentucky was willing to raise the quantity of the Cherry Hill coal for which it was obligated from 200,000 tons to 400,000 tons in 1958.

The principal mine of West Kentucky shipping on the TVA contracts made in 1959 and later years was the Pleasant View mine. This mine opened up the No. 9 seam October 14, 1959, after the July 19, 1959 TVA contract. In the remaining three months of 1959, the monthly cost per ton of the Pleasant View coal, [102] including production and administrative costs, ranged from $2.90 to $3.03. The TVA price was $2.90. This is the cost experience that West Kentucky had to rely on when it made its February, 1960 bid to TVA at the same $2.90 price, for 34,616 tons per week for fifteen years. The September 1, 1960 unsuccessful bid of West Kentucky to TVA for 34,650 tons per week was filed at a price of $3.00 and the term was shortened from three to five years. The average cost per ton at the Pleasant View mine for the entire year of 1960 was $2.925. And this was the cost experience that West Kentucky had when it filed its February, 1961 bid at the $2.90 price for 19,250 tons per week for ten years and option tonnage for an additional 19,250 tons per week for nine years and this was a bid that was successful. In 1961 the average cost at the Pleasant View mine was $2.697 and in 1962 it was $2.72. After that the cost of the coal went up at the Pleasant View mine to $3.21. In the year 1963 the cost went up to $3.40 per ton at Pleasant View. On May 29, 1965 the Pleasant View mine was closed.

The West Kentucky Company witnesses maintained that the Pleasant View mine ran into difficult conditions.

[103] After the 1959 and 1961 TVA contracts West Kentucky Coal Company began to fall behind in its Welfare Fund obligations. The Company went to United Mine Workers and obtained a series of loans aggregating $900,000.00 to maintain the currency of its Welfare Fund obligations.

On September 23, 1963, UMW took a loss of $8,000,000.00 in the West Kentucky venture. UMW took the collateral held under the Eaton loans and cancelled the loans because Mr. Eaton could not pay the amounts due and the stock became the property of UMW which was sold to Island Creek Coal Company.

West Kentucky Coal Company, although it had a large number of diversified customers in other areas, continually [*850] concentrated on placing the bulk of its tonnage on the TVA term and spot markets at low prices.

Plaintiffs insist that the foregoing facts establish a conspiracy among TVA and some of the large coal operators, including West Kentucky Coal Company, to take over the TVA market and that one of the methods used was to make bids on spot market awards at prices that were very low and sometimes below cost of production for the purpose of squeezing the small operators, including plaintiffs, out of the market [104] and that they were largely successful in their purpose; that UMW financed the West Kentucky Coal Company while it was engaged in its nefarious methods to capture the TVA market.

The defendant says that the following facts show that West Kentucky and its alleged co-conspirators followed accepted business practices in submitting bids and they did not bid the low prices or prices below cost; and did not submit bids to depress coal prices for the predatory purpose of eliminating any of their competitors from the market.

1952-1962 Period Consolidation Coal Company

During most of the period material to this case Consolidation Coal Company was the largest coal company in the United States. It was never, however, very important in the TVA market. Though TVA officials met with high officials of Consolidation Coal Company to encourage that Company to engage in experimental work, the Company failed to show much interest in the TVA as a market for its coal. Consolidation Coal Company acquired Pocahontas Coal Company during this period and prior to that Pocahontas had acquired the Moore mining properties in Anderson County, Tennessee. Coal has been sold from these mines to TVA, though [105] not on an extensive basis. Consolidation and Pocahontas together supplied TVA with less than 1% of TVA's coal during the period 1952-1962.

Island Creek Coal Company

This company played no part in the TVA market until its acquisition of West Kentucky Coal Company in 1963.

Peabody Coal Company

Peabody Coal Company was not a significant supplier of coal to TVA during the early 1950's. Upon its merger with Sinclair Coal Company, following which the Kelce Brothers became the managers of the company, Peabody became an important supplier of TVA coal. The company evidenced interest in responding to the new markets created by power systems, including TVA, and it has since expanded rapidly in terms of production, sales and earnings. The amount of coal supplied by this company grew from less than 5% of TVA's supply to 10% or more by 1962. Also, during this period TVA negotiated a very large contract with Peabody Coal Company for the supply of coal to the Paradise Steam Plant. Deliveries began on this contract after 1962.

The Pittston Company (Clinchfield Coal Company)

This company has been of moderate importance to the TVA's program. This company has operated a mine near [106] Monterey during much of this period and also it developed a major mine, the Moss No. 3 Mine, in western Virginia during this period. One of the reasons the John Sevier Steam Plant was located in upper east Tennessee was because it made Virginia mines available to TVA. Clinchfield supplied TVA substantial quantities of coal from its Moss No. 3 mine during a portion of this period. It was understood, however, that Clinchfield had developed its Moss Mine largely to supply a power plant built by the Appalachian Power Company on the upper Clinch River in Virginia and accordingly TVA did not obtain long term contracts for coal from Clinchfield. Upon development of the Appalachian Power Company's market Clinchfield's western Virginia mine has diminished greatly in importance to TVA. Clinchfield supplied approximately 5% of TVA's requirements during the 1952-1962 period.

[*851] West Kentucky Coal Company and Nashville Coal Company

During the early part of the period, Nashville Coal Company was owned by Mr. Justin Potter. Potter was "philosophically opposed" to TVA and sponsored newspaper advertisements criticizing TVA. His company nevertheless supplied approximately 5% of TVA's [107] requirements prior to the sale of Nashville Coal Company to West Kentucky in the fall of 1955.

Mr. Kampmeier described West Kentucky Coal Company as being quite different from Nashville in that it was a more conventional type operation. West Kentucky Coal Company, at the time TVA's coal market began to grow rapidly, had "about as large, and not fully loaded, coal mining capacity as any potential supplier we had" and it was important in TVA's coal supply picture.

Mr. Kampmeier termed the bidding practices of West Kentucky as somewhat less imaginative than those of Nashville and he stated that West Kentucky "did not seem to me to be as interested in the new type market that the power systems were creating as compared to the older type of markets as some of the other companies."

After its acquisition of Nashville Coal Company, West Kentucky Coal Company and Nashville combined supplied between 5% and 10% of TVA's coal requirements. Its percentage has recently grown to approximately 17% because of long term contracts awarded to West Kentucky. West Kentucky is the second largest supplier of TVA at the present time. Peabody's Paradise contract, together with its other contracts, makes [108] Peabody the largest supplier of coal to TVA.

Pittsburgh-Midway Coal Company

This company supplied approximately 2% of TVA's coal requirements during the 1952-62 period. In this regard, Pittsburgh-Midway compared with several companies, including General Coal Company (which actually supplied more than 2%), Tennessee Products and Chemical Corporation, Old Ben Coal Company, Freemon Coal Mining Company, Lafayette Coal Company, Coiltown Mining Company, Bell and Zoller Coal Company, United Electric Coal Company and Tennessee Consolidated Coal Company.

Kampmeier observed no efforts on the part of any of the alleged conspirators to hold down the price of coal to TVA. To the contrary, it was observed that these suppliers tried to get the best price they could. He believed it was "quite obvious" that this was the case.

West Kentucky Coal Company's Shipments to TVA

The following table shows the annual shipments made by West Kentucky to TVA and also the percentage of TVA coal supplied by West Kentucky during the period material to this case.

Year	TVA Total Receipts	Tonnage Shipped by West Kentucky & Nashville Coal Inc.	Percent of Company Shipments to Total
1954	10,196,290	978,824	9.6
1955	14,377,000	1,298,923	9.0
1956	20,354,000	1,511,987	7.4
1957	19,581,879	963,384	4.9
1958	17,033,466	1,094,396	6.4
1959	17,808,900	1,336,870	7.5
1960	18,886,000	1,575,000	8.3
1961	18,674,000	1,681,000	9.0
1962	19,172,000	2,000,000	10.4
1963	22,141,000	3,394,000	15.3
1964	22,847,000	3,700,000	16.2

[109] [*852] The Nashville acquisition occurred effective October 1, 1955, and hence the sales of that company are included beginning as of that date. It is significant that West Kentucky's participation was at its lowest point in 1957 and 1958 - years in which plaintiffs claim it was depressing the market. In 1957 West Kentucky's deliveries to TVA dropped by one-third, or 550,000 tons. This drop accounted for roughly three-fourths of TVA's decline in shipments for the year 1957.

The plaintiff coal companies have pointed to the mine prices of bids offered by West Kentucky Coal Company during the period 1954-1959 as evidence of plaintiffs' contention that West Kentucky bids were intended to depress. These prices are compared with prices of coal of a much higher quality coal sold in a market where it enjoyed a substantial transportation advantage.

The bids submitted by West Kentucky during the material period were within the limits of existing competition.

Coal offered the TVA from the western Kentucky field was at lower mine prices than that offered from east Tennessee and southern Tennessee. The western Kentucky coal, however, is inferior in quality to Tennessee coals, averaging [110] 11,800 BTUs as opposed to over 13,000 BTUs, or a difference in quality of more than 60 cents per ton on the TVA market.

None of the western Kentucky mines competed at the steam plants at which the plaintiff coal companies sold their coal. The western Kentucky companies were not competitive at those plants (Kingston and John Sevier) because of transportation costs.

Though TVA is an integrated system, the price of coal offered by West Kentucky and other mines in that field did not directly or materially affect the quantity of coal purchased by TVA for use at Kingston. The competition among east Tennessee mines, and not prices charged in fields not serving the eastern steam plants had the immediate and direct bearing on the price at those plants. The price of coal offered by West Kentucky was not fixed for any purpose other than legitimate business purposes.

West Kentucky and Nashville Bids on the TVA Spot Market, 1956-1958

Plaintiffs state that in 1956 the prices on the TVA spot market were at substantially the same level as term market prices and that this fact is evidence of a conspiracy. The 1956 prices on the spot market at Kingston were at an exceptionally high level [111] because of a critical but temporary shortage at that plant and once the shortage was overcome, the curtailment in purchases by TVA resulted in the decline in prices.

The decline in the spot market began in 1956. No West Kentucky coal was sold on the spot market in that year.

Normally the fluctuations of coal the TVA purchases on the spot market is not a significant factor in the operation of the TVA plants.

Bids made on the spot market by West Kentucky in 1957 and 1958 were evaluated at the Colbert and Shawnee plants and never at the Kingston or John Sevier plants.

The bids on the spot market made by West Kentucky from the Uniontown mine in 1957 and 1958 were made for lawful purposes and do not evidence a conspiracy. There were 26 such bids over the period February 1957 through March 1958. Of these, six were successful. On the declining spot market West Kentucky did not lead but followed the market and on the few occasions it was a successful bidder, it was the highest, or nearly so, of the successful bidders.

A review of the Uniontown bids shows that the first eight of these bids submitted from Uniontown ranged well above the market price per million BTUs. (1 cent per million [112] BTUs is about $0.25 per ton.) Its last bid of these eight unsuccessful bids was at $3.70 per ton and was evaluated at Shawnee at 16.68 cents. Its ninth bid was at the same price ($3.70) and was successful, West Kentucky quoting the highest price of the successful [*853] bidders. Its tenth, eleventh and twelfth bids, also at $3.70 per ton, were unsuccessful. Its thirteenth bid was at $3.70 but with an improved guarantee, resulting in an evaluation of 16.49 cents, and was successful. West Kentucky's bid was again the highest successful bid. Its fourteenth and fifteenth bids continued at $3.70 and were unsuccessful. Its sixteenth and seventeenth bids were also at $3.70 and at the same evaluation, but were successful. In the former it was the highest successful bidder; in the latter there were several lower bids to Shawnee and TVA made awards on these lower bids but placed the coal to other plants. These bids were followed by two unsuccessful bids at the same price ($3.70) and evaluation. The highest successful bidder on the latter was evaluated at 16.16 cents, and on its next bid (of December 12, 1957) West Kentucky reduced its price to $3.62 with an evaluation of 16.16 cents. [113] Its bid was successful, being the second highest of all offered. There were no unsuccessful bidders at Shawnee on this occasion. Its next bid, made at the same price, was unsuccessful. Its next bid at $3.58 per ton, or 15.99 cents, was successful and on this occasion 73,900 tons were bid unsuccessfully as low as 16.01 cents. Its remaining bids, respectively at $3.58, $3.58, $3.55, $4.00, $4.00 and $4.55 were unsuccessful.

The bids reviewed above were motivated by a need for sales. West Kentucky's Hoffman testified that the spot bids from Uniontown were made "to relieve the situation at our Uniontown Mine . . . until such time as I could obtain a term contract." He denied that they were made to harm any producer.

West Kentucky acquired the Uniontown mine in October 1955 as a part of the Nashville Coal Company acquisition. Uniontown, designed to produce 1,700,000 to 1,800,000 tons annually, was a barge mine without rail connections - the only mine of that type owned by West Kentucky. West Kentucky owned its own barge equipment and bid TVA a delivered price from Uniontown to enable it to use that equipment.

As a part of its 1955 Nashville transaction, West Kentucky acquired [114] two contracts which contemplated shipment from Uniontown. Both contracts, because of their termination, are of significance in this case. One was a three-year TVA term contract for 350,000 tons a year. This contract expired in June, 1957. The other was a twenty-year total requirements contract with Tampa Electric Company providing for shipment of at least 450,000 tons per year. In April, 1957, West Kentucky advised Tampa it would not perform the contract because, in West Kentucky's view, it was void under the antitrust laws. During the spring and summer of 1957, while negotiating for settlement of the contract controversy, West Kentucky shipped 118,000 tons from Uniontown to Tampa on spot orders. Settlement negotiations failed and Tampa refused to order further coal from West Kentucky. The loss of sales for the tonnage which had gone to TVA and Tampa and also some barge coal to Chicago through Mount Vernon, Indiana, resulted in West Kentucky's bids on TVA's spot market from Uniontown.

West Kentucky's position in the TVA term market indicates why it was necessary to bid on the spot market:

Year	TVA Coal Receipts	West Kentucky (and Nashville) Shipments	Type Sales	Percent of TVA Market
1954	10,196,290	978,824		9.6
1955	14,377,000	1,298,923		9.0
1956	20,354,000	1,511,987	All Term	7.4
			Includes
1957	19,581,879	963,384	313,000 spot	4.9
1958	17,033,466	1,094,396	198,000 spot	6.4

[115] [*854] These figures show no spot sales by West Kentucky in 1956. They also show a drastic fall in West Kentucky's total sales to TVA in 1957 and 1958. During these years West Kentucky sold less than 900,000 and 600,000 tons, respectively, on TVA's term market as compared with 1956, the year it acquired Nashville.

West Kentucky Profits During the Period 1950-1964

Plaintiffs claim that West Kentucky's profits of over $5,000,000.00 in 1950 before taxes and the decline in profits thereafter show that West Kentucky was losing money on its TVA contracts by reason of its low bids which were made for the predatory purpose of squeezing them out of the market. The evidence indicates that the variations in West Kentucky profits resulted from factors unrelated to predatory pricing.

The following table shows the situation not only in profit, but also in terms of production in tons and sales in tons. It also shows another significant fact in the industry - the decline in national production.

Year	Tons Produc-tion	Tons Sales	Net Income Before Income Taxes	Tons National Production
1950	6,456,136	6,473,135	$5,645,919	516,301,000
1951	5,513,890	5,466,189	4,223,814	533,600,000
1952	5,738,617	5,790,072	3,864,129	466,800,000
1953	5,080,565	5,182,814	2,721,133	457,290,000
1954	4,849,854	4,734,806	1,385,096	392,000,000
1955	9,736,007	12,296,048	1,441,367	470,000,000
1956	9,374,205	12,705,646	2,150,971	500,000,000
1957	7,724,999	8,789,215	1,376,377	490,000,000
1958	6,984,695	7,554,539	(376,516)	405,000,000
1959	7,451,924	7,450,831	435,841	410,000,000
1960	8,438,331	7,717,910	725,705	413,000,000
1961	6,873,850	7,362,058	203,597	403,000,000
1962	6,570,131	7,457,257	327,724	424,000,000
1963	7,226,176	8,135,799	322,449	456,000,000
1964	7,924,807	8,042,357	2,147,311	485,000,000

[116] The explanation for the decline in the early 1950's is found in the testimony of J. W. McMahon, retired vice-president and controller of West Kentucky, and C. M. Hicks, West Kentucky's vice-president and sales manager. Hicks explained that in the late 1940's and early 1950's fifty per cent of West Kentucky's business was highly profitable retail dealer business and 25% was rail coal. Today 7% is retail dealer trade and less than 1% is for rail. This business was at a "fairly high price." West Kentucky also had a decline in sales. Sales, as shown in the annual reports, declined from $26,000,000 in 1950 to $22,000,000 in 1951; to $21,000,000 in 1952; to $18,000,000 in 1953; to $15,000,000 in 1954 and to $17,000,000 in 1955. The downward trend in sales is closely followed by the downward trend in profits, and clearly refutes the assertion of predatory pricing.

The acquisition of Nashville occurred in 1955 but the earnings records of the two companies were kept separately until 1957. Nashville sustained a loss of $604,057 in 1956. The combined income of Nashville and West Kentucky for 1956 was $1,591,000 before taxes.

Several factors explain West Kentucky profits from 1957 to [117] date. The cost of interest in financing the acquisition of [*855] Nashville accounts for much of the difference in earnings before and after the acquisition, as shown in the following table:

Year	Stated Income (Combined)	Interest	Income Before Interest
1956	$1,591,000	$ 492,354	$2,083,354

Year	Stated Income (Combined)	Interest	Income Before Interest
1957	1,376,377	596,346	1,972,723
1958	(367,516)	1,027,532	660,016
1959	435,841	875,083	1,310,924
1960	725,705	739,203	1,463,908
1961	203,597	585,698	789,295
1962	327,724	554,117	881,841
1963	332,449	693,372	1,025,821
1964	* 2,147,000	104,605	2,251,605

Another factor with regard to Nashville was the high cost of operating its mines. One of the five mines acquired, Stoney Point, had to be closed in 1957. Another, the Kirk mine, for which Nashville was sales agent, had to be closed for lack of markets. Still another factor is found in the increased labor costs at [118] Nashville. Prior to its acquisition Nashville paid the Union scale, but obtained nine hours work rather than eight, as would have been the case under the UMW agreement. Extension of the UMW agreement to the Nashville employees resulted in an increase in production costs of over 19 cents per ton.

Plaintiffs have referred to contracts West Kentucky obtained for delivery to plants in the western end of the TVA system as evidence of an intention on its part to willfully depress the TVA market. These contracts called for a mine price of $2.90 a ton. As related below, the availability of this coal to West Kentucky without substantial development costs prompted the bid. The price of $2.90 was competitive, and in fact was frequently rejected by TVA during this period as being too high. The coal was offered by West Kentucky at that price to its other utility customers but by and large it could not be sold at that price elsewhere because of its quality. The price was established by West Kentucky at a figure from which it could make a profit and it has realized a profit thereon.

There are four $2.90 contracts to be considered. These contracts are the T3, T24, T18, and T6 contracts. [119] The T3 contract was obtained under Requisition 27 on bids opened in July of 1959 for delivery of 16,347 tons per week for fifteen years to the Shawnee plant. The first award under the T24 contract was obtained under Requisition 27 on bids opened in February of 1961 for one million tons per year. An award of a second million tons per year was made in January of 1963 under this contract. The T24 contract was made for delivery of coal to Gallatin. The T18 contract, which was for 9,700 tons per week for ten years, was made in April of 1963 for delivery to Shawnee. The T6 contract was made for delivery to Gallatin under TVA Requisition 44 in October of 1963.

The coal offered on these contracts was No. 9 seam mine run coal and the West Kentucky mines known as Pleasant View and East Diamond have been the chief source of supply. As far as West Kentucky is concerned $2.90 is a standard price for that coal and it has been offered to a number of other utilities at the same price.

At the time West Kentucky first offered this coal to TVA in 1959, it was in [*856] the process of working out its No. 11 seam at the Pleasant View mine. It could continue the operation of that mine quite [120] easily and cheaply by driving down 90 feet to the No. 9 seam. To be able to sell the No. 9 coal in this way meant that the company could continue to utilize its tracks, its preparation plant, its loading plant and much of the other items originally constructed in connection with the mine. If the company was unable to sell the coal, these items would be abandoned. The No. 9 coal unprepared does not have a market other than the utility market and even with preparation it does not enjoy a volume market. West Kentucky had tried to sell it as washed coal and had found a preference for No. 11 coal because it was lowest in ash content. West Kentucky arrived at the price of $2.90 after discussions among the operating, sales, accounting, and management people, and it was believed that coal could be mined profitably at that price. There was no intent to depress the market in offering the coal at $2.90.

---

* Includes gain on sale of capital asset of approximately $1,900,000.

After it was awarded its T3 contract in 1959, West Kentucky sought to place more of this coal inasmuch as the Pleasant View mine was capable of producing more coal than its 1959 contract required. West Kentucky wanted to get Pleasant View to maximum production. West Kentucky worked out [121] the No. 11 coal in East Diamond, in December, 1960, and it closed that mine because it did not have a market for its No. 9 coal. East Diamond was reopened in July, 1962, after the contract was finally obtained for the sale of the No. 9 coal from that mine.

The price of $2.90 was fixed by the operating and sales personnel of West Kentucky. During 1959, while the No. 9 seam at Pleasant View was in the development stage and production was at a low level in terms of the potential of the mine, production costs were at $2.729 per ton. Substantially the same production costs were experienced under similar circumstances in 1960. These costs were before a fixed administrative cost of 20 cents per ton, but this cost would have been borne by the company regardless of whether it had had the contract. Operating costs, excluding the 20 cent administrative cost, was $2.497 in 1961 and $2.52 in 1962. In 1963 a bad mine fire at Pleasant View caused operating expenses to increase and this finally required the closure of the mine. Meanwhile the No. 9 seam at East Diamond was opened in 1963. (This mine had been closed in 1960 when it worked out the No. 11 seam, even though the No. 9 coal was [122] available, because it could not then market the coal to TVA or elsewhere at the $2.90 price.) In 1963 the operating cost at East Diamond was $2.13, and in 1964 it was $2.523. Because of the premium provisions of the contracts West Kentucky realized about $3.04 per ton rather than the basic $2.90 per ton on these contracts. Its operating profit on the contracts ranged from a low of 33 cents (except for the period following the fire at Pleasant View before that mine was closed) to a high of 91 cents, before allocation of the fixed administrative costs of 20 cents.

The price offered by West Kentucky on the $2.90 contracts appears to have been a matter of sound business judgment and is not evidence of predatory pricing.

From a competitive standpoint, the $2.90 bids were not, according to TVA's Kampmeier, "Particularly attractive to TVA." This is borne out by a review of the other bids evaluated by TVA at the same time. Most of West Kentucky bids were evaluated at the Shawnee, Johnsonville, Gallatin and Colbert steam plants. After a reduction in the rail rate from western Kentucky to Widows Creek in 1960 the bids were also evaluated at that plant. Hence, West Kentucky's bids were [123] in competition with the bids of other companies evaluated at each of those plants.

Several bids were submitted by West Kentucky of its No. 9 coal. It appears that the No. 9 coal was offered to TVA eight times and the competition was such that the bids resulted in awards on only four occasions. On the occasion of [*857] the first contract (July 27, 1959), West Kentucky was fourth from low of the bidders evaluated at Shawnee. The coal was next offered by West Kentucky on February 9, 1960 at $2.90, but it did not receive an award. At this bidding, West Kentucky's bid was next to last out of twenty bids and sixteen of the twenty bids were at mine prices below $2.90. On the next bid opening (September 1, 1960), West Kentucky again failed to sell its No. 9 coal. Each of the 24 bids showing a mine price was below the mine price offered by West Kentucky with prices ranging from $2.00 to $2.85 per ton. On the next bid opening (February 14, 1961), West Kentucky obtained a contract for delivery to Gallatin where its bid ranked third out of six considered. The two lower bidders offered mine prices of $2.63 and $2.73. Under this contract, TVA obtained 19,250 tons per week with the [124] right to take an additional 19,250 tons per week for the last nine years of the ten year contract. TVA exercised this option in December 1961. Plaintiffs say this option placed a ceiling on the market in the western end of the system. In this regard TVA's Kampmeier observed that "it was very obvious" that West Kentucky "was trying to find somebody to buy the coal at $2.90" and that "any other bidder would know that there wasn't much point in offering coal to TVA at still higher prices as TVA wasn't taking (the West Kentucky) coal." At the next bid opening (September 18, 1962), West Kentucky obtained a contract. It was the highest bidder of the six bidders who received a contract. Its bid, as evaluated, was the equivalent of 12 cents per ton above the next highest. The awards included mine price bids of $2.58, $2.61, $2.67 and $2.73. At the next two bid openings (January 15, 1963 and June 19, 1963), West Kentucky's bid of $2.90 was not successful. On the latter occasion its bid was next to high at every plant at which it was evaluated. At the October 15, 1963 bid opening, the $2.90 bid was successful at Gallatin, by virtue of a reduced freight rate obtained by TVA.

From the [125] foregoing discussion, the Court finds that West Kentucky's $2.90 bids were in line with existing competitive conditions. No inference of predatory pricing may be drawn therefrom.

The Section 22 Rail Rate from the Western Kentucky Field to Widows Creek was Obtained in 1960 by TVA in Direct Negotiations. TVA Sought the Rate to Justify Expansion of the Widows Creek Plant

The so-called Section 22 rate was obtained by TVA from the L&N in August of 1960 from the western Kentucky coal fields to Widows Creek. This rate was an "absolutely essential" factor to a determination to make the second enlargement at Widows Creek.

The Section 22 rate was made on August 29, 1960. The quotation established a rate from western Kentucky of from $1.60 to $1.40 per ton, the exact rate to be determined on a scale based upon total tonnage to Widows Creek from both southern Tennessee and western Kentucky. The sliding scale was negotiated by TVA to include southern Tennessee coal to avoid the possibility of TVA's having to use all western Kentucky coal to obtain thereby a lower transportation rate. The southern Tennessee producers in 1960, in addition to a substantial quality advantage, had rates [126] of 60 and 65 cents, as they had for several years before 1960 and as they have now. Prior to the Section 22 quotation, the L&N rate from western Kentucky to Widows Creek was $2.40, though a $2.07 combined rail and barge rate was available. The $2.07 rate had been used by TVA for evaluation purposes.

It is clear from the record that officials of TVA and L&N negotiated the rate and that West Kentucky and Peabody played no material part in it. Neither did any UMW representative.

Tennessee Products and Tennessee Consolidated joined in a protest of the rate before the Interstate Commerce Commission. TVA and L&N alone defended the rate before the ICC and the rate was upheld.

[*858] The significance of the Section 22 rate is pointed out in a letter written by TVA's Chairman Vogel to Senator Kefauver.

> "Adoption of the suggestion that bids of western Kentucky coal producers be evaluated on the basis of the published rates would not, as Mr. Callis suggests, assure that the government would obtain the benefit of the Section 22 quotation. It would simply price western Kentucky out of the market and leave TVA dependent solely on the southern Tennessee field for supplying a unit [127] which was put at Widows Creek only because western Kentucky coal would be available as a source of supply."

West Kentucky's Contract with the Louisville Gas and Electric Company and its Operation of the Cherry Hill mine

Plaintiffs offered in evidence a contract between Nashville Coal, Inc. and Louisville Gas and Electric Company under which Nashville acquired a quantity of coal from the Cherry Hill mine at approximately $3.55 per ton in 1960 and 1962 for shipment on one of its TVA contracts at $2.85 per ton. Plaintiffs contend that this is evidence of selling below cost and thus evidence which supports their theory of predatory pricing.

The Louisville Gas contract was made by Nashville Coal Company, prior to the 1955 acquisition of West Kentucky, and the contract term extended to March 1, 1963. The agreement contemplated the sale to Louisville Gas of a portion of its requirements of coal, which amounted to a sale of approximately 1,000,000 tons of coal a year. The contract provided for an escalating price which, by the end of the contract term, was $3.55 per ton. The contract had a tie-in provision under which Nashville was responsible for the sale of coal mined [128] at the Cherry Hill mine, a mine owned by Louisville Gas. Nashville was required to pay Louisville Gas $3.70 per ton for the first 200,000 tons and $3.60 per ton thereafter, regardless of where it was sold. This price was paid to Louisville Gas even on Cherry Hill coal shipped from Cherry Hill to Louisville Gas. Most of the Cherry Hill coal was shipped to Louisville Gas and on this coal Nashville received the stipulated price under its contract, and thus realized a "loss" of 10 to 15 cents on each ton. The Cherry Hill coal shipped to Louisville Gas was a part of the approximately 1,000,000 tons a year shipped by Nashville to Louisville Gas. Hence it was necessary for Nashville to absorb that loss out of the profit realized on coal it shipped to Louisville Gas from its own mines.

Some of the Cherry Hill coal for which Nashville paid $3.70 or $3.60 per ton was shipped to purchasers other than Louisville Gas. The record shows that some of this coal was placed at $2.95 to a purchaser other than TVA. In 1960 and 1962 West Kentucky arranged with TVA to place some of the Cherry Hill coal on one of West Kentucky's $2.90 TVA contracts at a price of $2.95 per ton. West Kentucky did not [129] realize a loss on the TVA transaction in that the Cherry Hill coal which went to TVA rather than Louisville Gas was replaced at Louisville Gas by West Kentucky coal at $3.55 per ton which otherwise would have gone to TVA at $2.90. The placement of Cherry Hill coal at a destination other than Louisville Gas permitted West Kentucky to ship more of its coal to Louisville Gas and thereby offset the loss. West Kentucky's Hicks explained, "the dollars and cents were the same thing."

West Kentucky (i.e. Nashville) shipped the Cherry Hill coal to destinations other than Louisville Gas, because Louisville Gas wanted it to. The coal had a limited market and West Kentucky was unable to ship it to TVA in 1961 because TVA didn't want the coal.

Upon the expiration of the Louisville Gas contract in 1963, West Kentucky sought to negotiate a successor contract in either of two ways. West Kentucky offered coal at $3.40 under an agreement which would continue the Cherry Hill arrangement; and it offered coal at $2.90 (the same type coal it was then shipping TVA) without responsibility for the Cherry Hill mine. West Kentucky was [*859] underbid by Peabody Coal Company and lost the account.

[130] The TVA Contract Awarded to Peabody Coal Company at The Paradise Steam Plant - Other Peabody TVA Contracts

Peabody Coal Company is said by plaintiffs to have made a "drive" on the TVA beginning in 1959. Peabody is the largest supplier of coal to TVA. Its position as such results largely from its contract with TVA for delivery of some 4,000,000 tons of coal per year to the Paradise Steam Plant.

The Paradise contract was awarded under Requisition 27 with respect to bids opened July 27, 1959. At that time the Paradise plant was not in existence and the description of plant on the award sheets is shown simply as "new steam plant." The award sheets indicate that deliveries were to begin at the rate of 40,000 tons per week in August 1962 and, after April 6, 1963, in an increasing amount to 80,000 tons a week for a total of 65,000,000 tons. The plant price at which the award was made was $2.95.

The invitation which prompted Peabody's bid resulted from a decision on the part of TVA to build one of its steam plants at the coal supply to eliminate transportation costs or to keep them as low as possible. TVA had made studies and had become satisfied that there were plant sites in Western [131] Kentucky where available reserves would make the plan feasible. Thus, in connection with its invitation of July 1957, TVA invited bids in large quantities in the hope that out of this would come an opportunity to build such a plant. The only bid that resulted, which TVA thought was big enough to justify the kind of plant it contemplated, was the Peabody bid, and since it was the low bidder, TVA was in a position to negotiate on modifications to see if a mutually agreeable contract could be arrived at. As a result of these negotiations a price of $2.95 per ton was agreed upon.

The circumstances under which the Paradise contract with TVA was negotiated by Peabody preclude any inference of conspiracy in regard thereto.

Negotiations between BCOA and UMW Resulting in 1950 Agreement

The 1950 negotiations were carried on under the surveillance of the National Labor Relations Board and the Court, two injunctions having been issued, one at the instance of the NLRB and the other at the instance of the Department of Justice. The injunction directed the Union and the operators to bargain in good faith.

Protective Wage Agreement

Plaintiffs rely strongly on Section A of the Protective [132] Wage Agreement [2] to support [*860] their contention that the Agreement prescribes labor standards outside the bargaining unit to which it applies.

---

[2] A. During the period of this Contract, the United Mine Workers of America will not enter into, be a party to, nor will it permit any agreement or understanding covering any wages, hours or other conditions of work applicable to employees covered by this Contract on any basis other than those specified in this Contract or any applicable District Contract. The United Mine Workers of America will diligently perform and enforce without discrimination or favor the conditions of this paragraph and all other terms and conditions of this Contract and will use and exercise its continuing best efforts to obtain full compliance therewith by each and all the parties signatory thereto.

B. It is recognized that when signatory operators mine, prepare, or procure or acquire under subcontract arrangements, bituminous coal mined under terms and conditions less favorable than those provided for in this contract, they deprive employees of employment opportunities, employment conditions and other benefits which these employees are entitled to have safeguarded, stabilized and protected. Accordingly, the Operators agree that all bituminous coal mined, produced, or prepared by them, or any of them, or procured or acquired by them or any of them under a subcontract arrangement, shall be or shall have been mined or produced under terms and conditions which are as favorable to the employees as those provided for in this contract.

"Procured or acquired under a subcontract arrangement" means any contract, lease, license, agreement, arrangement or understanding pursuant to which the signatory operator acquires coal, either as principal or agent, directly or indirectly from a producer other than such signatory for delivery to a person other than such signatory.

The obligation assumed hereunder shall not affect any agreement in effect as of the date of execution of this contract: Provided, however, that any operator signatory hereto who is a party to any agreement inconsistent with the obligations assumed hereunder shall not maintain such inconsistent agreement in effect beyond the first date at which such agreement may be terminated by him in accordance with its terms.

The Operators signatory to this agreement shall so conduct their own operations (whether operated directly or indirectly, or through subsidiaries or affiliates) so as to fully comply with their obligations under this Clause. The obligation of each Operator signatory hereto, which is several and not joint, to fully perform all the conditions in this paragraph B contained, shall be a direct and continuing obligation of said Operator during the life of this Agreement.

As a part of the consideration for this Agreement, the Operators signatory hereto agree that this Clause covers the operation of all the coal lands, coal producing or coal preparation facilities owned or held under lease by them, or any of them, or by any subsidiary or affiliate at the date of this Agreement, or acquired during its term which may hereafter (during the term of this Agreement) be put into production or use. The said Operators agree that they will not lease, license, or contract out any coal lands, coal producing or coal preparation facilities as a subterfuge for the purpose of avoiding the application of this Clause.C. There is hereby established a Joint Industry Contract Committee composed of six (6) members, three (3) of whom shall be appointed and may be removed by the Union and three (3) of whom shall be appointed and may be removed by the Operators. Such appointments shall be made and notice thereof given to the proper parties hereto as expeditiously as possible and not later than thirty (30) days after the date of the execution of this Contract. In the event of resignation, removal, death, inability or unwillingness to serve of any of the members of the Committee, the Union shall appoint the successor or successors of the members originally appointed by it and the Operators shall appoint the successor or successors of the members originally appointed by them. Action which may be required of the Operators for the appointment of any member of the Joint Industry Contract Committee representing them may be taken by those Operators who, at the time, are signatories hereto. Authorization, approval or ratification of Operators representing fifty-one (51) per cent or more of the coal produced for use or sale during the calendar year previous to that in which such action is taken shall be sufficient to bind all Operators.

The Joint Industry Contract Committee may appoint such Joint District Contract Committees in such districts or groups of districts as it may determine, such district committees to consist of such numbers of members, half of whom shall represent the Union and half of whom shall represent the Operators in that district or groups of districts, as the Industry Committee shall deem advisable. The Joint District Contract Committees shall assist the Joint Industry Contract Committee in making any investigations hereunder.

The Joint Industry Contract Committee and the Joint District Committees, when authorized by and under the supervision of the Industry Committee, may employ such clerical and other employees as are required for the performance of their duties hereunder. Expenses of all Committees shall be borne equally by the Union and the Operators.

D. Within one hundred and twenty days after the execution of this contract and each six months thereafter each Operator signatory hereto shall certify in writing to the Joint District Contract Committee for the District where he maintains his principal [133] Counsel for plaintiffs stated that Section A was not presented to the District Court or to the Supreme Court in the [*861] Pennington case either in the Appendix of the briefs or in oral argument.

During the trial one of the attorneys referred to portions of the record in which the trial court called to the attention of the jury portions of Section A.

Plaintiffs argue that UMW agreed in Paragraph A with the signatories to the contract to impose a certain wage scale on other bargaining units and that under the following language in the Pennington opinion it thereby forfeited its exemption from the antitrust laws:

> "But we think a union forfeits its exemption from the antitrust laws when it is clearly shown that it has agreed with one set of employers to impose a certain wage scale on other bargaining units."

The Supreme Court then observed that there is nothing in labor policy indicating that the Union and the employers in one bargaining unit are free to bargain about the wages, hours and working conditions of other bargaining units or to attempt to settle these matters for the entire industry. The obligation of the Union to its members would seem best served [134] if the Union retains the ability to respond to each bargaining situation as circumstances might warrant, "without being strait-jacketed by some prior agreement with the favored employees."

[*862] Counsel for plaintiffs in their pre-trial brief stated that "predatory intent is almost an inevitable element of proof in developing a case of conspiracy based on circumstantial evidence." But counsel asserted that direct place of business where such a District Committee exists, or to the Joint Industry Contract Committee where no District Committee exists, that he is in full compliance with all the terms and conditions of this contract or any applicable District Agreement. Within one hundred and twenty days after the execution of this Agreement, and each six months thereafter each Union District President shall certify in writing to his Joint District Contract Committee, if one exists, or, if none exists, to the Joint Industry Contract Committee, a complete list of all Operators and Mines engaged in the production of bituminous coal within his district whose operations are under contract with the Union. No operator may be found to be in violation of this Protective Wage Clause with respect to any coal produced by another operator who is listed on the Contract list to be furnished by United Mine Workers of America under this paragraph, unless and until such operator is notified in writing by the Joint Industry Contract Committee that such operator has failed to comply with the provisions of this Clause and such failure has not been corrected.

---

E. Any party signatory to this contract shall have the right at any time to file a complaint with the Joint Industry Contract Committee alleging a violation of any provision of this Protective Wage Clause. In the event such a charge is filed it shall be the duty of the Joint Industry Contract Committee to investigate and determine the facts with respect to such alleged violation. Any determination by the Joint Industry Committee that a violation of this Clause has occurred may be made only upon the concurrence therein of a majority of the membership of the Committee. Notice by the Committee to the affected party, opportunity for the party to be heard, and failure promptly to effect full compliance after a finding of violation by the Committee shall be deemed a condition precedent to any final determination that a violation of this Clause has occurred. Findings made by the Joint Committee, after notice and opportunity for hearing, shall be served upon all parties to the proceeding, and shall constitute a final determination as to the fact of a violation. Failure or refusal of United Mine Workers or any Operator signatory hereto to comply with a final determination by the Committee of a violation of Paragraphs (A) or (B) of this Clause may be deemed a violation of this Agreement.

The Mine Workers agree to make available to the Joint Industry Contract Committee all contracts, agreements, or understandings entered into by the Mine Workers with any person engaged in the production of bituminous coal, and further agree to appear before the Committee on request by it and inform the Committee on such other related and pertinent matters as shall be essential to the Committee's investigation of an alleged violation of this Protective Wage Clause. Each Operator signatory hereto agrees to appear before the Committee on request by it and inform the Committee as to the source and quantity of coal produced or purchased or otherwise acquired, payment of wages to, and hours and working conditions of classified employees, payments to the United Mine Workers of America Welfare and Retirement Fund, and such other related and pertinent matters as shall be essential to the Committee's investigation of an alleged violation of this Protective Wage Clause.

The authority of the Committee is restricted to the subject matter covered in this Protective Wage Clause and shall not extend to disputes concerning the administration of the Contract which are of the type that have heretofore been processed under the grievance procedures provided for in the Section of the Contract entitled "Settlement of Local and District Disputes"; nor shall the provisions of this "Protective Wage Clause" be subject to the terms or conditions of the "Settlement of Local and District Disputes" section of this Contract.

evidence of such an agreement was a violation of the antitrust act per se, and that when Paragraph A was inserted in the Protective Wage Clause in December, 1928, the agreements and understandings between UMW and BCOA constituted per se violations of the Sherman Act throughout the critical period of the case.

We do not agree.

Paragraph B of the Protective Wage Clause manifests an intention to protect the continuity of work of the employees against the practice of the employers procuring from others by land-lease, subcontract or otherwise coal that was produced under terms and conditions less favorable than those provided in the contract with the Union.

Paragraph A obligates the UMW not to enter into or be a party to any agreement covering wages and working conditions [135] applicable to employers covered by the contract on any basis other than those specified in the contract. "The United Mine Workers of America will diligently perform and enforce without discrimination or favor the conditions of this paragraph and all other terms and conditions of this Contract and will use and exercise its continuing best efforts to obtain full compliance therewith by each and all parties signatory thereto."

It is to be observed that the UMW only obligates itself for full compliance of the terms of the contract by the "parties signatory thereto." Paragraph A does not appear to obligate UMW to embody the same terms and conditions in contracts to be made with other parties not signatory to the 1950 contract and the amendments thereto. The language in Paragraph A may not be as clear as it might be. But it does not appear to bind the Union to the same standards and conditions in dealing with other bargaining units.

Mr. Welly K. Hopkins, Senior Counsel for UMW and at one time a member of the Criminal Division of the Department of Justice, who participated in the bargaining negotiations from 1943 through 1964 and presumably assisted in the drafting of the 1958 amendment, [136] stated that the operators demanded Paragraph A and the Union demanded Paragraph B and that neither paragraphs affected anyone except those signatory to the contract. This testimony would only be competent if the contract is ambiguous. We understand that it is the position of both parties that the contract is not ambiguous.

The land lease provision of the Protective Wage Clause sprang from the 1941 amendment and first appeared in the 1943 agreement. Mr. Hopkins stated it had no connection with what is referred to as a "favorite nation" clause. It grew out of the practice by signatory operators of avoiding obligations under their contracts by leasing their coal lands to other operators who were non-signatories as a subterfuge to avoid the terms of the contract. This clause was eliminated in the 1964 contract on account of the "hot cargo" provision provided for in the Landrum-Griffin Act.

HN8[] If a contract is subject to two reasonable constructions, the one should be given that does not result in a violation of law. Great Northern Ry. Co. v. Delmar Co., 283 U.S. 686, 691, 75 L. Ed. 1349, 51 S. Ct. 579; Perry Coal Company v. NLRB, 284 F.2d 910, 914 (C.A. 7).

The trial court charged [137] the jury in the first Pennington trial that "Where two reasonable constructions of a written contract can be made, preference is given to that construction of such contract that does not result in a violation of law. The Court will not construe a contract to violate the law if it can by reasonable construction construe it to come within the purview of the law." Printed Record, Vol. III, p. 1587a; Williston on Contracts, 3rd Ed. (Jaeger), Vol. 4, pp. 747-748; Restatement on Contracts, Sec. 236.

[*863] Allegations of Predatory Pricing Were Denied by All Parties Who Testified and Who Participated in the 1950 Basic Agreement and the Various Amendments to Such Agreement

Ten witnesses, each of whom was in a position to know, testified positively that there was no predatory price fixing. Included in this list were UMW officials who likewise denied any participation in any alleged price fixing.

HN9[] A conspiracy need not be proved by formal agreement or by direct evidence. It is rare that a conspiracy is proved by direct evidence. American Tobacco Company v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 809, 90 L. Ed. 1575, 66 S. Ct. 1125; Interstate Circuit, Inc. v. United States, 306 U.S. [138] 208, 221, 83 L. Ed. 610, 59 S. Ct. 467.

Unity of purpose or a common design is sufficient. Kiefer-Stewart Company v. Joseph E. Seagram & Sons, 340 U.S. 211, 213-214, 95 L. Ed. 219, 71 S. Ct. 259.

If the necessary result of a combination or agreement unreasonably restrains trade, it violates the Sherman Act. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U.S. 211, 244, 44 L. Ed. 136, 20 S. Ct. 96; United States v. Reading Co., 226 U.S. 324, 57 L. Ed. 243, 33 S. Ct. 90; United States v. Live Poultry Dealers' Protective Association, Inc., 4 F.2d 840, 843 (C.C.A. 2); Kobe, Inc. v. Dempsey Pump Co., 198 F.2d 416, 423 (C.A. 10).

However, the proof is insufficient to establish plaintiffs' claim that West Kentucky Coal Company or any other coal operator bid on TVA coal for the purpose of depressing the price of coal on the TVA coal market and thereby drive small coal operators, including plaintiffs, out of business; or that West Kentucky Coal Company or any other operator through arrangement, combination or otherwise fixed the price or attempted to fix the price of coal on the TVA market.

The proof is insufficient to show that UMW, by arrangement, combination or otherwise, influenced [139] or attempted to influence West Kentucky Coal Company or any other coal operator in bidding for coal on the TVA market.

The Court finds that the contracts obtained from TVA by various coal companies charged with the conspiracy were obtained as a result of lawful efforts and that they did not submit low bids to the TVA for the predatory purpose of putting small coal operators, including plaintiffs, out of business but were made in a competitive market. If the price of coal purchased by TVA f.o.b. mines was lower than the national average, it was due to the policy of TVA to keep the price down, which in part, it seems to the Court, was effected by long term contracts for enormous tonnages of coal.

Plaintiffs claim that Messrs. Lewis and Love stated in speeches and press conferences, some of which were carried in the UMW Journal, that one of the objectives of the 1950 Agreement was to stabilize the coal industry.

Mr. Love, in his testimony, stated that his use of the word "stabilization" meant stabilization of working conditions. Mr. Lewis stated that the question of price was a prerogative of management with which the UMW was not concerned. Plaintiffs argue that the respective positions [140] of UMW and the coal operators materially changed in 1950 from their positions of the past when the UMW had sought a three-day work week in order to equitably apportion the work among the miners. Mr. Lewis and the other witnesses in the negotiations explained that the three-day work week was not an issue in the 1950 negotiations but was simply used as a bargaining tactic; that the miners were out of work in late 1949 and early 1950 and the public was being made to believe that coal supplies would soon become exhausted. UMW caused the workers to work three days a week to disabuse the minds of the public of this thought and at the same time enable the miners to earn enough money for their families to live on.

Plaintiffs say that the wages, including the royalty provided for in the 1950 Agreement and the amendments thereto [*864] were geared to the operations of the large mechanized coal operators for the purpose of putting the small coal operators out of business because the BCOA and UMW knew that the small marginal operators could not pay the wages provided in the Agreement.

This charge is also denied by all of those who participated in the negotiations and who testified in [141] the case.

The Court is of the opinion and finds that plaintiffs have failed to prove, either by a preponderance of the evidence or by the standards of evidence established by the Supreme Court in UMW v. Paul Gibbs, supra, that the defendant engaged in a combination or conspiracy so as to unreasonably restrain trade or to monopolize commerce among the several states as alleged in the complaint. In this connection, the Court observes that the extensive evidence introduced by plaintiffs of violence in the coal fields is consistent with the Union's determination to unionize the units of the entire area, and, in the light of the Court's conclusion just noted, is insufficient to show a Sherman Act antitrust violation.

Common Law Claims of Parton Coal Company and Dean Coal Company

This brings us to the alternative claims of Parton Coal Company and Dean Coal Company which are based upon alleged violations by the Union of Tennessee law. This part of the claim is based on evidence of violence and intimidation by the Union.

The principle that permits damages based on state law was reaffirmed in the recent case of United Mine Workers of America v. Gibbs, supra, 383 U.S. 715, 721, 86 [142] S. Ct. 1130, 16 L. Ed. 2d 218, 34 Law Week p. 4336, as follows:

> "'We have allowed HN10[] the States to grant compensation for the consequences, as defined by the traditional law of torts, of conduct marked by violence and imminent threats to the public order. United Automobile Workers v. Russell, 356 U.S. 634, 78 S. Ct. 932, 2 L. Ed. 2d 1030; United Construction Workers v. Laburnum Corp., 347 U.S. 656, 74 S. Ct. 833, 98 L. Ed. 1025. . . . State jurisdiction has prevailed in these situations because the compelling state interest, in the scheme of our federalism, in the maintenance of domestic peace is not overridden in the absence of clearly expressed congressional direction.' San Diego Building Trades Council v. Garmon, 359 U.S. 236, 247, 3 L. Ed. 2d 775, 79 S. Ct. 773.

> " . . . The Court held in Hurn v. Oursler, 289 U.S. 238, 77 L. Ed. 1148, 53 S. Ct. 586, that HN11[] state law claims are appropriate for federal court determination if they form a separate but parallel ground for relief also sought in a substantial claim based on federal law."

The federal claim must have had sufficient substance to confer jurisdiction on the Federal Court before it can try the state claim. In addition [143] state and federal claims must derive "from a common nucleus of operative fact." And pendent jurisdiction is a matter of sound judicial discretion and not a right of plaintiffs. United Mine Workers of America v. Paul Gibbs, supra.

The interest of the attorneys in the antitrust phase of the lawsuit overshadowed the alternative claims based on Tennessee law. This is shown in both the oral and written arguments of counsel.

In the opinion of the Court, plaintiffs in the present cases stated, in good faith, substantial claims based on federal law. Although the Court has held that the federal claims were not established, this does not deprive the court of jurisdiction to determine the non-federal ground. The trend under the Federal Rules is to require plaintiffs to try their causes of action at the same time. This principle was stated by the Supreme Court long before the Federal Rules came into existence. Baltimore S.S. Co. v. Phillips, 274 U.S. 316, 319, 71 L. Ed. 1069, 47 S. Ct. 600.

Dean Coal Company and W. R. Parton charge that in pursuance of unlawful [*865] activities and with the intent and purpose to unlawfully and illegally interrupt, impede, terminate and destroy the [144] business of the plaintiffs, that the defendant through its duly constituted and authorized officers, agents, representatives and members caused huge motorcades to be assembled and formed to roam and block the highways and roads in and around the area of plaintiffs' operations; that they threatened abuse and intimidated employees of the plaintiffs with the result that plaintiffs' employees and others were alarmed, frightened and intimidated to such an extent that the mining operations of plaintiffs were completely halted for a time and drastically curtailed for a longer period and plaintiff Dean Coal Company was compelled to spend large sums of money to safeguard its equipment and to move its operations to a safer location; that defendant's agents and members, at the direction of its duly authorized officers and representatives, placed dynamite upon the coal mining machinery of the plaintiffs in an effort to destroy it and although the explosion did not occur, plaintiffs' employees and others were further intimidated and frightened thereby to the damage of plaintiffs' businesses; that the interruption of the Dean Coal Company's business began on or about March 16, 1959 and it was not [145] until 1961 that it was able to resume normal and profitable operations of its business and that the wrongful and unlawful activities of the defendant were prompted and carried out with a wanton, deliberate and malicious intent and purpose to destroy the business and property of plaintiffs in consequence of which the plaintiffs are entitled to recover punitive damages.

W. R. Parton

The common law or state law claim of W. R. Parton, d/b/a Parton Coal Company, arises out of the termination in 1959 of his strip coal mining operations near Beech Fork in the New River Section of southwestern Campbell County, Tennessee. Parton had been engaged in strip mining since 1953 on various leaseholds in Morgan and Campbell Counties. In 1959 he moved his operations from the Beech Fork location to a higher seam of coal and had completed the building of his haul roads. He had for a number of years sold most of his coal to the TVA for delivery to the Kingston Steam Plant, and in January, 1959 his sales agent obtained a term contract to be filled by him and another producer which called for 1,200 to 1,300 tons per week for twelve months. The coal was shipped by rail from a loading facility on [146] the Tennessee Railroad located a short distance along a public road from the entrance to Parton's leasehold which was several miles from his mine. The coal was hauled by truck from the mine to the railroad siding mainly by trucks owned by a trucking contractor, Allen, who furnished the trucks and drivers and who was paid by the ton.

There is much evidence in the record about the refusal of strip mining operators in eastern Tennessee to sign the National Bituminous Coal Wage Agreement, as amended in 1958, the cancellation of most of the existing contracts by UMW and the intensive efforts of the Union to see that no coal was hauled or produced by such operators. Parton was not served with a termination notice because according to Field Representative Ross, it was believed that Parton had discontinued operations. The Trustees of the Welfare Fund had filed their action against him for unpaid royalties on June 13, 1958. The circumstances under which Parton originally signed the Wage Agreement will be hereinafter noticed.

On or about March 30, UMW field representatives, Ross and perhaps Jones, participated in a motorcade or caravan of cars occupied by UMW members through the New River [147] area. For about a week thereafter a similar group gathered at a point on the Petros Mountain highway. Their purpose is disputed, but it is obvious that it had something to do with preventing the hauling of coal from the mining operation to Kingston.

On April 15, 1959, Parton undertook to have his coal trucked from his strip pit to the railroad but Allen's trucks [*866] were stopped near the intersection of the haul road and the public road by a large group of UMW members. A few were armed. Parton was warned that he should not be loading coal if he had not signed the UMW contract. And after some discussion the coal in the trucks was dumped by the side of the public road. Parton did not try to load any more coal until the following August. He and his employees and the truckers were afraid to.

The threats made against Parton and the dumping of the coal without a shot being fired or a blow being struck might as one isolated incident be considered non-violent, but taking place in the atmosphere of threats and violence shown by the proof in this case and in others, particularly Allen v. UMW, 319 F.2d 594 (6 Cir. Tenn. 1963), it is not to be characterized as UMW contends, as [148] peaceful picketing. It was the type of activity enjoined by orders of the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Kentucky entered April 30 and May 4, 1959 on petition of the Regional Director of the National Labor Relations Board including "assaulting, stoning, clubbing, overturning or threatening to overturn equipment, threatening physical violence or other injury."

The group of so-called pickets that had stopped the hauling of Parton's coal came mainly from the membership of two nearby UMW local unions, three of whose members testified that it was their purpose to stop Parton's operation. One of them testified for the Union that they just happened along at the time for no particular purpose. Some of them had obtained gasoline paid for by UMW Field Representative Ross under an arrangement whereby it was to be used by the members for "picket line" work. Such activity, as the stopping of Parton's operation, was in accordance with and a part of UMW's purpose of stopping the production of non-union coal.

In May 1959 there were several instances of shooting into coal hauling trucks and into the cars of employees of at least one non-union operation. Strip mining [149] equipment belonging to this same operator, Double Camp Mining Company, was destroyed by dynamite late in May on a Sunday, the day before dynamite was found on the mining equipment of Dean Coal Company operated by the brother of the principal in Double Camp Mining Company.

Parton undertook to resume his operations after an election conducted by the NLRB in which UMW was defeated, but he was not able to make up for the time lost during the spring and summer. He could not get a crew to work at night or enough truckers to haul the coal.

Parton could not keep the payments up on his equipment or produce enough coal to keep his markets with the result that he lost his business entirely. There was no market for the equipment in 1959 because of the inactivity among the coal strippers and because the insurance necessary to a purchase money loan was not to be had. The insurance carried by the operators in the area was cancelled after the destruction of the Gilchrist tipples at Jellico and the Double Camp Mining equipment in the New River area during the month of May.

Parton, at the time his coal stripping business stopped, owed various sums of money for the purchase price of most of the [150] items of his equipment, a stripping shovel, a loading shovel, a bulldozer, a grader, the loading ramp or crusher, and other small pieces. In his item by item calculations he claimed a market value for the equipment in excess of the debt against it of $73,800.00. Parton's business was relatively small and his accounting records were meager. According to his income tax returns his record of profits (or loss) was as follows:

1954	$19,865.90
1955	12,088.14
1956	25,409.03
1957	1,633.41
1958	9,414.22	Loss

His loss in 1958 was explained by him as due to the cost of building new haul roads and of doing other road work in that year. The suit brought against him [*867] by the Trustees of the UMW of America Welfare Fund would also tend to cause the postponing of production of coal as distinguished from preparation work.

Parton's testimony is that he was persuaded in 1954 to sign the printed form modifying and supplementing the National Bituminous Coal Wage Agreement of 1950 by UMW Field Representative Les Jones, after several visits by Jones to his mine and home and under a threat by Jones that if he did not sign the "Jones boys" would "come around" [151] and after advising Jones that he was signing it because he "did not want to get anybody hurt and get my equipment tore up." He was never given a copy of the basic contract containing the wage scale and other information. He paid his employees whatever was agreeable and later the Walsh-Healey prevailing wage scale. None of Parton's employees were at any time members of the UMW; no employee was given a so-called hospital card or received benefits from the UMW of America Welfare and Retirement Fund. Parton testified he had no contract with any UMW representative except with Jones who at irregular intervals requested Parton to make a token payment to the Welfare Fund. Parton sent in no tonnage reports to the Fund. He testified that Jones told him he could pay what royalty he could, "that's the way most of them do."

This testimony is not contradicted by any witness in position to know any of the facts. It is corroborated by the testimony of other plaintiffs in this case that they were persuaded by threats to sign the papers and were advised by one or the other of the UMW field representatives that they pay what they could to the Welfare Fund.

Dean Coal Company

Dean Coal Company [152] was organized in 1954 as a coal stripping and augering business in the vicinity of Straight Fork in Scott and Campbell Counties, Tennessee. Ralph Ross and Paul Ross were the owners and were jointly in charge of the operations of the company until the formation of a second operating division in May, 1956. From that time until the end of 1958, Ralph Ross operated the division known as Dean or Dean No. 2, which operated in the vicinity of Straight Fork. Paul Ross operated the division known as Fork Mountain, or Dean No. 3, in the vicinity of Fork Mountain, Tennessee. At the end of 1956 the Dean operation, or Dean No. 2 continued as the operating unit of the corporation and the Fork Mountain, or Dean No. 3 division was separately incorporated as Double Camp Mining Company. From that time, Ralph Ross has been in charge of the operations of the Dean Coal Company and acquired the stock interest in Dean Coal Company previously held by Paul Ross.

The Company evaded the efforts of UMW organizers to obtain an authorized execution by Dean Coal Company of the National Bituminous Coal Wage Agreement. However, Paul Ross signed one of the supplements in 1954 as "lessee" covering the operation [153] listed on the contract as Dean Coal Company at Dean, Tennessee, and he signed another one of the supplements in 1956 as "partner" covering the Dean Coal Company at Fork Mountain, Tennessee. In the meantime, and up until 1959, Ralph Ross was visited several times by UMW Field Representatives Daniel and Maddux, who tried but failed to persuade him to sign the Agreement on behalf of Dean Coal Company and pay only what he could to the Welfare Fund. The corporation did not recognize this Agreement and did not check off dues or make payments to the Welfare Fund. It was threatened with litigation over the Welfare Fund royalties, after which it maintained a reserve on its account in anticipation of potential liability. However, the Trustees never sued Dean Coal Company.

Most of the coal of Dean Coal Company was sold to TVA on term and spot contracts. The financial records of the two operating divisions were separately maintained during the period of concurrent operations so that the profit-making ability of the division operated by Ralph Ross can be separately calculated. It is now [*868] the only operation of Dean Coal Company and has been since 1959. The annual profits and losses [154] of Dean Coal Company (or division) as reported for federal income taxation was as follows:

1955	$32,407.22
1956	31,710.20
1957	17,226.84
1958	2,469.32	Loss
1959	37,531.47	Loss
1960	13,249.94	Loss
1961	1,233.39
1962	13,441.38

The 1958 loss is explained by Ross as having been caused in part by a heart attack which disabled him in early October, low sales prices and unusually high equipment repair costs.

On March 16, 1959, a UMW motorcade of approximately 100 cars, led by Field Representatives Prater and Daniel, came to the hollow where the Dean tipple and loading facilities were located and told the foreman and a truck driver that they were shutting the mine down and not to bring any more coal down from the strip pit. Prater and Daniel told them that they had shut down the mine of U. R. Arnold, which they had visited that morning with the same motorcade, and the operations of Gilchrist, Randolph and Snyder and that "they were going to stop the rest of them." The foreman sent for the stripping crew as ordered by the UMW representatives, and Prater and Daniel made speeches to the assembled employees. Some of them joined the Union the next day [155] and started drawing weekly grocery allowances from the Union.

The operations of the company were discontinued until April 30, 1959 when Ross sent word to the men that he would undertake to resume work the following week. This was the date that the restraining order was issued by the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Kentucky, mentioned above in connection with the Parton claim. On Monday, June 1, 1959, when the mining crew went to work they found twenty-six sticks of dynamite on the auger "that had not gone off." Later that month the railroad trestle leading to the Dean tipple was burned and the following evening the automobile occupied by some of the employees leaving work was struck by rifle fire. Only about one-half of the former Dean employees came back to work during the 1959 working season. Although a rival union prevailed in an election held later in 1959, it was not until 1961 that the company was able to recover from the interruptions, disorganization and other trouble and to assemble a full crew of employees.

About two years later, in 1961, two of the Dean employees who had joined the Union in 1959 confessed that they had placed the dynamite on [156] the auger at the direction of Field Representative Prater and UMW Local President, George Cross, on Sunday, May 31, the same afternoon that the equipment of Double Camp Mining Company, owned by Paul Ross, was destroyed by dynamite explosions some fifteen or twenty miles away.

Damages

UMW is liable for damages to the plaintiffs, Dean Coal Company and Parton Coal Company, resulting directly and proximately from its wrongful acts hereinbefore set out. These plaintiffs were entitled to operate their businesses without tortious interferences by the defendant. Hutton v. Waters, 4 Higgins 582, 583, 589 (1914 Tenn. Ct. of Civil Appeals); Lann v. Third National Bank in Nashville, 198 Tenn. 70, 277 S.W.2d 439; Love and Amos v. UMW, 53 Tenn. App. 37, 378 S.W.2d 430, 437 (1963); UMW v. Meadow Creek Coal Co., 263 F.2d 52, 63 (C.A. 6). Twenty-three witnesses, persons in a position to know, testified of the violence and extreme fear created by such violence that was caused by the organizational activities of UMW. Defendant breached a duty owed to them under the Tennessee common law when it wrongfully and unlawfully, through violence and fear, interfered with their operations. [*869] [157] See White Oak Coal Company v. UMW, 318 F.2d 591, 600-601 (C.A. 6).

HN12[] It is a violation of Tennessee law to interfere maliciously or intentionally with the business and contractual relations of another, except under certain circumstances and for certain purposes. It is not a violation of state law for a union intentionally to cause harm to an employer in interrupting its business and contractual relations by peaceably inducing its employees to go on strike for the purpose of obtaining better wages and working conditions.

It is the acts of violence that result in damages to the plaintiffs' property or business which are the basis of a state law claim. International Union v. Wisconsin Board, 336 U.S. 245, 253, 93 L. Ed. 651, 69 S. Ct. 516.

HN13[] A union has the right under state law to induce employees by fair persuasion to withhold their services from an employer in order to obtain a collective bargaining agreement. Restatement of Torts, Vol. 4, Sec. 798.

By fair persuasion is meant argument, exhortation or entreaty addressed to a person without threat of physical harm. Restatement of Torts, Vol. 4, Sec. 779.

A union has the right under state and federal law to induce employees to leave [158] their work and to remain away from their work by paying or by giving such employees strike benefits or other moneys or things of value. Restatement of Torts, Sec. 798, Comment a, Sec. 20 Clayton Act, 29 U.S.C. § 52, Sec. 4 Norris-LaGuardia Act, 29 U.S.C. § 104.

These suits are against a Union which is an association of individuals and is not against any individual person. HN14[] Necessarily, any acts performed by the Union were done by its individual officers, agents or members. The defendant Union would not be liable for any act merely because it was done by a member of the Union, for union membership alone does not constitute the member an agent of the Union. United Brotherhood v. United States, 330 U.S. 395, 406-7, 91 L. Ed. 973, 67 S. Ct. 775.

HN15[] The mere fact that a member of the defendant Union is an officer in a Local Union affiliated with the defendant Union does not, in itself, constitute such Local Union officer an agent of the defendant Union and in the absence of evidence establishing such agency, the defendant Union is not responsible for any acts performed by such Local Union officer. Garmeada Coal Co. v. UMW, 230 F.2d 945 (C.A. 6).

It is admitted by the defendant that [159] William Prater, Ed Daniel and Ed Ross were, during the period involved in these cases, employed as Field Representatives of District 19 of the defendant Union and as such were agents of the defendant Union. Under these circumstances the Court is of the opinion that defendant Union is responsible for acts performed and instigated by these agents in the course of their employment.

HN16[] The custom or traditional practice of the Union can be the source of actual authorization of an agent to act for and bind the Union. United Brotherhood v. United States, supra, at 410.

If the Union was guilty of causing harm to plaintiffs' businesses, under circumstances whereby either the object or the means was illegal, the defendant would be liable for the entire resulting damages. See Carpenters Local 131

v. Cisco Const. Co., 266 F.2d 365 (9 Cir. Wash. 1959); United Mine Workers of America v. Osborne Mining Co., 279 F.2d 716 (6 Cir. Tenn. 1960).

The interruption and other losses sustained by Dean Coal Company and Parton Coal Company were caused by violent conduct carried on by UMW members and instigated by officials Prater, Daniel and to a lesser extent, Ross. Among the state laws violated were Code [160] Section 39-2805 prohibiting the willful [*870] traveling, riding or walking through the country or towns, to the disturbance of the peace or to the alarm of the citizens for the purposes of, among other things, terrorizing any citizen or causing through threats or intimidation or other improper means any citizen not to do any lawful thing and Section 39-2303 prohibiting persons from obstructing a public or private road.

It is established by the evidence that Dean Coal Company, as operated over a period of more than ten years by Ralph Ross in substantially the same location and conditions, was and is capable of making during normal years substantial profits.

Parton Coal Company, of which W. R. Parton is the owner, suffered damages due to the unlawful and wrongful acts of the defendant. Damages from loss of his equipment amounted to $65,000.00. The business was making a profit, or capable of making a profit of at least $15,000.00 a year over a period of several years. He sustained losses of profits for the years 1959, 1960 and 1961 on the basis of $15,000.00 a year, or a total of $45,000.00 in lost profits.

The Court, therefore, fixes the compensatory damages at $45,000.00, [161] plus $65,000.00, or a total of $110,000.00.

Parton is entitled to punitive damages on account of the oppressive, wanton and unlawful acts of the defendant, in the amount of $50,000.00. The Court fixes the total amount of damages of the Parton Coal Company at $160,000.00.

Dean Coal Company suffered an operating loss in 1959 on account of the wrongful and unlawful acts of the defendant of $37,537.47 and an operating loss in 1960 of $13,249.94, or a total operating loss of $50,787.41. Dean made a profit in the year 1955 of $32,000.00, in 1956 of $31,000.00 and in 1957 of at least $17,000.00. There is proof supporting a total loss of profits for 1958-60 of $17,000.00 a year, or a total of $51,000.00. Dean, therefore, suffered compensatory damages in the amount of $101,787.41.

In addition, Dean Coal Company is entitled to punitive damages on account of the oppressive, wrongful and unlawful acts of the defendant in the amount of $50,000.00, making a grand total of $151,787.41.

The costs of the consolidated cases are taxed against the defendant.

State v. Milwaukee Braves, Inc.

Supreme Court of Wisconsin

June 9, 1966, Argued ; July 27, 1966, Decided

No Number in Original

Reporter

31 Wis. 2d 699 *; 144 N.W.2d 1 ; 1966 Wisc. LEXIS 1021 ; 1966 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,843

State, Respondent, v. Milwaukee Braves, Inc., and others, Appellants

Prior History: [*1] Appeal from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Milwaukee County: Elmer W. Roller, Circuit Judge.

Disposition: By the Court. -- Judgment reversed, cause remanded with directions to dismiss the complaint.

Core Terms

baseball, league, regulation, team, interstate commerce, commerce, anti trust law, major league baseball, decisions, appears, antitrust, silence, restraint of trade, national interest, exemption, second sentence, monopoly power, franchises, membership, matters, state action, preemption, commodity, monopoly, sports, cases, congressional action, majority opinion, trial court, defendants'

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN1[] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

See Wis. Stat. § 133.01(1).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Sports > Baseball

Governments > Legislation > Effect & Operation > Prospective Operation

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Sports > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Effect & Operation > General Overview

HN2[] Sports, Baseball

Congress did not intend to include the business of baseball within the federal antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Sports > Baseball

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Sports > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > General Overview

HN3[] Sports, Baseball

Antitrust exemption does not cover every type of business activity to which a baseball club or league might be a party and does not protect clubs or leagues from application of the federal acts to activities which are not incidental to the maintenance of league structure, but the exemption at least covers the agreements and rules which provide for the structure of the organization and the decisions which are necessary steps in maintaining it.

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > General Overview

HN4[] Congressional Duties & Powers, Commerce Clause

While various tests may be used for guidance as to the regulatory power left to the states where congress is silent, the ultimate question is whether the state action conflicts with national policy.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > State Powers

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Commerce Clause > General Overview

HN5[] Interstate Commerce, State Powers

Absent congressional action, the familiar test is that of uniformity versus locality: if a case falls within an area in commerce thought to demand a uniform national rule, state action is struck down. If the activity is one of predominantly local interest, state action is sustained. More accurately, the question is whether the state interest is outweighed by a national interest in the unhampered operation of interstate commerce.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Higher Education & Professional Associations > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Sports > General Overview

HN6[] Regulated Industries, Higher Education & Professional Associations

The regulations of baseball league membership imposed by any state necessarily affect activities of members in other states.

Syllabus

Action by the state of Wisconsin against the corporate owners of the 10 baseball teams in the National League of Professional Baseball Clubs, and against the National League, to enforce sec. 133.01, Stats., an antitrust statute.

In 1953 the Boston Braves of the National League moved from Boston to Milwaukee, with the permission of the National League. The team had been purchased in 1945 by assuming an indebtedness of $ 311,000. In the last year in Boston the attendance was 240,000.

Milwaukee had not previously had a major league baseball team, but a new stadium had recently been erected by the county and it was leased to the Braves. Attendance in 1953 reached 1,826,397, and in that year the Braves finished in second place in the League. In each of the next four years, attendance was over 2,000,000, and the Braves finished in third, second, second, and first place, in those years. In 1958, attendance was 1,971,101, and the Braves again won the pennant. Attendance dropped [2] each year thereafter, reaching 1,101,441 in 1961 and 766,921 in 1962. The Braves' final standings were second in 1959, second in 1960, fourth in 1961, and fifth in 1962. Profits before taxes in this entire period exceeded $ 7,500,000.

Late in 1962 a new corporation, controlled and largely owned by a new group, acquired the team and franchise for $ 6,218,480. In 1963 the attendance increased to 773,018 and the team finished in sixth place. In 1964 the attendance increased to 910,911 and the team finished in fifth place.

On October 21, 1964, the board of directors voted to transfer to Atlanta, Georgia. On November 7th the League approved the transfer, but the stadium lease ran to the end of 1965 and the county had begun suit to compel the Braves to fulfill it. The League directed the Braves to play their home games in Milwaukee in 1965. The Braves corporation signed a twenty-five-year lease of a stadium in Atlanta.

In 1965, after the decision to move, attendance dropped to 555,584, and the team finished in fifth place. On or about January 1, 1966, the principal office of the corporation was moved to Atlanta, and the home games have been played there in 1966.

On August 6, [3] 1965, the present action was brought by the state. The complaint described generally the agreements and relationships involved in the organization of professional baseball and alleged that as a result defendants and persons acting in concert with them have monopoly power over major league baseball; that defendants had agreed to an illegal plan to terminate playing of major league baseball in Milwaukee; and that they intended to and would restrain and prevent various types of trade and commerce involved in major league baseball in Milwaukee. The complaint sought recovery of forfeitures, as prescribed by statute, and preliminary and permanent injunctions requiring defendants to facilitate the organization and operation of a major league professional baseball team with Milwaukee as its home, and restraining the Braves from playing home games outside Milwaukee until such required steps had been taken.

Defendants sought to remove the cause to the United States district court for the Eastern district of Wisconsin, but on motion of the state that court remanded the cause to the circuit court for Milwaukee county November 12, 1965. Demurrers were overruled by the circuit court.

After [4] a lengthy trial, the circuit court made findings of fact and conclusions of law. In part they were as follows:

Findings of Fact

"5. The ten corporate defendants are engaged in the business of organizing, promoting and exhibiting professional baseball games played by teams of professional baseball players. Each of said corporate defendants operates a so-called Major League team playing a Major League championship schedule prepared by the defendant, National League. Under said schedule the team of each corporate defendant plays approximately one-half its scheduled championship games in [its home city] and the remainder divided equally at the location of the remaining corporate defendants' principal places of business. During a season the team of each corporate defendant plays an equal number of championship games with the team of each other corporate defendant.

"6. The teams of the corporate defendants are each comprised of professional baseball players, each of whom contracts his services to his employer under a form of contract known as the Uniform Player Contract.

"7. The American League of Professional Baseball Clubs is an unincorporated association comprised of ten [5] corporate members which also organize, promote and exhibit professional baseball games by operating baseball teams which play a championship season schedule of the type described above. The said National League and American League are known as the Major Leagues. Each of the corporate members of each member League of the National Association of Professional Baseball Leagues also organizes, promotes and exhibits professional baseball games in other cities and under the rules of other leagues, these other leagues being known as the minor leagues. All minor leagues are members of the National Association of Professional Baseball Leagues, an unincorporated association. The three unincorporated associations are governed by rules and regulations which recite the interrelation of their activities and the operations of the respective member corporate operators of baseball teams.

"8. Each championship professional baseball game is played on a home ball field of one of the league teams. Each ball field is enclosed from the public, and the public is charged an admission fee to see each game. The visiting baseball team receives a predetermined share of the admission proceeds.

"9. Each team [6] holds a franchise from its respective league to operate a professional Major League baseball club in its franchised territory. The franchise is evidenced by a Certificate of Membership signed by the Major League president. There are ten franchises in each Major League. During the championship season, the corporate defendants do not schedule or play championship professional baseball games with any person to whom the National League has not issued a franchise.

"10. Each of the corporate defendants, including Milwaukee Braves, Inc., has approximately forty professional Major League baseball players under contract. Each of the corporate defendants owns the exclusive right to assign and renew the contract of each such Major League baseball player. Each of the corporate defendants either owns minor league professional baseball teams or has entered into working agreements with such teams, and is thereby able to obtain the services of a large number of minor league professional baseball players.

"11. Each of the corporate defendants plays its scheduled games in accordance with the National League championship schedule. Between January 1, 1953 and December 31, 1965, defendant Milwaukee [7] Braves, Inc. annually played approximately one-half the games scheduled for it on the National League Championship schedule in Milwaukee County Stadium. For each of the years ended December 31, 1960 through 1964, inclusive, the annual receipts of defendant Milwaukee Braves, Inc. and of its corporate predecessor, National League Baseball Club of Milwaukee, Inc., from sales of tickets for such games exceeded $ 1,000,000.

"12. Each of the corporate defendants cooperates with radio and television stations and enters into contracts permitting radio and/or television broadcasting of certain of its championship games. Between January 1, 1960 and December 31, 1964, defendant Milwaukee Braves, Inc. and its corporate predecessor, National League Baseball Club of Milwaukee, Inc., entered into contracts permitting the radio and/or television broadcasting of championship games played in Milwaukee County Stadium. During that period, defendant Milwaukee Braves, Inc. and its corporate predecessor, National League Baseball Club of Milwaukee, Inc., sold the rights to broadcast such games and received therefor substantial sums of money.

"13. The exhibition of Major League championship games attracts [8] widespread public interest and is regularly publicized by newspapers and magazines and is broadcast by network television and radio. The exhibition of Major League baseball is a market separate and distinct from the exhibition of minor league or college baseball games, or other entertainment exhibitions.

". . .

"15. Professional baseball is organized by a series of interrelated agreements among the member teams of the National and American Leagues, between the two Major Leagues, among the minor leagues, and an association of minor leagues, and among the minor leagues. Through these agreements, substantially all relationships among the various leagues, teams, owners, agents and players are regulated.

"16. The corporate defendants are the only members of the National League. No additional members may be admitted to the National League without the unanimous consent of the corporate defendants.

"17. The defendants and the American League and its members are parties to the Major League Agreement.

"18. Defendants and the American League and its members have agreed to and do control the right to employ the services of substantially all present and future professional baseball players [9] of Major League caliber, and have agreed to determine and do determine the time and place of exhibition and broadcast of all Major League games.

"19. The defendants and the American League and its members have agreed to and do prohibit all Major League professional baseball players from contracting to perform and from performing as players during their playing careers otherwise than upon the terms and conditions established by the National League and the American League and its members.

"20. The defendants and the American League and its members have agreed to and do designate and limit the places where Major League professional baseball games may be exhibited to the public.

"21. The defendants and the American League and its members have agreed to and do prevent performances by all Major League professional baseball players and clubs, except upon terms and conditions determined by the defendants and the American League and its members.

"22. The defendants and the American League and its members have agreed to prescribe and enforce and have prescribed and enforced rules and regulations governing substantially all relationships among the various baseball leagues, teams, owners, [10] agents and players.

"23. The defendants and the American League and its members have agreed to establish and have established the office of Commissioner of Baseball, and have agreed to permit him, and have permitted him, to arbitrate disputes and to enforce decisions, in accordance with the terms of the Major League Agreement and the Major League Rules.

"24. The Major League Agreement and the Major League Rules enable the defendants and the American League and its members to eliminate competition between them for the employment of professional baseball players and to prevent persons not parties to that agreement, the Professional Baseball Agreement or the National Association Agreement from engaging the services of professional baseball players.

"25. Over a period of many years, the defendants and the American League and its members have achieved adherence to the Major League Agreement, the Professional Baseball Agreement, and the National Association Agreement of all persons engaged in professional baseball by the use, and threat of use, of practices such as refusing to deal with clubs and leagues not parties to said agreements and excluding from employment as a player any player [11] who failed or refused to submit to or be bound by the terms of those agreements and rules promulgated pursuant thereto. Since the establishment of the American League, all attempts to organize additional Major Leagues have been prevented by the defendants and the American League and its members.

"26. The defendants have agreed to a plan to terminate, and acting together carried out their plan and have terminated the playing and exhibition of Major League baseball games in Milwaukee. The Major League Agreement, the Professional Baseball Agreement, the National Association Agreement, and Rules adopted pursuant to and in accordance with those Agreements, operate to prohibit the establishment of a Major League professional baseball team with Milwaukee as its home and Milwaukee County Stadium as its home grounds, unless such successor is granted a Certificate of Membership in the National League or the American League. Such agreements and rules prohibit Major League Baseball players from contracting to play Major League baseball in Milwaukee as members of the team of any person (including Milwaukee Brewers Baseball Club, Inc., and Milwaukee County) not a member of the National League [12] or the American League. By entering into such agreements and adopting such rules the defendants, and the members of the American League, have agreed to and do refrain from scheduling or playing Major League championship baseball games with the team of any person (including Milwaukee Brewers Baseball Club, Inc. and Milwaukee County) who might, without having been admitted to membership in the National League or the American League, organize and prepare to operate a Major League baseball team with Milwaukee as its home and Milwaukee County Stadium as its home grounds.

"27. In July of 1963 Officers of defendant, Milwaukee Braves, Inc., first became interested in moving the team to Atlanta. This interest continued during the 1964 championship season. The rumors of the defendant Braves' interest in Atlanta printed in the local and national press during 1963 and 1964, adversely effected [sic] attendance at Milwaukee home games during the 1963 and 1964 championship seasons . . .

"28. The exhibition of Major League professional baseball games in the City of Milwaukee has been terminated by the defendants. Major League professional baseball will not again be exhibited in Milwaukee, [13] Wisconsin, until the National League or the American League locates a franchise in Milwaukee.

"29. The Milwaukee Brewers Baseball Club, Inc. and Milwaukee County have each made proper application to the National League and to the American League for membership therein. Each such League has failed or refused to grant each such application.

". . .

"38. The defendants and the American League and its member clubs, the National Association of Professional Baseball Leagues, the member leagues and member clubs of the aforementioned National Association, have an economic monopoly over the exhibition of professional baseball. The Constitution of the National League grants unlimited power and discretion to determine the location of a franchise; provides it no objective standards for determining whether or not to grant a request for a transfer of a franchise, and contains no rules of procedure which would accord the city, county or state from which any such proposed transfer would be made, an opportunity to be heard.

". . .

"40. Over the five year period 1960-1964 on a cash basis the Braves and their corporate predecessors realized total income of $ 836,900. The Braves reported to their [14] shareholders net losses of $ 43,378 in 1963 and $ 45,270 in 1964. Net income from operations was reported as $ 82,393 in 1963 and $ 104,730 in 1964. These net income figures were reduced by interest expense on funds borrowed to purchase the Braves of $ 125,771 and $ 150,000 respectively in arriving at the net loss figures. In 1964 $ 48,800 of expense in connection with relocation of the franchise were charged against income.

"41. Had scouting expenses been capitalized as were player acquisition and development costs as sound accounting methods would require, the Braves would have shown a net income of approximately $ 170,000 in 1963 and $ 151,000 in 1964.

"42. The Braves' net receipts from the sale of radio and television broadcasting rights compare favorably with the net receipts of the defendant clubs that submitted figures to this court.

"43. During the period from 1953 through 1965, the Milwaukee Braves, Inc. and its corporate predecessors had a total home paid attendance of 19,551,163. This was greater than any club in either Major League with the exception of the defendant, Los Angeles (Brooklyn) Dodgers. The average annual attendance for this period in Milwaukee was [15] over 1.5 million. This average was the second highest of any club in either league. The attendance level was 31% more than the average of teams in the defendant National League and 52% higher than the average for teams in the American League. Milwaukee home attendance increased from 773,818 in 1962 to 910,911 in 1964, despite the rumored relocation of the franchise to Atlanta, Georgia. The level of Attendance in 1965 was not representative, due to the fact that the franchise was to be relocated in Atlanta, Georgia for the 1966 season.

"44. The Braves were financially successful during the time it operated a National league baseball club in Milwaukee. Milwaukee has the demographic economic and population characteristics necessary to support a Major League baseball club. Milwaukee has the ability to reasonably support a Major League team.

"45. That expansion of the National League is feasible."

The court also found that a substantial amount of business activity generated by and dependent upon the exhibition of major league games to large crowds, including radio and television broadcasting, has been prevented by termination of major league baseball in Milwaukee.

Conclusions [16] of Law

"1. The defendant corporations have violated Section 133.01 of the Wisconsin Statutes (1963) in the following respects:

"a. Having agreed among themselves to control and allocate professional baseball players, to assign to the respective corporate defendants exclusive territorial rights and privileges respecting the exhibition of professional Major League baseball games, and to limit the number of members in the National League of Professional Baseball Clubs of which the defendants are all the constituent members, they have now agreed to transfer the site of Major League baseball exhibitions from Milwaukee, Wisconsin, to Atlanta, Georgia, with the result that trade and commerce within the State of Wisconsin have been substantially restrained.

"b. They have combined and conspired among themselves to monopolize the business of Major League professional baseball within the State of Wisconsin.

"2. The National League of Professional Baseball Clubs is and has been the means and instrumentality by which the corporate defendants have engaged in the practices referred to in Paragraph 1 hereof.

"3. By means of the practices outlined in Paragraph 1 hereof the corporate defendants [17] and their counterpart members of the American League of Professional Baseball Clubs have acquired monopolistic control of all available ball players of Major League caliber with the result that the granting of permission from one of the said leagues in the form of a franchise to operate a Major League baseball team is necessary for any person to engage in the business of Professional Major League baseball.

"4. The corporate defendants' monopolistic control of Major League professional baseball requires the defendants to exercise reasonable control and to follow reasonable procedures in the issuance of memberships in the National League of Professional Baseball Clubs and in the definition of sites for baseball exhibitions and as respects the transfer of memberships.

"5. The transfer by the corporate defendants of the franchise in the National League of Professional Baseball Clubs from Milwaukee, Wisconsin, and the refusal to issue a replacement franchise allowing the exhibition of Major League baseball in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, was an unreasonable exercise of the monopolistic control of the business of Major League professional baseball and was in violation of Section 133.01, Wisconsin [18] Statutes (1963).

"6. The refusal of the National League and the failure of the American League to issue a franchise to Milwaukee County or the Milwaukee Brewers Baseball Club, Inc., was a concerted refusal to deal in restraint of trade and commerce within the State of Wisconsin in violation of Section 133.01, Wisconsin Statutes (1963)."

On May 5, 1966, the circuit court entered judgment awarding the state recovery from each defendant of $ 5,000 plus costs and disbursements except that recovery from the League was limited to $ 100 costs. The judgment included injunctive relief, the provisions of which are summarized as follows:

Defendants are enjoined from refusing to grant the application for membership in the National League submitted by Milwaukee county or Milwaukee Brewers Baseball Club, Inc., or by some other suitable person interested in operating a National League franchise with Milwaukee as its home; they are required to take action to facilitate the organization and operation of a major league baseball team with Milwaukee as its home beginning in 1967, including the granting of a franchise and the execution of an equitable plan for providing a supply of major league professional [19] players for such team. Unless and until such franchise be granted, defendants are enjoined from playing the Braves' home schedule elsewhere than in Milwaukee county stadium, but this requirement was stayed until May 18, 1966, provided the defendants submit a satisfactory plan for expansion in 1967 to the court by May 16, 1966.

Defendants appealed. Enforcement of the judgment was stayed by the circuit court pending determination of the appeal.

Additional facts will be referred to in the opinion.

Counsel: For the appellants there were briefs by Ray T. McCann of Milwaukee, attorney; and Willkie, Farr, Gallagher, Walton & Fitzgibbon of New York, New York, attorneys for appellants other than Atlanta Braves, Inc., and Louis F. Carroll, Bowie K. Kuhn, Louis L. Hoynes, Anthony J. Lynch, and Daniel W. Hildebrand, all of New York, New York, of counsel; and Winston, Strawn, Smith & Patterson of Chicago, Illinois, attorneys for Atlanta Braves, Inc., and Earl A. Jinkinson, Edward J. Wendrow, and John W. Stack, all of Chicago, Illinois, of counsel; and oral argument by Mr. Jinkinson, Mr. McCann, and Mr. Kuhn.

For the respondent there was a brief by Bronson [20] C. La Follette, attorney general, and George F. Sieker, assistant attorney general; Robert P. Russell, corporation counsel for Milwaukee county; Willard S. Stafford and John A. Hansen, both of Madison, special counsel for the state of Wisconsin; Steven E. Keane and John P. Eppel, both of Milwaukee, special assistant corporation counsel for Milwaukee county; and Louis F. Oberdorfer and Max O. Truitt, Jr., both of Washington, District of Columbia, special counsel for the state of Wisconsin, and oral argument by Mr. La Follette, Mr. Stafford, Mr. Sieker, and Mr. Keane.

Judges: Fairchild, J. Heffernan, Hallows, and Beilfuss, JJ. (dissenting).

Opinion by: FAIRCHILD

Opinion

[*713] [8] It seems crystal clear that under today's structure of organized professional baseball, defendants and the members of the American League have complete power to control participation in major league baseball, and to control the number of teams and the location of their home games; that although the power is shared with the American League, defendants nevertheless have very substantial and effective power of control; that major league baseball, as now carried on, [21] is a business in which large sums are invested, and substantial gains received by players and owners, and that many other business activities are generated by and dependent upon it; that all the continuous interaction which constitutes major league baseball, and which holds the interest and support of the public has for thirteen years reached into Wisconsin, but it now operates entirely outside this state; that defendants have, by agreement among themselves to transfer the Braves, terminated very substantial business activity in Wisconsin, and are totally and effectively preventing its resumption at the present time. On their face, these facts support a conclusion that there is a combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade and commerce, declared illegal by the [*714] first sentence of sec. 133.01, Stats., as well as a combination to monopolize trade, under the third sentence of the section.

The defense to a charge of violating that section appears to be grounded upon three principal contentions:

(1) Sec. 133.01, Stats., does not apply to this type of business;

(2) State regulation of the location of franchises and admission to the League would conflict with congressional [22] policy and unreasonably burden interstate commerce;

(3) If the state has any power to proscribe a decision to transfer a franchise unless reasonably arrived at, the Braves' decision to move from Milwaukee and the concurrence of the other defendants were reasonably arrived at.

1. Applicability of sec. 133.01, Stats. It is the contention of defendants that the exhibition of major league baseball games is the supply of a service, not an article or commodity, and that sec. 133.01 prohibits only restraints of trade or commerce in articles or commodities. The claim is that the second sentence in the section restricts the meaning of the first and third sentences.

[9] There are six sentences in sec. 133.01 (1), Stats., but only the first three need be considered in this context. The first sentence provides:

"Every HN1[] contract or combination in the nature of a trust or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce is hereby declared illegal."

The second sentence, condensed, provides that every combination, etc., "intended to restrain or prevent competition in the supply or price of any article or commodity . . ." or which "shall in any manner control the price of any such article [23] or commodity, fix the price thereof, limit or fix the amount or quantity thereof to be . . . sold in this state . . . is hereby declared an illegal restraint of trade."

[*715] The third sentence, condensed, provides that every party to any combination, etc., "herein declared unlawful or declared to be in restraint of trade, or who shall combine or conspire with any other person . . . to monopolize or attempt to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce in this state" shall forfeit for each such offense not less than $ 100 nor more than $ 5,000.

The language is open to the construction that the second sentence is a specific declaration that certain types of combination with respect to the supply or price of an article or commodity are illegal restraints of trade, but that the first sentence of sec. 133.01 (1), Stats., still embraces other types of restraint of trade not specifically enumerated or described. The third sentence, which imposes a forfeiture, is consistent with this construction, for it imposes a forfeiture on a party to a combination "herein declared unlawful" (first sentence) "or declared to be in restraint of trade" (second sentence). It also suggests [24] broad rather than narrow construction of the section, by imposing a forfeiture on anyone who shall conspire to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce in this state.

The first sentence is identical with ch. 219, sec. 1, Laws of 1893. Sec. 2 of that act imposed a forfeiture for monopolizing or conspiring to monopolize trade or commerce and sec. 5 allowed recovery of damages. The act contained no provision limited to articles or commodities. In the Revised Statutes of 1898, secs. 1, 2, and 5 were combined into sec. 1747e. The second sentence of present sec. 133.01 (1) was inserted by amendment of sec. 1747e by ch. 458, Laws of 1921. There is even less reason for supposing that the second sentence was an exclusive definition of the restraint of trade declared illegal by the first sentence or of the type of monopolization proscribed by the third sentence than if it had been part of the statute when first enacted.

Sec. 133.21, Stats., contains language very similar to the second sentence of sec. 133.01 (1) and provides that [*716] any corporation which shall enter into any combination so described, with respect to an article or commodity, shall have its charter canceled. [25] The source of this section was ch. 357, Laws of 1897, later appearing as sec. 1791j-1791m, R. S. 1898. Defendants call our attention to an opinion of the attorney general, 1908 Op. Atty. Gen. 495, stating that a combination of insurance companies seeking to regulate commissions paid to agents did not violate sec. 1791j because an agent's services are not a commodity. No reference was made to sec. 1747e in that opinion.

This court, however, in 1914, pointed out that sec. 1747e, Stats., was taken from the Sherman Act and should receive the same interpretation as that which was placed in the federal act by the supreme court of the United States. [1]

Defendants call our attention to the defeat in 1949 of a bill to amend the second sentence of sec. 133.01 (1), Stats., by adding the words "or service." It appears that there had been a [26] circuit court decision stating, [10] as dictum, that sec. 133.01 (1) would not apply to contracts fixing the prices of personal services. Although the defeat of the bill is consistent with defendants' position, we conclude that the insertion of the second sentence in 1921 did not limit the broad language of the first or third sentences to the types of combination described in the second.

Defendants also contend that because of the policy of this court of construing sec. 133.01, Stats., consistently with constructions of the Sherman Act, as pronounced by the supreme court of the United States, we should read into our statute the anomalous exemption from the federal act which organized baseball uniquely enjoys. The history of the development of this exemption will be noted elsewhere. Because of such history we do not deem [*717] the relevant decisions the type of construction of the meaning of the federal statute which ought to apply to our own.

2. The power of the state to apply its antitrust law in this instance. We are dealing with the very fabric of the organization of commercial baseball, the power over participation in this activity which results from the fact [27] that there is an organization, and, in this particular instance, an exercise of such power to the detriment of a community. One of the difficulties in dealing logically with such matters arises from the fact that the leagues have evolved along with the growth of organized baseball and that major league baseball as we know it is inseparable from the existence of leagues, some degree of control over free competition among teams and players, and some limitation of the number and capability of the constituent teams.

For an interesting history of the hundred-year evolution of the "organization" of commercially exhibited baseball, see Report No. 2002, House of Representatives, 2d Session, 82d Congress, "Organized Baseball," resulting from hearings of the subcommittee on Study of Monopoly Power of the Committee on the Judiciary, May 27, 1952.

As part of its conclusion, the subcommittee said, at page 229:

"The subcommittee recognizes, however, that baseball is a unique industry. Of necessity, the several clubs in each league must act as partners as well as competitors. The history of baseball has demonstrated that cooperation in many of the details of the operation of the baseball business [28] is essential to the maintenance of honest and vigorous competition on the playing field. For this reason organized baseball has adopted a system of rules and regulation that would be entirely inappropriate in an ordinary industry."

At least two courts have recognized the unique business character of organized professional sports and the [*718] necessity for a league structure. [2] In United States v. National Football League [3] it was stated:

"Professional football is a unique type of business. Like other professional sports which are organized on a league basis it has problems which no other business has. The ordinary business makes every effort to sell as much of its product or services as it can. In the course of doing this it may and often does put many of its competitors out of business. The ordinary businessman is not troubled by the knowledge that he is doing so well that his competitors are being driven out of business.

---

[1] Pulp Wood Co. v. Green Bay Paper & Fiber Co. (1914), 157 Wis. 604, 625, 147 N. W. 1058. See State v. Lewis and Leidersdorf Co. (1930), 201 Wis. 543, 549, 230 N. W. 692.

[2] United States v. National Football League (D. C. Pa. 1953), 116 Fed. Supp. 319, 323; American Football League v. National Football League (D. C. Md. 1962), 205 Fed. Supp. 60, 62, affirmed (4th Cir. 1963), 323 Fed. (2d) 124. See also Professional Sports Act of 1965, Calendar No. 446, Report No. 462, page 12 (Exhibit No. 526).

[3] Supra, footnote 2.

"Professional teams in a league, however, must not compete too well with each other in a business way. On the playing field, of course, they must compete [11] as hard as they can all the time. But it is not necessary and indeed it is [29] unwise for all the teams to compete as hard as they can against each other in a business way. If all the teams should compete as hard as they can in a business way, the stronger teams would be likely to drive the weaker ones into financial failure. If this should happen not only would the weaker teams fail, but eventually the whole league, both the weaker and the stronger teams, would fail, because without a league no team can operate profitably." [4]

The state appears to argue that the existence of defendants' power to deprive a community of existing activity in major league baseball plus their exercise of such power with [30] respect to a Wisconsin community is per se a violation of our law. The first paragraph of the conclusions of law of the circuit court appears to be in agreement with this contention.

The state argues, additionally, however, that even if monopoly power must be accepted as a concomitant of major league baseball, because of the necessity for league [*719] organization, a monopoly has a legal duty to deal reasonably with those who desire to deal with it. The circuit court, as stated in the conclusions of law, agreed, and considered that the transfer of the Braves accompanied by refusal of the league to enfranchise a new Milwaukee team was an unreasonable exercise of monopoly power.

Thus, on this second theory, the circuit court may have recognized the practical necessity of the existence of monopoly power in the members of the major leagues, and have felt that the mere use of that power in depriving a community of major league baseball would not be a violation if the defendants reasonably determined that continued operation in the community would entail losses which would eventually destroy the member club. Evidently the court concluded that the Braves or some other team [31] could have operated profitably in Milwaukee, and the decision to transfer the Braves to Atlanta without enfranchising a new Milwaukee team was an unreasonable one.

But whether unreasonableness of the decision must be or was sufficiently proved or not, or whether the exercise of defendants' power, and resulting destruction of business activity in this state would be enough to constitute a violation in any event, the question arises whether the state law can be applied, either because of the interstate character of the business of major league baseball, or because of such interstate character combined with the unique exemption which such business enjoys under the federal antitrust laws. Because our conclusion on this question disposes of the case, we assume, without deciding, that the findings and conclusions of the circuit court with respect to reasonableness can be sustained. The substantial injury to business activity within Wisconsin caused by the defendants' exercise of their monopoly power is clear, and we assume, at this point, that a violation of Wisconsin law has occurred if our law can be applied.

It is evident that the activity of major league baseball, spread through [32] eight states in the National League and nine states and the District of Columbia in the American [*720] League is interstate commerce. Any suggestion to the contrary in 1922 in the Federal Baseball Case, infra, has been effectively overruled in the subsequent decisions explaining the exemption enjoyed by organized baseball, hereinafter discussed, and those cases now make it clear that organized baseball is interstate commerce and Congress may therefore regulate it.

Not only are defendants engaged in interstate commerce which involves activity within Wisconsin, but enforcement of the antitrust policy of Wisconsin would directly affect defendants' operations outside the state as well.

[12] Application of our law to the situation before us would, in essence, require the league to admit a new member club. Although the judgment contains a provision requiring the Braves to return, we view it as an optional alternative to the relief which is more consistent with the policy of an antitrust law, namely expansion in membership when major league baseball is to be extended into new territory. It would be inconsistent with the very policy of an antitrust law for Wisconsin to [33] insist that the Braves be returned without expansion, because such an outcome would maintain the monopoly at the expense of Atlanta, or communities elsewhere which might seek to have a team. What the circuit court decision says, as we view it, is that as long as it is economically feasible for a major league team to have its home in Milwaukee, defendants must not use their monopoly power to deprive Milwaukee of a home team, but defendants were and still are free to choose whether the Braves should continue in Milwaukee or some new team should operate there.

[4] Ibid. at page 323.

Because of the nature of the competition within the league and the mechanics of game schedules, it is obvious that expansion in league membership would affect the activities of every defendant, at least to the extent of games between the new and old members at the home location of each, a change in number of games played, and other incidents of scheduling. It also appears that expansion requires a reallotment of available players [*721] among all the teams, or some other means of supplying a new team or teams with a sufficient number of players of the requisite ability.

It is clear that in the absence of the antitrust feature [34] of defendants' agreement to remove the Braves (i.e., exercise of monopoly power and agreement in restraint of trade) the state would have no power to prevent or impede the removal of a business enterprise even though such removal injured the interest of the state in preserving business activity within its borders. [5]

The question to be decided under the commerce and supremacy clauses of the constitution of the United States is: Does the presence and exercise of monopoly power arising out of the nature of the organization of baseball permit the application of the state's policy in this instance?

The state may, ordinarily, protect the interests of its people by enforcing [35] its antitrust act against persons doing business in interstate commerce, but then, ordinarily, the federal government has an antitrust policy like that of the state. [6] In the case of organized baseball, however, there is no applicable federal antitrust law. The history of judicial action and legislative inaction with respect to organized baseball at leasts suggests a federal policy of approval of the existing structure, and the question readily arises whether there is a conflict between state and federal policy, so that the state policy must yield.

We emphasize that we are dealing here with a decision by the league as to the number and identity of its members (since the real vice of defendants' decision to move the Braves to a different location is the refusal to admit to membership a team with its home in Milwaukee). And [*722] a decision by the league on such a matter is a necessary incident of existence as [36] a league.

The baseball exemption from federal antitrust laws was initially determined in 1922 by the decision of the supreme court of [13] the United States in Federal Baseball Club v. National League. [7] A league of eight clubs, known as the Federal League, had attempted to become a major league. A settlement of this "baseball war" was reached by agreement among all parties except one club in the new league. It brought suit against the major leagues and others, claiming treble damages because the settlement agreement allegedly violated the Sherman Act.

In an opinion by Mr. Justice Holmes, the court held that exhibitions of baseball were purely state affairs, were not trade or commerce in the ordinarily accepted use of the words, and the interstate transportation of players was merely incidental. [8] This case, of course, involved an aspect of control over participation in major league baseball closely related to the one now before us.

---

[5] Oklahoma v. Kansas Natural Gas Co. (1911), 221 U.S. 229, 31 Sup. Ct. 564, 55 L. Ed. 716; Pennsylvania v. West Virginia (1923), 262 U.S. 553, 43 Sup. Ct. 658, 67 L. Ed. 1117; Toomer v. Witsell (1948), 334 U.S. 385, 68 Sup. Ct. 1156, 92 L. Ed. 1460; Hood & Sons v. Du Mond (1949), 336 U.S. 525, 69 Sup. Ct. 657, 93 L. Ed. 865.

[6] State v. Allied Chemical & Dye Corp. (1960), 9 Wis. (2d) 290, 295, 101 N. W. (2d) 133.

[7] (1922), 259 U.S. 200, 42 Sup. Ct. 465, 66 L. Ed. 898.

[8] See also National League v. Federal Baseball Club (1920), 269 Fed. Rep. 681, for the opinion of the court of appeals of the District of Columbia, affirmed and relied upon by the supreme court.

[*37] Thirty-one years later the question again reached the supreme court of the United States in Toolson v. New York Yankees. [9] This and companion cases were treble-damage actions by players who alleged they were damaged by control of their freedom to participate as players. The short per curiam decision (from which two justices dissented) appears to treat Federal Baseball as a decision that HN2[] Congress did not intend to include the business of baseball within the federal antitrust laws, to suggest that the court might not have reached the same decision in 1953 as it did in 1922, but to hold that because the business had developed for thirty years on the understanding [*723] that it was exempt, any change should be left to Congress where legislation would have only prospective effect. The court also noted that Congress had had the ruling under consideration, but had not seen fit to legislate on the subject.

[*38] The court's view of the situation was made more explicit in two subsequent cases.

In United States v. Shubert [10] (applying the Sherman Act to the performance of legitimate stage attractions), the court said, at page 229:

"In Toolson, where the issue was the same as in Federal Baseball, the Court was confronted with a unique combination of circumstances. For over 30 years there had stood a decision of this Court specifically fixing the status of the baseball business under the antitrust laws and more particularly the validity of the so-called 'reserve clause.' During this period, in reliance on the Federal Baseball precedent, the baseball business had grown and developed. . . . And Congress, although it had actively considered the ruling, had not seen fit to reject it by amendatory legislation. Against this background, the Court in Toolson was asked to overrule Federal Baseball on the ground that it was out of step with subsequent decisions reflecting present-day concepts of interstate commerce. The Court, in view of the circumstances of the case, declined to do so. But neither did the Court necessarily reaffirm all that was said in Federal Baseball [39] . Instead, '[w]ithout reexamination of the underlying issues,' the Court adhered to Federal Baseball 'so far as that decision determines that Congress had no intention of including the business of baseball within the scope of the federal antitrust laws.' 356 U.S., at 357. In short, Toolson was [14] a narrow application of the rule of stare decisis."

The baseball cases were also discussed in Radovich v. National Football League: [11]

"In Toolson we continued to hold the umbrella over baseball that was placed there some 31 years earlier by Federal Baseball. The Court did this because it was [*724] concluded that more harm would be done in overruling Federal Baseball than in upholding a ruling which at best was of dubious validity. Vast efforts had gone into the development and organization of baseball since that decision and enormous capital had been invested in reliance on its permanence. Congress had chosen to [40] make no change. All this, combined with the flood of litigation that would follow its repudiation, the harassment that would ensue, and the retroactive effect of such a decision, led the Court to the practical result that it should sustain the unequivocal line of authority reaching over many years.

"The Court was careful to restrict Toolson's coverage to baseball, following the judgment of Federal Baseball only so far as it 'determines that Congress had no intention of including the business of baseball within the scope of the federal antitrust laws.' . . . As long as the Congress continues to acquiesce we should adhere to -- but not extend -- the interpretation of the Act made in those cases. . . .

"If this ruling is unrealistic, inconsistent, or illogical, it is sufficient to answer, aside from the distinctions between the businesses, that were we considering the question of baseball for the first time upon a clean slate we would have no doubts. But Federal Baseball held the business of baseball outside the scope of the Act. No other business claiming the coverage of those cases has such an adjudication. We, therefore, conclude that the orderly way to eliminate [41] error or discrimination, if any there be, is by legislation and not by court decision. Congressional processes are more accommodative, affording the whole industry hearings and an opportunity to assist in the formulation of new legislation. The resulting product is therefore more likely to protect the industry and the public alike. The whole scope of congressional action would be known long in advance and effective dates for the legislation could be set in the future without the injustices of retroactivity and surprise which might follow court action. Of course, the doctrine of Toolson and Federal Baseball must yield to any congressional action and continues only at its sufferance. . . ." [12]

[9] (1953), 346 U.S. 356, 74 Sup. Ct. 78, 98 L. Ed. 64, affirming Toolson v. New York Yankees (D. C. Cal. 1951), 101 Fed. Supp. 93, Toolson v. New York Yankees (9th Cir. 1952), 200 Fed. (2d) 198, Kowalski v. Chandler (6th Cir. 1953), 202 Fed. (2d) 413, and Corbett v. Chandler (6th Cir. 1953), 202 Fed. (2d) 428.

[10] (1955), 348 U.S. 222, 75 Sup. Ct. 277, 99 L. Ed. 279.

[11] (1957), 352 U.S. 445, 77 Sup. Ct. 390, 1 L. Ed. (2d) 456.

On July 16, 1965, a report from the Committee on the Judiciary (Senate) stated:

[*725] "The Congress has shown awareness of the problems created by the various decisions of the Supreme Court affecting organized professional [42] team sports and has given consideration to their antitrust aspects for 14 years. In that time approximately 60 bills have been introduced dealing with the status of professional team sports under the antitrust laws. Some of these bills sought to remedy the anomaly under which baseball was held to be outside the antitrust laws while other professional sports were declared within those laws." [13]

Thus it appears that organized baseball enjoys, by reason of long continued reliance on Federal Baseball and the policy reasoning of the supreme court that any change should be brought about by legislation, with prospective effect only, an exemption from the federal antitrust laws which no [15] other organized sport enjoys even where the structure and operation of the organization may be similar.

We venture to guess that this HN3[] exemption does not cover every type of business activity to which a baseball club or league [43] might be a party and does not protect clubs or leagues from application of the federal acts to activities which are not incidental to the maintenance of league structure, [14] but it does seem clear that the exemption at least covers the agreements and rules which provide for the structure of the organization and the decisions which are necessary steps in maintaining it. The type of decision involved in this case, in essence, whether to admit a new member in order to replace an existing member which desired to move to a new area, appears to be so much an incident of league operation as to fall within the exemption.

[*726] If Congress were to provide expressly that these matters were, [44] for the present, to be left free from state as well as federal control, no state would have the power to regulate, reexamine, or review, or find violation of its antitrust law in decisions made with respect to location or transfer of a franchise or with respect to admissions to membership.

But we do not have an express provision, and the question is whether such intent is to be implied under the circumstances.

One author has described the problem as follows:

". . . The problem is not identical with the ascertainment of the intent of Congress, as that phrase is commonly used in the construction of a given statute. Rather the Court is seeking consistency with the tendency manifested by the relevant action of Congress. Thus it seems fair to say the Court seeks consistency with the policy apparent in federal legislation, so far as the Court can ascertain that policy. The Court has to guess, and in guessing it is likely to conceive that its wisdom coincides with the wisdom of Congress. Where no relevant policy can be perceived, the will of Congress is nonexistent.

---

[12] Id. pages 450-452.

[13] Professional Sports Act of 1965, Calendar No. 446, Report No. 462, p. 6 (Exhibit No. 526).

[14] See United States v. National Football League (D. C. Pa. 1953), 116 Fed. Supp. 319, holding restrictions imposed by the National Football League on the sale of radio and television rights illegal; Report No. 2002, House of Representatives, 2d Session, 82d Congress, "Organized Baseball," pages 7, 230 (Exhibit No. 7).

"In effect, then, this approach emphasizes the idea that state statutes, having a material relation to interstate commerce, [45] are to fail if they do not fit into the federal legislative policy for such commerce. That scheme of things involves three familiar categories: (1) subjects which are to be free from all regulation, at least for the time being; (2) subjects which Congress has regulated directly or through its agencies; and (3) subjects which Congress desires to be left to the states, at least for the time being. . . ." [15]

The supreme court of the United States has said that:

". . . the silence of Congress, when it has authority to speak, may sometimes give rise to an implication as to the Congressional purpose" but "The nature and extent of that implication depend upon the nature of the Congressional power and the effect of its exercise."

[*727] The court explained further, in a footnote:

"The failure of Congress to regulate interstate commerce has generally been taken to signify a Congressional purpose to leave undisturbed [46] the authority of the states to make regulations affecting the commerce in matters of peculiarly local concern, but to withhold from them authority to make regulations affecting those phases of it which, because of the [16] need of a national uniformity, demand that their regulation, if any, be prescribed by a single authority [citing cases]." [16]

The court has also said that HN4[] while various tests may be used for guidance as to the regulatory power left to the states where Congress is silent, the ultimate question is whether the state action conflicts with national policy:

"Certain first principles are no longer in doubt. Whether as inference from congressional silence, or as a negative implication from the grant of power itself, when Congress has not specifically acted we have accepted the Cooley case's broad delineation of the areas of state and national power over interstate commerce. Cooley [47] v. Port Wardens, 12 How. 299; Southern Pacific Co. v. Arizona, 325 U.S. 761, 768. See Ribble, State and National Power Over Commerce, ch. 10. HN5[] Absent congressional action, the familiar test is that of uniformity versus locality: if a case falls within an area in commerce thought to demand a uniform national rule, state action is struck down. If the activity is one of predominantly local interest, state action is sustained. More accurately, the question is whether the state interest is outweighed by a national interest in the unhampered operation of interstate commerce.

"There is no longer any question that Congress can redefine the areas of local and national predominance, Prudential Insurance Co. v. Benjamin, 328 U.S. 408; Southern Pacific Co. v. Arizona, supra, at 769, despite theoretical inconsistency with the rationale of the Commerce Clause as a limitation in its own right. The words of the Clause -- a grant of power -- admit of no other result. When Congress enters the field by legislation, we [*728] try to discover to what extent it intended to exercise its power of redefinition; here we are closer to an intent that can be demonstrated with assurance, [48] although we may employ presumptions grounded in experience in doubtful cases.

"But whether Congress has or has not expressed itself, the fundamental inquiry, broadly stated, is the same: does the state action conflict with national policy? The Cooley rule and its later application, Southern Pacific Co. v. Arizona, supra, the question of congressional 'occupation of the field,' and the search for conflict in the very terms of state and federal statutes are but three separate particularizations of this initial principle." [17]

---

[15] Ribble, State and National Power Over Commerce, Columbia University Press (1937), p. 212.

[16] Graves v. New York ex rel. O'Keefe (1939), 306 U.S. 466, 479, 59 Sup. Ct. 595, 83 L. Ed. 927.

[17] California v. Zook (1949), 336 U.S. 725, 728, 729, 69 Sup. Ct. 841, 93 L. Ed. 1005. See also Southern Pacific Co. v. Arizona (1945), 325 U.S. 761, 767, 768, 65 Sup. Ct. 1515, 89 L. Ed. 1915, wherein it is stated: "But ever since Gibbons v. Ogden . . . the states have not been deemed to have authority to impede substantially the free flow of commerce from state to state, or to regulate those phases of the national commerce which, because of the need of national uniformity, demand that their regulation, if any, be prescribed by a single authority. . . . Whether or not this long-recognized distribution of power between the national

[*49] [17] The situation which confronts us is not one where Congress has been silent as to a particular type of regulation in a broad field of interstate commerce, where the proposition may readily be implied that although no need [*729] has been found for federal regulation, state regulation of local aspects may be quite appropriate. Rather, here, Congress has remained silent as to regulation of a particular industry, either by imposition of antitrust laws or otherwise, in the face of and seemingly in response to a series of judicial decisions which uniquely and emphatically pose the question to Congress of whether there shall be regulation in antitrust terms or otherwise. This industry has been organized for many years with a structure of which monopoly and restraint of trade are characteristics. The decisions suggest the probability, if not certainty, that the operations of organized baseball are rife with violation of the Sherman Act if it were to be applied, decline to apply the act because of the investment which has been made in reliance upon the belief that the act does not apply and, because of the havoc that retrospective application of the act would cause, call [50] upon Congress to enact whatever regulation for the future it deems wise.

Reports of committees of both houses already referred to [18] show that substantial attention has been given to the question. The fact that Congress will, when motivated, act in response to judicial concern over organized professional sports is shown by its action following a federal court decision holding that certain television practices of the National Football League violated federal antitrust laws. [19] Congress enacted a statute which permits the member clubs of a league in the organized team sports to pool their individual television rights for sale by the league as a package. [20]

[*51] [*730] It is plausibly argued that silence of Congress in this context demonstrates congressional recognition that league structure and the related agreements and rules are integral parts of professional baseball as it exists, and that the application of the familiar type of antitrust legislation to the structural arrangements of organized baseball is inappropriate; that the control of the various elements of the structure which would otherwise involve prohibited monopoly or agreement in restraint of trade or commerce is, for the present, to be left completely to those who have that authority under the agreements and rules which cement the structure; that there is to be self-regulation until such time as Congress decides that the public interest requires other control.

Some members of this court, including the writer of this opinion, conclude that the silence of Congress in this context sufficiently implies such policy, and that application and enforcement of a state antitrust law to decisions of the league as to the location of franchises and membership in the league would conflict with the national policy in this segment of interstate commerce. We deem it unrealistic to interpret [52] these decisions of the supreme court of the United States plus the silence of Congress as creating a mere vacuum in national [18] policy, leaving the states free to regulate the membership of the baseball leagues.

Other members of the court prefer the view that the structure of the leagues, their decisions as to their own membership, location of franchises, and things of that nature, require uniformity of regulation, and since organized and the state governments is predicated upon the implications of the commerce clause itself, . . . or upon the presumed intention of Congress, where Congress has not spoken, . . . the result is the same." (Emphasis added); Flynn, Federalism and State Antitrust Regulation (1964 Michigan Legal Publications), wherein the author states on page 199: "What is being suggested therefore is that in the area of concurrent state and federal jurisdiction, state antitrust laws should only be exempted or suspended from operation to the extent that federal antitrust laws are precluded from operation by federal regulatory legislation and antitrust exemptions. To permit application of state antitrust policy where federal antitrust policy is forbidden to tread, would defeat, obstruct, and frustrate the congressional scheme of regulation or defeat a national policy enunciated by an exemption from the federal antitrust laws." Also, Dowling, Interstate Commerce and State Power, 27 Virginia Law Review (1940), 1.

---

[18] Report No. 2002, House of Representatives, 2d Session, 82d Congress, "Organized Baseball;" Professional Sports Act of 1965, Calendar No. 446, Report No. 462, page 6 (Exhibit No. 526).

[19] United States v. National Football League (D. C. Pa. 1953), 116 Fed. Supp. 319 and (D. C. Pa. 1961), 196 Fed. Supp. 445 (construction of final judgment).

[20] Public Law 87-331, Sept. 30, 1961, 75 Stat. 732; 15 USCA, Secs. 1291-1295; H. R. 9096, 87th Congress, U. S. Code Congressional and Administrative News (1961), page 3042.

baseball operates widely in interstate commerce, the regulation, if there is to be any, must be prescribed by Congress. [21]

As already pointed out, the operations of each league cover a number of states. Wisconsin is presently concerned over the problem created by removal of a team [*731] from one of its communities. Other states (Washington, for example, or Georgia if the Braves had not moved there) have no major league baseball activity but have an interest in the granting of a franchise in some presumably [53] eligible community within them. Texas, one of whose communities has a team, and is therefore not faced with a serious problem of obtaining personal jurisdiction, has an apparent interest in a favorable decision on application by a club in another of its communities. There may well be a limit to the number of teams which can feasibly be included in a major league, and the answer to this question involves the exercise of discretion. There could be an applicant in a community which is economically incapable of supporting a team, and economic feasibility is another issue to be decided. There may well be thought to be a national interest in a wider distribution of available franchises throughout the country, but it may be doubted that a state will be objective in deciding whether that is an appropriate consideration, nor what the answer should be in a given case. If Wisconsin can reach her problem by application of her antitrust statute, other states would have equal standing to apply other types of regulatory rules and procedures, involving differing standards for decision. We have already observed that HN6[] the regulations of league membership imposed by any state necessarily affect [54] activities of members in other states.

It is true that the suggested confusion of state regulation does not appear presently to be a fact, [22] but those who adhere to this view consider that variance in the local interests, and the standards which would be applied, and the impact of a state's action on activities outside its borders are sufficient that we should not read into the silence of Congress permission for the individual states to regulate these matters.

[*732] A majority of this court (though not in complete agreement as to which of the two theories just stated is controlling), conclude that the Wisconsin antitrust statute cannot, because of requirements of the federal constitution, be applied to concerted action by the defendants in moving the Braves from Milwaukee and refusing applications by others for a franchise.

Accordingly the judgment will be reversed and the complaint dismissed.

We [55] must observe, however, that the record in this case emphasizes the existence of a problem, even though the state is powerless to deal with it. The record strongly suggests that the defendants gave little heed to the interests of the Milwaukee community, and to the injury which the move would cause. There ought, we think, to be included in any law which Congress may pass upon this subject some provision which would protect communities, either those who have or hope to have home teams, from arbitrary and unfair dealing.

By the Court. -- Judgment reversed, cause remanded with directions to dismiss the complaint.

Dissent by: HEFFERNAN; HALLOWS; BEILFUSS

Dissent

Heffernan, Hallows, and Beilfuss, JJ. (dissenting).

We respectfully dissent from the opinion of the majority and conclude there is neither [19] federal preemption of the Wisconsin law nor is the remedy sought by the state of Wisconsin in this action of a nature that the enforcement of the trial court's order will burden interstate commerce in the sense proscribed by the constitution. The majority opinion admits that the operations of baseball complained of clearly violate the well established standards of business behavior [56] prescribed by Wisconsin antitrust statutes. Moreover, the majority opinion specifically subscribes to the trial court's findings that these specific violations of law by organized baseball have caused substantial injury to business activity in Wisconsin.

[21] Graves v. New York ex rel. O'Keefe, supra, footnote 16.

[22] Cf. Huron Cement Co. v. Detroit (1960), 362 U.S. 440, 448, 80 Sup. Ct. 813, 4 L. Ed. (2d) 852.

We are thus confronted with activities carried on by a business enterprise that, in the absence of some immunity, [*733] are clearly unlawful. The majority finds that there is such immunity and, alternatively, bases that conclusion upon two reasons: (1) That the silence of Congress evinces a congressional policy that baseball shall be free of all control, state as well as federal; and (2) that any state regulation of baseball is ipso facto a burden on interstate commerce, since, by its nature, professional baseball is an area of commerce that can be controlled, if at all, only by uniform rules that in a practical sense can be promulgated by Congress alone. It is noteworthy that the opinion of the majority does not reflect unanimity of its reasons but only the result.

The argument of the majority is that the failure of the Congress to act in the face of the importunings of the United States supreme court is equivalent [57] to a positive declaration of congressional will that baseball should not only be unregulated federally but should also be free of state control. The acceptance of federal preemption under the circumstances of this case appears to be contrary to the past pronouncements of this court. In the recent case of Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. La Follette (1965), 27 Wis. (2d) 505, 512, 135 N. W. (2d) 269, we restated the rule which this court has long followed and which follows the decisions of the United States supreme court on the subject -- that "before pre-emption will be found to exist, that intention of Congress must be clearly manifested."

In Welch Co. v. New Hampshire (1939), 306 U.S. 79, 85, 59 Sup. Ct. 438, 83 L. Ed. 500, the United States supreme court stated:

"'In construing federal statutes enacted under the power conferred by the commerce clause of the Constitution . . . it should never be held that Congress intends to supersede or suspend the exercise of the reserved powers of a State, even where that may be done, unless, and except so far as, its purpose to do so is clearly manifested.'"

[*734] That being the standard where specific legislation is involved, can [58] there be a less rigorous criterion for the preemption of state police power where our only clue to congressional intent is nonaction? Can we conclude that congressional silence amounts to a manifestation that it is the national policy and the congressional will that baseball be free of all regulation? We think not. [1] The majority opinion subscribes to the view "that the silence of Congress in this context sufficiently amounts to an expression of such policy." No authority is quoted for this proposition, nor does a review of the briefs of the appellants reveal the citation of any prior adjudications which hold that we may predicate a policy of preemption upon silence. The most that possibly can be concluded from the failure of Congress to enact some regulation of baseball is that it reveals a congressional complacency with its own policy of nonaction and inertia. Even that is a strained interpretation since the record shows that there have been several unsuccessful attempts to enact congressional regulation [20] which would clarify the attitude of Congress toward the regulation of organized baseball.

[*59] The supreme court of the United States in Federal Baseball Club v. National League (1922), 259 U.S. 200, 42 Sup. Ct. 465, 66 L. Ed. 898, held that baseball was not in interstate commerce and, therefore, not subject to the federal antitrust laws. Subsequent decisions make it abundantly clear that the rationale of Federal Baseball is invalid and that, in fact, baseball is in interstate commerce. However, the United States supreme court, relying upon stare decisis, has continued to extend the umbrella of protection from federal antitrust legislation over the baseball business. Congressional inaction can be construed as acquiescence in the court's interpretation, [*735] but this in no way constitutes an expression of intent that Congress shall exclusively occupy the field or that there shall be no control whatsoever. As was pointed out in Graves v. New York ex rel. O'Keefe (1939), 306 U.S. 466, footnote 1, 479, 59 Sup. Ct. 595, 83 L. Ed. 927:

---

[1] See Federal Trade Comm. v. Dean Foods Co. (1966), 384 U.S. 597, 86 Sup. Ct. 1738, 16 L. Ed. (2d) 802; Helvering v. Hallock (1940), 309 U.S. 106, 119-121, 60 Sup. Ct. 444, 84 L. Ed. 604.

"The failure of Congress to regulate interstate commerce has generally been taken to signify a Congressional purpose to leave undisturbed the authority of the states to make regulations affecting the commerce in matters [60] of peculiarly local concern, but to withhold from them authority to make regulations affecting those phases of it which, because of the need of a national uniformity, demand that their regulation, if any, be prescribed by a single authority."

The majority opinion, moreover, hypothesizes a conflict between state and federal legislation where none exists in fact. In Huron Cement Co. v. Detroit (1960), 362 U.S. 440, 443, 80 Sup. Ct. 813, 4 L. Ed. (2d) 852, the court said:

"'The intent to supersede the exercise by the State of its police power as to matters not covered by the Federal legislation is not to be inferred from the mere fact that Congress has seen fit to circumscribe its regulation and to occupy a limited field. In other words, such intent is not to be implied unless the act of Congress fairly interpreted is in actual conflict with the law of the State.'"

The United States supreme court in the same case referred to its "teaching . . . which enjoin seeking out conflicts between state and federal regulation where none clearly exists." Huron Cement Co. v. Detroit, supra, page 446.

The majority opinion by construing the silence of Congress as conflicting with the state's [61] policy as expressed in its antitrust laws appears to disregard this admonition.

It seems clear that the proposition that the majority asserts is a novel one without prior foundation in constitutional [*736] law and is an express repudiation of the doctrine that there shall be preemption or a superseding of state regulations only by express legislation.

A more difficult problem is presented by the second facet or alternate basis of the majority's opinion. The majority states the proposition, "that the structure of the leagues, their decisions as to their own membership, location of franchises, and things of that nature, require uniformity of regulation, and since organized baseball operates widely in interstate commerce, the regulation, if there is to be any, must be prescribed by Congress." It is generally stated:

"Absent congressional action, the familiar test is that of uniformity versus locality: if a case falls within an area in commerce thought to demand a uniform national rule, state action is struck down. If the activity is one of predominantly local interest, state action is sustained. More accurately, the question is whether the state interest is outweighed by a [62] national interest in the unhampered operation of interstate commerce." California v. Zook (1949), [21] 336 U.S. 725, 728, 69 Sup. Ct. 841, 93 L. Ed. 1005.

This argument partakes of the theory that irrespective of congressional action or inaction, there is a certain sphere of interstate commerce within which a state may not operate at all. This area is one in which congressional intent is immaterial. Our federal system envisages the free flow of commerce, in the various meanings of that phrase, from one state to another unhampered by state action. Hence, if our federal political union is to thrive, certain aspects of interstate commerce cannot be interfered with, irrespective of congressional will or the claims of state police power. The majority opinion, as an alternative to the argument based on the manifestation of congressional will, follows this line of reasoning. The majority's approach, however, overlooks the recognized necessity of balancing national interest versus [*737] local interest as such interests are juxtaposed in a given situation. As the United States supreme court pointed out in California v. Thompson (1941), 313 U.S. 109, 113, 61 Sup. Ct. [63] 930, 85 L. Ed. 1219:

"The Commerce Clause, in conferring on Congress power to regulate commerce, did not wholly withdraw from the states the power to regulate matters of local concern with respect to which Congress has not exercised its power, even though the regulation affects interstate commerce."

That case cites numerous instances where the United States supreme court has upheld the exercise of state police power which clearly regulated some phase of interstate commerce. In the same opinion, the United States supreme court, speaking through Mr. Justice Stone, stated:

"It has been recognized that there are matters of local concern, the regulation of which unavoidably involves some regulation of interstate commerce, but which because of their local character and their number and diversity may never be adequately dealt with by Congress. Because of their local character, also, there is wide scope for local regulation without impairing the uniformity of control of the national commerce in matters of national concern and without materially obstructing the free flow of commerce which were the principal objects sought to be secured by the Commerce Clause. Notwithstanding the Commerce [64] Clause, such regulation in the absence of Congressional action has, for the most part, been left to the states by the decisions of this Court, subject only to other applicable constitutional restraints." California v. Thompson, supra, page 113.

The court concluded its discussion upholding a California police regulation by stating:

"In any case, until Congress undertakes its regulation, we can find no adequate basis for saying that the Constitution, interpreted as a working instrument of government, has foreclosed regulation . . . by local authority."

[*738] The majority opinion points out the cavalier disregard of either law or reasonableness in the exercise of the baseball monopoly. We cannot conclude that the state is less able to resist this treatment of its legitimate interests by organized baseball than it is to prevent the entrance into its boundaries of contagious disease, although such disease is carried in interstate commerce. Morgan's Steamship Co. v. Louisiana (1886), 118 U.S. 455, 6 Sup. Ct. 1114, 30 L. Ed. 237; Compagnie Francaise v. Board of Health (1902), 186 U.S. 380, 22 Sup. Ct. 811, 46 L. Ed. 1209. The record, as the majority indicates, strongly [65] suggests that the defendant gave little heed to the Milwaukee community and to the injury which the move of the Braves out of Wisconsin would cause. Organized baseball is engaged in a boycott of Wisconsin business. The argument is posed that, although this injury be admitted, for the state of Wisconsin by its decree either to order the [22] Braves team to stay here or to direct the National League to furnish an expansion team would burden interstate commerce, which, if it is to be burdened at all, can be done uniformly only by congressional action. It appears, however, that in view of the particular circumstances of this case, the paramount interest in regulating baseball is a Wisconsin interest, not a national interest. As stated in California v. Thompson, supra, page 115:

"Fraudulent or unconscionable conduct of those so engaged which is injurious to their patrons, is peculiarly a subject of local concern and the appropriate subject of local regulation."

The National League and the Milwaukee Braves, Inc., saw fit to come within the jurisdiction of the Wisconsin courts, and for thirteen years continued to play its home games in Milwaukee. It is not contradicted that [66] as a result of the Braves' presence in Wisconsin, transportation facilities were expanded, municipal services were augmented, and industries of various types were created [*739] or expanded to support organized baseball in Milwaukee. The record shows, and the findings of the court are not disputed by the majority, that the National League baseball team was a profitable enterprise during the time that it was located in Wisconsin. Admitting that the order of the trial court to either return the Braves to Milwaukee or, in the alternative, have the National League furnish an expansion team within a reasonable length of time is to prevent a boycott of Wisconsin commerce, does that factor ipso facto constitute a burden on interstate commerce?

We think not. It is well settled that a state may exercise its police powers through such devices as the antitrust laws even though an incidental benefit may be to local commerce, providing that the law or its operation do not discriminate against interstate commerce or disrupt its required uniformity. Huron Cement Co. v. Detroit (1960), 362 U.S. 440, 448, 80 Sup. Ct. 813, 4 L. Ed. (2d) 852; Head v. New Mexico Board (1963), 374 [67] U.S. 424, 83 Sup. Ct. 1759, 10 L. Ed. (2d) 983; Cooley v. Board of Wardens (1851), 53 U.S. (12 How.) 299, 13 L. Ed. 996. There is no intimation by the appellant that the Wisconsin antitrust laws are applied in a discriminatory manner. It is equally clear that state antitrust laws can be enforced concurrently with, or in the absence of, federal regulation. Watson v. Buck (1941), 313 U.S. 387, 403, 61 Sup. Ct. 962, 85 L. Ed. 1416; The Commerce Clause and State Antitrust Regulation, 61 Columbia Law Review (1961), p. 1469. Here, the Wisconsin antitrust laws concededly are being applied in exactly the same fashion that they would be applied to a wholly domestic corporation.

Clearly, the order of the trial court imposes some restrictions upon baseball's conduct in interstate commerce, but this dissenting opinion concludes that the valid interests of the state of Wisconsin, which are entitled to protection, outweigh the restrictive effect on interstate commerce that might result from the enforcement [*740] of Wisconsin's laws. Under such circumstances, the preemption argument or overriding-national-interest argument should be rejected and the state law sustained. See Constitutional [68] Law, West Publishing Company (1963), 310, 319, reprinting Pre-emption as a Preferential Ground: A New Canon of Construction, 12 Stanford Law Review (1959), 208.

The violation of Wisconsin's antitrust laws is apparent and the wrong that has been done to Wisconsin and its citizens is substantial. As the trial court determined in its findings, the unbridled exercise of monopoly by the Braves baseball team will deprive the public and various businesses located in Milwaukee of substantial economic and recreational benefits, [2] and as the [23] court concluded as a matter of law the conduct of the Braves ball club constitutes a violation of Wisconsin's antitrust statutes. The majority in arriving at its conclusion concede the antitrust violation, if the application of the statute is not otherwise barred.

The trial court's order directs that these wrongs shall be rectified by providing, in the alternative, that the [69] baseball team shall either return to Milwaukee or that an expansion team be furnished by the league.

This would not appear to be an onerous burden upon baseball. The direction is merely to return to Milwaukee, where operations have been profitable and where, as a matter of fact, the trial court has found that continued profitable operations are feasible. The trial court also found, as a matter of fact, that expansion of the league is feasible. What the trial court has directed is not the curtailment or burdening of interstate commerce, but its emancipation from the monopolistic practices of baseball. It has directed that baseball, in its dealings with a community where it has prospered for thirteen years, act reasonably. All that is prohibited is the [*741] unreasonable use of monopoly power. It can hardly be argued that it is in the national interest to preserve a monopoly that may with impunity flout the laws of the state of Wisconsin and injure its citizens and economy. The appellant argues that the affirmance of the trial court's ruling will undermine the very essence of organized baseball. It may well be that baseball as presently operated, above the law, should [70] in some respects be modified, but we conclude that organized baseball underestimates the viability of the national pastime and exaggerates the potential state control that can emanate from an affirmance of the trial court's order. Only in the unique case, as the facts reveal here, where a baseball club in collusion with others unreasonably determines to boycott in toto an area previously served would the relief sought by the state of Wisconsin be possible. It is not contended that an antitrust or other regulatory action could be brought where there had not been a prior offering of regular baseball exhibitions.

We are not convinced that for baseball to be successful it must be unlawful. Admittedly, the judgment of the Braves' management (whose wisdom was severely challenged in the course of trial) to leave Milwaukee or for the league to totally abandon the area would be superseded by the affirmance of the order of the trial court. This, however, is a usual result where relief is sought under an antitrust statute. Management decisions are superseded if the compelling public interest so requires. The balance that must be struck in determining whether a state policy burdens [71] interstate commerce is not dependent upon the effect it may have upon the particular item of commerce, but rather upon its impact on the national interest in preserving that commerce in its unregulated form. [3] It is difficult to see that any national interest is served by preserving a flow of commerce that at will [*742] violates the laws of one of the states and the legitimate interests of its citizens.

The fact that Congress has not acted would appear to be persuasive reason for the state to act. As pointed out in Parker v. Brown (1943), 317 U.S. 341, 362, 63 Sup. Ct. 307, 87 L. Ed. 315, state regulations of interstate commerce are to be upheld "because upon a consideration of all the relevant facts and circumstances it appears that the matter is one which may appropriately be regulated in the interest of the safety, health and well-being of local communities, and which, because of its local character, and the practical [72] difficulties involved, may never be adequately dealt with by Congress." (Emphasis supplied.)

---

[2] One witness testified that the annual economic benefit to Milwaukee amounted to $ 18,000,000.

[3] Parker v. Brown (1943), 317 U.S. 341, 362, 63 Sup. Ct. 307, 87 L. Ed. 315.

Baseball has heretofore successfully evaded all control. In Federal Baseball, [24] supra, it contended, and successfully persuaded the United States supreme court, that it was purely in intrastate commerce and therefore immune from federal regulation. By a process of legal ossification it manages to preserve this immunity, while at the same time it asserts that it is in interstate commerce and therefore immune from state control. We are unwilling to ascribe to our legal system the impotency that the representatives of baseball would confer upon it.

The record shows that the Braves organization is no innocent that has unexpectedly run afoul of an unreasonable state's efforts to preserve its share of a monopoly. The record is rife with evidence that the corporation acted surreptitiously and deceitfully in an effort to prevent a timely exercise of Wisconsin's jurisdiction. The officers of the club represented that no change in location was contemplated when, in fact, the negotiations for that change were substantially complete. The contract with Atlanta contained an exculpatory [73] clause allowing the team to terminate its contract with Atlanta if litigation should force it to remain in Milwaukee. It is apparent that the baseball club contemplated the likelihood [*743] of being called to task for its conduct. The defendants have not sustained the burden of showing that Wisconsin's reasonable enforcement of its antitrust law constituted a prohibited burden upon interstate commerce.

It is difficult to see what national interest is preserved by immunizing this organization from the consequences of its violation of state law. Where, as here, the Congress has failed to act to protect the states from monopolistic predators, it is apparent that in the balance the salutary effect of law enforcement upon local welfare outweighs any spurious national interest that allegedly exists in preserving an unlawful interstate conspiracy that claims freedom from all legal restraints and sanctions.

We would affirm.

Rutherford v. United States

United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

August 11, 1966

No. 20,377

Reporter
365 F.2d 353 *; 1966 U.S. App. LEXIS 5207 ; 1966 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,859

Robert E. Rutherford, Appellant v. United States, Appellee.

Disposition: [1] Affirmed.

Core Terms

antitrust, immunity statute, anti trust law, False Claims Act, proceedings, immunity, milk, action for damages, grant immunity, civil damages, questions, damages

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Evidence > Privileges > Self-Incrimination Privilege

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Civil Actions > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Self-Incrimination Privilege > Immunity > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Trials > Witnesses > Presentation

HN1[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Exemptions & Immunities

The immunity granted by 15 U.S.C.S. § 32 applies to testimony elicited in any proceeding, suit, or prosecution under the antitrust statutes.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

HN2[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Exemptions & Immunities

See 32 Stat. 903-904 (expired June 30, 1904).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

HN3[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Exemptions & Immunities

A civil antitrust damage action constitutes enforcement of the antitrust laws and is a proceeding or suit within the meaning of 15 U.S.C.S. § 32.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Self-Incrimination Privilege > Immunity > General Overview

Evidence > Privileges > Self-Incrimination Privilege

Criminal Law & Procedure > Trials > Witnesses > Presentation

HN4[] Self-Incrimination Privilege, Immunity

Where the proof necessary to sustain two claims is substantially identical and testimony is not separated as between the two claims, it must necessarily be assumed that all of the testimony is germane to the antitrust claim and is therefore protected by 15 U.S.C.S. § 32.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > Self-Incrimination Privilege

Evidence > Privileges > Self-Incrimination Privilege > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Self-Incrimination Privilege > Immunity > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Trials > Witnesses > Presentation

Evidence > Privileges > Self-Incrimination Privilege

HN5[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Exemptions & Immunities

A trial court determination that, because of the similarity between a non-antitrust claim and a joined antitrust claim, all testimony received in the case will be conclusively presumed to be germane to the antitrust claim and therefore protected by the immunity statute, 15 U.S.C.S. § 32, is in actuality a ruling in favor of a witness seeking to safeguard his U.S. Const. amend. V privilege against self-incrimination. It is not necessary for such a witness to obtain appellate confirmation of such a ruling, through the expedient of contempt proceedings, for acquiescence in such ruling, and the giving of testimony subject to the immunity thus afforded, is binding upon all federal and state prosecuting officials.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Self-Incrimination Privilege > Immunity > Compelled Testimony

Evidence > Privileges > Self-Incrimination Privilege

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Self-Incrimination Privilege > Immunity > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Self-Incrimination Privilege > Immunity > False Statements Under Grant of Immunity

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Self-Incrimination Privilege > Immunity > Scope of Immunity

Criminal Law & Procedure > Trials > Witnesses > Criminal Records

Criminal Law & Procedure > Trials > Witnesses > Presentation

HN6[] Immunity, Compelled Testimony

15 U.S.C.S. § 32 protects a witness against prosecution for crimes based on his testimony in a civil damage suit, other than perjury committed in such suit. This immunity covers any past crimes, including those subsequent to a grand jury proceeding, which may be disclosed by his testimony.

Judges: Hamley, Merrill and Browning, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: HAMLEY

Opinion

[*354] HAMLEY, Circuit Judge:

In this proceeding Robert E. Rutherford was adjudged to be in contempt of court, and sentenced to imprisonment, for refusing to testify by way of deposition in a pending civil suit. Rutherford appeals, asserting that he was justified in declining to testify on his claim of privilege under the Fifth Amendment. We affirm.

Rutherford is an employee of Carnation Company of Washington (Carnation), a distributor of milk and milk products. In March, 1962, he was called to testify before a United States grand jury in connection with an investigation of antitrust law violations. He refused to waive immunity and was required to testify.

The grand jury returned an indictment charging Carnation, Inland Empire Dairy Association (Inland), and an official of Inland, with a conspiracy in violation of the Sherman Act in the sale of milk and milk products to Fairchild Air Force Base in Washington. All of the defendants were convicted and fined upon their pleas of nolo contendere.

Shortly thereafter, the United States commenced a civil suit against Carnation and Inland [2] in the same district court to recover damages in connection with the same conspiracy. The complaint contains two counts. One of these invokes R.S. §§ 3491 and 3492 (1875), 31 U.S.C. §§ 232 and 233 (1964), commonly known as the False Claims Act. The other count is based on section 4A of the Act of October 15, 1914, as added by the Act of July 7, 1955, 69 Stat. 282, 15 U.S.C. § 15a (1964), a provision of the Clayton Act.

The Government subpoenaed Rutherford for the purpose of taking his pretrial deposition in this civil suit. He appeared at the appointed time and place but refused to answer questions propounded by Government counsel, claiming his Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination. He persisted in such refusal despite the assurance of Government counsel that he had immunity under the antitrust immunity statutes, 32 Stat. 904 (1903), 15 U.S.C. § 32 (1964).

Pursuant to Rule 37(a), Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the United States then moved for a court order compelling the witness to testify. The district court denied the motion, holding that the immunity [*355] statute did not apply because [3] one of the claims stated in the complaint was founded on the False Claims Act rather than the antitrust laws.

Thereafter, this court decided Kronick v. United States, 9 Cir., 343 F.2d 436, involving refusal to testify in a civil suit in which recovery of damages was sought under alternative counts, one based on the Clayton Act, and the other on section 209 of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949, 63 Stat. 392, 40 U.S.C. § 489 (1964). On the basis of that decision, the Government moved for reconsideration of its motion made under Rule 37(a).

Upon reconsideration, the district court held that the decision in Kronick was dispositive and required the court to set aside the previous order. Holding that Rutherford would be afforded complete immunity under 15 U.S.C. § 32, the court ordered Rutherford to answer the questions to be then put to him during the taking of his deposition in open court. When the questions were put to Rutherford, however, he again invoked the Fifth Amendment and refused to answer. The court then ordered the witness to answer the questions propounded by counsel for the Government, [4] and for Inland, stating that he had immunity. Rutherford again declined to answer on the ground that his answers might tend to incriminate him.

In a formal order entered the next day, the district court adjudged Rutherford to be in contempt of court, and committed him to the custody of the Attorney General for imprisonment for a term of ninety days. Execution of the sentence was stayed pending appeal, it being provided that if the contempt order were sustained on appeal, Rutherford would be afforded an opportunity to purge himself within sixty days thereafter.

HN1[] The immunity granted by section 32 of 15 U.S.C. applies to testimony elicited in any "proceeding, suit, or prosecution" under the antitrust statutes. Rutherford urges that a civil damage action brought by the Government pursuant to section 4A of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. § 15a), does not qualify as a "proceeding, suit, or prosecution" within the meaning of the immunity statute, and that his refusal to testify in this case was therefore justified.

This immunity statute was enacted in 1903 as part of an [5] appropriations act; the entire statute is reproduced in the margin. [1] The appropriation provision of the act, by its terms, expired June 30, 1904, and only the immunity provision has been codified in 15 U.S.C. § 32. However, this code provision has not been enacted into positive law which makes it necessary, in construing its terms, to resort to the original enactment. United States v. Welden, 377 U.S. 95, 98-99, 12 L. Ed. 2d 152, 84 S. Ct. 1082, n. 4.

[6] The Supreme Court in United States v. Welden, was called upon to consider the [*356] applicability of the immunity statute to an investigation conducted by a congressional subcommittee. The Court held that the immunity granted by the statute extends only to judicial proceedings. In arriving at this conclusion, the Court found that the phrase "proceeding, suit, or prosecution" related to the phrase "in the Courts of the United States" in the immediately preceding clause of the act.

Rutherford's argument is based on a similar analysis. He reasons that the phrase "proceeding, suit, or prosecution" should be modified by the word "enforcement" found in the act's introductory sentence. Accordingly, only those actions brought to enforce the antitrust laws would be covered. "Enforcement" as defined by Rutherford would relate only to criminal prosecutions, injunction and investigatory proceedings and not to civil damage actions filed by the Government. He refers to the latter actions as "remedial" only.

---

[1] "That HN2[] for the enforcement of the provisions of the Act entitled 'An Act to regulate commerce,' approved February fourth, eighteen hundred and eighty-seven, and all Acts amendatory thereof or supplemental thereto, and of the Act entitled 'An Act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies,' approved July second, eighteen hundred and ninety, and all Acts amendatory thereof or supplemental thereto, and sections seventy-three, seventy-four, seventy-five, and seventy-six of the Act entitled 'An Act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and other purposes,' approved August twenty-seventh, eighteen hundred and ninety-four, the sum of five hundred thousand dollars, to be immediately available, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not heretofore appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney-General in the employment of special counsel and agents of the Department of Justice to conduct proceedings, suits, and prosecutions under said Acts in the courts of the United States: Provided, That no person shall be prosecuted or be subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he may testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, in any proceeding, suit, or prosecution under said Acts. . . ." 32 Stat. 903-904.

The Government contends that Rutherford's definition of what constitutes an enforcement action is too narrow, and that all of the actions brought by the Justice Department whether [7] criminal or civil should be characterized as enforcement proceedings. It is urged that the antitrust responsibilities are unitary and cannot be divided between civil and criminal proceedings, or between injunction and damage suits.

Rutherford has raised a novel issue: Does the immunity statute apply in a civil damage action instituted by the Government? The defendant in Kronick v. United States, 9 Cir., 343 F.2d 436, was a witness in such a Government damage action. This court held that the immunity statute provided the necessary protection against prosecution, but there was no discussion of the issue presented here and no similar contention was raised in Kronick. Although the holding in Kronick is not dispositive of the question posed by Rutherford, we are of the opinion that the immunity statute was properly invoked in that case and that it is equally applicable in the instant case.

Our holding is based on the conclusion that HN3[] a civil antitrust damage action constitutes enforcement of the antitrust laws and is a "proceeding," or "suit" within the meaning of 15 U.S.C. § 32.

[8] These Government damage actions were authorized by Congress in 1955, due in part to a recognition of the large amount of procurement done by the Government, particularly during periods of defense mobilization. The Senate report accompanying the bill which ultimately became 15 U.S.C. § 15a, contains language which makes it clear that Congress considered private antitrust actions to be of prime importance in the enforcement of the antitrust laws and the nation's antitrust policies. [2]

The Government by statute has been accorded the status of a private party for purposes of instituting damage actions. If private actions generally are viewed as vehicles for enforcing the nation's antitrust laws, it is difficult to conclude that Government damage actions do not also enforce the antitrust laws. Rutherford points out that the Government can recover only actual damages while private claimants are entitled to treble damage awards; this [9] he asserts distinguishes the Government actions from private enforcement proceedings. The omission of a treble damage provision in the statute authorizing Government suits can be attributed to the opinion of Congress that since the Government has the basic responsibility of enforcing the antitrust laws, no special inducement to sue in the form of treble damage awards is necessary. But this distinction does not mean that the Government's actions do not enforce the antitrust laws. [3]

[*357] The argument which Rutherford has constructed is based on a too narrow definition of the concept of enforcement of antitrust laws. This concept does not exclude suits for damages [10] brought by the Government and based on antitrust violations. The fact that the Government's action is one for damages does not therefore preclude the operation of the immunity statute.

Rutherford also contends that, in any event, the immunity statute is inapplicable in the pending Government suit, due to the joinder of a claim under the False Claims Act.

In Kronick v. United States, 9 Cir., 343 F.2d 436, we had this to say about a similar problem:

> "Nor does Kronick contend that the immunity provided by section 32 is inapplicable in the pending civil action because only the second of the two claims involved in the suit invoked the antitrust laws, the first, and alternative, claim being brought under the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949. Such a contention would be without merit. HN4[] The proof necessary to sustain both claims is substantially identical and Kronick's testimony was not separated as between the two claims. Under these circumstances it must necessarily be assumed that all of his testimony is germane to the antitrust claim and is therefore [11] protected by section 32." 343 F.2d at 441.

---

[2] U.S. Code Cong. and Admin. News 1955, pp. 2329-2330.

[3] Fines in criminal antitrust cases are limited to $50,000 and it is often subsequent civil actions which make such conduct truly unprofitable and deter future violations. Inland and Carnation were each fined $20,000 in the criminal prosecution; the Government in its damage action is seeking to recover about $296,000 from these companies.

Rutherford does not appear to challenge the soundness of this statement, but rather, concerns himself with differentiating the Kronick case from the instant case. Specifically it is argued that the proof required to establish violations of the False Claims Act is materially and substantially different from the proof necessary to establish antitrust violations, and that the scope and coverage of the laws differ substantially. In support of this proposition, Rutherford relies primarily on the fact that the False Claims Act requires proof of intent to defraud whereas fraud is not an element of an antitrust violation.

But this apparent distinction is too insubstantial to dictate a conclusion different from the one reached in the Kronick opinion. The non-antitrust statute in Kronick allows recovery for fraud in the disposal of Government property and other transactions; the False Claims Act covers generally the presentation of "false, fictitious or fraudulent" claims to the Government and conspiracies to defraud the United States by such claims. The similarity between the two statutes is significant -- [12] they both involve fraud.

The complaint in the Government's case against Inland and Carnation establishes that both counts are based on the same alleged course of conduct. The antitrust count charges an agreement to fix prices and to submit noncompetitive, collusive, rigged bids on the sale of milk and milk products to Fairchild Air Force Base. In the False Claims Act count, the Government alleges that the defendants submitted noncompetitive, collusive and rigged bids, while representing that they were competitive bidders.

The similarity between the two claims is patent, and the proof required to establish them is virtually identical. To afford Rutherford complete protection it will be conclusively presumed, as in Kronick, that the testimony which the Government intends to elicit from Rutherford will be germane to the antitrust claim, thus affording him immunity as to all of this testimony in this cause. [4]

[13] [*358] We hold that the inclusion of a claim under the False Claims Act does not, in this case, render the antitrust immunity statute inapplicable.

Rutherford raises an additional argument to the effect that his refusal to answer the Government's questions was justified because of the possibility that his answers would involve him in crimes committed subsequent to his grand jury testimony. He states that the immunity granted by 15 U.S.C. § 32 extends only to those crimes disclosed by him before the grand jury, which were committed on or before the date of his testimony before the grand jury.

This argument involves a non sequitur. Our concern is with the immunity granted by 15 U.S.C. § 32 in the civil damage action and not with the immunity granted Rutherford in the grand jury proceedings. HN6[] Section 32 of 15 U.S.C., as applied in this case, will protect Rutherford against prosecution for crimes based on his testimony in the civil damage suit, other than perjury committed in such suit. This immunity covers any past crimes including [14] those subsequent to the grand jury proceeding which may be disclosed by his testimony. Rutherford's fears that 15 U.S.C. § 32 provides inadequate protection against prosecution for possible past crimes are unfounded, and his argument based on these fears is without merit.

Finally, Rutherford urges that this court should rule that the immunity statute involved in this case is contrary to the Fifth Amendment and therefore unconstitutional. In view of the Supreme Court's position regarding the constitutionality of immunity statutes generally (Ullmann v. United States, 350 U.S. 422, 100 L. Ed. 511, 76 S. Ct. 497), we think that such a ruling is unwarranted. Nor do we perceive, as Rutherford does, the indication of a new doctrinal trend in matters concerning the Fifth Amendment which would undermine the validity of Ullmann.

---

[4] HN5[] A trial court determination that, because of the similarity between a non-antitrust claim and a joined antitrust claim, all testimony received in the case will be conclusively presumed to be germane to the antitrust claim and therefore protected by the immunity statute (15 U.S.C. § 32), is in actuality a ruling in favor of a witness seeking to safeguard his Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination. It is not necessary for such a witness to obtain appellate confirmation of such a ruling, through the expedient of contempt proceedings, for acquiescence in such ruling, and the giving of testimony subject to the immunity thus afforded, is binding upon all federal and state prosecuting officials. See Murphy v. Waterfront Commission of New York Harbor, 378 U.S. 52, 53, 12 L. Ed. 2d 678, 84 S. Ct. 1594, note 1, 77-79.

Affirmed.

Wash. v. Am. Pipe & Constr. Co.

United States District Court for the Western District of Washington, Southern Division; Western District of Washington, Northern Division; District of Oregon; District of Hawaii; Northern District of California, Northern Division; Northern District of California, Southern Division; Southern District of California, Central Division; Southern District of California, Southern Division

August 22, 1966

Nos. 3157 (W.D. Wash., S. Div.), 6568 (W.D. Wash., N. Div.), 65-266 (D. Ore.), 2360 (D. Hawaii), 9160 (N.D. Cal., N. Div.), 42929 (N.D. Cal., S. Div.), 64-832 (S.D. Cal., C. Div.), 3396 (S.D. Cal., S. Div.)

Reporter

41 F.R.D. 59 *; 1966 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10194 ; 1966 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,883

STATE OF WASHINGTON, et al. v. AMERICAN PIPE & CONSTRUCTION CO., et al. WASHINGTON PUBLIC POWER SUPPLY SYSTEM v. AMERICAN PIPE & CONSTRUCTION CO., et al. STATE OF OREGON et al. v. AMERICAN PIPE & CONSTRUCTION CO., et al. STATE OF HAWAII et al. v. AMERICAN PIPE & CONSTRUCTION CO., et al. SACRAMENTO MUNICIPAL UTILITY DISTRICT v. KAISER STEEL CO., et al. EAST BAY MUNICIPAL DISTRICT, et al. v. KAISER STEEL CO., et al. UNITED STATES of America, et al. v. AMERICAN PIPE & CONSTRUCTION CO., et al. CITY OF SAN DIEGO, et al. v. AMERICAN PIPE & CONSTRUCTION CO., et al.

Core Terms

disclosure, depositions, discovery, cases, grand jury, grand jury transcript, antitrust, end-user, plaintiffs', proceedings

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Grand Juries > Indictments > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Grand Juries > Secrecy > General Overview

HN1[] Grand Juries, Indictments

Fed. R. Crim. P. 6(e) specifically authorizes government attorneys to use matters occurring before the grand jury, other than its deliberations and votes, in the performance of their duties. This, of course, includes the use by the government of grand jury transcripts in preparing civil cases for trial.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Methods of Discovery > Depositions > Oral Depositions

Civil Procedure > ... > Methods of Discovery > Depositions > Written Depositions

HN2[] Regulated Practices, Private Actions

Under the Publicity in Taking Depositions Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 30, all depositions taken on behalf of the government in a private antitrust action are required to be open to the public.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Standards > Particularized Need Standard > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Grand Juries > Secrecy > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Secrecy > Disclosure > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Secrecy > Disclosure > Judicial Discretion

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Grand Juries > Secrecy > Legislative Intent

Criminal Law & Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > General Overview

HN3[] Standards, Particularized Need Standard

A violation of traditional grand jury secrecy may be permitted upon a showing of particularized and compelling need. There is no absolute prohibition against disclosure but rather, the same is left to the judicial discretion of the district court.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Grand Juries > Secrecy > General Overview

HN4[] Grand Juries, Secrecy

Disclosure rather than suppression of relevant materials in grand jury minutes ordinarily promotes the proper administration of justice, both civil and criminal, and it is no longer necessary in every case that the trial judge, like a fussy hen, scratch through the grand jury transcript in camera before permitting disclosure of relevant testimony therein.

Judges: [1] Pence, D.J.

Opinion by: PENCE

Opinion

[*60] Decision on Defendants' Motion for Reconsideration of Court's Order on Disclosure of Grand Jury Transcript

and

Alternative Motion for Certification Under 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b)

PENCE, D.J. :

The government and all other plaintiffs in the above actions have brought [*61] civil antitrust suits against the defendants for money damages. In the course of the extensive but consolidated pre-trial discovery hearings found necessary for the expeditious handling of the multitude of cases here involved, the recurring problem of such civil antitrust litigation, viz., the determination of the propriety of release of grand jury testimony for deposition discovery purposes, is again presented to this court for resolution.

After hearings beginning in September 1962, indictments against most of the present defendants were returned on March 10, 1964 by a grand jury in the Southern District of California, charging them with violations of the Sherman Antitrust Act in the manufacture and sale of their several concrete and steel pipe product lines. On March 30, 1964, the defendants named in those indictments plead nolo contendere. The judge before whom [2] the pleas were made directed counsel for both the defendants and the government to submit confidential reports to the probation officer for use in preparing a presentence investigation report. Pursuant to those directions, the government prepared and turned over to the probation officer a "Memorandum of Government Relating to the Imposition of Sentences and Fines."

The government admits that the document contained information coming within the purview of the grand jury secrecy provision of Rule 6(e) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. The sentencing judge, in exercise of his discretion, permitted defense counsel to inspect the Memorandum before their clients were sentenced.

Before the termination of the criminal proceedings, six competitor private treble damage suits had been commenced against the corporate defendants who had been indicted, [1] and subsequent to the imposition of sentences, the plaintiffs in those civil actions sought access to the government Memorandum. The judge hearing those suits, on October 6, 1964, ruled that the sealing order on the Memorandum should be vacated and ordered disclosure of the same to the civil plaintiffs as part of discovery proceedings. [3]

On appeal from that ruling, [2] the court sustained (with certain modifications) the district court's order unsealing the Memorandum.

Since the conclusion of the criminal proceedings, the government as well as some 400 "end-user" plaintiffs have filed treble damage actions against the present defendants in all districts in the states of Hawaii, Washington, Oregon and California.

In December 1965, this judge was assigned to sit in all those districts and handle all of the "pipe" cases, both "competitor" and "end-user" wherever filed in the Ninth Circuit, and all "pipe" cases then and thereafter filed in any district have been transferred to my calendar.

On February 28, [4] 1966, over the government's objections, this court by Pre-Trial Order No. 3 (End-User), consolidated all discovery in all end-user cases and as a part of such consolidation ordered the government to cooperate and work in concert with all other end-user plaintiffs in all discovery proceedings.

On June 30, 1966, over strong opposition of defense counsel, this court ordered that in the taking of depositions, counsel for the United States was authorized to (1) suggest to other plaintiffs' counsel subject matters of inquiry for particular witnesses and (2) discuss with other plaintiffs' counsel matters into which the government desired inquiry to be made (including, by inference, authority to apprise counsel interrogating for plaintiffs at any deposition that the testimony of a [*62] witness is or may be inconsistent with his grand jury testimony). The order expressly provided, however, that counsel for the government should not refer or otherwise make available to counsel for any other plaintiff a copy of the grand jury transcript or any portion thereof, or extracts or summaries thereof, or reveal to non-government counsel that specific testimony of any witness except to the witness [5] himself.

Defendants have now moved (1) the court for reconsideration of that order on the ground that the order permits disclosure of matters occurring before the grand jury to persons other than attorneys for the government in the performance of their duties, claiming that such disclosure would be in violation of Rule 6(e) of the Federal Rules of

---

[1] Civil antitrust suits were first filed by competitors as early as March 1963.

[2] U.S. Industries, Inc. v. United States District Court, 345 F.2d 18, 23 (9th Cir. 1965).

Criminal Procedure, or (2), in the alternative, that the court certify the order as appealable pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b).

HN1[] Rule 6(e) specifically authorizes government attorneys to use matters occurring before the grand jury (other than its deliberations and votes) in the performance of their duties. This, of course, includes the use by the government of grand jury transcripts in preparing civil cases for trial. [3]

[6] HN2[]

Under the Publicity in Taking Depositions Act, 15 U.S.C. § 30, all depositions taken on behalf of the government in a private antitrust action are required to be open to the public. As indicated above, this court by Section III-B of Pre-Trial Order No. 3 (End User) ordered that all

> "depositions shall be taken by the plaintiffs on a joint basis. Insofar as possible, plaintiffs shall select one counsel to conduct the interrogation of each deponent; provided, however, that counsel for other plaintiffs may also examine any such deponent on any subject on which examination is permitted under this order peculiar to a case or cases in which that counsel is of record. No duplicative examination will be permitted by such other counsel."

By virtue of that order it is conceivably possible that government attorneys could act as interrogating counsel in taking all depositions and, if so, the grand jury transcripts would be available for use by them, and the information in the depositions elicited as a result thereof would become open for use by all plaintiffs. However, it was never the intention of the court that the government counsel would be saddled with the burden of examining [7] all deponents, and it is not necessary that they should carry such a burden.

One of the reasons for this court's order in Section III-B was to limit the number of times a witness could be deposed. Most if not all of the depositions contemplated by the plaintiffs will be of employees, past and present, of the Defendants, including in that term, of course, many of the top administrative officials of the defendant corporations. The tightly timed series of some 50 depositions has already been scheduled and if there is not close cooperation between government and other plaintiffs' counsel in the taking of those depositions, this court's discovery program aimed at bringing the government case to trial in October 1967 and making all other plaintiffs' cases ready for trial within a very short period thereafter, will fail. These are compelling reasons for permitting the government to make suggestions and disclosures to other plaintiffs' counsel within the limits of the June 30, 1966 order.

It is now well settled that HN3[] a violation of traditional grand jury secrecy [*63] may be permitted upon a showing of particularized and compelling need. [4] There is no absolute prohibition against [8] disclosure but rather, the same is left to the judicial discretion of the district court. [5] Of the five reasons for preserving inviolate the minutes of the grand jury set forth in U.S. v. Amazon Ind. Chem. Corp., 55 F.2d 254 (D. Md. 1931), and approved by the Ninth Circuit in U.S. Industries, supra note 2, 345 F.2d at 22, only the fourth: "to encourage free and untrammeled disclosures by persons who have information with respect to the commission of crimes", has any possible application to the instant problem, and here, even it is no longer of much weight.

Over two and one-half years have passed since the indictments were returned and pleas entered by the defendants. Over one year has passed since the government Memorandum was unsealed. From the U.S.

---

[3] United States v. Procter and Gamble Co., 356 U.S. 677, 2 L. Ed. 2d 1077, 78 S. Ct. 983 (1958); United States v. Carter Products, Inc., 27 F.R.D. 243 (S.D.N.Y. 1961); United States v. Pennsalt Chemicals Corp., 260 F. Supp. 171 (E.D. Pa. 1966); U.S. v. Badger Paper Mills, Inc., 243 F. Supp. 443 (E.D. Wis. 1965).

[4] Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. v. U.S., 360 U.S. 395, 400, 3 L. Ed. 2d 1323, 79 S. Ct. 1237 (1959); United States v. Procter and Gamble Co., supra note 3, 356 U.S. at 683.

[5] U.S. Industries, Inc. v. U.S. District Court, supra note 2, 345 F.2d at 21.

Industries [9] opinion it would appear that there is very little information now in the government files which was not heretofore disclosed to defendants and defendants' counsel, as well as certain competitor plaintiffs and their counsel (some of whom are counsel for certain plaintiffs in the end user cases). In addition thereto, the government, the party most concerned, for the fourth reason, supra, with the effect of disclosure upon future antitrust and other criminal prosecutions, is here urging that it be permitted to make disclosures within the limits of the court's order of June 30, 1966, supra. [6]

Apparently all of the plaintiffs in these end-user cases are either states, municipalities, or corporations actually or closely akin to quasi-public corporations. What Judge Clary said in the City of Philadelphia case (note 6 at 489), viz.:

> "The unique nature of these cases and this program of discovery must be given considerable [10] weight. These depositions are binding upon all plaintiffs. And most of these plaintiffs--states, municipalities and public utilities--are inherently charged with the duty to protect wide-range public interests."-- is just as true in the cases now before this court, and the compulsive joinder of the government with the other plaintiffs in all discovery adds to that uniqueness. If the discovery program is to proceed with the speed and efficiency demanded, there is a compelling need for the disclosure requested. Such disclosure is also required in furthering the vigilant enforcement of the antitrust laws allegedly here applicable to these defendants. The Ninth Circuit has already put its stamp of approval upon the release of grand jury information in support of liberal discovery rules. [7]

It is [11] now well settled that HN4[] disclosure rather than suppression of relevant materials in grand jury minutes ordinarily promotes the proper administration of justice, both civil and criminal, [8] and it is no longer necessary in [*64] every case that the trial judge, like a fussy hen, scratch through the grand jury transcript in camera before permitting disclosure of relevant testimony therein. [9]

As indicated above, this multiple litigation was referred to a single judge to conserve the time, energy and cost of the litigants and the court through coordinated, efficient and economic administration as well as speedy resolution of pretrial discovery and other problems of multiple litigation. In the implementation [12] of these objectives, here this court sees a "particularized need"--certainly for the plaintiffs and the court--for the lifting of the secrecy of the grand jury proceedings in the limited and discreet manner requested by the plaintiffs and heretofore authorized by this court in its bench ruling and order of June 30, 1966--without thereby inferring that no fuller disclosure or use of the grand jury transcript might not be permitted upon proper showing of need therefor.

In view of the court's determination of the need for the limited discovery authorized here, as well as the liberality of disclosure of grand jury information authorized by Olympic Refining, U.S. Industries and Dennis, supra, [10] this court finds no merit in defendants' alternate motion that this court's order of June 30, 1966 include a statement certifying said order as appealable pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b). The court does not see that there is any reasonable

---

[6] Cf. City of Philadelphia v. Westinghouse Electric Corp., 210 F. Supp. 486 (E.D. Pa. 1962).

[7] Olympic Refining Co. v. Carter, 332 F.2d 260, 264 (9th Cir. 1964), cert. denied November 9, 1964, 379 U.S. 900, 85 S. Ct. 186, 13 L. Ed. 2d 175; U.S. Industries, Inc. v. U.S. District Court, supra note 2.

[8] Dennis v. U.S., 384 U.S. 855, 86 S. Ct. 1840, 16 L. Ed. 2d 973 (June 20, 1966), note 15; Atlantic City Electric Co. v. A. B. Chance Co., 313 F.2d 431 (2d Cir. 1963); U.S. Industries v. U.S. District Court, supra note 2; Olympic Refining Co. v. Carter, supra note 7.

[9] Dennis v. U.S., supra note 8.

[10] See also Denis McInerney, Discovery and Use of Grand Jury Minutes, 1966 Antitrust Law Symposium, CCH Trade Reg. Rep. 91, 104-08.

"ground for a difference of opinion" on the necessity for and lawfulness of the disclosure here authorized by the court.

[13] Defendants' motions are denied, without argument.

Malco Mfg. Co. v. Nat'l Connector Corp.

United States District Court for the District of Minnesota, Fourth Division

September 13, 1966

4-61 Civ. 243

Reporter
1966 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7220 *; 151 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) 255 **

MALCO MANUFACTURING COMPANY et al. v. NATIONAL CONNECTOR CORPORATION

Core Terms

terminal, patent, connector, sleeve, pin, dimension, transverse, aperture, infringement, gripping, shank, locking, insulating, assembly, notches, novelty, baseboard, bushings, blocks, self-locking, spacing, electrical, metallic, molded, prior art, female, manufacture, utilization, invention, electronics

Counsel: [*1] WILLIAM MARSHALL LEE, ROY E. HOFER, and HUME, GROEN, CLEMENT & HUME, all of Chicago, Ill., and H. DALE PALMATIER, Minneapolis, Minn., for Malco Manufacturing Company and Malco Manufacturing Company, Inc.

ERWIN C. HEININGER, JACK GUTHMAN, and MAYER, FRIEDLICH, SPIESS, TIERNEY, BROWN & PLATT, all of Chicago, Ill., and LOWELL F. HAMMOND, Broadview, Ill., for Amphenol-Borg Electronics Corporation.

JOHN D. GOULD, ROBERT T. EDELL, and MERCHANT, MERCHANT & GOULD, all of Minneapolis, Minn., for defendant.

Opinion by: NORDBYE

Opinion

[256] NORDBYE, District Judge.

FINDINGS OF FACT

1. Plaintiff Malco Manufacturing Company is a partnership comprising Margaret R. Just, the wife of Alex Just, and Rosemary Winters and Lynne Carole Stoneberg, Mr. Just's married daughters, all of whom are residents of the County of Cook, State of Illinois, hereinafter sometimes referred to as "Malco partnership". Mr. Alex Just, at all relevant times up to his death in April 1963, was a member of and the operating head of the Malco partnership.

2. Plaintiff Malco Manufacturing Company, Inc., is an Illinois corporation having its principal place of business at 4025 West Lake Street, Chicago, Illinois, hereinafter [*2] sometimes referred to as "Malco corporation". It was formed in April, 1963, and became the operating company taking over most of the functions of the Malco partnership.

3. Plaintiff Amphenol Corporation, formerly Amphenol-Borg Electronics Corporation, is a Delaware corporation having its principal office at 2801 South 25th Avenue, Broadview, Illinois, hereinafter sometimes referred to as "Amphenol".

4. Defendant National Connector Corporation is a Minnesota corporation [257] having a regular and established place of business in Minneapolis, Minnesota.

5. By their complaint, plaintiffs charge the defendant with infringement of the following United States Letters Patents:

Patent No	Patentees	Issue Date
2,995,617	Alex Just et al.	August 8, 1961
3,086,074	Alex Just et al.	April 16, 1963
3,136,591	Alex Just et al.	June 9, 1964

Plaintiffs seek an accounting for past damages, an injunction against future infringement, costs and other relief.

6. Defendant, by its answer, denies that the three patents in suit are valid and infringed and alleges patent misuse. Defendant also counterclaims for declaratory judgment declaring the three patents in suit [*3] to be invalid and not infringed.

7. Defendant also counterclaims charging the plaintiffs with violations of the antitrust laws of the United States and seeks an accounting for damages. Plaintiffs, by their answer, deny any patent misuse or antitrust law violation.

8. The accused terminal connectors and terminal connector assemblies of the defendant are of six types, referred to hereinafter as Type A (PX 57 Series). Type B (PX 59 Series), Type C (PX 60 Series), Type D (PX 64 Series) Type E (PX 65 Series) and Type F (PX 66 Series). Each of these terminal connectors and terminal connector assemblies have been manufactured, sold and/or offered for sale within the District of Minnesota and elsewhere in the United States of America and the defendant National Connector Corporation continues to manufacture, sell and/or offer for sale these terminal connectors and terminal connector assemblies. Defendant National Connector Corporation has sold Type A, B, C, D, E and F terminal connectors and terminal connector assemblies for non-governmental uses since the issue date of the patent or patents that each are alleged to infringe. Type A through F terminal connectors and terminal connector [*4] assemblies have been offered for sale to the electronics industry in general without restriction as to governmental or non-governmental uses.

9. The Court has jurisdiction over the parties and the subject matter. The issues presented are the validity and infringement of the three patents in suit and the questions presented under defendant's antitrust counterclaim and patent misuse.

10. In the middle of the late 1940's Alex Just founded Malco in Chicago, Illinois. Malco began as a sole proprietorship, but subsequently was converted to the Malco partnership and then into a corporation. Until the development of the inventions covered by the patents in suit, Malco's business was primarily with terminals for the radio, television and telephone industry.

Since the advent of "modern electronics," e.g., electronic computers, electronic telecommunications systems, there has been a long-felt need for multiple terminal connectors capable of making hundreds, thousands, and even tens-of-thousands of individual electrical connections through a single terminal connector. Prior to the inventions of the patents in suit this need had to be met with a composite of "molded connector blocks". [*5] Molded connector blocks comprise a plurality of terminals held in spaced relation in a molded plastic block. A plurality of these molded connector blocks held in side-by-side relation by a frame member form a composite of molded connector blocks.

11. Molded connector block composites have been used for many years and are still used by some large electronic companies which have spent millions of dollars in manufacturing and tooling equipment. The molded connector block composites are subject to a number of inherent deficiencies. It is not possible to obtain extreme accuracy of placement of individual terminals in a single connector block because of the shrinkage problem which occurs during molding. The problem is multiplied in the composite because of the inaccuracies introduced due to tolerance accumulations when the molded blocks are individually secured to the large panel or frame. The individual blocks are also subject to displacement with respect to the other blocks in the frame and provide no flexibility for circuit change since, once the block is molded, it is fixed and terminals which are molded in place must stay there, while others which may be necessary in the future [*6] cannot be added in any commercially practical manner. The rack with the molded blocks attached is heavy and subject to warpage. Since the molded blocks themselves are of insulating material they cannot be used as an electrical grounding plane for the entire connector. The blocks themselves are relatively fragile and subject to breaking and chipping.

12. The first patent in suit, United States Patent No. 2,995,617, relates to a self-locking terminal connector comprising a metallic baseboard, a somewhat softer terminal sleeve, and a metallic terminal pin. The terminal pin has an integral connector portion, generally at each end, for connecting to an electrical [258] lead. The pin is mounted in a passage in the sleeve and the sleeve is locked in a receiving aperture in the baseboard through an opposed pressure interference fit.

More specifically, between its connector ends the metallic terminal pin has a gripping shank with a non-round cross-section and a maximum transverse dimension larger than the passage in the sleeve. Preferably, the gripping shank has a rectangular cross-section, the maximum transverse dimension being the width of the gripping shank. When the terminal pin [*7] is inserted in the passage in the sleeve, which has been placed in the aperture in the baseboard, the maximum transverse dimension of the gripping shank has a substantial interference fit in the sleeve passage and tends to expand the sleeve within the baseboard aperture. The opposed interference fit between the terminal pin and sleeve causes the sleeve to firmly grip the board at two opposite sides. The terminal pin is firmly held in the sleeve and the sleeve firmly held in the baseboard. The self-locking terminal connectors of the first patent in suit have many advantages, particularly for precision, high density application in complex electronic devices such as computers.

13. A fundamental requirement of non-floating connectors is positive resistance to displacement forces encountered in handling, shipping, wirewrapping, connection and disconnection and environmental shock-loading. Terminal pins of self-locking terminal connectors of plaintiffs' patent No. 1 are rigidly held with respect to their sleeves and baseboards such that they successfully resist all such displacement forces. The terminal pin is resistant to twisting or torque force which could occur, for example, [*8] in wire-wrapping operations or environmental shock-loading. The terminal pins also resist forces which tend to tilt them from their perpendicular relation to the baseboard, such as might occur in wire-wrapping or handling. The terminal pin and sleeve are held in the baseboard in a manner that they cannot easily be pushed out of the baseboard, commonly referred to as push-out resistance. Though the self-locking terminal connector has high torque resistance and high push-out resistance, relatively small force is required to insert the terminal pin in the sleeve when assembling the terminal connector in the baseboard. This force is commonly referred to as the "insertion force." Low insertion forces are vital for practical manufacture.

14. Plaintiffs' self-locking terminal connector made possible for the first time the employment of a matrix plate containing large numbers of closely spaced terminal connectors capable of being wired upon the automatic wire-wrap machine of the Gardner-Denver Company. The matrix plate connector is preferred over the molded block type of panel connector, which was the only other available connector which may be automatically wire-wrapped when the [*9] patent application herein was filed.

15. Claims 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, and 9 of the first patent are in issue, Claims 1 and 5 being the only independent claims. The specification of the first patent in suit contains a description of the invention adequate to enable it to be practiced by those skilled in the art of electrical terminal connectors. The claims of the first patent in suit are amply supported by the specification of this patent, but they are narrower than the disclosure of the application as originally filed and which remained when the patent was granted. Claims 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, 7 and 9 do not define subject matter which was in public use or on sale in this country more than one year prior to the effective filing date of the first patent in suit.

16. Claim 1 is representative of the independent claims of the first patent in suit and reads as follows:

"A terminal connector for securing in an aperture of predetermined size in a terminal baseboard comprising a terminal sleeve having a passage therethrough and having normal transverse outside dimensions approximately the same as the normal transverse dimensions of said baseboard aperture, a metallic terminal pin having [*10] a gripping shank with a maximum transverse dimension having a substantial interference fit in the transverse dimension of said passage, said gripping shank having a minimum transverse dimension substantially smaller than the transverse dimension of said passage, whereby the outside dimension of the sleeve in the direction of the maximum transverse dimension of the pin is expanded to firmly grip the portion of said terminal board defining said board aperture when said sleeve is inserted in said aperture and said pin is inserted in said sleeve."

17. During the prosecution of the first patent in suit some of the application claims were directed to the locking notches in the gripping shank. The examiner rejected these application claims inasmuch as locking notches were shown to be old by the prior art. Applicants acquiesced in the examiner's rejection [259] of these claims and cancelled them so that none of the claims in the first patent in suit are directed to locking notches.

18. The prior art relied upon by the defendant does not contain anything constituting a complete anticipation of Claims 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, 7 or 9 of the first patent in suit. Every terminal connector taught by the [*11] prior art lacks one or more of the features required by each of these claims. Nothing in the prior art cited against the first patent in suit shows or suggests the terminal connector defined by Claims 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, 7 or 9 of that patent. The subject matter of these claims is novel and involves invention over the prior art. The subject matter defined by the claims of the first patent in suit has filled a long-felt want and terminal connectors embodying such subject matter have found wide use and commercial success in industry.

19. The subject matter of Claims 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, 7 and 9 of the first patent was not obvious at the time the invention was made to persons having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains.

20. Defendant's Type A terminal connector is charged to infringe Claims 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, 7 and 9 of the first patent in suit and responds fully and in every respect to all requirements of each of said claims, and infringes each of said claims.

21. Defendant's Type A terminal connector has a terminal sleeve having normal transverse outside dimensions which are approximately the same as the normal transverse dimensions of the baseboard aperture. [*12] The terminal pin has a gripping shank with a maximum transverse dimension having a substantial interference fit in the transverse dimension of the passage in the sleeve.

22. Defendant's Type B terminal connectors are a crimp terminal connector and a solder terminal connector. The Type B crimp terminal connector and the Type B solder terminal connector have terminal sleeves with normal transverse outside dimensions which are approximately the same as the normal transverse dimensions of the baseboard apertures. The terminal pins have a gripping shank with a maximum transverse dimension having a substantial interference fit in the transverse dimension of the passages in the sleeves. Each of these terminal connectors infringe Claims 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, 7 and 9 of the first patent in suit.

23. None of the metallic terminal pins utilized in defendant's Type A and B terminal connectors utilize locking notches, and hence do not have a minimum transverse dimension in the gripping shank which is in the form of locking notches. But although the Court finds that the term "minimum transverse dimension of the gripping shank" as used in the claims of Patent No. 2,995,617 refer to the area [*13] of the locking notches rather than to the thickness of the pin, that is, to identify a non-round pin, as plaintiffs contend, the patent does not make any claim of novelty in the locking notches, which element was expressly omitted from the claims at the request of the Patent Examiner when the patent was being processed through the Patent Office. It is the utilization in defendant's Types A and B of a "terminal connector for securing in an aperture of predetermined size in a terminal baseboard comprising a terminal sleeve having a passage therethrough and having normal transverse outside dimensions approximately the same as the normal transverse dimensions of said baseboard aperture, a metallic terminal pin having a gripping shank with a maximum transverse dimension having a substantial interference fit in the transverse dimension of said passage * * * whereby the outside dimension of the sleeve in the direction of the maximum transverse dimension of the pin is expanded to firmly grip the portion of said terminal board defining said board aperture when said sleeve is inserted in said aperture and said pin is inserted in said sleeve" which is the heart of plaintiffs' novelty in patent [*14] No. 2,995,617, and which defendant in its Types A and B series infringes. As reflected in Figures 3, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13 and 14 of the patent drawings, the locking notches are illustrated as part of the gripping shank. These figures and a reading of the specifications would indicate that the locking notches are necessarily embraced in the portion of the claim reading "said gripping shank having a minimum transverse dimension substantially smaller than the transverse dimension of said passage." However, Figures 21, 23 and 24 of the patent drawings do not reflect that the locking notches are the seat of the minimum transverse dimension in the gripping shank. Rather, in these figures the gripping shank has a maximum and a minimum transverse dimenson which does not include the so-called locking notches. The seeming confusion apparently arises because the original patent specifications included the locking notches as part of the patent novelty of the self-locking terminal, and when the novelty of the locking notches claims was omitted at the Patent Examiner's [260] request the specifications were not modified accordingly.

24. Notwithstanding the depicting of locking notches in the gripping [*15] shank in some of the patent drawings, no patent was issued thereon, and by reason of the abandonment by the inventors of this alleged phase of the original patent claims, any reference thereto in the specifications or otherwise has necessarily been released to the public. It may be noted that plaintiffs' commercial product of the self-locking terminals, which were on the market before Patent 2,995,617 was issued, contained no so-called locking notches in the gripping shank of the self-locking terminals. By eliminating locking notches and adopting the other main features of plaintiffs' patent, defendant cannot absolve itself from infringement.

25. Defendant's Type C female terminal connector does not utilize a terminal sleeve "having normal transverse outside dimensions approximately the same as the normal transverse dimensions of said baseboard aperture" as required by all of the claims of United States Patent 2,995,617. The gripping shank of the terminal pin of defendant's Type C female connector does not have "a substantial interference fit in the transverse dimension of said passage" as required by all of the claims of U.S. Patent 2,995,617. Defendant's Type C female terminal [*16] connector is not the equivalent of the details recited in the claims of U.S. Patent 2,995,617, and plaintiffs are not entitled to a broadening of the claims of this patent under the "doctrine of equivalents" to include defendant's Type C female terminal connector within these claims.

Patent No. 2 - No. 3,086,074

1. The second patent in suit, Just et al., 3,086,074, is entitled "Self-Orientating Terminal Connectors" and allegedly relates to the utilization of square or polygonal-shaped heads on the insulating sleeves to insure proper alignment of the electrical terminal so as to achieve a proper mating between the female connector and a male connector which is plugged into the female. Connectors of the type involved in suit may be either a female connector or a male connector, and the male and female connectors plug together to form what is known as a mated pair. As shown in U.S. Patent 3,086,074, the terminal pin of the female connector is formed from a stamping and comprises a pair of female tines which are adapted to receive a flat male blade. In the ideal situation, the plane of the male blade portion of the male connector will be at a 90 degree relationship with respect [*17] to the plane of the female tines of the female connector. While the perfect 90 degree relationship between the male and female terminals is the ideal situation, it is not absolutely necessary that this relationship be maintained and a small deviation, or angular misorientation, is permitted. United States Patent 3,086,074 pertains to the utilization of square heads on the insulating bushings; and to the spacing of adjacent squareheaded bushings so that if the squareheaded bushings are rotated until they contact adjacent bushings, the electrical terminals will still be within the permitted angular misorientation, and a proper mating between male and female connectors can be achieved. United States Patent 3,086,074 refers to this permitted angular misorientation as "the predetermined tolerance of angular orientation".

2.The prior art, Netherlands patent 64,131 and Powell 2,930,020, discloses terminal boards with a plurality of apertures therethrough and into each of which there is mounted a terminal connector comprising a metal contact and an insulating sleeve with an enlarged collar in the form of a regular polygon. The tubular base portion of the insulating sleeve is mounted [*18] in an aperture of the sleeve and completely fills the aperture. Although this prior art discloses polygonal heads which touch each other, it would be quite obvious to anyone with ordinary skill in the art, that in terminal boards utilizing hundreds and even thousands of connector sleeves, and in view of tolerance variations, a small space therefor between the polygonal heads would be advisable, and if it was the inventor's concept of novelty in Patent 3,086,074 that the terminal spacing is determined by the aperture spacing, while the aligning head portions maintain the predetermined angular orientation, and therefore Powell did not anticipate invention of the second patent, it seems reasonable that Netherlands 64,131 did anticipate the alleged novelty in Patent No. 2. The fact that Netherlands teaches that the polygonal-shaped insulators should abut does not negative its importance as prior art. The purpose was that after the bushings had been mounted in the proper position, they then could not be rotated unintentionally.

3. In view of the tremendous growth of the electrical and electronics industry in the early 1960's when it became necessary to have many thousands of terminal [*19] connectors assembled in a single plate, it was quite obvious that with this confined space and the close proximity of the polygonal heads it was [261] inevitable that the spacing of the apertures in the terminal plates had to be so designed that the polygonal head portions of the sleeves should be so spaced that there would not be a movement thereof which would be so great that it would permit mismating of the male and female connectors. But merely because the polygonal heads do not touch one another in a terminal assembly, does not establish that the assembly was arranged by a predetermined tolerance of angular orientation of the terminal connectors or that the touching of the heads comes within the predetermined angular orientation. The variations in the so-called "predetermined tolerance of angular orientation" are so pronounced that that expression becomes vague and indefinite.

4. The evidence herein is convincing that there is no exact predetermined angle at which mismating will occur, and moreover, any movement of the adjacent square-headed bushings in a terminal board is usually minimal. This seems quite evident not only from the physical evidence in court, but in applying [*20] for Patent 2,995,617 the patentees, two of whom were the patentees in the second patent, claimed that the bushings were held so firmly in their apertures that the shanks of the terminal pins would twist before the pins would move in the bushings or the bushings would move in the board.

5. The Court finds, therefore, as to the second patent that it discloses no novelty over the prior art other than the utilization of mechanical skill in the spacing of a multitude of apertures in a terminal board requiring a compactness of bushings and terminal pins in a small area and the recognition of the necessity of some spacing between the polygonal bushings in view of the necessity of replacing damaged bushings. The showing herein is that if a bushing is rotated at a certain number of degrees so that it touches the adjacent bushing or bushings, that fact does not establish that they are spaced by any predetermined tolerance of angular orientation so as to prevent mismating of the male and female connectors.

6. In utilizing the mechanical skill necessary to align the apertures in terminal boards which were to receive the bushings and the connectors in the electrical and electronics industry, [*21] it was obvious that in spacing the apertures in the terminal board, the space between them could not be so great that the inserted bushings and the terminals therein could be moved or turned to the number of degrees which would permit mismating of the terminals.

7. It is urged that included in the novelty of the second patent in suit is the idea that in providing a spacing of the heads of the terminal sleeves from one another and when manufacturing tolerances are considered, the sleeves will not interfere with one another to the extent that there will be a bulging or bowing of the base plate, but it seems obvious that if this is a result of the assembled arrangement which the plaintiffs have devised in Patent No. 2, it was a mere exercise of mechanical skill in assembly and not invention.

8. The Court finds that Claims 1, 2, 3 and 4 of the second patent in suit are invalid and plaintiffs have not sustained the burden of proof in establishing that defendant's Types A, B, C, D and F infringe.

Third Patent - No. 3,136,591

1. United States Patent 3,136,591, the third patent in suit, relates to a terminal connector, or header, which is mounted to a vertically extending printed [*22] circuit board. The header portion of the printed circuit board assembly comprises a plate having a plurality of holes therethrough, and in each of which is mounted an insulating sleeve. A metal contact extends through a central aperture in each of the insulating sleeves, with the upper portion of each of the metal contacts bent at a 90 degree angle. The 90 degree portions of the metal contacts extend through apertures in a vertically extending printed circuit board and are soldered or otherwise suitably mounted thereto in contact with the circuitry on the printed circuit board.

2. Claim 1 of the third patent, the only independent claim, reads as follows:

"A terminal connector assembly, comprising a metallic base plate, a printed circuit board mounted on said base plate and extending substantially perpendicular thereto, said circuit board having electrical circuitry thereon, a plurality of apertures formed in said metallic base plate and disposed in at least one row generally parallel to said circuit board, a terminal connector mounted in each of said apertures, each of said terminal connectors including a metallic terminal pin extending through a sleeve formed of relatively [*23] soft insulating material and seated in a corresponding aperture, each of said pins having one portion at one end extending generally parallel to said base plate and forming an electrical connection with said circuitry, and another portion at the opposite end [262] for electrical connection into electrical means of which the printed circuitry forms a component."

3. Plaintiffs charge contributing infringement as to the third patent in that the defendant does not manufacture the printed circuit board, but its assembly is made for a circuit board substantially as set forth in Claim 1 of the patent. Types C and D of defendant's terminal connector assembly are charged to infringe Claims 1 and 2 of the third patent. Type E of defendant's terminal connector assembly is charged to infringe Claim No. 1.

4. Defendant's Type C, the male header, and Types D and E, terminal connectors, are sold by the defendant with the knowledge that printed circuit boards are to be attached to the terminal connector assembly. None of defendant's printed circuit boards would ultimately be mounted on the base plate as the patent requires. However, this variance would not absolve the defendant from infringement [*24] if Patent No. 3 is valid. The evidence fully establishes a finding, and the Court does find, that defendant's contributing structures achieve the same result as taught by Claims 1 and 2 of Patent No. 3 and in substantially the same manner.

5. The purpose of Patent No. 3 is to provide a high concentration of terminals, but the use of circuit boards was old in the art and the evidence fully justifies a finding, and the Court does find, that the only difference between U.S. Patent 3,136,591, the third patent in suit, and U.S. Patent 3,086,074, the second patent in suit, is that the terminals in the third patent are bent at 90 degrees for connection to a vertically extending circuit board. These two patents were co-pending, but the second patent was filed February 13, 1961, and issued April 16, 1963. The third patent was filed February 12, 1962, and issued June 9, 1964. The bending of the tips of the pin at this angle for connection to a vertically extending printed board was known in the prior art in molded printed circuit board headers, and therefore in the rapidly advancing technique in the manufacture of the high concentration of terminals the bending of the pins at 90 degrees [*25] in a terminal connector assembly for a connection to a vertically extending circuit board would seem quite obvious to one with ordinary skill in the art.

6. The Court finds, therefore, that Patent 3,136,591 is invalid by reason of the known prior art and that the alleged novelty therein would be obvious to one with ordinary skill in the art.

7. The defendant contends that Patent No. 3 is invalid since the alleged invention was in public use or on sale in this country more than one year before the date of the application for the patent contrary to the requirements of 35 U.S.C. 102(b). This defense is based upon alleged sales to Control Data Corporation on January 18, 1961, but the evidence fairly establishes that this purchase order was for experimental purposes only and that the experiments with respect thereto were not completed until a date less than a year before the patent application was filed on February 12, 1962. The evidence does not sustain the contention of the defendant that a sale in violation of 35 U.S.C. 102(b) was made to National Cash Register of a printed board header more than a year prior to the filing date of Patent No. 3. Hence the Court finds that Claims [*26] 1 and 2 of Patent No. 3 do not define subject matter which was in public use or on sale in this country more than one year prior to the effective filing date of said patent.

8. Although the Court finds that Claims 1 and 2 of U.S. Patent 3,136,591 are invalid, as heretofore stated, it finds that if they are valid, defendant by using and selling the Type C, D and E series contributed to the infringement of said claims and would be, in view of the evidence, a contributory infringer.

Counterclaim of Defendant and Charge of Patent Misuse

1. The defendant, as an additional defense to the charge of infringement of the patents in suit, contends that plaintiffs have engaged in patent misuse and have violated the antitrust laws.

2. On July 1, 1961, Malco and Amphenol-Borg Electronics Corporation entered into an agreement whereby Malco granted Amphenol a fifty per cent interest in various patents, including Patent 2,995,617 and Patent 3,086,704. A fifty per cent interest in the third patent, 3,136,591, was assigned to Amphenol on June 9, 1964.

3. On July 1, 1961, an agreement was entered into between these parties wherein it was agreed that neither party could grant any licenses [*27] under the patents above referred to without the written consent of the other, and a supplemental agreement between the parties provided for joint prosecution of patent infringement claims.

4.On July 20, 1961, another agreement was entered into between Malco and Amphenol whereby Malco granted Amphenol the option to purchase an undivided fifty per cent interest in any [263] future patent application which Malco may file on self-locking terminal devices and Amphenol made a reciprocal agreement to the same effect with Malco.

5. Mandex Manufacturing Company is an Illinois corporation which was closely related to the Malco partnership through family ownership by Mr. and Mrs. Alex Just, the latter being the owners of the stock of Mandex, the corporation, and were the principal partners in Malco, the partnership.

6. On June 15, 1961, Malco made an agreement with Mandex whereby the latter company was granted a nonexclusive license to manufacture and sell self-locking terminal devices covered by the agreements between Malco and Amphenol, which covered five pending patent applications including two applications which ultimately matured into the first and second patents in suit herein. In [*28] this agreement Mandex was to pay Malco a ten per cent royalty on all net sales of self-locking terminal devices. The agreement provided that any improvements made in such devices by Mandex must be assigned by it to Malco. The non-exclusive license granted to Mandex is non-assignable except to a corporation which acquires Mandex' entire business relating to electrical devices, provided, however, that Alex Just, or other specified persons, have the controlling interest in the succeeding company, and that the succeeding company agrees to be bound by the Mandex non-exclusive contract.

7. The agreement Malco made with Mandex provided that it would terminate if Alex Just and the other persons specified by him ceased to own fifty per cent of the voting stock of Mandex, or in the event of bankruptcy of Mandex, or 120 days after Malco gives written notice to Mandex that the former elects to terminate the agreement, but unless sooner terminated under one of the provisions noted, the non-exclusive license will continue for the life of the last to expire patents. Obviously, however, there has been no attempt to collect royalties from Mandex beyond the date of expiration of any of the patents [*29] covered by the agreement.

8. In that Malco and Amphenol are joint owners of the patents covered by the agreement referred to herein and their agreement to the effect that no assignments under the patents would be made by either party without the written consent of the other, it is not an illegal agreement. Under the evidence herein, these joint owners of the patents in suit only safeguarded their rights therein to the same extent as an individual owner thereof. Their agreement in this regard does not violate the patent laws, and there is no evidence that any illegal monopoly has been created, or that any antitrust laws of the United States have been violated, and defendant has failed to establish that any contracts or business understanding or manufacturing arrangements between Malco and Amphenol, or between Malco and Mandex, constitute any patent misuse, or that they violate the antitrust laws, or that the defendant has been damaged in any way by reason of any alleged illegal conduct created by the agreements referred to.

Upon the foregoing Findings of Fact, the Court makes the following

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. The Court has jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject [*30] matter of the issues as raised by the pleadings.

2. U.S. Letters Patent 2,995,617 entitled "Self-locking Terminal Connectors" as to each of the Claims 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, 7 and 9 is in all respects valid.

3. The defendant, under Section 271, 35 U.S.C., by using and selling terminal connectors and terminal assemblies thereof in its Types A and B series, has infringed the claims herein under Patent 2,995,617, but the defendant by using and selling terminal connectors and terminal assemblies in its Type C series has not infringed said patent 2,995,617.

4. Claims 1, 2, 3 and 4 of U.S. Letters Patent 3,086,704 are invalid and defendant has not infringed any valid claim of said patent.

5. Claims 1 and 2 of U.S. Letters Patent 3,136,591 are invalid, but they are not invalid by reason of any alleged sale more than one year prior to the filing date of the patent application for said patent.

6. The Malco-Mandex license was entered into on a voluntary basis and is an agreement between companies closely associated by reason of the persons controlling both companies, and this agreement does not constitute any patent misuse or violate any of the antitrust laws of the United States.

[*31] 7. The agreement between the joint owners, Malco and Amphenol, is not an illegal extension of a patent monopoly.

8. The patent improvement grantback clause in the Malco-Mandex agreement and the Malco-Amphenol option agreement, on this showing, are not illegal.

9. Defendant has not shown that it is a person injured in its business, property, or otherwise by reason of any alleged illegal conduct growing out of the agreements referred to which plaintiff [264] entered into with Amphenol and which it entered into with Mandex.

10.Plaintiffs are entitled to an injunction against the defendant and all those in privity with it enjoining further infringement of Patent 2,995,617, as stated herein, with respect to the Types A and B series of the defendant, and an accounting to ascertain the amount of damages sustained by the plaintiffs as the result of said infringement, and judgment for the damages so ascertained.

11. The determination of costs and attorneys' fees to be allowed herein will be deferred until the further order of the Court.

12. Every Finding of Fact herein which may be deemed a Conclusion of Law is hereby adopted as a Conclusion of Law.

Judgment shall be entered [*32] accordingly. Exceptions are allowed.

MEMORANDUM

In that the above Findings of Fact recite in some detail the Court's views as to many of the issues which have arisen in this lengthy and involved patent litigation, this memorandum will be curtailed in length, but some observations should be made which will set forth in some additional detail the Court's views.

First Patent

It seems clear that the first patent in suit amply fulfills the requirement as to novelty, utility and non-obviousness. The immediate acceptance by the electrical and electronics industry of the self-locking terminal connector is highly significant. Its resistance to the forces of wire wrapping and its ability to withstand displacement forces encountered by the industry in ordinary use was immediately recognized by the Government and private concerns. The temptation to use one's hindsight as to obviousness should not be applied to the first patent in view of Oxley, 2,911,460. There, the use of a round shank with the so-called barbs had a central portion substantially the same uniformity in diameter as the aperture which extended through the terminal sleeve. The concept of the Oxley patent did not utilize [*33] or suggest an interference fit between the central portion of the shank and the passage of the terminal sleeve. This is particularly evident from the physical exhibits and charts in evidence. Moreover, it may be noted that there is no showing that the Oxley device had any commercial acceptance whatsoever. The other prior art such as Clark, 2,774,812, British, 641,917, and Carlson, 2,919,300, or a combination thereof with Oxley, did not teach or suggest to one of ordinary skill the embodiments of the novelty and utility of the first patent.

Due consideration has been given to Grapam v. John Deere Co., 383 U.S. 1, 148 USPQ 459, and United States v. Adams, 383 U.S. 39, 148 USPQ 479, and the recent decisions of the Eighth Circuit which have commented upon them. At times the presumption of validity which accompanies the issuance of a patent seems to be but a tenuous support for an inventor when he is faced with an attack on his patent in the courts, but here as to the self-locking terminal connectors, there can be no question as to novelty and utility. That, in part at least, has been amply sustained by the phenomenal acceptance of plaintiffs' invention by private industry and the [*34] Government's Polaris program.

The difficulty which confronted the Court primarily with reference to the first patent pertained to the interpretation of the phrase "minimum transverse dimension" of the gripping shank. The Court indicated in its findings the apparent reason for confusion arising in the attempt to reconcile the specifications with the claims of the patent. But, as stated heretofore, where no invention is claimed in the locking notches depicted in some of the drawings by reason of the express direction of the Patent Office, and where it is the gripping shank without the locking notches which is the novelty claimed, and which features were purposely copied by the defendant, it would seem that plaintiffs have amply sustained their claim of infringement. The phrase "the minimum transverse dimension" in the claims of the patent does not enter into the patentees' claims of novelty whether that term refers to the thickness of the pin or the minimum width of the pin in the gripping shank.

In finding that the female contact of Type C of defendant's series does not infringe, it should be stated that the evidence is clear that it is the sleeve that is compressed in Type [*35] C - not expanded as taught by plaintiffs' first patent. Thus, the novelty in the Type C series functions in a manner which is opposite to that taught by Patent No. 1. In other words, plaintiff's first patent utilizes a substantial interference fit between the gripping shank of the pin and the aperture of the insulator. The teaching is that thereby the insulator or sleeve is expanded to grip the aperture in the board. Defendant, however, in its Type C series locks the insulator in the board and thereby the terminal pin in the sleeve. Under the circumstances herein, an opposite method of [265] producing a self-locking terminal cannot be said to invoke the doctrine of equivalency. In addition, reference should be made to the locking step on the Type C female connector which locks the insulator in the metal board and the pin in the sleeve - a feature not disclosed in plaintiffs' first patent.

Second Patent

As noted in the Findings, this patent was first held invalid by the Patent Office in view of Powell, with reference to which the Patent Examiner stated, p. 57 of the file history,

"* * * Powell teaches the concept of providing terminal sleeves with polygonal portions 29 to aid [*36] in precise orientation of the parts, * * *."

And later, on the same page,

"To provide the insulating sleeves of the publication with polygonal portions to assure proper seating and positioning would be obvious in view of Powell."

And later, on page 58,

"Applicants argue that the Powell teaching of square insulators cannot be applied to the connectors in the publication since the Powell insulators are not aligned by an interference relationship therebetween. It is not exactly understood what applicants mean by 'interference relationship' but at any rate, Powell teaches how to properly align insulators and it is obvious that it is desirable to have the connector insulators shown in the publication properly aligned. Accordingly, to apply the alignment concept of Powell to the publication insulators would not be inventive."

In the file history, it was pointed out by the applicants for the second patent that in Powell when only a few connectors are concerned, the dominant variations may be of little consequence, but where thousands of terminal sleeves are concerned, the tolerance variations make it imperative that the heads of adjacent insulating sleeves be separated an "amount [*37] at least equal to the allowable dimensional tolerance of the heads." (p. 63).

Necessity of the separation of the heads in modern plates where a multitude of insulator's were involved was evident at the time this patent application was made. Mechanical skill dictated that.The Patent Examiner stoutly resisted the claims of patentability and it was only after a tortuous road involving redrafted claims and personal visits that the patent was eventually allowed. However, the Court concludes that the Patent Examiner's original views as to Powell are highly pertinent here in this litigation in view of Netherlands 64,131 (not before the Patent Office). The evidence here in this proceeding is wholly insufficient to sustain a finding of patentable novelty in the second patent, and if so it was obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art. In any event, the evidence is wanting to sustain a finding that the defendant directly or indirectly aligns the head portions on its terminal boards to maintain a predetermined angular orientation, or that the terminal boards made by defendant are designed for that purpose so as to stamp it as a contributory infringer.

Third Patent

The alleged novelty [*38] of facilitating connection of a circuit board into a basic circuit by bending the pins at a 90 degree angle in light of the prior art did not constitute invention. This patent has not sustained the test of either novelty or nonobviousness.

Alleged Patent Misuse and Antitrust Violations

There is but little that the Court can add to its findings under this phase of the litigation. It may be emphasized again that the Malco-Mandex contracts were between two closely allied concerns and entered into voluntarily with apparent benefits to each of the parties. Whether Mandex or its successor will have any complaints in the future as to the contract provisions is not for this Court to determine. There is an utter absence of any showing as to any patent misuse or any violation of the Sherman Act pursuant to a conspiracy or otherwise which this defendant may utilize for any relief as to it in this litigation.

This memorandum is hereby made a part of the above Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law.

United States v. Johns-Manville Corp.

United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania

September 29, 1966

No. 31791

Reporter

259 F. Supp. 440 *; 1966 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10453 ; 10 Fed. R. Serv. 2d (Callaghan) 1361; 1966 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,961

United States of America v. Johns-Manville Corporation

Core Terms

pipe, specifications, prices, deposition, motion to strike, conspiracy, tests, producers, affiant, off-book, no evidence, requests, summary judgment motion, documents, meetings, sales, list price, hydroxide, summary judgment, criminal trial, price-fixing, predatory, promoting, domestic, calcium, foreign-made, injunction, uncombined, cases, bids

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

HN1[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Evidence of consciously parallel pricing will not alone support a finding of conspiracy under the Sherman Act.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Permanent Injunctions

HN2[] Injunctions, Permanent Injunctions

The remedy of injunction looks to the future. Its "sole function" in antitrust cases is to forestall future violations.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

HN3[] Market Definition, Relevant Market

The United States Supreme Court applies a test of reasonable interchangeability to determine the relevant market in an antitrust law case.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN4[] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

Any concerted activities engaged in by a party to influence the decision of public officials on legislative matters related to that party's business are constitutionally protected and cannot be the basis of a finding of violation of the antitrust laws, regardless of the intent with which they were undertaken.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Evidence > Relevance > Exclusion of Relevant Evidence > Confusion, Prejudice & Waste of Time

Evidence > Admissibility > Procedural Matters > Rulings on Evidence

HN5[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Exemptions & Immunities

It is within the province of the trial judge to exclude evidence of lawful activities to establish anti-competitive intent if he finds that it is not probative or is unduly prejudicial.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN6[] Summary Judgment, Supporting Materials

Fed. R. Civ. Proc. 56(e) requires that the court's permission be obtained before the record on a summary judgment motion is supplemented by depositions.

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Judges > Discretionary Powers

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Refreshing Recollection > General Overview

Evidence > Admissibility > Procedural Matters > Rulings on Evidence

HN7[] Judges, Discretionary Powers

Whether opposing counsel may inspect portions of evidence used to refresh a witness's memory is within the discretion of the trial judge.

Judges: [1] Van Dusen, J.

Opinion by: VAN DUSEN

Opinion

[*444] Memorandum Opinion Sur Motion of Defendant, Johns-Manville Corporation, for Summary Judgment Under Rule 56 (Document 87)

VAN DUSEN, J..

This case is before the court on the motion of Johns-Manville Corporation (hereinafter J-M or defendant) for summary judgment under F.R. Civ. P. 56 (Document 87).

On July 25, 1962, the United States Government filed a Complaint under § 4 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act (15 U.S.C. § 4) against J-M, Keasbey & Mattison Company (hereinafter K & M) and Certain-teed Products Corporation (hereinafter Certain-teed), seeking injunctive relief against alleged violations of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. §§ 1 and 2). The Complaint alleges that the above-named companies combined and conspired in unreasonable restraint of, and to monopolize, interstate and foreign trade and commerce, and that defendants have attempted to monopolize the aforesaid interstate and foreign trade and commerce in asbestos-cement pipe and couplings (Document 1).

K & M sold its asbestos-cement pipe and coupling business to Certain-teed on or about April 16, 1962 (Document 37, par. 5). On December 22, 1964, this court granted [2] K & M's motion for summary judgment, principally because that company had abandoned its business activity in the asbestos-cement pipe and coupling field and there was a lack of evidence of any probability that it would ever resume it. United States v. Johns-Manville Corporation, 237 F. Supp. 885 (E.D. Pa. 1964). Certain-teed's Motion for Summary Judgment was granted on August 10, 1965, principally because there was no evidence showing that that company (which had been in the asbestos-cement pipe and coupling business for only two months before the complaint in this case was filed) had joined in any illegal activities in which J-M and K & M might have been involved. *United [445] States v. Johns-Manville Corporation, 245 F. Supp. 74 (E.D. Pa. 1965).

The documents which constitute the record in this case are enumerated in the margin. [1] [4] Rulings on the motions of both parties to strike certain portions of the Gerin and Hogan depositions, plaintiff's motions to strike certain portions of the defendant's affidavits filed in support of the instant Motion, and plaintiff's supplemental motions to strike certain portions of affidavits filed in support of Certain-teed's Motion for Summary [3] Judgment are set forth in Appendix A to this opinion. [2]

As noted above, the Government has charged J-M with violation of both §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. §§ 1 and 2). Under § 1, the Government alleges a two-pronged conspiracy: first, a conspiracy with other domestic producers (chiefly K & M and later Certain-teed) to maintain domestic asbestos-cement (hereinafter a-c) pipe prices at a uniform level, and second, a conspiracy among the same companies to keep foreign-made a-c pipe out of the

---

[1] The record before the court on the instant Motion for Summary Judgment consists of the plaintiff's Complaint (Document 1), the Answer of defendant J-M (Document 8), plaintiff's statement of contentions (Document 84), defendant J-M's statement of contentions (Document 93), the affidavits filed in connection with K & M's Motion for Summary Judgment (Documents 33, 36, 38, and the three affidavits attached to Document 34), the affidavits filed in connection with Certain-teed's Motion for Summary Judgment (Documents 52-63, 68-70), the affidavits attached to Document 87, except those portions excluded by the rulings in this Memorandum Opinion, including Appendix A, the affidavits filed by the Government as Documents 101-104, 110-113, the affidavit of Roy J. Barloga (attached to Document 114), the depositions taken by the Government (Documents 94-96, 100, 105-109, 121, 126), the affidavit filed by the Government in support of its Motion for stay of discovery proceedings (Document 19), and the transcript of the argument on the Motion for Summary Judgment, insofar as it contains rulings (Document 125). Also, the parties have stipulated that the court may, in disposing of J-M's Motion for Summary Judgment, consider the testimony given at the criminal trial (United States v. Johns-Manville Corporation et al., 231 F. Supp. 690), exhibits identified under oath at that trial, and GX-3004, which was marked for identification at that trial at N.T. 2658, to the extent that such testimony, exhibits and documents are relevant to this Motion (Document 99).

[2] With regard to the Government's motion (Document 114) for reconsideration of the pre-trial order of April 14, 1966 (Document 92) to permit consideration of the affidavit of Roy J. Barloga (attached to Document 114), the court informed counsel at the oral argument of this Motion that this affidavit would be considered on J-M's Motion for Summary Judgment (Document 125, p. 3).

United States market. The latter aspect of the conspiracy is subdivided into two parts: first, a campaign to promote the adoption by the American Society for Testing Materials (ASTM), the American Water Works Association (AWWA), and municipal authorities of certain restrictive [5] specifications for a-c pipe for the sole purpose of excluding foreign-made pipe, which does not meet such specifications, and, second, miscellaneous concerted activities designed and intended to exclude foreign pipe.

Under § 2 the Government alleges that J-M and co-conspirators have attempted to monopolize interstate and foreign commerce in a-c pipe.

I. Alleged Conspiracy to Fix Prices

In ruling on the defendants' motion for acquittal in the companion criminal case (United States v. Johns-Manville Corporation, et al., 231 F. Supp. 690), this court found that there was evidence in the record which would support a jury finding that J-M and K & M agreed on prices during the period 1954-1959. [3] United States v. Johns-Manville [*446] Corporation, 231 F. Supp. 690, 696 (E.D. Pa. 1964). The record in this case contains no direct evidence of any price-fixing activity since that period. [4] In order to show, as it must in this suit for an injunction, that the defendant is engaged in a presently existing conspiracy to maintain prices on a-c pipe and couplings, the Government relies upon evidence of alleged identical list prices maintained by J-M and K & M up until 1962 and thereafter [6] by J-M and Certain-teed (brief for plaintiff, p. 9). In short, the Government contends that evidence of conspiratorial behavior occurring about four years before the filing of the Complaint and eight or nine years before the filing of the instant Motion for Summary Judgment, plus a continued identity of book prices, establish a continuing conspiracy to fix prices.

---

[3] Actually the direct evidence of price-fixing activity extends only to the middle of 1958. According to the testimony of the participants, the last meeting between representatives of J-M and K & M to discuss list prices for a-c pipe occurred no later than the summer of 1957 (N.T. 3043-4, 4959-63, 4966-9). The most recent documentary evidence of price-fixing activity is a letter dated in August of 1956 (GX-726). The last telephone conversation between J-M and K & M representatives to discuss the prices to be bid on specific jobs occurred no later than the middle of 1958 (N.T. 3087).

[4] The Government points to GX-511 and GX-546 as evidence that the conspiracy persisted through 1960. GX-546 (which bears the printed date 6/1/60) is an official K & M price list for an area that corresponds with J-M's Atlanta District. GX-511 is a price sheet prepared by W. D. Gibson, the manager of J-M's Atlanta District (N.T. 5379). It is not an official J-M price sheet; rather, it represents a reduction from the then prevailing J-M prices (N.T. 5380). Since GX-511 also bears the date 6/1/60 and since the prices on GX-511 and 546 are identical, the Government contends that these price sheets can only be the result of collusion. However, Mr. Gibson testified that the decision to go off book was made sometime between May 15 and June 1, 1960, and that the actual typing and mailing of the list may have occurred as early as May 20, 1960 (N.T. 5386). Thus, these two price sheets were not necessarily issued simultaneously. Moreover, Mr. Gibson flatly denied that GX-511 was the result of collusion with K & M (N.T. 5382).

The Government argues that the affidavit of William J. Hogan shows that there is a continuing conspiracy between J-M and Certain-teed to fix prices on a-c pipe. Paragraph 20 of that affidavit is as follows:

> "The prices quoted by Johns-Manville and Certain-teed are about ten percent higher where imported pipe is not permitted to compete. Following the adoption by Tucson of the testing in the United States requirement, the prices quoted by Johns-Manville and Certain-teed rose to their published list prices. When TUSI began operation of its local testing facility, the prices of domestic pipe dropped to the previous level."

Mr. Hogan does not say that J-M's and Certain-teed's prices are the same. Even if they are, his statement is not inconsistent with a pattern of behavior in which Certain-teed raises its prices after J-M has done so. Moreover, the raising and lowering of prices depending on whether there is competition from the generally cheaper foreign pipe would seem to be normal competitive behavior. Although consideration of Mr. Hogan's deposition (Document 126) is not necessary for the above conclusion, it is noted that pages 65-105 of that deposition fully support the above construction of Mr. Hogan's affidavit.

[7] As to the alleged continued identity of book prices, there is no evidence in this record that J-M and Certain-teed or any other domestic producer are currently using identical price lists. [5] However, assuming that J-M and Certain-teed are using the same list prices, there is testimony in the record that it was K & M's policy to follow the J-M book prices (Reichel Deposition, p. 93; N.T. 10,551), and that Certain-teed continued the pricing policy which had been employed by K & M (Reichel Deposition, pp. 66-67). There is also in the record expert testimony that the only practicable course for a small producer like K & M or Certain-teed in an oligopolistic market is to follow the prices of the larger producer (N.T. 11,069-73). It is well settled that HN1[] evidence of consciously parallel pricing will not alone support a finding of conspiracy under the Sherman Act. United States v. Johns-Manville Corporation, 245 F. Supp. 74, 80 (E.D. Pa. 1965), and cases there cited.

[8] Moreover, the defendant has submitted the affidavits of the three J-M officials [*447] who have responsibility for setting a-c pipe prices (all these affidavits are attached to Document 87). Mr. Orth, who has the final responsibility for approving changes in J-M's list prices for a-c pipe, denies conferring with any competitor on such price changes (Orth affidavit, par. 26). The other two affiants, Mr. Wahl and Mr. Sandt, deny that they ever discussed price changes with any competitor and state affirmatively that they know of no discussions of price changes between J-M employees and the employees of any competitor (Wahl affidavit, par. 6; Sandt affidavit, par. 7). It is noted that such evidence was not in the record at the criminal trial.

The crucial flaw in the Government's price-fixing case, however, is that the record fails to deny or explain the defendant's evidence on transaction prices, i.e., the prices at which sales were actually made as opposed to the official list prices. There is massive and convincing evidence in the record that since 1958, the last year for which there is any direct evidence of meetings between J-M and K & M representatives, [6] J-M has made [9] a considerable portion of its sales at "off-book" prices, i.e., prices which are below those listed in the official J-M price sheets. This evidence demonstrates two things: (1) that there is vigorous price competition among domestic a-c pipe producers, and (2) that it is extremely unlikely that such producers are currently involved in a price-fixing conspiracy.

Whenever a J-M district manager permits his salesmen to sell "off-book," he must submit a form called a price request to the Product Manager. The price request must contain a statement of the reason why the district manager has had to go off book. Several hundred of these price requests were received in evidence at the criminal trial (Exhibits DJM-1001 to 1680). The frequency with which the reason "to meet K & M competition" appears in these price requests leaves little room for doubt that there is effective price competition among domestic a-c pipe producers. The record also contains extensive evidence of price concessions [10] made by K & M to compete with J-M (e.g., Exhibits DKM-61, 63, 76, 77, 77A, 85, 93).

The Government contends that all these sales at off-book prices were the result of prior agreement between J-M and K & M to meet price competition from "others" (Document 84, pars. 14, 16, 18). The only evidence of this in the record is the testimony of Vernon F. Stompler, the former manager of K & M's a-c pipe department, that on several occasions up until 1958 he was a party to telephone conversations in which K & M and J-M officials agreed to quote the same off-book price on particular jobs (N.T. 3029-30, 3084-7, 3155-6, 3159, 3166-9). There is no evidence of collusion on off-book prices since that time. On the other hand, there is substantial evidence of widely varying transaction prices, which could not possibly be the result of a price-fixing conspiracy.

Exhibits introduced at the criminal trial show for the years 1958-1961 the large proportion of total J-M sales made at off-book prices. In 1958, 44.6% of J-M's pressure, sewer and irrigation pipe business was done on the basis of price requests; in 1959 the amount of such business done on the basis of price requests increased to 59.8%. For [11] the years 1960 and 1961, the comparable figures are 50.8% and 55.8%, respectively (Exhibits DJM-401, 400A). Some districts sold off-book more frequently than others, and pressure and sewer pipe were sold at off-book prices more frequently than was irrigation pipe. For example, in the New York Sales District in 1960, off-book

---

[5] This was admitted by Government counsel at the oral argument on this Motion for Summary Judgment (Document 125 at pp. 75-76).

[6] See footnote 3, supra.

orders represented 99.2% of total sewer pipe business; in the Denver Sales District in 1959 and 1960, 108.5% and 117.4%, respectively, of total business in pressure pipe was done at off-book [*448] prices. [7] (Exhibits DJM-306E, 302, 302E, 410, 412).

[12] The Government has not shown affirmatively that these deviations from list price conform to a consistent pattern. On the contrary, the evidence indicates that the discounts from list price varied erratically from district to district and from transaction to transaction within each district. Pressure pipe figures for the year 1960 show that the average discount on off-book orders in the Philadelphia Sales District was 8.1%, whereas the average discount in such orders in the St. Louis District was 10.8% and in the Seattle District 13.1% (Exhibit DJM-302E). Pressure pipe figures for 1961 show average discounts of 8.6%, 17.1% and 21.3% in those same sales districts, respectively (Exhibit DJM-303F). Exhibit DJM-434, which shows reductions allowed as a percentage of book price in the St. Louis District in 1960, indicates discounts ranging from 1.6 to 14% in the first quarter, from 2.4 to 12.6% in the second quarter, from 4.3% to 22% in the third quarter, and from 4.8% to 15.8% in the fourth quarter. The proportion of J-M pipe sales made at off-book prices has not declined in the years following the criminal trial. Exhibits attached to J-M's Motion for Summary Judgment (Document 87) [13] show that in 1962 71.6% of total water pipe securements was due to price requests, in 1963 70.9% was due to price requests, in 1964 74.7%, and in 1965 67.9%. In 1962 the percentage of total sewer pipe securements due to price requests was 66.8%, in 1963 it was 61.9%, in 1964 64.9%, and in 1965 77.3%.

Mr. Clarence Marion, who testified as an expert at the criminal trial, concluded from this erratic price behavior that J-M could not possibly have pre-planned such a pricing policy, let alone conspire with another company on it (N.T. 12,553-5, 12,654-5). He further testified that it was unreasonable to believe that businessmen would agree upon a price level at which they knew they could not sell (N.T. 12,664). It is indeed incredible that J-M and other companies diligently worked out mutually acceptable list prices for a-c pipe and then went out into the field and charged anything but those list prices in order to compete with one another on price.

Evidence of conspiratorial behavior occurring eight years ago, plus a continuing identity of book prices, does not create a genuine issue of fact as to the existence of a current price-fixing conspiracy where, as here, the identity of list [14] prices is satisfactorily explained and the actual market situation is shown to be one of vigorous price competition. [8]

HN2[] The remedy of injunction looks to the future. Douglas v. Jeannette, 319 U.S. 157, 165, 87 L. Ed. 1324, 63 S. Ct. 877 (1943); Unistrut Corporation v. Power, 280 F.2d 18, 23 (1st Cir. 1960). Its "sole function" in antitrust cases is to forestall future violations. *United States v. Oregon State [15] Med. Soc., [449] 343 U.S. 326, 333, 72 S. Ct. 690, 96 L. Ed. 978 (1952). The introduction of evidence of vigorous price competition among domestic a-c pipe producers satisfies the defendant's burden of proving abandonment of the price-fixing conspiracy. See United States v. W. T. Grant Co., 345 U.S. 629, 97 L. Ed. 1303, 73 S. Ct. 894 (1953). As noted above, the only company with which J-M could possibly be shown to have conspired is no longer in the business of selling a-c pipe. It cannot be assumed that Certain-teed or any other domestic producer will enter into a price-fixing conspiracy with J-M at some time in the future when there is no evidence in the record that any of these companies has been a party to such a conspiracy in the past. It is, therefore, concluded that an injunction against price-fixing is unnecessary in

---

[7] Percentage figures in excess of 100% are due to the fact that there was frequently a time lag between the report that the order had been secured and the submission of the price request on the order. For example, the report that the order had been secured might be received at J-M headquarters at the end of 1960 and so would be considered a 1960 securement. The price request on that order, however, might not be received until the beginning of 1961 and so would be reflected as a 1961 price request (N.T. 12,349-50). Although this means that the percentage figures given above for particular years are not completely accurate, it can safely be said that during the period 1958-1961 J-M made about half of its a-c pipe sales at off-book prices.

[8] There is no merit to the Government's contention that J-M's activities with respect to pipe specifications are probative to show participation in a price-fixing conspiracy. Much of the activity to secure specifications was constitutionally protected under United Mine Workers of America v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626, 85 S. Ct. 1585 (1965), and Eastern R. Presidents Conf. v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464, 81 S. Ct. 523 (1961). Also, the evidence of actual market activity is contrary to a conclusion that domestic a-c pipe prices were the result of collusion.

this case. See United States v. Johns-Manville Corporation, 237 F. Supp. 885, 890 (D.C. 1964), and cases there cited.

II. Activities to Limit Foreign Competition Other Than Contentions as to Restrictive Specifications

The Government's next contention is that J-M and K & M conspired to restrict competition from foreign-made a-c pipe in ways other [16] than the promotion of restrictive specifications (Document 84, pars. 39-42). In support of this contention, the plaintiff has introduced evidence of several activities engaged in by J-M which, it is asserted, indicate the existence of this phase of the conspiracy. [9] These are: (1) a series of meetings which took place in various European cities in 1959 and 1960 between representatives of J-M and certain European producers of a-c pipe; (2) the institution of a patent suit against Eternit of Genoa and its American importer, Italit, Inc.; [10] [17] and (3) the use of Mexican-made a-c pipe as a "fighting brand." [11]

[18] The Government does not dispute that the latter two activities were carried [*450] on exclusively by J-M. However, the Government contends that J-M initiated them to fulfill a threat made at a meeting in Paris in March of 1960 by J-M Vice President, Robert Orth, who was acting pursuant to a prior agreement with K & M (brief for plaintiff, Document 133, p. 37). There is evidence on the record indicating that Mr. Orth attended the Paris meeting to persuade the Europeans to agree to limit their exports of a-c pipe to the United States to $5,000,000 worth per year and to divide up the American market geographically among themselves (N.T. 7904-6, 7919). [12] [21] There

---

[9] The Government also alleges that J-M and K & M engaged in certain predatory price reductions in connection with this phase of the case (brief for plaintiff, p. 30). The situation referred to is the alleged simultaneous issuance of identical price sheets in the Southeastern United States on June 1, 1960. It has been seen above that the Government's evidence on these price sheets fails to show concerted action by J-M and K & M. See note 4, supra.

[10] It is noted that the record fails to support the claim that a patent suit without merit was instituted against an importer of Italit a-c pipe in 1960. The United States District Court hearing the case upheld J-M's claim of infringement and the fact that this ruling was reversed by the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit does not make the ruling groundless. Although the Government, at page 39 of its brief (Document 133), cited "Feskoe Aff." in support of its argument on this point, this affidavit (Document 63) does not mention patents. The Orth affidavit attached to Document 87 covers some recent discussions concerning patents by J-M, as well as certain agreements on this subject.

[11] It is noted that there is no testimony in the record that Mr. Orth specifically threatened the use of Mexican-made a-c pipe as a "fighting brand." Mr. Gerin stated at page 38 of his deposition (Document 121) that Mr. Orth mentioned "that J-M had bought some interest in Asbestolit and would sell Asbestolit in this country," but he did not remember the context in which this statement was made. There was later read to him isolated questions and answers which he had given to a grand jury on February 8, 1962 (p. 91 of Document 121), as follows (p. 103 of Document 121):

> " Mr. Raymond Carson: That was page 1316.
>
> "Q. At the same page:
>
> "'Q. Did he say outright that he would fight the European manufacturers with Mexican Pipe?'
>
> "Page 1317:
>
> "'A. He didn't say with Mexican pipe. He said he would fight us, and later he talked about Mexican pipe, so you could connect the two ideas.'
>
> "Did you so testify?
>
> "A. Yes."

Since plaintiff refused to make the grand jury testimony available to defendant (p. 106 of Document 121), the deposition was concluded without any cross-examination by defendant concerning the above excerpts from the grand jury testimony (pp. 106-7 of Document 121) and such vague grand jury testimony, which has not been subject to cross-examination, could not be the basis of a finding affecting defendant's rights under these circumstances, particularly when it was taken two days before the hearing on the Motion for Summary Judgment.

is further evidence that he threatened reprisals if agreement was not reached on these matters (N.T. 7939). There is, however, no evidence from which it could legitimately be concluded that Mr. Orth was acting on behalf of anyone besides J-M. There is testimony that Mr. Colton, Vice President of Johns-Manville International, conversed with Mr. Bateman, managing partner of Turner & Newall, Ltd., which owned all the stock of K & M, for about ten minutes on the evening of the meeting in Brussels in June of 1959 (N.T. 7898-7900), [19] and it is not disputed that Mr. Orth met Mr. Bateman at the London airport after the Paris meeting in 1960 (N.T. 9338-40, 13,343-4). [13] There is no evidence, however, of the contents of the brief discussion between Colton and Bateman, and the only evidence of what was said at the Orth-Bateman meeting is Orth's testimony that he told Bateman (his version of) [14] what had transpired at the Paris meeting (N.T. 13,364-5). These brief meetings [15] do not support an inference that Mr. Bateman or Turner & Newall, Ltd., was engaged in a conspiracy with J-M. Moreover, the undersigned has previously ruled that the evidence produced at the criminal trial was insufficient to support the charge that Turner & Newall, Ltd., was a party to the conspiracy alleged in the indictment, Application of Turner and Newall, Ltd., 231 F. Supp. 728 (E.D. Pa. 1964), and that there is no evidence of illegal action on the part of Mr. Bateman. United States v. Johns-Manville Corporation, 237 F. Supp. 885, 893, n. 12 (E.D. Pa. 1964). Mr. Costa, an officer of Eternit of Genoa, who was present at the European meetings, testified that Orth told the Europeans that "the American manufacturers" were tired of foreign [20] competition and would take all possible measures to protect their market (N.T. 7936, 7939). However, the record contains no evidence that Orth had authority to speak for K & M, which, at that time, was the only other American manufacturer of a-c pipe. Mr. Costa also testified that Orth told the Europeans not to worry about whether K & M would go along with the agreement [*451] because he (Orth) would go to London to see Turner & Newall on the subject of K & M. Assuming that Mr. Orth did make this statement, it does not indicate that he had any prior agreement with K & M. On the contrary, the statement indicates that if the Europeans agreed on the $5,000,000 quota and the division of United States markets, then Mr. Orth would seek K & M's consent to abide by the arrangement. This evidence does not create a triable issue of fact as to conspiracy when viewed as a whole. The picture it presents is one of unilateral action by J-M. No employee of K & M or Turner & Newall, Ltd. was present at any of the European meetings, and there is absolutely no evidence that either of these companies authorized Mr. Orth to speak for it at the meetings. [16]

[22] Since there is no showing that the alleged miscellaneous activities (enumerated under (1) - (3) above) directed against foreign competition (excluding evidence of acts designed to effect restrictive specifications, which subject is discussed below) were carried on in pursuance of a conspiracy between J-M and some other entity, the Government's case on this aspect of the alleged conspiracy must fail.

---

[12] Mr. Orth denied that he made any such proposals (N.T. 13,273, 13,279, 13,281). His testimony is supported by that of Mr. Gerin of Belgian Eternit, who was also at the meeting (Gerin deposition, pp. 35-42). Mr. Orth testified that, to the contrary, the Europeans were seeking a guarantee of a $5,000,000 American market (N.T. 13,247-9, 13,273, 13,282).

[13] Mr. Orth testified that this meeting was at his request and lasted for about 20 or 30 minutes. Mr. Bateman had just arrived by plane from Majorca (N.T. 13,343-5).

[14] See note 12, supra.

[15] Mr. Koons' testimony that Orth told him after the Paris meeting that he had been to London to see Mr. Soothill, a director of Turner & Newall, before the Paris meeting is not persuasive since (a) this testimony is inconsistent with Mr. Koons' testimony before the grand jury, wherein he made no mention of a statement by Orth that he had seen Mr. Soothill before the meeting (N.T. 9808-9810), and (b) he had an interest in the outcome of this litigation due to his company's pending treble damage suit (N.T. 9354-7). Mr. Orth denied going to London before the Paris meeting (N.T. 13,285). His testimony, supported by that of Mr. Frazza, is that he flew directly from New York to Paris (N.T. 13,276, 11,740-2).

[16] It is noted that when, on the defendants' motion for judgment of acquittal in the criminal case, the undersigned ruled that the jury could find from the above testimony of Mr. Costa and other evidence that the activities at the foreign meetings were carried on pursuant to a conspiracy between J-M and K & M, the defendants had not introduced any evidence. In addition, the record did not at that time contain the affidavits attached to Document 87 or the several depositions that the Government has filed since the criminal trial.

In any event, the Government concedes that any efforts to obtain agreements to restrict foreign competition have been abandoned (brief for plaintiff, p. 40). Therefore, even if it were established that such efforts were made, an injunction should not issue. United States v. Oregon State Med. Soc., supra.

III. Asbestos Cement Pipe and Couplings As a Relevant Market

In the companion criminal case, the undersigned ruled that there was no evidence in the record from which the jury could conclude beyond a reasonable doubt that a-c pipe constituted a relevant market for purposes of the alleged violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act. United States v. Johns-Manville Corporation, 231 F. Supp. 690, 698-701 (E.D. Pa. 1964). After reviewing extensively some of the massive evidence of vigorous [23] competition among the producers of the various kinds of pipe, [17] the undersigned said:

> "There is every indication in this record that the above types of pipe were 'reasonably interchangeable' by consumers for the same purposes, except in certain soils such as are present in Southwest Texas. See United States v. E. I. Du Pont, 351 U.S. 377, 395, 100 L. Ed. 1264, 76 S. Ct. 994 . . . . Even in such soils, plastic, tile and concrete pipe were used."

United States v. Johns-Manville Corporation, supra, at 699.

[24] When the relevant market issue was raised again on Certain-teed's motion for summary judgment, the undersigned expressed his belief that the six affidavits added to the record in the interim did not justify a change in his statements on that issue in the criminal case. United States v. Johns-Manville Corporation, 245 F. Supp. 74, 82, n. 9 (E.D. Pa. 1965). The scant evidence that the Government [*452] has added to the record on the question of relevant market since the ruling on Certain-teed's motion for summary judgment does not justify a reversal of the views previously expressed.

The Government's argument based on testimony that ASTM has different specifications and "similar, but not identical" test requirements for each kind of pipe (Cran deposition, Document 107, pp. 12-13) must be rejected. This evidence only indicates a difference in performance characteristics - the same kind of difference that existed among the various types of packaging material involved in the Du Pont case, supra, 351 U.S. at 397-8. The Government next refers to testimony that all over the country there are purchasers who prefer one type of pipe over the others and will pay a premium for it [18] [25] (Sandt deposition, Document 109, pp. 44, 47). However, there is no indication as to how many such purchasers exist or what percentage of the pipe market they represent. In the face of the substantial evidence of competition among the producers of the various types of pipe contained in this record, it would be speculation to conclude from this testimony that there is any general pattern among pipe consumers to buy only one type of pipe to the exclusion of the others. The evidence of substantial differences between the prices of a-c and cast iron pipe in this record (Documents 53, 55, 56, 101, 102, 113) is also ineffective to establish a-c pipe as a relevant market. Aside from the fact that cast iron is only one of the many alternative types of pipe available, there was a substantial difference between the price of cellophane and those of other flexible packaging materials in the Du Pont case, 351 U.S. at 396, 400-401. In addition, this evidence, as well as evidence that a-c pipe prices have decreased while cast iron prices have not (Exhibit DJM-435, Document 102), is explained by the fact that in many areas sellers of a-c pipe have to "break into" territories which have [17] It is noted that at the time of this court's first ruling on the relevant market issue, only the Government's evidence had been introduced, since that ruling was on the defendants' motions for judgment of acquittal. During the presentation of their case, the defendants substantially increased the quantum of evidence showing a highly competitive situation among the various types of pipe. There is a concise review of some of this evidence at pages 110-115 of the defendant's brief. See especially, the citations to the many price requests in which the reason given by the district manager for going "off-book" is competition from some other kind of pipe.

---

[18] In his deposition, Mr. Hogan testified that within the Arizona sales territory there were "almost countless" bids where only a-c pipe was involved (Document 126, pp. 112-113). This evidence may show that a-c pipe constitutes a relevant market in Arizona or the southwestern United States, but it does not show that this is true for the country as a whole. See, also, United States v. Johns-Manville Corporation, 245 F. Supp. 74, 82, n. 9 (E.D. Pa. 1965).

traditionally [26] used cast iron pipe (N.T. 11,658; Exhibits DJM-1005, 1027, 1028). The domestic producers must, at the same time, meet competition from the generally cheaper foreign-made a-c pipe (Exhibits DJM-1025, 1029, 1030, 1360, 1370).

The recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 (1966), does not require a different HN3[] result. As in Du Pont, the court applied in that case the test of reasonable interchangeability to determine the relevant market. At page 572, the court [27] said "But there is here a single use, i.e., the protection of property, through a central station that receives signals." So in the instant case, there is a single use, i.e., the transportation of liquid through a stationary tubular conduit. Moreover, it is questionable whether that case is apposite at all, since the court is careful to point out at page 572: " . . . we deal with services, not with products . . . ."

IV. Alleged Campaign to Influence Local Officials to Adopt Restrictive Specifications

The Government alleges that J-M and co-conspirators worked concertedly to bring about the adoption by ASTM, AWWA and local governmental authorities of pipe specifications designed either to increase the cost of selling foreign-made a-c pipe in the United States or to exclude such pipe entirely (Document 84, pars. 26-38). The undersigned remains of the opinion, expressed on several previous occasions, [19] that HN4[] any concerted activities engaged in by J-M to [*453] influence the decision of public officials on pipe specifications are constitutionally protected and cannot be the basis of a finding of violation of the antitrust laws, Eastern R. Presidents Conf. v. Noerr Motor [28] Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464, 81 S. Ct. 523 (1961), regardless of the intent with which they were undertaken. United Mine Workers of America v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626, 85 S. Ct. 1585 (1965).

Relying on footnote 3 to the Pennington opinion, [20] the Government contends that even though J-M's activities with respect to local specifications are lawful in themselves, evidence of such activities may be used to establish anti-competitive intent. The second step in the Government's argument is to assert the proposition that predatory intent can make conduct, otherwise lawful, an unreasonable restraint of trade or an attempt to monopolize. See, e.g., United States v. Columbia Steel Co., 334 U.S. 495, 525, 92 L. Ed. 1533, 68 S. Ct. 1107 (1948); Nash v. United States, 229 U.S. 373, 378, 57 L. Ed. 1232, 33 S. Ct. 780 (1913); United States v. Reading Co., 226 U.S. 324, 370, 57 L. Ed. 243, 33 S. Ct. 90 (1912). On the other hand, not only is [29] it illogical to infer from evidence that J-M engaged in certain completely lawful conduct that it also engaged in other conduct which was unlawful, but it would seem that to draw such an inference in this case would be an infringement upon the defendant's First Amendment rights. Cf. Bates v. Little Rock, 361 U.S. 516, 4 L. Ed. 2d 480, 80 S. Ct. 412 (1960). It is noted that none of the cases cited by the Government in its Memorandum Regarding Evidence of Predatory Intent To Establish Unlawfulness of Restraint of Trade or by the Supreme Court in footnote 3 of the Pennington case involved a situation in which predatory intent was inferred from participation in constitutionally protected activities.

[30] In any event, by the terms of that footnote, HN5[] it is within the province of the trial judge to exclude such evidence if he finds that it is not probative or is unduly prejudicial. In this case, evidence of activities in promoting specifications to be adopted by state and local governmental units would only be corroborative of other evidence indicating a predatory intent on the part of J-M in advocating the local testing requirement in ASTM and AWWA. On the other hand, allowing the introduction of evidence of these activities would unnecessarily prolong the trial.

V. Alleged Predatory Promotion in ASTM and AWWA of Specifications on Alkalinity-Uncombined Calcium Hydroxide Tests and on Testing in the United States

---

[19] N.T. 2310, 2553, 8157, 8638, 13,900.

[20] That footnote reads:

" n.3 It would of course still be within the province of the trial judge to admit this evidence, if he deemed it probative and not unduly prejudicial, under the 'established judicial rule of evidence that testimony of prior or subsequent transactions, which for some reason are barred from forming the basis for a suit, may nevertheless be introduced if it tends reasonably to show the purpose and character of the particular transactions under scrutiny."

J-M and K & M, through their representatives, promoted the adoption by ASTM and AWWA of: (1) an alkalinity test for a-c pipe (this was later replaced by the uncombined calcium hydroxide or "free lime" test), and (2) a requirement that all a-c pipe installed in the United States be tested in this country. With respect to the former, i.e., the chemical tests, there is substantial evidence in the record that these were scientifically justified. This evidence includes [31] not only the testimony of scientific personnel employed by J-M, K & M and Certain-teed, but also of independent scientists not so employed (N.T. 13,485-6, 11,960-1, 11,976, 11,980, 12,023, 12,685-12,694; Cran Deposition, p. 96; Cran Affidavit, par. 4(j)). There is no evidence of a scientific nature which indicates that these tests are not scientifically useful. Nor is there any evidence that J-M proposed the alkalinity and free lime tests for the purpose [*454] of impeding foreign competition. Most of the documents relied on by the Government as support for its allegation that J-M advocated these tests for a predatory purpose were written by K & M personnel. Those documents which were written by J-M employees merely refer to meetings between J-M and K & M research personnel to discuss specifications to be submitted to ASTM and AWWA. [21] These give no indication that J-M's motive in promoting the chemical tests was predatory. John R. Cran, the J-M employee who recommended to ASTM the adoption of the alkalinity and free lime tests, denies that he did so for the purpose of excluding foreign pipe (Cran Affidavit, par. 4(j)). Under these circumstances, the record would not justify [32] the grant of injunctive relief based on the activities of J-M concerning the specifications covering alkalinity and uncombined calcium hydroxide tests.

With respect to J-M's activities in advocating the adoption by ASTM and AWWA of a requirement that all pipe be tested in the United States, however, there is an issue of fact which must be resolved by a trial. The evidence now on the record on the necessity for this requirement is not as one-sided as in the case of the chemical tests (see the documents referred to on page 2 of the Government's brief - Document 133 - but see evidence such as par. 14 of Orth affidavit attached to Document 87). In addition, there is some evidence that in promoting this requirement J-M may have been motivated by a purpose to exclude foreign pipe [33] (N.T. 2613; Exhibit GX-454).

Also, there is no affidavit or deposition specifically denying plaintiff's contentions (Document 84) such as 43.

VI. Applicability of F.R. Civ. P. 56

The Government argues that with respect to all issues summary judgment is improper in this case, first, because questions of motive or intent are involved, Poller v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., 368 U.S. 464, 7 L. Ed. 2d 458, 82 S. Ct. 486 (1962), and, second, because principles of sound judicial administration preclude granting summary judgment in complex cases, Kennedy v. Silas Mason Co., 334 U.S. 249, 92 L. Ed. 1347, 68 S. Ct. 1031 (1948); United States v. Bethlehem Steel Corporation, 157 F. Supp. 877 (S.D.N.Y. 1958). All of the cases relied on by the Government are distinguishable from the instant one in that in this case the court has had the benefit of an extensive record, including the testimony of witnesses given during a criminal trial lasting over four-and-a-half months. These witnesses were cross-examined, and their demeanor was appraised by the undersigned. Summary judgment is required on this record on the Government's contentions discussed in I - IV above and on the contention [34] discussed in V that defendant's efforts to secure a national specification on the alkalinity-uncombined calcium hydroxide tests justify injunctive relief under 15 U.S.C. § 4. See United States v. Johns-Manville Corporation, 237 F. Supp. 885, 892-3 (E.D. Pa. 1964), and cases there cited; Waldron v. Cities Service Co., 361 F.2d 671 (2nd Cir. 1966).

Counsel shall submit within 15 days an appropriate order entering partial summary judgment in accordance with the foregoing so that these contentions (Document 84) are denied:

1, 2, 9-23, 27, 28, 32, 33, 36, 37, 39-42 and 47;

and these contentions are modified as follows:

---

[21] J-M and K & M representatives on Committee C-17, the a-c pipe specification section of ASTM, were asked by the committee chairman to collaborate on specifications to be submitted to the committee as a whole for approval (N.T. 13,155-6).

26, in lieu of the last two sentences the following one will be inserted: "A restrictive provision requiring that all pipe be tested in the United States was agreed upon, drafted and vigorously promoted by representatives of J-M and K & M to and within the [*455] appropriate committees of ASTM and AWWA";

31, by deleting the words "the Alkalinity Clause and."

The order shall reflect that the Motion for Summary Judgment is denied as to the following contentions:

3-8, 24, 25, 26 (as modified), 29, 30, 31 (as modified), 34, [35] 35, 38, 43-46.

Appendix A

To Memorandum Opinion of September 29, 1966, in Civil Action No. 31791

Rulings on Various Objections and Motions of Both Parties

On April 14, 1966, this court filed a Pre-Trial Order providing that any material to be added to the record by the Government for purposes of the Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment was to be filed by May 16, 1966 (Document 92, par. I-B). The Government filed the deposition of Jacques Gerin (Document 121) on July 11, 1966, and the deposition of William J. Hogan (Document 126) on August 5, 1966. HN6[] Rule 56(e) requires that the court's permission be obtained before the record on a summary judgment motion is supplemented by depositions. F.R. Civ. P. 56(e); United States v. Johns-Manville Corporation, 237 F. Supp. 893 (E.D. Pa. 1965). In the instant case, no reason appears why the Gerin and Hogan depositions should not have been considered in disposing of this Motion for Summary Judgment. Neither party objected to the consideration of these depositions on the ground that they were too late, and it does not appear that either party could be prejudiced by a ruling that they were timely. Accordingly, this court has considered [36] the relevant portions of these depositions in deciding this motion, except where parts of them have been stricken for other reasons. A

1. Ruling on defendant's motion to strike certain testimony of Mr. Gerin (Document 121, pp. 106-7)

At the close of Mr. Gerin's deposition, counsel for defendant moved to strike all of the deponent's testimony occurring after the recess noted at page 90 of the transcript (Document 121, pp. 106-7). Government counsel had used the grand jury minutes from the criminal proceeding to refresh Mr. Gerin's recollection as to conversations he had with Messrs. Orth and Frazza, of J-M. The basis of defendant's motion to strike is that the Government's use of the minutes gave defendant's counsel the right to see them for purposes of cross-examination. HN7[] Whether, in such a situation, defendant's counsel may inspect the relevant portions of the grand jury minutes is within [37] the discretion of the trial judge. United States v. Consolidated Laundries Corporation, 291 F.2d 563 (2nd Cir. 1961); Continental Baking Company v. United States, 281 F.2d 137 (6th Cir. 1960). See, also, Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. v. United States, 360 U.S. 395, 3 L. Ed. 2d 1323, 79 S. Ct. 1237 (1959). In any event, the trial judge has considered the testimony given by Mr. Gerin after the recess and consideration of all that testimony would not alter the disposition of the motion for summary judgment (see reasons given above at page 16). Defendant is entitled to have this motion granted.

2. Ruling on plaintiff's motion to strike certain testimony of Mr. Hogan (Document 126, p. 117)

At the close of Mr. Hogan's deposition, Government counsel moved to strike all the cross-examination of the deponent on certain bid tabulations from the City of Tucson (Document 126, p. 117). Defendant's counsel had used the tabulations to impeach statements made by Mr. Hogan in his affidavit (Document 103, par. 20) and his deposition (Document 126, pp. 21-26) that the price behavior of J-M and Certain-teed in the [*456] Tucson area bore a direct relationship to the presence or absence [38] of competition from foreign-made pipe. Government counsel contend that, since defendant's counsel referred to only a few selected bids or official tabulations of bids and did not produce all the bids or records of such bids prepared during the relevant period, the entire cross-examination on this subject must be stricken. This contention is rejected. The possibility that the tabulations used by defendant's counsel in cross-examining Mr. Hogan represent only aberrations in a general pattern of behavior, which conforms to his testimony on direct, may be considered in determining the weight to be accorded this cross-examination. It is noted that there was nothing to prevent plaintiff from producing other bids or records of such bids on re-direct examination or from asking for the deposition to be continued for this purpose.

3. Rulings on plaintiff's motion to strike the affidavit of John R. Cran (Document 115)

The Government's first motion to strike (Document 115) is directed to the affidavit of John R. Cran (attached to Document 87). The Government's motion to strike affiant's statement in paragraph 3 that he will trace the history of the presentation to, and consideration [39] by, ASTM and AWWA of the uncombined calcium hydroxide test and the testing in the country of installation note is denied. After having served as a research physicist and engineer, Mr. Cran assumed responsibility for J-M's a-c water and sewer pipe specifications in June of 1956. At about the same time, he began to work on the establishment of specifications for a-c pipe by ASTM and AWWA. His duties included representing J-M at various meetings of these agencies and presenting J-M's views concerning specifications. He officially became a member of ASTM Committee C-17, which is responsible for a-c products, in 1959, although he had participated in its meetings prior to that year. His responsibilities in connection with specifications continued until January 1965 (see par. 1 of his affidavit). In the performance of these various duties, Mr. Cran would have become familiar with the history of these specification provisions in the learned societies. However, any statements in the affidavit relating to matters of which Mr. Cran would not have personal knowledge (for example, what transpired at Committee C-17 meetings at which Mr. Cran was not present) will be disregarded. The fact [40] that certain statements of the affiant contained in paragraph 4(a) of his affidavit are in conflict with his deposition (Documents 107, 108) is not grounds for excluding the statements in the affidavit. 6 Moore's Federal Practice, Par. 56.22(1). However, the testimony in the deposition will be treated as more reliable than the statements in the affidavit. Ibid. The Government's motion to strike the statements in paragraph 4(c) that the Department of Justice began putting pressure on ASTM to drop the uncombined calcium hydroxide test is denied, since the existence of pressure from an outside organization would be within the first-hand knowledge of a member of the Committee charged with drafting the test. For the same reason, affiant's statement in paragraph 4(f) that the pressure applied by the Department of Justice increased will not be stricken. However, Mr. Cran's statement in paragraph 4(c) that, as a result of a meeting with the Department in Washington in 1960, ASTM agreed to refer the uncombined calcium hydroxide test back to Committee C-17 for further study will be stricken because there is no showing that affiant had first-hand knowledge of the meeting or that it was the [41] cause of referring the test back to Committee C-17.

Mr. Cran's statement in paragraph 4(e) that after a meeting of Subcommittee VI of Committee C-17 in December of 1960 a letter ballot was sent out to the Committee as a whole is admissible, since copies of such letter ballot were put in the record at the criminal trial (Exhibit DJM-51).

[*457] Mr. Cran's statement in paragraph 4(g) that he had "difficulty in understanding the position of the Department of Justice because, from the information available to us, it was . . . based upon . . . the complaints of the foreign producers" will also be stricken. His difficulty in understanding the Department of Justice's position is immaterial to this action and there is no affirmative showing that he is competent to testify to the Department's reasons for its action in advocating the elimination of the uncombined calcium hydroxide test from the ASTM specifications. Affiant's statement in paragraph 4(j) that J-M "has always been of the opinion that there should be a chemical requirement" in the ASTM specifications will be modified by striking out the word "always" and substituting therefor the phrase "since at least 1956," which is the [42] first year Mr. Cran would have had first-hand knowledge of J-M's position on the subject. The Government's motion to strike Mr. Cran's statement in paragraph 4(k) that, "Each purchaser determines, on the basis of his own soil and water conditions and safety requirements, the maximum allowable percentage of uncombined calcium hydroxide" is denied. Mr. Cran is not saying that every purchaser takes this action; he is merely testifying to the use to which ASTM specifications are put by a-c pipe purchasers. As a member of the Committee that drafts the specifications and an officer of a corporation which, as a seller of a-c pipe, must of necessity know how buyers select the pipe they will purchase, Mr. Cran is competent to testify as to how, generally, purchasers make use of ASTM specifications. Mr. Cran's statements in paragraph 5(c) that a meeting was held in April 1961 between representatives of ASTM and the Department of Justice, that the Department adopted a certain position at this meeting, and that the Executive Subcommittee of Committee C-17 adopted a revised note as a result of this meeting will be stricken. There is no showing that either Mr. Cran or

Subcommittee VI, [43] of which he was a member, had any connection with the events related. The Government's motion to strike Mr. Cran's statement in paragraph 5(d) that the testing in the country of installation note was "scientifically unimpeachable" and his statement in paragraph 5(e) that he has "always believed" that testing in the country was an important safeguard against in-transit damage is denied. Mr. Cran's credentials as an expert in a-c pipe specifications have been referred to above (see, also, paragraph 1 of his affidavit). These statements are competent as the opinion testimony of an expert on the subject. Affiant's statement in paragraph 5(f) that neither he nor his company recommended the testing in the United States note "as part of a conspiracy or an attempt to exclude foreign pipe" will not be considered as a legal conclusion of what amounts to a "part of a conspiracy," but may be considered as his statement of the intent with which he acted for his employer.

Finally, Mr. Cran's statements in paragraphs 6(b), referring to a draft of revised AWWA standards, 6(c) referring to a telegram, 6(e) referring to a letter ballot, and 7(a) referring to an original proposed revision of AWWA's [44] standard, are admissible. To the extent that documents referred to in these paragraphs are not in the record, the weight accorded Mr. Cran's statements will be affected by the defendant's failure to attach copies of such documents to the affidavit. B

4. Rulings on plaintiff's motion to strike the affidavit of Robert F. Orth (Document 116)

The Government's second motion to strike (Document 116) is directed [*458] to the affidavit of Robert F. Orth (attached to Document 87). Mr. Orth makes statements in paragraph 6 of his affidavit, by which he purports to set forth the substance of two contracts, and in paragraph 10 that technical assistance and patent license agreements similar to those entered into with Flintkote have [45] been offered to and rejected by Certain-teed and Capco Company. The fact that a patent licensing agreement has been entered into and that two others have been offered are relevant on the alleged predatory intent with which plaintiff contends J-M has used its patents. On the other hand, the Government is entitled to have the full terms of the contracts (rather than a summary) submitted to it if a fact finder is to base a finding on such terms, so that the court has not considered the description of the contracts as complete or fully accurate.

5. Rulings on plaintiff's motion to strike the affidavit of George R. Wahl (Document 117)

The Government's next motion to strike (Document 117) is directed to the affidavit of George Wahl (attached to Document 87). The Government's motion to strike Mr. Wahl's statement in paragraph 5 that he obtained personal knowledge of all the reasons for changes in certain pipe prices is granted, since Mr. Wahl would not necessarily have had personal knowledge of all the reasons why his superior, Mr. Orth, approved price recommendations which Mr. Wahl submitted to him (see par. 4(a) of Wahl affidavit). These five statements in paragraph 16 with [46] respect to the reasons for certain price changes will be read as prefixed by the phrase "to the best of my knowledge." Pursuant to the Government's suggestion, the statement in paragraph 6, "To the best of my knowledge such changes were the result of completely independent decisions by Johns-Manville without prior consultation or communication of any kind with any of its competitors," will be modified to read that to the best of his knowledge no such communications were had. The Government's motion to strike paragraph 16 of the affidavit, that the reason for certain price changes was competitive pressures since 1958, is denied. Although it appears that affiant's knowledge of such pressures is based on hearsay (see par. 13 of Wahl affidavit and par. 6 of Sandt affidavit), namely, price requests and communications from J-M salesmen and district managers, these sources would be admissible in evidence under the business records exception to the hearsay rule. See 6 Moore's Federal Practice, § 56.22(1).

Mr. Wahl's statement in paragraph 17 that price reductions were arrived at as a result of studies by the Product Manager and Product Group Manager, who then consulted with Mr. Wahl and [47] submitted their recommendations to him, is a statement of the procedures followed by him so that no hearsay is involved. The absence of such studies and recommendations, if written, as attachments to the affidavit goes to the weight of the allegations but does not preclude their admissibility.

6. Rulings on plaintiff's motion to strike the affidavit of Hartley Sandt (Document 118)

The Government has also moved to strike (Document 118) the affidavit of Hartley Sandt (attached to Document 87). As with the similar statement in the Wahl affidavit, affiant's statement, "To the best of my knowledge such changes were the result of totally independent decisions by Johns-Manville without any prior consultation or communication of any kind with any of its competitors," will be read to say that to the best of his knowledge no such communications were had. The Government's motion to strike affiant's statements in paragraphs 12, 14, 18, 23 and 27, that certain post-1961 price reductions were made as a result of competitive pressure, is denied. Although affiant states that he acquired knowledge of these competitive pressures through price requests and reports submitted to him by J-M [48] district managers and salesmen (see par. 6 of his affidavit), such [*459] price requests and reports would be admissible in evidence under the business records exception to the hearsay rule. See 6 Moore's Federal Practice, § 56.22(1). It is noted that no copies or examples of post-1961 price requests or reports are attached to the affidavit or otherwise contained in the record. C Similarly, the statements in paragraph 13 that price reductions were arrived at as a result of studies by the Product and Product Group Managers and recommendations made by them and the General Sales Manager, in paragraph 24 by which Mr. Sandt purports to set forth the contents of documents submitted to J-M by Flintkote pursuant to their patent license agreement, and in paragraph 26 by which he purports to set forth what is "clearly indicated" by reports of J-M salesmen and district managers, are affected by the failure to attach verified copies of any of these documents to the affidavit. The Government's motion to strike that portion of paragraph 26 in which affiant states an estimate of the rate at which Capco is presently securing orders is granted, since no facts are stated upon which such estimate [49] is based and it does not appear affirmatively that affiant would be competent to testify to such estimate on personal knowledge.

7. Rulings on plaintiff's supplemental motion to strike the affidavit of Malcolm Meyer (Document 119)

The Government has also filed two supplemental motions to strike affidavits. The first of these (Document 119) is directed to the affidavit of Malcolm Meyer (attached to Document 34). As pointed out above in connection with the affidavit of Mr. [50] Cran, the fact that statements of Mr. Meyer in paragraphs 5 and 10 of his affidavit are in conflict with testimony in his deposition (Document 100) is not grounds for striking the offending statements in the affidavit. The proper procedure is to consider the statements in the affidavit in light of the testimony given at the deposition and, where there is a conflict, to accord greater weight to the latter. 6 Moore's Federal Practice, Para. 56.22(1). The Government's motion to strike Mr. Meyer's statement in paragraph 7 that instructions contained in a certain directive issued on his orders were followed by all Certain-teed personnel is granted, since testimony of Mr. Meyer at pp. 66-67 of his deposition reveals that this statement was based upon hearsay; namely, information conveyed to Mr. Meyer by Certain-teed's legal department. D

[51] 8. Rulings on plaintiff's motion to strike the affidavit of James R. Reichel (Document 120)

The Government's second supplemental motion to strike (Document 120) is directed to the affidavit of James R. Reichel (attached to Document 34). The Government's motion to strike Mr. Reichel's statement in paragraph 10 that Certain-teed has never proposed specifications to ASTM, AWWA, or local authorities for the purpose of restricting or eliminating competition from foreign-made a-c pipe is denied, since, although Mr. Reichel never attended an ASTM meeting (Reichel deposition, p. 196), he has been in charge of Certain-teed's a-c pipe sales from the date of that company's acquisition of K & M's assets until the present and so would know whether the promotion of restrictive specifications in the learned societies was among his company's arsenal of weapons for [*460] combatting competition, foreign or otherwise. However, Mr. Reichel's testimony on this subject at his deposition will be given greater weight than the above statement in his affidavit.

Ayers v. Pastime Amusement Co.

United States District Court for the District of South Carolina, Charleston Division

October 6, 1966

Civil Action Nos. 6481, 6482

Reporter

259 F. Supp. 358 *; 1966 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10211 ; 1966 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,927

Lawrence H. Ayers Plaintiff v. Pastime Amusement Company and Consolidated Theatres, Inc. Defendants, Civil Action No. 6481. Lawrence H. Ayers and Ruth T. Ayers Plaintiffs v. Pastime Amusement Company and Consolidated Theatres, Inc. Defendants, Civil Action No. 6482

Core Terms

distributors, tort-feasors, covenant, cause of action, parties, state law, Pictures, exhibitors, reserved, settlement, motions, rights, Film, antitrust, releases, cases

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Covenants

Torts > Procedural Matters > Multiple Defendants > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Releases From Liability > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Releases From Liability > Covenants Not to Sue

Torts > Procedural Matters > Settlements > General Overview

Torts > ... > Settlements > Multiple Party Settlements > General Overview

Torts > ... > Settlements > Multiple Party Settlements > Partial Settlements

Torts > ... > Settlements > Releases From Liability > General Overview

HN1[] Types of Contracts, Covenants

The release of one joint tort-feasor discharges all other joint tort-feasors.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Covenants

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Releases From Liability > Covenants Not to Sue

Torts > ... > Settlements > Multiple Party Settlements > Partial Settlements

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Releases From Liability > General Overview

Torts > Procedural Matters > Settlements > General Overview

Torts > ... > Settlements > Multiple Party Settlements > General Overview

HN2[] Types of Contracts, Covenants

A settlement with and a release of one tortfeasor in which the right is expressly reserved against the other tortfeasors is not technically a release but a covenant not to sue.

Torts > Procedural Matters > Multiple Defendants > General Overview

Torts > Procedural Matters > Commencement & Prosecution > General Overview

Torts > Procedural Matters > Settlements > General Overview

Torts > ... > Settlements > Multiple Party Settlements > General Overview

Torts > ... > Settlements > Multiple Party Settlements > Partial Settlements

Torts > ... > Settlements > Releases From Liability > General Overview

HN3[] Procedural Matters, Multiple Defendants

There is a divergence of opinion among the state and federal courts as to whether a release of one joint tort-feasor, with a reservation of rights against other joint tort-feasors accompanied by a dismissal with prejudice of the action against the released joint tort-feasors by operation of law releases all joint tort-feasors.

Admiralty & Maritime Law > Maritime Workers' Claims > Maintenance & Cure > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN4[] Maritime Workers' Claims, Maintenance & Cure

Federal rather than state law controls suits involving alleged violations of the federal antitrust laws. State law cannot be permitted to impede the effectuation of the national objectives expressed in the statutory schemes of the antitrust laws.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Covenants

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Releases From Liability > Covenants Not to Sue

Torts > Procedural Matters > Settlements > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Releases From Liability > General Overview

HN5[] Types of Contracts, Covenants

The intention of the parties in executing the instrument is of paramount importance in determining whether an instrument is a covenant not to sue or a release, and where there is any reasonable basis for a court to determine that the document is a covenant rather than a release it will do so.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Releases

Torts > ... > Settlements > Multiple Party Settlements > General Overview

Torts > Procedural Matters > Settlements > General Overview

HN6[] Types of Contracts, Releases

A valid release of one tortfeasor from liability for a harm, given by the injured person, discharges all others liable for the same harm, unless the parties to the release agree that the release shall not discharge the others and, if the release is embodied in a document, unless such agreement appears in the document.

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Releases From Liability > General Releases

Torts > ... > Settlements > Multiple Party Settlements > Partial Settlements

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Releases From Liability > General Overview

Torts > Procedural Matters > Settlements > General Overview

Torts > ... > Settlements > Multiple Party Settlements > General Overview

HN7[] Releases From Liability, General Releases

A release of one tortfeasor need not release all others jointly liable if the release expressly reserves rights against joint tortfeasors. This rule does not prevent an injured party from reserving rights against one or more joint-tortfeasors while releasing others. It merely requires that he announce his intent, and express that reservation in the release agreement.

Judges: [1] Simons, Jr., District Judge.

Opinion by: SIMONS

Opinion

[*358] Order

SIMONS, JR., District Judge.

The within captioned actions were commenced in this court on January 13, 1958 by the filing of complaints against the two named defendant exhibitors of motion pictures and also against the personal defendant, Albert Sottile, who was the managing officer and director of the corporate defendant, Pastime Amusement [*359] Company. Subsequent to the commencement of the action Mr. Sottile has died and his personal representative was not substituted as a party defendant. Also defendants in the original suit were the following eight producers and distributors of motion picture films:

Paramount Film Distributing Corporation

Loew's, Incorporated (now Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Inc.)
Twentieth Century Fox Film Corporation
Warner Bros. Pictures Distributing Corporation
R.K.O. Teleradio Pictures, Inc., (now R.K.O. General, Inc.)
United Artists Corporation
Universal Film Exchanges, Inc.
Columbia Pictures Corporation

The causes of action are tort suits founded upon an alleged conspiracy among the defendant exhibitors and distributors in violation of the [2] Sherman Antitrust Act, Title 15, U.S.C., Sections 1, 2, and 7, and the Clayton Antitrust Act, Title 15, U.S.C., Sections 12, 15, 16, and 22.

Since the commencement of the actions almost nine years ago, the original parties have engaged in exhaustive discovery. Many depositions have been taken, and hundreds of exhibits introduced at the taking of said depositions. These cases have also been before the court on numerous motions.

During the latter portion of 1963 and the early part of 1964 plaintiffs and the eight defendant distributors entered into settlement negotiations which resulted in a compromise settlement of these causes of action against said distributors, upon the payment by them to plaintiffs of the sum of $42,500 and the execution of a "Covenant Not to Sue" dated March 11, 1964 by plaintiffs as covenantors in favor of the distributors and Paramount Pictures Corporation, Warner Bros. Picture Distributing Corporation, and Universal Pictures Corporation (the last three apparently being subsidiary corporations of some of the distributor corporations) as covenantees. Pursuant and subsequent to the execution of the "Covenant Not To Sue" on March 11, 1964 the defendant distributors [3] paid this sum of $42,500 to plaintiff's counsel on April 6, 1964, in escrow until orders of dismissal were obtained from the court dismissing the eight distributors from the action. Upon motion of plaintiffs' counsel and by order of this court dated April 9, 1964, the within actions were dismissed against the defendant distributors "and as to those defendants only, with prejudice and without costs".

Thereafter, the sole remaining defendants, Pastime Amusement Company and Consolidated Theatres, Inc., moved for summary judgments upon the ground that plaintiffs' causes of action were unitary and indivisible tort actions, and that the purported covenant not to sue was in legal effect a general release "so that the execution of the settlement documents, when coupled with the dismissal of the actions with prejudice as to the defendant distributors leads to a like dismissal with prejudice" as to the two defendant exhibitors.

Both parties also moved for leave to file third-party complaints against and to bring back into these causes of action the eight defendant distributors who had heretofore purchased their peace from plaintiffs upon the ground that there was no wrongdoing on the part [4] of the two defendant exhibitors, and that any verdicts or judgments which plaintiffs may recover against Pastime and Consolidated would necessarily be based exclusively upon the actions of the third-party defendants (the eight defendant distributors) who conspired among themselves substantially in the manner alleged in the original complaint, and that any acts done by the two defendant exhibitors were done innocently and with no intent to engage in, or with any knowledge of, the alleged wrongful conspiracy among the proposed third-party defendant distributors.

These motions were heard by the court on July 27, 1966, at which time counsel [*360] for plaintiffs and Pastime and Consolidated filed written briefs setting forth their positions and the court heard extensive oral arguments. Subsequent to the hearing counsel for the parties have also filed written reply briefs.

At the hearing the court denied defendants' motions to file third-party complaints in these causes of action against the eight defendant distributors. Thus, the sole motions now before the court are those of defendants for summary judgment.

In determining these motions the controlling questions are as follows: [5] (1) Do principles of federal or state law apply to the issues? (2) Is the instrument dated March 11, 1964, executed by plaintiffs as covenantors in favor of the defendant distributors and others as covenantees, a covenant not to sue, or a release? (3) If such instrument is found by the court to be a release, does such release of some of the alleged joint tort-feasors constitute a release of all joint tort-feasors, so that these actions may not now be maintained against the two defendant exhibitors?

Factually there is no dispute of any substantial facts. The court has considered the contents of the purported covenant and the written negotiations between counsel for plaintiffs and the distributors which culminated in the settlement of these cases on the basis of the "covenant not to sue". The court finds that it was the intention of the parties to the instrument that it constitute a covenant not to sue and that plaintiffs did not accept the $42,500 settlement as payment in full of all of its alleged injuries and damages resulting from the wrongful conduct of all the parties defendant to the original actions. Furthermore, the instrument involved was entitled "Covenant Not To Sue" [6] and in the body of the instrument itself, plaintiffs jointly and severally, and for their executors, administrators, successors and assigns covenanted not to sue the defendant distributors, their predecessors, affiliates, subsidiaries, etc., upon any and all causes of action "whatsoever from the beginning of the world to the date of these presents."

In the instrument plaintiffs also specifically reserved all causes of action they may have against all other persons, firms or corporations, other than the covenantees specifically named therein. [1]

[7] The question of whether federal or state law should apply in determining whether the instrument here is a covenant not to sue or a release is moot inasmuch as the South Carolina Supreme Court has never apparently had occasion to consider such question. Fundamentally, however, the South Carolina rule is in keeping with the old common law principle that HN1[] the release of one joint tort-feasor discharges all other joint tort-feasors. See Pendleton v. Columbia Railway, 133 S.C. 326, 131 S.E. 265, and National Bank of Savannah v. Southern Railway, 107 S.C. 28, 91 S.E. 972. Although the South Carolina Supreme Court has never had occasion to express itself concerning the validity of a covenant not to sue, such instruments have been recognized as valid in this state since the opinion of my late lamented colleague District Judge C.C. Wyche in McWhirter v. Otis Elevator Co., 40 F. Supp. 11 (W.D.S.C. 1941), in which he held: HN2[] "A settlement with and a release of one tortfeasor in which the right is expressly reserved against the other tortfeasors is not technically a release but a covenant not to sue".

[*361] The court recognizes that HN3[] there is a divergence of opinion among some of the [8] state and federal courts as to whether a release of one joint tort-feasor, with a reservation of rights against other joint tort-feasors accompanied by a dismissal with prejudice of the action against the released joint tort-feasors by operation of law releases all joint tort-feasors. The cases which have been brought to the court's attention supporting the principle that the release of one joint tort-feasor under such circumstances releases all joint tort-feasors are Simpson v. Plyler, 258 N.C. 390, 128 S.E.2d 843, and the numerous cases cited therein; Byrd v. Crowder, 166 Tenn. 215, 60 S.W.2d 171; Eberle v. Sinclair Prairie Oil Co., 120 F.2d 746 (10th Cir. 1941), and Elliott v. Paramount Film Distributing Corporation, 27 F.R.D. 495 (E.D. Pa. 1961). It is noted that in Eberle the court was applying state not federal law.

After a careful consideration of the pertinent authorities the court is convinced that principles of federal and not state law must govern the issues here since plaintiffs' causes of action arise and are predicated upon federal antitrust statutes.

Although the precise issue before the court has apparently never been directly considered by the United States [9] Supreme Court or the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals, closely parallel situations have been considered by the United States Supreme Court. In Dice v. Akron, Canton & Youngstown R.R. Co., 342 U.S. 359, 72 S. Ct. 312, 96 L. Ed. 398 (1952), the Court had before it the question of whether in a state court action under the Federal

---

[1] The reservation contained in the last paragraph of the Covenant Not To Sue dated March 11, 1964 is as follows:

> "This Covenant Not To Sue and all other Covenants, representations, and warranties by the Covenantors, and each of them, herein contained, shall not apply to any claim, cause of action, right of action, or claim for relief which Covenantors, or either of them, may ever have had or which they, or either of them, may now have against any persons, firms or corporations other than the Covenantees, all of which claims, causes of actions, rights of action, or claims for relief, are hereby expressly reserved by and to the Covenantors."

Employers' Liability Act the validity of a release granted to the railroad by the injured employee was to be determined by federal or state law. The Court, at page 361, stated:

> "First. We agree with the Court of Appeals of Summit County, Ohio, and the dissenting judge in the Ohio Supreme Court and hold that validity of releases under the Federal Employers' Liability Act raises a federal question to be determined by federal rather than state law. Congress in § 1 of the Act granted petitioner a right to recover against his employer for damages negligently inflicted. State laws are not controlling in determining what the incidents of this federal right shall be. Manifestly the federal rights affording relief to injured railroad employees under a federally declared standard could be defeated if states were permitted to have the final say as to what [10] defenses could and could not be properly interposed to suits under the Act. Moreover, only if federal law controls can the federal Act be given that uniform application throughout the country essential to effectuate its purposes."

In Garrett v. Moore-McCormack Co., Inc., 317 U.S. 239, 87 L. Ed. 239, 63 S. Ct. 246 (1942), the Court held that in a suit by a seaman in a state court proceeding for damages under Section 33 of the Merchant Marine Act and for maintenance and cure the rights of the parties are measured by the federal statute and Admiralty principles of law, rather than by state court principles. Other persuasive federal court decisions enunciate the principle that HN4[] federal rather than state law controls suits involving alleged violations of the federal antitrust laws. In Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp. v. Winchester Drive-In Theatre, 351 F.2d 925 (9th Cir. 1965), the court, at page 928, stated: "State law cannot be permitted to impede the effectuation of the national objectives expressed in the statutory schemes of the antitrust laws. We affirm the lower court's determination that a federal rule should apply." The court in that case held that a release which "contained [11] no express reservations of any kind" released all joint tort-feasors in the cause of action. The Ninth Circuit indicated, however, that its decision would have been different if there had been an express reservation of rights against joint tort-feasors not included in the release. See also Dale Hilton, Inc. v. Triangle Publications, Inc., 198 F. Supp. 638 (E.D. Pa. 1961); Stella v. Kaiser, 221 F.2d 115 [*362] (2d Cir. 1955), cert. den. 350 U.S. 835, 100 L. Ed. 745, 76 S. Ct. 71.

In keeping with the federal law and the better reasoned decisions the court concludes that the instrument executed by plaintiffs in favor of the defendant distributors was in fact a covenant not to sue, and was not a release; therefore, it did not by operation of law release the two defendant exhibitors herein. See Clapper v. Original Tractor Cab Co., 165 F. Supp. 565 (S.D. Ind. 1958); Lysfjord v. Flintkote Co., 135 F. Supp. 672 (S.D. Cal. 1955); Rector v. Warner Bros. Pictures, 102 F. Supp. 263 (S.D. Cal. 1952); McKenna v. Austin, 77 U.S. App. D.C. 228, 134 F.2d 659 (D.C. Ct. of App. 1943). HN5[] The intention of the parties in executing the instrument is of paramount importance in determining whether [12] an instrument is a covenant not to sue or a release, and where there is any reasonable basis for a court to determine that the document is a covenant rather than a release it will do so. Dale Hilton, Inc. v. Triangle Publications, Inc., supra; Lysfjord v. Flintkote Co., supra; Restatement Contracts, Section 120.

Even if the document herein be found to be a general release rather than a covenant not to sue, it would not operate to discharge defendants Pastime and Consolidated since in the instrument plaintiffs expressly reserved their rights and causes of action against all except the covenantees therein. The most recent pronouncement of the American Law Institute in the Restatement, Torts, § 885 (1939), expresses the modern and better reasoned view as follows:

> HN6[] "(1) A valid release of one tortfeasor from liability for a harm, given by the injured person, discharges all others liable for the same harm, unless the parties to the release agree that the release shall not discharge the others and, if the release is embodied in a document, unless such agreement appears in the document." [2]

---

[2] Comment "d" of the Restatement in reference to the above quoted Section 885(1) states as follows:

> "d. Limits and effect of rule. A covenant not to sue clearly indicates by its form that it is not intended to discharge the liability of other tortfeasors jointly liable. On the other hand, a document in the usual form of a release given to one of them is construed as intended to discharge all claims for the tort and operates to discharge others also liable for the same harm. If, however, there is language in the release which manifests that the releasor intended to preserve his rights against the

The United States Supreme Court in its recent decision of Aro Mfg. Co. v. Convertible [13] Top Replacement Co., Inc., 377 U.S. 476, 12 L. Ed. 2d 457, 84 S. Ct. 1526 (1964), added its concurrence to this view when it stated at page 501:

> "It is also true that under the old common-law rule, a release given to one joint-tortfeasor necessarily released another, even though it expressly stated that it would have no such effect. See Prosser, Torts (2d ed. 1955), at 243-244. Under this rule Aro's argument on this point would prevail, since the agreement did release Ford's purchasers for their infringing use of the top-structures before the agreement date, and that was the use to which Aro contributed. See Schiff v. Hammond Clock Co., 69 F.2d 742, 746 (C.A. 7th Cir. 1934), reversed for dismissal as moot, 293 U.S. 529, 55 S. Ct. 146, 79 L. Ed. 639. But the rule is not applicable. Even in the area of nonpatent torts, it has been repudiated by statute or decision in many if not most States, see Prosser, supra, at 245, and by the overwhelming weight of scholarly authority. E.g., American Law Institute, Restatement of Torts (1939), § 885(1) and Comments b - d."

See also Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp. v. Winchester Drive-In *Theatre, [363] Inc., 351 F.2d at [14] page 930, wherein the court stated:

> HN7[] "Thus the position expressed by the Restatement and the vast majority of the recent case law is that a release of one tortfeasor need not release all others jointly liable if the release expressly reserves rights against joint tortfeasors . . .
> "Numerous other trial courts have reenforced proposition that the present Restatement position is an accurate expression of the current status of the law of general releases.
> "Nor do we find the Restatement position to be so unsupportable in reason as appellees would have us believe. The Restatement rule does not prevent an injured party from reserving rights against one or more joint-tortfeasors while releasing others. It merely requires that he announce his intent, and express that reservation in the release agreement."

[15] In accordance with the foregoing it is ORDERED that the motions for summary judgment on behalf of defendants Pastime and Consolidated be, and the same hereby are denied.

Counsel for the parties have advised the court that all discovery has been completed and the within order completes the disposition of all pending motions. The case is now ready for trial before a jury upon its merit. Counsel estimates that trial time will require between three and four weeks.

In accordance with Section 1292(b) of 28 U.S.C.A., the court hereby certifies that it is of the opinion that the within order involves controlling questions of law as to which there are substantial differences of opinion among the recorded cases, and one of first impression in this court; that an immediate appeal from the within order denying defendants' motion to dismiss plaintiff's action may materially advance the ultimate termination of the litigation; and that defendants should have the opportunity to apply to the Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit for permission to take an appeal from such order, if they should so desire. Should application for an appeal be made by defendants and such permission be granted by [16] the Court of Appeals, then further proceedings in this case shall be stayed until a determination of the appeal.

And it is so ordered.

End of Document

> others, effect is given to this manifestation. If such a manifestation does not appear upon the document containing the release, a rule analogous to the parol evidence rule prevents giving effect to the intention of the parties that the other tortfeasor shall not be discharged. Where the discharge is by an oral agreement, the manifested intent of the parties controls."

United States v. Crocker-Anglo Nat'l Bank

United States District Court for the Northern District of California, Southern Division

October 6, 1966

Civil No. 41808

Reporter

263 F. Supp. 125 *; 1966 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8349 ; 1966 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,898

United States, Plaintiff v. Crocker-Anglo National Bank, Citizens National Bank, and Transamerica Corporation, Defendants merger, convenience, effects, cases, public interest, banks, anti-competitive, de novo, anti trust law, bank merger, proposed merger, agencies, courts, substantive rule, probable effect, outweighed, words, proceedings, district court, provisions, plainly, judicial proceedings, lessen competition, trial de novo, confronted, approve

Core Terms

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Banking Law > ... > Banking & Finance > Commercial Banks > Mergers & Consolidations

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Regulated Industry Mergers

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > Bank Mergers

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Banking Law > Commercial Banks > Bank Expansions > General Overview

Banking Law > Federal Acts > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Industry Practices > Federal Regulations > Antitrust Regulations

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Remedies

HN1[] Commercial Banks, Mergers & Consolidations

Section [§ 2(c)] of the Bank Merger Act provides that any court having pending before it on or after the date of enactment of the Act any litigation initiated under the antitrust laws by the Attorney General after June 16, 1963, with respect to the merger, consolidation, acquisition of assets, or assumption of liabilities of an insured bank consummated after June 16, 1963, shall apply the substantive rule of law set forth in § 18(c)(5) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, as amended by the Bank Merger Act.

Banking Law > ... > Banking & Finance > Commercial Banks > Mergers & Consolidations

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Mergers > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > Clayton Act

Banking Law > Commercial Banks > Bank Expansions > General Overview

Banking Law > Commercial Banks > Bank Expansions > Bank Creations & Reorganizations

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Market Definition

HN2[] Commercial Banks, Mergers & Consolidations

Section 18(c)(5) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act provides as follows: The responsible agency shall not approve (A) any proposed merger transaction which would result in a monopoly, or which would be in furtherance of any combination or conspiracy to monopolize or to attempt to monopolize the business of banking in any part of the United States, or (B) any other proposed merger transaction whose effect in any section of the country may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly, or which in any other manner would be in restraint of trade, unless it finds that the anticompetitive effects of the proposed transaction are clearly outweighed in the public interest by the probable effect of the transaction in meeting the convenience and needs of the community to be served. In every case, the responsible agency shall take into consideration the financial and managerial resources and future prospects of the existing and proposed institutions, and the convenience and needs of the community to be served.

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > Clayton Act

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Regulated Industry Mergers

HN3[] Antitrust Statutes, Clayton Act

Section 18(c)(7)(B) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act provides as follows: In any judicial proceeding attacking a merger transaction approved under paragraph (5) on the ground that the merger transaction alone and of itself constituted a violation of any antitrust laws other than § 2 of the Act of July 2, 1890, § 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, the standards applied by the court shall be identical with those that the banking agencies are directed to apply under paragraph (5).

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > Clayton Act

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > Stipulations

HN4[] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

After providing for the time of commencement of an action brought under the antitrust laws arising out of a merger transaction, § 18(c)(7)(A) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act stipulates: In any such action, the court shall review de novo the issues presented.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > Bank Mergers

Banking Law > Commercial Banks > Bank Expansions > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Market Definition

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > Clayton Act

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

HN5[] Financial Institutions, Bank Mergers

Under § 5 of the Bank Merger Act, the Comptroller is charged with ascertaining two sets of facts. The first is whether the effect of the proposed merger transaction in any section of the country may be substantially to lessen competition and the second, whether, having found that there would be anti-competitive effects in the proposed transaction, those effects are clearly outweighed in the public interest by the probable effect of the transaction in meeting the convenience and needs of the community to be served.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > Bank Mergers

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > Clayton Act

Banking Law > Commercial Banks > Bank Expansions > General Overview

HN6[] Financial Institutions, Bank Mergers

The problem of reviewing the second determination under § 5 of the Bank Merger Act, namely, whether the proposed transaction is outweighed in the public interest, and whether it meets the convenience and needs of the community, is plainly and unquestionably a legislative or administrative determination of a type which the United States District Court for the Northern District of California, Southern Division, as a constitutional court, is prohibited from deciding.

Administrative Law > Separation of Powers > Jurisdiction

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Jurisdictional Sources > Constitutional Sources

Constitutional Law > The Judiciary > Case or Controversy > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Jurisdictional Sources > General Overview

Constitutional Law > The Judiciary > General Overview

Constitutional Law > The Judiciary > Congressional Limits

HN7[] Separation of Powers, Jurisdiction

The jurisdiction of a United States District Court is limited to cases and controversies as that term is used in U.S. Const. Art. III. Legislative or administrative jurisdiction cannot be conferred on a federal district court. A federal district court, as well as the United States Supreme Court, is brought into being by the judiciary article of the Constitution, and is invested with judicial power only and can have no jurisdiction other than of cases and controversies falling within the classes enumerated in that article. It cannot exercise or participate in the exercise of functions which are essentially legislative or administrative.

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > Reviewability > Factual Determinations

Civil Procedure > Trials > Jury Trials > Province of Court & Jury

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > Standards of Review > General Overview

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > Standards of Review > Substantial Evidence

HN8[] Reviewability, Factual Determinations

A review of an administrative order of an agency or commission is necessarily limited to the determination of questions of law and the ascertainment of whether findings of fact by the agency are supported by substantial evidence.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN9[] Legislation, Interpretation

There is, of course, no more persuasive evidence of the purpose of a statute than the words by which the legislature undertook to give expression to its wishes. Often these words are sufficient in and of themselves to determine the purpose of the legislation. In such cases, a court follows their plain meaning. When the plain meaning of a statute leads to absurd or futile results, the court looks beyond the words to the purpose of the act. Frequently, however, even when the plain meaning does not produce absurd results but merely an unreasonable ones plainly at variance with the policy of the legislation as a whole, the court follows that purpose, rather than the literal words.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN10[] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

When a statute is subject to two possible constructions, one of which will render it constitutional and the other unconstitutional, the legislature is presumed to have intended a meaning consistent with the constitutionality of its enactment.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN11[] Legislation, Interpretation

It is a court's duty, of two possible constructions, to adopt the one which will save and not destroy.

Judges: [1] Pope, Circuit Judge, Sweigert and Zirpoli, District Judges.

Opinion by: POPE

Opinion

[*127] Opinion and Order

POPE, Circuit Judge.

On May 13, 1963, some 34 days prior to the decision of the United States Supreme Court in United States v. Philadelphia Nat. Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 10 L. Ed. 2d 915, 83 S. Ct. 1715, (June 17, 1963), the Crocker-Anglo National Bank of San Francisco and Citizens National Bank of Los Angeles applied to the Comptroller of the Currency for permission to merge, under the charter of the former, with the title "Crocker-Citizens National Bank ". After notice and public hearing held July 30 and 31, 1963, and receipt of some 1605 pages of testimony and exhibits, the Comptroller, on September 30, 1963, made a decision approving the proposed merger, subject to certain named conditions, based on his findings including the finding that the proposed merger would promote the public interest. The approval was to be effective on or after November 1, 1963. On October 8, 1963, this suit was filed attacking the proposed merger as unlawful under § 7 of the Clayton Act, (15 USC § 18) and § 1 of the Sherman Act, (15 USC § 1). A certificate under the Expediting Act (15 USC § [2] 28) was filed and pursuant thereto a three-judge court was named and assembled for the purpose of hearing the cause. The Government's application for a preliminary injunction was denied (United States v. Crocker-Anglo Nat. Bank, 223 F. Supp. 849) and after completion of extensive pretrial proceedings and the making of a pretrial order the cause came on for trial on the merits. The trial began June 1, 1965, and the taking of testimony was concluded on June 18, 1965, with orders fixing the time for filing of briefs and proposed findings by the parties.

While the court was thus in the process of hearing testimony, on June 11, 1965, the Senate passed, with no opposing vote, its S. 1698, a bill under whose provisions, if enacted, this case would have become moot, for, as stated in the report accompanying the bill, the bill "would free the banks involved in such suits from further proceedings under the antitrust laws." Whether it was because of their knowledge of the pendency of this legislation or otherwise, counsel by stipulation postponed the final filing of briefs and proposed findings until shortly before the passage of this proposed legislation, as amended in the House on February [3] 9, 1966. The enactment, designated Public Law 89-356, 80 Stat. 7, was signed by the President on February 21, 1966.

The court was thus confronted with a somewhat extraordinary situation in which the law applicable to the case was changed after the testimony had been received and the cause submitted for decision. The measure, as finally enacted, made specific reference to this and other [*128] cases similarly situated in § 2(c) thereof which provides as follows: HN1[] "Any court having pending before it on or after the date of enactment of this Act any litigation initiated under the antitrust laws by the Attorney General after June 16, 1963, with respect to the merger, consolidation, acquisition of assets, or assumption of liabilities of an insured bank consummated after June 16, 1963, shall apply the substantive rule of law set forth in section 18(c)(5) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, as amended by this Act." [1] The so-called "substantive rule of law set forth in § 18(c)(5)" is stated in the Act as follows: HN2[] "(5) The responsible agency shall not approve -

(A) any proposed merger transaction which would result in a monopoly, or which would be in furtherance of any combination [4] or conspiracy to monopolize or to attempt to monopolize the business of banking in any part of the United States, or

(B) any other proposed merger transaction whose effect in any section of the country may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly, or which in any other manner would be in restraint of trade, unless it finds that the anticompetitive effects of the proposed transaction are clearly outweighed in the public interest by the probable effect of the transaction in meeting the convenience and needs of the community to be served.

In every case, the responsible agency shall take into consideration the financial and managerial resources and future prospects of the existing and proposed institutions, and the convenience and needs of the community to be served."

That language refers to the tests to be applied, in a case of this type, by the Comptroller of the Currency in passing upon an application for approval of a proposed bank merger. Not only did § 2(c), quoted above, specifically direct that this court, in respect to this case, "shall apply the substantive rule of law set forth in § 18(c)(5) " but § 18(c)(7)(B) provided as follows: [5] HN3[] "In any judicial proceeding attacking a merger transaction approved under paragraph (5) on the ground that the merger transaction alone and of itself constituted a violation of any antitrust laws other than § 2 of the Act of July 2, 1890 (§ 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. 2), the standards applied by the court shall be identical with those that the banking agencies are directed to apply under paragraph (5)."

After a special hearing conducted for that purpose [6] evidence was received and the parties were granted time within which to file further briefs and memoranda expounding their views as to the action which the court should take in the light of the entire testimony and in view of the new enactment.

It is the Government's view that the new statute made no substantial change in the law or standards to be applied in passing upon the issues here presented. The Government puts it thus: "It is, of course, the essential position of the Government . . . that the 1966 amendment to the Bank Merger Act (P.L. 89-356; 80 Stat. 7) has not resulted in substantial change in substantive antitrust law or in the standards used by the courts in determining the legality of bank mergers."

The new enactment does pose some difficult questions which we shall note hereafter. But we find no difficulty in concluding that the new enactment [*129] made substantial changes in the substantive law and in the standards to be applied in this case. Not only the language of the enactment but its legislative history is very compelling on this point. As we have noted, both § 2(c) and § 18(c) 7(B), quoted above, specifically direct the court in this situation to [7] apply the new standards of this Act. (The latter refers to the standards "directed to apply under paragraph 5" and § 2(c) and refers to these as "the substantive rule of law," set forth in that section.) It would be a bit startling to assume that in making this enactment, over which the congressional committees struggled long and hard, the

---

[1] It was noted in the congressional debates that this section referred to three so-called "post Philadelphia cases - in Nashville, San Francisco and St. Louis - where mergers were consummated after that [Philadelphia] decision." This is the San Francisco case there referred to. The Philadelphia case referred to is United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 10 L. Ed. 2d 915, 83 S. Ct. 1715. In that connection reference was also made to United States v. First Nat. Bank of Lexington, 376 U.S. 665, 12 L. Ed. 2d 1, 84 S. Ct. 1033.

Congress had turned up with nothing of substance, or had accomplished no change in respect to the law applicable for testing the validity of bank mergers.

The legislative history of the Act most emphatically contradicts the position now taken by the Government. The Senate Committee report, which accompanied the introduction of the bill in the Senate, took note of what Congress had contemplated would be the result of the Bank Merger Act of 1960. The Committee stated: "At that time it was clearly expected that the decision of the responsible Federal banking authority, based on its own investigation and on reports on competitive factors from the other two banking agencies and from the Department of Justice, would be final and conclusive. The Attorney General's report was expected to be advisory only." The report states that the uncertainty created [8] by the situation resulting from the Philadelphia and the Lexington bank cases (supra, note 1) "is harmful to the banking industry and to its customers. . . . There was unanimous agreement by all the witnesses that the present situation was undesirable and should be changed." The House Committee report states clearly the intent to make changes in the law as follows: "The intended legal effect of the bill is to modify the foregoing provision in three respects:

First, it is intended to make clear that no merger which would violate the antimonopoly section (sec. 2) of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act may be approved under any circumstances.

Second, the bill acknowledges that the general principle of the antitrust laws - that substantially anticompetitive mergers are prohibited - applies to banks, but permits an exception in cases where it is clearly shown that a given merger is so beneficial to the convenience and needs of the community to be served - recognizing that effects outside the section of the country involved may be relevant to the capacity of the institution to meet the convenience and needs of the community to be served - that it would be in the public interest to permit it.

[9] Third, the bill provides that this rule of law is to be applied uniformly, in judicial proceedings as well as by the administrative agencies."

The most complete exposition of the congressional view in the process of this enactment is to be found in the remarks of Senator Robertson at the time the bill, as amended to conform to the House Committee report, came back to the Senate. At that time Senator Robertson, who was Chairman of the Senate Committee which had charge of the bill and who originally introduced the bill in the Senate, was recommending that the Senate accept the House amendment. No member of Congress had remained in closer touch with the bill's progress through both Houses than Senator Robertson. As he put it: "I have lived with this problem day and night for months. I am convinced that we have a good bill." What he then had to say expounded at considerable length the ideas which had been expressed by various House members during consideration of the bill in the House. [2]

---

[2] Representative Ashley, one of the members principally in charge of the bill in the House, stated (Cong. Rec. Feb. 8, 1966, p. 2339): "The bill would require the court to use the new standards of the bill in all . . . 'post Philadelphia' cases now pending in court. . . . The courts have repeatedly held that under the antitrust laws the social or economic benefits of a given merger cannot even be considered." The Congressman then quoted from the statement to that effect in the Philadelphia case: "It is a primary purpose of the bill to assure that the courts will never again dismiss as irrelevant the question of the needs of a community . . . . [The] merger must be shown to be sufficiently beneficial in meeting the needs of the community to be served that, on balance, it may properly be regarded as in the public interest." During the same discussion Rep. Stanton, a member of the committee in charge of the bill, (Cong. Rec. Feb. 8, 1966, p. 2343) stated: "[It] was the expressed purpose and intent of Congress when it passed the Bank Merger Act in 1960 to make certain that control of bank mergers should be in the hands of the appropriate banking supervisory agencies, and that while the competitive effects of a proposed merger should be considered, they were not to be given a predominant position. These standards were repudiated by the Supreme Court in the Philadelphia National Bank and the Lexington Bank cases in which the Court decided that the Justice Department had the final say in bank mergers. Contrary to the intent of Congress, the bank regulatory authorities were relegated to advisory roles.

These provisions . . . reinstate a measure of antitrust consideration which was lacking in the Senate bill, and they provide a banking standard that may allow economic assistance to a community even though a merger tends to lessen competition in that community. It is this statutory balance that was intended in 1960. . . .

[10] [*130] Senator Robertson said unequivocally that the purpose of the bill was to "reverse a decision of the Supreme Court." He said (Cong. Rec. Feb. 9, 1966, p. 2538): "The bill will end the confusion and controversy which has surrounded the bank merger situation since the ill-advised and unfortunate decisions of the Supreme Court in the Philadelphia and Lexington cases and the district court decision in the New York case which followed those precedents. It will do this by establishing a uniform rule for the bank supervisory agencies and the courts to follow in bank merger cases: a rule which takes into account both the competitive factors on which the antitrust laws are based - for banks these were written into the Bank Merger Act of 1960 - and the convenience and needs of the public to be served by the proposed merged bank." Referring to the pendency of the suit now before us, he said: "It would permit the continuance of proceedings against the three 'post-Philadelphia' cases - in Nashville, San Francisco, and St. Louis - where mergers were consummated after that decision, but in these three cases the courts would be directed to follow the new statutory standards laid down [11] in the statute for all mergers to be considered in the future." And in a prepared statement which he incorporated in the record as a part of his remarks he said of the bill: "It will strike the Philadelphia, Lexington, and New York decisions and opinions from the books." [3]

[12] [*131] Perhaps the most conclusive evidence of the fact that this Act alters the previous rules comes from a comparison of the language of this statute with what the Supreme Court said in the Philadelphia case, namely, that a bank merger such as that one "is not saved because, on some ultimate reckoning of social or economic debits and credits, it may be deemed beneficial." Section 18(c)(5), quoted above, expressly requires a consideration of similar factors thus rejected in Philadelphia.

This statute makes a further alteration in the nature of the proceeding now before us. HN4[] After providing for the time of commencement of an action brought under the antitrust laws arising out of a merger transaction, § 18(c)(7)(A) stipulates: "In any such action, the court shall review de novo the issues presented." Returning now to the provisions of § 2(c), requiring this court to "apply the substantive rule of law set forth in § 18(c)(5)", and to § 18(c)(7)(B), reciting that in any judicial proceeding attacking a merger transaction approved under paragraph 5, "the standards applied by the court shall be identical with those that the banking agencies are directed to apply under paragraph [13] 5," it seems clear that what we are now called upon to do is to review a decision and determination of the Comptroller of the Currency.

The . . . bill . . . directs the courts to apply the banking standards as well as the competitive standards in any judicial proceeding attacking an approved merger transaction . . . it . . . gives these standards equal weight as between economic and competitive circumstances and it assures this equilibrium throughout the entire review procedure."

[3] In an effort to find some legislative history to bolster its position that this Act made no changes in the law, the Government has inserted in its brief some quotations from the remarks of individual Congressmen during floor debate. Taken out of context, as they are, they prove nothing. It is true that the wording of § 18(c) (5) emphasized and restated the requirement that the Comptroller, and the reviewing courts, take into consideration the antitrust laws. This was noted in debate, but it was also noted that this Act definitely and positively added a new standard. As stated in the House Report of supplemental views of Congressman Ottinger who helped draft the bill: "It also assures that banking services available to meet the convenience and needs of a community are considered in all cases and will prevail where they clearly outweigh nonmonopolistic anti-competitive effects of a merger."

Counsel's quotations from the debate ignore the rule stated in Duplex Printing Press Co. v. Deering, 254 U.S. 443, 474-475, 65 L. Ed. 349, 41 S. Ct. 172, as follows: "By repeated decisions of this court it has come to be well established that the debates in Congress expressive of the views and motives of individual members are not a safe guide, and hence may not be resorted to, in ascertaining the meaning and purpose of the law-making body. . . . But reports of committees of House or Senate stand upon a more solid footing, and may be regarded as an exposition of the legislative intent in a case where otherwise the meaning of a statute is obscure. . . . And this has been extended to include explanatory statements in the nature of a supplemental report made by the committee member in charge of a bill in course of passage." Counsel have largely confined their quotations to those from Congressmen Weltner and Todd, who opposed the bill, and from Congressman Patman who bitterly fought the legislation and finally, through a face-saving compromise, introduced the bill, while stating that if he alone were writing the bill, he "would be against it as a matter of principle." (Cong. Rec. Feb. 8, 1966, p. 2357.) Counsel's choice of makers of remarks is not very persuasive.

To what extent that review can be "de novo", we shall have occasion to discuss hereafter. The immediate difficulty now presented is that the prior decision of the Comptroller of September 30, 1963, was not made under or in the light of the new Bank Merger Act of 1966.

It is true that the Comptroller then found that the proposed merger "will promote the public interest", using the language of the 1960 Act, but his determination did not contain findings covering the precise issues required to be determined by him under the language of § 18(c)(5) quoted above. Under that section it would be incumbent upon the Comptroller to determine whether any anti-competitive effects of the proposed merger were "clearly outweighed in the public interest by the probable effect of the transaction in meeting the convenience and needs of the community to be served." We apprehend that an appropriate finding would specify in what respect the transaction would meet the convenience and needs of the community to be served.

There is another respect in which the earlier [14] finding of the Comptroller may be inadequate and out-dated. His decision of September 30, 1963, antedated the decisions of the Supreme Court in United States v. El Paso Natural Gas Co., 376 U.S. 651, 12 L. Ed. 2d 12, 84 S. Ct. 1044, decided April 6, 1964, and United States v. Penn-Olin Chemical Co., 378 U.S. 158, 12 L. Ed. 2d 775, 84 S. Ct. 1710, decided June 22, 1964. In those cases the Supreme Court developed, to an extent not previously announced, the doctrine that § 7 of the Clayton Act is designed to preserve not merely present but potential competition in the market in question. This is the doctrine of the application of § 7 to potential competition. The principal argument made by [*132] the Government here relates to alleged elimination by the merger of substantial potential competition in the State of California.

The Act requires this court to proceed in this case in the same manner in which it would have to deal with some future proposed merger. Before we can perform the required function of reviewing the action of the Comptroller, the matter must be remanded for the consideration of the Comptroller under the provisions of the 1966 Act, a proposition we shall [15] discuss hereafter.

Plainly enough the Act is designed to set up precise rules under which the validity of proposed bank mergers may be ascertained and determined. The first required step is the application to the Comptroller of the Currency [4] for written approval of the proposed merger. Upon hearing on such an application the Comptroller is directed to act upon the considerations set forth in § 18(c)(5) above referred to. Then, as indicated, if an action be brought attacking the merger transaction, it must be brought within a limited time and in any such action "the court shall review de novo the issues presented." Thus the Act contemplates initial action by the Comptroller followed by a review at the instance of the Department of Justice.

[16] When we face the task of complying with these requirements we are confronted with a difficulty arising out of the fact that the Act provides that this review shall be " de novo".

It will be noted that HN5[] under § 5 the Comptroller is charged with ascertaining two sets of facts. The first is whether the effect of the proposed merger transaction "in any section of the country may be substantially to lessen competition" and the second, whether, having found that there would be anti-competitive effects in the proposed transaction, those effects "are clearly outweighed in the public interest by the probable effect of the transaction in meeting the convenience and needs of the community to be served."

No difficulty would be presented here so far as reviewing de novo the first of these determinations for this court has traditionally adjudged whether mergers have anti-competitive effects. But HN6[] the problem of reviewing the second determination by the Comptroller, namely, whether the proposed transaction is outweighed in the public interest, and whether it meets the convenience and needs of the community, is plainly and unquestionably a legislative or administrative determination [5] of [17] a type which [*133] this court, as a constitutional court, is prohibited from deciding.

[4] It is this officer who must act if the acquiring, assuming or resulting bank is to be a national bank. Where a state bank is to be the resulting one, the decision is to be made by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System. In other cases, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation is to make the decision.

[18] HN7[] The jurisdiction of this court is limited to cases and controversies as that term is used in Article III of the Constitution. As stated in Keller v. Potomac Electric Power Co., 261 U.S. 428, 444, 67 L. Ed. 731, 43 S. Ct. 445, "legislative or administrative jurisdiction . . . cannot be conferred" on a court such as this. This court, as well as the Supreme Court, "was brought into being by the judiciary article of the Constitution, is invested with judicial power only, and can have no jurisdiction other than of cases and controversies falling within the classes enumerated in that article. It cannot . . . exercise or participate in the exercise of functions which are essentially legislative or administrative." Federal Radio Comm. v. General Electric Co., 281 U.S. 464, 469, 74 L. Ed. 969, 50 S. Ct. 389. See also F.P.C. v. Idaho Power Co., 344 U.S. 17, 97 L. Ed. 15, 73 S. Ct. 85, where it was held that the authority of the Court of Appeals to affirm, modify or set aside an order of the Federal Power Commission did not include the power to exercise an essentially administrative function by determining what conditions should attach to a power license. We find an expression of the views [19] of the Supreme Court on the precise question here involved in United States v. Philadelphia Nat. Bank, supra, 374 U.S. at page 371. This view is to be found in the words which we have italicized in the following quotation: "We are clear, however, that a merger the effect of which 'may be substantially to lessen competition' is not saved because, on some ultimate reckoning of social or economic debits and credits, it may be deemed beneficial. A value choice of such magnitude is beyond the ordinary limits of judicial competence, and in any event has been made for us already, by Congress when it enacted the amended § 7. Congress determined to preserve our traditionally competitive economy."

This does not mean that the administrative order of an agency or commission may not be reviewed in a judicial proceeding in a constitutional court; but such HN8[] a review is necessarily limited to the determination of questions of law and the ascertainment of whether findings of fact by the agency are supported by substantial evidence. Federal Radio Comm'n v. Nelson Bros. Co., 289 U.S. 266, 275 to 276, 77 L. Ed. 1166, 53 S. Ct. 627. As stated in Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. U.S., 382 U.S. 154, [20] 157, 15 L. Ed. 2d 223, 86 S. Ct. 277, the question to be decided is "Whether the Commission has confined itself within the statutory limits upon its discretion and has based its findings on substantial evidence . . . ."

Since it is plain that this court cannot be invested with power to make an original and independent determination as to whether anti-competitive effects are "outweighed in the public interest" or what are the "convenience and needs of the community to be served" we are confronted with the question whether this Act's provision for a review de novo must be held null and void and therefore wholly disregarded.

We do not think so. There are certain general principles relating to construction of statutes which should aid us here. In U.S. v. Amer. Trucking Ass'ns, 310 U.S. 534, 543, 60 S. Ct. 1059, 84 L. Ed. 1345, the Court said: HN9[] "There is, of course, no more persuasive evidence of the purpose of a statute than the words by which the legislature undertook to give expression to its wishes. Often these words are sufficient in and of themselves to determine the purpose of the legislation. In such cases we have followed their plain meaning. When that meaning has led [21] to absurd or futile results, however, this Court has looked beyond the words to the purpose of the act. Frequently, however, even when the plain meaning did not produce absurd results but merely an unreasonable

[5] It will be noticed that the standards of § 5 are to be applied in granting or refusing leave to merge in the future. The contemplated action "looks to the future and changes existing conditions by making a new rule, to be applied thereafter to . . . some part of those subject to power," as fully as the establishment of railroad rates in Prentis v. Atlantic Coast Line Co., 211 U.S. 210, 226, 53 L. Ed. 150, 29 S. Ct. 67. It involves a determination and establishment of a public policy.

See Finfrock, "Trial de Novo - Panacea?" in 14 Baylor Law Review, 135, where the Texas cases are discussed: "This criterion in essence classifies as administrative and non-judicial decisional functions which courts are not particularly equipped to decide while leaving to the courts that category of decision making with which it has traditionally dealt and is equipped to handle under the adversary type of judicial procedure. Decisions that require the inquisitorial type of procedure, investigative in nature, and which must, to attain optimum utility, be based upon a mosaic of expert opinion, judgment, and decisions are and should be regarded as non-judicial and left primarily to the administrators. They are far more able to come to grips with such problems than a court or jury in the detached and sterile atmosphere of the courtroom." (p. 160) one 'plainly at variance with the policy of the legislation as a [*134] whole' this Court has followed that purpose, rather than the literal words."

In the case before us the use of the words "de novo", as we have noted, may have full significance in respect to this court's review of the Comptroller's determination of the existence or nonexistence of anti-competitive effects by the merger. But the language of the Act would lead to absurd and futile results if it were construed as requiring this Court to substitute its judgment for the findings of the Comptroller dealing with the public interest and the convenience and needs of the community. This court cannot validly be invested with power to make such a decision which, as we have noted, is plainly legislative or administrative in character. If we look to the purpose beyond the statute and to the policy of the legislation as a whole we must conclude that Congress has framed an Act which contemplates, as an important [22] part thereof, provisions for review of the Comptroller's action.

Other courts have had occasion to deal with an identical problem arising from the use of the words "de novo" in state statutes providing for court reviews of administrative or legislative determinations. In those cases the courts have been confronted with difficulties comparable to those present here, some of them stemming from their constitutional provisions for separation of powers. Thus in Household Finance Corp. v. State, 40 Wash.2d 451, 244 P.2d 260, 264, the court, after holding invalid an attempt to vest a non-judicial power in a constitutionally created court, said: "We recognize that there is a wealth of authority to support respondent's position that where the only review of an administrative order that is constitutionally possible is on the question of whether the administrative body or officer acted arbitrarily, capriciously, or in violation of law, it will be held that a provision for a trial de novo means only that the appellate or reviewing court will be limited to a consideration of that particular question on the trial de novo. The basis for such holdings is the rule that HN10[] when a statute is [23] subject to two possible constructions, one of which will render it constitutional and the other unconstitutional, the legislature will be presumed to have intended a meaning consistent with the constitutionality of its enactment." (244 P.2d at 264)

A like decision was made by the Supreme Court of Indiana in State Board of Medical Registration and Examination v. Scherer, 221 Ind. 92, 46 N.E.2d 602, 604, where the court said: "It is true that the statute here in question seems to contemplate a de novo proceeding before the court, and a finding of 'guilty' or 'not guilty ', but, regardless of what may seem a legislative intention to the contrary, this court has consistently construed similar statutes as vesting in the courts only such jurisdiction as the Constitution permits."

The same problem confronted the Supreme Court of Texas in Jones v. Marsh, 148 Tex. 362, 224 S.W.2d 198. In that case the court was called upon to review an order made upon an application for a license to sell beer. The statute provided for an appeal and that such proceeding on appeal "shall be de novo under the same rules as ordinary civil suits." The court said (p. 201): "The statute does not expressly provide [24] that there shall be in district court a full retrial of the facts as if there had been no findings made by the county judge, nor does the statute specify what issue or issues shall be tried in the district court. It may, therefore, reasonably be concluded, in view of the subject matter involved and the nature of the order to be reviewed, that only a limited review is intended, and that in so far as the facts which are the basis for the order of the county judge are concerned the question or issue to be determined in the district court is whether or not the findings of the county judge are reasonably supported by substantial evidence. Such a trial is one kind of a trial de novo, and the somewhat limited trial can be held, as the statute requires, under the rules applicable to ordinary civil suits." In other words, the sort of trial which the [*135] court could validly hold on review of an administrative order was held to be "one kind of a trial de novo." [6]

---

[6] A like problem was solved in a similar manner in De Mond v. Liquor Control Commission, 129 Conn. 642, 30 A.2d 547, 549, where the court said: "Upon these appeals the court hears and considers all pertinent matters for the purpose of reaching an intelligent conclusion as to the legal propriety of the action of the commissioners. In this qualified sense, but in no other, is its hearing one de novo." Another approach to a similar problem was made in American Beauty Homes Corp. v. Louisville, etc., Ky., 379 S.W.2d 450, where the court held that "the statute was invalid with respect to the trial 'de novo' but still permitted an aggrieved party to appeal. This also was the ruling in California Co. v. State Oil and Gas Board, 200 Miss. 824, 27 So.2d 542, 28 So.2d 120, heretofore cited. We think the 'de novo' provision of KRS 100.057 is clearly severable from the rest of this statute."

[25] It seems reasonable to say that there may be a special kind of review de novo involved here, namely, a review involving a greater exercise of our judgment in respect to the question of anti-competitive effects, and a review, more limited under the so-called substantial evidence rule, of the Comptroller's determination of weight of public interest and of the character of the needs and convenience of the community.

Another general principle may therefore be applied here. Since the language of the Act could properly be construed to intend the special kind of de novo review just referred to, we can "apply the familiar canon which makes HN11[] it our duty, of two possible constructions, to adopt the one which will save and not destroy. We cannot attribute to Congress an intent to defy the Fifth Amendment or 'even to come so near to doing so as to raise a serious question of constitutional law.'" Anniston Mfg. Co. v. Davis, 301 U.S. 337, 351, 352, 81 L. Ed. 1143, 57 S. Ct. 816. See also National Labor Relations Board v. Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp., 301 U.S. 1, 30, 57 S. Ct. 615, 81 L. Ed. 893, and Ex parte Mitsuye Endo, 323 U.S. 283, 299, 89 L. Ed. 243, 65 S. Ct. 208..[7]

[26] It is plain to us that the congressional purpose here was to provide for an initial decision by the Comptroller and that the action brought by the Department of Justice should be deemed an action to review that decision. It is noteworthy that the section of the statute which uses the term "de novo" does not speak of a trial de novo but of a review de novo.

The legislative scheme here, in our view, resembles that which is more elaborately spelled out in those sections of the Interstate Commerce Act which were discussed in the recent case of Seaboard Air Line Railroad Co. v. United States, 382 U.S. 154, 15 L. Ed. 2d 223, 86 S. Ct. 277. [8] In that case the three-judge district court had set aside a commission's order approving a railroad merger on [*136] the ground that the commission had not adequately determined whether the merger violated § 7 of the Clayton Act. The Court said: "By thus disposing of the case, the District Court did not reach the ultimate question whether the merger would be consistent with the public interest despite the foreseeable injury to competition." The Court referred to its decision in Minneapolis & St. Louis R. Co. v. United States, 361 U.S. [27] 173, 187, 4 L. Ed. 2d 223, 80 S. Ct. 229, where the Court described the impact of congressional legislation by saying "Even though such acquisitions might otherwise violate the antitrust laws, Congress has authorized the Commission to approve them, if it finds they are in the public interest . . . . It must be presumed that, in enacting this legislation, Congress took account of the fact that railroads are subject to strict regulation and supervision. 'Against this background, no other inference is possible but that, as a factor in determining the propriety of [railroad acquisitions] the preservation of competition among carriers, although still a value, is significant chiefly as it aids in the attainment of the objectives of the national transportation policy.'" The Court continued "Resolution of the conflicting considerations 'is a complex task which requires extensive facilities, expert judgment and considerable knowledge of the transportation industry. Congress left that task to the Commission "to the end that the wisdom and experience of that Commission may be used not only in connection with this form of transportation, but in its coordination of all other forms." 79 Cong.Rec. [28] 12207. "The wisdom and experience of that commission," not of the courts, must determine whether the proposed [acquisition] is "consistent with the public interest." . . . .'"

---

[7] In United States v. Philadelphia Nat. Bank, supra, the Court was confronted with a difficulty arising out of the language of § 7 of the Clayton Act. The Court recognized merit in the contention of the appellees that the merger there involved an assets acquisition and hence that § 7 had no application since the Federal Trade Commission had no jurisdiction over banks. The Court said (374 U.S. at p. 337): "Since the literal terms of § 7 thus do not dispose of our question, we must determine whether a congressional design to embrace bank mergers is revealed in the history of the statute." The Court's final conclusion was based upon what it found to be a "plain congressional purpose."

[8] During the debate in the House Congressman Moorehead, one of the members of the committee most actively in charge of the bill, cited and quoted from the Seaboard Air Line case, and also from McLean Trucking Co. v. U.S., 321 U.S. 67, 87, 88 L. Ed. 544, 64 S. Ct. 370, as appropriate precedents for his point: "In the banking industry the public interest is represented and protected by a regulating body. In mergers in such a situation the custom is that the validity of a merger should be determined not exclusively by the competitive factors, but that the regulating body should also consider the public interest." Cong. Rec. February 8, 1966, p. 2340.

The action of the Supreme Court in those cases dealing with the right of the Interstate Commerce Commission to approve a merger notwithstanding its anticompetitive effects, and particularly [29] the language above quoted from the Seaboard Air Line case, would seem to make negative another argument of the Government. This is that the language of § 18(c)(5) referring to the "convenience and needs of the community to be served" is but a reiteration of the "failing company doctrine" long recognized as "an integral part of settled antitrust law." No such limiting suggestion was ever made in Seaboard Air Line and the other cases dealing with the same statute. In our view it would be absurd to find that the new standards so carefully framed for the 1966 Bank Merger Act were no more than the inclusion of a wholly unnecessary reference to the "failing company doctrine". There is not the slightest indication in the language of the Act, or in its legislative history, to support the Government's effort thus to cancel or dissipate the declared purpose of the Act. During the debate on the bill, the question of the situation of the failing bank was mentioned, and in a colloquy between Congressman Weltner, who opposed the bill, and Congressman Multer, who supported it, it was made plain that the language referred to was not limited to the failing bank situation. [9]

[30] [*137] The careful and precise description of this portion of the bill, made by Senator Robertson to the Senate as the latter body prepared to accept the House version, would clearly negative any suggestion that it was limited to the failing company situation. [10]

[31] A final answer to the Government's "failing company" theory is found in the House Report's indication as to the limited extent of the use of financial resources of the affected banks. That report states (U.S. Code, Cong. and Administrative News, 89th Cong.2d Session, p. 337): "However, only the convenience and needs of the community to be served can be weighed against anticompetitive effects, with financial and managerial resources being considered only as they throw light on the capacity of the existing and proposed institutions to serve the community."

One problem which we confront in this particular case is how we shall apply the rules which are prescribed in the Act. In the case of future mergers the method of procedure and the application of the statutory requirements is quite simple. First, the banks seeking to merge will make their application for approval to "the responsible agency" in a case of this kind, the Comptroller of the Currency. The agency will then hold the hearings and make the determination contemplated by § 18(c)(5) of the Act which, as we have indicated, calls for two determinations - whether the merger will have a tendency substantially to lessen competition [32] and whether the anti-

---

[9] After Congressman Multer had given an illustration of how this language would apply in a case not involving a failing bank, the following colloquy occurred:

"Mr. Weltner. This is a case of a failing bank, which has long been recognized by the court. It has nothing to do with this legislation. I am sure the gentleman from Wisconsin will agree with me, that we do not have to pass any bill to permit the approving agency to merge a failing bank in order to save it from insolvency. I am certain that the gentlemen from New York, indeed, would say, as a well-educated lawyer, that the failing bank doctrine exists independently of any statutes which has been passed in the last 20 or 30 years. I yield to the gentleman for the purpose of responding to the correctness of that proposition.

Mr. Multer: The gentleman is correct as far as he goes, but I have gone beyond the failing bank theory. There are many instances where we are not concerned with the failing bank, where there is an absolute and complete diminution of competition, yet under all the circumstances and all of the factors the courts should approve that merger just as the regulatory agencies may approve the merger." Cong. Rec. Feb. 8, 1966, p. 2346.

[10] He said: " . . . this bill, should convince the courts that the Congress does not intend that mergers in the banking field should be measured solely by the antitrust considerations which are applied in other industries." (Cong. Rec. Feb. 9, 1966, p. 2541.) In short, something apart from the older antitrust considerations, (including the failing company rule) are imported here. He also said (p. 2542): "The courts will no longer be able to say - in the case of a merger which does not reach to the point of creating a monopoly - that proof that a merger will have demonstrable benefits or will be benign is irrelevant. On the contrary, the question whether there are or are not demonstrable benefits - whether the merger is benign or malignant - will be the heart of the issue." Again he said (p. 2542): "The effect of the merger on the public interest and on the convenience and needs of the community to be served must be measured in specific and realistic terms in the light of the kinds of business involved, and the kinds of people being served. The banking agencies and the courts must be guided by the realities of the industrial, commercial, and financial worlds. They must look through theories and percentages and doctrines to the hard facts of life."

competitive effects, if found, are clearly outweighed in the public interest by the probable effect of the transaction in meeting the needs and convenience of the community to be served.

The Act then provides that any action brought under the antitrust laws arising out of this merger transaction shall be commenced within a short period following the Comptroller's approval and in this judicial proceeding "the standards applied by the court shall be identical with those that the banking agencies are directed to apply under paragraph 5." Also, in any such action, the court is required to review in the manner we have mentioned, the issues presented. The Act, making reference to this, and other cases initiated after June 16, 1963, with respect to a merger consummated after that date, requires us to apply the same substantive rule of law that we would apply in the case of any future merger.

Here, however, the merger is already accomplished; it was accomplished pursuant to a September 30, 1963, approval by the Comptroller who purported to act under the provisions of the 1960 Bank Merger Act. That Act, as demonstrated by the decision of the Court in Philadelphia Nat. [33] Bank, supra, was without force and effect, and the Comptroller's decision of September 30, [*138] 1963, cannot, we think, be the equivalent of a determination by him under the 1966 Bank Merger Act or in accordance with § 18(c)(5) thereof. The question is whether we may now require the Comptroller to proceed under the new Act and to make the determination called for by the last mentioned section preliminary to our further consideration of the same and a review thereof.

We think that the decision in United States v. Morgan, 307 U.S. 183, 83 L. Ed. 1211, 59 S. Ct. 795, furnishes a precedent. [11] The Court upheld the right of the Secretary of Agriculture to make an order going beyond fixing rates for the future, stating that he was "now free to determine a reasonable rate for the period antedating any order he may now make," that is to say, during a period following his former invalid order. The Court noted the duty of the administrative agencies and of the courts judicially reviewing their action to coordinate their actions in order to secure the plainly indicated objects of the statute.

[34] We think that in this case this court cannot as a practical matter apply the substantive rule of law set forth in § 18(c)(5) of the Act unless it has before it for review an order of the Comptroller made pursuant to the requirements of that section. Not only because we are here required to review an administrative order as a part of our consideration of this case, but also because the Comptroller has made himself a party to this proceeding and subject to our orders, we shall now remand the cause to the Comptroller with directions to proceed to make the determinations called for by the Bank Merger Act of 1966. This we think to be appropriate in view of the requirements of the Act notwithstanding the actual merger has been completed.

This remand is predicated upon the assumption that after a new order has been made by the Comptroller, we will be able to review the same. As we have indicated, our power to review any determination as to the anti-competitive effects will allow a greater exercise of our own judgment, than our power to review a determination as to whether the anti-competitive effects, if any, are clearly outweighed in the public interest and as to the effect of the [35] transaction in meeting the needs and convenience of the community to be served. In making his determination the Comptroller should make specific findings as to the competitive situation as to which the merger may have operative effects and particularly whether the merger will have a probable tendency to lessen or do away with potential competition.

---

[11] In that case the Secretary of Agriculture made an order reducing stockyards rates. After those rates had gone into effect the Supreme Court set aside the order of the Secretary because of procedural defects and the cause was remanded to the district court for further proceedings. The Court stated that it would not attempt to forecast what further proceedings the Secretary might see fit to take. The district court which had entered a temporary restraining order enjoining the enforcement of the Secretary's order had required the excess charges collected by the stockyards over and above the amount prescribed by the Secretary to be deposited with the court pending final determination of the case. The Secretary then reopened the original proceedings and pending these proceedings the district court granted the appellees' motion to distribute the fund mentioned among them. This decision was based upon a ruling that the Secretary did not have authority to make an order prescribing rates and charges effective as of the date of his original order.

In passing upon the question of the probable effect of the transaction in meeting the needs and convenience of the community to be served, the Comptroller should specify particularly what he finds to be the convenience and needs of the community, what he considers will be the effect of the merger thereon, and how and by what means he weighs these effects as against the anti-competitive effects of the transaction. Furthermore, in order to avoid any possible necessity for further remand following our review of the Comptroller's order, he is directed to make a finding as to whether, assuming that the merger has the effect upon [*139] potential competition which the Government claims, that effect would be outweighed in the public interest by the probable effect of the transaction in meeting the interest and convenience of the community [36] to be served. [12]

In holding that our function now, under the 1966 Act, is to review an appropriate order of the Comptroller, we are disapproving other alternatives. One alternative would be to hold that we must disregard any suggestion for a review and simply decide the case on the evidence now before us, applying directly the standards set forth in § 18(c)(5). Such, we think would not be consonant with the clear purpose and intent of the Act. Plainly the whole intent was that there should be made available in determining the validity of bank mergers the expertise of persons familiar with banking and with the operating procedures of banks. Not only is this court constitutionally without power to evaluate such features of the "probable effect of the transaction in meeting the convenience and needs of the community to be served," but we lack the informed [37] experience properly to apply such tests.

To deny the banks involved in these three "post-Philadelphia" actions the benefits of these banking-economic tests by specialized agencies would run counter to what the legislative history of the Act indicates was the attitude of Congress toward these three mergers. As the bill first came from the Senate it would have provided that this merger "shall be exempt from the antitrust laws." In its final form the bill exempted only the pre-Philadelphia mergers. But the bill would, as Senator Robertson stated, "permit the continuance of proceedings against the three post-Philadelphia cases - in Nashville, San Francisco, and St. Louis - where mergers were consummated after that decision, but in these three cases the courts would be directed to follow the new statutory standards laid down in the statute for all mergers to be considered in the future." Surely Congress was not swinging from a most favorable treatment of this merger to an opposite extreme of denying it the expertise contemplated for all mergers in the future.

Another holding, in the alternative, would be that since this court cannot validly entertain a question as to "the probable effect [38] of the transaction in meeting the convenience and needs of the community to be served," the requirement that we "shall apply the substantive rule of law set forth in § 18(c)(5)" must be held inoperative and disregarded, and therefore this action must proceed as if the Act had not been passed. Such an unnecessary and uncalled for disregard of the obvious purpose and intent of the Act is unthinkable.

We anticipate that the defendant banks will suggest that we should simplify this whole matter by finding now, once and for all, that the claimed adverse effect upon competition has not been established and that the merger will not have the effect either substantially to lessen competition, whether actual or potential, or to tend to create a monopoly or operate in restraint of trade. But, as indicated in Seaboard Air Line R. Co., supra, that is not the ultimate question to be determined in this litigation, and we shall not invite a repetition of the error corrected in that case.

It is therefore ordered that further proceedings herein shall be stayed pending the further consideration by the Comptroller, in the manner hereinabove indicated, of the questions required to be passed upon under [39] § 18(c)(5). In reaching his determination the Comptroller will, of course, give the notices and provide the opportunity for hearing contemplated by the Act. We assume the parties will assist in shortening the proceedings by agreeing that the Comptroller may consider the evidence adduced at our last hearing, as well as that [*140] at his first hearing, particularly in view of the rule that administrative agencies have never been restricted by the rigid rules of [12] Note the usefulness of findings based on assumptions made by the district court in United States v. Philadelphia Nat. Bank, supra, at p. 335 of 374 U.S.

---

evidence. Federal Trade Comm'n v. Cement Institute, 333 U.S. 683, 92 L. Ed. 1010, 68 S. Ct. 793; cf. Davis, Administrative Law, vol. 2, § 14.08.

Upon certification to this court of the proceedings of the Comptroller, this court shall proceed in such manner as may be called for by the Comptroller's decision.

It is so ordered.

This opinion contains the court's findings and conclusions.

United States v. Provident Nat'l Bank

United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania

October 13, 1966

Civil Action No. 40032

Reporter

259 F. Supp. 373 *; 1966 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10212 ; 10 Fed. R. Serv. 2d (Callaghan) 108; 1966 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,931

United States of America, Plaintiff v. Provident National Bank, and Central-Penn National Bank of Philadelphia, Defendants; and James J. Saxon, Comptroller of the Currency, Intervenor

Core Terms

Banks, merger, deposits, four-county, motion to dismiss, antitrust, notice, proposed merger

Judges: [1] Clary, Ch. J.

Opinion by: CLARY

Opinion

[*374] Opinion and Order

CLARY, Ch. J..

On December 6, 1965 the Central-Penn National Bank of Philadelphia and the Provident National Bank of Philadelphia applied to the office of the Comptroller of the Currency for permission to merge under the charter of the Central-Penn National Bank and with the title of Provident National Bank. The report by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System to the Comptroller of the Currency under Section 18(c) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act on the competitive factors involved in the proposed merger dated January 7, 1966, was that "the overall effect of the proposed merger on competition would be significantly adverse." On the same day, the Attorney General of the United States reported, "There are strong reasons, therefore, for believing that the proposed merger would have an important adverse effect on competition within the Philadelphia banking market . . . the anticompetitive effects of this merger are important and considerable and there are likely to be no redeeming features." The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation filed no comment.

On March 4, 1966 the Comptroller of the Currency approved [2] the merger, and on March 31, 1966, filed his written decision in respect thereof. In that decision the Comptroller noted that this application to merge was the first filed by banks of significant size to be acted upon by his office since the passage of the 1966 Amendment to the Bank Merger Act. He stated, "The new law, passed by Congress to moderate the decisions of the Supreme Court in U.S. v. Philadelphia National Bank, et al., 374 U.S. 321, 10 L. Ed. 2d 915, 83 S. Ct. 1715 (1963) and U.S. v. Lexington, 376 U.S. 665, 84 S. Ct. 1033, 12 L. Ed. 2d 1 (1964) recognizes that traditional antitrust concepts cannot be applied to banking without substantial modification." His findings then followed sustaining the merger.

On April 1, 1966 the present action brought by the United States of America against Provident National Bank and Central-Penn National Bank of Philadelphia, defendants, was filed to enjoin the merger. On April 7, 1966 James J.

Saxon, Comptroller of the Currency, intervened and thus is a party to the action, as provided by Section 1828(c)(7)(D) of Title 12 United States Code. Since under the provisions of the aforequoted Section 1828 of Title 12 a novel situation has been [3] brought about wherein two departments of the Executive Branch of the Government are litigating one against the other, with the approval of the Congress of the United States, it will be necessary to delineate in this Opinion to which branch of Government is being referred. Consequently, for the purposes of this Opinion, the plaintiff hereafter will be referred to as "Department of Justice" or "Justice"; the defendant Provident National Bank as "Provident"; the defendant Central-Penn National Bank of Philadelphia as "Central"; the joint defendants as "Banks"; the Comptroller of the Currency as "Comptroller" or "Intervenor", and the Bank Merger Act, Public Law 89-356, 80 Stat. 7, 64 Stat. 892, will be referred to as "BMA-66". The stated purpose of the aforesaid Act, as set forth in the slip sheet publication reads as follows:

> "To establish a procedure for the review of proposed bank mergers so as to eliminate the necessity for the dissolution of merged banks, and for other purposes."

[*375] The pertinent pleadings to date which are essential to a decision on the present motions consist of a complaint filed by Justice, a joint answer filed by the Banks, the order permitting [4] intervention of James J. Saxon, Comptroller of the Currency, answer of the Comptroller, motion of the Comptroller to dismiss, and motion of the Banks to dismiss. The basis for each of the motions to dismiss is that the complaint "fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted."

There is no question that a law suit was started by Justice to enjoin the merger before the thirtieth calendar day after the date of approval by the agency (March 4, 1966). Thus, Justice has met the fundamental requirement of BMA-66, Title 12, Section 1828 (c)(7)(A), which prohibits any litigation challenging the merger after the thirtieth calendar day following approval. Justice has met the statutory limitation of action in that regard. A reading of the complaint leaves no doubt that Justice intended to plead, and did plead, a case of antitrust violation strictly in accordance with Section 7 of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C., Section 18) and has attempted to ignore completely BMA-66. There are too many pointed references in the complaint challenging all alleged violations of antitrust law as contravening Section 7 of the Clayton Act only. Justice bottoms its case on the decision of the Supreme Court [5] in U.S. v. Philadelphia National Bank, et al., 374 U.S. 321, 10 L. Ed. 2d 915, 83 S. Ct. 1715 (1963). It is this specific pleading of Justice charging a violation of Section 7 which is relied upon by the Banks and the intervening Comptroller in their motions to dismiss. The Banks and Comptroller insist that a Section 7 action is no longer available to Justice in a merger or consolidation of the type involved in the instant case, and that any actions must be grounded in BMA-66 and no other statute in the light of the wording of BMA-66. The Banks and Comptroller urge that since Justice has failed to ground its action in a challenge under BMA-66 within the thirty day period, and that since such failure is substantive rather than procedural, the limitations contained in BMA-66 are applicable, that the Court is thus without jurisdiction, and the action must be dismissed. In plain language they insist that Justice has deliberately sought to avoid any requirements contained in BMA-66 which deletes "line of commerce" and adds another facet to the standards governing bank mergers, i.e. if anti-competitive effects of the proposed transaction are clearly outweighed in the public interest by [6] the probable effect of the transaction in meeting the convenience and needs of the community to be served, the agency in question is authorized to approve a proposed merger. This intransigence of Justice, they contend, is substantive, not procedural, and thus fatal to the position of Justice.

The weakness of the contentions of the Banks and of the Comptroller lies in the fact that we are now only at the notice pleading stage. The complaint specifically charges that the history of commercial banking in the four-county area of Philadelphia has been one of consolidations, mergers and acquisitions, with a heavy concentration of the business of commercial banking within a relatively few banks; that Provident controlled 9% of the total assets, 9% of the total loans, 9% of the total IPC deposits, 10% of the total IPC demand deposits, and 9% of the banking offices doing business in the four-county area; that Central-Penn, the sixth largest commercial bank in the four-county area, controlled 5% of the total assets, 5% of the total loans, 5% of the total IPC deposits, 5% of the total IPC demand deposits, and 6% of the banking offices doing business in the four-county area; that Provident [7] is the product of seven mergers or consolidations since 1947, and Central-Penn is the product of six such mergers or consolidations since 1949; that the proposed merged bank would be the fourth largest bank in the area, controlling 14% of the total assets, 14% of the total loans, 14% of the total IPC deposits, 15% of the total IPC demand deposits, and 15% of the banking offices of 36 [*376] banks doing business in the four-county area. Also, Justice contends that after the proposed merger, the five largest banks in the area would control 78% of the total assets, 79% of the total loans, 76% of the total IPC deposits, 77% of the total IPC demand deposits, and 63% of the banking offices of 36 banks doing business in the area; that it would destroy competition between each other and other banks, and that it would substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly. It also charges that competition generally in the commercial banks in the four-county area will be substantially and unreasonably lessened, and that concentration in commercial banking in the four-county area will be substantially and unreasonably increased.

It cannot be gainsaid that if Justice had seen fit [8] to plead generally and without reference to any particular statute, instead of specifically proceeding under Section 7 of the Clayton Act, and these factors pleaded might result in a violation of antitrust laws, the Court would of necessity have to hear the case. The only question for decision then is, does the reference solely to Section 7 invalidate the cause of action filed by Justice? For reasons hereafter set forth, this Court decides that it does not.

The purpose of notice pleading is merely to inform opposing parties what such opposing parties have to meet and defend. Justice charges a violation of antitrust laws, despite its insistence upon Section 7. Thus, suit is brought under antitrust laws of the United States.

The reference to a statute as being the basic ground upon which an action is brought, even if completely incorrect, is no ground for the dismissal of an action where there is a statute in existence which would warrant a valid cause of action for which relief could be granted upon the facts as pleaded. Missouri K. & T.R. Co. v. Wulf, 226 U.S. 570, 57 L. Ed. 355, 33 S. Ct. 135 (1913). This case involved a complaint based upon a state statute which had been repealed [9] by the enactment of a federal statute not mentioned in the complaint. Mr. Justice Pitney, writing for the Court, held that the Court was presumed to be cognizant of the enactment and that the pleader was not required to refer to the federal act. He further stated that reference to the state statute no more vitiated the pleading than a reference to any other repealed statute would have done. It was only important that there were sufficient allegations to support an action under the new federal act.

The modern theory of notice pleading is one of even greater liberality, thus bolstering the decision reached in Missouri K. & T. Co. v. Wulf, supra. Today, the basic principle is that pleadings are no longer to be held to the rigid standards of the common law and neither absolute clarity nor absolute precision is required. United States v. Crown Zellerbach Corporation, 141 F. Supp. 118 (N.D. Ill. 1956). It is enough to sustain a pleading against a motion to dismiss that a defendant is informed with reasonable particularity of a legally cognizable claim against him. If the plaintiff could recover on any state of facts, which it might prove in support of its allegations as laid, a motion [10] to dismiss will be denied. Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 (1957); Melo-Sonics Corporation v. Cropp, 342 F.2d 856 (3 Cir. 1965); Fuller v. Highway Truck Drivers & Helpers Local 107, 233 F. Supp. 115 (E.D. Pa. 1964); Miller v. Bargain City, U.S.A. Inc., 229 F. Supp. 33 (E.D. Pa. 1964).

Therefore, today the legal averments of a pleading are not so important as long as there are allegations which, if proved most favorably to plaintiff, would permit recovery under the laws of the United States. If, in such a complaint, there also appears a reference to an irrelevant statute, or if no statute is mentioned, the Court need only take judicial notice of the relevant statute. As stated in Buell v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 321 F.2d 468 (10 Cir. 1963), it is not necessary to plead what may be judicially noticed. And, it is hornbook law [*377] that federal acts are a proper subject for judicial notice.

There is a further principle of pleading which has been recognized in federal procedure since United States v. Morris, 23 U.S. (10 Wheat.) 246, 6 L. Ed. 314 (1825), that a subsequent pleading of an adversary, if not thereafter denied, may cure a defect in a prior [11] pleading. Cole v. Ralph, 252 U.S. 286, 40 S. Ct. 321, 64 L. Ed. 567 (1920); Albertson v. Federal Communications System, 87 U.S.App.D.C. 39, 182 F.2d 397 (1950); Bullen v. DeBretteville,, 9th Cir., 239 F.2d 824 (1956). This principle applies to substantive as well as procedural omissions.

In the first defense of their answer, defendants claim that any action lies only under BMA-66. In their second defense, the defendant Banks put into controversy the question as to whether all right of Justice to enjoin the merger is vested in BMA-66. The answer of the Comptroller likewise puts into controversy the Bank Merger Act of 1966 by its prayer for relief.

We have long passed the stage peculiar to common law pleading that a failure in form of pleading vitiates the entire proceeding. This is an important case to all and is not a private quarrel between two branches of the Executive Department. The Congress of the United States has, for the first time, permitted two co-ordinate branches of the same department of Government to litigate opposite views in a judicial proceeding, thus affording one department of the Executive Branch, aggrieved by an alleged arbitrary position of the Department [12] of Justice, to properly present for the first time before the judicial side of the Government its contention when it is in violent disagreement with the Department of Justice. While quite novel, in view of increasing differences between departments of Government, the provision is undoubtedly necessary.

In denying the motions to dismiss at this time, the Court does not sustain the position of Justice that it is entitled to sue under Section 7 of the Clayton Act. The only suit open to Justice to enjoin a bank merger lies solely within the ambit of BMA-66. It is not necessary at this time to decide the question of burden of proof, whether on Justice or on the Comptroller and Banks. That will be ruled upon in later pre-trial procedures.

Order

AND NOW, to wit, this 13th day of October, 1966, for the reasons set forth in the foregoing Opinion, it is Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed that defendants' Motion to Dismiss and intervenor's Motion to Dismiss be and they are hereby Denied.

Peelers Co. v. Wendt

United States District Court for the Western District of Washington, Southern Division

October 29, 1966

Civil Action Nos. 2350, 2797

Reporter

260 F. Supp. 193 *; 1966 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10448 ; 151 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) 378 ; 1966 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,921

The Peelers Company, a Partnership, and Laitram Corporation, a Louisiana corporation v. Ivar Wendt, Pacific Pearl Frozen Foods, Inc., Richard (Dick) Sutterlin, Washington Fish & Oyster Co., Inc., Zachar Bay Fisheries, Inc., Mark A. Jensen. Civil Action No. 2350. Crown Packers, Inc., a Washington corporation; Harbor Seafoods, Inc., a Washington corporation; Halibut Producers Cooperative, a Washington corporation; Mrs. Jessie Marchand, d/b/a Seaside Clam Co.; Edwin A. Kaakinen, doing business as Kaakinen Fish Company; Pacific Shrimp, Inc., an Oregon corporation; Ben Engdal and Harry Sundburg, co-partners d/b/a Harbor Seafoods of Wrangell; Alaska Marine Foods, Inc., an Alaska corporation; William F. Smith, a sole proprietor, d/b/a William F. Smith Company; pany; and Harbor Seafoods, Inc., an Alaska corporation v. Emile M. Lapeyre, Emile M. Lapeyre, Jr., Fernand S. Lapeyre, individually, as co-partners trading and doing business as the Peelers Company; and Grand Caillou Packing Company Inc., a Louisiana corporation, and a commendam partner in the Peelers Company. Civil Action No. 2797

Core Terms

instructions, claimants, patent, Sherman Act, monopolization, defendants', machinery, monopoly, shrimp, discriminatory, lease rate, present case, processing, damages, requested instruction, decisions, rates, new trial, Packers, misuse, violation of section, anti trust law, circumstances, competitors, antitrust, rights, films, attempt to monopolize, special verdict, pretrial order

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > Jury Trials > Jury Instructions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Trials > Jury Trials > Province of Court & Jury

Civil Procedure > ... > Jury Trials > Verdicts > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jury Trials > Verdicts > General Verdicts

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > Motions for New Trials

HN1[] Jury Trials, Jury Instructions

It would be especially misleading and unfair both to the jury and to the court to review any post-verdict contention apart from the pre-verdict situation or to consider any particular statement in the instructions separate from and unrelated to all other statements contained in the charge. Also, it is essential that the special and general verdicts be considered in relation to each other and that all the verdicts be interpreted in the light of the entire instructions upon which the verdicts were determined by the jury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN2[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

See Sherman Act § 2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

HN3[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

Monopolizing is the acquisition or retention of power to control prices, or to exclude competitors in interstate commerce in commodities sold or distributed in the same market. The power to monopolize does not necessarily require that entire control of pricing or competition be acquired of the market in a particular commodity. The Sherman Act prohibits the monopolizing, in excess of lawful patent monopoly, of any part of the market for any product in interstate trade or commerce.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Exemptions

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > General Overview

HN4[] Scope, Exemptions

Possession of a valid patent or patents does not give the patentee any exemption from the provisions of the Sherman Act beyond the limits of the patent monopoly.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Lease Agreements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Coverage > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN5[] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

There is no intimation in the Robinson Patman Amendment to the Clayton Act that it is the sole and exclusive antitrust law applicable to price discrimination, or is intended to be a limitation on the Sherman Act, or that it removes any antitrust conduct from the scope of the Sherman Act. The Robinson Patman Amendment prohibits initial-stage price discrimination which, if continued or extended, may become a Sherman Act violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Coverage > General Overview

Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Lease Agreements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Jury Trials > Jury Instructions > General Overview

HN6[] Robinson-Patman Act, Coverage

Even though a particular price discrimination may not fall within the specific prohibitions of the Robinson Patman Amendment to the Clayton Act, that circumstance neither directly nor by reasonable inference precludes price or lease rate discrimination from being a cause of a Sherman Act violation when all other elements of such violation are established.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN7[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

The Sherman Act does not confine its protection to consumers, or to purchasers, or to competitors, or to sellers. Nor does it immunize the outlawed acts because they are done by any of these. The Sherman Act is comprehensive in its terms and coverage, protecting all who are made victims of the forbidden practices by whomever they may be perpetrated.

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > Judgment Notwithstanding Verdict

Civil Procedure > Parties > Joinder of Parties > Permissive Joinder

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN8[] Judgment as Matter of Law, Judgment Notwithstanding Verdict

See Fed. R. Civ. P. 17(a).

Civil Procedure > Attorneys > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Counsel > Right to Counsel > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jury Trials > Jury Instructions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jury Trials > Jury Instructions > Objections

HN9[] Civil Procedure, Attorneys

Fed. R. Civ. P. 51 provides for submission of requested instructions stating the views of counsel as to the law on fact issues which are supported by evidence and which counsel deem of particular importance to the contentions they expect to present to the court and jury. The court has a right to expect such assistance from counsel in the preparation of instructions.

Judges: [1] Boldt, District Judge.

Opinion by: BOLDT

Opinion

[*379] [*195] Memorandum Decision

BOLDT, District Judge

Eleven claims for treble damages, all grounded on the same alleged Sherman Act violations, were asserted in these cases. The claims were made by the several plaintiffs in Cause #2797 and, as a counterclaim in Cause #2350, by the defendants Wendt and Sutterlin, co-partners. All of the claims in Cause #2797 were asserted against Peelers Company, a partnership, and its individual members. In Cause #2350 Laitram Corporation, successor in interest to the Peelers partnership, was named, duly served with process and participated in the proceedings as a party. In the jury instructions, for brevity, the parties asserting the claims were called claimants, and the adverse parties were called defendants. The same designations will be used herein.

The claims were presented for consolidated jury trial on the contentions of the parties and the issues specified in the final pretrial order. Upon the stated contentions and issues recovery by any one or more of the claimants was possible under any one of the following bases of recovery: (1) restraint of trade by a combination of defendants in violation [2] of Section 1 of the Act; (2) monopolizing in violation of Section 2 of the Act by a combination of defendants; (3) monopolizing by a single defendant; (4) attempting to monopolize by a single defendant; (5) attempting to monopolize by a combination of defendants.

There was substantial evidence from which the jury might reasonably have found facts sufficient to sustain recovery by one or more of the claimants on any of the above grounds asserted by claimants. Therefore, it was required that all of the several alternative bases of recovery be submitted to the jury under instructions stating claimants' contentions and the essential elements of each alleged basis of recovery. Unless these circumstances are constantly kept in mind the contentions raised by defendants' motions for judgment n.o.v. and for new trial cannot be correctly understood and fairly determined. Early in the charge the jury were instructed:

> "The instructions are prepared as an inter-related whole, that is, everything stated in one part or phase of the instructions is stated in the light of and to be considered with all other statements or parts or phases of the instructions. This means that no juror should [3] take some particular part or [*196] phase of the instructions, isolate it and consider or apply it apart from all else stated in the instructions. The point is that not all that is to be said on any subject can be said in a single sentence or paragraph or even page, perhaps, and if each particular matter were to be repeated each time it was applicable, the instructions would go on interminably.
>
> "Therefore, each particular principle applicable to the case is stated for the most part once; sometimes it may be necessary to repeat to some extent or by reference. Every statement in the instructions is made on the assumption that the jury will apply that particular statement in the light of all other statements made in the instructions. This is a vital and essential assumption, and if the jury do not do that, but take some particular statement in the instructions and fail to consider it in connection with the other applicable principles stated in the instructions, the jury will, of course, be defeating the object of the instructions, which is to state the whole law of the case and to be applied by the jury as the whole law of the case."

The substance of this admonition was again [4] stated at the end of the charge. The directions thus given the jury are equally applicable in examining defendants' post-verdict motions and would be violated by an out-of-context consideration of any of the questions now presented.

[*380] Because of the variety of possible bases of recovery and of fact issues, much time and effort were expended by the court in the preparation of instructions covering, without unnecessary repetition, all subject matter required to be included in the charge. To assist the jury in understanding and applying the instructions and in considering the evidence as related to the several Sherman Act violations asserted by claimants, a copy of the entire charge, captioned and indexed by subject matter, was in the jury-room for reference and study by the jury throughout their deliberations.

In the recited circumstances HN1[] it would be especially misleading and unfair both to the jury and to the court, to review any post-verdict contention apart from the pre-verdict situation or to consider any particular statement in the instructions separate from and unrelated to all other statements contained in the charge. Also, it is essential that the special and general verdicts [5] be considered in relation to each other and that all the verdicts be interpreted in the light of the entire instructions upon which the verdicts were determined by the jury.

From the special verdicts it is clear that the recoveries awarded by the general verdicts were based solely on a finding by the jury that defendants had violated Section 2 of the Sherman Act by single-firm monopolization in excess of patent monopoly. This ground of recovery was clearly within claimants' contentions in the pretrial order although not emphasized by isolation from the several other asserted grounds of recovery now eliminated by the special verdicts. Since approval and entry of the final pretrial order the court has always considered single-firm monopolization to be within the issues for trial and has never understood any counsel to assert otherwise until such contention was urged in the briefs on the post-verdict motions.

HN2[] Section 2 of the Sherman Act expressly condemns monopolizing by a single individual or firm:

> "Every person who shall monopolize . . . any part of [interstate] trade or commerce shall be [in violation of this act]."

Monopolizing was defined in the jury instructions [6] as follows:

> "Monopolizing HN3[] is the acquisition or retention of power to control prices, or to exclude competitors in interstate commerce in commodities sold or distributed in the same market. The power to monopolize does not necessarily require that entire control of pricing or competition be acquired of the market in a particular commodity. The Sherman Act prohibits the monopolizing, in excess of lawful patent monopoly, [*197] of any part of the market for any product in interstate trade or commerce."

The quoted definition, at least for the purposes of this particular litigation, is fully supported by numerous decisions of which the following are typical: United States v. E. I. DuPont De Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 100 L. Ed. 1264, 76 S. Ct. 994; American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 90 L. Ed. 1575, 66 S. Ct. 1125.

Repeatedly it has been held that monopoly rights granted by a patent are not absolute but are limited by the Sherman Act and by other laws not now pertinent.

> " . . HN4[] . [Possession] of a valid patent or patents does not give the patentee any exemption from the provisions of the Sherman Act beyond the limits of the patent monopoly." United [7] States v. Line Material Co., 333 U.S. 287, 308, 92 L. Ed. 701, 68 S. Ct. 550.

> "The limited monopolies granted to patent owners do not exempt them from the prohibitions of the Sherman Act and supplementary legislation." Standard Oil v. United States, 283 U.S. 163, 169, 75 L. Ed. 926, 51 S. Ct. 421.

> " . . . the patent monopoly may not be used to disregard the antitrust laws . . ." Sears, Roebuck & Co. v. Stiffel Co., 376 U.S. 225, 11 L. Ed. 2d 661, 84 S. Ct. 784.

> " . . . Rights conferred by patents are indeed very definite and extensive, but they do not give any more than other rights an universal license against positive prohibitions. The Sherman law is a limitation of rights, rights which may be pushed to evil consequences and therefore restrained." Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co. v. United States, 226 U.S. 20, 49, 57 L. Ed. 107, 33 S. Ct. 9. Hartford-Empire Co. v. United States, 323 U.S. 386, 406, 89 L. Ed. 322, 65 S. Ct. 373.

A basic purpose of the Sherman Act in condemning monopoly was to protect competition and prevent unreasonable impairment thereof.

> "In the Sherman . . . Act, Congress was dealing with competition, which it sought to protect, and monopoly, which [8] it sought to prevent." Standard Oil Co. v. Trade Comm'n, 340 U.S. 231, 248, 95 L. Ed. 239, 71 S. Ct. 240.

> "[The] basic and underlying purposes of the antitrust laws [are] to preserve competition and to protect [381] the consumer." Conference of Studio Unions v. Loew's, Inc., 9 Cir., 193 F.2d 51, 55.

Many other decisions are to the same effect.

Food packers who are required by a patentee owner of processing machinery to pay substantially higher lease rates for use of such machinery than are paid for the use of identical machinery by their competitors selling food processed by the machinery in the same relevant market, necessarily have greater expense for machinery rental than their competitors and in that particular the ability of the disfavored food packer lessees to compete in the relevant market may be diminished. The jury in the present cases might reasonably have found the following facts proved by a preponderance of the evidence: (1) the defendants had no reasonable business necessity or justification for imposing unequal lease rates for the use of their machinery; (2) in all particulars relevant to equal rates claimants and their competitors were similarly situated; [9] (3) the lease rates were an important expense factor in the production costs of claimants and their competitors; and (4) the rates imposed by defendants were unequal and caused substantial impairment of competition by claimants in the sale of food processed on defendants' machinery.

That all of the facts as above stated were found by the jury is established by the special and general verdicts. That such facts were reasonably found and warranted by the evidence appears beyond question since essentially the same facts were found from substantially the [*198] same evidence by the Federal Trade Commission (In re Grand Caillou Packing Co., et al., F.T.C. #7887, June 4, 1964) and by the Fifth Circuit in affirming the Commission findings and decision (LaPeyre v. Federal Trade Commission, Fifth Circuit, 366 F.2d 117, Sept. 13, 1966). Whatever other effect or authority might be given those decisions in the present case, they amply demonstrate the sufficiency of the evidence to support the facts found by the jury.

From such facts the jury might reasonably have reached the conclusion implicit in their verdicts that the defendants unlawfully exceeded the limits of their patent monopoly [10] rights by unreasonably and substantially suppressing competition, thereby causing monopolization in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act.

While no decision can be cited as direct authority for the ultimate conclusion just stated, there is no decision cited or found which specifically or by necessary inference is authority to the contrary. The stated conclusion reasonably follows from the facts on which it is based and is in harmony with the philosophy of antitrust law and the trend of decisions interpreting that law. [1]

[11] All contentions urged by defendants in support of their motions for judgment n.o.v. and for new trial have been fully and closely considered. In this memorandum decision only those contentions will be discussed which appear to warrant specific comment.

Defendants contend that because price discrimination is the specific subject of the Robinson Patman Amendment to the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 13, such conduct is not covered by the Sherman Act. Also it is argued that the Amendment does not apply to lease rates and therefore a discriminatory lease rate cannot be a violation of either the Clayton Act or the Sherman Act. HN5[] There is no intimation in Robinson Patman that it is the sole and exclusive antitrust law applicable to price discrimination, or is intended to be a limitation on the Sherman Act, or that it removes any antitrust conduct from the scope of the Sherman Act. Robinson Patman prohibits initial-stage price discrimination which, if continued or extended, may become a Sherman Act violation. HN6[] Even though a particular price discrimination may not fall within the specific prohibitions of Robinson Patman, that circumstance neither directly nor by reasonable inference precludes [12] price or lease rate discrimination from being a cause of a Sherman Act violation when all other elements of such violation are established.

The damages sought by claimants were related to lease rates but recovery solely because of the lease rates, even if found discriminatory, was not permitted under the instructions. The jury was instructed to consider all activities of defendants disclosed by the evidence in determining whether in [382] fact a Section 2 Sherman Act violation had been established. The instructions specifically stated and in several contexts emphasized to the jury that recovery could not be based merely upon a [*199] finding of discriminatory lease rates. Also, the essential elements of recovery were several times reiterated in the instructions, including particularly the necessity of proof of an unreasonable impairment or suppression of competition as a basis of recovery under Section 2 of the Sherman Act.

---

[1] United States v. E. I. DuPont DeNemours & Co., 118 F. Supp. 41, 214-217 (D. Del. 1953), aff'd 351 U.S. 377, 76 S. Ct. 994, 100 L. Ed. 1264 (1956); Lorain Journal v. United States, 342 U.S. 143, 96 L. Ed. 162, 72 S. Ct. 181 (1951); Kiefer-Stewart Co. v. Seagram & Sons, 340 U.S. 211, 95 L. Ed. 219, 71 S. Ct. 259 (1951); American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 90 L. Ed. 1575, 66 S. Ct. 1125 (1946); Associated Press v. United States, 326 U.S. 1, 89 L. Ed. 2013, 65 S. Ct. 1416 (1945); United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U.S. 173, 89 L. Ed. 160, 65 S. Ct. 254 (1944); Mercoid Corp. v. Mid-Continent Co., 320 U.S. 661, 88 L. Ed. 376, 64 S. Ct. 268 (1944); United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U.S. 265, 86 L. Ed. 1461, 62 S. Ct. 1070 (1942); Fashion Originators' Guild v. Trade Comm'n., 312 U.S. 457, 85 L. Ed. 949, 61 S. Ct. 703 (1941); Motion Picture Co. v. Universal Film Co., 243 U.S. 502, 515, 61 L. Ed. 871, 37 S. Ct. 416 (1917); Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1, 55 L. Ed. 619, 31 S. Ct. 502 (1911); United States v. 20th Century Fox Film Corp., 137 F. Supp. 78 (S.D. Cal. 1956).

Defendants also assert that discriminatory practices by a single firm not acting in concert with others does not constitute a Sherman Act violation, citing language in the opinion in Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 245 F. Supp. 258, 287 [13] (M.D. Pa. 1965). The precise question raised by defendants' contention was not directly presented in the cited case and the language of the District Court opinion on which defendants rely was not necessary to the decision in that case.

Defendants rely upon two Ninth Circuit decisions as indicating that single-firm discriminatory practices cannot effect a violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act: Chorak v. RKO Radio Pictures, 196 F.2d 225 (1952), cert. den. 344 U.S. 887, 97 L. Ed. 686, 73 S. Ct. 186; and Fanchon & Marco, Inc. v. Paramount Pictures, 215 F.2d 167 (1954), cert. den. 348 U.S. 912, 99 L. Ed. 715, 75 S. Ct. 293. Both of those cases involved alleged discrimination by a producer or distributor of motion pictures in granting preferential release of films ("clearances") to particular exhibitors. As Chorak emphasizes, it is a practical impossibility for distributors to release identical films to all exhibitors at the same time. This is the crucial factor which clearly and vitally distinguishes the film distribution cases from the present case in which such factor is not present in any manner or to any degree. The practical business necessities of producers and distributors [14] in the particular referred to is the basis for holding reasonable preference (discrimination) among exhibitors legally justifiable in the distribution of films. In the present case there was no evidence of any reasonable business necessity for defendants' discriminatory rates and by the verdicts the jury so found. Everything stated in the Chorak and Fanchon & Marco opinions is said in the light of and directed to the particular situation applicable to the distribution of films. In so far as the question under consideration is concerned there is no statement or intimation in any of the film distribution opinions that they are applicable beyond that particular type of case.

There is no clear authority to support, and the philosophy of recent antitrust decisions is against, defendants' contention that single-firm violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act cannot be based on unreasonably discriminatory lease rates when all other requirements in proof of such a violation are fulfilled.

Defendants say they only manufacture, sell and lease shrimp processing machinery and are not engaged in the business of either processing shrimp or distributing canned shrimp in the market [15] for that commodity. Because of these circumstances defendants contend the processing machinery market is the only market "relevant" to a Sherman Act recovery against defendants and therefore claimants cannot recover in this litigation for any damages sustained because of the suppression or restriction of claimants' ability to compete in the market for canned shrimp. In effect, defendants argue that claimants cannot recover even if defendants violated the Sherman Act in the leasing of their processing machinery and such violation proximately caused injury and damage to claimants by reason of suppressing claimants' ability to compete in the market for canned shrimp. The decisions cited in support of this contention are noted below. [2] None of the [*200] opinions purports to rule directly and specifically as contended for by defendants. Some of the opinions contain language which lend inferential support to defendants' contention if considered apart from the particular circumstances of the case in which the language was used and out of the context in which defendants' contention is made in the present case. Otherwise, this court does not consider defendants' contention supported [16] by any of the cited cases or by all taken together. On the other hand, a recent (April, 1966) decision of the Fourth Circuit, South Carolina Council of Milk Producers, Inc. v. Newton, 360 F.2d 414, expresses views as to proximate [383] cause which this court considers applicable to the question posed by defendants' contention in this case. The essence of that decision on the present point is stated:

---

[2] United States v. E. I. DuPont DeNemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 76 S. Ct. 994, 100 L. Ed. 1264 (1956); Technical Tape Corp. v. Minnesota Mining & Mfg. Co., 247 F.2d 343 (2 Cir., 1957), cert. den. 355 U.S. 952, 2 L. Ed. 2d 529, 78 S. Ct. 537 (1958); Dictograph Products, Inc. v. Federal Trade Comm'n, 217 F.2d 821 (2nd Cir. 1954); United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F.2d 416 (2nd Cir., 1945); Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 245 F. Supp. 258 (M.D. Pa. 1965); United States v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 110 F. Supp. 295 (D. Mass. 1953), aff'd per curiam, 347 U.S. 521, 74 S. Ct. 699, 98 L. Ed. 910 (1954); United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 (1966).

> "If a plaintiff can show himself within the sector of the economy in which the violation threatened a breakdown of competitive conditions and that he was proximately injured thereby, then he has standing to sue under section 4 . . .
>
> "'The HN7[] statute does not confine its protection to consumers, or to purchasers, or to competitors, or to sellers. Nor does it immunize the outlawed acts because they are done by any of these . . . The Act is comprehensive in its terms and coverage, protecting all who are made victims of the forbidden practices by whomever they may be perpetrated . . .'"

[17] Other language in the same opinion and the below-noted decisions [3] support the holding of this court that recovery by claimants against defendants may be had upon the finding by the jury that defendants' violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act in the leasing of processing machinery proximately caused injury and damage to claimants in preventing or restricting them in competing in the market for processed and canned shrimp.

Defendants contend that judgment n.o.v. must be granted against Crown Packers since that claimant was merely working as a processor on a cost-plus basis and did not itself engage in the marketing of shrimp and [18] therefore suffered no damage. HN8[] Rule 17(a) Civ. R.P. provides that " . . . a party with whom or in whose name a contract has been made for the benefit of another . . . may sue in his own name without joining with him the party for whose benefit the action is brought." It is clear Crown Packers comes within the rule and that, although acting on a cost-plus basis, its contracts with defendants for machinery rental were made for the benefit of Crown Packers.

Defendants' contention that judgment for claimant Halibut Producers Cooperative should be limited to damages based on machinery rental charges paid to defendants for the peeling of shrimp sold in the canned shrimp market is also without merit. Halibut Producers Cooperative claimed it was required to discontinue canning shrimp because of defendants' discriminatory lease rates and at the suggestion of defendants entered the frozen shrimp market in an attempt to stay in the shrimp processing business. There was substantial evidence in the case to support this contention (Tr. 3673-3677) which raised a fact issue resolved against defendants by the jury verdict in favor of Halibut Producers Cooperative.

Defendants also contend there [19] is an inconsistency in the answers to questions [*201] #3 and #4 of the special verdict in that the jury found monopolization in excess of lawful patent monopoly in answer to question #3, but found there was no intent to monopolize in answer to question #4. When the several essential issues submitted to the jury as to each possible basis of recovery by claimants and all of the instructions under which those issues were determined by the jury are fully considered and kept in mind, it is perfectly clear that question #4 referred only to the element of specific intent essential to establish an attempt to monopolize, one of the several possible bases of recovery by claimants.

The court remarked during argument on the post-verdict motions, " . . . it seems incredible to me that anyone could have understood interrogatory #4 to be related to anything excepting an attempt as defined in the court's instructions."

The jury were instructed:

> "Attempt to monopolize, as related to this case includes two essential elements: (1) a specific intention or purpose to acquire monopoly power in excess of lawful patent monopoly; and (2) the adoption of one or more alleged methods substantially [20] furthering that specific purpose. To establish that a person had specific > purpose and intention to monopolize, it must be shown by a preponderance of evidence that such person had actual knowledge that actions taken by him would tend to cause monopolization and that such person by such actions consciously desired to accomplish such monopolization."

---

[3] Mandeville Island Farms, Inc. v. American Crystal Sugar Co., 334 U.S. 219, 92 L. Ed. 1328, 68 S. Ct. 996 (1948); Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., Inc. v. United States, 310 U.S. 150, 84 L. Ed. 1129, 60 S. Ct. 811 (1940); Conference of Studio Unions v. Loew's Inc., 193 F.2d 51, 54-55, (9th Cir. 1951); See also at p. 363, Karseal Corp. v. Richfield Oil Corp., 221 F.2d 358 (9th Cir. 1955).

>
> . . .
>
> "Purpose and intention, as used in defining and discussing attempt to monopolize, means that a person alleged to have made such attempt must be proven to have taken actions with the specific objective of monopolizing in mind and with the conscious desire that his actions will enable him to monopolize.
>
> [384] "Other than as just stated, if a person voluntarily takes actions which in fact result in a violation of the antitrust laws, such person is chargeable with antitrust violation as to civil claims for damages of the type asserted in the present case, whether or not such person had either purpose, intention, intent or knowledge that his actions would result in violation of the antitrust laws."

Although counsel were given drafts of the instructions and the verdict forms and invited to submit suggestions as to their form, [21] language and substance, the court received little assistance from counsel in that respect. The special verdicts required the jury to report its findings as to the essential facts pertaining to each of the several possible bases of recovery asserted by claimants. The several parts of the special verdict form and the general verdict forms were prepared as an interrelated series of questions to be determined by the jury. When the answers of the jury to those questions are read in their relation to each other and to the instructions on which they were based, there can be no reasonable doubt that the question concerning intent in special interrogatory #4 dealt only with whether defendants had specifically intended an attempt to monopolize. The answer to that question had no necessary bearing on whether, specifically intended or not, defendants actually accomplished monopolization which was the question presented in interrogatory #3. Fair analysis of all of the verdicts makes it certain the jury: (1) found there was no combination, thus precluding either a Section 1 violation or a Section 2 violation based on combination; (2) found no specific intent to monopolize, thus precluding a [22] violation based on attempt to monopolize; and (3) found a general intent by defendants to voluntarily and knowingly do those things which were found to result in monopolization in excess of patent monopoly.

Although defendants urge a variety of contentions in support of their motion for new trial, the basic question presented by that motion is whether the following instruction is erroneous:

> "Lawful patent monopoly does not include the right to charge discriminatory [*202] rates as previously defined in these instructions or to attach conditions to the use of patented machinery which have the purpose or effect of unreasonably or unlawfully permitting a combination to restrain interstate trade or commerce in a product processed or manufactured by the patented machinery."

Defendants' claim of error pertains to the first part of the quoted sentence, i.e., "Lawful patent monopoly does not include the right to charge discriminatory rates as previously defined in these instructions . . ." In their argument defendants fail to give effect to the very definition specifically referred to as underscored above. A part of that definition stated:

> "Therefore, if you find [23] from the evidence and under the court's instructions the rate was not discriminatory, or if discriminatory, neither the cause nor the result of an antitrust violation, your verdict must be for the defendants as to all claims."

When the clause objected to is read in context with the sentence in which it appears and with all other instructions, it is clear beyond question that the jury was instructed that recovery for any claimant could only be allowed if defendants' lease rate was found in fact to be discriminatory and caused by or the result of an antitrust violation. In the balance of the sentence following the phrase defendants object to, the jury was told a patent monopoly could not be used by a combination to restrain trade or commerce in products manufactured on the patented machinery. The underscored words make it plain that this portion of the instruction referred to conduct by a combination. Since the jury found there was no combination, even if the phrase complained of was incorrect defendants could not have been harmed by it.

HN9[] Fed. Civ. R. #51 provides for submission of requested instructions stating the views of counsel as to the law on fact issues which are [24] supported by evidence and which counsel deem of particular importance to the contentions they expect to present to the court and jury. The court has a right to expect such assistance from counsel in the preparation of instructions. In the present case few, if any, of the numerous requested instructions submitted by counsel contained complete, correct and fair statements of the law applicable to the numerous principles of law on which the jury obviously had to be instructed. The failure of exceptionally able and experienced counsel to present their conception of the law as to the principal issues by well stated requested instructions should not be viewed with favor in cases involving such extraordinarily complicated and unusual fact and law issues as were involved [385] in this litigation. If by hindsight, it might now appear that a phase of an issue mentioned in a requested instruction was not covered in the given instructions as specifically or emphatically as might seem desirable, this is more fairly chargeable to counsel than to the court. In any event it would not require new trial unless the claimed error was clearly prejudicial. It does not appear defendants were or could have [25] been prejudiced by any asserted error urged in support of defendants' motion for new trial.

Refusal of only one instruction requested by defendants is claimed as error, which indicates all other requests of defendants were covered to their satisfaction in the instructions given to the jury. The refused request reads:

> "INSTRUCTION NO. B 1
>
> "You are instructed that you cannot find that either monopolization or restraint of trade constituting an antitrust violation were committed by the Laitram Corporation or The Peelers Company or Grand Caillou Packing Company, Inc., if you find that the lease rate utilized for the defendants' patented shrimp peeling machinery from 1956 to May 1, 1963, was equal to a numerical expresion of a single, uniform charge for each shrimp peeled on the machinery, regardless of the size of each shrimp."

[*203] If considered as an abstract statement unrelated to the evidence in the case, this requested instruction is far from being clear, uncomplicated and understandable. However, there was no categorical credible evidence in the record to sustain a finding that the yield for each Gulf packer was 50% of the yield for each Northwest packer. Also, [26] the request fails to take into account the fact the jury was entitled to consider all circumstances shown by evidence which were involved in setting the rates. The subject matter of the requested instruction, so far as supported by evidence, was fully covered in the instructions given the jury and defendants' counsel were not precluded from arguing to the jury the contention stated in their requested instruction.

Defendants complain of the supplemental instruction given during the deliberations of the jury in response to request of the jury therefor. The appropriateness and the perception of the jury's inquiry indicate discriminating care in considering and applying the instructions. Promptly upon receipt of the inquiry it was reported to counsel who thereupon met in lengthy conference with the court. Counsel were given every opportunity to participate in preparation of a response to the jury and to state their views concerning the form and content of the response. Defendants' counsel were particularly invited to suggest any particulars which should be included in the response but they did not then seek inclusion of those items the omission of which they now assert as error. [27] The conference was not reported and the taking of exceptions was not required. However, the conference did occur and in the presence of counsel a proposed supplemental instruction in response to the jury's request was discussed in detail, drafted and finally redrafted in the form given to the jury.

Defendants' final asserted ground for new trial pertains to a comment by claimants' counsel during final argument to the jury. Assuming the comment was improper, it could not have improperly influenced the jury to the prejudice of claimants.

The court instructed the jury:

> "The statements of attorneys in the case made during the trial and in their arguments are not evidence nor proof of any fact in issue, and should be disregarded by you unless the statements are based on your own recollection of what the evidence is, and in accord with your own judgment as to the credibility, value and significance of the evidence."

Also:

> "Your verdict must be based exclusively upon the evidence presented and received during the course of the trial . . . You must not discuss or consider anything but such evidence."

Also as to the subject matter of the comment asserted as [28] prejudicial argument, the court instructed the jury:

> "The fact that the Northwest lease charges were reduced as of May, 1963, in and of itself, is not to be taken as any evidence or proof that the previous lease rate was discriminatory or unlawful in any respect."

The jury was constantly alert and attentive during an involved and lengthy trial and its perceptive request for further instruction and the discernment indicated in finding facts as directed in the special verdict indicate the jury deliberated on the case with utmost care and faithful adherence to the instructions of the court. The court has not the slightest doubt the jury scrupulously followed the above-quoted [386] instructions as well as all others. If so, the asserted improper comment of counsel could not have had the slightest prejudicial effect. The court is confident such was the fact of the matter.

On full consideration of all contentions by defendants in support of their motions for judgment n.o.v. and for new trial each and both are found without substantial merit and are hereby denied.

Claimants' motion that the judgment upon the verdicts in Cause #2797 [*204] be applicable to and run against Laitram [29] Corporation has been fully considered on the briefs upon which it was submitted.

It is undisputed that Laitram Corporation is the successor to the rights and liabilities of the Peelers Company. Laitram is a named party in Cause #2350 (Pretrial Order Admitted Fact #5), and as such was fully and properly before the court in Cause #2350. That cause and Cause #2797 were consolidated for trial with the same jury; thus Laitram was a direct participant in the litigation of claims, contentions and issues in Cause #2797 identical to those in Cause #2350. The ownership of Peelers and Laitram is substantially the same. The principal owners of Laitram testified as witnesses and were present in person throughout all or most of the trial proceedings. Peelers and Laitram were represented by the same counsel who vigorously participated in all proceedings in both Cause #2350 and Cause #2797.

In these circumstances, to now require service of process and further proceedings as to Laitram would give unreasonable and unnecessary obeisance to formality. In a substantially similar situation such formality was held essentially useless and therefore unnecessary in Hirsch v. Bruchhausen, 284 F.2d 783 [30] (2nd Cir. 1960). That decision fully supports the granting of claimants' motion in the present case. Accordingly, it is hereby so ordered.

In Cause #2350 plaintiff seeks relief for alleged infringment by the defendants in that action of certain patents on shrimp peeling machinery owned by plaintiff. Defendants' challenge to the validity of the patents previously has been tried in this court and determined in favor of plaintiff. Kaakinen v. Peelers Company, 301 F.2d 170. The sole issue now presented is whether defendants' affirmative defense of patent misuse has been sustained on the evidence and record before the court. Nonjury determination of that issue has been stipulated.

Plaintiff in Cause #2350 may be estopped to deny misuse of the patents because the same issue has been determined against plaintiff by the United States District Court for the District of Alaska in Laitram Corporation v. King Crab, Inc., 244 F. Supp. 9, 245 F. Supp. 1019. In that case, after extended trial, the court held the patents had been misused in the identical particulars at issue in the present case. In the cited case it was held that the patent holder had purged itself of the misuse and a permanent [31] injunction against further misuse was granted but recovery of damages was denied.

On the record in the present case it is found in fact and law that the charging by plaintiff of rates unreasonably and unfairly discriminating between lessees of the patented machinery constituted a patent misuse during the period such rates were applied. Accordingly, no damages sustained during such period may be recovered by plaintiff. Incidentally, it should be noted that while damages are discussed in plaintiff's brief no demand for damages was stated in the complaint or in the pretrial order.

The evidence shows plaintiff discontinued its discriminatory rate practices in May, 1963. Having purged itself of misuse as of that date, plaintiff is entitled to an injunction restraining defendants from infringement of plaintiff's patents after May 31, 1963 continuing in effect until further order of this court.

It is so ordered. Findings of Fact, Conclusions of Law and a Decree in accordance with this ruling may be presented at the convenience of counsel.

Allowance of attorneys' fees pursuant to Section 7 of the Sherman Act has been submitted for determination by the court upon affidavits and memoranda.

[32] Upon careful review of all circumstances of the present case relating to the several factors proper to be considered in fixing attorneys' fees in this type of case, the court has concluded and hereby finds the sum of $150,000 is a fair and reasonable amount to be allowed as attorneys' fees and awarded claimants as recoverable costs of suit. It is so ordered.

Otto Milk Co. v. United Dairy Farmers Cooperative Asso.

United States District Court for the Western District of Pennsylvania

November 10, 1966

Civil Action No. 66-705

Reporter

261 F. Supp. 381 *; 1966 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10214 ; 1966 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,935

Otto Milk Company, Plaintiff, v. United Dairy Farmers Cooperative Association, United Dairy Farmers, Ernest Hayes, J. D. Smouse, Joseph M. Piper, Stanley Yagla and Adam Babiarz, Defendant

Core Terms

milk, picketing, Farmers, products, Dairy, purchases, defendants', interstate commerce, farms, retail store, boycott, raw milk, cooperative association, dairy product, monopolize, Antitrust, induce, Sherman Act, conspiracy, enjoined, customers, restrain, front, sales, sells, restraint of trade, injunction, processed, dairymen, bottled

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN1[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN2[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Jurisdiction

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN3[] Sherman Act, Jurisdiction

The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1, 2 extends not only to transactions in the stream of interstate commerce, but also to intrastate transactions which substantially affect interstate commerce. The source and application of the restraint upon trade may be intrastate, but that does not matter if it is interstate commerce that is affected.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN4[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

In determining whether a defendant's activities have an effect on interstate commerce for purposes of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1, 2, a court need not be concerned with the exact dollars and cents effect, so long as the volume of trade involved is "not insubstantial."

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN5[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 17.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Collectives & Cooperatives > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Governments > Agriculture & Food > Product Promotions

HN6[] Exemptions & Immunities, Collectives & Cooperatives

See 7 U.S.C.S. § 291.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Collectives & Cooperatives > Capper-Volstead Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Collectives & Cooperatives > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Collectives & Cooperatives > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices > General Overview

HN7[] Collectives & Cooperatives, Capper-Volstead Act

The Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 17, and the Capper-Volstead Act, 7 U.S.C.S. § 291, do not give agricultural cooperatives a blanket exemption from the antitrust laws that allows them to engage in predatory practices or conspire with others to monopolize or otherwise restrain trade in violation of the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > Boycotts

Securities Law > ... > Self-Regulating Entities > National Securities Exchanges > New York Stock Exchange

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Securities Law > ... > Self-Regulating Entities > National Securities Exchanges > General Overview

HN8[] Horizontal Refusals to Deal, Boycotts

Group boycotts to be unlawful in and of themselves under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, 2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

International Trade Law > General Overview

HN9[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

An attempt to monopolize local business by restraining interstate commerce through the means of a boycott is a direct violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2. When one suppresses competition, he necessarily restrains trade. The fact that a monopolization of the market has not yet been achieved does not excuse a defendant's conduct. It is sufficient that there is a tendency toward monopoly or that there is a reasonable likelihood of a substantial lessening of competition. It is practices which tend to create a monopoly which are forbidden; the law need not await the accomplishment of the objective.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

HN10[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

Under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, simultaneous or express agreement between parties is not necessary to the formation of a conspiracy. It is sufficient if there is acquiescence in an illegal scheme. Even if one is coerced by economic threats or pressure to participate in an illegal scheme, that does not make him any less a co-conspirator.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Speech > Scope

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Strikes & Work Stoppages

HN11[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Picketing employed as an integral part of conduct in violation of a valid statute is not entitled to the immunity granted other forms of expression. The enjoining of picketing, the sole purpose of which is in conflict with a valid statute, is not inconsistent with the U.S. Const. am. I guarantee of freedom of speech.

Judges: [1] Miller, D.J.

Opinion by: MILLER

Opinion

[*382] MILLER, D.J.:

Plaintiff, Otto Milk Company (Otto), filed a complaint alleging violations of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 and 2, [1] by defendants [*383] and asking that defendants be enjoined from further violations of said Act and that plaintiff be paid treble damages because of such violations. Testimony was taken and oral argument held by the Court. At the oral argument, plaintiff waived its claim for damages and the Court now has before it only plaintiff's petition for an injunction.

[2] Plaintiff, a Pennsylvania corporation with its principal office and plant in Pittsburgh, is engaged in the purchasing of raw milk which it processes and bottles, and in the manufacture of general dairy products, including bottled milk, which it sells to numerous retail stores in Pennsylvania, Ohio and West Virginia. While the raw milk purchased by plaintiff is produced on farms in Western Pennsylvania, it purchases materials for milk containers, dairy products containers, milk cases and ingredients for its processed dairy products from other states, spending more than one million dollars annually for such out-of-state purchases.

The defendants are United Dairy Farmers Cooperative Association, an incorporated association whose members operate dairy farms in Pennsylvania; United Dairy Farmers, an unincorporated association of dairy farm operators; and Ernest Hayes, J.D. Smouse, Joseph M. Piper, Stanley Yagla and Adam Babiarz, all of whom are officers of the United Dairy Farmers Cooperative Association (Association) and the United Dairy Farmers (UDF).

The complaint alleges that defendants conspired among themselves and with others to boycott and to induce others to boycott the products [3] of plaintiff, to raise, fix and affect the price of raw milk and to eliminate competition between the Association and UDF and their competitor, Dairymen's Cooperative Sales Association (DCSA), the milk marketing organization through which Otto purchases raw milk. It is also alleged that defendants have conspired and attempted to monopolize the sale of raw milk in Western Pennsylvania, and that defendants' conduct constituted an intentional interference with long-standing business relationships between Otto and its customers.

There is ample evidence in the record to establish that on or about May 26, 1966, members of the defendants, Association and UDF, began marching in front of retail stores which sell Otto products in various communities in Armstrong, Butler, Fayette, Washington and Westmoreland Counties. They were carrying signs bearing various statements, such as "Otto Milk refuses to pay farmers fair prices for milk," "Otto Milk Company refuses to pay fair prices to farmers," and "Otto Milk is unfair to the farmer." [2] These members of defendant organizations told the managers of the stores in front of which they marched that they would leave if the store stopped selling Otto's [4] products. In some instances they also asked the store managers to substitute Beverly Farms' products for Otto's. When store managers acquiesced by discontinuing purchases of Otto's products, the pickets were removed. While picketing in front of these stores, defendant organizations' members also distributed handbills signed by United Dairy Farmers Cooperative association and urging the consumers to purchase Beverly Farms milk.

We are satisfied from the evidence that these pickets have been associated with and their activities authorized by defendants. The signs used by them either referred to the UDF or were similar to a sign exhibited in Court which

---

[1] "Every HN1[] contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal: . . ." (§ 1)

"Every HN2[] person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, ..." (§ 2)

[2] It is undisputed that Otto paid milk producers the price required by the Pennsylvania Milk Control Commission.

bore the name of the UDF. Furthermore, several of the pickets identified themselves as members of UDF or were found to be connected with members of UDF.

Defendants contend that this Court lacks jurisdiction of this action under the Sherman Antitrust [5] Act because their alleged actions are purely intrastate activities. The Sherman Act, however, is not to be construed so narrowly. [*384] HN3[] It "extends not only to transactions in the stream of interstate commerce, but also to intrastate transactions which substantially affect interstate commerce." Las Vegas Merchant Plumbers Association v. United States, 210 F.2d 732, 739 (9 Cir. 1954). The source and application of the restraint upon trade may be intrastate, as defendants' activities are here, but that does not matter if it is interstate commerce that is affected. As Justice Jackson stated in United States v. Women's Sportswear Manufacturers Association, 336 U.S. 460, 464, 93 L. Ed. 805, 69 S. Ct. 714 (1949), "If it is interstate commerce that feels the pinch, it does not matter how local the operation which applies the squeeze."

We believe that plaintiff has demonstrated that HN4[] defendants' activities would have an effect on interstate commerce. We need not be concerned with the exact dollars and cents effect, so long as the volume of trade involved is "not insubstantial." Northern Pacific Railway Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514 (1958); Evening [6] News Publishing Co. v. Allied Newspaper Carriers of New Jersey, 263 F.2d 715 (3 Cir. 1959), cert. den. 360 U.S. 929, 3 L. Ed. 2d 1544, 79 S. Ct. 1449 (1959). Defendants' activities resulted in a loss of business to plaintiff amounting to approximately $3,600.00 per week. Otto sells products in states other than Pennsylvania, the volume of these sales at times exceeding $200,000.00 annually. Otto also purchases from other states materials which it uses in its business. The volume of these purchases is well over one million dollars per year. It is obvious that a decline in Otto's business would have an effect on interstate commerce that is "not insubstantial."

Defendants also contend that they are exempted from the provisions of the Sherman Antitrust Act by virtue of Section 6 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 17 [3] and the Capper-Volstead Act, 7 U.S.C. § 291. [4] The Clayton Act, however, extends its exemption to agricultural organizations only for the purpose of "lawfully carrying out the legitimate objects thereof," and the Capper-Volstead Act permits dairymen to act in associations in "collectively processing, preparing for market, handling and marketing in interstate and foreign [7] commerce" their products.

[8] It was the purpose of Congress in passing these Acts to provide that farmers or dairymen might act together in cooperative associations without the associations as such being construed to be illegal combinations or conspiracies in restraint of trade as they otherwise might have been. Maryland and Virginia Milk Producers Association v. United States, 362 U.S. 458, 4 L. Ed. 2d 880, 80 S. Ct. 847 (1960); North Texas Producers Association v. Metzger Dairies, Inc., 348 F.2d 189 (5 Cir. 1965). It was never intended, however, that HN7[] agricultural cooperatives be given a blanket exemption from the antitrust laws that would allow them to engage in predatory practices or conspire with others to monopolize or otherwise restrain trade in violation of the antitrust [*385] laws. Maryland and Virginia Milk Producers Association v. United States, supra; North Texas Producers Association v. Metzger Dairies, Inc., supra.

---

[3] " . . . HN5[] Nothing contained in the antitrust laws shall be construed to forbid the existence and operation of labor, agricultural, or horticultural organizations, instituted for the purposes of mutual help, and not having capital stock or conducted for profit, or to forbid or restrain individual members of such organizations from lawfully carrying out the legitimate objects thereof; nor shall such organizations, or the members thereof, be held or construed to be illegal combinations or conspiracies in restraint of trade, under the antitrust laws."

[4] "Persons HN6[] engaged in the production of agricultural products as farmers, planters, ranchmen, dairymen, nut or fruit growers may act together in associations, corporate or otherwise, with or without capital stock, in collectively processing, preparing for market, handling, and marketing in interstate and foreign commerce, such products of persons so engaged. Such associations may have marketing agencies in common; and such associations and their members may make the necessary contracts and agreements to effect such purposes: . . ."

Defendants, by picketing retail grocery dealers and by asking them to remove Otto's products from their stores and to substitute Beverly Farms' products therefor, have engaged in an operation amounting to a boycott of Otto and DCSA. These activities were designed ultimately to [9] exclude DCSA from competition in the milk market in this area and to corner that market for the Association and UDF. The Supreme Court has declared such HN8[] group boycotts to be unlawful in and of themselves. Northern Pacific Railway Co. v. United States, supra; Klor's Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, 359 U.S. 207, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741, 79 S. Ct. 705 (1959); Evening News Publishing Co. v. Allied Newspaper Carriers of New Jersey, supra; Silver v. New York Stock Exchange, 373 U.S. 341, 10 L. Ed. 2d 389, 83 S. Ct. 1246 (1963).

This HN9[] attempt to monopolize local business by restraining interstate commerce through the means of a boycott is a direct violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act. Mandeville Island Farms v. American Crystal Sugar Co., 334 U.S. 219, 92 L. Ed. 1328, 68 S. Ct. 996 (1948). When one suppresses competition, he necessarily restrains trade. Wm. Goldman Theatres v. Loew's, Inc., 150 F.2d 738 (3 Cir. 1945). The fact that a monopolization of the market has not yet been achieved does not excuse defendants' conduct. It is sufficient that there is a tendency toward monopoly or that there is a reasonable likelihood of a substantial lessening of competition. United States v. Penn-Olin [10] Co., 378 U.S. 158, 12 L. Ed. 2d 775, 84 S. Ct. 1710 (1964). It is practices which tend to create a monopoly which are forbidden; the law need not await the accomplishment of the objective. International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U.S. 392, 92 L. Ed. 20, 68 S. Ct. 12 (1947). If allowed to continue and if successful, defendants could eventually exclude DCSA from the milk market in southwestern Pennsylvania.

Likewise defendants' activities constitute a conspiracy in restraint of trade in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. There was, in effect, a conspiracy between defendants and the owners of the retail stores which they picketed to boycott Otto and thus restrain competition between UDF and DCSA. The fact that the agreement of the storekeepers was obtained by coercion does not detract from the existence of a conspiracy. HN10[] Simultaneous or express agreement between parties is not necessary to the formation of a conspiracy. Interstate Circuit v. United States, 306 U.S. 208, 83 L. Ed. 610, 59 S. Ct. 467 (1939). It is sufficient if there is acquiescence in an illegal scheme. United States v. Paramount Pictures, Inc., 334 U.S. 131, 92 L. Ed. 1260, 68 S. Ct. 915 (1948). Indeed, [11] even if one is coerced by economic threats or pressure to participate in an illegal scheme, that does not make him any less a co-conspirator. Flintkote Co. v. Lysfjord, 246 F.2d 368 (9 Cir. 1957).

The case at bar is quite similar to the case of Giboney v. Empire Storage Co., 336 U.S. 490, 93 L. Ed. 834, 69 S. Ct. 684 (1949). In that case the Supreme Court upheld a state court judgment enjoining officers and members of a union of ice peddlers from picketing an ice company's place of business because it found that the sole purpose of the picketing was to induce the ice company to agree not to sell ice to non-union peddlers. Here the sole purpose of defendants' picketing has been to induce or force certain retail store operators to agree not to purchase dairy products from Otto because Otto buys milk through DCSA rather than UDF. Just as the picketing in the Giboney case was a violation of the state anti-trade-restraint law, the picketing here is a violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act.

The case at bar is also similar to the case of Milk Producers Association v. United States, supra, wherein the Supreme [*386] Court held that an agricultural marketing association composed [12] of dairy farmers had violated the Sherman Antitrust Act in attempting to get dealers to purchase milk from the association. The dairymen employed a boycott and exerted other economic pressure on dealers to attain their goal. This activity the Court held to be outside the legitimate objects of a cooperative and to constitute a violation of the Sherman Act.

As a violation of that Act, it matters not that the means employed were those of peaceful persuasion. Paramount Pictures v. United Motion Picture Theatre Owners, 93 F.2d 714 (3 Cir. 1937). Merely because defendants' picketing involved the use of speech or was viewed by them as "telling their story" to the public, their activities are not necessarily entitled to the protection of the First Amendment. Picketing is more than speech; it is speech mixed with particular conduct. Building Service Employees International Union Local 262 v. Gazzam, 339 U.S. 532, 94 L. Ed. 1045, 70 S. Ct. 784 (1950); Cox v. Louisiana, 379 U.S. 559, 13 L. Ed. 2d 487, 85 S. Ct. 476 (1965). A picket line has potential for inducing action beyond the message the pickets convey. The very purpose of picketing is to exert influences and produce results different [13] from the usual means of communication. Hughes v. Superior Court, 339 U.S. 460, 94 L. Ed. 985, 70 S. Ct. 718 (1950).

Indeed, the purpose of the picketing here was to induce the retail store operators to agree to stop handling Otto's products and in many instances it was successful. The pickets wanted not only to tell their story to the public, they wanted also to stop the customers from shopping at the stores and in turn stop the stores from dealing with Otto. To put it another way, the objective of the picketing was to achieve a result contrary to the provisions of the Sherman Act. The Supreme Court has made it clear that HN11[] picketing employed as an integral part of conduct in violation of a valid statute is not entitled to the immunity granted other forms of expression. Giboney v. Empire Storage Co., supra. The enjoining of picketing, the sole purpose of which is in conflict with a valid statute, is not inconsistent with Constitutional guarantees of freedom of speech. Local Union No. 10, United Association of Journeymen Plumbers and Steamfitters v. Graham, 345 U.S. 192, 73 S. Ct. 585, 97 L. Ed. 946 (1953); International Brotherhood of Teamsters v. Vogt, Inc., 354 U.S. 284, 1 L. [14] Ed. 2d 1347, 77 S. Ct. 1166 (1957).

Plaintiff has satisfactorily established that defendants were engaged in activities which constitute a boycott designed to restrain and monopolize interstate commerce in violation of the Sherman Antitrust law. For this reason, plaintiff's prayer for a permanent injunction of these activities by defendants must be granted. Therefore, counsel for plaintiff is directed to file suggested findings of fact and conclusions of law and a form of decree in accordance with this Opinion.

Findings of Fact, Conclusions of Law and Decree

Findings of Fact

1. Plaintiff, Otto Milk Company ("Otto"), a Pennsylvania corporation with its principal office and plant in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, is engaged in the purchasing of raw milk which it processes and bottles, and in the manufacturing of dairy products, including bottled milk, which it sells to numerous retail stores in Pennsylvania, Ohio and West Virginia.

2. Defendants are the United Dairy Farmers Cooperative Association ("Association"), an incorporated association, whose members operate dairy farms in Pennsylvania; United Dairy Farmers ("UDF"), an unincorporated association of dairy farm operators; and [15] Ernest Hayes, J.D. Smouse, Joseph M. Piper, Stanley Yagla and Adam Babiarz, all of whom are officers of the United Dairy Farmers Cooperative Association and the United Dairy Farmers.

3. Otto purchases raw milk requirements through the Dairymen's Cooperative Sales Association ("DCSA"), a milk marketing organization, which is in competition with the Association and UDF. In such purchases Otto pays for milk the full prices required by the Pennsylvania Milk Control Commission.

4. While raw milk purchased by plaintiff is produced on farms in Western Pennsylvania, it purchases material for milk containers, dairy products containers, milk cases, and ingredients for its processed dairy products from other states, spending more than one million dollars annually for such out of state purchases.

5. Plaintiff sells products in states other than Pennsylvania, the volume of these sales at times exceeding $200,000.00 annually.

6.Beginning on or about May 26, 1966, members of the defendants, Association and UDF, marched in front of retail stores which sell Otto products in various communities in Armstrong, Butler, Fayette, Washington and Westmoreland Counties. They carried signs bearing various [16] statements, such as "Otto Milk refuses to pay fair prices for milk"; "Otto Milk Company refuses to pay fair prices to farmers"; and "Otto Milk is unfair to the farmer".

7. These members of defendant organizations told the managers of the stores in front of which they marched that they would leave, if the stores stopped selling Otto's products. In some instances, they also asked store managers to substitute Beverly Farms' (a competitor of Otto) products for Otto's. When store managers acquiesced by discontinuing purchases of Otto's products, the pickets were removed.

8. While picketing in front of these stores, defendant organizations' members also distributed handbills signed by United Dairy Farmers Cooperative Association, and urging the consumers to purchase Beverly Farms milk.

9. The evidence establishes that these pickets were associated with, and their activities were authorized by, defendants.

10. The foregoing activities of defendants adversely affected plaintiff's good will, and resulted in a loss of business to plaintiff amounting to approximately $3600.00 per week, which losses would continue and mount if defendants' conduct were not enjoined by this Court.

11. [17] If the said conduct of defendants continued, it would further result in the reduction of purchases by Otto of materials from other states.

12. Plaintiff has suffered and, if defendants are not enjoined, will continue to suffer, irreparable injury, for which there is no adequate remedy of law.

13. The purchases and sales of the retail food stores against which defendants' activities were directed are in interstate commerce and the activities of defendants reduced the sale of all items in the stores, in addition to sales of Otto's products.

14. The activities of defendants were designed ultimately to exclude DCSA from competition in the milk market in the area involved, and to corner that market for the Association and UDF.

15. In addition to Pennsylvania farmers, many Ohio and West Virginia farmers market their milk through DCSA.

16. Defendants' activities, if continued, would have an effect on interstate commerce which would not be insubstantial.

17. Defendants, by picketing retail grocery dealers and by asking them to remove Otto's products from their stores, have engaged in an operation amounting to a boycott of Otto and DCSA, designed to restrain and monopolize interstate [18] commerce.

18. Such action constitutes an attempt by defendants to monopolize the sale of raw milk in the southwestern Pennsylvania market area, which constitutes a separate and distinct geographic market for such milk. There is a reasonable likelihood that this attempt, if allowed to continue, will substantially lessen competition.

19. If defendants were permitted to continue the activities complained of and were successful, they could eventually exclude DCSA from the milk market in southwestern Pennsylvania.

20. Defendants' activities constitute a conspiracy between them and the owners of the retail stores which they picketed to boycott Otto and thus restrain competition between UDF and DCSA, even though the agreement of the storekeepers was obtained by coercion.

21. The purpose of defendants' activities was to induce the retail store operators to agree to stop handling Otto's products and, in many instances, it was successful. The pickets wanted not only to tell their story to the public, but they also wanted to stop customers from shopping at the stores and, in turn, stop the stores from dealing with Otto.

22. The activities of defendants interfered with, and if not [19] enjoined would continue to interfere with, the advantageous business relationship between Otto and its customers.

23. Plaintiff has waived its claim for damages, including treble damages, and for counsel fees, and plaintiff and defendants have stipulated that the hearings held on plaintiff's motion for a preliminary injunction shall be considered as the final hearings in this case for the purpose of determining whether a permanent injunction shall issue.

Conclusions of Law

1. This Court has jurisdiction of the matters complained of in Counts I and II of the complaint in this action under Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. §§ 1 and 2).

2. This Court has pendent jurisdiction of the matters complained of in Count III of the complaint in this action.

3. The activities of defendants, and others coerced by them, constitute an unlawful conspiracy in restraint of trade in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. § 1).

4. The activities of defendants constitute an attempt to monopolize in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. § 2).

5. The activities of defendants constitute a tortious interference with plaintiff's advantageous business relationship [20] with its customers.

6. The activities of defendants are not exempted from the provisions of the Sherman Act by virtue of either Section 6 of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. § 17), or the provisions of the Capper-Volstead Act (7 U.S.C. § 291).

7. Plaintiff is entitled to relief in the form of a permanent injunction against the actions of defendants complained of.

Decree

Based upon the evidence, the opinion of the Court heretofore filed, and the foregoing Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law, it is hereby Ordered and Decreed that defendants, United Dairy Farmers Cooperative Association, United Dairy Farmers, Ernest Hayes, J.D. Smouse, Joseph M. Piper, Stanley Yagla and Adam Babiarz, and each of them, and any person or persons acting on their behalf, under their direction, or in concert or participation with them, are hereby permanently enjoined and restrained from inducing or attempting to induce, directly or indirectly, any present or potential customer of plaintiff to refuse to purchase products from plaintiff and, in connection therewith, from picketing or demonstrating, or threatening to picket or demonstrate, before or about any retail store in and around Western Pennsylvania, [21] or in any other place which is, or may become, a purchaser of the bottled milk or dairy products of plaintiff.

Costs to be paid by defendants.

End of Document

Case-Swayne Co. v. Sunkist Growers, Inc.

United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

November 21, 1966

No. 20,070

Reporter

369 F.2d 449 *; 1966 U.S. App. LEXIS 4319 ; 1966 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,944

Case-Swayne Company, Inc., a corporation, Appellant, v. Sunkist Growers, Inc., a corporation, Appellee

Core Terms

oranges, fruit, growers, cooperative, geographic, products, processing, Sherman Act, associations, relevant market, agricultural, exemption, marketing, juice, Capper-Volstead Act, producers, monopoly power, monopolize, district court, Clayton Act, processors, citrus, monopoly, prices, cases, orange juice, conspiracy, contracts, submarket, commerce

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > General Overview

HN1[] Remedies, Damages

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 15.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN2[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

See 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1-2.

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN3[] Dismissal, Involuntary Dismissals

See F. R. Civ. P. 41(b).

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN4[] Trials, Judgment as Matter of Law

See F. R. Civ. P. 50(a).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Collectives & Cooperatives > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Governments > Agriculture & Food > Product Promotions

HN5[] Exemptions & Immunities, Collectives & Cooperatives

See 7 U.S.C.S. § 291.

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > Directed Verdicts

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN6[] Judgment as Matter of Law, Directed Verdicts

In ruling on a motion for a directed verdict, the trial court is required to view the evidence in the light most favorable to the party against whom the motion is made. On appeal, likewise, the appellate court must consider the evidence in its strongest light in favor of the party against whom the motion was made, and must give him the advantage of every fair and reasonable intendment that the evidence can justify. This is true even though contrary inferences might reasonably be drawn.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN7[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

The cases uniformly hold that a party has monopoly power if it has over any part of the trade or commerce among the several states, a power of controlling prices or unreasonably restricting competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN8[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

In determining whether a party has monopoly power it is first essential to define the "relevant market."

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Governments > Courts > Judicial Precedent

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN9[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

Determination of the relevant market, both as respects products and as concerns geographical area, is a necessary step precedent to determining whether within that market there was a probability of violation of § 7 of the Clayton Act. It is clear that the same determination must be made regarding the relevant market in actions for violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Market Definition

HN10[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

Under § 7 of the Clayton Act, the relevant question is whether the effect of a merger "in any line of commerce" may be substantially to lessen competition. The United States Supreme Court sees no reason to differentiate between "line" of commerce in the context of the Clayton Act and "part" of commerce for purposes of the Sherman Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN11[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

In determining the "relevant market" with respect to alleged monopolization in violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, it seems advisable first to analyze separately the factors involved in both the relevant product market and the relevant geographic market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > Clayton Act

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN12[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

In determining the "relevant market" with respect to alleged monopolization in violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, the rule of "reasonable interchangeability" has been refined and modified. In particular, the courts have recognized that there may be an outer market and one or more inner submarkets within which competitive effects are to be appraised, i.e. a relevant submarket may constitute the product market for antitrust purposes.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Product Market Definition

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN13[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

In determining the "relevant market" with respect to alleged monopolization in violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, the "area of effective competition" must be determined by reference to a product market (the "line of commerce") and a geographic market (the "section of the country").

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Product Market Definition

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN14[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

The outer boundaries of a product market are determined by the reasonable interchangeability of use or the cross-elasticity of demand between the product itself and substitutes for it. However, within this broad market, well-defined submarkets may exist which, in themselves, constitute product markets for antitrust purposes. The boundaries of such a submarket may be determined by examining such practical indicia as industry or public recognition of the submarket as a separate economic entity, the product's peculiar characteristics and uses, unique production facilities, distinct customers, distinct prices, sensitivity to price changes, and specialized vendors.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN15[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

In § 2 cases under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, as in § 7 cases under the Clayton Act, there may be submarkets that are separate economic entities.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Geographic Market Definition

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Product Market Definition

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN16[] Relevant Market, Geographic Market Definition

The United States Supreme Court set forth criteria to be used in determination of the geographic market with respect to alleged monopolization in violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2: The criteria to be used in determining the appropriate geographic market are essentially similar to those used to determine the relevant product market. Moreover, just as a product submarket may have significance under § 7 of the Clayton Act as the proper "line of commerce," so may a geographic submarket be considered the appropriate "section of the country." Congress prescribed a pragmatic, factual approach to the definition of the relevant market and not a formal, legalistic one. The geographic market selected must, therefore, both correspond to the commercial realities of the industry and be economically significant. Thus, although the geographic market in some instances may encompass the entire nation, under other circumstances it may be as small as a single metropolitan area.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

HN17[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

The appropriate geographic area in which to examine the effects of an acquisition is an area in which the parties to the merger or acquisition compete, and around which there exist economic barriers that significantly impede the entry of new competitors.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN18[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

Whether a geographical location is or is not an "area of effective competition" is a question of fact in each case. The area may be limited by differences in costs of production and transportation. A competitive price disadvantage arising from transportation costs is an important factor in determining the scope of a relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN19[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

It seems clear from the decided cases that while the outer limits of the market may be determined by the competition of interchangeable products, there may be a well-defined submarket which constitutes the relevant market for antitrust purposes, which must correspond to the commercial realities of the industry, is affected by price disadvantages due to transportation costs, is affected by availability of a buyer to supply and existence of economic areas which significantly impede competition, is determined in part with relation to the parties affected in the suit, and is a question of fact in the particular case.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN20[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

While product oranges may have little, if any, value per se, the same is true of many raw products. The market for raw products is among the processors rather than the ultimate consumer. The court sees no reason why the raw product may not be the relevant product market, even though it has little value in its raw state. Moreover, it is clear that even as to the processed product, the relevant market may at the same time be national, regional, and statewide in area.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Geographic Market Definition

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN21[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

In determining the relevant geographic market with respect to alleged monopolization in violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, a proper test is the geographic structure of supplier-customer relations. The relevant market is determined in part by the market area to which the purchaser can practicably turn for supplies.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Geographic Market Definition

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN22[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

In determining the relevant geographic market with respect to alleged monopolization in violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, the central issue is where does a potential buyer look for potential suppliers of the service -- what is the geographical area in which the buyer has, or, in the absence of monopoly, would have, a real choice as to price and alternative facilities? This depends upon the facts of the market place, taking into account such economic factors as the distance over which supplies and services may be feasibly furnished, consistently with cost and functional efficiency.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Acts & Mental States > Mens Rea > Willfulness

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN23[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

The offense of monopoly under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, has two elements: the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN24[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

Monopoly power is the power to control prices or exclude competition. The existence of such power ordinarily may be inferred from the predominant share of the market. For example, over two-thirds of the entire domestic field of cigarettes and over 80 per cent of the field of comparable cigarettes constitutes a substantial monopoly.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Monopoly Power

HN25[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Size alone does not constitute an offense under the Sherman Act (Act), 15 U.S.C.S. § 2; nor does the mere possession of monopoly power. It is the wrongful use and exercise of that power which is proscribed by § 2 of the Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN26[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

The ultimate consideration in determining whether an alleged monopolist violates the Sherman Act (Act), 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, is whether the defendants control the price and competition in the market for such part of trade or commerce as they are charged with monopolizing. It is not always necessary to find a specific intent to find that an antitrust law has been violated. It is sufficient that a restraint of trade or monopoly results as the consequence of a defendant's conduct or business arrangements. To require a greater showing would cripple the Act. No monopolist monopolizes unconscious of what he is doing. Specific intent in the sense in which the common law used the term is necessary only where the acts fall short of the results condemned by the Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN27[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

In determining the issues of monopolization and intent to monopolize, the evidence must be viewed as a whole. Even though the proof as to each of the specific acts may be insufficient in itself to establish wrongful use of monopoly power, the jury must look at the "whole picture," weigh the contradictory evidence and inferences, and draw the ultimate conclusion as to the facts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Collectives & Cooperatives > Capper-Volstead Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Collectives & Cooperatives > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN28[] Collectives & Cooperatives, Capper-Volstead Act

Having held erroneous one theory of liability upon which the general verdict may have rested, it is unnecessary to explore the legality of the other theories.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Collectives & Cooperatives > General Overview

HN29[] Exemptions & Immunities, Collectives & Cooperatives

Under § 1 of the Capper-Volstead Act, 12,000 orange growers are in practical and legal effect one "organization" or "association" even though formally organized into three separate legal entities.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Collectives & Cooperatives > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Cooperatives > Member Duties & Liabilities

Business & Corporate Law > Cooperatives > General Overview

HN30[] Exemptions & Immunities, Collectives & Cooperatives

The language of the Capper-Volstead Act (Act) is specific in permitting concerted efforts by farmers in the processing, preparing for market, and marketing of their products. A cooperative of orange growers numbering 11,000 members is a type of cooperative that would find "definite legalization" under the legislation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Collectives & Cooperatives > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN31[] Exemptions & Immunities, Collectives & Cooperatives

That the packing is done by local associations, the advertising, sales, and traffic by divisions of the area association, and the processing by separate organizations does not preclude 12,000 orange growers from being considered one organization or association for purposes of the Clayton and Capper-Volstead Acts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Collectives & Cooperatives > General Overview

HN32[] Exemptions & Immunities, Collectives & Cooperatives

For purposes of the Capper-Volstead Act, it is immaterial whether every member of the association is a natural person or a corporation. For example, the owner or operator of a dairy is a dairyman, whether he personally works on his dairy or has the work done by employees. So, too, the owner of a farm may be regarded as a farmer even though he devotes the major portion of his activities to other pursuits.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Collectives & Cooperatives > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN33[] Exemptions & Immunities, Collectives & Cooperatives

1 U.S.C.S. § 1 provides that in determining the meaning of any Act of Congress, unless the context indicates otherwise, the words "person" and "whoever" includes corporations as well as individuals.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Collectives & Cooperatives > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN34[] Exemptions & Immunities, Collectives & Cooperatives

Nothing in the context of the Capper-Volstead Act (Act) indicates that a corporation would not be considered a person within the meaning of the Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Collectives & Cooperatives > General Overview

HN35[] Exemptions & Immunities, Collectives & Cooperatives

Associations organized under the Capper-Volstead Act (Act), 7 U.S.C.S. § 291, may make the necessary contracts and agreements to effect the purposes of the Act, i. e., collectively processing, preparing for market, handling, and marketing their products.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Collectives & Cooperatives > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Governments > Agriculture & Food > Product Promotions

HN36[] Exemptions & Immunities, Collectives & Cooperatives

Agricultural producers may unite in preparing for market and in marketing their products, and may make the contracts which are necessary for that collaboration, but they are not authorized to conspire with others in restraint of trade.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Collectives & Cooperatives > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN37[] Sherman Act, Claims

If the allegations of the complaint charge anticompetitive activities which are so far outside the "legitimate objects" of a cooperative (e.g., the object of the conspiracy or combination was to eliminate a competitor), then, if proved, they would constitute clear violations of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Collectives & Cooperatives > Capper-Volstead Act

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Leave of Court

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Collectives & Cooperatives > General Overview

HN38[] Collectives & Cooperatives, Capper-Volstead Act

If independent contracts with agency associations are for the legitimate objects of processing and marketing, then the defendant cooperative could have entered into these contracts with separate organizations. The mere fact that agency associations constitute a "class" of membership does not change the effect of the agency agreements or destroy the exempt status of the entire association under the Capper-Volstead Act.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Supplemental Pleadings

HN39[] Pleadings, Amendment of Pleadings

Where there is a good cause of action stated in the original bill, a supplemental bill setting up facts subsequently occurring which justifies other or further relief is proper. If the original decree in the trial court had not been entered, this supplemental petition would simplify the controversy. We think this procedure is equally applicable after remand for further proceedings.

Judges: [1] Jertberg and Ely, Circuit Judges, and Jameson, District Judge. Ely, Circuit Judge, dissenting in part.

Opinion by: JAMESON

Opinion

[*451] JAMESON, District Judge:

This is an action seeking treble damages under section 4 of the Clayton Act HN1[] (15 U.S.C. § 15) [1] [2] for alleged monopoly and attempt to monopolize in violation of sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act HN2[] (15

---

[1] 15 U.S.C. § 15 provides:

"Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides or is found or has an agent, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee."

U.S.C. §§ 1, 2). [2] The district court granted the defendant's motion for a directed verdict at the close of the plaintiff's case. [3]

[3] Plaintiff (appellant), Case-Swayne, Inc., is engaged in the manufacture of single strength juices (canned orange juice and blends of orange juice with other fruit juice) as an independent operator. Defendant (appellee), Sunkist Growers, Inc., is an association of citrus producers. [4] It has as its base 12,000 citrus growers in Southern California and Arizona. The growers are organized into local associations which operate packing houses. The associations in turn are grouped into district exchanges and representatives from the exchanges make up the governing board of Sunkist. The Sunkist organization handles its members' fruit in effect from tree to store.

[4] Appellant contends that the district court erred (1) in granting the defendant's motion for a directed verdict; and (2) in ruling that Sunkist was organized in conformance with section 1 of the Capper-Volstead Act [5] [5] and therefore could not be held in violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act for conspiracy to restrain and monopolize trade in product oranges. If Sunkist Growers, Inc., was in fact organized as an agricultural cooperative association pursuant to the Capper-Volstead Act, as the district court found, any interorganizational dealings among the various agricultural cooperative associations are immune from the conspiracy provisions of section [*452] 1 of the Sherman Act; [6] but Sunkist may still be found liable under section 2 of the Sherman Act for wrongful use of monopoly power and attempt to monopolize. [7] The question presented under the first specification in error is whether the evidence was sufficient for the jury to find that Sunkist wrongfully used monopoly power or attempted to monopolize trade in product oranges.

HN6[] In ruling on a motion for a directed verdict the trial court is required to view the evidence in the light most favorable to the party against whom the motion is made. "On appeal, likewise, the appellate court must consider

---

[2] 15 U.S.C. § 1 provides in part:

> "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal: * * *"
>
> * * *

Section 2 provides in part:

> "Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor * * *."

[3] At the close of plaintiff's case, the defendant moved for dismissal under Rule HN3[] 41(b) F.R. Civ. P. or for a directed verdict under Rule HN4[] 50(a). The court first indicated that it would dismiss pursuant to Rule 41(b), but later concluded that the motion for dismissal was improper and granted defendant's motion for a directed verdict under Rule 50(a).

[4] In addition to Sunkist Growers, Inc., the complaint named Exchange Orange Products Company and Exchange Lemon Products Company as defendants. Subsequently Exchange Orange and Exchange Lemon merged into Sunkist Growers, Inc., which assumed all of the obligations of the merged corporations, and the action was dismissed as to Exchange Orange and Exchange Lemon.

[5] Section 1 of the Capper-Volstead Act HN5[] (7 U.S.C. § 291) provides that, "Persons engaged in the production of agricultural products as farmers, planters, ranchmen, nut or fruit growers may act together in associations, corporate or otherwise, with or without capital stock, in collectively processing, preparing for market, handling, and marketing in interstate and foreign commerce, such products of persons so engaged. Such associations may have marketing agencies in common; and such associations and their members may make the necessary contracts and agreements to effect such purposes: * * *"

[6] See Sunkist Growers, Inc. v. Winckler & Smith Citrus Products Co., 1962, 370 U.S. 19, 82 S. Ct. 1130, 8 L. Ed. 2d 305.

[7] See Maryland & Virginia Milk Producers Ass'n, Inc. v. United States, 1960, 362 U.S. 458, 80 S. Ct. 847, 4 L. Ed. 2d 880; Sunkist Growers, Inc. v. Winckler & Smith Citrus Products Co., supra.

the evidence in its strongest light in favor of the party against whom the motion * * * was made, and must give him the advantage of every fair and reasonable intendment that the evidence can justify". 5 Moore's Federal Practice 2316 (2d ed. 1951). This is true "even though contrary inferences might reasonably be drawn". Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide, 1962, 370 U.S. 690, 696, 82 S. Ct. 1404, 8 L. Ed. 2d 777. [6]

Sunkist controlled approximately 70% of all oranges produced in Southern California and Arizona, and approximately 67% of the oranges diverted to product use. Product or "excess" oranges are those not sold as fresh fruit. They are used to make various orange products and are the only kind used by plaintiff in its business. On a national basis Sunkist controlled 6 to 7% of the total production.

Other small cooperatives controlled for their own use approximately 18% of the oranges grown in Southern California and Arizona. The balance of the oranges, approximately 12%, represented those grown by independent growers and available to independent manufacturers.

Additional facts set forth in the order granting defendant's motion for directed verdict include the following: [8]

(1) Prior to the development of the citrus juice industry there was no market for fruit not required by the fresh fruit market, and the remainder of the fruit, then called "culls", was destroyed by the packing houses. With the development of the citrus juice industry, the demand for culls, now designated "excess fruit", could be sold to processors to convert into juice and other by-products.

(2) At the beginning [7] of its processing activity plaintiff had no difficulty in obtaining at a reasonable price sufficient fruit for its needs. When it was demonstrated that conversion of excess fruit into juice and other citrus by-products was profitable, Sunkist decided to process its own fruit and for that purpose organized Exchange Orange Products Company and Exchange Lemon Products Company.

(3) Fruit not so processed was sold to independent processors, including plaintiff. Sunkist had excess fruit available for sale to independent processors only when it was unable to process its own fruit. For several years Sunkist sold its excess fruit to independent processors by a bid system. All independent processors, including plaintiff, were invited to present bids for fruit to be sold.

(4) As time went on and as Exchange Orange and Exchange Lemon developed processing capabilities, more and more excess fruit from Sunkist packing houses was channeled to Exchange Orange and Exchange Lemon until, at the present time, practically no Sunkist fruit is sold to independent processors.

[*453] (5) Plaintiff attempted to obtain from other mutual citrus associations its requirement of fruit to process, only [8] to find that such associations had entered into individual contracts with other processors; hence plaintiff was able to obtain very little fruit supply from mutual associations.

(6) Approximately 12,000 citrus fruit growers annually signed contracts with Sunkist agreeing to sell fruit through the Sunkist organization. The contracts provided that if a grower did not abide by his contract, sanctions might be imposed. Occasionally a grower failed to sell his fruit to Sunkist, and sanctions were imposed by the Sunkist organization.

(7) Sunkist trade-mark or trade name was a valuable asset, and defendant had spent large sums in establishing its trade-mark or trade name.

(8) Sunkist employees observed operations of member growers to make certain that the growers handled their crops through the Sunkist organization and if it was discovered that a member grower sold fruit contrary to his contract, a report was made to Sunkist and, in certain instances, penalties were imposed upon the violating grower.

---

[8] All of the facts are substantially in the language of the district court, although they do not appear in the court's order in the same sequence.

(9) The Department of Agriculture, pursuant to the school lunch program, requested bids for single strength orange juice. One year Sunkist bid but did not receive the contract and another [9] year, Sunkist bid and was awarded the contract.

(10) Sunkist made a large profit from sale of citrus fruit.

(11) The great majority of citrus grown in Southern California and Arizona goes into the fresh fruit market. The greater amount of oranges grown in Florida goes into the citrus products market. Fresh fruit from California, Arizona and Florida compete on the eastern and foreign markets.

(12) It was possible for processors in Florida to make single strength orange juice, can and ship it to California, and sell it at the same price as (or at a price lower than) the Southern California-Arizona produced juice. Florida processors of single strength orange juice could assimilate transportation costs from Florida to California and sell their product in competition with single strength orange juice made within the Southern California-Arizona area. This was possible because of the lower price for which Florida fruit could be purchased.

(13) The price paid for Florida oranges was the dominant factor in determining the price for which single strength orange juice could be sold to the ultimate consumer.

(14) There is also competition between single strength orange juice and orange [10] juice concentrates. Neither of the parties is a producer of concentrated or frozen juice.

The alleged violations of the Sherman Act arise out of "Sunkist's dominant control of oranges grown in Arizona and California together with its vertical integration and dual distribution with respect to oranges designated for product use . . .". More particularly, plaintiff complains that it was unable to purchase oranges for product use from Sunkist at a price that would enable it to compete with canned juice shipped in from Florida. [9]

The district court's [11] granting of the directed verdict was premised upon the conclusion that the "relevant market" was national rather than limited to California-Arizona, and that in light of this plaintiff had not shown evidence of an illegal monopoly. [10]

[*454] The cases uniformly hold that "a party has monopoly power if it has over 'any part of the trade or commerce among the several states', a power of controlling prices or unreasonably restricting competition". United States v. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 1956, 351 U.S. 377, 389, 76 S. Ct. 994, 100 L. Ed. 1264. [12] HN8[] In determining whether a party has monopoly power it is first essential to define the "relevant market".

This court has held that HN9[] determination of the relevant market, "both as respects products and as concerns geographical area" is a "necessary step precedent to determining whether within that market there was a probability" of violation of section 7 of the Clayton Act. Crown Zellerbach Corporation v. F.T.C., 9th Cir. 1961, 296 F.2d 800, 804, (cert. denied (1962)) 370 U.S. 937, 82 S. Ct. 1581, 8 L. Ed. 2d 807. While Crown Zellerbach involved a violation of the Clayton Act with respect to corporate acquisitions, it is clear that the same determination must be made regarding the relevant market in actions for violation of section 2 of the Sherman Act. United States v. du Pont & Co., supra.

[9] This is not a complete statement of the alleged monopolistic acts of Sunkist, but it is the act upon which plaintiff places the most emphasis.

[10] The district court initially was of the opinion that the relevant market was Southern California and Arizona, but concluded, when all of the evidence was presented, that the relevant market for product oranges was a national market, "and that whatever happened in Florida directly affected prices in California and vice versa. Prices paid for oranges in California depended substantially upon the price for which oranges were sold in Florida."

HN7[]

In the recent case of United States v. Grinnell Corp., 1966, 384 U.S. 563, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698, a civil suit for alleged violations of section 2 of the Sherman [13] Act, the Court said in part:

> "* * * That * * * case arose HN10[] under § 7 of the Clayton Act where the question was whether the effect of a merger 'in any line of commerce' may be 'substantially to lessen competition.' We see no reason to differentiate between 'line' of commerce in the context of the Clayton Act and 'part' of commerce for purposes of the Sherman Act." (384 U.S. at 573).

HN11[] In determining the "relevant market" applicable in this case, it seems advisable first to analyze separately the factors involved in both the relevant product market and the relevant geographic market.

Relevant Product Market

United States v. du Pont de Nemours & Co., supra, relied upon by the district court in granting Sunkist's motion for a directed verdict, promulgated the test of "reasonable interchangeability" to determine the relevant product market. The Government contended that cellophane was the relevant product market. The Court assumed that [14] if this were true, du Pont would have monopoly power over that market. The Court found, however, that cellophane was "reasonably interchangeable" with other flexible wrappings, and that the relevant product market accordingly was "flexible packaging materials" rather than cellophane alone.

HN12[] The rule of "reasonable interchangeability" has been refined and modified in subsequent cases. In particular, the courts have recognized that there may be an outer market and one or more inner submarkets within which competitive effects are to be appraised, i.e. a relevant submarket may constitute the product market for antitrust purposes.

In Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 1962, 370 U.S. 294, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510, involving a merger found to be in violation of section 7 of the Clayton Act, the Court said in part:

> "The HN13[] 'area of effective competition' must be determined by reference to a product market (the 'line of commerce') and a geographic market (the 'section of the [15] country').
>
> "The Product Market.
>
> "The HN14[] outer boundaries of a product market are determined by the reasonable interchangeability of use or the cross-elasticity of demand between the product itself and substitutes for it. However, within this broad market, well-defined submarkets may exist which, in themselves, constitute product markets for antitrust purposes. (citation) The boundaries of such a submarket may be determined by examining such practical indicia as industry or public recognition of the submarket as a separate economic entity, [*455] the product's peculiar characteristics and uses, unique production facilities, distinct customers, distinct prices, sensitivity to price changes, and specialized vendors." (370 U.S. at 324-5.)

The rule of Brown Shoe was expressly applied to cases arising under section 2 of the Sherman Act in the recent case of United States v. Grinnell Corporation, supra, where the Court said:

> "In § HN15[] 2 cases under [16] the Sherman Act, as in § 7 cases under the Clayton Act, Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 325, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510, there may be submarkets that are separate economic entities." (384 U.S. at 573.)

Relevant Geographic Market

In Brown Shoe, supra, HN16[] the Court also set forth criteria to be used in determination of the geographic market:

> "The Geographic Market.

> "The criteria to be used in determining the appropriate geographic market are essentially similar to those used to determine the relevant product market. See S. Rep. No. 1775, 81st Cong. 2d Sess. 5-6; United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 353 U.S. 586, 593, 1 L. Ed. 2d 1057, 77 S. Ct. 872. Moreover, just as a product submarket may have § 7 significance as the proper 'line of commerce, ' so may a geographic submarket be considered the appropriate 'section of the country.' Congress prescribed a pragmatic, factual approach to the definition of the relevant market and not a formal, legalistic one. The geographic market [17] selected must, therefore, both 'correspond to the commercial realities' of the industry and be economically significant. Thus, although the geographic market in some instances may encompass the entire Nation, under other circumstances it may be as small as a single metropolitan area." (370 U.S. at 336-7).

In the recent case of United States v. Pabst Brewing Company, et al., 1966, 384 U.S. 546, 552, 16 L. Ed. 2d 765, 86 S. Ct. 1665, involving the acquisition in 1958 by Pabst Brewing Company of Blatz's Brewing Company, the Court held that the "evidence as to the probable effect of the merger on competition in Wisconsin, in the three-state area (Wisconsin, Illinois and Michigan), and in the entire country was amply sufficient to show a violation of § 7 (of the Clayton Act as amended by the Celler-Kefauver Anti-Merger Amendment) [11] in each and all of these three areas". In 1957, prior to the merger, the two companies had combined sales which accounted for 23.95% of the beer sales in Wisconsin, 11.32% of the sales in the three-state area, and 4.49% of the sales throughout the country.

[18] The Court was unanimous in holding that the district court erred in dismissing the complaint. Mr. Justice Harlan (joined by Mr. Justice Stewart) in a concurring opinion agreed with the district court that viewing the entire continental United States as a relevant market, the evidence did not sustain the Government's contention that the acquisition might substantially lessen competition. They agreed with the majority opinion, however, as did Mr. Justice Fortas, that the Government's evidence was sufficient to establish prima facie that Wisconsin and the tri-state area were proper "sections of the country" in which to measure the probable effects of the acquisition.

In his concurring opinion, Mr. Justice Harlan said in pertinent part:

> "The HN17[] appropriate geographic area in which to examine the effects of an acquisition is an area in which the parties to the merger or acquisition compete, and around which there exist economic barriers that significantly impede the entry of new competitors. [*456] * * *" (384 U.S. at 556-7).

[19] HN18[] Whether a geographical location is or is not an "area of effective competition" is a question of fact in each case. United States v. Columbia Pictures Corporation, S.D.N.Y., 1960, 189 F. Supp. 153, 192. The area may be limited by differences in costs of production and transportation. Erie Sand & Gravel Co. v. F.T.C., 3 Cir. 1961, 291 F.2d 279, 281. "A competitive price disadvantage arising from transportation costs is an important factor in determining the scope of a relevant market ". United States v. Penn-Olin Chemical Company, D. Del., 1963, 217 F. Supp. 110, 120; American Crystal Sugar Co. v. Cuban-American Sugar Co., S.D.N.Y., 1957, 152 F. Supp. 387, 398, Aff'd, 2 Cir. 1958, 259 F.2d 524.

HN19[] It seems clear from the decided cases that (1) while the outer limits of the market may be determined by the competition of interchangeable products, (2) there may be a well-defined submarket which constitutes the relevant market for antitrust purposes, which (3) must correspond [20] to the commercial realities of the industry, (4) is affected by price disadvantages due to transportation costs, (5) is affected by availability of a buyer to supply and existence of economic areas which significantly impede competition, (6) is determined in part with relation to the parties affected in the suit, and (7) is a question of fact in the particular case.

We come now to an application of the criteria for determining both relevant product market and relevant geographic market to the facts in this case. In advance of trial it was the position of the trial court, as set forth in its pretrial order, that the relevant product market was product oranges and the relevant geographic market Southern California and Arizona. At the close of plaintiff's case, the court was persuaded that the relevant product market included orange juices and concentrates and that the relevant geographic market was national rather than limited to Southern California and Arizona. [12]

---

[11] 38 Stat. 731, as amended, 64 Stat. 1125, 15 U.S.C. § 18 (1964 ed.).

[21] It is clear from the evidence that orange products (single strength juice and frozen concentrates) were sold in a national market. Oranges could be processed in Florida, and the juice shipped to California and sold competitively with juice processed in California from California [*457] oranges. Sunkist held a relatively small part of this national market and controlled neither quantity nor price.

On the other hand, it is equally clear that it was uneconomical for producers of orange products to buy their product oranges in Florida or elsewhere than in the Southern California-Arizona area. Sunkist controlled 70% of all oranges grown in this area and 67% of the product oranges. A substantial portion of the remaining product was unavailable to Case-Swayne.

Appellee does not question these facts, but contends that the relevant geographic market for product oranges was national on the theory that the product orange supply is tied irrevocably to orange product price. Appellee argues that product oranges "have value only because they can be converted into a product which has value," and that "the value of product oranges cannot exceed that which will permit them to be [22] processed into products and then compete in a national products market dominated by Florida."

HN20[] While product oranges may have little, if any, value per se, the same is true of many raw products. The market for raw products is among the processors rather than the ultimate consumer. We see no reason why the raw product may not be the relevant product market, even though it has little value in its raw state. Moreover, it is clear from the recent case of United States v. Pabst Brewing Company, supra, that even as to the processed product, the relevant market may at the same time be national, regional, and statewide in area. [13]

[23] While Sunkist could not control the supply or price of canned juices because of competition from Florida in these products, there was substantial evidence that it did control the supply of product oranges from which juice was made in California and Arizona. HN21[] In determining the relevant geographic market, a proper test is the "

---

[12] In ruling on defendant's motion for dismissal or a directed verdict, following argument by counsel, the court said:

> "I was of the opinion that Florida was not a part of the market; that it was to be limited to Southern California and Arizona. I was of the opinion and still am of the opinion that it would certainly be uneconomical to try to ship fresh fruit from Florida or from Texas to California for the purpose of being converted into orange juice. So I have to look first to what is the competition in this case, what are the competitive factors?
>
> "Well, if we include Florida as part of the market, then of course Sunkist does not have a dominant place in this picture at all. It is a very minor part of the conversion of fresh fruit into orange juice, if we consider Florida as a part of the market.
>
> "Then I thought we were talking about product oranges, the monopoly of product oranges. But it seems to me that we now are talking about product oranges, but also about the juice squeezed from the product oranges. I don't know how you can say that there is a monopoly on product oranges without saying there is a monopoly on the juice that is squeezed from product oranges." (Rep. Tr. 1378:1-20).
>
> "So it seems to me that when we talk about competition, we are going to talk about competition not only of the fruit before it is squeezed, but the product after the squeezing, that is the orange juice.
>
> "Well, if you consider it in that light, then there is lots of competition on the shelves of Southern California, because the testimony is that the Florida producers, the Florida producers of orange juice, that is, those who squeeze the oranges to make orange juice in Florida, can ship it to Los Angeles, pay the shipping charges, and undersell the California product.
>
> "So from these two standpoints, that is talking about competition, what is competition -- competition is the competition in the open marketplace." (Rep. Tr. 1379:9-22).

[13] We concluded in Sunkist Growers, Inc. v. Winckler & Smith Citrus Prod. Co., 9 Cir. 1960, 284 F.2d 1, that the relevant market area for oranges and by-products, including fruits and juices, was the California-Arizona area, although it does not appear that the parties in that case argued or the court considered the distinction between product oranges and orange products or any contention that the market was national.

geographic structure of supplier-customer relations. " United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, et al., 1963, 374 U.S. 321, 357, 83 S. Ct. 1715, 10 L. Ed. 2d 915. The relevant market is determined in part by the market area "to which the purchaser can practicably turn for supplies." Tampa Electric Co. v. National Coal Co., 1961, 365 U.S. 320, 327, 81 S. Ct. 623, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580. [14] There is no question that Case-Swayne and other users of product oranges could not as a practical matter obtain product oranges from suppliers outside California and Arizona.

[24] Moreover, even though the price of product oranges in Florida would influence the price of product oranges in California, there was evidence from which the jury might find that Sunkist by reason of its control of the supply also as a practical matter controlled the price. [15] That is particularly true if it [*458] should be found that Sunkist refused to sell to plaintiff and other independent buyers at any price.

[25] As Mr. Justice Fortas said in his dissenting opinion [16] in the recent case of United States v. Grinnell Corporation, supra, "The HN22[] central issue is where does a potential buyer look for potential suppliers of the service -- what is the geographical area in which the buyer has, or, in the absence of monopoly, would have, a real choice as to price and alternative facilities? This depends upon the facts of the market place, taking into account such economic factors as the distance over which supplies and services may be feasibly furnished, consistently with cost and functional efficiency." (384 U.S. at 589).

We conclude that there was evidence from which the jury might properly find that the relevant product market was product oranges and the [26] relevant geographic market Southern California-Arizona.

Evidence of Wrongful Use of Monopoly Power and Attempt to Monopolize

If the jury should find that Southern California and Arizona was the relevant market, there was sufficient evidence from which the jury could find further that Sunkist engaged in monopolistic practices or an attempt to monopolize proscribed by section 2 of the Sherman Act.

As the Court said in United States v. Grinnell Corp., supra:

> "The HN23[] offense of monopoly under § 2 of the Sherman Act has two elements: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident."
> * * *
>
> "In United States v. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 391, 100 L. Ed. 1264, 76 S. Ct. 994, we defined HN24[] monopoly power as 'the power to control prices or exclude competition. [27] ' The existence of

---

[14] See also Standard Oil Co. of California v. United States, 1945 [1949], 337 U.S. 293, 299 note 5, 93 L. Ed. 1371, 69 S. Ct. 1051.

[15] Morgan Ward, who handled the oranges of most of the independent growers, testified in pertinent part:

> "Q. Is it your opinion, then, that the market conditions with respect to Florida product oranges have more effect on the price of product oranges in California than any one factor?
>
> "A. They have effect on the over-all United States. Then those who set prices on the fruit in California look at what is going on all over the United States, and at that time the prices were set in California by the leading growers. Sunkist set it, using all those things to do it, I assume. But the price of by-products in this state has ever since I have been in the business since 1934, been set by Sunkist. At one time it was called California Fruit Growers Exchange, and Sunkist at this time." (Rep. Tr. 392:1-14).

[16] Justices Fortas, Stewart and Harlan would have remanded for a "new determination" of the basic issue of "the definition of the relevant market".

> such power ordinarily may be inferred from the predominant share of the market. In American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 797, 90 L. Ed. 1575, 66 S. Ct. 1125, we said that 'over two-thirds of the entire domestic field of cigarettes and . . .; over 80 per cent of the field of comparable cigarettes' constituted 'a substantial monopoly.'" (384 U.S. at 570-1).

It is clear that Sunkist had possession of monopoly power in the relevant market, if that market is found to be the Southern California-Arizona area.

It is true, as appellee contends, that HN25[] size alone does not constitute an offense under the Sherman Act; nor does the mere possession of monopoly power. It is the wrongful use and exercise of that power which is proscribed by section 2 of the Act.

However, HN26[] the ultimate consideration in determining whether an alleged monopolist violates section 2 of the Sherman Act is "whether the defendants control the price and competition [28] in the market for such part of trade or commerce as they are charged with monopolizing ". United States v. du Pont de Nemours & Co., supra, 351 U.S. at 380. It is not always necessary to find a specific intent to find that an antitrust law has been violated. "It is sufficient that a restraint of trade or monopoly results as the consequence of a defendant's conduct [*459] or business arrangements (citing cases). To require a greater showing would cripple the Act. As stated in United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F.2d 416, 432 (2nd Cir. 1945), 'no monopolist monopolizes unconscious of what he is doing.' Specific intent in the sense in which the common law used the term is necessary only where the acts fall short of the results condemned by the Act." United States v. Griffith, 1948, 334 U.S. 100, 105, 68 S. Ct. 941, 92 L. Ed. 1236.

Appellant contends that Sunkist wrongfully exercised its monopoly power through (1) boycotting appellant by refusing to sell appellant product oranges while selling to other processors; (2) preventing TreeSweet from delivering oranges TreeSweet had committed to appellant; (3) controlling orange prices; [29] and (4) eliminating competitors (or as with appellant, limiting their profits) by maintaining high prices for oranges or reducing supply.

The same acts are relied upon in support of appellant's contention that Sunkist intentionally attempted to monopolize the trade in product oranges in the relevant market. Appellant relies upon additional evidence of such intent in Sunkist's (1) admitted purpose to control all the oranges it could get and utilize all of them in its own manufacturing facilities; (2) preventing Placentia Orange Distributors from fulfilling its promise to sell appellant 5,000 tons of oranges in 1957; (3) policing the Sunkist system to punish violators of the Sunkist "restrictive tying contracts"; (4) wrongful use of dual distribution by lowering single strength juice prices after competing manufacturers had purchased product oranges at prices established by Sunkist; (5) use of consignment contracts and its low 1956 bid (compared with its 1955 bid) to the Department of Agriculture.

Appellee recognizes in its brief that "the key determination by the trial court was that the appellant's evidence * * * established the fact that the relevant market for product oranges [30] is a national market", but contends further that "under each of the tests which the courts have applied to determine whether or not a monopoly exists, the appellant's evidence conclusively established that there was no monopoly", and that with respect to each of the acts and incidents upon which appellant relies, Sunkist's conduct was "legitimate, cooperative activity and not undertaken in an unlawful manner or for an unlawful purpose". There is substantial evidence to support appellee's denial of each of the alleged acts of monopoly.

HN27[] In determining the issues of monopolization and intent to monopolize, however, the evidence must be viewed as a whole. Even though the proof as to each of the specific acts may be insufficient in itself to establish wrongful use of monopoly power, the jury must look at the "whole picture", weigh the contradictory evidence and inferences and draw the "ultimate conclusion as to the facts". See Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide and Carbon Corp., supra, 370 U.S. at 699-701, and cases there cited.

As noted supra, in ruling on the directed [31] verdict this court must give appellant "the advantage of every fair and reasonable intendment that the evidence can justify", and this is true "even though contrary inferences might reasonably be drawn". From a review of the record we conclude that there was sufficient evidence to submit to the jury the question of whether Sunkist wrongfully exercised its monopoly power and intentionally attempted to monopolize the trade in product oranges. We do not find that appellant has established any of the alleged acts of monopoly -- only that viewing the evidence as a whole, it has made a prima facie case for the jury. [17]

[32] [*460] Section 1 of the Capper-Volstead Act

Appellant contends that Sunkist is not a person "engaged in the production of agricultural products" under Section 1 of the Capper-Volstead Act because only 80.12% of its members are associations composed of fruit growers, while 4.97% are corporate growers, and 14.91% are private profit-making corporations, individuals and partnerships which market through Sunkist the oranges they have purchased from growers. [18]

[33] The district court concluded, and we think correctly, that under the decision of the Supreme Court in Sunkist Growers, Inc. v. Winckler & Smith Co., supra, Sunkist Growers, Inc., is a cooperative organized in compliance with Section 1 of the Capper-Volstead Act. It is true, as appellant argues, that this issue was not specifically raised in the Winckler case, but the Court did describe the Sunkist organization in detail. This was prior to the merger with Exchange Orange and Exchange Lemon, but the Court concluded that HN29[] the 12,000 growers were "in practical effect and in the contemplation of the statutes one 'organization' or 'association' even though * * * formally organized * * * into three separate legal entities". 370 U.S. at 29. The Court also said in pertinent part:

> "The HN30[] language of the Capper-Volstead Act is specific in permitting concerted efforts by farmers in the processing, preparing for market, and marketing of their products. And the legislative [34] history of the Acts reveals several references to the Sunkist organization -- then called the California Fruit Growers Exchange and numbering 11,000 members -- including a suggestion by Senator Capper that this was a type of cooperative that would find 'definite legalization' under the legislation. * * *
>
> "* * * HN31[] That the packing is done by local associations, the advertising, sales, and traffic by divisions of the area association, and the processing by separate organizations does not in our opinion preclude these growers from being considered one organization or association for purposes of the Clayton and Capper-Volstead Acts." 370 U.S. at 28-29

With respect to appellant's contention that Sunkist is not a qualified cooperative under Capper-Volstead by reason of its "corporate growers", this [*461] question was raised in the district court in United States v. Maryland & Virginia Milk Producers Ass'n, D.D.C. 1958, 167 F. Supp. 45, aff'd in part, reversed in part on other grounds, 362 U.S. 458, 80 S. Ct. 847, 4 L. Ed. 2d 880. In [35] that case the Government urged that the words "dairymen" and

---

[17] In Sunkist Growers, Inc. v. Winckler & Smith Citrus Products Co., supra, the plaintiff relied upon some of the acts of monopoly here alleged. We upheld the submission of the case to the jury and the instructions given by the trial court. The Supreme Court granted certiorari limited to the issue of the immunity of interorganizational dealings among the three cooperatives from the conspiracy provisions of the antitrust law, and held that as a Capper-Volstead cooperative Sunkist was immune and that the case was erroneously submitted to the jury on the theory of a conspiracy under section 1 of the Act. HN28[] Having held "erroneous one theory of liability upon which the general verdict may have rested * * * it is unnecessary * * * to explore the legality of the other theories". The Court said further that its decision "in no way detracts from earlier cases holding agricultural cooperatives liable for * * * monopolization", citing Maryland & Virginia Milk Producers Ass'n v. United States, supra. Sunkist Growers, Inc. v. Winckler & Smith Citrus Products Co., 370 U.S. at 20-30.

[18] A stipulation of the parties defining "association" in the Sunkist system recites that the members are classified into three major groups: (1) cooperative associations (80.12% by number and 82.34% by volume), (2) corporate growers (4.97% by number and 4.72% by volume), and (3) agency associations (14.91% by number and 12.94% by volume). The stipulation reads in part: "The Agency Association is normally a private corporation which owns and operates packing house facilities * * *. Such Agency Associations do not qualify as, nor do they claim to be, cooperative associations under section 1 of the Capper-Volstead Act. * * * The Agency Association does not itself participate in either the gain or loss involved in marketing fruit through Sunkist beyond the recovery of its costs and fixed fee for packing. Such Agency Association furnishes its facilities and services on an independent contract basis, wholly unrelated to the net returns from the sale of the product handled".

"farmers" should be restricted to natural persons. The district court held that HN32[] it was immaterial "whether every member of the association is a natural person or a corporation." [19]

The Supreme Court did not comment on this portion of the district court's opinion, although it considered at length the scope of the immunity granted by Capper-Volstead. It is clear from the district court's opinion that the cooperative included corporate growers. It seems likely that this fact would have been considered by the Supreme [36] Court if there were any question regarding the status of the association as a qualified cooperative by reason of the corporate growers.

HN33[] 1 U.S.C. § 1 provides that in "determining the meaning of any Act * * * of Congress, unless the context indicates otherwise * * * the words 'person' and 'whoever' includes corporations * * * as well as individuals * * *".

We find HN34[] nothing in the context of the Capper-Volstead Act to indicate that a corporation would not be considered a person within the meaning of the Act.

Does the fact that the so-called agency associations (comprising 14.91% by number and 12.94% by volume) constitute a "class" of membership prevent Sunkist from being a "person engaged in the production of agricultural products" under section 1 of the Act? It will be noted from the stipulation of the parties (note 18) that the agency associations furnish their facilities and services on an independent contract basis, and that they do not participate in either gain [37] or loss involved in marketing fruit through Sunkist. In other words, the growers receive full benefit of cooperative marketing through the agencies.

HN35[] Associations organized under the Capper-Volstead Act "may make the necessary contracts and agreements to effect" the purposes of the Act, i. e., "collectively processing, preparing for market, handling, and marketing" their products. (7 U.S.C. § 291). The agency associations supply services which the growers require (packing house facilities) in handling and marketing their products. The fact that the "packing is done by local associations * * * and the processing by separate organizations" does not preclude the growers from being considered one association for purposes of the Capper-Volstead Act. Sunkist Growers, Inc. v. Winckler & Smith Co. supra.

This is not a case where the agreement in question goes beyond the legitimate objects of processing and marketing. See e.g. United States v. Borden Co., 1939, 308 U.S. 188, 60 S. Ct. 182, 84 L. Ed. 181. The Court there recognized that [38] HN36[] agricultural producers "may unite in preparing for market and in marketing their products", and may "make the contracts which are necessary for that collaboration", but they are not authorized to conspire with others in restraint of trade. The Court said in part:

> "In this instance, the conspiracy charged is not that of merely forming a collective association of producers to market their products but a conspiracy, or conspiracies, with major distributors and their allied groups, with labor officials, municipal officials, and others, in order to maintain artificial and noncompetitive prices to be paid to all producers for all fluid milk produced in Illinois * * * and also to [*462] control 'the supply of fluid milk permitted to be brought to Chicago'." 308 U.S. at 205.

In Maryland & Virginia Milk Producers Association v. United States, supra, the court pointed out that HN37[] the object of the conspiracy or combination was to eliminate a competitor and that the "allegations of the complaint * [39] * * charge anticompetitive activities which are so far outside the 'legitimate objects' of a cooperative that, if proved, they would constitute clear violations of § 2 of the Sherman Act * * *." 362 U.S. at 468. The Court said further:

---

[19] The court said further:

> "* * * The owner or operator of a dairy is a dairyman, whether he personally works on his dairy or has the work done by employees. So, too, the owner of a farm may be regarded as a farmer even though he devotes the major portion of his activities to other pursuits. * * *." 167 F. Supp. at 49.

> "The Embassy assets the Association acquired are useful in processing and marketing milk, and we may assume, as it is contended, that their purchase simply for business use, without more, often would be permitted and would be lawful under the Capper-Volstead Act. * * * The contract of purchase here, viewed in the context of all the evidence and findings, was not one made merely to advance the Association's own permissible processing and marketing business; it was entered into by both parties, according to the court's findings as we understand them, because of its usefulness as a weapon to restrain and suppress competitors and competition * * *." 362 U.S. at 471-72.

HN38[] The independent contracts with the agency associations were for the legitimate objects of processing and marketing. Under the statute [40] Sunkist could have entered into these contracts "with separate organizations". The mere fact that the agency associations constitute a "class" of membership does not in our opinion change the effect of the agency agreements or destroy the exempt status of the entire association.

Request for Leave to File Second Supplemental Complaint

Appellant next contends that the district court abused its discretion in denying plaintiff's motion to file a second supplemental complaint alleging facts occurring after the filing of the original complaint. In our opinion, upon remand of the case, appellant should be permitted to file the supplemental complaint. As the Court said in Texarkana v. Arkansas Gas Co., 1939, 306 U.S. 188, 59 S. Ct. 448, 83 L. Ed. 598:

> "Where HN39[] there is a good cause of action stated in the original bill, a supplemental bill setting up facts subsequently occurring which justifies other or further relief is proper. If the original decree in the trial court had not been entered, this supplemental petition would simplify the controversy. We think [41] this procedure is equally applicable after remand for further proceedings." 306 U.S. at 203.

Alleged Prejudice and Bias of Trial Judge

Finally appellant contends that the trial judge showed such marked prejudice against appellant that this court should order a new trial before another judge. In our opinion, the record does not support our issuance of the requested order. We are confident that the district court, upon remand and in the proper administration of its own functions, will insure that the retrial is conducted in the necessary atmosphere of total impartiality.

It is ordered that the judgment be reversed and the cause remanded to the district court for a new trial.

Dissent by: ELY (In Part)

Dissent

ELY, Circuit Judge (dissenting in part):

I agree with the result reached by the majority, and I concur in its opinion except for that portion in which it is held that Sunkist falls within the exemption of section 1 of the Capper-Volstead Act, 7 U.S.C. § 291.

The principal reason offered by the majority in support of the view which I question is its asserted belief that the question was settled in Sunkist v. Winckler & Smith Citrus Products Co., 370 U.S. 19, 8 L. [*463] Ed. 2d 305, 82 S. Ct. 1130 (1962). [42] I do not so interpret that decision. The particular issue was not presented to the Supreme Court, and it was not adjudicated. It was apparently conceded by the parties in Winckler, of which the appellant here was not one, that Sunkist was covered by the Capper-Volstead exemption. In the prior opinion of the Court of Appeals, reported at 284 F.2d 1 (9th Cir. 1960), the only discussion of the exemption pertained to its extent, not to whether or not it was applicable. Furthermore, the Supreme Court, in granting certiorari, 368 U.S. 813, 82 S. Ct. 56, 7 L. Ed. 2d 22 (1961), expressly limited its consideration to a single question, namely,

> "Where a group of citrus fruit growers form a cooperative organization for the purpose of collectively processing and marketing their fruit, and carry out those functions through the agency of three cooperative agricultural associations, each of which is basically wholly owned and governed by those growers, and each of which is admittedly entitled to the exemption from the antitrust laws accorded to agricultural cooperatives by the Capper-Volstead Act (7 U.S.C.A., sec. 291) -- is an [43] unlawful conspiracy, combination or agreement established under Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act upon proof only that these growers, through the agency of these three cooperatives, agreed among only themselves with respect to the extent of the division of the function of processing between them or with respect to the price they would charge in the open market for the fruit and the by-products thereof processed and marketed by them?"

Even if the issue had been determined by the Supreme Court in Winckler, the admitted nature of Sunkist's present organizational make-up is such that the exemption should no longer be held properly to apply. The privilege to act together in "exempt" associations is conferred only upon "persons engaged in the production of agricultural products. . . ." 7 U.S.C. § 291. The plain import of the statutory language is that such an association must be composed solely of agricultural producers. Regardless of whether Sunkist was thus composed at the time of the Winckler decision in 1962, as the Supreme Court's order granting certiorari, supra, indicates, it is clear that the composition is no longer the [44] same. In our case, it is conceded that the so-called "agency associations," which comprise almost 15% of the membership of the Sunkist organization, are not growers or producers. [1] The majority, in disregarding the significance of this factor, may have been influenced by the absence of decisions squarely holding that an association must be composed entirely of growers in order to qualify for the exemption. I point out that, while there are no decisions to that effect, there are none to the contrary. The opinions in a number of cases contain language which suggests the conclusion which I see to be plainly required by the statute's terms. Some of this language is as follows:

> "The persons to whom the Capper-Volstead Act applies are defined in § 1 as producers of agricultural products . . . . They are authorized to act together 'in collectively processing, preparing for market, handling, and marketing in interstate and foreign commerce' their products. . . .
>
> [*464] "The right of these agricultural producers thus to unite . . . cannot be deemed to authorize any combination or conspiracy with other persons in restraint of trade that these producers may [45] see fit to devise." United States v. Borden Co., 308 U.S. 188, 204-205, 84 L. Ed. 181, 60 S. Ct. 182 (1939).

> "The chief defense set up by the Association was that, because of its being a cooperative composed exclusively of dairy farmers, § 6 of the Clayton Act and §§ 1 and 2 of the Capper-Volstead Act completely exempted and immunized it . . . . Accordingly the court dismissed the Sherman Act § 2 monopolization charge, where the Association was not alleged to have acted in combination with others, but upheld the right of the Government to go to trial on the Sherman Act § 3 and Clayton Act § 7 charges because they involved alleged activities with the owners of Embassy and other persons who were not agricultural producers." Maryland & Milk Producers Assn. v. United States, 362 U.S. 458, 461-462, 4 L. Ed. 2d 880, 80 S. Ct. 847 (1960).

> "Thus, the full effect of § 6 is that a group of farmers acting together . . . cannot be restrained . . . .

---

[1] In its footnote 18, the majority refers to a portion of a stipulation wherein the parties agreed that the agency associations furnished to Sunkist their "facilities and services on an independent contract basis . . . ." The stipulation does not say that the associations were independent contractors. It recites that they were "members" of the Sunkist system. If the association were truly separate and independent, then that determination should be made, in the first instance, by the District Court. If they were not "members" of the Sunkist system, then, as I see it, the exemption of the Capper-Volstead Act is irrelevant to the issue of the propriety of Sunkist's dealings with them. United States v. Borden Co., supra.

"The Capper-Volstead Act . . . extended § 6 of the Clayton Act exemption to capital stock agricultural cooperatives . . . The general philosophy of both was simply that individual farmers [46] should be given . . . the same unified competitive advantage . . . available to businessmen . . . ." Id., 362 U.S. at 465-466.

"Our decision in no way detracts from earlier cases holding agricultural cooperatives liable for conspiracies with outside groups, United States v. Borden Co., 308 U.S. 188, 84 L. Ed. 181, 60 S. Ct. 182 . . . ." Sunkist Growers, Inc. v. Winckler & Smith Co., 370 U.S. 19, 30, 8 L. Ed. 2d 305, 82 S. Ct. 1130 (1962).

"The Court concludes that a combination between two or more agricultural cooperatives to fix prices of their products is exempt from the antitrust laws provided that no other person that is not such an organization or a member of such a group is a part of the combination." United States v. Maryland Cooperative Milk Pro., 145 F. Supp. 151, 155 (D.D.C. 1956).

"Although the Capper-Volstead Act . . . and the Clayton Act . . . give some privileges to combinations of agricultural producers, a combination of producers and distributors to eliminate competition and fix prices at successive stages in the marketing of an agricultural product is not privileged." United States v. Maryland & Virginia Milk Pro. Ass'n, 85 U.S. App. D.C. 180, 179 F.2d 426, 428 (1949). [47]

"The exemptions are accorded and immunities are conferred on agricultural cooperatives and their activities. When they step outside of their field and conspire with persons who are not producers of agricultural commodities, they are beyond the scope of the exemptions." United States v. Maryland & Virginia Milk Pro. Ass'n, 167 F. Supp. 45, 51-52 (D.D.C. 1958), modified, 362 U.S. 458, 4 L. Ed. 2d 880, 80 S. Ct. 847 (1960).

[48] The persistent theme of the foregoing excerpts is that a cooperative, even though it otherwise qualifies for exemption under the Capper-Volstead Act, forfeits its exemption when it combines with nonproducers. If that is so, then it is logically inconsistent to hold that a cooperative, while composed in part of nonproducers, may yet qualify for the exemption.

United States v. Third Nat'l Bank

United States District Court for the Middle District of Tennessee, Nashville Division

November 22, 1966

Civil Action No. 3849

Reporter

260 F. Supp. 869 *; 1966 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8222 ; 1966 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,934

United States v. Third National Bank of Nashville and Nashville Bank and Trust Company, Defendants, and The Comptroller of the Currency, Intervenor

Core Terms

merger, banking, antitrust, trust company, factors, bank merger, deposits, anticompetitive, effects, convenience, courts, agencies, largest, loans, public interest, concentration, cases, anti trust law, consolidation, outweighed, Sherman Act, managerial, statistics, resources, time of a merger, relevant market, market share, present case, Federal Deposit Insurance Act, consummated

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Banking Law > Federal Acts > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Regulated Industry Mergers

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > Bank Mergers

Banking Law > Commercial Banks > Bank Expansions > General Overview

Banking Law > Commercial Banks > Bank Expansions > Banking Interests

Banking Law > ... > Banking & Finance > Regulators > US Office of the Comptroller of the Currency

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

HN1[] Banking Law, Federal Acts

Under § 18c(5)(B) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, as amended by the Bank Merger Act, 12 U.S.C.S. § 1828(c), the responsible agency shall not approve any proposed merger transaction which shall violate the specified antitrust standards unless it finds that the anticompetitive effects of the proposed transaction are clearly outweighed in the public interest by the probable effect of the transaction in meeting the convenience and needs of the community to be served. In every case, the responsible agency shall take into consideration the financial and managerial resources and future prospects of the existing and proposed institutions, and the convenience and needs of the community to be served.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > Bank Mergers

Banking Law > Federal Acts > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > General Overview

Banking Law > Commercial Banks > Bank Expansions > General Overview

Banking Law > Commercial Banks > Bank Expansions > Banking Interests

Banking Law > ... > Banking & Finance > Regulators > US Office of the Comptroller of the Currency

HN2[] Financial Institutions, Bank Mergers

See § 18c(5)(B) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, as amended by the Bank Merger Act, 12 U.S.C.S. § 1828(c).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > Bank Mergers

Banking Law > ... > Banking & Finance > Regulators > US Office of the Comptroller of the Currency

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Regulated Industry Mergers

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > General Overview

Banking Law > Commercial Banks > Bank Expansions > General Overview

Banking Law > Commercial Banks > Bank Expansions > Banking Interests

Banking Law > Federal Acts > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Remedies

HN3[] Financial Institutions, Bank Mergers

By § 18(c)(7)(B) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, as amended by the Bank Merger Act, 12 U.S.C.S. § 1828(c), it is provided that the "standards" applied by the courts in antitrust actions attacking bank mergers shall be identical with those that the banking agencies are directed to apply under paragraph (5) and by § 2(c), courts are directed to apply the substantive rule of law set forth in § 18(c)(5) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, as amended by the Bank Merger Act in all antitrust litigation pending before them on and after the date of enactment of the amendment.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > Bank Mergers

Banking Law > ... > Banking & Finance > Commercial Banks > Mergers & Consolidations

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Regulated Industry Mergers

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > General Overview

Banking Law > Commercial Banks > Bank Expansions > General Overview

Banking Law > Commercial Banks > Bank Expansions > Banking Interests

Banking Law > Federal Acts > General Overview

Banking Law > ... > Banking & Finance > Regulators > US Office of the Comptroller of the Currency

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

HN4[] Financial Institutions, Bank Mergers

Under § 18(c)(7)(B) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, as amended by the Bank Merger Act, 12 U.S.C.S. § 1828(c), bank mergers must be examined and analyzed by the agencies and by the courts in terms of the antitrust standards prescribed in the amendment, such analysis to include consideration of the enumerated special banking factors, and any violations of such standards shall constitute a barrier to bank mergers unless clearly outweighed in the public interest by the probable effect of the transaction in meeting the convenience and needs of the community to be served. In every case, as the amendment explicitly provides, there shall be taken into account the financial and managerial resources and future prospects of the existing and proposed institutions and the convenience and needs of the community to be served. The banking industry is thus recognized as occupying a unique place in the national economy requiring a specialized set of antitrust standards, and under prescribed conditions exemption from the operation of antitrust consequences altogether with the exception of those prescribed in the Bank Merger Act, 12 U.S.C.S. § 1828(c)(5)(A).

Banking Law > Commercial Banks > Bank Expansions > Banking Interests

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > General Overview

Banking Law > Commercial Banks > Bank Expansions > General Overview

Banking Law > Federal Acts > General Overview

Banking Law > ... > Banking & Finance > Regulators > US Office of the Comptroller of the Currency

HN5[] Bank Expansions, Banking Interests

See the Bank Merger Act, 12 U.S.C.S. § 1828c.

Banking Law > Federal Acts > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > Bank Mergers

Banking Law > Commercial Banks > Bank Expansions > General Overview

Banking Law > Commercial Banks > Bank Expansions > Banking Interests

HN6[] Banking Law, Federal Acts

Under § 18(c)(7)(A) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, as amended by the Bank Merger Act, 12 U.S.C.S. § 1828(c), courts are directed to "review de novo the issues presented" in actions under the amendment.

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > Standards of Review > Substantial Evidence

Banking Law > Commercial Banks > Bank Expansions > Banking Interests

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > Reviewability > Factual Determinations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > General Overview

Banking Law > ... > Banking & Finance > Regulators > US Office of the Comptroller of the Currency

Civil Procedure > ... > Standards of Review > Substantial Evidence > General Overview

HN7[] Standards of Review, Substantial Evidence

A court's review of anticompetitive effects should be broader than "public interest" and "convenience and needs." The banking agency's finding on the first issue should be accorded some weight in view of its expertise and the technical and complex nature of the banking industry, but since a violation of antitrust standards is primarily a legal issue which courts have traditionally considered they should make an independent determination with respect to it. On the other hand, since the question whether anticompetitive effects are outweighed in the public interest by the convenience and needs of the community is plainly and unquestionably a legislative or administrative determination the Comptroller's findings should not be disturbed unless they are unsupported by substantial evidence. A merger the effect of which "may be substantially to lessen competition" is not saved because, on some ultimate reckoning of social or economic debits and credits, it may be deemed beneficial. A value choice of such magnitude is beyond the ordinary limits of judicial competence.

Banking Law > ... > Banking & Finance > Commercial Banks > Mergers & Consolidations

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Market Definition

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > Bank Mergers

Banking Law > Commercial Banks > Bank Expansions > General Overview

Banking Law > Commercial Banks > Bank Expansions > Banking Interests

Banking Law > Federal Acts > General Overview

Banking Law > ... > Banking & Finance > Regulators > US Office of the Comptroller of the Currency

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

HN8[] Commercial Banks, Mergers & Consolidations

Bank mergers are sui generis, to be assessed as to anticompetitive effects not alone on the basis of the quantitative analyses of the Lexington and Philadelphia cases, but, in addition, by taking into account all material factors with respect to each institution in the setting of the relevant market, and by evaluating the special banking factors delineated in § 18(c)(5)(B) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, as amended by the Bank Merger Act, 12 U.S.C.S. § 1828(c). Not only may anticompetitive effects be outweighed by the convenience and needs of the community to be served, but responsible agencies and courts alike are mandated to take into consideration "in every case" the following special factors: (1) Financial resources of the existing and proposed institution; (2) Their managerial resources; (3) Their future prospects; and (4) The convenience and needs of the community to be served. There is nothing in the language of this section to indicate that the special banking factors were to be given limited recognition only. The factors embrace the problem of the failing bank as well as that of the "floundering" bank. Possible insolvency is an important consideration, but it may be of equal importance to the economy to eliminate a bank which has reached a point of deterioration or stagnation and to permit its merger with a "more vigorously competing" institution.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > Bank Mergers

Banking Law > ... > Banking & Finance > Regulators > US Office of the Comptroller of the Currency

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Regulated Industry Mergers

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Financial Institutions > General Overview

Banking Law > Commercial Banks > Bank Expansions > General Overview

Banking Law > Commercial Banks > Bank Expansions > Banking Interests

Banking Law > Federal Acts > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Horizontal Mergers

HN9[] Financial Institutions, Bank Mergers

Under § 18(c)(5)(B) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, as amended by the Bank Merger Act, 12 U.S.C.S. § 1828(c), anticompetitive effects may be outweighed in the public interest by the convenience and needs of the community, and consideration shall be given in every case to the qualitative banking factors specifically enumerated. These factors are sufficiently comprehensive in character not only to embrace the Columbia Steel criteria, but also to require an even broader scope of inquiry and analysis with respect to antitrust issues. In determining what constitutes unreasonable restraint, the dollar volume is not in itself of compelling significance; the courts look rather to the percentage of business controlled, the strength of the remaining competition, whether the action springs from business requirements or purposes to monopolize, the probable development of the industry, consumer demands, and other characteristics of the market. The courts do not undertake to prescribe any set of percentage figures by which to measure the reasonableness of a corporation's enlargement of its activities by the purchase of the assets of a competitor. The relative effect of percentage command of a market varies with the setting in which that factor is placed.

Judges: [1] WM. E. Miller, District Judge.

Opinion by: MILLER

Opinion

[*870] WM. E. MILLER, District Judge

This action was instituted August 10, 1964 by the United States, acting through the Department of Justice, under § 4 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.A. § 4, and § 15 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.A. § 25, to enjoin the proposed merger of the Third National Bank in Nashville (Third National) and the Nashville Bank & Trust Company (Trust Company). Violations of § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.A. § 1, and § 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.A. § 18, were charged in the complaint. Acting pursuant to the Bank Merger Act of 1960, 12 U.S.C.A. § 1828(c), the Comptroller of the Currency, notwithstanding adverse reports on the competitive factors involved from the Attorney General, the Federal Reserve Board, and the Federal Deposit Insurance [*871] Corporation, approved the merger on August 4, 1964 on the basis of a written opinion and detailed findings of fact. Plaintiff's motion for a preliminary injunction was heard August 14 and 15, 1964; it was denied August 18, 1964; and the merger was consummated the same day. Before trial on the merits and after extensive pre-trial proceedings [2] in this action, Congress enacted Public Law 89-356, 80 Stat. 7, as an amendment to § 18(c) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, 12 U.S.C.A. § 1828(c). The Amendment, approved February 21, 1966 and referred to as the Bank Merger Act of 1966, effected material changes in the 1960 Bank Merger Act. By § 2(c) the Amendment was made applicable to pending antitrust actions involving bank mergers consummated after June 16, 1963. The significance of that date was that the Supreme Court of the United States then rendered its opinion in United States v. Philadelphia National Bank et al., 374 U.S. 321, 10 L. Ed. 2d 915, 83 S. Ct. 1715, holding that the Bank Merger Act of 1960 did not, by directing the banking agencies to consider competitive factors before approving bank mergers, immunize mergers approved by them from later judicial challenge under the antitrust laws. Despite prior approval by the Comptroller of the merger of the second and third largest commercial banks in Philadelphia, the Court held the proposed merger to be forbidden by § 7 of the Clayton Act and such merger was accordingly enjoined. So, absent the 1966 Amendment, the Court's only task in this case would be to [3] determine whether the merger now under scrutiny runs afoul of antitrust laws without regard to any of the banking factors enumerated in the 1960 Act. It is clear, however, that the Amendment introduces new standards to be applied by the banking agencies, by the Department of Justice, and by the courts alike. It reflects the congressional attempt to reconcile the judicial application of antitrust concepts with the standards applied by federal banking agencies in evaluating merger applications under the 1960 Act. By § 18(c)(5)(B) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, as amended by the 1966 Amendment, it is provided that HN1[] the responsible agency shall not approve any proposed merger transaction which shall violate the specified antitrust standards "unless it finds that the anticompetitive effects of the proposed transaction are clearly outweighed in the public interest by the probable effect of the transaction in meeting the convenience and needs of the community to be served." The Amendment then proceeds in the immediately following paragraph: "In every case, the responsible agency shall take into consideration the financial and managerial resources and future prospects of the existing [4] and proposed institutions, and the convenience and needs of the community to be served." [1]

---

[1] Sec. 18(c)(5) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act as amended by the 1966 Amendment provides:

HN2[] The responsible agency shall not approve -

[5] HN3[] By § 18(c)(7)(B) it is provided that the "standards" applied by the courts in antitrust actions attacking bank mergers "shall be identical with those that the banking agencies are directed to apply under paragraph (5) " and by § 2(c), courts are directed to "apply the substantive [*872] rule of law set forth in § 18(c)(5) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, as amended by this Act" in all antitrust litigation pending before them on and after the date of enactment of the 1966 Amendment with respect to all mergers consummated after June 16, 1963, the date of the Supreme Court decision in Philadelphia.

Thus from the terms of the Amendment as well as from its legislative history, [2] the basic congressional intent in enacting the 1966 Amendment appears to be clearly mirrored: HN4[] Bank mergers must be examined and analyzed by the agencies and by the courts in terms of the antitrust standards prescribed in the Amendment, such analysis to include consideration of the enumerated special banking factors, and any violations of such standards shall constitute a barrier to bank mergers unless "clearly outweighed in the public interest by the probable effect of the transaction in meeting [6] the convenience and needs of the community to be served." "In every case," as the Amendment explicitly provides, there shall be taken into account "the financial and managerial resources and future prospects of the existing and proposed institutions and the convenience and needs of the community to be served." The banking industry is thus recognized as occupying a unique place in our national economy requiring a specialized set of antitrust standards, and under prescribed conditions exemption from the operation of antitrust consequences altogether with the exception of those prescribed in § 28(c)(5)(A).

Before adverting to the merits of this case, it becomes necessary to resolve a problem of procedure. This problem arises because the Comptroller formally approved the merger prior to the 1966 Amendment and in the light of the factors of the Bank Merger Act of 1960. While the 1960 Act required him to consider anticompetitive effects, it [7] did not require him to accord this factor any particular weight or to determine antitrust issues per se. [3]

In United States v. Crocker-Anglo National Bank et al., United [8] States District Court, Northern District of California, 263 F. Supp. 125, 35 L.W. 2209, a three-judge court rendered its opinion on October 6, 1966 in one of the three post Philadelphia cases pending at the date of the enactment of the 1966 Amendment in which mergers had been consummated after the Philadelphia decision. The other two pending cases were the present case and a case pending in St. Louis. Although mergers consummated before the Philadelphia decision were exempted from Sherman § 1 and Clayton § 7, the new antitrust standards of the 1966 Amendment were made to apply to all mergers consummated after that decision, including those challenged in the three pending cases, as we have seen. In Crocker-Anglo, as in this case, the Comptroller of the Currency had approved the merger prior to the 1966 Amendment by applying the different criteria of the 1960 Bank Merger Act. He had not assessed its validity under

---

(A) any proposed merger transaction which would result in a monopoly, or which would be in furtherance of any combination or conspiracy to monopolize or to attempt to monopolize the business of banking in any part of the United States, or

(B) any other proposed merger transaction whose effect in any section of the country may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly, or which in any other manner would be in restraint of trade, unless it finds that the anticompetitive effects of the proposed transaction are clearly outweighed in the public interest by the probable effect of the transaction in meeting the convenience and needs of the community to be served.

In every case, the responsible agency shall take into consideration the financial and managerial resources and future prospects of the existing and proposed institutions, and the convenience and needs of the community to be served.

[2] H.R. Rep. 1221, 89th Cong. 2d Sess. (1966), Bank Merger Act Amendment.

[3] The 1960 Bank Merger Act applied to all banks insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and banking agencies in considering merger applications were required to evaluate:

(1) HN5[] The financial history and condition of each of the banks involved; (2) the adequacy of its capital structure; (3) its future earnings prospects; (4) the general character of its management; (5) the convenience and needs of the community to be served; (6) and whether or not its corporate powers are consistent with the purposes of this chapter . . . the appropriate agency shall also take into consideration the effect of the transaction on competition (including any tendency toward monopoly) and shall not approve the transaction unless, after considering all of such factors, it finds the transaction to be in the public interest. (12 U.S.C.A. § 1828(c) (1964)).

the standards of the 1966 Amendment. The California Court, pointing out that HN6[] under § 18(c)(7)(A) courts are directed to "review de novo the [*873] issues presented" in actions under the 1966 Amendment, stated:

> No difficulty would be presented here [9] so far as reviewing de novo the first of these determinations for this court has traditionally adjudged whether mergers have anti-competitive effects. But the problem of reviewing the second determination by the Comptroller, namely, whether the proposed transaction is outweighed in the public interest, and whether it meets the convenience and needs of the community, is plainly and unquestionably a legislative or administrative determination of a type which this court, as a constitutional court, is prohibited from deciding.

Entertaining this view the Court construed the 1966 Amendment as limiting the Courts' role in pending cases as well as in all future cases to a review of the findings made by the Comptroller pursuant to the 1966 criteria. As there were no such findings by the Comptroller before the court in Crocker-Anglo, it was directed that the action be remanded to the Comptroller to update his findings and conclusions under and in the light of the new standards of the 1966 Amendment. It was intimated in the opinion that the court's power to review such findings as to anticompetitive effects would be somewhat broader in scope than its power to review the Comptroller's [10] findings that anticompetitive effects are "clearly outweighed in the public interest," or as to what constitute the " conveniences and needs of the community to be served." As to the latter, the courts would be restricted to a "determination of questions of law and ascertainment of whether findings of fact by the agency are supported by substantial evidence " taking into account not only the evidence before the Comptroller but also any additional evidence made a part of the record at the trial. The Crocker-Anglo interpretation of the 1966 Amendment as to the scope of the judicial function in the three cases pending at the time of its enactment is supported by a carefully reasoned opinion, although it must be conceded that the issue of statutory interpretation is not free from difficulty. In any event it is not deemed necessary in this action to follow the example of the California Court in remanding the action to the Comptroller for findings specifically formulated under the new criteria of the 1966 Amendment. In Crocker-Anglo the trial occurred before the effective date of the 1966 Amendment, and that court accordingly did not have before it any findings by the Comptroller [11] assessing the merger on the basis of the newly enacted standards. Under such circumstances, it was the court's view that a remand to the Comptroller for updating his findings and conclusions was the proper and expedient course to follow. In contrast, the present action was tried after the 1966 Amendment and the Comptroller's assessment of the present merger under the new criteria and standards of the Amendment has been presented to the Court in various ways. First, having intervened as a party to the action under the provisions of the 1966 Amendment allowing such intervention as of right, (§ 18(c)(7)(D) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, as amended), he has filed a formal answer setting forth his views that the merger is not substantially anticompetitive when evaluated under the terms of the 1966 Amendment, and that any anticompetitive effects are clearly outweighed in the public interest by the convenience and needs of the community to be served. The same views and opinions have been presented to the Court by the Comptroller, acting through his attorney, at various stages during the trial, including the making of oral arguments, the filing of written briefs, and the filing [12] of suggested findings of fact and conclusions of law to be approved by the Court. Of greater significance, however, is the fact that the Comptroller appeared as a witness at the trial and expressed the same views and opinions in response to numerous questions on direct and cross examination. His testimony convincingly demonstrated that he was entirely familiar not only with the new standards of the 1966 Amendment, but also with the [*874] essential and material facts which had been developed at the trial. Like testimony was given by the Regional Comptroller of the Currency. There is no reason to conclude that these steps were not taken by the Comptroller in good faith. Nor are the Comptroller's opinions expressed as a witness under oath entitled to any less weight because he saw fit to intervene as a party in the action. If he concluded that the merger met the tests of the 1966 Amendment, as he obviously did, it was his right, if indeed it was not his duty, to intervene in the action to support that conclusion and to make his views, opinions and findings known to the Court.

The trial was a protracted one, extending over approximately six weeks and involving some 3,800 pages [13] of transcript. A remand to the Comptroller could only serve the purpose of further delay. It is idle to suppose that any further significant evidence could be unearthed, or that the Comptroller would be likely to come to any different conclusion, or that he could have any better grasp of the controlling facts than he possessed at the trial. Since the purposes of a remand have been substantially accomplished in the manner indicated, and since the Comptroller's findings and opinions are before the Court under both the 1960 Bank Merger Act and the 1966 Amendment, the Court concludes that the remand procedure is not required.

What, then, is the scope of judicial review? Applying the rationale of the Crocker-Anglo opinion, HN7[] the Court's review of anticompetitive effects should be broader than "public interest" and "convenience and needs." The banking agency's finding on the first issue should be accorded some weight in view of its expertise and the technical and complex nature of the banking industry, but since a violation of antitrust standards is primarily a legal issue which courts have traditionally considered they should make an independent determination with respect to it. On [14] the other hand, since the question whether anticompetitive effects are outweighed in the public interest by the convenience and needs of the community is, in the language of the Crocker-Anglo opinion, "plainly and unquestionably a legislative or administrative determination . . .," the Comptroller's findings should not be disturbed unless they are unsupported by substantial evidence. This view finds strong support in the statement of the Supreme Court in Philadelphia, at p. 371:

> We are clear, however, that a merger the effect of which "may be substantially to lessen competition" is not saved because, on some ultimate reckoning of social or economic debits and credits, it may be deemed beneficial. A value choice of such magnitude is beyond the ordinary limits of judicial competence . . . .

In seeking to void the merger under investigation the plaintiff relies upon Section 1 of the Sherman Act as construed in United States v. First National Bank of Lexington, 376 U.S. 665, 84 S. Ct. 1033, 12 L. Ed. 2d 1 (1964), and upon Section 7 of the Clayton Act as construed in United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, supra. As in Lexington and Philadelphia, the plaintiff's [15] case rests primarily upon inferences derived from statistics and upon the rules of prima facie invalidity enunciated in those cases. It is argued that the merging banks were "major competitive factors" in the relevant Davidson County market, that the merger resulted in the elimination of competition between them, and, consequently, that the case falls squarely within the ambit of the Supreme Court ruling in Lexington under Section 1 of the Sherman Act. A fortiori, it is argued that the merger is forbidden under the less stringent provisions of Clayton Section 7. It is further insisted, independently of the Sherman Act, that the merger must fall under Clayton Section 7 standards as delineated in Philadelphia, in that (a) the merger has produced a firm controlling an undue percentage share of the relevant market, and (b) it has resulted in a significant increase in [*875] the concentration of firms in that market. It is therefore said that the merger "is so inherently likely to lessen competition substantially that it must be enjoined in the absence of evidence clearly showing that the merger is not likely to have such anticompetitive effects." In this case the plaintiff [16] says that there is no such countervailing evidence. Plaintiff also relies upon the statement in a footnote of the Philadelphia opinion that "if concentration is already great, the importance of preventing even slight increases in concentration . . . is correspondingly great." Plaintiff would drastically minimize the effect of the 1966 Amendment. Its position as to the impact of the Amendment is thus succinctly stated in its trial brief.

> The 1966 Amendment did not change materially the tests of antitrust legality applicable in bank merger cases. The Act was designed primarily (1) to require the bank supervisory agencies to give more weight than heretofore to the competitive factor in ruling on future merger applications, (2) to remove any impression that the standards of Philadelphia and those of the Bank Merger Act of 1960 differ in fact, and (3) to make it clear that, as suggested in Philadelphia, limited recognition was to be given to the special features of commercial banking in terms of consideration of the "banking factors" - primarily a failing company doctrine with "somewhat larger contours," Philadelphia National Bank, supra, 374 U.S. at 372 n. 46.

Taking notice [17] of the suggestions in the Philadelphia opinion that the failing company doctrine may have somewhat larger contours in the banking area, the plaintiff would construe the banking factors enumerated in the 1966 Amendment as being concerned primarily with the question of solvency and protection of the community against a failing bank. This is true, as the plaintiff insists, not only with respect to financial and managerial resources, but also with respect to the concept of convenience and needs of the community.

The plaintiff's restrictive interpretation of the 1966 Amendment finds little support either in legislative history or in the text of the Amendment itself. On the contrary, both legislative history and the textual provisions of the Amendment strongly indicate that it was the intent of Congress to effect substantial changes in existing antitrust law relative to bank mergers as enunciated in the Lexington and Philadelphia cases. United States v. Crocker-Anglo National Bank et al., supra. After the decision in the Philadelphia case, the validity of bank mergers was made to depend in the final analysis, if challenged in the courts, upon the application of traditional [18] antitrust standards. Except for the vague intimation that the failing company doctrine might have somewhat larger contours in bank merger cases, no consideration was to be given in an action challenging bank mergers under antitrust laws to the special banking factors contained in the 1960 Bank Merger Act. Essentially what the 1966 Amendment does is to change this ultimate test of validity from one depending strictly upon antitrust laws to a test balancing antitrust considerations with the special factors recognized by Congress as peculiarly applicable to the banking industry. The House Report on the 1966 Bank Merger Amendment clearly sustains this view. Under the heading, "What the Bill Would Do," it is stated that it would establish a single set of standards for the consideration of future mergers by the responsible banking supervisory agencies, the Department of Justice, and the courts under the antitrust laws - standards stricter than those in the Bank Merger Act "but which include both the effect on competition and the convenience and needs of the community to be served," a standard clearly different from that of the Lexington and Philadelphia cases.

It is pointed [19] out under the heading, "The Need for the Legislation," that the committee had heard the contention made that banking is such a unique industry [*876] and that the determination of where the public interest lies in a given bank merger situation requires such special expertise that any bank merger which has been approved by the appropriate federal supervisory agency should be absolutely immune from antitrust attack. On the other hand, the committee had heard the contention advanced with equal vigor that any bank merger whose effect would be to lessen competition should on that ground alone be absolutely prohibited, and that neither agencies nor courts should be permitted to examine the question of whether the overall effect of such merger might be in the public interest.

Under the heading "Purpose of the Bill," the floundering bank problem is discussed as follows:

> Under general antitrust law criteria, particularly as they have been developed over the past few years, the banking agencies find it difficult to deal as they would like with the floundering bank problem in medium to smaller sized communities. The problem arises where there is a relatively small number of banks, [20] and one or more of these banks appear to be stagnating. It may be because it is below the economic minimum size to attract capable and vigorous management personnel, it may be because it is closely held by owners who insist on unrealistically conservative policies, or it may be for any other reasons which are discernible only by an examination of that particular bank as an individual institution. The banking agencies, with some differences in degree among themselves, have contended that they should be able to consider a merger application on the basis of such an individual examination, and to approve it if they believe that the result would be a more vigorously competing institution, furnishing better overall service to the community, even though the reduction in the number of competing units, or the concentration in the share of the market in one or more lines of commerce, might result under general antitrust law criteria in a substantial lessening of competition.

As to the intended legal effect of the Bill, the House Report proceeds:

> First, it is intended to make clear that no merger which would violate the antimonopoly section (sec. 2) of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act may [21] be approved under any circumstances.
> Second, the bill acknowledges that the general principle of the antitrust laws - that substantially anticompetitive mergers are prohibited - applies to banks, but permits an exception in cases where it is clearly shown that a given merger is so beneficial to the convenience and needs of the community to be served - recognizing that effects outside the section of the country involved may be relevant to the capacity of the institution to meet the convenience and needs of the community to be served - that it would be in the public interest to permit it.
> Third, the bill provides that this rule of law is to be applied uniformly, in judicial proceedings as well as by the administrative agencies.

Turning to the text of the 1966 Amendment, it becomes even clearer that HN8[] bank mergers are sui generis, to be assessed as to anticompetitive effects not alone on the basis of the quantitative analyses of the Lexington and Philadelphia cases, but, in addition, by taking into account all material factors with respect to each institution in the setting of the relevant market, and by evaluating the special banking factors delineated in § 18(c)(5)(B). [22] By that section, as we have seen, not only may anticompetitive effects be outweighed by the convenience and needs of the community to be served, but responsible agencies and courts alike are mandated to take into consideration "in every case" the following special factors:

(1) Financial resources of the existing and proposed institution;

(2) Their managerial resources;

(3) Their future prospects; and [*877] (4) The convenience and needs of the community to be served.

There is nothing in the language of this section to indicate that the special banking factors were to be given limited recognition only, or that they were to be concerned primarily with the question of solvency. It is clear that the factors embrace the problem of the failing bank as well as that of the "floundering" or "stagnating" bank. Certainly possible insolvency is an important consideration, but it may be of equal importance to the economy to eliminate a bank which has reached a point of deterioration or stagnation and to permit its merger with a "more vigorously competing" institution. Are the cases of floundering banks the "somewhat larger contours of the failing company [23] doctrine" to which plaintiff refers? The answer from legislative history justifies an affirmative answer.

Nor does the language of Section 18(c)(5)(B) support the thesis that agencies and courts in considering anticompetitive effects in bank merger cases are to be hamstrung by cold statistics and are not to be allowed to look to the total facts in context to determine whether the statistics reflect the true competitive situation.

Mr. Justice Harlan, dissenting in the Lexington case, expressed the view that Congress in the Bank Merger Act of 1960 had plainly indicated that it did not intend that mergers in the banking field should be measured solely by the antitrust considerations which are applied in other industries. He further stated that adherence to the principles enunciated in United States v. Columbia Steel Co., 334 U.S. 495, 92 L. Ed. 1533, 68 S. Ct. 1107, [4] "would leave room for an accommodation within the framework of the antitrust laws of the special features of banking recognized by Congress." Because of the ruling in Philadelphia, this accommodation was not effectively accomplished by the 1960 Bank Merger Act, but the Court is persuaded that the accommodation [24] to which Mr. Justice Harlan referred is the fundamental purpose and effect of the 1966 Amendment in providing that HN9[] anticompetitive effects may be outweighed in the public interest by the convenience and needs of the community, and that consideration shall be given in every case to the qualitative banking factors specifically enumerated. These factors are sufficiently comprehensive in character not only to embrace the Columbia Steel criteria, but also to require an even broader scope of inquiry and analysis with respect to antitrust issues.

[25] The Court's construction of the 1966 Amendment is supported by the Amendment's provision that bank mergers shall be considered in the first instance by the responsible banking agency, applying the standards of Section 18(c)(5), by the requirements that courts shall apply identical standards, and by the provision that the Courts' role shall be limited to reviewing de novo the issues presented under the 1966 Amendment. If it was the purpose of the Amendment simply to perpetuate without modification the Lexington and Philadelphia antitrust criteria in the banking field, it is not apparent why Congress would have emphasized by these provisions the importance of the responsible agencies' expertise with respect to bank mergers. The structuring of the Act in this respect cannot be reconciled with the logic of the Philadelphia [*878] decision that courts must determine the validity of bank mergers on the basis of antitrust considerations alone - primarily derived from statistics - independently of and without regard to the special features of banking recognized by Congress. Whereas under

---

[4] These principles were stated in the Columbia Steel opinion as follows:

In determining what constitutes unreasonable restraint, we do not think the dollar volume is in itself of compelling significance; we look rather to the percentage of business controlled, the strength of the remaining competition, whether the action springs from business requirements or purposes to monopolize, the probable development of the industry, consumer demands, and other characteristics of the market. We do not undertake to prescribe any set of percentage figures by which to measure the reasonableness of a corporation's enlargement of its activities by the purchase of the assets of a competitor. The relative effect of percentage command of a market varies with the setting in which that factor is placed. At page 527.

the Philadelphia rationale, courts determined anticompetitive effects without [26] regard to banking factors and banking agencies determined both, a balanced consideration of anticompetitive effects and banking factors is now enjoined upon both agencies and courts, the agencies speaking first and the courts reviewing "de novo" the issues presented.

Entertaining these views as to the thrust of the 1966 Amendment, the Court is of the opinion that while the plaintiff has established an arguable case for condemnation of the merger under the pre-1966 standards of the Lexington, Philadelphia and other cases, treating Davidson County as the relevant geographic market and commercial banking as the services or products market, [5] the merger is not violative of the new antitrust standards of the 1966 Amendment.

[27] The term "arguable case" is used for the reason that there are at least some conspicuous points of difference between the case at bar and Lexington and Philadelphia, whether or not such differences are of controlling significance. In the Lexington case, the Supreme Court held invalid under Section 1 of the Sherman Act the consolidation of the first and fourth largest commercial banks in Fayette County, Kentucky. Before the consolidation the largest bank, First National, had approximately 40% of the assets, deposits and loans in the relevant market which was determined to be Fayette County. The fourth largest bank, Security Trust, before the consolidation had approximately 12% of the assets, deposits and loans. After the consolidation, the new bank, First Security, had approximately 52% of the assets, deposits and loans. The bank established by the consolidation was larger than all of the remaining banks combined. In addition to these statistics reflecting "bigness," the Court relied upon the testimony from three of the four remaining banks that the consolidation would "seriously affect their ability to compete effectively over the years." It was concluded that the [28] two banks before the consolidation were major competitors and that the elimination of significant competition between them constituted an unreasonable restraint of trade in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. The statistics of the present case, of course, are not as impressive as those in Lexington. Third National, having approximately 33% of assets, deposits and loans before the merger, possessed approximately 38% in these categories after the merger [*879] and it retained the same position in the Davidson County market after the merger. The Trust Company's share of assets, deposits and loans before the merger was only approximately 5% as compared with the 12% of the smaller bank in Lexington. There is no comparable testimony in the present case from any of the remaining banks in Davidson County that the consolidation will seriously affect their ability to compete effectively. In Philadelphia a 30% market share resulting from the merger was regarded as undue, as compared with approximately a 38% market share in the present case; but in Philadelphia the merger resulted in a 33% increase in concentration between the two largest banks; whereas the increase [29] in the present case between the three largest banks is approximately 5%. The Philadelphia merger formed a bank which became the largest in the market area; whereas, in this case, as pointed out, the new banking institution will continue to occupy second place. In Philadelphia neither of the banks involved had antitrust clean hands - the Philadelphia National having acquired nine formerly independent banks and Girard having acquired six, such acquisitions having extended over a long period of time into the recent past. In the case at bar, there is no significant merger history either with respect to the two banks or in the Davidson County commercial banking market.

---

[5] The Court rejects the defendant's and intervenor's argument that in assessing the anti-competitive effects of the merger the relevant geographic market is the broad area served by Third National's correspondent banking system. There is no significant legislative history to support the view that the 1966 Amendment was intended to change the relevant geographic market concept as developed in antitrust law. The Court is of the opinion under the facts of this case that the relevant geographic market is Davidson County. This is "where, within the area of competitive overlap, the effect of the merger on competition will be direct and immediate." United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, supra, at p. 357. Also, on the clear preponderance of the evidence in this case the appropriate "line of commerce" by which to appraise the competitive effects of the merger is the cluster of products and services denoted by the term commercial banking. The Court does not agree that the omission of the words "in any line of commerce" from the 1966 Amendment is indicative of a congressional intent to reject "commercial banking" as a distinct line of commerce in appraising anticompetitive effects. It cannot be presumed that such an important change in established antitrust law would be made by mere omission. Again, there is really no significant legislative history to support the defendants' and intervenor's position on this point.

Other differences could be pointed out, but it is clear to the Court that whatever the result in this case may have been before, the merger now under consideration does not run afoul of antitrust standards when evaluated in the terms of the 1966 Amendment, as the Court construes it.

The Trust Company was chartered in 1889. Its name was changed in 1956 to Nashville Bank & Trust Company. It opened its only branch in 1959. Prior to the change of ownership in 1964, the controlling interest in the Trust Company [30] had been owned by H. G. Hill, Jr. and his retail grocery chain operating in the Middle Tennessee area. The institution had been operated primarily as a trust company [6] with commercial banking occupying a place of secondary importance. In 1956 it brought in a former railroad executive, W. S. Hackworth, as president and began to emphasize the commercial aspects of its operation. During the period from 1955 to 1964 its assets, deposits and loans more than doubled, and its earnings record was good. This rate of growth, however, leveled off about the year 1960. From that time until the merger with Third National its rate of growth was markedly less than that of any of the other banks in Davidson County. For the period 1956-60 its rate of growth in total assets was 46.55%, a figure which dropped to 20.32% for the period 1960-64. For the same periods the drop in deposits was from 50.58% to 18.77%, and the drop in total loans and discounts was from a percentage gain of 77.57% to 29.86%. Its percentage of total banking business in the market declined from 5.72% on June 30, 1960 to 4.83% on June 30, 1964.

[31] The evidence demonstrates conclusively that the Trust Company, when considered as a commercial bank, has not been an innovator or an aggressive competitor. Its operations have been dominated by unaggressive and ultra-conservative management policies. At the time of the merger and for many years prior thereto it had a serious lack of [*880] managerial resources due primarily to the fact that its salary scale was wholly inadequate and it was without a funded pension plan for its employees. As pointed out by the Comptroller of the Currency in his decision approving the merger on August 4, 1964, "a bank is only as good as its management." At that time the 68 year old bank president was seriously ill and anxious to retire, having an illness which has since caused his death. H. G. Hill, Jr., Chairman of the Board, had sold the controlling stock interest in the Trust Company, owned by his grocery firm, the H. G. Hill Company to William C. Weaver and associates, and resigned from the bank's board of directors. Kirby Primm, the bank's only full time business solicitor, had resigned and taken a position with the First American National Bank, the largest bank in the market area. All [32] three of these men had been key factors in the growth which the bank had enjoyed during Hackworth's tenure as president, and it is no exaggeration to say that so far as the Trust Company's commercial business was concerned they were practically irreplaceable. Much of the new business was brought to the Trust Company due to the formidable influence and personal business connections of Hill and Hackworth. Primm had been exceedingly resourceful in soliciting new business, particularly in capitalizing upon firms which did business with the Hill grocery stores. The decline in the bank's rate of growth is attributable in large measure to the loss of two of these individuals, to Hackworth's declining health, and to the lack of branch banks and other necessary facilities. In addition, both Hackworth and Primm testified that the Trust Company had reached a plateau and that they had gone as far as they could in bringing in new business by soliciting their friends and business connections. Hackworth described the bank's dilemma as follows:

> The earnings of Nashville Bank and Trust Company in the immediate past have been satisfactory. However, if the Nashville Bank and Trust Company made [33] the expenditures necessary to bring it into a position to compete successfully and substantially in the Nashville area banking industry, such as additional branch banks, increased salary scale, automation, funded pension plan, employee welfare benefits and other related modern banking methods and procedures which have come to be necessary in order to render adequate and modern service to the public, it is certain that its pattern of satisfactory earnings could not be maintained and such earnings might very well disappear.

---

[6] The Trust Company had created and maintained what was for the most part a good trust department, an aspect of its operations which need not be discussed in detail herein. Trust departments, as the evidence shows, are operated primarily as a service to bank customers and are not an important lever in obtaining commercial business. While there is some direct competition for trust business in the market area between commercial banks having trust departments, such competition is minimal. The greatest area of direct competition for trust business is not with other banks but with individuals, such as lawyers. The loss of a trust account to a competitor bank is of infrequent occurrence.

The evidence demonstrates that the Trust Company management problem was one of serious proportions which made it practically impossible to attract and hold competent young men. It is significant that during his 17-year tenure at the Trust Company Primm's salary had increased by only 45% above a very low beginning, and that First American offered him an immediate salary increase of 60%.

The Trust Company's lack of dynamism and aggressiveness is demonstrated in many other ways. There had been no change in department heads from 1946 until the merger in 1964, a situation hardly calculated to interest young managerial leadership. Many of its officers and board [34] members were old and the bank was in serious need of qualified young men as replacements. Although the Trust Company, due primarily to the personal business relationships of Hackworth and Hill, was able to grow substantially during the early years of Hackworth's tenure, no substantial or concerted effort was made to improve or modernize its methods, facilities, attitudes or personnel and management policies. For example, it consistently had the lowest loan to asset ratio of any bank in Davidson County, its loans being confined primarily to real estate and secured loans as distinguished from short term commercial loans. It operated without the benefit of credit files or a credit department. It employed no credit specialists. In consequence [*881] it was not able to handle indirect consumer loans or the larger, more complicated credit situations. Its loss experience, particularly in recent years, had not been good. Its emphasis was consistently upon profits rather than upon making the expenditures necessary to place itself in a position to be truly and significantly competitive. In addition to inadequate salaries, the lack of a funded pension plan and low fringe benefits, [35] it failed to provide branches, the hallmark of modern banking. It had only one branch as of the date of the merger in the Davidson County market in which there were 52 branch banking offices. Nor did it provide modern equipment, modernized banking quarters, or a continuous audit program. It was not a member of the Federal Reserve system and it had no regular customer call program.

Capital City Bank, on the other hand, which had only begun operations in 1960, and being less than one-fourth the size of the Trust Company, had established three branches. The Comptroller of the Currency was of the opinion that the Trust Company could have established from eight to ten branches in Davidson County if it had so desired. He stated that its failure to branch indicated that it was not disposed to make the needed struggle indicated for growth. Its failure to have any automated or computerized equipment stands in contrast with most other banks of its approximate size in Tennessee. There were many other indicia of negative and unprogressive management policies, including its failure to remedy serious problems in the credit department despite warnings by the FDIC Examiner, its high proportion [36] of criticized loans as reflected in FDIC reports, and its failure to hold any officer staff meetings since 1962.

Considering the Trust Company's problems, deficiencies and weaknesses, it is not difficult to understand the Weaver group's decision to merge with Third National rather than to undertake the formidable task of negotiating another sale, or the even more formidable task of solving the bank's many problems directly. The Weaver group had purchased the controlling stock in the Trust Company in the early part of 1964 as an investment. The members of the group had had no previous banking experience and none of them had planned to become members of the Board of Directors, or to devote their full energies and resources to rebuilding the bank. Fully realizing the extent of the bank's operational problems and difficulties only after the purchase, and realizing that the bank could not be revitalized as a competitive factor in the market without the expenditure of large sums of money, it was their conclusion that the best solution was to take the merger route.

In view of this attitude on the part of the new management, the Comptroller of the Currency correctly concluded in his decision [37] approving the merger that "when a bank, such as the merging bank, is not disposed to compete, it is idle to speak of the elimination of competition by reason of the merger." Despite its growth record in Hackworth's early years as President, the future prospects of the bank at the time of the merger may be described as unpromising. While there is some conflict, the preponderance of the evidence is that it would have been practically impossible within any reasonable period of time to obtain adequate managerial replacements either from within the bank or from the outside, a product of the bank's failure to have adequate personnel and management policies, of its overly conservative attitudes, and of its failure to make the necessary expenditures to provide itself with the facilities, procedures and equipment required to maintain a competitive posture.

Only a brief word need be said concerning Third National and its position in the relevant market. There is no dispute in the record that it had been a strong, dynamic and aggressive bank since its organization in 1927. It was characterized by the Comptroller of the Currency in his testimony at the trial as one of the strongest and best [38] managed [*882] banks in the nation. Of particular significance is the fact that its steady and impressive growth between 1927 and 1964 had been entirely the result of internal expansion, having no prior history of acquisition of assets by merger or consolidation. It had, in addition to its main office, some 14 branch offices in Davidson County. It has been active in the correspondent banking field, having approximately 365 correspondent bank accounts prior to the merger, most of which are located within a radius of 250 miles. Prior to the merger in 1964, it had total deposits of $315,090,000.00 as contrasted with the largest bank, First American National, with deposits of $371,108,000.00, and Commerce Union, the third largest bank, with deposits of $202,624,000.00. At that time the Trust Company had total deposits of $45,471,000.00, occupying fourth place in the market. The fifth largest bank, which had entered the market only four years previously, Capital City, had deposits of $7,266,000.00. The other three banks in the market were the Bank of Goodlettsville with deposits of $6,369,000.00; Citizens Savings with deposits of $3,053,000.00; and Whites Creek Bank with deposits [39] of $2,603,000.00. After the merger all the Davidson County banks continued a substantial growth. As of June 1965, Third National had total deposits of $375,063,000.00; First American National had $393,040,000.00; Commerce Union had $219,514,000.00; and Capital City had $8,954,000.00. The remaining three banks had increased their combined deposits of $12,025,000.00 before the merger to $13,590,000.00.

When the general characteristics of the Davidson County market are considered, the plaintiff's insistence that the market is unduly concentrated appears to be lacking in significance. At the time of the merger all of the eight Davidson County banks had combined assets of slightly less than one billion dollars. In such a relatively small banking market it does not appear unreasonable that there should be a concentration of approximately 93% of combined assets in three banking institutions, this figure being approximately 97% after the merger of the Trust Company and Third National. The record contains figures for comparable southeastern markets competitive with Nashville and having three major banks holding between 90 and 100% of the loan and deposit business. For example, Chattanooga [40] has concentration among three banks of 100%; Mobile, Alabama, 98%; Birmingham, Alabama, 93%; Jackson, Mississippi, 98%; Memphis, 91 to 92%. The three largest cities in Tennessee - Memphis, Nashville and Knoxville - are now served by only seven banks, the largest number for any Tennessee city.

A meaningful fact in this case is that the Davidson County banks have attained their present market shares and size through internal growth and not through acquisition, a fact which is in marked contrast with the situation which prevailed in the Philadelphia case, as already pointed out. Another distinctive characteristic of the Davidson County market is that it is highly competitive at all levels, a fact which is clearly established by the preponderant testimony of competent and knowledgeable expert witnesses and by objective evidence of low service charges. Rivalry for business has always been exceptionally keen. The ease of entry is clearly indicated by the case of Capital City Bank which entered the market in 1960 and has had a substantial and continued success. There is no evidence of oligopolistic behavior in the relevant market. On the contrary, that the Nashville banks are keenly [41] competitive with respect to service charges, the solicitation of business, and in making changes and innovations is the only fair and reasonable conclusion which can be drawn from the record.

If the Columbia Steel factors, relegated to a place of relative unimportance in the Lexington case, are considered to have been restored to grace with respect to bank mergers by reason of the 1966 Amendment, and the Court is convinced that they were, and if the present case is accordingly analyzed in terms of such [*883] factors, it seems clear that the plaintiff's position in this case cannot be sustained. On the present record, only the Columbia Steel factors dealing with size can arguably be said to favor the plaintiff's position. It may be conceded for present purposes that the dollar volume and percentage of business controlled are significant. But the strength of the remaining competition is clearly established in this case by the assets, deposits and loans of the seven banks in the Davidson County market remaining after the merger, and by competent testimony of bank experts familiar with the market, that the remaining banks were active, vigorous and highly [42] competitive. There is also convincing testimony that the merger has actually resulted in an intensification of competition among the Davidson County banks. Of importance in this connection, as already stated, is the fact that all banks since the merger have had substantial growth. The motive for the present merger was not predatory, but was based upon an evaluation of business and economic factors. A merger with Third National was determined to be the best solution to the grave problems confronting the Trust Company at the time of the merger. Without the merger these problems could not have been solved without drastic expenditures over a protracted period of time. Finally, the preponderance of the evidence in this case with reference to the probable development of the industry, consumer demands and other market characteristics, is highly favorable to the merger. The Davidson County market has had no merger history; there is no trend toward concentration; the service area is rapidly growing with consumer demands being on the increase and the market being recognized as one of the most highly competitive in the nation; the remaining banks are well managed under vigorous [43] and dynamic leadership; the Trust Company had reached a stagnant and deteriorating posture at the time of the merger, having critical managerial and other problems and deficiencies; the new owners were investors who were not disposed to make the sacrifices necessary to overhaul the bank so as to place it in a position to be substantially competitive with other banks; and actual or probable future oligopolistic behavior is contradicted by the record. This analysis, notwithstanding the concentration and market share figures upon which plaintiff relies, compels the conclusion that the present merger is not a transaction "in restraint of trade" and consequently not prohibited by Section 18(c)(5)(B) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, as amended by the 1966 Amendment, the analogue of Section 1 of the Sherman Act.

Similar considerations lead to the conclusion that the effect of the present merger will not be "substantially to lessen competition or to tend to create a monopoly" in violation of Section 18(c)(5)(B) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, as amended by the 1966 Amendment, the analogue of Section 7 of the Clayton Act.

As already stated, no reliable extrapolation as to future [44] prospects may safely be predicated upon concentration or market share figures alone. But considering the totality of facts as to the institutions involved and as to the relevant market, a conclusion that the merger may substantially lessen competition in the future is wholly unwarranted. Any other view would require the Court to close its eyes to facts which are far more convincing than any possible contrary conclusions which could be drawn from the market share or concentration statistics in this case.

The Court concludes that the Comptroller of the Currency's findings, made both before and after the passage of the 1966 Bank Merger Act, that the anticompetitive effects of the merger are minimal and that the merger is not violative of antitrust standards, is supported by the clear preponderance of the evidence in the record. As the Court is also of this view independently of the Comptroller's findings, and concludes that the merger does not violate the antitrust standards of the 1966 Amendment, [*884] it is unnecessary to inquire whether any anticompetitive effects are outweighed by the convenience and needs of the community. However, the Court is of the opinion that the [45] preponderance of the evidence supports the Comptroller's finding that the convenience and needs of the community and the public interest will be far better served by Third National Bank with the additional assets which it acquired as a result of the merger than would be the case by maintaining the Trust Company as a separate institution. The Trust Company had simply reached a period of imminent deterioration. It was at the time of the merger a "floundering" bank, though not a failing one. It was no longer capable under its existing ownership and management, and with its existing facilities, procedures, and attitudes to serve the public on a competitive basis with other banks in the market area. It was more attuned to the Victorian age which gave it birth than to the competitive realities of 20th Century commercial banking.

The Court will presently enter and file with the Clerk detailed findings of fact and conclusions of law to implement and supplement this opinion. Pending such filing, entry of final judgment denying the relief sought by the complaint will be withheld.

Lloyd A. Fry Roofing Co. v. Federal Trade Com.

United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit

December 28, 1966

No. 15389

Reporter

371 F.2d 277 *; 1966 U.S. App. LEXIS 3886 ; 1966 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,964

Lloyd A. Fry Roofing Company, a corporation, and Lloyd A. Fry, Sr. and Lloyd A. Fry, Jr. v. Federal Trade Commission

Subsequent History: [1] Amended February 13, 1967

Core Terms

prices, majors, competitors, price discrimination, asphalt, Robinson-Patman Act, territorial, roofing, discriminatory, price reduction, practices, predatory, saturated, lower price, purchaser, cases, market area, manufacturers, customers, subpoenas, dealers, certiorari denied, high prices, list price, low price, interlocutory, appeals, roll

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN1[] Price Discrimination, Competitive Injuries

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 13(a).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > Primary Line Injuries

HN2[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Robinson-Patman Act

Territorial price differences are not invalid per se, for 15 U.S.C.S. § 13(a) requires that there be a reasonable probability of injury to competition. Injury to a competitor is not the test; the test is injury to competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Coverage > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > Primary Line Injuries

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN3[] Robinson-Patman Act, Coverage

In most cases under § 2(a) of the Clayton Act (the Act), 15 U.S.C.S. § 13(a), a violation cannot be established without a close study of the market, including data as to the discriminator's share of the market. However, in cases of predatory intent, injury to even a single competitor brings the Act into play.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > Primary Line Injuries

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN4[] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

In the absence of predation, market analysis is needed to show a violation of § 2(a) of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13(a), in primary line cases.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Torts > Negligence > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

Torts > Public Entity Liability > Liability > General Overview

HN5[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

The law of negligence imposes liability on an individual if his conduct is a substantial factor in bringing about the harm. The principle applies to price discrimination because under § 2(a) of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13(a), there need be only a reasonable probability that the injury is the effect of the discrimination.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Discrimination > Competitive Injuries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > General Overview

HN6[] Robinson-Patman Act, Claims

Selective price reductions by a price leader to punish deviation from an industry price is itself anti-competitive conduct.

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > Reviewability > Exhaustion of Remedies

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Exhaustion of Remedies > Administrative Remedies

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Exhaustion of Remedies > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Appellate Jurisdiction > Interlocutory Orders

HN7[] Reviewability, Exhaustion of Remedies

A petitioner must exhaust its administrative remedy by complaining of interlocutory rulings in an administrative tribunal.

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > Standards of Review > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Federal Trade Commission Actions > Investigations > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Discovery & Disclosure > Discovery > Subpoenas

HN8[] Judicial Review, Standards of Review

Unless arbitrary nor unsupported by the record, an administrative agency's rulings as to subpoenas will not be disturbed on appeal.

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > Reviewability > Preservation for Review

HN9[] Reviewability, Preservation for Review

If an administrative agency did not have an opportunity to consider a matter, it may not be raised on appeal.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Federal Trade Commission Actions > Remedial Powers > General Overview

HN10[] US Federal Trade Commission Actions, Remedial Powers

The inclusion of individuals in cease and desist orders is approved where the individuals set the corporate policies and review the practices.

Judges: Schnackenberg, Swygert and Cummings, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: CUMMINGS

Opinion

[*279] CUMMINGS, Circuit Judge:

This case arises on a petition to review a determination of the Federal Trade Commission that Lloyd A. Fry Roofing Company and two of its officers violated Section 2(a) of the Clayton Act (15 USC § 13(a)) by engaging in territorial price discriminations. [1] The Commission's opinion is reported in 3 Trade Regulation Reporter para. 17,303 (1965). The pertinent parts of its findings are summarized here.

Lloyd A. Fry Roofing Company ("Fry") is a Delaware corporation with its principal office and place of business in Summit, Illinois. Fry is the nation's largest producer of asphalt roofing products. There are nine other major manufacturers of asphalt roofing products and [2] a large group of smaller manufacturers, the independents.

[*280] In 1956-1960, Fry operated 19 asphalt plants throughout the United States. In 1958, it sold 14.2% of the nation's asphalt saturated felt, the product involved in the proceedings before the Commission. Asphalt saturated felt is used in the roofing industry as a moisture barrier under shingles. It is also used on "built-up" roofs which consist of several layers of such felt bonded together with hot asphalt.

Roughly, Fry's customers are classified into wholesalers and retail dealers. One of Fry's principal customers is Sears Roebuck & Co., a retailer purchasing at wholesale prices totaling $5,000,000 per annum during 1956 through 1960.

Before February 1956, Fry sold at prices five to seven percent below the other majors' published prices. However, in this industry, published prices are not always the actual prices but are varied to meet competitive needs.

In February 1956, Fry revised its price schedule. It increased its prices everywhere in the United States east of the Rockies. The new price list was based on freight equalization factors. In Knoxville, Tennessee, the critical market area here, [2] the [3] new list price was $2.55 per roll for 60-pound rolls of 15 and 30-pound asphalt saturated felt. [3] The other majors followed this price change, and also made Knoxville a factory point for pricing.

---

[1] A charge that Fry sold below cost in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. § 45) was dismissed for want of proof.

[2] Throughout this opinion, the Knoxville market area refers to that area within 100 miles of Knoxville. Until 1960, it was served by Fry's Brookville, Indiana, plant and thereafter by its Memphis plant. Fry's customers in the Knoxville area included three distributors in Knoxville, two in Chattanooga, and one in Kingsport, Tennessee. All were "approved distributors" and were substantial customers of Fry.

[3] A 10% discount was given on truckload or carload purchases and, in certain circumstances, an additional 6% was given on such purchases by "approved distributors ".

In the Knoxville, Tennessee, market area, two of Fry's competitors were Volasco Products Company and The Ohio Paper Company. Volasco was organized in 1955 to manufacture and sell asphalt roofing products. Its plant was in Knoxville, Tennessee, [4] and its principal competitors included Fry and the other nine majors and The Ohio Paper Company, another independent. The Commission found that because of Volasco's natural freight advantage, it could profitably sell to dealers within the Knoxville market area in less than carload shipments at prices substantially lower than Fry's delivered prices for similar quantities there.

The Ohio Paper Company is located in Miamisburg, Ohio, and sold asphalt saturated felt in eastern Tennessee from 1955 to 1958 at 5% below the published prices of the majors. However, it stopped doing business in Tennessee in 1958 because prices were so low that it would be selling at a loss. It blamed Fry's low prices for its withdrawal from Tennessee.

From February to November 1956, Volasco was selling felt to dealers in less than carload lots in the Knoxville area at prices ranging from $2.01 to $2.25 per roll. In August 1956, Fry's list price in Knoxville was $2.62 per roll. However, on November 1, 1956, Fry lowered its list price to $2.36 per roll less a 5% secret rebate. The Commission found that Fry's prices to Knoxville customers were subsequently at or below Volasco's costs. During the relevant [5] period, Fry's prices on asphalt saturated felt were higher in other felt factory areas than in the Knoxville area. In fact, until February 1, 1960, Fry maintained a price difference between Knoxville and other felt factory markets east of the Rockies.

Before November 1956, Volasco's sales of asphalt saturated felt had been increasing. Thereafter its sales diminished. Finally, because of low prices, Volasco sold felt only to its established customers instead of seeking new business.

The Commission found that Fry's February 1956 zoning price system was [*281] adopted to combat price competition, and that this price increase was adopted the following day by all majors. However, the independents continued to sell below the majors' published prices. Consequently, in April 1956, Fry's president agreed to "take corrective action" if the market did not become stabilized within 30 days. In the Knoxville market area, Volasco and Ohio Paper continued to sell at lower prices, and Fry took its "corrective" list price reduction there in November 1956. The Commission also found that Volasco's presence in Knoxville prompted Fry and the other majors to adopt their discriminatory price [6] reductions and to make Knoxville a delivered-price basing point. The majors continued to maintain higher prices in areas where they were not competing with Volasco or other small independents.

The Commission found that Fry had initiated the price reduction of March 3, 1958, reducing prices to their lowest level in the Knoxville area. The Commission concluded that in making the Knoxville area discriminations, Fry had acted with predatory intent, with the purpose of disciplining small independent concerns selling below the prices established by Fry and followed by the other majors. The Commission rejected Fry's contentions that Volasco's losses were due to causes other than the territorial price discriminations.

The Commission concluded that there was a reasonable possibility that independents would be eliminated or seriously debilitated by Fry's discriminatory practices, and that their removal as viable competitors would adversely affect price competition generally in the Knoxville area and substantially injure competition with Fry. Finally, it rejected Fry's claim that its discriminatory lower prices in the Knoxville area were made in good faith to meet competition, as permitted [7] by Section 2(b) of the Robinson-Patman Act (15 USC § 13(b)). Fry has not reiterated that defense here.

Territorial Price Discriminations.

HN1[] The relevant portion of Section 2(a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, provides (15 USC § 13(a)):

> "It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, either directly or indirectly, to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality, where either or any of the purchases involved in such discrimination are in commerce, where such commodities are sold for use, consumption, or resale within the United States or any Territory thereof or the District of Columbia or any insular possession or other place under the jurisdiction of the United States, and where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with customers of either of them * * *." [8]

One of the purposes of this provision is to protect manufacturers from discriminatory practices of their competitors. Its viability in primary line competition cases was reiterated in Federal Trade Commission v. Anheuser - Busch, Inc., 363 U.S. 536, 544-545, 80 S. Ct. 1267, 4 L. Ed. 2d 1385. As Commissioner Elman's concurring opinion observes in the present case, HN2[] territorial price differences are not invalid per se, for the statute requires that there be a reasonable probability of injury to competition. Injury to a competitor is not the test; the test is injury to competition.

HN3[] In most primary line cases under this statute, a violation cannot be established without a close study of the market, including data as to the discriminator's share of the market. However, in cases of predatory intent, "injury to even a single competitor should bring the Act into play ". Attorney General's National Committee to Study the Antitrust Laws (1955) p. 165; Rowe, Price Discrimination under the Robinson-Patman Act (1962) pp. 145, 149. An intent to harm competitors distinguishes anti-competitive [*282] price cutting from competitive activity not meant to be prohibited [9] per se by the Robinson-Patman Act. An illicit intent serves to show the substantiality and probability of the competitive effects that may result from the price reductions. If, as here, the price reductions are substantial and prolonged, it is proper to invoke the statute to curb the discriminatory pricing. Sunderland, "Territorial Price Differentials Under the Robinson-Patman Act ", 41 Chicago Bar Record 121, 128 (1959); Edwards, Maintaining Competition (1949) p. 170, note 75.

Since the Commission's finding of Fry's predatory intent is supported by the record, we conclude that it was unnecessary for the Commission to engage in an elaborate market study. As this Court stated in Anheuser-Busch, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 289 F.2d 835, 843 (7th Cir. 1961):

"If * * * the projection to ascertain the future effect of the price reductions made by the territorial price discriminator is based upon predatoriness or buccaneering, it can reasonably be forecast that an adverse effect on competition may occur. In that event, the discriminations in their incipiency are such that they may have the prescribed effect to establish a violation of § 2(a). If [10] one engages in the latter type of pricing activity, a reasonable probability may be inferred that its willful misconduct may substantially lessen, injure, destroy or prevent competition."

See also Note, "Competitive Injury under the Robinson-Patman Act", 74 Harv. L. Rev. 1597, 1609 (1961); Von Kalinowski, "Price Discrimination and Competitive Effects", 17 ABA Antitrust Section 360, 366-368 (1960). HN4[] In the absence of predation, market analysis is needed to show a violation of Section 2(a) in primary line cases. Rowe, op. cit., pp. 150-151.

The Commission's finding that Fry acted with predatory intent is supported by the evidence. Thus the record shows that during the early 1950's, asphalt saturated felt capacity exceeded the demand, and a number of small independent manufacturers offered vigorous competition to the majors. Various large customers were able to compel low prices on this product. All this resulted in intense price competition by 1956.

When Fry inaugurated its February 1956 basing point price increase, its president described the current price fluctuations as emanating from "lack of confidence in each other". Fry submitted the February [11] 1956 price schedule as its answer to the marketing situation. The day after Fry's new pricing system became effective, all the majors adopted it, one of them noting that the effect would be "to increase prices substantially."

Mr. Musico, manager of the Fry plant which served the Knoxville area, described the February 1956 plan as one to "clean up all this mess" and noted that it had been adopted by the entire industry. Under that plan, he concluded that the roofing industry's house "will be clean, for the first time, as certainly there is no room for any such chiseling."

Although the majors were willing to match each other's higher prices, by February 1956, the independents were quoting lower prices on less than carload lots. Low prices of independents prompted Fry's president to write that Fry "will take corrective action" in the event that the independents would not raise their prices.

After Fry adopted the February 1956 higher price system, Volasco and Ohio Paper Company continued to sell below the prices adopted by Fry and the other majors in the Knoxville area. On November 1, 1956, Fry inaugurated lower Knoxville list prices than it maintained in Chicago and other felt [12] factory areas where only majors were competing with it. Until February 1, 1960, Fry continued to maintain lower prices in the Knoxville area than in those other areas. Fry's consistent undercutting of Volasco's prices permits an inference of predatory purpose. Rowe, Price Discrimination [*283] under the Robinson-Patman Act (1962) pp. 146-147; Sunderland, "Territorial Price Differentials Under the Robinson-Patman Act," 41 Chicago Bar Record 121, 128 (1959). Moreover, Fry knowingly undercut its competitors' prices; its prices were not made to meet competition. [4]

The following price table [5] depicts significant examples of Fry's and Volasco's prices from February 1956 to August 1958:

Time	Fry's List	Fry's Dealer	Fry's "Approved Distributors"	Volasco's Range
2-19-56-4-18-56	$2.55	$2.25	$2.11	$2.01-2.14
4-19-56-6-14-56	2.62	2.25	2.11	2.01-2.25
6-15-56-8-13-56	2.62	2.17	2.17	2.10-2.25
8-14-56-10-31-56	2.62	2.01	2.01	2.10-2.25 (Sizeable sales to McClung at 2.00)
11-1-56-2-3-57	2.36	2.24	2.02	1.99-2.25
2-4-57-3-15-57	2.17	2.06	1.86	1.99-2.20
7-18-57-8-18-57	2.54	2.12	1.89	1.99-2.00
3-3-58-	3.60	1.69	1.52	1.73-1.90

[4] Fry has not challenged the Commission's ruling that its price discriminations were not made in good faith to meet competition within the proviso in Section 2(b) of the Robinson-Patman Act.

[5] The Fry prices to dealers and "approved distributors" are computed by deducting all discounts for which they are eligible from the list price. Volasco's prices are taken from its sales records. They are not exactly comparable to Fry's dealer prices because almost all of Volasco's sales are such that if they had been made by Fry, the buyer would not be entitled to any quantity discount. Volasco made isolated sales outside the price ranges as listed here. To use them as the limits of the price range would be to present a distorted picture of Volasco's sales activity.

Time	Fry's List	Fry's Dealer	Fry's "Approved Distributors"	Volasco's Range
4-3-58
4-4-58-8-31-58	3.60	1.69	1.52	1.62-1.73

[13]

After March 1958 and for at least six months, Fry's above-shown dealer and "approved distributor" prices were below Volasco's costs, thus amply demonstrating the deep and sustained nature of Fry's price cutting. Although the price differential between Knoxville and Chicago decreased during this time, nevertheless, it remained substantial (27 cents for "approved distributors" vice 36 cents). Another indication of Fry's motivation to discipline [14] the small independents is its grant of a 52% discount to dealers and "approved distributors" in the Knoxville [*284] market area (and other areas served by independents during this same period), which is the largest discount that it gave east of the Rockies (apart from certain areas of New York State).

The Commission also found that Fry was the price leader and was responsible for its own and other majors' discriminatory low prices. Fry initiated the November 1956 list price reduction and almost all the later reductions. Even though some of the other majors were also discriminators, [6] that of course does not absolve Fry. HN5[] The law of negligence imposes liability on an individual if his "conduct is a substantial factor in bringing about the harm * * *." A.L.I. Restatement of the Law of Torts (2d) § 431. The principle surely applies to price discrimination because under Section 2(a) there need be only a reasonable probability that the injury is the effect of the discrimination. Minneapolis-Honeywell Regulator Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 191 F.2d 786, 792 (7th Cir. 1951), certiorari dismissed, [15] 344 U.S. 206, 73 S. Ct. 245, 97 L. Ed. 245.

The record reveals that Fry was the instigator of the majors' price changes during the relevant period. Thus we have seen that the other majors adopted Fry's basing point pricing system the day after it became effective. They also copied most of Fry's subsequent price changes. Officers of The Ruberoid Company (one of the majors), Volasco and Ohio Paper Company testified that Fry had been the price leader, and upon inquiry, Fry's chairman did not deny this. It is clear that Fry created and maintained the discriminatory system. As stated by the American Bar Association's Section of Antitrust Law, "There was no question that competitive injury resulted to the two competitors Volasco and Ohio Paper as the result of Fry's price discriminations. [16] " 31 ABA Antitrust Section 93 (1966).

In view of Fry's predatory intent and price leadership, the Commission properly concluded that the effect of Fry's territorial price discriminations might substantially lessen competition within the meaning of Section 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act. Federal Trade Commission v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc., 363 U.S. 536, 552, 80 S. Ct. 1267, 4 L. Ed. 2d 1385. In this connection, it should be noted that in reviewing a similar record, another Court of Appeals has held that there was sufficient evidence of Fry's violation of Section 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Act to submit to a jury. Volasco Products Company v. Lloyd A. Fry Roofing Company, 346 F.2d 661 (6th Cir. 1965), certiorari denied, 382 U.S. 904, 15 L. Ed. 2d 157, 86 S. Ct. 239. [7] Since like evidence was deemed sufficient to go to the jury, it was also sufficient to support the Commission's determination here. Universal Camera Corp. v. National Labor Relations Board, 340 U.S. 474, 477, 71 S. Ct. 456, 95 L. Ed. 456.

---

[6] At the oral argument, the Court was advised that the Commission has cases in process against other roofing manufacturers. Cf. Universal-Rundle Corp. v. Federal Trade Commission, 352 F.2d 831 (7th Cir. 1965).

[7] In the Volasco case, the jury rendered a verdict against Fry. A treble judgment was entered for Volasco, and that judgment was affirmed.

[17] Because we agree that Fry's discriminatory price reductions in the Knoxville market area were motivated by predatory intent, it is unnecessary to examine their effect upon competition in detail. Yet it should be observed that Volasco and Ohio were the main independents operating in this area and had both refused to adhere to the majors' prices. Since Volasco and Ohio Paper were the principal competitors of the majors in this area, their removal would certainly have an adverse effect on price competition generally in that market. In other words, in this particular market, there were only two important price competitors of the majors, and the area price discriminations were directed at their practices. In such a situation, the injury to the two independents qualifies as [*285] injury to competition. Porto Rican American Tobacco Co. v. American Tobacco Co., 30 F.2d 234 (2d Cir. 1929), certiorari denied 279 U.S. 858, 73 L. Ed. 999, 49 S. Ct. 353, is the classic example of this principle. To the same effect, see [18] Moore v. Mead's Fine Bread Co., 348 U.S. 115, 99 L. Ed. 145, 75 S. Ct. 148; Atlas Building Products Co. v. Diamond Block & Gravel Co., 269 F.2d 950 (10th Cir. 1959), certiorari denied, 363 U.S. 843, 4 L. Ed. 2d 1727, 80 S. Ct. 1608; Maryland Baking Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 243 F.2d 716 (4th Cir. 1957); E. B. Muller & Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 142 F.2d 511 (6th Cir. 1944). HN6[] Selective price reductions by a price leader to punish deviation from an industry price is itself anti-competitive conduct. In such a situation, the actual market results of the price reduction need not be manifest before enforcement of the Act is justified. Note, "Competitive Injury under the Robinson-Patman Act." 74 Harv. L. Rev. 1597, 1602, 1603 (1961).

Petitioners urge that there can be no violation of Section 2(a) in area price discrimination cases unless the Commission finds that the higher prices elsewhere support the lower prices in the market under examination. We have been cited to no authoritative decision to support this view. No such requirement was enunciated in [19] Moore v. Mead's Fine Bread Co., 348 U.S. 115, 99 L. Ed. 145, 75 S. Ct. 148, or E. B. Muller & Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 142 F.2d 511 (6th Cir. 1944). Congress and the cases assume that the "higher price to purchasers supports the lower price to others." Austin, Price Discrimination (2nd Revised ed. 1959) p. 44; see also S. Rep. No. 698, 63d Cong. 2d Sess. pp. 2-3 (1914); H.R. Rep. No. 627, 63d Cong., 2d Sess. p. 8 (1914); S. Rep. No. 1502, 74th Cong. 2d Sess. p. 4 (1936), and H.R. Rep. No. 2287, 74th Cong. 2d Sess. p. 8 (1936).

Relying upon such cases as Balian Ice Cream Co. v. Arden Farms Co., 231 F.2d 356 (9th Cir. 1955), certiorari denied, 350 U.S. 991, 100 L. Ed. 856, 76 S. Ct. 545, and Shore Gas and Oil Co., Inc. v. Humble Oil & Refining Co., 224 F. Supp. 922 (D.N.J. 1963), Fry asserts there was no violation of the statute because its Knoxville prices were not the proximate cause of injury to Volasco and Ohio. But those were private treble damage actions and there plaintiff must of course establish that defendants caused actual damages to them. In the present case, the statute merely requires that [20] the effect of the discrimination "may be substantially to lessen competition." Moreover, two juries have already found on similar evidence that Fry proximately caused actual damages to Volasco. Volasco Products Co. v. Lloyd A. Fry Roofing Co., 308 F.2d 383 (6th Cir. 1962); idem, 346 F.2d 661 (6th Cir. 1965), certiorari denied, 382 U.S. 904, 86 S. Ct. 239, 15 L. Ed. 2d 157.

Procedural Issues

Fry next argues that the Commission's refusal to permit Fry to subpoena pricing documents from its competitors vitiates the Commission's decision. However, the adverse rulings on the subpoenas were made in the course of interlocutory appeals and were not raised by Fry when the case was finally before the Commission for disposition. HN7[] Fry should have exhausted its administrative remedy by then complaining of the interlocutory rulings. It is too late to raise the matter now. See United States v. L.A. Tucker Truck Lines, Inc., 344 U.S. 33, 36-37, 97 L. Ed. 54, 73 S. Ct. 67; Moog Industries, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 355 U.S. 411, 413-414, 2 L. Ed. 2d 370, 78 S. Ct. 377; 3 Davis Administrative Law Treatise, § 20.06 [21] (1958). In any event, the record discloses no abuse by the Commission in denying the interlocutory appeals, for Fry's competitors had shown that production would be burdensome as to time and expense, would reveal vital business information, could not be accomplished within the requested deadline, and that the request for the issuance of six of the seven subpoenas came too late (10 months after complaint counsel had rested). HN8[] Being neither arbitrary nor unsupported by the record, the Commission's rulings as [*286] to the subpoenas will not be disturbed on appeal. Cf. Sue v. Chicago Transit Authority, 279 F.2d 416, 419 (7th Cir. 1960).

Fry also complains of Commission Chairman Dixon's participation in the rulings denying the issuance of subpoenas. At that time, Fry did not request his withdrawal. In the absence of an objection, his withdrawal was not necessitated. Section 7(a) of the Administrative Procedure Act (5 USC § 1006(a)). When the case reached the Commission for consideration of the merits, Fry for the first time moved that Chairman Dixon disqualify himself and he did so sua sponte because he had been counsel to a Senate [22] Judiciary Subcommittee investigating pricing practices of roofing manufacturers. Fry knew of Chairman Dixon's prior role when it had earlier presented to the full Commission its interlocutory appeals with respect to the subpoenas. Its subsequent motion for his disqualification did not complain of his participation in the decision of the interlocutory appeals, nor was any such complaint made when the case came before the Commission for decision on the merits. HN9[] Since the Commission had no opportunity to consider the matter, it may not be raised here. Unemployment Compensation Commission of Alaska v. Aragon, 329 U.S. 143, 155, 91 L. Ed. 136, 67 S. Ct. 245.

Petitioners assert that the Commission's order is improper because it joins Messrs. Fry Senior and Junior in their individual capacities. The cease and desist order refers to them "individually and as officers" of Lloyd A. Fry Roofing Company. Complaint counsel twice proposed their inclusion in the order as individuals, without objection by petitioners. The complaint before the Commission named the Messrs. Fry "individually and as officers" of the corporation. It alleged that they were "personally and officially" [23] responsible for the practices assailed. They are Fry's majority stockholders. Petitioners have not challenged the Commission's findings that these two persons formulate and control Fry's practices and were responsible for and participated in these discriminatory practices. In similar situations, we concluded that individuals responsible for corporate activities may be joined in their individual capacities. Steelco Stainless Steel v. Federal Trade Commission, 187 F.2d 693, 697 (7th Cir. 1951); Surf Sales Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 259 F.2d 744, 747 (7th Cir. 1958). Petitioners rely on Flotill Products Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 358 F.2d 224 (9th Cir. 1966), pending on petition for certiorari, No. 668. October Term 1966, but that record did not show the individuals had violated or could be expected to violate the Clayton Act (p. 233). HN10[] The Ninth Circuit continues to approve the inclusion of individuals in cease and desist orders where, as here, they set the policies and review the practices. [24] Fred Meyer, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 359 F.2d 351, 368 (9th Cir. 1966).

Finally, petitioners attack the Commission's order on the ground that it fails to lay down a standard between permissible and proscribed conduct. The order requires petitioners to cease and desist from selling asphalt saturated felt "to any purchaser at a price which is lower than the price charged any other purchaser at the same level of distribution, where such lower price undercuts the lowest price offered to that purchaser by any seller having a substantially smaller annual volume of sales " of that product. This order was less stringent than proposed by complaint counsel. The Commission modified it to cover only territorial price discrimination that would probably cause the debilitation of smaller and weaker competitors. As Commissioner Elman noted, Fry would probably continue its price tactics unless stopped. This type of order was designed to prevent recurrences of unlawful conduct. It is appropriate because, as he observed, in a market where Fry's price is below its lowest price competitor's, Fry's price is likely to represent another "attempt to discipline an upstart independent. [25] " A similar order was affirmed in *Forster Manufacturing [287] Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 361 F.2d 340, 343 (1st Cir. 1966), cert. denied, 385 U.S. 1003, 87 S. Ct. 706, 17 L. Ed. 2d 542. If situations arise to plague petitioners, they may seek binding advice from the Commission as to the applicability of this order. Federal Trade Commission v. Colgate-Palmolive Co., 380 U.S. 374, 394, 13 L. Ed. 2d 904, 85 S. Ct. 1035. The order is not to be read as forbidding justifiable area price differences.

The petition will be dismissed. The Commission's order is affirmed.

Nichols v. Spencer International Press, Inc.

United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit

January 11, 1967

Nos. 15523, 15526

Reporter

371 F.2d 332 *; 1967 U.S. App. LEXIS 7805 ; 1967 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,974; 2 A.L.R. Fed. 829

Donald F. Nichols, Plaintiff, v. Spencer International Press, Inc., and the Crowell-Collier Publishing Company, et al., Defendants Subsequent History: [1] Petition for Rehearing Reported at 371 F.2d 332 at 337.

Core Terms

no-switching, anti trust law, competitors, practices, employees, damages, impair, violation of antitrust laws, reference book, Clayton Act, certificate, agencies, supplied

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Prioritizing Resources & Organization for Intellectual Property Act

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Remedies > Damages > Punitive Damages

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > Restraints of Trade

HN1[] Private Actions, Prioritizing Resources & Organization for Intellectual Property Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 15.

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > Restraints of Trade

HN2[] Causes of Action, Restraints of Trade

One who has been damaged by loss of employment as a result of a violation of the antitrust laws is injured in his business or property" and thus entitled to recovery under 15 U.S.C.S. § 15.

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > Interference With Business Relations

HN3[] Causes of Action, Interference With Business Relations

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 17.

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Noncompetition & Nondisclosure Agreements

HN4[] Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition, Noncompetition & Nondisclosure Agreements

29 U.S.C.S. § 52 provides that no restraining order or injunction shall be granted in any case, between parties to an employment relationship, involving, or growing out of, a dispute concerning terms or conditions of employment, except under certain conditions. The statute then provides that no such restraining order or injunction shall prohibit any person or persons from ceasing to employ any party to such dispute, or from recommending, advising, or persuading others by peaceful and lawful means so to do. Nor shall any of the acts specified in the statue be considered or held to be violations of any law of the United States.

Judges: Castle, Kiley and Fairchild, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: FAIRCHILD

Opinion

[*333] FAIRCHILD, Circuit Judge:

Action for treble damages under 15 USCA § 15 (§ 4 of the Clayton Act), for alleged violation of 15 USCA §§ 1 and 2 (§§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act). Plaintiff Donald Nichols claims damages resulting from loss of opportunity for employment.

On motions for summary judgment the district court gave judgment dismissing the complaint against defendant Spencer International Press, Inc. ("Spencer"), and entered an order, with respect to the antitrust issues, in favor of defendants Crowell-Collier Publishing Company ("Crowell-Collier") and P. F. Collier, Inc. No judgment was entered as to the latter two defendants because breach of contract claims remain to be tried, but the district court made an appropriate certificate, and this court gave leave to appeal under 28 USCA § 1292(b). Plaintiff appealed from the judgment and the order.

The material facts, appearing in the complaint, [1] are summarized as follows:

Defendants Crowell-Collier [2] and its subsidiary P. F. Collier, Inc., and Grolier, Inc. and its subsidiary, Spencer, are engaged in the sale of encyclopedias and reference books in interstate commerce. P. F. Collier, Inc. employed Nichols as a sales supervisor having charge of particular areas, but summarily discharged him without notice or cause December 10, 1962. Spencer employed him in a similar capacity January 3, 1963, but terminated his employment February 2, 1963, as a result of pressure from P.F. Collier, Inc., and because of a so-called "no-switching" agreement to which these companies are parties. In January, plaintiff had succeeded in persuading a number of sales employees of P. F. Collier, Inc., to resign and apply for employment with Spencer, under plaintiff's supervision.

It is alleged that defendants and [3] others agreed to

---

[1] Material before the court, by affidavit, in addition to the complaint, is of little consequence, and the posture of the case was virtually the same as if defendants had moved to dismiss for failure to state a claim.

> "enter into or give force and effect to so-called 'no-switching' agreements, understandings, practices and policies under which each defendant did and does refuse to permit employees or other sales personnel to go to work for competitors, and did and does refuse to hire employees and sales personnel of any other defendant or of any other competitors who leave or have left the employ of such other defendant or competitor."

It is further alleged that the agreement, together with the dominant position of Crowell-Collier and P. F. Collier, Inc.,

> "placed the plaintiff within the economic power of Crowell-Collier and P. F. Collier. And they exerted that power against the plaintiff as herein alleged to deprive him of his right to change, seek and take employment of his choice among employers in competition with Crowell-Collier and P. F. Collier."

It appears that under the "no-switching" agreement, a party thereto is not to [*334] employ a former employee of another party until six months after the termination of the former employment. Accordingly, Spencer did not again employ plaintiff until August, 1963.

There are also averments [4] that defendants were attempting to monopolize trade and commerce, that they intended that Crowell-Collier should become a "dominant" publisher of encylopedias and reference books, and that the effect of the "no-switching" agreement has been to impair competition among defendants and others. The breadth of these averments seems to have been restricted on oral colloquy in the district court. Plaintiff's counsel indicated that adherence to the "no-switching" agreement affecting freedom of employment was the violation of the antitrust laws being claimed, and that plaintiff was not prepared to establish, beyond that, any agreement or combination in restraint of trade, affecting the business of supplying encyclopedias and reference books.

HN1[] 15 USCA § 15 (§ 4 of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 731) permits "Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws" to recover threefold damages.

Defendants' principal contentions are that the facts claimed with respect to the "no-switching" agreement do not amount to a violation of any antitrust law and that plaintiff's inability to obtain employment is not an injury [5] "in his business or property."

Addressing the second contention first, we readily conclude that HN2[] one who has been damaged by loss of employment as a result of a violation of the antitrust laws is "injured in his business or property" and thus entitled to recovery under 15 USCA § 15. Work as the employee of another is not, indeed, an independent business enterprise, and an opportunity to perform such work may not be property in the ordinary sense, but the interest invaded by a wrongful act resulting in loss of employment is so closely akin to the interest invaded by impairment of one's business as to be indistinguishable in this context.

In Radovich v. National Football League, [2] plaintiff was a professional football player and coach. The supreme court held that his complaint, alleging that he was blacklisted by possible employers as a result of a conspiracy to monopolize interstate commerce in professional football, stated a claim against the alleged conspirators. The contention here made (that one who is damaged by loss of opportunity for employment is not "injured in his business or property") does not appear to have been raised against Radovich. Radovich's [6] claim did, however, rest upon his loss of opportunity to be employed, and the court and the parties must have assumed that such loss falls within the type of injury for which damages may be recovered under 15 USCA § 15. Mr. Justice Clark, writing for the court, did say:

> "Petitioner's claim need only be 'tested under the Sherman Act's general prohibition on unreasonable restraints of trade,' Times-Picayune Publishing Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 614, [97 L. Ed. 1277, 73 S. Ct. 872] (1953), and meet the requirement that petitioner has thereby suffered injury. Congress has, by legislative fiat, determined that such prohibited activities are injurious to the public and has provided sanctions allowing private enforcement of the antitrust laws by an aggrieved party. These laws protect the victims of the forbidden practices as well as the public." [3]

---

[2] (1957), 352 U.S. 445, 77 Sup. Ct. 390, 1 L. Ed. 2d 456.

[7] This court, in 1942, dealt with the claim of a plaintiff who was apparently an independent contractor, rather than an employee, serving as a sales representative. [4] Defendants were manufacturers of fire prevention equipment and fire extinguishers, who combined to suppress competition. Apparently because of unlawful allocations, Roseland was deprived of the opportunity of making sales in particular territories.

[*335] This court held that a plaintiff need not, in order to recover under § 15, carry on a business in competition with violators of the antitrust laws, and suffer injury in such business as a result. "Business" it was said, "denotes 'the employment or occupation in which a person is engaged to procure a living.'" [5] In the light of the remedial purpose of the section, the court concluded that Roseland should not be barred "by what seems to us a strained and unjustified limitation" on the meaning of [8] "business."

In Vines v. General Outdoor Advertising Co., [6] the second circuit concluded that a plaintiff, employed by defendant to solicit orders for advertising might have a valid claim under § 15 if he could show that defendant deprived him of an opportunity to earn by shifting a potential customer to another firm, pursuant to an agreement which violated the antitrust laws.

The question whether the complaint here shows a substantive violation of the antitrust laws is more difficult. In Radovich, Roseland, and Vines, there were, or were assumed to be, a monopoly of or an agreement in restraint of trade in the service or commodity supplied by the particular enterprises. Thus violations of the antitrust laws were present, and loss of [9] employment opportunity caused by such violations provided the basis for recovery.

Defendants here point out that the only allegedly unlawful agreement among defendants is the so-called "no-switching" agreement, requiring them to refuse for a period to employ former employees of competitors. [7] Defendants rely primarily upon two provisions of the Clayton Act to demonstrate, as a matter of law, that such agreements cannot amount to a violation of the "antitrust laws" (defined in the Clayton Act to include the Sherman Act, the Clayton Act, and certain others).

The first provision relied on is § 6. [8] The readily apparent purpose of this section is to permit the existence of labor and certain other mutual help organizations without being deemed combinations or conspiracies in restraint of trade. Except that the first sentence indicates that an agreement restraining freedom with respect to employment of labor is not, as such, a violation [10] of the antitrust laws, § 6 has no application to the situation before us.

---

[3] Id. 352 U.S. at 453-4.

[4] Roseland v. Phister Mfg. Co. (7th Cir. 1942), 125 F.2d 417, 139 A.L.R. 1013.

[5] Id. 125 F.2d at 419.

[6] (2d Cir. 1948), 171 F.2d 487, 491.

[7] Monopoly or attempt to monopolize is charged only in general terms.

[8] Now HN3[] 15 USCA § 17, providing as follows: "The labor of a human being is not a commodity or article of commerce. Nothing contained in the antitrust laws shall be construed to forbid the existence and operation of labor, agricultural, or horticultural organizations, instituted for the purposes of mutual help, and not having capital stock or conducted for profit, or to forbid or restrain individual members of such organizations from lawfully carrying out the legitimate objects thereof; nor shall such organizations, or the members thereof, be held or construed to be illegal combinations or conspiracies in restraint of trade, under the antitrust laws."

The other provision relied on is § 20. [9] This section protects the freedom of parties to labor disputes to employ the tactics described, in resolving such disputes, and to prohibit or minimize judicial interference with such activities. It is inapposite in the instant [11] case.

Granting that the antitrust laws were not enacted for the purpose of preserving freedom in the labor market, [*336] nor of regulating employment practices as such, nevertheless it seems clear that agreements [12] among supposed competitors not to employ each other's employees not only restrict freedom to enter into employment relationships, but may also, depending upon the circumstances, impair full and free competition in the supply of a service or commodity to the public.

For example, the service supplied to the public by a professional football club is highly dependent upon the ability of the players employed by the club, and a black-listing agreement, such as involved in Radovich, is, from the point of view of the public, an impairment of competition as to the quality of the service supplied, even though, as between player and club it is only a restriction on freedom to employ. [10]

[13] The second circuit discerned a similar restraint upon competition in a "no-switching" agreement between employees who sold magazines, door to door. In Union Circulation Co. v. FTC, [11] petitioners were charged with engaging in unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in violation of 15 USCA § 45(a) (§ 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act). Petitioners were agencies engaged in the business of selling subscriptions for magazines and periodicals by door-to-door solicitation who entered into "no-switching" agreements "solely in order to prevent the fraudulent practices of certain crew members ". Apparently the magazine-selling industry had been "undermined by the deceptive selling practices and other fraudulent conduct of many of the solicitors in the field" and the companies contended that these agreements helped them maintain agency discipline and standards by reducing employee mobility between agencies. Presumably a solicitor was more amenable to discipline if he knew he couldn't switch jobs easily. Each signatory agreed not to hire each other's ex-employees until one year after the employee's termination.

[14] An examiner held that the "no-switching" agreements were a reasonable attempt at self regulation. The commission reversed. The court of appeals affirmed, holding the "agreements, in the context of the industry affected, to be harmful to competition, and therefore an unreasonable restraint of trade within the meaning of the Sherman Act. . . ."

> " . . . Here it appears that the reasonably foreseeable effect of the 'no-switching' agreements will be to impair or diminish competition between existing subscription agencies, and to prevent would-be competitors from engaging in similar activity. One probable result of the agreements, because entered into by organizations that represent a very substantial segment of the industry, will be to 'freeze' the labor supply, which is the indispensable element of the door-to-door magazine-selling trade. Although only the signatory agencies are bound by the agreements, a crew member working for one of them will hesitate to leave his employer in order

---

[9] Now HN4[] 29 USCA § 52. In its first paragraph, this section provides that "No restraining order or injunction shall be granted" in any case, between parties to an employment relationship, "involving, or growing out of, a dispute concerning terms or conditions of employment," except under certain conditions. The second paragraph provides, in part, that "no such restraining order or injunction shall prohibit any person or persons . . . from ceasing . . . to employ any party to such dispute, or from recommending, advising, or persuading others by peaceful and lawful means so to do. " Reliance is principally placed on the last clause of this paragraph "nor shall any of the acts specified in this paragraph be considered or held to be violations of any law of the United States."

[10] Since Radovich, Congress has exempted from the antitrust laws two types of joint agreements among persons engaged in organized professional team sports. One type of exempted agreement concerns sponsored telecasting of games (75 Stat. 732, 15 USCA § 1291 (1961)). The other concerns the combination of two or more professional football leagues in an expanded single league, if such agreement increases the number of clubs (P.L. 89-800, 1966, 80 Stat. 1508, 15 USCA § 1291).

[11] (2d Cir. 1957), 241 F.2d 652.

> to join a newly formed competitor, or an expanding established one, if he knows that he may be out of work for a year in the event that the latter agency does not prove to be successful. The tendency [15] of the 'no-switching' agreements is to discourage labor mobility, and thereby the magazine-selling industry may well become static in its composition to the obvious advantage of the large, well-established signatory agencies and to the disadvantage of infant organizations." [12]

The United States Supreme Court has seldom considered, in light of the antitrust laws, the validity of employer agreements directed solely at industry employment practices. In Anderson v. Shipowners [*337] Ass'n of the Pacific Coast, [13] the defendant associations, alleged to be dominant, required every prospective seaman to register with them. A registration certificate was issued to each seaman reciting in part that no person would be employed unless registered, that the certificate must be delivered to the master of the vessel, and that the certificate was the personal record of the seaman and the basis of his future employment. All association members were bound to hire in accordance [16] with the terms of the certificate. The question reached the Supreme Court after the district court granted a motion to dismiss. The court reversed, stating:

> " . . . each shipowner and operator in this widespread combination has surrendered his freedom of action in the matter of employing seamen and agreed to abide by the will of the associations. . . . These shipowners and operators having thus put themselves into a situation of restraint upon their freedom to carry on interstate and foreign commerce according to their own choice and discretion, it follows, as the case now stands, that the combination is in violation of the Anti-Trust Act." [14]

We cannot say, as a matter of law, that the effect of the "no-switching" agreement, challenged in this case, upon the business of supplying encyclopedias and reference books is so negligible that the agreement is not a restraint of trade [17] in such products. We deem it error to have granted summary judgment upon the antitrust issues without further inquiry into the facts. As noted above, the posture of this case is such that granting summary judgment is tantamount to holding that the complaint failed to state a claim.

If, from the facts developed upon further proceedings, it does appear that the "no-switching" agreement impairs competition in the supply of encyclopedias and reference books, a question of degree may well arise, or of whether reasonable latitude may be afforded to protect some legitimate interest of the employers. Reasonableness was explored in Union Circulation Co. v. FTC [15] and in a British decision. [16] Agreements not to compete are tested by a standard of reasonableness. We do not attempt to deal with questions of this type at this stage of the proceeding.

The judgment and order appealed from are [18] reversed and the cause remanded for further proceedings.

---

[12] Id. 241 F.2d at 658.

[13] (1926), 272 U.S. 359, 47 Sup. Ct. 125, 71 L. Ed. 298.

[14] Id. 272 U.S. at 364-5.

[15] (2d Cir. 1957), 241 F.2d 652, 656-7.

[16] Kores Manufacturing Co., Ltd. v. Kolok, (1959) Ch. 108 (C.A.).

K-91, Inc. v. Gershwin Publ'g. Corp.

United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

January 13, 1967

No. 20,074

Reporter

372 F.2d 1 *; 1967 U.S. App. LEXIS 7779 ; 152 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) 375 ; 1967 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,979

K-91, Inc., Appellant v. Gershwin Publishing Corporation et al., Appellee

Core Terms

license, anti trust law, broadcasters, music, compositions, fact finding, blanket, district court, musical composition, consent decree, repertory, trial court, publisher, radio, license fee, infringement, violations, composer, licensee, stations

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Defenses > General Overview

HN1[] Intellectual Property, Misuse of Rights

Copyrighted music and drama are protected by Wash. Rev. Code § 19.24.010 (1957), but Wash. Rev. Code § 19.24.020 (1957) makes unlawful certain combinations of copyright owners.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Defenses > General Overview

HN2[] Intellectual Property, Misuse of Rights

See Wash. Rev. Code § 19.24.020 (1957).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Defenses > General Overview

HN3[] Intellectual Property, Misuse of Rights

When copyrights are pooled, Wash. Rev. Code § 19.24.020 (1957) requires a complete detailed list of the works to be filed each year, together with a list of prices charged or demanded, with the Washington Secretary of State. Wash. Rev. Code § 19.24.055 (1957) requires such a list if the music is used commercially within the state, or originates or is heard therein.

Judges: [1] Barnes, Koelsch and Duniway, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: BARNES

Opinion

[*375] [*2] BARNES, Circuit Judge.

This is an appeal in a civil non-jury case from a judgment in favor of the appellees, the owners of copyrights on various musical compositions. Appellant, a radio station operator in the State of Washington, played these musical compositions on the air without the permission or consent of the appellees. Appellees filed a complaint, under 17 U.S.C. §§ 1, 101, seeking damages for and an injunction against such infringement. Appellees prevailed, and the court below entered judgment awarding them $1,000 damages and enjoining further infringement. The trial court had jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. §§ 1337, 1338, and we have jurisdiction of the appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 1291.

Appellant, both in the trial below and on oral argument before this court, admitted the expropriation and infringement of appellees' copyrights, but claimed appellees were misusing their copyrights in violation of public policy generally, and particularly in violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2. [2] Therefore, appellant contended, no relief should be granted because appellees had come into court with unclean hands. It was charged that appellees had, between themselves and in conjunction with the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers (hereinafter "ASCAP"), conspired to fix prices and to engage in other unlawful practices, in violation of (a) the Sherman and Clayton Acts, and (b) the laws of the State of Washington, particularly R.C.W. § 19.24.020. Appellant also counterclaimed seeking treble damages and an injunction against further misuse of the copyrights. Fed. R. Civ. P. 13(a), 15 U.S.C. §§ 15, 26. This relief was denied.

This case cannot be understood without an analysis of the role of ASCAP. ASCAP is an unincorporated membership association comprising over 8000 author, composer and publisher members who own copyrights on various separate musical compositions. (Finding of Fact No. 16, C.T. p. 196.) ASCAP functions as a licensing agency for the composers, authors and publishers. When someone in the professional entertainment field wants to perform a copyrighted piece, they merely secure a license from ASCAP rather than seeking out [3] the individual composer, author and/or publisher whose work they want to perform. ASCAP charges a fee or [376] royalty for the license, and its members periodically receive royalty distributions from ASCAP.

In the 1940's the Justice Department became concerned over the operations of ASCAP and its overwhelming position in the entertainment field. Suit was brought under the antitrust laws to prevent restraints of trade by ASCAP, which resulted in the Amended Final Judgment of March 14, 1950, in the United States District Court for the [*3] Southern District of New York in Civil Case No. 13-95, 1960 Trade Cases para. 69,612 (S.D.N.Y.). There is no claim in this case that ASCAP and appellees, ASCAP members, have not conformed to the terms of the Amended Final Judgment.

We note three specific requirements of the Amended Final Judgment:

(1) The rights acquired by ASCAP to license the public performance of copyrighted compositions must be nonexclusive;

(2) The license fees or royalties must be reasonable, and if there is a dispute as to the reasonableness of the proposed fee, the fee will be set by the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York; [4] and

(3) A license must be granted on the same terms and conditions to all applicants similarly situated.

Basically, appellant challenges the lower court result in three aspects: (a) failure to make certain findings of fact; (b) failure to find violations of the federal antitrust laws; and (c) failure to find violations of the Washington State antitrust laws. We treat them in that order.

I. Failures to Make Certain Findings

Appellant lists eight examples of the court's failure to find. Among them are the facts that: the ASCAP repertory (inventory of copyrighted compositions) includes more than a million musical compositions; that ASCAP is managed by a Board of Directors which sets the fees for its licenses; that music is a necessity to the broadcasting industry within the State of Washington and throughout the United States; and that each musical copyright is unique. We think that in view of the detailed findings of fact and conclusions of law made by the trier of fact (C.T. pp. 193-217), these eight examples (four of which we have cited) of the failure to make specific findings, are without enough substantial merit to constitute reversible error.

Instead of finding [5] that one million musical compositions were controlled by ASCAP, the court found that ASCAP is made up of over 8000 members (Finding of Fact No. 16, C.T. p. 196); is but one of three music licensing organizations in the United States, which together license substantially all of the copyrighted musical works in the United States (Finding of Fact No. 18, C.T. pp. 196-97); and that fifty per cent of all performances of copyrighted music by broadcasting stations are performances of compositions which ASCAP members have created (Ibid.) That "music is a necessity to the broadcasting industry" paraphrases the trial judge's remark that "music is an essential part of the operation of a radio station." (R.T. p. 6) While the statement may not be completely true in this modern age of "two-way radio" or "conversation programs ", it has been only too evident to listeners for many years. We can likewise assume that "each musical copyright is unique ", though not with the same uniqueness as is implied in a patented article. Cf. Alfred Bell & Co. v. Catalda Fine Arts, 191 F.2d 99 (2d Cir. 1951).

As to each of the stipulated facts which appellant claims should have been specifically [6] found as facts by the trial court, we find they were either immaterial or redundant in light of the findings made. (The trial judge, on motion for a new trial, found they were "repetitious or irrelevant." (R.T. p. 251.)) There was no error in this regard.

II. ASCAP and the Federal Antitrust Laws

This litigation skirts a very perplexing problem long existing in federal antitrust law, to wit, the extent to which relief, if any, should be granted against a business for conduct which is permissible under the terms of a judicially approved consent decree. Put another way, the question is whether a consent decree by its terms can immunize against further prosecution for violation of the antitrust laws. Fortunately, however, the present case does not call for an answer to this question.

At the beginning of this litigation there were three possible results for appellant's [*4] counterclaim based on federal antitrust violations. The court could have found: (1) that there were in fact no violations of the federal antitrust laws; (2) that federal antitrust laws were violated, but since the conduct of the appellees conformed to the earlier consent decree no remedy was available; [7] or (3) that the federal antitrust laws were violated and that the earlier consent decree offered no protection, granting relief to the appellant on its counterclaim. While either of the last two possibilities would have squarely raised the question of immunity deriving from the earlier consent decree, it [377] was the first possibility which actually occurred. Since the trial court found no violations of the federal antitrust laws, [1] we do not reach the question of whether activities which would otherwise be a violation of the antitrust laws could be rendered immune because consistent with the terms of the consent decree.

We agree with the trial court that the activities of ASCAP do not constitute a combination in restraint of trade or a monopoly within the meaning of the Sherman Act. ASCAP is certainly a combination, but not every combination is a combination in restraint of trade or a monopoly. ASCAP cannot be accused of fixing prices because every applicant [8] to ASCAP has a right under the consent decree to invoke the authority of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York to fix a reasonable fee whenever the applicant believes that the price proposed by ASCAP is unreasonable, and ASCAP has the burden of proving the price reasonable. In other words, so long as ASCAP complies with the decree, it is not the price fixing authority. We cannot agree with the contention that the danger of unreasonable activity that might arise from ASCAP's activities makes everything that it does a violation of the antitrust laws, when those of its potential activities that might have this effect are prohibited by the decree. No contention is here made that ASCAP's actual activities do not comply with the decree. In short, we think that as a potential combination in restraint of trade, ASCAP has been "disinfected" by the decree.

---

[1] Conclusions of Law Nos. 15 and 16, C.T. p. 214.

There is an additional reason why the activities disclosed by this record do not violate the antitrust laws. ASCAP's licensing authority is not exclusive. The right of the individual composer, author or publisher to make his own arrangements with prospective licensees, and the right of such prospective [9] licensees to seek individual arrangements, are fully preserved. There was no error in the trial court's finding that appellees have not violated the federal antitrust laws.

III. ASCAP and the Washington State Antitrust Laws

The State of Washington has certain antitrust laws relating to copyrights. HN1[] Copyrighted music and drama are protected by R.C.W. § 19.24.010 (1957), but HN2[] R.C.W. § 19.24.020 (1957) makes unlawful certain combinations of copyright owners. The latter section provides in part:

> "It shall be unlawful for two or more persons holding or claiming separate copyrighted works under the copyright laws of the United States, either within or without the state, to band together, or to pool their interests for the purpose of fixing the prices on the use of said copyrighted works, or to pool their separate interests or to conspire, federate, or join together, for the purpose of collecting fees in this state, or to issue blanket licenses in this state, for the right to commercially use [10] or perform publicly their separate copyrighted works: Provided, however, Such persons may join together if they issue licenses on rates assessed on a per piece system of usage: . . .."

HN3[] When copyrights are pooled, R.C.W. § 19.24.020 (1957) requires a complete detailed list of the works to be filed each [*5] year, together with a list of prices charged or demanded, with the Washington Secretary of State. R.C.W. § 19.24.055 (1957) requires such a list if the music is used commercially within the state, or originates or is heard therein.

Washington frankly states the purpose of its requirements in R.C.W. § 19.24.060 (1957). [2] There are also special purpose statutes, defining "doing business" with respect to licensing pools such as ASCAP (R.C.W. § 19.24.100 (1957)); providing for appointment of receivers and the escheat of property for persons who refuse to abide by the state copyright laws (R.C.W. § 19.24.140 (1957)); and providing that special appearances in copyright suits are to be deemed general appearances (R.C.W. § 19.24.280 (1957)).

[11] The court below, in findings of fact unchallenged here, noted the previous concern over the application of the Washington statute.

> "38. In 1958, certain broadcasters in the State of Washington stopped [378] paying fees to ASCAP under existing license agreements on the alleged ground that payment of such license fees would violate Ch. 19.24, R.C.W.
>
> "39. The license agreements referred to in Finding 38 expired on December 31, 1958.

---

[2] "The provisions of this chapter, and the administration thereof, shall at all times effectuate the enforcement, the true intent, and meaning of the United States copyright laws in order to prevent abuses from being practiced within this state . . . in the furtherance of any systematic campaign or scheme designed to illegally fix prices for the commercial use of copyrighted works in this state through the use of extortionate means and terrorizing practices based on threats of suits, and an abuse of both state and federal process, all of which are declared to be in violation of this chapter and of the state Constitution; . . ." R.C.W. § 19.24.060 (1957).

"40. In 1959, a group of broadcasters, including eleven broadcasters located in the State of Washington, commenced a proceeding in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York under Section IX of the Amended Final Judgment for determination of reasonable fees for licenses to be effective as of January 1, 1959.

"41. In that proceeding, the Court ruled that, in the circumstances presented, ASCAP would not be directed to issue licenses to any petitioning broadcasters in the State of Washington.

"42. Thereafter, and until November 20, 1959, ASCAP did not offer licenses to broadcasters in the State of Washington.

"43. On November 20, 1959, the owners of 61 Washington radio stations filed a petition in the United States [12] District Court for the Southern District of New York asking that Court to issue an order

'(a) directing ASCAP to grant to petitioners and others similarly situated who may join herein, licenses for the right of public performance of compositions in the ASCAP repertory by the radio and television stations operated by them within the State of Washington;

'(b) determining and establishing the terms and conditions of such licenses.'

"44. At the request and with the consent of the petitioners, the Court (Ryan, C.J.) entered an order on November 20, 1959 directing ASCAP to issue licenses to the petitioners in one of two specified forms for the period January 1, 1959 through December 31, 1963. The Court ruled:

'6. Taking into consideration the provisions of the Amended Final Judgment herein, the regulation of the activities of the respondent thereunder and the scope of its activities pursuant thereto, and giving due regard to the enactment of Revised Code of Washington, C. 19.24 -- Laws of 1937, C. 218, the licenses [*6] which the Society is hereby directed to issue may lawfully be entered into between respondent and petitioners, and respondent is hereby directed [13] to enter into such license agreements with each of the petitioners.

'7. The provisions in said agreements for the disposition of claims for the period prior to June 1, 1959 are reasonable and do not discriminate against other users in the State of Washington or other states.'

"45. The two specified license forms were the so-called 'blanket' and 'per program' radio licenses. Both licenses grant the licensee the right to perform whatever ASCAP music he desires, whenever he desires. Under the blanket license, the fee charged is 2.125% of the licensee's over-all revenues from sale of time on the air, after extensive deductions. Under the per program license, the licensee pays a higher percentage, but the fee is based only on the revenues from programs on which compositions in the ASCAP repertory are performed." (C.T. pp. 204-205.)

Appellant seems to feel that since ASCAP was authorized to issue, in addition to other kinds, "blanket" licenses which might arguably be contrary to R.C.W. § 19.24.020 (1957), it has made out a valid defense to the infringement action. If such is its approach, it is mistaken. Appellant has offered no evidence that it applied for [14] a license and could obtain only a blanket license. There is no evidence in the record that appellees did not at all times stand ready to negotiate licenses which would be lawful in the State of Washington.

On the contrary, plaintiffs (appellees here) introduced into evidence (P. Ex. 9) a copy of a letter dated August 23, 1948, from the Washington Attorney General to the Secretary of State, stating ASCAP had, by its filing [3] on April 20, 1948, demonstrated:

(a) "it does issue licenses on rates assessed on a per piece system of usage . . .,"

(b) "it does not issue licenses at a rate in excess of any per piece system in operation in any other state, . . .,"

(c) it had filed "a complete list of their copyrighted works or compositions," [379]

---

[3] Appellees assert that they have, since at least 1961, and each year prior to the filing of the suit on January 16, 1963, filed with the Secretary of State of Washington State a catalog of their copyrighted musical compositions, together with forms of licenses available to all users, and fees therefor. (P. Exs. 1, 5, 6; D. Exs. A-7, A-8, A-8a.)

(d) it had filed "a list completely detail[ing] prices charged and demanded," and

(e) it had listed the date of each copyright, and name of the author, the names of the publishers and the dates of assignment to ASCAP.

[15] The Attorney General concluded there had been "a reasonable compliance with the provisions of Chapter 218 [4];" and that "the defects which the Supreme Court pointed out [5] have now been cured." (P. Ex. 9, p. 9. Cf. Finding of Fact No. 53, C.T. p. 207.)

The trial court found that no public official of the State of Washington had at any time requested ASCAP to make any changes in either the form or substance of its filings. (Finding of Fact No. 52, C.T. p. 207.)

Thus it seems clear that at all times, at least since the November 20, 1959 rate fixing hearing in the New York district court (in which eleven State of Washington broadcasters participated) appellant could have obtained a license from ASCAP, valid under Washington [*7] law so far as this record before us discloses, to perform publicly for profit any musical composition in ASCAP's repertory, [16] subject only to its obligation to pay a reasonable license fee, as fixed by the New York district court.

As appellees point out, appellant had five options open to it. Four of them were:

(1) Appellant could have obtained a blanket license and along with it the right to play as much or as little, as frequently or as rarely as it desired, any of the compositions in the ASCAP repertory.

(2) Appellant could have obtained a per program license which would have required it to pay a license fee only for those programs in which appellant broadcast music from the ASCAP repertory.

(3) It could have undertaken to deal with ASCAP members directly.

(4) Appellant could have refrained from giving public performances for profit of music in the ASCAP repertory.

Instead, appellant chose the fifth option. Appellant never obtained any license. It never sought to deal with anyone. It continued its unconscionable conduct in unlawfully appropriating appellees' property without cause and without justification.

There seems little purpose in going into detail to discuss further the reason why the court's conclusions of law are not only not erroneous, [6] but are fully supported by the findings [17] of fact, which in turn, find support in the evidence.

We find (1) all filing requirements of the State of Washington have been met; (2) no "extortionate means" nor "terrorizing practices" are found in the bringing of law suits against infringing broadcasters; (3) R.C.W. § 19.24.020 prohibiting blanket licenses must be read with the proviso contained therein, and raises serious doubt if an absolute prohibition against all blanket licenses was intended; (4) there was no proof of any refusal at any time by any individual appellee to grant, or to negotiate, for a separate license (in fact, there exists no proof that there was ever an attempt to obtain such a license); and (5) any would-be user has the right to have the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York fix what is reasonable as a license fee.

In Conclusion II, the trial judge found: "The ASCAP per program license may reasonably [18] be regarded as assessing rates 'on a per piece system of usage,' as the Washington statute uses that phrase." (C.T. p. 214.)

---

[4] Laws of 1937; Rem. Rev. Stat. 3830-1 et seq., the forerunner of R.C.W. § 19.24.020 (1957).

[5] Taylor v. State, 29 Wash. 2d 638 (1948).

[6] Conclusions of Law 5 to 14, inclusive, as to Washington law, and 15 to 18, inclusive, as to federal law.

We need not specifically approve or disapprove of the trial court's interpretation of the Washington statute. If the per program license were interpreted as a blanket license and it was found that R.C.W. § 19.24.020 (1957) permits only licenses of specific individual compositions, ASCAP members nevertheless retain the absolute right to license their individual compositions, and the trial court found:

> "Plaintiffs have at all times in the last ten years been ready to negotiate with any broadcaster in the State of Washington for a license to perform any of plaintiffs' copyrighted musical compositions on any mutually agreeable basis, including 'rates assessed on a per piece system of usage.' In the last ten years, no broadcaster in the State of Washington has requested such a license from any plaintiff. No defendant has ever made any attempt to contact any plaintiff individually for the purpose of obtaining licenses to play any of plaintiffs' compositions on a 'per piece' or any other basis." (Finding of Fact No. 50, C.T. p. 206.)
>
> "In the last ten years, [19] ASCAP has [380] not received any request from any broadcaster in the State of Washington and any ASCAP member in interest for the issuance of a license to perform one or more specified compositions." [*8] (Finding of Fact No. 51, C.T. p. 206.)

We do not find it necessary to discuss the other points raised in the respective briefs.

We find the trial court's findings and conclusions were properly made, and support the judgment in favor of appellees. That judgment is correct, and is affirmed.

End of Document

Y & Y Popcorn Supply Co. v. ABC Vending Corp.

United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania

January 25, 1967

Civil Action No. 28546

Reporter

263 F. Supp. 709 *; 1967 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11147 ; 1967 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,022

Y & Y Popcorn Supply Co. v. ABC Vending Corp., Berlo Vending Co., and Jacob Beresin decree, Clayton Act, anti trust law, consent decree, hearing examiner, FTC Act, violations, matters, abuses, Film

Core Terms

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN1[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

See 15 U.S.C.S.§ 18.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN2[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 16(a).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Settlements > Antitrust Procedures & Penalties Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Settlements > Consent Judgments > General Overview

HN3[] Settlements, Antitrust Procedures & Penalties Act

Section 5(a) of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 16(a), allows the use in private antitrust suits of decrees resulting from government actions as prima facie evidence of matters determined in the antecedent government suit which "would be an estoppel" between the government and the defendant.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Settlements > Consent Judgments > General Overview

HN4[] Settlements, Consent Judgments

The findings and initial decision of a hearing examiner do not automatically become those of the Federal Trade Commission unless it adopts them in its own findings.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Settlements > Consent Judgments > General Overview

HN5[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

The mere absence of expressed findings by the Federal Trade Commission does not necessarily preclude the applicability of the § 5(a) of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 16(a), in a case where the defendant fails to capitulate before the taking of testimony.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN6[] Private Actions, Remedies

Section 5(a) of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 16(a) is undoubtedly a powerful deterrent to antitrust violators and an enviable weapon in the armory of the treble damage suitor. It is also an undeniable aid to the government in correcting antitrust abuses without the necessity of protracted litigation. But it is precisely because the effect of the invocation of § 5(a) is so potently prejudicial and its "emotive impact," especially in a jury case, is so great, that the district court must restrict the application of the statutory mandate to its logically compelling consequences.

Judges: [1] Joseph S. Lord, III, D.J.

Opinion by: LORD, III

Opinion

[*710] Pretrial Memorandum and Order

JOSEPH S. LORD, III, D.J.

Plaintiff brought this treble damage antitrust action under the Clayton Act, charging defendants with violations of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act [1] and Section 7 of the Clayton Act. [2] [2] In order to expedite their preparation for trial, the parties have asked us to rule in limine on the applicability of Section 5(a) of the Clayton Act [3] to the present suit. Specifically, the question presented is whether the plaintiff can make use of a Federal Trade Commission (FTC) consent order entered against the corporate defendants, and, if so, to what extent.

I.

On November 4, 1959, the FTC issued its complaint against the defendants. Count I charged violations of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, arising from the acquisition by defendants in 1957 of two companies: "Sweets", a firm operating in the "Philadelphia Film Exchange Area", [4] and "Confection", a company operating largely in the "New [3] York Film Exchange Area." [5] Count II charged the defendants with "unfair methods of competition" proscribed by Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act [6] (FTC Act) and occurring in both the New York and Philadelphia Film Exchange Areas. This count repeated and incorporated by reference the charge of unlawful acquisitions as one basis of a Section 5, as opposed to a Clayton Act violation, and added alleged abuses which consisted of making preclusive loans and affording other inducements to customers, requiring preclusively long contract commitments from customers, and exacting favored treatment from suppliers.

After an extensive hearing, the FTC hearing examiner handed down an initial decision on April 15, 1964 in which he [*711] ordered divestiture of both Sweets and Confection. The examiner concluded that: "Both acquisitions, separately and jointly are violative of the provisions of Section 7 of the Clayton Act." Defendants argue [4] that the examiner clearly "dismissed" Count II of the complaint, dealing with FTC Act violations. More precisely, it appears that he felt these alleged transgressions were ancillary to the root evil of agglomerated market power and need not be the subject of separate attack as long as the primary remedy of divestiture was effected.

The examiner's decision was the subject of appeal by both sides. The prosecutorial arm of the FTC wanted additional sanctions against the practices enumerated in Count II of the complaint; the defendants demanded exoneration. However, on September 29, 1964, an agreement and stipulated order was signed in which the defendants admitted "all of the jurisdictional facts alleged in the complaint * * *." With respect to all other matters, the agreement recited that "[the] Commission has not made and will not make any adjudication or determination of any issue of law or fact presented by the complaint in this proceeding."

---

[1] 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2.

[2] HN1[] "No corporation engaged in commerce shall acquire, directly or indirectly, the whole or any part of the stock or other share capital and no corporation subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission shall acquire the whole or any part of the assets of another corporation engaged also in commerce, where in any line of commerce in any section of the country, the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly. * * *" 15 U.S.C. § 18.

[3] HN2[] "(a) A final judgment or decree heretofore or hereafter rendered in any civil or criminal proceeding brought by or on behalf of the United States under the antitrust laws to the effect that a defendant has violated said laws shall be prima facie evidence against such defendant in any action or proceeding brought by any other party against such defendant under said laws or by the United States under section 15a of this title, as to all matters respecting which said judgment or decree would be an estoppel as between the parties thereto: Provided, That this section shall not apply to consent judgments or decrees entered before any testimony has been taken or to judgments or decrees entered in actions under section 15a of this title. * * *" 15 U.S.C. § 16(a).

[4] Defined in FTC order, PIII.

[5] Id.

[6] 15 U.S.C. § 45.

The Commission's decision and order was issued on October 22, 1964. The Commission "determined that it should waive * * * the timely filing of notice of intent to enter into a consent agreement" [7] and made findings of jurisdictional fact. [5] It then ordered the divestiture of "motion picture theater concessions and contract rights for the operation of motion picture theater concessions * * * having aggregate concessionary sales of not less than $4,000,000 of which not less than $3,500,000 shall be in the New York and Philadelphia film exchange areas * * *." Additional terms of the order dealt with ancillary divestiture assurances as well as the other abuses enumerated in Count II of the complaint. In accordance with the consent agreement, the order contained no other findings of fact or conclusions of law.

It is this order which plaintiff wishes to use in the present suit.

II.

Plaintiff's complaint, which was filed on September 12, 1960, is largely a catalogue of the anti-competitive abuses charged in the FTC proceeding. There is appended, of course, the critical allegation that [6] defendants' conduct had an adverse economic impact on plaintiff.

The operations of the respective parties differ in that plaintiff is a wholesale merchant of candy and pop-corn selling to theater owners in the Philadelphia area, whereas defendants are concessionaires, selling directly to the public from vending machines and booths within client theaters located in both the New York and Philadelphia areas.

III.

Section 5(a) of the Clayton Act HN3[] allows the use in private antitrust suits of decrees resulting from government actions as prima facie evidence of matters determined in the antecedent government suit which "would be an estoppel" between the government and the defendant. The proviso, exempting consent decrees "entered before any testimony has been taken" does not apply here because the FTC order was entered only after the hearing examiner had taken thousands of pages of testimony. And it is undisputed that the FTC order was "a final judgment or decree."

There is likewise no question, at least in this Circuit, that as respects Count I, the FTC order is the product of a "civil or criminal proceeding brought by or on behalf of the United States under the antitrust laws." New [7] Jersey Wood Finishing Co. v. Minnesota Min. & Mfg. Co., 332 F.2d 346 (C.A. 3, 1964), aff'd, 381 U.S. 311, 14 L. Ed. 2d 405, 85 S. Ct. 1473 (1965). On the other hand, [*712] the charges contained in Count II stand on a different footing. Section 5 of the FTC Act, which was the asserted basis for liability in Count II, is not one of the "antitrust laws." Id. at page 352. Therefore, no use could be made of a decree entered pursuant to that count.

The real problems presented are: (1) whether the decree is "to the effect that a defendant has violated [the antitrust] laws"; and (2) if so, what are the matters, if any, "respecting which said judgment or decree would be an estoppel as between the parties thereto" which the statute makes prima facie evidence of the same matters in the present treble damage suit.

Defendants vigorously contend that since the FTC made no findings of fact the decree is evidence of nothing, [8] least of all that it constitutes an adjudication of liability. HN4[] The findings and initial decision of the hearing examiner do not automatically become those of the Commission unless it adopts them in its own findings, [9] and there were no such findings here. Insofar [8] as the FTC is concerned, argue defendants, the consent order adjudicates nothing at all; by the FTC's own rules, it is not an admission of law. [10] Therefore, they conclude that the [7] The normal time for such a filing is ten days after the FTC has given notice of its intent to issue a complaint. See FTC Rules of Practice, 16 C.F.R. §§ 2.1, 2.2.

---

[8] It does, however, seem unmistakably clear that the FTC order found and determined the Commission's jurisdiction and the facts upon which jurisdiction is grounded.

[9] FTC Rules of Practice, 16 C.F.R. § 3.24.

FTC order is not "to the effect" that defendants violated Section 7 of the Clayton Act, and that even if it were, there would be no way to discern the scope of any resulting estoppel.

Plaintiff counters by emphasizing that Section 5(a) is designed not only to aid private suitors in subsequent treble damage actions, Emich Motors Corp. v. General Motors Corp., 340 U.S. [9] 558, 95 L. Ed. 534, 71 S. Ct. 408 (1951); New Jersey Wood Finishing Co. v. Minnesota Min. & Mfg. Co., supra, but also to induce "prompt capitulation" by the defendants in the antecedent government proceeding. See, e.g., Commonwealth Edison Co. v. Allis-Chalmers Mfg. Co., 323 F.2d 412 (C.A. 7, 1963), cert. denied, 376 U.S. 939, 11 L. Ed. 2d 659, 84 S. Ct. 794 (1964); City of Burbank v. General Electric Company, 329 F.2d 825 (C.A. 9, 1964); General Electric Company v. City of San Antonio, 334 F.2d 480 (C.A. 5, 1964); De Luxe Theatre Corp. v. Balaban & Katz Corp., 95 F. Supp. 983 (E.D. Ill. 1951).

This latter purpose emerges from the proviso to Section 5(a) which exempts from the operation of the main provisions those consent decrees entered before the taking of testimony. Confronted with the impending peril of "double jeopardy" - a government victory followed by the pleadings of alerted private suitors - the defendant is more likely to enter into a consent decree before any testimony has been taken. The effect of the statutory scheme in this case urges plaintiff, is that since the defendants here did not agree to the entry of a consent decree until after the hearing examiner had [10] taken testimony and announced his decision, the preclusive effects of Section 5(a) must obtain, notwithstanding the fact that the FTC promulgated no explicit findings or conclusions. Plaintiff points out that Congress must have intended some consent decrees to be encompassed by the main provisions of Section 5(a) for it specifically excluded only those consent decrees entered before any testimony has been taken. There is nothing in the language or purpose of the statute which compels specific findings of fact, and plaintiff argues that we ought not import such a requirement.

We agree that HN5[] the mere absence of expressed findings by the FTC does not necessarily preclude the applicability of Section 5(a) in a case where the defendant [*713] has failed to capitulate before the taking of testimony. However, in this case it is not at all clear that the decree was "to the effect" that the defendants violated one of the antitrust laws, i.e., Section 7 of the Clayton Act, rather than Section 5 of the FTC Act, which is not such a law.

To be sure, the hearing examiner found a violation of Section 7. But his decision was never adopted by the Commission. In fact, the order which [11] the FTC issued departed substantially from the examiner's suggested decree in that it encompassed several of the additional abuses enumerated in Count II of the complaint, which dealt with FTC Act violations. It will be recalled that Count II began by incorporating the same factual charge of unlawful acquisitions as that contained in Count I. Therefore, it is conceivable that the FTC might have ultimately determined that the defendants' conduct throughout constituted only "unfair methods of competition" not rising to the level of an "antitrust law" violation.

HN6[] Section 5(a) is undoubtedly a powerful deterrent to antitrust violators and an enviable weapon in the armory of the treble damage suitor. It is also an undeniable aid to the government in correcting antitrust abuses without the necessity of protracted litigation. But it is precisely because the effect of the invocation of Section 5(a) is so potently prejudicial and its "emotive impact" (especially in a jury case) so great, Monticello Tobacco Co. v. American Tobacco Co., 197 F.2d 629, 631 (C.A. 2, 1952), cert. denied, 344 U.S. 875, 97 L. Ed. 678, 73 S. Ct. 168 (1952), that we must restrict the application of the statutory [12] mandate to its logically compelling consequences. Here, we are drawn to no ineluctable inference that the Commission's order was "to the effect" that a Section 7 violation had occurred. Rather, we are confronted with an ambivalence which neither intensive interpretation nor reasoned reflection can resolve.

---

[10] FTC Rules of Practice, 16 C.F.R. § 2.3. Actually the Rules say only that "the [consent order] agreement may contain a statement that the signing thereof * * * does not constitute an admission by any party that the law has been violated * * *."

Furthermore, even if this decree were to the effect that defendants violated the antitrust laws, it would, at best, only show prohibited conduct in a market composed of the combined New York and Philadelphia Film Exchange Areas. [11]

[13] The relevant market for the purposes of the present suit is the Philadelphia area. Of course, it cannot be said that illegal behavior in a defined market area necessarily assumes anticompetitive conduct in any included portion of that area. Since we cannot say that the FTC order was "to the effect" that defendants violated Section 7, we need not reach the question of whether the decree would have any probative value at all as to the merits of this case.

Our decision also renders unnecessary any attempt to delineate those matters of which the FTC order "would be an estoppel" and hence prima facie evidence in the present action.

The Federal Trade Commission consent order will not be admissible in evidence nor may any reference be made to its existence or terms at trial.

It is so ordered.

End of Document

---

[11] The FTC order required divestiture of a stated volume of concessionary rights "in the New York and Philadelphia film exchange area * * *." From this language, it would appear that for purposes of relief the FTC was structuring a market composed of both the New York and Philadelphia areas. Since defendants might conceivably have divested themselves of a large volume of business in one component area while retaining largely intact their interests in the other area, it is not possible to say that the Commission was convinced that grave abuses constituting antitrust violations existed in each area independently.

L. S. Good & Co. v. H. Daroff & Sons, Inc.

United States District Court for the Northern District of West Virginia

February 2, 1967

Civil Action No. 1547-W

Reporter

263 F. Supp. 635 *; 1967 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9346 ; 1967 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,027

L. S. Good & Co., Plaintiff v. H. Daroff & Sons, Inc., Defendant

Core Terms

manufacturer, dealers, anti trust law, men's clothing, retail, pool, venue, distributor, conspiracy, products, monopolize, foreign corporation, instant case, antitrust, district court, installation, transaction of business, cause of action, Sherman Act, prices, resale, place of business, do business, telephone, commerce, Auditor, violation of antitrust laws, restraint of trade, service of process, minimum contact

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > General Overview

HN1[] In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction, In Personam Actions

See W. Va. Code § 31-1-71 (1966).

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > General Overview

HN2[] In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction, In Personam Actions

The amount and kind of activities which must be carried on by a foreign corporation in the state of the forum so as to make it reasonable and just to subject the corporation to the personal jurisdiction of a court in that state under W. Va. Code § 31-1-7 (1966) must be determined according to the facts and circumstances of each case.

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > Constitutional Limits

HN3[] In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction, Constitutional Limits

Under the U.S. Const. am. XIV due process clause it must appear that a defendant over whom jurisdiction is asserted has had minimum contact within the state which renders it consistent with traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice that he be compelled to defend himself in that state; and assuming the existence of such requisite minimum contact, there must be a method of service which is designed to give the defendant actual and reasonable notice of the pending action against him.

Civil Procedure > ... > Service of Process > Methods of Service > Foreign Service

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Service of Process > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Service of Process > Methods of Service > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Service of Process > Methods of Service > Service on Agents

Civil Procedure > ... > Service of Process > Methods of Service > Service on Corporations

HN4[] Methods of Service, Foreign Service

Fed. R. Civ. P. 4(d)(3) provides that personal service shall be made upon a foreign corporation by delivering a copy of the summons and the complaint to, among others, any other agent authorized by appointment or by law to receive service of process. Rule 4(d)(7) also provides that on a foreign corporation it is sufficient if the summons and complaint are served in the manner prescribed by the law of the state in which the district court is held.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Procedural Matters > Jurisdiction > Exclusive Jurisdiction

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Amount in Controversy

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

HN5[] Jurisdiction, Exclusive Jurisdiction

The United States District Courts are given jurisdiction over private antitrust actions by 15 U.S.C.S. § 15, which provides that any person who is injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides or is found or has an agent, without respect to the amount in controversy. Federal jurisdiction is exclusive in that section. This rule has been liberalized in the case of corporate defendants by 15 U.S.C.S. § 22, which provides that any suit, action or proceeding under the antitrust laws against a corporation may be brought not only in the judicial district whereof it is an inhabitant, but also in any district wherein it may be found or transacts business.

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Venue > Agents

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Venue > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Venue > Corporations

HN6[] Venue, Agents

A corporation is engaged in transacting business in a district, within the meaning of 15 U.S.C.S. § 22, in such sense as to establish the venue of a suit - although not present by agents carrying on business of such character and in such manner that it is "found" therein and is amenable to local process, - if in fact, in the ordinary and usual sense, it "transacts business" therein of any substantial character.

Business & Corporate Law > Foreign Corporations > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

HN7[] Business & Corporate Law, Foreign Corporations

If a corporation is engaged in promoting or carrying out a substantial amount of its corporate business in a foreign state, it is engaged in transacting business in that state for purposes of 15 U.S.C.S. § 22.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN8[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 1, 2, prohibits, respectively, every contract, combination in form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce, and every person who monopolizes, or attempts to monopolize, or combines or conspires with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several states.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN9[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

The Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §§ 15, 22, authorizes private suits by persons injured because of violations of the antitrust laws.

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

HN10[] Pleadings, Rule Application & Interpretation

Where a complaint charges a defendant with engaging in a "combination, contract and conspiracy," but no supporting facts have been alleged, such a conclusory allegation of this type does not set forth a cause of action for violation of federal antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > Exclusive Dealing

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

HN11[] Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing, Exclusive Dealing

Only unreasonable restraints of trade are unlawful. When an exclusive dealership is not part and parcel of a scheme to monopolize and effective competition exists at both the seller and buyer levels, the arrangement is a reasonable restraint of trade. The fact that any other dealers in the same product of the same manufacturer are eliminated does not make an exclusive dealership illegal; it is the essential nature of the arrangement. The fact that a dealer asks for the arrangement does not make it illegal.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Robinson-Patman Act > Coverage > Commerce Requirement

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN12[] Coverage, Commerce Requirement

The Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 13(a), provides that nothing contained in the statute shall prevent persons engaged in selling goods, wares, or merchandise in commerce from selecting their own customers in bona fide transactions and not in restraint of trade.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN13[] Private Actions, Remedies

The hybrid nature of a private antitrust suit dictates that, to succeed, the plaintiff must prove not only that the defendant has infringed one or more of the antitrust laws to the public injury, but also that such infringement has resulted in private injury to the plaintiff in its business or property. 15 U.S.C.S. § 15. In the absence of a showing of either the public or private harm, the plaintiff cannot prevail.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN14[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing

In the absence of any intent to create or maintain a monopoly, the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, does not prevent a manufacturer engaged in a private business from announcing in advance the prices at which his goods may be resold and refusing to deal with wholesalers and retailers who do not conform to such prices. However, this exception to the antitrust laws has been narrowed in cases where the state has no fair trade laws making this type of agreement legal.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Resale Price Maintenance

Contracts Law > Defenses > Illegal Bargains

Trademark Law > ... > Particular Subject Matter > Names > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN15[] Vertical Restraints, Resale Price Maintenance

The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, makes an agreement to maintain resale prices legal in states such as West Virginia having fair trade laws, by providing that nothing contained in sections 1-7 of the Act shall render illegal, contracts or agreements prescribing minimum prices for the resale of a commodity which bears, or the label or container of which bears, the trademark, brand or name of the producer or distributor of such commodity and which is in free and open competition with commodities of the same general class produced or distributed by others, when contracts or agreements of that description are lawful as applied to intrastate transactions under any statute, law, or public policy now or hereafter in effect in any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia in which such resale is to be made, or to which the commodity is to be transported for such resale.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Practices Governed by Per Se Rule > Boycotts

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > Restraints of Trade

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > General Overview

HN16[] Practices Governed by Per Se Rule, Boycotts

A manufacturer's or a distributor's discretion as to whom it will sell is not unlimited. If a refusal to deal is a device used to acquire a monopoly, or to fix prices,or to establish market dominance and drive out competitors or as part of a boycott, it is illegal. These are per se violations - restraints which are inherently bad, and any contract, combination or conspiracy used to accomplish such a result is unreasonable and is therefore prohibited.

Judges: [1] Maxwell, D.J.

Opinion by: MAXWELL

Opinion

[*638] Memorandum

MAXWELL, D.J.

This is an action brought by L. S. Good & Company, a West Virginia corporation, against H. Daroff & Sons, Inc., a Pennsylvania corporation. L. S. Good operates a department store in Wheeling, West Virginia, and handles, among other items, men's clothing. H. Daroff & Sons, Inc., is a manufacturer and distributor of men's clothing and has its principal place of business in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. One of Daroff's lines of men's clothing is the "Botany 500" brand of men's suits, a highly advertised and widely known brand.

L. S. Good in its complaint, filed on April 14, 1965, alleged the following:

> "The defendant has attempted to engage in and has engaged in a wrongful and unlawful combination, contract and conspiracy to: (a) prevent and restrict the selling and distribution of its products, by reason of its refusal, for the unlawful reason stated by plaintiff as aforesaid, to sell its products to the plaintiff;
> (b) unlawfully discriminate against a retail distributor, the plaintiff;
>
> (c) force and compel the plaintiff to cease and desist from distributing its 'Botany 500' line in favor of [2] a competitor, the said Bernhardt's; and that such actions have unreasonably restrained, do unreasonably restrain, and will continue unreasonably to restrain trade and commerce in violation of the antitrust laws of the United States of America above cited."

The statutory provisions, referred to in the above quoted section of the complaint, are designated in the complaint as "Sections 1 through 33, inclusive, Title 15, United States Code Annotated."

The plaintiff, L. S. Good, alleges that the jurisdiction of this Court is predicated upon a question arising under the Antitrust Laws of the United States. The complaint also states that jurisdiction is "further predicated upon diversity of citizenship and an amount in controversy in excess of that prescribed."

The defendant, H. Daroff & Sons, on May 4, 1965, filed a motion to dismiss the complaint and quash the return of service of the summons on the grounds of lack of jurisdiction over the defendant, improper venue and improper service. This motion was based upon the affidavit of Samuel H. Daroff, Secretary-Treasurer of the defendant. Also, on February 8, 1966, the defendant filed a motion pursuant to Rule 12(b) of the Federal [3] Rules of Civil Procedure to dismiss the complaint for failure to state a claim upon which relief could be granted. In addition, both parties have filed motions with regard to the taking of the depositions.

Counsel for both of the parties thoroughly briefed the questions involved in these motions and oral argument was heard in Wheeling on June 9, 1966.

This Court holds (1) that the defendant's motion to dismiss, because of improper venue and improper service, is denied, and (2) the defendant's motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim is granted, unless within 30 days the plaintiff amends its complaint so as to set forth a cause of action based on the common law. Also, the further taking of depositions by both parties is stayed.

H. Daroff & Sons, Inc., is a manufacturer and distributor of men's clothing to the retail clothing trade throughout the United States. Among its products is the "Botany 500" line of men's clothing which is well known and highly respected. For over 40 years Daroff has been selling the "Botany 500" line to Bernhardt's, a retail men's clothing store in Wheeling. In 1964, Daroff appointed L. S. Good as a retail distributor of its (Daroff's) products, [4] including the "Botany 500" line. By a letter dated March 27, 1965, Daroff discontinued L. S. Good as a retail distributor of the "Botany 500" line, giving as its reason a prior exclusive franchise commitment to Bernhardt's.

[*639] In addition to Bernhardt's, Daroff has authorized dealers in the following cities in the Northern Judicial District of West Virginia: Wheeling (Stone & Thomas), Parkersburg (Dil's Brothers), Clarksburg (Millet & Stern), Fairmont (Maunz Men's Shop), Morgantown (J. Beafora & Sons), and Martinsburg (Stewart's).

Daroff has annual gross sales in excess of one hundred million dollars, and, although it is not entirely clear what portion of this business is done in the Northern District of West Virginia, [1] the dollar volume appears to be substantial. Sidney S. Good, Jr., President of L. S. Good, in his affidavit stated that between September, 1964, and March, 1965, L. S. Good sold "approximately $20,000" worth of the defendant's products. The defendant does not dispute this figure. Assuming that each of the seven other retail outlets which Daroff has in the Northern District of West Virginia do a comparable business, this would amount to annual gross [5] sales in excess of $225,000. This figure is, of course, only a projection from the seven months period in which L. S. Good sold Daroff's products, but it does indicate, at least, the extent of Daroff's sales in Northern West Virginia.

---

[1] L. S. Good contends that it alone accounted for.002% of the defendant's annual gross sales while it was a dealer, whereas Daroff contends that its total sales in the Northern District constitute only.0015% of its annual sales.

Daroff employs a salesman, a Leonard Finkelnor of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, who makes four trips per year into West Virginia, "one trip each to take orders for the spring and fall seasons and two trips for customer goodwill purposes." Daroff contends that these orders are subject to approval in Philadelphia and, if they are approved, they are shipped FOB Philadelphia.

Daroff in its affidavit in support of its motion to dismiss the complaint states that "the defendant is not licensed to do business in West Virginia, pays no taxes in West Virginia and does [6] not do any business in West Virginia." It further states that "the defendant has no mailing address, telephone listing or any agent within the Northern District of West Virginia."

The plaintiff, L. S. Good, obtained service of process and complaint through the Auditor of West Virginia, in accordance with the provisions of Chapter 31, Article 1, of the 1931 Code of West Virginia, as amended. The State Auditor then forwarded the process and complaint to the defendant in Philadelphia.

The pertinent provision of the HN1[] West Virginia Code, § 31-1-71, Michie 1966, reads as follows:

> "Any foreign corporation which shall do any business in this State without having been authorized to do so pursuant to the provisions of section seventy-nine (§ 3091) of this article shall be conclusively presumed to have appointed the auditor of the State as its attorney in fact with authority to accept service of notice and process on behalf of and upon whom service of notice and process may be made in this State for and upon every such corporation in any action or proceeding described in the next following paragraph of this section.
> * * *
>
> "For the purposes of this section, a foreign corporation [7] not authorized to do business in this State pursuant to the provisions of section seventy-nine (§ 3091) of this article shall nevertheless be deemed to be doing business herein if such corporation makes a contract to be performed, in whole or in part, by any party thereto, in this State, or if such corporation commits a tort in whole or in part in this State. The making of such contract or the committing of such tort shall be deemed to be the agreement of such corporation that any notice or process served upon, or accepted by, the auditor pursuant to the next preceding paragraph of this section in any action or proceeding against such corporation arising from, or growing out of, such contract [*640] or such tort shall be of the same legal force and validity as process duly served on such corporation in this State."

The Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia considered this section in two fairly recent cases, the more recent of which was State ex rel. Coral Pools, Inc. v. Knapp, 131 S.E.2d 81, 147 W. Va. 704 (1963). This was an original proceeding brought by an Ohio corporation seeking a writ to prohibit a Circuit Judge and the plaintiff from proceeding to trial. The [8] Court stated the issue:

> "The prohibition proceeding is based in the claim of Coral Pools, Inc., that it is not subject to the personal jurisdiction of the trial court in the civil action." 131 S.E.2d 81, 83.

In this case, the written contract to build the swimming pool was executed at Columbus, Ohio, by the appearance of the plaintiff. However,

> " . . . the oral contract pertaining to the construction of a swimming pool on Kennedy's home property at Charleston was negotiated and made by a telephone conversation between Kennedy at Charleston, West Virginia, and a representative of Coral Pools, Inc., at Columbus, Ohio." 131 S.E.2d 81, 83-84.

So when faced with the question of an oral modification via long distance telephone call of a contract which had originally been made in Ohio, the Supreme Court of Appeals held:

> "Inasmuch as the oral contract relating to the construction of the pool on Kennedy's property was to be performed in this state and resulted from an offer made by Onderdonk by telephone from Columbus, Ohio, to Kennedy in Charleston, West Virginia, and an acceptance by Kennedy during the course of the same telephone conversation, that contract [9] must be deemed to have been made in this state." 131 S.E.2d 81, 86.

However, the Court went on to make this warning:

> "A trend is clearly discernible toward expanding the permissible scope of state jurisdiction over foreign corporations. HN2[] The amount and kind of activities which must be carried on by a foreign corporation in the state of the forum so as to make it reasonable and just to subject the corporation to the personal jurisdiction of a court in that state must be determined according to the facts and circumstances of each case." 131 S.E.2d 81, 90.

It is not clear from reading the case exactly who was to perform the installation of the pool on Kennedy's property. Coral Pools did send Kennedy "a detailed set of plans for installation of such swimming pools and a letter requesting an estimate of the cost of installation in the Charleston area." 131 S.E.2d 81, 84. Also, Kennedy performed the initial excavation and other preliminary work. So it seems to be a fair reading of the case that Coral Pools was simply going to ship the pool kit to Charleston and, at most, send one engineer to supervise the installation of the pool.

> "In relation to the parol contract [10] made by telephone, Kennedy testified that Onderdonk agreed that the corporation's engineer would be sent to Charleston to supervise the installation of the pool on his property. There is no specific denial of this portion of Kennedy's testimony." 131 S.E.2d 81, 85.

In the instant case, L. S. Good stated in its answer to Daroff's interrogatories that:

> " . . . defendant sent its specialist advisor on men's alteration rooms, one Joseph Parazino, to the premises of plaintiff who advised plaintiff on setting up its alteration room; that the defendant provided the plaintiff, through the said Joseph Parazino, blueprints for the layout of said alteration room; that said blueprints are signed ' Drawn by Jos. Parazino', 'approved M. Mutolese', ' A O.K. by Jos. Parazino and H. Daroff and Sons'; that the said Joe Parazino further advised on the lighting, position of racks and all other details in the planning and designing [*641] of said alteration room; that the defendant sent the said Joseph Parazino back to the store of the plaintiff for the opening of its new men's wear department and the said Joseph Parazino advised and trained new tailors for the plaintiff, advised on fitting [11] and assisted with the fitting during the opening of said new men's wear department, all of which services were without charge to the plaintiff; that the defendant advised the plaintiff on the advertising for the opening of said new men's wear department and contributed to its costs; . . ."

So quite apart from Daroff's other extensive contracts in the Northern District of West Virginia, it seems that its contacts with L. S. Good alone are enough to bring it within the Coral Pools case. The Court in Coral Pools construed the statutory provision of " . . . a contract to be performed, in whole or in part, by any party thereto, in this State . . ." so as to include a situation which is somewhat analogous to the instant case.

Gavenda Bros. Inc. v. Elkins Limestone Company, 116 S.E.2d 910, 145 W. Va. 732 (1960), is not inapposite. There, the West Virginia Court construed an Illinois statute which authorized extraterritorial service on the defendant. The Illinois statute was considerably more comprehensive than the present West Virginia statute, involved in the instant case. "The public policy of this State, though less comprehensive in scope, is in harmony with the public [12] policy evidenced by the Illinois statute." 116 S.E.2d 910, 916.

Speaking of the limitations imposed on the states by the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, the West Virginia Court said:

> "It HN3[] must appear that the defendant over whom jurisdiction is asserted has had minimum contact within the state which renders it consistent with traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice that he be compelled to defend himself in that state; and assuming the existence of such requisite minimum contact, there must be a method of service which is designed to give the defendant actual and reasonable notice of the pending action against him." 116 S.E.2d 910, 916.

All of this is in accord with the guide lines laid down by the Supreme Court in International Shoe Company v. State of Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 90 L. Ed. 95, 66 S. Ct. 154 (1945), where the Court said:

> "Historically the jurisdiction of courts to render judgments in personam is grounded on their de facto power over the defendant's person. Hence his presence within the territorial jurisdiction of a court was a prerequisite to its rendition of a judgment personally binding him . . . But now that [13] the capias ad respondendum has given way to personal service of summons or other form of notice, due process requires only that in order to subject a defendant to a judgment in personam, if he be not present within the territory of the forum, he have certain minimum contacts with it such that the maintenance of the suit does not offend 'traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice.' " 326 U.S. 310, 316, 66 S. Ct. 154, 90 L. Ed. 95.

The case of Mann v. Equitable Gas Company, 209 F. Supp. 571 (N.D. West Virginia, 1962) is not applicable here. In the Mann case, the Court held that a Texas corporation, that had manufactured a pipe, in Texas, and subsequently sold it to a West Virginia gas company, did not establish the necessary "minimum contact" so as to permit service of process through the State Auditor. The Texas corporation had merely sold the pipe to the West Virginia company, which subsequently used it in West Virginia where it exploded injuring the plaintiff. The only question before the Court was " . . . whether the mere commission of the tort alleged in the complaint constituted the 'minimum contacts' required by International Shoe . . ." 209 [14] F. Supp. 571, 573. The Court held:

> "I would construe the West Virginia statute to mean that the commission of [*642] a tortious act within the State means that the alleged tortfeasor, or his agents were in West Virginia at the time of the act, which is alleged to have resulted in the tort." 209 F. Supp. 571, 574.

This is in accord with the leading case in this Circuit on the question of extraterritorial service of process, Erlanger Mills, Inc. v. Cohoes Fibre Mills, 239 F.2d 502 (4th Cir. 1956), which was an action brought by a North Carolina corporation in North Carolina against a New York corporation for defective goods sold. In this case, the North Carolina corporation placed an order with the New York corporation after a visit by the North Carolina corporation's representative at the plant in New York. The goods were sold FOB at the New York plant, and the New York corporation had never done any business in North Carolina prior to this transaction. A North Carolina statute, G.S. § 55-38.1, "Jurisdiction over foreign corporation not transacting business in this State ", provided:

> "(a) Every foreign corporation shall be subject to suit in this State . [15] . . on any cause of action arising as follows:
>
> (3) Out of the production, manufacture, or distribution of goods by such corporation with the reasonable expectation that those goods are to be used or consumed in this State and are so used and consumed, regardless of how or where the goods were produced, manufactured, marketed, or sold or whether or not through the medium of independent contractors or dealers." 239 F.2d 502, 504.

The Court of Appeals held that the New York corporation was not present in North Carolina in a manner sufficient to sustain the requirement of jurisdictional due process notwithstanding the North Carolina statute.

> "The problem in each case, therefore, is to determine whether or not the relationships, ties and contacts between the defendant and the state of the forum warrant jurisdiction . . . the place of execution and of performance of the contract are not alone decisive." 239 F.2d 502, 505.

Although the West Virginia statute has received some scholarly criticism, this Court is of the opinion that the contacts which Daroff has had with L. S. Good and its other West Virginia distributors are of such a continuing and substantial nature [16] that it does not offend the requirements of jurisdictional due process to hold Daroff accountable for its actions in West Virginia.

The recent decision of the West Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals in Tufe Hodge v. Sands Manufacturing Company, 151 W.Va. 133, 150 S.E.2d 793, W. Va. (1966), is distinguishable from the case at bar. In Tufe Hodge, the plaintiff employed a plumbing contractor to do certain work which included the installation of an electric hot water heater on the plaintiff's premises. The defendant, Sands Manufacturing Company, sold the allegedly defective hot water heater to a dealer in Huntington, West Virginia, who in turn sold it to the plaintiff, Tufe Hodge. The other defendant, Therm-O-Disc, had sold two thermostats to the Sands Manufacturing Company which were installed in the hot water heater.

The Court in deciding this case did not give any indication as to the amount of business which these two defendant corporations did in the state of West Virginia. In its holding the Court stated that neither of the defendants had "engaged in any persistent course of conduct in selling such heaters to purchasers or engaged in other transactions in this State . . [17] . ." So the factual situation in Tufe Hodge seems to be quite similar to that in Mann v. Equitable Gas Co., supra, where an isolated business transaction between the resident plaintiff and the non-resident defendant corporation which led to the plaintiff's injury was held not to establish the necessary minimum contacts to confer jurisdiction upon the court under the applicable statute, [*643] West Virginia Code, § 31-1-71 (Michie, 1966).

The Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia in its decision also laid great stress on the fact that the allegedly defective hot water heater was not sold directly to Tufe Hodge but was sold to the Huntington dealer, who sold it to Tufe Hodge. This, of course, serves to distinguish Tufe Hodge from the case at bar.

Perhaps much of the foregoing is unimportant, in that the venue and service of process requirements are much easier to meet in antitrust suits than they are in the normal, ordinary civil case. However, the plaintiff in this case chose to utilize the procedure afforded it by the West Virginia statute and in light of the Court's decision on the motion to dismiss, for failure to state a cause of action, infra, the question [18] of personal jurisdiction over the defendant can be raised. Now, however, that question is determined.

HN4[] Rule 4(d)(3) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure provides that personal service shall be made upon a foreign corporation by delivering a copy of the summons and the complaint to, among others, " . . . any other agent authorized by appointment or by law to receive service of process . . . ." Also Rule 4(d)(7) provides that on a foreign corporation it is sufficient if the summons and complaint are served " . . . in the manner prescribed by the law of the state in which the district court is held . . . ." So the plaintiff's actions were completely in accordance with the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, and all of the requirements for personal jurisdiction over the defendant have been met.

HN5[] The United States District Courts are given jurisdiction over private antitrust actions by 15 U.S.C.A. § 15 which provides:

> "Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides or is found or has an agent, without respect [19] to the amount in controversy . . . ."

Federal jurisdiction is exclusive here. See e.g. Engelhardt v. Bell & Howell Co., 327 F.2d 30 (8th Cir. 1964).

This rule has been liberalized in the case of corporate defendants by 15 U.S.C.A. § 22 which reads:

> "Any suit, action or proceeding under the antitrust laws against a corporation may be brought not only in the judicial district whereof it is an inhabitant, but also in any district wherein it may be found or transacts business . . . ."

One purpose of liberalizing the requirements, when corporate defendants are concerned, was to "increase the number of districts in which a corporation might be sued for violation of the antitrust laws." American Football League v. National Football League, 27 F.R.D. 264, 267 (D. Md. 1961). See also Goldlawr, Inc. v. Shubert, 169 F. Supp. 677 (Pa. 1958), and Cinema Amusements v. Loew's, Inc., 85 F. Supp. 319 (Del. 1949).

An ancillary purpose of the expanded venue provision was to "relieve persons injured through corporate violations of the antitrust laws from the 'often insuperable obstacle' of resorting to distant forums for redress of wrongs done in the places of their business [20] or residence. A foreign corporation no longer could come to a district, perpetrate there the injuries outlawed, and then by retreating or even without retreating to its headquarters defeat or delay the retribution due." U.S. v. Scophony Corp. of America, 333 U.S. 795, 808, 92 L. Ed. 1091, 68 S. Ct. 855 (1948).

The question of venue and service of process in the instant case seems to be controlled by the decision in Eastman Kodak Co. v. Southern Photo Co., 273 U.S. 359, 71 L. Ed. 684, 47 S. Ct. 400 (1927), which arose shortly after Congress inserted the additional words "or [*644] transacts business" after the original phrase "may be found." Eastman Kodak, the plaintiff-in-error, which was represented by John W. Davis, argued that the phrase "or transacts business" was not intended to broaden the scope of the section but was meant only "to make explicit what the Court had already decided ". 273 U.S. 359, 361, 47 S. Ct. 400, 71 L. Ed. 684.

The Court was faced with a factual situation which, with regard to the question of proper venue, was weaker than presented by the instant case.

> " . . . the defendant - which resides and has its principal place of business in New York [21] - had not registered in Georgia as a non-resident corporation for the purpose of doing business in that State, and had no office, place of business or resident agent therein. It had, however, for many years prior to the institution of the suit, in a continuous course of business, carried on interstate trade with a large number of photographic dealers in Atlanta and other places in Georgia, to whom it sold and shipped photographic materials from New York. A large part of this business was obtained through its traveling salesmen who visited Georgia several times in each year and solicited orders from these dealers which were transmitted to its New York offices for acceptance or rejection. In furtherance of its business and to increase the demand for its goods, it also employed traveling 'demonstrators ', who visited Georgia several times in each year, for the purpose of exhibiting and explaining the superiority of its goods to photographers and other users of photographic materials. And, although these demonstrators did not solicit orders for the defendant's goods, they took at times retail orders for them from such users, which they turned over to the local dealers supplied by the [22] defendant." 273 U.S. 359, 370-71, 47 S. Ct. 400, 71 L. Ed. 684.

The question before the Court was " . . . whether there was local jurisdiction or venue in the District Court ". 273 U.S. 359, 370, 47 S. Ct. 400, 71 L. Ed. 684. The Court said that by the amendment " . . . the local jurisdiction of the district courts was materially enlarged in reference to suits against corporations." 273 U.S. 359, 372, 47 S. Ct. 400, 71 L. Ed. 684. As for the construction of the phrase "transacts business," the Court held:

> " . . . HN6[] a corporation is engaged in transacting business in a district, within the meaning of this section, in such sense as to establish the venue of a suit - although not present by agents carrying on business of such character and in such manner that it is 'found' therein and is amenable to local process, - if in fact, in the ordinary and usual sense, it 'transacts business' therein of any substantial character." 273 U.S. 359, 373, 47 S. Ct. 400, 71 L. Ed. 684.

It is the opinion of this Court that the instant case falls squarely within the Eastman Kodak guidelines, with regard to the venue requirements of the antitrust aspects of the case.

A reading of [23] U.S. v. Scophony Corporation of America, supra, further illustrates the appropriateness of the Northern District of West Virginia as the proper venue for this type of antitrust suit. In Scophony the District Court quashed the service of process and dismissed the complaint as to a British corporation which had its principal place of business in London. The facts of this case are set out in the syllabus at 333 U.S. 795, 68 S. Ct. 855, 92 L. Ed. 1091:

> "A British corporation with its principal place of business in London engaged in the Southern District of New York in various but continuing efforts to conserve and exploit its television inventions and patents. This was done through a series of complex contractual arrangements made with certain American corporations and involved the British company's constant intervention and supervision. The company was represented in the New York district by two of its directors, one of whom held a comprehensive power [*645] of attorney to protect its interests in the United States."

Justice Rutledge began the Court's opinion with a review of the historical changes in the venue provisions in the antitrust laws. He concluded [24] by saying:

> "Thus, by substituting practical, business conceptions for the previous hairsplitting legal technicalities encrusted upon the 'found' - 'present' - 'carrying-on-business' sequence, the Court yielded to and made effective Congress' remedial purpose. Thereby it relieved persons injured through corporate violations of the antitrust laws from the 'often insuperable obstacle' of resorting to distant forums for redress of wrongs done in the places of their business or residence." 333 U.S. 795, 808, 68 S. Ct. 855, 92 L. Ed. 1091.

In the case of Yonce v. Miners' Memorial Hospital Association, et al., 161 F. Supp. 178 (Va. 1958), an action was brought by certain laundry owners against the hospital association and a firm of laundry consultants alleging an unlawful combination and conspiracy in violation of the Sherman Act to restrain and monopolize the commercial laundry service in a particular area.

The laundry consultants, Victor Kramer Co., Inc., a New York corporation, spent approximately two weeks in Virginia, West Virginia and Kentucky, before it entered into an agreement of indefinite duration to serve as laundry management consultants for the hospitals. Process [25] was served on Kramer through the Secretary of the Commonwealth of Virginia, in accordance with § 13-217 of the Code of Virginia of 1950, as amended. Judge Thompson, after stating the facts of the case, said " . . . if Kramer was doing business in the Western District of Virginia, it is amenable to process served on it through the Secretary of the Commonwealth . . ." He went on to point out that the question of doing business is one of fact and must be determined according to the factual situation of each case.

> HN7[] "If a corporation is engaged in promoting or carrying out a substantial amount of its corporate business in a foreign state, it is engaged in transacting business in that state . . . The business activities of Kramer in Virginia are the same activities - the substantive acts - upon which the plaintiff bases its antitrust allegation against Kramer. If Kramer in the conduct of its business in Virginia has violated the antitrust law, then it is amenable to the process of this Court." 161 F. Supp. 178, 184.

In the instant case, it is also the business activities of Daroff in the Northern District of West Virginia, which are the basis of L. S. Good's complaint, that [26] make it amenable to process and complaint served upon the State Auditor of West Virginia.

Daroff's other motion is to dismiss the complaint for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted pursuant to Rule 12(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. As the defendant states in its brief, for the purposes of this motion, all well-pleaded allegations of fact must be deemed to be admitted and the plaintiff is entitled to the benefit of all reasonable inferences therefrom. The pertinent allegations of the complaint are as follows:

> "Plaintiff, in the spring and summer of 1964, enlarged and remodeled its place of business . . . and added a large and well equipped men's clothing department. Defendant gave great assistance to the plaintiff in the planning and organization of this department and helped install its said 'Botany 500' line of men's clothing and plaintiff used the said promotional materials sent and in addition expended large sums on its own promotion of the said 'Botany 500' line including statement enclosures, newspaper advertising, extensive radio and television advertising, roadside billboards, and concentrated sales effort in the said men's clothing [27] department of plaintiff."

[*646] The plaintiff also alleges in its complaint:

> "Prior to March 27, 1965, the plaintiff had been appointed and had acted as a retail distributor of defendant's products including that line of men's clothing products of the defendant well known and highly respected as the 'Botany 500' line.
>
> "By letter of March 27, 1965, defendant through its president, Joseph Daroff, discontinued plaintiff as a retail distributor of the defendant's products with the 'Botany 500' label. The reason given was as follows:

> "We have been selling Bernhardt's in this city for over 40 years and when we inaugurated the 'Botany 500' line the account was handled by my brother Michael, who made a definite commitment to them that they would have the exclusive franchise thereafter.
>
> "The aforesaid Bernhardt's is a retail men's clothing store also located in Wheeling, Ohio County, West Virginia."

By reason of the above, plaintiff claims injury to its business and property in an amount in excess of $100,000, and demands treble damages, costs and reasonable attorney's fee.

The complaint shows a situation where a manufacturer (that is also a distributor) [28] of men's clothing has chosen to favor one retailer over another as an outlet for one line of the manufacturer's products. There is no allegation, nor is there any indication, that this refusal to deal was a product of anything other than an exercise of Daroff's business judgment. Bernhardt's also operates a store in Rockford, Illinois, but there is no allegation that the purchasing "leverage" from this store was used to influence the decision as to which retail outlets Daroff would use in Wheeling. In short, there is no allegation of a contract, combination or conspiracy which would run afoul of the antitrust laws. Also, there is no allegation that Daroff refused to sell any other of its many lines to L. S. Good. In answer to Daroff's Interrogatory 4(B) ("Set forth . . . the name and address of the manufacturer, producer, or wholesaler of each such article of men's clothing."), L. S. Good lists six firms whose merchandise it carries, in addition to the defendant. So it appears that the market foreclosure incurred by Daroff's refusal to sell is a rather insubstantial one.

The sole issue before the Court is whether a cause of action exists under the antitrust laws. The complaint [29] does not designate which section of the antitrust laws is alleged to be violated. The defendant suggests that under no section could the plaintiff plead a valid cause of action. The antitrust laws of the United States are set out in the Sherman Antitrust Act (15 U.S.C.A. §§ 1-7), the Clayton Antitrust Act [2] (15 U.S.C.A. §§ 12-27), and the Robinson-Patman Act (15 U.S.C.A. §§ 13-13c, 21a). [3]

The only possibly relevant sections of the antitrust laws are Sections 1 and 2 of HN8[] the Sherman Act (15 [30] U.S.C.A. §§ 1 and 2) which prohibit, respectively, "Every contract, combination in form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce . . ." and " Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States . . ." Sections 4 and 12 of HN9[] the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C.A. §§ 15 and 22) authorize private suits by persons injured [*647] because of violations of the antitrust laws.

The basis of the complaint, as noted above, is the refusal of the defendant to continue to sell its "Botany 500" line to the plaintiff. HN10[] The complaint does charge the defendant with engaging in a "combination, contract and conspiracy," but no supporting facts have been alleged. A conclusory allegation of this type does not set forth a cause of action. Glenn Coal Co. v. Dickinson Fuel Co., 72 F.2d 885, 888 (4th Cir. 1934); Black & Yates v. Mahogany Ass'n, 129 F.2d 227 (3rd Cir. 1941), cert. den. 317 U.S. 672, 87 L. Ed. 539, 63 S. Ct. 76.

The case which most nearly resembles the instant case is Packard Motor Car Co. v. Webster Motor Car Co., 100 U.S. App. [31] D.C. 161, 243 F.2d 418 (D.C. Cir. 1957), rev'g 135 F. Supp. 4 (D.D.C. 1955), cert. den. 355 U.S. 822, 78 S. Ct. 29, 2 L. Ed. 2d 38, rehearing denied 355 U.S. 900, 78 S. Ct. 259, 2 L. Ed. 2d 197. In this case, Zell Motor Car Company, the largest of Packard's three Baltimore dealers, told Packard that Zell was losing money and would quit unless Packard gave it an exclusive distributorship. Packard agreed to do so and told its two other Baltimore dealers that their contracts would not be renewed. The District Court submitted to the jury the question " .

---

[2] Section 3 of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C.A. § 14) makes illegal any lease or sale of goods on the condition that the purchaser will not use or deal in the goods of a competitor where the same may substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly. This section has no relevance to instant case.

[3] The Robinson-Patman Act, which amended the Sherman-Clayton Acts, prohibits discrimination in price, services or facilities among customers. The complaint in the instant case does not suggest such violations.

. . whether there was an unreasonable restraint of trade and also whether there was an agreement or attempt to monopolize." The Court of Appeals entered judgment for the defendant (Judge Bazelon dissenting).

> "There was no contract or conspiracy in restraint of trade within the meaning of the Sherman Act. As the Court informed the jury, it has long been clear that HN11[] only unreasonable restraints of trade are unlawful. Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey v. U.S., 221 U.S. 1, 31 S. Ct. 502, 55 L. Ed. 619. When an exclusive dealership 'is not part and parcel of a scheme to monopolize and effective competition exists at both the seller [32] and buyer levels, the arrangement has invariably been upheld as a reasonable restraint of trade. In short, the rule was virtually one of per se legality' until the District Court decided the present case. . . . The fact that any other dealers in the same product of the same manufacturer are eliminated does not make an exclusive dealership illegal; it is the essential nature of the arrangement. The fact that Zell asked for the arrangement does not make it illegal. Since the immediate object of an exclusive dealership is to protect the dealer from competition in the manufacturer's product, it is likely to be the dealer who asks for it.
>
> "The short of it is that a relatively small manufacturer, competing with large manufacturers, thought it advantageous to retain its largest dealer in Baltimore, and could not do so without agreeing to drop its other Baltimore dealers. To penalize the small manufacturer for competing in this way not only fails to promote the policy of the antitrust laws but defeats it." 100 U.S. App. D.C. 161, 243 F.2d 418, 420-21.

The situation in the men's clothing industry is quite similar to the situation described in the Packard Motor Car case. [33] Daroff, despite its large annual gross sales, is only one of a large number of manufacturers, each with only a small share of the market. [4] Therefore, it is hardly conceivable that Daroff's refusal to sell in this case could constitute an attempt to monopolize.

That such a refusal to sell by a manufacturer is not an unreasonable restraint of trade can clearly be seen from the [*648] fact that HN12[] the Clayton Act specifically provides (15 U.S.C.A. § 13(a)):

> " . . . And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall prevent persons engaged in selling goods, wares, or merchandise in commerce from selecting their own customers in bona fide [34] transactions and not in restraint of trade . . . ."

The Courts of this Circuit have followed the holdings affirming a manufacturer's freedom to refuse to deal with any particular customer. In Miller Motors, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 252 F.2d 441 (4th Cir. 1958), the Court held that an automobile manufacturer's collection of contributions to a dealer's advertising association, by including assessments in the price of the new cars delivered to the dealers, did not violate the Sherman Act:

> "The HN13[] hybrid nature of a private antitrust suit dictates that, to succeed, the plaintiff must prove not only that the defendant has infringed one or more of the antitrust laws to the public injury, but also that such infringement has resulted in private injury to the plaintiff in its business or property. 15 U.S.C.A., Sec. 15. In the absence of a showing of either the public or private harm, the plaintiff cannot prevail." 252 F.2d 441, 448.

In Glenn Coal Co. v. Dickinson Fuel Co., supra, the Court said:

> "In a civil suit under this section, the gist of the action is not merely the unlawful conspiracy or monopolization or attempt to monopolize interstate commerce in the particular [35] subject matter, but is damage to the individual plaintiff resulting proximately from the acts of the defendant which constitute a violation of the law. A mere conspiracy with intent to violate the law while it may be the basis of a valid indictment under the criminal sanctions of the Anti-Trust Act, does not give rise to a personal civil suit for damages." 72 F.2d 885, 887.

---

[4] The 1963 United States Census of Manufacturers, Series MC63 (P-23a-1) shows that there are some 1105 manufacturing establishments of men's and boys' suits and coats. The Statistical Abstract of the United States - 1965, p. 776, Table 1125, shows the net total selling value of men's and boys' suits and coats in 1963 was in excess of 1 1/2 billion dollars.

And in the instant case, the plaintiff, L.S. Good, has simply not met these requirements.

Even if Daroff had discontinued selling to L.S. Good in furtherance of a scheme to maintain resale prices (there is no indication of this in the complaint, but the very barrenness of that document forces one to search for possible theories of recovery), this alone would not be enough to afford a basis for denying Daroff's motion to dismiss. The law in this area - resale price maintenance backed up with a refusal to deal - is not altogether clear, but this complaint does not allege enough to even come within that vagueness. The original rule which was laid down in U.S. v. Colgate & Co., 250 U.S. 300, 63 L. Ed. 992, 39 S. Ct. 465 (1919) was:

> "In HN14[] the absence of any intent to create or maintain a monopoly, the Sherman [36] Act does not prevent a manufacturer engaged in a private business from announcing in advance the prices at which his goods may be resold and refusing to deal with wholesalers and retailers who do not conform to such prices." Syllabus, 250 U.S. 300, 301, 39 S. Ct. 465, 63 L. Ed. 992.

However, this exception to the antitrust laws has been so narrowed that Justice Harlan in his dissent in U.S. v. Parke, Davis & Co., 362 U.S. 29, 49, 4 L. Ed. 2d 505, 80 S. Ct. 503, said:

> "Scrutiny of the opinion will reveal that the Court has done no less than send to its demise the Colgate doctrine . . . ."

Parke, Davis, a civil suit under § 4 of the Sherman Act, charged a drug manufacturer with combining and conspiring to maintain the resale prices of its products in areas where, unlike West Virginia, [5] there were no Fair Trade laws. HN15[] However, the first proviso to Section 1 of the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C.A. § 1) which was added by Act of Congress August 17, 1937, makes this type of agreement legal in states such as West Virginia.

> [*649] "Provided, That nothing contained in sections 1-7 of this title shall render illegal, contracts or agreements prescribing minimum [37] prices for the resale of a commodity which bears, or the label or container of which bears, the trademark, brand or name of the producer or distributor of such commodity and which is in free and open competition with commodities of the same general class produced or distributed by others, when contracts or agreements of that description are lawful as applied to intrastate transactions under any statute, law, or public policy now or hereafter in effect in any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia in which such resale is to be made, or to which the commodity is to be transported for such resale . . ."

The second proviso to Section 1 prohibits any contract or agreement between manufacturers or between retailers (and certain other classes not applicable here), "providing for the establishment or maintenance of minimum resale prices . . ." However, this issue is not raised by the complaint.

However, HN16[] a manufacturer's or a distributor's discretion [38] as to whom it will sell is not unlimited. If the refusal to deal is a device used to acquire a monopoly, U.S. v. General Motors Corporation, 121 F.2d 376 (7th Cir. 1941); or to fix prices, FTC v. Beech-Nut Packing Co., 257 U.S. 441, 66 L. Ed. 307, 42 S. Ct. 150 (1922); or to establish market dominance and drive out competitors, Lorain Journal Co. v. U.S., 342 U.S. 143, 96 L. Ed. 162, 72 S. Ct. 181 (1951); or as part of a boycott, Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741, 79 S. Ct. 705 (1959); it would be illegal. These are per se violations - restraints which are inherently bad, and any contract, combination or conspiracy used to accomplish such a result is unreasonable and is therefore prohibited.

None of the above are alleged in this case. All that is alleged is that defendant refused to sell to plaintiff and sold to plaintiff's competitor. And this, under all of the cases, is perfectly legal and proper. As the Honorable Archie O. Dawson stated at the Seminar on Protracted Cases, 23 F.R.D. 430, 431:

> "The filing of a complaint in a federal court is, in effect, a license to the plaintiff to subject the defendant to the expense [39] and difficulties of extensive discovery proceedings. The least that can be expected is that the > plaintiff, as a condition of getting this license, should be able to set forth in a complaint a short and plain statement of the plaintiff's claim against the defendant, showing that the plaintiff is entitled to relief against the defendant."

[5] West Virginia Code, § 47-11-1 to 8 (Michie 1966).

The complaint in this action does not show any conspiracy or unreasonable restraint of interstate commerce, nor any monopoly forbidden by the antitrust laws, nor any other allegations sufficient to support an action for treble damages.

However, since the Court has decided that the defendant is properly before it, regardless of the nature of the action, and the plaintiff has alleged the requisite diversity of citizenship, leave will be granted to the plaintiff to amend its complaint so as to set forth a cause of action based on the common law. See Arthur v. Kraft-Phenix Cheese Corp., 26 F. Supp. 824, 826 (D. Md. 1937). If the plaintiff fails to allege a common law cause of action within 30 days from the date of the entry of this opinion, then the complaint will be dismissed for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Also, [40] in event plaintiff attempts to allege a common law cause of action, the requisite jurisdictional amount must be alleged in the new complaint. As Judge Chesnut said in Arthur v. Kraft-Phenix Cheese Corp., supra:

> "It is not generally desirable to decide cases of doubtful import on the pleadings only as by demurrer. But suits of this character involving alleged [*650] conspiracies to monopolize or restrain trade often lead to very protracted trials and it is not reasonable to subject either or both parties to the expense of a long trial when it fairly appears with reasonable clarity from the declaration that conceding all of the facts therein well pleaded, there would have to be a directed verdict against the plaintiff . . . ." 26 F. Supp. 824, 830.

An order will be entered denying defendant's motion to dismiss because of improper venue and improper service; and granting defendant's motion to dismiss for failure of the complaint to state a claim, unless within 30 days of the date of this opinion the plaintiff amends its complaint to set forth a common law cause of action.

Quinn v. Mobil Oil Co.

United States Court of Appeals for the First Circuit

March 31, 1967, Decided

No. 6737

Reporter

375 F.2d 273 *; 1967 U.S. App. LEXIS 6904 ; 1967 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,052

Robert A. Quinn, Plaintiff, v. Mobil Oil Co., Defendant

Disposition: [1] Affirmed.

Core Terms

dealer, manufacturer, retailers, supplier, prices, lease, maximum price, gasoline, Sherman Act, resale price, retail price, competitors, conspiracy, vertical, horizontal, maximum, consignment, fixing, minimum price, insistence, proscribe, terminate, station, renew

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

HN1[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Resale pricing agreements that unreasonably restrain trade or commerce, whether they fix minimum or maximum prices, are proscribed by § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. In order to set forth a cause of action under this section it is essential that a contract, combination or conspiracy, express or implied, be alleged.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN2[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

To be actionable under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, pressure to achieve retail price maintenance that exceeds a mere refusal to deal must occur in a contemporaneous framework of the combination, conspiracy, or agreement forbidden by the statute.

Judges: Aldrich, Chief Judge, McEntee and Coffin, Circuit Judges. Coffin, Circuit Judge (concurring). Aldrich, Chief Judge (dissenting).

Opinion by: McENTEE

Opinion

[*273] McENTEE, Circuit Judge:

In this action plaintiff, a gasoline station operator, charges the defendant oil company, his former lessor and supplier, with violations of the federal antitrust laws as a result of which he suffered great damage. The district court dismissed the suit for failure of the amended complaint to allege a federal antitrust law violation.

Viewing this ambiguous complaint in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, [*274] the following facts will be taken as true. In November 1962 plaintiff leased a Mobil gasoline station from defendant for a period of one year -- and entered into a contemporaneous retail dealer contract agreeing to purchase certain minimum quantities of defendant's petroleum products. The contract also provided for the purchase of tires, batteries and other accessories. This venture became fairly successful in the very first year of operation. In late 1963 when the lease and contract came up for renewal, defendant orally informed plaintiff that unless [2] he reduced the retail price of gasoline by one cent a gallon his rent under the new lease would be substantially increased. Plaintiff flatly refused to reduce his price and vehemently protested the threatened rent increase. Apparently he won out -- at least temporarily -- because shortly thereafter the parties executed new agreements substantially the same as the old ones except for a slight increase in the rent. [1]

A few months later defendant began exerting various pressures on plaintiff to force him either to reduce his price of gasoline [2] or terminate his lease. It delayed payments due him at a time when it knew he needed the money; attempted to unload a consignment of tires, batteries and accessories on him [3] and apply the money owed in payment for this unwanted merchandise. After plaintiff refused to accept this consignment, defendant entered upon a campaign of harassment [3] against him by delaying its deliveries of gasoline to his service station. Finally, when these pressures and harassments failed to bring about the desired results, defendant notified plaintiff in July, 1964 that it was terminating the lease as of the end of its current term (November, 1964). This, despite the fact that the receipts from the station had increased substantially in the relatively brief period he had operated it. Shortly thereafter, plaintiff was required to vacate the gasoline station premises and as a consequence suffered great damage -- all because of his refusal to comply with defendant's request that he reduce the retail price of its gasoline.

From these facts it is clear that the only provision of the federal antitrust laws that [4] need be considered here is Section 1 of the Sherman Act, and I shall confine my discussion to defendant's alleged violation of that section. [4] [5] HN1[] Resale pricing agreements that unreasonably restrain trade or commerce, whether they fix minimum or maximum prices, are proscribed by Section 1 of the Sherman Act. Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. John D. Park & Sons Co., 220 U.S. 373, 55 L. Ed. 502, 31 S. Ct. 376 (1911); Kiefer-Stewart Co. v. Joseph E. Seagram & Sons, 340 U.S. 211, 95 L. Ed. 219, 71 S. Ct. 259 (1951). [5] It should be pointed out, however, that in order to set [1] These agreements ran automatically from year to year but were subject to termination in any year on notice of either party.

---

[2] There is no allegation that defendant renewed its request for this price increase at this or any later time.

[3] That he did not order; that defendant did not require his competitors to take and which under his contract plaintiff was not obliged to accept.

[4] Plaintiff contends that defendant's above stated tactics also violated the Clayton Act as amended by the Robinson-Patman Price Discrimination Act, 15 U.S.C. § 13(a)(b)(f) but this act is inapplicable under any view of the facts and for that reason we shall not consider this contention.

[5] In this case the Court stated that both minimum and maximum price fixing agreements "cripple the freedom of traders and thereby restrain their ability to sell in accordance with their own judgment."

forth a cause of action under this section [6] it is essential that a "contract, combination or conspiracy", express or implied, be alleged. United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., 362 U.S. 29, 4 L. Ed. 2d 505, 80 S. Ct. 503 (1960).

[*275] Beginning with United States v. E.C. Knight Co., 156 U.S. 1, 39 L. Ed. 325, 15 S. Ct. 249 (1895), the first case decided under the Sherman Act, and continuing down through United States v. General Motors, 384 U.S. 127, 16 L. Ed. 2d 415, 86 S. Ct. 1321 (1966), I have found no case where the Supreme Court has allowed recovery under this section absent a showing of at least one of these elements. Nowhere in his amended complaint has this plaintiff alleged the existence of any contract, combination or conspiracy between the defendant and others fixing the resale price of its gasoline nor does he [6] allege any facts from which any such agreement, policy, scheme or conspiracy may be implied. Thus, I think the absence of such allegations renders the amended complaint fatally defective. Accord, House of Materials, Inc. v. Simplicity Pattern Co., 298 F.2d 867, 870 (2d Cir. 1962).

The allegation that defendant pressured plaintiff to reduce his retail price at best amounts to a unilateral attempt to coerce plaintiff into making such an agreement. [7] Therefore the immediate question is whether this is actionable under Section 1 of the Sherman Act. I think not. If Congress intended to make attempts actionable under this section undoubtedly it would have done so expressly as it did in the very next section of the Act (15 U.S.C. § 2) dealing with monopolies. It certainly is not within our province to read into this section interstitially a proscription which Congress clearly did not intend.

[7] There are three cases which it is argued tend to support the contrary view. I think these cases are distinguishable. The first is United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., supra. There the Court held that a manufacturer's conduct which went beyond a mere announcement of its price policy and a simple refusal to deal, violated Section 1 of the Sherman Act. In that case the manufacturer took steps to pressure certain unwilling retailers into adhering to its resale price policy through the cooperation of its dealers and some of its retailers. The Court found that this joint action to maintain resale prices constituted a combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade. Although defendant's conduct in the case before us may have been more than a simple refusal to deal, our case is clearly distinguishable from Parke, Davis in that no combination or conspiracy is alleged nor can any be implied.

The facts in the other two cases, Simpson v. Union Oil Co., 377 U.S. 13, 12 L. Ed. 2d 98, 84 S. Ct. 1051 (1964) and Broussard v. Socony Mobil Oil Co., 350 F.2d 346 (5th Cir. 1965), are practically identical. In both, a resale price agreement was entered [8] into between supplier and dealer. Subsequently the dealer reneged and the supplier terminated the lease. Unlike the present case, in Simpson there was evidence of a large scale price maintenance program maintained through written consignment agreements under which the supplier fixed the retail price of gasoline. The dealer would not abide by the price fixed thereunder and for that reason the supplier refused to renew the dealer's lease. The Court held that resale price maintenance through this coercive type of consignment agreement violated Section 1 of the Sherman Act. The case turned on the existence of an agreement for resale price maintenance. Simpson, supra at 24. In the instant case there is no such agreement.

Broussard, supra involved a situation where the dealer reduced his retail price of gasoline only after repeated insistence by the supplier. Finding that he could not make a living at the reduced price, the dealer raised it to its former level. The supplier again insisted upon a reduction in price and when the dealer refused, the supplier declined to renew the lease. The record in that case is much stronger for the dealer than [9] in the [*276] instant one. In Broussard there was clear evidence that the supplier's insistence that the retail price be reduced was part of a "marketing program"; also that at least one other dealer had reduced his retail price due to this insistence. When the dealer in Broussard reduced his price an agreement to control the retail price came into existence. I think this was a determinative factor in that case, even though shortly thereafter the dealer refused to abide by it. [8] The evidence above mentioned also supplied the basis upon which a combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade could be implied.

---

[6] Section 1 reads in relevant part "Every contract, combination or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal. . . ." 26 Stat. 209, 15 U.S.C. § 1 (1964 ed.).

[7] A simple refusal to deal, standing alone, is not a vertical agreement; in fact the refusal indicates there has been a failure to obtain agreement. Turner, The Definition of Agreement Under the Sherman Act: Conscious Parallelism and Refusals to Deal, 75 Harv. L. Rev. 655, 686 (1962).

Plaintiff Quinn never having complied with defendant Mobil's request to reduce his price, [10] no agreement to control the resale price of gasoline ever came into existence between them. This, plus the absence of any allegation that Mobil's request was part of a general price maintenance scheme or policy or that any other dealer reduced his retail price as a result of defendant's insistence, clearly distinguishes our case from Broussard. HN2[] To be actionable under Section 1 of the Sherman Act pressure to achieve retail price maintenance that exceeds a mere refusal to deal must occur "in a contemporaneous framework of the combination, conspiracy, or agreement forbidden by the statute." Dart Drug Corporation v. Parke, Davis & Company, 120 U.S. App. D.C. 79, 344 F.2d 173, 186 (1965). Clearly, in the instant case there is no such "framework."

The allegation that defendant terminated the lease, despite the fact that plaintiff's business had increased substantially, perhaps comes close to raising an inference that defendant was policing a general scheme to fix prices for the area. But this court should not be required to so speculate. Nor is it too much to require this plaintiff, absent the showing of an agreement, to allege enough facts to indicate that the acts [11] complained of took place within the larger framework of a pricing program, policy or conspiracy -- if this is the real basis of his complaint. He has not done so here.

Affirmed.

Concur by: COFFIN

Concur

COFFIN, Circuit Judge (concurring):

I agree with Judge McEntee's conclusion that the absence of allegation of contract, combination, or conspiracy is a fatal defect in the complaint. But I would go further and say that even had plaintiff alleged either a completed agreement between himself and defendant or pressure on him to conform to a general maximum pricing policy of defendant, the complaint would not have stated a cause of action under section 1 of the Sherman Act.

My reasoning lies in the difference I see -- admittedly without the benefit of authority -- between the anti-competitive effects of minimum price fixing and of maximum price fixing, as practiced by a single manufacturer or supplier. [1] When a single manufacturer establishes and seeks to police a minimum resale price policy, he in effect is acting as the convenient instrumentality for his retailers. For the motive to maintain floors to prices is theirs, not his. It must be immaterial to the manufacturer [*277] [12] what profit his retailers receive so long as they pay his price and sales are satisfactory. Therefore, what appears to be unilateral and vertical action by a manufacturer aimed toward retailers, may in reality amount to a horizontal agreement among retailer-competitors. The essence of combination is present although the mechanics may be obscure.

---

[8] We do not subscribe to the view that an agreement broken shortly after it was made is in effect no agreement at all. See Guidry v. Continental Oil Company, 350 F.2d 342, 344 (5th Cir. 1965), where the same court, on the same day it decided Broussard, strongly emphasized this point.

[1] To be sure, United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 1940, 310 U.S. 150, 223, 84 L. Ed. 1129, 60 S. Ct. 811, contains the classic statement, often repeated, that "a combination formed for the purpose and with the effect of raising, depressing, fixing, pegging, or stabilizing the price of a commodity in interstate or foreign commerce is illegal per se." But this was made in the context of industry-wide policies. As I shall hope to demonstrate, while maximum price fixing among manufacturers is more than likely to restrain price competition, the same cannot be said of maximum price fixing by one manufacturer acting truly independently.

But in the case [13] of a single manufacturer's policy to set ceilings above which resale prices shall not rise, the motive and the pressure must be, in the great generality of cases, the manufacturer's desire to maximize his profits. While it is of prime concern to a retailer that his competitor not undercut him, it is generally of no concern to him that his competitor cannot charge higher prices. It is, of course, important to him that he cannot raise his prices and increase his margin of profit. Whether, therefore, the retailer has his eye on his competitor or on himself, it is difficult to conceive of a situation in which retailers would pressure a supplier to put into effect a maximum price. In other words, unilateral maximum price pressure against retailers is not the equivalent of a horizontal combination, but rather of a series of vertical agreements for the manufacturer's benefit.

Kiefer-Stewart Co. v. Joseph E. Seagram & Sons, 1951, 340 U.S. 211, 95 L. Ed. 219, 71 S. Ct. 259, which condemned agreement between two liquor manufacturers to fix maximum resale prices, gives indirect support to this proposition in two ways. First, its specific holding was that "an agreement among [14] competitors, to fix maximum resale prices . . . violates the Sherman Act." 340 U.S. at 213. Second, it rejected the argument that the two defendants, because of common ownership and control, were "mere instrumentalities of a single manufacturing-merchandising unit" and therefore could not conspire. The Court noted not only the separateness of the corporate entities but that they held themselves out as competitors. 340 U.S. at 215. The strong implication, I think, is that the same actions, if taken by a bona fide single unit, would not be proscribed by the Sherman Act.

Because of this reasoning, I do not agree with Broussard v. Socony Mobil Oil Co., 5 Cir., 1965, 350 F.2d 346. In that case a dealer's lease was not renewed, allegedly because of his refusal to acquiesce in his supplier's request to reduce prices (i.e., to observe a maximum price ceiling). There was evidence of one other dealer's reducing his price, a "marketing program", and "suggestions of prices to [supplier's] dealers". The "program" was Socony Mobil's response to meet competition from a new gasoline in the area. While this evidence of pressure on more than one dealer, [15] as Judge McEntee's opinion points out, distinguishes Broussard from the present case, it does not aid in reconciling the approach in Broussard to that which I find persuasive. For Broussard presented precisely the case of the "single manufacturing-merchandising unit" which Kiefer-Stewart took pains to distinguish. The court in Broussard cited the language of Kiefer-Stewart to the effect that "such agreements [among competitors to set maximum prices] no less than those to fix minimum prices, cripple the freedom of traders and thereby restrain their ability to sell in accordance with their own judgment." 350 F.2d at 349. But it ignored the fact that the referent of "such agreements" in that context was agreements among competitors. By so doing, I believe, it construed section 1 of the Sherman Act to elevate individual decision-making above competitiveness as a prime policy objective. Kiefer-Stewart, in my view, said only that interference with individualism achieved through an agreement among competitors to fix maximum prices was violative of the Sherman Act.

I readily accept the proposition that an agreement between two manufacturers [16] to impose maximum prices on their dealers constitutes a combination in restraint of competition since (a) an identical or parallel system of maximum prices between two competing sets of [*278] dealers is likely to become a system of minimum prices and (b) the motive of each manufacturer is likely to be something other than maximizing his own return. I am also in sympathy with the principle of unfettered decision-making by the retailer, but I do not think the Sherman Act goes any further than to proscribe shackles on such decision-making which are the result of (1) a combination which (2) restricts competition.

It is now pertinent to ask whether the above analysis is still valid in the light of Simpson v. Union Oil Co., 1964, 377 U.S. 13, 12 L. Ed. 2d 98, 84 S. Ct. 1051. It is possible to read Simpson as proscribing a price fixing agreement between a single supplier and a single retailer. In that case the oil company and a dealer had entered into a consignment agreement (coupled with a lease) under which the company set the retail price of gasoline. The dealer violated the agreement, selling below the authorized price to meet competition. Because of this, [17] the oil company refused to renew plaintiff's lease. The Court held that resale price maintenance through such a consignment agreement was illegal. I would make two observations about Simpson. First, the Court faced the particular agreement between the parties against the background of use of the same lease-consignment device with some 3000 retailers in a "vast gasoline distribution system" in eight states. The Court characterized the arrangement as one which would "impose noncompetitive prices on thousands of persons whose prices might otherwise be competitive." 377 U.S. at 21. And, second, the agreement was one which set a specific authorized price, which prevented dealers from meeting competitive prices. Even if the data concerning the widespread use of the device could be considered irrelevant to the decision, I would not readily read Simpson as prohibiting a single-supplier -- single-dealer maximum resale price agreement. This is because of the differences of critical significance between fixing a maximum and fixing a minimum, or, worse, a specific price. A minimum price agreement between one supplier and one dealer not only prevents him from meeting [18] prices below that minimum but also is most unlikely to exist, absent pressure from other dealers to produce the end result of a horizontal combination. A maximum price agreement between one supplier and one dealer, on the other hand, not only leaves the dealer free to meet competitive prices but also is completely explicable in terms of the supplier's desire to maximize his return, without reference to any interest on the part of the dealer's or the supplier's competitors.

If, therefore, an agreement between a single manufacturer and a single dealer on a maximum price is not illegal, a frustrated effort to achieve such an agreement is not actionable, under the Sherman Act. Were such a completed agreement illegal, we would then confront a troublesome dilemma in dealing with unsuccessful efforts to obtain such an agreement. If we were to hold such conduct actionable, we would, as Judge McEntee notes, be adding judicially to section 1 the same kind of "attempt" provision which Congress has spelled out in section 2 dealing with monopoly. If we were to refrain from such judicial enlargement, we would create the anomalous situation of giving a treble damage remedy to a plaintiff, as [19] in Simpson, who entered and then withdrew from an agreement, and denying such a remedy to a plaintiff who steadfastly resisted pressure to enter such an agreement in the first place. In my view, , we embrace neither horn.

Dissent by: ALDRICH

Dissent

ALDRICH, Chief Judge (dissenting):

Both of the opinions of my brothers discuss the case of Broussard v. Socony Mobil Oil Co., 5 Cir., 1965, 350 F.2d 346, in which the court held that a claim that Mobil -- also defendant here -- attempted to set maximum prices for its retailers stated a claim of violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act. Judge McEntee finds the case distinguishable, while Judge Coffin finds it possibly in point, but [*279] wrongly decided. Regretfully, I disagree with both.

I.

In Broussard, as in the present case, Mobil suggested to the plaintiff, who was its lessee and at the same time one of its retailers, a maximum retail price for gasoline. Subsequently, when plaintiff refused to accept this maximum, Mobil exercised its contract right to terminate his lease. It is true that in Broussard there had been a price agreement with which the plaintiff at first complied, and that in the case [20] at bar there was none. Broussard lost his lease because he refused to continue his undertaking; Quinn lost his because he refused to enter into one. The injury of which Broussard complained, however, did not arise out of the agreement, but out of the cancellation of his lease. I do not believe that if his cancellation was an act "forbidden in the antitrust laws," 15 U.S.C. § 15, Quinn's was not. In other words, I see no difference in substance between pressure to induce the making of an unlawful agreement and pressure to reinstate one that has been broken. To the extent that it be suggested that the rejected agreement in Broussard is what brought the case within the act, this would not only be an unfortunate distinction, since any future "Quinn" could establish rights for himself simply by making the requested agreement one day and breaking it the next, but also, it seems to me, an illogical one.

If, on the other hand, a distinction is to be sought in the fact that in Broussard there was an allegation that Mobil was engaging in a "marketing program" covering many dealers, [1] then I find myself in accord with Judge Coffin that such a program is not [21] a horizontal conspiracy (as it might be in a minimum price situation) but a series of separate vertical agreements that are not in any collective interest of the retailers. There could be an implied horizontal combination where a manufacturer is enforcing minimum pricing, but no dealer wishes possible competitors to keep their prices down. Consequently I do not find in Mobil's general marketing program alleged in Broussard [2] any support for the allegation, if such be necessary, of an "agreement or combination."

[1] Cf. Guidry v. Continental Oil Co., 5 Cir., 1965, 350 F.2d 342, 344.

II.

Turning to Judge Coffin's views on Broussard, he asserts, first, that he does not find it to have been dictated by Kiefer-Stewart Co. v. Joseph E. Seagram & Sons, 1951, 340 U.S. 211, 95 L. Ed. 219, 71 S. Ct. 259. In that case the Court held that a combination of two [22] manufacturers to force a dealer to accept maximum resale prices violated section 1, and that the dealer could recover treble damages. The reasoning that led to this result seems important. The court of appeals had reversed the district court and denied recovery because it viewed section 1 as aimed at promoting competition and concluded, "Competition . . . does not rest upon the ability to charge a higher price than a competitor but upon the ability to meet the price or undersell that fixed by the competitor." 182 F.2d 228, 235. In reversing, the Supreme Court held that the Sherman Act is concerned not merely with competition in this limited, classical sense, but with the freedom and independence of the individual entrepreneur: "[Maximum price agreements] cripple the freedom of traders and thereby restrain their ability to sell in accordance with their own judgment." 340 U.S. at 213 [3]

[23] [*280] It is true, as my brethren point out, that in Kiefer-Stewart the Court found a horizontal agreement between manufacturers to compel dealers to accept the stipulated maximum prices, while in the present case only a single manufacturer is involved. Since Kiefer-Stewart was decided, however, principles have developed that seem to me to make the presence of only one manufacturer and the absence of any consummated agreement, irrelevant. In Simpson v. Union Oil Co., 1964, 377 U.S. 13, 12 L. Ed. 2d 98, 84 S. Ct. 1051, plaintiff, a gasoline retailer, alleged that Union cancelled his lease for refusal to abide by an agreement to adhere to prices stipulated by Union. The Court held that he had stated a claim, noting again (see Kiefer-Stewart, supra) that the lease and agreement were allegedly being used "to injure interstate commerce by depriving independent dealers of the exercise of free judgment" in setting prices. Simpson thus seems to me to hold that a coercively extracted vertical agreement depriving a retailer of pricing discretion violates the act, and hence that where the requisite coercion to procure the vertical agreement [24] is shown, a horizontal conspiracy such as that alleged in Kiefer-Stewart is unnecessary.

Nor does this result seem offensive. A free and independent dealer, as in United States v. Colgate & Co., 1918, 250 U.S. 300, 63 L. Ed. 992, 39 S. Ct. 465, may not be actionably wronged if a single manufacturer says to him, "Accept my conditions or I will not deal with you." Such a dealer is free to turn to other manufacturers, and may rely for his protection on competition among those manufacturers for his trade. A retailer who, like Quinn and Simpson, is also a lessee, is in a distinctly different position. The manufacturer's power as a landowner gives it leverage with which to interfere with the price discretion of others. [4]

---

[2] I agree with my brethren that no such allegation can be found or inferred in Quinn's complaint, or should be supplied.

[3] Cf. the language of Learned Hand, writing for the Second Circuit in United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 1945, 148 F.2d 416, 427. "[In outlawing monopolies, Congress] was not necessarily actuated by economic motives alone. It is possible, because of its indirect social or moral effect, to prefer a system of small producers, each dependent for his success upon his own skill and character, to one in which the great mass of those engaged must accept the direction of a few. These considerations, which we have suggested only as possible purposes of the Act, we think the decisions prove to have been in fact its purposes." Compare Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, 1959, 359 U.S. 207, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741, 79 S. Ct. 705.

[4] An interestingly comparable case is Northern Pacific Ry. v. United States, 1958, 356 U.S. 1, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514. There the Court held that a vertical agreement between a railroad-landowner and a shipper-land purchaser, in which the purchaser agreed, in partial consideration for the sale of land, to "prefer" Northern Pacific over other carriers, violated section 1. Northern Pacific could not, the Court said, use one resource it possessed (land) to coerce its own customers in another market (shipping) in order to obtain an advantage over the railroad's own competitors. Here it is alleged that Mobil is using its land ownership to deprive one of its customers of price discretion, in order to gain an advantage over Mobil's own competitors

[25] Judge Coffin suggests, in response, a rather different interpretation of Simpson. He points out that Simpson involved the dictation of specific, rather than maximum prices, to numerous dealers rather than to one. He suggests that the unlawful "agreement" in Simpson was therefore not the vertical agreement between plaintiff and defendant but a horizontal combination of retailers with Union acting, apparently, as the hub of an illicit wheel. My difficulty with this is that it seems to run counter to what the opinion says. [5] The Court uses the word "agreement" invariably to refer to the vertical agreement between Simpson and Union. It refers to no other agreement, combination, or conspiracy except for similar vertical agreements with other dealers, and these are mentioned only for the purpose of showing that Union is [*281] in interstate commerce, and in order to refute the contention that the vertical agreements should be treated as lawful consignment agreements rather than unlawful price maintenance.

[26] While I am not 100% certain, I do believe that Kiefer-Stewart and Simpson, taken together, proscribe coercively extracted vertical contracts to fix maximum prices, and that no distinction should be drawn between temporarily successful, as in Broussard, and totally unsuccessful coercive measures, as here, and accordingly I dissent.

---

through low dealer margins. The agreements in Northern Pacific affected discretion to choose shippers rather than discretion to set prices, but the analogous structure of the two arrangements is suggestive.

[5] See generally Note, "Combinations" in Restraint of Trade: A New Approach to Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 1966 Utah L. Rev. 75, 78-89. The note argues that Simpson does not fit within the traditional definition of conspiracy, and suggests that what happened in Simpson should be described, and proscribed, as a vertical combination (but not conspiracy) in restraint of trade.

Nelson v. Berry Petroleum Co.

Supreme Court of Arkansas

April 3, 1967, Opinion delivered

No. 5-4136

Reporter

242 Ark. 273 *; 413 S.W.2d 46 ; 1967 Ark. LEXIS 1235 ***

G. D. Nelson v. Berry Petroleum Company et al

Prior History: [*1] Appeal from Pulaski Chancery Court, First Division, Murray O. Reed, Chancellor.

Disposition: Reversed and Remanded.

Core Terms

taxpayer, exaction, cause of action, demurrer, allegations, Chancery, cases, public funds, highway department, pleaded

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > Judgment on Pleadings

HN1[] Pretrial Judgments, Judgment on Pleadings

The court must treat all allegations in the complaint, which are well pleaded, as true, and construe them liberally in favor of the pleader.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > Judgment on Pleadings

HN2[] Pretrial Judgments, Judgment on Pleadings

It is not necessary that a complaint state a cause of action in every particular, for if it contains the substance of a cause of action imperfectly stated, the presumption is that the defects in the complaint are cured by the proof at the trial.

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Demurrers

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > Judgment on Pleadings

HN3[] Defenses, Demurrers & Objections, Demurrers

In testing the sufficiency of a pleading by general demurrer every reasonable intendment should be indulged to support it. If the facts stated in the pleadings, together with every reasonable inference therefrom constitute a cause of action, or a valid defense, then a demurrer should be overruled.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Jurisdiction

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Governments > Courts > Authority to Adjudicate

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN4[] Clayton Act, Jurisdiction

State courts have no jurisdiction in federal antitrust actions.

Constitutional Law > State Constitutional Operation

HN5[] Constitutional Law, State Constitutional Operation

See Ark. Const. art. XVI, § 13.

Constitutional Law > State Constitutional Operation

HN6[] Constitutional Law, State Constitutional Operation

The provision of Ark. Const. art. XVI, § 13 is self-executing, and imposes no terms or conditions upon the right of the citizens there conferred.

Constitutional Law > State Constitutional Operation

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Employees & Officials

HN7[] Constitutional Law, State Constitutional Operation

"Illegal Exaction" under the Arkansas Constitution means both direct and indirect illegal exactions, thus comprehending any attempted invalid spending or expenditure by any government official.

Constitutional Law > State Constitutional Operation

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Claims By & Against

Tax Law > State & Local Taxes > Administration & Procedure > Judicial Review

HN8[] Constitutional Law, State Constitutional Operation

Any arbitrary or unlawful action exacting taxes or tax revenues may be restrained and annulled by a taxpayer affected by such procedure.

Governments > Courts > Authority to Adjudicate

HN9[] Courts, Authority to Adjudicate

Chancery has jurisdiction and the power to grant affirmative as well as injunctive relief in circumstances involving misapplication of public funds.

Constitutional Law > State Constitutional Operation

HN10[] Constitutional Law, State Constitutional Operation

Ark. Const. art. XVI, § 13 is self-executing, and requires no enabling act or supplementary legislation to make its provisions effective.

Constitutional Law > State Constitutional Operation

HN11[] Constitutional Law, State Constitutional Operation

Nothing in the Ark. Const. art XVI, § 13 makes the refusal of any public officer to bring suit a condition precedent to the exercise of a right given without condition imposed upon its exercise.

Headnotes/Summary

Headnotes

1. Equity -- invalid spending of tax funds -- jurisdiction. -- While State courts have no jurisdiction in federal anti-trust actions, a suit instituted pursuant to Art. 16, Sec. 13 of Ark. Constitution was properly brought by citizen and taxpayer in chancery court for determination of monies owed taxpayers alleged to have been unlawfully spent for asphalt by Highway Department.

2. Constitutional law -- prohibitions & restrictions -- illegal exaction. -- Under Ark. Constitution, illegal exaction means both direct and indirect illegal exactions, thus comprehending any attempted invalid spending or expenditure by any government official, as well as collection of unlawfully levied taxes.

3. Pleading -- demurrer -- scope of review. -- In testing a case on demurrer, the question presented is whether treating all allegations in the complaint, which are well pleaded, as true, and construing them liberally in favor of pleader, a cause of action is stated.

4. Pleading -- demurrer -- scope of inquiry. -- In testing sufficiency of pleading by general demurrer, [2] every reasonable intendment should be indulged to support pleading, and if facts stated, together with every reasonable inference therefrom, constitute a cause of action or a valid defense, the demurrer should be overruled.

5. Constitutional law -- illegal exaction -- right of action. -- Art. 16, Sec. 13 of Ark. Constitution, which provides that any citizen has a right to institute suits in behalf of himself and others interested to protect against enforcement of illegal exaction, is self-executing and requires no enabling act or supplementary legislation to make its provisions effective.

6. Constitutional law -- illegal exaction -- right of action. -- Citizen and taxpayer's right to bring action against enforcement of illegal exaction was not dependent upon making Highway Department or any state agency a party, nor upon inaction of Attorney General, although intervention on behalf of State was not precluded.

7. Appeal & error -- determination & disposition of cause -- reversal & remand with directions. -- Where appellant's complaint was good as against the demurrer filed, the facts stated having been sufficient to constitute a cause of action, the decree is reversed [3] and cause remanded with directions.

Counsel: Kenneth Coffelt, for appellant.

Keith, Clegg & Eckert and Wright, Lindsey & Jennings and Mahony & Yocum and Catlett & Henderson and Smith, Williams, Friday & Bowen, for appellee.

Judges: Carleton Harris, Chief Justice.

Opinion by: HARRIS

Opinion

[*274] [47] Appellant, G. D. Nelson, a citizen and taxpayer of Arkansas, instituted suit against appellee companies, Berry Petroleum Company, Arkansas Bitumuls Company, Lion Oil, Inc., Humble Oil and Refining Company, The American Oil Company, [1] MacMillan Ring-Free Oil Company, Inc., and Bitucote Products Company, alleging, inter alia:

"For several years next before the filing of this suit, the defendants have sold to the State of Arkansas and its Highway Department asphalt for the construction of highways in this State, and during said period this plaintiff believes and therefore alleges:

"That said defendants have purposely, intentionally and fraudulently connived together and entered into a conspiracy to fix prices for said asphalt far in excess of the fair market and customary value thereof in this and adjoining territories. That the defendants have systematically [4] over the years, in an effort to carry out their designed scheme as herein alleged, agreed with one another that they would not compete with each other on asphalt contracts and prices fixed thereunder in the various highway districts of Arkansas. * * *"

The complaint asserts that appellee companies have received unlawfully in excess of $ 3 million of taxpayers' money; that the grades and quantities of asphalt sold to the taxpayers of this state have been of a lower grade and quantity than paid for. Appellant [48] prayed for an accounting of appellees' dealings and transactions with the state and its highway department, in order that the amount of [*275] funds and monies owed the taxpayers by reason of the foregoing allegations might be determined. To this complaint, appellees filed their several demurrers, and these demurrers were sustained by [5] the court. Appellant elected to stand on his pleading, declining to plead further, and the court thereupon dismissed said complaint. From the decree so entered, appellant brings this appeal. The issue is thus simply whether the complaint stated a cause of action.

In Quinn v. Stuckey, Admr., 229 Ark. 956, 319 S. W. 2d 839, this court said:

---

[1] By agreement of the parties, and the consent of the court, the cause was dismissed as to Humble Oil and Refining Company, and the American Oil Company.

"At the outset it is well to state the rule for testing a case on demurrer. In Tyler v. Morgan, 214 Ark. 667, 217 S. W. 2d 606, we said:

"'Appellees demurred to this complaint on the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The trial court sustained the demurrer and this appeal followed.

"'The question presented is: HN1[] Treating all allegations in the complaint, which are well pleaded, as true, and construing them liberally in favor of the pleader, as we must, was a cause of action stated? We hold that there was. "It HN2[] is not necessary that the complaint should state a cause of action in every particular, for if it contains the substance of a cause of action imperfectly stated, the presumption would be that the defects in the complaint were cured by the proof at the trial." Clow v. Watson [6] , 124 Ark. 388, 187 S. W. 175.'"

Likewise, in Dodson v. Abercrombie, 212 Ark. 918, 208 S. W. 2d 433, we stated:

"It is well settled that HN3[] in testing the sufficiency of a pleading by general demurrer every reasonable intendment should be indulged to support it. If the facts stated [*276] in the pleadings, together with every reasonable inference therefrom constitute a cause of action, or a valid defense, then a demurrer should be overruled. Ark. Life Ins. Co. v. Am. Nat. Ins. Co., 110 Ark. 130, 161 S. W. 136; Neal v. Parker, 200 Ark. 10, 139 S. W. 2d 41."

With the rule as thus stated, we have reached the conclusion that the complaint did state a cause of action, and accordingly our discussion will be directed to the points relied upon by appellees in their argument supporting the action of the Chancellor in sustaining the demurrers. Four different arguments are advanced, and we proceed to a discussion of these points, though not in the order listed.

It is asserted that the court has no jurisdiction of the cause, it being the position of appellees that the instant complaint is no more than an attempt to assert a cause of action based upon the Sherman [7] Anti-Trust Act and the Clayton Act. We agree that HN4[] state courts have no jurisdiction in federal antitrust actions, and many federal cases so hold. However, we do not agree that the instant suit is simply an attempt to seek recovery under these federal acts. Instead, it appears to be an action instituted pursuant to HN5[] Article XVI, Section 13, of the Constitution of the State of Arkansas, which reads, as follows:

"Any citizen of any county, city or town may institute suit in behalf of himself and all others interested, to protect the inhabitants thereof against the enforcement of any illegal exactions whatever."

This is a broad provision of our Constitution, and has been utilized in various types of actions. The case of Starnes v. Sadler, 237 Ark. 325, 372 S. W. 2d 585, contains a comprehensive discussion of the meaning of the term, "Illegal Exaction." There, we said:

"This Chancery Court action was instituted pursuant to *Article XVI, Section 13, of the Constitution of the [277] State of Arkansas, and the Chancery Court had [49] jurisdiction of this Constitutional proceeding. HN6[] This Constitutional provision is self-executing, and imposes no terms or conditions [8] upon the right of the citizens there conferred. Samples v. Grady, 207 Ark. 724, 182 S. W. 2d 875; 8 Ark. Law Review 129 (1954).

"'Illegal HN7[] Exaction' under the Arkansas Constitution means both direct and indirect illegal exactions, thus comprehending any attempted invalid spending or expenditure by any government official, Quinn v. Reed, 130 Ark. 116, 197 S. W. 15; Farrell v. Oliver, 147 Ark. 599, 226 S. W. 529.

"'Illegal Exaction' means far more than the mere collection of unlawfully levied taxes. With little limitation, almost any misuse or mishandling of public funds may be challenged by a taxpayer action. Even paying too much for cleaning public outhouses has been held by our courts as basis for a taxpayer's right to relief, Dreyfus v. Boone, 88 Ark. 353, 114 S. W. 718. HN8[] Any arbitrary or unlawful action exacting taxes or tax revenues may be restrained and annulled by a taxpayer affected by such procedure, Bush v. Echols, 178 Ark. 507, 10 S. W. 2d 906; McClellan

v. Stuckey, 196 Ark. 816, 120 S. W. 2d 155; Park v. Hardin, 203 Ark. 1135, 160 S. W. 2d 501; Brookfield v. Harahan Viaduct Improvement District, 186 Ark. [9] 599, 54 S. W. 2d 689.

"The remotest effect upon the taxpayer concerning any unlawful act by a tax supported program or institution may be enjoined under Article XVI, Section 13, of the Constitution of the State of Arkansas, Green v. Jones, 164 Ark. 118, 261 S. W. 43. * * *

"Our Court thoroughly discussed 'illegal exaction' in the case of Arkansas Association of County Judges v. Green, 232 Ark. 438, 338 S. W. 2d 672, wherein jurisdiction of the Chancery Court was questioned and illegal exaction was involved. This Court stated that the theory [*278] of an illegal exaction does not necessarily involve an illegal tax citing the case of Lee County v. Robertson, 66 Ark. 82, 48 S. W. 901, wherein the Court was not dealing with illegal tax, but with the question of illegal use or appropriation of county funds. * * *

"The case of Arkansas County Judges Association v. Green, cited the case of Ward v. Farrell, 221 Ark. 636, 253 S. W. 2d 353, wherein this Court stated concerning the involved Constitutional provision:

"'There is eminent authority for holding, even in the absence of an express provision of the Constitution, such as referred to above, [10] that a remedy is afforded in equity to taxpayers to prevent misapplication of public funds on the theory that the taxpayers are the equitable owners of public funds and that their liability to replenish the funds exhausted by the misapplication entitles them to relief against such misapplication.'"

In Revis v. Harris, 217 Ark. 25, 228 S. W. 2d 624, suit was instituted by Owen Revis, a citizen and taxpayer, against Sam Harris for recovery of money, which Revis alleged was illegally paid to Harris while he (Harris) was acting as Municipal Judge. Pursuant to a motion to dismiss the complaint filed by Harris, the court overruled so much of the motion as sought to strike the prayer seeking injunctive relief, but granted the motion as to that part of the complaint seeking recovery of the funds allegedly illegally paid to Harris. On appeal to this court, we reversed this holding, stating:

"In that case [Sitton v. Burnett, 216 Ark. 574, 226 S. W. 2d 544], Burnett, a citizen and taxpayer, brought suit to recover salary illegally paid Sitton by the second class City of Clinton, while serving as a de facto marshal. There it was alleged Burnett was not a proper party [11] to bring the suit and that equity was without jurisdiction. We there held that Burnett, as a resident and [*279] taxpayer, was a proper party to bring this suit since taxpayers are the [50] equitable owners of public funds and may sue to prevent any illegal exactions whatever, within the meaning of Art. 16, § 13, of our Constitution.

"So here, if appellant's allegations in this complaint to the effect that appellee had been paid sums of money illegally by the City of Clarksville while acting as Municipal Judge, and for other services, without right or authority of law, were true, appellant stated a cause of action and was a proper party to initiate the suit.

"Chancery HN9[] had jurisdiction and the power to grant affirmative as well as injunctive relief in the circumstances. Grooms v. Bartlett, 123 Ark. 255, 185 S. W. 282."

In Grooms v. Bartlett, supra, this court stated:

"The taxpayers of a county are the persons from whom the public revenues are obtained and are directly interested in protecting the same. They are proper persons to maintain suits against public officers to prevent or remedy misapplication of the public funds, and in such cases chancery [12] has the power to grant affirmative as well as injunctive relief. Chancery has not only power to prevent such wrongs, but it has power to require reparation for that which has been done."

We think these cases make it clear that the Chancery Court had jurisdiction to hear this suit. [2]

It is also asserted by appellees that the complaint [*280] does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. Again, we are unable to agree with the contention made. [13] In the first phase of this argument, appellees mention that there is a complete absence of any allegation in the complaint that appellant, or anyone else, had made demand upon the State Highway Commission or the State of Arkansas, or its attorneys, to institute proceedings against appellee companies. Appellees contend that it is necessary that this suit be brought by the Attorney General, or at least he must have refused to bring it, before a taxpayer may act, and it is pointed out that there is no allegation that the Attorney General refused to bring the suit. Several earlier cases are cited in support of this argument, [3] but the controlling case on this point is Samples v. Grady, supra. There, we stated:

"Unlike § 23 of Art XIX of the Constitution, § HN10[] 13 of Art. XVI of the Constitution is self-executing, and requires no enabling act or supplementary legislation to make its provisions effective. This section of the Constitution last mentioned confers the right upon any citizen to institute suits in behalf of himself and all others interested to protect against the enforcement of any illegal exaction whatever.

"This is made a class suit in which any citizen may for [14] the benefit of himself, and all other interested citizens, and any citizen would have the right to be made a party, and this is a right which other citizens should exercise if there were any reason to apprehend that the suit was [51] collusive between the parties, plaintiff and defendant.

"This § 13 of Art. XVI of the Constitution is not [*281] only self-executing, but it imposes no terms or conditions upon the right of the citizen there conferred, and we would be required to write something into the constitution, which does not there appear, if we hold that this right was conditional. However, the General Assembly has the power to prescribe the practice to be pursued in its enforcement.

[*15] "We do not hold that the attorney general, where the interest of the state is involved, or the prosecuting attorney, in appropriate cases, might not institute such an action; but we do hold that the right of a citizen is not dependent upon the inaction of these officers, or either of them. We have rather two methods whereby the interests of affected inhabitants may be protected. We find HN11[] nothing in § 13 of Art. XVI of the Constitution making the refusal of any officer to bring this suit a condition precedent to the exercise of a right given without condition imposed upon its exercise." [4]

Under the same point, it is also asserted that, though alleging that appellees have defrauded the taxpayers of Arkansas, there are no particular facts pleaded to substantiate this statement, and that, standing alone, the facts pleaded constitute no more than a conclusion of the pleader. The simple answer to this contention is found in [16] the recent case of Brewer v. Hawkins, 241 Ark. 460, 408 S. W. 2d 492 (Nov. 1966). In comparing the complaint in that case (the allegations being set out in full) with the complaint in the instant case, it is immediately apparent that the allegations before us are as specific as those in Brewer. For that matter, it is evident that it would have been difficult, if not well nigh impossible, for Nelson to have alleged specific acts relied upon. This information could hardly be obtained until after institution of the suit. Of course, if appellees felt that the allegations were vague

---

[2] There is also a state law, Ark. Stat. Ann. § 70-101 (Repl. 1957) prohibiting corporations, partnerships, individuals, "or other association or person whatsoever" from entering into combinations to fix prices, maintain certain prices, or to fix or limit the amount or quantity of certain articles. This is defined as a conspiracy to defraud. Aside from any statutory authority, an attempted monopoly or an agreement in restraint of trade, was a criminal conspiracy at common law. Hammond Packing Company v. State, 81 Ark. 519, 100 S. W. 407.

[3] Griffin v. Rhoton, 85 Ark. 89, 107 S. W. 380; Gladish v. Love-well, 95 Ark. 618, 130 S. W. 579; Oats v. Smith, 194 Ark. 812, 109 S. W. 2d 955; Etheridge v. Riley, 196 Ark. 713, 118 S. W. 2d 665. The last two cases were suits to collect on the bond of officeholders, and the actions were brought in compliance with specific statutory provisions.

[4] The opinion also distinguishes this case from Gladish v. Love-well. supra.

and should be pleaded [*282] more distinctly and clearly, a motion to make more definite and certain could have been filed. This was not done.

It is also contended that Nelson, as a citizen and taxpayer, does not have legal capacity to maintain the action. The cases cited in our discussion of the other points answer this contention, and no additional comment is necessary.

Finally, it is alleged that there is a defect of parties plaintiff, it being asserted that the Arkansas Highway Department was a necessary party. We have already cited sufficient authority to the effect that the taxpayer [17] has a perfectly valid right to institute an action to recover public funds, and this being true, the right is not dependent upon any state agency becoming a party. Of course, there is nothing to prevent the Arkansas Highway Department from intervening in the case, and it might well do so; for that matter, the Attorney General, on behalf of the state, is entitled to intervene. Appellees do not make clear just how appellant could force the Highway Department to become a plaintiff, but, from what has been said, it is evident that the department is not an essential party to the litigation.

We reiterate, in effect, the statement made at the outset, viz., that we are only called upon to determine whether the complaint was good as against the demurrers filed, and, under the cases cited on that point, we unhesitatingly reply in the affirmative.

The decree is reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to proceed in a manner not inconsistent with this opinion.

Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Shoe Machinery Corp.

United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit

May 3, 1966, Argued ; April 11, 1967, Filed

Nos. 15626, 15627

Reporter

377 F.2d 776 *; 1967 U.S. App. LEXIS 6778 ; 1967 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,067

The Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Shoe Machinery Corp.

Subsequent History: [1] Reported at: 377 F.2d 776 at 793.

Core Terms

leasing, decree, damages, machines, machinery, manufacturers, shoe, anti trust law, monopolization, customers, shoe machinery, treble damages, cases, district court, antitrust, charges, Sherman Act, lease-only, pages, statute of limitations, circumstances, passing-on, rentals, provisions, parties, cost of capital, counsel fees, retroactivity, competitors, violations

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Penalties

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Penalties

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > Restraints of Trade

HN1[ ] Sherman Act, Remedies

The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, prescribes sanctions; and it does not make uncollectibility of the purchase price one of them. The appropriate remedy for injury resulting from a violation of the antitrust laws is a treble damage suit.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN2[ ] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Antitrust laws deal with a plaintiff at the moment of injury and do not look to subsequent events that may have reduced the impact of the wrongful conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN3[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The question of multiple liability is fundamental in determining whether the passing-on defense shall have validity.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

HN4[] Clayton Act, Claims

Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15, requires not only injury but also a causal relationship between the antitrust violation and the injury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN5[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 15.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN6[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

Section 5(a) of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 16(a), makes a government decree prima facie evidence against a defendant in future actions as to all matters respecting which the judgment or decree would be an estoppel as between the parties thereto.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN7[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

Courts should give prima facie effect to any fact that the previous findings or opinion fairly show was actually adjudicated in the government case. To do otherwise would hamper on a technicality of form the policy of affording private antitrust litigants the fullest benefit of a successful government suit.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN8[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

Section 5(a) of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 16(a), embodies a congressional policy to confer, subject only to a defendant's enjoyment of its day in court against a new party, as large an advantage as the estoppel doctrine would afford had the government brought suit.

Civil Procedure > Trials > Bench Trials

HN9[] Trials, Bench Trials

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 52(a), findings of fact and conclusions of law need not be isolated under specific designations if they appear generally in the opinion of the court.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Civil Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Declaratory Judgments > General Overview

HN10[] US Department of Justice Actions, Civil Actions

The remedial character of an equity decree does not necessarily imply that the conduct it prohibits in the future was valid in the past.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN11[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

As of July 7, 1955, a federal four-year statute of limitations in antitrust actions is applicable. 15 U.S.C.S. § 15b.

Judges: Freedman, Circuit Judge.

Opinion by: FREEDMAN

Opinion

[*779] Opinion

FREEDMAN, Circuit Judge:

This private antitrust action presents a number of important questions.

Plaintiff, The Hanover Shoe, Inc., is a manufacturer of shoes and a customer of defendant, United Shoe Machinery Corporation, a manufacturer and distributor of shoe machinery. In this action brought under § 4 of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. § 15) based on violations of § 2 of the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. § 2) Hanover obtained a trebled damage judgment against United in the amount of $4,239,609, with interest, and an award of $650,000 for counsel fees. United appeals from the judgment on a number of grounds, and Hanover has taken a cross-appeal on the ground that there was not sufficient evidence to support the district court's rejection of one of its large items of damage.

The Proceedings

Almost twenty years ago, on December 15, 1947, the United States brought a civil action against United in the United States District Court for the District of Massachusetts, under § 4 of the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. § 4) [2] to restrain alleged violations of §§ 1, 2). Judge Wyzanski, who heard the case, graphically detailed what he called the "prodigious length" of the trial. "The hearings took 121 days and covered 14,194 pages of transcript and included the offer of 5512 exhibits totalling 26,474 pages (in addition to approximately 150,000 pages of OMR's [records concerning machines in shoe factories as of a certain date] and over 6,000 soft copies of patents) and 47 depositions covering 2122 pages. At the close of the evidence the Court asked for briefs, and requested findings of fact and conclusions of law. The Government offered briefs totalling 653 pages, and requests totalling 667 pages. United submitted briefs totalling 1240 pages, and requests totalling 499 pages." [1] On February 18, 1953, Judge Wyzanski filed an elaborate opinion in which he found that United was guilty of monopolization in violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act. [*780] United States v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 110 F. Supp. 295 (D. Mass. 1953). The Supreme Court affirmed on May 17, 1954 in a per curiam opinion. United Shoe Machinery Corp. v. United States, 347 U.S. 521, 98 L. Ed. 910, 74 S. Ct. 699 (1954). [3]

More than a year later, on September 21, 1955, Hanover brought the present treble damage action against United in the United States District Court for the Middle District of Pennsylvania. By pretrial agreement the parties submitted for preliminary decision the defense that any excessive rentals charged to Hanover for shoe machinery would not constitute an injury to its business or property if the excess was passed on to its customers. After the hearing had been held on this issue the district judge died and Chief Judge Biggs designated Circuit Judge Goodrich in his place. Judge Goodrich summarized the complaint as charging that defendant, "as a result of its unlawful control of the market, has caused plaintiff . . . to pay excessive rentals for the lease of shoe machinery." He held as a matter of law that if United was guilty of monopolization [4] and had charged Hanover excessive rentals, Hanover had a cause of action for the difference between what it was charged and what it could properly have been charged in the absence of monopolistic practices. He also held that the injury occurred when Hanover was overcharged for the machinery and that since the cause of action arose at the moment the tort occurred, United would not be relieved of liability because subsequent events might have alleviated some of the ultimate consequences of the wrong, for these would not inure to the benefit of the defendant. Judge Goodrich certified that the case was appropriate for an interlocutory appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b), because the issue involved a controlling question of law as to which there was substantial ground for difference of opinion, and an immediate appeal might materially advance the ultimate termination of the litigation. Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 185 F. Supp. 826 (M.D. Pa. 1960). We affirmed in a per curiam opinion in which we rejected the claim that treble damages would result in a windfall to Hanover, stating that Congress had imposed this rigorous penalty [5] and any modification was for it to make and not for the courts. Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 281 F.2d 481 (3 Cir. 1960), cert. denied, 364 U.S. 901, 5 L. Ed. 2d 194, 81 S. Ct. 234 (1960).

After a subsequent trial without a jury, Chief Judge Sheridan on April 28, 1965 filed a comprehensive opinion holding that Hanover was entitled to recover treble damages for the excess of the leasing costs over what it would have cost to own the same machines had they been available for purchase. Damages were limited to the period beginning July 1, 1939 on the ground that any earlier period was barred by the Pennsylvania statute of limitations, and were awarded to September 21, 1955, the date the action was brought. The Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 245 F. Supp. 258 (M.D. Pa. 1965). Hanover's alternative claim for damages, that the leasing charges were themselves excessive, was rejected by the district court because the Government decree, on which Hanover relied, had made no finding that United's leasing charges were excessive. Hanover has not sought review of this ruling on appeal. On August 12, 1965 Chief Judge [6] Sheridan denied United's motion for a new trial, and entered the judgment from which these appeals are taken.

Acquiescence and Demand

---

[1] United States v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 110 F. Supp. 295, 299 (D. Mass. 1953), aff'd, 347 U.S. 521, 98 L. Ed. 910, 74 S. Ct. 699 (1954).

At the outset United contends that Hanover acquiesced in its leasing system which helped Hanover to obtain high profits and gave Hanover special benefits such as the right to return obsolete machines and the free services of United's technicians on problems in shoe making. According to United, the absence of a formal demand by Hanover for the sale of United's shoe machinery is fatal to Hanover's claim.

[*781] The court below found that "Hanover has proved that as a consequence of United's monopolization it was unable to purchase most of the more important machines which it would have purchased had they been available." 245 F. Supp. at 287. This finding negatives any inference of acquiescence in the United leasing system. The finding in the Government case of the existence of the monopoly and of United's policy against sales, the participation of Mr. Sheppard, Hanover's president, in the effort of a trade association of which he was president to persuade United to offer more of its machinery for sale and Hanover's purchase of [7] machinery from United when it first became possible to do so by virtue of the Government decree, sufficiently support the finding by the court below and forbid our declaring it to be clearly erroneous.

The question remains, however, of the necessity of a formal demand for the purchase of machines during the damage period. On this issue the court below found: "Hanover never asked United if it could buy the lease-only machines. Neither did it protest its inability to buy. Mr. Sheppard testified that any such request would have been a 'foolish question.' This explanation does not seem unreasonable in view of the findings in the Government case and the evidence in this case." 245 F. Supp. at 280.

Hanover was, as the court below found, along with the entire shoe machinery industry, a "captive customer" of United. What the witness characterized as foolish amounts to a futile gesture which the law does not require. Hanover had been a customer of United in the leasing of machinery for many years. It was well aware of United's power as the supplier of machinery and of its policy against sales. In such circumstances it would be ironic as well as idle to require the victim [8] of the monopoly to make an explicit demand the denial of which was implicit in the continuance of the monopoly. See Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 699, 8 L. Ed. 2d 777, 82 S. Ct. 1404 (1962).

Injury

1. United urges that its leasing system did no injury to Hanover because Hanover's competitors were subject to the same practices which United uniformly imposed on all its customers. This is a remarkable proposition. It is founded upon the premise that harm done to a customer loses its injurious effect when similar harm is inflicted upon other customers similarly situated. It would punish a partial wrong but absolve it if it is widespread and thus would reduce the antitrust laws to a moral imperative without realistic effect. There is no reason to relieve actual injury on a basis so unrealistic and undesirable. Keogh v. Chicago & Northwestern Railway Co., 260 U.S. 156, 67 L. Ed. 183, 43 S. Ct. 47 (1922) does not require us to do so. There a shipper sued several railroads for treble damages on the ground that they had by agreement among themselves fixed excessive freight rates. United relies on the statement by Mr. [9] Justice Brandeis that the exaction of the alleged excessive rate, which had been approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission, might not have harmed the plaintiff because all other shippers were entitled to be put on a parity with him. What was involved in Keough, however, was a case of "plain repugnancy between the antitrust and regulatory provisions," [2] for the plaintiff was held barred from invoking the original treble damages provision of the Sherman Act because he was limited to the remedy provided by § 8 of the Interstate Commerce Act which conferred a right to untrebled damages where a carrier charged an illegal rate. The statement relied on by United plainly was dictum and was unnecessary to the decision in the case; it is not controlling here. See, e.g., [*782] Commonwealth Edison Co. v. Allis-Chalmers Manufacturing Co., 335 F.2d 203, 205-6 (7 Cir. 1964); Atlantic City Electric Co. v. General Electric Co., 226 F. Supp. 59, 65-66 (S.D.N.Y. 1964).

[10] 2. United also contends that Hanover suffered no injury from United's no-sale policy in the damage period because it could have obtained foreign machinery. The court below found, however, that the foreign machinery which was available was not acceptable to Hanover both because of its inadequate capacity and performance and the lack of available servicing and technical advice. 245 F. Supp. at 285, 286. We cannot say from the record that this finding is clearly erroneous.

[2] See United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 351, 10 L. Ed. 2d 915, 83 S. Ct. 1715 (1963); Pan American World Airways, Inc. v. United States, 371 U.S. 296, 322, 9 L. Ed. 2d 325, 83 S. Ct. 476 (1963), Brennan, J., dissenting.

3. United claims that Hanover was not legally injured because the leases were lawful and therefore no damage could result from them. The claim of legality of the leases is based on an abstract characterization, torn from the context of United's market control. Judge Wyzanski specifically held that the leases which United employed constituted a means of its monopolization of the industry. Since the leases, although valid as instruments conferring the right of possession on the lessee, were instruments of monopolization, their lawfulness in the abstract does not undo their character as weapons in the consummation of the monopoly. Neither Bruce's Juices, Inc. v. American Can Co., 330 U.S. 743, 91 L. Ed. 1219, 67 S. Ct. 1015 (1947) [11] nor Kelly v. Kosuga, 358 U.S. 516, 3 L. Ed. 2d 475, 79 S. Ct. 429 (1959) are of aid to United. They refused to allow a party to a contract to avoid payment thereunder because the underlying contract violated the antitrust laws. This was because the antitrust laws do not provide such a remedy: "HN1[] The Act prescribes sanctions, and it does not make uncollectibility of the purchase price one of them." Bruce's Juices, Inc. v. American Can Co., supra 330 U.S. at 750. The court expressly recognized, however, that the appropriate remedy for injury resulting from a violation of the antitrust laws was a treble damage suit. What was said in those cases regarding contracts which are intrinsically or inherently illegal related merely to the right to avoid payment thereunder and not to the remedy available for violation of the antitrust laws. [3]

[12] 4. United also claims that Hanover passed on to its customers the difference between what it paid to United in rentals and what it would have cost it to purchase the machines. The validity of a passing-on defense in this case was decided by Judge Goodrich in Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 185 F. Supp. 826 (M.D. Pa. 1960), aff'd, 281 F.2d 481 (3 Cir. 1960), cert. denied, 364 U.S. 901, 5 L. Ed. 2d 194, 81 S. Ct. 234 (1960). United seeks to distinguish the effect of the decision because it was based on the assumption that the damage claim was for excessive rental charges, whereas the judgment below is based on the difference between the rentals charged and the reasonable cost of the machinery if Hanover had purchased it.

Even if we assume that Judge Goodrich's determination of the passing-on issue is not binding here, his reasoning, which we accept, extends equally to the present claim. As we have seen, he pointed out that the HN2[] antitrust laws deal with a plaintiff at the moment of injury and do not look to subsequent events which may have reduced the impact of the wrongful conduct. The fact that Hanover might have recouped [13] some of that damage later by increasing the prices of its shoes is irrelevant to the question of damage. We may, indeed, add that if United's claim were accepted it would be difficult to apply the antitrust laws in a prosperous industry, [*783] where damages would readily be passed on to the consuming public. It would be contrary to the far-reaching social and economic purposes of the antitrust laws to afford release from their obligations to an economic wrongdoer because his victim in self-defense sought recoupment for the injury from the consuming public.

Our decision in Freedman v. Philadelphia Terminals Auction Co., 301 F.2d 830 (3 Cir. 1962), cert. denied, 371 U.S. 829, 9 L. Ed. 2d 67, 83 S. Ct. 40 (1962), does not impair our rejection of passing-on as a defense by a violator of the antitrust law. There fruit brokers brought a treble damage suit for violation of the Robinson-Patman Act resulting from an improper terminal charge. The brokers had purchased the fruit at the defendant's auction on behalf of regular clients and the jury made a special finding that plaintiffs suffered no injury because they received a separate commission for their [14] services, and their clients paid all the charges, including the terminal charges. In upholding the passing-on defense we specifically distinguished the case from the present one. Judge Kalodner, speaking for the Court, said: "Hanover affords no nourishment to plaintiffs' contention with respect to it. There the District Court in granting relief to the plaintiff premised its action on its fact-finding that plaintiff was a consumer and not a middleman and implicit in that distinction is its subscription to the doctrine enunciated in earlier cases that middlemen cannot recover damages where they suffer no injury by reason of their payment of proscribed charges." (301 F.2d at 833) Moreover, HN3[] the question of multiple liability is fundamental in determining whether the passing-on defense shall have validity. See Commonwealth Edison Co. v. Allis-Chalmers Manufacturing Co., 335 F.2d 203, 208-9 (7 Cir. 1964); Atlantic City Electric Co. v. General Electric Co., 226 F. Supp. 59, 71 (S.D.N.Y. 1964). This explains the difference between the present case and Freedman. There it was the clients of the brokers who had the direct injury which [15] would support treble damage claims against the auctioneer. Here, however, the injury to the customers who purchased the shoes which Hanover made with the machinery it acquired from United is too remote and its force too fragmentized and diluted to support a claim by the individual customers of Hanover. [4]

[3] Turner Glass Corp. v. Hartford-Empire Co., 173 F.2d 49 (7 Cir. 1949) was a special antitrust case involving patents in which plaintiff conceded that it would not be entitled to recover unless the agreements were inherently illegal. In any event, to the extent that it would support United's claim that the leases must be inherently illegal to support an antitrust action for damages, we decline to follow it.

Remoteness of Injury

What has been said regarding the passing-on defense supplies in part the answer to United's contention that any damage that Hanover suffered is too remote and indirect to support a cause of action under HN4[] § 4 of the Clayton Act, which requires not only injury, but also a causal relationship between the antitrust violation and the injury. [5] [17] The court below found that "Hanover's injury flows proximately [16] from the monopolization," and that by the leases United extracted "large sums of money in excess of the reasonable value of machinery and of the service rendered by United." 245 F. Supp. at 274. In this respect the case resembles Chattanooga Foundry & Pipe Works v. City of Atlanta, 203 U.S. 390, 51 L. Ed. 241, 27 S. Ct. 65 (1906), where it was held that injury was sufficiently demonstrated by the City's payment of more than the reasonable price of the defendant's pipes because of defendant's price fixing. [6] Here, [*784] as in that case, the cost to the customer of doing business was increased as a result of the monopolist's conduct. The consequences of the injury therefore were direct and the cause of action under the narrowest construction of § 4 [7] was made out. In the context of the relation of machinery monopolist and customer manufacturer no more direct injury could be inflicted.

Effect of the Government Decree as to the Lease-Only Policy

HN6[] Section 5 (a) of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. § 16 (a) makes the Government decree "prima facie evidence" against United in the present action "as to all matters respecting which said judgment or decree would be an estoppel as between the parties thereto. [18] "

Here the Government decree expressly declared that United's leases with any one of four specified restrictive provisions -- a term of ten years, a full capacity clause, deferred charges on return and non-segregation of repair and service charges -- were means by which United had monopolized the shoe machinery industry. The decree does not contain any comparable declaration regarding United's failure to make shoe machinery available for sale. From this United argues that the Government decree is not prima facie evidence that its failure to offer shoe

[4] Wolfe v. National Lead Co., 225 F.2d 427 (9 Cir. 1955), cert. denied, 350 U.S. 915, 100 L. Ed. 802, 76 S. Ct. 198 (1955), which United urges upon us, was specifically rejected by Judge Goodrich (185 F. Supp. at 831) whose opinion we affirmed.

[5] "HN5[] Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefor in any district court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides or is found or has an agent, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee."

[6] See also Georgia v. Evans, 316 U.S. 159, 86 L. Ed. 1346, 62 S. Ct. 972 (1942).

[7] It is unnecessary for us to consider whether the broad terms of the statute should be narrowed by construing § 4 to require that the injury be "direct," Karseal Corp. v. Richfield Oil Corp., 221 F.2d 358 (9 Cir. 1955), or whether a presumption of liability exists once injury has been shown, South Carolina Council of Milk Producers, Inc. v. Newton, 360 F.2d 414 (4 Cir. 1966); Note, Standing to Sue for Treble Damages under Section 4 of the Clayton Act, 64 Colum. L. Rev. 570, 586-88 (1964). See also Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 8 L. Ed. 2d 777, 82 S. Ct. 1404 (1962).

machinery for sale was illegal, since this is not a matter which was adjudicated in the Government case. For additional support it points to the fact that Paragraph 61 of the Government's complaint expressly alleged that United had refused to sell machinery, and urges that this was one of the "other charges of violation of the Sherman Act set forth in the complaint" which Section 2 of the Government decree declared "are dismissed with prejudice." On the face of the decree, therefore, United's contention is not lacking in merit.

United supports its contention by the claim that the courts are limited to the Government decree itself [19] in determining the existence and extent of an estoppel under § 5 (a) unless it is necessary to go beyond it to resolve an ambiguity in the decree. Such a construction of § 5 (a) would seriously weaken its underlying policy of lightening the burden on private antitrust plaintiffs, who play such an important role in the implementation of the antitrust laws. [8] It is in harmony with that policy to HN7[] give prima facie effect to any fact which the findings or the opinion fairly show was actually adjudicated in the Government case. [9] To do otherwise would hamper on a technicality of form the policy of affording private antitrust litigants the fullest benefit of a successful Government suit. In Emich Motors Corp. v. General Motors Corp., 340 U.S. 558, 568-69, 95 L. Ed. 534, 71 S. Ct. 408 (1951) the Supreme Court held that a criminal judgment was available to private litigants as prima facie evidence of "all matters of fact and law necessarily decided by the conviction and the verdict," since HN8[] § 5 (a) embodied a Congressional [*785] policy "to confer, subject only to a defendant's enjoyment of its day in court against a new party, as large an advantage as the estoppel doctrine [20] would afford had the Government brought suit." This goes further than the use of the determinations which appear in the findings and opinion of the judge sitting without a jury in a civil case.

United would distinguish Emich on the ground that it rested on a general verdict of guilty which does not specifically indicate the nature of the [21] jury's findings and that the conclusion in that case therefore was a result of necessity. The absence of any factual finding in a criminal verdict is no reason for holding that findings by a judge without a jury in a civil case are to be ignored because his decree is more elaborate.

We turn then for illumination to the elaborate findings of fact and opinion of Judge Wyzanski which accompanied the decree. A separate heading entitled "Effects of the Leasing System" in the findings of fact describes the effect of United's leasing system as it worked in practice from the viewpoint of United, of shoe manufacturers and of potential and actual competitors of United. In dealing with the effect of United's leasing system on shoe manufacturers, there is a full appraisal of the advantages to the shoe manufacturer and note is made of the virtual absence of dissatisfaction with the system. Judge Wyzanski then went on to say: "However, while United's system has made it easier to enter the shoe manufacturing industry than to enter many, perhaps most, other manufacturing industries, it has not necessarily promoted in the shoe manufacturing field the goals of a competitive economy and an open society. [22] Without attempting to make findings that are more precise than the evidence warrants, this much can be definitely stated." 110 F. Supp. at 323-24. There follow six consequences to shoe manufacturers if United's machinery were available for sale. Among these is the fact that shoe manufacturers who bought United's machines "would not be subject, as are those manufacturers who lease United machines, to the unilateral decision of United whether or not to continue or modify those informal policies which are not written in the leases and to which United is not expressly committed for any specific future period. . . . United's reserved power with respect to these matters gives it some greater degree of psychological, and some greater degree of economic control, than a seller of machinery would have." 110 F. Supp. at 324. In another category is this statement: "Some manufacturers who had bought machinery would find that financial and psychological considerations made them more willing than lessees would be, to dispose of already acquired United machines and to take on competitors' machines in their place." 110 F. Supp. at 324. These statements are [23] reiterated in a form which shows that this effect was [8] See, e.g., Bruce's Juices, Inc. v. American Can Co., 330 U.S. 743, 751-52, 91 L. Ed. 1219, 67 S. Ct. 1015 (1947); Emich Motors Corp. v. General Motors Corp., 340 U.S. 558, 567-68, 95 L. Ed. 534, 71 S. Ct. 408 (1951); Radovich v. National Football League, 352 U.S. 445, 453-54, 1 L. Ed. 2d 456, 77 S. Ct. 390 (1957); Minnesota Mining & Manufacturing Co. v. New Jersey Wood Finishing Co., 381 U.S. 311, 318-19, 14 L. Ed. 2d 405, 85 S. Ct. 1473 (1965).

---

[9] HN9[] Under Rule 52(a) findings of fact and conclusions of law need not be isolated under such specific designations if they appear generally in the opinion of the court.

inherent in the lease-only system itself, and did not arise solely from the four restrictive features: "Yet as already noted, a shoe manufacturer may psychologically or economically be more impeded by a leasing than by a selling system. And this general observation is buttressed by a study of features in the United leasing system which have a special deterrent effect." 110 F. Supp. at 324.

Throughout his opinion Judge Wyzanski repeatedly stressed this distinction between the special obstacles to competition established by the four restrictive provisions in the United leases, and the general anticompetitive effects which flowed from the mere existence of a lease-only system. On the latter issue, he recognized the "magnetic ties inherent in [United's] . . . system of leasing, and not selling, its more important machines," and stressed that these ties, especially in the context of United's market control, fostered a sense of "partnership" among United and its customers which made it more difficult for another manufacturer of shoe machinery to take [*786] away part of the United market. [10] [26] Moreover, he declared [24] that the end of the lease-only system would also increase competition by making available secondhand machines, which would promote a "substitute competition" and would make it possible for other manufacturers to study the United machines so as to [10] "However, United's leases, in the context of the present shoe machinery market, have created barriers to the entry by competitors into the shoe machinery field.

---

"First, the complex of obligations and rights accruing under United's leasing system in operation deter a shoe manufacturer from disposing of a United machine and acquiring a competitor's machine. He is deterred more than if he owned that same United machine, or if he held it on a short lease carrying simple rental provisions and a reasonable charge for cancellation before the end of the term. The lessee is now held closely to United by the combined effect of the 10-year term, the requirement that if he has work available he must use the machine to full capacity, and by the return charge which can in practice, through the right of deduction fund, be reduced to insignificance if he keeps this and other United machines to the end of the periods for which he leased them." 110 F. Supp. at 340.

"In estimating defendant's strength, this Court gives some weight to the 75 plus percentage of the shoe machinery market which United serves. But the Court considers other factors as well. In the relatively static shoe machinery market where there are no sudden changes in the style of machines or in the volume of demand, United has a network of long-term, complicated leases with over 90% of the shoe factories. These leases assure closer and more frequent contacts between United and its customers than would exist if United were a seller and its customers were buyers. Beyond this general quality, these leases are so drawn and so applied as to strengthen United's power to exclude competitors." Id. at 343.

"But United's control does not rest solely on its original constitution, its ability, its research, or its economies of scale. There are other barriers to competition, and these barriers were erected by United's own business policies. Much of United's market power is traceable to the magnetic ties inherent in its system of leasing, and not selling, its more important machines. The lease-only system of distributing complicated machines has many "partnership " aspects, and it has exclusionary features such as the 10-year term, the full capacity clause, the return charges, and the failure to segregate service charges from machine charges. Moreover, the leasing system has aided United in maintaining a pricing system which discriminates between machine types." Id. at 344.

"Furthermore, the creation of a sales market together with the purging of the restrictive features of the leases will, in combination, gradually diminish the magnetic hold now exercised by what United properly describes as the partnership features of the leasing system. As United's relationships with its customers grow feebler, competitors will have an enhanced opportunity to market their wares. . . .

"A further answer is that if the creation of a sales alternative to leasing is, as this Court believes, necessary to dissipate United's monopoly power, the Court should not withhold its decree because its effect is to allow competitors to copy United's designs." Id. at 350.

See Kaysen, United States v. United Shoe Machinery Corporation (1956), p. 275: "The most important single alteration in the operation of the shoe machinery market leading to an increase in the degree of competition therein is the end of the lease method of marketing, and the dissolution of the lease bundle which United provides under that method." See also pp. 193-94, 197-98, 276. Kaysen, an economist, acted as Judge Wyzanski's law clerk so that he could serve as an economic assistant on the United Shoe case. Kaysen's book is a reprint, with additional material, of the memorandum which he submitted to Judge Wyzanski after two years of research.

experiment with alterations in them and to copy their unpatented features. [11] Finally, although he ordered United's leases to be purged of their restrictive provisions in the future, he also ordered United in Section 5 of the decree to offer for [*787] sale in the future any machine which it held out for lease. Judge Wyzanski thus justified this provision: "[United] has used its leases to monopolize the shoe machinery market. And if leasing continues without an alternative sales system, United will still be able to monopolize that market. To root out monopolization and to bring United, in the future, in the same class as its competitors, it is necessary not merely to place limitations upon United's leases, but also to require United to offer for sale any machine type which it leases. While, on its face, the decree seems to discriminate against United, in the context of the market situation created by United itself, the effect of the [25] decree is to break down barriers erected by a monopolizer, so that, hereafter, there may be no wall between the class in which it is and the class in which its competitors are." [12] Rejecting the Government's suggestion that the decree require United to make its sales terms more attractive to customers than its lease terms, the opinion states: "It seems to the Court sufficient to direct defendant, if it offers any machine type for lease, to set such terms for leasing that machine as do not make it substantially more advantageous for a shoe factory to lease rather than to buy a machine." 110 F. Supp. at 351.

All this, we believe, demonstrates that the lease-only system itself was adjudicated in the Government case to be a means of monopolization. Read in the light of the policy of making the Government's decree fully available to the private antitrust plaintiff, Hanover is entitled to the benefit of the determination and United is estopped from questioning it. See Emich Motors Corp. v. General Motors Corp., supra, 340 U.S. at 568.

The Retrospective Effect of the Government Decree

The court below concluded that the adjudged violations were illegal from their initiation decades [27] earlier, but it limited damages to the period within the statute of limitations as suspended by various tolling provisions. See 245 F. Supp. at 294, n. 15.

The Government decree, entered in the District Court in Massachusetts on February 18, 1953 and affirmed by the Supreme Court on May 17, 1954, prohibited United after "A-Day," which turned out to be January 1, 1955, from offering machines for lease unless it also offered them for sale. United urges that the decree was meant to operate only prospectively. In support of this view it points to the absence of any specific declaration in the decree that the lease-only system violated the antitrust law and maintains that the exclusive purpose of the decree was to break up United's market power in the future.

What we have already said requires us to reject the contention that the Government decree has no retrospective effect. For HN10[] the remedial character of an equity decree does not necessarily imply that the conduct which it prohibits in the future was valid in the past. Decrees such as the Government decree are aimed at redressing the effects of antitrust violations in the future, and acceptance of United's contention [28] would subvert the purpose of § 5 (a), for it would put an end to treble damage recovery by private parties in reliance on Government decrees, since they are prima facie evidence only in cases where the damage period is within the period covered by the Government case. International Shoe Machinery Corp. v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 315 F.2d 449 (1 Cir. 1963), cert. denied, 375 U.S. 820, 11 L. Ed. 2d 54, 84 S. Ct. 56 (1963); Dart Drug Corp. v. Parke, Davis & Co., 120 U.S. App. D.C. 79, 344 F.2d 173, 184-86 (D.C. Cir. 1965). [13]

---

[11] 110 F. Supp. at 344, 349-50. See also Kaysen, supra, at p. 73: " . . . the absence of a secondhand machinery market, which is a consequence of the leasing system, is a substantial support to United's market dominance and is probably second in importance in its effect on United's market power only to the duration of the lease and the circumstances surrounding terminations of leases among all the aspects of the leasing system which affect that power."

[12] 110 F. Supp. at 350.

[13] There is no dispute that United machines leased by Hanover were unavailable for sale to Hanover before June 1, 1955, the date on which Judge Wyzanski approved United's plan for terminating the leases. Moreover, the court below made specific findings as to the unavailability and unsuitability of other manufacturers' machines which were offered for sale for any part of the [29] This leads us to the question of the extent of the retroactivity of the Government decree.

[*788] Judge Wyzanski made vividly clear the extraordinary position of United in regard to the antitrust laws. Three times, in 1913, in 1918 and in 1922, United had been under the scrutiny of the Supreme Court. United States v. Winslow, 227 U.S. 202, 57 L. Ed. 481, 33 S. Ct. 253 (1913); United States v. United Shoe Machinery Co. of N.J., 247 U.S. 32, 62 L. Ed. 968, 38 S. Ct. 473 (1918); United Shoe Machinery Corp. v. United States, 258 U.S. 451, 66 L. Ed. 708, 42 S. Ct. 363 (1922). In Judge Wyzanski's words: "What United is now doing is similar to what it was then doing, but the activities which were similar stood uncondemned, -- indeed, one ought to go further and say they were in part endorsed." 110 F. Supp. at 348. [14] He held that the last two cases still had enough vitality to prevent his holding, as he otherwise would, that United had violated § 1 of the Sherman Act by its lease-only practice. "This inferior court feels precluded," said Judge Wyzanski, "from so deciding because of the overhanging shadows of . . . the Sherman [30] and Clayton Act cases involving this company's predecessor and itself. Though these cases may ultimately be overruled by the Supreme Court, they have not yet lost all authority." 110 F. Supp. at 343. Judge Wyzanski was of the view, however, that the interpretation of § 2 of the Sherman Act was significantly changed in 1946 when the Supreme Court in American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 811-15, 90 L. Ed. 1575, 66 S. Ct. 1125 (1946) expressly approved Judge Learned Hand's analysis in 1945 in the Alcoa case, United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F.2d 416 (2 Cir. 1945). Judge Wyzanski stressed the absence in United's conduct of predatory practices, which the decisions prior to Alcoa had emphasized as an element in monopolization. [15] He held that United's conduct now ran afoul, however, of § 2 under the Alcoa doctrine, which brought within its prohibition monopolization attained by conduct which although "honestly industrial" cannot be said to render market control, which is inherently evil, an economically inevitable result, for in such a case it cannot be said of a defendant that greatness was thrust upon [31] him. 110 F. Supp. at 341-42. In so finding, however, Judge Wyzanski said: "It is only fair to add that the more than 14,000 page record, and the more than 5,000 exhibits, representing the diligent seven year search made by Government counsel aided by this Court's orders giving them full access to United's files during the last 40 years, show that United's power does not rest on predatory practices. Probably few monopolies could produce a record so free from any taint of that kind of wrongdoing." 110 F. Supp. at 345.

In these circumstances, we believe it was error to hold that United was liable in damages [32] to Hanover for the period stretching back to the beginning of its conduct, despite the approval of its leasing policy in various forms by three successive decisions of the Supreme Court. The court below cut off damages prior to July 1, 1939 only because the statute of limitations barred such recovery. On the contrary, we think it erroneous to award damages for conduct manifestly pursued in the shelter of Supreme Court approval, at least until such time as subsequent decisions have clearly announced a change in the applicable law. [*789] This conclusion follows from Judge Wyzanski's opinion and the modern view of the rights of parties who have relied upon authoritative statements of the law which are later changed.

Recent decisions of the Supreme Court in criminal cases have made it clear that the unrealistic theory that the law has always been what the latest case for the first time declares it to be, the so-called Blackstonian view, must yield to the practical realization that conduct had occurred in reliance on the earlier rules of law to the contrary. [16] [34]

1939-1955 period. In these circumstances, Hanover is not barred from damages occurring before June of 1951, the date of the close of evidence in the Government case (Compare International Shoe Machinery Corp. v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., supra), nor does United so argue.

[14] This was so even though certain provisions of its leases, since terminated, had been held violative of § 3 of the Clayton Act in the third case, for United was specifically found free of the taint of predatory practices. 258 U.S. at 455.

[15] See, e.g., United States v. United States Steel Corp., 251 U.S. 417, 64 L. Ed. 343, 40 S. Ct. 293 (1920).

[16] Thus, e.g., retroactivity was refused to be accorded in Linkletter v. Walker, 381 U.S. 618, 14 L. Ed. 2d 601, 85 S. Ct. 1731 (1965), to Mapp v. Ohio, 367 U.S. 643, 6 L. Ed. 2d 1081, 81 S. Ct. 1684 (1961), dealing with exclusion of illegally seized evidence; in Tehan v. United States ex rel. Shott, 382 U.S. 406, 86 S. Ct. 459, 15 L. Ed. 2d 453 (1966), to Griffin v. California, 380 U.S. 609, 14 L. Ed. 2d 106, 85 S. Ct. 1229 (1965), dealing with comment on the failure of a defendant in a state criminal trial

In antitrust cases the question of retroactivity is still open. [17] We believe that retroactivity should be determined [33] from the circumstances of the particular case, having in mind the purpose which the new rule of law seeks to accomplish and the practical weighing of the comparative benefits and evils of retroactivity. In civil cases, unlike criminal cases, it is appropriate to recognize that businessmen must rely upon counsel, who in turn are guided by the existing precedents in making difficult decisions on the effect of the antitrust laws on specific business conduct. In suits for damages in such cases it is particularly appropriate to be mindful of the injustice of retroactive imposition of the penalty of treble damages. In the present case the penalty of treble damages is enough, in conjunction with the absence of predatory practices and the survival of United's leasing policy under the Sherman Act after three passages through the Supreme Court, to require that United should not be held to have violated the antitrust laws before the change occurred in the law which for the first time made its conduct unlawful.

The remnant of the problem which remains is whether the appropriate date which marks the commencement of liability should be the date of the American Tobacco decision of June 10, 1946 or the Alcoa decision of March 12, 1945. The high authority of Judge Hand's opinions and the unusual circumstances in which Alcoa came to be decided give the case a place of preeminence in the history of antitrust law. We do not believe, however, that another business which had three times in various forms been adjudged free from violation of the Sherman Act was required to abandon its well known form of operation before Judge Hand's view in Alcoa received the imprimatur of the Supreme Court, however inevitable it may now seem in retrospect. At the time it was well known that Alcoa could not be passed on by the Supreme Court, [18] and whether it would agree with Judge Hand's opinion could only [35] be made known in another case, as [*790] it was a year later in American Tobacco on June 10, 1946.

[36] We conclude, therefore, that United's conduct cannot be held to have violated § 2 of the Sherman Act at any time prior to June 10, 1946. We believe this is the effect to be given to the Government decree. The damages recoverable by Hanover therefore may not reach any earlier period.

Certification

United urges that the court below should have certified to the District Court in Massachusetts the questions dealing with the interpretation and effect of that court's decree. The obvious economy in judicial effort which would follow from such a practice, especially in a case as protracted as the Government suit against United, speaks strongly in its favor. On the other hand, there is much to be said for a litigant's right to the judgment of the court which he invokes and for the view that the scope of the conclusions and decrees of sister federal courts, however complicated may be the litigation out of which they arose, may well be determined by an objective evaluation of

---

to take the stand; in Johnson v. New Jersey, 384 U.S. 719, 16 L. Ed. 2d 882, 86 S. Ct. 1772 (1966), to Escobedo v. Illinois, 378 U.S. 478, 12 L. Ed. 2d 977, 84 S. Ct. 1758 (1964) and Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 16 L. Ed. 2d 694, 86 S. Ct. 1602 (1966), dealing with custodial police questioning of criminal suspects. See also Butcher v. Philadelphia, 380 Pa. 290, 110 A.2d 349 (1955).

[17] Simpson v. Union Oil Co., 377 U.S. 13, 24-25, 12 L. Ed. 2d 98, 84 S. Ct. 1051 (1964); see also Lyons v. Westinghouse Electric Corp., 235 F. Supp. 526, 536-37 (S.D.N.Y. 1964).

[18] The decision in Alcoa by the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit was final because of the unique circumstances which surrounded the case. The district court had dismissed the complaint, United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 44 F. Supp. 97 (S.D.N.Y. 1941), and on a direct appeal the Supreme Court was without a quorum due to the disqualification of four Justices. The Court therefore transferred the case to a special docket and postponed further proceedings in the appeal until such time as there was a quorum of Justices qualified to sit in the case. 320 U.S. 708 (1943). Congress thereafter amended 15 U.S.C. § 29 by the Act of June 9, 1944, ch. 239, 58 Stat. 272, which provided that in such circumstances the Court should certify the case to the appropriate circuit court of appeals, in lieu of a decision by the Supreme Court, and the decision of the circuit court of appeals should be final and unreviewable. Acting under the statute the Supreme Court certified the case to the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit and it was in what Mr. Justice Frankfurter concurring in United States v. United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, 334 U.S. 258, 265, 92 L. Ed. 1351, 68 S. Ct. 1035 (1948) called "an extraordinarily rare, if not unique, situation in the history of the Court," that Judge Learned Hand's decision came to be written in Alcoa. See also American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 811-12, 90 L. Ed. 1575, 66 S. Ct. 1125 (1946).

what has been recorded in opinion and decree rather than by a subjective interpretation which may include in retrospect what was locked in the breast of the original judge.

In the circumstances which prevail in [37] this case, however, we need not determine this interesting question. [19] United did not apply for certification of the questions relating to the meaning and effect of the Government decree during the lengthy trial in the court below. It did not even do so immediately after the opinion was filed in the district court on April 28, 1965. Instead, on May 21, 1965, United applied to Judge Wyzanski in the District Court in Massachusetts on notice to Hanover and the Government for construction or amendment of the Government decree. At a hearing on May 28, 1965 Judge Wyzanski declined to act on the ground of comity in view of the late stage of the case in the Middle District of Pennsylvania.

United contends with much force that Judge Wyzanski [38] plainly indicated at the hearing his informal interpretation of the decree contrary to that of the court below. But whatever the parties may make of Judge Wyzanski's comments from the bench at that time, it was not until after the application was denied on May 28, 1965 that United, on June 9, 1965 in connection with its motion for a partial new trial applied for a certification by the court below to the District Court in Massachusetts of the questions relating to the effect of the Government decree.

We hold that in view of the untimeliness of the request for certification, its denial by the court below was not an abuse of discretion.

Statute of Limitations

The suit was filed before the effective date of the amendment HN11[] of July 7, 1955 creating a federal four year statute of limitations in antitrust actions (15 U.S.C. § 15b). The parties are agreed that by virtue of the applicable Pennsylvania statute and various tolling provisions [*791] [20] the six-year period under the statute was extended backward so as to bar claims for conduct prior to July 1, 1939.

[39] The contention now made, however, is that if there was a refusal by United to sell shoe machinery to Hanover, the injury occurred many years prior to 1939, in fact perhaps even before the present century, and hence all recovery is barred by the statute of limitations. This contention falls in view of our holding that the duty to sell established by the Government decree did not come into existence until 1946. Since the injury could not have occurred prior to 1946, Hanover's claim is well within the period of the statute of limitations.

Damages

1. The Damages Within the Allowable Period.

The court below held that as a result of United's unlawful monopolization Hanover was required to pay more on the leases for the use of its shoe machinery than it would have been required to pay if the machinery had been available for sale in a free and competitive market. It held that as a result Hanover was damaged in the period from July 1, 1939 through September 21, 1955 in the amount of $1,413,203, which when trebled amounted to $4,239,609.

The damage period, as we have already seen, must be limited to commence on June 10, 1946. In the present state of the record it is not [40] clear that the court below was justified in fixing the end of the damage period at the date of the institution of the action. Section 9 of the Government decree required United to present to the court before "B Day" a detailed plan for terminating all outstanding leases and for converting the lessees' rights to ownership of the machines they then held. The plan was approved by Judge Wyzanski on June 1, 1955. The record shows that Hanover actually converted to ownership its previously leased machines sometime in October, 1955.

---

[19] See United States Gypsum Co. v. National Gypsum Co., 352 U.S. 457, 1 L. Ed. 2d 465, 77 S. Ct. 490 (1957); see also Levin, InterJurisdictional Certification: Beyond Abstention Toward Cooperative Judicial Federalism, 111 U. Pa. L. Rev. 344 (1963).

[20] See 245 F. Supp. at 294, n. 15.

In these circumstances, the damage period ended on June 1, 1955 for on that date the conversion from leasehold to ownership was available to Hanover and the unlawful lease only policy had ended.

Accordingly, no damages may be allowed for the period between June 1, and September 21, 1955, [21] or, as we have already determined, for the period prior to June 10, 1946. Since there is no division in the record of the damages for either of these two periods, it will be necessary to award a new trial on the issue of damages so that the proof may be broken down to show what damages, if any, were sustained during the allowable period.

[41] A number of problems in the proof of damages which have been presented to us will recur on retrial. To the extent that it is possible to adjudicate them on the present record, it is desirable that we do so as a guide to the court below on the retrial.

2. Cost of Capital.

United contends that Hanover's so-called cost of capital should have been treated as an element of the cost of acquiring the machinery. The court below disallowed this item, which was defined as "the rate of return expected by investors on capital funds they place at . . . a concern's disposal," after hearing the conflicting testimony of expert economists called by each party. It found that "cost of capital" is an economic concept which allows a company to decide if a certain investment is sound by computing the rate of return which will be required on that investment to justify expending funds on it rather than in an alternative investment, and that it is measured in terms of percentage of earnings per share of common stock to price per share, and of percentage of net profits after taxes to stockholders' equity. It also found that the measurement of cost of capital was vague and not susceptible of [42] general agreement in its application and that in [*792] any event it was not a proper element in the calculation of damages but was only a guide to investment.

The novel concept which United sought to have approved has not yet reached the point of general acceptance even among economists. We agree with the court below that cost of capital is not sufficiently related to actual costs to be included in an antitrust damage calculation.

3. Tax Benefits.

The court below held that whatever tax advantages Hanover obtained by the leasing system could not be considered in reduction of the amount of Hanover's recovery. It did so on the grounds that generally in tort and breach of contract actions taxes are not considered in assessing damages [22] and that any recovery by Hanover would be subject to taxation. It relied upon Judge Goodrich's statement in the passing-on trial that whatever happens after the injury which permits an injured plaintiff to escape some of the consequences of the wrong done him does not inure to the benefit of the defendant. [23] It therefore held that tax consequences to Hanover such as deductions for rents and royalties of leased machines and capital [43] gains treatment for machines if owned and later sold were extraneous and were not to be considered.

In this we think the court below erred. What is involved here is not the tax on Hanover's recovery but rather the tax elements which would bear on Hanover's choice of purchasing rather than leasing the machinery it required. In making such a determination a business of any size necessarily must give consideration to the tax elements inherent in the two alternatives from which the choice must be made. It therefore was significant in determining whether Hanover, if it had been able to do so, would have purchased the machinery which it leased from United, to evaluate the respective tax consequences of purchase and of lease and their financial impact. Since these tax consequences are so inherently a part of the choice which would be made and since the court below has found that Hanover would have chosen [44] to buy rather than lease the machinery, the award of damages should not exceed the difference between the two alternatives as Hanover itself would have computed it. The excess of one

---

[21] Of course, the credit for salvage value should be computed as of that date.

[22] Citing annotations in 63 A.L.R.2d 1393 and 1433.

[23] 185 F. Supp. at 829.

over the other of the two alternatives of purchase or lease should not be artificially inflated by ignoring the impact of taxation. We deal here not with subsequent tax effect on damages inflicted, but rather with damages resulting from the choice of one over another course of action in both of which the tax impact necessarily was a matter of contemporaneous consideration and significance. This is as realistic an element as the deduction which the court below required in order to reflect the fact that United serviced its machines as lessor, a duty which Hanover itself would have had to assume and pay for if it had been the owner of the machines. [24] In the same way, if Hanover had owned rather than leased the machines it would not have had the benefit of tax deductions for the rental and royalty payments to United and would have been subject to capital gains tax on the sale of any machines it sold at more than depreciated book value. It would be a distortion of reality to permit Hanover to recover damages [45] on the ground that it would have bought machinery if it had been allowed to do so, without requiring it to give credit in its calculation of its damages for the savings which accrued to it from the tax advantages it received under the leasing system it now disowns and without also requiring it to reflect in its costs of ownership the taxes which such dominion would have imposed.

Hanover's damages therefore must be diminished by permitting United to show the favorable tax consequences which [*793] Hanover obtained from leasing and the unfavorable consequences which would have flowed from ownership of the machinery. We do no more than require accuracy in the calculation of the relative financial cost of leasing compared to buying the machinery, which must include those elements which a business corporation would necessarily consider in choosing between the two alternatives.

Hanover's Cross-Appeal

Hanover in its cross-appeal attacks the district court's exclusion [46] from its recoverable damages of those damages attributable to the unavailability of the United Goodyear Outsole Rapid Lockstitch Machine ("ORL") for the period 1939-1955, which it claimed amounted to $324,356. [25]

The court below excluded the item on the ground that another manufacturer's equipment, known as the Landis Stitcher, was available to Hanover and would have been satisfactory for its operations. [26] Hanover maintains that there is no evidence to support the conclusion that the Landis Stitcher was a satisfactory substitute for the ORL. It therefore seeks to have its damage judgment increased by threefold the amount of $324,356.

Even if Hanover's contention is correct, the present record does not permit an award of damages for this item. For [47] the amount of $324,356 stretches over the period from 1939 to 1955 and we cannot allocate it within the allowable period beginning June 10, 1946 and ending June 1 1955 reconsideration as part of the retrial on damages. When evidence haent from what is now before us. In these circumstances, therefore, whe conclusion that the Landis Stitcher could be used satisfactorily in Hanover's welt shoe manufacturing as a substitute for the ORL machine.

Counsel Fees

The court below allowed to Hanover an attorneys' fee of $600,000 for the services of New York counsel and $50,000 for the services of Pennsylvania counsel. United objects that the allowances are excessive.

The district court tested the reasonableness of the fees, especially to New York counsel, not only by the hours devoted to the case, but also by the percentage of the recovery in its original and trebled amounts. See 245 F. Supp. at 303-4. Since the period for which damages may be awarded is now being reduced and a retrial will be held on damages, it will be for the court below to determine the reasonable fees which should be made to counsel in the light of whatever new award it may make on damages.

---

[24] See 245 F. Supp. at 287.

[25] See 245 F. Supp. at 299, 302.

[26] 245 F. Supp. at 283.

[48] We will therefore vacate the award of counsel fees and order counsel fees to be redetermined in the light of whatever damages the court may find on the rehearing.

Conclusion

In United's appeal (Appeal No. 15626) the judgment of the court below will be vacated as to damages and a new trial will be awarded limited to damages, in accordance with this opinion; and the award of counsel fees in the amount of $600,000 for the services of Donovan, Leisure, Newton & Irvine and $50,000 for the services of Nogi, O'Malley & Harris will be vacated for further proceedings in accordance with this opinion.

In Hanover's appeal (Appeal No. 15627) the judgment will be vacated so that the issue therein raised may be reconsidered as part of the retrial of damages.

Royal Crown Cola Co. v. Coca-Cola Co.

United States District Court for the Northern District of Georgia, Atlanta Division.

May 16, 1967.

Civil Action No. 10,129.

Reporter

1967 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11191 *; 1967 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,176

Royal Crown Cola Co. v. Coca-Cola Co., Coca-Cola Bottling Co., Atlanta Coca-Cola Bottling Co., Arthur Montgomery, Atlanta Braves, Inc., Automatic Retailers of America, and The City of Atlanta and Fulton County Recreation Authority.

Core Terms

Interrogatory, documents, discovery, objected, products, requests, inducement, antitrust, business record, good cause, questions, drink, confidential, suppliers, Cola

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > General Overview

HN1[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

Under 15 U.S.C.S. § 14 of the Clayton Act, a plaintiff must establish that a defendant is involved in interstate commerce, that sales or contracts for the sale of goods are made on the condition or agreement that goods of competitors will not be carried, and that the effect of such condition or agreement is to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly.

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > Inspection & Production Requests

Civil Procedure > Discovery & Disclosure > Discovery > Relevance of Discoverable Information

HN2[] Methods of Discovery, Inspection & Production Requests

The basic purpose of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, and in particular the intent of the discovery rules, is to lay open all relevant facts in an effort to reach the truth. Thus, relevancy is the key. Of course, in the instance of documents, mere relevancy does not suffice, as a party seeking production must show good cause.

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Privileged Communications > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > Inspection & Production Requests

HN3[] Discovery, Privileged Communications

No protective cloak shrouds so called "confidential" business information when it is relevant and necessary to the litigation at hand.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > Inspection & Production Requests

HN4[] Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

In an action under the antitrust laws, based upon an alleged abuse of competition, a competitor's business records, where good cause is shown, are not only not immune from inquiry, but the records are precisely the source of the most relevant evidence.

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > Inspection & Production Requests

HN5[] Methods of Discovery, Inspection & Production Requests

Because a plaintiff's right to recover must be determined as of the time of institution of a suit, discovery is necessarily so limited to the time prior to the institution of such suit. However, the above-enumerated principle is not a rule which must be strictly followed even in instances where such adherence would be contrary to simple reason.

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > Inspection & Production Requests

HN6[] Methods of Discovery, Inspection & Production Requests

Absent a proper motion for production, the court may not issue an order to that effect.

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > Inspection & Production Requests

Civil Procedure > Discovery & Disclosure > Discovery > Relevance of Discoverable Information

HN7[] Methods of Discovery, Inspection & Production Requests

Though good cause cannot be equated with relevancy in the general case, in instances where documents sought are business records, the applicable test often becomes one of relevancy. While there may be wide variation in the appraisal of practical considerations in particular cases, these considerations are resolved into a judgment as to the extent to which a moving party's not having documents will embarrass it in its preparation for trial. Inevitably this judgment must turn upon a party's ability to explore fully the facts of a case through other sources or by other means. In the case of business records, this two-factor test, relevancy plus need, often resolves itself into a question of simple relevancy, for the exclusive possession of information through which a claim or defense must be established is so plain as to make the requirement of a showing little more than a requirement of a recitation.

Opinion by: [*1] MORGAN

Opinion

MORGAN, District Judge: The above-styled action is presently before the Court on numerous motions concerning discovery pursuant to Rules 33 and 34 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. The essence of the problem is that the plaintiff seeks to obtain information and documents which the various defendants seek to withhold.

The volume and breadth of the objections necessitates that each objection of the individual defendants be dealt with separately; however, the Court is of the opinion that certain general principles and observations are relevant to the objections as a whole and that thus a general discussion would be of value before proceeding to an examination of each specific objection.

First, the instant action involves an alleged antitrust violation and, as such, there are numerous critical elements which the plaintiff must establish in order to establish its case. HN1[] Under Title 15, U.S.C., § 14 of the Clayton Act, the plaintiff must establish that the defendants are involved in interstate commerce, that sales or contracts for the sale of goods were made on the condition or agreement that goods of competitors would not be carried, and that the effect of such [*2] condition or agreement is to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly. The plaintiff further contends that the defendants violated Title 15, U.S.C., § 1 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act by entering into a conspiracy to restrain trade and competition.

It is obvious that a wide gamut of information is both material and necessary to establish the above-enumerated elements of an antitrust action.

Second, HN2[] the basic purpose of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, and in particular the intent of the discovery rules, is to lay open all relevant facts in an effort to reach the truth.Thus, relevancy is the key and, as noted previously, there is a wide realm of relevant information in antitrust actions.Of course, in the instance of documents, mere relevancy does not suffice, as the party seeking production must show good cause.

In sum, HN3[] no protective cloak shrouds socalled "confidential" business information when it is relevant and necessary to the litigation at hand. This Court concurs with the statement of the Court in Service Liquor Distributors v. Calvert Distillers Corp. , 16 F.R.D. 507 (1954), which took the position that HN4[] ". . . in an action under the antitrust [*3] laws, based upon an alleged abuse of competition, a competitor's business records, where good cause has been shown, are not only not immune from inquiry, but they are precisely the source of the most relevant evidence."

At this point the Court will proceed to examine the individual objections of the separate defendants.

Royal Crown Cola v. Atlanta Coca-Cola Bottling Company

The defendant Atlanta Coca-Cola Bottling Company has filed objections to plaintiff's Interrogatories Nos. 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22 and 23. The plaintiff has conceded that Interrogatories Nos. 20 and 23 are improper in that both seek to obtain documents which must properly be sought under Rule 34.

Interrogatories Nos. 18, 19 and 22 request the names and job titles of individuals having custody or control over certain business records and identification of the specific records over which each particular individual has control. The defendant's objections to these interrogatories are without merit and, hence, the defendant Atlanta Coca-Cola is ordered to answer Interrogatories Nos. 18, 19 and 22.

Interrogatories Nos. 17 and 21 request information regarding the cost of production and sales, along with the [*4] net profit derived, of the goods sold to defendant Automatic Retailers of America. This information is relevant for two purposes: (1) the information regarding net profits is relevant to the question of damages, and (2) the information regarding cost and profit may lead to evidence of price concessions made in return for exclusivity. Thus, Interrogatories Nos. 17 and 21 must be answered by defendant Atlanta Coca-cola Bottling Company.

With regard to depositions, Mr. Richard Horsey was instructed not to answer numerous questions propounded by plaintiff's attorneys. After a careful examination of all the questions which were asked of Mr. Horsey, the Court has concluded that all of the questions are relevant and must be answered.

Though it should be unnecessary for the Court to pinpoint obvious relevancy, the attorneys for the defendant Atlanta Coca-Cola Bottling Company apparently desire such an exercise. Thus, the Court will briefly and summarily point out the relevancy. Question (1) (designations are percounsel for plaintiff) requests information regarding the competitive standing of Coca-Cola's lemon-lime drink and of its orange drink. Coca-Cola has asserted as one of [*5] its defenses that Coca-Cola products, and Coca-Cola products alone, are sold at the stadium because they are the most popular in the Atlanta area. The plaintiff merely seeks information regarding this claim. Question (2) requests information regarding a conversation Mr. Horsey had with one of the defendants regarding Coca-Cola's TV/radio sponsorship of the Braves' games. Even though such conversation was held after the date that the instant case was filed, the subject discussed pertained to a matter material to the instant litigation.

Questions (3) and (6) are relevant in that they request information regarding the impact on interstate commerce.Questions (4) and (5) request information regarding general practices of exclusive contracts and of excluding competitors' products where defendant's products are sold.

Thus, all questions asked Mr. Richard Horsey are relevant and reasonable, and he is ordered to respond.

Royal Crown Cola v. Automatic Retailers of America

Defendant Automatic Retailers of America, hereafter referred to as ARA, has objected to plaintiff's Interrogatories Nos. 3(f), 19, 20, 23 and 24.

Interrogatory No. 3(f) requests information regarding any inducement [*6] given by defendant ARA to the defendant Atlanta Braves in order to obtain the right to act as concessionaire. Defendant ARA objects to this question on the ground that the information sought is clearly irrelevant.The alleged irrelevancy is not so clear to the court. The inducement could well have been in the nature of an agreement that the Braves could dictate the products to be sold without regard to competitiveness, and, as such, could represent a tying agreement in violation of the antitrust statutes. The plaintiff has alleged a conspiracy among the defendants; the Court is of the opinion that the inducement could have entered into the promulgation of such conspiracy. Thus, Interrogatory No. 3(f) seeks relevant information which could lead to the discovery of admissible evidence and, as such, must be answered.

Before proceeding to a specific examination of the remaining objections, there is one point which is of a recurring nature and which should be disposed of at this time. The defendants have objected to numerous attempts at discovery by the plaintiff on the basis that the information sought relates to a time subsequent to the time the instant action was filed.

The [*7] Court is aware of the line of decisions which state the general principle that HN5[] because a plaintiff's right to recover must be determined as of the time of institution of the suit, discovery is necessarily so limited to the time prior to the institution of such suit. However, the Court is also aware that the above-enumerated principle is not a rule which must be strictly followed even in instances where such adherence would be contrary to simple reason.

In the instant case, the plaintiff has alleged a continuing conspiracy and has requested injunctive relief. Further, it has made clear to the Court its intention of requesting leave to amend prior to trial in order to allege accrued damages. Under these circumstances, the Court is of the opinion that the objections of the defendants regarding the time period subsequent to the filing of the instant action are without merit.See Conmar Products Corp. v. Lamar Slide Fastener Corp. , 2 F.R.D. 154 (1941); Radio Corporation of America v. Rauland Corp. , 18 F.R.D. 440 (1955).

Interrogatories Nos. 19 and 20 request the names and addresses of all suppliers to ARA and of all products supplied. Such information is relevant in that it may [*8] lead to the discovery that producers and suppliers of other goods have been excluded because of their failure to contract for advertising time or for some other reason which could constitute a violation of antitrust law. In essence, how the defendants dealt with other prospective suppliers may be indicative of the course of dealing with the plaintiff. The defendant ARA is ordered to respond to Interrogatories Nos. 19 and 20.

Interrogatory No. 23 requests information regarding inducements given ARA by suppliers whose goods are handled at the stadium, and for the reasons stated above such information may lead to admissible evidence.

The Court is aware that at an oral hearing it concluded that the scope of discovery should exclude information regarding inducements received from suppliers other than soft drink manufacturers; however, after careful reconsideration, the Court has concluded that information concerning such inducements may well lead to admissible evidence concerning a course of business or method of dealing utilized by the defendant. Thus, the Court overrules its order made at the oral hearing, and the defendant is ordered to respond to Interrogatory No. 23.

Interrogatory [*9] No. 24 requests the name, address and job title of the individuals who have custody or control over certain business records, and, as such, the defendant's objection that the information sought is confidential is without merit. Defendant ARA is ordered to respond to Interrogatory No. 24.

With regard to the contract between the Braves and ARA which has been given to the plaintiff with certain deletions, the defendant is ordered to produce the deleted material regarding the loan arrangement, as such agreement is relevant in that it shows the relationship between ARA and the Braves, the degree of influence or control the Braves have over ARA, and is relevant with regard to the inducement given. The remaining deleted portions need not be provided.

Royal Crown Cola v. Coca-Cola Company

Defendant Coca-Cola Company has objected to two interrogatories and has objected to several other lines of discovery. Interrogatory No. 27 asks for information regarding the gross sales of each of the products sold by the Coca-Cola Company. This interrogatory has been objected to on the ground that the information sought is irrelevant and confidential.

As the Court noted previously, there is [*10] no absolute privilege which protects trade secrets or business information labeled confidential from discovery. With regard to relevance, it has been alleged that Coca-Cola products are sold in the Atlanta Stadium because of their local and national popularity. The plaintiff has a right to challenge the validity of such a defense. Naturally, the Coca-Cola Company is in a position to know whether or not it is the dominant factor in all lines of soft drinks, but neither the plaintiff nor the Court is in a position to know if the defendant's diet cola, lemon-lime drink, etc., are truly the most popular.

Thus, the figures sought by Interrogatory No. 27 are relevant and the defendant is ordered to answer Interrogatory No. 27. In view of the confidential nature of the information sought, the Court will entertain a motion for an appropriate protective order if filed by the defendant. See United States v. National Steel Corp. , 26, F.R.D. 599 (1960).

Interrogatory No. 29 requests information regarding the advertising expenditures of the defendant. One of the basic thrusts of the plaintiff's complaint is that the defendant utilized its vast resources to exclude competition in the [*11] Atlanta Stadium, and these resources include advertising expenditures. As the information sought is relevant to the instant case, the defendant is ordered to respond to Interrogatory No. 29. Here, again, the Court will consider an appropriate protective order.

The plaintiff seeks to obtain a copy of the contract the defendant has with the Schlitz Brewing Company regarding sponsorship of the Houston baseball club. The plaintiff has made no motion for production pursuant to Rule 34, and, thus, the matter is not formally before the Court. The Court is of the opinion that, assuming the proper motion under Rule 34 is made along with a showing of good cause, the contract is discoverable. However, HN6[] absent the proper motion, the Court may not issue an order to that effect at this time.

The final point of contention between the plaintiff and the defendant Coca-Cola Company is the refusal of the defendant's employees to state what portion of the national soft drink market they believe the defendant has. The same reasoning applicable in the Court's order to respond to Interrogatory No. 29 is applicable here. Thus, the employees in question have been erroneously instructed to refuse [*12] to respond.

Royal Crown Cola v. Atlanta Braves, Inc.

The defendant Atlanta Braves, Inc., has objected to numerous interrogatories and a large portion of the plaintiff's motion to produce. May of the objections, particularly those to certain interrogatories, are at best frivolous and, as such, represent an unwarranted and unnecessary drain on the Court's time and patience. For example, plaintiff's Interrogatory No. 3 requests information concerning the existence and nature of certain documents. The defendant has objected to this interrogatory on the basis that it seeks production of documents absent a showing of good cause pursuant to Rule 34.

Clearly, the interrogatory in question seeks information regarding the existence and nature of certain documents; it does not seek their production.

The Court feels that the objection used as an example above is illustrative of many of the Braves' objections, and for that reason will not deal at length nor explore the specific rationale behind its decision to uphold or overrule each specific objection.

The Braves are ordered to respond to Interrogatories Nos. 3, 4, 6, 7, 12, 13, 15, 16, 17, 20 and 21. Interrogatory No. 9 asks [*13] whether the Braves will produce certain documents without a Rule 34 motion, and, as the answer is obvious, the Braves need not respond. The foregoing is true with respect to the portion of Interrogatory No. 14 which asks the same question; however, the Braves are ordered to answer the remaining portion of Interrogatory No. 14.

One of the defendant's most adamant objections to the plaintiff's motion to produce is that the documents sought are not described with sufficient particularity, yet the defendant objected to the interrogatories which sought information regarding the nature and description of particular documents.Thus, the Court is reluctant to concur with the rationale of the defendant's objections.

A large majority of the documents sought by the plaintiff in its motion for production are business records and materials. HN7[] Though good cause cannot be equated with relevancy in the general case, in instances where the documents sought are business records, the applicable test often becomes one of relevancy. According to Moore,

". . . while there may be wide variation in the appraisal of practical considerations in particular cases, these considerations resolve themselves [*14] into a judgment as to the extent to which the moving party's not having the documents will embarrass it in its preparation for trial. Inevitably this judgment must turn upon the party's ability to explore fully the facts of the case through other sources or by other means. In the case of business records, this two-factor test, relevancy plus need, often resolves itself into a question of simple relevancy, for the exclusive possession of the information through which the claim or defense must be established is so plain as to make the requirement of a showing little more than a requirement of a recitation." Moore's Federal Practice , Vol. 4, P34.08, pp. 2479-2482. This position has been adopted and recognized as proper even by the Courts which have insisted on a strong showing of good cause. E.g. Guilford National Bank v. Southern Rwy. , 297 F.2d 921 (1962).

Accordingly, the following objections are overruled and the defendant is ordered to produce the documents called for in the following paragraphs of the plaintiff's motion for production: all documents requested in Paragraphs 5, 6, 7, 10, 11, 12, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 37, 39 and 40. The defendant [*15] is also ordered to produce the documents requested in Paragraph 36 with the exception of the information requested for the years 1957 and 1958.

The objection to the material sought in Paragraph 38 is upheld, as the plaintiff may readily obtain such material from other sources.

The final question concerns a letter which the plaintiff contends is privileged and which is in the hands of the defendant. Inasmuch as the letter obviously has been read by the defendants, the matter would appear to be moot with regard to discovery. The question of privilege would properly arise at a later date in regard to admissibility as evidence.

In conclusion, all parties are directed to act in accordance with the orders contained in this opinion.

It is So Ordered.

Holmes v. Struthers Scientific & International Corp.

United States District Court for the Western District of Pennsylvania

May 25, 1967

No. 16-67 Erie

Reporter

268 F. Supp. 122 *; 1967 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11274 ; 155 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) 167 ***

Alton B. HOLMES doing business as Alton B. Holmes & Co., Plaintiff, v. STRUTHERS SCIENTIFIC AND INTERNATIONAL CORPORATION, a Delaware corporation, Defendant

Core Terms

patent, infringement, machines, anti-trust, autoclaving, declaratory judgment action, cause of action, purchasers, standing to bring, concrete block, manufacturing, litigating, customers

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Declaratory Judgments > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Standing > General Overview

Patent Law > Remedies > Declaratory Judgments

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Patent Law > Originality > Joint & Sole Inventorship

HN1[] Judgments, Declaratory Judgments

The requisite standing to bring a declaratory judgment action challenging the validity of a patent is determined by traditional notions of cases and controversies.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Declaratory Judgments > General Overview

Patent Law > Remedies > Declaratory Judgments

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Infringing Acts > General Overview

HN2[] Judgments, Declaratory Judgments

Allegation and proof by a vendor that it is engaged in a course of conduct, the sale of machinery, which has brought and must bring purchasers from it into conflict with the owner of the patent is sufficient to support a suit for declaratory judgment by the vendor.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Case & Controversy Requirements > Actual Controversy

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Declaratory Judgments > General Overview

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Infringing Acts > General Overview

HN3[] Case & Controversy Requirements, Actual Controversy

An actual controversy exists although the patentee exerts every effort to avoid entanglement in litigation with a particular alleged infringer seeking the declaration.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Intellectual Property > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Patent Law > Remedies > Declaratory Judgments

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse > Fraud

Patent Law > ... > Specifications > Definiteness > Precision Standards

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Infringing Acts > General Overview

HN4[] Regulated Practices, Intellectual Property

A cause of action based on fraudulent procurement of a patent may be pleaded if other elements of an anti-trust cause are also pleaded.

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Preliminary Proceedings > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Defects of Form

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pretrial Matters > Conferences > General Overview

HN5[] Discovery, Methods of Discovery

For further information necessary to form an answer or reply, the opposing party may look to the procedures provided for motions for more definite statement under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(e); discovery under Fed. R. Civ. P. 26-35; summary judgment under Fed. R. Civ. P. 56; and the pretrial conference procedure of Fed. R. Civ. P. 16.

Counsel: [1] Blenko, Leonard & Buell, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, for plaintiff.

Webb, Burden, Robinson & Webb, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, for defendant.

Judges: Weber, District Judge.

Opinion by: WEBER

Opinion

[*167] [*122] WEBER, District Judge.

The plaintiff has brought a declaratory judgment action requesting, among other things, that certain United States letters of patents Nos. 3,275,724 [known as '724], and 3,171,507 [known as '507] which are owned by the defendant be declared invalid. The plaintiff asks that it be declared that the use of the machines which it sells do not infringe upon defendant's above-named patents. In separate paragraphs, but under the same count, the plaintiff seeks a remedy based on the anti-trust laws, 15 U.S.C.A. §§ 1, 2 and 3, asking for treble damages based on defendant's conduct in acquiring and using the above patents.

The defendant has moved to dismiss the declaratory judgment action asserting that the plaintiff does not have the requisite standing to bring an action litigating patent '724. Apparently the defendant does not contest the plaintiff's [*123] standing to challenge the validity of patent '507.

The patents in question here relate to the manufacture [2] of concrete blocks. Patent '724 covers a "method of autoclaving concrete blocks." Patent '507 related to a "muffler for fired heater [168] autoclave system." In short, patent '507 is a patent covering the construction of certain machinery which is used for autoclaving concrete blocks and patent '724 covers the process of using the machinery in autoclaving concrete blocks.

The plaintiff is in the business of manufacturing and selling autoclaving equipment. Customers of the plaintiff use this equipment to produce finished concrete blocks. Defendant is a competitor of the plaintiff in manufacturing and selling autoclaving equipment.

The defendant has neither brought suit nor threatened suit against the plaintiff for infringement of patent '724. The defendant has brought suit against two of plaintiff's customers (in the Western District of New York) for infringement of defendant's patents in the use of plaintiff's autoclaving equipment in their manufacturing processes.

The defendant asserts that plaintiff has no standing to litigate the validity of patent '724. Defendant's position in their brief is that "* * * there is no allegation in this complaint that plaintiff is engaged in the [3] manufacture of any other article requiring the performance of any method of autoclaving. Nor does the plaintiff allege that he has any interest in or control over any process carried out by the purchaser of equipment purchased from him." In short, the defendant contends that plaintiff has standing to bring a declaratory judgment action only when it is in a position to be sued for infringement or for contributory infringement of the patent, by the owner.

The plaintiff offers a threefold argument to support its standing to bring this action. (1) Purchasers of plaintiff's equipment have been sued for infringement of patent '724. Those suits are pending trial in the Western District of New York. (2) The present record does not exclude a contention that the plaintiff is a contributory infringer, in which case, standing would be established under 35 U.S.C. § 271(c). (3) The plaintiff gave its customers a warranty of title under Uniform Commercial Code 2-312(3), and for this reason contends that it has an interest in the machines that its customers purchased which are the object of the defendant's infringement actions in the Western District of New York.

HN1[] The requisite standing to [4] bring a declaratory judgment action challenging the validity of a patent is determined by traditional notions of cases and controversies. See Dewey & Almy Chemical Co. v. American Anode, 137 F.2d 68 at 70 (3rd Cir., 1943).

In Alfred Hofmann, Inc. v. Knitting Machines Corp., 123 F.2d 458 (3rd Cir., 1941), a declaratory judgment action was brought challenging the validity of five patents controlled by the defendant. The plaintiff in that action sold the machines using the patented parts after the patents came under the defendant's control. The defendant had never threatened the plaintiff with an infringement action but had threatened purchasers of the plaintiff's machines with such suit. The Court held that the plaintiff had the requisite standing to bring the action.

> "While it is true that Knitting Machines Corporation cannot maintain a suit for infringement of the last two Miller patents against Alfred Hofmann, Inc., because the plaintiff had not sold a Schubert and Salzer knitting machine after the issuance of the patents, none the less, Knitting Machines Corporation can maintain a suit for infringement of these patents against any purchaser of Schubert and Salzer machines [5] * * * who uses the machines after the issuance of the patents." (p. 460)

On the general question of standing:

> "We are of the opinion that the HN2[] allegation and proof by a vendor that it is [*124] engaged in a course of conduct, the sale of machinery, which has brought and must bring purchasers from it into conflict with the owner of the patent is sufficient to support a suit for declaratory judgment by the vendor." (p. 461).

The factual situation in Aralac, Inc. v. Hat Corporation of America, 166 F.2d 286 (3rd Cir., 1948), is different from either the present case or that in Alfred Hofmann, Inc., supra. In Aralac the plaintiff sold a staple commodity which did not necessarily have to be used by purchasers in a process that infringed upon defendant's patent. In the present case it appears that the only uses the plaintiff's machines may be put to practical use is in a manner which infringes upon the defendant's patent '724. Furthermore, neither the plaintiff nor the plaintiff's customers in Aralac were even threatened with litigation charging infringement.

Under the defendant's theory of standing it would be possible for the defendant to avoid pressing [6] an infringement suit directly against the plaintiff but cause it severe economic hardship by other such suits without giving the plaintiff the opportunity to litigate the validity of defendant's patent. [169] Such a narrow interpretation of the case or controversy is not favored.

> "Certainly the fact that Anode had never made any direct threat to sue Dewey & Almy is not conclusive of the problem. E. W. Bliss Co. v. Cold Metal Process Co., 6 Cir., 1939, 102 F.2d 105, HN3[] an actual controversy was held to exist although it was evident that the patentee was exerting every effort to avoid entanglement in litigation with the particular alleged infringer seeking the declaration. * * *". Dewey & Almy Chemical Co. v. American Anode, 137 F.2d 68, at p. 70 (3rd Cir., 1943).

The defendant also moves under Fed.R. of Civ.P., Rule 12(f) to strike paragraphs numbered 16 and 17 of plaintiff's complaint. These paragraphs contain the allegation on which the plaintiff bases its anti-trust action. The defendant contends that these allegations are impertinent, immaterial, scandalous, and relate to an equitable defense which are not properly raised in a complaint for Declaratory Judgment litigating [7] the validity of a patent.

The plaintiff's position is that paragraphs numbered 16 and 17 relate solely to an anti-trust cause of action which is separate and apart from the declaratory judgment action litigating the validity of the patent. Under the liberal federal rule of joinder of several causes of action in one complaint the plaintiff contends that the pleading is proper, even though the anti-trust cause of action is not brought under a separate count in the complaint.

While Walker Process Equipment, Inc. v. Food Machinery, etc., 382 U.S. 172, 174, 86 S. Ct. 347, 15 L. Ed. 2d 247, did not pass specifically on the merits of an anti-trust cause of action based on fraudulent procurement of a patent, it did hold that such HN4[] a cause of action may be pleaded if other elements of an anti-trust cause are also pleaded.

The plaintiff should have properly pleaded his anti-trust action under a separate count. However, as the pleading now stands, the defendant is fully aware that the plaintiff is bringing an anti-trust cause of action along with the Declaratory Judgment action on the patent. If the defendant wants a more precise and definite statement of the plaintiff's anti-trust cause [8] of action he may proceed as suggested in 24 Moore's Federal Practice, § 8.17 [3], p. 1752:

> "For HN5[] further information necessary to form an answer or reply, the opposing party may look to the procedures provided for motions for more definite statement under Rule 12(e); discovery under Rules 26-35; summary judgment under Rule 56; and the pretrial conference procedure of Rule 16."

Defendant's motion to dismiss and motion to strike denied.

Denver & R. G. W. R. Co. v. United States

Supreme Court of the United States

March 16, 1967, Argued ; June 5, 1967, Decided

No. 305

Reporter

387 U.S. 485 *; 87 S. Ct. 1754 ; 18 L. Ed. 2d 905 ; 1967 U.S. LEXIS 2783 *; 1967 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,116

DENVER & RIO GRANDE WESTERN RAILROAD CO. ET AL. v. UNITED STATES ET AL.

Prior History: [1] APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLORADO.

Disposition: 255 F.Supp. 704, reversed and remanded.

Core Terms

stock, public interest, railroads, carrier, Clayton Act, anticompetitive, shares, acquisition, issuance, antitrust, transport, consolidations, approving, district court, defer, stockholders, acquire, circumstances, deferral, controlling issue, additional share, questions, immunity, effects, merger, lawful object, authorize, ownership, proposed transaction, anti trust law

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Securities Law > ... > Registration of Securities > Exemptions > Exempt Classes of Securities

Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Federal Powers

HN1[] Exemptions, Exempt Classes of Securities

49 U.S.C.S. § 20a.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Transportation > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Regulated Industry Mergers

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Restraints of Trade

HN2[] Regulated Industries, Transportation

49 U.S.C.S. § 5(2)(a)(i) authorizes any carrier, with the approval and authorization of the Interstate Commerce Commission, to acquire control of another through ownership of its stock or otherwise.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > Altering & Amending Judgments

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Regulated Industry Mergers

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

HN3[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

15 U.S.C.S. § 18, provides in pertinent part that no corporation engaged in commerce shall acquire, directly or indirectly, the whole or any part of the stock of another corporation engaged also in commerce, where in any line of commerce in any section of the country, the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Restraints of Trade

HN4[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

The Clayton Act, § 5(11), 49 U.S.C.S. § 5(11), provides that any carriers or other corporations, and their officers and employees and any other persons, participating in a transaction approved or authorized shall be and they are relieved from the operation of the antitrust laws.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Restraints of Trade

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > US Interstate Commerce Commission

HN5[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

The Clayton Act § 11, 15 U.S.C.S. § 21, provides in pertinent part that: (a) authority to enforce compliance with the Clayton Act § 7 by the persons respectively subject thereto is vested in the Interstate Commerce Commission where applicable to common carriers subject to the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended; and (b) whenever the Commission shall have reason to believe that any person is violating § 7, the Commission shall issue a complaint containing a notice of a hearing. The person so complained of shall have the right to show cause why an order should not be entered by the Commission requiring such person to cease and desist from the violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Transportation > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Regulated Industry Mergers

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Restraints of Trade

HN6[] Regulated Industries, Transportation

The Interstate Commerce Commission is required, as a general rule, under its duty to determine that the proposed transaction is in the "public interest" and for a "lawful object," to consider the control and anticompetitive consequences before approving stock issuances.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN7[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

A company need not acquire control of another company in order to violate the Clayton Act.

Lawyers' Edition Display

Summary

An express company and a motor carrier entered into an agreement, subject to Interstate Commerce Commission approval, whereby the express company agreed to issue 500,000 shares of its stock to the motor carrier at $ 20 per share and the motor carrier offered, for 60 days following its acquisition of the 500,000 shares, to purchase an additional 1,000,000 shares of the express company's outstanding stock at the same price. The Interstate Commerce Commission approved the issuance without hearing, ruling that investigation of the "control" and "anticompetitive" issues would be deferred. A three- judge United States District Court for the District of Colorado sustained the Commission's order. (255 F Supp 704.)

On direct appeal, the Supreme Court of the United States reversed. In an opinion by Brennan, J., expressing the views of six members of the court, it was held that while the possibility that the motor carrier might not increase its holdings within the 60-day period might justify deferring resolution of the control issue, it did not justify delay in considering the anticompetitive effects of the acquisition of the 500,000 shares.

White, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part, stated his agreement that a hearing as to competitive factors should have been held before approval of the stock issuance, but also stated that the Commission may approve a carrier's stock issuance even if there would be a probable lessening of competition.

Harlan, J., joined by Stewart, J., dissented on the grounds that antitrust matters are inapposite in a proceeding for approval of a stock issuance, and that in any event consideration of the antitrust issues was properly postponed.

Headnotes

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION §41 > issuance of securities -- investigation -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[1A][] [1A]LEdHN[1B][] [1B]LEdHN[1C][] [1C]

Under 20a of the Interstate Commerce Act (49 USC 20a), which forbids any carrier to issue capital stock until investigation by the Interstate Commerce Commission of the purposes and uses of the proposed issue and the proceeds thereof and issuance of a Commission order authorizing the issue after findings that the issue is for some "lawful object" and is compatible with the "public interest," the Commission's consideration is not limited to an inquiry into fiscal manipulation; the Commission is not required to close its eyes to facts indicating that the transaction may exceed limitations imposed by other relevant laws, and must give at least some degree of consideration to control and anticompetitive consequences when suggested by the circumstances surrounding the particular transaction.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION §39 > merger -- authorization -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[2A][] [2A]LEdHN[2B][] [2B]

The Interstate Commerce Commission is required to weigh anticompetitive effects in approving applications for merger or control under 5 of the Interstate Commerce Act (49 USC 5), which authorizes the Commission to grant such applications only if "consistent with the public interest."

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION §41 > stock issues -- duties -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[3][] [3]

The foundations of the Interstate Commerce Commission's obligation under 5 of the Interstate Commerce Act (49 USC 5), which authorizes the Commission to grant applications for merger or control only if "consistent with the public interest," are largely applicable as well to 20a of the statute (49 USC 20a), which empowers the Commission to permit stock issues only for some "lawful object" compatible with the "public interest."

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION §39 > mergers -- stock issues -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[4][] [4]

Both 5 of the Interstate Commerce Act (49 USC 5), which authorizes the Interstate Commerce Commission to grant applications for merger or control only if "consistent with the public interest," and 20a of the statute (49 USC 20a), which empowers the Commission to permit stock issues only for some "lawful object" compatible with the "public interest," must be read in the context of overall Commission responsibilities, including the responsibility under 11 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 21) to enforce that statute's provisions and the responsibility to advance the National Transportation Policy.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION §41 > stock issue -- principles -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[5][] [5]

In a proceeding before the Interstate Commerce Commission under 20a of the Interstate Commerce Act (49 USC 20a) for approval of an issuance of stock, the same broad principles apply as in a proceeding under 20a(12) for authority for an interlocking directorate and under 5 (2) for authority for a merger.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION §13 > stock issuances -- hearing -- review -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[6][] [6]

Under the general rule that the Interstate Commerce Commission must, before approving stock issuances pursuant to 20a of the Interstate Commerce Act (49 USC 20a), consider the control and anticompetitive consequences of the issuance, the Commission need not grant a hearing in every case and may defer consideration of issues whicht arise when special circumstances are present, but when the Commission exercises its discretion to approve issuances without first considering important control and competition issues, the reviewing court must closely scrutinize its action in light of the Commission's statutory obligations to protect the public interest and to enforce the antitrust laws.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION §179 > discretion -- stock issuance -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[7][] [7]

In a proceeding under 20a of the Interstate Commerce Act (49 USC 20a) for Interstate Commerce Commission approval of a stock issuance, the question whether the Commission has abused its discretion in approving an issuance without first considering important control and competition issues depends upon the transaction approved, its possible consequences, and any justifications for the deferral.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION §39 > control -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[8][] [8]

Under 5 of the Interstate Commerce Act (49 USC 5), which authorizes the Interstate Commerce Commission to approve applications for merger or control only if consistent with the public interest, control must be judged realistically, and is a matter of degree.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION §39 > control -- deferral -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[9][] [9]

When a carrier's application for Interstate Commerce Commission approval of its issuance of 500,000 shares of its stock to a second carrier, which agrees that within 60 days of its acquisition of the 500,000 shares it will offer to purchase an additional 1,000,000 shares of the first carrier's outstanding stock at the same price, the Interstate Commerce Commission does not exceed its discretion in deferring consideration, for the 60-day period, of the question whether control of the first carrier's operations might pass to the second carrier.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION §39 > control -- public interest -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[10A][] [10A]LEdHN[10B][] [10B]

Under 5 of the Interstate Commerce Act (49 USC 5), which authorizes the Interstate Commerce Commission to approve applications for merger or control only if "consistent with the public interest," resolution of the "public interest" issue, requiring consideration of anticompetitive and other consequences, is required when the threshold fact of control or merger is established.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION §39 > control -- tentative stock acquisition -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[11][] [11]

The Interstate Commerce Commission reasonably concludes that allowing a motor carrier tentatively to acquire a 20 percent stock interest in a railroad express service and motor common carrier whose other stock is entirely owned by railroads will not prejudice protestors to the transaction as to the issue of the acquiring carrier's acquisition of control of the other carrier, where the railroad stockholders refuse to sell any stock to the acquiring carrier and the acquiring carrier is unable to control the board of directors of the other carrier.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION §41 > stock issuance -- anticompetitive effects -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[12][] [12]

On a carrier's application for Interstate Commerce Commission approval of an issue of stock for sale to another carrier, the Commission's action in deferring consideration of the anticompetitive issues under 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18), which forbids stock acquisitions substantially lessening competition, stands on a different footing from the control issue under 5 of the Interstate Commerce Act (49 USC 5), which requires Commission authorization before one carrier may acquire control of another; the Commission's responsibility under 5 and under the Clayton Act differ markedly, the reasons which support an exercise of discretion as to the control issue are wholly inapplicable to the anticompetitive questions, and there is no reasonable justification for deferring the Clayton Act questions.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION §41 > stock acquisitions -- anticompetitive effect -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[13][] [13]

No preliminary finding of control need be made to trigger the Interstate Commerce Commission's duty under the Clayton Act to prevent stock acquisitions which may have the effect substantially to lessen competition.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §34 > control -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[14][] [14]

A company need not acquire control of another company in order to violate the Clayton Act.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION §39 > control -- antitrust immunity -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[15][] [15]

Section 5 of the Interstate Commerce Act (49 USC 5), which authorizes the Interstate Commerce Commission to approve a carrier's application for merger or control, is designed to enable carriers to seek and obtain approval of consolidations with other carriers, with immunity from the antitrust laws.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION §39 > consolidations -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[16][] [16]

The carrier must initiate consolidations under 5 of the Interstate Commerce Act (49 USC 5), which authorizes the Interstate Commerce Commission to approve a carrier's application for merger or control.

RESTRAINTS OF TRADE, MONOPOLIES, AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES §35 > stock acquisitions -- carriers -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[17][] [17]

Section 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18), forbidding stock acquisitions the effect of which may be substantially to lessen competition, requires that a carrier's acquisition of 20 percent of the stock of another carrier be stopped in its incipiency if the result is likely to be immediate and continuing co-operation between the carriers which would be detrimental to competitors and against the public interest.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION §41 > stock issuance -- factors -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[18][] [18]

On an application under 20a of the Interstate Commerce Act (49 USC 20a) for approval of an express company's issuance of stock to be purchased by a motor common carrier, where it is shown that the domination of the express company by railroads has led to operation of the express company and the railroads' own interests without regard to the express company's best interests or the public interest, the Interstate Commerce Commission must at least consider whether the special action to be approved may operate to the detriment of the express company or the public interest before using the express company's need for funds and for independence from the railroads to justify a diversification of ownership.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION §41 > stock issuance -- anticompetitive issues -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[19][] [19]

Considerations of administrative convenience do not support the Interstate Commerce Commission's deferral of anticompetitive issues in a proceeding for Commission approval of a carrier's issuance of 500,000 shares of its stock to be acquired by another carrier under an agreement whereby the purchasing carrier agrees to offer within 60 days following the acquisition to purchase an additional 1,000,000 shares of the first carrier's outstanding stock at the same price.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION §41 > stock issuance -- anticompetitive impact -- > Headnote:
LEdHN[20][] [20]

In a proceeding for Interstate Commerce Commission approval of a carrier's issuance to another carrier of 500,000 shares of the first carrier's stock at $ 20 per share under an agreement whereby the second carrier offers to buy an additional 1,000,000 shares of the first carrier's stock at the same price, the offer to be open for 60 days following the acquisition of the 500,000 shares, the possibility that the second carrier may not increase its holdings within the 60-day period may justify deferral of resolution of the control issue but it does not justify delay in consideration of the anticompetitive effects of the acquisition of the 500,000 shares.

Syllabus

Railway Express Agency (REA) applied to the Interstate Commerce Commission (ICC) for authorization under § 20a of the Interstate Commerce Act to sell 500,000 authorized but unissued shares of its stock to Greyhound Corporation. Greyhound agreed, upon acquisition of these shares, to offer for 60 days to purchase up to 1 million shares of outstanding REA stock, all of which is owned by railroads which have the right of first refusal. REA and Greyhound had entered into a "Memorandum of Understanding" which contemplated efficiencies and savings through consolidation of terminal facilities, garages, communications, advertising, and sales forces. Section 20a (2) of the Act provides for ICC authorization of a carrier's stock issuance if "for some lawful object within [the applicant's] corporate purposes, and compatible with the public interest." Finding the issuance of the 500,000 shares for sale to Greyhound to be urgently needed, the [*2] ICC authorized the issuance under § 20a without a hearing, and declined to decide, pending the outcome of Greyhound's 60-day offer, the questions of control under § 5 of the Interstate Commerce Act or anticompetitive effect under § 7 of the Clayton Act. A three-judge District Court sustained the ICC order. Held:

1. The ICC is required, as a general rule, under its duty to determine that the proposed transaction is in the "public interest" and for a "lawful object," to consider control and anticompetitive consequences before approving a stock issuance under § 20a (2) of the Interstate Commerce Act. Pp. 492-498.

2. The ICC did not exceed its discretion in deferring consideration of the issue of REA's control by Greyhound, as radical changes in the relevant facts might take place in the 60-day period, and it is highly unlikely that any harm could flow to appellants or to the public interest from a deferral limited to that issue. Pp. 499-501.

3. The ICC exceeded its discretion in deferring consideration of the anticompetitive issues. Pp. 501-507.

(a) While the ICC's duty to consider anticompetitive issues under the public interest standard of § 5 of the Interstate Commerce [*3] Act arises only after a threshold finding of control, no such preliminary finding need be made to trigger the ICC's duty under the Clayton Act. P. 501.

(b) With respect to at least some of the anticompetitive issues presented by REA's application the relevant facts will not change significantly during the 60-day period. Pp. 502-503.

(c) With Greyhound's holding of 500,000 shares (20%) of REA's stock there is likely to be immediate and continuing cooperation between the companies, which appellants claim will be to their detriment and which the Government concedes may be against the public interest. If such an alliance would in fact be against the public interest, § 7 of the Clayton Act requires that it be stopped in its incipiency. P. 504.

(d) Before the ICC can justify a diversification of ownership on the grounds that REA has an urgent need for funds and would be better off more independent of the railroads, it must consider whether the action approved would operate to the detriment of REA or the public interest. Pp. 505-506.

(e) There is little merit to the Government's contention that deferral of the anticompetitive issues is strongly supported by considerations of administrative [*4] convenience. Pp. 506-507.

Counsel: William H. Dempsey, Jr., argued the cause for appellants. With him on the briefs were Jeremiah C. Waterman, Royce D. Sickler, C. W. Fiddes, David Axelrod, Eugene T. Liipfert, Benjamin W. Boley, Martin J. Flynn, Giles Morrow, Peter T. Beardsley, Harry Jordan and R. Edwin Brady.

Robert S. Rifkind argued the cause for the United States et al. With him on the brief were Solicitor General Marshall, Assistant Attorney General Turner, Howard E. Shapiro, Robert W. Ginnane and Betty Jo Christian. Thomas D. Barr argued the cause for appellees Railway Express Agency, Inc., et al. Mr. Barr filed a brief for Railway Express Agency, Inc. Owen Jameson filed a brief for appellee Greyhound Corp.

Judges: Warren, Black, Douglas, Clark, Harlan, Brennan, Stewart, White, Fortas

Opinion by: BRENNAN

Opinion

[*487] [909] [1756] MR. JUSTICE BRENNAN delivered the opinion of the Court.

The question in this case is whether the Interstate Commerce Commission complied with its statutory responsibilities under § 20a of the Interstate Commerce Act [1] when it approved without consideration of control or anticompetitive consequences the issuance to appellee Greyhound [*5] Corporation of 500,000 shares of the common stock of appellee Railway Express Agency, Inc. (REA).

[6] REA provides railroad express service and is also a motor common carrier. The approximately 2,000,000 shares of REA common stock outstanding are entirely owned by railroads and no railroad stockholder may dispose of its shares without first offering them to the other railroad stockholders. REA also is authorized, however, to issue 500,000 additional shares of common stock without first offering them to its stockholders. [1757] Greyhound, which operates an express carrier service through its wholly owned subsidiary Greyhound Lines, Inc., a motor carrier of passengers and express subject to the Interstate [*488] Commerce Act, agreed to purchase these 500,000 [910] shares. REA thereupon applied to the ICC for an order under § 20a approving the transaction. Minority railroad REA stockholders, motor bus competitors of Greyhound, motor carriers, and freight forwarders intervened in the proceeding to protest against approval of the transaction. They alleged, among other things, the necessity of a hearing on the questions whether Greyhound's acquisition of the stock was in the "public interest" and for a "lawful object" as those terms are used in § 20a. The ICC approved [*7] the acquisition without a hearing. A three-judge District Court for the District of Colorado sustained the ICC order. 255 F.Supp. 704. We noted probable jurisdiction. 385 U.S. 897. We reverse with direction to the District Court to enter a new judgment remanding the case to the ICC for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

I.

REA was organized in 1929 and until 1961 operated on a nonprofit basis under a pooling agreement with the railroads. See Securities and Acquisition of Control of Railway Express Agency, Inc., 150 I. C. C. 423. Financial

---

[1] Section 20a of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, 41 Stat. 494, 49 U. S. C. § 20a, provides in pertinent part:

"(2) HN1[] It shall be unlawful for any carrier to issue any share of capital stock . . . even though permitted by the authority creating the carrier corporation, unless and until, and then only to the extent that, upon application by the carrier, and after investigation by the Commission of the purposes and uses of the proposed issue and the proceeds thereof, . . . the Commission by order authorizes such issue . . . . The Commission shall make such order only if it finds that such issue . . . (a) is for some lawful object within its corporate purposes, and compatible with the public interest, which is necessary or appropriate for or consistent with the proper performance by the carrier of service to the public as a common carrier, and which will not impair its ability to perform that service, and (b) is reasonably necessary and appropriate for such purpose."

Common carriers by motor vehicle are made subject to the provisions of § 20a (2) by § 214 of the Act, as amended, 49 Stat. 557, 49 U. S. C. § 314.

difficulties forced abandonment of the nonprofit operation and REA was converted to a profit and loss basis in order to effect more efficient and economic operation. See Express Contract, 1959, 308 I. C. C. 545, 549-550. In addition, REA was released from restrictions against use of carriers other than railroads. In 1963 REA's bylaws were amended to eliminate a limitation against stock ownership except by railroads; the disposition of shares by a railroad, however, was made subject to the right of first refusal of the other railroad stockholders. The issuance of 500,000 [*8] additional shares not subject to the right of first refusal was also authorized, but only upon the consent of two-thirds of the railroad stockholders.

[*489] Greyhound, principally a passenger carrier, became interested in expanding its growing express business. In January 1964 Greyhound offered to purchase, subject to ICC approval, at least 67% of REA's stock, of which Greyhound intended to offer 16% to major airlines. Greyhound also agreed to finance part of REA's capital requirements as part of a plan to coordinate the express services of both companies. This proposal was defeated by railroad stockholders.

REA and Greyhound persisted in their efforts to coordinate their operations. Greyhound proposed to acquire a 20% interest in REA through acquisition of REA's 500,000 authorized but unissued shares, stating that its "interest in REA . . . stems primarily from our views as to the improvements . . . which could be realized through combination and correlation of certain of our facilities and services." Greyhound offered to pay $ 16 per share if permitted to name one-fifth of the REA Board of Directors and if the REA Board would declare its intention "to consider seriously [*9] and work toward a long-term agreement between REA and Greyhound to consolidate operating functions and facilities . . . ," and if, further, the REA Board would agree "to consider seriously at a later time . . ." the sale of REA stock to airlines and the general public. Finally, Greyhound offered, if permitted to acquire the 500,000 shares, to purchase enough additional shares at $ 25 each to give it 50% of the stock of REA, the offer to remain open for 60 days following Greyhound's [911] acquisition of the 500,000 shares. It expressed willingness, however, to purchase the 500,000 shares and leave "to the future the question of the acquisition of additional shares by Greyhound and [1758] giving the railroads an opportunity to reconcile their views on this question."

REA countered with an offer to sell the 500,000 shares at $ 20 per share provided Greyhound would agree to [*490] offer within the 60-day period to purchase an additional 1,000,000 shares of the outstanding stock at the same price. The agreement was consummated on this basis subject to ICC approval.

REA's application to the ICC sought approval only of the issuance to Greyhound of the 500,000 shares. [*10] The application was supplemented with detailed data reviewing the negotiations, a statement of REA's financial condition and a statement of the purposes to which the $ 10,000,000 realized from the sale of the 500,000 shares would be applied. The burden of the protests of numerous intervenors was that the transaction was not in the "public interest" and for a "lawful object," but rather was the first step toward establishing a virtual monopoly of express transportation, and would result in "control" by Greyhound of REA, necessitating a hearing under § 5 of the Act. [2] [*11] The Department of Justice also intervened. It urged the ICC to conduct a hearing to determine whether the transaction would violate § 7 of the Clayton Act, [3] suggesting that, while a § 5 proceeding might be

[2] Section 5 (2) (a) (i) of the Act, as amended, 41 Stat. 480, 482, 49 U. S. C. § 5 (2) (a) (i), HN2[] authorizes any carrier, with the approval and authorization of the Commission, "to acquire control of another through ownership of its stock or otherwise . . . ." Upon application of a carrier seeking such authority, the Commission "shall afford reasonable opportunity for interested parties to be heard," and if "the Commission finds that, subject to such terms and conditions and such modifications as it shall find to be just and reasonable, the proposed transaction is within the scope of subdivision (a) . . . and will be consistent with the public interest, it shall enter an order approving and authorizing such transaction, upon the terms and conditions, and with the modifications, so found to be just and reasonable . . . ." § 5 (2) (b).

[3] Section 7 of the Clayton Act, as amended, 38 Stat. 731, 15 U. S. C. § 18, HN3[] provides in pertinent part:

"No corporation engaged in commerce shall acquire, directly or indirectly, the whole or any part of the stock . . . of another corporation engaged also in commerce, where in any line of commerce in any section of the country, the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly."

[*491] unnecessary, one might be instituted and consolidated with the recommended Clayton Act § 7 proceeding, since the anticompetitive issues involved would be virtually identical.

Division Three of the ICC approved the application without hearing, ruling that investigation into the "control" and "anticompetitive" issues "would not be appropriate at this time . . . ." After the ICC denial of petitions for reconsideration this action to enjoin and set aside the ICC order was filed. The full Commission meanwhile reconsidered and affirmed the action of Division Three but postponed the effective date of the order pending the conclusion of judicial proceedings.

In the District Court the parties adhered basically to the positions [*12] maintained before the ICC, except that the Department of Justice abandoned its position urging a hearing on the § 7 question and declined either to support or to oppose [912] the ICC order. In sustaining the order the District Court reasoned that, while the ICC might be required in some circumstances to consider "control" and "anticompetitive" issues before approving a stock issuance under § 20a, the ICC properly exercised discretion to defer consideration of such questions in this case until after it was determined whether and to what extent Greyhound would succeed in purchasing additional shares from railroad stockholders; only then would the "chain of events started by the stock issuance . . . [be] ascertainable [1759] rather than conjectural." 255 F.Supp. 704, 709.

In this Court the Government concedes, and the other appellees assume arguendo, that important issues of "control" and "anticompetitive" effects were involved in the application before the ICC. The Government has completely reversed its position from what it was before [*492] the ICC, arguing here that § 20a was designed to accomplish only the limited objective of protecting [*13] stockholders and the public from fiscal manipulation, and that, in any event, postponement of consideration of "control" and "anticompetitive" issues was justified in this case because the facts relevant to both issues might be wholly different at the end of the 60-day period, and because no prejudice to any party's interests could result from the delay.

II.

LEdHN[1A][] [1A] LEdHN[2A][] [2A]We do not agree that Congress limited ICC consideration under § 20a to an inquiry into fiscal manipulation. [4] Even if Congress' primary concern was to prevent such manipulation, the broad terms "public interest" and "lawful object" negate the existence of a mandate to the ICC to close its eyes to facts indicating that the transaction may exceed limitations imposed by other relevant laws. Common sense and sound administrative policy point to the conclusion that such broad statutory standards require at least some degree of consideration of control and anticompetitive consequences when suggested by the circumstances surrounding a particular transaction. Both the ICC [*14] and this Court have read terms such as "public interest" broadly, to require consideration of all important consequences including anticompetitive effects. Thus the ICC is required to weigh anticompetitive effects in approving applications for merger or control under § 5 of the Act, authorizing the ICC to grant such applications [*493] only if "consistent with the public interest." McLean Trucking Co. v. United States, 321 U.S. 67. And similarly broad responsibilities are encompassed within like broad directives addressed to other agencies. E. g., National Broadcasting Co. v. United States, 319 U.S. 190, 224; FCC v. RCA Communications, Inc., 346 U.S. 86, 94; California v. FPC, 369 U.S. 482, 484-485.

[15] LEdHN[3][] [3] LEdHN[4][] [4]It is true that the requirement [913] that the ICC consider anticompetitive effects is more readily found under § 5, since § 5 (11) enables the ICC to confer immunity from the antitrust laws for transactions approved under § 5 (2). [5] But the foundations of the ICC's obligation under § 5 are

---

[4] Section 20a was originally § 437 (1) of H. R. 10453, 66th Cong., which was almost identical to earlier legislation passed by the House in 1910 and 1914. See 58 Cong. Rec. 8317-8318 (1919). The 1910 version led to a study which condemned as a "public evil" intercorporate holdings of railroad stock. Report of the Railroad Securities Commission, H. R. Doc. No. 256, 62d Cong., 2d Sess., 21 (1911). These findings were part of the background against which Congress eventually passed § 20a, along with the Federal Trade Commission and Clayton Acts.

largely applicable to § 20a as well. Section 20a, like § 5, must after all be read in the context of overall ICC responsibilities. The responsibility under § 11 of the Clayton Act [6] to enforce [1760] that Act's provisions is one of them. The responsibility to advance the National Transportation Policy, read into the "public interest" standard of § 5, is another persistent and overriding duty, equally applicable to § 20a. In sum, as we said in McLean Trucking, supra, while transportation "legislation constitutes the immediate frame of reference within [*494] which the Commission operates . . . and the policies expressed in it must be the basic determinants of its action . . . , in executing those policies the [*16] Commission may be faced with overlapping and at times inconsistent policies embodied in other legislation enacted at different times and with different problems in view. When this is true, it cannot, without more, ignore the latter." 321 U.S., at 80.

[17] In proceedings under § 20a (2), the ICC itself has not acted as though it lacks the power or responsibility to weigh anticompetitive consequences. In Columbia Terminals Co. -- Issuance of Notes, 40 M. C. C. 288, 293, an application to issue notes under § 20a (2) was granted in part only on the condition that the notes be made the subject of competitive bidding. The ICC explicitly rejected the argument that § 10 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. § 20, requiring competitive bidding in certain situations, was superseded by § 20a. In Stock of New Jersey, I. & I. R. Co., 94 I. C. C. 727, 729, the Commission said, in considering an application to issue stock: "It can not be said that in the performance of the broad duty imposed upon us by the statute we must confine our investigation and consideration to the effect of proposed issues upon the carrier immediately involved. In any application to us for authority to issue securities we are bound to measure the proposal by the test of public interest in whatever phase that interest may appear to be affected."

LEdHN[5][] [5] [*18] This "broad duty" was significantly adhered to in Chesapeake & O. R. Co. Purchase, 271 I. C. C. 5. There, the C & O sought modification of an earlier order so as to enable it to acquire and exercise 400,000 shares of New York Central, and two of C & O's directors sought authority under § 20a (12) to hold seats simultaneously on the Central [914] Board. C & O and its directors alleged, in terms strikingly similar to the claims in this case, that Central [*495] needed funds and new management, and that the two companies were contemplating plans of mutual advantage and ultimately a merger under § 5 (2). The ICC took a broad view of its power and responsibility. It found, as to the § 20a (12) issue, that an insufficient showing had been made that "neither public nor private interests . . ." would be adversely affected by the proposed interlocking directorate, citing its own cases to the effect that authority would be granted under § 20a (12) only where no lessening of competition or independence occurred, 271 I. C. C., at 18, and pointing out that, even if the Central were strengthened, an interlocking directorate might injure other railroads [*19] in which the "public has just as great an interest . . . ," 271 I. C. C., at 40. In treating the request that it approve the stock acquisition, the ICC referred in great detail to the facts that (1) the acquisition, when considered along with long-range plans, would result in C & O control of Central; (2) extensive competition between C & O and Central would be eliminated; and (3) cooperation between C & O and Central would [1761] pose a substantial threat to another railroad, 271 I. C. C., at 24-29. It refused to authorize the acquisition, concluding that it was in effect being asked "to sanction a violation of the provisions of section 5 (4) [requiring carriers to request authority under § 5 (2) before acquiring control of another carrier] and also a violation of section 7 of the Clayton Antitrust Act." 271 I. C. C., at 39, 43. It stated that, if the applicants were so confident that their long-run aims would be in the public interest, they should seek authority for control under § 5 (2). These principles and arguments relied upon by the ICC in rejecting C & O's application are equally applicable here. The

---

[5] Section 5 (11), 49 U. S. C. § 5 (11), HN4[] provides that "any carriers or other corporations, and their officers and employees and any other persons, participating in a transaction approved or authorized . . . shall be and they are relieved from the operation of the antitrust laws . . . ."

[6] Section 11 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. § 21, HN5[] provides in pertinent part: "(a) Authority to enforce compliance with . . . [§ 7] by the persons respectively subject thereto is vested in the Interstate Commerce Commission where applicable to common carriers subject to the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended . . . . (b) Whenever the Commission . . . shall have reason to believe that any person is violating . . . [§ 7] it shall issue . . . a complaint . . . containing a notice of a hearing . . . . The person so complained of shall have the right to . . . show cause why an order should not be entered by the Commission . . . requiring such person to cease and desist from the violation . . . ."

economic consequences [*20] do not differ because we are concerned here with the issuance of stock rather than an acquisition on the open market.

[*496] Appellees argue, with some ambivalence, that it would be anomalous to require the ICC to consider anticompetitive issues under § 20a (2). The ICC is authorized under § 5 to grant antitrust immunity for consolidations. No such power exists under § 20a, [7] and the Government contends therefore that to require consideration of § 7 issues under § 20a would lead to the "anomalous conclusion that a securities issue may have to be disallowed even though it might be the first step in an acquisition of control that the Commission could, on proper findings, authorize under section 5 notwithstanding antitrust considerations." REA advances a variant of this argument pointing out that the Sixty-sixth Congress, which passed both § 5 and § 20a, would not have "adopted the erratic policy of relaxing enforcement of the antitrust [915] laws when competition was eliminated but requiring strict enforcement when lesser competitive harm might occur."

[21] First, it is by no means true that greater competitive harm necessarily results from consolidations than from stock issuances under § 20a. A particular consolidation may be in the public interest because it increases competition in some respects, while a stock issuance, even though not involving control, may have no similar redeeming feature. Second, any anomaly which may be created by the juxtaposition of §§ 5 and 20a stems, not [*497] from the fact that no immunity may be granted under § 20a, but from the ICC's special power under § 5. The obligation to enforce the Clayton Act is the rule, and § 5 is the exception. Finally, there are good reasons upon which Congress may have relied in providing that immunity might be conferred under § 5 but not under § 20a. Congress recognized in the Transportation Act of 1940, 54 Stat. 898, as it had in the Act of 1920, that railroad consolidations often result in benefits for the national transportation system as well as for the railroads involved. Consequently, it authorized the ICC to approve consolidations and to immunize them from the antitrust laws when they were found to be in the public interest. The special benefits sometimes [*22] realized from carrier consolidations are less likely to come about through the mere issuance of stock, unless the issuance results in control or merger; and when control or merger does result, the party acquiring control may invoke the Commission's [1762] power under § 5 to immunize the consolidation from the antitrust laws.

Appellees' reliance upon Alleghany Corp. v. Breswick & Co., 353 U.S. 151, 355 U.S. 415, is misplaced. That litigation stands at most for the proposition that the ICC has discretion in some circumstances to consider § 20a issues without coming to grips with the question whether control of one carrier by another may be unlawful. Alleghany had acquired control of the New York Central without ICC approval. It applied to the ICC rather than to the Securities and Exchange Commission for approval of an issue of preferred stock. The ICC took jurisdiction on the ground that, while Alleghany was an investment company normally under the jurisdiction of the SEC, its control of Central made it a carrier subject to ICC regulation. The District Court set aside the order approving the issuance on the ground [*498] that ICC jurisdiction to [*23] act under § 20a could not rest upon a control it had not approved. This Court reversed, pointing out that it would be contrary to the policy of the statute to oust the ICC of regulatory jurisdiction because a noncarrier had failed to abide by the law. On remand the District Court considered the illegality of Alleghany's control as relevant to the merits of the issuance under § 20a, and we reversed again, stating simply that the only issue left open on remand was whether the stock issue "as approved" was unlawful. 355 U.S. 415, 416. However this litigation may be interpreted, it wholly fails to support the proposition that, because § 20a was designed primarily to protect against fiscal manipulation, the ICC is relieved of the necessity of considering other issues germane to the transaction.

LEdHN[1B][] [1B] LEdHN[6][] [6] LEdHN[7][] [7]We conclude, therefore, that HN6[] the ICC is required, [*24] as a general [916] rule, under its duty to determine that the proposed transaction is in the "public interest" and for a "lawful object," to consider the control and anticompetitive consequences before approving stock issuances under § 20a (2). This does not mean the ICC must grant a hearing in every case, or that it may never defer consideration of issues which arise when special circumstances are present. But it does mean that, when the ICC exercises its discretion to approve issuances without first considering important control and competition issues, the reviewing court must closely scrutinize its action in light of the ICC's statutory obligations to protect the public interest and to enforce the antitrust laws. Whether or not an abuse of discretion is present must ultimately depend upon the transaction approved, its possible consequences, and any justifications for the deferral. We turn now to this question, first with respect to the deferral of the control issue, and second with respect to the deferral of the anticompetitive issues.

---

[7] In Pan American World Airways v. United States, 371 U.S. 296, we held that Congress had entrusted the narrow questions there presented to the CAB; but the violations alleged were of the Sherman Act, which unlike the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. § 21, supra, n. 6, contains no provision imposing an affirmative duty upon the agency to enforce the Act's provisions. The industry there was one "regulated under a regime designed to change the prior competitive system," id., at 301, and the CAB could have retained power and granted antitrust immunity for the actions involved had they occurred after passage of § 411 of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, 52 Stat. 1003, id., at 312.

[*499] III.

LEdHN[8][] [8]REA's proposed issuance of a 20% stock [*25] interest to Greyhound undoubtedly raised a serious question whether control of its operations might pass to Greyhound. Control under § 5 must be judged realistically, and is a matter of degree. See Rochester Tel. Corp. v. United States, 307 U.S. 125. Even the 20% acquisition standing alone might raise an issue of control necessitating greater consideration than given it by the ICC, but it is clear from REA's own evidence that the purpose of its negotiations with Greyhound was to bring the two companies into a joint alignment. The 20% stock issuance was treated by both as the first step of a more ambitious project, and as evidence of the seriousness of each other's intentions to that end.

LEdHN[9][] [9]What the ICC has done must, however, be placed in perspective. It has [1763] not denied that a substantial issue of control is present, and it has not refused to consider the issue. It has held only that consideration should be deferred for the 60-day period during which Greyhound has agreed to extend to REA stockholders an offer to purchase up to 1,000,000 shares. We have stressed the [*26] unsatisfactory consequences which often occur when agencies defer action and leave parties uncertain as to their rights and obligations. United States v. Chicago, M., St. P. & P. R. Co., 294 U.S. 499, 510. We might also observe that the ICC apparently could have avoided the deferral by requiring REA and Greyhound to reform their contract so that all the facts relevant to the control issue could be ascertained before approval was given under § 20a (2). [8] Nevertheless, we cannot say that the [*500] ICC exceeded its discretion when it deferred consideration of the control issue; radical changes in the relevant facts may take place during the 60-day period, and it is highly unlikely that any harm can flow to appellants or to the public interest from a deferral limited to that issue.

[27] LEdHN[10A][] [10A]Resolution of the "public interest" issue under § 5, requiring [917] consideration of anticompetitive and other consequences, is required when the threshold fact of control or merger is established. But in this case, even assuming that the 20% purchase may amount to "control" under the existing stock distribution, events may occur during the 60-day period which might negate this possibility. Some railroads have indicated their intention to sell their REA holdings, but whether Greyhound or the dissident railroads wind up in a controlling position may depend on the extent to which the latter exercise their right of first refusal. The dissident railroads have made clear their intention to prevent Greyhound from acquiring any additional shares, but even if they obtain one-third of REA's stock they will be able to determine the composition of REA's Board of Directors. In either case, the added power in the hands of the dissident roads may, depending on the circumstances, lead the ICC to find that Greyhound had not acquired control. [9] Thus the control question can more realistically be resolved [*28] with finality after the 60-day period.

LEdHN[11][] [11]Moreover, the ICC reasonably concluded that allowing Greyhound tentatively to acquire the 20% stock interest would not prejudice appellants as to the control issue [*501] in light of the dissident railroads'

---

[8] A change in the agreement providing that Greyhound should offer to purchase the stock held by the railroads before the issuance of the 500,000 shares would have developed the relevant facts, and made unnecessary postponement of the determination of either the control or competition issue.

[9] If the dissident REA railroad stockholders exercised their right of first refusal to buy the 1,000,000 shares the other railroad stockholders might sell, their combined stockholdings would be increased to over 50% of the REA shares. See Brief for the United States and ICC, p. 18, n. 9.

position that Greyhound would not acquire "one additional share under the offer to purchase up to one million shares . . . ," and because Greyhound would be unable under REA's bylaws to control the board, since its five directors would be faced by 18 railroad directors, any 13 of whom would have the power to prevent any action proposed by Greyhound.

IV.

LEdHN[12][] [12] [*29] The action of the Commission in deferring consideration of the anticompetitive issues stands on a different footing. The Commission's responsibility under § 5 and under the Clayton Act differs markedly, and the reasons which support an exercise of discretion as to the control issue are wholly inapplicable [1764] to the anticompetitive questions. There is, in short, no reasonable justification for deferring the Clayton Act questions.

LEdHN[1C][] [1C] LEdHN[2B][] [2B] LEdHN[10B][] [10B] LEdHN[13][] [13] LEdHN[14][] [14] LEdHN[15][] [15] LEdHN[16][] [16]The Commission is, of course, required to consider anticompetitive issues under the public interest standard of § 5, just as it must under the public interest standard of § 20a. But the duty [*30] under § 5, as we point out above, arises only after the threshold fact of control is established. No such preliminary finding need be made to trigger the ICC's duty under the Clayton Act. HN7[] A company need not acquire control of another company in order to violate the Clayton Act. See, e. g., United States v. du Pont & Co., 353 U.S. 586; American Crystal Sugar Co. v. Cuban-American Sugar Co., 152 F.Supp. 387 (D. C. S. D. N. Y. 1957), aff'd, 259 F.2d 524 (C. A. 2d Cir. 1958). Section 7 proscribes acquisition of "any part" of a company's stock where the effect "may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly." Moreover, the purpose of § 5 is significantly different from that of the Clayton Act. Section 5 is designed [918] to enable carriers to seek and obtain approval of consolidations with other carriers, with immunity from the antitrust [*502] laws. When a carrier effects a consolidation without ICC authority, the Commission can of course act under § 5 (4). But, as the Commission has often held, [*31] the carrier must initiate consolidations under § 5, and it is reasonable to expect that carriers will seek the benefits of that provision. In contrast, the Clayton Act is prohibitive, and imposes a positive obligation upon the ICC to act. The Commission is directed, whenever it has reason to believe any carrier within its jurisdiction is violating § 7, to "issue and serve upon such person and the Attorney General a complaint stating its charges in that respect, and containing a notice of a hearing . . . ." 15 U. S. C. § 21 (b). Section 16, 15 U. S. C. § 26, excepts from the power of private persons to bring § 7 suits for injunctive relief all cases involving matters subject to ICC jurisdiction. By thus limiting the authority of private persons to institute court proceedings to enjoin § 7 violations, this provision underscores the ICC's responsibility to act when such violations are brought to its attention.

One of the principal justifications advanced for the ICC's deferral of the control issue is that the facts relevant to that issue may change so significantly during the 60-day period that the control question could be settled [*32] either way. No such possibility exists with respect to at least some of the anticompetitive issues presented by REA's application. We need not accept the argument of appellants, based upon the distinction between "express" and other forms of transport, see, e. g., Railway Express Agency, Inc., Extension -- Nashua, N. H., 91 M. C. C. 311, 322, sustained sub nom. Auclair Transportation, Inc. v. United States, 221 F.Supp. 328 (D. Mass.), aff'd, 376 U.S. 514, that the 20% stock acquisition would itself violate § 7 because REA controls 88% and Greyhound 7% of the "express" market. For if appellees REA and Greyhound are correct that, because of the increasing cross-competition among groups carrying [*503] transport, it is impossible to categorize REA as a carrier of "express," then the claims of appellant truck lines, freight forwarders and trucking associations take on added significance. It is precisely the increasing diversification of REA's transport activity, together with Greyhound's considerable capacity and the economies and efficiencies the two companies intend to effectuate jointly, that concerns these appellants.

[33] It is clear that REA and Greyhound contemplate major changes in their operation which could have a significant impact upon competition for express and other types of transport which they seek to carry. The "Memorandum of Understanding" into which the companies entered about three weeks before REA [1765] agreed to Greyhound's 20% stock acquisition contemplates efficiencies and savings through consolidation of facilities for terminal service, of garages, and of communications, advertising and sales forces. These changes might therefore realize large savings for both REA and Greyhound, and in this way and other ways significantly strengthen their competitive position. And the Memorandum expresses a determination to engage in aggressive action to capture larger shares of express and transport business, especially by utilizing Greyhound's bus operations as a complement to [919] REA's air and rail service. "The consolidation of effort by the two companies," the Memorandum states, "would create a new market with revenue opportunity arising from a complete package express service to the public." The "new ability" of the air express service to reach off-airline points would [*34] add significantly to REA and Greyhound revenues, and the new market would have an estimated growth potential of 10% per year. Similarly, rail-bus service was expected to generate millions in "new business," and to "create a new capability for the two carriers to compete in the ltl [less-than-load] market. The only foreseeable limitation to the [*504] growth of this service would be the physical space limitations of Greyhound's fleet."

There is nothing in the record to rebut the allegations of many of the appellants that cooperation between Greyhound and REA of the sort contemplated by the Memorandum aided by the 20% stock acquisition will result in serious harm to appellants individually and to the public interest which they serve. The freight forwarders fear a great reduction in their business, as do the bus companies. Some of the bus companies, which engage in commuter transport, claim that Greyhound-REA cooperation would deprive them of their express business, and that, since that business makes economically feasible their commuter operations, would compel the termination of services essential to the public interest.

LEdHN[17][] [17] [*35] It cannot be said with assurance that deferral of consideration of the anticompetitive issues will in no way prejudice appellants or the public interest. The fact that the railroads presently control the REA Board of Directors is hardly relevant to that question. It is not the possibility of control that may prejudice appellants and the public interest, but simply the fact that with Greyhound holding 20% of REA's stock there is likely to be immediate and continuing cooperation between the companies, cooperation which appellants claim will be to their detriment and which the Government concedes may be against the public interest. If appellants are correct, and if such an alliance would in fact be against the public interest, then § 7 of the Clayton Act requires that it be stopped in its incipiency. Cf. FTC v. Dean Foods Co., 384 U.S. 597, 606, n. 5.

We are told that REA is in need of funds, and that ICC approval of the 20% stock acquisition assures that REA will obtain capital and gain a measure of independence from the railroads. There is certainly support for the position that REA needs to free "itself from the [*505] control and domination previously [*36] exercised by its railroad shareholders over its operations." 80 ICC Ann. Rep., p. 22 (1966). The strong ties between REA and the railroads led to the operation of REA in the railroads' own interests, without regard to their coincidence with REA's best interests or the public interest. Prior to a 1959 agreement, generated in large part by REA losses, see Express Contract, 1959, supra, 308 I. C. C., at 546, REA was required to distribute traffic among carriers on the basis of existing traffic patterns, and the consent of rail carriers operating between given points was required before REA could utilize carriers other than railroads between those points. Changes in these limitations have enabled REA to finance [1766] some improvements and steadily to increase its corporate surplus. Study of REA Express, [920] Staff Liaison Group V-C, CAB, FMC & ICC 24-26 (1965). But it does not follow that REA will be any better off in the long run, or that the public interest will be advanced, if its ownership shifts in part or entirely to Greyhound.

LEdHN[18][] [18]While the history of [*37] REA does not in itself provide a blueprint for its future, it does "afford a basis for considering the lawfulness of REA's status and activities, and the economic desirability of its apparent direction of growth." Study, op. cit. supra, at 3. That history indicates that there may be some relationship between REA's depressed state and its close ties with railroads. Before acting on this premise, however, the ICC must at least consider the question whether a given course of action will in fact alleviate the problem. If railroad ownership operated in the past to deprive REA of an opportunity to prosper and serve the public interest, it is not inconceivable that partial ownership by Greyhound will have the same result. Greyhound, presumably, is no less likely to act in its own interest. If the railroads operated REA, as appellees contend, to minimize competition for [*506] transport generally between REA and the railroads, and for express between the railroads themselves and between railroads and other modes of transport, how will partial or complete ownership by Greyhound change things? Even if only partial ownership results, may Greyhound and the railroad owners operate [*38] REA so as to minimize competition between REA and themselves for transport generally? What effect, for example, would partial ownership by Greyhound have upon the recent efforts of REA to add to its express operations the hauling of larger and more varied volumes of freight, efforts which bring it into competition with Greyhound and other bus lines as well as with truck lines and freight forwarders? Moreover, what assurance is there that REA will not tend to route shipments via Greyhound in preference to more efficient or economical carriers or modes, just as the railroads bound REA to use their lines as opposed to other modes, absent their approval? We assume that REA needs funds and would be better off more independent from the railroads, but before the ICC can use these reasons to justify a diversification of ownership it must at least consider whether the specific action approved may operate to the detriment of REA or the public interest.

LEdHN[19][] [19]There is, finally, little merit to the Government's argument that deferral of the anticompetitive issues is strongly supported by considerations of administrative [*39] convenience. The only circumstance in which the anticompetitive issues may be eliminated from the case is if Greyhound, thwarted at the end of the 60 days in its plans to control REA, were to dispose of its 20% interest. But the ICC can hardly justify deferral of consideration of the consequences of a transaction on the possibility that the problems its approval creates may shortly vanish by a reversal of the transaction itself. Of course, if, as appellees claim, it is most likely that Greyhound will [*507] acquire no further stock, then consideration of those consequences now would not be wasted effort. And the argument of wasted effort is still less persuasive if appellees are proved wrong and Greyhound does acquire more stock. For the most significant question which the ICC must face is whether it is in the public interest that REA continue to be owned by other transport companies, [921] and specifically by Greyhound. Once this question is resolved as to the 20% stock acquisition, and the consequences of that acquisition are fully weighed, the ICC's task in any subsequent proceeding if Greyhound enlarges its stock interest will be far more manageable.

LEdHN[20][] [20]We therefore conclude that, although the possibility that Greyhound may not increase its holdings within the 60-day [1767] period may justify deferral of resolution of the control issue, it does not justify delay in consideration of the anticompetitive effects of the 20% transaction. The Government was correct in its position before the ICC that this record placed "before the Commission serious questions under section 7 of the Clayton Act," requiring a hearing.

The judgment of the District Court is reversed with direction to enter a new judgment remanding the case to the Interstate Commerce Commission for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

It is so ordered.

Concur by: WHITE (In Part)

Dissent by: WHITE (In Part); HARLAN

Dissent

MR. JUSTICE WHITE, concurring in part and dissenting in part.

I agree with most of the Court's opinion, with its holding that competitive factors must be considered in a § 20a proceeding and with its ruling that a hearing should have been held by the Commission in this case before approving the issuance of the securities by Railway Express Agency, Inc., to Greyhound Corporation. [*41] [*508] But I am doubtful about those parts of the Court's opinion which indicate that although the public interest requires the consideration of competitive factors in connection with the issuance of stock under § 20a, the public interest also demands that if a lessening of competition is found or threatened within the meaning of § 7 of the Clayton Act, the issuance must be disapproved. Under § 5 of the Interstate Commerce Act, competitive factors must also be considered in determining the public interest, but there a balanced view of the public interest permits the approval of a merger or consolidation despite any actual or probable competitive impact. Mergers which would violate § 7 are thus permissible under § 5 if found in the public interest but only those acquisitions of stock which are not suspect under § 7 of the Clayton Act are permissible under § 20a.

In the last analysis the Court rests this rather odd distinction on the Act itself -- that is, Congress is said to have intended this very result because it provided in § 5 (11) that the approval of a transaction under § 5 relieves the parties from antitrust liability and did not so provide in connection with [*42] § 20a transactions. I do not think, however, that this ends the matter, and I find unconvincing the speculative reasons the Court gives for suggesting that Congress intended any such result.

Much more persuasive to me is the approach of Pan American World Airways v. United States, 371 U.S. 296. That case involved the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, 52 Stat. 973, re-enacted as the Federal Aviation Act of 1958, 72 Stat. 731, 49 U. S. C. § 1301 et seq., which provided antitrust immunity for transactions approved by the Civil Aeronautics Board under §§ 408, 409, and 412. The course of conduct attacked by the United States under § 1 of the Sherman Act in Pan American was not, however, within any of these sections. [922] The Court, nevertheless, held that the conduct was clearly of the kind [*509] specifically committed to regulation by the Board under other sections of the Act and was unassailable in an independent civil action brought by the United States under § 1 of the Sherman Act.

In the case before us, § 20a (2) provides that it shall be unlawful for any carrier to issue securities unless approved by the Commission [*43] after finding that the issuance:

"(a) is for some lawful object within its corporate purposes, and compatible with the public interest, which is necessary or appropriate for or consistent with the proper performance by the carrier of service to the public as a common carrier, and which will not impair its ability to perform that service, and (b) is reasonably necessary and appropriate for such purpose."

[1768] The Commission may grant an application under § 20a in whole or in part with such modifications and on such terms and conditions as the Commission may deem appropriate, and it may from time to time make such supplemental orders with respect to the transaction as it may deem necessary. § 20a (3). Moreover, it is expressly provided that "the jurisdiction conferred upon the Commission by this section shall be exclusive and plenary, and a carrier may issue securities and assume obligations or liabilities in accordance with the provisions of this section without securing approval other than as specified herein." § 20a (7).

Having these powers conferred upon it in the name of the public interest, the Commission may, in my view, approve the issuance of stock [*44] by a carrier if it deems the public interest requires it even though there may be a probable lessening of competition which otherwise would violate § 7 of the Clayton Act. This seems to be precisely what Congress intended by expressly providing in § 7 of the Clayton Act itself that "Nothing contained in this [*510] section shall apply to transactions duly consummated pursuant to authority given by the . . . Interstate Commerce Commission . . . under any statutory provision vesting such power in such Commission . . . ." 15 U. S. C. § 18.

It makes very little sense to me to hold that a stock acquisition involving control may be approved if the public interest requires it, despite any actual anticompetitive impact, and yet to forbid the approval of an acquisition which falls short of control but which "may" injure competition within the meaning of the Clayton Act.

Thus while I agree that a hearing should be required before the Commission approves the issuance of the securities in this case, I would make it clear that competitive considerations are only some of the factors to be weighed in reaching a decision concerning the public interest, much as the Court [*45] has viewed the proceedings under § 5. McLean Trucking Co. v. United States, 321 U.S. 67. At the very least I would not now decide that the Commission is powerless to approve the issuance of securities under § 20a if it determines that the impact on competition would otherwise be barred by the Clayton Act.

MR. JUSTICE HARLAN, whom MR. JUSTICE STEWART joins, dissenting.

This case involves a proposed stock issue by appellee Railway Express Agency, Inc. (REA), of 500,000 [923] shares of previously authorized but unissued shares of its common stock. Under § 20a (2) of the Interstate Commerce Act, 49 U. S. C. § 20a (2), this type of stock transaction must be authorized by the Interstate Commerce Commission, which must determine whether the issue is "for some lawful object within . . . [the applicant's] corporate purposes, and compatible with the public interest . . . ."

[*511] Under the proposed transactions REA contracted to sell this block of shares for $ 10,000,000 to the Greyhound Corporation, which would then offer to purchase within a 60-day period an additional 1,000,000 shares from existing stockholders, all of whom [*46] are railroads and all of whom hold rights of first refusal as to the sale of existing REA shares. Some of these railroad-stockholders have been opposed to Greyhound's entry into REA and have expressed their intention to exercise their pre-emptive rights. It is undisputed that if Greyhound nevertheless succeeds in purchasing these additional shares it would be in a position to exercise a substantial degree of control over REA, cf. Rochester Tel. Corp. v. United States, 307 U.S. 125, 145, and that such control would require the approval of the ICC under § 5 (2) of the Interstate Commerce Act, 49 U. S. C. § 5 (2). It was also alleged by the United States as an intervenor before the ICC that the possible exercise of control by Greyhound over REA and an anticipated [1769] co-ordination of certain services by the two carriers [1] raised serious antitrust questions under § 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. § 18, which the ICC is bound to enforce as to regulated carriers, Clayton Act § 11, 15 U. S. C. § 21.

[47] The Interstate Commerce Commission did not deal with the substance of these "control" and "antitrust" issues. It found that REA "urgently needs the proceeds of $ 10,000,000 . . . ," [2] and that it was not necessary, given [*512] the uncertainty as to the future relationship of Greyhound and REA, to deal with the control issue at that time. The Commission noted specifically that "if in the future the acquisition of control or power to control, or other matter or transaction to which section 5 of the act applies, becomes imminent or apparent, the opportunity will be available for all interested persons to interpose their opposition . . . ."

[48] On review, a three-judge District Court for the District of Colorado sustained the Commission's order, 255 F.Supp. 704. It read the ICC's decision, as does this Court, as saying only "that in the circumstances presented the public interest requires the issuance of the stock and [924] that determination of the competitive effects will be appropriate for consideration after the chain of events started by the stock issuance is ascertainable rather than conjectural." Id., at 709. The District Court then held that "in the circumstances it is not our prerogative to interfere with what we deem to be a reasonable exercise by the Commission of its discretionary powers." Id., at 710.

I would affirm this judgment of the District Court, and therefore must dissent from today's decision. The Court holds that "the ICC is required, as a general rule, under its duty to determine that the proposed transaction is in the 'public interest' and for a 'lawful object,' to consider the control and anticompetitive consequences before approving stock issuances under § 20a (2)." Ante, p. 498. The Court notes, however, that "this does not [*513] [*49] mean the ICC must grant a hearing in every case, or that it may never defer consideration of issues which arise when special circumstances are present," ibid., but concludes that while it was not an abuse of discretion to defer consideration of the "control" question raised by the intervenors, it was improper to refuse to deal with the "anticompetitive" issues at this stage. I believe that this decision misapplies the relevant statutes and seriously impedes sound administrative practice.

---

[1] The Commission found that REA had agreed "to consider seriously and work toward a long-term agreement between applicant [REA] and Greyhound to consolidate operating functions and facilities, and to cooperate in all lawful, feasible and jointly advantageous ways to effect economies, improve service and increase public receptivity and patronage . . . ." A "Memorandum of Understanding" between an official of each of the two companies contained some suggested methods for achieving these goals.

[2] The ICC's order dealing with the legitimacy of this transaction said: ". . . applicant urgently needs the proceeds of $ 10,000,000 in its program of acquiring and modernizing terminals and equipment in order to keep operating costs at a reasonable level; that it is handicapped in borrowing to finance capital improvements because of its unfavorable debt-equity ratio; that the proposed issue will improve its ratio as well as reduce to some extent the amount of future borrowing required; that the price of $ 20 per share is fair and reasonable; and that the expenses of the issue are estimated at $ 15,000 . . . ."

I.

Section 20a (2) of the Interstate Commerce Act is concerned with new stock issues. Congress' dominant concern was "to maintain a sound structure for the . . . support of railroad credit," [1770] 1 Sharfman, The Interstate Commerce Commission 190 (1931), [3] and nothing in the legislative background of the section indicates that the words "for some lawful object within its corporate purposes, and compatible with the public interest" were intended to encompass issues of antitrust law. Of course the phrase "the public interest" is broad, and in the context of other legislation comparable terms [*514] have been held to embrace antitrust matters. E. g., Federal Communications Act, [*50] § 307, 48 Stat. 1083, 47 U. S. C. § 307, as construed in FCC v. RCA Communications, Inc., 346 U.S. 86. But the mere inclusion of such language in this instance is not the end of our inquiry, for § 20a must be read in its entirety and interpreted in conjunction with other sections of the Act.

[51] In contrast to § 20a, which by its detailed and explicit terms deals only with the problem of fiscal responsibility, [4] [*52] § 5 of the Act, enacted [925] at the same time, [5] deals specifically with problems of "control." Indeed, the standards laid out in § 5 are directly relevant to the various factual issues hypothesized by the Court in Part IV of its opinion. Section 5 does not deal solely with transfers of shares, but with any lease or contract between two carriers for the operation of their properties, §§ 5 (2) (a)(i), 5 (4); see [*515] Gilbertville Trucking Co. v. United States, 371 U.S. 115, 125. It would thus appear that any type of agreement between Greyhound and REA for the integration of their operations would -- with or without the sale of shares -- fall within the purview of § 5.

Section 5 not only deals explicitly with problems of control, but it establishes the public interest criteria which the ICC is bound to use in making that type [1771] of inquiry. For example, the Commission must consider "(1) The effect of the proposed transaction upon adequate transportation service to the public; . . . (3) the total fixed charges resulting from the proposed transaction; and (4) the interest of the carrier employees affected." § 5 (2) (c). This Court has recognized that standards of market control in the transportation industry are different from those governing other business transactions: the ICC must take account of antitrust policy in judging the control questions under § 5, McLean Trucking Co. v. United States, 321 U.S. 67, but this interest is simply one of the relevant criteria, and if on balance the Commission finds a proposed undertaking to be in the public interest the statute authorizes a grant of antitrust immunity to the transaction. § 5 (11); [*53] Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. United States, 382 U.S. 154; Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. United States, 361 U.S. 173; McLean Trucking Co. v. United States, supra. Section 5 thus covers fully the problems of control; likewise, the antitrust issues are dealt with [3] The "public interest" of concern to Congress was the problem of watered stock. See, e. g., statement of Congressman Rayburn: ". . . if we write into the law of the land a statute to the effect that before a railroad can issue new securities, before it can put them on the market, it must come before the properly constituted governmental agency, lay the full facts of its financial situation before that body, tell that body what it intends to do with the money derived from the sale of the issue of securities, and after it has received the approval of that regulating body and it goes out and puts those securities on the market, then the Interstate Commerce Commission by this law is empowered at any time to call it to account and have it tell to that regulating body that it expended the money, the proceeds of the sale of securities, for the purposes for which it had made the application." 58 Cong. Rec. 8376 (1919). See also statement of Congressman Esch, id., at 8317-8318. See generally MacVeagh, The Transportation Act of 1920, at 486-492 (1923).

[4] Section 20a (2) reads in its entirety: "It shall be unlawful for any carrier to issue any share of capital stock or any bond or other evidence of interest in or indebtedness of the carrier (hereinafter in this section collectively termed 'securities') or to assume any obligation or liability as lessor, lessee, guarantor, indorser, surety, or otherwise, in respect of the securities of any other person, natural or artificial, even though permitted by the authority creating the carrier corporation, unless and until, and then only to the extent that, upon application by the carrier, and after investigation by the Commission of the purposes and uses of the proposed issue and the proceeds thereof, or of the proposed assumption of obligation or liability in respect of the securities of any other person, natural or artificial, the Commission by order authorizes such issue or assumption. The Commission shall make such order only if it finds that such issue or assumption: (a) is for some lawful object within its corporate purposes, and compatible with the public interest, which is necessary or appropriate for or consistent with the proper performance by the carrier of service to the public as a common carrier, and which will not impair its ability to perform that service, and (b) is reasonably necessary and appropriate for such purpose."

[5] Both sections were parts of the Transportation Act of 1920, 41 Stat. 480, 494.

specifically in § 11 of the Clayton Act, which authorizes the ICC to enforce § 7 of that Act, forbidding the acquisition of stock the effect of which "may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly." Hence these sections, and not § 20a, are the substantive provisions governing the Commission's jurisdiction in respect to the anticompetitive aspects of this case.

[*516] For procedural reasons, too, § 20a seems inappropriate as a vehicle to [926] replace or augment § 5 of the Interstate Commerce Act and §§ 7 and 11 of the Clayton Act. When a carrier applies for authorization to issue stock, the Commission must give notice to the various States in which the carrier operates so that relevant state regulatory agencies, which also supervise the finances and corporate structure of these companies, may raise objections to the proposed [*54] transaction. The Commission need not, however, hold a hearing before approving the transaction. § 20a (6). In contrast, when the ICC deals with problems of control under § 5, it is bound not only to notify the various state authorities but also to "afford reasonable opportunity for interested parties to be heard." § 5 (2)(b). And § 11 of the Clayton Act requires the Commission to notify the Attorney General if it believes that any carrier is violating § 7, and the Attorney General has the statutory right to intervene in the mandatory hearing on the question.

Given the complexities of control and antitrust problems in the transportation field, and given the specific and detailed provisions of the statute in § 5, and in § 11 of the Clayton Act, devoted particularly to them, it seems to me quite evident that the sounder view of the statutory scheme is to regard § 20a as being limited to matters of corporate financing and § 5 and § 7 as being the source of the Commission's authority and duty to deal with these other matters.

None of the Commission cases cited by the Court in support of its position that § 20a was envisioned as also encompassing control and antitrust considerations [*55] is apposite. Columbia Terminals Co. -- Issuance of Notes, 40 M. C. C. 288, dealt, as the Court notes, with § 10 of the Clayton Act, 15 U. S. C. § 20, which specifically requires common carriers in certain situations to sell securities "by competitive bidding under regulations to be prescribed by [*517] rule or otherwise by the Interstate Commerce Commission." The ICC merely held that this statute had not been repealed by § 20a. The general language cited by the Court from Stock of New Jersey, I. & I. R. Co., 94 I. C. C. 727, was written in a case in which the issue was whether the applicant railroad could pay an indebtedness to its sole stockholder, another railroad, through a distribution of stock as a dividend. The ICC held this method of financing acceptable; antitrust considerations were in no way involved.

[1772] The third ICC decision cited by the Court, Chesapeake & O. R. Co. Purchase, 271 I. C. C. 5, would seem, if anything, inconsistent with its view of § 20a. There the Commission was requested to approve an interlocking directorate, which is forbidden unless authorized by the Commission [*56] pursuant to § 20a (12) of the Interstate Commerce Act, 49 U. S. C. § 20a (12). In making its decision the Commission did not incorporate § 5 control standards into § 20a (12). Quite the contrary, it noted that "the policy of the Congress as to consolidations, mergers, and other forms of corporate unification and association is now to be found in the provisions of section 5," id., at 12; that no application under § 5 (2) had been filed; and that "it follows that the evidence pertaining to control of the New York Central or ultimate unification of the two carriers is irrelevant to the principal issues before us, and may not be considered in disposing of those issues." Ibid. The Commission then determined, under its established standards for judging the acceptability of an interlocking [927] directorate, id., at 18, that such an authorization would be improper, but observed that "if the applicants are firmly of the opinion that the proposed association will result in the benefits to the carriers and to the public which they contend we should find on the showing that they have made in this proceeding, there is [*57] no reason why they should not [*518] file an application for some form of association under section 5 (2) of the act." Id., at 41-42.

The lack of authority for the Court's view of § 20a is not limited to administrative decisions. In the complex Alleghany Corp. litigation, summarized by the Court, ante, pp. 497-498, this Court sustained the ICC's determination that it could act upon a § 20a application without involving itself in difficult issues of intercorporate control as the District Court had ordered. The protracted and tangled character of that litigation, until resolved in the interests of simplicity by this Court's affirmance of the ICC's approach, should be a warning of the unfortunate consequences that may follow judicial requirements complicating and proliferating administrative hearings in unfamiliar fields; this is especially so where there are, as here, numerous parties some of whom have a strong interest in achieving delay.

II.

Although not accepting the reading of the Act which I have urged, the Court nonetheless appears to recognize that the issue of "control" is a separate one from that of financial regularity, and one that [*58] can appropriately be dealt with in a separate and subsequent proceeding. Since the Court also acknowledges, as it must, that at this later hearing REA and Greyhound may request a § 5 (11) exemption, and thus bring into play all the standards of § 5, I find the Court's insistence that this issue falls within the purview of § 20a rather than § 5 essentially an academic one. The ICC will still be able to conduct its hearings just as it wished to do here, except that its subsequent "§ 5 proceeding" will henceforth be labeled a "§ 20a and § 5 proceeding."

Given the Court's recognition that the ICC has discretion to postpone the "control" determination, I find [*519] it difficult to accept its argument that "antitrust" factors may not similarly be postponed.

It should be recalled that the only matter raised in this application is REA's desire to issue 500,000 shares of its stock to "a non-railroad purchaser," which concededly would bring to the issuer capital funds required for investment purposes. Under the proposed transaction, after Greyhound purchases these shares it will extend an offer to purchase within 60 days an additional 1,000,000 shares, as to which other shareholders [*59] hold rights of first refusal. All parties are in agreement that control and antitrust problems will be raised if Greyhound is ultimately successful in effecting these [1773] additional purchases. The only question is whether the Commission can leave these questions for a later determination. Because of the uncertainty as to the outcome of the further stock purchase offer, the Court agrees that postponement of the control issue was proper. But this uncertainty is equally crucial to the Clayton Act issues. The likelihood of a Clayton Act violation will of course be increased if Greyhound obtains these additional shares and is in a position to control, and to consolidate operations with, REA. On [928] the other hand, if the shares are bought by some of the appellants whose interests appear to be adverse to Greyhound, the possibility of substantial harm to competition will be minimal. The core of the Clayton Act question, then, is inexorably tied to the control question, and the Court does not deny that these problems overlap. In these circumstances I find it impossible to follow the Court in holding, on the one hand, that the control hearing was permissibly postponed, [*60] but, on the other, that the ICC abused its discretion in similarly deferring any Clayton Act hearing.

To require such a proliferation of hearings as to a single transaction -- one involving a straightforward business [*520] transaction negotiated in terms of existing market conditions and the existing needs of the parties -- is bound to obstruct the smooth workings of the administrative process. The penetrating observations of Professor Jaffe seem to me especially pertinent in this situation:

"I gather the impression that some judges who quite insistently display a 'correct' attitude of deference on substantive issues apply a different standard to procedural decisions: they do not hesitate to protract and to complicate the administrative process. Their premise may be that the considerations that dictate deference to substantive decisions are inapplicable to procedural ones. This is only partly true. . . . Since procedural decisions should be made to serve the substantive task, it follows that expertness in matters of substance are relevant to the exercise of procedural discretion.

". . . [An agency] must ration its limited resources of time, energy and money. It [*61] must devote them to those exigent and soluble problems which are most nearly related to its core responsibility. What problems are most exigent, how they can best be solved . . . are questions the solution to which peculiarly demands a feeling for the whole situation. . . . If a court is not as well fitted to solve substantive problems as the agency, if on this level intermittent, disjected criticism disperses accountability, how much more is this true where the deployment of forces is involved." Jaffe, Judicial Control of Administrative Action 566-567 (1965).

The courts have traditionally permitted busy agencies substantial flexibility in formulating their internal procedures, and encouraged their efforts to eliminate duplicative action and repetitive hearings. See, e. g., Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., ante, pp. 341-343; [*521] Federal Power Comm'n v. Tennessee Gas Co., 371

U.S. 145, 153-155, where the Court approved a "two-step procedure" as "not only entirely appropriate but in the best tradition of effective administrative practice"; United States v. Pierce Auto Lines, 327 U.S. 515, 534-536; [*62] Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. United States, 386 U.S. 372, 459 (dissenting opinion); cf. Fahey v. Mallonee, 332 U.S. 245; Opp Cotton Mills v. Administrator, 312 U.S. 126, 152-154; United States v. Illinois Central R. Co., 291 U.S. 457.

[1774] The allowance of such flexibility, and the exercise of prudence by the courts, is especially appropriate where, as here, the issue is not [929] whether to hold a hearing but when to do so, and where there has been no showing that harm would come from deferring consideration of the antitrust issues. This is not a case in which a merger is about to be consummated, and in which it might be feared that the integration of two businesses will be impossible to "unscramble" at some future time. Compare FTC v. Dean Foods Co., 384 U.S. 597. These issues concern, as the Court's parade of speculative examples indicates, ante, pp. 505-506, the implications of a possible future co-ordination of some carrier services between REA and Greyhound. But these matters will only crystallize for purposes of legal analysis when it is ascertained [*63] (1) what type of control, if any, Greyhound will have over REA; and (2) what type of co-ordinated activities are planned. None of these issues has been prejudged, and provisional relief can be granted by the Commission, if necessary, §§ 5 (2), (7), (9); cf. Gilbertville Trucking Co. v. United States, 371 U.S. 115, 129-131. The district courts likewise have authority to grant injunctive relief on application of the Commission. § 5 (8).

In these circumstances I do not believe it was an abuse of discretion for the ICC to authorize the issuance [*522] of stock, postponing consideration of the control and antitrust issues until the transaction was completed some 60 days later. It is regrettable that the Court's preoccupation with the future antitrust possibilities of this situation, fully acknowledged by all but still entirely speculative, should have led it to interfere, so unnecessarily, with the obviously sensible course of procedure adopted by the Commission.

I would affirm the judgment of the District Court.

References

13 Am Jur 2d, Carriers 36

US Digest Anno, Interstate Commerce Commission 39, 41

ALR [*64] Digests, Interstate Commerce Commission 2, 5-8

L ed Index to Anno, Interstate Commerce Commission

ALR Quick Index, Carriers

Annotation References:

Construction, by Supreme Court of the United States, of 7 of the Clayton Act (15 USC 18), dealing with acquisition by one corporation of stock of another. 14 L ed 2d 784.

United States v. Reed Roller Bit Co.

United States District Court for the Western District of Oklahoma

June 22, 1967

Civil No. 66-248

Reporter

274 F. Supp. 573 *; 1967 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9347 ; 1967 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,146

United States v. Reed Roller Bit Co., American Machine & Foundry Co. and AMF American Iron, Inc.

Core Terms

drilling, manufacturer, merger, drill pipe, joints, sales, markets, collars, bit, expendable, drill collar, fluid, acquisition, lines, divestiture, rock, products, houses, seller, rigs, effective, commerce, reveals, drilling equipment, steel company, parties, producers, oil well, domestic, rescission

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN1[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

In an action brought under § 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §18, the basic questions are: (1) the relevant geographic market or "section of the country"; (2) the relevant product market or "line of commerce"; (3) the effect on competition within those relevant markets where the effect "may be substantially to lessen competition"; and (4) where violation is found, the appropriate relief to be ordered.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Horizontal Mergers

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Market Definition

HN2[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

A horizontal merger should be condemned if it produces a firm controlling an undue percentage of the relevant market, and results in a significant increase in the concentration of firms in that market in the absence of evidence clearly showing that the merger is not likely to have anticompetitive effects.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN3[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

To come within the failing firm doctrine, a defendant must meet the strict conditions for the failing condition of the acquired company. When a corporation's resources are so depleted and the prospect of rehabilitation so remote that it faces the grave probability of a business failure with resulting loss to its stockholders and injury to the communities where its plants are operated, the purchase of its capital stock by a competitor where there is no other prospective purchaser, not with a purpose to lessen competition, but to facilitate its business and with the effect of mitigating seriously injurious consequences otherwise probable, is not in contemplation of law prejudicial to the public and does not substantially lessen competition or restrain commerce within the intent of § 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 18. The failing company must be bankrupt or on the brink of bankruptcy.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Remedies

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Equity > Relief

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

HN4[] Civil Procedure, Remedies

The key to the whole question of an antitrust remedy is, of course, the discovery of measures effective to restore competition. The effectiveness of the remedy is the paramount consideration. The practicability and equitableness of the remedy may be considered and may be influential in selecting between two or more equally effective remedies. However, consideration of these factors will not permit a substitution of a less effective remedy for a more effective one. Courts of equity have broad remedial powers and are clothed with the large discretion to model their judgments to fit the exigencies of the particular case. Just as a merger must be viewed in the context of the particular market involved, its structure, history, and probable future, these considerations must also be taken into account in determining the appropriate relief.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Remedies

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

HN5[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

Procompetitive consequences in one market cannot be considered so as to outweigh the anticompetitive consequences in another market. At the same time, the fact that a merger has beneficial effects on competition in some markets is material to the type of relief to be decreed, where permitting the acquiring company to keep the assets relating to the market where competition has been increased will at least be as effective in restoring competition in the other markets that have been adversely affected by the merger.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > Clayton Act

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Antitrust Statutes > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Remedies

HN6[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

The absence of an intent to violate the antitrust law does not prevent a merger from violating § 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. §18, but the awareness of the parties that the merger is likely to be attacked has been considered relevant to the possibility of involving the seller in the order of relief.

Judges: [1] Luther B. Eubanks, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: EUBANKS

Opinion

[*574] Opinion or Memorandum of Decision

EUBANKS, United States District Judge.

On June 21, 1966, the United States instituted this action pursuant to section 15 of the Act of Congress of October 15, [*575] 1914 (38 Stat. 736; 15 U.S.C. § 25), as amended, commonly known as the Clayton Act, against Reed Roller Bit Company, American Machine & Foundry Company, and AMF American Iron, Inc., and alleged that the acquisition of AMF American Iron, Inc., by Reed Roller Bit Company violated section 7 of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. § 18). Section 7 provides in pertinent part as follows:

> That no corporation engaged in commerce shall acquire, directly or indirectly, the whole or any part of the stock or other share capital and no corporation subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission shall acquire the whole or any part of the assets of another corporation engaged in commerce, where in any line of commerce in any section of the country, the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly.

Simultaneously with the filing of this suit [2] the Government sought a preliminary injunction pursuant to Section 15 of the Clayton Act (38 Stat. 736; 15 U.S.C. § 25) to preliminarily enjoin defendant Reed Roller Bit Company and its agents from taking any actions which would alter in any way either the production facilities or the labor and management staff and which would enjoin defendant American Machine & Foundry Company from taking any action which would render it more difficult for AMF American Iron, Inc., to resume its operations.

On the motion of defendant Reed Roller Bit Company pursuant to Rule 65(a)(2) of Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the Court, with the Government's consent, consolidated the hearing on the Government's motion for a preliminary injunction and the trial on the merits. The trial of the case on the merits began on September 21, 1966, and after a recess concluded on November 8, 1966. At the conclusion of this trial, on motion of defendant Reed Roller Bit Company the Court, with the consent of defendant American Machine & Foundry Company and the Government, appointed a Special Master to inquire into and report on numerous features of this case. The report of the Special Master was filed with this [3] Court on March 16, 1967.

The Defendants

Reed Roller Bit Company (now G. W. Murphy Industries, Inc., but hereafter referred to as "Reed") is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Texas, and maintains its principal office and plant in Houston, Texas. As a manufacturer of certain oil well drilling equipment, Reed's primary product is rock bits. In 1965 Reed's rock bit sales amounted to $11,189,000 and accounted for approximately 12.6% of this market, making Reed the nation's fourth largest rock bit manufacturer. In the oil well drilling equipment field, Reed also manufactures tool joints and drill collars. In addition, Reed manufactures pneumatic tools and accessories, cast tungsten carbide products and oil metering devices. In addition to its principal plant, Reed maintains warehouse and service plants in Arkansas, Kansas, Oklahoma, California, Louisiana, Texas, Illinois, New Mexico, Wyoming, Mississippi, Edmonton (Alberta) Canada, Leiden (Netherlands), and Salvador, Bahia (Brazil). In 1965 Reed's total sales amounted to approximately $41,140,000.

American Machine & Foundry Company (hereafter referred to as AMF) is a corporation organized [4] and existing under the laws of the State of New Jersey, is a manufacturer of products including automatic pin spotting bowling machines, bicycles, bakery machinery, beverage dispensers, water purification systems, and various recreational supplies and equipment, food and tobacco processing machinery, and railroad tank and hopper cars. In 1955, AMF acquired American Iron & Machinery Works Company, a manufacturer of oil field drilling [*576] and production equipment, located in Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, which thereafter operated as a wholly owned subsidiary of AMF under the name "AMF American Iron, Inc." In 1965, AMF consolidated sales and rentals totaled approximately $385,000,000.

AMF American Iron, Inc. (hereafter referred to as " American Iron") was a corporation organized and which existed under the laws of the State of Delaware until it was dissolved on January 18, 1966. American Iron's 1964 total sales amounted to approximately $6,400,000. American Iron's product line included fluid end expendable parts (including pistons, rods, and liners), catheads (a type of winch), fishing tools, rig equipment, and various types of production tools. American Iron also manufactured [5] and sold tool joints and drill collars. While American Iron was named as a defendant, it was not served and did not answer, and it is not treated as a defendant in this case by the plaintiff.

THE ACQUISITION

AMF became dissatisfied with the economic performance of American Iron, and in 1959-60 AMF retained a business broker for the purpose of disposing of American Iron. Numerous prospects, including Reed, made studies of American Iron. However, there were no concrete offers. As will be discussed below, from AMF's standpoint, the economic performance of American Iron became increasingly unsatisfactory after 1959-60. Because of this condition, in 1965 Reed concluded that AMF would be receptive to offers to purchase the assets of American Iron. Reed's primary purpose in making the acquisition was to broaden its product line by the inclusion of the lines of oil well drilling equipment manufactured and sold by American Iron but not manufactured or sold by Reed. These non-competing lines accounted for approximately 50% of American Iron's gross sales and included primarily fluid end expendable parts. Although the fluid end expendable parts were the primary non-competing line that [6] Reed desired to acquire, American Iron also had other non-competing lines such as catheads (a type of winch), tongs, (performing the functions of a large wrench), kellys (a device that turns the drill pipe), power slips (a pipe gripping device), fishing tools (used to recover lost objects from the drilling hole), and other rig equipment and production tools were manufactured and sold by American Iron and were not competitive with Reed's lines. American Iron was a competitor of Reed in two lines: tool joints and drill collars.

When AMF was notified by its bank that Reed was a prospective purchaser, it assumed that Reed was merely seeking to obtain confidential information concerning American Iron's operation. This assumption was based on the fact that when AMF had previously attempted to sell American Iron, Reed had made inquiries in order to engage in such a fishing expedition. When AMF concluded that Reed's overtures were sincere, negotiations were begun. On or about November 2, 1965, Reed agreed with AMF to acquire all of the assets of American Iron for the sum of $4,100,000. This agreement was consummated and final payment was made on or about December 16, 1965.

The acquisition, [7] while not highly publicized, was not a secret transaction. It was well known to persons and companies involved in the drilling equipment and related industries and was reported in at least one trade publication. The evidence reveals that before making the purchase Reed discussed the acquisition with its customers in order to obtain their reaction. American Iron employees were notified of the proposed merger in November, 1965 and no suggestion was made that the transaction was secret.

HN1[] In an action brought under section 7 of the Clayton Act the basic questions are:

(1) The relevant geographic market (or "section of the country"); (2) the [*577] relevant product market (or "line of commerce"); (3) the effect on competition within those relevant markets (where the effect "may be substantially to lessen competition"); and (4) where violation is found the appropriate relief to be ordered.

RELEVANT MARKETS

The parties have agreed that the United States as a whole is the geographic market for the production and sale of both tool joints and drill collars and that in this nation-wide market the effects of the merger are to be measured.

The parties have also agreed that the two lines [8] of commerce or relevant product markets in which competition may be injured are the manufacture and sale of tool joints and drill collars.

EFFECT OF THE ACQUISITION

The great bulk of oil drilling in the United States is now accomplished by rotary drilling rigs. These rigs generally include at the lower end, a rock bit, a number of drill collars, many sections of drill pipe connected by tool joints and a "kelly" rotary drive stem at the drill floor. Tool joints and drill collars are essential to the modern method of oil well drilling. As a practical matter, the oil well drilling industry provides the exclusive market for tool joints and drill collars.

A "tool joint" is a coupling by which the numerous 30-foot lengths of drill pipe are connected. There are two types of tool joints in this country today - flash welded and threaded - the former accounting for the great bulk of the market.

Drill collars are heavy 30-foot lengths of heat treated alloy steel, drilled axially and integrally threaded, and joined in an assembly to furnish weight for the lower end of a rotary oil well drilling string, which weight forces the rock bit into the land formation and tends to stabilize the [9] drilling string. Drill collars are manufactured by drilling a hole in a 30-foot length of heat-treated steel bar and by threading each end of the bar.

The determination of the section 7 legality of a horizontal merger requires an evaluation of the basic facts relating to the number of companies in the appropriate relevant geographic and product markets and percentage shares of the parties to the merger. Thus the Government introduced detailed evidence regarding concentration and percentage shares in the tool joint and drill collar lines of commerce and the effect of the acquisition on concentration and these shares.

The flash welding of tool joints requires special equipment. A new flash welding machine with appropriate equipment installed in suitable quarters costs from approximately $400,000 to $750,000. In 1965, the demand for tool joints required only five flash welding machines in the United States. These were owned as follows:

Number of Machines	Owner	Location
2	Hughes Tool Company	Houston, Texas
1	Reed Roller Bit Company	Houston, Texas
1	AMF American Iron, Inc.	Oklahoma City, Okla.

Number of Machines	Owner	Location
1	National Supply Division, Armco Steel Corporation	Ambridge, Pennsylvania

[10] The 1965 sales of all tool joints in the United States of Hughes, Reed, American Iron, and National Supply Division of Armco Steel Corporation amounted to approximately $10,657,106 which was approximately 95% of all tool joints sold in the United States.

[*578] American Iron was the third largest producer and seller of tool joints in the United States. In 1965 American's sales in the United States and share of the total domestic industry sales were as follows:

	1965 Approximate Sales	Approximate Per Cent of Total Industry Sales
Flash welded tool joints	$ 1,356,000	14
Threaded and other non-flash welded tool joints	31,000	2
Total tool joints	$ 1,387,000	13

Reed was the second largest producer and seller of tool joints in the United States. In 1965 Reed's sales in the United States and share of total domestic industry sales were as follows:

	Approximate Sales	Approximate Per Cent of Industry Sales
Flash welded tool joints	$ 3,356,000	36
Threaded and other non-flash welded tool joints	392,000	26
	$ 3,748,000	35.2

In 1965 there were seven significant producers and sellers [11] of drill collars in the United States whose sales in this country totaled approximately $7,752,670 or approximately 96 per cent of the total sales in this country. American Iron was the fifth largest producer and seller of drill collars in the United States. In 1965 American Iron's sales in the United States and share of total domestic industry sales were as follows:

	Approximate Sales	Approximate Per Cent of Industry Sales
Drill Collars	$ 842,000	10.4

Reed was the second largest producer and seller of drill collars in the United States. In 1965 Reed's sales in the United States and share of total domestic industry sales were as follows:

	Approximate Sales	Approximate Per Cent of Total Industry Sales
Drill Collars	$ 1,580,000	19.6

The controlling decision of the Supreme Court with regard to an analysis of such market data is United States v. Philadelphia Nat'l Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 10 L. Ed. 2d 915, 83 S. Ct. 1715 (1963). There the Court stated that HN2[] a horizontal merger should be condemned if it:

> "produces a firm controlling an undue percentage of the relevant market, and results in a significant increase in [12] the [*579] concentration of firms in that market . . . in the absence of evidence clearly showing that the merger is not likely to have . . . anticompetitive effects."

In Philadelphia National Bank the Court condemned the merger of the second and third largest banks in the relevant market resulting in a combination controlling 30% of the commercial banking business in that market. Other decisions have demonstrated that where the industry is already concentrated or there are trends toward concentration, mergers resulting in even smaller market shares may be unlawful. .e.g., United States v. Aluminum Company of America, 377 U.S. 271, 277-278, 12 L. Ed. 2d 314, 84 S. Ct. 1283 (1964); and United States v. Von's Grocery Co., 384 U.S. 270, 277, 16 L. Ed. 2d 555, 86 S. Ct. 1478 (1966).

In the present case the merger of the second and third largest producers and sellers of tool joints eliminates one of four flash welded tool joint manufacturers, and would rank the Reed-American Iron combination first in the industry with approximately 48% of the total market. Likewise, the merger of two of the largest five producers and sellers of drill collars eliminates one of seven significant [13] producers and sellers of drill collars (having approximately 96% of the total U.S. sales), and produces a combination that would rank second in the industry with approximately 30% of the total United States market. Accordingly, this Court finds that the acquisition by Reed of the tool joint and drill collar operations of American Iron is unlawful.

Reed takes the position that there is evidence that prevents the merger from being unlawful. It urges that in the Supreme Court's landmark decision in Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510, 82 S. Ct. 1502 (1962), the Court balanced its finding of illegality with the conclusion that there may be "mitigating factors" that would save a merger:

> "[Such] as the business failure or the inadequate resources of one of the parties that may have prevented it from maintaining its competitive position . . . [or] a demonstrated need for combination to enable small companies to enter into a more meaningful competition with those dominating the relevant markets." 370 U.S. 294 at 346, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 1535.

Likewise, the Court had stated that the statute was not to impede a merger resulting in a concern that could [14] compete more effectively, or "a merger between a corporation which is financially healthy and a failing one which no longer can be a vital competitive factor in the market." (370 U.S. 294 at 319, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 1521.) The Court further noted that the condemned merger did not produce "any countervailing competitive, economic, or social advantages" (370 U.S. 294 at 334, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 1529). Reed further asserts that subsequent decisions of the Court such as United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 10 L. Ed. 2d 915, 83 S. Ct. 1715 (1963), have mentioned that defenses such as a "failing firm" could have application and noted that the parties were "healthy and strong; they are not undercapitalized or overloaded; they have no management problem; the Philadelphia area is not over-banked; ruinous competition is not in the offing." Emphasizing that the Supreme Court's decisions under section 7 have involved vigorous and healthy concerns operating in expanding industries, Reed argues that there are numerous economic benefits accruing from the merger of companies engaged in unhealthy and declining markets. In this connection, it asserts that the Supreme Court has not limited [15] the often-mentioned "failing firm" defense to situations involving officially or clear-cut insolvent or bankrupt concerns. It argues that the principle of the considerations favoring the failing firm doctrine is equally applicable in a situation where a company has experienced very unsatisfactory performance, can no longer maintain its competitive position, and will [*580] not be a significant competitive factor in the market. In support of its broad failing or declining firm defense, Reed presented detailed economic evidence in an attempt to show that the acquisition in question has "mitigating factors." The following outlines the basis of Reed's contention and sets forth the facts that this Court believes are amply supported by the evidence.

A. Decline of the Domestic Drilling Industry.

Before 1955, AMF had no significant interest in the petroleum equipment industry. In that year, however, a decision was made to enter into the manufacture and sale of oilfield drilling equipment and AMF acquired the assets of American Iron, a company that was primarily engaged in the production of fluid end expendable parts, tool joints and drill collars. Virtually the entire demand [16] for these products comes from oil and gas drilling contractors. Approximately 85% of American Iron sales were in the domestic market, and the success of the company depends upon the prosperity of the domestic drilling industry which, in turn, depends upon the health of the domestic oil and gas producing industry.

Neither party attempted to introduce evidence relating to industry sales for tool joints and drill collars over a period of years. Substantial amounts of evidence were, however, introduced relating to drilling activity. By and large, if productivity is taken into consideration, the trend in drilling activity is, in the opinion of the Court, persuasive evidence as to the trend in the sale of tool joint and drill collars - products that have practically their only use on the drilling rig.

In contrast to the general economic prosperity enjoyed in the last decade by the nation as a whole, drilling activity has suffered sharp declines in recent years both in terms of the number of wells completed and the total footage drilled. For example, in 1966, 9,466 exploratory wells were drilled. This may be compared with 13,178 exploratory wells drilled in 1959, 16,207 in 1956, and [17] 13,100 in 1954. Additionally, there were 28% fewer development wells drilled in 1966 than were drilled in 1954. The decrease in rig activity is even more substantial. In 1957 there were 2,429 rotary rigs active in the domestic drilling market. This figure has steadily declined: In 1958 there were 1,923 rigs; in 1959 there were 2,074 rigs; in 1960 there were 1,750 rigs; and in 1962 there were 1,636 rigs; in 1964 there were 1,502 rigs; and in 1966 there were 1,273 rotary rigs active in the United States. This diminished drilling activity is also reflected in the total footage drilled. In 1957 there were 223,087,000 feet drilled as compared with 190,703,000 in 1960, 184,357,000 in 1963, and 159,377,000 in 1966. The decline in domestic drilling activity is a result, largely of substantial increases in oil imports and the industry opinion that the price for oil and gas is too low to justify continuation of past levels of exploration activity. Without respect to the merits of the justifications given for the decline in drilling activity, there can be no doubt that this has occurred, and that there is no basis for predicting an increase in drilling activity.

The effect of this decline [18] has necessarily been to decrease the demand for tool joints and drill collars. Simultaneous with this decrease in demand, the productivity of these products has been considerably increased by the tool joint and drill collar manufacturers. The evidence reveals that in the last ten years the economic life of a string of drill pipe with tool joints attached has increased 100 to 150%.

At the same time that the domestic drilling activity has suffered the decline described above the midcontinent area, which American Iron was best able to serve, has experienced even greater decreases in drilling activity. From 1956 to 1965 the number of wells completed in the midcontinent area has decreased 46%. During the same period of time the number of exploratory wells completed [*581] has declined approximately 57%. In 1965 there were 141 operating rotary rigs in Oklahoma as compared to 243 rigs in 1957. The rig count today is less than 100. Decreased exploratory activity will be followed by decreased drilling of development wells. While the midcontinent area has experienced the above-described decline in drilling activity, the Texas-Louisiana Gulf Coast area has experienced relatively [19] stable drilling activity and in some recent years there have been small increases.

B. The Position of American Iron.

In 1955 when AMF acquired American Iron, American Iron had a sales volume of approximately $9.5 million. In 1956 its sales had increased to about $10 million. As a result of the decline in drilling activity described above, American Iron suffered loss years in 1958 and 1960. In 1962, the company had earnings of $27,480 on $6,178,072 total sales. In 1963 it incurred a loss of $70,037 on $6,081,387 total sales; in 1964 it had a profit of $166,091 on $6,412,069 total sales; and in the first ten months of 1965 American Iron had earnings of $104,001. The tool joint and drill collar operations have been particularly unsuccessful. For example, the drill collar operation produced a $157,699 loss in 1964 and $126,840 loss during the first ten months of 1965. The tool joint operations produced profits of $10,908 in 1964 and produced a loss of $6,790 during the first ten months of 1965. Thus, in 1962 American Iron's pretax return on assets employed was.5%; in 1963 this return was a loss of 1.5%; in 1964 this return was 4.3%; and for the ten months ended October 31, [20] 1965, the rate of return was 3.1%.

The decline in American Iron's performance was attributable in large part to the decline in drilling activity - the industry providing the sole market for tool joints and drill collars. Because of its geographical location American Iron has suffered much more from diminished drilling activities than have the other manufacturers in these markets. American Iron definitely does not have as good a location to serve the Texas-Louisiana Gulf Coast markets as do most other manufacturers of the products here involved. The same is true with respect to foreign sales. At a minimum, American Iron incurred annual freight absorption costs of $25,000.

As a consequence of its unsatisfactory performance, American Iron began a program of "retrenchment". The number of sales personnel was reduced to 25 and more importantly its research and development efforts were practically eliminated.

The aspect of American Iron's operation that has been given most emphasis by defendants is the absence of an adequate supply of drill pipe. In order to understand this contention it is necessary to briefly review the marketing process relating to tool joints and drill pipe. [21] Drill pipe is, of course, the equipment to which tool joints are attached. The major manufacturers of drill pipe are the major steel companies. Prior to 1966, the steel companies sold the drill pipe to supply houses which are the major sellers of drilling equipment to the driller. The supply houses maintained the stock of drill pipe that they had acquired in the storage yards of the various tool joint manufacturers. When a supply house received an order for drill pipe it would notify a tool joint manufacturer (the one specified by the driller if one was specified) of the order. The tool joint manufacturer having possession of the supply houses' drill pipe would attach its tool joints to the drill pipe. The drill pipe with tool joints attached would then be shipped from the plant of the tool joint manufacturer. The availability of an adequate supply of each manufacturer's drill pipe was thus necessary to the operation of a tool joint manufacturer. Ordinarily, time is of the essence in the sale of drill pipe and tool joints and accordingly the sales must be made by a tool joint manufacturer having immediate access to a supply of drill pipe.

[*582] Not long before the merger, [22] a change in the system of marketing occurred. The major steel companies began marketing the pipe by storing the pipe themselves in the yards of the tool joint manufacturers in Houston. From the standpoint of the tool joint manufacturer, this was essentially the same arrangement as existed under the earlier practice when the supply house owned the drill pipe. As a practical matter, the only difference is that the steel companies owned the drill pipe stored in the yards of the tool joint manufacturer, rather than the supply houses.

The critical difference between the present system of marketing and that existing prior to 1966 is that the major steel companies - United States Steel, Pittsburgh Steel Company, Armco Steel Corporation, Youngstown Sheet and Tube Company, and Jones & Laughlin Steel Company - concluded that the demand for drill pipe in the Oklahoma City area was not sufficient to justify storing drill pipe with the tool joint manufacturer there, American Iron. The steel companies arrived at this decision on the basis of the same economic data discussed above relating to diminished drilling activity in the area. Their experience was that the very low turnover rate on drill [23] pipe could not economically justify the maintenance of pipe inventories in Oklahoma City.

As a result, the American Iron tool joint operation in Oklahoma City, which had always had difficulty gaining access to an adequate supply of drill pipe, was faced with the prospect of losing practically all of its sales. Without the supply of drill pipe in its yards, supply houses in the area selling drill pipe would order the pipe through Houston, Texas, where the drill pipe was located. There the Houston tool joint manufacturers would attach the tool joints to the drill pipe and ship them into the midcontinent area. The supply houses in the midcontinent area, many of which are owned by the steel companies manufacturing drill pipe, would continue to sell the drill pipe of the manufacturers electing to maintain supplies of drill pipe only in Houston, Texas. They will not buy the drill pipe since this would be an unnecessary inventory expense.

As noted earlier, the decision of the steel companies was based on the substantial decline in drilling activity and the absence of any prospects for improvement. Should the demand for drill pipe increase substantially, steel companies would of course [24] react by storing drill pipe in Oklahoma City. The evidence reveals, however, that at the present time the steel companies do not foresee an improvement in the drilling activity and do not plan to store drill pipe in Oklahoma City. Thus, because of conditions beyond its control - the availability of a supply of drill pipe - American Iron was faced with the loss of most of its tool joint sales. Since the acquisition and during the period of continuation of the American Iron plant, on several occasions Reed has unsuccessfully tried to induce the steel companies to stock drill pipe in Oklahoma City by offering to defray their freight charges.

During the trial the most serious factual disagreement between the Government and the defendants related to the availability of drill pipe in Oklahoma City and the ability of the American Iron operations to be maintained there. The Government took the position that the tool joint operations could be and should be maintained in Oklahoma City. Its evidence in that regard was not persuasive. Since the trial, the Government has altered its position and now "concedes that the [lack of an adequate stock of drill pipe in Oklahoma City] would probably [25] necessitate transfer of the tool joint operations to the Houston area." Thus the Government conceded the undesirability of Oklahoma City as a locale for tool joint and drill collar operations and agreed to the removal of the American Iron tool joint and drill collar facilities to Houston, Texas.

In contrast to Reed's position, the Government makes a number of contentions, and the following facts are amply [*583] supported by the evidence. Although the profits were small at the time of the acquisition, American Iron was earning a profit. While the company has experienced losses, it did have a net income in most years since AMF's acquisition. There is no doubt that the low return was not one that would attract capital, but at the same time there was not a net loss. In the five years preceding the acquisition American Iron had not found it necessary to borrow funds from the parent organization. While American Iron sales dropped rather drastically from the mid 1950's to the early 1960's, during the 1960's American Iron sales remained relatively constant. The number of hourly employees of American Iron actually increased from December 31, 1961, to December 31, 1965, and the [26] number of salaried employees decreased only slightly. As earlier discussed, AMF had attempted to sell American Iron in 1959-60. There was no showing that AMF attempted to sell American Iron after 1960 until Reed expressed its interest. This was probably because American Iron conditions had grown steadily worse and AMF had concluded that there was no basis for trying to sell the business, particularly in light of the undesirable effect the earlier attempt had had on employee morale. Although it is not particularly surprising or important, AMF's annual reports fail to disclose critical comments concerning American Iron. The only comments made generally tended to be complimentary. The evidence reveals that American Iron's labor force was sufficient, its products were well regarded in the trade, and its general manager, Elmer Rueback, was regarded as a capable executive. In short, the evidence generally reveals that the primary difficulty with American Iron's operations were external and not attributable to the internal operations of the company.

The most significant disparity in the views of the parties is with regard to the scope of the failing firm defense. The Government rejects [27] Reed's broad failing or declining firm defense and asserts that HN3[] to come within the failing firm doctrine, a defendant must meet the strict conditions for the failing condition of the acquired company as set out in International Shoe v. Federal Trade Commission, 280 U.S. 291, 74 L. Ed. 431, 50 S. Ct. 89 (1930). In that case the failing company had sustained a $6 million loss in the year prior to the acquisition leaving a net treasury deficit of over $4,382,000. In the year of the acquisition, the company had debts in excess of $17 million, had suffered about 15% decline in production, had halted dividend payments on common and second preferred stock, and was discontinuing dividends on its first preferred stock, and would under Massachusetts law have to file an annual financial statement that would disclose a condition of official insolvency. The officers of the company had concluded that the only alternatives were liquidation through a receiver or outright sale. The Company could no longer pay its debts as they became due. Thus the Supreme Court held:

> "In light of the case thus disclosed of a corporation with resources so depleted and the prospect of rehabilitation so remote [28] that it faced the grave probability of a business failure with resulting loss to its stockholders and injury to the communities where its plants were operated, we hold that the purchase of its capital stock by a competitor (there being no other prospective purchaser), not with a purpose to lessen competition, but to facilitate the accumulated business of the purchaser and with the effect of mitigating seriously injurious consequences otherwise probable, is not in contemplation of law prejudicial to the public and does not substantially lessen competition or restrain commerce within the intent of the Clayton Act." 280 U.S. 291 at 302, 50 S. Ct. 89, 93.

The Government further cites United States v. Diebold, Inc., 369 U.S. 654, 8 L. Ed. 2d 176, 82 S. Ct. 993 (1962), the only case called to my attention decided by the Supreme Court involving the failing [*584] company doctrine since International Shoe. There the Supreme Court overturned a district court ruling that the defendant was entitled to a summary judgment under the failing firm doctrine because the Court found the record raised genuine issues of fact on two key findings that: (1) The acquired company was hopelessly [29] insolvent and faced with imminent receivership and that (2) the acquiring concern was the only bona fide prospective purchaser for the acquired business.

Subsequent lower court decisions have demonstrated the necessity that the failing company be bankrupt or on the brink of bankruptcy, United States v. Maryland & Virginia Milk Producers Association, Inc., 167 F. Supp. 799 (D.D.C. 1958), rev'd in part on other grounds 362 U.S. 458, 80 S. Ct. 847, 4 L. Ed. 2d 880 (1960), and the fact that the company had decided to liquidate is not enough to create a "failing company" situation unless the company's economic condition was as a practical matter beyond the prospect of rehabilitation. Erie Sand & Gravel Co. v. FTC, 291 F.2d 279 (3d Cir. 1961).

In the opinion of the Court, Reed's "failing firm" defense must fail. Although it is true that American Iron's poor performance made it a most unattractive subsidiary, it was not near bankruptcy, and it does not appear that it would have been in the absence of merger. The question is a close one, particularly in light of the fact that the tool joint operation would not have been able to continue in Oklahoma City and AMF had earlier decided it [30] could not justify the capital outlay required to move it to Houston, Texas. Nevertheless, the case does not fit the traditional mold. While it is true that AMF had been unsuccessful in its earlier attempt to sell American Iron, the evidence does not show that Reed was the only prospective purchaser of the company. In summary, Reed has failed to carry its burden of showing that American Iron came within the strict test of International Shoe. Until the Supreme Court actually approves a merger on facts such as are involved in the present case, this Court is constrained to hold that the failing firm defense asserted by Reed is not applicable here. [1] [31] This is not to say that the evidence submitted with regard to the condition of the industry and the particular problems of American Iron is not important to this case, and it should be noted that it has important application to the question of relief.

Relief

---

[1] Thus, it is unnecessary to decide whether the failing company doctrine extends to the sale of an unprofitable subsidiary of a prosperous parent company. It would seem that most of the justifications for the doctrine would be equally applicable to such a situation and that the doctrine if otherwise applicable should be applied, but see In the Matter of Farm Journal, Inc., 53 FTC 26 (1956), affirmed by the Commission, 53 FTC 52 (1956), where the hearing examiner found that a publication sold by Curtis Publishing Company to a competitor had been a losing venture while Curtis was making money from other ventures, and concluded that the merger was not protected by International Shoe. The examiner stressed the fact that Curtis could have "modernized" the publication or could have found other purchasers.

The fact that Reed's primary objective in acquiring American Iron was to obtain the fluid end expendable portion of the business has no relevancy to the legality of the merger or, for that matter, to the type of relief to be ordered.

Having determined that the effect of the merger may be substantially to lessen competition in the tool joint and drill collar markets, the Court now turns to a determination of the appropriate relief. In the section 7 case of United States v. Du Pont de Nemours & Co., 366 U.S. 316 at 323-324, 6 L. Ed. 2d 318, 81 S. Ct. 1243 (1961), the Supreme Court stated:

> "The proper disposition of antitrust cases is obviously of great public importance, and their remedial phase, more often than not, is crucial. For [*585] the suit has been a futile exercise if the Government proves a violation but fails to secure a remedy adequate to redress it . . . If this decree accomplishes less than the Government has won a lawsuit and lost a cause."

Thus, the Court stated the standard to be followed in rectifying a section 7 violation.

> HN4[] "[The] key to the whole question of an antitrust remedy is, of course, the discovery [32] of measures effective to restore competition."

Under the Court's decision, the effectiveness of the remedy is the paramount consideration. The practicability and equitableness of the remedy may be considered and may be influential in selecting between two or more equally effective remedies. However, consideration of these factors will not permit a substitution of a less effective remedy for a more effective one.

Keeping in mind the above mandate of the Supreme Court, it is appropriate to note that courts of equity have broad remedial powers and "are clothed with 'the large discretion to model their judgments to fit the exigencies of the particular case.' International Salt v. United States, 332 U.S. 392, 400-401, 92 L. Ed. 20, 68 S. Ct. 12, 17 (1946)." See also Hecht Co. v. Bowles, 321 U.S. 321, 329, 88 L. Ed. 754, 64 S. Ct. 587 (1944). Moreover, it would seem that just as "[A] merger must be viewed in the context of the particular market involved, its structure, history, and probable future," United States v. Continental Can Co., 378 U.S. 441, 458, 12 L. Ed. 2d 953, 84 S. Ct. 1738, 1748 (1964), these considerations must also be taken into account in determining the appropriate [33] relief.

This case involves a merger of two companies that did not compete in all of the markets in which each was engaged. A discussion of the treatment that may be accorded a merger that is inoffensive with respect to some of the markets that are involved may be found in the Supreme Court's decision in Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 335-338, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510, 82 S. Ct. 1502 (1962). There the court discussed the possibility of an acquisition where the competitive overlap of the merging companies is not complete. The absence of overlap discussed there related to geographical markets while in the present case the absence of competitive overlap relates to product markets. However, the principle expressed there should apply equally to this case. The court stated:

> "The fact that two merging firms have competed directly on the horizontal level in but a fraction of the geographic markets in which either has operated, does not, in itself, place the merger outside the scope of § 7. That section speaks of 'any indicated * * * section of the country,' and if anticompetitive effects of a merger are probable in 'any' significant market, the merger - at least to that [34] extent - is proscribed. (370 U.S. 294 at 337, 82 S. Ct. 1502 at 1530)
>
> "To illustrate: If two retailers, one operating primarily in the eastern half of the nation, and the other operating largely in the West, competed in but two midwestern cities, the fact that the latter outlets represented but a small share of each company's business would not immunize the merger in those markets in which competition might be adversely affected. On the other hand, that fact would, of course, be properly considered in determining the equitable relief to be decreed. Cf. U.S. v. Jerrold Electronics Corp. 187 F. Supp. 545 (E.D. Pa. 1960), aff'd, 365 U.S. 567, 5 L. Ed. 2d 806, 81 S. Ct. 755 (1961)." (370 U.S. at 337 n. 65, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 1530)

The Court seems to leave room for the possibility that the merger would be proscribed only to the extent of the competing lines - here tool joints and drill collars. However, regardless of the manner of describing the violation it would seem that the question raised by the Court's language is: How, or in what [*586] manner, should the fact that some markets involved herein are not adversely affected be "properly considered" in determining the [35] equitable relief to be decreed?

There is no doubt that under the E. I. du Pont II decision, 366 U.S. 316, 6 L. Ed. 2d 318, 81 S. Ct. 1243, proper consideration of the fact that a merger may not have anticompetitive effects in some markets would mean that divestiture may be confined to the operations in the markets adversely affected only where this form of divestiture is at least equally effective as any other form of relief. If it is equally or more effective, such divestiture of part of the assets may be appropriate. There are other reasons, as are discussed below, that support the granting of a partial divestiture, but these can have weight and are given weight only because partial divestiture on the facts of this case is equally as effective as the alternative remedies available. [2]

In the present case, the evidence shows and this Court is of the firm opinion that the inclusion of the "noncompeting" lines of commerce in the order of divestiture would not aid the restoration of competition in the tool joint and drill collar industries. Divestiture by Reed of the tool joint and drill collar operations will restore competition in these markets and is the form of relief [36] best suited to this end.

[37] The Government brought this action alleging anticompetitive effects in the tool joint and drill collar markets. Although American Iron was also engaged in other markets, principally the fluid-end expendable parts market, no allegation has ever been made that this aspect of the merger is undesirable. Thus the question of relief turns largely on the practicability and desirability of divesting only the tool joint and drill collar operations.

There are probably some advantages and economies that result from the manufacture and sale of tool joints and drill collars together with the manufacture and sale of American Iron's other products. In fact it definitely appears that the sale of tool joints and drill collars are facilitated when they are marketed with other oil well drilling equipment. However, the record reveals no reason to believe that the tool joint and drill collar operations can be or must be best utilized with the particular product lines previously engaged in by American Iron. The evidence is to the contrary. Numerous other companies engaged in the manufacture of oil well drilling equipment other than fluid-end expendable parts can obtain the same advantages and economies [38] derived from the marketing of multiple products. The fact that the manufacture of these products need not be in conjunction with the manufacture and sale of fluid-end expendable parts is demonstrated by the fact that the only three firms of the top fifteen firms, which three firms hold 22.5% of the market, are engaged in [*587] the sale of fluid-end expendable parts and/or tool joints and drill collars. If the sale of the tool joint and drill collar facilities were for some reason limited to a firm not already in the old well drilling equipment industry the effectiveness of this relief would be highly questionable. However, there are a very substantial number of companies engaged in the oil well drilling equipment industry that are potential purchasers and that can utilize their previously established businesses to profitably manufacture and sell tool joints and drill collars. These companies are presently incurring many costs that can be allocated or spread to tool joints and drill collars operations. Such a company will have an established reputation and expertise as a manufacturer and marketer in the oil field drilling equipment industry. Thus, the manufacture and sale [39] of tool joints and drill collars by such a company will benefit from these attributes.

---

[2] Partial divestiture has been ordered by both the courts and the Federal Trade Commission. Decisions of the Commission are especially illustrative of the use of the doctrine since the FTC is required to order divestiture whenever it finds a violation of section 7. See United States v. Continental Can Co., 1964 TRADE CASES para. 71,264 (S.D.N.Y. 1964); Union Carbide Corp., TRADE REGULATION REPORTS (Transfer Binder, 1961-1963) para. 15,503 (1961); Brillo Mfg. Co., FTC Docket No. 6557, 3 CCH TRADE REGULATION REPORTS para. 16,543 (1963); Ekco Products Co., 3 CCH TRADE REGULATION REPORTS para. 16,956 (FTC Docket No. 8122 (1964)); Lone Star Cement Corp., TRADE REGULATION REPORTS (Transfer Binder, 1953-55) para. 17,183 (1965); United States v. Hilton Hotels Corp., TRADE CASES P68,523 (N.D. Ill. 1956); Scoville Mfg. Co., 53 FTC 260 (1956); United States v. Meremount Automotive Products, 1960 CCH TRADE CASES P69,881 (1960); United States v. Hertz Corp., 1960 CCH TRADE CASES P69,762 (1960); Continental Baking Co., TRADE REGULATION REPORTS (Transfer Binder, 1961-1963) P15,886 (1962); Procter & Gamble Co., TRADE REGULATION REPORTS P17,858 (Consent Order February 9, 1957); United States v. Aluminum Ltd., 1966 TRADE CASES, (Consent Decree Nov. 4, 1966).

In addition, the evidence does not reveal that the operations of American Iron are so interrelated and noncompartmentalized that a divestiture of the tool joint and drill collar facilities would not be workable. The Special Master, who thoroughly studied American Iron's operations, found that the tool joint and drill collar operations were segregated from other American Iron operations and are susceptible to being separately divested. Moreover, subsequent to the trial of this cause, the plaintiff has agreed to a removal of both the tool joint and drill collar facilities to Houston, Texas. Plaintiff's concession to the removal of the tool joint and drill collar facilities is very significant. Earlier it had strenuously opposed this move, and much of the time the Government used in the trial of the case was devoted to showing that removal of these facilities was not required. Now it recognizes that "the necessities of the market" require this adjustment. While AMF has no Houston operations with which the tool joint and drill collar operations could be mixed, the Houston area is the primary business [40] location for most of the many drilling equipment manufacturers that are prospective purchasers.

It is true that the sale of products other than tool joints and drill collars has accounted for about 42% of American Iron's total business, and the gross profit margin on the sales of products other than tool joints and drill collars has been considerably in excess of the profits margin on these items. This evidence does not show that another company already engaged in related lines of commerce will not find it desirable to manufacture and sell tool joints and drill collars. It has been suggested that it is necessary to include the most profitable lines in order to sell the less profitable lines. Such reasoning, however, ignores the fact that the attractiveness of the lines of commerce offered for sale will be determined largely by its price which in turn will depend largely on the anticipated profitability of the lines. Thus an order requiring sale at their market price will, by definition, be a price that is attractive to the buyer. Adding lines with greater profitability will thus not increase the attractiveness of the purchase.

In addition to the fact that divestiture of the [41] tool joint and drill collar operations acquired from American Iron will eliminate the undesirable features of the Reed-American Iron merger found by this Court, there are other reasons supporting the order of partial divestiture.

Requiring divestiture of only the tool joint and drill collar operations will leave intact Reed's ownership of the American-Iron fluid end expendable parts operations - the acquisition of which was not alleged to have been harmful. American Iron's 1965 sales of fluid end expendable parts amount to $1,313,000 and accounted for approximately 10% of this market. The fluid end expendable parts market is dominated by one concern that has sales approximately four times greater than any other competitor. As discussed earlier, American Iron had made several attempts to cut down on expenditures in an effort to improve its profitability. [*588] Its research and development program was substantially limited and its efforts during the 1960's were described as being defensive only. Additionally, American Iron had reduced its sales force to 25 salesmen. The testimony of persons employed by other firms in the fluid end expendable parts market reveal that Reed [42] is definitely considered a much more formidable competitor in this field than was American Iron. Reed has a sales force of over 125 persons engaged in the selling of oil well drilling equipment. Additionally, it is engaged in substantial research and development efforts.

While the Government did not contend that Reed's acquisition of the "noncompeting" lines of commerce might lessen competition, exclusively for purposes of rebuttal it made an attempt to show that competition in the fluid end expendable parts market would not be enhanced. A review of the evidence regarding the absence of pro-competitive effects in the fluid end expendable parts market reveals that, if anything, competition will be increased.

It was asserted that Reed's entry into the fluid end expendable industry "sets the stage for distributor favoritism." This contention is based on an argument that Reed, as a manufacturer of rock bits, would, because of certain "leverage" attributable to its rock bits, have substantial advantages in the marketing of fluid end expendable parts through supply houses. There was some testimony to the effect that a 7 1/2% discount is given to supply houses on rock bits sales, for [43] which the supply houses perform little or no function. Thus, this Court is asked to conclude that a manufacturer of both rock bits and fluid end expendable parts, will be able, because of an unearned discount on rock bits, to force supply houses to stock their fluid end expendable parts rather than those of other manufacturers that do not also manufacture rock bits. There are several reasons that independently eliminate the basis of this allegation. In the first place, the contention assumes that for many years without any reason, the rock bit manufacturers have, by giving a 7 1/2% discount bestowed an unearned windfall upon the supply houses. It is difficult to believe that these companies have made any such gifts. Secondly, and independent of this assertion, is the fact that the testimony of the Government's witnesses revealed that the rock bit manufacturers did not determine which particular supply house received the discount on the rock bit. The drillers, to whom the rock bits are shipped directly from the manufacturer, designate the particular supply houses that will perform the credit and billing function and receive the discount. The manufacturer of the rock bit decides [44] only the amount of the particular discount, not the distribution of the discounts among supply houses. Thus, the rock bit manufacturer would not be in a position to exercise favoritism by giving unearned discounts to certain supply houses and not to others. Third, the evidence reveals that the discount paid by the bit manufacturers is fully earned. The supply houses perform a credit and billing function. The supply houses generally are in a far better position to assume the credit function than are the rock bit manufacturers since they already have liens and mortgages upon the equipment of the various drillers. In this connection, it should be noted that the Government witness stated that in the case of certain of its own products, a ten percent discount is given for performing precisely the same functions for which bit manufacturers give 7 1/2%. Finally, the evidence reveals that Reed had serious difficulties getting the supply houses to handle at least one of its products, a fact which rebuts the presence of leverage.

It was also alleged that the Reed-American Iron merger might set off a series of mergers between companies engaged in the rock bit and fluid end expendable parts [45] markets. Aside from the fact that the evidence reveals no reason to believe that this would be harmful the testimony would seem highly speculative at best. [*589] Two Government witnesses made references to a fear of trends of mergers, but on cross examination they admitted they knew of no other mergers in these markets.

It was asserted by the Government that "technological innovations may be resisted by the larger companies." There was testimony offered that this merger would increase the likelihood that there would be less research, development and innovation in the fluid end expendable parts market, apparently on the theory that larger firms do not engage in as much innovation. Aside from the merits of this theory, if anything, the Reed-American Iron merger has substituted a relatively small company, Reed, for a much larger company, AMF. Further, the fluid end expendable parts industry already has a number of companies far larger than Reed. For example, the United States Steel Corporation and the Armco Steel Corporation own major companies engaged in this market. Finally, the evidence clearly shows that Reed's research and development program is far larger and more active [46] than was American Iron's.

It was also suggested that "large integrated producers, such as Reed, would have a financial advantage in the consignment marketing of oil equipment." This contention ignores two factors. As discussed above, Reed is far smaller than AMF and if the Government considers the risk to be one of a large company throwing money away in order to crowd out competitors, the risk becomes less likely as a result of the merger. On the other hand, if the allegation is based on the theory that Reed will sell fluid end expendable parts in the same manner that it sells rock bits, the evidence reveals that Reed considers this to be an economically unsound practice in which it has no intention of engaging.

Finally, the Government takes the position that the fluid end expendable parts market is not "oligopolistic" and for this reason the procompetitive effect in this market that Reed foresees will not occur. The Government's contention in this regard seems highly inconsistent with the position it has taken in other merger cases. While admittedly there are fourteen competitors in the business, three companies have 61% of the business, five have 79%, and eight companies have [47] well over 90%.

A review of the testimony of the Government's two witnesses testifying as to the absence of a procompetitive effect on the fluid end expendable parts market reveals that they seem more afraid of increased competition in this market than a lessening of the competition. The primary witness in this regard admitted that Reed would be a much more formidable competitor than American Iron had been. Accordingly, this Court concludes that this merger will probably result in increased competition in the fluid end expendable parts industry.

This Court recognizes that HN5[] procompetitive consequences in one market cannot be considered so as to outweigh the anticompetitive consequences in another market. United States v. Philadelphia Nat'l Bank, 374 U.S. 321, 10 L. Ed. 2d 915, 83 S. Ct. 1715 (1963). At the same time the fact that a merger has beneficial effects on competition in some markets is material to the type of relief to be decreed where permitting the acquiring company to keep the assets relating to the market where competition has been increased will at least be as effective in restoring competition in the other markets that have been adversely affected by the merger.

[48] A divestiture of the tool joint and drill collar lines of commerce has another advantage in that the task involved will be only one-half of a divestiture of the entire business. By concentrating efforts on the sale and reestablishment of the offending lines of commerce Reed will be able to perform a more efficient and successful job. Additionally, since this is a situation where divestiture of part of the assets is at least as effective as a divestiture of all of the assets it is appropriate to take into consideration at least to some degree the hardship imposed on the defendants. [*590] In this case there can be no doubt that divestiture of the offending lines of commerce will be easier for the parties.

Partial divestiture has a further advantage of decreasing the size of the purchase that must be made by another firm. Since less money will be involved it would seem reasonable to think that the number of potential buyers should be increased. Additionally, by permitting Reed to stay in the fluid end expendable parts market a number of fluid end expendable parts manufacturers, probably not qualified to acquire all of American Iron's operations, would become unobjectionable [49] potential purchasers. While these parties do not have a relative advantage over others because of their position in the fluid end expendable parts market, they would be important potential buyers.

In reaching its conclusion on partial divestiture, this Court has carefully considered the Government's "preferred" remedy of rescission of the original agreement of acquisition and requiring Reed to return to AMF the American Iron operations. The Government contends that AMF is a proper defendant and argues that AMF is a law violator. It points out that the Government has frequently named sellers as defendants and notes that in several cases where suit has been brought prior to the consummation of a merger the courts have enjoined defendant sellers from completing the sale. United States v. Chrysler Corp., 232 F. Supp. 651 (D.N.J. 1964); United States v. Ingersoll-Rand Co., 218 F. Supp. 530 (W.D. Pa. 1963), aff'd 320 F.2d 509 (3d Cir. 1963); United States v. Parent's Magazine Enterprizes, Inc., 1962 Trade Cas., Par. 70,437 (N.D. Ill. 1962). Alternatively, plaintiff asserts that, assuming arguendo, AMF is not a proper defendant to a section 7 charge, rescission would still be an [50] appropriate remedy in accordance with the broad equitable powers of this court under section 15 of the Clayton Act. See United States v. Pabst Brewing Co., 183 F. Supp. 220 (E.D. Wis. 1960); In re Dean Foods Co., 3 Trade Reg. Rep. Par. 17,765 (FTC Complaints, Orders, Stipulations, December 14, 1966.) It is urged that the rescission remedy fulfills and is consistent with the intent of Congress in that it would make clear to the business community that sellers of companies must respect section 7 and refrain from making sales, the result of which would substantially lessen competition.

In response the defendants emphasize that the language of section 7 does not make a sale unlawful and point out in the 52 years of section 7 enforcement no decision has sanctioned the relief now sought by plaintiff. Defendants argue that, assuming arguendo that utilization of such a remedy "accords with the intent of Congress to stem the tide of anticompetitive mergers," there is no congressional authority for this form of relief and that any number of unauthorized devices could be imagined that would discourage firms from making sales that would lessen competition. Defendants further point out [51] that the Dean Foods Co. decision relied upon by the Government actually held that the seller was not a proper party to the section 7 charge and dismissed the complaint as to the seller with respect to that charge.

A choice between these positions is made unnecessary since this Court finds that practically none of the Government's arguments for rescission are particularly applicable to the present case and that the evidence reveals that rescission of the merger would be inconsistent with and unwarranted by the facts of this case. It is not the form of relief that will best restore competition in the tool joint and drill collar markets. Instead, divestiture of the tool joint and drill collar lines will best carry out the policies of section 7.

As noted earlier, American Iron had for sometime experienced very low profitability. Its performance had met none of AMF's profitability requirements. Testimony revealed that AMF is a highly leveraged company and one of its goals is that its subsidiaries and operating divisions achieve at least a 20% return before taxes on assets employed in the [*591] conduct of the particular business. American Iron had experienced an earnings [52] record of.5% in 1962, a loss return of 1.5% in 1963, a return of 4.3% in 1964, and a return of 3.1% for the first ten months of 1965. Rates of returns such as these would easily justify a liquidation of the assets and investment of the money elsewhere. AMF at one time attempted unsuccessfully to sell the American Iron operations and at another time considered moving American Iron from Oklahoma City to Houston, Texas, where the conditions are more favorable to a manufacturer and seller of drilling equipment. The latter proposal was, however, rejected on the ground that the cost was too great. Liquidation was also a seriously considered possibility since the company's salvage value was significant. On several earlier occasions AMF has liquidated its subsidiaries. In short, AMF has demonstrated that it is not suited for the running of the American Iron operation. AMF's ownership of other subsidiaries does not enhance its ability to be a parent of American Iron. One subsidiary, AMF, Tuboscope, Inc., has plants in Oklahoma City and Houston and is engaged in the protective coating of various types of tubular goods. It is true that drill pipe is frequently coated and that the availability [53] of a coating plant would be helpful to the marketing of drill pipe. However, the coating of drill pipe amounts to only a very small percentage of the total coating business - the production phase of the oil and gas industry providing the largest market for coating. The evidence reveals that the existence of the Oklahoma Tuboscope plant would not appreciably help American Iron's operations. Even if it is assumed that the coating of drill pipe is essential to the marketing of drill pipe the availability of a coating plant does not give the tool joint manufacturer the needed drill pipe supply or the demand for its own products.

The testimony of AMF's executives convince this Court that the presence of AMF in the lines of commerce represented by the products of American Iron would be only temporary. The company has tried to succeed with American Iron, has failed, and is not interested in continuing its efforts. Moreover, the conditions now existing are even less satisfactory from AMF's standpoint than they were prior to the acquisition. Its employees and customers know that it is no longer interested in its oil well drilling equipment operations and are aware that a forced reentry [54] would have no permanence. In light of these conditions it would be almost impossible to staff the American Iron's operations with the type of personnel that would be indispensable to the operations of a viable company. While it may be true that rescission would, notwithstanding these facts, result in setting an example that would discourage other concerns from making sales in violation of section 7, such a goal ignores the requirement that the relief to be ordered in the present case should be the most effective to restore competition. Rescission would not result in restoration of competition.

Restoration of the entire operation for return to AMF would be highly impracticable. The plaintiff has disregarded the tremendous task that would face the parties in reconstituting the American Iron operation. The difficulties of separating merged businesses are well known and have been a major factor in the development of the law of preliminary injunctions. Prior to the Government's investigation of the acquisition the Reed and American Iron operations were substantially integrated. American Iron's sales program was merged into and is now a part of Reed's sales effort. The sales force [55] personnel and all but one of the top executives have resigned or have been transferred. Thus there is in no respect an independent entity operating from Oklahoma City, but rather only the production facilities and personnel.

Further, the impracticalities of rescission in the present case not only [*592] impede effective relief but would obviously be imposing a serious hardship upon the parties. In the present case the merger was not consummated in the face of an antitrust complaint. The evidence reveals that while the parties were aware of possible antitrust problems and Reed agreed with AMF to assume all responsibility in the event a violation were determined, they did not feel that the merger was violative of the antitrust laws. While it is plain that HN6[] the absence of an intent to violate the antitrust law does not prevent a merger from violating section 7, Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 329 n. 48, 82 S. Ct. 1502 (1962), the awareness of the parties that the merger is likely to be attacked has been considered relevant to the possibility of involving the seller in the order of relief. Dean Foods Co., 3 Trade Reg. Rep. Par. 17,765 (FTC, Complaints, Orders, [56] Stipulations, December 14, 1966); United States v. Pabst Brewing Co., 183 F. Supp. 220 (E.D. Wis. 1960). To require a rescission of this merger would be to impose a substantial burden on the parties involved, without accomplishing the primary goal of antitrust relief: restoration of competition. Under the Supreme Court's decision in du Pont, economic hardship can influence the choice only as among two or more effective remedies. In the present case, in light of the facts described above, rescission would not be an effective remedy. In reaching this conclusion, a primary consideration of this Court is the fact that partial divestiture will restore and maintain competition in all the markets involved.

The Court concludes that a decree should be entered requiring Reed to divest itself of the tool joint and drill collar lines acquired in the American Iron acquisition.

The foregoing opinion of the Court is adopted as findings of fact and conclusions of law pursuant to Rule 52, F.R.Civ.P. Settle decree.

Old Dominion Box Co. v. Cont'l Can Co.

United States District Court for the Southern District of New York

July 17, 1967

No. 63 Civil 31

Reporter

273 F. Supp. 550 *; 1967 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11266 ; 155 U.S.P.Q. (BNA) 70 ; 1967 Trade Cas. (CCH) P72,308

OLD DOMINION BOX COMPANY, Inc., and Dacam Corporation, Plaintiffs, v. CONTINENTAL CAN COMPANY, Inc., Defendant

Core Terms

patent, cartons, machine, packaging, wrap-around, locking, closure, panels, catch, latching, folded, overlapping, tightening, invention, opening, license, pivotal, provisions, parties, prior art, containers, carrier, blank, flap, subject matter, manipulations, proceedings, termination, rotary, additional license

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Patent Law > US Patent & Trademark Office Proceedings > Filing Requirements > Drawings

Patent Law > ... > Specifications > Description Requirement > General Overview

Patent Law > ... > Specifications > Enablement Requirement > General Overview

HN1[] Filing Requirements, Drawings

Under the provisions of 35 U.S.C.S. § 111, an application for a patent shall have a specification as prescribed by § 112, and a drawing as prescribed by § 113.

Patent Law > ... > Specifications > Definiteness > General Overview

Patent Law > ... > Specifications > Enablement Requirement > General Overview

HN2[] Specifications, Definiteness

See 35 U.S.C.S. § 112.

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > General Overview

Patent Law > ... > Claims > Claim Language > General Overview

HN3[] Infringement Actions, Exclusive Rights

The claims of a patent constitute the measure of invention monopoly. Additionally, the claims of a patent are to be interpreted and read in the light of the specifications.

Patent Law > ... > Specifications > Enablement Requirement > General Overview

Patent Law > Claims & Specifications > General Overview

HN4[] Specifications, Enablement Requirement

In meeting the patent description requirements under 35 U.S.C.S. § 112, while vain repetition is no more to be encouraged in patents than in other documents, and claims like other statements may incorporate other matter by reference, their text must be sufficient to particularly point out and distinctly claim an identifiable invention or discovery.

Patent Law > ... > Claims > Claim Language > Combination Claims

Patent Law > Claims & Specifications > General Overview

Patent Law > Nonobviousness > Elements & Tests > General Overview

Patent Law > ... > Utility Patents > Product Patents > Machines

HN5[] Claim Language, Combination Claims

Under patent law, the statutory requirement of distinctness and certainty in claims is important. Courts view claims to patents based on combinations of old elements with very close scrutiny; it is consistent with this strict interpretation of patents for machines that combine old elements to require clear description in combination claims.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Settlement Agreements

Patent Law > US Patent & Trademark Office Proceedings > Interference Proceedings > General Overview

HN6[] Types of Contracts, Settlement Agreements

The provisions of 35 U.S.C.S. § 135(c) require the filing of settlement agreements in connection with the termination of interference proceedings.

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

Patent Law > Anticipation & Novelty > General Overview

Patent Law > Invention Date & Priority > General Overview

Patent Law > Invention Date & Priority > Reduction to Practice

HN7[] Defenses, Inequitable Conduct

In order for an individual to qualify as a prior inventor of a product under patent law, a party must prove: (a) that the individual conceived the invention and reduced it to practice before the patentee, or (b) that the individual was working diligently toward a reduction to practice at a time just prior to the date on which the patentee commenced his inventive activities, and that the individual continued to work diligently thereafter until he reduced the invention to practice.

Patent Law > Anticipation & Novelty > General Overview

HN8[] Patent Law, Anticipation & Novelty

Although numerous patents involving a combination of old elements have been held invalid, it is possible for a combination of old elements to give rise to patentable invention.

Patent Law > Nonobviousness > Elements & Tests > General Overview

HN9[] Nonobviousness, Elements & Tests

See 35 U.S.C.S. § 103.

Patent Law > Nonobviousness > Elements & Tests > Ordinary Skill Standard

Patent Law > ... > Specifications > Enablement Requirement > General Overview

Patent Law > Nonobviousness > Elements & Tests > General Overview

Patent Law > Nonobviousness > Elements & Tests > Prior Art

Patent Law > ... > Elements & Tests > Graham Test > Secondary Considerations

HN10[] Elements & Tests, Ordinary Skill Standard

In determining whether a patent is void due to obviousness under 35 U.S.C.S. § 103, the scope and content of the prior art are to be determined; differences between the prior art and the claims at issue are to be ascertained; and the level of ordinary skill in the pertinent art resolved. Against this background, the obviousness or nonobviousness of the subject matter is determined. Such secondary considerations as commercial success, long felt but unsolved needs, failure of others, etc., might be utilized to give light to the circumstances surrounding the origin of the subject matter sought to be patented. As indicia of obviousness or nonobviousness, these inquiries may have relevancy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Licenses

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > General Overview

Patent Law > Ownership > Conveyances > General Overview

HN11[] Ownership & Transfer of Rights, Licenses

Although an exclusive patent license may be valid, the United States Supreme Court recognizes certain limitations, and where such a license has for its purpose the suppressing of competition, it is held invalid.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Assignments

Contracts Law > Contract Conditions & Provisions > General Overview

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Licenses

Patent Law > Ownership > Conveyances > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

HN12[] Conveyances, Assignments

The United States Supreme Court holds that a provision in a patent license agreement that requires the assignment of future development patents is not per se illegal and unenforceable.

Counsel: [1] Harold James, of James & Franklin, New York, New York, for plaintiffs.

William K. Kerr of Fish, Richardson & Neave, New York, New York, for defendant.

Judges: Graven, Senior District Judge.

Opinion by: GRAVEN

Opinion

[*71] [*551] MEMORANDUM

GRAVEN, Senior District Judge.

1. The plaintiffs, Old Dominion Box Company, Inc., and Dacam Corporation, are corporations organized and existing under the laws of the State of Virginia. The principal place of business of each is Lynchburg, Virginia. The defendant, Continental Can Company, Inc., is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of New York. Its principal place of business is New York City, New York.

The defendant, as assignee, is the owner of United States Letters Patent No. 2,986,857 issued on June 6, 1961, to H. Ganz, which patent is entitled, "MACHINE AND METHOD FOR PACKAGING ARTICLES," and United States Letters Patent No. 2,990,997 issued on July 4, 1961, to A. J. Weiss, which patent is entitled, "PAPERBOARD CARRIER." Those patents are referred to as the defendant's patents.

The plaintiffs brought this action under the provisions of Sections 2201 and 2202, Title 28 U.S.C.A. They seek declaratory relief with [2] respect to the two patents referred to owned by the defendant. An actual controversy exists between the parties. There is diversity of citizenship between the plaintiffs and [*552] the defendant. The amount in controversy is in excess of $10,000.00.

2. The plaintiff, Old Dominion Box Company, Inc., is now, and for a number of years has been, engaged in the business of manufacturing and selling cartons of various types, including paperboard cartons. The plaintiff, Dacam Corporation, is now, and for a number of years has been, engaged in the business of designing packaging machinery and equipment. It has been licensing its co-plaintiff to use the packaging machines designed and patented by it. The defendant, Continental Can Company, Inc., is now, and for a number of years has been, a competitor of the plaintiff, Old Dominion Box Company, Inc., in the packaging field. The plaintiffs allege that for some time the defendant has been asserting and claiming that the plaintiffs have been infringing its patents. The plaintiffs brought this action so that they might secure a judicial determination with respect to the validity, infringement and enforceability of those patents. [3] The defendant filed a counterclaim. In its counterclaim it asked that its patents be held to be valid and that the plaintiffs be held to have infringed them. Because of this feature, the case was tried as a conventional patent case.

3. The issues between the parties as defined in the governing pretrial order are as follows:

(a) Are the defendant's patents valid or invalid?

(b) If valid, have the plaintiffs infringed them?

(c) Whether the defendant has been guilty of such conduct as to make its rights under the patents, or either of them unenforceable.

(d) Whether an award of attorneys' fees should be made to either the plaintiffs or the defendant.

4. Since around 1940 there have been two developments in the packaging field relating to products merchandised in cans, bottles, and other containers which furnish the background for this litigation. During that period there was in that field an increasing demand for packages which would securely hold multiple containers and which could be easily handled and readily unpacked. The other development was that of automation. There was an increasing use of cartons and packaging machines by means of which multiple [4] containers were rapidly and automatically packaged for distribution purposes.

The patents involved in this case relate to the cartons and packaging machines used for what is referred to as wrap-around packaging. While cartons used in connection with wrap-around packaging are encompassed in the generic term of folding cartons, yet by common usage in the trade a distinction is made between wrap-around cartons and folding cartons. Folding cartons are known as cartons which are fed into a machine in flat form and made into a box-like shape and then filled with containers. Wrap-around cartons are known as cartons which are used in packaging operations in which the package comes into existence as it is being wrapped around the containers. It is a one-step operation rather than a two-step operation. The wrap-around [72] system is used exclusively for the packaging of multiple containers.

5. Cartons used in connection with wrap-around packaging are, in general, made of paperboard. They are furnished in knockdown, flat form by the supplier to the packager. The carton blanks are precut to suit the particular containers to be packaged. Fold, or score, lines have been made in them where [5] the blanks are to be folded as they are wrapped around the containers. When being wrapped, the carton is rectangular in form; has two side panels or walls; a top and a bottom wall; two overlapping enclosure panels forming either the top or bottom wall. Wrap-around cartons may have either open or closed ends. In wrap-around packaging, blank cartons in flat form are fed into a packaging machine. The carton blanks are then brought into connection with the containers which are to be packaged. The machine folds the side panels of the carton around the [*553] containers and then folds the closure panels into an overlapping relationship. Finally the overlapping panels are locked into position and completely wrapped packages emerge from the machine. It is a high speed operation and from 120 up to 200 packages a minute are made.

6. Prior to 1956 a corporation known as the Robert Gair Company was active in the packaging field. In that year it merged with the defendant, Continental Can Company, Inc., and the business formerly carried on by it since has been carried on by a division of the defendant, Continental Can Company, Inc. The defendant, Continental Can Company, Inc., has [6] been and is engaged in, among other activities, the manufacture and sale of cartons for wrap-around packaging and the leasing out of machines designed for such packaging. The Robert Gair Company, during the period of its existence, and later the defendant, Continental Can Company, Inc., used or were attempting to use a number of different wrap-around systems. In some of those systems the cartons were made secure by gluing the overlapping closure panels together. In one of those systems the cartons were made secure by stapling. In another system the cartons were locked into place by so-called punch locking. In that system synchronized moving machine parts punched small tabs into matching slots in other panels. The Robert Gair Company and the Continental Can Company, Inc., used the different systems referred to. They found unsatisfactory features in connection with all of them. The system making use of glue involved messy glue pots. The glued containers required time and space for drying, which features necessitated the availability of a substantial amount of floor space. The system using stapling met with poor customer response. The successful operation of punch locking required [7] a high degree of synchronization of numerous moving parts which gave rise to difficulties when operated at high speeds. In the wrap-around packaging field, the packagers desire a system which is rapid in operation, which functions without breaking or tearing the cartons, and in which there is a minimum of interruptions for repairs and realignments. The packagers and the consumers also desire a package which holds the containers securely in the carton. This feature is of special importance in the case of open end cartons. The consumers desire a package which is easy to carry. They also desire a package which can be readily opened and closed. This latter feature is of importance in the case of multiple containers because it is the frequent practice of consumers to remove only part of the containers at a time and then close the carton.

7. Arthur J. Weiss, also known as A. J. Weiss, for many years prior to its merger with the defendant, Continental Can Company, Inc., had to do with designing cartons for the Robert Gair Company. After the merger he had to do with the designing of cartons for the merged company. Starting prior to 1958, he commenced work for the merged company (hereinafter [8] referred to as the defendant) on a design for a wrap-around paperboard carton. On July 15, 1958, he filed an application for a patent on what is entitled, "PAPERBOARD CARRIER." The application was No. 7,248,728. On July 4, 1961, United States Letters Patent No. 2,990,997 was issued to him pursuant to his application. The defendant has at all times since the issuance of that patent been the owner thereof. It is the claim of the defendant and the plaintiffs have been and are infringing Claims 1, 2 and 4 of that patent.

8. The Ganz Brothers Machine Company is a corporation which was and is engaged in the building of special machinery. Henry Ganz, also known as H. Ganz, was and is the president of that corporation. In 1956, under arrangements with the Robert Gair Company, the Ganz Brothers Machine Company commenced work on the design of a machine for wrap-around packaging. That work was continued under arrangements with the defendant after its merger with the Robert Gair Company. Pursuant to those [*554] arrangements, the Ganz [73] Brothers Machine Company designed and built wrap-around packaging machines of the punchlock type. Difficulties were encountered in the locking of [9] the cartons when those machines were operated at a high speed. It was then sought to design and build a packaging machine that had a locking mechanism which operated more satisfactorily than the punch-lock mechanism. A machine was then designed and built which made use of the carton of Weiss Patent No. 2,990,997 and what is referred to as a slide-lock mechanism, which was designed to effectuate the carton lock in the Weiss carton. On June 26, 1958, H. Ganz filed an application for a patent for what was entitled, "MACHINE AND METHOD FOR PACKAGING ARTICLES." On June 6, 1961, United States Letters Patent No. 2,986,857 was issued to him. The defendant, Continental Can Company, Inc., has at all times since the issuance of that patent been the owner thereof.

9. The plaintiff, Dacam Corporation, is engaged in the business of developing machinery for the automatic packaging of cartons. It has designed and patented various machines intended for that purpose. It designed and patented, among other machines, a machine known as D-300. It licensed the plaintiff, Old Dominion Box Company, Inc., to use those machines. That latter company, in turn, sublicensed the machines. It is the claim [10] of the defendant that the use of those machines infringes Claim 4 of its Patent No. 2,986,857 issued to H. Ganz, heretofore referred to.

10. The defendant's wrap-around packaging system making use of the Weiss carton and the Ganz machine is known as the JAK-ET-PAK system. That system has proved to be a very good system and has had substantial commercial success. That system has not dominated the field. Wrap-around cartons with punch locks were in commercial use before the JAK-ET-PAK system and are still in such use. What is referred to as the Mead-Atlanta "Cluster-Pak", making use of a type of punch lock, as an important factor in the industry, particularly where containers are packaged at low speeds. What is referred to as the Container Corporation's "Bikini" system, utilizing two different kinds of glue, is also an important factor in the industry, particularly in the packaging of beer. However, it is clear that the JAK-ET-PAK system does excellent wrap-around packaging at very high speeds. In the JAK-ET-PAK system the carton is folded around the containers and then closed by locking. The parties are in agreement that the defendant's patents for that carton and machine [11] are based on a combination of old elements. It is the contention of the defendant that the patentable invention claimed meets the tests and requirements for a valid combination patent and that such invention is disclosed by the patents. The patentable invention claimed by the defendant is the claimed tightening of the package allegedly occurring during the locking process when a Weiss carton is used in connection with the Ganz machine.

11. In the Weiss carton there is what is described by the defendant as the primary lock. That lock consists of an opening in one of the overlapping closure panels and a latching flap or catch as a part of the other overlapping closure panel. The latching flap is made integrally with a series of catches. After the overlapping panel is moved against the top or bottom of the container, the latching flap is bent back and the catches are inserted in the matching slots. Then by rotary action the latching flap rotates or pivots. A. J. Weiss, to whom the carton patent was issued, testified at the trial. The defendant in its brief stated:

> "* * * Weiss pointed out * * * that tightening of the package occurs as a result of rotary action when the latching [12] catch of the primary lock hooks around the edge of the latch opening, creating lateral movement of the closure flaps to draw them to their position of greatest overlap. * * *"

[*555] In that connection, counsel for the defendant in his opening statement stated:

> "* * * That tightening effect is the result of what we call a camming action between these catches and the slots in which they are engaged. That camming action converts the rotary motion of the flap to a lateral motion so that the overlapping panels are drawn together to their maximum position of overlap. This is what provides the tight pack, which is so essential in open end wrap-around cartons."

12. In the Ganz machine patent, it is stated that the invention had special application to use with cartons of the type disclosed by the Weiss patent. In the matter of invention claimed by the defendant, those patents are closely intertwined. In a packaging operation making use of the JAK-ET-PAK system, the machine first folds the side panels of the carton downwardly. Then in a series of operations by means of stationary guiding bars or blades, the machine [74] continues to fold the carton until it is rectangular [13] in form. The machine then performs the locking of the carton. The locking operations as to the carton are performed by the locking mechanism of the machine. Those operations are performed by an arrangement of folding swords which are properly shaped and positioned for that purpose. There are no moving parts in the locking mechanism of the machine.

The locking mechanism of the machine is the particular part of the machine here in issue. By means of the locking mechanism, the primary lock of the carton is locked. That lock, as heretofore noted, consisted of a latching flap and its integral catch. In the locking operation, the latching flap is positioned with its integral catch. Then by means of rotary or pivotal action, the flap is locked into its integral catch. It is the contention of the defendant that such pivotal action "provides the essential tight pack."

13. In the Weiss carton Patent No. 2,990,997, the prior patents referred to are:

1,669,454	Close	May 15, 1928
1,996,997	Inman	Apr. 21, 1935
2,025,201	Graham	Dec. 24, 1935
2,102,497	Trogman	Dec. 14, 1937
2,140,932	Avery	Dec. 20, 1938
2,304,362	Huye	Dec. 8, 1942
2,572,159	Kells	Oct. 23, 1951
2,786,572	Gentry	Mar. 26, 1957
2,798,603	Grinspoon	July 9, 1957
2,857,048	Johnson	Oct. 21, 1958

[14] The plaintiffs introduced into evidence on the matter of the anticipation of the Weiss patent the following in connection with the matter of prior art:

Calahan	575,775 of Jan.	26, 1897
Morrison	1,104,821 of July	28, 1914
Close	1,669,454 of May	15, 1928
Graham	2,025,201 of Dec.	24, 1935
Pergande	2,060,240 of Nov.	10, 1936
Trogman	2,102,497 of Dec.	14, 1937
Avery	2,140,932 of Dec.	20, 1938
Poe	2,316,362 of April	13, 1943
Lighter	2,395,558 of Feb.	26, 1946
Crary	2,419,391 of April	22, 1947
Kells	2,572,159 of Oct.	23, 1951
Tyrseck	2,586,886 of Feb.	26, 1952
Tyrseck	2,660,361 of Nov.	24, 1953
Gentry	2,786,572 of Mar.	26, 1957
Grinspoon	2,798,603 of July	9, 1957
Gentry	2,827,165 of Mar.	18, 1958
Andre	2,911,096 of Nov.	3, 1959
Currivan	2,922,561 of Jan.	26, 1960
Stone	2,975,891 of Mar.	21, 1961
French	1,063,058 of April	29, 1954

Those included the following patents referred to in the patent: Close, No. 1,669,454; Graham, No. 2,025,201; Trogman, No. 2,102,497; Avery, No. 2,140,932; [*556] Kells, No. 2,572,159; Gentry, No. 2,786,572; Grinspoon, No. 2,798,603.

14. In connection with the matter [15] of anticipation of the Weiss patent and in connection with another issue related to that patent, reference will be made to some other matters relating to that patent.

The Federal Paper Board Company was and is engaged in the making of paper cartons and the packaging of those cartons. It was previously known as the Morris Paper Mills. It had in its employ Edwin L. Arneson whose position with the corporation was that of a structural design engineer. He is also referred to as E. L. Arneson. The plaintiffs contend that apart from the anticipation shown by the cartons covered by the prior art patents referred to there was direct anticipation of the Weiss carton by E. L. Arneson. On April 5, 1960, Patent No. 2,931,152 was issued to E. L. Arneson, a patent for a can packaging machine. The application for the patent was filed June 30, 1958. The machine which was the subject matter of the patent was designed by him. It was designed to be used for the packaging of paper cartons. In the patent are drawings, Figures 10 and 11, depicting what is described as a typical wrapper member which was adapted to be employed with the machine. It is the contention of the plaintiffs that the cartons [16] depicted directly anticipate the carton which is the subject matter of the Weiss patent. Arneson first conceived the carton between May 7, 1957, and June 6, 1957. The earliest date claimed by Weiss for the conception of Weiss Patent No. 2,980,997 here in suit was October 8, 1957. It is the contention of the plaintiffs that the Arneson carton embodies and portrays a carton similar to and practically identical with the carton which is the subject matter of the Weiss patent and hence directly and completely anticipated that carton. It is the contention of the defendant that Arneson, at the time of the conception of his carton and at the time of his application for and the securing of his machine Patent No. 2,931,152, had no concept of a carton blank which might produce an automatic tightening of the blanks around its contents.

15. It was heretofore noted that the application for the Weiss patent was filed on July 15, 1958. On December 24, 1959, Arneson filed an application for a patent on an improvement on a carton for cylindrical articles. On October 24, 1961, he made an amendment to his application. In the amendment he set forth claims which incorporated Claims 1, 2 and 4 of [17] Weiss Patent No. 2,990,997 here in suit. On May 15, 1962, [75] the Patent Office declared an interference to exist between Arneson's application and the Weiss Patent No. 2,990,997. On October 17, 1962, Arneson filed with the Patent Office a concession of priority in favor of the Weiss patent. On October 31, 1962, the Patent Office sent the following communication to the inventor: "As required by Public Law No. 87-831, (76 Stat. 958) approved October 15, 1962, notice is hereby given the parties of the requirement of that law for filing in the Patent Office a copy of any agreement 'in connection with or in contemplation of the termination of the interference.'" The statute referred to appears as subsection (c) of Section 135, Title 35 U.S.C.A., which provides that failure to file a copy of such agreement shall render permanently unenforceable any patent involved. On December 7, 1962, there was filed with the Patent Office a letter from counsel for Weiss stating that the concession of priority previously filed with the Patent Office set forth the only agreement or understanding of the parties to the interference made in connection with or in contemplation of the termination of such interference. [18] On December 14, 1962, the Patent Office terminated the interference proceedings.

On June 18, 1962, during the pendency of the interference proceedings, the defendant, Continental Can Company, Inc., and the Federal Paper Board Company entered into an agreement under provisions of which the latter company was granted a license under the Weiss patent. That agreement was not filed with the Patent Office. It is the contention of [*557] the plaintiffs that the agreement was of such a character as to require the filing of it in the Patent Office under the provisions of Section 135(c), Title 35 U.S.C.A., and that because it was not filed the defendant may not enforce any rights that it might have under the Weiss patent. The defendant controverts that contention.

16. It is the claim of the plaintiffs that Claim 4 of the Ganz patent was anticipated by certain prior patents. The prior art patents referred to in the Ganz patent are as follows:

2,751,730	Gentry	June 26, 1956
2,809,484	Gentry	Oct. 15, 1957
2,809,486	Gentry	Oct. 15, 1957

The plaintiffs introduced into evidence as prior art patents in connection with the Ganz patent the following:

Heybach	995,965 of June 20, 1911
Lane	1,624,257 of April 12, 1927
Pergande	2,060,240 of November 10, 1936
Banta	2,305,130 of December 15, 1942
Wood	2,625,778 of January 20, 1953
Monroe	2,780,900 of February 12, 1957
Tobey	2,823,501 of February 18, 1958
Arneson	2,931,152 of April 5, 1960
Galloway	2,979,876 of April 18, 1961
German	598,010 of June 4, 1934
Anness	2,817,197 of December 24, 1957
Arneson	2,860,461 of November 18, 1958
Murray	2,953,879 of September 27, 1960

[19] 17. The carton which is the subject matter of the Weiss patent and the machine which is the subject matter of the Ganz patent are very closely related. It is the claim of the defendant that the plaintiffs are infringing Claims 1, 2 and 4 of the Weiss patent and Claim 4 of the Ganz patent. Claims 1, 2 and 4 of the Weiss patent are as follows:

> "1. A wrap-around carrier having overlapping closure panels, one of the panels having a latching extension disposed beyond a transverse pivot line located within the overlap of the closure, the latching extension being formed with a catch which, when the latching extension is brought toward the other panel, is received in a latch opening in the other panel, the base of the catch being tightly aligned with the adjacent edge of the latch opening when the overlapping panels are drawn into their positions of maximum overlap, the overlapping edge of the inner one of said overlapping panels being spaced from the fold line of the other of said overlapping panels and said overlapping panels being free to be drawn together as the catch is hooked around said adjacent edge of the opening and the latching extension is pressed against the other panel [20] to bring the side walls of the carrier tightly against the contents of the carrier whereby the action of the catch will produce an automatic tightening of the side walls against the contents as it cams or levers the closure panels into the fully closed overlapping position.

[*558] "2. A paperboard blank for forming a wrap-around carrier for cylindrical objects such as cans having chines at their ends, said blank being rectangular in form and having five transverse fold lines which define three body panels and a closure panel extending from the outer end of each of the outer body panels and a latching flap at the end of one closure panel, said closure panels being of a width such that they overlap when the carrier [76] is in erected position, a catch in one of said closure panels and an opening in the other closure panel both of which are within the overlap when the carrier is in erected position so that the catch can be received within the opening, the transverse fold line which defines said latching flap being within the overlap of the closure panels when the carrier is in erected position, said catch extending from said latching flap across and interrupting said fold line in the [21] closure panel so that, when the carrier is being erected and said latching flap is being folded back, the catch hooks around the edge of the opening to draw the overlapping panels together.

"4. A paperboard blank for forming a wrap-around carrier for cylindrical objects such as cans having chines at their ends, said blank being rectangular in form and having transverse fold lines which define body panels and a closure panel extending from the outer end of each of the outer body panels, the outer ends of said closure panels forming the outer ends of said blank, said closure panels being of a width such that they overlap when the carrier is in erected position, one of said closure panels having a latching extension disposed along the free end of the closure panel beyond a bending axis disposed in said one closure panel, a catch in said one closure panel and an opening in the other closure panel, both of which are within the overlap when the carrier is in erected position so that the catch can be received within the opening, the bending axis being within the overlap of the closure panels when the carrier is in the erected position, said catch extending from said latching extension with [22] its base portion substantially in line with and interrupting said bending axis, so that when the carrier is being erected and said latching extension is being folded back about said bending axis, the catch hooks around the edge of the opening to draw the overlapping panels together."

Claim 4 of the Ganz patent is as follows:

"4. In a machine for applying to cans and the like arranged in rows, a wrap-around carton having closure panels one of which has a latch opening and the other of which includes a pivotal catch for engagement with said latch opening, the combination comprising means for folding the pivotal catch panel and for engaging the pivotal catch through said latch opening, and means for swinging the pivotal catch into substantially the plane of the folded closure panels."

18. It is the contention of the plaintiffs that the Ganz patent does not particularly point out and distinctly claim the claimed invention.

The plaintiffs, as to Claim 4 of the Ganz patent, in their brief state as follows:

"Claim 4 does not include any tightening action. It calls for means for producing three manipulations:

1. Folding the pivotal catch relative to its [23] associated closure panel;
