

Date and Time: Tuesday, October 17, 2023 10:55:00 AM CST

Job Number: 208210863

Documents (100)

1. Maryland Staffing Servs. v. Manpower, Inc., 936 F. Supp. 1494

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

2. Hyde v. Abbott Labs., Inc., 123 N.C. App. 572

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

3. Tops Mkts., Inc. v. Quality Mkts., Inc., 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12432

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

4. Discon, Inc. v. NYNEX Corp., 93 F.3d 1055

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

5. Discon, Inc. v. NYNEX Corp., 1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 28747

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

6. Khan v. State Oil Co., 93 F.3d 1358

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

7. Massachusetts Sch. of Law at Andover v. ABA, 937 F. Supp. 435

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

8. Union Carbide Corp. v. Montell N.V., 944 F. Supp. 1119

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

9. United States v. Nippon Paper Indus. Co., 944 F. Supp. 55

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

10. Alpha Lyracom Space Comms. v. Comsat Corp., 968 F. Supp. 876

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022
11. Dill v. Board of County Comm'rs, 928 P.2d 809
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by:
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022
12. In re Disposable Contact Lens Antitrust Litig., 170 F.R.D. 524
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by:
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022
13. Wilson v. Mobil Oil Corp., 940 F. Supp. 944
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by:
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022
14. Chicago Professional Sports Ltd. Pshp. v. NBA, 95 F.3d 593
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by:
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022
15. Aurora Gas Co. v. Presque Isle Elec. &amp; Gas Co-op, 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21815
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by:
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

16. Crosby v. Hospital Auth., 93 F.3d 1515

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

17. In re Potash Antitrust Litig., 954 F. Supp. 1334

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

18. Stewart Glass & Mirror v. U.S.A. Glas, 940 F. Supp. 1026

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

19. California CNG v. Southern Cal. Gas Co., 1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 35321

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

20. White v. Central Vt. Pub. Serv. Corp., 958 F. Supp. 174

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

21. Baker's Carpet Gallery v. Mohawk Indus., 942 F. Supp. 1464

---

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

22. Borschow Hosp. & Medical Supplies v. Cesar Castillo Inc., 96 F.3d 10

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

23. Johnson v. Hospital Corp. of Am., 95 F.3d 383

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

24. Delta Dental v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield, 942 F. Supp. 740

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

25. In re Medical X-Ray Film Antitrust Litig., 946 F. Supp. 209

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

26. Roma Constr. Co. v. aRusso, 96 F.3d 566

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

27. Little Caesar Enters. v. Smith, 172 F.R.D. 236

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

28. Heritage Home Health, Inc. v. Capital Region Health Care Corp., 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22387

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

29. In re Citric Acid Antitrust Litig., 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16409

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

30. United States v. Delta Dental, 943 F. Supp. 172

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

31. Winston v. American Medical Int'l, 930 S.W.2d 945

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022
<hr/>
32. Trugman-Nash, Inc. v. New Zealand Dairy Bd., 942 F. Supp. 905
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by: <table border="0"> <tr> <td>Content Type</td> <td>Narrowed by</td> </tr> <tr> <td>Cases</td> <td>Practice Areas &amp; Topics: Antitrust &amp; Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022</td> </tr> </table>		Content Type	Narrowed by	Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022
<hr/>
33. Tower Air v. Federal Express Corp., 956 F. Supp. 270
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by: <table border="0"> <tr> <td>Content Type</td> <td>Narrowed by</td> </tr> <tr> <td>Cases</td> <td>Practice Areas &amp; Topics: Antitrust &amp; Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022</td> </tr> </table>		Content Type	Narrowed by	Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022
<hr/>
34. Jackson v. W. Indian Co., 944 F. Supp. 423
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by: <table border="0"> <tr> <td>Content Type</td> <td>Narrowed by</td> </tr> <tr> <td>Cases</td> <td>Practice Areas &amp; Topics: Antitrust &amp; Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022</td> </tr> </table>		Content Type	Narrowed by	Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022
<hr/>
35. Duke v. Browning-Ferris Indus., 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20769
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by: <table border="0"> <tr> <td>Content Type</td> <td>Narrowed by</td> </tr> <tr> <td>Cases</td> <td>Practice Areas &amp; Topics: Antitrust &amp; Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022</td> </tr> </table>		Content Type	Narrowed by	Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022
<hr/>
36. Cost Mgmt. Servs. v. Washington Natural Gas Co., 99 F.3d 937
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by: <table border="0"> <tr> <td>Content Type</td> <td>Narrowed by</td> </tr> <tr> <td>Cases</td> <td>Practice Areas &amp; Topics: Antitrust &amp; Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022</td> </tr> </table>		Content Type	Narrowed by	Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

37. Southern Card & Novelty, Inc. v. Lawson Mardon Label, Inc., 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22287

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

38. State ex rel. Ieyoub v. Bordens, Inc., 684 So. 2d 1024

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

39. Cyber Promotions v. America Online, 948 F. Supp. 456

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

40. In re NASDAQ Market-Makers Antitrust Litig., 169 F.R.D. 493

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

41. Peters v. Saunders, 50 Cal. App. 4th 1823

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

42. United States v. Alex. Brown & Sons, Inc., 169 F.R.D. 532

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

43. 345 Benham Ave. v. Madison Square Assocs., L.P., 1996 Conn. Super. LEXIS 3157

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

44. Borg-Warner Protective Servs. Corp. v. Guardsmark, Inc., 946 F. Supp. 495

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

45. Gaebler v. New Mexico Potash Corp., 285 Ill. App. 3d 542

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

46. Brown v. Presbyterian Healthcare Servs., 101 F.3d 1324

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

47. Amarel v. Connell, 102 F.3d 1494

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

48. Classic Communs. v. Rural Tel. Serv. Co., 956 F. Supp. 896

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

49. Hairston v. Pacific 10 Conf., 101 F.3d 1315

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

50. Pharmacare v. Caremark, 965 F. Supp. 1411

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

51. Westport News v. Minuteman Press, 1996 Conn. Super. LEXIS 3295

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

52. Paddock Publs. v. Chicago Tribune Co., 103 F.3d 42

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022
<hr/>
53. Philip Morris Inc. v. Blumenthal, 949 F. Supp. 93
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by:
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022
<hr/>
54. Watts v. Clark Assocs. Funeral Home, 234 A.D.2d 538
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by:
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022
<hr/>
55. Hawaii Newspaper Agency v. Bronster, 103 F.3d 742
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by:
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022
<hr/>
56. Columbia Steel Casting Co. v. Portland GE, 111 F.3d 1427
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by:
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022
<hr/>
57. Wisconsin v. Kenosha Hosp., 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20215
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by:
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

58. Bijan Designer for Men v. Katzman, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1426

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

59. McIver v. General Mills, 1997 Cal. App. Unpub. LEXIS 5

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

60. Roncari Dev. Co. v. Gmg Enters., 45 Conn. Supp. 408

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

61. PSI Repair Servs. v. Honeywell, Inc., 104 F.3d 811

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

62. Exxon Corp. v. Superior Court, 51 Cal. App. 4th 1672

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

63. Westowne Shoes, Inc. v. Brown Group, Inc., 104 F.3d 994

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

64. Albani v. Southern Ariz. Anesthesia Servs., P.C., 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16245

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

65. United States v. Time Warner, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2752

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

66. Yeager's Fuel v. Pennsylvania Power & Light Co., 953 F. Supp. 617

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

67. Godavari v. Abbott Labs., 1997 D.C. Super. LEXIS 69

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

68. Bogan v. Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co., 953 F. Supp. 532

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

69. Gross v. New Balance Ath. Shoe, 955 F. Supp. 242

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

70. Johnson v. Nyack Hosp., 954 F. Supp. 717

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

71. S. Megga Telecomms. v. Lucent Techs., 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2312

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

72. Florida Seed Co. v. Monsanto Co., 105 F.3d 1372

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

73. Retina Assocs., P.A. v. Southern Baptist Hosp., 105 F.3d 1376

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

74. Delaware Health Care v. MCD Holding Co., 957 F. Supp. 535

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

75. Mandat v. Community Mut. Life Ins. Co., 1997 U.S. App. LEXIS 3757

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

76. Maddock v. Greenville Retirement Community, L.P., 1997 Del. Ch. LEXIS 24

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

77. ABC Internat. Traders, Inc. v. Matsushita Electric Corp., 14 Cal. 4th 1247

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

78. Morrison v. Viacom, 52 Cal. App. 4th 1514

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

79. Doe v. Norwest Bank Minn., N.A., 107 F.3d 1297

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

80. Allergan Sales v. Pharmacia & Upjohn, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7648

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

81. Rebel Oil Co. v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 957 F. Supp. 1184

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

82. Nursing Registry v. Eastern N.C. Regional Emergency Medical Servs. Consortium, 959 F. Supp. 298

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

83. Rozema v. Marshfield Clinic, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8261

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

84. American Professional Testing Serv. v. Harcourt Brace Jovanovich Legal & Professional Publs., 108 F.3d 1147

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

85. Le Baud v. Frische, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22474

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

86. HTI Health Servs. v. Quorum Health Group, 960 F. Supp. 1104

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

87. Saratoga Harness Racing v. Veneglia, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3566

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

88. United States v. Nippon Paper Indus. Co., 109 F.3d 1

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

89. Natural Gas Clearinghouse v. FERC, 108 F.3d 397

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

90. United States v. GE, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5089

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

91. Holmes Prods. Corp. v. Dana Lighting, 958 F. Supp. 27

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

92. In re Independent Serv. Orgs. Antitrust Litig., 964 F. Supp. 1454

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

93. Anti-Monopoly v. Hasbro, Inc., 958 F. Supp. 895

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

94. Rossi v. Standard Roofing, 958 F. Supp. 976

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

95. Rohlfing v. Manor Care, 172 F.R.D. 330

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

96. Credit Counseling Ctrs. of Am. v. National Found. for Consumer Credit, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4957

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

97. In re Circuit Breaker Litig., 984 F. Supp. 1267

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

98. DiscoVision Assocs. v. Disc Mfg., 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7507

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

99. In re Independent Serv. Orgs. Antitrust Litig., 964 F. Supp. 1479

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

100. Wichita Clinic, P.A. v. Columbia/HCA Healthcare Corp., 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5881

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Oct 01, 1991 to Dec 31, 2022

Maryland Staffing Servs. v. Manpower, Inc.

United States District Court for the Eastern District of Wisconsin

August 19, 1996, Decided ; August 19, 1996, FILED

Case No. 95-C-1315

Reporter

936 F. Supp. 1494 *; 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12668 **; 1997-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,834

MARYLAND STAFFING SERVICES, INC., JOHN CHANDONNET, NANCY CHANDONNET, Plaintiffs, vs. MANPOWER, INC., MITCHELL S. FROMSTEIN, JON F. CHAIT, TERRY A. HUENEKE, DOUGLAS H. KRUEGER, JAMES J. KATTE, JOSEPH LONG, MILT BERLAND, GIL PALAY, JOHN DOES 1-4, et al., Defendants.

Disposition: [**1] Defendants' motion to dismiss granted in part and denied in part. Plaintiffs John and Nancy Chandonnet claims DISMISSED. Counts 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, and 19 DISMISSED.

Core Terms

---

Staffing, plaintiffs', motion to dismiss, overcharges, mail, Counts, cause of action, defendants', misrepresentation, fails, tying arrangement, predicate act, franchise, injuries, pattern of racketeering activity, court concludes, alleges, conversion, defraud, franchise agreement, anti trust law, wire fraud, disclose, individual plaintiff, interstate commerce, complaint alleges, particularity, racketeering activity, intangible right, allege fraud

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > Failure to State Claims

HN1 [down arrow] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) permits a district court to dismiss a claim for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. In evaluating a motion filed under this rule, the court must accept as true all well-pleaded factual allegations contained in the plaintiffs' complaint and must draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the plaintiffs. The court must deny a motion to dismiss unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiffs are unable to prove any set of facts which would entitle them to relief.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Remedies > Damages > Compensatory Damages

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Shareholder Actions > Actions Against Corporations > General Overview

936 F. Supp. 1494, *1494-996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12668, **1

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Shareholder Actions > Actions Against Corporations > Direct Actions

HN2 [] Damages, Compensatory Damages

A corporate shareholder does not have an individual right of action against third persons for damages to the shareholder resulting indirectly from injury to the corporation.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN3 [] Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

To state a claim upon which relief can be granted under Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962\(c\), plaintiff must allege that the defendant (1) conducted (2) an enterprise (3) through a pattern (4) of racketeering activity.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN4 [] Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

Before a plaintiff bringing an action under Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations, 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961 et seq., alleging a pattern of racketeering activity, he must plead particular instances of racketeering activity or predicate acts.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud Against the Government > Mail Fraud > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud Against the Government > Mail Fraud > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud > Wire Fraud > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN5 [] Mail Fraud, Elements

In order to establish mail or wire fraud under 18 U.S.C.S. §§ 1341 and 1343, the plaintiff must ultimately prove (1) that the defendant devised a scheme to defraud the plaintiff; (2) that the defendant used the United States mails or caused interstate wire communications to take place for the purpose of executing that scheme; and (3) that the defendant did so knowingly and with the intent to defraud.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud Against the Government > Mail Fraud > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

936 F. Supp. 1494, *1494A 996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12668, **1

HN6 Fraud Against the Government, Mail Fraud

In order to adequately allege mail or wire fraud as Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act predicate acts, the plaintiff must plead scienter. Plaintiff they must allege that the defendant intentionally deceived the plaintiff.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

HN7 Pleadings, Heightened Pleading Requirements

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b), intent, knowledge and other condition of mind of a person may be averred generally.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

HN8 Pleadings, Heightened Pleading Requirements

Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) prohibits "lumping together" all the defendants under a general accusation that they were participants in a scheme to defraud. Rather, the Rule 9(b) requires that the complaint inform each defendant of the nature of his alleged participation in the fraud and specify which defendants were involved in what activity.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN9 Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act, Elements

The Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961 et seq., defines pattern of racketeering activity as at least two predicate acts of racketeering committed within a ten-year period. 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961(5).

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN10 Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

A plaintiff must show that the racketeering predicates are related, and that they amount to or pose a threat of continued criminal activity. Thus, to show a pattern of racketeering activity, a plaintiff must allege both continuity and relationship among the predicate acts.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN11 Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

The determination as to whether there is continuity so as to establish a pattern of racketeering activity is a fact-specific inquiry which hinges on the four factors. The court must weigh: (1) the number and variety of predicate acts and the length of time over which they were committed, (2) the number of victims, (3) the presence of separate schemes, and (4) the occurrence of distinct injuries.

936 F. Supp. 1494, *1494-1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12668, **1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN12 [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A tying arrangement is an agreement by a party to sell one product but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different (or tied) product. The seller uses the tying arrangement to shelter one product from an open, competitive market by increasing its sales through a coerced, tie-in purchase to a more successful product. The antitrust laws prohibit such arrangements because they restrain free competition in the market for the tied product.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN13 [blue icon] Tying Arrangements, Sherman Act Violations

An arrangement whereby a franchisee is required to purchase products or services from a third party can constitute an illegal tying arrangement.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Commercial Law (UCC) > General Provisions (Article 1) > General Provisions

HN14 [blue icon] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Under the Maryland Antitrust Act, a person may not: (1) by contract, combination, or conspiracy with one or more other persons, unreasonably restrain trade or commerce. Md. Code Ann., Com. Law I § 11-204\(a\)\(1\). The Maryland Act defines trade or commerce as all economic activity within the state. Md. Code Ann., Com. Law I § 11-201\(h\). Further, Md. Code Ann., Com. Law I § 11-202\(a\) specifies that the purpose of the Maryland Antitrust Act is to protect the public and foster fair and honest intrastate competition.

Insurance Law > ... > Directors & Officers Liability Insurance > Insured & Insurer Obligations > General Overview

Torts > ... > Fraud & Misrepresentation > Negligent Misrepresentation > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Discovery & Disclosure > Disclosure > Mandatory Disclosures

Torts > ... > Contributory Negligence > Limits on Application > Intentional Torts

HN15 [blue icon] Directors & Officers Liability Insurance, Insured & Insurer Obligations

A failure to disclose a fact is not actionable absent a duty to disclose.

Torts > Intentional Torts > Conversion > General Overview

HN16 [L] Intentional Torts, Conversion

Conversion is the wrongful or unauthorized exercise of dominion or control over a chattel. A chattel is an article of personal property, a thing personal and movable. It must consist of something identifiable and tangible.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > General Overview

Contracts Law > Breach > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Contracts Law > Breach > Breach of Contract Actions > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN17 [L] Defenses, Demurrs & Objections, Affirmative Defenses

Under Wisconsin law, a contract cause of action accrues at the moment the contract is breached, regardless of whether the injured party knew or should have known that the breach occurred.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Strike > Redundant Matters

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Strike > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN18 [L] Motions to Strike, Redundant Matters

A motion to strike is disfavored by the courts and the mere presence of redundant material in a pleading does not warrant granting a motion to strike, absent a showing of prejudice to the opposing party.

Counsel: Attorney(s) for Plaintiffs: Eric J. Szoke, Esq., Monica & Szoke, Far Hills, NJ.

Attorney(s) for Defendants: William H. Levit, Jr., Esq., Godfrey & Kahn, Milwaukee, WI.

Judges: HON. ROBERT W. WARREN

Opinion by: ROBERT W. WARREN

Opinion

---

[*1497] DECISION AND ORDER

936 F. Supp. 1494, *1497-1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12668, **1

This case involves a commercial dispute over the appropriate rates of insurance to be charged by a franchisor to a franchisee. In crafting their lawsuit against the defendants, the plaintiffs have chosen the shotgun approach; they have filed an 84-page, 231-paragraph, nineteen-count complaint. A rifle would have provided a better model. See Gagan v. American Cablevision, Inc., 77 F.3d 951, 955 (7th Cir. 1996). The defendants might have moved to dismiss the entire prolix complaint on the ground that it fails to include a "short and plain statement of the claim showing the pleader is entitled to relief" as required by Federal Rule 8(a)(2). See Vicom, Inc. v. Harbridge Merchant Services, Inc., 20 F.3d 771, 775-76 (7th Cir. 1994). Instead, [**2] they have chosen a more narrowly focused approach and have asked the Court to dismiss each and every count of the complaint for reasons specific to each. For the reasons that follow, the defendants' motion will be granted in part and denied in part, and Counts 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, and 19 of the complaint will be dismissed.

[*1498] I. BACKGROUND

According to the complaint, plaintiff Maryland Staffing Services, Inc. (Maryland Staffing) entered into a franchise agreement with defendant Manpower, Inc. (Manpower) in 1974. Under the terms of this agreement (which was renewed in 1976, 1978, 1984 and 1994), Maryland Staffing was given exclusive rights to use the corporate name and resources of Manpower and to engage in the business of providing temporary workers to customers under the corporate authority of Manpower in the State of Maryland.

Manpower compensated Maryland Staffing by paying it a percentage of Maryland Staffing's gross profit. The franchise agreement provides that gross profit is to be calculated by deducting certain expenses from Maryland Staffing's total monthly sales. Among these expenses are the costs of all necessary employer liability and workers' [**3] compensation insurance coverage for Maryland Staffing's temporary workers. (Franchise Agreement P 5a.) According to the terms of the agreement, Manpower was obligated to provide the funds for this insurance coverage. (Franchise Agreement P 3i.) Manpower then deducted the costs of this insurance from the total sales of Maryland Staffing as part of determining Maryland Staffing's gross profit.

The complaint alleges that beginning in 1987, Manpower began overcharging Maryland Staffing for workers compensation and liability insurance. Thus, the plaintiffs allege, Manpower wrongfully reduced Maryland Staffing's compensation by artificially raising its expenses and thus reducing its gross profit.

On December 27, 1995, the plaintiffs filed this suit asserting nineteen separate causes of action. They assert that Manpower and its employees violated the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), violated federal and state antitrust laws, violated Wisconsin and Maryland franchising laws, and breached numerous common law duties. On February 26, 1996, the defendants filed this motion seeking to dismiss all of the plaintiffs' claims for various deficiencies. The motion is now fully-briefed [**4] and ready for resolution.

II. LEGAL STANDARD

Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure permits HN1 a district court to dismiss a claim for "failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted." In evaluating a motion filed under this rule, the Court must accept as true all well-pleaded factual allegations contained in the plaintiffs' complaint and must draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the plaintiffs. Hishon v. King & Spalding, 467 U.S. 69, 73, 81 L. Ed. 2d 59, 104 S. Ct. 2229 (1984); Baxter Healthcare Corp. v. O.R. Concepts, Inc., 69 F.3d 785, 787 (7th Cir. 1995); Janowsky v. United States, 913 F.2d 393, 395 (7th Cir. 1990). The Court must deny a motion to dismiss unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiffs are unable to prove any set of facts which would entitle them to relief. See Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 (1957); Baxter Healthcare, 69 F.3d at 787.

III. DISCUSSION

A. Standing of Individual Plaintiffs.

936 F. Supp. 1494, *1498-1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12668, **4

The defendants first move to dismiss the claims of individual plaintiffs John and Nancy Chandonnet, the owners and officers of Maryland Staffing, on the ground that they [**5] lack standing to pursue these claims.

"As a general principle, HN2 a corporate shareholder does not have an individual right of action against third persons for damages to the shareholder resulting indirectly from injury to the corporation." Flynn v. Merrick, 881 F.2d 446, 449 \(7th Cir. 1989\). See also Twohy v. First Nat. Bank of Chicago, 758 F.2d 1185, 1194 \(7th Cir. 1985\). There are certain exceptions to this general rule, "such as where a special contractual duty exists between the wrongdoer and shareholder or where the shareholder suffers an injury separate and distinct from that suffered by other shareholders." Twohy, 758 F.2d at 1194 (citations omitted).

The plaintiffs claim that the Chandonnets fit within this latter exception; they claim to have suffered numerous injuries independent from those suffered by the corporation, Maryland Staffing. According to the [*1499] plaintiffs, "In every count of the complaint, the individual Plaintiffs allege personal pain, suffering, humiliation, emotional distress and mental anguish. These claims arise from mental and physical injuries sustained by the individual plaintiffs as a result of the Defendants' alleged conduct." (Plaintiffs' [*6] Brief in Opposition to Defendants' Motion at p. 8.)

The Court rejects the plaintiffs' characterization and concludes that the injuries alleged by the individual plaintiffs are not separate and distinct from those suffered by the corporation. The individual plaintiffs' alleged injuries are derivative of the alleged injuries to Maryland Staffing; the complaint alleges that the individual plaintiffs suffered mental and physical injuries as a result of the financial damages incurred by the corporation. Obviously investors in a firm suffer when the firm incurs a loss, "yet only the firm may vindicate the rights at issue." Flynn, 881 F.2d at 449 (quoting Carter v. Berger, 777 F.2d 1173, 1175 \(7th Cir. 1985\)). As was the case in Flynn, here "it is clear that the alleged injury is an injury to the corporation -- an injury to the shareholders was an indirect result of the damage done to the corporation as such, it does not create the necessary direct and independent harm required to maintain shareholder standing." Flynn, 881 F.2d at 449. Maryland Staffing is the only party authorized to vindicate its rights vis a vis Manpower. Accordingly, the defendants' motion will be granted [*7] in this regard, and the Chandonnets' claims will be dismissed.

B. Plaintiffs' RICO Claims.

HN3 To state a claim upon which relief can be granted under RICO, 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c), plaintiffs must allege that the defendants (1) conducted (2) an enterprise (3) through a pattern (4) of racketeering activity. Sedima S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., Inc., 473 U.S. 479, 496, 87 L. Ed. 2d 346, 105 S. Ct. 3275 \(1985\). The defendants move to dismiss the plaintiffs' RICO claims (Counts 1, 2, 6, and 7) because the plaintiffs have failed to adequately allege the third and fourth elements of the RICO cause of action.<sup>1</sup>

[**8] 1. Racketeering activity.

"Before HN4 a RICO plaintiff can allege a 'pattern of racketeering activity,' he must plead particular instances of 'racketeering activity' or 'predicate acts.'" Grove Holding v. First Wisconsin Natl. Bank, 803 F. Supp. 1486, 1501 \(E.D.Wis. 1992\). Here, the plaintiffs allege mail and wire fraud by the defendants as the predicate acts of racketeering activity to support their RICO claims.

HN5 In order to establish mail or wire fraud under 18 U.S.C. §§ 1341 and 1343, the plaintiffs must ultimately prove (1) that the defendants devised a scheme to defraud the plaintiffs; (2) that the defendants used the United

<sup>1</sup> The defendants also move to dismiss the plaintiffs' RICO claims on the ground that they are barred by the applicable statute of limitations. The Court rejects this argument, and concludes that the plaintiffs filed this action within the four-year statute of limitations applicable to RICO claims. See Agency Holding Corp. v. Malley-Duff & Associates, 483 U.S. 143, 156, 97 L. Ed. 2d 121, 107 S. Ct. 2759 \(1987\) (four-year statute of limitations applies to RICO claims). The plaintiffs did not discover (nor did they have reason to discover) the alleged insurance overcharges until 1994; they filed their complaint in 1996. See McCool v. Strata Oil Co., 972 F.2d 1452, 1464-65 \(7th Cir. 1992\).

936 F. Supp. 1494, *1499-1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12668, **8

States mails or caused interstate wire communications to take place for the purpose of executing that scheme; and (3) that the defendants did so knowingly and with the intent to defraud. See Pereira v. United States, 347 U.S. 1, 8-9, 98 L. Ed. 435, 74 S. Ct. 358 (1954); United States v. Walker, 9 F.3d 1245, 1249 (7th Cir. 1993), cert. denied, 511 U.S. 1096, 128 L. Ed. 2d 485, 114 S. Ct. 1863 (1994). The defendants claim that the complaint fails to adequately allege these elements because it fails to allege that the defendants acted with the requisite [**9] intent to defraud and because it fails to allege fraud with particularity as required by Rule 9(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

a. Intent to defraud.

HN6[<sup>1</sup>] In order to adequately allege mail or wire fraud as RICO predicate acts, the plaintiffs must plead scienter; they must allege that the defendants intentionally deceived the plaintiffs. See Grove Holding, 803 F. Supp. at 1501. In support of their motion to dismiss, [*1500] the defendants claim that "Maryland Staffing does not allege that any one of the individual defendants possessed the requisite scienter. Rather, it simply claims that, by virtue of their positions with Manpower, one or more of the defendants . . . knew Manpower was overcharging for insurance." (Memorandum of Defendants at p. 8.) Therefore, according to the defendants, the "Complaint does not allege which defendants allegedly had the necessary criminal intent. Thus, it does not afford a basis for believing that Maryland Staffing could prove scienter on the part of any of the individual defendants." (Id.) In response, the plaintiffs claim that the complaint does allege "knowledge on the part of the Defendants as to the fraudulent and/or misleading nature [**10] of the mailings, and [has] identified the source of this knowledge, namely the Defendants' participation in the decision to issue the burden rate notifications." (Plaintiffs Brief in Opposition at p. 13.)

Based upon our review of the complaint, we conclude that the plaintiffs have adequately alleged that the defendants acted with the requisite intent to defraud. Although their claims of intent to defraud are broad and nonspecific, HN7[<sup>1</sup>] under Rule 9(b) of the Federal Rules, "intent, knowledge and other condition of mind of a person may be averred generally." Fed.R.Civ.P. 9(b). This is only fair; the plaintiffs cannot be expected to know the defendants' state of mind until they have an opportunity to conduct pretrial discovery. See Emery v. American General Finance, Inc., 71 F.3d 1343, 1347 (7th Cir. 1995). The plaintiffs have generally averred intent to defraud and have thus satisfied this requirement. Accordingly, the court concludes that failure to plead scienter with greater specificity does not provide a basis for dismissing these RICO counts.

b. Federal Rule 9(b) particularity.

Rule 9(b), however, does require a RICO plaintiff who relies on mail and wire fraud as predicate [**11] acts to plead the circumstances constituting the alleged fraud "with particularity." Fed.R.Civ.P. 9(b). Particularity "means the who, what, when, where, and how: the first paragraph of any newspaper story." DiLeo v. Ernst & Young, 901 F.2d 624, 627 (7th Cir. 1990), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 941, 112 L. Ed. 2d 312, 111 S. Ct. 347 (1990). Moreover, "the caselaw and commentary agree that the reference to 'circumstances' in the rule requires 'the plaintiff to state "the identity of the person who made the misrepresentation, the time, place and content of the misrepresentation, and the method by which the misrepresentation was communicated to the plaintiff.'"'" Vicom, 20 F.3d at 777 (quoting Uni* Quality, Inc. v. Infotronx, Inc., 974 F.2d 918, 923 (7th Cir. 1992)(and in turn quoting Bankers Trust Co. v. Old World Republic Ins. Co., 959 F.2d 677, 683 (7th Cir. 1992)). In a case such as this where there are multiple defendants, Rule 9(b) HN8[<sup>1</sup>] prohibits "lumping together" all the defendants under a general accusation that they were participants in a scheme to defraud. Rather, the rule requires that the complaint inform each defendant of the nature of his alleged participation in the [**12] fraud and specify which defendants were involved in what activity. See 20 F.3d at 778 (citations omitted).

The defendants argue that the complaint fails to set forth the particulars of the alleged misrepresentations (who made them, when they were made, what the misrepresentations were etc.). Instead, claim the defendants, the complaint merely alleges that one or more of the individual defendants made the decision to overcharge Maryland Staffing for insurance, and that one or more of the defendants knew of the overcharges. The plaintiffs dispute this, arguing (without citing specific paragraphs of the complaint) that the "complaint identifies every relevant aspect of the alleged fraud in great factual detail." (Brief in Opposition at p. 16.)

Upon careful review of the complaint, the Court concludes that the plaintiffs have not pleaded the circumstances constituting the alleged fraud with the particularity required by Rule 9\(b\). The complaint alleges that Manpower concocted a scheme to defraud Maryland Staffing by overcharging it for insurance. It does not indicate who made that decision, when the decision was made, or any of the circumstances surrounding the alleged scheme. Rather, [\[\*\*13\]](#) the complaint simply [\[\*1501\]](#) reiterates the generic allegation that one or more of the individual defendants and/or unknown individuals within their control either made the decision or participated in the process by which the decision to execute the alleged scheme was made. These broad, general allegations fail to provide any of the defendants with notice of the nature of their participation in the alleged scheme. The complaint fails to indicate who did what, when, or where. As such, it is insufficient to satisfy Rule 9\(b\). Accordingly, the plaintiff's RICO claims will be dismissed on this basis.

2. Pattern of Racketeering Activity.

In addition to challenging the RICO counts for their failure to adequately allege racketeering activity, the defendants also move to dismiss these claims for failure to allege that the racketeering activity amounted to a pattern. Specifically, the defendants argue that "the Complaint alleges one victim and one scheme which allegedly took place over an unidentified period of time, on an unidentified number of occasions, through an unidentified number of mailings and wirings." (Defendants' Memorandum at p. 11.) This, they contend, is insufficient to establish [\[\*\*14\]](#) a pattern of racketeering activity as that term is defined under Seventh Circuit precedent.

HN9 RICO itself defines "pattern of racketeering activity" as at least two predicate acts of racketeering committed within a ten-year period. 18 U.S.C. § 1961\(5\). In an attempt to "sharpen the contours of this pattern requirement . . . the [Supreme] Court has stated that, because Congress enacted RICO not out of concern for a sporadic fraudulent act but out of concern for long-term conduct, 'a HN10 plaintiff . . . must show that the racketeering predicates are related, and that they amount to or pose a threat of continued criminal activity.' Vicom, 20 F.3d at 779 (quoting H.J. Inc., v. Northwestern Bell Tel. Co., 492 U.S. 229, 239, 106 L. Ed. 2d 195, 109 S. Ct. 2893 \(1989\)). Thus, to show a pattern of racketeering activity, a plaintiff must allege "both continuity and relationship among the predicate acts." Morgan v. Bank of Waukegan, 804 F.2d 970, 975 \(7th Cir. 1986\).

There is clearly a sufficient relationship among the predicate acts alleged in the complaint: All of the allegedly fraudulent acts relate to the insurance overcharges. Thus, continuity is the central question in [\[\*\*15\]](#) this case. "Continuity is 'both a closed-and-open-ended concept.'" Midwest Grinding Co., Inc., v. Spitz, 976 F.2d 1016, 1022 \(7th Cir. 1992\)(quoting H.J. Inc., 492 U.S. at 241). Here, we are concerned with closed-end continuity because the complaint alleges racketeering activity which has come to a close, not conduct which by its nature projects a future criminal activity. See id.

The Seventh Circuit has indicated that HN11 the determination as to whether there is continuity so as to establish a pattern of racketeering activity is a fact-specific inquiry which hinges on the four factors identified in the Morgan case. The Court must therefore weigh: (1) the number and variety of predicate acts and the length of time over which they were committed, (2) the number of victims, (3) the presence of separate schemes, and (4) the occurrence of distinct injuries. See Gagan, 77 F.3d at 962-63.

First, we look at the number, variety, and time-span of the alleged predicate acts, the most important of the four Morgan factors. See Gagan, 77 F.3d at 963. The plaintiffs allege a substantial number of predicate acts of mail and wire fraud over the course of nearly seven years. [\[\*\*16\]](#) This clearly weighs in favor of a finding of a sufficient allegation of a pattern of racketeering activity. However, the plaintiffs do not allege any variety in the types of predicate acts upon which they rely for this cause of action. All the predicate acts alleged consist of mail and wire fraud in effectuating the alleged insurance overcharge scheme. The lack of variety itself weighs against a finding of a pattern; the fact that the complaint relies exclusively on instances of mail and wire fraud is especially problematic for the plaintiffs because the Seventh Circuit "does not look favorably on relying on many instances of mail and wire fraud to form a pattern." Vicom, 20 F.3d at 781 (quoting Hartz v. Friedman, 919 F.2d 469, 473 \(7th Cir. 1990\)). This sensible skepticism is based upon the fact that under the mail and wire fraud statutes, each mailing [\[\*1502\]](#) or wiring is a separate act of mail fraud, even if each relates to the same scheme to defraud. See Ashland Oil, Inc. v. Arnett, 875 F.2d 1271, 1278 \(7th Cir. 1989\). "Thus, the number of offenses is only tangentially related to the underlying fraud, and can be a matter of happenstance." Id. This in turn "encourages bootstrapping [**17] of ordinary civil fraud cases into RICO suits." Id.

In addition, both the second and third Morgan factors militate against a finding of a pattern. The pattern of racketeering alleged involves only one scheme -- overcharging for insurance -- and one victim -- Maryland Staffing. See Vicom, 20 F.3d at 781-82. Although this, in and of itself, does not preclude a finding of an allegation of a pattern, see Morgan, 804 F.2d at 975-76, these factors further tip the scales against a finding of an adequate allegation of a pattern.

Finally, the Court concludes that the fourth Morgan factor weighs against a finding of a pattern. Although the plaintiffs claim that they suffered a separate and distinct injury each and every time Manpower billed them for the inflated insurance rates, the Court concludes that this does not allege separate and distinct injuries. There appears to be a divergence in authority within the Seventh Circuit as to whether each alleged overcharge constitutes a separate and distinct injury. The recently-decided Gagan case noted that under a similar scheme to the one alleged here, "each instance of false billing inflicted an injury separate and independent [**18] of the previous and succeeding instances of false billing." Gagan, 77 F.3d at 963 (citing Liquid Air Corp. v. Rogers, 834 F.2d 1297, 1305 (7th Cir. 1987), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 917 (1989)). In contrast, in the Vicom case, the Seventh Circuit reached the following conclusion reaffirming the holding of United States Textiles v. Anheuser-Busch Co., 911 F.2d 1261 (7th Cir. 1990): "In United States Textiles, we did not find that the defendant suffered [a distinct] economic injury each time [the plaintiff] ordered and it shipped . . . under the [contract] terms." Vicom, 20 F.3d at 782 (quoting United States Textiles, 911 F.2d at 1269). Thus, the Vicom court concluded that economic injuries arising out of the same original contract and similar predicate acts are not separate and distinct injuries for the purpose of establishing a pattern of racketeering activity. Id.

In our view, the Vicom approach makes more sense. We agree that the "natural and common sense approach to the pattern element of RICO would instruct that identical economic injuries suffered over the course of [several] years stemming from a single contract were not the type [**19] of injuries which Congress intended to compensate via the civil provisions of RICO." Vicom, 20 F.3d at 782 (quoting United States Textiles, 911 F.2d at 1269). Accordingly, we conclude that Maryland Staffing has failed to allege separate and distinct injuries.

Even accepting all the allegations in the plaintiffs' complaint as true, the Court cannot conclude that the RICO counts allege a pattern of racketeering activity. The only Morgan factors weighing in the plaintiffs' favor are the length of time during which the alleged fraudulent acts occurred and the number of predicate acts alleged. As discussed above, all other factors weigh against a finding of a pattern of racketeering activity. As the Seventh Circuit concluded after analyzing its post-Sedima civil RICO jurisprudence, "What seems clear from these cases is that multiple acts of mail fraud in furtherance of a single episode of fraud involving one victim and relating to one basic transaction cannot constitute the necessary pattern." Tellis v. U.S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 826 F.2d 477, 478 (7th Cir. 1986). Accordingly, the Court concludes that the plaintiffs' failure to allege a pattern of racketeering activity [**20] provides an independent basis for dismissing the RICO claims in the complaint.

3. RICO Summary.

In our view, Maryland Staffing has attempted to "fit a square peg in a round hole by squeezing [a] garden-variety business dispute[] into [a] civil RICO action." Midwest Grinding, 976 F.2d at 1025. Not every commercial dispute is remediable under the RICO: "While it is clear that the scope of civil RICO extends beyond the prototypical mobster or organized crime syndicate, it is equally evident that RICO has not federalized every state common-law cause of action [*1503] available to remedy business deals gone sour." Id. (citations omitted). This complaint fails to allege a violation of RICO because it fails to allege fraud with particularity and fails to adequately allege a pattern of racketeering activity. Accordingly, Counts 1, 2, 6, and 7 will be dismissed.

C. Plaintiffs' Antitrust Claims.

The plaintiffs have asserted a total of six separate state and federal antitrust claims against Manpower. Counts 3 and 8 of the complaint allege conduct that violates federal antitrust law; Counts 4 and 9 allege violations of Maryland's antitrust laws; and Counts 5 and 10 allege [**21] violations of the Wisconsin antitrust laws. The defendants move to dismiss all of these counts for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted.

1. Federal Antitrust Claims.

The Third and Eighth Count of the complaint allege violations of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, et seq. The plaintiffs contend that the agreement between Maryland Staffing and Manpower -- whereby Manpower allegedly forced Maryland Staffing to buy excessively overpriced insurance as a condition of using the Manpower name -- constitutes an unlawful tying arrangement which violates § 1 of the Sherman Act. The defendants move to dismiss these counts on the grounds that (1) the complaint fails to allege a tying arrangement, and (2) the complaint fails to allege an antitrust injury.

HN12[] A tying arrangement is "an agreement by a party to sell one product but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different (or tied) product." Northern Pacific Railroad Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514 \(1958\). The seller uses the tying arrangement to shelter one product from an open, competitive market by increasing its sales through a coerced, tie-in purchase [**22] to a more successful product. Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 \(1984\). The antitrust laws prohibit such arrangements because they restrain free competition in the market for the tied product.

In support of its motion to dismiss these claims, Manpower contends that the complaint does not allege an illegal tying arrangement. First, Manpower contends that there is no tying arrangement because Maryland Staffing does not actually purchase insurance from it; rather, the expense deductions for workers' compensation and liability insurance from Maryland Staffing's monthly sales constitutes a "passing on" of costs to the branch and representative offices. We reject this argument. The fact that Manpower did not directly sell the insurance to Maryland Staffing does not place the arrangement outside the scope of the Sherman Act. HN13[] An arrangement whereby a franchisee is required to purchase products or services from a third party can constitute an illegal tying arrangement. See Tire Sales Corp. v. Cities Service Oil Co., 637 F.2d 467, 474 \(7th Cir. 1980\), cert. denied, 451 U.S. 920, 68 L. Ed. 2d 312, 101 S. Ct. 1999 \(1981\). However, [**23] in order for the plaintiffs to maintain this claim, they will have to establish that Manpower had some economic interest in the third party suppliers (i.e. the insurance companies): "There is no illegal tying arrangement where a 'tying' company has absolutely no financial interest in the sales of a third company whose products are favored by the tie-in." Ohio-Sealy Mattress Manufacturing Co. v. Sealy Inc., 585 F.2d 821, 835 \(7th Cir. 1978\)(citations omitted), cert. denied, 440 U.S. 930, 59 L. Ed. 2d 486, 99 S. Ct. 1267 \(1979\).

Manpower next argues that there is no tying arrangement because the insurance provided to Maryland Staffing temporary employees was merely a component of the franchise agreement. In order to establish the existence of an illegal tying arrangement, Maryland Staffing must demonstrate that there are two separate and distinct products or services; if the products or services are simply component parts of a single product, no tying arrangement exists. Digital Equipment Corp. v. Uniq Digital Technologies, Inc., 73 F.3d 756 \(7th Cir. 1996\)(sale of a computer operating system that contains numerous component silicone chips cannot be considered an illegal [**24] tying arrangement); Jack Walters & Sons Corp. v. Morton Building, J\*15041 Inc., 737 F.2d 698, 704 \(7th Cir. 1984\)(a building exists as a single product, not a number of parts that can illegally be tied together), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1018, 83 L. Ed. 2d 359, 105 S. Ct. 432 \(1984\).

Jefferson Parish presented the general approach for determining whether products are separate or components for tie-in purposes: products are separate if there are separate markets for each product. Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 21. However, the Seventh Circuit noted that this approach is not particularly helpful; for example, while sugar and cereal may be different markets, no one would consider "sugary cereal" a tie-in product. Jack Walters & Sons, 737 F.2d at 704. Thus, besides employing the "separate market" analysis, the Court must consider the overall efficiency and benefit to competition that might result by selling parts together. Digital Equipment, 73 F.3d at 761.

While temporary staffing and insurance certainly appear to constitute different markets, the wording of the contract, the interaction between the markets, and the efficiency for both parties of building the insurance [**25] clause into the contract creates a considerable amount of ambiguity as to whether this purchase of insurance is a component part of the representative contract. This ambiguity makes it impossible for the Court, at this time, to rule on whether or not insurance existed as a component part of the agreement. Accordingly, the Court concludes that the complaint adequately alleges an illegal tying arrangement.

The second basis for the defendants' motion to dismiss is that the plaintiffs have failed to allege an antitrust injury. Antitrust laws were enacted for "the protection of competition, not competitors." Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 488, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1977) (emphasis in original)(quoting Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 320, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510, 82 S. Ct. 1502 (1962)). At first glance, Maryland Staffing appears to be claiming an injury relevant only to them, not to competition in the insurance market generally. However, at this stage of the proceedings, the Court cannot determine the exact impact of this transaction on competition within the markets. Manpower is not an insurance provider; it purchases insurance [**26] from an insurance provider to protect, under the terms of the agreement, its temporary employees. We doubt that Manpower's alleged overcharging of Maryland Staffing has a substantial effect on the insurance market, although it is certainly possible that Manpower exercises oligopsonistic buying power in the market. This possibility forecloses dismissal at this stage of the proceedings. Therefore, the Court will reserve passing judgment until the evidentiary record is more fully developed.

Although the Court is somewhat skeptical of the plaintiffs' ability to establish a violation of the Sherman Act, drawing all inferences in the plaintiffs' favor, it is conceivable that they will be able to maintain these causes of action for illegal tying arrangements. Accordingly, the defendants' motion to dismiss Counts 3 and 8 will be denied.

2. State Antitrust Claims.

Counts 4, 5, 9, and 10 of the complaint all allege either Maryland or Wisconsin state antitrust violations. The defendants move to dismiss all four counts because the complaint alleges an interstate injury, whereas Maryland and Wisconsin antitrust laws are concerned only with intrastate injuries.

It is clear that Maryland [**27] antitrust law is concerned exclusively with intrastate commercial activity. HN14 Under the Maryland Antitrust Act, a "person may not (1) by contract, combination, or conspiracy with one or more other persons, unreasonably restrain trade or commerce." Maryland Commercial Law Code Ann. § 11-204(a)(1). The Maryland Act defines trade or commerce as "all economic activity within the state." Maryland Commercial Law Code Ann. § 11-201(h)(emphasis added). Further, the statute specifies that the purpose of the Maryland Antitrust Act is to "protect the public and foster fair and honest intrastate competition." Maryland Commercial Law Code Ann. § 11-202(a)(emphasis added).

Wisconsin law will likewise only punish intrastate antitrust violations. At the beginning of the century, the Wisconsin Supreme [*1505] Court held that an alleged conspiracy to fix prices relating to shipping wood in Wisconsin and Michigan was subject to federal law only because the transaction involved interstate commerce. See Pulp Wood Co. v. Green Bay Paper & Fiber Co., 168 Wis. 400, 170 N.W. 230, cert. denied, 249 U.S. 610, 63 L. Ed. 800, 39 S. Ct. 291 (Wis. 1919); Pulp Wood Co. v. Green Bay Paper & Fiber Co., [**28] 157 Wis. 604, 615, 147 N.W. 1058, 1062 (Wis. 1914). Recent case law has continued to reaffirm this proposition of Wisconsin antitrust law. Grams v. Boss, 97 Wis. 2d 332, 346, 294 N.W.2d 473, 480 (Wis. 1980) (the Wisconsin antitrust law "was intended as a re-enactment ... of the federal Sherman Antitrust Act ... with application to intrastate as distinguished from interstate transactions); State v. Waste Management of Wisconsin, Inc., 81 Wis. 2d 555, 574, 261 N.W.2d 147, 155, cert. denied, 439 U.S. 865, 58 L. Ed. 2d 175, 99 S. Ct. 189 (Wis. 1978) (state act applies to intrastate commerce while federal act applies to interstate commerce); John Mohr & Sons, Inc. v. Jahnke, 55 Wis. 2d 402, 410, 198 N.W.2d 363, 367 (Wis. 1972); American Medical Transp., Inc. v. Curtis-Universal, Inc., 148 Wis. 2d 294, 299, 435 N.W.2d 286, 288-89 (Wis.App. 1988), rev'd on other grounds, 154 Wis. 2d 135, 452 N.W.2d 575 (1990); Independent Milk Producers Co-op v. Stoffel, 102 Wis. 2d 1, 6-7, 298 N.W.2d 102, 104 (Wis.App. 1980).

The only question remaining is whether the activities in the current case constitute interstate commerce. Maryland Staffing claims that the issue of whether [**29] these transactions are interstate is a question of fact to be determined at trial. The Court disagrees. "Interstate commerce," is to be defined broadly; while a contract between citizens of different states does not itself constitute interstate commerce, the correspondence and other events which culminate in a contract will be enough to qualify as interstate commerce. United States v. South-Eastern Underwriters Ass'n, 322 U.S. 533, 547, 88 L. Ed. 1440, 64 S. Ct. 1162 (1943). See also North American Co. v. Securities and Exchange Commission, 327 U.S. 686, 90 L. Ed. 945, 66 S. Ct. 785 (1946) (a business that relies on contacts with subsidiaries through mail engages in interstate commerce); Associated Press v. National Labor Relations Board, 301 U.S. 103, 128, 81 L. Ed. 953, 57 S. Ct. 650 (1936) ("Interstate communications of a business nature, whatever the means of such communication, is interstate commerce regulable by Congress under the Constitution.")

Here, Maryland Staffing of Maryland and Manpower of Wisconsin in all likelihood negotiated the franchise agreement across state lines. The franchise operated in Maryland. Any monitoring of the deal was done by Manpower from [**30] its offices in Wisconsin. Payments to and from either party must have been sent via mail; any necessary communications via phone, mail or fax across state lines. The dealings between the companies certainly fall within the Supreme Court's sweeping definition of "interstate communications of a business nature." For these reasons, the Court finds that the activities conducted between Maryland Staffing and Manpower were of an interstate nature and therefore are not subject to the individual state antitrust claims. Counts 4, 5, 9, and 10 shall therefore be dismissed.

D. Plaintiffs' Claims Under the Maryland Franchise Registration and Disclosure Law.

The defendants have moved to dismiss Count 11 of the complaint on the ground that the Maryland Franchise Registration and Disclosure Law did not become effective until seven years after the franchise agreement between Manpower and Maryland Staffing was executed. The plaintiffs have failed to respond to this argument.

Upon review of the Maryland statute, it is clear that it did not take effect until July 1, 1981. See Maryland Laws of 1981, Ch. 2 (1 CCH Bus. Franchise Guide P 3200). The franchise agreement between the parties was [**31] executed on April 29, 1974 -- seven years earlier. In addition, section 14-203(c) of the statute provides, "This subtitle does not apply to the renewal or extension of an existing franchise if there is no interruption in the operation of the franchised business;" thus, the fact that the Maryland Staffing/Manpower contract was renewed after the statute went into effect does not bring the statute [*1506] into force. Accordingly, the Court concludes that the Maryland Franchise Registration and Disclosure Law does not apply to this dispute. Count 11 of the complaint will therefore be dismissed.

E. Plaintiffs' Claims Under the Wisconsin Franchise Investment Law.

Count 12 of the complaint alleges a cause of action under the Wisconsin Franchise Investment Law (WFIL), Ch. 553, Wis. Stats. The defendants move to dismiss this count on the ground that the WFIL does not apply to a franchisee (such as Maryland Staffing) located outside of the State of Wisconsin.

Section 553.51 of the WFIL grants a franchisee a cause of action against the seller of a franchise when the sale was effectuated by fraud. This provision of the statute applies "when a sale or offer to sell is made in this state or [**32] when an offer to purchase is made and accepted in this state." Wis. Stats. § 553.59(1). The applicability provision further provides that "an offer to sell or purchase is made within this state . . . when the offer originates in this state or is directed by the offeror to this state and received by the offeree in this state." Wis. Stats. § 553.59(2). We read this section to require that (1) either the offer to sell or purchase the franchise (a) originates in Wisconsin or (b) is directed to Wisconsin and (2) the offer to sell or purchase is received in Wisconsin. This reading is supported by the legislative history of the WFIL, which makes it clear that the legislature was concerned with protecting "Wisconsin franchisees," which the state legislature believed to have suffered substantial losses as a result of unscrupulous franchisors. 1971 Wis. Laws, Ch. 241, § 1.

The plaintiffs claim that the complaint, fairly interpreted, should be read to allege that Manpower's offer to provide a franchise to Maryland Staffing must have originated in the State of Wisconsin and therefore the agreement comes within the scope of the statute. However, the complaint fails to allege that [**33] any facts which would support an inference that the offer was received by Maryland Staffing in Wisconsin. Maryland Staffing was a Maryland franchise, not a Wisconsin franchise. Accordingly, the Court concludes that Count 12 fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted and therefore will be dismissed.

F. Plaintiffs' Common Law Misrepresentation Claims.

Count 13 of the complaint asserts a common law cause of action for intentional misrepresentation; Count 18 alleges negligent misrepresentation. Specifically, the plaintiffs allege that Manpower made affirmative misrepresentations (both intentionally and negligently) when it charged Maryland Staffing inflated prices for insurance. (The misrepresentation being, "Maryland Staffing owes $ X for insurance" when in reality Maryland Staffing actually owed less than $ X.) Plaintiffs further claim that Manpower failed to disclose facts (the actual insurance charges) that it had a duty to disclose to Maryland Staffing.

The defendants first move to dismiss the intentional misrepresentation claim on the ground that the circumstances constituting the alleged fraud have not been pleaded with particularity as required by [Rule 9\(b\) \[\*\*34\] of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure](#). For the reasons discussed in section III.B.1.b., supra, the Court concludes that the plaintiffs have failed to plead the circumstances constituting the alleged fraud with the requisite particularity. The complaint fails to specify which defendant(s) made the decision to defraud the plaintiffs, when the decision was made, how the alleged misrepresentations were communicated to the plaintiffs, or any of the circumstances surrounding the alleged scheme. See Vicom, 20 F.3d at 777-78. Accordingly, Count 13 of the complaint will be dismissed for failure to comply with Rule 9\(b\).

The defendants also move to dismiss the plaintiffs' negligent misrepresentation claim because it is based upon Manpower's failure to disclose the alleged insurance overcharges and that the defendants owed the plaintiffs no duty to disclose this information. While it is true that HN15 a failure to disclose a fact is not actionable absent a duty to disclose, [see Ollerman v. O'Rourke Co. Inc., 94 Wis. 2d 17, \[\*1507\] 288 N.W.2d 95 \(Wis. 1980\)](#),<sup>2</sup> the complaint in this case alleges actual misrepresentations of fact -- statements by Manpower that Maryland Staffing owed a certain \*\*35 amount for insurance when it really owed less -- not a failure to disclose facts. Accordingly, the Court need not address the question of whether Manpower was under a duty to disclose any information to Maryland Staffing. Because the complaint adequately alleges a cause of action for negligent affirmative misrepresentations, the defendants' motion to dismiss Count 18 will be denied.

G. Plaintiffs' Common Law Conversion Claim.

In Count 14 of the complaint, the plaintiffs assert a common law conversion claim against Manpower. The plaintiffs contend that Manpower wrongfully converted money belonging to Maryland Staffing by overcharging Maryland Staffing for insurance. The defendants move to dismiss this count of the complaint on the ground that \*\*36 it fails to adequately allege a cause of action for conversion.

"Conversion HN16 is the wrongful or unauthorized exercise of dominion or control over a chattel." Farm Credit Bank of St. Paul v. F&A Dairy, 165 Wis. 2d 360, 371, 477 N.W.2d 357 \(Wis.App. 1991\), review denied, 482 N.W.2d 107 \(1992\). A "chattel" is an article of personal property -- a thing personal and movable. See Black's Law Dictionary (5th Edition) at p. 215. It must consist of something identifiable and tangible.

The plaintiffs claim that the chattel converted by the defendants consists of the funds improperly taken by Manpower via the alleged insurance overcharges. This allegation would be sufficient to support a conversion claim if the complaint alleged that the defendants exercised dominion over a specific, identifiable quantity of currency belonging to Maryland Staffing. See T.W.S., Inc. v. Nelson, 150 Wis. 2d 251, 252 n.3, 440 N.W.2d 833 \(Wis.App. 1989\). The complaint does not include such an allegation, however. It instead relies on a theory that the plaintiffs' intangible right to these funds was wrongfully converted by Manpower.

<sup>2</sup> The parties apparently agree that Wisconsin law governs the plaintiffs' common law claims. Accordingly, for purposes of this motion, the Court shall apply Wisconsin law. See Bush v. National School Studios, Inc., 139 Wis. 2d 635, 407 N.W.2d 883, 886 \(Wis. 1987\).

Historically, an action for conversion was based on the legal fiction [**37] that the plaintiff lost a chattel and that the defendant found it and converted it to his own use. See Prosser & Keeton on Torts (4th ed.) § 15 at pp. 79-81. Because intangible rights cannot be lost or found, "the original rule was that there could be no conversion of such property." Id. at p. 81. However, this rule has been relaxed to permit a plaintiff to recover for the full value of certain intangible rights where there is a conversion of a tangible thing in which intangible rights are merged. Restatement (Second) of Torts § 242. Thus, an action for conversion can now be maintained and a plaintiff can recover the full value of a check, a stock certificate, or an insurance policy. See Prosser & Keeton on Torts (4th ed.) § 15 at p. 83.

However, for conversion to lie -- even where intangible rights are involved -- there must be some tangible thing to which the intangible rights attach which is capable of being wrongfully controlled. There is no allegation in the complaint that the intangible right to money (which Maryland Staffing alleges Manpower converted) was represented by or connected to specific tangible objects. The complaint only alleges overcharges generally, [**38] and as such fails to allege a cause of action for conversion. Accordingly, the defendants' motion will be granted in this regard and Count 14 will be dismissed.

H. Plaintiffs' Claim for Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress.

The defendants move to dismiss Count 15 of the complaint for a failure to allege the elements of the tort of intentional infliction of emotional distress. The plaintiffs have apparently abandoned this cause of action; they have not responded to the defendants' motion in this regard. In light of this abandonment, and because the Court is satisfied that the complaint fails to allege all four elements of the tort of intentional infliction of [*1508] emotional distress, see Alsteen v. Gehl, 21 Wis. 2d 349, 359-61, 124 N.W.2d 312 (Wis. 1963), the defendants' motion will be granted and Count 15 will be dismissed.

I. Plaintiffs' Claim for Breach of Contract.

At page 76 of the complaint, the plaintiffs at last reach what appears to be the heart of this dispute -- a claim for breach of the franchise contract between Maryland Staffing and Manpower. The defendants move to dismiss this claim on the ground that it is barred by the six-year statute of limitations [**39] for breach of contract claims. Wis. Stats. § 893.43. According to the complaint, the alleged insurance overcharges began in 1987. This suit was commenced on December 27, 1994 -- nearly eight years later. Thus, according to the defendants, Count 16 must be dismissed to the extent that it depends upon acts or omissions taking place prior to December 27, 1989. In response, the plaintiffs rely upon the "discovery rule." They contend that the statute of limitations should be tolled until 1994 when they discovered the alleged overcharges. Thus, they submit, the claim is timely inasmuch as it was filed within two years of the discovery of the breach.

The plaintiffs' reliance on the discovery rule is misplaced because the rule does not apply to breach of contract actions. HN17 Under Wisconsin law, "a contract cause of action accrues at the moment the contract is breached, regardless of whether the injured party knew or should have known that the breach occurred." CLL Associates Ltd. Partnership v. Arrowhead Pacific Corp., 174 Wis. 2d 604, 607, 497 N.W.2d 115 (Wis. 1993). Thus, any breach of the contract which took place more than six years prior to the commencement of this action is barred [**40] by the statute of limitations. Accordingly, to the extent Count 16 relies upon alleged breaches of the franchise agreement that occurred before December 27, 1989, it shall be dismissed. However, because the complaint alleges a series of breaches of the contract, the plaintiffs may assert a claim for damages from the date of the first breach within the period of limitation (i.e. after December 27, 1989). Segall v. Hurwitz, 114 Wis. 2d 471, 491, 339 N.W.2d 333 (Wis.App. 1983).

J. Plaintiffs' Claim for Violation of the Duty of Good Faith and Fair Dealing.

In Count 17 of their complaint, the plaintiffs assert a cause of action against the defendants for a breach of the contract duty of good faith. The plaintiffs claim that the defendants breached this contract duty by overcharging Maryland Staffing for insurance and by concealing the overcharges. The defendants move to strike this claim pursuant to Federal Rule 12(f) on the basis that it is duplicative of the plaintiffs' breach of contract claim and is therefore redundant.

Wisconsin recognizes a cause of action for breach of the duty of good faith in the performance of a contract, though its contours are ill-defined. [**41] See Market Street Associates Ltd. Partnership v. Frey, 941 F.2d 588, 593-95 \(7th Cir. 1991\) ("Market Street I"). The obligation to deal with a contractual partner in good-faith is used as "a protection device to approximate terms not actually contained in the contract, but those that would have been included 'expressly if at the time of making the contract [the parties] had had complete knowledge of the future.'" Market Street Associates Ltd. Partnership v. Frey, 21 F.3d 782, 786 \(7th Cir. 1994\) ("Market Street II") (quoting Market Street I, 941 F.2d at 596). In this sense, the doctrine imposing a duty of good faith on parties to a contract amounts to the same thing as implying conditions into the contract. See Market Street I, 941 F.2d at 596 ("Whether we say that a contract shall be deemed to contain such implied conditions as are necessary to make sense of the contract, or that a contract obligates parties to cooperate in its performance in 'good faith' to the extent necessary to carry out the purposes of the contract, comes to much the same thing.").

Without question, Count 17 of the complaint overlaps with Count 16 (the "straight" breach of contract claim); both [**42] attempt to recover for the breach of an implied term in the franchise agreement. In all likelihood, these two Counts will constitute alternative claims for relief, permissible pleading under the Federal Rules. Fed.R.Civ.P. 1\*15091 8\(a\). Despite this overlap, the Court cannot conclude that Count 16 and 17 are redundant so as to warrant striking Count 17. HN18 ↑ A motion to strike is disfavored by the courts, see Williams v. Jader Fuel Co., Inc., 944 F.2d 1388, 1400 \(7th Cir. 1991\), cert. denied, 504 U.S. 957, 119 L. Ed. 2d 228, 112 S. Ct. 2306 (1992); Heller Financial Inc. v. Midwhey Powder Co., Inc., 883 F.2d 1286, 1294 \(7th Cir. 1989\), and the mere presence of redundant material in a pleading does not warrant granting a motion to strike, absent a showing of prejudice to the opposing party. See Wright & Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure: Civil 2d § 1382 at pp. 705-06. There is no showing of potential prejudice here. Moreover, upon review of the complaint and drawing all inferences in the plaintiffs' favor, the Court concludes that Count 17 adequately alleges a cause of action for breach of the duty of good faith. The plaintiffs may ultimately establish that certain terms regarding [**43] the insurance rates to be charged to Maryland Staffing and/or the obligation of Manpower to disclose overcharges should be read into the contract. Therefore the defendants' motion to dismiss this count will be denied.

K. Plaintiffs' Negligence Claim.

In Count 19 of the complaint, the plaintiffs assert a negligence cause of action based upon an alleged breach of the defendants' duty of reasonable care to the plaintiffs in the course of their business dealings. Defendants move to dismiss this count on the ground that it is barred by the "economic loss" doctrine, which prohibits a plaintiff from using tort law to recover for a commercial loss. See Miller v. U.S. Steel Corp., 902 F.2d 573, 574-75 \(7th Cir. 1990\); Sunnyslope Grading, Inc. v. Miller, Bradford & Risberg, Inc., 148 Wis. 2d 910, 921, 437 N.W.2d 213 \(Wis. 1989\). Plaintiffs concede that the "economic loss" doctrine bars recovery in negligence for purely commercial injuries, but argue that the complaint also alleges non-economic personal injuries sustained by the individual plaintiffs. However, for the reasons discussed in section III.A., supra, the individual plaintiffs are not proper parties to this suit. [**44] And the complaint does not allege that the corporation itself suffered any non-economic injury. Accordingly, the Court concludes that the plaintiffs' negligence claim is barred by the "economic loss" doctrine. Therefore, Count 19 will be dismissed.

IV. ORDER

The defendants' motion to dismiss is granted in part and denied in part. Based upon the foregoing analysis and pursuant to Fed.R.Civ.P. 12\(b\)\(6\):

1. The Court concludes that plaintiffs John and Nancy Chandonnet do not have standing to assert individual claims against the defendants. Accordingly, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that their claims be DISMISSED.
2. The Court further concludes that many of the causes of action asserted in the complaint fail to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Accordingly, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that Counts 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, and 19 be DISMISSED.

936 F. Supp. 1494, *1509L 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12668, **44

3. IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the plaintiffs are barred from recovering in contract for any losses incurred prior to December 27, 1989 under Wis. Stats. § 893.43.

4. Finally, counsel for all parties are ordered to appear at 9:00 A.M. on Monday September 9, 1996 in Room 390, U.S. [**45] Courthouse, 517 East Wisconsin Avenue, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, for scheduling conference.

SO ORDERED this 19th day of August, 1996, at Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

ROBERT W. WARREN

---

End of Document

Hyde v. Abbott Labs., Inc.

Court of Appeals of North Carolina

May 23, 1996, Heard In The Court Of Appeals ; August 20, 1996, Filed

No. COA95-1147

Reporter

123 N.C. App. 572 *; 473 S.E.2d 680 **; 1996 N.C. App. LEXIS 804 ***; 1996-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,532

SUZANNE HYDE and LYNN MEEKS, Plaintiffs-Appellants, v. ABBOTT LABORATORIES, INC., BRISTOL-MYERS SQUIBB CO., and MEAD JOHNSON & CO., Defendants-Appellees.

Prior History: [***1] Appeal by plaintiffs from order entered 27 July 1995 by Judge Janet Marlene Hyatt in Jackson County Superior Court. No. 94 CVS 500.

Disposition: Reversed and remanded.

Core Terms

---

purchasers, indirect, anti trust law, consumers, revised, damages, Clayton Act, violations, antitrust, antitrust statute, legislative intent, manufacturer, indirectly, persuasive authority, standing to sue, infant formula, instant case, construing, enacting, suits

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Record on Appeal

Civil Procedure > ... > Service of Process > Time Limitations > Untimely Service

HN1[ Appeals, Record on Appeal

The burden is on an appellant to establish that a record on appeal has been timely filed as required by the appellate rules.

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN2[ Defenses, Demurrers & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

A Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss presents the question whether, as a matter of law, the allegations of the complaint, are sufficient to state a claim upon which relief may be granted.

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN3 [] Defenses, Demurrs & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

In ruling on the motion to dismiss, the allegations of the complaint must be treated as true.

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN4 [] Defenses, Demurrs & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

In ruling upon a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) motion, the complaint is to be liberally construed, and should not be dismissed unless it appears to a certainty that plaintiff is entitled to no relief under any state of facts which could be proved in support of the claim.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN5 [] Private Actions, Remedies

See N.C. Gen. Stat. § 75-16.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > General Overview

HN6 [] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

A state may, consistent with the Supremacy Clause of the United States Constitution, U.S. Const. art. VI, § 2, allow an indirect purchaser to sue under the state's own antitrust laws. N.C. Gen. Stat. § 75-16 allows such a suit by an indirect purchaser.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN7 [] Legislation, Interpretation

In construing a statute, the court's primary task is to ensure that the purpose of the legislature, the legislative intent, is accomplished.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN8 [] Legislation, Interpretation

Legislative purpose is first ascertained from the plain words of the statute.

Headnotes/Summary

---

Headnotes

Monopolies and Restraints of Trade § 27 (NCI4th)-- indirect purchasers -- standing to sue under state antitrust laws

By enacting the 1969 revisions to N.C.G.S. § 75-16, the General Assembly clearly intended to expand the class of persons with standing to sue for a violation of North Carolina's antitrust laws, N.C.G.S. § 75-1 et seq., to include any person who suffers an injury under Chapter 75, regardless of whether that person purchased directly from the wrongdoer; therefore, the trial court erred in dismissing plaintiffs' claim alleging that defendants engaged in a conspiracy to fix the wholesale price of infant formula on the ground that plaintiffs, as indirect purchasers, lacked standing to bring this action under N.C.G.S. § 75-16.

Counsel: Hunter & Large, P.L.L.C., by Raymond D. Large, Jr. and Diane E. Sherrill, Sylva, NC, and Heins Mills & Olson, P.L.C., by Kent M. Williams, Minneapolis, MN, for plaintiffs-appellants.

Smith Helms Mullis & Moore, L.L.P., by Larry B. Sitton, James G. Exum, Jr. and Richard A. Coughlin, Greensboro, NC, for defendants-appellees Bristol-Myers Squibb Company, and Mead Johnson & Company.

Peetree Stockton, L.L.P., by John T. Allred, Charlotte, NC, Todd A. Gale, KIRKLAND & ELLIS, Chicago, IL, for defendant-appellant Abbott Laboratories, Inc.

Judges: WYNN, Judge. Judges EAGLES and SMITH concur.

Opinion by: WYNN

Opinion

---

[*573] [**681] WYNN, Judge.

In November of 1994, plaintiffs Suzanne Hyde and Lynn Meeks filed a class action lawsuit on behalf of themselves and others similarly situated (hereinafter plaintiffs), seeking damages from defendants for alleged violations of North Carolina's antitrust [***2] laws -- N.C. Gen. Stat. § 75-1 et seq. (1994).

Plaintiffs alleged that between 1980 and 1992, defendants violated several of the antitrust laws of this state by "engaging in a continuing conspiracy to fix the wholesale price of infant formula sold within the United States, including North Carolina." Plaintiffs further alleged that the above illegal conspiracy caused an increase in wholesale prices paid by the parties who purchased the infant formula directly from the manufacturer (hereinafter direct purchasers) above that which the direct purchasers would have paid absent any conspiracy.

[*574] Plaintiffs, who are North Carolina residents, are indirect purchasers from the defendant [**682] manufacturers because they purchased infant formula through parties other than the manufacturer. Plaintiffs contended that they paid higher prices than they would have paid but for the alleged illegal conduct.

In February of 1995, defendants moved to dismiss plaintiffs' complaint under N.C. Gen. Stat. § 1A-1, Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) (1990), alleging that plaintiffs, as indirect purchasers, lacked standing to bring this action under N.C.G.S. § 75-16. In an amended order filed 27 July 1995, Superior Court Judge [***3] Janet Marlene Hyatt agreed, and granted defendants' motion to dismiss. From this order, plaintiffs appealed.

Prior to oral arguments before this Court, plaintiffs and defendant Abbott Laboratories entered into a tentative settlement agreement which must be approved by the superior court under N.C.R. Civ. P. Rule 23\(c\) (1996). As a result, plaintiffs and defendant Abbott Laboratories jointly moved for dismissal of the appeal against Abbott Laboratories. We granted that motion. Accordingly, this appeal proceeds against the remaining defendants, Bristol-Myers Squibb and Mead Johnson (hereinafter defendants).

123 N.C. App. 572, *574 LÁI HÀU ĐỀ CÁC Ở TỈ QUỐC GIA 1996 N.C. App. LEXIS 804, ***3

As an initial matter, we note that the record on appeal does not clearly indicate whether the proposed record on appeal was served on 7 September 1995 or 11 October 1995. If service was accomplished on the later date, the proposed record was not timely served and the appeal is subject to dismissal. Brooks v. Jones, 121 N.C. App. 529, 530, 466 S.E.2d 344, 345 (1996); Wilson v. Bellamy, 105 N.C. App. 446, 457, 414 S.E.2d 347, 353, disc. review denied, 331 N.C. 558, 418 S.E.2d 668 (1992). HN1[] The burden is on an appellant to establish that a record on appeal has been timely [***4] filed as required by the appellate rules. However, because there is a discrepancy in the record as to the date of service and given the great public importance of the issues in this case, we elect to treat the earlier date as the correct date of service. N.C.R. App. P. 2 (1996); Wilson, 105 N.C. App. at 457, 414 S.E.2d at 353.

On appeal, plaintiffs contend that the trial court erred by dismissing their complaint under N.C.R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) on the grounds that indirect purchasers lack standing under N.C.G.S. § 75-16. We agree, and therefore reverse the order of the trial court.

HN2 [↑] A Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss presents the question "whether, as a matter of law, the allegations of the complaint, . . . are [*575] sufficient to state a claim upon which relief may be granted . . ." Harris v. NCNB, 85 N.C. App. 669, 670, 355 S.E.2d 838, 840 (1987). HN3 [↑] In ruling on the motion to dismiss, the allegations of the complaint must be treated as true. Stanback v. Stanback, 297 N.C. 181, 185, 254 S.E.2d 611, 615 (1979). HN4 [↑] In ruling upon a Rule 12(b)(6) motion, the complaint is to be liberally construed, and should not be dismissed "unless it appears to a certainty that plaintiff is entitled [***5] to no relief under any state of facts which could be proved in support of the claim." Davis v. Messer, 119 N.C. App. 44, 51, 457 S.E.2d 902, 906-07, disc. review denied, 341 N.C. 647, 462 S.E.2d 508 (1995).

N.C.G.S. § 75-16 governs the determination of standing for redress of Chapter 75 violations. Cf. La Notte, Inc. v. New Way Gourmet, Inc., 83 N.C. App. 480, 485, 350 S.E.2d 889, 892 (1986), cert. denied and appeal dismissed, 319 N.C. 459, 354 S.E.2d 888 (1987). That section HN5 [↑] provides:

75-16. Civil action by person injured; treble damages.

If any person shall be injured or the business of any person, firm or corporation shall be broken up, destroyed or injured by reason of any act or thing done by any other person, firm or corporation in violation of the provisions of this Chapter, such person, firm or corporation so injured shall have a right of action on account of such injury done, and if damages are assessed in such case judgment shall be rendered in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant for treble the amount fixed by the verdict.

Section 75-16 is similar to section 4 of the federal Clayton Act. Marshall v. Miller, 302 [***6] N.C. 539, 542, 276 S.E.2d 397, 399 (1981).

Section 4 of the Clayton Act states:

[**683]

Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws may sue therefore in any district court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides or is found or has an agent, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the cost of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee.

15 U.S.C. § 15 (1991).

In Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707, 97 S. Ct. 2061, reh'g denied, 434 U.S. 881, 54 L. Ed. 2d 164, 98 S. Ct. 243 (1977), the United States Supreme Court held that indirect purchasers, such as plaintiffs in the [*576] instant case, are not injured in their business within the meaning of section 4 of the Clayton Act, and thus, with certain exceptions, lack standing to pursue a claim under the federal antitrust laws. Id. at 728-29, 52 L. Ed. 2d at 714. The Court found this holding to be required by Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 392 U.S. 481, 20 L. Ed. 2d 1231, 88 S. Ct. 2224 (1968).

Illinois Brick held that direct purchasers suffer [***7] the entire injury which follows from a violation of the federal antitrust laws, and are the only private parties allowed to sue for federal antitrust violations. Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at 728-29, 52 L. Ed. 2d at 714. Consequently, the plaintiffs in the instant case could not pursue their claim under the federal antitrust laws unless they could demonstrate that their facts fit within an exception to Illinois Brick. Plaintiffs conceded this point at oral argument.

However, in California v. Arc America Corp., 490 U.S. 93, 104 L. Ed. 2d 86, 109 S. Ct. 1661 (1989), the United States Supreme Court held that HN6[<sup>1</sup>] a state may, consistent with the Supremacy Clause of the United States Constitution, U.S. Const. art. VI, § 2, allow an indirect purchaser to sue under the state's own antitrust laws. Id. at 105-06, 104 L. Ed. 2d at 97. The issue in this case is whether N.C.G.S. § 75-16 allows such a suit by an indirect purchaser. We hold that it does.

HN7[<sup>1</sup>] In construing a statute, "our primary task is to ensure that the purpose of the legislature, the legislative intent, is accomplished." Electric Supply Co. v. Swain Electrical Co., 328 N.C. 651, 656, 403 S.E.2d 291, 294 (1991). HN8[<sup>1</sup>] Legislative purpose [***8] is first ascertained from the plain words of the statute." Id. "Our task is to determine whether the intent of the Legislature will be more fully served [if we construe this section in the manner argued by plaintiffs]." Marshall, 302 N.C. at 543, 276 S.E.2d at 400.

Plaintiffs contend that by enacting N.C.G.S. § 75-16 the legislature intended to grant standing to a consumer purchasing indirectly from a manufacturer or service provider to sue that manufacturer or service provider for a violation of Chapter 75, and that we should interpret this section to allow an indirect purchaser standing to sue for such violations.

Prior to a 1969 revision, N.C.G.S. § 75-16 began: "If the business of any person, firm or corporation shall be broken up, destroyed or injured . . ." (emphasis supplied). In 1969, the General Assembly amended this section. The first sentence now begins:

[*577] If any person shall be injured or the business of any person, firm or corporation shall be broken up, destroyed or injured by reason of any act or thing . . . in violation of the provisions of this Chapter, such person, firm or corporation so injured shall have a right of action . . . .

[***9] (emphasis supplied). "Changes made by the legislature to statutory structure and language are indicative of a change in legislative intent and therefore provide some weight in our analysis." Electric Supply Co., 328 N.C. at 656, 403 S.E.2d at 295.

In enacting the 1969 revisions, the General Assembly intended to "enable a person injured by deceptive acts or practices to recover treble damages from a wrongdoer." Hardy v. Toler, 24 N.C. App. 625, 630-31, 211 S.E.2d 809, 813, modified on other grounds, 288 N.C. 303, 218 S.E.2d 342 (1975); see also Marshall, 302 N.C. at 543, 276 S.E.2d at 400 (holding that by enacting N.C.G.S. § 75-16, "our Legislature intended to establish an effective private cause of action for aggrieved consumers in this State"); Winston Realty [*684] Co. v. G.H.G., Inc., 314 N.C. 90, 95, 331 S.E.2d 677, 680 (1985) (stating that the purpose of N.C.G.S. § 75-16 was to "encourage private enforcement in the marketplace and to make the bringing of such a suit more economically feasible").

Defendants contend that by amending N.C.G.S. § 75-16, the General Assembly merely intended to change the law to allow standing to recover for non-business injuries. [***10] In short, defendants contend that in enacting the 1969 revisions, the legislature sought to widen the standing provision to allow standing for additional types of injuries, but not to additional classes of persons. Defendants further contend that although the amendment was intended to protect consumers, this intent does not indicate that the General Assembly intended to allow recovery by indirect purchasers.

Defendants are correct insofar as the 1969 revisions clearly granted standing to those suffering non-business injuries. However, defendants' contention that the General Assembly somehow intended to exclude a large class of persons -- indirect purchasers -- from recovery for non-business injuries is not persuasive. Instead, we hold that by enacting the 1969 revisions to N.C.G.S. § 75-16, the General Assembly clearly intended to expand the class of persons with standing to sue for a violation of Chapter 75 to include any person who suffers an injury under Chapter 75, regardless of whether that person purchased directly from the wrongdoer.

[*578] We find it significant that the General Assembly chose to amend N.C.G.S. § 75-16 by adding the phrase "if any person" to the beginning of the [***11] section. As it is currently written, N.C.G.S. § 75-16 provides standing to any person who suffers any injury, as well as for any business injury. By adding the above language, the General Assembly intended to provide a recovery for all consumers. See Marshall, 302 N.C. at 543-44, 276 S.E.2d at 400.

Defendants argue that consumers are not the same as indirect purchasers, since consumers sometimes purchase directly from the manufacturer or service provider. However, consumers often purchase goods from a wholesaler or retailer, and thus are often indirect purchasers. We find it unlikely that the legislature intended to "establish an effective private cause of action for aggrieved consumers in this State" see Id., but intended to exclude from this remedy all indirect purchasers, many of whom are consumers.

In addition, defendants argue that we should interpret N.C.G.S. § 75-16 consistent with the United States Supreme Court's interpretation of section 4 of the Clayton Act in Illinois Brick. Federal case law interpretations of the federal antitrust laws are persuasive authority in construing our own antitrust statutes. Madison Cablevision v. City of Morganton, 325 F.2d 121 N.C. 634, 656, 386 S.E.2d 200, 213 \(1989\); Johnson v. Ins. Co., 300 N.C. 247, 262, 266 S.E.2d 610, 620 \(1980\); North Carolina Steel Corp. v. National Council on Compensation Insurance, et al., N.C. App. , 472 S.E.2d 578 \(1996\).

The most recent substantive revision to N.C.G.S. § 75-16 took place in 1969. (The General Assembly revised this section slightly in 1977 by removing the words "by a jury." This revision did not alter the substance of this section). By contrast, Illinois Brick was not decided until 1977. It follows that our General Assembly could not have intended to adopt a judicial construction of N.C.G.S. § 75-16 which did not exist at the time of the revision. It is a familiar canon of statutory construction that when a legislature borrows from the statutes of another legislative body, the provisions of that legislation should be construed as they were in the other jurisdiction at the time of their adoption. Shannon v. United States, 512 U.S. \_\_, \_\_, 129 L. Ed. 2d 459, 467, 114 S. Ct. 2419 \(1994\); Carolene Products Co. v. United States, 323 U.S. 18, 25-26, 89 L. Ed. 15, 21, 65 S. Ct. 1 \(1944\). Thus, in the subject case [***13] we consider as persuasive authority federal cases interpreting the federal antitrust laws as they existed in 1969.

[*579] The United States Supreme Court decided Hanover Shoe in 1968 and Illinois Brick in 1977. Since Hanover Shoe changed the manner in which direct purchasers were allowed to sue under the federal antitrust laws, and was later found by Illinois Brick to forbid an [**685] indirect purchaser from suing, we believe that federal cases between 1968 and 1977 are most instructive in discerning the state of federal antitrust laws when the General Assembly amended N.C.G.S. § 75-16 in 1969.

Prior to the United States Supreme Court's decision in Illinois Brick, most federal circuit courts construed section 4 of the Clayton Act to allow suits by indirect purchasers. See e.g., In re Western Liquid Asphalt Cases, 487 F.2d 191 \(9th Cir. 1973\), cert. denied, 415 U.S. 919, 39 L. Ed. 2d 474 (1974); Illinois v. Bristol-Myers Co., 152 U.S. App. D.C. 367, 470 F.2d 1276 \(D.C. Cir. 1972\); [West Virginia v. Chas. Pfizer & Co., 440 F.2d 1079 \(2d Cir.\), cert. denied sub nom. Cotler Drugs, Inc., v. Chas. Pfizer & Co., 404 U.S. 871, 30 L. Ed. 2d 115, 92 S. Ct. 81 \(1971\); Illinois v. Ampress Brick Co. \[\*\*\*14\] , 536 F.2d 1163 \(7th Cir. 1976\)](#), rev'd sub nom. Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707, 97 S. Ct. 2061, reh'g denied, 434 U.S. 881, 54 L. Ed. 2d 164, 98 S. Ct. 243 (1977); but see Mangano v. American Radiator & Standard Sanitary Corp., 438 F.2d 1187 (3d Cir. 1971) (per curiam). We note further that the Fourth Circuit allowed an indirect purchaser to sue under section 4 of the Clayton Act in South Carolina Council of Milk Producers, Inc. v. Newton, 360 F.2d 414 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 385 U.S. 934, 17 L. Ed. 2d 215, 87 S. Ct. 295 (1966). Although this decision occurred before the Supreme Court's decision in Hanover Shoe, it represents the Fourth Circuit's most recent pronouncement on this issue prior to the amendments to N.C.G.S. § 75-16 in 1969.

Based on the foregoing, we conclude that the great weight of federal case law authority in 1969 held that indirect purchasers were allowed standing under section 4 of the Clayton Act. Thus, insofar as we consider federal precedent as persuasive authority regarding construction of N.C.G.S. § 75-16, we find that the relevant federal precedent counsels us to allow plaintiffs standing under N.C.G.S. § 75-16.

Defendants cite [***15] Stifflear v. Bristol-Myers Squibb Co., No. 95 CA0201, 1996 WL 219232 (Colo. Ct. App. 1996), and Abbott Laboratories, Inc. v. Segura, 907 S.W.2d 503 (Tex. 1995) in support of their argument that indirect purchasers lack standing to sue under state antitrust laws patterned after section 4 of the Clayton Act. These cases, however, are distinguishable.

[*580] In Stifflear, the Colorado Court of Appeals held that indirect purchasers do not have standing to sue under the Colorado antitrust laws. *Id. at * 7*. Stifflear is distinguishable from the instant case for two principal reasons.

First, Colorado's antitrust laws were modeled on Wisconsin's antitrust statute, which was itself modeled on the federal Sherman and Clayton Antitrust Acts. *Id. at * 3*. Because the Colorado statute was patterned on the Wisconsin provision, the Stifflear Court stated:

Given the substantial similarity in text and purpose present in the federal and state antitrust statutes, we believe that federal decisions construing the Sherman and Clayton Acts, although not necessarily controlling on our interpretation of the Colorado law, are nevertheless entitled to careful scrutiny in determining [***16] the scope of the state antitrust statute.

Id. (quoting People v. North Avenue Furniture & Appliance, Inc., 645 P.2d 1291, 1295-96 (Colo. 1982)). By contrast, our Supreme Court has stated only that federal cases are persuasive authority in construing our antitrust statutes. Madison Cablevision, 325 N.C. at 656, 386 S.E.2d at 213.

Second, Colorado substantially revised its antitrust laws in 1992. Stifflear, 1996 WL 219232 at * 3. The revised Colorado antitrust law provides that: "The attorney general may bring a civil action on behalf of any governmental or public entity . . . injured, either directly or indirectly, in its business or property by reason of any violation of this article . . ." Colo. Rev. Stat. § 6-4-111(2) (1992) (emphasis supplied). Section 6-4-111(3)(a) of the Colorado statutes provides: "The attorney general may bring a civil action as parens patriae on behalf of natural persons residing within the state who are injured in their business or property . . ." Notably, this section does not include the language "injured, either directly or indirectly" which is found in § 6-4-111(2). [**686] The Stifflear Court found the absence of the [***17] phrase "either directly or indirectly" in § 6-4-111(3)(a) significant because the difference in statutory language indicated that the Colorado General Assembly considered whether to allow indirect purchasers to sue, and determined that the only indirect purchaser allowed to bring suit is a governmental agency. By contrast, our General Assembly has not substantively revised N.C.G.S. § 75-16 since the United States Supreme Court decision in Illinois Brick.

[*581] Since we consider federal case law only as persuasive authority, rather than giving it "careful scrutiny," and because our General Assembly has not substantively revised N.C.G.S. § 75-16 since Illinois Brick was decided, we find Stifflear unpersuasive for this case.

Segura is also distinguishable from the instant case. In Segura, the Texas Attorney General sued the defendants seeking damages under the state antitrust act as parens patriae on behalf of consumers who purchased infant formula indirectly from the defendants. The Attorney General alleged that defendants engaged in price fixing and other activities which were illegal under Texas' antitrust laws. Segura, 907 S.W.2d at 504. Private plaintiffs, [***18] representing a class of consumers who purchased infant formula indirectly from the defendants, intervened and sought damages for the same conduct for which the State of Texas sought damages. The private plaintiffs, however, alleged that defendants' conduct violated Texas' Deceptive Trade Practices Act, Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. § 17.50\(a\)\(3\) (1987). The private plaintiffs conceded that their claim would be barred under Texas' antitrust laws, because the Texas Legislature mandates that Texas antitrust laws be harmonized with federal antitrust laws. Segura, 907 S.W.2d at 504-05. The Texas Supreme Court held that since the private plaintiffs' claims would be barred under Texas antitrust laws, the claims must be barred under Texas' Deceptive Trade Practices Act as well, in order to prevent an "end run" around the policies allowing only direct purchasers to recover under Texas' antitrust laws. Id. at 505-06. Unlike the Texas Legislature, our General Assembly has not mandated that our antitrust laws be construed in harmony with federal antitrust laws.

Plaintiffs cite Blake v. Abbott Laboratories, Inc., No. 03 A01-9509-CV-00307, 1996 WL 134947 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1996) to support [***19] their argument that indirect purchasers have standing to sue under state antitrust statutes. The standing provision of the Tennessee statute provides: "Any person who is injured or damaged by any . . . arrangement, contract, agreement, trust, or combination described in this part may sue for and recover . . . from any person operating such trust or combination, the full consideration or sum paid . . ." Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-25-106. The Blake Court held that this section grants standing to any person or persons injured under Tennessee antitrust laws "whether the individual is a direct purchaser or indirect purchaser." Blake, 1996 WL at * 3. Blake held that Tennessee antitrust laws are not identical to federal antitrust laws, and the Illinois Brick limitation did not apply in Tennessee. Id. at * 3-4.

[*582] Since we are not required to construe our antitrust statute in harmony with the federal antitrust laws, we likewise find that the Illinois Brick limitation does not apply in North Carolina.

Defendants further contend that the General Assembly's failure to explicitly amend N.C.G.S. § 75-16 to allow an indirect purchaser standing to sue for violations of our antitrust [***20] laws demonstrates that the General Assembly accepted the Illinois Brick rule. We disagree. In Styers v. Phillips, 277 N.C. 460, 472, 178 S.E.2d 583, 590-91 \(1971\), our Supreme Court stated:

The rule is that ordinarily the intent of the legislature is indicated by its actions, and not by its failure to act . . . .

In James v. Young, 77 N.D. 451, 43 N.W.2d 692, it was held that the legislature's failure to pass a bill "cannot be said to indicate any intent on the part of the legislature. A public policy is declared by the action of the legislature, not by its failure to act . . ." In Moore v. Board of Freeholders of Mercer County, 76 N.J. Super. 396, 184 A.2d 748, the defendants argued that the failure of the [**687] legislature to pass a bill specifically authorizing a citizen to photocopy public records indicated a denial of the right. The court said, "We decline to attribute any such attitude to the legislature. Defendant's conclusion can be nothing more than conjecture. Many other reasons for legislative inaction readily suggest themselves."

Id. See also Blake, 1996 WL at * 3 (holding that the failure to enact legislation is not at [***21] all indicative of legislative intent).

The rule in North Carolina is clear that the intent of the General Assembly may only be discerned by its actions, and not its failure to act. As a result, the failure of the General Assembly to amend N.C.G.S. § 75-16 to allow an indirect purchaser to sue is of no consequence to the case sub judice.

We note further that the concerns which underlie the United States Supreme Court decision in Illinois Brick are less worrisome in the instant case. Illinois Brick set out several reasons why federal antitrust laws disallowed suits by indirect purchasers.

First, the Illinois Brick Court was concerned with the possibility of multiple liability. Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at 730, 52 L. Ed. 2d at 715. The Court expressed belief that both a direct and an indirect purchaser would recover the full amount of the overcharge, thus subjecting [*583] a defendant to liability greater than three times the amount of its antitrust violation. Id. However, there are few, if any, reported instances of a defendant paying treble damages to two different classes of purchasers based on a single antitrust violation. Thomas Greene, Should Congress Preempt [***22] State Indirect Purchaser Laws? Counterpoint: State Indirect Purchaser Remedies Should be Preserved, 5 WTR Antitrust 25, 26-27 (1990).

In addition, the United States Supreme Court in Arc America stated that Illinois Brick was concerned solely with the construction of federal antitrust laws, and not at all with state court constructions of state antitrust laws. Arc America, 490 U.S. at 102-03, 104 L. Ed. 2d at 95-96. The Arc America Court further stated, "Nothing in Illinois Brick suggests that it would be contrary to congressional purposes for States to allow indirect purchasers to recover under their own antitrust laws." Id. at 103, 104 L. Ed. 2d at 96. Regarding the possibility of state law remedies resulting in multiple liability for antitrust defendants, Arc America held that there is no federal policy against states imposing liability in addition to that imposed by federal law. Id. at 105, 104 L. Ed. 2d at 97. In short, our appellate courts are free to interpret North Carolina antitrust laws in a manner we believe to be most consistent with the purposes behind our antitrust laws. We find that a slight risk of multiple liability is greatly outweighed [***23] by the benefit of advancing the aforementioned policies of N.C.G.S. § 75-16.

Second, the Illinois Brick Court was concerned that "requiring direct and indirect purchasers to apportion the recovery [in a proceeding under section 4 of the Clayton Act] would result in no one plaintiff having a sufficient incentive to sue under that statute." Arc America, 490 U.S. at 104, 104 L. Ed. 2d at 96-97. However, "State indirect purchaser statutes pose no similar risk to the enforcement of the federal law." Id. at 104, 104 L. Ed. 2d at 97. This is true because a defendant guilty of an antitrust violation would face paying damages to indirect purchasers under state antitrust laws as well as paying any damages awarded to direct purchasers under federal antitrust laws. As a result, both direct and indirect purchasers would have a sufficient incentive to sue for violations of Chapter 75 under our construction of N.C.G.S. § 75-16.

Finally, the Illinois Brick Court was concerned that allowing a suit by indirect purchasers would lead to highly complex litigation, due to the necessity of determining the proportion of the overcharge [*584] which was passed on to indirect purchasers. Illinois [***24] Brick, 431 U.S. at 732, 52 L. Ed. 2d at 716-17. As plaintiffs conceded at oral argument, this concern is valid. It is clear that a suit by indirect purchasers under our antitrust laws will be complex. However, when asked at oral argument whether "chaos reigned" in states which have allowed indirect purchaser suits, defendants were unable to cite a single example. This failure to cite a single indirect purchaser case in which a court has been faced with an impossibly [**688] complex suit counsels us that a fear of complexity is not a sufficient reason to disallow a suit by an indirect purchaser, given the intent of the General Assembly to "establish an effective private cause of action for aggrieved consumers in this State." Marshall, 302 N.C. at 543, 276 S.E.2d at 400.

The United States Supreme Court has stated that its interpretation of section 4 of the Clayton Act must "promote the vigorous enforcement of the antitrust laws." Kansas v. Utilicorp United Inc., 497 U.S. 199, 214, 111 L. Ed. 2d 169, 184, 110 S. Ct. 2807 (1990). The Utilicorp Court implied that it would have allowed indirect purchaser suits in the case before it if the Court was convinced that indirect purchaser suits would better [***25] promote the goals of the antitrust laws. Id.

We believe that allowing indirect purchasers to sue for Chapter 75 violations will best advance the legislative intent that such violations be deterred, and that aggrieved consumers have a private cause of action to redress Chapter 75 violations. Accordingly, we hold that indirect purchasers have standing under N.C.G.S. § 75-16 to sue for Chapter 75 violations.

For the foregoing reasons, the decision of the trial court is reversed, and this case is remanded for proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

Reversed and remanded.

Judges EAGLES and SMITH concur.

---

End of Document

Tops Mkts., Inc. v. Quality Mkts., Inc.

United States District Court for the Western District of New York

August 21, 1996, Decided ; August 21, 1996, OPINION FILED

93-CV-0302E(F)

Reporter

1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12432 *; 1996-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,586

TOPS MARKETS, INC., Plaintiff, -vs- QUALITY MARKETS, INC., THE PENN TRAFFIC COMPANY, SUNRISE PROPERTIES, INC. and JAMES V. PAIGE, JR., Defendants.

Notice: [*1] NOT FOR PUBLICATION

Subsequent History: As Amended November 21, 1996. As Amended March 3, 1997.

Disposition: Defendants' motions for summary judgment granted as to Counts I and II in the Complaint and that, insomuch as supplemental jurisdiction over the state-law claims declined, state-law claims in Counts III-VI dismissed without prejudice

Core Terms

---

competitors, supermarket, site, monopolization, parcels, monopoly power, Sherman Act, market power, antitrust, parties, anti trust law, market share, counterclaims, state-law, prices

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

HN1[] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

A motion for summary judgment will be denied unless the court determines, after reviewing all the evidence presented, that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law. A genuine issue of fact requires such evidence that a reasonable jury could thereupon return a verdict for the non-moving party and, when determining if a genuine factual issue exists, the court must consider the substantive evidentiary burdens assigned to each party. Although all reasonable inferences must be drawn most favorably to the non-moving party, antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences that may be drawn. A claimant alleging antitrust violations must set forth facts that tend to preclude an inference of permissible conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN2 Sherman Act, Claims

Section 1 of the Sherman Act, codified at 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, prohibits every contract or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states. A plaintiff claiming a violation of such statute must establish some form of concerted action between at least two legally distinct entities, and that such action constitutes an unreasonable restraint of trade. In the usual case, the plaintiff must prove an antitrust injury using the "rule of reason" approach. Under this approach, a plaintiff bears the initial burden of showing that the challenged action has an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market; to prove it has been harmed as an individual competitor will not suffice. Disputes between business competitors are not to be elevated to the status of an antitrust action. The reasonableness of the restraint is gauged by evaluating the particular facts of each case to determine the effect such has or will have on the competition as a whole. The structure of and competitive conditions in the relevant geographic area and product markets, the relative competitive positions of the parties, and the presence of economic barriers inhibiting the ability of competitors to effectively respond to the challenged practice are some, but not the totality, of the factors that help guide the analysis.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Elements

HN3 Sherman Act, Claims

To establish monopolization, a plaintiff must demonstrate (1) that the defendant possesses monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) that it willfully acquired or maintained that power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Attempt > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Attempt > General Overview

HN4 Scope, Monopolization Offenses

The offense of attempted monopolization under § 2 of the Sherman Act, codified at 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, requires a plaintiff to prove that (1) the defendant engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct with (2) a specific intent to monopolize and (3) that there existed or exists a dangerous probability that it would or will achieve monopoly power.

Counsel: ATTORNEYS FOR THE PLAINTIFF: John H. Stenger, Esq., c/o Stenger & Finnerty, Buffalo, NY.

ATTORNEYS FOR THE DEFENDANT: Quality, Penn & Sunrise -- Samuel Goldblatt, Esq. and Charles C. Swanekamp, Esq. and Gary L. Mucci, Esq., c/o Saperston & Day, Buffalo, NY. Kenneth N. Hart, Esq. and Richard J. DeMarco, Jr., c/o Donovan, Leisure, Newton & Irvine, New York, NY. Paige - David Kowalski, Esq., Buffalo, NY.

Judges: John T. Elfvin, U.S.D.J.

Opinion by: John T. Elfvin

Opinion

---

MEMORANDUM and ORDER

Tops Markets, Inc. ("Tops") brought this action alleging violations of federal and state antitrust laws -- viz., Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act <sup>1</sup> and New York's Donnelly Act, General Business Law ("GBL") § 340 -- and asserting state law claims of, inter alia, tortious interference with and breach of a contract. Presently before this Court are the motions for summary judgment brought by Quality Markets, Inc. ("Quality"), The Penn Traffic [\[\*2\]](#) Company ("Penn") and Sunrise Properties, Inc. ("Sunrise") (collectively referred to as "the Quality defendants") and by James V. Paige, Jr. Jurisdiction is proper pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 15\(a\) and 28 U.S.C. §§ 1331, 1337\(a\) & 1367\(a\) and venue is proper pursuant to 15 U.S.C. §§ 15\(a\) & 22 and 28 U.S.C. § 1391\(b\). The motions will be granted in part.

Tops -- a New York Corporation -- is in the supermarket retail business and a leading food retailer in western New York, operating fifty-three supermarkets and eighty-seven convenience stores.<sup>2</sup> Quality -- also a New York corporation -- operates supermarkets in western New York and western Pennsylvania.<sup>3</sup> Quality is a division of Penn -- a Pennsylvania corporation -- which owns and operates two-hundred sixty-seven supermarkets throughout various eastern states including New York.<sup>4</sup> Sunrise is a wholly owned Pennsylvania subsidiary of Penn which owns and develops commercial real estate.<sup>5</sup> For the purposes of this motion, the [\[\*3\]](#) parties do not dispute that the relevant geographic market area consists of an area extending approximately seven to ten miles in all directions from the City of Jamestown which area includes sixteen other municipalities ("Jamestown area") and that the pertinent product and services market consists of the retail sale of predominantly food items as well as general household merchandise by "supermarkets" as that term is used by the parties.<sup>6</sup>

---

<sup>1</sup> 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 & 2, respectively.

<sup>2</sup> Hart Afft, Exh 9; Tops also operates ten discount drugstores and has seven independent supermarket franchises and eleven franchised convenience stores (id.).

<sup>3</sup> Stenger Afft, Exh 21 (Response 1).

<sup>4</sup> Stenger Afft, Exhs 5 (p. 1) & 21 (Response 2).

<sup>5</sup> Stenger Afft, Exhs 21 (Response 3).

<sup>6</sup> A "supermarket" is in turn defined by the parties as a "retail store of at least 7,500 square feet of retail or 'selling' floor space which sells predominantly perishable and non-perishable food items from both self-service merchandise display aisles and specialty departments, including at least meat, produce, bakery, and frozen food departments, and which also sells general household merchandise." Hart Afft, Exh 22 (Response nos. 3 & 9).

[*4] Up until 1984, Tops had operated a supermarket in the Jamestown area, but in that year had determined that the operations then were "unsuccessful" and closed the store.<sup>7</sup> In 1991 Tops decided to take steps to re-enter the Jamestown market.<sup>8</sup> Tops had market studies performed evaluating approximately five potential sites and projecting sales figures and profitability of such sites and determined that certain property located on Washington Street in Jamestown ("the Washington site") was the best based upon, inter alia, suitability for development of a supermarket and availability for purchase.<sup>9</sup> The Washington site was made up of several parcels, four of which were owned by Paige, four by other private parties and two relatively small parcels -- viz., making up less than ten percent of the total acreage of the site -- owned by the municipality.<sup>10</sup>

In 1992 there were approximately [*5] nine supermarkets in the Jamestown area, at least five operated by Quality and four operated by two competitors -- "Bells" and "Super Duper."<sup>11</sup> [*7] In March of that year Tops allegedly entered into a binding agreement with Paige whereby he was to convey his aforementioned four parcels to Tops in consideration of $ 475,000. However, such was subject to Paige obtaining enforceable contracts or options to purchase the remaining Washington-site parcels held by the non-municipal parties by March 15, 1992, after which time and failing such condition subsequent, Tops had an apparently unilateral option to terminate.<sup>12</sup> In late spring of 1992 Quality became aware of Tops' intent to re-enter the Jamestown market and of negotiations ongoing between Paige and Tops and communicated to Paige its interest in acquiring a portion of the Washington site.<sup>13</sup> Paige then entered into a "Back-Up" agreement dated June 30, 1992 in which he agreed to convey to Sunrise two of his parcels that were not contiguous and had no frontage on Washington Street in consideration for $ 225,000, but that such agreement was conditioned upon the prior termination of Paige's contractual relations with Tops.<sup>14</sup> The Back-Up [*6] agreement was amended and restructured November 4, 1992 pursuant to Sunrise's request such that Sunrise would acquire the option to purchase the two parcels in exchange for $ 335,000 and could exercise such option and purchase the parcels at a "strike price" of $ 25,000. Sunrise and Paige entered into a third and superseding agreement dated January 27, 1993 whereby Sunrise agreed to pay $ 740,000 in exchange for a substantially similar option to purchase the same two parcels, and the strike price remained at $ 25,000.<sup>15</sup> By letter dated that same day, Paige notified Sunrise that the prior contract with Tops had been terminated.<sup>16</sup> Sunrise exercised its option and acquired title to the two parcels in April of 1993. Sometime in January of 1993, Quality had acquired both Bells stores and closed one immediately and the second within the year.<sup>17</sup> In April of 1995 Quality acquired and immediately closed both Super Duper stores.<sup>18</sup> In May of 1995 Wegmans opened a large -- i.e., approximately 100,000 square feet -- supermarket and garnered between eighteen and twenty-six percent of the Jamestown market within less than six months of operation.<sup>19</sup>

---

<sup>7</sup> Hart Afft, Exhs 13 (p.19) & 15 (p.14).

<sup>8</sup> Stenger Afft, Exh 10.

<sup>9</sup> Hart Afft, Exhs 1-3.

<sup>10</sup> Stenger Afft, Exh 20.

<sup>11</sup> Stenger Afft, Exh 1 (pp. 1, 10, 12-13).

<sup>12</sup> Complaint, Exh A (copy of Tops-Paige agreement).

<sup>13</sup> Hart Afft, Exh 14 (pp. 16-18).

<sup>14</sup> Hart Afft, Exh 4.

<sup>15</sup> Hart Afft, Exh 7.

<sup>16</sup> Hart Afft, Exh 6.

<sup>17</sup> Stenger Afft, Exhs 4 & 6 (pp. 29-31).

<sup>18</sup> Stenger Afft, Exhs 4 & 6 (pp. 29-31).

<sup>19</sup> Stenger Afft, Exh 6; Kennedy Afft, Exh A.

Tops alleges that the Quality defendants induced Paige to breach his contract with Tops for the sale of land and that they conspired to prevent the construction of a Tops supermarket and thereby prevent Tops' entry as a competitor of Quality's in the Jamestown market area in violation of antitrust laws, that the Quality defendants tortiously interfered with the Tops-Paige contract, that Paige breached such contract, that Paige breached his fiduciary duty to act as Tops' agent and that Paige's conduct was fraudulent.

HN1[] A motion for summary judgment will be denied unless the court determines, after reviewing all the evidence presented, "that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." <sup>20</sup> A genuine issue [*8] of fact requires such evidence that a reasonable jury could thereupon return a verdict for the non-moving party and, when determining if a genuine factual issue exists, the court must consider the substantive evidentiary burdens assigned to each party. <sup>21</sup> Although in general all reasonable inferences must be drawn most favorably to the non-moving party, <sup>22</sup> antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences that may be drawn -- e.g., a claimant alleging antitrust violations "must set forth facts that tend to preclude an inference of permissible conduct." Capital Imaging v. Mohawk Valley Medical Assoc. <sup>23</sup>

[*9] The first Count in the Complaint alleges that the "defendants" <sup>24</sup> violated HN2[] Section 1 of the Sherman Act which pertinently prohibits "every contract *** or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States ***." A plaintiff claiming a violation of such statute must establish "some form of concerted action between at least two legally distinct entities * * * [and that such] constituted an unreasonable restraint of trade." <sup>25</sup> In the usual case and in this case in particular, the plaintiff must prove an antitrust injury using the "rule of reason" approach. <sup>26</sup> Under this approach a "plaintiff bears the initial burden of showing that the challenged action has had an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market; to prove it has been harmed as an individual competitor will not suffice." <sup>27</sup> Antitrust laws are not designed to protect individual business rivals but rather to protect competition as a whole. <sup>28</sup> Disputes between business competitors are not to be elevated to the status of an antitrust action. The reasonableness vel non of the restraint is gauged by evaluating the particular facts of each case to determine the effect such [*10] has or will have on the competition as a whole. <sup>29</sup> The structure of and competitive conditions in the relevant geographic area and product markets, the relative competitive positions of the parties and the presence vel non of economic barriers inhibiting the ability of competitors to effectively respond to the challenged practice are some but not the totality of the factors that help guide the analysis. <sup>30</sup>

<sup>20</sup> FRCvP 56\(c\); see also Celotex v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 (1986).

<sup>21</sup> Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248, 254, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 (1986).

<sup>22</sup> Ramseur v. Chase Manhattan Bank, 865 F.2d 460, 465 (2nd Cir. 1989).

<sup>23</sup> 996 F.2d 537, 542 (2nd Cir.), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 947 (1993).

<sup>24</sup> Complaint, P29.

<sup>25</sup> Capital Imaging, 996 F.2d at 542.

<sup>26</sup> Capital Imaging, at 543. The plaintiff agrees that this is the appropriate approach (Memorandum of Plaintiff Tops Markets, Inc. in Opposition to the Motion of Defendants Quality Markets, Inc., the Penn Traffic Company and Sunrise Properties, Inc. for Summary Judgment, at fn. 7).

<sup>27</sup> Capital Imaging, at 543 (emphasis in original).

<sup>28</sup> Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 488, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1977).

<sup>29</sup> Capital Imaging, at 543.

<sup>30</sup> Harold Friedman Inc. v. Thorofare Markets, 587 F.2d 127, 143 (3rd Cir. 1978).

[*11] This Court begins by noting that the plaintiff has failed to surmount the initial required threshold -- i.e., that there has been an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market. The plaintiff urges this Court to find that Quality enjoys an extraordinarily high market share of the Jamestown market. However, there is no proof that such market share has had an actual adverse effect on the sale of food items and general household merchandise by the supermarket industry in the area. Furthermore, the acquisition of adequate land and subsequent construction of a large store by Wegmans -- a competitor of both Tops and Quality -- demonstrate that there are no geographic or economic barriers inhibiting the ability of competitors from entering the market. However, in the absence of a showing of adverse market effects, courts also examine the ability vel non of the parties alleged to be engaging in anti-competitive conduct to raise prices above those that would prevail in a competitive environment -- to wit, "market power."<sup>31</sup> Market share, although a significant factor, is not determinative of and is distinct from market power.<sup>32</sup> In this case, there [*12] is no evidence that the grocery prices in the Jamestown area are at a level which would imply Quality's inordinate market power. While the defendants do not vigorously deny that their motivation in acquiring the option to purchase the Washington site and eventually exercising such option was at least in part to prevent a direct competitor from building a store at that particular site, such intent to exclude competitors from one specific site does not establish detrimental effects on the competition as a whole in the Jamestown market, as demonstrated by Wegmans' entry into the competition, albeit at a different location, and its rapid acquisition of a significant fraction of the relevant market. Finally, this Court notes that Tops was never excluded from the Jamestown market; it voluntarily left, presumably because its departure provided it with certain economic benefits. The fact that Quality has established a firm and substantial market share through its business acumen demonstrated in part by having remained to serve a community when its competitors such as Tops departed cannot form the basis of an antitrust claim. The plaintiff has failed to establish a claim under Section 1 of [*13] the Sherman Act.

The second Count in the Complaint alleges that the "defendants"<sup>33</sup> have engaged in a monopolization, attempted monopolization and a conspiracy to monopolize in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act. HN3↑ To establish monopolization, Tops must demonstrate (1) that the Quality defendants possess monopoly power in the relevant Jamestown market and (2) that they willfully acquired or maintain that power. United States v. Grinnell Corp.<sup>34</sup> The first element, monopoly power, is to be distinguished from business growth or development as a consequence of, inter alia, superior business acumen or historic accident.<sup>35</sup> Monopoly power in the relevant market is commonly defined as the power to "control prices or exclude competition"<sup>36</sup> and [*14] is deemed to require "something greater than [the] market power" discussed in connection with Section 1 of the Sherman Act.<sup>37</sup> Inasmuch as this Court has already ruled that Tops has failed to demonstrate that Quality possesses the necessary market power to unilaterally raise prices above those that would prevail in the market in order to sufficiently support its Section 1 allegations, a fortiori Quality does not have the monopoly power necessary to sustain a monopolization claim.

HN4↑ The offense of attempted monopolization under Section 2 of the Sherman Act requires Tops to prove that (1) the Quality defendants engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct with (2) a specific [*15] intent to monopolize and (3) that there existed or exists a dangerous probability that they would or will achieve monopoly

---

<sup>31</sup> Orson, Inc. v. Miramax Film Corp., 79 F.3d 1358, 1367 (3rd Cir. 1996).

<sup>32</sup> Delaware Hudson Ry. v. Consolidated Rail Corp., 902 F.2d 174, 179 (2nd Cir. 1990), cert. denied, 500 U.S. 928, 114 L. Ed. 2d 125, 111 S. Ct. 2041 (1991).

<sup>33</sup> Complaint, P33.

<sup>34</sup> 384 U.S. 563, 570-571 \(1966\).

<sup>35</sup> Grinnell Corp., at 571.

<sup>36</sup> United States v. Du Pont & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 391, 100 L. Ed. 1264, 76 S. Ct. 994 (1956).

<sup>37</sup> Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Services, Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 481, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 (1992).

power.<sup>38</sup> Again, the failure to prove market power or potential monopoly power is fatal to Tops' attempted monopolization claim. Tops argues that Quality's market share and its acquisition of smaller competitors creates a triable issue of fact with respect to the dangerous-probability element. However, in its argument, Tops completely ignores and fails to address the apparent facility with which another competitor did in fact enter the Jamestown market and, after such entry, the short time within which it garnered a significant fraction of the market. There is no evidence that Quality can exclude competition or control prices in the Jamestown market and none that will support an inference under the antitrust law standards that a dangerous probability exists that Quality will achieve monopoly power.

[*16] Tops presented no legal argument concerning its convoluted allegation of conspiracy to monopolize.<sup>39</sup> While this could be due to inartful pleading at the Complaint stage, it is equally likely due to the abandonment of such theory. In any event, Tops has not presented any evidence to this Court from which a jury could reasonably find that the defendants "entered into [an agreement] with the specific intent of achieving [a] monopoly or unreasonably restraining trade."<sup>40</sup>

Finally, this Court notes that Tops has actually acquired the entire Washington site it desired,<sup>41</sup> which fact further confirms that no causal antitrust injury can be established in this action.<sup>42</sup>

[*17] Having determined that Tops has failed to establish facts from which a reasonable jury could find that the defendants have violated either Section 1 or Section 2 of the Sherman Act, the defendants are entitled to judgment as a matter of law on all the federal causes of action in this litigation. Tops has also asserted two parallel state antitrust causes of action brought under GBL § 340 as well as state claims for breach of contract and for tortious interference with a contract. Although this Court has supplemental jurisdiction over such claims, having dismissed Tops' federal causes of action, the usual balance of judicial economy, convenience, fairness and comity leads this Court to decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over the remaining state-law claims.<sup>43</sup> Accordingly, such will be dismissed without prejudice.

Finally this Court notes that Paige asserts against Tops counterclaims [*18] similarly arising under state-law. Answer of Defendant James V. Paige, Jr., PP71-87. Although this Court could exercise supplemental jurisdiction over such counterclaims, the same analysis leads this Court to correspondingly decline to exercise such. Consequently, Paige's counterclaims will also be dismissed without prejudice.

Accordingly, it is hereby ORDERED that the defendants' motions for summary judgment are granted as to Counts I and II in the Complaint and that, inasmuch as supplemental jurisdiction over the state-law claims and counterclaims is declined, the state-law claims in Counts III-VIII in the Complaint and the state-law counterclaims brought by Paige are dismissed without prejudice and with leave to re-file if remanded upon appeal to the United States Court of Appeals, Second Circuit.

DATED: Buffalo, N.Y.

---

<sup>38</sup> Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 456, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247, 113 S. Ct. 884(1993).

<sup>39</sup> See Complaint, P33.

<sup>40</sup> Northeastern Tel. Co. v. Am. Tel. & Tel. Co., 651 F.2d 76, 85 (2nd Cir. 1981), cert denied, 455 U.S. 943, 71 L. Ed. 2d 654, 102 S. Ct. 1438 (1982).

<sup>41</sup> Hart Afft, Exh 21 (Response 2).

<sup>42</sup> Eastway Const. Corp. v. City of New York, 762 F.2d 243, 251 (2nd Cir. 1985), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 918, 98 L. Ed. 2d 226, 108 S. Ct. 269 (1987) (Plaintiff failed to establish antitrust injury when it failed to show anticompetitive effects on consumers resulting from its exclusion from the pertinent market.).

<sup>43</sup> Carnegie-Mellon Univ. v. Cohill, 484 U.S. 343, 350 & fn 7, 98 L. Ed. 2d 720, 108 S. Ct. 614 (1988).

November 21, 1996

John T. Elfvin

U.S.D.J.

---

End of Document

Discon, Inc. v. NYNEX Corp.

United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit

March 27, 1996, Argued ; August 26, 1996, Decided

Docket No. 95-7673

Reporter

93 F.3d 1055 *; 1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 21948 **; 1996-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,535

DISCON, INCORPORATED, Plaintiff-Appellant, v. NYNEX CORPORATION, NYNEX MATERIAL ENTERPRISES, NEW YORK TELEPHONE COMPANY, ROBERT J. ECKENRODE, and BERNARD O'REILLY, Defendants-Appellees.

Subsequent History: Certiorari Granted March 23, 1998, Reported at: 1998 U.S. LEXIS 1802.

Prior History: [\[\*\*1\]](#) Appeal from the June 14, 1995, judgment of the United States District Court for the Western District of New York (Richard J. Arcara, Judge) dismissing plaintiff-appellant's antitrust and RICO complaint for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted.

Disposition: Affirmed in part, reversed in part, and remanded for further proceedings.

Core Terms

---

removal, enterprise, monopolization, supplier, Sherman Act, conspiracy, telephone, alleges, horizontal, vertical, compete, entity, group boycott, Antitrust, purchaser, conspiracy to monopolize, restraint of trade, acquisition, competitor, cause of action, predicate act, subsidiary, affiliate, pattern of racketeering activity, rule of reason, manufacturers, wholly-owned, rate-paying, conspired, employees

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Price Fixing

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Price Fixing

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

**HN1** Vertical Restraints, Price Fixing

Under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, courts are asked to categorize various complex commercial arrangements into a rigid legal taxonomy, e.g., horizontal restraint, vertical restraint, price-fixing, market division, concerted refusal to deal, and so on.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Nonprice Restraints

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Price Fixing

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Price Fixing

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

**HN2** Vertical Restraints, Nonprice Restraints

To state a claim under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must allege (1) that the defendants entered into a contract, combination, or conspiracy, and (2) that their agreement was in restraint of trade. Traditionally, restraints of trade are classified as either horizontal restraints or vertical restraints. Horizontal restraints are generally considered illegal per se if they fall within certain broad categories. Vertical restraints are illegal per se only where the agreement contains a further arrangement to fix prices, i.e., vertical price-fixing. Other types of horizontal restraints and vertical non-price restraints are assessed under the rule of reason.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

**HN3** Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

An agreement between two firms, even in a vertical relationship, may be characterized as a horizontal restraint of trade if the agreement seeks to disadvantage the direct competitor of one of the conspiring firms.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN4[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

To state a claim for monopolization, a plaintiff must allege, among other things, that the defendants possess monopoly power in a relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN5[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

To state a cause of action for attempted monopolization, a plaintiff must allege, among other things, that there is a "dangerous probability" that the attempt will succeed.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

HN6[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

To state a claim for conspiracy to monopolize, a plaintiff must allege that there was (1) concerted action, (2) overt acts in furtherance of the conspiracy, and (3) specific intent to monopolize.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

HN7[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

A defendant may be liable for conspiracy to monopolize where it agrees with another firm to assist that firm in its attempt to monopolize the relevant market.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN8[] Racketeering, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act

The court has held, in the context of 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962\(a\), prohibiting the "use or investment of income" derived from a pattern of racketeering activity, that the essence of a violation of § 1962\(a\) is not commission of predicate acts but investment of racketeering income. In the context of § 1962\(a\), therefore, the court has required that the plaintiff allege a "use or investment injury" that is distinct from the injuries resulting from predicate acts.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN9 [blue download icon] Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act, Elements

18 U.S.C.S. § 1962\(c\), prohibits any person employed by or associated with any enterprise to conduct such enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN10 [blue download icon] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Where employees of a corporation associate together to commit a pattern of predicate acts in the course of their employment and on behalf of the corporation, the employees in association with the corporation do not form an enterprise distinct from the corporation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN11 [blue download icon] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Any claim under 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962\(d\) based on conspiracy to violate the other subsections of § 1962 necessarily must fail if the substantive claims are themselves deficient.

Counsel: Samuel A. Cherniak, New York, N.Y. (Phyllis Gelman, Gelman & Feinberg, New York, N.Y.; Goldstein, Navagh, Bulan & Chiari, Buffalo, N.Y., on the brief), for plaintiff-appellant.

Guy M. Struve, New York, N.Y. (James D. Liss, Vincent T. Chang, Seth R. Lesser, Davis Polk & Wardwell; Edward S. Bloomberg, Kevin J. English, Phillips, Lytle, Hitchcock, Blaine & Huber, Buffalo, N.Y., on the brief), for defendants-appellees.

Judges: Before: NEWMAN, Chief Judge, OAKES and PARKER, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: JON O. NEWMAN

Opinion

---

[*1057] JON O. NEWMAN, Chief Judge:

This appeal involves an antitrust suit brought by a former supplier alleging that its purchaser and a competitor acted in violation of the Sherman Act and the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO"). Plaintiff-appellant Discon, Inc. ("Discon") appeals from the June 14, 1995, judgment [\[\*\*2\]](#) of the United States District Court for the Western District of New York (Richard J. Arcara, Judge). The District Court dismissed Discon's amended complaint pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Discon argues that the District Court erred in holding that its complaint fails to allege a violation of either Section One or Section Two of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2 \(1994\), or RICO, 18 U.S.C. § 1962 (1994). Because we believe that the District Court prematurely dismissed two of Discon's claims, we affirm in part, reverse in part, and remand.

Background

Discon is a New York corporation whose primary business is the provision of "removal services" to telephone companies. These removal services include salvaging and disposing of obsolete telephone central office equipment. Discon was first formed in June 1984 to meet a demand created by the court-ordered break-up of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company ("AT&T"), see generally United States v. American Telephone and Telegraph Co., 552 F. Supp. 131 \(D.D.C. 1982\), aff'd sub nom. Maryland v. United States, 460 U.S. 1001, 75 L. Ed. 2d 472, 103 S. Ct. 1240 \(1983\). Prior to 1984, AT&T was able [**3] to monopolize the market for telecommunications equipment, including the market for removal services, through its ownership of the regional Bell Operating Companies ("BOCs"). AT&T would compel the BOCs to purchase supplies only from AT&T and its manufacturing affiliates, the Western Electric Co. and Bell Telephone Laboratories. In this manner, AT&T was able to extend the regulated monopoly power of its BOCs into other non-regulated markets. Id. at 222-23. Pursuant to the Consent Decree of 1984, AT&T divested itself of control over the BOCs. Thereafter, each BOC was instructed to purchase its products and services from a competitive field of suppliers. Id. at 227. Discon became one of those suppliers of removal services in the New York State area.

NYNEX Corp. ("NYNEX") is a successor entity that emerged out of the 1984 divestiture and replaced the BOCs that operated in New York and New England. NYNEX itself is a holding company that controls several wholly-owned subsidiaries, including NYNEX Material Enterprises ("MECo") and two local telephone service providers, New York Telephone Co. ("NYTel") and New England Telephone and Telegraph Co. ("NET").<sup>1</sup> Within the NYNEX structure, [**4] MECo is a Delaware corporation whose primary business is the procurement of goods and services for NYNEX and its affiliated corporations, including NYTel. In effect, MECo serves as a purchasing agent for NYNEX and its other subsidiaries. NYTel is a New York corporation that provides local telephone service to most of New York State and some portions of Connecticut. NYTel is the dominant purchaser of removal services in the New York State area. As a regulated [*1058] monopoly under the New York Public Service Laws, NYTel is subject to the state rate-making process. NYNEX and MECo, however, are not subject to state regulation.

AT&T Technologies is a wholly-owned subsidiary of AT&T, and is the successor entity to the Western Electric Co.<sup>2</sup> AT&T Technologies provides numerous network services, including removal services, to telephone companies throughout the United States. Within the New York State area, AT&T Technologies [**5] competes directly with Discon in the market for removal services.

Discon's complaint alleges that NYNEX, MECo, and NYTel (collectively, the "NYNEX Defendants") conspired with AT&T Technologies to eliminate Discon from the market for removal services. The crux of this conspiracy was a scheme to defraud the rate-paying public. During the mid-1980s, MECo, as a non-regulated affiliate of NYNEX, would purchase removal services at inflated prices from AT&T Technologies. These removal services, along with their inflated prices, were then passed on to NYTel, a regulated affiliate of NYNEX. In turn, NYTel was able to overcharge its captive rate-paying customers pursuant to the rate-making process. MECo would then recoup its inflated costs by receiving a secret year-end "rebate" from AT&T Technologies. Thus, without being subject to any oversight from the state regulatory [**6] commission, MECo and its parent company, NYNEX, were able to generate increased revenues that were essentially derived from NYTel's telephone monopoly. This scheme was replicated in numerous contexts by the NYNEX Defendants for other capital goods and services purchased by NYTel. See In re New York Telephone Co., 5 F.C.C.R. 866 \(1990\) ("FCC Order").

<sup>1</sup> NET is not named as a defendant in this lawsuit, nor is it otherwise involved in these proceedings.

<sup>2</sup> Although AT&T Technologies is alleged by Discon to be a co-conspirator with NYNEX, MECo, and NYTel, it is not named as a defendant in this lawsuit.

In an independent regulatory proceeding, the Federal Communications Commission ("FCC") found that this method of generating revenues -- using MECO as an "outside" profit center -- violated the Communications Act of 1934, 47 U.S.C. § 201\(b\) \(1988\). The FCC ordered NYTel to issue a rebate to its rate-paying customers for overcharges that occurred between 1984 and 1988. FCC Report, 5 F.C.C.R. 866. The FCC and NYTel subsequently entered into a consent decree. See In re New York Telephone Co., 5 F.C.C.R. 5892 \(1990\) ("FCC Consent Decree"). Without admitting any wrongdoing or violations, NYTel agreed to refund over $ 35 million for "unreasonable rates reflecting improper capital costs and expense charges." Id.

Discon alleges that, as part of this conspiracy to defraud the rate-paying public, NYNEX and MECO, in purchasing [\[\*\*7\]](#) removal services for NYTel, discriminated against Discon in favor of AT&T Technologies because Discon refused to inflate its prices. Also, Discon would sometimes contract directly with NYTel, thus bypassing MECO altogether and undermining the basic premise of the outside profit-center scheme. Discon claims that, in retaliation for its non-cooperation, MECO and AT&T Technologies conspired to disseminate false information about Discon, to burden Discon with undue obligations under threat of economic duress, and to give preferential treatment to AT&T Technologies.

Discon filed its original complaint in the Western District of New York in May 1990, alleging that the NYNEX Defendants had violated Section One and Section Two of the Sherman Act and RICO. In June 1992, the District Court granted an initial motion to dismiss with leave to replead. Shortly thereafter, Discon filed an amended complaint, and the NYNEX Defendants moved to dismiss pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\). On June 14, 1995, the District Court dismissed with prejudice.

Discussion

I. Section One of the Sherman Act

This appeal typifies one of the primary difficulties in the judicial application of antitrust law. [\[\*\*8\]](#) HN1↑ Under Section One of the Sherman Act, courts are asked to categorize various complex commercial arrangements into a rigid legal taxonomy, e.g., horizontal restraint, vertical restraint, price-fixing, market [\[\*1059\]](#) division, concerted refusal to deal, and so on. This initial categorization is often outcome-determinative. Under one category, the arrangement may be per se illegal, while under another, it may be found permissible under the rule of reason. Due to the complexity of modern business transactions, however, courts often find that commercial arrangements can be classified theoretically under a number of different categories. See Broadcast Music, Inc. v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., 441 U.S. 1, 8, 60 L. Ed. 2d 1, 99 S. Ct. 1551 \(1979\) ("Easy labels do not always supply ready answers.") In this case, we believe that the District Court may have been misled by a poorly drafted complaint into categorizing the arrangement as one that is presumptively legal. Since the complaint may properly be understood to allege arrangements that might be shown to be unlawful, we are obliged to reverse in part and remand. We believe that the complaint states a cause of action under Section One of the Sherman Act, though [\[\*\*9\]](#) under a different legal theory than the one articulated by Discon.

HN2↑ To state a claim under Section One of the Sherman Act, Discon must allege (1) that the NYNEX Defendants entered into a contract, combination, or conspiracy, and (2) that their agreement was in restraint of trade. See 15 U.S.C. § 1.<sup>3</sup> Traditionally, restraints of trade are classified as either horizontal restraints or vertical restraints. See Business Electronics Corp. v. Sharp Electronics Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 730, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808, 108 S. Ct. 1515 \(1984\) ("Sharp"). Horizontal restraints are generally considered illegal per se if they fall within certain broad categories. See *United States v. Topco Associates, Inc.*, 405 U.S. 596, 608, 31 L. Ed. 2d 515, 92 S. Ct. 1126 \(1972\) (market division); *Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc.*, 359 U.S. 207, 211-12, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741, 79 S. Ct. 705 \(1959\) (concerted refusal to deal); *United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co.*, 310 U.S. 150, 218, 84 L. Ed. 1129, 60 S. Ct. 811 \(1940\) (horizontal price-fixing). Vertical restraints are illegal per se only where the agreement contains a further arrangement to fix prices, i.e., vertical price-fixing. See *Sharp*, 485 U.S. at 724. Other types of horizontal restraints and vertical non-price restraints are assessed under the rule [**10] of reason. *Id. at 726*.

<sup>3</sup>The NYNEX Defendants devote a single footnote in their brief to the argument that Discon failed to allege a "conspiracy" in restraint of trade. See Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Co., 465 U.S. 752, 765-67, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 \(1984\) (requirement of "concerted action"). Although Discon's complaint is not a model of clarity, it alleges that NYNEX, MECO, and AT&T Technologies conspired to defraud the rate-paying public and that this agreement apparently contemplated some form of discrimination against Discon. More specifically, the complaint alleges the existence of various meetings between NYNEX procurement personnel, MECO officers, and agents of AT&T Technologies. These allegations are sufficient to defeat a motion to dismiss.

Discon alleges primarily that the NYNEX Defendants engaged in an unlawful horizontal restraint of trade. The complaint asserts that Discon, MECo, and AT&T Technologies were all providers of removal services to NYTel, and that MECo and AT&T Technologies entered into a conspiracy [**11] to discriminate against Discon. The complaint thus alleges a classic horizontal restraint of trade -- an agreement between two potential rivals seeking to disadvantage a third competitor. See E. Thomas Sullivan & Jeffrey L. Harrison, Understanding Antitrust and Its Economic Implications § 4.13, at 110 (2d ed. 1994) (hereinafter "Sullivan, Understanding Antitrust"). In support of this theory, Discon alleges that MECo is a "supplier" of removal services, along with Discon and AT&T Technologies. The District Court, however, found this to be a mischaracterization. We agree. It is undisputed that MECo itself does not perform any removal services for NYTel. Rather, as the complaint acknowledges, "MECo's primary business function is procuring goods and services for New York Telephone [NYTel] . . . and for NYNEX Service Company." Thus, MECo acts essentially as a purchasing agent for NYNEX and NYTel, and in fact, it often served as an intermediary between NYTel and its actual suppliers, Discon and AT&T Technologies. See [*Westchester Radiological Associates v. Empire Blue Cross and Blue* \[\*\*1060\] *Shield, Inc.*, 707 F. Supp. 708, 712-13](#) (S.D.N.Y.) ("antitrust remedy" does not apply [**12] "where a buyer insists on buying his services through an intermediary"), aff'd on opinion below, *884 F.2d 707, 708 \(2d Cir. 1989\)*, cert. denied, 493 U.S. 1095, 110 S. Ct. 1169, 107 L. Ed. 2d 1071 (1990).

It is true that, at times, NYTel would contract directly with Discon or other suppliers, and in those situations, presumably MECo would lose the opportunity to derive a commission. Therefore, in one sense, MECo could be considered, if not a supplier, at least a competitor with Discon and AT&T Technologies. Nonetheless, we decline to adopt this line of analysis for two reasons. First, MECo by its very nature transacts business for only one purchaser, NYTel. Unlike other intermediaries, such as wholesalers, who may transfer goods and services to a number of different purchasers, MECo does not resell removal services to any other telephone company.<sup>4</sup> Thus, MECo does not compete in the overall market for removal services, but only in the "market" for a single buyer. Second, the fact that MECo and NYTel are both affiliated under the same corporate structure strengthens the analogy of MECo to that of an internal purchasing agent. If MECo were organized as a purchasing department within NYTel, rather than as a separate [**13] corporate entity, it would be undisputed that MECo did not compete with Discon or AT&T Technologies. We believe it would be incongruous to apply a different rule of law simply because MECo holds its own corporate charter. Cf. *Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc.*, 433 U.S. 36, 58-59, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 97 S. Ct. 2549 \(1977\) (courts in antitrust cases should eschew "formalistic line drawing"). The fact remains that MECo acts at the behest of NYNEX and NYTel, and its actions are guided by a single corporate consciousness. Cf. *Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp.*, 467 U.S. 752, 771, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 \(1984\) (parent corporation and wholly-owned subsidiary are "single enterprise" for purpose of conspiracy requirement under Section One). A firm does not become a competitor of one of its suppliers solely by virtue of reselling goods or services to an affiliate under common ownership.

Since MECo is not [**14] a supplier of removal services and does not otherwise compete with Discon and AT&T Technologies in the overall market, Discon cannot succeed on its theory of a classic horizontal restraint of trade.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>4</sup> Discon's complaint reveals at least one other telephone company, AT&T Communications, that purchases removal services in the New York State area.

<sup>5</sup> Discon also argues that the agreement between MECo and AT&T Technologies could be characterized as a vertical agreement to fix prices. See *Sharp*, 485 U.S. at 724-26; *Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. John D. Park & Sons Co.*, 220 U.S. 373, 55 L. Ed. 502, 31 S. Ct. 376 \(1911\). We believe, however, that Discon has not stated a cause of action under a theory of vertical price-fixing. Discon admits that its allegations merely raise the "inference" that AT&T Technologies and MECo "intended" to influence the Nonetheless, we believe that Discon may be able to prevail under a different legal theory. In Oreck Corp. v. Whirlpool Corp., 579 F.2d 126 (2d Cir.) (in banc), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 946, 58 L. Ed. 2d 338, 99 S. Ct. 340 (1978), we noted that HN3 [↑] an agreement between two firms (e.g., MECO and AT&T Technologies), even in a vertical relationship, may be characterized as a horizontal restraint of trade if the agreement seeks to disadvantage the direct competitor (e.g., Discon) of one of the conspiring firms. Id. at 131-32 & n.6; see Sullivan, Understanding Antitrust, supra, § 4.13, at 110 (describing different types of concerted refusals to deal); L. Sullivan, Handbook of the Law of Antitrust 230-31 & n.1 (1977) (same). Oreck sought to elaborate on the Supreme Court's decision in Klor's, 359 U.S. at 211-12, where the Court held that a retailer may not induce its manufacturers to refrain from selling [*1061] to a competing retailer. In Klor's, the agreements between the defendant-retailer [**15] and its manufacturers were essentially vertical in nature. Yet the Supreme Court applied a "group boycott" theory because it found that the intent and effect of these vertical agreements was a horizontal market impact. Id.

[**16] It is true that Klor's is not directly on point, because in that case numerous manufacturers participated in a group boycott, whereas here the complaint alleges only a single boycotting firm, MECO, and a single competitor, AT&T Technologies. Nonetheless, Klor's has been extended in the Sixth and Ninth Circuits to the situation where only a single retailer and a single manufacturer conspire. See Com-Tel, Inc. v. DuKane Corp., 669 F.2d 404, 411-13 & nn. 13, 16 (6th Cir. 1982); Cascade Cabinet Co. v. Western Cabinet & Millwork Inc., 710 F.2d 1366, 1370-71 (9th Cir. 1983); see also Cernuto, Inc. v. United Cabinet Corp., 595 F.2d 164, 168 (3d Cir. 1979). The Eleventh Circuit, on the other hand, has expressly declined to extend Klor's in such a manner. See Construction Aggregate Transport, Inc. v. Florida Rock Industries, Inc., 710 F.2d 752, 776-78 (11th Cir. 1983); see also Westman Commission Co. v. Hobart International, Inc., 796 F.2d 1216, 1224 n.1 (10th Cir. 1986), cert. denied, 486 U.S. 1005, 100 L. Ed. 2d 192, 108 S. Ct. 1728 (1988).

We can understand why some courts are reluctant to extend Klor's to two-firm group boycotts, since such arrangements will often resemble exclusive [**17] distributorship agreements, which are generally considered permissible under the rule of reason. See Oreck, 579 F.2d at 131. We emphasize that our decision should not be read to conflict with the holding in Oreck that, in general, two-firm vertical combinations will be scrutinized as exclusive distributorship controversies, rather than as group boycotts. Id.; see also Sharp, 485 U.S. at 725-31 & n.4 (two-firm group boycott should be judged under rule of reason); K.M.B. Warehouse Distributors, Inc. v. Walker Manufacturing Co., 61 F.3d 123, 127 (2d Cir. 1995) (decision to use one distributor over another does not violate Section One). Yet Oreck cautioned that it may not always be true that two-firm group boycotts are permissible; rather, "a careful scrutiny into the business justifications for the agreement is required." Id. at 132 n.6.

In the vast majority of cases, the decision to discriminate in favor of one supplier over another will have a pro-competitive intent and effect. Cf. Sharp, 485 U.S. at 724-25. Presumably, the purchaser will have chosen a particular supplier because that firm provides certain efficiencies that allow the purchaser to [**18] compete more effectively in the market for sales to the ultimate consumer. In this case, however, no such pro-competitive rationale appears on the face of the complaint. Discon alleges that the intent and effect of choosing AT&T Technologies over Discon was entirely anti-competitive. Although the NYNEX Defendants may be able to present some pro-competitive justification for choosing a more costly supplier in order to overcharge captive rate-paying customers, this justification, if it exists, remains unproven. We conclude that Discon has alleged a cause of action under, at least, the rule of reason, and possibly under the per se rule applied to group boycotts in Klor's, if the restraint of prices that MECO charged to NYTel. Yet this inference arises whenever a supplier sells its products to a purchasing agent. The price agreed upon between the supplier and the purchasing agent will by definition exert some influence upon the final price that the purchasing agent passes on to its client. Discon does not allege that MECO was in any way restricted in its freedom to set whatever prices it charged to NYTel. Therefore, the arrangement between MECO and AT&T Technologies cannot be characterized as one to "fix" prices. See Sharp, 485 U.S. at 731 (vertical price-fixing conspiracy must contain "some agreement on price or price levels").

---

trade "has no purpose except stifling competition." Oreck, 579 F.2d at 131 (quoting White Motor Co. v. United States, 372 U.S. 253, 263, 9 L. Ed. 2d 738, 83 S. Ct. 696 (1963)).<sup>6</sup>

[**19] II. Section Two of the Sherman Act

Discon also alleges that the NYNEX Defendants violated Section Two of the Sherman Act by engaging in monopolization, attempted monopolization, and conspiracy to monopolize. See 15 U.S.C. § 2. We consider each of these claims separately.

A. Monopolization

HN4 To state a claim for monopolization, Discon must allege, among other things, that [*1062] the defendants possess monopoly power in a relevant market. See United States v. Grinnell, 384 U.S. 563, 570, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 (1966). In this case, however, none of the NYNEX Defendants competes in the relevant market for removal services. NYNEX and NYTel are purchasers, not suppliers, of removal services, and MECo, as we have noted, is only a purchasing agent for NYTel and cannot be considered a competitor in the overall market.<sup>7</sup> Thus, Discon's claim of monopolization must fail, since it is axiomatic that a firm cannot monopolize a market in which it does not compete. See Official Airline Guides, Inc. v. FTC, 630 F.2d 920, 925-27 (2d Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 450 U.S. 917, 67 L. Ed. 2d 343, 101 S. Ct. 1362 (1981); FLM Collision Parts, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 543 F.2d 1019, 1030 (2d Cir. 1976), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 1097, 51 L. Ed. 2d 545, 97 S. Ct. 1116 (1977).

[**20] B. Attempted Monopolization

Discon's claim of attempted monopolization fails for the same reason. HN5 To state a cause of action for attempted monopolization, Discon must allege, among other things, that there is a "dangerous probability" that the attempt will succeed. See International Distribution Centers, Inc. v. Walsh Trucking Co., 812 F.2d 786, 790 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 482 U.S. 915, 96 L. Ed. 2d 676, 107 S. Ct. 3188 (1987). In this case, there was no "dangerous probability" that the NYNEX Defendants would succeed in monopolizing the market for removal services, since they do not even compete in that market and there is no indication that they ever sought to do so. See FLM Collision Parts, 543 F.2d at 1030.

C. Conspiracy to Monopolize

HN6 To state a claim for conspiracy to monopolize, Discon must allege that there was (1) concerted action, (2) overt acts in furtherance of the conspiracy, and (3) specific intent to monopolize. See International Distribution Centers, 812 F.2d at 795. Unlike the previous two Section Two claims, to be liable for conspiracy to monopolize, it is not necessary that the NYNEX Defendants compete directly in the market for removal services. HN7 A defendant may be liable for conspiracy [**21] to monopolize where it agrees with another firm to assist that firm in its attempt to monopolize the relevant market. We conclude that the complaint sufficiently alleges that the NYNEX Defendants conspired with AT&T Technologies and performed overt acts intending to assist AT&T Technologies in its monopolization of the market for removal services. The requirement of pleading specific intent is met insofar as Discon alleges that MECo sought the dominance of AT&T Technologies in order to ensure the suppression of other suppliers who would bypass MECo and deal with NYTel directly. Therefore, since Discon has alleged the essential elements of a conspiracy to monopolize, the District Court should not have dismissed this claim.

III. Civil RICO

---

<sup>6</sup> We do not decide at this point whether the District Court on remand should apply a per se rule; however, we note that the traditional rationale for applying the rule of reason to two-firm group boycotts -- the promotion of interbrand competition over intrabrand competition -- does not exist in this case. Cf. Sharp, 485 U.S. at 724-25; Oreck, 579 F.2d at 131.

<sup>7</sup> The only conspiring firm that competes in the market for removal services is AT&T Technologies; however, it is not named as a defendant in this lawsuit.

Finally, Discon alleges several violations of RICO, 18 U.S.C. § 1962. Discon alleges that the NYNEX Defendants violated subsections 1962(b), (c), and (d). All three of these claims were properly dismissed by the District Court.

A. Subsection 1962(b) -- RICO acquisition

Discon first alleges a violation of subsection 1962(b), which prohibits the "acquisition or maintenance" of an enterprise through a pattern of racketeering activity. Defining [\[\*\*22\]](#) the relevant "enterprise" as NYTel, Discon claims that NYNEX and MECo controlled NYTel through a number of illegal predicate acts. It is undisputed, however, that NYNEX acquired legal control over NYTel during the 1984 divestiture. Discon does not allege any facts to support a finding that this control, which exists by virtue of stock ownership in a wholly-owned subsidiary, was "acquired" or "maintained" through a pattern of racketeering activity.

Moreover, Discon has not alleged the sort of "acquisition injury" necessary to state a claim under subsection 1962(b). HN8↑ We have held, in the context of subsection 1962(a), [\[\*1063\]](#) prohibiting the "use or investment of income" derived from a pattern of racketeering activity, that "the essence of a violation of § 1962\(a\) is not commission of predicate acts but investment of racketeering income." Quaknine v. MacFarlane, 897 F.2d 75, 82-83 (2d Cir. 1990). In the context of subsection 1962(a), therefore, we have required that the plaintiff allege a "use or investment injury" that is distinct from the injuries resulting from predicate acts.

Similarly, other circuits have held that, in order to state a cause of action under subsection 1962(b), "plaintiffs [\[\*\*23\]](#) must allege an 'acquisition' injury, analogous to the 'use or investment injury' required under § 1962\(a\) to show injury by reason of a § 1962\(b\) violation." Danielsen v. Burnside-Ott Aviation Training Center, Inc., 941 F.2d 1220, 1231, 291 U.S. App. D.C. 303 (D.C. Cir. 1991); accord Compagnie de Reassurance d'Ile de France v. New England Reinsurance Corp., 57 F.3d 56, 92 (1st Cir.), cert. denied, 133 L. Ed. 2d 490, 116 S. Ct. 564 (1995); Lightning Lube, Inc. v. Witco Corp., 4 F.3d 1153, 1191 (3d Cir. 1993); Old Time Enterprises, Inc. v. International Coffee Corp., 862 F.2d 1213, 1219 (5th Cir. 1989). In this case, Discon has not alleged any injury stemming from the "acquisition or maintenance" of NYTel by NYNEX and MECo, only injuries resulting from the commission of predicate acts. Without a distinct "acquisition injury," Discon cannot state a cause of action under subsection 1962(b).

B. Subsection 1962(c) -- RICO conduct

Discon also alleges a violation of HN9↑ subsection 1962(c), which prohibits "any person employed by or associated with any enterprise . . . to conduct . . . such enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity . . ." 18 U.S.C. § 1962\(c\).<sup>8</sup> For this claim, Discon redefines [\[\*\*24\]](#) the enterprise as the "NYNEX Group," which consists of the three corporations, NYNEX, MECo, and NYTel. Discon claims that these three corporate "persons" conducted the affairs of the NYNEX Group "enterprise" through a number of illegal predicate acts.

We have previously held, however, that subsection 1962(c) "clearly envisions" that the "person" and the "enterprise" will be distinct. Bennett v. United States Trust Co., 770 F.2d 308, 315 (2d Cir. 1985), cert. denied, 474 U.S. 1058, 88 L. Ed. 2d 776, 106 S. Ct. 800 (1986). "[A] corporate entity may not be simultaneously the 'enterprise' and the 'person' who conducts the affairs of the enterprise through a pattern of racketeering activity." Id. In Riverwoods Chappaqua Corp. v. Marine Midland Bank, 30 F.3d 339 (2d Cir. 1994), we explained further that the [\[\*\*25\]](#) distinctiveness requirement of Bennett may not be circumvented "by alleging a RICO enterprise that consists merely of a corporate defendant associated with its own employees or agents carrying on the regular affairs of the defendant . . ." Id. at 344. HN10↑ "Where employees of a corporation associate together to commit a pattern of predicate acts in the course of their employment and on behalf of the corporation, the employees in association with the corporation do not form an enterprise distinct from the corporation." Id. Thus, in Riverwoods, we found that the activities of two loan officers "acting within the scope of their authority" could not subject them to RICO liability for conducting the affairs of the alleged enterprise-bank.

<sup>8</sup> Unlike subsections 1962(a) and (b), under subsection 1962(c), a plaintiff need not allege a distinct "racketeering injury" in order to state cause of action. See Sedima, S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., 473 U.S. 479, 494-95, 87 L. Ed. 2d 346, 105 S. Ct. 3275 (1985).

In response, Discon cites *Cullen v. Margiotta, 811 F.2d 698* (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 483 U.S. 1021, 107 S. Ct. 3266, 97 L. Ed. 2d 764 (1987), for the proposition that a defendant may simultaneously be a RICO "person" and one of a number of members in the RICO "enterprise." *811 F.2d at 729-30*. In Cullen, the enterprise was defined as an association of three separate entities -- a municipality, the town Republican Committee, and the county Republican Committee. [**26] *Id. at 728*. We held that any of the three individual entities could be convicted under subsection 1962(c) for its participation in the tripartite enterprise.

The difference between Riverwoods and Cullen appears to lie in the fact that Riverwoods involved only a single corporate entity that was associated with its employees, whereas Cullen involved three legally separate [*1064] entities that could be differentiated from the enterprise-group. Moreover, in Riverwoods, the individual defendants were acting on behalf of the enterprise-corporation, and therefore, it would have been especially inappropriate to hold that they were "distinct" from the enterprise.

In this case, we confront a situation that lies somewhere between Riverwoods and Cullen. Like the defendants in Riverwoods, NYNEX, MECo and NYTel operate within a unified corporate structure. At the same time, however, they are also legally separate entities from each other and from the NYNEX Group. Although our decision is by no means dictated by clear precedent, we believe that Riverwoods presents the more analogous situation. The relationship between NYNEX, MECo, and NYTel in comparison to the NYNEX [**27] Group is not substantially different from that between the loan officers in Riverwoods in comparison to the bank. In both cases, the individual defendants were acting within the scope of a single corporate structure, guided by a single corporate consciousness. It would be inconsistent for a RICO person, acting within the scope of its authority, to be subject to liability simply because it is separately incorporated, whereas otherwise it would not be held liable under Riverwoods. But see *Haroco, Inc. v. American National Bank & Trust Co., 747 F.2d 384, 402 \(7th Cir. 1984\)* (wholly-owned subsidiary is technically distinct from parent corporation and may be liable under RICO), aff'd on other grounds, *473 U.S. 606, 87 L. Ed. 2d 437, 105 S. Ct. 3291 \(1985\)*.

Discon's reference to unnamed "attorneys, accountants and other agents" as part of the enterprise does not alter this analysis. Riverwoods expressly applies to "agents" as well as "employees" so long as those persons act on behalf of the corporation. Although the situation might be different if the defendants were acting outside the scope of their agency, this situation is not presented here.

C. Section 1962\(d\) -- RICO conspiracy

Lastly, Discon [**28] alleges a violation of subsection 1962(d), which prohibits any conspiracy to commit a RICO violation. Discon's complaint incorporates its prior two claims by reference and simply adds the further allegation that the NYNEX Defendants "consciously agreed to join and to enter a conspiracy" to commit these substantive acts. Since we have held that the prior claims do not state a cause of action for substantive violations of RICO, the present claim does not set forth a conspiracy to commit such violations. See *Lightning Lube, 4 F.3d at 1191 HN11* [↑] ("Any claim under § 1962\(d\) based on conspiracy to violate the other subsections of section 1962 necessarily must fail if the substantive claims are themselves deficient."); *Danielsen, 941 F.2d at 1232*.

Conclusion

We affirm the judgment of the District Court insofar as it dismissed Discon's claims for vertical price-fixing under Section One of the Sherman Act, for monopolization and attempted monopolization under Section Two of Sherman Act, and for RICO acquisition, RICO conduct, and RICO conspiracy under RICO. We reverse the judgment of the District Court and remand for further proceedings with regard to Discon's claims of an unlawful two-firm [**29] group boycott under Section One of the Sherman Act, and a conspiracy to monopolize under Section Two of the Sherman Act.

Discon, Inc. v. NYNEX Corp.

United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit

March 27, 1996, Argued ; August 26, 1996, Decided

Docket No. 95-7673

Reporter

1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 28747 *

DISCON, INCORPORATED, Plaintiff-Appellant, v. NYNEX CORPORATION, NYNEX MATERIAL ENTERPRISES, NEW YORK TELEPHONE COMPANY, ROBERT J. ECKENRODE, and BERNARD O'REILLY, Defendants-Appellees.

Subsequent History: [*1] As Corrected. Certiorari Denied October 6, 1997, Reported at: 1997 U.S. LEXIS 4602.

Prior History: Appeal from the June 14, 1995, judgment of the United States District Court for the Western District of New York (Richard J. Arcara, Judge) dismissing plaintiff-appellant's antitrust and RICO complaint for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted.

Original Opinion Previously Reported at: 1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 21948.

Disposition: Affirmed in part, reversed in part, and remanded for further proceedings.

Core Terms

---

removal, enterprise, monopolization, supplier, Sherman Act, conspiracy, telephone, alleges, horizontal, vertical, compete, entity, group boycott, Antitrust, purchaser, conspiracy to monopolize, restraint of trade, acquisition, competitor, cause of action, predicate act, subsidiary, affiliate, pattern of racketeering activity, rule of reason, manufacturers, wholly-owned, rate-paying, conspired, employees

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Nonprice Restraints

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Price Fixing

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Price Fixing

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

**HN1** [] Vertical Restraints, Nonprice Restraints

To state a claim under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, a plaintiff must allege (1) that the defendants entered into a contract, combination, or conspiracy, and (2) that their agreement was in restraint of trade. Traditionally, restraints of trade are classified as either horizontal restraints or vertical restraints. Horizontal restraints are generally considered illegal per se if they fall within certain broad categories. Vertical restraints are illegal per se only where the agreement contains a further arrangement to fix prices, i.e., vertical price-fixing. Other types of horizontal restraints and vertical non-price restraints are assessed under the rule of reason.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

**HN2** [] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Cartels & Horizontal Restraints

A firm does not become a competitor of one of its suppliers solely by virtue of reselling goods or services to an affiliate under common ownership.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

**HN3** [] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

An agreement between two firms, even in a vertical relationship, may be characterized as a horizontal restraint of trade if the agreement seeks to disadvantage the direct competitor of one of the conspiring firms.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

**HN4** [] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

To state a claim for monopolization, a plaintiff must allege, among other things, that the defendants possess monopoly power in a relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

**HN5** [] Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

To state a cause of action for attempted monopolization, a plaintiff must allege, among other things, that there is a "dangerous probability" that the attempt will succeed.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN6 Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

To state a claim for conspiracy to monopolize, a plaintiff must allege that there was concerted action, overt acts in furtherance of the conspiracy, and specific intent to monopolize. To be liable for conspiracy to monopolize, it is not necessary that the defendants compete directly in the market. A defendant may be liable for conspiracy to monopolize where it agrees with another firm to assist that firm in its attempt to monopolize the relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN7 Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

The essence of a violation of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962\(a\), is not commission of predicate acts but investment of racketeering income. A plaintiff must allege a "use or investment injury" that is distinct from the injuries resulting from predicate acts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN8 Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

The Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962\(c\), prohibits any person employed by or associated with any enterprise to conduct such enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Price Fixing

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN9[ Vertical Restraints, Price Fixing

Any claim under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C.S. § 1962\(d\), based on conspiracy to violate the other subsections of § 1962 necessarily must fail if the substantive claims are themselves deficient.

Counsel: Samuel A. Cherniak, New York, N.Y. (Phyllis Gelman, Gelman & Feinberg, New York, N.Y.; Goldstein, Navagh, Bulan & Chiari, Buffalo, N.Y., on the brief), for plaintiff-appellant.

Guy M. Struve, New York, N.Y. (James D. Liss, Vincent T. Chang, Seth R. Lesser, Davis Polk & Wardwell; Edward S. Bloomberg, Kevin J. English, Phillips, Lytle, Hitchcock, Blaine & Huber, Buffalo, N.Y., on the brief), for defendants-appellees.

Judges: Before: NEWMAN, Chief Judge, OAKES and PARKER, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: JON O. NEWMAN

Opinion

---

JON O. NEWMAN, Chief Judge:

This appeal involves an antitrust suit brought by a former supplier alleging that its purchaser and a competitor acted in violation of the Sherman Act and the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO"). [*2] Plaintiff-appellant Discon, Inc. ("Discon") appeals from the June 14, 1995, judgment of the United States District Court for the Western District of New York (Richard J. Arcara, Judge). The District Court dismissed Discon's amended complaint pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Discon argues that the District Court erred in holding that its complaint fails to allege a violation of either Section One or Section Two of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2 \(1994\), or RICO, 18 U.S.C. § 1962 (1994). Because we believe that the District Court prematurely dismissed two of Discon's claims, we affirm in part, reverse in part, and remand.

Background

Discon is a New York corporation whose primary business is the provision of "removal services" to telephone companies. These removal services include salvaging and disposing of obsolete telephone central office equipment. Discon was first formed in June 1984 to meet a demand created by the court-ordered break-up of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company ("AT&T"), see generally United States v. American Telephone and Telegraph Co., 552 F. Supp. 131 \(D.D.C. 1982\), aff'd [*3] sub nom. Maryland v. United States, 460 U.S. 1001, 75 L. Ed. 2d 472, 103 S. Ct. 1240 (1983). Prior to 1984, AT&T was able to monopolize the market for telecommunications equipment, including the market for removal services, through its ownership of the regional Bell Operating Companies ("BOCs"). AT&T would compel the BOCs to purchase supplies only from AT&T and its manufacturing affiliates, the Western Electric Co. and Bell Telephone Laboratories. In this manner, AT&T was able to extend the regulated monopoly power of its BOCs into other non-regulated markets. 552 F. Supp. at 222-23. Pursuant to the Consent Decree of 1984, AT&T divested itself of control over the BOCs. Thereafter, each BOC was instructed to purchase its products and services from a competitive field of suppliers. Id. at 227. Discon became one of those suppliers of removal services in the New York State area.

NYNEX Corp. ("NYNEX") is a successor entity that emerged out of the 1984 divestiture and replaced the BOCs that operated in New York and New England. NYNEX itself is a holding company that controls several wholly-owned subsidiaries, including NYNEX Material Enterprises ("MECo") and two local telephone service providers, New York

Telephone [*4] Co. ("NYTel") and New England Telephone and Telegraph Co. ("NET").<sup>1</sup> Within the NYNEX structure, MECO is a Delaware corporation whose primary business is the procurement of goods and services for NYNEX and its affiliated corporations, including NYTel. In effect, MECO serves as a purchasing agent for NYNEX and its other subsidiaries. NYTel is a New York corporation that provides local telephone service to most of New York State and some portions of Connecticut. NYTel is the dominant purchaser of removal services in the New York State area. As a regulated monopoly under the New York Public Service Laws, NYTel is subject to the state rate-making process. NYNEX and MECO, however, are not subject to state regulation.

AT&T Technologies is a wholly-owned subsidiary of AT&T, and is the successor entity to the Western Electric Co.<sup>2</sup> AT&T Technologies provides numerous network services, including removal services, to [*5] telephone companies throughout the United States. Within the New York State area, AT&T Technologies competes directly with Discon in the market for removal services.

Discon's complaint alleges that NYNEX, MECO, and NYTel (collectively, the "NYNEX Defendants") conspired with AT&T Technologies to eliminate Discon from the market for removal services. The crux of this conspiracy was a scheme to defraud the rate-paying public. During the mid-1980s, MECO, as a non-regulated affiliate of NYNEX, would purchase removal services at inflated prices from AT&T Technologies. These removal services, along with their inflated prices, were then passed on to NYTel, a regulated affiliate of NYNEX. In turn, NYTel was able to overcharge its captive rate-paying customers pursuant to the rate-making process. MECO would then recoup its inflated costs by receiving a secret year-end "rebate" [*6] from AT&T Technologies. Thus, without being subject to any oversight from the state regulatory commission, MECO and its parent company, NYNEX, were able to generate increased revenues that were essentially derived from NYTel's telephone monopoly. This scheme was replicated in numerous contexts by the NYNEX Defendants for other capital goods and services purchased by NYTel. See In re New York Telephone Co., 5 F.C.C.R. 866 \(1990\) ("FCC Order").

In an independent regulatory proceeding, the Federal Communications Commission ("FCC") found that this method of generating revenues -- using MECO as an "outside" profit center -- violated the Communications Act of 1934, 47 U.S.C. § 201\(b\) \(1988\). The FCC ordered NYTel to issue a rebate to its rate-paying customers for overcharges that occurred between 1984 and 1988. FCC Report, 5 F.C.C.R. 866. The FCC and NYTel subsequently entered into a consent decree. See In re New York Telephone Co., 5 F.C.C.R. 5892 \(1990\) ("FCC Consent Decree"). Without admitting any wrongdoing or violations, NYTel agreed to refund over $ 35 million for "unreasonable rates reflecting improper capital costs and expense charges." Id.

Discon alleges [*7] that, as part of this conspiracy to defraud the rate-paying public, NYNEX and MECO, in purchasing removal services for NYTel, discriminated against Discon in favor of AT&T Technologies because Discon refused to inflate its prices. Also, Discon would sometimes contract directly with NYTel, thus bypassing MECO altogether and undermining the basic premise of the outside profit-center scheme. Discon claims that, in retaliation for its non-cooperation, MECO and AT&T Technologies conspired to disseminate false information about Discon, to burden Discon with undue obligations under threat of economic duress, and to give preferential treatment to AT&T Technologies.

Discon filed its original complaint in the Western District of New York in May 1990, alleging that the NYNEX Defendants had violated Section One and Section Two of the Sherman Act and RICO. In June 1992, the District Court granted an initial motion to dismiss with leave to replead. Shortly thereafter, Discon filed an amended complaint, and the NYNEX Defendants moved to dismiss pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\). On June 14, 1995, the District Court dismissed with prejudice.

Discussion

---

<sup>1</sup> NET is not named as a defendant in this lawsuit, nor is it otherwise involved in these proceedings.

<sup>2</sup> Although AT&T Technologies is alleged by Discon to be a co-conspirator with NYNEX, MECO, and NYTel, it is not named as a defendant in this lawsuit.

I. Section One of the Sherman Act

This [*8] appeal typifies one of the primary difficulties in the judicial application of antitrust law. Under Section One of the Sherman Act, courts are asked to categorize various complex commercial arrangements into a rigid legal taxonomy, e.g., horizontal restraint, vertical restraint, price-fixing, market division, concerted refusal to deal, and so on. This initial categorization is often outcome-determinative. Under one category, the arrangement may be per se illegal, while under another, it may be found permissible under the rule of reason. Due to the complexity of modern business transactions, however, courts often find that commercial arrangements can be classified theoretically under a number of different categories. See Broadcast Music, Inc. v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., 441 U.S. 1, 8, 60 L. Ed. 2d 1, 99 S. Ct. 1551 (1979) ("Easy labels do not always supply ready answers.") In this case, we believe that the District Court may have been misled by a poorly drafted complaint into categorizing the arrangement as one that is presumptively legal. Since the complaint may properly be understood to allege arrangements that might be shown to be unlawful, we are obliged to reverse in part and remand. We [*9] believe that the complaint states a cause of action under Section One of the Sherman Act, though under a different legal theory than the one articulated by Discon.

HN1 To state a claim under Section One of the Sherman Act, Discon must allege (1) that the NYNEX Defendants entered into a contract, combination, or conspiracy, and (2) that their agreement was in restraint of trade. See 15 U.S.C. § 1.<sup>3</sup> Traditionally, restraints of trade are classified as either horizontal restraints or vertical restraints. See Business Electronics Corp. v. Sharp Electronics Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 730, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808, 108 S. Ct. 1515 (1988) ("Sharp"). Horizontal restraints are generally considered illegal per se if they fall within certain broad categories. See United States v. Topco Associates, Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 608, 31 L. Ed. 2d 515, 92 S. Ct. 1126 (1972) (market division); Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207, 211-12, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741, 79 S. Ct. 705 (1959) (concerted refusal to deal); United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 218, 84 L. Ed. 1129, 60 S. Ct. 811 (1940) (horizontal price-fixing). Vertical restraints are illegal per se only where the agreement contains a further arrangement to fix prices, i.e., vertical price-fixing. See Sharp, 485 U.S. at 724. Other [*10] types of horizontal restraints and vertical non-price restraints are assessed under the rule of reason. Id. at 726.

Discon alleges primarily that the NYNEX Defendants engaged in an unlawful horizontal restraint of trade. The complaint asserts that Discon, MECO, and AT&T Technologies were all [*11] providers of removal services to NYTel, and that MECO and AT&T Technologies entered into a conspiracy to discriminate against Discon. The complaint thus alleges a classic horizontal restraint of trade -- an agreement between two potential rivals seeking to disadvantage a third competitor. See E. Thomas Sullivan & Jeffrey L. Harrison, Understanding Antitrust and Its Economic Implications § 4.13, at 110 (2d ed. 1994) (hereinafter "Sullivan, Understanding Antitrust"). In support of this theory, Discon alleges that MECO is a "supplier" of removal services, along with Discon and AT&T Technologies. The District Court, however, found this to be a mischaracterization. We agree. It is undisputed that MECO itself does not perform any removal services for NYTel. Rather, as the complaint acknowledges, "MECO's primary business function is procuring goods and services for New York Telephone [NYTel] . . . and for NYNEX Service Company." Thus, MECO acts essentially as a purchasing agent for NYNEX and NYTel, and in fact, it often served as an intermediary between NYTel and its actual suppliers, Discon and AT&T Technologies. See Westchester Radiological Associates v. Empire Blue [*12] Cross and Blue Shield, Inc., 707 F. Supp. 708, 712-13 (S.D.N.Y.) ("antitrust remedy" does not apply "where a buyer insists on buying his services through an intermediary"), aff'd on opinion below, 884 F.2d 707, 708 (2d Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 493 U.S. 1095 (1990).

---

<sup>3</sup>The NYNEX Defendants devote a single footnote in their brief to the argument that Discon failed to allege a "conspiracy" in restraint of trade. See Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 764-67, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1984) (requirement of "concerted action"). Although Discon's complaint is not a model of clarity, it alleges that NYNEX, MECO, and AT&T Technologies conspired to defraud the rate-paying public and that this agreement apparently contemplated some form of discrimination against Discon. More specifically, the complaint alleges the existence of various meetings between NYNEX procurement personnel, MECO officers, and agents of AT&T Technologies. These allegations are sufficient to defeat a motion to dismiss.

It is true that, at times, NYTel would contract directly with Discon or other suppliers, and in those situations, presumably MECO would lose the opportunity to derive a commission. Therefore, in one sense, MECO could be considered, if not a supplier, at least a competitor with Discon and AT&T Technologies. Nonetheless, we decline to adopt this line of analysis for two reasons. First, MECO by its very nature transacts business for only one purchaser, NYTel. Unlike other intermediaries, such as wholesalers, who may transfer goods and services to a number of different purchasers, MECO does not resell removal services to any other telephone company.<sup>4</sup> Thus, MECO does not compete in the overall market for removal services, but only in the "market" for a single buyer. Second, the fact that MECO and NYTel are both affiliated under the same corporate structure strengthens the analogy of MECO to that of an internal purchasing [*13] agent. If MECO were organized as a purchasing department within NYTel, rather than as a separate corporate entity, it would be undisputed that MECO did not compete with Discon or AT&T Technologies. We believe it would be incongruous to apply a different rule of law simply because MECO holds its own corporate charter. Cf. Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 58-59, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 97 S. Ct. 2549 (1977) (courts in antitrust cases should eschew "formalistic line drawing"). The fact remains that MECO acts at the behest of NYNEX and NYTel, and its actions are guided by a single corporate consciousness. Cf. Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 771, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 (1984) (parent corporation and wholly-owned subsidiary are "single enterprise" for purpose of conspiracy requirement under Section One). HN2<sup>5</sup> A firm does not become a competitor of one of its suppliers solely by virtue of reselling goods or services to an affiliate under common ownership.

[*14] Since MECO is not a supplier of removal services and does not otherwise compete with Discon and AT&T Technologies in the overall market, Discon cannot succeed on its theory of a classic horizontal restraint of trade.<sup>5</sup> Nonetheless, we believe that Discon may be able to prevail under a different legal theory. In Oreck Corp. v. Whirlpool Corp., 579 F.2d 126 (2d Cir.) (in banc), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 946, 58 L. Ed. 2d 338, 99 S. Ct. 340 (1978), we noted that HN3<sup>6</sup> [↑] an agreement between two firms (e.g., MECO and AT&T Technologies), even in a vertical relationship, may be characterized as a horizontal restraint of trade if the agreement seeks to disadvantage the direct competitor (e.g., Discon) of one of the conspiring firms. Id. at 131-32 & n.6; see Sullivan, Understanding Antitrust, supra, § 4.13, at 110 (describing different types of concerted refusals to deal); L. Sullivan, Handbook of the Law of Antitrust 230-31 & n.1 (1977) (same). Oreck sought to elaborate on the Supreme Court's decision in Klor's, 359 U.S. at 211-12, where the Court held that a retailer may not induce its manufacturers to refrain from selling to a competing retailer. In Klor's, the agreements between [*15] the defendant-retailer and its manufacturers were essentially vertical in nature. Yet the Supreme Court applied a "group boycott" theory because it found that the intent and effect of these vertical agreements was a horizontal market impact. Id.

[*16] It is true that Klor's is not directly on point, because in that case numerous manufacturers participated in a group boycott, whereas here the complaint alleges only a single boycotting firm, MECO, and a single competitor, AT&T Technologies. Nonetheless, Klor's has been extended in the Sixth and Ninth Circuits to the situation where only a single retailer and a single manufacturer conspire. See Com-Tel, Inc. v. DuKane Corp., 669 F.2d 404, 411-13 & nn. 13, 16 (6th Cir. 1982); Cascade Cabinet Co. v. Western Cabinet & Millwork Inc., 710 F.2d 1366, 1370-71 (9th Cir. 1983); see also Cernuto, Inc. v. United Cabinet Corp., 595 F.2d 164, 168 (3d Cir. 1979). The Eleventh Circuit, on the other hand, has expressly declined to extend Klor's in such a manner. See Construction Aggregate Transport, Inc. v. Florida Rock Industries, Inc., 710 F.2d 752, 776-78 (11th Cir. 1983); see also Westman Commission Co. v. Hobart International, Inc., 796 F.2d 1216, 1224 n.1 (10th Cir. 1986), cert. denied, 486 U.S. 1005, 100 L. Ed. 2d 192, 108 S. Ct. 1728 (1988).

<sup>4</sup> Discon's complaint reveals at least one other telephone company, AT&T Communications, that purchases removal services in the New York State area.

<sup>5</sup> Discon also argues that the agreement between MECO and AT&T Technologies could be characterized as a vertical agreement to fix prices. See Sharp, 485 U.S. at 724-26; Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. John D. Park & Sons Co., 220 U.S. 373, 55 L. Ed. 502, 31 S. Ct. 376 (1911). We believe, however, that Discon has not stated a cause of action under a theory of vertical price-fixing. Discon admits that its allegations merely raise the "inference" that AT&T Technologies and MECO "intended" to influence the prices that MECO charged to NYTel. Yet this inference arises whenever a supplier sells its products to a purchasing agent. The price agreed upon between the supplier and the purchasing agent will by definition exert some influence upon the final price that the purchasing agent passes on to its client. Discon does not allege that MECO was in any way restricted in its freedom to set whatever prices it charged to NYTel. Therefore, the arrangement between MECO and AT&T Technologies cannot be characterized as one to "fix" prices. See Sharp, 485 U.S. at 731 (vertical price-fixing conspiracy must contain "some agreement on price or price levels").

We can understand why some courts are reluctant to extend Klor's to two-firm group boycotts, since such arrangements will often resemble exclusive [*17] distributorship agreements, which are generally considered permissible under the rule of reason. See Oreck, 579 F.2d at 131. We emphasize that our decision should not be read to conflict with the holding in Oreck that, in general, two-firm vertical combinations will be scrutinized as exclusive distributorship controversies, rather than as group boycotts. Id.; see also Sharp, 485 U.S. at 725-31 & n.4 (two-firm group boycott should be judged under rule of reason); K.M.B. Warehouse Distributors, Inc. v. Walker Manufacturing Co., 61 F.3d 123, 127 (2d Cir. 1995) (decision to use one distributor over another does not violate Section One). Yet Oreck cautioned that it may not always be true that two-firm group boycotts are permissible; rather, "a careful scrutiny into the business justifications for the agreement is required." 579 F.2d at 132 n.6.

In the vast majority of cases, the decision to discriminate in favor of one supplier over another will have a pro-competitive intent and effect. Cf. Sharp, 485 U.S. at 724-25. Presumably, the purchaser will have chosen a particular supplier because that firm provides certain efficiencies that allow the purchaser to [*18] compete more effectively in the market for sales to the ultimate consumer. In this case, however, no such pro-competitive rationale appears on the face of the complaint. Discon alleges that the intent and effect of choosing AT&T Technologies over Discon was entirely anti-competitive. Although the NYNEX Defendants may be able to present some pro-competitive justification for choosing a more costly supplier in order to overcharge captive rate-paying customers, this justification, if it exists, remains unproven. We conclude that Discon has alleged a cause of action under, at least, the rule of reason, and possibly under the per se rule applied to group boycotts in Klor's, if the restraint of trade "has no purpose except stifling competition." Oreck, 579 F.2d at 131 (quoting White Motor Co. v. United States, 372 U.S. 253, 263, 9 L. Ed. 2d 738, 83 S. Ct. 696 (1963)).<sup>6</sup>

[*19] II. Section Two of the Sherman Act

Discon also alleges that the NYNEX Defendants violated Section Two of the Sherman Act by engaging in monopolization, attempted monopolization, and conspiracy to monopolize. See 15 U.S.C. § 2. We consider each of these claims separately.

A. Monopolization

HN4 To state a claim for monopolization, Discon must allege, among other things, that the defendants possess monopoly power in a relevant market. See United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 (1966). In this case, however, none of the NYNEX Defendants competes in the relevant market for removal services. NYNEX and NYTel are purchasers, not suppliers, of removal services, and MECO, as we have noted, is only a purchasing agent for NYTel and cannot be considered a competitor in the overall market.<sup>7</sup> Thus, Discon's claim of monopolization must fail, since it is axiomatic that a firm cannot monopolize a market in which it does not compete. See Official Airline Guides, Inc. v. FTC, 630 F.2d 920, 925-27 (2d Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 450 U.S. 917, 67 L. Ed. 2d 343, 101 S. Ct. 1362 (1981); FLM Collision Parts, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 543 F.2d 1019, 1030 (2d Cir. 1976), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 1097, 51 L. Ed. 2d 545, 97 S. Ct. 1116 [*20] (1977).

---

<sup>6</sup> We do not decide at this point whether the District Court on remand should apply a per se rule; however, we note that the traditional rationale for applying the rule of reason to two-firm group boycotts -- the promotion of interbrand competition over intrabrand competition -- does not exist in this case. Cf. Sharp, 485 U.S. at 724-25; Oreck, 579 F.2d at 131.

<sup>7</sup> The only conspiring firm that competes in the market for removal services is AT&T Technologies; however, it is not named as a defendant in this lawsuit.

B. Attempted Monopolization

Discon's claim of attempted monopolization fails for the same reason. HN5 To state a cause of action for attempted monopolization, Discon must allege, among other things, that there is a "dangerous probability" that the attempt will succeed. See International Distribution Centers, Inc. v. Walsh Trucking Co., 812 F.2d 786, 790 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 482 U.S. 915, 96 L. Ed. 2d 676, 107 S. Ct. 3188 (1987). In this case, there was no "dangerous probability" that the NYNEX Defendants would succeed in monopolizing the market for removal services, since they do not even compete in that market and there is no indication that they ever sought to do so. See FLM Collision Parts, 543 F.2d at 1030.

C. Conspiracy to Monopolize

HN6 To state a claim for conspiracy to monopolize, Discon must allege that there was (1) concerted action, (2) overt acts in furtherance [*21] of the conspiracy, and (3) specific intent to monopolize. See International Distribution Centers, 812 F.2d at 795. Unlike the previous two Section Two claims, to be liable for conspiracy to monopolize, it is not necessary that the NYNEX Defendants compete directly in the market for removal services. A defendant may be liable for conspiracy to monopolize where it agrees with another firm to assist that firm in its attempt to monopolize the relevant market. We conclude that the complaint sufficiently alleges that the NYNEX Defendants conspired with AT&T Technologies and performed overt acts intending to assist AT&T Technologies in its monopolization of the market for removal services. The requirement of pleading specific intent is met insofar as Discon alleges that MECO sought the dominance of AT&T Technologies in order to ensure the suppression of other suppliers who would bypass MECO and deal with NYTel directly. Therefore, since Discon has alleged the essential elements of a conspiracy to monopolize, the District Court should not have dismissed this claim.

III. Civil RICO

Finally, Discon alleges several violations of RICO, 18 U.S.C. § 1962. Discon alleges that the NYNEX [*22] Defendants violated subsections 1962(b), (c), and (d). All three of these claims were properly dismissed by the District Court.

A. Subsection 1962(b) -- RICO acquisition

Discon first alleges a violation of subsection 1962(b), which prohibits the "acquisition or maintenance" of an enterprise through a pattern of racketeering activity. Defining the relevant "enterprise" as NYTel, Discon claims that NYNEX and MECO controlled NYTel through a number of illegal predicate acts. It is undisputed, however, that NYNEX acquired legal control over NYTel during the 1984 divestiture. Discon does not allege any facts to support a finding that this control, which exists by virtue of stock ownership in a wholly-owned subsidiary, was "acquired" or "maintained" through a pattern of racketeering activity.

Moreover, Discon has not alleged the sort of "acquisition injury" necessary to state a claim under subsection 1962(b). We have held, in the context of subsection 1962(a), prohibiting the "use or investment of income" derived from a pattern of racketeering activity, that "HN7 the essence of a violation of § 1962\(a\) is not commission of predicate acts but investment of racketeering income." [Quaknine \[\*231\] v. MacFarlane, 897 F.2d 75, 82-83 \(2d Cir. 1990\)](#). In the context of subsection 1962(a), therefore, we have required that the plaintiff allege a "use or investment injury" that is distinct from the injuries resulting from predicate acts.

Similarly, other circuits have held that, in order to state a cause of action under subsection 1962(b), "plaintiffs must allege an 'acquisition' injury, analogous to the 'use or investment injury' required under § 1962\(a\) to show injury by reason of a § 1962\(b\) violation." Danielsen v. Burnside-Ott Aviation Training Center, Inc., 291 U.S. App. D.C. 303, 941 F.2d 1220, 1231 \(D.C. Cir. 1991\); accord Compagnie de Reassurance d' Ile de France v. New England Reinsurance Corp., 57 F.3d 56, 92 (1st Cir.), cert. denied, 133 L. Ed. 2d 490, 116 S. Ct. 564 (1995); Lightning Lube, Inc. v. Witco Corp., 4 F.3d 1153, 1191 \(3d Cir. 1993\); Old Time Enterprises, Inc. v. International Coffee Corp., 862

F.2d 1213, 1219 \(5th Cir. 1989\). In this case, Discon has not alleged any injury stemming from the "acquisition or maintenance" of NYTel by NYNEX and MECO, only injuries resulting from the commission of predicate acts. Without a distinct "acquisition injury," Discon cannot state a cause of [*24] action under subsection 1962(b).

B. Subsection 1962(c) -- RICO conduct

Discon also alleges a violation of HN8 subsection 1962(c), which prohibits "any person employed by or associated with any enterprise . . . to conduct . . . such enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity . . ." 18 U.S.C. § 1962\(c\).<sup>8</sup> For this claim, Discon redefines the enterprise as the "NYNEX Group," which consists of the three corporations, NYNEX, MECO, and NYTel. Discon claims that these three corporate "persons" conducted the affairs of the NYNEX Group "enterprise" through a number of illegal predicate acts.

We have previously held, however, that subsection 1962(c) "clearly envisions" that the "person" and the "enterprise" will be distinct. Bennett v. United States Trust Co., 770 F.2d 308, 315 \(2d Cir. 1985\), cert. denied, 474 U.S. 1058, 88 L. Ed. 2d 776, 106 S. Ct. 800 (1986). "[A] corporate entity may not be simultaneously the 'enterprise' and the 'person' who conducts the affairs of the enterprise through a pattern of racketeering activity." Id. In Riverwoods Chappaqua Corp. v. Marine Midland Bank, 30 F.3d 339 \(2d Cir. 1994\), we explained further that the distinctiveness requirement of Bennett may not be circumvented "by alleging a RICO enterprise that consists merely of a corporate defendant associated with its own employees or agents carrying on the regular affairs of the defendant . . ." Id. at 344. "Where employees of a corporation associate together to commit a pattern of predicate acts in the course of their employment and on behalf of the corporation, the employees in association with the corporation do not form an enterprise distinct from the corporation." Id. Thus, in Riverwoods, we found that the activities of two loan officers "acting within the scope of their authority" could not subject them to RICO liability for conducting the affairs of the alleged enterprise-bank.

In response, Discon cites Cullen v. Margiotta, 811 F.2d 698 (2d Cir.), [*26] cert. denied, 483 U.S. 1021, 107 S. Ct. 3266, 97 L. Ed. 2d 764 (1987), for the proposition that a defendant may simultaneously be a RICO "person" and one of a number of members in the RICO "enterprise." 811 F.2d at 729-30. In Cullen, the enterprise was defined as an association of three separate entities -- a municipality, the town Republican Committee, and the county Republican Committee. Id. at 728. We held that any of the three individual entities could be convicted under subsection 1962(c) for its participation in the tripartite enterprise.

The difference between Riverwoods and Cullen appears to lie in the fact that Riverwoods involved only a single corporate entity that was associated with its employees, whereas Cullen involved three legally separate entities that could be differentiated from the enterprise-group. Moreover, in Riverwoods, the individual defendants were acting on behalf of the enterprise-corporation, and therefore, it would have been especially inappropriate to hold that they were "distinct" from the enterprise.

In this case, we confront a situation that lies somewhere between Riverwoods and Cullen. Like the defendants in Riverwoods, NYNEX, MECO and NYTel [*27] operate within a unified corporate structure. At the same time, however, they are also legally separate entities from each other and from the NYNEX Group. Although our decision is by no means dictated by clear precedent, we believe that Riverwoods presents the more analogous situation. The relationship between NYNEX, MECO, and NYTel in comparison to the NYNEX Group is not substantially different from that between the loan officers in Riverwoods in comparison to the bank. In both cases, the individual defendants were acting within the scope of a single corporate structure, guided by a single corporate consciousness. It would be inconsistent for a RICO person, acting within the scope of its authority, to be subject to liability simply because it is separately incorporated, whereas otherwise it would not be held liable under Riverwoods. But see Haroco, Inc. v. American National Bank and Trust Co., 747 F.2d 384, 402 \(7th Cir. 1984\)

---

<sup>8</sup> Unlike subsections 1962(a) and (b), under subsection 1962(c), a plaintiff need not allege a distinct "racketeering injury" in order to state cause of action. See Sedima, S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., 473 U.S. 479, 494-95, 87 L. Ed. 2d 346, 105 S. Ct. 3275 \(1985\).

(wholly-owned subsidiary is technically distinct from parent corporation and may be liable under RICO), aff'd on other grounds, 473 U.S. 606, 87 L. Ed. 2d 437, 105 S. Ct. 3291 \(1985\).

Discon's reference to unnamed "attorneys, accountants and other agents" as part of the enterprise [*28] does not alter this analysis. Riverwoods expressly applies to "agents" as well as "employees" so long as those persons act on behalf of the corporation. Although the situation might be different if the defendants were acting outside the scope of their agency, this situation is not presented here.

C. Section 1962(d) -- RICO conspiracy

Lastly, Discon alleges a violation of subsection 1962(d), which prohibits any conspiracy to commit a RICO violation. Discon's complaint incorporates its prior two claims by reference and simply adds the further allegation that the NYNEX Defendants "consciously agreed to join and to enter a conspiracy" to commit these substantive acts. Since we have held that the prior claims do not state a cause of action for substantive violations of RICO, the present claim does not set forth a conspiracy to commit such violations. See Lightning Lube, 4 F.3d at 1191 ("HN9" Any claim under § 1962\(d\) based on conspiracy to violate the other subsections of section 1962 necessarily must fail if the substantive claims are themselves deficient."); Danielsen, 941 F.2d at 1232.

Conclusion

We affirm the judgment of the District Court insofar as it dismissed [*29] Discon's claims for vertical price-fixing under Section One of the Sherman Act, for monopolization and attempted monopolization under Section Two of Sherman Act, and for RICO acquisition, RICO conduct, and RICO conspiracy under RICO. We reverse the judgment of the District Court and remand for further proceedings with regard to Discon's claims of an unlawful two-firm group boycott under Section One of the Sherman Act, and a conspiracy to monopolize under Section Two of the Sherman Act.

---

End of Document

Khan v. State Oil Co.

United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit

June 7, 1996, Argued ; August 29, 1996, Decided

No. 96-1309

Reporter

93 F.3d 1358 *; 1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 22504 **; 1996-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,546

BARKAT U. KHAN and KHAN & ASSOCIATES, INC., Plaintiffs-Appellants, v. STATE OIL COMPANY, Defendant-Appellee.

Subsequent History: [\[\*\*1\]](#) Certiorari Granted February 18, 1997, Reported at: 1997 U.S. LEXIS 1265.

Prior History: Appeal from the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division. No. 94 C 35. Charles R. Norgle, Sr., Judge.

Disposition: AFFIRMED IN PART, REVERSED IN PART, AND REMANDED.

Core Terms

---

dealers, antitrust, supplier, vertical, suggested retail price, resale price, gasoline, margin, anti trust law, competitors, horizontal, fixing, per se rule, cases, maximum, cartel, maximum price, distributor, station, price-fixing, prices, price fixing, termination, effects, retail price, customers, charging, monopoly, receiver, ceiling

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

**HN1** [] Private Actions, Remedies

Challenged practices that do not fall within any of the per se categories are subject to the broader-ranging inquiry into effect and motives that goes by the name of the "rule of reason" and that requires the plaintiff to prove that the defendant's conduct actually (or with a high likelihood) reduced competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN2 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

Price fixing has long been illegal per se. In its usual and most pernicious form, the term refers to an agreement or conspiracy between competing firms to fix a minimum price for their product. By a modest extension it refers also to an agreement between competitors to fix either a minimum or a maximum price for the resale of their product by their dealers.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Price Fixing

HN3 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Maximum price fixing is illegal per se even if entirely "vertical," that is, even if the only parties in the picture are a single supplier and a single dealer.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN4 Private Actions, Remedies

There is no right to maintain a suit under the antitrust laws unless the defendant's conduct has impaired the kind of interest that the antitrust laws were intended to protect. And there is no such interest in the maintenance of a monopoly price. If typically a resale price ceiling imposed by a seller merely prevents his dealers from reaping monopoly profits, the injury to the dealers from the ceiling--the loss, that is, of monopoly profits--will not support an antitrust suit. The requirement of proving antitrust injury is not waived in per se cases.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

HN5 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

A price ceiling is a natural and procompetitive incident to a scheme of territorial exclusivity.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Price Fixing

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Resale Price Maintenance

HN6 Vertical Restraints, Price Fixing

Resale price maintenance does not impair any interest that the antitrust laws interpreted in light of modern economics could be thought intended to protect. It increases rather than reduces competition.

Evidence > ... > Procedural Matters > Preliminary Questions > General Overview

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > General Overview

HN7 Procedural Matters, Preliminary Questions

A scientist, however reputable, is not permitted to offer evidence that he has not generated by the methods he would use in his normal academic or professional work, which is to say in work undertaken without reference to or expectation of possible use in litigation.

Counsel: For BARKAT U. KHAN, KHAN & ASSOCIATES, INC., an Illinois Corporation, Plaintiffs - Appellants: Anthony S. DiVincenzo, CAMPBELL & DIVENCENZO, Chicago, IL, USA. David C. Bogan, DAVIS, MANNIX & MCGRATH, Chicago, IL, USA.

For STATE OIL COMPANY, a corporation, Defendant - Appellee: Paul T. Kalinich, KALINICH & McCLUSKEY, P.C., Glen Ellyn, IL, USA. John Baumgartner, CHURCHILL, BAUMGARTNER & QUINN, LTD., Grayslake, IL, USA.

Judges: Before POSNER, Chief Judge, and FLAUM and RIPPLE, Circuit Judges. RIPPLE, Circuit Judge, concurring.

Opinion by: POSNER

Opinion

---

[*1359] POSNER, Chief Judge. The plaintiffs (collectively "Khan") operated a gas station in DuPage County, Illinois, [*1360] under a contract with State Oil Company, a distributor of gasoline and related products. The contract provided for the lease of the station (which State Oil owned), and the supply of gasoline and ancillary products for resale, to Khan. Mr. Khan was the actual signatory of the contract, rather than his corporation, which operated the station, so it does not appear that he is complaining about a merely derivative injury to himself, in which event he would not be a proper party. Hammes v. AAMCO Transmissions, Inc., 33 F.3d 774, 777 (7th Cir. 1994).

State Oil terminated the contract because Khan failed to pay the agreed-upon rent for the station. The termination precipitated this suit, which, so far as relevant to the appeal, charges price fixing in violation [**2] of section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, and breach of contract under the common law of Illinois. The district judge granted summary judgment for the defendant on both claims. He ruled that the legality under the Sherman Act of the alleged price fixing was to be tested by the rule of reason rather than by the per se rule, that the plaintiff had presented no evidence on essential elements of a rule of reason case (such as market power), that the study conducted by the plaintiffs' economic expert was inadmissible, and that without the study the plaintiffs could not even prove injury.

The contract between State Oil and Khan provided that State Oil would establish a suggested retail price for the gasoline (which was sold under the brand name "Union 76") and would sell the gasoline to Khan for 3.25 cents less than that price. If Khan believed the price was too high he could ask State Oil to lower it and if State Oil complied Khan would be entitled to purchase the gasoline from State Oil at the same margin, that is, at the new price minus 3.25 cents. If State Oil refused to reduce the suggested retail price Khan could still charge a lower price, but his margin would be smaller because [**3] he would not be getting a lower price from State Oil. If Khan believed the suggested retail price was too low he could ask State Oil to raise it, thus preserving his margin; but if State Oil refused and Khan went ahead and raised his price anyway, the contract required Khan to rebate the difference between his new price and the suggested price times the number of gallons sold at the new price. The contract thus required Khan to rebate the entire profit from raising his price without his supplier's permission above the retail price suggested by the supplier.

The provision concerning the charging by Khan of a price below the suggested retail price neither is price fixing nor is germane to the price-fixing charge. A supplier is under no obligation to lower his price to his customer just because the customer wants to resell the supplier's product for less than the supplier has suggested without sacrificing any of his profit margin. The contract in this case merely disclaims any such unusual obligation, and since the obligation has no basis in antitrust law the disclaimer has no antitrust significance either.

State Oil also denies that the provision in the contract pertaining to Khan's [**4] charging a price above the suggested retail price is a form of price fixing. It points out that Khan was free to charge as high a price as he wishes. This is true in the sense that it would not have been a breach of contract for Khan to raise his price. But the contract made it worthless for him to do so; and, realistically, this was just an alternative sanction to termination, and probably an equally effective one. Generally when a seller raises his price, his volume falls; and if his profit on each unit sold is frozen, the effect of his raising his price will be that he loses revenue: he will sell fewer units, at the same profit per unit. The contract, incidentally, required Khan to buy all his gasoline from State Oil; so he could not merely switch to another brand if he wanted to charge a higher price.

Practices that have the same effect are not always treated the same in law. More precisely, two practices that have one effect in common may differ in their other effects. A merger between competitors and a price-fixing agreement between competitors has the same effect in extinguishing price competition between the parties, but the merger is more likely to produce offsetting cost [**5] savings and it is therefore treated more leniently by the antitrust laws. So the fact that State [*1361] Oil's rebate scheme was as effective in deterring Khan from raising his price as a threat to terminate his lease would have been does not dictate that the two practices be treated identically under the antitrust laws. But State Oil has not identified any other relevant difference between the two methods of preventing a dealer from charging more than the suggested retail price. The purely formal character of the distinction that it urges can be seen by imagining that the contract had forbidden Khan to exceed the suggested retail price and had provided that if he violated the prohibition the sanction would be for him to remit any resulting profit to State Oil. There is no practical difference between that form of words and permitting Khan to sell at a higher price but providing that if he does so the profit belongs to State Oil.

So State Oil engaged in maximum price fixing; the next question is whether this practice is illegal per se, meaning that all the plaintiff need prove to prevail is that the defendant engaged in the practice; investigation of its actual economic effects is pretermitted. [**6] E.g., Business Electronics Corp. v. Sharp Electronics Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 723, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808, 108 S. Ct. 1515 (1988); Arizona v. Maricopa County Medical Society, 457 U.S. 332, 342-44, 73 L. Ed. 2d 48, 102 S. Ct. 2466 (1982). HN1[<sup>1</sup>] Challenged practices that do not fall within any of the per se categories are subject to the broader-ranging inquiry into effect and motives that goes by the name of the "rule of reason" and that requires the plaintiff to prove that the defendant's conduct actually (or with a high likelihood) reduced competition. Id. at 343; Business Electronics Corp. v. Sharp Electronics Corp., supra, 485 U.S. at 723. HN2[<sup>1</sup>] Price fixing has long been illegal per se. In its usual and most pernicious form, the term refers to an agreement or conspiracy between competing firms to fix a minimum price for their product. By a modest extension it refers also to an agreement between competitors to fix either a minimum or a maximum price for the resale of their product by their dealers. See Arizona v. Maricopa County Medical Society, supra, 457 U.S. at 348; Kiefer-Stewart Co. v. Joseph E. Seagram & Sons, Inc., 340 U.S. 211, 95 L. Ed. 219, 71 S. Ct. 259 (1951). Why might competitors fix a minimum resale price? In order to make it more difficult for any of them to [**7] engage in undetected violations of their agreement to fix their own (that is, the wholesale) prices; a supplier who observed that he was losing sales because his competitor's dealers were selling the competitor's product at a low price would know that the competitor was failing to enforce the price-fixing agreement. Pauline M. Ippolito & Thomas R. Overstreet, Jr., "Resale Price Maintenance: An Economic Assessment of the Federal Trade Commission's Case Against the Corning Glass Works," 39 J. Law & Econ. 285, 293-94 \(1996\). Why might competitors fix a maximum resale price? The difference between what a supplier charges his dealer and what the dealer charges the ultimate customer is, functionally, compensation to the dealer for performing the resale service; so by agreeing on the resale prices of their goods competing sellers can reduce their dealers' margin below the competitive price for the dealers' service. This is a form of monopsony pricing, which is analytically the same as monopoly or cartel pricing and so treated by the law. E.g., Mandeville Island Farms, Inc. v. American Crystal Sugar Co., 334 U.S. 219, 92 L. Ed. 1328, 68 S. Ct. 996 \(1948\).

The questionable next step (logically, not chronologically, [**8] next) in the evolution of antitrust law was to affix the per se label to contracts in which a single supplier, not acting in concert with any of its competitors, fixed its dealers' retail prices. Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. John D. Park & Sons Co., 220 U.S. 373, 55 L. Ed. 502, 31 S. Ct. 376 \(1911\). Here the economic difference between fixing a minimum resale price and fixing a maximum resale price becomes more pronounced, although most economists believe that neither form of price fixing is pernicious when the supplier is neither the cat's paw of colluding distributors nor acting in concert with his competitors. A supplier acting unilaterally might fix a minimum resale price in order to induce his dealers to furnish valuable point-of-sale services (trained salesmen, clean restrooms--whatever) to customers, which they [*1362] could not afford to do without a guaranteed margin to cover the costs of the services, because the customers would use the services provided by the full-service dealers but then purchase the product from a competing dealer who could sell the product at a discount because he had not borne the expense of providing the services. Lester G. Telser, "Why Should Manufacturers Want Fair Trade?" 3 J. Law [**9] & Econ. 86 (1962); Ippolito & Overstreet, supra, 39 J. Law & Econ. at 294 (summarizing this and other theories of benign resale price maintenance).

As for maximum resale price fixing, unless the supplier is a monopsonist he cannot squeeze his dealers' margins below a competitive level; the attempt to do so would just drive the dealers into the arms of a competing supplier. A supplier might, however, fix a maximum resale price in order to prevent his dealers from exploiting a monopoly position. We do not know anything about the competitive environment in which Khan and State Oil operate--which is why the district judge was right to conclude that if the rule of reason is applicable, Khan loses. But suppose that State Oil, perhaps to encourage the dealer services that we mentioned, has spaced its dealers sufficiently far apart to limit competition among them (or even given each of them an exclusive territory); and suppose further that Union 76 is a sufficiently distinctive and popular brand to give the dealers in it at least a modicum of monopoly power. Then State Oil might want to place a ceiling on the dealers' resale prices in order to prevent them from exploiting that monopoly [**10] power fully. It would do this not out of disinterested malice, but in its commercial self-interest. The higher the price at which gasoline is resold, the smaller the volume sold, and so the lower the profit to the supplier if the higher profit per gallon at the higher price is being snared by the dealer.

Despite these points, the Supreme Court has thus far refused to reexamine the cases in which it has held that resale price fixing is illegal per se regardless of the competitive position of the price fixer or whether the price fixed is a floor or a ceiling. The key precedent so far as the present case is concerned is Albrecht v. Herald Company, 390 U.S. 145, 19 L. Ed. 2d 998, 88 S. Ct. 869 \(1968\), a damages suit like this where the Court held over a vigorous dissent that the action of a newspaper publisher in fixing a ceiling at which its distributors could resell the newspaper to the public was illegal per se. State Oil seeks to distinguish Albrecht by pointing out that the initiative for the newspaper to take action against the plaintiff distributor had come from another distributor, giving the scheme a "horizontal" flavor. True, but this was not a factor on which the Court relied. It stated its holding [**11] broadly: HN3↑ maximum price fixing is illegal per se even if entirely "vertical," that is, even if the only parties in the picture are a single supplier and a single dealer, as in this case. The Court explicitly rejected the view that "contracts between a single supplier and his many dealers to fix maximum resale prices would not violate the Sherman Act." Id. at 152 n. 8. The only use the Court made of the involvement of the other distributor was to show that it was not a case in which the supplier, as permitted by the Colgate doctrine (see below), had merely cut off a dealer for failing to adhere to a suggested price. See id. at 149-50. It is not cricket to distinguish a precedent by pointing to a fact mentioned by the court in the previous opinion but clearly given no weight by it. Otherwise no precedents would have any force, for no two cases are exactly alike.

State Oil points out that a supplier has the right to suggest a retail price and terminate a dealer who does not adhere to it. True, United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U.S. 300, 63 L. Ed. 992, 39 S. Ct. 465 \(1919\), but irrelevant. In such a case there is no agreement between the parties and so no basis for invoking section 1 of the Sherman Act, \*\*12 which is limited to contracts, combinations, and conspiracies, all of which involve an element of agreement. There was an explicit agreement that Khan could not make money if he sold above the suggested retail price. Had he raised its price above that level, State Oil would have had a contractual right to a rebate.

State Oil's main argument is that Albrecht is no longer the view of the Supreme \*1363 Court. (That argument was squarely rejected in Caribe BMW, Inc. v. Bayerische Motoren Werke Aktiengesellschaft, 19 F.3d 745, 752-54 \(1st Cir. 1994\), so if we accepted State Oil's argument we would be creating a circuit split.) State Oil relies on a line of cases decided after Albrecht in which the Court established the concept of "antitrust injury." HN4↑ There is no right to maintain a suit under the antitrust laws unless the defendant's conduct has impaired the kind of interest that the antitrust laws were intended to protect. Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 \(1977\). And there is no such interest in the maintenance of a monopoly price. If typically and here a resale price ceiling imposed by a seller merely prevents his dealers from reaping monopoly profits, \*\*13 the injury to the dealers from the ceiling--the loss, that is, of monopoly profits--will not support an antitrust suit. The requirement of proving antitrust injury is not waived in per se cases. In Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333, 110 S. Ct. 1884 \(1990\), the Supreme Court held that a competitor of dealers prevented by their suppliers from raising their prices could not complain that the restriction was preventing him from raising his own prices.

We have considerable sympathy with the argument that Albrecht is inconsistent with the cases that establish the requirement of proving antitrust injury. In fact, we think the argument is right and that it may well portend the doom of Albrecht. In Jack Walters & Sons Corp. v. Morton Building, Inc., 737 F.2d 698, 706-07 \(7th Cir. 1984\), we said we regarded the continued validity of Albrecht as an open question, albeit for a different reason: that after Albrecht the Supreme Court had (reversing its previous position) recognized that exclusive dealer territories may be procompetitive. Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 97 S. Ct. 2549 \(1977\). As we pointed out earlier in this opinion, and as one of the \*\*14 dissenting opinions in Albrecht had pointed out as well, 390 U.S. at 169, HN5↑ a price ceiling is a natural and procompetitive incident to a scheme of territorial exclusivity. The majority opinion in Albrecht had rejected this argument on the ground that price fixing cannot be "justified because it blunts the pernicious consequences of another distribution practice," 390 U.S. at 154, namely exclusive territories. We now know that the consequences of that other practice are not (not generally, at any rate) pernicious. So another prop beneath Albrecht has been knocked away, although State Oil does not make the argument from Sylvania, maybe because it does not grant its dealers exclusive territories (the record is silent on the matter).

Yet despite all its infirmities, its increasingly wobbly, moth-eaten foundations (see 8 Phillip E. Areeda, Antitrust Law: An Analysis of Antitrust Principles and Their Application PP 1635-38 (1989)), Albrecht has not been expressly overruled (or, what would amount to the same thing, a later case, conceded to be indistinguishable, has not been expressly overruled). And the Supreme Court has told the lower federal courts, in increasingly \*\*15 emphatic, even strident, terms, not to anticipate an overruling of a decision by the Court; we are to leave the overruling to the Court itself. Thurston Motor Lines, Inc. v. Jordan K. Rand, Ltd., 460 U.S. 533, 535, 75 L. Ed. 2d 260, 103 S. Ct. 1343 \(1983\) (per curiam); Rodriguez de Quijas v. Shearson/American Express, Inc., 490 U.S. 477, 484, 104 L. Ed. 2d 526, 109 S. Ct. 1917 \(1989\); id. at 486 (dissenting opinion) ("indefensible brand of judicial activism"); see also Olson v. Paine, Webber, Jackson & Curtis, Inc., 806 F.2d 731, 734, 741-42 \(7th Cir. 1986\). Albrecht was unsound when decided, and is inconsistent with later decisions by the Supreme Court. It should be overruled. Someday, we expect, it will be. The Supreme Court in the Atlantic Richfield case was willing to assume only "arguendo" that Albrecht had been correctly decided, 495 U.S. at 335 n. 5, and it cited at length the critical academic commentary on the case. Id. at 343 n. 13. And in Arizona v. Maricopa County Medical Society, supra, the Court, while reaffirming the per se rule against horizontal maximum price fixing, noted that Kiefer-Stewart, unlike Albrecht, had been a [*1364] case of horizontal maximum price fixing and that "horizontal restraints [**16] are generally less defensible than vertical restraints," 457 U.S. at 348 n. 18, though elsewhere the opinion quotes at length from Albrecht, and with apparent approval, a denunciation of maximum price fixing not limited to the horizontal variety. Id. at 347.

But all this is an aside. We have been told by our judicial superiors not to read the sibylline leaves of the U.S. Reports for prophetic clues to overruling. It is not our place to overrule Albrecht; and Albrecht cannot fairly be distinguished from this case.

It might be distinguishable if there were a class of cases in which maximum price fixing, though wholly vertical, wholly unilateral, did cause antitrust injury, even if Albrecht and the present case were not members of that class. Then, while Albrecht itself might be decided differently today, its principle that such price fixing is illegal per se would have some domain of application. In that event affirmance here would construe Albrecht narrowly but not abrogate it. But State Oil is not able to identify any cases, real or hypothetical, in which the practice condemned in Albrecht could cause an injury to the interests protected by antitrust [**17] law. If proof of antitrust injury is required in cases involving the sort of price fixing involved in Albrecht, no such case could be brought, whether by a private plaintiff or by the Department of Justice or the Federal Trade Commission.

More to the point, the Supreme Court's conception of antitrust injury may be broader than State Oil's. The Court has never retreated from the proposition that vertical minimum price fixing (resale price maintenance) is illegal per se. See, e.g., Business Electronics Corp. v. Sharp Electronics Corp., supra, 485 U.S. at 725-26. Yet, under the dealer-service theory that we sketched, and other theories that have the support of antitrust economists, HN6↑ resale price maintenance does not impair any interest that the antitrust laws interpreted in light of modern economics could be thought intended to protect. It increases rather than reduces competition--as the Court recognized in the Sylvania decision, dealing with the closely related area of territorial and other nonprice restrictions placed by suppliers on competition among their dealers. Yet Sylvania itself reaffirms the per se rule against vertical price restrictions. 433 U.S. at 51 n. 18. The [*18] Court must think that preventing intrabrand price competition harms an interest protected by the antitrust laws even if the restriction increases competition viewed as a process for maximizing consumer welfare and even if a restriction that had similar effects but was not an explicit regulation of price would be lawful. If this is what the Court believes--and it does appear to be the Court's current position, though not one that is easy to defend in terms of economic theory or antitrust policy--the Court may also think that interfering with the freedom of a dealer to raise prices may cause antitrust injury. We suspect not, but we cannot have sufficient confidence in our view to declare a decision of the Supreme Court that has not been expressly overruled nevertheless defunct, as we would have to do in order to agree with the district court's ruling that the maximum price provision in the contract between State Oil and Khan was not illegal per se. In Atlantic Richfield, despite the Court's evident skepticism about the continued soundness of Albrecht, the Court distinguished it on the ground that the dealers subject to a price ceiling imposed by their supplier, as distinct from [*19] their competitors, were the intended beneficiaries of Albrecht. See 495 U.S. at 336-37. The implication is that the injury to a dealer like Khan from not being able to raise his price because of a restriction imposed by his supplier is antitrust injury.

But even if Khan, as we believe, is not ruled out of court by the concept of antitrust injury, he had to prove injury in fact to be able to maintain the suit. The only evidence of injury was in the report of his economic expert, so if the judge did not abuse his discretion in excluding the report we must affirm the dismissal of the antitrust count even though we think he was wrong to think that Albrecht made it impossible for Khan to prove antitrust injury. But we think it was an abuse of discretion.

[*1365] The judge's ground for the exclusion was that "the report turns entirely on the experience of one receiver who operated one gas station over a five-month period." Before Khan was terminated, State Oil issued a notice of termination and, on the ground that Khan was selling inventory in which State Oil retained a security interest without reimbursing State Oil, obtained from a state court an order appointing a receiver to operate [*20] the station. He did so for five months. (The record does not reveal what happened at the end of that period. We assume that State Oil either took over the operation of the station itself or obtained another lessee.) The plaintiffs' expert obtained the receiver's financial records and determined from the cost and revenue figures in them that the receiver must have disregarded the price ceiling in the agreement with State Oil. The figures showed that the receiver had realized a margin on his sales of gasoline in excess of 3.25 cents. The only way he could have done this was by charging a price in excess of the suggested retail price and not rebating the higher margin generated by the higher price. The expert inferred that had Khan been allowed to raise his price above the suggested retail price, he would have had a higher income, enabling him to pay his rent and therefore avert termination.

Of course competitive conditions may have changed during the time the receiver was operating the station. A dealer's ability to raise his price depends on the demand for his product; the demand for gasoline in general, or for Union 76 relative to other brands, may have increased after the receiver [**21] took over. If so, his ability to maintain a price higher than the suggested retail price would not prove that Khan had had a similar ability. And if Khan could not have maintained a price above the suggested retail price, simply because competition would not have permitted him to do so, then he wasn't hurt by the contractual provision of which he complains. There would be a violation of the antitrust laws, but no injury.

But this is just to say that the evidence presented by the expert was not conclusive on the subject of injury-- was, indeed, very far from being conclusive. That did not make it either inadmissible or devoid of probative value. The only ground on which it could be argued to be inadmissible would be that the expert, although a Ph.D. in economics from a reputable university and an experienced consultant in antitrust economics, and hence qualified to offer expert economic evidence in this case, had failed to conduct a study that satisfied professional norms. As we have emphasized in cases involving scientific testimony-- and the principle applies to the social sciences with the same force that it does to the natural HN7 sciences--a scientist, however reputable, is not permitted [**22] to offer evidence that he has not generated by the methods he would use in his normal academic or professional work, which is to say in work undertaken without reference to or expectation of possible use in litigation. Braun v. Lorillard Inc., 84 F.3d 230, 234 (7th Cir. 1996); Rosen v. Ciba-Geigy Corp., 78 F.3d 316, 318 (7th Cir. 1996); Bammerlin v. Navistar Int'l Transportation Corp., 30 F.3d 898, 901 (7th Cir. 1994). The district judge identified no basis, and State Oil can point to none, for supposing that the expert's report flunked this test. The inference regarding the receiver's profit margin, drawn from the station's cost and revenue data, was straightforward, and, so far as appears, was made in just the way that an economist interested in a firm's profit margins for reasons unrelated to litigation would make it; and likewise the inference that if Khan had enjoyed the freedom that the receiver evidently thought he had he would have charged a higher price, and made more money, than he did. If anything, the economist was overqualified to give evidence that could as easily have been given by an accountant; but overqualification is not yet a recognized basis for disqualification.

[**23] Weight is different from admissibility. An expert's report might be admissible but so lacking in weight as not to block the granting of summary judgment for the other side. Wittmer v. Peters, 87 F.3d 916, 920 (7th Cir. 1996); Mid-State Fertilizer Co. v. Exchange Nat'l Bank, 877 F.2d 1333, 1338-39 (7th Cir. 1989); Hayes v. Douglas Dynamics, Inc., 8 F.3d 88, 92 (1st Cir. 1993). But that is not the situation here. State Oil put [*1366] in no evidence. In the absence of contrary evidence, Dr. Bamberger's inference from his study of the receiver's experience that Khan had been hurt by the maximum price provision of the gasoline supply contract was sufficiently plausible to defeat summary judgment on the question of injury.

The antitrust claim should not have been dismissed. We turn to the breach of contract claim. Although Khan's primary complaint is that he was prevented from raising his price, he also complains that there were times when he wanted to lower his price on nonpremium gasoline. As we said at the outset, this claim has no standing as an antitrust claim. But State Oil concedes that its contract implicitly obligated it to suggest retail prices (and adjust its wholesale [**24] prices accordingly, to maintain the 3.25 cents margin between wholesale and suggested retail price that the contract guarantees) that were realistic in light of competitive conditions facing Khan. The only evidence Khan presented concerning those competitive conditions was evidence that on sixteen occasions during his operation of the station he had called other dealers and been told that their retail prices were lower than the suggested retail prices fixed by State Oil. This evidence falls far short of establishing a genuine issue of material fact concerning a breach of the contract. There is no evidence that the dealers were actual competitors of Khan or that the prices charged by those dealers were prices for the same grades of gasoline sold by Khan, which, remember, sold a gasoline that has a well-recognized brand name. The evidence is perfectly consistent with an assumption that State Oil's suggested retail prices were competitively realistic.

So the contract claim was rightly dismissed but we note the absence from the record of any indication of why the district judge, having dismissed the federal claims before trial, retained rather than, as is the norm in such situations, [\[\*\*25\]](#) relinquished jurisdiction over the supplemental state law claim. 28 U.S.C. § 1367\(c\)\(3\); Brazinski v. Amoco Petroleum Additives Co., 6 F.3d 1176, 1182 \(7th Cir. 1993\). (It does not appear that there is diversity of citizenship between the parties.) The presumption in favor of relinquishment when all federal claims fall out before trial is rebuttable, id., but it should not be lightly abandoned, as it is based on a legitimate and substantial concern with minimizing federal intrusion into areas of purely state law. Since the absence of merit of the supplemental claim in this case is clear as a matter of elementary contractual interpretation, so that the retention of jurisdiction for purposes of dismissing the claim did not require the district judge to speculate about the meaning of state law, we think the judge was right to retain jurisdiction rather than visit upon the parties and the state courts the burden of further litigation. As we said in Brazinski, citing a slew of earlier cases, if the correct disposition of the supplemental claim is so clear as a matter of state law that it can be determined without a trial and without entanglement in difficult issues of state law, [\[\*\*26\]](#) considerations of judicial economy counsel retention and prompt decision, rather than remission to the state court. Id. But we remind the district courts of the presumption against retaining jurisdiction of supplemental state-law claims when the federal claims are dismissed before trial, and of the concomitant importance of stating the ground on which the court believes in a particular case that the presumption has been rebutted.

The judgment of the district court is affirmed in part and reversed in part, as explained in the opinion, and the case is remanded for further proceedings consistent with the opinion.

AFFIRMED IN PART, REVERSED IN PART, AND REMANDED.

Concur by: RIPPLE

Concur

---

RIPPLE, Circuit Judge, concurring. Today the court employs a rigorous application of the rules of stare decisis and precedent in this antitrust matter. This methodology is certainly, as a general proposition, a prudent approach to antitrust decision-making in the judicial context. Antitrust issues pose crucial policy choices for the economic and, indeed, social life of the Country. Nevertheless, Congress, content with the passage of generally worded statutes, has left a great deal of policy-making [\[\*\*27\]](#) to the courts through the process of case by case decision-making. [\[\*1367\]](#) In these circumstances, we ought to ensure, through the strict application of stare decisis and precedent, that the law is sufficiently predictable and certain to permit businesses to order their affairs with a clear understanding of what the law requires. I agree, therefore, with the basic methodology employed by the court in reaching the decision announced today. I write separately to note that I share my colleagues' substantive criticism of the per se rule as it has been applied to vertical maximum pricefixing and to question the extension of that rule to cases like the present one in which the threat of horizontal cartelization is absent or, at the very least, greatly diminished. It is difficult to discern the "manifestly anticompetitive effect," Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania, Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 50, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 97 S. Ct. 2549 \(1977\), that justifies invocation of the per se rule.

The Supreme Court first applied the per se rule to vertical maximum price-fixing in Albrecht v. Herald Co., 390 U.S. 145, 19 L. Ed. 2d 998, 88 S. Ct. 869 \(1968\). The defendant in that case, a newspaper publisher, set a suggested retail price for its many distributors. When one of [\[\*\*28\]](#) the distributors sought to charge his customers more than the suggested price, the publisher attempted to discipline him by hiring another entity to assume some of the business handled by the recalcitrant carrier. The Supreme Court held that this restraint was unlawful per se under section 1 of the Sherman Act because, as the Court later recounted in Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333, 110 S. Ct. 1884 \(1989\), the restraint "threatened to inhibit vigorous [price] competition by the dealers who were bound by it" and because it "threatened to become a minimum price-fixing scheme." Id. at 335.<sup>1</sup>

[**29] The present case arises in a factual context that is far removed from the one at issue in Albrecht. This case, as presented to the district court and to this court on appeal,<sup>2</sup> involves a single contract between a single wholesaler and a single retailer that sets the equivalent of maximum resale price for the commodity in question. Neither the pleadings in this case nor the contract between Khan and State Oil implicate any other entities. We are confronted, therefore, with a wholly vertical arrangement; there is no hint of any concrete horizontal effect.

[**30] In Center Video Industrial Co., Inc. v. United Media, Inc., 995 F.2d 735 (7th Cir. 1992), we discussed the centrality of the presence or absence of horizontal effects in determining whether a particular vertical restraint ought to be prohibited by the antitrust laws. Reviewing existing Supreme Court precedent addressing vertical restraints, we noted that, in the Supreme Court's view, "only one legitimate justification exists for prohibiting vertical price restraints imposed by manufacturers who lack significant market power: a proved tendency for such agreements to facilitate the formation of horizontal cartels." Id. at 737. We addressed in Center Video the "two mechanisms" by which a vertical price maintenance [*1368] agreement might be used to facilitate the formation of horizontal cartels. Id. First, we explained, vertical price maintenance arrangements facilitate cartelization at the retail level; the restraint provides a mechanism by which conspiring dealers are able to enforce the agreement against wayward members of the horizontal conspiracy. See id. at 737. We further noted that vertical price maintenance agreements may also assist in the formation of cartels at the [**31] manufacturer level. By requiring prospective members of a manufacturer cartel to impose price restraints on their dealers, cartel members have an effective method of determining whether their partners are abiding by the rules of the cartel. "The members of the cartel then need only monitor the retail prices of their partners' distributors, secure in the knowledge that any deviation from a given retail price would indicate that a member of the cartel had broken ranks . . ." Id. at 738. In the absence of any allegation that the restraint at issue in this case was imposed by multiple manufacturers or upon multiple dealers, neither of these two justifications for application of the per se rule applies.

As my colleagues recognize, the anticompetitive implications of vertical price restraints are often difficult to discern. The difficulty in discovering actual injury to competition--or even the potential for such injury--is compounded where, as here, the price restraint in question is wholly vertical in nature and has been imposed by a single wholesaler upon a single distributor. It simply is not clear that the plaintiff can show an "injury of the type that the antitrust laws were [**32] intended to prevent." Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1977). Like my colleagues, therefore, I have serious doubts as to the continued viability of Albrecht--especially in the context of conduct that is devoid of horizontal anticompetitive implications. Our

<sup>1</sup> Although the Court in Atlantic Richfield referred to the situation in Albrecht as an "unadulterated vertical, maximum-price-fixing arrangement," Atlantic Richfield, 495 U.S. at 336 n.6, the harm identified in Albrecht was largely horizontal and stemmed from the fact that multiple dealers were subject to the restraint. At issue was "the manner in which [the arrangement] might restrain competition by dealers." Id. at 335.

<sup>2</sup> We note that Khan's complaint does contain the following allegation:

At all times relevant to this action Defendant has been engaged in the business of leasing service stations/convenience stores such as that operated by Plaintiffs, as well as in the sale of petroleum and other products to such service stations for resale to the public under the "Union 76" trademark. Plaintiffs are informed and believe that Defendant is involved in the lease and/or operation of numerous other service stations in the Chicago Metropolitan Area.

R.1, Complaint, at P 7. Although the final sentence of this paragraph arguably alleges the existence of other State Oil dealers, it is clear from the record in this case that Khan did not present the case to the district court on this theory. The summary judgment record is devoid of any evidence suggesting that other State Oil dealers also are subject to the price restraint challenged by Khan. Because the case was not presented to the district court on the theory that the restraint had been imposed by multiple wholesalers or upon multiple dealers, we do not view this unsupported allegation in Khan's complaint as sufficient to make this case factually analogous to Albrecht.

application of the per se rule to this limited restraint therefore marks a considerable extension of the Albrecht rule beyond the facts presented in that case.

Nevertheless, until the Supreme Court limits the use of the per se rule with respect to vertical price restraints, I am unable to rule out the possibility that the Justices might intend the per se rule to be broad enough to reach State Oil's conduct. Arguably, its action might be viewed as implicating some of the concerns articulated in Albrecht. For example, the Supreme Court in Albrecht explained that "maximum prices may be fixed too low for the dealer to furnish services essential to the value which goods have for the consumer or to furnish services and conveniences which consumers desire and for which they are willing to pay." 390 U.S. at 153. By eliminating any motive for Khan to increase his prices above the suggested [**33] retail price, State Oil effectively may have relegated Khan to the discount gasoline market. See *Caribe BMW, Inc. v. Bayerische Motoren Werke Aktiengesellschaft*, 19 F.3d 745, 753-54 \(1st Cir. 1994\) (noting that, because the plaintiff dealer was forced to keep its price below the level it preferred to set, the challenged agreement forced the plaintiff to provide less of what customers wanted, leading to potentially lower profits). One less potential entrant in the full-service gasoline market means that dealers that market are able to charge a higher price for the same package of services. See *Albrecht*, 390 U.S. at 152 (noting that a vertical maximum-price agreement, "by substituting the perhaps erroneous judgment of a seller for the forces of the competitive market, may severely intrude upon the ability of buyers to compete and survive in that market").

The Supreme Court also noted in Albrecht that, by limiting the ability of small dealers to engage in nonprice competition, a maximum price-fixing agreement might "channel distribution through a few large or specially advantaged dealers." Id. Here, the net effect of the restraint imposed on Khan by State Oil is to limit [**34] Khan's margin to $ 0.325 per gallon--a margin which, in Khan's view, is unrealistically low. Over the long run, high-volume gasoline dealers, who are able to maintain low margins for longer periods of time, might benefit from the arrangement foisted on Khan by State Oil.

At some point in the future, the Supreme Court may revisit Albrecht and further define [*1369] the scope of the per se rule in the context of vertical maximum price-fixing. Until that time, however, we cannot be sure whether the rule of Albrecht is broader than the facts which gave it birth. In the interim, considerations of stare decisis and precedent require us to continue to adhere to the per se rule against vertical maximum price-fixing in cases in which identifiable anticompetitive effects are present. Although the absence of concrete horizontal implications makes this a considerably closer case, State Oil's conduct does present, for the reasons outlined above and in the majority's opinion, at least the possibility of the anticompetitive effects identified by the Supreme Court in Albrecht. On this ground, therefore, I concur in the court's decision.

Massachusetts Sch. of Law at Andover v. ABA

United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania

August 29, 1996, Decided ; August 29, 1996, FILED; August 30, 1996, ENTERED

CIVIL ACTION No. 93-6206

Reporter

937 F. Supp. 435 *; 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13096 **; 1996-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,543

MASSACHUSETTS SCHOOL OF LAW AT ANDOVER, INC. vs. AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION, et al.

Disposition: [**1] American Bar Association's motion for summary judgment granted and judgment entered in favor of the American Bar Association, Law School Admission Services (LSAS), Law School Admission Council (LSAC), and the Association of American Law Schools (AALS), and against plaintiff on all counts. Motions for summary judgment submitted by AALS, LSAS, and LSAC denied as moot.

Core Terms

---

law school, accreditation, graduates, bar examination, antitrust liability, government action, schools, Sherman Act, unaccredited, railroads, truckers, monopolize, sit, restraint of trade, stigma, decisions, incidental, antitrust claim, alleged injury, anti trust law, anticompetitive, stigmatized, customers, inflicted, antitrust violation, bar association, manufacturers, flows, views

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN1[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN2[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See Sherman Act, 5 U.S.C.S. § 2.

Legal Ethics > Practice Qualifications

HN3[] Legal Ethics, Practice Qualifications

937 F. Supp. 435, *435L<sup>A</sup>996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13096, **1

The American Bar Association standard 802 provides that a law school proposing to offer a program of legal education contrary to the terms of the Standards may apply to the Council for a variance. The variance may be granted if the Council finds that proposal is consistent with the general purposes of the Standards. The Council may impose such conditions or qualifications as it deems appropriate.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Torts > ... > Elements > Causation > Intervening Causation

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN4 [blue icon] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

The United States Supreme Court holds that where a restraint upon trade and monopolization is the result of a valid governmental action, as opposed to private action, no violation of the Sherman Act, 5 U.S.C.S. § 1, can be made out. The Court reasons that when an antitrust-plaintiff's injury is proximately caused by the government, the government's action constitutes a supervening cause that breaks the chain of causation between an antitrust-defendant's action and any anticompetitive effect. To decide whether these principles apply, a court should ask: (1) what is the harm that the plaintiff alleges it suffered?; and, (2) is that harm the proximate result of governmental action or private conduct? If the harm results from governmental action, no antitrust liability will lie. Moreover, if the plaintiff alleges two harms, one the proximate result of private conduct and the other the result of governmental action, no liability will attach to the private conduct if the harm associated with that conduct is merely incidental to the harm associated with the governmental action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Education Law > Civil Liability > General Overview

Legal Ethics > Practice Qualifications

HN5 [blue icon] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

Any competitive disadvantage that a law school suffers because some sovereign states preclude graduates of non-accredited law schools from taking their bar examinations cannot be the basis for antitrust liability. When the impact of these independent governmental decisions is viewed within the context and nature of the American Bar Association's activity, it is clear that any injury that flows from state rules governing bar admission squarely falls within the prescripts of Noerr.

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Speech > Scope

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Freedoms > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Speech > General Overview

HN6 [blue icon] Fundamental Freedoms, Freedom of Speech

It is axiomatic that the First Amendment protects speech, not action.

Counsel: For MASSACHUSETTS SCHOOL OF LAW AT ANDOVER, INC., PLAINTIFF: LEE M. EPSTEIN, ANDERSON, KILL, OLICK & OSHINSKY, P.C., PHILA, PA USA. KENNETH N. HART, DONOVAN, LEISURE, NEWTON & IRVINE, NEW YORK, NY USA. MICHAEL M. BAYLSON, DUANE, MORRIS & HECKSCHER, PHILADELPHIA, PA USA. LAWRENCE R. VELVEL, ANDOVER, MA USA. MICHAEL L. COYNE, ANDOVER, MA USA. CONSTANCE L. RUDNICK, ANDOVER, MA USA. PETER M. MALAGUTI, ANDOVER, MA USA. JOSEPH E. DEVLIN, ANDOVER, MA USA. MELISSA H. MAXMAN, DUANE, MORRIS AND HECKSCHER, PHILA, PA USA. JAMES J. CAPRA, JR., DONOVAN, LEISURE, NEWTON AND IRVINE, NEW YORK, NY USA. JOANNE ZACK, KOHN, SWIFT & GRAF, P.C., PHILADELPHIA, PA USA.

For AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION, DEFENDANT: L. SUZANNE FORBIS, PEPPER, HAMILTON & SCHEETZ, PHILA, PA USA. BARBARA W. MATHER, PEPPER, HAMILTON & SCHEETZ, PHILA, PA USA. CAREY [**2] A. DE WITT, ANN M. KELLY, BUTZEL AND LONG, DETROIT, MI USA. H. BLAIR WHITE, SIDLEY AND AUSTIN, CHICAGO, IL USA. DAVID T. PRITIKIN, SIDLEY AND AUSTIN, CHICAGO, IL USA. WILLIAM H. BAUMGARTNER, SIDLEY AND AUSTIN, CHICAGO, IL USA. DAVID R. STEWART, SIDLEY AND AUSTIN, CHICAGO, IL USA.

For LAW SCHOOL ADMISSION SERVICES, INC., DEFENDANT: JOSEPH B. G. FAY, MARK P. EDWARDS, JAY H. CALVERT, JR., MORGAN, LEWIS & BOCKIUS, PHILA, PA USA. MICHAEL F. CLAYTON, MORGAN, LEWIS & BOCKIUS, WASHINGTON, DC USA. SCOTT A. STEMPLE, MORGAN, LEWIS AND BOCKIUS, WASHINGTON, DC USA. H. BLAIR WHITE, (See above). DAVID T. PRITIKIN, (See above). WILLIAM H. BAUMGARTNER, (See above). JOAN E. VAN TOL, LAW SCHOOL ADMISSION COUNCIL, NEWTOWN, PA USA. JAMES M. VASELECK, JR., LAW SCHOOL ADMISSION COUNCIL, NEWTOWN, PA USA. MARIAM J. NAINI, MORGAN, LEWIS AND BOCKIUS, WASHINGTON, DC USA.

For LAW SCHOOL ADMISSION COUNCIL, DEFENDANT: JOSEPH B. G. FAY, (See above). MARK P. EDWARDS, (See above). JAY H. CALVERT, JR., (See above). MICHAEL F. CLAYTON, (See above). SCOTT A. STEMPLE, (See above). H. BLAIR WHITE, (See above). DAVID T. PRITIKIN, (See above). WILLIAM H. BAUMGARTNER, (See above). JOAN E. VAN TOL, (See above). JAMES [**3] M. VASELECK, JR., (See above). MARIAM J. NAINI, (See above).

For THE ASSOCIATION OF AMERICAN LAW SCHOOLS, INC., DEFENDANT: KENNETH R. CARRETTA, FULBRIGHT & JAWORSKI, WASHINGTON, DC USA. JACQUELINE R. DEPEW, ROBERT A. BURGOYNE, DAVID M. FOSTER, SALLY P. PAXTON, FULBRIGHT & JAWORSKI L.L.P., WASHINGTON, DC USA.

For UNIVERSITY OF DETROIT MERCY SCHOOL OF LAW, RESPONDENT: CAREY A. DE WITT, (See above). ANN M. KELLY, (See above).

Judges: JUDGE J. WILLIAM DITTER, JR.

Opinion by: J. WILLIAM DITTER, JR.

Opinion

---

[*438] OPINION AND ORDER

Ditter, J.

August 29, 1996

I. INTRODUCTION

For many years, the American Bar Association has evaluated law schools using a set of standards it has developed for that purpose. The Massachusetts School of Law brought this antitrust action against the American Bar

937 F. Supp. 435, *438L¶996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13096, **3

Association, the Law School Admission Council, Law School Admission Services,<sup>1</sup> and the Association of American Law Schools<sup>2</sup> after ABA denied it provisional accreditation. MSL alleges that the defendants violated the Sherman Act by restraining trade with anticompetitive policies<sup>3</sup> and conspiring to monopolize, and monopolizing the law school training field, the accreditation of law schools, <sup>4</sup> and the licensing of lawyers.<sup>4</sup> It seeks treble damages, interest, and costs. It does not seek accreditation as part of this lawsuit.

[**5] MSL maintains that some of the standards that ABA uses to inform its accreditation decisions violate the Sherman Act. Plaintiff's restraint of trade claim rests on its contention that the ABA's adoption and approval of the standards have the purpose and effect of artificially enhancing faculty salaries, limiting the services of law school professors, imposing unnecessarily costly guidelines for law school libraries, increasing law school tuitions, and "freezing out of law school persons from lower socio-economic classes and persons in mid-life." Plaintiff's monopolization claim is based on its contention that the defendants have worked in concert, using some of the ABA's standards, to monopolize the law school training, accreditation, and licensing processes.

Before me is ABA's motion for summary judgment.<sup>5</sup> It contends that judgement should be entered in its favor for six independent reasons: (1) MSL's alleged injury stems exclusively from the bar admissions rules of the sovereign states, not the ABA standards; (2) MSL cannot demonstrate an injury to competition between or among law schools generally resulting from the ABA's decision not to accredit MSL; (3) MSL cannot demonstrate [**6] that the ABA standards that it is challenging were the cause-in-fact of its injuries; (4) the antitrust laws do not apply to the non-commercial aspects of higher education; (5) even examining the particular challenged standards under a rule of reason analysis, no triable issue exists and judgment is proper as a matter of law; and (6) the conspiracy alleged by plaintiff is illogical and makes no economic sense. For the reasons discussed below, I will grant ABA's motion.

II. STATEMENT OF FACTS

MSL is a Massachusetts corporation that has been operating a law school in Andover, Massachusetts, since 1988. In 1990, MSL was authorized by the board of regents of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts to award the degree of juris doctor to its graduates. That authority enables plaintiff's graduates to sit for several bar examinations, including Massachusetts'.

[*439] In the fall of 1992, MSL applied for ABA accreditation. [**7] Accreditation is a valuable credential for a law school because all 50 states and the District of Columbia permit graduates of ABA-accredited schools to sit for their

<sup>1</sup>The LSAC and LSAS work together under the name LSAC/LSAS. In part, they sponsor, administer, and profit from the Law School Admission Test.

<sup>2</sup>The AALS is an association of law schools. Its membership includes many ABA-accredited law schools and it participates in the ABA accreditation process.

<sup>3</sup> Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides:

HN1 Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations is declared to be illegal.

15 U.S.C. § 1.

<sup>4</sup> Section 2 of the Sherman Act provides:

HN2 Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor.

15 U.S.C. § 2.

<sup>5</sup> In addition to filing separate motions for summary judgment, LSAC/LSAS and AALS have joined ABA's motion.

bar examinations. The prerequisites for taking particular bar examinations and ultimate admission to the bar are established by the states, not the ABA or any of the other defendants. MSL has its own approach to legal education, an approach that often differs sharply from ABA's more traditional views. Although it acknowledged that as a matter of policy, many aspects of its program did not comply with the ABA standards that guide accreditation decisions, MSL requested a variance for each of the standards which it had refused to follow.<sup>6</sup>

[**8] Following its usual procedure when making accreditation decisions, ABA sent a site evaluation team to examine MSL's program. Based on that team's factual report about MSL and MSL's response, ABA denied MSL provisional accreditation. A series of appeals taken by MSL were fruitless.

MSL maintains that its failure to secure ABA accreditation handicaps the school in competing for students because its graduates cannot take the bar examinations of 42 states, and the school has been generally stigmatized by the denial. (Compl. PP18, 41; Velvel Dep., 8/25/94, at 30:1-15).

In summary, this case concerns the evaluation of educational philosophies, methods, and facilities. ABA's refusal to approve that of which it disapproves and MSL's demand to differ but be accepted as though it conformed -- or as though its differences did not matter -- are the bases for this suit.

III. DISCUSSION

A number of courts have considered issues similar to those raised in MSL's complaint. Application of these decisions to the case at bar lead me to conclude that judgment should be entered against MSL.<sup>7</sup>

[**9] A. MSL's Alleged Injury Results from Governmental Action not Private Conduct

ABA argues that MSL's alleged injury results from the independent decision of the sovereign states to preclude graduates of unaccredited law schools from taking their bar examinations. ABA's position is based on the Supreme Court's seminal decision in Eastern R.R. Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464, 81 S. Ct. 523 (1961). Noerr involved an antitrust claim brought by long distance trucking companies against, inter alia, an association of railroads. The plaintiffs alleged that the defendants violated sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act by conspiring to restrain trade in, and monopolizing the long distance freight business. Id. at 129. The plaintiffs claimed that the defendants had engaged in a propaganda campaign "to foster the adoption and retention of laws and law enforcement practices destructive of the trucking business." Id. HN4[]. The Supreme Court held that "where a restraint upon trade and monopolization is the result of a valid governmental action, as opposed to private action, no violation of the [Sherman] Act can be made out." Id. **10 at 136. The Court reasoned that when an antitrust-plaintiff's injury is proximately caused by the government, the government's action constitutes a supervening cause that breaks the chain of causation between an antitrust-defendant's action and any anticompetitive effect. Areeda & Hovenkamp, Antitrust law P201 at 14 (1994 Supp.).

To decide whether the Noerr principles apply, a court should ask: (1) what is *440 the harm that the plaintiff alleges it suffered?; and, (2) is that harm the proximate result of governmental action or private conduct? If the harm results from governmental action, no antitrust liability will lie. Moreover, if the plaintiff alleges two harms, one the proximate result of private conduct and the other the result of governmental action, no liability will attach to the

<sup>6</sup> HN3[] ABA standard 802 provides that:

A law school proposing to offer a program of legal education contrary to the terms of the Standards may apply to the Council for a variance. The variance may be granted if the Council finds that proposal is consistent with the general purposes of the Standards. The Council may impose such conditions or qualifications as it deems appropriate.

<sup>7</sup> As discussed more thoroughly below, no genuine issue of material fact exists. In this regard, it should be noted that although MSL continues to seek further discovery, thus far in this litigation, there have been 44 depositions taken, many of them over multiple days, in 14 states and two countries. Moreover, more than 100,000 pages of documents have already been produced.

private conduct if the harm associated with that conduct is merely incidental to the harm associated with the governmental action. Id. at 143.

Courts have had several opportunities to flush out the extent of Noerr immunity in various contexts. In Lawline v. American Bar Ass'n, 956 F.2d 1378 (7th Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 992, 114 S. Ct. 551, 126 L. Ed. 2d 452 (1993), [**11] the plaintiffs sued the ABA and several other bar associations. They challenged as anticompetitive certain ethical rules adopted by the Illinois Supreme Court and the Northern District of Illinois at ABA's recommendation. The plaintiffs also challenged as anticompetitive certain ethical opinions promulgated by the defendant bar associations. They alleged that the rules and ethical opinions injured them by restricting their ability to advertise and to form partnerships with non-lawyers. Id. at 1382.

The Seventh Circuit upheld the district court's dismissal of the plaintiffs' antitrust claim. Id. at 1383. Relying heavily on the Supreme Court's decision in Noerr, the court found that when a trade association provides information but does not constrain others to follow its recommendations, it does not violate the antitrust laws. Lawline, 956 F.2d at 1383 (citing Schachar v. American Academy of Ophthalmology, Inc., 870 F.2d 397, 399 (7th Cir. 1989)). The basis for this finding is readily apparent -- when a state adopts as its own the conclusions reached by a professional association (in that case the ethical rules and opinions and in this case conclusions about the [**12] quality of law school educations), it is the state and not the private party that injures the plaintiff with anticompetitive conduct. 956 F.2d at 1384. As the Sherman Act does not proscribe states from engaging in anticompetitive conduct, see Noerr, no antitrust claim will lie against trade associations under these circumstances.<sup>8</sup>

In Sessions Tank Liners, Inc., v. Joor Mfg., Inc., 17 F.3d 295 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 130 L. Ed. 2d 23, 115 S. Ct. 66 (1994), the Ninth Circuit rejected an antitrust claim brought against a corporation that had caused a prominent standard-setting organization to amend its influential fire code to the disadvantage of the plaintiff. Local governments either formally adopted the organization's standards, or, in some cities and towns where the [**13] standards had not formally been adopted, local officials refused to issue permits for structures that did not conform with the standards. Id. at 296. The plaintiff alleged that the standards injured its ability to compete for customers. In rejecting the antitrust claim, the court found that the plaintiff's injuries resulted from governmental action, not the defendant's conduct. Id. at 296. Noerr principles therefore applied to shield the defendant's conduct from potential antitrust liability.

* * *

Plaintiff attempts to distinguish Noerr, Lawline, and Sessions. It argues that the instant case is different from those cases because here, the defendants (not the government) have inflicted the alleged injury. To determine the cause of plaintiff's alleged injury, a brief exploration of that injury is first necessary.

MSL contends that its failure to be accredited has caused it competitive harm by impairing its ability to solicit prospective students. (Compl. P41). The lack of accreditation limits its ability to solicit prospective students because many states preclude graduates of non-accredited schools from taking their bar examinations<sup>9</sup> and non-

<sup>8</sup> See also Sanjuan v. American Bd. of Psychiatry and Neurology, 40 F.3d 247 (7th Cir. 1994) (Easterbrook, J.) (rejecting an antitrust claim brought against a trade association that declined to "certify" the plaintiff-doctors).

<sup>9</sup> An excerpt from Mr. Velvel's deposition aptly states the school's position:

Question: And it is your belief that the reason that the students are less interested in the school today is because they cannot be admitted to the bar in states other than Massachusetts?

Answer: I am certain of it to a moral certainty, Mr. Pritikin. I think there is no legitimate doubt about it. I don't think that all the fancy lawyers and economists in the world would ever be able to remotely prove the contrary 'cause the contrary is not true.

(Velvel Dep., 8/25/95, at 30:1-15; Velvel Aff., 3/22/95, at P23(a); Compl. P18).

accredited [**14] [*441] schools bear a stigma.<sup>10</sup> (Pl.'s Resp. to Mot. for Summ. J. at 28 n.12; Compl. P41). It maintains that both these factors cause it to lose students who would otherwise attend the school.

[**15]  Any competitive disadvantage that MSL suffers because some sovereign states preclude graduates of non-accredited law schools from taking their bar examinations cannot be the basis for antitrust liability. This is what Noerr, Sessions, and Lawline say. The states decide who can sit for their bar examinations. I permitted MSL to explore this issue extensively and it has offered no evidence to show that ABA or the other defendants suggest, recommend, or decide who can sit for bar examinations or be admitted to practice in any state. When the impact of these independent governmental decisions is viewed within the context and nature of ABA's activity, it becomes clear that any injury that flows from state rules governing bar admission squarely falls within the prescripts of Noerr. See Allied Tube & Conduit Corp. v. Indian Head, Inc., 486 U.S. 492, 504, 100 L. Ed. 2d 497, 108 S. Ct. 1931 \(1988\).<sup>11</sup>

[**16] Moreover, any competitive disadvantage that MSL suffers because it "is stigmatized in jurisdictions in which graduation from an ABA-accredited law school is not a prerequisite for sitting for the bar examination," also comes within the Noerr doctrine (Pl.'s Response to Mot. for Summ. J. at 28 n.12 (emphasis added); Compl. P41). Plaintiff alleges that in addition to the injury inflicted by the governmental restrictions, MSL suffers injury purely because of the denial of accreditation. MSL's argument here is no doubt presented in an effort to identify some independent ABA-inflicted injury thus putting this case outside of Noerr's reach. While such an injury, on its face, might appear to be independent from the injury that flows from the governmental restrictions on bar admittance, the Supreme Court rejected a similar argument in Noerr, holding:

the District Court found that the purpose of the railroads was to destroy the goodwill of the truckers, among the public generally [*442] and among the truckers' customers particularly, in the hope that by doing so the overall competitive position of the truckers would be weakened, and the railroads were successful in these efforts [**17] to the extent that such injury was actually inflicted. The apparent effect of these findings is to take this case out of the category of those that involve restraints through governmental action and thus render inapplicable [our finding that no antitrust claim will lie where governmental action is the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injury]. But this effect is only apparent and cannot stand under close scrutiny. There are no specific findings that the railroads attempted directly to persuade anyone not to deal with the truckers.

<sup>10</sup> MSL also contends that it has suffered two additional injuries -- in an effort to treat its hardworking faculty fairly, to maintain faculty morale, and to "have any chance of accreditation," MSL raised the salaries of its professors and bought more books for its library. (Velvel Aff., 3/22/95, P41(a); Pl.'s Surreply Br. in Further Opp'n to ABA's Mot. for Summ. J., at 3-5). MSL admits that, notwithstanding the increase, its starting salaries lag behind those at ABA accredited schools. Despite this fact, MSL has consistently maintained that it has a highly skilled and "hardworking" faculty. (Complaint P 12; Velvel Aff., 3/22/95, P41(b)). Therefore, although it contends that ABA's standards have artificially inflated faculty salaries, MSL admits that it has been able to avoid some of these high costs without sacrificing quality. Thus, rather than injuring MSL, ABA's standards have provided it with a competitive advantage -- it can spend less on faculty than ABA schools and still purchase quality teaching services. Moreover, as these additional "injuries" result from MSL's unilateral decisions, I find that they are not an appropriate basis for potential ABA antitrust liability.

<sup>11</sup> MSL also contends that the cases like Noerr are inapposite because they involved situations where the plaintiff's injury resulted from governmental adoption of allegedly anticompetitive doctrines, while in the instant case the state governments have merely relied upon ABA's accreditation decisions and not officially adopted the ABA's standards. This argument also misses the mark. In Sessions Tank Liners, although many local governments formally adopted the challenged standards into law, in some cities and towns, the standards were enforced not through explicit codification, but rather by having local officials refuse to issue permits for structures or activities that were inconsistent with the code. 17 F.3d at 296. In these cities and towns, the governments accepted the conclusions that the standards produced without explicitly adopting the standards themselves. See Areeda & Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law, P204 at 75-76 (1994 Supp.). This is identical to the instant case, where government has accepted the conclusions that ABA's standards produce without explicitly adopting the standards themselves. The alleged injury in both circumstances, however, is the same: graduates are precluded from being admitted to the practice of law in certain jurisdictions. As discussed, this injury results from a governmental, not private, decision and cannot therefore give rise to antitrust liability.

Noerr, 365 U.S. at 142 (emphasis added).

The Court concluded that absent evidence suggesting that the railroads attempted directly to persuade anyone not to deal with the truckers, the loss of customer good will that the truckers suffered was merely incidental to the primary protected injury. In other words, if the railroads actively tried to convince people not to hire the truckers, and if as a result customers did not hire the truckers, the railroads' actions would not be protected under Noerr -- the railroads' actions would cause an injury independent of the protected injury inflicted by the government. If, on the other [**18] hand, the railroads put negative information about the truckers into the marketplace in an effort to influence government action, and if as a result of that information customers chose not to use the truckers, the railroads' actions would be protected as incidental to the protected injury inflicted by the governmental action -- the governmental action would break the chain of causation between the railroads' actions and the truckers' harm.

Just as there was no finding in Noerr that the railroads attempted directly to persuade anyone not to deal with the truckers, I find that no factfinder could reasonably conclude that ABA has attempted directly to persuade prospective students not to attend MSL. Here, as in Noerr, even assuming that MSL's failure to become accredited resulted in "loss of prestige" or some abstract "stigma," <sup>12</sup> [**19] that injury is incidental to the primary, protected injury resulting from governmental decisions to preclude MSL graduates from taking certain bar examinations.<sup>13</sup>

Plaintiff maintains that its ability to compete for students is impaired by the denial of accreditation because: (1) its graduates cannot sit for many bar examinations; and, (2) it has been stigmatized. The former injury is clearly inflicted as a result of state action. Moreover, the latter injury is incidental to the primary protected injury. Therefore, MSL's claims are barred under Noerr.

B. In Denying Accreditation, ABA Merely Expressed its Opinion which is Protected Under the First Amendment

[**20] Although I conclude that MSL's claims are barred by Noerr immunity, even assuming that the stigma injury is not incidental to the [*443] primary protected injury, MSL's claims still fail.<sup>14</sup> ABA contends that in refusing to

<sup>12</sup> I note that any stigma that MSL suffered as a result of ABA denying accreditation must be viewed in context. Since authorizing MSL to grant degrees, the administrative council in charge of educational standards in Massachusetts has repeatedly expressed concern over many aspects of MSL's educational program. In fact, in January of 1994, the council threatened to revoke MSL's degree-granting authority unless MSL could demonstrate that its admissions standards were reliable. (Ex. D in Supp. of ABA's Mot. for Summ. J., p.2; Fallon Dep. at 54:6). The council was concerned that MSL was matriculating unqualified students so as to finance its more qualified ones. The council also expressed concern over the unprecedented number of formal written student complaints filed against MSL. (Fallon Dep. at 15:20-17).

<sup>13</sup> This conclusion is strengthened by the Ninth Circuit's language in Sessions. Discussing Noerr, the Ninth Circuit wrote that:

The Noerr Court also rejected the proposition that petitioning immunity was limited to injuries flowing directly from governmental action. It held that the railroads were also shielded from liability for the harm the truckers suffered in their relationships with their customers. In the Court's view, that injury was "incidental" to the defendant's campaign to influence legislation.

Sessions, 17 F.3d at 299; see also Allied Tube, 486 U.S. at 499.

<sup>14</sup> MSL has presented some evidence which might be construed to mean that ABA has attempted directly to persuade potential students to attend accredited schools. For example, Mr. Velvel has testified that:

The ABA accreditors thus possess a monopoly not only because in most states it is necessary to graduate from an ABA school in order to take the bar examination and practice law, but also because by continuous efforts they have persuaded potential law school applicants, employers and the public that ABA accreditation is a sine qua non of quality and should be regarded as essential even in states (like Massachusetts) where the graduates of an unaccredited school such as MSL can take the bar examination and practice law.

accredit MSL, it merely rendered its opinion about whether the plaintiff met certain quality standards and that this opinion is protected speech under the First Amendment. There is support for ABA's position. See, e.g., Schachar v. American Academy of Ophthalmology, Inc., 870 F.2d 397 (7th Cir. 1989); Zavaletta v. American Bar Ass'n, 721 F. Supp. 96, 98 (E.D. Va. 1989). Plaintiff maintains that ABA's argument "is patently frivolous."

[**21] HN6 It is axiomatic that the First Amendment protects speech, not action. Thus, the speech component involved in ABA's promulgation of standards is protected by the First Amendment and, because the Constitution trumps the Sherman Act, this speech component cannot be the basis for antitrust liability. However, any conduct associated with the standards is not entitled to First Amendment protection. Put differently, the conduct forming the basis of a restraint of trade or a monopolization is outside the First Amendment's reach. This flows logically from section 1 of the Sherman Act which requires "concerted action that unreasonably restrains trade." Pennsylvania Dental Ass'n v. Medical Serv. Ass'n of Pennsylvania, 745 F.2d 248, 256 (3d Cir. 1984) (emphasis added).

Thus, in Allied Tube, the First Amendment did not insulate a trade association where the association's members included consumers, distributors, and manufacturers, and any agreement to exclude a particular product from certification was "an implicit agreement not to trade in that type of [product]." Allied Tube, 486 U.S. at 508. This implicit agreement -- not the act of promulgating the standards [**22] -- was the conduct forming the basis for antitrust liability. In fact, the Court explicitly emphasized that antitrust laws circumscribe the "conduct" of standard-setting associations. Id. at 506; see also National Soc'y of Professional Eng'r, Inc. v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 55 L. Ed. 2d 637, 98 S. Ct. 1355 (1978) (antitrust violation properly asserted against association whose members boycott those manufacturers which do not follow association's position). Conversely, in Schachar, the court found no antitrust violation where a medical association publicly stated its belief that a surgical procedure was "experimental" and should not be performed absent more research. The association did not require its members to desist from performing the operation or forbid its members from associating with those who chose to perform the operation. 870 F.2d at 398. Unlike Allied, where the association's promulgation of standards led to conduct that could be the basis for antitrust liability, the association in Schachar merely stated its position. It took no action on which to predicate antitrust liability. By merely stating its position, the association in Schachar [**23] did not [*444] "restrain trade" or monopolize the industry vis-a-vis the association in Allied which restrained trade by implicitly agreeing not to trade in a product. See also Consolidated Metal Prods. v. American Petroleum Inst., 846 F.2d 284, 293 (5th Cir. 1988) (holding no antitrust violation where trade association provides information but does not constrain others to follow its recommendations); Clamp-All Corp. v. Cast Oil Soil Pipe Inst., 851 F.2d 478 (1st Cir. 1988).<sup>15</sup>

Here Vovel is not talking about injury to MSL, but to the reason why he feels ABA has an accreditation monopoly. He goes on, however,

Many other persons who would otherwise apply to and attend MSL will not do so even though they wish to practice law in Massachusetts, where MSL graduates can take the bar examination and practice law. The reason [these people] will not apply to MSL is that the ABA has persuaded them and others that a law school cannot be a quality law school if it is not ABA accreditated . . .

(Vovel Aff., 3/22/95, at P27, P28(a) (emphasis added)).

This statement merely points out what the ABA contends are the benefits of its accreditation product. While the corollary of attending an accredited school is not attending a school that has not been accredited, the injury remains incidental to the government's action. There is nothing wrong with the ABA's marketing its product -- nothing wrong with its contending that its evaluation process provides benefits to prospective students and to the profession. The fact that various states agree does not make what ABA does unlawful.

<sup>15</sup> MSL reasons that if extended to its logical extreme, this First Amendment analysis would protect "discussions by price fixing conspirators about the reasonable level at which prices should be adhered to in the marketplace . . ." (Pl.'s Resp. to Def. ABA's Mot. for Summ. J. at 30). However, the problem with MSL's reasoning here is that the illustration that it cites as the "logical extreme" involves conduct -- conspiring to fix prices. In fact, in order for a conspiracy to fix prices to be actionable, there must be an overt act. United States Anchor Mfg., Inc. v. Rule Indus., Inc., 7 F.3d 986 (11th Cir. 1993). This act or conduct is not protected by the First Amendment. MSL concedes as much when it states that this First Amendment rationale "can fare no better than an

[**24] When an association merely states its position, and a company is stigmatized because of that statement, there is no basis for antitrust liability.<sup>16</sup> ABA's constitutionally protected expression of its views and any resulting stigma that MSL suffers do not amount to ABA conduct on which to establish potential antitrust liability.<sup>17</sup> Like Schachar, ABA does not restrain trade or monopolize an industry by speaking out on an issue. ABA is entitled to state its position, provided it does not go further and somehow penalize those who do not subscribe to its position. See *Schachar*, 870 F.2d at 399 ("An organization's towering reputation does not reduce its freedom to speak out"). If stigma results from simple expression, that stigma is incidental to the speech and cannot be the basis for antitrust liability. For example, in Schachar, the court found that the surgeons who performed the surgery were stigmatized by the association's warning and that this stigma led to a drop in business.<sup>18</sup> However, the court did not find any antitrust violation. This conclusion is sound. A contrary result leads to the anomalous situation that antitrust liability would attach to associations [**25] that put persuasive speech into the marketplace of ideas but not to those that put forth fluff. Antitrust laws do not exist to stifle the effects of speech. They exist to protect consumers and to stop conduct that disrupts the marketplace. Thus, any stigma that MSL has suffered because of ABA's not listing MSL as an accredited school does not provide the necessary offensive conduct for antitrust liability.

[**26] It is clear that ABA does not violate the Sherman Act when it merely publishes [*445] quality standards or expresses its views on which schools provide quality educations. Publication of an association's views, without more, is protected speech. Only ABA conduct can trigger antitrust liability. Abstract stigma that flows from the publication of speech protected by the *First Amendment* is not enough.

The plaintiff in Allied produced plastic electrical conduit. Law schools produce educations. The association in Allied violated the antitrust laws by requiring its members not to deal with manufacturers of plastic conduit. This conduct violated the Sherman Act. ABA would violate the Sherman Act if it required its members not to deal with unaccredited schools (analogous to the manufacturers of plastic conduit in Allied). For example, ABA could not tell its members not to teach at unaccredited schools (limit the supply of production resources), work with graduates of unaccredited schools (limit customer base), or refer cases to graduates of unaccredited schools (interfere with the manufacturer's business). However, ABA does none of these things. It does not keep [**27] its members from hiring graduates of unaccredited law schools. It does not restrict its members from making referrals to graduates of unaccredited law schools. It does not forbid its members from dealing with graduates of argument that the restrictive trade association activities involved in Allied Tube should be exempt from the antitrust laws . . ." (Pl.'s Resp. to Def. ABA's Mot. for Summ. J. at 30 (emphasis added)). Allied involved restrictive activities, not expression. Moreover, it is a fallacy to suppose that just because a core concept of antitrust law cannot logically be extended indefinitely that the core concept is faulty.

<sup>16</sup> This is different from the situation where an association states its position and then engages in conduct related to its stated position because where there is conduct, there is a basis for antitrust liability -- the association has gone beyond expression.

<sup>17</sup> The governmental decision to exclude graduates of unaccredited schools from taking certain bar examinations is protected under Noerr. Because governmental action is responsible for this injury, ABA conduct is not.

<sup>18</sup> MSL might attempt to distinguish the Schachar analogy by reasoning that, unlike the plaintiff in that case, it challenges ABA standards not ABA accreditation decisions. However, this is a distinction without a difference. No doubt, the association in Schachar maintained some standards. One standard might have provided that:

a procedure is termed "experimental" until it has undergone two years of testing.

However, even if the association maintained such a standard, there is no conduct on which to base antitrust liability because by promulgating this standard, the association has done nothing more than to express its views on when a procedure is safe to perform. The situation would be different if the association's standard provided that:

a procedure is termed "experimental" until it has undergone two years of testing and no member of the association shall deal or otherwise transact business with a doctor who performs "experimental" procedures.

In this latter scenario, the association has engaged in conduct directed at restraining trade. However, there was no such conduct in Schachar as there is no such conduct in the instant case.

unaccredited law schools. It does not stop its members from teaching at unaccredited law schools. It does not prevent graduates of unaccredited law schools from joining ABA.<sup>19</sup> [**28] In fact, ABA in no way acts against schools that fail to satisfy its quality standards.<sup>20</sup> [**29] It does not even review schools that do not wish to be considered for accreditation. If they wish, schools can simply disregard ABA's standards.<sup>21</sup> ABA imposes no penalty on these schools and the injury associated with the governmental action to preclude graduates of unaccredited schools from sitting for some bar examinations is not ABA conduct. Indeed, ABA engages in no conduct that can trigger antitrust liability.<sup>22</sup> It merely expresses [*446] its views on which law schools employ sound teaching methods. Such expression is protected under the First Amendment and cannot be the basis for Sherman Act liability.

[**30] /IV. CONCLUSION

The ABA, in the view of the 50 states, is quite good at setting standards for legal educators. As evidence of this, each state has concluded that graduation from an ABA accredited law school is a sufficient basis to sit for its bar examination. The fact that the ABA has a reputation for being good at what it does, and that the states have elected to rely on the ABA accreditation process, does not transform that process, which is itself binding on absolutely no one absent state action, into an antitrust violation. If, the effect of governmental reliance on ABA accreditation decisions is to "freeze out" lower income people, to raise faculty salaries unfairly, and to require law schools to have too many books on their shelves, then any disgruntled law school, dean, student, or citizen can petition the state

<sup>19</sup> A quick search in Martindale-Hubbel revealed that at least six MSL graduates have already joined ABA.

<sup>20</sup> In its complaint, MSL points out that its students cannot transfer their credits to ABA accredited law schools, and its students cannot obtain LL.M. degrees from ABA accredited law schools. (Complaint PP 37(d), 37(e)). Although an argument might be made that these two rules amount to ABA conduct, I find that such alleged conduct is insufficient to preclude summary judgment. First, MSL has not produced any evidence indicating that it has been injured because of these two ABA rules. In fact, there is evidence indicating that MSL vigorously attempts to frustrate any student from transferring to an ABA-accredited law school by withholding transcripts and generally not cooperating with transfer efforts. In one instance, an MSL student needed to commence a lawsuit against the school to release her transcripts. Riley v. Massachusetts School of Law, Inc., No. 91-910 (Sup. Ct. Mass.) Mr. Velvel had refused to cooperate with the student's transfer efforts because he maintained that the student had entered the school in bad faith, not intending to graduate, but instead planning all along to transfer to an accredited school. Moreover, the council in charge of higher education in Massachusetts noted:

we continue to receive complaints from students who are unable to resolve complaints on their own with the law school. This includes the law school's refusal to accept certified mail from students, and difficulties in obtaining transcripts and other information from various members of the administrative staff.

(Def.'s Ex. D to Mot. for Summ. J., at 3).

Second, these ABA rules are essentially extensions of the protected speech. ABA's speech would be meaningless if students of unaccredited schools could shoe-horn their unaccredited credits into an ABA accredited law school.

<sup>21</sup> In fact, if a school disagrees with the standards, it should not simply pay lip service to them. Indeed, at least some members of MSL's faculty appear to agree with this sentiment as Mr. Velvel noted that "there are people on our faculty who believe we'd be better off without [ABA accreditation]." Dick Dahl, Massachusetts Weekly, January 18, 1993, "A Maverick Law School's Maverick Pitch."

<sup>22</sup> Nor do any of the other defendants engage in conduct detrimental to MSL's ability to compete for customers. Just like ABA, these other defendants may express opinions about quality within the profession, but they take no affirmative action. MSL maintains that LSAC also excludes it from certain LSAC recruitment forums. (Plf.'s Resp. to ABA's Mot. for Summ. J., Vol. II, at 120). MSL might contend that this is "conduct" which, through its conspiracy theory, is relevant in taking this case outside of the First Amendment's protection. However, as Judge Easterbrook noted in Schachar, "antitrust law does not compel your competitor to praise your product or sponsor your work. To require cooperation or friendliness among rivals is to undercut the intellectual foundations of antitrust law." 870 F.2d at 399. MSL cannot use the Sherman Act to compel LSAC, one of the organizations that administers the LSAT which MSL has publicly rejected as racially biased and unreliable, to assist MSL in marketing its product.

legislature to abandon its reliance on the ABA process. The answer is not to assail the ABA which has no authority over who may sit for bar examinations. The answer is to utilize the democratic process, for it is that process that gives force to the standards. Plaintiff's alleged injury that flows from governmental decisions to preclude graduates of unaccredited [**31] law schools from sitting for certain bar examinations, is protected under Noerr, and cannot be the basis for ABA liability.

If MSL is independently stigmatized because of ABA's denial of accreditation, that injury results from ABA's protected freedom of expression and not because of ABA's conduct. The Sherman Act regulates conduct, not speech. No factfinder could reasonably conclude that ABA has engaged in conduct that trigger antitrust liability.

Finally, judgment should also be entered in favor of the other defendants in this case. In its complaint, MSL contends that the ABA's adoption and approval of the standards have the purpose and effect of restraining trade and that the defendants have worked in concert, using some of the ABA's standards, to monopolize the law school accreditation process. As I have found that maintaining the standards does not violate the Sherman Act, there is no basis for liability against the other defendants either. I will therefore enter judgment in their favor as well.<sup>23</sup> An appropriate order follows.

[**32] ORDER

AND NOW, this 29th day of August, 1996, the American Bar Association's motion for summary judgment is hereby granted and judgment is entered in favor of the American Bar Association, Law School Admission Services (LSAS), Law School Admission Council (LSAC), and the Association of American Law Schools (AALS), and against plaintiff on all counts. It is hereby further ordered that the motions for summary judgment submitted by AALS, LSAS, and LSAC are denied as moot.

BY THE COURT:

J. William Ditter, Jr.

---

End of Document

---

<sup>23</sup> As I have found that MSL's alleged harm is not a proper basis for recovery, I need not consider the other grounds for summary judgment raised in ABA's motion.

Union Carbide Corp. v. Montell N.V.

United States District Court for the Southern District of New York

August 30, 1996, Decided ; September 3, 1996, FILED

95 Civ. 0134 (SAS)

Reporter

944 F. Supp. 1119 *; 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12884 **; 1996-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,650

UNION CARBIDE CORPORATION, individually and on behalf of and as the successor in interest of Seadrift Polypropylene Company, Plaintiff, v. MONTELL N.V.; MONTELL POLYOLEFINS; MONTELL NORTH AMERICA INC.; MONTELL USA INC.; TECHNIPOL S.r.L.; MONTEDISON S.p.A.; MONTELL FINANCE USA, INC.; ROYAL DUTCH PETROLEUM COMPANY; THE SHELL TRANSPORT AND TRADING COMPANY, p.l.c.; SHELL PETROLEUM N.V.; THE SHELL PETROLEUM COMPANY LTD.; SHELL PETROLEUM INC.; SHELL OIL COMPANY; SHELL POLYPROPYLENE COMPANY; SHELL CANADA LTD.; SHELL INTERNATIONAL CHEMICAL COMPANY LTD.; and SHELL INTERNATIONALE RESEARCH MAATSCHAPPIJ B.V., Defendants.

Core Terms

---

polypropylene, catalyst, Venture, technology, alleges, licensing, plant, tortious interference, prospective contractual relation, licensees, Generation, motion to dismiss, resin, Defendants', fraudulent, damages, parties, competitor, terminating, joint venture, fraud claim, subsidiary, induced, negotiations, merger, third party, manufacture, polyolefins, announced, antitrust

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > Failure to State Claims

HN1[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

In deciding a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, the court's function is merely to assess the legal sufficiency of the complaint rather than to weigh the evidence that might be presented at a trial. Therefore, the court must accept as true the factual allegations contained in the complaint. All reasonable inferences must be drawn in favor of the non-moving party on such a motion. A complaint should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief.

Business & Corporate Law > General Partnerships > Formation > General Overview

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Fiduciary Responsibilities

Governments > Fiduciaries

HN2 General Partnerships, Formation

Statements that no partnership is intended are not conclusive. If as a whole a contract contemplates an association of two or more persons to carry on as co-owners a business for profit, there is a partnership.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Joint Contracts

Business & Corporate Law > Joint Ventures > Formation

Business & Corporate Law > Joint Ventures > General Overview

HN3 Types of Contracts, Joint Contracts

The factors to consider in determining whether a joint venture exists are: (1) the intent of the parties to form a joint enterprise; (2) joint control and management of the business; (3) a sharing of profits and losses; and (4) a combination of property, skill or knowledge.

Contracts Law > ... > Affirmative Defenses > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

Contracts Law > Breach > General Overview

HN4 Affirmative Defenses, Fraud & Misrepresentation

Where the fraudulent conduct alleged amounts only to the defendant's false representation that it was adhering to the terms of the contract, the claim for fraud must be dismissed as redundant of the breach of contract claim. However, the same conduct which may constitute a breach of a contractual obligation may also constitute the breach of a duty arising out of the relationship created by contract but which is independent of the contract itself.

Contracts Law > ... > Affirmative Defenses > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

Governments > Fiduciaries

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Actions Against Healthcare Workers > General Overview

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Fiduciary Responsibilities

Torts > Business Torts > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

Torts > Intentional Torts > Breach of Fiduciary Duty > General Overview

HN5 Affirmative Defenses, Fraud & Misrepresentation

An action for fraud will lie, notwithstanding that the breached fiduciary duty arose from the contract establishing the fiduciary relationship.

944 F. Supp. 1119, *1119LÁ1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12884, **12884

Contracts Law > ... > Affirmative Defenses > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

HN6 Affirmative Defenses, Fraud & Misrepresentation

A difference in the measure of damages is a factor to consider in determining whether a fraud claim is independent of a contract claim, but it is not dispositive of the matter.

Commercial Law (UCC) > Sales (Article 2) > Form, Formation & Readjustment > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

Commercial Law (UCC) > Sales (Article 2) > General Overview

HN7 Sales (Article 2), Form, Formation & Readjustment

The elements of fraud are a material misstatement, known by the perpetrator to be false, made with an intent to deceive, upon which the plaintiff reasonably relies and as a result of which he sustains damages.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > Fraud Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

HN8 Heightened Pleading Requirements, Fraud Claims

Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) requires that the circumstances constituting fraud shall be stated with particularity. However, the rule must be read together with Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a), which requires only a short and plain statement of the claims for relief. A general averment, one which provides the defendant with a reasonable opportunity to frame a response, will satisfy rule 9(b).

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Express Contracts

Contracts Law > Breach > General Overview

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Good Faith & Fair Dealing

HN9 Types of Contracts, Express Contracts

Parties to an express contract are bound by an implied duty of good faith; however, breach of that duty is merely a breach of the underlying contract.

Contracts Law > Breach > General Overview

Torts > ... > Contracts > Intentional Interference > Elements

944 F. Supp. 1119, *1119 (1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12884, **12884

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Contracts > General Overview

HN10 [blue icon] Contracts Law, Breach

In order to state a claim for tortious interference with contract, a plaintiff must allege four elements: (1) the existence of a valid contract between the plaintiff and a third party; (2) defendant's knowledge of the contract; (3) defendant's intentional inducement of the third party to breach the contract or otherwise render performance impossible; and (4) damages to plaintiff.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Torts > ... > Contracts > Intentional Interference > Elements

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Contracts > General Overview

HN11 [blue icon] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A motion under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) requires that the court assumes facts in a light most favorable to the claimant.

Civil Procedure > ... > Statute of Limitations > Tolling of Statute of Limitations > Fraudulent Concealment

Commercial Law (UCC) > ... > Remedies > Statute of Limitations > Tolling

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Prospective Advantage > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Statute of Limitations > Tolling of Statute of Limitations > Fraud

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

Torts > Procedural Matters > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN12 [blue icon] Tolling of Statute of Limitations, Fraudulent Concealment

The limitation period is tolled during a defendant's fraudulent concealment of facts that would alert the plaintiff to the plaintiff's claim.

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Prospective Advantage > General Overview

Torts > Procedural Matters > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN13 [blue icon] Commercial Interference, Prospective Advantage

The doctrine of equitable tolling is subsumed within N.Y. C. P. L. R. 203\(g\) (1996).

Torts > Procedural Matters > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN14 [blue icon] Procedural Matters, Statute of Limitations

944 F. Supp. 1119, *1119L<sup>A</sup>1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12884, **12884

See N.Y. C. P. L. R. 203\(g\) (1996).

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Relation Back

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

HN15[] Amendment of Pleadings, Relation Back

Fed. R. Civ. P. 15\(c\)\(2\) provides that an amendment of a pleading relates back to the date of the original pleading when (2) the claim or defense asserted in the amended pleading arose out of the conduct, transaction, or occurrence set forth or attempted to be set forth in the original pleading.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Relation Back

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

HN16[] Amendment of Pleadings, Relation Back

Fed. R. Civ. P. 15\(c\)\(2\) is to be liberally construed, and the principal inquiry is whether adequate notice of the matters raised in the amended pleading has been given to the opposing party by the general fact situation alleged in the original pleading.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Relation Back

Torts > ... > Prospective Advantage > Intentional Interference > Elements

Torts > Business Torts > Commercial Interference > General Overview

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Prospective Advantage > General Overview

HN17[] Amendment of Pleadings, Relation Back

There is no requirement that the new claim must have been asserted in the original pleading. A single transaction or occurrence can give rise to numerous claims.

Torts > ... > Prospective Advantage > Intentional Interference > Elements

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Prospective Advantage > General Overview

HN18[] Intentional Interference, Elements

The tort of interference with prospective contractual relationship is recognized where a party would have received a contract but for a defendant's interference. Although the "would have received the contract" test is a strict one, the tort extends to mere negotiations. It is not necessary to show that negotiations for the prospective contract had reached the conclusive stage.

944 F. Supp. 1119, *1119†1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12884, **12884

Torts > ... > Prospective Advantage > Intentional Interference > Elements

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Prospective Advantage > General Overview

HN19 [down] Intentional Interference, Elements

Mere anticipation of a contract is not sufficient to make out a proper claim for interference with prospective business relations. Plaintiff must show more than a qualified probability of completing the contract, but need not plead, in exact detail, the circumstances which, on a trial, would prove that success would have been inevitable but for the tortious acts of defendants.

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Contracts > General Overview

HN20 [down] Commercial Interference, Contracts

Plaintiff must show more than a qualified probability of completing the contract, but need not plead, in exact detail, the circumstances which, on a trial, would prove that success would have been inevitable but for the tortious acts of defendants.

Torts > ... > Prospective Advantage > Intentional Interference > Elements

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Prospective Advantage > General Overview

HN21 [down] Intentional Interference, Elements

A plaintiff must allege the defendant's interference with prospective business relations either with the sole purpose of harming the plaintiff or by means that are dishonest, unfair or in any other way improper. If the defendant's interference is intended, at least in part, to advance its own competing interests, the claim will fail unless the means employed include criminal or fraudulent conduct.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Shareholder Duties & Liabilities > Piercing the Corporate Veil > General Overview

HN22 [down] Shareholder Duties & Liabilities, Piercing the Corporate Veil

In order to state an alter ego claim, a plaintiff must plead that the parent and subsidiary operated as a single economic entity, and must demonstrate an overall element of injustice or unfairness. Where a subsidiary is in fact a mere instrumentality or alter ego of its owner, a court can pierce the corporate veil. Plaintiff must show that the owners exercised complete domination of the corporation in respect to the transaction attacked.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Piercing the Corporate Veil > Alter Ego > Corporate Formalities

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Shareholder Duties & Liabilities > Piercing the Corporate Veil > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Shareholder Duties & Liabilities > Controlling Shareholders > General Overview

**HN23** [+] Alter Ego, Corporate Formalities

A conclusory allegation of domination or control is not enough to justify piercing the corporate veil. Courts have identified several factors relevant in determining whether a parent and a subsidiary operate as a single economic entity. Those factors include whether the corporation was solvent and adequately capitalized, whether corporate formalities were observed, and whether the corporation functioned in general as a facade for the dominant shareholder.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > Estoppel

Commercial Law (UCC) > ... > Form, Formation & Readjustment > Parol Evidence Rule > General Overview

Contracts Law > ... > Estoppel > Equitable Estoppel > General Overview

**HN24** [+] Affirmative Defenses, Estoppel

Estoppel may be pleaded as an affirmative cause of action.

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Parol Evidence > General Overview

Contracts Law > ... > Estoppel > Equitable Estoppel > General Overview

**HN25** [+] Contract Interpretation, Parol Evidence

A party may not offer proof of prior oral statements to alter or refute the clear meaning of unambiguous terms of written, integrated contracts to which assent has voluntarily been given.

Contracts Law > ... > Estoppel > Equitable Estoppel > General Overview

**HN26** [+] Estoppel, Equitable Estoppel

An estoppel does not originate a legal right; it merely forbids the denial of a right claimed otherwise to have arisen.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

**HN27** [+] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

**HN28** [+] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

In order to state a claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act, codified at 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 \(1973\), a plaintiff must allege concerted action by two or more persons which unreasonably restrains interstate or foreign trade or commerce.

944 F. Supp. 1119, *1119†1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12884, **12884

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

HN29 [blue download icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

Antitrust law makes a clear distinction between unilateral and concerted conduct. Where a concerted refusal to deal with a competitor has injured competition by restricting output, courts have regularly found such conduct illegal.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Clayton Act

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Commercial Law (UCC) > Sales (Article 2) > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Commercial Law (UCC) > Sales (Article 2) > Remedies > General Overview

HN30 [blue download icon] Standing, Clayton Act

In order to have standing to sue under § 7 of the Clayton Act, codified at 15 U.S.C.S. § 18, a private plaintiff must allege antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants acts unlawful.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN31 [blue download icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 18.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Commercial Law (UCC) > Sales (Article 2) > General Overview

HN32 [blue download icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

The antitrust laws were enacted for the protection of competition, not competitors. Competition for increased market share is not activity forbidden by the antitrust laws, and the antitrust laws do not protect competitors from loss of profits due to price competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN33 [blue download icon] Private Actions, Remedies

A competitor plaintiff has standing as long as it can demonstrate that its injury was caused by anticompetitive or predatory aspects of defendant's conduct, not by competition.

Counsel: [**1] For MONTEDISON, S.P.A., defendant: William C. Pelster, Skadden, Arps, Slate, Meagher & Flom, New York, NY. For ROYAL DUTCH PETROLEUM COMPANY, THE SHELL TRANSPORT & TRADING COMPANY, P.L.C., SHELL PETROLEUM N.V., THE SHELL PETROLEUM COMPANY LIMITED, SHELL CANADA LTD., SHELL INTERNATIONAL CHEMICAL COMPANY, SHELL INTERNATIONAL RESEARCH MAATSCHAPPIJ B.V., defendants: Rory O. Millson, Cravath, Swaine & Moore, New York, NY USA. For SHELL PETROLEUM INC., defendant: Rory O. Millson, Cravath, Swaine & Moore, New York, NY. William C. Slusser, Baker & Botts, L.L.P., Houston, TX. For SHELL OIL COMPANY, defendant: Steven M. Edwards, DAVIS, SCOTT, WEBER & EDWARDS, P.C., New York, NY. William C. Slusser, Baker & Botts, L.L.P., Houston, TX.

Judges: SHIRA A. SCHEINDLIN, U.S.D.J.

Opinion by: SHIRA A. SCHEINDLIN

Opinion

---

[*1125] OPINION AND ORDER

SHIRA A. SCHEINDLIN, U.S.D.J.:

Plaintiff Union Carbide Corporation ("UCC"), both individually and as successor in interest to and on behalf of Seadrift Polypropylene Company ("Seadrift"), has sued 17 defendants on various grounds. Generally, the Complaint <sup>1</sup> alleges violations of the antitrust laws, as well as various common law claims relating to certain defendants' alleged breach of agreements between them and UCC. The defendants are aligned in three groups, and each group has moved to dismiss portions of the Complaint. The groups are as follows. "Shell/Montell" refers to defendants Montell N.V.; Montell Polyolefins; Montell North America Inc.; Montell USA Inc.; and Montell Finance USA, Inc. (the "Montell" defendants), as well as Royal Dutch Petroleum Company; The Shell Transport and Trading Company, p.l.c.; Shell Petroleum N.V.; The Shell Petroleum Company Ltd.; Shell Petroleum Inc.; Shell International Chemical Company Ltd.; Shell Internationale Research Maatschappij B.V. ("SIRM"); and Shell Canada Ltd. (the "Shell" defendants). The Shell/Montell defendants submitted joint briefs on the [**2] motion. Shell Oil Company ("SOC") and Shell Polypropylene Company ("SPC") joined in the briefing of this motion. Finally, defendants Montedison S.p.A. ("Montedison") and Technipol S.r.L. ("Technipol") submitted joint briefs. The relationships among these companies are detailed in PP 7-24 of the Complaint. This Opinion addresses these relationships only to the extent necessary to resolve the motions to dismiss.

I. Standard for Deciding a Motion Under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\)

HN1 In deciding a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, "the Court's function is merely to assess the legal sufficiency of the complaint rather than to weigh the evidence that might be presented at a trial." Reich v. Glasser, 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6335, 95 Civ. 8288, 1996 WL 243243, at \*1 (S.D.N.Y. May 10, 1996) (citing Festa J\*\*31 v. Local 3 Int'l Bhd. of Elec. Workers, 905 F.2d 35, 37 \(2d Cir. 1990\)). Therefore, the Court must accept as true the factual allegations contained in the complaint. See Cohen v. Koenig, 25 F.3d 1168, 1171 \(2d Cir. 1994\). All reasonable inferences must be drawn in favor of the non-moving party on such a motion. See Allen v. WestPoint-Pepperell, Inc., 945 F.2d 40, 44 \(2d Cir. 1991\). A "complaint should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief." Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 \(1957\).

II. Facts

---

<sup>1</sup> "Complaint" refers to UCC's Third Amended Complaint, filed on January 18, 1996. If reference is made to a prior complaint, the full title will be used (i.e., Original Complaint, First Amended Complaint, Second Amended Complaint).

The following recitation of relevant facts is drawn from UCC's Third Amended Complaint. The absence of the phrase "UCC alleges" at the outset of each paragraph should not be taken as any indication that the Court endorses or adopts the facts set forth herein.

A. Polypropylene and Polypropylene Technology

Polypropylene is a polymer plastic used in a variety of commercial applications, including caps and closures for bottles, appliances, automotive parts, toys, fibers and filaments, and film. Cplt. [**4] P 25. Two kinds of complex technology are required to produce the polypropylene: (1) "Process technology" which is necessary to design and use the equipment in [*1126] which the chemical transactions take place; and (2) "catalyst use technology" which is necessary to use the specific catalysts to produce the polypropylene resin for specific end-uses. Id. P 26.

Historically, only a small number of firms have developed polypropylene process technology, polypropylene catalysts, or related catalyst use technology. There are significant barriers to entry into these lines of business, including the complexity of the various technologies involved, certain patent barriers, and substantial research and development costs, all of which involve significant sunk costs. Many producers of polypropylene do not have their own proprietary process and catalyst technology, and must obtain by license the technology necessary to manufacture polypropylene. Id. P 28.

B. The Development of Current Generation Process and Catalyst Technology

Since 1975, the polypropylene process and catalyst technologies have improved significantly. The most recent development, "Current Generation Process and Catalyst [**5] Technology," is more efficient and less costly per unit of output than earlier technologies and requires less equipment and capital expenditure by the resin manufacturer. Cplt. P 29. Companies who wish to construct and operate new polypropylene resin plants ordinarily have no economically feasible alternative but to enter into a "Total Package License" for all of the elements necessary to manufacture polypropylene (including Current Generation Catalyst and Process Technology, plant design, and rights to purchase and use Current Generation Polypropylene Catalysts). Thus, there is no longer a demand for separate process and catalyst technology licenses for new plants. Id. P 30.

Montedison and Mitsui Petrochemical Industries, Ltd. ("Mitsui") were the first firms to develop, commercialize, and license a Current Generation Catalyst and Process Technology. Id. PP 31-33. As of the 1980s, no other prospective licensor had developed both a Current Generation Catalyst and a Current Generation Process Technology. Id. P 33. Although UCC had developed a Current Generation Process Technology called UNIPOL, it needed to possess a Current Generation Catalyst in order to successfully enter [**6] the polypropylene technology licensing business. Id. P 35. After considering the lengthy period it would take to develop a Current Generation Catalyst and related technology, UCC decided to seek a co-venturer that already possessed a Current Generation Catalyst and associated catalyst technology that could be adapted to function with UCC's UNIPOL process technology. Id. P 38. Likely candidates included Hercules, Inc., Stauffer Chemical Company ("Stauffer"), and Shell Oil Company ("SOC"). Id. P 34. Mitsui was effectively eliminated as a possible catalyst co-venturer because of a prior research and development agreement it had made with Montedison. Id. P 31.

C. Montedison's Efforts To Maintain Its Dominant Position In the Licensing of Current Generation Technology

In an attempt to acquire and maintain a dominant position in the licensing of Current Generation Catalyst and Process Technology, Montedison took various actions that effectively eliminated some of the most likely catalyst partners for UCC. Cplt. P 40. For example, in August 1982, UCC and Hercules agreed to establish a program that would permit the parties to evaluate the compatibility of Hercules' Current [**7] Generation Catalyst and catalyst use technology. Id. P 41. However, in 1983, Hercules and Montedison formed a company called Himont, and shortly thereafter, Hercules discontinued work under the UCC catalyst evaluation agreement because of a likely competitive conflict with Himont. Id. PP 42-43.

A similar fate met UCC's joint development discussion with Stauffer. In 1984, Himont, Mitsui, and Stauffer entered into an agreement for the stated purpose of resolving possible patent infringement issues relating to polypropylene catalysts. Id. P 47. After entering into this agreement, Stauffer stopped developing and attempting to market its own Current Generation Catalyst and terminated its joint development discussions with UCC. Id. P 48.

[*1127] D. SOC's Venture with UCC

In December 1981, UCC and SOC entered into a confidential polypropylene catalyst evaluation agreement, similar to those that UCC had entered into with Hercules and Stauffer. Cplt. P 49. In December 1983, UCC entered into a long-term cooperative arrangement with SOC (the "UCC/Shell Venture") for the commercial development and licensing of Total Package Licenses to third parties that would include UCC's UNIPOL [**8] Current Generation Process Technology and SOC's SHAC Current Generation Catalyst. Id. P 50. The parties also formed a partnership under Texas law, Seadrift Polypropylene Company ("Seadrift"), in order to construct, own and operate a world-scale demonstration polypropylene resin plant (the "Seadrift plant"). Id. PP 51, 64.

UCC and SOC entered into a number of related agreements in the course of establishing and operating the UCC/Shell Venture. These agreements include (1) the Cooperative Undertaking Agreement ("CUA"), (2) the Seadrift Partnership Agreement, (3) the Catalyst Sales Contract, and (4) the Polypropylene Conversion Agreement. Id. P 53.

The CUA represents the basic agreement defining the duties and obligations of UCC and SOC with respect to the UCC/Shell Venture, particularly with regard to provisions protecting trade secrets both while the CUA is in effect and after termination or expiration of the CUA. Id. P 54. Part of the CUA calls for SOC to provide catalysts to the partnership for production of polypropylene resin at the Seadrift plant at "cost plus a reasonable return on capital." Id. P 56 (citing CUA). The CUA also provides that if SOC terminates [**9] the agreement, SOC "will not for a period of ten (10) years after termination undertake alone or with any third party the development of a gas phase fluid bed process for the manufacture of PP Resin or polyethylene." Id. P 62(d) (citing CUA).

The Seadrift Partnership Agreement embodies the terms of the UCC/Shell partnership to construct, own and operate the Seadrift plant. Id. P 64. The Catalyst Sales Contract formalizes SOC's rights and obligations in regard to its provision of catalysts to the Seadrift plant for use in producing polypropylene. Id. P 66. SOC also entered into the Polypropylene Conversion Agreement (also known as the "Toll Conversion Agreement") to formalize SOC's rights and obligations regarding the marketing and sale of polypropylene resin manufactured at the Seadrift plant. Id. P 68.

E. Montedison's and Himont's Efforts to Curtail Total Package Licensing Competition From the UCC/Shell Venture

In 1985, when UCC and SOC began to market the UCC/Shell Commercial Process and Total Package License in competition with Himont and Mitsui, UCC and SOC encountered significant difficulties as a result of Montedison's and Himont's conduct. In 1985 and [**10] 1986, Montedison, Himont and Mitsui threatened to sue SOC and its licensees for patent infringement, which deterred a number of potential licensees from using the UCC/Shell Venture's Current Generation Process and Catalyst Technology and delayed for almost two years the effective entry of the UCC/Shell Venture into the Total Package Licensing Business. Cplt. P 70.

UCC (with the backing of SOC) informed Himont, Montedison and Mitsui that it was considering litigation challenging their actions under the antitrust laws of the United States. Thereafter, Himont, Montedison, and Mitsui entered into negotiations with UCC and SOC in an effort to resolve the dispute. The parties ultimately executed a settlement agreement whereby UCC agreed to waive its right to bring an antitrust action against Himont, Montedison and others in return for their dropping patent claims against the manufacture, use, and licensing of the SHAC catalyst. UCC also provided Himont with a nominal royalty on polypropylene resin sales by UCC/Shell Venture licensees. Id. P 71.

F. The Success of the UCC/Shell Venture in Restraining Himont's Dominance of the Total Package License Market

The December 1986 settlement [**11] enabled the UCC/Shell Venture to enter the Total Package License Market successfully. In [*1128] that market, the Venture has been the principal worldwide competitor of Montedison. From January 1987 to December 1993, the UCC/Shell Venture obtained approximately 36% of all Total Package

Licenses entered into worldwide with independent third-party licensees. During the same time period, Himont obtained approximately 41% of such licenses. Cplt. PP 74-75.

G. Catalyst Research and License Agreement with SIRM, and RDS' Plans to Expand its Polypropylene Resin Production Capacity with UNIPOL Technology

In January 1988, UCC, SOC and SIRM (the research organization owned by the RDS Group) entered into a tripartite research agreement pursuant to which the parties agreed to cross-license the fruits of their catalyst technology research. Cplt. PP 76-77. One month later, UCC and SIRM entered into a Polypropylene License Agreement. Under this agreement, UCC granted SIRM a non-exclusive license to use the UCC/Shell Commercial Process and allowed SIRM to extend that right to use and disclose the commercial process to other RDS Group companies (the "RDS license"). Id. P 78. During negotiations regarding [**12] the RDS license, RDS told UCC it intended to use UNIPOL in all new RDS impact co-polymer plants. Id. From 1987 through mid-1991, RDS conducted a number of polypropylene strategy reviews that recommended using UNIPOL in specific new RDS plants. Id. PP 80-81.

H. Efforts to Expand the UCC/Shell Venture

As of early 1990, the Seadrift plant had been operating for four years, but its production capacity was limited to 90,000 metric tons. SOC had disposed of its Woodbury, New Jersey manufacturing plant in the late 1980s. As a result, its only remaining polypropylene production capacity was its half interest in the Seadrift plant and its Norco plant (production capacity: 135,000 metric tons). Cplt. P 84. UCC and SOC recognized that they needed direct involvement with the polypropylene resin market in order to be competitive. They also realized that the revenues earned from catalyst production and licensing alone could not support the research and development necessary to maintain a competitive edge. Id. P 85.

RDS, meanwhile, had also recognized that the UCC/Shell Venture required more investment in research and development, as well as in polypropylene resin production capacity, [**13] to remain competitive. RDS was concerned that the UCC/Shell Venture's licensed technology was vulnerable in the long run because UCC and SOC did not have extensive first-hand experience in the polypropylene market. Id. P 86. In response to these forecasts, SOC embarked upon a new strategy in 1989 to increase polypropylene production. SOC intended to become a "top tier" player in the North American polypropylene resin market by the mid-1990s. Id. P 87.

In furtherance of this goal, UCC and SOC planned an expanded joint venture, which UCC referred to as "Nautilus." Under the proposal, each party was to contribute capital and services in order to achieve a 50/50 interest in the new venture.<sup>2</sup> SOC and UCC also planned to contribute additional capital sufficient to allow the construction of two major UNIPOL polypropylene plants with 200,000 metric tons of capacity each by the mid-1990s, in time to meet the next high cycle in North American polypropylene demand. Id. P 88. As part of this proposed expanded venture, on March 12, 1990, SOC and UCC entered into a six-month Disclosure and Secrecy Agreement that enabled the parties to exchange confidential information. Over the next [**14] six months, the parties exchanged proposals addressing various issues relating to [*1129] Nautilus, and began exchanging drafts of the documents necessary to establish the venture.<sup>3</sup> Id. P 89. On September 13, 1990, SOC and UCC extended the Disclosure and Secrecy Agreement until March 12, 1991, and continued to meet and exchange information regarding Nautilus. Id. P 90.

<sup>2</sup>Under the proposed project, UCC and SOC would both contribute their existing half interest in the UCC/Shell Venture and the Seadrift plant; SOC would contribute its Norco polypropylene resin plant and its SHAC catalyst business; UCC would contribute its supporting training and engineering services business; and UCC and SOC would contribute capital in appropriate amounts to achieve a 50/50 interest. Cplt. P 88.

<sup>3</sup>The parties also increased their research and development expenditures supporting the UCC/Shell venture by approximately 30%, anticipating that Nautilus would become a reality. UCC also prepared cost estimates for constructing the new polypropylene plants, and SOC informed polypropylene resin customers that it was considering an expansion of the UCC/Shell Venture's polypropylene manufacturing capacity. Cplt. P 89.

[**15] Meanwhile, Shell Canada was also reassessing its polypropylene resin strategy, and concluded that it would be in a good position to service the northeastern United States if it could manage to build a new low-cost UNIPOL plant. Id. P 91. In March 1991, during discussions between SOC and Shell Canada, a Shell Plastics Business Center executive indicated that the expanded UCC/Shell Venture could provide an avenue for equity participation by Shell Canada, as well as an alternative means for Shell Canada to obtain UNIPOL technology. Id. P 92. On March 14, 1991, SOC and UCC extended the Nautilus Disclosure and Secrecy agreement for an additional six months. On May 14, SOC and UCC agreed to extend the coverage of their secrecy agreement to permit SOC to disclose to Shell Canada confidential information from UCC. Id. PP 92-93.

In April 1991, the chief SOC negotiator for the Nautilus project reported in a status update to SOC executives that progress was being made toward resolving the remaining key issues. Id. P 93. However, in June 1991, while the Nautilus negotiations were proceeding, a senior SOC executive notified a senior UCC executive that Montedison had approached [**16] RDS and SOC about a worldwide RDS/Himont joint venture and that both RDS and SOC were interested. SOC stated that because of Montedison's expressed interest, it wanted to suspend the Nautilus negotiations for a few months. In spite of SOC's unilateral suspension of the Nautilus discussions, on June 27, 1991, UCC reaffirmed to SOC that UCC was still very interested in Nautilus. Id. P 94.

I. Montedison's Scheme to Eliminate Competition from the UCC/Shell Venture

1. Montedison's Situation as of June 1991

Before Montedison approached SOC, Montedison's Himont subsidiary was the leading polypropylene manufacturer in the world. Cplt. P 95. However, due to a low cycle in the industry in the early 1990s, Montedison faced financial difficulties and a shrinking worldwide market for polypropylene resin. Id. P 97. The proposed UCC/Shell Venture licensing program threatened to jeopardize Montedison's commercial advantage by introducing the Current Generation Process and Catalyst Technology into competitors' polypropylene production facilities. Id. Montedison hired two consulting firms in 1990 whose findings concluded that UCC's aggressive licensing practices posed a serious [**17] threat to Himont's interests in polypropylene production. Id. PP 99-104.

2. Initial Discussions of Project Sophia

Montedison initially sought to disrupt the UCC/Shell Venture by inducing UCC to align with Montedison. Cplt. P 106. After UCC rejected Montedison's approach, but before SOC suspended the Nautilus negotiations, Montedison contacted RDS and SOC about a worldwide venture in which they would combine their respective polyolefins businesses. Id. Beginning in July 1991, representatives of RDS, SOC and Montedison began to discuss a possible venture, referred to as the "Sophia" project. Id. P 107. SOC allegedly told Montedison about its business venture with UCC, as well as the Nautilus proposal. Id. P 109. In December 1991, a subsidiary of RDS, a subsidiary of Montedison, and SOC entered into a Letter of Intent and Secrecy Agreement in connection with Sophia. The existence of this agreement was not disclosed to UCC. As a result of the Sophia discussions, SOC notified UCC that it was terminating the Nautilus discussions in December 1991. Id. P 110.

*[*1130] 3. SOC, Shell Canada and RDS Termination of Expanded UNIPOL Relationship, and SOC's Actions to Terminate [**18] the CUA and Join Montell*

On July 30, 1992, SOC, RDS and Montedison entered into a Memorandum of Understanding regarding the "partial merger" of their worldwide polyolefins business into the Sophia venture.<sup>4</sup> Cplt. P 118. The parties entered into this understanding in spite of a substantial risk of antitrust violations in both Europe and the United States. Id. PP 116-117. UCC was not informed of the existence of this Memorandum between SOC, RDS and Montedison. Id. P 118.

---

<sup>4</sup>This Memorandum contemplated the formation of Sophia on January 1, 1993. SOC would contribute its solely-owned polypropylene assets, including its Norco polypropylene resin plant and its SHAC-II catalyst plant then under construction. SOC would also contribute its propylene manufacturing assets and/or propylene purchase arrangements. Further, Shell Canada was to contribute its Sarnia, Ontario polypropylene plant. Cplt. P 118.

UCC finally became aware of a possible venture between SOC, RDS and Montedison via a letter from SOC dated [**19] August 5, 1992. Id. P 119. SOC's letter indicated a desire to negotiate with UCC regarding the termination of the CUA. SOC suggested modifying the CUA to give SOC an option to terminate the agreement so that it could participate in the joint venture between RDS and Montedison without incurring the obligations the CUA's termination provisions would impose. Id. Believing that SOC's proposal would leave UCC in a substantially weaker position in the market than if the venture were continued, UCC rejected SOC's proposal. Id. P 123.

4. The RDS/Montedison Announcement of a Memorandum of Understanding

On September 17, 1992, while SOC was attempting to disentangle itself from the CUA, RDS and Montedison announced that they had signed a Memorandum of Understanding to evaluate worldwide integration of their polyolefins businesses. Cplt. P 124. On the same day, SOC issued a news release announcing that the proposed RDS/Montedison enterprise would not include the UCC/Shell Venture, and that SOC's obligations under the UCC/Shell Venture would remain unchanged. SOC still did not disclose to UCC that SOC had signed the Memorandum of Understanding announced by Montedison and RDS. [**20] Id. In March 1993, after holding discussions aimed at reassuring the UCC/Shell Venture's licensees that SOC would honor its obligations, SOC issued a "Holding Statement," restating its commitment to the UNIPOL technology and to UCC/Shell licensees. Id. P 125.

5. The Montell Scheme as Originally Announced, and as Modified to Meet EC Concerns

Nine months later, in December 1993, RDS and Montedison announced that they had signed an agreement to combine major portions of their polyethylene and polypropylene business into a joint venture company, which was later named "Montell." Cplt. P 126. Under the agreement, RDS would own 100 percent of SOC and would have control over Montell. In sum, the venture contemplated RDS controlling the two leading competitors in the licensing of Total Package Licenses and in catalyst research and development. Id. P 127. This structure was opposed by the European Community (EC). In response, RDS and Montedison proposed in the Spring of 1994 that the UCC/Shell Venture be dissolved to resolve competitive concerns. However, SOC and UCC were unable to negotiate a resolution. In May 1994, RDS and Montedison offered to form a separate entity, known [**21] as "Technipol," to license Montedison's Current Generation Catalyst and Process Technology (Spheripol) to third parties. These licenses would be offered in competition with the UNIPOL/SHAC licenses offered by the UCC/Shell Venture. Id. P 128.

6. The Montell Scheme as Modified by the Proposed FTC Consent Order

On January 11, 1995, the FTC proposed a Consent Order, pursuant to which SOC would have at least six months to divest its polypropylene assets to UCC or an independent party. Cplt. P 129. Further, during the period prior to divestiture, SOC was required to form a separate subsidiary, free from SOC's control, to own and operate the [*1131] SOC polypropylene assets to be divested. In response, SOC formed Shell Polypropylene Company (SPC), and on February 28, 1995, SOC transferred its polypropylene-related businesses (and purported to assign its rights to and obligations under the CUA) to SPC. Montell became operational on March 31, 1995. Id. P 130.

J. Actions by SOC and RDS to Weaken Competition Involving the UNIPOL/SHAC Technology

In addition, SOC took other actions which weakened competition in the Total Package License market. For example, in violation of the CUA, [**22] SOC attempted to establish a separate business for the recycling of titanium tetrachloride, a by-product of catalyst production. The result was that SOC allegedly received a return on its capital far in excess of the reasonable return agreed to in the CUA. Cplt. PP 136-42.

In the Summer of 1993, SOC intentionally reduced the productivity of certain catalysts, including SHAC 201, in order to increase its revenues and profits from catalyst sales. Because catalyst yields have improved, licensees can purchase smaller quantities of catalyst to produce the same amount of polypropylene. However, by reducing the productivity of the catalyst, SOC forced licensees to continue to purchase the same amount of catalyst, in violation of its contractual obligations under the CUA to make technological advances available to licensees. Id. P 143. Among UCC's other claims are allegations that SOC reduced its portion of research and development expenditures, increased the price of the SHAC catalyst, and refused to build a new polypropylene plant, all in violation of the CUA. Id. PP 144-146.

K. SOC's Support of Sophia After It Announced It Could Not Participate in Sophia

SOC continued to [**23] support the Sophia project even after it announced that it would not participate in the venture. Cplt. P 147. SOC undermined the UCC/Shell Venture by publicly professing before the EC that SOC was a neutral observer of the Montell merger, even though SOC's internal assessments of the RDS/Montedison venture indicated otherwise. Id. P 152. SOC also actively cooperated with Montedison and RDS in order to help the Montell venture go forward. Id. P 151.

Finally, SOC continually subordinated its own interests to those of RDS throughout the events in question. By entering into the FTC Consent Order, which obligated SOC to divest itself of its entire polypropylene business, SOC allowed Montell to penetrate the United States polypropylene market--a market which had traditionally been the exclusive province of SOC under a long-standing protocol between SOC and RDS. Id. PP 153-154. SOC did so at a favorable time in the polypropylene business cycle, even though just several years earlier it had sought to become a "top-tier" polypropylene player. Id. P 154.

L. Events Following Entry of the FTC Consent Order

After filing its Original Complaint on January 9, 1995, UCC made [**24] a motion for a preliminary injunction. That motion was withdrawn on February 22, 1995 when the parties reached a settlement agreement. Under that agreement, an independent third party would appraise the value of the assets of SPC, and UCC would then have the opportunity to purchase those assets at a price derived from the fair market value as computed by the appraiser. The appraiser rendered its estimate on April 28, 1995, and on May 5, UCC gave notice that it would purchase SPC's assets. On June 21, 1995, after further submissions by the parties, the appraiser revised its estimate. On June 28, UCC gave notice that it would purchase SPC's assets at a price derived from the revised estimate of fair market value. When UCC and SOC entered into a definitive agreement for UCC to purchase the assets of SPC, they submitted the agreement to the FTC for approval. The FTC approved the sale on December 21, 1995. Cplt. PP 156-60.

Following its purchase of the assets of SPC, UCC again amended its complaint to incorporate these new allegations. Defendants have moved to dismiss almost all of this Third Amended Complaint.

[*1132] III. Count II: Breach of Fiduciary Duty by SOC and SPC

In Count II, [**25] UCC alleges that SOC breached the fiduciary duty it owed to UCC.<sup>5</sup> UCC alleges that a fiduciary relationship between SOC and UCC arose by virtue of the Seadrift Partnership Agreement between the two entities, as well as by virtue of the Cooperative Undertaking Agreement. Cplt. PP 229-30. UCC incorporated both of these agreements by reference into its Complaint. Cplt. P 53. According to UCC, "[SOC] breached its fiduciary duty to UCC by breaching the CUA, the Catalyst Sales Contract, and the Polypropylene Conversion Agreement, and by actively cooperating in the efforts of the other defendants to establish businesses aimed at undermining the competitive efforts of UCC in the UCC/Shell Venture." Cplt. P 232.

[**26] SOC argues for dismissal of this Count on the ground that the CUA did not create a fiduciary relationship between UCC and SOC. While Article 13 of the CUA provides in part that "this Agreement does not create a partnership or joint venture between the parties," the parties agree that the CUA does not expressly state that no

<sup>5</sup> Count II also alleges that SPC had a fiduciary relationship with UCC and Seadrift by virtue of "the purported assignment of [SOC's] rights and obligations under the CUA, the Seadrift Partnership Agreement, and related agreements . . ." Cplt. P 231. UCC alleges that SPC breached this duty by continuing or assisting the actions of SOC that constitute a breach of fiduciary duty. Id. P 232. For simplicity, in the discussion of this Count, I will refer only to SOC, although the analysis applies with equal force to the relationship between UCC/Seadrift and SPC.

fiduciary duty exists between UCC and SOC. SOC/SPC Reply Mem. at 2; UCC Opp. Mem. (SOC/SPC) at 1.<sup>6</sup> In any event, "HN2" statements that no partnership is intended are not conclusive. If as a whole a contract contemplates an association of two or more persons to carry on as co-owners a business for profit, a partnership there is." Martin v. Peyton, 246 N.Y. 213, 217, 158 N.E. 77 \(1927\). HN3 Factors to consider in determining whether a joint venture exists are: "(1) the intent of the parties to form a joint enterprise; (2) joint control and management of the business; (3) a sharing of profits and losses; and (4) a combination of property, skill or knowledge." Sound Video Unlimited, Inc. v. Video Shack Inc., 700 F. Supp. 127, 138 \(S.D.N.Y. 1988\) (citing Halloran v. Ohlmeyer Communications Co., 618 F. Supp. 1214, 1218 \(S.D.N.Y. 1985\)).

[**27] Proceeding, as I must, on the assumption that UCC's allegations are true, UCC could conceivably prove a set of facts that would entitle it to relief. See Cplt. P 230; Rose v. Simms, 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17686, 95 Civ. 1466, 1995 WL 702307, at *10 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 29, 1995). UCC has alleged all the elements of a joint venture. According to UCC, the CUA "envisioned a joint relationship of trust and confidence;" the CUA "created a joint Management Committee . . . to review the progress of the UCC/Shell Venture;" UCC and SOC "jointly shared the risk of profit and loss in the Venture;" and UCC and SOC committed to developing and sharing "technology and other proprietary information for use in the Venture." Cplt. P 230. Therefore, UCC has alleged facts sufficient to suggest that a fiduciary relationship exists between it and SOC by virtue of the CUA.<sup>7</sup> Accordingly, the motion to dismiss Count II is denied.

[**28] IV. Count I: Fraud by SOC and SPC

A. Summary of Fraud Claim

In Count I of its Complaint, UCC

[*1133] alleges a fraudulent scheme by SOC to (1) raise the price of SHAC catalyst well above its actual value under the relevant contracts; (2) inflate the purchase price of SPC far beyond its proper value; and (3) injure the competitive standing of the UNIPOL Total Package License to the financial benefit of Montell.

UCC Opp. Mem. (SOC/SPC) at 8 (citing Cplt. PP 219-26). According to UCC, SOC secretly misappropriated jointly owned technology and used that technology to develop a much cheaper method of producing catalyst (known as the MSR system). Cplt. PP 215-17. UCC alleges that SOC never told it that SOC had developed the cheaper production system. Further, UCC maintains that SOC charged UCC and UNIPOL licensees higher prices for that SHAC catalyst rather than pass along the savings in production costs created by the MSR system. Id. P 219. UCC also alleges that SOC engaged in fraudulent accounting techniques in order to conceal from UCC its development of the new catalyst production method, in order to create the appearance that catalyst production costs had risen, [**29] and in order to maintain the appearance that SOC was not receiving a rate of return on the catalyst business in excess of the contractual limit. Id. PP 139, 216-21, 226.

UCC alleges that SOC made repeated fraudulent misrepresentations, in furtherance of this scheme, to the effect that SOC was complying with contractual restrictions on the rate of return for catalyst production. Id. P 220\(c\). UCC then alleges that it relied on this misrepresentations to its detriment. Specifically, UCC claims that, through Seadrift,

<sup>6</sup>This Opinion will refer to briefs in the following manner. Moving briefs are called "[name of defendant group] Mem." Plaintiff's opposition to the moving brief of a particular defendant group is called "UCC Opp. Mem. ([name of defendant group])." Finally, reply briefs are called "[name of defendant group] Reply."

<sup>7</sup>SOC concedes that "the Seadrift Partnership Agreement may have created a fiduciary relationship," but states that "that fiduciary relationship was limited to the subject matter of that agreement," which was "to construct, own, and operate the Seadrift plant, which became operational in May 1985." SOC/SPC Reply Mem. at 4 (quoting Cplt. P 64). SOC thus implies that because UCC's allegations in Count II do not relate to the operation of the Seadrift plant, any fiduciary duty arising from the Seadrift Partnership Agreement is irrelevant to this Count. It is unnecessary, however, to address the significance of the Seadrift Partnership Agreement to Count II because I find that UCC has properly alleged a breach of a fiduciary duty between UCC and SOC based on the CUA.

it "purchased SHAC catalyst at grossly inflated prices, attempted to convince potential licensees to obtain UNIPOL licenses despite the high cost of SHAC catalyst, and was prevented from seeking to halt SOC's practice of overcharging for catalysts." UCC Opp. Mem. (SOC/SPC) at 9 (citing Cplt. PP 220, 222). Finally, the claim includes an allegation by UCC that SOC made affirmative misrepresentations regarding the MSR system to an appraiser, resulting in injury to UCC by virtue of the "improper[] and unlawful[] inflation [of] the purchase price of SPC by over $ 50 million." Cplt. P 219. (UCC contends that it had no choice but to pay the inflated appraised value [**30] of SPC in order to mitigate further injury. UCC Opp. Mem. (SOC/SPC) at 9.)

B. Sufficiency of Fraud Claim

SOC urges dismissal of Count I on three separate grounds.<sup>8</sup> First, SOC argues that the claim is subsumed by UCC's breach of contract claims; second, SOC contends that UCC has not adequately pled reliance damages; and third, SOC argues that the claim lacks the specificity required by Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b).

1. Whether fraud claim is subsumed by breach of contract claims

SOC argues that UCC's allegation that SOC concealed its breach [**31] of contract from UCC "is insufficient to transform what would normally be a breach of contract action into one for fraud." Reuben H. Donnelley Corp. v. Mark I Marketing Corp., 893 F. Supp. 285, 290 (S.D.N.Y. 1995). [HN4] Where the fraudulent conduct alleged amounts only to the defendant's false representation that it was adhering to the terms of the contract, the claim for fraud must be dismissed as redundant of the breach of contract claim." Glynwill Investments, N.V. v. Prudential Sec., Inc., 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8262, 92 Civ. 9267, 1995 WL 362500, at *7 (S.D.N.Y. June 16, 1995) (citation omitted). However, "the same conduct which may constitute a breach of a contractual obligation may also constitute the breach of a duty arising out of the relationship created by contract but which is independent of the contract itself." Mandelblatt v. Devon Stores, Inc., 132 A.D.2d 162, 521 N.Y.S.2d 672, 676 (1st Dep't 1987); see also MBW Advertising Network, Inc. v. Century Business Credit Corp., 173 A.D.2d 306, 569 [*1134] N.Y.S.2d 682, 682 (1st Dep't 1991) ("the same acts which give rise to a cause of action for fraud may also form the basis for a breach of contract claim," although the fraud claim "will not arise [**32] if the alleged fraud merely relates to the breach of contract").

As discussed above, UCC has properly alleged the existence of a fiduciary duty between SOC and UCC arising from the CUA. This duty constitutes "a legal duty which exists 'independent of contractual relations between the parties,'" and thus allows UCC to sue in tort. Hargrave v. Oki Nursery, Inc., 636 F.2d 897, 899 (2d Cir. 1980). [HN5] An action for fraud will lie, notwithstanding that the breached fiduciary duty arose from the contract establishing the fiduciary relationship." GLM Corp. v. Klein, 665 F. Supp. 283, 286 (S.D.N.Y. 1987). Accordingly, UCC's fraud claim will not be dismissed on the ground that it is inseparable from the contract claims.

SOC also argues that in order for the fraud claim to stand, UCC must allege damages in addition to those flowing from the alleged breach of contract. SOC/SPC Mem. at 9. However, the Glynwill court stated that [HN6] a difference in the measure of damages is a factor to consider in determining whether a fraud claim is independent of a contract claim, . . . , but it is not dispositive of the matter." 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8262, *25, 1995 WL 362500, at *8 (citation omitted). Further, some courts have assessed [**33] the sufficiency of a fraud claim without even discussing whether alleged fraud damages differ from damages alleged under the contract. See, e.g., GLM Corp. 665 F. Supp. at 286; Licette Music Corp. v. A.A. Records, Inc., 601 N.Y.S.2d 297, 297-98 (1st Dep't), leave to appeal denied, 82 N.Y.2d 662 (1993). As UCC suggests, a "claim of distinct fraud damages is merely one means by which a plaintiff can demonstrate that its fraud claim alleges 'extraneous' facts or duties sufficient to distinguish it from a simple breach of contract." UCC Opp. Mem. (SOC/SPC) at 12 (citing Americana Petroleum Corp. v. Northville Indus. Corp., 200 A.D.2d 646, 606 N.Y.S.2d 906, 908 (2d Dep't 1994) (emphasis in original)). In any event, UCC has properly alleged that it suffered damages distinctly attributable to SOC's fraud. See Cplt. P 219.

---

<sup>8</sup>The arguments are made jointly with SPC, which is SOC's wholly-owned subsidiary (see Cplt. P 20). SPC is implicated in the fraud claim's allegation that "SPC has also defrauded UCC by falsely representing to UCC that the mixed-solvent recovery system was not Joint Development Technology of UCC and [SOC] and by assisting [SOC] in misrepresenting to the appraiser the relevant facts relating to the allegedly separate mixed-solvent recovery business." Cplt. P 226.

2. Whether UCC has sufficiently alleged reliance damages

In further support of its contention that UCC's fraud claim is deficient and should be dismissed, SOC argues that UCC has not alleged reliance damages. SOC correctly notes that HN7 the "elements of fraud are a material misstatement, known by the perpetrator to be false, made with [**34] an intent to deceive, upon which the plaintiff reasonably relies and as a result of which he sustains damages." Megaris Furs, Inc. v. Gimbel Bros., Inc., 172 A.D.2d 209, 568 N.Y.S.2d 581, 584-85 (1st Dep't 1991) (emphasis in original). However, UCC has adequately alleged that it suffered damages as a result of relying on SOC's allegedly fraudulent misrepresentations regarding the price of the SHAC catalyst. Assuming the truth of UCC's allegations, and drawing all reasonable inferences from those allegations in UCC's favor, it is evident that UCC asserts that it was injured in several ways.

As the successor in interest to Seadrift, UCC paid catalyst prices that were improperly inflated despite the fact that catalyst manufacturing costs have declined. See Cplt. P 219. In addition, UCC was injured because the "attractiveness of a UNIPOL/SHAC Total Package License to prospective licensees" was reduced after the licensees' catalyst costs were improperly increased. Id. UCC also alleges harm based on the appraised value of SPC, which was more than $ 50 million higher than it would have been if SOC's and SPC's fraudulent misrepresentations had not caused the appraiser to treat [**35] the MSR process as a separate business rather than as part of the catalyst business. The appraised value determined the price that UCC paid for SPC. Id.; see also Cplt. PP 226, 318, 320. Assuming UCC can prove its allegations, it would be entitled to recover its "out-of-pocket losses and consequential damages." Delcor Lab., Inc. v. Cosmair, Inc., 169 A.D.2d 639, 564 N.Y.S.2d 771, 772 (1st Dep't), appeal dismissed, 78 N.Y.2d 952, 573 N.Y.S.2d 646, [*1135] 578 N.E.2d 444 (1991). UCC has alleged just such damages. Accordingly, SOC's argument that UCC has failed adequately to plead reliance damages is without merit.

3. Whether UCC has pled the claim with sufficient particularity

Finally, SOC contends that UCC's fraud claim does not comply with HN8 Fed. R. Civ. P. 9\(b\), which requires that "the circumstances constituting fraud . . . shall be stated with particularity." However, the rule "must be read together with Rule 8\(a\) [,] which requires only a 'short and plain statement' of the claims for relief." Quaknine v. MacFarlane, 897 F.2d 75, 79 (2d Cir. 1990) (citing DiVittorio v. Equidyne Extractive Indus., Inc., 822 F.2d 1242, 1247 (2d Cir. 1987); Ross v. A.H. Robins [*36] Co., 607 F.2d 545, 557 n.20 (2d Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 446 U.S. 946, 64 L. Ed. 2d 802, 100 S. Ct. 2175 (1980)). Consequently, "a general averment, one which provides the defendant with a reasonable opportunity to frame a response, will satisfy Rule 9\(b\)." Glickman v. Alexander & Alexander Servs., Inc., 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2325, *13, 93 Civ. 7594, 1996 WL 88570, at *4 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 29, 1996).

SOC identifies three of UCC's allegations of affirmative misrepresentations in particular that it contends fail to satisfy Rule 9\(b\). First, SOC attacks the claim that in "billing Seadrift for SHAC catalysts purchased in 1993 and 1994." Shell Oil "falsely represented that its catalysts were not priced at a level that allowed [SOC] to realize a rate of return in excess of its actual cost and a 12% per annum return on capital." Cplt. P 220(c). SOC argues that this "general statement does not specify the statements in the bills that were allegedly fraudulent, the dates of the allegedly fraudulent bills or why the statements were allegedly fraudulent." SOC/SPC Mem. at 12. SOC's argument borders on frivolous. The above-quoted language from the Complaint states exactly why UCC believes the statements were fraudulent. [**37] As for specifying which statements in the bills were fraudulent and the date of the bills, UCC has already identified for SOC the precise documents to which it is referring: the bills covering Seadrift's purchase of SHAC catalysts in 1993 and 1994. Further, UCC has stated the time period during which these bills were sent by SOC and has identified the date and amount of a fraudulent price increase (see Cplt. P 145). It is unnecessary to require UCC to specify the precise date on which SOC sent each of the fraudulent bills. Because UCC has given SOC enough information to enable it to frame a response, this pleading satisfies the requirements of Rule 9\(b\).

Second, SOC challenges the allegation that its "announcement [of] SHAC catalyst price increases in early 1995" contained false representations. See Cplt. P 220(c). According to SOC, "this general statement does not specify what was fraudulent about the announcement [or] who was defrauded." SOC/SPC Mem. at 12. Again, SOC is wrong. Paragraphs 220(c) and 226 of the Complaint, for example, clearly state that UCC was defrauded by SOC's misrepresentations, and Paragraph 227 alleges that UCC and Seadrift have suffered injury [**38] as a result. And as noted above, the allegations in the Complaint clearly identify the content of SOC's false statement. See Cplt. PP 145, 220(c).

Third, SOC attacks the allegation that in statements made by William Chalmers and other [SOC] personnel to Stephen Kaufman and other UCC personnel in response to specific inquiries in 1993 and 1994, including an inquiry at a Venture Management Team Meeting in the fall of 1994, [SOC] falsely represented that its catalysts were not priced at a level that allowed [SOC] to realize a rate of return in excess of its actual cost and a 12% per annum return on capital.

Cplt. P 220(c). It is unclear to the Court how SOC's Rule 9\(b\) challenge to this claim meets the straight face test. Contrary to SOC's assertions, the allegation at issue specifies what was said to UCC and, together with other allegations of the Complaint, provides the basis for concluding that the statement was false.

To the extent that SOC is challenging the other elements of UCC's fraud claim under Rule 9\(b\), SOC's argument is rejected. As UCC maintains, the "Complaint adequately describes the misrepresentations at issue and explains that they were made [**39] for the purpose of concealing from UCC the excessive profitability [*1136] of the catalyst business." UCC Opp. Mem. (SOC/SPC) at 18; see also summary of fraud claim in Part IV.A., supra. Because the Complaint provides SOC with sufficient notice of its alleged misrepresentations to enable it to present a defense (and because, as discussed above, UCC has adequately pled reliance damages and the claim is not subsumed by the breach of contract claims), the motion to dismiss Count I is denied.

V. Count XIII: Breach by SOC of the Implied Duty of Good Faith and Fair Dealing With Respect to the CUA and Catalyst Sales Contract

SOC asks the Court to dismiss Count XIII on several grounds, at least one of which is persuasive. SOC contends that UCC's claim for breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing is duplicative of its claims for breach of contract. Despite UCC's argument to the contrary, and notwithstanding its careful pleading of the claim,<sup>9</sup> the conduct alleged in Count XIII to constitute a breach of the covenant (Cplt. PP 296-97) is the same as that which forms the basis of UCC's breach of contract claims (see, e.g., Cplt. PP 271, 285). "Under New York law, HN9[<sup>1</sup>] [**40] parties to an express contract are bound by an implied duty of good faith;" however, "breach of that duty is merely a breach of the underlying contract." Fasolino Foods Co. v. Banca Nazionale del Lavoro, 961 F.2d 1052, 1056 \(2d Cir. 1992\); see also Apfel v. Prudential-Bache Sec., Inc., 183 A.D.2d 439, 583 N.Y.S.2d 386, 387 (1st Dep't 1992), modified on other grounds and aff'd, 81 N.Y.2d 470, 616 N.E.2d 1095, 600 N.Y.S.2d 433 (1993). Because it is redundant of UCC's breach of contract claims, Count XIII is dismissed.<sup>10</sup>

VI. Count VII: Tortious Interference with an Existing Contractual Relationship

In its claim for tortious interference with an existing contractual relationship, UCC implicates all defendants [**41] except SOC, SPC, Montell N.V., Montell Polyolefins and Technipol. The remaining defendants are charged with inducing SOC to breach its contract with UCC for the production of polypropylene resin and the licensing of polypropylene technology. Cplt. PP 259-263. Each defendant charged in this Count has moved to dismiss the claim. See Montedison/Technipol Mem. at 15; Shell/Montell Mem. at 18. In New York, HN10[<sup>1</sup>] in order to state a claim for tortious interference with contract, a plaintiff must allege four elements: (1) the existence of a valid contract between the plaintiff and a third party; (2) defendant's knowledge of the contract; (3) defendant's intentional inducement of the third party to breach the contract or otherwise render performance impossible; and (4) damages to plaintiff. Kronos, Inc. v. AVX Corp., 81 N.Y.2d 90, 94, 595 N.Y.S.2d 931, 612 N.E.2d 289 (1993) (citing Israel v. Wood Dolson Co., 1 N.Y.2d 116, 151 N.Y.S.2d 1, 134 N.E.2d 97 (1956)); Enercomp, Inc. v. McCorhill Publishing,

---

<sup>9</sup> UCC alleges breach of the implied duty "to the extent such conduct does not breach express provisions of the CUA" or the Catalyst Sales Contract. Cplt. PP 296-97.

<sup>10</sup> SOC raises two other grounds for dismissing this Count. Because I am granting the motion to dismiss Count XIII, there is no reason to address SOC's additional contentions.

Inc., 873 F.2d 536 (2d Cir. 1989). Defendants contend that UCC has not properly alleged the second and third elements.

A. Does the Complaint Allege that Defendants' Interference was [**42] Knowing and Intentional?

Montedison argues that UCC must allege that Montedison acted for the primary purpose of inducing a breach, or with the knowledge that its actions were certain or substantially certain to induce a breach of contract. Montedison/Technipol Mem. at 17 (citing Restatement (Second) of Torts, § 766 cmt. j (1979)). In addition, Montedison argues that there is no allegation that it knew the details of SOC's contractual relationship with UCC. Id. at 19. However, UCC is not required to allege that Montedison had full knowledge of the details of the UCC/Shell Venture. Gold Medal Farms, Inc. v. Rutland County Co-operative Creamery, Inc., 9 A.D.2d 473, 195 N.Y.S.2d 179, 185 (3d Dep't 1959). Moreover, Montedison's arguments ignore the many factual allegations [*1137] in the Complaint. Paragraphs 95-109 of the Complaint sufficiently describe Montedison's efforts to effect "a 'programmed divorce' between UCC and Shell, [thereby] weakening the image and credibility of UCC -- Montedison's most 'aggressive and dreadful' Total Package License competitor . . ." Cplt. P 109. These allegations, incorporated by reference into Count VII (see Cplt. P 259), provide ample support [**43] for the inference that Montedison either knew that its actions were certain or substantially certain to induce a breach by SOC of its contracts with UCC, or acted with the primary purpose of inducing a breach. Further, these allegations and others belie Montedison's claim that UCC relies on a "bare legal conclusion." See Cplt. PP 142-44, 161-95.

B. Does the Complaint Allege that SOC Breached a Contract?

The Shell/Montell defendants also contend that UCC's pleading is deficient, primarily because Count VII contains an allegation that the defendants "rendered [SOC's] performance of its contractual obligations more difficult." Cplt. P 261; Shell/Montell Mem. at 18-19. These defendants argue that a plaintiff suing for tortious interference with contract must allege "defendant's intentional inducement of the third party to breach the contract or otherwise render performance impossible." Shell/Montell Mem. at 18-19 (citing Museum Boutique Intercontinental, Ltd. v. Picasso, 886 F. Supp. 1155, 1161 (S.D.N.Y. 1995)). However, as Museum Boutique makes clear, while a number of New York courts (as well as federal courts in New York interpreting New York law) have held that [**44] a plaintiff must allege actual breach, "other courts have held that a plaintiff does not have to allege a breach of the underlying contract in order to state a claim for tortious interference with contractual relations." Museum Boutique, 886 F. Supp. at 1161-62 (collecting cases). In any event, as UCC suggests, the distinction is irrelevant to the disposition of this motion. UCC pleads, in relevant part, that "the defendants . . . intentionally and wrongfully induced SOC to breach its contractual obligations to UCC . . . and/or rendered [SOC's] performance of its contractual obligations more difficult . . ." Cplt. P 261 (emphasis added). Because the first half of UCC's alternative pleading meets the "actual breach" standard, I need not decide whether an allegation that performance under a contract has been made more difficult still suffices to state a claim for tortious interference with contract in New York.<sup>11</sup>

[**45] C. Must UCC Allege Specific Actions by Defendants That Were a "But For" Cause of the Breach?

Montedison further argues that UCC has alleged no specific acts of Montedison without which SOC would not have breached its contracts with UCC. Montedison contends that UCC's claim that it "intentionally and wrongfully induced [SOC] to breach its contractual obligations to UCC" (Cplt. P 261) is "devoid of any allegation of conduct by <sup>11</sup> Thus I specifically decline to address the import in this case of the recent ruling of the New York Court of Appeals, which held that an actual breach of contract is required (or at least a showing that performance is rendered impossible) in order to state a claim of interference with existing contractual relations. See NBT Bancorp Inc. v. Fleet/Norstar Financial Group, Inc., 87 N.Y.2d 614, 620-21, 641 N.Y.S.2d 581, 664 N.E.2d 492 (1996).

Further, despite the request of Shell/Montell, I decline to require UCC to replead this count in order to specify "what allegations relate to actual breaches of contract that it claims were caused by interference from the defendants." Shell/Montell Reply at 10. Instead, I refer the Shell/Montell defendants to Paragraphs 131-55 and 271 of the Complaint.

Montedison resulting in such inducement or any allegation as to how Montedison induced SOC to breach its contractual obligations to UCC." Montedison/Technipol Mem. at 20. Montedison is incorrect. UCC's Complaint alleges plenty of specific conduct by Montedison. See, e.g., Cplt. P 106 ("Montedison . . . contacted RDS and [SOC] and proposed combining their respective polyolefins businesses into a worldwide venture that would necessarily weaken competition from UCC . . ."); P 107 ("Beginning in July 1991, representatives of RDS, [SOC], and Montedison met . . . to discuss and negotiate a possible venture . . ."); P 109 ("a senior [*1138] Montedison executive . . . informed the lead Montedison negotiator . . . involved in the proposed Sophia joint venture [**46] discussions that the combination of RDS, [SOC], and Montedison would lead to a 'programmed divorce' between UCC and [SOC], weakening the image and credibility of UCC . . .").

In addition, Montedison contends that UCC's claim is deficient because it does not allege that "there would not have been a breach but for the activities of defendants." Montedison/Technipol Mem. at 20 n.11 (quoting Sharma v. Skaarup Ship Management Corp., 916 F.2d 820, 828 (2d Cir. 1990), cert. denied, 499 U.S. 907, 113 L. Ed. 2d 218, 111 S. Ct. 1109 (1991)). While Sharma does contain the quoted language, a complete reading of the case suggests that the tortious interference claim was dismissed not because of plaintiff's failure to include particular language in its allegation, but rather because plaintiff's stated theory of the case (that the breach of contract was motivated by profit) was "incompatible with an allegation of 'but for' cause as to" the defendant. Sharma, 916 F.2d at 828. No such incompatibility exists in the instant case. Furthermore, several recent decisions from New York state courts addressing tortious interference with existing contractual relations make no mention [**47] of any requirement that explicit "but for" language is necessary to withstand a motion to dismiss. See, e.g., *Lama Holding Co. v. Smith Barney Inc.*, 88 N.Y.2d 413, 668 N.E.2d 1370, 646 N.Y.S.2d 76, No. 144, 1996 WL 326108, at *5 (N.Y. Ct. App. June 13, 1996); *Washington Ave. Assocs., Inc. v. Euclid Equip., Inc.*, 645 N.Y.S.2d 511, No. 95-05544, 1996 WL 410046, at *1 (2d Dep't July 15, 1996); *M.J. & K. Co. v. Matthew Bender and Co.*, 220 A.D.2d 488, 631 N.Y.S.2d 938, 940 (2d Dep't 1995).

A recent case from a district court in this circuit is similar and instructive. In Lane's Floor Coverings, Inc. v. Ardex, Inc., No. CV-95-4078, 1996 WL 19182 (E.D.N.Y. Jan. 4, 1996), the defendant moved to dismiss plaintiff's claim for tortious interference with contract "because plaintiff neglected to allege that, 'but for' the actions of the defendant, the third party would have performed under its agreement with plaintiff." 1996 WL 19182 at *3. Noting that "HN11" [↑] a *Rule 12\(b\)\(6\)* motion requires assuming facts in a light most favorable to the claimant," the court held that Plaintiff properly alleges . . . that at some point following [the formation of the] agreement, the defendant knowingly interfered with that relationship and improperly [**48] induced [the third party] to breach its agreement with plaintiff. In substance, if not literally, plaintiff's complaint charges that, but for the actions of [defendant], [the third party] would not have breached its contract with plaintiff. Further, the language of the [claim] comports with the most recent pronouncement on the subject by the New York Court of Appeals.

Id. (citing *Kronos*, 81 N.Y.2d at 94). That analysis applies with equal force to the instant case. Taken together, and drawing all reasonable inferences in UCC's favor, the allegations of the Complaint clearly charge that SOC would not have breached its contractual obligations to UCC but for specific acts of interference by the defendants. See Cplt. PP 84-109, 117, 161-212, 234-58. For that reason, and for the reasons described in Parts VI.A. and VI.B., supra, the motion to dismiss Count VII is denied.<sup>12</sup>

<sup>12</sup> The Shell/Montell defendants also argue that UCC's purchase of the assets of SPC at 85% of fair market value (as determined by an independent appraiser) has eliminated any damage claimed by UCC as a result of SOC's assignment of and withdrawal from the CUA. Shell/Montell Mem. at 19; see also Cplt. P 271(g) (alleging breach by SOC through its purported assignment of the CUA). Shell/Montell suggests that UCC's allegation that it bought the assets of SPC "in part to mitigate UCC's damages" limits the amount of damages to which UCC is entitled for Count VII. See Cplt. P 156. At this point, I note only that UCC has properly alleged the damage element of its claim for tortious interference with existing contractual relations. Id. P 263. While these damages may be limited by UCC's purchase of SPC's assets, they are not eliminated. It is premature at this stage of the litigation to attempt to assess damages for a claim that UCC has yet to prove, and I decline to do so.

[**49] VII. Count VIII: Tortious Interference with Prospective Contractual Relationships

In its claim for tortious interference with prospective contractual relationships, UCC [*1139] implicates all defendants except SPC, Montell N.V., Montell Polyolefins and Technipol. The remaining defendants are charged with taking actions with the purpose and effect of preventing

(1) potential licensees of the UNIPOL/SHAC technology from contracting with the UCC/Shell Venture; (2) UCC and [SOC] from expanding the UCC/Shell Venture through Project Nautilus or otherwise; (3) RDS from utilizing UNIPOL technology in new RDS polypropylene facilities; and (4) Shell Canada from utilizing UNIPOL technology in new Shell Canada polypropylene facilities.

Cplt. P 265. Each defendant charged in this Count urges dismissal of the claim on several grounds.

A. Statute of Limitations

Defendants argue that the statute of limitations bars most of UCC's claim for tortious interference with prospective contractual relations. All parties agree that the statute of limitations applicable to this claim is three years. See N.Y. Civ. Prac. L. & R. 214\(4\) (McKinney 1990); UCC Opp. Mem. (Montedison/Technipol) [***50] at 11; Shell/Montell Mem. at 15; Montedison/Technipol Mem. at 6. Defendants' arguments are aimed specifically at parts (2), (3) and (4) of UCC's claim; that is, the parts of the claim relating to the proposed expansion of the UCC/Shell Venture through Nautilus and the potential usage of UNIPOL technology in new RDS and Shell Canada polypropylene facilities.

1. Expansion through Nautilus

Defendants maintain that UCC's claim regarding the decision not to expand the UCC/Shell Venture through Nautilus accrued at the latest in December 1991, when SOC "notified UCC that it was terminating the Project Nautilus discussions." Cplt. P 110. But according to UCC, SOC (along with subsidiaries of RDS and Montedison) entered into a letter of intent and a secrecy agreement in December 1991, and thus did not tell UCC at that time that Montedison's and RDS' interference with Nautilus was the reason for terminating the discussions. Id. UCC therefore contends that its claim did not accrue until August 1992, when SOC "obliquely informed UCC that SOC had been lured away from Project Nautilus by overtures made by Montedison and RDS to combine their (and certain SOC) [polypropylene] assets in [***51] Project Sophia." UCC Opp. Mem. (Montedison/Technipol) at 12 (citing Cplt. P 119).

UCC correctly points out that "HN12 [↑] the limitation period is tolled during a defendant's fraudulent concealment of facts that would alert the plaintiff to the plaintiff's claim." Johnson v. Nyack Hosp., 891 F. Supp. 155, 164 (S.D.N.Y. 1995), aff'd, 86 F.3d 8 \(2d Cir. 1996\). Assuming the truth of UCC's allegations, Defendants concealed from UCC, until August 1992, the facts that would alert UCC that it had a claim for tortious interference with prospective contractual relations. However, this HN13 [↑] doctrine of equitable tolling is "subsumed within [CPLR] 203(g)." Glynwill, 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8262, *11, 1995 WL 362500, at *4. HN14 [↑] That statute provides, in relevant part, that where the time within which an action must be commenced is computed from the time when facts were discovered or from the time when facts could with reasonable diligence have been discovered, or from either of such times, the action must be commenced within two years after such actual or imputed discovery or within the period otherwise provided, computed from the time the cause of action accrued, whichever is longer.

N.Y. Civ. Prac. L. & R. 203\(g\) [***52] (McKinney Supp. 1996) (emphasis added). Therefore, "applicability of [the equitable tolling] doctrine cannot extend the limitations period beyond the two years prescribed by the statute." Glynwill, 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8262, *11, 1995 WL 362500, at *4; see also Cestaro v. Mackell, 429 F. Supp. 465, 468-69 (E.D.N.Y.), aff'd, 573 F.2d 1288 \(2d Cir. 1977\). UCC did not file its original complaint in this action until January 9, 1995. Therefore, whether the limitations period is calculated as three years from December 1991 or as two years from August 1992, UCC's claim as it relates to the expansion of the UCC/Shell Venture through Nautilus is time barred. Consequently, that portion of the claim is dismissed.

[*1140] 2. Prospective contract with Shell Canada

According to UCC, its claim with respect to Shell Canada (that Defendants' tortious interference resulted in Shell Canada's decision not to use UNIPOL technology in new polypropylene facilities in Canada) did not accrue until after July 30, 1992. On that date, SOC, RDS and Montedison entered into a Memorandum of Understanding which contemplated, among other things, that "Shell Canada would contribute its Sarnia polypropylene plant" to the "partial merger" [**53] of their worldwide polyolefins businesses into the Sophia Venture." Cplt. P 118. Defendants argue that even if July 1992 is the date of accrual (which they dispute), the claim is time barred because UCC did not raise the claim until filing its Third Amended Complaint on January 18, 1996. Further, Defendants argue, the claim does not relate back to UCC's original complaint (filed on January 9, 1995) under Fed. R. Civ. P. 15\(c\).<sup>13</sup> HN15[<sup>14</sup>] Rule 15\(c\)\(2\) provides that "an amendment of a pleading [**54] relates back to the date of the original pleading when . . . (2) the claim or defense asserted in the amended pleading arose out of the conduct, transaction, or occurrence set forth or attempted to be set forth in the original pleading . . . ." HN16[<sup>15</sup>] This rule is "to be liberally construed" (Siegel v. Converters Transp., Inc., 714 F.2d 213, 216 (2d Cir. 1983) (per curiam)), and the "principal inquiry is whether adequate notice of the matters raised in the amended pleading has been given to the opposing party 'by the general fact situation alleged in the original pleading.'" In re Chaus Sec. Litig., 801 F. Supp. 1257, 1264 (S.D.N.Y. 1992) (quoting Contemporary Mission, Inc. v. New York Times Co., 665 F. Supp. 248, 255 (S.D.N.Y. 1987), aff'd, 842 F.2d 612 (2d Cir.), cert. denied sub nom. O'Reilly v. New York Times Co., 488 U.S. 856, 102 L. Ed. 2d 117, 109 S. Ct. 145 (1988)).

UCC's tortious interference claim regarding the decision of Shell Canada not to use the UNIPOL/SHAC technology at its Sarnia polypropylene facility relates back to UCC's Original Complaint of January 9, 1995. The original complaint in this action contained a claim for tortious interference with prospective [**55] contractual relationships, albeit a claim that did not specifically allege interference with a prospective contract between UCC and Shell Canada. See Orig. Cplt. PP 178-84. However, "HN17[<sup>16</sup>] there is no requirement that the new claim must have been asserted in the original pleading. A single transaction or occurrence can give rise to numerous claims." Koal Indus. Corp. v. Asland, S.A., 808 F. Supp. 1143, 1158 (S.D.N.Y. 1992). Such is the case here. In its original complaint, UCC alleged that "by agreeing to support and/or participate in the Shell/Himont Joint Venture, the defendants have intentionally and improperly, without legal excuse or justification, interfered with UCC's prospective contractual relationships involving licensing of the UNIPOL/SHAC technology." Orig. Cplt. P 179. This allegation, along with the portions of the complaint describing the Shell/Himont Joint Venture (see generally Orig. Cplt. PP 48-95), set forth the general fact situation sufficiently to provide Defendants "adequate notice of the matters raised in the amended pleading." See Chaus Sec. Litig., 801 F. Supp. at 1264.

3. Prospective contract with RDS

The analysis of whether the portion of [**56] the tortious interference claim regarding RDS' decision not to use UNIPOL technology in new polypropylene facilities is time barred is similar to the above analysis regarding Shell Canada. As with Shell Canada, I find that the claim for tortious interference with a prospective contract with RDS relates back to UCC's Original Complaint. However, the Complaint is unclear as to when UCC alleges it incurred the RDS injury--that is, when RDS told UCC it had decided not to use UNIPOL technology in its new polypropylene facilities.

[*1141] According to UCC, RDS had contemplated the use of UNIPOL technology for some time. A 1987 Strategy Update for RDS stated that the preferred process for new RDS plants was UNIPOL. Cplt. P 80. In November 26, 1990, it was recommended to the RDS Coordinators Meeting that RDS commission a new UNIPOL plant in Berre, France at the end of 1994. Id. P 81. Further, in July 1991, a report to RDS management observed that a gas phase process such as UNIPOL might be selected over RDS' proprietary earlier generation process for the future production of homopolymer. Id. P 82.

---

<sup>13</sup> Defendants contend that the claim accrued in January 1992, when Shell Canada "informed UCC . . . that it was deferring a UNIPOL licensing decision, and committed to participation in the Sophia discussions." Cplt. P 113. However, I need not decide this issue, because the relation-back issue is dispositive. If the claim, raised in January 1996, does not relate back to the Original Complaint, it must have accrued no earlier than January 1993. Thus it would be time barred whether January or July 1992 is used as the date of accrual.

At some point, this tide in favor of UNIPOL turned. In December 1991, SOC and subsidiaries [**57] of RDS and Montedison entered into a letter of intent and a secrecy agreement in connection with Project Sophia. Cplt. P 110. UCC also asserts that the existence of these agreements was not disclosed to UCC, but that RDS did not engage in further discussions with UCC regarding UNIPOL licensing after the agreements were signed.<sup>14</sup> Id. Although UCC alleges that Shell Canada told UCC in January 1992 that it was "deferring a UNIPOL licensing decision" (id. P 113), UCC makes no corresponding allegation regarding RDS. On July 30, 1992, SOC, Montedison and RDS entered into a Memorandum of Understanding addressing the "partial merger" of their worldwide polyolefins businesses into the Sophia venture" but did not disclose this fact to UCC. Id. P 118. Disclosure came a few days later. On August 5, 1992, SOC told UCC that RDS and Montedison were discussing proposals for a joint venture. Id. P 119. On September 17, 1992, "RDS and Montedison announced that they had signed a Memorandum of Understanding to evaluate worldwide integration of their polyolefins businesses, and associated feedstock and technology activities, into a new jointly owned enterprise." Id. P 124.

[**58] Given this sequence of events, I conclude that UCC's claim accrued in August 1992, when UCC learned through SOC that RDS and Montedison were discussing a possible joint venture. That appears to be the earliest that UCC was put on notice that RDS would most likely not enter into new contracts with it to license UNIPOL technology. Using August 1992 as the date of accrual, UCC would have to file a claim for tortious interference with prospective contractual relations with RDS by August 1995. Since I have already held that UCC's claim in its Third Amended Complaint relates back to the original complaint of January 1995, UCC's claim regarding prospective RDS contracts is not time barred.

B. Does the Complaint Allege Prospective Contractual Relationships?

1. Standard

Defendants next argue that UCC's claim should be dismissed because it does not sufficiently allege any prospective contractual relationships with which Defendants interfered. In New York, HN18↑ this tort is recognized "'where a party would have received a contract but for" a defendant's interference. Gertler v. Goodgold, 107 A.D.2d 481, 487 N.Y.S.2d 565, 572 (1st Dep't), aff'd, 66 N.Y.2d 946, 498 N.Y.S.2d 779, I**591 489 N.E.2d 748 (1985) (quoting Union Car Advertising Co. v. Collier, 263 N.Y. 386, 401, 189 N.E. 463 (1934)) (emphasis in original); see also Robbins v. Ogden Corp., 490 F. Supp. 801, 811 (S.D.N.Y. 1980). Although the "would have received the contract" test is a strict one (see Optivision, Inc. v. Syracuse Shopping Ctr. Assocs., 472 F. Supp. 665, 685 (N.D.N.Y. 1979)), the tort extends to "mere negotiations." Morse v. Swank, Inc., 459 F. Supp. 660, 667 (S.D.N.Y. 1978) (citing Union Car Advertising, 263 N.Y. at 401). It is not necessary to show that negotiations for the prospective contract had reached the conclusive stage. See Williams & Co. v. Collins, Tuttle and Co., 6 A.D.2d 302, 176 N.Y.S.2d 99, 104 (1st Dep't 1958), [*1142] appeal denied, 5 N.Y.2d 710 (1959).

However, case law is in conflict regarding the precise nature of the test. Some courts have held that a plaintiff's allegations must reflect a greater likelihood than "being reasonably certain" or "having a reasonable expectation" of receiving a contract. See C.E.D. Mobilephone Communications, Inc. v. Harris Corp., 1985-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P66,386, 81 Civ. 4651, 1985 WL 193, at *8 (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 14, 1985); Optivision, 472 I**601 F. Supp. at 685; Williams, 176 N.Y.S.2d at 104. By contrast, other courts have stated that claims of tortious interference with business relations may be sustained where "the plaintiff had a 'reasonable expectancy' of a contract with the third party." Strapex Corp. v. Metaverpa N.V., 607 F. Supp. 1047, 1050 (S.D.N.Y. 1985); see also Davidcraft Corp. v. Danu Int'l, Inc., 1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9270, *9, 90 Civ. 6578, 1992 WL 162997, at *4 (S.D.N.Y. June 24, 1992) (while "earlier cases hold that the plaintiff must prove that it 'would have received the contract' but for the interference . . . some later cases, however, appear to have adopted the less stringent 'reasonable certainty,' or 'reasonable expectation' test") (internal citations omitted); All Boys Music, Ltd. v. DeGroot, 1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS

<sup>14</sup> The Shell/Montell defendants contend that "according to UCC, . . . the Shell defendants ceased all 'further UNIPOL licensing discussions with UCC' in December 1991." Shell/Montell Mem. at 16. This phrasing is somewhat disingenuous, in that it implies that RDS told UCC in December 1991 that it [RDS] was ceasing licensing discussions. UCC actually alleges that "RDS and Shell Canada also did not pursue any further UNIPOL licensing discussions with UCC after the Letter of Intent was signed in December 1991." Cplt. P 110.

2780, *29, 89 Civ. 8258, 1992 WL 51502, at *9 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 9, 1992); Morse, 459 F. Supp. at 667 (tortious interference claims viable where plaintiff has "a reasonable expectancy of a contract"). In any event, it is clear that the requirements for establishing liability for interference with prospective contractual relations are "more demanding" than those for interference with performance of an existing contract. Guard-Life Corp. v. S. Parker Hardware Mfg. Corp., 50 N.Y.2d 183, 191, 428 N.Y.S.2d 628, 406 N.E.2d 445 (1980).

2. Shell Canada

Recognizing the strictness of this standard, I cannot say that UCC has met the requirements for pleading tortious interference with prospective contractual relations with Shell Canada. UCC alleges only that Shell Canada "concluded that . . . a new low cost UNIPOL plant would provide Shell Canada with a competitive facility" (Cplt. P 91); that Shell Canada conducted a study of the feasibility of constructing a new polypropylene plant at its Sarnia site using UNIPOL technology (id.); that Shell Canada "was exploring taking a UNIPOL license . . . for a new 120,000 ton polypropylene plant in Sarnia, Ontario scheduled to become operational in 1995 . . ." (id. P 113); and that Shell Canada "remained interested in taking a UNIPOL license for a new polypropylene plant . . . into late 1991" (id.). These allegations do not form a sufficient basis for concluding that but for Defendants' interference, Shell Canada was reasonably certain (let alone more than reasonably certain) to have entered into a UNIPOL licensing agreement for its Sarnia plant.

3. RDS

By [**62] contrast, I find that UCC's allegations regarding its prospective contractual relations with RDS suffice to state a claim. As detailed in Part VII.A.3., supra, UCC alleges that in 1987, an RDS Strategy Update stated that UNIPOL was the preferred process for new RDS plants. Cplt. P 80. In 1990, RDS received a recommendation that it commission a new UNIPOL plant in Berre, France at the end of 1994. Id. P 81. A July 1991 report stated that a gas phase process such as UNIPOL might be selected over RDS' proprietary earlier generation process for the future production of homopolymer. Id. P 82. Finally, an August 1991 RDS Polypropylene Technology Review stated that "the choice of UNIPOL gas phase technology . . . was made several years ago and was supported by an update comparison with other gas phase technologies, which demonstrated that RDS had 'no need' for other process technologies." Cplt. P 115. That Review also "recommended strengthening cooperation with UCC in the context of the UNIPOL license." Id.

These specific allegations allow the Court to infer that RDS was reasonably certain to have entered into UNIPOL licensing agreements with UCC for future polypropylene [**63] plants. I adopt the reasoning of those cases applying a "reasonable certainty" test, and I find that UCC has met that test with respect to the prospective licensing agreement with RDS. See Crimpers Promotions, Inc. v. Home Box Office, Inc., 554 F. Supp. 838, 850 (S.D.N.Y. 1982), aff'd, 724 F.2d 290 (2d Cir. 1983), cert. denied, 467 U.S. 1252, 82 L. Ed. 2d 841, 104 S. Ct. 3536 (1984) ("while . . . HN19 [↑] 'mere anticipation' of a contract is not sufficient to make out a proper claim for interference with prospective business relations, [citing Optivision], we cannot say at this early point in the proceedings that plaintiff could not prove facts alleged in its complaint that would show a high degree of likelihood that such contracts would have been entered into but for defendants' arguably unlawful actions"); Smith v. Emlan Realty Corp., 56 A.D.2d 887, 392 N.Y.S.2d 668, 669 (2d Dep't 1977) ("HN20 [↑] plaintiff must show more than a qualified probability" of completing the contract, but need not "plead, in exact detail, the circumstances which, on a trial, would prove that success would have been inevitable but for the tortious acts of defendants").

4. Third-party licensees

[**64] The final component of UCC's tortious interference claim--that Defendants' interference prevented potential licensees of the UNIPOL/SHAC technology from contracting with the UCC/Shell Venture--suffers from two defects. First, the claim is deficient because UCC does not identify any particular potential licensee or set of negotiations with which it claims Defendants interfered. See El Greco Leather Prods. Co. v. Shoe World, Inc., 623 F. Supp. 1038, 1044 (E.D.N.Y. 1985), aff'd, 806 F.2d 392 (2d Cir. 1986), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 817, 98 L. Ed. 2d 34, 108 S.

Ct. 71 (1987).<sup>15</sup> The second defect, perhaps resulting from the first, is that UCC has not "alleged facts sufficient for the Court to infer" that contractual relationships would have been (or even are reasonably certain to have been) consummated with any potential licensees. See Riddell Sports Inc. v. Brooks, 872 F. Supp. 73, 79 (S.D.N.Y. 1995). Accordingly, the portion of Count VIII relating to potential third-party licensees of the UNIPOL/SHAC technology is dismissed.

[**65] C. Does the Complaint Allege an Act of Interference by Montedison?

Montedison also argues that UCC has failed to allege any specific action by Montedison that interfered with UCC's prospective contractual relationship with RDS.<sup>16</sup> However, UCC's Complaint is replete with such allegations. See Cplt. PP 95-110, 179. The Complaint sufficiently alleges efforts by Montedison to create a joint venture with RDS and SOC while knowing that such a venture would interfere with UCC's prospective relations with RDS.

D. Does the Complaint Allege Improper Interference by Montedison?

Finally, Montedison contends that even if UCC has alleged that it interfered with [**66] UCC's prospective contractual relations, it has not alleged that such interference was improper. Under New York law, HN21 [↑] a plaintiff must allege the defendant's interference with prospective business relations "either with the sole purpose of harming the plaintiff or by means that are 'dishonest, unfair or in any other way improper.'" PPX Enters., Inc. v. Audiofidelity Enter., 818 F.2d 266, 269 (2d Cir. 1987) (quoting Martin Ice Cream Co. v. Chipwich, Inc., 554 F. Supp. 933, 945 (S.D.N.Y. 1983)); see also Della Pietra v. State, 125 A.D.2d 936, 510 N.Y.S.2d 334, 336 (4th Dep't), aff'd, 71 N.Y.2d 792, 530 N.Y.S.2d 510, 526 N.E.2d 1 (1988). "If the defendant's interference is intended, at least in part, to advance its own competing interests, the claim will fail unless the means employed include criminal or fraudulent conduct." PPX Enters., 818 F.2d at 269 (citations omitted).

UCC concedes that because it competes with "Montedison in the licensing of [polypropylene] technology and (through the UCC/Shell Venture) in the manufacture of [polypropylene] resins, . . . Montedison's actions vis-a-vis RDS/SOC and the formation of [*1144] Montell were taken, at least in part, to advance [**67] Montedison's own competing interests." UCC Opp. Mem. (Montedison/Technipol) at 20. Therefore UCC must allege that Montedison used criminal or fraudulent means to interfere. UCC has alleged just such conduct in its claims of antitrust violations (Counts III-VI, discussed in Parts X and XI, infra). See Anti-Monopoly, Inc. v. Hasbro, Inc., 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8822, *19, 94 Civ. 2120, 1995 WL 380300, at *7 (S.D.N.Y. June 27, 1995) (denying motion to dismiss tortious interference claim because "almost the entire Complaint [was] devoted to allegations that [defendant] has been violating, and continued to violate, the Sherman Antitrust Act, a federal criminal statute. If [plaintiff] can prove that [defendant] has violated the antitrust acts, such conduct should be sufficiently criminal to constitute the predicate required for the tort of tortious interference.") (citation omitted); cf. Commodore Business Machs., Inc. v. Montgomery Grant Inc., 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 262, *8, 90 Civ. 7498, 1993 WL 14503, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 13, 1993) ("In this case, [counterclaiming plaintiff] has asserted valid antitrust claims which provide the unlawful purpose and unjustifiable cause element of its claim of tortious interference with contract").

[**68] I therefore hold that UCC has sufficiently alleged improper interference by Montedison. The motion to dismiss UCC's claim for tortious interference with prospective contractual relations is granted in part and denied in part. The components of the claim relating to the expansion of the UCC/Shell Venture through Project Nautilus and relating to prospective contractual relations with potential third-party licensees and with Shell Canada are dismissed. The component of the claim relating to prospective contractual relations with RDS survives.

<sup>15</sup> Volvo North America Corp. v. Men's Int'l Professional Tennis Council, 857 F.2d 55, 74 (2d Cir. 1988), lends no support to UCC. In that case, the complaint actually named third parties who plaintiff alleged were sent letters by defendant that denigrated the plaintiff.

<sup>16</sup> Actually, Montedison makes this argument (and the next one) in opposition to UCC's entire claim for tortious interference with prospective contractual relations. Because I have already dismissed all of the claim except as it relates to prospective contractual relations with RDS, I will apply Montedison's arguments only to that remaining portion.

VIII. Count X: Breach of CUA by Shell Defendants Other Than SOC and SPC

The Shell/Montell defendants move to dismiss Count X on the ground that they are not parties to the CUA between SOC and UCC. Further, they contend that they should not be liable for any breach of the CUA under an alter ego theory. In support of its claim, UCC urges this Court to pierce the corporate veil that protects the Shell/Montell defendants from liability for the actions of their subsidiary, SOC.<sup>17</sup> The parties agree that Delaware law governs this issue because SOC is a Delaware corporation. Shell/Montell Mem. at 12 n.15; UCC Opp. Mem. (Shell/Montell) at 20. [**69]

HN22 [↑] In order to state an alter ego claim under Delaware law, a plaintiff must plead that the parent and subsidiary "operated as a single economic entity," and "must demonstrate an overall element of injustice or unfairness." Fletcher v. Atex, Inc., 68 F.3d 1451, 1458 (2d Cir. 1995) (applying Delaware law). Where "a subsidiary is in fact a mere instrumentality or alter ego of its owner," "a court can pierce the corporate veil." Geyer v. Ingersoll Publications Co., [**70] 621 A.2d 784, 793 (Del. Ch. 1992). Plaintiff must show that "the owners exercised complete domination of the corporation in respect to the transaction attacked." Morris v. New York State Dep't of Taxation and Finance, 82 N.Y.2d 135, 141, 603 N.Y.S.2d 807, 623 N.E.2d 1157 (1993). In this case, UCC alleges that SOC "has been dominated and controlled by its parent, Shell Petroleum [Inc.], and by other RDS Group affiliates . . . acting in coordination." Cplt. P 274. UCC pleads that in connection with the allegedly unlawful formation of Montell, these companies "caused or directed [SOC] to breach its contractual commitments to UCC under the CUA or otherwise to take actions harmful to UCC," in addition to using SOC "to achieve their own otherwise unlawful business interests and subordinating the business interests of [SOC] to their own." Id.

To be sure, HN23 [↑] a conclusory allegation of domination or control is not enough to justify [*1145] piercing the corporate veil. Courts have identified several factors relevant in determining whether a parent and a subsidiary operate as a single economic entity. Those factors include whether the corporation was solvent and adequately capitalized, whether [**71] corporate formalities were observed, and whether the corporation functioned in general "as a facade for the dominant shareholder." Fletcher, 68 F.3d at 1458 (quoting Hanco Nat'l Ins. Co. v. Green Farms, Inc., No. CIV. A. 1331, 1989 WL 110537, at *5 (Del. Ch. Sept. 19, 1989)). However, Defendants have cited no decision holding that the absence of allegations of specific Fletcher factors justifies granting a motion to dismiss where the plaintiff has made other relevant allegations.

In this case, UCC has made numerous other allegations that support its assertion that the Shell/Montell defendants dominated SOC and forced SOC to act contrary to its own interests. For example, UCC alleges that SOC discontinued discussions regarding expansion of the UCC/Shell Venture through Project Nautilus in order to further the interests of RDS. Cplt PP 132, 274. In addition, in 1992 SOC reduced its research and development expenditures by approximately thirty percent, and reduced the number of SOC staff assigned to polypropylene research and development by ten percent. Id. P 144. In 1994, SOC officials testified before the European Commission that SOC was "neither an advocate nor an [**72] adversary of the proposed merger," despite the fact that Montell posed competitive harm to SOC. Id. PP 149, 151, 105-22. SOC also offered to take other steps to the detriment of the UCC/Shell Venture, including terminating its relationship with UCC, in order to allow the Montell transaction to be approved by the EC. Id. P 151; see also id. PP 87, 111, 153-55. These assertions constitute sufficient allegations by UCC that the Shell/Montell defendants and SOC operated as a single economic entity, and preclude a dismissal of this claim. See In re Buckhead America Corp., 178 Bankr. 956, 975 (D. Del. 1994) ("the nature and extent of the dominion and control exercised by [defendants] over [their subsidiary] is a question of fact, not subject to resolution on a motion to dismiss) (internal quotation omitted); Geyer, 621 A.2d at 793 (denying motion to dismiss where "three examples [of alleged domination] provided sufficiently specific factual allegations to support plaintiff's" alter ego claim); Mabon, Nugent & Co. v. Texas Am. Energy Corp., 1990 Del. Ch. LEXIS 46, Civ.

<sup>17</sup> SOC is a wholly-owned subsidiary of Shell Petroleum Inc., and is a member of the Royal Dutch Shell (RDS) Group. That group also includes Shell Petroleum Inc., Shell Petroleum N.V., The Shell Petroleum Co. Ltd., Shell International Chemical Co. Ltd., Shell International Research Maatschappij B.V., and Shell Canada Limited. The RDS Group is controlled directly or indirectly by Royal Dutch Petroleum (60%) and the Shell Transport and Trading Co. (40%). These two entities also together own a fifty percent interest in Montell. See Cplt. PP 14-24.

A. No. 8578, 1990 WL 44267, at *5 (Del. Ch. Apr. 12, 1990) (issues of material fact with respect to plaintiffs' veil-piercing [**73] theory precluded summary judgment on claim that subsidiary was instrumentality of its parent).

Similarly, UCC also sufficiently alleges an overall element of unfairness and injustice. Before entering into the CUA, UCC was assured by SOC executives that SOC "operated independently from RDS." Cplt. P 131. Under the CUA, UCC and SOC agreed to use "their best reasonable efforts" to carry out the Cooperative Undertaking." See Cplt. P 62; CUA Articles 1.12(c)(iii), 2.01, 2.03. UCC shared "confidential and proprietary information and know-how" with SOC in order to further the UCC/Shell Venture, based on these assurances that SOC would act in its own economic interests. See Cplt. P 278, 323. It would be unfair to allow the Shell/Montell defendants to use their subsidiary to shield themselves from liability, where they have heretofore ignored that subsidiary's "separate structure and . . . individual economic interests." UCC Opp. Mem. (Shell/Montell) at 22; see also United States v. Golden Acres, Inc., 702 F. Supp. 1097, 1106 \(D. Del. 1988\), aff'd, 879 F.2d 860 (3d Cir. 1989). Therefore, the motion to dismiss the claim for breach of the CUA by the Shell/Montell defendants is [**74] denied.<sup>18</sup>

[*1146] IX. Count XVII: Equitable Estoppel Against All RDS Defendants

UCC alleges that it relied to its detriment on representations by the RDS defendants to the effect that [SOC] was and would be operated and managed as a wholly independent and separate company vis-a-vis the rest of the RDS Group, that [SOC's] activities would [**75] be conducted in its own best interests, and that [SOC] would contract with one or more other members of the RDS Group only on terms that would be fair to [SOC].

Cplt. P 323. UCC now alleges that these representations were either false or misleading. Id. In its claim, UCC seeks to estop SOC from "relying on any contractual language for any other behavior on the part of UCC induced by the RDS Group's avowals of [SOC's] operational independence vis-a-vis the rest of the RDS Group with respect to the subject matter of the UCC/Shell Venture and related matters . . ." Id. P 324. The Shell/Montell defendants have moved to dismiss this claim.

Despite Defendants' argument to the contrary, HN24↑ estoppel may be pled as an affirmative cause of action.<sup>19</sup> [**77] Accordingly, UCC's claim will not be dismissed on the ground that estoppel is only available to bar a defendant from raising a defense. Defendants also invoke the parol evidence rule in support of their motion to dismiss this claim. "One of the oldest and most settled principles of New York law is that HN25↑ a party may not offer proof of prior oral statements to alter or refute the clear meaning of unambiguous terms of written, [**76] integrated contracts to which assent has voluntarily been given." Azuma N.V. v. Sinks, 646 F. Supp. 122, 127 \(S.D.N.Y. 1986\) (citations omitted). Defendants have identified no terms of the CUA which they contend conflict <sup>18</sup> Because I find that UCC has alleged facts sufficient to justify piercing the corporate veil, I need not address UCC's agency theory, which it advanced in its brief.

In addition, Shell/Montell urges dismissal of this Count as against Shell Canada because in Paragraph 274, UCC does not name Shell Canada in its listing of members of the RDS Group. However, UCC clearly implicates "RDS Group affiliates" in its claim, and does not state that its charge is limited to those affiliates it names in that paragraph. UCC specifically alleges that "Shell Canada is a member of the Royal Dutch Shell Group." Cplt. P 22. Accordingly, the claim against Shell Canada stands.

<sup>19</sup> See, e.g., K. Bell & Assocs., Inc. v. Lloyd's Underwriters, 827 F. Supp. 985, 989 \(S.D.N.Y. 1993\) (complaint stated affirmative claim for equitable estoppel); Lapkin v. Lapkin, 224 A.D.2d 199, 637 N.Y.S.2d 140, 140 (1st Dep't) (granting plaintiff leave to amend complaint "to add a cause of action for equitable estoppel"), appeal dismissed, 88 N.Y.2d 843, 644 N.Y.S.2d 689, 667 N.E.2d 339 \(1996\); Special Event Entertainment v. Rockefeller Center, Inc., 458 F. Supp. 72, 77 \(S.D.N.Y. 1978\) ("a claim based on the doctrine of equitable estoppel has been stated"); but see Chemical Bank v. City of Jamestown, 122 A.D.2d 530, 504 N.Y.S.2d 908, 909 (4th Dep't), appeal denied, 68 N.Y.2d 608 \(1986\) ('HN26↑ An estoppel does not originate a legal right; it merely forbids the denial of a right claimed otherwise to have arisen") (quoting Morrill Realty Corp. v. Rayon Holding Corp., 254 N.Y. 268, 275, 172 N.E. 494 \(1930\)); 57 N.Y. Jur. 2d Estoppel § 15 (1986) (same).

with the representations attributed to Defendants by UCC. Therefore, this is not a basis for dismissing UCC's claim for equitable estoppel.<sup>20</sup> If Defendants later seek dismissal of this claim upon a motion for summary judgment, I am confident that they will advise the Court of specific provisions of the CUA with which the oral representations allegedly conflict.

X. Count III: Violations of Section 1 of the Sherman Act in the Polypropylene Resin and Impact Co-Polymer Markets by All Defendants Except Montell N.V., Montell Polyolefins, Technipol and SPC

In Count III, UCC alleges that SOC's "actions in suspending and then terminating the proposed Project Nautilus venture with UCC in 1991" constituted "part of a collusive scheme . . . taken in furtherance of Montedison's and RDS' efforts to form an unlawful joint venture" which unreasonably restrains trade and commerce in two specific markets<sup>21</sup> in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act.<sup>22</sup> Cplt. P 235. Defendants argue [*1147] that this claim must be dismissed (1) because antitrust law imposes no substantive duty on producers to expand markets, and (2) because UCC suffered no damages, in that it does not assert that Defendants prevented UCC from expanding on its own. [**78]

A. Sufficiency of Claim of Anticompetitive Conduct

HN28 [↑] In order to state a claim under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must allege concerted action by two or more persons which unreasonably restrains interstate or foreign trade or commerce. Electronics Proprietary, [*79] Ltd. v. Medtronic, Inc., 687 F. Supp. 832, 837 (S.D.N.Y. 1988) (citing Oreck Corp. v. Whirlpool Corp., 639 F.2d 75, 78 (2d Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 1083, 70 L. Ed. 2d 618, 102 S. Ct. 639 (1981)). Plaintiff has met this requirement. In Count III, UCC alleges that beginning in 1991, Montedison and RDS conspired with SOC to terminate the planned "project Nautilus" expansion (and a 1994 UCC proposal to build a 200,000 ton UCC/SOC [polypropylene] plant) and to deter Shell Canada from investing in a new UNIPOL plant with the purpose and effect of restricting [polypropylene] resin output, reducing competition, and thereby raising prices, and that this conspiracy unreasonably restrained trade in the [polypropylene] Resin and Impact Co-Polymer Markets in North America in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act.

UCC Opp. Mem. (Shell/Montell) at 6 (citing Cplt. PP 105-17, 196-212, 234-37). UCC has properly pled facts which, if proven, would entitle it to relief. See, e.g., Associated Press v. United States, 326 U.S. 1, 15, 89 L. Ed. 2013, 65 S. Ct. 1416 (1945); K.M.B. Warehouse Distrib., Inc. v. Walker Mfg. Co., 61 F.3d 123, 129 (2d Cir. 1995) (**80) (adverse effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market includes reduced output); Consolidated Gold Fields PLC v. Minorco, S.A., 871 F.2d 252, 257-58 (2d Cir.), cert. dismissed, 492 U.S. 939, 110 S. Ct. 29, 106 L. Ed. 2d 639 (1989) (acquisition posed clear threat of decreased competition where plaintiffs alleged that it would result in higher prices and reduced output).

Defendants maintain that SOC's decision not to proceed with Project Nautilus does not constitute anticompetitive conduct because a firm has no general duty to help its competitors. Shell/Montell Mem. at 3-4. Defendants base this argument, however, on standards applicable to claims of unilateral action under Section 2 of the Sherman Act

<sup>20</sup> Defendants' remaining contentions--that UCC has not adequately pled the elements of estoppel, and that UCC has failed to assert any specific statements of SOC or the Shell defendants on which UCC relied--are similarly without merit.

<sup>21</sup> UCC's Complaint contains four antitrust claims (Counts III through VI). Defendants have moved to dismiss two of the claims in full and two claims in part. The Shell/Montell defendants briefed the issues; Montedison joined in their arguments with respect to all four Counts, and Technipol joined in their arguments with respect to Counts IV and V (the only antitrust claims in which Technipol is implicated). See Montedison/Technipol Mem. at 2 n.3 and 3.

<sup>22</sup> HN27 [↑] That section of the Sherman Act provides, in part, that "every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal . . ." 15 U.S.C. § 1 (1973).

rather than on standards applicable to concerted action under Section 1. HN29 [↑] Antitrust law makes a clear distinction between unilateral and concerted conduct. See Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 767-69, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 \(1984\); Seagood Trading Corp. v. Jerrico, Inc., 924 F.2d 1555, 1567-68 \(11th Cir. 1991\). Where a concerted refusal to deal with a competitor has injured competition by restricting output, courts have regularly found such conduct [**81] illegal. See, e.g., FTC v. Superior Court Trial Lawyers Ass'n, 493 U.S. 411, 424-25, 107 L. Ed. 2d 851, 110 S. Ct. 768 \(1990\); NCAA v. Board of Regents, 468 U.S. 85, 106-107, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70, 104 S. Ct. 2948 \(1984\); United States v. General Motors Corp., 384 U.S. 127, 139-41, 16 L. Ed. 2d 415, 86 S. Ct. 1321 \(1966\). Finally, Defendants argue that "declining to invest hundreds of millions of dollars to build new manufacturing facilities . . . does not amount to 'restricting output.'" Shell/Montell Mem. at 3. This argument at best raises a question of fact not properly addressed on a motion to dismiss. If, for example, as UCC alleges, Defendants conspired to prevent a new UNIPOL polypropylene resin plan from starting up, such conduct would violate Section 1 of the Sherman Act.<sup>23</sup>

B. Does UCC Allege That it Was Prevented from Expanding on its Own?

Defendants [**82] also urge dismissal of UCC's claim because they maintain that UCC "fails to allege facts that indicate that it was prevented from expanding on its own." Shell/Montell Mem. at 2 (emphasis in original). Defendants are incorrect. UCC has made several factual allegations that Defendants' actions "prevented it from making the [\*1148] capacity expansions contemplated by Project Nautilus." UCC Opp. Mem. (Shell/Montell) at 10. For example, UCC alleges that it "had no practical alternative for constructing a polypropylene plant when [SOC] declined to proceed jointly;" that SOC knew "it would have been impossible for UCC to get an adequate catalyst partner to replace" SOC; and that "Defendants' actions . . . prevented new capacity . . . from coming on the [North American Polypropylene] market." See Cplt PP 122, 146, 205, 236. Defendants' disputes with these factual allegations, such as its own factual assertions that UCC "could have expanded on its own" and "was actually in a more advantageous position [to expand] than third-party licensees" (see Shell/Montell Mem. at 5 n.6, 6 n.8) are irrelevant on a motion to dismiss.<sup>24</sup> UCC has alleged facts that, if proven, would sufficiently [**83] establish that Defendants prevented UCC from making capacity expansions on its own or with a third party, and that Defendants caused "substantial and direct injury to overall competition in the relevant markets." UCC Opp. Mem. (Shell/Montell) at 10. See Dillard v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., 961 F.2d 1148, 1159 \(5th Cir. 1992\) (reversing lower court's dismissal of antitrust claims because plaintiff did not need "to show how he was damaged at this point" and because allegations "that his business and property were injured . . . [were] sufficient to satisfy the requirements of notice pleading"), cert. denied, 506 U.S. 1079, 113 S. Ct. 1046, 122 L. Ed. 2d 355 \(1993\).

XI. Count VI: Violations of Section 7 of the Clayton Act in the Total Package License and Catalyst Markets by RDS, Shell Transport, Montedison, [**84] Shell N.V., Montell N.V., and Montell

In Count VI, UCC alleges that the effect of the formation of the Montell venture "may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. § 18)<sup>25</sup> in at least two" specific markets. Defendants challenge UCC's standing to assert this claim. HN30 [↑] In order to have

<sup>23</sup> None of Defendants' remaining arguments justifies dismissing Count III on the ground that it does not allege anticompetitive conduct.

<sup>24</sup> All the cases Defendants cite in support of their position are appeals of grants of summary judgment, appeals after a jury verdict, or (in one case) a decision after a bench trial. None involves a motion to dismiss.

<sup>25</sup> HN31 [↑] That section of the Clayton Act provides, in relevant part:

No person engaged in commerce or in any activity affecting commerce shall acquire, directly or indirectly, the whole or any part of the stock or other share capital and no person subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission shall acquire the whole or any part of the assets of another person engaged also in commerce or in any activity affecting commerce, where in any line of commerce or in any activity affecting commerce in any section of the country, the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly.

standing to sue under Section 7 of the Clayton Act, a private plaintiff must allege antitrust injury, "which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1977). Defendants argue that UCC lacks standing to challenge Montell's formation because "as a competitor in the alleged licensing markets, . . . UCC would benefit" from any lessening of competition caused by the Montell transaction and thus "cannot have suffered" antitrust injury. Shell/Montell Mem. at 8. Alternatively, Defendants argue that there is no antitrust injury because any losses suffered as a result of the formation of Montell "would be the result of increased competition." [**85] Id. at 9.

"HN32[<sup>A</sup>] The antitrust laws . . . were enacted for 'the protection of competition, not competitors.'" Brunswick, 429 U.S. at 488 (quoting Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 320, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510, 82 S. Ct. 1502 (1962) (emphasis in original)). Therefore UCC must allege that competition in general has [**86] suffered, not just that UCC itself has been harmed. Plaintiff's Complaint alleges the requisite harm. UCC alleges that "the Montell venture . . . has and will substantially lessen competition" in the relevant markets (Cplt. PP 256-57); that as a result of Defendants' actions, "competition in the already concentrated [*1149] Total Package License Market . . . has been and will continue to be unreasonably restrained" (id. P 241); and that competition in the Catalyst Market has suffered (id. PP 192, 242). UCC also alleges numerous overt acts by Defendants in furtherance of a "collusive scheme" to "lessen[] competition . . . in the Total Package License Market" by "reducing the only significant competition for Spheripol" in that market. Id. P 179. In addition, UCC charges that Defendants' goals were to "restrict output, increase prices, limit the introduction of advanced technology, realize supracompetitive profits, and . . . harm competition." Id.

Notwithstanding these allegations, Defendants argue that as a competitor, UCC stands to benefit from any lessening of competition and therefore lacks standing to challenge the formation of Montell. In *Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of [**87] Colorado, Inc.*, 479 U.S. 104, 116-17, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427, 107 S. Ct. 484 (1986), the Supreme Court held that "competition for increased market share[] is not activity forbidden by the antitrust laws," and that the antitrust laws do not protect competitors from loss of profits due to price competition. Defendants correctly note that the Cargill decision "imposed significant barriers to competitor attempts" to challenge merger transactions, and "did not leave competitor plaintiffs a very good chance of having standing to enjoin mergers." Community Publishers, Inc. v. Donrey Corp., 892 F. Supp. 1146, 1166 (W.D. Ark. 1995) (citing Phototron Corp. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 842 F.2d 95, 102 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 486 U.S. 1023, 100 L. Ed. 2d 228, 108 S. Ct. 1996 (1988)). However, Cargill "has not rendered such attempts [by a competitor to enjoin mergers] impossible." R.C. Bigelow, Inc. v. Unilever N.V., 867 F.2d 102, 110 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 493 U.S. 815, 110 S. Ct. 64, 107 L. Ed. 2d 31 (1989). HN33[<sup>A</sup>] A competitor plaintiff has standing as long as it can demonstrate "that its injury was caused by anticompetitive or predatory aspects of [defendant's] conduct, not by competition." Pacific Express, [**88] Inc. v. United Airlines, Inc., 959 F.2d 814, 818 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 506 U.S. 1034, 121 L. Ed. 2d 686, 113 S. Ct. 814 (1992).

Assuming, as I must, the truth of Plaintiff's allegations, UCC has adequately alleged injury caused by the anticompetitive nature of Defendants' actions. Despite Defendants' attempts to distinguish the cases cited by UCC, those cases are similar enough to the instant case to support a finding that UCC has standing to challenge the formation of Montell. See, e.g., Consolidated Gold Fields, PLC v. Minorco, S.A., 871 F.2d 252 (2d Cir.), cert. dismissed, 492 U.S. 939, 110 S. Ct. 29, 106 L. Ed. 2d 639 (1989) (finding standing where target of an acquisition would lose independence because of injury occurring in the market; relied on in holding that a competitor-plaintiff has standing to challenge a merger in a market into which the plaintiff sought to expand (see Bon-Ton Stores, Inc. v. May Dep't Stores Co., 881 F. Supp. 860, 878 (W.D.N.Y. 1994))); Cia. Petrolera Caribe, Inc. v. Arco Caribbean, Inc., 754 F.2d 404, 408 (1st Cir. 1985) (competitor gas station owner had standing to sue based on "its allegations that the refined gasoline market has been harmed by [the [**89] merger] and that it will likely be 'squeezed' out of the market in the foreseeable future"); Community Publishers, 892 F. Supp. at 1165-66 (owners of competing newspaper had standing to challenge merger of two local newspapers because "any monopolistic increase in the combination's advertising rates would soak up all the available advertising revenue" and thereby "harm not only readers and advertisers, but also competitors"); Christian Schmidt Brewing Co. v. G. Heileman Brewing Co., 600 F. Supp. 1326, 1331 n.5 (E.D. Mich.), aff'd, 753 F.2d 1354 (6th Cir.), cert. dismissed, 469 U.S. 1200, 105 S. Ct. 1155, 84 L. Ed. 2d 309 (1985) (plaintiff had standing where it showed "a substantial probability that if the proposed merger is accomplished and competition between [the merging defendants] is eliminated, then the combined firm would be able to target its competitive efforts on [plaintiff] and other small brewers. As a result of this merger, plaintiffs' ability to wholesale and distribute their products may be impaired, and ultimately, [plaintiff's] ability to survive in this industry of giants may be in question. This is exactly the sort of injury the antitrust laws were intended to prevent.") (citing [**90] [United States v. Topco Assocs., Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 610, \[\*1150\] 92 S. Ct. 1126, 31 L. Ed. 2d 515 \(1972\)](#)). See also Hammes v. AAMCO Transmissions, Inc., 33 F.3d 774, 783 \(7th Cir. 1994\) (given two plausible interpretations of an antitrust claim, court chose one that afforded standing to the plaintiff and denied motion to dismiss for lack of standing because it was "premature" to draw conclusions regarding "the character of the loss that [plaintiff] seeks to recover").

The above-cited authorities provide ample support for finding that UCC has standing to challenge the formation of Montell. UCC has adequately alleged that competition has suffered as a result of the transaction, and that any harm suffered by UCC is the result of the anticompetitive nature of Defendants' actions. The motion to dismiss this count is denied.<sup>26</sup>

[**91] XII. Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, Defendants' motions to dismiss UCC's Third Amended Complaint are granted in part and denied in part. UCC's claim for breach of the implied duty of good faith and fair dealing (Count XIII) is dismissed. In addition, those portions of the claim for tortious interference with prospective contractual relations (Count VIII) which relate to prospective contractual relations with potential licensees of the UNIPOL/SHAC technology, prospective contractual relations with Shell Canada, and expansion of the UCC/Shell Venture through Project Nautilus are dismissed. All other claims survive.

Although UCC has now amended its complaint three times, this is the first time that Defendants have moved to dismiss any of UCC's claims, and thus the first time that the Court has expressed its view on the sufficiency of the Complaint. Plaintiff may therefore have one opportunity to replead its claim for tortious interference with prospective contractual relations as it relates to prospective contractual relations with potential licensees of the UNIPOL/SHAC technology and prospective contractual relations with Shell Canada.<sup>27</sup>

[**92] SO ORDERED:

Shira A. Scheindlin

U.S.D.J.

Dated: New York, New York

August 30, 1996

---

<sup>26</sup> Defendants also seek dismissal of the "portions" of Counts IV and V that challenge the formation of Montell. Plaintiff maintains that the Court may not dismiss part of a claim, while Defendants argue the opposite. Because UCC has standing to challenge the formation of Montell, there is no need to resolve this dispute. No portion of Counts IV, V or VI will be dismissed.

In addition, Defendants contend that damages claimed by UCC on its antitrust claims are limited by certain statements UCC's counsel made during the preliminary injunction hearing in February 1995. Specifically, Defendants maintain that UCC is precluded from "recovering damages with respect to any claims that rely on assertions of 'uncertainty' or 'lack of confidence' among existing or potential licensees after the June 28, 1995 announcement that UCC would purchase the assets of SPC." Shell/Montell Mem. at 10. As stated earlier (see note 12, supra), a discussion of damages at this stage of the litigation is premature.

<sup>27</sup> UCC may not replead that portion of the claim relating to the expansion of the UCC/Shell Venture through Nautilus because it is time-barred. Also, UCC may not attempt to cure the defect in Count XIII through repleading.

---

End of Document

United States v. Nippon Paper Indus. Co.

United States District Court for the District of Massachusetts

September 3, 1996, Decided

CR. No. 95-10388-JLT

Reporter

944 F. Supp. 55 *; 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13534 **; 1996-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,575

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, v. NIPPON PAPER INDUSTRIES CO., LTD.; JUJO PAPER CO., INC.; and HIRINORI ICHIDA; Defendants.

Disposition: **1 Nippon Paper Industries Co., Ltd.'s ("Nippon") Motion [29] to Dismiss Count One Of The Indictment For Lack Of Personal Jurisdiction DENIED; Nippon's Motion [66] To Dismiss Count I Of The Indictment For Failure To State An Offense Under 15 U.S.C. § 1 ALLOWED and the Indictment DISMISSED as to Nippon and Jujo Paper Co., Inc.; and Nippon's Motion [64] To Dismiss Count I Of The Indictment For Failure To State An Offense DENIED as moot.

Core Terms

---

indictment, trading, houses, Sherman Act, fax, contacts, manufacturers, service of process, alien corporation, extraterritorial, territorial, vertical, personal jurisdiction, sovereign, conspiracy, antitrust, contends, cases, sufficient contact, anti trust law, nationwide, limits, prices, court concludes, co-conspirators, courts, distributor, provisions, customers, meetings

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Business & Corporate Law > Agency Relationships > Types > General Agents

Business & Corporate Law > Agency Relationships > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Agency Relationships > Agents Distinguished > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Authority to Act > Business Transactions > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Agency Relationships > Duties & Liabilities > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Duties & Liabilities > Unlawful Acts of Agents > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Duties & Liabilities > Unlawful Acts of Agents > Criminal Activities

Civil Procedure > ... > Service of Process > Methods of Service > Service on Corporations

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Accusatory Instruments > Informations > General Overview

**HN1** [down] Types, General Agents

Service of process on a corporation may be effected within the territorial limits of the United States by: delivering a copy of the summons to an officer or to a managing or general agent or to any other agent authorized by appointment or by law to receive service of process and, if the agent is one authorized by statute to receive service and the statute so requires, by also mailing a copy to the corporation's last known address within the district or at its principal place of business elsewhere in the United States. *Fed. R. Crim. P. 9\(c\)\(1\)*.

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Jurisdictional Sources > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Accusatory Instruments > Informations > General Overview

**HN2** [down] Jurisdiction, Jurisdictional Sources

Personal jurisdiction implicates the power of a court over a defendant. Historically, the presence of a defendant within the boundaries of the sovereign served as a prerequisite to its courts exercising jurisdiction over him. Once presence existed, the manner in which such presence was procured did not alter the power of the court over that person.

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > Constitutional Limits

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Accusatory Instruments > Informations > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > Minimum Contacts

**HN3** [down] In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction, Constitutional Limits

Exercise of jurisdiction over persons not found within the sovereign's borders was held to be consistent with due process if the defendant has certain minimum contacts with it such that maintenance of the suit does not offend traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice. The modern doctrine of personal jurisdiction, thus, involves two distinct and independent bases for exercise of a sovereign's power: (1) physical presence of the person within the territorial boundaries of the sovereign; and (2) sufficient contacts with the sovereign to justify reaching him extraterritorially.

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Accusatory Instruments > Informations > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > Minimum Contacts

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

**HN4** [down] Subject Matter Jurisdiction, Jurisdiction Over Actions

A court has general jurisdiction over a person when the litigation is not directly based on the defendant's forum-based contacts, but the defendant has nevertheless engaged in continuous and systemic activity, unrelated to the suit, in the forum state. If general jurisdiction is lacking, a court determines whether it possesses specific jurisdiction by examining: (1) the relatedness of the defendant's forum-state activities and the claim underlying the litigation; (2) the deliberateness of the defendant's contacts with the forum-state; and (3) the reasonableness of the exercise of jurisdiction in light of various factors.

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > Constitutional Limits

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Accusatory Instruments > Informations > General Overview

HN5 [] In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction, Constitutional Limits

Turning to adjudication of federal claims in federal courts, two factors must be examined: (1) the territorial limits on service of process defined by Congress, and (2) the constitutional constraints on Congress' definition of those limits. In providing for nationwide service, Congress defines the territorial jurisdiction of the federal courts as encompassing the entire nation. As such, the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment does not require that a defendant have sufficient contacts with the state in which the district court sits for there to be jurisdiction.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Accusatory Instruments > Informations > General Overview

HN6 [] Accusatory Instruments, Informations

The power of a court to try a person for crime is not impaired by the fact that he had been brought within the court's jurisdiction by reason of a "forcible abduction."

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Accusatory Instruments > Informations > General Overview

HN7 [] Accusatory Instruments, Informations

Minimum contacts considerations do not apply to individuals who are served process within the territorial limits of the sovereign.

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > Minimum Contacts

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Accusatory Instruments > Informations > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Personam Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Service of Process > Methods of Service > Service on Corporations

HN8 [] In Personam Actions, Minimum Contacts

Mere service of process on an agent or officer of an alien corporation within the United States does not without more establish the jurisdiction of a federal court over an alien corporation. Rather, service of such process is only effective to create in personam jurisdiction where a defendant has sufficient contacts with the United States.

944 F. Supp. 55, *551 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13534, **1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Jurisdiction

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Jurisdictional Sources > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Accusatory Instruments > Informations > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN9 [blue icon] Clayton Act, Jurisdiction

Section 12 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 22, provides: Any suit, action, or proceeding under the antitrust laws against a corporation may be brought not only in the judicial district whereof it is an inhabitant, but also in any district wherein it may be found or transacts business; and all process in such cases may be served in the district of which it is an inhabitant, or wherever it may be found.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Indictments > Contents > Content Requirements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > Sherman Act

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Accusatory Instruments > Indictments > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Indictments > Contents > General Overview

HN10 [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

An indictment must contain essential facts constituting an offense charged and must set forth every essential element of an alleged offense. Fed. R. Crim. P. 7\(c\)\(1\). The essential elements of a Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, indictment are the time, place, manner, means, and effect of an alleged violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Price Fixing

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

HN11 [blue icon] Vertical Restraints, Price Fixing

Compliance by a distributor with a manufacturer's unilateral directive to resell its product at a certain price does not constitute an agreement to conspire on the part of the distributor. The evidence regarding the action of the distributor, therefore, must be of a nature that excludes the possibility the manufacturer and distributor were acting independently. Indeed, the evidence must demonstrate that the manufacturer and distributor had a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective. So, for example, neither the fact that a manufacturer has directed a retailer to sell at a certain price and the distributor complies with that direction, nor the fact that the retailer exchanges sales information with the manufacturer, support an inference of a vertical price-fixing scheme.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Penalties

944 F. Supp. 55, *551 (1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13534, **1

International Law > Authority to Regulate > Anticompetitive Activities

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > International Application of US Law > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Penalties

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > Sherman Act

HN12 [blue document icon] Clayton Act, Penalties

Section 1 of the Sherman Act , 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, provides: Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal.

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > International Application of US Law > General Overview

International Law > Authority to Regulate > Anticompetitive Activities

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > Intent

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN13 [blue document icon] International Aspects, International Application of US Law

As a general matter, there is a strong presumption against extraterritorial application of federal statutes, absent a clear expression by Congress to the contrary. Courts have held that this presumption has been overcome in the case of civil application of the federal antitrust laws. Nonetheless, because the presumption carries even more weight when applied to criminal statutes, the line of cases permitting extraterritorial reach in civil actions is not controlling. And, indeed, commentators have generally recognized this distinction when explaining the extraterritorial reach of the antitrust laws: The principles governing extraterritorial application of civil laws apply to criminal as well as civil litigation. However, in the case of regulatory statutes that may give rise to both civil and criminal liability, such as United States antitrust and securities laws, the presence of substantial foreign elements will ordinarily weigh against application of criminal law. In such cases, legislative intent to subject conduct outside the state's territory to its criminal law should be found only on the basis of express statement or clear implication.

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > International Application of US Law > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN14 [blue document icon] International Aspects, International Application of US Law

The criminal provisions of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, do not apply to conspiratorial conduct in which none of the overt acts of the conspiracy take place in the United States.

Counsel: For JUJO PAPER CO., LTD (2), Defendant: William H. Kettlewell, Boston, MA.

For NIPPON PAPER INDUSTRIES CO., LTD (3), Defendant: Richard G. Parker, O'Melveny & Myers, Washington, DC. William H. Kettlewell, Boston, MA.

U. S. Attorneys: Lisa M. Phelan, U.S. Department of Justice, Antitrust Division-Litigation II, Washington, DC.

Judges: Joseph L. Tauro, United States District Judge

Opinion by: Joseph L. Tauro

Opinion

---

[*57] MEMORANDUM

September 3, 1996

TAURO, Ch.J.,

The United States brings this criminal action against Nippon Paper Industries Co., Inc. ("Nippon"), alleging that its predecessor, [*58] Jujo Paper Co., Inc. ("Jujo"), conspired in 1990 to fix prices of jumbo roll thermal facsimile paper ("fax paper") sold in the United States, in violation of section [*2] 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.A. § 1 (West Supp. 1996). Presently before the court are Nippon's motions to dismiss on three alternative grounds: (1) lack of personal jurisdiction over Nippon, (2) failure of the indictment to state an offense under section 1 of the Sherman Act, and (3) failure of the indictment to adequately plead successor liability.

I.

BACKGROUND

1

Nippon is a Japanese corporation with its principle place of business in Tokyo, Japan. Nippon was formed in 1993 as a result of a merger between Jujo and Sanyo Kokusaku Co., Ltd., both Japanese corporations with their principal [*3] places of business in Japan.

In 1990, Jujo manufactured fax paper at mills located in Japan. Jujo did not engage in direct export sales but, rather, sold its fax paper in Japan to Japanese trading houses. With regard to fax paper manufactured by Jujo that ultimately reached customers in the United States, Jujo's sales were limited to two Japanese trading companies, Japan Pulp & Paper Co., Ltd. ("JPP") and Mitsui & Co., Ltd. ("Mitsui"). JPP and Mitsui exported the fax paper to their respective subsidiaries in the United States and those subsidiaries engaged in direct sales to customers in the United States.

The government maintains that the conspiracy originated at meetings held in Japan in early 1990, during which Jujo and other Japanese manufacturers of fax paper "agreed to increase prices for fax paper to be imported in North America." Indictment P 7(b). Although the indictment does not specify which alleged co-conspirators attended these meetings, the government conceded at argument on this motion that none of the Japanese trade houses nor their American subsidiaries participated in these meetings.

---

<sup>1</sup> In outlining its background, the court accepts the government's characterization of the case as a conspiracy involving horizontal and vertical relationships. As explained in detail below, the parties dispute whether the indictment adequately pleads the theories of the conspiracy advanced by the government in its memorandum opposing Nippon's motion for failure to state a claim under section 1 of the Sherman Act.

To effectuate this conspiracy, Jujo and the other manufacturers "raised their [**4] prices for fax paper" charged to the Japanese trading houses. The government further contends that Mitsui and JPP, and their American subsidiaries, became co-conspirators by agreeing to sell fax paper in North America at the newly raised price.

II.

DISCUSSION

A. Personal Jurisdiction

Congress, by way of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, has provided for nationwide service of process of criminal summons. Fed. R. Crim. P. 4(d)(2). HN1[] Service of process on a corporation may be effected within the territorial limits of the United States by:

delivering a copy [of the summons] to an officer or to a managing or general agent or to any other agent authorized by appointment or by law to receive service of process and, if the agent is one authorized by statute to receive service and the statute so requires, by also mailing a copy to the corporation's last known address within the district or at its principal place of business elsewhere in the United States.

Fed. R. Crim. P. 9(c)(1).

On January 4, 1996, service by certified mail of a criminal summons was made upon Seiichi Masuko, the general manager of the larger of the two Nippon offices in Seattle. In January [**5] 1996, service of a copy of the criminal summons was made on Richard Parker, a partner of O'Melveny & Myers, who had been active in the law firm's representation of Nippon throughout the grand jury investigation leading to the present indictment. Subsequently, in-hand service of the criminal summons on Seiichi Masuko was executed by a United States Marshal at Nippon's Seattle office.<sup>2</sup>

[*59] The government contends that the court has jurisdiction over Nippon merely because a summons was served on Seiichi Masuko within the territorial boundaries of the United States pursuant to Rule 4. Alternatively, the government maintains that, because Nippon has sufficient contacts with the United States, service pursuant to Rule 4 gives this court jurisdiction over Nippon.

1. Review of jurisdictional principles

HN2[] "Personal jurisdiction [**6] implicates the power of a court over a defendant." Foster-Miller, Inc. v. Babcock & Wilcox Canada, 46 F.3d 138, 143 (1st Cir. 1995). Historically, the presence of a defendant within the boundaries of the sovereign served as a prerequisite to its courts exercising jurisdiction over him. International Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 316, 90 L. Ed. 95, 66 S. Ct. 154 (1945). Once presence existed, the manner in which such presence was procured did not alter the power of the court over that person. See, e.g., Frisbie v. Collins, 342 U.S. 519, 522, 96 L. Ed. 541, 72 S. Ct. 509 (1952) (jurisdiction existed over criminal defendant brought within border of sovereign by forcible abduction); Chandler v. United States, 171 F.2d 921, 933 (1st Cir. 1948) (court may not refuse jurisdiction where fugitive is brought before it regardless of the means used to bring him within its territorial jurisdiction), cert. denied, 336 U.S. 918, 93 L. Ed. 1081, 69 S. Ct. 640 (1949).

With the advent of personal service of process, the scope of a sovereign's power expanded to include, under certain conditions, persons not present in its territory. International Shoe, 326 U.S. at [*71] 316. HN3[] Exercise of jurisdiction over persons not found within the sovereign's borders was held to be consistent with due process if the defendant has "certain minimum contacts with it such that maintenance of the suit does not offend traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice." Id. The modern doctrine of personal jurisdiction, thus, involves two distinct and independent bases for exercise of a sovereign's power: (1) physical presence of the person within the territorial boundaries of the sovereign, and (2) sufficient contacts with the sovereign to justify reaching him extraterritorially.

---

<sup>2</sup> Nippon previously challenged the propriety of the service of process. On March 13, 1996, Chief Magistrate Judge Alexander denied Nippon's motion to quash. Nippon does not here challenge that decision.

With respect to the latter basis for jurisdiction, the First Circuit has developed the doctrines of general and specific jurisdiction. United Elec., Radio and Mach. Workers of America v. 163 Pleasant Street Corp., 960 F.2d 1080, 1088 \(1st Cir. 1992\). HN4↑ A court has general jurisdiction over a person "when the litigation is not directly based on the defendant's forum-based contacts, but the defendant has nevertheless engaged in continuous and systemic activity, unrelated to the suit, in the forum state." Id. If general jurisdiction is lacking, a court determines whether it possesses \*\*8 specific jurisdiction by examining (1) the relatedness of the defendant's forum-state activities and the claim underlying the litigation, (2) the deliberateness of the defendant's contacts with the forum-state, and (3) the reasonableness of the exercise of jurisdiction in light of various Gestalt factors. Pritzker v. Yari, 42 F.3d 53, 60-61 \(1st Cir. 1994\), cert. denied, U.S. , 131 L. Ed. 2d 851, 115 S. Ct. 1959 \(1995\).

HN5↑ Turning to adjudication of federal claims in federal courts, two factors must be examined: (1) the territorial limits on service of process defined by Congress, and (2) the constitutional constraints on Congress' definition of those limits. See, e.g., S.E.C. v. Unifund Sal., 910 F.2d 1028, 1033 \(2nd Cir. 1990\). Courts have recognized that Congress may provide for nationwide service of process. Lisak v. Mercantile Bancorp, Inc., 834 F.2d 668, 671 \(7th Cir. 1987\), cert. denied, 485 U.S. 1007, 99 L. Ed. 2d 700, 108 S. Ct. 1472 \(1988\). In providing for nationwide service, Congress defines the territorial jurisdiction of the federal courts as encompassing the entire nation. Id. at 671-72. As such, the [Due Process Clause of \[\\*\\*9\]\(#\) the Fifth Amendment](#) does not require that a defendant have sufficient contacts with the state in which the district court sits for there to be jurisdiction. Johnson Creative Arts, Inc. v. Wool Masters, Inc., 743 F.2d 947, 950 n.3 \(1st Cir. 1984\); Debreceni v. Bru-Jell Leasing Corp., 710 F. Supp. 15, 20-1 \(D. Mass. 1989\).

[\[\*60\]](#) With these principles in mind, the court turns to the issues raised by the parties: (1) whether Congress can authorize federal courts to exercise jurisdiction over an alien corporation, without regard to the contacts of that corporation to the United States, (2) whether service under Rule 4 authorizes a federal district court to exercise personal jurisdiction over an alien corporation, regardless of the substantiality of the contacts of that corporation with the state in which the district court sits, and (3) whether Nippon has sufficient contacts with the United States to warrant exercise of jurisdiction over it.

2. Jurisdiction by virtue of service in the United States

The government contends that service under Rules 4 and 9, standing alone, is sufficient to create jurisdiction over Nippon. In advancing this position, the government argues by analogy \*\*10 from cases concerning the presence of individual criminal defendants. The Supreme Court explained in Frisbee:

The Court has never departed from the rule announced in Ker v. Illinois, [119 U.S. 436, 30 L. Ed. 421, 7 S. Ct. 225 \[1886\]](#) that HN6↑ the power of a court to try a person for crime is not impaired by the fact that he had been brought within the court's jurisdiction by reason of a 'forcible abduction.' No persuasive reasons are now present to justify overruling this line of cases. They rest on the sound basis that due process of law is satisfied when one present in court is convicted of a crime after having been fairly apprised of the charges against him and after a fair trial in accordance with constitutional safeguards."

342 U.S. at 533 (emphasis added). As Frisbee implies, HN7↑ minimum contacts considerations do not apply to individuals who are served process within the territorial limits of the sovereign. Burnham v. Superior Court of California, 495 U.S. 604, 622, 109 L. Ed. 2d 631, 110 S. Ct. 2105 \(1990\) (plurality opinion) (Scalia, J.); Johnson Creative Arts, 743 F.2d at 950 n.3. And so, the government contends, service on an agent within \*\*11 the territory of the United States establishes the presence of an alien corporation.

The principal problem with the government's analogy lies with the concept of corporate presence. Corporations are legal constructions and their presence is, in some sense, fixed to the situs of their incorporation. Where nationwide service is applied to an American corporation this does not present a problem, insofar as jurisdiction can be acquired by service in its state of incorporation. But, process on an alien corporation at its place of incorporation would, of course, take place beyond the territorial limits of the United States.

Moreover, the government's suggestion that service on an officer of an alien corporation within the United States functions as the surrogate for the presence of the alien corporation leads to incongruous results. Consider service of process on the president of an alien corporation who merely happens to be vacationing in Florida, or changing airplanes at an American airport en route to a foreign destination. Is the corporation really "present" in the United States under such happenstance? As Judge Hand recognized, one cannot "impute the idea of locality to a corporation, [\[\*\*12\]](#) except by virtue of those acts which realize its purposes." *Hutchinson v. Chase & Gilbert, 45 F.2d 139, 141 \(2nd Cir. 1930\)*. The vacationing foreign corporation president is likely not acting to serve his employer's purposes. Indeed, it was the problem of corporate presence that led the Supreme Court to articulate the minimum contacts test in International Shoe. *International Shoe, 326 U.S. at 315-19*. See also *Intermeat, Inc. v. American Poultry Inc., 575 F.2d 1017, 1020-23 \(2nd Cir. 1978\)* (explaining rise and fall of the corporate presence theory in the context of states' efforts to reach foreign corporations).

Further, contrary to the government's contention, the minimum contacts test is not limited to cases involving extraterritorial service on a corporation. In International Shoe, an agent of the corporate defendant had been served within the forum-state, pursuant to a state statute authorizing in-state service of process on agents of foreign corporations. *International Shoe, 326 U.S. at 311*. As such, the issue before the Court involved the limits imposed by due [\[\*61\]](#) process on a sovereign's efforts to obtain in personam jurisdiction over a foreign corporation [\[\*\*13\]](#) by in-state service on one of its agents. In holding that the sovereign only obtains personal jurisdiction where there are sufficient contacts, the Court implicitly found that the mere act of service on the agent did not render the corporation "present" in the state.

For these reasons, this court holds that the HN8↑ mere service of process on an agent or officer of an alien corporation within the United States does not without more establish the jurisdiction of a federal court over an alien corporation. Rather, as this court has previously decided in the context of a civil matter, service of such process is only effective to create in personam jurisdiction where a defendant has sufficient contacts with the United States. See *Debreceni, 710 F. Supp. at 20-21* (where federal statute provides for nationwide service of process for a federal claim, the Constitution merely requires minimum contacts with the United States).

3. Nationwide service in criminal antitrust actions

Though Congress may bestow on a federal district court personal jurisdiction over an alien corporation without regard to the contacts between the district and the defendant, the question remains whether Congress [\[\*\*14\]](#) has done so in this case. Nippon contends that the court should not construe *Rules 4 and 9 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure* as providing federal district courts with jurisdiction on the sole basis of national contacts in criminal antitrust actions. Nippon advances two alternative arguments in support of this contention.

First, Nippon maintains that section 12 of the Clayton Act, *15 U.S.C.A. § 22 \(West 1973\)*, is the exclusive provision for nationwide service in antitrust cases. HN9↑ Section 12 of the Clayton Act provides:

Any suit, action, or proceeding under the antitrust laws against a corporation may be brought not only in the judicial district whereof it is an inhabitant, but also in any district wherein it may be found or transacts business; and all process in such cases may be served in the district of which it is an inhabitant, or wherever it may be found.

*15 U.S.C.A. § 22*. Because prosecution in this district allegedly does not satisfy section 12's venue provision, Nippon avers that this court cannot exercise jurisdiction.

It is not clear, however, that section 12 of the Clayton Act applies to criminal prosecutions under the Sherman Act. See *United States v. National Malleable & Steel Castings Co., 6 F.2d 40, 43 \(N.D. Ohio\) \(1924\)*(section 12 of the Clayton Act applies only to civil suits). Moreover, even if section 12 applies to criminal actions, the cases interpreting section 12 demonstrate that it was intended to supplement rather than supplant general federal venue and service of process statutes and rules. See, e.g., *Board of County Comm'r's of Custer County v. Wilshire Oil Co.* of Texas, 523 F.2d 125, 129-30 (10th Cir. 1975). Accordingly, the court concludes that service under Rules 4 and 9 may be relied on in federal antitrust prosecutions.

Second, Nippon contends that jurisdiction on the basis of national contacts is permitted only when the provision authorizing nationwide service also limits venue to a federal district in which the alien corporation can be found.<sup>3</sup> Any other reading, Nippon suggests, would violate due process. Nippon cites no authority for this novel proposition and the court has found none. The reason for this absence of precedent is found in the Constitution itself, which imposes specific limits on the place of a criminal prosecution. Article III, section 2 requires that trial of crimes shall [**16] be held in the state where the crime was committed. The Sixth Amendment provides that criminal defendants are entitled to trial "by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed." In light of the Constitution's venue and vicinage provisions, this court will not devine a generalized due process right requiring an additional nexus between [*62] a criminal defendant and a federal judicial district.<sup>4</sup> See generally O'Melveny & Myers v. F.D.I.C., 512 U.S. 79, 114 S. Ct. 2048, 2054, 129 L. Ed. 2d 67 (1994)(expression of one thing implies exclusion of others).

[**17] Moreover, the proposition advanced by Nippon has been rejected by the Supreme Court. In United States v. Union Pacific R.R., 98 U.S. (8 Otto) 569, 603-04, 25 L. Ed. 143 (1878), the Court held that Congress could make a court in Washington, D.C. the exclusive forum for certain claims arising under federal law. If Congress can establish one court within the United States to here all claims without regard to a defendant's contacts to that place, it inescapably follows that Congress can designate any place within the United States as an appropriate forum for federal claims.

Accordingly, this court concludes that the absence of a provision in the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure linking the venue of a criminal action to contacts with the defendant, does not mandate a reading of Rule 4 as limiting personal jurisdiction to federal districts with which the defendant has sufficient contacts.

4. Nippon's contacts with the United States

Disposition of the present motion depends, then, on whether Nippon has sufficient contacts with the United States to fall within the court's general or specific jurisdiction.

Since its inception in 1993, Nippon has maintained two offices in Seattle, [**18] Washington that Jujo previously operated. These offices are staffed by eight employees. One of these offices engages in market research and quality inspections, as well as arranging for the annual transportation to Japan of over $ 270 million worth of newsprint, publishing paper, and wood chips purchased by Nippon in the United States. Nippon's other Seattle office negotiates contracts for and purchases annually approximately $ 40 million in logs and lumber from suppliers in the United States for export to Nippon's production facilities in Japan. The Seattle offices maintain bank accounts in the United States through which Nippon pays for purchases of materials exported to Japan, employee salaries, and office expenses.

Additionally, Nippon owns twenty percent of North Pacific Paper Corporation, Inc. ("NORPAC"), a paper manufacturing corporation located in Longview, Washington. NORPAC generates annual revenues of approximately $ 350 million.

<sup>3</sup> Fed. R. Crim. P. 18 limits venue to a district in which the offense was committed. For purposes of its motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction, Nippon does not challenge the government's allegation that co-conspirators committed overt acts in Massachusetts in furtherance of the conspiracy.

<sup>4</sup> The court notes that some courts have suggested that due process may protect against abusive selection of a venue by the federal government. See Petition of Provo, 17 F.R.D. 183 (D. Md.), aff'd, 350 U.S. 857, 100 L. Ed. 761, 76 S. Ct. 101 (1955). There is, however, no suggestion in this case that the prosecution has acted in bad faith in selecting the present forum.

Finally, Nippon officers and directors routinely travel to the United States to conduct business with its suppliers in the United States, to oversee operations of NORPAC, to attend industry conferences, and to negotiate technological agreements.

[**19] In light of these contacts, the court concludes that Nippon has engaged in continuous and systemic activity in the United States. Accordingly, the court possesses general personal jurisdiction over Nippon.

B. Extraterritorial Application of Section 1 of the Sherman Act

The court now turns to Nippon's motion to dismiss the indictment for failure to state an action under section 1 of the Sherman Act. Nippon maintains that the indictment charges Nippon, as Jujo's successor, with entering into a horizontal agreement with Japanese manufacturers to fix prices, with selling fax paper to Japanese trading houses in Japan at that price, and directing the Japanese trading houses to resale the fax paper at certain prices. On this characterization of the indictment, the criminal conduct alleged occurred wholly in Japan and was wholly committed by Japanese manufacturers of fax paper. Nippon contends the criminal provisions of the Sherman Act do not apply to conduct wholly occurring outside the United States.

The government responds in two ways. First, it maintains that the indictment alleges [*63] that the Japanese trading companies and their American subsidiaries joined Jujo in the conspiracy [**20] by entering into a vertical agreement to fix the resale price of fax paper in the United States. As such, the government suggests that Nippon's characterization of the indictment as attempting to reach acts solely occurring outside the United States goes awry. Alternatively, the government contends that the criminal provisions of the Sherman Act can reach wholly foreign acts where the intent and effect of those acts is to affect commerce in the United States.

To resolve this motion, then, the court must address two questions: (1) whether the government has sufficiently pled its claim that a vertical agreement existed between Jujo and the trading houses; and (2) if not, whether the Sherman Act reaches the alleged horizontal agreement between Jujo and the other Japanese manufacturers of fax paper.

1. Adequacy of pleading the vertical agreement

HN10 [↑] An indictment must contain essential facts constituting an offense charged and must set forth every essential element of an alleged offense. Fed. R. Crim. Pro. Rule 7\(c\)\(1\). See, e.g., United States v. McDonough, 959 F.2d 1137, 1140 \(1st Cir. 1992\). The essential elements of a Sherman Act indictment are the time, place, manner, means, [**21] and effect of an alleged violation. United States v. Tedesco, 441 F. Supp. 1336, 1339 \(M.D. Pa. 1977\).

In Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 \(1984\), the Supreme Court propounded the evidentiary requirements of proving a vertical agreement to fix resale prices. HN11 [↑] Compliance by a distributor with a manufacturer's unilateral directive to resell its product at a certain price does not constitute an agreement to conspire on the part of the distributor. Id. at 764. The evidence regarding the action of the distributor, therefore, must be of a nature that excludes the possibility the manufacturer and distributor were acting independently. Id. at 764. Indeed, the evidence must demonstrate that the manufacturer and distributor "had a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective." Id. So, for example, neither the fact that a manufacturer has directed a retailer to sell at a certain price and the distributor complies with that direction, nor the fact that the retailer exchanges sales information with the manufacturer, support an inference of a vertical price-fixing scheme. Id. at I\*\*221 762-64.

Monsanto's articulation of what conduct may permissibly give rise to an inference of an agreement is germane to whether the indictment adequately describes the existence of a conspiracy between the trading houses and Jujo. In making that determination, the court looks for either an allegation that an express agreement was entered into between Jujo and the trading houses, or a description of alleged conduct from which the reader could infer such an agreement. For the reasons that follow, the court concludes that the indictment fails to adequately plead the existence, manner, and means of a vertical price fixing agreement between Jujo and the Japanese trading companies.

As an initial matter, the court observes that the indictment does adequately aver that, at meetings in early 1990, Jujo and co-conspirators explicitly agreed to price increases in fax paper. Indictment P 7(b). The government concedes, however, that it is not proceeding under the theory that the Japanese trading companies attended the meetings at which this alleged explicit agreement was formed. Transcript of July 29, 1996 Hearing at 23.

Apart from the specific allegation that an agreement was reached at [**23] the early 1990 meetings, there is no other language in the indictment indicating that a subsequent vertical agreement arose between Jujo and the Japanese trading houses. In paragraphs 7(d) and 7(e), the indictment states that Jujo "directed the co-conspirator trading houses to implement price increases to fax paper customers in North America" and "participated in telephone conversations and otherwise contacted each other to maintain continued [*64] adherence to their conspiratorial agreement." This completes the indictment's characterization of the means and method of the conspiracy. Neither direction by Jujo to the trading houses nor communication by Jujo to determine compliance with that direction, imply the existence of a vertical agreement between Jujo and the trading houses.

Examining the indictment's description of the effects of the alleged conspiracy yields even less indication that a vertical agreement is alleged. Paragraph 9 of the indictment reads: "the Japanese manufacturers sold discrete quantities of fax paper to the trading houses in Japan, for specific customers in North America, on condition that such quantities be sold to customers at specified prices." It continues: "the [**24] Japanese manufacturers . . . monitored the trading houses' transactions with the North American customers to ensure that the agreed upon prices were charged." Again, these averments merely suggest that, to ensure the success of its horizontal agreement, Jujo undertook to direct the trading houses to sell fax paper at a specified price and to monitor whether the trading houses were complying with this directive. Neither of these allegations serve as an averment that the trading houses entered into a price fixing agreement with Jujo.

In sum, except for the naked characterization of the trading houses as co-conspirators, the indictment merely alleges: (1) that Jujo directed the trading houses, (2) that Jujo communicated with the trading houses, and (3) that the trading houses served as the distributive link between Jujo and purchasers of fax paper in the United States. This court concludes that such allegations, singly or in combination, do not satisfy the government's burden of pleading with requisite particularity the existence of a vertical agreement.

2. The horizontal agreement

Because the government has failed to plead a vertical agreement to join the conspiracy by the trading [**25] houses, this case does not involve overt acts by co-conspirators occurring in the United States. The government contends, nonetheless, that the Sherman Act encompasses the wholly extraterritorial conduct described in the alleged horizontal agreement between Jujo and the other Japanese manufacturers of fax paper. This presents a question of first impression regarding the extraterritorial reach of the criminal provisions of the Sherman Act. See Restatement (Third) of Foreign Relations Law § 403, note 8 (1986) ("No case is known of criminal prosecution in the United States for an economic offense (not involving fraud) carried out by an alien wholly outside the United State.").<sup>5</sup>

[**26] HN12

<sup>5</sup> The government cites two criminal cases as applying the Sherman Act to foreign conduct: United States v. R.P. Oldham Co., 152 F. Supp. 818, 822 (N.D. Cal. 1957) and In re Grand Jury Investigation of the Shipping Industry, 186 F. Supp. 298, 313 (D.D.C. 1960). Both of these cases, however, specifically premise their holding on the fact that co-conspirators committed overt acts in the United States. Oldham, 152 F. Supp. at 821 ("the only commerce sought to be regulated is the importation and sale of wire nails on the West Coast of the United States"); Shipping Industry, 186 F. Supp. at 314 ("American Banana Co. v. United Fruit Co., 213 U.S. 347, 53 L. Ed. 826, 29 S. Ct. 511 (1909), does not preclude Sherman Act jurisdiction over agreements in restraint of trade carried out, at least in part, within the United States."). Indeed, Oldham makes "clear that there is no attempt here to regulate Japanese commerce as such, or to indict Japanese firms or Japanese nationals." Oldham, 152 F. Supp. at 821.

Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides:

Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal.

15 U.S.C.A. § 1. This section serves as the substantive language for both civil and criminal application of the antitrust laws. According to the government this essentially ends the matter, for "it is well established that [the civil sanctions of] the Sherman Act apply to foreign conduct that was meant to produce and did in fact produce some substantial effect in the United States." Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. California, 509 U.S. 764, 795, 125 L. Ed. 2d 612, 113 S. Ct. 2891 (1993). The court, however, disagrees with that suggested equating of the Sherman Act's civil and criminal application.

[*65] HN13 As a general matter, there is a strong presumption against extraterritorial application of federal statutes, absent a clear expression by Congress to the contrary. E.E.O.C. v. Arabian American Oil Co., 499 U.S. 244, 248, 113 L. Ed. 2d 274, 111 S. Ct. 1227 (1991). As noted above, courts have held that this presumption has been overcome in the [*27] case of civil application of the federal antitrust laws. Hartford, 509 U.S. at 795. Nonetheless, because the presumption carries even more weight when applied to criminal statutes, United States v. Bowman, 260 U.S. 94, 97-98, 67 L. Ed. 149, 43 S. Ct. 39 (1922), the line of cases permitting extraterritorial reach in civil actions is not controlling. And, indeed, commentators have generally recognized this distinction when explaining the extraterritorial reach of the antitrust laws:

The principles governing [extraterritorial application of civil laws] apply to criminal as well as civil litigation. However, in the case of regulatory statutes that may give rise to both civil and criminal liability, such as United States antitrust and securities laws, the presence of substantial foreign elements will ordinarily weigh against application of criminal law. In such cases, legislative intent to subject conduct outside the state's territory to its criminal law should be found only on the basis of express statement or clear implication.

Restatement (Third) of Foreign Relations Law § 403, cmt. f (1986).

Moreover, courts have recognized that the substantive language of [*28] section 1 of the Sherman Act requires different treatment in civil and criminal contexts. See, e.g., United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 438 U.S. 422, 439-43, 57 L. Ed. 2d 854, 98 S. Ct. 2864 (1978) ("Gypsum"). In Gypsum, the Supreme Court confronted the issue of whether criminal responsibility under the Sherman Act should be based on strict liability, as it had been held in civil cases, or whether some intent element should be attributed to it as the traditional canons of statutory interpretation would suggest. Id. at 436. The Court reasoned that the ambiguities inherent in the fact intensive nature of an antitrust prosecution counseled against imposing criminal liability absent a demonstration of intent to violate the law. Id. at 440-42. Additionally, the Court recognized that Congress adopted the language of the Sherman Act "fully aware of the traditional distinction between the elements of civil and criminal offenses and apparently did not intend to do away with them." Id. at 443 n.19.

Here, the court faces a choice between competing interpretative principles similar to the one posed in Gypsum. As did the Court in Gypsum, this court concludes [*29] that the traditional distinction between the elements of civil and criminal charges must be maintained.

This conclusion finds support in policies underlying antitrust and criminal law. On the civil side, antitrust enforcement benefits from a certain degree of interpretive flexibility. Appalachian Coals v. United States, 288 U.S. 344, 359-60, 77 L. Ed. 825, 53 S. Ct. 471 (1933). That flexibility enables the government to use the antitrust laws as an effective means for regulating business practices. Cf. Gypsum, 438 U.S. at 442. But, as Nippon observes, such flexibility is antithetical to the principles of predictability and fairness that undergird the criminal law. Id. at 441-42. See also 2 Areeda and Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law § 311 32-33 (rev. ed. 1995). And, because the Sherman Act is silent on the issue, imputation of extraterritorial application of its provisions would present serious questions about notice to foreign corporate defendants as to the criminality of its conduct. Cf. Balthazar v. Superior Court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, 428 F. Supp. 425, 433 (D. Mass. 1977) ("criminal liability should only attach to clearly delineated transgressions"), [*30] aff'd, 573 F.2d 698 (1st Cir. 1978).

In addition, the legislative history belies any suggestion that, in passing the Sherman Act, Congress believed that it was reaching wholly extraterritorial conduct. In response to concerns that potential antitrust violators could evade the proscriptions of the Sherman Act by forming their agreement outside the United States, Senator Sherman explained:

[*66] It is true that if a crime is committed outside of the United States it can not be punished in the United States. But if an unlawful combination is made outside of the United States and in pursuance of it property is brought within the United States such property is subject to our laws. It may be seized. A civil remedy by attachment could be had. Any person interested in the United States could be made a party.

Either a foreigner or a native may escape "the criminal part of the law," as he says, by staying out of our jurisdiction, as very many do, but if they have property here it is subject to civil process. . . . [A foreigner] may combine or conspire to his heart's content if none of his co-conspirators are here or his property is not here.

21 Cong. Rec. 2461, reprinted [*31] in Earl W. Kintner, ed., The Legislative History of Federal Antitrust Laws and Related Statutes, Part I, The Antitrust Laws, vol. 1. p. 126 (1978).

For all these reasons, the court concludes that HN14[] the criminal provisions of the Sherman Act do not apply to conspiratorial conduct in which none of the overt acts of the conspiracy take place in the United States.

The indictment against Nippon and Jujo will be dismissed.<sup>6</sup>

An order will issue.

Joseph L. Tauro

United States District Judge

ORDER

September 3, 1996

TAURO, Ch.J.,

For the reasons stated in the accompanying memorandum, the court orders as follows:

1. Nippon Paper Industries Co., Ltd.'s ("Nippon") Motion [29] to Dismiss Count One Of The Indictment For Lack Of Personal Jurisdiction is DENIED;
2. [*32] Nippon's Motion [66] To Dismiss Count I Of The Indictment For Failure To State An Offense Under 15 U.S.C. § 1 is ALLOWED and the Indictment is hereby DISMISSED as to Nippon and Jujo Paper Co., Inc.; and
3. Nippon's Motion [64] To Dismiss Count I Of The Indictment For Failure To State An Offense is DENIED as moot.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Joseph L. Tauro

United States District Judge

---

End of Document

---

<sup>6</sup> Because Jujo no longer exists, the court considers Nippon's motion for dismissal as made on behalf of both defendants named in Count I of the Indictment. Accordingly, dismissal of the indictment will enter as to both Nippon and Jujo.

Alpha Lyracom Space Communs. v. Comsat Corp.

United States District Court for the Southern District of New York

September 4, 1996, Decided ; September 5, 1996, FILED

89 Civ. 5021 (JFK)

Reporter

968 F. Supp. 876 *; 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12915 **; 1997-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,679

ALPHA LYRACOM SPACE COMMUNICATIONS, INC., REYNOLD V. ANSELMO, PAN AMERICAN SATELLITE, and PANAMSAT, L.P., Plaintiffs, v. COMSAT CORPORATION, Defendant.

Disposition: [**1] Plaintiffs's discovery motions denied and the orders of the Magistrate Judge affirmed in all respects. Defendant's motion for summary judgment granted as to all claims.

Core Terms

---

signatory, conspiracy, alleged conspiracy, immunity, operating agreement, conspire, plaintiff's claim, antitrust, landing, rights, boycott, ventures, satellite, monopolization, markets, parties, infer, meetings, communications, disparagement, summary judgment, common carrier, negotiations, damages, satellite systems, delays, customers, reflects, refusals, argues

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Communications Law > Federal Acts > Communications Satellite Act

HN1 Federal Acts, Communications Satellite Act

The Communications Satellite Act, 47 U.S.C.S. § 701 et seq. provides that a satellite corporation shall be subject to appropriate governmental regulation and that the ownership of the corporation shall be consistent with the federal antitrust laws.

Communications Law > Federal Acts > Communications Satellite Act

International Trade Law > Trade Agreements > General Overview

International Trade Law > General Overview

International Trade Law > Dispute Resolution > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Employment Contracts > Conditions & Terms > General Overview

HN2 Federal Acts, Communications Satellite Act

To join Intelsat, the United States implemented various international agreements including the 1971 Definitive Agreement (the formative document of Intelsat), and the 1976 Headquarters Agreement. These agreements require that each party-nation grant appropriate privileges, exemptions and immunities to Intelsat, to the other parties, the signatories and their representatives. The 1976 Headquarters Agreement provides the officers and employees of Intelsat, the representatives of the parties and of the signatories shall be immune from suit and legal process relating to acts performed by them in their official capacity.

Communications Law > Federal Acts > Communications Satellite Act

International Trade Law > General Overview

HN3 Federal Acts, Communications Satellite Act

For domestic satellite services, the party seeking to provide a separate system must consult the Board of Governor's regarding the technical compatibility of the proposed system with Intelsat. For international services, the party must also consult the Assembly of Parties for approval. Thus a separate international system requires the home government to clear the nascent service with the entire Assembly.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Joint Contracts

Business & Corporate Law > Joint Ventures > Formation

Communications Law > Federal Acts > Communications Satellite Act

Business & Corporate Law > Joint Ventures > General Overview

HN4 Types of Contracts, Joint Contracts

In addition to technical clearance from the Board and approval of the Assembly of Parties, a proposed separate international system must acquire landing rights in each nation to which it intends to deliver a signal. Landing rights are authorization from a party to provide or land a satellite signal within that party's national territory. Landing rights are generally procured from or with the assistance of the signatory post, telegraph, and telephone company (PTT) in each nation. Landing rights may issue either as general or limited grant of authority for the provision of independent services, or through some form of joint venture or other arrangement with the PTT. The scope of authorization is generally governed by the terms of a formal agreement, referred to in the record and herein as an operating agreement. Depending upon the regulatory structure of a given nation at a given time, landing rights (and therefore operating agreements), may have been literally impossible to obtain.

Contracts Law > Contract Conditions & Provisions > Waivers > General Overview

International Law > ... > Sovereign Immunity > Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act > Construction & Interpretation

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Waiver & Preservation of Defenses

International Law > ... > Sovereign Immunity > Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act > General Overview

International Law > ... > Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act > Exceptions > Waivers

**HN5** Contract Conditions & Provisions, Waivers

If the parties to a contract agree that the laws of one country will govern contractual interpretations, they have implicitly waived the defense of sovereign immunity.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

**HN6** Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

Both the Supreme Court and the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit have held, in antitrust cases involving allegations of conscious parallelism and concerted refusals to deal, that summary judgment may be granted in such cases if the moving party is able to show that the facts relied on by the plaintiff in support of its allegations are not susceptible of the interpretation the plaintiff seeks to give them and the plaintiff fails to respond to such a showing with 'significant probative evidence' in support of its theory of the case.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

**HN7** Summary Judgment, Burdens of Proof

*Fed. R. Civ. P. 56* mandates the entry of summary judgment after adequate time for discovery and upon motion, if the entire record demonstrates that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. The burden of showing that no genuine issue of material fact exists rests on the movant. The burden will be satisfied if the movant can point to an absence of evidence to support an essential element of the nonmoving party's claim. If the movant satisfies its burden, the nonmoving party must then set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

**HN8** Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

In viewing the evidence to determine whether there exists a genuine issue for trial, the court must assess the record in the light most favorable to the non-movant and draw all reasonable inferences in its favor. The court may not resolve issues of fact, it may only ascertain whether such issues are present. In antitrust litigation, however, the non-moving party must set forth facts that tend to preclude an inference of permissible conduct.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN9 [blue download icon] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Materiality of Facts

Although difficult in factually complex cases, summary judgment is not disfavored in antitrust actions. On the contrary, recognizing that summary judgment is not a substitute for trial, current Supreme Court and Second Circuit cases have tended to encourage its use in complex cases such as this one. Summary judgment remains a vital procedural tool and may be particularly important in antitrust litigation. If no material fact is presented after years of discovery including dozens of depositions and the production of thousands of documents, and the most that can be hoped for is the discrediting of the defendants' denials at trial, a court must grant summary judgment.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

International Trade Law > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Contracts Law > Defenses > Ambiguities & Mistakes > General Overview

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

International Law > Dispute Resolution > General Overview

HN10 [blue download icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Sherman Act § 1, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, prohibits every contract, combination or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations. On a motion for summary judgment against a § 1 claim a court initially must determine whether a reasonable jury could find that there was some form of concerted action between two or more legally distinct entities. Only after an illegal agreement is shown will a court consider whether the agreement constituted an unreasonable restraint of trade, whether per se or under the rule of reason. In making this threshold determination, the court must bear in mind that the range of inferences that a trier of fact may draw from ambiguous evidence in a § 1 case is limited, and the non-movant must set forth facts that tend to preclude an inference of permissible conduct.

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > Inferences

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN11 [blue download icon] Trials, Judgment as Matter of Law

But **antitrust law** limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a Sherman Act § 1, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, case. The court held that conduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy. To survive a motion for summary judgment or for a directed verdict, a plaintiff seeking damages for a violation of § 1 must present evidence that tends to exclude the possibility" that the alleged conspirators acted independently.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

HN12 [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Plaintiffs must present evidence which reasonably tends to prove that a defendant has a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Practices Governed by Per Se Rule > Boycotts

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN13 [blue icon] Practices Governed by Per Se Rule, Boycotts

Some group boycotts involving concerted refusals to deal with a competitor are per se violations. Plaintiffs, therefore, need only to show the existence of the alleged conspiracy and defendant's participation in it.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN14 [blue icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

Plaintiffs must still show defendant's participation in an illegal contract, combination or conspiracy. Plaintiffs must then prove an antitrust injury by showing that the illegal agreement caused an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in a relevant market. Proof that plaintiffs have been harmed as an individual market actor is not enough. If plaintiffs satisfy this threshold burden, defendant must offer evidence of the pro-competitive virtues of the challenged combination. If defendant presents such evidence, plaintiffs must show that any legitimate objectives could have been achieved by less restrictive alternatives. In other words, Plaintiffs must show that the anticompetitive effects of the alleged conspiracy outweigh its procompetitive effects.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

968 F. Supp. 876, *876L996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12915, **1

**HN15** [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Evidence of parallel conduct alone cannot suffice to prove an antitrust conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

**HN16** [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Since mere parallel behavior can be consistent with independent conduct, courts have held that a plaintiff must show the existence of additional circumstances, often referred to as plus factors, which, when viewed in conjunction with the parallel acts, can serve to allow a fact-finder to infer a conspiracy.

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

**HN17** [blue icon] Evidence, Inferences & Presumptions

Additional facts or circumstances are needed to show that the decisions were interdependent and thus raise the inference of a tacit agreement to boycott. Plus factors, however, may not necessarily lead to an inference of conspiracy and could lead to an equally plausible inference of mere interdependent behavior.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

Governments > Courts > Authority to Adjudicate

**HN18** [blue icon] Conspiracy, Elements

The court necessarily examines each of these factors and the alleged refusals to deal individually. The court, however, does not examine each piece of evidence in a vacuum, but considers the evidence as a whole to determine the reasonableness of inferences to be drawn by a jury.

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

**HN19** [blue icon] Evidence, Inferences & Presumptions

The alleged refusals to deal must be viewed in their factual context. When the factual context indicates that a defendant lacked a rational motivation to join the alleged conspiracy to boycott, the plaintiffs must come forward with more persuasive evidence to support their claim than would otherwise be necessary.

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

**HN20** [blue icon] Evidence, Inferences & Presumptions

If the scheme alleged is implausible, a conspiracy must be proved by strong direct or strong circumstantial evidence, and the implausibility of the scheme will reduce the range of inferences that may be permissibly drawn from ambiguous evidence.

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

HN21 Evidence, Inferences & Presumptions

Actions against the apparent individual economic self-interest of the alleged conspirators may raise an inference of interdependent action. The question, therefore, is whether a rational entity would have engaged in the alleged parallel behavior individually.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Communications

HN22 Regulated Industries, Communications

The FCC may grant certificates where the gain is incurred while attempting to advance a change in government policy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Trade Libel > Elements

Torts > Business Torts > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Trade Libel > General Overview

HN23 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

To state a commercial disparagement claim a plaintiff must show a knowing publication of material derogatory to the plaintiff's business; that the material is false; that it is of a nature calculated to prevent others from dealing with the plaintiff or to interfere with the plaintiff's relations with others to its disadvantage; and that in material and substantial part induces others not to do business with the plaintiff with the result that special damages in the form of lost business are incurred.

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

HN24 Evidence, Inferences & Presumptions

After the plaintiff satisfies its threshold burden of proof under the rule of reason, the burden shifts to the defendant to offer evidence of the pro-competitive redeeming virtues of their combination. Assuming defendant comes forward with such proof, the burden shifts back to plaintiff for it to demonstrate that any legitimate collaborative objectives proffered by defendant could have been achieved by less restrictive alternatives, that is, those that would be less prejudicial to competition as a whole.

968 F. Supp. 876, *876A 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12915, **1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > International Application of US Law > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN25 [ ] Scope, Monopolization Offenses

Sherman Act § 2, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, prohibits attempts to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several states; or with foreign nations.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Acts & Mental States > Mens Rea > Specific Intent

Governments > Federal Government > Elections

HN26 [ ] Conspiracy to Monopolize, Sherman Act

To sustain a claim under the Sherman Act § 2, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, for conspiracy to monopolize, Plaintiffs must show proof of a concerted action deliberately entered into with the specific intent to achieve an unlawful monopoly, and the commission of an overt act in furtherance of the conspiracy. Unlike the elements required to establish an attempt to monopolize, however, proof of a conspiracy to monopolize does not require a dangerous probability of success.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

968 F. Supp. 876, *876L<sup>A</sup>996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12915, **1

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

HN27 [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

. To sustain a claim under the Sherman Act § 2, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, for monopolization, plaintiffs must show that defendant has the power to monopolize the relevant market, and that it willfully acquires or maintains that power, causing unreasonable exclusionary or anticompetitive effects.

Torts > ... > Prospective Advantage > Intentional Interference > Elements

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Prospective Advantage > General Overview

HN28 [blue icon] Intentional Interference, Elements

Under New York law, plaintiff must establish that defendant interfered with a prospective contractual advantage through fraudulent, criminal or otherwise improper conduct.

Counsel: APPEARANCES:

For Plaintiffs: SHULMAN, GAINSLEY, SHULMAN, WALCOTT & DAVIS, P.A., Minneapolis, MN, Of Counsel: Daniel R. Shulman, Esq. LAW FIRM OF JOSEPH M. ALIOTO, San Francisco, CA, Of Counsel: Joseph M. Alioto, Esq.

For Defendant: HOWREY & SIMON, Washington, DC, Of Counsel: A. Duncan Whitaker, Esq., Mark D. Wegener, Esq., Basil C. Culyba, Esq., Lisa J. Saks, Esq., Kirsten A. Wolfe, Esq. DAVIS, SCOTT, WEBER & EDWARDS, New York, NY, Of Counsel: Thomas J. Sweeney III, Esq. COMSAT CORPORATION, Washington, DC, Of Counsel: Warren Y. Zeger, Esq., Keith H. Fagan, Esq., Howard D. Polsky, Esq.

Judges: JOHN F. KEENAN, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

Opinion by: JOHN F. KEENAN

Opinion

---

OPINION and ORDER

Background

- I. Factual background
  - A. Parties
  - B. Operation of Intelsat, immunity, & separate systems
  - C. United States' separate systems policy
  - D. Response to the U.S. separate systems policy
- II. Procedural history

Discussion

I. Plaintiffs' discovery motions

A. The July 20, 1994 order

B. [**2] The July 12, 1994 order

1. Intelsat's immunity
2. Plaintiffs' boycott claims
3. Defendant's application for sanctions

C. The September 27, 1994 order

1. Plaintiffs' motion to compel responses
2. Plaintiffs' motion to compel production
3. Defendant's motion for a protective order
4. Defendant's application for sanctions

II. Defendant's motion for summary judgment

A. Overview

B. Standard

III. Sherman Act § 1 conspiracies

A. Comsat's conscious participation in a common scheme

1. Parallel refusals and plus factors
  - (A) No reasonable inference of parallel refusals
  - (B) Insufficient evidence of plus factors
    - (1) Intent to conspire
    - (2) Interfirm communications
    - (3) Customary indications of conspiracy
      - (a) Innumerable meetings
      - (b) PAS, Codetel and Tricom
      - (c) Intelsat resolutions
      - (4) Contrary to self interest
    - (C) No inference of Comsat participation
  2. Refusal to purchase PAS capacity
  3. Tracking PAS throughout the world
    - (A) Latin American ventures
    - (B) Atlantic Television Service (ATV)

B. Overt acts

1. Plaintiffs' pricing claims
2. Delaying PAS's entry into Great Britain, France, West Germany [**3] and Brazil
3. Comsat's FCC filing
4. Commercial disparagement

C. Anticompetitive effects

IV. Plaintiffs' § 2 claims

A. Conspiracy to monopolize

B. Monopolization

C. Attempted monopolization

V. Damages

VI. State law tortious interference claims

VII. Act of state doctrine & indispensable parties

Conclusion

[*881] JOHN F. KEENAN, United States District Judge:

There are four motions before the Court. Plaintiffs have filed three motions objecting to various discovery decisions rendered by Magistrate Judge Nina Gershon. Defendant has filed a motion for summary judgment. For the reasons set forth below, Plaintiffs' discovery motions are denied and the orders of the Magistrate Judge are affirmed in all respects. Defendant's motion for summary judgment is granted as to all claims.

Background

The background of this action has been fully presented in the earlier opinions of this Court and of the Second Circuit. See Alpha Lyracom Space Communications, Inc. v. Communications Satellite Corp., 1990 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11964, 1990-2 Trade Cas. \(CCH\) P69,188, 1990 WL 135637 \(S.D.N.Y. 1990\) (dismissing 1st Am. Compl. on immunity grounds), aff'd in part, rev'd in part, 946 F.2d 168 \(2d Cir. 1991\) (remanded for opportunity to replead), cert. denied, 502 U.S. 1096 (1992); Alpha Lyracom Space Communications, Inc. v. Communications Satellite Corp., 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3825, 1993-1 Trade Cas. \(CCH\) P70,184, 1993 WL 97313 \(S.D.N.Y. 1993\) (denying motion to dismiss 2d Am. Compl.); Alpha Lyracom Space Communications, Inc. v. Communications Satellite Corp., 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7464, 1994-2 Trade Cas. \(CCH\) P70,689, 1994 WL 256671 \(S.D.N.Y. 1994\) (granting leave to file 3d Am. Compl. naming as a Plaintiff PANAMSAT, L.P.; denying leave to add new defendants and claims).

I. Factual background

The Court assumes the reader's familiarity with the prior opinions in this action and provides below only a rudimentary recitation of the facts and procedural history.

A. Parties

Plaintiffs consist of various formations of Pan American Satellite ("PAS" or "PANAMSAT") and its founder and principal owner, Reynold V. Anselmo ("Anselmo"). Plaintiff Anselmo formerly did business as Alpha Lyracom, a sole proprietorship, which in turn did business as Pan American Satellite, Alpha Lyracom Space Communications, Inc., a Delaware corporation, and PANAMSAT, L.P., a Delaware limited \*\*5 partnership. PANAMSAT, L.P. succeeded Alpha Lyracom after the commencement of this action. The managing general partner of PANAMSAT, L.P. is PANAMSAT, Inc., which is a corporation that was controlled by Plaintiff Anselmo until his death on September 20, 1995. The executors of Plaintiff Anselmo's estate were substituted as Plaintiffs on January 3, 1996.

This action arises out of PAS's launching, marketing and operating the first international commercial communications satellite outside of the International Telecommunications Satellite Organization ("Intelsat"). Non-party Intelsat is an international organization created under a 1961 United Nations resolution that owns and operates a global satellite communications system. See G.A.Res. 1721, 1 U.N. GAOR Supp. (No. 17), \*\*882 at 6, U.N.Doc. A/5100 (1962). Intelsat is structured on three levels: the Assembly of Parties, the Meeting of Signatories, and the Board of Governors. Each member-nation or "party" has a seat and a vote in the Assembly of Parties. The United States has designated the State Department as its representative to the Assembly of Parties. Each party also designates a "signatory" to market and operate the Intelsat communications \*\*6 system within the party's territory. Each signatory is represented in the Meeting of Signatories and on the Board of Governors. Signatories range from public ministries to private corporations, depending on the level of regulation in a nation. Signatories are often referred to as "PTTs," an acronym for "post, telegraph, and telephone" companies. The Board of Governors consists of approximately twenty-nine persons representing all of the signatories in the day-to-day operations of the system. The Director General of Intelsat heads the Board of Governors. See Alpha Lyracom, 1990 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11964, \*6, 1990-2 Trade Cas. \(CCH\) P69,188 at 64,580, 1990 WL 135637 at \*2; Alpha Lyracom Space Communications, Inc. v. Communications Satellite Corp., 946 F.2d 168, 170 \(2d Cir. 1991\).

In 1962 Congress enacted the Communications Satellite Act ("CSA") to implement the United States' participation in Intelsat. See 47 U.S.C. §§ 701 et seq.. Defendant Commercial Satellite Corporation ("Comsat") is a private corporation created under the CSA and designated as the United States' signatory to Intelsat. HN1↑ The CSA provides that Comsat "shall be . . . subject to appropriate governmental regulation" and that "the ownership [**7] of the corporation [(Comsat)] shall be consistent with the federal antitrust laws." See id. § 701\(c\). Comsat is subject to extensive Executive Branch supervision by the State Department and the Federal Communications Commission ("FCC") to assure that Comsat's relations with foreign governments are consistent with the United States' foreign policy. See id. P 721(a)(4).

B. Operation of Intelsat, immunity, & separate systems

Any Intelsat transmission requires the action of two PTT signatories, with each responsible for the transmission of a signal to and from a ground station in its territory and an Intelsat satellite. Rates for the use of Intelsat satellite capacity are uniform and, in the aggregate, cover the costs of operating the system. Rates are set by the Board of Governors, not the signatory PTTs such as Comsat. The procurement of satellite capacity is also regulated, with procurement in excess of $ 500,000 requiring approval of the Board. Signatories have no authority to approve procurement.

HN2↑ To join Intelsat, the United States implemented various international agreements including the 1971 Definitive Agreement (the formative document of Intelsat), and the [**8] 1976 Headquarters Agreement. See Alpha Lyracom, 1990 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11964, \*5, 1990-2 Trade Cas. \(CCH\) P69,188 at 64,580, 1990 WL 135637 at \*2 (Intelsat's headquarters are located in the United States.). These agreements require that each party-nation grant appropriate privileges, exemptions and immunities to Intelsat, to the other parties, the signatories and their representatives. The 1976 Headquarters Agreement provides "the officers and employees of Intelsat, the representatives of the parties and of the signatories . . . shall be immune from suit and legal process relating to acts performed by them in their official capacity . . . ." Alpha Lyracom, 1990 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11964, \*8, 1990-2 Trade Cas. \(CCH\) P69,188 at 64,580-81, 1990 WL 135637 at \*3; see Alpha Lyracom, 946 F.2d at 170-72. This Court previously held, and the Second Circuit affirmed, that Comsat as a signatory is the representative of the United States for Intelsat immunity purposes. See Alpha Lyracom, 1990 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11964, \*8, 1990-2 Trade Cas. \(CCH\) P69,188 at 64,584, 1990 WL 135637 at \*6-7.

While Intelsat was created to establish a single global satellite system, the Definitive Agreement also provides for the creation of separate satellite systems. Article XIV of the Definitive [**9] Agreement sets out a "consultation process." See Alpha Lyracom, 1990 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11964, \*7, 1990-2 Trade Cas. \(CCH\) P69,188 at 64,581-82, 1990 WL 135637 at \*3-4. HN3↑

For domestic satellite services, the party seeking to provide a separate system must consult the Board of Governor's regarding the technical compatibility of the proposed system with Intelsat. [*883] For international services, the party must also consult the Assembly of Parties for approval. See id. Thus a separate international system requires the home government to clear the nascent service with the entire Assembly.

HN4↑ In addition to technical clearance from the Board and approval of the Assembly of Parties, a proposed separate international system must acquire "landing rights" in each nation to which it intends to deliver a signal. Landing rights are authorization from a party to provide or "land" a satellite signal within that party's national territory. Landing rights are generally procured from or with the assistance of the signatory PTT in each nation. Landing rights may issue either as general or limited grant of authority for the provision of independent services, or through some form of joint venture or other arrangement with the PTT. The [**10] scope of authorization is generally governed by the terms of a formal agreement, referred to in the record and herein as an "operating agreement." Depending upon the regulatory structure of a given nation at a given time, landing rights (and therefore operating agreements), may have been literally impossible to obtain.

C. United States' separate systems policy

In 1983 the FCC received several applications to operate separate satellite systems, ultimately resulting in Presidential Determination No. 85-2. See 49 Fed. Reg. 46,987 \(1984\); Alpha Lyracom, 1990 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11964, *10, 1990-2 Trade Cas. \(CCH\) P69,188 at 64,581-82, 1990 WL 135637 at *3-4; Alpha Lyracom, 946 F.2d at 171-72. Determination No. 85-2 allowed the development of separate systems but directed the State Department to consult with Intelsat before authorizing any separate system to ensure that the United States met its obligations under the Definitive Agreement. The President also instructed the Secretaries of the State Department and the Commerce Department to set criteria for final FCC approval of any separate systems. Under these criteria, the FCC required (a) that each new system be restricted to providing services through [\[\*\*11\]](#) the sale or long-term lease of transponders or space segment capacity for communications not interconnected with public switched message networks, and (b) that one or more foreign authorities authorize the use of each proposed separate system prior to FCC approval by granting the proposed system landing rights and by entering into Article XIV consultation procedures with the United States' party to insure technical compatibility of the proposed system with Intelsat satellites. Congress ratified these conditions in the Foreign Relations Authorization Act, Fiscal Years 1986-87 ("FRAA"). See Pub. L. No. 99-93, 99 Stat. 405, 425-2 (1985); Alpha Lyracom, 946 F.2d at 171-73.

While the first applications for approval of proposed separate satellite systems were still pending, the FCC issued a Report and Order dated July 25, 1985 stating that the FCC would not issue a final license for the operation of any separate system "until the U.S. has completed coordination of that system with Intelsat pursuant to Art. XIV(d)." See In re Establishment of Satellite Systems Providing International Communications, FCC Docket No. 84-1299, at 143 (July 25, 1989) ("FCC Report and Order"). In September [\[\*\*12\]](#) 1985, the FCC preliminarily approved Plaintiffs' application to operate a subregional Western Hemisphere satellite system. In September 1987, Plaintiffs received final FCC approval to launch in June 1988 Plaintiffs' first satellite, the "PAS-1." See Alpha Lyracom, 1990 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11964, *2, 1990-2 Trade Cas. \(CCH\) P69,188 at 64,582, 1990 WL 135637 at *4.

D. Response to the United States' separate systems policy

The other parties and signatories to Intelsat widely opposed Presidential Determination No. 85-2 and the United States' support of separate satellite systems. These participants in Intelsat were concerned that permitting competing systems would lead to the destruction of the Intelsat network, to the great disadvantage of regions less technologically developed than the United States. This concern was heightened by the fact that the United States was by far the largest participant in Intelsat, and that any action by the [\[\*884\]](#) United States greatly effected the global system. As a result, at the fourteenth session of the Meeting of Signatories, held in April 1984, the signatories discussed and unanimously ratified a resolution agreeing not to sponsor the development of separate systems. See PAS [\[\*\*13\]](#) Ex. 3085 (record of the Fourteenth Meeting of Signatories of Intelsat). Comsat voted in favor of the resolution. Under the direction of the State Department, however, Comsat also presented to the Meeting of Signatories a statement on the United States' position in favor of separate systems. See PAS Ex. 3085, Attachment No. 2, at 29, Annex (iii) (statement by the signatory of the United States). At the fifteenth session of the Meeting of Signatories, held in April 1985, and the sixteenth session, held in April 1996, the signatories passed resolutions reaffirming their opposition to separate satellite systems as harmful to the Intelsat network. See PAS Ex. 3082 (record of the Fifteenth Meeting of Signatories of Intelsat (Apr. 16, 1985)); PAS Ex. 3084 (record of the Sixteenth Meeting of Signatories of Intelsat (Apr. 10, 1986)).

Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint cites the 1984 Intelsat signatory resolution and the 1985 and 1986 reaffirming resolutions as admissions of a conspiracy involving Intelsat, Comsat and the PTTs. After the Second Circuit affirmed this Court's ruling on Comsat's signatory immunity, Plaintiffs' deleted from their Second and Third Amended Complaints any [**14] claims specifically based on the resolutions, referring to the resolutions only as "evidence" of a conspiracy between Comsat and the PTTs acting as common carriers outside of their roles as Intelsat signatories. Compare 1st Am. Compl. PP 28(c)-(d), with 2d Am. Compl. P 28(b) (omitting references to the resolutions).<sup>1</sup>

II. Procedural history

Plaintiffs' filed the original Complaint on July 25, 1989, and filed a First Amended Complaint on November 22, 1989. On September 13, 1990, the Court dismissed the First Amended Complaint on immunity grounds without reaching the merits of the underlying antitrust claims. See Alpha Lyracom, 1990 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11964, 1990-2 Trade Cas. \(CCH\) P69,188, 1990 WL 135637 \(S.D.N.Y. 1990\). The Court found that signatories were "representatives of the parties;" that the immunity clause of the Headquarters Agreement covering representatives therefore applied to signatories such as Comsat; [**15] and that the antitrust consistency clause of the CSA does not apply to Comsat's actions as a signatory. 1990 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11964, See id. at 64,582-83, 1990 WL 135637 at *6. In the alternative, the Court dismissed the First Amended Complaint pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 19 for failure to join Intelsat, the Intelsat parties, and the Intelsat signatory PTTs as necessary and indispensable parties. 1990 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11964, See id. at 64,584-85, 1990 WL 135637 at *9-10. The Court also dismissed Plaintiffs' state law interference with prospective advantage claim for failure to specify the contracts that were lost. See id. at 64,585-86, 1990 WL 135637 at *10.

The Second Circuit affirmed this Court's rulings on Defendant's immunity and on the antitrust exclusion clause. See Alpha Lyracom Space Communications, Inc. v. Communications Satellite Corp., 946 F.2d 168 \(2d Cir. 1991\), cert. denied, 502 U.S. 1096, 117 L. Ed. 2d 419, 112 S. Ct. 1174 (1992). The Circuit remanded only to give Plaintiffs an opportunity to replead their claims against Comsat in its role as a common carrier, and not as an immune signatory. See Alpha Lyracom, 946 F.2d at 175. The Circuit also warned Plaintiffs that if they presented only a formalistic [**16] repleading of the claims in the First Amended Complaint, the "District Court should not hesitate to dismiss [Plaintiffs' complaint] again." Id.

If [Plaintiffs] can allege specific aspects of COMSAT's conduct as common carrier that are actionable under the antitrust laws, [they are] free to proceed. But the effort will require precise drafting and an avoidance of the scattershot approach evident in the current complaint. In particular, we caution [plaintiffs] not to assume, as [they appear] to do in some of [their] [*885] argument, that an allegation against COMSAT will survive dismissal as long as it is confined to unilateral rather than concerted action. The line to be drawn is not between concerted and unilateral action, since even COMSAT's unilateral action might have been undertaken in its role as signatory to INTELSAT, but between action taken as signatory and action taken as common carrier.

Id. Regarding the PTTs as necessary parties, the Circuit stated:

We need not consider the District Court's alternative ground for dismissal of the antitrust claims--failure to join indispensable parties under Civil Rule 19, since any allegations that [**17] Alpha Lyracom is able to replead challenging COMSAT's conduct in its role as common carrier are unlikely to encounter the indispensable party concerns Judge Keenan noted with respect to the "signatory" allegations.

Id. Concerning the state law claims, the Circuit stated:

Similarly, we need not assess the adequacy of appellant's state law claims for tortious interference with business opportunities since all of these allegations concern COMSAT's consultative activity within INTELSAT relating to the authorization of a competing satellite system. Those are plainly "signatory activities." Appellants may, if so advised, replead state law claims, confined to COMSAT's common carrier role, bearing in mind the strict pleading requirements of state law claims emphasized by the District Court.

---

<sup>1</sup> Plaintiffs' Third Amended Complaint adds PANAMSAT, L.P. as a party and is otherwise identical.

Id.

Plaintiffs' filed their Second Amended Complaint on November 12, 1991. The Second Amended Complaint restated the conspiracy, antitrust and state law claims of the First Amended Complaint, but omitted references to the PTTs as "other Intelsat signatories" and inserted repeated assertions that "all of this conduct has been undertaken by Comsat outside of its capacity as [**18] United States signatory to Intelsat." 2d Am. Compl. P 27.

On March 30, 1993, the Court denied Comsat's motion to dismiss the Second Amended Complaint. The Court rejected Comsat's challenge to subject matter jurisdiction and denied the applicability of the act of state doctrine. See Alpha Lyracom Space Communications, Inc. v. Communications Satellite Corp., 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3825, 1993-1 Trade Cas. \(CCH\) P70,184, 1993 WL 97313 \(S.D.N.Y. 1993\).

With regard to Plaintiffs' conspiracy and antitrust claims, the Court deferred to the liberal pleading requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 8\(a\) and accepted Plaintiffs' representations that the restated claims in the Second Amended Complaint did not implicate Defendant's role as a signatory. See id. at 69,861-62, 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3825, 1993 WL 97313 at *5-6. The Court did not endorse Plaintiffs' claims, as Plaintiffs argue in support of their current motions, but merely noted that "any further distinguishing between Comsat's roles as common carrier and an Intelsat signatory at this time would inappropriately transform this motion to dismiss into a motion for summary judgment." Id. at 69,861, 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3825, 1993 WL 97313 at *4.

The Court denied Defendant's argument that the Noerr-Pennington [**19] doctrine barred Plaintiffs' claim that Comsat interfered with PAS's obtaining landing rights and operating agreements in several nations, finding that the question of the availability of landing rights and operating agreements went beyond the scope of the pleadings. Id. at 69,863, 1993 U.S. LEXIS 3825, 1993 WL 97313 at *8. The Court also denied Defendant's argument that the Noerr-Pennington doctrine--which states that concerted efforts to restrain trade by petitioning government officials are protected from antitrust liability--barred Plaintiffs' claim that Comsat interfered with Plaintiff Anselmo's application to the FCC for a tax deferral certificate. See id.

Finally, the Court denied Defendant's motion to dismiss Plaintiff's claim for injunctive relief under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(7\), and accepted as pleaded Plaintiffs' claims for interference with prospective advantage under New York and Connecticut law. See id. at 69,863-64, 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3825, 1993 WL 97313 at *8.

Plaintiffs moved to file a Third Amended Complaint adding as a plaintiff PANAMSAT, L.P., a Delaware limited partnership formed after the commencement of this action, adding as defendants seventeen PTTs (including [*886] fifteen Intelsat signatories [**20] and two PTT parent companies), and adding new claims allegedly based on acts committed after the filing of the Second Amended Complaint. On June 7, 1994, the Court granted without objection leave to file a Third Amended Complaint adding PANAMSAT, L.P., but denied leave to add any new claims or defendants. See Alpha Lyracom Space Communications, Inc. v. Communications Satellite Corp., 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7464, 1994-2 Trade Cas. \(CCH\) P70,689, 1994 WL 256671 \(S.D.N.Y. 1994\). The Court found that adding new defendants and claims after significant discovery had been completed would result in prejudice and delay. See id. 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7464, *4, at 72,729-30, 1994 WL 256671 at *2. The Court also found that joinder of the foreign PTTs would be improper under the law of the case. See id. 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7464, *5, at 72,730, 1994 WL 256671 at *3.

The parties have concluded extensive discovery. They have taken depositions of more than thirty-five current and former Comsat employees and five third-party witnesses, and have produced well over 330,000 pages of documents among themselves and at least an additional 57,000 pages from nineteen third-parties. See Alpha Lyracom, 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7464, \*2, 1994-2 Trade Cas. \(CCH\) P70,689, 1994 WL 256671 at *1; Def.'s S.J. Mem. at 2. [**21] The only outstanding discovery issues are presented by Plaintiffs' current motions objecting to various orders of the Magistrate Judge, principally concerning the discoverability of the Intelsat signatory resolutions of 1984, 1985, and 1986. The Court addresses those motions below, prior to its discussion of Defendant's motion for summary judgment.

Discussion

I. Plaintiffs' discovery motions

Plaintiffs' object to various discovery orders of Magistrate Judge Nina Gershon. For the reasons discussed below, the Court overrules the objections and affirms the Magistrate Judge's orders.

A. The July 20, 1994 order

On July 20, 1994, Magistrate Judge Gershon entered an order granting Defendant's motion to enforce a prior protective order in this action and awarding Defendant $ 12,744.25 in fees and costs on the motion. Plaintiffs did not object to the fee award. The Magistrate Judge also required Plaintiff Reynold V. Anselmo to use agreed upon language to inform any non-party with whom he communicated concerning access to documents disclosed in this action that the protective order was sought by both parties in order to protect the documents of both parties. Plaintiffs' [**22] counsel consented to this sanction at the hearing on the motion on June 20, 1994. Plaintiffs only objection to the July 20, 1994 order is to its last sentence, which cautions Plaintiffs that future violations of the protective order or the orders of the Court would trigger far more serious sanctions.

In light of the undisputed, multiple violations of the protective order that have occurred in this case, plaintiffs are cautioned that any further violations, or any violations of the directives in the order being issued today, will result in the imposition of far more serious sanctions.

App. to Pls.' Objs. to Order of M.J. Nina Gershon, Ex. A (Order of July 20, 1994) (hereinafter "July 20, 1994 Order").

Pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 636(b)(1)(A), Plaintiffs' objection is subject to a "clearly erroneous" standard, which Plaintiffs do not even attempt to argue. Plaintiffs argue only that the Magistrate Judge's warning "does not accurately reflect, and indeed overstates, the number, nature, and gravity of the violations of the protective order found by the Magistrate Judge," Pls.' Objs. to Order of M.J. Nina Gershon at 2, and that the warning "is inappropriate and unjustified, [**23] and should be reversed." Id. at 5.

After reviewing the Order, Plaintiffs' memorandum of objections with attachments, and Defendant's memorandum in opposition with attachments--including the transcript of the June 20, 1994 hearing on Defendant's motion to enforce the protective order--the Court finds that the warning was entirely appropriate. The Court therefore overrules Plaintiffs' objection and sustains the Magistrate Judge's order. Moreover, the Court agrees with Defendant that Plaintiffs' objection was "an unconscionable waste of judicial resources," "frivolous in the extreme," and "entirely without basis." See Def.'s Opp'n to Pls.' Objs. to Order of M.J. Nina Gershon at 1-2. The Court therefore grants Defendant's application for sanctions, and directs Plaintiffs to pay Defendant's costs and fees associated with the motion.

B. The July 12, 1994 order

Richard Colino was employed at Comsat from 1973 to 1979, served as a consultant to Comsat from 1979 to 1981, and was Director General of Intelsat from 1983 to 1986. Plaintiffs' object to that portion of Magistrate Judge Gershon's July 12, 1994 order which granted Defendant Comsat and non-party Intelsat's motions for [**24] an order under Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(c)(1) and 45(c)(3) quashing the deposition subpoena served by Plaintiffs on Richard Colino, and for a protective order precluding Plaintiffs from taking Colino's deposition with regard (a) to any information obtained by Colino as a result of his role as Director General of Intelsat (including information about the Intelsat signatory resolutions) and (b) to Colino's service at Comsat insofar as Comsat was a signatory to Intelsat (Magistrate Judge Gershon permitted inquiry of Colino regarding Comsat's non-immune, common-carrier role.). See App. to Pls.' Objs. to M.J. Gershon's Order Regarding the Dep. of Richard Colino, Ex. A (Order of July 12, 1994) (hereinafter "Colino Order").

Again, pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 636\(b\)\(1\)\(A\), Plaintiffs' objections are subject to a "clearly erroneous" standard. Plaintiffs argue that two of the rulings in the Magistrate Judge's July 12, 1994 order are clearly erroneous. Plaintiffs argue that the Magistrate Judge erred in finding that Intelsat has not waived its immunity with respect to Colino. Plaintiffs also argue that the Magistrate Judge erred in finding that Plaintiffs may not inquire of Colino concerning the [**25] Intelsat signatory resolutions or the acts of Intelsat, Comsat, and the Intelsat signatory PTTs to implement those resolutions.

1. Intelsat's immunity

In 1977, President Ford designated Intelsat a "public international organization entitled to enjoy the privileges, exemptions and immunities conferred by the International Organizations Immunities Act." Weidner v. International Telecommunications Satellite Org., 392 A.2d 508, 510 \(D.C. 1978\) (citing Exec. Order No. 11966, Jan. 19, 1977, 42 F.R. 4331 \(1977\)). Those immunities include "the same immunity from suit and every form of judicial process as is enjoyed by foreign governments, except to the extent that [it] may expressly waive [its] immunity for the purpose of any proceedings or by the terms of any contract." 22 U.S.C. § 288a\(b\); Exec. Order No. 11966, Jan. 19, 1977, 42 Fed. Reg. 4331; Exec. Order No. 11718, May 14, 1973, 38 Fed. Reg. 12797. The officers, representatives and employees of public international organizations likewise have immunity from suit and legal process for acts performed in their official capacity and within their official functions, unless that immunity is expressly waived by the organization. [**26] See 22 U.S.C. § 288d\(b\); DeLuca v. The United Nations Org., 841 F. Supp. 531, 534-35 \(S.D.N.Y. 1994\). Magistrate Judge Gershon correctly found that Intelsat has not waived its immunity or Colino's in this proceeding. See Colino Order at 6.

Plaintiffs argue that on March 31, 1988, Intelsat's then Director General Dean Burch presented to the United States District Court in the District of Columbia a general waiver for any and all actions involving Colino. Magistrate Judge Gershon properly found to the contrary, ruling that the March 31, 1988 waiver was provided by Intelsat on Judge Royce Lamberth's direction and was limited in form and intent to the civil action then pending before Judge Lamberth, Intelsat V. Richard Colino, Civ. Action No. 87-2749 (D.D.C.) (Lamberth, J.). Written on Intelsat stationary, the letter reads in full:

31 March 1988
 Judge Royce Lamberth
 U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia
 Washington, D.C. 20001
 Dear Judge Lamberth:
 Re: INTELSAT vs. Richard R. Colino
 (Civil No. 87-2749)

Please be advised that in my capacity as Director General of INTELSAT, I hereby waive any and all privileges, exemptions and immunities [**27] of Mr. Richard R. Colino with respect to all actions performed by him while he was in the employment of INTELSAT. This waiver has no restrictions of any kind.

At its 69th meeting the INTELSAT Board of Governors unanimously decided to waive any and all privileges, exemptions and immunities of Mr. Colino in connection with the U.S. Department of Justice investigation, and at its 74th meeting the Board waived Mr. Colino's civil immunity for all of his actions while he was an INTELSAT employee.

Sincerely,
 [signature]
 Dean Burch
 Director General

App. to Pls.' Objs. to M.J. Gershon's Order Regarding the Dep. of Richard Colino, Ex. I (Letter of Dean Burch, Mar. 31, 1988).

In their memorandum in support of their objections Plaintiffs deleted the caption referencing the Intelsat v. Colino action. See Pls.' Objs. to M.J. Gershon's Order Regarding the Dep. of Richard Colino at 5 (hereinafter "Pls.' Colino Mem."). They also overlooked the specific salutation to Judge Lamberth, as opposed to a general salutation which would more definitively establish an express waiver for all actions. Nevertheless, Plaintiffs argue that the 1988 letter is an express waiver for any and [*28] all actions without restriction, see Pls.' Colino Mem. at 7-10 (citing In re Doe, 860 F.2d 40, 46 (2d Cir. 1988); In re Grand Jury Proceedings, Doe No. 700, 817 F.2d 1108, 1110-11 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 890 (1987); Proyecfin de Venezuela, S.A. v. Banco Industrial de Venezuela, S.A., 760 F.2d 390 (2d Cir. 1985); Paul v. Avril, 812 F. Supp. 207, 210 (S.D. Fla. 1993); Marlowe v. Argentine Naval Comm'n, 604 F. Supp. 703 (D.D.C. 1985)), such that the Magistrate Judge erred in reaching the issue of Intelsat's intent under the analysis in Mendaro v. World Bank, 230 U.S. App. D.C. 333, 717 F.2d 610, 617 (D.C. Cir. 1983) and United States v. James, 980 F.2d 1314 (9th Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 838, 126 L. Ed. 2d 84, 114 S. Ct. 119 (1993).

The cases cited by Plaintiffs do not support their contention that the waiver in the 1988 civil action should be applied to the current action and all actions in futuro. Both In re Doe and In re Grand Jury Proceedings, Doe No. 700, involved grand jury investigations of former Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos and his wife Imelda Marcos. Both cases hold that the current government [*29] of a nation may expressly waive the head-of-state immunity of its former leaders and that other nations should give any such express waiver its full effect. See In re Doe, 860 F.2d at 46; In re Grand Jury, 817 F.2d at 1110-11. Notwithstanding the fact that the language of the waiver in those cases "could scarcely be stronger," In re Doe, 860 F.2d at 46, the effect of the waiver was properly limited by its terms to the action before the court. See id. ("This waiver extends only to provision of evidence, [etc.] . . . in the above Grand Jury investigation."").

Proyecfin de Venezuela, Marlowe, and Paul examine the validity and scope of waivers under the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act. See 28 U.S.C. §§ 1330, 1602-11. In Proyecfin de Venezuela, the Second Circuit examined two contractual agreements and determined that an explicit waiver of sovereign immunity in the first agreement was incorporated into the second agreement. See Proyecfin de Venezuela, 760 F.2d at 392-93. In Marlowe, HN5[] the district court held that "if the parties to a contract agree that the laws of one country will govern contractual interpretations, they have implicitly [*30] waived the defense of sovereign immunity." Marlowe, 604 F. Supp. at 709. In Paul, the district court held that an April 9, 1991 waiver by the Government of Haiti that stated that its former President Prosper Avril "enjoyed absolutely no form of immunity" should be given "its due weight." Paul, 812 F. Supp. at 210. (But unlike the Philippine waiver in In re Doe and In re Grand Jury Proceedings, Doe No. 700, the Haitian waiver was not limited to a particular action.). None of these cases support Plaintiffs' contention that the 1988 Intelsat waiver should be applied to this action and all actions in futuro.

On the other hand, the specific salutation and opening reference to the Intelsat v. Colino civil action in the March 31, 1988 waiver raise questions as to whether the waiver was limited to the action before Judge Lamberth. Therefore the Magistrate Judge was completely correct in examining Intelsat's intent under the Mendaro analysis. This Court agrees with the Magistrate Judge's conclusion that Intelsat issued the waiver in order to collect the damages it sustained as a result of Colino's fraudulent conduct against Intelsat, and not to waive irrevocably [*31] Colino's immunity in any and all proceedings. See Colino Order at 5.<sup>2</sup> The Court therefore overrules Plaintiffs' objections and affirms that portion of the Magistrate Judge's July 12, 1994 order finding that Intelsat has not waived its immunity with respect to Colino.

2. Plaintiffs' boycott claims

Plaintiffs also challenge as clearly erroneous the Magistrate Judge's finding that Plaintiffs may not inquire of Colino concerning either the Intelsat signatory resolutions or the acts of Intelsat, Comsat, or the signatory PTTs to implement those resolutions. Plaintiffs argue that the resolutions and their implementation are not privileged because [*887] they are not proper signatory functions. Plaintiffs further argue that even if the passage and implementation of the resolutions were proper signatory functions, [*32] they should be discoverable for the purpose of establishing a record for appeal and the motive behind Comsat's acts as a common-carrier.

---

<sup>2</sup> Plaintiffs did not argue on this motion that Intelsat had any other intent in effecting the waiver, but restricted themselves to the argument that the Court should not reach the issue of Intelsat's intent.

The signatory resolutions are official Intelsat documents resulting from official sessions of the Meeting of Signatories. Comsat participates in those sessions as the signatory of the United States, not as a common-carrier. Although Plaintiffs' argue that the resolutions "could . . . have been agreed to anywhere," Reply Mem. of Pls.' in Supp. of Obj. to Mag.'s Order Regarding Dep. of Richard Colino at 25 (hereinafter "Pls.' Colino Reply Mem."), the fact remains that the resolutions resulted from official sessions of Intelsat signatories. It is not the function of this Court to inject itself into those sessions to determine whether Comsat is properly fulfilling its obligations as the United States' Signatory. Congress assigned that function to the Executive, as even Plaintiffs' acknowledge in their papers. See Pls.' Colino Reply Mem. at 21 (discussing a memorandum of understanding reached by Comsat, the FCC, the State Department, and the Department of Commerce after the 1984 Intelsat signatory resolution); see also Alpha Lyracom, 946 F.2d at 171 [**33] (discussing Executive Branch authority "to oversee and regulate COMSAT's management and operation of the system and its relations with foreign governments and their designated satellite management entities"). The Court's function is to uphold Congress's grant to signatory immunity to Comsat, as it has been explained in the prior orders of this Court and the Second Circuit. See Alpha Lyracom, 1990 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11964, \*17, 1990-2 Trade Cas. \(CCH\) P69,188 at 64,584, 1990 WL 135637 at *6-7; Alpha Lyracom, 946 F.2d at 174-75. Accordingly, discovery concerning the signatory resolutions and their implementation was properly barred.

Plaintiffs' argument that it should be permitted discovery concerning the resolutions in order to create a "factual record" for appeal is a mere attempt to subvert the Second Circuit's affirmation of this Court's findings on Comsat's immunity. Plaintiffs had the opportunity to appeal this issue, exhausted that opportunity, and now must conduct their discovery within the parameters set by the Second Circuit.

Plaintiffs' analogizing Comsat's signatory immunity to a duck blind or sanctuary "in which to plot illegal conduct" misses the mark. Congress exempted the Intelsat Signatories [**34] from suit and legal process in antitrust actions, not from criminal prosecution. In this antitrust action, therefore, the Court will not permit inquiry into Comsat's actions during signatory meetings or while it otherwise acted as a signatory. If, as per Plaintiffs' analogy, this were a criminal action charging Defendant with arson or conspiracy to commit murder, the scope of permissible inquiry obviously would differ.

Plaintiffs' argument that the resolutions and their implementation are discoverable to show intent or motive also fails to persuade the Court. Plaintiffs analogize to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine and the admissibility of evidence of acts which are themselves immune from antitrust liability. See Pls.' Colino Mem. at 17 (citing United States Football League v. NFL, 842 F.2d 1335, 1374 \(2d Cir. 1988\); Alexander v. National Farmers Org., 687 F.2d 1173, 1196 \(8th Cir. 1982\), cert. denied, 461 U.S. 937, 77 L. Ed. 2d 313, 103 S. Ct. 2108 (1983); Feminist Women's Health Center, Inc. v. Mohammad, 586 F.2d 530, 543 n.7 \(5th Cir. 1978\), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 924, 62 L. Ed. 2d 180, 100 S. Ct. 262 (1979)). But the Magistrate Judge correctly found that [**35] the immunity from suit and legal process enjoyed by Intelsat signatories is much broader than the exemption from antitrust liability at issue in the cases Plaintiffs cite. See Colino Order at 7-8. Those cases speak exemption or immunity from antitrust liability. They do not address the exemption from suit and legal process enjoyed by Intelsat signatories.

In sum, the Court finds that Comsat's signatory immunity has not been waived and therefore precludes Plaintiffs' from using Comsat's conduct as an Intelsat signatory to prove a conspiracy or boycott by Comsat as a common carrier. The Court overrules Plaintiffs' objections and affirms the Magistrate Judge's July 12, 1994 order in all respects.

[*888] 3. Defendant's application for sanctions

Defendant Comsat moves for an award of its costs and expenses on the motion. The Court declines the application as to the July 12, 1994 order.

C. The September 27, 1994 order

Plaintiffs also object to those portions of the Magistrate Judge's September 27, 1994 order denying two of Plaintiffs' motions to compel answers to Plaintiffs' discovery requests and granting Defendant's motion for a protective order.

1. Plaintiffs' motion [**36] to compel responses

Plaintiffs's first motion to compel sought answers to Plaintiffs' Request for Admission No. 12 and Plaintiffs' Interrogatory No. 42. Plaintiffs' Request for Admission No. 12 and Defendant's response were as follows:

REQUEST NO. 12:

The statements contained in paragraph 28(d) of the complaint that you instigated, voted for, participated in, and caused to be adopted a resolution by Intelsat signatories "to refrain from entering into any arrangements which may lead to the establishment and subsequent use of" competing alternative satellite systems "to carry traffic to or from their respective countries," and on at least two occasions joined with Intelsat to ratify and reaffirm that resolution are true.

RESPONSE

COMSAT objects to this request because it calls for information relating to COMSAT's role as the United States signatory to INTELSAT which is outside the permissible scope of this lawsuit.

App. to Objs. of Pls.' to Disc. Orders of M.J. Gershon of Sept. 27, 1994, Ex. C at 9 (Comsat's Resps. to Pls.' 1st & 2d Sets of Reqs. for Admiss.). Plaintiffs' Interrogatory No. 42 and Defendant's response are as follows:

INTERROGATORY [**37] NO. 42: From 1984 to the present, have you had any understanding or agreement, express or implied, with any entity to refrain from entering into any arrangement which may lead to the establishment or subsequent use of a separate international satellite system to carry traffic to or from any country originating from or terminating in the United States?

RESPONSE: In addition to the General Objections set forth above, COMSAT objects to this interrogatory to the extent it calls for information pertaining to COMSAT's role as the United States signatory to Intelsat. COMSAT further objects to this interrogatory on the grounds that it is vague and unintelligible. Subject to these objections, COMSAT's answer is no.

Id., Ex. C at 6 (Comsat's Resps. to Pls.' 5th Set of Interrogs. & Reqs. for Production of Docs.). For the reasons set forth above in the Court's discussion of Plaintiffs' boycott claims, the Court finds Defendant's responses appropriate. The Court agrees that Plaintiffs' Request for Admission No. 12 rests on the Intelsat signatory resolutions and the signatory boycott claims. The Court dismissed those claims from the First Amended Complaint on the grounds that [**38] they were barred by Defendant's Intelsat signatory immunity. Plaintiffs subsequently represented they had dropped those claims from the current complaint. The Court also agrees that Plaintiffs' sole basis for challenging Comsat's response to Interrogatory No. 42 was Comsat's proper refusal to disclose information about the Intelsat signatory resolutions. The Court therefore overrules Plaintiffs' objections and affirms the Magistrate Judge's order as to the motion to compel responses.

2. Plaintiffs' motion to compel production

Plaintiffs' second motion sought to compel production of documents responsive to subparagraph 24 of Plaintiffs' Document Request No. 76. The request and Defendant's response were as follows:

DOCUMENT REQUEST NO. 76: In relation to each meeting identified below, produce all documents referring thereto, and all documents used in conjunction with, or arising from, any such meeting:

Meetings between representatives from Comsat and representatives from each of the foreign PTTs set forth in Paragraph K of this Document Request, "to urge all [**889] Signatories to refrain from entering into any' arrangements which may lead to the establishment and subsequent [**39] use" of other satellite systems "to carry traffic to or from their respective countries" following the April 1984 meeting of signatories memorialized in the "Intelsat Meeting of Signatories Record of Decisions of the Fourteenth Meeting" at pp. 11-12. (Ex. 31, hereto).

RESPONSE:

COMSAT incorporates its General Objections and files the following specific objections to Document Request No. 76. . . . COMSAT objects to Request No. 76 to the extent it calls for documents relating to subjects deleted from the original complaint and not found in the Second Amended Complaint. . . . COMSAT objects to Request No. 76 to the extent it calls for information relating to COMSAT's role as the U.S. Signatory to INTELSAT (particularly subparagraph 24).

Id., Ex. C at 6, 11 (Comsat's Resps. to Pls.' 6th Set of Interrogs. & Reqs. for Production of Docs.). The Court agrees that Plaintiffs' sole basis for challenging Comsat's response to this request was Comsat's proper refusal to disclose information about the Intelsat signatory resolutions. For the reasons stated above, the Court overrules Plaintiffs' objections and affirms the order of the Magistrate Judge as to the motion to compel [**40] production.

3. Defendant's motion for a protective order

Plaintiffs also object to Magistrate Judge Gershon's granting Defendant's motion for a protective order precluding Plaintiffs from taking a Rule 30(b)(6) deposition that was directed solely at Intelsat and signatory conduct, particularly the Intelsat signatory resolutions and their implementation. For the reasons stated above, the Court overrules Plaintiffs' objections and affirms the order of the Magistrate Judge as to the granting of Defendant's motion for a protective order.

4. Defendant's application for sanctions

Defendant Comsat again moves for an award of its costs and expenses on the motion. This application presents an extremely close call, insofar as the Court agrees with the Magistrate Judge's assessment of Plaintiffs' intentions concerning the discovery motions directed at Defendant Comsat's immunity and the Intelsat signatory resolutions.

The plaintiff's position with regard to immunity is rejected. In my view, what the plaintiff's position on these motions amounts to is a last-ditch effort to completely change the parameters of this litigation as laid down by the Second Circuit and Judge [**41] Keenan. . . . Judge Keenan accepted plaintiff's representations that . . . plaintiff was alleging something different from what it alleged initially, in particular, as to the Intelsat boycott resolutions. Apparently now, from the oral argument, it appears that the boycott alleged in the second amended complaint is one and the same as the so-called Intelsat boycott, as reflected in the resolutions, and which was alleged as a principal focus of the initial complaint, and which was, so it was represented to Judge Keenan, dropped when the complaint was amended.

App. to Obj. of Pls.' to Disc. Orders of M.J. Gershon of Sept. 27, 1994, Ex. A at 1 (Order of Sept. 27, 1994), Ex. B at 26-27 (Hrg Tr. (Sept. 21, 1994)).

In addition, Plaintiffs misrepresented the law of the case by asserting that this Court somehow validated Plaintiffs' boycott and conspiracy claims by denying Defendant's motion to dismiss those portions of the Second Amended Complaint. See Reply of Pls.' to Opp'n of Comsat to Obj. of Pls.' to Disc. Orders of M.J. Gershon of Sept. 27, 1994, at 12 (hereinafter "Pls.' Sept. 27, 1994 Reply"). On a motion to dismiss, the pleadings must be read in the light most favorable [**42] to the plaintiff. See *Alpha Lyracom, 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3825, *10, 1993-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P70,184 at 69,860, 1993 WL 97313* at *3 (citing Zinermon v. Burch, 494 U.S. 113, 118, 110 S. Ct. 975, 979, 108 L. Ed. 2d 100 (1990); Scheuer v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232, 237, 94 S. Ct. 1683, 1687, 40 L. Ed. 2d 90 (1974); Yoder v. Orthomolecular Nutrition Inst., Inc., 751 F.2d 555, 562 (2d Cir. 1985)). The Court therefore properly read Plaintiffs' claims in light of Plaintiffs' representations that they had dropped any claims based on Defendant's conduct as an Intelsat signatory, on Intelsat meetings or activities, and on the Intelsat signatory resolutions. 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3825. See id. at 69,861, 1993 WL 97313 at *3-4. The Court then denied Defendant's motion to dismiss on the grounds that a conspiracy to boycott proven without resort to the resolutions, Intelsat, or signatory conduct would not implicate the Defendant's immunity. See id. Plaintiffs' motions before the Magistrate Judge and this Court reveal that Plaintiffs' earlier representations to the Court were not in fact completely forthcoming. Had the Plaintiffs represented on the motion to dismiss that their alleged conspiracy and boycott claims rested on the Intelsat [**43] signatory resolutions those claims might not have survived that motion.

The Court nevertheless denies Defendant's application for costs and expenses. The Court has no desire to punish litigants for presenting arguably valid positions. Plaintiffs' objections to the Magistrate Judge's July 12, 1994 order were still pending when Plaintiffs filed this motion. Plaintiffs' might have expected a favorable ruling on those earlier filed objections, which would in turn have supported Plaintiffs' objections to the September 27, 1994 order. In light of this, Plaintiffs should not be sanctioned for filing the motion. The Court therefore exercises its discretion and declines to award costs and expenses.

For the reasons discussed above, the Court overrules Plaintiffs' objections and affirms the orders of the Magistrate Judge in all respects. Discovery is therefore complete. The Court addresses below Defendant's motion for summary judgment.

II. Defendant's motion for summary judgment

Defendant moves for summary judgment on all of the claims in Plaintiffs' Third Amended Complaint. The Court heard argument from the parties on the motion on August 3, 1995.

A. Overview

The central [**44] allegation in Plaintiffs' Third Amended Complaint is that Defendant Comsat entered into a conspiracy to prevent PAS's entry into the commercial communications satellite market and generally to prevent the development of satellite systems separate and apart from Intelsat. See 3d Am. Compl. P 27. Plaintiffs allege that Comsat was joined in the conspiracy by the PTTs in Chile, Argentina, Brazil, Venezuela, Colombia, Guatemala, Jamaica, Barbados, Trinidad & Tobago, the Dominican Republic, the United Kingdom, France, Germany, Italy, and Spain, all of which were also the Intelsat signatory for their respective nation, with the possible exception of the PTT in Guatemala. See 3d Am. Compl. P 26; Pls.' 3(g) Statement P 14 at 8. Plaintiffs claim that in furtherance of the conspiracy the PTTs refused to provide PAS with landing rights and operating agreements in their respective countries. Plaintiffs claim that Comsat furthered this conspiracy by refusing to purchase capacity from PAS, creating services and joint ventures which would directly compete with PAS, and disparaging PAS to prospective customers. See 3d Am. Compl. P 28.

Plaintiffs frame eleven claims from their core allegation [**45] of a conspiracy against PAS and from the conduct alleged in support of that conspiracy. Plaintiffs raise two claims under § 1 of the Sherman Act, consisting of one claim of conspiracy to boycott and to refuse to deal with PAS, and one claim of conspiring to restrain trade and commerce in the relevant market and the geographic submarkets. See 3d Am. Compl. P 33. Plaintiffs raise seven claims under § 2 of the Sherman Act, consisting of one claim of monopolization [*890] involving the United States market, three claims of attempted monopolization respectively involving the United States market, domestic and regional markets in Central and South America, and domestic and regional markets in Europe, and three claims of conspiracy to monopolize, again respectively involving the United States market, domestic and regional markets in Central and South America, and domestic and regional markets in Europe. See 3d Am. Compl. P 32. Plaintiffs also raise two claims of interference with prospective advantage respectively under the common law of New York and Connecticut. See 3d Am. Compl. P 34.

In opposition to the current motion, Plaintiffs argue that summary judgment is inappropriate because [**46] Defendant's intent is a material issue in dispute with regard to much of the evidence and several of the claims. See Pls.' Mem. in Opp'n to Def.'s Mot. for Summ. J. (hereinafter "Pls.' Opp'n Mem.") at 28 (claim for refusal to use PAS capacity), 31 (Latin American joint venture claims), & 32 (Atlantic Television claim). The Court disagrees.

HN6[<sup>1</sup>] Both the Supreme Court and the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit have held, in antitrust cases involving allegations of conscious parallelism and concerted refusals to deal, that summary judgment may be granted in such cases if the moving party is able to show that the facts relied on by the plaintiff in support of its allegations are not susceptible of the interpretation the plaintiff seeks to give them and the plaintiff fails to respond to such a showing with 'significant probative evidence' in support of its theory of the case.

Harlem River Consumers Corp. v. Associated Grocers of Harlem, 1976 Trade Cas. (CCH) P60,820 at 68,575, 1976 WL 1238 at *4 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 5, 1976); see also Modern Home Institute, Inc. v. Hartford Accident & Indemnity Co., 513 F.2d 102, 110 (2d Cir. 1975) ("Under these circumstances, unless [**47] plaintiffs have thus far turned up evidence from the defendants or elsewhere supporting their conspiracy theory we do not see how, in the face of defendants' uncontradicted evidence negating it, trial would give them any greater opportunity to elicit from defendants and their employees evidence tending to prove it.").

Defendant's principal argument on the current motion is that Plaintiffs have failed to provide any evidence from which a reasonable jury could infer either the existence of the alleged conspiracy to boycott or to refuse to deal with PAS, or Comsat's membership in any such boycott or conspiracy. Comsat also argues that to the extent that Plaintiffs may have shown evidence of Comsat's opposition to separate satellite systems, such opposition is either immune conduct undertaken in Comsat's signatory role, or permissible competitive conduct undertaken in Comsat's common carrier role.

Comsat's secondary arguments are that Plaintiffs have failed to show that Comsat proximately caused any antitrust or other injury to PAS; that Plaintiffs have failed to provide a reasonable estimate of their alleged damages; and that Plaintiffs have failed to apportion their damage demand among [**48] the various claims alleged. Comsat also argues that Plaintiffs' failure to apportion damages is an admission that the many acts alleged in the Third Amended Complaint constitute a single boycott claim and do not allege independent antitrust violations. Comsat cites Plaintiffs' papers in opposition, wherein Plaintiffs admit that all of the acts alleged including [Comsat's] Latin American ventures, Atlantic Television ("ATV"), COMSAT's refusal to accept PAS offers of satellite capacity, COMSAT's filing against PAS's tax deferral, and COMSAT's representations to customers that PAS would be unable to obtain landing rights . . . were in furtherance of the overall conspiracy with the PTTs to boycott separate systems.

Pls.' Opp'n Mem. at 3.<sup>3</sup>

[**49] At oral argument Plaintiffs disavowed any reading of their papers which would limit [*891] the Complaint to the boycott claim. See Alpha Lyracom Space Communications, Inc., et al. v. Comsat Corp., 89 Civ. 5021 (JFK), Hr'g Tr. at 17-18 (Aug. 3, 1995). Plaintiffs argued that although each act alleged in the Third Amended Complaint supports the alleged conspiracy to boycott or to refuse to deal with PAS, many of those acts are also pleaded as independent antitrust violations. See id. (referencing Pls.' Opp'n Mem. at 23 (arguing that Defendant's alleged refusal to deal with PAS constitutes a separate act of monopolization in violation of § 2), 28 (arguing that Defendant's Latin American joint ventures constitute separate acts of monopolization in violation of § 2 "if undertaken for an exclusionary purpose")). Reading the Third Amended Complaint favorably to Plaintiffs, the Court must examine the evidentiary support for each alleged act both as an act in furtherance of the alleged conspiracy and as an independent antitrust violation.

Finally, Comsat argues that the Court should dismiss Plaintiffs' claims under the act of state doctrine or for failure to join as indispensable parties [**50] the alleged conspirator PTTs. The Court addresses these arguments after examining the alleged conspiracy and Plaintiffs' claims for damages.

<sup>3</sup> See also Pls.' Opp'n Mem. at 7 ("As will be shown, all of this other conduct, from the joint ventures to ATV to the tax certificate to the disparagement to the refusal to take capacity on PAS-1, was directly and inextricably connected with the separate systems boycott, and furthered that conspiracy. Accordingly, the separate acts cannot be compartmentalized, but must be viewed in the context of the evidence as a whole.") (emphasis added); id. at 47 ("Because the underlying boycott was the cause of PAS's injury, and the other acts were incidental to and in furtherance of the boycott, PAS has not attempted to attribute damages to each of those subsidiary actions.").)

B. Standard

HN7 Fed. R. Civ. P. 56 "mandates the entry of summary judgment after adequate time for discovery and upon motion," Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 2552, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986), if the entire record demonstrates that "there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 250, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 2511, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986). The burden of showing that no genuine issue of material fact exists rests on the movant. See Adickes v. S.H. Kress & Co., 398 U.S. 144, 157, 90 S. Ct. 1598, 1608, 26 L. Ed. 2d 142 (1970). The burden will be satisfied if the movant can point to an absence of evidence to support an essential element of the nonmoving party's claim. See Goenaga v. March of Dimes Birth Defects Found., 51 F.3d 14, 18 (2d Cir. 1995). If the movant satisfies its burden, the nonmoving party must then "set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial." Fed. R. [**51] Civ. P. 56(e); Anderson, 477 U.S. at 248-49, 106 S. Ct. at 2510 (requiring non-movant responding to a properly supported motion for summary judgment to adduce "significant probative supporting evidence" demonstrating that a factual dispute exists); Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 587, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 1356, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986) (requiring non-movant to present sufficient evidence to allow "a rational trier of fact to find for the non-moving party").

HN8 In viewing the evidence to determine whether there exists a genuine issue for trial, the Court must "assess the record in the light most favorable to the non-movant and . . . draw all reasonable inferences in its favor." Delaware & Hudson Railway Co. v. Consolidated Rail Corp., 902 F.2d 174, 177 (2d Cir. 1990), cert. denied, 500 U.S. 928, 114 L. Ed. 2d 125, 111 S. Ct. 2041 (1991); see Adickes, 398 U.S. at 157, 90 S. Ct. at 1608. The Court may not resolve issues of fact, it may only ascertain whether such issues are present. See Donahue v. Windsor Locks Bd. of Fire Comm'r's, 834 F.2d 54, 58 (2d Cir. 1987). In antitrust litigation, however, the non-moving party must set forth facts [**52] that tend to preclude an inference of permissible conduct. See Capital Imaging v. Mohawk Valley Medical Assoc., 996 F.2d 537, 542 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 947, 126 L. Ed. 2d 337, 114 S. Ct. 388 (1993) (citing Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 588, 106 S. Ct. at 1356).

HN9 Although difficult in factually complex cases, see Hayden Publishing Co. v. Cox Broadcasting Corp., 730 F.2d 64, 68 (2d Cir. 1984), summary judgment is not disfavored in antitrust actions. On the contrary, recognizing that summary judgment is not a substitute for trial, current Supreme Court and Second Circuit cases have "tended to [**892] encourage its use in complex cases such as this one." Apex Oil Co. v. DiMauro, 822 F.2d 246, 252 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 977, 108 S. Ct. 489, 98 L. Ed. 2d 487 (1987) (citing Celotex Corp., 477 U.S. at 327, 106 S. Ct. at 2555; Anderson, 477 U.S. at 242, 106 S. Ct. at 2505); Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 574, 106 S. Ct. at 1356; Knight v. U.S. Fire Ins. Co., 804 F.2d 9, 12 (2d Cir. 1986), cert. denied, 480 U.S. 932, 94 L. Ed. 2d 762, 107 S. Ct. 1570 (1987); Eastway Construction Corp. v. City of New York, 762 F.2d 243, 250-51 (2d Cir. 1985)); see also Capital Imaging, 996 F.2d at 541 ("Summary judgment remains a vital procedural tool . . . and may be particularly important in antitrust litigation."). If no material fact is presented after years of discovery including dozens of depositions and the production of thousands of documents, and the "most that can be hoped for is the discrediting of [the] defendants' denials at trial," a court must grant summary judgment. Modern Home, 513 F.2d at 110; Perma Research & Development Co. v. Singer Co., 410 F.2d 572, 578 (2d Cir. 1969) ("Summary judgment cannot be defeated by the vague hope that something may turn up at trial.").

III. Sherman Act § 1 conspiracies

HN10 Section 1 of the Sherman Act prohibits "every contract, combination . . . or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations." See 15 U.S.C. § 1. On a motion for summary judgment against a § 1 claim a court initially must determine whether a reasonable jury could find that there was some form of concerted action between two or more legally distinct entities. "Only after an illegal agreement is shown will a court consider whether the agreement constituted an unreasonable restraint [**54] of trade, whether per se or under the rule of reason." AD/SAT v. Associated Press, et al., 920 F. Supp. 1287, 1308 (S.D.N.Y. 1996) (Leisure, J.) (citing Capital Imaging, 996 F.2d at 542). In making this threshold determination, the Court must bear in mind that the "range of inferences" that a trier of fact may draw from ambiguous evidence in a § 1 case is limited, and the non-movant must "set forth facts that tend to preclude an inference of permissible conduct." Capital Imaging, 996 F.2d at 542.

HN11[↑] But antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a § 1 case. Thus, in Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984), we held that conduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy. Id. at 764, 104 S. Ct. at 1470. See also Cities Service, supra, 391 U.S. 253, 280, 88 S. Ct. at 1588. To survive a motion for summary judgment or for a directed verdict, a plaintiff seeking damages for a violation of § 1 must present evidence "that tends to exclude the possibility" that [**55] the alleged conspirators acted independently. 465 U.S. at 764, 104 S. Ct. at 1471. Respondents in this case, in other words, must show that the inference of conspiracy is reasonable in light of the competing inferences of independent action or collusive action that could not have harmed respondents. See Cities Service, supra, 391 U.S. at 280, 88 S. Ct. at 1588.

Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 587, 106 S. Ct. at 1356-57; see Apex Oil Co., 822 F.2d at 252; Minpeco, S.A. v. Conticommodity Services, Inc., 673 F. Supp. 684, 688 (S.D.N.Y. 1987). HN12[↑] Plaintiffs, therefore, must present evidence which reasonably tends to prove that Comsat "had a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective." Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 764, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 1471, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984) (quoting Edward J. Sweeney & Sons v. Texaco, Inc., 637 F.2d 105, 111 (3d Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 451 U.S. 911, 68 L. Ed. 2d 300, 101 S. Ct. 1981 (1981)); Minpeco, 673 F. Supp. at 688; Harlem River, 1976-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P60,820 at 68,575, 1976 WL 1238 at *4; see also Michelman v. Clark-Schwebel Fiber Glass Corp., 534 F.2d 1036, 1043 (2d Cir. 1976) (requiring a showing sufficient to warrant a jury in finding that the conspirators had a "unity of purpose or a common design and understanding, or a meeting of the minds in an unlawful arrangement") (quoting American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 810, 66 S. Ct. I*893] 1125, 1139, 90 L. Ed. 1575 (1946)), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 885 (1979).

According to Plaintiffs, the common scheme to which Comsat consciously agreed was a conspiracy to boycott and to refuse to deal with PAS. See 3d Am. Compl. P 33. If true, the conspiracy constitutes a per se violation of the Sherman Act. HN13[↑] Some group boycotts involving concerted refusals to deal with a competitor" are per se violations. See Capital Imaging, 996 F.2d at 543 (citing Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207, 211-12, 79 S. Ct. 705, 708-09, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741 (1959)). Plaintiffs, therefore, need only to show the existence of the alleged conspiracy and Defendant's participation in it. See Capital Imaging, 996 F.2d at 542; International Distrib. Centers, Inc. v. Walsh Trucking Co., 812 F.2d 786, 793 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 482 U.S. 915, 96 L. Ed. 2d 676, [**57] 107 S. Ct. 3188 (1987).

Plaintiffs also claim that Defendant violated § 1 by conspiring to restrain unreasonably trade and commerce in the relevant markets. See 3d Am. Compl. P 33. Like most § 1 claims, this claim must be analyzed under the rule of reason. The rule of reason requires the fact finder "to weigh all the circumstances of a case in deciding whether a restrictive practice should be prohibited as imposing an unreasonable restraint on competition." Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania, Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 49, 97 S. Ct. 2549, 2557, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568 (1977). HN14[↑] Plaintiffs must still show Defendant Comsat's participation in an illegal contract, combination or conspiracy. Plaintiffs must then prove an antitrust injury by showing that the illegal agreement caused an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in a relevant market. Proof that Plaintiffs have been harmed as an individual market actor is not enough. See Capital Imaging, 996 F.2d at 542-43; International Distrib., 812 F.2d at 793 (citing Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, 429 U.S. 477, 488, 97 S. Ct. 690, 697, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977)). If Plaintiffs satisfy this threshold burden, [**58] Defendant Comsat must offer evidence of the pro-competitive virtues of the challenged combination. If Comsat presents such evidence, Plaintiffs must show that any legitimate objectives could have been achieved by less restrictive alternatives. See Capital Imaging, 996 F.2d at 543. In other words, Plaintiffs must show that the "anticompetitive effects of the alleged conspiracy outweigh its procompetitive effects." International Distrib., 812 F.2d at 793 (citing National Soc'y of Prof. Eng'r's v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 691, 98 S. Ct. 1355, 1365, 55 L. Ed. 2d 637 (1978)).

A. Comsat's conscious participation in a common scheme

Plaintiffs argue that the existence of the alleged conspiracy and Comsat's conscious participation therein may be inferred from the record in three ways. Plaintiffs principally argue that the conspiracy and Comsat's participation may be inferred from an alleged pattern of refusals by the alleged PTT conspirators to grant PAS landing rights and operating agreements, coupled with additional considerations or "plus factors." Plaintiffs next argue that the conspiracy and Comsat's participation may be inferred from Comsat's alleged refusal to [**59] purchase space segment capacity from PAS. Plaintiffs then argue that the conspiracy and Comsat's participation may be inferred from Comsat's alleged "pattern and practice" of "tracking PAS throughout the world" and forming ventures in Europe and Latin America, allegedly for the exclusive purpose of preventing PAS's entry into those markets.

1. Parallel refusals and plus factors

Plaintiffs attempt to show the existence of the alleged conspiracy by showing allegedly parallel conduct among Comsat and various PTT co-conspirators. However "HN15[<sup>15</sup>] evidence of parallel conduct alone cannot suffice to prove an antitrust conspiracy." Apex Oil Co., 822 F.2d at 252 (citing Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 764, 104 S. Ct. at 1471 (quoting Edward J. Sweeney & Sons, 637 F.2d at 111)). More must be shown.

HN16[<sup>16</sup>] Since mere parallel behavior can be consistent with independent conduct, courts have held that a plaintiff must show the existence of additional circumstances, often referred to as "plus" factors, which, when viewed in conjunction with the parallel acts, can serve to allow a fact-finder to infer a conspiracy.

Apex Oil Co., 822 F.2d at 253 (citations omitted); Modern Home, I<sup>\*\*60</sup> 513 F.2d at 110 ("HN17[<sup>17</sup>] Additional facts or circumstances are needed to show that the decisions were interdependent and thus raise the inference of a tacit agreement to boycott."); Minpeco, 673 F. Supp. at 688; Harlem River, 1976-1 Trade Cas. \(CCH\) P60,820 at 68,575, 1976 WL 1238 at *4. Plus factors, however, "may not necessarily lead to an inference of conspiracy . . . . [and] could lead to an equally plausible inference of mere interdependent behavior." Apex Oil Co., 822 F.2d at 254.

Plaintiffs allege as plus factors a common motive to conspire, a high level of interfirm communications, "customary indications" of a traditional conspiracy, and evidence that the alleged parallel conduct was contrary to the alleged conspirators' economic interests. See id.; Minpeco, 673 F. Supp. at 688. HN18[<sup>18</sup>] The Court necessarily examines each of these factors and the alleged refusals to deal individually. The Court, however, does not examine each piece of evidence in a vacuum, but considers the evidence as a whole to determine the reasonableness of inferences to be drawn by a jury. See Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 699, 82 S. Ct. 1404, 1405, 8 L. Ed. 2d 777 [<sup>**61</sup>] (1962); International Distrib., 812 F.2d at 793-94; Minpeco, 673 F. Supp. at 688.

HN19[<sup>19</sup>] Moreover, the alleged refusals to deal must be viewed in their factual context. See AD/SAT, 920 F. Supp. at 1308 (citing Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 587, 106 S. Ct. at 1356 (discussing First Nat'l Bank of Ariz. v. Cities Serv. Co., 391 U.S. 253, 288-89, 88 S. Ct. 1575, 1592-93, 20 L. Ed. 2d 569 \(1968\))). When the factual context indicates that a defendant lacked a rational motivation to join the alleged conspiracy to boycott, the plaintiffs "must come forward with more persuasive evidence to support their claim than would otherwise be necessary." Matsushita 475 U.S. at 587, 106 S. Ct. at 1356 (citing Cities Serv., 391 U.S. at 278-79, 88 S. Ct. at 1587); see also Apex Oil Co., 822 F.2d at 253 ("HN20[<sup>20</sup>] If the scheme alleged is implausible, a conspiracy must be proved by strong direct or strong circumstantial evidence, and the implausibility of the scheme will reduce the range of inferences that may be permissibly drawn from ambiguous evidence."). Defendant argues that PAS's alleged conspiracy makes no economic sense and therefore is implausible. The Court disagrees. The [**62] alleged conspiracy, if true, would have served the conspirators' economic interests by preventing competition in an industry with high regulatory and financial barriers to entry. The Court therefore finds that no heightened showing is required.<sup>4</sup>

[**63] (A) No reasonable inference of parallel refusals

Plaintiffs have failed to present evidence from which a trier of fact could find that the individual PTTs refused to deal or delayed their dealings with PAS, let alone that any such refusals or delays formed a pattern of conscious, parallel conduct involving Comsat. Instead Plaintiffs have presented only unsubstantiated argument that the PTTs had the ability to conspire against PAS, and conclusory assertions that they must have exercised that ability. This showing is insufficient.

Plaintiffs contend that Defendant Comsat and the PTTs conspired to prevent PAS from gaining access to commercial communications satellite markets by denying or delaying Plaintiffs' procurement of operating agreements. According to the record, operating agreements are one of the two prerequisites to market access.<sup>5</sup> An

---

<sup>4</sup> Defendant does not present any evidence tending to show that the alleged conspiracy, if successful, would operate contrary to the interests of the alleged conspirators. Counterintuitively, Plaintiffs present the strongest evidence that the alleged boycott would have operated against the interests of the PTTs, and therefore that a heightened showing is required.

Plaintiffs argue that PAS offered substantial advantages over the Intelsat system, including lower prices, higher power and the opportunity to resell PAS capacity for incremental profits. See Pls.' 3(g) Statement P 17 (citing Saralegui Dep. Vol. 1 at 187-89 (alleging obstruction of PAS through the Intelsat process), Vol. 2 at 256-57 (alleging that PAS offered the PTTs a percentage in return for access and required no service functions from the PTTs); PAS Ex. 82 (handwritten notes comparing PAS and Comsat); Skjei Dep. at 39-42 (discussing PAS Ex. 82 and advantages of PAS over Comsat, including price); Giarman Dep. at 84 (discussing PAS Ex. 82); Crockett Dep. Vol. 2 at 328-31 (discussing PAS Ex. 82 and advantages of PAS over Comsat, including price and power); Carroll Dep. Vol. 1 at 50-52 (discussing PAS Ex. 82 and advantages of PAS power and flexible pricing), 97-98 (discussing shortage in Comsat Ku-band capacity); Alewine Dep. Vol. 2 at 188-91 (acknowledging Comsat capacity shortage prior to Intelsat-K and Intelsat VI satellites coming on line); Kopinski Dep. at 40-41 (acknowledging Comsat shortage of station-kept, Ku-band capacity prior to Intelsat-K), 126-27 (acknowledging a lack of high-power Ku capacity on Intelsat in 1990, before Intelsat-K and the Intelsat VI and VII satellites), 132-35 (acknowledging shortage in full-time voice grade capacity to Latin America prior to Intelsat VI satellites); PAS Ex. 2894 (ISS Strategic Business Plan, 1991-93); Popkin Dep. at 54-62 (listing alleged advantages of PAS as reported by potential customers, including digital compression service, orbital location and station kept signal), 71-73 (acknowledging shortage of station-kept capacity but denying knowledge of any PAS offer to sell capacity to Comsat); Salvati Dep. at 38-40 (acknowledging a shortage in Ku-band capacity on Comsat until launch of Intelsat K-4 in 1992, and denying effort to obstruct major broadcasters from switching to PAS); Schnicke Dep. at 22-23 (acknowledging periods of capacity shortages on Comsat); Tanner Dep. Vol. 1 at 16-17 (acknowledging shortages in Ku-band capacity); Twining Dep. at 30-31 (acknowledging shortages of Ku-band capacity); Comsat Ex. 988 (Statement of Reynold Anselmo, Chairman of PAS, July 28, 1994, before the Committee on Energy and Commerce Subcommittee on Telecommunications and Finance); PAS Ex. 1102 (March 24, 1989 Comsat/Entel Chile Joint Venture Proposal); Balz Dep. at 80-85 (discussing licensing of private providers of voice telephony services within the former East Germany to meet the exceptional demand created by reunification)). Plaintiffs then reason that the PTTs, in the face of these advantages, should have switched to PAS. The fact that the PTTs did not enthusiastically switch to PAS, Plaintiffs claim, can only be explained by the existence of the alleged conspiracy. In other words, according to Plaintiffs the fact that the alleged conspiracy makes no economic sense helps to prove its existence.

Despite Plaintiffs' reliance on this argument, the Court finds that the alleged conspiracy is not economically implausible and therefore a heightened showing is not required.

<sup>5</sup> The other prerequisite identified in the record is formal approval under Article XIV of the Intelsat agreements, which ensures the technical compatibility of any proposed new operator. Article XIV(c) approval or "consultations" allow domestic transmissions, and Article XIV(d) consultations allow international transmissions.

A service provider seeking to enter a market generally would undertake to secure Article XIV consultations prior to seeking an operating agreement, although there is some disagreement between the parties on this point. Assuming no technical conflicts, the Board of Governors generally grants Article XIV consultations a short time after the local PTT monopoly submits a formal letter requesting consultations on the party's behalf. A PTT therefore could have refused to deal with PAS by declining to submit a formal letter of request for consultations on PAS's behalf, or by delaying such a letter. Plaintiffs, however, do not argue that the operating agreement is essentially regulatory authorization for a service provider's business proposal, generally negotiated, approved, or otherwise issued by a PTT signatory, defining the nature of the services that the provider is authorized to offer, to whom, and under what terms.

[**64] Plaintiffs argue the alleged conspiracy was made possible by the regulatory structure prevalent in Europe and Latin America until the early 1990s, which traditionally limited the provision of telecommunications services in each nation to a monopoly PTT. See Pls.' 3(g) Statement P 14. Plaintiffs argue that these legal monopolies collectively formed a "bottleneck" with "the power to exclude PAS" or any other competitor by denying or delaying requests for operating agreements. See id.<sup>6</sup> From this proposition that the PTTs formed a "bottleneck" with the ability to conspire against PAS, Plaintiffs leap to the conclusion that Comsat and the PTTs did conspire to deny or to delay PAS's applications for operating agreements. See Pls.' Opp'n Mem. at 10 (alleging that "until at least 1991 for the most part, and in many instances . . . through [February 28, 1995]," the conspirators "uniformly refused to enter into operating agreements with PAS"). Plaintiffs claim that the PTTs in Chile, Colombia,<sup>7</sup> Argentina, Brazil, Venezuela, the Dominican Republic, Jamaica, Barbados, Trinidad & Tobago, Guatemala, Italy, Spain, Germany, France, and the United Kingdom either denied or delayed [**65] Plaintiffs' requests for operating agreements. See Pls.' Opp'n Mem. at 10. Plaintiffs, however, fail to substantiate these alleged denials and delays.

Plaintiffs might have presented evidence as to each country showing when PAS requested each type of Intelsat consultations; when the PTT submitted a formal request letter to Intelsat (if at all); when each type of consultation was obtained; when operating agreements for each type of service were available under the applicable regulatory [**66] structure of each nation (since a PTT cannot be charged with denying or delaying the issuance of an agreement which the PTT could not legally provide); when PAS initiated negotiations with the PTT over operating agreements for each type of service; and when any agreements were obtained or formally denied. Such information would have assisted the Court in determining whether a factfinder could reasonably draw an inference of refusals to deal or delays in dealing with PAS. Instead, Plaintiffs provided only lengthy string citations to testimony and exhibits: citations marked by scattershot page references and the absence of a single textual or parenthetical explanation. See, e.g., Pls.' 3(g) Statement P 36 (containing a three page string citation addressing without a single parenthetical explanation conduct in fourteen of the fifteen alleged PTT conspirator nations (inexplicably omitting Guatemala)).

Upon examination, Plaintiffs' references do not provide support for Plaintiffs' claims, and do not in the aggregate form a record from which a reasonable jury could infer that any PTT refused to deal with PAS, let alone that they collectively refused to deal.<sup>8</sup> Indeed, although it normally [**67] seeks to keep footnotes to a minimum in its alleged PTT conspirators denied or delayed PAS's requests for Article XIV consultations (even though many of Plaintiffs' sources allege exactly that), presumably because such denials or delays would be the result of PTT signatory conduct and therefore outside the scope of this litigation.

---

<sup>6</sup> Although Defendant argues that no bottleneck existed-- because operating agreements were not required in some countries and the issuance of landing rights was often controlled by a government agency and not the PTT--Defendant does not dispute that the PTTs were traditionally monopolies with significant control over their home markets.

<sup>7</sup> Plaintiffs claim that the Colombian PTT Telecom required PAS to execute an exclusive operating agreement, only then to refuse to provide service under it. See Pls.' Opp'n Mem. at 11.

<sup>8</sup> Plaintiffs' submissions suggest an effort to conceal the perceptible lack of support for Plaintiffs' claims in the record. In addition to failing to provide page indicators and explanatory references, Plaintiffs frequently refer to the same document within the same citation by two or more exhibit numbers. See, e.g., Pls.' 3(g) Statement P 36 (citing Argentina: Comsat Exs. 160 & 262, PAS Ex. 2252; Comsat Exs. 28 & 520; Brazil: Comsat Exs. 36 & 244; Venezuela: Comsat Ex. 420 & PAS Ex. 1901; Colombia: Comsat Ex. 267 & PAS Ex. 1875; Jamaica: PAS Ex. 2110 & Comsat Ex. 526; PAS Ex. 2135 & Comsat Ex. 279; Comsat Ex. 431 & PAS Ex. 2016; Comsat Ex. 432 & PAS Ex. 2050; Comsat Ex. 467 & PAS Ex. 1992; Comsat Ex. 472 & PAS Ex. 2083; Barbados: Comsat Ex. 279 & PAS Ex. 2135; Comsat Ex. 526 & PAS Ex. 2110; Trinidad & Tobago: PAS Exs. 2114 & 2117; Comsat Ex. 466 & PAS Ex. 2072; Comsat Ex. 526 & PAS Ex. 2110; Comsat Ex. 528 & PAS Ex. 1898). Plaintiffs also frequently repeat nearly identical string citations in support of different propositions. Compare Pls.' 3(g) Statement P 24 with P 25 and P 32. These practices so completely fail to present the material issues for review that they cause the Court to question whether they are not a decisions, the Court uses footnotes below to point up this absolute failure of Plaintiffs to support their claims. The Court's review of Plaintiffs' often useless citations to depositions and exhibits amply demonstrates the correctness of the Court's conclusion in this case.

[**68] Many of Plaintiffs' citations merely repeat without support the accusations stated in the Complaint, see, e.g., Pls.' 3(g) Statement P 36,<sup>9</sup> [**69] and many of those cite only to the testimony of Plaintiffs' own officers and employees. See id.<sup>10</sup> [**70] Other citations refer only to unsubstantiated claims of business lost as a result of the calculated attempt to survive the motion not on the merits but by overwhelming judicial resources with a mountain of paper. Unfortunately for Plaintiffs, the Court has inspected each citation provided.

<sup>9</sup> Citing generally: Landman Dep. Vol. 4 at 749 (alleging Comsat strategy to announce joint ventures with PTTs to thwart PAS); Argentina: Anselmo Dep. Vol. 1, 131-34 (discussing allegation that Comsat entered a joint venture in April 1989 with Entel Argentina to exclude PAS)); Colombia: Anselmo Dep. Vol. 1 at 145-48 (repeating allegations behind the alleged boycott and Comsat's improper purpose in entering joint-venture discussions in Colombia); Gazzolo Dep. Vol. 1 at 127 (alleging Comsat entered a joint venture in Colombia); Landman Dep. Vol. 3 at 591 (alleging Comsat and Telecom announced a joint-venture to thwart PAS)); France: Saralegui Dep. Vol. 4, at 633 (alleging, without specification, that France Telecom and Comsat were abiding by the alleged Intelsat boycott and delaying PAS operating agreements)).

<sup>10</sup> Citing Chile: Landman Dep. Vol. 4 at 748-49 (repeating without support allegation of Comsat plot to enter or discuss joint ventures to thwart PAS); Saralegui Dep. Vol. 3 at 420-21 (alleging without support refusal of PTT to deal with PAS); Argentina: Eastman Dep. Vol. 1 at 16-23 (stating that Entel Argentina "did not want to work with PANAMSAT"), 35-40 (alleging that Entel Argentina offered Intelsat service to customers requesting PAS), Vol. 2 at 282 (alleging that in 1989 the monopoly signatory would not complete the consultation process); Landman Dep. Vol. 4 at 748-49 (repeating without support allegation of Comsat plot to enter or discuss joint ventures to thwart PAS); Saralegui Dep. Vol. 3 at 418-21 (alleging without support refusal of PTT to deal with PAS); Brazil: Eastman Dep. Vol. 1 at 16-23 (stating that Embratel "did not want to work with PANAMSAT"); Saralegui Dep. Vol. 1 at 126 (discussing alleged economic incentives for Embratel to deal with PAS), Vol. 3 at 418-21 (alleging without support refusal of PTT to deal with PAS), 436-42 (discussing without mention of Comsat delaying effect of Embratel monopoly on PAS market entry); Venezuela: Goldschmidt Dep. Vol. 2 at 260-61 (discussing without reference to Comsat alleged refusal of Compania Anonima Nacional Telefonos de Venezuela ("C.A.N.T.V.") to deal with PAS allegedly because it would violate an unspecified Intelsat treaty); Saralegui Dep. Vol. 3 at 420 (alleging C.A.N.T.V.'s reluctance to deal with PAS in February 1987); Eastman Dep. Vol. 1 at 130-34 (testimony that Comsat was negotiating a joint venture with C.A.N.T.V.); Colombia: Eastman Dep. Vol. 1 at 39-41 (alleging that when customers inquired of Telecom Colombia, the monopoly PTT, about PAS service they were offered Intelsat service instead), 136 (stating that PAS was forced to sign an exclusive agreement with Telecom Colombia), 157-58 (alleging that when Texaco and Citibank went to Telecom Colombia seeking PAS service, they were offered Intelsat service); Gazzolo Dep. Vol. 1 at 113-14 (alleging Comsat entered a joint venture with Telecom to thwart PAS); Goldschmidt Dep. Vol. 2 at 263 (alleging that Colombia Telecom took "extraordinary steps to keep [PAS] out of the Colombian market" and that there were indications of outside interference from Intelsat); Saralegui Dep. Vol. 3 at 420-21 (alleging that the PTT in Colombia refused to deal with PAS); Jamaica: Eastman Dep. Vol. 2 at 215-20 & Vol. 3 at 550-62 (alleging that PAS had difficulty in obtaining operating agreements from the individual PTT monopolies in the Caribbean, including Jamaica, Barbados, and Trinidad & Tobago, which were affiliated with Cable & Wireless ("C&W") of London); Barbados: Eastman Dep. Vol. 2 at 215-20 & Vol. 3 at 550-62 (alleging that PAS had difficulty in obtaining operating agreements from the individual PTT monopolies in the Caribbean, including Jamaica, Barbados, and Trinidad & Tobago, which were affiliated with Cable & Wireless ("C&W") of London); Trinidad & Tobago: Saralegui Dep. Vol. 4, at 637-39 (stating that PAS was unable to secure operating agreement in Trinidad and Tobago with the PTT Trinidad & Tobago External Telecommunications Company ("Textel")); Eastman Dep. Vol. 2 at 215-20, & Vol. 3 at 550-62 (supra); the United Kingdom: Goldschmidt Dep. Vol. 1 at 217 (alleging that British Telecom delayed in finalizing the agreement for joint operations with PAS because of its interest in ATV and the Intelsat-K satellite), 224-25 (stating a suspicion that British Telecom delayed negotiations on an operating agreement because it did not want competition from PAS and because of British Telecom's connections to ATV and Intelsat-K), Vol. 2 at 440-44 (discussing alleged CEPT boycott resolution, but admitting that "by definition, Comsat could not be a party to CEPT's resolution, because it is not a member of CEPT); France: Reverege Anselmo Dep. Vol. 1 at 117-18 (alleging that France "led the charge against [PAS]"), 120-21 (alleging three year delay in PAS's entry into the French market due to Comsat's Intelsat connections with PTTs), 126 (alleging that France denied PAS's request to do business), Vol. 2 at 252-53 (alleging "perfect collusion between Elf and France Telecom"); Antonovich Dep. at 30-31 (alleging that France Telecom was preventing competition despite regulatory liberalization in France), 45 (alleging lost business opportunities in France), 64-66 (alleging that France Telecom was refusing to deal with PAS, resulting in lost opportunity with radio station FR3); Spain: Goldschmidt Dep. Vol. 2 at 422-25 (discussing the blanket refusal of the Spanish PTT Compania Telefonica Nacional de Espana ("Telefonica") to deal with PAS).

alleged conspiracy. See id.<sup>11</sup> [**71] Still other citations refer only to self-serving documents created by PAS, including letters from PAS complaining to various government ministries and agencies about PAS's difficulty in gaining access to some countries, see id.,<sup>12</sup> [**72] marketing letters from PAS urging prospective customers to <sup>11</sup> Citing generally: Comsat Ex. 732 (chart entitled "Identified Lost Business on PAS-1 C-band (revised)"); Chile: Saralegui Dep. Vol. 2 at 297-303 (discussing alleged Entel demand for full control over PAS in Chile in exchange for support in Article XIV(d) consultations), 313-18 (discussing Entel opposition in 1986 to Article XIV(d) consultations for PAS); Eastman Dep. Vol. 1 at 28-29, 37-40 (discussing problems in PAS negotiations with Citibank and IBM due to lack of operating agreements); Gazzolo Dep. Vol. 1 at 82-83 (discussing delays in getting operating agreements); Argentina: Eastman Dep. Vol. 1 at 42-45 (stating that Entel Argentina refused "to establish a relationship with PANAMSAT" to permit PAS business with Citibank), 94-96 (stating that Entel Argentina refused to allow PAS to provide IBM service to Argentina), 121-23 (discussing alleged loss of customers due to delay in obtaining agreements in Argentina); Goldschmidt Dep. Vol. 3 at 567-70 (discussing unspecified customers lost for lack of operating agreements in Argentina in Dec. 1988), Vol. 4 at 204-05 (discussing lost business with Key Data Argentina and Telerate because of lack of landing rights); Landman Dep. Vol. 3 at 542-52 (alleging that Comsat negotiated a joint venture with Entel Argentina for the purpose of discouraging or preventing customers such as Cargill from doing business with PAS); Morgan Dep. at 62-63 (discussing failure to secure Bank of Boston business in Argentina for lack of operating agreements, but disavowing knowledge of any Comsat involvement), 68-69 (discussing failure to secure Tandem Computer business for lack of operating agreements, but disavowing knowledge of any Comsat involvement)); Brazil: Carroux Dep. at 129-39 (discussing Embratel opposition to PAS business with Victori Communications and Coca Cola); Eastman Dep. Vol. 1 at 67-70 (discussing Embratel objection to PAS deal with CMA, a Brazilian company, but without knowledge of any Comsat involvement); Gazzolo Dep. Vol. 2 at 299-301 (alleging lost business with Coca Cola in Brazil because PAS lacked landing rights); Lanni Dep. Vol. 3 at 386-89 (discussing Reuters decision not to use PAS because PAS lacked authorizations, and blaming lack of authorizations on Embratel and Brazilsat); Venezuela: Morgan Dep. at 69-76 (alleging, without reference to Comsat, C.A.N.T.V. intervention at the Venezuelan Ministry/Conatel to delay licensing of PAS, causing delays in PAS business with Asociados Espada, Hughes, Electrospace, and Bartel), 78-79 (alleging delay in PAS business with Infosat due to C.A.N.T.V. intervention at the Venezuelan Ministry/Conatel), 167-68 (alleging delay caused by C.A.N.T.V. joint venture); Saralegui Dep. Vol. 4 at 562-66 (discussing, without reference to Comsat, PAS's inability to secure business with Corvan due to inability to secure uplink agreements before late 1990 or early 1991), 572-74 (discussing PAS's failure to secure business from Venevision in 1991 because of an inability to get authorizations), 579-81 (discussing, without reference to Comsat, loss of Venevision and delay of Omnidision business for lack of authorizations through 1991)); Colombia: Eastman Dep. Vol. 1 at 160 (alleging without any support that Comsat prevented PAS from doing business with Citibank and Texaco); Gazzolo Dep. Vol. 1 at 56-58 (alleging that Colombia Telecom, without reference to Comsat, undercut PAS pricing, costing PAS business with Unisys), Vol. 2 at 264-65 (stating that potential customer Banco Ganadero was delayed in getting a license from the Colombian Ministry), 279-81 (dispute over provisions of an exclusive operating agreement with Telecom delayed business between PAS and Precidatos), 300-01 (alleging that PAS lost business with Coca-Cola because PAS lacked landing rights), 307 (attributing a loss of business with Ecopetrol to "negative marketing" by Telecom), 322-24 (discussing PAS's exclusion from Eloductos's request for proposals), 330-31 (discussing Orbinet), 354-57 (discussing Unisys); Lanni Dep. Vol. 2 at 283-85 (discussing Procedatos, and alleged efforts by Telecom--ultimately unsuccessful--to disrupt business between PAS and Procedatos); Comsat Ex. 161 (August 28, 1992 PAS letter to Procedatos alleging efforts by Telecom, without reference to Comsat, to disrupt PAS business with Procedatos); Jamaica: Eastman Dep. Vol. 4 at 725-27 (alleging that PAS lost opportunities for business with Shell and Citibank in Jamaica because Article XIV(d) consultations had not been completed); PAS Ex. 2080 (October 16, 1990 letter from Citicorp Latino Inc. to PAS withdrawing Citicorp's order for service via PAS-1); Trinidad & Tobago: Eastman Dep. Vol. 4 at 726-27 (alleging that PAS lost opportunities for business with Shell and Citibank in Trinidad because Article XIV(d) consultations had not been completed); the United Kingdom: Antonovich Dep. at 103 (alleging that British Telecom uplink pricing was too high and harmed PAS business opportunities).

---

<sup>12</sup> Citing generally: Comsat Ex. 278 (October 15, 1991 PAS letter to the FCC complaining about C&W and delays in obtaining Caribbean operating agreements with C&W affiliated PTTs); Comsat Ex. 244 (December 12, 1988 PAS memorandum to U.S. Trade Representative discussing barriers to market entry and alleging extensive PTT behavior "in concert with Intelsat"); Comsat Ex. 35 (PAS memo dated February 20, 1987 repeating without support allegations of boycott and refusals to deal and urging U.S. government action); Comsat Ex. 213 (July 1986 letter from PAS urging U.S. Department of Commerce to take action against alleged refusals to deal with PAS throughout Latin America); Argentina: PAS Ex. 1885 (March 1989 marketing letter from PAS urging Intelsat consultations); PAS Ex. 2252 (March 1992 letter from PAS to Argentine government describing PAS's current services and seeking authorization for on-premises services); Comsat Ex. 35 (PAS memo dated February 20, 1987 repeating without support allegations of boycott and refusals to deal and urging U.S. government action); Comsat Ex. 160 (same as PAS Ex. 2252, supra); Comsat Ex. 244 (December 1988 letter from PAS to U.S. Trade Representative outlining PAS lobby on PAS's behalf, see id.<sup>13</sup> [**73] and letters from PAS discussing its negotiations with some of the alleged PTT conspirators. See id.<sup>14</sup> [**74] The rest of Plaintiffs' citations reference hearsay statements, often without identifying the alleged declarant or the time, place and specific content of the alleged statement. See id.<sup>15</sup> concerns throughout Latin America); Comsat Ex. 262 (same as Comsat Ex. 160 & PAS Ex. 2252, supra); Comsat Ex. 263 (March 1992 letter from PAS to Argentine government lobbying for authorization for PAS services); Brazil: Comsat Ex. 35 (PAS memo dated February 20, 1987 repeating without support allegations of boycott and refusals to deal and urging U.S. government action); Comsat Ex. 36 (same as Comsat Ex. 244, supra); Venezuela: PAS Ex. 1911 (May 1989 PAS presentation to the government of Venezuela); Colombia: Comsat Ex. 244 (December 12, 1988 PAS memorandum to U.S. Trade Representative discussing barriers to market entry and alleging extensive PTT behavior "in concert with Intelsat"); Jamaica: PAS Ex. 2038 (April 18, 1990 PAS marketing letter to Jamaican Ministry of Development Planning & Production including attached list of PAS-1 clients and end-users and list of countries as of March 1990 having coordinated Article XIV(d) consultations and granted landing rights); PAS Ex. 2073 (October 1, 1990 PAS letter to Jamaican Ministry of Public Utilities & Transports complaining of delays in negotiations with Jamaica International Telecommunications, Ltd. ("Jamintel") and seeking direct government assistance in procuring Article XIV(c) and (d) consultations); PAS Ex. 2083 (October 26, 1990 PAS letter to U.S. Trade Representative seeking assistance in gaining access to Jamaican market); Comsat Ex. 277 (May 2, 1991 PAS memorandum discussing PAS filing against C&W with the FCC if Jamintel does not show good faith in submitting Article XIV(d) letter); Comsat Ex. 278 (October 15, 1991 PAS letter to FCC complaining about C&W and delays in obtaining Caribbean operating agreements with C&W affiliated PTTs); Comsat Ex. 472 (same as PAS Ex. 2083, supra); Trinidad & Tobago: Goldschmidt Dep. Vol. 1, at 130-32 PAS (discussing meeting in 1986 with Trinidad government agency over landing rights); PAS Ex. 2114 (January 24, 1991 PAS letter to Telecommunications Services of Trinidad and Tobago, Limited ("TSTT") complaining of Textel's delay in entering an operating agreement and refusal to permit on-premises services (including list of PAS-1 clients and end-users)); PAS Ex. 2117 (body of letter is the same as PAS Ex. 2114, supra) (appending list of PAS-1 clients and end users)); PAS Ex. 2133 (April 1, 1991 PAS letter to the TSTT asking for conclusion of negotiations on an operating agreement in the next couple of weeks); PAS Ex. 2142 (April 10, 1001 PAS letter to Telecommunications Task Force in the Office of the Prime Minister of Trinidad and Tobago complaining that no operating agreement with TSTT had been reached after nearly two years of negotiations); PAS Ex. 2151 (May 3, 1991 PAS letter to TSTT mentioning PAS FCC filing).

---

<sup>13</sup> Citing Chile: PAS Ex. 1885 (March 2, 1989 PAS marketing letter to KAVOURAS, Inc., urging Intelsat consultations); PAS Ex. 1903 (April 11, 1989 PAS marketing letter to Houston Data Transmission urging Intelsat consultations); Venezuela: PAS Ex. 1958 (Aug. 15, 1989 PAS letter to Venevision urging it to lobby C.A.N.T.V.); Colombia: PAS Ex. 1875 (January 27, 1991 PAS marketing letter urging Chevron to assist PAS in obtaining landing rights); Comsat Ex. 267 (same as PAS Ex. 1875, supra); Jamaica: Eastman Dep. Vol. 3 at 550-62 (discussing PAS's agreement with Citibank and Citibank inquires to Jamintel about Intelsat capacity); PAS Ex. 2050 (June 22, 1990 PAS letter to Citicorp Latino asking Citicorp to urge Jamintel to expedite negotiations with PAS); PAS Ex. 2110 (January 11, 1991 PAS letter to C&W London complaining of Jamintel's continuing refusal to submit Article XIV(d) letter for PAS); PAS Ex. 2141 (April 10, 1991 letter to C&W London seeking its assistance in pressuring Jamintel to conclude negotiations); PAS Ex. 2181 (August 27, 1991 PAS memorandum and letters discussing possible PAS business with Alcan Jamaica Company in Jamaica); PAS Ex. 2190 (September 19, 1991 PAS letter to Alcan Jamaica Company including budgetary proposal and seeking assistance in expediting PAS negotiations with Jamintel); Comsat Ex. 526 (same as PAS Ex. 2110, supra); Comsat Ex. 432 (same as PAS Ex. 2050, supra); Trinidad & Tobago: PAS Ex. 2050 (June 22, 1990 PAS letter to Citicorp Latino noting that Trinidad & Tobago had recently consulted for PAS-1 services after urging by Mobil Oil and Citibank Trinidad); PAS Ex. 2110 (January 11, 1991 PAS letter urging C&W London to assist PAS in convincing Textel to permit on-premises service to Citibank Trinidad and Mobil Oil); Comsat Ex. 465 (May 23, 1990 PAS letter to Trinidad and Tobago Telephone Company, Ltd. ("Teleco") asking it for assistance in reaching a working arrangement with Textel); Comsat Ex. 526 (supra).

<sup>14</sup> Citing generally: Eastman Dep. Vol. 2 at 215-19 (stating that PAS succeeded in providing service to Curacao, Haiti, the Bahamas, the Dominican Republic, Grand Cayman and Barbados, but not Jamaica or Trinidad & Tobago); Chile: Comsat Ex. 33 (February 10, 1986 PAS memorandum discussing Entel opposition PAS XIV(d) coordination); PAS Ex. 1854 at PAS 053674 (October 1988 letter from PAS stating landing rights in Chile expected "within the next few months"); PAS Ex. 1991 at PAS 053389 (PAS marketing proposal dated November 28, 1989 stating that Article XIV(d) consultations completed and landing rights obtained); Comsat Ex. 556 (PAS memo dated Dec. 18, 1991 discussing multiple projects in Chile and expected operating agreement in March 1992); Argentina: PAS Ex. 1854 at PAS 053674 (October 1988 letter from PAS expecting "to see major progress" in obtaining landing rights in Argentina by mid-1989); Comsat Ex. 135 (October 1991 PAS memorandum discussing provision of VSAT services in Argentina for Dow Corning and outstanding need for final agreement with Telintar); Comsat Ex. 405 (Nov. 1991 letter from PAS to Telintar discussing operating agreement and lobbying for authorization of PAS on-premises services); Brazil: PAS Ex. 1854 at PAS 053674 (October 1988 letter from PAS expecting "to see major progress" in obtaining landing rights in Brazil by mid-1989); Comsat Ex. 28 at PAS 0201547 (Oct. 1985 PAS memorandum discussing without reference to Comsat a meeting with the president of Embratel, concluding that he is "a firmly entrenched Intelsat man however, a good deal for Embratel could cause him to turn the other way"); Comsat Ex. 147 (discussing PAS negotiations with LA Technologies); Comsat Ex. 574 (August 1990 PAS proposal to Coca-Cola); Venezuela: PAS Ex. 1854 at PAS 053674 (October 1988 letter from PAS expecting "to see major progress" in obtaining landing rights in Venezuela by mid-1989); PAS Ex. 1885 (March 1989 marketing letter from PAS urging Intelsat consultations); PAS Ex. 1901 (April 3, 1989 PAS memorandum discussing potential clients and problems created by PAS's lack of landing rights in Venezuela); PAS Ex. 1991 at PAS 053388 (PAS marketing proposal dated November 28, 1989 stating that "negotiations are continuing with the Venezuelan government and landing rights are expected to be granted during the 1st quarter of 1990"); PAS Ex. 2090 (November 2, 1990 PAS memorandum discussing alliance between PAS, EDS, and COMCAR called "SKYCOM"); Comsat Ex. 420 (same as PAS Ex. 1901, supra, without attachments); Jamaica: Eastman Dep. Vol. 2 at 224-25 (stating that as of April 2, 1991, Jamintel, the Jamaican PTT had not completed Article XIV(d) consultations for PAS); PAS Ex. 1868 (January 3, 1989 PAS marketing letter stating that PAS is "in the process of developing a relationship with Jamintel"); PAS Ex. 1992 (November 30, 1989 PAS letter to Jamintel requesting Article XIV(d) consultations by December 7, 1989); PAS Ex. 2014 (February 27, 1990 PAS memorandum discussing status of negotiations and support of C&W for PAS-1 services); PAS Ex. 2016 (February 27, 1990 PAS letter to Jamintel seeking a meeting to discuss an operating agreement); PAS Ex. 2023 (PAS marketing letters to Jamintel from November 1989 through March 1990 including proposed operating agreement); PAS Ex. 2071 (September 24, 1990 PAS letter to Jamintel seeking to conclude year-long negotiations over operating agreement on October 4, 1990); PAS Ex. 2078 (October 11, 1990 PAS letter to Citibank Jamaica); PAS Ex. 2115 (January 25, 1991 PAS memorandum discussing problems with PAS approach to negotiating with Jamintel); PAS Ex. 2135 (April 2, 1991 PAS letter proposing June 1, 1991 deadline for executing an operating agreement); Comsat Ex. 467 (same as PAS Ex. 1992, supra); Comsat Ex. 431 (same as PAS Ex. 2016, supra); Barbados: PAS Ex. 2031 (August 1989 through April 1990 marketing letters for PAS in Barbados, including a list of countries which as of September 1989 had granted Article XIV(d) consultations and landing rights); PAS Ex. 2135 (April 2, 1991 PAS letter proposing May 1, 1991 deadline for executing an operating agreement); Trinidad & Tobago: PAS Ex. 1898 (March 31, 1989 PAS letter to PTT Textel indicating that Textel had wanted to get Intelsat consultations "moving as quickly as possible"); PAS Ex. 1902 (April 4, 1989 PAS marketing letter to Textel); PAS Ex. 1934 (June 14, 1989 PAS letter to Textel urging Textel to provide Article XIV(c) & (d) letters); PAS Ex. 1982 (October 20, 1989 PAS marketing letter to Textel); PAS Ex. 2052 (June 28, 1990 PAS letter to Citibank Trinidad describing completed Article XIV(d) consultations as "the largest stumbling block to [PAS's] provision of services" and stating that PAS expected to conclude negotiations on an Operating Agreement with Textel within weeks); PAS Ex. 2079 (October 12, 1990 PAS letter to Textel discussing Textel rejection of proposed operating agreement and PAS proposal of IDS agreement); PAS Ex. 2086 (October 31, 1990 PAS letter to Textel referencing a working arrangement that was reached after failed efforts at an operating agreement and which would allow PAS and Textel "to jointly provide PAS-1 services"); PAS Ex. 2135 (same as Comsat Ex. 279) (April 2, 1991 PAS letter to C&W London recognizing C&W's "limited influence in Trinidad and Tobago" and proposing June 1, 1991 deadline for executing an operating agreement); PAS Ex. 2201 (October 24, 1991 PAS letter to TSTT regarding further negotiation of operating agreement); Comsat Ex. 430 (September 6, 1990 PAS letter to Textel seeking to set a meeting date to finalize an operating agreement); Comsat Ex. 528 (same as PAS Ex. 1898, supra); the Dominican Republic: PAS Ex. 1972 (September 25, 1989 PAS marketing letter to Codetel discussing pricing for Private International Digital Services ("PIDS")); PAS Ex. 1976 (October 6, 1989 PAS marketing letter to Codetel); PAS Ex. 1986 (November 21, 1989 PAS marketing letter to Codetel providing prices for Ku-band service); the United Kingdom: PAS Ex. 1991 at PAS 053387 (PAS marketing proposal dated November 28, 1989 stating that Article XIV(d) consultations had been completed and an operating agreement "is in the final stages of negotiation with Telecom and is expected to be signed prior to December 15"); Comsat Ex. 77 (October 2, 1992 PAS letter to IBM France indicating that British Telecom initiated Article XIV consultations in March 1988, June 1988, and March 1991); France: Comsat Ex. 77 (supra); Comsat Ex. 531 (July 18, 1989 PAS letter to radio station FR3 stating that negotiations with France Telecom over an operating agreement were at an impasse); (Comsat Ex. 77 (October 2, 1992 PAS letter to IBM France indicating that the Federal Ministry of Post and Telecommunications initiated Article XIV consultations in June 1988, September 1988, and December 1989); Spain: Carroux Dep. at 203-05 (discussing lack of operating agreement with Telefonica after almost six years of discussions with PAS); Comsat Ex. 77 (October 2, 1992 PAS letter to IBM France indicating that Telefonica initiated Article XIV consultations in March 1990, that video transmission is handled through a January 1, 1991 agreement with Retevision, and that negotiations with Telefonica were continuing to expand PAS service to include digital services); Comsat Ex. 215 (November 21, 1989 PAS memorandum including notes of November 17, 1989 meetings with Telefonica and Ministry of Communications indicating that Telefonica was willing to negotiate a "good agreement").

[**75] Defendant, on the other hand, has shown that Plaintiffs did in fact receive authorization to operate in many

<sup>15</sup> Citing Chile: Gazzolo Dep. Vol. 2 at 213-17 (discussing alleged January 1992 statement of Christian Nicolai "that due to the nature of the relationship between Comsat and PANAMSAT . . . [Entel] couldn't sign an operating agreement [with PAS]."); Brazil: Eastman Dep. Vol. 1 at 26-35 (discussing conversations with unspecified employees of IBM in late 1988 or early 1989 of the subject countries. See generally Comsat Ex. 924 at 2 (chart of PAS consultations worldwide); Def.'s Reply Mem. in Supp. of Mot. for Summ. J. at 8 n.15 (hereinafter "Def.'s Reply Summ. J. Mem.") (citing Landman Aff. P 13).<sup>16</sup> [**77] Moreover, Plaintiffs' own citations reveal that PAS did in fact obtain authorization to enter the markets of most of the alleged PTT conspirators' home countries. See, e.g., Pls.' 3(g) Statement P 36.<sup>17</sup> [**78] These regarding PAS's lack of operating agreements and an alleged "old boys network" among the PTTs and Comsat); Venezuela: Goldschmidt Dep. Vol. 1 at 220 (alleging that Intelsat boycott was invoked by Venezuelan authorities as a reason for not granting PAS operating agreements), Vol. 2 at 394-97 (alleging C.A.N.T.V.'s making of unspecified misrepresentations about PAS); Morgan Dep. at 54 (alleging that an official in the Venezuelan ministry, a C.A.N.T.V. official, and the President of Venezuela informed PAS that PAS would not get operating agreements because "[Venezuela/C.A.N.T.V. has] a pending joint venture with Comsat, and, for domestic digital services, [they will] only use INTELSAT"); Colombia: Gazzolo Dep. Vol. 1 at 130-31 (alleging report by employee of Vitacom that at a meeting with Telecom, with no one from Comsat present, misrepresentations about PAS-1 were made), Vol. 1 at 135-37 (stating that customers Genetcom and Unisys also reported alleged "bad mouthing" of PAS by Telecom, without reference to Comsat); Goldschmidt Dep. Vol. 1 at 219-20 (alleging that the boycott was invoked by Colombian authorities as a reason for not granting PAS an operating agreement), Vol. 2 at 306 (alleging that a Colombian official represented that members of the Andean group were conspiring not to deal with PAS, and further alleging, without support, Comsat's involvement), 396-97 (discussing allegations that Colombian government officials made misrepresentations about PAS); Comsat Ex. 443 (February 25, 1991 PAS memorandum alleging misrepresentation by the Colombian PTT to an unspecified customer); Jamaica: PAS Ex. 2121 (March 6, 1991 PAS memorandum stating that Jamintel allegedly told PAS that Jamintel will not deal with PAS); France: Reverte Anselmo Dep. Vol. 2 at 270-77 (stating that political pressure was put on TV-5, a customer of France Telecom and partially government owned, not to sign a contract with PAS); Comsat Ex. 533 (July 17, 1989 PAS memorandum to France Telecom file recording alleged conversations about France Telecom's alleged resistance to dealing with PAS).

<sup>16</sup> See also Argentina: Comsat Ex. 924 at 1 (PAS secured Intelsat consultations in Argentina for domestic service in May 1989 and international service between the United States and Argentina in June 1989); Dell'Oro Maini Dep. at 48; Dell'Oro Maini Decl. P 11; Comsat Ex. 955 at PAS 834743 (In April 1990, PAS reached an interim agreement with Entel Argentina and later obtained a license from the National Telecommunications Commission ("CNT"), the government agency which replaced Entel Argentina as the signatory PTT after Entel was privatized.); Comsat Ex. 514, Attach. A (5th Supp. Resp. of Pls. to 2d Set of Interrogs. & Regs. for Prod. of Docs. (PAS received an operating agreement for Argentina in January 1992)); Trinidad & Tobago: PAS Ex. 2086 at PAS 033072 (discussing the working arrangement); Barbados: Def.'s Reply Mem. at 10 & App. B. at 2 (citing Comsat Ex. 924 at 1; Comsat Ex. 925 at 1; PAS Ex. 2110 at PAS 017684 (arguing that PAS reached an operating agreement in Barbados in fifteen months, and attributing any delay to heavy workload at BET, the PTT signatory in Barbados, and not to any "planned obstruction of PAS-1 services")); Guatemala: Def.'s Reply Mem. at 10 & App. B. at 6-7 (citing Comsat Ex. 1024; Comsat Ex. 1025; Morgan Dep. at 36-37 (PAS entered agreements with two companies in 1990, but in May 1991 the President of Guatemala invalidated the concessions previously granted to those companies, effectively "knocking PAS out of the market.")); Italy: Def.'s Reply Mem. at 9 & App. B. at 7 (arguing that PAS obtained landing rights within six months after consultations); the United Kingdom: Goldschmidt Dep. Vol. 1 at 132-38 (admitting PAS got initial landing rights in the United Kingdom in 1988, class licenses in 1991, and a specialized license in March 1993).

<sup>17</sup> Citing generally: Eastman Dep. Vol. 2 at 217-21 (stating that PAS succeeded in providing service to Curacao, Haiti, the Bahamas, the Dominican Republic, Grand Cayman and Barbados, but not Jamaica or Trinidad & Tobago); PAS Ex. 2031 (including a list of countries which as of September 1989 had granted Article XIV(d) consultations and landing rights); PAS Ex. 2038 (April 18, 1990 PAS marketing letter including attached list of PAS-1 clients and end-users and list of countries as of March 1990 having coordinated Article XIV(d) consultations and granted landing rights); PAS Ex. 2034 (April 5, 1990 PAS marketing letter to Mobil with attached list of countries which have provided Article XIV(d) consultations and list of PAS-1 clients and endusers); Chile: Gazzolo Dep. Vol. 1 at 82 ("Patricio and Marco [Northland of PAS] negotiated that, and they got an operating agreement to enter into the Chilean market"), 84 ("After Patricio [Northland] left, I took over Chile and managed to get an operating agreement with Chilesat after that."), 85 ("[CTC] had a problem. They transponded from [PAS]."), 300 (stating that PAS could have signed a contract for landing rights in Chile for business with Coca-Cola); Landman Dep. Vol. 2 at 473-84 (discussing PAS contracts in Chile dating back to 1989); Saralegui Dep. Vol. 2 at 318 (acknowledging contract with TVN in late 1988 or early 1989); Argentina: Landman Dep. Vol. 3 at 560-62 (stating in July 1993 that PAS recently signed an agreement with Teleintar); Lanni Dep. Vol. 1 at 117-18 (discussing Teleintar and VSAT authorization), Vol. 2 at 277-82 (discussing PAS memorandum of understanding with Telintar for international digital services ("IDS") but not "on-premises" services); Venezuela: Eastman Dep. Vol. 1 at 130-34 (discussing PAS provision of services in Venezuela through Infosat); PAS Ex. 2275 (June 12, 1992 PAS marketing letter to Pepsi Venezuela stating that PAS-1 is running out of capacity), 131 (discussing Infosat and Citibank point-to-point service); Colombia: Eastman Dep. Vol. 1 at 39-41 (discussing bulk bandwidth capacity offered by citations also admit that the local PTT monopolies assisted PAS in gaining market access. See id.<sup>18</sup> [**79] Defendant has also presented evidence that many of the alleged PTT conspirators could not grant landing rights, and that Plaintiffs could and did circumvent the PTT in other countries.<sup>19</sup> Defendant argues therefore that the alleged "bottleneck" did not exist, and that Plaintiffs cannot base a claim for refusal to deal on any PTTs' failure to provide agreements which were not necessary in the first place. In the face of Plaintiffs' failure to provide a reasonable estimate of any denials or delays of PAS requests for operating [**76] agreements, and to support such Comsat to Citibank in Colombia, Argentina and Venezuela), 136 (stating that PAS was forced to sign an exclusive agreement with Telecom Colombia), Vol. 2, 196-99 (alleging that after a 1991 change in Colombian law, PAS sought to transfer its exclusive agreement with Telecom Colombia to the Colombian ministry, so that customers interested in PAS would no longer have to go to Telecom but could go to the ministry to obtain licenses); Saralegui Dep. Vol. 3 at 451-52 (discussing competition in the Colombian market involving PAS, Comsat, Telecom, and possibly Brazilsat and ASETA's proposed Condor regional satellite system); Trinidad & Tobago: PAS Ex. 2016 (February 27, 1990 PAS letter to Jamintel stating that PAS is "currently implementing this network in countries such as . . . Trinidad"); PAS Ex. 2076 (October 5, 1990 PAS letter to Textel discussing pricing terms for Mobil and Citibank business under proposed operating agreement); PAS Ex. 2088 (October 31, 1990 PAS letter to Shell Oil Company giving prices on business with PAS under working agreement with Textel); PAS Ex. 2089 (October 31, 1990 PAS letter to Textel confirming details of business relationship)); the United Kingdom: Comsat Ex. 77 (October 2, 1992 PAS letter to IBM France indicating that British Telecom initiated Article XIV consultations in March 1988, June 1988, and March 1991, and that "PAS also has a license to provide two-way VSAT services to and from the UK."); France: Saralegui Dep. Vol. 4, at 632 (admitting that PAS got limited license to provide VSAT and video applications); Comsat Ex. 77 (supra); Germany: Comsat Ex. 77 (October 2, 1992 PAS letter to IBM France indicating that PAS "has a license to provide two-way VSAT services to and from Germany"); Italy: Antonovich Dep. at 36-37 (admitting that PAS has an operating agreement in Italy with Telespazio); Carroux Dep. at 204-05 (as of November 1993, PAS had agreement in Italy to down-link broadcasts, but was unable to conclude operating agreement for two-way telecommunications services); Comsat Ex. 77 (October 2, 1992 PAS letter to IBM France indicating Telespazio initiated Article XIV consultations in September 1989 and PAS entered an operating agreement dated April 30, 1990); Comsat Ex. 955 (October 23, 1991 PAS memorandum titled "PAS 'Landing Rights' Outside of the United States" indicating Telespazio completed consultations for PAS Ku-band service in September 1989 and entered an operating agreement with PAS dated April 30, 1990); Spain: Comsat Ex. 77 (October 2, 1992 PAS letter to IBM France indicating that video transmission is handled through a January 1, 1991 agreement with Retevision).

<sup>18</sup> Citing generally: Comsat Ex. 532 (alleged excerpt of statements of PAS officer from July 2, 1990 Satellite Week magazine stating that "British Telecom, German and Swiss PTTs have given PANAMSAT 'excellent support';" that "June was 'blockbuster' for PANAMSAT's trans-Atlantic service;" and that "PANAMSAT has 'locked up' full-time capacity on Latin beam; U.S. beam still has capacity available."); Brazil: PAS Ex. 2142 (April 10, 1991 letter to Telecommunications Task Force in the Office of the Prime Minister of Trinidad and Tobago, stating that "[PAS] found that Embratel did not have an exclusive monopoly over telecommunications in Brazil, and that, with the appropriate government authorization, [PAS] did not have to provide services through Embratel or Embratel's authorization, but could go directly to the government for approval. We now find that Embratel is willing to work with us"); Jamaica: PAS Ex. 2014 (February 27, 1990 PAS memorandum discussing support of C&W for PAS-1 services)); Trinidad & Tobago: PAS Ex. 2009 (February 7, 1990 PAS memorandum discussing Textel officials as "serious about doing business with [PAS]"); PAS Ex. 2014 (February 27, 1990 PAS memorandum discussing status of Article XIV(d) consultations and the support of C&W for PAS-1 services); PAS Ex. 2034 (March 30, 1989 PAS marketing letter to Mobil indicating that Textel "seemed very receptive to PAS-1's services"); the United Kingdom: Goldschmidt Dep. Vol. 1 at 128-30 (discussing C&W as competitor of PAS in Great Britain and the Caribbean nations), 132-38 (admitting PAS got initial landing rights in the United Kingdom in 1988, class licenses in 1991, and a specialized license in March 1993); Spain: Comsat Ex. 215 (November 21, 1989 PAS memorandum including notes of November 17, 1989 meetings with Telefonica and Ministry of Communications indicating that Telefonica was willing to negotiate a "good agreement").

<sup>19</sup> See, e.g., Brazil: Araujo Decl. PP 12-13 (arguing that Embratel does not have the ability to grant the operating agreement); Eastman Dep. at 22 (an operating agreement from Embratel was not even required after PAS had secured authorization from the government); the Dominican Republic: Def.'s Reply Summ. J. Mem. at 10 & App. B. at 4 (arguing that PAS did not need an operating agreement but could work through the private provider Tricom); Germany: Def.'s Summ. J. Mem. at 13 n.18 (citing Balz Decl. PP 4-5) (claiming that the German PTT does not even have authority to give landing rights); Def.'s Reply Summ. J. Mem. at 8-9 & App. B. at 6; France: Def.'s Summ. J. Mem. at 13 n.18 (citing Dupuis Toubol Decl. P 4 (claiming that the French PTT does not even have authority to give landing rights)); the United Kingdom: Def.'s Summ. J. Mem. at 13 n.18 (citing Gillies Decl. P 4 (alleging that British Telecom did not have the authority to grant landing rights)).

an estimate with evidence, Defendant's showing precludes a reasonable inference of a pattern of parallel refusals to deal with PAS.

Moreover, Plaintiffs have failed to refute Defendant's showing that any appearance [**80] of parallel conduct is attributable to other causes. For example, Defendant has shown that an historic wave of regulatory liberalization swept over the telecommunications industry between 1988 and 1992.<sup>20</sup> [**82] Plaintiffs' own citations acknowledge this wave of liberalization and recognize its effect on the industry and on Plaintiffs' ability to gain access to many markets. See Pls.' 3(g) Statement P 36.<sup>21</sup>

<sup>20</sup> See, e.g., generally: Goldberg Dep. at 52-55 (discussing liberalization generally); Comsat Ex. 77 (October 2, 1992 PAS letter to IBM France stating that PAS's ability actually to do business after Article XIV consultations is "wholly dependant on the telecommunications laws of the country and often does not involve specific governmental action at all. Since most European countries have deregulated their VSAT services, at least on a receive-only basis, PAS is able to deal directly with its customers, whether telecommunications service providers or end users, without the need for further action by governmental authorities. If any governmental action is necessary under local law, PAS usually relies on those customers to secure the requisite authorizations."); Argentina: Dell'Oro Maini Decl. (showing that prior to January 1990, telecommunications services in Argentina were provided exclusively by the State, through the PTT signatory Entel Argentina), P 12 (stating that in September 1991, CNT adopted formal procedures allowing for non-Intelsat satellite capacity providers to be authorized); Dell'Oro Maini Dep. at 25, 35-36, 42, 44 (same); Goldschmidt Dep. Vol. 2 at 400-02 (indicating that in Argentina and throughout Latin American PAS's problem getting market access was one of national law and PTT policy); Comsat Ex. 28 (October 1985 PAS memorandum discussing lobbying strategy for changing Argentine regulatory structure); Comsat Ex. 213 at PAS 212467 (admitting that Argentine laws limiting access have delayed PAS's entry into the market); Comsat Ex. 262 at PAS 027425 (March 18, 1992 PAS letter acknowledging that Entel was a monopoly provider prior to the liberalization of the Argentine regulatory structure in 1990 and the privatization of Entel--conduct completely beyond the scope of Comsat's activities); Brazil: Araujo Decl. PP 11-13 (Brazil did not remove all the limits to non-Intelsat space segment providers until 1991); Araujo Dep. at 32-39, & 45 (Brazil effectively did not allow Embratel to purchase capacity directly from PAS until 1993); Comsat Ex. 36 at 5 (same as Comsat Ex. 244, supra, (December 1988 letter from PAS to U.S. Trade Representative listing as the number one barrier to PAS market entry in Brazil as the "current government prohibition of any access to the PAS-1 by Brazilian customers (i.e. total market exclusion)"); Comsat Ex. 924 at 1 (PAS received its Intelsat consultation in March 1989); Chile: Gutierrez Decl. P 4 (from mid-1988 to 1990, "the laws and regulations of Chile" effectively prevented Plaintiffs from providing satellite capacity for the provision of satellite-based services to end-users in Chile), PP 9-10 (stating that although the Chilean telecommunications sector formally began to liberalize in 1982, the Undersecretariat of Telecommunications ("Subtel") did not promulgate the regulations necessary to gain operating authorization until 1988), P 16 (stating that PAS never applied for a license); Gutierrez Dep. at 25-26, & 30 (stating that competition developed slowly until 1994 because there was "no legal framework" before amendments to the general telecommunications law in March 1994 and regulations issued in July 1994), & 41-42 (discussing without mention of Comsat the inability of CTC to use the transponder purchased from PAS because of "regulatory problems" and because of PAS's failure to obtain the necessary license); Gazzolo Dep. Vol. 1 at 25-26 (as of the passage of the 1988 regulations, the Chilean market was effectively limited to three companies: Entel Chile, CHILESAT, and TVN), 85 ("[CTC] had a problem . . . with the courts within Chile . . . that lasted for almost five years, six years, until this year [(1994)] they were allowed to operate a data communication."); Comsat Ex. 955 at PAS 834744 (stating that the Subtel informed PAS in June 1990 that PAS could offer capacity for various services in Chile if it first obtained a license); Venezuela: Def.'s Summ. J. Mem. at 13 n.18; Def.'s Reply Summ. J. Mem. at 9 & App. B. at 10-11; Goldschmidt Dep. Vol. 2 at 255-57 (referring to 1991 reform of the telecommunications sector, including privatization of C.A.N.T.V., leading to the possibility of private networks such as PAS); Juarez Decl. PP 9-11, 13-14, 16-18 (PAS received its Intelsat consultations in June and August 1990, one year before Venezuela deregulated); Guatemala: Def.'s Reply Summ. J. Mem. at 10 & App. B. at 6-7 (citing Comsat Ex. 1024; Comsat Ex. 1025); Morgan Dep. at 36-37 (showing that Guatel, the PTT signatory in Guatemala, could not offer service through private companies until June 1989, and then only to majority Guatemalan companies); Spain: Def.'s Reply Summ. J. Mem. at 9 & App. B. at 8; Boneyto Dep. at 24; Beneyto Decl. PP 15-17 (with exceptions, private providers still cannot provide end-user service in Spain); Germany: Balz Dep. at 62-67; Balz Decl. P 6, 11 (stating that before June 1990, private sellers could not sell capacity directly in Germany); France: Reverte Anselmo Dep. Vol. 2 at 270-77 (stating that PAS did not get authorization from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs because France Telecom is a government owned corporation); Dupuis-Toubol Decl. PP 5 & 19 (French law restricted service to permit only the French PTT), PP 20-21 (PAS got license to operate within four months after applying after change in French regulatory structure); Dupuis-Toboul Dep. at 33-37; the United Kingdom: Gillies Decl. PP 9-10 (asserting that British Telecommunications ("British Telecom") was the monopoly PTT in Great Britain; that it was approximately 48% government owned; and that from 1981 to 1988, British Telecom and a company called Mercury Communications were the only telecommunications companies authorized to provide service in Great Britain under a government "duopoly" policy); Comsat Ex. 924 (PAS obtained its Article XIV consultations at the end of the "duopoly" policy in 1988); PAS Ex. 3118; Colombia: Def.'s Reply Summ. J. Mem. at 8-9 & App. B. at 3-4 (citing Tamayo Decl. P 3

Laws regulating access to satellite systems vary from country to country and, as a result, there is no single model which will work in all countries. Some countries have substantially deregulated satellite communications, making customer access to [PAS's] services a simple procedure, while other countries have maintained strict monopoly regimes, so that establishing a framework for accessing [PAS's] services is a time-consuming task.

Comsat Ex. 998 at 54 (PAS SEC Form S-1 (Oct. 6, 1994)); see id. at 24 (attributing 1992 increase in Latin American customers to "removal of regulatory restrictions in Venezuela and Colombia"), 32 (acknowledging that PAS faced "significant regulatory hurdles" when it started in 1988 and attributing PAS's success and growth to [**81] "continuing worldwide deregulation of telecommunications markets"). Since regulatory liberalization is clearly outside the common carrier role of Comsat and the alleged PTT conspirators, the burden is on Plaintiffs' to show that any apparent parallel conduct was not the result of this liberalization. Plaintiffs have not met this burden.

---

(claiming that Colombian law precluded PAS entry for one year after PAS-1 launch), P 12 (PAS applied in July 1989 and got authorization on March 7, 1990); Italy: Rverige Anselmo Dep. Vol. 1 at 62-63 (discussing receive-only legislative restrictions in Italy where Societa Telespazio ("Telespazio") is the PTT monopoly provider of transmission services); Spain: Antonovich Dep. at 35-37 (stating that Spain is a "highly regulated and controlled" market); Comsat Ex. 215 (November 21, 1989 PAS memorandum including notes of November 17, 1989 meetings with Telefonica and Ministry of Communications indicating that all decisions on PAS-1 would come from the Ministry of Communications).

<sup>21</sup> Citing generally: Goldberg Dep. at 37-39 ("Virtually all of the PTTs . . . were monopoly entities. Over the course of eight or nine years, through the processes of liberalization and privatization around the world, situations have changed."); Argentina: Maini Dep. at 35-46 (stating that Entel Argentina was an effective monopoly prior to the liberalization of government regulations); Eastman Dep. Vol. 1 at 102-10 (discussing privatization of Entel Argentina and formation of Telintar), 118 (discussing Telintar exclusion of PAS), 127-29 (discussing Telintar); Goldschmidt Dep. Vol. 2 at 400-02 (indicating that in Argentina and throughout Latin American PAS's problem getting market access was one of national law and PTT policy); Saralegui Dep. Vol. 1 at 160-62 (discussing authorizations required in preliberalization Argentina); PAS Ex. 1866 (December 1988 letter from PAS stating PAS intention to establish "affiliation agreement" with an Argentine company as soon Argentine Secretariat of Communications issues authorization); Comsat Ex. 520 (October 1985 PAS memorandum discussing lobbying strategy for changing Argentine regulatory structure); Brazil: Goldberg Dep. at 39 (Embratel was a monopoly until shortly before Sept. 1994); Araujo Dep. at 37-38 ("prior to 1991 if PANAMSAT wanted to get access to the Brazilian market, the only alternative PANAMSAT had was to make some type of arrangement with Embratel"); Gazzolo Dep. Vol. 1 at 154 (discussing Embratel refusal to deal with PAS in 1991, and option of PAS going directly to the Brazilian ministry for authorization); Comsat Ex. 955 (October 23, 1989 PAS memorandum discussing "continuum of deregulation" with regard to PAS efforts to obtain landing rights); Venezuela: Goldschmidt Dep. Vol. 2 at 255-57 (referring to 1991 reform of the telecommunications sector, including privatization of C.A.N.T.V., leading to the possibility of private networks such as PAS); Morgan Dep. at 55 (Venezuelan deregulation in late 1992 or early 1993 when the bureaucracy "caught up" to the earlier passed deregulation laws); Colombia: Eastman Dep. Vol. 1 at 162-63 (discussing process of initiating Article XIV consultations), Vol. 2 at 196-99 (alleging that after a 1991 change in Colombian law, PAS sought to transfer its exclusive agreement with Telecom Colombia to the Colombian Ministry, so that customers interested in PAS would no longer have to go to Telecom but could go to the ministry to obtain licenses); Lanni Dep. Vol. 2 at 266 (discussing PAS's intention to by-pass Telecom and seek authorization from the ministry), Vol. 3 at 362-63 (discussing national political problems delaying deregulation in Colombia); PAS Ex. 2283 (July 1, 1992 PAS letter to Telecom requesting transfer of PAS agreement with Telecom to the Ministry pursuant to a change in the regulatory structure); France: Albert Dep. Vol. 1 at 95-96 (between 1990 and 1993 France loosened regulations and allowed independent licensing of private organizations to uplink services); 99 (regarding application procedure for uplink licenses); Comsat Ex. 532 (alleged excerpt from July 2, 1990 Satellite Week magazine stating that it remained to be seen how or whether France Telecom would open the French market to U.S. satellite service providers); Germany: Goldschmidt Dep. Vol. 1 at 221-22 (stating without reference to Comsat that the German telephone company, Deutsche Bundespost, consistently opposed granting any operating rights to PAS in Germany until 1991, when changes to the licensing procedure removed the need to obtain the authorization of the Bundespost); Italy: Rverige Anselmo Dep. Vol. 1 at 62-63 (discussing receive-only legislative restrictions in Italy where Societa Telespazio ("Telespazio") is the PTT monopoly provider of transmission services); Antonovich Dep. at 34-35 (citing Telespazio as monopoly PTT).

[**83] Defendant has also shown through the admissions of PAS officers and employees that PAS's novelty contributed to delays in its obtaining market access. See Def.'s Mem. in Supp. of Mot. for Summ. J. at 10 n.15 (hereinafter "Def.'s Summ. J. Mem."). For example, PAS officer Saralegui admitted that [PAS] often was a strange animal in the sense that there may not have been a specific regulation as to who can or cannot access a satellite system separate from Intelsat, because when the regulations were drafted, I think sometime it was assumed it would always be Intelsat.

Saralegui Dep. Vol. 2 at 317; see id. Vol. 1 at 154-55 ("[PAS], as a separate satellite from Intelsat, often was something that had not even been contemplated when these regulations were drafted. So we often found ourselves in a nether world.").<sup>22</sup> Again, the burden is on Plaintiffs' to present evidence tending to show that any appearance of parallel conduct is not merely a reflection of PAS's role in the vanguard of liberalization. Plaintiffs have not met this burden.

[**84] Defendant has likewise shown that unique local factors in many of the alleged PTTs' nations belie any cosmetic appearance of parallel conduct.<sup>23</sup> [**86] For example, PAS's entry into the Brazilian market was delayed by PAS's intentional exclusion of Brazil from the primary coverage area of the PAS-1 satellite. See Anselmo Dep. at 451-52. In Trinidad & Tobago, on the other hand, "recent [political] disruptions" contributed to PAS's delays. See Comsat Ex. 462 at PAS 038860 (alleging that PAS entered a working arrangement without an operating agreement in Trinidad & Tobago despite serious military and political unrest during the negotiations).<sup>24</sup> In the United Kingdom, Plaintiffs lost an open competition with twenty-seven other companies for early authorization to enter the British market. See Def.'s Reply Summ. J. Mem. at 9 & App. B. at 9-10. Plaintiffs attributed a delay in Barbados to the PTT's "heavy workload rather than any planned obstruction of PAS-1 services." See PAS Ex. 2110 at PAS 017684 (January 11, 1991 PAS letter to C&W London). Moreover, Defendant cites Plaintiffs' admission that "there is no single model that will work in all countries." Comsat Ex. 998 at [**85] 54. Defendant argues, therefore, that Plaintiffs have failed to show a "uniform refusal," a "general similarity of action" or "parallel action" on the part of the alleged conspirators. See Def.'s Reply Summ. J. Mem. at 10 (citing at Harlem River, 1976-1 Trade Cas. \(CCH\) P60,820 at 68,575, 1976 WL 1238 at *4). The Court agrees.

<sup>22</sup> See also Albert Dep. at 120-21 (agreeing that the most significant disadvantage for PAS was the regulatory approval process); Comsat Ex. 644 at 55 (DLJ Confidential Offering Memorandum, May 1991) ("Obtaining Landing Rights in many countries was very difficult for PAS-1 because there was no precedent for dealing with a private satellite system. However, the process should not be as troublesome for PAS-2."); Comsat Ex. 814 at PAS 212623-23 (PAS January 3, 1989 letter to U.S. Trade Commission acknowledging that "[PAS's] presence appears unique" and acknowledging a "perception that [PAS] is attempting to force a revolution in the way international telecommunications service is offered").

<sup>23</sup> See, e.g., generally: PAS Ex. 2009 (February 7, 1990 PAS memorandum alluding to AT&T as "working against [PAS] lately in a number of locations," but not mentioning Comsat); Chile: Landman Dep. Vol. 2 at 481 ("[Chile] was not typical of most South American countries . . . . it was unique then"); Argentina: Eastman Dep. Vol. 3 at 416-19 (discussing competitiveness of Argentine market); Comsat Ex. 244 at PAS 021803 (acknowledging that delay in negotiating operating agreement caused by uncertainty over privatization of Entel Argentina); Comsat Ex. 284 (Feb. 1989 PAS memorandum discussing strategies for Argentina and stating that "given the politics in Argentina, [Goldschmidt] will be very surprised if anything develops until the last gasp of 1989"); Venezuela: Goldschmidt Dep. Vol. 2 at 580-82 (discussing PAS-1 C-band foreign domestic transponder capacity selling out); Saralegui Dep. Vol. 4 at 579-81 (discussing, without reference to Comsat, loss of Venevision and delay of Omnidision business for lack of PAS capacity after 1991); PAS Ex. 2275 (June 12, 1992 PAS marketing letter to Pepsi Venezuela stating that PAS-1 is running out of capacity); Colombia: Gazzolo Dep. Vol. 2 at 264-65 (stating that potential customer Banco Ganadero was delayed in getting a license from the Colombian Ministry), 279-81 (dispute over provisions of an exclusive operating agreement with Telecom delayed business between PAS and Precidatos), 319-20 (stating that Impsat was delayed in obtaining authorization when it applied directly to the Ministry of Colombia), 326-27 (discussing ministry delay in authorizing Orbinet); Saralegui Dep. Vol. 4 at 629 (admitting lack of direct knowledge of either Comsat or Telecom involvement in delays of ministry authorization for PAS).

<sup>24</sup> See also Eastman Dep. Vol. 2 at 219 (claiming difficulty in obtaining operating agreement due to C&W ownership of the PTT); PAS Ex. 2072 (September 25, 1990 PAS letter to Textel noting that "recent disruptions [in Trinidad] have likely contributed to the delays [PAS is] currently experiencing" and the "still tenuous situation in Trinidad"); Comsat Ex. 429 (August 31, 1990 PAS letter to Textel recognizing "some disruption in [Textel's] normal activities" caused by the unstable situation in Trinidad and Tobago); Comsat Ex. 466 (same as PAS Ex. 2072, supra).

(B) Insufficient evidence of plus factors

Rather than present evidence of the alleged refusals to deal or delays, Plaintiffs urge the Court to examine additional factors which allegedly establish that the still unsubstantiated parallel conduct resulted from the alleged conspiracy. See Pls.' S.J. Opp'n Mem. at 11. These factors include a common intent to conspire, a high level of interfirm communications, "customary indications" of a traditional conspiracy, and evidence that the [*894] alleged parallel [**87] conduct was contrary to the alleged conspirators' economic interests.

(1) Intent to conspire

Plaintiffs argue that the record contains evidence of an intent to conspire against PAS. See Pls.' Opp'n Mem. at 11-12. For the most part, however, Plaintiffs cite to testimony and exhibits which reveal only Comsat's intention to vie for business in an atmosphere of growing competition from various companies, including PAS.<sup>25</sup> [**88] Without

<sup>25</sup> See, e.g., PAS Ex. 80 (handwritten May 25, 1988 note discussing PAS pricing for full and 1/2 circuits); PAS Ex. 81 (June 1988 ISS/Comsat strategy paper excerpts discussing PAS "threat"); PAS Ex. 265 (April 28, 1989 Comsat/ISS memorandum discussing PAS agreement with Entel Argentina and possibility of similar deal between Entel and Comsat); PAS Ex. 288 (May 4, 1989 Comsat/ISS memorandum discussing competition from PAS and political situations in Argentina, Brazil, and Chile); PAS Ex. 139 (October 18, 1990 Comsat priority memorandum discussing Argentine strategies and mentioning PAS); PAS Ex. 101 (July 19, 1989 note stating "Here is some more information on PAS"); PAS Ex. 102 (July 7, 1989 analysis of PAS-1 financial and capacity characteristics); PAS Ex. 1102 (March 24, 1989 Comsat/Entel Chile joint venture proposal); PAS Ex. 112 (October 14, 1988 memorandum comparing Comsat and PAS rates for data and video service); PAS Ex. 26 (June 1, 1988 memorandum comparing PAS-1 and PAS-2 satellites with Intelsat VI and Intelsat VII satellites on cost, price, capacity and performance); PAS Ex. 35 (ISS competitive analysis charts on PAS-1 transponder loading and on trans-Atlantic capacity for all satellites); PAS Ex. 109 (capacity, program, and financial analysis of PAS-1); PAS Ex. 1552 (May 7, 1992 Comsat World Systems memorandum forwarding a May 4, 1992 memorandum comparing prices of Comsat and PAS); PAS Ex. 2715 (incremental cost analysis of PAS-1 and Orion); PAS Ex. 1793 (Comsat/ISS strategy materials listing as competitors Brightstar, Teleglobe, PAS, and domestic satellites in the Caribbean); PAS Ex. 671 (March 12, 1992 covering memorandum distributing an article from Interspace newsletter, allegedly written by PAS, discussing PAS landing rights, country by country); PAS Ex. 73 (November 29, 1988 memorandum discussing PAS satellites and competition); PAS Ex. 1800 (March 3, 1989 Comsat memorandum examining pricing of television for PTAT and PAS); PAS Ex. 57 (February 7, 1990 message seeking information on PAS transponders); PAS Ex. 931 (June 7, 1990 Comsat circulation memorandum with attached May 1990 Comsat Competitive Systems Quarterly Report, listing PAS among six competing satellite systems and listing PAS customers); PAS Ex. 349 (handwritten note stating that PAS has an earth station in Costa Rica, and a February 26, 1990 memorandum with attachments examining PAS traffic); PAS Ex. 386 (July 18, 1989 or 1990 handwritten memorandum discussing PAS capacity and quoting Anselmo statement that PAS sold out capacity on its southern beams); PAS Ex. 391 (July 17, 1989 or 1990 handwritten note listing countries which have allowed PAS to provide service); PAS Ex. 399 (June 28, 1989 memorandum highlighting issues about PAS); PAS Ex. 940 (comparison charts of PAS and Orion power coverage of European cities); PAS Ex. 941 (data on PAS-1 European coverage, trans-Atlantic satellite capacity, and Intelsat-K satellite); PAS Ex. 943 (data on 1992 K-band capacity in the trans-Atlantic and European markets); PAS Ex. 122 (undated memorandum on PAS satellite capabilities); PAS Ex. 354 (April 2, 1990 memorandum distributing attached article on Anselmo and PAS from the New York Times Magazine, April 1, 1990); PAS Ex. 651 (article from August 1990 issue of Satellite Communications focusing on PAS-1); PAS Ex. 655 (memorandum on PAS satellite capabilities); PAS Ex. 661 (March 22-29, 1989 Variety magazine article on PAS-1); PAS Ex. 938 (chart comparing power coverage of European cities among Intelsat, Astra, PAS, and Orion); PAS Ex. 1342 (March 6, 1991 data on capacity and status of separate satellite systems); PAS Ex. 381 (June 6, 1989 memorandum to file discussing PAS financials, operating costs, and "free use introductory offers"); PAS Ex. 1516 (competitive analysis of PAS-1 customers and services); PAS Ex. 975 (data on competitive systems including Intelsat, K-Sat, Astra, Eutelsat, PAS-2 and Orion); PAS Ex. 133 (May 18, 1989 data on cost, pricing, and programming of PAS-2); PAS Ex. 454 (incremental cost analysis of PAS-1 and Orion); PAS Ex. 58 (August 21, 1990 handwritten memorandum discussing PAS and Brazilsat as two separate systems serving South America); PAS Ex. 1547 (February 12, 1991 ISS analysis of PAS-1 fill factor); PAS Ex. 1390 (February 12, 1991 ISS analysis of PAS-1 and Orion); PAS Ex. 1023 (February 20, 1991 Comsat memorandum discussing PAS and Orion); PAS Ex. 1548 (data on PAS-1 full time pricing); PAS Ex. 959 (February 25, 1991 Comsat memorandum discussing bearer capacity on PAS-1); PAS Ex. 1550 (September 25, 1991 rate comparison between Comsat and PAS-1); PAS Ex. 78 (March 17, 1992 Comsat World Systems

more, a reasonable trier of fact cannot infer from this permissible intent to compete an impermissible intent to conspire against competition.<sup>26</sup>

Plaintiffs claim that Comsat exceeded vigorous competition and engaged in anticompetitive initiatives from 1984 through 1986 by lowering prices and entering long-term contracts with common carriers. Plaintiffs argue that this conduct permits an inference of an intent to foreclose PAS from the business of these carriers. See Pls.' 3(g) Statement P 19 at 11. The Court disagrees. The record reflects that Comsat's rates are set according to Intelsat memorandum comparing Intelsat and PAS capabilities); PAS Ex. 38 (ISS Competitive Analysis charts on Orion and PAS systems); PAS Ex. 2636 (May 15, 1992 marketing proposal comparing Intelsat/Comsat with PAS as a space segment supplier for VSATs in Latin America); PAS Ex. 135 (April 23, 1990 data comparing separate satellite systems including PAS, Intelsat, and Orion); PAS Ex. 1735 (handwritten notes on PAS lease rates); PAS Ex. 1736 (analysis of PAS-1 and PAS-2); PAS Ex. 1514 (data on PAS revenues with handwritten note stating that "PANAMSAT could charge much less!"); PAS Ex. 1769 (March 14, 1991 Comsat World Systems memorandum with projections for video competition among Comsat, PAS, Colombia, Orion, and Teleglobe); PAS Ex. 3009 (Intelsat Satellite Services ("ISS") Strategic Business Plan 1991-1993 in draft form); PAS Ex. 3012 (March 1991 Comsat/ISS Strategic Outlook report listing PAS as customer alternative for IBS and television services in 1991); PAS Ex. 3017 (Oct. 29, 1991 Comsat World Systems Strategic Business Plan 1991-1996); Skjei Dep. at 39-65 (discussing PAS Ex. 82 (handwritten notes comparing PAS and Comsat)), 79-87 (discussing PAS Ex. 80, supra), 91-94 (denying that PAS was discussed at Comsat joint venture meetings); Vargo Dep. at 19-22 (discussing Comsat strategic planning regarding separate systems), 29-30 (discussing Comsat strategic planning), 39-42 (Comsat disavowing knowledge of PAS overtures in Argentina and Chile prior to Comsat negotiations in those countries), 70-72 (discussing preparation and receipt of PAS Exs. 101-02, 354-55), 92-97 (discussing PAS Ex. 1102 and Comsat awareness in March 1989 of PAS negotiations in Chile), 128 (referencing PAS Ex. 81), 130-32 (acknowledging that after March 1989 PAS may have been mentioned at Comsat meetings), 162-65 (referencing PAS Exs. 108 & 1345)); Boll Dep. Vol. 1 at 37-43 (referencing PAS Ex. 112 and discussing Comsat comparison of PAS and Comsat/Intelsat satellite features), 50-52 (discussing PAS Ex. 112), 73-82 (discussing PAS Ex. 26 comparison of Intelsat and PAS satellites), 89-90 (referencing PAS Ex. 35), 189-91 (referencing PAS Exs. 108-09), Vol. 2 at 282-91 (discussing need for operating agreements when providing full circuit), 424-25 (acknowledging Comsat comparison of Comsat and PAS pricing), 448-49 (examining PAS Ex. 1552), 471-73 (discussing PAS Ex. 2715); Cecala Dep. at 9-15 (examining PAS Ex. 1793 and comparing Comsat and PAS); 20-23 (discussing PAS Exs. 80 & 1182 regarding PAS pricing data), 46 (referencing PAS Ex. 671); Chaconas Dep. at 45-55 (discussing a Comsat internal presentation on separate systems in 1989, including but not limited to PAS), 102-12 (referencing PAS Ex. 73 and discussing a Comsat internal presentation on separate systems in 1989, including but not limited to PAS), 116-41 (discussing PAS Ex. 1800 and Comsat analysis of separate system break-even points, including PAS); Flower Dep. at 96-104 (discussing PAS Ex. 57 and economic analysis performed by Comsat), 107-08 (referencing PAS Ex. 57), 121-27 (discussing PAS Ex. 26); Giarman Dep. at 25-31 (discussing PAS Ex. 931 and discontinued Comsat quarterly report on competitors), 41-46 (discussing Comsat gathering and internal distribution of publicly available information on separate satellite and cable systems, including PAS), 55-66 (discussing PAS Exs. 349, 386 & 391), 84-85 (discussing PAS Ex. 82), 89-90 (discussing PAS Ex. 82 and Comsat monitoring of all satellite launches), 94-98 (discussing PAS Exs. 391 & 399), 102-16 (discussing PAS Exs. 940-41, & 943), 120-23 (discussing PAS Exs. 101-02), 126-32 (referencing PAS Exs. 122 & 354), 134-47 (referencing PAS Exs. 122, 651, 655, 661, 938, 940 & 1342); Hoff Dep. at 32-65 (discussing PAS Exs. 73, 381, & 1800 and analyses of separate systems and cables, including PAS costs, pricing and capacity); Hsu Dep. at 27-45 (discussing Comsat competitive analyses of separate cables and satellite systems, including PAS, after 1990), 76-80 (discussing PAS Exs. 26 & 1516 regarding Comsat competitive analyses), 84-85 (discussing Comsat report comparing PAS and Astra), 96-100 (referencing PAS Exs. 133 & 975), 109-13 (referencing PAS Exs. 454 & 2715 regarding incremental costs of new satellites), 115-18 (referencing PAS Exs. 58 & 1541), 133-46 (discussing PAS Exs. 959, 1023, 1390, 1547-48), 164-73 (discussing PAS Exs. 38, 78, & 1550 and stating that one hundred percent of information collected by Comsat about PAS came from publicly available sources), 182-85 (discussing PAS Exs. 2636); Jacxsens Dep. at 34-45 (discussing PAS Ex. 26 which compares costs of Intelsat and PAS satellites), 47-61 (discussing PAS Exs. 109 & 135 and analyses of separate systems' capacity, costs, & coverage), 64-70 (discussing PAS Exs. 133 & 2715 comparing Intelsat-K and PAS-II), 74-85 (discussing PAS Exs. 1514 & 1735-36 regarding PAS costs and pricing of transponders); Kemp Dep. at 61-76 (discussing Comsat financial analysis of PAS using only publicly available information), 144-55 (discussing PAS Exs. 1769 and market share forecasts, 1990-93), 162-69 (discussing PAS Ex. 78 comparing PAS and Intelsat capabilities).

<sup>26</sup> In a further effort to show Defendant's alleged intent to conspire against PAS, Plaintiffs cite to lobbying materials, see, e.g., PAS Ex. 3120 (testimony of Irving Goldstein, President of Comsat, before the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives, June 13, July 25 and 26, 1984), and to materials produced in connection with Defendant's signatory role. See, e.g., PAS Ex. 3085 (record of the Fourteenth Meeting of Signatories of Intelsat concerning separate satellite systems). These materials cannot support an inference of impermissible conduct.

tariff schedules, therefore Plaintiffs' allegations concerning [**89] price amount to little. Moreover, although the record does reflect that Comsat entered long-term contracts with many common carriers, nothing in the record suggests that Comsat secured any of the contracts by means of any anticompetitive act against PAS. On the contrary, the record suggests that for their own reasons, the common carriers elected to secure long-term deals with Comsat only after considering and rejecting offers from PAS. See id.<sup>27</sup>

[**90] Plaintiffs also purport to offer "substantial testimony" from PAS customers--including IBM, DuPont, and Cargill--that these customers "were precluded from doing business with PAS because of the refusal of PTTs to enter into operating agreements or provide landing rights." See Pls.' S.J. Opp'n Mem. at 22-23 & n.5. This compound proposition misstates the testimony in the record. The record contains testimony that identifies PAS's lack of operating agreements as one reason, among many, that certain customers chose not to do business with PAS. Plaintiffs provide no testimony, however, of any intent to conspire to deny PAS any operating agreement. Defendant, on the other hand, cites testimony refuting this claim. See, e.g., Def.'s Summ. J. Mem. at 9 (citing Maull Dep. at 7, 101-02) (testimony of AT&T's international negotiations manager disputing any suggestion that PTTs in Latin America were operating in conjunction). Plaintiffs' attributing to the alleged conspiracy the fact that PAS may have lacked operating agreements at a particular time, in a particular nation, for a particular service is not supported by the record.

Ultimately, Plaintiffs resort to repeated, talismanic [**91] citation of a few items out of the thousands provided to the Court. This effort is unavailing. Plaintiffs repeatedly cite to the handwritten notes by a Comsat employee comparing PAS and Comsat. See PAS Ex. 82 (notes of Stephen Skjei).<sup>28</sup> [**92] Plaintiffs argue that a clause in the notes stating that Comsat should "contest every market" permits an inference of an intent to conspire. The Court disagrees. In context, the clause shows nothing more than an intent to compete. Although Plaintiffs contend that the clause indicates Comsat's decision to contest every market "regardless of business justifications," see Pls. 3(g) Statement P 21, nothing in either the document or the many pages of deposition testimony concerning the document warrants such an inference.<sup>29</sup> On the contrary, the deposition testimony indicates that the notes record

<sup>27</sup> Citing Lanni Dep. Vol. 2 at 198-219 (discussing alleged "Mastercard" meeting between Comsat and AT&T and alleged "top down" meeting at AT&T, but without personal knowledge and without identifying the parties allegedly present for Comsat or AT&T); Comsat Ex. 143 (December 23, 1991 draft of PAS marketing letter to AT&T concerning pricing for VSAT service); Comsat Ex. 221 (July 25, 1988 PAS marketing letter to AT&T admitting that "PAS-1 does not meet AT&T's current satellite requirements" and that AT&T's "relationship with various PTTs precludes [AT&T's] reaching an agreement with PAS"); Comsat Ex. 236 (May 12, 1992 PAS memorandum discussing AT&T and alleged "Mastercard" meeting); Comsat Ex. 777 (November 19, 1991 PAS memorandum discussing concern over customer inquiries about PAS restoral ability); Comsat Ex. 778 (December 30, 1991 final draft of PAS marketing letter to AT&T concerning pricing for VSAT service, including pricing appendices and list of countries in which PAS is authorized to provide services); Comsat Ex. 782 (same as Comsat Ex. 236, supra).

<sup>28</sup> The notes list under the heading "PAN AMSAT" the subheadings "ADVANTAGES" and "DISADVANTAGES." Listed as PAS advantages are "lower price" and "higher power." Listed as PAS disadvantages are "connectivity," "no cross-strap," "no restoration," "no ties," and "no U.S. coverage," followed by notations stating "all can be overcome w. time + money" and "if he builds second satellite we are in trouble." The notes then list under the heading "CQ RESPONSE" and the subheading "GENERAL" the following items: "Better capacity - off the shelf networks," "Business relations/ties w. Signatories," "Promotion - CQ labs, if reoriented," "Emphasis on networks - digital IBS, IDR, ISDM," "Contest every market;" and "REGIONAL SYSTEM, TV-SAT, SEX APPEAL." On a second page under the heading "Pan Amsat" there appear notations stating "creativity - conventions on C-SPAN," and "we need more ideas." See PAS Ex. 82.

<sup>29</sup> See, e.g., Skjei Dep. at 15-16 (discussing Skjei's tenure as Comsat Director of Business Development), 39-40 (discussing Comsat sources of information in PAS Ex. 82), 40-42 (discussing PAS Ex. 82 and advantages of PAS over Comsat, including price)); Giarman Dep. at 84-85 (discussing PAS Ex. 82), 89-90 (discussing PAS Ex. 82 and Comsat monitoring of all satellite launches); Crockett Dep. Vol. 2 at 328-31 (discussing PAS Ex. 82 and advantages of PAS over Comsat, including price and power); Carroll Dep. Vol. 1 at 50-52 (discussing PAS Ex. 82 and advantages of PAS power and flexible pricing); Phillips Dep. at 336-37 (interpreting "contest every market" as recognizing competition, not a nonprice predation).

only the author's opinions, see Skjei Dep. at 57-59 (stating that PAS Ex. 82 merely reflects opinion and does not suggest responses to PAS), and were never distributed to higher-ups. See id.

Plaintiffs also invoke a draft of a June 15, 1989 memorandum from a Comsat research analyst to Comsat's vice president of business development. See Pls.' 3(g) Statement P 35; PAS Ex. 108 (June 15, 1989 draft memorandum discussing Comsat "strategic business plan competitor issues"). The memorandum discusses competition not only from PAS but from the Orion [**93] and Astra satellite systems, from underseas fiber cable systems, and from common carriers such as US Sprint. Plaintiffs excerpt a single item from the draft memorandum:

. Several PTT's in Europe, e.g. France, Switzerland (?) and the UK have agreements with PANAMSAT to provide back-up capacity to INTELSAT. This is done in an effort to appear pro-competitive. However, no capital has been used to support these agreements, i.e. purchasing antennas as with INTELSAT.

PAS Ex. 108. Even if a reasonable trier of fact could find that this excerpt supports an inference of hostility toward PAS on the part of certain European PTTs, the excerpt does not support an inference that Comsat conspired against PAS. Moreover, the excerpt indicates that even these allegedly hostile PTTs entered agreements, and the full memorandum shows that other PTTs in Europe and Latin America also entered agreements with PAS. See id. at 1 (indicating that in addition to PTTs in France, the United Kingdom, and perhaps Switzerland, PAS reached agreements with PTTs in Brazil and Germany, and received FCC authorizations for five customers to operate United States earth stations to provide services to "the [**94] UK, Ireland, FRG, Luxembourg and Sweden"). At least some of these agreements were initiated by the PTT signatories themselves. See id. (stating that PAS had two or three new leases in the Atlantic Ocean Region "which were initiated by signatories"). Again, Plaintiffs cite to nothing in the many pages of deposition testimony that supports their reading of the document. On the contrary, the record disfavors Plaintiffs' reading, see, e.g., Johnson Dep. at 10-12 (discussing PAS Ex. 108 as not final and subject to having been changed), 12-30 (discussing publicly available sources for data in PAS Ex. 108 and defining PTT efforts to "appear pro-competitive" as "not wanting to have a bad relationship with PANAMSAT"), and suggests that the document was never circulated. See Vargo Dep. at 132 (disavowing knowledge of PAS Ex. 108); Alewine Dep. at 201 (same); Alper Dep. at 146 (same); Carroll Dep. at 50 (same); Flower Dep. at 151-52 (same); Shubilla Dep. at 147-48 (same); Crockett Dep. at 328-29 (disavowing knowledge of PAS Ex. 108 and disagreeing with its content).

Plaintiffs also quote Comsat's president stating that "in telecommunications as in love, it takes two to tango." [**95] See Pls.' 3(g) Statement P 22; Goldstein Dep. at 40-44. This comment merely states a fact which the parties accept: under the Intelsat system, a United States space segment provider such as Comsat or PAS must have a correspondent provider in each target nation. See Def.'s Reply Summ. J. Mem. at 14. No inference of an intent to conspire may be drawn from Comsat's acknowledgment of this undisputed fact.

Plaintiffs have failed to present evidence tending to show an intent by Comsat and any PTT to conspire against PAS.

(2) Interfirm communications

Plaintiffs also allege that support for the alleged conspiracy can be inferred from the "literally hundreds" of meetings between Comsat and PTT co-conspirators "in addition to and wholly separate from Intelsat business." See Pls.' 3(g) Statement P 24. Plaintiffs claim that many of these meetings and communications between Comsat and the PTTs directly arose from, related to, or referenced competition from PAS. See Pls.' 3(g) Statement P 25.<sup>30</sup> An examination of Plaintiffs' proffered evidence does not bear this claim out.

[**96] Many of the citations in Plaintiffs' 3(g) Statement PP 24 and 25 reference meetings between Comsat and various PTTs, but do not identify whether Comsat participated in those meetings in its common carrier capacity, or <sup>30</sup>Paragraph 25 of Plaintiffs' 3(g) Statement supports different propositions but lists the same citations as in P 24, with an additional citation to the Belmar Dep. Vol. 2 at 352-54 (discussing Comsat discussions with CNN and Turner, without mention of PAS).

as an Intelsat signatory.<sup>31</sup> [**97] Other citations in PP 24 and 25 identify meetings undertaken in Comsat's common carrier role, but do not mention PAS.<sup>32</sup> [**98] Still other citations in PP 24 and 25 specifically deny that

<sup>31</sup> See Alewine Dep. Vol. 2 at 301-02 (acknowledging meetings with British Telecom, but not necessarily separate from Intelsat business); Carroll Dep. Vol. 2 at 275-78 (referencing unspecified meetings in Jamaica, Trinidad & Tobago, Barbados and London), 294-97 (referencing unspecified meetings between Comsat and PTT officials in Chile, Argentina, Brazil, Venezuela, Colombia, the Dominican Republic, Jamaica, Trinidad & Tobago, Barbados, the United Kingdom, France, Germany, Spain and Italy); Chow Dep. at 39-40 (referencing PAS Ex. 1181 regarding a meetings in May 1988 between Comsat and the PTT signatories of the United Kingdom, France, Belgium, Spain and Italy); Crockett Dep. Vol. 1 at 39-41 (referring to meetings in Chile), 81 (referring to communications between Comsat/Intelsat and providers in Russia, Colombia, Argentina, Brazil, Venezuela, Singapore, Thailand and the Philippines); Lowry-Gabriel Dep. Vol. 2 at 218-25 (acknowledging Comsat meetings with signatories in the United Kingdom, France, Spain, Africa (numerous nations), Japan, Singapore, Australia, Brazil, Argentina, Chile, the Dominican Republic, Venezuela, Costa Rica, Mexico and probably more); Hannan Dep. at 17-20 (discussing 1988 meetings with European signatories), 27-33 (acknowledging 1989 meetings with France Telecom, Deutsche Bundespost, the Greek signatory and Telespazio); Schnicke Dep. at 58-60 (referring generally to meetings with signatory PTTs); Twining Dep. at 35-36 (acknowledging unspecified meetings with European PTTs).

<sup>32</sup> See Alewine Dep. Vol. 2 at 325-27 (alleging Comsat meeting with DTRE in France on or about September 26, 1988 regarding ATV), 332-36 (referencing PAS Ex. 1296 and September 1988 meeting in France); Alper Dep. at 211-16 (referencing PAS Ex. 266 and alleged meeting with Entel Argentina regarding Comstar consultations); Belmar Dep. Vol. 2 at 363-66 (referencing PAS Ex. 1359 and alleged February 1989 meetings with Entel Argentina regarding Comstar), 373-78 (referencing PAS Ex. 266 and two meetings with Entel Argentina regarding Comstar), 396 (referencing earlier referenced meeting in Florida about Comstar); Carroll Dep. Vol. 2 at 268-69 (referencing an unspecified meeting between Comsat and Embratel Brazil in Rio de Janeiro concerning the Turner lease), 325-29 (referencing PAS Ex. 265 and meetings in Argentina regarding Comstar); Chow Dep. at 47-54 (discussing PAS Ex. 1173 and August 23-24, 1988 meetings in Rome among Comsat and representatives of British Telecom, Deutsche Bundespost, France Telecom, Telefonica, and Telespazio to discuss ATV; also discussing PAS Exs. 1592 and 1109 regarding meetings in Colombia); Crockett Dep. Vol. 1 at 91-95 (discussing meetings regarding ventures in Venezuela and Brazil), 116-17 (discussing Comsat's historical connection with PTTs worldwide), 159-67 (discussing Comsat joint venture in Colombia and Comsat negotiations with ASETA), Vol. 2 at 352-54 (discussing PAS Ex. 1112 and meetings in Colombia over venture opportunities); Lowry-Gabriel Dep. Vol. 2 at 229-31 (discussing meetings between Comsat and Codetel), 245-49 (referring to meetings with Latin American signatories regarding Mastercard and AT&T business), 252-53 (discussing meetings with Embratel in 1992), 255-60 (discussing 1992 meetings with C.A.N.T.V. Venezuela and C&W); Kopinski Dep. at 21-26 (discussing ATV meetings in Paris in 1988 or 1989), 35-38 (discussing meetings with signatories in Argentina, Chile, Colombia, Brazil and Venezuela regarding Comsat bandwidth-on-demand service), 159-60 (referencing PAS Ex. 1305 discussing June 1988 meetings in Paris); Nolting Dep. at 108-20 (discussing informal meetings at the International Telecommunications Union ("ITU") conventions), 124-25 (referencing VSAT meetings discussed in PAS Ex. 1732), 139-41 (referencing VSAT meetings discussed in PAS Ex. 1732); Shubilla Dep. at 60-68 (discussing meetings in 1988 in Argentina and Chile to discuss possible joint ventures); Skjei Dep. at 24-26 (discussing Embratel rejection of Comsat IDS joint venture overture); Tanner Dep. Vol. 2 at 279-86 (discussing PAS Ex. 2794 and Comsat agreement with Telefonica and British Telecom); Torrico Dep. at 32-33 (discussing Comsat revenue share agreement with Telecom Colombia in July 1992), 49-53 (discussing meetings with Telecom over revenue share agreement with Comsat); Twining Dep. at 39-46 (discussing meeting with European PTTs regarding Intelsat-K marketing); Vargo Dep. at 46-47 (acknowledging meetings with Telecom Colombia in 1991 about revenue share agreement), 62-63 (referencing PAS Ex. 267 referencing a memorandum of understanding signed with Entel Argentina), 67-69 (referencing PAS Ex. 1346); PAS Ex. 90 (excerpt from FCC Week, October 7, 1991); PAS Ex. 266 (Comsat March 15, 1989 internal memorandum on status of Comstar negotiations in Argentina); PAS Ex. 267 (Comsat April 19, 1989 covering memorandum and attached memorandum of understanding between Comsat and Entel Argentina); PAS Ex. 1109 (Comsat November 1, 1988 letter and telex referencing meetings in Colombia); PAS Ex. 1112 (telex referencing meeting in Colombia (same as PAS Ex. 1109, supra)); PAS Ex. 1172 (January 26, 1989 telex from British Telecom to PTT participants in ATV, including Comsat, discussing agreement resulting from January 23-24, 1989 meetings in London); PAS Ex. 1173 (September 7, 1988 memorandum discussing results of August 23-24, 1988 meetings in Rome among Comsat and European signatories regarding ATV); PAS Ex. 1181 (Comsat May 23, 1988 memorandum discussing, without mention of PAS, meetings with European signatories); PAS Ex. 1296 (October 3, 1988 letter from France Telecom referencing meetings in Paris); PAS Ex. 1299 (September 26, 1988 telex from France Telecom acknowledging meeting in Paris the week before about ATV); PAS Ex. 1305 (Comsat July 5, 1988 memorandum discussing, without reference to PAS, June 29-30, 1988 meetings in Paris with six European signatories about ATV, including appended draft agreement); PAS Ex. 1346 (Comsat March 13, 1989 memorandum reporting results of meetings in Chile and Argentina); PAS Ex. 1359 (Comsat March 3, 1989 memorandum highlighting issues

PAS was a factor or was even discussed at Comsat's meetings with various PTTs.<sup>33</sup> Indeed, only isolated references to competition from PAS can be found anywhere in the lengthy string citations in PP 24 and 25,<sup>34</sup> and of these isolated references, one actually describes an effort by Comsat to assist PAS. See Schnicke Dep. at 26-30 (referring to "hundreds" of meetings with PTTs, and stating that PAS was discussed one time in the context of a Comsat effort to gain support for PAS coordination and thereby promote competition).

[**99] As Defendant correctly notes, contacts among alleged conspirators cannot alone support an inference of conspiracy. See Def.'s Summ. J. Mem. at 32-33 n.42 (citing H.L. Hayden Co. v. Siemens Medical Systems, Inc., 879 F.2d 1005, 1012 (2d Cir. 1989) (recognizing that manufacturers and distributors must coordinate their activities); Venture Technology Inc. v. National Fuel Gas Co., 685 F.2d 41, 44 (2d Cir.) (evidence of close relations or frequent meetings insufficient absent evidence of an illegal agreement), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1007, 74 L. Ed. 2d 398, 103 S. Ct. 362 (1982)). In light of the fact that Comsat must deal with the PTT signatories in order to complete its common carrier functions, Plaintiffs have failed to present evidence tending to show as a factor in support of the alleged conspiracy an unusual incidence of communications between Comsat and the alleged PTT conspirators.

(3) Customary indications of conspiracy

Plaintiffs also allege that support for the alleged conspiracy can be inferred from "customary indications" of traditional conspiracy. These indications allegedly include innumerable meetings between Comsat and the alleged co-conspirators [**100] involving specific attempts to block PAS, Defendant's dealings with Codetel in the Dominican Republic, and the Intelsat signatory resolutions regarding separate satellite systems.

(a) Innumerable meetings

In addition to citing meetings between Comsat and various PTTs as evidence of interfirm communications, Plaintiffs very loosely cite these meetings as evidence of an effort to block PAS from obtaining CNN's business, of a conspiracy behind ATV, the Intelsat-K satellite and Latin American joint ventures, and of an effort to block PAS from getting business from AT&T for Mastercard's VSAT network in Latin America. See Pls. Opp'n Mem. at 12; Pls.' 3(g) Statement PP 24-37. Plaintiffs claim that at these meetings and in meetings with customers, Comsat and its co-conspirators expressly discussed means of hindering PAS's efforts. The materials cited by Plaintiffs, however, do not support these claims.

With regard to the CNN business, Plaintiffs claim that after PAS met with CNN in late 1988 and early 1989, Comsat met with the European and South American PTTs to "formulate strategy and proposals to prevent PAS from discussed during February 20-28, 1989 meetings in Chile and Argentina); PAS Ex. 1592 (Comsat October 28, 1988 letter to Telecom Colombia referencing October 26, 1988 meeting); PAS Ex. 1732 (February 26, 1992 memorandum summarizing, without reference to PAS, the results of February 1992 meetings in Brazil, Chile, and Argentina); PAS Ex. 2690 (Comsat July 19, 1989 memorandum discussing schedule of conferences at which to market Intelsat K-4); PAS Ex. 2794 (March 2, 1992 letter from Telefonica acknowledging February 13, 1991 meeting in Washington among Telefonica, Comsat, and British Telecom regarding Brightstar and Intelsat-K, and without mention of PAS).

---

<sup>33</sup> See Crockett Dep. Vol. 2 at 249-52 (mentioning meetings with Embratel Brazil regarding venture opportunities but disavowing ever discussing PAS), 296-300 (discussing failures of Comsat Timeplex preemptible service and meetings with Entel Argentina, but disavowing knowledge of PAS negotiations with Entel Argentina), 303-08 (denying having discussed with Entel Argentina political impact of PAS Intelsat coordination); Flower Dep. at 199-214 (discussing birth of ATV at meeting among Comsat, British Telecom, Telespazio, Deutsche Bundespost, and Telefonica, and explicitly disavowing anything having to do with PAS as reason for starting the ATV service); Tanner Dep. Vol. 2, 182-87 (referencing PAS Ex. 2690, a July 1989 memorandum on the marketing of Intelsat K-4, discussing meetings with European PTTs, but disavowing ever discussing PAS at those meetings).

<sup>34</sup> See Nolting Dep. at 85-105 (referencing PAS Ex. 1732 discussing February 1992 meetings with signatory-PTTs in Latin American and acknowledging Comsat representations to the PTTs that failure to act in VSAT market could cause VSAT and IDS business to switch to PAS); Skjei Dep. at 141-46 (referencing PAS Ex. 288 discussing PAS success in Brazil and financial potential of an Embratel/Comsat venture in IDS); PAS Ex. 265 (Comsat April 28, 1989 internal memorandum discussing Comstar competition with PAS in Argentine market); PAS Ex. 288 (Comsat May 4, 1989 memorandum discussing status of Comsat business in Argentina, Brazil and Chile, and noting PAS success in Argentina and Brazil).

obtaining this business." Pls.' 3(g) Statement P 32.<sup>35</sup> In support [**101] of this claim, Plaintiffs cite many meetings and communications between Comsat and the PTTs which Plaintiffs claim directly arose from, related to, or referenced competition from PAS for CNN's business. See Pls.' 3(g) Statement P 25. The majority of Plaintiffs' citations, however, make no mention of PAS, see id.,<sup>36</sup> [**102] and those that do mention PAS include only benign acknowledgments that both Comsat and PAS sought the CNN business for Latin America. See id.<sup>37</sup> These acknowledgments do not support an inference of conspiracy or other anticompetitive conduct. Ultimately, Comsat retained CNN's business between the United States and Europe, but lost it to PAS in South America. See Def.'s Reply Summ. J. Mem. at 15.<sup>38</sup>

[**103] With regard to the Atlantic Television Service (ATV)<sup>39</sup> and the Intelsat-K satellite,<sup>40</sup> [**105] Plaintiffs claim that these services were "directly targeted at PAS." Pls.' 3(g) Statement P 31. In support of this claim,

---

<sup>35</sup> Paragraph 32 of Plaintiffs' 3(g) Statement references in support the same string citation as provided in P 25, which the Court examined and dismissed earlier. See supra, nn. 31-34.

<sup>36</sup> Citing Belmar Dep. Vol. 2 at 352-54 (discussing without mention of PAS discussions with CNN and Turner); Carroll Dep. Vol. 1 at 122-28 (discussing CNN and Turner proposals in Brazil and Argentina without mention of PAS), 142 mentioning PAS along with Intelsat and Teleglobe as competitors with Comsat/ATV, but without mention of CNN or Turner), 166-68 (discussing negotiations with Turner for 10 year lease, without mention of PAS); Crockett Dep. Vol. 4 at 650 (referencing without mention of PAS negotiations on rates for 10 year contract for CNN); Hannon Dep. at 43-47 (discussing without reference to PAS Comsat's exploration of video business with Turner/CNN, citing as the cause "increasing pressure from fiber optic cables"), 60-61 (referencing effort to convince Colombia to alter lease terms to allow CNN access to capacity), 65-66 (referencing CNN/Turner's "very new way" of operating through hundreds of small satellite dishes, in effect bypassing domestic microwave distribution systems); Tanner Dep. Vol. 1, at 84-98 (discussing Comsat efforts to facilitate Brazil's interest in working with Turner/CNN and disavowing any mention in discussions between Comsat and Turner/CNN of PAS's lack of landing rights or relationships with other signatories), 114-19 (discussing negotiations of 10 year global leases among Turner/CNN, Comsat, British Telecom, and Cable & Wireless), 121-27 (discussing development of negotiations over global leases with CNN); Twining Dep. at 87-105 (discussing meeting between Comsat and Turner/CNN regarding long-term global lease package and Comsat communications with European PTTs indicating the competitive nature of the negotiations), 111-13 (discussing cost sharing arrangement among Comsat and the European PTTs), 116-18 (discussing statement about setting rates in an unusual manner), 120-21 (discussing issues of lease utilization and cost sharing among Comsat and the European PTTs); PAS Ex. 1567 (Comsat proposed outline for CNN service to South America); PAS Ex. 1568 (June 2, 1988 Comsat letter to Turner/CNN outlining Comsat proposal for CNN service to Latin America); PAS Ex. 1795 (June 17, 1988 Comsat proposal to Turner/CNN); PAS Ex. 2563 (August 31, 1988 Comsat memorandum discussing rates for ten year global leases for CNN).

<sup>37</sup> Citing Carroll Dep. Vol. 2 at 241-44 (referencing participation of Chile in Turner proposal, and comparing PAS ability to provide complete circuit with Comsat ability to obtain matching orders from PTT signatories), 258-60 (acknowledging Comsat's competing with PAS for Turner business in Latin America, but not Europe, and discussing, without reference to PAS, rates for 10 year contract); Hannon Dep. at 55-57 (acknowledging Comsat's competing with PAS in 1988 for Turner business in Latin America); Saralegui Dep. Vol. 3 at 474-75 (claiming that PAS agreements with ESPN and CNN were won with "low-ball" prices, but not unfairly low); Twining Dep. at 124-26 (acknowledging Comsat's awareness that it was competing with PAS for the CNN/Turner lease business); PAS Ex. 2821 (May 18, 1988 memorandum summarizing a meeting with Turner/CNN in Atlanta on May 12, 1988 which addressed inter alia competition with PAS for CNN business in Latin America).

<sup>38</sup> Citing Carroll Dep. at 245-46 (alleging that Comsat lost the CNN business in Latin America to PAS because PAS had better salespeople); Tanner Dep. at 81 (acknowledging that in 1988 Comsat lost the Turner/CNN business in Latin America to PAS); Twining Dep. at 25-27 (acknowledging competing with PAS and losing to PAS the Turner/CNN business in Latin America).

<sup>39</sup> Plaintiffs claim that Comsat conspired with the PTTs in Italy, Britain, Spain and Portugal to provide an "end-to-end" service offering "discounted rates, flexible volume-based contracts, one-stop booking for space segment, [and] connectivity to and from Europe, Central and South America, and Africa." 3d Am. Compl. P 28(e). Plaintiffs claim that the conspirators put a price ceiling on the service, resulting in unreasonable hindrances on competition. Plaintiffs cite to the discontinuance of the service within one year as proof that it was developed for no legitimate business purpose but rather to impede PAS's negotiations in the participating nations.

Plaintiffs cite many meetings and communications between Comsat and the participating PTTs which Plaintiffs claim directly arose from, related to, or referenced competition with PAS. See Pls.' 3(g) Statement P 25. Plaintiffs' own citations, however, reveal that PAS was merely one of several entities with which ATV and Intelsat-K were designed to compete. See id. P 25,<sup>41</sup> P 31.<sup>42</sup> [**106] Moreover, many of the cited communications make no reference to PAS. See Pls.' 3(g) Statement P 31.<sup>43</sup> [**107] Those that do reference PAS do so only in the context of permissible competition, see id.,<sup>44</sup> [**108] and indicate that PAS often prevailed in that competition. See id.

---

<sup>40</sup> The Intelsat-K satellite was an Intelsat property offering services which Comsat and other signatories sold. See Def.'s Reply Summ. J. Mem. at 16 (citing Lowry-Gabriel Dep. at 29-30; Cecala Dep. at 29-30). Comsat's conduct with regard to the planning and collective marketing of Intelsat-K is therefore immune, insofar as it that conduct was undertaken in Comsat's signatory capacity. Plaintiffs acknowledged as much by deleting references to Intelsat-K from the Third Amended Complaint. Compare 1st Am. Compl. P 28(h) at 24-26 (containing allegations based on Intelsat-K), with 2d Am. Compl. P 28 (omitting Intelsat-K allegations).

<sup>41</sup> Citing Carroll Dep. Vol. 1 at 142-43 (listing as competitors of Comsat's ATV service PAS, Brightstar, and Teleglobe); Kopinski Dep. at 27 (acknowledging PAS as competitor of Comsat's ATV service).

<sup>42</sup> Citing Carroll Dep. Vol. 1 at 138-39 (acknowledging that one intention behind K-SAT was technical competition with Astra, Eutelsat and PAS), 142-43 (listing as competitors of Comsat's ATV service PAS, Brightstar, and Teleglobe); Alewine Dep. Vol. 3 at 427-28 (identifying Hisposat, PAS, TDRSS and regional systems as Comsat's competition for video business between 1988 and 1991); Cecala Dep. at 39 (referencing PAS Ex. 2760 containing comparison of Intelsat-K, Orion, and PAS); Kopinski Dep. at 38-39 (referencing forecasting of Atlantic video service prior to procurement of Intelsat-K), 41 (identifying PAS as Comsat's only competition for Atlantic Ku-band capacity at the time of the Intelsat-K traffic forecasting), 43 (stating that Intelsat-K video services were marketed to end users, while VSAT services were marketed to carriers); Salvati Dep. at 61 (acknowledging that Intelsat-K would compete with PAS, Astra, and Eutelsat, among others); PAS Ex. 1530 (materials for presentation on trans-Atlantic market containing, inter alia, list of satellite (Intelsat, Astra, Eutelsat, PAS, Orion) and cable (TAT and PTAT) competitors).

<sup>43</sup> Citing Fagan Dep. at 34-37 (referencing meetings between Comsat and various European PTTs, some about ATV, others about the marketing of Intelsat-K); PAS Ex. 1381 (agenda for April 21, 1989 Comsat Board of Directors meeting, without reference to PAS, Intelsat-K, or ATV); PAS Ex. 2734 (Comsat September 17, 1990, memorandum summarizing results of meeting with ABC concerning Intelsat-K); PAS Ex. 2760 (January 23, 1991 covering memorandum and attached Intelsat-K presentation materials for broadcasters); PAS Ex. 2774 (Comsat March 29, 1991 memorandum highlighting results of meetings with Hughes Communication, Keystone, and IDB of California regarding Intelsat-K); PAS Ex. 2775 (March 30, 1991 memorandum concerning marketing recommendations for Intelsat-K); PAS Ex. 2829 (August 14, 189 memorandum reporting results of meetings with European Broadcasting Union ("EBU") and Turner/CNN over Intelsat-K); PAS Ex. 2841 (February 6, 1991 memorandum containing impressions from Comsat meetings with ESPN, VIACOM, and HBO about Intelsat-K); PAS Ex. 2894 (ISS Strategic Business Plan, 1991-93); PAS Ex. 2690 (Comsat July 19, 1989 memorandum regarding marketing strategy for the K-4 satellite).

<sup>44</sup> Citing Popkin Dep. at 135 (stating that ITU constraints might be a problem for marketing Intelsat-K, especially in comparison to PAS), 186-87 (referencing PAS Ex. 1652 and Comsat's need to persuade British Telecom to use Intelsat-K instead of PAS segment for CBS business in Intelsat VI), 194 (acknowledging competition between Intelsat-K and PAS for EBU news services); Salvati Dep. at 40-41 (disavowing any effort by Comsat to prevent PAS from obtaining major broadcaster customers of Ku-band capacity); Tanner Dep. Vol. 2 at 180-81 (acknowledging PAS advantage in Ku-band capacity prior to Intelsat-K), 183 (acknowledging meetings with European PTTs to discuss marketing of Intelsat-K capacity), 191 (acknowledging that Comsat supplied ABC with a comparison of PAS and Intelsat K-4 services), 254-55 (discussing Intelsat-K prelaunch discounts and restoration plans in context of IDB), 260-61 (discussing need for restoration plan and identified replacement satellite for Intelsat-K); Twining Dep. at 86-91 (discussing PAS video business development in Europe), 94 (acknowledging competition between Intelsat-K and PAS), 130-31 (acknowledging Comsat internal competitive information comparing Comsat to PAS and other separate systems, but denying having ever used the information with clients); PAS Ex. 78 (Comsat March 17, 1992 memorandum comparing Intelsat and PAS capabilities in terms of connectivities, coverages, customer options, on-board redundancy, and restoration capacity); PAS Ex. 81 (marketing presentation materials captioned, inter alia, "The PANAMSAT Threat," "Migration to PANAMSAT," and "COMSAT vs. PANAMSAT: Video Pricing"); PAS Ex. 2671 (Comsat satellite presentation materials including ATV, Intelsat-K, and Ku-band performance comparison to PAS-1); PAS Ex. 2605 (Comsat presentation on K-4 Satellite including Ku-Band performance comparison to PAS-1); PAS Ex. 2713 (March 21, 1990 electronic mail-memorandum discussing ABC plan to sign a short-term contract with PAS); PAS Ex. 2723 (July 5, 1990 electronic mail-memorandum discussing ABC's contract with PAS for outbound service and ABC's continued interest in Intelsat-K).

<sup>45</sup> [**109] These citations do nothing to refute Defendant Comsat's showing that ATV and Intelsat-K were not responses to PAS but merely efforts to provide services not readily available from any one PTT. See Def.'s Reply Summ. J. Mem. at 16. <sup>46</sup> Indeed, Plaintiffs cite numerous sources which support Defendant's claim [**104] that ATV and Intelsat-K were not specific responses to PAS, see Pls.' 3(g) Statement P 31, <sup>47</sup> but merely attempts at developing new customer services. See id. P 25. <sup>48</sup>

[**110] In addition to ATV and Intelsat-K, Plaintiffs claim that Comsat entered joint ventures in Latin America which were undertaken "to reinforce the PTTs in their commitment to a separate system boycott, ensuring that they would not provide correspondent arrangements, operating agreements, or landing rights to PAS." See Pls.' 3(g) Statement P 26. Plaintiffs, however, fail again to provide any evidence of a conspiracy or other anticompetitive conduct among Comsat and the PTTs. Plaintiffs merely provide numerous citations in support of the undisputed fact that Comsat negotiated ventures in Latin America. See id. <sup>49</sup> [**112] These include specific citations for Argentina, <sup>50</sup> [**113]

<sup>45</sup> Citing Salvati Dep. at 44-45 (stating that the major American television networks (ABC, CBS and NBC) had contracts with PAS by the time Intelsat-K launched); Tanner Dep. at 202-05 (acknowledging ABC's decision to enter short-term contract with PAS for trans-Atlantic video services because PAS's power permitted use of small antennas), 215-19 (discussing ABC's reasons for contracting with PAS before the launch of Intelsat-K), 222 (noting that despite contract with PAS, ESPN remained interested in Intelsat-K services, if they should become available), 231-32 (referencing PAS Ex. 2734 discussing terms of PAS contract with ABC), 238-42 (referencing PAS Ex. 1766 discussing British Telecom's interest in using PAS space segment for NBC video transmission), 251 (discussing ESPN interests), 267 (discussing ABC and CBS alleged use of PAS and reasons therefore); PAS Ex. 1533 (July 11, 1989 memorandum discussing a letter of agreement between PAS and ABC/ESPN/WTN, and suggesting that PAS was chosen for its Ku-band access to Europe and its price); PAS Ex. 1633 (July 10, 1990 memorandum summarizing ESPN business); PAS Ex. 1654 (Comsat August 8, 1991 memorandum concerning renewal of full-time leases with ABC, CBS, and NBC, and noting that ABC and CBS use PAS on part time basis); PAS Ex. 1766 (November 29, 1990 electronic mail-message and response discussing British Telecom's alleged desire to use PAS capacity); PAS Ex. 2680 (April 18, 1989 memorandum discussing shortage of Ku-band capacity on Intelsat leading to customer PVTs's decision to work with PAS).

<sup>46</sup> Citing Crockett Dep. at 133-34 (describing, without reference to PAS or any other competitor, the double preemptible nature of the ATV capacity and the ultimate failure of the service); Carroll Dep. at 102-04 (briefly describing the ATV service); Kopinski Dep. at 31-32 (discussing ATV service and its discontinuance after a change in cable restoration capacity).

<sup>47</sup> Citing Carroll Dep. Vol. 2 at 346-48 (stating that K-4 or K-SAT was not a response to PAS but a response to customer demands for better quality video signal, demands which prior to K-4 regional systems like Astra and PAS were trying to meet); Kopinski Dep. at 131-32 (acknowledging that Comsat's development of Intelsat-K was a response to competition in the video and digital services markets).

<sup>48</sup> Citing Carroll Dep. Vol. 1 at 135 (stating that Comsat marketed capacity on K-4); Cecala Dep. at 29-30 (referencing PAS Ex. 2700 and discussing pre-launch marketing meeting with CBS, ABC, CNN and others to discuss their expectations of Intelsat-K), 32 (referencing PAS Ex. 27 and discussing ease of scheduling capacity); Kopinski Dep. at 98-99 (discussing Comsat reservation of transponders on Intelsat-K in an aggressive effort to retain a large share of the international video market), 102 (discussing strategy for promoting Intelsat-K as highly reliable, highly improved technology for non-preemptible service, higher power, and Ku-band capacity), 127-28 (mentioning competitors for Intelsat-K Astra, PAS, Eutelsat, TDF-1, Tele-X, and TVSat-2); Twining Dep. at 66 (explaining satellite news gathering ("SNG")), 69-70 (referencing Comsat efforts to provide additional Ku-band capacity for television uses, including Intelsat-K and other Intelsat satellites); Vargo Dep. at 181 (stating that higher Ku-band power results in a savings on ground segment because smaller earth stations may be used); PAS Ex. 1635 (redacted Comsat September 17, 1990 memorandum summarizing results of meeting with ABC concerning Intelsat-K (see infra PAS Ex. 2734 (complete version)); PAS Ex. 1652 (July 31, 1991 memorandum concerning renewal of CBS and EBU leases); PAS Ex. 2608 (May 3, 1990 letter from NBC to Comsat requesting additional information about Intelsat-K reservation policy and rates); PAS Ex. 2700 (October 26, 1989 covering memorandum and attached October 23, 1989 memorandum indicating Comsat customer responses to Intelsat-K presentations).

<sup>49</sup> Citing generally: Carroll Dep. Vol. 2 at 294-97 (referencing unspecified meetings between Comsat and PTT officials in Chile, Argentina, Brazil, Venezuela, Colombia, the Dominican Republic, Jamaica, Trinidad & Tobago, Barbados, the United Kingdom, France, Germany, Spain and Italy); Chow Dep. at 33-35 (acknowledging, without reference to PAS, meetings with PTTs in Britain, France, Germany, Spain, Colombia, Venezuela and Brazil); Crockett Dep. Vol. 1 at 81 (referring to communications between Comsat/Intelsat and providers in Russia, Colombia, Argentina, Brazil, Venezuela, Singapore, Thailand and the Philippines), 116-17 (discussing Comsat's historical connection with PTTs worldwide); PAS Ex. 288 (Comsat May 4, 1989 memorandum discussing status of Comsat business in Argentina, Brazil and Chile, and noting PAS success in Argentina and Brazil)).

<sup>50</sup> See Pls.' 3(g) Statement P 28 (citing Alper Dep. at 211-16 (referencing PAS Ex. 266 and alleged meeting with Entel Argentina regarding Comstar consultations); Belmar Dep. Vol. 2 at 363-66 (referencing PAS Ex. 1359 and alleged February 1989 meetings with Entel Argentina regarding Comstar), 373-78 (referencing PAS Ex. 266 and two meetings with Entel Argentina regarding Comstar), 396 (referencing earlier referenced meeting in Florida about Comstar); Carroll Dep. Vol. 2 at 325-29 (referencing PAS Ex. 265 and meetings in Argentina regarding Comstar); Crockett Dep. Vol. 2 at 296-300 (discussing failures of Comsat Timeplex preemptible service and meetings with Entel Argentina, but disavowing knowledge of PAS negotiations with Entel Argentina), 303-08 (denying having discussed with Entel Argentina political impact of PAS Intelsat coordination); Vargo Dep. at 62-63 (referencing PAS Ex. 267 referencing a memorandum of understanding signed with Entel Argentina), 67-69 (referencing PAS Ex. 1346); PAS Ex. 265 (Comsat April 28, 1989 internal memorandum discussing Comstar competition with PAS in Argentine market); PAS Ex. 266 (Comsat March 15, 1989 internal memorandum on status of Comstar negotiations in Argentina); PAS Ex. 267 (Comsat April 19, 1989 covering memorandum and attached memorandum of understanding between Comsat and Entel Argentina); PAS Ex. 1346 (Comsat March 13, 1989 memorandum reporting results of meetings in Chile and Argentina); PAS Ex. 1359 (Comsat March 3, 1989 memorandum highlighting issues discussed during February 20-28, 1989 meetings in Chile and Argentina)).

Plaintiffs claim that after PAS entered negotiations with Entel Argentina in late 1988 and early 1989, Comsat entered discussions with Entel for a potential joint venture. See Pls.' 3(g) Statement P 28 (citing PAS Ex. 90 (excerpt from FCC Week, October 7, 1991); PAS Ex. 265 (supra); PAS Ex. 266 (supra); PAS Ex. 267 (supra); PAS Ex. 1079 (June 13, 1990 memorandum regarding Propulsa's services and compensation); PAS Ex. 1346 (supra); PAS Ex. 1359 (supra); PAS Ex. 1396 (October 17, 1989 PAS memorandum discussing privatization of Entel Argentina and opportunities in Uruguay); PAS Ex. 2697 (August 28, 1989 memorandum mentioning, without reference to PAS, possible MOU with C.A.N.T.V. regarding joint feasibility analysis); Alper Dep. at 211-16 (supra); Belmar Dep. Vol. 2 at 363-66 (supra), 373-78 (supra), 396 (supra); Carroll Dep. Vol. 2 at 294-97 (referencing unspecified meetings between Comsat and PTT officials in Argentina, among other nations), 325-29 (supra); Crockett Dep. Vol. 2 at 296-300 (supra), 303-08 (supra); Shubilla Dep. at 60-68 (discussing meetings in 1988 in Argentina and Chile to discuss possible joint ventures); Vargo Dep. at 62-63 (supra), 67-69 (supra)).

Plaintiffs claim that Entel Argentina and Comsat expressly "discussed strategies for frustrating [PAS's] efforts" to enter the Argentine market. See id. (citing PAS Ex. 265 (supra); Alper Dep. at 126-29 (referencing PAS Ex. 265 with regard to Comsat's marketing Comstar services in Argentina at the same time PAS was negotiating with Entel Argentina), 134-43 (discussing PAS Ex. 265 and Comsat's negotiations with Entel Argentina over Comstar in the wake of Entel's announcement of a domestic service arrangement with PAS); Belmar Dep. Vol. 1, 126-27 (acknowledging PAS's presence in Chile pre-dated Satel, but disavowing knowledge as to whether that presence involved dealings with Entel Chile), 210-15 (acknowledging conversations with former officer of Entel Argentina regarding privatization of Entel), 218-19 (acknowledging Comsat's marketing of Comstar at the time of PAS's negotiations with Entel Argentina, but denying any knowledge of the substance of PAS's negotiations and denying that Entel's willingness to request consultations for PAS was a problem for Comsat), Vol. 2 at 367-68 (acknowledging MOU with Entel Argentina for a study of IBS, awareness of PAS's talks with Entel Chile, and having met once with ASETA, but disavowing any knowledge of discussions between Entel Argentina and PAS about a possible joint venture); Chow Dep. at 57 (stating disagreement with concept of marketing Comstar to Argentina because the technical coverage was not complete), 63-65 (denying, in the context of PAS Ex. 265, any change in Comsat strategy in Argentina precipitated by PAS reaching an agreement with Entel Argentina), 70-74 (referring to PAS Exs. 1396 & 1079 and Propulsa, allegedly acting as an agent of Comsat in Argentina), 77-78 (discussing a meeting among Comsat, IATA-Alcatel, and Propulsa in Washington to discuss joint venture possibilities arising from the privatization of Entel Argentina); Shubilla Dep. at 60-62, 64-66 & 69 (acknowledging meetings about joint ventures in Chile and Argentina, but without recollection of any knowledge at the time that PAS was marketing competing services in those countries), 94-95 (discussing steps leading up to Comsat's MOU with Entel Argentina); Skjei Dep. at 22 (stating witness's involvement in the decision to seek a joint venture in Argentina), 64-65 (stating an awareness that PAS had had some form or agreement in Chile, Argentina, and Brazil at some time during Comsat's ventures in those nations), 106-07 (acknowledging PAS's agreement with TELEX Chile, presence of related PAS salespeople in Chile, and meeting with Entel-Argentina about a joint venture, but disavowing awareness of Comsat's marketing of Comstar to Entel at that time), 135-36 (acknowledging awareness of PAS's agreement with Entel Argentina, but denying that Comsat and PAS were competitors in that market at that time), 140-42 (acknowledging PAS success in Chile, Argentina and Brazil and denying any consideration of Comsat efforts to counteract that success); Vargo Dep. at 42 (Comsat disavowing knowledge of PAS overtures in Argentina prior to Comsat negotiations there), 120-21 (referencing PAS Ex. 265 and Comsat's marketing of Comstar in Argentina)).

Brazil,<sup>51</sup> Chile,<sup>52</sup> Colombia<sup>53</sup> [**114] and Venezuela.<sup>54</sup> Plaintiffs argue that a conspiracy may be inferred from the many meetings and communications between Comsat and each PTT in negotiating these ventures. See Pls.'<sup>1</sup>

---

Plaintiffs also claim that PAS hired alleged "consultants" to make payoffs to Argentine officials on behalf of Comsat. See Pls.' 3(g) Statement P 28 (citing Alewine Dep. Vol. 2 at 278-83 (referencing PAS Ex. 1079 and denying knowledge of its contents, of the work of Propulsa referenced therein, or any bribes); Alewine Dep. Vol. 3 at 349-52 (acknowledging transfer of funds for payment to Vegas of Propulsa, but denying knowledge services for which amounts were due), 358 (having no memory of correspondence from Propulsa or Vegas), 387-90 (discussing consulting fees paid to Propulsa and Vegas), 396-400 (referencing PAS Ex. 1979 and payments to Vegas but denying any suggestion of resulting pay-offs or bribes); 405-06 (discussing Vegas); Alper Dep. at 25-37 (acknowledging Vegas as an agent of Comsat in Argentina who received a commission for facilitating deal between Comsat and IATA-Alcatel), 43-58 (discussing PAS Ex. 1079 and fees paid to Vegas in Argentina), 60-75 (discussing PAS Exs. 851, 852, & 1079 and fees paid to Vegas in Argentina), 101-03 (denying knowledge of any consulting fees paid by Vegas to Argentine military officials), 204-08 (discussing payment to Vegas of Argentina); Belmar Dep. Vol. 1 168-72 (discussing Belmar's meetings with Argentine government officials, facilitated by Vegas, regarding privatization in general), 279-82 (referencing PAS Ex. 1704 and denying knowledge of any payment by Vegas to Argentine congressmen), 284-87 (acknowledging Vegas's ability to arrange meetings with government officials for Comsat officers), 294-98 (discussing authorization of $ 40,000 consulting fees and $ 32,000 invoice), Vol. 2 at 403-04 (acknowledging Vegas services), 475-79 (discussing Vegas/Propulsa services and compensation); Crockett Dep. Vol. 1 at 100-09 (discussing payments to Vegas for consulting), 157-59 (discussing Vegas services and compensation), Vol. 2 at 258-93 (referencing PAS Exs. 852, 1079, & 1398 and repeating previous testimony concerning Vegas/Propulsa services and compensation), 295-96 (discussing records of payments to Vegas/Propulsa); Skjei Dep. at 101-02 (referencing PAS Ex. 1347 and identifying Guillermo Klein as a Comsat consultant in Argentina), 110 (mentioning Klein), 155-59 (discussing Propulsa/Vegas services for Comsat), 170-79 (referencing PAS Exs. 1357, 1805 & 2702 and discussing Klein consulting with Vegas/Propulsa services, but denying any payments to government officials by Vegas, Propulsa or Klein, and denying knowledge of any officials soliciting bribes), 182-84 (discussing compensation for Propulsa/Vegas), 202-12 (referencing PAS Exs. 1703, 1704, 2725, & 2727 and discussing negotiations with Propulsa over compensation); Vargo Dep. at 51-62 (discussing compensation of Vegas/Propulsa and specifically denying any payments by Vegas/Propulsa to Argentine government officials or their families), 107-18 (discussing Propulsa/Vegas services in Argentina); PAS Ex. 620 (undated memorandum entitled "PANAMSAT in South America"); PAS Ex. 801 (August 26-31, 1990 itinerary for J.R. Alper trip to Argentina and Chile, including notation that Vegas/Propulsa is trying to set up meetings for him); PAS Ex. 851 (Comsat November 15, 1990 facsimile coversheet to Vegas/Propulsa); PAS Ex. 852 (Propulsa November 15, 1990 facsimile coversheet and letter to Alper of Comsat regarding transfer of payment); PAS Ex. 892 (February 28-March 8, 1991 itinerary for J.R. Alper trip to Argentina and Chile including notes); PAS Ex. 1079 (supra); PAS Ex. 1397 (presentation reports entitled "Argentine Business Development Opportunities"); PAS Ex. 1398 (October 19, 1989 memorandum from Propulsa to Comsat seeking a more formal agreement); PAS Ex. 1703 (electronic mail message discussing payment for Propulsa); PAS Ex. 1704 (July 16, 1990 memorandum outlining proposal for compensating Propulsa); PAS Ex. 1706 (September 18, 1990 memorandum discussing compensation of Propulsa); PAS Ex. 1709 (October 1, 1990 covering memorandum and September 28, 1990 letter from Propulsa discussing failure to make negotiated payments); PAS Ex. 1757 (December 19, 1989 December 19, 1989 memorandum seeking authorization for payment of Propulsa); PAS Ex. 1763 (August 8, 1990 memorandum referencing negotiation of payment for Propulsa); PAS Ex. 1805 (November 10, 1989 and October 23, 1989 documents concerning Klein consulting services in Argentina); PAS Ex. 2702 (November 10, 1989 document concerning Klein consulting services in Argentina); PAS Ex. 2704 (November 15, 1989 memorandum and attached documentation concerning Propulsa compensation); PAS Ex. 2725 (letter from Propulsa referencing discussions with Comsat); PAS Ex. 2727 (July 24, 1990 memorandum concerning terms and conditions for Propulsa consulting agreement)).

Plaintiffs admit that the joint venture with Entel Argentina was never finalized because the Argentine government privatized Entel. See Pls.' 3(g) Statement P 28.

<sup>51</sup> See Pls.' 3(g) Statement P 26 (citing Crockett Dep. Vol. 1 at 91-95 (discussing meetings regarding ventures in Venezuela and Brazil), Vol. 2 at 249-52 (mentioning meetings with Embratel Brazil regarding venture opportunities but disavowing ever discussing PAS); Skjei Dep. at 24-26 (discussing Embratel rejection of Comsat IDS joint venture overture), 141-46 (referencing PAS Ex. 288 discussing PAS success in Brazil and financial potential of an Embratel/Comsat venture in IDS).

3(g) Statement P 25. An examination of Plaintiffs' citations, however, shows that no such inference may reasonably be drawn. Many of Plaintiffs' citations make no mention of PAS at all, see id.,<sup>55</sup> [**115] while the remainder contain either benign acknowledgments that Comsat competed with PAS in Latin America, [**111] one of the most rapidly developing markets in the world at the time, see id.,<sup>56</sup> [**116] or contain explicit denials that Comsat

---

<sup>52</sup> See id. (citing Crockett Dep. Vol. 1 at 39-41 (referring to meetings in Chile); PAS Ex. 1346 (Comsat March 13, 1989 memorandum reporting results of meetings in Chile and Argentina); PAS Ex. 1359 (Comsat March 3, 1989 memorandum listing issues addressed on February 20-28, 1989 at meetings in Chile and Argentina)).

<sup>53</sup> See id. P 26 (citing Crockett Dep. Vol. 1 at 161-67 (discussing Comsat joint venture in Colombia and Comsat negotiations with ASETA), Vol. 2 at 352-54 (discussing PAS Ex. 1112 and meetings in Colombia over venture opportunities); Vargo Dep. at 46-47 (acknowledging meetings with Telecom Colombia in 1991 about revenue share agreement); PAS Ex. 1112 (telex referencing meeting in Colombia (same as PAS Ex. 1109, supra)); see also id. P 30 (citing Carroll Dep. Vol. 2 at 294-97 (referencing unspecified meetings between Comsat and PTT officials in Colombia, among other nations); Crockett Dep. Vol. 1 at 159-61 (acknowledging, without mention of PAS, that Comsat formed a venture in Colombia after six years of negotiations)).

<sup>54</sup> See Pls.' 3(g) Statement P 26 (citing Crockett Dep. Vol. 1 at 91-95 (discussing meetings regarding ventures in Venezuela and Brazil), P 29 (citing Belmar Dep. Vol. 2 at 337-39 (discussing, without mention of PAS, Comsat effort to negotiate joint venture for IBS with C.A.N.T.V.), 406-07 (referencing PAS Ex. 1392 and discussing negotiations with C.A.N.T.V., without reference to PAS), 419 (acknowledging a general awareness that since 1985 PAS was trying to do business all over Latin America); PAS Ex. 1392 (July 21, 1989 memorandum discussing, without mention of PAS, possible MOU with C.A.N.T.V. for a joint feasibility analysis of IBS services); PAS Ex. 2697 (August 28, 1989 memorandum mentioning, without reference to PAS, possible MOU with C.A.N.T.V. regarding joint feasibility analysis); see also Pls.' Opp'n Mem. at 13 (citing Morgan Dep. at 54-55 (reciting hearsay statement that prior to deregulation in 1992-93, C.A.N.T.V. refused to deal with PAS because C.A.N.T.V. was negotiating a joint venture with Comsat)).

<sup>55</sup> Citing Chile: Alper Dep. at 158 (stating that in October 1989, Comsat already had a joint venture in Chile); Belmar Dep. Vol. 1 at 114 (acknowledging Comsat venture in Chile called Satel and in Argentina called Satelital); PAS Ex. 306 (May 15, 1989 joint venture agreement between Comsat and Entel Chile); PAS Ex. 1102 (March 24, 1989 Comsat/Entel Chile joint venture proposal); PAS Ex. 1359 (Comsat March 3, 1989 memorandum highlighting issues discussed during February 20-28, 1989 meetings in Chile and Argentina); PAS Ex. 2679 (excerpts of March 28, 1989 corporate proprietary agreement between Comsat and Entel Chile for IBS service in Chile); Colombia: Alewine Dep. at 68 (acknowledging that Comsat does telecommunications and half-circuit carriage in Colombia); Venezuela: Belmar Dep. at 419 (acknowledging that Comsat and AT&T entered an IBS venture in Venezuela).

<sup>56</sup> Citing generally: Alewine Dep. at 127-28 (disavowing knowledge of particulars of PAS-1 capabilities in Latin America); Belmar Dep. at 419 (acknowledging that as of 1985, PAS was trying to do business all over Latin America); Skjei Dep. at 64-65 (stating an awareness that PAS had had some form or agreement in Chile, Argentina, and Brazil at some time during Comsat's ventures in those nations), 218 (referencing PAS Ex. 139 meeting notes indicating PAS advertising Latin American capacity for 1992); Tanner Dep. Vol. 2 at 205 (referencing PAS Ex. 121); PAS Ex. 82 (handwritten notes of Stephen Skjei comparing PAS and Comsat); PAS Ex. 87 (Comsat May 11, 1992 memorandum discussing and attaching technical comparison of PAS-1 and Intelsat VI satellites for Latin American coverage); PAS Ex. 90 (excerpt from FCC Week, October 7, 1991); PAS Ex. 121 (April 26, 1990 memorandum examining PAS competition in Latin America and the customers using PAS-1's Latin beam); PAS Ex. 288 (May 4, 1989 Comsat/ISS memorandum discussing competition from PAS and political situations in Argentina, Brazil, and Chile and stating that PAS has had success in Argentina and can provide service to all for any purpose in Brazil); PAS Ex. 1038 (April 29, 1992 memorandum requesting the technical comparison of PAS-1 and Intelsat VI satellites included in PAS Ex. 87); Argentina: Alper Dep. at 129 (accepting the possibility that Comsat knew at the time that Comsat was negotiating with Entel Argentina over use of the Comstar system, PAS was negotiating with Entel for use of PAS-1), 133-43 (discussing PAS Ex. 265 and Comsat's negotiations with Entel Argentina over Comstar in the wake of Entel's announcement of a domestic service arrangement with PAS); Crockett Dep. Vol. 1 at 120-21 (acknowledging that PAS had more power than Intelsat for some applications to certain parts of southern Chile and Argentina); Skjei Dep. at 135-36 (acknowledging awareness of PAS's agreement with Entel Argentina, but denying that Comsat and PAS were competitors in that market at that time), 142 (acknowledging PAS success in Argentina); PAS Ex. 139 (October 18, 1990 Comsat Priority Memorandum discussing Argentine strategies and mentioning PAS); PAS Ex. 265 (April 28, 1989 Comsat/ISS memorandum discussing PAS agreement with Entel Argentina and possibility of similar deal between Entel and Comsat); Brazil: Skjei Dep. at 144 (discussing Comsat effort to capitalize on PAS success in Brazil by pushing Embratel to become more responsive); Chile: Alewine Dep. Vol. 1 at 38 intended to hinder PAS's entry into any market. See id.<sup>57</sup> These citations do not support an inference of conspiracy or other anticompetitive conduct.

[**117] Finally, nothing in Plaintiffs' citations would permit a reasonable trier of fact to infer the existence of a conspiracy or other anticompetitive conduct arising from COMSAT's dealings with AT&T on the Mastercard VSAT network for Latin America. Plaintiffs claim that AT&T had selected PAS, subject to confirmation of PAS's landing rights. Plaintiffs further claim that while confirmation was pending, Comsat combined with unspecified Latin American PTTs to interfere with PAS's agreement by providing AT&T with written commitments of pricing and landing rights if AT&T used Comsat/Intelsat space segment. See Pls.' 3(g) Statement P 33; Pls.' Opp'n Mem. at 13-14. Plaintiffs claim that many meetings and communications between Comsat and the Latin American PTTs directly arose from, related to, or referenced this allegedly improper competition for the Mastercard VSAT network. See Pls.' 3(g) Statement P 25.<sup>58</sup> [**119] Plaintiffs' citations, however, reveal only permissible competition for the AT&T/Mastercard VSAT business. See id. PP 25 & 33.<sup>59</sup> [**120] Moreover, Plaintiffs' citations support Comsat's

(acknowledging that at some point Comsat knew PAS was trying to obtain consultations in Chile); Alper Dep. at 126-27 (acknowledging PAS's presence in Chile pre-dated Satel, but disavowing knowledge as to whether that presence involved dealings with Entel Chile), Belmar Dep. Vol. 2 at 368-73 (disavowing knowledge that PAS was marketing to ASETA at the time of a Comsat presentation to ASETA, and discussing early stages of Satel venture in Chile), 389-90 (discussing competitive environment in Chile and acknowledging Comsat's awareness that PAS had leased a transponder from CTC); Carroll Dep. Vol. 2 at 314-15 (acknowledging that Telex Chile, using PAS space segment, was a probable competitor of Satel, but denying that CTC might be a competitor); Chow Dep. at 120-21 (acknowledging that PAS had more power than Intelsat for some applications to certain parts of southern Chile and Argentina); Skjei Dep. at 106 (acknowledging PAS's agreement with Telex Chile and presence of related PAS salespeople in Chile), 120-21 (referencing PAS Ex. 82 and stating an understanding that PAS had salespeople in Chile); Vargo Dep. at 92-93 (referencing PAS Ex. 1102 and acknowledging a March 1989 awareness that PAS was trying to do business in Chile), 96 (acknowledging an awareness that PAS was actively pursuing the Chilean market).

<sup>57</sup> Citing generally: Crockett Dep. Vol. 1 at 168 (stating that Comsat meeting with ASETA predicated knowledge that PAS had marketed its services to ASETA); Skjei Dep. at 140 (acknowledging PAS success in Chile, Argentina and Brazil and denying any consideration of Comsat efforts to counteract that success); Torrico Dep. at 159-60 (denying discussing PAS in meetings over joint ventures in Argentina, Colombia, Guatemala and Venezuela); Argentina: Carroll Dep. Vol. 2 at 327 (denying any direct correlation between Comsat's Comstar negotiations in Argentina and PAS's reaching an agreement with Entel Argentina); Chow Dep. at 63-65 (denying, in the context of PAS Ex. 265, any change in Comsat strategy in Argentina precipitated by PAS reaching an agreement with Entel Argentina); Shubilla Dep. at 60-69 (acknowledging meetings about joint ventures in Chile and Argentina, but without recollection of any knowledge at the time that PAS was marketing competing services in those countries); Vargo Dep. at 42 (denying knowledge of PAS in Argentina predating summer 1989 meetings there); Chile: Carroll Dep. Vol. 1 at 27-28 (denying any awareness that PAS was specifically attempting to enter the Chilean market at the time of the development of Satel, although acknowledging a general assumption that PAS was seeking to do business throughout Latin America); Chow Dep. at 61 (denying knowledge that PAS might be providing space segment to Satel's competitors); Crockett Dep. Vol. 1 at 53-57 (stating that negotiations over Satel in Chile predicated knowledge of any marking by PAS in Chile, and that Comsat never viewed PAS as a competitor of Satel in Chile); Shubilla Dep. at 60-69 (acknowledging meetings about joint ventures in Chile and Argentina, but without recollection of any knowledge at the time that PAS was marketing competing services in those countries), 87 (acknowledging Comsat meeting with Entel Chile in which PAS's marketing of video in Chile was mentioned, but denying any discussion of PAS IBS service), 141 (denying knowledge of any PAS marketing in Chile other than video service), 145 (again denying knowledge of any PAS marketing in Chile other than video service); Skjei Dep. at 92 (denying discussing PAS at joint-venture meetings, although acknowledging that PAS's relationship with Telex Chile may have been mentioned); Vargo Dep. at 39-40 (denying any knowledge of PAS in Chile predating April 1989 meetings there)).

<sup>58</sup> The citations in Plaintiffs' 3(g) Statement P 25 regarding VSAT mirror the citations in P 33.

<sup>59</sup> Citing Barr Dep. at 133 (acknowledging PAS's general desire to provide end-to-end service), 166 (generally acknowledging competitive situation between Comsat and PAS for AT&T business); Barr Dep. Vol. 2 at 316 (acknowledging that other VSAT business would accrue to the company securing AT&T VSAT business); Lowry-Gabriel Dep. Vol. 1 at 177-81 (discussing Comsat document comparing Intelsat, Eutelsat, PAS-1 and Orion for VSAT services to Latin America), 189 (discussing format of Comsat document comparing Eutelsat, Intelsat, and PAS), Vol. 2 at 250-51 (referencing a technical comparison of the Comsat and PAS proposals for AT&T VSAT service to Latin America), 330-47 (referencing PAS Exs. 87, 1038, & 2636, and discussing technical comparisons of PAS and Comsat for VSAT capacity to Latin America), 354 (acknowledging Comsat competition with assertions that Comsat was at a disadvantage during the competition for the AT&T/Mastercard VSAT [**118] business, see id.<sup>60</sup> [**121] that AT&T initiated the discussions with Comsat, and that ultimately AT&T awarded the business to Comsat after developing misgivings about PAS. See id.<sup>61</sup> Indeed, the record before the Court

---

PAS for VSAT service); Nolting Dep. at 92-97 (acknowledging meetings in Brazil wherein Comsat express its concern that if other systems secured AT&T's VSAT business, it would be difficult to regain the opportunity), 110 (discussing Intelsat Board of Governors meetings), 121-24 (discussing PAS Ex. 2637), 203-05 (discussing article written by PAS ostensibly indicating the countries with which PAS had agreements), 212-13 (discussing Comsat's available capacity for VSAT), 221-22 (discussing advantages of Comsat over PAS), 224-25 (discussing major challenges to PAS and denying knowledge at time of negotiations with AT&T that PAS had any intention of launching additional satellites); PAS Ex. 10 (Comsat 1988 annual report); PAS Ex. 22 (December 30, 1991 memorandum discussing Comsat options for competing for international VSAT business on the same grounds as PAS); PAS Ex. 78 (Comsat March 17, 1992 memorandum comparing Intelsat and PAS capabilities in terms of connectivities, coverages, customer options, on-board redundancy, and restoration capacity); PAS Ex. 87 (Comsat May 11, 1992 memorandum discussing and attaching technical comparison of PAS-1 and Intelsat VI satellites for Latin American coverage); PAS Ex. 586 (Comsat June 17, 1991 memorandum containing notes from Comsat presentation on PAS VSAT services); PAS Ex. 671 (March 12, 1992 covering memorandum distributing an article from Interspace newsletter, allegedly written by PAS, discussing PAS landing rights, country by country); PAS Ex. 1038 (April 29, 1992 memorandum requesting the technical comparison of PAS-1 and Intelsat VI satellites included in PAS Ex. 87); PAS Ex. 1726 (Comsat international VSAT business plan); PAS Ex. 1731 (Comsat international VSAT business plan (same as PAS Ex. 1726, supra, but with cover and attachments included); PAS Ex. 1733 (November 5, 1992 memorandum summarizing global VSAT service development); PAS Ex. 2632 (May 1992 materials for VSAT presentation for Mastercard business); PAS Ex. 2633 (May 1992 materials for Comsat VSAT presentation for Mastercard business); PAS Ex. 2636 (May 15, 1992 marketing proposal comparing Intelsat/Comsat with PAS as a space segment supplier for VSATs in Latin America); PAS Ex. 2637 (May 18, 1992 chart comparing Comsat and PAS Mastercard VSAT space segment pricing); PAS Ex. 2639 (June 3, 1992 electronic mail memorandum summarizing status of AT&T VSAT Mastercard deal); PAS Ex. 2762 (AT&T Tridom chronology of events for Skynet Global VSAT Service)).

<sup>60</sup> Citing Barr Dep. at 151-53 (stating that AT&T was considering PAS services thinking that PAS could more rapidly provide VSAT services because PAS was not required to work with the PTTs through whom Comsat worked and with whom AT&T had been having trouble), 155-56 (discussing series of letters and meetings with PTTs to address AT&T's concerns in providing VSAT services), 173 (acknowledging risk of losing AT&T Mastercard network business to PAS), 219-20 (referencing PAS Ex. 1025), 243 (referencing trip to visit PTTs around time of AT&T negotiations), 258 (referencing unspecified exhibit); Barr Dep. Vol. 2 at 311-12 (recounting AT&T concerns about Comsat for VSAT services); Lowry-Gabriel Dep. Vol. 1 at 191-93 (discussing PAS Ex. 22 and efforts by Comsat to achieve regulatory freedom enjoyed by PAS), 200-01 (referencing unspecified exhibit discussing Comsat options for securing freedoms enjoyed by other companies such as PAS), 204 (referencing unspecified exhibit and discussing Comsat options for securing freedoms enjoyed by other companies, including attempt to employ model used by PAS in France); Nolting Dep. at 72-73 (acknowledging communicating to Embratel in Brazil that if it did not offer competitive rates, both Comsat and Embratel would lose the VSAT business to PAS), 169-70 (discussing Comsat communications with PTTs about permitting Comsat the same access to VSAT services as PAS), 175-77 (acknowledging Comsat's efforts to secure assurances from PTTs that a single tariff for VSAT services would apply equally to PAS and Comsat); PAS Ex. 1025 (December 30, 1991 memorandum discussing Comsat options for competing for international VSAT business on the same grounds as PAS (same as PAS Ex. 22, supra), with attachments).

<sup>61</sup> Citing Barr Dep. Vol. 1 at 124-27 (acknowledging that AT&T had informed Comsat that AT&T was considering using PAS for VSAT services), 144-46 (discussing AT&T's professed advantages and disadvantages of dealing with PAS for VSAT services to Latin America); Maull Dep. at 49-52 (discussing PAS representations to Maull of AT&T that PAS had the necessary landing rights in many Latin American countries), 59-76 (discussing AT&T's decision to reject PAS and accept Comsat proposal for VSAT services to Latin America, naming Comsat's deployment of additional capacity as the most important issue); Nolting Dep. at 36-47 (discussing AT&T responses to PAS proposals for IBS and VSAT services in Latin America, including AT&T's solicitation of proposals from Comsat), 78-80 (stating that AT&T provided Comsat with a technical analysis of PAS's proposal to AT&T, so that Comsat to provide AT&T with a technical comparison of its services with PAS's proposal), 83 (citing excerpt of document indicating AT&T's initial inclination to use PAS), 127-29 (stating that Comsat won AT&T's VSAT business because its proposal was technically superior to PAS), 131-35 (referring to PTT pricing for Comsat and PAS for VSAT services), 143 (referencing Embratel's skepticism that PAS could offer VSAT in Brazil, as PAS was not yet licensed for two-way transmission), 146-47 (referencing Embratel's skepticism that PAS could offer VSAT in Brazil, as PAS was not licensed for two-way transmission), 195 (acknowledging Comsat's effort to provide "one-stop-shopping" for VSAT upon AT&T's request for such service); Twining Dep. at 177-78 (disavowing knowledge as to why AT&T selected Comsat over PAS); PAS Ex. 2631 (PAS technical proposal provided by AT&T to Comsat).

sustains Defendant's assertions that PAS had misrepresented its authorizations to AT&T, which AT&T discovered, see Maull Dep. at 68 (stating that PAS had represented to AT&T that all in-country arrangements had been made), 96-97 (expressing AT&T's doubts that PAS, despite its representations to the contrary, had in fact been granted in-country authorizations), that thereafter AT&T invited Comsat's bid, see Maull Dep. at 67-69 (AT&T informed Comsat of the existence of PAS's proposal and challenged Comsat to make its own proposal to AT&T), and that AT&T awarded the business to Comsat because Comsat's bid was technically superior to that of PAS. See, e.g., Nolting Dep. at 128-29 (stating that Comsat proposal showed that AT&T would need to use less space segment on Intelsat than PAS). Nothing in the record would permit a reasonable trier of fact to infer the existence of a conspiracy or other anticompetitive conduct.

[**122] Although Plaintiffs have shown that Comsat met with various PTTs concerning the CNN business, ATV, Intelsat-K, joint ventures in Latin America and AT&T's Mastercard VSAT network, Plaintiffs have failed to show that any reasonable inference of a conspiracy may be drawn from those meetings.

(b) PAS, Codetel and Tricom

Plaintiffs claim that a further customary indication of traditional conspiracy is "the evidence surrounding Codetel, the PTT for the Dominican Republic." See Pls.' Opp'n Mem. at 14. Plaintiffs rely on the testimony of Richard Burleson, an executive who left Codetel and went to non-party Tricom. Plaintiffs claim that when Burleson was acting for Tricom, Codetel demanded that Tricom sever its relationship with PAS. Plaintiffs cite as evidence of Comsat's involvement in this conduct a Codetel report about PAS, a copy of which was found in files at Comsat. See PAS Ex. 1046 (June 13, 1988 Codetel document entitled "Preliminary Report on PANAMSAT," signed by Dugan). Upon review of Plaintiffs' citations, however, it is clear that Burleson himself never alleged any agreement between Comsat and Codetel with respect to Tricom.<sup>62</sup> [**124] Moreover Burleson, in portions of [**123] his testimony cited by Defendant, admits that he has no personal knowledge of any agreement between Comsat and Codetel to impede PAS.<sup>63</sup> The Court finds, therefore, that nothing in the record would permit drawing from Codetel's dealings with PAS a reasonable inference of a conspiracy involving Comsat.

(c) Intelsat resolutions

Plaintiffs also cite as "customary indication[s] of traditional conspiracy" the Intelsat separate systems resolutions. See Pls.' Opp'n Mem. at 15-18.<sup>64</sup> Plaintiffs claim to offer the resolutions as evidence of an intent to boycott PAS.

<sup>62</sup> See Burleson Dep. at 11-14 (reciting Burleson's work history with Codetel, the monopoly telephone company of the Dominican Republic), 16-39 (discussing Burleson tenure at Codetel, including his concerns about competition within the Dominican Republic resulting from shift in U.S. policy on private satellite systems, and denying Codetel dealings with Comsat), 41-62 (discussing PAS Ex. 1046 and Codetel's competitive analysis of PAS, but denying any specific recollections of discussions between Comsat and Codetel about PAS), 62-86 (discussing PAS Exs. 1509-10 and, without mention of Comsat, the alleged obstruction of Tricom business in the Dominican Republic by Codetel), 101-08 (referencing a meeting between Burleson and Crockett at which regulatory issues and competition were discussed, but denying any recollection of any agreement resulting); PAS Ex. 1509 (October 30, 1990 letter from Burleson of Tricom to Anselmo alleging pricing fixing and restraint of trade by Codetel, the PTT signatory in the Dominican Republic, but without mention of Comsat); PAS Ex. 1510 (October 29, 1990 letter from Burleson of Tricom to U.S. Department of State, alleging price fixing and restraint of trade by Codetel, the PTT signatory in the Dominican Republic, but without mention of Comsat).

<sup>63</sup> See Burleson Dep. at 93 (denying knowledge of any strategies involving Comsat), 123-32 (explaining that complaints in PAS Ex. 1510 refer to Codetel's conduct, not any conduct of Comsat; denying personal knowledge of any actions of Comsat vis-a-vis Tricom; denying any preemptive pricing by Codetel; admitting efforts by Codetel to block PAS's approval with the government, but denying any knowledge of Comsat involvement in those activities).

<sup>64</sup> Citing PAS Ex. 3085 (record of the Fourteenth Meeting of Signatories of Intelsat concerning separate satellite systems, January 4, 1985); PAS Ex. 3082 (record of the decisions of the Fifteenth Meeting of Intelsat Signatories concerning separate satellite systems, April 16, 1985); PAS Ex. 3084 (report by the Sixteenth Meeting of Signatories to the Assembly of Parties, April 10, 1986); PAS Ex. 3120 at 121 (testimony of Irving Goldstein, president of Comsat, before the Committee on Energy and

See Pls.' Opp'n Mem. at 18-19. The Court rejected this argument in its earlier opinion, see Alpha LyraCom, 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3825, 1993-1 Trade Cas. \(CCH\) P70,184 at 69,860-61, 1993 WL 97313 at *3-4, and above in its discussion of the decisions of Magistrate Judge Gershon. See supra at 21-30. The Court declines to reexamine Plaintiffs argument here and finds that no inference may be drawn [**125] from the Intelsat resolutions.

The Court finds, therefore, that the record does not provide sufficient "customary indications" of traditional conspiracy to sustain an inference of a conspiracy or other anticompetitive conduct among Comsat and the PTTs.

(4) Contrary [**126] to self-interest

Plaintiffs claim as a final plus factor that Comsat and the PTTs acted against their self-interest by refusing to purchase capacity from PAS. "HN21" Actions against the apparent individual economic self-interest of the alleged conspirators may raise an inference of interdependent action." Modern Home, 513 F.2d at 111; see Apex Oil Co., 822 F.2d at 254-55. The question, therefore, is whether a rational entity would have engaged in the alleged parallel behavior individually.

Plaintiffs claim that Comsat and Intelsat experienced capacity shortages in some markets. See Pls.' Opp'n Mem. at 19; Pls.' 3(g) Statement P 17.<sup>65</sup> [**127] Plaintiffs further claim that one of PAS's advantages over Comsat and Intelsat was PAS's ability to provide capacity to those markets. See Pls.' 3(g) Statement P 17.<sup>66</sup>

[**128] Defendant admits in response that both PAS and Intelsat experienced capacity constraints for some services in some markets. Defendant argues, however, that Plaintiffs can point to no evidence either that Intelsat ever shut down for lack of capacity or that any PTT ever lacked capacity. See Def.'s Reply Summ. J. Mem. at 18 n.30.<sup>67</sup> Defendant argues, therefore, that even if Comsat and the PTTs experienced capacity constraints, and even if they refused to deal with PAS, the PTTs--most of whom were legal monopolies--would have been acting in their independent self-interest. Defendant argues that by using Intelsat, the PTTs would avoid (a) reducing their market

Commerce of the House of Representatives, June 13, July 25 and 26, 1984, stating that the Intelsat signatory resolutions indicated frustration on the part of Comsat's treaty partners, and did not signal a decision to form a boycott).

<sup>65</sup> Citing Alewine Dep. Vol. 2 at 188-91 (acknowledging Comsat capacity shortage prior to Intelsat-K and Intelsat VI satellites coming on line); Carroll Dep. Vol. 1 at 97-98 (discussing shortage in Comsat Ku-band capacity); Kopinski Dep. at 40-41 (acknowledging Comsat shortage of station-kept, Ku-band capacity prior to Intelsat-K), 126-27 (acknowledging a lack of high-power Ku capacity on Intelsat in 1990, before Intelsat-K and the Intelsat VI and VII satellites), 132-35 (acknowledging shortage in full-time voice grade capacity to Latin America prior to Intelsat VI satellites); Popkin Dep. at 71-73 (acknowledging shortage of station-kept capacity but denying knowledge of any PAS offer to sell capacity to Comsat); Salvati Dep. at 38-40 (acknowledging a shortage in Ku-band capacity on Comsat until launch of Intelsat K-4 in 1992, and denying effort to obstruct major broadcasters from switching to PAS); Schnicke Dep. at 22-23 (acknowledging periods of capacity shortages on Comsat); Tanner Dep. Vol. 1 at 16-17 (acknowledging shortages in Ku-band capacity); Twining Dep. at 30-31 (acknowledging shortages of Ku-band capacity).

<sup>66</sup> Citing Balz Dep. at 80-85 (discussing licensing of private providers of voice telephony services within the former East Germany to meet the exceptional demand created by reunification); Carroll Dep. Vol. 1 at 50-52 (discussing PAS Ex. 82 and advantages of PAS power and flexible pricing); Crockett Dep. Vol. 2 at 328-31 (discussing PAS Ex. 82 and advantages of PAS over Comsat, including price and power); Giarman Dep. at 84 (discussing PAS Ex. 82); Popkin Dep. at 54-62 (listing alleged advantages of PAS as reported by potential customers, including digital compression service, orbital location and station kept signal); Saralegui Dep. Vol. 1 at 187-89 (alleging obstruction of PAS through the Intelsat process), Vol. 2 at 256-57 (alleging that PAS offered the PTTs a percentage in return for access, but required no service functions by the PTT); Skjei Dep. at 39-42 (discussing PAS Ex. 82 and advantages of PAS over Comsat, including price); PAS Ex. 82 (handwritten notes comparing PAS and Comsat); PAS Ex. 1102 (March 24, 1989 Comsat/Entel Chile joint venture proposal); PAS Ex. 2894 (ISS Strategic Business Plan, 1991-93); Comsat Ex. 988 (statement of Reynold Anselmo, Chairman of PAS, July 28, 1994, before the Committee on Energy and Commerce Subcommittee on Telecommunications and Finance).

<sup>67</sup> See, e.g., Dupuis-Toubol Decl. P 13 (reporting that France Telecom officials confirmed that the PTT had access to sufficient capacity); Dupuis-Toubol Dep. at 28-31 (stating that an inquiry revealed no capacity shortage for French domestic and international services)).

share to PAS (insofar as the PTTs were often also signatories and part owners of Intelsat), (b) providing exposure for a competitor and (c) diverting revenues to that competitor. See Def.'s Reply Summ. J. Mem. at 18 n.30. Plaintiffs failed to address this argument. Plaintiffs wholly failed to show that any individual PTT's decision not to use PAS capacity was against its self-interest in view of that PTT's capacity needs.

[**129] Plaintiffs' only attempt at such a showing centers on what Plaintiffs refer to as "the $ 1 transponder." Plaintiffs assert that in order to be operative upon the launch of PAS-1, Plaintiffs had to obtain Intelsat consultations and landing rights from at least one country. Plaintiffs argue that because of the alleged conspiracy, PAS was forced to obtain initial landing rights in Latin America by offering a transponder worth approximately $ 6 million for only $ 1. Plaintiffs offered the transponder first to Colombia and Ecuador in exchange for landing rights. See Pls.' Opp'n Mem. at 19-20; Pls.' 3(g) Statement P 39. Plaintiffs allege that each country refused, and that their refusals prove the existence of the alleged conspiracy, since the transaction was clearly in the best interest of each country. Plaintiffs state that the third time the offer was made, Peru accepted and PAS got its landing rights, allowing it to launch PAS-1. See Pls.' Opp'n Mem. at 20.

Comsat responds that the transponder was offered not for landing rights, but for Article XIV consultations which are the province of the Intelsat parties not the signatories and definitely not the common carrier PTTs. [**130] See Def.'s Reply Summ. J. Mem. at 18 (citing Anselmo Dep. Vol. 3 at 466-68 (discussing the transponder offer in the context of Intelsat coordination); Saralegui Dep. at 219-21 (same)). This dispute is not material. The record is clear that PAS offered the transponder to all three nations, and that only Peru accepted. The record also reflects, however, that PAS offered the transponder directly to senior government officials, not to the PTTs. See, e.g., Anselmo Dep. Vol. 3 at 464-68 (explaining that offer to Peru was communicated directly to President Garcia through Delgado Parker, a close personal friend of both President Garcia and Anselmo). Insofar as the officials represented either Intelsat parties or signatories, no inference may be drawn from their conduct. Moreover, even if one were to draw inferences, the record reflects that neither Ecuador nor Colombia actually rejected the offer: PAS placed a time limit on its offer which expired in a relatively short time. Only Peru was able to accept in what PAS considered a timely fashion: about half a day. See Landman Dep. Vol. 4 at 819-26 (acknowledging restrictions on transponder offer, including limitation on its use to [**131] non-commercial, educational, medical or social services); Saralegui Dep. Vol. 2 at 219-22 (stating that neither Colombia nor Ecuador rejected the offer, they just did not act quickly enough, whereas Peru accepted in about half a day); Comsat Ex. 31 (September 3, 1986 memorandum summarizing PAS/State Dept. tour of South America).

PAS does not even claim that the PTTs in Ecuador and Peru are part of the alleged conspiracy. Therefore, even if those PTTs had acted against their self-interest, their conduct does not support an inference of the conspiracy alleged to exist among Comsat and other PTTs. See Anselmo Dep. Vol. 3 at 466-68 (discussing the transponder offer in the context of Intelsat coordination); Comsat Ex. 924 at 2 (showing that PAS secured Intelsat consultations from Ecuador on October 20, 1989); Comsat Ex. 925 at 5 (indicating that PAS never received an operating agreement in Peru).

The Court finds no evidence in the record which would allow a reasonable trier of fact to infer that Comsat or the alleged PTT conspirators engaged in conduct contrary to their self-interests.

(C) No inference of Comsat participation

Even if Plaintiffs had provided evidence of parallel [**132] refusals to deal and plus factors from which a reasonable trier of fact could infer an agreement among the PTTs, Plaintiffs have failed to provide evidence of Comsat's participation in any agreement. Indeed, the only allegations of Comsat's involvement in refusals to deal involve Comsat's alleged rejection of PAS's offer of capacity. Those allegations are addressed separately below. See infra at 112-117.

The record clearly reflects that consultations, landing rights and operating agreements are matters outside of Comsat's control and squarely within the control of foreign Intelsat parties, signatories, or PTTs. Plaintiffs have not provided any evidence that Comsat had a role in the procurement of operating agreements in any other country; that Comsat and any PTT conspired in any way to deny or delay PAS's application for an operating agreement; that Comsat in any way impeded the liberalization of telecommunications laws in any country so as to deny or delay an operating agreement to PAS; or that PAS's success after that liberalization resulted from the breakdown of the alleged "artificially imposed" conspiracy involving Comsat and not merely from the liberalization of regulatory [**133] restrictions. Absent such evidence, any factual disputes about the alleged denial or delay of a PAS request for an operating agreement in a given country is not sufficient to survive the current motion: Even if the trier of fact were to accept Plaintiffs' allegations that the PTTs formed a "bottleneck" and denied PAS operating agreements, Plaintiffs have failed to offer any evidence showing that Comsat created, maintained or otherwise participated in that conduct.

Plaintiffs did designate four witnesses who allegedly could testify about Comsat's participation in the alleged conspiracy. See Def.'s Summ. J. Mem. at 7 (citing Comsat Ex. 47, Interrogs. Nos. 4, 19, 23, & 24; Comsat Ex. 729, Interrog. No. 4). Plaintiffs designated Reynold Anselmo, Landman, Saralegui and Goldschmidt as witnesses who could testify about Comsat's involvement. In their deposition testimony, however, each admitted having no personal knowledge of any facts showing Comsat's involvement. See Def.'s Summ. J. Mem. at 7 n.9.<sup>68</sup> [**135] In addition, Defendant cites to the deposition transcripts of thirteen other current and former PAS employees. None of them testified to having personal knowledge of any facts showing [**134] Comsat's involvement. See Def.'s Summ. J. Mem. at 7-8 n.11.<sup>69</sup> Nor did any of the many Comsat employees deposed by the parties testify to the existence of a conspiracy.<sup>70</sup>

The Court finds that even if Plaintiffs had shown a pattern of refusals by the PTT conspirators to grant PAS landing rights and operating agreements, [**136] coupled with additional considerations or "plus factors," Plaintiffs have failed to provide evidence from which Comsat's conscious participation in that conduct reasonably may be inferred.

2. Refusal to purchase PAS capacity

Plaintiffs argue that the existence of the alleged conspiracy and Comsat's conscious participation therein may also be inferred from Comsat's alleged refusal to purchase space segment capacity from PAS. See Pls.' S.J. Opp'n Mem. at 11, 19; Pls.' 3(g) Statement P 38.<sup>71</sup>

<sup>68</sup> Citing Anselmo Dep. at 110-11 (admitting having no personal knowledge of facts supporting Compl. P 28(e)), 114 (same, regarding P 28(f)), 133 (regarding P 28(g)), 138-39 (regarding P 28(h)), 144-45 (regarding P 28(i)), 152 (regarding P 28(j)), 159-60 (regarding P 28(l)), 172 (regarding P 28(m)), 191 (regarding P 28(n)), 195-95 (regarding P 28(o)), 210-11 (regarding P 28(b)), 212 (regarding P 28(a)); Goldschmidt Dep. Vol. 1 at 13-14 (disclosing Goldschmidt's ownership interest in PAS), 99 (admitting having created Comsat Ex. 201), 200 (admitting having created Comsat Ex. 204), 216 (admitting having no personal knowledge of facts supporting Compl. P 28(l) other than reference to Intelsat signatory resolutions), 224 (admitting having only suspicion of Comsat involvement in PAS delays with British Telecom); Landman Dep. at 505-07 (unable to name a single customer with whom Satel interfered as alleged in Compl. P 28(f)), 580-81 (unable to name a single customer with whom Comsat/C.A.N.T.V. interfered), 590-93 (unable to name a single source in Colombia of alleged disparagement and obstruction by Comsat), 605-06 (unable to name a single independent source in support of Compl. P 28(j)), 636 (unable to support Compl. P 28(l)), 685 (unable to support Compl. P 28(c)); Saralegui Dep. at 472-74 (unable to support Compl. P 28(d)), 497-98 (unable to support allegations concerning Entel Argentina), 503-04 (unable to support Compl. P 28(h)), 513 (unable to support Compl. P 28(j)) 522 (unable to support Compl. P 28(l)), 523-25 (unable to support Compl. PP 28(l) & (m)).

<sup>69</sup> Citing Albert Dep. at 12-15, 21, 188-94; Bachelder Dep. at 40-41; Bednarek Dep. at 115-17; Carroux Dep. at 110-14; Costello Dep. at 7, 78-89, 172; Gazzolo Dep. at 110; Hanafi Dep. at 296; Marco Northland Dep. at 15, 39-42, 154-62; Lanni Dep. at 36-38, 300-06; Quesada-Bryans Dep. at 12; Walisko Dep. at 39-40; Whitehead Dep. at 8, 36; Zarecor Dep. at 66-68.

<sup>70</sup> On the other hand, Patricio Northland, formerly in charge of PAS's Latin American marketing, allegedly testified that Plaintiffs' conspiracy claims are not true. See Def.'s Summ. J. Mem. at 7-8 (quoting Patricio Northland Dep. at 124-25, 128). This testimony was not provided to the Court. Plaintiffs do not refute Defendant's representation of the substance of the testimony, but argue that it should be given no weight because Patricio Northland is "a disgruntled ex-employee." Pls.' Opp'n Mem. at 22 n.5.

[**137] On or about February 1989, PAS lawyer Philip Spector called Comsat lawyer Maury Mechanick and ostensibly offered trans-Atlantic Ku-band capacity on PAS-1. See Def.'s Summ. J. Mem. at 19-20.<sup>72</sup> [**138] Mechanick conferred with counsel and Comsat's senior management. Senior management allegedly thought that Comsat World Systems was barred by law from "independently buying capacity from PAS," Def.'s Summ. J. Mem. at 20, 22-23,<sup>73</sup> although Plaintiffs claim that Comsat could have purchased capacity directly from PAS. See Pls.' Opp'n Mem. at 26.<sup>74</sup> [**139] Senior management then referred the matter to Intelsat. See Crockett Dep. at 63-65 (acknowledging consulting counsel then referring the offer to Dean Birch of Intelsat), 73-74 (discussing referral to Dean Birch of Intelsat). Intelsat declined to act on the alleged offer. Mechanick then advised Spector that Comsat was not interested.<sup>75</sup> Plaintiffs claim that PAS's offer and Comsat's rejection occurred at a time when Comsat had a capacity shortage. Plaintiffs argue, therefore, that it was contrary to Comsat's self-interest to reject to offer, and therefore that the rejection is evidence of the alleged conspiracy.

As an initial matter of law, no contractually sufficient offer was made. Spector provided no terms for price, duration, payment, or quantity of the capacity, nor did Spector provide any written proposal. See Spector Dep. 25-27 (failing to remember substance of the alleged offer, acknowledging having never made any other offers for PAS, and acknowledging that Mechanick, to whom the offer was made, worked primarily on Intelsat matters). Plaintiffs' admit as much. See Goldberg Dep. 27-28 (specifically denying that Spector's phone call constituted a formal offer of PAS

<sup>71</sup> Citing Spector Dep. at 23-32 (alleging to have communicated an offer of PAS capacity to Comsat, but failing to recall the date or even the year, and acknowledging that no price, duration, payment, or technical terms were mentioned); Spector Aff. of Feb. 21, 1995 (repeating allegation that Spector made offer of Ku-band capacity to Comsat on behalf of PAS); PAS Ex. 1522 (February 28, 1989 Comsat memorandum to the record discussing Comsat rejection of Spector offer of PAS capacity); PAS Ex. 2952 (Comsat February 28, 1989 memorandum by Mechanick and notes of conversation with Spector); Mechanick Dep. at 60-70 (discussing telephone conversations with Spector in January or February 1990 and ambiguity as to whether offer was made to Comsat as a carrier or to Intelsat and Comsat as a signatory); Landman Dep. Vol. 3 at 650-68 (alleging to have personally communicated an offer of PAS trans-Atlantic Ku-band capacity to Comsat, but failing to recall the date or even the year and any terms; discussing Comsat Ex. 17 and alleged business lost by PAS due to lack of PAS capacity resulting from delayed financing and launches); Cummings Dep. at 146-48 (acknowledging general willingness at Comsat to consider using PAS capacity if it made economic sense, and discussing Satel capacity shortage in 1992).

<sup>72</sup> Citing Spector Dep. at 23-25 (discussing Spector call to Mechanick); Spector Aff. of Feb. 21, 1995 (repeating allegation that Spector made offer of Ku-band capacity to Comsat on behalf of PAS); Mechanick Dep. 16-17 (discussing Mechanick's positions as Director of Intelsat Affairs and vice president of Intelsat Policy and Representation); 77-78 (identifying PAS Ex. 1522 record of second conversation with Spector); PAS Ex. 1522 (February 28, 1989 Comsat memorandum to the record discussing Comsat rejection of Spector offer of PAS capacity); PAS Ex. 2952 (Comsat February 28, 1989 memorandum by Mechanick and notes of conversation with Spector); Goldberg Dep. at 24-25 (stating his awareness of Spector offer on behalf of PAS)).

<sup>73</sup> Citing Crockett Dep. at 66-67 (discussing limitations on Comsat World Systems and its passing to offer on to Intelsat), 75 (understanding after having consulted counsel that at the time, Comsat World Systems could not buy capacity from PAS and resell it in the United States).

<sup>74</sup> Citing Alewine Dep. Vol. 2 at 194-98 (expressing view that Comsat, as signatory, has an obligation to secure its capacity through Intelsat); Alper Dep. at 224 (stating that Comsat sells capacity to U.S. customers, while PAS sells capacity for international routes); Carroll Dep. Vol. 1 at 96-97 (acknowledging Comsat's ability to compete with Intelsat, in context of reselling preemptible restoration capacity); Hannon Dep. at 67-73 (stating that Comsat discussed recommending that Intelsat consider acquiring PAS capacity to cover Intelsat capacity shortages); Kopinski Dep. at 187-88 (stating that in preparing options to address capacity shortages in 1992, witness did not recommend consideration of PAS capacity because of the pending lawsuit); Shubilla Dep. at 12-13 (stating that Comsat only marketed capacity on Intelsat satellites, although unaware of any formal prohibition against marketing capacity from other sources); Vargo Dep. at 20-23 (acknowledging that Comsat had considered PAS capacity); Crockett Dep. Vol. 1, 56-57 (acknowledging that for certain services, if capacity was unavailable from Intelsat, Comsat could have used PAS capacity).

<sup>75</sup> See Mechanick Dep. at 67 (discussing rejection of alleged offer after consultation with Comsat's senior management); Spector Dep. at 24-25 (stating that Mechanick indicated he would consult management); PAS Ex. 2952 (Comsat February 28, 1989 memorandum by Mechanick and notes of conversation with Spector).

capacity to Comsat). Plaintiffs claim, however, that the alleged offer was sufficient for antitrust demand purposes, even if not contractually significant. See Pls.' Opp'n Mem. at 25-26 (citing [**140] Continental Ore Co., 370 U.S. at 699, 82 S. Ct. at 1410 (on facts showing that demands had been made, rejecting mechanical requirement that antitrust plaintiff show contemporaneous demand on defendant plus exhaustion of all other sources); Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 392 U.S. 481, 487 n.5, 88 S. Ct. 2224, 2228 n.5, 20 L. Ed. 2d 1231 (1968) (finding an explicit demand to deal unnecessary under the circumstances)). Plaintiffs also argue that no demand is required where such demand would be futile. See Pls.' Opp'n Mem. at 25-26 (citing Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Shoe Machinery Corp., 377 F.2d 776, 781 (3d Cir. 1967) (finding demand unnecessary where defendant's policy would render demand futile), aff'd, 392 U.S. 481, 487 n.5, 20 L. Ed. 2d 1231, 88 S. Ct. 2224); Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 395 U.S. 100, 120 n.15, 89 S. Ct. 1562, 1575 n.15, 23 L. Ed. 2d 129 (1969) (noting that where a demand would have been futile under defendant's policy, absence of a formal request is not fatal to plaintiff's claim).

Plaintiffs are correct that there is no general requirement that an antitrust plaintiff prove a formal demand. See, [**141] e.g., Out Front Productions, Inc. v. Magid, 748 F.2d 166, 169-70 (3d Cir. 1984) (finding that antitrust suits are not subject to the type of demand prerequisite in shareholder derivative suits). In this instance, however, Plaintiffs seek to prove a specific refusal to purchase capacity. Since the record does not support a finding that a specific offer or demand was ever presented to Comsat, Comsat cannot be found to have refused to purchase PAS capacity based on Spector's communications with Mechanick.<sup>76</sup>

[**142] Plaintiffs also suggest that other offers were made, including one oral offer by Plaintiffs' president Frederick Landman, and another unspecified offer to Satel, Comsat's joint venture in Chile. See Pls.' Opp'n Mem. at 25; but see Spector Dep. at 49 (disavowing any knowledge of anyone else offering PAS capacity to Comsat). As to Satel, the limited evidence in the record suggests only that Satel considered using PAS capacity. See Cummings Dep. at 146-48 (stating that in 1992, Comsat's joint venture with Entel Chile, Satel, began looking for additional capacity and considered PAS). This fact, if true, does not support any inference that Comsat refused to deal with PAS. As to Landman, at his deposition he was unable to recall a single detail of the offer of capacity he allegedly made to Comsat. He could not recall the year of the offer, the amount of capacity offered, the price, the duration, the individual at Comsat to whom the offer was made, the individual who responded to the offer or whether the response was oral or written. See Def.'s Summ. J. Mem. at 20 n.27 (citing Landman Dep. at 650-58 (alleging to have personally communicated an offer of PAS trans-Atlantic [**143] Ku-band capacity to Comsat, but failing to recall the date or even the year and any terms)); Def.'s Reply Summ. J. Mem. at 20 n.37 (same). No reasonable trier of fact could draw any inference against Comsat from Landman's alleged offer.

On the current record, the Court finds that no inference of a conspiracy or Comsat's conscious participation therein may reasonably be drawn from the alleged refusals of Comsat to purchase PAS capacity.

3. Tracking PAS throughout the world

Finally, Plaintiffs argue that the conspiracy and Comsat's participation therein may be inferred from Comsat's alleged "pattern and practice" of "tracking PAS throughout the world" and forming ventures in Latin America and Europe for the exclusive purpose of preventing PAS's entry into those markets. These ventures were discussed

<sup>76</sup> Defendant also argues that Spector's telephone call was merely a maneuver to set up an antitrust claim. There is evidence to support this argument in the record. See, e.g., Goldberg Dep. 27-28 (admitting that Spector communication with PAS was suggested by counsel, not PAS officers); Spector Dep. at 39-47 (discussing antitrust implications of Spector offer in context of Spector's contemporaneous lobbying against Comsat to U.S. government officers).

There is also evidence to support Defendant's view that the offer, if any, was extended to Intelsat and not to Comsat. See, e.g., Spector Dep. 34-36 (stating that PAS did not distinguish between Comsat and Intelsat in making the alleged offer), 67 (stating that he never even considered contacting anyone at Intelsat directly or anyone at any other Intelsat Signatory, other than Comsat, about an offer of capacity from PAS to ease the Intelsat capacity shortage).

briefly above. See supra at 90-102. In Latin America, Plaintiffs claim that Comsat entered or negotiated ventures in Argentina, Venezuela, Colombia and Chile in order to frustrate PAS marketing efforts.<sup>77</sup> In Europe, Plaintiffs claim that Comsat devised ATV just to impede PAS's growth.

[**144] (A) Latin American ventures

Plaintiffs claim that each of Comsat's Latin American ventures, whether consummated or merely discussed, "was part and furtherance of the separate systems boycott." Pls.' Opp'n Mem. at 28. Plaintiffs claim that Comsat initiated negotiations for the ventures only after PAS sought entry into each market, and that "part of the understanding" was that the PTT would use the pending venture as a pretext to "refuse to enter into an operating agreement with PAS." Pls.' Opp'n Mem. at 28. Plaintiffs claim that such ventures were therefore "incident to the boycott" in violation of § 1.<sup>78</sup> [**145] Plaintiffs alleged evidence in support of this claim, however, consists only of general testimony about various venture negotiations which either do not reference PAS, see Pls.' Opp'n Mem. at 30,<sup>79</sup> [**146] or which contain explicit denials of Plaintiffs' claim. See id.<sup>80</sup> Even if these citations could be read to infer that certain PTTs refused to deal with PAS during negotiations with Comsat, nothing in the record supports an inference that Comsat encouraged or even had knowledge of any such refusals.

The existence of the proposed ventures in and of themselves cannot support an inference of conspiracy because Comsat has provided ample evidence that the ventures developed for business reasons independent of PAS. Comsat has shown that it pursued growth strategies all over the world, including places where PAS was not doing

<sup>77</sup> Plaintiffs had alleged that Comsat interfered with PAS's bidding on a United States Department of Defense contract with Honduras. See 3d Am. Compl. P 28(j). This claim has been withdrawn. See Comsat Ex. 1003 (Letter from Daniel R. Shulman, counsel for Plaintiffs, to Mark D. Wegener, counsel for Defendant (Nov. 1, 1994)).

<sup>78</sup> Plaintiffs also claim that these ventures were overt acts of a conspiracy to monopolize in violation of § 2, and acts of monopolization in violation of § 2 "if undertaken for an exclusionary purpose." Pls.' Opp'n Mem. at 28.

<sup>79</sup> Citing generally: Carroll Dep. Vol 2, at 294-97 (referencing unspecified meetings between Comsat and PTT officials in Chile, Argentina, Brazil, Venezuela, Colombia, the Dominican Republic, Jamaica, Trinidad & Tobago, Barbados, the United Kingdom, France, Germany, Spain and Italy); Shubilla Dep. at 60-68 (discussing meetings in 1988 in Argentina and Chile to discuss possible joint ventures); Crockett Dep. Vol. 1 at 81 (referring to communications between Comsat/Intelsat and providers in Russia, Colombia, Argentina, Brazil, Venezuela, Singapore, Thailand and the Philippines), 91-95 (discussing meetings regarding ventures in Venezuela and Brazil), 116-17 (discussing Comsat's historical connection with PTTs worldwide); PAS Ex. 1359 (Comsat March 3, 1989 memorandum highlighting issues discussed during February 20-28, 1989 meetings in Chile and Argentina); PAS Ex. 90 (excerpt from FCC Week, October 7, 1991); Argentina: Carroll Dep. at 325-29 (referencing PAS Ex. 265 and meetings in Argentina regarding Comstar); Belmar Dep. Vol. 2 at 363-66 (referencing PAS Ex. 1359 and alleged February 1989 meetings with Entel Argentina regarding Comstar), 373-78 (referencing PAS Ex. 266 and two meetings with Entel Argentina regarding Comstar), 396 (referencing earlier referenced meeting in Florida about Comstar); Alper Dep. at 211-16 (referencing PAS Ex. 266 and alleged meeting with Entel Argentina regarding Comstar consultations); PAS Ex. 265 (Comsat April 28, 1989 internal memorandum discussing Comstar competition with PAS in Argentine market); PAS Ex. 266 (Comsat March 15, 1989 internal memorandum on status of Comstar negotiations in Argentina); Chile: Crockett Dep. Vol. 1 at 39-41 (referring to meetings in Chile); Colombia: Crockett Dep. Vol. 1 at 159-67 (discussing Comsat joint venture in Colombia and Comsat negotiations with ASETA); Vol. 2 at 352-54 (discussing PAS Ex. 1112 and meetings in Colombia over venture opportunities); Vargo Dep. at 46-47 (acknowledging meetings with Telecom Colombia in 1991 about revenue share agreement); PAS Ex. 1112 (telex referencing meeting in Colombia (same as PAS Ex. 1109)); Venezuela: Morgan Dep. at 54-55 (reciting hearsay statement that prior to deregulation in 1992-93, C.A.N.T.V. refused to deal with PAS because C.A.N.T.V. was negotiating a joint venture with Comsat).

<sup>80</sup> Citing Argentina: Crockett Dep. Vol. 2 at 296-300 (discussing failures of Comsat Timeplex preemptible service and meetings with Entel Argentina, but disavowing knowledge of PAS negotiations with Entel, Argentina), 303-08 (denying having discussed with Entel Argentina political impact of PAS Intelsat coordination); Brazil: Crockett Dep. Vol. 2 at 249-52 (mentioning meetings with Embratel Brazil regarding venture opportunities but disavowing ever discussing PAS).

business like Kuwait, Saudi Arabia, Jordan, Israel, Singapore, Philippines, Thailand, Turkey, Russia, and Australia.
<sup>81</sup> Plaintiffs have failed to rebut this evidence.

[**147] Comsat has also shown that its presence in Latin America predated PAS with Comsat ventures in the 1970s in Panama (Intercomsa) and Nicaragua (Nicatelsat). See Def.'s Summ. J. Mem. at 25 n.34. <sup>82</sup> [**148] Although it is true that those ventures were remote in time and wholly unrelated to the recent ventures, see Pls.' Opp'n Mem. at 28-29, <sup>83</sup> they nevertheless indicate that Comsat had previous experience in the region and support testimony claiming that Latin America was a natural and attractive market for Intelsat satellite services. See, e.g., Saralegui Dep. at 668 (citing country size, topography, underdeveloped infrastructure and general neglect of the market by PTTs as features which made Latin America an attractive market).

In Chile, Comsat joined with the Chilean telephone company Entel to form a joint venture called Satel. Plaintiffs argue that Satel competed directly with PAS in Chile, see Pls.' Opp'n Mem. at 30-31, <sup>84</sup> and that Satel "was in fact directed by Comsat not to deal with PAS." Pls.' Opp'n Mem. at 31 (citing Cummings Dep. 146-48 (stating that in 1992, Comsat's joint venture with Entel Chile, Satel, began looking for additional capacity and considered PAS)). The record does not support these claims.

[**149] The record reflects that by 1988 Chile was among the first Latin American nations to have privatized its telecommunications markets, see Def.'s Summ. J. Mem. at 27-29, <sup>85</sup> and that in November of 1988, Comsat entered a MOU with Entel Chile concerning a possible IBS ("international business data services") venture. See PAS Ex. 305 (Comsat November 2, 1988 memorandum with Entel Chile). In 1989, Comsat and Entel Chile formed Satel. See Skjei Tr. 112-18 (discussing reasoning behind Satel, including diversification of Comsat and expansion into South America), 127 (acknowledging approval of the Chilean venture); PAS Ex. 2679 (excerpts of March 28,

<sup>81</sup> See Crockett Dep. at 35-36 (referencing pent-up demand for communications services back to the United States), 81 (referring to communications between Comsat/Intelsat and providers in Russia, Colombia, Argentina, Brazil, Venezuela, Singapore, Thailand and the Philippines); Alper Dep. at 122-23 (discussing Comsat ventures in Australia, Turkey, Russia, and Israel, in addition to South America); Comsat Ex. 1004 (May 21, 1991 memorandum identifying--without reference to PAS--Comsat ventures in Argentina, Chile, Turkey, Venezuela, Romania, Colombia, Mexico, Guatemala, Singapore/Thailand, Bolivia, Hungary, Bulgaria, Poland, and the Philippines).

<sup>82</sup> Citing Carroll Dep. at 19-21 (stating that the Satel venture in Chile was based on Comsat's experience in Nicaragua and Panama); Alper Dep. at 116 (referencing Comsat interest in Panama in the 1960s); Flower Dep. at 196 (referencing ventures in Panama and Nicaragua in the 1970s); Crockett Dep. at 25-26 (referencing ventures in Panama and Nicaragua in the 1970s, and in Chile, Argentina, Venezuela, Turkey, the Soviet Union, and Czechoslovakia in the 1980s).

<sup>83</sup> Citing Skjei Dep. at 200-01 (describing Chile and Argentina as departures from Comsat's normal lines of business requiring board approval); PAS Ex. 2679 at 58303 (March 28, 1989 corporate proprietary agreement between Comsat and Entel Chile for IBS service in Chile describing the venture as providing a foothold in Latin America and setting a precedent for other ventures), 58299 (acknowledging PAS's active pursuit of Chilean market and likely opposition to Satel venture before the FCC); PAS Ex. 82 (notes of Skjei comparing PAS and Comsat).

<sup>84</sup> Citing PAS Ex. 261 (report on the fourteenth meeting of Satel board of directors, December 18, 1991); PAS Ex. 262 (Comsat briefing materials for May 24, 1991 Satel board of directors meeting); PAS Ex. 313 (September 14, 1990 memorandum regarding promotion of Satel to customers Proctor & Gamble and Bank of America); PAS Ex. 319 (report on the fifteenth meeting of Satel board of directors, February 25, 1992); PAS Ex. 322 (May 8, 1991 facsimile of report on the eleventh meeting of the Satel board of directors); PAS Ex. 1102 (March 24, 1989 Comsat/Entel Chile Joint Venture Proposal); PAS Ex. 2679 (excerpts of March 28, 1989 corporate proprietary agreement between Comsat and Entel Chile for IBS service in Chile); PAS Ex. 2743 (Comsat October 26, 1990 memorandum providing background on Cargill, including terms of alleged offer from PAS to Cargill). But see PAS Ex. 1380 (Comsat briefing materials for July 1989 board of meeting listing Telex Chile, CTC, and PAS as possible competitors for Satel).

<sup>85</sup> Citing Shubilla Dep. at 10-11 (identifying his position in Comsat's World Systems Division); Vargo Dep. at 31-32 (stating that Comsat had been looking to diversify its services); Belmar Dep. at 122-23 (stating that Chile was selected because the market had already been privatized).

1989 corporate proprietary agreement between Comsat and Entel Chile for IBS service in Chile). The record further reflects that at that time, Satel faced competition from four companies, but that PAS was not one of them, see Def.'s Summ. J. Mem. at 29,<sup>86</sup> because at the time PAS concentrated on video transmission in Chile, and therefore did not directly compete with Satel's IBS service. See Saralegui Dep. at 26 (stating that in 1984 and 1985, there was no full-time, commercial television distribution to South America), 62 [**150] (stating that initially PAS marketed primarily television services), 66 (considering PAS-1 the premiere satellite for video in South America); Shubilla Dep. at 87 (stating awareness that PAS was attempting to establish video market in Santiago, Chile, but not IBS services). Plaintiffs have offered no evidence to show that Satel was not a legitimate business enterprise which did not interfere with PAS.<sup>87</sup>

[**151] The same is true for Argentina. Plaintiffs claim that Comsat negotiated a joint venture with Entel Argentina in order to thwart PAS's efforts to get landing rights, but nothing in the record supports this claim. The record reflects that Argentina, unlike Chile, remained a highly regulated market until 1990 or 1991, with restrictions on Entel Argentina's authority to enter agreements with foreign parties. See, e.g., Belmar Tr. at 210-11 (stating that Argentine government official could not legally provide a franchise or other agreement). The record also reflects that in April 1989, Comsat and Entel Argentina signed a non-binding Memorandum of Understanding ("MOU") to study business opportunities. See PAS Ex. 267 at 21420 (April 19, 1989 MOU explicitly stating that it "does not establish any business association between the parties"). Ultimately, Comsat formed a venture in 1990 called Satelital with IATA-Alcatel, a private Argentine company. Satelital competed with at least two companies other than PAS: Impsat and Satelnet. See Def.'s Summ. J. Mem. at 26 n.35.<sup>88</sup> Plaintiffs again have offered no evidence to show that the formation of Satelital and Comsat's negotiations [**152] with Entel Argentina were not legitimate business enterprises which did not interfere with PAS.<sup>89</sup>

Similarly, nothing in the record suggests any inference of Comsat's interfering with PAS in Venezuela or Colombia. The record reflects that in Venezuela Comsat negotiated a joint venture with C.A.N.T.V., a local service provider, but due to restrictions in the Venezuelan [**153] market the venture was never formed. See, e.g., Belmar Dep. at 415-16 (stating that ownership of any venture in Venezuela had to rest with C.A.N.T.V.). Comsat then pursued a venture with AT&T, but that venture did not operate until after the 1991 liberalization of Venezuela's market, by which time Comsat had already sold its interest, see Belmar Dep. at 421 (discussing AT&T/Comsat sale of IBS terminal back to C.A.N.T.V., which at that point was partially owned by AT&T); Crockett Dep. at 94-95 (Comsat sold its interest to AT&T and other owners), and even then the venture faced heavy competition from multiple companies, including PAS. See Def.'s Summ. J. Mem. at 26.<sup>90</sup> [**154] The record further reflects that Comsat

<sup>86</sup> Citing Alper Dep. at 191 (identifying CTC, ChileSat, VTR, and Samarco, but not PAS, as competitors in Chile); Lanni Dep. at 185 (stating that Satel was not a competitor of PAS in Chile); see also Gazzolo Dep. at 112 (referencing competition in Chile, including ChileSat's ability to enter and compete with Satel).

<sup>87</sup> Defendant also cites the testimony of Patricio Northland, a former vice president of PAS (and brother of Marco Northland), who allegedly states that PAS's claims about Entel Chile are untrue. See Patricio Northland Dep. at 122. Again, this testimony was not provided to the Court but Plaintiffs do not refute Defendant's representation of the substance of the testimony. See Pls.' Opp'n Mem. at 22 n.5.

<sup>88</sup> Citing Comsat Ex. 1006 (Comsat May 16, 1991 monthly operating report on Satelital identifying Impsat and Satelnet as its competition); Cummings Dep. at 66 (identifying Impsat and Satelnet, but not PAS, as competitors of Satelital); Skjei Dep. at 136-37 (identifying competitors of Satelital as Dynamic Systems and Impsat; but not PAS).

<sup>89</sup> Defendant again cites the testimony of Patricio Northland, who allegedly testified that PAS's claims about the Argentine joint venture are "definitely not true." Patricio Northland Dep. at 123. Again, the cited testimony was not provided to the Court, although Plaintiffs did not refute it.

<sup>90</sup> Citing Belmar Dep. at 421-22 (after liberalization Venezuela issued ten or twelve franchises, including one to a small carrier affiliated with PAS); Gazzolo Dep. at 339-41 (stating that PAS could have provided service in Venezuela through local, private companies licenses by the government, like Pequiven, which ultimately decided that PAS's service was too expensive for its needs).

entered the Colombian market after PAS filed this action and that Comsat then only offered of competing services. Nothing in the record suggests any inference of Comsat's hindering PAS in Colombia. See, e.g., Marco Northland Dep. at 159 (disavowing any personal knowledge of any facts supporting allegations concerning ventures in Colombia).<sup>91</sup>

The Court finds that Plaintiffs have failed to present evidence which would support a reasonable inference that Comsat entered or negotiated ventures in Chile, Argentina, Venezuela or Colombia in order to frustrate PAS marketing efforts.

(B) Atlantic Television Service (ATV)

ATV was an "end-to-end" service provided by Comsat and the PTTs in Italy, Britain, Spain and Portugal. ATV offered discounted rates, flexible volume-based contracts, one-stop booking for space segment and connectivity to and from Europe, Africa, and Central and South America.<sup>92</sup> Plaintiffs claim that ATV was designed for the sole purpose of putting PAS at a competitive disadvantage, insofar as the PTTs used ATV as a pretext for not dealing with PAS. See 3d Am. [**155] Compl. P 28(e); Pls.' Opp'n Mem. at 31, 34.<sup>93</sup> [**156] Plaintiffs therefore claim that ATV was an act in furtherance of the boycott in violation of § 1.<sup>94</sup> The record does not support these claims.

The record reflects that Comsat formed ATV in order to provide cost-effective service to large, occasional-use video customers and to generate economic utility from unused Intelsat satellite capacity. See, e.g., Carroll Dep. at 95 (stating that the only reason for developing ATV was to be more customer responsive); Crockett Dep. at 132-34 (discussing double-preemptible nature of ATV service)). Plaintiffs have not refuted this evidence.

Moreover, Plaintiffs' own citations recognize the value of an end-to-end service such as ATV. See Comsat Ex. 998 at 29 (SEC registration statement Form S-1 for PAS referencing end-to-end service as a customer-driven service); Albert Dep. at 83-85 (discussing as a significant advantage PAS's ability to offer end-to-end service). Although Plaintiffs claim that PAS was denied access to the markets serviced by ATV's end-to-end service option, Plaintiffs' do not offer a single citation [**157] in support of this claim. See Pls.' Opp'n Mem. at 32-33 (without citation). Plaintiffs offer only conclusory assertions that the purpose of ATV was to support the alleged conspiracy. See Pls.' Opp'n Mem. at 32 (citing Pls.' 3(g) Statement at P 31, supra nn.45-55); Pls.' Resp. to Comsat Statements Nos. 75-88). These assertions are insufficient to support an inference of a conspiracy.

Plaintiffs next resort to circular logic, claiming that the failure of ATV within one year is proof that it was developed not for any legitimate business purpose but rather to impede PAS's negotiations in the ATV nations. Again, however, Plaintiffs offer no support for this claim. See Pls.' Opp'n Mem. at 33 (without citation). Defendant, on the other hand, has provided evidence that ATV was discontinued only after market and FCC regulatory changes <sup>91</sup> Defendant again cites the testimony of Patricio Northland, who allegedly denied knowledge of a joint venture between Comsat and C.A.N.T.V. and disputed Plaintiffs' claim that Comsat interfered with PAS in Colombia. See Patricio Northland Dep. at 123. Again, the cited testimony was not provided to the Court, although Plaintiffs did not refute it.

<sup>92</sup> ATV marketed preemptible satellite capacity: transponder capacity that was traditionally placed in reserve in case of failures in the publicly switched telephonic capacity or ground cable systems. If a failure occurred in these primary systems, whatever customer that was then using the reserve capacity would be preempted. This capacity was therefore less attractive to customers. Comsat marketed ATV to video broadcasters and international business data services (IBS) users.

<sup>93</sup> Citing PAS Ex. 3059 at 43-45 (Comsat commissioned report on competition in the market for trans-oceanic, facilities-based telecommunications services, showing doubling of trans-Atlantic satellite usage for video and audio services between 1988 and 1993), 70 (table showing Comsat market share in trans-oceanic video and audio services from 1986 to 1993); Landman Dep. Vol. 2 at 468-70 (repeating hearsay statements that PTTs in U.K. and Italy would not deal with PAS because the PTTs had satisfied their demand needs through ATV and Intelsat).

<sup>94</sup> Plaintiffs also claim that ATV was an act in furtherance of a conspiracy to monopolize in violation of § 2, and an abuse of Comsat's market power, also in violation of § 2.

eliminated its market. See Def.'s Summ. J. Mem. at 31-32.<sup>95</sup> Therefore no inference adverse to Defendant may be drawn from ATV's discontinuance.

[**158] Finally, Plaintiffs half-heartedly allege that part of ATV was an express price fixing agreement. See Pls.' Opp'n Mem. at 33.<sup>96</sup> Plaintiffs, however, rather than alleging how a pricing agreement among the parties to a joint venture is impermissible, assert only that "when price fixing and a boycott coincide, per se illegality is the rule." Pls.' Opp'n Mem. at 33. This assertion begs the question, insofar as Plaintiffs' have not shown either price fixing or the existence of the alleged boycott, let alone Comsat's participation therein.

[**159] The Court finds that Plaintiffs have failed to present evidence which would support a reasonable inference that Comsat formed and participated in ATV for the purpose of furthering the alleged conspiracy. The Court finds, therefore, that Plaintiffs have failed to provide sufficient evidence to permit a reasonable trier of fact to infer the existence of the alleged conspiracy or Comsat's conscious participation therein. Plaintiffs have failed to provide sufficient evidence of an alleged pattern of refusals by the PTT co-conspirators to grant PAS landing rights and operating agreements, coupled with additional considerations or "plus factors." Plaintiffs have failed to provide sufficient evidence of Comsat's alleged refusal to purchase space segment capacity from PAS. Plaintiffs have failed to provide sufficient evidence of Comsat's alleged "pattern and practice" of "tracking PAS throughout the world" and forming ventures in Europe and Latin America for the exclusive purpose of preventing PAS's entry into those markets. The Court therefore grants Defendant's motion for summary judgement as to Plaintiffs' claims under § 1 of conspiracy to boycott and conspiracy to restrain trade.

[**160] B. Overt acts

Even if Plaintiffs had provided sufficient evidence of the alleged conspiracy and Comsat's participation therein, Plaintiffs have failed to provide sufficient evidence of any of the four acts alleged in the Complaint,<sup>97</sup> either as overt acts or as independent violations of the Sherman Act.

The four overt acts alleged are pricing without regard to cost [**161] or at a predatory level; delaying PAS's entry into Great Britain, France, West Germany and Brazil; filing a sham objection with the FCC; and making disparaging representations to specified PAS customers. Defendant argues that even if the Court finds that Plaintiffs have shown questions of fact as to any of these acts, Plaintiffs have not shown that any of the acts was undertaken in furtherance of a conspiracy to deny PAS operating agreements. See Def.'s Reply Summ. J. Mem. at 19 (citing <sup>95</sup> Citing Tanner Dep. at 77-78 (stating that ATV was discontinued because it lacked sufficient customer interest to justify the annual contract for capacity minutes); S. Carroll Dep. at 377-78 (explaining that FCC regulatory change required increase in ATV rate, effectively pricing it out of its niche market); PAS Ex. 3059 at 43 (Comsat commissioned report on competition in the market for trans-oceanic, facilities-based telecommunications services, showing doubling of trans-Atlantic satellite usage for video and audio services between 1988 and 1993).

<sup>96</sup> Citing PAS Ex. 1233 at 9 (draft ATV agreement stating that "each participating Signatory will determine its own rates for space segment, earth station and terrestrial service . . . provided however that each Signatory will charge a rate of five dollars ($ 5.00) per minute . . . for its part of the space segment"); Carroll Dep. Vol. 1 at 150-60 (discussing proposal of France Telecom for rate of $ 5.00 per minute); PAS Ex. 1305 (Comsat July 5, 1988 memorandum discussing, without reference to PAS, June 29-30, 1988 meetings in Paris with six European signatories about ATV, including appended draft agreement).

<sup>97</sup> In P 28(k) of the Complaint, Plaintiffs alleged that Comsat interfered with PAS efforts to participate in "Worldnet:" a United States government program for transmissions to Latin America. See 3d Am. Compl. P 28(k). That claim has been withdrawn. See Comsat Ex. 1003 (Letter from Daniel R. Shulman, counsel for Plaintiffs, to Mark D. Wegener, counsel for Defendant (Nov. 1, 1994)).

In P 28(n) of the Complaint, Plaintiffs alleged that Comsat's refused to purchase capacity from PAS. That claim was examined above and dismissed both as an act in furtherance of the alleged conspiracy and as an independent claim. See supra at 112-117.

United States v. Castellano, 610 F. Supp. 1359, 1390 (S.D.N.Y. 1985) (discussing overt acts in context of venue)). Defendant also argues that these acts cannot survive as independent claims because Plaintiffs have not specified the damages arising from each act. See Def.'s Reply Summ. J. Mem. at 19 (citing J. Truett Payne Co. v. Chrysler Motors Corp., 451 U.S. 557, 568, 101 S. Ct. 1923, 1927-28, 68 L. Ed. 2d 442 (1981) (requiring proof of actual injury caused by something the antitrust laws were designed to prevent); Henry Schwabe, Inc. v. United Shoe Mach. Corp., 297 F.2d 906, 909-10 (2d Cir. 1961) (requiring proof of damages in some amount "reasonably susceptible of expression [**162] in figures"), cert. denied, 369 U.S. 865, 8 L. Ed. 2d 85, 82 S. Ct. 1031 (1962)). The Court reaches Defendant's argument with respect to the pleading of damages after examining the factual support for each of the acts alleged.

1. Plaintiffs' pricing claims

Plaintiffs claim that Comsat engaged in pricing of preemptible video and IBS services "without regard to cost" or at "a predatory level." 3d Am. Compl. P 28(d).<sup>98</sup> This claim presumptively refers to the agreements between Comsat and several European PTTs on the pricing of ATV services. Plaintiffs, however, provide no argument or citations in support of this claim. Plaintiffs offer no showing of Defendant's costs at all. Absent some such showing, no reasonable inference of the alleged conspiracy or other anticompetitive conduct may be drawn. See, e.g., Matsushita 475 U.S. at 594, 106 S. Ct. at 1360 ("Cutting prices in order to increase business often is the very essence of competition. Thus, mistaken inferences in cases such as this one are especially costly, because they chill the very conduct the antitrust laws are designed to protect."). Nor have Plaintiffs made out any showing of predatory pricing. This claim [**163] therefore fails both as an act in furtherance of the alleged conspiracy and as an independent claim.

2. Delaying PAS's entry into Great Britain, France, West Germany and Brazil

In P 28(l) of the Complaint, Plaintiffs allege that in other countries of the world, such as Great Britain, France, West Germany, and Brazil, the combination and conspiracy to boycott PAS described above prevented PAS from obtaining a timely commercial operating agreement in these countries, and has thereby delayed and hindered the entry of PAS into such markets.

3d Am. Compl. P 28(l). Plaintiffs, however, do not develop this claim in their opposition papers as either an independent act in furtherance of the alleged conspiracy, or [**164] as the basis of an independent claim. The claim therefore fails for the reasons discussed above, see supra at 45-12, principally Plaintiffs' failure to present sufficient evidence from which a reasonable trier of fact could infer the existence of the alleged conspiracy and Comsat's participation therein.

3. Comsat's FCC filing

In 1987 and 1988, in transactions unrelated to this action, Plaintiff Reynold Anselmo sold several broadcast stations, incurring approximately $ 83 million in personal income capital gains. On March 22, 1988, Anselmo filed a request for a tax deferral certificate with the FCC seeking to defer income tax payments of approximately $ 20 million.<sup>99</sup> HN22 The FCC may grant certificates where the gain is incurred while attempting to advance a change in government policy, see 26 U.S.C. § 1071\(a\), and Anselmo argued that he sold the stations to raise funds to finance PAS and thereby to advance the United States' separate systems policy. On August 5, 1988, Comsat filed opposition with the FCC, claiming that Anselmo had no choice but to sell the stations because his majority partner was a Mexican national, in violation of federal regulations governing foreign [\[\*165\]](#) ownership of broadcast stations. Comsat argued, therefore, that the gain did not result from any effort to change policy.<sup>100</sup>

<sup>98</sup> Plaintiffs had also alleged that Comsat engaged in pricing "below average variable cost." 3d Am. Compl. P 28(d). This claim has been withdrawn. See Comsat Ex. 1003 (Letter from Daniel R. Shulman, counsel for Plaintiffs, to Mark D. Wegener, counsel for Defendant (Nov. 1, 1994)).

<sup>99</sup> See Comsat Ex. 966 at 21-22 (Request of Issuance of a Tax Certificate Pursuant to Section 1071 of the Internal Revenue Code, March 22, 1988); Comsat Ex. 971 at 5-6 n.15 (Supplement to Request of Issuance of a Tax Certificate Pursuant to Section 1071 of the Internal Revenue Code, April 21, 1988); Landman Dep. at 640-41 (acknowledging sales of stations and

[\[\*166\]](#) In P 28(m) of the Complaint, Plaintiffs argue that Defendant's professed reason for its FCC filing was a sham and that Defendant intended only to interfere with PAS's financing and thereby to hinder PAS's ability to obtain landing rights and to fund new initiatives and new satellite launches. See 3d Am. Compl. P 28(m); Pls.' 3(g) Statement P 41.<sup>101</sup> Defendant moved to dismiss the claim under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, which states that "concerted efforts to restrain or monopolize trade by petitioning government officials are protected from antitrust liability." Allied Tube & Conduit Corp. v. Indian Head, Inc., 486 U.S. 492, 499, 108 S. Ct. 1931, 1936, 100 L. Ed. 2d 497 (1988). This Court denied the motion, however, because Plaintiffs had framed the claim within the "sham filing exception." To violate antitrust laws in and of itself, a filing must have been objectively baseless and pursued for the purpose of interfering directly with PAS in the marketplace. See Professional Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Indus., Inc., 508 U.S. 49, 59, 113 S. Ct. 1920, 1928, 123 L. Ed. 2d 611 (1993). On the current motion, the Court finds that Plaintiffs have [\[\*167\]](#) not adduced sufficient evidence of objective baselessness or improper motive.

On the evidence in the record, [\[\*168\]](#) Plaintiffs cannot show that Defendant's filing was objectively baseless. Plaintiffs principally argue that objective baselessness can be shown procedurally by a clear lack of standing. See Pls.' Opp'n Mem. at 37 (citing In re Burlington Northern, Inc., 822 F.2d 518, 529-32 (5th Cir. 1987) (no Noerr-Pennington protection if filer knows he has no standing or has no reasonable basis for asserting standing), cert. denied 484 U.S. 1007 (1988)). Plaintiffs claim that § 1071\(a\) of the Communications Act does not convey standing to Comsat and, moreover, that Comsat was aware at the time of its FCC filing that it lacked standing. See Pls.' Opp'n Mem. at 38. This issue was fully briefed before the FCC.<sup>102</sup> Without resolving the issue before the FCC, the Court finds that Defendant had a "sufficient personal stake in the outcome" of the FCC proceedings, see, e.g., Marsh Media, Ltd., 67 F.C.C.2d 1516, 1522-23 (citing Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186, 204, 82 S. Ct. 691, 703, 7 L. Ed. 2d 663 (1962)), aff'd, 68 F.C.C.2d 712 (1978), insofar as a deferral would assist PAS in its competition with Comsat. See Def.'s Reply Summ. J. Mem. at 23; Comsat Ex. 1007 at 5 (PAS [\[\*169\]](#) letter acknowledging that the tax deferral will "directly and substantially assist" PAS in competition with Comsat). The issue of Defendant's standing, request for deferral of approximately $ 20 million); Costello Dep. at 19 (acknowledging requested deferral of approximately $ 20 million), 21 (deferral request covered approximately $ 17 million and $ 3 million in state liability).

<sup>100</sup> See Comsat Ex. 970 at 2-5 (Comsat August 5, 1988 letter to the FCC opposing Anselmo request for issuance of a tax deferral certificate, explaining at length Comsat's view that the sales had nothing to do with any change in FCC policy); Comsat Ex. 967 at 6-8 (Comsat September 28, 1988 letter to the FCC addressing Anselmo response to earlier Comsat letter and arguing that a grant of a certificate would be contrary to statutory law).

<sup>101</sup> Citing Comsat Ex. 963 (May 10, 1988 PAS memorandum summarizing PAS position on Anselmo's request as serving the U.S. policy on separate satellite systems); Comsat Ex. 966 (Request of Issuance of a Tax Certificate Pursuant to Section 1071 of the Internal Revenue Code, March 22, 1988); Comsat Ex. 970 (Comsat August 5, 1988 letter to the FCC opposing Anselmo request for issuance of a tax deferral certificate); Comsat Ex. 971 (Supplement to Request of Issuance of a Tax Certificate Pursuant to Section 1071 of the Internal Revenue Code April 21, 1988); Knauer Dep. at 14-19 (acknowledging that the FCC at the time of the commencement of this action addressed neither the deferral request nor the issue of Comsat's standing to object).

As of the filing of Defendant's summary judgment motion, the FCC had not ruled on Anselmo's tax deferral request. See Def.'s Summ. J. Mem. at 15.

<sup>102</sup> See Comsat Ex. 1007 (September 2, 1988 letter to FCC from PAS counsel arguing that Comsat lacks standing); Comsat Ex. 967 at 4 (arguing that Anselmo's application itself creates Comsat's standing by linking the deferral request to "the establishment of a competitive market structure for international satellites").

therefore, was at least open to serious consideration. Plaintiff therefore cannot show that Defendant's filing was objectively baseless on procedural grounds.

Neither can Plaintiff show that Defendant's filing was objectively baseless on the merits. The record reflects that Plaintiff Anselmo's own advisers clearly understood that a deferral was unlikely. See Def.'s Summ. J. Mem. at 16-18.<sup>103</sup> [**171] Plaintiff Anselmo even undertook efforts to amend the law itself in order to assist his deferral application. See Def.'s Summ. J. Mem. [**170] at 17-18.<sup>104</sup> Defendant's filing therefore cannot be found objectively baseless.

Moreover, even if Plaintiffs' had shown that the filing was objectively baseless because Comsat lacked standing before the FCC, Plaintiffs have failed to show any improper motive behind the filing. No improper motive may be inferred where the goal of the filing [**172] was to win the ultimate product of the FCC process, in this case a denial of Plaintiff Anselmo's deferral request. See Def.'s Summ. J. Mem. at 18-19 (citing Professional Real Estate Investors, 508 U.S. at 59, 113 S. Ct. at 1928; Illinois ex rel. Hartigan v. Panhandle Eastern Pipe Line Co., 730 F. Supp. 826, 937 (C.D. Ill. 1990), aff'd, 935 F.2d 1469 (7th Cir. 1991), cert. denied, 502 U.S. 1094, 117 L. Ed. 2d 415, 112 S. Ct. 1169 (1992); Independence Public Media of Philadelphia, Inc. v. Pennsylvania Public Television Network Comm'n, 808 F. Supp. 416, 435-36 (E.D. Pa. 1992)) (granting summary judgment on "sham" claim). Plaintiffs claim that Comsat knew that the mere filing of their opposition would "hinder PAS in obtaining operating agreements." See Pls.' Opp'n Mem. at 36-37. Plaintiffs, however, not only fail to provide a single citation in support of this claim, Plaintiffs fail even to explain how any delay before the FCC would hinder Plaintiffs' negotiations with PTTs throughout the world.

Plaintiffs have failed to show that Defendant's FCC filing was a sham. Plaintiffs' therefore cannot rely on the claim in P 28(m) of their Complaint, either as act in [**173] furtherance of the alleged conspiracy, or as the basis of an independent claim.

4. Commercial disparagement

---

<sup>103</sup> Citing Studley Dep. at 28-30 (acknowledging that the status of the deferral request was so uncertain that PAS's counsel began lobbying for congressional intervention even before Comsat filed its opposition); Comsat Ex. 961 (May 10, 1988 letter from Plaintiffs' counsel to Senate Subcommittee on Communications requesting congressional lobbying of FCC in favor of deferral); Comsat Ex. 962 (May 10, 1988 PAS memorandum summarizing PAS position on Anselmo's request as serving the U.S. policy on separate satellite systems); Comsat Ex. 963 (May 10, 1988 PAS memorandum summarizing PAS position on Anselmo's request as serving the U.S. policy on separate satellite systems and acknowledging that it is "unlikely that the FCC will issue a tax certificate"); Comsat Ex. 968 (May 10, 1988 letter from Plaintiffs' counsel to executive assistant to Senator Inouye (HI) forwarding memorandum about Anselmo deferral request); Comsat Ex. 969 (May 10, 1988 letter from Plaintiffs' counsel to Senate Subcommittee on Communications forwarding memorandum and FCC filings concerning deferral and Comsat opposition); Costello Dep. at 11-12 (acknowledging having prepared Anselmo's personal income tax returns), 102-04 (acknowledging that at the time of filing the deferral request, there was a reasonable basis for the FCC to deny the request); Comsat Ex. 992 (October 5, 1992 letter from Plaintiffs' counsel to Anselmo stating that "people in the General Counsel's office of the [FCC]" are opposed to the grant); Anselmo Dep. at 511-12 (referencing and acknowledging receipt of Comsat Exs. 991 & 992); Comsat Ex. 991 (November 13, 1992, letter from Plaintiffs' counsel to Anselmo discussing strategy for advancing the deferral request).

<sup>104</sup> Citing Studley Dep. at 11-12 (referencing Comsat Ex. 763), 14-16 (referencing Comsat Ex. 763 and lobbying effort to amend I.R.S. Code § 1071 in Anselmo's favor), 16-17 (acknowledging taking part in the drafting of the statement of Senator Dodd included in the bill proposing amendment of I.R.S. Code § 1071), 19-20 (acknowledging that I.R.S. Code § 1071 had been applied in a "confusing and inconsistent manner," and that Congress nevertheless did not amend the section); Comsat Ex. 763 at DLJ 10720 (September 20, 1990 memorandum to Anselmo discussing and appending bill introduced by Senators Dodd and Lieberman to amend I.R.S. Code § 1071 to favor PAS); Comsat Ex. 960 at S13354 (September 18, 1990 Congressional Record, statement of Senator Dodd encouraging investment on competitive international satellite systems).

Plaintiffs allege that Comsat disrupted deals PAS had been negotiating with the United States Air Force, Cargill, CNN, AT&T, IBM and DuPont by representing that PAS did not have and could not get necessary landing rights, and that PAS lacked sufficient capacity and back-up capacity to effectively serve those clients. See 3d Am. Compl. PP 28(c) & (o). The record, however, completely fails to support Plaintiffs' claims.

HN23 [+] To state a commercial disparagement claim a plaintiff must show a knowing publication of material derogatory to the plaintiff's business; that the material is false; that it is of a nature calculated to prevent others from dealing with the plaintiff or to interfere with the plaintiff's relations with others to its disadvantage; and that in material and substantial part induces others not to do business with the plaintiff with the result that special damages in the form of lost business are incurred. See Def.'s Summ. J. Mem. at 33-34 (citing Kirby v. Wildenstein, 784 F. Supp. 1112, 1115 (S.D.N.Y. 1992); USFL, 634 F. Supp. 1155 (dismissing [**174] disparagement claims in antitrust action)). Plaintiffs have failed to show evidence of a single disparaging statement, let alone one which was false and which may reasonably be attributed to Defendant Comsat.

With respect to the United States Air Force, Plaintiff had alleged that at some unspecified time in 1989, an unidentified party at Comsat made a remark to an unspecified person in the United States Air Force that PAS "lacked landing rights in Norway, Portugal, Turkey, the [United Kingdom,] Italy and Germany, with the further implication that PAS could not obtain landing rights in these countries." See Comsat Ex. 620 at 9 (Pls.' Suppl. Resp. to Def.'s 2d Set of Interrogs., Interrog. No. 12 & Resp.). Putting aside the fatal lack of specificity in the claim, the record reflects that the statement would have been true if made. See Goldschmidt Dep. Vol. 1 at 188-89 (admitting that the statement that PAS did not have landing rights was true "if construed narrowly").

As to Cargill's business, Plaintiffs claim that in early 1991, Comsat employees Cummings and Torrico told Reuben Lanto of Cargill that PAS "could not obtain operating agreements and other approvals necessary [**175] to handle Cargill business in Latin America." Comsat Ex. 620 at 11 (Pls.' Suppl. Resp. to Def.'s 2d Set of Interrogs., Interrog. No. 12 & Resp.). In deposition testimony, however, Torrico denied making the alleged remark to Cargill, see Torrico Dep. at 116 (denying ever having told Cargill anything about PAS), 160-61 (denying having discussed PAS with Cargill or any other client), and Cummings not only denied making the remark but testified that Cargill raised the issue, not Comsat, because Cargill had suspicions about PAS's representations that it possessed landing rights.<sup>105</sup>

[**176] In an attempt to rebut these denials, Plaintiffs offer only the third-hand hearsay statements of their own employee, Alvaro Gazzolo. Although Plaintiffs submit an affidavit from Lanto, that affidavit does not contain a single reference to the alleged statements. See Lanto Aff. (Aug. 7, 1994). Instead, Plaintiffs cite to Gazzolo's claims that Lanto had been told by unidentified persons in Argentina that they in turn had been told by an unidentified representative of Comsat in Argentina that PAS's concessions from the Argentine ministry were not valid. See Gazzolo Dep. at 21, 66-67. This chain of unidentified declarants does not state an actionable disparagement claim.

Concerning CNN, Plaintiffs claim that sometime in 1987 or 1988 an unidentified source at Comsat told an unidentified source at CNN that PAS "would be unable to obtain all operating agreements and/or Intelsat consultations to handle the Turner/CNN business." Comsat Ex. 620 at 11 (Pls.' Suppl. Resp. to Def.'s 2d Set of Interrogs., Interrog. No. 12 & Resp.). Plaintiffs cite in support of this claim a July 29, 1988 meeting, but the notes of that meeting do not indicate any disparagement of PAS. See PAS Ex. [**177] 2556 (Hannon notes of July 29, 1988 meeting with CNN listing Comsat and PAS strengths and weakness, but not identifying any disparagement of PAS); Hannon Dep. at 80-105 (discussing PAS Ex. 2556).<sup>106</sup>

<sup>105</sup> See Cummings Dep. at 68-69 (stating that the only time the issue of landing rights came up in a meeting with a customer, Cargill asked Comsat if PAS's representation to Cargill that PAS was getting landing rights in Argentina was true, and Comsat responded that it did not know), 75-80 (denying having ever said that PAS could not get landing rights in any country, stating "as far as [Comsat] knew, [Argentina] was a monopoly on international transmission and so, you know, it's news to us if PANAMSAT or somebody else can get landing rights"), 98-102 (acknowledging expressing surprise that PAS or any other company would represent that it was getting rights in Argentina, because Argentina was a monopoly).

<sup>106</sup> Defendant argues that the notes and testimony cited by PAS all describe statements by CNN, not by Comsat. See Def. Reply Summ. J. Mem. at 22 n.43 (citing Hannon Dep. at 76-77 (discussing concerns raised by CNN concerning backup capacity)), 82-

Plaintiffs also identify Comsat employees Joanne Tanner and Stephen Carroll as allegedly having personal knowledge of the alleged disparaging remark. But both denied having such knowledge. See Tanner Dep. at 302-08 (denying having made any such remarks [**178] or having any knowledge that anyone else at Comsat made such remarks); Carroll Dep. at 392-93 (same). Plaintiffs have failed to show that the remark was ever made. Moreover, even if Plaintiffs had provided testimony substantiating the remark, the record indicates that the remark was true at the time, insofar as PAS did not have such the necessary authorizations.<sup>107</sup>

[**179] With respect to AT&T, Plaintiffs claim that in 1992 Comsat employee Tom Barr represented to AT&T employees Whitney Maull and Denise Palaia that PAS "lacked relationships, both formal and informal, with foreign PTTs sufficient to serve AT&T as a space segment supplier for VSATs in Latin America." Comsat Ex. 620 at 11-12 (Pls.' Suppl. Resp. to Def.'s 2d Set of Interrogs., Interrog. No. 12 & Resp.). Plaintiffs again fail to provide any evidence that the statement was ever made. Although Plaintiffs cite to the deposition testimony of Maull, that testimony does not mention any representations by Comsat. See Maull Dep. at 7 (describing Maull as AT&T officer), 97-99 (denying that any Comsat employee ever made a disparaging remark about PAS in his presence, and describing AT&T's own investigation of PAS claims to have ability to provide service in many countries, resulting in AT&T uncertainty about PAS), 101-02 (stating that AT&T observed no collaboration among PTTs in its negotiations in each country, and observed lack of familiarity with PAS, rather than opposition or hostility to PAS).

Similarly, although Plaintiffs argue that Comsat also made disparaging representations about PAS [**180] to potential customers IBM and DuPont, nothing in the record supports such claims. On the contrary, portions of the record specifically deny that such representations were ever made. See, e.g., Harris Dep. at 23 (IBM representative denying having discussed PAS with anyone from Comsat from 1987 through 1993); Toone Dep. at 23 (DuPont representative stating that DuPont conducted its own investigation of PAS representations in Brazil, and denying any reason to believe that Comsat had any role in PAS's inability to obtain the necessary authorizations).

Acknowledging that they have not shown evidence showing that Comsat made any disparaging remarks about PAS, Plaintiffs urge the Court to draw "at least the inference that such representations were made to Cargill, CNN, and AT&T." Pls.' Opp'n Mem. at 35. Plaintiffs asks the Court to draw this inference from evidence which shows that each of these customers raised their own independent concerns about PAS. See Pls.' Opp'n Mem. at 35; Pls.' 3(g) Statement P 40.<sup>108</sup> Nothing in these citations permits an inference of disparagement. Indeed, many of them clearly 85 (discussing PAS Ex. 2556, Hannon notes recording CNN's concerns), 121-22 (discussing CNN concerns about dealing with host country signatories); PAS Ex. 2556 (Hannon notes of July 29, 1988 meeting with CNN listing Comsat and PAS strengths and weakness, but not identifying any disparagement of PAS).

<sup>107</sup> See Comsat Ex. 924 at 1 (indicating that in Argentina, PAS secured Article XIV(c) consultations on May 17, 1989 and Article XIV(d) consultations on June 20, 1989); Comsat Ex. 925 (indicating PAS received authorization for private telecommunications services in Argentina in February 1985, but did not receive an operating agreement or other authorizations until January 29, 1992); Comsat Ex. 955 at PAS 834743 (indicating that as of April 20, 1990, PAS was authorized to provide private satellite services, including international video and domestic data, broadcast, and CATV services, but not yet authorized for international voice and data services); Landman Dep. at 460-61 (acknowledging having to offer discount rates on PAS because PAS lacked operating authority and the then-existing climate "put concern" that PAS would never get operating authority).

<sup>108</sup> Citing Barr Dep. Vol. 1 at 87-91 (discussing difference between VSAT and IBS service), 124-27 (acknowledging that AT&T had informed Comsat that AT&T was considering using PAS for VSAT services), 133 (acknowledging PAS's general desire to provide end-to-end service), 144-46 (discussing AT&T's professed advantages and disadvantages of dealing with PAS for VSAT service to Latin America), 151-53 (stating that AT&T was considering PAS services thinking that PAS could more rapidly provide VSAT services because PAS was not required to work with the PTTs through whom Comsat worked and with whom AT&T had been having trouble), 155-56 (discussing series of letters and meetings with PTTs to address AT&T's concerns in providing VSAT services), 165-67 (denying knowledge of communications taking place during trips that the witness did not take), 173 (acknowledging risk of losing AT&T Mastercard network business to PAS), 219-20 (referencing PAS Ex. 1025), 243 (referencing trip to visit PTTs around time of AT&T negotiations), 258 (referencing unspecified exhibit), Vol. 2 at 311-12 (recounting AT&T concerns about Comsat for VSAT services), 316 (acknowledging that other VSAT business would accrue to the company securing AT&T VSAT business); Cummings Dep. at 75-76 (denying that anyone from Comsat ever told anyone that PAS could not get landing rights); Hannon Dep. at 80-105 (discussing notes of July 29, 1988 meeting with CNN (PAS Ex. 2556) and deny that Comsat ever raised the issue of PAS with these customers. See, [**181] e.g., Cummings Dep. at 75-76 (denying that anyone from Comsat ever told anyone that PAS could not get landing rights); Hannon Dep. at 80-105 (indicating that CNN, not Comsat, raised and discussed issue of PAS bid for CNN business); Lantto Aff. (not alleging any misconduct by Comsat).

[**182] Even if Plaintiffs had shown evidence showing the alleged disparaging statements or at least permitting an inference of disparagement, Plaintiffs have failed to show that the statements were false or that any injury resulted from the alleged statements. The record reflects that PAS was approved for the United States Air Force contract, see, e.g., Goldschmidt Dep. Vol. 1 at 186-87 (indicating that even after the alleged disparagement by Comsat, PAS was approved as a possible system), and ultimately secured CNN's business. See Comsat Ex. 620 at 11 (Pls.' Suppl. Resp. to Def.'s 2d Set of Interrogs., Interrog. No. 12 & Resp.). As for Cargill, Gazzolo testified that Lantto informed him that Cargill would not rely on the alleged statement but instead would conduct its own investigation of PAS's landing rights. See Gazzolo Dep. at 68; Landman Dep. at 558. Therefore no injury could be attributed to the alleged statement: if PAS's representation that it had landing rights was true, Cargill's investigation would only strengthen PAS's marketing. AT&T similarly conducted its own investigation of PAS's claims concerning landing rights, see Maull Dep. at 97-99 (AT&T officer denying [**183] that any Comsat employee ever made a disparaging remark about PAS in his presence, and describing AT&T's own investigation of PAS claims to have ability to provide service in many countries, resulting in AT&T uncertainty about PAS), 101-02 (stating that AT&T observed no collaboration among PTTs in its negotiations in each country, and observed lack of familiarity with PAS, rather than opposition or hostility to PAS), and ultimately decided to use Comsat capacity because Comsat was technically superior for AT&T's needs. See id. at 49-52 (stating that PAS represented to AT&T that PAS had obtained landing rights in many Latin American countries; indicating that AT&T wanted to deal with the PTTs regardless of which space capacity it used; and not implicating any conduct by Comsat), 53-54 (stating that technical limits of PAS footprint in the United States and South America was the deciding factor in choosing Comsat over PAS), 59-74 (discussing AT&T's decision to reject PAS and accept Comsat proposal for VSAT services to Latin America, naming Comsat's deployment of additional capacity as the most important issue).

Because Plaintiffs have failed to present evidence that Comsat published [**184] any false, derogatory statements to PAS's potential customers, the Court does not reach Defendant's assertion that the alleged statements were not harmful to competition. The Court finds that no inference of commercial disparagement, either as an act in furtherance of the alleged conspiracy or as an independent cause of action, may be drawn against Defendant Comsat. The Court therefore grants Comsat's motion for summary judgment as to Plaintiffs' disparagement claims.

C. Anticompetitive effects

---

indicating that CNN, not Comsat, raised and discussed issue of PAS bid for CNN business); Lantto Aff. (asserting that Cargill would have used PAS instead of Comsat if PAS "had the necessary landing rights, correspondent relationships, and other approvals" and "if its prices were right," but not alleging any misconduct by Comsat); Lowry-Gabriel Dep. Vol. 2 at 250-51 (referencing a technical comparison of the Comsat and PAS proposals for AT&T VSAT service to Latin America), 330-47 (referencing PAS Exs. 87, 1038, & 2636, and discussing technical comparisons of PAS and Comsat for VSAT capacity to Latin America), 354 (acknowledging Comsat competition with PAS for VSAT service); Maull Dep. at 49-52 (stating that PAS represented to AT&T that PAS had obtained landing rights in many Latin American countries; stating that AT&T wanted to deal with the PTTs regardless of which space capacity it used; and not implicating any conduct by Comsat), 59-74 (discussing AT&T's decision to reject PAS and accept Comsat proposal for VSAT services to Latin America, naming Comsat's deployment of additional capacity as the most important issue); Tanner Dep. at 309-10 (denying any recollection of July 29, 1988 meeting with CNN); PAS Ex. 2556 (Hannon notes of July 29, 1988 meeting with CNN listing Comsat and PAS strengths and weakness, but not identifying any disparagement of PAS); PAS Ex. 2618 at 66806-08 (Cummings notes from Feb. 11, 1991, indicating that "Jorge" reported that he would send Comsat information on PAS landing rights in Argentina); PAS Ex. 2646 (Comsat June 18, 1992, letter to AT&T providing pricing information for one-stop VSAT service on Intelsat, and indicating that Comsat would negotiate with foreign signatories on AT&T's behalf); PAS Ex. 2762 (AT&T Tridom chronology of events for Skynet Global VSAT Service); PAS Ex. 3034 (Comsat December 15, 1992 letter to AT&T providing updated pricing information for one-stop VSAT service on Intelsat).

Because Plaintiffs have failed to show evidence from which a reasonable trier of fact could infer that Defendant Comsat participated in an illegal contract, combination or conspiracy, the Court need not examine whether Plaintiff has shown antitrust injury in the form of an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in the relevant market [*895] or submarkets. See Capital Imaging, 996 F.2d at 542-43; International Distrib., 812 F.2d at 793. Had the Court reached this issue, however, Plaintiffs would have been required to show more than harm to PAS as an individual market actor.

HN24[] After the plaintiff satisfies its threshold burden of proof under the rule of reason, the burden [**185] shifts to the defendant to offer evidence of the pro-competitive "redeeming virtues" of their combination. Assuming defendant comes forward with such proof, the burden shifts back to plaintiff for it to demonstrate that any legitimate collaborative objectives proffered by defendant could have been achieved by less restrictive alternatives, that is, those that would be less prejudicial to competition as a whole.

Capital Imaging, 996 F.2d at 543 (citations omitted). In other words, Plaintiffs would have to have shown that the "anticompetitive effects of the alleged conspiracy outweighed its procompetitive effects." International Distrib., 812 F.2d at 793 (citing National Soc'y of Prof. Eng'rs, 435 U.S. at 691, 98 S. Ct. at 1365).

IV. Sherman Act §2

HN25[] Section 2 of the Sherman Act prohibits attempts "to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several states; or with foreign Nations." 15 U.S.C. § 2. Plaintiffs assert seven claims in violation of § 2, including one claim of monopolization, three claims of attempted monopolization and three claims of conspiracy to monopolize. [**186] See 3d Am. Compl. P 32.

A. Conspiracy to monopolize

Plaintiff alleges three claims of conspiring to monopolize in violation of § 2 respectively involving the United States market, domestic and regional markets in Central and South America, and domestic and regional markets in Europe. See 3d Am. Compl. P 32. HN26[] To sustain a claim under § 2 for conspiracy to monopolize, Plaintiffs must show "(1) proof of a concerted action deliberately entered into with the specific intent to achieve an unlawful monopoly, and (2) the commission of an overt act in furtherance of the conspiracy." International Distrib., 812 F.2d at 795 (quoting Paralegal Inst., Inc. v. American Bar Ass'n, 475 F. Supp. 1123, 1132 \(E.D.N.Y. 1979\), aff'd, 622 F.2d 575 (2d Cir. 1980)). "Unlike the elements required to establish an attempt to monopolize, however, proof of a conspiracy to monopolize does not require a dangerous probability of success." International Distrib., 812 F.2d at 795 n.8 (citing American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 789, 66 S. Ct. 1125, 1129, 90 L. Ed. 1575 \(1946\)).

For the reasons discussed above with respect to Plaintiffs' § 1 claims, the Court [**187] finds that Plaintiffs have failed to present evidence from which a reasonable trier of fact could infer concerted action among the alleged conspirators or Defendant Comsat's participation in any such concerted action. See supra at 41-130. The Court therefore need not examine whether Plaintiffs have shown evidence of any shared intent to monopolize among Comsat and the alleged conspirators. Also for the reasons discussed with respect to Plaintiffs' § 1 claims, the Court finds that Plaintiffs have failed to present sufficient evidence of the commission of any overt act in furtherance of the alleged conspiracy. See supra at 130-146. The Court therefore grants Defendant's motion for summary judgment as to Plaintiffs' § 2 conspiracy to monopolize claims.

B. Monopolization

Plaintiff alleges that Defendant Comsat monopolized the market "for international satellite telecommunications services, including the transmission of audio, video, and data signals to and from the United States." 3d Am. Compl. P HN27↑ 32. To sustain a claim under § 2 for monopolization, Plaintiffs must show that Defendant Comsat had the power to monopolize the relevant market, and that it willfully acquired [\[\*\*188\]](#) or maintained that power, causing unreasonable exclusionary or anticompetitive effects. See Alpha Lyracom, 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3825, \*21, 1993-1 Trade Cas. \(CCH\) P70,184 at 69,860-61, 1993 WL 97313 at *5; see also Trans Sport, Inc. v. Starter Sportswear, Inc., 964 F.2d 186, 188-89 \(2d Cir. 1992\); AD/SAT, 920 F. Supp. at 1306 (citing Ortho Diagnostic Sys., Inc. v. Abbott Lab., Inc., 822 F. Supp. 145, 153 \(S.D.N.Y. 1993\) (quoting United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 86 S. Ct. 1698, 1703-04, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 \(1966\)).

For the reasons discussed above with respect to Plaintiffs' § 1 claims, the Court finds that Plaintiffs have failed to present evidence from which a reasonable trier of fact could infer any conduct by Comsat intended to acquire or to maintain monopoly power. See supra at 70-78. Neither have Plaintiffs shown that Comsat possessed monopoly power in any of the relevant markets outside of the United States.<sup>109</sup> [\[\*\*190\]](#) Rather, the record reflects that Comsat's market share has declined in all markets since the period of liberalization began in the 1980s.<sup>110</sup> Although Plaintiffs are correct in noting that entry barriers to the relevant markets were high, see Pls.' [\[\*\*189\]](#) 3(g) Statement P 13, the evidence of Comsat's declining market share shows that these barriers were not insurmountable. Plaintiffs' reliance on the testimony of their expert, Bruce M. Owen, does not alter this conclusion. See Pls.' Opp'n Mem. at p.24 n.6 (citing Owen Dep., Vol. 1, at 80-82, 92-108; Comsat Ex. 726 (report of expected testimony of Bruce M. Owen, revised June 2, 1994)). Finally, even if Defendant's formerly dominant market shares did constitute monopoly power, Plaintiffs have failed to show that Defendants market share is more likely than not the result of anticompetitive conduct and not merely an "historic accident" resulting from the pre-liberalization history of the Intelsat system. See Ortho Diagnostic, 822 F. Supp. at 153 (quoting Grinnell, 384 U.S. at 570-71, 86

<sup>109</sup> Plaintiffs claim that the relevant markets include "the markets for broadcast satellite transmissions between the United States and each nation in South America, Europe, Asia, and Africa, as well as Australia and New Zealand, and between the United States and the Atlantic Ocean region; the markets for international business services ("IBS") transmissions in those geographic areas; and the actual or potential markets for VSAT satellite transmissions in those geographic areas." See Pls.' 3(g) Statement P 9 (citing Comsat Ex. 726 at 1 (report of expected testimony of Bruce M. Owen, revised June 2, 1994); Owen Dep. Vol. 1 at 80-82, 92-108 (market for "satellite transmission of video between the United States and various countries in the Atlantic and Pacific Ocean regions")).

The record before the Court does not support this broad a pleading of the relevant markets. There is effectively no testimony in the record concerning Africa, Asia, Australia or New Zealand. The relevant markets therefore do not exceed the Atlantic Ocean region, including Europe, North America and South America. Moreover, Plaintiffs' expert, Bruce M. Owen, excludes Central America and the Caribbean from the relevant markets for purposes of Plaintiffs' claim for damages. See Owen Dep. at 94-96, 130. These regions therefore must also be excluded.

On the other hand, Plaintiffs attempt to exclude from consideration the markets for international telephony services, see Pls.' 3(g) Statement P 10 (citing Comsat Ex. 1011 at 23, 55; Landman Aff.), and international coaxial and fiber optic cable services. See Pls.' 3(g) Statement P 11 (citing Comsat Ex. 1011 at 53; Landman Aff.; Comsat Ex. 998 at 31; Crockett Dep. Vol. 1, 47-49; Kopinski Dep. at 83-86; Giarman Dep. at 47-51; Shubilla Dep. at 20-21, 127-28; Salvati Dep. at 14-15; Carroll Dep. Vol. 1 at 58-60; Hoff Dep. at 14-18; Twining Dep. at 65-67). These services cannot reasonably be excluded, inasmuch as international telephony service providers are principal users of satellite capacity, particularly Intelsat capacity, and international cable service providers compete directly with satellite capacity providers for many services.

<sup>110</sup> See PAS Ex. 3059 at 8 (summary), 49 (decline from 70% in 1988 to 50% in 1993 in utilized capacity for trans-oceanic switched voice and private line services to Latin America, and approximately 60% to 25% for Europe), 61 (decline from 70% in 1988 to 50% in 1993 in AT&T switched voice services to Latin America, and approximately 60% to 40% for Europe), 70 (decline from 100% in 1986 to approximately 55% in 1993 (with projected decline to 40% by 1996) in utilized capacity for trans-oceanic video and audio services to Latin America, and 100% to approximately 90% by 1993 for trans-Atlantic services only (with projected decline to 65% by 1996)), 74 (decline from 100% in 1987 to approximately 30% in 1993 (with projected decline to 20% by 1996) in market share of revenues from video and audio services to Latin America, and 100% to approximately 90% by 1993 for trans-Atlantic services only (with projected decline to 50% by 1996)).

S. Ct. at 1703-04). The Court therefore grants Defendant Comsat's motion for summary judgment as to Plaintiffs' P 2 monopolization claim.

C. Attempted monopolization

Plaintiff raises three claims of attempting to monopolize the United States market, domestic and regional markets in Central and South [**191] America, and domestic and regional markets in Europe, respectively. See 3d Am. Compl. ¶ 32. To sustain a claim under § 2 for attempted monopolization, Plaintiffs must show Defendant's anticompetitive or exclusionary conduct, a specific intent to monopolize, and a dangerous probability that monopoly will be achieved. See Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 456, 113 S. Ct. 884, 890-91, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1993); International Distrib., 812 F.2d at 791; AD/SAT, 920 F. Supp. at 1296. As with Plaintiffs' monopolization claim, Plaintiffs' attempted monopolization claim requires some measure of market or monopoly power, defined as the power to control prices or to exclude competition in the relevant market. See International Distrib., 812 F.2d at 791 & n.3.

For the reasons discussed above with respect to Plaintiffs' § 1 claims, the Court finds that Plaintiffs have failed to present evidence from which a reasonable trier of fact could infer any conspiracy, see supra at 41-130, anticompetitive or exclusionary conduct by Comsat, see supra at 130-146, or any intent to monopolize. See supra at 70-78. Moreover, for the reasons discussed above with [**192] respect to Plaintiffs' § 2 monopolization claim, the Court finds that Plaintiffs have failed to show that Defendant exercised monopoly power in the any of the relevant markets. See supra 150-152. The Court therefore grants Defendant's motion for summary judgment as to Plaintiffs' § 2 attempted monopolization claims.

V. Damages

Defendant Comsat argues that Plaintiffs have also failed to show evidence of antitrust injury, failed to show evidence that Comsat caused any such injury, failed to plead damages resulting from each alleged injurious act, and failed to provide anything but the most speculative estimate of damages. Having already found that Plaintiffs' claims fail for lack of evidence, the Court need not address these arguments with specificity, but examines them briefly inasmuch as they relate to the Court's earlier examination of Plaintiffs' claims.

Defendants argue that Plaintiffs have failed to show evidence of antitrust injury, insofar as the injuries alleged in the record amount only to harm to PAS, a single competitor, and not to competition as a whole. Antitrust injury is injury to competition, not merely to a competitor. See Brunswick Corp., 429 U.S. 488, 97 S. Ct. at 697; Capital Imaging, 996 F.2d at 542-43; International Distrib., 812 F.2d at 793. Given the limited number of competitors in the relevant markets, however, as well as the barriers to market entry, had Plaintiffs shown the existence and operation of the conspiracy as alleged, an inference of antitrust injury could have been reasonably drawn from the record.

Defendant argues that Plaintiffs have failed to show evidence that Comsat caused any injury to PAS. Specifically, Defendant argues that Plaintiffs have failed to account for other possible causes of PAS's injury, such as regulatory barriers, the Intelsat signatory resolution, unrelated delays in obtaining Intelsat consultations, and the alleged boycott resolution of the European Conference of Postal and Telecommunications Administrations ("CEPT"). The Court agrees, and notes in particular that Plaintiffs have failed to show that any injury to PAS was caused by the alleged conspiracy and not by regulatory barriers that existed before liberalization. Although Plaintiffs claim that the alleged conspirators caused Plaintiffs' pre-liberalization injuries, Plaintiffs readily admit that PAS's success [**194] was triggered by the liberalization and deregulation that swept the relevant markets after PAS's launch of its PAS-1 satellite:

Beginning in 1990 and continuing in 1991 and 1992, countries around the world began to liberalize and deregulate telecommunications . . . [and with] liberalization and deregulation, PAS was able to . . . either obtain licenses directly from governments, or operate without the necessity of government licensing. Once this occurred, PAS revenues and profits burgeoned, and PAS went from operating at a loss to becoming highly profitable. In addition, PAS substantially increased its market share in areas it had been previously unable to penetrate.

Pls.' 3(g) Statement P 46 (internal citations omitted).

Defendant also argues that even if Plaintiffs had shown causation, Plaintiffs have failed to plead damages resulting from each alleged injurious act. Specifically, Comsat challenges Plaintiffs' damage claims for failing to discount for actions undertaken in Comsat's immune signatory role; failing to discount for acts of alleged co-conspirators in their immune signatory roles (including the Intelsat signatory resolutions and the alleged CEPT boycott); [**195] failing to discount for the claims in PP 28(d), (j) and (k) of the Complaint which Plaintiffs withdrew; and failing to break out damages relative to the specific acts alleged in P 28 of the Complaint. In this regard, Plaintiffs adopted contradictory positions as to whether they intended to plead any of the many acts alleged in the Complaint as an independent cause of action as well as an act in furtherance of the alleged conspiracy. In their papers in opposition to Defendants' motion, Plaintiffs argued that a break out of damages was not necessary because the underlying boycott was the cause of PAS's injury, and the other acts were incidental to and in furtherance of the boycott, PAS has not attempted to attribute damages to each of those subsidiary actions. Nor would such an exercise be particularly meaningful, if possible.

Pls.' Opp'n Mem. at 47. At oral argument, however, Plaintiffs argued that each of the acts alleged should be treated as an independent claim, and the Court treated them as such in its examination of the motion. The Court agrees with Defendant, however, that even if Plaintiff had shown evidence to support those independent claims, they would have [**196] been dismissed for Plaintiffs' failure to attribute damages to each of the remaining acts alleged in P 28 of the Complaint.

Finally, Defendant argues that Plaintiffs have failed to provide anything but the most speculative estimate of damages. Essentially, Plaintiffs' claim is that PAS would have been successful two years earlier if not for Comsat's efforts to exclude PAS from various markets. See Pls.' 3(g) Statement PP 53-56. Plaintiffs therefore assert that PAS is entitled to the amount it would have made during the two years of exclusion, calculated as the amount it made in the two subsequent years, plus an amount on top of its actual earnings during the two years after the exclusion, representing the growth it would have experienced.<sup>111</sup> Although the Court agrees that Plaintiffs' damage claims are largely speculative, the claims would have sufficed. In exclusion cases, damage claims are rarely susceptible to concrete, detailed proof. See Zenith, 395 U.S. at 123-24, 89 S. Ct. at 1576-77. That is not to say that Defendant could not have refuted Plaintiffs' claims before a trier of fact by showing that Plaintiffs' claims were largely speculative and not the result of Comsat's [**197] conduct.

[**198] In sum, the Court finds that Plaintiffs have failed to plead sufficiently damages resulting from the individual acts alleged in the Complaint. None of those acts could survive Defendant's motion as an independent cause of action. The Court also finds, however, that Plaintiffs pleaded sufficient damages resulting from the alleged conspiracy. If Plaintiffs had presented evidence of that conspiracy, Comsat's participation in it and acts in furtherance of it, that cause of action would have survived.

VI. State law claims

---

<sup>111</sup> Plaintiffs claim that because of Comsat's conduct the "financing, construction, launch, and realization of revenues from satellites PAS-2, PAS-3, and PAS-4 were delayed for a period of at least two years. See Pls.' 3(g) Statement P 2 (citing Comsat Ex. 1011 at 3 & 8; Landman Aff.; Landman Dep. Vol. 1, at 119-22, Vol. 2 at 444-53; Vol. 3, at 528-39, 562-67, 669-70, Vol. 4, at 724-25, Vol. 5 at 1020-44). Plaintiffs also claim that the shortage in PAS capacity that resulted from this delay caused PAS to turn away business that represented $ 100 million in revenues in the Atlantic Region alone. See Pls.' 3(g) Statement P 45 (citing Landman Dep. Vol. 3 at 529-32, 562-71, 664-65; Comsat Ex. 17). Plaintiffs' allege that a total of approximately $ 233 million was lost to PAS during those two years. See Pls.' Opp'n Mem. at 39, 41-42; Pls.' 3(g) Statement PP 48-56 (citing, inter alia, Owen Dep. Vol. 1 at 43-45, 80, 193-94, 235-45, Vol.2 at 272-75, 279-80, 295-98; Owen Aff.; Comsat Ex. 726; Comsat Ex. 730; Comsat Ex. 733, Comsat Ex. 737; Comsat Ex. 741; Comsat Ex. 742. Plaintiffs then argue that because Comsat allegedly acted willfully, unreasonably and maliciously, Plaintiffs are entitled to treble damages.

The Complaint also contains two claims for interference with prospective advantage under the laws of New York and Connecticut, respectively. See 3d Am. Compl. PP 28(f) & (k). HN28 Under New York law, PAS must establish that Comsat "interfered with a prospective contractual advantage through fraudulent, criminal or otherwise improper conduct." Def.'s Summ. J. Mem. at 48 n.69 (citing Nifty Foods Corp. v. Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co., 614 F.2d 832, 838 (2d Cir. 1980)); see PPX Enters., Inc. v. Audiofidelity Enters., Inc., 818 F.2d 266, 269 (2d Cir. 1987)). Under Connecticut law, PAS must establish that Comsat "interfered with a prospective business [**199] relationships using improper means that amount to an independent tort." Def.'s Summ. J. Mem. at 48 n.69 (citing AroChem Int'l, Inc. v. Buirkle, 968 F.2d 266, 272 (2d Cir. 1992)); see Sportsmen's Boating Corp. v. Hensley, 192 Conn. 747, 474 A.2d 780, 785 (1984)). Plaintiffs have failed to present sufficient evidence to permit a trier of fact to find in their favor under either of these standards.

In addition, Plaintiffs acknowledge in their opposition to the current motion that their state law claims are entirely derivative of Plaintiffs' federal antitrust claims. See Pls.' Opp'n Mem. at 49-50 ("Inasmuch as the evidence fully supports the federal antitrust claims of PAS, it also fully supports PAS's state law claim[s]."). Having found that Plaintiffs showing in support of its federal claims lacking, in particular Plaintiffs failure to show Comsat's alleged disparagement of PAS, see supra at 138-146, the Court grants Defendant's motion to dismiss Plaintiffs' state law claims.

VII. Act of state doctrine and indispensable parties

Defendant also moved for summary judgment under the act of state doctrine and for failure to join the PTTs as indispensable parties. [**200] The Court does not need to reach these arguments. The Court notes, however, that neither argument is likely to have prevailed.

Contrary to Comsat's assertion, the alleged PTT conspirators need not be joined in order for the Court to grant injunctive relief. While it is true that in their absence the Court could not direct the PTTs to provide PAS with operating agreements, it is questionable whether such relief would still be required and, even if it were, whether the Court could order it even if the PTTs were parties. Nevertheless, in their absence the Court could still have enjoined Defendant Comsat in its role as a common carrier from engaging in any conduct which violates federal antitrust laws. See Alpha Lyracom, 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3825, *23, 1993-1 Trade Cas. P70,184 at 69,863, 1993 WL 97313 at *8; accord Alpha Lyracom, 946 F.2d at 175 (finding that any allegations against Comsat in its role as a common carrier are unlikely to encounter indispensable party concerns); cf. Alpha Lyracom, 1990 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11964, 1990-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P69,188 at 64,584-85, 1990 WL 135637 at *9-10 (finding that Intelsat and the alleged PTT conspirators were indispensable to claims implicating signatory functions).

The act of state doctrine [**201] is not implicated here because the effect of a government action is not at issue. See W.S. Kirkpatrick & Co. v. Environmental Tectonics Corp., Int'l, 493 U.S. 400, 406, 110 S. Ct. 701, 705, 107 L. Ed. 2d 816 (1990) (stating that act of state issues only arise "when a court must decide--that is, when the outcome of the case turns upon--the effect of official action by a foreign sovereign"). The issue before the Court in this action is not the effect of any governmental action, but whether any denial of access resulted from government action or from the conduct of nongovernmental entities conspiring with Defendant Comsat. See Alpha Lyracom, 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3825, 1993-1 Trade Cas. P70,184 at 69,863, 1993 WL 97313 at *7.

Conclusion

For the reasons discussed above, Plaintiffs's discovery motions are denied and the orders of the Magistrate Judge are affirmed in all respects. The Court directs Plaintiffs to pay Defendant's costs and fees incurred in opposing Plaintiffs' objections to the Magistrate Judge's order of July 20, 1994.

Defendant's motion for summary judgment is granted as to all claims.

There being no other claims before it, the Court directs the Clerk of the Court to close [**202] this action and remove it from the Court's active calendar.

SO ORDERED.

Dated: New York, New York

September 4, 1996

JOHN F. KEENAN

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

---

End of Document

Dill v. Board of County Comm's

Court of Appeals of Colorado, Division Four

September 5, 1996, Decided

No. 95CA1592

Reporter

928 P.2d 809 *; 1996 Colo. App. LEXIS 265 **; 1997-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,665

Ernie Dill and Julie Dill, Plaintiffs-Appellants, v. Board of County Commissioners of Lincoln County, Charles R. Covington, Harvey Wann, and Cherry Seymour, as members of the Board, Defendants-Appellees.

Subsequent History: [**1] Rehearing Denied September 5, 1996. Released for Publication December 18, 1996.

Prior History: Appeal from the District Court of Lincoln County. Honorable Norman L. Arends, Judge. No. 94CV38.

Disposition: JUDGMENT AFFIRMED

Core Terms

---

solid waste, moratorium, regulations, designated, local government, state interest, disposal site, landfill, guidelines, disposal, plaintiffs', site, trial court, Antitrust, authorizes, arbitrary and capricious, anti trust law, landfill site, police power, quasi-judicial, declaratory, facilities

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Governments > Courts > Authority to Adjudicate

Governments > Courts > Rule Application & Interpretation

HN1[ Courts, Authority to Adjudicate

Colo. R. Civ. P. 106(a)(4) provides that relief is available in district courts where any governmental body or officer or any lower judicial body exercising judicial or quasi-judicial functions has exceeded its jurisdiction or abused its discretion, and there is no plain, speedy and adequate remedy otherwise provided by law.

Governments > Legislation > Effect & Operation > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN2[ Legislation, Effect & Operation

Legislative action is prospective in nature, is of general application, and requires the balancing of questions of judgment and discretion. Moreover, the essence of a legislative decision is in the nature of the decision itself and the process by which that decision is reached.

Governments > Courts > Authority to Adjudicate

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN3 Courts, Authority to Adjudicate

An action is quasi-judicial if the governmental decision is likely to affect adversely the protected interests of specific individuals by application of preexisting legal standards or policy considerations to facts presented to the governmental body. In contrast, legislation affects the rights of individuals in the abstract and must be applied in a further proceeding before the legal position of any particular individual will be definitely touched by it.

Governments > Local Governments > Administrative Boards

Governments > Local Governments > Police Power

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Legislatures

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Relations With Governments

HN4 Local Governments, Administrative Boards

A county has no inherent sovereign authority, but has those powers expressly granted by the Colorado Constitution and statutes, and such incidental powers as are "reasonably necessary" to execute the expressly delegated powers.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Real Property Law > Zoning > Ordinances

Environmental Law > Solid Wastes > Disposal Standards

Real Property Law > Zoning > Judicial Review

Environmental Law > Solid Wastes > Permits > General Overview

Real Property Law > Environmental Regulations > General Overview

HN5 Zoning, Ordinances

The Solid Wastes Disposal Sites and Facilities Act (Act), Colo. Rev. Stat. §§ 30-20-100.5 et seq., provides a statutory basis for regulation of solid waste disposal sites. Although the statute does not explicitly authorize a moratorium, the authority to delay approval of permits while guidelines and regulations are being developed is reasonably incidental to this power to regulate. Specifically, the Act defines the county's authority to regulate the number, location, and type of disposal sites. The Act's legislative declaration states that solid waste is a matter of state and local concern and that both state and local governments must play important roles in the management of solid waste. Colo. Rev. Stat. §§ 30-20-100.5\(1\)\(a\) and 30-20- 100.5(1)(d)(I). Further, local governments and their citizens should be encouraged to work toward consensus concerning their solid waste disposal needs and concerning the types and numbers of solid wastes sites and facilities necessary or desirable in their areas. Colo. Rev. Stat. § 30-20-100.5\(1\)\(d\)\(II\). Moreover, prior to issuance of a certificate of designation, the governing body having jurisdiction over a potential waste site shall be satisfied that the proposed solid wastes disposal site and facility conforms to the local government's comprehensive land use plan and zoning restrictions. Colo. Rev. Stat. § 30-20-104\(3\)\(a\).

Environmental Law > Solid Wastes > Disposal Standards

Governments > Local Governments > Ordinances & Regulations

Real Property Law > Environmental Regulations > General Overview

HN6 Solid Wastes, Disposal Standards

The Solid Wastes Disposal Sites and Facilities Act (Act), Colo. Rev. Stat. §§ 30-20-100.5 et seq., provides a local government with authority to evaluate permits on the basis of its own regulations, as well as to determine the number and type of facilities within its jurisdiction. To authorize a local government to regulate solid waste in this manner but without implied authority to adopt or amend regulations for that purpose would be to ignore the independent role of local governments in the review process. The ability to delay approval of permit applications by way of a moratorium for a reasonable time such that regulations can be revised may also be reasonably necessary to discharge the explicit statutory authority under the Act.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Real Property Law > Zoning > Administrative Procedure

Environmental Law > Solid Wastes > Disposal Standards

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Relations With Governments

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN7 Zoning, Administrative Procedure

The Areas of State Interest Act, Colo. Rev. Stat. § 24-65.1-101 et seq., authorizes local governments to declare certain activities and areas as of state and local interest, Colo. Rev. Stat. § 24-65.1-401, and requires that the local government develop guidelines for administration of the designated matters of state interest. Colo. Rev. Stat. § 24-65.1-402\(1\). Colo. Rev. Stat. § 24-65.1-404 provides for notice and a hearing before an area or activity is designated and guidelines promulgated. Colo. Rev. Stat. § 24-65.1-404\(3\) provides that the local government may, within 30 days of the public hearing, adopt, modify, or reject the particular designation and guidelines, but in any case, the local government shall have the duty to designate any matter which has been finally determined to be a matter of state interest and adopt guidelines for the administration thereof. Colo. Rev. Stat. § 24-65.1-406 sets time limits for the review and approval of proposed guidelines by the Colorado land use commission, and Colo. Rev. Stat. § 24-65.1-404\(4\) provides for a moratorium on development between the time a matter of state interest has been designated and guidelines for such area or activity are finally determined.

Environmental Law > Solid Wastes > Disposal Standards

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Relations With Governments

Environmental Law > Solid Wastes > Flow Control

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

**HN8** [] Solid Wastes, Disposal Standards

The Areas of State Interest Act, Colo. Rev. Stat. §§ 24-65.1-101 et seq., does not require that an area or activity be redesignated each time a local government finds it necessary to revise its applicable regulations. Indeed, the act does not explicitly provide for revision of guidelines, but a jurisdiction may adopt regulations interpreting and applying its adopted guidelines in relation to specific developments in areas of state interest and to specific activities of state interest. Colo. Rev. Stat. § 24-65.1-402\(2\).

Environmental Law > Solid Wastes > Disposal Standards

Real Property Law > Environmental Regulations > General Overview

**HN9** [] Solid Wastes, Disposal Standards

Lincoln County (Colorado) Resolution 294 provides that, Colo. Rev. Stat. § 30-20-107, the Lincoln County Solid Waste Landfill Site is hereby declared to be and is the exclusive solid waste landfill site for disposal of solid waste within Lincoln County.

Environmental Law > Solid Wastes > Disposal Standards

Real Property Law > Environmental Regulations > General Overview

**HN10** [] Solid Wastes, Disposal Standards

Colo. Rev. Stat. § 30-20-107 provides that the governing body of any county or municipality may by ordinance designate and approve one or more solid wastes disposal sites and facilities as its exclusive solid wastes disposal site and facility and thereafter each such site and facility shall be used by such county or municipality for the disposal of its solid wastes.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

**HN11** [] Justiciability, Standing

Whether a party has standing requires a court to determine, based primarily on the allegations of the complaint, whether a plaintiff was injured in fact and whether the injury was to a legally protected interest. The plaintiff must demonstrate that there is an existing legal controversy that can be effectively resolved and not a mere possibility of a future legal dispute.

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > Reviewability > Exhaustion of Remedies

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Exhaustion of Remedies > Administrative Remedies

Environmental Law > Air Quality > Enforcement > Administrative Proceedings

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Exhaustion of Remedies > General Overview

**HN12** [blue download icon] Reviewability, Exhaustion of Remedies

Exhaustion of administrative remedies is not necessarily a prerequisite to establish standing when issues presented to the court depend on interpretation of legislation adopted by a governmental entity. A party adversely affected by a law that he or she contends is invalid need not violate the law in order to obtain a judgment on its validity or invalidity.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

**HN13** [blue download icon] Justiciability, Standing

The injury-in-fact element of standing is established when the averments of the complaint, accepted as true, and the allegations, viewed in the light most favorable to plaintiff, as well as other submitted evidence, establish that the legislation threatened to cause injury to a plaintiff's present or imminent activities. Further, the injury must be to a legally protected interest, an interest emanating from a constitutional, statutory, or judicially created rule of law that entitles plaintiff to some form of judicial relief.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Scope

Governments > Local Governments > Claims By & Against

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > General Overview

**HN14** [blue download icon] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

The doctrine which exempts state government from operation of the federal antitrust laws, extends to exempt local governments when engaged in their traditional government functions. The state may sanction anticompetitive municipal activities and thereby immunize municipalities from antitrust liability, when the state policy is clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed. Moreover, any person exempt or immune under federal antitrust law is exempt from the Colorado Antitrust Act of 1992, Colo. Rev. Stat. § 6-4-108\(4\).

Counsel: Gablehouse & Epel, Joshua B. Epel, Karina M. Thomas, Denver, Colorado, for Plaintiffs-Appellants.

Robert J. Safranek, Limon, Colorado, for Defendants-Appellees.

Judges: Opinion by JUDGE DAVIDSON. Briggs and Taubman, JJ., concur

Opinion by: DAVIDSON

Opinion

---

[*811] Plaintiffs, Ernie and Julie Dill, brought this action pursuant to C.R.C.P. 106\(a\)\(4\) for judicial review and for injunctive and declaratory relief concerning actions taken by defendant, Board of County Commissioners of Lincoln County (Board), in adopting two resolutions regarding solid waste disposal. The trial court determined the resolutions to be valid legislative action by the Board and dismissed plaintiffs' other requests for relief. On grounds somewhat different from those of the trial court, we affirm.

In early 1994, plaintiffs notified the Board of their intention to obtain a Certificate of Designation (CD) to build and operate a commercial sanitary landfill. In May 1994, following several citizen complaints about the [**2] proposed landfill but before plaintiffs submitted their CD application, the Board published a notice of public hearing to consider a moratorium on all new landfill projects. In June 1994, the Board adopted Resolution 294, which designated the county's own landfill as the "exclusive solid waste landfill site" for the county. After a public hearing, the Board adopted Resolution 297, imposing a two- year moratorium on issuance of CDs. The purpose of the moratorium was to "adopt[] comprehensive rules, regulations and guidelines for the siting and operation of solid waste landfills within the County."

Plaintiffs filed a complaint seeking review of the Board's actions, arguing that adoption of the two resolutions was beyond its authority, as well as arbitrary and capricious, and that the resolutions interfered with plaintiffs' ability to participate in the statutorily established CD designation process. Plaintiffs also argued that Resolution 294 created a monopoly in derogation of federal and state antitrust law, and requested that the Board be enjoined from enforcing the resolution.

The trial court dismissed plaintiffs' claims, ruling that adoption of the resolutions was legislative, [**3] rather than quasi-judicial, and, therefore, not subject to review as arbitrary and capricious under C.R.C.P. 106(a)(4). The court further ruled that the moratorium was properly adopted under implied statutory authority. In addition, it ruled that since plaintiffs had not as yet filed a CD application, they lacked standing to contest the Board's actions based on state and federal antitrust law. This appeal followed.

I.

Plaintiffs first contend that the trial court erred in determining that enactment of the resolutions was a legislative rather than quasi-judicial action. Consequently, plaintiffs argue, the court erred in determining that the actions were not subject to judicial review under the arbitrary and capricious standard of C.R.C.P. 106(a)(4). We disagree.

HN1[] C.R.C.P. 106(a)(4) provides that relief is available in district courts:

Where any governmental body or officer or any lower judicial body exercising judicial or quasi-judicial functions has exceeded [*812] its jurisdiction or abused its discretion, and there is no plain, speedy and adequate remedy otherwise provided by law . . . .

Distinguishing between quasi-judicial and legislative action, the supreme court has stated that [**4] HN2[] legislative action "is prospective in nature, is of general application, and requires the balancing of questions of judgment and discretion." City & County of Denver v. Eggert, 647 P.2d 216, 222 (Colo. 1982); see also Landmark Land Co. v. City & County of Denver, 728 P.2d 1281 (Colo. 1986). Moreover, the essence of a legislative decision is in the "nature of the decision itself and the process by which that decision is reached." Cherry Hills Resort Development Co. v. City of Cherry Hills Village, 757 P.2d 622, 626 (Colo. 1988).

HN3[] An action is quasi-judicial if the governmental decision is likely to affect adversely the protected interests of specific individuals by application of preexisting legal standards or policy considerations to facts presented to the governmental body. In contrast, legislation "affects the rights of individuals in the abstract and must be applied in a further proceeding before the legal position of any particular individual will be definitely touched by it." Colorado Ground Water Commission v. Eagle Peak Farms, Ltd., 919 P.2d 212, 217 (Colo. 1996).

Here, if we accept plaintiffs' allegations as true, their participation in the CD process may be affected by both [**5] resolutions. A further proceeding, however, would be required before either resolution would specifically affect the legal position of plaintiffs or any other potential landfill developer. Cf. City of Aspen v. Marshall, 912 P.2d 56 (Colo. 1996) (incomplete permit application creates no vested right of use); Williams v. City of Central, 907 P.2d 701 (Colo. App. 1995) (temporary moratorium did not effect taking of property).

Further, while plaintiffs assert that it was their interest in developing a commercial landfill that originally prompted the Board's actions, by their terms, both resolutions had a broad impact, i.e., they were applicable to all landfills, all land in the county, and all potential disposers of waste in Lincoln County. See Jafay v. Board of County Commissioners, 848 P.2d 892 \(Colo. 1993\).

Moreover, the resolutions were prospective in nature -- both by their terms and because, at the time of enactment, no CD applications had been submitted to which they might have been applied. Thus, despite the fact that the Board provided notice and public hearings before adopting the moratorium, factors which can be indicative of a quasi-judicial action, the Board's actions [**6] were quasi-legislative. See Jafay v. Board of County Commissioners, supra. Accordingly, plaintiffs are not entitled to judicial review of either resolution under the arbitrary and capricious standard of C.R.C.P. 106\(a\)\(4\).

II.

In addition to challenging the specific actions of the Board as arbitrary and capricious, plaintiffs also challenge the Board's authority to adopt a moratorium. Although it is not precisely clear, this claim for relief appears to be a request for a declaratory judgment on the validity of Resolution 297. Accordingly, we review it as such, see Bruce v. School District No. 60, 687 P.2d 509 \(Colo. App. 1984\), and agree with the trial court's determination that the Board was authorized to enact a moratorium.

HN4 [↑] A county has no inherent sovereign authority, but has those powers expressly granted by the Colorado constitution and statutes, and such incidental powers as are "reasonably necessary" to execute the expressly delegated powers of the Board. See Orchard City v. Board of Delta County Commissioners, 751 P.2d 1003 \(Colo. 1988\); see also Meadowbrook-Fairview Metropolitan District v. Board of County Commissioners, 910 P.2d 681 \(Colo. 1996\) (counties have such police [**7] powers as granted by constitution or delegated by General Assembly).

There is no claim here of power to adopt a moratorium pursuant to an express constitutional grant or statutory authorization. Therefore, adoption of Resolution 297 was a valid exercise of authority only if a moratorium on approval of CD applications can be inferred to be reasonably necessary for the Board to execute its express powers regarding [*813] solid waste management. See Dollaghan v. Boulder County, 749 P.2d 444 \(Colo. App. 1987\); cf. Williams v. City of Central, supra, 907 P.2d at 706 ("Temporary moratoria . . . generally are upheld so long as the duration is reasonable under the circumstances and the enactment was made in good faith without discrimination.").

Here, authority to adopt a moratorium may be inferred from both the Solid Wastes Disposal Sites and Facilities statute (Solid Wastes Act), § 30-20-100.5, et seq., C.R.S. (1986 Repl. Vol. 12A), and the Areas of State Interest Act, § 24-65.1-101, et seq., C.R.S. (1988 Repl. Vol. 10B).

HN5 [↑] First, the Solid Wastes Act provides a statutory basis for regulation of solid waste disposal sites within Lincoln County. Although the statute does not explicitly authorize [**8] a moratorium, the authority to delay approval of permits while guidelines and regulations are being developed is reasonably incidental to this power to regulate.

Specifically, the Solid Wastes Act defines the county's authority to regulate the number, location, and type of disposal sites. The act's legislative declaration states that solid waste is a matter of state and local concern and that both state and local governments "must play important roles in the management of solid waste." Sections 30-20-100.5\(1\)\(a\) and 30-20-100.5(1)(d)(I), C.R.S. (1996 Cum. Supp.). Further:

Local governments and their citizens should be encouraged to work toward consensus concerning their solid waste disposal needs and concerning the types and numbers of solid wastes sites and facilities necessary or desirable in their areas. Section 30-20-100.5\(1\)\(d\)\(II\), C.R.S. (1996 Cum. Supp.).

Moreover, prior to issuance of a CD, the "governing body having jurisdiction [over a potential waste site] shall . . . be satisfied that the proposed solid wastes disposal site and facility conforms to the local government's comprehensive land use plan and zoning restrictions." Section 30-20-104\(3\)\(a\), C.R.S. (1996 [**9] Cum. Supp.); see also § 30-20-104\(1\), C.R.S. (1996 Cum. Supp.) (county has authority to evaluate applications for proposed solid wastes disposal sites and facilities); § 30-10-104(2), C.R.S. (1996 Cum. Supp.) (county can approve or disapprove applications for CDs, subject to judicial review). The factors a county must consider in evaluating a CD application include the location of the site, type of processing to be used, effects on surrounding property, as well as Colorado Department of Public Health and Environment standards and operating procedures. See § 30-20-104\(1\).

Thus, HN6↑ the Solid Wastes Act provides a local government with authority to evaluate permits on the basis of its own regulations, as well as to determine the number and type of facilities within its jurisdiction. To authorize a local government to regulate solid waste in this manner but without implied authority to adopt or amend regulations for that purpose would be to ignore the independent role of local governments in the review process. The ability to delay approval of permit applications by way of a moratorium for a reasonable time such that regulations can be revised may also be reasonably necessary to discharge [**10] the Board's explicit statutory authority under the Solid Wastes Act.

Similarly, HN7↑ the Areas of State Interest Act authorizes local governments to declare certain activities and areas as "of state and local interest," see § 24-65.1-401, C.R.S. (1988 Repl. Vol. 10B), and requires that the local government "develop guidelines for administration of the designated matters of state interest." Section 24-65.1-402\(1\), C.R.S. (1988 Repl. Vol. 10B); see also § 24-65.1-204\(2\), C.R.S. (1988 Repl. Vol. 10B) (criteria for developing solid waste disposal sites).

Section 24-65.1-404, C.R.S. (1988 Repl. Vol. 10B) provides for notice and a hearing before an area or activity is designated and guidelines promulgated. Section 24-65.1-404\(3\), C.R.S. (1988 Repl. Vol. 10B) provides that the local government may, within 30 days of the public hearing, adopt, modify, or reject the particular designation and guidelines, but "in any case, [the local government] shall have the duty to designate any matter which has been finally determined to be a matter of state interest and adopt guidelines for the administration thereof." See also City & County of Denver v. Board of County Commissioners, I<sup>814</sup>I 782 P.2d 753 \(Colo. I<sup>\*\*11</sup> 1989\). Section 24-65.1-406, C.R.S. (1988 Repl. Vol. 10B) sets time limits for the review and approval of proposed guidelines by the Colorado land use commission, and § 24-65.1-404\(4\), C.R.S. (1988 Repl. Vol. 10B) provides for a moratorium on development between the time a matter of state interest has been designated and guidelines for such area or activity are "finally determined."

Here, pursuant to regulations, Lincoln County designated site selection and development of solid wastes disposal sites as a matter of state interest in March 1982, and adopted regulations pertaining to solid and hazardous waste in November 1982. Plaintiffs' contention notwithstanding, HN8↑ the Areas of State Interest Act does not require that an area or activity be redesignated each time a local government finds it necessary to revise its applicable regulations. Indeed, the act does not explicitly provide for revision of guidelines, but a jurisdiction "may adopt regulations interpreting and applying its adopted guidelines in relation to specific developments in areas of state interest and to specific activities of state interest." Section 24-65.1-402\(2\), C.R.S. (1988 Repl. Vol. 10B).

Consequently, it is reasonable [**12] to infer that the Board had authority pursuant to § 24-65.1-101, et seq., to revise its regulations with regard to solid waste disposal. Further, as discussed in regard to the Solid Wastes Act, a moratorium on approval of permit applications for a reasonable time such that regulations can be updated may also be necessary to discharge the Board's explicit statutory authority under the Areas of State Interest Act.

Furthermore, we note that courts which have addressed this issue have generally found implied authority to enact moratoria under a jurisdiction's general police power authority, despite a lack of explicit statutory authority. Cf. State ex rel. Diehl Co. v. City of Helena, 181 Mont. 306, 593 P.2d 458 \(Mont. 1979\) (implied in power to restrict use of land as exercise of police power is authority to adopt reasonable moratoria); Brazos Land, Inc. v. Board of County Commissioners, 115 N.M. 168, 848 P.2d 1095 \(N.M. App. 1993\) (moratorium for promulgating more stringent subdivision waste disposal requirements a valid exercise of board's police power and its express and implied authority where such requirements and restrictions reasonably advanced a legitimate state interest in the safety and health of the inhabitants); [\[\*\*13\] *Sun Ridge Development, Inc. v. City of Cheyenne, 787 P.2d 583 \(Wyo. 1990\)*](#) (moratorium was a reasonable response to drainage problems and a valid exercise of police powers); see generally I A. Rathkopf, The Law of Zoning & Planning, § 11.03[1] (1996).

III.

Plaintiffs next contend that the trial court erred in dismissing for lack of standing their request that the Board be enjoined from enforcing Resolution 294, which designated the county's own landfill as the "exclusive solid waste landfill site" for the county. Plaintiffs essentially argue that the resolution is invalid as written because it violates the Sherman Antitrust Act, the Colorado Antitrust Act of 1992, and the *Commerce Clause of the United States Constitution*.

HN9 Resolution 294 provides that:

Pursuant to CRS 30-20-107, the Lincoln County Solid Waste Landfill Site . . . is hereby declared to be and is the exclusive solid waste landfill site for disposal of solid waste within Lincoln County.

HN10 Section 30-20-107, C.R.S. \(1996 Cum. Supp.\) provides that:

The governing body of any county or municipality may by ordinance designate and approve one or more solid wastes disposal sites and facilities . . . as its exclusive solid [\[\*\*14\]](#) wastes disposal site and facility . . .

and thereafter each such site and facility shall be used by such county or municipality for the disposal of its solid wastes . . . .

Although we disagree with the trial court's determination that plaintiffs lack standing, we agree that the claim was properly dismissed. See *Norwest Bank Lakewood v. GCC Partnership, 886 P.2d 299 \(Colo. App. 1994\)* (court may affirm on grounds different from those relied on by the trial court).

[\[\*815\]](#) A.

We agree with plaintiffs that the trial court erred in dismissing their claim contesting the validity of Resolution 294 for lack of standing based on a failure to exhaust their administrative remedies because they had not submitted a CD application.

HN11 Whether a party has standing requires a court to determine, based primarily on the allegations of the complaint, whether a plaintiff was injured in fact and whether the injury was to a legally protected interest. *Wimberly v. Ettenberg, 194 Colo. 163, 570 P.2d 535 \(1977\)*. The plaintiff must demonstrate that there is an existing legal controversy that can be effectively resolved and not a mere possibility of a future legal dispute.

HN12 Exhaustion of administrative remedies [\[\*\*15\]](#) is not necessarily a prerequisite to establish standing when issues presented to the court depend on interpretation of legislation adopted by a governmental entity. See *Colorado-Ute Electric Ass'n v. Air Pollution Control Commission, 648 P.2d 150 \(Colo. App. 1981\)*, vacated on other grounds, *672 P.2d 993 \(Colo. 1983\)*; see also *State of Colorado v. Veterans Administration, 430 F. Supp. 551 \(D. Colo. 1977\)*, aff'd, *602 F.2d 926* (10th Cir.), cert. denied, *444 U.S. 1014, 100 S. Ct. 663, 62 L. Ed. 2d 643 \(1980\)*. A party adversely affected by a law that he or she contends is invalid need not violate the law in order to obtain a judgment on its validity or invalidity. *Colorado State Board of Optometric Examiners v. Dixon, 165 Colo. 488, 440 P.2d 287 \(1968\)*.

To the extent plaintiffs seek a declaratory judgment, HN13 the injury-in-fact element of standing is established when the averments of the complaint, accepted as true, and the allegations, viewed in the light most favorable to plaintiff, as well as other submitted evidence, establish that the legislation threatened to cause injury to a plaintiff's present or imminent activities. See [*CF&I Steel Corp. v. Colorado Air Pollution Control Commission, \[\*\*16\] 199 Colo. 270, 610 P.2d 85 \(1980\)*](#). Further, the injury must be to a legally protected interest -- an interest emanating from a constitutional, statutory, or judicially created rule of law that entitles plaintiff to some form of judicial relief. See Board of County Commissioners v. Bowen/Edwards Associates, Inc., 830 P.2d 1045 \(Colo. 1992\).

In Bowen/Edwards, plaintiff contested the validity of new county regulations without first applying for a permit under those regulations. Nevertheless, the court determined that plaintiff made an adequate, if "less than formidable" showing that the regulations could impede its ability to develop and produce oil and gas in the county.

Here, plaintiffs contend that by adopting Resolution 294, the Board interfered with their ability to participate in the CD process, Colorado's exclusive process for licensing of a landfill.

While Resolution 294 does not, on its face, preclude application for a permit, the resolution can be read to preclude approval of any CD application that might be submitted. Consequently, while plaintiffs' showing also is "less than formidable," it too is adequate to withstand dismissal for lack of standing in a declaratory judgment [**17] action. See Board of County Commissioners v. Bowen/Edwards Associates, Inc., supra.

B.

We disagree, however, with plaintiffs' assertion that Resolution 294 necessarily violates the Sherman Antitrust Act, the Colorado Antitrust Act of 1992, and the Commerce Clause of the United States Constitution.

HN14 [↑] The Parker doctrine, which exempts state government from operation of the federal antitrust laws, extends to exempt local governments when engaged in their traditional government functions. The "state may sanction anticompetitive municipal activities and thereby immunize municipalities from antitrust liability," when the state policy is "clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed." Community Communications Co. v. Boulder, 455 U.S. 40, 51, 102 S. Ct. 835, 840-41, 70 L. Ed. 2d 810, 818-19 \(1982\); cf. Colorado Springs v. Mountain View Electric Ass'n, 925 P.2d 1378 \(Colo. App. 1995\) (interpreting Colorado law prior to Colorado Antitrust Act of 1992). Moreover, any person exempt or immune under federal antitrust [*816] law is exempt from the Colorado Antitrust Act of 1992. See § 6-4-108\(4\), C.R.S. (1992 Repl. Vol. 2).

Consequently, to the extent that § 30-20-107 affirmatively [**18] authorizes the Board to designate an exclusive solid waste landfill site, Resolution 294 violates neither state nor federal antitrust statutes.

In their briefs on appeal, plaintiffs imply that Resolution 294 is intended to be used to prohibit the siting of any other landfill for disposal of non-county waste. And, we note that the legislative history of § 30-20-107 indicates that this provision authorizes government entities to "designate disposal sites to be used for dumping waste materials collected in the [jurisdiction]" in order to "provide a stable source of refuse to disposal sites under their respective jurisdictions." Legislative Council Report to the Colorado General Assembly, Research Publ. # 129 at xxii and 42 (1967); see also Colo. Sess. Laws 1967, ch. 358, § 7 at 760. Thus, on its face, Resolution 294 is in accord with state policy, and the Board is immune from state and federal antitrust laws, but only to the extent that it establishes an exclusive site for disposal of county generated waste.

Plaintiffs' complaint, however, contains no allegation that the Board has applied the resolution to require that waste which is not collected within its jurisdiction be disposed [**19] of in its exclusive site. Thus, any such inference is purely speculative and, therefore, not subject to review as the claims are postured here. See Farmers Insurance Exchange v. District Court, 862 P.2d 944 \(Colo. 1993\) (speculative inquiries inappropriate in declaratory judgment actions).

Similarly, we will not address plaintiffs' contention that Resolution 294 violates the Commerce Clause because this argument is brought for the first time on appeal. See In re Estate of Stevenson v. Hollywood Bar & Cafe, Inc., 832 P.2d 718 \(Colo. 1992\).

Accordingly, the judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

JUDGE BRIGGS and JUDGE TAUBMAN concur.

---

End of Document

In re Disposable Contact Lens Antitrust Litig.

United States District Court for the Middle District of Florida, Jacksonville Division

September 5, 1996, Decided ; September 5, 1996, FILED

MDL Docket No. 1030 ALL CASES

Reporter

170 F.R.D. 524 *; 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20760 **; 1997-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,811

IN RE: DISPOSABLE CONTACT LENS ANTITRUST LITIGATION

Disposition: [**1] Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Class Plaintiffs' Consolidated Complaint for Failure to State a Claim (Doc. No. 28) DENIED; Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Doc. No. 32) GRANTED.

Core Terms

---

contact lens, class action, conspiracy, class member, Defendants', replacement, class certification, predominate, practitioners, antitrust, lenses, prices, memorandum, certification, manufacturers, purchasers, question of law, certify, Reply, prerequisites, questions, alleged conspiracy, motion to dismiss, common issue, generalized, channels, parties

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > Parties > Joinder of Parties > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Numerosity

HN1[] Parties, Joinder of Parties

See Fed. R. Civ. P. 23.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Members > Named Members

HN2[] Class Actions, Prerequisites for Class Action

In order to maintain a suit as a class action, plaintiffs must show that the four prerequisites of Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(a\) have been met and that one of the provisions of Fed. R. Civ. P 23(b) applies. A court must further find that the class representative is a member of the class and that the class has been precisely defined.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Certification of Classes

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN3 Class Actions, Certification of Classes

Persons seeking to certify their suit as a class action bear the burden of establishing the specific prerequisites of Fed. R. Civ. P. 23.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Members > Named Members

HN4 Class Actions, Prerequisites for Class Action

In determining whether named plaintiffs have met their burden, a court's inquiry is limited to whether the requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 23 have been satisfied. However, a court may look beyond the pleadings in determining whether a motion for class certification should be granted.

Civil Procedure > Parties > Joinder of Parties > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Numerosity

HN5 Parties, Joinder of Parties

The first prong of Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(a\) mandates that the class be so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable. In order to satisfy this requirement, the plaintiffs generally must proffer some evidence or reasonable estimate of the number of members comprising the purported class.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Members > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN6 Class Actions, Class Members

The second factor under Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(a\) requires that there be questions of law or fact common to the class. This provision does not require a complete identity of legal claims. Rather the requirement is usually satisfied if all class members are in a "substantially identical factual situation" and the questions of law raised by the plaintiff are applicable to each class member. Commonality is satisfied when there is at least one issue whose resolution will affect all or a significant number of the putative class members.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Certification of Classes

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN7 Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

While it is not proper to reach the merits of a claim when determining class certification in making its predominance determination, a court must determine whether plaintiffs have made a threshold showing that the proof they intend to offer at trial of the alleged conspiracy will be sufficiently generalized in nature to warrant certification of the class.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN8 Clayton Act, Claims

To recover treble damages under § 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 12 et seq., plaintiffs must prove: (1) that defendants violated the antitrust laws; (2) that the alleged violations caused plaintiffs to suffer some injury to their "business or property;" and (3) that the extent of this injury can be quantified with requisite precision.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

HN9 Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

In an antitrust action, proof of consciously parallel business behavior is circumstantial evidence from which an agreement, tacit or express, can be inferred; however, the evidence must give rise to more than speculation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Certification of Classes

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN10 Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

The impact element of an antitrust cause of action is the key to class determination.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN11 Class Actions, Prerequisites for Class Action

The typicality factor requires that the claims of the representative parties be typical of the class claims. The requirement of typicality is satisfied where the interests of the named parties arise from the same course of conduct that gave rise to the claims of the class they seek to represent, and are based on the same legal or remedial theory. Typicality will not be destroyed by factual variations.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Parties > Real Party in Interest > Required Representation

HN12 [blue document icon] Class Actions, Prerequisites for Class Action

The adequacy requirement actually consists of two inquiries. First, the representative must not possess interests that are antagonistic to the interests of the class. Second, plaintiffs must be represented by counsel of sufficient diligence and competence to fully litigate the claim.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Predominance

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN13 [blue document icon] Prerequisites for Class Action, Predominance

In order to determine whether questions of law and fact common to the class predominate, it is necessary to examine the nature of the proof required at trial.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Judicial Discretion

HN14 [blue document icon] Class Actions, Prerequisites for Class Action

The determination of whether a class action is superior to individual actions is discretionary and is primarily determined by considering whether the class action is superior to, and not just as good as, other available methods of handling the controversy.

Counsel: For STATE OF FLORIDA, ex rel., plaintiff: Parker D. Thomson, Steven W. Davis, Thomson, Muraro, Razook & Hart, P.A., Miami, FL USA. R. Scott Palmer, Attorney General's Office, Economic Crimes, Tallahassee, FL.

For ROBERT A. BUTTERWORTH, for itself and as Parents Patriae for all natural persons residing in the State of Florida, plaintiff: Jerome W. Hoffman, Attorney General's Office, Corrections Litigation Branch, Tallahassee, FL USA. William H. Garvin, III, Fonvielle & Hinkle, Tallahassee, FL USA. R. Scott Palmer (See above).

For GLORIA C. RUNKLES, on behalf of herself and all others similarly situated, plaintiff: S. Perry Penland, Sr., Law Office of S. Perry Penland, Sr., Jacksonville, FL USA. Stuart D. Wechsler, Wechsler, Harwood, Halebian & Feffer LLP, New York, NY.

For SUE DOWNEY, individually and on behalf of all others similarly situated, MICHAEL L. GOLDBERG, individually and on behalf of all others similarly situated, plaintiffs: Douglas D. Chunn, Smith, Hulsey & Busey, Jacksonville, FL USA. Fred T. Isquith, Wolf, Haldenstein, Adler, Freeman & Herz, New York, NY USA. Steve W. Berman, George W. Sampson, Hagens & Berman, Seattle, WA. Leonard B. Simon, Dennis Stewart, Milberg, Weiss, Bershad, Hynes & Lerach, San Diego, CA. Jonathan W. Cuneo, The Cuneo Law Group, Washington, DC. C. Oliver Burt, III, Burt & Pucillo, West Palm Beach, FL.

For DIANA LEE, individually and on behalf of all others similarly situated, PAMELA CLARKE KEOGH, individually and on behalf of all others similarly situated, JOSETTA SMITH, individually and on behalf of all others similarly situated, plaintiffs: Douglas D. Chunn (See above), Fred T. Isquith (See above), Steve W. Berman (See above), Leonard B. Simon (See above), Jonathan W. Cuneo (See above), C. Oliver Burt, III (See above).

For MARY E. NEU, on behalf of herself and all others similarly situated, plaintiff: Harold E. Kohn, Robert J. LaRocca, Michael J. Boni, Kohn, Swift & Graf, P.C., Philadelphia, PA USA. Douglas D. Chunn (See above), Steven A. Asher, Barrack, Rodos & Bacine, Philadelphia, PA.

For SUSAN DOWNEY, individually, and on behalf of all others similarly situated, plaintiff: Steve W. Berman (See above).

For JOHN MORRIS, on behalf of himself and all others similarly situated, plaintiff: Steve W. Berman (See above), George W. Sampson (See above), Dennis Stewart (See above).

For JOHNSON & JOHNSON VISION PRODUCTS, INC., defendant: James Whitelaw Middleton, Joseph Stroud, Jr., Rogers, Towers, Bailey, Jones & Gay, Jacksonville, FL USA. Richard A. Ripley, Margaret M. Zwisler, Howrey & Simon, Washington, DC USA. Harry Osborne Thomas, Katz, Kutter, Haigler, Alderman, Marks, Bryant & Yon, P.A., Tallahassee, FL USA. James L. Magee, Graham & Dunn, Seattle, WA.

For BAUSCH & LOMB, INC., defendant: Thomas F. Cullen, Jr., Jones, Day, Reavis & Pogue, Washington, DC. Mark M. Hough, Marilee C. Erickson, Reed McClure, Seattle, WA. Harry R. Detwiler, Jr., Alford & Detwiler, Tallahassee, FL.

For AMERICAN OPTOMETRIC ASSOCIATION, LEE RIGEL, WILLIAM DAVID SULLINS, JR., L. EDWARD ELLIOTT, JOHN A. GAZAWAY, RICHARD HOPPING, EARL L. HUNTER, JAMES C. LEADINGHAM, TIMOTHY Q. KIME, defendants: Edward C. Larose, Trenam, Kemker, Scharf, Barkin, Frye, O'Neill & Mullis, P.A., Tampa, FL USA. Edward A. Groobert, D. Biard MacGuineas, Jr., Dykema Gossett, P.L.L.C., Washington, DC.

For STANLEY YAMANE, defendant: Geoffrey Bogart Schwartz, Huey, Guilday & Tucker, P.A., Tallahassee, FL USA. Edward C. Larose (See above).

For CIBA VISION, INC., defendant: James Edgar Cobb, Peek & Cobb, P.A., Jacksonville, FL USA. Chris S. Coutroulis, Carlton, Fields, Ward, Emmanuel, Smith & Cutler, P.A., Tampa, FL USA. Randolph S. Sherman, Richard A. DeSevo, Kaye, Scholer, Fierman, Hays & Handler, New York, NY.

For LENS EXPRESS, movant: Robert S. Hackleman, Gunster, Yoakley & Stewart, P.A., Ft. Lauderdale, FL USA.

For GENERAL LENS CORP., a Florida corporation, movant: James L. Schmidt, II, Law Office of James L. Schmidt, II, Longwood, FL.

For FASTLENS, INC., movant: Alan P. Rosefield, Law Office of Alan P. Rosefield, New York, NY.

For 25 STATES, Acting Chief Deputy Attorney General of Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, and as Parrens Patriae (re: 96-6200-CV, Eastern District of New York), movant: James A. Donahue, III, Attorney General's Office, Harrisburg, PA. Robert L. Hubbard, Attorney General's Office, New York, NY.

Judges: HARVEY E. SCHLESINGER, United States District Judge

Opinion by: HARVEY E. SCHLESINGER

Opinion

---

[*526] ORDER

Before the Court is Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Class Plaintiffs' Consolidated Complaint for Failure to State a Claim (Doc. No. 28) and supporting memorandum (Doc. No. 29), to which Plaintiffs filed a response (Doc. [*527]

No. 35), and Defendants were granted leave to refile a reply to Plaintiffs' response (Doc. No. 43). Defendants' Motion for Leave to File Supplemental Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs' Complaint (Doc. No. 97), which Plaintiffs oppose (Doc. No. 100), is DENIED, as the Court can decide Defendants' motion on the record before it.

Also before the Court is Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Motion)(Doc. No. 32) and supporting memorandum (Memorandum) (Doc. No. 33), to which Defendants filed a memorandum in opposition (Response)(Doc. No. 39) and Plaintiffs filed a reply memorandum (Reply)(Doc. No. 44). The Court held a hearing on both motions, including hearing extensive testimony [**2] from both parties' experts on the motion for class certification. See Transcript of Hearing on Motions, Doc. Nos. 57-58.

BACKGROUND

Plaintiffs filed their Consolidated Complaint (Complaint) alleging that Defendants Johnson & Johnson Vision Products, Inc. (Vistakon), Bausch & Lomb, Inc. (B&L) and CIBA Vision Corporation (CIBA), the largest manufacturers of contact lenses in the United States, have unlawfully conspired among themselves and with two trade organizations <sup>1</sup> [**3] for eye care practitioners (ECPs), to restrict the supply of replacement contact lenses <sup>2</sup> to alternative channels of distribution. <sup>3</sup> Plaintiffs are contact lens wearers from across the country who have purchased replacement lenses from ECPs at "supracompetitive" prices, who have marked-up prices on replacement lenses as much as 100%. Complaint at P 1; Memorandum at 2.

MOTION TO DISMISS

Defendants move for dismissal on the grounds that Plaintiffs' theory of injury does not provide them antitrust standing under the principles of Associated General Contractors of California, Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 (1983). After reviewing the papers submitted and the relevant law, the Court finds that Defendants' motion to dismiss (Doc. No. 28) is due to be and is DENIED. The Court has carefully considered the arguments propounded by Defendants in the related cases in this action, and has determined that Plaintiffs are not barred from bringing this action. See Doc. No. 57 in Case No. 94-1215-Civ-J-20 [**4] and Doc. No. 79 in Case No. 94-619-Civ-J-20. Accordingly, the Court will consider Plaintiffs' motion to certify this case as a class action under Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b) (3).

MOTION FOR CLASS CERTIFICATION

Plaintiffs seek to certify a putative class of replacement contact lens purchasers, defined as follows:

All purchasers of Vistakon, B&L and CIBA replacement contact lenses from eye care practitioners during the period 1988 to the present, excluding consumers in Florida represented by the Florida Attorney General in State of Florida v. Johnson & Johnson Vision Products, et al., Case No. 94-619-Civ-J-20.

Motion at [unnumbered] 1. Plaintiffs request that this action proceed as a class action, pursuant to Rules 23(a) and 23(b)(3) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

<sup>1</sup> The two trade organizations are the American Optometric Association (AOA) and the Contact Lens and Anterior Segment Society, Inc. (CLASS). See Complaint at PP 1, 37(d). Only the AOA was made a party to this action, as CLASS filed a suggestion of bankruptcy shortly after this action was filed. Complaint at P 20; Memorandum at n.2.

<sup>2</sup> The lenses that are the subject of this lawsuit are disposable contact lenses which are designed to be worn for a short period of time, ordinarily one to two weeks, and then thrown away and replaced with an identical fresh pair of lenses. Disposable lenses are usually sold in multipaks of six pairs of lenses. Complaint at P 4; Memorandum at 3.

<sup>3</sup> Pharmacies and mail order businesses.

Rule 23, Fed.R.Civ.P., sets forth the requirements for certifying and maintaining a class action. The rule provides, in pertinent part:

HN1[<sup>1</sup>] (a) Prerequisites to a Class Action. One or more members of a class may sue ... as representative parties on behalf of all only if (1) the class is so numerous that [*528] joinder of all members is impracticable, (2) there are questions of law or fact [*5] common to the class, (3) the claims or defenses of the representative parties are typical of the claims or defenses of the class, and (4) the representative parties will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class.

(b) Class Actions Maintainable. An action may be maintained as a class action if the prerequisites of subdivision (a) are satisfied, and in addition:

(3) the Court finds that the questions of law or fact common to the members of the class predominate over any questions affecting only individual members, and that a class action is superior over any other available method for the fair and efficient adjudication of the controversy. The matters pertinent to the findings include: (A) the interest of the members of the class in individually controlling the prosecution or defense of separate actions; (B) the extent and nature of any litigation concerning the controversy already commenced by or against members of the class; (C) the desirability or undesirability of concentrating the litigation of the claims in the particular forum; (D) the difficulties likely to be encountered in the management of a class action.

Fed.R.Civ.P. 23(a), (b)(3). Thus, HN2[<sup>1</sup>] "in [*6] order to maintain a suit as a class action, plaintiffs must show that the four prerequisites of Rule 23(a) have been met and that one of the provisions of Rule 23(b) applies." In re Amerifirst Securities Litigation, 139 F.R.D. 423, 427 (S.D.Fla. 1991) (citing Kirkpatrick v. J.C. Bradford & Co., 827 F.2d 718, 721 n.2 (11th Cir. 1987), cert. denied, 485 U.S. 959, 108 S. Ct. 1220, 99 L. Ed. 2d 421 (1988)). The Court must further find that the class representative is a member of the class and that the class has been precisely defined. East Texas Motor Freight System, Inc. v. Rodriguez, 431 U.S. 395, 403, 52 L. Ed. 2d 453, 97 S. Ct. 1891 (1977).

HN3[<sup>1</sup>] Those seeking to certify their suit as a class action bear the burden of establishing the specific prerequisites of Rule 23. Gilchrist v. Bolger, 733 F.2d 1551, 1556 (11th Cir. 1984). In this sense, "[a] Court can only certify a class 'after rigorous analysis, that the prerequisites of Rule 23(a) have been satisfied.'" Kaser v. Swann, 141 F.R.D. 337, 339 (M.D.Fla. 1991) (quoting General Telephone Co. of Southwest v. Falcon, 457 U.S. 147, 161, 72 L. Ed. 2d 740, 102 S. Ct. 2364 (1982)). In In re Amerifirst, the court set forth the inquiry as follows: [*7]

HN4[<sup>1</sup>] in determining whether the named plaintiffs have met their burden, the court's inquiry is limited to whether the requirements of Rule 23 have been satisfied; therefore, the court shall not consider the merits of the plaintiff's claims. Eisen v. Carlisle & Jacqueline, 417 U.S. 156, 177-78, 94 S. Ct. 2140, 2152, 40 L. Ed. 2d 732, 748 (1974); Kirkpatrick, 827 F.2d at 722; Love v. Turlington, 733 F.2d 1562, 1564 (11th Cir. 1984). However, this principle should not be invoked so rigidly so as to artificially limit a trial court's examination of the factors necessary to make a reasoned determination of whether Rule 23 has been satisfied. Love v. Turlington, 733 F.2d at 1564. Accordingly, a court may look beyond the pleadings in determining whether a motion for class certification should be granted. General Telephone Co. of Southwest v. Falcon, 457 U.S. 147, 160, 102 S. Ct. 2364, 2372, 72 L. Ed. 2d 740, 752 (1982); Kirkpatrick, 827 F.2d at 722.

In re Amerifirst, 139 F.R.D. at 427.

Finally, the Local Rules of the Middle District of Florida set forth other distinct requirements. Local Rule 4.04(a) mandates that the Complaint contain "detailed allegations [*8] of fact showing the existence of the several prerequisites to a class action as enumerated in Rule 23(a) and (b), Fed. R. Civ. P." Additionally, Rule 4.04(b) provides, in pertinent part, that "if a determination is sought that the action be maintained under Rule 23(b)(3), the motion shall also suggest the means of providing, and defraying the cost of, the notice required by Rule 23(c)(2), Fed. R. Civ. P."

A. Rule 23(a) Requirements

1. Numerosity

HN5 The first prong of Rule 23(a) mandates that the class be so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable. In [*529] order to satisfy this requirement, the plaintiffs generally must proffer some evidence or reasonable estimate of the number of members comprising the purported class. Zeidman v. J. Ray McDermott & Co., Inc., 651 F.2d 1030, 1038 (5th Cir. 1981).<sup>4</sup> The Court finds that Plaintiffs have satisfied their burden with respect to this requirement.

[**9] Numerosity does not appear to be an issue in this case. Plaintiffs allege the class includes millions of soft contact lens wearers located throughout the United States. Based on a total market size of approximately twenty million wearers of soft contact lenses in the country, and that ECPs enjoy a 90% or greater share of the replacement lens market, Plaintiffs estimate the class to consist of between 15,000,000 and 18,000,000 members. Memorandum at 7 and Exhibit B; Complaint at P 36. Joinder of all class members clearly would be impracticable. See e.g., In re Domestic Air Transportation Antitrust Litigation, 137 F.R.D. 677 (N.D. Ga. 1991)(certifying class of approximately 12.5 million airline ticket purchasers). Defendant does not contend that Plaintiffs have not met the numerosity requirement.

2. Common Questions of Law or Fact and the Predominance of these Questions Over Individual Questions

HN6 The second factor under 23(a) requires that there be questions of law or fact common to the class. This provision does not require a complete identity of legal claims. Johnson v. American Credit Co. of Georgia, 581 F.2d 526, 532 (5th Cir. 1978). "Rather the requirement is usually [**10] satisfied if all class members are in a 'substantially identical factual situation' and the 'questions of law raised by the plaintiff are applicable to each class member.'" In re Amerifirst, 139 F.R.D. at 428 (quoting, Weiss v. York Hospital, 745 F.2d 786, 809 (3rd Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 470 U.S. 1060, 84 L. Ed. 2d 836, 105 S. Ct. 1777 (1985)). Commonality is satisfied when there is "at least one issue whose resolution will affect all or a significant number of the putative class members." Stewart v. Winter, 669 F.2d 328, 335 (5th Cir. 1982).

The Court will consider the Rule 23(a)(2)(commonality) and Rule 23(b)(3)(predominance) requirements together in this opinion, because the question of whether there are common issues is closely related to the question of whether these common issues predominate. See Heastie v. Community Bank of Greater Peoria, 125 F.R.D. 669, 674 (N.D.Ill. 1989).

Plaintiffs contend the following questions of law and fact are common to the class:

- (1) Whether Defendants violated Section 1 of the Sherman Act;
- (2) The existence, duration, and illegality of the alleged combination, contract, and/or conspiracy;
- (3) Whether Defendants [**11] are or were members of, or participants in, the alleged combination, contract, and/or conspiracy;
- (4) The fact of injury, including the impact and extent of injury sustained by class members; and
- (5) Whether class members are entitled to injunctive relief.

Memorandum at 8. Plaintiffs contend that because every class members purchased Vistakon, B&L or CIBA replacement lenses from an eye care practitioner, who Plaintiffs contend are the "intended beneficiaries of the contract to eliminate competition so as to keep prices high," each class member can prove the antitrust violation with evidence of the same conspiracy. Thus, the argument goes, common issues of law and fact exist. Id. at 8-9.

<sup>4</sup> All cases decided by the former Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals prior to the close of business on September 30, 1981, are binding on the Eleventh Circuit and on all district courts within the Eleventh Circuit. See Bonner v. City of Prichard, 661 F.2d 1206, 1207 (11th Cir. 1981) (en banc).

Defendants do not contend that common questions of law and fact are not presented in this case. Rather, Defendants focus the gist of their argument on the predominance requirement, contending that the "unique facts" establish that common questions do not predominate over individual questions with respect to any of essential elements of Plaintiffs' antitrust action, but, in particular, the impact requirement. Response at 8. [*530] Defendants cite the Court to two recent state court decisions<sup>5</sup> [*512] in which the courts denied class certification to putative classes of contact lens consumers.

In Harbin, plaintiffs alleged that Vistakon and B&L, two of the defendants in this case, conspired with the AOA to preclude the distribution of defendants' contact lenses through alternative suppliers, in violation of state antitrust law. Plaintiffs sought to certify a class of contact lens purchasers of defendants' lenses during a specified period. The Alabama court held a one-day evidentiary hearing in which the two witnesses testified for the defendants. Without discussing its reasoning in any detail, the court found that plaintiffs did not meet the predominance requirement because:

individual questions of fact predominate over questions of fact common to members of the [*513] alleged class, because, among other reasons, to establish the requisite fact of injury (or "impact") as well as measurement of damages, each and every purchaser of defendants' contact lenses have to be questioned to ascertain that he or she had (a) purchased contact lenses from an Alabamian ECP or retail optical chain, (b) during the applicable time, (3) in some certain amount, and (d) at a certain price.

Id. at 2-3. Lethbridge involved a similar action in California in which the court denied certification because "the liability issue of antitrust injury (impact), as well as the issue of damages cannot be established through common proof... [as] plaintiff [would] have to establish that all class members paid higher prices as a result of the conspiracy." Id. at 2. Since it determined that there are "many different chains of causation affecting individual pricing and purchasing decisions" which would require individualized inquiry, the Court found that class certification was inappropriate.

HN7 While it is not proper to reach the merits of a claim when determining class certification, Love, 733 F.2d at 1564, in making its predominance determination the Court [*514] must determine whether Plaintiffs have made a threshold showing that the proof they intend to offer at trial of the alleged conspiracy will be sufficiently generalized in nature to warrant certification of the class. 137 F.R.D. at 685. The substantive law underlying Plaintiffs' claim for alleged antitrust violation is § 4 of the Clayton Act. HN8 To recover treble damages under this section, Plaintiffs must prove: "(1) that defendants violated the antitrust laws; (2) that the alleged violations caused plaintiffs to suffer some injury to their 'business or property'; and (3) that the extent of this injury can be quantified with requisite precision." Id. at 685 (citation omitted).

Defendants first assert that Plaintiffs' claim is a "vertical conspiracy" between the AOA and each Defendant which will necessarily require separate inquiry with respect to each manufacturer to determine whether the evidence as to that defendant establishes that its policy of not selling to alternative suppliers was the product of the alleged coercive activities of the AOA and CLASS rather than unilateral decision-making. Defendants cite the Court to cases alleging vertical conspiracies in which courts have [*515] denied certification on the ground that proof of illegal conduct may not be accomplished by generalized means. See Response at n.13. Defendants also contend individual issues predominate concerning Plaintiffs' proof of antitrust injury or "impact" to class members. According to Defendants, Plaintiffs have failed to come forward with any viable theory employing generalized proof that "absent the alleged boycott, all eye care practitioners 'would have to have lowered their prices' to each and every absent class member." Response at 12 (emphasis in original).

Plaintiffs reply to Defendants' first argument that they are not alleging a series of separate, unrelated conspiracies, but a "plan of action" between the three manufacturers and the AOA and CLASS to eliminate alternative channels of distribution, a so-called "hub and spoke" conspiracy which involves only a discrete handful of defendants, unlike in the cases cited by Defendants. Reply at [*531] 4-8. Further, Plaintiffs respond Defendants have misstated the impact element of their claim, which Plaintiffs contend is "conceptually simple:" that "Defendants' conspiracy to eliminate competition to eye care practitioners maintained [**16] artificially inflated prices for replacement contact lenses nationwide." Reply at [unnumbered] 1-2. According to Plaintiffs, the conspiracy (1) eliminated competition to eye care practitioners from alternative channels of distribution, (2) deprived consumers of alternative sources for their purchases of replacement lenses, and (3) insulated eye care practitioners from having to price replacement lenses competitively. Plaintiffs contend that "whether eye care practitioners, having benefited for years from the conspiracy, might now profess that they would not have lowered their prices if faced with competition is irrelevant to the legitimate question with respect to impact -- whether the price that each class member actually paid was supracompetitive." Reply at 3 (emphasis in original).

<sup>5</sup> Harbin v. Johnson & Johnson Vision Products, Inc., Case No. CV94-002872 (Ala. Cir. Ct., Sept. 12, 1995) and Lethbridge v. Johnson & Johnson Vision Products, Inc., et al., Case No. BC113271 (Cal. Super. Ct., June 26, 1996).

The Court rejects both of Defendants' arguments. As to the first, that this is a vertical conspiracy which is not susceptible to common proof, the Court is satisfied that Plaintiffs have made a threshold showing that the proof they intend to offer at trial of the alleged conspiracy will be sufficiently generalized in nature to warrant certification of the class. In this case, the alleged conspiracy [**17] involves parallel agreements reached between the leading trade associations and the three largest contact lens manufacturers. Plaintiffs have produced evidence from which a reasonable juror could infer there was agreement to limit the supply of replacement lenses. HN9 [ ] "Proof of consciously parallel business behavior is circumstantial evidence from which an agreement, tacit or express, can be inferred. . . . however the evidence must give rise to more than speculation." Alvord-Polk, Inc. v. F. Schumacher & Co., 37 F.3d 996, 1013 \(3rd Cir. 1994\)(noting that "a particularly detailed memorandum of a telephone call can give rise to a reasonable inference of agreement"), cert. denied, 131 L. Ed. 2d 556, 115 S. Ct. 1691 (1995). Again, the Court need not determine at this juncture whether Plaintiffs ultimately will prevail on the merits of their claims; that is for the jury to decide.

Likewise, Defendants' argument that Plaintiffs cannot prove impact using generalized proof is without merit.<sup>6</sup> The Court agrees that HN10 [ ] the impact element of an antitrust cause of action is the key to class determination Alabama v. Blue Bird Body Co., 573 F.2d 309, 320 \(5th Cir. 1978\). In Blue Bird, [**18] the Fifth Circuit reversed the trial court's national certification of a class of government entities alleging a conspiracy among school bus body manufacturers and distributors. The defendants had argued that because school buses were unique products made to customer specifications and sold through various pricing procedures, plaintiffs could not present common proof of a nationwide conspiracy. In making its ruling, however, the court did not deny certification because the industry was fragmented and heterogeneous, as defendants argued. Rather, the court found that plaintiffs had failed to show what type of proof was available on their claims; therefore, it was unable to make a determination. 573 F.2d at 322-23. In this case, Plaintiffs have come forward with a considerable amount of evidence<sup>7</sup> concerning the alleged antitrust violation. The Court finds that Plaintiffs have demonstrated at least a "colorable method" of proving impact at trial. See generally 7B C. Wright, A. Miller, & M. Kane, Federal Practice and Procedure § 1781 (1986); Solow Declaration; Solow testimony, Doc. No. 58. That Defendants' expert disagrees with the methodology and conclusions propounded [**19] by Dr. Solow is not reason to deny class certification. Whether or not plaintiffs will be successful in persuading the jury that there has been a common impact remains to be seen. For purposes of this motion, however, the Court finds Plaintiffs' allegations and the methodology they will advance to prove their claims [*532] are sufficient to satisfy Rule 23. See also In re Domestic Air Transportation, 137 F.R.D. at 687-88 (finding that for purposes of class certification, air passenger service is a standardized product, in spite of the many pricing alternatives offered by defendants, as there is an order in those pricing alternatives). Accordingly, the Court concludes that the commonality requirement is met, and that common issues predominate over individual issues.

[**20] 3. Typicality

<sup>6</sup>The cases cited by Defendants, Harbin and Lethbridge, are not controlling, nor are they helpful to the determination in this case. Neither case provides sufficient detail of the particular facts of that case and the evidence presented for the Court to apply their reasoning to the facts of this case.

<sup>7</sup> Some of which has been submitted under seal.

The test for typicality, like commonality, is not demanding. *Shipes v. Trinity Industries, 987 F.2d 311, 316* (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 991, 114 S. Ct. 548, 126 L. Ed. 2d 450 (1993). HN11[] The typicality factor requires that the claims of the representative parties be typical of the class claims. "The Eleventh Circuit has held that the requirement of typicality is satisfied where the interests of the named parties arise from the same course of conduct that gave rise to the claims of the class they seek to represent, and are based on the same legal or remedial theory; furthermore, typicality will not be destroyed by factual variations." *Tapken v. Brown*, \(1992 Transfer Binder\) Fed. Sec. L. Rep. \(CCH\) P 96,805 at 93,175 \(S.D.Fla. 1992\)\(citing, *Kornberg v. Carnival Cruise Lines, Inc.*, 741 F.2d 1332, 1337 \(11th Cir. 1984\), cert. denied, 470 U.S. 1004, 84 L. Ed. 2d 379, 105 S. Ct. 1357 \(1985\)\). See also *Appleyard v. Wallace*, 754 F.2d 955, 958 \(11th Cir. 1985\)\(stating that "a strong similarity of legal theories will satisfy the typicality requirement despite substantial factual differences"\).

In the case at hand, all class members' claims arise [**21] from the same alleged practices of Defendants which gave rise to the named Plaintiffs' claims: that Defendants' conspiracy to restrict channels of distribution of lenses resulted in each plaintiff paying supra-competitive prices for their replacement lenses. Furthermore, the same legal theory is advanced on behalf of each proposed class. Accordingly; the Court finds that the low threshold requirement of typicality is easily met in this case.

4. Adequacy

HN12[] The adequacy requirement actually consists of two inquiries. First, the representative must not possess interests which are antagonistic to the interests of the class. *Kirkpatrick, 827 F.2d at 726*. Second, Plaintiffs must be represented by counsel of sufficient diligence and competence to fully litigate the claim. Id. The Court finds that the adequacy requirement is met in this case. Plaintiffs and the class members for whom they would represent have sufficient identity of claims that Plaintiffs' interests would not be antagonistic to the interests of the class. The Class Plaintiffs each have purchased replacement contact lenses from an eye care practitioner which were manufactured by one of the three Defendant manufacturers. [**22] Each allege they were overcharged for those lenses resulting from the conspiracy to restrict the channels of distribution. It is of no moment that one Plaintiff purchased her lenses from CIBA, and another from Johnson & Johnson. Each named Plaintiff has a common interest in representing all class members, as the alleged conspiracy involves a nationwide plan to elimination competition to ECPs between all three manufacturers and the trade association that represents eye care practitioners. Moreover, Plaintiffs are represented by counsel who appear to be experienced and competent to litigate a complex antitrust class action.

B. Requirements of *Rule 23\(b\)\(3\)*

1. Predominance of Common Issues

Plaintiffs seek certification under 23(b)(3). HN13[] In order to determine whether questions of law and fact common to the class predominate, it is necessary to examine the nature of the proof required at trial. *White v. Deltona Corp., 66 F.R.D. 560, 562 \(S.D.Fla. 1975\)*. As discussed, Plaintiffs have met this requirement.

2. Superiority

HN14[] The determination of whether a class action is superior to individual actions is discretionary and is primarily determined by considering "whether [**23] the class action is superior to, and not just as good as, other available [*533] methods of handling the controversy." *Coleman v. Cannon Oil Co., 141 F.R.D. 516, 529* (M.D.Ala. 1992)(citing *Rutledge v. Electric Hose & Rubber Co., 511 F.2d 668 \(9th Cir. 1975\)*). The Court finds that in cases such as this one, in which there exist a large number of small or medium-sized claims against Defendants which would make individual litigation economically infeasible, a class action is a superior method of litigation. See, e.g., In *Re Folding Carton Antitrust Litigation, 75 F.R.D. 727, 732 \(N.D.Ill. 1977\); Brady v. LAC, Inc., 72 F.R.D. 22, 28 \(S.D.N.Y. 1976\)*.

As the Court concludes that all the requirements for class certification have been met, certification under 23(b)(3) is appropriate.

Finally, the Court has received correspondence concerning potential settlement by one of the Defendants in this case, and concerns on the part of another Defendant that such information would lead the Court to consider the potential settlement when ruling on Plaintiffs' motion for class certification. The Clerk is directed to docket the two letters so that they remain part of the record.

In reaching [**24] its decision, the Court was in no way influenced one way or the other by the fact there may be a potential settlement between Plaintiffs and one of the Defendants only if a class is certified. As outlined herein, the Court independently has determined this case meets the requirements for class certification.

CONCLUSION

Accordingly, it is ORDERED AND ADJUDGED:

- (1) Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Class Plaintiffs' Consolidated Complaint for Failure to State a Claim (Doc. No. 28) is DENIED;
- (2) Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Doc. No. 32) is GRANTED; in that

A class is certified, pursuant to Rule 23\(b\)\(3\), defined as follows:

All purchasers of Vistakon, B&L and CIBA replacement contact lenses from eye care practitioners during the period 1988 to the present, excluding consumers in Florida represented by the Florida Attorney General in State of Florida v. Johnson & Johnson Vision Products, et al., Case No. 94-619-Civ-J-20; and

- (3) The Clerk is directed to docket the correspondence received from Defendants CIBA and Johnson & Johnson.

DONE AND ENTERED at Jacksonville, Florida, this 5th day September, 1996.

HARVEY [**25] E. SCHLESINGER

United States District Judge

---

End of Document

Wilson v. Mobil Oil Corp.

United States District Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana

September 9, 1996, Decided ; September 9, 1996, FILED; September 10, 1996, ENTERED

CIVIL ACTION NO. 95-4174 SECTION "R"

Reporter

940 F. Supp. 944 *; 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13339 **; 1996-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,610

WES WILSON, ET AL. VERSUS MOBIL OIL CORP., ET AL.

Disposition: [**1] Defendants' motion to dismiss plaintiffs' tying claims under the Sherman Act and the Louisiana antitrust laws denied. Motion granted as to plaintiffs' claims for per se illegal pricefixing, tying under Section 3 of the Clayton Act, violations of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act and fraud. Fraud claim against the SpeeDee defendants dismissed without prejudice.

Core Terms

---

franchise, prices, products, franchisees, costs, tied product, market power, franchise agreement, switching, plaintiffs', supplier, tying arrangement, tie-in, plaintiff's claim, aftermarket, allegations, lubricant, market share, defendants', lifecycle, financial services, Sherman Act, price-fixing, Oil, tying product, consumers, fail to state a claim, per se rule, disclosure, franchisor

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > Fraud Claims

HN1 [down arrow] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A federal court must deny a motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) unless the complaint fails to state any set of facts upon which relief could be granted. All well-pleaded facts in the complaint are accepted as true and viewed in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. In deciding a motion to dismiss, the court's inquiry is limited to the facts stated in the complaint and documents either attached to or incorporated into the complaint. The court treats a defendant's Fed. R. Civ. P. 9\(b\) motion to dismiss for failure to plead fraud with particularity under the same standard as the Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN2 [down arrow] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

A tying arrangement is an agreement by a party to sell one product but only on condition that the buyer also purchase a different (or tied) product, or at least agrees that he will not purchase that product from any other supplier. An agreement requiring the buyer to purchase the tied product from some third party can also amount to a tying arrangement, if the tying seller receives some economic benefit or has some economic interest in the third party's sales of the tied product.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Clayton Act

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Causes of Action > Restraints of Trade

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Trademark Law > Conveyances > Franchises

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Per Se Rule

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

Trademark Law > Conveyances > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Licenses > Licensable Subject Matter > Tying Arrangements

HN3 Tying Arrangements, Clayton Act

Not every tying arrangement is illegal. A tying arrangement violates § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, if the seller has "appreciable economic power" in the tying product market, and the arrangement affects a substantial volume of commerce in the tied product market. Under Fifth Circuit authority, plaintiffs may establish that a tying arrangement is illegal per se under the antitrust laws by demonstrating that the defendant had sufficient control over the tying market to have a likely anticompetitive affect on the tied product market. Alternatively, plaintiff may prevail by establishing that the arrangement is invalid under the rule of reason, under which plaintiff must allege an actual adverse effect on competition in the tied product market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN4 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

Invocation of the per se rule requires significant market power in the tying market. Market power is generally measured by market share, but it can be demonstrated by direct evidence that defendants raised prices and drove out competition in the tied product market. When market share is offered as the measure of market power, some courts have used 30 percent as a benchmark below which market share is insufficient to establish sufficient market power to invoke the per se rule.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

**HN5** Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

To state a claim under the rule of reason, the plaintiffs must allege that the tying arrangement had an actual adverse affect on competition in the tied product market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Clayton Act

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Trademark Law > Conveyances > Franchises

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

**HN6** Tying Arrangements, Clayton Act

Section 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 14, requires both the tying and tied products to be goods.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Price Fixing

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Price Fixing

**HN7** Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

The per se rule against price-fixing applies to agreements by horizontal competitors to fix prices and to vertical agreements to fix resale prices.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Federal Trade Commission Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > US Federal Trade Commission Actions > General Overview

**HN8** Tying Arrangements, Clayton Act

Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 45, does not provide a private right of action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

**HN9** [down] Private Actions, Standing

Whether a duty exists is a question of law.

Governments > Fiduciaries

Torts > Business Torts > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

**HN10** [down] Governments, Fiduciaries

Absent a duty to disclose, silence with respect to the details of a business transaction does not constitute fraud. A duty to disclose does not arise absent special circumstances, such as a fiduciary or confidential relationship between the parties.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

**HN11** [down] Pleadings, Heightened Pleading Requirements

Federal R. Civ. P. 9(b) requires allegations of the particulars of time, place and contents of the false representations, as well as the identity of the person making the misrepresentation and what he obtained thereby.

Counsel: For WES WILSON, plaintiff: James Frederick Willeford, James F. Willeford, Attorney at Law, New Orleans, LA.

For JIMMY L ELLIOT, plaintiff: James Frederick Willeford, (See above).

For JIMMY AND DAUGHTERS, INC., plaintiff: James Frederick Willeford, (See above).

For MILTON I RIZAN dba Tript Enterprises, Inc., plaintiff: James Frederick Willeford, (See above).

For AXTELL ENTERPRISES, INC., plaintiff: James Frederick Willeford, (See above).

For RICHARD AXTELL, plaintiff: James Frederick Willeford, (See above).

For JOHN SPENCER, and all others similarly situated, plaintiff: James Frederick Willeford, (See above).

For SUSAN SPENCER, plaintiff: James Frederick Willeford, (See above).

For JOHN W. SPENCER INTERESTS, INC., plaintiff: James Frederick Willeford, (See above).

For [**2] GEORGE GERHART, plaintiff: James Frederick Willeford, (See above).

For SAGE SERVICES INC, plaintiff: James Frederick Willeford, (See above).

For TRIPT ENTERPRISES, INC., plaintiff: James Frederick Willeford, (See above).

For MOBIL OIL CORP, defendant: Charles Kirk Reasonover, Deutsch, Kerrigan & Stiles, New Orleans, LA. Andrew J. Kilcarr, Maureen O'Bryon, William L. Monts, III, Lowell R. Stern, Hogan & Hartson, Washington, DC.

For SPEEDEE OIL CHANGE SYSTEMS, INC., defendant: Steven W. Copley, Ernest Enrique Svenson, Gordon, Arata, et al, New Orleans, LA. Thomas E. O'Keefe, SpeeDee Oil Change & Tune-Up General Counsel, Madisonville, LA.

For G.C. & K.B. INVESTMENTS, INC., defendant: Steven W. Copley, (See above). Ernest Enrique Svenson, (See above). Thomas E. O'Keefe, (See above).

Judges: SARAH S. VANCE, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

Opinion by: SARAH S. VANCE

Opinion

---

[*946] ORDER AND REASONS

This matter is before the Court on the motions to dismiss of defendants, Mobil Oil Corporation ("Mobil"), SpeeDee Oil Change Systems, Inc. ("SpeeDee"), and G.C. & K.B. Investments, Inc. (SpeeDee and G.C. & K.B. Investments, Inc. will be collectively referred to as the "SpeeDee defendants"). [**3] The Court heard oral argument on the motions. For the reasons stated below, defendants' motions are granted in part and denied in part.

I. BACKGROUND

This is an action for violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act <sup>1</sup>, Section 3 of the Clayton Act <sup>2</sup>, and Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act <sup>3</sup> brought by nine current or former SpeeDee franchisees. <sup>4</sup> Plaintiffs also sue under the Louisiana antitrust laws <sup>5</sup> and for fraud under Louisiana Civil Code article 1953. Plaintiffs alleged that defendants have [*947] engaged in illegal tying by requiring that they purchase motor oil lubricant products, equipment and financial services from Mobil in order to become and remain SpeeDee franchisees. In addition, they claim that defendants have conspired illegally to fix the price of Mobil's products. Plaintiffs also claim that defendants defrauded them by failing to disclose the nature of the financial and other arrangements between them. Although plaintiffs argue in their brief that they have asserted a monopolization claim under Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, there are no such allegations in their first amended and restated complaint, and therefore no such claim [**4] has been stated.

The complaint in this action contains allegations that are at times vague, confusing and contradictory. Nevertheless, the Court will attempt to recount the factual background of this dispute as it relates to the pending motions.

The SpeeDee defendants sell business format franchises to operate quick car-care service outlets under SpeeDee trademarks and service marks. The outlets provide goods and services for oil change, tune-ups, transmission services, and other car-care needs. Compl. at PP 25-27, 30. Plaintiffs are present or former SpeeDee franchisees located in Louisiana, Mississippi, Texas and Alabama. Plaintiffs allege that SpeeDee ranks fourth [**5] or fifth in the "national fast lube" market. Id. at PP 15, 35.

Between 1987 and 1989, the SpeeDee defendants contracted with Castrol Oil Company to be the provider of lubricant products to the SpeeDee franchise system. Id. at P 37. SpeeDee allegedly had the right to require

---

<sup>1</sup> 15 U.S.C. § 1.

<sup>2</sup> 15 U.S.C. § 14.

<sup>3</sup> 15 U.S.C. § 45.

<sup>4</sup> Wes Wilson; Jimmy L. Elliott; Jimmy and Daughters, Inc.; Milton Rizan, Jr.; Tript Enterprises, Inc.; Axel Enterprises, Inc.; John and Susan Spencer; John W. Spencer Interests, Inc.; George Gerhart; and Save Services, Inc.

<sup>5</sup> La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 51:122, et seq..

franchisees to use only approved suppliers. Id. at P 38. The contract between SpeeDee and Castrol was terminated in 1989 when SpeeDee agreed that Mobil would become the exclusive lubricant supplier to all SpeeDee Oil Change & Tune-Up locations. In 1991, SpeeDee and Mobil entered into a 15-year agreement for Mobil to become the exclusive supplier of automotive products at all franchised units in exchange for $ 650,000.00. Id. at P 39. Plaintiffs claim that the $ 650,000.00 was never used for its intended purpose of assisting franchisees with advertising but was instead pocketed by SpeeDee's principals. Id. at PP 40-41, 44. Further, the 1991 agreement secured Mobil against breach by SpeeDee by providing for liquidated damages ranging from $ 1.5 million to $ 3.5 million, secured by the pledge of 40% of SpeeDee's stock. Id. at PP 42-43. Plaintiffs allege that the SpeeDee defendants received [**6] the $ 650,000.00 for tying the sale and continued operations of SpeeDee franchises to the exclusive use of Mobil's products. Id. at P 44. Plaintiffs allege that Mobil and SpeeDee formed an illegal joint venture in which Mobil provided financial backing in exchange for making the SpeeDee franchise network a captive market for its products. Id. at P 68.

It is clear from plaintiffs' complaint that they allege that the use of Mobil as an exclusive supplier was a condition precedent to being sold a franchise. Compl. at P 50. However, it is not clear from the complaint what information was disclosed about the arrangement with Mobil and at what stage of the dealings between the parties the information was provided. Plaintiffs clearly allege that they were not apprised of the extent of the financial arrangements between Mobil and SpeeDee, such as that SpeeDee would have to pay liquidated damages of up to $ 3.75 million secured by the pledge of 40% of SpeeDee's stock if it allowed the franchisees to purchase elsewhere. Further, plaintiffs assert that "all of the franchisees' purchase agreements with Mobil constituted a hidden condition of their SpeeDee franchise agreement and a condition [**7] of their continuing to do business as a SpeeDee franchisee." Compl. at P 51. On the other hand, plaintiffs allege that they had information about the Mobil supply arrangements at least by the time they signed their local franchise agreements because they were required to sign Mobil supply and equipment agreements at the same time as they signed the franchise agreement. Id. at P 50. They also allege that the requirements agreement was "integrated" into SpeeDee's offering circular, but, in their opposition brief, they state that this did not occur until 1991, and then the disclosure was misleading. Id.; Oppos. Memo. at 13. Plaintiffs also allege that neither SpeeDee's FTC disclosure statement, nor the [*948] franchise agreement disclosed that franchisees were required to purchase Mobil's products under ten-or-fifteen year, "take-or-pay" supply contracts requiring the purchase of substantial volumes at undisclosed prices to be set by Mobil without negotiation. Id. at P 46. Plaintiffs claim that certain information about the Mobil arrangement was included in the SpeeDee operating manual, which they did not receive until after they signed the franchise agreement. Id. at P 46.

[**8] Plaintiffs allege that defendants have refused to permit them to purchase automotive supplies and financial services from suppliers other than Mobil, which has resulted in their paying higher prices for these products than were available from other suppliers. Id. at PP 56, 60. Plaintiffs claim that breach of the Mobil agreement would also constitute a breach of the franchise agreement. Plaintiffs allege that defendants foreclosed competing suppliers from selling to the franchise network by threatening them with litigation if they sold their products to SpeeDee's franchisees. Id. at P 65. Plaintiffs further allege that Mobil's products are inferior because Mobil does little advertising, its products lack name recognition, and there are no Mobil stations in their areas. Id. at P 65. As a result, plaintiffs claim that they are at a competitive disadvantage by being forced to purchase the inferior products from Mobil when they would prefer to purchase superior products at better prices elsewhere. Plaintiffs claim to have suffered damages in the form of loss of their investments, good will, profits, and business reputation. Id. at P 80. They claim that there are no legitimate [**9] business justifications for defendants' restrictive practices. Id. at P 75.

Plaintiffs define the relevant product market as the SpeeDee trademarks, trade names and copyrights, or alternatively the market for providing quick automotive oil change, goods and services. Id. at PP 9, 10. Although plaintiffs alleged that the relevant geographic market was local in their complaint, they have retracted this allegation in their opposition brief to assert that the geographic market is nationwide.

Plaintiffs allege that the tying product is SpeeDee's franchise and associated trade and service marks, while the tied products are Mobil lubricants and financial services. Id. at P 12. They allege that SpeeDee has significant market power in the tying product market. Id. at P 13. Plaintiffs allege that defendants exercise sufficient control over the tying product market to have an anticompetitive effect on the tied product market for Mobil lubricant and financial services.

Plaintiffs also allege that defendants committed fraud by failing to disclose the details of the 15-year contract they signed in 1991 in which SpeeDee received $ 650,000.00 in exchange for Mobil's becoming the [**10] exclusive supplier to the SpeeDee franchise system.

Defendants now bring this motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) and for failure to allege fraud with particularity under Fed. R. Civ. P. 9\(b\).

II. DISCUSSION

HN1 A federal court must deny a motion to dismiss under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) unless the complaint fails to state any set of facts upon which relief could be granted. Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-47, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 \(1957\). All well-pleaded facts in the complaint are accepted as true and viewed in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. Truman v. United States, 26 F.3d 592, 594 \(5th Cir. 1994\). In deciding a motion to dismiss, the court's inquiry is limited to the facts stated in the complaint and documents either attached to or incorporated into the complaint. <sup>6</sup> Lovelace v. Software Spectrum, Inc., 78 F.3d 1015, 1017 \(5th Cir. 1996\). The Court will treat defendants' Rule 9\(b\) motion to dismiss for failure to plead fraud with particularity under the same standard as the Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion. Id.

[**11] [*949] A. Tying Claims

HN2 A tying arrangement is "an agreement by a party to sell one product but only on condition that the buyer also purchase a different (or tied) product, or at least agrees that he will not purchase that product from any other supplier." Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Services, Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 461, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 \(1992\) (quoting Northern Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5-6, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514 \(1958\)). An agreement requiring the buyer to purchase the tied product from some third party can also amount to a tying arrangement, if the tying seller receives some economic benefit or has some economic interest in the third party's sales of the tied product. See White v. Rockingham Radiologists, Ltd., 820 F.2d 98, 104 \(4th Cir. 1987\) (no tie-in because hospital had no economic interest in CT scan interpretation market); Roberts v. Elaine Powers Figure Salons, Inc., 708 F.2d 1476 \(9th Cir. 1983\) (favorable loans to franchisor from designated supplier created financial interest). But see Gonzalez v. St. Margaret's House Housing Devel. Fund Corp., 880 F.2d 1514, 1518 \(2d Cir. 1989\) (financial interest [**12] in tied product not required because this requirement was never adopted by Supreme Court); Thompson v. Metropolitan Multi-List, Inc., 934 F.2d 1566, 1579 n. 12 \(11th Cir. 1991\), cert. denied, 506 U.S. 903, 121 L. Ed. 2d 219, 113 S. Ct. 295 \(1992\) (economic interest requirement only applied in and is most needed in franchise cases). Here, plaintiffs' allegations suffice to suggest that SpeeDee had an economic interest in Mobil's sales to the franchisees. Plaintiffs allege that defendants formed a joint venture under which Mobil was to provide financial backing for the development of the franchise system and that SpeeDee's obligations to Mobil, including that its franchisees continue to sell Mobil products exclusively, were secured by liquidated damages and 40% of its stock.

HN3 Not every tying arrangement is illegal. A tying arrangement violates Section 1 of the Sherman Act if the seller has "appreciable economic power" in the tying product market, and the arrangement affects a substantial volume of commerce in the tied product market. Kodak, 504 U.S. at 462. Under Fifth Circuit authority, plaintiffs may establish that a tying arrangement is illegal per se under the antitrust laws by demonstrating that SpeeDee [**13] had sufficient control over the tying market, here allegedly the SpeeDee trademarked franchise for fast lube businesses, to have a likely anticompetitive affect on the tied product market, the sale of lubricant products and related equipment and services to the SpeeDee franchise network. See Breaux Brothers Farms, Inc. v. Teche Sugar Co., Inc., 21 F.3d 83, 86 (5th Cir. 1994). Alternatively, plaintiff may prevail by establishing that the arrangement is invalid under the rule of reason, under which plaintiff must allege an actual adverse effect on competition in the tied product market. Id. at 87.

---

<sup>6</sup> Therefore, the Court will not consider the offering circular that was attached to plaintiffs' opposition brief because it was neither attached to nor incorporated into the complaint. In addition, since none of the documents referred to as attached to the complaint were served on defendants, these documents will likewise not be considered in the Court's decision on this motion.

HN4Invocation of the per se rule requires "significant market power in the tying market." Id. Market power is generally measured by market share, but it can be demonstrated by direct evidence that defendants raised prices and drove out competition in the tied product market. See id. at 87 & 87 n.3 (citing Kodak, 504 U.S. at 477) (reasonable to infer defendant has power to raise prices and drive out competition in aftermarket if plaintiffs provide evidence that defendants did so). When market share is offered as the measure of market power, some courts have used 30% as [**14] a benchmark below which market share is insufficient to establish sufficient market power to invoke the per se rule. See, e.g., Grappone, Inc. v. Subaru of New England, Inc., 858 F.2d 792, 797 (1st Cir. 1988); Will v. Comprehensive Accounting Corp., 776 F.2d 665, 672 (7th Cir. 1985), cert. denied, 475 U.S. 1129, 90 L. Ed. 2d 201, 106 S. Ct. 1659 (1986). This result is based on the Supreme Court's decision in Jefferson Parish Hospital Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 (1984), in which the Court found a 30% market share insufficient to warrant application of the per se rule to a challenged tying arrangement. 466 U.S. at 27. The Fifth Circuit has not specifically endorsed a 30% safe harbor. See Breaux Brothers, 21 F.3d 83, 87 [*950] (discussing but not expressly adopting 30% benchmark).

Defendants challenge plaintiffs' tying claim on the grounds that plaintiffs have failed to allege that the defendants have market power in the tying product market or that the arrangement creates the potential for anticompetitive harm in the tied product market. Defendants assert that a single-brand market power theory is inapplicable here and that, since plaintiffs [**15] admit that SpeeDee is the fourth or fifth largest player in the national fast lube market, it cannot have more than a 25% market share, which is insufficient under Jefferson Parish to invoke the per se rule against tying.

In response, plaintiffs state that this case involves a conspiracy between a business format franchisor, who licenses a bundle of intellectual property rights to a business system, and a supplier to impose "aftermarket" ties on the franchise system for the purchase of 100% of their requirements for equipment, lubricants and financial services for a period of ten years. Plaintiffs claim that these tied products constitute a separate market from the franchise because they are sold separately by other oil companies. Plaintiffs claim that they have alleged that defendants actually exercised market power in the tied product market because they have alleged that Mobil's prices for the tied products are supracompetitive and that defendants have foreclosed access to the aftermarket to competitive suppliers based on coercion and not on competition on the merits. Plaintiffs claim that they had inadequate information to evaluate the Mobil arrangement and they are locked [**16] into the tying product, the SpeeDee franchise, by virtue of high "switching costs" associated with a long-term franchise agreement, in which the franchisees have invested up to $ 1 million, which is subject to a post-term covenant not to compete. Plaintiffs claim that their tie-in allegations pass muster under the United States Supreme Court's decision in Eastman Kodak & Co. v. Image Technical Serv., Inc., supra.

In Kodak, the United States Supreme Court affirmed a reversal of a summary judgment in favor of Kodak. Kodak had been sued for illegal tying and monopolization under the Sherman Act. Kodak manufactured and sold photocopiers and micrographic equipment. It also sold service and replacement parts for its equipment.

The Kodak plaintiffs were independent service organizations ("ISO's"), who had serviced Kodak equipment for lower prices than Kodak until Kodak adopted policies to limit the availability of parts to them and to make it more difficult for them to service Kodak's equipment. As a result, ISO's could not get Kodak parts from reliable sources and they were either forced out of business or lost substantial revenues. The ISO's introduced evidence that some customers [**17] switched to Kodak's service even though they preferred the ISO's service, and that Kodak's prices were higher than the ISO's.

The Kodak plaintiffs alleged that Kodak tied the sale of service of its machines to the sale of its parts. Kodak had less than 25% of the market for the primary equipment, and it argued that, as a matter of law, its lack of market power in the primary equipment market precluded it from having market power in derivative parts and service aftermarkets. Kodak claimed that even if it had a monopoly over the parts market, competition in the equipment market would prevent it from raising parts and service prices to supracompetitive levels because consumers would simply switch to other equipment with lower service costs.

The Supreme Court refused to adopt a substantive legal rule that equipment competition precluded a finding of market power in the derivative aftermarkets because defendants had produced no facts or data indicating that the proposed rule actually reflected market realities. Defendant's argument was based principally on economic theory. The Court exposed the factual assumptions underlying Kodak's proposed rule and found them wanting. First, if higher \*\*18 service prices ineluctably led to a precipitous drop in equipment sales, then one would expect to see Kodak's sales drop when service prices rose. Yet, there was no evidence that Kodak lost equipment sales as a result of rising service prices.

[\[\*951\]](#) The Court accepted the reasonableness of the ISO's proffered explanation for the lack of responsiveness of equipment demand to service and parts prices. It found that the existence of significant information and switching costs could "create a less responsive connection between service and equipment sales." 504 U.S. at 473. In order for consumers to take service and parts prices into account at the time of purchasing Kodak's equipment, they would need accurate information about the cost of the total package of equipment, parts and service, i.e., accurate lifecycle prices. Id. In the case of complex durable equipment, the information needed to arrive at an accurate lifecycle price was substantial and it required sophisticated analysis. Further, the Court indicated that this information was difficult if not impossible to obtain at the time of purchase because service and parts prices and warranties, as well as the consumers' specific repair \*\*19 needs could change over the life of the machine. Further, to the extent that sophisticated purchasers could figure out the unattractiveness of Kodak's parts and service prices, Kodak could buy them off with a better package deal, while still reaping the benefits of higher prices from the unsophisticated consumer. Id. at 475. The Court indicated that given these possibilities it made little sense to assume without proof that consumers bought equipment based on an accurate assessment of the total cost of equipment, services and parts over the life of the machine.

The second factor that could undermine the relationship between primary equipment sales and service and parts prices was the costs to the current owners of switching to different products. Id. at 476. If the costs of switching are high relative to the increase in service prices, customers who already owned Kodak equipment would tolerate some degree of supracompetitive pricing in the aftermarket for services. The Court found that there was evidence of such high switching costs, given the expense and uniqueness of Kodak's equipment, and that there was evidence that Kodak discriminated in package prices to various customers. \*\*20 In sum, the Court found that evidence of information and switching costs created fact issues regarding Kodak's ability to exercise market power in the service and parts markets even though it competed in the primary equipment market.

Plaintiffs argue that Kodak applies in the franchise context and that SpeeDee's control over its trademarked franchise permitted it to force them to purchase unwanted, inferior and overpriced Mobil products over the life of the franchise. Plaintiffs argue that they were prevented or "locked-in" by high switching costs from abandoning their investment in the franchise because they would lose their significant capital investment (up to $ 1.0 million in plant and equipment), they would face significant penalty payments to both Mobil and SpeeDee, and would be barred from the industry by virtue of a noncompetition covenant.

Defendants respond by making two basic arguments: (1) that Kodak does not apply to the franchisor/franchisee relationship; and (2) that plaintiffs were aware of the tying arrangement before entering the franchise agreement, so that they could have shopped around for another, comparable franchise.

Defendants rely on a recent district \*\*21 court case, Queen City Pizza, Inc. v. Domino's Pizza, Inc., 922 F. Supp. 1055 \(E.D. Pa. 1996\), for the proposition that Kodak does not apply to the franchise context. In Queen City, plaintiffs were franchisees who by virtue of their franchise agreement with Domino's Pizza were required to purchase their pizza ingredients from the franchisor. Id. at \*1-2. The district court dismissed plaintiffs' illegal tying claim and rejected their attempt to invoke Kodak. It reasoned that Kodak did not apply because the service market in Kodak arose out of the unique nature of Kodak machines, not by virtue of a franchise agreement. Id. at \*7. This Court is not convinced that a principled distinction can be drawn as a matter of law between the franchise context and the durable equipment market involved in Kodak. No facts have been adduced to indicate that a business format franchise cannot create a derivative aftermarket for the purchase and sale of products that must be used in the franchise [*952] operation by the franchise network. Nor have facts been adduced that such an aftermarket could not be subject to the same economic dislocations that permitted market power [**22] to be possible in Kodak. The Kodak court did not purport to base its market power analysis solely on the fact that Kodak's machines were unique, nor did it limit the application of its reasoning to durable equipment markets. If anything, Kodak cautions against making economic assumptions on a blank factual record. See *Kodak*, 504 U.S. at 466-67.

Indeed, it would appear that franchisees could face the same type of switching and information costs as the Kodak equipment owner because the size of the capital investment in a business format franchise may well outstrip the cost of investing in a Kodak copier, and the franchise agreement can involve a long-term arrangement in which the franchisee invests in brand development, which may make switching to another franchise costly. Moreover, franchisees may also have high information costs in obtaining an accurate lifecycle price of the franchise plus the tied items. This is particularly true if both the franchise and the supply arrangements are long-term, without full disclosure about current and future prices and requirements for the tied items, and the franchisee is unable to predict or assess his total product, equipment [**23] and financing needs over the life of the franchise at the point of purchase. Further, the Queen City decision is contrary to much learned economic and legal commentary on the potential impact of the Kodak decision on franchise tie-in claims.<sup>7</sup> For all of these reasons, the Court declines to follow the Queen City decision.

[**24] The Court is also mindful of the Fifth Circuit's recent decision in *United Farmers Agents Association, Inc. v. Farmers Insurance Exchange*, 89 F.3d 233 \(5th Cir. 1996\). There, the Court affirmed a summary judgment dismissing tying claims by insurance agents who asserted that five insurance companies had tied access to computerized policyholder information to the purchase of specially configured IBM computers. The Court found that the insurance companies lacked sufficient market power in any market to support an illegal tying claim. Although the Court stated that market power is not conferred simply by virtue of a franchise or contract relationship, it expressly addressed the issues of whether there was evidence of high information or switching costs to justify invocation of Kodak. Finding no such evidence, the Court affirmed summary judgment for the insurers. If anything, this decision suggests that when parties seek to invoke Kodak, issues of information costs and switching costs must be addressed before tying claims can be rejected out of hand.

Defendants' next argument is that even if Kodak applies to a franchise situation, the plaintiffs are unable to state a per [*25] se tying claim because they were aware of the tying arrangement when they entered the franchise agreement. This is a far more serious obstacle to plaintiffs' claims. Defendants' thesis is that if plaintiffs were told of the tie-in before they were locked-in to the franchise, high information costs would not prevent them from shopping around for a better deal with another franchisor before they locked into the franchise. This would allow competition in the primary market for competing franchises to constrain the exercise of market power in the aftermarkets for lubricant products and financial services. See *Digital Equipment Corp. v. Uniq Digital Technologies, Inc.*, 73 F.3d 756, 763 \(7th Cir. 1996\) (reading Kodak to suggest that had [*953] Kodak informed its customers about its policies prior to purchase, purchasers could have gotten competitive lifecycle prices); *Lee v. Life Ins. Co. of North America*, 23 F.3d 14, 20 (Kodak means that if customers had been aware at the time they bought Kodak's equipment that Kodak would implement its restrictive parts policy, market power would only have been as significant as Kodak's market share in the copier market.).

<sup>7</sup> See, e.g., Janet L. McDavid, Kodak Decision Revitalizes Tying Claims, 12 Franch. L. J. 3, 6 (1992); Philip E. Areeda and Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law, § 1709.2(c)(2) (Supp. 1995); Margaret E. Guerin-Calvert, Assessing the Implications of Kodak for Franchise Market Power Issues, Assessing Market Power in the Post-Kodak World, 1, 3-5 (ABA Section of Antitrust Law Spring Meeting, March 27, 1996); Andrew C. Selden, Franchise Market Power in a Post-Kodak Universe, Assessing Market Power in the Post-Kodak World, 10 (ABA Section of Antitrust Law Spring Meeting, March 27, 1996); Jonathan Solish, Market Power in Per Se Franchise Tying Claims: Virtual Maintenance Decision Addresses "Locked-In" Buyers, 13 Franch. L. J. 73 (1994); Arthur I. Cantor, Tying, Exclusive Dealing, and Franchising Issues, 890 PLI 869 (1995); George A. Hay, Is the Glass Empty or Half Full?: Reflections on the Kodak Case, 62 Antitrust L. J. 177, 185-88 (1993).

Defendants in essence [**26] urge the Court to adopt a rule of law that if the tie-in is disclosed at the outset of the franchise relationship there can be no exercise of market power in the aftermarket for products used in the franchise if the franchisor does not have a sizable market share in the primary market. The Court agrees that availability of information about SpeeDee's policy is highly relevant to the existence of information and switching costs. See United Farmers Agents Ass'n, 89 F.3d at 238 (agents who were hired after implementation of policy had virtually no information or switching costs because policy was disclosed, and there was no evidence that costs of electronic access could not be easily obtained). However, it is not at all clear on this record what was disclosed to these plaintiffs about the Mobil supply arrangements or when it was disclosed. Second, it is not self-evident to this Court that before-the-fact disclosure of the tie-in means in all cases that information costs are not so high as to preclude accurate lifecycle pricing. Although Kodak involved a situation in which some consumers were not aware of the tying arrangement until they were "locked in," the court's discussion [**27] of information costs did not presume that consumers were already locked-in. Instead, the court examined the problems of acquiring accurate lifecycle prices for the package of equipment, parts and services at the point of purchase. It may well be that disclosure that a tie-in exists does not allow accurate lifecycle pricing of a long-term franchise agreement and the purchase of ten-years' worth of tied products, equipment and financial services. See generally Selden, Franchise Market Power at 19 (Kodak "suggests that a single brand after market tie-in may still be illegal, even if practice is disclosed at the time of sale of the franchise, and is imposed from the outset of the franchise relationship"); McDavid, Kodak Decision Revitalizes at 7 ("likely to be fact issues concerning the ability of buyer or franchisee to predict costs of being 'locked in' at the time of initial investment"). As noted, the complaint does not make clear what plaintiffs knew and did not know before they entered the franchise agreement about the Mobil tie-in. Reading their allegations in their favor, as the Court must do on a Rule 12 motion, they assert that the scope of the tie-in was not fully [**28] disclosed and that it was a "hidden condition" of the franchise agreement. They also allege that their ignorance of the financial relationships between Mobil and SpeeDee prevented them from understanding that SpeeDee would never approve alternative suppliers and would tolerate Mobil's overcharging them for tied products. It is also apparent from plaintiffs' brief, but not from the complaint, that some plaintiffs were franchisees prior to SpeeDee's alleged imposition of the Mobil supply arrangement, so that they could have substantial switching costs associated with losing their franchise investment if they chose to extricate themselves from the franchise instead of accepting the tie-in. Further, as was the case in Kodak, it appears from the complaint that, despite Mobil's supracompetitive prices, SpeeDee has not lost market share in the primary fast lube franchise market and may have increased it. Compl. at P 70 (with Mobil's assistance, SpeeDee attained market share just behind Pennzoil, Quaker State and Valvoline).

Plaintiffs allege that they were forced to purchase Mobil's products on a take-or-pay basis over a ten-year period at prices to be set by Mobil and to use Mobil's [**29] financial services and equipment. These facts suggest that the lifecycle costs of the franchise and the tied products could be difficult to predict accurately at the point of purchasing the franchise. It could be difficult to assess what one's needs for Mobil's products and services would be over a ten-year period. Moreover, Mobil was not locked in to the prices it would charge over the life of the agreement so that future prices for the whole range of tied [*954] products could not be assessed at the point of purchase.

In sum, absent a factual record as to the information that was available to each plaintiff at the time that he entered the franchise agreement, as well as a factual record that would permit a determination that available information was sufficient to permit accurate lifecycle pricing, the Court cannot as a matter of law find that plaintiffs have failed to allege a claim under Kodak. This is true because switching costs once the franchisee is locked-in to the franchise were allegedly substantial (loss of investment, penalties, liability to Mobil, enforcement of noncompetition covenant).

Defendants also claim that plaintiffs have failed to state a tie-in claim under the [**30] Rule of Reason. HN5↑ To state a claim under the Rule of Reason, the plaintiffs must allege that the tying arrangement had an "actual adverse affect on competition" in the tied product market. Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 31; Breaux Brothers, 21 F.3d at 87. Plaintiffs have alleged an anticompetitive effect on the tied product market in that they allege that other suppliers of lubricant products have been foreclosed from marketing their products to the SpeeDee franchise network by virtue of the coercive force of Mobil's exclusive supply arrangements. Plaintiffs also claim that Mobil's prices are supracompetitive, that its products are inferior, and they are unable to purchase the competitive products they desire by virtue of the tying arrangement. Accepting these allegations as true, they are sufficient to assert an anticompetitive effect in the tied product market. See Kodak, 504 U.S. at 465 (evidence of increased prices, excluded competition and unwanted purchases in tied service market would entitle plaintiffs to trial).

Finally, the Court agrees with defendants that plaintiffs have failed to state a claim for illegal tying under HN6↑ Section 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 14. This section requires both the tying and tied products to be goods. Crossland v. Canteen Corp., 711 F.2d 714, 718 n.1 (5th Cir. 1983). Here the tying product, a trademarked franchise, is not a commodity, and plaintiffs have therefore failed to state a claim under Section 3 of the Clayton Act.

B. Price-Fixing

Defendants argue that plaintiffs have failed to state a claim for price fixing in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. Plaintiffs pled that Mobil's supply contracts with the franchisees give Mobil the "unilateral" right to set the price for its products to the franchise network, a practice that constitutes per se illegal price-fixing. See First Amend. Compl. at P 50. Plaintiffs also alleged conclusorily that defendants have unlawfully conspired to fix the price of lubricants to plaintiffs, which they allege is a per se violation of the Sherman Act.

Defendants argue that plaintiffs' allegation that Mobil had the "unilateral" right to set its prices is an admission that there was no conspiracy to fix prices as is required for a price-fixing violation. See Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 767-68, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 \*\*321 (1984) (Section 1 of the Sherman Act does not reach unilateral action). Reading the complaint in plaintiffs' favor, it is apparent that the "unilateral" language pled by plaintiffs means only that Mobil had the right to impose prices on the plaintiffs without negotiation. Nevertheless, the Court finds that plaintiffs have failed to state a claim for per se illegal price-fixing. Mobil and SpeeDee are not horizontal competitors, since they do not sell the same products in the same markets. HN7↑ The per se rule against price-fixing applies to agreements by horizontal competitors to fix prices (e.g., United States v. Trenton Potteries Co., 273 U.S. 392, 71 L. Ed. 700, 47 S. Ct. 377 (1927)) and to vertical agreements to fix resale prices. Business Electronics Corp. v. Sharp Electronics Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808, 108 S. Ct. 1515 (1988). SpeeDee's alleged agreement with Mobil does not eliminate price competition between them because there was no competition between Mobil and SpeeDee to eliminate. Nor is SpeeDee a reseller of Mobil's products. Since plaintiffs have failed to allege a situation to which the per se rule applies, plaintiffs have failed to state a claim \*\*33 for per se illegal price-fixing. [*955] Hence, plaintiffs' claim for per se illegal price-fixing is dismissed.

C. Federal Trade Commission Act

Plaintiffs claim that defendants' tying arrangement violates Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. § 45. Defendants are correct that HN8↑ Section 5 does not provide a private right of action, so that plaintiffs have no claim under the FTC Act. See Fulton v. Hecht, 580 F.2d 1243, 1249 n.2 (5th Cir. 1978), cert. denied, 440 U.S. 981, 60 L. Ed. 2d 241, 99 S. Ct. 1789 (1979). Accordingly, plaintiffs' claim for violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act is dismissed.

D. Fraud

Mobil attacks plaintiffs' fraud claim on the ground that it had no duty to disclose the details of its agreements with the SpeeDee defendants. HN9↑ Whether a duty exists is a question of law. E.g., Mundy v. Dept. of Health and Human Resources, 620 So. 2d 811, 813 (La. 1993). The Court agrees that HN10↑ absent a duty to disclose, silence with respect to the details of a business transaction does not constitute fraud. See Guidry v. Bank of LaPlace, 661 So. 2d 1052, 1059 (La. App. 4th Cir. 1995), writ denied, 666 So. 2d 295 (La. 1996); First Downtown Development v. Cimochowski, 613 So. 2d 671, 677 (La. App. 2d Cir. 1993), writ denied, 615 So. 2d 340 (La. 1993). A duty to disclose does not arise absent special circumstances, such as a fiduciary or confidential relationship between the parties. Greene v. Gulf Coast Bank, 593 So. 2d 630, 632 (La. 1992); First Downtown, 613 So. 2d at 677. Plaintiffs do not allege in their complaint that Mobil was a party to the franchise agreement, and they have not alleged any facts that would give rise to a fiduciary or other confidential relationship between Mobil and themselves. Although they allege a contractual fiduciary duty, fiduciary duties do not arise from ordinary supplier-customer contracts. The Court therefore finds that Mobil had no duty of disclosure to the plaintiffs, so that they have failed to state a claim for fraud against Mobil.

Both Mobil and the SpeeDee defendants further contend that plaintiffs have failed to allege fraud with particularity as is required by Rule 9\(b\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. HN11 [↑] Rule 9\(b\) requires allegations of the "particulars of time, place and contents of the false representations, as well as the identity of the person making the misrepresentation [**35] and what he obtained thereby." Tel-Phonic Services, Inc. v. TBS International, Inc., 975 F.2d 1134, 1139 \(5th Cir. 1992\) (quoting 5 C. Wright and A. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure § 1297, at 590 (1990)). It is true that plaintiffs have made some allegations concerning misleading statements or omissions but their allegations of time, place, and contents of the statements, as well as of the identity of the person making the representations or omissions are deficient. As the Court noted elsewhere in this opinion, it is difficult to determine from plaintiffs' complaint what information the defendants are alleged to have disclosed to the plaintiffs and what information they are alleged to have failed to disclose. The complaint is internally contradictory on these issues. Accordingly, plaintiffs' fraud claims are dismissed under Rule 9\(b\) against the SpeeDee defendants. The dismissal is without prejudice and with leave to amend to assert the particulars of the time, place, and contents of the misrepresentations and nondisclosures relied on, as well as of the identities of the parties involved in making the alleged representations to the plaintiffs.

III. CONCLUSION

[**36] The Court's ruling on the tying issue means only that plaintiffs have made sufficient allegations to survive a motion to dismiss. Many of defendants' arguments would have been made more appropriately on a well-developed summary judgment record. Given the Supreme Court's distaste for the imposition of legal rules divorced from evidence of marketplace realities, this Court is constrained to deny defendants' motion on the tying claims.

Accordingly, defendants' motion to dismiss plaintiffs' tying claims under the Sherman Act and the Louisiana antitrust laws is denied. [*956] The motion is granted as to plaintiffs' claims for per se illegal pricefixing, tying under Section 3 of the Clayton Act, violations of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act and fraud. The fraud claim against the SpeeDee defendants is dismissed without prejudice.

New Orleans, Louisiana, this 9th day of September, 1996.

SARAH S. VANCE

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

---

End of Document

Chicago Professional Sports Ltd. Pshp. v. NBA

United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit

June 4, 1996, ARGUED ; September 10, 1996, DECIDED

Nos. 95-1341, 95-1376, 95-3935, 95-4021

Reporter

95 F.3d 593 *; 1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 23942 **; 1996-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,554

CHICAGO PROFESSIONAL SPORTS LIMITED PARTNERSHIP and WGN CONTINENTAL BROADCASTING COMPANY, Plaintiffs-Appellees, Cross-Appellants, v. NATIONAL BASKETBALL ASSOCIATION, Defendant-Appellant, Cross-Appellee.

Subsequent History: [\[\*\*1\]](#) Rehearing Denied October 7, 1996, Reported at: 1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 26354.

Prior History: Appeals from the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division. No. 90 C 6247. Hubert L. Will, Judge.

Disposition: Vacated and remanded.

Core Terms

---

league, teams, sports, broadcast, games, single entity, antitrust, district court, economic interest, ownership, cooperation, decisions, joint venture, superstation, basketball, entertainment, decisionmaking, telecasts, output, firms, anti trust law, market power, Sherman Act, characterization, compete, rights, fans, maximize, advertisers, inefficient

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Communications > Sherman Act

**HN1** Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The core question in antitrust is output. Unless a contract reduces output in some market, to the detriment of consumers, there is no antitrust problem. A high price is not itself a violation of the Sherman Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Sports > General Overview

Trademark Law > Conveyances > General Overview

**HN2** Regulated Industries, Sports

Courts must respect a sports league's disposition of issues related to the operations of its league that do not violate antitrust laws, just as they respect contracts and decisions by a corporation's board of directors.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN3 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Antitrust law permits, indeed encourages, cooperation inside a business organization the better to facilitate competition between that organization and other producers. To say that participants in an organization may cooperate is to say that they may control what they make and how they sell it.

Business & Corporate Law > Joint Ventures > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Joint Ventures

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Sports > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Vertical Acquisitions

HN4 Business & Corporate Law, Joint Ventures

Like a single firm, the parent-subsidiary combination cooperates to increase efficiency. However, conduct of related entities that deprives the marketplace of the independent centers of decisionmaking that competition assumes, without the efficiencies that come with integration inside a firm, are considered "concerted." And there are entities in the middle -- mergers, joint ventures, and various vertical agreements -- that reduce the number of independent decisionmakers yet may improve efficiency. These are assessed under the Rule of Reason.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > General Overview

HN5 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

In determining the characterization of a business entity for purposes of antitrust law, the district court plays the leading role, followed by deferential appellate review. An appellate court is not authorized to announce and apply its own characterization unless the law admits of only one choice.

Business & Corporate Law > Joint Ventures > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Utility Companies > Contracts for Service

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Joint Ventures

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Sports > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Cooperatives > General Overview

HN6 Business & Corporate Law, Joint Ventures

Lower court cases are split as to whether professional sports leagues are best characterized as single firms or joint ventures. These cases do not yield a clear principle about the proper characterization of sports leagues -- and the United States Supreme Court does not impose one "right" characterization in determining a business entity's status under antitrust law. Sports are sufficiently diverse that it is essential to investigate their organization and ask the functional question used to determine whether an entity's status under antitrust law one league at a time--and perhaps one facet of a league at a time.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN7 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Substantial market power is an indispensable ingredient of every claim under the full Rule of Reason in antitrust law.

Counsel: For CHICAGO PROFESSIONAL SPORTS LIMITED PARTNERSHIP, (95-1341, 95-1376), Plaintiff - Appellee, Plaintiff - Appellant: James E. Hanlon, Jr., Joel G. Chefitz, Stephen D. Libowsky, Laura Keidan Martin, Ronald S. Betman, Robert K. Niewijk, KATTEN, MUCHIN & ZAVIS, Chicago, IL, USA.

For CHICAGO PROFESSIONAL SPORTS LIMITED PARTNERSHIP, (95-3935, 95-4021), Plaintiff - Appellee, Plaintiff - Appellant: James E. Hanlon, Jr., Joel G. Chefitz, Stephen D. Libowsky, Laura Keidan Martin, Ronald S. Betman, Robert K. Niewijk, Wendy Fleishman, KATTEN, MUCHIN & ZAVIS, Chicago, IL, USA.

For WGN CONTINENTAL BROADCASTING, INCORPORATED, (95-1341), Plaintiff - Appellee: James E. Hanlon, Jr., John R. McCambridge, Darrell J. Graham, Irving C. Faber, Charles S. Bergen, Christopher B. Wilson, GRIPPO & ELDEN, Chicago, IL, USA. Charles J. Sennet, TRIBUNE COMPANY, Chicago, IL, USA.

For WGN CONTINENTAL BROADCASTING, INCORPORATED, (95-1376), Plaintiff - Appellant: John R. McCambridge, Darrell J. Graham, Irving C. Faber, Michael P. Conway, Charles S. Bergen, Christopher B. Wilson, GRIPPO & ELDEN, Chicago, IL, USA. Charles J. Sennet, TRIBUNE COMPANY, Chicago, IL, USA.

For WGN CONTINENTAL BROADCASTING, INCORPORATED, (95-3935), Plaintiff - Appellee: James E. Hanlon, Jr., John R. McCambridge, Darrell J. Graham, Michael P. Conway, Charles S. Bergen, Christopher B. Wilson, GRIPPO & ELDEN, Chicago, IL, USA. Charles J. Sennet, TRIBUNE COMPANY, Chicago, IL, USA.

For WGN CONTINENTAL BROADCASTING, INCORPORATED, (95-4021), Plaintiff - Appellant: James E. Hanlon, Jr., John R. McCambridge, Darrell J. Graham, Irving C. Faber, Michael P. Conway, Charles S. Bergen, Christopher B. Wilson, GRIPPO & ELDEN, Chicago, IL, USA. Charles J. Sennet, TRIBUNE COMPANY, Chicago, IL, USA.

For NATIONAL BASKETBALL ASSOCIATION, (95-1341), Defendant - Appellant: Marc J. Goldstein, Michael A. Cardoza, Bradley I. Ruskin, Steven C. Krane, Stephen D. Solomon, Ronald S. Rauchberg, Howard L. Ganz, Francis D. Landrey, Stephen L. Weinstein, PROSKAUER, ROSE, GOETZ & MENDELSOHN, New York, NY, USA. Christopher Wolf, Warren L. Dennis, PROSKAUER, ROSE, GOETZ & MENDELSOHN, Washington, DC, USA. James C. Schroeder, Tyrone C. Fahner, Andrew S. Marovitz, Matthew A. Rooney, Herbert L. Zarov, John E. Muench, MAYER, BROWN & PLATT, Chicago, IL, USA. Carole E. Handler, PROSKAUER, ROSE, GOETZ & MENDELSOHN, Los Angeles, CA, USA. Jeffrey A. Mishkin, NATIONAL BASKETBALL ASSOCIATION, Office of the General Counsel, New York, NY, USA.

For NATIONAL BASKETBALL ASSOCIATION, (95-1376), Defendant - Appellee: Herbert L. Zarov, MAYER, BROWN & PLATT, Washington, DC, USA. Marc J. Goldstein, Michael A. Cardoza, Bradley I. Ruskin, Steven C. Krane, Stephen D. Solomon, Ronald S. Rauchberg, Howard L. Ganz, Francis D. Landrey, Stephen L. Weinstein, PROSKAUER, ROSE, GOETZ & MENDELSOHN, New York, NY, USA. Christopher Wolf, Warren L. Dennis, PROSKAUER, ROSE, GOETZ & MENDELSOHN, Washington, DC, USA. James C. Schroeder, Tyrone C. Fahner, Andrew S. Marovitz, Matthew A. Rooney, John E. Muench, MAYER, BROWN & PLATT, Chicago, IL, USA. Carole E. Handler, PROSKAUER, ROSE, GOETZ & MENDELSOHN, Los Angeles, CA, USA. Jeffrey A. Mishkin, Richard W. Buchanan, NATIONAL BASKETBALL ASSOCIATION, Office of the General Counsel, New York, NY, USA.

For NATIONAL BASKETBALL ASSOCIATION, (95-3935), Defendant - Appellant: Michael A. Cardoza, Bradley I. Ruskin, Stephen D. Solomon, [**4] Ronald S. Rauchberg, Stephen L. Weinstein, PROSKAUER, ROSE, GOETZ & MENDELSOHN, New York, NY, USA. Christopher Wolf, Warren L. Dennis, PROSKAUER, ROSE, GOETZ & MENDELSOHN, Washington, DC, USA. James C. Schroeder, Andrew S. Marovitz, Matthew A. Rooney, Herbert L. Zarov, MAYER, BROWN & PLATT, Chicago, IL, USA. Carole E. Handler, PROSKAUER, ROSE, GOETZ & MENDELSOHN, Los Angeles, CA, USA. Jeffrey A. Mishkin, Richard W. Buchanan, NATIONAL BASKETBALL ASSOCIATION, Office of the General Counsel, New York, NY, USA.

For NATIONAL BASKETBALL ASSOCIATION, (95-4021), Defendant - Appellee: Marc J. Goldstein, Michael A. Cardozo, Bradley I. Ruskin, Steven C. Krane, Stephen D. Solomon, Ronald S. Rauchberg, Howard L. Ganz, Francis D. Landrey, Stephen L. Weinstein, PROSKAUER, ROSE, GOETZ & MENDELSOHN, New York, NY, USA. Christopher Wolf, Warren L. Dennis, PROSKAUER, ROSE, GOETZ & MENDELSOHN, Washington, DC, USA. James C. Schroeder, Tyrone C. Fahner, Andrew S. Marovitz, Matthew A. Rooney, Herbert L. Zarov, John E. Muench, MAYER, BROWN & PLATT, Chicago, IL, USA. Carole E. Handler, PROSKAUER, ROSE, GOETZ & MENDELSOHN, Los Angeles, CA, USA. Jeffrey A. Mishkin, Richard W. Buchanan, NATIONAL BASKETBALL [**5] ASSOCIATION, Office of the General Counsel, New York, NY, USA.

Judges: Before BAUER, CUDAHY, and EASTERBROOK, Circuit Judges. CUDAHY, Circuit Judge, concurring.

Opinion by: EASTERBROOK

Opinion

---

[*595] EASTERBROOK, Circuit Judge. In the six years since they filed this antitrust suit, the Chicago Bulls have won four National Basketball Association titles and an equal number of legal victories. Suit and titles are connected. The Bulls want to broadcast more of their games over WGN television, a "superstation" carried on cable systems nationwide. The Bulls' popularity makes WGN attractive to these cable systems; the large audience makes WGN attractive to the Bulls. Since 1991 the Bulls and WGN have been authorized by injunction to broadcast 25 or 30 games per year. 754 F. Supp. 1336 \(1991\). We affirmed that injunction in 1992, see 961 F.2d 667, and the district court proceeded to determine whether WGN could carry even more games--and whether the NBA could impose a "tax" on the games broadcast to a national audience, for which other superstations have paid a pretty penny to the league. After holding a nine-week trial and receiving 512 stipulations of fact, the district court made a 30-game allowance permanent, [**6] 874 F. Supp. 844 \(1995\), and held the NBA's fee excessive, 1995-2 Trade Cas. P 71,253. Both sides appeal. The Bulls want to broadcast 41 games per year over WGN; the NBA contends that the antitrust laws allow it to fix a lower number (15 or 20) and to collect the tax it proposed. With apologies to both sides, we conclude that they must suffer through still more litigation.

Our 1992 opinion rejected the league's defense based on the Sports Broadcasting Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1291-95, but our rationale implied that the NBA could restructure its contracts to take advantage of that statute. 961 F.2d at 670-72. In 1993 the league tried to do so, signing a contract that transfers all broadcast rights to the National Broadcasting Company. NBC shows only 26 games during the regular season, however, and the network contract allows the league and its teams to permit telecasts at other times. Every team received the right to broadcast all 82 of its regular-season games (41 over the air, 41 on cable), unless NBC telecasts a given contest. The NBA-NBC contract permits the league to exhibit 85 games per year on superstations. Seventy were licensed to the Turner stations (TBS and TNT), leaving 15 potentially [**7] available for WGN to license from the league. It disdained the opportunity. The Bulls sold 30 games directly to WGN, treating these as over-the-air broadcasts authorized by the NBC contract--not to mention the district court's injunction. The Bulls' only concession (perhaps more to [*596] the market than to the league) is that WGN does not broadcast a Bulls game at the same time as a basketball telecast on a Turner superstation.

Back in 1991 and 1992, the parties were debating whether the NBA's television arrangements satisfied § 1 of the Sports Broadcasting Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1291. We held not, because the Act addresses the effects of "transfers" by a "league of clubs," and the NBA had prescribed rather than "transferred" broadcast rights. The 1993 contract was written with that distinction in mind. The league asserted title to the copyright interests arising from the games and transferred all broadcast rights to NBC; it received some back, subject to contractual restrictions. Section 1 has been satisfied. But the league did not pay enough attention to § 2, 15 U.S.C. § 1292, which reads:

Section 1291 of this title shall not apply to any joint agreement described in the first [**8] sentence in such section which prohibits any person to whom such rights are sold or transferred from televising any games within any area, except within the home territory of a member club of the league on a day when such club is playing at home.

The NBA-NBC contract permits each club to license the broadcast of its games, and then, through the restriction on superstation broadcasts, attempts to limit telecasts to the teams' home markets. Section 2 provides that this makes § 1 inapplicable, so the Sports Broadcasting Act leaves the antitrust laws in force.

Our prior opinion observed that the Sports Broadcasting Act, as a special-interest exception to the antitrust laws, receives a beady-eyed reading. A league has to jump through every hoop; partial compliance doesn't do the trick. The NBA could have availed itself of the Sports Broadcasting Act by taking over licensing and by selling broadcast rights in the Bulls' games to one of the many local stations in Chicago, rather than to WGN. The statute offered other options as well. Apparently the league did not want to use them, in part for tax reasons and in part because it sought to avoid responsibilities that come from being [**9] a licensor, rather than a regulator, of telecasts. Such business decisions are understandable and proper, but they have consequences under the Sports Broadcasting Act. By signing a contract with NBC that left the Bulls, rather than the league, with the authority to select the TV station that would broadcast the games, the NBA made its position under the Sports Broadcasting Act untenable. For as soon as the Bulls picked WGN, any effort to control cable system retransmission of the WGN signal tripped over § 2. The antitrust laws therefore apply, and we must decide what they have to say about the league's effort to curtail superstation transmissions.

Three issues were left unresolved in 1992. One was whether the Bulls and WGN, as producers, suffer antitrust injury. 961 F.2d at 669-70. The NBA has not pursued this possibility, and as it is not jurisdictional (plaintiffs suffer injury in fact), we let the question pass. The other two issues are related. We concluded in 1992 that the district court properly condemned the NBA's superstation rule under the quick-look version of the Rule of Reason, see National Collegiate Athletic Association v. Board of Regents of the University of Oklahoma, I<sup>\*\*101</sup> 468 U.S. 85, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70, 104 S. Ct. 2948 \(1984\), because (a) the league did not argue that it should be treated as a single entity, and (b) the anti-freeriding justification for the superstation rule failed because a fee collected on nationally telecast games would compensate other teams (and the league as a whole) for the value of their contributions to the athletic contests being broadcast. 961 F.2d at 672-76. Back in the district court, the NBA argued that it is entitled to be treated as a single firm and therefore should possess the same options as other licensors of entertainment products; outside of court, the league's Board of Governors adopted a rule requiring any club that licenses broadcast rights to superstations to pay a fee based on the amount the two Turner stations pay for games they license directly from the league.

Plaintiffs say that the single-entity argument was forfeited by its omission from the first appeal, but we think not. As our 1992 opinion observed, the case went to initial trial and decision within seven weeks, 961 F.2d at 676, a salutary development made possible in [*597] part by judicial willingness to entertain in subsequent rounds of the case arguments that could not be fully developed [**11] in such short compass. If defendants in complex cases feared that any arguments omitted from the first phase of the case would be lost forever, they would drag their heels in order to ensure that nothing was overlooked, a step that would benefit no one. Cf. Schering Corp. v. Illinois Antibiotics Co., 89 F.3d 357 (7th Cir. 1996). That is why we noted that the argument would be available in the ensuing stages of the case, 961 F.3d at 672-73, and why the district court properly entertained and resolved it on the merits.

The district court was unimpressed by the NBA's latest arguments. It held that a sports league should not be treated as a single firm unless the teams have a "complete unity of interest"--which they don't. The court also held the fee to be invalid. Our opinion compelled the judge to concede that a fee is proper in principle. 961 F.2d at 675-76. But the judge thought the NBA's fee excessive. Instead of starting with the price per game it had negotiated with Turner (some $ 450,000), and reducing to account for WGN's smaller number of cable outlets, as it did, the judge concluded that the league should have started with the advertising revenues WGN generated [**12] from retransmission on cable (the "outer market revenues"). Then it should have cut this figure in half, the judge held, so that the Bulls could retain "their share" of these revenues. The upshot: the judge cut the per game fee from roughly $ 138,000 to $ 39,400.

The district court's opinion concerning the fee reads like the ruling of an agency exercising a power to regulate rates. Yet the antitrust laws do not deputize district judges as one-man regulatory agencies. HN1 The core question in antitrust is output. Unless a contract reduces output in some market, to the detriment of consumers, there is no antitrust problem. A high price is not itself a violation of the Sherman Act. See [Broadcast Music, Inc. v. CBS, Inc., 441 U.S. 1, 9-10, 19-20, 22 n.40, 99 S. Ct. 1551, 60 L. Ed. 2d 1 (1979); Buffalo Broadcasting Co. v. ASCAP, 744 F.2d 917 (2d Cir. 1984). WGN and the Bulls argue that the league's fee is excessive, unfair, and the like. But they do not say that it will reduce output. They plan to go on broadcasting 30 games, more if the court will let them, even if they must pay $ 138,000 per telecast. Although the fee exceeds WGN's outer-market revenues, the station evidently obtains other benefits--for example, [**13] (i) the presence of Bulls games may increase the number of cable systems that carry the station, augmenting its revenues 'round the clock; (ii) WGN slots into Bulls games ads for its other programming; and (iii) many viewers will keep WGN on after the game and watch whatever comes next. Lack of an effect on output means that the fee does not have antitrust significance. Once antitrust issues are put aside, how much the NBA charges for national telecasts is for the league to resolve under its internal governance procedures. It is no different in principle from the question how much (if any) of the live gate goes to the visiting team, who profits from the sale of cotton candy at the stadium, and how the clubs divide revenues from merchandise bearing their logos and trademarks. HN2 Courts must respect a league's disposition of these issues, just as they respect contracts and decisions by a corporation's board of directors. [Charles O. Finley & Co. v. Kuhn, 569 F.2d 527 (7th Cir. 1978); cf. Baltimore Orioles, Inc. v. Major League Baseball Players Association, 805 F.2d 663 (7th Cir. 1986).

According to the league, the analogy to a corporate board is apt in more ways than this. The NBA [**14] concedes that it comprises 30 juridical entities--29 teams plus the national organization, each a separate corporation or partnership. The teams are not the league's subsidiaries; they have separate ownership. Nonetheless, the NBA submits, it functions as a single entity, creating a single product ("NBA Basketball") that competes with other basketball leagues (both college and professional), other sports ("Major League Baseball", "college football"), and other entertainments such as plays, movies, opera, TV shows, Disneyland, and Las Vegas. Separate ownership of the clubs promotes local boosterism, which increases interest; each ownership group also has a powerful [*598] incentive to field a better team, which makes the contests more exciting and thus more attractive. These functions of independent team ownership do not imply that the league is a cartel, however, any more than separate ownership of hamburger joints (again useful as an incentive device, see Benjamin Klein & Lester F. Saft, The Law and Economics of Franchise Tying Contracts, 28 J.L. & Econ. 345 (1985)) implies that McDonald's is a cartel. Whether the best analogy is to a system of franchises (no one expects a McDonald's [**15] outlet to compete with other members of the system by offering pizza) or to a corporate holding company structure (on which see Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 (1984)) does not matter from this perspective. The point is that HN3[ antitrust law permits, indeed encourages, cooperation inside a business organization the better to facilitate competition between that organization and other producers. To say that participants in an organization may cooperate is to say that they may control what they make and how they sell it: the producers of Star Trek may decide to release two episodes a week and grant exclusive licenses to show them, even though this reduces the number of times episodes appear on TV in a given market, just as the NBA's superstation rule does.

The district court conceded this possibility but concluded that all cooperation among separately incorporated firms is forbidden by § 1 of the Sherman Act, except to the extent Copperweld permits. Copperweld, according to the district court, "is quite narrow, and rests solely upon the fact that a parent corporation and its wholly-owned subsidiary have a 'complete unity of interest'" (quoting \*\*16 from 467 U.S. at 771). Although that phrase appears in Copperweld, the Court offered it as a statement of fact about the parent-subsidiary relation, not as a proposition of law about the limits of permissible cooperation. As a proposition of law, it would be silly. Even a single firm contains many competing interests. One division may make inputs for another's finished goods. The first division might want to sell its products directly to the market, to maximize income (and thus the salary and bonus of the division's managers); the second division might want to get its inputs from the first at a low transfer price, which would maximize the second division's paper profits. Conflicts are endemic in any multi-stage firm, such as General Motors or IBM, see Robert G. Eccles, Transfer Pricing as a Problem of Agency, in Principals and Agents: The Structure of Business 151 (Pratt & Zeckhauser eds. 1985), but they do not imply that these large firms must justify all of their acts under the Rule of Reason. Or consider a partnership for the practice of law (or accounting): some lawyers would be better off with a lockstep compensation agreement under which all partners with the same seniority \*\*17 have the same income, but others would prosper under an "eat what you kill" system that rewards bringing new business to the firm. Partnerships have dissolved as a result of these conflicts. Yet these wrangles--every bit as violent as the dispute among the NBA's teams about how to generate and divide broadcast revenues--do not demonstrate that law firms are cartels, or subject to scrutiny under the Rule of Reason their decisions about where to open offices or which clients to serve.

Copperweld does not hold that only conflict-free enterprises may be treated as single entities. Instead it asks why the antitrust laws distinguish between unilateral and concerted action, and then assigns a parent-subsidiary group to the "unilateral" side in light of those functions. HN4 Like a single firm, the parent-subsidiary combination cooperates internally to increase efficiency. Conduct that "deprives the marketplace of the independent centers of decisionmaking that competition assumes", 467 U.S. at 769, without the efficiencies that come with integration inside a firm, go on the "concerted" side of the line. And there are entities in the middle: "mergers, joint ventures, and various vertical agreements" \*\*18 (id. at 768) that reduce the number of independent decisionmakers yet may improve efficiency. These are assessed under the Rule of Reason. We see no reason why a sports league cannot be treated as a single firm in this typology. It produces a single product; cooperation is essential (a \*599 league with one team would be like one hand clapping); and a league need not deprive the market of independent centers of decisionmaking. The district court's legal standard was therefore incorrect, and a judgment resting on the application of that standard is flawed.

Whether the NBA itself is more like a single firm, which would be analyzed only under § 2 of the Sherman Act, or like a joint venture, which would be subject to the Rule of Reason under § 1, is a tough question under Copperweld. It has characteristics of both. Unlike the colleges and universities that belong to the National Collegiate Athletic Association, which the Supreme Court treated as a joint venture in NCAA, the NBA has no existence independent of sports. It makes professional basketball; only it can make "NBA Basketball" games; and unlike the NCAA the NBA also "makes" teams. After this case was last here the NBA \*\*19 created new teams in Toronto and Vancouver, stocked with players from the 27 existing teams plus an extra helping of draft choices. All of this makes the league look like a single firm. Yet the 29 clubs, unlike GM's plants, have the right to secede (wouldn't a plant manager relish that!), and rearrange into two or three leagues. Professional sports leagues have been assembled from clubs that formerly belonged to other leagues; the National Football League and the NBA fit that description, and the teams have not surrendered their power to rearrange things yet again. Moreover, the league looks more or less like a firm depending on which facet of the business one examines. See Phillip E. Areeda, 7 Antitrust Law P 1478d (1986). From the perspective of fans and advertisers (who use sports telecasts to reach fans), "NBA Basketball" is one product from a single source even though the Chicago Bulls and Seattle Supersonics are highly distinguishable, just as General Motors is a single firm even though a Corvette differs from a Chevrolet. But from the perspective of college basketball players who seek to sell their skills, the teams are distinct, and because the human capital of players [**20] is not readily transferable to other sports (as even Michael Jordan learned) the league looks more like a group of firms acting as a monopsony. That is why the Supreme Court found it hard to characterize the National Football League in Brown v. Pro Football, Inc., 135 L. Ed. 2d 521, 116 S. Ct. 2116, 2126 (1996): "the clubs that make up a professional sports league are not completely independent economic competitors, as they depend upon a degree of cooperation for economic survival. . . . In the present context, however, that circumstance makes the league more like a single bargaining employer, which analogy seems irrelevant to the legal issue before us." To say that the league is "more like a single bargaining employer" than a multi-employer unit is not to say that it necessarily is one, for every purpose.

The league wants us to come to a conclusion on this subject (six years of litigation is plenty!) and award it the victory. Yet as we remarked in 1992, "characterization is a creative rather than exact endeavor." 961 F.2d at 672. HN5 The district court plays the leading role, followed by deferential appellate review. We are not authorized to announce and apply our own favored characterization unless [**21] the law admits of only one choice. The Supreme Court's ambivalence in Brown, like the disagreement among judges on similar issues, implies that more than one characterization is possible, and therefore that the district court must revisit the subject using the correct legal approach.

Most courts that have asked whether professional sports leagues should be treated like single firms or like joint ventures have preferred the joint venture characterization. E.g., Sullivan v. NFL, 34 F.3d 1091 (1st Cir. 1994); North American Soccer League v. NFL, 670 F.2d 1249 (2d Cir. 1982); Smith v. Pro Football, Inc., 193 U.S. App. D.C. 19, 593 F.2d 1173, 1179 (D.C. Cir. 1978). But Justice Rehnquist filed a strong dissent from the denial of certiorari in the soccer case, arguing that "the league competes as a unit against other forms of entertainment", NFL v. North American Soccer League, 459 U.S. 1074, 1077, 74 L. Ed. 2d 639, 103 S. Ct. 499 (1982), and the fourth circuit concluded that the Professional Golf Association should be treated as one firm for antitrust purposes, even though that sport is less economically integrated than the NBA. Seabury Management, Inc. v. PGA of America, Inc., 878 F. Supp. 771 (D. Md. 1994), affirmed [**22] in relevant part, 52 F.3d 322 (4th Cir. 1995). Another court of appeals has treated an electric cooperative as a single firm, Mt. Pleasant v. Associated Electric Cooperative, 838 F.2d 268 (8th Cir. 1988), though the co-op is less integrated than a sports league. HN6 These cases do not yield a clear principle about the proper characterization of sports leagues--and we do not think that Copperweld imposes one "right" characterization. Sports are sufficiently diverse that it is essential to investigate their organization and ask Copperweld's functional question one league at a time--and perhaps one facet of a league at a time, for we do not rule out the possibility that an organization such as the NBA is best understood as one firm when selling broadcast rights to a network in competition with a thousand other producers of entertainment, but is best understood as a joint venture when curtailing competition for players who have few other market opportunities. Just as the ability of McDonald's franchises to coordinate the release of a new hamburger does not imply their ability to agree on wages for counter workers, so the ability of sports teams to agree on a TV contract need not [**23] imply an ability to set wages for players. See Jesse W. Markham & Paul V. Teplitz, Baseball Economics and Public Policy (1981); Arthur A. Fleisher III, Brian L. Goff & Robert D. Tollison, The National Collegiate Athletic Association: A Study in Cartel Behavior (1992).

However this inquiry may come out on remand, we are satisfied that the NBA is sufficiently integrated that its superstation rules may not be condemned without analysis under the full Rule of Reason. We affirmed the district court's original injunction after applying the "quick look" version because the district court had characterized the NBA as something close to a cartel, and the league had not then made a Copperweld argument. After considering this argument, we conclude that when acting in the broadcast market the NBA is closer to a single firm than to a group of independent firms. This means that plaintiffs cannot prevail without establishing that the NBA possesses power in a relevant market, and that its exercise of this power has injured consumers. Even in the NCAA case, the first to use a bobtailed Rule of Reason, see Diane P. Wood, Antitrust 1984: Five Decisions in Search of a Theory, 1984 Sup. [**24] Ct. Rev. 69, 110-12, the Court satisfied itself that the NCAA possesses market power. The district court had held that there is a market in college football telecasts on Saturday afternoon in the fall, a time when other entertainments do not flourish but college football dominates. Only after holding that this was not clearly erroneous did the Court cast any burden of justification on the NCAA. 468 U.S. at 111-13; see also International Boxing Club v. United States, 358 U.S. 242, 3 L. Ed. 2d 270, 79 S. Ct. 245 (1959).

HN7 [↑] Substantial market power is an indispensable ingredient of every claim under the full Rule of Reason. Digital Equipment Corp. v. Uniq Digital Technologies, Inc., 73 F.3d 756, 761 (7th Cir. 1996); Sanjuan v. American Board of Psychiatry & Neurology, Inc., 40 F.3d 247, 251 (7th Cir. 1994); Hardy v. City Optical, Inc., 39 F.3d 765, 767 (7th Cir. 1994); Chicago Professional Sports Limited Partnership v. National Basketball Association, 961 F.2d 667, 673 (7th Cir. 1992); Will v. Comprehensive Accounting Corp., 776 F.2d 665, 670-74 (7th Cir. 1985); Carl Sandburg Village Condominium Ass'n No. 1 v. First Condominium Development Co., 758 F.2d 203, 210 (7th Cir. 1985). During the [**25] lengthy trial of this case, the NBA argued that it lacks market power, whether the buyers are understood as the viewers of games (the way the district court characterized things in NCAA) or as advertisers, who use games to attract viewers (the way the Supreme Court characterized a related market in Times-Picayune Publishing Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 97 L. Ed. 1277, 73 S. Ct. 872 (1953)). College football may predominate on Saturday afternoons in the fall, but there is no time slot when NBA basketball predominates. The NBA's season lasts from November through June; games are played seven days a week. This season overlaps all of the other professional and college sports, so even sports fanatics have many other options. From advertisers' perspective--likely the right one, because advertisers are the ones who actually pay for telecasts--the market [*601] is even more competitive. Advertisers seek viewers of certain demographic characteristics, and homogeneity is highly valued. A homogeneous audience facilitates targeted ads: breakfast cereals and toys for cartoon shows, household appliances and detergents for daytime soap operas, automobiles and beer for sports. If the NBA assembled for advertisers an audience [**26] that was uniquely homogeneous, or had especially high willingness-to-buy, then it might have market power even if it represented a small portion of airtime. The parties directed considerable attention to this question at trial, but the district judge declined to make any findings of fact on the subject, deeming market power irrelevant. As we see things, market power is irrelevant only if the NBA is treated as a single firm under Copperweld; and given the difficulty of that issue, it may be superior to approach this as a straight Rule of Reason case, which means starting with an inquiry into market power and, if there is power, proceeding to an evaluation of competitive effects.

Perhaps this can be accomplished using the materials in the current record. Although the judge who presided at the trial died earlier this year, the parties may be willing to agree that an assessment of credibility is unnecessary, so that a new judge could resolve the dispute after reviewing the transcript, exhibits, and stipulations, and entertaining argument. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 63. At all events, the judgment of the district court is vacated, and the case is remanded for proceedings consistent with this [**27] opinion. Pending further proceedings in the district court or agreement among the parties, the Bulls and WGN must respect the league's (and the NBC contract's) limitations on the maximum number of superstation telecasts.

Concur by: CUDAHY

Concur

---

CUDAHY, Circuit Judge, concurring:

Although I agree with the majority's firm conclusion that the "quick look" doctrine does not apply to these complex facts, I must indicate some differences in significant matters that are reached in the course of the majority opinion. Thus, in arriving at its conclusion that a full Rule of Reason analysis is required, the majority seems to be extrapolating from its discussion of whether the NBA may be a "single entity." Classification as a "single entity" means immunity from Sherman Act, § 1, considerations, a distinction much more drastic than the conclusion that the conduct in question here deserves a "quizzical look" rather than a mere "quick look." So, although it is not entirely clear, the majority seems to be saying that, since the NBA may be a single entity, its conduct certainly merits more than a quick look. Perhaps so, but, since the single entity question is unresolved, I would prefer to address [**28] the problem from a slightly different direction.

For the "quick look" approach should have a narrow application, reflecting its recent and sharply delimited origin in the NCAA case. Nat'l Collegiate Athletic Ass'n v. Bd. of Regents of the Univ. of Oklahoma, 468 U.S. 85, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70, 104 S. Ct. 2948 (1984). That case, involving a loose alliance of colleges which had agreed on price and output restrictions on broadcast of their football games, held that under some circumstances a full analysis of market power is not required to determine that an agreement is anticompetitive. This framework should not be extended to the more highly integrated and economically unitary NBA.

The colleges which made up the NCAA were entirely separate economic entities, competing with each other in many areas unrelated to their athletic encounters. There is, of course, a sort of continuum of economic integration, with entities at different points along the continuum warranting differing levels of antitrust concern. At one end are loose alliances of economic actors having independent concerns (like the NCAA), the anticompetitive nature of whose agreements is obvious from a "quick look." At the other end are fully-integrated entities [**29] in which the economic interests of the participants are so completely aligned that antitrust scrutiny of their policies is unnecessary except where § 2 of the Sherman Act is violated. In the center is the broad range of organizations (generally like the NBA) whose separate constituents are individually owned but are closely but not completely tied economically to their organizations. These entities are [*602] capable of anticompetitive agreements, but a full Rule of Reason analysis is necessary to ensure that productive cooperation is not mistaken for anticompetitive conduct. Single entity aside, there is certainly enough concern here for the efficiency of the league as a competitor in the entertainment market to require full Rule of Reason analysis.

On a more clear-cut point, I think it was appropriate for Judge Will to examine the size of the NBA's fee for the WGN broadcasts of Bulls games. In this connection, the majority rejects considerations of fairness "and the like" and asserts that, "The core question in antitrust is output." Maj. Op. at 5, 6. For better or for worse, under the highly reductive view that currently prevails in antitrust matters, this somewhat grating aphorism appears [**30] to be correct. The Holy Grail of consumer welfare means that more is better no matter how the more is distributed. Taking these principles as a given, it is still difficult for me to understand how output can be disjoined from cost under the circumstances of this case. In fact, Judge Will found as a fact that, "[the NBA's proposed fee] may well at some future date decrease output and distribution of Bulls games on WGN . . ." Dist. Ct. Findings of Fact, Conclusions of Law and Opinion, NBA App. at 77a. But, particularly since output is currently constrained to 30 games, rather than whatever the market would produce, it is difficult to ascertain whether the fee is high enough to reduce output below the competitive level. Since it is not clear to me that the magnitude of Judge Will's adjustment was justified by antitrust considerations alone, I would include this issue with other matters to be considered on remand.

That said, I turn to the single entity issue, where the discussion of the majority is deserving of comment both as to substance and to procedure. My first reservation is procedural and concerns whether this issue may be reached at all. The majority announces an exception--without [**31] precedent to my knowledge--from the usual rules of waiver of issues on appeal. The exception applies, according to the majority, to "defendants in complex cases" without elaboration. Why we should have more forgiving policies for highly skilled and highly compensated counsel in big corporate cases than for pro se litigants or appointed counsel of perhaps lesser qualification is certainly unclear to me. Our earlier opinion in this case states that "the NBA did not contend in the district court that the NBA is a single entity, let alone that it is a single entity as a matter of law." Chicago Professional Sports Ltd. Partnership v. National Basketball Ass'n, 961 F.2d 667, 673 (7th Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 506 U.S. 954, 121 L. Ed. 2d 334, 113 S. Ct. 409 (1992). We also stated that:

Characterization is a creative rather than exact endeavor. Appellate review is accordingly deferential. The district court held a trial, heard the evidence, and concluded that the best characterization of the NBA is the third we have mentioned: a joint venture in the production of games but more like a cartel in the sale of its output. Whether this is the best characterization of professional sports is a subject that has divided [**32] courts and scholars for some years, making it hard to characterize the district judge's choice as clear error.

961 F.2d at 672. No one seems to have argued that the basic structure of the NBA has changed since that opinion. I think, therefore, that, despite dicta in our earlier opinion speculating that "perhaps the parties will join issue more fully [regarding the single entity status of the NBA] in the proceedings still to come in the district court," 961 F.2d at 673, there is a real question whether we can reach the single entity issue--fascinating though it may be.

However, on the assumption that the "single entity" question may be reached (and presumably will be reached on remand) a number of considerations will be relevant. Assuming as I must that the sole goal of antitrust is efficiency or, put another way, the maximization of total societal wealth, the question whether a sports league is a "single entity" turns on whether the actions of the league have any potential to lessen economic competition among the separately owned [*603] teams.<sup>1</sup> The fact that teams compete on the floor is more or less irrelevant to whether they compete economically--it is only their economic competition [**33] which is germane to antitrust analysis. In principle, of course, a sports league could actually be a single firm and the individual teams could be under unified ownership and management. Such a firm would, of course, be subject to scrutiny only under § 2 of the Sherman Act and not under § 1. From the point of view of wealth maximization, a league of independently-owned teams, if it is no more likely than a single firm to make inefficient management decisions, should be treated as a single entity. The single entity question thus would boil down to "whether member clubs of a sports league have legitimate economic interests of their own, independent of the league and each other." Sports Leagues Revisited at 127. It follows that a sports league, no matter what its ownership structure, can make inefficient decisions only if the individual teams have some chance of economic gain at the expense of the league.

[**34] Another form of the same question is whether a sports league is more like a single firm or like a joint venture. With efficiency the sole criterion, a joint venture warrants scrutiny for at least two reasons--(1) the venture could possess market power with respect to the jointly produced product (essentially act like a single firm with monopoly power) or (2) the fact that the venturers remain competitors in other arenas might either distort the way the joint product is managed or allow the venturers to use the joint product as a smokescreen behind which to cut deals to reduce competition in the other arenas. The most convincing "single entity" argument involving the NBA is that the teams produce only the joint product of "league basketball" and that there is thus no significant economic competition between them. NBA Br. at 25-27. If this is the case, the argument goes, type (2) concerns drop out and only type (1) concerns remain. Type (1) concerns, of course, are exactly those appropriate for § 2 analysis of a single firm.

There are, however, flaws in this single entity argument. The assumption underlying it is that league sports are a different and more desirable product than a [**35] disorganized collection of independently arranged games between teams. For this reason, it is contended that joining sports teams into a league is efficiency-enhancing and desirable. I will accept this premise.<sup>2</sup> It is perhaps true, as argued by the NBA and many commentators, that sports are different from many joint ventures because the individual teams cannot, even in principle, produce the product--league sports. However, the fact that cooperation is necessary to produce league basketball does not imply that the league will necessarily produce its product in the most efficient fashion. There is potential for inefficient decisionmaking regarding the joint product of "league basketball" even when the individual teams engage in no economic activity outside of the league. This potential arises because the structure of the league is such that all "owners" of the league must be "owners" of individual teams and decisions are made by a vote of the teams. This means that the league will not necessarily make efficient decisions about the number of teams fielded or, more generally, the competitive balance among teams. Thus, the fact that several teams are required to make a league does [**36] not necessarily imply that the current makeup of the league is the most desirable or "efficient" one.

The NBA's justification for its restriction of Bulls broadcasts centers on the need to maintain a competitive balance among teams. [*604] Such a balance is needed to ensure that the league provides high quality entertainment throughout the season so as to optimize competition with other forms of entertainment. Competitive balance is not the only contributor to the entertainment value of NBA basketball, however. Fan enjoyment of league sports depends on both the opportunity to identify with a local or favorite team and the thrill of watching the best quality of play. A single firm owning all of the teams would presumably arrange for the number of teams and their locations efficiently to maximize fan enjoyment of the league season. There is, however, no reason to expect that the [**37] current team owners will necessarily make such decisions efficiently, given their individual economic interests in the financial health of their own teams.

<sup>1</sup> See, e.g., Michael S. Jacobs, Professional Sports Leagues, Antitrust and the Single-Entity Theory: a Defense of the Status Quo, 67 Ind. L.J. 25 \(1991\); Gary R. Roberts, The Antitrust Status of Sports Leagues Revisited, 64 Tul. L. Rev. 117 \(1989\); Myron C. Grauer, The Use and Misuse of the Term "Consumer Welfare": Once More to the Mat on the Issue of Single Entity Status for Sports Leagues Under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 64 Tul. L. Rev. 71 \(1989\); Lee Goldman, Sports, Antitrust, and the Single Entity Theory, 63 Tul. L. Rev. 751 \(1989\); Gary R. Roberts, Sports Leagues and the Sherman Act: The Use and Abuse of Section 1 to Regulate Restraints on Intraleague Rivalry, 32 UCLA L. Rev. 219 \(1984\), for discussions of this issue.

<sup>2</sup> But the Green Bay Packers and the Chicago Bears played, presumably before enthusiastic crowds, before there was a National Football League.

It's not surprising that farflung fans want to watch the Bulls' superstars on a superstation. The NBA argues that the broadcasting of more Bulls games to these fans will disturb the competitive balance among teams. However, one can also speculate that, since sports viewing has become more of a television activity than an "in the flesh" activity, these fans might prefer to have a league composed of fewer, better teams (like the Bulls). If this were the case, league policies designed to shore up all of the current teams would be inefficient. The point, of course, is not that this speculation is necessarily correct, but that the efficient number of teams (or, more generally, the efficient competitive balance) may not be obtained as a matter of course given the current league ownership framework.

The team owners thus retain independent economic interests. This would be the case even if they did not compete for the revenues of the league. Teams do compete for broadcast revenues, however. "A conflicting economic interest between [**38] the league and an individual club can exist only when league revenues are distributed unequally among the member clubs based on club participation in the games generating the revenue." Sports Leagues and the Sherman Act at 297-99. When teams receive a disproportionate share of the broadcast revenues generated by their own games, such a situation exists.

The analysis of this issue is tricky, however, since decisions about how to allocate broadcasting revenues are made by the league. It may be that "member clubs of a league do not have any legitimate independent economic interests in the league product" and "each team has an ownership interest in every game" (including an equal a priori ownership interest in the broadcast rights to every game). Sports Leagues Revisited at 135-36. If this assumption is correct, then whatever arrangements for revenue distribution the league decides to make will be, like bonuses to successful salespeople in an ordinary firm, presumptively efficient. If, however, broadcast rights inure initially to the two teams participating in a particular game and if, as is certainly the case, some games are more attractive to fans than others, the league cannot [**39] be presumed to have made decisions allocating those broadcast revenues efficiently.

The analogy, within the context of an ordinary firm, is to allow the salespeople to vote on the bonuses each is to get. Each salesperson has some incentive, of course, to promote the overall efficiency of the firm on which his or her salary, or perhaps the value of his or her firm stock, depends and therefore to award the larger bonuses to the most productive salespersons. However, in this scenario each salesperson has two ways of maximizing personal wealth--increasing the overall efficiency of the firm and redistributing income within the firm.<sup>3</sup> [**40] The result of <sup>3</sup> Those favoring the single entity treatment of sports leagues frequently compare them to law firms, making the argument that sports leagues are like law firms, law firms are single entities, therefore sports leagues are single entities. See, e.g., Myron C. Grauer, Recognition of the National Football League as a Single Entity Under Section 1 of the Sherman Act: Implications of the Consumer Welfare Model, 82 Mich. L. Rev. 1, 23-35 \(1983\); Maj. Op. at 7-8. This argument is only valid, however, if law firms should be treated as single entities. If law firms do, in fact, have some of the same potential for inefficiencies as sports leagues because of the diverse economic interests of the partners, the economically correct solution is still to treat sports leagues as joint ventures. A mere analogy to law firms is not convincingly invoked by those seeking to defend their arguments on purely economic (rather than precedential) grounds.

Applying the same logic in reverse, there is considerable precedent for treating sports leagues as joint ventures. Nat'l Collegiate Athletic Assoc. v. Bd. of Regents of the Univ. of Oklahoma, 468 U.S. 85, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70, 104 S. Ct. 2948 (1984); Sullivan v. National Football League, 34 F.3d 1091, 1099 (1st Cir. 1994), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1190, 131 L. Ed. 2d 133, 115 S. Ct. 1252 \(1995\); Los Angeles Memorial Coliseum Comm'n v. National Football League, 726 F.2d 1381, 1388-90 (9th Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 990, 105 S. Ct. 397, 83 L. Ed. 2d 331 \(1984\); North American Soccer League v. NFL, 670 F.2d 1249, 1252 (2d Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1074, 74 L. Ed. 2d 639, 103 S. Ct. 499 \(1982\); Smith v. Pro Football, Inc., 193 U.S. App. D.C. 19, 593 F.2d 1173, 1179 (D.C. Cir. 1978); Levin v. National Basketball Ass'n, 385 F. Supp. 149, 150 (S.D.N.Y. 1974). Therefore,

[*605] the vote might not be to distribute bonuses in the most efficient fashion. The potential for this type of inefficiency is particularly great when, as with the NBA, the league is "the only game in town" so that a team does not have the option of going elsewhere if it is not receiving revenues commensurate with its contribution to the overall league product.<sup>4</sup> In any event, a group of team owners who do not share all revenues from all games might well make decisions that do not maximize the profit of the league as a whole.<sup>5</sup>

As this discussion demonstrates, determining whether the potential for inefficient decisionmaking survives within a joint venture because of the independent economic interests of the partners is extraordinarily complex and confusing. For this reason, a simple, if not courageous, way out of the problem might be to establish a legal presumption that a single entity cannot exist without single ownership. To avoid the complexities [*41] and confusions of attempted analysis, one might simply ordain that combinations that lack diverse economic interests should opt for joint ownership of a single enterprise to avoid antitrust problems. On the other hand, judges may want to play economist to the extent of resisting simplifying assumptions.

In any event, sports leagues argue that they must maintain independent ownership of the teams because separate ownership enhances the appearance of competitiveness demanded by fans. But the leagues cannot really expect the courts to aid them in convincing consumers that competition exists if it really does not. If consumers want economic competition between sports teams, then independent ownership and preservation of independent economic interests is likely an efficient choice for a sports league. But that choice, as with other joint ventures, brings with it the attendant antitrust risks. The NBA cannot have it both ways.

Relating all of this to the majority's treatment of the single entity issue, I see two problems with the majority analysis. First, as already noted, divorcing the question of single entity from the question of ownership is likely to lead to messy and inconsistent [*42] application of antitrust law. The bottom line may be that the inquiry into whether separate economic interests are maintained by the participants in a joint enterprise is likely to be no easier than a full Rule of Reason analysis.

Second, some of the majority's discussion of independent interests is puzzling. The majority contends that the district court "concluded that all cooperation among separately incorporated firms is forbidden by § 1 of the Sherman Act, except to the extent Copperweld permits." Maj. Op. at 7, citing Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 771, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 (1984). Copperweld concluded that a parent corporation and its wholly-owned subsidiary have a "complete unity of interest" and hence should be treated [*606] as a single entity. Here the district court simply concluded that the NBA, because it involved cooperation between separately-owned teams, was subject to antitrust analysis. Dist. Ct. Findings of Fact, Conclusions of Law and Opinion, NBA App. at 34a. This conclusion is a far cry from deciding that all cooperation among separately incorporated firms is forbidden.

I also cannot agree with the majority's analysis of the type of "unity [*43] of interest" required for single entity status. The majority states, Maj. Op. at 7, that "even a single firm contains many competing interests." The opinion goes on to cite the competition for salary and bonuses between division managers as an example. However, when Copperweld talks about unity of interests in the single entity context, I think it must be taken to mean unity of economic interests of the decisionmakers. See Copperweld, 467 U.S. at 769. A single firm does not evidence diverse economic interests to the outside world because final decisions are made by the owners or stockholders, who care only about the overall performance of the firm. Only because this is the case can single firms be assumed one might equally well argue that sports leagues have never been treated as single entities and, to the extent that law firms are like them, law firms should not be treated as single entities either.

<sup>4</sup>The hypothetical example of a team taking its broadcast rights elsewhere does seem to suggest, however, that broadcast rights are at bottom the property of the teams participating in a given game. Indeed, if the team does not own the broadcast rights to the games in which it participates, it is hard to understand what it means to own a team at all.

<sup>5</sup>See Herbert Hovenkamp, Exclusive Joint Ventures and Antitrust Policy, 1995 Colum. Bus. L. Rev. 1 (1995), for a general discussion of the ways in which joint ventures can act inefficiently either by excluding members (or, here perhaps, overincluding members) or by excluding products (superstation broadcasts, perhaps?).

to behave in the canonical profit-maximizing fashion. The diverse interests mentioned in the majority opinion seem as irrelevant to the antitrust analysis as is the on-court rivalry between teams in the NBA.

Thus, when Copperweld refers to conduct that "deprives the marketplace of the independent centers of decisionmaking that competition assumes," it does not refer to "decisionmakers" whose economic independence is only potential. The antitrust issue is really [**44] whether, as a result of some cooperative venture, economic interests which remain independent coordinate their decisions. As Copperweld notes, "the officers of a single firm are not separate economic actors pursuing separate economic interests . . . ." Id. Therefore, their joint decisionmaking is of no antitrust concern. Employees or divisions within a firm, on the other hand, may remain separate economic actors pursuing separate economic interests but they do not make the final decisions governing the firm's operations. They may compete for shares of the firm's revenues, but they do not decree how that revenue will be shared. Thus their conflict or cooperation does not pose antitrust issues either. Joint ventures, on the other hand, are subject to antitrust scrutiny precisely because separate economic interests are joined in decisionmaking, with the potential for distorted results.

As long as teams are individually owned and revenue is not shared in fixed proportion, the teams both retain independent economic interests and make decisions in concert. Where this is the case, there is a strong argument that sports leagues should be treated as joint ventures rather than [**45] single entities because there remains a potential that league policy will be made to satisfy the independent economic interests of some group of teams, rather than to maximize the overall performance of the league. Thus, it is possible, if more Bulls games were broadcast, league profits might increase. But, if the revenue from the broadcast of Bulls games goes disproportionately to the Bulls, the other league members may not vote for this more efficient result.

There may, of course, be cases in which independent ownership of the partners in a joint venture does not pose any real possibility of inefficient decisionmaking. This would be the case if the parties did not compete in any other arena and if all revenues were shared in fixed proportions among the partners. In general, however, a plausible case can be made for the proposition that independent ownership should presumptively preclude treatment as a single entity. This certainly does not mean, of course, that "all cooperation among separately incorporated firms is forbidden by § 1 of the Sherman Act," Maj. Op. at 7. It would mean only that such cooperation must ordinarily be justified under the Rule of Reason. Justification might [**46] not be more difficult than the elusive search for treatment as a single entity.

---

End of Document

Aurora Gas Co. v. Presque Isle Elec. & Gas Co-op

United States District Court for the Eastern District of Michigan, Northern Division

September 11, 1996, Decided ; September 11, 1996, Filed

Case No. 96-CV-10093-BC

Reporter

1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21815 *

AURORA GAS COMPANY, Plaintiff, v. PRESQUE ISLE ELECTRIC & GAS CO-OP, MARTIN THOMSON, ALLAN BRUDER, GLEN ALSO BROOKS, ROBERT WAGMEYER, SALLY KNOPF, ALLAN BARR, JOHN F. BROWN, ARTHUR OESCH, THOMAS SPAULDING, MELVIN BASEL, and RAYMOND WOZNIAK, jointly and severally, Defendants.

Disposition: [*1] Defendants' motion to dismiss DENIED. Defendants' motion for summary judgment DENIED.

Core Terms

---

Electric, municipalities, rates, state action doctrine, franchises, supervision, bids, pricing, defendants', leveraging, natural gas, regulated, allegations, predatory, motion to dismiss, public service commission, antitrust, interstate commerce, state policy, costs, summary judgment motion, summary judgment, anticompetitive, articulated, monopoly, public utility, private party, light bulb, purchases, immunity

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > General Overview

HN1 [+] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

In deciding a motion to dismiss the court must construe the complaint in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, accept all factual allegations as true, and determine whether the plaintiff undoubtedly can prove no set of facts in support of his claims that would entitle him to relief. A complaint need only give fair notice of what plaintiff's claim is and the ground upon which it rests. A judge may not grant a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss based on a disbelief of a complaint's factual allegations. While this standard is decidedly liberal, it requires more than a bare assertion of legal conclusions. In practice, a complaint must contain either direct or inferential allegations respecting all the material elements to sustain a recovery under some viable legal theory.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Evidence > ... > Documentary Evidence > Writings > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

HN2 [down] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 56, summary judgment is proper when there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Where the moving party has carried its burden of showing that the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, admissions and affidavits in the record construed favorably to the non-moving party, do not raise a genuine issue of material fact for trial, entry of summary judgment is appropriate. Summary judgment is not appropriate when the evidence presents a sufficient disagreement to require submission to a jury. The existence of some factual dispute does not defeat a properly supported motion for summary judgment; the disputed factual issue must be material.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN3 [down] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

The state action doctrine permits the states to impose certain anticompetitive restraints that would otherwise violate the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq. The Supreme Court has established a two-prong test for determining when a defendant's actions are entitled to the state action exemption. First, the anticompetitive behavior must derive from a clearly articulated state policy. Second, when the actor is a private party, as opposed to a municipality, the anticompetitive behavior must be actively supervised.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > Antitrust Immunity

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > General Overview

HN4 [down] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

In seeking and obtaining a permitted monopoly, the state action doctrine does not protect against unlawful activity in pursuit of that monopoly.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

HN5 Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

In the absence of active supervision there can be no state-action immunity for what were otherwise private price fixing arrangements. The possibility that the state could supervise the challenged activity is not sufficient to establish active supervision.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Antitrust Issues > Antitrust Immunity

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Electric Power Rates > Retail Rates

HN6 Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

The active supervision prong of the state action doctrine requires active state supervision. Active municipal supervision is not sufficient.

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Electric Power Rates > Retail Rates

Governments > Local Governments > Claims By & Against

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Energy & Utilities Law > Electric Power Industry > Electric Power Rates > General Overview

Governments > Local Governments > Employees & Officials

HN7 Electric Power Rates, Retail Rates

The Local Government Antitrust Act of 1984, 15 U.S.C.S. § 35\(a\), bars recovery in an antitrust action against any local government, or official or employee thereof acting in an official capacity. Suit against private parties is likewise barred in any claim against a person based on any official action directed by a local government, or official or employee thereof acting in an official capacity. 15 U.S.C.S. § 36\(a\).

Counsel: For AURORA GAS COMPANY, plaintiff: David A. Ettinger, Howard B. Iwrey, Honigman, Miller, Detroit, MI.

For PRESQUE ISLE ELECTRIC AND GAS CO-OP, MARTIN THOMSON, ALLAN BRUDER, GLEN ALSO BROOKS, ROBERT WAGMEYER, SALLY KNOPF, ALLAN BARR, JOHN F. BROWN, ARTHUR OESCH, THOMAS D. SPAULDING, MELVIN BASEL, RAYMOND WOZNIAK, defendants: Gregory L. Curtner, Mark T. Boonstra, Miller, Canfield, Detroit, MI. David P. Werth, Richard G. Boyce, Boyce, White, Alpena, MI.

For PRESQUE ISLE ELECTRIC AND GAS CO-OP, MARTIN THOMSON, ALLAN BRUDER, GLEN ALSO BROOKS, ROBERT WAGMEYER, SALLY KNOPF, ALLAN BARR, JOHN F. BROWN, ARTHUR OESCH, THOMAS D. SPAULDING, MELVIN BASEL, RAYMOND WOZNIAK, counter-claimants: Gregory L. Curtner, Mark T. Boonstra, Miller, Canfield, Detroit, MI. David P. Werth, Richard G. Boyce, Boyce, White, Alpena, MI.

For AURORA GAS COMPANY, counter-defendant: David A. Ettinger, Howard B. Iwrey, Honigman, Miller, Detroit, MI.

Judges: ROBERT H. CLELAND, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

Opinion by: ROBERT H. CLELAND

Opinion

---

ORDER DENYING DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO DISMISS OR FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

I. Introduction

[*2] This matter is before the court on defendants' Motion to Dismiss or for Summary Judgment. The defendants are Presque Isle Electric & Gas Co-op ("Presque Isle Electric"), members of its board of directors, a former member of the board of directors, and the general manager of Presque Isle Electric (collectively "defendants"). Plaintiff Aurora Gas Company ("plaintiff") has timely responded.

Plaintiff and Presque Isle Electric are Michigan corporations which distribute natural gas in northeast Michigan. Plaintiff and Presque Isle Electric competed for franchises to provide residential gas distribution from certain municipalities, including: Village of Atlanta, Village of Hillman, Canada Creek, Ranch,<sup>1</sup> Allis Township, Case Township, Village of Millersburg. Local gas distribution companies ("LDC's") compete for local residential distribution of natural gas by obtaining multi-year franchises or franchises of indefinite duration from various municipalities. The franchises permit the LDC's to lay gas distribution pipes in the public right-of-way. There are additional regulatory barriers to entry of the market once that market is receiving service, including a certificate of convenience [*3] and necessity under M.C.L.A. § 464.501 et seq. ("Act 69"). The franchises exist to allow a monopoly to the LDC awarded the franchise.

Presque Isle Electric also provides distribution of electric power in certain communities within the following counties: Alcona, Alpena, Emmet, Montmorency, Oscoda, Otsego, Cheboygan and Presque Isle.

In 1994, Presque Isle Electric first began to compete for natural gas franchises in northeast Michigan, and began, plaintiff alleges, to attempt "to extend its local electric power distribution monopoly power into the local and residential natural gas distribution markets." (Compl. at P 13.) In April, 1994, Presque Isle Electric attempted to purchase plaintiff, but plaintiff refused. (Compl. at P 14.) Plaintiff asserts that Presque Isle Electric's bids were successful only because they reflected unlawful predatory prices and/or were accepted as a result of fraudulent [*4] statements by Defendants about, among other things, Presque Isle's costs and Aurora's costs, the ability of Presque Isle's pipelines to deliver an adequate amount of gas to the communities, and Presque Isle's intent not to raise its predatory prices in subsequent years.

(Compl. at P 15.) Presque Isle Electric's bids included a rate pegged to the rate of Michigan Consolidated Gas Company's ("Mich Con's") regulated rate. Presque Isle Electric's rate floats 5 cents per MCF below Mich Con's rate. (Def. Br. at 4.) Presque Isle Electric avers that plaintiff's gas rates are approximately 50% higher than Presque Isle Electric's. (Id.) Plaintiff alleges that these rates are substantially below Presque Isle Electric's actual costs. (Compl. at PP 16, 24.)

Plaintiff further alleges that Presque Isle Electric has either foreclosed or attempted to foreclose competition in bidding for franchises in Village of Atlanta, Village of Hillman, Canada Creek Ranch, Allis Township, Case Township, Village of Millersburg,<sup>2</sup> and others by spreading false rumors that it would be purchasing plaintiff. (Compl. at P 16.) Plaintiff also avers that Presque Isle Electric has used the money gained from [*5] overcharging its electricity customers to monopolize or attempt to monopolize the gas distribution market. (Compl. at P 17.)

---

<sup>1</sup> Canada Creek Ranch is a private subdivision association. (Pl. Br., Exh. A, Tierney Aff. at P 10.)

<sup>2</sup> Of these, Presque Isle Electric has secured franchises in all but Allis Township. Its application to Allis Township has not yet been granted; plaintiff maintains the current franchise.

Counts one and two of plaintiff's verified complaint allege that defendants' actions amount to monopolization by predatory pricing, which violates federal antitrust law. Count three avers that defendants have attempted to use their electric power distribution monopoly to gain improper advantage in the gas distribution market, in violation of federal antitrust law. Count four states that defendants' actions violate the Michigan Antitrust Reform Act, M.C.L.A. § 445.773 et seq. Counts five and six allege that defendants tortiously interfered with prospective business advantage and with contractual relationship by, among other things, falsely representing to various municipalities that Presque Isle [*6] Electric would be purchasing plaintiff. Count seven alleges that the individual defendants--members of Presque Isle Electric's board of directors, a former member, and the general manager--specifically directed the unlawful activities of Presque Isle Electric.

II. Standard

The standard to be applied in deciding a motion to dismiss is as follows:

HN1[ This Court must construe the complaint in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, accept all factual allegations as true, and determine whether the plaintiff undoubtedly can prove no set of facts in support of his claims that would entitle him to relief. A complaint need only give "fair notice of what plaintiff's claim is and the grounds upon which it rests." A judge may not grant a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b) (6) motion to dismiss based on a disbelief of a complaint's factual allegations. While this standard is decidedly liberal, it requires more than a bare assertion of legal conclusions. "In practice, a . . . . complaint must contain either direct or inferential allegations respecting all the material elements to sustain a recovery under some viable legal theory."

*In Re DeLorean Motor Co., 991 F.2d 1236, 1240 (6th [*7] Cir. 1993)* (internal citations omitted) (emphasis in original).

HN2[ Under Rule 56 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, summary judgment is proper when there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. "Where the moving party has carried its burden of showing that the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, admissions and affidavits in the record construed favorably to the non-moving party, do not raise a genuine issue of material fact for trial, entry of summary judgment is appropriate." Gutierrez v. Lynch, 826 F.2d 1534, 1536 (6th Cir. 1987) (citing Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 (1986)). Summary judgment is not appropriate when "the evidence presents a sufficient disagreement to require submission to a jury." Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 251-52, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 (1986). The existence of some factual dispute does not defeat a properly supported motion for summary judgment; the disputed factual issue must be material.

III. Discussion

A. State Action Doctrine <sup>3</sup>

[*8] Defendants contend that the state action doctrine immunizes its actions; plaintiff argues that the state action doctrine does not apply to defendants' alleged unlawful behavior.

The Supreme Court enunciated HN3[ the state action doctrine in Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 87 L. Ed. 315, 63 S. Ct. 307 (1943). That doctrine permits the states to impose certain anticompetitive restraints that would otherwise violate the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1 et seq. In Parker, the state permitted certain anticompetitive actions to occur in the raisin production and distribution markets in order to stabilize prices. The Court stated that "we find nothing in the language of the Sherman Act or in its history which suggests that its purpose was to restrain

---

<sup>3</sup> The court will assume without deciding that the state action doctrine applies with respect to defendants' alleged actions in their bid to Canada Creek Ranch, although it is a private subdivision association, rather than a branch of state or local government.

a state or its officers or agents from activities directed by its legislature." Parker, 317 U.S. at 350-51. The Court concluded that because the state created the machinery needed to establish the program and enforces the program, although the organization of the program itself is proposed and voted on by producers, the state action of imposing a restraint on trade was not unlawful under the Sherman Act.

The Supreme Court has established [*9] a two-prong test for determining when a defendant's actions are entitled to the state action exemption. First, "the anticompetitive behavior [must] derive from a clearly articulated state policy". Riverview Investments, Inc. v. Ottawa Community Improvement Corp., 769 F.2d 324 \(6th Cir. 1985\), modified, 774 F.2d 162. Second, when the actor is a private party, as opposed to a municipality, the anticompetitive behavior must be actively supervised. Id. See California Retail Liquor Dealers Ass'n v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97, 63 L. Ed. 2d 233, 100 S. Ct. 937 \(1980\); Town of Hallie v. City of Eau Claire, 471 U.S. 34, 85 L. Ed. 2d 24, 105 S. Ct. 1713 \(1985\); Southern Motor Carriers Rate Conference, Inc. v. United States, 471 U.S. 48, 85 L. Ed. 2d 36, 105 S. Ct. 1721 \(1985\).

1. State Policy

The court will first address whether the challenged behavior "derives from a clearly articulated state policy." Plaintiff and defendants disagree about what the challenged activity in this case is. Defendants highlight that the municipalities in each instance approved of Presque Isle Electric's prices as included in its bids and that the grant of those franchises is [*10] considered state action. Plaintiff contends that the challenged activity is not the award of franchises, but rather Presque Isle Electric's use of predatory prices in its bids.

If the question presented to the court is whether the municipalities had the authority to grant franchises (monopolies) to distribute natural gas, the state action doctrine would likely apply. The State of Michigan does permit municipalities to grant franchises for the distribution of power--electric or gas. M.C.L.A. § 460.601. However, based on the court's reading of the complaint, the question presented is whether defendants' alleged behavior of predatory pricing violates antitrust law. The state action doctrine does not protect defendants from suit in such an instance. HN4↑ In seeking and obtaining a permitted monopoly, the state action doctrine does not protect against unlawful activity in pursuit of that monopoly.

As noted in the Supreme Court cases cited above, where private parties act, the court must look at the nature of the challenged actions to determine whether the state action doctrine applies. Midcal, 445 U.S. at 105 ("First, the challenged restraint must be 'one clearly articulated and [*11] affirmatively expressed as state policy.'"); Town of Hallie, 471 U.S. at 38-39 ("To obtain exemption, municipalities must demonstrate that their anticompetitive activities were authorized by the State 'pursuant to state policy to displace competition with regulation or monopoly public service.'") In this case, those challenged actions are the bids in which Presque Isle Electric allegedly submitted bids below their costs (predatory pricing). (Compl. at PP 15, 24, 25, 30.)

Michigan has a clear policy to permit municipalities to grant monopolies to firms providing electric or gas power. Michigan has established a public utilities commission which is charged with the duty of fixing the rates and charges of public utilities within the state. Michigan statute provides:

The public service commission is vested with complete power and jurisdiction to regulate all public utilities in the state except a municipally owned utility, the owner of a renewable resource power production facility as provided in section 6d (footnote omitted), and except as otherwise restricted by law. The public service commission is vested with the power and jurisdiction to regulate all rates, fares, fees, [*12] charges, services, rules, conditions of service, and all other matters pertaining to the formation, operation, or direction of such public utilities. The public service commission is further granted the power and jurisdiction to hear and pass upon all matters pertaining to, necessary, or incident to the regulation of all public utilities, including . . . gas companies . . .

M.C.L.A. § 460.6.

The commission may provide advice to any municipality regarding a municipally-owned utility, but the commission does not have the power to change or alter any rates or charges by the municipality, unless the municipality or utility operating under franchise seeks the commission's assistance in that regard. M.C.L.A. § 460.54. Section 460.54 reads in part:

In no case shall the commission have power to change or alter the rates or charges fixed in, or regulated by, any franchise or agreement heretofore or hereafter granted or made by any city, village or township. It shall be competent for any municipality and any public utility operating within the limits of said municipality, whether such utility is operating under the terms of a franchise, or otherwise, to join in submitting [*13] to the commission any question involving the fixing or determination of rates or charges, or the making of rules or conditions of service, and the commission shall thereupon be empowered, and it shall be its duty to make full investigation as to all matters so submitted and to fix and establish such reasonable maximum rates and charges, and prescribe such rules and conditions of service and make such determination and order relative thereto as shall be just and reasonable.

The provision of gas power and the rates charged are thus highly regulated by the state. As noted above, however, it is the rates submitted in Presque Isle Electric's bids that are challenged. Although the public service commission may have a clearly articulated policy of regulating the rates of public utilities, it does not regulate the bidding process by which municipalities award franchises. The state policy of regulation is not addressed to and does not encompass the prices submitted in those bids, whether predatory or otherwise. It is the bids of Presque Isle Electric that are the challenged conduct, not the municipalities' grant of a franchise.

This is not, as defendants argue, "hair-splitting". (Reply [*14] Br. at 1.) The court must look only at the challenged activity, not at a general regulatory scheme for the industry. For example, the Supreme Court was faced with a similar case in Cantor v. Detroit Edison Co., 428 U.S. 579, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1141, 96 S. Ct. 3110 \(1976\). In Cantor, the plaintiff challenged the practice of the defendant to provide light bulbs to residential customers. The price of the light bulbs was included as part of Detroit Edison's charged rates. Although the "distribution of electricity in Michigan is pervasively regulated by the Michigan Public Service Commission", the Court focused on the fact that "the distribution of electric light bulbs in Michigan is unregulated." Cantor, 428 U.S. at 584. Because the Supreme Court concentrates on a narrower view of "challenged activity" than defendants urge, the court must define the "challenged activity" in this case as predatory pricing rather than the provision of natural gas.

Defendants' arguments that the rates submitted by Presque Isle Electric were not set by it are unpersuasive. First, defendants contend that the municipalities, rather than Presque Isle Electric, set the rates to be charged users. There is [*15] no evidence in the record, as plaintiff points out, that the municipalities did anything other than adopt the rates as set forth in Presque Isle Electric's bids.<sup>4</sup> Nor is there any evidence that the municipalities had any hand in setting the bid. Second, defendants assert that because Presque Isle Electric's rates are pegged to the Mich Con rates, which must be approved by the public service commission, Michigan "effectively" regulates Presque Isle Electric's rates. The court does not find this argument persuasive, either. A claim of predatory pricing is hinged on a claim that a competitor is pricing its goods or services below marginal or average variable costs. That Presque Isle Electric's rates are tied to that of a competitor says nothing about whether Presque Isle Electric is pricing its gas at below Presque Isle Electric's relevant costs. The public service commission factors in the relevant costs in approving a company's rates--there is no evidence that Presque Isle Electric's rates are lower or higher than those of Mich Con.

[*16] Accordingly, the statutes cited by defendants, though they clearly demonstrate pervasive regulation of public utilities, are inapposite. Therefore, given the allegations in plaintiff's complaint and the evidence in the record,

---

<sup>4</sup> Although the court has serious doubts as to whether Martin A. Thomson's Declaration is sufficient to provide facts necessary to support a motion for summary judgment, the court finds that even if the declaration is sufficient, there is a genuine issue of material fact. John Tierney's affidavit, attached to plaintiff's brief as exhibit B, states that municipalities do not set rates included in bids. (Tierney Aff. at PP 14, 15.)

defendants are entitled neither to their motion to dismiss nor to their motion for summary judgment on the grounds that the state action doctrine applies.

2. Active Supervision

Having found that the state action doctrine does not apply in this case because the State of Michigan does not have a clearly articulated policy authorizing predatory pricing in submitting bids to obtain a natural gas distribution franchise, the court will additionally address the second prong of the state action doctrine as it applies to private parties. As noted above, the Supreme Court requires proof of a clearly articulated policy and active supervision of the challenged behavior in order to invoke the state action doctrine. Midcal, 445 U.S. at 105 ("[The Court's earlier] decisions establish two standards for antitrust immunity under Parker v. Brown. . . . Second, the policy must be 'actively supervised' by the State itself.").

Defendants contend that since the [*17] individual municipalities set Presque Isle Electric's rates and since the municipalities granted Presque Isle Electric franchises, the municipalities were the effective decision makers. Thus, defendants assert, the court does not need to determine whether there was active supervision of the challenged behavior. Defendants accurately state that where the municipality is acting pursuant to a clearly articulated state policy, the active supervision prong of the state action doctrine does not apply. Town of Hallie, 471 U.S. at 46 ("We now conclude that the active state supervision requirement should not be imposed in cases in which the actor is a municipality."). If plaintiff were challenging the municipalities' grant of natural gas distribution franchises, this rule of law would apply. However, plaintiff's complaint clearly seeks to hold defendants liable for their alleged predatory pricing in seeking to obtain those franchises. Therefore, defendants, not the municipalities, are the relevant actors and the active supervision prong applies in this case.

The Supreme Court most recently addressed the "active supervision" requirement in *FTC v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 504 U.S. 621, [*18] 119 L. Ed. 2d 410, 112 S. Ct. 2169 (1992)*. The Court stated:

Our decisions make clear that the purpose of the active supervision inquiry is not to determine whether the State has met some normative standard, such as efficiency, in its regulatory practices. Its purpose is to determine whether the State has exercised sufficient independent judgment and control so that the details of the rates or prices have been established as a product of deliberate state intervention, not simply by agreement among private parties. Much as in causation inquiries, the analysis asks whether the State has played a substantial role in determining the specifics of the economic policy. The question is not how well state regulation works but whether the anticompetitive scheme is the State's own.

Ticor, 504 U.S. at 634-35. In Ticor, the Supreme Court considered whether Wisconsin and Montana actively supervised the setting of rates for title insurance companies. Both states had "negative option rules" which gave the states veto power over rates submitted to the state. In the case of Wisconsin's scheme, rates went into effect without the states having done much more than checking the supporting [*19] data for accuracy. The states did not substantively scrutinize the rates. The Court found that HN5 [↑] "in the absence of active supervision, in fact, there can be no state-action immunity for what were otherwise private price fixing arrangements." Ticor, 504 U.S. at 638.

Therefore, the possibility that the state could supervise the challenged activity is not sufficient to establish active supervision. The Ticor Court elaborated:

Where prices or rates are set as an initial matter by private parties, subject only to a veto if the State chooses to exercise it, the party claiming the immunity must show that state officials have undertaken the necessary steps to determine the specifics of the pricesetting or ratesetting scheme. The mere potential for state supervision is not an adequate substitute for a decision by the State.

Ticor, 504 U.S. at 638. Defendants argue that state supervision exists in this case because Presque Isle Electric's rates are pegged to Mich Con's rates, which are set by the public service commission. There is no argument--or evidence--that the state actively supervised the setting of Presque Isle Electric's rates, as submitted to municipalities [*20] in its bids.

Defendants also contend that the municipalities' grant of franchises to Presque Isle Electric essentially set the rate charged to users, and thus, that the municipalities' actions suffice to fulfill the second prong of the state action doctrine. The Sixth Circuit has directly held that HN6 the active supervision prong requires active state supervision. Active municipal supervision is not sufficient. Riverview Investments, Inc. v. Ottawa Community Improvement Corp., 774 F.2d 162, 163 (6th Cir. 1985); City Communications, Inc. v. City of Detroit, 660 F. Supp. 932, 935 (E.D. Mich. 1987).

Because defendants have not pointed to any active state supervision of Presque Isle Electric's bids, the state action doctrine does not immunize them. Thus, defendants are not entitled to their motion to dismiss or to their motion for summary judgment on this claim.

3. Leveraging Claim

Defendants contend that plaintiff's claim that defendants sought to leverage their monopoly power in the distribution of electricity to gain improper advantage in natural gas distribution should be dismissed because it is barred by the state action doctrine. Defendants assert that the state [*21] action doctrine applies since the natural gas distribution market is not a competitive one and because it "makes no sense to suggest that one can leverage monopoly power from one regulatory area into another." (Def. Br. at 14.)

The Supreme Court addressed the state action doctrine in the context of a leveraging claim in Cantor v. Detroit Edison Co., 428 U.S. 579, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1141, 96 S. Ct. 3110 (1976). In Cantor, the plaintiff alleged that Detroit Edison was attempting to leverage its monopoly power in the distribution of electricity to gain an improper advantage in the market for light bulbs. Detroit Edison was the only supplier of electricity in southeastern Michigan; as part of its rate structure, it included the price of light bulbs that it supplied to its residential customers. The rate structure was approved by the Michigan Public Service Commission and could not be altered without permission of the commission. Detroit Edison supplied approximately 50% of the standard size light bulbs to residential customers.

The Supreme Court applied the state action doctrine as enunciated in the cases discussed earlier and found that there was no state policy regarding provision [*22] of light bulbs by utilities. The Court likewise did not find active state supervision because the choice to provide light bulbs as part of its service was Detroit Edison's choice, not the state's.

Because the state action doctrine applies as explained above to the leveraging claim, the court finds that defendants are not entitled to dismissal of or summary judgment on plaintiff's leveraging claim. Defendants have not alleged or provided evidence to demonstrate any active state supervision of the electric rates it charges other than to make the same allegations they did regarding gas rates. There is no evidence that the public service commission ever looked at, examined, analyzed, or approved of Presque Isle Electric's electricity rates. Accordingly, the state action doctrine does not immunize defendants against the leveraging claim.

Defendants' argument that plaintiff's leveraging claim should be dismissed because one cannot leverage monopoly power from one regulated area to another also fails to convince. The cases cited by defendants to support this proposition fail to support it. In Berkey Photo, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 603 F.2d 263 (2d Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 444 [*23] U.S. 1093, 62 L. Ed. 2d 783, 100 S. Ct. 1061 (1980), the Second Circuit discussed monopoly leveraging in various markets relating to photography. It described leveraging as a firm "using its monopoly power in one market to gain a competitive advantage in another, albeit without an attempt to monopolize the second market." Berkey Photo, 603 F.2d at 275. Because Berkey Photo and Eastman Kodak competed in competitive, not highly regulated, markets, the Second Circuit's opinion cannot be read as disapproving of leveraging claims in regulated markets. The focus of the leveraging claim is the use of economic power--there is no evidence or argument that firms in heavily regulated industries do not possess or cannot use economic power in ways deemed improper under the Sherman Act.

Likewise, in International Audiotext Network, Inc. v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co., 893 F. Supp. 1207 (S.D.N.Y. 1994), aff'd, 62 F.3d 69 (1995), the district court considered whether AT&T attempted to leverage its near-monopoly over overseas calls into the United States to inhibit competition among information providers. Again, the court did not make any statements in its opinion that would limit [*24] leveraging claims to firms competing in at least one highly competitive market.

Because the allegations in the complaint are sufficient to withstand a motion to dismiss on the basis of the state action doctrine and on the basis of defendants' economic argument, the court will not grant defendants' motion to dismiss. Similarly, there is no evidence in the record, as it stands now, to overcome this result. Therefore, defendants' motion for summary judgment should be denied.

4. State Antitrust Claims

Defendants maintain that the Michigan Antitrust Reform Act ("MARA") largely mirrors the Sherman Act and that Michigan courts rely on federal court interpretations of the Sherman Act in construing MARA. On this basis, defendants argue that the state action doctrine bars plaintiff's state antitrust claims. Plaintiff does not directly address this argument.

For the reasons stated above, the state action doctrine does not immunize defendants in this case. There is no articulated state policy regulating or removing competition from the bidding process for natural gas franchises. There is no active state supervision of the bidding process. Defendants cannot succeed under either prong [*25] of the state action doctrine, and accordingly, their motion to dismiss and motion for summary judgment should be denied.

B. Local Government Antitrust Act of 1984

Defendants argue that the Local Government Antitrust Act of 1984 ("LGAA") protects them against antitrust actions because they are acting pursuant to the directions of the municipalities which granted Presque Isle Electric franchises. HN7 The LGAA bars recovery in an antitrust action against "any local government, or official or employee thereof acting in an official capacity." 15 U.S.C. § 35\(a\). Suit against private parties is likewise barred "in any claim against a person based on any official action directed by a local government, or official or employee thereof acting in an official capacity." 15 U.S.C. § 36\(a\).

Plaintiff contends that the LGAA does not apply because no municipality directed defendants to submit the bids that they did. The court agrees. If defendants submitted bids which set rates at below Presque Isle Electric's costs, as plaintiff alleges, they were not directed to do so by anyone. Thus, by the express terms of the LGAA, it does not apply to defendants' allegedly anticompetitive behavior. [*26] Further, the case cited to by defendants, Sandcrest Outpatient Services v. Cumberland County Hospital System, Inc., 853 F.2d 1139 (4th Cir. 1988), used the state action doctrine to determine whether the LGAA applied to a private party. As noted previously, the state action doctrine does not apply in this case. Therefore, defendants are not entitled either to their motion to dismiss or their motion for summary judgment on the grounds that the LGAA bars suit.

C. Interstate Commerce Requirement

Defendants contend that the challenged conduct must substantially affect interstate commerce, and that in this case, there is no such effect because Presque Isle Electric purchases "all or virtually all of [its] natural gas" locally. Therefore, defendants assert, there is only an incidental effect on interstate commerce. Plaintiff maintains that the court should look at the effect of interstate commerce that results from the actions of plaintiff. Plaintiff claims that due to Presque Isle Electric's predatory pricing, it has had to substantially reduce its purchases of natural gas and equipment from out-of-state. (Pl. Br., Exh. A, Tierney Aff. at PP 16-18.)

The court finds that [*27] plaintiff has sufficiently alleged and proved a substantial effect on interstate commerce to withstand a motion to dismiss and a motion for summary judgment. In James R. Snyder Co. v. Associated General Contractors of America, Detroit Chapter, Inc., 677 F.2d 1111 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1015, 74 L. Ed. 2d 508, 103 S. Ct. 374 (1982), the Sixth Circuit found that the defendant's anticompetitive behavior affected the purchases plaintiff would have made from out-of-state. Based on this evidence, the court concluded that defendant's behavior did affect interstate commerce such that the district court had jurisdiction:

A substantial amount of products which were involved in plaintiffs' businesses was purchased from out of state. Plaintiffs' purchases of those products decreased as result of the defendants' conduct. Therefore, the targeted activity (labor) as shown to have been interrelated with a specified aspect of interstate commerce (purchase of out-of-state products), and defendants' conduct was shown to have had a not insubstantial effect on plaintiffs' purchases of those products from interstate commerce.

James R. Snyder, 677 F.2d at 1115. This [*28] case is closely analogous. Taking the allegations in plaintiff's complaint as true, and the evidence in the record in the light most favorable to plaintiff, the court finds that there is a substantial enough effect on interstate commerce to confer jurisdiction on the court.

D. Tortious Interference Claims

Defendants contend that plaintiff cannot establish one of the prongs necessary to set forth a tortious interference claim--that defendants acted "illegally, unethically, or fraudulently". Defendants claim that since they are heavily regulated in the distribution both of electricity and of natural gas, that they acted with "legal justification". Plaintiff counters with the argument that it has alleged fraudulent activity in the complaint--that defendants falsely told representatives of certain municipalities that Presque Isle Electric was going to purchase plaintiff, that Presque Isle Electric would reliably provide natural gas to residents, that plaintiff had much higher costs than Presque Isle Electric, and that Presque Isle Electric would not raise prices after securing a franchise. (Compl. at P 49.) Taken as true, the allegations set forth a claim of fraudulent activity, [*29] so the motion to dismiss should be denied. As relates to a motion for summary judgment, there is no evidence in the record either to support or to dispute these claims. Based on the existing record, defendants are not entitled to summary judgment.

IV. Conclusion

Accordingly, for the reasons stated above, IT IS ORDERED that defendants' motion to dismiss is hereby DENIED.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that defendants' motion for summary judgment is hereby DENIED.

September 11, 1996

ROBERT H. CLELAND

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

Crosby v. Hospital Auth.

United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit

September 11, 1996, Decided

No. 95-8187

Reporter

93 F.3d 1515 *; 1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 23886 **; 1996-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,563; 10 Fla. L. Weekly Fed. C 334

R. Derry CROSBY, Plaintiff-Appellant, v. HOSPITAL AUTHORITY OF VALDOSTA AND LOWNDES COUNTY, D/B/A South Georgia Medical Center, Earl L. Creech, M.D., John R. Kendrick, M.D., Oscar E. Aguero, M.D., Archie L. Griffin, et al., Defendants-Appellees.

Subsequent History: [**1] As Amended. Certiorari Denied March 17, 1997, Reported at: 1997 U.S. LEXIS 1659.

Prior History: Appeal from the United States District Court for the Middle District of Georgia. (No. 90-CV-23-VAL). Wilbur D. Owens, Jr., Judge.

Disposition: AFFIRMED.

Core Terms

---

immunity, state action, political subdivision, hospital authority, municipality, articulated, recommendations, medical staff, supervision, purposes, anticompetitive conduct, staff, local government, peer review committee, entity, district court, state policy, authorities, orthopedic, decisions, staff privileges, private party, credentialing, Bylaws, doctrine of immunity, sovereign immunity, challenged action, staff member, peer review, Sherman Act

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

Healthcare Law > ... > Actions Against Facilities > Defenses > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

HN1 [blue icon] Appellate Review, Standards of Review

An appellate court reviews de novo a district court's grant of summary judgment.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

**HN2** Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Under the state action immunity doctrine, also known as the Parker doctrine, states are immune from federal antitrust law for their actions as sovereign.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Governments > Local Governments > Claims By & Against

**HN3** Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

The state action immunity doctrine does not apply directly to a state's political subdivisions because subdivisions are not themselves sovereign; they do not receive all the federal deference of the states that create them. Accordingly, actions by the state and actions by municipalities are evaluated under different standards.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Scope

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Claims By & Against

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Governments > Local Governments > Claims By & Against

Governments > Public Improvements > General Overview

**HN4** Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

The Parker doctrine exempts anticompetitive conduct engaged in as an act of government by the state as sovereign, or by its subdivisions pursuant to state policy to displace competition with regulation or monopoly public service.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Governments > Local Governments > Claims By & Against

Governments > Local Governments > Duties & Powers

**HN5** Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Under the Town of Hallie test, a municipality is entitled to state action immunity if it acts pursuant to clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed state policy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Governments > Local Governments > Claims By & Against

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Claims By & Against

HN6[] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Private parties are entitled to less federal deference than either the state or its political subdivisions. When a private party seeks the protection of state action immunity, it must show, under the Midcal test, both that (1) the challenged restraint was clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy; and (2) the policy was actively supervised by the state.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Governments > Local Governments > Claims By & Against

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

HN7[] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

A greater level of state involvement in the anticompetitive conduct must be demonstrated if the defendant is a private party seeking immunity rather than a political subdivision. If the defendant is a "political subdivision," it travels under the single-prong Town of Hallie test. If the defendant is a private party, it travels under the two-prong Midcal test.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Governments > Local Governments > Claims By & Against

Governments > Local Governments > Finance

HN8[] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Once it is clear that state authorization exists, there is no need to require the state to supervise actively the municipality's execution of what is a properly delegated function for purposes of state action immunity.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Governments > Local Governments > Claims By & Against

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > General Overview

HN9[] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

In determining whether a private actor may claim state action immunity, a court must examine the state's statutes to determine whether the actor is a "political subdivision," that is, whether imposition of the active state supervision requirement is necessary to determine whether the challenged actions are those of the state as sovereign.

Governments > Local Governments > Administrative Boards

HN10[] Local Governments, Administrative Boards

See O.C.G.A. § 31-7-72.

Governments > Local Governments > Administrative Boards

HN11[ Local Governments, Administrative Boards

See O.C.G.A. § 31-7-75.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Governments > Local Governments > Claims By & Against

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Claims By & Against

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

HN12[ Antitrust & Trade Law, Exemptions & Immunities

The definition of "political subdivisions" for purposes of state sovereign immunity does not control its definition for purposes of antitrust state action immunity. A court focuses instead on whether the nexus between the state and the hospital authority is sufficiently strong that there is little real danger that the hospital authority is involved in a private price-fixing arrangement.

Governments > Local Governments > Administrative Boards

Torts > ... > Punitive Damages > Availability > Governmental Entities

HN13[ Local Governments, Administrative Boards

The Georgia Supreme Court summarizes factors tending to establish a hospital authority's governmental nature. The factors include that it is a creature of statute; that it is defined as a "public body corporate and politic"; that its board is appointed by the governing body of the relevant political subdivision or subdivisions; that it is tax exempt; that it is deemed to exercise public and essential governmental functions; that it may exercise the power of eminent domain; that it receives tax revenues; and that the governing bodies of the relevant political subdivisions have a role in determining the disposition of its property upon dissolution.

Governments > Local Governments > Claims By & Against

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

93 F.3d 1515, *1515LÁ996 U.S. App. LEXIS 23886, **1

Governments > Local Governments > Administrative Boards

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Claims By & Against

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Covenants not to Compete > General Overview

HN14 [blue icon] Local Governments, Claims By & Against

Georgia's hospital authorities are political subdivisions for state action immunity purposes.

Governments > Local Governments > Administrative Boards

HN15 [blue icon] Local Governments, Administrative Boards

Georgia's hospital authorities are "public bodies" which exercise public and essential governmental functions.
O.C.G.A. §§ 31-7-72 and -75.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Healthcare Law > ... > Actions Against Facilities > Governmental & Nonprofit Liability > County, Municipal & State Liability

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > General Overview

HN16 [blue icon] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

The fact that a hospital authority engages in the competitive business of health care, or operating a hospital, does not remove it from the protective cloak of state action immunity. It is axiomatic that state action immunity includes protection for states when they engage in business.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN17 [blue icon] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Section 1 of the Sherman Act does not apply to unilateral action; it proscribes only concerted action which imposes an unreasonable restraint on trade. Under the intraenterprise immunity doctrine, unilateral actions of a single enterprise do not constitute the type of concerted action proscribed by § 1 of the Sherman Act. Accordingly, an officer and an employee of the same company are legally incapable of conspiring with one another. Likewise, coordinated conduct of a corporation and its unincorporated divisions or its wholly owned subsidiaries does not constitute a conspiracy, but rather, unilateral conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Actions Against Facilities > General Overview

Healthcare Law > ... > Actions Against Facilities > Agency Relationships > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > Peer Review Statutes

HN18 [blue icon] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

A hospital and its staff can be separate entities for purposes of intraenterprise immunity, but the staff physicians may in certain contexts be agents of the hospital for purposes of state action immunity. The policies underlying these two immunity doctrines are different, as are the factors that guide a court's analysis.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Scope

Healthcare Law > ... > Actions Against Facilities > Agency Relationships > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Physicians

HN19 [blue icon] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

To determine whether individual doctors are agents of a hospital authority during the performance of challenged actions, a court looks to the policies underlying the state action immunity doctrine and the context of the particular activities of the doctors in the case. What is critical is that the action be truly that of the state and not that of an individual or private actor. The "clear articulation" and "active state supervision" tests reflect this core policy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > Organizations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > Peer Review Statutes

HN20 [blue icon] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

To determine whether challenged actions are those of a hospital authority qua political subdivision, a court is guided by the Town of Hallie test. The appropriate inquiry focuses on whether there is little or no danger that the actor is involved in a private price-fixing arrangement as opposed to state action vindicating a truly governmental interest. As is true with respect to a hospital authority, a court examines whether the nexus between the state and the actions of the doctors on peer review committees is sufficiently strong that there is little real danger that these doctors are involved in a private price-fixing arrangement.

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Facility & Personnel Licensing > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > Organizations

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > Peer Review Statutes

HN21[] Business Administration & Organization, Facility & Personnel Licensing

Under O.C.G.A. § 31-7-15, hospitals are required to provide for the review of professional practices in the hospital. Specifically, hospitals are directed to evaluate the qualifications and professional competence of persons seeking to perform medical and health care services at the hospital. § 31-7-15\(a\)\(3\). Hospitals must undertake such evaluations to be entitled to a permit. § 31-7-15\(c\). The statute permits peer review committees to perform such evaluations. § 31-7-15\(b\). Peer review committees may be appointed by, inter alia, the governing board or medical staff of a licensed hospital.

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > General Overview

HN22[] Business Administration & Organization, Peer Review

See O.C.G.A. § 31-7-15\(a\).

Healthcare Law > ... > Actions Against Facilities > Governmental & Nonprofit Liability > County, Municipal & State Liability

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Covenants not to Compete > General Overview

HN23[] Governmental & Nonprofit Liability, County, Municipal & State Liability

The Lee County test establishes a three-part inquiry to determine whether an entity satisfies the single-prong Town of Hallie test. The entity must show (1) that it is a political subdivision of the state; (2) that, through statutes, the state generally authorizes the political subdivision to perform the challenged action; and (3) that, through statutes, the state has clearly articulated a state policy authorizing anticompetitive conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Healthcare Law > ... > Actions Against Facilities > Governmental & Nonprofit Liability > County, Municipal & State Liability

HN24[] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

The third requirement under the Lee County test is that the state must, through its statutes, clearly articulate a policy authorizing the challenged anticompetitive conduct. The Supreme Court notes that the phrase "clearly expressed" does not require the legislature to state explicitly that it anticipates anticompetitive effects. Rather, it simply requires that the anticompetitive conduct be a foreseeable result of the powers granted to the political subdivision. The Eleventh Circuit requires only that the anticompetitive conduct be reasonably anticipated, rather than the inevitable, ordinary, or routine outcome of a statute.

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Facility & Personnel Licensing > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Hospital Privileges > General Overview

HN25 [blue icon] Business Administration & Organization, Facility & Personnel Licensing

See O.C.G.A. § 31-7-7.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Mootness > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Effect & Operation > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Injunctions > Grounds for Injunctions > General Overview

HN26 [blue icon] Justiciability, Mootness

Because injunctive relief is prospective, a party seeking an injunction must show a threat of future injury. A prospective remedy will provide no relief for an injury that is, and likely will remain, entirely in the past. This concept is described as one of mootness.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Mootness > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Effect & Operation > Amendments

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > General Overview

HN27 [blue icon] Justiciability, Mootness

At every stage in the proceedings the court must stop, look, and listen to determine the impact of changes in the law on the case before it. Where a law is amended so as to remove its challenged features, the claim for injunctive relief becomes moot as to those features. Thus, a superseding statute or regulation moots a case only to the extent that it removes challenged features of the prior law.

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Covenants not to Compete > Enforcement

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Covenants not to Compete > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Hospital Privileges > General Overview

93 F.3d 1515, *1515L 1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 23886, **1

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > Peer Review Statutes

HN28 [blue icon] Covenants not to Compete, Enforcement

Hospitals may make staff privilege decisions based on any reasonable objective, including, but not limited to, the appropriate utilization of hospital facilities. O.C.G.A. § 31-7-7.

Civil Procedure > ... > Injunctions > Grounds for Injunctions > General Overview

Governments > Local Governments > Administrative Boards

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Covenants not to Compete > Enforcement

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Covenants not to Compete > General Overview

HN29 [blue icon] Injunctions, Grounds for Injunctions

"Reasonable anticipation" for purposes of injunctive relief does not require explicit authorization to engage in anticompetitive conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN30 [blue icon] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Courts do not sit to determine whether a state statute violates state law for purposes of state action immunity. It is sufficient that the state has generally authorized the challenged anticompetitive conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

HN31 [blue icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

The rule of reason protects those contracts that are reasonable in light of the interests of the parties and the interests of the public.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > General Overview

HN32 [blue download icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

The rule of reason protects contracts executed pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 31-7-7.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Governments > Local Governments > Claims By & Against

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Governments > Local Governments > Employees & Officials

HN33 [blue download icon] Remedies, Damages

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 36\(a\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN34 [blue download icon] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Whether actions are directed by an official, as contemplated by the Local Government Antitrust Act of 1984, 15 U.S.C.S. § 34 et seq., is determined by borrowing and applying the state action doctrine two-prong test.

Counsel: ATTORNEY(S) FOR APPELLANT(S): O. Wayne Ellerbee, THE ELLERBEE LAW FIRM, P.C., Valdosta, GA. Lewis H. Markowitz, MARKOWITZ & MARKOWITZ, P.C., York, PA. James Ponsoldt, Athens, GA.

ATTORNEY(S) FOR APPELLEE(S), (HOSPITAL AUTHORITY + LOWNDES COUNTY): William Gus Elliott, Walter G. Elliott, Valdosta, GA. Joseph William Watkins, Sidney F. Wheeler, Jacquelyn D. Van Tuyl, Atlanta, GA., (Attorneys Joseph W. Watkins, et al. represent Hospital Authority).

ATTORNEY(S) FOR APPELLEE(S), (FOR AMICUS - GA. HOSPITAL ASSOCIATION): Kevin E. Grady, H. Suzanne Smith, ALSTON & BIRD, Atlanta, GA. Amicus - AMERICAN OSTEOPATHIC ASSOCIATION, Joshua L. Prober, MCCULLOUGH, CAMPBELL & LANE, Chicago, Illinois.

Judges: Before ANDERSON and BLACK, Circuit Judges, and HENDERSON, Senior Circuit Judge.

Opinion by: ANDERSON

Opinion

---

[*1518] ANDERSON, Circuit Judge:

This case involves a doctor, R. Derry Crosby, who was denied staff privileges by the Hospital Authority of Valdosta and Lowndes County ("the Authority"). Dr. Crosby claimed that the Authority, its board members, and the individual doctors on hospital peer review committees (collectively "defendants") violated federal antitrust law when they denied his application for hospital privileges.<sup>1</sup> The district court granted defendants' motion for summary judgment on the ground that their actions were shielded by the doctrine of state action antitrust immunity. Crosby v. Hospital Authority of Valdosta, 873 F. Supp. 1568, 1581 (M.D.Ga.1995). We affirm.

---

<sup>1</sup> Dr. Crosby presented other state law claims which are not relevant to this appeal.

I. FACTS

Dr. [**2] Crosby graduated from West Virginia College of Osteopathy, an osteopathic medical school, where he earned a Doctor of Osteopathy ("D.O.") degree.<sup>2</sup> Upon completion [*1519] of medical school, Dr. Crosby completed a one year osteopathic internship at Memorial Hospital in York, Pennsylvania. He remained at Memorial Hospital for another four years to complete an osteopathic orthopedic surgical residency program.

[**3] On September 20, 1986, Dr. Crosby applied for orthopedic surgical staff privileges at South Georgia Medical Center ("SGMC"), the hospital doing business for the Authority. After review by numerous committees and the Authority, his application was denied. Dr. Crosby contends that the doctors on the peer review committees which gave recommendations to the Authority and the Authority itself conspired to deprive him of staff privileges because he is not an allopathic doctor and as part of a conspiracy in restraint of trade in violation of 15 U.S.C.A. § 1, and monopolization (or an attempt to monopolize) in violation of 15 U.S.C.A. § 2.

The context of this case makes it necessary to review the creation of hospital authorities in Georgia and the peer review process at SGMC and the Authority. The Authority was created pursuant to Georgia's Hospital Authorities Law, O.C.G.A. § 31-7-70 et seq. See generally Cox Enterprises v. Carroll City/County Hosp. Auth., 247 Ga. 39, 273 S.E.2d 841, 844-45 (1981). Pursuant to the Hospital Authorities Law, the Georgia legislature "created in and for each county and municipal corporation of the state a public body corporate and politic to be known [**4] as the 'Hospital Authority' of such county or city...." O.C.G.A. § 31-7-72\(a\). A hospital authority's board is appointed by the governing body of the county or municipal corporation in which it was created. Id. Hospital authority board members receive no compensation for their work, although they are permitted reimbursement for actual expenses. O.C.G.A. § 31-7-74\(a\). Hospital authorities are granted the same exemptions and exclusions from taxes as are granted to cities and counties for similar facilities. O.C.G.A. § 31-7-72\(e\).

A hospital authority is "deemed to exercise public and essential governmental functions and [has] all the powers necessary and convenient to carry out and effectuate the purposes and provisions of [the Hospital Authorities Law]." O.C.G.A. § 31-7-75. These powers include, in addition to those necessary to operate a hospital, the power to sue and be sued, to execute contracts, to exercise the right of eminent domain, to receive proceeds from the sale of general obligation or county bonds, and to issue revenue anticipation certificates or other evidence of indebtedness. Id. An authority may not operate for profit, but rather, must adjust its prices [**5] to produce only enough revenue to cover costs with reasonable reserves. O.C.G.A. § 31-7-77. Hospital authorities are authorized to sell "negotiable revenue anticipation certificates" for the purpose of funding their activities. O.C.G.A. §§ 31-7-75\(16\), 31-7-78. These certificates, however, are not a debt of the city, the county, the State, or any political subdivision. O.C.G.A. § 31-7-79. Although not a debt of any "political subdivision," these certificates "are declared to be issued for an essential public and governmental purpose and together with interest thereon and income therefrom, [are] exempt

---

<sup>2</sup>This case involves Crosby's claim that he was denied staff privileges because he was an osteopathic as opposed to an allopathic physician. We have described the difference between the two as follows:

Generally, osteopathy assists the body's remedial capabilities by focusing on the interaction of the biological systems and stressing musculoskeletal manipulative therapy, while allopathy treats disease by producing effects incompatible with the condition to be alleviated.... Although Georgia licenses both D.O.'s and M.D.'s to practice medicine, the state distinguishes between the two medical educations, referencing them separately in the licensing statutes. O.C.G.A. §§ 43-34-20\(3\), 43-34-26 (1984).

from all taxes." O.C.G.A. § 31-7-79. Although an authority does not have the power to tax, counties and cities possess the power to levy an ad valorem tax for the purpose of contracting with the authority for the provision of specific services. O.C.G.A. § 31-7-84\(a\). Indeed, counties and their component municipalities are specifically authorized to contract with hospital authorities for the purpose of providing medical care to indigent residents of that county or municipality. O.C.G.A. § 31-7-85. Upon dissolution, a hospital authority is not authorized, in the absence of other [\[\*\*6\]](#) specific legislation, to convey [\[\*1520\]](#) any of its property to a private person, association, or corporation. O.C.G.A. § 31-7-89. Finally, the board of trustees of each authority is required to file with the governing body of the particular municipality an annual report of its activities. O.C.G.A. § 31-7-90.

Dr. Crosby's application for staff privileges was governed by the bylaws of SGMC's medical staff (the "Bylaws").<sup>3</sup> In particular, Article X, § 2\(b\)\(4\) sets forth educational and other related requirements for orthopedic surgeons applying for staff privileges: "Physicians applying for Staff Membership in the specialty of Orthopedics must demonstrate by training, experience, and performance the requirements for eligibility in the specialty as designated by the American Board of Orthopedics and be either board certified or board eligible." (Bylaws, Art. X, § 2\(b\)\(4\)).

Pursuant to [\[\*\*7\]](#) the Bylaws, Dr. Crosby's application for staff privileges was reviewed by the following committees of the medical staff: (1) the Orthopedic Service of the Department of Surgery; (2) the Credentials Committee; (3) the Executive Committee; and (4) the Ad Hoc Hearing Committee. The Orthopedic Service recommended denial of Dr. Crosby's application because he did not have the background (i.e., training, experience, and performance) required by the Bylaws.<sup>4</sup> In addition, the Orthopedic Service stated that its decision was based on its determination that there were a sufficient number of orthopedic surgeons already on the hospital staff. Next, the Credentials Committee recommended denial of Dr. Crosby's application for failure to comply with the Bylaws' orthopedic residency requirements.<sup>5</sup> The Executive Committee reviewed the Credentials Committee's denial and affirmed its conclusion. The Ad Hoc Hearing Committee then conducted a hearing and concluded that the recommendation of the Executive Committee was appropriate. Pursuant to the Bylaws, the application was referred back to the Executive Committee, which voted to uphold the Ad Hoc Hearing Committee's recommendation of denial on the [\[\*\*8\]](#) grounds that Dr. Crosby failed to meet the criteria established by the Bylaws.

Finally, the Authority, acting through its Appellate Review Committee, conducted a thorough hearing<sup>6</sup> during which it considered Dr. Crosby's application in light of the recommended denial by the staff committees.<sup>7</sup> As a result of this hearing, the Authority unanimously voted to deny Dr. Crosby's application. It stated its grounds for this denial as follows:

- (1) The medical staff of South Georgia Medical Center, [\[\*\*9\]](#) through its Executive Committee, has found that the applicant has not demonstrated by training, experience and performance the requirements for eligibility in the specialty of orthopedics.

<sup>3</sup> All members of the medical staff agreed to abide by the Bylaws. Further, the Bylaws were adopted and approved by the Authority.

<sup>4</sup> Specifically, Dr. Crosby was not "board certified or board eligible" as designated by the American Board of Orthopedics ("ABO") because he had not completed an osteopathic orthopedic residency training program that was approved by the ABO. Accordingly, the Orthopedic Service concluded, in part, that Dr. Crosby did not satisfy the Bylaws' residency requirements.

<sup>5</sup> In other words, the recommendation of the Credentials Committee dropped the Orthopedic Service's second ground for denying Dr. Crosby's application.

<sup>6</sup> Dr. Crosby was represented by counsel at this hearing.

<sup>7</sup> Under the Bylaws, although the various staff committees provide recommendations to the Authority, the Authority wields ultimate decisionmaking power over staff credentialing decisions. (Bylaws, Article V, § 2). In this regard, the Authority exercises meaningful control over the ultimate decision. It has the power to follow, modify, or even disregard staff committee recommendations. (Id. at Article V, § 2\(g\)-\(l\)).

(2) The applicant has not met the "burden" placed on him by Article V, § 1, b of the Medical Staff Bylaws of South Georgia Medical Center.

(3) The applicant fails to meet the requirements of Article X, § 2, b.--Surgical Service, 4., in that he has not demonstrated that he is either Board Certified or Board Eligible by the American Board of Orthopedics.

[**10] [*1521] Thereafter, on March 14, 1990, Dr. Crosby filed the present action against three groups of defendants: 1) the Authority, d/b/a South Georgia Medical Center; 2) the board members of the Authority; and 3) the physicians who participated in the various review committees. He alleged violations of federal antitrust law (restraint of trade and monopolization) and Georgia law.<sup>8</sup>

The district court, in a well-reasoned opinion, granted summary judgment, holding that all defendants were immune from suit by virtue of state action immunity under Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 63 S. Ct. 307, 87 L. Ed. 315 (1943), and its progeny. Crosby, 873 F. Supp. at 1580-81. The Authority and its members, it reasoned, were a "political subdivision" of the State and Georgia had clearly articulated a policy authorizing the challenged anticompetitive conduct. Id. at 1575-81. Further, it found that the [**11] individual staff members on peer review committees, because they acted as the Authority's agents, were protected by the Authority's state action immunity. Id. at 1576-77. Finally, the court held that, even if defendants were not entitled to state action immunity, they were immune from damages under the Local Government Antitrust Act ("LGAA"), 15 U.S.C.A. §§ 35-36, and the Health Care Quality Improvement Act ("HCQIA"), 42 U.S.C.A. §§ 11101-11152. Crosby, 873 F. Supp. at 1581-84. On appeal, Dr. Crosby challenges each of these determinations.<sup>9</sup>

II. DISCUSSION

A. State Action Immunity

HN1 We review de novo the district court's grant of summary judgment to defendants on their state action immunity defense. FTC v. Hospital Board of Directors of Lee County, 38 F.3d 1184, 1187 (11th Cir. 1994) (citation [**12] omitted); Bolt v. Halifax Hosp. Medical Ctr. ("Bolt IV"), 980 F.2d 1381, 1384 (11th Cir. 1993). HN2 Under the state action immunity doctrine, also known as the Parker doctrine, states are immune from federal antitrust law for their actions as sovereign. Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 351-53, 63 S. Ct. 307, 314, 87 L. Ed. 315 (1943); Lee County, 38 F.3d at 1187. The doctrine is grounded in and derived from principles of federalism and state sovereignty. Parker, 317 U.S. at 350-52, 63 S. Ct. at 313-14.

HN3 The state action immunity doctrine "does not apply directly to a state's political subdivisions because these subdivisions "are not themselves sovereign; they do not receive all the federal deference of the States that create them.' " Lee County, 38 F.3d at 1187 (quoting City of Lafayette, La. v. Louisiana Power & Light Co., 435 U.S. 389, 412, 98 S. Ct. 1123, 1136, 55 L. Ed. 2d 364 (1978)). Accordingly, actions by the State and actions by municipalities are evaluated under different standards. HN4 The Parker doctrine "exempts ... anticompetitive conduct engaged in as an act of government by the State as sovereign, or by its subdivisions pursuant to state [**13] policy to displace competition with regulation or monopoly public service." City of Lafayette, 435 U.S. at 413, 98 S. Ct. at 1137 (Brennan, J., plurality opinion). The extension of Parker immunity to political subdivisions reflects the Court's conclusion that because "municipal corporations are instrumentalities of the State for the convenient administration of government within their limits, [cit.], the actions of municipalities may reflect state policy." Id. (citation omitted).

---

<sup>8</sup> By consent of parties, Dr. Crosby abandoned all but his federal antitrust claims. Crosby, 873 F. Supp. at 1570.

<sup>9</sup> Because we affirm the district court's ruling with respect to state action immunity and immunity from damages under the LGAA, we need not reach its decision regarding immunity under the HCQIA.

Accordingly, HN5<sup>10</sup> the Court has made clear that a municipality<sup>10</sup> \*\*15 is entitled to state [\[\*1522\]](#) action immunity if it acted pursuant to "clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed state policy." *Town of Hallie v. City of Eau Claire*, 471 U.S. 34, 46-47, 105 S. Ct. 1713, 1720, 85 L. Ed. 2d 24 \(1985\); *City of Lafayette*, 435 U.S. at 410, 98 S. Ct. at 1135; see also *Bolt IV*, 980 F.2d at 1385-86.<sup>11</sup> HN6<sup>11</sup> Private parties are entitled to even less federal deference than either the State or its political subdivisions. When a private party seeks the protection of state action immunity, it must show both that: (1) the challenged restraint was clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy; [\[\*14\]](#) and (2) the policy was actively supervised by the state. *California Retail Liquor Dealers Ass'n v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc.*, 445 U.S. 97, 105, 100 S. Ct. 937, 943, 63 L. Ed. 2d 233 \(1980\). In Town of Hallie, the Court explained that the second prong of the Midcal test, the active state supervision requirement, is unnecessary when the actor is a municipality because whereas there is a real danger that a private party acts to further his or her own interest rather than the governmental interests of the State, there is less danger that a municipality is involved in a private price-fixing arrangement. 471 U.S. at 47, 105 S. Ct. at 1720. Although there is some danger that a municipality will pursue its own goals rather than those of the State,<sup>12</sup> this concern is addressed by the first prong of the Parker doctrine, i.e., the municipality must act pursuant to clearly articulated state policy.

In sum, HN7<sup>12</sup> a greater level of state involvement \*\*16 in the anticompetitive conduct must be demonstrated if the defendant is a private party rather than a political subdivision. If the defendant is a "political subdivision," it travels under the single-prong Town of Hallie test (i.e., the defendant must show "clear articulation"). If the defendant is a private party, it travels under the two-prong Midcal test (i.e., defendant must show both "clear articulation" and "active state supervision"). Accordingly, we must determine whether the Authority, its board members and SGMC's staff members should be evaluated as a political subdivision or as private actors.

B. Political Subdivision or Private Actors?

1. The Authority and its Board Members

The district court found that the Authority is a political subdivision of Georgia. It based its decision on several cases involving similar issues in Alabama and Florida. See *FTC v. Hosp. Board of Directors of Lee County*, 38 F.3d 1184 \(11th Cir. 1994\); [*Askew v. DCH Reg. Health Care Authority*, 995 F.2d 1033 \(11th Cir.\), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 1012, 114 S. Ct. 603, 126 L. Ed. 2d 568 \(1993\); *Todorov v. DCH Healthcare Authority*, 921 F.2d 1438 \(11th Cir. 1991\); \[\\[\\*17\\]\]\(#\) see also \[\*Sweeney v. Athens Regional Medical Center\*, 705 F. Supp. 1556, 1565 \\(M.D.Ga. 1989\\)\]\(#\) \(interpreting Georgia statute\).](#)

<sup>10</sup> We use the terms "municipality" and "political subdivision" interchangeably throughout this opinion. Cf. *Askew v. DCH Regional Health Care Authority*, 995 F.2d 1033, 1037 (11th Cir.), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 1012, 114 S. Ct. 603, 126 L. Ed. 2d 568 (1993) ("Ordinarily, when a local government entity seeks immunity from antitrust liability, it must show that it is a political subdivision of the state and that the challenged conduct is authorized under a "clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed policy of the state."); Bolt IV, 980 F.2d at 1385 ("Political subdivisions, including municipalities, ... can obtain protection under the state-action immunity doctrine if they can "demonstrate that [they] acted pursuant to a clearly articulated stated policy displacing competition with regulation.").")

<sup>11</sup> In City of Lafayette, the Court suggested that state action immunity would apply to a municipality only if: (1) the municipality acted pursuant to clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed state policy; and (2) the anticompetitive conduct was actively supervised by the State. 435 U.S. at 410, 98 S. Ct. at 1135. In Town of Hallie, the Court held that only the first of the these two prongs applies to municipalities. 471 U.S. at 46-47, 105 S. Ct. at 1720. In *California Retail Liquor Dealers Ass'n v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc.*, 445 U.S. 97, 105, 100 S. Ct. 937, 943, 63 L. Ed. 2d 233 \(1980\), the Court held that both prongs apply to private parties.

<sup>12</sup> Cf. *City of Lafayette*, 435 U.S. at 412-13, 98 S. Ct. at 1136-37 ("In light of the serious economic dislocation which could result if cities were free to place their own parochial interests above the Nation's economic goals reflected in the antitrust laws, ... we are especially unwilling to presume that Congress intended to exclude anticompetitive municipal action from their reach.").

In determining whether the Authority is a "political subdivision" for purposes of state action immunity, we are guided by Town of Hallie, 471 U.S. at 46-47, 105 S. Ct. at 1720. There, the Court held that municipalities, and perhaps state agencies, need not satisfy the active state supervision requirement. Id. It based its conclusion on the realization that states often act through their municipalities and, accordingly, action by a municipality often is equivalent to action by the State as sovereign.

[*1523] Where a private party is engaging in the anticompetitive activity, there is a real danger that he is acting to further his own interests, rather than the governmental interests of the State. Where the actor is a municipality, there is little or no danger that it is involved in a private price-fixing arrangement. The only real danger is that it will seek to further purely parochial public interests at the expense of more overriding state goals. This danger is minimal, however, because of the requirement that the municipality act pursuant to a [**18] clearly articulated state policy. HN8 Once it is clear that state authorization exists, there is no need to require the State to supervise actively the municipality's execution of what is a properly delegated function.

Id. at 47, 105 S. Ct. at 1720. The Court discounted the importance of active supervision in the context of examining a political subdivision's actions, noting that the "requirement of active state supervision serves essentially an evidentiary function: it is one way of ensuring that the actor is engaging in the challenged conduct pursuant to state policy." Id. at 46, 105 S. Ct. at 1720. Such evidence is not necessary where a political subdivision, a creation and arm of the State, acts pursuant to clearly articulated state policy. See Hass v. Oregon State Bar, 883 F.2d 1453, 1461 \(9th Cir.1989\), cert. denied, 494 U.S. 1081, 110 S. Ct. 1812, 108 L. Ed. 2d 942 (1990).

We have held that state hospital authorities can be political subdivisions for purposes of state action immunity. See, e.g., Askew, 995 F.2d at 1037-38. Of course, this does not end the inquiry; HN9 in each case we must examine the State's statutes to determine whether the actor is a "political [**19] subdivision," i.e., whether imposition of the active state supervision requirement is necessary to determine whether the challenged actions are those of the State as sovereign.<sup>13</sup>

The Authority was created pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 31-7-72 which provides, in relevant part:

HN10 (a) There is created in and for each county and municipal corporation of the state a public body corporate and politic [**20] to be known as the "hospital authority" of such county or city, which shall consist of a board of not less than five nor more than nine members to be appointed by the governing body of the county or municipal corporation of the area of operation for staggered terms as specified by resolution of the governing body....

(e) Nothing in this Code section is intended to invalidate any of the acts of existing boards of authorities. Hospital authorities shall be granted the same exemptions and exclusions from taxes as are now granted to cities and counties for the operation of facilities similar to facilities to be operated by hospital authorities as provided for under this Title.

Further, O.C.G.A. § 31-7-75 provides, in relevant part:

HN11 Every hospital authority shall be deemed to exercise public and essential governmental functions and shall have all the powers necessary or convenient to carry out and effectuate the purposes and provisions of this Article.

The Authority concludes from this language that, because hospital authorities are public bodies, they also must be political subdivisions of the State for purposes of Parker immunity. See [FTC v. \[\*\*21\] Hospital Board of Directors](#) of Lee County, 38 F.3d 1184, 1188 (11th Cir.1994) (concluding that a health care authority was a "political subdivision" subject to the single-prong test because it was a special purpose unit of local government).

<sup>13</sup> Appellees cite a number of factually-distinguishable cases for the proposition that "hospital authorities" in general are political subdivisions. In Todorov v. DCH Healthcare Authority, 921 F.2d 1438 \(11th Cir.1991\) and Askew, supra, for example, we examined hospital authorities created by the Alabama Health Care Authorities Act. This Act specifically provided that Alabama's hospital authorities acted as political subdivisions of the State when exercising their powers, even if such exercise violated federal antitrust law. These cases are not dispositive because Georgia's statutes are not nearly so explicit.

Dr. Crosby argues that the Georgia Supreme Court has conclusively determined that Georgia hospital authorities are not "political subdivisions" for purposes of state action [*1524] immunity. See Thomas v. Hospital Authority, 264 Ga. 40, 440 S.E.2d 195 (1994). In Thomas, the court examined whether a hospital authority in Georgia was entitled to sovereign immunity from an action arising out of a slip and fall injury. The court examined Art. I, § 2, P 9(e) of the Georgia Constitution, which provides, in relevant part: "Sovereign immunity extends to the state and all of its departments and agencies." The court held that "hospital authorities, because they are neither the State nor a department or agency of the State, are not entitled to the defense of sovereign immunity." Thomas, 440 S.E.2d at 196. The court unambiguously stated that "neither the language of [the code section] which refers to a hospital authority as a "body corporate and [**22] politic,' nor that which assigns to it "public and essential governmental functions' is sufficient to constitute it a political subdivision of the state...." Id. (quotation omitted). The court concluded that the hospital authority was not a "political subdivision": "There is a clear distinction between a political subdivision such as a county and a corporate body such as a hospital authority, which is a creation of the county." Id.

Thomas indicates that Georgia does not consider its hospital authorities to be "political subdivisions" for purposes of sovereign immunity under the Georgia Constitution. In Thomas, the court supported its conclusion by reference to the public policy underlying sovereign immunity in Georgia. Id., 440 S.E.2d at 196-97. It found that a hospital authority's functions are not the type of conduct Georgia's doctrine of sovereign immunity was designed to protect. Sovereign immunity was intended to protect the government from lawsuits as it goes about the business of governing. Id. By contrast, the operation of a hospital is not the kind of function, governmental or otherwise, entitled to the protection of sovereign immunity. The very [**23] functions performed by the Hospital Authority are performed by private hospitals and the Hospital Authority is in direct competition with these private hospitals for patients.[] If an instrumentality of the government chooses to enter an area of business ordinarily carried on by private enterprise, i.e., engage in a function that is not "governmental," there is no reason why it should not be charged with the same responsibilities and liabilities borne by a private corporation.

Id., 440 S.E.2d at 197.

We recognize that the decision to "authorize" anticompetitive conduct is wisely left to the State. See FTC v. Ticor Title Insurance Co., 504 U.S. 621, 636, 112 S. Ct. 2169, 2178, 119 L. Ed. 2d 410 (1992) (emphasizing that careful application of state action immunity doctrine insures that the State remains responsible "for the price fixing it has sanctioned and undertaken to control"). However, HN12[<sup>12</sup>] the definition of "political subdivisions" for purposes of state sovereign immunity does not control its definition for purposes of antitrust state action immunity. As directed by Town of Hallie, 471 U.S. at 46-47, 105 S. Ct. at 1720, we focus instead on whether the nexus [**24] between the State and the Authority is sufficiently strong that there is little real danger that the Authority is involved in a private price-fixing arrangement. See id.

Georgia public purpose authorities are unique entities, lying somewhere between a local, general-purpose governing body (such as a city or county) and a corporation. See generally Paul W. Bonapfel, "The Legal Nature of Public Purpose Authorities: Governmental, Private or Neither?" 8 Ga.L.Rev. 680 (1974) ("An authority is [typically] an entity possessing both corporate and governmental characteristics and created by general purpose governments to accomplish specific purposes...."). Indeed, although Georgia's hospital authorities possess many of the attributes of a sovereign, they are clearly limited in their character and are private actors in many respects.

In Thomas, the court focused on the fact that hospital authorities have a separate existence from the State, i.e., they are an instrumentality created by the State and county for a special purpose. In other contexts, however, the Georgia Supreme Court has recognized that hospital authorities are governmental entities. For example, in Martin [**25] v. Hospital Authority of Clarke County, 264 Ga. 626, 449 S.E.2d 827, 828 (1994), a case [*1525] decided after Thomas, the Georgia Supreme Court held that hospital authorities are not liable for punitive damages because they are "governmental entities." Indeed, the fact that hospital authorities are governmental entities is demonstrated by the statutes creating and regulating them. HN13<sup>14</sup>] The Georgia Supreme Court has summarized those factors illustrating the Authority's governmental nature:

Factors tending to establish the Authority's governmental nature include that it is a creature of statute; that it is defined as a "public body corporate and politic" (emphasis supplied); that its Board is appointed by the governing body of the relevant political subdivision or subdivisions; that it is tax exempt; that it is deemed to exercise public and essential governmental functions; that it may exercise the power of eminent domain; that it receives tax revenues; and that the governing bodies of the relevant political subdivisions have a role in determining the disposition of its property upon dissolution.

Cox Enterprises v. Carroll City/County Hospital Authority, 247 Ga. 39, [\[\*26\]](#) 273 S.E.2d 841, 845 (1981). After careful analysis, the court in Cox Enterprises, concluded that hospital authorities are instrumentalities of the state, i.e., they are the manner in which the state has determined to conduct its business. Id., 273 S.E.2d at 846. Accordingly, the court held that, as a governmental entity, the authority's attempt to bring a libel action was unconstitutional. Id.

We are satisfied that the Authority is an instrumentality, agency, or "political subdivision" of Georgia for purposes of state action immunity; thus, we need not apply the active state supervision requirement. Although Thomas held that hospital authorities are not part of the State or county for purposes of state sovereign immunity, the different policy reasons underlying state action immunity indicate that HN14<sup>15</sup>] Georgia's hospital authorities are political subdivisions for state action immunity purposes. As noted above, this determination is guided by the rationale of Town of Hallie. Applying that rationale, we conclude that the nexus between the State and the Authority is sufficiently strong that, when combined with a clearly articulated policy in favor of the challenged anticompetitive [\[\*27\]](#) conduct, there is little danger that it is involved in a private price fixing arrangement. See Town of Hallie, 471 U.S. at 47, 105 S. Ct. at 1720. Cf. Porter Testing Laboratory v. Board of Regents, 993 F.2d 768, 772 (10th Cir.), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 932, 114 S. Ct. 344, 126 L. Ed. 2d 309 (1993) (holding that the active state supervision requirement applies only to purely private parties).

Georgia has chosen to operate its hospitals through the instrumentality of hospital authorities and, accordingly, it has clothed these authorities with certain necessary governmental qualities. Cf. Cox Enterprises, 273 S.E.2d at 846 ("Certainly the government is authorized to operate hospitals, either directly or, as here, indirectly."). Although hospital authorities may not possess all of the powers enjoyed by municipalities or by the State, they enjoy numerous governmental powers. Further, the legislature has unambiguously stated that HN15<sup>16</sup>] they are "public bodies" which exercise "public and essential governmental functions." O.C.G.A. §§ 31-7-72, 31-7-75. Georgia has also empowered hospital authorities to act as market participants in several respects by granting them several powers [\[\*28\]](#) which resemble those of a private corporation. The mere grant of such powers, however, does not transform an otherwise governmental entity into a private actor of the type we would expect to engage in a private price-fixing agreement. The governmental powers enjoyed by the Authority are similar in material respects to those of a hospital that is directly operated by the State. None of its non-governmental aspects create a danger that it is involved in a private price-fixing arrangement.

The policy rationale employed by the court in Thomas, does not aid Dr. Crosby's cause. HN16<sup>17</sup>] The fact that the Authority engages in the competitive business of health care, or operating a hospital, does not remove it from the protective cloak of state action immunity. It is axiomatic that state action immunity includes protection for states when they engage in business. To follow the policy rationale in Thomas and withhold immunity in those cases where the [\[\*1526\]](#) state chooses "to enter an area of business ordinarily carried on by private enterprise," would be to virtually eliminate state action immunity altogether.<sup>14</sup>

<sup>14</sup> The parties have not argued and we decline to address the Supreme Court's invitation to employ a "market participant" exception to state action immunity. See City of Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Advertising, 499 U.S. 365, 374-75, 379, 111 S. Ct. 1344, 1351, 1353, 113 L. Ed. 2d 382 (1991). See also Genentech, Inc. v. Eli Lilly and Co., 998 F.2d 931, 948 (Fed.Cir.1993), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 1140, 114 S. Ct. 1126, 127 L. Ed. 2d 434 (1994).

[**29] Accordingly, we hold that the Authority is a "political subdivision" of Georgia such that it is unnecessary to apply Midcal's active state supervision requirement. Further, there has been no argument that we should apply a different test to the Authority's board members, and we decline to do so.

2. Members of peer review committees

Appellants also argue that the district court erred in its determination that the individual doctors who served on the various peer review committees were agents of the Authority and, therefore, were entitled to the single-prong Town of Hallie test. See Crosby, 873 F. Supp. at 1576. The district court relied on Cohn v. Bond, 953 F.2d 154, 158 \(4th Cir. 1991\), cert. denied, 505 U.S. 1230, 112 S. Ct. 3057, 120 L. Ed. 2d 922 (1992), for the conclusion that individual hospital staff members in this case should be treated as the Authority's agents, i.e., as a political subdivision, for state action immunity purposes.

In Cohn, the Fourth Circuit held that medical staff members of a municipally owned and operated hospital, when making their recommendations to deny hospital privileges, acted as agents of that hospital. 953 F.2d at 157-58.

[**30]

When members of the medical staff recommend action on an application for privileges, as authorized by the municipal hospital, they are acting in their capacity as employees, as opposed to private parties. [Oksanen v. Page Mem. Hosp., 945 F.2d 696 \(4th Cir. 1991\) (en banc), cert. denied, 502 U.S. 1074, 112 S. Ct. 973, 117 L. Ed. 2d 137 (1992) ]. Physicians who make peer review decisions at the behest of, or by delegation from, the hospital's board of trustees, are acting as agents of the hospital and are, therefore, indistinguishable from the hospital.

Id. Because the doctors were agents of the hospital, the court held that the "active supervision" prong was inapplicable. Id. at 158-59. "The actions of the staff are immune when as is true here, they are acting as agents of ... a municipal hospital ... in making their recommendations." Id. The court relied exclusively on Oksanen, supra, for its conclusion that physicians on peer review committees act as agents of the hospital. Cohn, 953 F.2d at 158 ("As previously discussed, members of the medical staff acted as agents of [the] Hospital in making their recommendation to deny hospital [**31] privileges. The second, "active supervision" prong is, therefore, inapplicable in this case.").

In Oksanen, the Fourth Circuit examined whether plaintiff had established the existence of a contract, combination, or conspiracy under section one of the Sherman Act. 945 F.2d at 702. Section one of the Sherman Act HN17 does not apply to unilateral action; it proscribes only concerted action which imposes an unreasonable restraint on trade. Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 760-61, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 1469, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 \(1984\); Albrecht v. Herald Co., 390 U.S. 145, 148, 88 S. Ct. 869, 871, 19 L. Ed. 2d 998 \(1968\). Under the intraenterprise immunity doctrine announced in Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 768-69, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 2740-41, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 \(1984\), unilateral actions of a single enterprise do not constitute the type of concerted action proscribed by section one of the Sherman Act. Accordingly, an officer and an employee of the same company are legally incapable of conspiring with one another. Id. at 769, 104 S. Ct. at 2741. ("Officers or employees of the same firm do not provide the plurality of actors imperative [**32] for a § 1 conspiracy.") (citation omitted). In Copperweld, the Court emphasized that an "internal "agreement' to implement a single, unitary firm's policies" does not raise the anticompetitive concerns targeted by the Sherman Act. Id. at 769, 104 S. Ct. at 2740. "The officers of a single firm are [*1527] not separate economic actors pursuing separate economic interests, so agreements among them do not suddenly bring together economic power that was previously pursuing divergent goals." Id. at 769, 104 S. Ct. at 2740-41. Likewise, coordinated conduct of a corporation and its unincorporated divisions or its wholly owned subsidiaries does not constitute a conspiracy, but rather, unilateral conduct. Id. at 771, 104 S. Ct. at 2741-42:

A parent and its wholly owned subsidiary have a complete unity of interest. Their objectives are common, not disparate; their general corporate actions are guided or determined not by two separate corporate consciousness, but one.... With or without a formal "agreement," the subsidiary acts for the benefit of the parent, its sole shareholder. If a parent and a wholly owned subsidiary do "agree" to a course of action, there is no sudden joining [**33] of economic resources that had previously served different economic interests, and there is no justification for § 1 scrutiny.

Id.

In Oksanen, the court held that, under Copperweld's intraenterprise immunity doctrine, a hospital and its medical staff lack the capacity to conspire during the peer review process. 945 F.2d at 703. In examining the relationship between a hospital and its medical staff during the peer review process, the court concluded that the medical staff works "as the Board's agent under an "internal "agreement' to implement a single, unitary firm's policies' of evaluating the conduct and competence of those to whom the hospital extends privileges." Id. (quoting Copperweld, 467 U.S. at 769, 104 S. Ct. at 2740). As such, "the peer review process does not represent the sudden joining of independent economic forces that section one is designed to protect." Id.; see also Copperweld, 467 U.S. at 767-69, 104 S. Ct. at 2740. Instead, the hospital and its medical staff display a unity of interest when the staff takes part in hospital management decisions. Oksanen, 945 F.2d at 703. In addition, the court found it relevant to the Copperweld [**34] inquiry that the hospital retained ultimate control over staff credentialing decisions. Id. at 704 ("In Copperweld, the parent corporation's ability to exercise control over its subsidiary if the subsidiary failed to act in its best interests influenced the Court's decision that the coordinated activity of the two entities should be treated as that of a single entity.") (citing Copperweld, 467 U.S. at 769-73, 104 S. Ct. at 2741-42).

The holding in Oksanen dictated the result in Cohn. If a hospital and its staff during the course of peer review are functionally one entity, then, a fortiori, the staff members are (at the very least) agents of the hospital during peer review. Accordingly, Cohn's rationale persuades us only to the extent this circuit has embraced the rationale of Oksanen.

This circuit's counterpart to Oksanen is Bolt v. Halifax Hosp. Medical Center \(Bolt III\), 891 F.2d 810, 819 \(11th Cir. 1990\), implicitly overruled in part by City of Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Advertising, 499 U.S. 365, 111 S. Ct. 1344, 113 L. Ed. 2d 382 \(1991\). Bolt III involved a physician whose medical staff privileges had been revoked at three different [**35] hospitals. The plaintiff-physician brought an antitrust action against the hospitals, their medical staffs, and a local medical society. In our first panel opinion, we held that the hospitals and their medical staffs were immune from suit under state action immunity. See Bolt v. Halifax Hosp. Medical Center \(Bolt I\), 851 F.2d 1273, 1284 \(11th Cir. 1988\). Bolt I was vacated when the case was taken en banc. See Bolt v. Halifax Hosp. Medical Center, 861 F.2d 1233, 1234 \(11th Cir. 1988\). Before the en banc court, the hospitals and their medical staffs withdrew their arguments based on state action immunity. The en banc court directed the panel to reconsider its opinion in light of this explicit waiver. See Bolt v. Halifax Hosp. Medical Center \(Bolt II\), 874 F.2d 755, 756 \(11th Cir. 1989\) (en banc). Accordingly, on remand in Bolt III, the panel considered the case anew, largely without state action immunity.<sup>15</sup> [**36] [*1528] In particular, in Bolt III we considered whether plaintiff had made out the contract, combination, or conspiracy element of his Sherman Act claim. Like the court in Oksanen, we examined Copperweld's intraenterprise immunity doctrine in the context of peer review credentialing decisions. Noting that the "directed verdicts in this case would ... have been proper if, as the defendants contend, the [hospital] defendants were legally incapable of concerted action within the meaning of section 1 of the Sherman Act," the court in Bolt III examined whether such a conspiracy was possible. 891 F.2d at 818-19. The court rejected application of the intraenterprise immunity doctrine on the ground that the analogy between a corporation and its officers (or subsidiaries) and a hospital and its medical staff was inapt in some circumstances.

---

<sup>15</sup> State action immunity remained an issue in the case as to one of the hospital defendants who had presented a new state-action argument in its brief on rehearing en banc. Bolt III, 891 F.2d at 818 n. 12, 823 n. 22.

The rule for corporations is based on considerations unique to the corporate context. Theoretically, a "conspiracy" involving a corporation and one of its agents would occur every time an agent performed some act in the course of his agency, for such an act would be deemed an act of the corporation. Thus, the rule that a corporation [**37] is incapable of conspiring with its agents is necessary to prevent erosion of the principle that section 1 does not reach unilateral acts. A hospital and the members of its medical staff, in contrast, are legally separate entities, and consequently no similar danger exists that what is in fact unilateral activity will be bootstrapped into a "conspiracy." See Oltz v. St. Peter's Community Hospital, 861 F.2d 1440, 1450 (9th Cir. 1988).

891 F.2d at 819. Cf. St. Joseph's Hosp., Inc. v. Hospital Corp. of America, 795 F.2d 948, 956 (11th Cir. 1986) ("While a corporation's officers and its employees are legally incapable of conspiring among themselves, if the officers or employees act for their own interests, and outside the interests of the corporation, they are legally capable of conspiring with their employees for purposes of Section 1." ) (quotation omitted). Further, because each member of the medical staff practiced medicine individually, the court concluded that each is a "separate economic entity potentially in competition with other physicians." Bolt III, 891 F.2d at 819.<sup>16</sup> Unlike Oksanen, Bolt III rejected application of the intraenterprise immunity doctrine [**38] to agreements between a hospital and its staff regarding staff privilege decisions.

[**39] Relying on Bolt III, in Todorov v. DCH Healthcare Authority, 921 F.2d 1438, 1446 n. 13 (11th Cir. 1991), we held that the individual doctors on the medical staff of defendant hospital were separate economic actors, not employees of the hospital, when they performed the challenged actions, and, therefore, were not entitled to share in the hospital's state action immunity. Id. at 1446 n. 13. Plaintiff in Todorov was a doctor of neurology and a staff member of the DCH Regional Medical Center (DCH), where he had been granted privileges to practice neurology. After becoming a member of the hospital staff, plaintiff applied for the privilege to perform certain procedures in DCH's radiology department.<sup>17</sup> [*1529] After review of his application, the credentials committee sought recommendations from two of the physicians plaintiff had named as references; both were radiologists who practiced at DCH. These doctors did not recommend plaintiff. Indeed, they questioned his technical competence. The credentials committee then solicited the advice of the chairman of DCH's radiology department, who also recommended denial of plaintiff's application for privileges. The hospital, acting on the [**40] recommendation of the final peer committee to review plaintiff's case, denied plaintiff's application. Plaintiff initiated an action against <sup>16</sup> The court in Bolt III also examined whether one of the hospital defendants was entitled to state action immunity. Id. at 823-25. See supra note 15. It held that the Florida legislature had not clearly articulated a policy to displace competition because it had not foreseen that the hospital would conspire with its medical staff to deny plaintiff staff privileges on pretextual grounds. 891 F.2d at 825. Accordingly, because the State had not foreseen that particular type of anticompetitive conduct, the court found that the hospital was not protected by Parker immunity. However, in Bolt v. Halifax Hosp. Medical Center (Bolt IV), 980 F.2d 1381 (11th Cir. 1993), we held that the Supreme Court in City of Columbia rejected this part of Bolt III:

The Court [in City of Columbia] rejected federal judicial inquiry into the state officials' intent in undertaking the challenged action. Such an inquiry, the Court stated, "would require the sort of deconstruction of the governmental process and probing of the official 'intent' that we have consistently sought to avoid." [Cit.] ...

The inquiry into whether the reasons for [the hospital's] denial of staff privileges were pretextual would require probing into the "official intent" of HHMC, an inquiry expressly denounced by the Supreme Court. [Cit.]

Bolt IV, 980 F.2d at 1388 (quotation omitted). Accordingly, we held that City of Columbia implicitly overruled Bolt III in part.

City of Columbia left untouched, however, Bolt III's rejection of Copperweld's intraenterprise immunity doctrine in the context of hospital peer review decisions. This portion of Bolt III remains the law of this circuit.

<sup>17</sup> The hospital bylaws at DCH required a peer review process for credentialing decisions that was similar in relevant respects to the process at issue in the instant case.

DCH and the three radiologists who provided the negative recommendations. The district court held that DCH was immune from antitrust liability under the Parker doctrine because it was a local governmental entity and had acted pursuant to state authority in denying plaintiff's application for privileges. 921 F.2d at 1445. It also held that the individual radiologists were immune because they were "acting as employees of DCH and, as such, enjoyed DCH's immunity."<sup>18</sup> Id. at 1446. On appeal, this Court agreed that DCH was entitled to state action immunity; but, relying on Bolt III, we rejected the district court's rationale with respect to the radiologists' immunity:

In [Bolt III], we held that members of a hospital's medical staff should be considered independent legal entities for antitrust purposes if they are not employed by the hospital and are acting as separate economic actors.... Here, the physicians are separate economic actors; thus, their actions are legally distinct from the hospital's actions. Accordingly, [\[\*\*41\]](#) the district court could not properly base its summary judgment on the ground that the radiologists and DCH were a single legal entity.

Id. at 1446 n. 13.

The foregoing discussion demonstrates that Cohn's reasoning is not persuasive in this case. Cohn was dictated by Oksanen's holding that the hospital and its staff members on peer review committees are functionally one entity. In other words, if the hospital and the individual doctors are a single legal entity, it readily follows that the doctors are agents who should share the hospital's state action immunity. By contrast, [\[\*\*42\]](#) in Bolt III we held that a hospital and its staff members on peer review committees are not functionally one entity to which Copperweld's intraenterprise immunity doctrine applies. Accordingly, in Todorov we rejected the district court's rationale of treating the individual doctors as the same legal entity as the hospital. See Todorov, 921 F.2d at 1446 n. 13 ("Accordingly, the district court could not properly base its summary judgment on the ground that the radiologists and DCH were a single legal entity.") (emphasis added).

However, the rationale of Bolt III and Todorov does not govern the different issue in this case. Even though the Authority and its individual doctors are not per se the same legal entity, we must nevertheless inquire whether the particular actions of the individual doctors which are challenged in this case were actions taken by the doctors in performing official duties as agents of the hospital such that they should share the hospital's state action immunity. In other words, the fact that a hospital and its staff are separate economic or legal entities does not mean that a staff physician cannot be the agent of a hospital for certain [\[\*\*43\]](#) purposes and in certain circumstances (e.g., certain administrative functions like peer review activities). HN18↑ In short, a hospital and its staff can be separate entities for purposes of intraenterprise immunity, but the staff physicians may in certain contexts be agents of the hospital for purposes of state action immunity. The policies underlying these two immunity doctrines are different, as are the factors which guide our analysis.<sup>19</sup>

[\[\*\*44\] \[\*\*1530\]](#) HN19↑ To determine whether the individual doctors here were agents of the Authority during the performance of the challenged actions, we look to the policies underlying the state action immunity doctrine and the context of the particular activities of the doctors in this case. The core policy underlying Parker immunity is that actions by the State, as sovereign, lie beyond the intended scope of the antitrust laws. See Parker, 317 U.S. at 352, 63 S. Ct. at 314 ("The state ..., as sovereign, imposed the restraint as an act of government which the Sherman Act did not undertake to prohibit.") (citation omitted); Town of Hallie, 471 U.S. at 38, 105 S. Ct. at 1716 ("In Parker, ... the Court refused to construe the Sherman Act as applying to the anticompetitive conduct of a State acting through its legislature.... Rather, it ruled that the Sherman Act was intended to prohibit private restraints on trade....") (quotation omitted); Patrick v. Burget, 486 U.S. 94, 99, 108 S. Ct. 1658, 1662, 100 L. Ed. 2d 83 (1988) ("The Sherman Act ... was not intended "to restrain state action or official action directed by the state.'") (quotation omitted). What is critical is that the [**45] action be truly that of the State and not that of an individual or private actor. The "clear articulation" and "active state supervision" tests reflect this core policy. These tests are designed to ensure that the action taken was truly state action inasmuch as they require different levels of state involvement in the challenged action depending on whether the actor is a municipality or a private party. See, e.g., Patrick, 486 U.S. at 100, 108 S. Ct. at 1662 ("We ... established a rigorous two-pronged test to determine whether anticompetitive conduct engaged in by private parties should be deemed state action and thus shielded from the antitrust laws.").

<sup>18</sup> In the alternative, the district court held that the radiologists were protected by the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. Id. Opting to base our decision on other grounds, we declined to affirm on these grounds. Id. at 1446 n. 14.

<sup>19</sup> In the text we explain how Todorov is distinguished from this case because it merely rejected the same-legal-entity rationale. Todorov is also distinguishable on its facts. In Todorov, the challenged actions of the individual doctors were not actions in the performance of official duties as peer review committee members; rather, the individual doctors merely gave negative recommendations about plaintiff to the relevant peer review committees. By contrast, the challenged actions of the individual doctors in the instant case were all taken within the scope of their official duties as members of the hospital's peer review committees. See infra note 20.

The actions of the individual doctor-defendants which are challenged in this case consisted exclusively of official actions taken as members of the hospital's peer review committees.<sup>20</sup> Accordingly, the issue in this case is whether the doctors' activities on SGMC peer review committees should be considered action taken by the Authority (i.e., by the political subdivision) or action taken by the individual doctors (i.e., by private parties). HN20[] To determine whether the challenged actions were those of the Authority qua political [**46] subdivision, we are guided by Town of Hallie, supra. There, the Supreme Court distinguished between actions by political subdivisions, which are presumptively intended to further governmental interests if undertaken pursuant to clearly articulated state policy, and actions by private parties, which are presumptively intended to further private interests. See Town of Hallie, 471 U.S. at 47, 105 S. Ct. at 1720. The appropriate inquiry focuses on whether "there is little or no danger that [the actor] is involved in a private price-fixing arrangement," id., as opposed to state action vindicating a truly governmental interest. As was true with respect to the Authority, we examine whether the nexus between the State and the actions of the doctors on peer review committees is sufficiently strong that there is little real danger that these doctors are involved in a private price-fixing arrangement.

[**47] Because of the control exercised by the Authority over peer review decisions and the statutory context of peer review in Georgia, we conclude that the actions of individual doctors on peer review committees should be considered actions of the Authority such that the "active state supervision" requirement is unnecessary to ensure that the challenged actions are truly those of the State. First, the control exercised by the Authority over all staff credentialing decisions is strong evidence [*1531] that it is the Authority and not its staff members acting. Under the Bylaws, the Authority retains power over decisions to grant or deny hospital privileges. Although the numerous layers of staff committees recommend the grant or denial of staff privileges to the Authority, the Authority is the repository of ultimate decisionmaking power and exercises plenary review of all credentialing decisions. Cf. Ramey v. Hospital Auth. of Habersham County, 218 Ga. App. 618, 462 S.E.2d 787, 788 (1995) ("Under the law of this state the hospital authority, and not the medical staff, is responsible for selecting staff members."). Under the Bylaws, the Authority does not merely "rubber stamp" the committee recommendations; [**48] instead, it conducts an independent, meaningful review. It retains the power to follow, modify, or even disregard the recommendations of staff committees. In this case, it rendered its decision only after a full hearing at which Dr. Crosby was represented by counsel.<sup>21</sup>

Second, our conclusion derives strong support from the statutory context of peer review in Georgia. HN21[] Under O.C.G.A. § 31-7-15, hospitals are required to provide for the review of professional practices in the hospital.<sup>22</sup> [**50] Specifically, hospitals are directed [**49] to evaluate the qualifications and professional competence of <sup>20</sup> The district court found that each individual doctor defendant acted within the scope of his or her duty as a member of the various credentialing committees. Crosby, 873 F. Supp. at 1571. This finding is not clearly erroneous.

<sup>21</sup> At this hearing before the Authority, Crosby was free to present evidence and argument that the several recommendations of the hospital's peer review committees were influenced by improper and irrelevant anticompetitive motives. We must assume that the Authority would have favorably entertained such arguments and evidence had they been persuasive; we must neither deconstruct the Authority's mental processes nor probe its intent. City of Columbia, 499 U.S. at 377, 111 S. Ct. at 1352.

persons seeking to perform medical and health care services at the hospital. § 31-7-15\(a\)\(3\). Indeed, hospitals must undertake such evaluations to be entitled to a permit. § 31-7-15\(c\). The statute permits peer review committees to perform such evaluations. § 31-7-15\(b\). These committees may be appointed by, inter alia, the governing board or medical staff of a licensed hospital. Id. This statutory scheme reflects the reality of management at the Authority (and other hospitals). Physicians at hospitals often work in a variety of capacities. Primarily, they are "separate economic entities," i.e., independent contractors, as noted by the court in Bolt III. At times, they also function as part of the hospital's management structure.<sup>23</sup> In particular, they are called on to aid in staff credentialing decisions because they are in the best position to measure the quality of a physician's work and credentials, a proposition recognized by § 31-7-15.

For these reasons, we are satisfied that there is little or no danger of a private price fixing arrangement in this case such that the imposition of "active state supervision" is required. The Authority is a political subdivision of Georgia. As explicitly authorized by statute, it receives recommendations as to staff privilege decisions from peer review committees. It has not delegated absolute control to these committees;<sup>24</sup> [**51] [*1532] instead, the Authority alone exercises ultimate control over all credentialing decisions. The only actions in this case were those of the Authority, a political subdivision of Georgia. Were we to rule otherwise, the state action immunity afforded the Authority would be meaningless because as a practical matter the Authority must act through its agents. In this case, we hold that the individual peer review committee members are immune from federal antitrust liability to the extent the Authority is immune.<sup>25</sup>

---

<sup>22</sup> O.C.G.A. § 31-7-15, provides, in relevant part:

HN22 (a) A hospital ... shall provide for the review of professional practices in the hospital ... for the purpose of reducing morbidity and mortality and for the improvement of the care of patients in the hospital.... This review shall include, but shall not be limited to, the following: ...

(3) The evaluation of medical and health care services or the qualifications and professional competence of persons performing or seeking to perform such services.

(b) The functions required by subsection (a) of this Code section may be performed by a "peer review committee," defined as a committee of physicians appointed by a state or local or specialty medical society or appointed by the governing board or medical staff of a licensed hospital or ambulatory surgical center or any other organization formed pursuant to state or federal law and engaged by the hospital ... for the purposes of performing such functions required by subsection (a) of this Code section.

(c) Compliance with the above provisions of subsection (a) of this Code section shall constitute a requirement for granting or renewing the permit of a hospital....

(e) Nothing in this or any other Code section shall be deemed to require any hospital or ambulatory surgical center to grant medical staff membership or privileges to any licensed practitioner of the healing arts.

<sup>23</sup> See, e.g., William S. Brewbaker, "Antitrust Conspiracy Doctrine and Hospital Enterprise," 74 B.U.L.Rev. 67 \(1994\).

<sup>24</sup> In this case, we need not and do not address the issue of whether Midcal's active state supervision requirement would apply to the activities of peer review committee members if the peer review committees exercised unbridled discretion in making staff privilege decisions--i.e., if the Authority had completely delegated this function to the peer review committees of the medical staff.

<sup>25</sup> Dr. Crosby rejoins that the reasons proffered by the various peer review committees were a mere pretext for their true anticompetitive motives. As City of Columbia directs, however, once it is determined that the denial of Crosby's application for staff privileges was "state action," the individual motives underlying that action become irrelevant. City of Columbia, 499 U.S. at 377-78, 111 S. Ct. at 1352 ("Where the action complained of ... was that of the State itself, the action is exempt from antitrust liability regardless of the State's motives in taking the action." (quotation omitted). "Any action that qualifies as state action is 'ipso facto ... exempt from the operation of the antitrust laws'...." Id., 499 U.S. at 379, at 1353 (quoting Hoover v. Ronwin, 466 U.S. 558, 568, 104 S. Ct. 1989, 1995, 80 L. Ed. 2d 590 \(1984\)). Because the individual staff members were acting as agents of the Authority in making their peer review recommendations, they were acting at the behest of and as an arm of the State and, therefore, their motives are irrelevant so long as the challenged actions were undertaken pursuant to clearly articulated state

[**52]

C. Clear Articulation

In this circuit, we have HN23<sup>26</sup> established a three-part inquiry to determine whether an entity satisfies the single-prong ("clear articulation") test set forth in Town of Hallie, supra. The entity must show: "(1) that it is a political subdivision of the state; (2) that, through statutes, the state generally authorizes the political subdivision to perform the challenged action; and (3) that, through statutes, the state has clearly articulated a state policy authorizing anticompetitive conduct." FTC v. Hospital Board of Directors of Lee County, 38 F.3d 1184, 1187-88 \(11th Cir. 1994\). Because we have determined that defendants are a political subdivision of the State and the parties concede that Georgia generally authorizes them to perform the challenged action,<sup>26</sup> we proceed to the third part.

[**53] HN24<sup>27</sup> The third requirement under the Lee County test is that the State must, through its statutes, clearly articulate a policy authorizing the challenged anticompetitive conduct. 38 F.3d at 1187-88. The Supreme Court has noted that the phrase "clearly expressed" does not require the legislature to state explicitly that it anticipates anticompetitive effects. Town of Hallie, 471 U.S. at 42, 105 S. Ct. at 1718; see also Southern Motor Carriers Rate Conf. v. United States, 471 U.S. 48, 64-65, 105 S. Ct. 1721, 1731, 85 L. Ed. 2d 36 \(1985\) ("If the State's intent to establish an anticompetitive regulatory program is clear ..., the State's failure to describe the implementation of its policy in detail will not subject the program to the restraints of federal antitrust laws."). "Rather, it simply requires that the anticompetitive conduct be a foreseeable result of the powers granted to the political subdivision." Lee County, 38 F.3d at 1189 (citing Town of Hallie, supra). This circuit requires "only that the anticompetitive conduct be reasonably anticipated, rather than the inevitable, ordinary, or routine outcome of a statute." Id. at 1190-91.

Accordingly, we must determine [**54] whether the alleged anticompetitive conduct is a reasonably foreseeable result of the statutes authorizing [*1533] the Authority to grant or deny staff privilege applications. To do so, we must identify precisely the alleged anticompetitive conduct. Dr. Crosby alleges that the Authority denied his application for staff privileges at SGMC because its doctors determined there to be a sufficient number of orthopedic surgeons with such privileges. As he sees it, the hospital sought to suppress competition at SGMC so as to maintain each doctor's current level of business and income and to inflate prices.<sup>27</sup>

In this case, the Authority's power to grant or deny staff privileges derives from O.C.G.A. § 31-7-7, which provides in relevant part:

HN25<sup>28</sup> (a) Whenever any licensed doctor of medicine, doctor of podiatric medicine, doctor of osteopathic medicine, or doctor of dentistry shall make application for permission to treat patients in any hospital owned or operated by the state, any political subdivision thereof, or any municipality, the hospital shall act in a nondiscriminatory manner upon such application expeditiously and without unnecessary delay considering the applicant on the basis of the applicant's demonstrated training, experience, competence, and availability and reasonable objectives, including, but not limited to, the appropriate utilization of hospital facilities....

policy. Crosby had an opportunity at the hearing before the Authority to demonstrate that the peer review committee members made their recommendations for improper and irrelevant anticompetitive reasons. We cannot probe the Authority's intent in rejecting any such arguments by Crosby.

<sup>26</sup> The district court stated that whether Georgia has authorized the challenged conduct was not at issue. 873 F. Supp. at 1578 n. 10. Crosby has not argued otherwise and, accordingly, we do not specifically address this issue. We note, however, that in examining whether Georgia, through its statutes, has clearly articulated a state policy in favor of the alleged anticompetitive conduct, we necessarily touch on this issue.

<sup>27</sup> Dr. Crosby also alleges that the Authority denied his application because he is an osteopathic physician. To the extent this claim fits into the antitrust model, it is subsumed in the argument set forth in the text.

(b) Whenever any hospital owned or operated by the state, any political subdivision thereof, or any municipality shall refuse to grant a licensed doctor of medicine, doctor of podiatric medicine, doctor of osteopathic medicine, or doctor of dentistry the privilege of treating patients in the hospital, wholly or in part, or revoke the privilege of such licensed medical practitioner for treating patients in such hospital, wholly or in part, the hospital shall furnish to the licensed medical practitioner whose privilege has been refused or revoked, within ten days of such action, a [**56] written statement of the reasons therefor....

(emphasis added).

The emphasized language reflects relevant amendments incorporated into the statute in 1990. The parties generally base their arguments on the previous version of the statute which, inter alia, omitted the language in subsection (a) which authorizes the Authority to consider applications based on the "appropriate utilization of hospital facilities." Appellant assumes that, because the events in this case took place in 1986 and 1987, the prior version of the statute applies.

The district court applied the new version of the statute without discussion of the prior version. Crosby, 873 F. Supp. at 1579. It concluded that "the Georgia legislature could have foreseen, or at least reasonably anticipated, that authorities would consider the number of market participants in determining the "appropriate utilization of hospital facilities.' " Id.

The district court was correct to apply the new version of the statute. As discussed infra,<sup>28</sup> Dr. Crosby's action for damages against all defendants is barred by the Local Government Antitrust Act. Consequently, he is limited to injunctive relief. HN26↑ Because injunctive [**57] relief is prospective, a party seeking an injunction must show a threat of future injury. "Logically, "a prospective remedy will provide no relief for an injury that is, and likely will remain, entirely in the past.' " Church v. City of Huntsville, 30 F.3d 1332, 1337 \(11th Cir.1994\) (quoting American Postal Workers Union v. Frank, 968 F.2d 1373, 1376 \(1st Cir.1992\)). This concept has been described as one of mootness.

HN27↑ At every stage in the proceedings the court must "stop, look, and listen' to determine the impact of changes in the law on the case before it. Kremens v. Bartley, 431 U.S. 119, 135, 97 S. Ct. 1709, 1718, 52 L. Ed. 2d 184 \(1977\) (impact of changes in challenged statute on composition of certified [*1534] class of plaintiffs). Where a law is amended so as to remove its challenged features, the claim for injunctive relief becomes moot as to those features. [Cits].

Naturist Soc., Inc. v. Fillyaw, 958 F.2d 1515, 1519-21 \(11th Cir.1992\). "Thus, a superseding statute or regulation moots a case only to the extent that it removes challenged features of the prior law." Id.

[**58] In this case, by way of injunctive relief, Crosby does not seek reinstatement, but rather, an order directing the Authority to review his application anew.<sup>29</sup> Assuming, arguendo, we undertook a review of the old (1984) version of O.C.G.A. § 31-7-7 and concluded that the Authority did not act pursuant to a clearly articulated state policy, any order we issued would not solve Dr. Crosby's problem. If we ordered that the Authority review Dr. Crosby's application again, such review would take place under the new (1990) version of O.C.G.A. § 31-7-7. Accordingly, the issue of whether the old version of the statute clearly articulates the requisite policy is moot. We must review the current statute as amended to determine whether Georgia has clearly articulated the challenged anticompetitive conduct. In short, because injunctive relief is prospective, Dr. Crosby's claim travels under the new version of the statute. See Landgraf v. USI Film Products, 511 U.S. 244, 257, 114 S. Ct. 1483, 1501, 128 L. Ed. 2d 229 \(1994\) ("Relief by injunction operates in futuro....").

<sup>28</sup> See infra Section II.D.

<sup>29</sup> In his brief, Dr. Crosby states:

Appellant, Dr. Crosby, has not and does not seek an order directing that the Authority grant him staff privileges. He seeks to have injunctive relief to ensure that he is placed on a level playing field with his allopathic competitors. He also seeks monetary damages for the conduct of the private defendant physicians who participated in the denial of his staff privileges.

[**59] The clear articulation question is not a close one. HN28↑ Hospitals may make staff privilege decisions based on any reasonable objective, "including, but not limited to, the appropriate utilization of hospital facilities." O.C.G.A. § 31-7-7. We agree with the district court that it "is at the very least foreseeable, and most certainly reasonably anticipated, that this language would enable a hospital authority to engage in anticompetitive conduct through its peer review activities." Crosby, 873 F. Supp. at 1579. This is not the type of case in which we must discern what type of conduct is reasonably anticipated from a broad authorization to act. Rather, the statute explicitly provides for precisely the anticompetitive conduct about which Dr. Crosby complains. At worst, Dr. Crosby alleges that the SGMC orthopedic surgeons determined that their services were sufficient to meet the demand for their specialty at the hospital and, therefore, agreed to deny Dr. Crosby hospital privileges. This is exactly what the statute directs SGMC and the Authority to do. We readily conclude that O.C.G.A. § 31-7-7 evidences a state policy in favor of the anticompetitive conduct challenged in this case [**60] and hold that all defendants are shielded from suit for injunctive relief by state action immunity.<sup>30</sup>

The foregoing result is more readily reached than the similar results in Bolt IV, 980 F.2d at 1386 (reinstating, in part, the rationale of Bolt III, 891 F.2d at 825 ("One could correctly say that when Florida's legislature authorized peer review in licensed medical facilities, ... it could foresee that [the hospital] would rely on recommendations made by a physician's peers and refuse to deal with (i.e., boycott) that physician.")); and Lee County, 38 F.3d at 1192 (holding that when the [**61] state legislature expanded the hospital board's powers to acquire other hospitals, it was foreseeable that new acquisitions would result and that this would increase the board's market share in an anticompetitive manner). These cases illustrate that HN29↑ "reasonable anticipation" does not require explicit authorization to engage in anticompetitive conduct.

Our conclusion is not altered by Dr. Crosby's argument that Georgia's Constitution [*1535] establishes a policy against restraints on trade. Article III, § 6, P 5 of the Georgia Constitution of 1983 provides that the General Assembly shall not have the power to authorize any contract or agreement which may have the effect of defeating or lessening competition, or encouraging a monopoly, which are hereby declared to be unlawful and void.

We will not undertake an examination of whether the legislature's clear articulation of anticompetitive policy in O.C.G.A. § 31-7-7 violates this constitutional provision; HN30↑ we do not sit to determine whether a state statute violates state law for purposes of state action immunity. It is sufficient that Georgia has generally authorized the challenged anticompetitive conduct. Cf. City of Columbia I<sup>\*\*621</sup> v. Omni Outdoor Advertising, 499 U.S. 365, 371-72, 111 S. Ct. 1344, 1350, 113 L. Ed. 2d 382 \(1991\) ("In order to prevent Parker from undermining the very interests of federalism it is designed to protect, it is necessary to adopt a concept of authority broader than what is applied to determine the legality of the municipality's action under state law."). Insofar as Crosby argues that the constitutional provision simply clarifies state policy<sup>31</sup> (i.e., not that it renders the statute unconstitutional), we find that such policy has been tempered by a "rule of reason." See Ferrero v. Assoc. Materials, Inc., 923 F.2d 1441, 1447 \(11th Cir.1991\). HN31↑ "The rule of reason protects those contracts which are reasonable in light of the interests of the parties and the interests of the public." Id. at 1447. As the district court found, HN32↑ the rule of reason protects contracts executed pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 31-7-7. The parties to SGMC's by-laws and the public have an interest in "the appropriate utilization of hospital facilities," i.e., maintaining a proper mix of doctors and specialties at the hospital so as to attract the optimal number of qualified professionals. O.C.G.A. § 31-7-7 [**63] is a reasonable response to such interest because it allows hospitals to make their staff credentialing decisions based on such criteria. See Crosby, 873 F. Supp. at 1579-81.

<sup>30</sup> Our conclusion that Georgia has reasonably anticipated the anticompetitive effects of hospital peer review decisions also derives strong support from O.C.G.A. § 31-7-15, the statute authorizing peer review. See supra note 22. This statute indicates the legislature's recognition that staff credentialing decisions will be aided by the use of peer review committees. Accord Bolt IV, 980 F.2d at 1386.

<sup>31</sup> Cf. Atlanta Center Ltd. v. Hilton Hotels Corp., 848 F.2d 146, 148 \(11th Cir.1988\) ("The state of Georgia has expressed, both in its constitution and in its statutory law, a strong public policy disfavoring contractual restraints on competition and trade.").

In sum, the statutory language here easily surpasses the "clear articulation" mark. Further, given the mitigating influence of the rule of reason, it is at the very least reasonably foreseeable that O.C.G.A. § 31-7-7 would lead hospital decisionmakers to act anticompetitively in determining the "appropriate utilization of facilities" notwithstanding Article III, § 6, P 5 of the Georgia Constitution. Accordingly, we readily conclude that all defendants are shielded from suit for injunctive relief by state action immunity.<sup>32</sup>

[**64]

D. Local Government Antitrust Act

The district court held that the Local Government Antitrust Act of 1984 ("LGAA"), 15 U.S.C.A. § 34 et seq., precludes Dr. Crosby's action for damages against all defendants. Crosby, 873 F. Supp. at 1581. Dr. Crosby does not contest this conclusion as to the Authority or its board members. He argues, however, that the individual committee members are not immunized by the LGAA.

The LGAA provides, in relevant part:

HN33 [↑] No damages, interest on damages, costs or attorney's fees may be recovered under section 4, 4A, or 4C of the Clayton act (15 U.S.C. 15, 15a, or 15c) in any claim against a person based on any official action directed by a local government, or official or employee thereof acting in an official capacity.

[*1536] 15 U.S.C.A. § 36\(a\). Section 4 of the Clayton Act provides the damages remedy for violations of the Sherman Act; thus, it applies to Dr. Crosby's allegations. We must determine whether the actions of the individual committee members constitute "official actions directed by a local government, or official or employee thereof acting in an official capacity."<sup>33</sup>

[**65] As to the phrase "action directed by a local government," the Joint Report of the Conference Committee explains:

In Referring in section 4 to the applications of the antitrust laws to the conduct of non-governmental parties directed by a local government, the conferees borrowed the phrase "official action directed by" a local government from Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 351 [63 S. Ct. 307, 313, 87 L. Ed. 315] (1941); and the conferees intend that Parker and subsequent cases interpreting it shall apply by analogy to the conduct of a local government in directing the actions of non-governmental parties, as if the local government were a state.

H.R. Conf. Rep. No. 1158, 98th Cong., 2d Sess. 3, reprinted in 1984 U.S.C.C.A.N. 4602, 4626-27 (emphasis added). The analogy to the Parker doctrine is confirmed by comparing the language in the statute to that in Parker. Parker held that the federal antitrust laws were not intended "to restrain a state or its officers or agents from activities directed by its legislature." 317 U.S. at 350-51, 63 S. Ct. at 313 (emphasis added); see also City of Lafayette, La. v. La. Power & Light [**66] Co., 435 U.S. 389, 409, 98 S. Ct. 1123, 1134, 55 L. Ed. 2d 364 \(1978\). It is clear that the language in the statute (i.e., "action directed by a local government") was based on the above-quoted language in Parker.

<sup>32</sup> Dr. Crosby urges that a different conclusion is mandated by FTC v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 504 U.S. 621, 112 S. Ct. 2169, 119 L. Ed. 2d 410 \(1992\). His argument focuses on Ticor's insistence on real compliance with the active supervision requirement. Id., 504 U.S. at 633-39, 112 S. Ct. at 2177-79. The foregoing discussion makes clear that this aspect of Ticor has no bearing on this case because we need not reach the "active supervision" requirement. As to the "clear articulation" requirement, the Court in dicta reiterated that "in the usual case, Midcal's requirement that the State articulate a clear policy shows little more than that the State has not acted through inadvertence...." Id., 504 U.S. at 636, 112 S. Ct. at 2178. As the discussion supra makes clear, Georgia's statutory action reasonably portends the challenged anticompetitive conduct in this case.

<sup>33</sup> Dr. Crosby essentially concedes that the Authority falls within the definition of "local government" and that the individual committee members are "persons" within the meaning of the LGAA by failing to argue otherwise on appeal. See Cheffer v. Reno, 55 F.3d 1517, 1519 n. 1 \(11th Cir. 1995\) (issues not argued in brief deemed abandoned); see also Fed.R.App.P. 28\(a\)\(6\).

As discussed supra, the Parker doctrine has developed such that, where the defendant is a private actor (i.e., not a "municipality"), he or she must show both that: 1) the challenged restraint is one clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy; and 2) the policy is actively supervised by the state. FTC v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 504 U.S. 621, 633, 112 S. Ct. 2169, 2176, 119 L. Ed. 2d 410 (1992); California Retail Liquor Dealers Ass'n. v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97, 105, 100 S. Ct. 937, 943, 63 L. Ed. 2d 233 (1980).

Following the legislative intent embodied in the Joint Report of the Conference Committee, we apply by analogy the Parker doctrine to the relationship between the Authority (i.e., the entity under the LGAA which is analogous to the State in the state action immunity context) and the individual committee members (i.e., the entities under the LGAA which are analogous to private parties in the state action immunity [**67] context).<sup>34</sup> See Cohn v. Bond, 953 F.2d 154, 157 (4th Cir. 1991), cert. denied, 505 U.S. 1230, 112 S. Ct. 3057, 120 L. Ed. 2d 922 (1992) HN34 ("Whether actions are directed by an official, as contemplated by the LGAA, is determined by borrowing and applying the State Action Doctrine two prong test."); Sandcrest Outpatient Servs., P.A. v. Cumberland County Hospital System, Inc., 853 F.2d 1139, 1143 (4th Cir. 1988) (Powell, Associate Justice (retired)) (undertaking similar analysis).

The challenged actions of the individual committee members in this case easily satisfy the two-prong Midcal test of clear articulation and active supervision. First, the individual committee members acted pursuant to clearly articulated policy of the Authority to deny privileges when the applicant had not completed the necessary residency. Specifically, the individual committee members acted pursuant to the Bylaws (adopted and approved by the Authority) in making recommendations to the Authority [**68] to deny Crosby's hospital privileges. Second, the Authority itself actively supervised the committees; as noted above, the Authority made the final decision to deny Crosby's privileges after a full hearing thereon. As noted supra, [*1537] the language of the statute (contemplating immunity for the actions of a private person "based on any official action directed by a local government, or official or employee thereof acting in an official capacity"), the legislative history, and the case law (Cohn, supra; Sandcrest, supra) make it clear that the second prong of the Midcal test is satisfied when the local government, in this case the Authority, actively supervises the challenged conduct.

Thus, we readily conclude that the two-prong Midcal test is satisfied, and that the challenged actions of the individual committee members in this case fall comfortably within the phrase "official action directed by a local government."<sup>35</sup> We hold that the individual committee members are immune from damages under the LGAA.

[**69] III. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment of the district court is

AFFIRMED.

---

End of Document

<sup>34</sup> See infra, note 35.

<sup>35</sup> We recognize that our holding, supra, that the actions of the individual doctors should be considered actions of the Authority for purposes of state action immunity may mean the individual doctors are directly immune under the LGAA, 15 U.S.C.A. § 35(a). Section 35(a) provides that no damages may be recovered from a local government, or an official or employee thereof acting in an official capacity. However, we also recognize that the specificity of the LGAA's language in § 35(a) ("local government, or official or employee") might suggest that agents other than "officials" or "employees" are not directly immune. In any event, we need not decide whether the individual committee members should be deemed the equivalent of the local government, or an official or employee of the local government for purposes of the LGAA because the two-prong Midcal test is so readily satisfied, and the doctors are clearly immune under § 36(a).

In re Potash Antitrust Litig.

United States District Court for the District of Minnesota, Third Division

September 13, 1996, Decided ; September 13, 1996, FILED

MDL Docket No. 981 Civ. No. 3-93-197

Reporter

954 F. Supp. 1334 *; 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14981 **

In Re Potash Antitrust Litigation

Subsequent History: Sanctions allowed by *In re Potash Antitrust Litig., 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19614 \(D. Minn., Sept. 13, 1996\)*

Accepted by, Adopted by, Motions ruled upon by In re Potash Antitrust Litig., 954 F. Supp. 1334, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 54 (D. Minn., Jan. 2, 1997)

Prior History: *In re Potash Antitrust Litig., 896 F. Supp. 916, 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11743 \(D. Minn., July 17, 1995\)*

Disposition: [**1] The Motion of PCA and Rio Algom for Summary Judgment be granted. Kalium's Motion for Summary Judgment is granted. Noranda's Motion for Summary Judgment is granted. Cominco's Motion for Summary Judgment is granted. The Joint Motion of the Defendants for Summary Judgment is granted. IMC's Motion for Summary Judgment is granted. PPG's Motion for Summary Judgment is granted. Motion of New Mexico Potash and Eddy Potash for Summary Judgment is granted.

Core Terms

---

potash, prices, Pltfs, producers, conspiracy, Deposition, Plaintiffs', customers, Sales, increased price, summary judgment, margins, communications, competitors, announced, Suspension, dumping, Defendants', alleged conspiracy, price list, infer, antidumping, market share, percent, conspiratorial, antitrust, reveals, marketplace, complaints, stabilize

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

954 F. Supp. 1334, *1334A 996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14981, **1

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > Discovery Materials

HN1[ Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

In antitrust cases, as in other civil actions, a motion for summary judgment should be granted if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\). For these purposes, a disputed fact is "material" if it must inevitably be resolved and the resolution will determine the outcome of the case, while a dispute is "genuine" if the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the non-moving party.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

HN2[ Summary Judgment, Motions for Summary Judgment

As Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(e\) makes clear, once the moving party presents a properly supported motion, the burden shifts to the non-moving party to demonstrate the existence of a genuine dispute. In rebutting the showings of the movant, an adverse party may not rest upon the mere allegations or denials of the adverse party's pleading, but must set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN3[ Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

A party is entitled to summary judgment where its opponent has failed to establish the existence of an element essential to its case, and on which it will bear the burden of proof at trial. In such a case, no genuine issue of material fact will be found to exist because a complete failure of proof concerning an essential element of that party's case necessarily renders all other facts immaterial. Of course, in determining whether a material factual dispute exists, the court views the evidence through the prism of the controlling legal standard.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

International Trade Law > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN4[ Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

954 F. Supp. 1334, *1334 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14981, **1

Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides that every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. The essence of a § 1 claim is concerted action and, because the law requires an agreement between two or more persons, unilateral actions of a single entity do not give rise to antitrust liability under § 1 of the Sherman Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN5 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

On a claim of concerted price fixing, the antitrust plaintiff must present evidence sufficient to carry its burden of proving that there was such an agreement. The standard is whether the evidence, direct or circumstantial, reasonably tends to prove that the alleged violator and others had a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective. More recently, the United States Supreme Court has elaborated upon this standard, and has determined that, in order to successfully oppose a motion for summary judgment, the nonmoving party must show that the inference of conspiracy is reasonable in light of the competing inferences of independent action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

HN6 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The precepts of antitrust law do not alter the principle that, on summary judgment, the inferences to be drawn from the underlying facts must be viewed in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion. Nevertheless, there is no direct evidence of collusion, antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a § 1 of the Sherman Act case. Specifically, conduct as consistent with permissible conduct as with an illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy. In such cases, the plaintiff must present evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the alleged conspirators acted independently.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

HN7 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

954 F. Supp. 1334, *1334 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14981, **1

The absence of any plausible motive to engage in the conduct charged is highly relevant to whether a genuine issue for trial exists within the meaning of Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e). In such an instance, the record on summary judgment must contain further persuasive evidence if it is to support the claim for recovery.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN8 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

If the plaintiff's theory in a § 1 of the Sherman Act claim is economically senseless, no reasonable jury could find in its favor, and summary judgment should be granted.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN9 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Participation in a price fixing conspiracy need not be, nor rarely is, shown by direct evidence, for most conspiracies are proved through inferences that are drawn from the behavior of the alleged conspirators.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

HN10 [down] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

Summary judgment is neither an acceptable means of resolving triable issues, nor is it a disfavored procedural shortcut when there are no issues which require the unique proficiencies of a jury to weigh the evidence and to render credibility determinations.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Penalties

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Communications > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN11 [down] Sherman Act, Penalties

Only concerted action is within the proscriptions of the Sherman Act and, therefore, courts have the added responsibility of assuring that any underlying, lawful conduct is not, inadvertently, condemned and penalized.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

954 F. Supp. 1334, *1334A 996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14981, **1

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Trials > Jury Trials > Province of Court & Jury

**HN12** [L] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Whether the underlying, circumstantial evidence is sufficient to support a reasonable inference of collusion remains a legal question for the court's resolution. Thus, evidence which permits equally competing inferences, without tending to point in one direction, should not be sent to the jury, for the court may not invite the factfinder to speculate on the consummation of an agreement to restrain trade. Of course, if the underlying conduct is sufficient to support such an inference, then the question of what weight should be assigned to competing permissible inferences is within the province of the fact-finder at trial.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

**HN13** [L] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

One means by which the courts may ensure that unilateral, nonconspiratorial conduct is not unintentionally punished is to require the plaintiffs to demonstrate something more than mere paralleling or mimicking conduct. Of course, if persons acted in near unison, but independently of one another and without any agreement or mutual understanding amongst them, then there is no conspiratorial showing. In effect, individual pricing decisions (even when each firm rests its own decision upon its belief that competitors will do the same) do not constitute an unlawful agreement under § 1 of the Sherman Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

**HN14** [L] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The existence of mere parallel pricing, in an oligopoly, is not, standing alone, actionable.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

**HN15** [L] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

In order to present a jury question as to the existence of a conspiracy, there must be a parallelism in pricing that is accompanied by competent, additional evidence.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

**HN16** [L] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

954 F. Supp. 1334, *1334A 996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14981, **1

It is now settled antitrust law that only when the plaintiff shows the existence of additional evidence - often referred to as the plus factors - does the evidence tend to exclude the possibility that the defendants were actually acting independently.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Contracts Law > Defenses > Ambiguities & Mistakes > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN17 [blue icon] Summary Judgment, Evidentiary Considerations

Where an examination of the proffered plus factors leads to an equally plausible inference that merely interdependent behavior is at hand, then there is no triable issue that would preclude a grant of summary judgment, so long as there is no evidence which tends to exclude the possibility that the alleged conspirators acted independently. This is so, because ambiguous evidence cannot be sent a jury as a court may not invite the factfinder to speculate that an agreement existed. In the final analysis, a failure on the part of the plaintiff to produce evidence from which a jury could infer reasonably that conduct was conspiratorial, not unilateral, will lead to summary judgment for the defendant.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN18 [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The examination of a price fixing claim, in the unique environs of an oligopolistic market, requires more of a showing than the mere existence of the spontaneous forces which cause oligopolists to parrot the pricing decisions of a market leader. In the parlance, the price fixing claimant must present "plus factors" - that is, reliable indicators of unlawful price fixing - if a genuine issue of material fact is to be presented for a jury's resolution.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN19 [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Where the empirically established principles, which govern the operation of an oligopolistic market, and which reliably confirm that, left to spontaneity, the market will be driven by a price leader, who the other participants in the market will follow, something more than a suspicion of culpability should properly stave an award of summary judgment.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

954 F. Supp. 1334, *1334A 996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14981, **1

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

**HN20** [L] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

While proof of an occasion to conspire may, as a practical matter, satisfy a necessary precondition of a conspiracy, a jury cannot reasonably infer the existence of a conspiracy merely from the opportunity to form one.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

**HN21** [L] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

While the absence of motive may negate an inference of conspiracy, its presence is not sufficient to infer that a conspiracy has occurred. If motive were sufficient to show conspiracy, then parallel pricing, especially in oligopoly, would be automatically conspiratorial, but it is not.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

**HN22** [L] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The fact that a firm's action is against its self-interest might well be suggestive of the existence of a conspiracy. However, to support a reasonable inference of conspiracy, the conduct must reveal more than the mere recognition that an act is unwise - unless it is followed by its rivals - for it must competently disclose individual action that would be so perilous in the absence of advance agreement that no reasonable firm would make the challenged move without such agreement.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

**HN23** [L] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Standing alone, an attempt by one member of an oligopoly to exercise price leadership, by reducing its price, is not unlawful. It would be an unsound expression of antitrust policy to discourage a price leader, in an oligopolistic market, from reducing its price.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

**HN24** [L] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The fact that many, if not all, firms in an industry react similarly to a particular practice does not evidence an industry-wide agreement when there is a legitimate business purpose for each firm's behavior.

954 F. Supp. 1334, *1334 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14981, **1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN25 [ ] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A court deciding whether to grant summary judgment should not view each piece of evidence in a vacuum. Seemingly innocent or ambiguous behavior can give rise to a reasonable inference of conspiracy in light of the background against which the behavior takes place.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > Antitrust Issues

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > General Overview

HN26 [ ] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Cartels & Horizontal Restraints

A conspiracy cannot be established merely by proof that a manufacturer terminated a distributor in response to dealer complaints. According to the United States Supreme Court, complaints about price cutters are natural - and from the manufacturer's perspective, unavoidable - reactions by distributors to the activities of their rivals.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN27 [ ] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Per Se Violations

The dissemination of price information is not itself a per se violation of the Sherman Act. Because the mere exchange of price information, without more, is not unlawful, plaintiffs must demonstrate that the price verifications were motivated by an anticompetitive intent and, indeed, caused injury to competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN28 [ ] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

In order to hold a defendant liable as an actor in an antitrust violation, the plaintiffs must demonstrate that the defendant performed acts sufficient to create liability, or actively influenced, a violation.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Shareholder Duties & Liabilities > Piercing the Corporate Veil > General Overview

954 F. Supp. 1334, *1334A 996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14981, **1

**HN29** [blue] Shareholder Duties & Liabilities, Piercing the Corporate Veil

A corporation's inaccurate description of its relationship with a related corporation usually does not justify piercing the corporate veil.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

**HN30** [blue] Inchoate Crimes, Conspiracy

A conspiracy is presumed to exist until there has been an affirmative showing that it has terminated, and its members continue to be conspirators until there has been an affirmative showing that they have withdrawn. Accordingly, the statute of limitations does not begin to run on a co-conspirator until the final act in furtherance of the conspiracy has occurred or until a co-conspirator withdraws from the conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Torts > ... > Concerted Action > Civil Conspiracy > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

**HN31** [blue] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Affirmative acts inconsistent with the object of the conspiracy and communicated in a manner reasonably calculated to reach co-conspirators have generally been regarded as sufficient to establish withdrawal or abandonment. While the mere cessation of activities may not be sufficient to activate the period of limitations, a conspirator need not take action to stop, obstruct or interfere with the conspiracy in order to withdraw from it.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

**HN32** [blue] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Motions to dismiss are directed to the sufficiency of the allegations in the complaint, whereas, on motions for summary judgment, the court looks to the evidence before it.

Counsel: For BLOMKEST FERTILIZER, INC., plaintiff: Mark Reinhardt, Reinhardt & Anderson, St Paul, MN. Orrin S Estebo, Estebo Schnobrich Frank & Solie, Redwood Falls, MN. Warren Rubin, Gross Sklar & Metzger, Philadelphia, PA. Michael J Freed, Steven A Kanner, Much Shelist Freed Denenberg Ament & Eiger, Chicago, IL. Joseph Goldberg, Freedman Boyd & Daniels, Albuquerque, NM. James D Sonda, James W Rankin, Alex Dimitrief, L Roger Board, Kirkland & Ellis, Chicago, IL. Jack Weston Hanson, Hanson & Assoc, Mpls, MN. Lynn L Sarko, Keller Rohrback, Seattle, WA. Steve W Berman, Hagens & Berman, Seattle, WA. Thomas J Potter, Ludens Potter & Burch, Morrison, IL. Francis O Scarpulla, Scarpulla Law Office, San Francisco, CA. Vernon N Reaser, Reaser &

Wall, Victoria, [**2] TX. Joel C Meredith, Meredith & Cohen, Philadelphia, PA. Robert N Kaplan, Kaplan & Kilsheimer, New York, NY. Charles R Watkins, Susman Saunders & Buehler, Chicago, IL. Eugene A Spector, Mark S Goldman, Paul J Scarlato, Spector & Roseman, Philadelphia, PA. Eric D Freed, Freed Law Office, Los Angeles, CA. Gregory J Fata, Dominick Finer foods Inc, Northlake, IL. For COBDEN GRAIN & FEED, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated, plaintiff: Steven A Kanner, Much Shelist Freed Denenberg Ament & Eiger, Chicago, IL. For HAHNAMAN ALBRECHT, INC., plaintiff: Steven A Kanner, Much Shelist Freed Denenberg Ament & Eiger, Chicago, IL. Lynn L Sarko, Keller Rohrback, Seattle, WA. Charles R Watkins, Susman Saunders & Buehler, Chicago, IL. For JOHN PETERSON dba Almelund Feed & Grain, plaintiff: Charles Harley Johnson, Johnson & Assoc, St Paul, MN. Mark Reinhardt, Reinhardt & Anderson, St Paul, MN. Steven A Kanner, Much Shelist Freed Denenberg Ament & Eiger, Chicago, IL. For LAING-GRO FERTILIZERS, INC., plaintiff: Elliott S Kaplan, Linda S Foreman, Lateesa Thamani Agunbiade, Robins Kaplan Miller & Ciresi, Mpls, MN. Steven A Kanner, Much Shelist Freed Denenberg Ament & Eibert, Chicago, [**3] IL. Joseph W Cotchett, Susan Y Illston, Mark D Eibert, John L Fitzgerald, Cotchett & Pitre, Burlingame, CA. Arthur N Bailey, Bailey Law Office, Jamestown, NY. Leoanrd B Simon, Dennis Stewart, Milberg Weiss Bershad Hynes & Lerach, San Diego, CA. For CLEARBROOK AG SERVICE, INC., on behalf of itself and all others similarly situated, plaintiff: Steven A Kanner, Much Shelist Freed Denenberg Ament & Eiger, Chicago, IL. Joseph Goldberg, Freedman Boyd & Daniels, Albuquerque, NM. John P Bailey, Bailey Law Office, Bemidji, MN. James S Bailey, Jr, Bailey Harring & Peterson, Denver, CO. For REAMFORD LIQUID FERTILIZER INC, on behalf of itself and all others similarly situated, plaintiff: Steven A Kanner, Much Shelist Freed Denenberg Ament & Eiger, Chicago, IL. James B Sloan, Pedersen & Houpt, Chicago, IL. William T Gotfryd, Gotfryd Law Office, Chicago, IL. For TOLLEY'S INC, on behalf of itself and all others similarly situated, JAMES RIVER FARM SERVICE INC, on behalf of itself and all other similarly situated, plaintiffs: Steven A Kanner, Much Shelist Freed Denenberg Ament & Eiger, Chicago, IL. James B Sloan, Pedersen & Houpt, Chicago, IL. William T Gotfryd, Gotfryd Law Office, Chicago, IL. Eliot [**4] Norman, Thompson & McMullan, Richmond, VA. For ANGELA COLEMAN, on behalf of herself and all others similarly situated, plaintiff: Mark C Rifkin, Greenfield & Rifkin, Ardmore, PA. Steven A Kanner, Much Shelist Freed Denenberg Ament & Eiger, Chicago, IL. Patrick J Grannan, Chimicles Burt Jacobsen & McNew, Los Angeles, CA. C Oliver Burt, III, Chimicles Jacobson & Tikellis, Haverford, PA. Eugene Mikolajczyk, Prorgay & Mikolajczyk, Pacific Palisades, CA. For AG NETWORK, INC., plaintiff: Linda S Foreman, Robins Kaplan Miller & Ciresi, Mpls, MN. Steven A Kanner, Much Shelist Freed Denenberg Ament & Eiger, Chicago, IL. Joseph W Cotchett, Mark D Eibert, Ruth Silver Taube, Jack P Hug, Cochett & Pitre, Burlingame, CA. Arthur N Bailey, Bailey Law Office, Jamestown, NY. For MARCELLINE FARM SUPPLY, INC., on behalf of itself and all others similarly situated, plaintiff: Mark Reinhardt, Harvey H Eckart, Reinhardt & Anderson, St Paul, MN. Steven A Kanner, Much Shelist Freed Denenberg Ament & Eiger, Chicago, IL. Fredric N Goldberg, Mika Meyers Beckett & Jones, Grand Rapids, MI. Eugene A Spector, Mark S Goldman, Spector & Roseman, Philadelphia, PA. Eric D Freed, Freed Law Office, Los Angeles, CA.

For [**5] POTASH CORPORATION OF SASKATCHEWAN, INC., defendant: Jerome B Pederson, Fredrikson & Byron, Mpls, MN. Michael Evan Jaffe, Arent Fox Kintner Plotkin & Kahn, Washington, DC. George S Cary, Irell & Manella, Newport Beach, CA. For POTASH CORPORATION OF SASKATCHEWAN SALES, LTD., defendant: Jerome B Pederson, Fredrikson & Byron, Mpls, MN. Michael Evan Jaffe, Eugene J Meigher, James P Mercurio, Gerald Zingone, Arent Fox Kintner Plotkin & Kahn, Washington, DC. For POTASH COMPANY OF AMERICA, INC., defendant: Leon R Goodrich, Oppenheimer Wolff & Donnelly, St Paul, MN. Victor S Friedman, Fried Frank Harris Shriver & Jacobson, New York, NY. Stephen D Alexander, Fried Frank Harris Shriver & Jacobson, Los Angeles, CA. For IMC FERTILIZER GROUP, INC., defendant: Gordon Gene Busdicker, John Dwyer French, Faegre & Benson, Mpls, MN. Richard J Favretto, Marc Gary, Kerry Lynn Edwards, Lawrence S Robbins, Mayer Brown & Platt, Washington, DC. For KALIUM CHEMICALS LTD, defendant: Roger B Harris, Julie Ann Swanson, Altheimer & Gray, Chicago, IL. Douglas E Rosenthal, Amy L Bess, Sonnenschein Nath & Rosenthal, Washington, DC. For KALIUM CANADA, LTD., defendant: Douglas E Rosenthal, Amy L Bess, Sonnenschein Nath [**6] & Rosenthal, Washington, DC. For NORANDA MINERALS INC, defendant: Bradley Grayson Clary, Oppenheimer Wolff & Donnelly, Mpls, MN. David C Gustman, William C Holmes, Michael J Kelly, Freeborn & Peters, Chicago, IL. For CENTRAL CANADA POTASH CO., defendant: Leon R Goodrich, Oppenheimer Wolff & Donnelly, St Paul, MN. David C Gustman, Michael J Kelly, Freeborn & Peters, Chicago, IL. For NORANDA SALES CORPORATION, LTD, defendant: Leon R Goodrich, Oppenheimer Wolff & Donnelly, St Paul, MN. David C Gustman, Michael J Kelley, Freeborn & Peters, Chicago, IL. For COMINCO, LTD., COMINCO AMERICAN INCORPORATED, defendants:

954 F. Supp. 1334, *1334A 996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14981, **6

Gerald A Connell, Ronald F Wick, Baker & Hostetler, Washington, DC. Ralph Zarefsky, Baker & Hostetler, Los Angeles, CA. For MISSISSIPPI CHEMICAL CORP., defendant: Carol Alice Peterson, Dorsey & Whitney, Mpls, MN. Wayne A Cross, Erin L Ringham, Dewey Ballantine, New York, NY. Mark Crane, Hopkins & Sutter, Chicago, IL. Stephen A Marshall, Rubin Baum Levin Constant & Friedman, New York, NY. For EDDY POTASH, INC., defendant: Carol Alice Peterson, Dorsey & Whitney, Mpls, MN. Stephen A Marshall, Martin P Michael, Rubin Baum Levin Constant & Friedman, New York, NY. For NEW MEXICO POTASH [**7] CORPORATION, defendant: Carol Alice Peterson, Dorsey & Whitney, Mpls, MN. Wayne A Cross, Dewey Ballantine, New York, NY. Stephen A Marshall, Martin P Michael, Rubin Baum Levin Constant & Friedman, New York, NY. Robert Shelley Draper, O'Melveny & Myers, Los Angeles, CA. For RIO ALGOM, LTD, defendant: Victor S Friedman, Fried Frank Harris Shriver & Jacobson, New York, NY. For PPG CANADA LIMITED, PPG INDUSTRIES INC, defendants: Scott Kimrey Goldsmith, Frank Alan Taylor, Popham Haik Schnobrich & Kaufman, Mpls, MN.

Judges: Raymond L. Erickson, UNITED STATES MAGISTRATE JUDGE

Opinion by: Raymond L. Erickson

Opinion

---

[*1339] REPORT AND RECOMMENDATION

At Duluth, in the District of Minnesota, this 13th day of September, 1996.

I. Introduction

This matter came before the undersigned United States Magistrate Judge pursuant to a special assignment, made in accordance with the provisions of Title 28 U.S.C. § 636\(b\) \(1\) \(A\) and \(B\), upon the Motions of the Defendants for Summary Judgment.<sup>1</sup>

[**8] [*1340] A Hearing on the Motions was conducted on April 18, 1996, at which time the parties appeared by lead and liaison counsel.<sup>2</sup>

[**9] For reasons which follow, we recommend that the Defendants' Motions for Summary Judgment be granted.

II. Factual and Procedural Background

---

<sup>1</sup> In addition to the filing of a Joint Motion and Memorandum in Support of Summary Judgment, the Defendants -- with the exception of Potash Corporation of Saskatchewan, Inc. and Potash Corporation of Saskatchewan Sales Limited (collectively "PCS") -- filed Supplemental Motions for Summary Judgment, which separately addressed those issues that were unique to each, individual Defendant.

<sup>2</sup> Appearances were as follows: the Plaintiff Class appeared by Joel C. Meredith, Bruce Cohen, Mark Reinhardt, and Harvey Eckart, Esqs.; Richard J. Favretto, Marc Gary, Kerry Lynn Edwards, and Gordon G. Busdicker, Esqs., appeared on behalf of IMC Fertilizer Group, Inc. ("IMC"); Stephen A. Marshall, and Martin P. Michael, Esqs., appeared on behalf of New Mexico Potash Corporation, and Eddy Potash, Inc. (collectively "NMP/Eddy"); David C. Gustman, and Michael Kelly, Esqs., appeared on behalf of Noranda Minerals Inc., Noranda Sales Corporation, Ltd., and Central Canada Potash Company, Limited (collectively "Noranda"); Michael Evan Jaffe, and Gerald Zingone, Esqs., appeared on behalf of PCS; Gerald A. Connell, and Ronald M. Wick, Esqs., appeared on behalf of Cominco, Ltd., and Cominco American Incorporated (collectively "Cominco"); Victor S. Friedman, and Eric Queen, Esqs., appeared on behalf of Potash Company of America, Inc. ("PCA"), and Rio Algom, Limited ("Rio Algom"); Frank A. Taylor, and Kathryn M. Walker, Esqs., appeared on behalf of PPG Canada Limited and PPG Industries, Inc. (collectively "PPG"); Douglas E. Rosenthal, and Amy L. Bess, Esqs., appeared on behalf of Kalium Chemicals, Ltd., and Kalium Canada, Ltd. (collectively "Kalium"); and Leon R. Goodrich, Esq., appeared on behalf of Cominco, Kalium, Noranda, and PCA.

954 F. Supp. 1334, *1340 (1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14981, **9

This action was commenced on April 1, 1993, when the first of twelve Complaints was filed in this Court, alleging that the Defendants had violated Section 1 of the Sherman Act, Title 15 U.S.C. § 1, by engaging in a conspiracy to fix the sales price of potash, a mineral that is widely used in the manufacture of fertilizers.<sup>3</sup> [**10] On May 19, 1993, the District Court, the Honorable Richard H. Kyle presiding, directed the parties to file an Amended Consolidated Class Action Complaint which would combine the twelve separate proceedings.<sup>4</sup>

The Plaintiffs' First Amended Consolidated Class Action Complaint was filed on June 4, 1993. Thereafter, the Defendants informed the Court that Keith Barton ("Barton"), who had previously served as the General Counsel to PCS, had furnished counsel for the Plaintiffs with confidential information about PCS, which Barton had acquired as legal counsel to that company. By Order dated December 8, 1993, the District Court concluded that Barton had breached his ethical obligations, by impermissibly disclosing certain of PCS's confidences. As a necessary, remedial sanction, the District Court disqualified the bulk of the counsel, who had then been retained by the Plaintiffs, and whose capacity, to ethically serve [**11] in this litigation, had been irreconcilably compromised by their involvement with Barton, and directed the Plaintiffs to file Amended Complaints which would be free from the taint of Barton's disclosures. See, In re Potash Antitrust Litigation, 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19065, Civ. No. 3-93-197, M.D.L. Docket No. 981, 1993 WL 543013 (D. Minn., December 8, 1993).

In a Third Amended Complaint, which was served and filed on July 8, 1994, the Plaintiffs have alleged that the Defendants conspired, from April of 1987, to and including July 8, [*1341] 1994, to fix, stabilize, and maintain potash prices, and that, as a result of that conspiracy, price competition in the sale of potash, among the Defendants and their co-conspirators, had been restrained. Specifically, the Plaintiffs have asserted that the Defendants, and their co-conspirators, raised, fixed, maintained and stabilized the price of potash throughout the United States, at artificially high and noncompetitive levels, thereby depriving their customers of the benefit of free and open competition. Third Amended Complaint at P 55. The Plaintiffs seek injunctive relief and the recovery of treble damages, together with their costs and attorneys' fees, pursuant to Sections [**12] 4 and 16 of the Clayton Act, Title 15 U.S.C. PP15 and 26.

Included within the Plaintiff Class are all of those persons, who directly purchased potash from one of the Defendants, during the period of the alleged conspiracy. Accordingly, by Order dated January 12, 1995, the District Court certified the following class of Plaintiffs:

All purchasers (excluding governmental entities, defendants, subsidiaries and affiliates of defendants, co-conspirators of defendants, and other producers of potash and their subsidiaries and affiliates) in the United States of potash directly from defendants or any subsidiary or affiliate thereof at any time during the period April 1987 to and including July 8, 1994.

In re Potash Antitrust Litigation, 159 F.R.D. 682, 700 (D. Minn. 1995).

<sup>3</sup> "Potash" is a generic name for a variety of potassium forms. The potassium found in potash, together with nitrogen and phosphorus, constitute the three basic raw materials used in the production of fertilizers. The predominant form of potash is "muriate of potash," which is otherwise known as "potassium chloride." Muriate of potash, which constitutes nearly all of the potash consumed in the United States, is available in three varieties of particle size: standard, coarse, and granular. Plaintiffs' Third Amended and Consolidated Class Action Complaint ("Third Amended Complaint") at P136. In addition to its employment as a fertilizer, a small portion of potash is consumed in various industrial applications. Potash is typically mined from underground land deposits, either through conventional or through "solution" mining. The potash, that is produced through solution mining, is white in color, whereas the potash, that is mined through conventional means, is typically red. Only white potash is suitable for industrial uses. Expert Report of Andrew W. Rosenfield ("Rosenfield Rept.") at P59, attached as Exhibit 17, Defendants' Joint Memorandum in Support of Summary Judgment, Affidavit of Gordon Busdicker ("Defs.'Jt.Memo. Aff.").

<sup>4</sup> On August 19, 1993, the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation transferred to this Court, in order that they might be consolidated with the twelve actions that this Court had previously combined, certain proceedings, which had originated in the District Courts for the Northern District of Illinois, and for the Western District of Virginia, and which involved the same or similar issues.

By Order dated May 2, 1995, the Court drafted, for distribution, a Notice which was "reasonably calculated, under all the circumstances, to apprise interested parties of the pendency of the action and afford them an opportunity to present their objections." In re Potash Antitrust Litigation, 161 F.R.D. 411, 412 (D. Minn. 1995). Insofar as we are aware, the Court-sanctioned Notice was published, [**13] and was mailed, in accordance with our directions, on or about June 30, 1995.

With the exception of PPG and Rio Algom, the Defendants are either Canadian or American producers of potash, or are the marketing subsidiaries of those producers.<sup>5</sup> Although the attributes, which are said to distinguish the Defendants, will be addressed when relevant to our subsequent analysis, a brief discussion of the potash market will provide a helpful backdrop.

[**14] PCS, which is the largest producer of potash in North America, was created, in 1975, by the Saskatchewan Government, and was vested with the authority to acquire up to 50 percent of the productive capacity for potash in that Province. In 1989, PCS was privatized -- a process that the Defendants assert was initiated in the latter part of 1986 -- with the result that a change in its merchandising was introduced, from one of production to one of profit. Kalium, which is another Canadian producer of potash, contends that, during the period of the alleged conspiracy, it was able to increase its market share by exploiting the superiority of its product -- white potash -- through a patented method of solution mining. Noranda's marketing plan, on the other hand, is somewhat distinguishable, since 80 percent of its sales are consummated with only two customers, whose purchase agreements have required that Noranda sell its potash at the market price. In [*1342] contrast, PCA's marketing in the United States has been less successful than that of the other Defendants, as is reflected in its dwindling market share, from approximately 8 percent, in 1986, to 1.3 percent, in 1993, see, *PCA/Rio Algom Jt. [**15] Memo.* at p. 6, as well as by its resort to purchasing potash from a co-Defendant, as a result of the loss of its mine, in February of 1987, to flooding. The remaining Canadian producers include Cominco and IMC, while New Mexico Potash ("NMP"), and Eddy Potash, are the only Defendants who are located in the United States.

The Plaintiffs contend that, after PCS increased its potash prices, in April of 1987, the other producers -- acting in concert -- followed suit by increasing their prices. Third Amended Complaint at P50. According to the Plaintiffs, this same pattern of pricing continued throughout the remainder of 1987; so that, by the beginning of 1988, price increases for potash had exceeded 74 percent. Id. at P51. Since the Third Amended Complaint has principally focused upon this particular period of time, a brief overview of the potash industry, together with a recitation of what appear to have been the key operative events which led up to January of 1988, will provide some additional context for the discussion that follows.

The North American potash industry is, and has been, highly concentrated. For example, in the 1985/1986 fertilizer year,<sup>6</sup> the Defendants comprised [**16] over 80 percent of the productive capacity for potash in North America. Expert Report of Gordon C. Rausser ("Rausser Rept.") at P 12, attached as Tab 59 Plaintiffs' Joint Brief in <sup>5</sup> As to PPG and Rio Algom, their involvement in the sale of potash, in the United States, arises from their ownership of one or more of the co-Defendants. For example, until November of 1987, PPG owned and operated Kalium as a business unit. PPG's Memorandum in Support of Summary Judgment ("PPG Memo.") at 1. On August 20, 1987, PPG agreed to sell its interest in Kalium to S&P Canada, Ltd. and S&P U.S., Inc. (collectively "S&P"), and that transaction was completed on November 17, 1987. Id. at 1 n. 1. Rio Algom, on the other hand, acquired, in 1986, the Potash Company of America, Inc. ("PCA Canada"), which is a Canadian company that operated two Canadian potash mines, and that merchandised potash in the United States. Declaration of John A.H. Bush at P2, attached to PCA's and Rio Algom's Memorandum in Support of Summary v Judgment ("PCA/Rio Algom Jt.Memo."). PCA Canada operated as a wholly-owned subsidiary of Rio Algom until December 31, 1987, when Rio Algom created a division ("Division") which oversaw the operations of the two mines. Id. at P3. On that same date, Rio Algom transferred the responsibility, for the sale and marketing of potash in the United States, to PCA, which operated as a wholly-owned subsidiary of Rio Algom. Id. at P4. Thereafter, in October of 1993, PCA's assets, and the potash mining assets of the Division, were sold to PCS. Id. at P5.

<sup>6</sup> The "fertilizer year" runs from July 1 through June 30. Expert Report of Louis A. Guth at P9 n. 7 ("The crop year runs from July 1 through June 30."), attached as Exhibit Q. NMP/Eddy Memorandum in Support of Summary Judgment. Affidavit of Steven A. Marshall ("NMP/Eddy Jt.Memo.Aff.").

Opposition to Summary Judgment Affidavit of Harvey H. Eckhart ("Plts. 'Jt.Opp. Aff."). By the 1993/1994 fertilizer year, the Defendants' productive capacity had increased to over 90 percent. Id.

In addition to the limited number of producers who serve the potash market, it is significant that potash is an essentially homogeneous product, with the result that its purchasers largely consider the output, from different producers, to be interchangeable. Id. at P7. Moreover, the demand for potash is inelastic -- that is, a decrease [**17] in the price of potash will not necessarily lead to a comparable increase in consumption -- principally because potash is primarily employed in agricultural uses, where it has no effective substitute, and where it is inexpensive in relation to the total cost of crop production. Id. at P10.

As a result of the fungibility of potash, the inelasticity of the demand for the product, and the relatively small number of potash producers, the industry operates in an oligopolistic market, which causes the market participants to be "interdependent." Put simply, "one firm's actions are interdependent with those of another when their utility depends on the other firm's response." VI P. Areeda & H. Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law P 1411, at 70 (1986) (hereafter "VI Areeda"). As a consequence, in an oligopoly, each producer is generally required to account for the conduct of its competitors, when pricing its product, as the oligopolist cannot, unilaterally, maintain a higher price without losing its market share.<sup>7</sup>

[**18] [*1343] As alleged in the Third Amended Complaint, "by the 1980's, the potash industry was faced with a major oversupply situation, coupled with high fixed costs, leading to major losses for the producers." Third Amended Complaint at P 45. This circumstance of oversupply has been attributed, in part, to a miscalculation of the demand for potash, which declined, in the early 1980's, as the acreage under cultivation decreased in the United States, and as a result of a strategy on PCS's part, as a state-owned employer, to increase employment opportunities in Saskatchewan. See, e.g., Haglund & von Bredow, The Politics of Antidumping: The Potash "War" of 1986-1988, in U.S. Trade Barriers and Canadian Minerals: Copper, Potash and Uranium (1990), p. 66, attached as Exhibit 5, Defs. 'Jt. Memo.Aff.; PCS 1981 Annual Report (PC 420978), attached as Exhibit 14, Defs.'Jt.Memo.Aff. The decline in the demand for potash, combined with the increase in production to stimulate a "price war." By October of 1986, the real price of potash had fallen to historically low levels. Indeed, the Defendants' expert, Andrew M. Rosenfield ("Rosenfield"), has calculated that, in real price terms, the price [**19] of potash, in October of 1986, was 21 percent lower than the previous historical low. Rosenfield Rent. at P76, attached as Exhibit 17, Defs.'Jt. Memo.Aff. Notably, on three separate occasions in 1986, Noranda, Kalium, PCA, and PCS attempted to unilaterally increase prices, but they were forced to rescind the increases when the prices went unmatched. Defs. 'Jt.Memo. at 5; Plts.'Jt.Opp.Memo. at 3 and 45.

The effect of these low price levels, in an oversupplied market, caused record losses at PCS. In March of 1987, the Provincial Government replaced the upper level of management at PCS with a team led by Charles Childers ("Childers") and William Doyle ("Doyle"), both of whom had previously been employed at IMC.<sup>8</sup> Childers served as <sup>7</sup> The mechanics at play here, in the context of a concentrated industry, were succinctly recounted by then Circuit Judge, and now Justice Breyer, as follows:

A firm in a concentrated industry typically has reason to decide (individually) to copy an industry leader. After all, a higher-than-leader's price might lead a customer to buy elsewhere, while a lower-than-leader's price might simply lead competitors to match the lower price, reducing profits for all. One does not need an agreement to bring about this kind of follow-the-leader effect in a concentrated industry.

Clamp-All Corp. v. Cast Iron Soil Pipe Institute, 851 F.2d 478, 484 (1st Cir. 1988); see also, United States v. FMC Corp., 306 F. Supp. 1106, 1139 (E.D.Pa. 1969) ("Due to the relative inelasticity of demand for the products a lower price will not increase the size of the total market; no producer can successfully sell at a higher price than its competitors; and if a seller attempts to sell at a lower price * * * its competitors will be given the opportunity to meet its lower price, thereby resulting in uniform prices again, but at a lower level; and without any increase in the original seller's net share of the market."), order supplemented, 317 F. Supp. 443 (E.D.Pa. 1970).

PCS's president and CEO, while Doyle became the president of PCS's sales subsidiary. In assuming leadership at PCS, Childers sought to make the operations profitable, in part, in order to prepare the company for privatization, which ultimately occurred in November of 1989. To accomplish the goal of profitability, Childers aspired to position PCS as a leader in the industry. See, e.g., "Tough Decisions Return Balance to the Bottom Line," [**20] Custom Applicator, Feb. 1989, attached as Exhibit 24. Defs.' Jt.Memo.Aff.

Against this background of falling prices and, contemporaneous with the change in PCS's management, on February 10, 1987, two American potash producers, Lundberg Industries ("Lundberg") and NMP, petitioned the United States Department of Commerce ("DOC") to initiate an antidumping proceeding against the Canadian producers. In order for an antidumping action to proceed, the United States International Trade Commission ("ITC") has to preliminarily establish that there was a "reasonable indication" that an industry in the United States was being materially injured by reason of imports which are, [**21] assertedly, being sold in the United States at less than their fair market value. See, Title 19 U.S.C. § 1673b(a). On March 27, 1987, the ITC determined that a "reasonable indication" had been shown that the United States potash industry had suffered a material injury because of imports. Potassium Chloride From Canada, 52 Fed. Reg. 10641 (April 2, 1987), attached as Exhibit 31, Defs. 'Jt.Memo.Aff. Thereafter, the investigation returned to the DOC, which preliminarily determined, on August 21, 1987, that imports of potash were being sold in the United States at "less than fair value." Potassium Chloride From Canada: Preliminary Determination of Sales at Less than Fair Value, 52 Fed. Reg. 32151 (August 26, 1987), attached as Exhibit 32. Defs.'Jt.Memo.Aff.

Based upon this preliminary finding, the DOC ordered the Canadian producers to pay cash deposits, on all future exports to the United States, or to post bonds, that would [*1344] be equal to the amount by which the Canadian producers were determined to be selling below fair market value -- otherwise known as the "dumping margin." Id. at 32154 ("The Customs Service shall require a cash deposit or the posting of a bond [**22] equal to the estimated amounts by which the foreign market values of potassium chloride exceed the United States price."). A separate dumping margin was calculated for each producer, based upon fair value comparisons of that producer's sales to the United States, during the period from September 1, 1986, through February 28, 1987. Id. The dumping margins were established, as follows:

	9.14%
Kalium	6.67%
PCS	51.9%
PCA	77.4%
Noranda	85.2%
All Others	36.6%

Id. In general terms, IMC and Kalium were determined to produce potash at lower costs than Noranda and PCA.

During the course of the antidumping investigation, the Saskatchewan Government was considering the enactment of legislation that would control the production of potash in that Province. Throughout July and August of 1987, Pat Smith ("Smith"), who was the Minister of Energy and Mines in Saskatchewan, met with representatives of the Canadian producers in order to discuss the implications of any such legislation. Declaration of Pat Smith at P6, attached as Exhibit 5. Defendants' Joint Reply Memorandum in Support of Summary Judgment. Supplemental Affidavit of John D. French ("Defs.'Jt.Ren.Aff."). [**23] On September 1, 1987, less than two weeks after the announcement of the dumping margins, the Saskatchewan Government introduced the Potash Resources Act. The Act, which was approved by the Saskatchewan Parliament on September 18, 1987, allowed for the creation of a Potash Management Board, which would be empowered to set quotas for each Saskatchewan mine, so as to control the quantity of potash that could be produced in the Province.<sup>9</sup> Potash Resources Act, attached as Exhibit

<sup>8</sup> The ensuing portions of this Report are unavoidably rife with the dramatis personae of the potash industry, as it existed during the period of the alleged conspiracy. For ease of reference, we append to this Report a listing of the identities of those persons whose names reoccur in our discussion of the issues. See, Appendix A.

37. Defs.'Jt. Memo.Aff. Notations of a meeting, that was attended by representatives of the Provincial Government, and by Noranda, reveal that, while the Government viewed itself as a victim of the antidumping action, it was keenly aware that the price of potash was too low and that the supply was too high. Noranda Memorandum dated July 31, 1987 (NOR 406039), attached as Exhibit 42. Defs.'Jt.Memo.Aff.

[**24] In response to the preliminary dumping margins, on September 4, 1987, PCS announced a $ 35 price increase, effective immediately, which resulted in a total price of $ 93 for a short ton of granular grade potash. Assertedly, PCS arrived at the $ 35 figure because it reflected the industry's average antidumping margin. Childers Deposition at 80, attached as Exhibit 45 Defs.'Jt.Memo.Aff. According to PCS's Annual Report in 1987, the $ 35 increase "served the additional purpose of making the U.S. farm sector aware of potential price increases if the preliminary duties were upheld in a final Department of Commerce decision." PCS 1987 Annual Report, attached as Exhibit 43. Defs.'Jt.Memo.Aff. Thereafter, the remaining Defendant producers, as well as several offshore producers, who were not included in the antidumping proceeding, matched the $ 35 increase.

[*1345] Following the announcement of the preliminary dumping margins, IMC, Kalium, and Noranda sought downward revisions in their dumping margins, while the United States petitioners, including NMP, requested an upward revision in some of the companies' margins. In addition, PCS commenced a lobbying effort, in order to enlist [**25] the support of American farmers, in its effort to persuade the DOC to rescind the margins. On January 8, 1988, just short of the deadline for its announcement of a final determination, the DOC negotiated a Suspension Agreement with each of the Canadian producers. Under the terms of this Agreement, a Canadian producer could sell at less than fair value by no more than 15 percent of its previously determined dumping margin.<sup>10</sup> Suspension of Anti-dumping Duty Investigation: Potassium Chloride From Canada, 53 Fed.Reg. 1393, 1394 (January 19, 1988), attached as Exhibit 35, Defs. 'Jt.Memo.Aff.

[**26] As an additional term of the settlement, each producer had the right to withdraw from the Agreement, and the entire Agreement was to be terminated, and the investigation resumed, if producers, who accounted for 15 percent or more of Canadian potash exports to the United States, elected to opt out. Title 19 C.F.R. § 353.18. Although the DOC expected that, absent some "likelihood of injurious effect on exports of potassium chloride from Canada," the Agreement would expire in January of 1993, we are advised that the Agreement remains in effect today. Suspension of Antidumping Duty Investigation: Potassium Chloride From Canada, 53 Fed.Reg. 1393, 1395 (January 19, 1988), attached as Exhibit 35. Defs.'Jt.Memo. Aff.; Defs.'Jt.Memo. at 8.

<sup>9</sup> In years past, the potash industry had been the subject of an antidumping action, and of prorationing legislation. For example, because of production increases, potash prices fell approximately 50 percent in the latter half of the 1960's. In August of 1969, the United States determined that dumping had occurred and, contemporaneously, the Saskatchewan government enacted a prorationing scheme in order to increase the price of potash that was to be sold in the United States. Under this scheme, not only was each producer granted a production quota, but a minimum price was established which, if violated, would threaten a cancellation of the producer's production license. See, e.g., Picketts, Schmitz & Schmitz, Rent Seeking: The Potash Dispute Between Canada and the United States, Amer.J.Ag.Econ. 255, 260 (May 1991), attached as Exhibit 7. Defs.'Jt.Memo.Aff. Nevertheless, this prorationing legislation was eventually overturned, in the Canadian Courts, for the setting of a floor price would, impermissibly, infringe upon trade. Haglund & von Bredow, The Politics of Antidumping: The Potash "War" of 1986-1988, in U.S. Trade Barriers and Canadian Minerals: Copper, Potash and Uranium (1990), at 78, attached as Exhibit 5. Defs.'Jt. Memo.Aff.

<sup>10</sup> In pertinent part, the Suspension Agreement provided as follows:

Each signatory producer/exporter of potassium chloride from Canada, individually, agrees that the price it will charge for each entry of potassium chloride exported to the United States from Canada for consumption in the United States will be such that the any amount by which the estimated foreign market value exceeds the United States price will not exceed 15 percent of the weighted-average amount by which the estimated foreign market value exceeded the United States price for all less-than-fair-value entries by such signatory producer/exporter that were examined during the Department's investigation.

Suspension of Antidumping Duty Investigation: Potassium Chloride From Canada, 53 Fed.Reg. 1393, 1394 (January 19, 1988), attached as Exhibit 35, Defs.'Jt.Memo.Aff.

On the same date that the producers entered into the Suspension Agreement, PCS announced that, on January 11, 1988, it would distribute new price lists, which would reflect an $ 86 price for granular grade potash, which constituted an $ 18 increase. Telexes dated January 8, 1988 (NOR 416856, MI 59809), attached as Exhibit 11, Defs.'Jt.Rep.Aff. Within the following eleven days, the remaining Canadian producers matched the $ 86 price, [**27] with the exception of Kalium, which announced a price of $ 87. See, Plts.' Jt.Memo. at 10 n. 15. In conjunction with its announcement of a price increase, PCS followed through on its prior promise that it would refund the $ 35 surcharge if the duties were not, ultimately, imposed. PCS 1987 Annual Report, attached as Exhibit 52, Defs. 'Jt.Memo.Aff. The remaining Canadian producers again followed PCS's lead, and refunded, at least in part, the $ 35 surcharge.

In their Third Amended Complaint, the Plaintiffs allege that the sharp increase in the price of potash, from April of 1987, through January of 1988, was the result of a price fixing conspiracy. The Defendants, in turn, maintain that the price increases were the inevitable product of the antidumping proceeding, the prorationing legislation, and the management change at PCS. In the Defendants' view, the interdependent nature of pricing, within the potash industry, induced the individual firms to price their product at approximately the same levels. Id. at 5.

In opposition to the Motions for Summary Judgment, the Plaintiffs identify a series of actions, by each of the various Defendants, that they claim were contrary [**28] to that particular Defendant's economic self-interest -- unless an agreement to fix prices was at play. In support of the asserted price fixing conspiracy, the Plaintiffs have identified various communications, between certain of the Defendants, which the Plaintiffs characterize as both frequent and integral to the conspiracy, and they have highlighted certain [*1346] purportedly retaliatory actions, that were taken by the Defendants, against ostensible price "cheaters." In addition, the Plaintiffs have offered the report of their expert witness, Gordon Rausser ("Rausser"), which examines the potash industry, and concludes that the structure of that industry is conducive to the formation of a price fixing conspiracy. Rausser also conducted a review of the Record, that was amassed in the discovery effort, and observed that certain of the Defendants' actions were inconsistent with individually rational, and economically maximizing, behavior. Lastly, Rausser has designed a statistical model, with which he has analyzed the price of potash in the United States and, according to the results of that analysis, he has concluded that the prices that were existent, during the conspiracy, exceeded the [**29] prices that had been forecasted in the model, by an average of 35 percent.

Not surprisingly, the Defendants challenge the validity of Rausser's Report. They claim that not only are the conclusions reached by Rausser in error, but that the methods, which he employed to reach those conclusions, have failed to account for other relevant evidence. Further, the Defendants offer the reports of their own economic experts, each of whom supports their contention that the challenged price increases were the natural product, not of a conspiracy, but of a combination of events that were occurring in the potash marketplace.

The Plaintiffs have also alleged that, throughout the period of their assertedly unlawful conduct, the Defendants have attempted to cloak their conspiracy by engaging in acts of fraudulent concealment, including: (1) "secretly and conspiratorially" discussing and agreeing upon the prices to be charged to their customers; and (2) announcing price increases in a "staggered fashion." Third Amended Complaint at P57. In addition, the Plaintiffs contend that neither they, nor the members of the Class, had any knowledge that the Defendants were conspiring "until shortly before [**30] the filing of the Complaint in this action," nor could they have "discovered any of the violations at any time prior to this date by the exercise of due diligence." Id. at P56. Based upon these asserted acts of fraudulent concealment, the Plaintiffs contend that the statute of limitations, which governs this action, should be equitably tolled. Id. at P59.

III. Discussion

The core issue before us is whether the Plaintiffs have produced sufficient evidence, in support of the alleged conspiracy, to survive the Defendants' Motions for Summary Judgment. We conclude that they have not.

A. The Defendants' Common Motions for Summary Judgment.

1. Standard of Review. HN1 In antitrust cases, as in other civil actions, a Motion for Summary Judgment should be granted "if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Rule 56\(c\), Federal Rules of Civil Procedure; Bathke v. Casey's General Stores, 64 F.3d 340, 342 \(8th Cir. 1995\) ("In complex antitrust cases, no different [**31] or heightened standard for the grant of summary judgment applies."); In re Travel Agency Com'n Antitrust Litigation, 898 F. Supp. 685, 690 \(D. Minn. 1995\) (The principle underlying summary judgment "holds for antitrust claims, as it does for other civil theories."). For these purposes, a disputed fact is "material," if it must inevitably be resolved and the resolution will determine the outcome of the case, while a dispute is "genuine," if the evidence is such that a reasonable Jury could return a Verdict for the non-moving party. See, Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 \(1986\); Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 587, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 \(1986\) ("Where the record taken as a whole could not lead a rational trier of fact to find for the non-moving party, there is no 'genuine issue for trial.'")

HN2 As Rule 56\(e\) makes clear, once the moving party presents a properly supported Motion, the burden shifts to the non-moving party to demonstrate the existence of a genuine dispute. In rebutting the showings of [*1347] the movant, "an adverse party may not rest upon the mere allegations or denials [**32] of the adverse party's pleading, but * * * must set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial." Rule 56\(e\), Federal Rules of Civil Procedure [emphasis supplied]; Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., supra at 586 ("Opponent must do more than simply show there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts.").

Moreover, HN3 a party is entitled to Summary Judgment where its opponent has failed "to establish the existence of an element essential to [its] case, and on which [it] will bear the burden of proof at trial." Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 \(1986\). In such a case, no genuine issue of material fact will be found to exist because "a complete failure of proof concerning an essential element of [that party's] case necessarily renders all other facts immaterial." Id. at 323. Of course, "in determining whether a material factual dispute exists, the court views the evidence through the prism of the controlling legal standard." Nebraska v. Wyoming, 507 U.S. 584, 590, 123 L. Ed. 2d 317, 113 S. Ct. 1689 \(1993\). Accordingly, the prism, through which we here appraise the [**33] propriety of Summary Judgment, is the law of antitrust, as that law has evolved in the unique environs of an oligopolistic market.

In this respect, HN4 Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides that "every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal." Title 15 U.S.C. § 1. The essence of a Section 1 claim is concerted action and, because the law requires an agreement between two or more persons, "unilateral actions of a single entity do not give rise to antitrust liability under section one of the Sherman Act." Willman v. Heartland Hosp. East, 34 F.3d 605, 610 \(8th Cir. 1994\), cert. denied, 131 L. Ed. 2d 218, U.S. , 115 S. Ct. 1361 \(1995\); Fisher v. City of Berkeley, Cal., 475 U.S. 260, 266, 89 L. Ed. 2d 206, 106 S. Ct. 1045 \(1986\) ("Even when a single firm's restraints directly affect prices and have the same economic effect as concerted action might have, there can be no liability under § 1 in the absence of an agreement.").<sup>11</sup>

[**34] Thus, "HN5" on a claim of concerted price fixing, the antitrust plaintiff must present evidence sufficient to carry its burden of proving that there was such an agreement." Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 763, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 \(1984\). "The standard is whether the evidence, direct or circumstantial, 'reasonably tends to prove that the [alleged violator] and others had a conscious commitment to a common scheme

<sup>11</sup> Of course, not every agreement that restrains competition will violate the Sherman Act. It is well settled that Section 1 prohibits only those agreements which unreasonably restrain competition. In identifying such offending agreements, the Supreme Court has held that certain kinds of accords are unreasonable per se, such as agreements among competitors to fix prices. United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 224-26 n. 49, 84 L. Ed. 1129, 60 S. Ct. 811 \(1940\); Capital Imaging v. Mohawk Valley Medical Assoc., 996 F.2d 537, 542-43 \(2d Cir. 1993\) (listing the types of per se violations that have been recognized by the Supreme Court), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 947, 126 L. Ed. 2d 337, 114 S. Ct. 388 \(1993\). Here, the Plaintiffs have alleged a horizontal price fixing conspiracy -- that is, one that involves concerted action on only one level in a product's distribution chain -- and, therefore, the only inquiry is whether the agreement existed, since the unreasonableness of such a restraint is presumed. Cf., Valley Liquors, Inc. v. Renfield Importers, Ltd., 822 F.2d 656, 659 n. 4 \(7th Cir. 1987\).

designed to achieve an unlawful objective." Pumps & Power Co. v. Southern States Industries, 787 F.2d 1252, 1256 (8th Cir. 1986), quoting Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., supra at 764. More recently, the Supreme Court has elaborated upon this standard, and has determined that, in order to successfully oppose a Motion for Summary Judgment, the nonmoving party "must show that the inference of conspiracy is reasonable in light of the competing inferences of independent action." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., supra at 588.

As the Plaintiffs have correctly observed, HN6[<sup>12</sup>] the precepts of antitrust law do not alter the principle that, "on summary judgment[,] [*1348] the inferences to be drawn from the underlying facts [**35] * * * must be viewed in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., supra at 587-88, quoting United States v. Diebold, Inc., 369 U.S. 654, 655, 8 L. Ed. 2d 176, 82 S. Ct. 993 (1962). Nevertheless, where, as here, there is no direct evidence of collusion,<sup>12</sup> "antitrust law" limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a § 1 case." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., supra at 588. Specifically, "conduct as consistent with permissible conduct as with [an] illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy." Id. In such cases, the plaintiff must "present evidence that 'tends to exclude the possibility' that the alleged conspirators acted independently." Id., quoting Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., supra at 764.

[**36] As a consequence, the plausibility of the underlying economic motive limits the range of permissible conclusions that may be drawn from ambiguous evidence. Indeed, "HN7[<sup>12</sup>] the absence of any plausible motive to engage in the conduct charged is highly relevant to whether a 'genuine issue for trial' exists within the meaning of Rule 56(e)." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., supra at 596. In such an instance, the Record on Summary Judgment must contain further persuasive evidence if it is to support the claim for recovery. While the conspiracy, that was alleged in Matsushita, may have been an implausible one, the Supreme Court rejected the view that ambiguous evidence creates a Jury issue merely because the alleged conspiracy is objectively reasonable. As the Court explained: "We do not imply that, if petitioners had had a plausible reason to conspire, ambiguous conduct could suffice to create a triable issue of conspiracy." Id. at 597 n. 21.

As the Supreme Court has more recently observed, in Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Services, Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 468, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 (1992), by requiring that the plaintiffs' claims make economic [**37] sense, Matsushita did not invent a new requirement in an antitrust context, but merely articulated an established standard -- namely, "that the nonmoving party's inferences be reasonable in order to reach the jury." As a consequence, "HN8[<sup>12</sup>] if the plaintiff's theory is economically senseless, no reasonable jury could find in its favor, and summary judgment should be granted." Id.

In applying these principles, our Court of Appeals, in Lovett v. General Motors Corp., 998 F.2d 575 (8th Cir. 1993), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 1113, 127 L. Ed. 2d 378, 114 S. Ct. 1058 (1994), reversed a Jury's Verdict against a defendant car manufacturer, on the plaintiff's claim that the manufacturer had conspired with some of its auto dealers to injure the plaintiff's dealership. The plaintiff had been selling cars at a price which undercut other, neighboring dealerships. After several dealers complained, the defendant limited its sales allotments to the plaintiff. In granting the defendant Judgment as a matter of law, the Court explained that "the district court failed to recognize that [plaintiff's] evidence [was] as consistent with permissible unilateral conduct on [defendant's] part as it [was] [**38] with illegal conspiracy, and that Monsanto does not permit a jury to infer the existence of a conspiracy from ambiguous evidence." Id. at 579; see also, Willman v. Heartland Hosp. East, supra at 612 (affirming grant of Summary Judgment to a hospital, and to members of its medical staff, on a physician's claim that he was denied staff privileges, because the defendants' actions were "as consistent with the lawful purpose of promoting [*1349] quality patient care as with the unlawful purpose of eliminating potential competitors.").

<sup>12</sup> The Plaintiffs have produced no direct evidence of a price fixing agreement. Otherwise stated, the plaintiffs have not pointed to a single document, or excerpt of testimony, that, were we to accept the evidence as true, would establish the alleged conspiracy. Indeed, at the Hearing on the Motions, Plaintiffs' counsel conceded that there is "no direct evidence of an agreement per se." Transcript of Summary Judgment Hearing at 137. Rather, the Plaintiffs exclusively rely upon circumstantial evidence in their proof of the alleged conspiracy. Accordingly, our task is to determine whether that circumstantial evidence, and any justifiable inferences that may be drawn therefrom, are sufficient to create genuine issues of material fact that would warrant the submission of their case to a Jury.

Of course, HN9 participation in a price fixing conspiracy need not be, nor rarely is, shown by direct evidence, for most conspiracies are proved through inferences that are drawn from the behavior of the alleged conspirators. *ES Development, Inc. v. RWM Enterprises, Inc.*, 939 F.2d 547, 553 \(8th Cir. 1991\) (citations omitted) ("It is axiomatic that the typical conspiracy is rarely evidenced by explicit agreements, but must almost always be proved by inferences that may be drawn from the behavior of the alleged conspirators."), cert. denied, 502 U.S. 1097, 117 L. Ed. 2d 421, 112 S. Ct. 1176 (1992). As a consequence, the Court should not compartmentalize \*\*39 the evidence that is proffered by an antitrust plaintiff but, rather, should analyze the plaintiff's showings as a whole so as to determine if, in its integrated entirety, the evidence supports an inference of concerted action. See, e.g., *In re Workers' Compensation Ins. Antitrust Lit.*, 867 F.2d 1552, 1563 \(8th Cir. 1989\) ("piece-meal analysis must be avoided and the overall conduct of the defendants must be weighed."), cert. denied, 492 U.S. 920, 106 L. Ed. 2d 593, 109 S. Ct. 3247 (1989).

Nevertheless, as our Court of Appeals has observed, "a fine line separates unlawful concerted action from legitimate business practices." *Lovett v. General Motors Corp.*, supra at 988. Accordingly, "care must be taken to ensure that inferences of unlawful activity drawn from ambiguous evidence do not infringe upon the defendants' freedom." *Petrucci's IGA v Darling-Delaware*, 998 F.2d 1224, 1230 \(3rd Cir. 1993\), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 994 (1993), quoting *Big Apple BMW, Inc. v. BMW of North America, Inc.*, 974 F.2d 1358 \(3rd Cir. 1992\), cert. denied, 507 U.S. 912, 122 L. Ed. 2d 659, 113 S. Ct. 1262 (1993). Indeed, in *Monsanto*, the Supreme Court expressed concern that independent action \*\*40 may, quite improperly, be viewed as evidence of a conspiracy. *Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp.*, supra. There, the plaintiff alleged that Monsanto had illegally conspired, with its other distributors, to terminate the plaintiff's distributorships. The Court observed that "to permit the inference of concerted action on the basis of receiving complaints alone and thus to expose the defendant to treble damage liability would *** inhibit management's exercise of its independent business judgment." 465 U.S. at 764.

Given the clear import of the foregoing authorities, even in the milieu of antitrust law, HN10 Summary Judgment is neither an acceptable means of resolving triable issues, nor is it a disfavored procedural shortcut when there are no issues which require the unique proficiencies of a Jury to weigh the evidence and to render credibility determinations. *Celotex Corp. v. Catrett*, supra at 327; *Health Care Equalization Com. v. Iowa Medical Soc.*, 851 F.2d 1020, 1031 \(8th Cir. 1988\) (citing Celotex in antitrust case). We are mindful, however, HN11 that only concerted action is within the proscriptions of the Sherman Act and, therefore, we have the added responsibility of \*\*41 assuring that any underlying, lawful conduct is not, inadvertently, condemned and penalized. See also, *Thompson Everett, Inc. v. National Cable Advertising, L.P.*, 57 F.3d 1317, 1322 \(4th Cir. 1995\) ("Because of the unusual entanglement of legal and factual issues frequently presented in antitrust cases, the task of sorting them out may be particularly well-suited for Rule 56 utilization."); *Valley Liquors, Inc. v. Renfield Importers, Ltd.*, 822 F.2d 656, 660 n. 4 \(7th Cir. 1987\) (citation omitted) ("The ultimate determination, after trial, that an antitrust claim is unfounded may come too late to guard against the evils that occur along the way."), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 977, 98 L. Ed. 2d 486, 108 S. Ct. 488 (1987); *Lovett v. General Motors Corp.*, supra at 988 ("The jury's finding of a conspiracy in this case shows why cases based on ambiguous evidence should not be submitted to a jury.").

As *Matsushita* confirms, HN12 whether the underlying, circumstantial evidence is sufficient to support a reasonable inference of collusion remains a legal question for the Court's resolution. Thus, evidence which permits equally competing inferences, without "tending" to point in one direction, \*\*42 should not be sent to \*1350 the Jury, for the Court may not invite the factfinder to speculate on the consummation of an agreement to restrain trade. Of course, if the underlying conduct is sufficient to support such an inference, then "the question of what weight should be assigned to competing permissible inferences is within the province of the fact-finder at trial." *Apex Oil Co. v. DiMauro*, 822 F.2d 246, 253 \(2nd Cir. 1987\), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 977 (1987).

HN13 One means by which the Courts may ensure that unilateral, nonconspiratorial conduct is not unintentionally punished is to require the plaintiffs to demonstrate something more than mere paralleling or mimicking conduct. See, e.g., *Theatre Enterprises, Inc. v. Paramount Film Distributing Corp.*, 346 U.S. 537, 541, 98

L. Ed. 273, 74 S. Ct. 257 (1954). Of course, if persons acted in near unison, but independently of one another and without any agreement or mutual understanding amongst them, then there is no conspiratorial showing. In effect, "individual pricing decisions (even when each firm rests its own decision upon its belief that competitors will do the same) do not constitute an unlawful agreement under section 1 of the [**43] Sherman Act." Clamp-All Corp. v. Cast Iron Soil Pipe Institute, 851 F.2d 478, 484 (1st Cir. 1988), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 1007, 102 L. Ed. 2d 780, 109 S. Ct. 789 (1989), see also, Petrucci's IGA v. Darling-Delaware, supra at 1232; Reserve Supply v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas, 971 F.2d 37, 51 (7th Cir. 1992); Apex Oil Co. v. DiMauro, supra at 253; Richards v. Neilson Freight Lines, 810 F.2d 898, 904 (9th Cir. 1987).

History teaches, however, that in an oligopolistic market, interdependent decision making may produce cartel-like results, In re Coordinated Pretrial Proceedings, 906 F.2d 432, 444 (9th Cir. 1990), cert. denied, 500 U.S. 959 (1991), for, in an oligopoly, each firm understands that its own pricing decisions will affect the others in that market, who are likely to respond, and whose response will affect the profitability of the pricing decision. As Professor Areeda explains:

When one oligopolist raises its price, each of his rivals must decide whether to follow or not. Continuing the previous price would allow each of the others to increase his sales if the leader persists in charging a higher price. But each knows that the leader is likely to [**44] retract an increase that is not followed. Accordingly, each rival asks himself whether he is better off at the lower price when charged by all or at the higher price when charged by all. If the latter, as will often be the case, the leader's price increase is likely to be followed.

VI Areeda, § 1410b at 65.

Notwithstanding this potential consequence, HN14[<sup>14</sup>] the existence of mere parallel pricing, in an oligopoly, is not, standing alone, actionable. See, e.g., Reserve Supply v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas, supra at 50 (quoting E.I. DuPont de Nemours & Co. v. FTC, 729 F.2d 128, 139 (2d Cir. 1984)) ("It is well-established, however, that 'the mere existence of an oligopolistic market structure in which a small group of manufacturers engage in consciously parallel pricing of an identical product does not violate the antitrust laws.'") As the First Circuit has observed, in Clamp-All Corp. v. Cast Iron Soil Pipe Institute, supra at 484, allowing oligopolists to mimic each others prices "is not because such pricing is desirable (it is not), but because it is close to impossible to devise a judicially enforceable remedy for interdependent pricing[:] how does one order a [**45] firm to set its prices without regard to the likely reactions of its competitors?" [Emphasis in original]. See also, United States v. International Harvester Co., 274 U.S. 693, 708-09, 71 L. Ed. 1302, 47 S. Ct. 748 (1927) ("The fact that competitors may see it proper, in the exercise of their own judgment, to follow the prices of another manufacturer, does not establish any suppression of competition or show any sinister domination.").

Therefore, HN15[<sup>15</sup>] in order to present a Jury question as to the existence of a conspiracy, there must be a parallelism in pricing that is accompanied by competent, additional evidence. But see, Coleman v. Cannon Oil Co., 849 F. Supp. 1458, 1466 (M.D.Ala. 1993) ("There must therefore be parallelism accompanied by substantial additional evidence to support a finding of an agreement necessary to establish a violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. [Emphasis in original], citing Theatre [*1351] Enterprises, Inc. v. Paramount Film Distributing Corp., supra at 541. Accordingly, HN16[<sup>16</sup>] it is now settled antitrust law that only when the plaintiff shows the existence of this additional evidence -- often referred to as the "plus factors" -- does the evidence tend [**46] to exclude the possibility that the defendants were actually acting independently. Todorov v. DCH Healthcare Authority, 921 F.2d 1438, 1456 n. 30 (11th Cir. 1991) ("An agreement is properly inferred from conscious parallelism only when 'plus factors' exist."); Apex Oil Co. v. DiMauro, supra at 253; Petrucci's IGA v. Darling-Delaware, supra at 1244 ("courts require plus factors because otherwise the evidence is equally consistent with legal behavior"); In re Coordinated Pretrial Proceedings, supra at 445.<sup>13</sup>

---

<sup>13</sup> Although not expressly denominated as "plus factors," our Court of Appeals has required antitrust plaintiffs to proffer evidence, that is additive to conscious parallelism, in order to avert an award of Summary Judgment. In Admiral Theatre Corp. v. Douglas

954 F. Supp. 1334, *1351 (1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14981, **46

[**47] By way of example, consciously paralleling conduct may allow for an inference of an agreement if it is also shown that each conspirator acted against its own self-interest, by engaging in the paralleling behavior. See, e.g., Petruzzi's IGA v. Darling-Delaware, supra at 1242; Reserve Supply v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas, supra at 51; Apex Oil Co. v. DiMauro, supra at 253. Likewise, a high-level of interfirm communications, when viewed in conjunction with paralleling acts, can serve to allow a Jury to reasonably infer a conspiracy. See, e.g., Market Force Inc. v. Wauwatosa Realty Co., 906 F.2d 1167, 1172 (7th Cir. 1990); Nichols Motorcycle Supply Inc. v. Dunlop Tire Corp., 913 F. Supp. 1088, 1117 (N.D.Ill. 1995), vacated on other grounds, pursuant to settlement (September 18, 1995).

Nevertheless, HN17 where an examination of the proffered "plus factors" leads to an equally plausible inference that merely interdependent behavior is at hand, then there is no triable issue that would preclude a grant of Summary Judgment, so long as there is no evidence which tends to exclude the possibility that the alleged conspirators acted independently. See, *Market Force Inc. v. Wauwatosa, **481 Realty Co., supra at 1171; Apex Oil Co. v. DiMauro, supra at 254*. This is so, because "ambiguous evidence cannot be sent a jury [as] a court may not invite the factfinder to speculate that an agreement existed." Nichols Motorcycle Supply Inc. v. Dunlop Tire Corp., supra at 1104. In the final analysis, a "failure on the part of the plaintiff to produce evidence from which a jury could infer reasonably that conduct was conspiratorial, not unilateral, will lead to summary judgment for the defendant." Richards v. Neilsen Freight Lines, supra at 902.

2. Legal Analysis.

a. Overview. We begin with an explanation of the analytical approach that we have employed; not because it is novel -- for it is not -- but because of the potential for misapprehension.<sup>14</sup>

[**49] [*1352] What follows is an exhaustive and, perhaps, an uncompromisingly tedious,<sup>15</sup> appraisal of the evidentiary showings that the Plaintiffs regard as demonstrating the existence of triable issues of price fixing. In

Theatre Co., 585 F.2d 877, 883 (8th Cir. 1978), the Court looked to whether the parallel conduct was "inconsistent with the self-interest of the individual actors." Indeed, in a related context, the Court concluded that a manufacturer's simple refusal to sell to dealers, who would not sell at suggested retail prices, was insufficient to support a finding that there was an illegal combination to fix retail prices. Russell Stover Candies, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 718 F.2d 256, 260 (8th Cir. 1983). Notably, the Court found that there were "no 'plus factors' to take the case beyond Colgate," a Supreme Court decision that had permitted such conduct. Id. at 260, citing United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U.S. 300, 63 L. Ed. 992, 39 S. Ct. 465 (1919). Accordingly, we believe that, if confronted with this issue, our Court of Appeals would adopt the reasoning of those Courts, which have analyzed the sufficiency of an antitrust plaintiff's evidence, that is proffered in opposition to a Motion for Summary Judgment, on "plus factor" grounds.

<sup>14</sup> We think that the parameters of the applicable analytical regime were well-stated in Reserve Supply v. Owens-Corning Fiberglas, 971 F.2d 37, 49 (7th Cir. 1992):

In [ruling on Motions for Summary Judgment on price fixing claims], the court should first examine the plaintiff's evidence of a conspiracy among the defendants. Next it should examine whether the defendants have offered evidence tending to show that the conduct complained of is as compatible with the defendants' legitimate business activities as with illegal conspiracy. If the court concludes that the foregoing analysis leaves the evidence of conspiracy ambiguous, it should then determine whether the plaintiff can point to any evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the defendants were pursuing their legitimate independent interests.

See also, Petruzzi's IGA v. Darling-Delaware, 998 F.2d 1224, 1231-33 (3rd Cir. 1993), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 994 (1993); Dunnivant v. Bi-State Auto Parts, 851 F.2d 1575, 1583 (11th Cir. 1988); Apex Oil Co. v. DiMauro, 822 F.2d 246, 252-54 (2nd Cir. 1987), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 977 (1987); but see, In re Coordinated Pretrial Proceedings, 906 F.2d 432, 440 (9th Cir. 1990), cert. denied, 500 U.S. 959 (1991).

<sup>15</sup> We have conscientiously attempted to address each of the items of evidence that the parties have drawn to our attention, but we recognize that one scintilla or another will, almost certainly, escape specific comment. We merely note here that we have conducted both a microscopic and a macroscopic review of the evidence and, if a particular document, or depositional reference, has not been specifically discussed, that does not suggest that the evidence has not been closely considered in our view of the conducting this review, we recognize that, by superficial appearance, concern could be expressed that we have invaded the proper role of the Jurors in, at least ostensibly, assessing the believability of the Plaintiffs' evidence. We have not. Rather, we have assumed our customary role as a gatekeeper of the evidence; assuring that only competent evidence is submitted for the Jury's consideration. In this sense, the function we fulfill is indistinguishable from our conventional assessment of the qualitative worth of proffered evidence.

[**50] We accept, without reservation, our incapacity to adjudge, under the rubric of Rule 56, the credibility of the evidence, but we no more render believability judgments in weighing the reliability of an evidentiary submission, than we do, say, in rejecting expert opinion evidence as being unworthy of a Jury's reliance, in excluding testimony as impermissible hearsay, or in barring the admission of matter that was not subject to the witness's personal knowledge. While a Court's ruling on such matters could be framed as a believability assessment, at its core, the ruling is, quintessentially, one of "screening," so as to "ensure" that the "evidence admitted is not only relevant, but reliable." Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 509 U.S. 579, 589, 125 L. Ed. 2d 469, 113 S. Ct. 2786 \(1993\); and see, Rule 802, Federal Rules of Evidence; <sup>16</sup> [**51] Rule 602, Federal Rules of Evidence, <sup>17</sup> and related Advisory Committee Notes, Rules 602 and 802, Federal Rules of Evidence.

Here, the parties agree -- as, indeed, they were obliged to do by the weight of the governing law -- that HN18↑ the examination of a price fixing claim, in the unique environs of an oligopolistic market, requires more of a showing than the mere existence of the spontaneous forces which cause oligopolists to parrot the pricing decisions of a market leader. In the parlance, the price fixing claimant must present "plus factors" -- that is, reliable indicators of unlawful price fixing -- if a genuine issue of material fact is to be presented for a Jury's resolution. After a most painstaking [**52] review, we find that the Plaintiffs have failed to offer such a positive showing, since what they have submitted for our review is, quite literally, "nonplus" -- that is, [*1353] evidence which places us, because of its substantive ambivalence, in a quandary as to what the evidence should, with any reliability, mean.

In expressing these views, we intend no discredit to the Plaintiffs' effort to raise a genuine issue of material fact. We are advised, and we have no reason to believe otherwise, that hundreds of thousands of discovery documents have been culled by the Plaintiffs, with the result that a grouping of perhaps a hundred, or more, have been isolated, at least in the Plaintiffs' view, as favoring an inference of collusion. Given the sheer volume of this submission, as expanded by the Plaintiffs' recitation of pertinent depositional testimony, there is an instinctive, natural inclination to presume that such a daunting collection of documents must, a fortiori, generate triable issues of fact. Our review, however, has convincingly persuaded us otherwise.

By way of a brief analogy, quite recently, in Wright v. Willamette Industries, Inc., 91 F.3d 1105 \(8th Cir. 1996\), our Court [**53] of Appeals was obliged to determine whether the plaintiffs had presented a submissible case to a Jury concerning the ill-health effects that they attributed to living next to an operation that exposed them to evidence as a whole. See, e.g., Big Apple BMW, Inc. v. BMW of North America, 974 F.2d 1358, 1364 \(3rd Cir. 1992\), cert. denied, 507 U.S. 912, 122 L. Ed. 2d 659, 113 S. Ct. 1262 \(1993\).

<sup>16</sup> The Advisory Committee's Notes, on Article VIII of the Federal Rules of Evidence, expressly recognizes the tension between excluding all hearsay evidence, and admitting that which, for one reason or another, is regarded as sufficiently reliable. In the Committee's words:

The solution evolved by the common law has been a general rule excluding hearsay but subject to numerous exceptions under circumstances supposed to furnish guarantees of trustworthiness.

See, also, Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 509 U.S. 579, 590 n. 9, 125 L. Ed. 2d 469, 113 S. Ct. 2786 \(1993\).

<sup>17</sup> As explained by the Advisory Committee Notes to Rule 602, Federal Rules of Evidence:

" * * * The rule requiring that a witness who testifies to a fact which can be perceived by the senses must have had an opportunity to observe, and must have actually observed the fact" is a "most persuasive manifestation" of the common law insistence upon "the most reliable sources of information."

Quoting, McCormick § 10, p. 19; see also, Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., supra at 590 n. 9.

formaldehyde. Although a Jury awarded damages to the plaintiffs, and notwithstanding the Trial Court's denial of the defendants' post-Trial Motions, the Court of Appeals reversed, because the claimants had failed to establish the level of exposure to formaldehyde that was reasonably known to cause adverse health consequences. In the absence of such a causative showing, the Court concluded that the Jury could do no more than speculate on the issue of causation. Id. at 1108. While we grant that the issues we confront here do not have the objectivity of medical science, we are aware of no reason why they should escape the "reasonable inference" standard that the Court employed in Wright.

HN19 [↑] Where the empirically established principles, which govern the operation of an oligopolistic market, and which reliably confirm that, left to spontaneity, the market will be driven by a price leader, who the other participants in the market will follow, we believe that something more than [**54] a suspicion of culpability should properly stave an award of Summary Judgment. While, obviously, we view the evidence presented in a light most favorable to the nonmovant -- here the Plaintiffs -- the governing law makes clear, "such inferences * * * must be 'justifiable.'" Valley Liquors, Inc. v. Renfield Importers, Ltd., supra at 659. Accordingly, we need not view each of the evidentiary submissions as inferring complicitous wrongdoing, merely because a cramped, or inventive interpretation of that evidence, as driven by some assumption of unlawfulness, would arguably allow that result. To do so, would improperly subject the oligopolist to the artificiality of a jejune existence, merely because conduct, which is a normal and innocent expression of natural, economic forces, can be "spun" into a suggestion of complicity. Our review of the caselaw, which we have heretofore detailed, makes clear that the Courts have remained vigilant to assure that a blameless emulation of pricing policies, by participants in an oligopoly, does not incur unwarranted reprobation. This would seem all the more obvious where, as here, the oligopoly has been impacted by both pure economic forces, and by [**55] the unavoidable skew that is bred through the well-intentioned, but invidiously intrusive, protectionist interests of one or more governments. Given this entanglement of fact, law and economics, the governing standard of review, and the dearth of evidence which tends to exclude the possibility that the complained of conduct was not the outcome of independent corporate will, we do not say that no price fixing conspiracy could possibly have existed, we merely conclude that the Plaintiffs have presented an insufficient showing to allow the issue to be submitted to a Jury.

With this perspective as our backdrop, we examine the Plaintiffs' evidentiary showings, as they have grouped them, in three categories of generalized proof, in order to examine whether a genuine issue of material fact has been demonstrated for a Jury's disposition. These categories -- namely, opportunity and motive; behavior that is contrary to economic self-interest; and interfirm communications -- represent the "plus factors," that the [*1354] Plaintiffs have relied upon, in conjunction with the evidence of price parallelism, in their effort to elude an award of Summary Judgment. Pltfs. 'Jt.Opp.Memo. at 35-39. While we [**56] will follow the Plaintiffs' lead in compartmentalizing our discussion of this evidence, we have carefully reviewed this evidence as an blended whole, together with the Defendants' explanations for their conduct, so as to ascertain whether an "inference of conspiracy is reasonable in light of the competing inference of independent action." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., supra at 588.<sup>18</sup> Since we conclude, following a considered review of the Record before us, that an inference of a conspiracy, which could justifiably arise from this Record, would consist of unreasoned speculation, we recommend that the Defendants' Motions be granted.

[**57] b. Opportunity and Motive. As to their first "plus factor," the Plaintiffs have asserted that, "from meetings of Canpotex<sup>19</sup> to the plethora of trade association meetings and telephone calls, the executives of defendants were in constant communication" -- ergo, the Defendants had an opportunity to conspire. Pltfs. 'Jt.Opp.Memo. at 36. Nevertheless, HN20 [↑] while proof of an occasion to conspire may, as a practical matter, satisfy a necessary

<sup>18</sup> We note that, as one might expect, the Plaintiffs' "plus factors" roughly track the development of the alleged conspiracy. For example, the evidence of "motive and opportunity" generally corresponds to those months preceding April of 1987, whereas the evidence of "self-interest" and of "interfirm communication," approximates the period in which the Defendants are alleged to have conspired in fixing prices.

<sup>19</sup> Canpotex was a lawful cartel, created pursuant to Canadian law, which set prices for potash that would be sold outside of the United States. Pltfs. 'Jt.Opp.Memo. at 36 n. 41.

954 F. Supp. 1334, *1354L<sup>A</sup> 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14981, **57

precondition of a conspiracy, "[a] jury cannot reasonably infer the existence of a conspiracy merely from the opportunity to form one." Utesch v. Dittmer, 947 F.2d 321, 331 (8th Cir. 1991), cert. denied, 503 U.S. 1006, 118 L. Ed. 2d 425, 112 S. Ct. 1764 (1992), quoting H.J., Inc. v. International Tel. & Tel. Corp., 867 F.2d 1531, 1545 (8th Cir. 1989); see also, Coleman v. Cannon Oil Co., 849 F. Supp. 1458, 1469 (M.D.Ala. 1993) (quoting VI Areeda, § 1417b at 97) (Evidence that the defendants "met together or telephoned each other * * * 'satisfies the necessary precondition of any traditional conspiracy that the parties have the opportunity to conspire', but 'it remains the plaintiff's burden to prove that the defendant succumbed [**58] to the temptation and conspired.'")

As a result, the Plaintiffs' evidence of informal communications among the alleged conspirators, standing alone, merely provides an opening for collusion, rather than unambiguous evidence from which a reasonable inference of concerted action can properly be drawn. See, Market Force Inc. v. Wauwatosa Realty, supra at 1172; Petrucci's IGA v. Darling-Delaware, supra at 1242 n. 15. To infer a conspiracy premised upon the Defendants' association in Canpotex, upon their attendance at trade association meetings, or upon their telephone communications, without any showing that those associations or communications were dedicated to concerted action, would be tantamount to condemning wholly lawful conduct, merely because the conduct could be abused by a malefactor. Since "opportunity" evidence [**59] can vary in its degree of persuasiveness, at this point, we defer our examination of the substance of these communications, and of the reasonable inferences that may be legitimately drawn therefrom. Instead, at this juncture, we merely acknowledge the obvious, that routine and justifiable contacts amongst competitors, such as the conduct of meetings and the participation in the affairs of business associations is, at best, evidence of a most ambiguous sort.

With respect to motive, there can be little dispute over the Defendants' recognition that each would benefit from a uniform increase in the price of potash. Indeed, as Professor Areeda has explained, "because competitors can profit from conspiring to fix prices, they are deemed to have the motive to do so." II P. Areeda & H. Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law § 322g at 80 (1995) (hereafter "II Areeda"). Here, as a showing of motive, the Plaintiffs note that, on September 25, 1986, the then-president of PCS Sales, Rolf Holzkaemper ("Holzkaemper"), stated: "It is not possible [*1355] for a single producer to affect a turn-around; however, joint action by a group of producers or governments could achieve this." Holzkaemper Memorandum (PC 361765), [**60] attached as Tab 2, Plts.'Jt.Opp.Aff. In addition, the Plaintiffs have identified an undated document from PCS stating:

Cannot wait for supply/demand to pull us up. Cannot do it alone. Industry must cooperate. Key is discipline.

Undated PCS Document (PC 297675), attached as Tab 2, Plts.'Jt.Opp.Aff.

Further, the Plaintiffs have pointed to some isolated notations, from a meeting, on May 12, 1986, between certain representatives of PCS and Peat Marwick & Mitchell ("Peat Marwick"), which is an international consulting firm that had been retained by PCS.

On the basis of these notations, the Plaintiffs suggest that, during the conference of May 12, 1986, Peat Marwick proposed collusion as a strategy for returning PCS to profitability, by explaining that, "in order to increase prices there must be a reduction in supply," and by proposing "three possible solutions":

- a) Keep prices low in the short-term to force out marginal producers.
- b) That the industry arrange voluntary cutbacks or coordinated price increases.
- c) That the Government of Saskatchewan impose some form of rationing such as a special tax on producers in excess of, say 75% [**61] of their capacity.

Peat Marwick Meeting Notes (PC 337391-94), attached as Tab 2, Plts.'Jt.Opp.Aff.

At best, this evidence suggests that PCS, as well as its retained consultant, recognized the need to raise prices, and to cut the supply of available product, in the interdependent potash market. Moreover, as the Defendants point out, on June 10, 1996, Peat Marwick clarified that it presented its scenarios "as the outcomes of potential policies that [might] be adopted by individual producers and/or government," and that, "under no circumstances did [it] suggest that PCS should try to 'arrange' an industry-wide capacity reduction or price increase in collusion with competitors." Peat Marwick Letter (PC 334476), attached as Exhibit 16, Defs.'Jt. Rep.Aff. Each of the notations, that the Plaintiffs have highlighted can just as readily be construed as a recognition of the need for discipline, in an interdependent market, and we see no tendency for these notations to exclude the possibility of independent business action, here on PCS's part.

As was true with the evidence of "opportunity," HN21[] while the absence of "motive" may negate an inference of conspiracy, [\[\*\*62\]](#) its presence is not sufficient to infer that a conspiracy has occurred. See, Reserve Supply v. Owens-Corning Fiberglass, supra at 51. "If [motive] were sufficient to show conspiracy, then parallel pricing, especially in oligopoly, would be automatically conspiratorial, but it is not." Id.

As well, the Plaintiffs have also focused upon discussions, between the Saskatchewan Government and two of the Defendants, which related to the antidumping investigation. Purportedly, by alluding to certain proposed agreements, this evidence is supposed to support a reasonable inference that the Defendants ultimately reached an agreement to fix prices. We disagree.

On September 29, 1986, Andrew Elliott ("Elliott"), of PCS, met with officials from the Saskatchewan Government to discuss the antidumping investigation. An interoffice Memorandum of October 7, 1986, which memorializes the discussion, states as follows:

Gosselin [a Canadian Embassy official] raised the question of whether some form of an agreement might be reached between the Ad Hoc Group [American potash producers who initiated the investigation] and Saskatchewan potash producers. I responded that this might move [\[\*\*63\]](#) us from the prospect of an anti-dumping investigation to an anti-trust investigation and asked what possible kind of agreement he had in mind. He mentioned assurance of "no more firesales" (the interpretation of our IRS sale last winter) and Canadians' staying out of natural markets for New Mexico (presumably a reference to Kalium's "incursion" into Texas). * * * I gave Gosselin no understanding that we had an interest in pursuing such an agreement.

[\[\*1356\]](#) Elliott Memorandum (PC 388233-36), attached as Tab 2, Pltfs.'Jt. Opp.Aff.

Despite the Plaintiffs' characterization of this discussion as "bordering on the illegal," Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Memo. at 7, we fail to see how a proposal, from a governmental official, to settle a potential trade dispute between two countries, is indicative of a conspiracy, especially when that proposal is expressly rejected.

We are similarly unimpressed with the Plaintiffs' reliance upon a Memorandum of October 26, 1986, which was authored by William Deeks ("Deeks"), who was the President of Noranda, which was directed to John Gordon ("Gordon"), who was Noranda's Vice-President, and which records that Noranda learned of the anti-dumping investigation [\[\*\*64\]](#) on October 21. The Memorandum reports the substance of Deeks' conversation with Hank Armstrong, who was an official with the Canadian Embassy, in Washington D.C. Deeks recounts the discussion, which included an initiative of the Canadian Government, as follows:

An overall objective would be to see whether or not it would be possible from the Canadian end to put together a proposal to the United States, which on the one hand could avoid a trade action, on the second hand would introduce some supply management to the situation, and overall would result in higher prices and would avoid a highly political trade action.

Deeks Memorandum (NOR 955009), attached as Tab 6, Pltfs.'Jt. Opp.Aff.

As with the Elliott Memorandum, however, we do not view this evidence as supporting a suggestion that any of the Canadian producers colluded with any potash producers, American or Canadian. Indeed, contrary to the Plaintiff's suggestion, the Record is uncontested that no other producers attended this particular meeting. Deeks Deposition at 203, attached as Exhibit 18, Defs.'Jt.Rep.Aff.

Lastly, the Plaintiffs identify an alleged statement by Cliff Kelly ("Kelly"), [\[\*\*65\]](#) who was then the President of Kalium, to the effect: "You know, why can't we just kind of draw a line across the country and let the Canadians keep north of it and Americans stay south of it and resolve the whole thing that way." Elliott Deposition at 27, attached as Tab 23. Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Aff. Purportedly, Kelly made this remark at a "Federal/Provincial/Industry Meeting," on February 19, 1987. A telex from an official with the Canadian Government, which was addressed to other government officials and to the representatives of the various Canadian producers, including the Canadian Defendants, states that the purpose of the meeting was "to coordinate the defence against this antidumping action." February 13 Telex (AK 026421), attached as Tab 3, Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Aff.

Apparently, the Plaintiffs invite us to infer that Kelly proposed an agreement that would divide the North American potash market. Nevertheless, consistent with Elliott's interpretation, as it was related at the time of his deposition, the statement can be as logically read as expressing sarcasm, voiced out of frustration over the commencement of the antidumping proceeding. The inference, that Kelly intended [**66] to propose an agreement to conspire, is further undermined by the fact that Elliott has no recollection of a response to Kelly's remark, and by the reality that the antidumping proceeding was not settled on terms that were even remotely similar to those suggested by Kelly. Elliott Deposition at 27, attached as Tab 23, Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Aff.

c. Acts Against Self-Interest. Next, the Plaintiffs urge that there is substantial evidence which reveals that the Defendants acted, on separate occasions, contrary to their own economic self-interest. As we have observed, HN22<sup>1</sup> the fact that a firm's action is against its self-interest might well be suggestive of the existence of a conspiracy. See, Admiral Theatre Corp. v. Douglas Theatre Corp., 585 F.2d 877, 884 (8th Cir. 1978) ("Only where the pattern of action undertaken is inconsistent with the self-interest of the individual actors, were they acting alone, may an agreement be inferred solely from such parallel action."). However, to support a reasonable inference of conspiracy, the conduct must reveal more than the mere recognition that an act is unwise -- unless it is followed by its rivals -- for it must competently disclose "individual [**67] action [that] would be so perilous [*1357] in the absence of advance agreement that no reasonable firm would make the challenged move without such agreement." Coleman v. Cannon Oil Co., supra at 1467 (quoting VI Areeda, § 1434c at 215).

Accordingly, our analysis of the Plaintiff's second "plus factor" -- the acts against self-interest -- includes evidence of conduct that, despite its economic rationality, the Plaintiffs claim could not have occurred in the absence of a prior collusive agreement. As Professor Areeda has explained, "if the actual defendants could not or would not have acted as they did without advance communication and understanding, then their action necessarily proves a traditional conspiracy." VI Areeda, § 1425a at 144 (quoted in Nichols Motorcycle Supply Inc. v. Dunlop Tire Corp., supra at 1119).

Whether the asserted parallel action reflects a reasonable response to a business exigency, or a collusive restraint of trade, requires a close analysis of several events which approximated the alleged inception of the conspiracy; namely, PCS's unilateral decision to raise the price of potash by $ 35 in September of 1987; the remaining Defendants' response [**68] to that price increase; the Defendants' entry into the Suspension Agreement; the Defendants' conduct in rebating the surcharge, and in imposing an $ 18 increase in the price of potash; PCS's decision to supply PCA's need for potash after PCA's mine was flooded; and, the alleged transformation of the potash industry in 1987. In evaluating this evidence, which is largely comprised of the reactions of certain Defendants to exceptional, and nonrecurrent, events in the potash marketplace, we are mindful of the policy concerns which discourage any substitution of our supposed business acumen for that of the Defendants in the legitimate management of their corporate interests.

1. The PCS September Price Increase. The Plaintiffs claim that PCS's decision to increase its price for potash by $ 35, within days after the DOC's announcement of the preliminary antidumping margins, is highly probative of a conspiracy. Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Memo. at 9. To support this contention, the Plaintiffs rely on several arguments, none of which we find sufficient to raise a genuine issue of material fact.

At the outset, we consider Rausser's testimony that "Canadian potash producers may have been expected [**69] to increase price in order to cover the bond requirements imposed by these margins." Supplemental Rausser Rept. at P 129, attached as Tab 60, Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Aff. Rausser, however, believes that "the level of the price increase was generally greater than that required by the preliminary margins." Id. Apparently, the Plaintiffs are suggesting, albeit without supporting authority, that the size of the price increase, in and of itself, supports the inference of a conspiracy. However, as one Court has noted, "were we to permit [a conspiracy claim premised on the theory that price hikes were too high], few pricing decisions would be immune from antitrust scrutiny." In re Coordinated Pretrial Proceedings, supra at 445 (observing that the Federal Courts are unsuited to act as rate-setting commissions).

Perhaps more importantly, however, we conclude -- for reasons we later detail -- that the Defendants' explanations, for the $ 35 increase in their price for potash, are not only plausible, but they are logically consistent with an independent exercise of business judgment.

Next, the Plaintiffs point to Childers' testimony that, rather than to select an increase which would [**70] correspond to PCS's preliminary dumping margin, the $ 35 increase, which reflected the industry average margin, was lower than that required by the margins. Childers, however, testified that he chose the industry-wide average not only to recover the potential duty, but also to demonstrate the impact of the duty on its potash customers in the United States. Childers Deposition at 87-88, attached as Tab 17, Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Aff. According to Childers, and as supported by the Record before us, PCS hoped that its customers, once they became aware that the duty would cause potash prices to rise, would exert pressure, on the United States Government, to terminate the antidumping proceeding. Id.; PCS Letter and Memorandum Addressing Lobbying Efforts (PC 33045 and PC 15542), attached as Tab 47, Defs.'Jt.Memo.Aff. In this same respect, Childers [*1358] testified that, "in order for [the program enlisting support from United States farmers] to be successful we felt like there would have to be others besides us charging this surcharge and we felt like if that was going to happen it was more likely to happen if we used an industry average as opposed to a PCS average." Childers Deposition [**71] at 87-88, attached as Tab 17, Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Aff. We find Childers explanation to be plausible and apt in rebutting any conjectural inference that PCS had acted collusively.

Nor do we find that Childers' testimony, that PCS acted without a contingency plan, in the event that the surcharge was not followed, as cogently suggesting the presence of an agreement to collusively restrain trade. Childers Deposition at 91-91, attached as Tab 17, Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Aff. In this respect, the Plaintiffs appear to ask that we infer, from this excerpt of Childers' testimony, that an agreement existed among the producers which obviated the need for an optional, contingency plan. Given the evidence in this Record, which corroborates the economic reality that unilateral price increases are quickly reversible, we conclude that Childers' failure to recall an "optional plan" is unavoidably, and indecipherably, ambiguous. Moreover, on August 25, 1987, Doyle authored a Memorandum, which was directed to the account managers at PCS, and which fully supports a competing inference; namely, that PCS did not know how its rivals would respond to the dumping duty. Doyle Memorandum (PC 50352), attached [**72] as Exhibit 7, Defs.'Jt.Rep.Aff. ("We are not sure that all our competitors intend to pass on this duty to their customers. Logic would dictate that they do so, but logic does not always prevail."). We find no unambiguous showing of collusion here.

Next, the Plaintiffs cite a Memorandum of May 7, 1987, from Childers to Gary Lane, who was also employed at PCS. In this Memorandum, Childers expressed concern that, due to the size of PCS, the antidumping investigation would place PCS at a much higher risk than its rivals. Childers Memorandum (PC 072520-26, attached as Tab 2, Pltfs.'Jt. Opp.Aff. Childers continued:

Even more disconcerting is the probability that the other Canadian producers will be slapped with a lower duty than PCS. Some of our Saskatchewan co-producers wouldn't mind a duty as long as PCS is hit harder than they are, due to the obvious market implications.

Id.

On this tenuous showing, the Plaintiffs encourage us to deduce that a collusive agreement served to "alleviate" Childers' concerns. We are not so persuaded, however, for Childers' decision to increase the price of PCS potash by the industry average, rather than by its own, higher [**73] margin, does not meaningfully suggest that Childers' concerns, over PCS's competitiveness, had been effectively assuaged.

ii. Response to PCS's Price Increase. In addition to the size of the price increase, the Plaintiffs maintain that the "prompt response" by the other Defendants, as well as the fact that the increase was uniformly matched -- and not undercut by the other potash producers -- supports an inference of a conspiracy. We conclude, however, that an inference of conspiracy, which is based upon this showing, is unsound, particularly in view of the strong competing inference that the Defendants not only independently arrived at the $ 35 figure but, in doing so, they exercised understandable business judgment.

As we have noted, PCS announced the $ 35 price increase on September 4, 1987, and, by September 16, 1987, the remaining Canadian Defendants had followed suit. The Plaintiffs contend that "Kalium was aware of IMC's and Noranda's intention to increase their prices $ 35 before they announced," and that "Noranda was aware of Kalium's intention to raise prices before they announced as well." Pltfs.'Jt.Opp. Memo. at 4 n. 7. As evidence for these assertions, the Plaintiffs [**74] highlight a Kalium document, which is dated September 10, 1987, and which states: "IMC considering increase" and "Noranda rumored to go up also." Kalium Document (AK 058720), attached as Tab 3, Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Aff. The Plaintiffs also refer to a Noranda Memorandum, of September 4, 1987, which reports:

[*1359]

Rumors rampant this week about imminent price increase in U.S.A. Kalium reported prepared to publish revised price list $ 6 -$ 10 U.S./ton higher than current level.

Noranda Memorandum, dated September 4, 1987 (NOR 408818), attached as Tab 6, Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Aff.

Viewed in its own light, we are unable to infer from this evidence, without engaging in sheer speculation, that the Defendants provided advance notice of each others' pricing decisions, as the inference is equally plausible that Kalium and Noranda received the referenced "rumors" from their own customers. Not only was the Kalium price increase, which was listed in the Noranda Memorandum, inconsistent with the eventual $ 35 increase, but a Noranda document, which followed the first Memorandum by one week, stated as follows: "No definitely confirmed reports of price increases by other producers [**75] though rumors abound and make for interesting discussion." Noranda Memorandum, dated September 11, 1987 (NOR 408815), attached as Exhibit 2, Defs.'Jt.Rep.Aff.

The Plaintiffs also contend "that PCA knew before September, 1987 that the industry-wide $ 35 price increase was forthcoming." Plaintiffs' Memorandum in Opposition to Rio Algom/PCA Joint Motion ("Pltfs.'Rio Algom/PCA Opp.Memo.") at 4. To support this contention, the Plaintiffs point to a telex, which was dated August 27, 1987, and which was transmitted by J.P. Welch ("Welch"), who was PCA's Western Regional Manager, to J. Ripperger ("Ripperger"), the Vice President of Marketing and Sales at PCA. PCA Telex (XC 01637), attached as Tab 5, Pltfs.'Jt.Opp. Aff. In the telex, Welch states that he "cannot understand [PCA's] reluctance to take orders at current list price," and protests that "[PCA's] current policy is alienating our good customers, destroying morale among the salesmen and, most importantly, not moving one pound of potash." Id. Welch also expressed his fear that "while we are courageously supporting the industry vow of strengthening prices, we will again be left with an unsold inventory." [**76] Id. According to the Plaintiffs, PCA's policy of not making sales at list prices "reflects PCA's foreknowledge that its competitors would be raising prices dramatically in the future." Pltfs.'Rio Algom/PCA Opp.Memo. at 4.

Without question, Welch's telex reveals a difference in opinion at PCA. However, on August 26, 1987 -- the day before Welch sent the telex -- Ripperger advised his sales force that, effective immediately, no new orders were to be accepted. Ripperger Telex (XC 152614), attached as Exhibit F, Rio Algom/PCA Jt.Memo., Declaration of Eric H. Queen ("Rio Algom/PCA Jt.Aff.") Ripperger has explained that this direction was given "in order to allow PCA to clarify its situation vis-a-vis the DOC's ruling [the preceding] Friday." Id. Given this explanation, we conclude that a legitimate inference does not arise from PCA's decision, to withdraw sales into the United States as an immediate response to the DOC's announcement of preliminary margins, since contemporaneous documentation discloses a rational business motivation which supports that response.

Indeed, another contemporaneous Memorandum at PCA bolsters an inference that, rather than learning about [**77] each others' prices from one another, the Defendants discovered the pricing decisions of their competitors by reports from their own customers. PCA Interoffice Memorandum (XC 74090), attached as Exhibit 51, Defs.'Jt.Memo.Aff. The Memorandum, which is dated September 8, 1987, was sent from PCA's Eastern Regional Office to Ripperger, and provides as follows:

The following has been reported by customers to the Lebanon Regional Office this morning. Although we feel the information is accurately reported as the individual's best understanding of it, we would want additional time to confirm the factuality of the following: Sidney Clear, Southern States Coop, reported this morning PCS's price to them will be based on $ 58.00 per ton coarse, FOB mine site, plus a $ 35.00 per ton increase effective 9/7/87.

This Memorandum concludes with additional information, which pertained to the current potash pricing of one of PCA's rivals, and all of which was gleaned from third-party sources. In fact, the Memorandum reported [*1360] that "no information to this point regarding price changes from Kalium," which suggests, when read in composite, that the potash industry routinely relied [**78] upon customer reports in canvassing the pricing policies of competing interests. Id.

As additional, suggestive evidence that the $ 35 increase was coordinated among the Canadian Defendants, the Plaintiffs identify an interoffice Memorandum which memorializes a meeting that occurred on August 31, 1987, between Gordon and two Saskatchewan Government officials; namely, Smith and Bob Reid, who was a Deputy Minister of Energy and Mines. In this Memorandum, Gordon related that he "reiterated [his] disapproval of [the prorationing legislation], and again suggested that via PCS the government could have prices increased." Gordon Memorandum (NOR 406038), at Tab 6, Plts.'Jt. Opp.Aff. Notwithstanding the Plaintiffs' claims to the contrary, we find this evidence to be unsupportive of a conspiracy, since contemporaneous records reveal that PCS had decided to increase its price for potash on August 24, 1987 -- one week prior to the Noranda meeting. Notes of Conference Call (PC 356389), attached as Exhibit 4, Defs.'Jt.Rep.Aff. Moreover, the Plaintiffs have offered no evidence to refute Smith's statement that her discussions with Gordon -- as well as her discussions and those [**79] of her staff, with the other potash producers -- were held in strict confidence. Declaration of Pat Smith at P6, attached as Exhibit 5, Defs.'Jt.Rep.Aff.

As further supporting their supposition, that an industry agreement was formed to follow PCS's pricing lead, the Plaintiffs refer to an internal Memorandum, at Cominco, which is dated July 30, 1987, and which records a conversation between Reid and John Anderson, who was the President of Cominco. Cominco Memorandum (CA 210335), attached as Tab 7, Plts.'Jt.Opp.Aff.; Plts.'Com.Memo. at 2. In response to Reid's reference to the Provincial Government's intent to introduce prorationing legislation, Anderson commented as follows:

I made the point that the price leadership being exhibited by the new management of PCS appears to be working and is accepted in the marketplace. While basic fundamentals have not changed (with one important exception -- potash producers have been so severely burned with losses that there may be much greater acceptance of price leadership and discipline in the market-place to prevent the recurrence of the previous two years). It is my feeling that the new pricing policies and apparent [**80] discipline of the market-place should be given an opportunity. If they fail at some future time, standby legislation as described above could be quickly put in motion. I think that my position fell on deaf ears.

In the absence of any evidence to responsibly suggest, however, that the Saskatchewan officials were being used by the Defendants as a conduit to privately communicate their individual pricing intentions to others in the industry, the Plaintiffs' attempt to portray a conspiratorial cast to the producers' separate discussions with the Provincial Government officials, in July and August of 1987, is unavailing. Likewise, we reject the Plaintiffs' entreaty that we infer a conspiracy from Anderson's use of the phrases "price leadership" and "discipline of the market-place." Without more, these phrases merely acknowledge, we think innocuously enough, the admitted interdependence of competing interests in any oligopoly, such as the potash industry.

The Plaintiffs have also isolated an internal analysis of the dumping margins, by Cominco, as supportive of their view that Cominco's decision to match the $ 35 increase was not reasonable unless there was a prior understanding [**81] within the industry. This Memorandum, which was dated September 11, 1987, was drafted by Dale Massie, who was Cominco's Vice President of Marketing, and it directed the Accounting Manager at Cominco to begin "accruing monies from the sale of potash to cover potential dumping fees." Cominco Memorandum (CA 057930), attached as Tab 7, Plts.'Jt.Opp.Aff. The Plaintiffs underscore that the handwritten calculations on this Memorandum, which reflect a $ 16 accrual for granular grade potash, evince a conscious decision by Cominco to ignore its own internal analysis of the dumping margins, when it elected to match PCS's [*1361] $ 35 increase on September 14. Id. We think the Plaintiffs' reliance on these calculations is misplaced, however, for neither they, nor the remainder of the Memorandum so much as suggest that Cominco intended to raise prices by $ 16 -- only that it sought to accrue that amount. Id. Of course, no conspiratorial inference is rationally prompted by a producer's failure to match a cost increase with an identical increase in price. Here, the unrebutted testimony of Cominco's management reveals that Cominco made its pricing decision without communicating with its rivals [**82] in the industry, and with the intent to achieve a competitive price level. Deposition of David Benusa at 230-31, attached as Tab 16, Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Aff. Notably, except for this most attenuated argument, the Plaintiffs do not contend that it was unreasonable for Cominco to match PCS's price increase.

The Plaintiffs continue by arguing that IMC's and Kalium's decision to follow PCS's $ 35 increase made no economic sense, but for an agreement to fix prices. In the Plaintiffs' view, since IMC and Kalium were assessed preliminary dumping margins which were below both PCS's and the industry average, each of the firms should have exploited their competitive advantage by undercutting the $ 35 price increase. Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Memo. at 10.

In response, the Defendants urge that the decisions by Kalium and IMC, to forego an undercutting of the $ 35 price increase, evinces a sound exercise of business judgment on each of their respective parts. To support this urging, the Defendants note that the Saskatchewan Government enacted prorationing legislation in September of 1987, and that Kalium and IMC were each concerned that an effort to subvert its competitors' prices could trigger a punitive [**83] application of this legislation. Indeed, in a September 10, 1987, interoffice Memorandum of Christopher Williams ("Williams"), who was the Senior Vice-President at IMC, the trepidations of management were expressed as follows: "Primary concern for IMC is the threat of production controls -- if we don't follow will the government go out of their way to hurt us?" Williams Memorandum (ST 000001), attached as Exhibit 9, Defs.'Jt.Rep.Aff.<sup>20</sup> See also, Deposition of Clifford Kelly at 229, attached as Tab J, Kalium Supplemental Memorandum, Transmittal Declaration of Lisa A. MacVittie ("Kal.Memo.Aff.").

[**84] Although the legislation was never implemented, the Plaintiffs have provided no evidence that IMC or Kalium had no cause for concern. Indeed, during July and August of 1987, Saskatchewan officials met separately with the Canadian producers to inform them about the potential impact of the prorationing legislation. Declaration of Pat Smith at P6, attached as Exhibit 5, Defs.'Jt.Rep.Aff. Following one of these meetings, Richard Hedberg, who was the Executive Vice-President of IMC, advised Reid that IMC was not in favor of Government control programs. Hedberg Letter dated August 7, 1987 (MI 61170), attached as Exhibit 5, Defs.'Jt.Rep.Aff. Moreover, the Plaintiffs' contention, that Billie Turner, who was the President of IMC, "had no understanding that increasing IMC's market share would lead to production restraints," is clearly not supported by his deposition testimony. Plaintiffs' Reply to IMC Memorandum at 2, citing Deposition of Billie Turner at 144, attached as Tab 51, Pltfs.'Jt. Opp.Aff. In fact, in referring to the prorationing legislation, Turner testified that, "having a long history with that province, I had no question in my mind that they were prepared [**85] to take drastic action to protect their industry, particularly since they owned almost half of it." Id. at 147-48.

[*1362] In addition to its comprehensible concern over the potentiality of prorationing, Kalium asserts that any inference of collusion, based on its failure to cut prices so as to generate additional revenues, is negated by the fact that it was then operating at its maximum practicable capacity. Kalium Supplemental Memorandum at 4. Notwithstanding the Plaintiffs' expressed disbelief, the Record before us corroborates Kalium's claim that, during the relevant period, it was operating at or near full capacity -- about 92 percent -- for the coarse and granular grades of potash, which were the varieties that accounted for the vast majority of its market in the United States. See, Deposition of Clifford Kelly at 229, attached as Tab J, Kal.Memo.Dec.; and Declaration of John Huber at PP12-18, attached as Tab F, Kal.Memo.Dec.; Rausser Rept. at P7, attached as Tab 59, Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Aff. (coarse and granular grades accounted for 84% of the market during the 1983-1992 period).

---

<sup>20</sup> Referring to Williams' Memorandum as a "mystery" Memorandum, the Plaintiffs imply that it would not be admissible at Trial. The Plaintiffs' objections are threefold: it is incomplete in that it ends in mid-sentence; it was produced several months after IMC's other documents were produced, and it bears a Bates number that is out of sequence with those earlier documents; and, although it is dated September 10, 1987, it refers to events that are dated September 11, 1987. Pltfs.'IMC Opp.Memo. at 2-3. We do not agree that these asserted anomalies would, necessarily, render the Memorandum inadmissible but, in any event, the unrebutted testimony of the Memorandum's author, Kip Williams, reveals that IMC did not attempt to undercut the $ 35 increase because "we were concerned with the production controls." Deposition of Christopher C. Williams at 64, attached as Tab 56, Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Aff.

For instance, compaction difficulties reduced Kalium's granular grade production [**86] from 91.1 percent to 86.1 percent in 1988. Declaration of John Huber at P16, attached as Tab F, Kal.Memo.Dec. Although the Plaintiffs suggest that Kalium should have installed compactors at a rate faster than one per year, the testimony of Kalium's expert, Frederic Scherer, remains unrebutted that it would have been counter-productive for Kalium to have added compactors at a faster rate than had been accomplished. Deposition of Frederic Scherer at 186, attached as Tab K, Transmittal Declaration of Frederick S. Young, Kalium Supplemental Reply Memorandum ("Kal.Rep.Dec."). Moreover, Kalium maintains that, because it utilized its fine and standard grades of potash in the production of the more lucrative granular variety, it lacked a compelling economic incentive to sell all of its fine and standard grades, and that, in any event, there is a direct correlation between the price of all of the potash grades in the industry. Declaration of John Huber, at PP20 and 23, attached as Tab F, Kal.Memo.Dec. Nor have the Plaintiffs presented any evidence that IMC had the capacity to increase its sales volume, as would have to be the case if it were to profit from undercutting [**87] the $ 35 price increase. Given this Record, to infer that IMC and Kalium would have obtained greater profits by underbidding the $ 35 price increase amounts to nothing other than conjecture.

Lastly, we think it worthy of reiteration, that an advance, collusive agreement is not an inevitable rationale for price matching in an oligopoly. In this respect, we find the reasoning of the First Circuit, in Clamp-All, worthy of reemphasis:

A firm in a concentrated industry typically has reason to decide (individually) to copy an industry leader. After all, a higher-than-leader's price might lead a customer to buy elsewhere, while a lower-than-leader's price might simply lead competitors to match the lower price, reducing profits for all. One does not need an agreement to bring about this kind of follow-the-leader effect in a concentrated industry.

Clamp-All Corp. v. Cast Iron Soil Pine Institute, supra at 484.

Based upon this same reasoning, the Seventh Circuit has held that it was not irrational for two insulation manufacturers to raise their prices in a period of reduced demand. Reserve Supply v. Owens-Corning Fiberglass, supra at 52. As was the case in the [**88] potash market, the demand for insulation, at least at the time of the Court's review in Reserve Supply, was inelastic. Therefore, the only new customers which would have been accessible were those who were currently being serviced by the defendants' competitors. In granting Summary Judgment for the defendants, the Court explained that the defendants' decision "to forego this option[,] [of cutting prices in an attempt to increase market share,] does not suggest that they 'acted in a way that, but for a hypothesis of joint action, would not be in [their] own self-interest.'" Id., quoting Illinois Corporate Travel Inc. v. American Airlines, Inc., 806 F.2d 722, 726 (7th Cir. 1986).

Accordingly, after careful review, we conclude that the explanations, of the low-margin producers, for deciding to follow, and not to undercut, the $ 35 price increase, are as economically plausible, or are more so, than the conspiracy-driven conclusion that the Plaintiffs would have us reach.

[*1363] iii. Entry Into Suspension Agreement. The Plaintiffs claim, with the support of their expert, that the Defendants' participation in the Suspension Agreement creates an inference of conspiracy. [**89] Rausser Rept. at P 22, attached as Tab 59, Pltf's.Jt.Opp.Aff.<sup>21</sup> As had been their urging with respect to the decision of IMC and Kalium to match the $ 35 price increase, the Plaintiffs claim that the entry of the low-cost Defendants into the Suspension Agreement was an act of economic irrationality since, in accepting that Agreement, they failed to exploit a potential competitive advantage. We conclude, however, that the Plaintiffs' assertion is, again, a resort to unfounded supposition.

<sup>21</sup> With respect to both PCA and Noranda, which were high-cost producers, the Plaintiffs' expert testified that each acted in a manner, that was consistent with their own self-interest, by entering into the Suspension Agreement. Deposition of Gordon Rausser at 539 and 655, attached as Exhibit 54, Defs.Jt. Memo.Aff. The following testimony is illustrative: "I believe PCA was above the average [of the preliminary dumping margins]. So the response to your question would be that they would prefer [to enter the Suspension Agreement]." Id. at 655.

[**90] In Rausser's view, the Suspension Agreement destroyed the low-cost producers' competitive advantage in having low tariffs, because the Agreement "had the effect of requiring all producers to raise their prices equally." Id. However, Rausser's opinion is not supported by the plain language of the Agreement, which incorporated each producer's preliminary dumping margin in the Agreement price. Indeed, in his Supplemental Report, Rausser appears to acknowledge this point but, nevertheless, he maintains that, because the DOC did not monitor the individual firms, the agreement, in practical effect, imposed a single price floor. Supplemental Expert Report of Gordon C. Rausser at P20, attached as Tab 60, Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Aff. Nonetheless, Rausser equivocates somewhat by opining that, if the Agreement imposed different price floors, "low margin firms have been giving away a competitive advantage on a daily basis by not pricing under the price floor of the high margin firms." Id.

Regardless of whether the price floor effectively required a single price, we find Rausser's argument to be unavailing, for it requires a factfinder to infer irrationality from the decision of low-cost [**91] producers to sacrifice market share for higher product prices. As we previously noted with respect to Kalium, even if it had desired to expand its market share, it was logically unable to do so. Moreover, there is ample evidence that, even after its entry into the Suspension Agreement, IMC was apprehensive that any attempt on its part to increase market share would trigger a price war which, in turn, could provoke the cessation of that Agreement, or the imposition of production controls, or both. See, IMC BBT Letter - Strategic Issues/Planning (MI 45846), dated August 9, 1989 ("Dumping remains an issue -- Market share concerns continue (production quotas)"); IMC Strategic Issues Memorandum, dated October 18, 1989 (MI 0928300) ("As you know, we have also been concerned about production controls if our market share moves up too far."); IMC Strategies Memorandum (MI 45897), dated November 29, 1989 ("Revival of dumping investigation would only take place if the price of potash drops materially[:] it is our objective, therefore, to keep the price of potash up as well as maintain our compliance with the guidelines provided under the suspension agreement."); IMC Response [**92] to Issues Memorandum, dated December 7, 1989 (MI 45035) ("To achieve a larger [market] share would risk dissolution of the Suspension Agreement and pose potential dumping concerns; it could also lead to production controls."), attached as Tab 2, IMC Reply Memorandum, Affidavit of John French ("IMC Rep.Aff."); IMC Price Guidelines, dated August 23, 1990 (MI 7112) (calculations of estimate minimum U.S. price guidelines relative to the suspension agreement), attached as Exhibit 31, Defs.'Jt.Rep.Aff.; Suspension of Antidumping Duty Investigation: Potassium Chloride From Canada, Article V.C., 53 Fed.Reg. 1393, 1394 (January 19, 1988) ("the Department reserves the right to modify its methodology in calculating United States price and foreign market value."), attached as Exhibit 35, Defs.'Jt.Memo.Aff. [*1364]

Indeed, the Record discloses several occasions when IMC determined that it was unable to make a specific sale, or even to participate in a particular market, because of the Suspension Agreement. See, IMC Memorandum, dated April 14, 1988 (MI 60513) (observing that IMC is unable to participate in the Southeast); IMC Memorandum, dated September 18, 1989 (MI 7798) (stating [**93] that IMC either needs "better freight rates, take a different view on dumping, or hope for a big price improvement" to attract business in the Southeast); IMC Letter to Customer, dated October 26, 1989 (MI 9409) (refused sale); IMC Letter to Customer, dated August 30, 1990 (MI 9367) (refused sale), attached as Exhibit 31, Defs.'Jt. Rep.Aff.

The Plaintiffs' evidence, on this aspect of the Suspension Agreement, is ambiguous for an additional reason. As is the case with any settlement, the Suspension Agreement avoided an uncertainty, and the economic risks that attended that uncertainty. Had a final determination been entered against the Canadian Defendants, each producer would have been required to make a cash deposit on all exports to the United States which, depending upon the size of the margin, had the distinct prospect of significantly affecting the company's cash flow. See, Title 19 C.F.R. § 353.21(b); Expert Report of William H. Barringer at PP6-8, attached as Exhibit 59, Defs.'Jt.Memo.Aff. Moreover, the dumping margins were preliminary, and were subject to reassessment, as is confirmed by the United States petitioners' request for an upward revision in some [**94] of the companies' margins. For IMC, these risks included the possibility that a recalculation of its duties would have included additional costs which, in turn, would have had the effect of raising its dumping margin. In this respect, Turner testified that if IMC's water costs were included in their margin, "we [would] not [be] the lowest producers by a long shot." Deposition of Billie Turner at 154-56, attached as Tab 2, IMC Rep.Aff. We cannot say that it was implausible for a Canadian potash producer to hedge against these risks.

Our conclusion on this point finds further support in the view taken by the United States Department of Justice, and by the Federal Trade Commission ("FTC"), that the entry of an Agreement to terminate a dumping action is entitled to an implied immunity from the applicable antitrust laws. U.S. Department of Justice, U.S. Federal Trade Commission, Antitrust Enforcement Guidelines for International Operations (April 1995) (Example M), attached as Exhibit 61, Defs.'Jt.Memo.Aff. Under the guidelines issued by the Justice Department and by the FTC, a scenario is addressed in which foreign producers are assessed preliminary dumping margins [**95] of 10 to 40 percent. Id. Thereafter, the foreign producers jointly initiate discussions with the DOC that lead to the suspension of the investigation. The suspension agreement provides that each producer will sell its product in the United States at a price not less than its individual foreign market value. Before determining to suspend the investigation, the DOC provides copies of the proposed agreement to the U.S. producers, who jointly advise the DOC that they do not object to the agreement on the proposed terms. According to the Justice Department, and the FTC, the hypothetical scenario envisioned no antitrust violation. In this respect, the Guidelines explain:

While an unsupervised agreement among foreign firms to raise their U.S. sales prices ordinarily would violate the Sherman Act, the suspension agreement outlined above qualified for an implied immunity from the antitrust laws. As demonstrated here, the parties have engaged only in conduct contemplated by the Tariff Act and none of the participants have engaged in conduct beyond what is necessary to implement that statutory scheme.

Notably, the Plaintiffs have made no attempt to distinguish the present [**96] case from the scenario illustrated in the guidelines and, frankly, none readily comes to mind.

In sum, we conclude that the conduct of the Defendants, in entering the Suspension Agreement, was not a collusive act, and is as readily and plausibly explained by sound business practices, as it is by the Plaintiffs' suspicions of complicity.

[*1365] iv. NMP/Eddy Pricing Behavior. Although not argued in their Joint Brief, the Plaintiffs contend that, by following the prices of their Canadian rivals, NMP/Eddy "failed to maximize the price advantage it had during the conspiracy period." Plts.'NMP/Eddy Opp.Memo. at 3. In the Plaintiffs' view, had NMP/ Eddy acted in its own best interest, it would have exploited the Canadian producers' inability to lower their prices, under the Suspension Agreement, by increasing its U.S. sales "as much as possible." Id. at 4. Instead, the Plaintiffs' assert, NMP/Eddy continued to export much of its production despite receiving lower revenues from those sales. Upon close review, however, the Plaintiffs' evidence in this respect is inconsiderable, and what there is can be explained by reasonable business judgment.

Notwithstanding the Plaintiffs' theorizations, [**97] the Record demonstrates that NMP/Eddy increased its share of the United States potash market, at the expense of the Canadian producers, after the January 1988 Suspension Agreement. See, Expert Report of Louis A. Guth at Exhibit 16 (showing NMP/Eddy's domestic market share increasing from 4.78 percent, in 1986, to 9.08 percent, in 1989, whereas the Canadian producers market share dropped from 80.15 percent to 68.11 percent, over the same period), attached as Exhibit Q. NMP/Eddy Jt.Memo.Aff.; Deposition of Gordon Rausser at 1033 (conceding that NMP/Eddy increased sales after the Suspension Agreement at the Canadian producers' expense in the mid-South and Midwestern United States), attached as Exhibit 1, NMP/Eddy Reply Memorandum, Affidavit of Steven A. Marshall ("NMP/Eddy Jt.Rep.Aff.")

Moreover, while it is true that NMP/Eddy received lower revenues from its export sales, in comparison to its sales made in the United States, the Plaintiffs' argument ignores the fact that NMP/Eddy's mines produced a disproportionate amount of the standard grade of potash. See, Expert Report of Louis A. Guth at Exhibit 23, attached as *Exhibit Q. NMP/Eddy Jt.Memo.Aff.; Deposition of Niven [**98] Morgan* at 57 ("We didn't have * * * much capability on what we produced, and we produced more standard than anything else, even though we didn't want it."), attached as Exhibit 3, NMP/Eddy Jt.Rep.Aff. However, as the Plaintiffs' expert has admitted, because there is little demand in the United States for the standard grade of potash, most potash exported out of the United States consists of that grade. Deposition of Gordon Rausser at 1009-1010, 1021, attached as Exhibit 1, NMP/Eddy Jt.Rep.Aff.; Deposition of Niven Morgan at 58 ("[Standard] was a product that had very little demand in the United States any longer."), attached as Exhibit 3, NMP/Eddy Jt.Rep.Aff. This evidence reveals that, in reality, NMP/Eddy had little alternative but to sell their inventory of standard grade potash to its export market. In addition, the evidence reveals that NMP/Eddy had not abandoned the United States market, for they were engaged in efforts to increase their capacity to produce the more desired grades of potash. Expert Report of Louis A. Guth at P 33, attached as Exhibit Q. NMP/Eddy Jt.Memo.Aff.

The Plaintiffs next refer to a Memorandum, dated December 31, 1991, from [**99] Dean McWilliams ("McWilliams"), who at that time was the Executive Vice President of NMP, to Dick Marshall ("Marshall"), who was then a new sales representative, as demonstrating that NMP/Eddy had failed to exploit the Canadian producers' inability to lower their prices. In this Memorandum, McWilliams notes that NMP's prices did not match those of its Canadian rivals, and he authorized Marshall "to meet prices, at the dealer level, which net back to Carlsbad the posted Canadian price F.O.B. mine." NMP Memorandum (MN 003551), attached as Tab 8, Plts.'Jt.Opp.Aff. Contrary to the Plaintiffs' assertion, however, this Memorandum does not limit potash sales at these prices but, rather, simply advises Marshall that "any other competitive pricing will require [McWilliams'] approval." Id. We conclude that this Memorandum reveals nothing more than a limitation, that was placed on Marshall, in deviating from NMP's price list.

In light of the evidence of Record, that NMP/Eddy increased its domestic market share, at the expense of their Canadian rivals, and further, that it had no alternative [*1366] but to export much of the potash that it produced, we conclude that the Plaintiffs' contention, [**100] that NMP/Eddy acted contrary to its economic self interest by not increasing sales "as much as possible," does not raise a reasonable inference that NMP/Eddy participated in an alleged conspiracy.

v. Refund of Surcharge and $ 18 Increase. After they entered into the Suspension Agreement, all of the Canadian producers rebated the $ 35 surcharge, and increased their potash prices by $ 18. We are asked by the Plaintiffs to conclude that this could not have occurred without a prior agreement to that effect.

As evidence of a coordinated price increase, the Plaintiffs cite a Canpotex Memorandum, that is dated January 8, 1988, and that is directed to its "agents and officers." Canpotex Memorandum (CTX 1229), attached as Tab 9, Plts.'Jt.Opp.Aff. The Memorandum provides as follows:

FYI Canadian potash producers have reached agreement with the United States Department of Commerce and all dumping action has been suspended for a minimum of 5 years. It is rumored that the USD 35.00 per metric ton increase posted by Canadian producers in 1987 to cover possible tariff payments to the U.S. Govt will be refunded in full or part. In the meantime new price lists are being issued [**101] on Monday Jan. 11 at: Standard Grade USD 80.00; Coarse Grade USD 84.00; Granular Grade USD 86.00.

By January 22, 1988, all of the Canadian Defendants, with the exception of Kalium, had issued price lists with prices that matched those announced in the Canpotex Memorandum.<sup>22</sup> The Plaintiffs infer, from the contents of this Memorandum, that all of the Defendants had previously agreed to charge these prices. However, on the same date that Canpotex issued this Memorandum, PCS announced these prices, in a telex to its customers, which advised that "price lists [would] be mailed on Monday, January 11." Telex to Customer (NOR 416856), attached as Exhibit 11, Defs.'Jt.Rep.Aff. As a consequence, the Memorandum does not assist the Plaintiffs in proving the existence of an alleged conspiracy, since it does not tend to exclude the possibility that Canpotex learned of the price lists from a customer of PCS.

[**102] Further negating an inference of conspiracy is the undisputed evidence that the Canadian producers did not uniformly increase their prices on January 11, but rather, they announced their price lists at various dates throughout the following eleven days. See, e.g., Kalium Price List effective January 11, 1988, dated January 11, 1988 (AK 620389), attached as Tab 3, Plts.'Jt.Opp.Aff.; Cominco Price List effective January 11, dated January 12 (CA 53361), attached as Tab 7, Plts.'Jt.Opp.Aff.; Noranda Price List effective January 11, dated January 14 (NOR 00000021), attached as Tab 6, Plts.'Jt.Opp.Aff.; IMC Price List effective January 18, undated (MI 094090), attached as Tab 4, Plts.'Jt.Opp. Aff.; PCA Price List effective January 18, dated January 22 (XC 168657), attached as Tab 5, Plts.'Jt.Opp.Aff. Of course, evidence that the alleged conspirators were aware of each other's prices, before announcing their own "is nothing more than a restatement of conscious parallelism, which is not enough to show an antitrust conspiracy." Market Force Inc. v. Wauwatosa Realty Co., supra at 1172 (evidence that real estate brokers had circulated information about each [**103] others' commission policies, and that commissions tended to become uniform after this information had been circulated, was not sufficient to show a conspiracy).

<sup>22</sup> Kalium's price list reflected prices for each grade of potash which were one dollar higher than that announced in the Canpotex Memorandum. Kalium January 11, 1988 Price List (AK 620389), attached as Tab 3, Plts.'Jt.Opp.Aff.

The Plaintiffs have also presented evidence, which they believe demonstrates that NMP had advance notice of the potash prices prior to their announcement, by the Canadian producers, in January of 1988. As we have addressed, shortly after the entry of the Suspension Agreement, the Canadian producers raised their price for potash by $ 18, so as to reach a total price of $ 86 per ton on the granular grade of potash. On September 15, 1987, NMP issued price lists which contained one price that would be effective [*1367] through December 31, 1987, and a higher price that would be effective from January 1, 1988, forward. Given these pricing decisions, the Plaintiffs have directed our attention to NMP's announced January price of $ 92.50, which they assert was "virtually the exact price required to place the American producers at the traditional differential of approximately $ 6 between Canadian and American prices." Plts.'Jt.Opp. Memo. at 10. While it is true, that the Record supports the fact that Canadian and American potash prices [**104] traditionally varied by $ 6, see, Deposition of Niven Morgan, Jr. at 30, attached at Tab 38, Plts.'Jt.Opp.Aff., it remains implausible that, in September of 1987, when NMP issued its price list, it could have clairvoyantly known that the DOC, and the Canadian producers, would reach an agreement in the following January, let alone what the impact that settlement agreement would have upon the price of potash. Indeed, the margins were announced only several weeks before NMP announced its January potash prices, and well before any settlement negotiations had even taken place. Given this inconceivability, we are compelled to conclude that a factfinder should not be allowed to infer, on nothing more than a hunch, that NMP was privy to pricing information prior to its public announcement. See, Nichols Motorcycle Supply Inc. v. Dunlop Tire Corp., supra at 1121 (quoting VI Areeda § 1425 at 146) (To infer a conspiracy from parallel behavior, the conduct "cannot arise from a 'plausible coincidence or an expectable response to a common business problem.'").

Lastly, the Record makes clear that the Defendants did not conspire to rebate the surcharge.<sup>23</sup> While PCS initially promised [**105] that it would refund the surcharge in the event that the duties should not, ultimately, be imposed, the remaining producers, albeit with reluctance and under pressure from their customers, decided to follow suit, although not on uniform terms. See, e.g., PCS Letter dated February 23, 1988 (PC 24093) ("At the time we added the $ 35.00 to our prices we indicated to our customers that if the investigation ended without a requirement that we pay the duties we would return to our customers the surcharge amounts they had paid."), attached as Exhibit 52, Defs.'Jt.Memo.Aff.; Kalium Letter dated January 15, 1988 (AK 101641) (credit notes to be issued "reflecting the spring price for your fall purchases with appropriate early purchase discounts and an additional credit of 1% per month to cover your cost of money", attached as Exhibit 13, Defs.'Jt.Rep. Aff.; PCA Memorandum dated February 2, 1988 (XC 228129) (refund to be issued only where and when necessary, "as the result of a previous agreement or due to competitive pressure"), attached as Exhibit 13, Defs.'Jt.Rep.Aff.; PCA Memorandum dated March 9, 1988 (XC 150364) ("The IMC and PCS approach to the $ 35.00 rebate is literally [**106] a dagger at our throats['] [for,] if we attempt to come out with a less lucrative program in the eyes of the market, then I am afraid we will place ourselves permanently at the end of the suppliers' line."), attached as Exhibit 13, Defs.'Jt.Rep.Aff.; Noranda Memorandum dated November 10, 1987 (NOR 475571) ("We will consider making retroactive price adjustments after conclusion of the dumping case is final if this is necessary to maintain a competitive pricing policy; but it is not our policy that this will be initiated or automatic on Noranda's part even if the outcome of the dumping case is positive."), attached as Exhibit 13, Defs.'Jt.Rep.Aff. Accordingly, even if there was a conspiratorial agreement amongst the Defendants to fix prices, the agreement did not include any decision to refund the $ 35 surcharge, and the Plaintiffs' claim on that ground must fail.

---

<sup>23</sup>In fairness, at the Hearing on this Motion, Plaintiffs' counsel disavowed any claim of conspiracy that was predicated upon the Defendants' decision to rebate the surcharge. See, Transcript of Summary Judgment Hearing at 107 ("They didn't conspire to give back the 35, but they conspired to raise it 35 bucks but some of them gave it back, you know, kicking and screaming.") Nevertheless, the Plaintiffs' Memorandum pointedly implies that the occurrence of the rebates suggested a prior agreement, as follows: "The circumstances surrounding the Suspension Agreement and the attendant price rollback are also indicative of a conspiracy." Plts.'Jt.Opp.Memo. at 11.

[**107] vi. PCS's Decision to Supply PCA with Potash. Next, the Plaintiffs argue that PCS's decision, to supply PCA with potash [*1368] for resale during the period, in 1987, in which PCA's mine was flooded, makes no economic sense. In support of this argument, the Plaintiffs assert that, without an independent source of potash, PCA would not have been able to service the supply needs of its customers. In the Plaintiffs' view, since other potash producers were operating with substantial excess capacity, these producers would have been able to supply PCA's customers and, thereby, to acquire PCA's market share. Rausser Rept. at P20, attached as Tab 59, Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Aff. Accordingly, the Plaintiffs maintain that, rather than co-opting PCA's customers, PCS chose to supply PCA with potash, at "substantially less profit to PCS than PCS could have made simply by supplying some or all of PCA's customers itself." Pltfs.'Jt. Opp.Memo. at 39.

The most that we can say about this transaction, between PCS and PCA, is that it has an enigmatic basis. For one, PCS agreed to enter into its supply agreement with PCA in February of 1987, which was not only prior to Childers' arrival at PCS, but also [**108] several months before the date of the alleged conspiracy. More importantly, however, contemporaneous PCS documents disclose PCS's concern that PCA would be supplied by one of its rivals, if PCS did not agree to do so. On February 3, 1987, PCS internally reported that, "if PCA is seriously considering reopening the mine, they will probably want to maintain their marketing organization by purchasing product from other producers." PCS Interoffice Memorandum, dated February 3, 1987 (PC 3311), attached as Exhibit 15, Defs.'Jt.Rep.Aff.

Thereafter, on February 5, 1987, an interoffice PCS Memorandum, which was directed to Holzkaemper, who then served as the president of PCS, stated that "we stand the risk that competitors will bid at very attractive prices for specific portions of the business and their cherry-picking may allow them to offer more attractive prices than PCS Sales." PCS Interoffice Memorandum, dated February 5, 1987 (PC 74926), attached as Exhibit 15, Defs.'Jt.Rep.Aff. This same concern was reiterated during a meeting of PCS's Board of Directors, on March 4, 1988. As reported in the notes of that meeting: "If [PCA] had not been able to purchase product from [**109] PCS Sales it would have purchased the product elsewhere as there was sufficient excess capacity available to meet PCA demand either from within the Canadian potash industry or offshore or a combination." PCS Meeting Notes (PC 69787), attached as Exhibit 15, Defs.'Jt.Rep.Aff. These meeting minutes also reveal that PCS earned a profit from its sales to PCA. Id. ("The contract with PCA returns a profit to PCS Sales.") Given these circumstances, and in view of the absence, in this Record, of any showing that PCS could, in fact, have done better by soliciting PCA's customers, we conclude that an inference of a conspiracy, on the basis of this transaction, would invoke impermissible speculation.

vii. December of 1989 Price Decrease. The Plaintiffs propose that PCS sharply reduced its potash prices, in December of 1989, in order to retaliate against "those who broke ranks." Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Memo. at 24. In fact, on December 18, 1989, PCS did institute what it termed a "Market Correction Program," which reduced the price of potash by $ 18. In a letter of the same date, Carlos Smith ("Smith"), who was the Director of U.S. Sales at PCS, advised that the price reduction would [*110] be available for only five days. See, PCS Smith Letter (AK 102128), attached as Tab 3, Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Aff.

In contrast to the conclusion that the Plaintiffs would have us reach, contemporaneous documents, as well as deposition testimony, show that the price reduction program was designed, at least in part, to stabilize the market price for potash. First, the Smith letter concludes with the following statement of purpose: "We believe this program will be beneficial to our customers by helping to stabilize the market so we all may be in a position to profit from what promises to be a good spring 1990." Id. In addition, Smith echoed his belief, during the course of his deposition, that the program was "to try to level pricing." Deposition of Carlos Smith at 133-38, attached as Tab 47, Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Aff. The following excerpt, which was cited in the Plaintiffs' Memorandum, is illustrative:

[*1369]

Q: Well, was [the] market correction program meant to level just PCS's prices?

A: Industry.

Q: It was meant to level the industry prices, PCS, IMC, Noranda and the rest of them correct?

A: Yes.

Q: I don't mean to leave anybody out. Okay. And did it work?

A: [**111] It leveled them.
 * * *

Q: When you say level it, was it an attempt to stabilize prices?

A: Yes.

Q: And when you say stabilize the market, you're talking about stabilize the price of all PCS and its competitors?

A: Yes sir.

Moreover, a PCS Memorandum of April 11, 1990, from Smith, Gary Snyder ("Snyder"), who was PCS's Account Manager, and Jerry Jackson ("Jackson"), who was PCS's Director of National Accounts and Field Sales, to all of PCS's district and account managers, discloses that PCS sought to stabilize the market prices in order to obtain its full list price. PCS Memorandum (PC 023104) ("Looking back to the Market Correction Program and its purpose is just a reminder that our primary objective then and now is to obtain full list price."), attached as Tab 2, Plts.'Jt.Opp.Aff.; Deposition of Jerry Jackson at 150, attached as Tab 32, Plts.'Jt.Opp.Aff.

HN23 [+] Standing alone, however, an attempt by one member of an oligopoly to exercise price leadership, by reducing its price, is not unlawful. As the Supreme Court recently observed, in Brooke Group v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco, 509 U.S. 209, 223-24, 125 L. Ed. 2d 168, 113 S. Ct. 2578 (1993), it would be an unsound expression of antitrust policy to discourage a price leader, in an oligopolistic market, from reducing its price. The Court explained:

Even in an oligopolistic market, when a firm drops its prices to a competitive level to demonstrate to a maverick the unprofitability of straying from the group, it would be illogical to condemn the price cut: The antitrust laws then would be an obstacle to the chain of events most conducive to a breakdown of oligopoly pricing and the onset of competition. Even if the ultimate effect of the cut is to induce or reestablish supracompetitive pricing, discouraging a price cut and forcing firms to maintain supracompetitive prices, thus depriving consumers of the benefits of lower prices in the interim, does not constitute sound antitrust policy.

Id.

As a result, evidence that PCS lowered its price, in a unilateral effort to stabilize the price of potash, does not, by itself, support a reasonable inference of conspiracy. Indeed, as Rausser has testified, retaliatory behavior by one supplier against a rival is not, necessarily, collusive behavior. Deposition of Gordon Rausser at 739, attached [**113] as Exhibit 54, Defs.'Jt.Memo.Aff. Moreover, while it is not possible to ascertain what constituted a "supracompetitive price," the Defendants assert, and the Plaintiffs do not controvert that, "at the time of the filing of the complaints, U.S. potash prices were lower than at any point since the price war that prevailed in the mid-1980s, before the initiation of the antidumping proceeding." Defs.'Jt.Memo. at 11.

Nevertheless, the Plaintiffs proffer evidence which they claim demonstrates that the Market Correction Program was aimed at producers who cheated in the marketplace by making "sales at lower prices * * * after a December 1 'cutoff date.'" Plts.'Jt.Opp. Memo. at 24. To support this claim, the Plaintiffs offer a handwritten note of John Huber ("Huber"), who was the President of Kalium, which contains the following language:

- 1) Program was a market correction. Weren't trying to teach other people -- only got tired of people who kept chipping away.
- 2) Program was reasonable one. Checked with people.
- 3) People started cheating. Ind. Farm Bureau -- own program. Hudson by Amax and MCC -- 25 barges. [Kaiser] Estech -- Isreali vessels.
- 4) We wanted [**114] to get their attention.

Program to be short, very specific. [*1370]

5) IMC extended to 29th.

6) Didn't want shipments after Dec. 1.

7) Will do everything we can to promote profitability. If gains continue, another program.

8) There running at 46% of capacity.

- 9) Have idle capacity more than IMC's [ILLEGIBLE WORD].
- 10) Dumping -- lowered cost -- 30 percent.
- Equity to Debt -- 10 to 1.

Huber Note (AK 026115), attached as Tab 3, Plts.'Jt.Opp.Aff.; Deposition of John Huber at 132-33 (read document into the record), attached as Tab 31 Plts.'Jt.Opp.Aff.

We believe that this document creates no dominant inference in either proving, or disproving, the existence of a conspiracy. First, Huber testified that he received this information from a customer. Deposition of John Huber at 134, attached as Tab 31, Plts.'Jt.Opp. Aff. Indeed, as may be expected, the price reduction spawned much discussion in the market. See, IMC Managers Report (MI 31528) ("PCS prices have dominated activity last week."); PCS Memorandum dated December 18, 1989 (PS 214568) (informing Smith of Kalium's, IMC's, and Cominco's likely reactions to price cut, gleaned [**115] from conversation with customer), attached as Exhibit 31, Defs.'Jt.Rep. Aff.

Second, it is not disputed that PCS sought to be the price leader in the industry, nor, as Brook has plainly established, is it unlawful for PCS to seek to stabilize the market, even if the effect would be to "force firms to maintain supracompetitive prices."<sup>24</sup> Brook Group v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco, supra at 224. Third, it remains uncertain what conduct was referenced by the terms "cheating" and "chipping away." Although this language may allude to conduct which deviated from an unlawful conspiracy, it is equally reasonable to read the terms as referring to a general price deterioration, or to prices that were lower than those that were allowed under the Suspension Agreement. Moreover, it cannot be intelligibly ascertained who had been "cheating." See, e.g., Cominco Memorandum dated October 16, 1992 (CA 012468) ("Resellers will be trying to chip away at the above prices -- hopefully, the major producers will not allow this to happen."), attached as Tab 7, Plts.'Jt.Rep.Aff.

[**116] Lastly, the inference suggested by the Plaintiffs is further undermined by a contemporaneous IMC strategic plan document. PCS Strategic Plan (MI 45907), attached as Exhibit 31, Defs.'Jt. Rep.Aff. Dated December 27, 1989, the document addresses IMC's assessment of PCS's market behavior, in the following terms:

We consider PCS's recent (December) market behavior to be a short-term aberration to their desired goals.

***

[IMC's] position will be to support PCS pricing efforts as long as their efforts are realistic. We will lead if PCS's approach is not in [IMC's] best interest.

[*1371] On its face, this document reveals that IMC did not view the price reduction as a means by which PCS would retaliate against co-conspirators so as to reestablish an agreed-upon price. Given these starkly competing

<sup>24</sup> Thus, evidence that PCS viewed the Market Correction Program as the "2 X 4 approach" does not assist the Plaintiffs in establishing that the Program was intended to retaliate against those firms which departed from the alleged conspiracy. PCS Handwritten Strategy Memorandum, undated (PC 292882-83), attached as Tab 2, Plts.'Jt.Opp.Aff. Rather, this document merely shows that the Program was implemented in furtherance of PCS's goal of being the price leader. The reference to the "2 X 4" approach is listed with "Raised Prices $ 35" and "Gave Rebates - Left Price up $ 18" under the heading "Re-examine Our Strategy -- Should We Be Bold Enough to Take Drastic Action Again?" Id. Notably, the Memorandum goes on to report that "prices continue to deteriorate." Id.

Likewise, we cannot draw a reasonable inference of conspiracy from a Noranda Memorandum that records a conversation between the author, who appears to be a Noranda employee, and an employee at PCS, which occurred at the Saskatchewan Mining Association, in February of 1990. Noranda Memorandum (NOR 167913), attached as Tab 6, Plts.'Jt.Opp.Aff. Referring to this conversation, the Memorandum states:

Casual conversation at the SMA meeting with a fairly senior PCS guy got quite pointed about the "market correction plan" and he was happy to indicate that they could do it again and to lower price levels because they were more efficient than the rest of us and didn't have to worry about the DOC at levels that would cause the other producers to "dump."

In our view, this Memorandum is consistent with PCS's intent to use the Program as a means to stabilize market prices.

inferences, we conclude that premising a conspiracy upon the language contained in the Kalium document would allow impermissible surmise to supplant responsible factfinding.

viii. Transformation of Industry During 1987. In addition to "uncharacteristically parallel pricing behavior," the Plaintiffs advert to other developments in the potash industry, in early [**117] 1987, which, they claim, are probative of a conspiracy. These developments include a new emphasis upon list prices, the elimination of discounts, and industry-wide cutbacks.

As a preliminary observation, we cannot draw an inference of conspiracy from the Plaintiffs' assertion that "uncharacteristically parallel pricing" commenced in 1987. Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Memo. at 11. As the Plaintiffs themselves have acknowledged, prices in an oligopoly tend to be uniform and, in fact, they have been uniform throughout the history of the potash industry. Although several attempted price hikes, in 1986, were later rescinded after industry participants failed to follow along, the mere fact that Canadian producers "raised prices and the increase struck," after the arrival of Childers and Doyle at PCS in the spring of 1987, proves nothing more than interdependence in an oligopolistic marketplace. Pltfs.Jt.Opp.Memo. at 1. While the amount of the increase, in September of 1987, was exceptional, by not providing the amount of the price increase in the Spring of 1987, the Plaintiffs ask that we infer a price fixing conspiracy based on the mere fact that prices increased. As we have repeatedly observed, [**118] however, such business behavior is insufficient to establish an agreement to fix prices.

The Plaintiffs' next claim that, "by May of 1987, coincident with the arrival of Childers and Doyle at PCS, there emerged a new found industry-wide emphasis on list prices for potash." Pltfs.' Jt.Opp.Memo. at 12. To support this assertion, the Plaintiffs cite a passage from an article, that was published in a trade publication, in which Doyle, who was the President of PCS Sales, is quoted as stating:

"When I first came on board in the Spring of 1987, the first word I put out to our sales force was that the price list was our price, stick to that price and no bending. Anybody who bends was out of here," Doyle says.

"Tough Decisions Return Balance to the Bottom Line," Custom Applicator, Feb. 1989, attached as, Exhibit 24, Defs.'Jt.Memo.Aff.

However, the article continues by quoting Childers' explanation of a legitimate business reason for an emphasis upon price lists:

"Our philosophy is that our customers are better off as long as they have a steady system where they can depend on one price and one price list," [Childers] says. "If we say the price is $ [**119] 122, then that's what it is going to be. Our customer needs to have confidence in us and our price list."

Id.

The fact that PCS's emphasis on list prices was predicated on a legitimate business purpose renders the probative weight of that practice, in proving the existence of a conspiracy, to be equivocal, at best.

The inference that the Canadian Defendants colluded, in part, by emphasizing price lists, is also subverted by the absence of evidence that the strategy was pursued by the other producers. Indeed, the only other evidence, that is proffered by the Plaintiffs, is a March of 1987 internal Memorandum from IMC, which lists, in part, the following objectives:

Reduce the amount of the discount and the number of discounted buyers. Be more selective in who we sell placing less product in the hands of the re-seller. Restrict the number of re-sellers pulling out of IMC warehouses. Put pricing back in the hands of the producer. Eliminate large swings in price which permit the re-seller to buy large quantities of product prior to a planned price increase, permitting him to undersell and delay the price from moving up.

[*1372] *IMC Objectives Memorandum (MI [**120] 013536)*, attached as Tab 4, Pltfs.' Jt.Opp.Aff. [Emphasis Supplied in Plaintiffs' Brief].

Contrary to the Plaintiffs' pinched reading, we construe the highlighted language as more naturally meaning that IMC "put pricing back in the hands of the producer," not through the use of price lists, but by a reluctance to sell to "re-sellers." Moreover, an IMC interoffice Memorandum of December 3, 1991, supports the opposite inference -- that is, an overall disillusionment with price lists. In that Memorandum, Steve Hoffman ("Hoffman"), who was the Senior Vice President of Sales at IMC, observed: "Since the mid 1980's, domestic potash pricing has evolved from sacrosanct price lists to a total disregard for their credibility." Hoffman Memorandum (MI 48458), attached as Exhibit 31, Defs.'Jt.Rep.Aff. Thus, while the evidence suggests that PCS publicized its intention to not deviate from list prices, there is no evidence that the Defendants reached any understanding, by which each agreed to adhere to list prices so long as their competitors did. Indeed, the evidence favors the opposite inference.

Further, we conclude that the Plaintiffs' assertion that, in the Spring of 1987, [**121] the Defendants "coordinated the elimination of long-standing discount practices," likewise suffers from a dearth of evidentiary support. Plts.'Jt.Opp.Memo. at 12. For this proposition, the Plaintiffs reference a PCA interoffice Memorandum of July 8, 1987, from James Brown, who was employed in the Eastern Regional Office of PCA, to the Eastern District Managers. Brown Memorandum (XC 000498), attached as Tab 5, Plts.'Jt.Opp.Aff. In this Memorandum, Brown advises that PCA's senior management had made clear that discounts, which had been given for prompt payment, would only be given for payment that was received within the stated time period. Referring to this policy, Brown states: "It is our intent and obviously the industry's practice henceforth to exercise this procedure firmly and it is up to each of us to make sure our customers clearly understand this procedure." In our view, Brown's Memorandum reveals nothing more than a recognition of the pricing policies of PCA's competitors and, therefore, this evidence is ambivalent.

Equally nonprobative of any agreement, among the Defendants, to abolish long-standing discount practices, is the Plaintiffs' reliance upon a Noranda [**122] Memorandum of June 5, 1987. This Memorandum reports that, with the exception of "summerfill incentive discounts," PCS will no longer permit discounts, "however general consensus that there may be some form of a National Discount." The Memorandum also reports that neither IMC nor Cominco had specified national discounts, although they "may surface later in some form." Noranda Memorandum (NOR 118422), attached as Tab 6, Plts.'Jt.Opp. Aff. While the document suggests that PCS, under the new management of Childers and Doyle, had unilaterally reduced the number of available discounts, it does not reasonably support an inference that the Defendants illegally coordinated the elimination of any well-established discount practice.

As a further aspect of what the Plaintiffs have regarded as a transformation in the potash industry, they assert that the "spring of 1987 brought industry-wide production cut-backs." Plts.'Jt. Opp.Memo. at 13. To support this suggestion, the Plaintiffs have referenced a Memorandum from George Jones to John Gordon, both of whom were Vice-Presidents at Noranda, which discusses the background market conditions which led to Noranda's financial problems. [**123] Noranda Memorandum (NOR 438284-87), attached as Tab 6, Plts.'Jt. Opp.Aff. The Plaintiffs have quoted the following passage:

The losses by producers and the planned cutbacks by Cominco, Saskatoon, IMC, the 50 percent operating rate of PCS, curtailed operations at Kalium and the potential closure at [Noranda] would all combine to indicate the possibility for price stability.

However, any inference, that may have otherwise arisen from this document, is substantively eviscerated by the fact that the document should, correctly, be dated "November 17, 1986," and not "November 17, 1987," as the Plaintiffs' had understood. Noranda Memorandum (NOR 438284-87), attached as Tab 6, Plts.'Jt.Opp.Aff. Accordingly, the document verifies that the Canadian producers, [*1373] aware of the oversupply problems in the industry, had begun to limit production well in advance of the date that the Plaintiffs have alleged as being the start of the purported conspiracy.

To be sure, as the Plaintiffs have asserted, production "shutdowns continued in later years." Plts.'Jt.Opp.Memo. at 14. As but one example, the Plaintiffs direct us to a Cominco Report, of potash operations, in [**124] June of 1989. In relevant part, the Report advises:

The entire industry is taking extended summer shutdowns to get inventories to an acceptable level, and we must do the same. We have scheduled a 6-week shutdown this summer. Politically, we cannot be seen to be taking less stringent measures to stabilize prices and inventories than our Saskatchewan competitors.

Cominco Memorandum (CA 265270), attached as Tab 7, Pltfs.'Jt. Op.Aff.

In our view, rather than support an inference of unlawful complicity, the quoted segment reveals Cominco's intent to follow the market. In any event, the decision to reduce production is precisely the type of conduct that routinely is influenced by independent self-interest. In addition to the proper business interests of reducing supply, the production shutdowns had the added effect of staying governmental intervention in the marketplace, as the same Report recounts: "The government has not proceeded with establishment of the production review board or regulations having stated they are satisfied with how the industry is maintaining discipline." Id.

In bolstering their claim, that the Defendants unlawfully agreed to cutback [**125] production, the Plaintiffs quote the following passage from a 1993 Report, that was disseminated by the Mineral Policy Sector of Energy Mines and Resources Canada:

Over the last four years, operating rates in the Canadian potash industry declined to average 60% of total installed capacity. Since 1987, Canadian producers have been managing production in an attempt to stabilize world markets and prices; potash supply capability has been exceeding world demand for the last decade and is projected to continue to exceed it until the end of this decade.

Energy Mines and Resources Canada Report (CTX 1526), attached as Tab 9, Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Aff.

Nonetheless, "HN24"<sup>1</sup> the fact that many, if not all, firms in an industry react similarly to a particular practice does not evidence an industry-wide agreement when there is a legitimate business purpose for each firm's behavior." Richards v. Neilsen Freight Lines, supra at 904. We conclude, therefore, that because the oversupply of potash was a legitimate business concern, each of the Defendants had a proper economic motive in reducing their production. Thus, the Plaintiffs' evidence is of dubious weight since it denotes individual [**126] motivation as much as it evidences conspiratorial conduct.

Lastly, the Plaintiffs point to two internal Noranda Memoranda to support their contention that the "Spring of 1987 brought new recognition of industry unity." Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Memo. at 20. On June 27, 1987, a Noranda internal weekly Report observed:

Buyer sentiment towards the potential firmness in the potash market is mixed. The potash market has been a buyers market for so long that these buyers are resisting the discipline the producers collectively are attempting to enforce.

Noranda Report (NOR 407425), attached as Tab 6, Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Aff. [Emphasis in Plaintiffs' Brief].

A subsequent internal weekly Report, that is dated July 24, 1987, expresses a similar view:

The mood of the Southwestern Fertilizer Conference in Dallas was cautiously optimistic, mainly by reason of the generally uniform resolve of fertilizer producers to take whatever pricing and supply action is necessary to be profitable during the next fertilizer year.

Noranda Report (NOR 408836), attached as Tab 6, Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Aff. [Emphasis in Plaintiffs' Brief].

Once again, we find this [**127] evidence to be indeterminate. In our view, the documents show nothing more than some recognition, on Noranda's [*1374] part, that the price increases were enduring.

Indeed, a similar recognition is reflected in contemporaneous issues of a weekly trade publication of the fertilizer industry, whose edition of June 15, 1987, reported as follows: "The resolve on PCS's and IMC's parts to hold out for higher product dollars is firm." "Market Watch, North America, Potash," Green Markets, June 15, 1987 at 2, attached as Exhibit 21, Defs.'Jt.Rep.Aff. In an issue of July 27, 1987, the same publication advised: "Potash producers have convinced most buyers that they are firmly committed to current posted prices, at least for the next couple of months." "Market Watch, North America, Potash," Green Markets, June 15, 1987 at 2, attached as Exhibit 21, Defs.'Jt.Rep.Aff. Given the acknowledged interdependence of the firms within the potash industry, and the unrebutted testimony of the Noranda employees, that the information contained in the internal reports was derived from potash customers, we conclude that the mere use of the terms "collectively," and "uniform," to describe the events that [**128] were occurring in the marketplace, does not competently allow a reasonable inference of conspiracy. See, Deposition of David James Sandison at 77-78, Deposition of Julie Rawska-Cook at 134, attached as Exhibit 21, Defs'.Jt.Rep.Aff.

In the final analysis, we are compelled to conclude that the Plaintiffs have failed to proffer evidence which constructively distinguishes conduct, that could not or would not have occurred without advance communication or understanding, and that which is an ordinary incident of the marketplace. We do not suggest that this evidence is somehow irrelevant, however, ss the Second Circuit has observed, in Apex Oil Co. v. DiMauro, supra at 254-55, as follows:

HN25 [↑] A court deciding whether to grant summary judgment should not view each piece of evidence in a vacuum. Seemingly innocent or ambiguous behavior can give rise to a reasonable inference of conspiracy in light of the background against which the behavior takes place.

Accordingly, in determining those inferences that may be reasonably drawn from the Plaintiffs' showings, we have viewed, and will continue to consider, the Plaintiffs' evidence in the context of the Record as a [**129] whole.

d. Interfirm Communications. The third component of the evidence, which the Plaintiffs claim supports a reasonable inference of a conspiracy, consists of the communications between the various Defendants. According to the Plaintiffs, there existed a high level of interfirm communications which, when considered in conjunction with the Defendants' record of coinciding conduct, warrants an inference of conspiracy. For these purposes, we will follow the organization that the Plaintiffs have employed, and will group this evidence in the following categories: the cutoffs; the exchange of production information; the price discussions; the apologies; and the threats. Upon our close review, we conclude that these communications do not reliably confirm the Plaintiffs' allegations of conspiracy.

i. The Cutoffs. The Plaintiffs assert that, "among the most noteworthy communications," are those that relate to "cutoff dates." Plts.' Jt.Opp.Memo. at 16. The Record demonstrates that the Defendants have frequently announced future potash prices, and the dates when those prices were to take effect. According to the Plaintiffs, "the Defendants would follow up on price increase announcements [**130] with personal communications to make sure all competitors would adhere to the new price on the effective date and refrain from selling at the old price after the 'cutoff date.'" <sup>25</sup> Id. Upon [*1375] close review, however, this grouping of communications generally relates to one producer -- PCS -- complaining about a certain business practice of another producer -- Kalium.

[**131] In response to this contention, the Defendants have cited the Seventh Circuit's decision, in Valley Liquors, Inc. v. Renfield Importers, Ltd., supra at 661, and have asserted that the proof of complaints by competitors is an inadequate foundation to support a conspiracy claim. In contrast to this case, however, Valley Liquors, as well as

---

<sup>25</sup> Robert Turner ("Turner"), who was the Vice-President of Sales at Kalium, described cutoffs, as they related to price changes, in the following terms:

There are generally four price periods in the fertilizer year. * * * One would be summer fill program, then you have the fall use period, then you have a winter fill program and a spring use period. Generally the prices in the fill programs are lower than prices in the use periods. So if we put our a price list for the summer fill program that is due to cut off on September 15, by means of the price list we say that product that is ordered and shipped after September 15 will go at a higher price. Our distribution system occasionally gets swamped and is unable to deliver all of the orders by September 15. So to make certain that our customers are protected on their price, if they have accepted orders in by the cutoff date, prior to the cutoff date, we sometimes have to ship beyond the cutoff date.

Deposition of Robert Turner at 25-26, attached as Tab 52, Plts.' Jt.Opp.Aff.; see also, Deposition of Clifford Kelly at 242-43 (stating reasons why list prices usually increased during the growing season), attached as Exhibit C, Kal.Rep.Aff.

Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., supra, which is the case that was principally relied upon in Valley Liquors, involved allegations of an unlawful vertical agreement.<sup>26</sup> In Monsanto, the Supreme Court held that HN26[
↑] a conspiracy cannot be established merely by proof that a manufacturer terminated a distributor in response to dealer complaints. According to the Court, complaints about price cutters "are natural -- and from the manufacturer's perspective, unavoidable -- reactions by distributors to the activities of their rivals." Id. at 763.

[**132] Despite the fact that Monsanto and Valley Liquor involved vertical agreements, rather than the type of horizontal conspiracy alleged here, we conclude that the analysis of these Courts is generally instructive. In rejecting the notion that a Jury could infer the existence of a price-fixing agreement from the complaints of other distributors, the Monsanto Court made clear that, so long as the manufacturer made an independent business decision not to do business with a distributor, the fact that the manufacturer was aware of the other distributors' complaints was of no moment. Complaints alone, the Court observed, do not "tend to exclude the possibility that the manufacturer and nonterminated distributors were acting independently." Id. at 764. In so concluding, the Court, in Monsanto, recognized that complaints between members of different market layers are often "unavoidable," and may even assure a more efficient distribution system. Id. While complaints between competitors at the same market level may not always have the same potential to improve the market, we do not believe that evidence of such complaints, standing alone, satisfies the Plaintiffs' burden [**133] in establishing a conspiracy. Since the focus of our inquiry is directed at whether two or more of the Defendants unlawfully agreed to fix prices, we find no responsible basis, nor any persuasive authority, upon which to conclude that such complaints should be accepted, without more, as indicia of a conspiracy, in order to discourage, or to remove such conduct, from the horizontal marketplace. We, therefore, turn to the complaints, and the responses they received.

On November 5, 1990, Turner, who was the Vice President of Sales at Kalium, met with Doyle and Smith, both of PCS. According to Turner's notations from that meeting: "They wanted to talk about our post-increase shipments[;]
causes problems with effective date of increases." <sup>27</sup> Deposition of Robert Turner at 107, attached as Tab 52, Plts.'Jt.Opp.Aff. Of note, Turner's daybook entry reveals that he had advised Doyle and Smith that he was meeting them out of courtesy, that he did not feel that meeting with competitors really solved anything, and that he "would not discuss any pricing related items with them." Id. at 109; Turner Daybook Entry (AK 005698), attached as Tab 3, Plts.'Jt.Opp.Aff. Regarding [**134] the post-cutoff discussion, [*1376] Turner "just saw it as a continuation of [Doyle's] line of bitching about that." Deposition of Robert Turner at 110-11, attached as Tab 52, Plts.'Jt.Opp.Aff. Indeed, Doyle has testified that shipping product at fill season prices, after a use season price increase, was "a constant practice at Kalium." Deposition of William Doyle at 297, attached as Tab J, Kal.Rep.Aff. Thereafter, in August of 1991, Doyle again expressed his "displeasure" to Turner, that "Kalium continued to ship beyond a cutoff date." Deposition of Robert Turner at 36, attached as Tab 52, Plts.'Jt.Opp.Aff.; Summary of Competitor Communications at 14-15, attached as Tab 1, Plts.'Jt.Opp.Aff. Although Doyle did not ask Kalium to stop the practice, he stated that PCS's information and studies "showed that Kalium's market share increased in the months following a cutoff date." Id. Significantly, Turner testified that he responded as follows:

I repeated what I had told him on the prior occasion * * * that our distribution system at times became overwhelmed and we could -- couldn't make the cutoffs as we would like to do but that was our system and that [**135] we would work to protect the business that we had and if we had to extend, we would. We would run our business.

Deposition of Robert Turner at 37, attached as Tab 52, Plts.'Jt. Opp.Aff.

<sup>26</sup> In contradistinction to horizontal agreements, or agreements between competitors at the same level in market structure, a vertical agreement exists between firms at different levels of the market structure, such as between manufacturers and distributors.

<sup>27</sup> While not cited in the Plaintiffs' Memoranda, the Record indicates that, in July of 1989, Doyle telephoned Turner to express his displeasure at Kalium's practice of shipping product, after a price cutoff, at pre-cutoff prices. Deposition of Robert Turner at 107, attached as Plts.'Jt.Opp.Aff.; Summary of Competitor Communications at 12, attached as Tab 1, Plts.'Jt.Opp.Aff. We have also considered the import of this communication in the analysis that proceeds in the text of this Report.

Undoubtedly, if one first were to assume the existence of a conspiracy, PCS's complaints and inquiries, concerning Kalium's cutoff shipments, would appear to be consistent with communications between conspirators. However, as Matsushita explains, the Plaintiffs are required to supply evidence which tends to establish the conspiracy, and the Plaintiffs may not discharge their burden by simply assuming that a conspiracy was at play, and then force-fitting every scintilla of evidence into that assumption. Here, the cutoff evidence does not dispose toward the establishment of a conspiracy, because the evidence does not tend to exclude the equally probable inference of independent action and, indeed, we find the evidence to be more supportive of independent action. Not only does the contemporaneous record disclose Turner informing Doyle of Kalium's competitive intentions, but there is also no evidence that Doyle requested Turner to stop the post-cutoff shipments at pre-cutoff prices. [**136] Deposition of Robert Turner at 26 ("I can't recall that he demanded that we stop doing that."), attached as Tab 52, Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Aff. More importantly, the Plaintiffs make no attempt to contradict the evidence that Kalium did not change its conduct in response to PCS's protests. Deposition of William Doyle at 326, attached as Tab J, Kal.Rep.Aff.; Deposition of Robert Turner at 272-73, attached as Tab E, Kal.Rep. Aff.<sup>28</sup>

[**137] The Plaintiffs next assert that Turner recognized the "importance of adhering to the previously announced price rises." Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Memo. at 17. To support this assertion, the Plaintiffs reference a December 16, 1991 entry in Turner's daybook which reads, as follows:

Bill Doyle called. Wanted to advise they were not going along with the Gromark [*1377] program. Said Gromark had advised that we were. He said he was advised that IMC and Cominco were declining as well. I told him that we had agreed to be competitive at Gromark. We also fully intended to get the product out by 1/31 and to read my letter to the trade. I reminded him that the Gromark program was in response to reseller deliveries after cutoff and was directed to protect themselves from that.

Deposition of Robert Turner at 136, attached as Tab 52, Pltfs.'Jt. Opp.Aff.; Turner Daybook Entry (AK 006067), attached as Tab 3, Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Aff.

In our view, this entry more plausibly supports an inference of independent action than of concerted effort.

The "letter to the trade," to which Turner adverted, was a cover letter that Kalium had attached to its price list of December 2, 1991, and that [**138] had been transmitted to its customers. In that letter, Kalium informed its customers that it "intended to complete all winter fill requirements on or before January 31, 1992." Kalium Letter to Customers (AK 101545), attached as Exhibit 23, Defs.'Jt.Rep.Aff. Thus, Turner conveyed no information to Doyle that had not already been made public. What is perhaps more significant, however, is that, rather than "recognize the importance of adhering to a price increase," Turner not only informed Doyle that Kalium would be competitive,

<sup>28</sup> The enforcement of cutoffs, the Plaintiffs assert, also prevented potash resellers from accumulating potash inventories, prior to a price increase, for resale after the increase went into effect. In this respect, the Plaintiffs proffer a PCS internal Memorandum of March 9, 1989, which, at first blush, appears to support their view:

We must get control back in the hands of the producers. * * * We must control inventories, to not beef-up at any specific locations, at the request of the operator/customer or sales manager in anticipation of a block sale. It is important that we get the word out on block sales. * * * We need to set a policy or at least send some indicator as to our thinking.

PCS Memorandum (PC 024187), attached as Tab 2, Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Aff.

This evidence is indeterminate, however, for it shows nothing more than PCS's frustration over the conduct of potash wholesalers which impeded PCS's ability to sell product after a price increase. Further, the fact that Turner expressed a similar concern to Gillette, on January 15, 1992, is not probative of a conspiracy. See, Deposition of Robert Turner at 142 ("I also told him I was concerned about reseller activity after 1/31 at old prices."), attached as Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Aff. Absent some showing that the content of these communications supports a reasonable inference of a conspiracy, a discussion between rivals, of a common marketing concern, cannot singularly suffice to exclude the real possibility that the competitors were acting, individually, in their own, respective, self interests.

but confirmed that Kalium had satisfied Gromark's request, and had sold its potash at its lower, fill-season price. Deposition of Robert Turner at 262-63, attached as Tab E, Kal.Rep.Aff.<sup>29</sup>

[**139] ii. The Exchange of Production Information. In support of a conspiratorial inference, the Plaintiffs next contend that the Defendants "regularly exchanged detailed information about each other's future production." Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Memo. at 18. When examined closely, however, the Plaintiffs' evidence reflects no more than innocent conduct.

The first piece of evidence, that is offered to support the Plaintiffs' assertion, is a Memorandum of September 15, 1992, which was authored by C.S. MacKay ("MacKay"), who was the officer at Kalium in charge of production, and which was directed to John Huber ("Huber"), who became the President of Kalium in 1991. Kalium Memorandum (AK 008221), attached as Tab 3, Pltfs.'Jt.Opp. Aff. This Memorandum recounts a meeting, on September 9, 1992, of the International Fertilizer Association ("IFA") Potash Working Party. Along with MacKay, representatives from PCS, IMC, the Canadian government, and four non-Canadian producers were in attendance. The Memorandum reveals that various producers, including IMC and PCS, disclosed production information. When viewed in context, however, the producers disclosed their production plans for 1992 and, [**140] because the parties did not report the amount of potash that each had already produced in 1992, the disclosures did not reveal how much more potash each intended to produce. Even if the producers had provided [*1378] this information, it is not clear what use this information had on the alleged fixing of prices. Given the fact that more non-Defendants provided production information than did the Defendants, and that the information which IMC and PCS provided was solely limited to their 1992 production figures, we conclude that this Memorandum is insufficient to favor an inference of a conspiracy.

The Plaintiffs next point to a Kalium Memorandum of January 8, 1993, in which MacKay reports a Saskatchewan Mining Association ("SMA") "State of the Nation" meeting. Kalium Memorandum (AK 108967), attached as Tab 3, Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Aff. At these meetings, "each company reviews specific items such as safety, union problems or employee problems and it also includes future plans for shutdowns." Deposition of John Huber at 61, attached as Tab 31, Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Aff. However, with respect to the information concerning future shutdowns, Huber testified that the producers disclosed only what [**141] each had publicly disclosed, id. at 62, and, according to Huber, the applicable union contracts required the producers to provide their employees with advance notice of mine shutdowns. Id. at 57. Any inference of conspiracy, that could be based upon the Defendants' participation at SMA meetings, is further mollified by the fact that the producers disclosed this information prior to the commencement of the alleged conspiracy.<sup>30</sup>

<sup>29</sup> Likewise, evidence that, on December 19, 1991, Turner told Bo Thompson ("Thompson"), who was a representative of Potocan, which is a non-Defendant potash producer, that Kalium intended to have all of its deliveries completed by 1/31, is non-probatative. Not only is Potocan not a Defendant in this action, but Kalium's intent to have deliveries completed by 1/31 had previously been expressed in a letter to its customers. Deposition of Robert Turner at 138, attached as Tab 52, Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Aff. Further, we find Turner's statement to Steve Gillette, who was the Manager of National Accounts at PCS, that Kalium intended to "make our cutoff date * * * with only a few mechanical exceptions," and that Kalium did not intend to "deviate from my letter to customers on the price list," to be equally non-probatative. Id. at 142.

Lastly, while the vast majority of the Plaintiffs' "cut-off" evidence involves PCS and Kalium, PCA's Ripperger recalled one instance when Doyle asked him if PCA intended to implement a price increase that PCA had announced, and "that [PCA] not make sales at the old price after the effective date of the announced price increase." Deposition of John Ripperger at 216, attached as Tab 43, Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Aff. Although Ripperger could not recall either the date of the conversation, or his specific response, he believed PCA "did what we wanted to do as far as running our business." Id. at 218. The Plaintiffs have pointed to no evidence to the contrary. Although we do not condone such conduct, absent evidence that either Kalium or PCA modified their behavior, we conclude that Doyle's remarks are inadequate, by themselves, to support the inference of a collusive agreement.

<sup>30</sup> As additional evidence that the Defendants had disclosed sensitive material regarding their production capacity, the Plaintiffs cite a Kalium Memorandum in which MacKay recounts the events at a dinner meeting of the Saskatchewan Potash Producers Association. According to the Memorandum, MacKay attended the meeting to talk with representatives of the Canadian [**142] Although not cited in the Plaintiffs' briefs, the final piece of evidence that they offer, to demonstrate regular exchanges of sensitive information, is a January 20, 1993 entry from Turner's daybook. The entry reveals that William Ayers ("Ayers"), who was the Director of International Sales and Marketing at PCA, told Turner that "their production was at desired levels but extreme cold was causing salt to precipitate and was impacting production." Deposition of Robert Turner at 225, attached as Tab 52, Plts.'Jt.Opp.Aff. Not only did Ayers fail to indicate any future production information, but this kind of communication between firms, concerning general production information, would seem to be a natural expression of legitimate business interests, which simply does not support an inference of a conspiracy to fix prices.

iii. Price Discussions. In this category of evidence, the Plaintiffs have assembled those price communications which they have not otherwise identified as pertaining to cutoffs, to threats, or to apologies. The bulk of these communications involve instances in which a representative of one of the Defendants attempted to verify an assertion, by a customer, [**143] that he had purchased potash, in a completed transaction, from another producer and at a particular price.

The Plaintiffs contend that the exchange of pricing information supplies significant evidence of a conspiracy. We note, however, that the cases upon which the Plaintiffs rely involved systematic and routine exchanges of pricing information. Thus, in Morton Salt Co. v. United States, 235 F.2d 573, 575 (10th Cir. 1956), the presence of a "completely free exchange of pricing information," between the alleged conspirators, was not disputed. In that case, "pricing information, keys and scales were sent to one another and any changes which were of interest to the other salt producers were communicated immediately." Id. Likewise, in Rosefield v. Falcon Jet Corp., 701 F. Supp. 1053, 1057 (D.N.J. 1988), the defendants' sales representatives "engaged in a regular exchange of price and other information." The exchanges routinely occurred during monthly telephone conversations, and included the product's base price at the "next available delivery." Id.

In contrast to the cases cited by the Plaintiffs, not only does the verification evidence [*1379] here relate to completed transactions, [**144] but the evidence demonstrates that the contacts were neither coordinated nor systematic. See, Summary of Competitor Communications, attached as Tab 1, Plts.'Jt.Opp.Aff. Notwithstanding the Plaintiffs' bald assertion that the Defendants "discussed prices at every opportunity," the Record reveals no more than several dozen instances, during the period between April of 1987, through March of 1995, in which one Defendant requested another to verify the sale price of a past transaction. Plts.'Jt.Opp.Memo. at 37. Further, the vast majority of the contacts involved PCS.

As to PCS, the evidence reveals that it either initiated or received verification contacts, which ranged from less than a dozen per year with IMC, to no more than one or two during the entire period with Noranda. Summary of Competitor Communications, attached as Tab 1, Plts.'Jt.Opp.Aff. Moreover, contrary to the Plaintiffs' assertion, the evidence suggests that the Defendants were not always candid with each other and, at times, they refused to disclose the requested information. See, Deposition of Gary Snyder at 129 (responses "probably not" truthful), attached as Tab 48, Plts.'Jt.Opp.Aff.; Deposition [**145] of Jerry Jackson at 220 (noting that Turner at Kalium told him that he was "not comfortable" verifying a certain price), attached as Tab 32, Plts.'Jt.Opp.Aff.

Of course, "HN27"<sup>31</sup> the dissemination of price information is not itself a per se violation of the Sherman Act." United States v. Citizens & Southern National Bank, 422 U.S. 86, 113, 45 L. Ed. 2d 41, 95 S. Ct. 2099 (1975); accord, Rosebrough Monument Co. v. Memorial Park Cemetery, 666 F.2d 1130, 1137 n. 4 (8th Cir. 1981); see also, VI Areeda, § 1422b at 134 ("[A] firm asking a rival for its price on a particular item or transaction and announcing an intention to match it may simply be articulating the obvious; [and a] traditional agreement cannot be inferred.")<sup>31</sup>

---

Government. Kalium Memorandum (AK 616130), attached as Tab 3, Plts.'Jt. Opp.Aff. Notwithstanding the Plaintiffs' claim, that the Defendants exchanged information "which would have been closely guarded secrets between true competitors," Plts.'IMC Memo. at 7, the date of the Memorandum was February 18, 1986, which predates the alleged conspiracy by over a year and, therefore, related to a period of time that the Plaintiffs cite as one of intense competition within the potash industry.

<sup>31</sup> Although not cited by the Plaintiffs, independent research has drawn our attention to United States v. Container Corp., 393 U.S. 333, 21 L. Ed. 2d 526, 89 S. Ct. 510 (1969), which, upon a first reading, gave us pause. There, under circumstances which

Because the mere exchange of price information, without more, is not unlawful, the Plaintiffs must demonstrate that the price verifications were motivated by an anticompetitive intent and, indeed, caused injury to competition. Rosebrough Monument Co. v. Memorial Park Cemetery, supra at 1138.

[**146] Here, by contrast, the evidence does not reasonably support the inference that the disclosure of past transaction prices was undertaken with the purpose and effect of facilitating a greater coordination and stabilization [*1380] of prices. In the two instances, that were cited by the Plaintiff, as involving a response by a Defendant to a specific price confirmation discussion, the Defendant actually lowered its price. Deposition of Charles S. Hoffman at 133, attached as Tab 16, Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Aff., cited in Summary of Competitor Communications at 7, attached as Tab 1, Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Aff. As to intent, the unrebutted evidence supports an inference that the Defendants made, and answered inquiries regarding past transactions, in order to ascertain the accuracy of their customers' assertions. See, Wilcox v. First Interstate Bank of Oregon, N.A., 815 F.2d 522, 527 (9th Cir. 1987) ("An exchange of price information which constitutes reasonable business behavior is not an illegal agreement."). We find nothing inherently unusual, or sinister, in a sporadic request being made to a business competitor, in order to determine if a customer's report, of a competitive sales price, was [**147] truthful.

Having concluded that the Plaintiffs' price verification evidence does not tend to exclude the possibility that the Defendants were acting independently, we turn to those price discussions which, the Plaintiffs assert, did not involve a price confirmation.

1. The NMP/Eddy Memoranda. In support of their assertion, that the Defendants developed a network "to exchange advance information about price increases," the Plaintiffs cite an internal NMP/Eddy Potash Memorandum dated October 27, 1988. Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Memo. at 19; NMP/Eddy Memorandum (MN 001511), attached as Tab 8, Pltfs.Jt.Opp.Aff. The Memorandum states that, with respect to a recently scheduled Kalium price increase, "PCS and IMC have indicated they do not expect to change current prices before December 1." Id. The Plaintiffs infer that Pat Tubbs ("Tubbs"), who authored the Memorandum, and who was an NMP salesperson, had obtained the information from conspiratorial discussions with representatives of PCS and IMC. We conclude, however, that this inference is speculative because the Memorandum does not disclose the means by which Tubbs secured the information. Indeed, the Memorandum plainly reveals, [**148] on its face, that Tubbs had obtained the Kalium price list -- a portion of which was affixed to the document -- from a customer. Id. Moreover, Dean McWilliams, who was the only witness who testified about the Memorandum, stated that the source of the information, that was contained in the document, was a customer. Deposition of Dean McWilliams at 84, attached as Exhibit 24, Defs.'Jt.Rep.Aff.

bear a similarity to those before us, the Supreme Court concluded that the conduct of price verifications, within a concentrated industry, could give rise to liability, under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, even in the absence of an illegal agreement. In a concurring opinion, Justice Fortas took pains to assure that the decision would not be read as holding that the exchange of price information, even in an oligopoly, should be treated as a per se violation of the Sherman Act. Id. at 339.

Consistent with the Plaintiffs' approach, the Defendants also have not addressed the ruling of the Court in Container Corp., but have tacitly addressed that ruling by addressing a prior decision of the Court that Container Corp. left intact. See, Cement Manufacturers Protective Association v. United States, 268 U.S. 588, 69 L. Ed. 1104, 45 S. Ct. 586 (1925) (recognizing the validity of exchanging pricing information so as to curtail arguably fraudulent client practices). Further, the Defendants have pointedly relied upon the Supreme Court's subsequent holdings, in United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 438 U.S. 422, 441 n. 16, 57 L. Ed. 2d 854, 98 S. Ct. 2864 (1978), and United States v. Citizens & Southern National Bank, 422 U.S. 86, 113, 45 L. Ed. 2d 41, 95 S. Ct. 2099 (1975), which implicitly adopted Justice Fortas' concurrence as the governing law.

We are satisfied that, even if the price verification activities of the Defendants were as systemic and pervasive as those suggested in Container Corp., that decision has no continuing viability. Whatever vestiges of Container Corp. remained after the Court's subsequent decisions, in Citizens and Gypsum, would surely be eradicated by the Court's pronouncements in Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1984), and in Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986). Where, as here, sporadic price verifications have occurred, but were generated by the legitimate business purpose of assuring that a customer was not misleading a producer, as to the market value of potash, the circumstance of the price verification is ambiguous evidence of price fixing. Accordingly, the cases which we cite in the text of this Opinion are, in our view, reflective of the prevailing weight of authority.

For the same reason, we find the remaining documents, that are cited in the Plaintiffs' Memorandum in Opposition to NMP/Eddy's Supplemental Memorandum, to be hopelessly ambiguous. For example, the Plaintiffs have referred to an internal Memorandum of January 30, 1992, in which Marshall observes that: "The primary Potash producers are making strong statements in regard to the February 1st price increase which is stated to be $ 7.00 according to the published list prices." Not only is Marshall's reference to "strong statements" unclear, there is nothing in the Record to support an inference that Marshall learned of these "statements" from his rivals. NMP/Eddy Memorandum (MN 003549), attached as Tab 8, Plts.Jt.Opp.Aff. The Plaintiffs' attempt to brace this asserted inference, [**149] by citing a Memorandum of February 1, 1992, which was authored by McWilliams, and which stated that NMP/Eddy "will support prices effective February 1, 1992 as published in December," is equally unavailing. NMP/Eddy Memorandum (MN 003549), attached as Tab 8, Plts.Jt.Opp.Aff. In fact, McWilliams testified that his intent was to report that NMP/Eddy was "going to make every effort to hold our price schedule." Deposition of Dean McWilliams at 116, attached as Exhibit 5, NMP/Eddy Jt.Rep.Aff.<sup>32</sup>

[**150] [*1381] 2. Jackson (PCS) -- Benusa (Cominco). Next, the Plaintiffs identify a meeting at which David Benusa ("Benusa"), who was a Regional Sales Manager at Cominco, asked Jackson to confirm a discounted price, that PCS had used in a sale to Crop Production Services ("CPS"), a subsidiary of Cominco. Deposition of Jerry Jackson at 63, attached as Tab 32, Plts.'Jt.Opp.Aff. According to Jackson, on behalf of Cominco's accounting department, Benusa wanted to know why CPS received a $ 6 discount. Id. at 68. Jackson testified that he informed Benusa that the discount constituted a "competitive national discount," which PCS had maintained with CPS prior to CPS's acquisition by Cominco. Id. at 65. According to the Plaintiffs, "it defies all logic to believe this clandestine meeting was simply an effort to get information that the accounting people could have gotten from a simple call." Plts. 'Com.Memo. at 4-5. Of course, whether the information requested by Benusa could be simply obtained from another source is as conjectural as the Plaintiffs' inference that Jackson and Benusa met for a conspiratorial purpose when there is an equally valid business reason to explain their [**151] encounter; namely, whether a subsidiary of Cominco was being properly charged for potash and whether that charge reflected a new price reverberation in the marketplace to which Cominco, and the other potash producers, might have to competitively respond. More importantly, there is no showing that Benusa sought any alteration in the discount given, or otherwise acted upon the information that Jackson disclosed.

3. Hoffman/Wittje (IMC) -- Benusa(Cominco). The Plaintiffs have also isolated an expense report of Steve Hoffman ("Hoffman"), who was the Senior Vice President of Sales at IMC, which records that he, Herman Wittje, who was also of IMC, and Benusa, played golf on July 8, 1992. Hoffman Expense Report (MI 103147), attached as Tab 4, Plts.'Jt.Opp.Aff. The report advises that the purpose of the outing was to discuss IMC's potash exchange with Cominco and Canpotex. Id. According to Hoffman, IMC and Cominco had a detailed potash exchange that involved multiple warehouse locations. Deposition of Steve Hoffman at 194-97, attached as Tab 29, Plts.'Jt.Opp.Aff. Once a year, representatives from each company would determine valid locations for the exchange, and [**152] would agree on what had to be accomplished with any outstanding balances. Hoffman testified that the outing was planned for this purpose, and he denied that there was any discussion of potash pricing in the United States. Id. at 197-98.

In support of a purported conspiratorial purpose behind the golf outing, the Plaintiffs have directed us to an internal Cominco Memorandum, which was also dated July 8, 1992, in which Benusa states: "Our competitors have agreed to deduct $ 2.00 from their current warehouse and rail delivered list." Plts. 'Com.Memo. at 7, quoting Cominco Memorandum (CA 012296), attached as Tab 7, Plts.'Jt.Opp.Aff.<sup>33</sup> Notwithstanding Hoffman's testimony, the <sup>32</sup> The Plaintiffs citation to an additional Memorandum, which was authored by Marshall, and dated December 3, 1992, is equally non-probative. The Memorandum, which has price lists from IMC and PCS appended to it, stated: "PCS is not increasing prices until Feb. 1, 1993." NMP/Eddy Memorandum (001525), attached as Tab 8, Plts.Jt.Opp.Aff. Once again, however, the manner in which Marshall obtained the information contained in the Memorandum is entirely unclear and, by every appearance, PCS's stated intent -- not to raise its prices until February 1 -- was intimated on the face of its price list.

<sup>33</sup> Unfortunately, we are unable to locate this document. Nevertheless, portions of the document's contents have been quoted in the Plaintiffs' Cominco Opposition Memorandum, during Hoffman's Deposition, and during the Summary Judgment Hearing. We Plaintiffs infer, from the timing of the golf game, and of Benusa's Memorandum, that the information recited in Benusa's Memorandum was derived from conversations that were conducted on the golf course. However, absent any evidence as to who Benusa was referring to as the "competitors" or whether the price deduction was published before the golf outing, the inferences, that the Plaintiffs would have us draw, from the coincidence of the dates involved, cannot rise above pure conjecture.

[**153] 4. Zalac (Noranda) -- Conforti (IMC). In an internal Noranda Memorandum of November 29, 1989, Mike Zalac reports that he was "advised by Bill Conforti, IMC today that PCS published following prices." Noranda Memorandum (NOR 140117), attached as Tab 6, Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Aff. The Memorandum concludes by stating that "IMC will be publishing same prices." Id. Although Conforti disclosed IMC's intent to match PCS's published prices, the unrebutted testimony of David Westlake ("Westlake"), [*1382] from Noranda, confirms that the information, which pertained to IMC's pricing intentions, had previously been distributed in the marketplace. Deposition of David Westlake at 198-99, attached as Tab 5, Noranda's Supplemental Reply Memorandum, Affidavit of Michael Kelly ("Nor.Rep.Aff."). Westlake testified that, prior to his receipt of the Memorandum, he had learned of IMC's plan to match PCS's price in a conversation that he had with a customer. Id. at 206-09; Westlake Diary (NOR 481182), attached as Tab 5, Nor.Rep.Aff. This evidence offsets any intimation that Conforti had provided Zalac with pricing information as a part of some alleged conspiracy. Further undermining [**154] any conspiratorial inference is the fact that Zalac's responsibilities, at Noranda, did not include sales or pricing but, rather, involved transportation matters. Deposition of David Westlake at 45, attached as Tab 5, Nor.Rep.Aff.

5. Turner/Huber (Kaliuum) -- Ripperger (PCA). The Plaintiffs next underscore Ripperger's testimony that Turner once remarked, during a telephone conversation which took place in the 1990's that, "by going directly to customers," PCA was "messing up the market" in the Minnesota/Wisconsin region. Deposition of John Ripperger at 226, attached as Tab 43, Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Aff. Turner has admitted that he was frustrated by the fact that a PCA salesman was "aggressively cutting the price," and that he asked Ripperger if he knew what his salesman was doing. Deposition of Robert Turner at 51, attached as Tab 52, Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Aff.

Despite Turner's frustration as to a particular pricing policy at PCA, we find this evidence to be equally consistent with independent conduct. Notably, there is no evidence that Turner, or Huber, who was the president of Kaliuum, had asked PCA to discontinue any particular sales practice. Deposition of John Ripperger [**155] at 227, attached as Tab 43, Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Aff. While Ripperger responded that he would "check and get back" to Turner, the Record reveals that "he never did, and the prices in Wisconsin continued to fall." Deposition of Robert Turner at 53, attached as Tab 52, Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Aff. Corroboratively, Turner has testified that Ripperger did not provide any information about PCA's sales activities. Id. at 282, attached as Tab E, Kal.Rep.Aff. We are not impressed that any inference, founded upon this exchange, could be other than vague innuendo.

iv. Apologies Between Rivals. As a further aspect of its proffered evidence of interfirm communications, the Plaintiffs contend that "the Defendants politely apologized to each other for price competition." Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Memo. at 20. Notwithstanding this characterization, we find that the proffered evidence is too slender to bear a reasonable inference of complicity.

On January 15, 1992, Steve Gillette, who was PCS's Manager of National Accounts, informed Turner that a particular bid, to a customer in the Pacific Northwest, had been a mistake. According to Gillette, Turner had "said something to the effect of what the [**156] heck happened on this Agra Northwest bid." Deposition of Steve Gillette at 151, attached as Tab 25, Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Aff. Gillette explained that "people had been away for the holidays," and that a "misquotation had been made that was below common trading in the market." Id. Gillette testified to his concern that Sam Clark ("Clark"), who Turner supervised, had "come unglued." Id. at 152. Turner informed Gillette that "even though costly, [Kaliuum] had protected [its] business at that location." Deposition of Robert Turner at 142, attached as Tab 52, Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Aff.

In December of 1992, Gillette encountered Clark at a Far West Fertilizer Conference. According to Gillette, Clark still appeared "miffed about what had happened in that respective bid." Deposition of Steve Gillette at 117, attached as Tab 25, Pltfs.'Jt.Opp. Aff. Gillette reiterated that a mistake had been made in the price quotation, and he further acknowledged that PCS had subsequently changed its organizational structure. Id. at 118. "The other thing that I did say to him, that I was going to pursue the market competitively every day and I had no intent of having a special price [**157] for bid business or two-tiered pricing in that geography." Id. Gillette recalls Turner advising that the bid price was particularly disruptive in the marketplace, [*1383] but that Kalium did what they had to do, which was to match the price quotation. Id. at 119.

We believe that this single transaction, by itself, creates no permissible inference. The Record demonstrates that Gillette sought to assuage certain representatives of Kalium, who were upset at having to match a price that was "below the perceived market price." Id. at 119. Given the competing inferences and, particularly, the uncontested evidence that the objectionable price was a mistake, we find that Gillette's remarks do not tend to preclude the possibility of independent action and, in this instance, the end result was increased, rather than diminished, competition.

v. Threats. Lastly, the Plaintiffs assert that, when prices eroded in 1989, the "price communications became accusatory." Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Memo. at 21. Since the bulk of this evidence does not involve instances in which one Defendant demanded another Defendant to behave in a certain manner, or risk peril, we conclude that, contrary to the Plaintiffs' [**158] characterization, this evidence more properly amounts to a collection of complaints. As we have already indicated, the mere fact that one Defendant has complained to another is ambiguous, since each of the specific complaints would appear to have an equally plausible, non-conspiratorial explanation. We turn to this evidence, following the Plaintiffs order of presentation.

1. Childers (PCS) -- Proops and Sullivan (Kalium). In July of 1988, Childers visited Jay Proops ("Proops"), who, along with Joe Sullivan ("Sullivan"), had acquired Kalium from PPG in November of 1987. According to Proops, Childers told him that PCS was losing its market share, and that several other producers, including Kalium, were gaining market share. Deposition of Jay Proops at 17, attached as Tab 41, Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Memo. Childers further advised Proops that he had documentation to show that Kalium was "undercutting PCS's prices in the marketplace," and that such pricing "was one of the causes of the problem." Id. at 18. At the end of the meeting, Childers handed Proops a PCS Memorandum of June 16, 1988, which was authored by Jackson and directed to Doyle, and which was entitled: "Competitive Activity [**159] Spring 1988: IMC, Kalium and Cominco." In relevant part, the Memorandum reads:

Kalium's history throughout the spring season has been non-supportive. The information provided will show Kalium has consistently been $ 6.00--$ 8.00/ton below PCS pricing through the spring season. * * * Freight has been a game Kalium has played throughout the spring season serving to reduce delivered market pricing. * * * Kalium's attitude in the marketplace has shown aggression and a lack of willingness to support Canadian list pricing. Even though Kalium has acted with less finesse than IMC and has clearly been a negative, their impact on the general market has not been as destructive as IMC.

PCS Spring Competitive Analysis - Redacted (AK 057713A-B), attached as Tab 3, Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Aff.<sup>34</sup>

<sup>34</sup> Proops' testimony reveals that the document he received from Childers did not include the analysis of IMC and Cominco, which had been included in the original Memorandum. Deposition of Jay Proops at 46-47, attached as Tab 41, Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Memo. We note that the original version, in addition to separate analyses of Cominco and IMC, also included the following summary:

PCS's May market share performance is a direct result of low priced selling from our chief competitors, IMC and Kalium. Market developments took several forms ranging from broker based activity to freight manipulation. The fact remains that IMC and Kalium have not come close to supporting the list price.

PCS Spring Competitive Analysis -- Non-Redacted (PC 074283-85), attached as Tab 2, Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Memo.

Thereafter, Proops undertook a study in order to determine whether the specific prices, that were reflected in that document, were correct. Deposition of Jay Proops at 37, attached as Tab 41, Plts.'Jt.Opp.Memo. While the Plaintiffs assert that Proops commenced this investigation so as to reassure himself that Kalium "had not been competing," Plts.'Jt. Opp.Memo. at 22, [**160] Proops has testified to the contrary. When asked what he was "looking to find out," Proops stated that it was his understanding that Kalium's [*1384] position in the marketplace was "to sell a premium product at a premium price." Deposition of Jay Proops at 34, attached as Tab 41, Plts.'Jt.Opp.Memo. If the pricing allegations were true, "it would have been different from my understanding of our own policy." Id. at 32.

[**161] While we are troubled by Childers' conduct, we again note that the focus of the antitrust laws is concerted action. Here, the evidence shows that Proops was "upset" with Childers' visit, and that he had expressed his concern to Sullivan. Id. at 30; Deposition of Joe Sullivan, attached as Tab 50, Plts.'Jt.Opp.Aff. This concern is reinforced by the fact that Proops notified Kalium's legal counsel shortly after that meeting. In addition, Proops testified that he did not show the referenced document to anyone, other than Kalium's attorney and Sullivan, and that he did not discuss the results of the study with anyone other than Sullivan. See, Declaration of Jay Proops at '1 3, attached as Tab M. Kal.Memo.Aff. Further, the Record does not demonstrate that Childers asked Proops to modify Kalium's behavior, let alone that Proops agreed to change Kalium's pricing policies, or even that he told Childers what Kalium's practice was with respect to its pricing policies. Deposition of Jay Proops at 18-22 and 29, attached as Tab 41, Plts.'Jt.Opp.Memo.

When viewed in totality, we find that Childers' visit, although perhaps injudicious, was insufficient, as a matter [**162] of law, to raise a genuine issue of fact. First, the content of this informal complaint does not suggest that Childers accused Kalium of deviating from agreed upon conduct but, rather, merely voices PCS's concern that Kalium's aggressive pricing policies had taken a portion of PCS's market share. Second, the Plaintiffs have identified nothing in the Record that even remotely suggests that Childers' visit had any effect on Kalium's pricing decisions. See, Declaration of Jay Proops at P 3, attached as Tab M, Kal.Memo.Aff.; Deposition of Joe Sullivan at 172-73, attached as Tab G, Kal.Rep. Aff. Indeed, at least in PCS's view, Kalium continued to aggressively pursue a larger market share. In a PCS Memorandum of November 18, 1988,<sup>35</sup> in which Jackson [*1385] follows up on the

<sup>35</sup> The November 18, 1988 follow-up Memorandum is significant in that it not only supports Kalium's claim, that its pricing did not change after Childers' visit, but it also suggests aggressive competition on the part of IMC, Cominco, and Noranda. In this regard, the Memorandum states:

IMC has set the standard for market share since the beginning of the 1988 calendar year. * * * Market share strides have resulted once again from freight manipulation, below market pricing and low prices selling through third parties (brokers). Third party selling has produced the greatest market share gains for IMC.

* * *

Cominco has missed very few opportunities to sell aggressively. * * * Although menacing, market aggression by Cominco was much less frequent and certainly not as wide spread as IMC and Kalium.

* * *

Noranda through Terra showed absolutely no support for market pricing. As the fall market weakened Terra managed to remain $ 2.00 to $ 4.00/S.T. below competitive levels.

* * *

PCS' chief competitors, IMC and Kalium, simply took advantage of PCS market discipline. * * * The lack of competitor discipline has had a snow-balling effect on market share. IMC and Kalium have noticeable market share increases as a result of the lack of support for market pricing.

PCS Competitive Market Analysis (PC 171624), attached as Exhibit 30. Defs.'Jt.Rep.Aff.

On December 13, 1988, Jackson summarized PCS's year from a market share perspective. The analysis was included in a Memorandum directed to Doyle, which concluded with the following language:

Memorandum of June, that Childers gave to Proops, Jackson states: "While PCS supported strong June/July pricing and strict guidelines for national accounts, Kalium priced product aggressively, forward - sold material, and appeared liberal with national discounts." PCS Competitive Market Analysis (PC 171624), attached as Exhibit 30, Defs.'Jt.Rep.Aff. Thus, there is no causative relationship from which a [**163] reasonable inference of conspiracy may reliably be drawn. The Plaintiffs apparently ask us to infer, from Childers' comments, that he would not have approached Proops in the absence of a prior understanding. Given Proops' testimony, that he did not solicit the analysis, that he communicated no agreement, that he immediately contacted Kalium's counsel, and that Kalium's post-visit persistence in aggressively pricing its product, this inference is less compelling than the competing inference that Childers acted, independently, on the chance that he might receive a favorable response, which he did not.

[**164] Thereafter, on August 16, 1990, Childers made an attempt to discuss pricing with Sullivan. His attempt has been memorialized in a Memorandum that Sullivan drafted. See, Sullivan Memorandum (AK 058790), attached as Tab 3, pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Aff. The Memorandum reads, in part, as follows:

Childers than turned to a second issue, stating that his pricing leadership was not working despite major efforts. He immediately said that he would like to discuss this issue with me, taking advantage of my long experience in industry leadership. He indicated he had been by to see me two years ago, but that was during the time that I was in the hospital * * *. I told him that, as much as I respected him, that we could not talk about pricing at all because even the appearance of this might be misconstrued by the Department of Justice, or other governmental bodies. I further pointed out that Jay [Proops] and I had decided, right from the start, never to engage in this kind of discussion. Childers responded that he wouldn't even suggest anything illegal in such a discussion. I responded that, even if it were totally innocent, several years down the line it might appear illegal. I again [**165] reiterated that I was not trying to be difficult or unfair, but we will just not discuss pricing at all. Childers than backed off and said he would not discuss it with us given our views.

Immediately after the conversation, the Record reflects that Sullivan consulted with Kalium's legal counsel and "alerted Kelly not to discuss anything remotely concerning price with Childers, feeling that this was a very dangerous situation." Id. What is most significant about this conversation, however, is that an attempt to discuss pricing was explicitly, and abjectly, rebuffed by Sullivan; thus an inference of concerted action is not justifiably supported. Viewed in conjunction with Childers' visit in June of 1988, Sullivan's conversation with Childers suggests that, at most, Childers sought an understanding with Kalium that it would be in each producer's best interests if prices were set and maintained. However, even if that had been Childers' intent, the Plaintiffs have identified no evidence, in the Record before us, that even remotely suggests Childers reached any "unity of purpose or a common design and understanding." *American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 810, I**166 90 L.Ed. 1575, 66 S.Ct. 1125 (1946).*

When assessing the market share situation, it is clear that PCS losses this year result from competitor's low market selling, freight manipulation and terms in special situations. PCS has been very disciplined and has refused to sell under the above circumstances. Our chief competitors IMC, Kalium and Cominco have taken the "whatever it takes to get the business" selling approach.

PCS 1988 Business Loss Analysis (PC 171619), attached as Exhibit 31. Defs.'Jt.Rep.Aff.

In our view, the market analyses performed by PCS not only fail to support the Plaintiffs' alleged conspiracy, but they strengthen the Defendants' contention that their pricing activities were not concerted.

Lastly, the portrayal of Cominco's aggressive selling undermines the Plaintiffs' assertion that Cominco participated as a "teamplayer" in the conspiracy. Pltfs.'Com.Memo. at 7. To support this assertion, the Plaintiffs have pointed to the following statements in the PCS June Competitive Analysis Memorandum: "Very little of the information we have points to problems generated by Cominco. In a few instances Cominco was found to be below the market but their general behavior pointed to responsible selling." PCS Spring Competitive Analysis -- Non-Redacted (PC 074283-85), attached as Tab 2. Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Aff. Even without the follow-up market analyses, however, we conclude that PCS's use of the term "responsible selling" is nothing more than its unilateral characterization of price-following behavior.

2. Doyle (PCS)/Williams (IMC) -- Ripperger (PCA). During his deposition, Ripperger recalled being approached by representatives of three potash producers -- Doyle from PCS, Williams from IMC, and an individual from Dead Sea Works -- concerning PCA's sale of Russian Potash. Deposition of John Ripperger at 204-11, attached as Tab 43, Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Aff. These communications occurred during a meeting of the Fertilizer Institute ("TFI") in 1987, or in 1988. Each of these individuals informed Ripperger that PCA's pricing activity, in Florida, was "undermining the prevailing level of prices for [*1386] potash," or was otherwise "having a negative impact on the market." Id. at 204 and 209. In view of Ripperger's testimony, that he perceived his communications with Doyle and Williams as annoyances, rather than threats, and that, despite these conversations, PCA continued to sell Russian potash at whatever price it felt was necessary, we find this evidence non-suggestive of any alleged conspiracy. Id. at 209-210 (annoyance); Id. at 253 (no change in behavior), attached as Tab A. Rio Algom/PCA Rep.Aff.

3. Doyle (PCS) -- Huber (Kalium). [**167] During a meeting, in 1991, of the Phosphate and Potash Institute ("PPI"), Doyle complained that Kalium's market share had increased and PCS's had declined over a period of time. Deposition of John Huber at 250, attached as Tab 31, Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Aff. In response, Huber advised that Kalium was enjoying increased intercompany sales, and good industrial sales. Id. at 251. This evidence proves nothing.

Doyle then expressed unhappiness about PCS's drop in market share with Occidental Chemical, which was a customer of both Kalium and PCS. Doyle told Huber that "he wasn't going to kick us [i.e., PCS] out," and indeed, PCS matched Kalium's lower price to maintain business. Deposition of William Doyle at 275-76, attached as Tab 22, Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Aff. In turn, Huber testified that he considered Doyle's comments as "trash talk," and that Doyle was unhappy and frustrated that Kalium's market share had risen. Deposition of John Huber at 254, attached as Tab 31, Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Aff. Moreover, since Kalium had previously signed a long-term contract with Occidental, Doyle's complaints could not, as a matter of logic, have had any effect upon Kalium's pricing. Further delimiting [**168] any reasonably plausible inference of a conspiracy is the fact that, once Doyle began commenting on Kalium's aggressive pricing with respect to a specific customer, Huber told Doyle the meeting was over, and he promptly left. Id. at 251.

4. Doyle (PCS) -- Turner (Kalium). On January 12, 1993, Doyle telephoned Turner to verify reports of Kalium offering "terms" in certain locations. Deposition of Robert Turner at 152, attached as Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Aff. According to Turner's notations of the conversation, Doyle "admonished me that [PCS] did not and would not give terms." Id. In reply, Turner advised that Kalium had met a competitive situation, but would not disclose the identity of the customer. Id. With respect to terms, Turner replied that Kalium would "protect [its] business." Id. In light of Turner's responses, we find that, rather than demonstrate concerted action, this exchange fully supports an inference of independent action.

5. Snyder (PCS) -- Ayers (PCA). A PCA Memorandum of February 4, 1993, records a conversation between William Ayers ("Ayers"), who was PCA's Director of International Sales and Marketing, and Gary Snyder ("Snyder"), who was [**169] PCS's Account Manager. PCA Memorandum (XC 120955), attached as Tab 5, Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Aff. During that conversation, Snyder asked Ayers why he had offered a certain price to a specific customer which, in Snyder's view, was well below the market in that area. The Memorandum notes that Ayers replied that it was none of Snyder's business. In turn, Snyder told Ayers that PCS "will take it (prices) down and bury you (PCA) if that's what you want." Id. According to the Memorandum, Ayers recognized that Snyder was intoxicated, and he suggested to Snyder that his comments were inappropriate. Id.

At the outset, we note that this appears to be the only instance in this Record where one Defendant "threatened" another. Nevertheless, we do not believe that this conversation supports a reasonable inference of concerted action. Ayers testified that he did not perceive Snyder's remark as a threat but, instead, he sensed that Snyder was inebriated and "just mad they lost that business." Deposition of William Ayers at 83, attached as Exhibit 26, Defs.'Rep.Aff. Significantly, the evidence before us is undisputed, that the PCA employee rebuffed the complaint, and reported the incident [**170] to his supervisor. While we do not view threats, even if "idle," to reflect an exemplary business practice, we must examine the threat, in context, before we can reasonably infer a conspiracy from its existence. We find no legitimate basis to infer, on this Record, that a solitary threat, [*1387] which was effectively rebuffed, reliably supports an inference of conspiracy.

6. Jackson (PCS) -- Ripperger (PCA). On February 18, 1993, Jackson asked Ripperger if PCA was selling at a certain price, and if PCA was following "the announced price increases." PCA Memorandum (XC 120954), attached as Tab 5, Plts.'Jt.Opp.Aff. In response, Ripperger refused to comment, and stated that it was not in their best interests to discuss the matter. Ripperger also stated that PCA was "competitive with prices we find in our various markets." Id. We find no basis upon which to conclude that this evidence supports an alleged conspiracy.

7. Zimmerman (Cominco) -- Ripperger (PCA). On February 22, 1993, Ben Zimmerman, who was a District Manager at Cominco, telephoned Ayers, at PCA, to determine whether PCA was selling potash at a certain price in a particular market. PCA Memorandum (XC 120959), [**171] attached as Tab 5, Plts.'Jt.Opp.Aff. Ayers refused to comment, to which Zimmerman replied that he thought he would attempt to determine what was happening from the marketplace. We find this evidence wholly non-probatative of any allegedly illegal conduct.

8. Cominco Unwillingness to Trade Potash With PCA. The Plaintiffs next reference a Cominco internal Memorandum of February 22, 1993, as further evidence of a "threat." Although this Memorandum confirms a willingness, on the part of Cominco, to initiate a potash exchange with PCA, the Plaintiffs highlight that portion of the document which states that, "due to their weak approach to pricing, I am not prepared to offer them other locations at this time." Cominco Internal Memorandum (CA 009838), attached as Tab 7, Plts.'Jt.Opp. Aff. The Plaintiffs urge that Cominco's refusal to engage in additional trades with PCA is evidence of retaliation, or punishment. Plts.'Jt.Opp.Memo. at 23-24. In our view, the Memorandum is ambiguous, for it is wholly unclear what the author intended by referring to PCA's "weak approach to pricing." While such language could imply a conspiratorial effort to coerce PCA to raise its prices, [**172] it could equally mean that Cominco was not interested in permitting PCA to sell Cominco-derived potash at below market prices -- an undeniably cogent business reason for Cominco, independently, to reject any contemplated potash exchange.

e. Internal Memoranda Evidence. While not labeled a plus factor, the Plaintiffs identify several internal Memoranda, which were obtained from the various Defendants, and which, the Plaintiffs claim, support a conspiratorial inference. Upon closer examination, however, we find that the Memoranda reflect nothing more than mere interdependence.

i. Cominco. The Plaintiffs cite several occasions on which a Cominco employee expressed the importance of "supporting" a particular price increase. For example, on February 17, 1992, Benusa recommended that Cominco publish a new price list, that would be effective on February 15. The Plaintiffs' maintain that the statement that, "we have support from the coop system and I believe other majors are prepared to support this pricing structure," reveals a conspiratorial inference. Cominco Memorandum (CA 010350), attached as Tab 7, Plts.'Jt.Opp.Aff. We are not so persuaded. There is no evidence that [**173] Cominco communicated with any other Defendant concerning the February 15 price increase. Indeed, Benusa testified that the information, which pertained to the other potash producers, was obtained from a customer. Deposition of David Benusa at 78, attached as Tab 16, Plts.'Jt.Opp.Aff. Likewise, we find the Plaintiffs' evidence that Cominco decided, on several occasions, to "support" a particular price increase, reflects nothing more than its recognition that a price-following policy was, at least as of that date, in its best interest. See, Cominco E-mail, dated September 5, 1991 (CA 309789) ("need to make sure we are making every effort to support this price increase"); Cominco E-mail, dated October 16, 1992 (CA 012468) ("we have to support these levels without deviating"); Cominco Memorandum, dated January 25, 1994 (CA 004068) ("Our dealer network advised us that Kalium has announced a $ 8.00 per ton price increase on potash effective 2/14/94[;] * * * it appears that we will support this increase but will wait a couple of days before we [**1388] announce."), attached as Tab 7, Plts.'Jt.Opp.Aff.

In addition, the Plaintiffs assert that Cominco's central role in the [**174] alleged conspiracy is demonstrated by Benusa's statements, in an internal Memorandum of January 29, 1990, that Cominco "intend[s] to be a stabilizing rather a disruptive force," and that to "approach the market in any other way would be economically and politically unwise." Plts.'Com.Memo. at 6-7; Cominco Memorandum (CA 013758), attached as Tab 7, Plts.'Jt.Opp.Aff. [Emphasis added in the Plaintiffs' briefing]. By emphasizing the term "politically" in their written arguments, the Plaintiffs appear to claim that Benusa used that term to reference Cominco's conduct in relation to the alleged co-conspirators. When the Memorandum is read in context, however, the term "politically" takes on its literal meaning, and most probably refers to Governmental actors. For example, the Memorandum advises:

Given our current supply situation and our relationship with other buyers in the market place (i.e. CF) we should not * * * accept returns that may put us in violation of the suspension agreement. * * * I can assure you that we have no intention of violating the spirit of the agreement.

Id.

Moreover, the Plaintiffs suggestion of a conspiratorial meaning [**175] is further undercut by the fact that, positioned between the quoted statements concerning Cominco's stated intent to be "stabilizing," Benusa wrote: "We will be a player in the market based on service, quality and price to the extent that we can." Id. A fair reading of this statement, in conjunction with the entirety of the Memorandum's contents, logically implies the absence of an illegal agreement -- not the presence of one.

ii. PCA. As suggestive evidence of PCA's participation in the alleged conspiracy, the Plaintiffs have isolated a statement, which was recited in a PCA internal Memorandum of October 25, 1989, and which relates that a particular pricing program "may have some effect on moving product and stabilizing market." PCA Memorandum (XC 119822), attached as Tab 5, Pltfs.'Jt.Opp.Aff. The program is specific to a particular "pricing problem at Baltimore since late May." Id. Despite the Plaintiffs' urging to the opposite effect, we draw no conspiratorial inference from this Memorandum. The reference to "stabilizing" is ambiguous, at best, since the term is plainly susceptible to multiple meanings. Here, the Memorandum appears to make clear that PCA intended [**176] to lower its prices, in order to sell more potash. We are unwilling to subscribe a conspiratorial inference to such a legitimate exercise of independent business judgment.

The Plaintiffs also rely upon a portion of a Monthly Report in November of 1992, which Robert Connocie, who was the President of PCA, sent to PCA's parent, Rio Algom, as evidencing that PCA acted contrary to its economic self-interest. The quoted portion states:

In our effort to stabilize prices and maximize 1993 profit PCA has deliberately turned down business. As a result November volumes were minimal; December will be better but still below average.

PCA Monthly Report (XC 201661), attached as Tab 5, Pltfs.'Jt.Opp. Aff.

The Plaintiffs contend that PCA's decision not to maximize sales reflects economic irrationality. The Plaintiffs' reliance on this document is misplaced, however, as it demonstrates, on its very face, that PCA's intent was to "maximize 1993 profit."

iii. Noranda. In similar fashion, the Plaintiffs' contend that language in an internal Noranda Memorandum of June 27, 1987, which recommends that Noranda "support PCS's leadership role and announce to their [price] [**177] levels," is suggestive of a conspiracy. Noranda Memorandum (NOR 407467), attached as Tab 6, Pltfs.'Jt. Opp.Aff. We disagree. In our view, the Memorandum reveals no more than independent price-following behavior. The author informs that she had advocated following PCS's published prices, as opposed to other producer's prices, because she believed that those producers would later revise their price lists. Id. Accordingly, we find ample evidence of interdependence to [*1389] offset the Plaintiffs' implication of illegally concerted conduct.

f. Summary. In assessing the individualized components of the Plaintiffs' proffered evidence of price fixing, we have not lost sight of the greater picture for, in truth, the whole can be greater than the sum of its individual parts. Here, however, we have the totality of the Plaintiffs' evidentiary showings, but that composite view can claim no synergistic enhancement "from a number of acts none of which" tend to exclude the real possibility of independent action. Cal. Computer Products v. Intern. Business Machines, 613 F.2d 727, 746 (9th Cir. 1979); see also, American Floral Serv. v. Florists' Transworld Del., 633 F. Supp. 201, 215 [**178] n. 23 (N.D.Ill. 1986) ("It requires no sophistication in mathematical theory to recognize that zero plus zero plus zero still equals zero[;]* * * if no incident has probative value, all incidents taken together have no probative value."). While, perhaps, unduly simplistic, we believe it to be cryptically straightforward that, notwithstanding our thorough vetting of this Record for a showing which would comport with the rudiments of "Simon-says," we have found nothing more than "Follow-the-Leader."

Nor does the Plaintiffs' case obtain added substance from the expert opinion evidence of Rausser -- not because he is without the requisite background in economic theory, but because his opinions can be no more reliable than the factual underpinnings upon which they have been predicated. With modest exception, the mere passage of an untrustworthy evidentiary showing, through the mechanism of an expert's Report, will be wholly unavailing in curing the foundational deficiencies. See, Rule 703, Federal Rules of Evidence. In voicing his opinions, Dr. Rausser has necessarily accepted, as reasonable, the ambiguous showings that Matsushita regards as nonprobative. We may not do likewise.

[**179] We understand the Plaintiffs' earnest belief that the conduct of the Defendants is, in their view, wholly consistent with their allegations of illegal price fixing. Unfortunately, while those allegations might properly elude a Motion to Dismiss, at this stage of the proceedings, the Plaintiffs may no longer rest on their allegations, for the Court must look, as we have, to the evidence before it in a light -- prismatically focused by the doctrine of Matsushita -- most favorable to them. See, Behrens v. Pelletier, 133 L. Ed. 2d 773, U.S. , 116 S. Ct. 834, 840 \(1996\). Here, the result of that deliberative review commends an award of Summary Judgment to the Defendants.

B. The Separate Summary Judgment Motions of Individual Defendants.

While our Recommendation, if adopted, would have the effect of summarily concluding the Plaintiffs' claims, in the interests of completeness, we briefly address the Motions of Rio Algom and PPG for the entry of Summary Judgment on independent grounds.<sup>36</sup>

[**180] As we have noted, Rio Algom's involvement in the alleged conspiracy arose from its ownership of PCA. As a result, in order to hold Rio Algom liable, the Plaintiffs must either pierce the corporate veil between Rio Algom and PCA, or demonstrate that Rio Algom participated "as an actor," in the alleged conspiracy. H.J., Inc. v. International Tel. & Tel. Corp., 867 F.2d 1531, 1549 \(8th Cir. 1989\).

In support of their assertion, that Rio Algom is "legally responsible for the antitrust violations by PCA," the Plaintiffs [*1390] highlight the language, in an internal PCA business strategy document, which is dated in August of 1990, and which states that "Rio Algom's March 30, 1990 strategy paper outlines several issues which form guidelines for PCA strategy." Plts.'Rio Algom/PCA Opp.Memo. at 5; PCA Memorandum (XC 03958), attached as Tab 5, Plts.'Jt.Opp.Aff. The Plaintiffs underscore that PCA supplied Rio Algom with monthly summaries of its operations, see, e.g., August 1990 Report (RIO 4124), attached as Tab 5, Plts.'Jt.Opp.Aff., and that Rio Algom representatives had participated in the merger negotiations between Kalium and PCA. Deposition of Robert Connochie [**181] at 170, attached as Tab 18, Plts.'Jt.Opp.Aff. As additional evidence to find Rio Algom liable, the Plaintiffs identify an internal PCA organizational chart which lists PCA as a "division" of Rio Algom. April, 1990 PCA Organizational Chart (XC 035579), attached as Tab 5, Plts.'Jt.Opp.Aff.

Nevertheless, HN28 in order to hold Rio Algom liable "as an actor," the Plaintiffs must demonstrate that Rio Algom "performed acts sufficient to create liability, or actively influenced [PCA] in its violations." H.J., Inc. v. International Tel. & Tel. Corp., supra. In contrast, the plaintiffs' evidence does not indicate that Rio Algom influenced any purportedly conspiratorial conduct. Indeed, the guidelines referred to in the cited strategy document concerned the environment, new investment, professional development, and the volatility of earnings from mining investments. PCA Memorandum (XC 03958-61), attached as Tab 5, Plts.'Jt.Opp.Aff. As in H.J., which involved a claim of below-cost, predatory pricing, "there [has been] no proof that [the Parent corporation] was involved in the decisions upon which liability is based." [H.J., Inc. v. International Tel. & Tel. Corp., \[\*182\] supra](#).

<sup>36</sup> While the majority of the Plaintiffs' claims are timely, those claims, which arise more than four years before this action was commenced, require proof of fraudulent concealment if they are to remain viable. See, Title 15 U.S.C. § 15b ("any action to enforce any cause of action under sections 15 or 15a of this title shall be forever barred unless commenced within four years after the cause of action was accrued."). As the District Court has previously explained, "the doctrine of fraudulent concealment requires plaintiffs to show (1) defendants concealed the conduct complained of and (2) despite the exercise of due diligence, plaintiffs failed to discover the facts that form the basis of their claim." In re Potash Antitrust Litigation, 159 F.R.D. 682, 698-99 \(D. Minn. 1995\). Nevertheless, since we have found that an inference of conspiracy is not reasonable, there cannot be a concealment of that which does not exist. Accordingly, we do not reach the Defendants' Statute of Limitations defense.

The Plaintiffs' claim, for piercing Rio Algom's corporate veil, is equally without merit. First, evidence that Rio Algom received monthly summaries from PCA, and that it participated in a merger discussion between PCA and Kalium, reveals nothing more than a normal parent-subsidiary relationship and, therefore, such conduct cannot, legitimately, constitute a basis for making Rio Algom responsible for PCA's independent, corporate actions. See, e.g., Lowell Staats Mining Co. v. Pioneer Uravan, Inc., 878 F.2d 1259, 1264 \(10th Cir. 1989\). Moreover, under these circumstances, HN29↑ a corporation's inaccurate description, of its relationship with a related corporation, cannot justify piercing the corporate veil. See, e.g., Fletcher v. Atex, Inc., 68 F.3d 1451, 1460 \(2d Cir. 1995\) (statements describing subsidiary as a division and as a business unit not evidence that the two companies operated as a "single corporate entity"). In sum, the Plaintiffs have failed to demonstrate "the substantial reasons' necessary to disregard the presumption that a subsidiary is a legally separate entity from its parent." H.J., Inc. v. International Tel. & Tel. Corp., supra, quoting [Contractors, \[\*183\] Laborers, Teamsters & Engin. v. Hroch, 757 F.2d 184, 190 \(8th Cir. 1985\)](#) (substantial reasons to justify veil piercing involve undercapitalization, failure to follow corporate formalities, intermingling of finances, promotion of fraud or illegality, and sham existence to shield liability); see also, Cooper v. Lakewood Engineering and Mfg. Co., 874 F. Supp. 947, 955-56 \(D. Minn. 1994\) (similar factors cited under Minnesota law), aff'd, 45 F.3d 243 \(8th Cir. 1995\). Accordingly, we find no basis to hold Rio Algom accountable, even if PCA had engaged in price complicity, as the plaintiffs have alleged.

With respect to PPG, the defense of nonliability is premised upon its claim that it withdrew from the purported conspiracy when it sold Kalium, in November of 1987. Since the Plaintiffs did not file this action within four years of that date, PPG maintains that the Plaintiffs' claims are barred on Statute of Limitations grounds. We find this argument to have merit.

HN30↑ A conspiracy "is presumed to exist until there has been an affirmative showing that it has terminated, and its members continue to be conspirators until there has been an affirmative showing that they have withdrawn." [\[\*184\] United States v. Edwards, 994 F.2d 417, 421 \(8th Cir. 1993\)](#), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 1048 (1994), quoting United States v. Lewis, 759 F.2d 1316, 1343 \(8th Cir. 1985\), cert. denied 474 U.S. 994 (1985). Accordingly, [\[\*1391\]](#) "the statute of limitations does not begin to run on a co-conspirator until the final act in furtherance of the conspiracy has occurred or until a co-conspirator withdraws from the conspiracy." United States v. Reed, 980 F.2d 1568, 1584 \(11th Cir. 1993\), cert. denied, 509 U.S. 932 (1993).

In United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 438 U.S. 422, 464, 57 L. Ed. 2d 854, 98 S. Ct. 2864 \(1978\), the Supreme Court stated: HN31↑ affirmative acts inconsistent with the object of the conspiracy and communicated in a manner reasonably calculated to reach co-conspirators have generally been regarded as sufficient to establish withdrawal or abandonment." While the mere cessation of activities may not be sufficient to activate the period of limitations, a conspirator "need not take action to stop, obstruct or interfere with the conspiracy in order to withdraw from it." United States v. Lowell, 649 F.2d 950, 957 \(3rd Cir. 1981\); see also, United States v. Granados, 962 F.2d 767, 773 \(8th Cir. 1992\) (citation omitted) (To withdraw from a conspiracy, a conspirator "must take affirmative action, either making a clean breast to the authorities or communicating his withdrawal in a manner reasonably calculated to reach co-conspirators.").

Based upon the Record before us, we conclude that, by selling its interest in Kalium, PPG not only severed its connection with the potash industry, but it did so in a manner that was reasonably expected to adequately notify all of the alleged co-conspirators. The record reveals that the sale of Kalium, by PPG, was widely publicized in trade and financial publications, including Green Markets and the Wall Street Journal. Indeed, the unrebutted testimony of the salespersons, and of the executives, from all of the alleged co-conspirators, confirms their knowledge that PPG had sold Kalium. See, Portions of Deposition Testimony, attached as Exhibit 8, PPG's Memorandum in Support of Motion for Summary Judgment, Affidavit of Kathryn M. Walker ("PPG Memo.Aff.").

The Plaintiffs assertions to the contrary are not persuasive. First, the Plaintiffs argue that this Court's prior recommendation, that denied PPG's [\[\*186\]](#) Motion to Dismiss, under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\), Federal Rules of Civil

Procedure, controls our ruling on PPG's present Motion. Of course, the argument is frivolous, at best, for it hopelessly ignores the core distinctions between the respective dispositive Motions. As the Supreme Court recently reiterated, HN32 [Motions to Dismiss are directed to the sufficiency of the allegations in the Complaint, whereas, on Motions for Summary Judgment, the Court looks to the evidence before it. Behrens v. Pelletier, supra at 840. Moreover, the case upon which the Plaintiffs' rely, for the proposition that a sale of a business does not effect a withdrawal -- United States v. Sax, 39 F.3d 1380 (7th Cir. 1994) -- is distinguishable. Admittedly, the defendant in Sax sold his drug distribution business, but the evidence disclosed that the payment for that business was contingent upon future drug sales, and further, that he continued to receive proceeds from those drug sales. Id. at 1387. In contrast, it is uncontested that PPG never sold potash, or received any financial benefit from the sale of potash, after the date that Kalium was sold. See, Affidavit of Aziz Giga at PP 4-5, attached to [\[\*\*187\] PPG Memo](#). Indeed, this case is more in line with our Court of Appeals decision in Krause v. Perryman, 827 F.3d 346 (8th Cir. 1987). There, the Court concluded that, by producing unrebutted evidence that he had "sold all his stock and resigned as president of [the conspiring enterprise]," the defendant in a civil RICO case was entitled to Summary Judgment on the ground that he had effectively withdrawn from the conspiracy. Id. at 351. Therefore, we can find no basis, on the Record before us, to impute Kalium's involvement in the alleged conspiracy to PPG.

For these reasons, we recommend that Rio Algom's and PPG's Motions for Summary Judgment be granted, even if the Court should reject the Recommendation that Summary Judgment be granted in favor of all of the Defendants.

WHEREFORE, It is --

RECOMMENDED:

1. That the Motion of PCA and Rio Algom for Summary Judgment [Docket No. 512] be granted.
- [\[\*1392\]](#) 2. That Kalium's Motion for Summary Judgment [Docket No. 516] be granted.
3. That Noranda's Motion for Summary Judgment [Docket No. 519] be granted.
4. That Cominco's Motion for Summary Judgment [Docket No. 522] be granted.
5. That the Joint Motion of the Defendants for [\[\*\*188\]](#) Summary Judgment [Docket No. 525] be granted.
6. That IMC's Motion for Summary Judgment [Docket No. 527] be granted.
7. That PPG's Motion for Summary Judgment [Docket No. 530] be granted.
8. That the Motion of New Mexico Potash and Eddy Potash for Summary Judgment [Docket No. 534] be granted.

Raymond L. Erickson

UNITED STATES MAGISTRATE JUDGE

NOTICE

Pursuant to Rule 6\(a\), Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, D. Minn. LR1.1(f), and D. Minn. LR72.1(c)(2), any party may object to this Report and Recommendation by filing with the Clerk of Court, and by serving upon all parties by no later than September 30, 1996, a writing which specifically identifies those portions of the Report to which objections are made and the bases of those objections. Failure to comply with this procedure shall operate as a forfeiture of the objecting party's right to seek review in the Court of Appeals.

If the consideration of the objections requires a review of a transcript of a Hearing, then the party making the objections shall timely order and file a complete transcript of that Hearing by no later than September 30, 1996, unless all interested parties stipulate that the District [\[\*\*189\]](#) Court is not required by Title 28 U.S.C. § 636 to review the transcript in order to resolve all of the objections made.

APPENDIX A ## LIST OF IDENTITIES

(Dates indicate beginning of tenure at position, if known.)

PCS/PCS Sales (PCS Sales Subsidiary)
Rolf Holzkaemper	President, PCS
Charles Childers	President, CEO, PCS, March, 1987
William Doyle	President, PCS Sales, March, 1987
Carlos Smith	Director of U.S. Sales, PCS Sales
Steve Gillette	National Accounts Manager, PCS Sales
Gary Snyder	Account Manager, PCS Sales
Jerry Jackson	Dir. of Natl. Accounts / Field Sales, PCS Sales
Kalium
Joseph Sullivan	Purchased Kalium in 1987, Chairman of Vigoro
Jay Proops	Purchased Kalium in 1987, Vice-Chair of Vigoro
Clifford Kelly	President, 1988
John Huber	President, 1991
Robert Turner	Vice President of Sales
C.S. MacKay	Officer Responsible for Production
Sam Clark	Sales Representative
IMC
Billie Turner	President, CEO
Christopher Williams	Senior Vice President, Wholesale Marketing
Steve Hoffman	Senior Vice President, Sales
Richard Hedberg	Executive Vice President
Herman Wittje	Vice President, Marketing
NORANDA
William Deeks	President, CEO
John Gordon	Executive Vice President
George Jones	Executive Vice President
David Westlake	Unidentified
Mike Zalac	Responsible for Transportation Matters

[**190]

PCA
Robert Connochie	President
William Ayers	Director of International Sales and Marketing
John Ripperger	Vice President Marketing and Sales
J.P. Welch	Western Regional Manager
James Brown	Eastern Regional Office
	Cominco
John Anderson	President, CEO,
Dale Massie	Vice President, Marketing
David Benusa	Vice President, Regional Sales Manager
Ben Zimmerman	District Manager
	New Mexico Potash/Eddy
Dean McWilliams	Exec. Vice President, 1988; President, 1992
Dick Marshall	Sales Representative, 1991

954 F. Supp. 1334, *1392Â¹996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14981, **190

PCA

Pat Tubbs

Sales Representative

---

End of Document

Stewart Glass & Mirror v. U.S.A. Glas

United States District Court for the Eastern District of Texas, Beaumont Division

September 16, 1996, Decided ; September 16, 1996, Opinion Filed

Case No. 1:95-CV-813

Reporter

940 F. Supp. 1026 *; 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13940 **

STEWART GLASS & MIRROR, INC., ET AL., Plaintiffs, v. U.S.A. GLAS, INC., ET AL., Defendants.

Disposition: [**1] Defendants' motions to dismiss with respect to Plaintiffs' third, fifth, and seventh causes of action GRANTED and remaining causes of action DENIED. Plaintiffs' third, fifth, and seventh causes of action DISMISSED.

Core Terms

---

insurance company, monopolization, glass, Defendants', antitrust, conspiracy, shops, competitors, prices, boycott, cause of action, repair, preferred provider, Sherman Act, insureds, market power, anti trust law, repair and replacement, underwritten, contracts, tortious interference, motion to dismiss, customers, restraint of trade, probability, concerted, consumers, harming, rates, flat

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN1 [down arrow] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure provides that a party may move a court to dismiss an action for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. On motion under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\), the court must decide whether the facts alleged, if true, would entitle the plaintiff to some legal remedy. Dismissal is proper only if there is either (1) the lack of a cognizable legal theory or (2) the absence of sufficient facts alleged under a cognizable legal theory. Unless a Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion is converted to a summary judgment motion, the court cannot consider material outside the complaint. The court must accept as true all material allegations in the complaint as well as any reasonable inferences to be drawn from them. The well-pleaded facts must be reviewed in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. A plaintiff, however, must allege specific facts, not conclusory allegations. Conclusory allegations and unwarranted deductions of fact are not admitted as true. A pleading, however, need not specify in exact detail every possible theory of recovery -- it must only give the defendant fair notice of what the plaintiff's claim is and the grounds upon which it rests.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN2 [down arrow] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

940 F. Supp. 1026, *1026A 996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13940, **1

A complaint should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief. The motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim is viewed with disfavor and is rarely granted.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN3 Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure must be read in conjunction with Rule 8(a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, which sets forth the requirements for pleading a claim in federal court and calls for a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief. The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure erect a powerful presumption against rejecting pleadings for failure to state a claim. Rule 8 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure fosters that policy by sweeping aside the hypertechnical pleading rules that once defeated many an unwary but meritorious claimant. A plaintiff's complaint ordinarily need only be a short and plain statement that gives the defendant notice of what the claim is and the grounds upon which it rests. Rule 8 indicates that a complaint need only set out a generalized statement of facts from which defendant will be able to frame a responsive pleading.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN4 Sherman Act, Scope

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

HN5 Sherman Act, Claims

The elements required to state a 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 claim are: (1) the existence of a conspiracy (2) affecting interstate commerce (3) that imposes an unreasonable restraint of trade. To satisfy the first element, pleadings must contain charges of the defendants' conspiracy and factual allegations that would support such a claim. To satisfy the second element, an interstate impact need not be intentional but, rather, may be indirect or fortuitous. An illegal restraint of trade that has a market wide effect on the output or price of goods or services is sufficient to affect interstate commerce. With respect to the third element, although most restraints are analyzed pursuant to a rule of reason, some trade agreements are so egregiously anti-competitive that they are conclusively presumed illegal without further examination.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN6 Sherman Act, Scope

A preferred provider contract between a buyer and a seller generally does not, without more, appear to violate the antitrust laws at all. Only if such an agreement contains restrictions on one party's activities other than those involved in the immediate purchase and sale does the possibility of a Sherman Act violation arise.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN7 Sherman Act, Scope

A preferred provider agreement may violate the antitrust laws if such an agreement contains restrictions on one party's activities other than those involved in the immediate purchase and sale. A preferred provider agreement may illegally restrain trade if the parties to the agreement engage in some concerted action or the purchaser abuses its buying power. An illegal type of concerted action could be a boycott by insurance companies in which they conspire with repair shops to refuse to deal with other competing repair shops.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

HN8 Sherman Act, Scope

A boycott is a restraint of trade within the meaning of § 1 of the Sherman Act. Group boycotts, or concerted refusals by traders to deal with other traders, have long been held to be in the forbidden category. Boycott violations have generally involved joint efforts by a firm or firms to disadvantage competitors by either directly denying or persuading or coercing suppliers or customers to deny relationships the competitors need in the competitive struggle.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

HN9 Clayton Act, Claims

The Clayton Act authorizes treble-damage suits for any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws. 15 U.S.C.S. § 15. Private plaintiffs must establish standing to recover damages for antitrust violations. Standing is a threshold issue determinable from the allegations of the complaint. Antitrust injury is an essential element of standing without which a plaintiff cannot recover.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Claims

HN10 Clayton Act, Claims

Antitrust injury is injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. In pleading an antitrust claim for damages under § 4 of the Clayton Act, therefore, a plaintiff must allege, either directly or inferentially, that he has suffered an anticompetitive injury as a result of the defendants' antitrust violation. The plaintiff must allege that the defendant's antitrust violation was the cause-in-fact of the plaintiff's injury or that but for the violation, the injury would not have occurred.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN11 Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

In the context of a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, the court must determine whether any factual theory alleged, if true, would entitle a plaintiff to some legal remedy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > Damages

HN12 [ ] Sherman Act, Claims

The antitrust injury doctrine prevents losses that stem from competition from supporting suits by private plaintiffs. In particular, the antitrust injury doctrine does not allow competitors to recover damages for any conspiracy to charge higher than competitive prices because competitors stand to gain from any conspiracy to raise the market price.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN13 [ ] Sherman Act, Claims

Under 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, it is illegal to monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce. To state a claim for monopolization, a plaintiff must allege: (i) a relevant product and geographic market; (ii) the possession of monopoly power in such market; and (iii) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN14 [ ] Sherman Act, Claims

To state a claim for attempted monopolization, a plaintiff must allege: (i) a relevant product and geographic market; (ii) a specific intent to monopolize that market; (iii) exclusionary or predatory conduct in furtherance of the attempted monopolization; and (iv) a dangerous probability that, absent judicial intervention, the attempt will be successful.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN15 [ ] Sherman Act, Claims

To state a claim for conspiracy to monopolize, a plaintiff must allege: (i) the existence of a combination or conspiracy; (ii) an overt act in furtherance of the combination or conspiracy; (iii) substantial amount of interstate commerce effected; and (iv) specific intent to monopolize.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN16 [ ] Sherman Act, Claims

940 F. Supp. 1026, *1026A 996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13940, **1

The elements of monopolization, attempted monopolization, and conspiracy to monopolize vary, but they all share a common requirement that a defendant must have either monopoly power or the dangerous probability of acquiring it.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN17 [blue download icon] Scope, Monopolization Offenses

Monopoly power is the power to control price or exclude competition. In an attempted monopolization case, a defendant must have some legally significant share of the market before he approaches the level of dangerous probability of success condemned by the attempt provision of 15 U.S.C.S. § 2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN18 [blue download icon] Sherman Act, Claims

When two or more persons agree to monopolize, they have committed the offense of joint monopolization provided that they have jointly acquired monopoly power. Joint monopolization claims do not require that the Plaintiffs allege that each Defendant has at least 50 percent market share.

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Contracts > General Overview

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Prospective Advantage > General Overview

HN19 [blue download icon] Commercial Interference, Contracts

Texas law protects existing and prospective contracts from interference.

Torts > ... > Contracts > Intentional Interference > Elements

HN20 [blue download icon] Intentional Interference, Elements

The elements for a cause of action for tortious interference with an existing contract are: (1) the existence of a contract subject to interference; (2) a willful and intentional act of interference; (3) such act was a proximate cause of damage; and (4) actual damage or loss occurred.

Torts > ... > Business Relationships > Intentional Interference > Elements

Torts > ... > Contracts > Intentional Interference > Elements

HN21 [blue download icon] Intentional Interference, Elements

The elements of tortious interference with prospective contract or business relationships are: (1) a reasonable probability that the parties would have entered into a contractual relationship; (2) an intentional and malicious act by the defendant that prevented the relationship from occurring, with the purpose of harming the plaintiff; (3) the defendant lacked privilege or justification to do the act; and (4) actual harm or damage resulted from the defendant's interference.

940 F. Supp. 1026, *1026 (996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13940, **1

Torts > ... > Contracts > Intentional Interference > Defenses

Torts > ... > Business Relationships > Intentional Interference > Defenses

HN22 [] Intentional Interference, Defenses

Under the defense of legal justification or excuse, one is privileged to interfere with another's contract (1) if it is done in a bona fide exercise of his own rights, or (2) if he has an equal or superior right in the subject matter to that of the other party.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > General Overview

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Torts > ... > Business Relationships > Intentional Interference > Defenses

HN23 [] Defenses, Demurrs & Objections, Affirmative Defenses

A party is privileged to cause a third party to terminate business relations with the party's competitor to obtain future benefits by offering the third party better contract terms than its competitors. The privilege of legal justification or excuse in the interference of contractual relations is an affirmative defense upon which the defendant has the burden of proof.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Torts > ... > Contracts > Intentional Interference > Elements

HN24 [] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

To survive a motion to dismiss a claim for tortious interference with existing and prospective contracts, under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Plaintiffs are not required to allege that Defendants interfered with specific contracts.

Insurance Law > Industry Practices > Insurance Company Operations > General Overview

HN25 [] Industry Practices, Insurance Company Operations

Article 5.07-1 of the Texas Insurance Code regulates the conduct of insurance companies, not glass repair or replacement companies.

Insurance Law > Industry Practices > Insurance Company Operations > General Overview

HN26 [blue document icon] Industry Practices, Insurance Company Operations

See Tex. Ins. Code Ann. art. 5.07-1\(a\) (Texas).

Insurance Law > Industry Practices > Insurance Company Operations > General Overview

HN27 [blue document icon] Industry Practices, Insurance Company Operations

Tex. Ins. Code Ann. art. 5.07-1 does not grant a private right of action.

Counsel: For STEWART GLASS & MIRROR INC, plaintiff: Jack Nolan Price, Law Office Of Jack N Price, Austin, TX Travis. J Thad Heartfield, Jr, Heartfield & McGinnis, Beaumont, TX. David Cohen, Law Office of David Cohen, Austin, TX.

For TEXAS MOBIL AUTO GLASS INC, plaintiff: Jack Nolan Price, (See above). J Thad Heartfield, Jr, (See above). David Cohen, (See above).

For RLJ INC dba A-1 Glass Co, plaintiff: Jack Nolan Price, (See above). J Thad Heartfield, Jr, (See above). David Cohen (See above).

For FREDDY'S AUTO GLASS & MIRROR INC, plaintiff: Jack Nolan Price, (See above). J Thad Heartfield, Jr, (See above). David Cohen, (See above).

For NEDERLAND GLASS CO INC, plaintiff: Jack Nolan Price, (See above). J Thad Heartfield, Jr, (See above). David Cohen, (See above).

For LONE STAR GLASS INC, plaintiff: Jack Nolan Price, (See above). J Thad Heartfield, Jr, (See above). David Cohen, (See above).

For AUTO GLASS SPECIALISTS INC, plaintiff: Jack Nolan Price, [**2] (See above). J Thad Heartfield, Jr, (See above). David Cohen, (See above).

For ALLIED SAN JACINTO GLASS CO, plaintiff: Jack Nolan Price, (See above). J Thad Heartfield, Jr, (See above). David Cohen, (See above).

For U S AUTO GLASS DISCOUNT CENTERS INC, defendant: J Michael Baldwin, David G Patent, Baker & Botts, Houston, TX Harris. Robert K Niewijk, Joel G Chefitz, Katten Muchin & Zavis, Chicago, IL.

For SAFELITE GLASS CORP, defendant: David W Ledyard, Strong Pipkin Nelson & Bissell, Beaumont, TX Jefferson.

For HARMON GLASS COMPANY INC, defendant: Walter Joshua Crawford, Jr, Wells, Peyton, Beard, Greenberg, Hunt & Crawford, Beaumont, TX. Christopher K Larus, John A Cotter, Larkin Hoffman Daly & Lindgren Ltd, Bloomington, MN.

For WINDSHIELDS AMERICA INC, defendant: David J Beck, Lonny J Hoffman, L Nicole Batey, Beck Redden & Secrest, Houston, TX Harris. Thomas A Doyle, Donald J Hayden, Baker & McKenzie, Chicago, IL.

For USA GLAS INC, defendant: J Michael Baldwin, David G Patent, Baker & Botts, Houston, TX Harris. Robert K Niewijk, Joel G Chefitz, Katten Muchin & Zavis, Chicago, IL.

Judges: RICHARD A. SCHELL, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

Opinion by: RICHARD A. SCHELL

---

Opinion

[**3] [*1029] MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART DEFENDANTS' MOTIONS TO DISMISS PLAINTIFFS' SECOND AMENDED COMPLAINT

Before the court are Defendants' motions to dismiss Plaintiffs' Second Amended Complaint. Plaintiffs filed a collective response. Thereafter, two Defendants filed replies, and Plaintiffs again filed a response. Upon consideration of the motions, responses, replies, and memoranda of law, this court is of the opinion that Defendants' motions to dismiss should be granted in part and denied in part.

I. BACKGROUND

Plaintiffs have sued Defendants for violations of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, tortious interference with existing and prospective contracts, and violation of the Texas Insurance Code, Art. 5.07-1. Plaintiffs and Defendants are competitors in the business of repair and replacement of auto glass, and residential and commercial flat glass. Plaintiffs are eight Texas corporations (hereinafter referred to collectively as "Plaintiffs"). Defendants are four foreign corporations doing business in Texas: U.S.A. Glas, Inc. ("U.S.A. Glas"), Safelite Glass Corp. ("Safelite"), Harmon Glass Company, Inc. ("Harmon"), and Windshields America, Inc. [**4] ("Windshields America").

[*1030] In their Second Amended Complaint, Plaintiffs allege that Defendants conspired with various insurance companies to dominate and control the business of replacement and repair of auto glass and flat glass underwritten by insurance companies in Texas. Pls.' Second Am. Compl. P 7. Plaintiffs allege that Defendants cooperated with one another on many aspects of their business. For the sake of brevity, the court will mention only a few examples. First, Defendants allegedly agreed among themselves to divide and allocate customers and territories. Id. PP 8, 9(a)-(b). Second, Defendants allegedly exchanged information on many aspects of business operations such as claims, pricing, and costs. Id. PP 9(c)-(f). Third, Plaintiffs claim that Defendants cooperated in marketing through utilizing computerized-rotating telephone systems and sharing customer service representatives. Id. PP 9(g)-(l). And fourth, Defendants allegedly agreed to refer business to non-Defendant glass shops only on certain conditions. Id. P 10.

Plaintiffs further allege that Defendants control (1) over fifty percent of the auto glass repair and replacement business underwritten by [**5] insurance companies in Texas and (2) over fifty percent of the residential and commercial flat glass repair and replacement business underwritten by insurance companies in Texas. Id. P 11. Plaintiffs allege that this conspiracy by Defendants and unnamed insurance companies has reduced competition and injured Plaintiffs in the form of lost profits. Id. PP 12, 22. Plaintiffs define the relevant market as the business of repair and replacement of (1) auto glass underwritten by insurance companies in Texas and (2) residential and commercial flat glass underwritten by insurance companies in Texas. Id. P 13.

Plaintiffs allege seven causes of action. In their first cause of action, Plaintiffs allege that Defendants violated Section 1 of the Sherman Act by entering into agreements that unreasonably restrained trade. Id. P 14. In their second cause of action, Plaintiffs allege that Defendants violated Section 2 of the Sherman Act by monopolizing, attempting to monopolize, and conspiring to monopolize the glass repair and replacement market through willfully acquired monopoly power. Id. P 15. In their third cause of action, Plaintiffs allege that Defendants divided and allocated [**6] customers in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. Id. P 16. In their fourth cause of action, Plaintiffs allege that Defendants unlawfully boycotted Plaintiffs by denying them referrals from insurance companies. Id. P 17. In their fifth cause of action, Plaintiffs allege that Defendants fixed prices. Id. P 18. In their sixth cause of action, Plaintiffs allege that Defendants tortiously interfered with Plaintiffs' existing and prospective contracts. Id. P 19. In their seventh cause of action, Plaintiffs allege that Defendants violated Article 5.07-1 of the Texas Insurance Code, which prohibits an insurer from limiting its coverage under a policy covering damage to a motor vehicle by limiting the beneficiary of the policy from selecting a person or shop to repair damage to the motor vehicle covered under the policy. Id. P 20.

II. APPLICABLE STANDARDS FOR RULE 12(b)(6)

HN1 [↑] Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) provides that a party may move a court to dismiss an action for "failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted." On motion under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\), the court must decide whether the facts alleged, if true, would entitle the plaintiff to some legal remedy. Conley v. Gibson, I<sup>\*\*71</sup> 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 \(1957\). Dismissal is proper only if there is either (1) "the lack of a cognizable legal theory" or (2) "the absence of sufficient facts alleged under a cognizable legal theory." Balistreri v. Pacifica Police Dept., 901 F.2d 696, 699 \(9th Cir. 1990\). Unless a Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion is converted to a summary judgment motion, the court cannot consider material outside the complaint. See Powe v. Chicago, 664 F.2d 639, 642 \(7th Cir. 1981\). The court must accept as true all material allegations in the complaint as well as any reasonable inferences to be drawn from them. Kaiser Aluminum & Chem. Sales, Inc. v. Avondale Shipyards, Inc., 677 F.2d 1045, 1050 \(5th Cir. 1982\), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1105, 74 L. Ed. 2d 953, 103 S. Ct. 729 (1983). The well-pleaded facts must be reviewed in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. Piotrowski v. City of Houston, 51 F.3d 512, 514 I<sup>\*1031</sup> \(5th Cir. 1995\). A plaintiff, however, must allege specific facts, not conclusory allegations. Elliott v. Foufas, 867 F.2d 877, 881 \(5th Cir. 1989\). Conclusory allegations and unwarranted deductions of fact are not admitted as true. Guidry v. Bank of I<sup>\*81</sup> LaPlace, 954 F.2d 278, 281 \(5th Cir. 1992\). A pleading, however, "need not specify in exact detail every possible theory of recovery--it must only 'give the defendant fair notice of what the plaintiff's claim is and the grounds upon which it rests.'" Thrift v. Hubbard, 44 F.3d 348, 356 \(5th Cir. 1995\) (quoting Conley, 355 U.S. at 47). HN2 [↑] "[A] complaint should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief." Conley, 355 U.S. at 45-46; Kaiser Aluminum, 677 F.2d at 1050. "The motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim is viewed with disfavor and is rarely granted." Id. at 1050 (quoting 5A CHARLES A. WRIGHT & ARTHUR R. MILLER, FEDERAL PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE § 1357 (1969)).

HN3 [↑] "[Rule 12\(b\)\(6\)] must be read in conjunction with Rule 8\(a\), which sets forth the requirements for pleading a claim in federal court and calls for 'a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief.'" WRIGHT & MILLER, supra, § 1356; see also Thrift, 44 F.3d at 356 n.13. "The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure erect [<sup>**9</sup>] a powerful presumption against rejecting pleadings for failure to state a claim." Auster Oil & Gas, Inc. v. Stream, 764 F.2d 381, 386 \(5th Cir. 1985\). Rule 8 fosters that policy by sweeping aside the hypertechnical pleading rules that once defeated many an unwary but meritorious claimant." Id. "A plaintiff's complaint ordinarily need only be a short and plain statement that gives the defendant notice of what the claim is and the grounds upon which it rests." Colle v. Brazos County, 981 F.2d 237, 243 \(5th Cir. 1993\). Rule 8 indicates that a complaint need only set out a generalized statement of facts from which defendant will be able to frame a responsive pleading." WRIGHT & MILLER, supra, § 1357.

III. DISCUSSION

The issue for determination is whether Plaintiffs have alleged sufficient facts for their antitrust and state law theories of recovery. Defendants collectively make a number of arguments that Plaintiffs have failed to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. First, Defendants argue that Plaintiffs lack standing to bring this antitrust action because their complaint fails to allege that they suffered "antitrust injury" from Defendants' acts. Second, [<sup>**10</sup>] Defendants argue that Plaintiffs have not alleged facts showing that any Defendant possesses or has a dangerous probability of acquiring market power. Third, with respect to Plaintiffs' tortious interference claims, Defendants argue (1) that Plaintiffs have not alleged any specific contracts into which they were likely to have entered and (2) that the "interference" of which Plaintiffs complain is merely the privileged business-generation of their competitors. Fourth, with respect to Plaintiffs' claim under the Texas Insurance Code, Defendants argue (1) that the Code applies only to insurers rather than competing glass providers such as Defendants and (2) that the Code does not allow for a private right of action.

A. Section 1 of the Sherman Act

1. Section 1 Conspiracy Standards Relating to Preferred Provider Agreements

Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides that HN4 [↑] "every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1. HN5 [↑] "The elements required to state a Section 1 claim are: (1) the existence of a conspiracy (2) affecting [**11] interstate commerce (3) that imposes an unreasonable restraint of trade." Ancar v. Sara Plasma, Inc., 964 F.2d 465, 469 \(5th Cir. 1992\). "To satisfy the first element, pleadings must contain charges of the defendants' conspiracy and factual allegations that would support such a claim." Id. To satisfy the second element, an "interstate impact need not be intentional but, rather, may be indirect or fortuitous." Id. An illegal restraint of trade that has a [*1032] market wide effect on the output or price of goods or services is sufficient to affect interstate commerce. See Summit Health, Ltd. v. Pinhas, 500 U.S. 322, 331-32, 114 L. Ed. 2d 366, 111 S. Ct. 1842 \(1991\). With respect to the third element, "although most restraints are analyzed pursuant to a 'rule of reason,' some trade agreements are so egregiously anti-competitive that they are conclusively presumed illegal without further examination." Ancar, 964 F.2d at 470. Accordingly, the nature of the alleged agreements between and among the Defendants will determine whether to apply rule of reason or per se scrutiny.

Defendants characterize the agreements between themselves and insurance companies as preferred provider [**12] agreements. Mem. in Supp. of Windshields America's Mot. to Dismiss at 2-4. Defendants correctly state that many preferred provider agreements have withstood antitrust scrutiny. A leading case is Quality Auto Body, Inc. v. Allstate Insurance Co., 660 F.2d 1195 \(7th Cir. 1981\), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 1020, 72 L. Ed. 2d 138, 102 S. Ct. 1717 (1982). In this case, Quality Auto Body ("Quality") brought a Section 1 action against two insurance companies that provided coverage for auto repair work. Id. at 1197. Quality alleged that the insurance companies violated Section 1 "by processing damage claims in a manner which fixes the price Quality can charge for automobile repairs and by boycotting Quality if it fails to adhere to the defendants' price." Id. Under the policies issued by the insurance companies, insureds who needed automobile repair could select their own body shop or go to a shop selected by the insurance companies. Id. at 1197-98. Regardless of the insured's choice, the insurance companies would pay only the amount that they determined to be reasonable for the repairs. This determination was based on market surveys of the prevailing competitive rates. Id. [**13] If an insured used a shop that charged higher than the predetermined competitive rates, the insured would have to pay the difference from his or her own pocket. Id.

Quality was one of the few shops that refused to lower its repair rates to the "competitive rates" as determined by the insurance companies. Quality Auto Body, 660 F.2d at 1198. In its Section 1 action against the insurance companies, Quality argued that the insurance companies fixed prices by refusing to pay more than what they determined to be the prevailing competitive rates. Id. at 1199. Quality also argued that the defendants' practices amounted to a boycott in violation of Section 1. Id. The Seventh Circuit explained Quality's boycott contention:

Quality contends that the defendants maintain lists of body repair shops which agree to charge the rates established by the defendants and direct insureds to these preferred shops for automobile repairs. According to Quality, these vertical agreements not only reinforce defendants' price structure but also effectively withhold business from shops which do not participate in defendants' pricing program. Quality claims that defendants' action amounts [**14] to a boycott of non-conforming shops . . . .

Id. at 1199.

The district court had granted summary judgment in favor of the defendant insurers. Quality Auto Body, 660 F.2d at 1197. For purposes of the cross-motions for summary judgment, the district court assumed that the defendants had entered into preferred provider agreements with automobile repair shops regarding the price of repair. Id. at 1199. "But after analyzing these agreements under the rule of reason, the [district] court determined, as a matter of law, that such provider agreements do not, in and of themselves, violate the Sherman Act." Id. "The [district] court [also] found no factual basis to support a holding that defendants engaged in an illegal boycott of plaintiff's business." Id.

The Seventh Circuit affirmed the district court's decision. The Seventh Circuit scrutinized the agreements under the rule-of-reason analysis noting that "no court which has examined the antitrust implications of insurance provider agreements has used a per se approach." Quality Auto Body, 660 F.2d at 1203. The court observed: "The vertical agreements, to the extent they exist here, are between buyers [**15] (the insurance companies) [*1033] with apparently extensive market power and sellers (the body shops) with what, in comparison, seems slight market power." Id. The court assumed that the defendants had entered into preferred provider agreements with automobile repair shops. Under the terms of these agreements, if a shop performs work at the "competitive rates" as determined by the insurance companies, the shop would be "placed on a 'preferred' list and receive a steady stream of referrals from claim adjusters." Id.

940 F. Supp. 1026, *1033L 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13940, **15

The court determined that under certain circumstances these preferred provider agreements were legal under Section 1. The court held:

HN6 [↑] A contract of this nature between a buyer (the insurance company) and a seller (the body shop) generally does not, without more, appear to violate the antitrust laws at all. Only if such an agreement contains restrictions on one party's activities other than those involved in the immediate purchase and sale does the possibility of a Sherman Act violation arise.

Quality Auto Body, 660 F.2d at 1203 (italics in original). The court's rationale was that preferred provider agreements have pro-competitive effects that inure [**16] to the benefit of consumers:

In refusing to pay a price higher than what they regard as the competitive rate, defendants [insurance companies] have not imposed any restriction on the repair shops beyond the immediate sales transaction. Defendants are simply taking steps to insure the best terms available in the marketplace and firmly indicating their position on price to the seller (the body shops). As the Third Circuit explained in Travelers Insurance Co. v. Blue Cross of Western Pennsylvania, 481 F.2d 80 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 414 U.S. 1093, 38 L. Ed. 2d 550, 94 S. Ct. 724 . . . "this pressure encourages [suppliers] to keep their costs down; and, for its own competitive advantage, [enables the insurer to pass] . . . along the savings thus realized to consumers. To be sure, [the insurer's] initiative makes life harder for commercial competitors. . . . The antitrust laws, however, protect competition, not competitors; and stiff competition is encouraged, not condemned." Id. at 84. Thus, the mere existence of informal (or formal) provider agreements in the instant case, far from establishing a Sherman Act violation, seems merely to show aggressive and competitive [**17] dealing by the insurance companies.
***

These defendants [insurance companies] have an undeniable impact on the price structure of the auto repair market. But much as this impact may contribute to the discomfiture of the body shops, it probably rebounds to the benefit of competition and consumers. In the absence of proof of some concerted action or an abuse of defendants' buying power, the provider agreements do not illegally restrain trade.

Quality Auto Body, 660 F.2d at 1203-204.

The Seventh Circuit also affirmed the district court's decision to grant summary judgment in favor of the insurance companies on the issue of boycotts. "Quality contended that defendants' claims practices prevented plaintiff's shop from effectively competing with other repair shops which are willing to perform work at the prevailing competitive rate and therefore amount to a boycott of plaintiff's business." Id. at 1206. The court found no evidence amounting to a concerted refusal to deal. Id. The court stated: "The uncontested facts establish that neither Allstate nor State Farm has ever refused to deal with Quality. On the contrary, a large portion of Quality's business [**18] is generated by defendants' policyholders and claimants." Id.

Courts also have determined that preferred provider agreements in the medical care industry are legal under the antitrust laws and may have pro-competitive effects. See, e.g., Royal Drug Co. v. Group Life and Health Ins. Co., 737 F.2d 1433, 1438-39 (5th Cir. 1984) (pharmacy agreement), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1160, 83 L. Ed. 2d 925, 105 S. Ct. 912 (1985); Barry v. Blue Cross of California, 805 F.2d 866, 871 (9th Cir. 1986) (physician agreement); Kartell v. Blue Shield of Massachusetts, Inc., 749 F.2d 922, 933 (1st Cir. 1984) (physician agreement), cert. denied, 471 U.S. 1029, 85 L. Ed. 2d 322, 105 S. Ct. 2040, 105 S. Ct. 2049 (1985); Medical Arts Pharmacy of Stamford, Inc. v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield of Connecticut, Inc., 675 F.2d 502, 506 (2d Cir. 1982) (pharmacy agreement); Sausalito Pharmacy, Inc. v. Blue Shield of California, 544 F. Supp. 230, 237 (N.D. Cal. 1981) (pharmacy agreement), aff'd, 677 F.2d 47 (9th Cir.), [*1034] cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1016, 74 L. Ed. 2d 510, 103 S. Ct. 376 (1982).

HN7 [↑] A preferred provider agreement, however, may violate the antitrust laws if "such an agreement [**19] contains restrictions on one party's activities other than those involved in the immediate purchase and sale." Quality

Auto Body, 660 F.2d at 1203 (italics omitted). A preferred provider agreement may illegally restrain trade if the parties to the agreement engage in some concerted action or the purchaser abuses its buying power. Id. at 1204. An illegal type of concerted action could be a boycott by the insurance companies in which they conspire with repair shops to refuse to deal with other competing repair shops. See id. at 1206.

2. Sufficiency of Facts Alleged for Section 1 Violation

In their Second Amended Complaint, Plaintiffs allege that Defendants entered into agreements with insurance companies "to dominate and control the business of replacement and repair of auto glass and flat glass underwritten by the insurance companies in the State of Texas." Pls.' Second Am. Compl. PP 2(e), 7. Plaintiffs also allege that Defendants worked together to sell glass replacement services to insurance companies. Id. P 9(i). Plaintiffs further allege that, in combination and conspiracy, Defendants denied Plaintiffs access to glass repair and replacement business except on particular [**20] terms dictated by Defendants. Id. PP 10, 17.

The court determines that Plaintiffs allege sufficient facts under Section 1 of the Sherman Act to survive a Rule 12(b)(6) motion. Plaintiffs allege that Defendants and insurance companies entered into agreements. With respect to the affecting-interstate-commerce element, Plaintiffs allege that Defendants' agreements have affected competition on a market wide basis in Texas. Pls.' Second Am. Compl. P 12. Plaintiffs also allege that Defendants' agreements impose an unreasonable restraint of trade. Preferred provider agreements between various Defendants and insurance companies may be legal if those agreements are limited to the immediate sales transaction. Quality Auto Body, 660 F.2d at 1203. Plaintiffs, however, allege that Defendants entered into agreements with insurance companies to boycott Plaintiffs. Pls.' Second Am. Compl. PP 2(e), 7, 10, 17. Although Plaintiffs do not explain in detail the precise nature of Defendants' agreements among themselves and with insurance companies, a complaint ordinarily needs to be only a short and plain statement that gives the defendant notice of what the claim is and the grounds upon which [**21] it rests. See FED. R. CIV. P. 8(a); Colle, 981 F.2d at 243.

HN8 [↑] A boycott is a restraint of trade within the meaning of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. F.T.C. v. Superior Court Trial Lawyers Ass'n, 493 U.S. 411, 422, 107 L. Ed. 2d 851, 110 S. Ct. 768 (1990). "Group boycotts, or concerted refusals by traders to deal with other traders, have long been held to be in the forbidden category." Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207, 212, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741, 79 S. Ct. 705 (1959). Boycott violations "have generally involved joint efforts by a firm or firms to disadvantage competitors by either directly denying or persuading or coercing suppliers or customers to deny relationships the competitors need in the competitive struggle." Northwest Wholesale Stationers, Inc. v. Pacific Stationery and Printing Co., 472 U.S. 284, 294, 86 L. Ed. 2d 202, 105 S. Ct. 2613 (1985) (internal quotations and citations omitted). Plaintiffs sufficiently allege that Defendants, in conspiracy with insurance companies, have entered into agreements to boycott or refuse to deal with Plaintiffs. Pls.' Second Am. Compl. PP 2(e), 7, 10, 17.

Defendant U.S.A. Glas argues that "nothing in the [**22] antitrust laws requires a defendant to give to a third party the business it has won, rather than performing the work itself." Mem. in Supp. of U.S.A. Glas's Mot. to Dismiss at 10. Defendants may legally win and keep business that they legitimately earn for themselves through price and quality competition [*1035] or through legitimate preferred provider agreements. But Defendants may not win business through agreements with the insurance companies to misinform a potential glass customer about his or her options for glass repair. These types of agreements may be unreasonable restraints of trade under Section 1 because they would operate to the detriment of consumers. Competition would be harmed if consumers were routed to particular glass repair companies based on factors other than competitive pricing or quality in the marketplace. If such agreements to boycott exist, they may fall into the forbidden category under per se scrutiny. See Superior Court Trial Lawyers Ass'n, 493 U.S. at 433; Royal Drug Co., 737 F.2d at 1436.

3. Antitrust Injury

Defendants argue that Plaintiffs lack standing to bring this antitrust action because the complaint fails to allege that Plaintiffs suffered [**23] "antitrust injury" from Defendants' acts. HNg [↑] The Clayton Act authorizes treble-damage suits for "any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws." 15 U.S.C. § 15. Private plaintiffs must establish standing to recover damages for antitrust violations. Multiflex, Inc. v. Samuel Moore & Co., 709 F.2d 980, 993 \(5th Cir. 1983\), cert. denied, 465 U.S. 1100, 80 L. Ed. 2d 126, 104 S. Ct. 1594 (1984). Standing is a threshold issue determinable from the allegations of the complaint. Transource Int'l, Inc. v. Trinity Indus., Inc., 725 F.2d 274, 280 \(5th Cir. 1984\). Antitrust injury is an essential element of standing without which a plaintiff cannot recover. Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 110 n.5, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427, 107 S. Ct. 484 \(1986\).

HN10 [↑] Antitrust injury is "injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 \(1977\). "In pleading an antitrust claim for damages under section 4 of the Clayton Act, therefore, a plaintiff [**24] must allege, either directly or inferentially, that he has suffered an anticompetitive injury as a result of the defendants' antitrust violation." Mahone v. Addicks Utility Dist., 836 F.2d 921, 939 \(5th Cir. 1988\). The plaintiff must allege that the defendant's antitrust violation was the cause-in-fact of the plaintiff's injury or that "but for" the violation, the injury would not have occurred. O.K. Sand & Gravel, Inc. v. Martin Marietta Technologies, Inc., 36 F.3d 565, 573 \(7th Cir. 1994\).

Plaintiffs sufficiently allege that they have suffered "antitrust injury." Plaintiffs allege that Defendants' conspiracy has reduced competition in the marketplace. Pls.' Second Am. Compl. P 12. Plaintiffs further allege that they have suffered injury in the form of lost profits as a result of Defendants' restraints of trade. Id. P 22. As alleged, Plaintiffs' injury is of the "type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent." Brunswick Corp., 429 U.S. at 489. Antitrust laws were intended to prohibit firms from restraining trade by harming other competitors, which in turn harms consumers by restricting competition, increasing prices, and decreasing output. Anago, Inc. v. Tecnol I\*\*251 Medical Prods. Inc., 976 F.2d 248, 249 \(5th Cir. 1992\), cert. dismissed, 510 U.S. 985, 126 L. Ed. 2d 441, 114 S. Ct. 491 (1993); see also PHILLIP AREEDA & DONALD F. TURNER, **ANTITRUST LAW: AN ANALYSIS OF ANTITRUST PRINCIPLES AND THEIR APPLICATION** PP 103-104 (1978). Plaintiffs also allege that their lost profits were caused by Defendants' unlawful agreements. See Great W. Directories v. Southwestern Bell Tel. Co., 63 F.3d 1378, 1387-88 \(5th Cir. 1995\) (holding that loss of profits caused by exclusionary conduct by a competitor is sufficient for antitrust injury), superseded in part on other grounds, 74 F.3d 613, petition for cert. filed, 135 L. Ed. 2d 1120, 117 S. Ct. 26, 64 U.S.L.W. 3839 (U.S. June 7, 1996) (No. 95-1974).

HN11 [↑] In the context of a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, the court must determine whether any factual theory alleged, if true, would entitle a plaintiff to some legal remedy. Conley, 355 U.S. at 45-46. While Plaintiffs' complaint is short on the details of the alleged boycott, the court is aware that no discovery has [*1036] occurred in this case. After discovery in this case, Plaintiffs will have an opportunity to amend their complaint detailing the alleged agreements and any pernicious effect on [**26] competition. At this stage in the proceedings, however, Plaintiffs have alleged sufficient facts under Section 1 for conspiracy to boycott the Plaintiffs.

4. Section 1 Price Fixing Claim

Defendants argue that Plaintiffs do not have the requisite antitrust injury to bring a Section 1 price fixing claim because any conspiracy by Defendants to raise prices would help Plaintiffs rather than injure them. Mem. in Supp. of U.S.A. Glas's Mot. to Dismiss at 5. Plaintiffs respond: "That Defendants have agreed to charge higher prices certainly harms the public; That they have also agreed to exclude Plaintiffs from the market place harms both Plaintiffs and the public." Pls.' Resp. to Defs.' Reply Briefs in Supp. of their Mots. to Dismiss at 4. HN12 [↑] The antitrust injury doctrine "prevents losses that stem from competition from supporting suits by private plaintiffs." Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 342, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333, 110 S. Ct. 1884 \(1990\). In particular, the antitrust injury doctrine does not allow competitors to "recover damages for any conspiracy . . . to charge higher than competitive prices" because competitors "stand to gain from any conspiracy to raise [**27] the market price." Id. at 337 (quoting Matsushita Elec. Indus. Corp. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 582-83, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 \(1986\)); see also Rockbit Indus. v. Baker Hughes, Inc., 802 F. Supp. 1544, 1548-49 \(S.D. Tex. 1991\) (holding that a competitor lacked standing even if it was the target of the price fixing conspiracy). Because Plaintiffs stand to gain from any conspiracy to raise prices, they do not have the requisite "antitrust injury" necessary to maintain a Section 1 claim for a conspiracy to fix prices at higher levels.

Even if the court were to infer that Plaintiffs' complaint alleged that Defendants were conspiring to fix prices at lower levels, Plaintiffs again would not suffer the requisite antitrust injury. The Supreme Court has stated: "Low prices benefit consumers regardless of how those prices are set, and so long as they are above predatory levels, they do not threaten competition. Hence, they cannot give rise to antitrust injury." Atlantic Richfield Co., 495 U.S. at 340. Plaintiffs have not made any allegations that Defendants set prices at predatory levels.

5. Section 1 Market Division and Allocation Claim

As with their \*\*28 price fixing claim, Plaintiffs do not have the requisite antitrust injury to maintain a Section 1 claim for market division and allocation. Division and allocation agreements between competitors minimize competition because each competitor has agreed not to compete in the other's market. See Palmer v. BRG of Georgia, Inc., 498 U.S. 46, 49-50, 112 L. Ed. 2d 349, 111 S. Ct. 401 \(1990\). Plaintiffs allege that Defendants "unlawfully divided and allocated customers in the relevant market and submarkets in the State of Texas." Pls.' Second Am. Compl. P 16. "[Competitors] cannot recover for a conspiracy to impose nonprice restraints [e.g., division and allocation] that have the effect of either raising market price or limiting output. Such restrictions, though harmful to competition, actually benefit competitors by making supracompetitive pricing more attractive." Matsushita Elec. Indus., 475 U.S. at 583 (emphasis in original). Agreements on price and agreements to divide or allocate markets have the same effect on price, output, and competitors. See Blue Cross & Blue Shield United v. Marshfield Clinic, 65 F.3d 1406, 1415 \(7th Cir. 1995\), cert. denied, 134 L. Ed. 2d 233, I\*\*29 116 S. Ct. 1288 (1996). If, as alleged, Defendants divided and allocated the markets, such action would benefit Plaintiffs. Plaintiffs would face less competition in markets in which Defendants attempted to reduce competition among themselves through division and allocation.

B. Section 2 of the Sherman Act

1. Section 2 Standards for Monopolization, Attempted Monopolization, and Conspiracy to Monopolize

HN13↑ Under Section 2, it is illegal to "monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or [\[\*1037\]](#) combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce." 15 U.S.C. § 2. "To state a claim for monopolization, a plaintiff must allege: (i) a relevant product and geographic market; (ii) the possession of monopoly power in such market; and (iii) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power." Rockbit Indus., 802 F. Supp. at 1550 (citing United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 \(1966\); C.E. Serv., Inc. v. Control Data Corp., 759 F.2d 1241, 1244 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 474 U.S. 1037, 88 L. Ed. 2d 583, 106 S. Ct. 604 (1985)). HN14↑ "To state a claim for attempted monopolization, a plaintiff must [\[\*30\]](#) allege: (i) a relevant product and geographic market; (ii) a specific intent to monopolize that market; (iii) exclusionary or predatory conduct in furtherance of the attempted monopolization; and (iv) a dangerous probability that, absent judicial intervention, the attempt will be successful." Rockbit Indus., 802 F. Supp. at 1552-53 (citing Domed Stadium Hotel, Inc. v. Holiday Inns, Inc., 732 F.2d 480, 490 (5th Cir. 1984)). HN15↑ To state a claim for conspiracy to monopolize, a plaintiff must allege: (i) the existence of a combination or conspiracy; (ii) an overt act in furtherance of the combination or conspiracy; (iii) substantial amount of interstate commerce effected; and (iv) specific intent to monopolize. North Mississippi Communications, Inc. v. Jones, 792 F.2d 1330, 1335 (5th Cir. 1986) (citing United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U.S. 218, 91 L. Ed. 2010, 67 S. Ct. 1560 \(1947\)).

In its motion to dismiss, Defendant U.S.A. Glas argues that Plaintiffs have not alleged facts showing that any Defendant possesses or has a dangerous probability of acquiring market power. Mem. in Supp. of U.S.A. Glas's Mot. to Dismiss at 6-7. HN16↑ The elements of monopolization, attempted monopolization, [\[\*31\]](#) and conspiracy to monopolize vary, but they all share a common requirement that a defendant must have either monopoly power or the dangerous probability of acquiring it. See Rockbit Indus., 802 F. Supp. at 1550 (monopolization); Id. at 1553 (attempted monopolization); Futurevision Cable Sys. of Wiggins, Inc. v. Multivision Cable TV Corp., 789 F. Supp. 760, 777 (S.D. Miss 1992) (conspiracy to monopolize), aff'd, 986 F.2d 1418 (5th Cir. 1993). HN17↑ "Monopoly power is the power to control price or exclude competition." United States v. American Airlines, Inc., 743 F.2d 1114, 1117 (5th Cir. 1984), cert. dismissed, 474 U.S. 1001, 88 L. Ed. 2d 370, 106 S. Ct. 420 (1985) (internal quotation marks omitted). In an attempted monopolization case, "[a] defendant must have some legally significant share of the market before he approaches the level of dangerous probability of success condemned by the attempt provision of section two." *Rockbit Indus.*, 802 F. Supp. at 1553.

To support its theory that Plaintiffs have not sufficiently alleged market power, Defendant U.S.A. Glas argues that Plaintiffs do not allege that each Defendant has at least a fifty-percent market share. Mem. in Supp. of U.S.A. Glas's [**32] Mot. to Dismiss at 8 (citing *Rockbit Indus.*, 802 F. Supp. at 1551 ("It is the law in this circuit that a defendant must have a market share of at least fifty percent before he can be guilty of monopolization.")). Defendant U.S.A. Glas's argument would be correct if Plaintiffs were alleging that only one Defendant was violating Section 2. Plaintiffs, however, allege that Defendants have engaged in a joint monopolization.

The plain language of Section 2 makes it illegal to "monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce." 15 U.S.C. § 2 (emphasis added); see also *Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan*, 506 U.S. 447, 113 S. Ct. 884, 889, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247 \(1993\) ("Section 2 addresses the actions of single firms that monopolize or attempt to monopolize, as well as conspiracies and combinations to monopolize."). HN18 [↑] When two or more persons agree to monopolize, they have committed the offense of joint monopolization provided that they have jointly acquired monopoly power. See *American Airlines*, 743 F.2d at 1118. Joint monopolization claims do not require that the Plaintiffs allege [**33] that each Defendant has at least fifty-percent market share. The cases that U.S.A. Glas cites for the proposition that Plaintiffs must allege that each Defendant has at least fifty percent of the market are limited to actions in which it was alleged that a single defendant monopolized [*1038] the market. See, e.g., *Rockbit Indus.*, 802 F. Supp. at 1550-51; *Domed Stadium Hotel*, 732 F.2d at 489-90. Accordingly, Plaintiffs need only allege that Defendants have jointly acquired market power. To allege this market power, however, Plaintiffs must alleged that Defendants have a market share in the aggregate of at least fifty percent. See *Domed Stadium Hotel*, 732 F.2d at 489. While Domed Stadium Hotel involved only a single defendant, the fifty-percent market share requirement should apply equally to the joint monopolization context because percentage of market share remains a sound proxy for market power.

2. Sufficiency of Facts Alleged for Section 2 Violation

Plaintiffs sufficiently allege that Defendants possess market power or a dangerous probability of acquiring market power. Pls.' Second Am. Compl. P 15. Plaintiffs further allege that "the defendant networks control over [**34] fifty percent (50%) of the auto glass repair and replacement underwritten by insurance companies in the State of Texas and over 50% of the residential and commercial flat glass repair and replacement underwritten by insurance companies in the State of Texas." Id. P 11. Plaintiffs' complaint also contains many factual allegations that Defendants are jointly exercising market power through substantial cooperation on pricing and other business operations. See, e.g., id. PP 9(a)-(r). The court does not address the other elements of monopolization, attempted monopolization, and conspiracy to monopolize because Defendants limited their arguments to the element of monopoly power.

C. Tortious Interference Claims

Defendants argue (1) that Plaintiffs have not alleged any specific contracts into which they were likely to have entered and (2) that the "interference" of which Plaintiffs complain is merely the privileged business-generation of their competitors. Mem. in Supp. of U.S.A. Glas Mot. to Dismiss at 10-11. Plaintiffs respond: "The complaint here clearly meets *FED. R. CIV. P. 8\(a\)*'s requirements for alleging tortious interference with existing and prospective contracts." [**35] Pls.' Resp. to Defs.' Mots. to Dismiss at 9-10.

HN19 [↑] "Texas law protects existing and prospective contracts from interference." *Juliette Fowler Homes, Inc. v. Welch Assocs., Inc.*, 793 S.W.2d 660, 665 \(Tex. 1990\). HN20 [↑] The elements for a cause of action for tortious interference with an existing contract are: (1) the existence of a contract subject to interference, (2) a willful and intentional act of interference, (3) such act was a proximate cause of damage, and (4) actual damage or loss occurred. Id. at 664. HN21 [↑] The elements of tortious interference with prospective contract or business relationships are:

(1) [A] reasonable probability that the parties would have entered into a contractual relationship, (2) an intentional and malicious act by the defendant that prevented the relationship from occurring, with the purpose of harming the plaintiff, (3) the defendant lacked privilege or justification to do the act, and (4) actual harm or damage resulted from the defendant's interference.

Exxon Corp. v. Allsup, 808 S.W.2d 648, 659 (Tex. App.--Corpus Christi 1991, writ denied).

HN22 [↑] "Under the defense of legal justification or excuse, one is privileged to interfere with another's [**36] contract (1) if it is done in a bona fide exercise of his own rights, or (2) if he has an equal or superior right in the subject matter to that of the other party." Sterner v. Marathon Oil Co., 767 S.W.2d 686, 691 \(Tex. 1989\). HN23 [↑] A party is privileged to cause a third party to terminate business relations with the party's competitor to obtain future benefits by offering the third party better contract terms than its competitors. Caller-Times Publishing Co. v. Triad Communications, Inc., 855 S.W.2d 18, 23 \(Tex. App.--Corpus Christi 1993, no writ\); [Times Herald Printing Co. v. A.H. Belo Corp., 820 S.W.2d 206, 215 \(Tex. App.--Houston \[14th Dist.\] 1991, no writ\)](#). "The privilege of legal justification or excuse in the interference of contractual relations is an affirmative defense upon which the defendant has the burden of proof." Juliette Fowler Homes, 793 S.W.2d at 664 n.7 (quoting Sterner, 767 S.W.2d at 690).

[*1039] Plaintiffs sufficiently allege that Defendants tortiously interfered with existing and prospective contracts. In their sixth cause of action, Plaintiffs allege:

Based on the facts stated above and additional evidence to be gathered through discovery [**37] and presented at trial, the Defendants, acting individually and in concert, combination, and conspiracy, have tortiously interfered with the Plaintiffs' existing and prospective relationships with customers having need of repair and replacement of auto glass and flat glass underwritten by insurance companies and with the insurance companies who underwrite such insurance coverage in the State of Texas. There was more than a reasonable probability that the Plaintiffs would have entered into a business or contractual relationship with many insureds who were steered to network glass shops. The Defendants acted maliciously by intentionally interfering with and preventing the relationships from occurring, or continuing, for the purpose of harming the Plaintiffs, without privilege or justification. Actual harm and damage to the plaintiffs in the form of loss of business occurred as a result.

Pls.' Second Am. Compl. P 19.

HN24 [↑] To survive a motion to dismiss under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\), Plaintiffs are not required to allege that Defendants interfered with specific contracts. See Colle, 981 F.2d at 243. Plaintiffs' complaint provides a short and plain statement that gives Defendants notice of [**38] what their tortious interference claims are and the general factual grounds upon which they rest. Plaintiffs allege that Defendants' illegal agreements to boycott Plaintiffs have interfered with existing and prospective contracts with customers. While Defendants are privileged to win business from Plaintiffs on the basis of quality or prices, Defendants are not permitted to interfere with Plaintiffs' business on the basis of alleged illegal agreements.

D. Texas Insurance Code, Art. 5.07-1, Claim

In their seventh cause of action, Plaintiffs allege violations of the Texas Insurance Code, Art. 5.07-1:

Based on the facts stated above and additional evidence to be gathered through discovery and presented at trial, the Defendants, acting individually and in concert, combination, and conspiracy, have limited the beneficiaries of policies issued by various insurance companies from selecting Plaintiffs-glass shops and those similarly situated to repair glass damage to their motor vehicles, homes, and business covered under their policies, in violation of the Texas Insurance Code, Art. 5.07-1.

Pls.' Second Am. Compl. P 20. Defendants argue (1) that the Texas Insurance [**39] Code applies only to insurers rather than competing glass providers such as Defendants and (2) that the Texas Insurance Code does not allow for a private right of action. Plaintiffs respond:

Plaintiffs can prove that the Defendants, by their collusive conduct, aiding and abetted insurance companies to limit the beneficiaries of policies from selecting Plaintiffs' glass repair facilities -- in violation of Art. 5.07-1(a) -- they are entitled to bring such conduct to the jury's attention. Proof of such conduct would not only support Plaintiffs' tortious interference claim, by establishing that Defendants' conduct was neither justified nor privileged, but might also support Plaintiffs' entitlement to punitive damages. Surely, Defendants' [sic] should not be excused from answering charges that they aided and abetted another party to violate the law.

Pls.' Resp. to Defs.' Mots. to Dismiss at 10. While Plaintiffs argue that this allegation would have some evidentiary purpose in this action, the court must focus on whether Plaintiffs can bring this cause of action against Defendants under the Texas Insurance Code.

The court determines that Plaintiffs do not have a right [**40] of action under Article 5.07-1 of the Texas Insurance Code. HN25 This provision regulates the conduct of insurance companies, not glass repair or replacement companies. Article 5.07-1 provides that HN26 "an insurer may not, directly or indirectly, limit its coverage under a policy covering damage to a motor vehicle . . . by limiting the beneficiary of the policy from selecting a person or [*1040] shop to repair damage to the motor vehicle covered under the policy." TEX. INS. CODE ANN. art. 5.07-1\(a\) (Vernon 1981 & Supp. 1996) (emphasis added). Additionally, Plaintiffs do not have standing to bring a cause of action under Article 5.07-1 because HN27 the provision does not grant a private right of action.

IV. CONCLUSION

Therefore, the court ORDERS that Defendants' motions to dismiss are hereby GRANTED with respect to Plaintiffs' third, fifth, and seventh causes of action and DENIED as to the remaining causes of action. Accordingly, the court DISMISSES Plaintiffs' third, fifth, and seventh causes of action.

SIGNED this the 16th day of September 1996.

RICHARD A. SCHELL

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

---

End of Document

California CNG v. Southern Cal. Gas Co.

United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

August 8, 1996, Argued, Submitted, Pasadena, California ; September 19, 1996, Filed

No. 95-55806

Reporter

1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 35321 *; 1996-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,565; 97 Daily Journal DAR 1103

CALIFORNIA CNG, INC., a California corporation; CALIFORNIA CNG, a California general partnership; PRIME OF CALIFORNIA, INC., a California corporation, Plaintiffs-Appellants, v. SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA GAS COMPANY, a California corporation; HENDERSON ENGINEERING COMPANY, an Illinois corporation, Defendants-Appellees.

Subsequent History: [*1] As Amended January 30, 1997.

Prior History: Appeal from the United States District Court for the Central District of California. D.C. No. CV-95-00281-JSL. J. Spencer Letts, District Judge, Presiding.

Original Opinion Previously Reported at: 1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 24675.

Disposition: AFFIRMED in part, REVERSED in part, and REMANDED.

Core Terms

---

stations, fueling, natural gas, articulated, ratepayer, tariff, state policy, customers, immunity, guidelines, programs, funds, compressed, antitrust, rates, costs, nonutility, subsidization, state-action, refueling, compete, Involvement, approving, authorize, unfairly, spend, anti-competitive, infrastructure, competitors, supervision

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > Failure to State Claims

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > General Overview

HN1[ Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Where a complaint is dismissed for failure to state a claim, the allegations of the complaint are taken as true, and construed in the light most favorable to the complainant, for purposes of appeal.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > Failure to State Claims

HN2 Standards of Review, De Novo Review

A district court's dismissal for failure to state a claim is reviewed de novo. A complaint should not be dismissed unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of the claim that would entitle her to relief.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Claims By & Against

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > General Overview

HN3 Antitrust & Trade Law, Exemptions & Immunities

There is a two-prong test for determining when the state-action doctrine immunizes a defendant's conduct from the antitrust laws: First, the challenged restraint must be one clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy; second, the policy must be actively supervised by the state itself. State-action immunity is disfavored, much as are repeals by implication. The first prong of the test applies to the conduct of private parties that are regulated by state agencies.

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > Distribution & Sale

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > General Overview

HN4 Natural Gas Industry, Distribution & Sale

California's legislature has clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed a policy of encouraging substantial market penetration of compressed natural gas fueled vehicles and of encouraging natural-gas utilities to pursue research, development, and demonstration activities in furtherance of that legislative goal. Cal. Pub. Util. Code § 740.2.

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > General Overview

HN5 Energy & Utilities Law, Natural Gas Industry

The legislature's clearly articulated policy is to have the California Public Utilities Commission (CPUC) balance the need for utility participation in the development of the natural-gas-vehicle-infrastructure market and the need for that market to develop into a competitive one.

Energy & Utilities Law > Natural Gas Industry > General Overview

Transportation Law > Private Vehicles > Safety Standards > Emission Control

HN6 Energy & Utilities Law, Natural Gas Industry

The California Public Utilities Commission adopted the following guideline for its use in the approval of new and continuing low-emission-vehicle programs: The utility will be required to demonstrate that each element of its low-emission-vehicle program is not unfairly competitive with non-utility enterprises, and to discontinue the offending program element if, and when, it interferes with the development of a competitive market.

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Claims By & Against

HN7 [↑] State & Territorial Governments, Claims By & Against

Tariff provisions usually take effect unless the agency takes affirmative steps to suspend or disapprove them. Agency inaction is not sufficient to justify immunity. It fails to meet the requirement that there be a clear state purpose to displace antitrust oversight of the particular activity. Inaction normally does not reflect any agency desire to approve.

Counsel: Jonathan M. Gordon, McClintock, Weston, Benshoof, Rochefort, Rubalcava & MacCuish, Los Angeles, California, for the plaintiffs-appellants.

Henry C. Thumann, O'Melveny & Myers, Los Angeles, California, for defendant-appellee Southern California Gas Company.

Judges: Before: Betty B. Fletcher and A. Wallace Tashima, Circuit Judges, and Jane A. Restani, * Judge, United States Court of International Trade. Opinion by Judge Fletcher.

Opinion by: FLETCHER

Opinion

---

OPINION

FLETCHER, Circuit Judge:

California CNG, Inc. and Prime of California, Inc., two California corporations (hereinafter collectively referred to as "Cal CNG"), appeal from the district court's dismissal of their complaint alleging various violations of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1-7, by Southern California Gas ("SoCalGas"), a California utility company, and by Henderson [*2] Engineering, an Illinois corporation. The district court determined that SoCalGas was immune from suit under the "state action" doctrine. We have jurisdiction over this appeal pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1291, and we affirm in part and reverse in part.

FACTUAL BACKGROUND

Because the district court HN1 [↑] dismissed Cal CNG's complaint for failure to state a claim, the allegations of the complaint are taken as true, and construed in the light most favorable to Cal CNG, for purposes of this appeal. *National Wildlife Federation v. Espy*, 45 F.3d 1337, 1340 \(9th Cir. 1995\). The following recitation of the "facts" therefore draws entirely on the complaint.

Cal CNG is involved in the natural-gas-vehicle (NGV) industry. NGVs are internal-combustion-powered vehicles that operate on compressed natural gas, producing a much lower level of emissions than traditional gasoline-fueled vehicles. Concerns about air quality and dependence on foreign oil supplies have heightened interest in NGVs, especially in California. Operators of substantial fleets of vehicles in California have begun using NGVs in their fleets. Fuel for NGVs is dispensed at fueling stations which take natural gas from existing [*3] pipelines, compress the gas into storage tanks, and dispense the compressed gas into NGV tanks.

---

* Honorable Jane A. Restani, Judge of the United States Court of International Trade, sitting by designation.

The California Public Utilities Commission (CPUC) in January 1992 approved an application by SoCalGas to spend nearly $ 11 million on a two-year NGV development program, the costs to be recoverable from the utility's ratepayers. That program proposed the installation of fueling stations to serve SoCalGas and customer NGVs. Many of these stations were to be built at the sites of commercial fleet operators.

Cal CNG, in mid-1992, together with Prime of California, a corporation with over 30 years experience in building liquid-fuel fueling stations, entered the NGV fueling-station business. Plans called for the company (1) to sell fueling stations and their component parts, including compression equipment; (2) to install and maintain fueling stations on customer property; and (3) to own and operate (or lease) its own fueling stations. Cal CNG entered into negotiations with Henderson, the exclusive U.S. licensee of the Pignone compressor, an Italian-manufactured compressor considered by Cal CNG to be the most technologically superior model available. Cal CNG and Henderson reached a verbal distribution [*4] agreement in November 1992, reduced to writing and executed in May 1993, in which Cal CNG obtained the exclusive right to sell Pignone compressors in southern California for an initial term of one year. The agreement set minimum quotas for Cal CNG's sales, and failure to meet the quotas would allow Henderson to terminate the agreement; the quota for the first year was one compressor. Cal CNG then began discussions with southern California's significant vehicle-fleet operators, all of which expressed interest in buying a fueling station from Cal CNG; the company alleges that it would have sold fueling stations to at least some of those operators but for SoCalGas' actions.

Those actions, Cal CNG alleges, amounted to a campaign to drive Cal CNG from the market. SoCalGas allegedly approached fleet operators who had expressed interest to Cal CNG and offered them the possession, installation, and maintenance of a complete fueling station, including compressor, for "free, or virtually free". As a consequence, Cal CNG says, several of the operators with which it had held discussions declined to purchase fueling stations from Cal CNG and obtained them from SoCalGas instead. Cal CNG also accuses [*5] SoCalGas of other conduct designed to disparage the business and services of Cal CNG, to harass Cal CNG, to dissuade potential customers and investors from further dealings with Cal CNG, and effectively to overpower and destroy Cal CNG in the NGV and NGV fueling-infrastructure markets; Cal CNG, however, does not detail such other conduct. Cal CNG further alleges that when it brought SoCalGas' actions to the attention of legislators and regulators, SoCalGas engaged in further improper conduct, including "direct threats of reprisal to Cal CNG if it did not 'stay away' from So Cal Gas's 'customers'", disparagement of Cal CNG's equipment and services, and interference with the relationship between Cal CNG and Henderson. As to this last course of conduct, SoCalGas allegedly used economic leverage over Henderson, which was involved in other projects with SoCalGas, to get Henderson to pressure Cal CNG not to compete with SoCalGas and, eventually, to terminate the distribution agreement in May 1994 without justification. All of this conduct, Cal CNG alleges, kept it from selling fueling stations and forced it out of the NGV-infrastructure market.

PROCEDURAL HISTORY

Cal CNG filed a complaint [*6] in January 1995 alleging claims against SoCalGas for monopolization and attempted monopolization and against SoCalGas and Henderson for combination and conspiracy to monopolize and to restrain trade, all in violation of sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act.<sup>1</sup> [*7] SoCalGas and Henderson moved to dismiss the complaint for failure to state a claim, and the court granted the motions. The district court held that SoCalGas' provision to customers of ratepayer-subsidized NGV fueling stations was immune from federal antitrust attack under the "state action" doctrine, that any other conduct by SoCalGas had no "independent competitive impact" that would allow Cal CNG to state a cognizable federal antitrust claim, and that Henderson could not have conspired or combined with SoCalGas to violate the federal antitrust laws because SoCalGas's actions were immunized from federal antitrust scrutiny.<sup>2</sup> Cal CNG has timely appealed.

---

<sup>1</sup> The complaint also included nine state-law claims for restraint of trade, intentional or negligent conspiracy to interfere with prospective economic advantage, unfair business practices, intentional or negligent interference with prospective economic advantage, breach of contract, promise without intent to perform, and negligent misrepresentation.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

HN2 A district court's dismissal for failure to state a claim is reviewed de novo. Stone v. Travelers Corp., 58 F.3d 434, 436-37 (9th Cir. 1995). A complaint should not be dismissed unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of the claim that would entitle her to relief. Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 (1957).

DISCUSSION

I. "State Action" Immunity

HN3 The Supreme Court has announced a two-prong test for determining when the state-action doctrine immunizes a defendant's conduct from the antitrust laws: "First, the challenged restraint must be one clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy; second, the policy must be actively supervised by the State itself." California Retail Liquor Dealers Ass'n v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97, 105, 63 L. Ed. 2d 233, 100 S. Ct. 937 (1980) (citations and internal quotation marks omitted). The Court has held that "state-action immunity is [*8] disfavored, much as are repeals by implication". Federal Trade Comm'n v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 504 U.S. 621, 636, 119 L. Ed. 2d 410, 112 S. Ct. 2169 (1992) (citing Lafayette v. Louisiana Power & Light Co., 435 U.S. 389, 398-99, 55 L. Ed. 2d 364, 98 S. Ct. 1123 (1978)).

The Ninth Circuit has articulated the application of the first prong of the test to the conduct of private parties that are regulated by state agencies. Columbia Steel Casting Co. v. Portland General Electric Co., 60 F.3d 1390 (9th Cir. 1995) (Slip op. 16261, Amended Opinion filed December 27, 1996).

A. State Policy

1. Legislature

HN4 California's legislature has clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed a policy of encouraging "substantial market penetration of . . . compressed natural gas fueled vehicles" and of encouraging natural-gas utilities "to pursue research, development, and demonstration activities in furtherance of that legislative goal". Cal. Pub. Util. Code § 740.2. As to the specific question of NGV infrastructure, including NGV fueling stations, California's clearest legislative articulation of policy appears in Section 745.5 of the state's Public Utilities Code.<sup>3</sup> In adopting that section, the legislature made the following findings:

- [*9] * that the increased use of natural gas as a transportation fuel is desirable;
- * that "[a] high quality, reliable, and cost competitive natural gas vehicle . . . public fueling infrastructure must be built to sustain a market for natural gas vehicles";
- * that "utility participation in the construction and operation of compressed natural gas public refueling stations is needed to promote competition with oil companies and others selling compressed natural gas as a vehicle fuel and to help develop a market for natural gas vehicles"; and

---

<sup>2</sup> The district court dismissed Cal CNG's state-law claims without prejudice, and Cal CNG is apparently pursuing those claims in state court.

<sup>3</sup> Section 745.5 is repealed by its own terms, § 745.5(f), on 1 January 1997 unless the legislature acts to extend it.

* that "there are long-term benefits to natural gas utility ratepayers from the sale of natural gas for use as a transportation fuel, and that it should be the policy of the Public Utilities Commission to support utility natural gas vehicle conversion, maintenance, and fueling demonstration programs".

1991 Cal. Stat. Ch. 1204, §§ 1\(a\), \(c\), \(d\), \(e\).

[*10] The text of the law itself empowered the CPUC to "authorize natural gas utilities to construct and maintain compressed natural gas refueling stations to be owned and operated by the utility, or to be transferred to nonutility operators" and, where appropriate, to "authorize natural gas utilities to recover through rates, either by expensing or capitalizing, or both, the reasonable costs associated with" such fueling-station projects. Cal. Pub. Util. Code § 745.5\(a\), \(d\). Section 745.5\(e\), however, places two limits on the CPUC's power to authorize utilities to engage in fueling-station projects at ratepayer expense. First, the commission cannot allow a utility to pass the costs of fueling stations on to ratepayers unless it finds that the programs "are substantially in the ratepayers' long-term interests". More importantly for purposes of this case, the legislature provided that "the decision of the commission shall also ensure that natural gas utilities do not unfairly compete with nonutility enterprises."

We note that § 745.5 appears to articulate a state policy that exhibits considerable tension between two apparently conflicting goals. On the one hand, the legislature wished [*11] to "ensure that natural gas utilities do not unfairly compete with" nonutilities in building, maintaining, and operating NGV fueling stations. On the other hand, the legislature allowed utilities, with CPUC approval, to recover the costs of such fueling-station activities through rates charged to utility customers, a resource obviously unavailable to potential nonutility competitors in the NGV-infrastructure market. A number of policies that reconcile these conflicting goals suggest themselves,<sup>4</sup> but what is undeniable is that the legislature intended for the CPUC to perform that reconciliation. Section 745.5 speaks entirely in terms of what the commission may authorize and under what conditions. Specifically, § 745.5\(d\) allows the commission to authorize recovery of costs through rates, and § 745.5\(e\) directs the commission, in deciding whether to authorize NGV projects and ratepayer funding for them, to ensure that utilities do not compete unfairly with nonutilities. Thus, it appears that HNS↑ the legislature's clearly articulated policy is to have the CPUC balance the need for utility participation in the development of the NGV-infrastructure market and the need for that market [*12] to develop into a competitive one.<sup>5</sup> Therefore, we must look to the CPUC's position to determine whether SoCalGas's conduct is part of a "clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed . . . state policy".

[*13] 2. CPUC<sup>6</sup>

a. 1991-92 Approvals of Utility NGV Programs

The first significant CPUC decision to focus on the role of utilities in the NGV market is a July 1991 decision approving an application by Pacific Gas & Electric Company (PG&E) to establish an NGV program. Re Pacific Gas and Elec. Co., 40 C.P.U.C.2d 722 \(Cal.P.U.C. 1991\) (hereinafter "PG&E"), modified on denial of reh'g, 41 C.P.U.C.2d 428 \(Cal.P.U.C. 1991\). The PG&E decision is relevant to this case not merely because of the similarity of subject matter but because the commission expressly adopted the policy positions expressed in this opinion

<sup>4</sup> For example, ratepayer subsidization might be available for the construction of NGV fueling stations but the CPUC could require that revenues from the operation or transfer of the stations be used to "repay" the ratepayers. Or, ratepayer subsidization might be allowed only so long as no nonutility enterprises participated in the NGV-infrastructure market.

<sup>5</sup> This policy is also embodied in § 740.3 of the Public Utilities Code, subsection (a) of which directs the commission to "evaluate and implement policies to promote the development of equipment and infrastructure needed to facilitate the use of . . . natural gas to fuel low-emission vehicles". The legislature specifically directed the commission to implement policies on "the rate-basing of . . . compressor stations for natural gas fueled vehicles", § 740.3(a)(1), and required that "the commission's policies . . . ensure that utilities do not unfairly compete with nonutility enterprises", § 740.3(c).

<sup>6</sup> We have previously approved the taking of judicial notice under Federal Rule of Evidence 201\(b\) of published decisions of the CPUC in determining issues of state-action immunity. Nugget Hydroelectric, L.P. v. Pacific Gas and Elec. Co., 981 F.2d 429, 435 \(9th Cir. 1992\), cert. denied, 508 U.S. 908, 124 L. Ed. 2d 247, 113 S. Ct. 2336 \(1993\).

when, less than six months later, it approved SoCalGas' application to establish [*14] an NGV program. Re Southern California Gas Co., 43 C.P.U.C.2d 104, 110 (Cal.P.U.C. 1992) ("We intend that the policy issues decided in [PG&E] apply to SoCalGas.").

As an initial matter, the commission found that "because of consumer indifference, the low cost of gasoline, the lack of oil company participation, and the lack of financial incentives, the chance of a natural gas fueled vehicle industry surviving and growing without some form of initial public assistance is practically nil." 40 C.P.U.C.2d at 734. The commission approved utility involvement in the NGV market as just the kind of assistance necessary for the industry to survive and grow:

In funding the utility for a two-year period we are trying to promote the development of the equipment and infrastructure needed to facilitate the use of natural gas as a vehicle fuel. Utilities play a critical role in the development of this market; but the role, though critical, should be temporary. However, we are not prepared to set a timetable for the extrication of the utilities from the market because it is not clear how long their presence will be needed to provide the bridge to a profitable competitive market for [*15] retail CNG.

Id. at 742. As the commission put it in a later order on the subject, "the utilities are called upon to 'jump start' the retail market by providing refueling stations and offering conversion incentives". Re Utility Involvement in the Market for Low-Emission Vehicles, Interim Order 91-10-029 (Cal.P.U.C. Oct. 23, 1991), 1991 WL 496693 at *8. Therefore, the commission approved the utilities' proposals to spend millions of dollars on NGV programs - programs that included the construction of NGV fueling stations - and to charge the costs to ratepayers. PG&E, 40 C.P.U.C.2d at 745 (authorizing PG&E to spend $ 12,485,000); Re Southern California Gas, 43 C.P.U.C.2d at 113 (authorizing SoCalGas to spend $ 10,818,000); Re San Diego Gas & Electric Co., 40 C.P.U.C.2d 713 (Cal. P.U.C. 1991) (authorizing SDG&E to spend $ 6,761,000), modified on denial of reh'g, 41 C.P.U.C.2d 428 (Cal.P.U.C. 1991).

In making its decision, the commission expressly considered the possible effects of utility participation in the NGV market on competition:

The record is clear, and we find, that PG&E's NGV program is not anticompetitive. There are no competitors now, [*16] and potential competitors, if there are any, are waiting for PG&E to show them the way through the investment of PG&E's and ratepayers' funds. . . . The short answer to [those] who fear competition from PG&E, is that there is no competition. PG&E is in this market by default. No one wants to compete.

40 C.P.U.C.2d at 742. Thus, the CPUC reconciled the legislature's two goals of utility participation and fair competition in the NGV-infrastructure market by clearly articulating a policy of allowing ratepayer-funded utility participation in the market because no nonutility enterprises with whom the utilities might unfairly compete were in that market.

The commission, however, expressed its intent to monitor closely the impact of utility participation in the market on the growth of competition:

As competition in the NGV market emerges and evolves, the Commission will be in a position to adjust the PG&E program, as necessary, in response. PG&E will be subject to ongoing reasonableness reviews. In addition, PG&E's entire NGV program will be subject to review should PG&E apply to continue the program beyond its two-year term. PG&E has also agreed to submit periodic reports [*17] to the Commission. The Commission will have ample opportunity to review the competitive situation and make mid-course corrections as necessary.

Id. Thus, the CPUC clearly articulated its continuing responsibility for balancing the legislative goals of utility participation in the NGV market and fair competition in that market.

b. 1993 Guidelines

After approving PG&E's application, the CPUC on its own initiative opened an investigation and rulemaking proceeding concerning utility involvement in the market for low-emission vehicles, including NGVs. Re Utility

Involvement in the Market for Low-emission Vehicles, Interim Order 91-10-029 (Cal.P.U.C. Oct. 23, 1991), 1991 WL 496693.

In initiating the proceeding, the CPUC reiterated its view of the role of utilities in the development of an NGV infrastructure: "Initially, the utilities must play a role in ensuring that natural gas is transported to the pumps [and] that there are natural gas refueling stations conveniently located to serve the public . . ." Id. at *5. One purpose of the proceeding was to develop policies on "how long a utility presence will be needed to provide the bridge to a profitable competitive [*18] market for retail CNG". Id. at *7. The proceeding also provided "an opportunity to define more specifically what NGV activities, if any, are appropriate for long-term funding, and what measures the Commission should use to assess possible anti-competitive effects of the utilities' activities". Id. at *5.

Phase I of the investigation and rulemaking concluded with the adoption of policy guidelines by the CPUC in July 1993. Re Utility Involvement in the Market for Low-emission Vehicles, 145 P.U.R.4th 243 (Cal.P.U.C. 1993). While acknowledging that "investor owned gas . . . utilities have an appropriate and prominent place in seeking to introduce the technology of vehicles . . . fueled by compressed natural gas and the development of a service and refueling infrastructure", the commission reiterated that "the activities of such entities are not to be undertaken to the exclusion of other non-utility entrants, and it is the responsibility of the Commission to see that utility presence is compatible with the emergence of competition in all sectors of this industry". Id. at 248. HN6[] The CPUC therefore adopted the following guideline for its use in the "approval of new and continuing [*19] [low-emission-vehicle] programs": "The utility will be required to demonstrate that each element of its [low-emission-vehicle] program is not unfairly competitive with nonutility enterprises, and to discontinue the offending program element if, and when, it interferes with the development of a competitive market." Id. at 252-53.

In the guidelines, the CPUC departed significantly from the position that it had taken in its earlier decisions on how to implement the legislative directive to prevent unfair utility competition in the NGV market. No longer was the CPUC willing to say, as it had in PG&E, that utility involvement in the market would have no anti-competitive effect because no competition existed in the market; indeed, it instead made a factual finding that "the preclusion of unfair competition governs markets where there currently is no competition as well as those where there currently is". Id. at 255. Furthermore, in adopting the guideline on competition, the commission stated, "The terms of this guideline supports [sic] and is [sic] obviously subordinate to both state and federal statutes dealing with anti-competitive behavior." Id. at 252. Thus, [*20] in July 1993, the commission articulated a new state policy on the balancing of the legislative goals of utility participation and fair competition: even if the NGV-infrastructure market contained no nonutility competitors, the utilities must compete fairly, which meant, at least, conforming to state and federal competition laws.

Upon issuing the guidelines, the CPUC announced that the utility NGV programs it had previously approved had to be brought into conformity with the guidelines. Id. at 246. It also ordered the utilities to submit new applications for six-year NGV programs. Id. at 256.

c. 1995 Partial Approvals

In November 1995, several months after the district court's dismissal of Cal CNG's complaint, the CPUC concluded Phase II of its investigation and rulemaking and issued an order partially approving the applications that the utilities, including SoCalGas, had submitted in response to the issuance of the 1993 guidelines at the completion of Phase I.

<sup>7</sup> Re Utility Involvement in the Market for Low-Emission Vehicles, 165 P.U.R.4th 503 (Cal.P.U.C. 1995). SoCalGas's application had included a proposal to use ratepayer funds to construct at least 67 additional [*21] NGV fueling stations for the use of its customers. Id. at 545. The CPUC did not approve that portion of SoCalGas's application, finding that the risk that the ratepayers would never recover any of the funds used for such construction was too great. Id. at 545-47. Because the CPUC rejected this portion of SoCalGas's application, it did not fully address the unfair-competition concerns that other parties had raised in the proceeding. The commission did state, however, that "there are many companies that are interested in competing in the market for the construction and operation of refueling stations at customer or other private sites" and that "any future utility refueling station program must be designed to avoid giving the utility any market advantage, based on its monopoly status". Id. at 547. That meant, the commission concluded, that "construction, operation, and commodity charges must be fully compensatory". Id. In other words, no ratepayer funds could be used to subsidize the utility's costs of fueling stations or the price it charged purchasers of such stations. The legislative goals had been rebalanced again, and state policy had changed as a consequence: the [*22] need for fair competition in the NGV-infrastructure market now completely prevented utilities from using ratepayer funds to construct and maintain NGV fueling stations.

---

<sup>7</sup> While the CPUC's November 1995 decision may not directly govern the question of state-action immunity for any of the SoCalGas activity at issue in this appeal, since Cal CNG filed its complaint in January 1995, the ruling is nonetheless useful in assessing California's policy on utility participation in the NGV-infrastructure market in the period leading up to the decision.

3. Application to Cal CNG's Claims against SoCalGas

Based on the foregoing analysis, it is clear that from July 1991 to July 1993 the CPUC had clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed a state policy that utility activities in the NGV-infrastructure market were desirable and did not pose any dangers to competition because the market contained no competitors. In January 1992, the CPUC approved SoCalGas's application to spend over $ 10 million of ratepayer funds [*23] on NGV programs, including the "install[ation of] up to 51 refueling stations to serve SoCalGas and customer NGVs". 43 C.P.U.C.2d at 111. Thus, any activity by SoCalGas in this period to use ratepayer funds to provide NGV fueling stations to customers below-cost, or even for free, was part of a clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed state policy.

In addition, it is equally clear that after November 1995, the CPUC clearly articulated a policy forbidding utilities to use ratepayer funds to compete with nonutilities in the provision of NGV fueling stations. Thus, any SoCalGas actions after November 1995 to provide customers with ratepayer-subsidized NGV fueling stations would not enjoy "state action" immunity from antitrust liability.

For the period between July 1993 and November 1995 - the period in which most of the SoCalGas actions alleged in the complaint seem to have taken place,<sup>8</sup> the CPUC's articulation of state policy did not directly address NGV fueling stations but held more generally that utilities' NGV programs must not be unfairly competitive with nonutility enterprises and must not interfere with the development of a competitive market. *145 P.U.R.4th at J*241 252-53*. The CPUC further stated that its guidelines on utility participation in NGV markets were "subordinate to both state and federal statutes dealing with anticompetitive behavior". Id. at 252. It also directed the utilities to bring their existing NGV programs into conformity with the new guidelines. Id. at 246. Given the guidelines' unequivocal statement that utility activities in NGV markets must not be anticompetitive, the lack of any express commission discussion of fueling stations demonstrates the absence of the "clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed" state policy that Midcal requires to shield ratepayer subsidization of such stations from federal antitrust scrutiny. Therefore, any SoCalGas actions in providing subsidized NGV fueling stations to customers after July 1993 do not enjoy "state action" immunity from antitrust liability.<sup>9</sup>

[*25] 4. SoCalGas' 1994 Tariff

a. 1994 Tariff Filing

SoCalGas argues that the structure of its November 1994 rate schedule for natural gas for NGVs constitutes a clear articulation of state policy allowing ratepayer subsidization of utility-built NGV fueling stations. The rate schedule provides that SoCalGas will charge 28.490 cents per therm for uncompressed natural gas to be used at a customer-funded fueling station, where compression "will be performed by the customer using customer's equipment at the customer's designated premises", but will charge 63.683 cents per therm for compressed natural gas dispensed at a utility-funded fueling station, where compression will be performed by the utility. SoCalGas argues in its brief that "while the [higher] compressed rate supports recovery of part of the capital and operating costs associated with the provision of the fueling station, it purposefully does not provide for full recovery and accordingly results in operator subsidization". Therefore, SoCalGas argues, CPUC approval of the tariff "reflects a conscious state decision to subsidize NGV infrastructure development".

<sup>8</sup>The complaint does not specifically allege the dates on which the challenged SoCalGas conduct occurred, but it appears that the conduct alleged must have taken place between May 1993 and January 1995.

<sup>9</sup>Neither party has raised the question of whether the "state action" immunity for SoCalGas's activities extends beyond July 1993 for some "reasonable period" required for the utility to bring its NGV programs into conformity with the guidelines. We therefore need not reach that question on this appeal.

The parties dispute whether the district court's judicial [*26] notice of the November 1994 rate schedule under Federal Rule of Evidence 201(b) was proper, but we need not resolve the dispute, because even if notice is taken the rate schedule does not establish that SoCalGas is entitled to state-action immunity for three reasons.

First, there is no indication on the face of the rate schedule that the compressed-gas tariff, though higher than the uncompressed-gas tariff, is not high enough to provide for full recovery of costs. Therefore, the rate schedule alone does not demonstrate that the CPUC was aware that SoCalGas's tariff structure would result in subsidization such that any commission approval would be a clear articulation of state policy.

Second, while SoCalGas argues that the CPUC expressly considered "the structure and substance of SOCAL's NGV tariff", the only support it provides for that argument is citation to the commission's January 1992 approval of SoCalGas's application to use ratepayer funds for its NGV programs. Even if the CPUC did approve the structure and substance of SoCalGas's tariff in 1992, that approval is irrelevant to whether state-action immunity shields the utility from antitrust scrutiny after July 1993, since [*27] at that point the CPUC adopted a new state policy on utility participation in the NGV-infrastructure market and expressly ordered that all existing utility NGV programs be brought into conformity with that new policy. In the absence of any evidence that the CPUC actually considered the structure and substance of SoCalGas's tariff after July 1993, the continued existence of the tariff structure approved earlier is insufficient to show a clearly articulated state policy in the later period.

Finally, there is no indication that the November 1994 tariff represents any articulation of policy by the CPUC, because it is not clear whether the CPUC actually considered and approved the tariff. According to the SoCalGas cover letter filing the November 1994 adjustments to its rate schedule, the tariffs were adjustments to those first approved by the CPUC as effective on 1 August 1992. The letter states that under the approved rate schedules, the utility is to "redetermine" its rates in the month following the close of each calendar quarter. Whenever the "redetermined" rates vary more than 5% from the then-existing rates, "SoCalGas is to propose the appropriate rate changes and submit them to [*28] the Commission three working days before the end of that month" and then "these newly determined rates are to become effective on and after the first day of the month following their submission". (Emphasis added.) Thus, it appears from the rate schedules themselves that the November 1994 tariff changes simply became effective upon their filing by SoCalGas and the passage of time. There is no indication whatsoever that the CPUC actually examined and approved the tariff structure and these rates in light of its 1993 guidelines such that the tariff could be said to be a clear articulation of state policy. See Phillip Areeda and Donald Turner, Antitrust Law Par. 213f (1978) ("In one recurrent situation, a regulated firm is obliged by state law to file with a state regulatory agency a tariff stating its rates and practices. HNT Tariff provisions usually take effect unless the agency takes affirmative steps to suspend or disapprove them. . . . Agency inaction is not sufficient to justify immunity . . . It fails to meet the requirement . . . that there be a clear state purpose to displace antitrust oversight of this particular activity. Inaction normally does not reflect any agency [*29] desire to approve."); cf. Ticor, 504 U.S. at 638 (holding as to "actual supervision" prong of Midcal state-action test that "where prices or rates are set as an initial matter by private parties, subject only to a veto if the State chooses to exercise it, the party claiming the immunity must show that state officials have undertaken the necessary steps to determine the specifics of the price-fixing or ratesetting scheme").

On this record, then, SoCalGas has failed to establish that the existence of its November 1994 rate schedules demonstrates a clearly articulated state policy to shield ratepayer subsidization of NGV fueling stations from antitrust scrutiny. The CPUC's 1991 approval of PG&E's NGV program provided that PG&E's tariffs would be reviewed annually, 40 C.P.U.C.2d at 744; while the 1992 approval of SoCalGas's NGV program does not contain the same provision, the fact that the commission expressly incorporated the policy decisions from the PG&E decision in its approval of SoCalGas's program suggests that annual review may have been contemplated for that utility's tariffs as well. Thus, SoCalGas may be able to show sufficient CPUC oversight of its rate structure [*30] to meet the first prong of the Midcal test, but it has not done so on this record.

b. 1995 CPUC Decision

SoCalGas suggests that the discussion of rates in the November 1995 CPUC decision supports its argument that its 1994 rate schedules show that its ratepayer-subsidized NGV fueling stations were part of a clearly articulated state policy.

The CPUC indeed points out that SoCalGas's "rate schedules were not designed to cover the total costs of the service" and compares the rates to PG&E's, which "do not recover any portion of [the utility's] capital outlay, maintenance, or fuel taxes in supplying natural gas as a vehicle fuel". 165 P.U.R.4th at 552. The commission then restates the grounds for its approval of this rate structure in PG&E in 1991, including its interpretation of relevant statutory provisions. Id. at 556. However, the commission then notes that it "cannot rest upon this interpretation of the relevant statutes to support the continued offering of subsidized service" because the statutes "must be interpreted in light of [the] guidelines" adopted in 1993. Id. Specifically, the commission points out that ratepayer subsidization in the rates "is [*31] unfair competition because of the utilities' ability to rely on captive, regulated customers to provide the subsidy, rather than depend on retained earnings, as would any competitor". Id. The commission then notes that "there are other firms that are interested in competing within and against the compressed natural gas market". Id.

While the 1995 decision appears to be the first time that the commission expressly stated that SoCalGas's rate structure for NGV fueling stations was not in compliance with its 1993 guidelines because it allowed the utility to unfairly compete, the 1993 guidelines themselves required the utility to bring its NGV programs into conformity with the guidelines. If SoCalGas failed to do so, then the mere fact that the CPUC did not address that failure until 1995 does not constitute an articulated state policy approving the nonconforming conduct. While the commission in its 1995 decision did not order immediate revisions in the utilities' rates but instead directed the utilities "to file tariffs that will allow for gradual transition from the current rate levels to rates that reflect the direct and fully allocated long-run marginal cost of the service [*32] being provided", id. at 557, this alone does not constitute ratification of SoCalGas' rate structure during the July 1993 to November 1995 period because it is not a clear articulation or affirmative expression of state policy to grant immunity to all pre-November 1995 conduct.

5. Conclusion

SoCalGas has, on the record before us, shown a clearly articulated state policy to allow utilities to use ratepayer funds to participate in the NGV-infrastructure market only in the period between July 1991 and July 1993. We therefore reverse the district court's dismissal to the extent that it applies to claims for conduct by SoCalGas after July 1993.

B. Actual Supervision

To qualify for state-action immunity, SoCalGas must show not only a clearly articulated state policy but also the active supervision of that policy by the state. For the period before July 1993, SoCalGas has sufficiently demonstrated such supervision. In January 1992, the CPUC approved a detailed application from SoCalGas to spend over $ 10 million in ratepayer funds on NGV programs over two years. 43 C.P.U.C.2d at 113. The application had been modified by a settlement agreement between SoCalGas and the Division [*33] of Ratepayer Advocates, and the commission modified it further. Id. at 105, 109. Although that approval was ex parte, public hearings had been held on the identical policy issues raised by PG&E's similar application. 40 C.P.U.C.2d at 724. In addition, an ALJ had considered briefs from several parties on the proposed application and settlement agreement. Most importantly, SoCalGas's application proposed "to install up to 51 refueling stations to serve SoCalGas and customer NGVs", 43 C.P.U.C.2d at 111, and the commission's approval of the application authorized SoCalGas to charge the costs of its proposed projects to its ratepayers, id. at 113. Thus, the CPUC expressly approved the conduct challenged by Cal CNG - the use of ratepayer funds by SoCalGas to provide NGV fueling stations to customers at a price below the cost of the stations - between January 1992 and July 1993. We therefore affirm the district court's dismissal to the extent that it applies to claims for actions by SoCalGas before July 1993.

II. Other SoCalGas Conduct

Cal CNG challenges the district court's ruling that, in the absence of an antitrust claim for the provision to customers of ratepayer-subsidized [*34] NGV fueling stations, none of the other SoCalGas conduct alleged by Cal CNG - business disparagement, harassment, dissuasion of potential customers and investors, threatening reprisals against Cal CNG, and interference with Cal CNG's relationship with Henderson - had sufficient independent competitive impact to state a federal antitrust claim. Because the district court erred in dismissing Cal CNG's claims based on the ratepayer-subsidized NGV fueling stations, we reverse this subsidiary ruling as to the post-July 1993 period.

III. Henderson<sup>10</sup>

The district court dismissed Cal CNG's claims against Henderson on the ground that Henderson could not have conspired or combined with SoCalGas to violate the antitrust laws because SoCalGas's conduct was immunized by the state-action doctrine. Again, because we reverse the district court's ruling on state-action immunity, we also reverse the dismissal of the [*35] claims against Henderson as well.

CONCLUSION

Because California clearly articulated a state policy to shield utility participation in the NGV-infrastructure market from competition only until July 1993, and actively supervised SoCalGas's participation in that market during that period, the district court's dismissal on state-action immunity grounds is reversed to the extent it applies to actions taken by SoCalGas after July 1993.

AFFIRMED in part, REVERSED in part, and REMANDED. Each party shall bear its own costs.

ORDER

The opinion filed September 19, 1996, Slip op. 12459 is modified as follows:

At Slip op. 12468-69, commencing three lines from bottom of 12468, delete, "regulated by state agencies: "Private conduct is immunized if it is a foreseeable result of state agency action and if circumstances justify an inference that the agency intended to authorize the conduct." Columbia Steel Casting Co. v. Portland General Electric Co., 60 F.3d 1390, 1396 \(9th Cir. 1995\)."

Replace with: "regulated by state agencies. Columbia Steel Casting Co. v. Portland General Electric Co., 60 F.3d 1390 \(9th Cir. 1995\) (Slip op. 16261, Amended Opinion filed December 27, 1996)." [*36]

The mandate shall issue forthwith.

---

End of Document

<sup>10</sup> Henderson has not appeared in this appeal and filed no responsive brief to Cal CNG's opening brief.

White v. Central Vt. Pub. Serv. Corp.

United States District Court for the District of Vermont

September 20, 1996, Decided ; September 20, 1996, FILED

Docket No. 2:94-cv-386

Reporter

958 F. Supp. 174 *; 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20719 **

BRADFORD E. WHITE, MICHEL J. MESSIER and JOHN A. WASIK, Plaintiffs, v. CENTRAL VERMONT PUBLIC SERVICE CORPORATION, FREDERIC H. BERTRAND, ROBERT P. BLISS, JR., ELIZABETH COLEMAN, LUTHER F. HACKETT, FRANCES HUTNER, F. RAY KEYSER, JR., MARY ALICE MCKENZIE, GORDON P. MILLS, PRESTON LEETE SMITH, ROBERT D. STOUT, THOMAS C. WEBB, and FRED W. YEADON, JR., Defendants.

Disposition: [**1] Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the Complaint (paper 9) GRANTED. All other motions pending as of the date of this opinion DENIED as MOOT.

Core Terms

---

retroactively, Clayton Act, threshold, savings, repeal, interlocking directorate, shareholder, saving clause, intent of congress, antitrust, conflicting interest, motion to dismiss, state claims, possessed, fuel, supplemental jurisdiction, Plaintiffs', pendent, Counts, impair, cases

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

HN1 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Clayton Act

Section 8 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 19\(a\)\(1\), as amended effective November 16, 1990, provides in relevant part that no person shall, at the same time, serve as a director or officer in any two corporations that are (A) engaged in whole or in part in commerce; and (B) by virtue of their business and location of operation, competitors, so that the elimination of competition by agreement between them would constitute a violation of any of the antitrust laws; if each of the corporations has capital, surplus, and undivided profits aggregating more than $ 10,000,000 as adjusted.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

Governments > Federal Government > US Congress

Governments > Legislation > Effect & Operation > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Effect & Operation > Retrospective Operation

**HN2** [down] Legislation, Interpretation

The analysis a court must undertake to determine whether Congress intended a statute to apply to events that took place before its enactment is as follows. When a case implicates a federal statute enacted after the events in suit, the court's first task is to determine whether Congress has expressly prescribed the statute's proper reach. If Congress has done so, of course, there is no need to resort to judicial default rules. When, however, the statute contains no such express command, the court must determine whether the new statute would have retroactive effect, i.e., whether it would impair rights a party possessed when he acted, increase a party's liability for past conduct, or impose new duties with respect to transactions already completed. If the statute would operate retroactively, the traditional presumption is that it does not govern absent clear congressional intent favoring such a result.

Governments > Legislation > Effect & Operation > Retrospective Operation

Governments > Legislation > Effect & Operation > General Overview

**HN3** [down] Effect & Operation, Retrospective Operation

A statute does not have retroactive effect merely because it is applied in a case arising from conduct antedating the statute's enactment, or upsets expectations based in prior law. The question is rather whether the statute would impair rights a party possessed when he acted, increase a party's liability for past conduct, or impose new duties with respect to transactions already completed.

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Jurisdictional Sources > Statutory Sources

Governments > Courts > Authority to Adjudicate

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Jurisdictional Sources > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Effect & Operation > General Overview

**HN4** [down] Jurisdictional Sources, Statutory Sources

The United States Supreme Court regularly applies intervening statutes conferring or ousting jurisdiction, whether or not jurisdiction lay when the underlying conduct occurred or when the suit was filed.

Governments > Legislation > Effect & Operation > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

**HN5** [down] Legislation, Effect & Operation

There is an "apparent tension" between two rules of statutory construction which could apply in cases where the issue of retroactivity is raised: one, that a court is to apply the law in effect at the time it renders its decision; and two, that retroactivity is not favored in the law. However, where the congressional intent is clear, it governs.

958 F. Supp. 174, *174A 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20719, **1

Governments > Legislation > Expiration, Repeal & Suspension

Governments > Legislation > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Effect & Operation > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN6 Legislation, Expiration, Repeal & Suspension

1 U.S.C.S. § 109 \(1985\) provides, in relevant part that the repeal of any statute shall not have the effect to release or extinguish any penalty, forfeiture, or liability incurred under such statute, unless the repealing Act shall so expressly provide, and such statute shall be treated as still remaining in force for the purpose of sustaining any proper action or prosecution for the enforcement of such penalty, forfeiture, or liability.

Governments > Legislation > Effect & Operation > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Interlocking Directorates

Governments > Legislation > Expiration, Repeal & Suspension

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN7 Legislation, Effect & Operation

If the very purpose of Congress is to take away jurisdiction, the statute does not survive under 1 U.S.C.S. § 109, and § 109 does not save a statute solely jurisdictional in its scope.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Case & Controversy Requirements > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > Same Case & Controversy

HN8 Justiciability, Case & Controversy Requirements

A district court has supplemental jurisdiction over claims that are so related to a claim over which it has original jurisdiction that it forms part of the same case or controversy. 28 U.S.C.S. § 1337\(a\) \(1993\).

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > Pendent Claims

HN9 [blue download icon] Subject Matter Jurisdiction, Jurisdiction Over Actions

When a court has dismissed all claims over which it has original jurisdiction, it may, but is not required to, decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over any remaining claims. 28 U.S.C.S. § 1337\(c\)\(3\). Section 1337\(c\) specifies four circumstances under which supplemental jurisdiction may be declined, one of which is when the court has dismissed all claims over which it has original jurisdiction.

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > General Overview

Governments > Courts > Authority to Adjudicate

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

HN10 [blue download icon] Subject Matter Jurisdiction, Supplemental Jurisdiction

If the dismissal of an antitrust count is based on lack of jurisdiction over the subject matter of the suit, the court lacks the power to adjudicate any supplemental claims appended to it, and the remaining claims must be dismissed.

Counsel: For BRADFORD E. WHITE, plaintiff: Carl H Lisman, Lisman & Lisman, Burlington, VT. Victor H. Polk, Jr., Esq., Bingham, Dana & Gould, Boston, MA. For MICHAEL J. MESSIER, plaintiff: Carl H Lisman, (See above). Victor H. Polk, Jr., Esq., (See above). For JOHN A. WASIK, plaintiff: Carl H Lisman, (See above). Victor H. Polk, Jr., Esq., (See above).

For CENTRAL VERMONT PUBLIC SERVICE CORP., defendant: Joseph Michael Kraus, Esq., Central Vermont Public Service Corporation, Rutland, VT. For FREDERIC H. BERTRAND, defendant: Robert Berry Luce, Downs, Rachlin & Martin, P.C., Burlington, VT. Randall W. Bodner, Esq., Philip C. Koski, Esq., Ropes & Gray, Boston, MA. For ROBERT P. BLISS, JR., defendant: Robert Berry Luce, (See above). Randall W. Bodner, Esq., (See above), Philip C. Koski, Esq., (See above). For ELIZABETH COLEMAN, defendant: Robert Berry Luce, (See above). Randall W. Bodner, Esq., (See above), Philip C. Koski, Esq., (See above). For LUTHER F. HACKETT, defendant: Robert Berry Luce, (See above). Randall W. Bodner, Esq., (See above), Philip C. [**2] Koski, Esq., (See above). For FRANCES C. HUTNER, defendant: Robert Berry Luce, (See above). Randall W. Bodner, Esq., (See above), Philip C. Koski, Esq., (See above). For F. RAY KEYSER, JR., defendant: Peter Welles Hall, Reiber, Kenlan, Schiebert, Hall & Facey, Rutland, VT. For MARY ALICE MCKENZIE, defendant: Robert Berry Luce, (See above). Randall W. Bodner, Esq., (See above), Philip C. Koski, Esq., (See above). For GORDON P. MILLS, defendant: Robert Berry Luce, (See above). Randall W. Bodner, Esq., (See above), Philip C. Koski, Esq., (See above). For PRESTON LEETE SMITH, defendant: Robert Berry Luce, (See above). Randall W. Bodner, Esq., (See above), Philip C. Koski, Esq., (See above). For ROBERT D. STOUT, defendant: Robert Berry Luce, (See above). Randall W. Bodner, Esq., (See above), Philip C. Koski, Esq., (See above). For THOMAS C. WEBB, defendant: Edwin H Amidon, Jr., Esq., Roesler, Whittlesey, Meekins & Amidon, Burlington, VT. For FRED W. YEADON, JR., defendant: Robert Berry Luce, (See above). Randall W. Bodner, Esq., (See above), Philip C. Koski, Esq., (See above).

Judges: William K. Sessions, III, United States District Court Judge

Opinion by: William K. Sessions, III

Opinion

---

[*175] OPINION AND [**3] ORDER

Plaintiffs, shareholders and customers of Central Vermont Public Service Corporation ("CVPS"), an electric utility, bring suit against CVPS and members of its board of directors for violation of federal antitrust law and for breach of fiduciary duty. All Defendants have moved to dismiss the Complaint [*176] for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. For the reasons stated below, Defendants' motion to dismiss is GRANTED.

Background

According to the Complaint, for several years CVPS has faced competitive pressure from alternative suppliers of fuel, while at the same time environmentalists and regulators were forcing CVPS itself to reduce demand for electric water and space heating by promoting fuel-switching.<sup>1</sup> CVPS did not invest in these alternative fuel services such as propane and oil, but chose instead to attempt, unsuccessfully, to improve its poor performance by speculating in riskier energy-related ventures. Verified Complaint, PP 11-14.

[**4] Plaintiffs allege that Defendant F. Ray Keyser, Jr., Chairman of the Board of CVPS, and his family own and have acquired businesses ("the OSI companies") which distribute oil and propane products in the CVPS service area in direct competition with CVPS. Id., PP 15-18. Keyser's asserted conflict of interest has influenced CVPS's judgment not to enter these alternative fuel markets and not to disclose the conflict of interest to shareholders. Id., PP 16-22. The other members of the board of directors have neither urged investment in propane or fossil fuels nor addressed the issue of Keyser's conflict of interest. Id., PP 23-26.

CVPS and its Board, by ignoring the conflict of interest, have allowed CVPS to have the worst of both worlds. It has lost revenues to other energy sources through its own 'fuel switching' efforts while currently earning the enmity of environmentalists and regulators and consuming valuable financial and human resources because of the realization of the economic consequences of switching customers to alternative fuels without a corresponding presence in that market.

Id., P 32.

On November 10, 1994, Plaintiff Bradford E. White wrote [**5] to CVPS requesting a copy of its shareholder list. CVPS denied White's request on November 15, 1994.

Plaintiffs filed their lawsuit on December 30, 1994, asserting that, as representatives of a class of similarly situated consumers, they had been injured by Keyser's conflict of interest, in violation of federal law prohibiting interlocking directorates between competing companies, Clayton Act § 8, 15 U.S.C. § 19 \(1973\). As shareholders of CVPS, they brought corporate causes of action against Keyser and other members of the CVPS board of directors for breach of fiduciary duty. Finally, White sought to enforce CVPS's obligation under Vermont law to provide a shareholder list upon proper request.

Discussion

Defendants have argued three points in their motion to dismiss. First, they argue that Count I, which alleges a violation of the Clayton Act's interlocking directorate prohibition, should be dismissed for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Second, they argue that Counts II and III, which assert shareholder derivative claims of breach of fiduciary duty, should be dismissed for failure to satisfy the pleading requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 23.1. Third, [**6] they argue that Count IV, which seeks a list of CVPS shareholders, should be dismissed for failure to comply with the statutory prerequisites for obtaining a shareholder list set forth at Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 11A, § 16.02 \(1993\).

<sup>1</sup> Fuel-switching programs offer financial assistance to retail customers of electricity for water and space heating to switch to alternative sources of fuel, if such a switch would be cost-effective. Least-Cost Investments, Energy Efficiency, Conservation and Management of Demand for Energy, Docket No. 5270- CV-1, 122 Pub. Util. Rep. 4th 153, 1991 WL 501827 (Vt. Pub. Serv. Bd. Mar. 19, 1991).

I. Motion to Dismiss Antitrust Claim.

Defendants have asserted three grounds in support of their claim that Plaintiffs' Clayton Act count should be dismissed: one, that Plaintiffs do not satisfy the statutory "jurisdictional threshold" for bringing a case under § 8 of the Clayton Act; two, that Plaintiffs [*177] lack standing to bring a § 8 claim; and three, that they are immune from this antitrust attack under the state action doctrine and under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. The Court finds that Plaintiffs have not satisfied the jurisdictional threshold for bringing an interlocking directorate complaint under § 8 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 19, and therefore does not reach Defendants' second and third arguments.

A. Clayton Act § 8 "Jurisdictional Threshold"

HN1[] Section 8 of the Clayton Act, as amended effective November 16, 1990, provides in relevant part:

No person shall, at the same time, serve as a director or officer in any two corporations [**7] . . . that are --
 (A) engaged in whole or in part in commerce; and
 (B) by virtue of their business and location of operation, competitors, so that the elimination of competition by agreement between them would constitute a violation of any of the antitrust laws; if each of the corporations has capital, surplus, and undivided profits aggregating more than $ 10,000,000 as adjusted . . .
 .<sup>2</sup>

15 U.S.C. § 19\(a\)\(1\).

Plaintiffs do not dispute that they cannot state a claim under the statute as it currently exists or as it existed at the time they filed their complaint, because they cannot show the requisite minimum amounts. Plaintiffs [**8] contend, however, that the relevant statute is the one which existed at the time of Defendant Keyser's wrongful conduct, asserted to be from 1981 to 1990. Prior to the 1990 amendment, 15 U.S.C. § 19 prohibited interlocking directorates if either company had $ 1,000,000 in capital, surplus and undivided profits.

The issue therefore is whether the 1990 amendment should apply to conduct which occurred prior to its enactment in a case which was not filed until after the effective date of the amendment. At the outset, it is far from clear whether Defendants have actually challenged the court's subject matter jurisdiction pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(1\), or challenged the adequacy of the pleadings pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\). See Montana-Dakota Util. Co. v. Northwestern Pub. Serv. Co., 341 U.S. 246, 249, 95 L. Ed. 912, 71 S. Ct. 692 (1951). Under either analysis the outcome, dismissal of the Count, must be the same, however. The only distinction in this case between dismissal for lack of subject matter jurisdiction or for failure to state a claim is in whether the Court has discretion under 28 U.S.C. § 1367 to retain jurisdiction over the pendent state claims set forth [**9] in Counts II through IV.

The United States Supreme Court in the recent case of Landgraf v. USI Film Prod., 511 U.S. 244, 114 S. Ct. 1483, 128 L. Ed. 2d 229 (1994), described HN2[] the analysis a court must undertake to determine whether Congress intended a statute to apply to events which took place before its enactment:

When a case implicates a federal statute enacted after the events in suit, the court's first task is to determine whether Congress has expressly prescribed the statute's proper reach. If Congress has done so, of course, there is no need to resort to judicial default rules. When, however, the statute contains no such express command, the court must determine whether the new statute would have retroactive effect, i.e., whether it would impair rights a party possessed when he acted, increase a party's liability for past conduct, or impose new duties with respect to transactions already completed. If the statute would operate retroactively, our traditional presumption teaches that it does not govern absent clear congressional intent favoring such a result.

Landgraf, 114 S. Ct. at 1505. See also Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp. v. Bonjorno, 494 U.S. [**10] 827, 835, 108 L. Ed. 2d 842, 110 S. Ct. 1570 (1990) (starting point for interpretation of statute is 'language of the statute itself').

---

<sup>2</sup> 15 U.S.C. § 19\(a\)\(5\) provides for an annual adjustment of the $ 10,000,000 threshold based on an amount equal to the percentage increase or decrease in the gross national product. As of the date this complaint was filed, the adjusted jurisdictional threshold was $ 12,092,000. Revised Jurisdictional Thresholds for Section 8 of the Clayton Act, 59 Fed. Reg. 751 \(1994\).

Absent a [*178] clearly expressed legislative intention to the contrary, that language must ordinarily be regarded as conclusive.') (quoting Consumer Prod. Safety Comm'n v. GTE Sylvania, Inc., 447 U.S. 102, 108, 64 L. Ed. 2d 766, 100 S. Ct. 2051 \(1980\)).

The plain language of the 1990 amendment does not state whether it is to be applied to causes of action which arose prior to the statute's effective date. The next step is to determine whether the statute has retroactive effect. Landgraf, 114 S. Ct. at 1505.

1. Retroactive effect.

As the Supreme Court noted, HN3 [↑] a statute does not have retroactive effect merely because it is applied in a case arising from conduct antedating the statute's enactment, or upsets expectations based in prior law. Landgraf, 114 S. Ct. at 1499 (citation omitted). The question is rather whether the statute "would impair rights a party possessed when he acted, increase a party's liability for past conduct, or impose new duties with respect to transactions already completed." Id. at 1505. The 1990 amendment places no such [**11] burdens on either party.

The statute does not impair rights possessed by Defendant Keyser during the 1981-1990 period complained of. On the contrary, obviously it legalizes what was assertedly illegal conduct at the time.

Although Plaintiffs possessed a right to seek redress for an illegal interlocking directorate such as they describe in their complaint during this period, they did not then act. The statute does not impair rights possessed by Plaintiffs when they acted, in December, 1994, by filing a lawsuit. At the time they took that action, they did not possess a right to sue under 15 U.S.C. § 19 unless they could show that both corporations possessed capital, surplus and undivided profits aggregating more than $ 10,000,000. See by contrast In re Prudential Sec. Inc. Ltd. Partnerships Litig., 930 F. Supp. 68 \(S.D.N.Y. 1996\) (statute withdrawing jurisdiction over civil RICO claims would not apply to pending case because it would impair plaintiffs' ability to recover damages for possible violation of federal law).

The statute does not increase either party's liability for past conduct; it eliminates Defendant Keyser's liability. Nor does the statute impose new duties [**12] with respect to transactions already completed. In short, the statute does not operate retroactively with regard to this case.

Since the statute does not operate retroactively, it is not necessary to ascertain Congressional intention as to the scope of the statute. Nevertheless, the legislative history of the 1990 amendment to 15 U.S.C. § 19 does suggest that Congress intended to alter the district courts' jurisdiction over interlocking directorate suits.

2. Congressional intent.

The House Report, noting that the "jurisdictional test" in section 8 remained unchanged since its enactment in 1914, stated that the purpose of The Interlocking Directorate Act of 1990 was to amend section 8 of the Clayton Act by "increasing the jurisdictional threshold from $ 1 million to $ 10 million." "While the fundamental purpose behind the enactment of section 8 remains an important one, the Committee has concluded that the original statute's jurisdictional threshold does not adequately reflect the size or nature of the modern corporation in the current economy." The Subcommittee on Economic and Commercial Law recognized "that the existing ban on directorial interlocks was tied to a jurisdictional [**13] trigger of $ 1 million that was over 75 years old and expressed in 1914 dollars." H.R. Rep. No. 101-483, 101st Cong., 2nd Sess. 1-5 (1990).

The Senate Report similarly noted that a purpose of the act was to "raise[] the jurisdictional threshold, . . . to reflect our modern economy and inflation." It stated specifically:

Because of the substantial increase in price levels since 1914, this [$1 million] dollar threshold is obviously far lower than the size of corporations Congress originally sought to cover. . . . By increasing the threshold, it is the intention of the committee to maintain the original congressional intent of applying the sections only to corporations [*179] which are engaged in some significant degree of commerce.

S. Rep. No. 101-286, 101st Cong., 2nd Sess. 2, 5 (1990).

The language of the legislative history demonstrates that Congress intended to alter a jurisdictional trigger or threshold in order to restore the original Congressional intent of regulating only those corporations engaged in a significant degree of commerce, rather than to prevent all conflicts of interest or anticompetitive conduct. See also [Protectoseal Co. v. Barancik, 23 F.3d \[\*\*14\] 1184, 1187 \(7th Cir. 1994\)](#).

HN4 The United States Supreme Court pointed out that it "regularly applied intervening statutes conferring or ousting jurisdiction, whether or not jurisdiction lay when the underlying conduct occurred or when the suit was filed." Landgraf, 114 S. Ct. at 1501. See also Bruner v. United States, 343 U.S. 112, 96 L. Ed. 786, 72 S. Ct. 581 \(1952\); Hallowell v. Commons, 239 U.S. 506, 60 L. Ed. 409, 36 S. Ct. 202 \(1916\).

As Justice Scalia discussed in his concurring opinion in Landgraf, the key concern of a jurisdictional provision is with the ability to exercise judicial power over a case, not with the conduct or events giving rise to the claim. A new jurisdictional rule may or may not leave a litigant with an alternate forum for his claim, but the purpose of provisions conferring or eliminating jurisdiction is to permit or forbid the exercise of judicial power--so that the relevant event for retroactivity purposes is the moment at which that power is sought to be exercised. Thus, applying a jurisdiction-eliminating statute to undo past judicial action would be applying it retroactively; but applying it to prevent any judicial action after [**15] the statute takes effect is applying it prospectively.

Id., at 1525 (Scalia, J., concurring).

The Supreme Court recognized HN5 an "apparent tension" between two rules of statutory construction which could apply in cases where the issue of retroactivity is raised: one, "that 'a court is to apply the law in effect at the time it renders its decision;" and two, that "retroactivity is not favored in the law." Landgraf, 114 S. Ct. at 1496 \(1994\) (quoting Bradley v. Richmond Sch. Bd., 416 U.S. 696, 711, 40 L. Ed. 2d 476, 94 S. Ct. 2006 \(1974\) and Bowen v. Georgetown Univ. Hosp., 488 U.S. 204, 208, 102 L. Ed. 2d 493, 109 S. Ct. 468 \(1988\)). However, as the Court noted, "where the congressional intent is clear, it governs." Landgraf, 114 S. Ct. at 1496. There is no need to resort to canons of statutory construction in this case, because congressional intent is clear.

3. Savings Clause, 1 U.S.C. § 109.

Plaintiffs urge this Court to find that the general savings clause, HN6 1 U.S.C. § 109 \(1985\) applies to save their cause of action under the pre-1990 version of 15 U.S.C. § 19. The savings clause provides, in relevant part:

The repeal of any statute shall [**16] not have the effect to release or extinguish any penalty, forfeiture, or liability incurred under such statute, unless the repealing Act shall so expressly provide, and such statute shall be treated as still remaining in force for the purpose of sustaining any proper action or prosecution for the enforcement of such penalty, forfeiture, or liability.

In Warden v. Marrero, 417 U.S. 653, 660, 41 L. Ed. 2d 383, 94 S. Ct. 2532 \(1974\), the United States Supreme Court explained that the savings clause was enacted to abolish the common law presumption that repeal of a criminal statute resulted in the abatement of all prosecutions which had not reached final disposition. Historically the Court has held that the clause covered criminal statutes. Id. at 661 (citing United States v. Reisinger, 128 U.S. 398, 32 L. Ed. 480, 9 S. Ct. 99 \(1888\)). But the Court and several lower courts have also applied the savings clause in civil cases. See De La Rama S.S. Co. v. United States, 344 U.S. 386, 97 L. Ed. 422, 73 S. Ct. 381 \(1953\) (savings clause permitted insured to recover from government for loss of ship insured under the War Risk Insurance Act, notwithstanding its repeal); [**17] Hertz v. Woodman, 218 U.S. 205, 54 L. Ed. 1001, 30 S. Ct. 621 \(1910\) (savings clause extends to liability or obligation to pay a tax imposed under a repealed [*180] statute); Commonwealth of Mass., Dept. of Pub. Welfare v. Secretary of Agric., 984 F.2d 514 (1st Cir.) (savings clause permitted Food and Nutrition Service to impose sanctions against Commonwealth for exceeding allowable margin of error for distributing food stamps, despite repeal of quality control program), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 822, 126 L. Ed. 2d 49, 114 S. Ct. 81 (1993); Keener v. Washington Metro. Area Transit Auth., 255 U.S. App. D.C. 148, 800 F.2d 1173 \(D.C. Cir. 1986\) (under savings statute, repeal of workers' compensation act did not result in forfeiture of remedies available at time of repeal for injuries incurred prior to repeal), cert. denied, 480 U.S. 918, 94 L. Ed. 2d 690, 107 S. Ct. 1375 (1987).

HN7 If the "very purpose of Congress [was] to take away jurisdiction, of course it [would] not survive," and § 109 does not save a statute solely jurisdictional in its scope. De La Rama, 344 U.S. at 390. Section 8 of the Clayton Act is not solely a jurisdictional statute, however; it sets forth [\[\*\*18\]](#) the elements of a violation of the prohibition against interlocking directorates.

The question in this case then is whether the amendment to Section 8 of the Clayton Act has the effect of releasing or extinguishing a liability incurred under the statute, neither party having suggested that a penalty or forfeiture is involved here. A close look at the cases holding that the savings statute has preserved civil liabilities incurred under a repealed or amended statute reveals that "liability incurred" is narrowly interpreted.

The United States Supreme Court in Hertz v. Woodman, 218 U.S. at 217-221, discussed the meaning of "liability incurred" in the general savings statute in the context of an inheritance tax case. Woodman's executors sought to recover an inheritance tax paid under protest. The statute in effect at Woodman's death provided that an inheritance tax was "due and payable" within one year of the death of a testator. After Woodman's death, but before the tax was collected or his legacies were distributed, the statute was repealed. The Court held that because the right of succession was absolute upon Woodman's death, and no other fact or event was essential to the imposition [\[\*\*19\]](#) of liability, liability for the tax had been imposed at that time. Because death occurred prior to the repeal, the savings provision operated to preserve the tax liability. Id. at 224.

Hertz v. Woodman was an action to recover a "liability" already imposed and collected, as opposed to an action to adjudicate whether liability existed, as is presented in the instant case.

The cases that have held that the savings statute preserved a civil cause of action have, almost without exception, involved actions to enforce collection or recovery of a liability already incurred by operation of contract or law, as opposed to actions seeking adjudication of whether liability existed at all. See De La Rama, 344 U.S. at 388 (government agreed that it had incurred liability to shipping company under the War Risk Insurance Act prior to its repeal, and question was where could liability be enforced); Keener, 800 F.2d at 1175, 1179 (suit for recovery of workers' compensation benefits); Lovetro v. United States, 602 F. Supp. 574 \(S.D.N.Y. 1984\) (suit for wrongfully withheld wages and double-wage penalty).

However, in [Professional & Business Men's Life Ins. Co. v. Bankers Life Co., \[\*\*20\] 163 F. Supp. 274, 295 \(D. Mont. 1958\)](#), a district court observed in dictum that § 109 would save an antitrust cause of action under section 7 of the Sherman Act, "to give effect to the will and intention of Congress." As discussed above, Congress's intention in amending section 8 of the Clayton Act was expressly to return to the practice of regulating conflicts of interest only in those corporations engaged in a significant degree of commerce. Reading § 109 to save the pre-amendment version of 15 U.S.C. § 19 would run counter to "the will and intention of Congress," unlike the situation presented in Professional & Business Men's Life.

Accordingly, this Court holds that 1 U.S.C. § 109 does not preserve Plaintiffs' right to sue under the pre-amendment version of 15 U.S.C. § 19, because liability had not been incurred under the pre-amendment version, and because the will and intention of Congress [\[\*181\]](#) was to eliminate the jurisdiction of the district courts to hear such cases.

Because the 1990 amendment in fact does not operate retroactively according to the Landgraf test; because Congress's stated intention was to limit jurisdiction over interlocking directorate claims; and [\[\*\*21\]](#) because the savings statute, 1 U.S.C. § 109, does not apply under these circumstances; the 1990 amendment applies to this 1994-filed case. Defendants' motion to dismiss the antitrust count is Granted for failure to satisfy the jurisdictional threshold established by the 1990 amendment to section 8 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 19.

II. Supplemental Jurisdiction over Shareholder Claims

The remaining counts of Plaintiffs' complaint assert state law claims, for which there is no independent basis for federal jurisdiction. HN8<sup>8</sup> A district court has supplemental jurisdiction over claims that are so related to a claim over which it has original jurisdiction that it forms part of the same case or controversy. 28 U.S.C. § 1367\(a\) \(1993\).

The federal claim having been dismissed, the next issue is whether it continues to be appropriate to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over the remaining counts of Plaintiffs' complaint. HN9<sup>9</sup> When a court has dismissed all claims over which it has original jurisdiction, it may, but is not required to, decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over any remaining claims. 28 U.S.C. § 1367\(c\)\(3\).

28 U.S.C. § 1367\(c\) specifies four circumstances under [\[\*\*22\]](#) which supplemental jurisdiction may be declined, one of which is when the court "has dismissed all claims over which it has original jurisdiction." 28 U.S.C. § 1367\(c\)\(3\). Prior to the enactment of § 1367 in 1990, the exercise of judicial discretion to hear a pendent state claim was guided by United Mine Workers v. Gibbs, 383 U.S. 715, 726, 16 L. Ed. 2d 218, 86 S. Ct. 1130 \(1966\), in which the Court stated:

It has consistently been recognized that pendent jurisdiction is a doctrine of discretion, not of plaintiff's right. Its justification lies in considerations of judicial economy, convenience and fairness to litigants; if these are not present a federal court should hesitate to exercise jurisdiction over state claims . . . . Certainly, if the federal claims are dismissed before trial, even though not insubstantial in a jurisdictional sense, the state claims should be dismissed as well.

Section 1367\(c\) rejected the language in Gibbs which seems to require dismissal of state claims if the federal claim is dismissed before trial by providing that even in those circumstances the decision to retain or relinquish jurisdiction is within the court's discretion. [\[\*\*23\]](#) See McLaughlin, The Federal Supplementary Jurisdiction Statute--A Constitutional and Statutory Analysis, 24 Ariz. St. L.J. 849, 980 (1992). See also Carnegie-Mellon Univ. v. Cohill, 484 U.S. 343, 350, 98 L. Ed. 2d 720, 108 S. Ct. 614 \(1988\). But see Salim v. Proulx, 93 F.3d 86, No. 95-7899, 1996 WL 476896, at *6 (2d Cir. Aug. 23, 1996).

Because the dismissal of the federal claim has occurred "at the threshold" of the case, and before the parties have engaged in discovery on the pendent claims, this Court exercises its discretion under 28 U.S.C. § 1367\(c\)\(3\) to dismiss the pendent state claims in Counts II through IV. Salim, 1996 WL 476896, at *1.<sup>3</sup>

HN10<sup>10</sup> If the dismissal of the antitrust count is based on lack of jurisdiction over the subject matter of the suit, this Court of course lacks the power to adjudicate any supplemental claims appended to it, and the [\[\*\*24\]](#) remaining claims must be dismissed. Envirotech Corp. v. Bethlehem Steel Corp., 729 F.2d 70, 73 \(2d Cir. 1984\). Crane Co. v. American Standard, Inc., 603 F.2d 244, 254 \(2d Cir. 1979\).

CONCLUSION

Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the Complaint (paper 9) is hereby GRANTED. All other motions pending as of the date of this opinion are hereby DENIED as MOOT.

Dated at Burlington, Vermont this 20th day of September, 1996.

William K. Sessions, III

United States District Court Judge

---

End of Document

---

<sup>3</sup> Should the Plaintiffs choose to refile their claims in state court, of course 28 U.S.C. § 1367\(d\) will operate to toll the period of limitations.

Baker's Carpet Gallery v. Mohawk Indus.

United States District Court for the Northern District of Georgia, Rome Division

September 23, 1996, Decided ; September 23, 1996, FILED

CIVIL ACTION FILE NO. 4:94-CV-0101-HLM

Reporter

942 F. Supp. 1464 *; 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15008 **; 1996-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,612

Baker's Carpet Gallery, Inc., Plaintiff, v. Mohawk Industries, Inc., Defendant.

Disposition: [**1] Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment [39] with respect to claims arising from alleged antitrust violations that occurred prior to July 30, 1993 GRANTED IN PART, and Defendant's Motion with respect to claims arising from alleged antitrust violations that occurred after July 30, 1993 DENIED IN PART. Plaintiff's Motion for Leave to File a Very Short Response With Brief in Support [63] GRANTED.

Core Terms

---

termination, prices, dealer, manufacturer, resale price, continuity, summary judgment, employees, transshipping, conspiracy, antitrust, carpet, telephone, adhere, successor liability, Sherman Act, allegations, Deposition, ambiguous, policies, products, circumstantial evidence, conversations, adduced, courts, alleged conspiracy, memorandum, antitrust violation, predetermined, general rule

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

HN1[] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

When deciding a motion for summary judgment, the court must view the evidence and all factual inferences in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion.

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Business Considerations > General Overview

Torts > Vicarious Liability > Corporations > Predecessor & Successor Corporations

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Liabilities & Rights of Successors > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Liabilities & Rights of Successors > Mere Continuation

HN2[] Mergers & Acquisitions Law, General Business Considerations

942 F. Supp. 1464, *1464A 996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15008, **1

A corporation that purchases or otherwise acquires the assets of a second corporation does not assume the debts and liabilities of the second corporation. The doctrine of successor liability recognizes four traditional exceptions to this general rule, allowing a court to impose liability upon the successor corporation. One such exception applies when the successor corporation is a "mere continuation" or reincarnation of the selling corporation.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN3 Summary Judgment, Supporting Materials

When evaluating a motion for summary judgment, the court may consider only that evidence that would be admissible at trial. Testimony as to an out-of-court statement by a nonparty witness is inadmissible hearsay, and therefore cannot be considered by the court when assessing the suitability of summary judgment.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Evidence > ... > Exemptions > Statements by Coconspirators > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

Evidence > ... > Hearsay > Exemptions > General Overview

Evidence > ... > Exemptions > Statements by Party Opponents > General Overview

HN4 Conspiracy, Elements

In order to admit evidence under the co-conspirator exception, the Eleventh Circuit requires a plaintiff to adduce sufficient evidence, independent of the co-conspirator statement itself, to establish both the conspiracy and the declarant's participation in the conspiracy.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

HN5 Summary Judgment, Opposing Materials

As a general rule, the party seeking summary judgment bears the burden of demonstrating the absence of a genuine dispute as to any material fact. The moving party's burden is discharged by showing, that is, pointing out to the trial court, that there is an absence of evidence to support the nonmoving party's case. In assessing whether the movant has met this burden, the trial court must view the evidence and all factual inferences in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion. Once the moving party has adequately supported its motion, the nonmovant has the burden of showing summary judgment is improper by coming forward with specific facts that demonstrate the existence of a genuine issue for trial.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

942 F. Supp. 1464, *1464A 996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15008, **1

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > Wrongful Termination > General Overview

HN6 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

The Eleventh Circuit has formulated a specialized test to assess, at the summary judgment stage, a dealer's claims of wrongful termination by a manufacturer acting pursuant to an illegal resale price maintenance agreement. The test provides that, in order to survive a defendant's properly supported motion for summary judgment, the plaintiff must adduce facts that tend to show (1) a conspiracy to set prices existed, and (2) the plaintiff was terminated pursuant to that conspiracy. To satisfy the first part of the test, the plaintiff must (A) point to evidence which tends to exclude the possibility that the manufacturer was operating independently in making his determination to terminate the distributor; and (B) satisfy the court that the conspiracy which he alleges is, objectively, an economically reasonable one. Sub-part A is satisfied if the plaintiff shows (i) the manufacturer sought an agreement from the dealer to adhere to resale prices; and (ii) the dealer communicated in some way its acquiescence in that agreement.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > Inferences

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Contracts Law > Defenses > Ambiguities & Mistakes > General Overview

HN7 Summary Judgment, Opposing Materials

The general summary judgment standard has been modified slightly for antitrust violations involving resale price maintenance agreements. Consequently, antitrust plaintiffs face a heavy standard when opposing a properly supported motion for summary judgment, because courts are limited in the range of permissible inferences that can be made from ambiguous evidence. Evidence is ambiguous if it is equally consistent with a finding of permissible competition as it is with a finding of illegal conspiracy. Without additional direct or circumstantial evidence, ambiguous evidence alone cannot support an inference of conspiracy. As a result, a conclusory statement by the plaintiff that a conspiracy existed, without more, does not support even an inference of conspiracy and cannot survive a motion for summary judgment.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > Inferences

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

HN8 Summary Judgment, Evidentiary Considerations

942 F. Supp. 1464, *1464A 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15008, **1

Despite the higher summary judgment standard for antitrust violations involving resale price maintenance agreements, the general rule that reasonable inferences from the evidence must be taken in favor of the nonmoving party is not changed. The plaintiff's evidence need not be such that only an inference of conspiracy may be derived from it. It must, however, go beyond equivocal complaints and tend to exclude the inference of independent action. Once reasonable inferences are taken in favor of the nonmoving party, the stringent standard of proof in vertical restraint cases must be satisfied. Thus, allegations by the plaintiff that are not merely conclusory, but rather can serve as direct evidence if believed, are enough to defeat a summary judgment motion.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Distributorships & Franchises > Termination > General Overview

HN9 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

The test for assessing whether plaintiff's evidence of an agreement to restrain trade in a dealer termination case provides that there must be evidence that tends to exclude the possibility of independent action by the manufacturer and distributor. That is, there must be direct or circumstantial evidence that reasonably tends to prove that the manufacturer and others had a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

HN10 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

In a vertical restraint case, plaintiff has the burden of showing that the alleged conspiracy is, objectively, a reasonable one.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN11 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

A manufacturer may announce in advance the terms under which it will sell its products, and may refuse to deal with those customers who do not comply with the terms. However, when the manufacturer's actions go beyond mere announcements of his policy and the simple refusal to deal, and he employs other means which effect adherence to his resale prices, the resulting agreement is a per se violation of the Sherman Act. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. Included in "other means" are threats of termination and other coercive actions taken after a dealer fails to conform to a manufacturer's predetermined prices.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Contracts Law > Defenses > Ambiguities & Mistakes > General Overview

942 F. Supp. 1464, *1464 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15008, **1

**HN12** [blue download icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

In the context of a summary judgment motion on a dealer's claims of wrongful termination by a manufacturer acting pursuant to an illegal resale price maintenance agreement, evidence is ambiguous if, notwithstanding its source, it is equally consistent with a finding of permissible competition as it is with a finding of illegal conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Contracts Law > Contract Formation > General Overview

**HN13** [blue download icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

To discharge the requirement of showing that the plaintiff in some way communicated its acquiescence in the manufacturer's proposed agreement to adhere to predetermined resale price requirement, the evidence must reveal a meeting of the minds in an unlawful arrangement which includes more than a showing that the distributor conformed to the resale price. It means as well that evidence must be presented both that the distributor communicated its acquiescence or agreement, and that this was sought by the manufacturer.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

**HN14** [blue download icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

If the alleged price-fixing conspiracy is economically irrational and practically infeasible, then summary judgment should be granted. This requirement does not introduce a special burden on plaintiffs facing summary judgment in antitrust cases, but rather permits summary judgment if the inferences arising from the plaintiff's evidence are so unreasonable as to be "economically senseless."

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

**HN15** [blue download icon] Sherman Act, Claims

A manufacturer may refuse to sell its goods to anyone, even if the refusal is based on a dealer's failure to adhere to suggested resale prices. A manufacturer's refusal to deal, however, is illegal under the Sherman Act if performed pursuant to a price-fixing conspiracy between the manufacturer and its dealer. In order to establish a violation of the Sherman Act in this context, plaintiff must present direct or circumstantial evidence that supports a reasonable inference that a causal connection exists between the termination and the alleged conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

HN16 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

When the manufacturer disputes the dealer's testimony at summary judgment in a case alleging a vertical restraint, the choice between two reasonable interpretations of the testimony properly is left for the jury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

HN17 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

Even if the court concludes that defendant participated in an illegal resale price maintenance agreement, plaintiff still must demonstrate that plaintiff has suffered antitrust injury. The Eleventh Circuit has held that a plaintiff can suffer antitrust injury simply by losing its dealership and consequently losing sales and profits.

Counsel: For BAKER'S CARPET GALLERY, INC., plaintiff: Tony Glen Powers, Rogers & Hardin, Atlanta, GA.

For MOHAWK INDUSTRIES, INC., defendant: Robert D. McCallum, Jr., Randall Lee Allen, Beth Kirby Toberman, Alston & Bird, Atlanta, GA.

For MOHAWK INDUSTRIES, INC., counter-claimant: Randall Lee Allen, Beth Kirby Toberman, Alston & Bird, Atlanta, GA.

For BAKER'S CARPET GALLERY, INC., counter-defendant: Tony Glen Powers, Rogers & Hardin, Atlanta, GA.

For MOHAWK INDUSTRIES, INC., counter-claimant: Robert D. McCallum, Jr., Randall Lee Allen, Beth Kirby Toberman, Alston & Bird, Atlanta, GA.

For BAKER'S CARPET GALLERY, INC., counter-defendant: Tony Glen Powers, Rogers & Hardin, Atlanta, GA.

Judges: Harold L. Murphy, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

Opinion by: Harold L. Murphy

Opinion

---

[*1467] ORDER

[**2] This is an antitrust case in which Plaintiff claims that Defendant unlawfully perpetuated and enforced a resale price maintenance agreement in violation of the Sherman Act. Plaintiff also alleges that Defendant illegally terminated Plaintiff's exclusive distribution rights after Plaintiff failed to abide by the pricing agreement. The case is before the Court on Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment [39] and Plaintiff's Motion for Leave to File a Very Short Response with Brief in Support [63].<sup>1</sup>

I. Background

Keeping in mind that, HN1 when deciding a motion for summary judgment, the Court "must view the evidence and all factual inferences in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion," the Court provides a general statement of facts. See Reynolds v. Bridgestone/Firestone, Inc., 989 F.2d 465, 469 (11th Cir. 1993). This statement does not represent actual findings of fact and is [**3] presented simply to place the Court's legal analysis [*1468] within the context of a specific case or controversy.

---

<sup>1</sup> The Court grants Plaintiff's Motion for Leave to File a Very Short Response with Brief in Support.

Plaintiff is a closely-held Georgia corporation that sold carpets at its store, Baker's Carpet Gallery, in Tunnel Hill, Georgia. Plaintiff's owners, Terry and Mary Baker, formed Plaintiff upon obtaining assurances that Plaintiff could enter into an agreement ("exclusivity agreement") with Fieldcrest Cannon, Inc., ("Fieldcrest") to serve as the sole authorized dealer for Karastan-brand carpets in the Dalton, Georgia, marketplace. See Deposition of John Eggleston ("Eggleston Dep.") at 32-33.

Fieldcrest's Carpet and Rug Division ("Karastan division") manufactured and distributed Karastan carpets. Fieldcrest entered into the exclusivity agreement <sup>2</sup> with Plaintiff, naming Plaintiff as the sole authorized dealer of Karastan carpets in the Dalton market. Affidavit of Terry Baker ("Baker Aff.") P 3. Fieldcrest continued this relationship with Plaintiff until July 30, 1993.

[**4] Defendant Mohawk Industries, Inc., purchased the principal assets of the Karastan division from Fieldcrest on July 30, 1993. See Deposition of William Storey on September 26, 1994 ("Storey Dep. 1") at 62-63. Defendant continued the exclusivity agreement with Plaintiff until Defendant terminated the exclusivity agreement on September 1, 1993. See id. at 62-63, 72-73; Deposition of William Qualls ("Qualls Dep.") Ex. 11.

A. Business Operations of Fieldcrest Cannon, Inc.

From Plaintiff's formation until July 30, 1993, the Karastan division operated as a distinct business unit within Fieldcrest. Storey Dep. 1 at 62-63. During this time period, Fieldcrest maintained an exclusive distribution system for Karastan carpets, allowing only authorized dealers such as Plaintiff to sell these carpets to the public. Deposition of William Storey on March 30, 1995 ("Storey Dep. 2") at 44. Fieldcrest believed its exclusive dealership system fostered an image of top-of-the-line quality and superior consumer recognition for the Karastan brand. Id.

Fieldcrest also instituted a policy prohibiting "transshipping," or "selling to dealers who are not authorized Karastan dealers." Qualls [**5] Dep. Ex. 6. On January 18, 1991, Fieldcrest sent a letter to its authorized Karastan dealers, including Plaintiff, warning that "should a Karastan dealer sell any Karastan product to a non-Karastan dealer, our business with that Karastan dealer will be terminated. This policy will be applied consistently to all dealers, and we urge you to view this announcement seriously." Id.

Since at least 1991, Fieldcrest published manufacturer's suggested retail prices and suggested promotional prices for Karastan products. Deposition of Dennis Thiets ("Thiets Dep.") at 16-17, 36-39. The promotional prices reflected a 40 percent discount off the suggested retail prices. Id. In 1992, Fieldcrest announced a "deep discounting" policy, forbidding authorized dealers from selling Karastan products at prices lower than 10 percent below the suggested promotional prices. Qualls Dep. Exh. 7. Fieldcrest warned Karastan dealers that a violation of the deep discounting policy would result in termination of the dealer's exclusivity agreement. Id.

B. Formation of an Alleged Resale Price Maintenance Agreement Between Plaintiff and Fieldcrest in 1991

In November or December 1991, Philip Haney, [**6] Fieldcrest's national vice president for sales for the Karastan division, investigated a transaction executed by Plaintiff that allegedly violated Fieldcrest's transshipping prohibition. Deposition of Philip Haney ("Haney Dep.") at 196-201. Fieldcrest dispatched two Karastan division representatives to Plaintiff's store, where they presented Plaintiff's co-owner, Terry Baker, with a letter terminating the exclusivity agreement. Deposition of Terry Baker ("Baker Dep.") at 153-155. Subsequently, Baker telephoned Haney and adamantly denied that the transaction in question constituted transshipping, and Haney agreed to review the transaction records [*1469] and reconsider the decision to terminate the exclusivity agreement. Id. at 155-78.

---

<sup>2</sup>The parties never reduced the terms of the exclusivity agreement to a single writing. See Plaintiff's Brief in Opposition to Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment on its Counterclaim at 6.

Some time later, Haney telephoned Baker and informed him that the transaction "certainly [did not raise] a transshipping issue, but I do have a problem with the price." <sup>3</sup> Baker Dep. at 173. Haney "suggested that [Baker] needed to do something about [Plaintiff's] pricing. . . [and] suggested that [Plaintiff] get [its] prices up." Id. at 173-74. In the meantime, Haney said, the decision whether to terminate Plaintiff's exclusivity agreement [**7] would remain "on hold." Id. at 174.

Later in the week, Haney telephoned Baker and told him that Haney "would like for [Baker] to raise [Plaintiff's] prices in general." Id. at 175. Baker responded that raising prices "was going to cost [Plaintiff] a lot of business. And [Haney] said, 'Well, the way it had to be was that from now on . . . [Plaintiff] was not to price anything on the phone at less than 10 percent below [**8] the promotional price.'" Id. Additionally, Haney "asked again that [Baker] raise [Plaintiff's] in-store prices." Id.

Before ending the telephone conversation, Haney "made it very clear to [Baker] that if [Plaintiff] sold one piece of Karastan carpet on the phone at below 10 percent less than the promotional price, [Plaintiff] would be cut off." Baker Dep. at 176-77. Baker promised that he would "live up" to this demand. Id.

John Eggleston, Fieldcrest's regional vice president for the Karastan division, has confirmed the existence of a pricing agreement between Plaintiff and Fieldcrest. Eggleston Dep. at 74. Eggleston has testified that Plaintiff's prices "had to stay within the guide -- after reinstatement or after [Plaintiff] had been approved to retain the line, . . . there were certain rules that had to be followed and those rules were that [Plaintiff] had to maintain the suggested retail pricing." Id.

Following Baker's conversations with Haney, Plaintiff conformed to Fieldcrest's pricing requirements for telephone sales. Id. at 177, 192-96. Baker printed new price sheets to reflect separate prices for telephone sales, and Baker instructed Plaintiff's [**9] salespeople to adhere to the new prices. Baker Dep. at 113-14, 121-24; Deposition of Dennis Hammontree at 18-21. On several occasions, Fieldcrest employees monitored Plaintiff's prices by telephoning Plaintiff's store and requesting a price quotation. Deposition of Greg Watkins at 42-44. After Plaintiff implemented the new pricing policy, Plaintiff's sales volume fell by as much as $ 750,000. Baker Dep. at 179.

C. Allegations of Transshipping and Pricing Violations in 1993

On April 5, 1993, Plaintiff sold 90 square yards of Karastan carpet for $ 1,260 to Robert Kenemer, a resident of Dalton, Georgia. Deposition of Robert Kenemer at 11-18. As a result of this transaction ("Kenemer transaction"), a Karastan dealer in Kansas City, Missouri, alleged that Plaintiff transshipped a Karastan carpet, in violation of the exclusivity agreement. Thiets Dep. at 184-85. The Kansas City dealer, and consequently Fieldcrest's Karastan division executives, believed Plaintiff had sold the carpet over the telephone and then shipped the carpet to the unauthorized dealer. See Thiets Dep. at 192-93 & Ex. 33; Haney Dep. Ex. 34.

On July 13, 1993, Dennis Thiets, Fieldcrest's midwest regional vice [**10] president for the Karastan division, prepared a memorandum that recited the dealer's allegations and concluded, "In addition to the transshipments, I think it is very special that they are selling the product at $ 14 per square yard and our promotional price is $ 19.95 carpet only." Thiets Dep. Ex. 33. Thiets forwarded [*1470] his memorandum to Philip Haney, who now served as

---

<sup>3</sup> Defendant disputes Baker's deposition testimony as to the time, form, and content of this conversation. Haney's deposition testimony states that Haney traveled to Plaintiff's store to speak with Baker personally about the alleged transshipping incident. Haney Dep. at 204-05, 215-16. Contrary to Baker's deposition testimony, Haney states that Baker, on his own initiative, said that Plaintiff, in order to avoid transactions that would constitute transshipping, would no longer quote prices below Fieldcrest's promotional retail price when making telephone sales. Id. at 207-08.

Fieldcrest's regional vice president for the Karastan division,<sup>4</sup> and William Storey, Fieldcrest's director of marketing for the Karastan division. Id.

On or about July 13, 1993, Haney prepared a memorandum to his files concerning the Kenemer transaction. Haney Dep. Ex. 34. The memorandum states that a "second" problem arising from the Kenemer transaction is that "selling the merchandise at [$ 14 per square yard] is very [**11] much a violation of our deep discounting policy." Id. Haney did not share this memorandum with any of the Karastan division employees, but he discussed the Kenemer transaction with Storey.<sup>5</sup>

D. Defendant's Purchase of the Karastan Division and Alleged Perpetuation of the Resale Price Maintenance Agreement

On July 30, 1993, Defendant purchased the assets of the Karastan division from Fieldcrest. Defendant did not integrate the Karastan division into its overall operations. Storey Dep. 1 at 61-63, 72-73. Instead, the Karastan division continued to operate as a distinct business unit, with Defendant managing the Karastan operation "as a separate function from a sales and marketing aspect." Id. Defendant did not make any significant changes to the Karastan division's sales and marketing [**12] operations. Id. Most of Fieldcrest's Karastan division executives simply relocated to identical positions under Defendant's employment. Id. at 70. Defendant did not alter any of the Karastan division's policies with its authorized dealers, including the policies that governed pricing and transshipping. Id. at 85-88. Until Defendant published a revised set of policies in December 1993, the guidelines established by Fieldcrest in 1991 and 1992 remained the authoritative source of Defendant's policies for authorized Karastan dealers. Id. at 89-90.

E. Defendant's Termination of the Exclusivity Agreement With Plaintiff

On September 1, 1993, Storey--who then was an employee of Defendant--sent Plaintiff a letter terminating the exclusivity agreement. Qualls Dep. Ex. 11. The letter states that the decision to terminate the exclusivity agreement is based on Plaintiff's April 1993 violation of Defendant's transshipping policy. Id. After receiving Storey's letter, Baker telephoned Storey on several occasions and attempted to convince Storey that the Kenemer transaction did not violate Defendant's transshipping policy. Baker Dep. at 222-226. Baker also mailed Storey [**13] a copy of the invoice, a receipt, and a letter detailing Plaintiff's version of the Kenemer transaction. Storey Dep. Ex. 80. During one telephone conversation, Storey told Baker that "if [Plaintiff] had sold it at the price it should have been sold, then it wouldn't have been a problem." Baker Dep. at 235. Baker subsequently spoke to Haney--then an employee of Defendant--regarding the termination letter, and Haney told Baker that Plaintiff's "price was below the level that it should have been." Id. at 238. Defendant did not reconsider its termination of the exclusivity agreement.

F. Procedural History

In early 1994, Plaintiff ceased operations. On May 12, 1994, Plaintiff filed suit in this Court alleging that Defendant violated the Sherman Act. On November 21, 1994, Plaintiff filed an amended complaint, adding Fieldcrest as a defendant. Plaintiff settled its claim with Fieldcrest, and the Court entered an order dismissing the claim on December 15, 1995.

---

<sup>4</sup> At the time of the 1991 transshipping allegation, Philip Haney was national vice president for sales for the Karastan division, and he served as the supervisor of Plaintiff's Karastan account. See page 4 infra.

<sup>5</sup> Defendant strongly contests the content, as well as the significance, of the conversation between Storey and Haney, which took place prior to Plaintiff's notification that the exclusivity agreement had been terminated.

II. Defendant's Liability Under Successor Liability Theories for the Actions of Fieldcrest Prior to Defendant's Purchase of the Karastan Division

Plaintiff argues that Defendant is liable, under a theory of [**14] successor liability, for antitrust violations committed by the employees of the Karastan division during Defendant's ownership, as well as during Fieldcrest's ownership, of the division. The alleged resale [*1471] price maintenance agreement giving rise to this case was created by Plaintiff and Fieldcrest in 1991. Defendant's involvement arose only after Defendant purchased the assets of the Karastan division from Fieldcrest in 1993. Nonetheless, Plaintiff contends that, after Defendant purchased the Karastan division, Defendant maintained the division's corporate structure to such a substantial degree that Defendant necessarily assumed liability for any antitrust violations the division may have committed under Fieldcrest's ownership. Defendant counters that the general rules of successor liability foreclose Defendant's liability for any antitrust violations that occurred prior to its purchase of the Karastan division on July 30, 1993.

As a general rule, **HN2**↑ "a corporation that purchases or otherwise acquires the assets of a second corporation does not assume the debts and liabilities of the second corporation." Bud Antle, Inc. v. Eastern Foods, Inc., 758 F.2d 1451, 1456 \(11th Cir. 1985\). [**15] The doctrine of successor liability recognizes four traditional exceptions to this general rule, allowing a court to impose liability upon the successor corporation. Id. One such exception applies when the successor corporation is a "mere continuation" or reincarnation of the selling corporation.<sup>6</sup> Id. Plaintiff does not argue that Defendant fits within the "mere continuation" exception,<sup>7</sup> but instead relies on a broadened test of successorship, "substantial continuity," that has evolved from the "mere continuation" exception. See *United States v. Mexico Feed & Seed Co., Inc.*, 980 F.2d 478, 487 \(8th Cir. 1992\).

[**16] The "substantial continuity" exception originated from a line of Supreme Court labor relations cases, starting with *Golden State Bottling Co. v. NLRB*, 414 U.S. 168, 38 L. Ed. 2d 388, 94 S. Ct. 414 \(1973\). See *Mexico Feed & Seed*, 980 F.2d at 487-88. Since Golden State Bottling, the exception has been applied in the context of products liability and federal environmental regulation, where "the public policy vindicated by recovery from the implicated assets is paramount to that supported by traditional rules delimiting successor liability." See *Mexico Feed & Seed*, 980 F.2d at 487-88 (CERCLA); *Cyr v. B. Offen & Co., Inc.*, 501 F.2d 1145 \(1st Cir. 1974\) (products liability). Although the test for the "substantial continuity" exception varies in different jurisdictions, the test typically considers:

whether the purchaser retained the same facilities, same employees, same name, same production facilities in the same location, same supervisory personnel; and produced the same product; maintained a continuity in assets; continued the same general business operation; and held itself out to the public as a continuation of the previous enterprise.

Mexico Feed [**17] & *Seed*, 980 F.2d at 488 n.10.<sup>8</sup>

<sup>6</sup> Plaintiff has not alleged that any of the three remaining exceptions are applicable, including (1) express or implied agreement to assume liability for the alleged resale price maintenance agreement; (2) the existence of a "de facto" merger between Defendant and Fieldcrest; and (3) fraud in the transaction so that Fieldcrest can avoid liability for its conduct. See *Bud Antle, Inc. v. Eastern Foods, Inc.*, 758 F.2d 1451, 1456 \(11th Cir. 1985\).

<sup>7</sup> "The key element of a '[mere] continuation' is a common identity of the officers, directors, and stockholders in the selling and purchasing corporations." *Bud Antle*, 758 F.2d at 1459. Employment of the selling business entity's officers by the successor corporation is not enough--there must be a transfer of stock. *Id. at 1458-59*. Plaintiff has adduced no evidence revealing a transfer of stock from Fieldcrest to Defendant, and therefore cannot invoke the "mere continuation" exception to support its claim.

<sup>8</sup> In citing this form of the test, the Court does not suggest that the form is superior to others adopted in other jurisdictions.

To the Court's knowledge, no court has applied the "substantial continuity" exception to assign liability to a successor corporation in the context of an antitrust claim.<sup>9</sup> The Eleventh Circuit, while adopting the "substantial continuity" exception in the context of labor law, see Road Sprinkler Fitters Local Union No. 669 v. Independent Sprinkler Corp., 10 F.3d 1563, 1567 (11th Cir.), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 868, 130 L. Ed. 2d 122, 115 S. Ct. 189 (1994), is silent on the prospect of employing the exception in an antitrust action.

[**18] Courts adopting the "substantial continuity" exception have identified four policies that justify its use. First, and most important, is the need to prevent a responsible party from evading a federal statute's remedial purpose simply through the creative structuring of subsequent transactions. See, e.g., Mexico Feed & Seed, 980 F.2d at 488 (CERCLA); Cyr, 501 F.2d at 1153-54 (products liability). The second policy reflects the national interest in uniform enforcement of federal statutes, "commanding that . . . successor liability be governed by a uniform federal rule of decision rather than by the laws of the individual states." See Atlantic Richfield Co. v. Blosenski, 847 F. Supp. 1261, 1283 (E.D. Pa. 1994) (CERCLA). Third is the need to realize the stated intent of Congress or the regulatory agency charged with implementing remedial statutes. See id. at 1285 (citing a memorandum issued by the Environmental Protection Agency that expressly adopted the position that a successor corporation is liable for the acts of a predecessor under the "substantial continuity" exception).

The fourth and final policy justification behind the "substantial continuity" exception [**19] is highlighted in a Third Circuit opinion in which the court refused to adopt the exception in the context of strict products liability.<sup>10</sup> In Polius v. Clark Equipment Co., 802 F.2d 75 (3d Cir. 1986), the court found the exception to be "an unsound exception to the general rule" that an asset purchaser does not acquire the seller's liabilities. 802 F.2d at 75. The court expressed concern that the exception "brushes aside the bedrock requirement" of a causal relationship between a defendant's acts and a plaintiff's injury, thus imposing liability "on entities which in fact had no connection with the acts causing injury." Id. at 81. A district court, following Polius, found the "substantial continuity" exception more appropriate in environmental cases involving CERCLA, where liability is imposed even in the absence of a causal link between the defendant and the harm. See Atlantic Richfield, 847 F. Supp. at 1285-87 (citing New York v. Shore Realty Corp., 759 F.2d 1032, 1044 (2d Cir. 1985) (finding causation requirement to be incompatible with the basic structure of CERCLA's definition of responsible parties)). Following the reasoning of the Third Circuit courts, [**20] the Court concludes that the fourth policy favoring use of the "substantial continuity" exception is the absence of a causation requirement to establish liability under the statute in question.

Applying these four policies to the facts of this case, the Court declines to adopt the "substantial continuity" exception as a necessary means of achieving the policies and objectives of antitrust law.

First, adoption of the "substantial continuity" exception is not necessary to prevent either Fieldcrest or Defendant from evading the remedial purposes of the Sherman Act. Defendant is undoubtedly liable for any violation of antitrust laws committed by Karastan employees after its purchase of the Karastan division. [**21] 15 U.S.C.A. § 1 et seq. (1973). Likewise, the sale of the Karastan division did nothing to alter Fieldcrest's liability for antitrust violations that occurred before Fieldcrest sold the division. See, e.g., United States v. Gold, 743 F.2d 800, 822 (11th Cir. 1984) (corporation is liable for acts or omissions of its agents, performed in the scope of the agents' employment), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1217, 84 L. Ed. 2d 341, 105 S. Ct. 1196 (1985). Arguably, a selling company could evade antitrust liability by selling the company's entire assets and subsequently dissolving. However, such a scenario already is addressed by the "de facto merger" exception to successor liability, which is applied when "the seller corporation ceases its ordinary business operations, liquidates, and dissolves as soon as legally and practically possible." [*1473] Bud Antle, 758 F.2d at 1458. A debate whether the "de facto merger" exception adequately prevents evasion of antitrust laws is academic at any rate, because in this case the selling corporation continues to exist; indeed, Plaintiff successfully litigated an antitrust claim against Fieldcrest, resulting in a settlement of $ 162,500. For these [**22] reasons, Plaintiff has "not shown that application of the traditional mere continuation exception, [as opposed to the "substantial continuity" exception], would frustrate [the statute's] remedial purposes in this case." See Sylvester Bros. Development Co. v. Burlington Northern R.R., 772 F. Supp. 443, 449 (D. Minn. 1990).

<sup>9</sup> As discussed below, the court in In Re Master Key Antitrust applied the "continuity of enterprise" test, which some courts have described as identical to the "substantial continuity" exception. See Anderson v. City of Minnetonka, 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4846, 1993 WL 95361, at *7 (D. Minn. January 27, 1993).

<sup>10</sup> Several courts presented with the opportunity to adopt the "substantial continuity" exception have declined to do so. See, e.g., Florom v. Elliott Mfg., 867 F.2d 570, 579 (10th Cir. 1989); Hoover v. Recreation Equipment Corp., 792 F. Supp. 1484, 1495 (N.D. Ohio 1991) (both products liability cases).

Second, the "substantial continuity" exception is not required to achieve uniform enforcement of the Sherman Act. "Most jurisdictions" recognize the four traditional exceptions to the general rule on limited successor liability, with only a handful of courts adopting the broader "substantial continuity" exception in contexts that do not include antitrust law. See Bud Antle, 758 F.2d at 1456; Mexico Feed & Seed, 980 F.2d at 487. The courts that have addressed successor liability in an antitrust context have relied only on the four traditional exceptions. See, e.g., State v. Louis Trauth Dairy, Inc., 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9176, 1996 WL 343440, at *5-6 (S.D. Ohio April 25, 1996) (granting summary judgment to successor corporation); In Re Catfish Antitrust Litigation, 908 F. Supp. 400, 412 (N.D. Miss. 1995).

Plaintiff cites In Re Master Key Antitrust Litigation, [**23] 1977-1 Trade Cas. (CCH) P61,456 (D. Conn. Sept. 28, 1976), as an example of a court adopting the "substantial continuity" exception in an antitrust case. The Court reads In Re Master Key differently. Although the In Re Master Key court states that it applies a "continuity of enterprise" test--used by several courts as a synonym for the "substantial continuity" exception--the factors considered by the court suggest that it applied the same traditional exceptions as the courts in Louis Trauth Dairy and In Re Catfish. Id. Specifically, the court noted that the shareholders of the selling company acquired stock in the buying company, thus fulfilling the primary requirement of the "mere continuation" exception--from which the "substantial continuity" exception arises. See Bud Antle, 758 F.2d at 1458-59. To the extent that In Re Master Key suggests the adoption of a broader test than the "mere continuation" exception, the Court declines to follow the suggestion.

Third, the antitrust statutes and regulations do not reveal an intent to broaden traditional forms of successor liability. See 15 U.S.C.A. §§ 7, 12 (1973) (defining "person" held liable under the Sherman [**24] Act to include a "corporation" but providing no further guidance). Plaintiff has not pointed to, nor has the Court been able to uncover, any regulation or statement by Congress or the Federal Trade Commission that evinces an intent to adopt a broader theory of successor liability. Cf. Atlantic Richfield, 847 F. Supp. at 1285 (citing EPA memorandum that advocates adoption of exception identical to "substantial continuity" exception). The Court therefore concludes that adoption of the "substantial continuity" exception is not necessary to comply with the objectives and intent underlying the Sherman Act.

Fourth, unlike CERCLA, the Sherman Act retains traditional causation as an element of a defendant's liability. Foremost-McKesson, Inc. v. Instrumentation Laboratory, Inc., 527 F.2d 417, 418 (5th Cir. 1976) ("The necessity for proof of causation in a private antitrust action is . . . clear."). Comparatively, "Congress specifically rejected including a causation requirement in [CERCLA's definition of responsible parties]." Atlantic Richfield, 847 F. Supp. at 1285. This legislative purpose led the Third Circuit to apply the "substantial continuity" exception to CERCLA actions, [**25] while rejecting its use in products liability actions, where a causal link is "fundamental" to recovery. Id.

Antitrust law is more akin to products liability law in retaining a causation requirement. The Court agrees that the tendency of the "substantial continuity" exception is to "brush aside" the "bedrock" requirement of causation, rendering inappropriate the application of the exception to antitrust cases. See Polius, 802 F.2d at 81.

[*1474] Accordingly, the Court declines to adopt the "substantial continuity" exception, and instead recognizes only the four traditional exceptions within the context of this antitrust case. Because Plaintiff has not alleged that Defendant's purchase of the Karastan division falls within any of the traditional exceptions, the Court grants Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment with respect to antitrust violations alleged to have occurred prior to July 30, 1993.

III. Summary Judgment

A. Admissibility of Testimony by Terry Baker as to Statements by Defendant's and Fieldcrest's Employees

HN3 When evaluating a motion for summary judgment, the Court may consider only that evidence that would be admissible at trial. Sires v. Luke, 544 F. Supp. 1155, 1160 [*261] (S.D. Ga. 1982) (citing Samuels v. Doctors Hosp., Inc., 588 F.2d 485, 486 & n.2 (5th Cir. 1979)). Testimony as to an out-of-court statement by a nonparty witness is inadmissible hearsay, and therefore cannot be considered by the Court when assessing the suitability of summary judgment. Id.

The primary evidence adduced by Plaintiff in opposing Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment involves out-of-court statements by the employees of Defendant and Fieldcrest. Specifically, Plaintiff relies on:

- (1) testimony by Plaintiff's co-owner, Terry Baker, detailing statements made in 1991 by Fieldcrest employees Philip Haney, John Eggleston, and William Qualls, concerning the 1991 transshipping allegations and the resale price maintenance agreement Plaintiff alleges arose from the incident;
- (2) memoranda prepared on or about July 14, 1993, by Fieldcrest employees Dennis Thiets and Philip Haney, concerning the 1993 transshipping allegations;
- (3) conversations between Fieldcrest employees Dennis Thiets, Philip Haney, and William Storey, in which the 1993 transshipping allegations are reviewed; and
- (4) testimony by Terry Baker detailing statements [*27] made in 1993 by Defendant's employees Philip Haney and William Storey, concerning the 1993 transshipping allegations and the termination of Plaintiff's exclusivity agreement.

Defendant objects to the admissibility of this evidence, arguing that Plaintiff has not adduced sufficient independent evidence to allow the out-of-court statements to be admitted within the co-conspirator exception to the hearsay rule. Fed. R. Evid. 104, 801(d)(2)(E). Defendant's objection fails for four reasons.

First, statements made by Karastan division executives after Defendant purchased the Karastan division on July 30, 1993, are admissible as admissions by a party opponent. Fed. R. Evid. 801(d)(2)(D). Defendant employed Philip Haney and William Storey at the time they made their statements to Baker, and the statements concerned a matter within the scope of their employment. Therefore, the statements are not hearsay under the Federal Rules of Evidence. Id.

Second, the statements by Fieldcrest employees Haney, Qualls, and Eggleston, involving the 1991 transshipping allegations, directly relate to Plaintiff's claim that these employees imposed and enforced a resale price maintenance agreement. As [*28] such, the statements are admissible as possessing independent legal significance, because they reveal the offer and acceptance necessary to establish the existence of the pricing agreement. See Kepner-Tregoe, Inc. v. Leadership Software, Inc., 12 F.3d 527, 540 (5th Cir.) ("A contract is a verbal act . . . [and] has legal reality independent of the truth of any statement contained in it."), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 820, 130 L. Ed. 2d 35, 115 S. Ct. 82 (1994); Hydrite Chemical Co. v. Calumet Lubricants Co., 47 F.3d 887, 892 (7th Cir. 1995) ("It is direct evidence, not hearsay, when a party to a dispute over a contract testifies to the offer or the acceptance made by the other contracting party."). The statements also establish the alleged use of threats of termination by Fieldcrest employees in order to secure Plaintiff's adherence to the resale price maintenance agreement. The statements thus [*1475] possess independent legal significance to show the existence of such threats.

Alternatively, Baker's testimony concerning the 1991 statements by Haney, Qualls, and Eggleston is admissible to demonstrate the effect these statements had on the listener. See United States v. Cruz, 805 F.2d 1464, [*291] 1477 (11th Cir. 1986), cert. denied, 481 U.S. 1006, 95 L. Ed. 2d 204, 107 S. Ct. 1631 (1987). "Excluded from the hearsay rule is verbal or nonverbal 'conduct when it is offered as a basis for inferring something other than the matter asserted.'" Id. (emphasis in original) (quoting Lubbock Feed Lots v. Iowa Beef Processors, Inc., 630 F.2d 250 (5th Cir. 1980)). Plaintiff intends to support its antitrust claim by showing that, after hearing the 1991 statements of Haney, Qualls, and Eggleston, Plaintiff understood that it had to raise its prices to avoid termination of the exclusivity agreement. Indeed, Plaintiff supports this claim with price sheets, printed by Plaintiff soon after these conversations took place, that reflect a new category of higher prices. For these reasons, Plaintiff may testify as to the statements to show the effect of the statements on Plaintiff's decision to raise its prices.

Third, Plaintiff seeks to introduce memoranda prepared by Philip Haney and Dennis Thiets while they were employed by Fieldcrest. Because the memoranda were prepared during the course of and in furtherance of the common objectives of the alleged resale price maintenance agreement, [**30] the memoranda are admissible as statements made by a co-conspirator. Fed. R. Evid. 801(d)(2)(E). HN4<sup>11</sup> In order to admit evidence under the co-conspirator exception, the Eleventh Circuit requires Plaintiff to adduce sufficient evidence, "independent of the co-conspirator statement itself," to establish both the conspiracy and the declarant's participation in the conspiracy. United States v. James, 590 F.2d 575, 581 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 442 U.S. 917, 61 L. Ed. 2d 283, 99 S. Ct. 2836 (1979). The Court concludes that the statements made by the employees of Fieldcrest and Defendant, which already are admissible as discussed above, fulfill the "more likely than not" standard of proof required to establish Haney and Thiets's participation in a price-fixing conspiracy. See Bourjaily v. United States, 483 U.S. 171, 175, 97 L. Ed. 2d 144, 107 S. Ct. 2775 (1987). The memoranda, therefore, are admissible.

Fourth, Plaintiff seeks to introduce evidence concerning conversations between Fieldcrest employees Haney, Thiets, and William Storey that took place at approximately the same time as the preparation of the Thiets and Haney memoranda. Testimony as to the existence of these conversations [**31] is admissible because the evidence is not introduced to establish the truth of the assertions made in the conversations. Rather, the evidence simply shows the conversations actually took place, and thus lead to an inference that the speakers had the opportunity to exchange information regarding Plaintiff's alleged failure to comply with the resale price maintenance agreement. As a result, the evidence is not hearsay.

Accordingly, the Court concludes that Baker's testimony as to the out-of-court statements described above is admissible without offending the rule against hearsay evidence. In addition, the memoranda prepared by Philip Haney and Dennis Thiets, as well as evidence showing the existence of conversations between Haney, Thiets, and William Storey concerning these memoranda, also are admissible.

B. Summary Judgment Standard for an Antitrust Claim Involving a Dealer Terminated Pursuant to an Illegal Price-Fixing Scheme

HN5<sup>11</sup> As a general rule, the party seeking summary judgment bears the burden of demonstrating the absence of a genuine dispute as to any material fact. See Adickes v. S. H. Kress & Co., 398 U.S. 144, 157, 26 L. Ed. 2d 142, 90 S. Ct. 1598 (1970); Helicopter [**32] Support Systems v. Hughes Helicopter, 818 F.2d 1530, 1534 (11th Cir. 1987). The moving party's burden is discharged by "showing"--that is, pointing out to the district court--that there is an absence of evidence to support the nonmoving party's case." Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 325, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 (1986). In assessing [*1476] whether the movant has met this burden, the district court must view the evidence and all factual inferences in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion. Reynolds v. Bridgestone/Firestone, Inc., 989 F.2d 465, 469 (11th Cir. 1993). Once the moving party has adequately supported its motion, the nonmovant has the burden of showing summary judgment is improper by coming forward with specific facts that demonstrate the existence of a genuine issue for trial. Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co., Ltd. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 587, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986); Dunnivant v. Bi-State Auto Parts, 851 F.2d 1575, 1579 (11th Cir. 1988).<sup>11</sup>

---

<sup>11</sup> Notwithstanding the clarity of these general rules, Plaintiff and Defendant have done an admirable job of pinpointing a tendency toward inconsistency in courts' assessment of summary judgment motions in antitrust cases:

[**33] HN6↑

The Eleventh Circuit has formulated a specialized test to assess, at the summary judgment stage, a dealer's claims of wrongful termination by a manufacturer acting pursuant to an illegal resale price maintenance agreement. Helicopter, 818 F.2d at 1534 (creating the "Helicopter test"); see, e.g., DeLong Equipment Co. v. Washington Mills Abrasive Co., 887 F.2d 1499, 1508-09 \(11th Cir. 1989\) ("DeLong II") (applying the Helicopter test), cert. denied, 494 U.S. 1081, 108 L. Ed. 2d 943, 110 S. Ct. 1813 (1990). The Helicopter test provides that, in order to survive a defendant's properly supported motion for summary judgment, the plaintiff must adduce facts that tend to show (1) a conspiracy to set prices existed, and (2) the plaintiff was terminated pursuant to that conspiracy. See DeLong II, 887 F.2d at 1508. To satisfy the first part of the Helicopter test, the plaintiff must (A) point to "evidence which tends to exclude the possibility that the manufacturer was operating independently in making his determination to terminate the distributor"; and (B) "satisfy the court that the conspiracy which he alleges is, objectively, an economically reasonable [**34] one." Helicopter, 818 F.2d at 1534. Sub-part A is satisfied if the plaintiff shows (i) the manufacturer sought an agreement from the dealer to adhere to resale prices; and (ii) the dealer communicated in some way its acquiescence in that agreement. Id. at 1533.

In addition to creating the specialized Helicopter test, HN7↑ courts have modified slightly the general summary judgment standard for antitrust violations involving resale price maintenance agreements. Helicopter, 818 F.2d at 1532 (citing Monsanto v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 \(1984\)). Consequently, antitrust plaintiffs face a heavy standard when opposing a properly supported motion for summary judgment, because courts are limited in the "range of permissible inferences" that can be made from "ambiguous" evidence. DeLong II, 887 F.2d at 1508. Evidence is ambiguous if it is equally consistent with a finding of permissible competition as it is with a finding of illegal conspiracy. Helicopter, 818 F.2d at 1533. Without additional direct or circumstantial evidence, ambiguous evidence alone cannot support an inference of conspiracy. Id. As a result, a conclusory [**35] statement by the plaintiff that a conspiracy existed, without more, does not support "even an inference of conspiracy" and cannot survive a motion for summary judgment. Dunnivant, 851 F.2d at 1579.

HN8↑ Despite this heightened standard, Monsanto and its progeny "cannot be read to change the general rule that reasonable inferences from the evidence must be taken in favor of the nonmoving party." Helicopter, 818 F.2d at 1535. The plaintiff's evidence "need not be such that only an inference of conspiracy may be derived from it. It must, however, go beyond equivocal complaints and tend to exclude the inference of independent action." Id. at 1534 n.4. Once reasonable inferences are taken in favor of the nonmoving party, the "stringent [**1477] standard of proof" in vertical restraint cases must be satisfied. Id. at 1535. Thus, allegations by the plaintiff that are not merely conclusory, but rather can serve as direct evidence if believed, are enough to defeat a summary judgment motion. See id. at 1534 n.4.

C. Application of the Helicopter Test

Defendant contends that Plaintiff's evidence does not satisfy the Helicopter test; rather, the evidence has been [**36] distorted in Plaintiff's "makeshift blender in the hopes that it can be pureed into something this Court can swallow." Defendant's Reply Brief in Support of its Motion for Summary Judgment at 2. After carefully chewing on Defendant's argument for some time, the Court disagrees, finding sufficient morsels of evidence to allow the Court to digest the facts in such a way as to satiate the Helicopter test.

"The Supreme Court . . . has articulated specific rules which make summary judgment more readily available in cases alleging violations of section 1 of the Sherman Act." DeLong Equipment Co. v. Washington Mills Abrasive Co., 887 F.2d 1499, 1505 \(11th Cir. 1989\), cert. denied, 494 U.S. 1081, 108 L. Ed. 2d 943, 110 S. Ct. 1813 (1990).

"Summary judgment should be used cautiously in antitrust cases." Dunnivant v. Bi-State Auto Parts, 851 F.2d 1575, 1584 \(11th Cir. 1989\).

1. Plaintiff's Showing that a Conspiracy to Set Prices Existed

Plaintiff's first step in meeting the Helicopter test is to show that a conspiracy to violate the Sherman Act existed. Helicopter Support Systems v. Hughes Helicopter, 818 F.2d 1530, 1533-34 (11th Cir. 1987). In Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1984), the Court set forth HN9<sup>1</sup> a test for assessing Plaintiff's evidence of an agreement to restrain trade in a dealer termination case:

There must be evidence that tends to exclude the possibility of independent action by the manufacturer and distributor. That is, there must be direct or circumstantial evidence that reasonably tends to prove that the manufacturer and others had a conscious commitment [**37] to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective.

465 U.S. at 768. In Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986), the Court added a second requirement, assigning HN10<sup>1</sup> Plaintiff the burden of showing that the alleged conspiracy is, objectively, a reasonable one. 475 U.S. at 588.

As directed by the Helicopter test, the Court will consider the Monsanto and Matsushita requirements in turn. Following this analysis, the Court will assess whether the evidence supports an inference that Defendant perpetuated the alleged conspiracy after it purchased the Karastan division from Fieldcrest on July 30, 1993.

A. Evidence which Tends to Exclude the Possibility That Defendant Was Operating Independently

Under the Helicopter test, evidence tends to exclude the possibility that the manufacturer was acting independently if it shows (i) the manufacturer sought an agreement from its dealer to adhere to a resale price, and (ii) the dealer in some way communicated its acquiescence in the proposed agreement. Helicopter, 818 F.2d at 1533.

(i) Evidence that Defendant Illegally Sought an [**38] Agreement From Plaintiff to Adhere to a Resale Price

HN11<sup>1</sup> A manufacturer may announce in advance the terms under which it will sell its products, and may refuse to deal with those customers who do not comply with the terms. United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U.S. 300, 307, 63 L. Ed. 992, 39 S. Ct. 465 (1919). However, when the manufacturer's actions "go beyond mere announcements of his policy and the simple refusal to deal, and he employs other means which effect adherence to his resale prices," the resulting agreement is a per se violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. United States v. Parke, Davis & Co., 362 U.S. 29, 44, 4 L. Ed. 2d 505, 80 S. Ct. 503 (1960); 15 U.S.C.A. § 1 (1973). Included in "other means" are threats of termination and other coercive actions taken after a dealer fails to conform to a manufacturer's predetermined prices. See, e.g., Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 765-767.

Several circuit court cases illustrate this principle. In Bender v. Southland Corp., 749 F.2d 1205 (6th Cir. 1984), the court distinguished illegal coercion from permissible suggestion and persuasion. 749 F.2d at 1213. Coercion is impermissible when it reflects "actual or threatened [**39] affirmative action, [*1478] beyond suggestion or persuasion, taken by a defendant in order to induce a plaintiff to follow the defendants' prices." Id. More specifically, threats of terminating a franchisee in order to induce compliance with predetermined retail prices constitute illegal coercion. Yentsch v. Texaco, Inc., 630 F.2d 46, 53 (2d Cir. 1980); see also Carlson Machine Tools, Inc. v. American Tool, Inc., 678 F.2d 1253, 1261 (5th Cir. 1982) (threatening to make a "meaningful event depend on compliance or non-compliance" with a pricing agreement is coercion).

Plaintiff has adduced direct and circumstantial evidence of threatening behavior by Karastan division employees that reveals an intent to seek an agreement to maintain the resale prices for Karastan products. As owner of the Karastan division in 1991, Fieldcrest published manufacturer's suggested retail and promotional prices for Karastan products. Under the Colgate rule, this conduct alone is not improper. However, Philip Haney, Fieldcrest's national vice president for sales for the Karastan division, expressly warned Plaintiff's owner, Terry Baker, that "the way it had to be was that from now on . . . [Plaintiff] [**40] was not to price anything on the phone at less than 10 percent below the promotional price." Baker Dep. at 174. Haney then "made it very clear to [Baker] that if [Plaintiff] sold one piece of Karastan carpet on the phone at below 10 percent less than the promotional price, [Plaintiff] would be cut off." Id. at 176-77. This evidence of coercion is even more compelling in light of the fact that Haney's warning came immediately after Fieldcrest's agents accused Plaintiff of violating its pricing policies and delivered a letter terminating Plaintiff's exclusivity agreement. At the time of Haney's threats, Plaintiff's termination was "on hold" and under reconsideration by Fieldcrest.

This direct evidence, offered through the testimony of Terry Baker, is corroborated by the testimony of John Eggleston, regional vice president of the Karastan division, and William Qualls, manager of the Karastan territory in which Plaintiff was located. Both Eggleston and Qualls admitted that they were dispatched to deliver to Plaintiff a letter terminating the exclusivity agreement. Eggleston stated that, following this episode, he understood that Plaintiff must not sell Karastan products below [**41] the predetermined prices. Finally, Plaintiff subsequently published a revised price list and instructed its salespeople to adhere to the new prices, and Fieldcrest's employees even monitored Plaintiff's price quotations on the telephone.

Plaintiff's evidence comprises more than merely conclusory complaints that Fieldcrest's employees sought an illegal pricing agreement. Indeed, Plaintiff has adduced direct evidence that Fieldcrest employees threatened to terminate Plaintiff's contractual right to sell Karastan products if Plaintiff did not agree to sell Karastan products at a predetermined price level. Plaintiff also has adduced circumstantial evidence, such as revised price sheets and price monitoring by Fieldcrest's employees, that supports the inference that Fieldcrest sought the agreement through such threats. As such, Fieldcrest's conduct is identical to the threatening behavior declared illegal by the Yentsch and Bender courts.

Defendant argues that Plaintiff's evidence is offered solely through the testimony of Terry Baker, while Defendant's own evidence contradicts Baker's testimony. Defendant contends that Plaintiff's evidence therefore falls within the definition [**42] of "ambiguous" evidence and cannot, by itself, defeat Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment. See Defendant's Memorandum of Law in Support of Summary Judgment at 20-21. The Court disagrees. HN12[] Evidence is ambiguous if, notwithstanding its source, it is equally consistent with a finding of permissible competition as it is with a finding of illegal conspiracy. Helicopter, 818 F.2d at 1533. Evidence is not ambiguous solely because it is offered through the testimony of Plaintiff's owner, nor is evidence ambiguous simply because Defendant's own testimony contradicts it. "The court must look beyond the defendant's bald denial of concerted action and analyze the substance of [the plaintiff's] evidence in order to determine if summary judgment is appropriate." DeLong Equipment Co. v. Washington Mills Abrasive Co., 887 F.2d 1499, 1515 (11th Cir. 1989) ("DeLong II"), cert. denied, 494 U.S. 1081, 110 S. Ct. 1813, [*1479] 108 L. Ed. 2d 943 (1990). Looking at the substance of Plaintiff's evidence, the Court believes that Baker's testimony, when considered alongside testimony by Fieldcrest's employees and other circumstantial evidence, tends to show that Fieldcrest sought, through illegally [**43] coercive means, to establish an agreement with Plaintiff to maintain resale prices for Karastan products.

(ii) Evidence That Plaintiff Acquiesced in an Agreement With Defendant to Adhere to a Resale Price

Under Helicopter, the second step for a plaintiff to exclude the possibility that the manufacturer acted independently is to show that the plaintiff in some way communicated its acquiescence in the manufacturer's proposed agreement to adhere to predetermined resale prices. Helicopter, 818 F.2d at 1533-34. HN13[] To discharge this requirement, the evidence must reveal a "meeting of the minds in an unlawful arrangement . . . [which] includes more than a showing that the distributor conformed to the resale price. It means as well that evidence must be presented both that the distributor communicated its acquiescence or agreement, and that this was sought by the manufacturer

Monsanto, 465 U.S. at 764, 764 n.9.

Plaintiff's evidence shows that Terry Baker told Philip Haney that Plaintiff would "live up" to Haney's demands that Plaintiff adhere to the pricing agreement. Moreover, Haney's telephone statements to Baker reveal that Haney sought this kind of assurance [**44] from Plaintiff. The Court believes that a reasonable inference from this evidence is that Haney sought Plaintiff's acquiescence in a pricing agreement, and that Baker communicated Plaintiff's acquiescence to Haney.

The Court therefore concludes that Plaintiff has presented evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that Fieldcrest and Plaintiff acted independently. The Court now turns to the second part of Plaintiff's required showing of the existence of an conspiracy: whether the alleged conspiracy is, objectively, an economically reasonable one.

B. Whether the Alleged Conspiracy Is Economically Reasonable

In Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986), the Court held that HN14 if the alleged price-fixing conspiracy is "economically irrational and practically infeasible, then summary judgment should be granted." Helicopter, 818 F.2d at 1534 (applying the Matsushita test). This requirement does not "introduce a special burden on plaintiffs facing summary judgment in antitrust cases," but rather permits summary judgment if the inferences arising from the plaintiff's evidence are so unreasonable [\[\*\*45\]](#) as to be "economically senseless." Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Services, Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 468, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 (1992).

In Helicopter, a manufacturer terminated a dealer based on the dealer's noncompliance with a resale price maintenance agreement. Applying the Matsushita test, the court found the agreement was "a perfectly feasible and sensible undertaking. By exerting control over the resale prices of its distributors, [the manufacturer and its dealers] would hope to reap monopoly profits arising from a collusively inflated market price." 818 F.2d at 1534. Plaintiff's evidence reveals facts nearly identical to those considered by the Helicopter court. Defendant terminated the exclusivity agreement with Plaintiff allegedly because Plaintiff failed to adhere to predetermined resale prices. Following the reasoning of the Helicopter court, the Court concludes that the conspiracy alleged by Plaintiff is economically rational and practically feasible.

As discussed above, Plaintiff's evidence also allows a reasonable inference that Fieldcrest sought and established an illegal conspiracy with Plaintiff to fix prices for Karastan products. [\[\*\*46\]](#) Plaintiff thus has satisfied all the subparts of the first prong of the Helicopter test.

3. Whether Plaintiff's Evidence Supports an Inference that Defendant Adopted and Perpetuated an Alleged Conspiracy to Fix Prices

The Court observes that Plaintiff has adduced sufficient evidence to create a genuine dispute [\[\*1480\]](#) whether Defendant adopted and perpetuated the price-fixing conspiracy with Plaintiff after Defendant purchased the Karastan division on July 30, 1993. After Defendant purchased the Karastan division from Fieldcrest, the division continued to operate as a distinct business unit. Defendant did not make any significant changes to the division's sales and marketing operations, and it retained the same executive personnel. More importantly, Defendant did not alter any of the Karastan division's policies with its authorized dealers, including the pricing policies. Defendant simply adopted the guidelines published by Fieldcrest in 1991 and 1992 as the source of Defendant's policies for dealers such as Plaintiff. Additionally, Karastan's executives continued to enforce the pricing agreement after the Defendant purchased the division. Therefore, the Court concludes that Plaintiff's [\[\*\*47\]](#) evidence is sufficient to withstand summary judgment regarding an agreement between Plaintiff and Defendant to maintain a predetermined resale price for Karastan products.

2. Plaintiff's showing that Defendant Terminated the Exclusivity Agreement Pursuant to the Alleged Conspiracy to Fix Prices

The second prong of the Helicopter test requires Plaintiff to adduce evidence showing Plaintiff was terminated pursuant to the alleged conspiracy. See DeLong Equipment Co. v. Washington Mills Abrasive Co., 887 F.2d 1499, 1508 (11th Cir. 1989) ("DeLong II"), cert. denied, 494 U.S. 1081, 108 L. Ed. 2d 943, 110 S. Ct. 1813 (1990). The

Colgate doctrine arises once again in this context, because HN15 [↑] a manufacturer may refuse to sell its goods to anyone, even if the refusal is based on a dealer's failure to adhere to suggested resale prices. United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U.S. 300, 307, 63 L. Ed. 992, 39 S. Ct. 465 \(1919\). A manufacturer's refusal to deal, however, is illegal under the Sherman Act if performed pursuant to a price-fixing conspiracy between the manufacturer and its dealer. [Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Co., 465 U.S. 752, 768, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, \[\*48\] 104 S. Ct. 1464 \(1984\)](#). In order to establish a violation of the Sherman Act in this context, Plaintiff must present direct or circumstantial evidence that supports a reasonable inference that a causal connection exists between the termination and the alleged conspiracy. 465 U.S. 752 at 759.

In Monsanto, the Court affirmed a jury verdict based on largely circumstantial evidence establishing a causal connection between the termination of a herbicide dealership and an illegal price-fixing conspiracy. Id. at 759. The Court relied on testimony that, at a meeting between agents of the manufacturer and the dealer, the first topic raised by the manufacturer's agent was the prices charged by the dealer for the herbicide. Id. at 765. In addition, the Court cited testimony that, prior to the termination, the manufacturer never discussed with the dealer the criteria that served as the alleged basis for the termination. Id. Finally, the Court referred to testimony by the dealer's president that the manufacturer's officers made explicit threats to terminate the dealership unless the dealership raised its prices. Id. at 765.

The Eleventh Circuit considered a similar set of facts [\[\*49\]](#) in DeLong II, 887 F.2d at 1514-15. Relying almost exclusively on circumstantial evidence, the court found that genuine issues of material fact existed regarding the cause of the dealer's termination. Id. The court observed that, to counter the dealer's circumstantial evidence, the manufacturer may argue that a valid business reason served as the motivation behind terminating the dealer. Id. However, the dealer may respond to such arguments by showing the manufacturer's justifications are merely pretextual: "While such evidence standing alone would not be sufficient to show joint action in violation of the antitrust laws, 'evidence of pretext, if believed by a jury, would disprove the likelihood of independent action on the part of [the defendant].'" Id. at 1514 (quoting Fragale & Sons Beverage Co. v. Dill, 760 F.2d 469, 474 \(3d Cir. 1985\)).

The evidence in this case presents a striking similarity to that considered by the Monsanto and DeLong courts. First, immediately after terminating the exclusivity agreement, William Storey, Defendant's director [\[\*1481\]](#) of marketing for the Karastan division, told Plaintiff's owner, Terry Baker, that "if [Plaintiff] had [\[\*50\]](#) sold it at the price it should have been, then it wouldn't have been a problem." Baker Dep. at 235. In addition, Philip Haney, Defendant's regional vice president for the Karastan division, told Baker that Plaintiff's "price was below the level it should have been." Finally, two memoranda expressly refer to Plaintiff's failure to adhere to the predetermined resale price. Storey received one of these memoranda, and discussed the transaction in question with the author of the other, before terminating the exclusivity agreement with Plaintiff.

Defendant endeavors to minimize the significance of this evidence by alleging that a valid business reason motivated its decision to terminate the exclusivity agreement. Specifically, Defendant argues that Plaintiff violated Defendant's prohibition against transshipping. Plaintiff's evidence, however, suggests that Defendant's stated reason for terminating the exclusivity agreement is merely pretextual. In October 1993, only one month after Defendant terminated the exclusivity agreement with Plaintiff, Defendant did not terminate another dealer that transshipped carpet to a non-authorized dealer. Storey Dep. 2 at 211-19, Ex. 68, 69. Moreover, the [\[\*51\]](#) two memoranda discussing Plaintiff's transshipping violation also mention the resale price violation.

Defendant attempts to discredit Plaintiff's evidence by pointing to deposition testimony by William Storey, suggesting that Plaintiff misinterpreted Storey's telephone statement to Baker: "Storey maintains that he told Baker that but for Plaintiff's pricing, dealers would not have been interested in purchasing carpets from [Plaintiff] which in turn would have prevented a transshipping violation." Defendant's Memorandum in Support of its Motion for Summary Judgment at 20-21. Defendant contends that Storey's testimony renders Plaintiff's evidence ambiguous and insufficient to withstand summary judgment.

Defendant once again has misapprehended the definition of "ambiguous" evidence. See *Helicopter. 818 F.2d at 1533* (ambiguous evidence is equally consistent with a finding of illegal conspiracy as a finding of permissible competition). Testimony that is opposed by conflicting testimony from the adverse party is not automatically rendered ambiguous. The Monsanto Court stated that, HN16 when the manufacturer disputes the dealer's testimony, "the choice between two reasonable interpretations [**52] of the testimony properly [is] left for the jury." *465 U.S. at 767 n.12*. The Court must look "beyond the defendant's bald denial of concerted action and analyze the substance of [the plaintiff's] evidence." *DeLong II, 887 F.2d at 1515*.

Finally, Defendant argues that, before deciding to terminate the exclusivity agreement, Storey never discussed the resale price violation with any other employee. Unfortunately for Defendant, the DeLong II court dismissed an identical argument as "unpersuasive," because "conspiracies are rarely evidenced by explicit agreements, and must almost always be proven by inferences that may be fairly drawn from the behavior of the alleged conspirators." *887 F.2d at 1515*.

The Court thus concludes that Plaintiff has adduced sufficient direct and circumstantial evidence to support an inference that Defendant terminated Plaintiff's exclusivity agreement because of an illegal conspiracy to fix prices, and not because of a violation of the transshipping policy. As a result, Plaintiff's evidence satisfies the second prong of the Helicopter test.

D. Plaintiff's Evidence of Antitrust Injury

HN17 Even if the Court concludes that Defendant participated [**53] in an illegal resale price maintenance agreement, Plaintiff still must demonstrate that Plaintiff has suffered antitrust injury. *Atlantic Richfield Co. v. United States Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 342, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333, 110 S. Ct. 1884 \(1990\)* (holding that even in cases that involve conduct that is illegal per se, plaintiff must allege and prove antitrust injury). The Eleventh Circuit has held that a plaintiff can suffer antitrust injury simply by losing its dealership and consequently losing sales and profits. *DeLong Equipment Co. v. Washington Mills Electro Minerals Corp., 990 F.2d 1186, 1199 \("DeLong III"\)*, cert. denied, 510 U.S. 1012, 126 L. Ed. 2d 569, 114 S. Ct. 604 (1993). In DeLong III, the defendant manufactured a particular brand of "media" that possessed certain competitive advantages over other market alternatives. Id. The court found that the plaintiff, upon being terminated as a supplier of the defendant's media, did not suffer "damage simply from its own failure to compete in the open market for identical media made by other manufacturers." Id. Rather, the plaintiff "was not allowed to participate in the competitive market for [the [**54] defendant's] media because it refused to go along with the [defendant's] price-fixing scheme." Id. Consequently, the plaintiff suffered antitrust injury. Id.

The Fifth Circuit also has held that wrongful termination of a dealership can constitute antitrust injury. *Pierce v. Ramsey Winch, 753 F.2d 416, 435 \(1985\)*. "The sina qua non of the injury caused by a refusal to deal [is the] inability to obtain the product. From this failure to obtain the product would flow subsidiary consequences: loss of sales or market share because of the failure to sell or utilize this product." Id. A jury question on the issue of damages, therefore, can be established "simply by showing that, following termination, plaintiff, because he lacked the terminating manufacturer's product, suffered a decline in gross sales." *Id. at 435-36*.

Plaintiff has introduced evidence that the termination of its dealership caused the closing of its business and resulted in lost profits. Second Amended Report of Bruce Seaman at 5-8, Ex. E, F, G. Furthermore, Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment ignores the possibility that Plaintiff could have suffered antitrust injury, based solely on the [**55] existence of a resale price maintenance agreement, during the period in which Defendant allegedly perpetuated this agreement. Thus, Plaintiff has created a jury question sufficient to survive summary judgment on the issue of antitrust injury.

V. Conclusion

942 F. Supp. 1464, *1482L 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15008, **55

ACCORDINGLY, the Court GRANTS IN PART Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment [39] with respect to claims arising from alleged antitrust violations that occurred prior to July 30, 1993, and DENIES IN PART Defendant's Motion with respect to claims arising from alleged antitrust violations that occurred after July 30, 1993. The Court also GRANTS Plaintiff's Motion for Leave to File a Very Short Response With Brief in Support [63].

IT IS SO ORDERED, this is 23rd day of September, 1996.

Harold L. Murphy

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

---

End of Document

Borschow Hosp. & Medical Supplies v. Cesar Castillo Inc.

United States Court of Appeals for the First Circuit

September 23, 1996, Decided

No. 96-1113

Reporter

96 F.3d 10 *; 1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 24831 **; 1996-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,587

BORSCHOW HOSPITAL AND MEDICAL SUPPLIES, INC., Plaintiff - Appellant, v. CESAR CASTILLO INC., ET AL., Defendants - Appellees.

Subsequent History: [**1] As Corrected October 11, 1996.

Prior History: APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF PUERTO RICO. Hon. Salvador E. Casellas, U.S. District Judge.

Disposition: AFFIRMED.

Core Terms

---

distributorship, distributor, non-exclusive, summary judgment, parties, distribution agreement, extrinsic evidence, outline, tie, tied product, products, district court, contracts, parol, integration clause, tying arrangement, tying product, unambiguous, intent of a party, civil code, Sherman Act, contractual, antitrust, nonmoving, promise, syringe, terms

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

HN1 Appellate Review, Standards of Review

An appellate court must review the factual record in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party at summary judgment.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

96 F.3d 10, *10L996 U.S. App. LEXIS 24831, **1

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > Discovery Materials

HN2 [blue download icon] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

An appellate court reviews a district court's grant of summary judgment de novo. Summary judgment is appropriate when the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN3 [blue download icon] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

To succeed on a motion for summary judgment, the moving party must show that there is an absence of evidence to support the nonmoving party's position.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Scintilla Rule

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN4 [blue download icon] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

Once the moving party has properly supported its motion for summary judgment, the burden shifts to the non-moving party, who may not rest on mere allegations or denials of his pleading, but must set forth specific facts showing there is a genuine issue for trial. There must be sufficient evidence favoring the nonmoving party for a jury to return a verdict for that party. If the evidence is merely colorable or is not significantly probative, summary judgment may be granted. The court views the facts in the light most favorable to the non-moving party, drawing all reasonable inferences in that party's favor.

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Contracts > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Bad Faith Breach of Contract > General Overview

**HN5** [down] Commercial Interference, Contracts

P.R. Laws Ann. tit. 10, § 278 provides that, notwithstanding the existence in a dealer's contract of a clause reserving to the parties the unilateral right to terminate the existing relationship, no principal or grantor may directly or indirectly perform any act detrimental to the established relationship or refuse to renew said contract on its normal expiration, except for just cause.

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Contracts > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Bad Faith Breach of Contract > General Overview

**HN6** [down] Commercial Interference, Contracts

Although non-exclusive distributors are entitled to protection under P.R. Laws Ann. tit. 10, § 278 (Law 75), it is equally true that Law 75 does not operate to convert non-exclusive distribution contracts into exclusive distribution contracts. The established relationship between dealer and principal is bounded by the distribution agreement, and therefore Law 75 only protects against detriments to contractually acquired rights.

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > Erie Doctrine

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > General Overview

**HN7** [down] Federal & State Interrelationships, Erie Doctrine

As a civil law jurisdiction, Puerto Rico eschews common law principles of contract interpretation in favor of its own civil code derived from Spanish law.

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > General Overview

**HN8** [down] Contracts Law, Contract Interpretation

P.R. Civ. Code art. 1233, P.R. Laws Ann. tit. 31, § 3471, determines the manner in which courts should interpret contracts under dispute as to the meaning of their terms.

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > General Overview

**HN9** [down] Contracts Law, Contract Interpretation

See P.R. Civ. Code art. 1233, P.R. Laws Ann. tit. 31, § 3471.

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > General Overview

**HN10** [down] Contracts Law, Contract Interpretation

Under Puerto Rican law, an agreement is clear when it can be understood in one sense alone, without leaving any room for doubt, controversies or difference of interpretation.

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > General Overview

**HN11** [blue document icon] Contracts Law, Contract Interpretation

P.R. Civ. Code art. 1233, P.R. Laws Ann. tit. 31, § 3471, has been interpreted to be strict in its mandate that courts should enforce the literal sense of a written contract, unless the words are somehow contrary to the intent of the parties.

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Parol Evidence > General Overview

**HN12** [blue document icon] Contract Interpretation, Parol Evidence

When an agreement leaves no doubt as to the intention of the parties, a court should not look beyond the literal terms of the contract.

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Parol Evidence > General Overview

**HN13** [blue document icon] Contract Interpretation, Parol Evidence

See P.R. Laws Ann. tit. 32, App. IV, R. 69(B).

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Parol Evidence > General Overview

**HN14** [blue document icon] Contract Interpretation, Parol Evidence

P.R. Laws Ann. tit. 32, App. IV, R. 69(B) and P.R. Civ. Code art. 1233, P.R. Laws Ann. tit. 31, § 3471, require courts to ignore parol evidence when the agreement is clear and unambiguous.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Contract Conditions & Provisions > Integration Clauses

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Parol Evidence > General Overview

Evidence > Types of Evidence > Documentary Evidence > Parol Evidence

**HN15** [blue document icon] Contract Conditions & Provisions, Integration Clauses

P.R. Laws Ann. tit. 32, App. IV, R. 69(B) and P.R. Civ. Code art. 1233, P.R. Laws Ann. tit. 31, § 3471, bar consideration of extrinsic evidence to vary the express, clear, and unambiguous terms of a contract.

Governments > Legislation > Effect & Operation > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN16 [blue document icon] Legislation, Effect & Operation

The strict mandate of the P.R. Civ. Code art. 1233, P.R. Laws Ann. tit. 31, § 3471, obliges courts to abide by the literal meaning of the terms of the contract when they leave no doubt as to the intention of the contracting parties.

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Parol Evidence > General Overview

HN17 [blue document icon] Contract Interpretation, Parol Evidence

Extrinsic evidence of the parties' intent is inadmissible in the face of a clear and unambiguous contract term under Puerto Rico Law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Per Se Rule

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN18 [blue document icon] Sherman Act, Scope

Section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, prohibits a seller from tying the sale of one product to the purchase of a second product if the seller thereby avoids competition on the merits of the tied product. There are essentially four elements to a per se tying claim: (1) the tying and the tied products are actually two distinct products; (2) there is an agreement or condition, express or implied, that establishes a tie; (3) the entity accused of tying has sufficient economic power in the market for the tying product to distort consumers' choices with respect to the tied product; and (4) the tie forecloses a substantial amount of commerce in the market for the tied product.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN19 [blue document icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The essential characteristic of an invalid tying arrangement lies in the seller's exploitation of its control over the tying product to force the buyer into the purchase of a tied product that the buyer either did not want at all, or might have preferred to purchase elsewhere on different terms. When such forcing is present, competition on the merits in the market for the tied item is restrained and § 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, is violated.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN20 [blue document icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

Where a tying product has not been withheld, there is no tie. There is no tie for any antitrust purpose unless the defendant improperly imposes conditions that explicitly or practically require buyers to take the second product if they want the first one.

Counsel: Fernando L. Gallardo, with whom Harry E. Woods, Geoffrey M. Woods, Woods & Woods and Carlos R. Iguina-Charriz were on brief for appellant.

Donald R. Ware, with whom Richard M. Brunell and Foley, Hoag & Eliot were on brief for appellee Becton Dickinson and Company.

Edilberto Berrios-Perez and Luis Fernandez-Ramirez for appellees Cesar Castillo, Inc., Umeco, Inc., Jose Luis Castillo, Ivonne Belaval de Castillo, Cesar Castillo, Jr., Aracelis Ortiz de Castillo and Maria Isabel Gonzalez.

Judges: Before Selya, Circuit Judge, Torres * and Saris, ** District Judges.

Opinion by: SARIS

Opinion

---

[*11] SARIS, District Judge. Plaintiff-Appellant Borschow Hospital & Medical Supplies, Inc. is a distributor of a line of medical and surgical products supplied by Defendant-Appellee, Becton Dickinson and Company, in Puerto Rico. Borschow claims that Becton Dickinson violated the Puerto Rico Dealers Act, 10 L.P.R.A. [*2] § 278, also commonly known as "Law 75," by granting additional distributorships in violation of its allegedly exclusive Distributorship Agreement.<sup>1</sup> Although the Distributorship [*12] Agreement contained a clear non-exclusivity provision and integration clause, Borschow contends that the district court erred under Puerto Rico's parol evidence rule when it excluded an unsigned written memorandum sent prior to the signing of the agreement as evidence that the parties actually intended the distributorship to be exclusive.

[**3] Borschow also claims that Becton Dickinson engaged in an unlawful tying arrangement in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, by threatening to discontinue a supply of a line of its products (the tying products) unless Borschow also carried its syringe line (the tied product) and dropped that of a competitor.

The district court granted summary judgment for Becton Dickinson on both claims. We affirm.

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

A. Facts

HN1 [↑] Reviewing the factual record in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party, as we must at summary judgment, see Mesnick v. General Elec. Co., 950 F.2d 816, 822 (1st Cir. 1991), cert. denied, 504 U.S. 985, 119 L. Ed. 2d 586, 112 S. Ct. 2965 (1992), we treat the following facts as controlling, noting, however, that Bectin Dickinson disputes many aspects of this account.

---

* Of the District of Rhode Island, sitting by designation.

** Of the District of Massachusetts, sitting by designation.

<sup>1</sup> The additional distributorships were granted to Defendants-Appellees Cesar Castillo, Inc. and UMECO, Inc., which filed a separate brief. At oral argument, Becton Dickinson argued for the Appellees as a group. Where we refer to Becton Dickinson in the course of this opinion, we mean our statements to apply to Appellees as a group except where otherwise indicated. Similarly, to avoid confusion where referring to the testimony of Jonathan Borschow, Borschow's president, we will refer to him as Mr. Borschow and to the company simply as Borschow.

A major supplier of medical products in Puerto Rico, Borschow contracted with Parke Davis & Company ("Parke Davis") on May 1, 1985 to distribute a line of medical and surgical products manufactured by its subsidiary, Deseret Medical, Inc. (the "Deseret Line"). In mid-1986, Becton Dickinson acquired Deseret and assumed Parke Davis' obligations under the distribution agreement [**4] as an assignee. This dispute turns in large part on the content of that agreement.

The distribution agreement executed by Borschow and Parke Davis ["Distribution Agreement"], includes two provisions of interest here. First, it provides that "Company [i.e., Parke Davis] hereby appoints Distributor [i.e., Borschow] and the Distributor hereby accepts appointment, as the Company's nonexclusive independent distributor of the Products for Regular Business in the Territory [i.e., Puerto Rico] during the term of this Agreement." Distribution Agreement, § 2.1.2 (emphasis added). Second, the contract included the following integration clause:

Integration: The terms and provisions contained in this Agreement, including all Schedules attached hereto and Company's Standard Terms and Conditions of Sale in effect, from time to time, constitute the entire agreement and is the final expression of intent between the Parties relating to the subject matter hereof and supersede, all previous communications, representations, agreements, and understandings, either oral or written, between the Parties with respect to the subject matter thereof. No agreement or understanding varying [**5] or extending this Agreement will be binding upon either Party hereto unless in writing, wherein this Agreement is specifically referred to, and signed by duly authorized officers or representatives of the respective Parties.

Id. § 9.10. Borschow's president, Jonathan Borschow, initially refused to sign any contract that included a non-exclusivity provision. However, in negotiations prior to execution of the Distribution Agreement, Robert Vallance, Deseret's Regional Director for Canada/Latin America, assured Mr. Borschow that his distributorship would be exclusive. Vallance promised him that he would receive a letter from Parke Davis promising exclusivity. When that letter was not forthcoming, Mr. Borschow telephoned Vallance and inquired about the delay. Vallance told Mr. Borschow that the people in "Morris Plains," the corporate headquarters of Warner Lambert, Parke Davis' parent company, were considering the matter.

After that conversation, Mr. Borschow received a draft of the Distribution Agreement, which included the non-exclusivity term. He [*13] again objected to Vallance but was told that the "contract cannot, it will not be changed. The people in Morris Plains will [**6] not countenance it." However, Vallance reassured Mr. Borschow that he would send a document that would outline the "true" basis for their business relationship, including a promise that Borschow's distributorship would be exclusive.

Within a matter of days, Mr. Borschow received a two-page undated and unsigned outline. The outline specifies that one of the supplier's obligations is to "sell exclusively to the DISTRIBUTOR and refrain from selling to other DISTRIBUTORS or clients in the territory while the AGREEMENT is in effect." The outline neither explicitly mentions Mr. Borschow or Parke Davis nor refers to the May 1 Distribution Agreement. Borschow testified that he executed the Distribution Agreement approximately two weeks after he received the outline.<sup>2</sup>

[**7] From the execution of the agreement in 1985 to 1986, Borschow remained Parke Davis' exclusive distributor of the Deseret line. After Becton Dickinson's acquisition of Deseret in mid-1986, no changes were made in the relationship until November 1989, when Becton Dickinson granted distributorships to UMECO, Inc. and Cesar Castillo, Inc.

Moreover, according to Borschow and his salespeople, at approximately the same time that the additional distributors were established in November 1989, Becton Dickinson demanded that Borschow cease distributing the Monoject Syringe & Needle Line, made by a Becton Dickinson competitor, and begin carrying the Becton Dickinson syringe line. Becton Dickinson also threatened that if Borschow did not meet this demand, it would no longer be <sup>2</sup> At Mr. Borschow's deposition, the parties marked the Distribution Agreement as BDX-1 and the undated outline as BDX-3, and throughout its brief Appellant refers to the documents by those numbers. To avoid confusion, however, the Court will refer to BDX-1 and BDX-3 as the Distribution Agreement and the Outline, respectively.

---

supplied with the Deseret line. However, Becton Dickinson did not carry through on this threat. Although Borschow refused to drop Monoject, Becton Dickinson continued to supply Deseret products to Borschow.

B. Proceedings Below

Borschow brought an action in federal district court for the District of Puerto Rico on February 6, 1990, alleging that Becton Dickinson's termination of Borschow's "exclusive" distributorship [\[\*\*8\]](#) violated Law 75 and that Becton Dickinson's threat to tie the Deseret line to its syringe line violated the Sherman Act. Borschow also alleged a conspiracy with Castillo and UMECO in restraint of trade and attempted monopolization. Federal jurisdiction was invoked on the basis of a federal question and diversity of citizenship.

On September 24, 1990, the district court permitted discovery limited to the threshold issue as to whether Borschow's distributorship was exclusive. On January 15, 1991, Becton Dickinson moved for summary judgment, asserting that taking these facts in the light most favorable to Plaintiff, Borschow cannot evade the effect of its written contract providing for non-exclusivity. If Borschow's contract was non-exclusive, according to Becton Dickinson, the Law 75 claim fails as a matter of law. In addition, Becton Dickinson argued that the outline was extrinsic evidence of the contracting parties' intent that could not be considered on summary judgment because of Puerto Rico's parol evidence rule.

The motion was referred to a magistrate judge, who issued a report and recommendation denying summary judgment on the ground that the extrinsic evidence raised issues [\[\*\*9\]](#) of fact regarding whether the agreement provided for exclusivity. The district court (Acosta, J.) initially adopted the magistrate judge's recommendation without comment, but on a motion for reconsideration, the court (Casellas, J.) granted partial summary judgment for Becton Dickinson.<sup>3</sup> The court held that Puerto Rico's parol evidence rule barred consideration of the outline and [\[\*14\]](#) that the contract unambiguously provided for a non-exclusive distributorship. Borschow Hosp. & Medical Supplies, Inc. v. Cesar Castillo, Inc., 882 F. Supp. 236, 239-40 \(D.P.R. 1995\). In a subsequent order, the court granted partial summary judgment for Becton Dickinson on the antitrust claims due to lack of evidence of tying, anticompetitive injury or conspiracy and dismissed the pendent state law claims. Borschow timely appealed the judgment.

II. DISCUSSION

A. Standard of Review

HN2 We review [\[\*\*10\]](#) a district court's grant of summary judgment de novo. Werme v. Merrill, 84 F.3d 479, 482 \(1st Cir. 1996\). The standard is well-rehearsed and familiar. "Summary judgment is appropriate when 'the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.'" Barbour v. Dynamics Research Corp., 63 F.3d 32, 36 \(1st Cir. 1995\) (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\)), cert. denied, 133 L. Ed. 2d 845, U.S. , 116 S. Ct. 914 (1996). "In operation, summary judgment's role is to pierce the boilerplate of the pleadings and assay the parties' proof in order to determine whether trial is actually required." Wynne v. Tufts Univ. School of Medicine, 976 F.2d 791, 794 \(1st Cir. 1992\), cert. denied, 507 U.S. 1030, 123 L. Ed. 2d 470, 113 S. Ct. 1845 (1993). HN3 "To succeed, the moving party must show that there is an absence of evidence to support the nonmoving party's position." Rogers v. Fair, 902 F.2d 140, 143 \(1st Cir. 1990\); see also Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 325, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 \(1986\).

HN4 "Once the moving party has properly supported [\[\*\*11\]](#) its motion for summary judgment, the burden shifts to the non-moving party, who 'may not rest on mere allegations or denials of his pleading, but must set forth specific facts showing there is a genuine issue for trial.'" Barbour, 63 F.3d at 37 (quoting Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc.,

---

<sup>3</sup> Judge Acosta took senior status before the motion for reconsideration, and the case was reassigned to Judge Casellas.

477 U.S. 242, 256, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 \(1986\)). "There must be 'sufficient evidence favoring the nonmoving party for a jury to return a verdict for that party. If the evidence is merely colorable or is not significantly probative, summary judgment may be granted.'" Rogers, 902 F.2d at 143 (quoting Anderson, 477 U.S. at 249-50) (citations and footnote in Anderson omitted). We "view the facts in the light most favorable to the non-moving party, drawing all reasonable inferences in that party's favor." Barbour, 63 F.3d at 36.

B. The Law 75 Claim

"The legislature of Puerto Rico enacted Law 75 to protect distributors, agents, concessionaires and representatives of a product or service in Puerto Rico. . . . More specifically, Law 75 was intended to protect dealers who built up a market, from suppliers who wish to appropriate their established clientele." Medina & Medina v. Country Pride Foods, Ltd., 825 F.2d 1, 2 \(1st Cir. 1987\). HN5 [**12] "Law 75 provides that, notwithstanding the existence in a dealer's contract of a clause reserving to the parties the unilateral right to terminate the existing relationship, no principal or grantor may directly or indirectly perform any act detrimental to the established relationship or refuse to renew said contract on its normal expiration, except for just cause." General Office Prods. Corp. v. Gussco Mfg. Inc., 666 F. Supp. 328, 328 \(D.P.R. 1987\) (citing 10 L.P.R.A. § 278(a)).

Law 75 has proved fertile ground for litigation, and we recently have had occasion to consider its application to circumstances analogous to those presented here. HN6 [**13] Although "non-exclusive distributors are entitled to protection under Law 75," Vulcan Tools of Puerto Rico v. Makita U.S.A., Inc., 23 F.3d 564, 569 \(1st Cir. 1994\), "it is equally true . . . that Law 75 does not operate to convert non-exclusive distribution contracts into exclusive distribution contracts." Id. (citing Gussco, 666 F. Supp. at 331). As we said in Vulcan Tools, "the 'established relationship' between dealer and principal is bounded by the distribution agreement, [**13] and therefore the Act only protects against detriments to contractually acquired rights." Id. at 569.

[*15] This case turns on whether Borschow and Parke Davis (now Becton Dickinson) contracted for a non-exclusive or exclusive distributorship. If the former, Borschow cannot prevail on its claim that Law 75 prohibits Becton Dickinson from supplying Deseret medical products to other distributors. See Vulcan Tools, 23 F.3d at 569 (Law 75 did not prevent supplier from establishing additional distributorships in Puerto Rico where non-exclusive distributor was already operating even if existing distributor suffered economic harm as result); Nike Int'l Ltd. v. Athletic Sales, Inc., 689 F. Supp. 1235, 1238-39 \(D.P.R. 1988\) (where distributorship contract between Nike and distributor provided for notice of renewal from distributor and distributor failed to provide such notice, Law 75 did not bar termination of distributorship contract).

HN7 [**14] As a civil law jurisdiction, Puerto Rico eschews common law principles of contract interpretation in favor of its own civil code derived from Spanish law. See Guevara v. Dorsey Labs., Div. of Sandoz, Inc., 845 F.2d 364, 366 \(1st Cir. 1988\) [**14] ("The Supreme Court of Puerto Rico has made clear that the common law of the United States is not controlling when filling gaps in the civil law system."); Gussco, 666 F. Supp. at 332. Thus, we turn to HN8 [**15] Civil Code Article 1233, which "determines the manner in which courts should interpret contracts under dispute as to the meaning of their terms." Hopgood v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, 839 F. Supp. 98, 104 \(D.P.R. 1993\), aff'd, 36 F.3d 1089 (1st Cir. 1994) (table). Article 1233 provides:

HN9 [**16] If the terms of a contract are clear and leave no doubt as to the intentions of the contracting parties, the literal sense of its stipulations shall be observed.

If the words should appear contrary to the evident intention of the contracting parties, the intention shall prevail.

31 L.P.R.A. § 3471 (1991). HN10 [**17] "Under Puerto Rican law, an agreement is 'clear' when it can 'be understood in one sense alone, without leaving any room for doubt, controversies or difference of interpretation. . . .'" Executive Leasing Corp. v. Banco Popular de Puerto Rico, 48 F.3d 66, 69 \(1st Cir.\) (quoting Catullo v. Metzner, 834 F.2d 1075, 1079 \(1st Cir. 1987\)) (internal quotation marks omitted), cert. denied, U.S. , 116 S. Ct. 171, 133 L. Ed. 2d 112 (1995); see also Heirs of Ramirez v. Superior Court, 81 P.R.R. 347, 351 (1959).

Citing the Puerto Rico Supreme Court in Marina Ind., Inc. v. Brown Boveri Corp., 114 P.R. Dec. 64, 72 (1983) (official translation), several courts have interpreted Article 1233 HN11 to be "strict in its mandate that courts should enforce the literal sense of a written contract, unless the words are somehow contrary to the intent of the parties." Hopgood, 839 F. Supp. at 104; see also Vulcan Tools, 23 F.3d at 567 (HN12) "When an agreement leaves no doubt as to the intention of the parties, a court should not look beyond the literal terms of the contract.").

This interpretation of Article 1233 is complemented by Puerto Rico's parol evidence rule, P.R. Laws Ann. tit. 32, App. IV, R. 69(B) (1983) ("Rule 69(B)'), which provides:

HN13 When in an oral or written agreement, either public or private, all the terms and conditions constituting the true and final intention of the parties have been included, such agreement shall be deemed as complete, and therefore, there can be between the parties, or successors [**16] in interest, no evidence extrinsic to the contents of the same, except in the following cases:

- (1) Where a mistake or imperfection of the agreement is put in issue by the pleadings;
- (2) Where the validity of the agreement is the fact in dispute.

This rule does not exclude other evidence of the circumstances under which the agreement was made or to which it is related such as the situation of the subject matter of the instrument or that of the parties, or to establish illegality or fraud.

HN14 We have interpreted this rule in tandem with Article 1233 to require courts "to ignore [parol] evidence 'when the agreement . . . is clear and unambiguous.'" Mercado-Garcia v. Ponce Fed. Bank, 979 F.2d 890, 894 (1st Cir. 1992) (quoting Catullo, 834 F.2d at 1079).

Recently, we have held that HN15 these provisions bar consideration of extrinsic evidence to vary the express, clear, and unambiguous terms of a contract. See Executive Leasing Corp., 48 F.3d at 69-70 (refusing to consider [*16] parol evidence regarding implied loan term barring leasing company from dealing with other banks where contract did not include restriction but did include clear [**17] integration clause); Vulcan Tools, 23 F.3d at 564-68 (where contractual term providing for "non-exclusive" distributorship was clear and unambiguous, there was no need to consider extrinsic evidence of promise to limit number of distributors even absent contractual integration clause); see also Hopgood, 839 F. Supp. at 103-05 (holding that term "indefinite" used in employment contract clearly signified employment at will and refusing to consider parol evidence of implied guarantee of three-year minimum employment).

This line of cases effectively parries the main thrust of Borschow's appeal. The Distribution Agreement clearly and unambiguously gives Borschow a "non-exclusive" distributorship. The integration clause, specifying that the terms and provisions of this Distribution Agreement constitute the "entire agreement" and "the final expression of intent," nullifies any other oral or written understandings reached between the parties. Crediting Mr. Borschow's testimony that he received the outline from Vallance promising an exclusive distributorship, as we must on summary judgment, we hold that the integration clause rendered inoperative any such side-agreement, and we are [**18] barred from considering the extrinsic evidence by Rule 69(B).

Borschow attempts to evade the effect of this settled precedent by arguing that the entire agreement, properly construed, includes both the Distribution Agreement and the Outline. Because the documents contain mutually inconsistent terms, Borschow contends that Article 1233 of Puerto Rico's Civil Code permits liberal consideration of extrinsic evidence as to the parties' intent to resolve contractual ambiguity. To some extent, Borschow's reliance on this Civil Code principle finds some support in Puerto Rico case law. The Puerto Rico Supreme Court has held that:

The intention of the parties is the essential test provided in the Civil Code to fix the scope of contractual obligations. This test of intention is so essential in the interpretation of contracts that the Code proclaims its supremacy in providing that the evident intention of the parties shall prevail over the words, even where the latter would appear contrary to the intention . . . .

Merle v. West Bend, 97 P.R.R. 392, 399 (1969). However, that court subsequently clarified that HN16 "the strict mandate of the cited art. 1233 obliges us to abide [**19] by the literal meaning of the terms of the contract when, as in the present case, they leave no doubt as to the intention of the contracting parties." Marina Ind. Inc. v. Brown Boveri Corp., 114 P.R. Dec. 64 (1983) (official translation).

In rejecting essentially the same argument now made by Borschow, we applied this principle in Executive Leasing Corp.:

The plaintiffs concede the loan agreement is clear. They argue, however, that the written agreement was not in fact the entire agreement, and that we must consider extrinsic evidence of the parties' intent with respect to integration. . . . Yet to consider extrinsic evidence at all, the court must first find the relevant terms of the agreement unclear. That requirement not being met, the district court correctly went no further.

48 F.3d at 69 (excluding extrinsic evidence of exclusive dealing condition and of "actual practice" of parties); accord Hopgood, 839 F. Supp. at 106 (explaining that Marina and Merle support principle that under Article 1233 the clear terms of the contract are the "embodiment of the indisputable intent of the parties as they entered into the contract").

For the [\[\*\*20\]](#) third time, we mean what we say, and say what we mean: HN17 extrinsic evidence of the parties' intent is inadmissible in the face of a clear and unambiguous contract term under Puerto Rico Law. Because Borschow's distributorship was non-exclusive as a matter of law, the district court properly granted summary judgment for Appellees on the Law 75 claim.<sup>4</sup>

C . Antitrust Claim -- Tying Arrangement

Asserting a per se violation of Section One of the Sherman Act, Borschow contends that [\[\*\*21\]](#) [\[\*17\]](#) Becton Dickinson threatened to withhold sale of its patented Deseret line of medical products (the tying product) unless Borschow dropped the Monoject product and carried instead its own syringe line (the tied product).<sup>5</sup> Contending that this is "the case of the tie that didn't bind," Becton Dickinson argues that a threat alone is insufficient to constitute an illegal tying arrangement. We agree.

"Section 1 HN18 of the Sherman Act prohibits a seller from 'tying' [\[\*\*22\]](#) the sale of one product to the purchase of a second product if the seller thereby avoids competition on the merits of the 'tied' product. See 15 U.S.C. § 1 ('Every contract . . . in restraint of trade or commerce . . . is declared to be illegal.')" Data General Corp. v. Grumman Systems Support Corp., 36 F.3d 1147, 1178 (1st Cir. 1994). "There are essentially four elements to a per se tying claim: (1) the tying and the tied products are actually two distinct products; (2) there is an agreement or condition, express or implied, that establishes a tie; (3) the entity accused of tying has sufficient economic power in the market for the tying product to distort consumers' choices with respect to the tied product; and (4) the tie forecloses a substantial amount of commerce in the market for the tied product." Id. at 1178-79.<sup>6</sup>

<sup>4</sup> While the Puerto Rico parol evidence rule permits extrinsic evidence to establish fraud, Borschow does not allege that it was fraudulently induced into signing the Distribution Agreement. Nor is a claim of equitable estoppel properly before us. Borschow contends for the first time on appeal that Becton Dickinson should be estopped from denying the existence of an exclusive contract because of the conduct of its agent, Vallance. As this argument was not made below, it is waived. Executive Leasing Corp., 48 F.3d at 70.

<sup>5</sup> See Amended Verified Complaint PP 28-29. Plaintiff also asserts a claim under the Clayton Act, § 3, that we need not separately address. See Grappone, Inc. v. Subaru of New England, Inc., 858 F.2d 792, 793 (1988) (pointing out that essential elements of unlawful tying arrangement are same for alleged violations of Sherman Act § 1 or Clayton Act § 3). In addition, Borschow conceded at oral argument that our holding that the Distribution Agreement was non-exclusive would foreclose relief on all of its antitrust claims except its tying claim.

<sup>6</sup> Borschow does not articulate a "rule of reason" theory of tying liability. Although the amended verified complaint contains conclusory allegations that Becton Dickinson's conduct generally had an adverse effect on competition, there is no evidence in the record to support the allegation that the threats of tying had such an adverse impact, or to provide a basis for providing [**23] The fatal flaw in Borschow's tying claim is that Becton Dickinson never withheld its Deseret line. Although Borschow has adduced evidence of various threats by Becton Dickinson, it is undisputed that these threats were not carried out. Permitted to carry both the Deseret line and the Monoject line, Borschow was never injured by the threat. See Wells Real Estate, Inc. v. Greater Lowell Board of Realtors, 850 F.2d 803, 814 (1st Cir.) (holding that plaintiff must have been injured by anticompetitive act to have standing under antitrust laws), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 955, 102 L. Ed. 2d 381, 109 S. Ct. 392 (1988).

As a result, the second key element discussed above -evidence of a tie -- is missing:

HN19 [↑] The essential characteristic of an invalid tying arrangement lies in the seller's exploitation of its control over the tying product to force the buyer into the purchase of a tied product that the buyer either did not want at all, or might have preferred to purchase elsewhere on different terms. When such "forcing" is present, competition on the merits in the market for the tied item is restrained and the Sherman Act is violated.

Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 12, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 (1984); [**24] see also T. Harris Young & Assoc., Inc. v. Marquette Electronics, Inc., 931 F.2d 816, 822-23 (11th Cir.) ("For a tie to exist a seller must withhold product A unless the buyer also selects product B. Only after the existence of a tie is shown is it necessary to determine whether an illegal [*18] tying arrangement exists.") (footnote omitted), cert. denied, 502 U.S. 1013, 116 L. Ed. 2d 749, 112 S. Ct. 658 (1991); CIA Petrolera Caribe, Inc. v. Avis Rental Car Corp., 576 F. Supp. 1011, 1016 (D.P.R. 1983) ("Coercion is an essential element of any tying arrangement, i.e., forcing the purchaser or lessor to take the unwanted tied product along with the tying product."), aff'd, 735 F.2d 636 (1st Cir. 1984).

HN20 [↑] Where a tying product has not been withheld, there is no tie. "There is no tie for any antitrust purpose unless the defendant improperly imposes conditions that explicitly or practically require buyers to take the second product if they want the first one." 10 Phillip E. Areeda et al., Antitrust Law: An Analysis of Antitrust Principles and their Application P 1752b, at 280 (1996). Thus we hold that there is no genuine issue of material fact with respect to Borschow's tying claim.<sup>7</sup>

[**25] III. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the district court's grant of summary judgment is AFFIRMED.

End of Document

further discovery pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(f). See Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 29-31, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 (1984) (noting that in absence of per se liability, antitrust plaintiff must prove that defendant's conduct had an "actual adverse effect on competition"); R.W. International Corp. v. Welch Food, Inc., 13 F.3d 478, 487-88 (1st Cir. 1994) (rejecting request for further discovery despite conclusory allegations of antitrust injury where plaintiff distributors were in same position as defendant to ascertain effect of conduct at issue).

<sup>7</sup> This holding also disposes of Borschow's discovery claim. Borschow contends that the district court abused its discretion by refusing to allow further discovery. However, no amount of discovery would uncover evidence of a non-existent tie.

Johnson v. Hospital Corp. of Am.

United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit

September 23, 1996, Decided

No. 94-11002

Reporter

95 F.3d 383 *; 1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 24832 **; 1996-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P71,579

ALFRED R. JOHNSON, D.O., ET AL., Plaintiff-Appellees, Cross-Appellants, versus HOSPITAL CORPORATION OF AMERICA, ET AL., Defendants, BEDFORD NORTHEAST COMMUNITY HOSPITAL, INC., ET AL., Defendants-Appellants, Cross-Appellees.

Prior History: [\[\*\*1\]](#) Appeals from the United States District Court for the Northern District of Texas. 3:89-CV-454-P. Jorge A Solis, US District Judge.

Disposition: AFFIRMED in part, REVERSED in part, VACATED in part and REMANDED.

Core Terms

---

damages, district court, patients, conspiracy, privileges, suspension, closure, tortious interference, admitting, antitrust, summary suspension, disparagement, malice, plaintiffs', suspend, legal right, award of damages, good faith, immunity, charts, business relationship, antigens, no evidence, environmental, recommended, medicine, stemming, reopen, contractual relationship, clearly erroneous

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Administrative Law > Judicial Review > Reviewability > Standing

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

**HN1** Reviewability, Standing

In order to establish individual standing, a plaintiff must show that: (1) he has suffered an actual or threatened injury as a result of the actions of the defendant; (2) the injury is "fairly traceable" to the defendant's actions; and (3) the injury will likely be redressed if he prevails in his lawsuit.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Clearly Erroneous Review

**HN2** Standards of Review, Clearly Erroneous Review

When a district court sits as a finder of fact, its factual determinations will not be overturned on appeal unless they are clearly erroneous. Under the clearly erroneous standard, if the district court's account of the evidence is plausible in light of the record viewed in its entirety, the court of appeals may not reverse it even though convinced that had it been sitting as the trier of fact, it would have weighed the evidence differently.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN3 Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act forbids contracts, combinations, or conspiracies in restraint of trade or commerce. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. To prevail on a section one claim, plaintiffs must show that the defendants (1) engaged in a conspiracy (2) that produced some anti-competitive effect (3) in the relevant market. Section one applies only to concerted action; unilateral conduct is excluded from its purview. The plaintiffs bear the burden of proving each element of the section one violation.

Healthcare Law > ... > Actions Against Facilities > Governmental & Nonprofit Liability > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Peer Review > Peer Review Statutes

HN4 Actions Against Facilities, Governmental & Nonprofit Liability

See Tex. Rev. Civ. Stat. Ann. 4495b, § 5.06(f).

Counsel: For ALFRED R JOHNSON, D O, WILLIAM J REA, MD, WILLIAM J REA AND ASSOCIATES, PA, ENVIRONMENTAL HEALTH CENTER - DALLAS, INC fka WJR and Associates, PA, Plaintiffs - Appellees-Cross-Appellants: Stephen A Coke, Richard Wellington Winn, Wesner, Coke and Clymer, Dallas, TX.

For BEDFORD NORTHEAST COMMUNITY HOSPITAL, INC, JIM LINTON, D O, ROBERT M MARTIN, PAUL HABERER, D O, RICHARD FEINGOLD, D O, BARRY FIRSTENBERG, D O, Defendants - Appellants-Cross-Appellees: Patton G Lochridge, Linn Hughes, McGinnis, Lochridge & Kilgore, Austin, TX.

Judges: Before JOLLY, DUHE, and STEWART, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: E. GRADY JOLLY

Opinion

---

[*386] E. GRADY JOLLY, Circuit Judge:

William J. Rea, M.D. and Alfred R. Johnson, D.O. sued the hospital where they formerly practiced, Bedford Northeast Community Hospital (the "Hospital"), its parent corporation, HCA Health Services of Texas, Inc. ("Health Services"), the Hospital's administrator, Robert M. Martin, and its chief of staff, Dr. Jim Linton, and three doctors, Drs. Barry Firstenberg, Richard Feingold, and Paul Haberer, who served on an ad hoc Hospital committee to investigate complaints made against Rea and Johnson, which resulted in the suspension of their admitting privileges. Rea and Johnson alleged that the Hospital's suspension of their admitting privileges and its later decision to close the unit to which they admitted patients violated federal antitrust law. They also asserted pendent state law claims of breach of contract, fraud, negligent misrepresentation, slander and business disparagement and tortious interference with contractual relations. [**2] After a bench trial, the district court held that the Hospital,

Linton, Martin, and Haberer tortiously interfered with Rea and Johnson's contractual relations with their patients. The district court denied all other claims. The district court awarded Rea and Johnson both compensatory and exemplary damages.

We have before us an appeal and cross-appeal. The defendants appeal the award of damages for tortious interference with business relations, arguing that the only damages proved at trial were damages of Rea and Johnson's professional association, for which they lack standing to seek recovery. The defendants also argue that the Hospital's decision to close the unit to which Rea and Johnson admitted patients is protected by the affirmative defense of legal justification, and that the defendants are entitled to immunity in connection with the summary suspension of Rea and Johnson's admitting privileges. Rea and Johnson cross-appeal the denial of their antitrust and business disparagement claims. The overarching question before us, thus, is whether Rea and Johnson have proved that they are entitled to damages under any theory that they assert on appeal and, if so, in what amount. We [**3] begin with a review of the relevant facts.

I

Rea and Johnson practice environmental medicine. This practice involves the treatment of patients with chronic pain or disease that is believed to be caused or aggravated by chemicals or other agents found in the patient's environment. Before the suspension of their hospital privileges, Rea and Johnson admitted patients to the Environmental Care Unit ("ECU"), a part of the Hospital's Internal Medicine Department.

The Hospital's relationship with Rea and Johnson had been tumultuous for some time before their suspension, arising from a Medicare [*387] inspection in September of 1986. Its importance was heightened because Medicare receipts made up nearly one-half of the Hospital's gross revenue. The inspection uncovered several deficiencies that, unless timely remedied, would result in the loss of the Hospital's Medicare payments. Among the deficiencies noted by Medicare was the use of antigens in the ECU.<sup>1</sup> Medicare requires that any medication administered in the Hospital, including antigens, be properly labeled, dispensed through the Hospital's pharmacy, and come from an FDA-approved source. Rea and Johnson manufactured the antigens themselves. [**4] They were not an FDA-approved source.<sup>2</sup> Martin notified Rea and Johnson that they would no longer be able to use the antigens in the Hospital until a suitable alternative source was found. Martin also advised the doctors that their reappointment and privileges could be in jeopardy if their recalcitrance continued. Irrespective of these instructions, Rea and Johnson continued to provide antigens to their patients, but only for self-administration.

[**5] Other sources of friction arose between the Hospital and Rea and Johnson. After learning that Rea and Johnson violated hospital policy by rendering medical services to patients in the "ECU Hotel," which consisted of several rooms adjacent to the ECU used by the families of ECU patients "almost as a hotel," the Hospital decided to close it. Coinciding with its closure of the ECU Hotel, the Hospital also instituted a cash-only policy for ECU patients. The Hospital took this action after experiencing problems in bill collection when insurance coverage was denied to several ECU patients.

The immediate impetus for the Hospital's suspension of Rea and Johnson's admitting privileges--one of two factual bases for the present suit--occurred in January of 1987, less than six months after Medicare inspected the Hospital. The dispute began when the Hospital's Director of Pharmacy, Mike Warmington, notified Martin, the hospital administrator, of concerns he had about the drug regimen of two ECU patients under the care of Rea and Johnson.

On January 22, 1987, the Hospital's Medical Executive Committee ("MEC") met. The MEC was composed of the elected heads of the Hospital's various departments. [**6] During that meeting, Martin relayed Warmington's concerns. Martin also raised the Hospital's earlier problems with Rea and Johnson surrounding the use of antigens and transfer factor in the ECU. Linton, the Hospital's chief of staff, and Firstenberg, the chairman of internal medicine, both expressed some concern that the Hospital's previous inquiry into antigen use was being brought up again now. Feingold recommended that the MEC bring in an outside consultant to investigate the charges against Rea and Johnson. Disregarding Feingold's suggestion, Linton appointed an ad hoc committee (the "Committee") to review the charts of certain ECU patients.<sup>3</sup> The Committee consisted of defendants Drs. Feingold and Firstenberg, defendant Dr. Paul Haberer, a former chief of staff at the Hospital, and a fourth member not named as a defendant, Dr. Jeffrey Mills.

---

<sup>1</sup> Rea and Johnson administered the antigens in small doses to their patients in order to determine the patient's sensitivity to the substance.

<sup>2</sup> Rea and Johnson also manufactured and administered "transfer factor," a blood product that is used to fight infections and enhance the immune system. Because transfer factor is an "investigational drug" requiring approval of the Hospital's Internal Review Board, which had not approved it, the Hospital directed Rea and Johnson not to administer it at the Hospital. Notwithstanding this instruction, they administered transfer factor to at least one patient after the prohibition.

[**7] [*388] Twenty-two days after its appointment, on February 13, 1987, three members of the Committee, Mills, Haberer, and Feingold, met for the first time to review the charts of four ECU patients. Firstenberg, who was out of town, did not attend the meeting. The Committee spent two hours reviewing the charts, but prepared no written findings or recommendations after its review. The charts showed that Johnson gave one patient four times the daily recommended dose of Halcion, a level described as toxic in the 1986 Physician's Desk Reference. A second patient received six times the daily recommended dosage of Halcion, while simultaneously receiving a second drug that "potentiates" or make stronger the effect of Halcion. At least one patient appeared from the charts to be addicted to narcotic pain killers. Other patients demonstrated depression and suicidal ideations for which no psychiatric evaluation was performed or treatment provided. Haberer reported the Committee's findings to Linton by telephone after the meeting, describing the situation as a "shooting gallery."

On the morning of February 16, 1987, Martin and Linton met to discuss the Committee's findings as orally reported to them [**8] by Haberer. Feingold and Mills confirmed Haberer's report. Joined by Firstenberg, who had been absent from the Committee's meeting on February 13, Martin and Linton summoned Johnson. Johnson was informed that the Hospital was suspending his and Rea's admitting privileges immediately, but that the doctors' treating privileges were being suspended effective February 18, 1987, at noon. Both actions were taken pending further investigation of the doctors' medical practices through the Hospital's Fair Hearing Process, set forth in its Bylaws. The Hospital argues on appeal that it did not immediately suspend the doctors' treatment privileges in order to allow them "to make arrangements for new doctors to take over the care of the patients." Despite the promise Johnson made during the meeting to arrange substitute care, he did not. Martin and Linton arranged substitute physicians for the ECU patients.

The Hospital confirmed its suspension of Rea and Johnson by letter the same day, stating that suspensions were based upon § 8.1-4(a)-(f) of the Hospital's Bylaws, which governs summary suspensions. The letter gave no specific reason for the suspension. Sometime after the meeting concluded, [**9] Firstenberg and Linton each reviewed for the first time the ECU charts that triggered the Hospital's suspension of Rea and Johnson.

On February 19, 1987, the MEC met to review the suspension and voiced considerable concern for the ECU patients' safety. The MEC voted unanimously to continue Rea and Johnson's suspension. On February 26, the MEC met a second time to consider the suspension. At this meeting, Rea and Johnson each spent an hour answering questions from the MEC regarding their treatment of patients. Following the doctors' appearance, the MEC voted unanimously a second time to affirm the summary suspension pending a full hearing before the Fair Hearing Committee.

---

<sup>3</sup> The Hospital's Bylaws provide for the summary suspension of admitting privileges "whenever action must be taken immediately in the best interest of patient care . . ." Hospital Bylaws § 8.2. The Bylaws further require, however, that complaints about doctors be submitted in writing to the MEC, which is then to forward the complaint to the department head where the activities occurred--here, the Department of Internal Medicine. Bylaws § 8.1-1-5. The department head is then required to investigate the matter or appoint an ad hoc committee to investigate. Hospital Bylaws § 8.1-3. A written report of the investigation is then sent to the MEC, which may then take action. Id.

Under this framework, Firstenberg, as the Chairman of Internal Medicine, alone had authority to appoint the members of the Committee.

On March 26, 1987, the day before the Fair Hearing Committee met to consider the suspension, Martin closed the ECU. At the time, the ECU had no patients and it was doubtful there would be any new patients in the immediate future.

On March 27, 1987, the Fair Hearing Committee met for over seventeen hours to hear testimony from Rea and Johnson. Following the hearing, the committee voted to reinstate Rea and Johnson's privileges, although at least one member of the committee thought that the narcotic use in the ECU [**10] was "excessive." Based on the committee's report, the MEC reinstated Rea and Johnson's privileges, but placed them on probation for twelve months, on the condition that the charts of their patients would be reviewed periodically.

Rea and Johnson appealed the probation decision to the Hospital's Board of Trustees, the final authority on admitting privileges. The Board of Trustees voted to reinstate the doctors without placing them on probation. The Board of Trustees, however, sent Rea and Johnson a letter of concern regarding the "questionable use of narcotics" in the ECU. The Hospital restored Rea and Johnson's [*389] privileges on June 11, 1987, which was of little practical consequence to them, however, because the ECU had been closed.

On September 17, Health Services sold the Hospital to Bedford-Northeast Community Hospital, Inc. ("BNECH"). Martin continued to act as Hospital Administrator after the sale to BNECH. Although Martin discussed with Rea and Johnson the reopening of the ECU on several occasions, on December 15, 1987, the Hospital made a final decision not to reopen it.

On February 14, 1989, Rea and Johnson filed this suit, naming initially as defendants the Hospital Corporation [**11] of America ("HCA") (which was later dismissed by order of the district court), the Hospital, Martin, Linton, Feingold, Firstenberg, and Haberer. They asserted violations of the Sherman Act, breach of contract, fraud, negligent misrepresentation, slander, business disparagement, and tortious interference with business relations. On February 15, 1990, Rea and Johnson joined as plaintiffs their professional associations, William J. Rea, M.D. and Associates ("PA1") and Environmental Health Center-Dallas, Inc., f/k/a/ WJR & Associates, P.A. ("PA2"). At the same time they added the Hospital's parent corporation, Health Services, as a defendant.

Following a bench trial, the district court held for defendants on the claims for antitrust, breach of contract, fraud, negligent misrepresentation, slander, and business disparagement. With respect to the claim for tortious interference with business relations, the district court concluded that two defendants, Firstenberg and Feingold, were entitled to civil immunity under Texas's peer review statute, and consequently denied the plaintiffs' claim against them. As to the remaining defendants, the district court concluded that the Hospital, Health [**12] Services, Martin, Linton and Haberer engaged in two separate incidents of tortious interference with Rea and Johnson's contractual relations with their patients--first, by closing the Hospital's ECU and, second, by summarily suspending Rea and Johnson's admitting privileges. The district court awarded Rea and Johnson compensatory damages from February 16, 1987, the date of their summary suspensions, to December 15, 1987, the date on which the Hospital decided not to reopen the ECU. Based on expert testimony that the damages from lost patient revenue equaled $ 653.23 per day, the district court awarded Rea and Johnson $ 197,928.00 <sup>4</sup> in compensatory damages. The court also awarded Rea and Johnson exemplary damages in the amount of $ 200,000.00. Each side has appealed the district court's judgment.

[**13] II

Our task is to determine whether and to what extent Rea and Johnson have proved that they are entitled to damages under the business disparagement, antitrust or tortious interference claims asserted by them at trial and on appeal. We begin with the defendants' claim that Rea and Johnson have failed to prove standing to recover

---

<sup>4</sup>The district court found the Hospital, Health Services and Martin jointly and severally liable to Drs. Rea and Johnson for $ 122,154.00. In addition, the court found the Hospital, Health Services, Martin, Haberer, and Linton jointly and severally liable for an additional sum of $ 75,774.00.

damages stemming from their summary suspension and the Hospital's closure of the ECU. We then examine each of the theories advanced by Rea and Johnson on appeal as a basis for their recovery of damages.<sup>5</sup>

III

As a preliminary matter, the defendants contend that Rea and Johnson lack standing to seek damages stemming from their summary suspension and the Hospital's closure of the ECU. The defendants argue that the only damages proved were damages to Rea and Johnson's professional association, PA2; PA2, moreover, is barred from recovering any damages for tortious [**14] interference because the limitations period has run, and [*390] because PA2 had no admitting privileges. We are unconvinced by either argument.

The defendants correctly observe that the damages for tortious interference proved at trial were damages to PA2. The plaintiffs' expert on damages testified that the loss suffered in this case included lost profits from the sale of services and products provided to ECU patients. Because the fees for these services are paid to PA2, and not to Rea and Johnson directly, the calculation of damages derived entirely from the loss of earnings to PA2. The defendants are also correct that under Texas law a shareholder does not have an individual cause of action for personal damages caused solely by a wrong done to the corporation. See *Cullum v. General Motors Acceptance Corp., 115 S.W.2d 1196, 1201* (Tex.Civ.App.--Amarillo 1938, no writ).

We cannot agree, however, that Rea and Johnson lack standing to recover the damages proved at trial. PA2 assigned its rights to Rea and Johnson, who may then recover to the same extent as PA2. See *State Fidelity Mortg. Co. v. Varner, 740 S.W.2d 477, 480* (Tex.App.--Houston 1987). Contrary to the defendants' assertion, [**15] PA2 was not barred from recovering damages by limitations. Rea and Johnson filed their tortious interference claim within the applicable two-year limitations period; their joinder of PA2 after the limitations period relates back to the initial filing of the suit. See *Fed. R. Civ. P. 17\(a\); Ratner v. Sioux National Gas Corp., 770 F.2d 512, 515, 520 \(5th Cir. 1985\)*.

We conclude, moreover, that PA2 has standing to sue for recovery of damages stemming from the denial of Rea and Johnson's admitting HN1 privileges. In order to establish individual standing, a plaintiff must show that: (1) he has suffered an actual or threatened injury as a result of the actions of the defendant; (2) the injury is "fairly traceable" to the defendant's actions; and (3) the injury will likely be redressed if he prevails in his lawsuit. *Save Our Community v. U.S.E.P.A., 971 F.2d 1155, 1160 \(5th Cir. 1992\)* (quoting *Valley Forge Christian College v. Americans United for Separation of Church and State, Inc., 454 U.S. 464, 472, 102 S. Ct. 752, 758-59, 70 L. Ed. 2d 700 \(1982\)*).

PA2 possesses this Article III requirement for standing. Because Rea and Johnson generate all of the revenues of PA2, they are the primary [**16] assets of that association. As a result, PA2 is injured in fact by the Hospital's summary suspensions of Rea and Johnson and we may relieve that injury by awarding damages to PA2.<sup>6</sup> As assignees of PA2, Rea and Johnson may recover to the same extent as PA2.

[**17] Having established that Rea and Johnson have standing to recover the losses sustained by their professional association, we now consider whether and to what extent they have proved that they are entitled to

<sup>5</sup> Rea and Johnson do not appeal the dismissal of their breach of contract, fraud, and negligent misrepresentation claims.

<sup>6</sup> We note that the Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeals has held that a corporation of which a suspended physician is the sole shareholder has no standing to sue for damages stemming from the denial of the physician's admitting privileges. See *Todorov v. DCH Healthcare Auth., 921 F.2d 1438, 1441 n.1 \(11th Cir. 1991\)*. In Todorov, the Eleventh Circuit reasoned that "it is [the physician], not [his] corporation, who [is] seeking privileges at [the Hospital] and, thus, the relief prayed for in this case." Id.

Unlike the plaintiff in Todorov, Rea and Johnson do not seek injunctive relief since the Hospital has reinstated their admitting privileges. Even if, however, Rea and Johnson sought injunctive relief, PA2 would have constitutional standing to seek damages as it was injured by the Hospital's summary suspension of its primary assets, Rea and Johnson.

damages under any theory asserted by them on appeal. We first consider whether the plaintiffs' business disparagement claim, denied by the trial court, will support an award of damages to Rea and Johnson.

IV

Rea and Johnson cross-appeal the district court's denial of their claims for business disparagement, arguing that they properly established special damages. The district court found that Rea and Johnson failed to "show loss of patients or earnings that resulted directly from the alleged false communications made by Defendants." Relying on comment c. to § 632 of the Restatement (2d) [*391] of Torts, Rea and Johnson argue that the actual disparagement need not be the sole, exclusive factor causing the plaintiffs' damages; instead, they assert, the disparagement need only be "a substantial factor in bringing about the loss."

We cannot agree. The elements of a claim for business disparagement are publication by the defendant of the disparaging words, falsity, malice, lack of privilege [**18] and special damages. Hurlbut v. Gulf Atlantic Life Ins., 749 S.W.2d 762, 767 (Tex. 1987). To prove special damages, a plaintiff must provide evidence of direct, pecuniary loss attributable to the false communications of the defendants. Id. (rejecting a claim for business disparagement where "our review of the record reveals no evidence of the direct, pecuniary loss necessary to satisfy the special damages of a claim for business disparagement). Rea and Johnson provided no evidence of direct loss at trial, and can point to no such loss on appeal. We therefore conclude that Rea and Johnson are entitled to no damages for business disparagement.

IV

We next consider whether the plaintiffs' antitrust claim, denied by the trial court, can support an award of damages to Rea and Johnson. Although Rea and Johnson fail to articulate a coherent theory to support their antitrust claim, they allege that the Hospital, Health Services, Linton, Martin, Haberer, Firstenberg and Feingold violated section 1 of the Sherman Act by conspiring to exclude them from practicing medicine at the Hospital.<sup>7</sup> According to Rea and Johnson, the purpose of their summary suspensions and the Hospital's closure [**19] of its ECU was "to deny all environmental medicine physicians as a class the ability to compete at the Hospital," with the effect that the medical practices of the individual defendants would benefit.

The district court denied Rea and Johnson's antitrust claim after concluding that they failed to demonstrate a conspiracy either to close the ECU or to summarily suspend their admitting privileges. The ECU's closure, the district court found, was a unilateral decision by the Hospital, acting through Martin, and therefore could not form the basis of a conspiracy. With respect to the alleged conspiracy to summarily suspend Rea and Johnson's admitting privileges, the district court [**20] found that any "conspiracy . . . among the defendants . . . was not economically motivated." Although the district court recognized that Rea and Johnson's theory--that "once [Rea and Johnson] could no longer treat their patients . . . then these patients could be treated by other doctors, including the defendants"--"may be true in the abstract," the court found that "there is no evidence that any of the individual Defendants stood to benefit economically from the suspensions of the closing of the ECU." This was, the court noted, because many of Rea and Johnson's patients were from Canada and no patient of the plaintiffs "had ever been treated by, were referred by, or were ever treated afterward by any of the defendant doctors."<sup>8</sup>

HN2[] When a district court sits as a finder of fact, its factual determinations will not be overturned on appeal unless [**21] they are clearly erroneous. Pacific Employers Ins. Co. v. M/V Gloria, 767 F.2d 229, 241 (5th Cir. 1985), reh'g denied, 782 F.2d 1351 (5th Cir. 1986). Under the clearly erroneous standard, "if the district court's account of the evidence is plausible in light of the record viewed in its entirety the court of appeals may not reverse it even though convinced that had it been sitting as the trier of fact, it would have weighed the evidence differently." Anderson v. City of Bessemer City, 470 U.S. 564, 574, 84 L. Ed. 2d 518, 105 S. Ct. 1504 \(1985\).

<sup>7</sup> Rea and Johnson also sued under state antitrust law. See Texas Free Enterprise and Antitrust Act, Tex. Bus. & Comm. Code § 15.05(a). Because the Texas Act mandates that its provisions be interpreted in harmony with federal antitrust law, id. at § 15.04(a), we do not separately analyze the plaintiffs' state law antitrust claims.

<sup>8</sup> In addition to finding no antitrust conspiracy, the court also found that Rea and Johnson failed to prove that the alleged conspiracy unreasonably restrained trade.

[*392] We consider first whether the district court erred in concluding that no antitrust conspiracy existed to close the ECU and then address whether the court erred in finding no such conspiracy with respect to the plaintiffs' summary suspension.

A

HN3 [↑] Section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act forbids contracts, combinations, or conspiracies in restraint of trade or commerce. 15 U.S.C. § 1. To prevail on a section one claim, plaintiffs must show that the defendants (1) engaged in a conspiracy (2) that produced some anti-competitive effect (3) in the relevant market. See Kiepfer v. Beller, 944 F.2d 1213, 1221 \(5th Cir. 1991\). Section one applies only to concerted action; [**22] unilateral conduct is excluded from its purview. Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Service Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 761, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 1469, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 \(1984\). The plaintiffs bear the burden of proving each element of the section one violation. See, e.g., Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2, v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 29, 104 S. Ct. 1551, 1567, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2 \(1984\).

The initial--and determinative--question in this appeal is whether Rea and Johnson have established proof of a conspiracy either to close the ECU or to summarily suspend their admitting privileges. A plaintiff may rely on either direct or circumstantial evidence. American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 809-10, 66 S. Ct. 1125, 1139, 90 L. Ed. 1575 \(1946\). When, as here, plaintiffs rely on circumstantial evidence to prove the existence of a conspiracy, they must proffer sufficient evidence to permit the inference of an antitrust conspiracy. The Supreme Court in Matsushita Elec. Indust. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp. established the governing standard for what constitutes sufficient evidence to permit the inference of an antitrust conspiracy:

There must be evidence that tends to exclude the possibility of independent action. [**23] . . . In other words, [a plaintiff] must show that the inference of conspiracy is reasonable in light of the competing interferences of independent action or collusive action that could not have harmed [the plaintiff]."

475 U.S. 574, 588, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 1356, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 \(1986\) (citations omitted) (emphasis added).

In the present suit, we cannot say that the district court clearly erred by finding that Rea and Johnson failed to establish a conspiracy to close the ECU. The district court concluded that the closure of the ECU was a unilateral decision of the Hospital. The undisputed evidence amply supports this conclusion. Each of the defendant doctors testified without contradiction that he had no input into the decision to close the ECU, testimony that was confirmed by Martin. Recognizing that the evidence shows no conspiracy between the Hospital and the defendant doctors, Rea and Johnson insist on a conspiracy between the Hospital and the entity that acquired it in September 1987, BNECH.<sup>9</sup> Essentially, Rea and Johnson argue that the closure of the ECU consists of two subsidiary decisions--the decision by the Hospital to close the ECU and the decision of BNECH not to reopen [**24] the ECU--and that the Hospital conspired with BNECH in making these decisions. We reject out-of-hand the existence of a conspiracy initially to close the ECU. BNECH was not incorporated until nearly six weeks after the ECU's closure; because it did not exist at the time, it simply could not have conspired with the Hospital to close the ECU.

We find no greater factual basis for Rea and Johnson's assertion of a later conspiracy not to reopen the ECU. Rea and Johnson provide no evidence that the Hospital's first parent, Health Services, took any action with respect to the ECU after [**25] September 17, the date of the sale to BNECH. Absent such evidence, Rea and Johnson can point to little more than the mere opportunity to conspire. [*393] In sum, the district court was not clearly erroneous in choosing to credit Martin's testimony that he decided unilaterally to close the ECU and, later, not to reopen the ECU and therefore in refusing to find an antitrust conspiracy surrounding the ECU's closure.

---

<sup>9</sup> Six weeks after the Hospital closed the ECU, it was sold by its parent, Health Services, to a new entity, Bedford-Northeast Community Hospital, Inc. ("BNECH"). Thus, Rea and Johnson assert that prior to its closing, the Hospital and its soon-to-be parent, BNECH, conspired to close the ECU. In addition, they maintain that after the ECU's closing, the Hospital and its previous parent, Health Services, conspired not to reopen the ECU.

B

Neither can we say that the district court erred by finding that Rea and Johnson failed to establish a conspiracy to summarily suspend their admitting privileges. As we noted earlier, to make such a showing, Rea and Johnson were required to provide "evidence that tends to exclude the possibility of . . . collusive action that could not have harmed [the plaintiff]." Matsushita Elec. Indust. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 588, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 1356, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986) (citations omitted) (emphasis added). Furthermore, the Supreme Court has explicitly cautioned that "if the claim is one that simply makes no economic sense[,] respondents must come forward with more persuasive evidence to support their claim than otherwise would be necessary." Id. at 1361. Thus, if the [**26] plaintiffs "had no rational economic motive to conspire, and if their conduct is consistent with other, equally plausible explanations, the conduct does not give rise to an inference of conspiracy." Id.

Here, the district court concluded that Rea and Johnson provided no evidence that "any of the individual Defendants stood to benefit economically from the suspensions of the closing of the ECU," and thus that they had proved no antitrust conspiracy. As before, we cannot say that the district court committed error by finding that Rea and Johnson failed to establish an illegal conspiracy. There is no evidence that any individual defendant was in competition with Rea and Johnson at the time of the summary suspensions and the closure of the ECU. The district court's conclusions are supported by the testimony of Drs. Haberer, Firstenberg, Feingold and Linton, all of whom testified that they did not hold themselves out as being capable of treating environmental illnesses. Indeed, Drs. Haberer, Firstenberg, and Linton did not even have ECU privileges at the time of the suspensions.

The evidence supporting an antitrust conspiracy is even clearer relative to the Hospital and Health Services. [**27] The evidence showed that patient admissions generate revenues for the Hospital as well as the admitting doctor. Consequently, there is no economic benefit that would inure to the Hospital and its parent from suspending the plaintiffs. Indeed, "as presumably rational businesses, [they] had every incentive not to engage in the conduct with which they are charged." Id. at 1360.

In sum, we see no error in the district court's determination that no antitrust conspiracy existed. We conclude therefore that Rea and Johnson's antitrust claim can support no award of damages to them.

V

Finally, we consider whether the claim of tortious interference with business relations may support the district court's award of damages to Rea and Johnson. The plaintiffs asserted two claims based on tortious interference--first, the Hospital's closure of the ECU and, second, its summary suspension of Rea and Johnson. We examine first whether tortious interference stemming from the closing of the ECU may support an award of damages. We then consider whether tortious interference arising from the summary suspensions can support an award of damages.

A

The district court held that the defendants, [**28] Martin and the Hospital, tortiously interfered with the plaintiffs' contractual relationships with their patients when they closed the ECU on March 26, 1987, notwithstanding the Hospital's proprietary right to close one of its units. Relying on Victoria Bank & Trust Co. v. Brady, 811 S.W.2d 931 (Tex. 1991), the district court concluded that under Texas law only a good faith assertion of legal rights may be raised as a defense against a claim of interference with contractual relations; the court then found that although the Hospital had a proprietary right to close the [**29] ECU, Martin and the Hospital did not act in good faith. Attacking the district court's judgment, the defendants argue that good faith is not required under Texas law when a party has a superior interest in the subject matter. Because they had the lawful right to close the ECU, the defendants contend, their decision to close the unit cannot be the basis of a claim for tortious interference with business relations.

To recover for tortious interference with an existing contract, the plaintiff must prove: (1) the existence of a contract subject to interference, (2) the act of interference was willful and intentional, [**29] (3) such intentional act was a proximate cause of plaintiff's damage and (4) actual damage or loss occurred. Victoria Bank & Trust Co. v. Brady, 811 S.W.2d 931, 939 (Tex. 1991). Nevertheless, "even if a plaintiff establishes the elements of this cause of action, a defendant may still prevail upon establishing the affirmative defense of justification." Texas Beef Cattle Co. v. Green, 921 S.W.2d 203, 1996 WL 11237 (Tex. 1996).

After this case was tried, the Texas Supreme Court clarified the relationship of good faith to a defendant's affirmative defense of justification based on a legal right. See Texas Beef Cattle Co. v. Green, 921 S.W.2d 203, 1996 WL 11237 (Tex. 1996). The Court held categorically that "if the trial court finds as a matter of law that the defendant had a legal right to interfere with a contract, then the defendant has conclusively established the justification defense and the motivation behind assertion of that right is irrelevant." *Id. at *7*. Although Victoria Bank stated that "the defense of legal justification protects only good faith assertions of legal rights," the Court in Texas Beef expressly disavowed good faith as relevant [**30] to the justification defense when the defendant establishes its legal right to act as it did. Only when mistaken, but colorable claims of legal rights are asserted is the good faith of the actor legally significant. Only then must the jury determine whether the defendant believed in good faith that it had a colorable legal right.

Id.

Thus, Texas Beef is dispositive of the plaintiffs' claim for damages based on the defendants' closure of its ECU. There is no agreement between the Hospital and the plaintiffs requiring the Hospital to keep its ECU open. As such, the Hospital has established conclusively its legal right to close its ECU. In the newly shed light of Texas Beef, the Hospital's motivation in closing its ECU is irrelevant to its defense of justification. We therefore conclude that Rea and Johnson's claim for tortious interference stemming from the Hospital's closure of its ECU can support no part of the damage award. Consequently, we reverse and vacate the judgment of the district court, and render judgment for the defendants on the claim that the Hospital's closure of its ECU tortiously interfered with the plaintiffs' business contracts. We now turn to the [**31] plaintiffs' second claim for damages based on the defendants interfering with its business contracts.

B

As we have noted earlier, the district court also held that the plaintiffs had proved additional damages based on a second incident of contract interference--the Hospital's summary suspension of Rea and Johnson's admitting privileges. The district court concluded, however, that two of the defendants, Firstenberg and Feingold, acted without malice and therefore were entitled to immunity. The remaining defendants--Linton, Martin, Haberer and the Hospital--were not entitled to immunity from civil liability, the court held, because "the suspension of the Plaintiffs was not done without malice and in the reasonable belief that their actions were not warranted by the facts known to them." These defendants contend that the district court applied the wrong standard for malice. The district court must be reversed, they argue, because its finding of malice is clearly erroneous when the correct standard is applied. Rea and Johnson cross-appeal, arguing that they presented overwhelming evidence of malice and bad faith on the part of Feingold and Firstenberg, as well as all other defendants.

[**32] The defendants' qualification for civil immunity in relation to the suspensions of Rea [*395] and Johnson is governed by Texas' peer review statute. In 1987--when the alleged tort occurred--that statute provided in pertinent part HN4[] that:

(f)

The following persons are immune from civil liability:

(1) a person reporting to or furnishing information to a medical peer review committee;

(2) . . . a member, employee, or agent of a medical peer review committee . . . who takes any action or makes any recommendation within the scope of the functions of the . . . committee . . . if such member, employee, or agent acts without malice and in the reasonable belief that such action or recommendation is warranted by the facts known to him . . .

Tex. Rev. Civ. Stat. art. 4495b, § 5.06(f) (Vernon Supp. 1985) (emphasis added).

At the time of the district court's decision, "malice" had not been defined by any Texas court for the purpose of art. 4495b, § 5.06(f). Subsequently, however, Texas courts adopted the "actual malice" standard: "Malice as used in Article 4495(b) . . . [means] knowledge that an allegation is false or with reckless disregard for whether [**33] the allegation is false." Maewal v. Adventist Health Systems/Sunbelt, Inc., 868 S.W.2d 886, 893 \(Tex. Ct. App. 1993\).

We agree with the defendants that the district court, lacking a definitive statement from any Texas court, applied the wrong standard for malice. The standard for common law malice requires "spite, ill will, evil motive or purposeful injury of another." Id. at 892. The district court quite clearly based its denial of immunity on its conclusion that the Hospital, Martin, Linton and Haberer acted out of spite toward Rea and Johnson. The court observed that the suspensions were motivated by "past antagonism and conflict" between the plaintiffs and Haberer and Martin, "the perceived arrogance of the Plaintiffs, and, to some extent, disagreements over the legitimacy of the practice of environmental medicine." The court further found that Linton and Martin suspended the plaintiffs without either one of them reviewing a single chart; instead, they "took this drastic action on the basis of what they heard from Haberer, who had prior conflicts with Plaintiffs." The court specifically concluded that this conduct "showed malice on the part of [Martin, Linton and Haberer], [**34] and that the acts were intentional and willful."<sup>10</sup>

This court has on many occasions held that the "clearly erroneous" standard of review does not insulate factual findings premised upon an erroneous view of controlling legal principles. Johnson v. Uncle Ben's, Inc., 628 F.2d 419, 422 \(5th Cir. 1980\). In the light of the district court's erroneous application of the common law standard for malice, we vacate the judgment based on this claim and remand to the district court for further consideration and analysis, in accordance with Maewal v. Adventist Health Systems/Sunbelt, Inc., of whether any defendant acted with the knowledge that the allegations against Rea and Johnson leading to their suspensions were false or with reckless disregard for the falsity of those allegations.

If the district [**35] court finds on remand that one or more defendants acted with knowledge of or reckless disregard for the falsity of those allegations, and therefore is not entitled to civil immunity, it must then recalculate its award of compensatory damages to Rea and Johnson. The court premised its award of damages not only on the summary suspension of admitting privileges, but also on the Hospital's closure of the ECU, for which the Hospital established the affirmative defense of justification. As we concluded earlier, the Hospital's closure of the ECU, in accord with its legal right to do so, can support no part of the damage award. Consequently, Rea and Johnson may not recover for lost patient revenue after the ECU's closure on March 26, 1987.<sup>11</sup> If the district court decides to award damages to the plaintiffs, and in the light of the fact that the compensatory damage award, if any, to Rea and Johnson on remand will be considerably [*396] reduced upon recalculation, the district court also must reconsider and, if appropriate, recalculate its award of exemplary damages.

[**36] VI

---

<sup>10</sup> With much less explanation, the district court granted immunity to Firstenberg and Feingold. The court simply found that the latter "did not act with malice and are, therefore, entitled to" civil immunity.

<sup>11</sup> Because Rea and Johnson admitted patients at the Hospital only to the ECU, and because, as we have held, supra, the Hospital had the proprietary right to close the ECU, they would have generated no patient revenue from hospital admission after this date even if their admitting privileges had not been suspended. They therefore can demonstrate no damages after this date stemming from the suspension of their admitting privileges.

Arguing that the Hospital's closure of the ECU is "mere subterfuge or retaliation," Rea and Johnson urge that the defendants "should not be permitted to dichotomize their accountability" for the damages to Rea and Johnson stemming from their suspension. In effect, they argue that they are entitled to damages even after March 26, even though neither they nor any other doctor could admit patients to the ECU. We cannot agree. Were we to accept this, the Hospital would be required to pay damages to Rea and Johnson notwithstanding its superior legal right to close the ECU. Because the revenue Rea and Johnson generated from admitting patients to the ECU would have ceased with the ECU's closure even if they had not been suspended, any damages to them resulting from the closure have no causal connection to the denial of their patient privileges, and thus the damage award they ask for would give Rea and Johnson a windfall.

Accordingly, we AFFIRM the district court's denial of the plaintiffs' claims for business disparagement and violations of section one of the Sherman Act, REVERSE AND VACATE the district court's award of damages to the plaintiffs for tortious interference with business relations arising from the Hospital's closure of the ECU, and VACATE the judgment based on the plaintiff's claim for tortious interference with business relations stemming from their summary suspensions and REMAND for additional findings of fact and recalculation of damages in a manner not inconsistent with this opinion.

AFFIRMED in part, REVERSED in part, VACATED in part and REMANDED.

---

End of Document

Delta Dental v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield

United States District Court for the District of Rhode Island

September 26, 1996, Decided

C.A. No. 95-0546L

Reporter

942 F. Supp. 740 *; 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14413 **

DELTA DENTAL OF RHODE ISLAND, Plaintiff v. BLUE CROSS & BLUE SHIELD OF RHODE ISLAND, Defendant

Disposition: [**1] Magistrate Judge Boudewyns' remand order of February 22, 1996 affirmed. Matter remanded

Core Terms

---

Dental, magistrate judge, removal, district court, antitrust, motions, state court, parties, res judicata, courts, remand order, nondispositive, involuntary dismissal, federal court, state law, well-pleaded, matters, federal law, practices, remanding, dispositive motion, clearly erroneous, factual findings, federal question, federal claim, final order, contractual, relations, asserts, merits

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Magistrates > Pretrial Referrals

HN1 [down arrow] Magistrates, Pretrial Referrals

Under 28 U.S.C.S. § 636\(b\)\(1\)\(A\), the district court may refer to a magistrate judge for hearing and determination any pending pretrial matter, with the exception of eight motions specifically listed therein: a judge may designate a magistrate to hear and determine any pretrial matter pending before a court, except a motion for injunctive relief, for judgment on the pleadings, for summary judgment, to dismiss or quash an indictment or information made by the defendant, to suppress evidence in a criminal case, to dismiss or to permit maintenance of a class action, to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted, and to involuntarily dismiss an action. A magistrate judge's determination of a matter not within the eight exceptions can be appealed to the district court under a clearly erroneous or contrary to law standard. 28 U.S.C.S. § 636\(b\)\(1\)\(A\)\(1994\). As for the eight motions excepted by § 636\(b\)\(1\)\(A\), the district court may also refer these matters to a magistrate judge under § 636\(b\)\(1\)\(B\). In such cases, however, the magistrate judge may file only proposed findings of fact and recommendations for disposition with the district court. 28 U.S.C.S. § 636\(b\)\(1\)\(B\)\(1994\). A party may serve and file objections to the proposed findings and recommendations, which the district court reviews de novo.

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Magistrates > Pretrial Referrals

HN2 [down arrow] Magistrates, Pretrial Referrals

Fed. R. Civ. P. 72 implements the two-tiered structure outlined by § 636(b)(1); it does so, however, using slightly different terminology. Instead of listing the eight matters excepted in 28 U.S.C.S. § 636(b)(1)(A), Rule 72 characterizes pretrial motions as either dispositive of a claim or defense of a party or not dispositive. For dispositive matters the provisions of § 636(b)(1)(B) apply, by which the magistrate judge files proposed findings and recommendations which the district court reviews de novo. Fed. R. Civ. P. 72(b). Conversely, a magistrate judge may determine nondispositive matters by order, appealable under the clearly erroneous or contrary to law standard. Fed. R. Civ. P. 72(a).

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Magistrates > Pretrial Referrals

HN3 Magistrates, Pretrial Referrals

A motion to remand is nondispositive and can be determined by a magistrate judge by final order.

Civil Procedure > ... > Removal > Postremoval Remands > Motions for Remand

HN4 Postremoval Remands, Motions for Remand

Under 28 U.S.C.S. § 1441(a), a civil action filed in a state court may be removed to a federal district court if the action is one over which the district courts of the United States have original jurisdiction. If at any time after removal it appears that the district court lacks subject matter jurisdiction, the case shall be remanded to the state court as improperly removed. 28 U.S.C.S. § 1447(c).

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Federal Questions > Well Pleaded Complaint Rule

HN5 Federal Questions, Well Pleaded Complaint Rule

Under the well-pleaded complaint rule, whether a case is one arising under federal law must be determined from what necessarily appears in the plaintiff's statement of his own claim. An action arising under state law cannot be removed solely because a federal right or immunity can be raised as a defense. As such, the well-pleaded complaint rule makes the plaintiff the master of the claim, allowing the plaintiff to avoid federal jurisdiction by pleading only state claims and ignoring any federal claims he or she might have.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN6 Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Given the system of joint antitrust enforcement, states retain the ability to regulate commercial activities that takes place within their borders, even if the challenged activity has interstate aspects.

Counsel: ATTORNEY(S) FOR PLAINTIFF(S): William R. Landry, Esq., Blish & Cavanagh, Providence, RI.

ATTORNEY(S) FOR DEFENDANT(S): Steven E. Snow, Esq., Partridge, Snow & Hahn, Providence, RI.

Judges: RONALD R. LAGUEUX, Chief Judge

Opinion by: RONALD R. LAGUEUX

Opinion

---

[*741] MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

RONALD R. LAGUEUX, Chief Judge.

This case involves an antitrust action brought by Delta Dental of Rhode Island ("Delta Dental") alleging anticompetitive practices by defendant Blue Cross & Blue Shield of Rhode Island ("Blue Cross") in the market for prepaid dental services in Rhode Island. Delta Dental initiated this suit in Rhode Island Superior Court, relying exclusively on state law in asserting that Blue Cross has engaged in predatory pricing and other exclusionary practices in violation of the Rhode Island Antitrust Act, R.I. Gen. Laws § 6-36-1 et. seq. Delta Dental further claims that the challenged practices violate Rhode Island's common law doctrines of unfair competition and tortious interference with contractual relations.

[*742] On the motion of Blue Cross, the case was removed to this District Court pursuant [**2] to 28 U.S.C. § 1441(b). Subsequently, Magistrate Judge Timothy M. Boudewyns entered an order dated February 22, 1996 remanding the action to the state court, upon a finding that no federal question existed to support jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1331. The matter is now before this Court on the appeal of Blue Cross from the Magistrate Judge's remand order. For the reasons that follow, the Magistrate Judge's Order is affirmed.

I. Facts and Procedural Background

The following facts are not in dispute, unless otherwise noted. The somewhat tortured relationship between the parties dates back to Delta Dental's entry into the Rhode Island dental services market in the early 1970's. Because Delta Dental, as a new provider, had little administrative structure to speak of, it turned to Blue Cross' established health care network (which did not at that time include a dental benefits package) to provide the necessary support and administration. In June of 1973, the parties agreed to jointly develop a prepaid dental benefits plan for the Rhode Island market. Pursuant to the agreement between the parties (the "Administrative Agreement"), Delta Dental determined all professional matters [**3] regarding the plan's coverage, such as fee schedules and benefits structures. Blue Cross assumed the management duties for the plan, including the maintenance of enrollment records and administration of claims.

The relationship between the parties broke down in the early 1990's. Complaining that Delta Dental was interfering with the effective administration of the plan,<sup>1</sup> Blue Cross terminated the Administrative Agreement on December 13, 1991, effective January 13, 1993. According to Delta Dental, however, Blue Cross' true motive for termination was a desire to develop its own dental benefits plan to compete with the Delta Dental plan. Delta Dental asserted that a program to develop such a competing plan had already been initiated prior to the December 1991 notice of termination, in violation of a non-competition clause in the Administrative Agreement.

[**4] These events culminated in the parties' first trip to this federal court. In 1992, Blue Cross filed an action against Delta Dental here, seeking damages, declaratory relief, and injunctive relief for alleged violations of both federal and state antitrust laws. Blue Cross & Blue Shield of Rhode Island v. Delta Dental of Rhode Island, C.A. No. 92-0336L (D.R.I. filed June 22, 1992). At the heart of that case was the assertion that Delta Dental had provided false and misleading information to the dental community and potential customers -- first to discourage Blue Cross from entering the market, and then to discourage customers from purchasing Blue Cross' dental plan<sup>2</sup> [**5] -- all in an effort to protect and maintain its dominance of Rhode Island's dental care financing market.<sup>3</sup> Blue Cross maintained that these and other practices violated sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1 et seq., as well as §§ 6-36-4 and 6-36-5 of the Rhode Island Antitrust Act, supra.

---

<sup>1</sup> Blue Cross asserted that Delta Dental no longer followed its recommendations regarding fee schedules, and further claimed that Delta Dental had hired an outside consultant to take on Blue Cross' management role.

<sup>2</sup> Blue Cross formally began competing with Delta Dental upon the January 1993 termination of the Administrative Agreement, and thus filed an amended complaint in July of 1993 encompassing the post-entry claims.

Delta Dental denied the allegations in Blue Cross' complaint, and asserted as an additional defense the McCarran-Ferguson Act's "business of insurance" exemption from antitrust scrutiny, 15 U.S.C. § 1012. Moreover, Delta Dental filed numerous counterclaims stemming from the Administrative Agreement, including claims for breach of contract, conversion, breach of fiduciary duty, and intentional interference with contractual and business relations.

This initial dispute was eventually resolved by a settlement approved by this Court on [*743] April 20, 1994. However, this second round of litigation between the parties commenced in September 1995, when Delta Dental filed the present action against Blue Cross in the Rhode Island Superior Court in and for the County of Providence. The complaint alleges that Blue Cross has engaged in exclusionary and predatory practices since its entry into Rhode Island's prepaid dental [**6] benefits market in January 1993. Specifically, Delta Dental asserts that Blue Cross has engaged in illegal cross-subsidization and predatory pricing in an effort to achieve a monopoly. According to the complaint, Blue Cross has deliberately driven dental insurance prices to unprofitably low levels, choosing to operate at a loss in dental insurance while covering these losses with the profits generated by its other health care service plans. Delta Dental avers that Blue Cross is willing to sustain such losses until all competitors, unable to cover similar losses, are driven from the Rhode Island market.

Delta Dental asserts that the challenged conduct violates the Rhode Island Antitrust Act, supra. In addition, Delta Dental has asserted claims under the state common law doctrines of unfair competition, interference with contractual relations, and interference with prospective contractual relations, on the theory that Blue Cross has used the challenged practices to take former and prospective customers away from Delta Dental. Blue Cross has filed counterclaims against Delta Dental under federal and state antitrust law, as well as state tort theories of intentional interference with [**7] current contractual and prospective business relations.

While Delta Dental's complaint is based entirely on state law, Blue Cross removed the action to this Court under the "artful pleading" doctrine enunciated in Federated Dept. Stores, Inc. v. Moitie, 452 U.S. 394, 69 L. Ed. 2d 103, 101 S. Ct. 2424 \(1981\). The crux of the argument is that while Delta Dental could have brought its claims in federal court under the Sherman Act, it instead chose to bring its claim exclusively under the state antitrust statute, allegedly in order to deprive Blue Cross of certain federal defenses as well as to avoid the res judicata effects of the previous federal litigation between the parties.

After a hearing before Magistrate Judge Timothy M. Boudewyns, the case was remanded to Providence County Superior Court. In his order of February 22, 1996, the Magistrate Judge concluded that: (1) no federal question was presented in the complaint, (2) the "artful pleading" exception to the well-pleaded complaint rule was inapplicable in this instance, and, (3) the action was not barred by the doctrine of res judicata, since the present case involved conduct that arose after the settlement of the [**8] previous litigation in this Court.

Blue Cross filed a timely appeal from the Magistrate Judge's order remanding the case to state court. After hearing arguments of counsel, the Court took the matter under advisement. The matter is now in order for decision.

II. The Nature of the Motion to Remand

As an initial matter, this Court must determine the proper standard of review to be applied to this appeal of the Magistrate Judge's remand order. To this end, the Court must decide whether a motion to remand is best characterized as a "dispositive" or "nondispositive" motion within the meaning of 28 U.S.C. § 636\(b\)\(1\), Rule 72 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, and Local Rules 32(b) and 32(c).

---

<sup>3</sup> In its complaint, Blue Cross alleged that by 1991 Delta Dental insured 30% of Rhode Island's population, encompassing 70% of the market for Rhode Island dental care financing and services.

HN1[] Under 28 U.S.C. § 636\(b\)\(1\)\(A\), the district court may refer to a magistrate judge for hearing and determination any pending pretrial matter, with the exception of eight motions specifically listed therein:

a judge may designate a magistrate to hear and determine any pretrial matter pending before the court, except a motion for injunctive relief, for judgment on the pleadings, for summary judgment, to dismiss or quash an indictment or information made by the defendant, to [**9] suppress evidence in a criminal case, to dismiss or to permit maintenance of a class action, to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted, and to involuntarily dismiss an action.

[*744] A magistrate judge's determination of a matter not within the eight exceptions can be appealed to the district court under a "clearly erroneous or contrary to law" standard. 28 U.S.C. § 636\(b\)\(1\)\(A\)\(1994\).

As for the eight motions excepted by § 636\(b\)\(1\)\(A\), the district court may also refer these matters to a magistrate judge under § 636\(b\)\(1\)\(B\). In such cases, however, the magistrate judge may file only proposed findings of fact and recommendations for disposition with the district court. 28 U.S.C. § 636\(b\)\(1\)\(B\)\(1994\). A party may serve and file objections to the proposed findings and recommendations, which the district court reviews de novo. Id.

HN2[] Rule 72 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure implements the two-tiered structure outlined by § 636\(b\)\(1\); it does so, however, using slightly different terminology. Instead of listing the eight matters excepted in § 636\(b\)\(1\)\(A\), Rule 72 characterizes pretrial motions as either "dispositive of a claim or defense [**10] of a party" or not dispositive. For dispositive matters the provisions of § 636\(b\)\(1\)\(B\) apply, by which the magistrate judge files proposed findings and recommendations which the district court reviews de novo. Fed. R. Civ. P. 72\(b\). Conversely, a magistrate judge may determine nondispositive matters by order, appealable under the "clearly erroneous or contrary to law" standard. Fed. R. Civ. P. 72\(a\).<sup>4</sup>

The Court now comes to the question of where a motion to remand fits within the framework established by § 636\(b\)\(1\) and Rule 72. While the First Circuit has identified the issue on at least two occasions, in each instance that Court has expressly chosen not to rule on jurisdictional grounds. See Cok v. Family Court of R.I., 985 F.2d 32, 34 (1st Cir. 1993); Unauthorized [*11] Practice of Law Comm. v. Gordon, 979 F.2d 11, 12-13 (1st Cir. 1992). The First Circuit did note, however, the split in the case law on whether a magistrate judge has the authority to enter a final order of remand: "While we note the existing and conflicting case law on this issue, we need not enter the fray at this time." Gordon, 979 F.2d at 13. It is against this backdrop of conflicting case law, therefore, that this Court approaches the issue, a matter of first impression in this district.

Most district courts faced with the question have determined that a motion to remand is a nondispositive matter within a magistrate judge's authority to determine by final order under Rule 72\(a\). See, e.g., Young v. James, 168 F.R.D. 24, 26-27 (E.D. Va. 1996); Campbell v. International Business Machs., 912 F. Supp. 116, 118-19 (D.N.J. 1996); Banbury v. Omnitrition Int'l, Inc., 818 F. Supp. 276, 278-79 (D. Minn. 1993); Jacobsen v. Mintz, Levin, Cohn, Ferris, Glovsky & Popeo, P.C., 594 F. Supp. 583, 584-86 (D. Me. 1984). Two rationales support these decisions: one focusing on § 636\(b\)\(1\)\(A\), and a second looking to the additional language in Rule 72. The Court considers [*12] each approach in turn.

A motion to remand is not one of the matters specifically excepted by § 636\(b\)\(1\)\(A\). Reading this section to provide an exhaustive list of "dispositive" motions, some courts have deemed all non-listed pretrial matters, including motions to remand, nondispositive. See Vaquillas Ranch Co. v. Texaco Exploration and Prod., Inc., 844 F. Supp. 1156, 1160-63 (S.D. Tex. 1994) ("Congress had the opportunity to include in that list any motion which it considered to be dispositive, and it did not include motions to remand."); White v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 153 F.R.D. 639, 642-43 (D. Neb. 1993) ("Had Congress wanted to exempt such an order from the authority of magistrate judges, it knew how to say so specifically.").

---

<sup>4</sup> Local Rule 32 combines the approaches of both the statute and the Federal Rule, listing the eight exceptions in § 636\(b\)\(1\)\(A\) as well as using the dispositive-nondispositive language of Rule 72. See D.R.I. R. 32(b) & 32(c).

Other courts have taken a broader approach, looking beyond § 636\(b\)\(1\)\(A\) to consider whether a motion to remand is "dispositive" under the language of Rule 72. See Banbury, 818 F. Supp. at 279; City of Jackson, Miss. v. Lakeland Lounge of Jackson, Inc., 147 F.R.D. 122, 123-24 \(S.D. Miss. 1993\). While those courts consider it relevant that remand orders are not excepted by [\*745] § 636\(b\)\(1\)\(A\), that absence is not critical to their [\*\*13] decisions. Campbell, 912 F. Supp. at 118-19. Instead, those courts read § 636\(b\)\(1\)\(A\) to provide a floor of eight dispositive motions to be decided under Rule 72\(b\), so that any other motions "dispositive of a claim or defense of a party" could also fall under Rule 72\(b\). Id.

Even under this broader approach, however, most courts have concluded that motions to remand are nondispositive and thus subject to final determination by a magistrate judge:

The motion to remand does not reach the merits of the underlying dispute but instead decides only the question of whether removal to the federal court was proper. The parties remain free to litigate the merits of the case following the disposition of the motion, whether in state or federal court.

City of Jackson, 147 F.R.D. at 124. See also Campbell, 912 F. Supp. at 118-19 (concluding that "remands merely transfer the action to a different forum rather than finally resolving the substantive rights and obligations of the parties.").

On the strength of such arguments, this Court joins the majority and concludes that HN3 [↑] a motion to remand is nondispositive and can be determined by a magistrate judge by final [\*\*14] order. While the Court finds it relevant that motions to remand are not among the motions excepted by § 636\(b\)\(1\)\(A\), this factor serves only as the starting point for this decision. More important is the effect that the disposition of a motion to remand will have on the status of the litigation. As noted by the authorities cited above, a decision on a motion to remand merely answers the question of whether there is a basis for federal jurisdiction to support removal, without reaching the merits of any claims, counterclaims, or defenses. As such, this Court cannot conclude that a remand order is "dispositive of a claim or defense of a party."

The Court does recognize that two district courts have reached the opposite conclusion, Long v. Lockheed Missiles and Space Co., 783 F. Supp. 249 \(D.S.C. 1992\) and Giangola v. Walt Disney World Co., 753 F. Supp. 148 \(D.N.J. 1990\). While noting that a motion to remand is not excepted by § 636\(b\)\(1\)\(A\), the Giangola court held that a remand order is the equivalent of an "involuntary dismissal," a matter specifically excepted by § 636\(b\)\(1\)\(A\). Giangola, 753 F. Supp. at 152. Therefore, that Court concluded that a remand order, [\*\*15] as an involuntary dismissal, is a dispositive matter beyond the authority of a magistrate judge to determine by final order. Id.; see also Long, 783 F. Supp. at 250-51 (following Giangola).

This Court respectfully disagrees with the reasoning of Giangola and Long. The first ground for disagreement concerns the nature of involuntary dismissals, as governed by Rule 41\(b\) of the Federal Rules. Rule 41\(b\) provides that "a dismissal under this subdivision and any dismissal not provided for in this rule, other than a dismissal for lack of jurisdiction, for improper venue, or for failure to join a party under Rule 19, operates as an adjudication upon the merits." Fed. R. Civ. P. 41\(b\) (emphasis added). Under this section, dismissals for lack of jurisdiction are neither Rule 41\(b\) "involuntary dismissals" nor final decisions on the merits of the parties' claims. Therefore, a motion to remand, which essentially calls for a determination of whether subject matter jurisdiction exists, cannot be termed a dispositive motion. Accord Young, 168 F.R.D. at 27 (reading Rule 72 in conjunction with Rule 41\(b\) to defeat Giangola analysis).

Second, while a number of courts [\*\*16] have found motions other than those listed in § 636\(b\)\(1\)\(A\) to be dispositive, Giangola is distinguishable. In Woods v. Dahlberg, the Sixth Circuit found that a magistrate judge's denial of a motion to proceed in forma pauperis was the "functional equivalent" of an involuntary dismissal, and thus dispositive. 894 F.2d 187, 187-88 \(6th Cir. 1990\). Similarly, in Ocelot Oil Corp. v. Sparrow Indus., the Tenth Circuit concluded that an order striking a plaintiff's pleadings as a discovery sanction had the identical effect of an involuntary dismissal, and was thus outside the magistrate judge's authority. 847 F.2d 1458, 1461-63 \(10th Cir. 1988\). Read together, these cases offer support for the argument that § 636\(b\)\(1\)\(A\) presents a non-exhaustive list of dispositive motions, and that other motions [*746] that have the identical effect as one of the eight listed motions should also be considered dispositive under Rule 72.<sup>5</sup>

[**17] In fact, a judge in this district has endorsed the view that § 636\(b\)\(1\)\(A\) does not present an exhaustive list of dispositive motions. In Yang v. Brown Univ., 149 F.R.D. 440 \(D.R.I. 1993\), the magistrate judge, as a discovery sanction, had issued an order precluding the plaintiff from offering the testimony of her principal expert witness at trial. As the magistrate judge noted in his order, the sanction left the plaintiff unable to present a prima facie case, thus, in effect, defeating the plaintiff's claim. Id. at 442-43. Reviewing this order, Senior Judge Pettine found that under such circumstances, "the Magistrate's order crosses the line from non-dispositive to dispositive decision-making. His ruling vitiates plaintiff's case. It is tantamount to an involuntary dismissal." Id.

However, the "functional equivalent" analysis relied upon in Yang, Woods, and Ocelot Oil is not applicable to remand orders. The motions at issue in those cases effectively terminated the litigation between the parties: in Yang, the magistrate's order rendered the plaintiff unable to present a prima facie case; in Woods, the denial of in forma pauperis status left [**18] the plaintiff unable to pursue his claim; the striking of pleadings with prejudice in Ocelot Oil had the result of dismissing the plaintiff's action with res judicata effect. In each instance, the magistrate judge's order had an sense of finality to it -- a finality that is simply not present with an order remanding a case to a state court forum, where the parties will be allowed to assert all claims and defenses. Thus, even accepting that § 636\(b\)\(1\)\(A\) does not provide an exhaustive list of dispositive motions, the Court nonetheless holds that a motion to remand is nondispositive.<sup>6</sup> Therefore, a magistrate judge may determine such by final order. The Court thus will review Magistrate Judge Boudewyns' order of February 22, 1996 under the "clearly erroneous or contrary to law" standard. 28 U.S.C. § 636\(b\)\(1\)\(A\); Fed. R. Civ. P. 72\(a\); D.R.I. R. 32\(b\).

[**19] III. Review of the Magistrate Judge's Decision

HN4 Under 28 U.S.C. § 1441\(a\), a civil action filed in a state court may be removed to a federal district court if the action is one over which the district courts of the United States have original jurisdiction.<sup>7</sup> [**20] If at any time after removal it appears that the district court lacks subject matter jurisdiction, the case shall be remanded to the state court as improperly removed. 28 U.S.C. § 1447\(c\).<sup>8</sup> Magistrate Judge Boudewyns made such a finding in this case, remanding the case to state court for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. The Court now considers whether the magistrate judge's factual findings were clearly erroneous, or whether his legal conclusions were contrary to law.

<sup>5</sup> See also 12 Charles A. Wright et al., Federal Practice and Procedure § 3076.5 (Pocket Part 1996) ("Rule 72 is in keeping with the legislative intent that, at the very least, the eight motions listed in the statute will be governed by the procedures and de novo review of Rule 72\(b\).").

<sup>6</sup> The Court also notes that Giangola has recently been called into question by a subsequent case from the same district. In Campbell v. International Business Machs., the district court discusses a post-Giangola Third Circuit decision characterizing an order as "dispositive" on the ground that "it determined with finality the duties of the parties." 912 F. Supp. 116, 119 \(D.N.J. 1996\) (quoting N.L.R.B. v. Frazier, 966 F.2d 812, 817 \(3d Cir. 1992\)). In finding that remand orders are nondispositive, the district court stated its belief that "Giangola would have been decided differently if N.L.R.B. v. Frazier had been on the books." Campbell, 912 F. Supp. at 119.

<sup>7</sup> "Except as otherwise expressly provided by Act of Congress, any civil action brought in a State court of which the district courts of the United States have original jurisdiction, may be removed by the defendant or the defendants, to the district court of the United States for the district and division embracing the place where such action is pending." 28 U.S.C. § 1441\(a\)\(1994\).

<sup>8</sup> "A motion to remand the case on the basis of any defect other than lack of subject matter jurisdiction must be made within 30 days after the filing of the notice of removal under section 1446(a). If at any time before final judgment it appears that the district court lacks subject matter jurisdiction, the case shall be remanded. . . . The State court may thereupon proceed with such case." 28 U.S.C. § 1447\(c\)\(1994\).

[*747] The parties are both Rhode Island citizens for the purposes of diversity jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1332, as each is a corporation organized under Rhode Island law and each maintains its principal place of business in Providence, Rhode Island.<sup>9</sup> [**21] Accordingly, removal of this case to federal court could only be based on the "arising under" federal question jurisdiction of 28 U.S.C. § 1331.<sup>10</sup> The Court concludes that the case does not arise under federal law, and thus affirms the magistrate judge's order remanding the case to state court.

The principles which guide this Court's exercise of federal question jurisdiction are familiar, and can be stated here with little additional comment. "A suit arises under the law that creates the cause of action." American Well Works Co. v. Layne and Bowler Co., 241 U.S. 257, 260, 60 L. Ed. 987, 36 S. Ct. 585 \(1916\) (Holmes, J.). The presence or absence of federal question jurisdiction is governed by the "well-pleaded complaint" rule, which applies to the original jurisdiction of this Court as well as its removal jurisdiction. HN5<sup>11</sup> See Gully v. First Nat'l Bank, 299 U.S. 109, 112-13, 81 L. Ed. 70, 57 S. Ct. 96 \(1936\). Under the rule, "whether a case is one arising under [federal law] . . . must be determined from what necessarily appears in the plaintiff's statement of his own claim." Taylor v. Anderson, 234 U.S. 74, 75-76, 58 L. Ed. 1218, 34 S. Ct. 724 \(1914\); see also Gully, 299 U.S. at 112 ("[A] right [**22] or immunity created by the Constitution or laws of the United States must be an element, and an essential one, of the plaintiff's cause of action."). An action arising under state law cannot be removed solely because a federal right or immunity can be raised as a defense. Tennessee v. Union and Planters' Bank, 152 U.S. 454, 459-61, 38 L. Ed. 511, 14 S. Ct. 654 \(1894\). As such, the well-pleaded complaint rule makes the plaintiff the master of the claim, allowing the plaintiff to avoid federal jurisdiction by pleading only state claims and ignoring any federal claims he or she might have. See Caterpillar, Inc. v. Williams, 482 U.S. 386, 392, 96 L. Ed. 2d 318, 107 S. Ct. 2425 \(1987\).

Turning to the record of this case, it appears that Delta Dental has chosen to exercise the plaintiff's choice afforded under the well-pleaded complaint rule. The parties recognize, and the Court agrees, that the present dispute could have been brought as a federal antitrust claim under the Sherman Act. Delta Dental has chosen to forego its rights under federal law, however, instead relying exclusively on state law in asserting its claims against Blue Cross. In that light, the case seems to call [**23] for a straightforward application of the well-pleaded complaint rule and its corollaries: Delta Dental, as the master of the claim, has chosen to rely exclusively on state law and to litigate in state court -- a choice that Blue Cross cannot defeat, notwithstanding that the case could have been brought under the Sherman Act or that federal defenses might be available.

Blue Cross argues, however, that an exception to the well-pleaded complaint rule, the "artful pleading" doctrine, brings this case within the Court's removal jurisdiction. The Supreme Court created this exception in Avco Corp. v. Aero Lodge No. 735, 390 U.S. 557, 20 L. Ed. 2d 126, 88 S. Ct. 1235 \(1968\), where it held that a claim pled under state law "arises under" federal law where federal law completely preempts the state cause of action on which the plaintiff relies. Id. at 560. In such cases, where the only possible relief is federal, the plaintiff cannot defeat the defendant's right of removal by failing to plead the necessary federal claim. Id.; see also Franchise Tax Bd. v. Construction Laborers Vacation Trust, 463 U.S. 1, 23-24, 77 L. Ed. 2d 420, 103 S. Ct. 2841 \(1983\) (discussing Avco). [**24]

Clearly, this original formulation of the artful pleading doctrine is inapplicable to [*748] the present matter. There has never been a clear congressional intent to pre-empt state regulation in the field of antitrust law. See 1 P. Areeda & D. Turner, Antitrust Law P 208 (1978). Moreover, the state law on which Delta Dental has based its claim, the Rhode Island Antitrust Act, provides that no claim under the Act "shall be barred on the ground that the activity or conduct complained of in any way affects or involves interstate or foreign commerce." R.I. Gen. Laws § 6-36-7\(c\)\(1992\). HN6<sup>12</sup> Given this system of joint antitrust enforcement, states retain the ability to regulate

---

<sup>9</sup> "For the purposes of this section and section 1441 of this title [removal] -- (1) a corporation shall be deemed to be a citizen of any State by which it has been incorporated and of the State where it has a principal place of business . . . ." 28 U.S.C. § 1332\(c\)\(1994\).

<sup>10</sup> "The district courts shall have original jurisdiction of all civil actions arising under the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States." 28 U.S.C. § 1331\(1994\).

commercial activities that takes place within their borders, even if the challenged activity has interstate aspects. See *Jones v. Rath Packing Co.*, 430 U.S. 519, 525, 51 L. Ed. 2d 604, 97 S. Ct. 1305 \(1977\); *Standard Oil Co. v. Tennessee*, 217 U.S. 413, 421-22, 54 L. Ed. 817, 30 S. Ct. 543 \(1910\).

Nonetheless, Blue Cross asserts that the Supreme Court extended the reach of the artful pleading doctrine in *Federated Dep't Stores, Inc. v. Moitie*, 452 U.S. 394, 69 L. Ed. 2d 103, 101 S. Ct. 2424 \(1981\). In Moitie, [**25] the plaintiff's initial federal antitrust action had been dismissed by the federal district court. Instead of appealing, the plaintiff relied on the same facts to assert state law claims of civil conspiracy, unfair competition, fraud, and restitution. This second case was removed to federal court, where the district court denied a motion to remand on the basis of the artful pleading doctrine, finding that the plaintiff's claims were "essentially federal law" claims. While reversing the lower court on the merits, the Ninth Circuit agreed that the claims were sufficiently "federal in nature" to support removal. See *id. at 395-98* & n.2 (discussing history of the case).

While the Supreme Court's opinion in Moitie concerns primarily the issue of res judicata, the Court in a footnote voiced its approval of the approach taken by the lower courts regarding the question of removal and artful pleading:

We agree that at least some of the claims had a sufficient federal character to support removal. As one treatise puts it, courts "will not permit plaintiff to use artful pleading to close off defendant's right to a federal forum . . . [and] occasionally the removal court [**26] will seek to determine whether the real nature of the claim is federal, regardless of plaintiff's characterization." The District Court applied that settled principle to the facts of this case. . . . [and found] that respondents had attempted to avoid removal jurisdiction by "artfully" casting their "essentially federal law claims" as state-law claims. We will not question here that factual finding.

*Moitie*, 452 U.S. at 397 n.2 (citations omitted). There is little doubt that the Supreme Court worked some alteration in the artful pleading doctrine with this footnote, as the Court rendered a state law claim "artfully pled" in the absence of federal preemption. See *Travelers Indem. Co. v. Sarkisian*, 794 F.2d 754, 759 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 885, 93 L. Ed. 2d 253, 107 S. Ct. 277 (1986) ("Unquestionably, Federated Stores made some alteration of the master-of-the-complaint rule.").

What remains unclear, however, is "how far beyond the preemption context the Court intended to extend the artful pleading doctrine." Id. Generally, circuit courts have limited Moitie to its facts, reading the case as expressing only a modest expansion of the artful pleading [**27] doctrine. The circuits have viewed Moitie as extending artful pleading only to those instances where claims previously filed as federal claims in federal court are resubmitted in state court as state law claims. See *Travelers*, 794 F.2d at 760-61; *Salveson v. Western States Bankcard Ass'n*, 731 F.2d 1423, 1427-29 \(9th Cir. 1984\). In this light, the extension of artful pleading encompasses a subset of claims that would also be barred by the doctrine of res judicata: the state court proceeding would essentially provide the plaintiff with a "second bite" at a claim that has already been dismissed in a previous federal action.<sup>11</sup>

[**28] [*749] While the First Circuit has not yet ruled on the issue, the Court did address the implications of Moitie in *Patriot Cinemas, Inc. v. General Cinema Corp.*, 834 F.2d 208 \(1st Cir. 1987\). In discussing the removal of an antitrust claim in Patriot Cinemas, the First Circuit noted the language in Moitie regarding claims that are "federal in nature" or have a "sufficient federal character to support removal." *Id. at 217 n.4*. While the Court recognized that this language might have "worked a revolution in the law of federal removal jurisdiction," the Court stated that it could not determine the extent of any such change at that time, as it lacked jurisdiction to do so. Id.

---

<sup>11</sup> The Court notes that a few district courts have given Moitie a broader reading than these circuit courts. See *Mechanical Rubber & Supply Co. v. American Saw & Mfg. Co.*, 747 F. Supp. 1292, 1294-96 (finding claim "sufficiently federal in character" to support removal, where state antitrust claim could have been brought under federal law), vacated in part, *810 F. Supp. 986* \(C.D. Ill. 1990\) (relevant portion of prior decision not vacated); *Reid v. Walsh*, 620 F. Supp. 930, 932-34 \(M.D. La. 1985\) (federal claims "necessarily presented" by state securities law claims, where federal lawsuit on same facts filed on same day as state action).

The Court went on to suggest, however, that whatever change the Supreme Court intended in Moitie, it "may have been overruled sub silentio in Franchise Tax Board, which so strongly reaffirmed the well-pleaded complaint rule." Id. The First Circuit pointed to the Supreme Court's assertion in Franchise Tax Board that the law of removal jurisdiction "has remained basically unchanged for the past century." Franchise Tax Board, 463 U.S. at 7. Implicit in the First Circuit's discussion [**29] is that the Supreme Court would not have made such a broad statement had Moitie indeed worked a sweeping change in the law of removal jurisdiction. Therefore, while the First Circuit has not decided the issue, it is evident that said Court would read Moitie narrowly, at most viewing the case as a modest expansion of the artful pleading doctrine in the vein of the Travelers and Salveson courts.

In light of this analysis, this Court concludes that the artful pleading doctrine is inapplicable to the present case. Magistrate Judge Boudewyns found that the conduct challenged in Delta Dental's state court complaint took place after the settlement of the prior federal action, a factual finding that this Court will not disturb unless clearly erroneous. As a review of the record confirms that there is adequate support for the magistrate judge's factual finding, the Court upholds that determination.

Turning to the legal issue, the facts of this case do not call for the application of the artful pleading doctrine. This is not a case where a plaintiff, stymied in prior federal litigation, has recast those same claims under the guise of a state cause of action. As Delta Dental [**30] did not raise predatory pricing or cross-subsidization claims in the prior litigation, there were no such claims for Delta Dental to "resubmit" to the state court in the current action. Indeed, given the magistrate judge's factual finding, there was no way that the current claims could have been brought in the prior action, as the challenged conduct had not yet occurred. Therefore, the Court will not invoke artful pleading to deem Delta Dental's state law claims federal claims and thereby justify removal.

The question of whether res judicata applies in this case, however, is distinct from the Court's artful pleading analysis, and is left for determination by the state court. It is important to note that artful pleading as extended by Moitie and its progeny does not encompass all claims that might be barred by res judicata. The two doctrines address separate questions: in the removal/artful pleading context, as discussed herein, a court looks for prior federal claims recast as state claims. For res judicata, a court considers whether a second action arises out of the same transaction or series of transactions as a first action. See Manego v. Orleans Bd. of Trade, I**31 773 F.2d 1, 5 (1st Cir. 1985), cert. denied, 475 U.S. 1084, 89 L. Ed. 2d 722, 106 S. Ct. 1466 (1986) (adopting transactional approach to res judicata). In other words, the net cast by res judicata is broader than that of artful pleading -- artfully pled claims are only a subset of those claims that would be barred by res judicata. Therefore, while the Court concludes that artful pleading is inapplicable, the Court offers no opinion on the broader issue of res judicata.

IV. Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, the Court affirms Magistrate Judge Boudewyns' remand [*750] order of February 22, 1996. Accordingly, this matter is remanded to the Rhode Island Superior Court in and for the County of Providence.

It is so ordered.

Ronald R. Lagueux

Chief Judge

September 26, 1996

In re Medical X-Ray Film Antitrust Litig.

United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York

September 27, 1996, Decided ; October 2, 1996, FILED

CV-93-5904

Reporter

946 F. Supp. 209 *; 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18732 **; 1996-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P78,375

In re Medical X-Ray Film Antitrust Litigation; This Document Relates To: All Cases

Subsequent History: Counsel Amended February 6, 1997.

Disposition: [**1] Motion converted into summary judgment and denied.

Core Terms

---

increased price, prices, film, conspiracy, competitors, announced, x-ray, sales representative, dealers, summary judgment, customers, employees, parties, antitrust, discovery, documents, inferred, price information, Sherman Act, future price, exchanged, factors, circumstantial evidence, summary judgment motion, communications, defendants', conspire, contacts, deposition testimony, memorandum

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > Judgment on Pleadings

HN1[] Judgments, Summary Judgment

See Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(c\).

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN2[] Judgments, Summary Judgment

The language in Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(c\) has been deemed mandatory, requiring a district court to convert a motion for dismissal into a motion for summary judgment the instant materials external to the pleadings are considered.

946 F. Supp. 209, *209LÁ996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18732, **1

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > Failure to State Claims

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

HN3 Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b) provides that if, on a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted, matters outside the pleadings are presented and not excluded by the court, the motion shall be treated as one for summary judgment ... and all parties shall be given reasonable opportunity to present all material made pertinent to such a motion by Fed. R. Civ. P. 56.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

HN4 Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c) provides that summary judgment must be granted if there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and if the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. The moving party has the burden of demonstrating the absence of any disputed material facts, and the court must resolve all ambiguities and draw all inferences in favor of the party against whom summary judgment is sought.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > Ultimate Burden of Persuasion

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

HN5 Burdens of Proof, Movant Persuasion & Proof

The showing needed on summary judgment reflects the burden of proof in the underlying action. A court must consider the actual quantum and quality of proof demanded by the underlying cause of action and which party must present such proof. Therefore, when the ultimate burden of proof is on the nonmoving party, the moving party meets his initial burden for summary judgment by showing, that is, pointing out to the district court -- that there is an absence of evidence to support the nonmoving party's case.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

946 F. Supp. 209, *209L996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18732, **1

**HN6** Summary Judgment, Burdens of Proof

To survive the motion, the nonmoving party must then make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of [the challenged] element essential to that party's case.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burden of Proof > General Overview

**HN7** Summary Judgment, Opposing Materials

The mere existence of some alleged factual dispute between the parties will not defeat an otherwise properly supported motion for summary judgment.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burden of Proof > General Overview

**HN8** Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

Summary judgment is appropriate when the record taken as a whole could not lead a rational trier of fact to find for the non-moving party.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

International Trade Law > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

**HN9** Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Section 1 of the Sherman Act makes every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states, or with foreign nations, illegal. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > International Aspects > Commerce With Foreign Nations

International Trade Law > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

**HN10** International Aspects, Commerce With Foreign Nations

946 F. Supp. 209, *209L<sup>A</sup>996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18732, **1

In order to establish a claim under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must be able to show: (1) concerted action, (2) by two or more persons, (3) which unreasonably restrains interstate or foreign trade or commerce. Such concerted action or agreement unreasonably restrains trade if (1) a specific intent to create an unreasonable restraint of trade is found or (2) the restraint constitutes a per se violation of the Sherman Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

International Trade Law > General Overview

HN11 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Cartels & Horizontal Restraints

The specific elements necessary to prove a claim of horizontal price fixing, as set forth by the Supreme Court, are: (1) the existence of an agreement, combination or conspiracy, (2) among actual competitors, (3) with the purpose or effect of "raising, depressing, fixing, pegging, or stabilizing the price of a commodity," (4) in interstate or foreign commerce.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN12 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Cartels & Horizontal Restraints

To establish the price-fixing element, the evidence must show a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective. In order to survive a motion for summary judgment, a plaintiff must produce direct or circumstantial evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the defendants acted independently of each other.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

HN13 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Acceptance by competitors, without previous agreement, of an invitation to participate in a plan, the necessary consequence of which, if carried out, is restraint on interstate commerce, is sufficient to establish an unlawful conspiracy under the Sherman Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN14 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

While on summary judgment the inferences to be drawn from the underlying facts ... must be viewed in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion, antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a case under § 1 of the Sherman Act. Accordingly, a plaintiff must be able to show that "the inference of conspiracy is reasonable in light of the competing inferences of independent action or collusive action that could not have harmed respondents.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN15 [blue icon] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

If the moving party enunciates any economic theory supporting its behavior in a case under the Sherman, regardless of its accuracy in reflecting the actual market, it is entitled to summary judgment. The nonmoving party's inferences must only be reasonable in order to reach the jury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

HN16 [blue icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Cartels & Horizontal Restraints

An agreement for price fixing may be proven, even absent proof that it was made express, when, in addition to proof of parallel pricing, there are present additional plus factors from which such an inference properly could be made. These plus factors include: (1) evidence of conduct that is contrary to the defendants' independent self-interest; (2) the presence or absence of a strong motive to enter into the alleged conspiracy; (3) the artificial standardization of products; and (4) a high level of interfirm communications.

Counsel: For VICTORIA ORTHOPEDIC ASSOCIATES, P.A., plaintiff: STANLEY M. GROSSMAN, POMERANTZ HAUDEK BLOCK & GROSSMAN, ATTORNEYS AT LAW, NEW YORK, NY. Robert N. Kaplan, Esq., Kaplan & Kilsheimer, New York, NY. Joel C. Meredith, Esq., Meredith, Cohen & Greenfogel, P.C., Philadelphia, PA. Warren Rubin, Esq., Law Offices of Bernard M. Gross, P.C., Philadelphia, PA. Granvil I. Specks, Esq., Specks & Goldberg, Chicago, IL.

For EASTMAN KODAK COMPANY, defendant: John L. Warden, Sullivan & Cromwell, NYC, NY. For E.I. DUPONT DE NEMOURS & CO., defendant: Edwin J. Wesely, Esq., Winthrop, Stimson, Putnam & Roberts, New York, NY. Donald L. Flexner, Esq., Crowell & Moring, Washington, DC.

Judges: Charles P. Sifton, United States District Judge

Opinion by: Charles P. Sifton

Opinion

---

[*210] SIFTON, Chief Judge.

In these consolidated antitrust actions, plaintiffs allege that defendants Eastman Kodak Co., E.I. DuPont de Nemours & Co., Miles, Inc., and Fuji Medical Systems, U.S.A., Inc. have fixed the prices of medical x-ray and imaging films since 1988, in violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act ("the Sherman Act"), 15 U.S.C. § 1. Defendants have filed a renewed motion to dismiss the amended complaint, pursuant to Rules 8, 9, and 12<sup>1</sup> of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. For the reasons set forth below, the motion is converted into one for summary judgment and, as such, is denied.

[[**2] PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

The instant motion involves five cases filed as separate but related actions, which have been consolidated for pretrial purposes.<sup>2</sup> All five cases seek damages on behalf of a class of purchasers of medical x-ray film.<sup>3</sup> The original complaints allege that defendants, along with other unnamed co-conspirators, conspired to fix, raise, maintain, and stabilize the prices of medical x-ray and imaging films, including general radiography films, [*211] mammography films, radiation therapy films, CRT and video imaging films, laser imaging films, duplicating films, and spot films sold in the United States to plaintiffs and other class members at supra-competitive levels from 1988 to the present, in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act. In furtherance of the conspiracy, defendants allegedly agreed to and did exchange current and future price information; agreed to and did coordinate pricing levels and movements; agreed upon prices and price levels; agreed to and did fix, stabilize, inflate and increase prices and price levels in relation to each other; and agreed to and did refrain from competing among themselves on the basis of price. Each complaint [[**3]] seeks declaratory, injunctive, and compensatory relief on behalf of the named plaintiffs and the class for injuries sustained as a result of the foregoing activities.

[[**4] On February 23, 1994, defendants moved to dismiss the complaints under Fed. R. Civ. P. 8, 9\(b\), and 12\(b\)\(6\). At oral argument on April 6, 1994, the Court proposed that plaintiffs file an amended complaint with more particularized allegations that would not unduly bind plaintiffs, that defendants then file their answers within thirty days, and that automatic disclosure under the Civil Justice Expense and Delay Reduction Plan be expedited in order for the parties to depose four witnesses whose testimony plaintiffs claimed supports the allegations in the complaint. The parties consented to the Court's proposal, thereby disposing of the motion to dismiss.

Plaintiffs filed an amended complaint on April 14, 1994, alleging additionally that, in furtherance of the claimed conspiracy, defendants exchanged price increase announcements and other competitive information in advance of their release to the public; discussed future and prospective price increases during the course of trade association meetings; increased prices by approximately the same percentage amounts within a brief period of time of one another; and engaged in non-public meetings, telephone conversations, and facsimile message [[**5]] exchanges in which future and prospective price increases were disclosed or discussed. The parties thereafter deposed four witnesses, all of whom are former employees of defendants: Joel Popham of Kodak, Gregory Gessert of Fuji, and Ronald Bloomquist and John Farrell of Agfa Corporation ("Agfa"), which merged with Miles, leaving Agfa a division of Miles effective December 31, 1991. The deposition testimony is summarized below.

Defendants subsequently renewed their motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 8, 9, and 12, contending that the deposition testimony provides an insufficient factual basis upon which to state a claim under the antitrust laws. At <sup>1</sup>It is not clear from defendants' motion papers whether they are proceeding under Rule 12(b)(6) or 12(c). Since defendants have filed answers to the amended complaint, the Court treats the motion as having been brought pursuant to Rule 12(c). See Ad-Hoc Comm. of Baruch Black & Hispanic Alumni Ass'n v. Bernard M. Baruch College, 835 F.2d 980, 982 (2d Cir. 1987); see also 5 C. Wright & A. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure § 1367, at 514-17 (1990).

<sup>2</sup>These cases are: Victoria Orthopedic Assoc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 93 CV 5904; Nutri-Dyn Midwest Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 93 CV 5940; Imco, Ltd. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 93 CV 5941; Westmoreland Professional Corp. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 94 CV 889; and Michael Cook v. Eastman Kodak Co., 94 CV 890.

<sup>3</sup>The class in each complaint is defined as:

all person, firms, corporations and other entities in the United States (excluding (a) federal, state and local governmental entities and political subdivisions, and (b) defendants and co-conspirators, and other manufacturers of medical x-ray film, their respective parents, subsidiaries and affiliates) that purchased medical x-ray film directly from any defendant, or any parent, subsidiary or affiliate thereof, at any time during the period from January 1, 1989 to the present.

oral argument on July 27, 1994, the Court attempted to clarify the procedural posture of the motion presented. While defendants considered the motion one for dismissal with the deposition testimony serving simply as an amplification and thus part of the pleadings, plaintiffs considered discussion of the deposition testimony as requiring that the motion be converted to one for summary judgment. After listening to argument from both sides, the Court granted a continuance of the motion in order to permit limited discovery and depositions [**6] of the supervisors identified by the four witnesses previously deposed, as well as circumscribed discovery of individuals mentioned in the subsequent depositions, by agreement of the parties. The parties were instructed to supplement their papers with any other materials obtained through discovery that would bear on a motion for summary judgment, and oral argument was set for October 6, 1994.

By order dated October 5, 1994, the Court adjourned the motion to any date to be set by the magistrate. At a conference on October 24, 1994, to resolve discovery disputes, Magistrate Judge Caden outlined the limited discovery to be pursued in conformity with the Court's direction of July 27, 1994.

On November 16, 1994, all five cases were randomly reassigned to Judge Block, during which time discovery continued, but the instant motion was never decided.

In February 1996, the case was reassigned from Judge Block to the undersigned, and a status conference was held on February 8, 1996. The parties were directed to brief the outstanding motion, which is currently before the Court.

[*212] FACTUAL BACKGROUND

The following is a summary of the deposition testimony of the four employees originally [**7] deposed, upon which the complaint's allegations are based.

Joel Popham testified that he had been a sales representative for Kodak from October 1988 to May 1992. He stated that he had no personal knowledge of any employee of Kodak exchanging future price information prior to the public announcement of that information, no personal knowledge of any communication between an employee of Kodak and an employee of any other x-ray film manufacturer regarding pricing, and no personal knowledge of any agreement between or among any x-ray film manufacturers regarding pricing.

Popham did, however, testify that during a sales training meeting in November 1988 a group of Kodak employees began to whisper among themselves and then left the room. At the conclusion of the meeting, the instructor told the trainees that the other employees had left the room because they had been made aware that DuPont intended to announce a price increase and they needed to decide what kind of a response Kodak would make to that price increase. According to Popham, the price increase would have taken effect early in 1989. Popham further testified that he did not himself hear what the employees were whispering about, [**8] and he did not know how these employees were made aware that DuPont was going to increase its prices. In April 1989, he learned that DuPont had increased its 1989 list prices for medical x-ray film.

Popham also explained that Kodak had sales contracts with various hospitals but that the hospitals did not deal with Kodak directly. Rather, Kodak sold the medical x-ray film to its authorized dealers throughout the United States who, in turn, functioned as distributors selling the film to the hospitals. He said that Kodak's principal competitors were DuPont, Fuji, Agfa, 3M and Konica, and they all, as well as Kodak, issued price lists for medical x-ray film they sold. The prices increased annually during Popham's employment with Kodak. They generally were announced late in the year and were put in effect shortly after January 1 of the following year. Popham was unable to recall whether DuPont's price increases in 1990 were the same as Kodak's price increases for that year.

Popham also testified that in the fall of 1989, 1990 and 1991, his Kodak sales district supervisor, Don Waddelow, telephoned the sales representatives in his district, including Popham, and informed them each year [**9] that DuPont would be announcing a price increase. He instructed the sales representatives to talk to Kodak's customers and dealers to ascertain whether they had any information regarding this price increase. Popham testified that he was not instructed to communicate directly with a competitor, that he never did communicate with any competitors about price increases, and that his supervisor's requests did not lead him to believe that his supervisor had direct information from DuPont about a price increase.

Popham thereafter contacted those customers and dealers who bought film from both Kodak and DuPont in an effort to obtain the requested information. In 1990 and 1991, his customer inquiries were fruitless, and he did not obtain any information regarding potential price increases. In 1989, however, a Kodak authorized dealer who was also a DuPont authorized dealer told Popham that he had been apprised of a pending DuPont price increase of between five and seven percent for 1990. Popham testified that this information was not already available in the field, but he did not know how the customer had learned the information.

Popham testified that in 1989, DuPont announced its price increase [**10] before Kodak did, but in 1990 and 1991, Kodak announced its price increase before Dupont. He also explained that Kodak film dealers usually were informed of Kodak's price increases approximately thirty days before the price increase would become effective so that the dealers could buy an extra month's-worth of film at the old prices prior to the price increase. Although Popham and other sales representatives would have been made aware of the impending price increases before the dealers were, he testified that he did not disclose [*213] those increases to anyone, nor was he aware that any other sales representative had.

John Farrell testified that he was employed by Agfa from March 15, 1989, until he was fired in July 1992, as a territory manager for the western half of Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, and a portion of Iowa. He was responsible for promoting sales of Agfa products, including medical x-ray film, through a dealer network as well as through direct sales to hospitals. Farrell identified Kodak, DuPont, and Fuji as Agfa's major competitors in the sale of medical x-ray film at that time.

Farrell testified that there was a general industry-wide price increase in medical x-ray film in [**11] January and February of 1990, 1991, and 1992 in which DuPont, Kodak, Fuji, and Agfa participated. According to Farrell, the price increases between the companies were very close in time and amount. He stated that he obtained advance notice in late October or early November prior to the increase of each of the three years that there would be general price increases in medical x-ray film by Kodak, DuPont, Fuji, and Agfa. He received the information through either telephone calls or by letter from Bob Eisen, his regional manager, who instructed Farrell to find out from his dealers or hospital contacts the details of the industry-wide price increase. Farrell then spoke with several dealers and hospitals who told him they had not been notified by any of the other companies concerning any type of price increase.

Farrell also testified that Mr. Eisen mailed to him written competitor information, including internal memoranda authored by Agfa's competitors and information on terms and conditions of sale offered by Agfa's competitors, such as DuPont, Fuji, and 3M, on more than one occasion during his employment with Agfa. Farrell was unaware of how Elsen obtained these documents. Farrell testified [**12] further that Eisen mentioned to him on several different occasions that he had contact with Agfa's competitors, such as Kodak, but Farrell could provide no details concerning these contacts or the specific subjects discussed.

Farrell testified that he had no knowledge of any meetings among competitors regarding prices, that he had never attended any such meetings with competitors nor did he have any knowledge of others having done so, and that he was not aware of any exchanges of future price information.

Gregory Gessert testified that he was employed by Fuji from July 1990 until he was discharged in June 1992, as a sales representative in Montana for Fuji's x-ray film division. He identified Fuji's competitors in the medical x-ray film industry as Kodak, DuPont, 3M, Konica, and Agfa. Gessert recalled that Fuji increased its list prices for medical x-ray film in January 1991 and January 1992. He was instructed generally to collect competitive information, including pricing, and to report what he obtained on a competitive information form.

Gessert testified further that he met with Ronald Bloomquist, a sales representative for Agfa, in December<sup>4</sup> at a Christmas party held by the [**13] Wisconsin Society of Radiological Technicians (WSRT), a district of the American Association of Radiological Technicians, and they exchanged pricing information. Specifically, Gessert provided a copy of a draft of the proposed Fuji price increases for 1992, and Bloomquist provided a memo Gessert believes notified distributors and dealers of an approximate percentage increase in Agfa film prices. Gessert faxed the draft he received to Tim Smalley, his supervisor, in Michigan.

Ronald Bloomquist testified that he was employed by Agfa from June 1989 until he was involuntarily terminated in November 1992, as a territory sales manager responsible for selling film and equipment to clinics in Wisconsin and parts of Northern Illinois. His supervisors were Robert Eisen and James Prelaske. He identified Kodak, DuPont, Fuji, and Konica as Agfa's competitors in the sale of x-ray film in the United States. He stated that in October 1989, 1990, [**14] and 1991, he was told by Eisen and Prelaske of a forthcoming price increase of five or six percent by either Kodak or DuPont, before it was formally announced, to be effective in [*214] January and February of each following year and that he should find out what he could about the competition.

Bloomquist testified that he attended Christmas parties in December 1989 and on December 13, 1990, held by WSRT, during which time he met with Gessert. On both occasions, the two discussed the industry price increase in medical x-ray film and the fact that each of their employers was announcing a price increase. Bloomquist specifically remembered that Gessert told him at the December 1990 meeting of Fuji's future price increase. In addition, during the 1990 meeting, Gessert provided Bloomquist with a Fuji internal memorandum addressed to Fuji's sales representatives preannouncing a future price percentage increase by Fuji.<sup>5</sup> Bloomquist was reluctant to provide Gessert with any documentation, but verbally relayed that Agfa was following the same direction as Fuji and contemplated a six-percent price increase. Bloomquist then telephoned Eisen with the information he had received from Gessert.

[**15] DISCUSSION

Defendants argue that the complaint should be dismissed pursuant to Rules 8, 9 and 12 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. As an initial matter, the Court must determine whether to treat the instant motion as one to dismiss the complaint or as a motion for summary judgment in light of the discovery that has been had thus far in the case and the information outside of the pleadings that informs the motion at hand. Rule 12\(c\), provides that

HN1[] if, on a motion for judgment on the pleadings, matters outside the pleadings are presented to and not excluded by the court, the motion shall be treated as one for summary judgment and disposed of as provided in Rule 56, and all parties shall be given reasonable opportunity to present all material made pertinent to such a motion by Rule 56.

HN2[] This language, identical to that contained in Rule 12\(b\),<sup>6</sup> has been deemed mandatory, requiring a district court to convert a motion for dismissal into a motion for summary judgment the instant materials external to the pleadings are considered. See Carter v. Stanton, 405 U.S. 669, 671, 31 L. Ed. 2d 569, 92 S. Ct. 1232 \(1972\); see also American Fed'n of State, County [**16] & Mun. Employees, AFL-CIO v. Nassau County, 609 F. Supp. 695, 700 \(E.D.N.Y. 1985\).

<sup>4</sup> The deposition does not specify the year in which this meeting took place.

<sup>5</sup> Bloomquist believes that Gessert showed him this document but did not give it to him.

<sup>6</sup> Rule 12\(b\) HN3[] provides that if, on a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted, matters outside the pleadings are presented and not excluded by the court, the motion shall be treated as one for summary judgment ... and all parties shall be given reasonable opportunity to present all material made pertinent to such a motion by Rule 56.

As defendants point out, the Second Circuit has recognized that when a plaintiff "has actual notice of all the information in the movant's papers and has relied upon these documents in framing the complaint the necessity of translating a Rule 12 ... motion into one under Rule 56 is largely dissipated." Cortec Indus., Inc. v. Sum Holding L.P., 949 F.2d 42, 48 (2d Cir. 1991), cert. denied, 503 U.S. 960, 112 S. Ct. 1561, 118 L. Ed. 2d 208 (1992). While the Court considered treating the initial four depositions as integral to the complaint for the purposes of the renewed [**17] motion to dismiss, the Court, heeding defense counsel's suggestion, made clear on July 27, 1994, when it granted additional discovery, albeit circumscribed, that the continued motion would be converted to one for summary judgment. Cf. Capital Imaging Assoc., P.C. v. Mohawk Valley Medical Assoc., Inc., 996 F.2d 537, 539 (2d Cir.) (summary judgment motion considered after limited discovery permitted), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 947, 114 S. Ct. 388, 126 L. Ed. 2d 337 (1993). Moreover, even if evidence from the original four employee depositions was considered part of the pleadings, the additional discovery the Court permitted cannot be said to form the basis for the complaint since plaintiffs did not have access to the additionally discovered documents or witnesses before the complaint was filed.

[*215] Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56\(c\) HN4[↑] provides that summary judgment must be granted if there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and if the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. The moving party has the burden of demonstrating the absence of any disputed material facts, and the court must resolve all ambiguities and draw all inferences in favor of the party against [**18] whom summary judgment is sought. See Thompson v. Gjivoje, 896 F.2d 716, 720 (2d Cir. 1990).

HN5[↑] The showing needed on summary judgment reflects the burden of proof in the underlying action. The court must consider "the actual quantum and quality of proof" demanded by the underlying cause of action and which party must present such proof. See Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 254, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 (1986). Therefore, when the ultimate burden of proof is on the nonmoving party, the moving party meets his initial burden for summary judgment by "showing" -- that is, pointing out to the district court -- that there is an absence of evidence to support the nonmoving party's case. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 325, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265, 106 S. Ct. 2548 (1986). HN6[↑] To survive the motion, the nonmoving party must then "make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of [the challenged] element essential to [that party's] case." Id. at 322. HN7[↑] "The mere existence of some alleged factual dispute between the parties will not defeat an otherwise properly supported motion for summary judgment." Anderson, 477 U.S. at 247-48. Thus, HN8[↑] summary [**19] judgment is appropriate "when the record taken as a whole could not lead a rational trier of fact to find for the non-moving party." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co., Ltd. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 587, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986).

Defendants argue that plaintiffs have failed to state a legally cognizable claim for violation of the antitrust laws, thereby entitling defendants to judgment as a matter of law. HN9[↑] Section 1 of the Sherman Act makes "every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states, or with foreign nations, . . . illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1. HN10[↑] In order to establish a claim under Section 1, a plaintiff must be able to show: (1) concerted action, (2) by two or more persons, (3) which unreasonably restrains interstate or foreign trade or commerce. See Oreck Corp. v. Whirlpool Corp., 639 F.2d 75, 78 (2d Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 1083, 70 L. Ed. 2d 618, 102 S. Ct. 639 (1981); In re Nasdaq Market-Makers Antitrust Litig., 894 F. Supp. 703, 710 (S.D.N.Y. 1995); Telecommunications Proprietary, Ltd. v. Medtronic, Inc., 687 F. Supp. 832, 837 (S.D.N.Y. 1988). Such [**20] concerted action or agreement unreasonably restrains trade if (1) a specific intent to create an unreasonable restraint of trade is found or (2) the restraint constitutes a per se violation of the statute. See Times-Picayune Publishing Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 614, 97 L. Ed. 1277, 73 S. Ct. 872 (1953) (quoting United States v. Columbia Steel Co., 334 U.S. 495, 522, 92 L. Ed. 1533, 68 S. Ct. 1107 (1948)). Horizontal price fixing,<sup>7</sup> as alleged in the complaint, has been considered a per se violation of the statute.

---

<sup>7</sup> Horizontal price fixing involves price-setting agreements entered into by competitors at the same level of the market structure, while vertical price fixing consists of pricing agreements between firms at different levels of the market structure, such as manufacturers and distributors. See K.M.B. Warehouse Distrib., Inc. v. Walker Mfg. Co., 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7253, No. 92 Civ. 1167, 1994 WL 250115 at *6 n.3 (S.D.N.Y. June 1, 1994), aff'd, 61 F.3d 123 (2d Cir. 1995).

See Catalano, Inc. v. Target Sales, Inc., 446 U.S. 643, 647, 64 L. Ed. 2d 580, 100 S. Ct. 1925 (1980); United States v. Container Corp. of Am., 393 U.S. 333, 337, 21 L. Ed. 2d 526, 89 S. Ct. 510 (1969) ("interference with the setting of price by free market forces is unlawful per se") (citing United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 224 n.59, 84 L. Ed. 1129, 60 S. Ct. 811 (1940)).

[**21] HN11↑ The specific elements necessary to prove a claim of horizontal price fixing, as set forth by the Supreme Court, are: (1) the existence of an agreement, combination or conspiracy, (2) among actual competitors, (3) with the purpose or effect of "raising, depressing, fixing, pegging, or stabilizing the price of a commodity," (4) in interstate or [*216] foreign commerce. United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 223-24, 84 L. Ed. 1129, 60 S. Ct. 811 (1940).

Defendants argue that plaintiffs have not presented a legally sufficient basis upon which to find the first element of a price fixing scheme, namely, a conspiracy or agreement. HN12↑ To establish this element, the evidence must show "a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective." Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 764, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1984); see also Minpeco, S.A. v. Conticommodity Serv., Inc., 673 F. Supp. 684, 688 (S.D.N.Y. 1987). In order to survive a motion for summary judgment, a plaintiff must produce direct or circumstantial evidence "that tends to exclude the possibility" that defendants acted independently of each other. Matsushita [*22] Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 597-98, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986) (citing Monsanto Co., 465 U.S. at 764); see also Capital Imaging, 996 F.2d at 545 ("to withstand defendants' summary judgment motion, plaintiffs must present evidence that casts doubt on inferences of independent (not combined) action or proper conduct by defendants.") (citing Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 588). The Supreme Court has further elaborated on this statement by noting that "conduct that is as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, without more, support even an inference of conspiracy." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. at 597 n.21 (1986).

The Supreme Court has, of course, recognized that a conspiracy or agreement to restrain trade in violation of the Sherman Act need not be express but can be inferred from the circumstances:

It is elementary that an unlawful conspiracy may be and often is formed without simultaneous action or agreement on the part of the conspirators. HN13↑ Acceptance by competitors, without previous agreement, of an invitation to participate in a plan, the necessary consequence [*23] of which, if carried out, is restraint on interstate commerce, is sufficient to establish an unlawful conspiracy under the Sherman Act.

Interstate Circuit v. United States, 306 U.S. 208, 227, 83 L. Ed. 610, 59 S. Ct. 467 (1939) (citations omitted); see also Oreck Corp. v. Whirlpool Corp., 639 F.2d at 79 ("It is not necessary that such a combination be established by direct proof of oral or written agreements; it may be proven by inferences drawn from circumstantial evidence, including the acts and conduct of the alleged conspirators.") (citations omitted).

The Supreme Court has cautioned, however, that, HN14↑ while "on summary judgment the inferences to be drawn from the underlying facts ... must be viewed in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion," Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 587 (quoting United States v. Diebold, Inc., 369 U.S. 654, 655, 8 L. Ed. 2d 176, 82 S. Ct. 993 (1962)), "antitrust law" limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a § 1 case. 475 U.S. at 588; see also Minpeco, S.A., 673 F. Supp. at 688. Accordingly, plaintiffs must be able to show that "the inference of conspiracy is reasonable in light of the competing [*24] inferences of independent action or collusive action that could not have harmed respondents." Id. (citation omitted); see also Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S. Ct. 1464 (1962) (holding that conduct equally consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy). The Supreme Court subsequently noted that it did not mean-- that HN15↑ if the moving party enunciates any economic theory supporting its behavior, regardless of its accuracy in reflecting the actual market, it is entitled to summary judgment. Matsushita demands only that the nonmoving party's inferences be reasonable in order to reach the jury, a requirement that was not invented, but merely articulated, in that decision.

Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Serv., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 468, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 (1992) (footnote omitted).

[*217] One of the more common forms of circumstantial evidence proffered to support a price fixing agreement or conspiracy is proof of parallel pricing between competitors, also known as conscious parallelism or oligopolistic price [**25] coordination. Conscious parallelism has been described as the process, not in itself unlawful, by which firms in a concentrated market might in effect share monopoly power, setting their prices at a profit-maximizing suprareactive level by recognizing their shared economic interests and their interdependence with respect to price and output decisions.

Brooke Group Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 509 U.S. 209, 113 S. Ct. 2578, 2590, 125 L. Ed. 2d 168 (1993) (citations omitted).

Here, plaintiffs have asserted the existence of parallel pricing. They point to deposition testimony in which former and present employees of defendants' companies have stated that, every time there was a price increase between 1989 and 1993, the list prices for medical x-ray film among defendants were very close in amount and that the timing of the price increases was also close, often on the same day each year. According to plaintiffs, this testimony also reveals that defendants' price increases impacted actual pricing in the marketplace.

Defendants, without denying plaintiffs' description of the effect, size, and timing of the price increases, argue that proof of such parallel [**26] behavior is not sufficient by itself to establish an agreement or conspiracy. They note that the Supreme Court has stated:

To be sure business behavior is admissible circumstantial evidence from which the fact finder may infer agreement. But this Court has never held that proof of parallel business behavior conclusively establishes agreement or, phrased differently, that such behavior itself constitutes a Sherman Act offense. Circumstantial evidence of consciously parallel behavior may have made heavy inroads into the traditional judicial attitude toward conspiracy; but "conscious parallelism" has not yet read conspiracy out of the Sherman Act entirely.

Theatre Enter., Inc. v. Paramount Film Distrib. Corp., 346 U.S. 537, 540-41, 98 L. Ed. 273, 74 S. Ct. 257 (1954) (citations omitted); see also United States v. International Harvester Co., 274 U.S. 693, 708-09, 71 L. Ed. 1302, 47 S. Ct. 748 (1927) ("The fact that competitors may decide, in the exercise of their own judgment, to follow the prices of another manufacturer, does not establish any suppression of competition or show any sinister domination.") (citation omitted); Apex Oil Co. v. DiMauro, 822 F.2d 246, 253 [**27] (2d Cir.) ("parallel conduct can be probative evidence bearing on the issue of whether there is an antitrust conspiracy. However, parallel conduct alone will not suffice as evidence of such a conspiracy even if the defendants 'knew the other defendant companies were doing likewise.' More must be shown.") (citation omitted), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 977, 98 L. Ed. 2d 487, 108 S. Ct. 489 (1987); E.I. DuPont de Nemours & Co. v. F.T.C., 729 F.2d 128 139 (2d Cir. 1984) ("The mere existence of an oligopolistic market structure in which a small group of manufacturers engage in consciously parallel pricing of an identical product does not violate the antitrust laws. ... Price uniformity is normal in a market with few sellers and homogeneous products.") (citing Theatre Enter. v. Paramount Film Dist. Corp., 346 U.S. at 541).

More recently, the Supreme Court has recognized with regard to predatory pricing, which may be orchestrated similarly to parallel pricing, that "this anticompetitive minuet is most difficult to compose and to perform, even for a disciplined oligopoly." Brooke Group Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 113 S. Ct. at 2590. At the same time, the Court acknowledged that however [**28] unlikely the possibility [of such a scheme's success] may be as a general matter, when the realities of the market and the record facts indicate that it has occurred and was likely to have succeeded, theory will not stand in the way of liability.

Id. at 2591 (citation omitted).

Accordingly, HN16 an agreement may be proven, even absent proof that it was made express, when, in addition to proof of parallel [*218] pricing, there are present additional "plus factors" from which such an inference properly could be made. See *Interstate Circuit v. United States*, 306 U.S. 208, 222-23, 83 L. Ed. 610, 59 S. Ct. 467 \(1939\). These plus factors include: (1) evidence of conduct that is contrary to the defendants' independent self-interest; (2) the presence or absence of a strong motive to enter into the alleged conspiracy; (3) the artificial standardization of products; and (4) a high level of interfirm communications. See *Apex Oil Co. v. DiMauro*, 822 F.2d at 254; *E.I. DuPont de Nemours*, 729 F.2d at 139 n.10 (citations omitted). Thus, although evidence of parallel conduct between competitors alone is insufficient to prove an agreement or conspiracy, an agreement may properly be inferred [**29] from conscious parallelism when these "plus factors" are present.

Here, plaintiffs claim that in addition to parallel pricing there is evidence of a number of "plus factors," including the exchange of future price increase information, advance notice of future price increases, dissemination of current price information, and contacts and communications between defendants.

Defendants note in response that the "mere opportunity to conspire does not by itself support the inference that an illegal combination actually occurred." *Capital Imaging Assoc., P.C. v. Mohawk Valley Med. Assoc., Inc.*, 996 F.2d at 545; see also *Oreck Corp. v. Whirlpool Corp.*, 639 F.2d at 79. They also argue something different by noting that each of the "plus factors" considered independently, such as the dissemination or gathering of price-related information, does not constitute a violation of the Sherman Act. See *United States v. Citizens & S. Nat. Bank*, 422 U.S. 86, 113, 45 L. Ed. 2d 41, 95 S. Ct. 2099 \(1975\) ("The dissemination of price information is not itself a per se violation of the Sherman Act."); see also *Catalano, Inc. v. Target Sales, Inc.*, 446 U.S. 643, 647, 64 L. Ed. 2d 580, I\*\*301 100 S. Ct. 1925 \(1980\) (Advance Price announcements are perfectly lawful."); *Greenhaw v. Lubbock County Beverage Ass'n*, 721 F.2d 1019, 1030 \(5th Cir. 1983\) ("[A] violation of the Sherman Act is not necessarily established by an exchange of price information. Further evidence of an actual fixing effect on Prices must be adduced before an antitrust violation is established.") (citation omitted); *Vermont Int'l Petroleum Co. v. Amerada Hess Corp.*, 492 F. Supp. 429, 434 \(N.D.N.Y. 1980\) ("price verification is not, of course, per se unlawful") (citing *United States v. United States Gypsum Co.*, 438 U.S. 422, 453-59, 57 L. Ed. 2d 854, 98 S. Ct. 2864 \(1978\)). So too, the mere possession of a competitor's price-related documents, even with evidence of parallel pricing, has been held not to give rise to an inference of a price-fixing agreement. See *Stephen Jay Photo., Ltd. v. Olan Mills, Inc.*, 903 F.2d 988, 996 \(4th Cir. 1990\) ("The fact that the price information about one company is found in a competitor's files or an employee reports a competitor's pricing policy to his home office and the two companies charge similar prices for their products, without more, cannot support [**31] an inference [of conspiracy]."); see also *F.T.C. v. Lukens Steel Co.*, 454 F. Supp. 1182, 1193 \(D.D.C. 1978\).

Defendants, however, have failed to take into account that "the character and effect of a conspiracy are not to be judged by dismembering it and viewing its separate parts, but only by looking at it as a whole." *Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp.*, 370 U.S. 690, 699, 8 L. Ed. 2d 777, 82 S. Ct. 1404 \(1962\) (citations omitted); see also id. at 707 ("Acts which are themselves legal lose that character when they become constituent elements of an unlawful scheme.") (citations omitted). Similarly, "seemingly innocent or ambiguous behavior can give rise to a reasonable inference of conspiracy in light of the background in which the behavior takes place." *Minpeco, S.A.*, 673 F. Supp. at 688 (quoting *Apex Oil Co.*, 822 F.2d at 254-55). Thus, while each of these factors taken in isolation does not necessarily provide a basis alone for inferring an agreement or conspiracy, in combination, these factors, taken together and "on the ground," may support a reasonable inference that an agreement or conspiracy existed.

Turning to the evidence presented, [**32] plaintiffs first point to the meeting between Gessert [*219] and Bloomquist on December 13, 1990, as proof that defendants have exchanged future pricing information. Gessert provided Bloomquist with a Fuji memorandum, which, plaintiffs assert, was not addressed to any Fuji customer and not yet announced to the trade, and which set forth Fuji's upcoming percentage price increase for 1991. Bloomquist relayed this memorandum to his supervisor. Plaintiffs contend that, although Fuji had announced a price increase three days earlier, on December 10, 1990, that announcement stated only that prices would increase "commensurate with industry trends," without setting forth the actual percentage increase contained in the exchanged memorandum. The percentage increase was not announced publicly until December 26, 1990.

At the same meeting, plaintiffs note, Bloomquist gave Gessert a draft internal Agfa memorandum indicating that Agfa would announce a price increase of approximately six percent, which Gessert faxed to Timothy Smalley, Fuji's regional sales manager. Agfa did not publicly announce its price increases until January 14, 1991.

Defendants argue that the "chance encounter" between Gessert and [**33] Bloomquist provides no basis from which to infer the existence of a conspiracy since the meeting was not prearranged, and the Fuji price increase announcement provided to Agfa had been distributed to customers three days earlier. Moreover, defendants point out that neither Bloomquist nor Gessert had any authority to set prices for their companies' x-ray film products. Furthermore, defendants contend that, prior to the exchange between Gessert and Bloomquist, all defendants had already decided on their respective price increases for the year, and three of them had made related announcements to the trade. In addition, defendants dispute plaintiffs' assertion that the Fuji memorandum in question was an internal document.

Plaintiffs also provide the affidavit of Kenneth Housemen, who worked as a sales representative for Agfa from 1985 to 1988, in northern Illinois, parts of Wisconsin, and Iowa. In his affidavit, Houseman states that he met with Robert Frits, a DuPont sales representative, and the two exchanged information prior to any public announcement regarding the percentage price increases their companies intended to implement in 1987. Similarly, Houseman states that he met with [**34] Martin DiFusco, a Kodak sales representative, and exchanged 1987 future pricing information, including proposed percentage increases, for their respective companies prior to any public announcement of the 1987 Kodak price increase. Defendants discount this affidavit, arguing that the discussions involved previously-decided pricing information, that Houseman never stated that he relayed the information he received to his superiors, and that the contacts were random, unplanned encounters during a period of competitive behavior between defendants.

As additional circumstantial evidence supporting the existence of a conspiracy or agreement, plaintiffs offer proof that defendants had advance notice of each other's future price increases. Plaintiffs point to the fact that Robert Eisen, a regional sales manager for Agfa who notified sales representatives working below him of future competitor price increases, typically received information from Agfa's headquarters regarding competitor price increases which had not yet been announced prior to his attending a trade show in Chicago that normally occurred in November of each year. In October 1989 in particular, Eisen was told prior to any announcement [**35] by DuPont that DuPont would lead the 1990 price increase, which it did.

In addition, as noted above, both Joyce Sudak and Joel Popham, former Kodak employees, testified that during a Kodak training presentation in November 1988 several employees left the room, allegedly to discuss information they had just received regarding DuPont's intention to announce a price increase in early 1989. Moreover, plaintiffs cite a number of instances in which various supervisors employed by defendants instructed their sales representatives to find out from dealers and customers about price increases that the supervisors had become aware of before these increases had been announced publicly.

[*220] Defendants argue that a price-fixing agreement cannot be inferred from the requests of defendants' supervisors that sales representatives attempt to gather information regarding proposed competitor price increases since those sales representatives deposed testified that they did not have any basis for believing that their supervisors had direct information from competitors regarding a price increase and because it is implausible that defendants would have secretly met and agreed to fix prices but have left it [**36] up to their sales people to discover in the market what the agreed upon prices were. Defendants, on the other hand, argue that the supervisors' requests that information be ferreted from the marketplace more persuasively demonstrate that these supervisors were engaging in legitimate, independent, competitive conduct to try to find information regarding competitor price activity during the months of the year each manufacturer historically announced price changes.

A third "plus factor" plaintiffs proffer to support the inference of a conspiracy or agreement is the dissemination among defendants of current price information detailing the terms and conditions of medical x-ray film sales to their customers, which plaintiffs argue, were not obtained from the customers themselves since they contain information not meant to be disseminated externally. At the very least, plaintiffs contend, there is a genuine issue of material fact as to how and why one defendant had access to another's internal marketing and pricing documents.

Defendants argue that a price-fixing agreement cannot be inferred from employees' possession of their competitors' price-related documents since the documents in question [**37] reflect pricing decisions previously announced to dealers and customers rather than prospective pricing information, and there was no evidence presented regarding where the possessors obtained the information regarding their competitors. Defendants also assert that all of the witnesses asked about these documents testified that they did not receive any of them directly from a competitor and that such documents typically came from customers. Defendants emphasize that five of the supervisors deposed testified that sales representatives frequently and with ease obtained competitor pricing information from their customers.

Finally, plaintiffs argue that evidence of direct contacts between defendants and the existence of multiple opportunities to conspire support the inference of a conspiracy or agreement to fix prices. Defendants discount these direct communications, arguing that none related to specific or future x-ray film price increases. However, as plaintiffs point out, these contacts demonstrate the ability and actuality of flowing communications between defendants and among their employees. Moreover, plaintiffs argue that defendants had an opportunity to conspire since Kodak, DuPont, [**38] Agfa, and Fuji attended meetings of the Radiological Society of North America, the American College of Radiology, and American Healthcare Radiology Administrators.

With regard to all of these "plus factors," the parties disagree over the interpretation and significance of the evidence presented to support each inference. Recognizing that it is not the Court's role on a motion for summary judgment to weigh the evidence presented, see Apex Oil Co. v. DiMauro, 822 F.2d at 252 ("While some assessing of the evidence is necessary in order to determine rationally what inferences are reasonable and therefore permissible, it is evident that the question of what weight should be assigned to competing permissible inferences remains within the province of the factfinder at trial.") (citations omitted), plaintiffs have presented a basis upon which the existence of a price-fixing agreement or conspiracy among defendants can reasonably be inferred. Despite the plausibility of defendants' innocent explanations for the circumstantial evidence plaintiffs have presented when considered piece by piece, this evidence when taken in combination tends to exclude the possibility that defendants acted [**39] independently in setting their prices for medical x-ray film each year. Cf. Minpeco, S.A. v. Conticommodity Serv., Inc., 673 F. Supp. 684, 688 \(S.D.N.Y. 1987\) (denying motion for summary judgment when plaintiff was able to produce evidence of parallel conduct, a high level of communications, [*221] and a common motive among defendants to conspire to raise prices). Directly analogous is the case of Vermont Int'l Petroleum Co. v. Amerada Hess Corp., 492 F. Supp. 429 \(N.D.N.Y. 1980\). In that case, the district court found the Society of Independent Gasoline Marketers of America ("SIGMA"), an industry organization comprised of independent gasoline marketers, to be "a clearinghouse for the exchange of retail price information among independent gasoline marketers." Id. at 434. The court based its finding on the fact that information "was conveyed through telephone calls between SIGMA employees and those of the independents concerning posted retail prices, as well as planned price changes. In essence, SIGMA was the agent of the participating independents." Id. In much the same way, there is sufficient evidence in this case to infer that the market of medical x-ray film dealers and [**40] customers, in conjunction with the ease of interfirm communications, served as a kind of clearinghouse from which competitors could gather information regarding current prices and impending price increases in order to coordinate their pricing activities. As the court in the Vermont Int'l Petroleum Co. case emphasized, evidence of price verification must be scrutinized carefully, "since it carries the potential for price-fixing agreements." Id. Accordingly, the Court finds there to be a reasonable basis from which to infer an agreement or conspiracy sufficient to preclude granting summary judgment, and thus, for the reasons set forth above, defendants' motion is denied.<sup>8</sup>

[**41] The Clerk is directed to mail a copy of the within to all parties.

SO ORDERED.

---

<sup>8</sup> Because the Court has denied defendant's motion, the Court need not consider the sufficiency of plaintiffs' affidavit filed pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(l\). Moreover, because Rule 12\(c\) provides that all parties be given a reasonable opportunity to present materials relevant to a motion that has been converted to one for summary judgment, plaintiff's cross-motion to strike defendant's Local 3(g) statement for failing to comply with the Local Rules is denied.

946 F. Supp. 209, *221L<sup>A</sup> 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18732, **41

Dated: Brooklyn, New York

September 27, 1996

Charles P. Sifton

United States District Judge

---

End of Document

Roma Constr. Co. v. aRusso

United States Court of Appeals for the First Circuit

September 27, 1996, Decided

No. 95-2107

Reporter

96 F.3d 566 *; 1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 25442 **

ROMA CONSTRUCTION COMPANY AND PETER ZANNI, Plaintiffs - Appellants, v. RALPH R. ARUSSO, ET AL., Defendants - Appellees.

Subsequent History: [**1] As Corrected October 11, 1996.

Prior History: APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF RHODE ISLAND. Hon. Francis J. Boyle, Senior U.S. District Judge.

Disposition: Reversed dismissals and the district court's decision not to admit Blakely and remanded.

Core Terms

---

district court, bribery, plaintiffs', extortion, innocent party, pleadings, state law, innocence, innocent victim, pro hac vice, Clayton Act, corruptly, legislative history, involvement, statutory language, racketeering activity, federal common law, municipal, custom, rights, coercive, courts, federal interest, cause of action, racketeering, antitrust, grounds, individual defendant, affirmative defense, federal court

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > Judgment on Pleadings

HN1 [] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

A federal appellate court reviews dismissals pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) under the rubric that all reasonable inferences from properly pleaded facts are to be drawn in the plaintiffs' favor.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Governments > Courts > Authority to Adjudicate

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > Judgment on Pleadings

HN2 [down] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Upon considering a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\), a district court should not grant the motion unless it appears to a certainty that the plaintiff would be unable to recover under any set of facts.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN3 [down] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

A federal appellate court reviews a decision on a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) motion to dismiss under the same standard as the district court uses.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Remedies

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

HN4 [down] Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations, Remedies

The Racketeering Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961 et seq., creates, in 18 U.S.C.S. § 1964\(c\), civil remedy for any person injured by reason of racketeering activity. It is unlawful for any person employed by or associated with any enterprise engaged in, or activities of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce, to conduct or participate, directly or indirectly, in the conduct of such enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity or collection of unlawful debt. An "enterprise" includes any individual, partnership, corporation, association or other legal entity, and any union or group of individuals associated in fact although not a legal entity. "Racketeering activity" includes any one of a number of enumerated criminal acts indictable under federal or state law. A "pattern of racketeering activity" is two or more acts of racketeering activity within ten years.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Crimes Against Persons > Bribery > General Overview

HN5 [down] Crimes Against Persons, Bribery

See R.I. Gen. Laws § 11-7-4 (1994).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Scope

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

Governments > Legislation > General Overview

**HN6** [down] Private Actions, Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations

Where federal and state racketeering statutes provide for a civil remedy, a federal appellate court should deny remedies authorized by the Racketeering Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961 et seq., only with reference to statutes or case law, not on policy grounds.

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Federal Common Law > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Effect & Operation > General Overview

International Trade Law > Dispute Resolution > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Choice of Law > General Overview

Governments > Courts > Authority to Adjudicate

International Law > Dispute Resolution > General Overview

**HN7** [down] Federal & State Interrelationships, Federal Common Law

Federal courts have the power to formulate federal common law when a federal rule of decision is necessary to protect uniquely federal interests or when Congress has given the courts the power to develop substantive law. Areas of uniquely federal interests include areas such as the rights and obligations of the United States, interstate and international disputes implicating the conflicting rights of states or our relations with foreign nations, and admiralty cases.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations > Claims > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

**HN8** [down] Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations, Claims

The Racketeering Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961 et seq., does not concern uniquely federal interests.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Racketeering > Racketeer Influenced & Corrupt Organizations Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > Erie Doctrine

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Federal Common Law > General Overview

**HN9** [down] Justiciability, Standing

The question of a party's innocence must be resolved via the incorporation of state law into the federal law of standing under the Racketeering Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C.S. § 1961 et seq.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN10[] Legislation, Interpretation

A statutory term is generally presumed to have its common-law meaning.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Crimes Against Persons > Bribery > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Acts & Mental States > Mens Rea > Specific Intent

HN11[] Crimes Against Persons, Bribery

The term "corruptly" in R.I. Gen. Laws § 11-7-4 indicates a specific corrupt intent that differs from the Model Penal Code commentary's condemnation of an involuntary payor's conduct as manifesting a degree of cooperation in the undermining of governmental integrity that is inconsistent with the complete exoneration from criminal liability.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Crimes Against Persons > Bribery > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Criminal Offenses > Acts & Mental States > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Acts & Mental States > Mens Rea > Specific Intent

HN12[] Crimes Against Persons, Bribery

The mens rea implicated by "corruptly" in R.I. Gen. Laws § 11-7-4 concerns the intention to obtain ill-gotten gain; by contrast, the Model Penal Code converts the lack of willpower to stand up to abusive authority into a degree of culpability.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Bribery > Commercial Bribery > Elements

Governments > Legislation > Effect & Operation > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Crimes Against Persons > Bribery > General Overview

HN13[] Commercial Bribery, Elements

Rhode Island's bribery statute, R.I. Gen. Laws § 11-7-4, does not foreclose a conclusion that persons paying what appears to be a bribe are "innocent parties."

Criminal Law & Procedure > Criminal Offenses > Racketeering > General Overview

HN14 [blue icon] Criminal Offenses, Racketeering

See R.I. Gen. Laws § 9-1-2.

Civil Rights Law > Protection of Rights > Procedural Matters > Criminal Penalties

Torts > Remedies > Damages

Torts > Intentional Torts > General Overview

HN15 [blue icon] Procedural Matters, Criminal Penalties

42 U.S.C.S. § 1983 authorizes actions for equitable relief and/or damages against every person who under color of any custom or usage, of any state or territory, subjects or causes to be subjected any citizen of the United States or other person to the deprivation of any rights, privileges, or immunities secured by the United States Constitution and federal laws. Furthermore, those who commit actionable wrongs under that section are liable to the party injured in an action at law, suit in equity, or other proper proceeding in redress. Congress included customs and usages in § 1983 because of the persistent and widespread discriminatory practices of state officials. Although not authorized by written law, such practices of state officials could well be so permanent and well settled as to constitute a custom or usage with the force of law.

Civil Rights Law > Protection of Rights > Procedural Matters > Criminal Penalties

Civil Rights Law > ... > Immunity From Liability > Local Officials > Knowledge

Civil Rights Law > ... > Section 1983 Actions > Scope > Government Actions

Governments > Local Governments > Claims By & Against

HN16 [blue icon] Procedural Matters, Criminal Penalties

Courts have set forth two requirements for maintaining a 42 U.S.C.S. § 1983 action grounded upon an unconstitutional municipal custom. First, the custom or practice must be attributable to the municipality. That is, it must be so well-settled and widespread that the policymaking officials of the municipality can be said to have either actual or constructive knowledge of it yet did nothing to end the practice. Second, the custom must have been the cause of and the moving force behind the deprivation of constitutional rights.

Civil Rights Law > Protection of Rights > Procedural Matters > Criminal Penalties

Governments > Local Governments > Employees & Officials

Civil Rights Law > ... > Section 1983 Actions > Scope > Government Actions

Governments > Local Governments > Claims By & Against

HN17 [blue icon] Procedural Matters, Criminal Penalties

An unconstitutional policy or custom, actionable under 42 U.S.C.S. § 1983, may be inferred from a single decision or act, but the isolated action must be taken by a municipal official with final policy-making authority in the relevant area of the city's business. However, the fact that a particular official -- even a policymaking official -- has discretion in the exercise of a particular function does not, without more, give rise to municipal liability based on an exercise of that discretion.

Civil Procedure > Attorneys > Pro Hac Vice

Governments > Courts > Authority to Adjudicate

HN18 [blue icon] Attorneys, Pro Hac Vice

See U.S. Dist. Ct. R., D. R.I., R. 5(c).

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Abuse of Discretion

Civil Procedure > Attorneys > Pro Hac Vice

HN19 [blue icon] Standards of Review, Abuse of Discretion

When a party identifies a specific, logical reason for its request to permit an out-of-state attorney to be admitted pro hac vice, a federal district court's decision denying pro hac vice admission, based on criteria that are not set forth in writing, that do not reasonably support its action, and that do not appear to respond to any general policy of the court, amounts to an abuse of discretion.

Counsel: G. Robert Blakey, with whom Ina P. Schiff, Henry F. Spaloss and Spaloss & Rosson were on brief for appellants.

Kathleen M. Powers, with whom Marc DeSisto and DeSisto Law Offices were on brief for appellee Town of Johnston. Samuel D. Zurier, with whom Julius C. Michaelson and Michaelson & Michaelson were on brief for appellees aRusso, et al.

Judges: Before Torruella, Chief Judge, Cyr and Lynch, Circuit Judges. LYNCH, Circuit Judge, concurring.

Opinion by: TORRUELLA

Opinion

---

[*568] TORRUELLA, Chief Judge. Plaintiffs-Appellants Roma Construction Co, Inc. ("Roma") and Peter Zanni ("Peter Zanni") (collectively, "the plaintiffs"), challenge the district court's dismissal of their claims against Defendants-Appellees Mayor Ralph R. a Russo ("a Russo"), Councilman Benjamin Zanni ("Benjamin Zanni"), Domenic DeConte, Vincent Iannazi, Anthony Izzo, et al. (collectively, "the individual defendants"), and the Town of Johnston, Rhode Island ("the Town") (together with the individual defendants, "the defendants"). Specifically, the district court granted judgment [*2] on the pleadings regarding: (1) Roma's racketeering claims against the individual defendants and the Town under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO"), 18 U.S.C. § 1964\(a\), and R.I. Gen. Laws § 7-15-1 et seq. ("state RICO"); and (2) Roma's civil rights claims against the individual defendants and the Town under 42 U.S.C. § 1983. Roma also challenges the district court's decision to deny the pro hac vice admission of attorney G. Robert Blakey ("Blakey"). For the following reasons, we reverse the dismissal of the RICO, state RICO and civil rights claims, reverse the district court's decision not to admit Blakey, and we remand for further proceedings in accordance with this opinion.

I. BACKGROUND

HN1[] We review dismissals pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) under the rubric that all reasonable inferences from properly pleaded facts are to be drawn in the plaintiffs' favor. Perez-Ruiz v. Crespo-Guillen, 25 F.3d 40, 42 (1st Cir. 1994); Dartmouth Review v. Dartmouth College, 889 F.2d 13, 16 (1st Cir. 1989).

Drawing all reasonable inferences for the plaintiffs, the tale proceeds as follows. The plaintiffs Peter Zanni and Roma entered [**3] into a real estate development venture with Harry and Russell DePetrillo ("the DePetrillos"). Unknown to the plaintiffs, the DePetrillos had entered into an arrangement with the alleged de facto government of the Town, with a Russo as "the Boss," under which payments would be made to this enterprise in order to obtain necessary approvals. After the DePetrillos sold their share, Peter Zanni was informed of this preexisting deal, and was warned that his project was "dead" if he did not make payments. Having invested heavily in the project, and reasonably believing that he was dealing with a racketeering enterprise that had extorted and stolen for years during its control of the Town, Peter Zanni paid up. He continued paying for three years, until he was able to sell his share of the development. He then informed the FBI, and cooperated with its investigation and later with prosecutions of official corruption in the Town.

Peter Zanni and Roma brought federal and state civil racketeering claims and federal civil rights claims, charging that they were injured by the conduct of a Russo and his fellow individual defendants, as well as the Town. The district court dismissed these charges on [**4] the grounds that the plaintiffs' own conduct rendered them unable to maintain standing to press their claims. The plaintiffs appeal the dismissals of their racketeering [*569]<sup>1</sup> and civil rights claims, as well as the district court's decision to deny the pro hac vice admission of their desired counsel, G. Robert Blakey ("Blakey").

II. DISCUSSION

We address first the plaintiffs' challenge to the dismissals of their causes of action, and then confront their appeal of the district court's decision to deny admission to Blakey.

A. Causes of Action

After setting forth the applicable standard of review, we turn first to the plaintiffs' [**5] challenge to the district court's dismissal of their racketeering claims. We then shift to the issue of the plaintiffs' section 1983 claims.

1. Standard of Review

HN2[] Upon considering a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\), the district court should not grant the motion unless it appears to a certainty that the plaintiff would be unable to recover under any set of facts. Hospital Bldg. Co. v. Trustees of Rex Hosp., 425 U.S. 738, 746, 48 L. Ed. 2d 338, 96 S. Ct. 1848 (1976); Gonzalez-Bernal v. United States, 907 F.2d 246, 248 (1st Cir. 1990). HN3[] We review under the same standard, Holt Civic Club v. City of Tuscaloosa, 439 U.S. 60, 66, 58 L. Ed. 2d 292, 99 S. Ct. 383 (1978).

2. The Racketeering Claims

<sup>1</sup> At oral argument, the plaintiffs stated that, on appeal, they did not wish to challenge the district court's dismissal of their racketeering claims against the Town. Plaintiffs also stipulated that they would not attempt to assert such claims against the Town in the future. Accordingly, vis-a-vis the Town, the only damage claims we address are those pursuant to section 1983.

HN4 [+] RICO creates a civil remedy for "any person injured in his business or property by reason of a violation of section 1962 of this chapter." 18 U.S.C. § 1964\(c\). Subsection (c) of section 1962, in turn, declares that it is unlawful "for any person employed by or associated with any enterprise engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce, to conduct or participate, directly or indirectly, in the conduct of such enterprise's affairs through a pattern [**6] of racketeering activity or collection of unlawful debt." Id. § 1962(c). An "enterprise" is defined to include "any individual, partnership, corporation, association or other legal entity, and any union or group of individuals associated in fact although not a legal entity." Id. § 1961\(4\). "Racketeering activity" includes any one of a number of enumerated criminal acts indictable under federal or state law. See id. § 1961\(1\). A "'pattern of racketeering activity' requires at least two acts of racketeering activity . . . the last of which occurred within ten years . . . after the commission of a prior act of racketeering activity." Id. § 1961\(5\).

The district court dismissed the plaintiffs' civil RICO claims on the ground that, by their own pleadings, plaintiffs were not innocent victims and therefore could not maintain civil RICO standing. The district court found support for the proposition that only innocent victims could collect damages via civil RICO in the legislative history of the provision. See Organized Crime Control: Hearings on S. 30 Before the Subcomm. No. 5 of the House Committee on the Judiciary, 91st Cong., 2d. Sess. (1970) (stating, in the Act's [**7] "Findings and Purpose," that "Congress finds that . . . organized crime activity in the United States harms innocent investors and competing organizations"); 116 Cong. Rec. H35,346-47 (Oct. 7, 1970) (statement of Rep. Steiger, the private civil remedy provision's sponsor) ("It is the intent of this body, I am certain, to see that innocent parties who are the victims of organized crime have a right to obtain proper redress."). The district court's reasoning can be better delineated in conjunction with a recitation of plaintiffs' claims. Drawing inferences in favor of the plaintiffs, their pleadings suggest the following situation. The plaintiffs joined the DePetrillos in a real estate venture, unaware that the DePetrillos had entered into a scheme in which regulatory approvals had already been granted in exchange for the DePetrillos' payment of $ 10,000 to a Russo and his purported associates. The plaintiffs were similarly unaware that the DePetrillos had agreed to pay an additional $ 40,000. Several years later, defendant [*570] Councilman Benjamin Zanni approached them for the purported "balance due." As the district court emphasized, the plaintiffs then faced a dilemma. They could refuse [**8] to pay, jeopardizing their $ 2 million investment in the project, and as the district court suggested was their obligation, go immediately to the authorities. Or, they could submit to this extortion to protect their investment. They chose the latter route. The plaintiffs state that they complied with all rules and regulations, and did not seek preferential treatment, but paid to avoid threatened adverse consequences. Specifically, the plaintiffs point to Benjamin Zanni's alleged statement to Plaintiff Peter Zanni that the venture was "dead" unless the balance was paid. Three years later, after they sold their partnership interests in the venture, the plaintiffs contacted the FBI, and assisted agents in a sting operation.

Looking at these contentions, one reasonable conclusion is that the plaintiffs made these payments without any intent or desire to subvert governmental processes, but felt compelled to pay to protect their substantial investment in the venture, and did not contact the FBI until they had mitigated risks to their investment. However, the district court concluded that, even under this favorable view of the plaintiffs' conduct they could not be considered innocent parties, [**9] and so could not, according to the district court's interpretation of RICO standing, maintain a civil RICO claim. The district court concluded that, since the plaintiffs' own pleadings indicate that they paid $ 40,000 to the individual defendants to assure timely processing of permits and approvals necessary for their project, the plaintiffs were "neither innocent nor victims." Roma Constr. Co. v. a Russo, 906 F. Supp. 78, 82 \(D.R.I. 1995\).

The plaintiffs challenge the district court's dismissal of their civil RICO claims on the pleadings. Plaintiffs dispute that there is any "innocent party" requirement under RICO. In the alternative, the plaintiffs contend that, even assuming such an "innocent party" requirement, the district court erred as a matter of law in concluding, that even taking the most favorable view of the plaintiffs' pleadings, they were necessarily not "innocent parties." Although the district court spoke of the "innocent party" requirement as one of "standing," it appears to have also considered its "innocent party" requirement as being in the nature of an affirmative defense which could be determined at the pleadings stage. The district court analogized to [**10] antitrust cases under the Clayton Act in which an "equal involvement" defense is recognized. See Bateman Eichler, Hill Richards Inc. v. Berner, 472 U.S. 299, 310-11, 86 L. Ed. 2d 215, 105 S. Ct. 2622 \(1985\); Perma Life Mufflers v. International Parts Corp., 392 U.S. 134, 20 L. Ed. 2d 982, 88 S. Ct. 1981 \(1968\). Whether or not there exists such an "innocent party" requirement is a question of first impression in this circuit and, indeed, we are not aware of any cases anywhere that adopt such a requirement. We need not, however, decide whether or to what extent RICO imposes an "innocent party" limitation, or whether any such requirement might take the form of a standing requirement or an affirmative defense, because we conclude that the district court erred in finding that plaintiffs could prove no set of facts which would show their nonculpability under all potentially applicable criminal statutes.<sup>2</sup>

[**11] Our analysis commences with an examination of the standards under which the district court evaluated plaintiffs' behavior. In deciding that such payments, even if coerced, forced it to conclude that the plaintiffs were [**571] not innocent victims, the district court cited two authorities. See Roma Constr. Co., 906 F. Supp. at 81-82 (citing R.I. Gen. Laws § 11-7-4 (1994) and Model Penal Code § 240.1 commentary at 41 (1980)). Initially, the district court noted that Rhode Island General Law § 11-7-4 states that no person shall corruptly give . . . any gift or valuable consideration to . . . any public official as an inducement or reward for doing or forebearing to do . . . any act in relation to the business of . . . the state, city or town of which he or she is an official.

HN5 [↑] R.I. Gen. Laws § 11-7-4 (1994). The statutory language does not address the question of whether one who pays due to coercion is an innocent victim. The district court did not refer to, and we fail to find, any Rhode Island authority for direction on this point.

Rather, the district court drew on the commentary to the Model Penal Code's definition of bribery to conclude that the plaintiffs' payments, [**12] even if construed to be the product of coercion, constituted illegal bribery. See Roma Constr. Co., 906 F. Supp. at 81. The cited commentary to section 240.1 of the Model Penal Code states that [a] private citizen who responds to an official's threat of adverse action by paying money to secure more favorable treatment evidences thereby a willingness to subvert the legitimate processes of government . . . . Such conduct constitutes a degree of cooperation in the undermining of governmental integrity that is inconsistent with the complete exoneration from criminal liability.

Model Penal Code § 240.1 commentary at 41 (1980). The district court thus concluded that since even the interpretation of the pleadings that most favors the plaintiffs requires a determination that plaintiffs capitulated to official threats of adverse action, they were not "innocent parties." Taken together with its reading of the legislative history that RICO was intended to protect "innocent parties" and with its assessment of public policy in the form of "economic incentives," the district court proceeded to dismiss the plaintiffs' claims on the pleadings. Roma Constr. Co., 906 F. Supp. at 83. [**13]

The district court thus ultimately relied on the policy concerns it understood to be addressed in the Model Penal Code. Assuming for the sake of argument that lack of "innocence" is an issue in a civil RICO claim, the question must be addressed whether the district court considered the correct sources for the definition of "innocence." HN6 [↑] We believe that where racketeering statutes provide for a civil remedy, at the very least we should deny RICO remedies only with reference to statutes or case law, not on policy grounds. See generally Sedima, S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., 473 U.S. 479, 498-500, 87 L. Ed. 2d 346, 105 S. Ct. 3275 \(1985\) (rejecting, due to RICO statutory language and legislative history that counsel a broad interpretation, a court of appeals-imposed RICO standing limitation as inappropriate judicial "statutory amendment" even though the Court shared the lower court's concerns about "extraordinary" uses of RICO). As a result, we turn to the question of whether the issue presented is properly <sup>2</sup> In deciding not to address the broader issues discussed in the concurring opinion, we need not necessarily quarrel with our respected colleague's analysis. Concededly, dismissal of the complaint based on appellees' assertion of a fact-intensive "equal involvement" defense would be inappropriate on the undeveloped record presently before the court. The concurring opinion hypothesizes that the substance of any such defense would be informed by preexisting federal statutes embodying comparable defenses. By contrast, the district court's dismissal depends entirely on the existence, vel non, of either an absolute innocent-victim "standing" requirement or a law-based in pari delicto defense, each of which, by its very nature, is more readily susceptible to summary disposition than a fact-intensive "equal involvement" defense. Thus we caution that nothing we have said is meant to suggest that Congress intended to create either such a "standing" requirement or an in pari delicto defense.

one of federal common law for which the Model Penal Code might prove a legitimate source of uniform legal principles, or one to which we would apply Rhode Island law.

The Supreme Court has recognized HN7 that federal [**14] courts have the power to formulate federal common law when a federal rule of decision is necessary to protect "uniquely federal interests" or when Congress has given the courts the power to develop substantive law. Texas Indus. v. Radcliff Materials, Inc., 451 U.S. 630, 640, 68 L. Ed. 2d 500, 101 S. Ct. 2061 (citing Banco Nacional de Cuba v. Sabbatino, 376 U.S. 398, 426, 11 L. Ed. 2d 804, 84 S. Ct. 923 \(1964\) and Wheeldin v. Wheeler, 373 U.S. 647, 652, 10 L. Ed. 2d 605, 83 S. Ct. 1441 \(1963\)). Areas of "uniquely federal interests" include areas such as "the rights and obligations of the United States, interstate and international disputes implicating the conflicting rights of States or our relations with foreign nations, and admiralty cases." 451 U.S. at 641. Several courts have concluded that RICO does not implicate "uniquely federal interests," since "regulation of organized crime does not fall within the above categories and, although RICO is federal legislation, [*572] individual states also take active roles in fighting organized crime and providing redress for its injured citizens." Friedman v. Hartmann, 787 F. Supp. 411, 417 \(S.D.N.Y. 1992\); Minpeco v. Conticommodity Servs. Inc., 677 F. Supp. 151, 155 \(S.D.N.Y. 1988\) ("RICO, although reflecting [**15] Congress' intent in providing creative federal responses to the problems of organized crime, does not address a uniquely federal interest."); Seminole Electric v. Tanner, 635 F. Supp. 582, 584 \(M.D. Fla. 1986\). We agree that RICO HN8 does not concern uniquely federal interests.

As a result, we inquire whether the question presented -- is RICO standing limited to "innocent" parties? -- falls within an area in which Congress has given the courts the power to develop substantive law. Texas Industries, 451 U.S. at 640. The district court, in effect, decided that the issue of federal civil RICO standing and its relationship to a party's innocence was properly decided as a matter of uniform federal common law. The district court looked to uniform model codes and emergent trends as guides for fashioning a federal common law rule which would foster what it perceived as important federal interests underlying civil RICO. The district court suggested that the Congress that enacted RICO in 1970, which referred obliquely in legislative history to the purpose of aiding "innocent parties," would be cognizant of the emerging Model Penal Code trend in the law of bribery, presupposing that [**16] Congress gave courts the power to develop substantive law regarding this issue.

We find no evidence of any congressional intent that the "innocence" of a RICO "victim" should be made to turn on a uniform federal common law rule. Neither party cites, and we have been unable to find, statutory provisions or legislative history evidencing such a grant of authority. While there has been a great deal of commentary regarding the appropriate scope of federal common law, see, e.g., Morgan v. South Bend Community Sch. Corp., 797 F.2d 471, 475 \(7th Cir. 1986\) (collecting commentary), it is not disputed that "when the federal government is not a party to the litigation" -- as is the case here -- "neutral state rules that do not undermine federal interests should be applied unless some statute (or the Constitution) authorizes the federal courts to create a rule of federal law," id. at 475 (citing Miree v. DeKalb County, 433 U.S. 25, 28-33, 53 L. Ed. 2d 557, 97 S. Ct. 2490 \(1977\)). More specifically, the Supreme Court has rejected a judicially created restriction on RICO standing, despite voicing agreement with the policy concerns that drove the limitation in question. See Sedima, 473 U.S. at 498-500. [**17] As a result, assuming -- without concluding, as we ultimately find the plaintiffs to be innocent parties -- that RICO standing is limited to "innocent parties," we believe that HN9 the question of a party's innocence must be resolved via the incorporation of state law into the federal law of RICO standing in order to answer the instant question. We recognize that the incorporation of state law into federal law implicates a serious problem of uniformity of federal law throughout the states. However, since RICO does not implicate uniquely federal interests and since there is a lack of support for the view that Congress authorized the federal courts to generate federal common law in this area, the incorporation of state law is the preferable alternative. See, e.g., In re Sunrise Sec. Litig., 916 F.2d 874, 881 \(3d Cir. 1990\) (finding it appropriate "to look to state law for guidance in deciding whether plaintiffs have stated a nonderivative [shareholders'] claim, [enabling them to maintain standing,] rather than to fashion federal common law"); Leach v. Federal Deposit Ins. Corp., 860 F.2d 1266, 1274 \(5th Cir. 1988\) (concluding that "the incorporation of state law to [**18] determine whether a shareholder has been injured under RICO is preferable to generating federal common law" despite the possibility of "a serious problem of uniformity of federal law throughout the states"); cf. In re Bieter Co., 16 F.3d 929, 935 \(8th Cir. 1994\) (applying federal common law of attorney-client privilege to a civil RICO action, where such application is authorized by Supreme Court Standard 503 and Supreme Court case law).

As a result, in assessing plaintiffs' innocence, we must apply Rhode Island bribery law. The district court concluded that the pleadings rendered the plaintiffs "not innocent" [*573] vis-a-vis charges of bribery. See Roma Constr. Co., 906 F. Supp. at 83 (stating that to allow the plaintiffs standing might result in a rule under which "persons, such as the plaintiffs, could engage in bribery of public officials with full knowledge that if the bribery scheme . . . broke down, they could seek a treble return on their illicit, but failed investment"). Turning to Rhode Island law, however, this conclusion cannot be reconciled with Rhode Island's bribery statute. The district court relied on the Model Penal Code's bribery provision, which states that [**19]

- [a] person is guilty of bribery, a felony of the third degree, if he offers, confers, or agrees to confer upon another, or solicits, accepts or agrees to accept from another:
  - (1) any pecuniary benefit as consideration for the recipient's decision, opinion, recommendation, vote or other exercise of discretion as a public servant, party official, or voter; or
  - (2) any benefit as consideration for the recipient's decision, vote, recommendation or other exercise of official discretion in a judicial or administrative proceeding; or
  - (3) any benefit as consideration for a violation of a known legal duty as a public servant or party official.

Model Penal Code § 240.1 ("Bribery in Official and Political Matters"). While the district court may have rightly concluded that the plaintiffs are not innocent of bribery under the Model Penal Code, we do not think that this fact counsels for the same conclusion under Rhode Island law, since the Code's own commentaries expressly recognize that the Code does not follow Rhode Island law. Part II Model Penal Code and Commentaries 6, n.2 (1980). Moreover, unlike Rhode Island's statute, the Model Penal Code provision contains no requirement [**20] that a payor act "corruptly." Compare R.I. Gen. Laws § 11-7-4 ("no person shall corruptly give") (emphasis added) with Model Penal Code § 240.1 ("[a] person is guilty of bribery . . . if he offers, confers, or agrees to confer upon another").<sup>3</sup>

[**21] The plaintiffs argue that the Model Penal Code's omission of the term "corruptly" is no mere semantic distinction; rather, it represents a shift from the common law in expanding the scope of bribery sanctions for payors to situations in which the payor does not act corruptly. See generally James Lindgren, The Elusive Distinction Between Bribery and Extortion: From the Common Law to the Hobbs Act, 35 U.C.L.A. L. Rev. 815, 824 n.41 (1988). We agree. HN10 [↑] "[A] statutory term is generally presumed to have its common-law meaning." Evans v. United States, 504 U.S. 255, 259, 119 L. Ed. 2d 57, 112 S. Ct. 1881 (1992); United States v. Aguilar, U.S. , , 115 S. Ct. 2357, 2370, 132 L. Ed. 2d 520 (1995) (Scalia, J., dissenting) (stating that "the term 'corruptly' in criminal laws has a long-standing and well-accepted meaning"). The term "corruptly" adds the element of corrupt intent to the crime of bribery. See generally id. at 2370 (endorsing the proposition that "an act is done corruptly if it's done voluntarily and intentionally to bring about either an unlawful result or a lawful result by some unlawful method, with a hope or expectation of either financial gain or other benefit to oneself or a benefit of another [**22] person"); H.R. 748, 87th Cong., 1st Sess. 18 (1961) (reporting section 201 federal bribery statute) (stating that "the word 'corruptly' which is also used in obstruction of justice [*574] statutes (18 U.S.C. §§ 1503-1505) means with wrongful or dishonest intent").

<sup>3</sup> The federal bribery and gratuity statute, 18 U.S.C. § 201, does not, by its terms, apply to local officials such as those involved in the instant case, 18 U.S.C. § 201(a)(1), although cases have held the statute applicable where local officials administer federally funded programs. See United States v. Velazquez, 847 F.2d 140, 142 (4th Cir. 1988) (concluding deputy sheriff was a "public official" with respect to federal bribery statute, where county jail was under contract with federal government to supervise federal prisoners); United States v. Gallegos, 510 F. Supp. 1112, 1114 (D.N.M. 1981) (ruling state government employee who worked under direct supervision of federal official in administration of federal grant program was "public official" for purpose of federal bribery statute). But see United States v. Del Toro, 513 F.2d 656, 662 (2d Cir.) (concluding city administrator who was city employee was not a public official even though he administered model cities program, for which the federal government provided 100% funding), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 826, 96 S. Ct. 41, 46 L. Ed. 2d 42 (1975). No allegation has been made that the defendants' bribery/extortion scheme was in connection with a federal contract or federal funding.

We agree that HN11 the term "corruptly" indicates a specific corrupt intent that differs from the Model Penal Code commentary's condemnation of an involuntary payor's conduct as manifesting "a degree of cooperation in the undermining of governmental integrity that is inconsistent with the complete exoneration from criminal liability." Model Penal Code § 240.1 commentary at 41. HN12 The mens rea implicated by "corruptly" concerns the intention to obtain ill-gotten gain; by contrast, the Model Penal Code converts the lack of willpower to stand up to abusive authority into a degree of culpability. See Lindgren, supra at 824 n.41 (stating that "the Model Penal Code has taken the questionable approach of making it bribery to capitulate to an extortion threat"). Admittedly, to delve into questions of what is done "corruptly" is more difficult than to apply the Model Penal Code's standard. But as one commentator has noted, "the best \*\*23 that can be said for the [Model Penal Code's bribery] provision is that it makes difficult questions of crime definition easy, but this clarity is bought at the cost of ignoring the settled law of centuries and current notions of right and wrong." Id.

As a result, we must apply the common law standard of specific corrupt intent, as included in the Rhode Island statute, to the plaintiffs' story. The plaintiffs claim that they paid only to avoid adverse consequences, that their properties met the standards required for the approvals in question, and that they received nothing beyond fair treatment from payees. Examining these claims with an eye towards detecting corrupt intent, we think that a set of facts could be found from which it could be reasonably inferred that the plaintiffs did not make payments voluntarily to bring about an unlawful result, with the hope of a gain for themselves, but rather that they were the innocent victims of a criminal enterprise. As a result, we conclude that HN13 Rhode Island's bribery statute does not foreclose a conclusion that they are "innocent parties."

Citing United States v. Mariano, 983 F.2d 1150 \(1st Cir. 1993\) and [United States \[\\[\\*24\\]\]\(#\) v. Hathaway, 534 F.2d 386 \(1st Cir. 1976\)](#), the defendants assert that we have previously held that "bribery and extortion are not mutually exclusive concepts," Mariano, 983 F.2d at 1159; Hathaway, 534 F.2d at 395. However, we think these cases unavailing for three reasons. First, neither deals with Rhode Island's bribery statute. Second, even if these cases compelled us to conclude that bribery and coercive extortion are not mutually exclusive concepts under the Rhodes Island statute, in the instant case a genuine issue of material fact remains as to the plaintiffs' intent in making payments, based on a reading of the pleadings in the best light for the plaintiffs.

Third, and finally, Mariano, at least, involved two defendants who pled guilty to "corruptly giving . . . something of value" to local government officials "with intent to influence or reward" those officials, where the officials were part of a governmental unit that received substantial federal subsidies, in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 666\(a\)\(2\). Mariano, 983 F.2d at 1153. On appeal, both defendants challenged the district court's application of the sentencing guideline relating to bribery rather than \*\*25 the guideline appropriate to providing an illegal gratuity. Id. at 1159. They argued that "they were victims, not perpetrators, of an extortionate scheme, and that they received nothing extra in return." Id. Applying the clearly erroneous standard of review, we concluded that the "guideline analogy chosen by the district court was well within its purview," noting that "when there are two plausible views of the record, the sentencing court's adoption of one such view cannot be clearly erroneous." Id. at 1160; see United States v. St. Cyr, 977 F.2d 698, 706 \(1st Cir. 1992\). In particular, we noted that the Mariano defendants could not "expect the courts to swallow their tale uncritically." Mariano, 983 F.2d at 1160.

In this case, the district court improperly dismissed the plaintiffs' case before it had a chance to swallow, let alone digest, their story. At this stage of the game, since one plausible view is that the plaintiffs were in fact victims of coercive extortion, and since they have not pled guilty to a crime that involves "corrupt intent" as an element as we [\[\*575\]](#) noted of the defendants in Mariano, 983 F.2d at 1159, we conclude that the plaintiffs \*\*26 in the instant case may press on with their claim. As a result, we reverse the district court's dismissal of the plaintiffs' federal RICO claims. Accordingly, we also reverse the district court's dismissal for lack of supplemental jurisdiction, see 28 U.S.C. § 1367, of state RICO claims pursuant to R.I. Gen. Laws §§ 7-15-2, 7-15-3 and 9-1-2.<sup>4</sup> We remand both federal and state RICO claims for further proceedings in accordance with this opinion.

---

<sup>4</sup> Similar to federal RICO, R.I. Gen. Laws § 7-15-2\(c\) provides that [**27] Because we conclude that even if RICO's civil remedies were limited to innocent parties, we would apply Rhode Island law to the question of the plaintiffs' innocence, and Rhode Island law compels a reversal of the district court's dismissal of their claims, we leave for a later time the question of whether those who are not innocent parties can be denied civil RICO remedies.

3. The Civil Rights Claim

The district court also dismissed the plaintiffs' claim that the individual defendants and the Town acted under color of state authority and municipal practice, and deprived the plaintiffs of property and rights in violation of 42 U.S.C. § 1983.

Section 1983 HN15 [+] authorizes actions for equitable relief and/or damages against "every person who under color of any . . . custom or usage, of any State or Territory . . . subjects or causes to be subjected any citizen of the United States or other person . . . to the deprivation of any rights, privileges, or immunities secured by the Constitution and laws." 42 U.S.C. § 1983. Furthermore, those who commit actionable wrongs under that section "shall be liable to the party injured in an action at law, suit in equity, or other proper proceeding" [**28] in redress." Id. In construing the terms "custom" and "usage," the Supreme Court has instructed that Congress included customs and usages in [section 1983] because of the persistent and widespread discriminatory practices of state officials . . . . Although not authorized by written law, such practices of state officials could well be so permanent and well settled as to constitute a "custom or usage" with the force of law.

Monell v. Department of Social Servs. of New York, 436 U.S. 658, 691, 56 L. Ed. 2d 611, 98 S. Ct. 2018 \(1978\) (quoting Adickes v. S.H. Kress & Co., 398 U.S. 144, 167-68, 26 L. Ed. 2d 142, 90 S. Ct. 1598 \(1970\)); see Bordanaro v. McLeod, 871 F.2d 1151, 1156 \(1st Cir. 1989\).

HN16 [+] Courts have set forth two requirements for maintaining a section 1983 action grounded upon an unconstitutional municipal custom. First, the custom or practice "must be attributable to the municipality." Id. at 1156. That is, "it must be so well-settled and widespread that the policymaking officials of the municipality can be said to have either actual or constructive knowledge of it yet did nothing to end the practice." Id. Second, "the custom must have been the cause of and the moving force behind the deprivation" [**29] of constitutional rights." Id.

The district court concluded that in the facts alleged, "there [was] no evidence that the Town [] had any policy endorsing or advocating extortion and the acceptance of bribes by town officials." Roma Constr. Co., 906 F. Supp. at 83. Furthermore, the district court went on to state that, even assuming "that there was a de facto municipal policy of extortion promulgated by a Russo and perpetrated by the other named defendants," the plaintiffs could not succeed in their section 1983 claim because the alleged policy was not the cause of any constitutional harm. Id. Noting that there must be a "direct causal" [*576] link between a municipal policy or custom and the alleged constitutional violation to find section 1983 liability, id. at 84 (quoting City of Canton v. Harris, 489 U.S. 378, 385, 103 L. Ed. 2d 412, 109 S. Ct. 1197 \(1989\)), the district court concluded that "in this case, the 'causal link' or 'moving force' behind any perceived constitutional violations is the plaintiffs' . . . continual, voluntary payment of bribes to the defendants," id.

For the reasons we have stated in our discussion regarding bribery and coercive extortion, we think a finder of fact [**30] could reasonably infer that the plaintiffs' payments were made pursuant to coercive extortion, and thus it shall be unlawful for any person employed by or associated with any enterprise to conduct or participate in the conduct of the affairs of the enterprise through racketeering activity or collection of an unlawful debt.

Rhode Island law also uses broad standing language that resembles that of 18 U.S.C. § 1964\(c\) in its provision for civil liability for racketeering offenses. See R.I. Gen. Laws § 9-1-2 (stating that HN14 [+] "whenever any person shall suffer any injury . . . by reason of the commission of any crime or offense . . . he [or she] may recover his [or her] damages for such injury in a civil action against the offender") (emphasis added).

did not necessarily constitute "voluntary payment of bribes" with corrupt intent. At this stage, we must resolve reasonable inferences in favor of the plaintiffs. Thus, we conclude that the plaintiffs could show a direct causal link between the defendants' coercive extortion and the plaintiffs' losses.

As a result, we turn to the question of whether coercive extortion, if found, could be attributed to some de facto municipal policy. HN17<sup>1</sup> "An unconstitutional policy or custom may be inferred from a single decision or act . . . [but] the isolated action must be taken by a municipal official with 'final policy-making authority' in the relevant area of the city's business." Rodriguez v. Furtado, 771 F. Supp. 1245, 1257 (D. Mass. 1991) (citations omitted). However, "the fact that a particular official -- even a policymaking official -- has discretion in the exercise of a particular function does not, without more, give rise to municipal liability based on an exercise of that discretion." Pembaur v. City of Cincinnati, 475 U.S. 469, 481-82, 89 L. Ed. 2d 452, 106 S. Ct. 1292 (1986) (Brennan, J., plurality [\*\*31] opinion).

In their pleadings, the plaintiffs have alleged that a Russo as Mayor, Benjamin Zanni as a town councilman, and others operated a de facto government which controlled the Town for more than a decade, routinely engaging in bribery, extortion, corruption and other unlawful activities. While a showing that a Russo acted illegally in the exercise of his discretion as Mayor might not by itself give rise to municipal liability, we think that under these pleadings, the plaintiffs could indeed prove a set of facts from which a trier of fact could infer an unconstitutional policy or custom with respect to the Town's government. For example, a fact finder could conclude that extortion of outsiders, businessmen, or developers, if proven, was "the way things are done and have been done" in the Town. See Kibbe v. City of Springfield, 777 F.2d 801, 806 (1st Cir. 1985) (quoting Grandstaff v. City of Borger, 767 F.2d 161, 171 (5th Cir. 1985), cert. denied, 480 U.S. 916, 94 L. Ed. 2d 686, 107 S. Ct. 1369 (1987)), cert. granted, 475 U.S. 1064, 106 S. Ct. 1374, 89 L. Ed. 2d 600 (1986), cert. dismissed, 480 U.S. 257, 107 S. Ct. 1114, 94 L. Ed. 2d 293 \(1987\). As a result, we reverse the district court's dismissal of the plaintiffs' section 1983 claim on the pleadings, [\*\*32] and we remand for further proceedings on their claim.

B. Blakey's Pro Hac Vice Admission

The plaintiffs also appeal the district court's denial of admission pro hac vice of their attorney, G. Robert Blakey ("Blakey"). On May 15, 1995, the plaintiffs moved for Blakey's admission pro hac vice. The district court denied the motion on June 2, 1995. On June 12, 1995, the plaintiffs moved for reconsideration of the court's order; the district court denied the motion for reconsideration on September 25, 1995.

The district court articulated two grounds for denying Blakey's pro hac vice admission. First, the district court noted that a previous motion by the plaintiffs seeking the admission pro hac vice of another of their attorneys, Spaloss, had already been granted. Second, the district court expressed concern about the amount of attorney's fees being generated by the plaintiffs.<sup>5</sup>

[\*\*33] The Supreme Court has recognized that "in many District Courts, the decision on whether to grant pro hac vice status to an out-of-state attorney is purely discretionary." [577] Frazier v. Heebe, 482 U.S. 641, 651 n.13, 96 L. Ed. 2d 557, 107 S. Ct. 2607 (1987). However, the plaintiffs argue that the U.S. District Court for the District of Rhode Island is not one of those courts. HN18<sup>1</sup> Local Rule 5(c) of the District of Rhode Island provides in pertinent part that any attorney who is a member in good standing of the bar of the United States Supreme Court, of any other United States District court, or of the highest court of any state, shall on motion be permitted to appear once in a calendar year in a case or group of related cases in association with a member of the bar of this court who is actively engaged in the practice of law within the State of Rhode Island . . . .

D.R.I. R. 5(c) (emphasis added). The plaintiffs argue that in contrast to the Local Rules of the other districts in this circuit, Rhode Island's rule does not by its terms provide for the court's discretion. Compare D.R.I. R. 5(c) ("shall on motion be permitted to appear") with D. Me. R. 3(d)(1) ("may at the discretion of [**34] the Court . . . be permitted to practice"); D. Mass. R. 6(b) ("may appear and practice in this court in a particular case by leave granted in the discretion of the court"); D.N.H. R. 5(b) ("may at the discretion of the court"); D.P.R. R. 204.2 ("may be permitted"). The plaintiffs assert that the District of Rhode Island has promulgated a rule under whose clear language pro hac vice admission is not discretionary. As a result, the plaintiffs claim, the district court erred as a matter of law in concluding that it had discretion to deny Blakey's pro hac vice admission, or alternatively, the district court abused whatever discretion it had.

---

<sup>5</sup> A successful civil RICO plaintiff may collect reasonable attorney's fees in addition to treble damages. 18 U.S.C. § 1964\(c\).

We do not consider the issue of whether this pro hac vice rule, which may be nondiscretionary, nonetheless leaves some discretion to deny admission. Even assuming that discretion existed, the district court's denial of such admission to Blakey was an abuse of that discretion. The district court's two articulated grounds simply cannot support its action. The district court stated that "we already have one pro hac vice . . . [and we're] not going to take more than one on a case." We may take judicial notice of the fact that the District [**35] of Rhode Island has permitted multiple pro hac vice admissions in proceedings that were contemporaneous with the instant case. See Cohen v. Brown Univ., 879 F. Supp. 185 (D.R.I. 1995). Furthermore, regarding expense, in the instant case defendants were represented by more than ten attorneys, the plaintiffs by two; additionally, if the court was concerned about excessive attorney fees, it could have addressed that matter later, if and when the plaintiffs submitted their attorney fee application.

While it may be that Blakey has no right to pro hac vice admission, see Leis v. Flynt, 439 U.S. 438, 452, 58 L. Ed. 2d 717, 99 S. Ct. 698 (1979) (holding that an attorney does not have a federal right to state court pro hac vice admission), the rights of the plaintiffs are another matter. Particularly here, where HN19<sup>6</sup> the plaintiffs identified specific, logical reasons for their request,<sup>6</sup> we conclude that the district court's decision, based on criteria that are not set forth in writing, that do not reasonably support its action, and that do not appear to respond to any general policy of the District of Rhode Island, amounts to an abuse of discretion.

[**36] CONCLUSION

As a result of the foregoing, the judgment of the district court is reversed. Appellants are allowed costs.

Concur by: LYNCH

Concur

---

LYNCH, Circuit Judge, concurring. At issue is whether the plaintiffs have stated a claim under Rule 12(b)(6), Fed. R. Civ. P.<sup>7</sup> The plaintiffs' complaint cannot be dismissed "if relief could be granted under any set of facts that could be proved consistent with the allegations." NOW v. Scheidler, 510 U.S. 249, 114 S. Ct. 798, 803, 127 L. Ed. 2d 99 (1994). The district court dismissed the claims because it imported into RICO a [*578] standing requirement that the plaintiffs must be "innocent victims." See Roma Constr. Co. v. a Russo, 906 F. Supp. 78, 81 (D.R.I. 1995). The review by this court of the dismissal is de novo. Aulson v. Blanchard, 83 F.3d 1, 3 (1st Cir. 1996). This ruling, one of law, was, I believe, in error. The question is, concededly, one of first impression here. Because I analyze the matter differently than does the majority, I write separately.

[**37] The question of who has standing to bring actions under RICO is a matter of federal law. The pertinent provision of RICO provides:

---

<sup>6</sup> See, e.g., Kevin Roddy, RICO in Business and Commercial Litigation (1993) (describing Blakey as "the acknowledged author" of the federal RICO statute and of "excellent" commentaries on RICO application).

<sup>7</sup> At oral argument, plaintiffs stipulated that their RICO claim is not asserted against the town, but only against the individual defendants.

Any person injured in his business or property by reason of a violation of section 1962 of this chapter may sue therefor in any appropriate United States district court and shall recover threefold the damages he sustains and the cost of the suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee.

18 U.S.C. § 1964(c). There is no qualification on the phrase "any person injured in his business or property" limiting the phrase to "innocent" persons. RICO defines a "person" as "any individual or entity capable of holding a legal or beneficial interest in property." 18 U.S.C. § 1961(3). On the language of the statute, plaintiffs meet this definition.<sup>8</sup>

In general, the intent of Congress manifested in the text of **38 the statute governs the issue of standing:

In determining the scope of a statute, we look first to its language. If the statutory language is unambiguous, in the absence of "a clearly expressed legislative intent to the contrary, that language must ordinarily be regarded as conclusive."

United States v. Turkette, 452 U.S. 576, 580, 69 L. Ed. 2d 246, 101 S. Ct. 2524 (1981) (quoting Consumer Product Safety Comm'n v. GTE Sylvania, Inc., 447 U.S. 102, 108, 64 L. Ed. 2d 766, 100 S. Ct. 2051 (1980)). The language of RICO should thus be the primary guide to determining Congressional intent. See Sedima S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., 473 U.S. 479, 495 n.13, 87 L. Ed. 2d 346, 105 S. Ct. 3275 (1985). Indeed, the Supreme Court has consistently adhered to the language of RICO in interpreting its meaning and rejected surplus requirements not found in the statutory language. See, e.g. Scheidler, 114 S. Ct. at 806 (holding that RICO does not require an economic motive behind the racketeering activity); Reves v. Ernst & Young, 507 U.S. 170, 177-79, 122 L. Ed. 2d 525, 113 S. Ct. 1163 (1993) (looking to statutory language to determine the scope of RICO liability for "conduct" or "participation"); Sedima, 473 U.S. at 488-92 (holding that private actions under RICO do not require a criminal **39 conviction on the underlying predicate offenses); Turkette, 452 U.S. at 580-87 (holding that the term "enterprise" as used in RICO is not restricted to criminal enterprises); cf. Holmes v. Securities Investor Protection Corp., 503 U.S. 258, 265-69, 117 L. Ed. 2d 532, 112 S. Ct. 1311 (1992) (construing the word "injury" to require proximate cause by reference to statutory history and judicial interpretation of same language in Clayton Act).

Despite the lack of any "innocent victim" requirement in the statutory language, the district court relied upon an isolated statement in the legislative history to fashion a requirement that only "innocent victims" be allowed to sue. The district court's reliance on a snippet of legislative history, lifted out of context,<sup>9</sup> to create an absolute standing <sup>8</sup> Of course, other questions about the parameters of RICO standing are not raised by this case, which concerns only whether there is an "innocent victim" requirement.

<sup>9</sup> The court relies on a statement by Representative Steiger on October 7, 1970, that "it is the intent of this body, I am certain, to see that innocent parties who are the victims of organized crime have a right to obtain proper redress." 116 Cong. Rec. 35,346-47 (1970). That statement was made during debate over a proposed amendment, ultimately withdrawn, which would have authorized private injunctive relief. See Abrams, The Law of Civil RICO § 1.4, at 30 (1991). The district court's characterization of the remarks as coming from "the sponsor of the provision that eventually created a private civil remedy" could cause a misapprehension. In fact, RICO originated in a bill filed in the Senate, S. 30. By October 7, 1970, the Judiciary Committee had already reported out that bill, which included "the RICO provision ultimately enacted as section 1964(c), which created a treble damage remedy." Id. at 30. The debate in which Representative Steiger made the quoted remarks was over private injunctive relief.

Further, Representative Steiger referred, in the very same remarks relied upon by the district court, to victims of "organized crime." Yet it was clear to both the House and the Senate that the reach of civil RICO extended well beyond organized crime. "Congress knew what it was doing when it adopted commodious language capable of extending beyond organized crime." H.J. Inc. v. Northwestern Bell Tel. Co., 492 U.S. 229, 246, 106 L. Ed. 2d 195, 109 S. Ct. 2893 (1989); see also Sedima, 473 U.S. at 499 ("Congress wanted to reach both 'legitimate' and 'illegitimate' enterprises. The former enjoy neither an inherent incapacity for criminal activity nor immunity from its consequences. The fact that § 1964(c) is used against respected businesses allegedly engaged in a pattern of specifically identified criminal conduct is hardly a sufficient reason for assuming that the provision is being misconstrued." (citation omitted)); Abrams, supra, § 1.1, at 5 ("RICO's name might suggest that the private cause of action reaches primarily racketeers and other organized crime figures. Developments since RICO's 1970 enactment, however, have laid firmly to rest any suggestion of limited reach.").

[*579] bar to anyone not "innocent," was inappropriate. "Even if we were to read this statement to say what [defendants] say[] it means, it would not amount to more than background noise drowned out by the statutory language." Holmes, 503 U.S. at 269 n.15. This selection from the legislative history cannot overcome the plain text of RICO, which is unambiguous. It represents "a rather thin reed upon which to base a requirement [*40] . . . neither expressed nor . . . fairly implied in the operative sections of [RICO]." Scheidler, 510 U.S. at 260. Even were there occasion to consider the legislative history relied upon by the district court, it says only that the statute will protect innocent victims, not that the statute will deny standing to those who are not innocent victims. See Turkette, 452 U.S. at 591 (noting that "negative inferences" need not be drawn from positive statements in legislative history).

[**41] The Supreme Court has emphasized the broad reach of RICO's language: "If the defendant engages in a pattern of racketeering activity . . . and the racketeering activities injure the plaintiff in his business or property, the plaintiff has a claim under § 1964(c). There is no room in the statutory language for an additional . . . requirement." Sedima, 473 U.S. at 495. There is nothing in the language of RICO which suggests that Congress intended to deny standing to plaintiffs who are alleged to have committed bribery or paid extortion, whether under coercion or not.

Standing involves three analytically distinct requirements: injury-in-fact, a causal connection between the injury and the conduct complained of, and whether the wrong may be redressed. Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560-61, 119 L. Ed. 2d 351, 112 S. Ct. 2130 \(1992\). All three elements of the standing inquiry are satisfied on the pleadings here. Plaintiffs have adequately alleged injury-in-fact (financial loss), a causal connection (defendants' corruptly demanding payments), and that the injury will be redressed by a favorable decision (availability of RICO damages). See Sedima, 473 U.S. at 496 (noting that RICO plaintiff [*42] has standing only if "he has been injured in his business or property by the conduct constituting the violation"); Libertad v. Welch, 53 F.3d 428, 436 \(1st Cir. 1995\). This is not a case where the plaintiffs attempt to assert the rights of others. Cf. Carter v. Berger, 777 F.2d 1173 \(7th Cir. 1985\) (county, not individual taxpayers, may sue under RICO for bribery scheme resulting in underpayment of taxes). Accordingly, I would end the standing analysis there.

In considering whether there is an "innocent victim" standing requirement, I doubt that Congress intended for the federal courts to refer to and incorporate state law.<sup>10</sup> [*43] The [*580] defendants argue that the innocent victim requirement is to be found in the distinction, found in some state laws, between bribery and coercive extortion. They buttress their argument by reference to provisions of the Model Penal Code. The matter of whether the activities in which these plaintiffs engaged fit within the category of bribery or of coercive extortion is, in my view, not relevant to the issue of standing.<sup>11</sup>

Although RICO references state law in its definition of "racketeering activity,"<sup>12</sup> it makes no substantive distinction between "bribery" and "extortion." RICO defines "racketeering activity" in 18 U.S.C. § 1961\(1\)\(A\) to mean, inter alia, "any act or threat involving . . . bribery [or] extortion . . . which is chargeable under State law and punishable by <sup>10</sup> Caselaw holding that minority shareholders suffer no injury to their property apart from the injury the corporation suffers and so have no standing to sue under RICO provides no comfort to defendants. Such caselaw does not support the principle that reference should be made to state law to determine the contours of any "innocent victim" defense. It is true that some decisions refer to state law to define property interests of shareholders as opposed to corporations to determine whether the former may bring a RICO action. See, e.g., Leach v. FDIC, 860 F.2d 1266 \(5th Cir. 1988\), cert. denied, 491 U.S. 905, 109 S. Ct. 3186, 105 L. Ed. 2d 695 \(1989\). Other caselaw, including that of this circuit, see Roeder v. Alpha Indus., 814 F.2d 22, 29-30 \(1st Cir. 1987\), refers to general principles of corporate law to hold that a shareholder may not sue under RICO to vindicate a duty owed to the corporation. See Rand v. Anaconda Ericsson, Inc., 794 F.2d 843, 849 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 987, 93 L. Ed. 2d 582, 107 S. Ct. 579 \(1986\); Warren v. Manufacturers Nat'l Bank of Detroit, 759 F.2d 542, 545 \(6th Cir. 1985\); Abrams, supra, § 3.3.6, at 147-52. In any event, the issue of whether state law should be referenced in defining the term "property" is simply not present in this case.

<sup>11</sup> If it were, then I would agree that on the facts pleaded it is impossible to draw the conclusion that this case involves exclusively bribery.

<sup>12</sup> This reference to state law is in the context of RICO's definition of predicate offenses. From this, defendants would infer a Congressional desire -- expressed nowhere in the statute -- to reference state law with respect to affirmative defenses as well.

imprisonment for more than one year." Thus, the federal statute recognizes, without distinction, acts "involving" either bribery or extortion as predicate offenses for purposes of RICO. Further, even in defining such a predicate offense, state law plays a limited role:

The labels placed on a state statute do not determine whether that statute proscribes bribery for purposes of the RICO statute. Congress intended for "bribery" to be defined generically when it included bribery as a predicate act. H.R. Rep. No. 1549, 91st Cong., 2d Sess. (1970), reprinted in 1970 U.S. Code Cong. & Admin. [**44] News 4007, 4032 ("State offenses are included by generic designation."). Thus, any statute that proscribes conduct which could be generically defined as bribery can be the basis for a predicate act.

United States v. Garner, 837 F.2d 1404, 1418 \(7th Cir. 1987\), cert. denied, 486 U.S. 1035, 100 L. Ed. 2d 608, 108 S. Ct. 2022 (1988); accord United States v. Forsythe, 560 F.2d 1127, 1137 \(3d Cir. 1977\). Here, the plaintiffs' complaint also alleges, in addition to the state law predicate offense, a predicate federal offense, violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1951 (wrongful use of official authority to obstruct, delay, and effect commercial activity in interstate commerce). That statute also does not draw the distinction defendants urge.

Nonetheless, standing issues aside, [**45] the question remains whether there is some form of requirement in RICO, which may be tested on a motion to dismiss, that plaintiffs be innocent victims. At least two other possibilities emerge: that such a requirement is inherent in the cause of action or that it is an affirmative defense.

To the extent that the existence of a cause of action is a matter analytically distinct from the issue of standing, see Libertad, 53 F.3d at 438 n.5, a cause of action has been stated here.<sup>13</sup> There is nothing in the language of RICO which suggests that only innocent plaintiffs have a cause of action. See Scheidler, 114 S. Ct. at 806 ("The statutory language is unambiguous and [the] legislative history [evidences] no such 'clearly expressed legislative intent to the contrary' that would warrant a different construction." (citation omitted)). Under the proximate causation test of Holmes, 503 U.S. at 268, there is a cause of action stated.<sup>14</sup> The damages alleged here on the [*581] pleadings are neither remote nor speculative. These plaintiffs have alleged direct injury to their property, which Holmes requires. Holmes, 503 U.S. at 265-69; see also id. at 276-86 (O'Connor, J., [**46] concurring) (analyzing the causation issue as part of the standing issue). Again, viewing this as a matter of whether there is an "innocent victim" requirement inherent stating a cause of action, I do not believe state law is pertinent.

[**47] The district court opinion also suggests that the "innocent victim" argument may be available as an affirmative defense. If so, there are a range of possibilities for the contours of the defense. The range includes a sort of absolute defense if the plaintiff has done anything wrong, which is what the district court thought and to which it applied the label of an in pari delicto defense.<sup>15</sup> [**48] At the other end of the range is the position that the

<sup>13</sup> But cf. Sunstein, Standing and the Privatization of Public Law, 88. Colum. L. Rev. 1432, 1433 (1988) (arguing that "for purposes of standing, the principal question should be whether Congress has created a cause of action").

<sup>14</sup> It may also be, as the district court suggested, see Roma, 906 F. Supp. at 82 n.1, that the plaintiffs' relative culpability may be considered in deciding, under Holmes, the issue of proximate causation based on the evidence presented. See, e.g., Perma Life Mufflers, Inc. v. International Parts Corp., 392 U.S. 134, 142-47, 20 L. Ed. 2d 982, 88 S. Ct. 1981 (White, J., concurring) (treating relative culpability, in antitrust context, as part of causation analysis), overruled on other grounds by Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 \(1984\). The issue of proximate cause may not be decided at the pleading stage given the allegations in this complaint.

Relative culpability may also be relevant to the measure of damages. The opinions in Perma Life posit that the benefits received by a plaintiff from its participation in wrongdoing "can of course be taken into consideration in computing damages." Perma Life, 392 U.S. at 140; see also II Areeda & Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law P365c3, at 248 (1995 rev. ed.).

<sup>15</sup> This common law defense derives from the Latin in pari delicto potior est conditio defendantis: "In a case of equal or mutual fault . . . the condition of the [defending] party is the better one." Black's Law Dictionary 791 (6th ed. 1990). The in pari delicto relative guilt of the plaintiff is irrelevant. That, I believe, cannot be so,<sup>16</sup> and even the plaintiffs do not argue that position. While some affirmative defenses, such as the statute of limitations, may on occasion be decided on the pleadings, the assertion of an affirmative defense here would not afford a basis to dismiss the complaint under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\). Under any of the plausible articulations of such a defense, the inferences to be drawn from the facts pled here do not permit dismissal.

I would reject the proposition, urged by defendants, that an absolute in pari delicto defense is embedded in RICO. In construing the language of RICO, the Supreme Court has looked to precedent under the Clayton Act, the statute upon which RICO was modeled. See Holmes, 503 U.S. at 268 ("We may fairly credit the 91st Congress, which enacted RICO, with knowing the interpretation federal courts had given the words earlier Congresses had used first in [the Sherman Act], and later in the Clayton Act's § 4. It used the same words, and we can only assume that it intended them to have the same meaning that courts had already given them." (citations omitted)). The Supreme Court, in Perma Life Mufflers, Inc. v. International Parts Corp., 392 U.S. 134, 138-40, 20 L. Ed. 2d 982, 88 S. Ct. 1981 \(1968\), overruled on other grounds by Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 \(1984\), explicitly rejected the existence of an in pari delicto defense under the Clayton Act. In Pinter v. Dahl, 486 U.S. 622, 100 L. Ed. 2d 658, 108 S. Ct. 2063 \(1988\), the Court reaffirmed that [**49] in its contemporary "broadened" construction, precisely the construction contemplated by the district court here, the in pari delicto defense "is not appropriate in litigation arising under federal regulatory statutes." Id. at 632; see Sullivan v. National Football League, 34 F.3d 1091, 1107-09 \(1st Cir. 1994\), cert. denied, 131 L. Ed. 2d 133, 115 S. Ct. 1252 (1995). For the same reasons, an "unclean hands" defense would seem to be unavailable, as it is not a defense to an antitrust treble damage action. See Kiefer-Stewart Co. v. Seagram & Sons, 340 U.S. 211, 214, 95 L. Ed. 219, 71 S. Ct. 259 \(1951\), overruled on other [*582] grounds by Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 \(1984\); see also Simpson v. Union Oil Co., 377 U.S. 13, 12 L. Ed. 2d 98, 84 S. Ct. 1051 \(1964\).

That there is no in pari delicto defense does not mean there is no defense at all in which the relative guilt of the plaintiffs may be weighed. It is far more likely that there is in RICO an "equal involvement" defense similar to the "equal involvement" defense recognized under the Clayton Act in Perma Life.<sup>17</sup> Recognition of such a defense, patterned on the Clayton Act defense, was extended to securities actions in Bateman Eichler, Hill [**50] Richards, Inc. v. Berner, 472 U.S. 299, 306-11, 86 L. Ed. 2d 215, 105 S. Ct. 2622 \(1985\). The equal involvement defense is more demanding of those asserting it than the in pari delicto defense and only bars the claims of a plaintiff who "truly bore at least substantially equal responsibility [as the defendant] for the violation" of the federal law at issue. Id. at 308.

[**51] This circuit has also recognized an equal involvement defense in antitrust actions. Sullivan, 34 F.3d at 1107 ("A plaintiff's 'complete, voluntary, and substantially equal participation' in an illegal practice under the antitrust laws defense, though "in its classic formulation . . . narrowly limited to situations where the plaintiff truly bore at least substantially equal responsibility for his injury . . ." is now generally given "a broad application to bar actions where plaintiffs simply have been involved generally in 'the same sort of wrongdoing' as defendants." Bateman Eichler, Hill Richards, Inc. v. Berner, 472 U.S. 299, 306-07, 86 L. Ed. 2d 215, 105 S. Ct. 2622 \(1985\) (quoting Perma Life, 392 U.S. at 138).

<sup>16</sup> See, e.g., discussion in footnote 14 supra.

<sup>17</sup> In Perma Life, five concurring Justices, in four separate opinions, recognized the existence of the equal involvement defense. Justice White wrote that he "would deny recovery where plaintiff and defendant bear substantially equal responsibility for [the] injury resulting to one of them . . ." 392 U.S. at 146 (White, J., concurring). According to Justice Fortas, "if the fault of the parties is reasonably within the same scale -- if the 'delictum' is approximately 'par' -- then the doctrine should bar recovery." 392 U.S. at 147 (Fortas, J., concurring). Justice Marshall wrote that he "would hold that where a defendant in a private antitrust suit can show that the plaintiff actively participated in the formation and implementation of an illegal scheme, and is substantially equally at fault, the plaintiff should be barred from imposing liability on the defendant." 392 U.S. at 149 (Marshall, J., concurring). Justice Harlan, in an opinion joined by Justice Stewart, indicated that the defense should be allowed in cases where "the plaintiffs were substantially as much responsible . . . as the defendants." 392 U.S. at 156 (Harlan, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part).

precludes recovery for that antitrust violation." (quoting CVD, Inc. v. Raytheon Co., 769 F.2d 842, 856 \(1st Cir. 1985\), cert. denied, 475 U.S. 1016, 89 L. Ed. 2d 312, 106 S. Ct. 1198 (1986))).

Testing the allegations of the complaint against the Supreme Court's articulation of the equal involvement defense, this complaint survives a Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion. Under that defense:

