(Pls.' Mem. at 4-5; Fegan Decl. ¶¶ 60-61.) The list includes five McCormick [30] brand pepper products and twenty-four McCormick-supplied, private-label brand pepper products. Each product is identified by a unique UPC code. 1. Consumer Protection Claims

For their consumer protection claims, plaintiffs seek to certify a multi-state class, covering twenty jurisdiction[40] or, in the alternative, four single-state classes.

a. Multi-State Consumer Protection Class

The proposed Consumer Protection Multi-State Class would consist of:

> [*220] All persons residing in Arkansas, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, District of Columbia, Florida, Idaho, Illinois, Iowa, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, New Hampshire, New Jersey,

[40] Plaintiffs' motion is narrower than the complaint, which alleges violations of the consumer protection statutes in 24 states and the District of Columbia.

> New Mexico, New York, North Dakota, or Washington who purchased Slack-Filled Black Pepper Products for their personal or household uses.

(Class Cert. Mot. at 1-2.) This class would bring claims against both McCormick and Wal-Mart under the consumer protection statutes of the 20 jurisdictions where class members reside. The proposed [31] class representatives are the nine named plaintiffs who are from the states included in this grouping: Esparza and Marsh (California); Fernandez (Connecticut); Jones (District of Columbia); Pellitteri (Florida); Bittle, Liberov, Theis, and Vladimirskiy (Illinois); and Grindel (Missouri). Because Liberov is the only proposed class representative who purchased Wal-Mart's private label brand pepper, he is the proposed class representative for the claims against Wal-Mart.

b. Single-State Consumer Protection Classes

As an alternative to one multi-state class, plaintiffs initially sought certification of six single-state consumer protection classes — California, Connecticut, the District of Columbia, Florida, Illinois, and Missouri. The proposed class representatives were the named plaintiffs from each state. Because Liberov is from Illinois, only the Illinois consumer protection class includes claims against Wal-Mart. However, plaintiffs subsequently narrowed their request, withdrawing their request to certify single-state classes for Connecticut and the District of Columbia and no longer seeking to have two of the named plaintiffs from Illinois (Theis and Bittle) serve as class representatives. [32] (See Pls.' Supp. Br. at 1, 10, Oct. 3, 2018, ECF No. 203.) Accordingly, plaintiffs' current request is to certify four single-state consumer protection classes with six proposed class representatives: Esparza and Marsh (California); Pellitteri (Florida); Liberov and Vladimirskiy (Illinois); and Grindel (Missouri).

2. Unjust Enrichment Claims

For their unjust enrichment claims, plaintiffs seek to certify two multi-state classes, covering 29 jurisdictions[41] or, in the alternative, seven single-state classes.

a. Multi-State Unjust Enrichment Classes

Plaintiffs' two proposed multi-state unjust enrichment classes are designed to account for two different definitions of unjust enrichment.

The Unjust Enrichment (Restatement) Multi-State Class ("Restatement Class") would include jurisdictions that follow the Restatement (First) of Restitution's definition of unjust enrichment. This class would consist of:

> All persons residing in Arkansas, Colorado, Connecticut, District of Columbia, Hawaii, Illinois, Iowa, [], New York, Oklahoma, or West Virginia who purchased Slack-Filled Black Pepper Products for their personal or household use.

(Class Cert. Mot. at 2.) It would bring claims against McCormick and [33] Wal-Mart under the unjust enrichment laws of the 10 jurisdictions where class members reside, with the proposed class representatives being the named plaintiffs from those jurisdictions: Fernandez (Connecticut); Jones (District of Columbia); and Bittle, Liberov, Theis, and Vladimirskiy (Illinois).

[*221] The Unjust Enrichment (Appreciation) Multi-State Class ("Appreciation Class") would include jurisdictions that follow the Restatement but require proof of one additional element — "appreciation." This class would consist of:

> All persons residing in Alaska, California, Kansas, Kentucky, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, [Missouri, New Mexico], Nevada, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Utah, Vermont,

[41] Plaintiffs' motion is narrower than the Amended Complaint, which alleges that defendants violated the unjust enrichment laws in all 50 states and the District of Columbia.

> Washington, or Wisconsin who purchased Slack-Filled Black Pepper Products, for their personal or household use.

(Class Cert. Mot. at 2.)[42] This class would bring claims under the unjust enrichment laws of the 19 jurisdictions where class members reside with the proposed class representatives being the named plaintiffs from those jurisdictions: Esparza and Marsh (California); Robinson (Maryland); Grindel (Missouri); and Gerstnecker (Pennsylvania).

b. Single-State Unjust [34] Enrichment Classes

As an alternative to two multi-state classes, plaintiffs seek certification of seven single-state unjust enrichment classes. The proposed class representatives for each class are the named plaintiffs from that jurisdiction: Esparza and Marsh (California); Fernandez (Connecticut); Jones (District of Columbia); Bittle, Liberov, Theis, and Vladimirskiy (Illinois); Robinson (Maryland), Grindel (Missouri); and Gerstnecker (Pennsylvania). Only the Illinois class has claims against Wal-Mart.

B. Class Certification Record

In support of their motion for class certification, plaintiffs submitted tables comparing consumer protection and unjust enrichment law from the relevant jurisdictions, proposed jury instructions for the proposed multi-state classes, excerpts from the depositions of the twelve proposed class representatives, corporate documents that had been produced by McCormick during discovery, the Expert Report of Dr. Armando Levy, and declarations from the custodians of records of various retailers who sold Slack-Filled Pepper Products. (See Pls.' Mem. in Support of Class Cert. Mot., ECF No. 157-2 ("Pls.' Mem."); Pls.' Exs. 1-32, 100-144; Pls.' Reply to McCormick's Opp., [35] ECF No. 172-1 ("Pls.' McCormick Reply"); Pls.' McCormick Reply Exs. 1-2; Pls.' Supp. Exs. A-H.)

Defendants each filed an opposition. (See McCormick's Opp. to Class Cert. Mot., Aug. 28, 2017, ECF No. 160 ("McCormick's Opp."); Wal-Mart's Resp. to Class Cert. Mot., Aug. 28, 2017, ECF No. 165 ("Wal-Mart's Opp.").) McCormick's opposition, which Wal-Mart joined in, was supported by its own analysis of the relevant consumer protection and unjust enrichment laws, additional deposition excerpts from proposed class representatives and three former named plaintiffs, a declaration from James Hester, the Materials Manager for McCormick, the Expert Report of Dr. John H. Johnson, IV, as a rebuttal to Dr. Levy's Report, and excerpts from Dr. Levy's deposition. (See McCormick's Exs. 1-16, 19, 21-28.) Defendants also jointly moved to exclude the report and opinions of Dr. Levy.

At the Court's first hearing on plaintiffs' motion on July 10, 2018, plaintiffs informed the Court that all fact discovery had been completed and that all experts had been identified. (7/10/18 Tr. at 5.) Plaintiffs also presented the Court with additional materials [*222] in support of their request to certify multi-state classes — a [36] PowerPoint presentation and a collection of examples of jury instructions — both of which were added to the record. (See Notice of Filing, Aug. 13, 2018, ECF No. 198.) Plaintiffs subsequently filed a statement on Maryland's law of unjust enrichment, and defendants filed a response to plaintiffs' PowerPoint. (See Pls.' Statement Concerning Md. Law, July 11, 2018, ECF No. 193; Defs.' Resp. to Certain Statements in Pls.' PowerPoint Presentation, July 17, 2018, ECF No. 195.)

On September 18, 2018, the Court held a telephone conference call with the parties to advise them that it intended to deny their motion to certify multi-state consumer protection and unjust enrichment classes, but that additional briefing would be necessary before any decision could be made on whether to certify any single-state classes, particularly the single-state consumer protection classes. The Court therefore asked the parties to address in their supplemental briefing: (1) whether there was "a typical/adequate plaintiff for each state?"; (2) whether "the requirements under each state's law regarding materiality/causation/injury (as distinct from deception)?"; and (3)

whether "evidentiary proof [was] necessary [37] for plaintiffs to sustain their burden under Rule 23(b)(3)?" and, if so, whether plaintiffs had "met their burden to show factual predominance based on the 'common proof' cited on page 23 of their PowerPoint presentation?" (See Order at 1, Sept. 18, 2018, ECF No. 200.) The parties filed supplemental memoranda on October 3, 2018, and responses on October 16, 2018. (See Defs.' Joint Supp. Br., Oct 3, 2018, ECF No. 202 ("Defs.' Supp. Br."); Pls.' Supp. Br., Oct. 3, 2018, ECF No. 203; Defs.' Joint Resp. to Pls.' Supp. Br., Oct. 3, 2018, ECF No. 204 ("Defs.' Supp. Resp."); Pls.' Resp. to Defs.' Supp. Br., Oct. 3, 2018, ECF No. 205 ("Pls.' Supp. Resp.").) In their first filing, plaintiffs withdrew their request to certify single-state consumer protection classes in Connecticut and the District of Columbia, withdrew their request to have Bittle and Theis appointed as class representatives for Illinois, and submitted additional deposition testimony from the remaining proposed class representatives: Esparza and Marsh (California), Pellitteri (Florida), Liberov and Vladimirskiy (Illinois), and Grindel (Missouri). (See Pls.' Supp. Br. at 1, 12 & Exs. A-F.)

On October 24, 2018, the Court held a second hearing, [38] focusing exclusively on the four-remaining single-state consumer protection classes. The parties agreed during the September 18, 2018 conference call that the decision whether to certify any single-state classes should be resolved by this Court.

ANALYSIS

Plaintiffs have asked the Court to certify either three multi-state classes or four single state classes to bring consumer protection claims and seven single-state classes to bring unjust enrichment claims against defendants McCormick and Wal-Mart. As explained herein, the Court will not certify any of the proposed multi-state classes. Nor will it certify the Illinois Consumer Protection Class or any of the single-state unjust enrichment classes. However, it will certify the California, Florida, and Missouri Consumer Protection Classes.

I. LEGAL STANDARD FOR CLASS CERTIFICATION

HN1[] Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23 governs the certification of class actions in federal court. Rule 23(a) sets out the four "prerequisites" for any class action:

(1) the class is so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable;
(2) there are questions of law or fact common to the class;

[*223] (3) the claims or defenses of the representative parties are typical of the claims or defenses of the class; and [39] (4) the representative parties will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class.

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a). These four "threshold requirements" are referred to as "numerosity," "commonality," "typicality," and "adequacy of representation." In re Lorazepam & Clorazepate Antitrust Litig., 289 F.3d 98, 106, 351 U.S. App. D.C. 223 (D.C. Cir. 2002).

HN2[] Rule 23(b) provides that "[a] class action may be maintained if Rule 23(a) is satisfied," and the action meets the requirements of either Rule23(b)(1), (b)(2), or (b)(3). Amchem Prods., Inc. v. Windsor, 521 U.S. 591, 614, 117 S. Ct. 2231, 138 L. Ed. 2d 689 (1997). Here, plaintiffs seek certification under Rule 23(b)(3), which permits a class action "if . . . the court finds that the questions of law or fact common to class members predominate over any questions affecting only individual members, and that a class action is superior to other available methods for fairly and efficiently adjudicating the controversy." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(2). The first part of this criterion is known as "predominance"; the second part as "superiority." Amchem., 521 U.S. at 615. Rule 23(b)(3) further provides that:

The matters pertinent to these findings include:

(A) the class members' interests in individually controlling the prosecution or defense of separate actions;
(B) the extent and nature of any litigation concerning the controversy already begun by or against class members;

(C) the desirability or undesirability of concentrating the litigation of the claims [40] in the particular forum; and
(D) the likely difficulties in managing a class action.

HN3[] "A party seeking to maintain a class action 'must affirmatively demonstrate his compliance' with Rule 23." Comcast Corp. v. Behrend, 569 U.S. 27, 33, 133 S. Ct. 1426, 185 L. Ed. 2d 515 (2013) (quoting Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Dukes, 564 U.S. 338, 350, 131 S. Ct. 2541, 180 L. Ed. 2d 374 (2011)). Rule 23 'does not set forth a mere pleading standard.'" Id. (quoting Wal-Mart, 564 U.S. at 350). "Rather, a party must not only 'be prepared to prove that there are in fact sufficiently numerous parties, common questions of law or fact,' typicality of claims or defenses, and adequacy of representation, as required by Rule 23(a)," but "must also satisfy through evidentiary proof at least one of the provisions of Rule 23(b)." Id. (quoting Wal-Mart, 564 U.S. at 350).

HN4[] A court presented with a motion for class certification must engage in a "rigorous analysis" to be certain that the requirements of Rule 23(a) and (b) are satisfied, which will frequently necessitate looking behind the pleadings and giving some consideration to the merits of plaintiffs' underlying claims. Comcast, 569 U.S. at 33. While a court's "class-certification analysis must be rigorous and may entail some overlap with the merits of the plaintiff's underlying claim, Rule 23 grants courts no license to engage in free-ranging merits inquiries at the certification stage." Amgen Inc. v. Conn. Ret. Plans & Trust Funds, 568 U.S. 455, 465-66, 133 S. Ct. 1184, 185 L. Ed. 2d 308 (2013). "Merits questions may be considered to the extent—but only to the extent—that [41] they are relevant to determining whether the Rule 23 prerequisites for class certification are satisfied." Id. at 466. Ultimately, "[a] district court exercises [*224] broad discretion in deciding whether to permit a case to proceed as a class action." Hartman v. Duffey, 19 F.3d 1459, 1471, 305 U.S. App. D.C. 256 (D.C. Cir. 1994).

HN5[] In a multidistrict litigation, the MDL transferee court must apply the law of its own circuit when analyzing questions of federal law. See In re Korean Air Lines Disaster of Sept. 1, 1983, 829 F.2d 1171, 1174, 265 U.S. App. D.C. 39 (D.C. Cir. 1987), aff'd sub nom. Chan v. Korean Air Lines, Ltd., 490 U.S. 122, 109 S. Ct. 1676, 104 L. Ed. 2d 113 (1989); Multidistrict Litig. Man. § 9:18. This principle extends to interpretations of Rule 23. See, e.g., *In re Yasmin & Yaz Mktg., No. 3:09-cv-20001, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 33183, 2012 WL 865041, at 9 (S.D. Ill. Mar. 13, 2012) (applying Seventh Circuit precedent to class certification motion in MDL); *In re Toys "R" Us - Del., Inc. - Fair & Accurate Credit Transactions Act (FACTA) Litig., No. 06-cv-08163, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 133583, 2010 WL 5071073, at 2-4 (C.D. Cal. Aug. 17, 2010) (applying Ninth Circuit precedent to class certification motion in MDL). Also, the parties here agree that the D.C. Circuit's Rule 23 precedent applies to the class certification motion. (See Hr'g Tr. at 6, 43, Oct. 24, 2018, ECF No. 211 ("10/24/18 Tr.").).

However, in the absence of controlling precedent, "the law of a transferor forum on a federal question . . . merits close consideration, but [it] [42] does not have stare decisis effect in a transferee forum situated in another circuit." See In re Korean Air Lines Disaster, 829 F.2d at 1176. For, as held by the D.C. Circuit:

> [I]n the context of 28 U.S.C. § 1407, a statute authorizing transfers only for pretrial purposes, we are persuaded by thoughtful commentary that the transferee court [should] be free to decide a federal claim in the manner it views as correct without deferring to the interpretation of the transferor circuit.

Id. at 1174.[43]

[43] Then-Circuit Judge Ruth Bader Ginsburg explained:

> Applying divergent interpretations of the governing federal law to plaintiffs, depending solely upon where they initially filed suit, would surely reduce the efficiencies achievable through consolidated preparatory proceedings. Indeed, because there is ultimately a single proper interpretation of federal law, the attempt to ascertain and apply diverse circuit interpretations simultaneously is inherently self-contradictory. Our system contemplates differences between different states' laws; thus a multidistrict judge asked to apply divergent state positions on a point of law would face a coherent, if sometimes difficult,

II. MULTI-STATE CLASSES

Plaintiffs seek certification of three multi-state classes. Defendants oppose certification on a number of grounds, but because the Court agrees that plaintiffs have not met their burden under Rule 23(b)(3) to show that common issues of law predominate, it will limit its discussion to that issue.

HN6[] The predominance prong of Rule 23(b)(3) permits a class action "if . . . the court finds that the questions of law or fact common to class members predominate over any questions affecting only individual members." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3). To satisfy this requirement for a proposed multi-state class, movants must "creditably demonstrate, through an 'extensive analysis' of state law variances, 'that class certification does not present insuperable obstacles.'" Walsh v. Ford Motor Co., 807 F.2d 1000, 1017, 257 U.S. App. D.C. 85 (D.C. Cir. 1986) (quoting In re School Asbestos Litig., 789 F.2d 996, 1010 (3d Cir. 1986)). Or, in other words, [*225] claims arising under different states' laws can be "grouped" into a single class only if they contain "materially identical legal standards." Klay v. Humana, Inc., 382 F.3d 1241, 1262 (11th Cir. 2004), abrogated in part on other grounds by Bridge v. Phx. Bond & Indem. Co., 553 U.S. 639, 128 S. Ct. 2131, 170 L. Ed. 2d 1012 (2008); see also Grandalski v. Quest Diagnostics Inc., 767 F.3d 175, 183 (3d Cir. 2014) ("grouping, in general, may be a permissible approach to nationwide class action litigation," but "plaintiffs face a significant burden to demonstrate that grouping is a workable solution"); 1 McLaughlin on Class Actions [44] § 5:46 (15th ed.) ("If there is no true conflict between or among the substantive laws of the relevant states, the need to apply multiple state laws will not defeat a predominance finding.")

The burden of showing "groupability" "rests squarely with the plaintiffs." Klay, 382 F.3d at 1262 (citing Walsh, 807 F.2d at 1017); see also Langan v. Johnson & Johnson Consumer Cos., 897 F.3d 88, 96-97 (2d Cir. 2018) ("the party seeking certification has the ultimate burden to demonstrate that any variations in relevant state laws do not predominate over the similarities"). "[T]he crucial inquiry is not whether the laws of multiple jurisdictions are implicated, but whether those laws differ in a material manner that precludes the predominance of common issues." In re U.S. Foodservice Inc. Pricing Litig., 729 F.3d 108, 127 (2d Cir. 2013). Courts can allow subclassing on motion or sua sponte, but are under no obligation to do so, and the burden remains on the party seeking certification. 3 Newberg on Class Actions § 7:30 (5th ed.).

HN7[] In considering whether to certify a multi-state class, it is the trial court's job to critically consider variations in state law. See, e.g., Sacred Heart Health Sys., Inc. v. Humana Military Healthcare Servs., Inc., 601 F.3d 1159, 1180 (11th Cir. 2010)). The inquiry "begins, of course, with the elements of the underlying cause of action." Erica P. John Fund, Inc. v. Halliburton Co., 563 U.S. 804, 809, 131 S. Ct. 2179, 180 L. Ed. 2d 24 (2011). Any variations in state courts' interpretations of facially similar elements will also be relevant. See, e.g., Mazza v. Am. Honda Motor Co., 666 F.3d 581, 591 (9th Cir. 2012) ("Consumer protection laws are a [45] creature of the state in which they are fashioned. They may impose or not impose liability depending on policy choices made by state legislatures or, if legislators left a gap or ambiguity, by state supreme courts."). The absence of any clear interpretation of an element may also be material because "each state must decide for itself how to resolve [] unanswered questions about the scope and evidentiary requirements needed to establish [that element]." *Mullins v. Premier Nutrition Corp., No. 13-cv-01271, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 79983, 2016 WL 3440600, at 5 (N.D. Cal. June 20, 2016); see also In re Bisphenol-A (BPA) Polycarbonate Plastic Prods. Liab. Litig., 276 F.R.D. 336, 342 (W.D. Mo. 2011) (providing a "sampling of the legal disputes that the Court is unable to resolve without delving into a legal inquiry more extensive than has been provided by the parties in order to ascertain (or predict) the holdings of the highest courts in these jurisdictions").

task. But it is logically inconsistent to require one judge to apply simultaneously different and conflicting interpretations of what is supposed to be [43] a unitary federal law.

In re Korean Air Lines Disaster, 829 F.2d at 1175-76.

Whether variations in elements or interpretations are material will depend on the extent and nature of any variations, plaintiffs' theory of liability, and the factual record.[44] See, e.g., Grandalski, 767 F.3d at 184 [*226] (plaintiffs failed to provide "analysis describing how the grouped state laws might apply to the facts of this case"); In re Pharm. Indus. Average Wholesale Price Litig., 252 F.R.D. 83, 99-100 (D. Mass. 2008) (considering whether variations in scienter requirements among states' unfair trade practice statutes were [46] material "[i]n the context of plaintiffs' theory in this case"); In re Telectronics Pacing Sys., Inc., 172 F.R.D. 271, 292 (S.D. Ohio 1997) (court should "determine whether the variations are significant and whether they are material to the issues contested in the case").

HN8[] A 'single difference' [among] the [s]tate laws governing plaintiffs' claims is not necessarily a substantial difference," but "[c]ourts must exercise care . . . in order to determine whether any conflicts in governing law will overwhelm the ability of the trier of fact meaningfully to advance the litigation through class[-]wide proof" Hughes v. Ester C Co., 317 F.R.D. 333, 352 (E.D.N.Y. 2016) (quoting Rodriguez v. It's Just Lunch, Intern., 300 F.R.D. 125, 140 (S.D.N.Y. 2014) and then quoting Johnson v. Nextel Commc'ns Inc., 780 F.3d 128, 141 (2d Cir. 2015). "Even differences in state laws that amount to 'nuances' [may] suffice to make multistate classes inappropriate." *Marshall v. Finally, HN9[] plaintiffs seeking certification of a multi-state class "bear[] the burden of demonstrating 'a suitable and realistic plan for trial of the class claims.'" *Zinser v. A. Multi-State Consumer Protection Class of Twenty Jurisdictions

Plaintiffs seek certification of a single multi-state consumer protection class covering 20 jurisdictions: the Consumer Protection Multi-State Class. They argue that the consumer protection statutes in these 20 jurisdictions (Arkansas, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, District of Columbia, Florida, Idaho, [*227] Illinois, Iowa, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New Mexico, New York, North Dakota, and Washington) can be grouped into one class because they contain the following "common elements of proof': (1) "[d]efendant(s) engaged in an act or practice prohibited by state statute"; (2) "[p]laintiffs suffered damage"; and (3) "the challenged act or practice caused that damage." (Pls.' Mem. at 28.) In addition, they contend

[44] The Court does not agree, as defendants appear to suggest, that because so many courts have denied certification of multi-state consumer protection and unjust enrichment classes, the burden is essentially insurmountable. (See McCormick's Opp. at 26-27, 38-39 & Exs. 29-30 (Tables of Cases).)

[45] HN11[] An important caveat to this general principle is that courts tend to be "more receptive to certification of multistate settlement classes." 7AA Fed. Prac. & Proc. Civ. § 1780.1 (3d ed.); see Amchem, 521 U.S. at 620 ("Confronted with a request for settlement-only class certification, a district court need not inquire whether the case, if tried, would present intractable management problems, for the proposal is that there be no trial. But other specifications of the Rule—those designed to protect absentees by blocking unwarranted or overbroad class definitions—demand undiluted, even heightened, attention in the settlement context"); In re Hyundai & Kia Fuel Econ. Litig., 926 F.3d 539, 556-57 (9th Cir. 2019) (en banc) ("The criteria for class certification are applied differently in litigation classes and settlement classes. In deciding whether to certify a litigation class, a district court must be concerned with manageability at trial. However, such manageability is not a concern in certifying a settlement class where, by definition, there will be no trial"); In re Mexico Money Transfer Litig., 267 F.3d 743, 747 (7th Cir. 2001) ("Given the settlement, no one need draw fine lines among state-law theories of relief.").

that each law "provides a private right of action to consumers," "utilizes objective (rather than subjective) standards for deception," "implements [48] the general legal requirement that the damage was proximately caused by the challenged conduct," and "does not require individual reliance." (Id. at 30; see also Pls.' Exs. 13, 15-17.) Thus, plaintiffs propose that classwide liability could be determined by asking a jury these four questions:

Do you find by a preponderance of the evidence the following:

(1) Did Defendant engage in a deceptive business act or practice?

(2) Did Defendant engage in an unfair business act or practice?

(3) Did Defendant make representations that a good has quantities that it does not have?

(4) Did Defendant's conduct cause Plaintiffs and the Class to lose money?

(Pls.' Ex. 21.)

Defendants counter that plaintiffs have grossly oversimplified matters by "ignoring numerous material state-by-state variations," including "varying descriptions of 'deceptive' or 'unfair' conduct," the differing requirements as to scienter, materiality, causation, injury, and reliance, the need in some states for showing a public impact or interest and for providing notice, and the differences among states in available remedies. (See McCormick's Opp. at 26-34.)

Although the Court does not adopt all of defendants' criticisms, it does agree that there are material variations [49] among the 20 consumer protection statutes that preclude certification of the proposed multi-state class. The most significant of these variations involve differences in the burden of proof; scienter requirements; definitions of deception, in particular whether there is a materiality component and, if so, how it is defined; and the requirements for proving causation and injury.

Burden of proof: Plaintiffs' proposed jury instructions use a "preponderance of the evidence" standard, but at least the District of Columbia requires a higher burden of proof (clear and convincing evidence) to prove a consumer protection violation. See D.C. Std. Civ. Jury Instr. No. 20-11 (2007 ed. rev.). Accordingly, a single jury instruction on burden of proof could not be used for the proposed multi-state class.

Scienter: Plaintiffs' proposed jury instructions do not include a scienter requirement, although scienter requirements vary among the 20 jurisdictions. While there are states in the proposed class that have no scienter requirement, e.g., California, Connecticut, the District of Columbia, Florida, Massachusetts, New York, and Washington (see McCormick's Opp. at 31), there are also states, including Illinois, Iowa, Minnesota, [50] and North Dakota, which require proof that a defendant intended consumers to rely on the allegedly deceptive conduct. See De Bouse v. Bayer AG, 235 Ill. 2d 544, 922 N.E.2d 309, 313, 337 Ill. Dec. 186 (Ill. 2009); McKee v. Isle of Capri Casinos, Inc., 864 N.W.2d 518, 532 (Iowa 2015) (citing Iowa Code Ann. § 714H.3); Graphic Commc'ns Local 1B Health & Welfare Fund "A" v. CVS Caremark Corp., 850 N.W.2d 682, 694 (Minn. 2014) (citing Minn. Stat. Ann. § 325F.69); N.D. Cent. Code Ann. § 51-15-02.

[*228] HN12[] Differences in scienter are generally material because "[i]n cases where a defendant acted without scienter, a scienter requirement will spell the difference between the success and failure of a claim." See, e.g., Mazza, 666 F.3d at 591. Here, plaintiffs do not dispute that there are variations in scienter requirements, but they assert that the variations are "immaterial" because they plan to "use common evidence to prove that Defendants acted with complete knowledge." (Pls.' McCormick Reply at 17.) Plaintiffs' response, though, does not fully address the problem posed by variations in scienter requirements. First, they do not explain why proving that defendants acted "with complete knowledge" is the same as proving they acted with the intent that others would rely on the deception. Second, if liability is premised on a jury finding that defendants acted with a certain level of intent, but the jury fails to find that intent, recovery would be precluded for all class members, even those in the states that [51] do not require any showing of scienter. Accordingly, a single jury instruction on scienter could not be used for the proposed multi-state class.

Definition of Deception: HN13[] Although every state's consumer protection statute prohibits deceptive acts, they do not utilize a uniform definition of deception. The most obvious difference is that some states require that the deceptive act be "material," while others only require that the deceptive act have the capacity or tendency to deceive. For example, in Connecticut, "the misleading representation . . . or practice must be material — that is, likely to affect consumer decisions or conduct." Conn. Judicial Branch Civil Jury Instr. 5.2-7. But in New Hampshire, a "'deceptive' act or practice is simply one that has the capacity to deceive." Fowler v. O'Hara, No. 2182015-cv-01109, 2016 WL 9137116 (N.H. Super.) (jury instructions) (Dec. 22, 2016).

Plaintiffs did not initially acknowledge this difference, but they now suggest that this variation can be accommodated within a single multi-state class by asking the jury two questions: (1) "Was the size of the black pepper tin material to a reasonable consumer's decision to purchase the pepper product?" and (2) "Did the size of the [52] black pepper tin have the capacity or tendency to deceive consumers?" (Pls.' Powerpoint Presentation at 20, ECF No. 198-1 ("Powerpoint") (emphasis added).) According to plaintiffs, eight states would be covered by the first question and twelve states would be covered by the second. (See id.) But plaintiffs have failed to establish that these two questions fully account for the all the potential differences in the states' definitions of deception. For example, among the "materiality" states: Connecticut law defines "materiality" as "likely to affect consumer decisions or conduct," Conn. Judicial Branch Civil Jury Instr. 5.2-7; in the District of Columbia a fact is considered to be material if "a reasonable man or woman would attach importance to its existence or nonexistence in determining his or her choice of action in the transaction in question, Saucier v. Countrywide Home Loans, 64 A.3d 428, 442 (D.C. 2013); and in Michigan "a material fact . . . [is] one that is important to the transaction or affects a consumer's decision to enter into a transaction," Laura v. DaimlerChrysler Corp., 269 Mich. App. 446, 711 N.W.2d 792, 794 (Mich. Ct. App. 2006) (quoting Zine v. Chrysler Corp., 236 Mich. App. 261, 600 N.W.2d 384, 398 (Mich. Ct. App. 1999)). As for the "capacity or tendency to deceive" states: in Arkansas, a plaintiff "need only prove that the defendant engaged in a practice that has the capacity to deceive a reasonable [53] consumer," City of Clinton v. Pilgrim's Pride Corp., 632 F.3d 148, 156 (5th Cir. 2010); in Massachusetts, an act is deceptive "if it could reasonably be found to have caused a person to act differently from the way he otherwise [*229] would have acted." Lowell Gas Co. v. Attorney Gen., 377 Mass. 37, 385 N.E.2d 240, 249 (Mass. 1979); in New Mexico, an act is deceptive if it "would have induced a reasonable consumer in [p]laintiffs' shoes to enter into [the transaction in question]," Azar v. Prudential Ins. Co., 2003- NMCA 062, 133 N.M. 669, 68 P.3d 909, 930 (N.M. Ct. App. 2003); and in Washington, a plaintiff must prove "that the act or practice 'had the capacity to deceive a substantial portion of the public.'" Thornell v. Seattle Serv. Bureau, Inc., 184 Wn.2d 793, 363 P.3d 587, 591 (Wash. 2015) (quoting Hangman Ridge Training Stables, Inc. v. Safeco Title Ins. Co., 105 Wn.2d 778, 719 P.2d 531, 535 (Wash. 1986) (en banc)).

Since plaintiffs have made no attempt to explain how the two questions they propose asking a jury would account for all of the above-described variations in the states' definitions of deception, they have failed to establish materially identical legal standards for deception.

Causation/Injury/Loss: Plaintiffs propose that proving causation and injury for each of the 20 jurisdictions can be handled by asking one question: "Did Defendant's conduct cause Plaintiffs and the Class to lose money?" But causation, injury and loss must themselves be defined. And, it is the variations in those elements that plaintiffs' proposed instruction fails to address.

First, the HN14[] consumer protection statutes do not use identical [54] language when describing what is required in terms of causation and injury to recover damages in a private suit. For example, in Arkansas, a plaintiff must prove "actual damage or injury as a result of an offense or violation." Ark. Code Ann. § 4-88-113(f) (repealed Aug. 1, 2017). In California, a plaintiff can recover for "any damage as a result of the use or employment by any person of a method, act, or practice declared to be unlawful." Cal. Civ. Code. § 1780(a). In Colorado, a plaintiff must have been "injured as a result of [a] deceptive trade practice." Colo. Rev. Stat. § 6-1-113(1)(a). In Connecticut, Idaho, Iowa, Missouri, and New Jersey, the plaintiff must have "suffer[ed] an ascertainable loss of money or property, real or personal, as a result of the [deceptive act]." Conn. Gen. Stat. § 42-110g(a); Idaho Code § 48-608(1); Iowa Code § 714.15; Mo. Ann. Stat. § 407.025; N.J. Stat. § 56:8-19. In Florida, the plaintiff must have "suffered a loss as a result of a violation of this part." Fla. Stat. Ann. § 501.211. In Illinois, the plaintiff must have "suffer[ed] actual damage as a result of a violation." 815 ILCS 505/10a(a).

The variations in statutory language would not matter if they had been interpreted to have the same meaning, but they have not. Rather, judicial interpretations of these statutes have confirmed that there are clear differences in what a plaintiff must show to prove causation and injury. Plaintiffs [55] suggest that "proximate cause" is required in all jurisdictions, but that is not the case. Washington, for example, requires "but for" causation. See Patrick v. Wells Fargo Bank, 196 Wn. App. 398, 385 P.3d 165, 171 (Wash. 2016) ("A claimant must show a causal link 'between the unfair or deceptive acts and the injury suffered.' That link must establish that the alleged injury would not have occurred 'but for' the defendant's unlawful acts." (quoting Hangman Ridge, 719 P.2d at 539)). In Illinois, a plaintiff can prove causation by showing actual deception. Avery v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 216 Ill. 2d 100, 835 N.E.2d 801, 861, 296 Ill. Dec. 448 (Ill. 2005). In Florida, a plaintiff can prove causation by showing that "an objectively reasonable person would have been deceived." Fitzpatrick v. Gen. Mills, Inc., 635 F.3d 1279, 1283 (11th Cir. 2011). By contrast, in New Mexico, no direct causation is needed, at least to obtain the minimum damages set forth by statute. See Jones v. GMC, 1998- NMCA 020, 124 N.M. 606, 953 P.2d 1104, 1109 [*230] (N.M. Ct. App. 1998) ("In the absence of actual losses, [a] [p]laintiff is still entitled under [the New Mexico consumer protection statute] to recover the statutory damages of one hundred dollars").

As for injury, several states have concluded that a legally cognizable "injury" must be distinct from the deception itself. In New York, for example, the applicable statute has been interpreted as having a "direct injury requirement," meaning that a plaintiff "cannot rely on the deceptive act itself as the alleged injury" [56] but "must prove actual injury, although not necessarily pecuniary harm." Comm. on Pattern Jury Instr. Assoc. of Sup. Ct. Justices, N.Y. PJI-Civ. 3:20.4 (2017). Massachusetts also has held that "legally cognizable injuries . . . must involve objective, 'identifiable' harm that goes beyond the deception itself." Shaulis v. Nordstrom, Inc., 865 F.3d 1, 10 (1st Cir. 2017) (quoting Tyler v. Michaels Stores, Inc., 464 Mass. 492, 984 N.E.2d 737, 745 (Mass. 2013)). In other words, plaintiffs must suffer a "'separate, identifiable harm arising from the [regulatory] violation' that is distinct 'from the claimed unfair or deceptive conduct itself.'" Id. (quoting Bellermann v. Fitchburg Gas and Electric Light Company, 475 Mass. 67, 54 N.E.3d 1106, 1111 (Mass. 2016)).

Plaintiffs do not dispute that there are variations among state causation standards, but they argue that "any variations in state causation standards are not material" because they "can satisfy the strictest causation standard of any of the state laws at issue (i.e., states requiring direct, 'but for' causation)." (Pls.' McCormick Reply at 15.) But, as noted above, applying a stricter standard than is legally required in some jurisdictions creates a risk that some plaintiffs will be wrongly denied a recovery.

In light of the many material variations among the state consumer protection statutes, and plaintiffs' failure to show how these variations could be accounted for [57] in a manageable way at a trial, the Court concludes that common issues of law do not predominate for the proposed multi-state consumer protection class.

B. Multi-State Unjust Enrichment Classes

Plaintiffs seek certification of two multi-state unjust enrichment classes, covering a total of 29 jurisdictions: the Unjust Enrichment (Restatement) Multi-State Class ("Restatement Class") and the Unjust Enrichment (Appreciation) Multi-State Class ("Appreciation Class"). The Restatement Class would include Arkansas, Colorado, Connecticut, District of Columbia, Hawaii, Illinois, Iowa, New York, Oklahoma, and West Virginia; the Appreciation Class would include Alaska, California, Kansas, Kentucky, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, [Missouri, New Mexico], Nevada, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Utah, Vermont, Washington, and Wisconsin.

According to plaintiffs, two classes are appropriate because all 29 jurisdictions follow the Restatement (First) of Restitution's definition of unjust enrichment, which requires proof that "(1) the plaintiff conferred a benefit on the defendant, (2) the defendant retained the benefit, and (3) the defendant's retention of the benefit [58] would be unjust," but the jurisdictions in the Appreciation Class also require proof of one additional element — "the defendant's appreciation or knowledge of the benefit." Thus, plaintiffs propose that a jury could be asked the following common questions to determine liability for both the Restatement and Appreciations Classes:

Do you find by a preponderance of the evidence the following:

[*231] (1) Did Plaintiffs and the Class confer a benefit on Defendant?
(2) Did Defendant accept a benefit from Plaintiffs and the Class?
(3) Under the circumstances, would it be unfair for Defendant to retain the benefit?
Then, for the Appreciation Class, there would be one additional question:
(4) Did Defendant appreciate the benefit it was receiving from Plaintiffs and the Class?

(Pls.' Ex. 21; see also Powerpoint at 32-33.)

HN15[] As to each proposed unjust enrichment class, the Court must decide whether the covered jurisdictions have "materially identical" legal standards. Courts frequently refuse to certify multi-state unjust enrichment classes. (See McCormick's Opp. at 38-39 (citing cases).) However, plaintiffs have addressed a number of potential problems by not seeking a nationwide class,[46] by excluding certain clearly problematic states,[47] and by dividing [59] the remaining states into two groups.[48] Nonetheless, plaintiffs have failed to show that the unjust enrichment law for all the jurisdictions in each of the two proposed classes is materially identical. Nor are the cases they cite particularly helpful as they either do not involve the same proposed groupings,[49] had very different underlying facts,[50] or lack any analysis explaining their decision to certify.[51] In addition, although plaintiffs submitted tables purporting to establish that the unjust enrichment law for the jurisdictions within each proposed class is materially identical, those tables alone do not account for the material differences in how the element of unjustness is defined and whether there is a "no adequate remedy at law" requirement and, if so, how that requirement might apply to the current case.

1. Element of Unjustness

It is undisputed that HN16[] to prevail on a claim for unjust enrichment in any of the jurisdictions at issue, plaintiffs must prove that defendants' retention of the benefit [60] is "unjust." Plaintiffs do not dispute that the specific language used to define unjustness varies by jurisdiction, but they assert, [*232] without any further analysis, that "these differences are not material." (Pls.' McCormick Reply at 24.) Thus, they suggest that a jury could simply be asked, "Under the circumstances, would it be unfair for Defendant to retain the benefit?"

[47] For example, plaintiffs have excluded Florida, Idaho, and Ohio, which "preclude indirect purchasers from asserting claims for unjust enrichment unless they have conferred a benefit directly on the defendant," In re ConAgra Peanut Butter Prods. Liab. Litig., 251 F.R.D. 689, 697 (N.D. Ga. 2008); Alabama, which requires a showing that "'the recipient of the benefit . . . engaged in some unconscionable conduct, such as fraud, coercion, or abuse of a confidential relationship,'" *Thompson v. Mantiply, 951 So. 2d 638, 654-55 (Ala. 2006)); and Arizona, which includes "impoverishment" as an element of unjust enrichment, see In re Grand Theft Auto Video Game Consumer Litig., 251 F.R.D. 139, 148 (S.D.N.Y. 2008).

Plaintiffs appear to ignore the fact that the question they pose is a fact-intensive inquiry that focuses on the totality of the circumstances, not just defendant's conduct. Plaintiffs also fail to provide an in-depth analysis of the critical question — whether the definition of unjustness is identical for every state within each proposed class. To that question, the Court will now turn.

Among the states in the Restatement Class, for example, unjustness is defined in a variety of ways: Arkansas defines unjustness to mean that "a person has received money or its equivalent under such circumstances that, in equity and good conscience, he or she ought not to retain," El Paso Prod. Co. v. Blanchard, 371 Ark. 634, 269 S.W.3d 362, 372 (Ark. 2007); in Colorado, "[w]hether retention of the benefit is unjust is a fact-intensive inquiry in which courts look to, among other things, the intentions, expectations, [61] and behavior of the parties," Melat, Pressman & Higbie, LLP v. Hannon Law Firm, LLC, 287 P.3d 842, 847, 2012 CO 61 (Colo. 2012); in Connecticut, unjust enrichment is defined as "a very broad and flexible equitable doctrine that has as its basis the principle that it is contrary to equity and good conscience for a defendant to retain a benefit that has come to him at the expense of the plaintiff," Gagne v. Vaccaro, 255 Conn. 390, 766 A.2d 416, 427 (Conn. 2001), and plaintiffs must prove that "the failure of payment was to the plaintiffs' detriment," Town of New Hartford v. Connecticut Res. Recovery Auth., 291 Conn. 433, 970 A.2d 592, 609 (Conn. 2009); in Illinois, plaintiffs must prove that "defendant's retention of the benefit violates the fundamental principles of justice, equity, and good conscience," HPI Health Care Servs., Inc. v. Mt. Vernon Hosp., Inc., 131 Ill. 2d 145, 545 N.E.2d 672, 679, 137 Ill. Dec. 19 (Ill. 1989); New York requires that it be "against equity and good conscience to permit the defendant to retain what is sought to be recovered," Mandarin Trading Ltd. v. Wildenstein, 16 N.Y.3d 173, 944 N.E.2d 1104, 1110, 919 N.Y.S.2d 465 (N.Y. 2011) (quoting Paramount Film Distrib. Corp. v. New York, 30 N.Y.2d 415, 285 N.E.2d 695, 698, 334 N.Y.S.2d 388 (N.Y. 1972)); Oklahoma courts hold that "[u]njust enrichment arises from the failure of a party to make restitution in circumstances where it is inequitable, or one party holds property that, in equity and good conscience, it should not be allowed to retain," Harvell v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., 2006 OK 24, 164 P.3d 1028, 1035 (Okla. 2006); and in West Virginia, unjustness means that "if benefits have been received and retained under such circumstance that it would be inequitable and unconscionable to permit the party receiving them to avoid payment therefor, the law requires the party receiving [62] the benefits to pay their reasonable value," Realmark Developments, Inc. v. Ranson, 208 W. Va. 717, 542 S.E.2d 880, 884-85 (W.Va. 2000); see also W. Va. Pattern Jury Instr. Civ. § 1124 ("Unjust enrichment means that one party has unfairly kept some benefit that actually belonged to another party, that this benefit was not freely given to the party keeping it, and that there was no legal justification for keeping it.").

Similarly, among the states in the Appreciation Class, unjustness is defined in a variety of ways: Alaska courts define unjustness to mean that "the defendant must receive a true windfall or something for nothing," Alaska Sales & Serv., Inc. v. Millet, 735 P.2d 743, 746 (Alaska 1987); in California, "[t]here is no equitable reason for invoking restitution when the plaintiff gets the exchange which he expected," *Peterson [233] v. Cellco P'ship, 164 Cal. App. 4th 1583, 80 Cal. Rptr. 3d 316, 323-24 (Cal. Ct. App. 2008) (quoting Comet Theatre Enters. v. Cartwright, 195 F.2d 80, 83 (9th Cir. 1952)); in Maryland, "the right to restitution is . . . subject to any counter-equities that the recipient of benefits may assert," Hill v. Cross Country Settlements, LLC, 402 Md. 281, 936 A.2d 343, 352 (Md. 2007); in Massachusetts, unjustness is "a quality that turns on the reasonable expectations of the parties," Metro. Life Ins. Co. v. Cotter, 464 Mass. 623, 984 N.E.2d 835, 850 (Mass. 2013) (quoting Global Investors Agent Corp. v. National Fire Ins. Co., 76 Mass. App. Ct. 812, 927 N.E.2d 480, 494 (Mass. Ct. App. 2010); in Missouri, "[t]here can be no unjust enrichment if the parties receive what they intended to obtain," Howard v. Turnbull, 316 S.W.3d 431, 436 (Mo. Ct. App. 2010) (quoting Am. Std. Ins. Co. v. Bracht, 103 S.W.3d 281, 293 (Mo. Ct. App. 2003)); in Vermont, "[u]njust enrichment applies if 'in light of the totality of the circumstances, equity and good conscience demand' that the benefitted party return [63] that which was given," Kellogg v. Shushereba, 194 Vt. 446, 82 A.3d 1121, 1130 (Vt. 2013) (quoting Gallipo v. Rutland, 178 Vt. 244, 882 A.2d 1177, 1191 (Vt. 2005)), and, in addition, "[w]hether there is unjust enrichment present 'may not be determined from a limited inquiry confined to an isolated transaction. It must be a realistic determination based on a broad view of the human setting involved,''" Mueller v. Mueller, 192 Vt. 85, 54 A.3d 168, 176 (Vt. 2012) (quoting Legault v. Legault, 142 Vt. 525, 459 A.2d 980, 984 (Vt. 1983)).

Given the varied definitions of unjustness within each proposed class, plaintiffs have failed to meet their burden to show that the element of unjustness has been given a materially identical definition by all of the jurisdictions within each proposed class.

2. No Adequate Remedy at Law Requirement

HN17[] The unjust enrichment laws of the jurisdictions at issue also vary in terms of whether they have a "no adequate remedy at law" requirement and, if so, how that requirement is defined. Plaintiffs have failed to establish that these variations are not material.

First, there are states within each proposed class that have a no adequate remedy at law requirement and states that do not. In the Restatement Class, for example, Connecticut, Hawaii, Illinois, Iowa, New York, and West Virginia have the requirement,[52] but Arkansas does not.[53] In the Appreciation Class, Kansas, Massachusetts, South Carolina, Utah, and Washington [64] have the requirement,[54] but Rhode Island does not.[55]

Second, in those states with a "no adequate remedy at law" requirement, its meaning varies. For example, in New York [*234] (Restatement Class) and Massachusetts (Appreciation Class), the requirement would almost certainly bar plaintiffs' unjust enrichment claims. Courts applying the law of those states consistently dismiss unjust enrichment claims (including slack-fill cases),[56] since the same underlying conduct would constitute a claim under the state's consumer protection statute.[57] A court applying Washington (Appreciation Class) law would probably reach the same result.[58] In other states, such as Connecticut and Illinois (both in the Restatement Class), the requirement appears to have been interpreted as not barring an unjust enrichment claim for damages.[59] Finally, in

App. LEXIS 2341, 2015 WL 5893664, at 8 ("fact that [the plaintiff] cannot prove her breach of contract claim does not permit her to raise unjust enrichment").

Hawaii, Iowa, and West Virginia (Restatement Class), and in Kansas, South Carolina and Utah (Appreciation Class), it is difficult to predict if an unjust enrichment claim would be barred in a case similar to this one.[60]

Given the variations among states as to whether there is a "no adequate remedy at law" requirement, [65] and if such a requirement exists, the variations as to its scope, the Court concludes that plaintiffs have not met their burden to show that the "no adequate remedy at law" requirement is not a material variation.

For the above reasons, the Court concludes that plaintiffs have failed to establish [*235] that there are no material variations in unjust enrichment law in the jurisdictions within each proposed class and, accordingly, it will not certify the proposed multi-state unjust enrichment classes.[61]

III. SINGLE-STATE CLASSES

Having concluded that none of the proposed multi-state classes should be certified, the Court turns to plaintiffs' alternative request to certify single-state classes. Plaintiffs' motion, as modified, seeks certification of four single-state consumer protection classes and seven single-state unjust enrichment classes. Each class would consist of purchasers who resided in the state and would bring claims under the consumer protection statute and/or the common law of unjust enrichment in that state, with only the Illinois classes bringing claims against Wal-Mart.

As the Court did not need to analyze the Rule 23(a) requirements with respect to the multi-state classes, it will [66] consider those requirements now, along with the implied requirement of ascertainability, and then turn to the Rule 23(b)(3) requirements of predominance and superiority. As noted, HN18[] plaintiffs bear the burden of proving that the Rule 23(a) requirements are met and showing that Rule 23(b)(3) is "satisfjied] through evidentiary proof." Comcast, 569 U.S. at 33. And, because this is an MDL, the D.C. Circuit's interpretations of Rule 23 provide the controlling law, but where the D.C. Circuit has not addressed an issue, and there is a divergence among the circuits, this Court must apply the interpretation of Rule 23 it finds most persuasive. (See supra pp. 31-32 & n.43.)

[59] See In re Gen. Motors, 339 F. Supp. 3d at 335 ("an adequate legal remedy does not bar a damages claim for unjust enrichment under Connecticut law"); In re Aqua Dots Prods. Liab. Litig., 270 F.R.D. 377, 386 (N.D. Ill. 2010) (under Illinois law, "restitution, i.e., money damages under an unjust enrichment theory, is a legal remedy").

[60] See Porter, 169 P.3d at 1008 (requirement does not bar an unjust enrichment claim that is founded on the same wrongful conduct as a tort claim if "the remedies sought are sufficiently distinct . . . to exclude th[e] case from the realm of 'double recovery' situations"); Mosebach v. Blythe, 282 N.W.2d 755, 761 (Iowa Ct. App. 1979) ("[e]quity generally will not provide relief where an adequate remedy at law existed and defendant was denied that relief for appropriate legal reasons"); Mountain State Coll., 742 S.E.2d 94 (W. Va. 2013) ("[a] court of equity is without jurisdiction to entertain a suit" where there is a "plain, adequate and complete" remedy at law, whether the plaintiff is guaranteed success); *Batman, 423 P.3d 1062, 2018 WL 4038983, at 8 ("a claim must first be made against the one who violated a duty, and a remedy at law must be unavailable before equitable relief is allowed"); EllisDon Constr, 707 S.E.2d at 401 ("A party failing to fulfill the requirements of its legal remedy cannot later come to the courts complaining of hardship, seeking an equitable remedy."); VCS, Inc., 293 P.3d at 299-300 ("A party invoking equity is generally required to first exhaust any legal remedies available . . . because equitable remedies are secondary gap-fillers.").

[61] Wal-Mart has also argued that no multi-state classes should be certified to bring claims again Wal-Mart because the proposed class representative from Illinois (Liberov) lacks standing to bring claims on behalf of the residents of other states under those other states' laws, even if the states have materially identical legal standards. (See 7/10/18 Tr. at 44; Wal-Mart's Opp. at 2.) According to Wal-Mart, a class representative from one state cannot suffer the necessary injury to represent a plaintiff from another state because each state defines "what the injury is." (7/10/18 Tr. at 45.) Given the Court's conclusion that the multi-state classes founder on the requirement of predominance, this argument is moot.

HN19[] Rule 23(a)(1) requires that the proposed class be "so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)(1). Impracticable means "difficult or inconvenient" rather than impossible. Coleman v. District of Columbia, 306 F.R.D. 68, 76 (D.D.C. 2015). "The numerosity requirement requires examination of the specific facts of each case and imposes no absolute limitations." Gen. Tel. Co. v. Equal Employment Opportunity Comm'n, 446 U.S. 318, 330, 100 S. Ct. 1698, 64 L. Ed. 2d 319 (1980); see also Council of & for the Blind v. Regan, 709 F.2d 1521, 1544, 1543 n.48, 228 U.S. App. D.C. 295 (D.C. Cir. 1983) ("Although the absolute number of class members is not the sole determining factor, joinder will usually be impracticable when the class is large.") Plaintiffs must provide some evidence that a class is numerous, but courts may draw "reasonable inferences from the facts presented to find the requisite [67] numerosity." Coleman, 306 F.R.D. at 76. As a rule of thumb, a class of over 40 members satisfies the numerosity requirement. See, e.g., id.[62]

[*236] Here, it is undisputed that there were far more than 40 purchasers of Slack-Filled Pepper Products in each potential class. (See Levy Rep., Tables 3, 5, 6.) Accordingly, the Court finds that each proposed single-state class satisfies the numerosity requirement.

B. Commonality (Rule 23(a)(2))

HN20[] The requirement of "commonality" is satisfied when there are "questions of law or fact common to the class." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)(2). "If the class members" claims involve no common question of law or fact, there will be 'no cause to believe that all their claims can productively be litigated at once.'" J.D. v. Azar, 925 F.3d 1291, 1321, 2019 U.S. App. LEXIS 17900 (D.C. Cir. 2019) (quoting Wal-Mart, 564 U.S. at 350)). As explained by the Supreme Court, "even a single common question will do." Wal-Mart, 564 U.S. at 359; see J.D., 925 F.3d at 1321 ("The presence of a single such common question can suffice to satisfy Rule 23(a)(2)."). But the "common contention" "must be of such a nature that it is capable of classwide resolution—which means that the determination of its truth or falsity will resolve an issue that is central to the validity of each one of the claims in one stroke." Wal-Mart, 564 U.S. at 350. "What matters to class certification . . . is not the raising of common questions—even in droves—but, [68] rather the capacity of a classwide proceeding to generate common answers apt to drive the resolution of the litigation." Id.

Plaintiffs have identified several common questions that satisfy the commonality requirement of Rule 23(a). First, whether the Slack-Filled Pepper Products contained nonfunctional slack-fill is a common question of fact. (See 2d Am. Compl. ¶¶ 116, 127; *see also, e.g., Hendricks v. Starkist Co, No. 13-cv-00729, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 96390, 2015 WL 4498083, at 3 (N.D. Cal. July 23, 2015) (commonality [*237] satisfied by common question of whether cans of tuna fish were underfilled). Defendants argue this is not a "common question" because plaintiffs may suffer a failure of proof. (See McCormick's Opp. at 16 (citing Hester Decl. ¶ 11, which states that all of the Slack-Filled Pepper Products were "overfill[ed]" if necessary to meet a minimum 80% fill level).)[63] But HN21[] to satisfy the requirement of commonality, plaintiffs need not show that a common question will be answered in their favor. *See Hilsley v. Ocean Spray Cranberries, Inc., No. 17-cv-2335, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 202679, 2018 WL 6300479, at 5 (S.D. Cal. Nov. 29, 2018) (it "requires too much of the plaintiff by demanding a common contention that 'will be answered, on the merits in favor of the class' instead of simply showing there is a 'common contention capable of classwide resolution'" (quoting [69] Alcantar v. Hobart Serv., 800 F.3d 1047, 1053 (9th Cir. 2015))). Rather, they need only show that the common question is capable of generating a "common answer" even if that answer defeats their claim.

[62] The D.C. Circuit has not yet spoken on this issue, see Hoyte v. District of Columbia, 325 F.R.D. 485, 490 (D.D.C. 2017), but other circuits have and apply a similar standard. See Robidoux v. Celani, 987 F.2d 931, 936 (2d Cir. 1993); Marcus v. BMW of North America, LLC, 687 F.3d 583, 595 (3d Cir. 2012); Harik v. Cal. Teachers Ass'n, 326 F.3d 1042, 1051 (9th Cir. 2003).

[63] Defendants' related argument that there is no evidence that the Slack-Filled Pepper Products contained nonfunctional slack-fill is addressed as part of the analysis of predominance. (See infra Section III.F.1.b.)

A second common question is whether the packaging of the Slack-Filled Pepper Products — to which all consumers were uniformly exposed — was deceptive or misleading. (See 2d Am. Compl. ¶¶ 119, 127.) As numerous courts have recognized, HN22[] "a claim concerning alleged misrepresentations on packaging to which all consumers were exposed is sufficient to satisfy the commonality requirement because it raises the common question of whether the packaging would mislead a reasonable consumer." *Broomfield v. Craft Brew Alliance, Inc., No. 17-cv-01027, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 177812, 2018 WL 4952519, at 5 (N.D. Cal. Sept. 25, 2018) (commonality satisfied by common question of whether representations on Kona Beer packaging would have deceived a reasonable consumer into believing beer was brewed in Hawaii).[64]

Both questions identified above are central to the validity of each class member's consumer protection and/or unjust enrichment claim and will drive the resolution of this litigation. Indeed, as discussed in the analysis of predominance, if plaintiffs do not prevail on either question, their claims will fail. (See infra [70] Section III.F.1.a & b.) Accordingly, the Court finds that each proposed single-state class satisfies the commonality requirement.

C. Typicality (Rule 23(a)(3))

HN23[] Rule 23(a)(3) requires that "the claims or defenses of the representative parties [be] typical of the claims or defenses of the class[.]" Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)(3). "Typicality differs from commonality in that typicality concerns the relationship between the representative's individual claims and the class's claims rather than the relatedness of the entire class's claims." J.D., 925 F.3d at 1322. "Yet they '[b]oth serve as guideposts for determining whether under the particular circumstances maintenance of a class action is economical.'" Id. (quoting Gen. Tel. Co. v. Falcon, 457 U.S. 147, 157 n.13, 102 S. Ct. 2364, 72 L. Ed. 2d 740 (1982)). The purpose of the typicality requirement is "to assess whether the action can be efficiently maintained as a class [action] and whether the named plaintiffs have incentives that align with those of the absent class members so as to assure that the absentees' interests will be fairly represented." Kifafi v. Hilton Hotels Ret. Plan, 189 F.R.D. 174, 177 (D.D.C. 1999).

HN24[] The typicality requirement is "liberally construed." In re Vitamins Antitrust Litig., 209 F.R.D. 251, 260 (D.D.C. 2002). "[T]o destroy typicality, a distinction must differentiate the 'claims or defenses' of the representatives from those of the class." J.D., 925 F.3d at 1322 (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)(3)). "As a result, typicality is ordinarily met 'if the claims [71] or defenses of the representatives and the members of the class stem from a single event or a unitary course of conduct, or if they are based on the same legal or remedial theory.'" Id. (quoting 7A Fed. Prac. & Proc. Civ. § 1764); see also Wal-Mart, 564 U.S. at 348-49 (a class representative must "possess the same interest and suffer the same injury as the [putative] class members"); In re Rail Freight Fuel Surcharge Antitrust Litig., 292 F. Supp. 3d 14, 94 (D.D.C. 2017) (typicality "is satisfied if each class member's claim arises from the same course of events that led to the claims of the representative parties and each class member makes similar legal arguments to prove the defendant's liability").

Plaintiffs initially proposed that all twelve named plaintiffs from the Second Amended Complaint be selected as class representatives — with each plaintiff acting as a representative for any proposed class [*238] of which he or she was a member. According to plaintiffs' opening brief, the named plaintiffs' claims and experiences were typical of the class because (1) they all "allege common wrongdoing by [d]efendants directed toward all class members," specifically "that the 'Black Pepper Net Weight Reduction' project . . . covertly raised prices to every single [p]laintiff and [c]lass member by decreasing the amount [72] of pepper in their non-transparent tins and grinders"; (2) they were all "victims" of defendants' deception because they "all purchased pepper products that contained less black pepper than such products previously had contained, even though the size of the package remained the same"; (3) they all "believed—at the time of their purchase—that they were purchasing a product that was full, rather than one that contained as much as 25% nonfunctional slack-fill"; and (4) that it did not matter that "they (and the absent class members) may have purchased different brands (e.g. McCormick vs. private label), varieties (e.g. ground vs. whole pepper), and sizes (e.g. 1.5 oz, 2 oz, 6 oz) of pepper" because their claims still arise from same course of conduct and rest on the same legal theories. (Pls.' Mem. at 11, 23-24.) Although defendants do not dispute any of plaintiffs' affirmative contentions, they persist in arguing that typicality is not satisfied.

Cal. 2015)* ("There is no question that all class members were exposed to the product packaging; this suffices to show commonality."); Mednick v. Precor, Inc., 320 F.R.D. 140, 151 (N.D. Ill. 2017) ("Courts routinely find that whether a product packaging, seen by all purchasers of the product, is misleading is an issue that satisfies commonality."); *White II, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 132466, 2018 WL 3748405, at 4 ("The question of whether the slack-fill in [defendant's] candy packaging violates the [Missouri consumer protection statute] will be susceptible to a common answer."); Randolph v. J.M. Smucker Co., 303 F.R.D. 679, 693 (S.D. Fla. 2014) ("[W]hether the 'All Natural' label is deceptive to an objective consumer is an issue common to all class members. Accordingly, the element of commonality is satisfied.").

Defendants initially argued that the deposition testimony of eight of the twelve proposed class representatives (Fernandez (Connecticut), Jones (District of Columbia), Pellitteri (Florida), Bittle (Illinois), Theis (Illinois), Robinson (Maryland), [73] Grindel (Missouri), and Gerstnecker (Pennsylvania)) revealed that they were not typical because they did not suffer the "same injury" as putative class members. (See Defs. Opp. at 17 n.23, 20-21.) Specifically, defendants argued that the testimony of these proposed class representatives "powerfully demonstrates that, for many consumers who purchase McCormick black pepper, they do so for reasons quite apart from the price or fill level." (McCormick's Opp. at 22; see also 7/10/18 Tr. at 66 (statement of defense counsel that "majority of [plaintiffs] testified they basically would have made the same purchase decision anyway because they like McCormick pepper, they've always bought it, their grandmother bought it, the husband likes the way it's — the granulation of it or whatever the reason was, they were perfectly happy to keep on buying it").)[65] According to defendants, this testimony is inconsistent with the injury alleged in the complaint — that plaintiffs "would not have paid for [d]efendants' black pepper had they known that the containers were under-filled" (2d Am. Compl. ¶ 122) — and thus, these proposed class representatives are not typical.

Plaintiffs did not respond to this argument in their reply brief. [74] When asked about it during the first motions hearing, plaintiffs' counsel told the Court that they did not believe that plaintiffs' deposition testimony, viewed in its entirety and leaving any credibility determinations to the trier of fact, was inconsistent with paragraph 122.[66] (See 7/10/18 Tr. at 29-31, 35-36.) They faulted defendants for "selectively" choosing quotes to support their characterizations of plaintiffs' testimony. (See 7/10/18 Tr. at 30.) As a fallback, plaintiffs argued that if the Court were to conclude that one or more of the challenged plaintiffs [*239] were "atypical," it would not matter as long as there remained at least one viable representative per class. (See 7/10/18 Tr. at 32, 36, 37.) Finally, plaintiffs proffered that if a proposed class was left without a viable class representative, they could, if permitted by the Court , easily substitute a new plaintiff. (See 7/10/18 Tr. at 40.)

In response to the Court's request that plaintiffs further address the typicality question as part of their supplemental briefing as to the consumer protection classes (see 9/18/18 Order at 1), plaintiffs abandoned their request that plaintiffs Bittle and Theis serve as class representatives [75] for Illinois and withdrew their request to certify consumer protection classes in Connecticut and the District of Columbia, thereby rendering moot the issue of whether plaintiffs Fernandez and Jones would satisfy the typicality requirement for those classes. (Pls.' Supp. Br. at 12.) They also submitted additional deposition testimony excerpts from the six remaining proposed class representatives for the consumer protection classes (Esparza and Marsh (California), Pellitteri (Florida), Liberov and Vladimirskiy (Illinois), and Grindel (Missouri)), which they argue demonstrates that each would testify, consistent with ¶ 122, that "I bought this believing that it was a hundred percent full, and I wouldn't have bought it if I had known [that it was not]." (10/24/18 Tr. at 32.; Pls.' Supp. Br. at 5, 7, 10, 12.)

In response, defendants argue that the proposed class representatives for the four remaining consumer protection classes do not satisfy typicality for two reasons: (1) none can "testify of their own personal knowledge about the fill level of the tins they purchased"; and (2) Grindel and Pellitteri are "brand loyal and pay no attention to price." (Defs.' Supp. Br. at 1-2 & n.2.) Neither [76] argument is persuasive.

[65] Defendants also reference the testimony of a former named plaintiff, Anne Marron, but her "typicality" is not at issue. Her testimony, though, remains part of the record even though she voluntarily dismissed her lawsuit after her deposition.

[66] Plaintiffs' counsel told the Court that plaintiffs "stand by th[e] allegation[]" in ¶ 122. (7/10/18 Tr. at 30.)

Defendants' first point, while accurate, has no bearing on typicality. Plaintiffs have never suggested that they intend to prove that the Slack-Filled Pepper Products contained nonfunctional slack-fill through the testimony of individual consumers, so the fact that the proposed class representatives cannot testify to actual fill levels does not render them atypical. In addition, the reason that plaintiffs cannot offer such testimony is not their fault; rather, defendants' conduct made it impossible for plaintiffs to see the actual fill line. Finally, and most importantly, the proposed class representatives are bringing the same claims, arising out of the same events, and pursuant to the same legal theories, as class members, which is the critical inquiry for typicality.

Defendants' second point is undercut by plaintiffs' submission of additional deposition testimony for Grindel and Pellitteri. While both testified that they are brand loyal, and in the past they paid little attention to price, they also testified that they would consider whether a pepper product contains nonfunctional slack-fill to be a material fact in their purchasing decisions. For example, [77] Pellitteri answered "yes" when asked if he "takes into account anything like the packaging of the product in making your purchase decision for pepper." (Pellitteri Dep. at 47.) He then explained that what he takes into account about the packaging is that "[i]t's just the same size can I've always bought." (Id.) He also testified that his complaint about the new reduced weights was that he was "being deceived"; he was "spending money [but] wasn't getting a full tin." (Id. at 21.) Finally, he was asked "[w]ould you have still bought the McCormick brand pepper" if McCormick "had simply raised the price by 25 percent," to which he responded "[i]t could sway me one way or the other." (Id. at 46.) Grindel testified that she would purchase McCormick pepper again "[o]nly if they change the label" to "make people [*240] aware that they changed the weight without changing the size of the can and somehow make restitution to all those people who have been duped into buying less pepper in the same size can." (Grindel Dep. at 16, 19.) Given that a consumer could be brand loyal and pay little attention to price, but also consider nonfunctional slack-fill to be a material fact, the Court finds that the testimony of these [78] two consumers does not conflict with plaintiffs' theory of liability.

Accordingly, the Court finds that the six proposed class representatives for the four single-state consumer protection classes satisfy the typicality requirement.[67]

D. Adequacy (Rule 23(a)(4))

HN25[] Rule 23(a)(4) requires plaintiffs to show that "the representative parties will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)(4). "The adequacy requirement aims to ensure that absent class members will not be bound by the outcome of a suit in which they were not competently and fairly represented." J.D., 925 F.3d at 1312. "Two criteria for determining the adequacy of representation are generally recognized: (1) the named representative must not have antagonistic or conflicting interests with the unnamed members of the class, and (2) the representative must appear able to vigorously prosecute the interests of the class through qualified counsel." Nat'l Ass'n of Regional Med. Programs, Inc. v. Mathews, 551 F.2d 340, 345, 179 U.S. App. D.C. 154 (D.C. Cir. 1976); see also J.D., 925 F.3d at 1312. "Among the many factors governing the district court's decision that the [class members] are adequately represented are the quality of class counsel, any disparity in interest between class representatives and members of a would-be subclass, communication between class counsel and the class, and the overall [79] context of the litigation." Twelve John Does v. District of Columbia, 117 F.3d 571, 575, 326 U.S. App. D.C. 17 (D.C. Cir. 1997).

Plaintiffs argue that these requirements have been satisfied. First, they note that "plaintiffs are members of the class(es) they seek to represent": each resides in the state he or she seeks to represent and purchased a Slack-

[67] As for the proposed single-state unjust enrichment classes, defendants challenge the typicality of seven of the proposed class representatives: Fernandez (Connecticut), Jones (District of Columbia), Bittle and Theis (Illinois), Robinson (Maryland), Grindel (Missouri), and Gerstnecker (Pennsylvania). (See McCormick's Opp. at 20-21.) Plaintiffs are presumably no longer seeking appointment of Bittle and Theis given that they withdrew their request to have them selected as class representatives for the Illinois consumer protection class, and the Court has determined that Grindel satisfies typicality. As for the others, there is no need to decide whether defendants' challenges to typicality have merit because, as explained infra, the unjust enrichment classes they propose to represent will not be certified for other reasons.

Filled Pepper Product for personal or household use. (Pls.' Mem. at 25 (citing 2d Am. Compl. ¶¶ 10-21).) Next, they contend that "[t]here are no conflicts of any kind between [the proposed representatives'] interests and the interests of the [c]lasses" because the representatives, like class members, "have an interest in obtaining compensation from [d]efendants for the unfair, deceptive, and misleading conduct of under-filling their pepper products" and because "[p]laintiffs' claims can only be successful if the claims of all [c]lass members are successful. (Id.) They also maintain that "the proposed representatives . . . have demonstrated their commitment to pursuing these claims on behalf of absent class members" because each "has responded to written discovery requests . . . [and] sat for a deposition." (Id.)[68]

[*241] Defendants do not challenge any of plaintiffs' affirmative assertions, which the Court finds to be supported by the [80] record. Indeed, in their initial briefing defendants did not address adequacy. In their supplemental filing, they merely asserted that the proposed class representatives for the single-state consumer protection classes are not adequate for the same reasons they are not typical. (See Defs.' Supp. Br. at 1-2.) These arguments, however, have already been rejected by the Court. (See supra Section III.C.)

Accordingly, the Court conclusdes that the adequacy requirement is satisfied for all the proposed single-state classes.

E. Ascertainability

HN26[] Rule 23 does not expressly require that a class be "ascertainable," and the D.C. Circuit "has not addressed whether Rule 23 contains an ascertainability requirement for class certification." J.D., 925 F.3d at 1320. Nonetheless, defendants argue that the proposed classes fail to satisfy the requirement of "ascertainability," which they claim requires that the class be defined by "objective criteria" and that it be "administratively feasible" for the court to determine whether a particular individual is a member. (McCormick's Opp. at 7.)

Most federal circuits (unlike the D.C. Circuit) have held that "ascertainability" is an implied requirement under Rule 23. See Sandusky Wellness Ctr., LLC v. Medtox Scientific, Inc., 821 F.3d 992, 995 (8th Cir. 2016) (citing cases from First, Second, Third, Fourth, Fifth, [81] Sixth, Seventh, Ninth and Eleventh Circuits). However, the circuits "diverge" as to the meaning of ascertainability. Id. HN27[] As a baseline, courts generally agree that ascertainability means that a class definition must render potential class members identifiable according to objective criteria. See, e.g., Mullins v. Direct Digital, LLC, 795 F.3d 654, 657 (7th Cir. 2015) ("[A] class must be defined clearly and . . . by objective criteria rather than by, for example, a class member's state of mind."); In re Petrobras Sec., 862 F.3d 250, 257 (2d Cir. 2017) (class should be "defined using objective criteria that establish a membership with definite boundaries"); 1 Newberg on Class Actions § 3:3 ("All courts essentially focus on the question of whether the class can be ascertained by objective criteria."). The Third Circuit has added the additional requirement that "[t]he method of determining whether someone is in the class must be administratively feasible," Carrera v. Bayer Corp., 727 F.3d 300, 307 (3d Cir. 2013)),[69] while the Seventh and Ninth Circuits have expressly rejected that interpretation.[70]

[68] Plaintiffs also assert that "[p]laintiffs' Interim Co-Lead Counsel are qualified to lead a certified class." (Pls.' Mem. at 25.) The adequacy of counsel is addressed infra Section III.H.

[69] The Eleventh Circuit has also endorsed administrative feasibility in an unpublished opinion. See Karhu v. Vital Pharms., Inc., 621 Fed. Appx. 945, 950 (11th Cir. 2015) ("[A] plaintiff establishes Rule 23's implicit ascertainability requirement by proposing an administratively feasible method by which class members can be identified."). But the unpublished decision in Karhu is not "binding precedent," see U.S. Ct. of App. 11th Cir. R. 36-2, and it appears to conflict with published Eleventh Circuit decisions approving the certification of classes that raise the same type of administrative feasibility issues. See, e.g., Fitzpatrick, 635 F.3d at 1283 (approving class certification subject to the district court on remand defining the class to include all purchasers of YoPlus yogurt during the relevant time period).

Absent any controlling precedent in the D.C. Circuit, the first question for the [*242] Court is which ascertainability test should be applied. See In re Korean Air Lines Disaster, 829 F.2d at 1176. Although only the Seventh and Ninth Circuits have expressly rejected imposition of an administrative feasibility [82] requirement, often referred to as "heightened ascertainability," the Sixth and Eighth Circuits have done so by implication,[71] and the remaining circuits have not clearly adopted a position.[72]

The transferor courts for the majority of the cases in this MDL (13) are in circuits that have not adopted "administrative feasibility" as part of ascertainability.[73] See In re Korean Air Lines Disaster, 829 F.2d at 1176 ("the law of a transferor forum on a federal question . . . merits close consideration"). Moreover, HN28[] the reasoning of those courts that have rejected this requirement is persuasive. As those courts have noted, "[n]othing in Rule 23 mentions or implies this heightened requirement." Mullins v. Direct Digital, 795 F.3d at 658. In addition, such a requirement would "skew[] the balance that district courts must strike when deciding whether to certify classes," id., and would likely be the death-knell to consumer protection class actions involving low-cost products. See id. at 668 ("class certification provides the only meaningful possibility for bona fide class members to recover anything at all"); Briseno v. ConAgra Foods, Inc., 844 F.3d 1121, 1129 (9th Cir. 2017) ("[L]ow-value consumer class actions . . . typically involve low-cost consumer products and, as a result, recoveries too small to incentivize individual litigation.").[74]

[70] See Mullins v. Direct Digital, 795 F.3d at 662 ("Nothing in Rule 23 mentions or implies this heightened requirement under Rule 23(b)."); Briseno v. ConAgra Foods, Inc., 844 F.3d 1121, 1123 (9th Cir. 2017) ("A separate administrative feasibility prerequisite to class certification is not compatible with the language of Rule 23.").

[71] Sandusky Wellness Ctr., LLC v. Medtox Scientific, Inc., 821 F.3d 992, 995 (8th Cir. 2016) (ascertainability is not a separate preliminary requirement but part of a "rigorous analysis of the Rule 23 requirements"); see Rikos v. P&G, 799 F.3d 497, 525 (6th Cir. 2015) (explaining that for "a class to be sufficiently defined, the court must be able to resolve the question of whether class members are included or excluded from the class by reference to objective criteria").

[72] Compare In re Petrobras Sec., 862 F.3d at 264 (2d Cir. 2017) (rejecting "freestanding administrative feasibility requirement" as a prerequisite to class certification) with Brecher v. Republic of Argentina, 806 F.3d 22, 24 (2d Cir. 2015) ("the touchstone of ascertainability is whether the class is sufficiently definite so that it is administratively feasible for the court to determine whether a particular individual is a member."); see also EQT Prod. Co. v. Adair, 764 F.3d 347, 358 (4th Cir. 2014) (recognizing "an implicit threshold requirement that the members of a proposed class be readily identifiable . . . in reference to objective criteria"); John v. Nat'l Sec Fire & Cas. Co., 501 F.3d 443, 445 (5th Cir. 2007) ("The existence of an ascertainable class of persons to be represented by the proposed class representative is an implied prerequisite of [Rule 23].").

[73] Eight cases originated in California, Illinois or Nevada (Seventh and Ninth Circuits); one case came from Missouri (Eighth Circuit); one case came from New York (Second Circuit); and three cases were filed in the District of Columbia. The two remaining cases came from Pennsylvania (Third Circuit) and Florida (Eleventh Circuit). However, plaintiffs are not seeking to certify a consumer protection class in Pennsylvania and the unjust enrichment class will not be certified for other reasons. In addition, as noted, the Eleventh Circuit has only endorsed the administrative feasibility test in an unpublished opinion, see Karhu, 621 Fed. App'x at 950, although several district courts in Florida have followed that decision. See, [83] e.g., Randolph, 303 F.R.D. at 684-85 (putative class not ascertainable as plaintiff had not offered feasible mechanism for identifying purchasers of oils containing "All Natural" label).However, under the D.C. Circuit's opinion in In re Korean Air Lines Disaster, this Court must, in the case of a circuit split, only apply one interpretation of Rule 23, and where there is no D.C. Circuit precedent on point, "the transferee court [should] be free to decide a federal claim in the manner it views as correct without deferring to the interpretation of the transferor circuit." 829 F.3d at 1174; see also supra pp. 30-32 & n.43.

[74] Part of the Third Circuit's justification for imposing a heightened ascertainability requirement was its conclusion that defendants "must be able to challenge class membership" and that absent class members' claims should be protected from dilution "by fraudulent or inaccurate claims." Carrera, 727 F.3d at 309-10. But, as the Seventh and Ninth Circuits have pointed out, these issues do not arise in a case (like this one) where the amount of damages is the same for each unit sold and liability can be determined on an aggregate basis by multiplying that amount by the number of units sold during the class period. See Briseno, 844 F.3d at 1132; Mullins v. Direct Digital, 795 F.3d at 670. Under those circumstances, "the identity of particular class members does not implicate the defendant's due process interest . . . because the addition or subtraction of individual class [*243] Accordingly, plaintiffs need only establish that the proposed classes are defined by "objective criteria." Plaintiffs' proposed class definitions satisfy this requirement: each proposed class includes residents of a particular state who purchased a Slack-Filled Pepper Product, and the Slack-Filled Pepper Products are identified by brand, container size, type of pepper, and a unique SKU number. The Court therefore finds that the proposed single-state classes satisfy ascertainability.

F. Predominance (Rule 23(b)(3))

HN29[] To authorize a class action under Rule 23(b)(3), the court must "find[] that the questions of law or fact common to class members predominate over any questions affecting only individual members." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3).

HN30[] Rule 23(b)(3)'s predominance requirement is "more demanding" than the commonality requirement of Rule 23(a). See Comcast, 569 U.S. at 34. It "tests whether proposed classes are sufficiently cohesive to warrant adjudication by representation," Amchem, 521 U.S. at 623, by "ask[ing] whether the common, aggregation-enabling, issues in the case are more prevalent or important than the non-common, aggregation-defeating, individual issues." Tyson Foods, Inc. v. Bouaphakeo, 136 S. Ct. 1036, 1045, 194 L. Ed. 2d 124 (2016). Thus, the predominance inquiry > calls upon courts to give careful scrutiny to the relation [84] between common and individual questions in a case. An individual question is one where "members of a proposed class will need to present evidence that varies from member to member," while a common question is one where "the same evidence will suffice for each member to make a prima facie showing [or] the issue is susceptible to generalized, class-wide proof."

Id. (quoting 2 Newberg on Class Actions § 4:50 at 196-97 (5th ed. 2012)). "When one or more of the central issues in the action are common to the class and can be said to predominate, the action may be considered proper under Rule 23(b)(3) even though other important matters will have to be tried separately, such as damages or some affirmative defenses peculiar to individual class members . . . ." Id.

HN31[] "In determining whether class or individual issues predominate in a putative class action suit, [courts] must take into account the claims, defenses, relevant facts, and applicable substantive law, to assess the degree to which resolution of the classwide issues will further each individual class member's claim against the defendant." Klay, 382 F.3d at 1254; see also *In re Tropicana Orange Juice Mktg. & Sales Practices Litig., No. 2:11-cv-07382, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 102566, 2019 WL 2521958, at 6 (D.N.J. June 18, 2019) ("The Court must examine [85] through the prism of Rule 23(b)(3) the elements of each of the causes of action for certification and ask whether proof of the essential elements require individual treatment."). But ultimately, the predominance standard [*244] is a "pragmatic" one. McKinney v. U.S. Postal Serv., 292 F.R.D. 62, 65 (D.D.C. 2013); see also In re Vitamins, 209 F.R.D. at 262 ("There is no definitive test for determining whether common issues predominate . . . ."); see also Butler v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 727 F.3d 796, 801 (7th Cir. 2013) ("[P]redominance requires a qualitative assessment . . . ; it is not bean counting.").

HN32[] Plaintiffs bear the burden of satisfying Rule 23(b)(3) "through evidentiary proof." Comcast, 569 U.S. at 33 (quoting Wal-Mart, 564 U.S. at 350), which includes "establish[ing] that damages are capable of measurement on a classwide basis." Comcast, 569 U.S. at 35. With the application of only one state's law, it is undisputed that any questions of law are common, so the focus of the predominance analysis for the single-state classes is on questions of fact. The Court will first address the four single-state consumer protection classes, as to which it finds that in three of the four states, plaintiffs have sufficient evidentiary proof to satisfy predominance. It will then turn to the seven single-state unjust enrichment classes, finding that each fails to satisfy predominance.

members affects neither the defendant's liability nor the total amount of damages it owes to the class." Briseno, 844 F.3d at 1132 (quoting Mullins v. Direct Digital, 795 F.3d at 670). In addition, the amount of damages per unit is so small as to discourage fraudulent claims.

1. Single-State Consumer Protection Classes

Plaintiffs' single-state consumer [86] protection classes seek to bring claims under the following state consumer protection statutes: (1) the California Consumer Legal Remedies Act, Cal. Civ. Code § 1770 ("CLRA"), and the California Unfair Competition Law, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 ("UCL"); (2) the Florida Deceptive and Unfair Trade Practices Act ("FDUTPA"), Florida Stat. § 501.201, et seq.; (3) the Illinois Consumer Fraud and Deceptive Practices Act ("ICFA"), 815 Ill. Comp. Stat. Ann. § 505/1, et seq.; and (4) the Missouri Merchandising Practices Act ("MMPA"), Mo. Ann.. Stat. § 407.010, et seq.

To decide whether plaintiffs have proven predominance for each proposed class, the Court will first consider four issues that are common to all four states, and it will then analyze the state-specific differences.

a. Deception

HN33[] Each state's consumer protection law requires proof of an unfair or deceptive act.[75] Although the states vary in how they define deception, proof of deception in each is judged by an objective, reasonable consumer standard[76] and can be satisfied [*245] in each state without any individualized proof of reliance.[77] In addition, the alleged deception here is subject to common proof. Most importantly, it is undisputed that the purchasers of the Slack-Filled Pepper Products were uniformly exposed to the same alleged misrepresentation — pepper containers

[75] In California, the CLRA prohibits "unfair or deceptive acts or practices undertaken by any person in a transaction intended to result or that results in the sale or lease of goods or services to any consumer[.]" Cal. Civ. Code § 1770(a). The UCL prohibits "unfair competition," which includes "any unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business act or practice." Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200. In Florida, the FDUTPA prohibits "[u]nfair methods of competition, unconscionable acts or practices, and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any trade or commerce." Fla. Stat. Ann. § 501.204(1). In Illinois, the ICFA prohibits "[u]nfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices, including but not limited to the use or employment of any deception, fraud, false pretense, false promise, misrepresentation or the concealment, suppression or omission of any material fact, with intent that others rely upon the concealment, suppression or omission of such material fact . . . in the conduct of any trade or commerce." 815 Ill. Comp. Stat. Ann. § 505/2. In Missouri, the MMPA declares unlawful the use of "any deception, fraud, false pretense, false promise, misrepresentation, unfair practice or the concealment, suppression, or omission of any material fact in connection with the sale or advertisement of any merchandise." Mo. Ann. Stat. § 407.020.

[76] In the four states, claims of deceptive conduct are governed by the objective, "reasonable consumer" test. See Hadley v. Kellogg Sales Co., 324 F. Supp. 3d 1084, 1116 (N.D. Cal. 2018) (in California, a "[p]laintiff must 'show that members of the public are likely to be deceived,'" which requires "an objective showing of a probability that a 'significant portion' of the relevant consumers acting reasonably 'could be misled'" (quoting Ebner v. Fresh, Inc., 838 F.3d 958, 965 (9th Cir. 2016))); PNR, Inc. v. Beacon Prop. Mgmt., Inc., 842 So. 2d 773, 777 (Fla. 2003) (in Florida, a "deceptive act" is "a representation, omission, or practice that is likely to mislead the consumer acting reasonably in the circumstances, to the consumer's detriment"); Mednick v. Precor, Inc., 320 F.R.D. at 151 (in Illinois, a claim of deceptive packaging requires proof that "the packaging was likely to deceive a reasonable consumer" (quoting Suchanek v. Sturm Foods, Inc., 764 F.3d 750, 757 (7th Cir. 2014))); *Webb v. Dr Pepper Snapple Grp., Inc.,, No. 4:17-cv-00624, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 71270, 2018 WL 1955422, at *3 (W.D. Mo. [77] See, e.g., Bradach v. Pharmavite, LLC, 735 F. App'x 251, 254 (9th Cir. 2018) (unpublished) ("[C]lass members in CLRA and UCL actions are not required to prove their individual reliance on the allegedly misleading statements."); Cold Stone Creamery, Inc. v. Lenora Foods I, LLC, 332 F. App'x 565, 567 (11th Cir. 2009) ("the FDUTPA does not require a plaintiff to prove actual reliance on the alleged conduct") (unpublished); *Flynn v. that did not have visible [87] fill lines and that allegedly contained nonfunctional slack-fill. There is also ample common evidence that the challenged action was deceptive. That evidence includes:

(1) the product packaging itself — the tin containers and the opaque labels both hid the fill levels from consumers at the time of purchase and ensured that the fill levels were not apparent even after the product was opened (see Fegan Decl. ¶¶ 62-64, 66-68, 81 (citing Pls.' Ex. 110), ¶ 82 (citing Pls.' Ex.. 143); Powerpoint at 4);

(2) McCormick's internal documents, which reflect a conscious decision to try to hide a price increase from consumers by reducing the net weight of the product without changing the container size (see, e.g., Fegan Decl. ¶ 27 (citing Pls.' Ex. 105), ¶ 9 (citing Pls.' Ex. 107), ¶ 37 (citing Pls.' Ex. 113), ¶ 40 (citing Pls.' Ex. 115));

(3) federal and state laws and regulations that directly or indirectly deem nonfunctional slack-fill misleading or deceptive, see 21 C.F.R. § 100.100(a) (nonfunctional slack-fill in opaque containers is "misleading")); Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 12606.2(c) (same); Fla. Stat. Ann. § 500.11 (food is "misbranded . . . [i]f its container is so made, formed, or filled as to be misleading); Mo. Ann. Stat. § 196.075 (same); 815 Ill. Comp. Stat. Ann. 510/2 (unfair or deceptive [88] acts include "[r]epresenting that goods . . . have . . . quantities that they do not have"); see also Hawkins v. Nestle U.S.A. Inc., 309 F. Supp. 3d 696, 703 (E.D. Mo. 2018) ("Regardless of whether [p]laintiff may prove her MMPA claim by pointing to [a] violation [of the federal slack-fill regulation] . . . the existence of the Federal prohibition against slack-fill supports the reasonableness of a consumer's belief that the package of candy she purchases will not have 45% non-functional slack-fill."); and

(4) decisions on motions to dismiss by courts in California, Illinois and Missouri that recognize that a plausible allegation [*246] that a consumer product violates the federal prohibition on nonfunctional slack-fill in an opaque container states a claim for a deceptive act under that state's consumer protection statute, see, e.g., *Kamal v. Eden Creamery, LLC, No. 18-cv-01298, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 107263, 2019 WL 2617041, at 14 (S.D. Cal. June 26, 2019) (ice cream); *Escobar v. Just Born Inc., No. 17-cv-01826, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 186573, 2017 WL 5125740, at 14 (C.D. Cal. June 12, 2017) (candy); Stemm v. Tootsie Roll Indus., 374 F. Supp. 3d 734, 741-42 (N.D. Ill. 2019); Hawkins, 309 F. Supp. 3d at 703 (candy); *Benson v. Fannie May Confections Brands, Inc., No. 17-cv-3519, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 32781, 2018 WL 1087639, at 5 (N.D. Ill. Feb. 28, 2018) (candy).

For purposes of class certification, therefore, whether defendants' alleged conduct constituted a deceptive act under each state's consumer protection statute is a common question susceptible to common proof.

b. Existence of Nonfunctional [89] Slack-Fill

Underlying plaintiffs' claim that defendants' alleged actions constituted deception under each state's consumer protection law is the common factual allegation that the Slack-Filled Pepper Products contained nonfunctional slack-fill. (See Powerpoint at 7-8.) Although this is a common question capable of classwide proof, see infra Section III.B, defendants argue that the evidence shows that plaintiffs will not be able to prove a "uniform reduction in fill " so individualized inquiries will be required to prove the existence of nonfunctional slack-fill for each class member. Defendants' argument suffers from two fatal flaws.

First, defendants assert that "there is zero common evidentiary support for plaintiffs' claims of a uniform reduction in fill." (McCormick's Opp.. at 18-19; see also 7/10/18 Tr. at 128 ("absolutely no evidence that anything was slack-filled").) But this contention is not supported by the record. To justify this assertion, defendants point out that: (1) none of the named plaintiffs observed the fill level of any black pepper product that he or she purchased; and (2) the "uncontroverted" Hester Declaration states that the fill levels of pepper containers after the weight reduction program was implemented [90] varied but were still maintained at anywhere from 80% to 100% full. (See Hester Decl. ¶¶ 11-13.) However, the absence of a certain type of evidence (plaintiffs' testimony as to actual fill levels) or the existence of contrary evidence (the Hester Declaration) does not necessarily mean that there is "zero" evidentiary support for plaintiffs' allegation that the pepper products contained nonfunctional slack-fill. In addition, plaintiffs cannot be criticized for their inability to testify to actual fill levels since this inability is attributable to the success of defendants' deception. Nor should plaintiffs be faulted for the absence of any contemporaneous fill records that might have challenged the "uncontroverted" Hester Declaration since McCormick chose not to keep such records. (See 7/10/18 Tr. at 88.) More importantly, defendants ignore plaintiffs' affirmative evidence that the Slack-Filled Pepper Products contained non-functional slack-fill, including corporate records that document the adoption of the Net Weight Reduction Project; pictures showing visual fill differences between the old and new products; a reduced weight on the container; and corporate documents that reflect internal [91] discussions about the deceptive nature of the inadequate fill levels. (See Powerpoint at 4; Pls.' Exs. 125, 130, 133, 140, 141, 143.)

Second, even if plaintiffs may not be able to prove a "uniform reduction in fill," a failure of proof will not mean that individualized inquiries would be required. Plaintiffs' theory of liability is that McCormick's decision to reduce the net weight in [*247] certain lines of pepper products (identified by UPC codes) resulted in those products having reduced fill levels by approximately the same percentage as the weight reductions. All class members' claims rest on this common contention. If they are unable to prove this allegation, then their claims will fail. Thus, whether plaintiffs will be able to prove the existence of nonfunctional slack-fill is solely a merits issue and has no relevance to class certification. *See, e.g., Hilsley, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 202679, 2018 WL 6300479, at 5 ("On class certification, the Court does not resolve issues of disputed facts."); Alcantar, 800 F.3d at 1053 ("We conclude that the district court erred in denying class certification because it evaluated the merits rather than focusing on whether the questions presented—meritorious or not—were common to the class.").

Accordingly, the Court finds that whether there was nonfunctional [92] slack-fill in the Slack-Filled Pepper Products is a common question for purposes of Rule 23(b)(3).

C. Damages

In Comcast, the Supreme Court held that HN34[] in order to prove predominance plaintiffs have to "establish[] that damages are capable of measurement on a classwide basis." 569 U.S. at 35. "Calculations need not be exact, but . . . any model supporting a plaintiff's damages case must be consistent with its liability case." Id. The Court explained that it was imposing this burden on plaintiffs because otherwise "[q]uestions of individual damage calculations will inevitably overwhelm questions common to the class." Id.

Plaintiffs' theory of liability is straightforward — consumers were deceived into paying for a "full" container of pepper when in fact they received a container with nonfunctional slack-fill. They submitted an expert report from Dr. Armando Levy to demonstrate that two theories of injury/damages could be calculated on a classwide basis: "out-of-pocket loss" and "benefit of the bargain." (Levy Rep. ¶¶ 10-11.) Levy concludes that under either theory damages can be estimated as the value of the missing black pepper (the "overcharge"). (Levy Rep. ¶¶ 13, 32.) He then proposes that the overcharge could [93] be calculated taking the percentage reduction in weight (e.g., 25% for the 4-ounce container that became a 3-ounce container) and multiplying that by the average price of the product. (Levy Rep. ¶ 32.) The damages for each product code could then be calculated by multiplying the overcharge by the number of units sold, and the total damages would be the sum of those damages for each product code. (Levy Rep. ¶ 33.)

Defendants object to Dr. Levy's proposed method of calculating damages on several grounds and have moved to exclude his report and opinions. None of their arguments is persuasive.

First, defendants object to Dr. Levy's use of net weight because plaintiffs' theory of liability is based on an alleged reduction in volume. But using a weight reduction as a proxy for volume reduction is consistent with plaintiffs' theory of liability — that the weight reduction resulted in a comparable volume reduction. In fact, defendants' contention that it had to overfill its products in order to maintain its self-imposed minimum fill level, even if that exceeded the net weight represented on the package, is consistent with that theory.

Defendants also argue that plaintiffs have not provided any [94] methodology for determining individual damages. (See McCormick's Opp. at 25 ("To determine what amount any purchaser might claim, one would have to know which specific product(s) the individual purchased, how many of each and at what price(s).")). But HN35[] plaintiffs "[a]t the class certification stage . . . are not required to prove damages by calculating specific damages figures [*248] for each member of the class, but rather they must show that a reliable method is available to prove damages on a classwide basis." In re Wellbutrin XL Antitrust Litig., 282 F.R.D. 126, 144 (E.D. Pa. 2011); see also Louisiana Wholesale Drug Co., Inc. v. Pfizer, Inc. (In re Neurontin Antitrust Litig.), No. 02-1390, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7453, 2011 WL 286118, at *9 (D.N.J. Jan. 25, 2011) (plaintiffs "need only show that a viable method is available to prove damages on a class-wide basis"); Kleen Prods. LLC v. Int'l Paper Co., 831 F.3d 919, 929 (7th Cir. 2016) ("[A]t the class certification stage, plaintiffs are not obliged to drill down and estimate each individual class member's damages."). "The mere fact that damage awards will ultimately require individualized fact determinations is insufficient by itself to preclude class certification." Hoyte v. District of Columbia, 325 F.R.D. 485, 494 (D.D.C. 2017) (quoting McCarthy v. Kleindienst, 741 F.2d 1406, 1415, 239 U.S. App. D.C. 247 (D.C. Cir. 1984)).

While it may well be a challenge to figure out how to identify class members and to allocate damages among them, plaintiffs have met their burden at the class certification stage to prove that damages are calculable on a classwide basis.

d. Extrinsic Evidence of Consumer Perceptions and Behavior

[95] According to defendants, plaintiffs cannot satisfy the predominance requirement because "common evidence such as empirical research, surveys, studies or expert testimony demonstrating consumer perceptions is required" in order for plaintiffs to prove "materiality/causation/injury" on a classwide basis. (Defs.' Supp. Br. at 9.)

Typically, plaintiffs do rely on such extrinsic evidence at the class certification stage. See, e.g., Farar v. Bayer AG, No. 14-cv-04601, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 193729, 2017 WL 5952876, at *12 (N.D. Cal. Nov. 15, 2017) (plaintiffs proffered market research to show that claims that multivitamins are good for heart health, immunity, and physical energy are material); Suchanek v. Sturm Foods, Inc., 764 F.3d 750, 752 (7th Cir. 2014) (plaintiffs proffered marketing studies, expert surveys, and focus-group testing to show that whether the coffee in coffee pods for the Keurig coffee machine is instant or ground is material); In re ConAgra Foods, Inc., 90 F. Supp. 3d 919, 1018 (C.D. Cal. 2015) (plaintiffs proffered third-party surveys and market research to support their contention that the "100% Natural" label on Wesson Oils is material), aff'd sub nom. Briseno v. ConAgra Foods, Inc., 844 F.3d 1121 (9th Cir. 2017) and 674 F. App'x 654 (9th Cir. 2017); Kumar v. Salov N. Am. Corp., No. 14-cv-2411, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 92374, 2016 WL 3844334, at *8 (N.D. Cal. July 15, 2016) (plaintiffs proffered market research and expert testimony to prove that the representation that olive oil was "Imported from Italy" is material); Hadley v. Kellogg Sales Co., 324 F. Supp. 3d 1084, 1115 (N.D. Cal. 2018) (plaintiff proffered market [96] research and expert testimony of a marketing expert to show that health benefit claims on cereal products are material).

Plaintiffs concede they do not have this type of evidence. (See 10/24/18 Tr. at 73 ("[W]e made the strategic decision . . . not to do a consumer survey. . . . [O]bviously this Court would find it helpful, and I recognize that.").) But they argue that such evidence is not required because they have other evidence of materiality, specifically the "slack-fill regulations [which] demonstrate that a reasonable consumer would consider whether a product contains nonfunctional slack-fill to be material" and "[d]efendants' documents show[ing] that price is material to pepper consumers." (Pls.' McCormick Reply at 8-9; see also Pls.' Supp. Resp. at 5-6 ("[d]efendants' documents . . . demonstrate how reasonable consumers interact with and make decisions about the products at issue"); id. at 8-10 ("the regulations prohibiting such packaging demonstrate the misleading nature and materiality of the same"); [*249] 10/24/18 Tr. at 73 (plaintiffs "made the decision to submit the record as it is" "given that we had the regulation and we had defendant's documents" as evidence of materiality).)

Plaintiffs' [97] evidence of materiality is, at best, meager. While the regulatory prohibition of nonfunctional slack-fill is expressly tied to deceptiveness, its evidentiary value for proving materiality is less clear. Compare Kumar, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 92374, 2016 WL 3844334, at *8 (prohibition on misrepresenting a good's country of origin is evidence of materiality) with Victor v. R.C. Bigelow, Inc., No. 13-cv-02976, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 34550, 2014 WL 1028881, at *17 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 14, 2014) ("what a reasonable consumer expects . . . may have absolutely no relation to FDA regulations").

As for McCormick's corporate documents. plaintiffs rely on fewer than a dozen internal company communications. (See Powerpoint at 25-29 (citing Pls.' Exs. 113, 133, 139, 142); Pls.' Supp. Resp. at 5-6 (citing Fegan Decl. ¶¶ 25, 27, 37, 38, 78-79, 82 (relying on Pls.' Exs. 104, 105, 106, 112, 113, 142, and 143)).) Several show that McCormick employees thought that raising shelf prices was not a viable option so they came up with the alternative plan of reducing fill.[78] The documents also show that McCormick employees were concerned that consumers might react negatively if they realized that the weight reduction was a "price increase in disguise."[79] Other documents show that McCormick wanted to hide this effective price increase from consumers by keeping the same container [98] sizes with no visible fill lines,[80] and that it took an additional step to avoid discovery by enlisting the private-labels, including Wal-Mart, to make the same changes.[81] Finally, the [*250] documents show that in May 2015, a Wal-Mart employee opined that the reduced-weight products had "too much air space."[82]

Plaintiffs argue that "the corporate strategies reflected in [d]efendants' documents, which are based on their own research and experience, demonstrate how reasonable consumers interact with and make decisions about the products at issue." (Pls.' Supp. Resp. at 5-6) see also 10/24/18 Tr. at 26 (documents "reflect[] [McCormick's] consumer marketing and brand teams that do exactly that type of research [and] that are discussing what they believe consumers will do based on their experience").) Contrary to plaintiffs' insinuations, there is no reference in the documents to research or studies of consumer perceptions or behavior. Rather, we only learn that McCormick employees were concerned about fill levels, price and deception, arguably because they believed consumers would find those to be material considerations.

Unlike the "internal documents" that other courts have relied [99] upon in finding plaintiffs' evidence of materiality to be sufficient, these documents do not include or reflect actual market research or consumer surveys. See, e.g., Kumar, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 92374, 2016 WL 3844334, at *8 (internal documents included defendant's "own market research evidence, along with other industry research, to show that Italian origin is important to consumers'

Apr. 15, 2016) (internal documents included defendant's own "[m]arketing research suggest[ing] the overwhelming majority of [the product's] users purchased the product to obtain [the represented health] benefits" that plaintiffs were challenging).

Indeed, some courts have found that evidence of a defendant's opinion as to materiality is not an adequate substitute for extrinsic evidence. See, e.g., In re 5-Hour Energy Mktg. & Sales Practices Litig., No. 13-ml-2438, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 220969, 2017 WL 2559615, at *7 (C.D. Cal. June 7, 2017) (testimony of [*251] defendant's former marketing director was insufficient because it "addresse[d] only how [defendant] perceived its own branding techniques, and not how consumers reacted to the product name or the alleged misstatements on the [product's] label"); Cormier v. Carrier Corp., No. 2:18-cv-07030, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 53222, 2019 WL 1398903, at *13 (C.D. Cal. Mar. 25, 2019) (rejecting plaintiffs' argument that "materiality can be proven on a classwide basis because . . . [the defendant] itself believed that the alleged defect was material" on the ground that "the materiality [101] analysis focuses on whether a reasonable consumer-not [the defendant]-would have considered information about the alleged defect to be important in their decision to purchase").

Given the relatively limited showing of materiality, the Court must confront the question whether plaintiffs' evidence of materiality is enough for class certification in each of the four states. This question is not susceptible to a uniform answer; nor are there many cases to guide the Court in its search for an answer. In addition, in at least two of the states, there is arguably tension between two Supreme Court cases, Amgen and Comcast, which bear on this subject. In Amgen, the Court considered whether plaintiffs in a securities fraud case had to proffer evidence of materiality to prove predominance. The Court held that they did not because (1) for purposes of Rule 23(b)(3), "materiality" was necessarily a "common question" because it was judged by an "objective standard," Amgen, 568 U.S. at 467 ("because [t]he question of materiality . . . is an objective one, involving the significance of an omitted or misrepresented fact to a reasonable investor, materiality can be proved through evidence common to the class"); and (2) "a failure of proof [102] on the issue of materiality would end the case for one and for all," id. at 468. Thus, the Court concluded that "[a]s to materiality, therefore, the class is entirely cohesive: It will prevail or fail in unison. In no event will the individual circumstances of particular class members bear on the inquiry." Id. at 460. In reaching its decision, the Court emphasized that HN36[] to gain certification under Rule 23(b)(3), plaintiffs need not establish that they will "win the fray" because "the office of a Rule 23(b)(3) certification ruling is not to adjudicate the case; rather, it is to select the 'metho[d]' best suited to adjudication of the controversy 'fairly and efficiently.'" Id.

A month later, the Supreme Court emphasized that HN37[] a party seeking class certification "must . . . satisfy [Rule 23(b)(3)] through evidentiary proof." Comcast, 569 U.S. at 33. But, in Comcast, the Court only addressed the scope of plaintiffs' evidentiary burden with respect to damages.

Only a few courts have grappled with the question of what "evidentiary proof" is needed to satisfy Rule 23(b)(3). As discussed more extensively infra, several recent California cases, including a decision by the Ninth Circuit, have held that in light of the objective standard for materiality under California law, extrinsic evidence [103] of materiality is not required. See Bradach v. Pharmavite, LLC, 735 F. App'x 251, 254 (9th Cir. 2018) (unpublished);

Hadley, 324 F. Supp. 3d at 1115.[83] But the Seventh Circuit's decision in Suchanek and several subsequent district court cases in Illinois strongly suggest that even when materiality is judged by an [*252] objective standard, extrinsic evidence of materiality may be necessary for class certification of a consumer protection claim where there may be several explanations for consumers' behavior and motivations. See Suchanek, 764 F.3d at 760-61; Langendorf v. Skinnygirl Cocktails, LLC, 306 F.R.D. 574, 582-83 (N.D. Ill. 2014); *Clark v. Bumbo Int'l Trust, No. 15-cv-2725, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 137607, 2017 WL 3704825, at 6-8 (N.D. Ill. Aug. 28, 2017). In contrast, courts in Florida and Missouri have not addressed the issue.

Given the above, the Court cannot accept defendants' argument that plaintiffs must proffer extrinsic evidence of materiality/causation/injury across-the-board in order to prove predominance under Rule 23, irrespective of the product involved, the type of deception, the elements of the relevant state consumer protection statute, and the state court decisions interpreting those statutes. Thus, the Court will revisit this issue in the context of its analysis of each state's consumer protection statute.

a. California Consumer Protection Class

Given California federal and state case law, the Court concludes that a class can [104] be certified under the California consumer protection statutes.

HN38[] To prevail on a claim under the CLRA, plaintiffs must prove a deceptive act, causation of injury and reliance on the deceptive practice. See *Hilsley, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 202679, 2018 WL 6300479, at 11. However, in a class action "[c]ausation, on a classwide basis, may be established by materiality," and "if . . . material misrepresentations have been made to the entire class, an inference of reliance arises as to the class." In re Vioxx Class Cases, 180 Cal. App. 4th 116, 103 Cal. Rptr. 3d 83, 95 (Cal. Ct. App. 2009). The Court has already concluded that whether defendants committed a deceptive act is a common question. It is also undisputed that the alleged misrepresentation was made to the entire class, allowing for an inference of reliance as to the class if the deception was "material." The only outstanding issue, and the focus of the parties' dispute, is whether plaintiffs have proven that "materiality" is a common question susceptible to common proof.

To prove materiality, a plaintiff must establish that "a reasonable [person] would attach importance to [the misrepresentation's] existence or nonexistence in determining his choice of action." Kwikset Corp. v. Superior Court, 51 Cal. 4th 310, 120 Cal. Rptr. 3d 741, 246 P.3d 877, 892 (Cal. 2011); In re Tobacco II Cases, 46 Cal. 4th 298, 93 Cal. Rptr. 3d 559, 207 P.3d 20, 39 (Cal. 2009); see also *Racies v. Quincy Bioscience, LLC, No. 15-cv-00292, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 206807, 2017 WL 6418910, at 3 (N.D. Cal. Dec. 15, 2017) ("California's consumer protection laws evaluate materiality [105] under a reasonable person standard, not on an individualized basis.").[84] Thus, materiality is judged by an objective "reasonable person" standard.

Since the Supreme Court's decision in Amgen, HN40[] a growing number of cases in California have concluded that when a case "presents specific alleged misrepresentations common to the class," materiality is necessarily a common question for purposes of Rule 23(b)(3) because it is judged by an objective "reasonable person" standard and, therefore, no evidence of materiality is necessary for purposes of class certification. Werdebaugh v. Blue Diamond [*253] *Growers, No. 12-cv-2724, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 71575, 2014 WL 2191901, at 14(N.D. Cal. May 23, 2014); see also, e.g., Hadley, 324 F. Supp. 3d at 1115 ("because deception and materiality are objective questions, they are 'common question[s] for purposes of Rule 23(b)(3)'" (quoting Amgen, 568 U.S. at 467)).[85] The Ninth Circuit has also held that CLRA claims are "ideal for class certification because they will not require the court to investigate class members' individual interaction with the product." Bradach, 735 F. App'x at 254-55 (quoting Tait v. BSH Home Appliances Corp., 289 F.R.D. 466, 480 (C.D. Cal. 2012)). The court in Bradach then proceeded to summarily reverse the district court's finding that plaintiffs had failed to provide sufficient evidence of materiality to prove predominance on the ground that "the district court's conclusion that it would [106] need to inquire into the motives of each individual class member was premised on an error of law." Id. at 255; see also Escobar, 2019 WL 2619636, at *2 (C.D. Cal. Mar. 25, 2019) (relying on Bradach to certify a class to bring slack-fill claims under California law without any discussion of the evidence or the need for evidentiary proof). In Hadley, Judge Koh explained:

> [B]ecause deception and materiality under the [] CLRA[] and UCL are objective questions, they are ideal for class certification because they will not require the court to investigate class members' individual interaction with the [challenged] product[s]. . . . As a result, "[t]here is no risk whatever that a failure of proof on the common question[s] of [deception and] materiality will result in individual questions predominating. Instead, the failure of proof on the element[s] of [deception and] materiality would end the case for one and for all; no claim would remain in which individual . . . issues could potentially predominate."

Despite the California cases that apply Amgen to the element of materiality under California law and the Ninth Circuit's decision in Bradach, defendants insist that plaintiffs [107] are required to proffer "sufficient" evidence of materiality at class certification and that evidence must include extrinsic evidence such as consumer surveys, market research or expert testimony. (Defs.' Supp. Br. at 9.) To support this argument, defendants cite several California cases where courts have required extrinsic evidence of materiality. (See Defs.' Supp. Br. at 3-4, 9 (citing In re 5-Hour Energy, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 220969, 2017 WL 2559615, at *8 ("Absent a consumer survey or other market research to indicate how consumer reacted to the [challenged] statements, and how they valued these statements compared to other attributes of the product and the [relevant] market generally, [p]laintiffs have not offered sufficient evidence of materiality across the class."); Kosta v. Del Monte Foods, Inc., 308 F.R.D. 217, 224-25, 230 (N.D. Cal. 2015) (evidence of materiality required and the plaintiff's evidence was insufficient where expert's "fill-in-the-blanks" opinion was too generic to constitute a "method of classwide proof to show that a 'reasonable consumer' would find the challenged statements deceptive and material to their purchasing decision"); Jones v.

LEXIS 202679, 2018 WL 6300479, at *11 (observing that defendants correctly "d[id] not challenge [p]laintiff's predominance argument" as "causes of action requiring an objective test make such claims amenable to class actions").

ConAgra Foods, Inc., No. 12-cv-01633, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 81292, 2014 WL 2702726, at *15 (N.D. Cal. June 13, 2014) (evidence of materiality insufficient because plaintiffs provided only the conclusory declaration of an expert who stated that "reasonable [108] consumers would rely on [the] label to identify products that are natural" but "did not explain how the challenged statements, together or alone, were a factor in any consumer's purchasing decisions"); Townsend v. Monster Beverage Corp., 303 F. Supp. 3d 1010, 1044 (C.D. Cal. 2018) (expert report presenting survey evidence was insufficient evidence of materiality where surveys "d[id] not provide insight into consumer purchasing decisions").

For several reasons, these cases do not help defendants. First, the underlying facts and claims are distinguishable from the present case. All the above cases involved allegations that statements on a product's packaging were misleading, not that the packaging itself was misleading. As a result, there could be (and were) disputes about the meaning of the alleged misrepresentation. For example, in In re 5-Hour Energy, the court concluded that plaintiffs had not shown that materiality was susceptible to common proof in part because "plaintiffs fail[ed] to establish a controlling definition for a key term in an alleged misstatement." 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 220969, 2017 WL 2559615, at *8 ("the meaning of the term 'energy' [was] disputed," and plaintiffs "ha[d] offered no evidence of a common definition of 'energy' among a substantial number of consumers"); see also Jones v. ConAgra, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 81292, 2014 WL 2702726, at *15-16 (no clear meaning [109] to claim of "100% Natural"). Here, no such questions of interpretation are present. See Alvarez v. NBTY, Inc., No. 17-cv-00567, 331 F.R.D. 416, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 87420, 2019 WL 2223929, at *5 (S.D. Cal. May 22, 2019) (finding that these and other cases requiring survey evidence were distinguishable because in those cases the "allegedly false word ha[d] no fixed meaning").

In addition, in several cases there were disputes about whether there was classwide exposure to the alleged deception. For example, in Kosta, "the variations [we]re so great that at least half the challenged products would not evidence the violations alleged, either because they did not appear on the products or because the [challenged statements] were truthful." Kosta, 308 F.R.D. at 229. As a result, the court found that there was "no cohesion among the members because they were [*255] exposed to quite disparate information." Id. (quoting Stearns v. Ticketmaster Corp., 655 F.3d 1013, 1020 (9th Cir. 2011)). Here, though, the meaning of the alleged deception and the uniformity of exposure are undisputed.

Second, all of these cases were decided before HN41[] the Ninth Circuit's decision in Bradach, which holds (albeit in an unpublished opinion) that it is an error of law for courts at class certification to require extrinsic evidence of materiality to prove predominance.

Third, neither Rule 23 nor California law requires [110] plaintiffs to proffer a certain type of evidence at class certification. There is nothing in the Supreme Court's decisions in Comcast, Amgen, or Tyson to suggest that "evidentiary proof" of predominance must take a certain form. In addition, the Court is disinclined to interpret Rule 23 as requiring plaintiffs to proffer a particular type of evidence when such evidence is not required under state law for plaintiffs to prevail on the merits of their claims. See Brockey v. Moore, 107 Cal. App. 4th 86, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 746, 756 (Cal. Ct. App. 2003) (rejecting argument that "anecdotal" evidence is necessarily insufficient under California law to prove that a statement is misleading); see also Clemens v. DaimlerChrysler Corp., 534 F.3d 1017, 1026 (9th Cir. 2008) ("surveys and expert testimony regarding consumer assumptions and expectations may be offered but are not required; anecdotal evidence may suffice"); Hadley 324 F. Supp. 3d at 1115 ("California courts have explicitly 'reject[ed] the view that a plaintiff must produce' extrinsic evidence 'such as expert testimony or consumer surveys' in order 'to prevail on a claim that the public is likely to be misled by a representation.'" (quoting Colgan v. Leatherman Tool Grp., Inc., 135 Cal. App. 4th 663, 38 Cal. Rptr. 3d 36, 48 (Cal. Ct. App. 2006)); Mullins v. Premier Nutrition, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 51140, 2016 WL 1535057, at *5 ("The California Court of Appeal has expressly rejected the 'view that a plaintiff must produce a consumer survey or similar extrinsic evidence to prevail on a claim that the public is [111] likely to be misled by a representation.'" (quoting Colgan, 38 Cal. Rptr. 3d at 48)).

Fourth, even though plaintiffs' deposition testimony indicates that not all purchasers would find the alleged deception to be material,[86] HN42[] it is clear under California law that not only is materiality judged by an objective standard, but also materiality to a reasonable consumer does not mean it has to be material to every consumer. See Fitzhenry-Russell, 326 F.R.D. at 613-14 (evidence that 25% of consumers cared about alleged misrepresentation was sufficient evidence of materiality for class certification). Also, more than one consideration can be material to a reasonable consumer. See Hadley, 324 F. Supp. 3d at 1116-17 ("[U]nder California law, [p]laintiff is not required to prove that [*256] the challenged [] statements were 'the sole or even the predominant or decisive factor influencing' the class members' decisions to buy the challenged products." (quoting In re Tobacco II Cases, 207 P.3d at 39)). Thus, the court in Hadley rejected the argument that "predominance is not met in the instant case because the evidence 'shows that people buy [defendant's] products for reasons other than 'health [the challenged claim], such as taste, price, brand loyalty, nostalgia, and convenience." Id. at 1116. Rather, the court explained, a defendant's argument that "consumers [112] have a variety of reasons for purchasing [the product]" is "a merits dispute as to materiality," and is therefore a dispute "that can be resolved classwide." Id. at 1117. The same analysis applies here.

Finally, HN43[] under California law, "materiality is generally a question of fact unless the 'fact misrepresented is so obviously unimportant that the jury could not reasonably find that a reasonable man would have been influenced by it.'" Steroid Hormone Prod. Cases, 181 Cal. App. 4th 145, 104 Cal. Rptr. 3d 329, 338-39 (Ct. App. 2010), as modified on denial of reh'g (Feb. 8, 2010) (quoting Engalla v. Permanente Medical Grp., Inc., 15 Cal. 4th 951, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 843, 938 P.2d 903, 920 (Cal. 1997)).

In sum, the Court concludes that in this case — where there is no inherent ambiguity as to the misrepresentation, no question as to the uniformity of exposure, and an objective, reasonable person standard applies — materiality is a common question for purposes of Rule 23(b)(3) and plaintiffs are not required to proffer extrinsic evidence such as a consumer survey, market research, or an expert opinion.

This conclusion is bolstered by the fact that California has expressly adopted verbatim the federal regulation (21 C.F.R. 100.100(a)) that prohibits nonfunctional slack-fill. See Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 12606(c). Plaintiffs concede that HN44[] such prohibitions are "not dispositive" of the issue of materiality (see 10/24/18 Tr. at 74), but federal and state courts [113] in California have concluded that laws prohibiting certain conduct can be evidence of materiality. See, e.g., Kwikset, 246 P.3d at 890 ("by specifically outlawing deceptive and fraudulent 'Made in America' representations," the "Legislature has recognized the materiality of this representation"); *Kumar, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 92374, 2016 WL 3844334, at 8 (same); Hinojos v. Kohl's Corp., 718 F.3d 1098, 1107 (9th Cir. 2013) ("the legislature's decision to prohibit a particular misleading advertising practice is evidence that the legislature has deemed that the practice constitutes a 'material' misrepresentation, and courts must defer to that determination"); but see *Victor, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 34550, 2014 WL 1028881, at 17 ("the ultimate question in UCL [and] CLRA fraud claims is what a reasonable consumer expects, which may have absolutely no relation to FDA regulations").

Accordingly, the Court finds that the California consumer protection class satisfies the predominance requirement of Rule 23(b)(3).

[86] While the six class representatives of the four consumer protection states testified that they would consider fill level to be a material factor in their purchasing decision (Esparza Dep. at 45; Marsh Dep. at 17, 35-36; Pellitteri Dep. at 21, 46; Grindel Dep. at 16, 19; Vladimirsky Dep. at 12, 25; Liberov Dep. at 16; see also supra Section III.C (analysis of typicality)), other deponents attributed their purchasing decisions to brand loyalty, including the plaintiffs who were withdrawn as Illinois class representatives (see Bittle Dep. at 27 ("I just grab the McCormick"); Theis Dep. at 21 (buys McCormick spices and will continue to buy because "McCormick is a good name. It's a good brand, and my mother used to use McCormick."), the plaintiff from Connecticut (see Fernandez Dep. at 25-26 ("we've just always bought McCormick, so it's kind of out of habit"), and the plaintiff from New Jersey who voluntarily dismissed her suit prior to the filing of the motion for class certification (see Marron Dep. at 16 ("Q. Is it fair to say you just grabbed the McCormick tin? A. Yes.")).

b. Illinois Consumer Protection Class

For the Illinois consumer protection class, plaintiffs have not shown that common questions predominate.

HN45[] To recover damages under the ICFA, a plaintiff must prove "(1) a deceptive act or practice by the defendant, (2) the defendant's intent that the plaintiff rely on the deception, (3) the occurrence of the deception in a course of conduct involving trade or [114] commerce, and (4) actual damage to the plaintiff that is (5) a result of the deception." De Bouse, 922 N.E.2d at 313. "That the plaintiff must prove that actual damages were suffered 'as a result' of the deceptive act imposes an obligation on the plaintiff to prove the [*257] deceptive act proximately caused any damages." Id. In addition, "[t]o be actionable under the ICFA, a representation must be 'material,' which is established by applying an objective standard." *Clark v. Bumbo, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 137607, 2017 WL 3704825, at 5 (quoting Connick v. Suzuki Motor Co., 174 Ill. 2d 482, 675 N.E.2d 584, 595, 221 Ill. Dec. 389 (Ill. 1996)). "A material fact exists where a buyer would have acted differently knowing the information, or if it concerned the type of information upon which a buyer would be expected to rely in making a decision whether to purchase." Connick, 675 N.E.2d at 595; see also *Lateef v. Pharmavite LLC, No. 12-cv-5611, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 51457, 2013 WL 1499029, at 3 (N.D. Ill. Apr. 10, 2013) ("A representation of fact is material if a reasonable person could be expected to rely on a statement or omission in deciding to enter into a transaction.").

With the exception of proving deception, the elements of a claim under the ICFA are different than those required under the California statutes. HN46[] Although "materiality is judged on an objective, reasonable person standard," *Mednick, No. 14-cv-3624, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 92629, 2017 WL 2619139, at 8 (N.D. Ill. June 16, 2017), "proximate causation" and "actual damages" are individualized inquiries, [115] Pella Corp. v. Saltzman, 606 F.3d 391, 394 (7th Cir. 2010), and require proof "that the plaintiff was deceived in some manner and damaged by the deception." Oshana v. Coca-Cola Co., 472 F.3d 506, 513-14 (7th Cir. 2006); see also Avery, 835 N.E.2d at 861 ("it is not possible for a plaintiff to establish proximate causation unless the plaintiff can show that he or she was, 'in some manner, deceived' by the misrepresentation" (quoting Oliveira v. Amoco Oil Co., 201 Ill. 2d 134, 776 N.E.2d 151, 164, 267 Ill. Dec. 14 (Ill. 2002))). As such, "absent proof as to why a particular plaintiff purchased a particular [product], [plaintiff] cannot establish that the defendants' conduct caused him or her to make that purchase." See Siegel v. Shell Oil Co., 612 F.3d 932, 936 (7th Cir. 2010). In addition, in a class action in Illinois plaintiffs must prove proximate causation and actual damages as to each class member. See Clark v. Experian Info. Solutions, Inc., 256 Fed. App'x 818, 822 (7th Cir. 2007) ("Illinois law requires a finding of proximate causation under ICFA, and does not provide for such causation to be inferred."); *Walsh Chiropractic, Ltd. v. Stratacare, Inc., No. 09-cv-1061, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 103998, 2011 WL 4336727, at 9 (S.D. Ill. Sept. 14, 2011) ("[C]ausation cannot be inferred; each member of the class must prove that the misrepresentation deceived them."); Barbara's Sales, Inc. v. Intel Corp., 227 Ill. 2d 45, 879 N.E.2d 910, 927, 316 Ill. Dec. 522 (Ill. 2007) ("plaintiffs must prove that each and every consumer who seeks redress actually saw and was deceived by the statements in question). By comparison, in California, the reasons for individual purchasing decisions are irrelevant at the class certification stage.

But it has [116] been recognized by the Seventh Circuit that HN47[] the mere presence of individualized issues does not require denial of certification of an ICFA class. See Suchanek, 764 F.3d at 759 ("error of law" to find "that individual issues necessarily predominate in cases requiring individual subjective inquiries into causality"); see also Pella Corp, 606 F.3d at 394 ("Proximate cause . . . is necessarily an individual issue and the need for individual proof alone does not necessarily preclude class certification."); In re IKO Roofing Shingle Prods. Liab. Litig.,757 F.3d 599, 601-04 (7th Cir. 2014) (reaffirming Pella and remanding for reconsideration of class certification despite the existence of potential individualized questions of causation); see also Tyson Foods, 136 S. Ct. at 1045 (2016) (predominance inquiry "calls upon courts to give careful scrutiny to the relation [*258] between common and individual questions in a case"). Accordingly, the Court must decide whether the plaintiffs have shown that common issues will predominate despite the need under Illinois law for individualized inquiries into proximate causation and damages.

Given the evidence and the fact that under Illinois law individual consumer reactions to the deception are of importance, the Court is not persuaded that this class is "sufficiently cohesive to warrant adjudication by representation." Amchem, 521 U.S. at 623. In California, [117] the Court found the class to be cohesive despite plaintiffs' divergent testimony about their purchasing decisions because for purposes of a class action under California law, plaintiffs did not need to prove anything about the individual class members' purchasing decision in order to prove liability. HN48[] Under the ICFA, at class certification it is necessary to proffer common evidentiary proof as to the reasons behind class member's purchasing decisions if the issues of proximate causation and actual damages are not straightforward. Yet, that is precisely the evidence that is lacking in this case.

As previously noted, there is no classwide evidence of materiality in the form of a consumer survey, market research or an expert opinion. HN49[] While not necessarily required in every case, such evidence has played an important role in Illinois in establishing the cohesiveness of a proposed class. See Suchanek, 764 F.3d at 760-61 (suggesting that one way for plaintiffs to meet their burden to show that "class allegations are 'satisf[ied] through evidentiary proof'" would be through "survey or other evidence suggesting the relevant common traits of the class members [or] expert testimony supporting the classwide allegations" [118] (quoting Comcast, 569 U.S. at 33)). Second, the only evidence of actual consumer reaction comes from plaintiffs' testimony which, as set forth above, see supra note 86, demonstrates differing motivations for consumers' purchasing decision. Therefore, this is not a case where the nature of the deception means that the only possible reason for the consumers' decision to purchase the product is the deception. Cf. Suchanek, No. 11-cv-565, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 213658, 2018 WL 6617106, at *12-13 (S.D. Ill. July 3, 2018) (evidence showed that the "the only logical reason for [p]laintiffs' behavior is that they purchased [the product] as a result of the deception"). Indeed, of the four plaintiffs who were originally proposed as class representatives for Illinois, two testified that the existence of nonfunctional slack-fill would not factor into their purchasing decision. (See Bittle Dep. at 13-14, 18-19, 25-27; Theis Dep. at 20-21, 28-29, 31.) Although plaintiffs have withdrawn their names as proposed class representatives, their testimony is still relevant evidence. Considering their testimony, and the similar testimony of several of the other plaintiffs who were deposed, it is arguable that "more than a few" class members did not suffer a compensable injury under Illinois law.[87]

For all of the above reasons, the present case is very different from Suchanek, a deceptive packaging case where a class was certified to bring claims under the ICFA. The defendant in Suchanek marketed and sold single-cup coffee pods for use with Keurig-brand coffee machines. But unlike Keurig-brand pods, which utilized a [*259] patented filter system to deliver "ground coffee," the defendant's product contained almost exclusively instant coffee, a difference that went to the very essence of the product being sold. Indeed, the class certification record included extensive evidence that the defendants intended to and succeeded in deceiving consumers into believing they were purchasing ground coffee[88] and, importantly, that consumers would not have purchased the defendant's pods had they known it was instant coffee. Suchanek, 764 F.3d at 758 ("The plaintiffs proffered evidence to show the overwhelmingly negative response to the [defendant's] product, the flood of complaints that followed the introduction of [the defendant's product], and numerous surveys that shed light on the preferences of Keurig users for premium (freshly brewed) coffee."). In light of this evidentiary record, the district [120] court on remand granted class certification, observing that causation was likely to be defeated only as to "a few" class members. Suchanek, 311 F.R.D. 239, 259 (S.D. Ill. 2015); see also Suchanek, 764 F.3d at 758 ("From the record amassed for the class certification decision, it is apparent that this is not a case where few, if any, of the putative class members share the named representative's grievance against the defendant. If it were, things would be different.").

[87] This conclusion is reinforced by the substantial possibility that more than a few class members already knew about the alleged nonfunctional slack-fill at the time of purchase given the publicity starting in June 2015 in the Wall Street [119] Journal and the Minneapolis Star Tribune. These class members were not "actually deceived" and thus cannot recover under Illinois law.

[88] For example, the defendant's consultant warned it against using the term "instant coffee"; "[n]umerous expert surveys in the record concluded that few consumers understood the true nature of [defendants'] product"; the defendant conducted "focus-group testing to determine whether participants would notice anything amiss about [its product]"; one expert opined that as the product was "three to four times more expensive than the typical instant coffee that may be spooned into a cup of hot water," "only a very 'price insensitive' consumer, or one who was misled, would use a $100 brewer [i.e., the Keurig machine] to heat water to make instant coffee." Suchanek, 764 F.3d at 753-54.

By contrast, in this case there is no extrinsic evidence that illuminates consumer preferences in terms of Slack-Filled Pepper Products. On the contrary, while the deception here involved misleading packaging, as was the case in Suchanek, the deposition testimony of half of the plaintiffs indicates that they would have still bought the Slack-Filled Pepper Products even if they knew about the deception. Unlike the coffee pods, the McCormick consumer still received the product they intended to buy and any deception did not render the product effectively worthless. *Suchanek, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 213658, 2018 WL 6617106, at 11. Moreover, plaintiffs failed to proffer any extrinsic evidence to support an inference that there existed common proof that the putative class members shared the two proposed class representatives' complaints about the Slack-Filled [121] Pepper Products. Therefore, unlike Suchanek, the issue of class certification cannot be solved by reference to the "commonsensical notion that people generally won't pay something for nothing," and, as a result, "the issues of proximate cause [will not] be relatively simple to resolve on a classwide basis." Id.

Much closer to the present case is the record in Langendorf, 306 F.R.D. at 584, where the court found the plaintiff had failed to prove predominance. In Langendorf, the plaintiff sought to certify a class of purchasers of a pre-mixed alcoholic beverage, claiming that the defendant had fraudulently labeled and marketed the product as "all natural" even though it contained the non-natural preservative sodium benzoate. The court found that plaintiff "failed to carry her burden to show that common issues predominate" because she "produced no evidence to show that causation will be defeated only as to 'a few' class members; in other words, she has not demonstrated the materiality of the 'all natural' text" to all class members. Id. at 583. [*260] The court noted that "such a showing could have been attempted through survey evidence," but that the plaintiff had "submitted no evidence, survey or otherwise, to show what portion [122] of purchasers likely relied on the 'all natural' text, or the degree to which the label 'all natural' had a tendency to influence the decision to purchase the product." Id.

Similarly, in Clark v. Bumbo, , the court found the plaintiff had failed to prove predominance because she "d[id] not submit any evidence to show that the [alleged misrepresentation] was material to any portion of [the product's] purchasers and thus caused them to suffer damages" while the defendant submitted evidence showing that other purchasers had purchased the product for a variety of other reasons. *2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 137607, 2017 WL 3704825, at 7.

The limited evidence here shows that consumers of black pepper, like the consumers in Skinnygirl and Bumbo (and unlike the consumers in Suchanek), are not necessarily a cohesive group when it comes to the reasons for purchasing the product at issue. HN50[] In a state such as Illinois, where the individual reasons for purchasing a product are relevant under the consumer protection statute, there needs to be evidence of classwide materiality so that a court can have confidence that class members share plaintiffs' grievance and that the individualized inquiries necessary to prove causation and injury will be relatively simple [123] and straightforward. Where such evidence is lacking, a court must decide, based on the nature of plaintiffs' claim and evidence before it, whether such individualized inquiries predominate.

In this case, plaintiffs could have attempted to obtain classwide evidence of materiality but they opted not to do so. In the absence of this evidence, the Court concludes that plaintiffs have failed to establish that individualized inquiries into causation and injury will not predominate over the common issues.

As a finding of predominance is essential to class certification, the Court will not certify the proposed Illinois consumer protection class.

c. Florida Consumer Protection Class

For the Florida consumer protection class, plaintiffs have shown that common questions predominate.

HN51[] To prevail on a claim for damages under FDUTPA, a plaintiff must prove "(1) a deceptive act or unfair practice; (2) causation; and (3) actual damages." City First Mortg. Corp. v. Barton, 988 So. 2d 82, 86 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 2008) (quoting Rollins, Inc. v. Butland, 951 So. 2d 860, 869 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 2006)); see also Carriuolo v. Gen. Motors Co., 823 F.3d 977, 983 (11th Cir. 2016). "A party asserting a deceptive trade practice claim need not show actual reliance on the representation or omission at issue." Davis v. Powertel, Inc., 776 So. 2d 971, 973 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 2000). As the Court has already concluded that whether there was a deceptive act is a common question, see supra Section III.F.1.a, [124] only the elements of causation and actual damages remain to be addressed.

Importantly, HN52[] in Florida both are judged by objective standards. To prove causation, "a plaintiff must simply prove that an objectively reasonable person would have been deceived." Fitzpatrick, 635 F.3d at 1283. "The mental state of each class member is irrelevant." Carriuolo, 823 F.3d at 985; see also State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Performance Orthapaedics & Neurosurgery, LLC, 315 F. Supp. 3d 1291, 1310 (S.D. Fla. 2018) ("[plaintiff's] knowledge has no bearing on the FDUTPA claim"). "Actual damages" are incurred if the plaintiff does not receive the "benefit of the bargain," which is [*261] measured according to "'the difference in the market value of the product or service in the condition in which it was delivered and its market value in the condition in which it should have been delivered according to the contract of the parties.'" Carriuolo, 823 F.3d at 986 (quoting Rollins, Inc. v. Heller, 454 So. 2d 580, 585 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1984)); State Farm, 315 F. Supp. 3d 1291, 1310 (S.D. Fla. 2018) ("[A] plaintiff must prove the gap in value between what was promised and what was delivered.").

Defendants offer two related arguments against a finding of predominance for the Florida class.

First, they argue that plaintiffs have failed to prove predominance because they lack classwide evidentiary proof of causation, such as a survey, market research, or an expert. (Defs.' Supp. Br. at 6 (under FDUTPA "whether a reasonable consumer would have been [125] deceived is assessed by evidentiary proof").)

There is no Florida case that has expressly confronted the question of whether plaintiffs bringing claims under FDUTPA have an evidentiary burden with respect to proving causation at the class certification stage. However, the Supreme Court's holding in Amgen, and the California cases applying that holding to the element of materiality under California law, suggest that HN53[] causation under the FDUTPA is a "common question" for purposes of Rule 23(b)(3). It is judged by an objective, reasonable person standard and a failure of proof on that element will lead to the failure of all claims. Notably, causation under the FDUTPA does not even require proof of materiality to the reasonable consumer; it only requires proof that a reasonable consumer would have been deceived. In addition, state courts, applying a similar standard, have concluded that "[i]ssues pertaining to the proof of the alleged deceptive practice and issues relating to causation and damages will be common to all members of the class." Davis, 776 So. 2d at 975. And, there is a long line of similar cases involving allegedly deceptive marketing of a consumer good where courts have certified FDUTPA classes without any evidentiary [126] proof of causation. See, e.g., Carriuolo, 823 F.3d at 985 (predominance finding upheld in case alleging that defendant put an inaccurate sticker on cars); Fitzpatrick, 635 F.3d at 1282-83 (predominance finding upheld in case claiming that defendant misrepresented the digestive health benefits of a yogurt product); *Hasemann v. Gerber Prods. Co., No. 15-cv-2995, 331 F.R.D. 239, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 57311, 2019 WL 1434263, at 30-31 (E.D.N.Y. Mar. 31, 2019) (predominance met under FDUTPA in case alleging that defendant misrepresented infant formula as reducing the risk that infants would develop allergies); Nelson v. Mead Johnson Nutrition Co., 270 F.R.D. 689, 696-98 (S.D. Fla. 2010) ("[I]ndividual class members may establish a FDUTPA claim by submitting identical proof that [d]efendant's representations about [infant formula] would deceive an objective reasonable consumer.").

The cases cited by defendants, Randolph v. J.M. Smucker Co., 303 F.R.D. 679 (S.D. Fla. 2014) and Pop's Pancakes, Inc. v. NuCO2, Inc., 251 F.R.D. 677 (S.D. Fla. 2008), do not undercut this conclusion. In both cases, unlike the present case, "different representations were made to different class members." See Bowe v. Pub. Storage, 318 F.R.D. 160, 182 (S.D. Fla. 2015). Under those circumstances, even though causation is judged by an "objective" test, it is not a "common question" in the sense that no single causation question would apply to the entire class. See also Miami Auto. Retail, Inc. v. Baldwin, 97 So. 3d 846, 856 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 2012) (causation not a common question where plaintiff had not proven that each class member received the same misrepresentation); Rollins v. Butland, 951 So. 2d at 872-73 [*262] ("class-wide [127] proof of causation is impossible" where plaintiffs claimed defendants were "guilty of no less than fourteen separate deceptive acts and unfair practices"); *Perisic v. Ashley Furniture Indus., No. 8:16-cv-3255, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 118337, 2018 WL 3391359, at 3 (M.D. Fla. June 27, 2018) (no predominance where "evidence . . . fails to demonstrate a systematic or uniform marketing scheme" because "examining the merits of each potential class member's claim is needed to determine whether each is the victim of a deceptive act or unfair trade practice"); Hummel v. Tamko Bldg. Prods., 303 F. Supp. 3d 1288, 1300 (M.D. Fla. 2017) (predominance requirement not met "because the nature of the case will require the Court to conduct an inquiry into what, if any, misrepresentations were made to each individual class member."). In other words, HN54[] if a putative class has not all been exposed to the same representations, it is not possible to determine on a classwide basis whether an objectively reasonable consumer would have been deceived. No such issue arises in the present case where purchasers were uniformly exposed to the same opaque, allegedly deceptively-filled containers.

Defendants' second argument is that causation is not subject to common proof because plaintiffs "fail to take into account purchasers who knew the weight had changed [128] and those who, like most of the named Plaintiffs, did not care and would have purchased the pepper anyway." (Defs.' Supp. Resp. at 8.) Such evidence is, however, simply irrelevant to plaintiffs' FDUTPA claims. See Carriuolo, 823 F.3d at 985; State Farm, 315 F. Supp. 3d at 1310.

Accordingly, the Court finds that plaintiffs have met their burden to prove that common questions will predominate for their FDUTPA claims.

d. Missouri Consumer Protection Class

For the Missouri consumer protection class, plaintiffs have shown that common questions predominate.

HN55[] "To prevail on a claim under the MMPA, a plaintiff must plead and prove he or she (1) purchased merchandise (which includes services) from defendants; (2) for personal, family or household purposes; and (3) suffered an ascertainable loss of money or property; (4) as a result of an act declared unlawful under the Merchandising Practices Act." Murphy v. Stonewall Kitchen, LLC, 503 S.W.3d 308, 311 (Mo. Ct. App. 2016). As the Court has already concluded that whether there was an unlawful act is a common question (see supra Section III.F.1.a), only the elements of causation and ascertainable loss remain to be addressed.

HN56[] Causation under the MMPA requires a showing that the unlawful practice caused the loss, but "the statute does not require that the purchase be caused by the unlawful [129] practice." Plubell v. Merck & Co., 289 S.W.3d 707, 714 (Mo. Ct. App. 2009); see also Murphy, 503 S.W.3d at 313; Hawkins, 309 F. Supp. 3d at 706; *White v. Just Born, Inc., No. 2:17-cv-04025, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 114305, 2017 WL 3130333, at 9 (W.D. Mo. July 21, 2017) ("White I"); *Bratton v. Hershey Co., No. 2:16-cv-4322, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 74508, 2017 WL 2126864, at 8 (W.D. Mo. May 16, 2017) ("Bratton I"). Thus, "class members are not individually required to show what they would or would not have done had the product not been misrepresented and the risks known." Plubell, 289 S.W.3d at 714.

HN57[] As for the element of ascertainable loss, "Missouri courts apply the 'benefit of the bargain' rule when determining if a plaintiff has suffered an ascertainable loss under the MMPA." *George v. Omega Flex, Inc., No. 2:17-cv-3114, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 123354, 2018 WL 3559184, at 3 (W.D. Mo. July 24, [*263] 2018) (quoting *Polk v. KV Pharm. Co., No. 4:09-cv-00588, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 144313, 2011 WL 6257466, at 5 (E.D. Mo. Dec. 15, 2011)); see Hawkins, 309 F. Supp. 3d at 706; *White I, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 114305, 2017 WL 3130333, at 9; *Bratton I, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 74508, 2017 WL 2126864, at 8. The benefit-of-the-bargain rule under Missouri law "compares the actual value of the item to the value of the item if it had been as represented at the time of the transaction." Murphy, 503 S.W.3d at 313; Plubell, 289 S.W.3d at 715; see also Thompson v. Allergan USA, Inc., 993 F. Supp. 2d 1007 (E.D. Mo. 2014) ("benefit of the bargain rule" awards a prevailing party "the difference between the value of the product as represented and the actual value of the product as received"); Hawkins, 309 F. Supp. 3d at 706; *White I, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 114305, 2017 WL 3130333, at 9; *Bratton I, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 74508, 2017 WL 2126864, at 8.

Given plaintiffs' theory of liability, both causation and ascertainable loss are common questions for purposes of Rule 23(b)(3). Plaintiffs' MMPA claim is that defendants' unlawful act (deceptively underfilling the Slack-Filled Pepper Products) caused [130] an ascertainable loss because the value of the pepper received by all purchasers was less than the value of the pepper as represented by the container size. Plaintiffs' theory of liability plainly states a claim under the MMPA, see, e.g., *White I, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 114305, 2017 WL 3130333, at 1 ; Hawkins, 309 F. Supp. 3d at 701-06; *Bratton I, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 74508, 2017 WL 2126864, at 2-8, and all elements of this theory of liability are subject to common proof, so no individualized inquiries will be necessary in order for plaintiffs to prove their claims.

Defendants interpret the MMPA differently. They argue that individualized inquiries will be required to prove causation and ascertainable loss because "a plaintiff who did not care about an alleged MMPA violation, or who knew about the violation and purchased the products anyway, has not been injured under the MMPA." (Defs.' Supp. Br. at 8.) Their position is supported by a Missouri federal court's recent decision in White v. Just Born, where the court reached the same conclusion and thus found that common questions did not predominate for a MMPA claim alleging nonfunctional slack-fill in boxes of candy. See *White, No. 2:17-cv-04025, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 132466, 2018 WL 3748405, at 3 (W.D. Mo. Aug. 7, 2018) ("White II"). But the case relied on by the court in White II — the Missouri Supreme Court's decision in State ex rel. Coca-Cola Co. v. Nixon, 249 S.W.3d 855, 862 (Mo. Banc. 2008) — does not, upon closer examination, support [131] the court's conclusion.

In Nixon, the plaintiff claimed that "she and many other consumers would not have purchased fountain Diet Coke if they had known it contained saccharin" and that "the deception, itself, resulted in irreparable harm." 249 S.W.3d at 859. After the lower state court certified a class of all purchasers of fountain Diet Coke during a specified time period, the Supreme Court of Missouri reversed, finding that the proposed class was impermissibly overbroad because it "undoubtedly includes an extremely large number of uninjured class members, that is, those who did not care if the Diet Coke they purchased contained saccharin." Id. at 862. The court noted that plaintiff's "own expert witness indicated that only twenty percent of those who currently consume fountain Diet Coke would not continue to do so if they knew it contained saccharin," which meant that "eighty percent of the putative class suffered no injury." Id. However, Nixon did not hold that in every MMPA case there would not be an injury if the plaintiff "did not care" about the alleged MMPA violation. To the contrary, it emphasized that the "alleged injury was based on a subjective preference against saccharin," such that a consumer [132] who did not share that preference could not have been injured, [*264] but that the outcome could be different in a case which alleged an "economic injury that was based on an objective characteristic," such that individual preferences were irrelevant. Id. at 863. Importantly, it distinguished Craft, a decision by the Missouri Court of Appeals approving the certification of a class of purchasers of "light" cigarettes who "thought they had purchased 'light' cigarettes, but the cigarettes they received had the characteristics of regular cigarettes." Id. (citing Craft v. Philip Morris Cos., 190 S.W.3d 368, 387 (Mo. Ct. App. 2005)). In Craft, the alleged injury was that plaintiffs "failed to receive the qualities and economic value of a low tar, low nicotine cigarette." Nixon, 249 S.W. 3d at 863; see also Hope v. Nissan N.A., Inc., 353 S.W.3d 68, 80 (Mo. Ct. App. 2011) (observing that a case like Nixon where the basis of the injury was a subjective consumer preference is on a different footing from a case where the alleged injury is diminished economic value of the product received by every purchaser, such as a car with a latent dashboard bubbling defect); Plubell, 289 S.W.3d at 715; (plaintiffs' theory that medication with undisclosed safety risks was worth less than it cost was subject to common proof).

The current case is similar to the Craft, Hope and Plubell cases. Plaintiffs' claim [133] is that they thought they were purchasing a certain amount of pepper based on the container size but that they instead received less pepper. The alleged injury is the difference in value of the pepper as represented and the value of the pepper as received. Thus, they have alleged an economic injury based on an objective characteristic, not an injury that is dependent on class members' subjective preferences. Under plaintiffs' theory of causation and ascertainable loss, every purchaser would have suffered the same loss irrespective of their motivations for purchasing the Slack-Filled Pepper Product. Thus, this is a case where "class members are not individually required to show what they would or would not have done had the product not been misrepresented and the risks known." Plubell, 289 S.W.3d at 714. Under such circumstances, the elements of causation and ascertainable loss are subject to common proof and are thus "common questions" for purposes of analyzing predominance.

Accordingly, the Court concludes that common questions predominate for the proposed Missouri consumer protection class.

2. Single-State Unjust Enrichment Classes

Plaintiffs argue that the single-state unjust enrichment classes satisfy predominance [134] because no individualized inquiries will be required to resolve their unjust enrichment claims. Rather, they assert, the answer to the question of "whether it would be unjust for [d]efendants to retain the benefits of the 'Black Pepper Net Weight Reduction' project" depends "solely" on defendants' conduct. (See Pls.' Mem. at 35; 7/10/18 Tr. at 114 ("[I]n the context of consideration of whether the retention of the benefit is unjust. That looks solely at the defendants.").)

But HN58[] in none of the seven single states does an unjust enrichment claim depend "solely" on defendant's conduct. To the contrary, each state's unjust enrichment law requires consideration of both plaintiff's and defendant's conduct, as well as the factual context. In California, for example, "[t]he elements for a claim of unjust enrichment are receipt of a benefit and unjust retention of the benefit at the expense of another." Lyles v. Sangadeo-Patel, 225 Cal. App. 4th 759, 171 Cal. Rptr. 3d 34, 40 (Cal. Ct. App. 2014) (emphasis added). "Even when a person has received a benefit from another, he is required to make restitution only if the circumstances of its receipt or retention are such that, as between the two [*265] persons, it is unjust for him to retain it." Ghirardo v. Antonioli, 14 Cal. 4th 39, 57 Cal. Rptr. 2d 687, 924 P.2d 996, 1003 (Cal. 1996) (emphasis added). Under Connecticut law, "[p]laintiffs [135] seeking recovery for unjust enrichment must prove (1) that the defendants were benefited, (2) that the defendants unjustly did not pay the plaintiffs for the benefits, and (3) that the failure of payment was to the plaintiffs' detriment." Hartford Whalers Hockey Club v. Uniroyal Goodrich Tire Co., 231 Conn. 276, 649 A.2d 518, 522 (Conn. 1994); see also id. at 521 ("With no other test than what, under a given set of circumstances, is just or unjust, equitable or inequitable, conscionable or unconscionable, it becomes necessary in any case where the benefit of the doctrine is claimed, to examine the circumstances and the conduct of the parties and apply this standard." (emphasis added)). In the District of Columbia, "every unjust enrichment case is factually unique . . . [and] must be determined by the nature of the dealings between the recipient of the benefit and the party seeking restitution, and those dealings will necessarily vary from one case to the next." 4934, Inc. v. District of Columbia Dep't of Emp't Servs., 605 A.2d 50, 56 (D.C. 1992) (emphasis added). In Illinois, "[t]o state a cause of action based on a theory of unjust enrichment, a plaintiff must allege that the defendant has unjustly retained a benefit to the plaintiff's detriment, and that defendant's retention of the benefit violates the fundamental principles of justice, equity, and good conscience." HPI Health Care Servs., Inc. v. Mt. Vernon Hosp., Inc., 131 Ill. 2d 145, 545 N.E.2d 672, 679, 137 Ill. Dec. 19 (1989) (emphasis [136] added). In Maryland, a person is not unjustly enriched unless "the circumstances of the receipt of the benefit are such as between the two that to retain it would be unjust." First Nat'l Bank of Md. v. Shpritz, 63 Md. App. 623, 493 A.2d 410, 419 (Md. Ct. Spec. App. 1985) (emphasis added). In Missouri, "there can be no unjust enrichment if the parties receive what they intended to obtain." Am. Std. Ins. Co, 103 S.W.3d at 293 (emphasis added). Finally, in Pennsylvania, "[w]hether the doctrine [of unjust enrichment] applies depends on the unique factual circumstances of each case." Styer v. Hugo, 422 Pa. Super. 262, 619 A.2d 347, 350 (Pa. Super. Ct. 1993), aff'd, 535 Pa. 610, 637 A.2d 276 (Pa. 1994) (emphasis added).

Thus, HN59[] when confronted by motions for class certification of unjust enrichment claims under the laws of the states at issue, courts have denied such motions, concluding that the need for individualized inquiries into purchasers' knowledge and motivations precluded a finding of predominance. For example, in In re Tropicana Orange Juice Mktg. & Sales Practices Litig., the court concluded that the California unjust enrichment claim was unsuited to class-wide proof because "the record reflects that purchasers bought [the product] for a variety of reasons" and "many purchasers indisputably received the benefits that they sought from their purchases." *In re: Tropicana Orange Juice Mktg. & Sales Practices Litig., 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9797, 2018 WL 497071, at 5 (D.N.J. Jan. 22, 2018).

Similarly, in In re Dial Complete Mktg. & Sales Practices Litig. [137] , the court concluded that California, Illinois and Missouri unjust enrichment claims were not subject to common proof "[g]iven the necessity for individualized inquiries into motivations and purchasing decisions" to prove unjust enrichment. In re Dial, 312 F.R.D. 36, 63, 67, 70 (D.N.H. 2015). The court explained that "the problem [was] largely a function of how plaintiffs ha[d] defined the class" because "[p]laintiffs ha[d] defined the purported class in such a way that, by definition, it include[d] consumers with a variety of motivations for purchasing [the product]." Id. at 62, 66. As a result, the "the purported class would include, for example, consumers who would not have acted [*266] any differently had they known that Dial Complete was not more effective than ordinary hand soap," and "[t]hus, a class member's right to recover for unjust enrichment would necessarily require individualized inquiry into the equities." Id. at 67.

In Lipton v. Chattem, Inc., an Illinois district court concluded that plaintiffs challenging the presence of hexavalent chromium in a diet product (Dexatrim) could not prove their unjust enrichment claim under Illinois law on a classwide basis because "[t]he proposed class include[d] individuals who: (1) were unaware of the presence [138] of hexavalent chromium in Dexatrim and who would not have purchased the product had they been so aware; (2) were unaware of the presence of hexavalent chromium but may have still purchased the product had they been so aware; and (3) were aware of the presence of hexavalent chromium and purchased the product anyway." Lipton, 289 F.R.D. 456, 462 (N.D. Ill. 2013). The court explained that "[t]hese differences among the proposed class require that the key liability issues-whether a given class member was deceived by [defendant's] labeling of Dexatrim and whether she suffered damages as a result-can be resolved only on an individual basis." Id.

Finally, applying Missouri law in In re BPA, the court concluded that plaintiffs' unjust enrichment claim would require "individual inquiry [into] whether [p]laintiffs purchased [d]efendants' products because they thought the products were BPA-free or were manufactured with substances about which there was no scientific controversy." *In re Bisphenol-A (BPA) Polycarbonate Plastic Prods. Liab. Litig., No. 08-md-1967, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 150015, 2011 WL 6740338, at 6 n.11 (W.D. Mo. Dec. 22, 2011).

In each of the above cases, the proposed classes were defined as all purchasers (within the state) of a certain consumer product, and each proposed class included purchasers with varying degrees of knowledge and differing motivations. [139] Similarly, plaintiffs here have proposed classes that include all the purchasers of Slack-Filled Pepper Products within each state, and the record suggests that class members could have had widely varying reasons for making their individual purchasing decisions. In addition, the variations among class members are relevant to the viability of each class member's unjust enrichment claim. For example, it would be relevant whether a purchaser knew about the alleged nonfunctional slack-fill before the purchase was made — certainly a possibility since the first newspaper articles and lawsuits occurred in June 2015, almost 9 months before the products were no longer on store shelves. It would also be relevant if a purchaser would not have cared about any resulting change in fill level even if he or she had not known about the weight reduction. Whether it would be unjust for McCormick to retain the money of a purchaser who was unaware of the deception and would not have bought the product had she known about the nonfunctional slack-fill is a different question than whether it would be unjust for McCormick to retain money from a purchaser who knew about the nonfunctional slack-fill prior to [140] purchase or who did not know but would have bought the product even if he had known because the purchasing decision was entirely driven by other considerations. Because individualized inquiries would be required to determine which class members had viable unjust enrichment claims, the Court is not persuaded that the proposed single-state unjust enrichment classes are sufficiently cohesive to warrant a finding of predominance.

Accordingly, the Court finds that plaintiffs have not met the predominance requirement for the single-state unjust enrichment classes.

[*267] G. Superiority (Rule 23(b)(3))

HN60[] The superiority requirement asks whether a "class action is superior to other available methods for fairly and efficiently adjudicating the controversy." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3). It aims to "achieve economies of time, effort, and expense, and promote . . . uniformity of decision as to persons similarly situated, without sacrificing procedural fairness or bringing about other undesirable results." Amchem, 521 U.S. at 615 (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 23 adv. comm. n. to 1966 amend.). The "matters pertinent" to a finding of superiority include: "(A) the class members' interests in individually controlling the prosecution . . . of separate actions; (B) the extent and nature of any litigation [141] concerning the controversy already begun by or against class members; (C) the desirability or undesirability of concentrating the litigation of the claims in the particular forum; and (D) the likely difficulties in managing a class action." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3).

Despite the potential difficulties of identifying class members, a class action is superior to any other method for adjudicating this controversy. The most important factor is that given the small dollar value of retail black pepper purchases and the correspondingly low dollar value of any individual recovery, a class action will "enable[] 'vindication of the rights of groups of people who individually would be without effective strength to bring their opponents into court at all.'" 2 Newberg on Class Actions § 4:65 (quoting Amchem, 521 U.S. at 617). As the Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeals has explained:

> HN61[] [C] lass actions often involve an aggregation of small individual claims, where a large number of claims are required to make it economical to bring suit. The plaintiff's claim may be so small, or the plaintiff so unfamiliar with the law, that he would not file suit individually. . . . This consideration supports class certification in cases where the total amount sought by [142] each individual plaintiff is small in absolute terms. . . . It also applies in situations where, as here, the amounts in controversy would make it unlikely that most of the plaintiffs, or attorneys working on a contingency fee basis, would be willing to pursue the claims individually.

Klay, 382 F.3d at 1270-71; Briseno v. ConAgra Foods, Inc., 674 F. App'x 654, 657 (9th Cir. 2017) ("[T]he benefits of the class mechanism are best realized in cases like this, where the likely recovery is too small to incentivize individual lawsuits, and the realistic alternative to class litigation will be no adjudication at all."); Amchem, 521 U.S. at 617 ("The policy at the very core of the class action mechanism is to overcome the problem that small recoveries do not provide the incentive for any individual to bring a solo action prosecuting his or her rights.").

While manageability is a concern, defendants' contention that the manageability issues in this case are "insurmountable" assumes that a heightened ascertainability standard applies. But, for the reasons discussed supra Section III.E, the Court is not applying that requirement. In addition, HN62[] "manageability is only one of the elements that goes into the balance to determine the superiority of a class action in a particular case. Other factors must also be considered, [143] as must the purposes of Rule 23, including: conserving time, effort, and expense; providing a forum for small claimants; and deterring illegal activities." McKinney, 292 F.R.D. at 66 (D.D.C. 2013).

Here, manageability concerns do not outweigh the other factors that must also be considered. Accordingly, the Court finds that the superiority requirement is [*268] satisfied for the California, Florida and Missouri consumer protection classes.

H. Appointment of Class Counsel (Rule 23(g))

HN63[] Rule 23(g) requires that "a court that certifies a class must appoint class counsel." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(g)(1). In appointing class counsel, this Court "must consider" four factors: "(i) the work counsel has done in identifying or investigating potential claims in the action; (ii) counsel's experience in handling class actions, other complex litigation and the types of claims asserted in the action; (iii) counsel's knowledge of the applicable law; and (iv) the resources that counsel will commit to representing the class." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(g)(1)(A)(i)-(iv). Moreover, the Court may also "consider any other matter pertinent to counsel's ability to fairly and adequately represent the interests of the class." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(g)(1)(B).

Plaintiffs request "that the Court appoint Elizabeth A. Fegan of Hagens Berman Sobol Shapiro LLP and Scott A. Kamber of KamberLaw as [144] Co-Lead Class Counsel as [they] have and will continue to 'fairly and adequately represent the interests of the class.'" (See Class Cert. Mot. at 4-5 (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(g)(4)).) In support of their request, they stated the following:

> Plaintiffs' counsel has performed substantial work to date litigating claims against Defendants. Plaintiffs' counsel has invested thousands of hours prosecuting claims on behalf of the class members, defeating Defendants' motions to dismiss and aggressively pursuing class discovery. Moreover, Plaintiffs' counsel possesses extensive experience in prosecuting complex class actions, including in consumer class actions like this. See Firm Resume of Hagens Berman Sobol Shapiro LLP (Ex. 33); Firm Resume of KamberLaw LLC (Ex. 34). And, as evidenced by the fact that they have already devoted substantial time and effort to the prosecution > of this proceeding, there can be no doubt that Plaintiffs' counsel will continue to devote the necessary resources necessary to representing the Class following appointment as Class Counsel.

(Pls.' Mem. at 44.) Defendants have wisely raised no objection to the above statements, since proposed Class Counsel have demonstrated their extensive experience [145] and fulsome abilities over the last few years in their role as Interim Co-Lead Counsel. However, since the time of plaintiffs' request, Ms. Fegan has notified the Court that she is no longer associated with the law firm of Hagens, Berman. Ms. Fegan's notice indicates that she will continue to represent Plaintiffs as Interim Co-Lead Counsel, but it does not address the issue of Class Counsel or provide any information about her new law firm or whether her change in firms will affect her ability to act as Class Counsel. As her former law firm's expertise in class actions was part of the Court's consideration when it appointed her as Interim Co-Lead Counsel, the Court will defer the appointment of Class Counsel until the upcoming status conference so the Court can ascertain Ms. Fegan's status.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, plaintiffs' motion for class certification is granted in part and denied in part, and defendants' motion to exclude plaintiffs' expert is denied. The Court will not certify plaintiffs' proposed multi-state classes, any of the proposed single-state unjust enrichment classes, or a consumer protection class in Illinois, but it will certify consumer protection [146] classes in California, Florida, and Missouri.

[*269] A separate Order, ECF No. 213, accompanies this Memorandum Opinion.

/s/ Ellen S. Huvelle

ELLEN S. HUVELLE

United States District Judge

Date: July 10, 2019

ORDER

For the reasons stated in the accompanying Memorandum Opinion (ECF No. 212), it is hereby ORDERED that defendants' Joint Motion to Exclude Report and Opinions of Dr. Armando Levy (ECF No. 164) is DENIED; it is further ORDERED that plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (ECF No. 156) is GRANTED IN PART AND DENIED IN PART as follows:

(1) the motion is DENIED with respect to plaintiffs' motion to certify a Consumer Protection Multi-State Class, an Unjust Enrichment (Restatement) Multi-State Class, and an Unjust Enrichment (Appreciation) Multi-State Class;

(2) the motion is DENIED with respect to plaintiffs' motion to certify single-state unjust enrichment classes for California, Connecticut, the District of Columbia, Illinois, Maryland, Missouri, and Pennsylvania and to certify a single-state consumer protection class for Illinois; and

(3) the motion is GRANTED with respect to plaintiffs' motion to certify single-state consumer protection classes for California, Florida, and Missouri, hereinafter [147] the California Consumer Protection Class, the Florida Consumer Protection Class, and the Missouri Consumer Protection Class.

It is further ORDERED that:

(1) The California Consumer Protection Class is defined as "All persons residing in California who purchased Slack-Filled Pepper Products[1] for their personal or household use." The class is certified to bring claims against defendant McCormick under the California Consumer Legal Remedies Act (CLRA), Cal. Civ. Code § 1770, and the California Unfair Competition Law (UCL), Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200. Plaintiffs Deborah Esparza and Holly Marsh are appointed as Class Representatives.

(2) The Florida Consumer Protection Class is defined as "All persons residing in Florida who purchased Slack-Filled Pepper Products for their personal or household use." The class is certified to bring claims against defendant McCormick under the Florida Deceptive and Unfair Trade Practices Act (FDUTPA), Florida Stat. § 501.201, et seq. Plaintiff Carmen Pellitteri is appointed as the Class Representative.

(3) The Missouri Consumer Protection Class is defined as "All persons residing in Missouri who purchased Slack-Filled Pepper Products for their personal or household use." The class is certified to bring claims against defendant McCormick [148] under the Missouri Merchandising Practices Act (MMPA), Mo. Rev. Stat. § 407.010, et seq. Plaintiff Catherine Grindel is appointed as the Class Representative.

Excluded from the above classes are (i) Defendants, (ii) any entity in which any Defendant has a controlling interest or which has a controlling interest in Defendants, and (iii) the Court and its staff.

It is further

ORDERED that the appointment of Class Counsel will be addressed at the next Status Conference; it is further

ORDERED that a status conference is set for Monday, August 19, 2019, at 2:00 p.m. in Courtroom 23A; and it is further ORDERED that the parties shall confer and file by no later than Wednesday, August 7, 2019, a joint proposal for further proceedings, including an identification of all cases that can be remanded to the transferor court.

ORDER GRANTING IN PART PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

(Doc. No. 52)

This matter is before the court on plaintiff and counter-defendant Linde, LLC's ("Linde") motion for summary judgment, or in the alternative for partial summary judgment, filed on August 7, 2018. (Doc. No. 52.) Defendant and counter-claimant Valley Protein, LLC ("Valley Protein") filed an opposition on September 4, 2018. (Doc. No. 53.) Linde filed its reply on September 11, 2018. (Doc. No. 58.) On September 18, 2018, the court held a hearing on the motion at which attorney Adam Scott Hamburg appeared for Linde, and attorney Russell K. Ryan appeared for Valley Protein. Having considered the parties' briefing and heard from counsel, the court will grant [*2] Linde's motion for summary judgment in part.

BACKGROUND

The facts of this case are as follows, and are undisputed except where noted. On January 27, 2011, Linde and Valley Protein entered into a Product Supply Agreement (the "2011 Agreement"), in which Valley Protein agreed to purchase from Linde its requirements for CO_2 for its meat processing plant located at 1828 E. Hedges Avenue, Fresno, CA 93703 (the "Plant"). (Doc. No. 52-5 ("UMF") at ¶ 1.) The 2011 Agreement also contained an Application Equipment, Ancillary Equipment, and Services Term Sheet, wherein Valley Protein agreed to lease a Cryoline (Cryowave) Tunnel 48-30 (the "2011 Freezer") from Linde (the "2011 Rental Agreement"). (Id. at ¶ 2.) In addition, the 2011 Agreement contained an Application Equipment, Ancillary Equipment, and Services Rider (the "2011 Equipment Rider"), which provided that Valley Protein was obligated to keep the 2011 Freezer clean at all times, and to "maintain the [2011 Freezer] in a good and fully functional condition, in accordance with any written instructions provided by Linde." (Id.) Further, the 2011 Equipment Rider stated that Valley Protein "is solely responsible for determining the suitability, [*3] compatibility, and use of the [2011 Freezer]." (Id.)

By early 2012, Valley Protein realized that it was not meeting its target conversion rates using the 2011 Freezer.[1] (Id. at ¶ 6.) In addition, by October 1, 2012, Valley Protein's production increased due to additional business it acquired, and there is some evidence that it was unable to fully meet this increased demand due to the 2011 Freezer malfunctioning. (Id. at ¶ 7; Doc. No. 54 ("DMF") at ¶ 7.) Although it is undisputed that Valley Protein did not lose customers as a result of these malfunctions, Valley Protein contends that "it did lose business." (DMF at ¶ 7.) In September 2014, Valley Protein was awarded a new contract with Safeway, because of which it sought ways to improve and expand its freezing operations. (UMF at ¶ 8.) To that end, Valley Protein's president Robert Coyle contacted Michael Iannelli, a sales manager employed by Linde, to inquire whether Linde possessed any newer technology or equipment that would permit Valley Protein to increase its production rate and reduce its CO_2 consumption. (Doc. No. 52-1 ("Iannelli Decl.") at ¶ 9; Doc. No. 52-2 at 17-18.) On September 4, 2014, Linde engineer Amanda Guzman contacted [*4] Coyle with a questionnaire to enable Linde to identify the appropriate equipment that would suit Valley Protein's needs. (UMF at ¶ 9; Iannelli Decl. at ¶ 11; Doc. No. 52-2 at 20-21.) On September 29, 2014, Coyle returned this questionnaire to Ms. Guzman. (Iannelli Decl. at ¶ 12; Doc. No. 52-2 at 23-31.) According to the questionnaire, Coyle represented to Linde that the "desired production rate" was 3,500 pounds of poultry per hour. (Iannelli Decl. at ¶ 12; Doc. No. 52-2 at 25-31).

There is some lack of clarity about what occurred next. Iannelli stated his understanding that Valley Protein originally requested the ability to process 3,500 pounds of poultry per hour, as indicated in the questionnaire, but "ultimately ended up" increasing that requirement to 5,000 pounds of poultry per hour. (Doc. No. 57-2 at 12.) In addition, Coyle stated that in October 2014, he received assurances from Ms. Guzman, one of Linde's engineers, that Linde's new equipment would process 5,000 pounds of poultry per hour. (Doc. No. 56 ("Coyle Decl.") at ¶ 9.) However, there does not appear to be any evidence that Valley Protein conveyed to Linde that the capability to process 5,000 pounds of poultry per hour [*5] was a requirement in October 2014: Coyle stated that information was not conveyed to Linde until at least November 5. (Doc. No. 52-4 at 19.) In addition, Iannelli stated that he was unaware of this 5,000-pound requirement as of September or October, implying that he was made aware of it only later. (Doc. No. 57-2 at 12.)

Effective November 1, 2014, Linde and Valley Protein entered into a new agreement, referred to as the "2014 Agreement."[2] (UMF at ¶ 11.) The 2014 Agreement included the Product Supply Agreement, which contained the following provisions relevant to this action:

> 9. Warranty, Sole Remedies, and Limitation of Damages.

[1] The court understands "target conversion rate" to refer to the freezer's efficiency, specifically the amount of CO_2 that was needed to operate it.

[2] For ease of reference, this order will refer collectively to all agreements entered into on November 1, 2014 as "the 2014 Agreement." However, as the court's analysis below reflects, the "agreement" is in fact composed of multiple separate contracts.

(e) Statute of Limitations. A Party must commence an action for a breach of contract within one year after the action has accrued.

15. General Provisions.

(b) Entire Agreement. Each Term Sheet, in conjunction with the terms specified in this document and the related Riders: (1) constitutes a separate contract between the Parties; (2) constitutes all of the terms of the contract between the Parties regarding its subject matter; and (3) supersedes and terminates all previous agreements between the Parties regarding this agreement's subject matter. Any [*6] term contained in a delivery document used by Linde, or a purchase order, confirmation, or acknowledgement used by Valley Protein, that conflicts with, is different from, or is additional to, the terms of this agreement is not part of the contract between the parties.

(UMF at ¶ 11; Doc. No. 52-2 at 35, 37-38.) In addition, the 2014 Agreement included an Application Equipment, Ancillary Equipment and Services Term Sheet and accompanying Rider (the "2014 Rental Agreement"), wherein Valley Protein agreed to lease a Spiral Freezer 20-175S from Linde (UMF at ¶ 13; Doc. No. 52-2 at 45-55.) The 2014 Agreement also contained a Bulk Term Sheet and Rider, pursuant to which Valley Protein agreed to purchase its CO_2 gas requirements exclusively from Linde. (UMF at ¶ 12; Doc. No. 52-2 at 40-44.) The Bulk Term Sheet also authorized Linde to charge Valley Protein a fuel surcharge for the delivery of the CO_2 gas. (UMF at ¶ 12; Doc. No. 52-2 at 43.)

According to the Coyle Declaration, a few weeks after the 2014 Agreement was executed, Iannelli contacted Coyle and advised him the equipment that served as the core of the 2014 Agreement had been "mis-engineered," and was only capable of processing less [*7] than 2,000 pounds of poultry per hour. (Coyle Decl. at ¶ 12.) Iannelli acknowledged that the new equipment was insufficient to meet Valley Protein's needs and asked for a "do-over," agreeing to release Valley Protein from the 2014 Agreement. (Id.; Doc. No. 57-2 at 30-31.) According to Coyle, having equipment sufficient to meet its poultry production requirements "was an absolutely essential requirement and the primary and perhaps sole reason Valley Protein entered in the 2014 Agreement." (Coyle Decl. at ¶ 12.) Linde does not appear to contest this version of events.

On December 1, 2014, Coyle sent an email to Iannelli, which stated in relevant part that Valley Protein would "like to rescind the contract we signed previously requesting an extension of the contract date and the new equipment, the [2014 Freezer.]" (UMF at ¶ 14; Iannelli Decl. at ¶ 16; Doc. No. 52-2 at 57.) Iannelli responded by email the same day, agreeing to let Valley Protein rescind the 2014 Rental Agreement, but declining to accept Valley Protein's request to rescind the 2014 Agreement as a whole. (UMF at ¶ 15; Iannelli Decl. at ¶ 17.) On December 12, 2014, Valley Protein entered into an Equipment Lease Agreement with [*8] Linde's competitor, Air Liquide, for a Spiral Freezer Model MB1-30-0550-09. (UMF at ¶ 17.) Concurrently, Valley Protein also executed a Product Supply Agreement with Air Liquide to obtain CO_2 from Air Liquide, despite Iannelli's email to Coyle notifying him that "Linde does not accept [Valley Protein's] request to rescind the contract renewal of the CO_2 agreement." (Id.; Doc. No. 52-2 at 57.) On January 25, 2015, Coyle sent a Termination Notice to Iannelli, wherein Coyle notified Linde that Valley Protein would not be renewing the 2011 Product Supply Agreement. (UMF at ¶ 18; Iannelli Decl. at ¶ 18; Doc. No. 52-2 at 59-60.) In response to Coyle's email, Iannelli again advised Coyle that Linde and Valley Protein had a valid supply agreement for CO_2 that was renewed in November 2014, and that according to the terms of that agreement, Valley Protein was obligated to obtain its CO_2 from Linde for the term of five years after that date. (UMF at ¶ 19; Iannelli Decl. at ¶¶ 19-20; Doc. No. 52-2 at 59-60.) On February 1, 2016, Valley Protein notified Linde that it would no longer be purchasing its CO_2 from Linde. (UMF at ¶ 20; Iannelli Decl. at ¶ 22; Doc. No. 52-2 at 64.)

In addition to moving [*9] for summary judgment as to its own claims, Linde also moves for summary judgment in its favor as to Valley Protein's counter-claims for breach of contract, breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, intentional misrepresentation, negligent misrepresentation, and unfair competition. These allegations center primarily on alleged malfunctioning of the 2011 Freezer. (See Doc. No. 29 at ¶¶ 11-15.) In addition to those allegations, Valley Protein alleges that between mid-2014 and the beginning of 2016, Linde obtained the CO_2 delivered to the Plant from its competitor's plant in Pixley, California, as opposed to Richmond, California. (UMF at ¶

22.) Linde admits that it sometimes improperly billed Valley Protein a surcharge that was based on the transportation of the gas from Richmond to the Plant. (Id.) Valley Protein characterizes this as a breach of the 2011 Agreement (See Doc. No. 53 at 11), while Linde contends that it was "merely an oversight," and that Linde subsequently reimbursed Valley Protein for any unwarranted transportation surcharges. (Doc. No. 52 at 17-18.)

As a result of what Linde contends was Valley Protein's breach of the 2014 Agreement, Linde asserts damages [*10] in the form of lost profits totaling $963,084.00. (UMF at ¶ 23.) Linde also asserts that at the time Valley Protein breached the 2014 Agreement, Valley Protein had a past due balance for CO_2 totaling $38,963.89, and that this amount remains unpaid. (Id. at ¶ 24.)

LEGAL STANDARD

Summary judgment is appropriate when the moving party "shows that there is no genuine dispute as to any material fact and the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(a).

In summary judgment practice, the moving party "initially bears the burden of proving the absence of a genuine issue of material fact." In re Oracle Corp. Sec. Litig., 627 F.3d 376, 387 (9th Cir. 2010) (citing Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986)). The moving party may accomplish this by "citing to particular parts of materials in the record, including depositions, documents, electronically stored information, affidavits or declarations, stipulations (including those made for purposes of the motion only), admissions, interrogatory answers, or other materials" or by showing that such materials "do not establish the absence or presence of a genuine dispute, or that an adverse party cannot produce admissible evidence to support the fact." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c)(1)(A), (B). When the non-moving party bears the burden of proof at trial, as plaintiff does here, "the moving [*11] party need only prove that there is an absence of evidence to support the non-moving party's case." Oracle Corp., 627 F.3d at 387 (citing Celotex, 477 U.S. at 325); see also Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c)(1)(B). Indeed, summary judgment should be entered, after adequate time for discovery and upon motion, against a party who fails to make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of an element essential to that party's case, and on which that party will bear the burden of proof at trial. See Celotex, 477 U.S. at 322. "[A] complete failure of proof concerning an essential element of the nonmoving party's case necessarily renders all other facts immaterial." Id. at 322-23. In such a circumstance, summary judgment should be granted, "so long as whatever is before the district court demonstrates that the standard for the entry of summary judgment . . . is satisfied." Id. at 323.

If the moving party meets its initial responsibility, the burden then shifts to the opposing party to establish that a genuine issue as to any material fact actually does exist. See Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 586, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986). In attempting to establish the existence of this factual dispute, the opposing party may not rely upon the allegations or denials of its pleadings but is required to tender evidence of specific facts in the form of affidavits or admissible discovery material [*12] in support of its contention that the dispute exists. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c)(1); Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 586 n.11; Orr v. Bank of Am., NT & SA, 285 F.3d 764, 773 (9th Cir. 2002) ("A trial court can only consider admissible evidence in ruling on a motion for summary judgment."). The opposing party must demonstrate that the fact in contention is material, i.e., a fact that might affect the outcome of the suit under the governing law, see Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986); T.W. Elec. Serv., Inc. v. Pac. Elec. Contractors Ass'n, 809 F.2d 626, 630 (9th Cir. 1987), and that the dispute is genuine, i.e., the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the non-moving party, see Anderson, 477 U.S. at 250; Wool v. Tandem Computers Inc., 818 F.2d 1433, 1436 (9th Cir. 1987).

In the endeavor to establish the existence of a factual dispute, the opposing party need not establish a material issue of fact conclusively in its favor. It is sufficient that "the claimed factual dispute be shown to require a jury or judge to resolve the parties' differing versions of the truth at trial." T.W. Elec. Serv., 809 F.2d at 631. Thus, the "purpose of summary judgment is to 'pierce the pleadings and to assess the proof in order to see whether there is a genuine need for trial.'" Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 587 (citations omitted).

"In evaluating the evidence to determine whether there is a genuine issue of fact," the court draws "all inferences supported by the evidence in favor of the non-moving party." Walls v. Cent. Contra Costa Cty. Transit Auth., 653 F.3d 963, 966 (9th Cir. 2011). It is the opposing party's obligation to produce a factual predicate [*13] from which the inference may be drawn. See Richards v. Nielsen Freight Lines, 602 F. Supp. 1224, 1244-45 (E.D. Cal. 1985), aff'd, 810 F.2d 898, 902 (9th Cir. 1987). Finally, to demonstrate a genuine issue, the opposing party "must do more than simply show that there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts. . . . Where the record taken as a whole could not lead a rational trier of fact to find for the non-moving party, there is no 'genuine issue for trial.'" Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 587 (citation omitted).

"'When as is the case here, the moving party is a plaintiff, he or she must adduce admissible evidence on all matters as to which he or she bears the burden of proof.'" Grimmway Enters., Inc. v. PIC Fresh Glob., Inc., 548 F. Supp. 2d 840, 845 (E.D. Cal. 2008) (quoting Zands v. Nelson, 797 F. Supp. 805, 808 (S.D. Cal. 1992)); see also S. Cal. Gas Co. v. City of Santa Ana, 336 F.3d 885, 888 (9th Cir. 2003) (noting that because plaintiffs are "the party with the burden of persuasion at trial, the Gas Company must establish 'beyond controversy every essential element of its' Contract Clause claim." (quoting William W. Schwarzer, et al., California Practice Guide: Federal Civil Procedure Before Trial § 14:124-127 (2001))).

DISCUSSION

As noted above, Linde moves for summary judgment on all of its causes of action: breach of contract, breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, account stated, and goods and services rendered. (Doc. No. 52 at 2-3.) In addition, Linde also moves for summary judgment in its favor on Valley Protein's counter-claims [*14] for breach of contract, breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, intentional misrepresentation, negligent misrepresentation and unfair competition, respectively.

A. Choice of Law

Before turning to the individual claims at issue, the court first addresses the parties' choice-of-law dispute. Linde filed its motion for summary judgment under California law. (See generally Doc. No. 52.) However, in its opposition, Valley Protein points out that both the 2011 Agreement and the 2014 Agreement specifically provide that New Jersey law "governs all matters pertaining to the validity, construction, and effect" of the Agreements. (Doc. No. 53 at 16-17.) Linde disputes whether New Jersey law applies, but nonetheless devotes much of its reply to rearguing its motion under New Jersey law. (Doc. No. 58 at 6, 8-17.)

District courts sitting in diversity apply the substantive law of the state in which they sit. Mason & Dixon Intermodal, Inc. v. Lapmaster Int'l LLC, 632 F.3d 1056, 1060 (9th Cir. 2011). In such circumstances, district courts look to the law of the forum state when making choice of law determinations. Hoffman v. Citibank (S. Dakota), N.A., 546 F.3d 1078, 1082 (9th Cir. 2008). In making these determinations, the California Supreme Court has adopted the approach outlined in § 187(2) of the Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws. See Nedlloyd Lines B.V. v. Superior Court, 3 Cal. 4th 459, 464-66, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 330, 834 P.2d 1148 (1992). Under this rubric, courts are instructed to first determine [*15] whether (1) the chosen state has a substantial relationship to the parties or their transaction, or (2) there is any other reasonable basis for the parties' choice of law. Id. at 466. If neither of these tests is met, the inquiry ends, and the court need not enforce the parties' choice of law. Id. However, if one of these tests is satisfied, the court must next determine whether the chosen state's law is contrary to a fundamental policy of California. Id. If there is no such conflict, the court enforces the parties' choice of law. If there is a conflict, the court must determine whether California has a "materially greater interest than the chosen state in the determination of the particular issue." Id. If California's interest is materially greater, California law applies despite the choice of law provision. Id. The burden of demonstrating the existence of a fundamental policy of California rests with the party opposing application of the choice of law provision, as does the burden of demonstrating that California has a materially greater interest in the outcome of the case than the chosen state. Wash. Mut. Bank, FA v. Superior Court, 24 Cal. 4th 906, 917, 103 Cal. Rptr. 2d 320, 15 P.3d 1071 (2001).

New Jersey plainly has a substantial relationship to the parties. As alleged in Linde's complaint, [*16] Linde is a limited liability company organized under the laws of Delaware with its principal place of business in New Jersey. (Doc. No. 1 at ¶ 1.) Accordingly, for purposes of diversity jurisdiction, Linde is a citizen of New Jersey. (Id.) This is sufficient to establish a substantial relationship between the chosen state and the parties. See Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws § 187 cmt. f (Am. Law. Inst. 1971) (finding a substantial relationship where "one of the parties is domiciled or has his principal place of business" in the chosen state).

Next, the court must determine whether the chosen state's law is contrary to a fundamental policy of California. Neither party has identified any differences between California and New Jersey law that are relevant to this action, and the court is unaware of any "fundamental policies" of California that are implicated by the facts of this case. The burden on this point rests with Linde as the party seeking to apply California law notwithstanding the parties' choice of law provision. See Wash. Mut. Bank, 24 Cal. 4th at 917. Because Linde has failed to carry that burden, this court will apply New Jersey law in addressing the breach of contract claims.

However, to say that New Jersey law applies to the breach of contract claims [*17] is not to say that New Jersey law also applies to the remaining claims in this action. On the contrary, courts routinely recognize that a valid choice-of-law provision contained in a contract does not necessarily govern the entire relationship between the parties. "The question of whether [the choice-of-law] clause is ambiguous as to its scope . . . is a question of contract interpretation that in the normal course should be determined pursuant to [the selected forum's law.]" Nedlloyd Lines, 3 Cal. 4th at 469 n.7; see also Cannon v. Wells Fargo Bank N.A., 917 F. Supp. 2d 1025, 1051 (N.D. Cal. 2013) (examining Florida law, the law specified in the choice-of-law provision, to determine whether a contractual choice-of-law provision covers related tort claims). The court will therefore consult New Jersey law to determine the breadth of the choice-of-law provisions here.

The parties have provided no briefing on this issue—indeed, plaintiff Linde did not recognize the existence of a choice-of-law issue in seeking summary judgment under California law despite the existence of the New Jersey choice-of-law provision. However, the court's research has revealed some, albeit limited, authority addressing how New Jersey law would apply to the provision at issue here. After conducting a thorough survey of the [*18] relevant law, a New Jersey district court recently concluded that "New Jersey principles of statutory construction would counsel a narrow reading of the choice-of-law provision [at issue]." Portillo v. Nat'l Freight, Inc., 323 F. Supp. 3d 646, 655 (D.N.J. 2018). In Portillo, the choice-of-law provision stated that the agreement "shall be interpreted in accordance with, and governed by, the laws of the United States and, of the State of New Jersey." Id. at 648. The court noted that the phrase "governed by" could be interpreted to encompass more than the breach of contract claim, and that some courts have construed it in that manner. See, e.g., *Nat'l Seating & Mobility, Inc. v. Parry, No. C 10-02782 JSW, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 98384, 2012 WL 2911923, at 2 (N.D. Cal. July 16, 2012) (finding that a choice-of-law provision stating that the agreement would be "governed by and construed in accordance" with Tennessee law was "broad enough to encompass the breach of contract, the tort claims, and the UCL claim"). Nonetheless, the district court in Portillo concluded that New Jersey law did not sweep so broadly and the court is persuaded by that analysis of this issue. See Portillo, 323 F. Supp. 3d at 655-58.

Applying New Jersey's rules governing the scope of choice-of-law provisions here, the court concludes that the provision in this case extends only to the parties' breach of contract claims. [*19] By their terms, the choice-of-law provisions at issue here apply to matters "pertaining to the validity, construction, and effect of [the agreements.]" (Doc. No. 52-2 at 7, 38.) Compared with other choice-of-law provisions which courts have been called upon to consider, this language is quite narrow. See, e.g., *Country Visions, Inc. v. MidSouth LLC, No. 2:15-cv-01740-TLN-CKD, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 54424, 2016 WL 1614585, at 2 (E.D. Cal. Apr. 22, 2016) ("Both parties agree to submit to exclusive jurisdiction in California and further agree that any cause of action arising under this Agreement shall be brought in an appropriate federal or state court located in California.") (emphasis added); *Brigham Young Univ. v. Pfizer, Inc., No. 2:06-CV-890 TS, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 37086, 2012 WL 918744, at 1 (D. Utah Mar. 16, 2012) ("The validity, interpretation and performance of this Agreement and any dispute connected herewith shall be governed and construed in accordance with the laws of the State of Missouri.") (emphasis added); Van Gundy v. P.T. Freeport Indonesia, 50 F. Supp. 2d 993, 994 (D. Mont. 1999) ("Included in the offer was a choice of law provision which stated that all disputes arising out of the employment relationship would be governed by Louisiana law.") (emphasis added). As the court interprets the choice-of-law provisions here, they are cabined solely to the contracts [*20] themselves, and do not indicate that resolution of any other disputes will be "governed by" New Jersey law. See *Bd. of Educ. of Twp. of Cherry Hill v. Human Res. Microsystems, Inc., No. CIV. 09-5766 JBS/JS, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 102293, 2010 WL 3882498, at 4 (D.N.J. Sept. 28, 2010) ("Generally, when a choice-of-law provision is intended to apply not only to interpretation and enforcement of the contract but also to any claims related to the contract, the language used is broader."). Thus, although it may ultimately make little difference in the final analysis and resolution of the issues before it, the court will apply New Jersey law only to the breach of contract claims and will apply California law to the parties' remaining claims.

B. Linde's Breach of Contract Claim

Linde first seeks summary judgment on its breach of contract claim as it relates to the 2014 Agreement. To prevail on a breach of contract claim, a party must prove (1) the existence of a valid contract between the parties, (2) the opposing party's failure to perform a defined obligation under the contract, and (3) that the breach caused the claimant to sustain damages. EnviroFinance Grp. v. Envtl. Barrier Co., 440 N.J. Super. 325, 113 A.3d 775, 787 (N.J. App. Div. 2015). Linde contends that these elements are all satisfied here as a matter of law. As for the existence of a valid contract, the 2014 Agreement [*21] was executed on November 1, 2014. (UMF at ¶ 11.) Under the terms of the 2014 Agreement, Valley Protein was required to purchase all of its CO_2 exclusively from Linde for five years, but instead began purchasing CO_2 from Linde's competitor, Air Liquide. (Id. at ¶¶ 12, 17.) The failure to purchase CO_2 from Linde led directly to Linde's lost sales volume, causing the damages it now seeks to recover. (Id. at ¶ 23.)

Valley Protein does not directly challenge these contentions in its opposition but rather asserts that it is entitled to rescission of the contract. Rescission is a remedy founded on "considerations of equity," the object of which is to "restore the parties to the status quo ante and prevent the party who is responsible for the misrepresentation from gaining a benefit." Rutgers Cas. Ins. v. LaCroix, 194 N.J. 515, 946 A.2d 1027, 1034-35 (N.J. 2008). In support of this argument, Valley Protein contends that Linde's representations about the production capacity of its equipment amounted to an equitable fraud, providing the basis for rescission of the contract. Under New Jersey law, "equitable fraud provides a basis for a party to rescind a contract." First Am. Title Ins. v. Lawson, 177 N.J. 125, 827 A.2d 230, 237 (N.J. 2003) (citing Jewish Ctr. of Sussex Cty. v. Whale, 86 N.J. 619, 432 A.2d 521 (N.J. 1981)). "'In general, equitable fraud requires proof of (1) a material misrepresentation of a presently [*22] existing or past fact; (2) the maker's intent that the other party rely on it; and (3) detrimental reliance by the other party.'" Id. (quoting Liebling v. Garden State Indem., 337 N.J. Super. 447, 767 A.2d 515, 518 (N.J. App. Div. 2001)). Rescission voids the contact, meaning that it is considered "null from the beginning" and treated as if it does not exist. Id.

The parties agree that a rescission occurred as to at least some portion of the 2014 Agreement, as evidenced by Iannelli's email to Coyle agreeing to Valley Protein rescinding the agreement to rent the 2014 Freezer. (UMF at ¶ 15; Iannelli Decl. at ¶ 17; Doc. No. 52-2 at 57.) Iannelli confirmed this rescission at his deposition. (Doc. No. 57-2 at 34.) The parties' dispute centers on the scope of that rescission—namely, whether that rescission was effective only as to the rental of the 2014 Freezer, or whether it amounted to a rescission of the entire 2014 Agreement. Linde contends that the rescission was only with respect to the rental of the 2014 Freezer, while Valley Protein argues that this rescission nullified the parties' entire 2014 Agreement. If the entire 2014 Agreement was nullified as Valley Protein suggests, it was free to purchase its CO_2 from sources other than Linde.

As stated above, the 2014 Agreement was [*23] comprised of several components: The Product Supply Agreement, the Bulk Rider, the Bulk Term Sheet, the Application Equipment, Ancillary Equipment, and Services Rider, and the Application Equipment, Ancillary Equipment, and Services Term Sheet. (Doc. No. 52-2 at 33-55.) The 2014 Freezer was rented to Valley Protein pursuant to the Application Equipment, Ancillary Equipment, and Services Rider and Term Sheet and Rider, whereas Valley Protein's agreement to purchase its CO_2 requirements was contained in the Bulk Rider and Term Sheet. (See id.) The Product Supply Agreement specifies that "Each Term Sheet, in conjunction with the terms specified in this document and the related Riders . . . constitutes a separate contract between the parties." (UMF at ¶ 11; Doc. No. 52-2 at 38.) Linde therefore contends that although it agreed to rescind the Application Equipment, Ancillary Equipment, and Services Rider and Term Sheet, it did not rescind the Bulk Term Sheet and Rider. If the Bulk Term Sheet and Rider remained in force, as Linde argues, Valley Protein remained obligated to purchase its CO_2 requirements from Linde.

Valley Protein contests this conclusion, arguing that all of the agreements [*24] constituted a single contract. (See Doc. No. 53 at 18-19.) As evidence of this, Valley Protein points to Iannelli's deposition, in which Iannelli testified that he understood all three documents "to be integrated and [to] form essentially the application equipment, ancillary equipment and services term sheet." (Doc. No. 57-2 at 19.) In addition, Iannelli also acknowledged at deposition that Linde did not offer rental of the 2014 Freezer separate and apart from the CO2, but that they were offered only as a package. (Id. at 14-15.) Iannelli further understood that the only reason Valley Protein entered into the agreement to purchase CO_2 was because Valley Protein was interested in renting the 2014 Freezer. (Id. at 27-28.) Relying on this testimony, Valley Protein contends that all of the agreements signed by the parties in 2014 were a single contract.

The court must resolve the question of whether the various agreements constituted multiple contracts or were instead just one contract. See Bosshard v. Hackensack Univ. Med. Ctr., 345 N.J. Super. 78, 783 A.2d 731, 740 (N.J. App. Div. 2001) ("The interpretation of the terms of a contract are decided by the court as a matter of law unless the meaning is both unclear and dependent on conflicting testimony."); Great Atl. & Pac. Tea Co. v. Checchio, 335 N.J. Super. 495, 762 A.2d 1057, 1061 (N.J. App. Div. 2000) ("The construction of a written contract is usually [*25] a legal question for the court, but where there is uncertainty, ambiguity or the need for parol evidence in aid of interpretation, then the doubtful provision should be left to the jury."). In interpreting the terms of a contact, courts "should give contractual terms their plain and ordinary meaning unless specialized language is used peculiar to a particular trade, profession, or industry." Kieffer v. Best Buy, 205 N.J. 213, 14 A.3d 737, 743 (N.J. 2011) (internal quotation marks and citations omitted). A contract provision is ambiguous "if the terms of the contract are susceptible to at least two reasonable alternative interpretations," Schor v. FMS Financial Corp., 357 N.J. Super. 185, 814 A.2d 1108, 1112 (N.J. App. Div. 2002) (brackets omitted) (quoting Nester v. O'Donnell, 301 N.J. Super. 198, 693 A.2d 1214, 1220 (N.J. App. Div. 1997)), but "a court should not torture the language of a contract to create ambiguity." Nester, 693 A.2d at 1220; see also Kieffer, 14 A.3d at 743 (noting that it is not the court's task "to rewrite a contract for the parties better than or different from the one they wrote for themselves"). However, "[e]ven when the contract on its face is free from ambiguity, evidence of the situation of the parties and the surrounding circumstances and conditions is admissible in aid of interpretation." Great Atl. & Pac. Tea Co., 762 A.2d at 1061.

As the court interprets the language at issue here, the agreement for Linde to provide Valley Protein with CO_2 and the agreement for Linde to rent [*26] the 2014 Freezer to Valley Protein were not merely separate transactions within the same contract. Instead, according to the plain language of the Product Supply Agreement, they constituted separate contracts altogether. (See Doc. No. 52-2 at 38) ("Each Term Sheet, in conjunction with the terms specified in this document and the related Riders . . . constitutes a separate contract between the parties.") (emphasis added). In the court's view this clear language is susceptible of only one reasonable interpretation—namely, that the Application Equipment, Ancillary Equipment, and Services Rider and Term Sheet was an entirely separate contract from the Bulk Rider and Term Sheet. Although the parties devote some of their briefing to the issue of whether the 2014 Agreement was partially rescinded, partial rescission does not apply where, as here, the 2014 Agreement was composed of multiple, distinct contracts.[3] Partial rescission is available only with respect to different transactions within the same contract. See Bonnco Petrol, 560 A.2d at 662. The fact that Linde and Valley Protein agreed to rescind one contract could not and did not effectuate a rescission of an entirely separate contract.

[3] Partial rescission of a contract is disfavored under New Jersey law. See County of Morris v. Fauver, 153 N.J. 80, 707 A.2d 958, 966 (N.J. 1998) ("As a general rule, rescission 'must be exercised in toto and is to be applied to the contract in its entirety with the result that what has been done is wholly undone and no contract provisions remain in force to bind either of the parties'") (quoting Merickel v. Erickson Stores Corp., 255 Minn. 12, 95 N.W.2d 303, 306 (Minn. 1959)). "Only where a contract is severable into different transactions may one of those separate transactions be avoided." Id.; see also Bonnco Petrol, Inc. v. Epstein, 115 N.J. 599, 560 A.2d 655, 662 (N.J. 1989).

The court [*27] acknowledges that portions of Iannelli's deposition testimony arguably evince a contrary understanding of these agreements. It is also relevant that, as Iannelli testified, it was "standard practice in the industry" to rent freezing equipment and purchase CO_2 or nitrogen from the same company. (Doc. No. 57-2 at 28.) However, such extrinsic statements may be considered only to "aid in interpretation," and may not be considered "for the purpose of changing the writing." Great Atl. & Pac. Tea Co., 762 A.2d at 1061. Here, the written agreement of the parties itself is clear: although entered into at the same time and between the same parties, the Application Equipment, Ancillary Equipment, and Services Rider and Term Sheet was a separate contract from the Bulk Rider and Term Sheet.

Because the Bulk Rider and Term Sheet were not rescinded, Valley Protein remained under a contractual obligation to purchase its CO_2 gas requirements from Linde unless it can establish some other basis to avoid that obligation. Valley Protein suggests that the doctrine of equitable fraud provides such a basis. (Doc. No. 53 at 17.) "'[E]quitable fraud requires proof of (1) a material misrepresentation of a presently existing or past fact; (2) the maker's [*28] intent that the other party rely on it; and (3) detrimental reliance by the other party.'" First Am. Title Ins., 827 A.2d at 237 (quoting Liebling, 767 A.2d at 518). A review of the evidence before the court on summary judgment establishes that with respect to the Bulk Rider and Term Sheet, no reasonable juror could find the existence of an equitable fraud that would entitle Valley Protein to rescission of the Bulk Rider and Term Sheet. At deposition, Coyle testified that with respect to surcharges charged by Linde for the delivery of CO_2 gas to Valley Protein, no Linde employee ever made false or misleading statements regarding where the CO_2 gas was being delivered from. (Doc. No. 52-4 at 30:3-5.) Coyle also testified that any overcharging for delivery of CO_2 gas amounted only to an "honest mistake." (Id. at 31:3-5.) Based upon this testimony, the court finds no evidence supporting a claim of equitable fraud with respect to the Bulk Rider and Term Sheet. By failing to comply with the terms of the Bulk Rider and Term Sheet, Valley Protein breached that contract.

With respect to damages, Linde claims that as a result of this breach, it has suffered lost profits totaling $963,084.00. (UMF at ¶ 23.) In support of this claimed loss amount, Linde has [*29] submitted an exhibit prepared by Iannelli and attached to his Declaration. (Doc. No. 52-2 at 66-68.) Iannelli states that this projection provides an estimate of Linde's gross margins if Valley Protein had continued to purchase its CO_2 gas from Linde through 2018, as required under the Bulk Rider and Term Sheet. (Iannelli Decl. at ¶ 24.) Valley Protein objects to this evidence on the ground that Iannelli's projections lack foundation, are not based on personal knowledge, and amount to nothing more than speculation. (Doc. No. 55 at ¶ 8.)

"Under contract law, a party who breaches a contract is liable for all of the natural and probable consequences of the breach of that contract." Pickett v. Lloyd's, 131 N.J. 457, 621 A.2d 445, 454 (N.J. 1993). "Lost profits are one measure of compensatory damages that may be recoverable in a breach of contract action, if they can be established with a reasonable degree of certainty." RSB Lab. Servs., Inc. v. BSI, Corp., 368 N.J. Super. 540, 847 A.2d 599, 608 (N.J. App. Div. 2004). Notably, "[p]ast experience of an ongoing, successful business provides a reasonable basis for the computation of lost profits with a satisfactory degree of definiteness." V.A.L. Floors, Inc. v. Westminster Cmtys., Inc., 355 N.J. Super. 416, 810 A.2d 625, 631 (N.J. App. Div. 2002). Accordingly, Valley Protein's objections to this evidence are overruled.

Iannelli's projections are neither speculative nor lacking in foundation; rather, they [*30] are extrapolations based on the prior dealings of the parties, which New Jersey courts have explicitly held to be a proper basis for calculating lost profits. See Weiss v. Revenue Bldg. & Loan Ass'n, 116 N.J.L. 208, 182 A. 891, 893 (N.J. 1936) ("[P]ast experience has demonstrated the success of the enterprise and provides a reasonably certain basis for the calculation of plaintiff's probable loss consequent upon the breach of the contract to lease."); V.A.L. Floors, Inc., 810 A.2d at 631. Nor do these calculations lack personal knowledge. Iannelli is a sales manager employed by Linde (Iannelli Decl. at ¶ 1) and would be expected to be intimately familiar with sales calculations. This is particularly so with respect to Linde's dealings with Valley Protein, since Iannelli was involved in forming the 2014 Agreement and has reviewed all of Linde's records pertaining to its contractual relationship with Valley Protein. (Id. at ¶¶ 2, 9-13.) Under these circumstances, the court finds that Iannelli's projections provide a "reasonable basis for the computation of lost profits." V.A.L. Floors, Inc., 810 A.2d at 631. Moreover, Valley Protein has not submitted any evidence of its own on summary judgment that would call these lost profit calculations into question.

Accordingly, the court will grant summary judgment in favor of Linde on Linde's [*31] breach of contract claim, both with respect to liability and damages.

C. Linde's Claim for Breach of Implied Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing

Next, the court addresses Linde's motion for summary judgment with regard to its claim against Valley Protein for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing.

"The [implied] covenant of good faith and fair dealing [is] implied by law in every contract." Durell v. Sharp Healthcare, 183 Cal. App. 4th 1350, 1369, 108 Cal. Rptr. 3d 682 (2010). "In order to establish a breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, a plaintiff must show: (1) the parties entered into a contract; (2) the plaintiff fulfilled his obligations under the contract; (3) any conditions precedent to the defendant's performance occurred; (4) the defendant unfairly interfered with the plaintiff's rights to receive the benefits of the contract; and (5) the plaintiff was harmed by the defendant's conduct." *In re Yahoo! Inc. Customer Data Sec. Breach Litig., No. 16-MD-02752-LHK, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 140212, 2017 WL 3727318, at 48 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 30, 2017). Notably, to succeed on such a claim, it is not "necessary that the party's conduct be dishonest." Carma Developers (Cal.), Inc. v. Marathon Dev. Cal., Inc., 2 Cal. 4th 342, 373, 6 Cal. Rptr. 2d 467, 826 P.2d 710 (1992).

Linde's motion only briefly addresses whether it should be granted summary judgment on this claim. Linde's argument appears to be premised on the notion that summary [*32] judgment is proper because "[t]he elements of Linde's claim for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing are identical to its breach of contract claim." (Doc. No. 52 at 23.) Thus, in Linde's view, because summary judgment in its favor is proper on its breach of contract claim for the reasons discussed above, it is also proper with respect to its claim of breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. Linde's argument is not persuasive in this regard. To be sure, Linde is correct that under California law, "a breach of the implied covenant of good faith is a breach of the contract." Carson v. Mercury Ins. Co., 210 Cal. App. 4th 409, 429, 148 Cal. Rptr. 3d 518 (2012) (citing Careau & Co. v. Sec. Pac. Bus. Credit, Inc., 222 Cal. App. 3d 1371, 1393, 272 Cal. Rptr. 387 (1990)). The converse, however, is not necessarily true—that is, a breach of contract does not automatically give rise to liability for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. Indeed, the California Court of Appeal has clarified that while "breach [of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing] will always result in a breach of the contract, . . . a breach of a consensual (i.e., an express or implied-in-fact) contract term will not necessarily constitute a breach of the covenant." Careau & Co., 222 Cal. App. 3d at 1393-94. Because the court finds Linde's argument unpersuasive, and because [*33] Linde offers no other basis upon which to grant summary judgment on its claim for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, Linde's motion will be denied as to this claim.

D. Linde's Claim for Account Stated

Next, the court addresses Linde's motion for summary judgment on its account stated claim. "An account stated is an agreement, based on prior transactions between the parties, that all items of the account are true and that the balance struck is due and owing from one party to the other." Trafton v. Youngblood, 69 Cal. 2d 17, 25, 69 Cal. Rptr. 568, 442 P.2d 648 (1968). "The essential elements of an account stated are: (1) previous transactions between the parties establishing the relationship of debtor and creditor; (2) an agreement between the parties, express or implied, on the amount due from the debtor to the creditor; (3) a promise by the debtor, express or implied, to pay the amount due." Zinn v. Fred R. Bright Co., 271 Cal. App. 2d 597, 600, 76 Cal. Rptr. 663 (1969). As evidence of an account stated, Linde claims that between January 14, 2016 and February 4, 2016, Linde issued a total of twenty-two invoices to Valley Protein for CO_2 that was delivered to Valley Protein, totaling $38,963.89. (UMF at ¶ 24.)

As addressed above, under the terms of the 2014 Agreement, Valley Protein agreed to purchase its CO_2 gas [*34] requirements from Linde. (UMF at ¶ 12; Iannelli Decl. at ¶ 15.) Linde has submitted an invoice for each delivery, as well as its demand letter sent to Valley Protein requesting payment for those deliveries. (Doc. No. 52-2 at 70-71.)

Valley Protein does not appear to dispute that those deliveries occurred, nor does it dispute that it has not paid for the CO_2 gas delivered. Instead, Valley Protein's opposition to Linde's motion in this regard is limited to the argument that it was relieved of its obligation to pay by virtue of rescission of the 2014 Agreement. As discussed above, the court has rejected this argument. Finding no material issue of fact in dispute with respect to this claim, Linde's motion for summary judgment on its account stated claim will be granted in the amount of $38,963.89.

E. Goods and Services Rendered

Next, the court addresses Linde's cause of action for goods and services rendered. "A common count for Goods and Services Rendered 'is a simplified form of pleading normally used to aver the existence of various forms of monetary indebtedness.'" *Ever Win Int'l Corp. v. Premier Accessory Grp., No. 2:15-CV-07208-RGK (JCx), 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 195377, 2016 WL 11263125, at 4 (C.D. Cal. Sept. 22, 2016) (quoting McBride v. Boughton, 123 Cal. App. 4th 379, 394, 20 Cal. Rptr. 3d 115 (2004)); see also McBride, 123 Cal. App. 4th at 394 (noting that "[a] common count is [*35] not a specific cause of action"); Martini E Ricci Iamino S.P.A.--Consortile Societa Agricola v. Trinity Fruit Sales Co., 30 F. Supp. 3d 954, 975 (E.D. Cal. 2014) ("Under California law, 'common counts' are general pleadings that seek to recover money owed without necessarily specifying the nature of the claim."). "The only essential allegations of a common count are (1) the statement of indebtedness in a certain sum, (2) the consideration, i.e., goods sold, work done, etc., and (3) nonpayment." Farmers Ins. Exch. v. Zerin, 53 Cal. App. 4th 445, 460, 61 Cal. Rptr. 2d 707 (1997). Common counts are frequently coextensive with other causes of action pleaded in a complaint: "[w]hen a common count is used as an alternative way of seeking the same recovery demanded in a specific cause of action, and is based on the same facts, the common count is demurrable if the cause of action is demurrable." McBride, 123 Cal. App. 4th at 394.

Linde's complaint demonstrates that its common count claim is based on the same facts as its claim for account stated, namely that Linde delivered CO_2 and equipment to Valley Protein for which it has not been paid. (Doc. No. 1 at ¶ 31-34.) Once more, Valley Protein's only opposition to Linde's motion for summary judgment is based on its argument that the 2014 Agreement was rescinded. Because the court has already found that Linde is entitled to summary judgment on its claim for account stated, and because [*36] the common count claim is coextensive with it, the court will also grant Linde's motion for summary judgment as to the common count claim. However, in light of the court's award of $38,963.89 on Linde's account stated claim, the court finds that Linde will be fully compensated for Valley Protein's failure to pay for the CO_2 delivery. Any further award of damages would overcompensate Linde. Accordingly, while summary judgment for Linde will be granted as to this claim, no additional damages will be awarded with respect to it.

F. Valley Protein's Counter-claims for Breach of Contract

Next, the court addresses the counter-claim for breach of contract brought by Valley Protein in which Valley Protein contends that Linde breached the provisions of the 2011 and 2014 Agreements. As noted, Linde also moves for summary judgment in its favor on this claim brought by Valley Protein.[4]

As both parties acknowledge, the 2011 Agreement contained a provision requiring that "[a] Party must commence an action for a breach of contract within one year after the action has accrued." (UMF at ¶ 1.) The default statute of limitations for actions to enforce a breach of contract in New Jersey is six years from the [*37] time the cause of action accrued. N.J. Stat. Ann. § 2A:14-1. However, "[c]ontract provisions limiting the time parties may bring suit have been held to be enforceable, if reasonable." Eagle Fire Prot. Corp. v. First Indem. of Am. Ins., 145 N.J. 345, 678 A.2d 699, 704 (N.J. 1996).

[4] The parties dispute whether the 2011 Agreement remained in force following execution of the 2014 Agreement. Linde contends that the 2014 Agreement amounts to a novation, which "substitutes a new contract and extinguishes the old one." Wells Reit II-80 Park Plaza, LLC v. Dir., Div. of Taxation, 414 N.J. Super. 453, 25 N.J. Tax 537, 999 A.2d 489, 497 (N.J. App. Div. 2010). By contrast, Valley Protein argues that "the 2011 Agreement arguably remained in effect." (Doc. No. 53 at 9.) The court acknowledges this dispute but need not reach this issue since Linde's counter-claim for breach of contract may be disposed of on alternative grounds, as explained below.

Multiple courts in New Jersey have found contract provisions imposing one-year limitations on breach of contract actions to be reasonable. See, e.g., id.; Weinroth v. N.J. Mfrs. Ass'n Fire Ins., 117 N.J.L. 436, 189 A. 73, 75 (N.J. 1937); A.J. Tenwood Assocs. v. Orange Senior Citizens Hous. Co., 200 N.J. Super. 515, 491 A.2d 1280, 1284 (N.J. App. Div. 1985). Valley Protein directs the court to one contrary case, but the court finds it to be readily distinguishable in light of the facts here. See Rodriguez v. Raymours Furniture Co., 225 N.J. 343, 138 A.3d 528 (N.J. 2016). In Rodriguez, an employment application contained a provision requiring the applicant, if hired, to bring any employment-related cause of action against the employer within six months of the challenged employment action and to waive any statute of limitations to the contrary. Id. at 529-30. An employee brought an action against his former employer, alleging a violation of New Jersey's Law Against Discrimination which claim was governed by a two-year statute of limitations. Id. at 530. In finding the application's six-month limitations period to be unreasonable, the New Jersey Supreme Court noted that the Law Against Discrimination "exists for the good of all the inhabitants of New Jersey," and therefore "concerns more than a purely private cause of action [*38] affecting only private interests." Id. at 538. Because of these competing public policy considerations, the Supreme Court declined to enforce the contractual limitation period. However, such considerations are absent here, and Valley Protein has offered no further argument as to how the holding in Rodriguez should compel the court to reject the limitations period agreed to by the parties under the circumstances of this case. Accordingly, the court finds that the one-year statute of limitations contained within the 2011 Agreement is reasonable and must be applied.

According to Valley Protein's counter-claim, Linde breached the 2011 Agreement by failing to provide Valley Protein with an adequate freezer, as it was required to do. (See Doc. No. 29 at ¶ 27.) However, the counter-claim indicates that Valley Protein became aware of that inadequacy no later than September of 2014. (Id. at ¶¶ 13-14 (stating that by 2014, the freezing equipment provided by Linde had become "inoperable").) By the terms of the 2011 Agreement, Valley Protein had until September of 2015 to bring causes of action based on a breach of a 2011 Agreement. See County of Morris, 707 A.2d at 972 (under New Jersey law, "a cause of action will not accrue until the [*39] injured party discovers, or by exercise of reasonable diligence and intelligence should have discovered, facts which form the basis of a cause of action"). However, Valley Protein's claim for breach of contract was not brought until February 2017, far after the one-year limitations period had expired. (Doc. No. 29.)

The same logic holds true with respect to the 2014 Agreement. The evidence before the court on summary judgment establishes that Valley Protein was dissatisfied with the freezer provided by Linde under that Agreement no later than December 2014. (UMF at ¶ 14; Iannelli Decl. at ¶ 16; Doc. No. 52-2 at 57.) This dissatisfaction is what prompted Valley Protein to attempt to rescind that Agreement. Therefore, Valley Protein had until December 2015 to sue for breach of contract. Its counter-claim, brought in February 2017, falls far outside of that filing deadline.

Thus, even if Valley Protein is correct that the 2011 Agreement remained in force, its claim for breach of that contract is time-barred. The court will therefore grant summary judgment in favor of Linde on Valley Protein's counter-claims for breach of contract.

G. Valley Protein's Claim for Breach of the Implied Covenant [*40] of Good Faith and Fair Dealing

Next, the court addresses Valley Protein's counter-claim for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. The relevant California law governing this claim has already been discussed above. Valley Protein contends that Linde breached the covenant with respect to the 2011 Agreement by providing it with faulty equipment, and then by refusing to properly maintain that equipment. (Doc. No. 29 at ¶ 34.) Valley Protein also contends that Linde breached the covenant with respect to the 2014 Agreement by "failing to comply with its obligation to provide poultry-freezing equipment sufficient to meet Valley Protein's needs." (Id. at ¶ 35.) As with Valley Protein's claim for breach of contract, Linde argues that this cause of action is time-barred. (Doc. No. 52 at 29-30.)

California mandates a four-year statute of limitations for actions for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. Frazier v. Metro. Life Ins., 169 Cal. App. 3d 90, 102, 214 Cal. Rptr. 883 (1985) (citing Cal. Civ. Proc. Code § 337). Moreover, under normal circumstances, "plaintiff's ignorance of the cause of action, or of the identity of the wrongdoer, does not toll the statute." Neel v. Magana, Olney, Levy, Cathcart & Gelfand, 6 Cal. 3d 176, 187, 98 Cal. Rptr. 837, 491 P.2d 421 (1971). However, to avoid the often-harsh consequences of this rule, California courts also [*41] recognize the "discovery rule," under which the statute of limitations begins to run "when plaintiff either (1) actually discovered his injury and its negligent cause or (2) could have discovered injury and cause through the exercise of reasonable diligence." April Enters., Inc. v. KTTV, 147 Cal. App. 3d 805, 826, 195 Cal. Rptr. 421 (1983) (internal quotation marks omitted).

Here, having reviewed Valley Protein's counter-claim and the evidence before the court on summary judgment, the court concludes that the applicable statute of limitations bars some of Valley Protein's theories of recovery. As noted, in its counter-claim Valley Protein alleges breaches of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing with respect to both the 2011 and 2014 Agreements. Moreover, within those two agreements, Valley Protein advances multiple allegations which could potentially form the basis of a misrepresentation claim. (See generally Doc. No. 29 at 34-47.) For instance, with respect to the 2011 Agreement, Valley Protein asserts that Linde breached the covenant of good faith and fair dealing by "failing to supply Valley Protein with modern, reliable, and efficient poultry-freezing equipment and instead providing equipment that was unreliable, obsolete and often inoperable." (Id. at [*42] ¶ 34(a).) Valley Protein also alleges a breach of the covenant for "failing to maintain the poultry-freezing equipment as it was required to do pursuant to the terms of the 2011 Agreement." (Id. at ¶ 34(c).) Thus, as pled by Valley Protein, multiple theories of liability are contained within this cause of action.

The evidence before the court on summary judgment—which Valley Protein does not dispute (see Doc. No. 54 at 8)—demonstrates that Valley Protein President Robert Coyle was aware by early 2012 that the poultry-freezing equipment provided by Linde was not meeting its target CO_2 conversion rate. (Doc. No. 52-4 at 142:25, 143:1-5.) Applying California's discovery rule, the statute of limitations is tolled until that date. Nonetheless, because Valley Protein's counter-claim for breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing was not filed until February 2017, any recovery under this theory of liability is barred by the applicable four-year statute of limitations which expired by early 2016.

However, with respect to whether Valley Protein's remaining theories of liability on this claim remain viable, Linde has not pointed to any evidence presented on summary judgment demonstrating [*43] that those theories are time-barred as a matter of law. It is conceivable that other evidence may exist in the record demonstrating that these remaining theories of liability are also foreclosed by the applicable statute of limitations. However, Linde has not cited to any such evidence in its motion, and the court declines to comb through the record to find support for Linde's motion. See Indep. Towers of Wash. v. Washington, 350 F.3d 925, 929 (9th Cir. 2003) ("Our adversarial system relies on the advocates to inform the discussion and raise the issues to the court."). Accordingly, the court finds that Valley Protein's counter-claim for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing is time-barred only as to Valley Protein's claim that Linde breached the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing with respect to the issue of the CO_2 conversion rate.

Regardless of the theory of liability relied upon by Valley Protein, however, Valley Protein's claim for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing fails for a separate reason. The California Supreme Court has held that where a claim for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing is based upon the same breaches as those alleged in a breach of contract [*44] claim, the good faith and fair dealing claim fails as a matter of law. Guz v. Bechtel Nat'l, Inc., 24 Cal. 4th 317, 327, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d 352, 8 P.3d 1089 (2000) ("[W]here breach of an actual term is alleged, a separate implied covenant claim, based on the same breach, is superfluous."). Thus, district courts in California routinely dismiss claims for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing where those allegations essentially repeat those already made in a breach of contract claim. See, e.g., *Tryfonas v. Splunk, Inc., No. 17-CV-01420-HSG, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11692, 2018 WL 534287, at 2 (N.D. Cal. Jan. 24, 2018) (dismissing plaintiff's claim for breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing as duplicative because "[p]laintiff's claim . . . relies on the same acts as his claim for breach of contract"); Tam v. Qualcomm, Inc., 300 F. Supp. 3d 1130, 1146 (S.D. Cal. 2018) ("[A] plaintiff may bring both a breach of contract claim and a claim for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, but when both causes of action cite the same underlying breach, the implied covenant claim is superfluous."); Landucci v. State Farm Ins., 65 F. Supp. 3d 694, 716 (N.D. Cal. 2014) (citing the decision in Guz for the proposition that "although . . . a plaintiff may bring both a breach of contract claim and a claim for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, . . . when both causes of action cite the same underlying breach, the implied [*45] covenant cause of action will be superfluous with the contract cause of action").

A review of Valley Protein's counter-claim reveals that the claim for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing is based on the same conduct as the breach of contract claim. In fact, the factual allegations contained within each cause of action are identical. (Compare Doc. No. 29 at ¶¶ 27, 30, with id. at ¶¶ 34-35.) Therefore, under California law, Valley Protein's claim for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing must fail. The court accordingly will grant summary judgment in Linde's favor on Valley Protein's counter-claim for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing.

H. Valley Protein's Claims for Intentional and Negligent Misrepresentation

The court next addresses Valley Protein's counter-claims for intentional and negligent misrepresentation, respectively. Linde argues that it is entitled to summary judgment on these claims since they are barred by the applicable statute of limitations and, alternatively, because Valley Protein cannot establish these claims as a matter of law. (Doc. No. 52 at 31-33.) Linde also argues that these claims are [*46] barred by the economic loss rule. (Id. at 33.)

To establish a claim for intentional misrepresentation a plaintiff must plead and prove: "(1) a misrepresentation (false representation, concealment, or nondisclosure); (2) knowledge of falsity (or scienter); (3) intent to defraud, i.e., to induce reliance; (4) justifiable reliance; and (5) resulting damage." Robinson Helicopter Co. v. Dana Corp., 34 Cal. 4th 979, 990, 22 Cal. Rptr. 3d 352, 102 P.3d 268 (2004) (citing Lazar v. Superior Court, 12 Cal. 4th 631, 638, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 377, 909 P.2d 981 (1996)). Meanwhile, "[n]egligent misrepresentation is a form of deceit, the elements of which consist of (1) a misrepresentation of a past or existing material fact, (2) without reasonable grounds for believing it to be true, (3) with intent to induce another's reliance on the fact misrepresented, (4) ignorance of the truth and justifiable reliance thereon by the party to whom the misrepresentation was directed, and (5) damages." Fox v. Pollack, 181 Cal. App. 3d 954, 962, 226 Cal. Rptr. 532 (1986).

The court first turns to the Coyle Declaration, the evidence relied upon by Valley Protein in opposing summary judgment as to this claim. In that declaration, submitted under penalty of perjury, Coyle averred that "[a]t the time the 2011 Agreement was executed in January 2011, Linde's Vice President of Western Markets, Michael Beckman, represented that the equipment provided to Valley Protein by Linde was high quality, [*47] reliable, and efficient." (Coyle Decl. at ¶ 5.) The Coyle Declaration also states that during the course of the 2011 Agreement, Valley Protein discovered that the freezer provided by Linde was outdated, obsolete, and frequently inoperable. (Id. at ¶ 6.) In his declaration Coyle lists a variety of misrepresentations Linde made to Valley Protein, relating to the size and capabilities of the equipment, the age of the equipment, and how much CO_2 the equipment would use. (Id. at ¶ 8.) Coyle declares that these representations and promises induced Valley Protein to enter into the 2011 Agreement, and that absent those representations, Valley Protein would not have done so. (Id.) Linde acknowledges, at least implicitly, the Coyle Declaration would create a triable issue of fact as to whether Linde employees made material misrepresentations to Valley Protein. However, Linde argues that Coyle's declaration is self-serving and contradicted by his own deposition testimony, because of which the court should disregard it. (Doc. No. 58 at 15.)

At the outset, the court observes that many of the statements made in Coyle's declaration filed in opposition to summary judgment are markedly different from [*48] the testimony he gave at his deposition. Whereas his declaration attributed at least some of the misrepresentations to Linde employee Michael Beckman, Coyle at his deposition testified that he never had any conversations with Michael Beckman, and that in fact he was unfamiliar with any Linde employee with that name. (Compare Coyle Decl. at ¶ 5, with Doc. No. 52-4 at 6.) In addition, while Coyle's declaration lists numerous alleged misrepresentations by Linde employees that induced Valley Protein to enter into the 2011 Agreement, Coyle testified at his deposition that all such statements made by Linde employees were accurate at the time they were made to the best of his knowledge. (Compare Coyle Decl. at ¶¶ 5, 8, with Doc. No. 52-4 at 25.) Finally, when questioned at his deposition whether he believed any Linde employee had ever made any misleading statements to him regarding the equipment at issue, Coyle responded, "knowingly, no." (Doc. No. 52-4 at 26:5-7.)

"'The general rule in the Ninth Circuit is that a party cannot create an issue of fact by an affidavit contradicting his prior deposition testimony.'" Van Asdale v. Int'l Game Tech., 577 F.3d 989, 998 (9th Cir. 2009) (quoting Kennedy v. Allied Mut. Ins., 952 F.2d 262, 266 (9th Cir. 1991)). This rule, known as the sham affidavit rule, "prevents a party who [*49] has been examined at length on deposition from raising an issue of fact simply by submitting an affidavit contradicting his own prior testimony, which would greatly diminish the utility of summary judgment as a procedure for screening out sham issues of fact." Yeager v. Bowlin, 693 F.3d 1076, 1080 (9th Cir. 2012) (internal quotation marks and brackets omitted). As courts have acknowledged, this rule is at least somewhat in tension with normal procedures employed in connection with summary judgment motions, in which courts are prohibited from making credibility determinations or weighing conflicting evidence. See Van Asdale, 577 F.3d at 998. Accordingly, the sham affidavit rule is to be employed sparingly, and only when "the inconsistency between a party's deposition testimony and subsequent affidavit [is] clear and unambiguous." Id. at 998-99.

Here, the court finds that Coyle's declaration submitted in opposition to summary judgment cannot logically be reconciled with his deposition testimony. Coyle testified that Beckman was not involved at all with negotiations leading to the 2011 Agreement and that sworn testimony simply cannot be squared with Coyle's statement in his declaration that Beckman "represented that the equipment provided to Valley Protein by Linde was high quality, [*50] reliable, and efficient." (Coyle Decl. at ¶ 5.) Nor can the court credit the alleged misrepresentations leading up to the execution of the 2011 Agreement set forth in Coyle's declaration in light of his deposition testimony that all statements made by Linde employees were accurate at the time they were made. Because Coyle's deposition is clearly and unambiguously inconsistent with his later declaration submitted in support of the opposition to summary judgment, the court will disregard Coyle's declaration to the extent it is in conflict with his sworn deposition testimony.

Coyle's deposition testimony affirmatively establishes that, in his opinion, any false statements made to Valley Protein were not knowingly made by Linde employees. As noted, under California law, a party must establish "knowledge of falsity" in order to prevail on an intentional misrepresentation claim. Robinson Helicopter Co., 34 Cal. 4th at 990. Linde has thus satisfied its burden of "produc[ing] evidence negating an essential element of the nonmoving party's case." See Nissan Fire & Marine Ins. v. Fritz Cos., 210 F.3d 1099, 1106 (9th Cir. 2000). The burden therefore shifts to Valley Protein to establish that a genuine issue of disputed fact actually does exist with respect to this claim. See Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 586. However, in opposing summary judgment [*51] on its intentional misrepresentation claim, Valley Protein has relied solely on Coyle's declaration to create a triable issue of fact. (Doc. No. 53 at 25-26.) As a sham affidavit, Coyle's declaration fails to establish the existence of a genuinely disputed factual issue with respect to the knowingness of the alleged misrepresentations. The undersigned therefore finds that summary judgment in favor of Linde is warranted as to Valley Protein's counter-claim for intentional misrepresentation.[5]

By contrast, a party need not prove that a false statement was "knowing" in order to prevail on a claim for negligent misrepresentation. Small v. Fritz Cos., 30 Cal. 4th 167, 173, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 490, 65 P.3d 1255 (2003) ("The tort of negligent misrepresentation does not require scienter or intent to defraud."). Therefore, the court will next [5] While the court finds that this particular statement within Coyle's declaration must be disregarded under the sham affidavit rule, it does not follow that all statements contained within it must also be disregarded. For instance, Coyle states in his declaration that Linde's engineer, Amanda Guzman, represented in October 2014 that the poultry-freezing equipment to be provided under the 2014 Agreement would be capable of processing 5,000 pounds of poultry per hour. (Coyle Decl. at ¶ 9.) Although the evidence establishes that Linde was unaware that a 5,000-pound-per-hour processing capacity was a requirement for Valley Protein at the time the 2014 Agreement was executed (see Doc. No. 52-4 at 19), that does not affirmatively prove that the statement contained within the Coyle declaration was never made.

consider Linde's argument that Valley Protein's misrepresentation claims are barred by the economic loss doctrine. The California Supreme Court recently discussed the economic loss rule, stating as follows:

> Economic loss consists of damages for inadequate value, costs of repair and replacement of [a] defective product or consequent loss of profits—without any claim of personal injury or damages to other. Simply stated, the economic loss rule [*52] provides: Where a purchaser's expectations in a sale are frustrated because the product he bought is not working properly, his remedy is said to be in contract alone, for he has suffered only "economic" losses. This doctrine hinges on a distinction drawn between transactions involving the sale of goods for commercial purposes where economic expectations are protected by commercial and contract law, and those involving the sale of defective products to individual consumers who are injured in a manner which has traditionally been remedied by resort to the law of torts. The economic loss rule requires a purchaser to recover in contract for purely economic loss due to disappointed expectations, unless he can demonstrate harm above and beyond a broken contractual promise. Quite simply, the economic loss rule prevents the law of contract and the law of tort from dissolving one into the other.

Robinson Helicopter, 34 Cal. 4th at 988 (emphasis added).

At its heart, this rule requires a plaintiff to rely on the law of contracts and implied and express warranties to recover based upon any defect in the product sold to plaintiff, rather than resort to tort law. When applied to product liability suits, one may still sue for damage to [*53] property other than the product under the economic loss rule, but losses to the allegedly defective product itself are barred as "economic" losses. Jimenez v. Superior Court of San Diego Cty., 29 Cal. 4th 473, 476, 127 Cal. Rptr. 2d 614, 58 P.3d 450 (2002). The economic loss rule has also been applied to bar general negligence claims. See Robinson Helicopter, 34 Cal. 4th at 989 (citing Aas v. Superior Court, 24 Cal. 4th 627, 640, 101 Cal. Rptr. 2d 718, 12 P.3d 1125 (2000) and Seely v. Liberty Mut. Fire Ins., 63 Cal. 2d 41, 45, 45 Cal. Rptr. 8, 403 P.2d 136 (1965)).

In Robinson Helicopter, the California Supreme Court noted other exceptions to the economic loss rule besides those carved out for certain products liability cases. Thus, the court recognized that aside from cases involving physical injury or damage to other property, plaintiffs may also recover for "breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing in insurance contracts; for wrongful discharge in violation of fundamental public policy; or where the contract was fraudulently induced." Id. at 989-90 (emphasis added). "In each of these cases, the duty that gives rise to tort liability is either completely independent of the contract or arises from conduct which is both intentional and intended to harm." Id. at 990 (citations and quotations omitted). "Focusing on intentional conduct gives substance to the proposition that a breach of contract is tortious only when some independent duty arising from tort law is violated." Id. However, if "every negligent breach [*54] of a contract gives rise to tort damages the limitation would be meaningless, as would the statutory distinction between tort and contract remedies." Id. Thus, the focus for the California Supreme Court in Robinson Helicopter centered on the intentional nature of the defendant's behavior, because courts should only apply tort remedies to contract suits "when the conduct in question is so clear in its deviation from socially useful business practices that the effect of enforcing such tort duties will be to aid rather than discourage commerce." Id. at 991-92 (citations and quotations omitted). "California also has a legitimate and compelling interest in preserving a business climate free of fraud and deceptive practices," and therefore fraudulent conduct cannot be considered a "socially useful business practice." Id. at 992 (citations and quotations omitted).

No published Ninth Circuit opinion nor California Supreme Court decision has analyzed how the exceptions to the economic loss rule identified in Robinson Helicopter apply to claims of negligent misrepresentation which, by their very nature, occupy the space between negligence and fraud claims. However, two unpublished Ninth Circuit decisions have suggested [*55] negligent misrepresentation claims are not barred by the economic loss rule. See Hannibal Pictures, Inc. v. Sonja Prods. LLC, 432 Fed. App'x 700, 701 (9th Cir. 2011) (holding that a jury verdict in favor of a negligent misrepresentation claim was not precluded by the economic loss rule where "one party has lied to the other"); Kalitta Air, L.L.C. v. Cent. Texas Airborne Sys., Inc., 315 Fed. App'x 603, 607 (9th Cir. 2008) (holding that negligent misrepresentation is a "species of fraud" under California law, for which "economic loss is recoverable"). A third unpublished Ninth Circuit decision reached a contrary holding. See Astrium S.A.S. v. TRW, Inc., 197 Fed. App'x 575, 577 (9th Cir. 2006) (citing Robinson Helicopter for the proposition that the economic loss rule barred recovery for fraud and negligent misrepresentation "because, even if fraud were shown, there is no showing that people or property were placed at risk or that Astrium was exposed to 'personal damages' beyond economic losses"); accord Crystal Springs Upland Sch. v. Fieldturf USA, Inc., 219 F. Supp. 3d 962, 969 n.3 (N.D. Cal. 2016) (recognizing this split of authority).[6]

Numerous district courts in California have considered this issue, reaching varying conclusions. See, e.g., Shahinian v. Kimberly-Clark Corp., No. CV 14-8390 DMG(SHx), 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 92782, 2015 WL 4264638, at *8 (C.D. Cal. July 10, 2015); UMG Recordings, Inc. v. Glob. Eagle Entm't, Inc., 117 F. Supp. 3d 1092, 1104 (C.D. Cal. 2015); Ladore v. Sony Comput. Entm't Am., LLC, 75 F. Supp. 3d 1065, 1074-76 (N.D. Cal. 2014); Tasion Commc'ns, Inc. v. Ubiquiti Networks, Inc., No. C-13-1803-EMC, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 121207, 2013 WL 4530470, at *3-9 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 26, 2013); NuCal Foods, Inc. v. Quality Egg LLC, 918 F. Supp. 2d 1023, 1030 (E.D. Cal. 2013); Castro Valley Union 76, Inc. v. Vapor Sys. Techs., Inc., No. C 11-0299 PJH, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 151734, 2012 WL 5199458, at *4 (N.D. Cal. Oct. 22, 2012); United Guar. Mortg. Indem. Co. v. Countrywide Fin. Corp., 660 F. Supp. 2d 1163, 1179 (C.D. Cal. 2009); Barrier Specialty Roofing & Coatings, [*56] Inc. v. ICI Paints N. Am., Inc., No. CV F 07-1614-LJO-TAG, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 120604, 2008 WL 2724876, at *5-6 (E.D. Cal. July 11, 2008). One district court has observed that "reasonable minds can and do disagree on the applicability of the economic loss rule to negligent representation claims, and this issue is ripe to be revisited by the California Supreme Court." Broomfield v. Craft Brew All., Inc., No. 17-CV-01027-BLF, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 142572, 2017 WL 3838453, at *9 (N.D. Cal. Sept. 1, 2017), on reconsideration in part, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 194451, 2017 WL 5665654 (N.D. Cal. Nov. 27, 2017).

Because this question is one of state law, this court is obligated to resolve it as the court believes the California Supreme Court would. Astaire v. Best Film & Video Corp., 116 F.3d 1297, 1300 (9th Cir. 1997), as amended, 136 F.3d 1208 (9th Cir. 1998). "In the absence of a controlling California Supreme Court decision, [the court] must predict how the California Supreme Court would decide the issue, using intermediate appellate court decisions, statutes, and decisions from other jurisdictions as interpretive aids." Gravquick A/S v. Trimble Navigation Int'l Ltd., 323 F.3d 1219, 1222 (9th Cir. 2003). As the above-cited cases demonstrate, both district courts and panels of the Ninth Circuit have arrived at differing conclusions. However, having reviewed all of these decisions, the court finds the opinion in Lincoln General Insurance Co. v. Access Claims Administrators, Inc., No. CIV. S-07-1015 LKK/EFB, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 67172, 2007 WL 2492436 (E.D. Cal. Aug. 30, 2007) to be persuasive. In confronting this issue in that case, Judge Karlton held that the economic loss rule bars negligent [*57] misrepresentation claims where the allegation runs "closely parallel" to a concurrent breach of contract claim. Lincoln Gen. Ins. Co., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 67172, 2007 WL 2492436, at *8. Rather than adopting a bright-line rule that negligent misrepresentation claims either are or are not barred by the economic loss rule, this analysis examines the factual basis of the claim to determine whether, as a practical matter, the negligent misrepresentation claim is in actuality a breach of contract claim in disguise. This approach is in keeping with that employed by the California Supreme Court in Robinson Helicopter, where that court concluded that the fraud and intentional misrepresentation claims were not barred "because they were independent of Dana's breach of contract." Robinson Helicopter, 34 Cal. 4th at 991.[7] Accordingly, the court will compare Valley Protein's counter-claims for breach of contract and negligent misrepresentation to determine whether they are predicated on the same or similar factual allegations. See Bret Harte Union High Sch. Dist. v. FieldTurf, USA, Inc., No. 1:16-cv-00371-DAD-SMS, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 83295, 2016 WL 3519294, at *5 (E.D. Cal. June 27, 2016) (declining to dismiss plaintiff's negligent representation claim despite the additional allegation of a breach of contract claim because the negligent representation allegations "are, by nature, different"); [*58] Tasion Commc'ns, 2013 U.S. Dist. [7] California courts undertake a similarly functional analysis in other areas. For instance, in determining whether a particular cause of action sounds in tort or contract, California courts eschew a more formalistic approach in favor of an examination of "the quintessence of the action." Voth v. Wasco Pub. Util. Dist., 56 Cal. App. 3d 353, 356, 128 Cal. Rptr. 608 (1976) ("Whether an action is contractual or tortious depends upon the nature of the right sued upon, and not the form of the pleading or the relief demanded."); accord Amtower v. Photon Dynamics, Inc., 158 Cal. App. 4th 1582, 1602, 71 Cal. Rptr. 3d 361 (2008).

cases and noting that "courts have nonetheless dismissed negligent misrepresentation claims as barred by the economic loss rule where the complained-of misrepresentations were simply those made in the course of forming the contract"). If Valley Protein's breach of contract and negligent misrepresentation claims are predicated on the same or similar factual allegations, summary judgment in Linde's favor as to the negligent misrepresentation claim is appropriate.

Here, Valley Protein's breach of contract claim is based on the following factual allegations: (1) Linde's failure to supply Valley Protein with modern, reliable, and efficient poultry-freezing equipment; (2) causing Valley Protein to use significantly more CO_2 gas than was necessary; (3) failing to properly maintain its poultry-freezing equipment; (4) improperly charging Valley Protein fuel surcharge and delivery fees by delivering CO_2 gas from Richmond, CA instead of Pixley, CA; and (5) failing to deliver the poultry-freezing equipment it was obligated to provide under the 2014 Agreement. (Doc. No. 29 at ¶¶ 27, 30.) Its negligent misrepresentation claim is based on alleged misrepresentations that (1) Linde [*59] would provide Valley Protein with modern, reliable, and efficient equipment that would satisfy Valley Protein's needs; (2) Linde would deliver CO_2 gas from Pixley, CA rather than Richmond, CA; and (3) Linde would supply Valley Protein with poultry-freezing equipment sufficient to meet Valley Protein's production needs in connection with the 2014 Agreement. (Id. at ¶¶ 49, 54, 56.) An examination and comparison of these claims reveals that not only do they "closely parallel" one another, they are effectively identical. Valley Protein's negligent misrepresentation claim plainly seeks to redress the same grievances as the breach of contract claim, namely the economic damages Valley Protein allegedly suffered as a result of entering into the 2011 and 2014 Agreements. Under such circumstances, the economic loss rule limits Valley Protein to recovery under contract law rather than tort law. See JMP Sec. LLP v. Altair Nanotechnologies Inc., 880 F. Supp. 2d 1029, 1043 (N.D. Cal. 2012) (dismissing claims for fraud and negligent misrepresentation after finding those claims "consist of nothing more than Altair's alleged failure to make good on its contractual promises"). Summary judgment in Linde's favor is therefore also appropriate as to Valley Protein's claim for negligent misrepresentation. [*60]

I. Valley Protein's Claims for Unfair Competition

Finally, the court addresses Valley Protein's counter-claim under California Business and Professions Code § 17200, commonly referred to as the Unfair Competition Law ("UCL"). Linde argues that this counter-claim is also time-barred, that Valley Protein has not raised a triable issue of fact with respect to the claim, and that Valley Protein is not entitled to any of the remedies available under the UCL.

The UCL prohibits "unfair competition," which is defined as including "any unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business act or practice." Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200. This language is broad, and deliberately so. As the California Supreme Court has observed,

> The Legislature intended by this sweeping language to permit tribunals to enjoin on-going wrongful business conduct in whatever context such activity might occur. Indeed, the section was intentionally framed in its broad, sweeping language, precisely to enable judicial tribunals to deal with the innumerable new schemes which the fertility of man's invention would contrive.

Cel-Tech Commc'ns, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Tel. Co., 20 Cal. 4th 163, 181, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 (1999) (internal quotation marks, brackets, and ellipses omitted); see also Rubin v. Green, 4 Cal. 4th 1187, 1200, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 828, 847 P.2d 1044 (1993) (stating that the law "embraces anything that can properly be called a business practice and that at the same time is forbidden [*61] by law").

Notably, courts give independent effect to each of the three prongs of § 17200. With respect to the "unlawful" prong, § 17200 "borrows violations of other laws and treats them as unlawful practices that the unfair competition law makes independently actionable." De La Torre v. CashCall, Inc., 5 Cal. 5th 966, 980, 236 Cal. Rptr. 3d 353, 422 P.3d 1004 (2018) (internal quotation marks omitted). As to the "unfair" prong, § 17200 makes clear that "a practice may be deemed unfair even if not specifically proscribed by some other law." Cel-Tech Commc'ns, 20 Cal. 4th at 180. "In other words, a practice is prohibited as 'unfair' or 'deceptive' even if not 'unlawful' and vice versa." State Farm Fire & Cas. Co. v. Superior Court, 45 Cal. App. 4th 1093, 1102, 53 Cal. Rptr. 2d 229 (1996), abrogated on other grounds by Cel-Tech Commc'ns, 20 Cal. 4th at 184-85. Finally, California courts recognize a distinct cause of action under the "fraudulent" prong of § 17200. Under this prong, "it is necessary only to show that the plaintiff was likely to be deceived, and suffered economic injury as a result of the deception." Zhang v. Superior Court, 57 Cal. 4th 364, 380, 159 Cal. Rptr. 3d 672, 304 P.3d 163 (2013) (citing Kwikset Corp. v. Superior Court, 51 Cal. 4th 310, 322, 120 Cal. Rptr. 3d 741, 246 P.3d 877 (2011) and In re Tobacco II Cases, 46 Cal. 4th 298, 312, 93 Cal. Rptr. 3d 559, 207 P.3d 20 (2009)). Although the scope of relief under this provision is broad, the available remedies are limited. "Prevailing plaintiffs are generally limited to injunctive relief and restitution . . . [and] Plaintiffs may not receive damages, much less treble damages, or attorneys fees." Cel-Tech Commc'ns, 20 Cal. 4th at 179.

With respect to whether Valley Protein's claim filed in February of 2017 is time-barred, [*62] the analysis set forth above in addressing the breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing claim applies to this cause of action as well. As with that cause of action, claims brought under the UCL are subject to a four-year statute of limitations. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17208. Again, the undisputed evidence before the court on summary judgment demonstrates that Valley Protein was aware by early 2012 that the equipment provided by Linde was not meeting its target CO_2 conversion rate. (Doc. No. 52-4 at 142:25, 143:1-5.) Even accounting for tolling because of California's discovery rule, any recovery under this theory of liability is barred by the four-year statute of limitations which would have expired by early 2016. However, the court finds no basis to apply the statute of limitations with respect to Valley Protein's other theories of recovery with respect to this claim for the same reasons explained above in addressing Valley Protein's counter-claim for breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing.

The court next addresses whether Valley Protein is entitled to the relief sought. For violation of § 17200, Valley Protein's counter-claim seeks injunctive relief, restitution, and attorneys' fees. [*63] (Doc. No. 29 at 18-19.) A plaintiff must demonstrate standing "with respect to each form of relief sought, whether it be injunctive relief, damages, or civil penalties." See Bates v. United Parcel Serv., Inc., 511 F.3d 974, 985 (9th Cir. 2007) (en banc); see also Haro v. Sebelius, 747 F.3d 1099, 1108 (9th Cir. 2013) (citing DaimlerChrysler Corp. v. Cuno, 547 U.S. 332, 352, 126 S. Ct. 1854, 164 L. Ed. 2d 589 (2006)).

The matter of attorneys' fees is easily resolved since such fees are not recoverable under § 17200. Cel-Tech Commc'ns, 20 Cal. 4th at 179. Nor has Valley Protein demonstrated its entitlement to injunctive relief. Linde asserts in its motion that Valley Protein and Linde are not presently engaged in any business relationship, and there is no evidence before the court indicating to the contrary. (Doc. No. 52 at 35.) Thus, any injunctive relief Valley Protein seeks is necessarily prospective in nature. Indeed, Valley Protein's counter-claim indicates that it seeks injunctive relief "prohibiting Linde from engaging in such false, deceptive and fraudulent conduct in the future." (Doc. No. 29 at ¶ 63) (emphasis added). However, to have standing to seek injunctive relief, the threat of injury to plaintiffs "must be actual and imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical." Summers v. Earth Island Inst., 555 U.S. 488, 493, 129 S. Ct. 1142, 173 L. Ed. 2d 1 (2009). "In other words, the 'threatened injury must be certainly impending to constitute injury in fact' and 'allegations of possible future injury are not sufficient.'" [*64] Davidson v. Kimberly-Clark Corp., 889 F.3d 956, 967 (9th Cir. 2018) (quoting Clapper v. Amnesty Int'l USA, 568 U.S. 398, 409, 133 S. Ct. 1138, 185 L. Ed. 2d 264 (2013)). Past wrongs do not by themselves amount to real and immediate threats of injury. See San Diego Cty. Gun Rights Comm. v. Reno, 98 F.3d 1121, 1126 (9th Cir. 1996); see also O'Shea v. Littleton, 414 U.S. 488, 495-96, 94 S. Ct. 669, 38 L. Ed. 2d 674 (1974) ("Past exposure to illegal conduct does not in itself show a present case or controversy regarding injunctive relief . . . if unaccompanied by any continuing, present adverse effect"). However, "past wrongs are evidence bearing on whether there is a real and immediate threat of repeated injury." O'Shea, 414 U.S. at 496. "In addition, the claimed threat of injury must be likely to be redressed by the prospective injunctive relief." Bates, 511 F.3d at 985-86. Valley Protein's brief in opposition to summary judgment does not respond to Linde's argument that injunctive relief is foreclosed here. (See Doc. No. 53 at 27-28.) Having reviewed the evidence submitted on summary judgment, the court agrees with Linde that Valley Protein has not demonstrated any "certainly impending" harm. Rather, the evidence establishes that Valley Protein began purchasing CO_2 from Air Liquide, and that its business relationship with Linde has terminated. Under these circumstances, the court finds that injunctive relief is unavailable to Valley Protein.

Finally, the court looks to whether Valley Protein is entitled to restitution damages. California Business & Professions Code § 17203 provides that [*65] restitution is an available remedy under the UCL "to restore to any person in interest any money or property, real or personal, which may have been acquired by means of such unfair competition." Linde argues that Valley Protein is not entitled to restitution because it "has not alleged and cannot establish that Linde has obtained money from Valley Protein to which it was not entitled, nor has it established that it gave up money that it was otherwise entitled to keep." (Doc. No. 52 at 36.) At bottom, this amounts to an assertion that Valley Protein's UCL counter-claim fails on the merits. The court therefore turns to Linde's alternative argument that Valley Protein's UCL claim fails as a matter of law, whether couched as unlawful, unfair, or fraudulent.

Under the unlawful prong of the UCL, "a violation of another law is a predicate for stating a cause of action under the UCL's unlawful prong." Berryman v. Merit Prop. Mgmt., Inc., 152 Cal. App. 4th 1544, 1554, 62 Cal. Rptr. 3d 177 (2007). Although Valley Protein's counter-claim alleges generally that "Linde engaged in, and continues to engage in, unlawful and unfair claims practices [sic] as alleged herein," it does not identify which law Linde has allegedly violated. (Doc. No. 29 at ¶ 62.) Likewise, in its opposition to Linde's [*66] motion for summary judgment Valley Protein has failed to point to any violation of law. The only possible such violations are the common law causes of action asserted in Valley Protein's counter-claim, discussed above. However, "a common law violation . . . is insufficient" as a predicate for a UCL claim under the unlawful prong of the statute. Shroyer v. New Cingular Wireless Servs., Inc., 622 F.3d 1035, 1044 (9th Cir. 2010) (citing Allied Grape Growers v. Bronco Wine Co., 203 Cal. App. 3d 432, 450-54, 249 Cal. Rptr. 872 (1988)). Finding no other basis to support a claim under the unlawful prong of the UCL, the court will grant Linde's motion for summary judgment with respect to the unlawful prong of Valley Protein's UCL claim.

Next, the court considers whether Linde is entitled to summary judgment on Valley Protein's UCL claim brought under the fraudulent prong of the statute. A business practice is "fraudulent" under the UCL if members of the public are likely to be deceived. Davis v. HSBC Bank Nev., N.A., 691 F.3d 1152, 1169 (9th Cir. 2012) (citing Puentes v. Wells Fargo Home Mortg., Inc., 160 Cal. App. 4th 638, 72 Cal. Rptr. 3d 903 (2008)). "A UCL claim based on the fraudulent prong can be based on representations that deceive because they are untrue, but also those which may be accurate on some level, but will nonetheless tend to mislead or deceive . . . A perfectly true statement couched in such a manner that it is likely to mislead or deceive the consumer, such as by failure to disclose other relevant information, [*67] is actionable under the UCL." Morgan v. AT&T Wireless Servs., Inc., 177 Cal. App. 4th 1235, 1255, 99 Cal. Rptr. 3d 768 (2009).

Here, Valley Protein has not come forward on summary judgment with any evidence of harm to the general public resulting from Linde's misrepresentations. A plaintiff must plead and prove harm to the public as a prerequisite to succeed on a UCL claim under the fraudulent prong. *See, e.g., Travelers Prop. Cas. Co. of Am. v. Centex Homes, No. 11-3638-SC, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 121401, 2013 WL 4528956, at 5 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 26, 2013) (dismissing plaintiff's claim under the fraudulent prong with prejudice and noting that "both private individuals and corporations must show that the alleged wrongdoing has some impact on the general public"); *Med. Instrument Dev. Labs. v. Alcon Labs., No. C 05-1138 MJJ, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 41411, 2005 WL 1926673, at 5 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 10, 2005) ("Plaintiff fails to allege in its Complaint that any 'members of the public are likely to be deceived' by Defendant's allegedly fraudulent conduct."). Here, Valley Protein appears to base its UCL claim entirely on Linde's conduct in relation to the 2011 and 2014 Agreements. (See Doc. No. 53 at 27) ("In the case at hand, there are facts that support claims for unfair business practices, both in the fraudulent conduct used to include [sic] Valley Protein into the 2011 Agreement as well as the so-called 'mistake' made by Linde on the sizing of the freezing [*68] equipment in connection with the 2014 Agreement[.]"). However, there is no evidence before the court on summary judgment evincing that those Agreements caused any harm to the public. Indeed, Valley Protein has not put forward evidence that Linde ever communicated to the public in any way. In essence, Valley Protein "is trying to use the UCL fraud prong to vindicate its contractual . . . rights." *Travelers Prop. Cas. Co. of Am., 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 121401, 2013 WL 4528956, at 5. Because of this, Linde is entitled to judgment in its favor with respect to Valley Protein's claim under the fraudulent prong of the UCL. See Capella Photonics, Inc. v. Cisco Sys., Inc., 77 F. Supp. 3d 850, 865 (N.D. Cal. 2014) (dismissing the defendant's UCL counter-claim brought under the fraudulent prong after finding that the defendant "does not allege that members of the public have been deceived by [plaintiff's] alleged fraudulent misrepresentations about the strength of its patent rights").

Finally, the court considers whether summary judgment is warranted in favor of Linde under the unfair prong of Valley Protein's UCL claim. In the wake of the California Supreme Court's decision in Cel-Tech, appellate courts have been split regarding the proper test to be employed in determining whether a business practice is "unfair." Under one line of cases, an unfair business practice [*69] occurs "when that practice offends an established public policy or when the practice is immoral, unethical, oppressive, unscrupulous or substantially injurious to consumers." Graham v. Bank of Am., N.A., 226 Cal. App. 4th 594, 612, 172 Cal. Rptr. 3d 218 (2014). A second line of cases considers the factors for unfairness set forth in section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act: "'(1) the consumer injury must be substantial; (2) the injury must not be outweighed by any countervailing benefits to consumers or competition; and (3) it must be an injury that consumers themselves could not reasonably have avoided.'" Id. at 613 (quoting Camacho v. Auto. Club of S. Cal., 142 Cal. App. 4th 1394, 1403, 48 Cal. Rptr. 3d 770 (2006)). Yet a third line of cases holds that "a plaintiff alleging an unfair business practice must show the defendant's conduct is tethered to an underlying constitutional, statutory or regulatory provision, or that it threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of an antitrust law." Id. (internal quotation marks and brackets omitted).[8]

Regardless of the correct test, however, "where the unfair business practices alleged under the unfair prong of the UCL overlap entirely with the business practices addressed in the fraudulent and unlawful prongs of the UCL, the unfair prong of the UCL cannot survive if the claims under the [*70] other two prongs of the UCL do not survive." *Hoai Dang v. Samsung Elecs. Co., No. 14-CV-00530-LHK, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 204471, 2018 WL 6308738, at 10 (N.D. Cal. Dec. 3, 2018); Hadley v. Kellogg Sales Co., 243 F. Supp. 3d 1074, 1104-05 (N.D. Cal. 2017) (same). Here, Valley Protein makes no distinction between its UCL claims, whether alleged under the unlawful, unfair, or fraudulent prongs. Because the undersigned has already found that Linde is entitled to summary judgment with respect to Valley Protein's claims under the unlawful and fraudulent prongs, the court finds that summary judgment is also appropriate in favor of Linde with respect to the unfair prong.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above,

1. Linde's motion for summary judgment (Doc. No. 52) is granted with respect to its breach of contract claim, with damages to be awarded in the amount of $963,084.00;
2. Linde's motion for summary judgment is denied with respect to its claim for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing;
3. Linde's motion for summary judgment is granted with respect to its claim for account stated, with damages to be awarded in the amount of $38,963.89;
4. Linde's motion for summary judgment is granted with respect to its claim for goods and services rendered;
5. Linde's motion for summary judgment is granted with respect to Valley Protein's [*71] counter-claim for breach of contract;
6. Linde's motion for summary judgment is granted with respect to Valley Protein's counter-claim for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing;
7. Linde's motion for summary judgment is granted with respect to Valley Protein's counter-claim for intentional misrepresentation;
8. Linde's motion for summary judgment is granted with respect to Valley Protein's counter-claim for negligent misrepresentation;
9. Linde's motion for summary judgment is granted with respect to Valley Protein's counter-claim for violation of California's Unfair Competition Law;
10. The total amount to be awarded to Linde, LLC on its claims for breach of contract and account stated against Valley Protein, LLC is $1,002,047.89; and [8] Neither Linde nor Valley Protein acknowledge that a split of authority exists on this point nor have they briefed the issue of which test this court should adopt. In the absence of any briefing addressing this point, the court declines to resolve the question of what test should properly apply.

11. A status conference to be held on August 20, 2019 at 9:30 a.m. in Courtroom 5 before the undersigned, telephonic appearance authorized, to address the remaining claim in this action.[9] However, if the court receives a notice of voluntary dismissal from plaintiff as to its remaining claim for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing prior thereto, the status conference will be vacated and judgment will be entered [*72] in accordance with this order.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Opinion

FINAL JUDGMENT AS TO DEFENDANT HYUNDAI OILBANK CO., LTD.

WHEREAS Plaintiff, United States of America, filed its Complaint on March 20, 2019, the United States and Defendant Hyundai Oilbank Co., Ltd. ("Hyundai Oilbank"), by then-respective attorneys, have consented to the entry of this Final Judgment without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law;

WHEREAS, on such date [*2] as may be determined by the Court, Hyundai Oilbank will plead guilty pursuant to Fed. R. Crim. P. 11(c)(1)(C) (the "Plea Agreement") to Count One of a Superseding Indictment filed in the Southern District of Ohio (the "Criminal Action") that alleges a violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, relating to the same events giving rise to the allegations described in the Complaint;

WHEREAS, this Final Judgment does not constitute any evidence against or admission by any party regarding any issue of fact or law;

NOW, THEREFORE, before the taking of any testimony and without trial or final adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and upon consent of the parties hereto, it is hereby ORDERED, ADJUDGED, AND DECREED:

I. JURISDICTION

This Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this action and each of the parties consenting hereto. The Complaint states a claim upon which relief may be granted to the United States against Hyundai Oilbank under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §1.

II. APPLICABILITY

This Final Judgment applies to Hyundai Oilbank, as defined above, and all other persons in active concert or participation with any of them who receive actual notice of this Final Judgment by personal service or otherwise.

III. PAYMENT

Hyundai [*3] Oilbank shall pay to the United States within ten (10) business days of the entry of this Final Judgment the amount of thirty-nine million, one hundred thousand dollars ($39,100,000), less the amount paid (excluding any interest) pursuant to the settlement agreement attached hereto as Attachment 1, to satisfy all civil antitrust claims alleged against Hyundai Oilbank by the United States in the Complaint. Payment of the amount ordered hereby shall be made by wire transfer of funds or cashier's check. If the payment is made by wire transfer, Hyundai Oilbank shall contact Janie Ingalls of the Antitrust Division's Antitrust Documents Group at (202) 514-2481 for instructions before making the transfer. If the payment is made by cashier's check, the check shall be made payable to the United States Department of Justice and delivered to: Janie Ingalls, United States Department of Justice Antitrust Division, Antitrust Documents Group, 450 5th Street, NW, Suite 1024, Washington, D.C. 20530. In the event of a default in payment, interest at the rate of eighteen (18) percent per annum shall accrue thereon from the date of default to the date of payment.

IV. COOPERATION

Hyundai Oilbank shall cooperate [*4] fully with the United States regarding any matter about which Hyundai Oilbank has knowledge or information relating to any ongoing civil investigation, litigation, or other proceeding arising out of any ongoing federal investigation of the subject matter discussed in the Complaint (hereinafter, any such investigation, litigation, or proceeding shall be referred to as a "Civil Federal Proceeding").

The United States agrees that any cooperation provided in connection with the Plea Agreement and/or pursuant to the settlement agreement attached hereto as Attachment 1 will be considered cooperation for purposes of this Final Judgment, and the United States will use its reasonable best efforts, where appropriate, to coordinate any requests for cooperation in connection with the Civil Federal Proceeding with requests for cooperation in connection with the Plea Agreement and the settlement agreement attached hereto as Attachment 1, so as to avoid unnecessary duplication and expense.

Hyundai Oilbank's cooperation shall include, but not be limited to, the following:

(a) Upon request, completely and truthfully disclosing and producing, to the offices of the United States and at no expense to the [*5] United States, copies of all non-privileged information, documents, materials, and records in its possession (and for any foreign-language information, documents, materials, or records, copies must be produced with an English translation), regardless of their geographic location, about which the United States may inquire in connection with any Civil Federal Proceeding, including but not limited to all information about activities of Hyundai Oilbank and present and former officers, directors, employees, and agents of Hyundai Oilbank;

(b) Making available in the United States, at no expense to the United States, its present officers, directors, employees, and agents to provide information and/or testimony as requested by the United States in connection with any Civil Federal Proceeding, including the provision of testimony in trial and other judicial proceedings, as well as interviews with law enforcement authorities, consistent with the rights and privileges of those individuals;

(c) Using its best efforts to make available in the United States, at no expense to the United States, its former officers, directors, employees, and agents to provide information and/or testimony as requested [*6] by the United States in connection with any Civil Federal Proceeding, including the provision of testimony in trial and other judicial proceedings, as well as interviews with law enforcement authorities, consistent with the rights and privileges of those individuals;

(d) Providing testimony or information necessary to identify or establish the original location, authenticity, or other basis for admission into evidence of documents or physical evidence produced by Hyundai Oilbank in any Civil Federal Proceeding as requested by the United States; and

(e) Completely and truthfully responding to all other inquiries of the United States in connection with any Civil Federal Proceeding.

However, notwithstanding any provision of this Final Judgment, Hyundai Oilbank is not required to: (1) request of its current or former officers, directors, employees, or agents that they forgo seeking the advice of an attorney nor that they act contrary to that advice; (2) take any action against its officers, directors, employees, or agents for following their attorney's advice; or (3) waive any claim of privilege or work product protection.

The obligations of Hyundai Oilbank to cooperate fully with the United [*7] States as described in this Section shall cease upon the conclusion of all Civil Federal Proceedings (which may include Civil Federal Proceedings related to the conduct of third parties), including exhaustion of all appeals or expiration of time for all appeals of any Court ruling in each such Civil Federal Proceeding, at which point the United States will provide written notice to Hyundai Oilbank that its obligations under this Section have expired.

V. ANTITRUST COMPLIANCE PROGRAM

A. Within thirty (30) days after entry of this Final Judgment, Hyundai Oilbank shall appoint an Antitrust Compliance Officer and identify to the United States his or her name, business address, telephone number, and email address. Within forty-five (45) days of a vacancy in the Antitrust Compliance Officer position, Hyundai Oilbank shall appoint a replacement, and shall identify to the United States the Antitrust Compliance Officer's name, business address, telephone number, and email address. Hyundai Oilbank's initial or replacement appointment of an Antitrust Compliance Officer is subject to the approval of the United States, in its sole discretion.

B. The Antitrust Compliance Officer shall institute an antitrust [*8] compliance program for the company's employees and directors with responsibility for bidding for any contract with the United States. The antitrust compliance program shall provide at least two hours of training annually on the antitrust laws of the United States, such training to be delivered by an attorney with relevant experience in the field of United States antitrust law.

C. Each Antitrust Compliance Officer shall obtain, within six months after entry of this Final Judgment, and on an annual basis thereafter, on or before each anniversary of the entry of this Final Judgment, from each person subject to Paragraph V.B of this Final Judgment, and thereafter maintaining, a certification that each such person has received the required two hours of annual antitrust training.

D. Each Antitrust Compliance Officer shall communicate annually to all employees that they may disclose to the Antitrust Compliance Officer, without reprisal, information concerning any potential violation of the United States antitrust laws.

E. Each Antitrust Compliance Offer shall provide to the United States within six months after entry of this Final Judgment, and on an annual basis thereafter, on or before each [*9] anniversary of the entry of this Final Judgment, a written statement as to the fact and manner of Hyundai Oilbank's compliance with Section V of this Final Judgment.

VI. RETENTION OF JURISDICTION

This Court retains jurisdiction to enable any of the parties to this Final Judgment to apply to this Court at any time for further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out or construe this Final Judgment, to modify or terminate any of its provisions, to enforce compliance, and to punish violations of its provisions.

VII. ENFORCEMENT OF FINAL JUDGMENT

A. The United States retains and reserves all rights to enforce the provisions of this Final Judgment, including the right to seek an order of contempt from the Court. Hyundai Oilbank agrees that in any civil contempt action, any motion to show cause, or any similar action brought by the United States regarding an alleged violation of this Final Judgment, the United States may establish a violation of the decree and the appropriateness of any remedy therefor by a preponderance of the evidence, and Hyundai Oilbank waives any argument that a different standard of proof should apply.

B. The Final Judgment should be interpreted [*10] to give full effect to the procompetitive purposes of the antitrust laws and to restore all competition the United States alleged was harmed by the challenged conduct. Hyundai Oilbank agrees that they may be held in contempt of, and that the Court may enforce, any provision of this Final Judgment that, as interpreted by the Court in light of these procompetitive principles and applying ordinary tools of interpretation, is stated specifically and in reasonable detail, whether or not it is clear and unambiguous on its face. In any such interpretation, the terms of this Final Judgment should not be construed against either party as the drafter.

C. In any enforcement proceeding in which the Court finds that Hyundai Oilbank has violated this Final Judgment, the United States may apply to the Court for a one-time extension of this Final Judgment, together with such other relief as may be appropriate. In connection with any successful effort by the United States to enforce this Final Judgment against Hyundai Oilbank, whether litigated or resolved prior to litigation, Hyundai Oilbank agrees to reimburse the United States for the fees and expenses of its attorneys, as well as any other costs [*11] including experts' fees, incurred in connection with that enforcement effort, including in the investigation of the potential violation.

VIII. EXPIRATION OF FINAL JUDGMENT

Unless this Court grants an extension, this Final Judgment shall expire seven (7) years from the date of its entry, except that after five (5) years from the date of its entry, this Final Judgment may be terminated upon notice by the United States to the Court and Hyundai Oilbank that the continuation of the Final Judgment no longer is necessary or in the public interest.

IX. PUBLIC INTEREST DETERMINATION

Entry of this Final Judgment is in the public interest. The parties have complied with the requirements of the Antitrust Procedures and Penalties Act, 15 U.S.C. § 16, including making copies available to the public of this Final Judgment, the Competitive Impact Statement, and any comments thereon and the United States' responses to comments. Based upon the record before the Court, which includes the Competitive Impact Statement and any comments and response to comments filed with the Court, entry of this Final Judgment is in the public interest.

SETTLEMENT [*12] AGREEMENT

This Settlement Agreement ("Agreement") is entered into among the United States of America, acting through the Civil Division of the United States Department of Justice and the United States Attorney's Office for the Southern District of Ohio, on behalf of the Defense Logistics Agency ("DLA") and the Army and Air Force Exchange Service ("AAFES") (collectively the "United States"), Hyundai Oilbank Co., Ltd. ("Hyundai"), and Relator [TEXT REDACTED BY THE COURT] (hereafter collectively referred to as "the Parties"), through their authorized representatives.

RECITALS

A. Hyundai is a South Korea-based energy company that produces various petroleum products that it sells to South Korean and international customers, including the United States Department of Defense ("DoD").

B. On February 28, 2018, Relator, a resident and citizen of South Korea, filed a qui tam action in the United States District Court for the Southern District of Ohio captioned United States ex rel. [TEXT REDACTED BY THE COURT] v. GS Caltex, et al., Civil Action No. [TEXT REDACTED BY THE COURT], pursuant to the qui tam provisions of the False Claims Act, 31 U.S.C. § 3730(b) (the "Civil FCA Action"). Relator contends that Hyundai conspired [*13] with other South Korean entities to rig bids on DoD contracts to supply fuel to U.S. military bases throughout South Korea beginning in 2005 and continuing until 2016, including DLA Post, Camps, and Stations ("PC&S") contracts executed in 2006, 2009, and 2013, and AAFES contracts executed in 2008.

C. On such date as may be determined by the Court, Hyundai will plead guilty pursuant to Fed. R. Crim. P. 11(c)(1)(C) (the "Plea Agreement") to Count One of a Superseding Indictment filed in the Southern District of Ohio (the "Criminal Action") that alleges that Hyundai participated in a combination and conspiracy beginning at least in or around March 2005 and continuing until at least in or around October 2016, to suppress and eliminate competition on certain contracts solicited by the DoD to supply fuel to numerous U.S. Army, Navy, Marine, and Air Force installations in South Korea, including PC&S contracts and the 2008 AAFES contract, in violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1.

D. Hyundai will execute a Stipulation with the Antitrust Division of the United States Department of Justice in which Hyundai will consent to the entry of a Final Judgment to be filed in United States v. Hyundai Oilbank Co., Ltd., Civil Action [*14] No. [to be assigned] (S.D. Ohio) (the "Civil Antitrust Action") that will settle any and all civil antitrust claims of the United States against Hyundai arising from any act or offense committed before the date of the Stipulation that was undertaken in furtherance of an attempted or completed antitrust conspiracy involving PC&S and/or AAFES fuel supply contracts with the U.S. military in South Korea during the period 2005 through 2016.

E. The United States contends that it has certain civil claims against Hyundai arising from the conduct described in the Plea Agreement in the Criminal Action and in the Stipulation in the Civil Antitrust Action, as well as the conduct, actions, and claims alleged by Relator in the Civil FCA Action. The conduct referenced in this Paragraph is referred to below as the Covered Conduct.

F. With the exception of any admissions that are made by Hyundai in connection with the Plea Agreement in the Criminal Action, this Settlement Agreement is neither an admission of liability by Hyundai nor a concession by the United States that its claims are not well founded.

To avoid the delay, uncertainty, inconvenience, and expense of protracted litigation of the above claims, [*15] and in consideration of the mutual promises and obligations of this Settlement Agreement, the Parties agree and covenant as follows:

TERMS AND CONDITIONS

1.a. Hyundai agrees to pay to the United States $28,818,814 ("FCA Settlement Amount"), of which $13,266,973 is restitution, by electronic funds transfer no later than thirteen (13) business days after the Effective Date of this Agreement pursuant to written instructions to be provided by the Civil Division of the Department of Justice. Relator claims entitlement under 31 U.S.C. § 3730(d) to a share of the proceeds of this Settlement Agreement and to Relator's reasonable expenses, attorneys' fees and costs. The FCA Settlement Amount does not include the Relator's fees and costs, and Hyundai acknowledges that Relator retains all rights to recover such expenses, attorneys' fees, and costs from Hyundai pursuant to 31 U.S.C. § 3730(d).

1.b. If Hyundai's Plea Agreement in the Criminal Action is not accepted by the Court or the Court does not enter a Final Judgment in the Civil Antitrust Action, this Agreement shall be null and void at the option of either the United States or Hyundai. If either the United States or Hyundai exercises this option, which option shall be exercised [*16] by notifying all Parties, through counsel, in writing within five (5) business days of the Court's decision, the Parties will not object and this Agreement will be rescinded and the FCA Settlement Amount shall be returned to Hyundai. If this Agreement is rescinded, Hyundai will not plead, argue or otherwise raise any defenses under the theories of statute of limitations, laches, estoppel or similar theories, to any civil or administrative claims, actions or proceedings arising from the Covered Conduct that are brought by the United States within ninety (90) calendar days of rescission, except to the extent such defenses were available on the day on which Relator's qui tam complaint in the Civil FCA Action was filed.

2. Subject to the exceptions in Paragraph 4 (concerning excluded claims) below, and conditioned upon Hyundai's full payment of the FCA Settlement Amount, the United States releases Hyundai together with its current and former parent corporations; direct and indirect subsidiaries; brother or sister corporations; divisions; current or former corporate owners; and the corporate successors and assigns of any of them from any civil or administrative monetary claim the United [*17] States has for the Covered Conduct under the False Claims Act, 31 U.S.C. §§ 3729-3733; the Program Fraud Civil Remedies Act, 31 U.S.C. §§ 3801-3812; Contract Disputes Act, 41 U.S.C. §§ 7101-7109; or the common law theories of breach of contract, payment by mistake, unjust enrichment, and fraud.

3. Except as set forth in Paragraph 1 (concerning Relator's claims under 31 U.S.C. § 3730(d)), and conditioned upon Hyundai's full payment of the FCA Settlement Amount, Relator, for himself and for his heirs, successors, attorneys, agents, and assigns, releases Hyundai together with its current and former parent corporations; direct and indirect subsidiaries; brother or sister corporations; divisions; current or former corporate owners; the corporate successors and assigns of any of them as well as Hyundai owners, directors, officers, agents, employees and counsel from (a) any civil monetary claim the Relator has or may have for the claims set forth in the Civil FCA Action, the Civil Antitrust Action, the Criminal Action, and the Covered Conduct under the False Claims Act, 31 U.S.C. §§ 3729-3733, up until the date of this Agreement; and (b) all liability, claims, demands, actions, or causes of action whatsoever, whether known or unknown, fixed or contingent, in law or in equity, in contract or in [*18] tort, under any federal, state, or Korean statute, law, regulation or doctrine, that Relator, his heirs, successors, attorneys, agents, and assigns otherwise has brought or would have standing to bring as of the date of this Agreement, including any liability to Relator arising from or relating to the claims Relator asserted or could have asserted in the Civil FCA Action, up until the date of this Agreement. Relator represents he does not know of any conduct by Hyundai or any current or former owners, officers, directors, trustees, shareholders, employees, executives, agents, or affiliates that would constitute a violation of the False Claims Act other than the claims set forth in the Civil FCA Action and the Covered Conduct, and Relator acknowledges and agrees that his representations are a material inducement to Hyundai's willingness to enter into this Agreement. Relator further represents and warrants that he and his counsel are the exclusive owner of the rights, claims, and causes of action herein released and none of them have previously assigned, reassigned, or transferred or purported to assign, reassign, or transfer, through bankruptcy or by any other means, any or any portion [*19] of any claim, demand, action, cause of action, or other right released or discharged under this Agreement except between themselves and their counsel.

4. Notwithstanding the releases given in paragraphs 2 and 3 of this Agreement, or any other term of this Agreement, the following claims of the United States are specifically reserved and are not released:

a. Any liability arising under Title 26, U.S. Code (Internal Revenue Code);

b. Any criminal liability, except to the extent detailed in the Plea Agreement;

c. Except as explicitly stated in this Agreement, any administrative liability, including the suspension and debarment rights of any federal agency;

d. Any liability to the United States (or its agencies) for any conduct other than the Covered Conduct;

e. Any liability based upon obligations created by this Agreement;

f. Any liability of individuals;

g. Any liability for express or implied warranty claims or other claims for defective or deficient products or services, including quality of goods and services;

h. Any liability for failure to deliver goods or services due; and

i. Any liability for personal injury or property damage or for other consequential damages arising from the Covered [*20] Conduct.

5. Relator and his heirs, successors, attorneys, agents, and assigns shall not object to this Agreement but agree and confirm that this Agreement is fair, adequate, and reasonable under all the circumstances, pursuant to 31 U.S.C. § 3730(c)(2)(B). The determination of Relator's share, if any, of the FCA Settlement Amount pursuant to 31 U.S.C. § 3730(d) is a matter that shall be handled separately by and between the Relator and the United States, without any direct involvement or input from Hyundai. In connection with this Agreement and this Civil FCA Action, Relator, on behalf of himself and his heirs, successors, attorneys, agents, and assigns agrees that neither this Agreement, nor any intervention by the United States in the Civil FCA Action in order to dismiss the Civil FCA Action, nor any dismissal of the Civil FCA Action, shall waive or otherwise affect the ability of the United States to contend that provisions in the False Claims Act, including 31 U.S.C. § 3730(d)(3), bar Relator from sharing in the proceeds of this Agreement, except that the United States will not contend that Relator is barred from sharing in the proceeds of this Agreement pursuant to 31 U.S.C. § 3730(e)(4). Moreover, the United States and Relator, on behalf of himself and his heirs, [*21] successors, attorneys, agents, and assigns agree that they each retain all of their rights pursuant to the False Claims Act on the issue of the share percentage, if any, that Relator should receive of any proceeds of the settlement of his claims, and that no agreements concerning Relator share have been reached to date.

6. Hyundai waives and shall not assert any defenses Hyundai may have to any criminal prosecution or administrative action relating to the Covered Conduct that may be based in whole or in part on a contention that, under the Double Jeopardy Clause in the Fifth Amendment of the Constitution, or under the Excessive Fines Clause in the Eighth Amendment of the Constitution, this Agreement bars a remedy sought in such criminal prosecution or administrative action.

7. Hyundai fully and finally releases the United States, its agencies, officers, agents, employees, and servants, from any claims (including attorney's fees, costs, and expenses of every kind and however denominated) that Hyundai has asserted, could have asserted, or may assert in the future against the United States, its agencies, officers, agents, employees, and servants, related to the Covered Conduct and the United States' investigation and prosecution thereof.

8. Conditioned upon Relator's agreement herein, Hyundai fully and finally releases [*22] Relator his heirs, successors, assigns, agents and attorneys (the "Relator Released Parties"), from (a) any civil monetary claim Hyundai has or may have now or in the future against the Relator Released Parties related to the claims set forth in the Civil FCA Action, the Civil Antitrust Action, the Criminal Action, and the Covered Conduct under the False Claims Act, 31 U.S.C. §§ 3729-3733, and the Relator's investigation and prosecution thereof, including attorney's fees, costs, and expenses of every kind and however denominated, up until the date of this Agreement; and (b) all liability, claims, demands, actions, or causes of action whatsoever, whether known or unknown, fixed or contingent, in law or in equity, in contract or in tort, under any federal, state, or Korean statute, law, regulation or doctrine, that Hyundai otherwise have brought or would have standing to bring as of the date of this Agreement, including any liability to Hyundai arising from or relating to claims Hyundai asserted or could have asserted related to the Civil FCA Action, up until the date of this Agreement. Hyundai further acknowledges and agrees that these representations are a material inducement to Relator's willingness to [*23] enter into this Agreement.

9. a. Unallowable Costs Defined: All costs (as defined in the Federal Acquisition Regulation, 48 C.F.R. § 31.205-47) incurred by or on behalf of Hyundai, and its present or former officers, directors, employees, shareholders, and agents in connection with:

(1) the matters covered by this Agreement, any related plea agreement, and any related civil antitrust agreement;

(2) the United States' audit(s) and civil and any criminal investigation(s) of the matters covered by this Agreement;

(3) Hyundai's investigation, defense, and corrective actions undertaken in response to the United States' audit(s) and civil and any criminal investigation(s) in connection with the matters covered by this Agreement (including attorney's fees);

(4) the negotiation and performance of this Agreement, any related plea agreement, and any related civil antitrust agreement;

(5) the payment Hyundai makes to the United States pursuant to this Agreement and any payments that Hyundai may make to Relator, including costs and attorneys' fees, are unallowable costs for government contracting purposes (hereinafter referred to as Unallowable Costs).

b. Future Treatment of Unallowable Costs: Unallowable Costs will be separately [*24] determined and accounted for by Hyundai, and Hyundai shall not charge such Unallowable Costs directly or indirectly to any contract with the United States.

c. Treatment of Unallowable Costs Previously Submitted for Payment: Within 90 days of the Effective Date of this Agreement, Hyundai shall identify and repay by adjustment to future claims for payment or otherwise any Unallowable Costs included in payments previously sought by Hyundai or any of its subsidiaries or affiliates from the United States. Hyundai agrees that the United States, at a minimum, shall be entitled to recoup from Hyundai any overpayment plus applicable interest and penalties as a result of the inclusion of such Unallowable Costs on previously-submitted requests for payment. The United States, including the Department of Justice and/or the affected agencies, reserves its rights to audit, examine, or re-examine Hyundai's books and records and to disagree with any calculations submitted by Hyundai or any of its subsidiaries or affiliates regarding any Unallowable Costs included in payments previously sought by Hyundai, or the effect of any such Unallowable Costs on the amount of such payments.

10. Hyundai agrees to [*25] cooperate fully and truthfully with the United States in connection with the Civil FCA Action. The Civil Division of the United States Department of Justice will use reasonable best efforts, where appropriate, to coordinate any requests for cooperation in connection with the Civil FCA Action with requests for cooperation in connection with the Plea Agreement in the Criminal Action and the Civil Antitrust Action, so as to avoid unnecessary duplication and expense. Hyundai's ongoing, full, and truthful cooperation shall include, but not be limited to:

a. upon request by the United States with reasonable notice, producing at the offices of counsel for the United States in Washington, D.C. and not at the expense of the United States, complete and un-redacted copies of all non-privileged documents related to the Covered Conduct wherever located in Hyundai's possession, custody, or control;

b. upon request by the United States with reasonable notice, making current Hyundai directors, officers, and employees available for interviews, consistent with the rights and privileges of such individuals, by counsel for the United States and/or their investigative agents, not at the expense of the United [*26] States, in the United States or Hong Kong, unless another place is mutually agreed upon;

c. upon request by the United States with reasonable notice, (i) using best efforts to assist in locating former Hyundai directors, officers, and employees identified by attorneys and/or investigative agents of the United States, and (ii) using best efforts to make any such former Hyundai directors, officers, and employees available for interviews, consistent with the rights and privileges of such individuals, by counsel for the United States and/or their investigative agents, not at the expense of the United States, in the United States or Hong Kong, unless another place is mutually agreed upon; and

d. upon request by the United States with reasonable notice, making current Hyundai directors, officers, and employees available, and using best efforts to make former Hyundai directors, officers, employees available, to testify, consistent with the rights and privileges of such individuals, fully, truthfully, and under oath, without falsely implicating any person or withholding any information, (i) at depositions in the United States, Hong Kong, or any other mutually agreed upon place, (ii) at trial [*27] in the United States, and (iii) at any other judicial proceedings wherever located related to the Civil FCA Action.

11. This Agreement is intended to be for the benefit of the Parties only.

12. Upon receipt of the payment of the FCA Settlement Amount described in Paragraph 1.a. above, the Court's acceptance of Hyundai's Plea Agreement in the Criminal Action, and the Court's entry of a Final Judgment in the Civil Antitrust Action, the United States and Relator shall promptly sign and file a Joint Stipulation of Dismissal, with prejudice, of the claims filed against Hyundai in the Civil FCA Action, pursuant to Rule 41(a)(1), which dismissal shall be conditioned on the Court retaining jurisdiction over Relator's claims to a relator's share and recovery of attorneys' fees and costs pursuant to 31 U.S.C. §3730(d).

13. Except with respect to the recovery of Relator's attorneys' fees, expenses, and costs pursuant to 31 U.S.C. §3730(d), each Party shall bear its own legal and other costs incurred in connection with this matter. The Parties agree that Relator and Hyundai will not seek to recover from the United States any costs or fees related to the preparation and performance of this Agreement.

14. Each party and signatory to this Agreement [*28] represents that it freely and voluntarily enters in to this Agreement without any degree of duress or compulsion. 15. This Agreement is governed by the laws of the United States. The exclusive jurisdiction and venue for any dispute relating to this Agreement is the United States District Court for the Southern District of Ohio. Hyundai agrees that the United States District Court for the Southern District of Ohio has jurisdiction over it for purposes of this case. For purposes of construing this Agreement, this Agreement shall be deemed to have been drafted by all Parties to this Agreement and shall not, therefore, be construed against any Party for that reason in any subsequent dispute.

16. This Agreement constitutes the complete agreement between the Parties on the subject matter addressed herein. This Agreement may not be amended except by written consent of the Parties.

17. The undersigned counsel represent and warrant that they are fully authorized to execute this Agreement on behalf of the persons and entities indicated below.

18. This Agreement may be executed in counterparts, each of which constitutes an original and all of which constitute one and the same Agreement.

19. This [*29] Agreement is binding on Hyundai's successors, transferees, heirs, and assigns.

20. This Agreement is binding on Relator's successors, transferees, heirs, and assigns.

21. All parties consent to the United States' disclosure of this Agreement, and information about this Agreement, to the public, as permitted by order of the Court. This Agreement shall not be released in un-redacted form until the Court unseals the entire Civil FCA Action.

22. This Agreement is effective on the date of signature of the last signatory to the Agreement (Effective Date of this Agreement). Facsimiles of signatures shall constitute acceptable, binding signatures for purposes of this Agreement.

Opinion

FINAL JUDGMENT AS TO DEFENDANT S-OIL CORPORATION

WHEREAS Plaintiff, United States of America, filed its Complaint on March 20, 2019, the United States and Defendant S-Oil Corporation ("S-Oil"), by their respective attorneys, have consented to the entry of this Final Judgment without trial or adjudication of any issue of fact or law:

WHEREAS, on such date as may be determined [*2] by the Court, S-Oil will plead guilty pursuant to Fed. R. Crim. P. 11(c)(1)(C) (the "Plea Agreement") to Count One of a Superseding Indictment filed in the Southern District of Ohio (the "Criminal Action") that alleges a violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, relating to the same events giving rise to the allegations described in the Complaint;

WHEREAS, this Final Judgment does not constitute any evidence against or admission by any party regarding any issue of fact or law;

NOW, THEREFORE, before the taking of any testimony and without trial or final adjudication of any issue of fact or law herein, and upon consent of the parties hereto, it is hereby ORDERED, ADJUDGED, AND DECREED:

I. JURISDICTION

This Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter of this action and each of the parties consenting hereto. The Complaint states a claim upon which relief may be granted to the United States against S-Oil under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §1.

II. APPLICABILITY

This Final Judgment applies to S-Oil, as defined above, and all other persons in active concert or participation with any of them who receive actual notice of this Final Judgment by personal service or otherwise.

III. PAYMENT

S-Oil shall pay to the United States within ten (10) business [*3] days of the entry of this Final Judgment the amount of twelve million, nine hundred and eighty thousand dollars ($12,980,000), less the amount paid (excluding any interest) pursuant to the settlement agreement attached hereto as Attachment 1, to satisfy all civil antitrust claims alleged against S-Oil by the United States in the Complaint. Payment of the amount ordered hereby shall be made by wire transfer of funds or cashier's check. If the payment is made by wire transfer, S-Oil shall contact Janie Ingalls of the Antitrust Division's Antitrust Documents Group at (202) 514-2481 for instructions before making the transfer. If the payment is made by cashier's check, the check shall be made payable to the United States Department of Justice and delivered to: Janie Ingalls, United States Department of Justice Antitrust Division, Antitrust Documents Group, 450 5th Street, NW, Suite 1024, Washington, D.C. 20530. In the event of a default in payment, interest at the rate of eighteen (18) percent per annum shall accrue thereon from the date of default to the date of payment.

IV. COOPERATION

S-Oil shall cooperate fully with the United States regarding any matter about which S-Oil has knowledge [*4] or information relating to any ongoing civil investigation, litigation, or other proceeding arising out of any ongoing federal investigation of the subject matter discussed in the Complaint (hereinafter, any such investigation, litigation, or proceeding shall be referred to as a "Civil Federal Proceeding").

The United States agrees that any cooperation provided in connection with the Plea Agreement and/or pursuant to the settlement agreement attached hereto as Attachment 1 will be considered cooperation for purposes of this Final Judgment, and the United States will use its reasonable best efforts, where appropriate, to coordinate any requests for cooperation in connection with the Civil Federal Proceeding with requests for cooperation in connection with the Plea Agreement and the settlement agreement attached hereto as Attachment 1, so as to avoid unnecessary duplication and expense.

S-Oil's cooperation shall include, but not be limited to, the following:

(a) Upon request, completely and truthfully disclosing and producing, to the offices of the United States and at no expense to the United States, copies of all non-privileged information, documents, materials, and records in its possession [*5] (and for any foreign-language information, documents, materials, or records, copies must be produced with an English translation), regardless of their geographic location, about which the United States may inquire in connection with any Civil Federal Proceeding, including but not limited to all information about activities of S-Oil and present and former officers, directors, employees, and agents of S-Oil;

(b) Making available in the United States, at no expense to the United States, its present officers, directors, employees, and agents to provide information and/or testimony as requested by the United States in connection with any Civil Federal Proceeding, including the provision of testimony in trial and other judicial proceedings, as well as interviews with law enforcement authorities, consistent with the rights and privileges of those individuals;

(c) Using its best efforts to make available in the United States, at no expense to the United States, its former officers, directors, employees, and agents to provide information and/or testimony as requested by the United States in connection with any Civil Federal Proceeding, including the provision of testimony in trial and other judicial [*6] proceedings, as well as interviews with law enforcement authorities, consistent with the rights and privileges of those individuals;

(d) Providing testimony or information necessary to identify or establish the original location, authenticity, or other basis for admission into evidence of documents or physical evidence produced by S-Oil in any Civil Federal Proceeding as requested by the United States; and

(e) Completely and truthfully responding to all other inquiries of the United States in connection with any Civil Federal Proceeding.

However, notwithstanding any provision of this Final Judgment, S-Oil is not required to: (1) request of its current or former officers, directors, employees, or agents that they forgo seeking the advice of an attorney nor that they act contrary to that advice; (2) take any action against its officers, directors, employees, or agents for following their attorney's advice; or (3) waive any claim of privilege or work product protection.

The obligations of S-Oil to cooperate fully with the United States as described in this Section shall cease upon the conclusion of all Civil Federal Proceedings (which may include Civil Federal Proceedings related to the conduct [*7] of third parties), including exhaustion of all appeals or expiration of time for all appeals of any Court ruling in each such Civil Federal Proceeding, at which point the United States will provide written notice to S-Oil that its obligations under this Section have expired.

V. ANTITRUST COMPLIANCE PROGRAM

A. Within thirty (30) days after entry of this Final Judgment, S-Oil shall appoint an Antitrust Compliance Officer and identify to the United States his or her name, business address, telephone number, and email address. Within forty-five (45) days of a vacancy in the Antitrust Compliance Officer position, S-Oil shall appoint a replacement, and shall identify to the United States the Antitrust Compliance Officer's name, business address, telephone number, and email address. S-Oil's initial or replacement appointment of an Antitrust Compliance Officer is subject to the approval of the United States, in its sole discretion.

B. The Antitrust Compliance Officer shall institute an antitrust compliance program for the company's employees and directors with responsibility for bidding for any contract with the United States. The antitrust compliance program shall provide at least two hours [*8] of training annually on the antitrust laws of the United States, such training to be delivered by an attorney with relevant experience in the field of United States antitrust law.

C. Each Antitrust Compliance Officer shall obtain, within six months after entry of this Final Judgment, and on an annual basis thereafter, on or before each anniversary of the entry of this Final Judgment, from each person subject to Paragraph V.B of this Final Judgment, and thereafter maintaining, a certification that each such person has received the required two hours of annual antitrust training.

D. Each Antitrust Compliance Officer shall communicate annually to all employees that they may disclose to the Antitrust Compliance Officer, without reprisal, information concerning any potential violation of the United States antitrust laws.

E. Each Antitrust Compliance Offer shall provide to the United States within six months after entry of this Final Judgment, and on an annual basis thereafter, on or before each anniversary of the entry of this Final Judgment, a written statement as to the fact and manner of S-Oil's compliance with Section V of this Final Judgment.

VI. RETENTION OF JURISDICTION

This Court retains [*9] jurisdiction to enable any of the parties to this Final Judgment to apply to this Court at any time for further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out or construe this Final Judgment, to modify or terminate any of its provisions, to enforce compliance, and to punish violations of its provisions.

VII. ENFORCEMENT OF FINAL JUDGMENT

A. The United States retains and reserves all rights to enforce the provisions of this Final Judgment, including the right to seek an order of contempt from the Court. S-Oil agrees that in any civil contempt action, any motion to show cause, or any similar action brought by the United States regarding an alleged violation of this Final Judgment, the United States may establish a violation of the decree and the appropriateness of any remedy therefor by a preponderance of the evidence, and S-Oil waives any argument that a different standard of proof should apply.

B. The Final Judgment should be interpreted to give full effect to the procompetitive purposes of the antitrust laws and to restore all competition the United States alleged was harmed by the challenged conduct. S-Oil agrees that they may be held in contempt of, and that [*10] the Court may enforce, any provision of this Final Judgment that, as interpreted by the Court in light of these procompetitive principles and applying ordinary tools of interpretation, is stated specifically and in reasonable detail, whether or not it is clear and unambiguous on its face. In any such interpretation, the terms of this Final Judgment should not be construed against either party as the drafter.

C. In any enforcement proceeding in which the Court finds that S-Oil has violated this Final Judgment, the United States may apply to the Court for a one-time extension of this Final Judgment, together with such other relief as may be appropriate. In connection with any successful effort by the United States to enforce this Final Judgment against S-Oil, whether litigated or resolved prior to litigation, S-Oil agrees to reimburse the United States for the fees and expenses of its attorneys, as well as any other costs including experts' fees, incurred in connection with that enforcement effort, including in the investigation of the potential violation.

VIII. EXPIRATION OF FINAL JUDGMENT

Unless this Court grants an extension, this Final Judgment shall expire seven (7) years from the [*11] date of its entry, except that after five (5) years from the date of its entry, this Final Judgment may be terminated upon notice by the United States to the Court and S-Oil that the continuation of the Final Judgment no longer is necessary or in the public interest.

IX. PUBLIC INTEREST DETERMINATION

Entry of this Final Judgment is in the public interest. The parties have complied with the requirements of the Antitrust Procedures and Penalties Act, 15 U.S.C. § 16, including making copies available to the public of this Final Judgment, the Competitive Impact Statement, and any comments thereon and the United States' responses to comments. Based upon the record before the Court, which includes the Competitive Impact Statement and any comments and response to comments filed with the Court, entry of this Final Judgment is in the public interest.

SETTLEMENT AGREEMENT

This Settlement Agreement ("Agreement") is entered into among the United States of America, acting through the Civil Division of the United States Department of Justice and the United States Attorney's Office for the Southern District of Ohio, on behalf of the Defense [*12] Logistics Agency ("DLA") and the Army and Air Force Exchange Service ("AAFES") (collectively the "United States"), S-Oil Corporations ("S-Oil"), and Relator [TEXT REDACTED BY THE COURT] (hereafter collectively referred to as "the Parties"), through their authorized representatives.

RECITALS

A. S-Oil is a South Korea-based energy company that produces various petroleum products that it sells to South Korean and international customers, including the United States Department of Defense ("DoD").

B. On February 28, 2018, Relator, a resident and citizen of South Korea, filed a qui tam action in the United States District Court for the Southern District of Ohio captioned United States ex rel. [TEXT REDACTED BY THE COURT] v. GS Caltex, et al., Civil Action No. [TEXT REDACTED BY THE COURT], pursuant to the qui tam provisions of the False Claims Act, 31 U.S.C. § 3730(b) (the "Civil FCA Action"). Relator contends that S-Oil conspired with other South Korean entities to rig bids on DoD contracts to supply fuel to U S military bases throughout South Korea beginning in 2008 and continuing until 2016, including DLA Post, Camps, and Stations (PC&S) contracts executed in 2009 and 2013.

C. On such date as may be determined [*13] by the Court, S-Oil will plead guilty pursuant to Fed. R. Crim. P. 11(c)(1)(C) (the "Plea Agreement") to Count One of a Superseding Indictment filed in United States v. S-Oil Corp., Criminal Action No. 2:18 Cr. 152 (S.D. Ohio) (the "Criminal Action") that will allege that S-Oil participated in a combination and conspiracy beginning at least in or around November or December 2008 and continuing until at least in or around October 2016, to suppress and eliminate competition on certain contracts solicited by the DoD to supply fuel to numerous U.S. Army, Navy, Marine, and Air Force installations in South Korea, including PC&S contracts, in violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1.

D. S-Oil will execute a Stipulation with the Antitrust Division of the United States Department of Justice in which S-Oil will consent to the entry of a Final Judgment to be filed in United States v. S-Oil Corp., Civil Action No. [to be assigned] (S.D. Ohio) (the "Civil Antitrust Action") that will settle any and all civil antitrust claims of the United States against S-Oil arising from any act or offense committed before the date of the Stipulation that was undertaken in furtherance of an attempted or completed antitrust conspiracy involving [*14] PC&S and/or AAFES fuel supply contracts with the U S military in South Korea during the period 2005 through 2016.

E. The United States contends that it has certain civil claims against S-Oil arising from the conduct described in the Plea Agreement in the Criminal Action and in the Stipulation in the Civil Antitrust Action, as well as the conduct, actions, and claims alleged by Relator in the Civil FCA Action. The conduct referenced in this Paragraph is referred to below as the Covered Conduct.

F. With the exception of any admissions that are made by S-Oil in connection with the Plea Agreement in the Criminal Action, this Settlement Agreement is neither an admission of liability by S-Oil nor a concession by the United States that its claims are not well founded.

To avoid the delay, uncertainty, inconvenience, and expense of protracted litigation of the above claims, and in consideration of the mutual promises and obligations of this Settlement Agreement, the Parties agree and covenant as follows:

TERMS AND CONDITIONS

1.a. S-Oil agrees to pay to the United States $12,980,000 (the "FCA Settlement Amount"), of which $5,900,000 is restitution, by electronic funds transfer no later than ten (10) [*15] business days after the Effective Date of this Agreement pursuant to written instructions to be provided by the Civil Division of the Department of Justice.

1.b. Relator claims entitlement under 31 U.S.C. § 3730(d) to a share of the proceeds of this Settlement Agreement and to Relator's reasonable expenses, attorneys' fees and costs. The FCA Settlement Amount does not include the Relator's fees and costs, and S-Oil acknowledges that Relator retains all rights to recover such reasonable expenses, attorneys' fees, and costs from S-Oil pursuant to 31 U.S.C. § 3730(d). Relator's claims pursuant to 31 U.S. C. § 3730(d) regarding fees and costs will be addressed pursuant to a separate written agreement between S-Oil and Relator or, in the absence of an agreement, as may be ordered by the Court.

1.c. If S-Oil's Plea Agreement in the Criminal Action is not accepted by the Court or the Court does not enter a Final Judgment in the Civil Antitrust Action, this Agreement shall be null and void at the option of either the United States or S-Oil. If either the United States or S-Oil exercises this option, which option shall be exercised by notifying all Parties, through counsel, in writing within five (5) business days of the Court's decision, the Parties [*16] will not object and this Agreement will be rescinded and the FCA Settlement Amount shall be returned to S-Oil. If this Agreement is rescinded, S-Oil will not plead, argue or otherwise raise any defenses under the theories of statute of limitations, laches, estoppel or similar theories, to any civil or administrative claims, actions or proceedings arising from the Covered Conduct that are brought by the United States within ninety (90) calendar days of rescission, except to the extent such defenses were available on the day on which Relator's qui tam complaint in the Civil FCA Action was filed.

[*17] 2. Subject to the exceptions in Paragraph 4 (concerning excluded claims) below, and conditioned upon S-Oil's full payment of the FCA Settlement Amount, the United States fully and finally releases S-Oil together with its current and former parent corporation; direct and indirect subsidiaries; brother or sister corporation; divisions; current or former corporates owners; corporates affiliates; and the corporates successors and assigns of any of them (the "S-Oil Released Parties") from any civil or administrative monetary claim the United States has for the Covered Conduct under the False Claims Act, 31 U.S.C. §§ 3729-3733; the Program Fraud Civil Remedies Act, 31 U.S.C. §§ 3801-3812; Contract Disputes Act, 41 U.S.C. §§ 7101-7109; or the common law theories of breach of contract, payment by mistake, unjust enrichment, and fraud, or under any statute creating causes of action for civil damages or civil penalties which the Civil Division of the United States Department of Justice has authority to assert and compromise pursuant to 28 C.F.R. Part 0, Subpart I, § 0.45(d).

3. Subject to the exception set forth in Paragraph lb, and conditioned upon S-Oil's full payment of the FCA Settlement Amount, Relator, for himself and for his heirs, successors, attorneys, agents, and assigns, fully and finally releases the 5-Oil Released Parties, officers, directors, trustees, shareholders, employees, executives, agents and the successors and assigns of any of them, from (a) any civil monetary claim the Relator has or may have for the claims set forth in the Civil FCA Action, the Civil Antitrust Action, the Criminal Action, and the Covered Conduct under the False Claims Act, 31 U.S.C. §§ 3729-3733, up until the date of this Agreement; and (b) all liability, debts, contracts, covenants, promises, claims, demands, actions, causes of action, rights of subrogation, contribution, indemnity, damages, loss, cost or expenses [*18] whatsoever, whether known or unknown, fixed or contingent, in law or in equity, in contract or in tort, under any federal, state, or Korean statute, law, regulation or doctrine, that Relator, his heirs, successors, attorneys, agents, and assigns otherwise has brought or would have standing to bring as of the date of this Agreement, including, without limitation, any liability to Relator arising from or relating to the claims Relator has asserted, may assert or could have asserted in the Civil FCA Action, up until the date of this Agreement. Relator represents and warrants that he and his counsel are the exclusive owner of the rights, claims and causes of action herein released and none of them have previously assigned, reassigned, or transferred or purported to assign, reassign or transfer, through bankruptcy or by any other means, any or any portion of any claim, demand, action, cause of action, or other right released or discharged under this Agreement except between themselves and their counsel. Relator further represents he does not know of any conduct by the S-Oil Released Parties or any current or former owners, officers, directors, trustees, shareholders, employees, executives, [*19] agents, or affiliates of the S-Oil Released Parties that would constitute a violation of the False Claims Act other than the claims set forth in the Civil FCA Action and the Covered Conduct, and Relator acknowledges and agrees that his representations are a material inducement to S-Oil's willingness to enter into this Agreement.

4. Notwithstanding the releases given in paragraphs 2 and 3 of this Agreement, or any other term of this Agreement, the following claims of the United States are specifically reserved and are not released:

a. Any liability arising under Title 26, U.S. Code (Internal Revenue Code);

b. Any criminal liability, except to the extent detailed in the Plea Agreement;

c. Except as explicitly stated in this Agreement, any administrative liability, including the suspension and debarment rights of any federal agency;

d. Any liability to the United States (or its agencies) for any conduct other than the Covered Conduct;

e. Any liability based upon obligations created by this Agreement;

f. Any liability of individuals;

g. Any liability for express or implied warranty claims or other claims for defective or deficient products or services, including quality of goods and services;

[*20] h. Any liability for failure to deliver goods or services due; and

i. Any liability for personal injury or property damage or for other consequential damages arising from the Covered Conduct.

5. Relator and his heirs, successors, attorneys, agents, and assigns shall not object to this Agreement but agree and confirm that this Agreement is fair, adequate, and reasonable under all the circumstances, pursuant to 31 U.S.C. § 3730(c)(2)(B). The determination of Relator's share, if any, of the FCA Settlement Amount pursuant to 31 U.S.C. § 3730(d) is a matter that shall be handled separately by and between the Relator and the United States, without any direct involvement or input from S-Oil. In connection with this Agreement and the Civil FCA Action, Relator, on behalf of himself and his heirs, successors, attorneys, agents, and assigns agrees that neither this Agreement, nor any intervention by the United States in the Civil FCA Action in order to dismiss the Civil FCA Action, nor any dismissal of the Civil FCA Action, shall waive or otherwise affect the ability of the United States to contend that provisions in the False Claims Act, including 31 U.S.C. § 3730(d)(3), bar Relator from sharing in the proceeds of this Agreement, except that the United States [*21] will not contend that Relator is barred from sharing in the proceeds of this Agreement pursuant to 31 U.S.C. § 3730(e)(4). Moreover, the United States and Relator, on behalf of himself and his heirs, successors, attorneys, agents, and assigns agree that they each retain all of their rights pursuant to the False Claims Act on the issue of the share percentage, if any, that Relator should receive of any proceeds of the settlement of his claims, and that no agreements concerning Relator share have been reached to date.

6. S-Oil waives and shall not assert any defenses S-Oil may have to any criminal prosecution or administrative action relating to the Covered Conduct that may be based in whole or in part on a contention that, under the Double Jeopardy Clause in the Fifth Amendment of the Constitution, or under the Excessive Fines Clause in the Eighth Amendment of the Constitution, this Agreement bars a remedy sought in such criminal prosecution or administrative action.

7. S-Oil fully and finally releases the United States, its agencies, officers, agents, employees, and servants, from any claims (including attorney's fees, costs, and expenses of every kind and however denominated) that S-Oil has asserted, could have asserted, or may assert in the future against the United States, its agencies, officers, agents, employees, and servants, [*22] related to the Covered Conduct and the United States' investigation and prosecution thereof.

8. Conditioned upon Relator's agreement herein, the S-Oil Released Parties fully and finally release Relator his heirs, successors, assigns, agents and attorneys (the "Relator Released Parties"), from (a) any civil monetary claim S-Oil has or may have now or in the future against the Relator Released Parties related to the claims set forth in the Civil FCA Action, the Civil Antitrust Action, the Criminal Action, and the Covered Conduct under the False Claims Act, 31 U.S.C. §§ 3729-3733, and the Relator's investigation and prosecution thereof, including attorney's fees, costs, and expenses of every kind and however denominated, up until the date of this Agreement; and (b) all liability, claims, demands, actions, or causes of action whatsoever, whether known or unknown, fixed or contingent, in law or in equity, in contract or in tort, under any federal, state, or Korean statute, law, regulation or doctrine, that the S-Oil Released Parties otherwise have brought or would have standing to bring as of the date of this Agreement, including any liability to S-Oil arising from or relating to claims the S-Oil Released Parties [*23] asserted or could have asserted related to the Civil FCA Action, up until the date of this Agreement. The S-Oil Released Parties further acknowledge and agree that these representations are a material inducement to Relator's willingness to enter into this Agreement.

9. a. Unallowable Costs Defined: All costs (as defined in the Federal Acquisition Regulation, 48 C.F.R. § 31.205-47) incurred by or on behalf of S-Oil, and its present or former officers, directors, employees, shareholders, and agents in connection with:

(1) the matters covered by this Agreement, any related plea agreement, and any related civil antitrust agreement;

(2) the United States' audit(s) and civil and any criminal investigation(s) of the matters covered by this Agreement;

(3) S-Oil's investigation, defense, and corrective actions undertaken in response to the United States' audit(s) and civil and any criminal investigation(s) in connection with the matters covered by this Agreement (including attorney's fees);

(4) the negotiation and performance of this Agreement, any related plea agreement, and any related civil antitrust agreement;

(5) the payment S-Oil makes to the United States pursuant to this Agreement and any payments that S-Oil [*24] may make to Relator, including costs and attorneys' fees, are unallowable costs for government contracting purposes (hereinafter referred to as Unallowable Costs).

b. Future Treatment of Unallowable Costs: Unallowable Costs will be separately determined and accounted for by S-Oil, and S-Oil shall not charge such Unallowable Costs directly or indirectly to any contract with the United States.

c. Treatment of Unallowable Costs Previously Submitted for Payment: Within 90 days of the Effective Date of this Agreement, S-Oil shall identify and repay by adjustment to future claims for payment or otherwise any Unallowable Costs included in payments previously sought by S-Oil or any of its subsidiaries or affiliates from the United States. S-Oil agrees that the United States, at a minimum, shall be entitled to recoup from S-Oil any overpayment plus applicable interest and penalties as a result of the inclusion of such Unallowable Costs on previously-submitted requests for payment. The United States, including the Department of Justice and/or the affected agencies, reserves its rights to audit, examine, or re-examine S-Oil's books and records and to disagree with any calculations submitted by S-Oil [*25] or any of its subsidiaries or affiliates regarding any Unallowable Costs included in payments previously sought by SOil, or the effect of any such Unallowable Costs on the amount of such payments.

10. S-Oil agrees to cooperate fully and truthfully with the United States in connection with the Civil FCA Action. The Civil Division of the United States Department of Justice will use reasonable best efforts, where appropriate, to coordinate any requests for cooperation in connection with the Civil FCA Action with requests for cooperation in connection with the Plea Agreement in the Criminal Action and the Civil Antitrust Action, so as to avoid unnecessary duplication and expense. S-Oil's ongoing, full, and truthful cooperation shall include, but not be limited to:

a. upon request by the United States with reasonable notice, producing at the offices of counsel for the United States in Washington, D.C. and not at the expense of the United States, complete and un-redacted copies of all non-privileged documents related to the Covered Conduct wherever located in S-Oil's possession, custody, or control, including but not limited to, reports, memoranda of interviews, and records concerning any investigation [*26] of the Covered Conduct that S-Oil has undertaken, or that has been performed by another on S-Oil's behalf;

b. upon request by the United States with reasonable notice, making current S-Oil directors, officers, and employees available for interviews, consistent with the rights and privileges of such individuals, by counsel for the United States and/or their investigative agents, not at the expense of the United States, in the United States or Hong Kong, unless another place is mutually agreed upon;

c. upon request by the United States with reasonable notice, (i) using best efforts to assist in locating former S-Oil directors, officers, and employees identified by attorneys and/or investigative agents of the United States, and (ii) using best efforts to make any such former S-Oil directors, officers, and employees available for interviews, consistent with the rights and privileges of such individuals, by counsel for the United States and/or their investigative agents, not at the expense of the United States, in the United States or Hong Kong, unless another place is mutually agreed upon; and

d. upon request by the United States with reasonable notice, making current S-Oil directors, officers, [*27] and employees available, and using best efforts to make former S-Oil directors, officers, employees available, to testify, consistent with the rights and privileges of such individuals, fully, truthfully, and under oath, without falsely implicating any person or withholding any information, (i) at depositions in the United States, Hong Kong, or any other mutually agreed upon place, (ii) at trial in the United States, and (iii) at any other judicial proceedings wherever located related to the Civil FCA Action.

11. This Agreement is intended to be for the benefit of the Parties only.

12. Upon receipt of the payment of the FCA Settlement Amount described in Paragraph 1.a. above, the Court's acceptance of S-Oil's Plea Agreement in the Criminal Action, and the Court's entry of a Final Judgment in the Civil Antitrust Action, the United States and Relator shall promptly sign and file a Joint Stipulation of Dismissal, with prejudice, of the claims filed against S-Oil in the Civil FCA Action, pursuant to Rule 41(a)(1), which dismissal shall be conditioned on the Court retaining jurisdiction over Relator's claims to a relator's share and against S-Oil for recovery of attorneys' fees and costs pursuant to 31 U.S.C. §3730(d).

[*28] 13. Except with respect to the recovery of Relator's attorneys' fees, expenses, and costs pursuant to 31 U.S.C. §3730(d) as provided for in Paragraph 1.b., each Party shall bear its own legal and other costs incurred in connection with this matter. The Parties agree that Relator and S-Oil will not seek to recover from the United States any costs or fees related to the preparation and performance of this Agreement.

14. Each party and signatory to this Agreement represents that it freely and voluntarily enters in to this Agreement without any degree of duress or compulsion. 15. This Agreement is governed by the laws of the United States. The exclusive jurisdiction and venue for any dispute relating to this Agreement is the United States District Court for the Southern District of Ohio. S-Oil agrees that the United States District Court for the Southern District of Ohio has jurisdiction over it for purposes of this case. For purposes of construing this Agreement, this Agreement shall be deemed to have been drafted by all Parties to this Agreement and shall not, therefore, be construed against any Party for that reason in any subsequent dispute.

16. This Agreement constitutes the complete agreement between [*29] the Parties on the subject matter addressed herein. This Agreement may not be amended except by written consent of the Parties.

17. The undersigned counsel represent and warrant that they are fully authorized to execute this Agreement on behalf of the persons and entities indicated below.

18. This Agreement may be executed in counterparts, each of which constitutes an original and all of which constitute one and the same Agreement.

19. This Agreement is binding on S-Oil's successors, transferees, heirs, and assigns.

20. This Agreement is binding on Relator's successors, transferees, heirs, and assigns.

21. All parties consent to the United States', S-Oil's and Relator's disclosure of this Agreement, and information about this Agreement, to the public, as permitted by order of the Court. This Agreement shall not be released in un-redacted form until the Court unseals the entire Civil FCA Action.

22. This Agreement is effective on the date of signature of the last signatory to the Agreement (Effective Date of this Agreement). Facsimiles of signatures shall constitute acceptable, binding signatures for purposes of this Agreement.

HN3[] Federal & State Interrelationships, Choice of Law

To determine whether an Illinois statute provides an implied right of action, the court looks to Illinois law. Though the court does so cautiously, recognizing that imputing a right of action where the state was silent assumes "policy-making authority" that is better suited for the state's legislature.

Governments > Legislation > Statutory Remedies & Rights

HN4[] Legislation, Statutory Remedies & Rights

Under Illinois law, courts imply a cause of action when: (1) the plaintiff is a member of the class for whose benefit the statute was enacted; (2) the plaintiff's injury is one the statute was designed to prevent; (3) a private right of action is consistent with the underlying purpose of the statute; and (4) implying a private right of action is necessary to provide an adequate remedy for violation of the statute.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Declaratory Judgments

Restraints on trade that are unilaterally imposed by the government do not form the basis of a claim under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 of the Sherman Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope

HN10[] Sherman Act, Claims

Unilateral restraints are distinguished from "hybrid" restraints, which do fall under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 of the Sherman Act. The difference between the two is the extent of the government's command. If the government exercises complete control through the restraint, the conduct is not coordinated. If, on the other hand, private parties are granted a degree of private regulatory power, pursuant to which they behave anticompetitively, the regulatory scheme may be attacked under § 1.

HN11[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Fisher v. City of Berkeley applies when the potential anti-competitive effect is not the result of private pricing or marketing decisions, but the logical and intended result of the statute itself. As long as the law leaves nothing further to be decided by private parties, there can be no concerted action.

HN12[] Scope, Monopolization Offenses

15 U.S.C.S. § 2 of the Sherman Act prohibits monopolization, or the attempt at it, through willful, anticompetitive conduct.

Rational relation to a legitimate government interest is a lenient standard, and laws challenged under rational-basis review carry a strong presumption of validity.

[*867] ST. EVE, Circuit Judge. This appeal is one of two we decide today regarding the market for commercial fire-alarm [2] services in Chicago's suburbs. Here we are concerned with the Villages of Orland Park and Orland Hills (the "Villages") and, to a lesser extent, Bloomingdale and Lemont.

In 2014, citing safety concerns, the Villages passed ordinances that require commercial buildings to send fire-alarm signals directly to the local 911 dispatch center. This decision, sensible as it may seem, comes at an economic cost: either by design or due to technological restraints, the ordinances allow only one alarm-system provider to operate in the Villages. That provider is Tyco Integrated Security, LLC. It services the area pursuant to an exclusive agreement with the Villages' dispatch center, Orland Fire Protection District.

One of Tyco's competitors, Alarm Detection Systems, Inc. ("ADS"), filed this suit against Orland Fire, Tyco, and another dispatch center, DuPage Public Safety Communications ("Du-Comm"), among others. It brought a host of claims, including ones under the Illinois Fire Protection District Act (the "District Act"), the Sherman Act, and the Fourteenth Amendment—all with the goal of breaking Tyco's hold on the market.

The district court decided for the defendants. After dismissing the District Act claims at summary [3] judgment, it concluded after a bench trial that the Sherman Act claims fail because they are premised on the unilateral actions of the Villages—which ADS did not sue—and that the Fourteenth Amendment claims lacked merit. We agree and affirm.

I. Background

In Illinois, local laws often require commercial buildings and apartment complexes to maintain fire-alarm systems. The buildings and complexes—or "accounts," as the parties call them—contract directly with the alarm-system providers to install and maintain the systems. The National Fire Protection Association's National Fire Alarm and Signaling Code (NFPA 72) sets the nationwide standard for these systems.

Should a system detect fire or smoke, local 911 dispatch centers are responsible for receiving distress calls and sending services. The dispatch center in the Villages and Lemont is Orland Fire. It is what is called a "fire-protection district," established under the District Act. 70 ILCS 705/1 et seq. The District Act requires fire-protection districts, like Orland Fire, to operate consistent with nationwide standards, like NFPA 72. See 70 ILCS 705/11. In Bloomingdale, Du-Comm is the dispatch center. Du-Comm is not a fire-protection district, but a different creature [*868] of Illinois law—an [4] "intergovernmental cooperation," formed by several municipal members, including Bloomingdale. 5 ILCS 220/3.

The logistics of the fire-alarm systems are important to this appeal. Each account's system has essentially three parts: heat or smoke detectors, a panel, and a transmitter. When a detector goes off, it sends an alert to the panel. The panel then connects to the transmitter. The transmitter, in turn, sends a radio signal to one of two places: (1) a central-supervising station run by the alarm-system provider (the "CSS model"); or (2) a remote-supervising station operated by the local dispatch center (the "RSS model"). Which model applies depends on the account and its provider's arrangement or, as here, what the local ordinance requires.

Both the CSS model and the RSS model comply with NFPA 72. See NFPA 72: National Fire Alarm and Signaling Code §§ 3.3.282.1, 3.3.282.3 (2016 ed.). If a CSS model is in place, a CSS operator will receive the signal from the property's radio; and if the operator determines that the signal was not a false alarm or a maintenance problem, the CSS calls the dispatch center, which in turn sends help. If, however, the signal goes to the RSS, the RSS either contacts the account directly [5] or sends help. That is why the RSS model is often called a "direct connect" system: accounts send their signals directly to the RSS dispatch center. Alarm-system providers, in addition to their contracts with the accounts, contract with dispatch centers to provide the necessary signal-receiving equipment.

In an RSS model, unlike a CSS model, the dispatch center and the account usually must share an equipment provider. This, according to the record and the district court's findings, is because the dispatch center's receiving equipment operates on FCC-licensed radio frequencies. For that equipment to receive the signal coming from the property, it must operate on the same frequency. And the equipment provider, like Tyco, owns the frequency licenses.

This is at least the current state of play. ADS, however, insists that alternative methods are feasible. First, it asserts that its CSS can instantaneously send alert signals it receives from accounts to the RSS through a process called "automatic retransmission." Doing so, ADS believes, would have the same effect as a signal that is sent directly from the accounts to the dispatch center, as in an RSS model. Second, it claims that it can share [6] a radio frequency with the RSS's alarm-system provider, and thus, its transmitters can send signals directly to the RSS. Neither alternative has, to date, taken hold in the areas with which this appeal is concerned.

That summarizes the technical background. There is an important legal backdrop, too. Alarm-system providers, and ADS specifically, are no strangers to this type of litigation. Two of our past decisions, in which both ADS and Tyco's predecessor, ADT Security Services, Inc., were plaintiffs, feature prominently in ADS's current claims. See ADT Sec. Servs., Inc. v. Lisle-Woodridge Fire Prot. Dist., 672 F.3d 492 (7th Cir. 2012) (ADT I); ADT Sec. Servs., Inc. v. Lisle-Woodridge Fire Prot. Dist., 724 F.3d 854 (7th Cir. 2013) (ADT II).

ADT I and ADT II concerned another fire-protection district, the Lisle-Woodridge Fire Protection District. The question we faced was whether an ordinance set by the district exceeded NFPA 72, and, by extension, the district's authority under the District Act. We focused on two facets of the ordinance: it (1) mandated an RSS model and (2) required accounts to purchase equipment from Lisle-Woodridge or [*869] its exclusive partner. In ADT I, we decided that NFPA 72 permitted an RSS model (there also characterized as a "direct connect" model). But NFPA 72 did not permit the district to order accounts to purchase equipment from [7] it or its exclusive partner. 672 F.3d at 500-03. We then remanded the case for further fact finding. After that fact finding, in ADT II, we affirmed the district court's decision that the district was not in fact operating an RSS model or any other form of NFPA 72-approved supervision; it was, instead, routing signals through an intermediary. The district's scheme therefore violated NFPA 72 and by extension the District Act. 724 F.3d at 868-71.

ADT I and ADT II caused fire-protection districts and municipalities in the greater Chicagoland area to reconsider their protocols. Orland Fire and the Villages were among them. Since 2006, Orland Fire had operated under an ordinance it issued requiring that systems "directly connect" to Orland Fire. To make that RSS model work, Orland Fire entered into an exclusive contract with Tyco. The contract made Tyco the sole provider of equipment to Orland Fire and of transmitters to the accounts. The contract also required the accounts to contract directly with Tyco, and Orland Fire and Tyco would share in the monitoring fees.

After ADT I and ADT II, Orland Fire amended its ordinance, rescinding the direct-connect requirement, and requiring only compliance with NFPA 72. But in 2014 and 2015, the Villages [8] amended ordinances of their own. Those ordinances (which we will refer to as the "Ordinances") mandated an RSS system and designated Orland Fire as the designated dispatch center. Orland Fire soon after renewed its exclusive contract with Tyco for a three-year term. In 2017, the parties renewed the contract again with a one-year term subject to automatic renewals.

As a result of the renewed contracts and the new Ordinances, the Villages essentially returned to the status quo: the accounts had to comply with an RSS system and, because of the exclusive contract, Tyco would be their equipment provider. Tyco currently provides systems to almost all of the 650 accounts in the Villages. Tyco bills accounts $89 per month for its services on average, $23.50 of which is remitted to Orland Fire in consideration for the exclusivity arrangement. ADS charges less for its CSS services—$55 per month, on average. The district court did, however, find that RSS models are more expensive to maintain than CSS models, because a single CSS can monitor multiple jurisdictions at a time, unlike a dispatch center acting as an RSS.

Frustrated that despite ADT I and ADT II it was still locked out of the market, [9] ADS filed this suit. ADS alleged more than 16 claims, but the relevant ones here are those brought under the District Act, the Sherman Act, and the Fourteenth Amendment. It claimed that Orland Fire and Du-Comm were collecting excessive fees in Bloomingdale and Lemont in violation of the District Act. It also claimed that Orland Fire and Tyco's arrangement violated § 1 and § 2 of the Sherman Act. ADS further claimed that Orland Fire acted arbitrarily, in breach of the Fourteenth Amendment's guarantee of substantive due process, by denying ADS the chance to use automatic retransmission or frequency sharing.[1] [*870] ADS did not, however, sue the Villages. It accepts that the Ordinances are lawful.

The district court resolved ADS's claims at summary judgment and after a bench trial. At summary judgment, the district court ruled that the District Act did not provide a right of action for ADS. After a six-day bench trial, the district court issued a thorough opinion and found that the Sherman Act claims failed because Orland Fire and Tyco's conduct was a necessary consequence of the Villages' Ordinances. The court ruled that the Fourteenth Amendment claims failed because, similarly, Orland Fire did not act irrationally, but rather as the Ordinances required.

ADS appeals. We consolidated the [10] case with Alarm Detection Sys., Inc. v. Vill. of Schaumburg, No. 18-3316, 930 F.3d 812, 2019 U.S. App. LEXIS 20870, which concerns a similar market and ordinance. But deciding the appeals requires addressing different legal, factual, and procedural questions, so we issue this opinion independently.

II. Discussion

On appeal, ADS tries to revive its District Act, Sherman Act, and Fourteenth Amendment claims. But it makes a broader argument, too. ADT I and ADT II, ADS says, should guide our way in analyzing the current claims. And, ADS continues, in this case, as in those cases, we should condemn a local effort to concentrate the alarm-system market in the hands of one provider.

ADT I and ADT II do not control this appeal. Those decisions concerned a fire-protection district's ability to mandate a particular RSS model under the District Act. This case centers on the Villages' Ordinances, which are not subject to the District Act and, as ADS concedes, are lawful. This case, moreover, concerns an argument never raised in ADT I or ADT II—that there is no private right of action under the District Act for companies like ADS. This case also poses antitrust and constitutional questions that ADT I and ADT II never reached.

[1] ADS also brought state tort law claims, which the district court disposed of after trial. ADS does not pursue these claims on appeal.

We thus address ADS's claims from [11] square one, taking them in turn.

A. The Fire Protection District Act

The district court dismissed the District Act claims for want of a private right of action. Because that HN1[] decision was made at summary judgment, we review it de novo. Levitin v. Nw. Cmty. Hosp., 923 F.3d 499, 501 (7th Cir. 2019).

HN2[] Statutes can provide either express or implied rights of action—or none at all. The District Act does not provide an express right, all agree. HN3[] To determine whether it provides an implied right of action, we look to Illinois law. See, e.g., Patel v. Zillow, Inc., 915 F.3d 446, 448 (7th Cir. 2019) (looking to Illinois law to determine whether an Illinois statute created a nonstatutory right of action). Though we do so cautiously, recognizing that imputing a right of action where the state was silent assumes "policy-making authority" that is better suited for the state's legislature. Helping Others Maintain Envtl. Standards v. Bos, 406 Ill. App. 3d 669, 941 N.E.2d 347, 363, 346 Ill. Dec. 789 (Ill. App. Ct. 2010). HN4[] Under Illinois law, courts imply a cause of action when:

> (1) the plaintiff is a member of the class for whose benefit the statute was enacted; (2) the plaintiff's injury is one the statute was designed to prevent; (3) a private right of action is consistent with the underlying purpose of the statute; and (4) implying a private right of action is necessary to provide an adequate remedy for violation of the statute.

Metzger v. DaRosa, 209 Ill. 2d 30, 805 N.E.2d 1165, 1168, 282 Ill. Dec. 148 (Ill. 2004). None of those [12] factors is present here.

[*871] The Illinois legislature enacted the District Act to create fire-protection districts. 70 ILCS 705/1. The Act governs the exercise of the districts' authority to purchase equipment, id., adopt safety codes and protocols, 70 ILCS 705/11, and employ firefighters and collect needed funds for their operation, 70 ILCS 705/6. All of this is geared toward a clearly articulated, broader purpose: "to protect the health, safety, and welfare of the public by ensuring the provision of adequate fire prevention and control services." Wauconda Fire Prot. Dist. v. Stonewall Orchards, LLP, 214 Ill. 2d 417, 828 N.E.2d 216, 224, 293 Ill. Dec. 246 (Ill. 2005) (citing 70 ILCS 705/1) (emphasis added).

ADS, however, uses the statute for a much different end—to protect competition in the alarm-system market. Nowhere in the lengthy District Act is there evidence of a concern for competition, let alone care for the commercial welfare of competing alarm-system providers. ADS, it follows, is not a member of the protected class (public residents), its competition-related injury is not one the District Act is geared to protect against (fire-related damage or harm), and making a competition claim out of the District Act would not be consistent with its purpose (fire safety). Nor does ADS offer a reason why, but for its right of action, violations of the Act will [13] go unremedied. We therefore find no implied right of action for ADS under the District Act.[2]

ADS's counterarguments are unpersuasive. To start, ADS relies on three cases: Gaffney v. Bd. of Trustees of Orland Fire Prot. Dist., 2012 IL 110012, 969 N.E.2d 359, 360 Ill. Dec. 549 (Ill. 2012), Wilkes v. Deerfield-Bannockburn Fire Protection Dist., 80 Ill. App. 3d 327, 399 N.E.2d 617, 35 Ill. Dec. 551 (Ill. App. Ct. 1979), and Glenview Rural Fire Prot. Dist. v. Raymond, 19 Ill. App. 3d 272, 311 N.E.2d 302 (Ill. App. Ct. 1974). But these cases do not address an implied right of action under the District Act. Glenview and Gaffney do not even involve a claim under the Act. See Glenview, 311 N.E.2d at 303-306; Gaffney, 969 N.E.2d at 368-69. And Wilkes is equally unhelpful. It was brought by firemen claiming, essentially, that a fire-protection district's operation of an ambulance service was a misuse of district resources, which impacted the firemen's pay. 399 N.E.2d at 619, 621-23. Even stretching those facts to say something about an implied right of action—again, an issue not considered by the court—the facts come far closer to touching on the District Act's purpose and operation than ADS's competition-related claims. See 70 ILCS 705/1, 705/6.

ADS also makes the novel argument that even if there is no right of action to enforce particular provisions of the District Act, there should be a right to sue when a fire-protection district exceeds its authority under the Act. That is a distinction without a difference. A regulated entity exceeds its statutory authority because it does not comply with particular statutory limits.

ADS further [14] points to ADT I and ADT II. It argues that those cases must have recognized an implied right of action, because they addressed thoroughly ADS and other alarm-system providers' District Act claims, which were similar to the ones ADS brings in this case. Again, no party raised the right-of-action argument that now comes to our attention. HN6[] "[U]nexamined assumptions of prior cases do not [*872] control the disposition of a contested issue." Stanek v. St. Charles Cmty. Unit Sch. Dist. No. 303, 783 F.3d 634, 640 (7th Cir. 2015); see also Fowler v. Butts, 829 F.3d 788, 792 (7th Cir. 2016); United States v. Rodriguez-Rodriguez, 453 F.3d 458, 460 (7th Cir. 2006).

ADS, finally, claims estoppel: that the defendants should be estopped from arguing that there is no right of action because Tyco's predecessor litigated and prevailed in ADT I and ADT II. The district court rejected that argument. It reasoned that no party, on either side, raised the right-of-action issue in ADT I or ADT II; Tyco did not embrace a side in that litigation that would now lead to unjust results; and it would be especially unfair to impose estoppel against Orland Fire, which was not a party in ADT I or ADT II. HN7[] Estoppel is a discretionary call in the district court's purview. See, e.g., United States v. Trudeau, 812 F.3d 578, 584 (7th Cir. 2016). And the district court's sound reasoning was well within its discretion.

The limits of our holding should be noted. We do not foreclose any implied [15] right of action in the District Act. But the District Act gives no reason to oblige ADS's claim, premised on enforcing competition in the alarm-system market.

B. The Sherman Act

The district court also found for the defendants on ADS's Sherman Act claims. See 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2. It concluded that ADS's exclusion from the market was the result of the Ordinances, not the defendants' anticompetitive behavior. HN8[] Because that decision came after a trial, we review the court's legal conclusions de novo and its factual findings for clear error. ARC Welding Supply Co, Inc. v. Am. Welding & Gas, Inc., 924 F.3d 322, 325 (7th Cir. 2019).

Fisher v. City of Berkeley, 475 U.S. 260, 106 S. Ct. 1045, 89 L. Ed. 2d 206 (1986), holds that HN9[] restraints on trade that are unilaterally imposed by the government do not form the basis of a § 1 claim. See, e.g., Flying J, Inc. v. Van Hollen, 621 F.3d 658, 662-65 (7th Cir. 2010). Fisher's facts concerned a local ordinance that set a mandatory rent ceiling for landlords. Landlords sued, arguing, in part, that the Sherman Act preempted the local, anticompetitive ordinance. The Supreme Court accepted that the ordinance was anticompetitive but disagreed that it violated the Sherman Act. The government's ordinance mandated the landlords' effective price fixing, and thus, there was no anticompetitive meeting of the minds for § 1 purposes. Id. at 266-67. The ordinance was at fault, not whatever anticompetitive conduct necessarily followed. [16] Id.

Fisher distinguished such HN10[] unilateral restraints from "hybrid" restraints, which do fall under § 1. The difference between the two, according to Fisher, is the extent of the government's command. If the government exercises "complete control" through the restraint, the conduct is not coordinated. Id. at 269. If, on the other hand, private parties are granted "a degree of private regulatory power," pursuant to which they behave anticompetitively, "the regulatory scheme may be attacked under § 1." Id. at 267-68 (quoting Rice v. Norman Williams Co., 458 U.S. 654, 666 n.1, 102 S. Ct. 3294, 73 L. Ed. 2d 1042 (1982)); see also AREEDA & HOVENKAMP, ANTITRUST LAW: AN ANALYSIS OF ANTITRUST PRINCIPLES AND THEIR APPLICATION ¶ 217 (2018 ed.) ("key" to Fisher is whether the government exercised "direct" control under the regime). Fisher contrasted the rent-control ordinance, a unilateral government action, with a hybrid restraint it had addressed before: local laws that require liquor distributors to set shared prices, but do not set what those prices [*873] are. Id. at 268-69 (citing California Retail Liquor Dealers Ass'n v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97, 100 S. Ct. 937, 63 L. Ed. 2d 233 (1980); Schwegmann Bros. v. Calvert Distillers Corp., 341 U.S. 384, 71 S. Ct. 745, 95 L. Ed. 1035, 60 Ohio Law Abs. 81 (1951)); see also 324 Liquor Corp. v. Duffy, 479 U.S. 335, 107 S. Ct. 720, 93 L. Ed. 2d 667 (1987) (similar, post-Fisher hybrid restraint).

Fisher's teachings control here. It is true that, unlike Fisher's rent-control ordinance, the Villages' Ordinances do not, on their face, mandate the challenged anticompetitive conduct—exclusivity with [17] Tyco. But we do not see why that distinction matters here. Fisher was concerned with a law's coercive effect, not its facial interpretation. See 475 U.S. at 266-67; see also Costco Wholesale Corp. v. Maleng, 522 F.3d 874, 890 (9th Cir. 2008) HN11[] (Fisher applies when "the potential anti-competitive effect is not the result of private pricing or marketing decisions, but the logical and intended result of the statute itself") (emphasis added). As long as the law "leave[s] nothing further to be decided" by private parties, there can be no concerted action. AREEDA & HOVENKAMP, ANTITRUST LAW ¶ 221e4.

Here, the district court found, after carefully reviewing the record evidence and hearing testimony, that implementing an RSS protocol, which the Ordinances do mandate on their face, required an exclusive arrangement with an alarm-system provider. This was true, according to the district court, as a technological and economic matter. Radio signals operate on one frequency that is licensed by a provider. So to ensure that accounts can send signals directly to the dispatch center, as an RSS protocol requires, the accounts and the center must share a provider—that is, there must be exclusivity. That exclusivity, moreover, could come as no surprise to the Villages. Exclusivity was the [18] status quo under Orland Fire's previous RSS-mandating ordinance. Fisher therefore dictates that the defendants did not violate § 1.

In contending otherwise, ADS insists that its alternative modes can operate in an RSS protocol and, thus, comply with the Ordinances. We are skeptical about the practical feasibility of those alternatives. Automatic retransmission in fact means that the signal goes first to the CSS and second to the RSS, however quickly. See ADT II, 724 F.3d at 868. More troubling, a ruling that requires the market's participants to make frequency-sharing available, as ADS seems to request, would mean demanding that Tyco sublicense its frequencies to its competitors. Antitrust law usually frowns upon such duties to deal. See Pac. Bell Tel. Co. v. Linkline Commc'ns, Inc., 555 U.S. 438, 450, 129 S. Ct. 1109, 172 L. Ed. 2d 836 (2009); Verizon Commc'ns Inc. v. Law Offices of Curtis V. Trinko, LLP, 540 U.S. 398, 410, 124 S. Ct. 872, 157 L. Ed. 2d 823 (2004).

We can set aside that skepticism, though, because again the district court's factual findings resolve the question for us. The district court considered these alternatives—and rejected them. The court found that ADS had not supported its claim that retransmission can comply with an RSS system. It further found that the evidence of ADS's retransmission capabilities were "at best inconclusive." And as to frequency sharing, the district court found that it was flawed. The sublicensing [19] company could not monitor the signals for trouble or maintenance alerts, a critical part of the alarm-system business. ADS shows no clear error in those findings.

ADS makes another argument. Even if the Ordinances effectively mandate exclusivity, ADS argues, they do not control the prices Orland Fire and Tyco charge. Thus, according to ADS, the Ordinances [*874] impose at most a hybrid restraint, because the governmental command is not complete. We agree with the factual premise but not the conclusion. The Ordinances do not speak to pricing, it is true, but the anticompetitive conduct ADS's claim challenges is not inflated prices. Tyco's exclusivity is what caused ADS's asserted antitrust injury—exclusion from the market—not high prices, which ADS of course does not pay. Accord O.K. Sand & Gravel, Inc. v. Martin Marietta Techs., Inc., 36 F.3d 565, 572 (7th Cir. 1994) ("increased prices" cause competitors "no injury, let alone antitrust injury").

ADS also insists that the district court misread the Ordinances, which led it to find that Fisher applied. The district court, however, did not decide that the Ordinances on their face require an exclusive arrangement. Instead, the court found, based on the evidence, that an exclusive arrangement was the only feasible way to carry out the [20] RSS model that the Ordinances mandate. A different case, with different evidence, may prove differently. But nothing in this record shows that the district court's findings were in clear error.

Fisher thus resolves ADS's § 1 claim—and it resolves the § 2 claim as well. HN12[] Section 2 prohibits monopolization, or the attempt at it, through willful, anticompetitive conduct. E.g., Mercatus Grp., LLC v. Lake Forest Hosp., 641 F.3d 834, 854 (7th Cir. 2011). The only willful conduct cited by ADS is the exclusivity arrangement. But for reasons just explained, that conduct was not willful under Fisher; it was effectively required by the Ordinance. See Englert v. McKeesport, 872 F.2d 1144, 1150 (3d Cir. 1989) (applying Fisher to exclusive-dealing claims under both § 1 and § 2).

One final note. ADS worries that without introducing competition against Tyco the alarm-system market will stagnate; Tyco will have little reason to innovate and more flexibility to charge high prices. We are not unsympathetic to the point, in theory. But ADS had its chance at trial to demonstrate to the district court that its alternative methods can work in an RSS system, and it did not. And no one should lose sight of the fact that competition for the exclusive contract is competition. Paddock Publ'ns, Inc. v. Chicago Tribune Co., 103 F.3d 42, 47 (7th Cir. 1996). Orland Fire and Tyco's deal has only a one-year, renewable term, and nothing we know [21] of forecloses ADS from making a bid to Orland Fire for another deal.

C. The Fourteenth Amendment

The district court further found for Orland Fire on ADS's substantive due process claims. This decision, like the Sherman Act decision, came in the posttrial ruling, so we review the legal conclusions de novo and the factual findings for clear error. ARC Welding Supply, 924 F.3d at 325.

Because ADS does not invoke a fundamental right, the exclusion of ADS from the Schaumburg market need only be rationally related to a legitimate government interest. Washington v. Glucksberg, 521 U.S. 702, 727, 117 S. Ct. 2258, 117 S. Ct. 2302, 138 L. Ed. 2d 772 (1997); Hayden ex rel. A.H. v. Greensburg Cmty. Sch. Corp., 743 F.3d 569, 576 (7th Cir. 2014). HN13[] This is a lenient standard, and laws challenged under rational-basis review carry a "strong presumption of validity." Minerva Dairy, Inc. v. Harsdorf, 905 F.3d 1047, 1053 (7th Cir. 2018); Goodpaster v. City of Indianapolis, 736 F.3d 1060, 1071 (7th Cir. 2013).

ADS's substantive due process claim can be easily rejected. It asserts that Orland Fire has acted arbitrarily and irrationally by going with an exclusive provider rather than entertaining ADS's efforts [*875] at alternative, RSS-compliant methods. But ADS accepts that the Ordinances are lawful. And for reasons explained in the last section, we have no reason to disturb the district court's sound findings that the Ordinances effectively require Orland Fire to work with an exclusive provider. There was thus a rational basis for Orland Fire to choose an exclusive provider—abiding by [22] municipal command.

III. Conclusion

For these reasons, we affirm the district court's judgment.

Opinion

MEMORANDUM RE: DEFENDANTS' MOTION FOR PARTIAL SUMMARY JUDGMENT ON UNASSIGNED CLAIMS

Baylson, J.

I. INTRODUCTION

Defendants USG Corporation, United States Gypsum Company, L&W Supply Corporation, and PABCO Building Products LLC (collectively, "Defendants")[1] bring this Motion for Partial Summary Judgment three (3) years after the commencement of this action and five (5) years after the commencement of the overall multidistrict litigation, arguing that six of the twelve Homebuilder Plaintiffs lack standing to bring claims for some or all of their wallboard purchases because they seek damages for purchases made by separately-organized subsidiaries and other related entities. The purchasing entities did not assign the claims at issue to the Homebuilder Plaintiffs, and Defendants argue that the unassigned claims must be dismissed because the Homebuilder Plaintiffs lack Article III standing to bring them. This Court must [*4] now determine whether genuine disputes of material fact preclude summary judgment for Defendants. For the reasons discussed below, partial summary judgment for Defendants on the unassigned claims is GRANTED in part and DENIED in part.

II. BACKGROUND

A. Procedural History

As the Court has provided a thorough summary of the procedural history in this multidistrict litigation in several prior opinions, the Court includes only the procedural history relevant to the instant Motion. (See, e.g., ECF 390 ("Choice of Law MSJ Opinion") (denying in part Defendants' motion for summary judgment on questions of choice of law)[2];

[1] The Motion was also brought by former Defendant New NGC, Inc., which was dismissed from this case by Joint Stipulation on July 31, 2018. (ECF 331).

[2] The Choice of Law MSJ Opinion is available on the Homebuilder action docket (No. 15-cv-1712) and at In re Domestic Drywall Antitrust Litigation, Nos. 13-md-2437 and 15-cv-1712, 399 F. Supp. 3d 280, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 113051, 2019 WL 2996484 (E.D. Pa. July 8, 2019) (Baylson J.).

ECF 351 ("February 2016 MSJ Opinion") (granting in part and denying in part manufacturers' motions for summary judgment in the direct and indirect purchaser actions)[3]; ECF 101 ("Homebuilder MTD Opinion") (granting in part and denying in part Defendants' motion to dismiss Plaintiffs' state law and Sherman Act § 1 claims in the Second Amended Complaint)).[4]

On July 2, 2018, Defendants moved for summary judgment with respect to claims based on wallboard purchases that were (1) made by separately-organized [*5] legal entities and not by the named Plaintiffs themselves and (2) not assigned to the named Plaintiffs prior to the filing of this case. (ECF 318, "Motion" or "Mot."). The Motion was accompanied by Defendants' Statement of Undisputed Facts, (ECF 318-2, 324, "SOF"), as well as various exhibits. On July 31, 2018, the parties filed a Joint Stipulation, which the Court approved, voluntarily dismissing all claims against Defendant New NGC, Inc. with prejudice, leaving Defendants USG Corporation, United States Gypsum Company, L&W Supply Corporation, and PABCO Building Products LLC (collectively, "Defendants") in the action. (ECF 331).

Plaintiffs responded in opposition to the Motion on August 20, 2018. (ECF 337, "Opposition" or "Opp'n"). The Opposition included a Response to Defendants' Statement of Undisputed Facts, (ECF 337-2, "Resp. to SOF"), as well as Plaintiffs' own Separate Statement of Material Facts, (ECF 337-3, "Pl.'s SOF"), and various exhibits. Defendants replied in support on September 10, 2018, (ECF 349, "Reply"), and included a Response to Plaintiffs' Separate Statement of Material Facts. (ECF 348, "Resp. to Pl.'s SOF"). The Court then held oral argument on the Motion on March [*6] 12, 2019. (ECF 378-81).

B. Undisputed Facts

The following is a fair account of the factual assertions relevant to the instant Motion for Summary Judgment, as taken from both parties' Statements of Fact, and not genuinely disputed.

1. The Legal Entities at Issue

The Third Amended Complaint (ECF 110, "TAC")—the operative complaint in this action—names twelve (12) plaintiffs who bring claims against Defendants related to purchases of wallboard (the "Homebuilder Plaintiffs"). (TAC ¶¶ 31-42). Six of those twelve Homebuilder Plaintiffs seek damages related in part to wallboard purchases made by their subsidiaries or related entities.[5] The Homebuilder Plaintiffs and related entities at issue in this Motion are as follows:

1. Homebuilder Plaintiff Beazer Homes Holdings Corp. seeks damages for wallboard it purchased, as well as for wallboard purchased by the following three subsidiaries: (a) Beazer Homes Corp.; (b) Beazer Homes Indiana LLP; and (c) Beazer Homes Texas, LP. (SOF ¶¶ 1-2). Homebuilder Plaintiff Beazer Homes Holder Corp. and its subsidiaries build and sell new home communities under the "Beazer Homes" brand name. (Pl.'s SOF ¶ 6; Resp. to Pl.'s SOF ¶ 6).

[3] The February 2016 MSJ Opinion is available on the MDL docket (No. 13-md-2437) and at In re Domestic Drywall Antitrust Litigation, 163 F. Supp. 3d 175 (E.D. Pa. 2016) (Baylson, J.).

[4] The Homebuilder MTD Opinion is available on the Homebuilder action docket (No. 15-cv-1712) and at In re Domestic Drywall Antitrust Litigation Civil Action, No. 15-cv-1712, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 90619, 2016 WL 3769680 (E.D. Pa. July 13, 2016) (Baylson, J.).

[5] There is some disagreement about whether the subsidiaries and related entities are wholly owned, separately-organized, or otherwise related to Homebuilder Plaintiffs. The Court's analysis below applies with equal force to any subsidiaries or related entities that are separately-organized legal entities, as opposed to divisions within each Homebuilder Plaintiff's corporate structure. To the extent the parties continue to disagree about which subsidiaries and related entities named in Defendants' Motion are, in fact, divisions, further briefing may be required.

2. Homebuilder Plaintiff The Drees [*7] Company seeks damages for wallboard it purchased, as well as for wallboard purchased by the following four subsidiaries: (a) Ausherman Homes, Inc.; (b) Drees Custom Homes L.P; (c) Drees Homes of Florida, Inc.; and (d) Drees Premier Homes, Inc. (SOF ¶¶ 4-5). Homebuilder Plaintiff The Drees Company and its subsidiaries build and sell new home communities and Homebuilder Plaintiffs contend they do so under the brand name "Drees Homes." (Pl.'s SOF ¶ 12; Resp. to SOF ¶ 12).
3. Homebuilder Plaintiff KB Home seeks damages for wallboard it purchased, as well as for wallboard purchased by the following nine subsidiaries: (a) Fremont Pat Ranch LLC; (b) KB Home Arroyo Vista LLC; (c) KB Home Gold Coast LLC; (d) KB Home Las Vegas Inc.; (e) KB Home Nevada Inc.; (f) KB Home Reno Inc.; (g) KB Home/Shaw Louisiana LLC; (h) KB Home South Bay Inc.; and (i) KB Home Treasure Coast LLC. (SOF ¶¶ 7-8).[6] Homebuilder Plaintiff KB Home and some of its subsidiaries build and sell new home communities and Homebuilder Plaintiffs contend they do so under the brand name "KB Home." (Pl.'s SOF ¶ 21; Resp. to Pl.'s SOF ¶ 21).

4. Homebuilder Plaintiff TRI Pointe Homes, Inc. seeks damages for wallboard purchased by the following [*8] seven subsidiaries[7]: (a) Maracay Construction, L.L.C.; (b) Pardee Homes; (c) Pardee Homes of Nevada; (d) The Quadrant Corporation; (e) Trendmaker Homes, Inc.; (f) TRI Pointe Contractors, LP; and (g) Winchester Homes Inc. (SOF ¶¶ 10-11).

5. Homebuilder Plaintiff Hovnanian Enterprises, Inc. seeks damages for wallboard purchased by the following fifteen subsidiaries: (a) K. Hovnanian Cambridge Homes, L.L.C.; (b) K. Hovnanian Companies of California, Inc.; (c) K. Hovnanian Developments of Arizona, Inc.; (d) K. Hovnanian Developments of Illinois, Inc.; (e) K. Hovnanian Developments of Maryland, Inc.; (f) K. Hovnanian Developments of Minnesota, Inc.; (g) K. Hovnanian Developments of New Jersey II, Inc.; (h) K. Hovnanian Developments of Ohio, Inc.; (i) K. Hovnanian Homes — DFW, L.L.C.; (j) K. Hovnanian Homes of Delaware, L.L.C.; (k) K. Hovnanian Homes of North Carolina, Inc. (l) K. Hovnanian Homes of Virginia, Inc.; (m) K. Hovnanian JV Services Company, L.L.C.; (n) K. Hovnanian of Houston II, L.L.C.; and (o) K. Hovnanian Windward Homes, LLC. (Id. ¶¶ 13-14). Some of these subsidiaries build and sell new home communities and Homebuilder Plaintiffs contend they do so under the "K. Hovnanian Homes" [*9] brand. (Pl.'s SOF ¶ 16; Resp. to Pl.'s SOF ¶ 16).
6. Homebuilder Plaintiff Toll Brothers, Inc. seeks damages for wallboard it purchased, as well as for wallboard purchased by the following four subsidiaries[8]: (a) Jupiter CC LLC; (b) Plum Canyon Master LLC; (c) Porter Ranch Development Co.; and (d) Shapell Industries, Inc. (SOF ¶¶ 16-17).

2. Identifying the Related Entities and the Assignment of Claims

During discovery, Defendants requested that the Homebuilder Plaintiffs identify and produce documents concerning assignments related to their claims. (SOF ¶¶ 35, 37). The six Homebuilder Plaintiffs at issue in this Motion admit that they have not obtained or produced assignments-of-claims from the above-identified subsidiaries, with one exception.[9] (See Resp. to SOF ¶¶ 3, 6, 9, 12, 15, 18). The exception is Jupiter CC LLC, which the parties agree did

[6] In their Separate Statement of Material Facts, Homebuilder Plaintiffs characterize these subsidiaries as "divisions," but Defendants argue in response that they are, in fact, separately incorporated limited liability corporations with separate legal existences. (See Pl.'s SOF ¶ 19; Resp. to Pl's SOF ¶ 19).

[7] Homebuilder Plaintiffs take issue with Defendants' characterization of these subsidiaries as "separately-organized" because Homebuilder Plaintiffs contend these subsidiaries were acquired as part of TRI Pointe Homes, Inc.'s acquisition of Weyerhaueser Real Estate Company in 2014. (See Resp. to SOF ¶ 11; see also Pl.'s SOF ¶ 22; Resp. to Pl.'s SOF ¶ 22).

[8] Homebuilder Plaintiffs take issue with Defendants' characterization of these subsidiaries, which Homebuilder Plaintiffs contend ignores the fact that three of the four subsidiaries—Plum Canyon Master LLC, Porter Ranch Development Co., and Shapell Industries, Inc.—were acquired by Toll Brothers, Inc. in 2014. (See Resp. to SOF ¶ 17; see also Pl.'s SOF ¶ 30; Resp. to Pl.'s SOF ¶ 30).

produce an assignment-of-claims to its parent, Toll Brothers, Inc., for the wallboard purchases at issue in the TAC. (SOF ¶ 18; Resp. to SOF ¶ 18).

On February 25, 2018, each of the Homebuilder Plaintiffs produced Amended "Amount of Damages" Contention Statements, which identified the legal entities that made the purchases [*10] for which they claim damages.[10] (SOF ¶ 41). At least three of the six Homebuilder Plaintiffs—Beazer Homes Holdings Corp., The Drees Company, and TRI Pointe Homes, Inc.—previously identified the subsidiaries at issue in their Corporate Disclosure Statements and Certifications of Interested Entities or Persons, dated March 17, 2015. (See Pl.'s SOF ¶¶ 3, 9, 25; Resp. to Pl.'s SOF ¶¶ 3, 9, 25). Those Corporate Disclosure Statements stated that each subsidiary at issue purchases drywall indirectly from one or more of the Defendants. (Pl.'s SOF ¶¶ 3, 9, 25; Resp. to Pl.'s SOF ¶¶ 3, 9, 25).[11]

III. LEGAL STANDARD

A district court should grant a motion for summary judgment if the movant can show "that there is no genuine dispute as to any material fact and the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(a). A dispute is "genuine" if "the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party." Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986). A factual dispute is "material" if it "might affect the outcome of the suit under the governing law." Id.

A party seeking summary judgment always bears the initial responsibility for informing the district court of the basis for its motion and identifying those portions [*11] of the record that it believes demonstrate the absence of a genuine issue of material fact. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986). Where the nonmoving party bears the burden of proof on a particular issue at trial, the moving party's initial burden can be met simply by "pointing out to the district court . . . that there is an absence of evidence to support the nonmoving party's case." Id. at 325. After the moving party has met its initial burden, the adverse party's response must, by "citing to particular parts of materials in the record," set out specific facts showing a genuine issue for trial. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c)(1)(A); Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 586-87, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986) (The nonmoving party "must do more than simply show that there is some metaphysical dispute as to the material facts"). Summary judgment is appropriate if the adverse party fails to rebut the motion by making a factual showing "sufficient to establish the existence of an essential element to that party's case, and on which that party will bear the burden of proof at trial." Celotex, 477 U.S. at 322. Under Rule 56, the Court must view the evidence presented on the motion in the light most favorable to the opposing party. Anderson, 477 U.S. at 255.

[9] Of the remaining six Homebuilder Plaintiffs named in this suit, three—M/I Homes, Inc., Ashton Woods Holdings L.L.C., D.R. Horton Los Angeles Holding Company, Inc.—have produced assignments-of-claims for their subsidiaries' wallboard purchases. (SOF ¶¶ 21, 24, 27). The other three—Meritage Homes Corporation, Pulte Home Corporation, and CalAtlantic Group, Inc.—seek damages only for their own wallboard purchases or for the purchases of their predecessor entities, and do not assert claims on behalf of any subsidiaries. (Id. ¶¶ 29, 31, 33, 34). The Homebuilder Plaintiffs contest Defendants' characterization of their claims to the extent it intends to limit in any way the damages recoverable by these six Homebuilder Plaintiffs. (Resp. to SOF ¶¶ 23, 26, 29, 31, 33, 34).

[10] Homebuilder Plaintiffs admit that they produced these contention statements, but deny that their production was the first time that Homebuilder Plaintiffs comprehensively identified the legal entities that made purchases for which they claim damages. (Resp. to SOF ¶ 41).

[11] Defendants admit that the Corporate Disclosure Statements identified the subsidiaries as such, but deny that they disclosed that the subsidiaries made drywall purchases in 2012-15 for which Homebuilder Plaintiffs are seeking damages in this action. (Resp. to Pl.'s SOF ¶¶ 3, 9, 25). The parties also disagree about the extent to which Defendants sought discovery from the subsidiaries or asked questions about corporate structure and subsidiary purchases during depositions. (Pl.'s SOF ¶¶ 33-38; Resp. to Pl.'s SOF ¶¶ 33-38).

IV. DISCUSSION

A. The Homebuilder Plaintiffs' Injury in Fact

To have Article III standing to bring a claim, a party must show injury in fact, causation, [*12] and redressability. Friends of the Earth, Inc. v. Laidlaw Envtl. Servs. (TOC), Inc., 528 U.S. 167, 180-81, 120 S. Ct. 693, 145 L. Ed. 2d 610 (2000). Harm to a related company, even to a wholly-owned subsidiary, does not necessarily constitute injury to a corporate plaintiff. See, e.g., Motorola Mobility LLC v. AU Optronics Corp., 775 F.3d 816, 819-21 (7th Cir. 2015) (Posner, J.) (holding Motorola could not bring Sherman Act claims for purchases made by its subsidiaries and explaining that "derivative injury rarely gives rise to a claim under antitrust law"); cf. In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 618 F.3d 300, 341 n.44 (3d Cir. 2010) ("As a matter of well-settled common law, a subsidiary is a distinct legal entity and is not liable for the actions of its parent or sister corporations simply by dint of the corporate relationship").

The Supreme Court has explained that, for purposes of determining their ability to conspire under the Sherman Act, a parent and wholly-owned subsidiary "have a complete unity of interest": common objectives, one corporate consciousness, and the same course of action. Copperweld Corp. v. Indep. Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 771, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1984) ("[T]he coordinated activity of a parent and its wholly owned subsidiary must be viewed as that of a single enterprise."). In Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707 (1977), the Court held that indirect purchasers are barred from seeking damages for Sherman Act violations, with limited exceptions. Id. at 735-36. The Third Circuit recognizes those three potential exceptions as: (1) a "cost-plus" exception; (2) a "co-conspirator" [*13] exception," and (3) an "owned or controlled" exception. See Howard Hess Dental Labs. Inc. v. Dentsply Int'l, Inc., 602 F.3d 237, 258-59 (3d Cir. 2010); Merican, Inc. v. Caterpillar Tractor Co., 713 F.2d 958, 968 n.22 (3d Cir. 1983). Homebuilder Plaintiffs thus argue that where an indirect purchaser and direct purchaser act as a single entity, courts grant indirect purchaser standing under the "owned or controlled" exception to Illinois Brick. (Opp'n at 16).

Defendants' Motion is not concerned with whether a parent and subsidiary can conspire for purposes of antitrust liability, nor is it concerned with whether indirect and direct purchasers are acting as a single entity.[12] Rather, Defendants are arguing that Homebuilder Plaintiffs do not have Article III standing to seek damages for wallboard purchases made by their various subsidiaries and related entities, and for which no assignments-of-claims were produced. Aside from their corporate relationships, Homebuilder Plaintiffs have not put forth any evidence to show that they themselves suffered injury as a result of their subsidiaries' and related entities' purchases.

Article III standing and antitrust standing are distinct concepts. See Hartig Drug Co., Inc. v. Senju Pharm. Co., Ltd., 836 F.3d 261, 269 (3d Cir. 2016) ("The two concepts [of Article III standing and antitrust standing] are distinct, with the former implicating the court's subject matter jurisdiction and the latter affecting [*14] only the plaintiff's ability to succeed on the merits."); cf. In re Processed Egg Products Antitrust Litig., 881 F.3d 262, 268 (3d Cir. 2018) ("For a party to have 'antitrust standing,' it must do more than satisfy the familiar three-part test for [Article III] standing . . . that arises from the constitutional requirement of a 'case or controversy.'" (citation omitted)). If a plaintiff cannot show that it was injured by the activity that forms the basis for its claim, then the Court need not and should not consider whether that plaintiff can move forward with antitrust claims under Copperweld or Illinois Brick.

Copperweld held only that a parent and subsidiary cannot conspire together under the Sherman Act. The single entity theory propounded by Homebuilder Plaintiffs seeks to extend Copperweld to assume a parent is automatically injured by its subsidiary's purchase of drywall at an illegally inflated cost. This theory is endorsed by only three cases. Those cases rely on each other alone as supporting authority. See Aventis Environmental

[12] The Court noted in its recent Choice of Law MSJ Opinion, and reiterates here, that Homebuilder Plaintiffs have contended throughout this action they are entitled to damages for all wallboard purchases, whether direct or indirect. The Court does not reach any conclusions as to whether Homebuilder Plaintiffs qualify as direct or indirect purchasers in ruling on this Motion.

Science USA LP v. Scotts Co., 383 F. Supp. 2d 488 (S.D.N.Y. 2005); In re Vitamins Antitrust Litig., No. 99-197TFH, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8903, 2001 WL 755852 (D.D.C. June 7, 2001); and Farmland Dairies, Inc. v. New York Farm Bureau, Inc., Nos. 87-CV-1622 (FJS) and 89-CV-567 (FJS), 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5235, 1996 WL 191971 (N.D.N.Y. Apr. 15, 1996). The Court declines to follow the reasoning in these cases, particularly in light of the many other [*15] cases rejecting this single entity theory. See, e.g., In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 618 F.3d 300, 341 n.44 (3d Cir. 2010) (rejecting Copperweld as authority for holding subsidiaries liable for actions of a parent); In re Processed Egg Prods. Antitrust Litig., 821 F. Supp. 2d 709, 747 (E.D. Pa. 2011) (Pratter, J.) (rejecting plaintiffs' "attempt to draw a 'single enterprise' theory from Copperweld" and finding that such a theory "is unsupported by legal authority and does not provide occasion to disregard the separate corporate forms of [the] entities and impose liability on them"); *Perez v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., No. C 06-01962 LW, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 135844, 2011 WL 5833636, at 1-3 (N.D. Cal. Nov. 15, 2011); Sun Microsystems, Inc. v. Hynix Semiconductor Inc., 608 F. Supp. 2d 1166, 1185-86 (N.D. Cal. 2009).

The Court likewise finds that the single entity theory should not apply here, particularly because Homebuilder Plaintiffs have failed to articulate a reasonable standard for determining what falls under the definition of a "single entity." Homebuilder Plaintiffs are asking this Court to augment Article III standing to cover separately-organized subsidiaries and related legal entities simply because they engage in the same line of business and because some of them use the same brand name as their corporate parents. We decline to make such a broad determination.

B. Substitution under Rule 17

Standing is determined at the time of the commencement of suit. Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 571 n.5, 112 S. Ct. 2130, 119 L. Ed. 2d 351 (1992); 13A Wright & Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure, § 3531 (3d [*16] ed.) ("Post-filing events that supply standing that did not exist on filing may be disregarded."). However, Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 17(a)(3) allows reasonable time after an objection for a "real party in interest to ratify, join, or be substituted into the action."

Defendants argue that Rule 17(a)(3) is meant only to ameliorate honest mistakes on the part of a plaintiff and should have no bearing when a plaintiff knew the proper party or could have named the proper party from the beginning with the exercise of minimal diligence. See, e.g., Gardner v. State Farm Fire & Cas. Co., 544 F.3d 553, 563 (3d Cir. 2008); 6A Wright & Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure, § 1555 (3d ed.) ("[T]he rule should be applied only to cases in which substitution of the real party in interest is necessary to avoid injustice. Thus, it has been held that when the determination of the right party to bring the action was not difficult and when no excusable mistake had been made, then Rule 17(a)(3) is not applicable and the action should be dismissed.").

The Court does not read these authorities as prescribing an absolute bar to post-complaint addition, substitution, or ratification, especially where, as here, Defendants had ample time to voice an objection to the named plaintiffs. Homebuilder Plaintiffs contend that they "were clear from the [*17] start that they were asserting antritrust claims based on their own purchases of drywall as well as purchases made by/through their wholly-owned subsidiaries." (Opp'n at 21). Homebuilder Plaintiffs assert they previously put Defendants on notice of the identities of their subsidiaries that purchased drywall that might be related to their overall claims. Considering the stage of this case and the extensive discovery that has gone on, the Court will afford the Homebuilder Plaintiffs a fair opportunity to substitute or add the correct parties as Plaintiffs, or otherwise have them ratify.

V. CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, the Motion for Partial Summary Judgment on Unassigned Claims (ECF 318) is GRANTED in part and DENIED in part. Although the Court agrees that the Homebuilder Plaintiffs do not have automatic Article III standing to bring claims on behalf of their subsidiaries, the Court will give the Homebuilder Plaintiffs reasonable time to add or substitute previously identified subsidiaries or affiliates as the correct parties as Plaintiffs to this action, or to allow them to ratify, pursuant to Rule 17(a)(3).

An appropriate Order follows.

ORDER RE: UNASSIGNED CLAIMS

For the reasons stated [*18] in the foregoing Memorandum, the Defendants' Motion for Partial Summary Judgment on Unassigned Claims is GRANTED in part and DENIED in part. As to those subsidiaries or affiliates of the Plaintiffs that Plaintiffs have previously and specifically identified in this case, as purchasers of drywall, either in the initial disclosures, or by specific responses to Defendants' discovery, and Plaintiffs have previously disclosed the details of the purchases of drywall in discovery, these subsidiaries or affiliates may be added as parties for the sole purpose of seeking damages in this case, or may otherwise ratify the claims.

Plaintiffs will have thirty (30) days to file a statement to identify these entities, with specific references to where the disclosure was previously made, along with a statement showing that the drywall purchases claimed in this litigation against one or more Defendants were previously provided in discovery, or otherwise, to Defendants.

Defendants will then have thirty (30) days in which to dispute the accuracy or sufficiency of the alleged disclosure in the statement.

The Court will then allow an additional thirty (30) days for counsel to discuss and attempt to resolve [*19] any disputes.

Any motion concerning a continuing dispute on this issue must be filed by October 30, 2019.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Right to Petition Immunity

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom to Petition

HN3[] Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, Right to Petition Immunity

The Noerr-Pennington doctrine originates from the U.S. Supreme Court's decisions in Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., and United Mine Workers v. Pennington, which are together its namesake. In Noerr, the Supreme Court held that the First Amendment protects businesses when they engage in certain petitioning activities, such as initiating litigation, providing them with immunity from antitrust liability when their conduct is aimed at influencing governmental action and their petitioning activity otherwise potentially violates §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, which proscribe conspiracies to restrain trade and attempts to impose monopolies, respectively. Pennington then reiterated the core teaching of Noerr: that immunity from antitrust liability under the First Amendment exists for concerted efforts to influence public officials regardless of intent or purpose.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Sham Exception

HN4[] Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, Sham Exception

An exception to Noerr-Pennington immunity exists where the conduct at issue is a mere sham, such as where an anticompetitive publicity campaign, while ostensibly directed toward influencing governmental action, is actually nothing more than an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor. For the "sham" exception to apply to a lawsuit it must be objectively baseless and must conceal an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor; that is, the plaintiff must have brought baseless claims in an attempt to thwart competition (i.e., in bad faith).

Torts > ... > Prospective Advantage > Intentional Interference > Elements

HN9[] Intentional Interference, Elements

Generally speaking, an action for tortious interference with prospective economic advantage is based on conduct by the defendants which prevents the plaintiff from entering into a contract with a third party. Tortious interference with prospective economic advantage arises when a party interferes with a business relationship by maliciously inducing a person not to enter into a contract with a third person, which he would have entered into but for the interference if damage proximately ensues, when this interference is done not in the legitimate exercise of the interfering person's rights. Stating a claim for tortious interference with prospective economic advantage requires that the plaintiff allege facts showing that the defendants acted without justification in inducing a third party to refrain from entering into a contract with them, which contract would have ensued but for the interference.

HN10[] Intentional Interference, Elements

The tort of tortious interference with prospective economic advantage under North Carolina law not only embraces instances in which the defendant induces a third party to refrain from entering into a contract with the plaintiff, it also extends to inducement by a third party, the outsider, of a party to a contract to terminate or fail to renew that contract. The reason the difference between the interference preventing a new contract from being made, resulting in the cancellation or termination of an existing agreement, or prompting a party to an existing agreement to allow the agreement to expire rather than renew it for an additional term, is not a meaningful one as this element relates to a party's liability, is that in all three variations, the requirement is met that the prospective economic advantage with which the outsider interferes is substantial enough to permit recovery, and not a mere expectancy, which has been held to be insufficient.

HN11[] Intentional Interference, Elements

The difference between a party to an agreement exercising modification rights in a multi-phase development deal to terminate one part of a multi-part agreement and the party canceling the entire agreement is not relevant to whether the third party whose interference resulted in the choice to terminate the contract is liable for tortious interference with the prospective economic advantage derived from one or all phases of the multi-part agreement. Inducing a person not to enter into a contract is as much a tort as interference with an established contract. So too is inducing a person or entity to terminate a contract, such as by allegedly inducing a third party not to consummate a later phase of a multi-phase development deal, regardless of whether the contractual vehicle defeating the prospective economic advantage is denominated a termination, cancellation, prevention, rescission, or other language of similar import and effect.

HN12[] Intentional Interference, Elements

The tort of tortious interference with prospective economic advantage under North Carolina law includes contractual modifications equivalent in effect to terminations of parts of multi-part agreements.

[397] Appeal by Plaintiff from order entered 1 October 2018 by Judge Michael J. O'Foghludha in Orange County Superior Court. Heard in the Court of Appeals 22 May 2019.

[*256] BROOK, Judge.

Plaintiff appeals the dismissal of its complaint by the trial court. Because the trial court dismissed Plaintiff's complaint under Rule 12(b)(6) of the North Carolina Rules of Civil Procedure, our recitation of the facts is based on the allegations in Plaintiff's complaint.

I. Background

A. Factual Background

Plaintiff Cheryl Lloyd Humphrey Land Investment Company, LLC ("Plaintiff") is a limited liability company that owns real estate in Orange County, North Carolina. In the summer of 2013, Plaintiff entered negotiations with Braddock Park Homes, Inc. ("Braddock Park Homes") to sell Braddock Park Homes approximately 45 acres of real property located on Orange Grove and Enoe Mountain Road in Hillsborough, North Carolina. Braddock Park Homes planned to develop a 118 unit townhome subdivision similar [2] in style to the existing Braddock Park townhome development located in Hillsborough. However, the proposed development could not be completed as planned unless the Town of Hillsborough ("the Town") agreed to annex the property and make certain zoning changes.

A series of meetings took place in the fall of 2013 in which the Town and its planning board considered whether to annex and re-zone the property as proposed. Defendants Resco Products, Inc. and Piedmont Minerals Company, Inc. ("Defendants"), owners of real property adjacent to the proposed development, participated in these meetings, opposing approval of the project by the Town. During the course of these proceedings, Defendants made various representations to the Town and [*257] its planning board regarding the dangers posed by fly rock, air blasts, and ground vibrations resulting from their operations of a mine on land adjacent to the proposed townhome development and, specifically, blasting conducted at the mine. Despite Defendants' opposition to the project, however, the meetings before the Town and its planning board culminated in the Town approving Braddock Park Homes's request that the property be annexed by the Town, and making [3] the required zoning changes.

After securing approval of the project from the Town, Plaintiff entered into a Purchase and Sale Agreement ("the Agreement") with Braddock Park Homes, the negotiation of which had been ongoing throughout the time of the proceedings before the Town and its planning board in fall of 2013 and early 2014. Defendants were aware of these negotiations.

The Agreement Plaintiff entered into with Braddock Park Homes contemplated two development phases. In Phase I, Braddock Park Homes agreed to purchase approximately 41 acres of real estate from Plaintiff for $85,000 per acre. In Phase II, Braddock Park Homes was granted a "free look" for a specified period of time to purchase an additional 5.5 acres, which was directly adjacent [398] to land owned by Defendants, near the location of their mining operation. Under the Agreement, Braddock Park Homes enjoyed the right to terminate Phase II of the project. Although Phase I was consummated, Braddock Park Homes exercised its right to modify the Agreement on 9 October 2014, terminating Phase II. Braddock Park Homes cited the representations made by Defendants to the Town during the approval process as the reason for terminating [4] Phase II.

B. Procedural History

On 27 October 2017, Plaintiff initiated this action. In its complaint, Plaintiff alleges a single cause of action for tortious interference with prospective economic advantage. Plaintiff's claim for tortious interference with prospective economic advantage is based on representations made by Defendants to the Town and its planning board during the approval process. Plaintiff asserts that these representations were in fact misrepresentations, and that these misrepresentations were made by Defendants maliciously, intentionally, and without justification, proximately resulting in the termination by Braddock Park Homes of Phase II of the Agreement, and injuring Plaintiff in an amount equal to the $85,000 per acre price of Phase I.

In lieu of an answer, Defendants filed a motion to dismiss Plaintiff's complaint for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted under Rule 12(b)(6) of the North Carolina Rules of Civil Procedure. [*258] The motion came on for hearing before the Honorable Michael J. O'Foghludha in Orange County Superior Court on 1 October 2018. The trial court granted Defendants' motion in an order entered the same day. Plaintiff entered timely notice of appeal on 29 October 2018.

II. Analysis

A. Standard [5] of Review

HN1[] A motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6) of the North Carolina Rules of Civil Procedure "tests the legal sufficiency of the complaint by presenting the question whether, as a matter of law, the allegations of the complaint, treated as true, are sufficient to state a claim upon which relief can be granted under some recognized legal theory." Cage v. Colonial Bldg. Co., Inc., 337 N.C. 682, 683, 448 S.E.2d 115, 116 (1994) (internal marks and citation omitted). A motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted should not be granted unless it "appears to a certainty that plaintiff is entitled to no relief under any state of facts which could be proved in support of the claim." Sutton v. Duke, 277 N.C. 94, 103, 176 S.E.2d 161, 166 (1970).

HN2[] Our review of the decision by a trial court to grant a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6) is de novo. Ventriglia v. Deese, 194 N.C. App. 344, 347, 669 S.E.2d 817, 819-20 (2008). In determining whether "the allegations of the complaint, if treated as true, are sufficient to state a claim upon which relief can be granted under some legal theory[,] . . . [we] must construe the complaint liberally[.]" Hinson v. City of Greensboro, 232 N.C. App. 204, 208, 753 S.E.2d 822, 826 (2014) (internal marks and citation omitted). We will not affirm the dismissal of a complaint under Rule 12(b)(6) "unless it appears beyond a doubt that the plaintiff could not prove any set of facts to support his claim which would entitle him to relief." *Enoch v. B. The Noerr-Pennington [6] Doctrine

This appeal first presents the question of the applicability of the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. Defendants contend that the trial court did not err in concluding that Plaintiffs' complaint fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted because the allegations in Plaintiffs' complaint are insufficient, as a matter of law, under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine. We disagree.

[*259] i. Introduction

We note at the outset that this case is not a dispute between competitors in the marketplace, nor does it arise in a context in which concerns about the consolidation of market power detrimentally impacting consumers animate a statutory or regulatory framework under which any claim at issue in this case arises. In the discussion that follows we summarize the origins of the Noerr-Pennington [399] doctrine and its application in North Carolina. We go on to hold that the Noerr-Pennington doctrine does not apply to this case. Accordingly, we reject the argument that the complaint fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine.

ii. The Origins of the Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

HN3[] The Noerr-Pennington doctrine originates from the U.S. Supreme Court's decisions [7] in Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 81 S. Ct. 523, 5 L. Ed.2d 464 (1961) ("Noerr"), and United Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 85 S. Ct. 1585, 14 L. Ed.2d 626 (1965) ("Pennington"), which are together its namesake. In Noerr, the Supreme Court held that the First Amendment protects businesses when they engage in certain petitioning activities, such as initiating litigation, providing them with immunity from antitrust liability when their conduct is aimed at influencing governmental action and their petitioning activity otherwise potentially violates §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, which proscribe conspiracies to restrain trade and attempts to impose monopolies, respectively. See 365 U.S. at 135-37, 81 S. Ct. at 528-29. Pennington then reiterated the core teaching of Noerr: that immunity from antitrust liability under the First Amendment exists for "concerted effort[s] to influence public officials regardless of intent or purpose." 381 U.S. at 670, 85 S. Ct. at 1593.

However, the Supreme Court in Noerr recognized HN4[] an exception to this immunity where the conduct at issue is a "mere sham," such as where an anticompetitive publicity campaign, while "ostensibly directed toward influencing governmental action, is . . . actually nothing more than an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor[.]" 365 U.S. at 144, 81 S. Ct. at 533. For example, for the "sham" exception to the doctrine to apply to a lawsuit it "must be objectively baseless and [8] must conceal an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor"; that is, "the plaintiff must have brought baseless claims in an attempt to thwart competition (i.e., in bad faith)." Octane Fitness, LLC v. ICON Health & Fitness, Inc., 572 U.S. 545, 556, [*260] 134 S. Ct. 1749, 1757, 188 L. Ed.2d 816 (2014) (internal marks and citation omitted).

iii. The Application of the Noerr-Pennington Doctrine in North Carolina

This Court has addressed the applicability of the Noerr-Pennington doctrine three times previously. The first was Reichhold Chemicals, Inc. v. Goel, 146 N.C. App. 137, 555 S.E.2d 281 (2001). Reichhold Chemicals involved the departure of an expert in the field of moisture cured polyurethane adhesives from the employ of the plaintiff, a business competing in the adhesives space, and the subsequent engagement of this expert, the defendant, by a direct competitor of the plaintiff in the adhesives business, who was not a party to the appeal to this Court. Id. at 142-43, 555 S.E.2d at 284-85.

We observed in Reichhold Chemicals that the Supreme Court's decision in Noerr was based "on the First Amendment right to petition and . . . federal antitrust law." Id. at 148, 555 S.E.2d at 288. Rejecting the plaintiff's challenge to the sufficiency of the pleading of the defendant's counterclaims based on the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, we reasoned that the defendant's counterclaims did not interfere with the plaintiff's First Amendment rights to seek [9] redress from the government for the harms it allegedly suffered as a result of its competitor's conduct. Id. The defendant, therefore, was not required to supplement the pleadings in his counterclaim by including allegations that, if proven, would establish that the sham exception under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine applied. See id. We instead concluded that the Noerr-Pennington doctrine itself did not apply, refusing to accept the argument that the failure to plead through the exception to Noerr-Pennington immunity was fatal to the defendant's counter-complaint. See id. (observing that "even if plaintiff's suit against [its competitor] was objectively reasonable, plaintiff could still be liable for tortious interference" to the defendant).

We addressed the Noerr-Pennington doctrine for a second time in Good Hope Hosp., Inc. v. N.C. Dep't of Health and Hum. Sevs., 174 N.C. App. 266, 620 S.E.2d 873 (2005). [400] Good Hope Hosp. involved a Certificate of Need ("CON") issued by the North Carolina Department of Health and Human Services ("the Department") to one of the plaintiffs, a hospital, to build a replacement facility roughly three miles from its existing facility. Id. at 268, 620 S.E.2d at 876-77. After the CON was issued by the Department, the plaintiff entered a joint venture with a hospital group, and through this [10] joint venture applied for a second CON, this time for a larger facility, in a different location than the replacement facility that [*261] had initially been approved. Id. at 268, 620 S.E.2d at 877. The application for this second CON was not approved, and the plaintiff-hospital and plaintiff-hospital group, along with the municipality where the second, larger proposed facility was to be located, sought a declaratory judgment that the proposed, larger facility was not subject to the CON approval requirements under the Department's purview. Id. at 269, 620 S.E.2d at 877. They also filed various claims against the Department and another hospital that had opposed approval of the second facility, including claims for tortious interference with contract, tortious interference with prospective economic advantage, a conspiracy in restraint of trade under N.C. Gen. Stat. § 75-1, unfair and deceptive trade practices under N.C. Gen. Stat. § 75-1.1, and common law unfair competition. Id.

In Good Hope Hosp., we held that the Noerr-Pennington doctrine applied. Id. at 275, 620 S.E.2d at 881. Observing that numerous federal courts, including the Fourth Circuit, had applied the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, we noted in particular that Noerr-Pennington immunity had been recognized by the federal courts to be applicable "in the context of certificate [11] of need cases." Id. at 276, 620 S.E.2d at 881. In holding the doctrine applicable, we affirmed the trial court's dismissal of the plaintiffs' claims on the basis of the Noerr-Pennington doctrine because the plaintiffs' complaint did not contain allegations that, if proven, would establish that their lawsuit was not a "mere sham," thus falling within the exception to Noerr-Pennington immunity. Id. at 276-78, 620 S.E.2d at 881-82. We went on to explain that in CON cases implicating Noerr-Pennington immunity, the allegations in the plaintiff's complaint must "show one of three things":

> (1) defendant's advocacy before the Department was objectively baseless and merely an attempt to stifle competition; (2) defendant engaged in a pattern of petitions before the Department without regard to the merit > of the petitions; or (3) defendant's misrepresentations before the Department deprived the entire CON proceeding of its legitimacy.

Id. at 276, 620 S.E.2d at 882 (internal marks omitted). Because a review of the complaint revealed no allegations that, if proven, would establish that the sham exception applied, we affirmed the trial court's dismissal of the complaint on the basis of Noerr-Pennington immunity. Id. at 277-78, 620 S.E.2d at 882.

Good Hope Hosp. was not this Court's last word on the applicability of the Noerr-Pennington [12] doctrine in North Carolina state courts. [*262] See North Carolina Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co. v. Cully's Motorcross Park, Inc., 220 N.C. App. 212, 725 S.E.2d 638 (2012), rev'd in part on other grounds, 366 N.C. 505, 742 S.E.2d 781 (2013). Cully's Motorcross involved the denial of an insurance claim on a policy covering a historic building that burned under circumstances considered suspicious by the plaintiff, the defendants' insurance company. Id. at 214-15, 725 S.E.2d at 640-41. Based on the circumstances surrounding the purchase of the building and the fire that destroyed it, the insurance company made a report to law enforcement, and one of the defendants was arrested and charged with obtaining property by false pretenses on the basis of this report. Id. at 215, 725 S.E.2d at 641. Thereafter, the insured who was arrested and charged criminally, one of the defendants, asserted a counterclaim against the insurance company, for malicious prosecution. Id. at 215, 725 S.E.2d at 641. The criminal charge against this defendant was later dismissed. Id.

After a bench trial but before the court entered a judgment, the plaintiff moved for a new trial or, in the alternative, a judgment that it enjoyed Noerr-Pennington immunity as a defense to the malicious prosecution claim. Id. at 215-16, 725 S.E.2d at 641. The [401] trial court denied the motion, finding the plaintiff liable for malicious prosecution, and awarding the defendants damages and costs, including treble damages [13] and attorney's fees. Id. at 215-16, 725 S.E.2d at 641.

We rejected the plaintiff's argument on appeal that the trial court erred in denying the motion for new trial or for judgment as a matter of law on the issue of Noerr-Pennington immunity. Id. at 232, 725 S.E.2d at 650. We clarified that our decision in Reichhold Chemicals was based on the objective reasonableness of the defendant's counterclaims, which did not need to be pleaded through the sham exception to Noerr-Pennington immunity where the doctrine did not apply. Id. at 231-32, 725 S.E.2d at 650. We reasoned that the trial court's ruling on the motion for a new trial or for judgment as a matter of law based on the Noerr-Pennington doctrine was not error because the trial court's basis for concluding that the doctrine did not apply — that the claim for malicious prosecution was asserted without probable cause — was sound. Id. at 232, 725 S.E.2d at 650. We therefore affirmed the trial court's conclusion that the doctrine did not apply to the facts before us, despite our holding in Good Hope Hosp., that the doctrine is applicable in North Carolina state courts. See id.

[*263] iv. Applicability of the Noerr-Pennington Doctrine to the Present Case

As noted previously, the present case is not a dispute between competitors in the marketplace, nor does it arise [14] in the CON context, where concerns about the consolidation of market power detrimentally impacting consumers inform decisions by the Department to approve or deny a CON. There is no cause of action pleaded by Plaintiff or Defendants for a conspiracy in restraint of trade under N.C. Gen. Stat. § 75-1, unfair and deceptive practices under N.C. Gen. Stat. § 75-1.1, common law unfair competition, or any other anti-competitive-related harm proscribed by law. Instead, Plaintiff's sole cause of action involves various alleged misrepresentations made by Defendants to the Town about the dangers posed by fly rock, air blasts, and ground vibrations created by the mining operation conducted by Defendants on the property adjacent to the proposed townhome development, including both the approximately 41 acres in Phase I, the sale of which was consummated, and the 5.5 acres in Phase II, which Plaintiff alleges Defendants' "malicious[], intentional[], and [] [un]justifi[ed] misrepresent[ations]" rendered significantly less valuable that it would have been, were it not for these alleged misrepresentations.

We hold that the Noerr-Pennington doctrine does not apply to HN5[] the facts as alleged in Plaintiff's complaint, which we consider true on review [15] of a trial court's decision to grant a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted under Rule 12(b)(6) of the North Carolina Rules of Civil Procedure. See, e.g., Hinson, 232 N.C. App. at 208, 753 S.E.2d at 826 ("We consider whether the allegations of the complaint, if treated as true, are sufficient to state a claim upon which relief can be granted under some legal theory.") (internal marks and citation omitted). The absence of allegations in Plaintiff's complaint pleading the cause of action for tortious interference with prospective economic advantage into the "sham" exception to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine is not a defect of the complaint, much less one warranting dismissal of the complaint for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted under Rule 12(b)(6). This is the case because the allegations in the complaint do not show that Defendants, as a matter of law, enjoy Noerr-Pennington immunity from Plaintiff's claim for tortious interference with prospective economic advantage. To be sure, the question would be closer if there were an allegation that actionable anti-competitive-related harms resulted from petitioning activity protected by the First Amendment. However, no such allegation has been made in this case, and there does not appear to be support for such [16] an allegation in the record before us. Accordingly, we conclude that, on the facts of the complaint, the Noerr-Pennington doctrine does not apply.

[*264] C. The Alleged Misrepresentations

The alleged misrepresentations at issue present a question of first impression under North Carolina law; namely, whether misrepresentations about the dangers of an activity North Carolina law regards as ultrahazardous [402] —indeed, the only activity regarded by North Carolina law as ultrahazardous—can be overstated and, in their overstatement, become actionable misrepresentations upon which a cause of action for tortious interference with prospective economic advantage can be predicated. We hold that they can.

HN6[] North Carolina law has recognized blasting activities as ultrahazardous since the Supreme Court's decision in Guilford Realty & Ins. Co. v. Blythe Bros. Co., 260 N.C. 69, 131 S.E.2d 900 (1963). The Supreme Court in Blythe identified blasting as "intrinsically dangerous," reasoning that the impossibility of "predict[ing] with certainty the extent or severity of [resulting] consequences" rendered blasting ultrahazardous. Id. at 74, 131 S.E.2d at 904. The Supreme Court held that a rule of strict liability applies to actionable harms resulting from blasting. Id. Numerous subsequent decisions by the Supreme Court have reiterated [17] the holding of Blythe. See, e.g., Trull v. Carolina-Virginia Well Co., 264 N.C. 687, 691, 142 S.E.2d 622, 624 (1965) ("[O]ne who is lawfully engaged in blasting operations is liable without regard to whether he has been negligent, if by reason of the blasting he causes direct injury to neighboring property or premises"); Falls Sales Co. v. Bd. of Transp., 292 N.C. 437, 442, 233 S.E.2d 569, 572 (1977) ("We have held that blasting is an . . . [ultrahazardous] activity and that persons using explosives are strictly liable for damages proximately caused by an explosion"); Woodson v. Rowland, 329 N.C. 330, 350, 407 S.E.2d 222, 234 (1991) ("Parties whose blasting proximately causes injury are held strictly liable for damages . . . largely because reasonable care cannot eliminate the risk of serious harm."). HN7[] Blasting is the only ultrahazardous activity under North Carolina law. See Jones v. Willamette Indus., 120 N.C. App. 591, 596, 463 S.E.2d 294, 298 (1995); O'Carroll v. Texasgulf, Inc., 132 N.C. App. 307, 311 n. 2, 511 S.E.2d 313, 317 n. 2 (1999); Kinsey v. Spann, 139 N.C. App. 370, 374, 533 S.E.2d 487, 491 (2000); Harris v. Tri-Arc Food Sys., 165 N.C. App. 495, 499, 598 S.E.2d 644, 647 (2004); Vecellio & Grogan, Inc. v. Piedmont Drilling & Blasting, Inc., 183 N.C. App. 66, 69, 644 S.E.2d 16, 19 (2007).

The alleged misrepresentations in this case involve the very dangers North Carolina law guards against in its recognition of blasting as ultrahazardous. However, Defendants, the parties engaged in the blasting activities at issue, cite the ultrahazardous nature of their activities as the [*265] reason Plaintiff's claim cannot succeed, unlike in the more typical case, where the plaintiff will be relieved of proving an element of his or her case — breach of a duty of reasonable care — against a defendant engaged in blasting activities. [18] Citing the numerous decisions by the Supreme Court reiterating the principle that no amount of reasonable care can "eliminate the risk of serious harm" accompanying an ultrahazardous activity such as blasting, see Woodson, 329 N.C. at 350, 407 S.E.2d at 234, Defendants contend that these risks simply cannot be overstated to an extent that they constitute actionable misrepresentations upon which a claim for tortious interference with prospective economic advantage can be based. We disagree.[1]

It does not follow that simply because no amount of reasonable care eliminates the risk of serious harm from blasting it is impossible, as a matter of law, to overstate the risks of harm from blasting. The former principle is a proposition stating the rationale for imposing strict liability for injuries resulting from blasting; it does not mean that the dangers inherent in the activity cannot be described — or mis-described. And it does not mean that an injury resulting from such mis-description, as is alleged in this case, is not actionable. Similarly, the principle that no amount of reasonable care eliminates the risk of serious harm from blasting does not imply that detrimental reliance on a misrepresentation of the risk of this ultrahazardous [19] activity could not be the basis for recovery on a fraud claim, or for challenging the validity of a contract, a party's consent to which was procured by fraud. We hold that HN8[] a claim that has as an element the truthfulness of a representation [403] about an activity North Carolina law regards as ultrahazardous can survive a motion to dismiss pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) of the North Carolina Rules of Civil Procedure even though the content of the representation relates to an activity regarded by the law as ultrahazardous. Success on Plaintiff's claim for tortious interference with prospective economic advantage thus is not precluded by the content of Defendants' representations to the Town, notwithstanding the rule of strict liability applicable to cases in which injury is alleged to result from an ultrahazardous activity.

D. Tortious Interference with Prospective Economic Advantage

A number of arguments raised by the parties relate to whether the cause of action for tortious interference with prospective economic advantage was properly pleaded by Plaintiff. In a related vein, [*266] Defendants argue that facts alleged in the complaint, if established, foreclose the possibility of Plaintiff's success at trial. We disagree, and hold that the claim for tortious [20] interference with prospective economic advantage was properly pleaded, and that the facts alleged in Plaintiff's complaint do not foreclose the possibility of Plaintiff's success at trial.

HN9[] Generally speaking, "[a]n action for tortious interference with prospective economic advantage is based on conduct by the defendants which prevents the plaintiff[] from entering into a contract with a third party." Walker v. Sloan, 137 N.C. App. 387, 392-93, 529 S.E.2d 236, 241 (2000). Tortious interference with prospective economic advantage > arises when a party interferes with a business relationship by maliciously inducing a person not to enter into a contract with a third person, which he would have entered into but for the interference if damage proximately ensues, when this interference is done not in the legitimate exercise of the interfering person's rights.

Beverage Sys. of the Carolinas v. Assoc. Beverage Repair et al., 368 N.C. 693, 701, 784 S.E.2d 457, 463 (2016) (internal marks and citation omitted). Stating a claim for tortious interference with prospective economic advantage requires that the plaintiff "allege facts [] show[ing] that the defendants acted without justification in inducing a third party to refrain from entering into a contract with them[,] which contract would have ensued but for the interference." Walker, 137 N.C. App. at 393, 529 S.E.2d at 242.

In its complaint, Plaintiff alleges as follows:

> [21] 17. In the summer of 2013, the Plaintiff began negotiations with Braddock Park Homes, Inc., to sell that entity approximately 45 acres of real property located on Orange Grove and Enoe Mountain Road, Hillsborough, North Carolina.
> . . .
> 29. At the time Defendants made [certain] malicious misrepresentations to the Town of Hillsborough, it was aware that the Plaintiff was negotiating with Braddock Park Homes for the townhome development project.
> 30. On February 28, 2014, the Plaintiff entered into a Purchase and Sale Agreement with Braddock Park Homes, Inc., whereby the Plaintiff agreed to sell Braddock Park Homes, Inc. approximately 41 acres of real property [*267] located in Orange Groves and Enoe Mountain Road, Hillsborough, North Carolina at $85,000 per acre.

[1] We also note that the Town apparently did not credit Defendants' alleged misrepresentations, approving the Braddock Park Homes development project despite their vocal opposition to approval of the project.

31. The February 28, 2014 Purchase and Sale Agreement contained a provision that gave Braddock Home a specified period of time for a "free look" at Phase II (Section B) of the project, which was the 5.5 acres located adjacent to Defendants' Hillsborough Mine, due to the request of the Defendants to deny the approval of that Phase of the project due to the potential threat of damage to health, safety and welfare of future residents of Enoe [22] Mountain Village due to fly rock, nitrogen and structural damage from the operations of the Defendant's Hillsborough Mine.

32. The February 29, 2014 [sic] Purchase and Sale Agreement further gave Braddock Park Homes, Inc. the right, subject to Plaintiff's acceptance, to terminate Phase II of the Town Home Project from the contract if this threat of liability was not removed to its satisfaction.

[404] 33. On October 9, 2014, Braddock Park Homes, Inc. exercised its right to modify the Purchase and Sale Agreement and terminate Phase II (Parcel B-3) from the Agreement, citing dangers of foundation damage to homes, fly rock from blasting and nitrogen dangers to future inhabitants based on the Defendants misrepresentation to the Town of Hillsborough.

34. The Defendants' malicious misrepresentations to the Town of Hillsborough were without justification in that at the time they were made, the Defendants were required by their September 11, 2013 Permit to take measures to prevent physical hazard to any neighboring dwelling house if their mining excavation came within 300 feet thereof, regardless of the cost of doing so.

35. The Defendants intentionally induced Braddock Park, Inc. not to enter into a [23] contract for the purchase of Phase II of the Town Home Project by making these intentional misrepresentations to the Town of Hillsborough.

36. The Defendants' malicious misrepresentations to the Town of Hillsborough were without justification in that at the time they were made the Defendants had no evidence that the blasting operations from their Hillsborough Mine [*268] had endangered persons or neighboring property from fly rock or excessive air blasts or ground violations.

37. The Defendants' interference with the Plaintiff's pending contract with Braddock Park Homes, Inc. was without justification in that the Defendants' motives were not reasonably related to the protection of the legitimate business interest of the Defendants.

38. In making these intentional misrepresentations, the Defendants acted without justification, not in the legitimate exercise of Defendants' own rights, but with design to injure Plaintiff or obtain some advantage at their expense.

39. By virtue of their malicious misrepresentations made to the Town of Hillsborough, the Defendants induced Braddock Park Homes, Inc. not to perform Phase II of the Purchase and Sale Agreement so that the Defendants could purchase the [24] 5.5 acre tract adjacent to their property at a substantially discounted price.

40. Subsequent to the town's approval of the Town Home Project, the Defendant did in fact offer to purchase the 5.5 acre tract located adjacent to its Hillsborough Mine far below the fair market value for the Property.

41. By virtue of their intentional and malicious misrepresentations made to the Town of Hillsborough, the Defendants tortuously interfered with the Plaintiff's economic advantage by inducing Braddock Park Homes, Inc. not to perform Phase 2 of the Town Home Project.

42. But for the intentional misrepresentations of the Defendants, Braddock Park Homes, Inc. would not have modified the February 29, 2014 Purchase and Sale Agreement to eliminate Phase II of the Town Home Project.

43. By virtue of the Defendants' tortious interference with the Plaintiff's prospective economic advantage, the Plaintiff has suffered damages in the amount of $467,755.

Our review of the allegations in Plaintiff's complaint confirms that Plaintiff has alleged (1) the existence of a valid business relationship; (2) interference with that business relationship by an outsider; (3) the absence of a legitimate justification for [25] the alleged interference by the outsider; (4) malice by the outsider in engaging in the alleged [*269] interference; (5) causation from the alleged interference resulting in damages to Plaintiff; and (6) damages suffered by Plaintiff to a sum certain, $467,755. These allegations are adequate to make out a cause of action for tortious interference with prospective economic advantage.

Defendants argue that Plaintiff has not adequately pleaded a claim for tortious interference with prospective economic advantage because the alleged interference did not induce Braddock Park Homes to refrain from entering into a new contract with Plaintiff but instead only induced Braddock Park Homes to exercise its modification rights to back out of Phase II of its multi-phase development deal with Plaintiff. Defendants suggest [405] that it would be an expansion of the tort of tortious interference with prospective economic advantage under North Carolina law "to include . . . modifications in addition to prevented contracts and contract breaches." We disagree.

HN10[] The tort of tortious interference with prospective economic advantage under North Carolina law not only embraces instances in which "the defendant . . . induce[s] [26] a third party to refrain from entering into a contract with the plaintiff," see MCL Automotive v. Town of Southern Pines, 207 N.C. App. 555, 571, 702 S.E.2d 68, 79 (2010), it also extends to inducement by a third party, the outsider, of a party to a contract "to terminate or fail to renew [that] contract," see Robinson, Bradshaw & Hinson v. Smith, 129 N.C. App. 305, 317, 498 S.E.2d 841, 850 (1998). The reason the difference between the interference preventing a new contract from being made, resulting in the cancellation or termination of an existing agreement, or prompting a party to an existing agreement to allow the agreement to expire rather than renew it for an additional term, is not a meaningful one as this element relates to a party's liability, is that in all three variations, the requirement is met that the prospective economic advantage with which the outsider interferes is substantial enough to permit recovery, and not a "mere expectancy," which has been held to be insufficient. See Beverage Sys. of the Carolinas, 368 N.C. at 701, 784 S.E.2d at 463.

Similarly, HN11[] the difference between a party to an agreement exercising modification rights in a multi-phase development deal to terminate one part of a multi-part agreement, as is alleged to have occurred in this case, and the party canceling the entire agreement, is not relevant to whether the third party whose interference resulted in the choice to terminate the contract [27] is liable for tortious interference with the prospective economic advantage derived from one or all phases of the multi-part agreement. As we observed in Reichhold Chemicals, "[i]nducing a person not to enter into a contract is as much a tort as interference with an [*270] established contract." 146 N.C. App. at 151, 555 S.E.2d at 290. So too is inducing a person or entity to terminate a contract, see Smith, 129 N.C. App. at 317, 498 S.E.2d at 850, such as in this case, by allegedly inducing a third party not to consummate a later phase of a multi-phase development deal, regardless of whether the contractual vehicle defeating the prospective economic advantage is denominated a termination, cancellation, prevention, rescission, or other language of similar import and effect. Accordingly, we hold that HN12[] the tort of tortious interference with prospective economic advantage under North Carolina law includes contractual modifications equivalent in effect to terminations of parts of multi-part agreements.

III. Conclusion

We reverse and remand the trial court's dismissal of Plaintiff's complaint for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted for three reasons. First, the allegations in the complaint do not establish the Noerr-Pennington doctrine applies to this case to [28] bar Plaintiff's claims. Second, the alleged misrepresentations are actionable under North Carolina law even though their content relates to activity regarded by the law as ultrahazardous. Third, the cause of action for tortious interference with prospective economic advantage alleged in Plaintiff's complaint is properly pleaded, and this tort includes terminations of parts of multi-part agreements.

REVERSED AND REMANDED.

ORDER GRANTING MOTION TO DISMISS; AFFORDING LEAVE TO AMEND

Re: Dkt. No. 116

Before the Court is plaintiff/counterdefendant Becton, Dickinson and Company's ("BD") motion, filed April 5, 2019, to dismiss the First Cause of Action asserted against it in defendant/counterclaimant Cytek Biosciences, Inc.'s ("Cytek") First Amended Counterclaims ("FACC"). Cytek has filed opposition, to which BD has replied.

Having read and considered the papers filed in support of and in opposition to the motion, the Court [*2] rules as follows.[1]

BACKGROUND

Cytek is a company that "provide[s] . . . flow cytometry products and services in the United States." (See FACC ¶ 2.)[2] BD is a company that, Cytek alleges, "dominates more than half the United States market for flow cytometers" (see id. ¶ 2) and "markets a number of different reagents" (see id. ¶ 21).[3] Cytek further alleges that BD "has 100% of the global market for . . . UV reagents" (see id. ¶ 47), which are "designed to interact specifically with UV light" in flow cytometers (see id. ¶ 22).

In June 2017, Cytek "release[d] . . . the Cytek AuroraTM ('Aurora') cytometer" (see id. ¶ 14), a cytometer that, according to Cytek, "depart[s] from the traditional cytometer designs that BD and others have employed for decades" (see id.) and "provides superior or equal performance to the BD FACSymphony for half the cost" (see id. ¶ 48).[4]

Cytek alleges that, "[j]ust months after the Aurora's release," one of its customers "relayed" that "a BD executive threatened that BD would no longer supply the customer with the critical reagents for its BD cytometers if the [customer] purchased an Aurora from Cytek." (See id. ¶ 18.) Cytek further alleges that [*3] "[a] major U.S. cancer treatment center that was in discussions for the purchase of [an] Aurora reported to Cytek sales personnel that BD was holding hostage a reagent that is available only from BD," and that "[a]nother cancer research center in the U.S. has also reported to Cytek sales personnel that, despite interest, it could not engage in the evaluation or purchase of a Cytek Aurora flow cytometer because it feared losing access to necessary BD reagents." (See id. ¶ 19)

Moreover, Cytek alleges, BD "requir[ed] its employees — including certain Individual Defendants[5] — to enter into employee agreements" (see id. ¶ 50), which contained "an assignment, or 'holdover,' provision that requires former employees to assign all 'right, title, and interest in any Innovation relating to Confidential Information arising because of [their] employment with [BD], conceived or made by [them] . . . at any time for a period of one (1) year after employment" (see id. ¶ 51 (alterations in original) (emphasis omitted)).

Based on the above, Cytek asserts against BD (1) a claim for injunctive relief under California Business and Professions Code § 17200, California's Unfair Competition Law ("UCL") (First Cause of Action); and (2) a claim for declaratory [*4] relief under 28 U.S.C. § 2201 (Second Cause of Action).

LEGAL STANDARD

Dismissal under Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure "can be based on the lack of a cognizable legal theory or the absence of sufficient facts alleged under a cognizable legal theory." See Balistreri v. Pacifica

---

[1] By order filed June 11, 2019, the Court took the motion under submission.

[2] "Flow cytometry is a powerful, laser-based technology used for identifying and quantifying cellular characteristics on a cell-by-cell basis that offers a variety of biomedical and therapeutic applications." (See id. ¶ 1.)

[3] "Reagents are essential consumable substances used in flow cytometers to identify and analyze certain cellular characteristics," which "are marketed and sold separate and apart from the cytometry machines themselves." (See id. ¶ 20.) In particular, reagents are specifically "designed to be excited by lasers of different wavelengths" and, "[w]hen excited by the intended laser, the reagents fluoresce . . . and provide[] information regarding the cell at issue." (See id.)

[4] The FACSymphony is BD's "highest-end UV cytometer." (See id. ¶ 23.)

Police Dep't, 901 F.2d 696, 699 (9th Cir. 1990). Rule 8(a)(2), however, "requires only 'a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief.'" See Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007) (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2)). Consequently, "a complaint attacked by a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss does not need detailed factual allegations." See id. Nonetheless, "a plaintiff's obligation to provide the grounds of his entitlement to relief requires more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do." See id. (internal quotation, citation, and alteration omitted).

In analyzing a motion to dismiss, a district court must accept as true all material allegations in the complaint, and construe them in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. See NL Indus., Inc. v. Kaplan, 792 F.2d 896, 898 (9th Cir. 1986). "To survive a motion to dismiss, a complaint must contain sufficient factual material, accepted as true, to 'state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.'" Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570). "Factual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level[.]" Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555. Courts [*5] "are not bound to accept as true a legal conclusion couched as a factual allegation." See Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678 (internal quotation and citation omitted).

DISCUSSION

By order filed February 14, 2019, the Court granted BD's motion to dismiss the First Cause of Action as alleged in Cytek's initial Counterclaims ("ICC"). As set forth in said order, the Court found the claim was subject to dismissal because Cytek had not pled sufficient facts to state a claim under the UCL's "unfair" or "unlawful" prongs, and because Cytek had not adequately alleged entitlement to injunctive relief.

By the instant motion, BD seeks an order dismissing the First Cause of Action as alleged in the FACC, by which claim Cytek again asserts it is entitled to injunctive relief based on BD's alleged violations under the "unfair" and "unlawful" prongs of the UCL.

A. The "Unfair" Prong

A violation under the "unfair" prong of the UCL occurs when a competitor engages in "conduct that threatens an incipient violation of antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition." See Cel-Tech Comm'ns, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Telephone Co., 20 Cal. 4th 163, 187, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 (1999).

In asserting BD's [*6] conduct falls under the "unfair" prong, Cytek relies on a tying arrangement theory. In particular, Cytek alleges BD has threatened to "t[ie] . . . the sale of its UV reagents . . . to its customers' refusal to purchase competing Cytek machines" (see FACC ¶ 48), and thereby engaged in conduct that "threatens an incipient violation of" section 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 14, as well as the Cartwright Act, specifically, California Business and Professions Code §§ 16720 and 16727 (see id. ¶ 49).

BD argues that, to the extent the First Cause of Action is predicated on Cytek's tying arrangement theory, such claim is again subject to dismissal because Cytek has not pled sufficient facts in support of its tying arrangement theory and has not adequately alleged entitlement to injunctive relief based on its tying arrangement theory. As discussed below, the Court agrees, and finds dismissal is warranted on both grounds.

1. Failure to Plead Sufficient Facts

a. Section 3 of the Clayton Act

A tying arrangement is "defined as an agreement by a party to sell one product but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different (or tied) product, or at least agrees that he will not purchase that product from any other supplier." See N. Pac. Ry. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 5-6, 78 S. Ct. 514, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545 (1958). "For a tying claim to suffer per se [*7] condemnation, a plaintiff must prove: (1) that the defendant tied together the sale of two distinct products or services; (2) that the defendant possesses enough economic power in the tying product market to coerce its customers into purchasing the tied product; and (3) that the tying arrangement affects a not insubstantial volume of commerce in the tied product market." See. Rick-Mik Enters., Inc. v. Equilon Enters. LLC, 532 F.3d 963, 971 (9th Cir. 2008) (internal quotation and citation omitted).

In that regard, the Court previously found Cytek, in its ICC, failed to allege facts sufficient to support a finding that BD had engaged in conduct that "threatened an incipient violation" of section 3 of the Clayton Act. In particular, the Court found Cytek failed to plead BD's market power in the tying product market, and failed to plead the threatened tie would affect a substantial volume of commerce in the tied product market. As to market power, the Court found, inter alia, the allegations in the ICC did not show BD possessed an adequate share of the tying product market. As to the volume of commerce affected by the threatened tie, the Court found Cytek had not pled any facts to support a finding that the customer to whom the threatened tie had been directed had any interest [*8] in purchasing a Cytek cytometer, or that such purchase would have entailed a substantial sum.

In an effort to cure the defect in the ICC as to BD's market power, Cytek now identifies a different market as the tying product market. Specifically, Cytek has changed the tying product market from the "cytometry reagent market in the United States" to the "global market for UV reagents" (compare ICC ¶ 19 with FACC ¶ 47; see also Opp. at 10:19-20 (identifying "relevant" tying product market as "global market for UV reagents")), as to which, Cytek alleges, BD "owns 100% market share" (see FACC ¶ 22).[6] The Court finds the above-referenced allegations adequate to plead BD's market power in the tying product market. See *Teradata Corp. v. SAP SE, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 209872, 2018 WL 6528009, at 11, 15 (N.D. Cal. Dec. 12, 2018) (finding, where plaintiff alleged defendant held "a dominant position in the market of about 60% to 90%," such allegation "suffice[d] to plead [defendant's] market power" for "per se tying claim"); see also Tucker v. Apple Comput., Inc., 493 F. Supp. 2d 1090, 1097-98 (N.D. Cal. 2006) (finding, where plaintiff alleged defendant owned 75% of tying product market, plaintiff "alleged sufficient economic power" to state claim for "per se tying violation").[7]

Nevertheless, although the above-referenced change in the tying product market served to [*9] cure one inadequately pleaded element, specifically, market power, such change has created a new problem. As discussed below, Cytek has not pled sufficient facts to support a finding that BD directed to any of the customers identified in its FACC a threat that pertained to UV reagents, and thus has failed to establish a connection between the alleged threats on which Cytek's tying arrangement theory is based and the tying product market in which BD possesses market power.

At the outset, the Court finds Cytek, as to two of the three customers identified in the FACC, has not adequately alleged BD made any statement threatening a tie. Cytek alleges the second customer identified in the FACC (hereinafter, "Customer 2") "reported to Cytek sales personnel that BD was holding hostage a reagent that is available only from BD." (See FACC ¶ 19.) Such allegation, however, is ambiguous as to the nature of BD's alleged

[6] To the extent BD, citing Apple, Inc. v. Psystar Corp., 586 F. Supp. 2d 1190 (N.D. Cal. 2008), and Oracle Am., Inc. v. Cedarcrestone, Inc., 938 F. Supp. 2d 895 (N.D. Cal. 2013), contends the UV reagent market is "invalid as a matter of law" because such market "is the functional equivalent of a contractually-created aftermarket" (see Mot. at 17:23-24), the Court disagrees. Specifically, the Court finds the cases on which BD relies in support of such argument are distinguishable because, inter alia, each concerned aftermarket restrictions that were "fully disclosed and expressly agreed upon." See Psystar, 586 F. Supp. 2d at 1203.

[7] Although BD also argues the UV reagent market is not legally cognizable because "the FACC does not offer any factual allegations to show a lack of cross-elasticity between the products included in and excluded from [said] proposed market" (see Reply at 9:20-21), the argument was raised for the first time in the Reply and, consequently, the Court does not consider it further herein. As set forth below, however, Cytek will be given leave to amend, and it may wish to address this issue in its amended allegations.

wrongful conduct, as Cytek does not specify what "ransom" BD demanded in exchange for such reagent, or otherwise plead facts clarifying the condition(s) to which Customer 2 was required to agree.

As to the third customer identified in the FACC (hereinafter, "Customer 3"), Cytek alleges [*10] said customer "reported to Cytek sales personnel that, despite its interest, it could not engage in the evaluation or purchase of a Cytek Aurora flow cytometer because it feared losing access to necessary BD reagents." (See FACC ¶ 19.) Such allegation, however, is unaccompanied by any facts setting forth the source of Customer 3's alleged fear, or otherwise connecting such concern with any wrongful conduct on BD's part.

Moreover, although, as to the first customer identified in the FACC (hereinafter, "Customer 1"), Cytek has adequately alleged a threatened tie, namely, a threat to "no longer supply . . . critical reagents for [Customer 1's] BD cytometers" if the customer "purchased an Aurora from Cytek" (see id. ¶ 18), such allegation is ambiguous as to the particular reagent BD threatened to withhold from said customer, and there is nothing in said customer's report as cited in the FACC, nor are there facts alleged elsewhere in the FACC, to support Cytek's allegation that, "[o]n information and belief, the reagents that BD threatened to withhold included reagents designed to interact specifically with UV light" (see id. ¶ 22).

Given such deficiency, Cytek likewise has failed to adequately [*11] allege it has lost "substantial sales" (see Opp. at 12:20) due to any threat to withhold the sale of UV reagents. Moreover, although Cytek has adequately alleged that Customers 2 and 3 had an interest in purchasing a cytometer from Cytek (see FACC ¶ 19 (alleging Customer 2 was "in discussions for the purchase of a Cytek Aurora" and Customer 3 expressed "interest" in purchasing an Aurora)), and that such customers "represent a potential loss of more than $300,000 in Aurora sales" (see id.), Cytek has not, as discussed above, pled sufficient facts to establish either Customer 2 or Customer 3 received from BD any threat to tie, and Cytek, once again, has not pled any facts to support an inference that Customer 1 had an interest in purchasing a cytometer from Cytek or that such purchase would have entailed a not insubstantial sum.

b. The Cartwright Act

"A tying arrangement may be condemned under either or both section 16720 and section 16727" of the California Business and Professions Code. Morrison v. Viacom Inc., 66 Cal. App. 4th 534, 541, 78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 133 (1998). To establish a "per se tying arrangement violative of section 16720," the following elements must be met:

> (1) a tying agreement, arrangement or condition whereby the sale of the tying product was linked to the sale of the tied product or [*12] service; (2) the party had sufficient economic power in the tying market to coerce the purchase of the tied product; (3) a substantial amount of sale was affected in the tied product; and (4) the complaining party sustained pecuniary loss as a consequence of the unlawful act.

See id. at 541-42. "Under section 16727, a per se violation is established if either element (2) or (3) is established along with elements (1) and (4)." See id. at 542 (emphasis in original).[8]

Here, as discussed above, although Cytek has adequately alleged BD possesses "sufficient economic power" in the UV reagent market, the FACC lacks sufficient facts to support an inference that BD has threatened to condition the sale of its UV reagents on its customers' refusal to purchase a cytometer from Cytek, or that Cytek has lost a substantial amount of sales due to any threatened ties on BD's part.

2. Entitlement to Injunctive Relief

[8] Contrary to BD's argument, the Supreme Court, in Illinois Tool Works Inc. v. Independent Ink, Inc., 547 U.S. 28, 31, 126 S. Ct. 1281, 164 L. Ed. 2d 26 (2006), did not overrule the cases on which Morrison relied in setting forth the elements of a per se tying claim under section 16727, and BD has not cited, nor has the Court located, any authority citing Illinois Tool Works for such proposition.

Under California law, courts may award injunctive relief "as may be necessary to prevent the use or employment . . . of any practice which constitutes unfair competition." See Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17203. Injunctive relief under § 17203, however, "cannot be used . . . to enjoin an event which has already transpired; a showing of [*13] threatened or future harm or continuing violation is required." See People v. Toomey, 157 Cal. App. 3d 1, 20, 203 Cal. Rptr. 642 (1984); see also Madrid v. Perot Sys. Corp., 130 Cal. App. 4th 440, 464, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 210 (2005) (acknowledging "the general rule is that an injunction may not issue unless the alleged misconduct is ongoing or likely to recur").

BD contends Cytek has not adequately alleged it is entitled to injunctive relief based on its tying arrangement theory because "the FACC . . . does not allege any facts to support [a finding that] there is tying conduct that is likely to recur, or that there is any continuing harm flowing from BD's past alleged misconduct." (See Reply at 3:23-25.) As discussed below, the Court agrees.

First, contrary to Cytek's argument, the FACC lacks sufficient facts to support a finding that "BD's wrongful conduct is continuing and is likely to recur" (see Opp. at 18:20-21). In particular, even assuming, arguendo, Customers 2 and 3 had been subjected to threats "similar" to that which was made to Customer 1 in 2017 (see FACC ¶¶ 18-19), Cytek's allegations are silent as to the timing of BD's threats to Customers 2 and 3, and thus provide no basis for an inference that any threats were made after the one remark in 2017, let alone that BD, at present, continues to subject customers to such threats and [*14] is likely to is likely to make additional threats in the future.

Moreover, and again contrary to Cytek's argument, Cytek has not pled sufficient facts to support a finding that it continues to suffer harm from "the ongoing effects and consequences of BD's past misconduct" (see Opp. at 20:1). Specifically, while Cytek alleges "BD has not withdrawn the threats . . . that it made" (see FACC ¶ 55), Cytek has not pled any facts demonstrating that, to date, either of the customers who previously exhibited an interest in purchasing an Aurora remain interested in making such a purchase and, consequently, has not adequately alleged that BD's purported threats in the past have continued to deprive Cytek of potential sales and inflict harm on Cytek.

3. Conclusion as to "Unfair" Prong

For the reasons discussed above, to the extent the First Cause of Action is premised on Cytek's tying arrangement theory, such claim is subject to dismissal.

B. The "Unlawful" Prong

Under the "unlawful" prong, the UCL "borrows violations of other laws and treats them as unlawful practices that the unfair competition law makes independently actionable." See Cel-Tech, 20 Cal. 4th at 180 (internal quotation and citation omitted).

In the First Cause of Action, [*15] Cytek asserts BD has engaged in conduct that falls under the UCL's "unlawful" prong by "requiring its employees — including certain Individual Defendants — to enter into employee agreements that are illegal under California Business & Professions Code § 16600" (see FACC ¶ 51) (hereinafter, "employee agreement theory").

BD argues that, to the extent the First Cause of Action is predicated on Cytek's employee agreement theory, such claim is subject to dismissal because Cytek has not adequately alleged entitlement to injunctive relief based thereon. The Court agrees.

As BD points out, although Cytek alleges BD "has not conceded that its holdover clause is void under California law and has preserved the right to enforce [such] provision as to the Individual Defendants and all other employees in California in the future" (see FACC ¶ 53), such allegation does not support a finding that Cytek is entitled to injunctive relief, as Cytek has not pled sufficient facts to demonstrate how Cytek itself faces "future harm" due to the prospect of BD's asserting against other individuals claims based on the holdover provisions. See Toomey, 157

Cal. App. 3d at 20; cf. AMN Healthcare, Inc. v. Aya Healthcare Services, Inc., 28 Cal. App. 5th 923, 239 Cal. Rptr. 3d 577, 599-600 (2018) (holding trial court did not abuse discretion in "enjoining [plaintiff] from attempting to enforce [non-compete [*16] clause] against" all of plaintiff's former employees, including non-parties, where evidence demonstrated plaintiff's continued efforts to preclude non-party employees from seeking employment with defendant).

Accordingly, to the extent the First Cause of Action is predicated on Cytek's employee agreement theory, such claim is subject to dismissal.

C. Leave to Amend

Cytek argues that, in the event "any portion" of its First Cause of Action is dismissed (see Opp. at 21:15), it should be given leave to amend because it "has now become aware of new acts of unfair competition that BD committed after Cytek filed its amended counterclaims" (see id. at 21:20-21 (emphasis omitted)). While Cytek has not identified with specificity the additional facts it would plead to show BD "recent[ly]" engaged in "additional . . . acts of misconduct" (see id. at 21:21), or offered any explanation as to how such additional facts will "provide further support of harm to Cytek and recurrence of BD's misconduct" (see id. 21:22), the Court nonetheless will grant Cytek an opportunity to amend its First Cause of Action to cure the deficiencies identified above.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above, BD's motion [*17] is hereby GRANTED and Cytek's First Cause of Action is hereby DISMISSED with leave to amend. Cytek's Second Amended Counterclaims, if any, shall be filed no later than August 7, 2019.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Opinion

ORDER DENYING DEFENDANTS' MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

This is one of several antitrust cases filed throughout the country based on an alleged price-fixing conspiracy among the major suppliers of titanium dioxide. Plaintiff Home Depot [*2] U.S.A., Inc. ("Home Depot") claims that as a result of the alleged conspiracy, it paid supra-competitive prices when it purchased billions of dollars' worth of Architectural Coatings containing titanium dioxide. See First Am'd Compl., ECF 70. Home Depot sues Defendants

E.I. du Pont de Nemours and Co. ("DuPont"), Millennium Inorganic Chemicals ("Millennium"),[1] Huntsman International, LLC ("Huntsman"), and Kronos Worldwide, Inc. ("Kronos") under federal and state antitrust laws.

All of the titanium dioxide cases share substantially the same record, but summary judgment motions have resulted in opposite rulings. In Haley Paint, the United States District Court for the District of Maryland denied the defendants' motions for summary judgment under Fourth Circuit law. See Haley Paint, 959 F.Supp.2d 799 (D. Md. 2013).[2] In Valspar, the United States District Court for the District of Delaware granted the defendant's motion for summary judgment, and was affirmed in a published opinion of the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit. See Valspar Corp. v. E.I. Du Pont de Nemours and Co., 873 F.3d 185 (3d Cir. 2017). Shortly after the affirmance issued, Defendants in the present case obtained leave of court to file an early motion for summary judgment based on Valspar. In essence, Defendants ask this Court [*3] to break the tie created by the conflicting summary judgment decisions.

Defendants urge the Court to follow Valspar, arguing that the legal standards applied by the Third Circuit in that case are identical to those in the Ninth Circuit, and thus the same result is warranted. In opposition, Home Depot disputes Defendants' characterization of the legal standards applied in Valspar, asserting that they are very different from those in the Ninth Circuit. Home Depot asks this Court to follow the Haley Paint court's lead in denying Defendants' summary judgment motion.

This Court concludes that an antitrust plaintiff's burden to oppose summary judgment under Third Circuit law as articulated in Valspar is far more onerous than under Ninth Circuit law. Applying Ninth Circuit precedent interpreting the Supreme Court's seminal decision in Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986), this Court finds that Home Depot has demonstrated the existence of triable issues of material fact. Defendants therefore are not entitled to summary judgment, and their motion is DENIED.

I. BACKGROUND

The chronology of events underpinning Valspar, Haley Paint, and the present action is undisputed. The market for titanium dioxide [*4] is an oligopoly, meaning that only a few producers account for the bulk of the output. In the 1990s, the titanium dioxide industry suffered declines in consumption and price, and profitability hit an all-time low in 2001. Early in 2002, a trade group founded by the European producers of titanium dioxide — the Titanium Dioxide Manufacturers Association ("TDMA") — opened to non-European companies for the first time. TDMA members unanimously agreed to accept DuPont, the largest American supplier of titanium dioxide, on January 24, 2002. Days later, on January 28, 2002, DuPont announced a price increase. Within two weeks, DuPont's announced price increase was matched by TDMA members Millennium, Kronos, and Huntsman.

DuPont was formally approved as a TDMA member in September 2002. At about the same time, the TDMA implemented its new Global Statistics Program, under which each member reported its monthly sales production and inventory figures, which were consolidated into reports for distribution to TDMA members. The Global Statistics Program allowed TDMA members to estimate market shares, inventories, and production for themselves and each other. Over the twelve-year period commencing with [*5] DuPont's acceptance for membership in the TDMA and implementation of the Global Statistics Program, DuPont, Millennium, Kronos, and Huntsman announced thirty-one parallel price increases. This was a marked change from the 1994-2001 period, in which Defendants announced only a few parallel price increase.

In 2010, direct purchasers of titanium dioxide filed Haley Paint in the District of Maryland, alleging a Sherman Act § 1 claim based on a price-fixing conspiracy among titanium dioxide suppliers. See Haley Paint, 959 F. Supp. 2d 799.

[1] During the alleged conspiracy period, Millennium was acquired by Cristal USA Inc. The briefing refers to the company interchangeably as Millennium, Millennium/Cristal, and Cristal. For ease reference, this order refers to the company as Millennium.

[2] The parties refer to the case interchangeably as Haley Paint and In re Titanium Dioxide.

The district court denied the defendants' motion for summary judgment, after which the case settled. Valspar, a large-scale purchaser of titanium dioxide, opted out of the Maryland action and filed its own suit. On substantially the same record as that before the Maryland Court, the United States District Court for the District of Delaware granted a defense motion for summary judgment, which was affirmed by the Third Circuit. See Valspar, 873 F.3d at 190.

Indirect purchasers of titanium dioxide filed suit in the Northern District of California based on the same alleged price-fixing scheme. See Harrison v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours, Case No. 13-cv-01180-BLF. The case was assigned to the undersigned and ultimately was [*6] resolved pursuant to a class action settlement. The settlement class did not include retailers such as Home Depot.

Home Depot filed the present indirect purchaser action in August 2016, asserting antitrust claims against DuPont, Millennium, Huntsman, and Kronos under the same alleged price-fixing conspiracy. Compl., ECF 1. Huntsman and Kronos have been dismissed pursuant to stipulation of the parties. See Order of Dismissal of Huntsman, ECF 68; Order Approving Joint Motion for Order of Dismissal of Kronos, ECF 113. With respect to the remaining defendants, DuPont and Millennium, the operative first amended complaint ("FAC") alleges two claims, the first under California's Cartwright Act, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16700 et seq., and the second under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. FAC, ECF 70. Defendants DuPont and Millennium now seek summary judgment.

II. DISCUSSION

Defendants' motion for summary judgment presents two issues: whether Third Circuit law as articulated in Valspar is identical to Ninth Circuit law, and whether Defendants are entitled to summary judgment under Ninth Circuit law. The Court addresses those issues in turn.

A. Valspar and Ninth Circuit Law

In the three decades since the Supreme Court decided Matsushita, each of the [*7] circuits has developed a set of legal standards to address motions for summary judgment brought in antitrust cases. In Matsushita, the Supreme Court held that although the familiar burden-shifting framework of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56 applies, and all inferences must be viewed in the light most favorable to the non-moving party, "antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences from ambiguous evidence in a § 1 case." Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 587-88. Thus, "conduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy." Id. at 588. "To survive a motion for summary judgment or for a directed verdict, a plaintiff seeking damages for a violation of § 1 must present evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the alleged conspirators acted independently." Id. (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). The Supreme Court made clear that "courts should not permit factfinders to infer conspiracies when such inferences are implausible, because the effect of such practices is often to deter procompetitive conduct." Id. at 593.

1. Valspar

The Valspar court recited the above holdings of Matsushita, and then stated, "[w]ith those principles informing our analysis, this [*8] Court has developed specialized evidentiary standards at summary judgment in antitrust cases in general and in oligopoly cases in particular." Valspar, 873 F.3d at 193 (emphasis added). Because parallel conduct "can be a necessary fact of life" in an oligopolistic market, the court explained, "evidence of conscious parallelism cannot alone create a reasonable inference of conspiracy." Id. (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). The court held that "to prove an oligopolistic conspiracy with proof of parallel behavior, that evidence must go beyond mere interdependence and be so unusual that in the absence of an advance agreement, no reasonable firm would have engaged in it." Id. (internal quotation marks and citation omitted, emphasis added). "[I]n order to move the ball across the goal line," the plaintiff generally will "need to show that certain plus factors are present." Id. (internal quotation marks, citation, and brackets omitted).

Although the Third Circuit has not identified an exhaustive list of plus factors, the Valspar court identified three categories of evidence which may qualify: "(1) evidence that the defendant had a motive to enter into a price fixing conspiracy; (2) evidence that the [*9] defendant acted contrary to its interests; and (3) evidence implying a traditional conspiracy." Valspar, 873 F.3d at 193 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). However, the court gave short shrift to the first two categories, stating that "in the case of oligopolies the first two factors are deemphasized because they largely restate the phenomenon of interdependence." Id. (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). Valspar indicated that courts should focus primarily on the third factor, that is, evidence implying a traditional conspiracy. Id. In order to satisfy that factor, Valspar stated, the plaintiff must provide "proof that the defendants got together and exchanged assurances of common action or otherwise adopted a common plan even though no meetings, conversations, or exchanged documents are shown." Id. (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). The plaintiff may defeat summary judgment only if, after evaluating the evidence as a whole, the court determines that it is more likely than not that the defendants conspired to fix prices. Id. The Valspar court acknowledged that it was imposing "a high bar — but it is the bar established by this Court." Id. at 194 n.4.

The Valspar majority was untroubled [*10] by the fact that it granted summary judgment on the same record that led the Maryland court to deny summary judgment in Haley Paint, observing that the Maryland court applied Fourth Circuit law, which Valspar characterized as "quite different" from Third Circuit law. Valspar, 873 F.3d at 203. The dissent, on the other hand, was of the opinion that Valspar constituted a grave misstep in Third Circuit jurisprudence. According to the dissent, the majority's ruling created "an unworkable burden, not supported by our precedent, for plaintiffs seeking to prove a Sherman Act price-fixing case with circumstantial evidence." Valspar, 873 F.3d at 203. The dissent pointed out that under the majority's holding, "smoking gun" evidence is necessary to survive summary judgment in in oligopoly cases, and district judges are expected to weigh evidence. Id. at 203-04. The dissent characterized the majority's approach as a "misapplication of Matsushita." Id. at 206.

2. Ninth Circuit

Like Valspar, the lead Ninth Circuit cases addressing summary judgment in the antitrust context recite black letter principles that "[s]ummary judgment is appropriate 'if the movant shows that there is no genuine dispute as to any material fact and the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter [*11] of law,'" and that the Court must "view the facts and draw factual inferences in favor of" the non-moving party. Stanislaus Food Prods. Co. v. USS-POSCO Indus., 803 F.3d 1084, 1088 (9th Cir. 2015) (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(a)); see also In re Citric Acid Litig., 191 F.3d 1090, 1094 (9th Cir. 1999). The Ninth Circuit cases also focus on Matsushita's key holdings, reiterating that "to survive summary judgment on the basis of circumstantial evidence, 'a plaintiff seeking damages for a violation of § 1 must present evidence that tends to exclude the possibility that the alleged conspirators acted independently,'" Stanislaus, 803 F.3d at 1088 (quoting Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 588), and "'conduct as consistent with permissible competition as with illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy,'" Citric Acid, 191 F.3d at 1094 (quoting Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 586).

Beyond those superficial similarities, however, the Ninth Circuit's approach to implementation of Matsushita is quite different from that of the Valspar court. The Ninth Circuit has articulated a two-part test to be applied when a defendant seeks summary judgment with respect to a § 1 claim that is based on circumstantial evidence. See Citric Acid, 191 F.3d at 1094. "First, the defendant can rebut an allegation of conspiracy by showing a plausible and justifiable reason for its conduct that is consistent with proper business practice." Id. (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). If [*12] the defendant makes that showing, "[t]he burden then shifts back to the plaintiff to provide specific evidence tending to show that the defendant was not engaging in permissible competitive behavior." Id.

A defendant may satisfy its burden at step one in a variety of ways. The defendant may show that the allegedly conspiratorial conduct "was in each defendant's independent self-interest." Citric Acid, 191 F.3d at 1095. Alternatively, the defendant may demonstrate that the potential benefit of the scheme "is just not apparent," such that the defendant's "participation in the alleged conspiracy is economically implausible." Stanislaus, 803 F.3d at 1091.

At step two, a § 1 violation cannot be inferred from parallel pricing alone, or from an industry's follow-the-leader pricing strategy. Citric Acid, 191 F.3d at 1102. However, "parallel pricing is a relevant factor to be considered along with the evidence as a whole; if there are sufficient other 'plus' factors, an inference of conspiracy can be reasonable." Stanislaus, 803 F.3d at 1092. "[T]he crucial question is whether all the evidence considered as a whole can reasonably support the inference that [the defendant] conspired . . . to fix prices.. Citric Acid, 191 F.3d at 1097.

3. The Legal Standards are not Identical

Comparing the Third Circuit's standards as articulated in Valspar [*13] with the Ninth Circuit's standards as articulated in Stanislaus and Citric Acid, this Court concludes that the standards are not identical. In fact, they are significantly different. The standards articulated in Valspar all but eliminate an antitrust plaintiff's opportunity to defeat summary judgment in an oligopoly case based on reasonable inferences arising from circumstantial evidence. Under Valspar, certain types of plus factors are discounted and the plaintiff's success turns on its ability to produce "evidence implying a traditional conspiracy," which the majority defined as "proof that the defendants got together and exchanged assurances of common action or otherwise adopted a common plan even though no meetings, conversations, or exchanged documents are shown." Valspar, 873 F.3d at 193 (internal quotation marks and citations omitted). As the Valspar dissent recognized, this approach appears to require the plaintiff to present "smoking gun" type evidence in order to avoid summary judgment. Id. at 203-04. Nothing in the Ninth Circuit's jurisprudence cabins an antitrust plaintiff's ability to defeat summary judgment through circumstantial evidence in this manner.

Nor does Ninth Circuit authority allow, much less require, [*14] district judges to weigh evidence. While a plaintiff opposing summary judgment under Valspar's standards must persuade the district court that it is "more likely than not" that the defendants conspired to fix prices, 873 F.3d at 193, in the Ninth Circuit the plaintiff need only present evidence showing "that the inference of conspiracy is reasonable in light of the competing inferences of independent action or collusive action that could not have harmed [the plaintiff]." Stanislaus, 803 F.3d at 1089 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted).

The Court notes that the Ninth Circuit's opinion in Musical Instruments, cited by Defendants, seems to track language in Valspar indicating that certain plus factors, such as motive and conduct contrary to self-interest, should be given little weight in oligopoly cases. Compare In re Musical Instruments & Equip. Antitrust Litig., 798 F.3d 1186, 1194-1195 (9th Cir. 2015), with Valspar, 873 F.3d at 193. Defendants point to that fact in support of their position that the legal standards articulated in Valspar are identical to those of the Ninth Circuit. As Home Depot notes, however, Musical Instruments was decided at the motion to dismiss stage, and it did not address the evidentiary issues critical to determination of a summary judgment motion. Consequently, while Musical Instruments is helpful to [*15] an understanding of plus factors and how they work in oligopoly cases, this Court looks to Stanislaus and Citric Acid to determine whether the Valspar court applied the same framework on summary judgment as would be applied in the Ninth Circuit. As discussed above, the standards set forth in those cases are different from the standards set forth in Valspar.

Stanislaus, in particular, emphasized the importance of motive evidence at the summary judgment stage: "The factual context of a claim and the economic plausibility of a defendant's motivation to conspire play an explicit, central role in the standards set forth in Matsushita." Stanislaus, 803 F.3d at 1090 n.3. "It is an uncontroversial tenet of antitrust law that the clarity and intensity of a motivation may bear on the inferences to be drawn from ambiguous evidence of coordinated behavior." Id. (internal quotation marks, citation, and alteration omitted). "Implausible claims require a 'more persuasive' showing 'that tends to exclude the possibility' of independent action. Id. at 1089 (citing Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 587-88). As the Valspar dissent pointed out, the majority appeared to ignore these considerations in its analysis — "Valspar presented an economic theory that makes perfect economic sense, [*16] yet the District Court and majority did not draw any inferences in Valspar's favor." Valspar, 873 F.3d at 204.

In light of the foregoing, Defendants' motion for summary judgment is DENIED to the extent it is based on Defendants' assertion that Third Circuit law as articulated in Valspar is identical to Ninth Circuit law.

B. Application of Ninth Circuit's Standards to Facts of this Case

The Court next considers Defendants' argument that they are entitled to summary judgment under applicable Ninth Circuit legal standards. The standards regarding claims under § 1 of the Sherman Act apply equally to Home Depot's claim under California's Cartwright Act, because the claims under the two statutes are based on the same conduct. See Lenhoff Enterprises, Inc. v. United Talent Agency, Inc., 729 F. App'x 528, 531 (9th Cir. 2018) ("Where a complaint alleges the same conduct as both a violation of the Sherman Act and a violation of California's Cartwright Act . . . the determination that the alleged conduct is not an unreasonable restraint of trade under the Sherman Act necessarily implies that the conduct is not unlawful under the Cartwright Act."); Persian Gulf Inc. v. BP W. Coast Prods. LLC, 324 F. Supp. 3d 1142, 1156-57 (Cal. 2018)) ("The Cartwright Act is California's equivalent to the Sherman Act, and the analysis under the Cartwright Act is identical to that under the Sherman Act." (internal quotation [*17] marks and citations omitted)). Accordingly, while the Court's analysis focuses on Home Depot's claims under § 1 of the Sherman Act, the analysis applies equally to its claims under the Cartwright Act. The parties do not brief the Cartwright Act claim separately or suggest that different standards apply to the federal and state law claims.

1. Scope of the Record

Before addressing the parties' substantive arguments, the Court addresses the practicalities of working with a voluminous record that has been developed over the course of multiple antitrust cases arising from the alleged price fixing conspiracy. Both sides have submitted declarations of counsel attaching deposition excerpts and other documents which were produced in the earlier actions. See Mackowski Decl., ECF 116-3; Anzidei Decl., 116-5; Johnson Decl., ECF 123-1. Home Depot also has filed a Request for Judicial Notice, asking the Court to judicially notice briefing and exhibits filed in Haley Paint, Valspar, and a case titled Valspar Corp. v. Kronos Worldwide, Inc., (S.D. Tex.), Case No. 4:14-cv-01130. See RJN, ECF 123-2.

While the record made available to the Court comprises thousands of pages of documents, relatively few of those [*18] documents are actually cited in the parties' briefs. On summary judgment, it is not the Court's task to "scour the record in search of a genuine issue of triable fact." Californians for Renewable Energy v. California Pub. Utilities Comm'n, 922 F.3d 929, 935-36 (9th Cir. 2019) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). The Court "rel[ies] on the nonmoving party to identify with reasonable particularity the evidence that precludes summary judgment." Id. at 936. "Specific citations, not bulk references, are essential to pinpoint key facts and factual disputes." Stanislaus Food Prods. Co. v. USS-POSCO Indus., 803 F.3d 1084, 1094 (9th Cir. 2015). Accordingly, the Court has considered only those documents cited in the briefing, and only those portions of documents that are pin-cited or otherwise identified with particularity, "without mining the entire document for more substantiation." Id.

Moreover, with respect to Home Depot's request for judicial notice, "[j]ust because the document itself is susceptible to judicial notice does not mean that every assertion of fact within that document is judicially noticeable for its truth." Khoja v. Orexigen Therapeutics, Inc., 899 F.3d 988, 999 (9th Cir. 2018). Thus, while it may be able to take judicial notice of the existence of any number of documents in the record, the Court cannot take judicial notice of the contents of such documents unless they comprise facts which are "generally known," or "can be accurately [*19] and readily determined from sources whose accuracy cannot reasonably be questioned." Id.

2. Analysis

A plaintiff asserting a claim of concerted price fixing under § 1 of the Sherman Act bears the burden of proving that an agreement to fix prices existed. See Citric Acid, 191 F.3d at 1093. Where, as here, the plaintiff seeks to prove the conspiracy with circumstantial evidence, a two-part test applies to a defense motion for summary judgment. See id. at 1094. "First, the defendant can rebut an allegation of conspiracy by showing a plausible and justifiable reason for its conduct that is consistent with proper business practice." Id. (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). If the defendant makes that showing, "[t]he burden then shifts back to the plaintiff to provide specific evidence tending to show that the defendant was not engaging in permissible competitive behavior." Id. Summary judgment will be denied if "the inference of conspiracy is reasonable in light of the competing inferences of independent action or collusive action that could not have harmed [the plaintiff]." Stanislaus, 803 F.3d at 1089 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted).

a. Step 1

Home Depot's theory is that the thirty-one parallel price increase announcements by DuPont, [*20] Millennium, Kronos, and Huntsman were the product of a conspiracy to fix prices. Defendants argue that those price increase announcements were not the product of a conspiracy, and that each company chose to announce price increases when it did based on the company's independent judgment.

Defendants submit the deposition testimony of DuPont senior executives, who described their process for analyzing market supply and demand, costs, company strategies, and goals when deciding whether to implement a price increase. See Mackowski Decl. Exh. 1, Gallagher Dep. 233:2-236:23, ECF 116-3; Mackowski Decl. Exh. 2, Rubin Dep. 32:4-33:9, ECF 116-3. Defendants also point to documents which support the DuPont executives' version of events. See Mackowski Decl. Exhs. 3-6, ECF 116-3. With respect to Millennium, Defendants submit the deposition testimony of a vice president, explaining Millennium's process in deciding whether to announce a price increase. See Anzidei Decl. Exh. 1, Hall Dep. 78:2-10, ECF 116-5. Defendants also cite to expert reports that were produced in Haley Paint, showing that the number of days it took Millennium to announce a price increase following a competitor's announcement varied [*21] over the course of the alleged conspiracy. See, e.g., Anzidei Decl. Exh. 2, Hamilton Report at App. B1, ECF 116-6. Millennium also submits evidence that at times it undercut competitor's prices to increase its sales. See Anzidei Decl., Exhs. 9-12.

A trier of fact could conclude, based on this evidence, that Defendants' announcements of price increases were based on independent internal deliberations rather than an agreement to fix prices. The Court therefore concludes that Defendants have satisfied their step 1 burden. The burden therefore shifts to Plaintiffs, at step 2 of the test, to provide specific evidence tending to show that Defendants were not engaging in permissible competitive behavior.

b. Step 2

i. Plausibility

Home Depot begins by arguing that its price-fixing claim is plausible, noting that the Stanislaus court found context to be "key" when evaluating whether an antitrust plaintiff has presented evidence sufficient to raise a reasonable inference of anticompetitive conduct. "The factual context of a claim and the economic plausibility of a defendant's motivation to conspire play an explicit, central role in the standards set forth in Matsushita." Stanislaus, 803 F.3d at 1090 n.3. "Implausible claims require [*22] a 'more persuasive' showing 'that tends to exclude the possibility' of independent action." Id. at 1089 (citing Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 587-88).

It is undisputed that at the start of the alleged conspiracy period, the titanium dioxide industry had suffered significant declines in demand and profitability, and that prices were at a low. At that point, the TDMA for the first time permitted an American supplier — DuPont — to join. Within weeks, the first of the thirty-one parallel price increase announcements occurred, and the alleged conspirators continued to announce price increases in parallel over the next decade. In this factual context, Home Depot's theory that the major suppliers of titanium dioxide agreed to fix prices for their mutual benefit is entirely plausible. That fact was recognized by both the Haley Paint court, which commented that "an agreement among the five largest producers of titanium dioxide to fix prices at a supracompetitive level . . . makes perfect economic sense," Haley Paint, 959 F. Supp. 2d at 824 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted), and the Valspar dissent, which observed that "Valspar presented an economic theory that makes perfect economic sense," Valspar, 873 F.3d at 204.

ii. Parallel Conduct

Next, Home Depot points to the abrupt change in [*23] industry practice, from the pre-2002 period in which there were only a few instances of parallel price increase announcements, to the thirty-one instances of parallel price increase announcements in the twelve years following the TDMA's agreement to allow DuPont to join. See Johnson Decl. Exh. 1, App B (price increase announcement chronology), ECF 122-7.[3] While some of the parallel announcements were days or even weeks apart, they generally occurred in lockstep. Thus, even taking into account variations in timing, the sudden jump from only a few parallel price increase announcements prior to 2002 to thirty-one during the alleged conspiracy period is startling. Defendants' characterization of the industry change as "[a] mere uptick in the frequency of price announcements" is unpersuasive. See Reply at 8, ECF 133. As the Valspar dissent recognized, "[t]he sheer number of parallel price increase announcements in this case — 31 to be exact — is unprecedented," and "would undoubtedly raise red flags to any reasonable fact finder." Valspar, 873 F.3d at 205. The Haley Paint court similarly characterized the parallel price increase announcements as "noteworthy, because they were so pervasive." Haley Paint, 959 F. Supp. 2d at 825.

[*24] While parallel conduct is insufficient on its own to give rise to an inference of conspiracy, it is "a relevant factor to be considered along with the evidence as a whole." Citric Acid, 191 F.3d at 1102. "[I]f there are sufficient other 'plus' factors, an inference of conspiracy can be reasonable." Id. It is against this backdrop of a plausible claim coupled with a sudden pattern of prolonged parallel price announcements that this Court must determine whether Home Depot has presented sufficient plus factors to render the inference of a price-fixing conspiracy reasonable when held up against competing inferences of independent action. See Stanislaus, 803 F.3d at 1089.

iii. Motive

Home Depot presents expert evidence that Defendants had motive to enter into a price-fixing conspiracy. The titanium dioxide market is highly concentrated; titanium dioxide is a commodity-like product with no substitutes; and there are substantial barriers to entry in the market. See Johnson Decl. Exh. 36, Lamb Report at 11-30, ECF 122-59. Consequently, the structure of the titanium dioxide market was conducive to a price-fixing conspiracy. See Johnson Decl. Exh. 8, Hamilton Report at 3-4, ECF 122-31; Johnson Decl. Exh. 36, Lamb Report at 11-30, ECF 122-59. Both the Third Circuit in Valspar, and the District of Maryland in Haley Paint, concluded that these conditions established the existence of motive, and Defendants do not dispute that conclusion. See Valspar, 873 F.3d at 197 ("There is little doubt that this highly concentrated market for a commodity-like product with no viable substitutes and substantial barriers to entry was conducive to price fixing."); Haley Paint, 959 F. Supp. 2d at 826 ("In this case, the first plus factor is satisfied. The structure [*25] of the United States titanium dioxide market is conducive to price-fixing, based on multiple factors.").

[3] The cited evidence is an appendix submitted by the plaintiffs in Haley Paint, setting forth the chronology of price increase announcements. The Court may take judicial notice of the appendix as a court record. See Reyn's Pasta Bella, LLC v. Visa USA, Inc., 442 F.3d 741, 746 n.6 (9th Cir. 2006) ("We may take judicial notice of court filings and other matters of public record."). As noted above, the fact that the document itself is subject to judicial notice "does not mean that every assertion of fact within that document is judicially noticeable for its truth." Khoja, 899 F.3d at 999. The Court finds it appropriate to accept the truth of the chronology here, because it is not challenged by Defendants and "can be accurately and readily determined from sources whose accuracy cannot reasonably be questioned." Id.

The Ninth Circuit has made clear that in oligopoly cases, "alleging 'common motive to conspire' simply restates that a market is interdependent (i.e., that the profitability of a firm's decisions regarding pricing depends on competitors' reactions)." Musical Instruments, 798 F.3d at 1195. "Interdependence, however, does not entail collusion, as interdependent firms may engage in consciously parallel conduct through observation of their competitors' decisions, even absent an agreement." Id. "[O]ne firm can risk being the first to raise prices, confident that if its price is followed, all firms will benefit." Id. "By that process ('follow the leader'), supracompetitive prices and other anticompetitive practices, once initiated, can spread through a market without any prior agreement." Id. Such conduct — either raising prices or following suit — is not a violation of antitrust laws when it is merely an example of the "conscious parallelism endemic to an oligopoly." Prosterman v. Am. Airlines, Inc., 747 F. App'x 458, 461 (9th Cir. 2018).

The thirty-one parallel price increase announcements certainly could be explained by follow-the-leader pricing. Indeed, the Valspar court concluded that conscious [*26] parallelism was the only reasonable inference to be drawn from the record evidence, concluding that there was insufficient evidence of conspiracy and that DuPont could not argue with a straight face that the competitor's decisions to raise prices were discrete events. See Valspar, 873 F.3d at 195. However, Home Depot submits testimony from representatives of DuPont, Millennium, Huntsman, and Kronos, expressly denying that the companies engaged in follow-the-leader pricing. See Johnson Decl. Exh. 40, Rubin Dep. 36:6-11 (DuPont); Johnson Decl. Exh. 41, Stoll Dep. 47:24-48:7 (Millennium); Johnson Decl. Exh. 38, Maas Dep. 88:1-8 (Kronos); Johnson Decl. Exh. 39, Quinn Dep. 30:12-17 (Huntsman). DuPont, Kronos, and Huntsman representatives denied even considering a competitor's price announcements when determining the company's own price announcements. Johnson Decl. Exh. 40, Rubin Dep. 36:6-18 (DuPont); Johnson Decl. Exh. 16, Becker Dep. 106:13-17 (Kronos); Johnson Decl. Exh. 39, Quinn Dep. 28:20-30:17, 61:1-4 (Huntsman). At the hearing, Home Depot's counsel made the point that "it's hard for the defendants to even argue that this is legitimate follow-the-leader pricing if their own witnesses are denying it." Tr. [*27] 53:5-54:7, ECF 145.

While Defendants argue that the evidence of motive may be dismissed as equally consistent with the conscious parallelism expected in an interdependent market, the alleged conspirators' denials of follow-the-leader pricing — or even consideration of competitors' pricing — gives rise to a reasonable contrary inference that Defendants did not act independently but rather in concert.

iv. Actions Against Self-Interest

Home Depot also points to evidence that the alleged conspirators took actions against their economic self-interest. For example, they sold titanium dioxide to each other at below market prices and swapped raw materials needed for manufacture, conduct that normally would not be expected between market rivals. See Johnson Decl. Exh. 8, Hamilton Report at 28-33, ECF 122-31; Johnson Decl. Exh. 44, Williams Report at 49-59, ECF 122-66. Millennium's John Hall referred to this conduct as "co-opertition." Johnson Decl. Exh. 26, Hall email, ECF 122-49.

When DuPont shut down one of its plants in 2005 after Hurricane Katrina, DuPont announced that it would bring the plant back online slowly and would "NOT flood the market with product," and would "not be aggressively [*28] pursuing their lost share" of the market. See Johnson Decl. Exh. 27, email, ECF 122-50. It is not clear why DuPont would not have attempted to recover its market share. However, internal Millennium emails and notes from a later time-frame show that, at least in 2006-2008, Millennium consciously avoided competition with DuPont. See, e.g., Johnson Exh. 29, email ("we do not want to be disruptive to DuPont"), ECF 122-52; Johnson Exh. 30, handwritten note ("Don't steal Dup tonnes").

The alleged conspirators also shared confidential and commercially sensitive information through the TDMA and its Global Statistics Program. See Johnson Decl. Exh. 9, ECF 122-32. The Haley Paint court found evidence regarding the Global Statistics Program suggestive of collusion, citing authority that "knowledge of market share is the most important information to sustain a conspiracy." Haley Paint, 959 F. Supp. 2d at 828.

Defendants argue that participation in the Global Statistics Program was entirely legal, and that a decision to avoid undercutting a competitor's prices may be a natural consequence of interdependence rather than the result of collusion. Defendants point out that the described conduct allowed the titanium dioxide producers to [*29] "in effect share monopoly power and maintain prices at a profit-maximizing supracompetitive level" without necessarily evidencing an express agreement to do so. Reply at 10, ECF 133 (internal quotation marks and citations omitted). While the Court agrees that the alleged conspirators' conduct may be explained in such a fashion, Home Depot presents expert evidence that the rise in prices of titanium dioxide during the alleged conspiracy period cannot be explained by competition alone. See Johnson Decl. Exh. 36, Lamb Report at 56, ECF 122-59; Johnson Decl. Exh. 42, McClave Report at 10, ECF 122-64; Johnson Decl. Exh. 43, McClave Rebuttal Report at 3, ECF 122-65. The Court concludes that Home Depot's evidence, as placed in context by the expert reports, gives rise to a reasonable inference that Defendants' actions against self-interest were pursuant to a price-fixing conspiracy.

v. Evidence Implying a Traditional Conspiracy

Home Depot also presents evidence implying a traditional conspiracy. Following a 16 meeting between senior executives of Millennium and Huntsman in Baltimore on September 13, 2004, Millennium sent colleagues an email stating: "now that we have competition on board for [*30] the Oct 1 price increase announcement, please relook at your agents [sic] commissions." Johnson Decl. ¶¶ 23-24 & Exhs. 20-21, ECF 122-43, ECF 122-44.

Other evidence suggests more indirectly that DuPont, Millennium and others were using Intertech conferences and speeches to meet with each other and communicate about parallel pricing. For example, Millennium's Mr. Zwicker commented that Intertech conferences were a "great place for . . . side meetings," and DuPont's Mr. Edwards indicated in an email that while his written materials for Intertech were "fairly cautious," he was "more direct" in his verbal presentations. See Johnson Decl. ¶¶ 25-26 & Exhs. 22-23, ECF 122-45, ECF 122-46. Jim Fisher, an industry consultant, testified that at the 2005 Intertech conference the titanium dioxide producers "discussed the need to take advantage of tight market conditions to improve pricing." See Johnson Decl. ¶ 28 & Exh. 25 at TRONOX0000089, ECF 122-48. Mr. Fisher's statement would appear to carry significant weight given that he appears to have "communicated contemporaneously with people from Kronos, Millennium, Huntsman, and DuPont" during the conspiracy period. See Valspar, 873 F.3d at 215. Indeed, Home Depot suggests [*31] that Mr. Fisher may have been used as an intermediary by the alleged conspirators.

Defendants contend that Home Depot's evidence does not show any "direct communications about pricing between any alleged conspirators," and "falls far short" of tending to exclude the possibility of independent action. Reply at 9, ECF 133. While the Court agrees that the evidence does not establish direct communications about pricing, the Court also agrees with the Haley Paint court that evidence regarding the alleged conspirators' communications, is "the kind of circumstantial evidence that, when viewed in conjunction with the massive record in this case, could lead a jury to reasonably infer a conspiracy in restraint of trade." Haley Paint, 959 F. Supp. 2d at 830.

vi. Conclusion

Viewing this record as a whole, the Court concludes that, under Ninth Circuit standards as articulated herein, Home Depot has presented evidence from which a reasonable trier of fact could conclude that the thirty-one parallel price increase announcements were the product of a price-fixing conspiracy rather than lawful market activity to be expected in an oligopoly. In reaching that conclusion, the Court has considered the context and plausibility of Home Depot's [*32] claim; the startling number of parallel price announcements during the alleged conspiracy period in contrast to the pre-conspiracy period; the testimony of the alleged conspirators' representatives which appear to negate a follow-the-leader explanation for the parallel price announcements; the alleged conspirator's "co-opertition," rather than competition, with each other; and the internal email evidence implying a traditional conspiracy. This evidence renders the inference of a price-fixing conspiracy reasonable, even considering the nature of an oligopolistic market and competing inferences of independent action. See Stanislaus, 803 F.3d at 1089.

This Court's view of the evidence was shared by the Valspar dissent, which — albeit under different legal standards — concluded that the question of whether Defendants' parallel conduct "was a lawful coincidence or an unlawful agreement should be decided by a jury." Valspar, 873 F.3d at 203; see also Haley Paint, 959 F. Supp. 2d at 830 ("Having carefully considered the sheer number of parallel price increase announcements, the structure of the titanium dioxide industry, the industry crisis in the decade before the Class Period, the Defendants' alleged acts against their self-interest, and the myriad non-economic evidence implying [*33] a conspiracy, this Court finds that the Plaintiffs put forward sufficient evidence tending to exclude the possibility of independent action.").

III. ORDER

(1) Defendants' motion for summary judgment is DENIED; and

(2) This order shall be conditionally filed under seal. The parties shall meet and confer regarding proposed redactions to the order before it is filed in the public docket, and shall submit agreed-upon proposed redactions to the Court on or before August 2, 2019.

[*491] ORDER GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO DISMISS

I. INTRODUCTION

The matter before the Court is Defendants Highmark Health, Highmark Inc., and Highmark Choice Company's (collectively "Highmark") second motion to dismiss. Plaintiff Presque Isle Colon and Rectal Surgery ("Plaintiff") instituted this action against Highmark alleging in its original complaint that Highmark violated Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act as well as Pennsylvania's antitrust laws, breached the parties' contract and implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and was unjustly enriched. Dkt. No. 1. Highmark then moved to dismiss Plaintiff's claims, arguing that Plaintiff failed to sufficiently allege a violation of the [2] federal antitrust laws. Dkt. No. 17. This Court agreed with Highmark and dismissed largely for failure to sufficiently set forth a federal antitrust violation but granted plaintiff leave to amend its federal law claims and replead its pendent state and common law claims. Dkt. No. 35.

Plaintiff filed an amended complaint on December 3, 2018. Dkt. No. 42. In it, Plaintiff reasserts its claims as to Highmark's violations of the Sherman Antitrust Act, Pennsylvania's antitrust laws, and Pennsylvania common law causes of action including unjust enrichment, breach of contract and covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and reformation or rescission. Dkt. No. 42. Currently before the Court is Highmark's motion to dismiss the amended complaint in its entirety, pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6), arguing that the amended complaint still fails to state a claim on which relief can be granted. Dkt. No. 47.

Having reviewed the motion to dismiss the amended complaint, the opposition thereto, the record of the case, and the relevant legal authorities, the Court will GRANT in part and DENY in part the motion. Specifically, the Court will grant the motion as to Plaintiff's Section 1 and [*492] related Pennsylvania common law claims, as well [3] as its claims of unjust enrichment and breach of contract. The Court will deny, however, the motion as to Plaintiff's Section 2 and related Pennsylvania common law claims, as well as its claims for breach of implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing and reformation and rescission. The Court's reasoning follows:

II. BACKGROUND

The Court assumes familiarity with the facts of this case, as described in the Court's September 6, 2018 Memorandum Order granting the Highmark's first motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim. Dkt. No. 17. For clarity's sake, however, the Court will reiterate some of the salient facts, as pled in the amended complaint. Dkt. No. 42.

A. The Parties

Plaintiff operates an independent physician-run medical practice organized under the laws of Pennsylvania and located in Erie County, Pennsylvania, part of the Erie County Metropolitan Statistical Area ("MSA"). Dkt. No. 42 at ¶ 14.[1]

Highmark is comprised of three Pennsylvania corporations that provide health insurance coverage to its members under various healthcare plans, including PPOs, HMOs, and ACA[2] - compliant private health insurance plans. Id. at ¶ 15-17; Dkt. No. 47 at 3. In the healthcare industry, medical service [4] providers, such as Plaintiff, are considered sellers because while they provide care to patients they sell their services to insurers, like Highmark, in exchange for contractually determined "reimbursements."[3] Dkt. No. 35 at 2-3 (internal citations removed). Insurers, such as Highmark, are then considered buyers of physician services. Id. (internal citations removed).

Highmark is one of the largest health insurers in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, with "more than 4 million covered lives." Dkt. No. 42 at ¶¶ 2, 42; Dkt. No 47 at 3 n.3. Plaintiff alleges that Highmark is the "dominant" health insurer in the region, insuring at least 65% of health insurance enrollees in Western Pennsylvania[4] and far in

[1] The instant case is a putative class action in which Plaintiff purports to represent a proposed class comprised of all "independent physicians and/or independent physician practices" alternatively in the Erie County MSA or the 29-county Western Pennsylvania area who treat patients covered by a "Highmark health insurance product." Dkt. No. 42 at ¶¶ 1, 67.

[2] Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act, Pub.L. No. 111-148, 124 Stat. 119 (2010) (the "ACA") (codified at 42 U.S.C. § 18001 et seq.).

[4] According to Plaintiff, Highmark defines Western Pennsylvania to include Allegheny, Armstrong, Beaver, Bedford, Blair, Butler, Cambria, Cameron, part of Centre, Clarion, Clearfield, Crawford, Elk, Erie, Fayette, Forest, Greene, Huntingdon, Indiana, Jefferson, Lawrence, McKean, Mercer, Potter, Somerset, Venango, Warren, Washington, and Westmoreland counties. Dkt. No. 42 at ¶ 2 n.1.

excess of 65% of enrollees in the Erie County MSA. Dkt. No. 42 at ¶¶ 2, 43. Additionally, Plaintiff contends that Highmark "controls commensurate shares of reimbursements" to independent physicians in both the Erie County MSA and Western Pennsylvania based on the assertion that it is "responsible for 'buying'" at least 65% of the outpatient physician services to insured patients in Western Pennsylvania and "well in excess" of 65-70% of the same services in the Erie County MSA. Id. at ¶¶ [5] 3, 43. Thus, Plaintiff asserts, "Highmark is both the largest health [*493] insurer and the largest buyer of outpatient physician services in these areas." Id. at ¶ 3 (emphasis in original).

In addition to its health insurance business, Highmark recently entered the outpatient physician services market by acquiring several hospitals and other healthcare facilities. Id. at ¶¶ 4, 46. Highmark now controls St. Vincent Hospital, which Plaintiff explains is the "largest hospital system in Erie." Id. at ¶ 4. Plaintiff also reports that Highmark has announced plans to build or operate at least four other facilities in Pennsylvania. Id. at ¶ 4 n.2.

In 2011, Plaintiff and Highmark signed a Professional (or Participating or Preferred) Provider Agreement ("PPA"), in which Plaintiff agreed to render medical care to Highmark-covered patients and Highmark, in turn, agreed to pay, or "reimburse," Plaintiff for its services. Dkt. No. 42-1; see also Dkt. No. 42 at ¶¶ 14, 59-61.[5] The PPA governs the reimbursement terms between the parties and includes two relevant clauses to the instant case. First, the PPA provides for a variable reimbursement rate, in which "allowances [paid to specialist] may be reviewed and [6] adjusted from time to time during the Term." Dkt. No. 42-1 at Att. 6.1 § 4.2; see also Dkt. No. 42 at ¶ 60. Second, the PPA contains an "all products" clause, through which Plaintiff agreed to treat patients enrolled in any insurance product offered by Highmark (the "All Products Clause"). Dkt. No. 42-1 at § 4.1; see also Dkt. No. 42 at ¶¶ 13, 61.[6]

B. The Current Dispute and The Court's Previous Order granting Motion to Dismiss Relations between the parties deteriorated when Highmark implemented a 4.5% "across-the-board" reimbursement rate cut effective April 1, 2016, for outpatient services rendered to patients covered by one of Highmark's ACA-compliant healthcare plans. Dkt. No. 42 at ¶¶ 10, 65, 164. Plaintiff instituted the instant action on May 11, 2017, alleging antitrust violations of both Section 1, 15 U.S.C. § 1, and Section 2, id. at § 2, of the Sherman Antitrust Act, as well as related Pennsylvania common law causes of action. Dkt. No. 1. Plaintiff's original complaint focused on the PPA, alleging that it constitutes an unreasonable restraint of trade under Section 1, Dkt. No. 1 at ¶¶ 111-12, 126-27, and that Highmark maintains and abuses monopsony[7] [*494] power by combining the reimbursement rate cuts with the All Products Clause to "forc[e] upon [7] independent physician" an "anticompetitive scheme." Dkt. No. 35 at 6 (internal quotations and citations removed). As stated above, Highmark moved to dismiss the original complaint for failure to state a claim, which this Court granted in a written decision dated September 6, 2018 ("hereinafter, "the September Order"). Dkt. Nos. 17 and 35.

[5] The PPA is a standard form contract drafted by Highmark. Plaintiff contends that Highmark does not negotiate any of its terms, including reimbursement rates. Dkt. No. 42 at ¶¶ 59-60.

[6] In its entirety, the All Products Clause reads: Network Product Participation. Provider must and, where applicable, must ensure that all Practitioners participate in all Network Products covered under this Agreement, as described by [Keystone Health Plan West] and so long as Provider and Practitioners, as applicable, meet all required Participation Criteria applicable to a Network Product. Provider's and each Practitioner's participation in a Network Product will be subject to all terms and conditions contained in this Agreement and, as applicable, related attachments hereto. Provider and [Keystone Health Plan West] agree that such participation is not exclusive and that other Providers and Practitioners may also participate as designated by [Keystone Health Plan West].

[7] A monopsony is a monopoly, but on the "buy side" of the market, in which one consumer is able to dictate conditions in the given market based on its dominant position. See Weyerhaeuser Co. v. Ross-Simmons Hardwood Lumber Co., 549 U.S. 312, 320, 127 S. Ct. 1069, 166 L. Ed. 2d 911 (2007) ("a monopsony is to the buy side of the market what a monopoly is to the sell side and is sometimes colloquially called a 'buyer's monopoly"). As mentioned previously, health insurers, such as Highmark, are considered "buyers" of doctors' services. Dkt. 35 at 7 (citing Kartell, 749 F.2d at 924.

The September Order focused on Plaintiff's Section 1 and 2 claims. In regard to the Section 1 claim, the Court held that Plaintiff failed to allege an "agreement" which is required to satisfy Section l's prohibition against "agreement[s] that unreasonable restrain trade." Dkt. No. 35 at 9 (emphasis in original). With respect to the Section 2 claims, the Court held that Plaintiff failed to satisfy both the requirements of antitrust injury and the substantive requirements of Section 2, which prohibits "unlawful monopsony" and attempted monopsony. Id. at 9-16. This Court's reasoning rested on the conclusion that a unilateral depression of reimbursement rates "does not, on its own, run afoul of § 2." Id. at 10. As this Court stated, "absent 'special circumstances, where, for example, a price is below incremental cost,' there is no harm to the market, i.e., there is no 'antitrust injury." Id. at 11 (emphasis in original) [8] (quoting Kartell v. Blue Shield of Massachusetts, 749 F.2d 922, 927 (1st Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 471 U.S. 1029, 105 S. Ct. 2040, 105 S. Ct. 2049 (1985)); see also W Penn Allegheny Health Sys., Inc. v. UPMC, 627 F.3d 85, 103 (3d Cir. 2010) ("West Penn")). Therefore, this Court dismissed the complaint with leave to amend.

As both parties have noted in their briefing, see, e.g., Dkt. No. 48 at 1-2, the Court invited Plaintiff in its repleading to address how (1) Highmark's acquisition of Saint Vincent enhanced its unlawful monopsony as a health insurer and (2) Highmark treats independent physicians differently from Highmark-acquired hospitals, Dkt. No. 12-13. In addition, this Court instructed Plaintiff to provide a "breakdown of [its] insured, non-insured, and ACA-insured patients," as well as additional business-related information, necessary to support a predatory pricing claim. Id. at 13-14.

C. Amended Complaint and Motion to Dismiss

Plaintiff has now provided an amended complaint. Dkt. No. 42. Plaintiff still advances causes of action under Section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act (Counts 5 and 7) and related Pennsylvania common law antitrust claims (Counts 6 and 8); Section 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act (Counts 1 and 3) and related Pennsylvania common law antitrust claims (Counts 2 and 4); and Pennsylvania common law causes of action for Unjust Enrichment (Count 9), Breach of Contract and Implied Covenant of Good [9] Faith and Fair Dealing (Count 10), and Reformation or Recission (Count 11).

The most immediate difference between the original complaint and the amended complaint is that Plaintiff has refashioned its Section 1 claim as an "unlawful tying" claim, in which it claims Highmark restrained trade by "unlawfully tying" reimbursements "under any of its health insurance products to the reimbursement of the same under any of its other health insurance product" through the All Products Clause. Id. at ¶ 119.[8] Additionally, Plaintiff [*495] revised large sections of its Section 2-related allegations in an attempt to address some of this Court's concerns highlighted in the September Order.

Plaintiff now contends that Highmark's reduction in reimbursements rates "has led, and will continue to lead," to a reduction in the quantity and quality of outpatient physician services, including colorectal services in both the Erie County MSA and Western Pennsylvania. Dkt. No. 42 at ¶ 5. Specifically, Plaintiff claims that "predatorily reduced reimbursement rates to below independent physicians' costs" will result in such physicians going out of business, reducing the quantity of such services available to patients, and that Highmark has not imposed the same rate reductions [10] on physicians working at Highmark-controlled facilities. Id. at ¶ 6. Further, according to Plaintiff, rate reductions will also result in a degradation of quality of services available to patients as independent physicians will "cease performing better, higher-quality procedures with favorable patient outcomes." Id. at ¶ 7. Plaintiff also alleges that at the same time Highmark cut reimbursement rates, it simultaneously raised premium rates for enrollees, for example increasing rates for Highmark ACA plans between 20.1%-21.5% in 2016 and 48.1%, "or more," in 2017. Id. at 9-10, 44.

[8] The Court originally dismissed Plaintiff's Section 1 claim with prejudice. Dkt. No. 35 at 16. Plaintiff then filed a motion for reconsideration its Section 1 claim under a tying theory. Dkt. 38. After full briefing and consideration, the Court granted Plaintiff's motion. Dkt. No. 41.

In addition to "predatorily depressed reimbursement rates," Plaintiff now adds "other anticompetitive conduct," which it contends is "designed to raise [Plaintiff s] costs, harm their [sic] business[], or impede their [sic] ability to compete against Highmark-controlled outpatient physician services." Dkt. No. 42 at ¶ 12. This alleged conduct includes (1) an "extraordinary number of so-called 'audits,'" which Plaintiff contends are pretextual attempts to "claw-back" fairly earned reimbursements and interfere with quality of care, (2) steering patients away from Plaintiff in favor of Highmark's own outpatient services, and [11] (3) instituting procedure codes that "result in gross inefficiencies," including forcing Plaintiff to perform multiple procedures where it could perform just one, resulting in "inconvenience and burden on [Plaintiff's] patients." Dkt. No. 42 at ¶¶ 12, 49-58. Plaintiff contends that independent physicians are unable to avoid this anticompetitive conduct based on the All Products Clause, which forces physicians "to accept reimbursement from all of Highmark's health insurance products or none at all." Id. at ¶ 13. Independent physicians, according to Plaintiff, cannot forgo treating Highmark patients because of the insurers' dominance in the relevant markets. Id. at ¶¶ 13, 59-66. As a result, Plaintiff claims it has "lost approximately $200,000 to $300,000 annually." Id. at ¶¶ 11, 47.

As stated above, Highmark moves to dismiss the amended complaint pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6), arguing that it still fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted.

III. LEGAL STANDARD

A Rule 12(b)(6) motion tests the legal sufficiency of claims asserted in a complaint. To survive such a motion, a plaintiff must plead "sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to 'state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.'" Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (quoting Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007)). A claim is [12] "facially plausible" when the plaintiff pleads sufficient facts for a court to [*496] "draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678. In determining whether a complaint "states a plausible claim for relief," the reviewing court must "draw on its judicial experience and common sense." Id. at 679.

When considering a motion to dismiss, a court must "'accept all factual allegations as true and construe the complaint in the light most favorable to the plaintiff.' Estate of Roman v. City of Newark, 914 F.3d 789, 795 (3d Cir. 2019) (quoting Warren Gen. Hosp. v. Amgen Inc., 643 F.3d 77, 84 (3d Cir. 2011)). At the same time, the court is "not compelled to accept 'unsupported conclusions and unwarranted inferences.' Baraka v. McGreevey, 481 F.3d 187, 195 (3d Cir. 2007) (quoting Schuylkill Energy Res., Inc. v. Pennsylvania Power & Light Co., 113 F.3d 405, 417 (3d Cir. 1997)). Nor is it compelled to accept "'a legal conclusion couched as a factual allegation.' Id. (quoting Papasan v. Allain, 478 U.S. 265, 286, 106 S. Ct. 2932, 92 L. Ed. 2d 209 (1986)).

IV. ANALYSIS

The central thrust of Highmark's renewed motion to dismiss is that Plaintiff's amended complaint is long on conclusory statements and short on factual allegations. See, e.g., Dkt. No. 47 at 2 ("Plaintiffs Amended Complaint fails to state an antitrust claim because, among its generalized grievances, there are no allegations of reduced competition that increase prices or harm consumers."). Highmark is largely correct. Plaintiffs amended complaint contains many assertions [13] regarding the degradation of quality and quantity of outpatient physician services in the relevant markets and the harm that "has and will result," Dkt. No. 42 at ¶ 6, but provides little by way of specific factual allegations regarding the alleged harm to the market in general (e.g. other independent physician practices) or patients. However, construing the amended complaint most favorably to Plaintiff as this Court is required to do at this nascent stage of the litigation, as is discussed in detail below, the Court concludes that most of Plaintiffs claims survive Highmark's motion to dismiss.

Highmark's central argument is that the amended complaint fails to adequately plead an antitrust injury.[9] Thus, the Court will begin there.[10]

A. Antitrust Injury

Section 4 of the Clayton Act enables a private plaintiff "who shall be injured in his [or her] business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws" to sue for treble damages. [*497] 15 U.S.C. § 15. "While the statutory language of [Section 4] is broad," the Supreme Court and the Third Circuit have recognized that "plaintiffs must also have 'antitrust standing'" Lifewatch Servs. Inc. v. Highmark Inc., 902 F.3d 323, 341 (3d Cir. 2018) (quoting Hanover 3201 Realty, LLC v. Vill. Supermarkets, Inc., 806 F.3d 162, 171 (3d Cir. 2015). Antitrust standing differs from Article III constitutional standing [14] in that it is "prudential." Phila. Taxi Ass 'n, Inc v. Uber Techs., Inc., 886 F.3d 332, 338 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 139 S. Ct. 211, 202 L. Ed. 2d 126 (2018) ("Phila. Taxi"); Ethypharm S.A. France v. Abbott Labs., 707 F.3d 223, 232 (3d Cir. 2013). "It does not affect the subject matter jurisdiction of the court, as Article III standing does, but prevents a plaintiff from recovering under the antitrust laws." Ethypharm S.A. France, 707 F.3d at 232.

Antitrust injury, in turn, is a "necessary but insufficient condition of antitrust standing." Barton & Pittinos, Inc. v. SmithKline Beecham Corp., 118 F.3d 178, 182 (3d Cir. 1997) (citing In re Lower Lake Erie Iron Ore Antitrust Litig., 998 F.2d 1144, 1166 (3d Cir. 1993)); see also Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 110 n.5, 107 S. Ct. 484, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427 (1986) ("A showing of antitrust injury is necessary, but not always sufficient, to establish standing under § 4, because a party may have suffered antitrust injury but may not be a proper plaintiff under § 4 for other reasons."). Establishment of an antitrust injury is meant to advance the goals of antitrust law—protect[ing] competition, not competitors," Phila. Taxi, 886 F.3d at 338 (emphasis is original)—by ensuring "that the harm claimed by the plaintiff corresponds to the rationale for finding a violation of the antitrust laws in the first place," Atl. Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 342, 110 S. Ct. 1884, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333 (1990); West Penn, 627 F.3d at 101.

To establish antitrust injury, a "plaintiff must do more than show that it would have been better off absent the violation." West Penn, 627 F.3d at 101 (citing Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977)). Rather, a plaintiff must prove that it suffered an "injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent" and that the injury "flows from that which makes defendants' [15] acts unlawful." Brunswick Corp., 429 U.S. at 489; Race Tires Am., Inc. v. Hoosier Racing Tire Corp., 614 F.3d 57, 76 (3d Cir. 2010) ("the injury prong requires: (1) harm of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent; and (2) an injury to the plaintiff which flows from that which makes defendant's acts unlawful") (internal quotations and citation removed). Plaintiff bears the burden of this showing. See Phila. Taxi, 886 F.3d at 343 ("the plaintiff must prove . . .").

At this early stage, the pleading standard is permissive; indeed, as the Third Circuit has recognized, "[t]he existence of antitrust injury is not typically resolved through motions to dismiss." Schuylkill Energy Res., 113 F.3d at 417)

[9] "Antitrust injury" is but one element of "antitrust standing," which involves an analysis of "(1) the causal connection between the antitrust violation and the harm to the plaintiff and the intent by the defendant to cause that harm, with neither factor alone conferring standing; (2) whether the plaintiffs alleged injury is of the type for which the antitrust laws were intended to provide redress; (3) the directness of the injury, which addresses the concerns that liberal application of standing principles might produce speculative claims; (4) the existence of more direct victims of the alleged antitrust violations; and (5) the potential for duplicative recovery or complex apportionment of damages." In re Lower Lake Erie Iron Ore Antitrust Litig., 998 F.2d 1144,1165-66 (3d Cir. 1993). Highmark has challenged only the sufficiency of Plaintiff's showing antitrust injury, and no other element of antitrust standing. See Dkt. No. 48 at 7 n.1; see generally Dkt. No. 47 at 6-12.

[10] The Third Circuit has left unresolved which to address first, "an antitrust violation or an antitrust injury." Phila. Taxi, 886 F.3d at 338. As such, the Court sees no issue in starting with the prudential antitrust standing issue before proceeding to the substantive claims of Section 1 and 2.

Highmark claims that Plaintiff has failed to meet even this low standard in its amended complaint. It moves the Court to [*498] dismiss based largely on the contention that the Plaintiff has advanced only "purely conclusory" allegations of reduced output and quality and that these allegations are "unsupported by any factual allegations" showing harm to competition or consumers. Dkt. No. 47 at 7. Further, it alleges that Plaintiff has failed to adequately plead injury stemming [16] from anticompetitive conduct based on a summary claim of a "$200-300,000 annual loss." See Dkt. No. 47 at 10-11.

Plaintiff replies that it has sufficiently alleged antitrust injury based on pleading that Highmark's anticompetitive conduct, including predatorily low reimbursement rates for outpatient services, unnecessary audits, unfair steering of patients away from independent physicians, and inefficient procedure codes and requirements, leaves patients with "no choice but to turn to inferior, more costly services" and independent physicians with "no choice but to endure Highmark's" anticompetitive actions or go out of business.[11] Dkt. No. 48 at 2, 4-6. For the reasons stated below, the Court finds that Plaintiff has alleged a sufficient antitrust injury to establish its antitrust standing.

1. Plaintiff Pleads Injury of the Type the Antitrust Laws Were Intended to Prevent

To establish an antitrust injury, a plaintiff must allege an injury that is "the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent." Brunswick Corp., 429 U.S. at 489. This inquiry involves identifying the alleged anticompetitive conduct and determining whether that conduct injured "consumers or [] competition in general." See Phila. Taxi, 886 F.3d at 344; see also id. at 339 ("[a]llegations [17] of purportedly anticompetitive conduct are meritless if those acts would cause no deleterious effect on competition"). To determine whether conduct is anticompetitive, the court must look at the conduct "as a whole rather than considering each aspect in isolation." LePage's, Inc. v. 3M, 324 F.3d 141, 162 (3d Cir. 2003) (en banc) (citing Cont'l Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 699, 82 S. Ct. 1404, 8 L. Ed. 2d 777 (1962)); see also Phila. Taxi, 886 F.3d at 339. From there, the alleged injury must be "attributable to an anti-competitive aspect of the practice under scrutiny." Atl. Richfield Co., 495 U.S. at 334; West Penn, 627 F.3d at 101. As such, the court must "examine the causal connection between the purportedly unlawful conduct and the injury" claimed to the market and consumers. Lifewatch Servs. Inc., 902 F.3d at 342 (quoting City of Pittsburgh v. W Penn Power Co., 147 F.3d 256, 265 (3d Cir. 1998)).

Highmark contends that Plaintiff has failed to allege "a single example of an actual reduction in the delivery of outpatient physician services or any reduction in competition," Dkt. No. 47 at 7, or harm to consumers, id. at 9-10. For example, Highland contests that patients will be forced to "turn to inferior, more costly services from Highmark-controlled facilities," Dkt. No. 48 at 2, by claiming that there are "no factual allegations . . . to suggest that patient choice has been reduced or that St. Vincent Hospital's services are inferior to Plaintiff's [services]," Dkt. No. 49 at 5. In sum, the thrust [18] of Highmark's arguments is that Plaintiff has still failed to allege anticompetitive conduct and that such conduct [*499] led to harm to competition or consumers.

Plaintiff replies that the amended complaint adequately alleges antitrust injury based on the addition of further alleged anticompetitive conduct, which supplemented Plaintiff's original complaint of predatorily low reimbursement rates, including unnecessary audits, unfair steering, and inefficient procedure codes and requirements. Dkt. No. 48 at 2,4-6.

[11] Specifically, Plaintiff contends that Highland has attempted "multiple times" to buy out Plaintiff's practice and get Plaintiff to "join Highmark's own system at St. Vincent Hospital." Dkt. No. 42 at ¶ 48. According to Plaintiff, this behavior constitutes a pattern in which "Highmark aims to absorb its rivals in the outpatient patient services market, or put them out of business." Dkt. No. 48 at 4.

As it is the complaint that must "state[] a plausible claim for relief," the Court examines the amended complaint critically to see if it has met the minimal standard necessary to survive a motion to dismiss. Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 679 (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556). The central contention of the amended complaint remains Plaintiff's allegations of predatorily low reimbursement rates and independent physicians' inability to escape or bargain around such cuts based on Highmark's claimed monopsony. As the Court previously held in the September Order, Plaintiff's allegations regarding rate reductions, even when coupled with the All Products Clause, do not suffice to establish antitrust injury or a substantive claim under Section 2. See Dkt. 35 at 10-14 (holding [19] that there is no "harm to the market" when insurers, even with monopsony power, "contractually extract, and then pay, noncompetitive prices to medical providers") (citing Kartell, 749 F.2d at 927)) (emphasis in original).

In its amended complaint, however, Plaintiff has added substantive claims of additional anticompetitive conduct that it alleges has and will continue to cause adverse effects on competition and consumers. First, Plaintiff claims it and other independent physicians have been subjected to unnecessary audits as a means to "claw-back" previously disbursed reimbursements that "interfere with treatment decisions." Dkt. No. 42 at ¶¶ 12,49-50. Plaintiff claims that Highmark "does not subject physicians working at Highmark-controlled facilities to the same scrutiny." Id. at ¶ 12. These audits hurt independent physicians by "rais[ing] [physicians'] costs" and "diverting resources away from providing outpatient colorectal services to patients." Id. at ¶ 50.

Second, Plaintiff alleges that Highmark subjects independent physicians to inefficient procedure codes and requirements. Dkt. No. 42 at ¶ 51. These procedure codes have forced Plaintiff to schedule patients for two different [20] "procedures," where one would suffice, subjecting patients to "inconvenience and burden" not to mention any pain and discomfort resultant from the procedures themselves. Id.

Finally, Plaintiff alleges that Highmark uses its dominance and market presences to "steer" patients away from independent physicians to its own facility. See Dkt. No. 42 at ¶ 12, 46 ("Highmark seeks to . . . steer patients away from independent physicians and to Highmark-controlled providers"), ¶¶ 53-57 (recounting the experiences of patients A through D, who report to Plaintiff attempts by hospital staff at Highland facilities to steer them away from care at independent physicians). "This includes," according to Plaintiff, allegations that Highmark has "misrepresent[ed]" to patients that Plaintiff's physicians do not have admitting privileges at St. Vincent, when they do, and that patients must use St. Vincent physicians only. Id. at ¶ 53.

When these allegations are taken in concert with Plaintiff's allegations of predatory reimbursement reductions, market dominance, and alleged coercion through the use of the All Product Clause, a facially plausible pleading emerges. See Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678. [*500] First, there is plausible harm to competition. Plaintiff [21] has alleged that Highmark uses its dominance on the "buy side" of the market, including insisting on unnecessary audits, inefficient procedure codes, and predatorily low reimbursement rates, to drive up the costs for and lower the income of independent physicians. All the while, according to Plaintiff, Highmark does not subject its own facilities to such treatment. And, according to Plaintiff, independent physicians "cannot avoid the anticompetitive or predatory effects" of Highmark's actions based on its market dominance, and its non-negotiable insistence on the All Products Clause. Dkt. No. 42 at ¶ 12. "This has and will result," according to Plaintiff, "in independent physicians providing fewer outpatient physician services, or going out of business entirely." Id. at ¶ 6. Additionally, "independent physicians have lost substantial money as a result of Highmark's predatory reimbursement rates and related practices." Id. at ¶ 11. In fact, this is the entire point according to Plaintiff, as Highland's dominance on the insurance end of the market allows it to unfairly compete on the physician services end of the market, driving independent physicians into the Hobson's choice between absorption or going out of business. [22] Thus, these allegations are enough to establish anticompetitive conduct in differentiated treatment meant to harm competition on the provider side of the market by utilizing monopsony power on the insurance side of the market.

Meanwhile, Plaintiff has also plausibly alleged harm to patients. Through weakening competition between independent physicians and Highmark facilities by exploiting its position as buyers of medical services, Plaintiff alleges that patients have been subjected to a "reduction in the quantity [and] a degradation in the quality of outpatient physician services." Dkt. No. 42 at ¶ 5. This includes patients being subjected to unnecessary procedures, increases in premiums, and the confusion and frustration that potentially arises when being steered away from one's preferred physician based on what insurance allegedly will and will not cover.

These allegations, taken as true and as a whole as the Court must, are sufficient to adequately plead at the 12(b)(6) stage that Highmark has engaged in anticompetitive conduct and that the alleged conduct has caused harm to competition and consumers.

2. Plaintiff Pleads Injury Which Flowed from Anticompetitive Conduct

As stated above, [23] it is not sufficient for Plaintiff to simply allege that there has been anticompetitive conduct that caused harm to the market and consumers. Rather, Plaintiff must also show that it was injured by the anticompetitive conduct and that the injury "flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." Id.

Highmark contends that Plaintiff has failed to sufficiently plead this prong of antitrust injury in the amended complaint. It disputes the amended complaint's contention that Plaintiff "has lost approximately $200,000 to $300,000 annually," Dkt. No. 42 at ¶¶ 11, 47, on two levels. First, Highmark asserts that the loss "is not an antitrust injury because it does not arise" from conduct the type of which the antitrust laws were intended to prevent. Dkt. 47 at 10-11. Second, it attacks the figure directly by asserting that the alleged losses are insufficient because they "say[] nothing about whether and to what extent those losses relate to reimbursements from Highmark or other payors, how Highmark's reimbursements relate to Plaintiff's costs," etc. Dkt. 49 at 3-4. Plaintiff simply responds that it has alleged [*501] proper injury based on the claimed losses of "$200,000 to $300,000 annually [24] due to Highmark's predatory rates." Dkt. No. 48 at 5.

While Plaintiff's pleading regarding injury stemming from anticompetitive conduct is barebones, it is sufficient to survive this stage of the pleadings. Plaintiff has alleged an injury, "$200,000 to $300,000 annually," resulting from a "rates drop below its costs for numerous procedures" attributable to "predatorily depressed reimbursement rates." Dkt. No. 42 at ¶ 47. Plaintiff has also alleged that Highmark's anticompetitive conduct, in the form of unnecessary audits and inefficient procedure codes "raise its costs" and "divert[] resources away from providing" patient care. Id. at ¶ 50. This is a sufficient allegation of losses stemming from anticompetitive conduct.

As such, Plaintiff has established a showing of antitrust injury, which comports with the goals of antitrust law. See Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678. In essence, the inquiry into antitrust standing and antitrust injury is a question of whether the right plaintiff is before a court to assert a private cause of action under the antitrust laws. See Associated Gen. Contractors of Cal., Inc. v. Cal. Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 535 n.31, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983) (antitrust standing differs from the constitutional standing requirement of injury in fact in that a court "must make a further determination whether the [25] plaintiff is a proper party to bring a private antitrust action"); Phila. Taxi, 886 F.3d at 343. Plaintiff claims that it, and the putative class it represents, are both direct competitors to and at the mercy of Highmark based on Highmark's unique position as both dominant buyer and competitive seller in the relevant market. Having reviewed the pleadings and relevant case law, the Court determines that at this stage in litigation Plaintiff has demonstrated that it is the correct plaintiff to advance an antitrust claim.

Having so determined, the Court will proceed to examine Plaintiff's substantive claims under Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act.

B. Section 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act

In counts one and three of the amended complaint, Plaintiff charges Highmark with unlawful monopsonization and unlawful attempted monopsonization in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act. Dkt. No. 42 at ¶¶ 81-90, 100-08. Similarly, Plaintiff charges Highmark with unlawful monopsonization and unlawful attempted monopsonization in violation of Pennsylvania common law in counts two and four. Id. at ¶¶ 90-99, 109-17. As these causes of action contain significant overlap, the Court will address them together. See Inter Vest, Inc. v. Bloomberg, L.P., 340 F.3d 144, 158 n.8 (3d Cir. 2003) ("[b]ecause Pennsylvania [26] has no separate antitrust statute, [Plaintiff]'s [Pennsylvania antitrust] 'allegation rises or falls with plaintiff's federal antitrust claims'") (quoting Alvord-Polk, Inc. v. F. Schumacher & Co., 37 F.3d 996, 1014 (3d Cir.1994)).

1. Count 1: Unlawful Monopsonization in Violation of Section 2

Section 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act provides that it is illegal for any person to "monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations." 15 U.S.C. § 2.[12] In order to establish a claim [*502] under Section 2, a plaintiff must allege "(1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." LePage's Inc., 324 F.3d at 149 (quoting United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 86 S. Ct. 1698, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 (1966)).

In its motion to dismiss, Highmark claims that Plaintiff fails to adequately plead the necessary elements for a claim under Section 2 based largely on the same complaint of "conclusory" anticompetitive conduct "unconnected to any antitrust injury." Dkt. No. 47 at 13. Plaintiff's pleading, according to Highmark, fails to allege the second required element of willful acquisition or maintenance of power [27] because, "[a]side from reduced rates" which the Court previously determined could not sustain a Section 2 claim alone under Kartell, Plaintiff has alleged conduct "that is not in fact anticompetitive." Id. at 14.

Plaintiff responds that it has adequately pled a Section 2 claim based on Highmark's dominant position in the market and ability to effect prices, including reducing prices paid to independent providers, while simultaneously raising premiums paid by consumers. Dkt. 48 at 12.

As it relates to the first element, market share, Plaintiff claims that Highmark insures "in excess of" 65-75% of all health insurance enrollees in Western Pennsylvania and "far in excess of' 65-70% of all health insurance enrollees in the Erie County MSA. Dkt. No. 42 at ¶ 2. Similarly, it pleads that Highmark is responsible for buying "at least" 65% of outpatient services in Western Pennsylvania and "well in excess" of 65-75% of the same services in the Erie County MSA. Id. at ¶ 3. Such high market shares are sufficient, at this stage, to plead monopsony power in the relevant markets. See, e.g., In re Mushroom Direct Purchaser Antitrust Litig., 514 F. Supp. 2d 683, 700 (E.D. Pa. 2007) (Plaintiffs at Rule 12(b)(6) stage had "pled sufficiently monopoly power for defendant . . . by alleging that defendant . . . controlled sixty to ninety [28] percent of the [relevant] market.").

As it relates to the second element, that of the "the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power," "[a] monopolist willfully acquires or maintains monopoly power when it competes on some basis other than the merits." LePage's Inc., 324 F.3d at 146-147 (citing Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 605 n. 32, 105 S. Ct. 2847, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467 (1985)). The Court has already established that Plaintiff has sufficiently pled that Highmark engaged in anticompetitive conduct and that such conduct caused injury to competition and consumers to survive a 12(b)(6) motion. See supra at 12-16. As such, the Court finds that Plaintiff has sufficiently pled a claim under Section 2 to survive a 12(b)(6) challenge. See Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678.

2. Count 3: Unlawful Attempted Monopsonization in Violation of Section 2

In order to establish a claim of attempted monopolization, a plaintiff must sufficiently plead "(1) that the defendant has engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct with (2) a specific intent to monopolize and (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power." *Race Tires [503] Am., 614 F.3d at 75 (quoting Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 456, 113 S. Ct. 884, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1993)).

Highmark attacks Plaintiff's pleading of attempted monopsonization on the independent ground that Plaintiff has failed to adequately allege intent. Dkt. No. 47 at 15 n.5. As the Court stated in the September Order, "Plaintiff understandably has trouble" [29] setting forth sufficient allegations as it has "assumed that Highmark already has monopsony power." Dkt. No. 35 at 15. Plaintiff responds that the amended complaint alleges that "Highmark acted with anticompetitive purpose to gain unlawful market power" sufficient to meet the intent requirement of attempted monopsonization. Dkt. No. 48 at 16.

[12] The Court applies the same standard as a claim of monopoly to this situation of an allege monopsony based on the close "kinship between monopoly and monopsony," which suggests that "similar legal standards should apply to claims of monopolization and to claims of monopsonization." Weyerhaeuser Co., 549 U.S. at 322.

The amended complaint charges Highmark with engaging in conduct that "had and continues to have an anticompetitive purpose and effect on competition" that was not "offset by any procompetitive benefits." Dkt. 42 at ¶¶ 102, 111. "[E]vidence that business conduct is 'not related to any apparent efficiency' may constitute proof of specific intent to monopolize." Broadcom Corp. v. Qualcomm Inc., 501 F.3d 297, 318 (3d Cir. 2007) (quoting Aspen Skiing, 472 U.S. at 608 n.39). These allegations take the form of the previously mentioned "other anticompetitive conduct" such as unnecessary audits, unfair steering, and inefficient procedure codes meant to "raise [independent physician's] costs" and "divert[] resources away from providing" patient care. Dkt. No. 42 at ¶ 50. These practices, according to the amended complaint, were intended to "reap supra-competitive profits" for Highmark, "entrench its own market power in the outpatient physician services [30] market and private health insurance market," and force independent physicians to either join Highmark or go out of business. Id. at ¶ 44, 48. For example, the amended complaint charges specific conduct as "pretextual," such as audits that have "no medically-related or other legitimate basis." Id. at ¶ 50. Further, the amended complaint alleges that Highmark's procedure codes "result in gross inefficiencies" motivated by "forc[ing] Presque Isle, a competitor, to spend more time on less efficacious treatments on the hope that patients will become frustrated and switch" care providers. Id. at ¶ 51. These pleadings are sufficient to establish the intent element under Iqbal's standards. See Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678.

3. Counts 2 and 4: Unlawful Monopsonization and Unlawful Attempted Monopsonization in Violation of Pennsylvania Common Law

Highmark advances no independent grounds for dismissal of Plaintiff's Pennsylvania common law antitrust causes of action. Instead, Highmark's motion to dismiss merely contends that, if the Court dismisses Plaintiff's causes of action under the Sherman Antitrust Act, "it must also dismiss" the common law claims "which are based on identical allegations." Dkt. 47 at 6 n.2 (citing Inter Vest, 340 F.3d at 158 n.8 [31] ; Alvord-Polk, 37 F.3d at 1014). Plaintiff concedes that the elements necessary to plead a Pennsylvania common law antitrust claim are "substantially similar" to its federal claims. Dkt. 48 at 12 n.2.

This, however, is not the full picture. "Pennsylvania has no general antitrust statute, nor any statute creating a private right of action against restraints of trade." *In re K-Dur Antitrust Litig., No. 01-1652, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 71767, 2008 WL 2660778, at 3 (D.N.J. Feb. 25, 2008). In fact, the Pennsylvania courts that have examined the issue have expressly concluded that no private remedy for damages is available under Pennsylvania law. XF Enters. v. BASF [*504] Corp., 47 Pa. D. & C.4th 147, 149-51 (Ps. Com. Pl. 2000) ("[w]ithout legislation similar to the Sherman Act's, Pennsylvania common law lacks the damage provision necessary to give Pennsylvanians the cause of action which plaintiff seeks here"); see also *Stutzle v. Rhone-Poulenc S.A., No. 002768 Oct. Term 2002, 2003 Phila. Ct. Com. Pl. LEXIS 74, 2003 WL 22250424, at 1 (Pa. Com. Pl. Sept. 26, 2003) ("No date, no court in Pennsylvania has held that a private remedy is available for damages under Pennsylvania's common law on antitrust violations"). Numerous federal courts have followed this guidance, disallowing claims for damages under Pennsylvania common law for antitrust violations to proceed. See, e.g., In re Suboxone (Buprenorphine Hydrochloride & Naloxone) Antitrust Litig., 64 F. Supp. 3d 665, 710 (E.D. Pa. 2014); *In re K-Dur Antitrust Litig., 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 71768, 2008 WL 2660780, at 4; In re TFT-LCD (Flat Panel) Antitrust Litig., 586 F. Supp. 2d 1109, 1131 (N.D. Cal. 2008); In re Static Random Access Memory (SRAM) Antitrust Litig., 580 F. Supp. 2d 896, 905-06 (N.D. Cal. 2008).

Plaintiff's complaint does seek injunctive relief. Dkt. No. 42 at ¶¶ 99, 117. As such, the Court grants Highmark's motion to dismiss Plaintiff's Pennsylvania common law antitrust claims, [32] counts 2 and 4, so far as it seeks damages but not so far as it seeks injunctive relief. See *AlarMax Distribs. v. Tyco Safety Prod. Canada Ltd., No. 7-1744, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 49623, 2008 WL 2622899, at 4 (W.D. Pa. June 27, 2008) (declining to dismiss claim asserted under Pennsylvania law where Plaintiff sought only injunctive relief).

C. Section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act

Similar in structure to its Section 2 claims, Plaintiff advances causes of action for unlawful restraint of trade in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act in counts five and seven and Pennsylvania common law in counts six and eight. Dkt. No. 42 at ¶¶ 118-153. All four causes of action rest on a theory of unlawful tying, i.e., that Highmark violated antitrust laws by "unlawfully tying the reimbursement of outpatient physician services . . . under any of its health insurance products to the reimbursement of the same under any of its other health insurance products." Id. at ¶¶ 119, 128, 137, 146. Highmark seeks to dismiss all four causes of action for the simple reason that there is no precedent to assert a tying theory against an alleged monopsonist. Dkt. 47 at 18 ("Plaintiff has to date failed to identify any cases in which the court found that a contract between a plaintiff and a defendant [33] can form the basis of a buy-side tying claim.").

Section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act outlaws "[e]very contract ... in restraint of [interstate or international] trade or commerce." 15 U.S.C. § 1. Tying, in turn, is the practice of "selling one good (the tying product) on the condition that the buyer also purchase another, separate good (the tied product)." Gordon v. Lewistown Hosp., 423 F.3d 184, 213 (3d Cir. 2005) (citing Town Sound & Custom Tops, Inc. v. Chrysler Motors Corp., 959 F.2d 468, 475 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 506 U.S. 868, 113 S. Ct. 196, 121 L. Ed. 2d 139 (1992)). There are two theories under which to prove an illegal tying agreement; per se and the rule of reason. Brokerage Concepts, Inc. v. U.S. Healthcare, Inc., 140 F.3d 494, 511 (3d Cir. 1998).

A plaintiff may establish a per se claim by showing that "(I) a defendant seller ties two distinct products; (2) the seller possesses market power in the tying product market; and (3) a substantial amount of interstate commerce is affected." Town Sound & Custom Tops, 959 F.2d at 477; see also Gordon, 423 F.3d at 214. If a plaintiff can make such a showing, [*505] "then the defendant's tying practices are automatically illegal without further proof of anticompetitive effect." Town Sound & Custom Tops, 959 F.2d at 477. If, however, a plaintiff cannot make such a showing, the plaintiff may still establish an illegal tying agreement by demonstrating that the agreement violated the "rule of reason," by showing that the tying agreement "unreasonably restrained competition." Brokerage Concepts, 140 F.3d at 519 (quoting Jefferson Par. Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 29, 104 S. Ct. 1551, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2 (1984) ("Jefferson Parish")).

The Court need not, however, proceed [34] to the substantive requirements of a prima facia case, because the principals underlying a tying claim's illegality do not extend from the established case of a monopolist to a monopsonist. "The law is well developed as to when tying arrangements should give rise to liability under the Sherman Act." Brokerage Concepts, 140 F.3d at 511. Elaborations on the underlying principle for the illegality of tying agreements consistently emphasize concerns over sellers' market power, not buyers. See, e.g., Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 13-14 (1984) ("we have condemned tying arrangements when the seller has some special ability—usually called 'market power'—to force a purchaser to do something that he would not do in a competitive market"); Times-Picayune Pub. Co. v. United States, 345 U.S. 594, 611, 73 S. Ct. 872, 97 L. Ed. 1277 (1953) ("the essence of illegality in tying agreements is the wielding of monopolistic leverage; a seller exploits his dominant position in one market to expand his empire into the next"); Gordon, 423 F.3d at 214 ("[t]he essential characteristic of a tying arrangement lies in the seller's exploitation of its control over the tying product to force the buyer into the purchase of a tied product that the buyer either did not want at all, or might have preferred to purchase elsewhere on different terms"); Brokerage Concepts, 140 F.3d at 510 ("[t]he antitrust concern over tying arrangements arises when [35] the seller can exploit its market power in the tying market to force buyers to purchase the tied product which they otherwise would not, thereby restraining competition in the tied product market); Allen-Myland, Inc. v. Int'l Bus. Machines Corp., 33 F.3d 194, 200 (3d Cir. 1994) ("the antitrust concern over tying arrangements is limited to those situations in which the seller can exploit its power in the market for the tying product to force buyers to purchase the tied product when they otherwise would not, thereby restraining competition in the tied product market"); Town Sound & Custom Tops, 959 F.2d at 475 ("[t]he cases thus reveal a concern that a monopolist in the tying product market may use that leverage to garner sales in a second market, thereby foreclosing competitors and monopolizing the formerly competitive tied product market too") (emphasis added to all).

As Highmark points out, tying arrangements raise antitrust concerns among courts for three prominent reasons. Dkt. No. 47 at 18-20. First, such agreements foreclose markets to competitors. See e.g., N Pac. Ry. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1,6, 78 S. Ct. 514, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545 (1958) ("[t]hey deny competitors free access to the market for the tied product, not because the party imposing the tying requirements has a better product or a lower price but because of his power or leverage in another market"). Second, they create [36] barriers to entry for new entrants. See, e.g., Town Sound & Custom Tops, 959 F.2d at 475 ("the arrangement may raise barriers to entry to the tied product market because new entrants would have to sell both tied and tying products to compete"). Finally, tying arrangements are a concern because, quite simply, they force [*506] consumers to buy a product they do not want, offending free will and distorting demand. See, e.g., N. Pac. Ry. Co., 356 U.S. at 6 ("buyers are forced to forego their free choice between competing products"); Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 12 ("[w]hen such 'forcing' is present, competition on the merits in the market for the tied item is restrained and the Sherman Act is violated"). Plaintiff does not refute this underlying logic. See, generally, Dkt. No. 48 at 17-20.

As Highmark points out, Plaintiff is unable to identify a case in which a court extended tying liability to a monopsonist. Dkt. No. 47 at 18. The Court is also unable to find such a case. As such, the Court will dismiss Plaintiff's amended unlawful restraint of trade counts of action under violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act and Pennsylvania common law without leave to amend.

D. Parker State Action Doctrine

In the event that the Court declined to dismiss some or all of the Plaintiff's antitrust claims, [37] as it has, Highmark contends it is "insulated from antitrust liability by the [Parker] state action doctrine." Dkt. No. 47 at 21. The Parker doctrine descends from Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 63 S. Ct. 307, 87 L. Ed. 315 (1943), in which the Supreme Court held that States are immune from antitrust liability because the purpose of the Sherman Antitrust Act "was to suppress combinations to restrain competition and attempts to monopolize by individuals and corporations" and gave "no hint" that it was intended to "restrain state action or official action directed by a state." Id. at 351; see also Edinboro Coll. Park Apartments v. Edinboro Univ. Found., 850 F.3d 567, 572-73 (3d Cir. 2017). The underlying justification rests on "principles of federalism and state sovereignty," Hoover v. Ronwin, 466 U.S. 558, 567, 104 S. Ct. 1989, 80 L. Ed. 2d 590 (1984), recognizing that "[a]ntitrust laws do not bar anticompetitive restraints that sovereign states impose "as an act of government,"' A.D. Bedell Wholesale Co. v. Philip Morris Inc., 263 F.3d 239, 254 (3d Cir. 2001) (quoting Parker, 317 U.S. at 352).

Highmark claims, in essence, that the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania effectively inoculated any of Highmark's alleged anticompetitive conduct through approval of the PPA[13] and the All Products Clause contained therein. Under Pennsylvania administrative code, health insurers, such as Highmark, are required to "submit the standard form of each type of health care provider contract," such as the PPA, and any "material change or amendment" thereafter, to the Pennsylvania Department [38] of Health ("DOH"). 28 Pa. Code § 9.722(a)—(b). Highmark submits, as Exhibit A to the Declaration of Attorney William J. Sheridan, the August 26, 2009 DOH correspondence approving the PPA presently at issue. Dkt. No. 47-2.[14] Through [*507] DOH's approval, Highmark asserts, "any allegedly anticompetitive terms in the PPA are immune from antitrust liability." Dkt. No. 47 at 24.

[13] The "Professional (or Participating or Preferred) Provider Agreement," which is the standard form contract governing the relations between the parties. See supra at 4.

[14] The parties disagree as to whether the Court may consider Exhibit A. Compare Dkt. No. 48 at 24 n.7 (Plaintiff arguing that the Court should "strike or disregard" the Exhibit because "[a] court may not consider materials outside the pleadings on a Rule 12(b)(6) motion") (citing Pension Benefit Guar. v. White Consol. Indus., Inc., 998 F.2d 1192, 1196 (3d Cir. 1993); Fed. R. Evid. 201(b)) with Dkt. No. 49 at 9 n.6 (Defendants arguing that the Court may consider Exhibit A "because it is a matter of public record") (citing Pension Benefit Guar., 998 F.2d at 1197). The Court finds that it may consider Exhibit A as a "matter of public record." See Pension Benefit Guar., 998 F.2d at 1197) ("Courts have defined a public record, for purposes of what properly may be considered on a motion to dismiss, to include ... letter decisions of government agencies.").

Plaintiff contests the applicability of the Parker doctrine to this case. In its opposition, Plaintiff in essence argues that Highmark's Parker contentions are both too broad and too deep. First, Plaintiff claims that its allegations of antitrust conduct extend beyond the PPA and the All Products Clause. See Dkt. No. 48 at 21. Thus, Highmark's invocation of the Parker doctrine sweeps too broadly in attempting to immunize all of Highmark's alleged anticompetitive actions simply through the State's approval of the PPA. Second, Plaintiff claims that Highmark extends the Parker doctrine too deeply, attempting to expand a simple ministerial approval into an expression of state policy approving anticompetitive conduct. See id. at 22-24. In this instance, Plaintiffs arguments carry the day.

In order to invoke the protections of the Parker doctrine in this instance, Highmark must pass [39] a "rigorous" two-part test: "[f]irst, the state must enact a 'clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed' policy permitting anticompetitive conduct; and second, the State must 'actively supervise[ ]' that conduct." Edinboro Coll. Park Apartments, 850 F.3d at 573 (quoting Cal. Retail Liquor Dealers Ass'n v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97, 105, 100 S. Ct. 937, 63 L. Ed. 2d 233 (1980)).[15] Highmark bears the burden of establishing this affirmative defense. Yeager's Fuel, Inc. v. Pennsylvania Power & Light Co., 22 F.3d 1260, 1266 (3d Cir. 1994) (listing cases).

As to the first prong, that of "clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed," "[i]t is not enough that . . . anticompetitive conduct is 'prompted' by state action; rather, anticompetitive activities must be compelled by direction of the State acting as a sovereign." Midcal Aluminum, 445 U.S. at 104 (quoting Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, 421 U.S. 773, 791, 95 S. Ct. 2004, 44 L. Ed. 2d 572 (1975)). Further, "Midcal confirm[ed]" that States could not "confer antitrust immunity on private persons by fiat." F.T.C. v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 504 U.S. 621, 633, 112 S. Ct. 2169, 119 L. Ed. 2d 410 (1992). Instead, competition may only be displaced "if the displacement is both intended by the State and implemented in its specific details." Id. "State-action immunity is disfavored," id. at 636, and thus is applicable "only when it is clear that the challenged anticompetitive conduct is undertaken pursuant to a regulatory scheme that 'is the State's own,'" *F.T.C. v. Phoebe Putney Health Sys., Inc., 568 U.S. 216, 225, 133 S. Ct. 1003, 185 [508] L. Ed. 2d 43 (2013) (quoting Ticor Title Ins., 504 U.S. at 635). While it is true that "[i]t is not necessary . . . for the state legislature to have stated explicitly" within [40] the statute that it intended to displace competition, Town of Hallie v. City of Eau Claire, 471 U.S. 34, 42, 105 S. Ct. 1713, 85 L. Ed. 2d 24 (1985) ("Hallie"), the anticompetitive effect must be the "'foreseeable result' of the state's authorization." Edinboro Coll. Park Apartments, 850 F.3d at 580 (quoting Hallie, 471 U.S. at 41).

Regarding the second prong, "active supervision," the inquiry is whether the State has "exercised sufficient independent judgment and control" to establish that the anticompetitive conduct was sanctioned "as a product of deliberate state intervention." Ticor Title Ins. Co., 504 U.S. at 634-35. "The active supervision requirement stems," after all, "from the recognition that [w]here a private party is engaging in the anticompetitive activity, there is a real danger that he is acting to further his own interests, rather than the governmental interests of the State.'" Patrick v. Burget, 486 U.S. 94, 100, 108 S. Ct. 1658, 100 L. Ed. 2d 83 (1988) (quoting Hallie, 471 U.S. at 47). Through "active 29 supervision," then, States may ensure that only conduct that "actually further[s] state regulatory policies," as compared to the interests of the private party, are protected. Id. at 101.

With these principles in mind, Highmark's appeal to the Parker doctrine is unavailing for two independent reasons. First, Highmark is incorrect that all of Plaintiff's alleged harms flow from the All Products Clause and the PPA, the state approval of which provides the basis for its invocation of the Parker doctrine. See Dkt. [41] No. 47 at 21. As Plaintiff replies, "[t]he all products clause is but one aspect of Highmark's anticompetitive behavior." Dkt. 48 at 20. As previously discussed, Plaintiff's amended complaint alleges other anticompetitive conduct, which the Court considered to determine whether Plaintiff had met the pleading requirements to establish anticompetitive conduct. See supra at 12-16. Plaintiff's amended complaint characterizes the All Products clause as an exacerbating factor, not a sole factor. See, e.g. Dkt. No. 42 at ¶ 13. There is no indication in the Pennsylvania administrative code, or Exhibit A, that Pennsylvania approved of Plaintiff's alleged other anticompetitive conduct or the reduced rates of primary concern to Plaintiff. As such, Highmark has failed to make a prima facia showing that the Parker doctrine is broadly applicable to all the alleged conduct.

[15] The Supreme Court has devised "three approaches" to analyzing a Parker doctrine defense: "(1) ipso facto immunity, (2) Midcal scrutiny, and (3) Hallie scrutiny." Edinboro Coll. Park Apartments, 850 F.3d at 572 (referencing California Retail Liquor Dealers Ass'n v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97, 100 S. Ct. 937, 63 L. Ed. 2d 233 (1980) and Town of Hallie v. City of Eau Claire, 471 U.S. 34, 105 S. Ct. 1713, 85 L. Ed. 2d 24 (1985)). Which applies is determined by whether the "relevant actor" is "comparable to a sovereign power, a private business, or something in between." Id. at 572. Here, both parties utilize the Midcal standard. See Dkt. No. 47 at 22; Dkt. No. 48 at 21 (citing to Edinboro Coll, Park Apartments, 850 F.3d 567). This is the correct standard as "Midcal analysis applies where private actors seek to immunize their anticompetitive conduct under the Parker doctrine" and Highmark is a private actor. Edinboro Coll. Park Apartments, 850 F.3d at 573 (citing Midcal, 445 U.S. at 106).

Second, Highmark fails to meet the substantive requirements of the Midcal standard. Quite simply, Highmark overstates the extent of Pennsylvania's approval of its actions through submission and review of the draft PPA. For example, Section 9.722 contains no indication that the DOH reviews for antitrust concerns, let alone expresses a "clearly articulated [42] and affirmatively expressed" state policy to permit anticompetitive conduct. See generally 28 Pa. Code § 9.722. To the contrary, DOH's affirmative obligations evidence a concern for consumer protection, for example by (1) prohibiting retaliatory clauses against healthcare providers who "[a]dvocate for medically necessary and appropriate health care services for an enrollee" or who file grievances on behalf of an enrollee, id. at § 9.722(c), and (2) requiring certain consumer protection provisions, for example, "[l]anguage stating that enrollee records shall be kept confidential by the plan and the health care provider," id. at § 9.722(e). There is simply no evidence in the statute of antitrust concerns and, as Plaintiff points out, Highmark "cannot and [*509] does not point to any Pennsylvania legislative decree empowering Highmark to act anticompetitively." Dkt. No. 48 at 22.

Nor does the submission of annual and quarterly reports, as required by 28 Pa. Code § 9.604 and pointed to by Highmark, see Dkt. No. 47 at 23-24, prove "active supervision" where, again, the provision evidences no condoning of anticompetitive activity. Nothing within either texts provides evidence of a policy approving all the possible negative ramifications that may arise from [43] the contract or inoculating plans from federal antitrust scrutiny.

Exhibit A is similarly unavailing. It evidences nothing more than that DOH "reviewed the changes" to the most recent PPA and had "no objections to them." Dkt. 47-2 at 2. Again, there is no indication that DOH, in its review, was concerned with, or even reviewed for, anticompetitive conduct let alone that Pennsylvania asserted an affirmative policy to condone such conduct. The letter is evidence of nothing more than a ministerial approval and, as the Supreme Court has made clear, 'simple permission to play in a market' does not 'foreseeably entail permission to roughhouse in that market unlawfully.'" Phoebe Putney Health Sys., 568 U.S. at 231 (quoting Kay Elec. Cooperative v. Newkirk, 647 F.3d 1039, 1043 (10th Cir. 2011)). As such, Highmark's invocation of the Parker doctrine is unavailing, and Plaintiffs surviving antitrust claims may proceed.

E. Count Nine: Unjust Enrichment

Having determined that at least some of Plaintiff's antitrust causes of action may stand, the Court will address the pendant common law causes of action. The first of which, in count nine, is Plaintiff's claim of unjust enrichment based on the allegation that Highmark "knowingly received and retained wrongful benefits. . . in the form of [] the difference in [44] the amount of the reimbursement rates and claw-back 'audits' as well as "other wrongfully held amounts." Dkt. No. 42 at ¶ 155.

Highmark moves to dismiss this cause of action based on the contention that "'[a] cause of action for unjust enrichment may arise only when a transaction of the parties [is] not otherwise governed by an express contract.'" Dkt. No. 47 at 24 (quoting Villoresi v. Femminella, 2004 PA Super 256, 856 A.2d 78, 84 (Pa. Super. Ct. 2004)). As the PPA governs the relationship between the parties, Highmark argues this cause of action should be dismissed.

Plaintiff responds by pointing out that Highmark has not challenged the sufficiency of Plaintiff's pleading of the necessary elements of an unjust enrichment claim, but rather whether such a claim may advance in the face of the PPA. Plaintiff cites a similarly situated recent Eleventh Circuit case and also argues that it may plead unjust enrichment in the alternative, under on Fed. R. Civ. Pro. 8(d)(3), based on the Court's earlier suggestion in the September Order that the PPA might not cover all of Highmark's health insurance products. See Dkt. No. 35 at 6 n.8.

The Court is persuaded that Highmark is correct. First, as Highmark points out, under both Third Circuit precedent and Pennsylvania law unjust enrichment is inapposite [45] where a valid contract exists. See Grudkowski v. Foremost Ins. Co., 556 F. App'x 165, 169-70 (3d Cir. 2014) ("'the doctrine of unjust enrichment is inapplicable when the relationship between parties is founded upon a written agreement or express contract'") (quoting Wilson Area Sch. Dist. v. Skepton, 586 Pa. 513, 895 A.2d 1250, 1254 (Pa. 2006)). Nowhere in its complaint or subsequent pleadings [*510] has Plaintiff claimed that the PPA is invalid. See generally Dkt. No. 42.

Plaintiff's sole precedential support is unavailing. It points to only one out-of-Circuit case, Quality Auto Painting Ctr. Of Roselle, Inc. v. v. State Farm Indem. Co., 870 F.3d. 1262 (11th Cir. 2017), for the proposition that "the existence of the PPA does not extinguish" its unjust enrichment claim. Dkt. No. 48 at 28. That case, however, rested its conclusion on an assumption that a valid contract did not exist between the parties. See Quality Auto Painting Ctr. of Roselle, 870 F.3d at 1277 ("[a]ssuming the truth of the allegations and drawing inferences in favor of the [Plaintiffs], the [Defendants] forced the [Plaintiffs] to perform repairs, and any dealing between the [Plaintiffs] and the [Defendants] was based on an invalid, unenforceable contract"). Here, however, we have an unchallenged, valid agreement between the parties.[16]

As for Plaintiff's contention that it may plead unjust enrichment in the alternative based on the Court's observation in the September Order that [46] the PPA might not cover all of Highmark's health insurance products, it has been overtaken by subsequent pleadings. In its amended complaint, Plaintiff now pleads that "Highmark applies the PPA to all of its products, including those that were not extant at the time an independent physician might have signed it." Dkt. No. 42 at ¶ 16 (emphasis added). As such, the Court is now persuaded that the PPA, and the All Products Clause, covers the entirety of Highmark's health insurance products and relationship with Plaintiff. As such, Plaintiff's claim for unjust enrichment is futile given the existence of the PPA and the lack of contention that it is invalid or does not control. See Gorecki v. Clearview Elec., Inc., 338 F. Supp. 3d 470, 476 (W.D. Pa. 2018) ("[a] claim for unjust enrichment may be pleaded in the alternative to other contract claims, but 'such alternative pleading is plausible only when the validity of the contract is itself actually disputed, making unjust enrichment a potentially available remedy'") (quoting Grudkowski, 556 F. App'x at 170 n.8).

The Court therefore will dismiss Plaintiff's cause of action for unjust enrichment with prejudice.

F. Count Ten: Breach of Contract and Implied Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing Plaintiff pleads its claim for breach of contract and breach of implied covenant of good [47] faith and fair dealing in one count. As the parties have argued separate theories for dismissing or maintaining these separate grounds, the Court will address them in turn.

1. Breach of Contract

Plaintiff does not allege a breach of the terms of the PPA itself. Instead, the amended complaint accuses Highmark of violating the ACA's antidiscrimination provision,[17] which the PPA in turn incorporates [*511] by reference.[18] See

---

[16] Even more fatal to Plaintiff's argument, however, is the fact that the Eleventh Circuit, sitting en banc, subsequently reversed this very holding on this very point, albeit after Plaintiff filed its memorandum in opposition to Highmark's motion to dismiss. See Quality Auto Painting Ctr. of Roselle, Inc. v. State Farm Indem. Co., 917 F.3d 1249, 1272-73 (11th Cir. 2019) (en banc) ("[Plaintiffs] cite no law—in any of the four states—to the effect that market power alone is sufficient to invalidate a contract voluntarily entered into").

[17] The ACA provides: "A group health plan and a health insurance issuer offering group or individual health insurance coverage shall not discriminate with respect to participation under the plan or coverage against any health care provider who is acting within the scope of that provider's license or certification under applicable State law. This section shall not require that a group health plan or health insurance issuer contract with any health care provider willing to abide by the terms and conditions for

Dkt. No. 42 at ¶ 164-68. "By discriminating in reimbursement rates on a basis other than quality of care," alleges Plaintiff, "Highmark has materially, continuously breached" the PPA. Id. at ¶ 168.

While Highmark contests whether it materially violated the provisions of the ACA, Highmark chiefly argues that Plaintiff cannot assert a breach of action claim under Pennsylvania law based on the incorporation of a statute which gives Plaintiff no private right of action. Dkt. No. 47 at 25. Plaintiff disagrees based on the substance and understanding of Pennsylvania law and the ACA. See Dkt. No. 48 at 25-6.

The Court finds Petty v. Hosp. Serv. Ass'n of Northeastern Pa., 611 Pa. 119, 23 A.3d 1004 (Pa. 2011) persuasive and controlling for the proposition that Plaintiff cannot assert a claim for breach of contract in this instance. In Petty, Pennsylvania's Supreme [48] Court set out to determine whether an employer could assert a breach of contract claim against a nonprofit hospital corporation that contracted to provide health insurance coverage to the employer's employees. Id. at 123. Employer first sought to hold insurer liable under Pennsylvania's Nonprofit Law, 15 Pa. Stat. and Cons. Stat. Ann. § 5545, but the Court held that Plaintiff did not have standing based on the Law's statutorily prescribed limitation on standing. Id. at 133; see also 15 Pa. Stat. and Cons. Stat. Ann. § 5793(a).

In turn, employer pled a breach of contract claim alleging a violation of the parties' contractual relation based on the incorporation by reference of the Nonprofit Law. Petty, 23 A.3d at 123,133-34. The Pennsylvania Supreme Court, however, held that employer did not have standing to assert such a claim because, in essence, "a party cannot do indirectly what it cannot do directly" or, in other words, the employer could not "base a breach of contract claim on an alleged Nonprofit Law violation when the Nonprofit Law does not provide for a private cause of action." Id. at 134; see also id. at 136 ("we cannot, in this case, permit appellants to do under common law what they are clearly prohibited from doing under statute. . . and hold appellants [49] lack standing to maintain their breach of contract claim").

Plaintiff points to Liss & Marion, P.C. v. Recordex Acquisition Corp., 603 Pa. 198, 983 A.2d 652 (Pa. 2009), to counter the foregoing conclusion by arguing that Liss stands for the proposition that the Pennsylvania Supreme Court permitted a "breach of contract claim to proceed based on excess rates charged for copies of electronic records even though [the] statute setting rates does not create a private right of action." Dkt. No. 48 at 25. Additionally, Plaintiff attempts to distinguish Petty by asserting that "[t]he Petty court expressly distinguished the Nonprofit Law from the statute at issue in Liss." Id. at 26.

[*512] The problem with Plaintiff's argument is that it is incorrect in its assertion that "the ACA lacks any limit on who can sue under it." Dkt. No. 48 at 26. There is fair consensus that the ACA's antidiscrimination provision, 42 U.S.C. § 300gg-5, does not create a private right of action. See A. Z. v. Regence Blueshield, 333 F. Supp. 3d 1069, 1082-83 (W.D. Wash. 2018); *Vorpahl v. Harvard Pilgrim Health Ins. Co., No. 17-0844, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 121316, 2018 WL 3518511, at 5 (D. Mass. July 20, 2018); *Ass'n of N.J. Chiropractors, Inc. v. Horizon Healthcare Servs., No. 16-08400, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 90545, 2017 WL 2560350, at *3-5 (D.N.J. June 13, 2017); Dominion Pathology Labs., P.C. v. Anthem Health Plans of Virginia, Inc., 111 F. Supp. 3d 731, 736 (E.D. Va. 2015). Further still, as Highmark points out, the ACA expressly provides that only the States and secondarily the Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services may enforce the antidiscrimination provision. 42 U.S.C. § 300gg-22. It is therefore not silent on the issue of enforcement, it determines precisely who may and may not sue [50] to enforce its provisions.

participation established by the plan or issuer. Nothing in this section shall be construed as preventing a group health plan, a health insurance issuer, or the Secretary from establishing varying reimbursement rates based on quality or performance measures." 42 U.S.C.A. § 300gg-5; see also Dkt. No. 42 at ¶ 165.

[18] The PPA provides: "Provider and [Keystone Health Plan West] agree to operate, and perform their obligations under this Agreement, in accordance with all applicable Laws." Dkt. No. 42-1 at § 7.1. The definition section then defines "Laws" to include "any applicable foreign, United States, federal, state and/or local constitution, treaty, statute, regulation, rule, code, ordinance, order, policy, directive, injunction, writ, decree, award or the like of any Official Body that is in effect." Dkt. No. 42-1 at Att. 1, § 2.Q.

Liss is distinguishable from the present circumstance. In Liss the incorporated statute, the Medical Records Act ("MRA"), 42 Pa. Stat. and Cons. Stat. Ann. § 6152 et seq., provided no "evidence [of] legislative intent to limit Appellee's common law rights or preempt common law causes of action" and "the legislature did not provide any mechanism or procedure for the resolution of disputes." Liss, 983 A.2d at 660. Thus, as distinguishable from the ACA's antidiscrimination provision, the MRA was a blank slate as to enforcement, whereas the ACA affirmatively does not support a suit by Plaintiff Petty explicitly distinguished Liss on this point. As the Court in Petty stated, "whereas in Liss the legislature intended for the appellants to be subject to the MRA's pricing limits and provided no limitation as to who could raise that challenge, the Nonprofit Act's plain language indicates the legislature did not intend for general consumers to challenge corporate actions in a court of law." Petty, 23 A.3d at 1014. Thus, under Pennsylvania law, Plaintiff does not have standing to assert a breach of contract claim based on the ACA, where it could not enforce its rights directly through the ACA.

2. Covenant of Good Faith and [51] Fair Dealing

The Court, however, will not dismiss this count to the extent that Plaintiff alleges a violation of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing. "Every contract in Pennsylvania imposes on each party a duty of good faith and fair dealing in its performance and its enforcement." Donahue v. Fed. Exp. Corp., 2000 PA Super 146, 753 A.2d 238, 242 (Pa. 2000). Highmark, according to Plaintiff, violated that duty by unilaterally imposing discriminatory reimbursement rate cuts and engaging in other unfair, anticompetitive conduct." Dkt. 42 at ¶ 169. Highmark counters that "[t]o the extent that Plaintiff purports to base its claim" for breach of fiduciary duty on such allegations, dismissal is appropriate because, under Pennsylvania law, such claims must be based on a specific provision of a contract. Dkt. No. 47 at 26 n.8.

Plaintiff's however, can point to such a provision, the variable reimbursement rate clause, which provides that "allowances [paid to specialist] may be reviewed and adjusted from time to time during the Term." Dkt. No. 42-1 at Att. 6.1 § 4.2. Thus, Plaintiff contends that "[e]ven if the PPA affords Highmark the discretion to pay whatever rates it chooses, Highmark still has a duty to exercise its discretion in good faith." Dkt. No. 48 at 27. [52]

Under Pennsylvania law, a duty of good faith "is not divorced from [*513] the specific clauses of the contract and cannot be used to override an express contractual term." Northview Motors, Inc. v. Chrysler Motors Corp., 227 F.3d 78, 91 (3d Cir. 2000). Instead, the duty is defined as "[h]onesty in fact in the conduct or transaction concerned." Creeger Brick & Bldg. Supply Inc. v. Mid-State Bank & Tr. Co., 385 Pa. Super. 30, 560 A.2d 151, 153 (Pa. Super. Ct. 1989) (quoting 13 Pa. Stat. And Cons. Stat. Ann. § 1201). "[C]ourts generally utilize the good faith duty as an interpretive tool to determine 'the parties' justifiable expectations,' and do not enforce an independent duty divorced from the specific clauses of the contract." Duquesne Light Co. v. Westinghouse Elec. Corp., 66 F.3d 604, 617 (3d Cir. 1995) (internal citation removed). As the Pennsylvania Court of Common pleas has stated, after confessing that the duty is "shrouded in mystery and confusion in Pennsylvania," the duty "does not allow for a claim separate and distinct from a breach of contract claim" but rather "a claim arising from a breach of the covenant of good faith must be prosecuted as a breach of contract claim, as the covenant does nothing more than imply certain obligations into the contract itself." JHE, Inc. v. SEPTA, No. 1790 Nov. Term 2001, 2002 Phila. Ct. Com. Pl. LEXIS 78, 2002 WL 1018941, at *5 (Pa. Corn. Pl. May 17, 2002) (emphasis in original).

Pennsylvania Courts have recognized that it is not possible to classify every situation constituting a breach of the duty, but have instead determined that examples include "evasion [53] of the spirit of the bargain, lack of diligence and slacking off, willful rendering of imperfect performance, abuse of a power to specify terms, and interference with or failure to cooperate in the other party's performance." Somers v. Somers, 418 Pa. Super. 131, 613 A.2d 1211, 1213 (Pa. Super. Ct. 1992); see also Phila. Plaza-Phase II v. Bank of Am. Nat. Tr. & Sav. Ass'n, No. 3745 Apr. Term 2002, 2002 Phila. Ct. Com. Pl. LEXIS 14, 2002 WL 1472337, at *6 (Pa. Corn. Pl. June 21, 2002). Relevantly, "[t]he covenant of good faith may also be breached when a party exercises discretion authorized in a contract in an unreasonable way." Phila. Plaza-Phase II, 2002 Phila. Ct. Com. Pl. LEXIS 14, 2002 WL 1472337, at *6 (citing Burke v. Daughters of the Most Holy Redeemer, Inc., 344 Pa. 579, 26 A.2d 460, 461 (Pa. 1942)).

Thus, Plaintiff's breach of contract and implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing may survive to the extent that Plaintiff alleges that Highmark exercised its contractual rights under the variable rates clause in violation of its duty of good faith but not to the extent that either (1) it violated the terms of the PPA by exercising its right to adjust rates in the first place or (2) by adjusting rates it violated the antidiscrimination provision of the ACA.

G. Count Eleven: Reformation and Rescission

Plaintiff's final cause of action is for "reformation or recession." Dkt. No. 42 at ¶¶ 72-80. Through this count, Plaintiff pleads that the PPA "should either be reformed or partially rescinded" based on the contention that "[c]onsent" by Plaintiff and other class members was not "real or free, [54] and/or was given under force, coercion, and/or without consent or mutual material consideration." Id. at ¶ 173-74. The root of this allegation is that the PPA and its terms, including the All Product Clause, "were not fully disclosed" by Highmark or that they were "confusing" and contained "abstruse conditions or terminology." Id. at ¶ 175-76.

Highmark contends that this count should be dismissed because "reformation or rescission" is not a separate cause of action but, instead, constitutes a remedy provided for a breach of contract. Dkt. No. [*514] 47 at 26. Plaintiff disagrees on the substance of Pennsylvania law. Dkt. No. 48 at 27-28.

Thus, the Court must determine whether "reformation or recession" constitute a distinct cause of action under Pennsylvania law. The Court concludes it does. Plaintiff in its reply brief provides several examples of "claims" or "actions" in equity for "reformation" or "recession." Dkt. No. 48 at 27; see, e.g., Keenheel v. Corn., Pennsylvania Sec. Comm'n, 523 Pa. 223, 565 A.2d 1147, 1148 (Pa. 1989) (appellant "commenced this action seeking equitable rescission of the settlement agreement"); Line Lexington Lumber & Millwork Co. v. Pennsylvania Pub. Corp., 451 Pa. 154, 301 A.2d 684, 685 (Pa. 1973) ("[a]ppellant contends that his amended complaint stated a cause of action for reformation of contract. We agree and reverse the order below.); Murray v. Willistown Twp., 2017 PA Super 265, 169 A.3d 84, 90 (Pa. Super. Ct. 2017) ("[b]oth parties agree that contract [55] reformation is an appropriate equitable remedy in this case: the Township sought such reformation in its complaint"); *Baltimore v. Freed, 103 A.3d 888, 2014 Pa. Commw. Unpub. LEXIS 660, 2014 WL 10298875, at 1 (Pa. Commw. Ct. 2014) ("[t]his appeal arises out of a dispute whereby neighboring property owners, Terry and Soni Baltimore (Baltimores), sought reformation of a quitclaim deed."). In fact, one of Highmark's cited cases lends credence to this conclusion. See Moffatt Enterprises, Inc. v. Borden Inc., 807 F.2d 1169, 1174 (3d Cir. 1986) ("Under Pennsylvania law, a defrauded party may pursue several remedies including an action of damages for deceit, recission and restitution based on fraud, and reformation of the contract for fraud.") (Emphasis added). As such, the Court determines that such an action exists under Pennsylvania law.

Alternatively, Highmark claims that Plaintiff's "purported claim for reformation or rescission" should be dismissed because under Pennsylvania law "those equitable remedies are appropriate only where there has been a showing of fraud, accident, or mistake." Dkt. No. 47 at 27 n.9. Here, Highmark is correct on the law. See Moffatt Enterprises, 807 F.2d at 1174 ("[u]nder Pennsylvania law, a defrauded party may pursue several remedies including an action of damages for deceit, recission and restitution *based on frau*d, and reformation of the [56] contract for fraud") (emphasis added); *Clark v. Allstate Ins. Co., No. 10-294, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 45933, 2010 WL 1904013, at 2 (W.D. Pa. May 7, 2010) ("rescission is an equitable remedy that a court may grant when an insurer proves fraud by the insured in obtaining the policy"); Kutsenkow v. Kutsenkow, 414 Pa. 610, 202 A.2d 68, 68-69 (Pa. 1964) ("[i]t has long been the law that courts of equity have the power to reform a written instrument where there has been a showing of fraud, accident or mistake"); Overmiller v. Town & Vill. Ins. Serv., 145 Pa. Super. 347, 21 A.2d 411, 412 (Pa. Super. Ct. 1941) (stating that courts sitting in equity have the power to "direct and to enforce the surrender and cancellation of written instruments for due cause" and "due cause" includes fraud) (internal quotations removed); Penn Park, Inc. v. Pl. 1970) ("[t]his power of a court of equity will be exercised only in clear cases and only where there is a showing of fraud, mistake or lack of consideration").

Plaintiff has pled sufficient fraud or misrepresentation in its amended complaint to survive a 12(b)(6) challenge. As quoted earlier, Plaintiff alleges that the terms of the PAA were not "fully disclosed" or that "Plaintiff and other Class members were forced or induced to enter into a PPA insofar as Highmark coercively required and/or omitted the full terms or actual arrangement concerning reimbursement." [*515] Dkt. No. 42 at ¶¶ 175, 177. Accepting all factual allegations as true and construing the amended [57] complaint in the light most favorable to the Plaintiff, the Court finds these allegations sufficient to satisfy Iqbal's standards. V. CONCLUSION

For the forgoing reasons, the Court ORDERS as follows:

1. Defendants' motion to dismiss [47] is DENIED as to counts 1 and 3.

2. Defendants' motion to dismiss [47] is DENIED as to counts 2 and 4, to the extent that Plaintiff seeks only injunctive relief.

3. Defendants' motion to dismiss [47] is GRANTED as to counts 5, 6, 7, and 8. Counts 5, 6, 7, and 8 are DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE.

4. Defendants' motion to dismiss [47] is GRANTED as to count 9. Count 9 is DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE.

5. Defendants' motion to dismiss [47] is GRANTED in part and DENIED in part as to count 10.

6. Defendants' motion to dismiss [47] is DENIED as to count 11.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

This Order addresses Defendants Earnest Bernard's ("Bernard") Motion to Dismiss [ECF No. 104], Nortek Security and Control LLC's ("Nortek") Motion to Dismiss [ECF No. 106], and Wave Electronics Inc.'s ("Wave") (collectively, "Defendants") Motion to Dismiss [ECF No. 108] (the "Motions"). For the following reasons, the Court grants in part and denies in part the Motions.

I. BACKGROUND

A. Procedural History

Plaintiffs Security Data Supply, LLC ("SDS") and its franchisees ("SDS Franchisees") (collectively, "Plaintiffs") filed this lawsuit on October 12, 2017, in the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana alleging violations of the federal antitrust laws and tortious interference. Resp. 1, 4. Defendants moved to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction, and the Louisiana District Court transferred [*3] the case to this Court an May 31, 2018. See ECF No. 62. During a hearing on September 20, 2018, Plaintiffs orally moved for leave to file an amended complaint, which the Court granted. See ECF No. 99. After Plaintiffs filed their Second Amended Complaint on October 5, 2018, Defendants again moved to dismiss. See ECF Nos. 102, 104, 106, 108. The parties through their counsel appeared before the Court for oral argument on the pending Motions on June 19, 2019.

B. Factual History

Nortek is a leading manufacturer of security, home automation, and personal security systems that distributes its products through wholesale distributors such as SDS. Second Am. Compl. ¶¶ 17-18. Although Nortek maintains a 10% market share of intrusion alarm systems overall, Nortek is the sole manufacturer of 2GIG—"an intelligent connected system for residential intrusion detection." Id. ¶¶ 19-20. Nortek sells its products to wholesale distributors, who then sell it to retailers and installers, who provide the equipment to the end user. Id. ¶ 18. Nortek manufactures and distributes its 2GIG products from California and Colorado. Id. ¶ 37.

Plaintiffs are wholesale distributors of CCTV, intrusion alarm systems, access [*4] control, fire alarms, and home automation systems, including Nortek's 2GIG and other products. Id. ¶¶ 3-15. Plaintiffs maintain outlets in Texas and Louisiana, and have been distributing Nortek's products since 2004. Id. ¶¶ 32-33, 37. Nortek's prices were generally consistent and only varied in limited circumstances, such as when Nortek sold to dealers in extraordinary volume. Id. ¶ 44. Plaintiffs contend that SDS and the SDS Franchisees operate as a single enterprise. Id. ¶¶ 89-92. SDS and the SDS Franchisees have entered into a "Cost Plus [sic] Contract," whereby the SDS Franchisees purchase all of their inventory from SDS for a set price based upon a standard mark-up on the wholesale price, Id. ¶ 90. Thus, "there is a functional or economic unity between SDS ... and its franchisees." Id. ¶ 91. Nortek also treated SDS and the SDS Franchisees as a single enterprise. Id. ¶ 92.

Wave began distributing Nortek's 2GIG products in 2015, and has since been Plaintiffs' direct competitor, maintaining outlets in Texas and Louisiana. Id. ¶¶ 18, 22-23, 35-37. By 2017, Wave became the largest purchaser of 2GIG products. Id. ¶ 38. According to Plaintiffs, this was possible because Nortek and Wave [*5] entered into a special pricing program called the "Four Star Program." Id. ¶¶ 28, 38. Plaintiffs also interviewed former Wave employees aware of the alleged pricing scheme, who told Plaintiffs that the Four Star Program was designed to attract customers to Wave. Id. ¶ 68. This pricing program allegedly involved special rebates that Wave's customers received after the sale was complete. Id. ¶ 45. According to Plaintiffs, the rebate was "kicked back" to Wave, which allowed Wave to earn a significant profit while selling Nortek's products up to 40% below the wholesale price Nortek charged Plaintiffs and other distributors. Id. ¶¶ 45-46, 97.

Although there were some requirements for a customer to obtain special pricing, Wave provided the special pricing to nearly all of its customers, allegedly with Nortek's tacit consent. Id. ¶¶ 47-48. When Plaintiffs inquired about entering into a similar arrangement, Nortek denied the existence of the Four Star Program. Id. ¶ 49. Bernard, Nortek's sales representative, purportedly told Plaintiffs that they were receiving Nortek's best price and that all of the distributors were paying the same amount for Nortek's products. Id.

Plaintiffs allege that Bernard [*6] and other Nortek employees were receiving "bribes ... consisting of payments and American Express gift cards" from Wave in exchange for maintaining the pricing program. Id. ¶¶ 26, 28, 38-39, 53, 70-75. As part of this scheme, Nortek's employees would also identify Plaintiffs' customers to Wave as potential "leads." Id. ¶¶ 60-61. Once Nortek learned of these employees' activities, Bernard resigned and the other employees engaged in the alleged bribery were terminated. Id. ¶ 54. Nonetheless, Plaintiffs allege that even after Nortek discovered the pricing program and allowed Plaintiffs to provide limited special pricing to a handful of their customers, Nortek continued to give Wave preferential treatment. See id. ¶ 62. For example, two days after Plaintiffs had Nortek approve Plaintiffs' longstanding and largest client for special pricing, the client was approached by Wave's branch manager and a Nortek employee about switching to Wave for "even ... better pricing." Id. Nortek also extended Wave's pricing program for an extra sixty days and grandfathered in Wave's top thirty dealers, allowing Wave to maintain an edge over Plaintiffs. Id. ¶ 81.

Moreover, Nortek's outside counsel allegedly [*7] warned Nortek that the pricing program was illegal. Id. ¶ 85. Similarly, Nortek's executives and management allegedly admitted in discussions with Plaintiffs' representatives that the Four Star Program "provided for unfair competition, was illegal and needed to be stopped." Id. ¶¶ 76-85. Nortek's sales manager further admitted that allowing Wave to grandfather in thirty of its best dealers was unfair and "would have a detrimental impact upon the relevant market." Id. ¶ 81. Despite warnings from internal advisers and outside counsel, Nortek allowed the rebate program to continue until the end of 2017. Id. ¶¶ 55-56, 83-87.

Once Nortek phased out the pricing program, Wave entered into a special pricing arrangement with Nortek's competitor, Quolsys. Id. ¶ 57. Plaintiffs allege that all of Wave's customers currently purchase Quolsys products instead of Nortek's 2GIG products. Id. Although the pricing scheme has stopped, Plaintiffs allege that it injured competition. Id. ¶ 93. Plaintiffs allegedly "lost a significant number of customers to Wave, have been unable to compete with Wave for new potential customers and have suffered significant financial losses including the loss of sales, profits [*8] and market share." Id. ¶ 94. By preliminary estimates, Plaintiffs lost approximately 59 existing clients, or $9,575,000 in "annual losses," and an unspecified number of potential customers. Id. ¶¶ 95-98.

Once Nortek began offering Plaintiffs the pricing program, Plaintiffs' sales of 2GIG products increased by 40% between July and December 2017. Id. ¶ 99. In January 2018, however, Nortek pulled its products from Plaintiffs without providing them with the contractually required notice. Id. ¶ 100. Although Plaintiffs offered to pay all of the outstanding invoices for the unsold inventory, Nortek refused to accept the return of unsold merchandise and initiated a lawsuit in California seeking the collection of the past due invoices. Id. ¶ 101.

In response, Plaintiffs initiated the present action. In Count I against Nortek and in Count II against Wave, Plaintiffs allege that Nortek and Wave violated §§ 2(a) and (f) of the Robinson-Patman Act ("RPA"), 15 U.S.C. §§ 13(a) and 13(f), by knowingly inducing, receiving, or engaging in price discrimination. Id. ¶¶ 103-38. In Count III, Plaintiffs allege that Defendants engaged in commercial bribery in violation of RPA § 2(c), 15 U.S.C. § 13(c). Id. ¶¶ 139-51. Finally, Plaintiffs assert claims for tortious [*9] interference in Count IV, against Wave and Bernard, and in Count V,[1] against all Defendants. Id. ¶¶ 152-70.

II. LEGAL STANDARD

To defeat a motion to dismiss filed pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6), a plaintiff must plead "enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570,

[1] There are two sections labeled "Count IV" in the Second Amended Complaint. The Court presumes that this is a numbering error and will refer to the second section labeled Count IV, pleading tortious interference against all Defendants, as Count V.

127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007); Reliable Consultants, Inc. v. Earle, 517 F.3d 738, 742 (5th Cir. 2008). To meet this "facial plausibility" standard, a plaintiff must "plead[] factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). Plausibility does not require probability, but a plaintiff must establish "more than a sheer possibility that a defendant has acted unlawfully." Id. The court must accept well-pleaded facts as true and view them in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. Sonnier v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 509 F.3d 673, 675 (5th Cir. 2007). However, the court does not accept as true "conclusory allegations, unwarranted factual inferences, or legal conclusions." Ferrer v. Chevron Corp., 484 F.3d 776, 780 (5th Cir. 2007). A plaintiff must provide "more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555 (internal citations omitted). "Factual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level ... on the assumption that all the allegations in the complaint are true (even [*10] if doubtful in fact)." Id. (internal citations omitted).

The ultimate question is whether the complaint states a valid claim when viewed in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. Great Plains Tr, Co. v. Morgan Stanley Dean Witter & Co., 313 F.3d 305, 312 (5th Cir. 2002). At the motion to dismiss stage, the court does not evaluate the plaintiff's likelihood of success. It only determines whether the plaintiff has stated a claim upon which relief can be granted. Mann v. Adams Realty Co., 556 F.2d 288, 293 (5th Cir. 1977).

III. ANALYSIS

A. Standing

Defendants moved to dismiss the portions of Counts I and II that are asserted by the SDS Franchisees, arguing that the SDS Franchisees lack standing to assert a claim for price discrimination under RPA § 2. Standing in a private antitrust action for damages arises under § 4 of the Clayton Act. See 15 U.S.C. § 15; J. Truett Payne Co. v. Chrysler Motors Corp., 451 U.S. 557, 562, 101 S. Ct. 1923, 68 L. Ed. 2d 442 (1981) ("[P]roof of a violation does not mean that a disfavored purchaser has been actually 'injured' within the meaning of § 4."); Feeney v. Chamberlain Mfg. Corp., 831 F.2d 93, 95 (5th Cir. 1987) (analyzing an RPA claim for damages under §§ 4 and 7 of the Clayton Act). "Standing to pursue an antitrust suit [exists] only if [Plaintiffs] show[]; '1) injury-in-fact, an injury to [Plaintiffs] proximately caused by [Defendants'] conduct; 2) antitrust injury; and 3) proper plaintiff status ....'" Waggoner v. Denbury Onshore, L.L.C., 612 F. App'x 734, 736 (5th Cir. 2015) (quoting Doctor's Hosp. v. Southeast Medical Alliance, 123 F.3d 301, 305 (5th Cir. 1997)). For the following reasons, the Court finds that the SDS Franchisees have standing [*11] to assert a violation of RPA § 2.

(1) Injury-in-Fact

A court analyzing antitrust standing must first determine whether Plaintiffs have properly alleged an injury-in-fact to their business or property. Norris v. Hearst Tr., 500 F.3d 454, 465 (5th Cir. 2007) (collecting cases); Larry R. George Sales Co. v. Cool Attic Corp., 587 F.2d 266, 270 (5th Cir. 1979). A plaintiff successfully shows injury-in-fact by pleading a decline in sales because of the defendant's conduct, but lacks standing if no actual injury has yet occurred because of the defendant's conduct. Compare Impala African Safaris, LLC v. Dall. Safari Club, Inc., Civ. A, No, 3:13-CV-2175-Impala African Safaris, LLC, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 127660, 2014 WL 4555659, at *5 (N.D. Tex, Sept, 9, 2014) (finding no standing where no injury had occurred), with David L. Aldridge Co. v. Microsoft Corp., 995 F. Supp. 728, 748 (S.D. Tex. 1998) (finding standing where the plaintiff suffered a "significant decline in sales"). In this case, SDS and its franchisees allege that they lost 59 clients and approximately $9,575,000 in annual revenue because of Defendants' discriminatory pricing program. See Second Am, Compl. ¶¶ 95-96. Accordingly, the SDS Franchisees sufficiently pleaded an injury-in-fact.

(2) Antitrust Injury

The Supreme Court has described antitrust injury as:

> [I]njury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful. The injury should reflect the anticompetitive effect either of the violation [*12] or of anticompetitive acts made possible by the violation. It should, in short, be "the type of loss that the claimed violations ... would be likely to cause."

Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977) (alteration in original) (quoting Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 395 U.S. 100, 125, 89 S. Ct. 1562, 23 L. Ed. 2d 129 (1969)); Waggoner, 612 F. App'x at 737. There are three categories of competitive injuries that can give rise to an RPA claim:

> Primary-line cases entail conduct—most conspicuously, predatory pricing—that injures competition at the level of the discriminating seller and its direct competitors. Secondary-line cases, of which this is one, involve price discrimination that injures competition among the discriminating seller's customers (here, [Plaintiffs and Wave]); cases in this category typically refer to "favored" and "disfavored" purchasers. Tertiary-line cases involve injury to competition at the level of the purchaser's customers.

Volvo Trucks N. Am., Inc. v. Reeder-Simco GMC, Inc., 546 U.S. 164, 176, 126 S. Ct. 860, 163 L. Ed. 2d 663 (2006) (citations omitted); Water Craft Mgmt. LLC v. Mercury Marine, 457 F.3d 484, 487 n.2 (5th Cir. 2006). "A hallmark of the requisite competitive injury [in a secondary-line case] ... is the diversion of sales or profits from a disfavored purchaser to a favored purchaser." Volvo Trucks, 546 U.S. at 177 (collecting cases). Here, the Complaint is replete with allegations of the diversion of sales and profits from Plaintiffs to Wave. Plaintiff alleged that the discriminatory pricing program allowed Wave to win [*13] 59 clients and $9,575,000 in annual revenue from Plaintiffs. Id. ¶¶ 94-99. The Complaint thus contains allegations showing the hallmark of the requisite competitive injury. Additionally, Plaintiffs pleaded the existence of significant discriminatory pricing that allowed Wave to sell Nortek products up to 40% below the wholesale price Nortek charged Plaintiffs, see Second Am. Compl. ¶¶ 46, 97, which alone may be sufficient to show injury. See FTC v. Morton Salt Co., 334 U.S. 37, 46-47, 68 S. Ct. 822, 92 L. Ed. 1196, 44 F.T.C. 1499 (1948) (suggesting that the requisite injury can be inferred from a significant price discrimination alone); Hanson v. Pittsburgh Plate Glass Indus., Inc., 482 F.2d 220, 227 (5th Cir. 1973) (same).

Defendants argue that, under Security Tire & Rubber Co. v. Gates Rubber Co., the SDS Franchisees have not suffered an antitrust injury because the SDS Franchisees obtained their inventory only through transfers from SDS, and "transfers from a parent corporation to its wholly-owned subsidiary corporation can never be considered separate sales ... in a[n] [RPA] discrimination suit." 598 F.2d 962, 965 (5th Cir. 1979). Security Tire is inapposite here. In Security Tire, the only evidence of price discrimination was the fact that the defendant favored its wholly-owned subsidiary over the plaintiff. See 598 F.2d at 964-65. The Fifth Circuit held that a defendant's transfer of goods to a wholly-owned [*14] subsidiary would not constitute a "favored sale' for the purposes of the RPA. Id. at 965. Nothing in Security Tire suggests that a plaintiff who otherwise suffered an antitrust injury is precluded from alleging a violation of the RPA solely because the plaintiff obtained its inventory from a parent corporation.[2] Accordingly, the Court finds that the SDS Franchisees adequately pleaded an antitrust injury.

[2] To the extent that Defendants intended to argue that Plaintiffs failed to adequately plead an essential element of a price discrimination claim under the RPA—two separate and contemporaneous sales to two distinct purchasers—Defendants are incorrect, The allegations in Security Tire were deficient because the defendants in that case "did not make a sale to two buyers at the same level of competition" and so the plaintiff "could not have suffered secondary-line injury." Eximco, Inc. v. Trane Co., 737 F.2d 505, 517 (5th Cir. 1984) (discussing Security Tire), Here, however, Plaintiffs adequately pleaded two separate and contemporaneous sales to direct competitors: Wave, which is a corporation that is not Nortek's subsidiary, and Plaintiffs, which are limited liability companies that are not Nortek's subsidiaries. Am. Compl. ¶¶ 3-23, 38, 45, 49, 68, 97.

(3) Proper Plaintiff Status

Finally, the Court must consider whether the SDS Franchisees are "proper plaintiffs" to sue for damages. To this end, the Court must consider: "(1) whether the plaintiff's injuries or their causal link to the defendant are speculative, (2) whether other parties have been more directly harmed, and (3) whether allowing this plaintiff to sue would risk multiple lawsuits, duplicative recoveries, or complex damage apportionment." Norris, 500 F.3d at 465 (quoting McCormack v. NCAA, 845 F.2d 1338, 1341 (5th Cir. 1988)).

Defendants assert that the SDS Franchisees are not proper plaintiffs because they received their inventory from SDS, not from Defendants. In general, only the direct purchaser of goods will have standing to assert an antitrust violation. See Apple Inc. v. Pepper, 139 S. Ct. 1514, 1520, 203 L. Ed. 2d 802 (2019) (citing Ill. Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 745-46, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707 (1977)); Free v. Abbott Labs., Inc., 176 F.3d 298, 299 (5th Cir. 1999) (same). This indirect purchaser rule does not apply, however, [*15] in the "cost-plus" contract setting. See In re Beef Indus. Antitrust Litig., 600 F.2d 1148, 1163-66 (5th Cir. 1979). In a cost-plus contract, the purchaser "commit[s] to buy[] a fixed quantity regardless of price," such that "[t]he effect of the overcharge is essentially determined in advance, without reference to the interaction of supply and demand." Kansas v. UtiliCorp United, Inc., 497 U.S. 199, 217, 110 S. Ct. 2807, 111 L. Ed. 2d 169 (1990) (quoting Ill. Brick, 431 U.S. at 736). A purchaser can plead "the functional equivalent of cost-plus contracts" by showing that the price of a good was determined "by strictly applying certain formulae to the ... wholesale ... price."[3] In re Beef, 600 F.2d at 1165; see also In re Plymood Antitrust Litig., 655 F.2d 627, 640 (5th Cir. Unit A Sept. 1981). As a result, the purchaser and the middleman incur "wholly separable items of damage"—the middleman loses volume while the purchaser absorbs the overcharge. In re Beef 600 F.2d at 1164.

The Court finds that Plaintiffs adequately pleaded that, at a minimum, the SDS Franchisees have the functional equivalent of a cost-plus contract with SDS. The Complaint alleges that "[e]ach of the SDS Franchisees have entered into a franchise agreement where they purchase 100% of their products through [SDS] for a set price based upon a standard mark up [sic] on the wholesale price provided to [SDS] from the manufacturer." Second Am. Compl. ¶ 90. As [*16] a result, any overcharge "is not absorbed by SDS," but "is passed directly to [the SDS Franchisees]." Id. Accepting these allegations as true, the Court finds that the SDS Franchisees have a cost-plus contract with SDS and are, therefore, proper plaintiffs to allege price discrimination under the RPA.

B. Count III: Commercial Bribery

(1) Viability of the Claim under the RPA

Defendants contend that Count III must be dismissed because commercial bribery is not a violation of RPA § 2(c), The Court disagrees for several reasons. First, although the Fifth Circuit has not decided whether commercial bribery constitutes a violation of the RPA, see Excel Handbag Co. v. Edison Bros. Stores, Inc., 630 F.2d 379, 387-88 (5th Cir. 1980) (declining to reach the issue), every circuit to have addressed the issue has held that commercial bribery can amount to a violation of RPA § 2(c). See Seaboard Supply Co. v. Congoleum Corp., 770 F.2d 367, 372 (3d Cir. 1985) (observing that "[t]here is good reason to question whether Congress intended to sweep commercial bribery within the ambit of section 2(c)," but joining the other "three Court of Appeals[,] which found that certain events constituting commercial bribery came within the terms of 2(c)" (citations omitted)); Grace v. E.J. Kozin Co., 538 F.2d 170, 173 (7th Cir. 1976) ("[A]lthough defendants argue that Section 2(c) of the [RPA.1 does not reach commercial bribery cases such as this, we agree with the Sixth [*17] and Ninth Circuits that it does." (citations omitted)); Calnetics Corp. v. Volkswagen of Am., Inc., 532 F.2d 674, 696 (9th Cir. 1976) ("We hold that, if distributor is able on remand to prove that counterdefendants indeed committed acts of commercial bribery in violation of [§] 2(c), then the defendants ought to be allowed any damages proximately caused by that violation."); Fitch v. Ky.-Tenn. Light & Power, 136 F.2d 12, 15 (6th Cir. 1943) ("[T]he statute makes it illegal to make such a payment"—a bribe—"either to the other party to the transaction or to an agent or representative of such party." (internal quotation mark omitted)). In the absence of Fifth Circuit precedent, the Court finds it reasonable to rely on persuasive authority from the sister circuits. See United States v. Graves, 908 F.3d 137, 142 (5th Cir. 2018) ("We are always chary to create a circuit split." (quoting Alfaro v. Comm'r, 349 F.3d 225, 229 (5th Cir. 2003))).

[3] Some circuits adopted a narrow interpretation of the cost-plus exception in light of Kansas v. UtiliCorp United. See EARL W. KINTNER ET AL., 11 FEDERAL ANTITRUST LAW § 78.8(c)(3) (collecting cases). To date, however, neither the Fifth Circuit nor the Supreme Court has overruled In re Beef.

Second, commercial bribery that involves a "person engaged in commerce" who "pay[s] or grant[s], or . . . receive[s] or accept[s]" while "in the course of such commerce . . . anything of value as a commission . . . or . . . any allowance or discount in lieu thereof; except for services rendered in connection with the sale or purchase of goods" appears to come within the plain language of § 2(c). 15 U.S.C. § 13(c). Third, the sister circuits' decision to recognize commercial briber as a violation of § 2(c) appears to fulfill the legislative [*18] purpose of the RPA, which is "to prevent sellers . . . from yielding to the economic pressures of a large buying organization by granting unfair preferences in connection with the sale of goods." FTC v. Henry Broch & Co., 363 U.S. 166, 174, 80 S. Ct. 1158, 4 L. Ed. 2d 1124 (1960). Commercial bribery is one avenue large buying organizations may employ to gain such an unfair advantage and divert profits from the rival buyer to the payer of the bribe, which is the hallmark of anticompetitive injury in RPA cases. See Volvo Trucks, 546 U.S. at 177. Finally, the Supreme Court suggested, in dictum, that "bribery of a public purchasing agent may constitute a violation of [§] 2(c)."[4] Cal. Motor Transp. Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 513, 92 S. Ct. 609, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642 (1972).

For these reasons, the Court finds that commercial bribery may amount to a violation of RPA § 2(c).

(2) Safficiency of the Allegations

Having determined that commercial bribery is actionable under § 2(c), the Court now turns to analyzing whether the Complaint sufficiently states such a claim. The Fifth Circuit has suggested that a claim for commercial bribery under the RPA requires a plaintiff to establish an underlying commercial bribery offense. See Excel Handbag Co., 630 F.2d at 386, 387-88 (holding that the RPA § 2(c) claim premised on commercial bribery failed because the counterclaimant [*19] did not establish these elements). The offense of commercial bribery generally has the following elements: (1) the giving or offering of something of value; (2) to an agent or fiduciary; (3) without the consent of the principal; (4) with intent to influence the conduct of the agent or the fiduciary.[5] See, e.g., Perrin v. United States, 444 U.S. 37, 39 n.3, 100 S. Ct. 311, 62 L. Ed. 2d 199 (1979) (discussing commercial bribery under the Travel Act, 18 U.S.C. § 1952); Nyakatura v. AG, United States, 256 Fed. Appx. 461, 466 (3d Cir. 2007) (discussing the common law definition of commercial bribery); *In re DePuy Orthopaedics, Inc., MDL Dkt. No. 3:11-MD-2244-K, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 156696, 2016 WL 6271465, at 6 (N.D. Tex. Jan 5, 2016) (same under Texas law); AREEDA & HOVENKAMP, supra, ¶ 2362i (same under the RPA); see also MODEL PENAL CODE § 224.8 (AM. LAW INST. 1985) (proposing elements); Commercial Bribery, BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY (11th ed. 2019). Both the payor and the payee can commit commercial bribery. See, e.g., *Samsung Elecs. Am., Inc. v. Yang Kun Chung, Civ. A. No. 3:15-CV-4108-D, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21700, 2017 WL 635031, at 6 (N.D. Tex. Feb. 16, 2017). Additionally,

[4] The Court also notes that leading treatises and practice guides agree that § 2(c) prohibits commercial bribery. See, e.g., 14 PHILLIP E. AREEDA & HERBERT HOVENKAMP, ANTITRUST LAW ¶ 2632i (3d ed. 2012) ("[RPA § 2(c)] was intended to cover some practices that could be described as 'commercial bribery.'"); CORPORATE COUNSEL'S GUIDE TO ROBINSON-PATMAN ACT § 3:13 (2018) ("In addition to the various state statutes, federal laws also proscribe commercial bribery, such as the [RPA], otherwise known as the price discrimination law.").

[5] These elements are consistent with the language of § 2(c). See 15 § 13(c), to state a claim under the RPA, a plaintiff must plead injury and causation under § 4 of the Clayton Act. See Grace, 538 F.2d at 173-74.[6]

a. Nortek

Plaintiffs did not allege that Nortek offered, accepted, or paid bribes; to the contrary, the Complaint affirmatively states that Nortek did not consent to the bribery. See Second Am. Compl. ¶¶ 54, 155, 163. Nor could Nortek, a principal, be [*20] principally liable for commercial bribery, which involves the corruption without the consent of the principal. See Perrin, 444 U.S. at 39 n.3; *In re DuPuy, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 156696, 2016 Wl 6271465, at 6; see also Grace, 538 F.2d at 173 (explaining that the purpose of § 2(c) of the RPA "is to protect the integrity of the principal-agent relationship").

Plaintiffs asserts that if Nortek cannot be held principally liable for the commercial bribery, it may be held vicariously liable. See Pls.' Supp. Br. 1-4. The Court agrees with this argument. See, e.g, Am. Soc'y of Mech. Eng'rs, Inc. v. Hydrolevel Corp., 456 U.S. 556, 569, 572-73, 102 S. Ct. 1935, 72 L. Ed. 2d 330 (1982) (imposing vicarious liability for antitrust violations). Thus, although the Court grants Nortek's Motion as to the direct commercial bribery claim against Nortek, the Court denies the Motion as to the vicarious liability claim.

b. Bernard

Bernard contends that Plaintiffs did not plead with specificity under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b) that Bernard engaged in commercial bribery. In general, courts do not impose a higher pleading standard for RPA claims, see Larry R. George, 587 F.2d at 270, *Games People Play, Inc. v. Nike, Inc., Civ. A. No. 1:14-cv-321, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 33217, 2015 WL 13657672, at 2-3 (ED. Tex. Feb. 13, 2015), but require a plaintiff to plead the offense of commercial bribery with specificity under Rule 9(b). *See In re DePuy, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 156696, 2016 WL 6271465, at 6-7. Under Rule 9(b), a complaint must set out "the essentials of the first paragraph of a newspaper story, namely the who, what, when, where, and how." Melder v. Morris, 27 F.3d 1097, 1100 n.5 (5th Cir. 1994) (citation omitted).

Even if the [*21] Rule 9(b) standard applies, the Court finds that Plaintiffs pleaded Bernard's involvement in commercial bribery with specificity. The Complaint sets forth sufficient facts showing that Bernard was Nortek's sales representative, who received bribes from Wave in the form of payments and American Express gift cards. See Second Am. Compl. ¶¶ 25, 26, 28, 53, 59, 70. There are numerous facts pleaded that show that Bernard provided low, discriminatory pricing to Wave in exchange for these payments. Id. ¶¶ 26, 49, 53, 70, 112, 143-45, 150, 154. Plaintiffs even pleaded the alleged method of calculation of the bribe and the method of delivery, based on testimony of a former Wave employee and other documentation. Id. ¶¶ 64-65, 69-70 & Ex. D. Viewing the Complaint in the light most favorable to Plaintiffs, the Court finds that Plaintiffs adequately alleged that Bernard engaged in commercial bribery.

c. Wave

Wave argues that Plaintiffs did not sufficiently plead commercial bribery for two reasons. First, Wave contends that the allegations are not plausible and "make[] no sense," because: "If Nortek would give the discounts anyway, there would have been no reason or purpose in Wave's bribing Bernard." Wave's [*22] Br, 5, The Court, however, does not evaluate Plaintiffs' likelihood of success at trial in the context of a motion to dismiss, but decides only whether the Complaint states a valid claim, which it does here. See Great Plains Tr., 313 F.3d at 312. Second, Wave asserts that Plaintiffs did not plead that Bernard and Nortek's other employees acted "for or in [sic] behalf of" Nortek; rather, Wave contends, Plaintiffs affirmatively pleaded that Nortek was unaware of the alleged bribe. See generally Wave's Suppl. Br. The Court finds this argument unpersuasive. Commercial bribery, by definition, involves "secret payments to an agent," Excel Handbag, 630 F.2d at 386 (emphasis added), without the consent of the principal, see supra § III.B.2 (collecting authorities). Plaintiffs' allegations here are sufficient, because they alleged that Nortek's employees accepted bribes without Nortek's consent. See Second Am. Compl. ¶¶ 25-26, 28, 52-54, 155, 163,

[6] To the extent that the alleged bribe needs to cross the seller-buyer line—i.e., where the payment is paid "by the [buyer] with the intent to improperly influence or corrupt" the seller's conduct, Blue Tree Hotels Inv. (Can), Ltd. v. Starwood Hotels & Resorts Worldwide, Inc., 369 F.3d 212, 222 (2d Cir, 2004); Seaboard Supply Co., 770 F.2d at 372, the Court finds that Plaintiffs satisfied this requirement by pleading that Wave, the buyer, paid the bribe to Nortek's agents, the seller. See Second Am. Compl. ¶¶59-75.

C. Tortious Interference

Defendants contend that the Complaint fails to state a claim for tortious interference with existing contracts, prospective business relationships, or existing business relationships.

(1) Tortious Interference with Existing Contract

"The elements of a tortious interference with contract claim [*23] are: (1) the existence of a contract subject to interference; (2) a willful and intentional act of interference; (3) such act was a proximate cause of damage; and (4) actual damage or loss occurred." Fluorine On Call, Ltd. v. Fluorogas Ltd., 380 F.3d 849, 864 (5th Cir. 2004) (citation omitted). "To prevail on a claim for tortious interference with an existing contract, [Plaintiffs] ha[ve] to present evidence that [Defendants] induced [a third party] to 'breach the contract.'" El Paso Healthcare Sys., Ltd. v. Murphy, 518 S.W.3d 412, 421-22 (Tex. 2017). The Complaint does not include any facts showing that Defendants induced any party to breach a contract. Accordingly, the Court grants the Motions as to Counts IV and V insofar as these Counts plead tortious interference with an existing contract. However, because Plaintiffs requested in their Response for leave to plead additional facts to support their claims, the Court will permit them to replead.

(2) Tortious Interference with Prospective Business Relations

> The elements of a claim for tortious interference with prospective business relations are 1) a reasonable probability that the parties would have entered into a contractual relationship; 2) an independently tortious or unlawful act by the defendant that prevented the relationship from occurring; 3) the defendant acted with a conscious [*24] desire to prevent the relationship from occurring, or it knew that the interference was certain or substantially certain to occur as a result of his conduct; and 4) the plaintiff suffered actual harm or damage as a result of the defendant's interference.

Ewbank v. ChoicePoint Inc., 551 F. Supp. 2d 563, 566-67 (N.D. Tex. 2008) (citing Raj Partners, Ltd. v. Darco Constr. Corp., 217 S.W.3d 638, 649 n.10 (Tex. App.—Amarillo 2006, no pet.); Richardson-Eagle, Inc. v. William. M. Mercer, Inc., 213 S.W.3d 469, 475 (Tex. App.—Houston [1st Dist.] 2006, pet. denied)). Defendants only challenge the first two elements of this claim.

To establish a reasonable probability of a future business relationship, "a plaintiff must prove that more than mere negotiations occurred." Richardson-Eagle, 213 S.W.3d at 475 (citing Milam v. Nat'l Ins. Crime Bureau, 989 S.W.2d 126, 132 (Tex. App.—San Antonio 1999, no pet.). A "pre-existing business relationship can suffice to show a reasonable probability of prospective contractual relations," *Santander Consumer USA, Inc. v. Zeigler Chrysler Dodge Jeep-Downers Grove, LLC, Civ. A. No. 3:16-cv-3310-B, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 98041, 2017 WL 2729998, at 9 (N.D. Tex. June 26, 2017) (citation omitted), provided that the pre-existing business relationships is an ongoing contractual relationship. See *N Cypress Med. Ctr. Operating Co. v. Gallagher Benefit Servs., Inc., Civ, A. No. 11-CV-00685, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 95789, 2012 WL 2870639, at 7 (S.D. Tex. July 11, 2012).

Here, Plaintiffs pleaded tortious interference with at least two business relationships that were beyond the negotiations stage. First, the Complaint states that Plaintiffs had a long, ongoing relationship with Nortek; that due to Bernard and Wave's rebate program, Plaintiffs lost market share of Nortek's products; and that Nortek pulled other related product lines from [*25] Plaintiffs, See Second Am. Compl. ¶¶ 38, 42, 100. Second, the Complaint alleges that Nortek and Wave contacted Plaintiffs' longstanding client to encourage it to switch to Wave. Id. ¶ 62, Moreover, this allegedly occurred after Plaintiffs had Nortek approve special pricing terms for the client, which suggests that Plaintiffs reached or were close to reaching an agreement with the client. Id. Viewing the Complaint in the light most favorable to Plaintiffs, the Court finds that these allegations are sufficient to establish a reasonable probability of a future business relationship.

As for pleading an independently tortious or unlawful act, Plaintiffs must show that Defendants engaged in conduct that is more than "merely 'sharp' or unfair"—it must be "actionable under a recognized tort [theory]," *Centuria, Inc. v. Regiment Sec., LLC, Civ. A, No, 3:11-CV-2500-N, 2013 WL 12250941, at 2 (N.D. Tex. Jan. 11, 2013) (alteration in original) (quoting Ash v. Hack Branch Distrib, Co., 54 S.W.3d 401, 414-15 (Tex. App.—Waco 2001, pet, denied)). A violation of the antitrust laws suffices as an independently tortious or wrongful act. See In re Mem'l Hermann Hosp. Sys., 464 S.W.3d 686, 704-06 (Tex. 2015). As explained above, Plaintiffs adequately alleged that Defendants engaged in violations of the RPA. Accordingly, the Court finds that Plaintiffs sufficiently stated a claim for tortious interference with [*26] a prospective business relationship.

(3) Tortious Interference with Existing Business Relationships

"To the extent that Texas recognizes a cause of action for tortious interference with an existing business relationship, its elements are: '(1) unlawful actions undertaken by [Defendants] without a legal right or justifiable excuse; (2) with the intent to harm [Plaintiffs]; and (3) resulting actual harm or damage.'" D'Onofrio v. Vacation Publ'ns, Inc., 888 F.3d 197, 214-15 (5th Cir. 2018) (footnote omitted) (quoting Am. Med. Int'l, Inc. v. Giurintano, 821 S.W.2d 331, 335 (Tex. App.—Houston [14th Dist.] 1991, no writ)). The unlawful act requirement is satisfied by showing that the defendant engaged in conduct that is "independently tortious or unlawful." *Adrain v. Genetec Inc., No. 2:08-CV-423, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 90946, 2009 WL 3161386, at 3 (ED. Tex. Sept. 30, 2019). Additionally, Plaintiffs must show that Defendants' interference was motivated by malice, but do not need to allege the existence of a contract subject to interference. Id. at 215 (quoting CF & I Steel Corp. v. Pete Sublett & Co., 623 S.W.2d 709, 715 (Tex. App.—Houston [1st Dist.] 1981, writ ref'd n.r.e.). In the tortious interference context, malice "is not to be understood in its proper sense of ill will against a person, but in its legal sense, as characterizing an unlawful act, done intentionally without just cause or excuse.'" Montoya v. San Angelo Cmty. Med. Ctr., No. 03-16-00510-CV, 2018 Tex. App. LEXIS 3868, 2018 WL 2437508 (Tex. App.—Austin May 31, 2018, pet. denied) (quoting Exxon Corp v. Allsup, 808 S.W.2d 648, 659 (Tex. App.—Corpus Christi 1991, writ denied)).

Defendants argue that Plaintiffs did not sufficiently plead that they engaged in an unlawful act or that they acted with malice. As previously discussed, [*27] Defendants allegedly engaged in violations of the RPA, which satisfies the unlawful act element of the claim. The Court further finds that Plaintiffs sufficiently pleaded that Defendants acted intentionally and without just cause or excuse. The Complaint states that Defendants knew of Plaintiffs' customers and business relationships, knew or should have known that their conduct was illegal or wrongful, knew that Plaintiffs were losing customers, and acted despite this knowledge. See Second Am. Compl. ¶¶ 29, 54, 60-61, 76, 154, 162. Accordingly, the Court finds that Plaintiffs sufficiently pleaded a claim for tortious interference with existing business relationships.

(4) Civil Conspiracy

Wave asks the Court to dismiss Plaintiffs' claim for civil conspiracy or to strike these allegations under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(f).[7] Defendants can be held jointly and severally liable if they were part of a conspiracy and one of them committed an underlying tort. See *Shaw v. Karnes Cty., Civ. A. No. SA-16-CA-203-FB, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 218314, 2017 WL 6403052, at 2-3 (W.D. Tex. Sept. 28, 2017) (noting that a civil conspiracy claim creates at least derivative liability). To create derivative liability, Plaintiffs must establish the following elements: "(1) two or more persons; (2) an object to be accomplished; [*28] (3) a meeting of the minds on the object or course of action; (4) one or more unlawful, overt acts; and (5) damages as a proximate result." Wackman Rubsamen, 602 F.3d 391, 408 (5th Cir. 2010) (internal quotation marks omitted) (quoting Tri v. J.T.T., 162 S.W.3d 552, 556 (Tex. 2005)).

Here, the Court finds that Plaintiffs successfully pleaded facts to support a claim of civil conspiracy when viewed in the light most favorable to Plaintiffs. For example, Bernard and Wave allegedly conspired to foster the discriminatory pricing program in exchange for bribes, which harmed Plaintiffs ability to retain clients. See, e.g., Second Am. Compl. ¶¶ 26, 28-29, 53. The Complaint also states that Nortek and Wave allegedly jointly solicited Plaintiffs' clients to switch to Wave. See id. ¶ 62. Plaintiffs' allegations are facially plausible and sufficient to show that Defendants conspired to commit one or more unlawful, overt acts, which harmed Plaintiffs. Accordingly, the Court denies the Motions as to the civil conspiracy allegations.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Court grants in part and denies in part the Motions. The Court grants the Motions as to Counts IV and V insofar as these counts allege claims for the tortious interference with an existing contract. The Court also grants [*29] Nortek's Motion as to a direct commercial bribery claim under Count III, but denies the Motion as to a vicarious liability claim. The Court otherwise denies the Motions. The Court grants Plaintiffs' request for leave to amend. Plaintiffs must file an amended complaint no later than August 21, 2019. If an amended complaint is not filed by this date, the dismissed claims will be dismissed with prejudice.

SO ORDERED.

MEMORANDUM DECISION AND ORDER ON PLAINTIFF'S RENEWED MOTION TO REMAND. (ECF NO. 22) AND PLAINTIFF'S REQUEST FOR A TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER (ECF NO. 31)

I. INTRODUCTION

This case concerns claims brought by Central Valley Medical Group, Inc. ("CVMG") against Independent Physician Associates Medical Group, Inc., dba AllCare ("AllCare") and Does 1 through 10. This case was originally filed in Stanislaus County Superior Court on March 19, 2019. ECF No. 1, Ex. A. On March 27, 2019, AllCare filed a notice of removal to this Court. ECF No. 1. On April 5, 2019, CVMG filed a motion to remand, followed by an opposition from AllCare on April 22, 2019 and a reply from CVMG on April 29, 2019. ECF Nos. 6, 8, 9. That motion [*2] to remand was denied without prejudice on June 14, 2019. ECF No. 20. On July 8, 2019, CVMG filed a first amended complaint ("FAC"). ECF No. 21. On July 15, 2019, CVMG filed a renewed motion to remand, including a request for frees and costs. ECF No. 22. The same day, CVMG also filed an ex parte request for a shortened briefing schedule, which the Court granted in part. ECF No. 30. On July 22, 2019, CVMG filed a motion for a temporary restraining order. ECF No. 31. Due to the urgency of CVMG's request for a TRO, the Court issued an order notifying the parties it would rule on the motion to remand without a reply. ECF No. 32. AllCare filed its opposition to the renewed motion to remand on July 24, 2019. ECF No. 34. Pursuant to Local Rule 230(g), the Court finds this matter suitable for decision on the papers

For the following reasons, CVMG's motion to remand is GRANTED. CVMG's request for a temporary restraining order is DENIED as moot.

II. BACKGROUND

The Court incorporates by reference its prior recitation of the facts of this case. See ECF No. 20 at 1-2. CVMG's amended complaint pleads a significant number of additional factual and legal bases for its claims. ECF No. 21. Most pertinent to this motion, [*3] CVMG amended its Unfair Business Practices cause of action to remove the references to federal antitrust law, and instead pleaded as the necessary predicate violation for the § 17200 Unfair Competition Law ("UCL") unfair business practices claim that AllCare's conduct "offends the policies of free competition and free trade, and significantly threatens or harms competition." Id. ¶ 183.

III. STANDARD OF DECISION

A defendant may remove a civil case from state court to federal court if the action presents either a federal question or the action's parties are citizens of different states and the amount in controversy is over $75,000. 28 U.S.C. §§ 1331, 1441. Subject-matter jurisdiction (in the form of either federal question or diversity jurisdiction) may be challenged at any time prior to final judgment. Grupo Dataflux v. Atlas Global Group, L.P., 541 U.S. 567, 571, 124 S. Ct. 1920, 158 L. Ed. 2d 866 (2004).

The artful pleading doctrine prevents a plaintiff from circumventing federal jurisdiction by embedding federal issues within state law causes of action. See Franchise Tax Bd. of State of Cal. v. Const. Laborers Vacation Trust for So. Cal., 463 U.S. 1, 14, 103 S. Ct. 2841, 77 L. Ed. 2d 420 (1983) ("Even though state law creates appellant's causes of action, its case might still 'arise under' the laws of the United States if a well-pleaded complaint established that its right to relief under state law requires resolution of a substantial question of federal [*4] law in dispute between the parties."); Grable & Sons Metal Prods. v. Darue Eng'g & Mfg., 545 U.S. 308, 312, 125 S. Ct. 2363, 162 L. Ed. 2d 257 (2005) ("[F]ederal question jurisdiction will lie over state-law claims that implicate significant federal issues."). The Ninth Circuit has elaborated that > the artful pleading doctrine allows federal courts to retain jurisdiction over state law claims that implicate a substantial federal question. A state law claim falls within this . . . category when: (1) "a substantial, disputed question of federal law is a necessary element of . . . the well-pleaded state claim," . . . or the claim is an "inherently federal claim" articulated in state-law terms, . . . or (2) "the right to relief depends on the resolution of a substantial, disputed federal question . . . ." A careful reading of artful pleading cases shows that no specific recipe exists for a court to alchemize a state claim into a federal claim—a court must look at a complex group of factors in any particular case to decide whether a state claim actually "arises" under federal law.

Lippitt v. Raymond James Fin. Servs., Inc., 340 F.3d 1033, 1042-43 (9th Cir. 2003), as amended (Sept. 22, 2003) (internal citations and quotation marks omitted); see also Gunn v. Minton, 568 U.S. 251, 258, 133 S. Ct. 1059, 185 L. Ed. 2d 72 (2013) (explaining substantial federal question jurisdiction will lie "if a federal issue is: (1) necessarily raised, (2) actually disputed, [*5] (3) substantial, and (4) capable of resolution in federal court without disrupting the federal-state balance approved by Congress."); Grable, 545 U.S. at 312 (explaining substantial federal question doctrine "captures the commonsense notion that a federal court ought to be able to hear claims recognized under state law that nonetheless turn on substantial questions of federal law").

"Courts have fashioned a number of proxies to determine whether a state claim depends on the resolution of a federal question to such an extent as to trigger subject matter jurisdiction." Lippitt, 340 F.3d at 1045. In evaluating whether jurisdiction exists, a court must determine if the federal question goes to the gravamen of a plaintiff's claims, or, in other words, "[i]s the federal question 'basic' and 'necessary' as opposed to 'collateral' and 'merely possible'? Is the federal question 'pivotal' as opposed to merely 'incidental'? Is the federal question 'direct and essential' as opposed to 'attenuated?'" Id. (internal citations omitted). Nevertheless, "the mere presence of a federal issue in a state cause of action does not automatically confer federal-question jurisdiction." Id. at 1040.

Finally, a plaintiff may be able to defeat federal jurisdiction if an [*6] "alternative and independent" violation of state antitrust policies is offered as a basis for an unfair competition claim, even if a federal basis is also offered. See Rains v. Criterion Systems, Inc., 80 F.3d 339, 346 (9th Cir. 1996) ("When a claim can be supported by alternative and independent theories—one of which is a state law theory and one of which is a federal law theory—federal question jurisdiction does not attach because federal law is not a necessary element of the claim.").

IV. ANALYSIS

A. Federal Question Jurisdiction

The core dispute between the parties remains whether a substantial federal issue is necessarily raised by one of CVMG's California Unfair Competition Law claims. See Gunn, 568 U.S. at 258; Lippitt, 340 F.3d at 1041-43.[1] As discussed in the Court's prior order, the California Supreme Court has defined an "unfair" business practice as "conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition." Cel-Tech Commc'ns, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Tel. Co., 20 Cal. 4th 163, 187, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 (1999). Therefore, when pleading under the "unfair" prong of the UCL and alleging a violation of the policy or spirit of a state or federal antitrust law, the policy must be "tethered to specific [*7] constitutional, statutory or regulatory provisions." *Rheumatology Diagnostics Lab., Inc. v. Aetna, Inc., No. 12-cv-05847-WHO, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 49740, 2015 WL 1744330, at 24 (N.D. Cal. Apr. 15, 2015) (quoting Bardin v. Daimlerchrysler Corp., 136 Cal. App. 4th 1255, 1271, 39 Cal. Rptr. 3d 634 (2006)); see also Cel-Tech, 20 Cal. 4th at 186-87 ("we must require that any finding of unfairness to competitors under section 17200 be tethered to some legislatively declared policy or proof of some actual or threatened impact on competition."). But "a violation of the unfair prong may be based on conduct that 'significantly threatens or harms competition,' regardless of whether it represents an actual or incipient violation of an antitrust law." *PeopleBrowsr, Inc. v. Twitter, Inc., No. C-12-6120-EMC, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 31786, 2013 WL 843032, at 4 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 6, 2013).

The Court previously ruled that CVMG's claim raised a substantial federal question because CVMG's sole theory of UCL unfair competition liability was that AllCare's conduct violated policies tethered to federal antitrust law. ECF. No. 20 at 10. The Court agrees with CVMG that the First Amended Complaint cures theses defects.

CVMG has removed the explicit references to federal antitrust policies. In fact, CVMG has moved away from antitrust allegations of any sort and does not allege that AllCare was a monopoly or was attempting to monopolize any market. Instead, CVMG's First Amended Complaint now pleads as the [*8] predicates for its "unfair" UCL claim that AllCare tortiously interfered with CVMG's contracts and prospective economic advantage and violated statutory requirements regarding communications with patients, alleging that in taking those actions AllCare "unfairly competed with CVMG" and this conduct "offends the policies of free competition and free trade, and significantly threatens or harms competition." ECF No. 21 ¶¶ 176-81, 183.

AllCare correctly points out that CVMG still fails to plead the state law "policies of free competition and free trade" underlying the claim. However, Cel-Tech provides that there are three possible predicates for an unfair competition claim: "conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition." Cel-Tech Commc'ns, Inc., 20 Cal. 4th at 187; see also *Peoplebrowsr, No. C-12-6120-EMC, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 31786, 2013 WL 843032, 4 (noting the alternative formulations of the unfair prong should be read in the disjunctive). CVMG's pleading that AllCare's conduct "significantly threatens or harms competition" creates an "alternative and independent" state [*9] law theory to support its unfair UCL claim. Rains, 80 F.3d at 346; Cel-Tech, 20 Cal.4th at 187. Such an alternative and independent theory means that federal law is no longer a necessary element of CVMG's unfair UCL claim. See id.; Peoplebrowsr, No. C-12-6120-EMC, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 31786, 2013 WL 843032 ("Thus, a violation of the unfair prong of the UCL does not necessarily require establishing a violation of the Sherman Act. . . . As Twitter has not demonstrated that PeopleBrowsr's unfair acts UCL claim arises under federal law, remand is appropriate."); Gershfeld v. Champion Aerospace LLC, No. SACV 13-1318-JVS (JEMx), 2013 WL 12123685, at *2 (C.D. Cal. Oct. 8, 2013) (ordering remand where "Plaintiff may succeed on his UCL failure-to-disclose claim with or without proving a violation of federal law."); *Caldwell v. N. Pac. Mortg. Corp., No. C10-05306-THE, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 39698, 2011 WL 1303629, at 3 (N.D. Cal. Apr. 4, 2011) ("Thus because Plaintiffs' UCL claim is supported by state-law theories of liability, the claim is not necessarily federal in character, and the Caldwells' right to relief does not depend on the resolution of a disputed federal question."); *Briggs v. First Nat'l Lending Servs., No. C 10-00267-RS, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 35639, 2010 WL 962955, at 3 (N.D. Cal. Dec. 9, 2010) ("Here, since the complaint's UCL claim is supported by numerous theories of recovery under California law, the alleged violation of TILA is not considered a necessary element under Rains."); California Pinnacle Sec. CA. LP, 746 F. Supp. 2d 1129, 1131 (N.D. Cal. 2010) ("Because plaintiff is able to show defendant acted unlawfully [*10] based on these state law provisions and without any references to federal law, remand is appropriate."); Hendricks v. Dynegy Power Mktg., Inc., 160 F. Supp. 2d 1155, 1165 (S.D. Cal. 2001) ("As a result, Plaintiffs can state a violation under § 17200 in two ways, independent of the Federal Power Act: either by alleging a violation of the Cartwright Act as the predicate offense, or by alleging that the anti-competitive activity was unfair or deceptive even if not unlawful."); *Castro v. Providian Nat'l Bank, No. C-00-4256-VRW, 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19062, 2000 WL 1929366, at 3 (N.D. Cal. Dec. 29, 2000) (ordering remand because "plaintiffs have both pled and intend to prove that the unlawful prong of section 17200 is supported by violations of state law as well.").

AllCare responds that CVMG's FAC UCL claim raises a necessary, substantial federal question, because the alleged conduct is solely cognizable as a federal anti-trust claim. ECF No. 34 at 8. AllCare supports this argument by citing to *In re NFLs Sunday Ticket Antitrust Litig., No. ML 15-02668-BRO, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 41639, 2016 WL 1192642, at 5 (C.D. Cal. Mar. 28, 2016), which ruled that the plaintiff's case necessarily raised a substantial federal question because the plaintiff could not recover unless they showed that the defendants obtained a monopoly and abused their monopoly position to charge supra-competitive prices. Id. ("[n]o California statute deals [*11] expressly with monopolization") (quoting Dimidowich v. Bell & Howell, 803 F.2d 1473, 1478 (9th Cir. 1986)). However, critically, the plaintiff in In re National Football Leagues did not allege that the defendants significantly threatened or harmed competition in any way that was independent of the monopolization allegations. See id. ("Plaintiff's UCL cause of action relies on [d]efendants' alleged abuse of its monopoly position and charging supra-competitive prices.") (internal quotation marks omitted). The importance of that distinction was specifically addressed by the In re National Football Leagues court: "Unlike in PeopleBrowsr, [p]laintiff's [c]omplaint does not allege conduct that significantly threatens or harms competition, regardless of whether it represents an actual or incipient violation of an antitrust law." Id. (internal quotation marks omitted) (emphasis in the original). The other relevant cases cited by AllCare similarly involve claims that were explicitly tied to antitrust law, without distinct allegations that the conduct at issue "significantly threatens or harms competition." See Nat'l Credit Reporting Ass'n v. Experian Info. Solutions, Inc., No. C04-01661-WHA, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17303, 2004 WL 1888769 (N.D. Cal 2004) (involving a claim explicitly tied to monopoly power); Dimidowich v. Bell & Howard, 803 F.2d 1473 (9th Cir. 1986), as [*12] modified, 810 F.2d. 1517 (9th Cir. 1987) (involving explicit antitrust claims); Flagship Theatres of Palm Desert, LLC v. Century Theatres, Inc., 198 Cal. App. 4th 1366, 131 Cal. Rptr. 3d 519 (Cal. Ct. App. 2011) (involving explicit antitrust claims); Free FreeHand Corp. v. Adobe Sys. Inc., 852 F. Supp. 2d 1171 (N.D. Cal. 2012) (involving parties who agreed that their UCL claim was tied to federal antitrust); Lorenzo v. Qualcomm Inc., 603 F. Supp. 2d 1291 (S.D. Cal. 2009) (involving a claim of "common law monopoly"); Image Technical Servs., Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 125 F.3d 1195 (9th Cir. 1997) (involving a claim explicitly based on the Sherman Act); Allied Orthopedic Appliances Inc. v. Tyco Health Care Grp. LP, 592 F.3d 991 (9th Cir. 2010) (involving a claim explicitly based on the Sherman Act).

AllCare also cites a number of cases for the proposition that a finding that conduct is not an antitrust violation precludes a finding of unfair competition. See ECF No. 34 at 13-14. But in all of those cases, the plaintiff either brought explicit antitrust claims or unfair competition claims based on underlying conduct that was per se lawful under the statute at issue. LiveUniverse, Inc. v. MySpace, Inc., 304 Fed. Appx. 554 (9th Cir. 2008) (involving explicit federal antitrust claims); Chavez v. Whirlpool Corp., 93 Cal. App. 4th 363, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 175 (Cal. Ct. App. 2001) (involving a claim that was expressly precluded by statute); U.S. Colo, LLC v. Coresite One Wilshire, No. CV 14-4044 PSG (PLAx), 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 165072, 2014 WL 12689269 (C.D. Cal. 2014) (involving a claim based on violation of the Sherman Act); DocMagic, Inc. v. Ellie Mae, Inc., 745 F. Supp. 2d 1119 (N.D. Cal 2010) (involving explicit antitrust claims). While a finding of no antitrust violation could mean no unfair competition claim is available, Cel-Tech still creates a separate class of unfair competition claims for parties alleging "conduct that significantly threatens [*13] or harms competition" separate and apart from anti-trust violations. A finding of an anti-trust violation is not a mandatory predicate for such claims.

Here, like in PeopleBrowsr, CVMG has alleged that AllCare's conduct "significantly threatens or harms competition." ECF No. 21 ¶ 183. As In re National Football Leagues recognized, by pleading under this prong of Cel-Tech, CVMG's claim is not solely cognizable as a violation of federal antitrust law. AllCare raises legitimate concerns regarding whether CVMG's claim may be ultimately dismissed because it barely pleads how AllCare "significantly threatens or harms competition" in a manner distinct from unilateral monopolization or other violations of federal anti-trust law. Nevertheless, for purposes of this remand motion, CVMG's allegations are sufficient to state an "alternative and independent theory" that does not necessarily depend on federal antitrust laws or violations of antitrust policies.

Therefore, the Court concludes that CVMG's UCL claim in the FAC does not necessarily raise a substantial federal question, and there is no federal question jurisdiction.

B. Discretionary Retention of Jurisdiction Not Appropriate

A "district court [*14] has discretion 'to remand a properly removed case to state court when all federal-law claims in the action have been eliminated and only pendent state-law claims remain' when doing so 'serves the principles of economy, convenience, fairness, and comity.'" Tsao v. Desert Palace, Inc., 698 F.3d 1128, 1149 (9th Cir. 2012) (quoting Carnegie-Mellon Univ. v. Cohill, 484 U.S. 343, 345, 357, 108 S. Ct. 614, 98 L. Ed. 2d 720 (1988)). Remand is preferred "[w]hen the balance of these factors indicates that a case properly belongs in state court, as when the federal-law claims have dropped out of the lawsuit in its early stages and only state-law claims remain." Cohill, 484 U.S. at 350. This case is still in a very early stage and CVMG's filing of the FAC has eliminated federal question jurisdiction. ECF No. 21 at 29-31. While the Court does not condone CVMG's tactics—even if CVMG was acting in good faith and not forum shopping as it claims, the unnecessary use of the parties' and court's precious resources could have been avoided had CVMG put minimal time and effort into researching and drafting their original complaint—there is little-to-no unfairness to AllCare in remanding to state court. And comity weighs at least equally in favor of letting California courts adjudicating their unfair competition laws, as opposed to the federal system's potential interest in interpreting [*15] federal anti-trust laws.

Furthermore, in the interests of judicial economy, the overburdened Eastern District of California Federal Court should be reluctant to retain jurisdiction over cases where it is so early in the case and there is no mandatory subject matter jurisdiction over the claims. The cases cited by AllCare for the proposition "once jurisdiction, always jurisdiction" all note the discretionary nature of retaining jurisdiction after amendments have removed the basis for federal jurisdiction. Stafford v. Dollar Tree Stores, Inc., No. 2:13-CV-01187-KLM, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 42564, 2014 WL 1330675 (E.D. Cal. 2014) (addressing a claim that a prior court's decision to maintain jurisdiction was clear error, and finding it was not); Sanchez v. Ritz Carlton, No. CV-15-3484-PSG-PJWX, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 109044, 2015 WL 4919972, (C.D. Cal 2015) (addressing a claim by the plaintiff that the court was compelled to remand after the basis of federal jurisdiction was gone). In fact, two of the cases cited by AllCare to support "once jurisdiction, always jurisdiction" ultimately remanded the cases before those courts. Millar v. BART Dist., 236 F. Supp. 2d 1110, 1118 (N.D. Cal 2002) (discussing the history of remand decisions where federal courts retain jurisdiction, but ultimately granting the plaintiff's motion to amend and remanding the case); Firoozye v. Earthlink Network, 153 F. Supp. 2d 1115, 1121 (N.D. Cal. 2001) ("if none of the plaintiff's claims [*16] is preempted, the face of the plaintiff's well-pleaded complaint would not arise under federal law and this Court would not have jurisdiction, compelling remand to state court."). Consequently, the Court declines to exercise its discretion to retain jurisdiction.

C. Costs and Attorney's Fees

CVMG asks the Court to award costs and attorney's fees incurred as a result of the removal of this case. ECF No. 22 at 13-14. 28 U.S.C. § 1447(c) provides that "[a]n order remanding the case may require payment of just costs and any actual expenses, including attorney fees, incurred as a result of the removal." Such awards are appropriate "where the removing party lacked an objectively reasonable basis for seeking removal." Martin v. Franklin Capital Corp., 546 U.S. 132, 141, 126 S. Ct. 704, 163 L. Ed. 2d 547 (2005). "[W]hen an objectively reasonable basis exists, fees should be denied." Martin, 546 U.S. at 141. "The objective reasonableness of removal is measured at the time of removal." *Pope v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., No. CIV.2:10-2807-WBS-KJM, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 125341, 2010 WL 8388301, at 5 (E.D. Cal. Nov. 29, 2010). Nevertheless, "[i]n applying this rule, district courts retain discretion to consider whether unusual circumstances warrant a departure from the rule in a given case." Martin, 546 U.S. at 141; see Gardner v. UICI, 508 F.3d 559, 562 (9th Cir. 2007) ("Under Martin, however, whether a removal is improper is not dispositive in determining whether fees should be awarded [*17] under 28 U.S.C. § 1447(c)."); see also Martin, 546 U.S. at 140 ("[T]here is no reason to suppose Congress meant to confer a right to remove, while at the same time discouraging its exercise in all but obvious cases.").

Because the Court held that CVMG's original complaint presented a substantial and necessary federal question, AllCare had an objectively reasonable basis for seeking removal. ECF No. 20 at 10; Martin, 546 U.S. at 141. CVMG does not allege the existence of any unusual circumstances that would warrant a departure from the rule that counsels a denial of fees. ECF No. 22 at 13-14. CVMG's request for costs and fees will be denied.

V. CONCLUSION AND ORDER

For the reasons stated above, CVMG's Renewed Motion to Remand is GRANTED. CVMG's request to recover costs and attorney's fees is DENIED. CVMG's request for a temporary restraining order is DENIED as moot.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

ORDER GRANTING MOTION TO DISMISS

Re: Dkt. No. 41

I. INTRODUCTION

Plaintiff the City of Oakland ("Oakland") brings this action against the Defendants the Oakland Raiders (the "Raiders"), the National Football League (the "NFL"), and all thirty-one other teams in the NFL, asserting that the Raiders' decision to leave Oakland, and the NFL's approval of that decision, violate the antitrust laws and the NFL's own governing documents, among other claims.[1] Defendants move to dismiss for failure to state a claim under Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. The Court held a hearing on July 19, 2019. For the reasons discussed below, Defendants' motion is GRANTED, although Oakland may amend its claims if it can allege facts sufficient to cure the deficiencies identified below. If Oakland chooses to amend, it may file an amended complaint no later than September 9, 2019.[2]

II. BACKGROUND

A. Factual Background and Allegations of the Complaint

Because factual allegations are generally taken as true on a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6), this section recites the allegations of Oakland's complaint as if true. Nothing in this order should be construed as resolving any issue of fact that might be disputed at a later stage of the case. [*4]

1. Overview of Raiders History

The Raiders were based in Oakland from the creation of the franchise in 1960 through 1982, and again from 1994 through the present, playing their home games for most of that period at a stadium in Oakland known as the Coliseum. See Compl. ¶¶ 38-47. The Raiders were managed and at least partially owned by the late Al Davis for much of the team's existence. See id. ¶¶ 40-50. Al Davis's son Mark Davis assumed control of the team after his father's death in 2011. Id. ¶ 54.

[1] The other teams are the Arizona Cardinals, Atlanta Falcons, Baltimore Ravens, Buffalo Bills, Carolina Panthers, Chicago Bears, Cincinnati Bengals, Cleveland Browns, Dallas Cowboys, Denver Broncos, Detroit Lions, Green Bay Packers, Houston Texans, Indianapolis Colts, Jacksonville Jaguars, Kansas City Chiefs, Los Angeles Chargers, Los Angeles Rams, Miami Dolphins, Minnesota Vikings, New England Patriots, New Orleans Saints, New York Giants, New York Jets, Philadelphia Eagles, Pittsburgh Steelers, San Francisco 49ers, Seattle Seahawks, Tampa Bay Buccaneers, Tennessee Titans, and Washington Redskins. The full names of the entities controlling those teams and named as defendants can be found at paragraph 19 of Oakland's complaint.

[2] The parties have consented to the jurisdiction of the undersigned magistrate judge for all purposes pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 636(c).

The team's history has been fraught with litigation, much of it related to the team's 1982 move to Los Angeles and its lease at the Coliseum after returning to Oakland. As but a few examples, Oakland unsuccessfully attempted to acquire the Raiders through eminent domain (City of Oakland v. Oakland Raiders, 174 Cal. App. 3d 414, 220 Cal. Rptr. 153 (1985)), the Raiders and a stadium commission in Los Angeles successfully sued to enjoin enforcement of the NFL's then-existing rules restricting movement of teams (L.A. Mem'l Coliseum Comm'n v. Nat'l Football League, 726 F.2d 1381 (9th Cir. 1984)), and after the Raiders' return to Oakland, the Raiders and Oakland engaged in litigation over the status of the Raiders' lease of the Coliseum (Compl. ¶¶ 48-49).

2. Plans to Relocate

In 2017, the Raiders announced that they were relocating from Oakland to Las Vegas—giving [*5] rise to the present case. Compl. ¶ 2. Oakland alleges that Mark Davis and the Raiders had considered such a move as early as 1998, when Mark Davis registered the domain name "LasVegasRaiders.com" (which he subsequently renewed annually) and acquired a cell phone number with a Las Vegas area code. Id. ¶ 51.

"In December of 2008, NFL Commissioner Roger Goodell . . . announced that the NFL wanted the Raiders to receive a new stadium," but the Raiders renewed their lease at the Coliseum the following year. Id. ¶ 52. The Raiders nevertheless engaged in discussions with the San Francisco 49ers regarding potentially sharing a stadium in Santa Clara, California. Id. ¶ 53. In 2010, a private entity proposed building a stadium in Los Angeles for several NFL teams including the Raiders, and in 2012, the NFL sent a memorandum to its teams describing circumstances under which two teams could move to Los Angeles, which "was believed to be largely addressed to the Raiders, Rams, and Chargers." Id. ¶¶ 53, 55. Those three teams applied in 2016 to relocate to Los Angeles, but the NFL granted the Raiders permission for such a move only if the Chargers declined to move to Los Angeles. Id. ¶¶ 60-61.

Meanwhile, [*6] the Raiders also pursued relocation to Las Vegas. Mark Davis told an NFL executive in 2014, "I'm going to Vegas, baby!" Id. ¶ 57. Despite that statement and the application to move to Los Angeles, the Raiders continued negotiating with Oakland regarding a potential new stadium. Davis announced in 2015 that he would commit $500 million to build a stadium if Oakland provided an additional $400 million, for a total cost of $900 million. Id. ¶ 59. In January of 2016, Davis met with Nevada billionaire Sheldon Adelson to discuss funding a $1.7 billion stadium in Las Vegas, despite having announced his intention to keep the Raiders in Oakland at a town hall "a few weeks" earlier. Id. ¶ 62. Davis told a Nevada tourism committee in April of 2016 that he would commit $500 million to a stadium in Las Vegas, and the following month characterized his position as a "commitment" to move the Raiders to Las Vegas if sufficient public funding was provided for a stadium. Id. ¶ 63. "In August 2016, Adelson convinced the Nevada state legislature to create a bill that appropriated $750 million in public money, which had originally been intended to fund a public project, to a professional football stadium." [*7] Id. While NFL Commissioner Goodell stated in September 2016 that he hoped the Raiders would reach an agreement for a stadium in Oakland, Dallas Cowboys owner Jerry Jones encouraged Nevada lawmakers to pursue bringing the Raiders to Las Vegas. Id. ¶ 64.

Oakland, meanwhile, attempted to reach a deal to keep the Raiders in Oakland. An investment group including former NFL players Ronnie Lott and Rodney Peete offered $600 million towards a stadium in Oakland in November of 2016—$200 million more than the $400 million in public funding that the Raiders had claimed was needed in 2015. Id. ¶ 65. In December of 2016, Oakland officials voted to enter negotiations with Lott's group, earmarking $350 million in public funds for the project, to be combined with $400 million from Lott's group and $500 million from the Raiders for an approximately $1.3 billion stadium. Id. ¶ 65. The proposal "included the possibility that Mark Davis would eventually sell some part of the team to the Lott group," which Oakland characterizes as a development that the NFL should have supported as consistent with its efforts to increase leadership positions held by racial minorities. Id. ¶ 66. While Oakland contends that [*8] "the Lott Proposal was real," the NFL dismissed it as incomplete and unworkable, and a Raiders official at a "closed-door NFL meeting" described it as a "political, cover-your-ass joke." Id. ¶ 67.

The Raiders officially applied to the NFL for permission to move to Las Vegas on January 19, 2017. Id. ¶ 68.

3. NFL Rules Regarding Team Relocation

The relocation of NFL teams is governed by Article 4.3 of the Constitution and Bylaws of the NFL:

> The League shall have exclusive control of the exhibition of football games by member clubs within the home territory of each member. No member club shall have the right to transfer its franchise or playing site to a different city, either within or outside its home territory, without prior approval by the affirmative vote of three-fourths of the existing member clubs of the League.

Compl. Ex. 1 art. 4.3. In litigation related to the Raiders' 1982 move to Los Angeles, the Ninth Circuit affirmed a jury's determination that Article 4.3, at least as the NFL sought to apply it to block that relocation, was an unreasonable restraint of trade in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. L.A. Mem'l Coliseum, 726 F.2d at 1390-98. The Ninth Circuit's opinion discussed changes that might make similar restrictions permissible:

> To withstand antitrust [*9] scrutiny, restrictions on team movement should be more closely tailored to serve the needs inherent in producing the NFL "product" and competing with other forms of entertainment. An express recognition and consideration of those objective factors espoused by the NFL as important, such as population, economic projections, facilities, regional balance, etc., would be well advised. See L. Kurlantzick, Thoughts on Professional Sports and the Antitrust Laws, 15 Conn. L.R. 183, 206 (1983). Fan loyalty and location continuity could also be considered. Id. at 206-207. Al Davis in fact testified that in 1978 he proposed that the League adopt a set of objective guidelines to govern team relocation rather than continuing to utilize a subjective voting procedure.
> Some sort of procedural mechanism to ensure consideration of all the above factors may also be necessary, including an opportunity for the team proposing the move to present its case. Id.; see Silver v. New York Stock Exchange, 373 U.S. 341, 83 S. Ct. 1246, 10 L. Ed. 2d 389 (1963) (without procedural safeguards, the collective act of the Exchange in disconnecting the wire service to a broker constituted a boycott, per se illegal under § 1); cf. Deesen v. Professional Golfers Ass'n, 358 F.2d 165 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 385 U.S. 846, 87 S. Ct. 72, 17 L. Ed. 2d 76 (1966) (where PGA had reasonable rules governing eligibility of players for tournaments, there was not a § 1 violation). [*10] In the present case, for example, testimony indicated that some owners, as well as Commissioner Rozelle, dislike Al Davis and consider him a maverick. Their vote against the Raiders' move could have been motivated by animosity rather than business judgment.

Id. at 1397-98.

At some point after that decision, the NFL Commissioner, pursuant to his authority under Article 8.5 of the NFL bylaws to "interpret and from time to time establish policy and procedure in respect to the provisions of the Constitution and Bylaws," promulgated "Policy and Procedures for Proposed Franchise Relocations," fleshing out the basic three-fourths vote required by Article 4.3 with additional policies, procedures, and factors to be considered. Compl. ¶ 32 & Ex. 2. Under that policy, "each club's primary obligation to the League and to all other member clubs is to advance the interests of the League in its home territory," and relocations are "disfavor[ed] . . . if a club has been well-supported and financially successful and is expected to remain so." Id. Ex. 2; see id. ¶ 33. The policy also provides that the "business judgment" to be exercised in deciding whether to approve a transfer "may be informed by consideration of" a non-exhaustive list [*11] of factors including, for example, fan loyalty, stadium adequacy, financial performance, the degree of good faith negotiations to remain, and the extent to which team owners have contributed to circumstances giving rise to the proposed relocation. Id. Ex. 2 pt. C; see also id. ¶ 34. Oakland characterizes these policies as an effort to avoid antitrust problems by complying with the suggestions of the Ninth Circuit in Los Angeles Memorial Coliseum. Id. ¶ 32.

Under the policy, "the relocating club will ordinarily be expected to pay a transfer fee to the League" if its request is approved, to "compensate other member clubs of the League for the loss of the opportunity appropriated by the relocating club and the enhancement (if any) in the value of the franchise resulting from the move." Id. Ex. 2 pt. E; see id. ¶ 36. Oakland characterizes this fee as "a source of income that the NFL Club owners do not share" and "a pure cartel payment that goes straight to the NFL Club owners' bottom lines when they together decide that a team should leave its Host City." Id. ¶ 37.

4. Approval of Relocation to Las Vegas

On March 6, 2017, Bank of America agreed to provide financing for the Las Vegas stadium, [*12] and the NFL teams' owners held a meeting the same day to determine the fee that the Raiders would be required to pay if the relocation was approved. Id. ¶ 69. Oakland characterizes that meeting as "effectively an auction for a 'yes' vote" where "the relocation fee was bid up until enough NFL owners were satisfied with their personal payment to vote 'yes,'" and cites a report that owners purportedly opposed to the relocation pushed for a higher fee. Id. The owners agreed on a fee of $378 million. Id.

Oakland submitted its final proposal in conjunction with Lott's investment group the same month, but the NFL rejected it as not "clear and specific, actionable in a reasonable timeframe, and free of major contingencies," and thus not "a viable solution." Id. ¶ 72. Oakland Mayor Libby Schaaf appealed to the team owners to reject the relocation, although she conceded "that Oakland was 'unable to provide the level of public subsidy Nevada offers.'" Id. ¶¶ 73-74.

The owners voted 31 to 1 to approve the relocation. Id. ¶ 75. According to Oakland, that vote violated the NFL's relocation policy, because "every objective factor to be considered in the Relocation Policies favored a stay in Oakland," [*13] the Oakland market is more favorable than Las Vegas, and Oakland negotiated in good faith the keep the Raiders. Id. ¶¶ 75, 78-79. Oakland cites a statement from the Miami Dolphins' owner Stephen Ross—the lone dissenting vote—that he "just [did]n't think everything was done to try and stay in Oakland," id. ¶ 76, as well as comments from Mark Cuban—the owner of a professional basketball team in Dallas—that he considered Oakland to be a better market than Las Vegas for an NFL team, id. ¶ 70.

5. Oakland's Claims

Oakland alleges that the NFL and its teams act as an anticompetitive cartel extracting significantly greater payments for stadium construction and maintenance from host cities than would be possible in a competitive market "by not only limiting the number of NFL Clubs in the United States [to thirty-two teams], but also collectively controlling, and dictating under what terms and conditions, cities can have professional football team presence." Id. ¶ 8; see also id. ¶¶ 23-29 (alleging that the NFL has secured public funding for a majority or significant share of the cost of several stadiums costing hundreds of millions to over a billion dollars each since 2000, and shared in relocation [*14] fees of approximately $1.4 billion). Oakland defines the relevant market for its antitrust claims as "the market of all Host Cities offering, and all cities and communities that are willing to offer (i.e., potential Host Cities), home stadia and other support to major league professional football teams in the geographic United States." Id. ¶ 88.

Oakland asserts the following seven claims: (1) group boycott in violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act, based on Oakland's inability to retain the Raiders or attract another NFL team so long as it is not willing to "pay the enormous demands associated with new and renovated stadia," id. ¶¶ 98-107; (2) concerted refusal to deal in violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act, based on Defendants' demands for stadium funding as well as "freez[ing] the number of competitive professional football teams, id. ¶¶ 108-18; (3) price fixing in violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act, based again on the demands for stadium financing, id. ¶¶ 119-29; (4) declaratory judgment that Defendants' conduct violates section 1 of the Sherman Act as a result of Defendants' "boycott of Oakland and refusal to comply with their own relocation policies" and "redistribution of the resulting ill-gotten [*15] supra-competitive gains though artificially set relocation fees," id. ¶¶ 130-137; (5) breach of contract under California law, based on the premise that the relocation policy is a binding contract to which Oakland is a third-party beneficiary, id. ¶¶ 138-46; (6) quantum meruit, based on Oakland's alleged investments in the Raiders in reliance on the relocation policy, id. ¶¶ 147-56; and (7) unjust enrichment, on the basis that Defendants received "ill-gotten gains resulting from their unlawful , unjust, and inequitable conduct," id. ¶¶ 157-61.

Oakland claims damages including over $240 million invested in reliance on the Raiders remaining in Oakland, loss of "tax and other income that it derives from the presence of the Raiders and the economic activity their presence generates," and reduced property value of the Coliseum as a result of the stadium having "been boycotted by the NFL." Id. ¶ 96. Oakland seeks treble damages for its antitrust claims. See id. at 44 (prayer for relief).

B. Parties' Arguments

1. Defendants' Motion to Dismiss

Defendants move to dismiss all of Oakland's claims with prejudice. With respect to Oakland's antitrust claims, Defendants argue that Oakland has not alleged antitrust [*16] injury, because allowing the Raiders to move to a city willing to provide more funding promotes, rather than impairs, competition, and because the restrictions on relocation tended to benefit rather than harm Oakland in its efforts to keep the team from leaving. Mot. at 7-9. Defendants contend that Oakland lacks standing because the only concrete injury it has alleged, loss of tax revenue, is a sovereign rather than commercial interest, because its indirect ownership interest in the Coliseum is insufficient, and because Oakland is not a participant in the same market as any defendant. Id. at 9-12. Defendants also argue that Oakland has not sufficiently alleged a relevant market. Id. at 12-14. Although Oakland's complaint asserts a relevant market of cities and other communities "offering . . . [or] willing to offer . . . home stadia and other support to major league professional football teams in the geographic United States," Compl. ¶ 88, Defendants argue that such a market is not cognizable because "[h]ost cities are not bought and sold," and markets must be defined by a product itself rather than the consumers of a product, Mot. at 13-14.

In addition to those broad objections to Oakland's antitrust theory, [*17] Defendants contend that Oakland's individual antitrust claims are substantively flawed. According to Defendants, Oakland's first two claims—"Group Boycott" and "Refusal to Deal"—describe the same theory of recovery, and fail because Oakland has not alleged that that any team besides the Raiders sought to prevent the Raiders or any other team from dealing with Oakland. Id. at 15. Defendants contend that Oakland cannot bring a boycott claim based on the other NFL teams' failure to prevent the Raiders from leaving Oakland. Id. As for Oakland's price fixing claim, Defendants argue that Oakland fails to "allege an agreement between the Raiders and any other party regarding 'rents' paid by Oakland." Id. at 16. Defendants argue that Oakland's declaratory judgment claim is derivative of its antitrust claims and is therefore also subject to dismissal for the reasons discussed above. Id.

Turning to Oakland's claim for breach of contract under California law, Defendants argue that the NFL's relocation policy is not a contract, both because it does not include mandatory language and because it was imposed unilaterally by the NFL Commissioner, not mutually agreed upon by the teams. Id. at 17-18. Defendants also argue that even [*18] if the relocation policy were construed as a contract, Oakland is not a party to or third-party beneficiary of the policy, and has not alleged that Defendants breached the policy, which only required Defendants to "consider" certain factors. Id. at 18-22.

Defendants contend that Oakland's remaining claims, for quantum meruit and unjust enrichment (which Defendants argue is not a claim under California law) are derivative of Oakland's other claims and also should be dismissed. Id. at 22-23.

2. Oakland's Opposition

Oakland's opposition brief focuses more heavily than its complaint on the NFL's limitation to thirty-two teams. See, e.g., Opp'n (dkt. 48) at 3 ("[T]he market for Host Cities for NFL teams is not competitive: it is intentionally constrained to 32 teams and its incentives are skewed by the Relocation Fee."). According to Oakland, that restriction causes the reduction in competition necessary to establish antitrust injury, because "the relocation process demonstrates that that in a competitive market, there would now be 33 clubs, with one in Oakland and one in Las Vegas," both of which "want and could support NFL clubs." Id. at 5 (emphasis omitted). Oakland contends that the limit on number of teams, combined [*19] with the NFL's process for collectively determining where those teams are based, allows Defendants to "act[] as a 'classic cartel' to 'extract excess profits.'" Id. at 7 (citation omitted).[3]

With respect to antitrust standing, Oakland asserts that Defendants' position regarding ownership of the Coliseum is incorrect: the stadium is not owned by the Oakland-Alameda County Coliseum Authority (the "OACCA"), but instead jointly owned by Oakland and Alameda County, which leased it to another entity, which assigned its rights under the lease to the OACCA. Id. at 7-8. Oakland contends that case law supports its recovery of sunken investments and reduced property value as antitrust damages, and that although the Supreme Court has held that a state cannot recover for damages to its "general economy" on behalf of its citizens, such authority does not prohibit a local government from recovering lost tax revenue as antitrust damages. Id. at 8-11. Oakland notes that the Ninth Circuit has previously recognized the market for NFL stadiums in litigation related to the Raiders' 1982 move to Los Angeles, and argues that a market for "Host Cities" here is similar but properly modified to include not only stadiums that already exist, [*20] but also cities willing to build new stadiums. Id. at 11-14. As for its specific antitrust claims, Oakland argues that Defendants' collective vote, influenced by the relocation fee and purportedly in violation of the NFL relocation policy, establishes a group boycott and refusal to deal,[4] id. at 14-15, and that the limitation to thirty-two teams is a market restriction sufficient to support a claim for "price fixing" with respect to stadium funding even if Defendants did not agree to a specific amount of funding required, id. at 15-16. Oakland contends that its declaratory judgment claim should survive for the same reasons. Id. at 16.

Oakland argues that the relocation policy is enforceable as a contract because it was established pursuant to the NFL Commissioner's authority under the NFL Constitution and Bylaws, which has itself been recognized as a contract by multiple courts. Id. at 17-18. Oakland contends that the relocation policy's references to a team's obligation to advance the NFL's interests "'in its home territory'" renders Oakland a third-party beneficiary of the policy, and that Oakland meets the test for such status recently articulated by the California Supreme Court. Id. at 18-23 (citing Goonewardene v. ADP, LLC, 6 Cal. 5th 817, 243 Cal. Rptr. 3d 299, 434 P.3d 124 (2019)). Oakland also contends that it has sufficiently [*21] alleged a breach of the policy. Id. at 23-24.

Finally, Oakland argues that its claim for quantum meruit is sufficient because such a claim "is simply the common law equivalent of a contract claim, and is often alternatively pled in addition to breach of contract," and that its claim for unjust enrichment should be construed as a quasi-contract claim and allowed to proceed. Id. at 24-25.

3. Defendants' Reply

Defendants characterize Oakland's focus on the thirty-two team limit as an attempt "to recast its complaint," and argue that Oakland cannot succeed on such a claim. Reply (dkt. 49) at 2-7. As a starting point, Defendants contend that Oakland has not shown injury in fact from the limited number of teams, because it has not alleged that a team would play in Oakland if the NFL allowed additional teams. Id. at 3. Defendants also argue that the Supreme Court dissent Oakland cites for the proposition it should be able to recover lost tax revenue is inapposite, id. at 4 (citing Hemi Grp., LLC v. City of New York, 559 U.S. 1, 31, 130 S. Ct. 983, 175 L. Ed. 2d 943 (2010) (Breyer, J., dissenting)), and that Ninth Circuit precedent bars Oakland from recovering "losses based on purported municipal investments in business development, id. at 5 (citing City of Rohnert Park v. Harris, 601 F.2d 1040, 1044 (9th Cir. 1979)). Defendants contend that Oakland's alleged injury is "indirect" because "the only [*22] party 'directly' affected by an agreement to prescribe the number of teams would be a team that sought to join the NFL joint venture," because Oakland serves at most as a landlord, and because even in that role its relationship with the Raiders runs through the OACCA, which is not a party to this case. Id. at 5-6. Finally, Defendants argue that even if Oakland were properly situated to challenge the limitation on the number of teams, such a challenge would fail, [3] Despite this apparent focus of the brief, Oakland's attorneys disclaimed at the hearing an intent to base Oakland's theory of recovery on the thirty-two team structure of the NFL.

[4] In addressing these two claims together, Oakland appears to agree with Defendants that they describe the same theory of recovery.

because the Third Circuit ruled in favor of the NFL when a non-NFL football team brought such a claim in 1983. Id. at 6-7 (citing Mid-South Grizzlies v. Nat'l Football League, 720 F.2d 772 (3d Cir. 1983)).

Defendants contend that Oakland cannot prevail on an antitrust claim based on the NFL's refusal to block the relocation because: (1) Oakland—having declined to pay the costs to which it objects—has not suffered an antitrust injury as result of the relocation; (2) "Host Cities" is not a cognizable market; (3) a single team choosing to leave Oakland is not a group boycott; and (4) Oakland does not allege that Defendants fixed any particular price with respect to stadiums. Id. at 7-10. Defendants also renew their arguments that the relocation policy is not a contract, that Oakland is not a third-party beneficiary, and that Oakland [*23] has not alleged breach of the policy, as well as Defendants' request that the remaining claims be dismissed as derivative of other defective claims. Id. at 10-14.

III. ANALYSIS

A. Legal Standard

A complaint may be dismissed under Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure for failure to state a claim on which relief can be granted. "The purpose of a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6) is to test the legal sufficiency of the complaint." N. Star Int'l v. Ariz. Corp. Comm'n, 720 F.2d 578, 581 (9th Cir. 1983). Generally, a plaintiff's burden at the pleading stage is relatively light. Rule 8(a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure states that a "pleading which sets forth a claim for relief . . . shall contain . . . a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a).

In ruling on a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6), the court analyzes the complaint and takes "all allegations of material fact as true and construe[s] them in the light most favorable to the non-moving party." Parks Sch. of Bus. v. Symington, 51 F.3d 1480, 1484 (9th Cir. 1995). Dismissal may be based on a lack of a cognizable legal theory or on the absence of facts that would support a valid theory. Balistreri v. Pacifica Police Dep't, 901 F.2d 696, 699 (9th Cir. 1990). A complaint "'must contain either direct or inferential allegations respecting all the material elements necessary to sustain recovery under some viable legal theory.'" Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 562, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007) (quoting Car Carriers, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 745 F.2d 1101, 1106 (7th Cir. 1984)). "A pleading that offers 'labels and conclusions' or 'a formulaic [*24] recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do.'" Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555). "[C]ourts 'are not bound to accept as true a legal conclusion couched as a factual allegation.'" Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555 (quoting Papasan v. Allain, 478 U.S. 265, 286, 106 S. Ct. 2932, 92 L. Ed. 2d 209 (1986)). "Nor does a complaint suffice if it tenders 'naked assertion[s]' devoid of 'further factual enhancement.'" Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678 (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 557) (alteration in original). Rather, the claim must be "'plausible on its face,'" meaning that the plaintiff must plead sufficient factual allegations to "allow[] the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Id. (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570).

B. Antitrust Claims

Oakland's complaint asserts three antitrust claims for damages, all for violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act, which prohibits "contract[s], combination[s] in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspirac[ies], in restraint of trade." 15 U.S.C. § 1. Courts have long held that the Sherman Act is not as broad as its literal language might suggest, and "that Congress intended to outlaw only unreasonable restraints." Texaco v. Dagher, 547 U.S. 1, 5, 126 S. Ct. 1276, 164 L. Ed. 2d 1 (2006) (quoting State Oil Co. v. Khan, 522 U.S. 3, 10, 118 S. Ct. 275, 139 L. Ed. 2d 199 (1997)) (emphasis in Texaco). Courts "presumptively appl[y] rule of reason analysis, under which antitrust plaintiffs must demonstrate that a particular contract or combination is in fact unreasonable [*25] and anticompetitive before it will be found unlawful." Id.

Oakland's three antitrust damages claims are captioned as "Group Boycott," "Refusal to Deal," and "Price Fixing."[5] Both parties appear to agree that the first two claims describe the same theory of recovery, and Oakland does not identify separate conduct as supporting its various claims, although the parties address Oakland's price fixing claim as distinct from its claims for a group boycott or concerted refusal to deal. The statutory language of the Sherman Act does not distinguish among these theories, which are instead relevant primarily to judicially created doctrines under which certain restraints of trade are per se illegal rather than subject to the generally applicable rule of reason. See, e.g., NYNEX Corp. v. Discon, Inc., 525 U.S. 128, 138, 119 S. Ct. 493, 142 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1998) ("[A]ntitrust law does not permit the application of the per se rule in the boycott context in the absence of a horizontal agreement, though in other contexts, say, vertical price fixing, conduct may fall within the scope of a per se rule not at issue here . . . .").

Where some "'restraints on competition are essential if the product is to be available at all,'" however—as in the case of professional sports leagues—"per se [*26] rules of illegality are inapplicable, and instead the restraint must be judged according to the flexible Rule of Reason." Am. Needle, Inc. v. Nat'l Football League, 560 U.S. 183, 203, 130 S. Ct. 2201, 176 L. Ed. 2d 947 (2010) (quoting NCAA v. Bd. of Regents of Univ. of Okla., 468 U.S. 85, 101, 104 S. Ct. 2948, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70 (1984)); see also L.A. Mem'l Coliseum, 726 F.2d at 1392 ("[T]he unique structure of the NFL precludes application of the per se rule.").[6] Under that analysis, it is not material whether Oakland captions its claims as based on theories of "boycott" or "price fixing." Regardless of such labels, Oakland must "demonstrate that a particular contract or combination is in fact unreasonable and anticompetitive," Texaco, 547 U.S. at 5, or in other words, "whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition," Am. Needle, 560 U.S. at 203 n.10 (quoting Bd. of Trade of Chi. v. United States, 246 U.S. 231, 238, 38 S. Ct. 242, 62 L. Ed. 683 (1918)). The Court therefore analyzes Oakland's antitrust damages claims together based on the rule of reason and other generally applicable principles of antitrust law.[7]

1. Antitrust Standing and Injury

Section 4 of the Clayton Act, codified as 15 U.S.C. § 15, authorizes suits for treble damages by "any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws." 15 U.S.C. § 15(a). In much the same way that the facially broad language of the Sherman Act has been construed as addressing only certain restraints on competition, however, "[t]he Supreme Court has held that Congress did not intend to afford a remedy to everyone injured by an antitrust violation." Knevelbaard Dairies v. Kraft Foods, Inc., 232 F.3d 979, 987 (9th Cir. 2000) (citing Associated Gen. Contractors of Cal., Inc. v. Cal. State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 535, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983)). In other words, it is not enough that a plaintiff has been injured; the plaintiff also "must have 'antitrust standing.'" Id. That question turns on the following factors: "(1) the nature of the plaintiff's alleged injury; that is, whether it was the type the antitrust laws were intended to forestall; (2) the directness of the injury; (3) the speculative measure of the harm; (4) the risk of duplicative recovery; and (5) the [5] For the purpose of the present motion, the parties agree that Oakland's declaratory judgment claim stands or falls with its antitrust damages claims. See Mot. at 16; Opp'n at 16.

[6] Oakland argues in a footnote that the per se rule applies to its claims, Opp'n at 12 n.7, but fails to address precedent holding per se doctrines inapplicable in the context of professional sports leagues.

[7] To the extent that these labels might be relevant to the analysis of an amended complaint, the Court agrees with Defendants that Oakland has not alleged a "group boycott" where Oakland claims only that Defendants jointly allowed the Raiders to relocate, not an agreement that no team could be located in or do business with Oakland. While the term "price fixing," based on the plain meaning of those words, might not apply in the absence of an allegation of any fixed supra-competitive price, that doctrine is more on point, as courts have recognized that restrictions on supply can have an equivalent effect to fixing prices. See, e.g., Westinghouse Elec. Corp. v. Gulf Oil Corp., 588 F.2d 221, 226 (7th Cir. 1978) ("[A]n agreement to restrict the production of uranium unquestionably is a price fixing arrangement. 'Price fixing' is a characterization which extends to all conspiracies designed to manipulate the price of goods.").

complexity in apportioning damages." Id. (quoting Am. Ad Mgmt., Inc. v. Gen. Tel. Co. of Cal., 190 F.3d 1051, 1054 (9th Cir. 1999)).

The first of those factors, "antitrust injury," is [*27] a "substantive element of an antitrust claim, and the fact of injury or damage must be alleged at the pleading stage." Somers v. Apple, Inc., 729 F.3d 953, 963 (9th Cir. 2013). "'Antitrust injury' means 'injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful,'" and "consists of four elements: '(1) unlawful conduct, (2) causing an injury to the plaintiff, (3) that flows from that which makes the conduct unlawful, and (4) that is of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent.'" Id. (quoting Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977); Am. Ad Mgmt., Inc. v. Gen. Tel. Co. of Cal., 190 F.3d 1051, 1055 (9th Cir. 1999)). The Ninth Circuit also requires "that 'the injured party be a participant in the same market as the alleged malefactors, meaning 'the party alleging the injury must be either a consumer of the alleged violator's goods or services or a competitor of the alleged violator in the restrained market.'"[8] Id. (quoting Glen Holly Entm't, Inc. v. Tektronix, Inc., 343 F.3d 1000, 1008 (9th Cir. 2003)). In at least some circumstances, a potential market entrant thwarted from entering a market by the defendant's violations can also establish antitrust injury. See, e.g., In re Dual-Deck Video Cassette Recorder Antitrust Litig., 11 F.3d 1460, 1464 (9th Cir. 1993).

a. Relocation Fee

To the extent that Oakland bases its claims on the NFL's requirement that teams seeking to relocate pay a fee to the NFL to obtain approval, Oakland has not plausibly alleged [*28] antitrust injury as a result of that policy. Oakland implies that the fee is an incentive for teams to relocate, but the Raiders gain nothing by having to pay the NFL hundreds of millions of dollars. Even if, as Oakland contends in its opposition brief, "Host Cities and fans, not the Raiders, are paying the Relocation Fee,"[9] Opp'n at 15, the Raiders would presumably have been in a position to capture and keep greater payments for themselves from public entities and fans who wanted to see an NFL team in Las Vegas if the NFL had not assessed the fee. It is difficult to see how the relocation fee could have encouraged, rather than discouraged, the Raiders' decision to relocate, and Oakland has not plausibly alleged that the Raiders would have been less likely to seek relocation but for the fee.

After the Raiders made that decision, and apparently resolved to pay a significant relocation fee if imposed, the fee—which Oakland characterizes as a direct payment to the entities responsible for determining whether to approve the relocation—certainly increased the likelihood that the Raiders' application would be approved. But Oakland has not explained how such a result is anticompetitive. Restrictions [*29] on NFL teams' ability to relocate to different cities are themselves restraints on competition favoring the existing cities, although they may in some circumstances be justified under the rule of reason. See L.A. Mem'l Coliseum, 726 F.2d at 1395 ("The competitive harms of Rule 4.3 are plain."). In a market entirely lacking such restraints, no approval from the NFL would have been necessary, and the Raiders' decision to relocate to Las Vegas would have been the end of the story. Oakland has not explained how the relocation fee, which makes approval more likely—only after a team has applied to relocate—and thus brings the process closer to that which would exist in a market lacking competitive restraints, is itself an anticompetitive restraint harming existing host cities.[10] Oakland's position on this issue would go beyond

[8] Defendants' arguments that Oakland is not a participant in the same market as Defendants or lacks a sufficiently direct relationship to any harm because it is not itself a professional football team neglect the basic principle that markets have at least two distinct classes of participants—sellers and buyers. See, e.g., Reply at 5 (asserting that "the only party 'directly' affected by an agreement to prescribe the number of teams would be a team that sought to join the NFL joint venture").

[9] Oakland's contention that the new host city effectively pays the relocation fee appears to be a dubious proposition, as the timeline set forth in the complaint suggests that the amount of public funding provided for a Las Vegas stadium was set well before the NFL determined the amount of the relocation fee, and that the relocation fee was set in an arbitrary manner such that the amount would have been difficult to predict during the earlier negotiations for public funding.

[10] To the extent that the relocation fee might discourage a team from seeking to relocate, that team (or the entity seeking to attract it to a new location) might experience a cognizable antitrust injury if, as Oakland contends here, the fee is in fact arbitrary and not tied to procompetitive goals. See L.A. Mem'l Coliseum, 726 F.2d at 1397 ("To withstand antitrust scrutiny, restrictions on the dicta of Los Angeles Memorial Coliseum indicating that some restraints on team relocation may be permissible, and instead asks the Court to hold that such restraints are required under the antitrust laws. Oakland cites no authority for such a proposition, and the Court holds that any harm Oakland may have suffered as an existing host city from procedures that tend to encourage NFL approval of teams' requests [*30] to relocate neither "flows from that which makes the conduct unlawful" nor "is of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent." Oakland's antitrust claims based on the relocation fee are DISMISSED. Although it is not clear how Oakland could amend to cure the defects of this theory, the Court grants leave to attempt to do so if Oakland so chooses.

b. Thirty-Two Team Structure

With respect to the limitation of the league to thirty-two teams, the basic premise that the restriction increases the amount of public funding that teams can demand for stadiums is, at the very least, plausible. Courts have long recognized that restrictions on supply can increase prices beyond competitive levels. See, e.g., NCAA v. Bd. of Regents of Univ. of Okla., 468 U.S. 85, 116-17, 104 S. Ct. 2948, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70 (1984) ("The television plan protects ticket sales by limiting output—just as any monopolist increases revenues by reducing output." (emphasis added)); Westinghouse Elec. Corp. v. Gulf Oil Corp., 588 F.2d 221, 226 (7th Cir. 1978). It is less clear, however, that Oakland was itself harmed by that restriction.

Oakland does not contend that it actually paid the inflated rates of public stadium funding that teams could purportedly obtain as a result of the league's structure.[11] Instead, Oakland argues that it would have been able to host an NFL team if the NFL allowed [*31] more teams in the league, asserting in its opposition brief that "in a competitive market, there would now be 33 clubs, with one in Oakland and one in Las Vegas (and probably 35 clubs, with clubs also in St. Louis and San Diego)." Opp'n at 5 (emphasis omitted). Oakland's complaint, however, does not include allegations to that effect, and attorney argument in a brief cannot substitute for allegations of a complaint. See Udom v. Fonseca, 846 F.2d 1236, 1238 (9th Cir. 1988) (affirming dismissal, although reversing denial of leave to amend, where a "plaintiff [had] attempt[ed] to expand the scope of his complaint by making allegations in a collateral document not subject to counter by means of an answer or motion to dismiss").

Moreover, even if the complaint had included the conclusory assertion stated in Oakland's opposition, it does not include factual allegations to render such a conclusion plausible. As an incomplete list of issues that might be relevant, the complaint does not address: (1) whether there are additional potential owners willing to establish new teams if the NFL allowed them to do so; (2) whether such potential owners would have based a team in Las Vegas before the Raiders decided to relocate there; (3) whether the [*32] Raiders would still have left Oakland for another city if the NFL allowed additional teams; (4) if the Raiders might still have left, whether an additional team would have been established in Oakland to replace the Raiders; or (5) whether Oakland has made any effort to attract an existing team other than the Raiders or to establish a new expansion team to replace the Raiders. As an additional complicating factor, neither Oakland's complaint nor its opposition brief address what sort of structure Oakland believes would be permissible if the current limitation on the number of teams is not—do the antitrust laws require the NFL to admit any team interested in joining? If not, what number would be an allowable limit, and would Oakland have fared differently if the limit had been set at that number?

Accordingly, based on its present allegations, Oakland has not alleged injury-in-fact as a result of the NFL's thirty-two team structure, and its antitrust claims are DISMISSED on that basis. See Rohnert Park, 601 F.2d at 1045 (remanding for dismissal where a plaintiff city "ha[d] not made a sufficient showing that, absent the alleged antitrust violations by [the defendants], its commercial area would have been selected as [*33] a site for shopping center development," and "the question whether [the city] would have benefited but for [the defendants'] actions [was team movement should be more closely tailored to serve the needs inherent in producing the NFL 'product' and competing with other forms of entertainment."). Such questions are beyond the scope of this case, where neither the Raiders nor any entity in Las Vegas has challenged the fee.

[11] To the extent that Oakland might have paid such a premium to upgrade the Coliseum when the Raiders returned from Los Angeles in the 1990s, it has not asserted that possible injury as a basis for its claims, and the four-year statute of limitations for such a claim has almost certainly expired. See 15 U.S.C. § 15b.

therefore] entirely speculative"). It is conceivable, however, that Oakland could allege such injury. Because it is at least possible that Oakland could plausibly allege that it suffered harm as a result of the NFL's structure, the current complaint's failure to allege non-speculative damages as a result of the thirty-two team limit is not grounds for dismissal with prejudice.

2. Damages Theories and Other Arguments

While the failure to allege antitrust injury discussed above is sufficient to dismiss Oakland's antitrust claims as currently pleaded, the Court addresses several of Defendants' other arguments to determine whether leave to amend would be futile, although the Court declines to resolve certain issues on the present motion. Most of the other arguments reached in this order do not require dismissal with prejudice, but aspects of Oakland's theory of damages appear to be untenable.

Defendants contend that Oakland's interest as a "landlord" is not cognizable under the antitrust laws, based on the plurality opinion in R.C. Dick Geothermal Corp. v. Thermogenics, Inc., 890 F.2d 139, 148 (9th Cir. 1989) (en banc). E.g., Reply at [*34] 5-6. That case involved a complex theory of recovery offered by a plaintiff that owned (or at some relevant times held a master lease to) land on which geothermal steam energy could be produced, and alleged that the companies that subleased land from it concealed the true production capacity of the land from the plaintiff in an effort to prevent the plaintiff from itself engaging in geothermal steam production. See R.C. Dick, 890 F.2d at 142-43. Among other issues, the Ninth Circuit plurality rejected the plaintiff's attempt to limit the geographic market to little more than its own property, held that the plaintiff was not a participant in the market for steam, and held that the plaintiff failed to show an anticompetitive effect on the market for rights to steam-producing property. Id. at 144, 148-49. The plurality's reference to "[m]ere injury as a landlord" referred to the plaintiff's attempt to satisfy the requirement of antitrust injury based on the reduced royalties it received from the defendants' operation of a plant that allegedly produced less power than it could have—with the intent, according to the plaintiff, of deceiving the plaintiff as to the opportunities on the land, not of restricting the supply of steam per [*35] se. See id. at 148.

The theory here is more straightforward: Oakland alleges that cities compete to host NFL teams by offering public funding for stadiums that may be leased to the teams, Defendants have artificially restricted the market for such transactions by limiting the number of teams and collectively determining when and where teams may relocate, and teams can therefore demand more favorable deals from the host cities. The Court declines to read R.C. Dick as barring all antitrust claims where plaintiff claims damages from its status as a landlord, and instead construes that case as requiring that, for such damages to be viable, the market at issue in the case must be the market for rental transactions, and the plaintiff must show an anticompetitive effect in that market. See id. at 148 (immediately after stating that the plaintiff's "[m]ere injury as a landlord or lessor entitled to royalties" was insufficient, quoting an earlier case for the rule that "'the injured party [must] be a participant in the same market as the alleged malefactors'" (citation omitted)). If, for example, a cartel of all potential renters of a certain type of property conspired to fix a low price at which they were willing [*36] to rent, a landlord adversely affected by that agreement could likely recover antitrust damages.

While the Court disagrees with Defendants' position that an antitrust plaintiff's status as a landlord is inherently disqualifying,[12] the principle that landlords might in some circumstances be able to claim antitrust damages for lost or reduced rent does not clearly apply to Oakland's claims here, because Oakland has not specifically alleged damages based specifically on rent (although it is perhaps conceivable that it could amend to do so). See Compl. ¶

[12] It is also not clear that Oakland's status as an "indirect" landlord, with the OACCA as a middleman directly contracting with the Raiders, bars Oakland's claims. Neither party cites authority addressing analogous circumstances where, as was allegedly the case here, an antitrust plaintiff negotiated directly with the defendant despite their contractual relationship running through a third party. Moreover, Oakland alleges that it sought to build a new stadium in partnership with the Raiders and other investors, with no allegation that the OACCA or any other intermediary would be involved in that relationship. At this time, while it remains unclear whether Oakland can amend to cure the more straightforward question of antitrust injury addressed above, Court declines to resolve the issue of whether Oakland's "indirect" relationship with the Raiders bars its antitrust claims.

96. Instead, Oakland claims damages based on sunk investments, lost "tax and [unspecified] other income," and diminution in property value of the Coliseum. Id.

The holding of Rohnert Park, a Ninth Circuit case that Oakland fails to address in its brief, forecloses the claim for lost municipal investment. There, the plaintiff city Rohnert Park brought antitrust claims based on the development of a regional shopping center in a neighboring city after Rohnert Park had already made investments for such a shopping center within its own boundaries. Rohnert Park, 601 F.2d at 1042-43. After acknowledging that a city may bring antitrust claims based only on its propriety interests [*37] (and not in a parens patriae capacity) the Ninth Circuit summarily rejected Rohnert Park's argument that its investment by raising and disbursing special assessment funds was a sufficient interest to support an antitrust claim:

> Rohnert Park . . . contends that it acted in a proprietary capacity in raising and disbursing the special assessment funds used to improve the commercial zone. It cites no authority supporting the contention that this is a sufficient proprietary interest under § 16, and we decline to so hold.

Id. at 1044 (footnote omitted). That case is binding authority as to this Court, and Oakland has not offered any explanation for why it does not apply to Oakland's investment of municipal funds in the Coliseum. Oakland therefore cannot recover damages based on investment in stadium development comparable to the municipal investment at issue in Rohnert Park.

Oakland also cannot recover damages based on lost tax revenue from the broad scope of economic activity associated with the presence of a professional football team. Defendants rely on the Supreme Court's holding in Hawaii v. Standard Oil Co. of California, 405 U.S. 251, 92 S. Ct. 885, 31 L. Ed. 2d 184 (1972), that the Clayton Act's authorization of private suits for injury to "business or property" does not allow a state to sue [*38] as parens patriae for damages based on general damage to its economy. In reaching that outcome, the Court concluded that where a "State seeks damages for injuries to its commercial interests, it may sue under § 4[, b]ut where, as here, the State seeks damages for other injuries,"—including those based on its "quasi-sovereign interests"—"it is not properly within the Clayton Act." Id. at 264. Defendants here, as well as the United States in a statement of interest (dkt. 55) filed pursuant to the attorney general's authority under 28 U.S.C. § 517,[13] contend that damages based on lost taxes fall in the latter category as an element of the state's sovereign rather than commercial interest.

While Oakland is correct that it has a more personal and proprietary interest in damages based on lost tax revenue than a state has in a parens patriae suit for "injury to its general economy," see Hawaii, 405 U.S. at 263-64, lost tax revenue based broadly on "the presence of the Raiders and the economic activity their presence generates," Compl. ¶ 96, is not the sort of injury to "business or property" compensable under the antitrust laws, see 15 U.S.C. § 15(a). Of the factors relevant to antitrust standing, "the [*39] directness of the injury," "the risk of duplicative recovery," and "the complexity in apportioning damages," see Knevelbaard Dairies, 232 F.3d at 987, most clearly weigh against Oakland's theory, because the taxes Oakland claims to have lost would have been assessed on transactions involving countless third parties, any of whom might (or might not) be entitled to their own claims if, as Oakland contends, the Raiders' relocation arose from violations of the Sherman Act. Oakland cites no case allowing a comparable theory of damages under the Clayton Act, and the Court DISMISSES Oakland's claims to the extent they are based on lost tax revenue based on undefined "economic activity" associated with the Raiders.

The Court does not reach the question of whether lost tax revenue can ever constitute recoverable damages in an antitrust action. Defendants cite no case so holding, and instead rely on an otherwise-inapplicable 1872 decision by [13] At least one court has questioned the propriety of such statements and refused to allow a statement of interest—there, after the United State declined to intervene in a qui tam case. *United States ex rel. Ruckh v. Salus Rehab., No. 8:11-CV-1303-T-23TBM, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 63325, 2017 WL 1495862, at 1 (M.D. Fla. Apr. 26, 2017); see also, e.g., LSP Transmission Holdings, LLC v. Lange, 329 F. Supp. 3d 695, 703 (D. Minn. 2018) (declining as a matter of discretion to consider a statement of interest filed months after briefing had concluded). The Court declines to address that issue in this instance. The United States' statement in this case does not raise arguments significantly different from those presented in Defendants' briefs, and the outcome of the present motion would not differ if the statement were excluded.

the Supreme Court for the proposition that a "'tax is a demand of sovereignty.'" Mot. at 10 (quoting In re State Freight Tax, 82 U.S. 232, 278, 21 L. Ed. 146, 4 Brewster's Reports 202 (1872), abrogated on other grounds as recognized by Okla. Tax Comm'n v. Jefferson Lines, Inc., 514 U.S. 175, 181-83, 115 S. Ct. 1331, 131 L. Ed. 2d 261 (1995)). Because antitrust damages must be based on "commercial interests," see Hawaii, 405 U.S. at 264, Defendants argue that the "sovereign" interest in taxation does not qualify. [*40] Mot. at 10. While Oakland does not specifically allege such damages here, there could perhaps be circumstances where a tax specifically negotiated as part of an agreement between a local government and a private entity could take on a "commercial" instead of—or as well as—"sovereign" character. Cf. Hemi Grp., LLC v. City of New York, 559 U.S. 1, 30, 130 S. Ct. 983, 175 L. Ed. 2d 943 (2010) (Breyer, J., dissenting) (concluding that lost tax revenue could, in at least some circumstances, constitute harm to "business or property" under language in the RICO Act similar to that at issue here in the Clayton Act, an issue not reached by the majority). With no such damages alleged in the present complaint, however, the Court declines to resolve that issue on the present motion.

Oakland's remaining categories of damages are "other income that it derives from the presence of the Raiders" and diminution of value of the Coliseum. Compl. ¶ 96. The reference to "other income" is too vague and conclusory to determine whether it encompasses recoverable damages that might establish antitrust injury. As for the value of the Coliseum, Defendants argue only that Oakland lacks a direct ownership interest in the stadium. While the nature of Oakland's ownership interest is unclear from the present [*41] complaint, see Compl. ¶ 17 (alleging that Oakland is an "indirect owner"), Oakland asserts in its opposition brief that it (along with Alameda County) directly owns the Coliseum, Opp'n at 8, and could presumably amend to so allege. Of course, a damages theory based entirely on diminution of value of the Coliseum after the Raiders' departure would require Oakland to plausibly allege not only that the Raiders would have remained in Oakland but for Defendants' purported antitrust violation, but also that the Raiders would have remained at the Coliseum, rather than a new stadium such as envisioned by the proposal involving Ronnie Lott's investment group, because in the latter scenario the Coliseum would no longer host an NFL team regardless of whether the Raiders relocated to Las Vegas or to a new stadium in Oakland.

Oakland's theory of the relevant market—cities offering or willing to offer "home stadia and other support to major league professional football teams in the geographic United States," Compl. ¶ 88—is somewhat unorthodox. Although L.A. Memorial Coliseum considered a somewhat similar market for "[f]ootball stadia," 791 F.2d at 1365, Oakland cites no case recognizing a market comprised of cities [*42] seeking to attract professional sports franchises. Failure to plead a relevant market for a rule of reason antitrust claim warrants dismissal, Hicks v. PGA Tour, Inc., 897 F.3d 1109, 1120 (9th Cir. 2018), and as Defendants note, markets defined by their consumers rather than the products at issue are not generally cognizable, Newcal Indus., Inc. v. Ikon Office Sol., 513 F.3d 1038, 1045 (9th Cir. 2008). Oakland's reference to "support to major league professional football teams" raises issues with respect to that rule, although Oakland may be able to amend to allege specific forms of "support" that happen to be unique to NFL teams. As Defendants also note, Oakland's complaint includes only conclusory assertions that other professional sports franchises do not complete with NFL teams for stadiums. See Compl. ¶ 89 ("Not only is the entire Host City tied up in the NFL process, a professional baseball team is not a substitute for a professional football team."). Oakland's complaint does not address the test of "whether a hypothetical monopolist could impose a 'small but significant nontransitory increase in price' ('SSNIP') in the proposed market," or whether potential host cities would respond to such an increase by substituting other "products." See Saint Alphonsus Med. Ctr.-Nampa Inc. v. St. Luke's Health Sys., Ltd., 778 F.3d 775, 784 (9th Cir. 2015). On the other hand, the massive public subsidies of NFL stadiums and [*43] the competition among cities alleged in the complaint tend to suggest a market at least similar to Oakland's proposed definition. While the Court declines to resolve whether Oakland's current allegations support a cognizable relevant market, if Oakland chooses to amend its complaint, it should consider Defendants' arguments regarding this issue.

C. Breach of Contract

Oakland asserts that it can bring a claim for breach of the NFL's relocation policy based on its status as a third-party beneficiary of the policy, a doctrine originating in common law and codified as section 1559 of the California

Civil Code.[14] Defendants argue that the relocation policy is not a contract, although they do not dispute that the NFL's bylaws constitute a contract. The Court assumes for the sake of argument that, in vesting the Commissioner with authority to interpret the bylaws and "establish policy and procedure," Compl. Ex. 1 art. 8.5, the bylaws are at least amenable to interpretation under which they bind member teams to the Commissioner's interpretations and policies, such that breach of a policy established under article 8.5 can be enforced as a breach of the bylaws themselves.

Defendants' stronger argument is that Oakland lacks standing as a [*44] third-party beneficiary. In order to establish such standing, a plaintiff must establish all of the following elements:

> (1) whether the third party would in fact benefit from the contract, but also (2) whether a motivating purpose of the contracting parties was to provide a benefit to the third party, and (3) whether permitting a third party to bring its own breach of contract action against a contracting party is consistent with the objectives of the contract and the reasonable expectations of the contracting parties.

Goonewardene v. ADP, LLC, 6 Cal. 5th 817, 830, 243 Cal. Rptr. 3d 299, 434 P.3d 124 (2019); see also Spinks v. Equity Residential Briarwood Apartments, 171 Cal. App. 4th 1004, 1024, 90 Cal. Rptr. 3d 453 (2009) (addressing the purported beneficiary's burden).[15] Although disputes regarding purported third-party beneficiaries may in some circumstances be questions of fact, Souza v. Westlands Water Dist., 135 Cal. App. 4th 879, 891, 38 Cal. Rptr. 3d 78 (2006), dismissal at the pleading stage is appropriate where it is clear from the terms of the contract and the circumstances alleged in the complaint that the plaintiff was not a third-party beneficiary, see Goonewardene, 6 Cal. 5th at 822-37, 842-43 (reversing a contrary decision by the appellate court and reinstating a trial court judgment entered after sustaining a demurrer without leave to amend).

The first element is a relatively low hurdle in this case. As an existing host city, Oakland would benefit from policies that restrict the ability [*45] of the Raiders to leave Oakland for a new city. The remaining elements are not as favorable to Oakland's claim.

To show a "motivating purpose" of benefiting host cities, Oakland relies on a passage of the relocation policy providing that:

> each club's primary obligation to the League and to all other member clubs is to advance the interests of the League in its home territory. This primary obligation includes, but is not limited to, maximizing fan support, including attendance, in its home territory.

Compl. ¶ 4 (quoting Compl. Ex. 2 at 1). While Oakland is correct that this provision includes a reference to "home territory," it also makes clear on its face that the obligation is owed "to the League and to all other member clubs," with no indication of obligations owed to local governments. See id. Some other passages of the policy might, read in isolation, tend to support Oakland's proposed reading. E.g., Compl. Ex. 2 at 1, § A.1 ("[C]lubs are obligated to work diligently and in good faith to obtain and to maintain suitable stadium facilities in their home territories . . . ."). Taken as a whole, however, the policy repeatedly reinforces the conclusion that its overriding motivation is [*46] the NFL's business interests.

Oakland argues and alleges that the NFL enacted the relocation policy, including the factors that Oakland claims the NFL failed to consider, in response to the 1984 decision in Los Angeles Memorial Coliseum holding the NFL's unconstrained authority to block relocations under article 4.3 to be a violation of the Sherman Act. Compl. ¶ 3; Opp'n at 22. In that case, the Ninth Circuit did not suggest that the NFL owed a duty to host cities, but instead held [14] "A contract, made expressly for the benefit of a third person, may be enforced by him at any time before the parties thereto rescind it." Cal. Civ. Code § 1559.

[15] Although Defendants briefly preserve an argument that the NFL's governing documents should be interpreted under New York law, both parties rely primarily on California authority in their arguments regarding Oakland's contract claim, and the Court assumes for the purpose of this order that California law applies.

that "[t]o withstand antitrust scrutiny, restrictions on team movement should be more closely tailored to serve the needs inherent in producing the NFL 'product' and competing with other forms of entertainment." L.A. Mem'l Coliseum, 726 F.2d at 1397. Taking as true Oakland's allegation that the Ninth Circuit's decision motivated the NFL to enact its relocation policy to avoid antitrust scrutiny only reinforces the conclusion that it was intended solely to benefit the NFL and its member teams, not existing host cities.

The third element, addressing the parties' expectations, also requires dismissal of Oakland's contract claim. The California Supreme Court explained this element as follows:

> With regard to the third element, we observe that academic [*47] commentators have pointed out that the parties to a contract are typically focused on the terms of performance of the contract rather than on the remedies that will be available in the event of a failure of performance [citation], and that our cases have not required a showing that the contracting parties actually considered the third party enforcement question as a prerequisite to the applicability of the third party beneficiary doctrine. [citations] Accordingly, the third element does not focus upon whether the parties specifically intended third party enforcement but rather upon whether, taking into account the language of the contract and all of the relevant circumstances under which the contract was entered into, permitting the third party to bring the proposed breach of contract action would be "consistent with the objectives of the contract and the reasonable expectations of the contracting parties." [citation] In other words, this element calls for a judgment regarding the potential effect that permitting third party enforcement would have on the parties' contracting goals, rather than a determination whether the parties actually anticipated third party enforcement at the time [*48] the contract was entered into.
> Furthermore, the requirement in the third element that third party enforcement be consistent with "the objectives of the contract" is comparable to the inquiry, proposed in Professor Eisenberg's article, regarding whether third party enforcement will effectuate "'the contracting parties' performance objectives,'" namely "those objectives of the enterprise embodied in the contract, read in the light of surrounding circumstances . . . ." [citation]

Goonewardene, 6 Cal. 5th at 830-31 (ellipsis in original).

In Goonewardene, the court held that an employee did not satisfy this element with respect to a contract between her employer and its payroll processor, because the employer was itself in a position to sue the payroll processor for any breach that rendered the employer liable for wage and hour violations, and thus, "[s]imply put, permitting an employee to sue [the payroll processor] for an alleged breach of its contractual obligations to [the employer was] not necessary to effectuate the objectives of the contract." Id. at 836. The California Supreme Court also discussed one of its previous decisions, where job trainees lacked standing to bring a claim based on the terms of a government contract for [*49] the private entity that provided their training program, noting that, among other factors, the existence of an administrative process to resolve disputes between the government and the training company as evidence that the parties did not intend that the contract would be enforced through suits brought by dissatisfied trainees. Id. at 832 (discussing Martinez v. Socoma Cos., Inc., 11 Cal. 3d 394, 401-02, 113 Cal. Rptr. 585, 521 P.2d 841 (1974)).

Here, the section of the policy introducing the factors that Oakland claims Defendants failed to consider makes clear that the factors are intended to inform Defendants' determination of their own best business interests:

> The League has analyzed many factors in making prior business judgments concerning proposed franchise relocations. Such business judgments may be informed through consideration of the factors listed below, as well as other appropriate factors that are considered relevant by the Commissioner or the membership.[16]

[16] A footnote included here in the policy states that the list of factors was largely "contained in a bill reported by a Senate committee in 1984," but "essentially restate matters that the League has considered important in connection with team location decisions in the past." Compl. Ex. 2 at 3 n.1. The footnote also states that the "factors are also contained in a 'Statement of Principles' relating to franchise location developed by the League in consultation with the U.S. Conference of Mayors." Id.

> In considering a proposed relocation, the Member Clubs are making a business judgment concerning how best to advance their collective interests. Guidelines and factors such as those identified below are useful ways to organize data and to inform that business judgment. They are intended to assist the clubs in making [*50] a decision based on their judgment and experience, and taking into account those factors deemed relevant to and appropriate with regard to each proposed move.

Compl. Ex. 2 at 3, § C.

The "objectives of the enterprise embodied in the contract," see Goonewardene, 6 Cal. 5th at 831 (citation and emphasis omitted), are the NFL's business interests, not the interests of host cities. Moreover, like in Martinez, where an administrative process to resolve disputes between the contracting parties weighed against granting a third-party beneficiary the right to sue, the contract lays out a process to resolve whether a proposed relocation satisfies the NFL teams' business interests: the vote of the NFL's member teams themselves. Oakland's conclusory assertion that "enforcement of the Policies [by a host city against] Defendants is consistent with their objectives and reasonable" because the policy implicates "the investment and distribution of hundreds of millions of dollars of public funds" does not establish either that Defendants, as the contracting parties, intended that host cities should be able to sue for breach of the relocation policy, or that allowing such lawsuits would promote Defendants' own purposes of protecting [*51] their business interests and avoiding antitrust liability. This Court is bound by the test set by the California Supreme Court, which does not consider whether allowing suit by a third party would serve public interests separate from the interests of the contracting parties.

As noted above, Oakland must establish each of the three Goonewardene elements to be able to sue for breach of a contract to which it was not a party. Because the face of the relocation policy and Oakland's own allegations indicate both that Defendants did not promulgate the policy to protect host cities and that allowing host cities to enforce the policy is not "consistent with the objectives of the contract and the reasonable expectations of the contracting parties," Oakland's breach of contract claim is DISMISSED. Although this order need not reach Defendants' remaining arguments regarding the contract claim, the issues of whether the relocation policy's statement that teams' "business judgments may be informed through consideration of the factors listed below, as well as other appropriate factors" is a sufficiently definite promise to be enforceable and whether Oakland has plausibly alleged a breach of that [*52] provision would likely also support dismissal of Oakland's contract claim, and Oakland should consider those issues in deciding whether or how to pursue this claim in an amended complaint.

D. Quantum Meruit and Unjust Enrichment

Oakland's final claims are captioned as claims for "quantum meruit" and "unjust enrichment." Compl. ¶¶ 147-61. "A quantum meruit or quasi-contractual recovery rests upon the equitable theory that a contract to pay for services rendered is implied by law for reasons of justice. . . . However, it is well settled that there is no equitable basis for an implied-in-law promise to pay reasonable value when the parties have an actual agreement covering compensation." Hedging Concepts, Inc. v. First All. Mortg. Co., 41 Cal. App. 4th 1410, 1419, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 191 (1996). Courts interpret claims for "unjust enrichment" in the same manner:

> [U]njust enrichment is "not a cause of action . . . or even a remedy, but rather a general principle, underlying various legal doctrines and remedies. It is synonymous with restitution." McBride v. Boughton, 123 Cal. App. 4th 379, 387, 20 Cal. Rptr. 3d 115 (2004). As such, a claim for unjust enrichment is properly pled as a claim for a contract implied-in-law. It "does not lie when an enforceable, binding agreement exists defining the rights of the parties." Paracor Fin., Inc. v. Gen. Elec. Capital Corp., 96 F.3d 1151, 1167 (9th Cir. 1996). California, however, recognizes an exception to the [*53] rule that unjust enrichment does not lie when an enforceable contract exists: "Restitution may be awarded in lieu of breach of contract damages when the parties had an express contract, but it was procured by fraud or is unenforceable or ineffective for some reason." McBride, 123 Cal. App. 4th at 388.

Boon Rawd Trading Int'l Co. v. Paleewong Trading Co., 688 F. Supp. 2d 940, 956 (N.D. Cal. 2010).

Oakland alleges that the terms of the Raiders' tenancy at the Coliseum—including Oakland's investment in the Coliseum and other Raiders facilities—were governed by a signed lease agreement, which was extended at least once. Compl. ¶¶ 47, 52. Oakland does not address either the rule that implied contract claims do not lie where an enforceable contract exists or the exception for unenforceable contracts, and there is no indication that the lease agreement was unenforceable, that the Raiders breached any term of that express contract, or that Oakland provided any investment or services to the Raiders at any time when an express lease agreement was not in place. Oakland's quantum meruit and unjust enrichment claims are therefore DISMISSED.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the reasons discussed above, Defendants' motion is GRANTED, and Oakland's claims are DISMISSED. If Oakland is able to cure the defects identified in this order, it may [*54] file an amended complaint no later than September 9, 2019

IT IS SO ORDERED.

MEMORANDUM DECISION AND ORDER GRANTING IN PART AND DISMISSING IN PART DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO DISMISS WITH LEAVE TO AMEND AND GRANTING DEFENDANTS MOTION TO STRIKE.

(ECF No. 20)

I. INTRODUCTION

This case involves a putative class action initially filed by Plaintiffs Terina and Bryan Clark ("Plaintiffs") on May 10, 2018, in the Superior Court of the State of California in the County of Kern. See ECF No. 1 ¶ 3. Defendants WorldMark, The Club ("WorldMark"), Wyndham Resort Development Corporation ("WRDC"), and Wyndham Vacation Ownership, Inc. ("WVO") (collectively "Defendants") [*2] were served with the Complaint on November 6, 2018, and removed the case to this Court on December 6, 2018, asserting jurisdiction under the Class Action Fairness Act of 2005 ("CAFA"), codified in part at 28 U.S.C. § 1332(d). Id. ¶¶ 1, 4.

Under review is Defendants' motion to dismiss under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure ("FRCP") 12(b)(6), where Defendants argue that Plaintiffs have failed to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. ECF No. 20. Defendants also move to strike portions of the First Amended Complaint ("FAC") under FRCP 12(f) claiming that the portions are immaterial, impertinent, and scandalous. Id. For the reasons stated below, the Court GRANTS Defendants' motion to strike and GRANTS IN PART and DENIES IN PART Defendants' motion to dismiss with leave to amend.

A. Facts[1]

Plaintiffs are residents of Bakersfield, California, and citizens of California. ECF No. 18 ¶ 7. Defendant WRDC is incorporated in Oregon and has its principal place of business in Florida. ECF No. 1 ¶ 12. Defendant WVO is incorporated in Delaware and has its principal place of business in Florida. Id. ¶ 13. Defendant WorldMark is incorporated in California and has its principal place of business in Washington. [*3] Id. ¶ 14. The putative class in this matter consists of all individuals "who have 1) been sold a timeshare in California by Defendants through individuals or entities not licensed to sell real estate or arrange financing for real estate purchases in California and 2) have been told by Defendants that they have earned 'equity' on the purchase of timeshare points." ECF No. 18 ¶ 34.

Plaintiffs allege that they purchased a timeshare interest sold by Defendants WorldMark and WRDC in 2015 while on vacation in San Diego and purchased "additional timeshare points" in September 2016. Id. ¶ 13. On or around April 29, 2017, Plaintiffs received a call from an office operated by Defendants. Id. ¶ 15. The individual who spoke with Plaintiffs made "many materially false and misleading statements" and induced Plaintiffs to purchase 1,000 additional WorldMark vacation credit points for $3,450 plus a processing fee of $349. Id. ¶ 17. The purchase was financed by an extension of credit by WRDC, bringing the total amount owed by Plaintiffs for their timeshare interest to more than $26,000. Id. The contract for the purchase appeared to be intended for California purchasers. Id. ¶ 21. The name of the person [*4] who signed the contract on Defendants' behalf, Brett Dean, does not appear on any list of current, or recent, holders of a California real estate broker or salesperson license. ECF No. 18 ¶ 22.

Plaintiffs allege that Defendants have consistently represented that they have positive equity in their timeshare interest. Id. ¶ 24. On September 8, 2016, Defendants represented that Plaintiffs had $10,089.03 in equity in their timeshare purchases. Id. ¶ 25; FAC, Exhibit 2. Plaintiffs claim that the document purporting the amount of equity was created to facilitate the sale of additional WorldMark and WRDC timeshare points to Plaintiffs. Id. ¶ 26. Plaintiffs believe the actual market value of their timeshare points in September 2016 was zero or near zero, and Plaintiffs therefore actually had negative equity. Id. ¶ 28.

Plaintiffs allege that Defendants engaged in unfair business practices when they unlawfully sold a real estate interest within California through unlicensed individuals who earned commissions on the sales in violation of California law. Id. ¶ 38. Additionally, Plaintiffs allege that Defendants engaged in unfair business practices by making materially false representations in connection [*5] with the sale of a timeshare interest as to the equity value of their timeshare points. Id. ¶ 41. Finally, Plaintiffs allege that Defendants violated the California Vacation Ownership and Time-Share Act of 2004, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 11210 et seq. (the "Timeshare Act"), by making materially false and misleading representations about the equity value of Plaintiffs' timeshare points. Id. ¶¶ 46-51.

[1] Unless indicated, all facts are taken from the FAC. The allegations of material fact are taken as true and are construed in the light most favorable to the Clarks for purposes of deciding the motion to dismiss. Coalition For ICANN Transparency, Inc. v. VeriSign, Inc., 611 F.3d 495, 501 (2010).

B. Procedural Background

On December 12, 2018, Defendants filed their first motion to dismiss. ECF No. 4. Plaintiffs filed an opposition on December 31, 2018, ECF No. 6, and a motion to remand to state court on January 1, 2019, ECF No. 7.

On March 1, 2019, the Court denied Plaintiffs' motion to remand the case to state court, holding that Plaintiffs had not demonstrated that CAFA's local controversy exception, 28 U.S.C. § 1332(d)(4)(A), applied to the present case. ECF No. 16, at 10. The Court then permitted Plaintiffs to file an amended complaint, stating "Plaintiffs may file any amended complaint clarifying the allegations regarding in-state Defendants' conduct within 30 days." ECF No. 16, at 11. The Court deferred ruling on Defendants' motion to dismiss. ECF No. 16, at 12. The Plaintiffs filed the FAC on March 29, 2019. ECF No. 18.

Defendants now move [*6] to dismiss the FAC under FRCP 12(b)(6). ECF No. 20, at 2. Defendants also ask the Court to strike paragraphs 1 through 3 of the FAC under the heading "The Timeshare Industry." ECF No. 20 at 1. The Court has determined that the motion to dismiss is suitable for decision on the papers under Local Rule 230(g). For the reasons stated below, the Court grants in part and denies in part the motion to dismiss with leave to amend and grants the motion to strike portions of the FAC.

III. LEGAL STANDARD

A. Motion to strike portions of the FAC under Rule 12(f)

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(f) permits the Court to "strike from a pleading an insufficient defense or any redundant, immaterial, impertinent, or scandalous matter." Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(f). "Redundant allegations are those that are needlessly repetitive or wholly foreign to the issues involved in the action." Cal. Dep't of Toxic Substances Control v. Alco Pacific, Inc., 217 F. Supp. 2d 1028, 1033 (C.D. Cal. 2002) (internal quotation marks and citations omitted). Immaterial matter is "that which has no essential or important relationship to the claim for relief or the defenses being pleaded." Fantasy, Inc. v. Fogerty, 984 F.2d 1524, 1527 (9th Cir. 1993) (internal quotation marks and citations omitted), rev'd on other grounds, 510 U.S. 517, 114 S. Ct. 1023, 127 L. Ed. 2d 455 (1994). Impertinent matter "consists of statements that do not pertain, and are not necessary, to the issues in question." Id. A scandalous matter is that which "improperly casts [*7] a derogatory light on someone, most typically on a party to the action." Germaine Music v. Universal Songs of Polygram, 275 F. Supp. 2d 1288, 1300 (D. Nev. 2003) (internal quotation marks and citations omitted), rev'd in part on other grounds, 130 Fed. Appx. 153 (9th Cir. 2005) (unpublished).

B. Motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6)

A motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6) challenges the legal sufficiency of the opposing party's pleadings. Dismissal of an action under Rule 12(b)(6) is proper where there is either a "lack of a cognizable legal theory or the absence of sufficient facts alleged under a cognizable legal theory." Balistreri v. Pacifica Police Dep't, 901 F.2d 696, 699 (9th Cir. 1990). When considering a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim under Rule 12(b)(6), all allegations of material fact must be accepted as true and construed in the light most favorable to the pleading party. Cahill v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 80 F.3d 336, 337-38 (9th Cir. 1996). The inquiry is generally limited to the allegations made in the complaint. Lazy Y Ranch LTD v. Behrens, 546 F.3d 580, 588 (9th Cir. 2008).

Under Rule 8(a), a complaint must contain "a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief," in order to "give the defendant fair notice of what the . . . claim is and the grounds upon which it rests." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). A plaintiff is required to allege "enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Id. "A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the [*8] reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). "The plausibility standard is not akin to a 'probability requirement,' but it asks for more than a sheer possibility that a defendant has acted unlawfully." Id. (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556).

While Rule 8(a) does not require detailed factual allegations, "it demands more than an unadorned, the defendant-unlawfully-harmed-me accusation." Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678. A pleading is insufficient if it offers mere "labels and conclusions" or "a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555; see also Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678 ("Threadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements, do not suffice."). Moreover, it is inappropriate to assume that the plaintiff "can prove facts that it has not alleged or that the defendants have violated the . . . laws in ways that have not been alleged[.]" Associated Gen. Contractors of Cal., Inc. v. Cal. State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 526, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983). In practice, "a complaint . . . must contain either direct or inferential allegations respecting all the material elements necessary to sustain recovery under some viable legal theory." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 562. In other words, the complaint must describe the alleged misconduct in enough detail to lay the foundation for an identified legal claim.

*Heightened Pleading Standard [9] under Rule 9(b)

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b) requires a party alleging fraud to "state with particularity the circumstances constituting [the] fraud[.]" Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). This heightened pleading standard requires the party to do more than simply identify a transaction and allege in a conclusory manner that the transaction was fraudulent. See In re GlenFed, Inc. Sec. Litig., 42 F.3d 1541, 1548 (9th Cir. 1994) (en banc), superseded by statute on other grounds. Rather, the party must set forth in detail "the who, what, when, where, and how" of the alleged fraudulent conduct. Vess v. Ciba-Geigy Corp. USA, 317 F.3d 1097, 1106 (9th Cir. 2003) (citation omitted). The purpose of Rule 9(b) is to protect defendants from factually baseless claims of fraud as much as it is meant to give defendants notice of the claims asserted against them. See Kearns v. Ford Motor Co., 567 F.3d 1120, 1125 (9th Cir. 2009). When a party averring fraud fails to meet the heightened pleading standard of Rule 9(b), dismissal of the claim is proper. See Vess, 317 F.3d at 1107 ("A motion to dismiss a complaint or claim 'grounded in fraud' under Rule 9(b) for failure to plead with particularity is the functional equivalent of a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6) for failure to state a claim.").

"Dismissal without leave to amend is proper if it is clear that the complaint could not be saved by amendment." Kendall v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., 518 F.3d 1042, 1051 (9th Cir. 2008). To the extent that the pleadings can be cured by the allegation of additional facts, the Court will afford the plaintiff [*10] leave to amend. Cook, Perkiss and Liehe, Inc. v. N. Cal. Collection Serv. Inc., 911 F.2d 242, 247 (9th Cir. 1990) (citations omitted).

IV. ANALYSIS

A. Motion to strike under Rule 12(f)

First, the Court grants Defendants' motion to strike paragraphs 1 through 3 of the FAC. Under the subheading "THE TIMESHARE INDUSTRY," these paragraphs start with the following "The timeshare industry has long been notorious for aggressive sales practices and predatory conduct, often directed towards the elderly and those with dreams of vacations that may exceed their financial ability to achieve them." ECF No. 18 ¶ 1. The FAC proceeds to list one verdict and six settlements in unrelated cases where entities have been liable for violations or alleged violations of the Timeshare Act. Id. These other cases have no bearing on the Defendants' alleged unlawful conduct in the present case. Paragraph 2 states: "Timeshare companies engage in these deceptive practices because they must hide the truth: nearly all timeshares are worth nothing at all." Id. ¶ 2. Lastly, Paragraph 3 of the FAC states, "Purchasers pay for this right to try to reserve a week not only through a high interest mortgage, but also through annual maintenance fees that increase every year. These maintenance fees alone often exceed what a week in the [*11] identical or a comparable hotel or condominium rents for on the open market." ECF No. 18, ¶ 3.

Immaterial matter is that which has no essential or important relationship to the claim for relief or the defenses asserted. Whittlestone, Inc. v. Handi-Craft Co., 618 F.3d 970, 974 (9th Cir. 2010). Impertinent matter consists of statements that do not pertain, and are not necessary, to the issues in question. Id. A pleading is scandalous when it "improperly casts a derogatory light on someone, most typically on a party to the action." Germaine Music v. Universal Songs of Polygram, 275 F. Supp. 2d 1288, 1300 (D. Nev. 2003) (internal quotation marks and citations omitted), rev'd in part on other grounds, 130 Fed. Appx. 153 (9th Cir. 2005) (unpublished).

Here, the Court agrees with Defendants that paragraphs 1 through 3 of the FAC are immaterial. These allegations do not pertain to the alleged wrongful conduct by Defendants. They merely serve to paint the Defendants and the industry in which they operate in a negative light. Accordingly, we grant Defendants' motion to strike paragraphs 1 through 3.

B. The Timeshare Act claim (Second Cause of Action) fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted and does not meet the particularity requirement under Rule 9(b).

The Vacation Ownership and Timeshare Act of 2004 ("Timeshare Act"), Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 11210, et seq., prohibits a person or entity subject to the Act from making [*12] material misrepresentations in the advertising and promoting of timeshares that materially misrepresent the size, nature, extent, qualities, and characteristics of the offered timeshare plan. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 11245(a)(1)-(3). The California Legislature intended the Timeshare Act to be "interpreted broadly in order to encompass all forms of time-share plans . . . that are created with respect to accommodations that are located in the state or that are offered for sale in the state . . . ." Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 11211(d).

The Timeshare Act provides that any timeshare interest owner may bring an action for damages or for injunctive relief for violations under the statute. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 11285.

The FAC states that Brett Dean signed the contract for the April 2017 sale of timeshare points on behalf of Worldmark and WRDC. ECF No. 18 ¶ 14; see also FAC, Exhibit 1, at 3. In the Addendum to Retail Installment Contract Vacation Owner Agreement, Brett Dean signed as an authorized agent on behalf of "WYNDHAM RESORT DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION AND WORLDMARK, THE CLUB." ECF No. 18; FAC, Exhibit 1, at 3. The Clarks allege that Defendants, through their representative, misrepresented the actual amount of equity in their existing timeshare interest. ECF No. 18 ¶¶ 16, 25-30. As evidence [*13] of the misrepresented amount of equity, Plaintiffs attached Exhibit 2, a "Final Summary" webpage dated September 8, 2016, which shows that the Clarks have equity of $10,089.03. ECF No. 18; FAC, Exhibit 2. However, Plaintiffs do not specifically allege that the caller in April 2017 made specific reference to the misrepresented amount of equity. Thus, even when the Court accepts the Clarks' claims as true, Plaintiffs do not establish a prima facie case that the Defendants made a materially false statement or misrepresentation in connection with the promotion or advertising of a timeshare plan. A bare recitation of the elements of the cause of action is insufficient to survive a motion to dismiss. Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678.

Furthermore, the FAC fails adequately to set forth the alleged fraudulent scheme with particularity as required by FRCP 9(b). Defendants contend that Plaintiffs' Timeshare Act claims sound in fraud, and Plaintiffs are therefore required to plead the circumstances of fraud with particularity as required by Rule 9(b). The Court agrees.

Plaintiffs contend that the alleged unlawful activity does not need to be pleaded with specificity. ECF No. 22.[2] While a federal court will examine state law to determine whether [*14] the elements of fraud have been pleaded sufficiently to state a cause of action, Rule 9(b) is a federally imposed rule that requires the circumstances of the fraud be pleaded with particularity. Vess v. Ciba-Geigy Corp. USA, 317 F.3d 1097, 1103 (9th Cir. 2003). Therefore, Rule 9(b) requires the Clarks' claims of a fraudulent misrepresentation to be pleaded with particularity.

In Vess, the plaintiff argued that because fraud was not an essential element of the state law cause of action, Rule 9(b) did not apply. 317 F.3d at 1103. The Ninth Circuit rejected this argument, holding that allegations of fraud must be pleaded with particularity even when fraud is not an essential element of the cause of action. Id. The same rule of law applies to the Timeshare Act allegations in the present case.

Generally, allegations of fraud must allege the who, what, when, where and how of the misconduct. Id. at 1106. The FAC does not meet this pleading standard. Plaintiffs cast a net that is too wide with regard to who actually made the misrepresentation of equity to the Clarks. Moreover, the Clarks do not claim that the misrepresentation was expressly communicated in the sales call made to them. Instead, Plaintiffs allege that the misrepresentation was contained in the summaries provided to the Clarks. Even assuming the [*15] equity amount is misrepresented, Plaintiffs do not allege that such a misrepresentation was a product of Defendants' scheme to defraud the Clarks and other similarly situated persons. Accordingly, the Timeshare Act claim must be dismissed.

C. The Court grants in part and denies in part Defendants' motion to dismiss with respect to the UCL claim (First Cause of Action).

Under California's Unfair Competition Law (UCL), Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq., any person or entity that has engaged, is engaging or threatens to engage in unfair competition may be enjoined in any court of competent jurisdiction. Wilson v. Hewlett-Packard Co., 668 F.3d 1136, 1140 (9th Cir. 2012) (citing Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 17201, 17203). Unfair competition includes any "unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business act or practice and unfair, deceptive, untrue or misleading advertising." Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200. A business act or practice need only meet one of three criteria—unlawful, unfair, or fraudulent—to be considered unfair competition under the UCL. Abramson v. Marriott Ownership Resorts, Inc., 155 F. Supp. 3d 1056, 1066 (C.D. Cal. 2016) (citing Daro v. Superior Court, 151 Cal. App. 4th 1079, 1093, 61 Cal. Rptr. 3d 716 (2007)). Plaintiffs assert the UCL claims under all three of the prongs. ECR No. 18 ¶¶ 37, 41.

Where a UCL claim is grounded in alleged fraudulent conduct, it is subject to the heightened pleading standard of Rule 9(b). See Vess, 317 F.3d at 1103-04. For example, when a plaintiff relies entirely on a unified course of fraudulent conduct as a basis [*16] for a UCL claim, the claim must satisfy the particularity requirements of Rule 9(b). Kearns, 567 F.3d at 1126-27. But when a plaintiff's allegations do not rely entirely on a unified fraudulent course of conduct, those aspects of the UCL claim that are not grounded in fraud need not meet the Rule 9(b) requirements. Vess, 317 F.3d at 1106.

"Unlawful" prong

The UCL's "unlawful" prong "borrows violations of other laws and treats them as independently actionable." Wilson, 668 F.3d at 1140. The UCL's coverage is interpreted broadly, embracing anything that can properly be called a business practice and that at the same time is forbidden by law. Id. A violation of another law is a predicate for stating a cause of action under the UCL's unlawful prong. DocMagic, Inc. v. Ellie Mae, Inc., 745 F. Supp. 2d 1119, 1146 (N.D. Cal. 2010).

[2] Plaintiffs cite People v. Custom Craft Carpets, Inc., 159 Cal. App. 3d 676, 684, 206 Cal. Rptr. 12 (1984) and Aicco, Inc. v. Insurance Co. of N. Am., 90 Cal. App. 4th 579, 596, 109 Cal. Rptr. 2d 359 (2001). Neither of these cases address whether Plaintiffs are required to plead the alleged fraudulent conduct with particularity in the present case.

First, Plaintiffs claim that it is "unlawful and unfair in California for an entity to sell real estate other than through a licensed real estate broker or sales person and unlawful to permit the unlicensed individual to receive any compensation arising . . . from the sale." ECF No. 18 ¶ 38. Plaintiffs allege that timeshare interests are interests in real property. Cal-Am Corp. v. Dep't. of Real Estate, 104 Cal. App. 3d 453, 457, 163 Cal. Rptr. 729 (1980); Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 11212. They also assert that a timeshare interest may only be sold by a California licensed real estate broker or agent and since the representative on the sales contract, [*17] Brett Dean, is not a licensed real estate broker or salesperson, Defendants violated the law. ECF No. 18 ¶ 22. In addition, Plaintiffs allege that Mr. Dean received a commission on the sale which violates Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 10137. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 10137 states "[i]t is unlawful for any licensed real estate broker to employ or compensate, directly or indirectly, any person for performing any of the acts within the scope of this chapter who is not a licensed real estate broker, or a real estate salesperson licensed under the broker . . . ." This contention raises a plausible claim that the Defendants acted unlawfully when Mr. Dean sold the timeshare interest to the Clarks. This allegation is also not connected to any allegations of fraudulent conduct, and therefore does not need to meet the particularity requirements of Rule 9(b).

However, Plaintiffs also appear to be relying on an alleged fraudulent scheme to satisfy the "unlawful" prong of the UCL claim. Specifically, the FAC alleges that "[i]t is unlawful, unfair and fraudulent in California to make a material misrepresentation of facts in connection with the promotion of any timeshare interest," and asserts that "Defendants made materially false representations to Plaintiffs in connection [*18] with the sale of a timeshare interest" by "stating to Plaintiffs that they had 'equity' in excess of $10,000 arising from their prior timeshare purchases." ECF No. 18 ¶ 41 (emphasis added).

In Kearns, 567 F.3d at 1127, the Ninth Circuit held that dismissal of a UCL claim was appropriate because the claims were all grounded in fraud and the plaintiffs failed to plead with particularity. There, William Kearns brought claims against Ford Motor Company ("Ford") on behalf of himself and those similarly situated claiming that Ford acted illegally to increase sales of their Certified Pre-Owned vehicles. Kearns, 567 F.3d at 1122. Specifically, Kearns alleged that Ford made false and misleading statements concerning safety and reliability of the Certified Pre-Owned vehicles, and that Ford failed to disclose the lack of oversight it had over the certification process. Id. at 1123. On appeal, the Ninth Circuit rejected Kearns's argument that some of his claims should not be subject to Rule 9(b) because they were not grounded in fraud. Id. at 1125. Because Kearns's claims were grounded in a unified course of fraudulent conduct, he was required to plead the who, what, when, where, and how the misconduct was committed. Id. at 1126.

In the present case, the Clarks' claim of unlicensed sales [*19] and financing is separate from the alleged fraudulent scheme of misrepresenting the amount of equity held by Plaintiffs. Thus, Plaintiffs' claims under the "unlawful" prong of the UCL are not entirely grounded in fraud and need not be pleaded with particularity. Therefore, Defendants' motion to dismiss is DENIED with respect to the asserted "unlawful" UCL claim based upon unlicensed sales and financing. The motion is GRANTED WITH LEAVE TO AMEND as to any "unlawful" UCL claim based upon the alleged fraudulent scheme of misrepresenting the amount of equity held by Plaintiffs. If Plaintiffs wish to rely on the alleged fraudulent course of conduct to satisfy the "unlawful" prong of the UCL claim, they must meet the heightened pleading standard of Rule 9(b) in any amended complaint.

Next, Plaintiffs reassert the allegations from their Timeshare Act claim that Defendants violated California law when Defendants made false or materially misleading statements about the equity value of Plaintiffs' timeshare points. Because the Court dismisses the Timeshare Act claim above, this claim cannot form the basis of the UCL claim.

"Unfair" prong

The UCL does not define the term "unfair" and the California courts [*20] are unresolved as to the exact definition under the statute. Davis v. HSBC Bank Nevada, N.A., 691 F.3d 1152, 1169 (9th Cir. 2012). The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals has acknowledged a split in the California courts as to whether a claim under the "unfair" prong may be properly brought by consumers or if the cause of action is limited to competitors. Id. at 1170. Prior to the decision in Cel-Tech Comms. Inc. v. L.A. Cellular Tel. Co., 20 Cal. 4th 163, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 (1999), the California courts held that "unfair" conduct occurs when the practice offends an established public policy or when the practice is immoral, unethical, oppressive, unscrupulous, or substantially injurious to consumers. Davis, 691 F.3d at 1169 (citing S. Bay Chevrolet v. Gen. Motors Acceptance Corp., 72 Cal. App. 4th 861, 886, 85 Cal. Rptr. 2d 301 (1999)). Under this approach, a court must balance the utility of the defendant's conduct against the gravity of the harm to the alleged victim. Id. Cel-Tech held that this balancing test provided too little guidance to the courts. 20 Cal. 4th at 185.

Accordingly, Cel-Tech adopted a separate analysis, holding that "unfair" means "conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition." Id. at 544. California courts have been split on whether to apply the Cel-Tech approach or the pre-Cel-Tech [*21] balancing test to consumer actions alleging unfair conduct under the UCL. Davis, 691 F.3d at 1170. The Davis Court declined to decide which approach applied, holding that the plaintiff's claims failed under either alternative. Id. This Court holds that the same is true in the present case.

The FAC fails to meet either the Cel-Tech approach or the pre-Cel-Tech balancing test in pleading unfair conduct under the UCL. Under the Cel-Tech approach, the Clarks have not directly alleged or presented facts that plausibly suggest how misrepresenting the amount of equity or employing an unlicensed salesperson violates the policy or spirit of the antitrust laws. Furthermore, under the pre-Cel-Tech balancing approach, the FAC offers no more than "It is unlawful and unfair in California for an entity to sell real estate other than through a licensed real estate broker or sales person," ECF No. 18 ¶ 37; and "It is unlawful, unfair and fraudulent in California to make a material misrepresentation of facts in connection with the promotion of any timeshare interest," ECF No. 18 ¶ 41. These bare allegations of unfairness do not establish a claim under the "unfair" prong of the UCL.

"Fraudulent" prong

For the reasons stated above, [*22] Plaintiffs have failed to plead with the particularity required by Rule 9(b) that Defendants' conduct was fraudulent. For these same reasons, the Court dismisses Plaintiffs' claim under the UCL that Defendants conduct was fraudulent.

In sum, the Court denies in part and grants in part with leave to amend the motion to dismiss with respect to Plaintiffs' UCL claim under the unlawful prong. With respect to the UCL claims under the "unfair" and "fraudulent" prongs, the Court grants the motion to dismiss with leave to amend.

V. CONCLUSION AND ORDER

For the foregoing reasons, Defendants' motion to dismiss is GRANTED IN PART WITH LEAVE TO AMEND and DENIED IN PART. Defendants' Motion to Strike paragraphs 1 through 3 under Rule 12(f) of the FAC is GRANTED. If Plaintiffs so choose, they may file an amended complaint within 30 days of the date of this order.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

REPORT AND RECOMMENDATION

This matter is before the Court on Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the Amended Class Action Complaint. (ECF No. 89). This motion was referred to the undersigned for a report and recommendation under 28 U.S.C. § 636(b)(1)(B) and Local Rule 72.1. (ECF No. 95). This Court recommends the motion be granted in part and denied in part.

I. FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

Plaintiffs, led by Plymouth County Retirement System and other institutional investors, seek remedies under the Securities Exchange Act against Defendant Patterson Companies, Inc., and various executives of Patterson. Plaintiffs assert Patterson conspired with its principal competitors, Henry Schein, Inc., and Benco Dental Supply Company to boycott Group Purchasing Options ("GPOs") and fix dental supply prices.

GPOs are membership organizations that aggregate the buying power of solo dentists and small group dental practices. (Compl. [*2] ¶¶ 3, 42, 44). In aggregating their purchasing power, GPOs provide dentists power to negotiate lower prices on dental supplies. (Compl. ¶ 3). GPOs further save costs by using online sales rather than the door-to-door sales force relied upon by Patterson, Schein, and Benco. (Compl. ¶ 3). These discounts cut into the traditionally "significantly marked-up prices" that Patterson, Schein, and Benco charge independent dentists. (Compl. ¶¶ 3, 41-43). GPOs also introduced competition to Patterson, Schein, and Benco by providing sales opportunities to smaller distributors. (Compl. ¶ 44).

Patterson, a Minnesota company, is "the second largest distributor of dental supplies in the United States." (Am. Class Action Compl. ¶¶ 1, 19, 25) (hereinafter "Compl.").[1] Patterson supplies consumable products and basic and advanced dental equipment to dentists, dental laboratories, and other healthcare professionals. (Compl. ¶ 39). Patterson and its competitors, Schein and Benco, are full-service distributors for the dental supply market. (See Compl. ¶ 3). Combined, Patterson, Schein, and Benco control about 85% of the dental supply market. (Compl. ¶¶ 1, 40).

A. Procedural Posture

Plaintiffs initially brought [*3] suit on March 28, 2018 against Patterson, Scott Anderson,[2] and Ann Gugino.[3] (ECF No. 1). Afterwards the parties, including various competing plaintiffs, stipulated to the appointment of lead plaintiffs and lead counsel. (ECF Nos. 58, 63, 64). Plaintiffs then filed the operative complaint against Patterson, Anderson, Gugino, Stephen Armstrong,[4] and James Wiltz.[5] (Compl., ECF No. 74). Count One asserts a violation of Section

---

[1] Patterson distributes its products through three subsidiaries, Patterson Dental, Patterson Animal Health, and Patterson Medical. (Compl. ¶¶ 25, 39). Patterson Dental makes up approximately 60% of Patterson's business, generating sales in excess of $2billion. (Compl. ¶ 39). Unless specifically noted, references to "Patterson" herein are to Patterson and Patterson Dental.

[2] Anderson served as Patterson's CEO and president from April 25, 2010 through June 1, 2017. (Compl. ¶ 26). Prior to that, Anderson served as president of Patterson Dental from June 2006 through April 2010. (Compl. ¶ 26).

[3] Gugino served as Patterson's CFO from November 2014 through her resignation on March 1, 2018. (Compl. ¶¶ 12, 30, 123). Before that, she served as Patterson's vice president of finance and operations and vice president of strategy and planning. (Compl. ¶ 30).

[4] Armstrong served as Patterson's executive vice president, CFO, and treasurer from July 1999 through October 2014. (Compl. ¶ 28).

10(b) of the Exchange Act and Rule 10b-5(b). (Compl. ¶¶ 261-70). Count Two asserts a violation of Section 20(a) of the Exchange Act. (Compl. ¶¶ 271-77). Plaintiffs propose a class of those who purchased or acquired Patterson stock from June 26, 2013 through February 28, 2018. (Compl. ¶ 255).

Defendants moved to dismiss the complaint. (ECF No. 89). The parties fully briefed the motion. (ECF Nos. 91, 100, 101). The motion was referred to the undersigned, (ECF No. 95), and argued at a motion hearing held May 13, 2019, (ECF No. 103; see ECF No. 107). Plaintiffs submitted supplemental authority on June 14, 2019, (ECF No. 110), and Defendants responded, (ECF No. 111). The motion to dismiss is now ripe for determination.

B. Factual Background[6]

Sometime around February 2013, a newly formed [*4] GPO in New Mexico announced it had partnered with Patterson "to provide the individual office the same opportunities as the larger corporations." (Compl. ¶ 54). On February 8, 2013, Benco's managing director, Chuck Cohen, forwarded the New Mexico GPO's email announcement to Patterson's president, Paul Guggenheim,[7] stating: "Just wanted to let you know about some noise I've picked up from New Mexico. FYI: Our policy at Benco is that we do not recognize, work with, or offer discounts to buying groups (though we do work with corporate accounts) and our team understands that policy." (Compl. ¶¶ 5, 55). Guggenheim forwarded this email to Patterson's head of sales, David Misiak,[8] and Patterson's head of marketing, Tim Rogan.[9] (Compl. ¶¶ 5, 56). Guggenheim then responded to Cohen: "Thanks for the heads up. I'll investigate the situation. We feel the same way about these." (Compl. ¶¶ 5, 56). Cohen then sent a text message to a Benco regional manager: "I just sent Paul [Guggenheim] a note about it. Don't want to call because it might be construed as price fixing." (Compl. ¶¶ 5, 57). Three days later, Patterson informed the New Mexico GPO it would not be partnering with it. (Compl. ¶ 58).

On February [*5] 27, 2013, Misiak emailed Anthony Fruehauf, Patterson's mid-Atlantic regional manager, instructing him to reject Atlantic Dental Care, a suspected GPO, even though Fruehauf believed Patterson would "los[e] a big chunk of business." (Compl. ¶ 59). Misiak instructed Fruehauf to inform his sales staff that it was in "their best interest long term . . . not to take our business in that direction." (Compl. ¶ 59). Misiak further stated: "Confidential and not for discussion . . . our 2 largest competitors stay out of these as well. If you hear differently and have specific proof please send that to me." (Compl. ¶¶ 6, 59).

After Benco did business with Atlantic Dental Care, Guggenheim emailed Cohen on June 6, 2013 using the same email thread from February 2013. (Compl. ¶ 60). Guggenheim stated:

5 Wiltz served as Patterson's interim CEO from June through November 2017. (Compl. ¶¶ 32, 213).

6 Because this matter is before the Court on Defendants' Rule 12(b)(6) motion, "the pleadings are construed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party, and the facts alleged in the complaint must be taken as true." City of Lake Elmo v. 3M Co., 237 F. Supp. 3d 877, 885 (D. Minn. 2017) (citing Hamm v. Groose, 15 F.3d 110, 112 (8th Cir. 1994)). Thus, these facts are derived solely from the complaint or materials embraced by the complaint. See Illig v. Union Elec. Co., 652 F.3d 971, 976 (8th Cir. 2011) (noting that, on a motion to dismiss, courts may consider the pleadings themselves, materials embraced by the pleadings, exhibits attached to the pleadings, and matters of public record).

7 Guggenheim served as president of Patterson Dental from April 2010 through June 15, 2016, at which point he was appointed chief innovation officer of Patterson, where he served until June 1, 2017. (Compl. ¶ 35). Guggenheim reported directly to Anderson, Patterson's CEO. (Compl. ¶ 229).

8 Misiak served as Patterson's head of sales from 2010 to until November 1, 2016, when he became president of Patterson Dental. (Compl. ¶ 36). Misiak served as president of Patterson Dental through May 3, 2018. (Compl. ¶¶ 36, 132). Misiak reported directly to Anderson, Patterson's CEO. (Compl. ¶¶ 132, 229).

9 Rogan served as Patterson Dental's head of marketing from 2010 through 2017, when he was appointed as vice president and general manager of North America. (Compl. ¶ 37). Rogan reported directly to Anderson, Patterson's CEO. (Compl. ¶ 229).

> Reflecting back on our conversation earlier this year, could you shed some light on your business agreement with Atlantic Dental Care? . . . I'm wondering if your position on buying groups is still as you articulated back in February? . . . Sometimes these things grow legs without our awareness!

(Compl. ¶¶ 8, 60). Cohen responded on June 10, 2013: "As we've discussed, we don't recognize buying groups." [*6] (Compl. ¶¶ 8, 61). Cohen explained how Atlantic Dental Care was not a GPO, even noting that Benco had asked to see various business documents for confirmation. (Compl. ¶ 61). Guggenheim responded: "Sounds good Chuck [Cohen], Just wanted to clarify where you guys stand." (Compl. ¶¶ 8, 62). Guggenheim then forwarded the email conversation to Anderson, Patterson's CEO, with an accompanying message of "FYI." (Compl. ¶¶ 8, 62).

On June 26, 2013, Patterson filed its 2013 Form 10-K with the SEC, for fiscal year ending April 27, 2013. (Compl. ¶¶ 63, 141). The 2013 Form 10-K contained certifications from Defendants Anderson and Armstrong. (Compl. ¶ 141). The 2013 Form 10-K included statements that Patterson was a "market leader with a strong competitive position," that the United States dental products distribution industry was "highly competitive," and Patterson used "competitive pricing" to differentiate itself from competitors. (Compl. ¶ 142). Patterson described the dental supply market as "highly fragmented and competitive," noting that industry consolidation among suppliers, price competition, and new competitors could increase competition. (Compl. ¶ 143). Patterson attributed its success [*7] to "value-added, full-service capabilities, using technology to enhance customer service, continuing to improve [their] operating efficiencies, and growing through internal expansion and acquisitions." (Compl. ¶ 144). Patterson indicated the healthcare industry was "experiencing substantial changes which are causing uncertainty in the market and may adversely affect" the dental supply business. (Compl. ¶ 146). The healthcare industry "has undergone significant change driven by various efforts to reduce costs," including "collective purchasing arrangements and consolidation among office-based healthcare practitioners that may enable purchasing at more favorable prices . . . ." (Compl. ¶ 146). Patterson warned that its profit margins, as well as those of its competitors, "may be adversely affected by industry changes." (Compl. ¶ 146).

In August 2013, Neal McFadden,[10] Patterson's division head for special markets, contacted Misiak and Rogan regarding whether to consider doing business with GPOs, asking: "Is it worth it to explore GPO????" (Compl. ¶¶ 7, 64). Rogan responded: "We don't need GPOs in the dental business. Schein, Benco and Patterson have always said no. I believe it is our duty [*8] to uphold this and protect this great industry." (Compl. ¶¶ 7, 46, 64).

Patterson issued its fiscal year 2014 first quarter earnings on August 22, 2013 and held an earnings call. (Compl. ¶ 148). Anderson indicated that Patterson's consumable dental supplies sales had experienced "six months of solid growth" attributable to "stability in the dental market." (Compl. ¶ 148).

Misiak emailed Anderson and Guggenheim on September 3, 2013, forwarding an article entitled "GPOs Expand Their Reach" (Compl. ¶ 66). The article described the relationship between a GPO and Burkart—Patterson's competitor and the dental supply market's fourth largest distributor. (Compl. ¶¶ 8, 66). Misiak stated:

> I would not currently classify [GPOs] as a big threat to the business but the GPO noise has been pretty loud from the field. We have said no at every turn, including to Delta Dental. Benco has also crept into a few of these. My guidance has been to politely say no and weather the storm with these. Incredible to me that Burkhart has bit this apple and they are broadcasting it.

(Compl. ¶¶67, 8). Anderson responded that "We need to watch this" and the article "shows how weak Burkhart is." (Compl. ¶¶ 67, 8). The next [*9] day, Misiak and McFadden distributed a memo to all of Patterson's regional and branch managers stating that the special markets division would not work with GPOs as a "guiding principle." (Compl. ¶¶ 7, 65).

The Texas Dental Association formed TDA Perks Supplies in October 2013. (Compl. ¶ 78). TDA Perks Supplies, a state-run GPO, planned to sell discounted dental supplies to member dentists via an online sales platform, in collaboration with SourceOne. (Compl. ¶ 78). Sometime thereafter, Benco's regional manager for Texas, Ron [10] McFadden served as president of Patterson Dental's special markets division beginning June 2013, when that division was formed. (Compl. ¶¶ 38, 64). McFadden reported directly to Anderson, Patterson's CEO. (Compl. ¶ 229).

Fernandez, called John Hyden, Patterson's regional manager for San Antonio, to discuss whether their companies would attend the Texas Dental Association's annual trade convention in light of its partnership with SourceOne. (Compl. ¶ 81). Hyden discussed the conversation with Clint Edens, his supervisor and Patterson's south central regional manager. (Compl. ¶ 81). Edens emailed Misiak and Rogan, stating that TDA had "flooded the market with advertisements offering 35% savings" and that he was "committed to pulling from the TDA if they do not discontinue competing with us via TDA Perks." (Compl. ¶ 82). Rogan responded: "This one has royally pissed me off." (Compl. [*10] ¶ 82). Rogan instructed Edens to generate a presentation for TDA of "[a]ll things Patterson does in state" and to "spin it to our mantra about helping our customers grow and not trying to decrease their supply bill." (Compl. ¶ 82).

On November 20, 2013, Misiak told Andy Goldsmith, a representative from Smile Source, a GPO, that Patterson was "currently not interested but will keep the strategy and Smile Source on the 'idea board' and get back to you should things change." (Compl. ¶ 70). Benco and Schein had similarly rejected doing business with Smile Source in October 2013. (Compl. ¶ 69). That same day, a Patterson sales representative emailed Rogan to inquire how to respond to a GPO that had reached out to her. (Compl. ¶ 71). Rogan responded: "We don't sell to buying groups" and "Let's talk live." (Compl. ¶ 71).

Patterson issued its fiscal year 2014 second quarter earnings on November 21, 2013 and held an earnings call. (Compl. ¶¶ 151-52). Anderson attributed Patterson's performance to "industry-leading technology wrapped by a suite of value-added services." (Compl. ¶¶ 151-52).

On December 13, 2013, Patterson announced it would not attend the Texas Dental Association's 2014 convention. [*11] (Compl. ¶¶ 84, 78). On January 6, 2014, Misiak called Dave Steck, Schein's head of sales, to discuss whether Schein was also boycotting the 2014 TDA convention. (Compl. ¶ 85). Less than a week later, Steck emailed Misiak: "I'll be calling you to let you know about our decision on the matter we recently discussed in the next couple of days." (Compl. ¶ 86). The email subject line was "Texas." (Compl. ¶ 86). Misiak forwarded the email to Rogan, adding: "He already told me they were out. Full blown!" (Compl. ¶ 86). Rogan replied to Misiak: "That sucks. You should call him. 'Thought I could trust you' type of conversation." (Compl. ¶ 86).

About five weeks after their previous communications, on December 30, 2013, Smile Source again reached out to Misiak and McFadden indicating it was "odd" that he "never heard back" because Smile Source "purchase[s] over $14MM annually in supplies, and that number continues to double every year. Dr. Goldsmith advised me that you are not interested in working with us." (Compl. ¶ 70).

Per the Complaint, McFadden was omnipresent when it related to Patterson's relationship with GPOs. McFadden informed another GPO, Lighthouse Dental Buying Group, LLC, on February [*12] 10, 2014 that "[a]t the advice of our legal department and our executive leadership team I am respectfully declining your offer to participate further in your RFP. Patterson has historically never done business with GPOs and culturally we do not feel it is a long term strategy for our company." (Compl. ¶ 72). On April 23, 2014, McFadden informed Guggenheim that he instructed Patterson sales staff "should pass on [GPOs]" given they are a "slippery slope" and "tout a 20% saving to the dentists on supplies." (Compl. ¶ 72).

Patterson issued its fiscal year 2014 third quarter earnings on February 20, 2014 and held an earnings call. (Compl. ¶ 154). Anderson stated Patterson's "strong growth" was attributed to its "dental team execut[ing] well with equipment and software sales increasing 5.6% from the year earlier level and all major categories posting gains." (Compl. ¶ 154).

Sometime in March 2014, Patterson met with the Texas Dental Association to demand that it end its contractual relationship with SourceOne. (Compl. ¶ 88). Patterson asserted that if the relationship continued, Patterson would no longer attend the Texas Dental Association's convention or advertise in its publications. (Compl. [*13] ¶ 88). On April 16, 2014, Cohen forwarded an article from the Texas Dental Association entitled "Texas Private Practices Gain the Volume Purchasing Power of Corporate Practices" to Guggenheim and Tim Sullivan, Schein's president. (Compl. ¶ 91). The article noted that large distributors "rarely provide the best deal" and TDA Perks could save an average of 35% on dental supplies. (Compl. ¶ 91). Cohen commented in the forwarded email: "Thought you'd be interested in this 'essay' from our friends at the TDA. Not only are they our new competitor, but they basically tell their members that dental distributors rip off their dentists. Nice!" (Compl. ¶ 91).

A Patterson sales representative in Atlanta informed McFadden that Smile Source was "really growing." (Compl. ¶ 72). McFadden responded on May 8, 2014, calling Smile Source "very sleazy . . . Basically giving small dentists better buying power. Most dealers are not working with them except small desperate ones. I'm sorry you're experiencing this." (Compl. ¶ 72). About a week later, on May 19, McFadden told another sales representative who inquired about GPOs: "I am electing not to participate with these groups—we have said no already." (Compl. [*14] ¶ 72). On June 12, 2014, McFadden asked a former colleague, who now worked with a GPO, via text message: "Is Choice One a GPO or are you all actually acquiring practices? The reason I'm asking is we've signed an agreement that we won't work with GPOs." (Compl. ¶¶ 72, 7).

On June 25, 2014, Patterson filed its 2014 Form 10-K with the SEC, for fiscal year ending April 26, 2014. (Compl. ¶ 156). The 2014 Form 10-K contained certifications from Anderson and Armstrong. (Compl. ¶ 156). The 2014 Form 10-K included statements similar to the 2013 Form 10-K. (Compl. ¶ 156).

On July 18, 2014, the Texas Attorney General sent a civil investigation demand to Patterson regarding Patterson, Schein, and Benco's collective boycott of the Texas Dental Association's GPO and annual convention. (Compl. ¶ 9).

Like in Texas, the Arizona Dental Association ("AZDA") created a GPO in partnership with SourceOne. (Compl. ¶ 92). On July 21, 2014, Mike Wade, Benco's regional manager for Arizona, emailed Chad Bushman, Patterson's regional manager for Arizona. (Compl. ¶ 94). Wade stated:

> I wanted to catch up and get your take on our friends at the AZDA becoming our competitors? I am sure you are hearing plenty from your [*15] reps about the AZDA partnership with SourceOne selling supplies. Needless to say we are not real happy and we are looking at pulling our sponsorship including the AZDA meeting. I know that Patterson, Schein and Benco boycotted the [TDA] meeting this year after the TDA did the same thing and wanted to see if we could create the same message here in AZ.

(Compl. ¶ 94). Bushman, copying his supervisor Dan Reinhardt, responded: "Mike, thank you for reaching out. If the AZDA has in fact signed with SourceOne (which it looks like they have) we will be pulling our sponsorship and attendance of the state meeting as they will have positioned themselves as a competitor." (Compl. ¶ 95). Wade replied: "Thanks for the quick reply. We are of the same mindset. It would be gratifying to see every distributor with a local presence make a unified statement on the AZDA's ill-conceived idea to become a distribution competitor." (Compl. ¶ 95).

Later that day, Reinhardt then emailed Edens and Misiak regarding Patterson's boycott of the TDA convention. (Compl. ¶ 96). Misiak responded promptly: "Please discuss live and no more emails on this topic." (Compl. ¶¶ 9, 96). Reinhardt then passed this message along [*16] to Bushman regarding the AZDA meeting: "Please discuss live and no further emails." (Compl. ¶ 96). In September 2014, Patterson, Schein, and Benco announced they would not attend AZDA's annual trade show. (Compl. ¶ 98).

On August 21, 2014, Patterson issued its fiscal year 2015 first quarter earnings and held an earnings call. (Compl. ¶ 158). Anderson stated Patterson saw "positive trends" in sales of dental consumables, making Patterson a "proven leader in the dental equipment market" due to "best-in-class technology and basic equipment that is wrapped with Patterson's industry leading after-sales support platform." (Compl. ¶ 158).

On October 11, 2014, a Patterson sales representative received an email from a dentist indicating he was switching from Patterson to the Kois Buying Group. (Compl. ¶ 72). The sales representative forwarded this message to another Patterson customer, adding: "Patterson corporate has concluded 'we will NOT be entertaining participating in any buying group of this nature.'" (Compl. ¶ 72). On October 23, 2014, a Patterson branch manager informed McFadden that a customer indicated they were "trimming back on their orders with Patterson" pending information concerning [*17] a new pricing structure from Kois Buying Group. (Compl. ¶ 72). McFadden responded: "As a rule we are trying our best to steer clear of all buying groups. As far as 'Kois Group through Patterson'—that's news to me. Special Markets has had no communications with [Kois]." (Compl. ¶ 72).

In October 2014, the Arizona Attorney General began its own investigation of Patterson and coordinated with the Texas Attorney General. (Compl. ¶ 98).

Patterson issued its fiscal year 2015 second quarter earnings on November 20, 2014 and held an earnings call. (Compl. ¶ 160). Anderson attributed Patterson's success to an "unparalleled suite of value-added services" and "solid execution by [its] industry-leading sales force." (Compl. ¶¶ 160-61). In response to an analyst's question regarding Schein's apparent market share growth, Anderson reported Patterson was "growing faster than the market and taking share" and were "compet[ing] head-to-head with multiple people. We are more than holding our own and gaining share." (Compl. ¶ 162).

Patterson's southeast regional manager emailed McFadden on January 14, 2015 asking about a GPO formed in Florida. (Compl. ¶ 72). McFadden responded: "If he calls I will ask him [*18] for financials. — does [the dentist] own all these offices — if not he is a GPO — we don't deal with GPOs." (Compl. ¶ 72). On March 26, 2015, McFadden told a sales representative: "[W]e have said no to Smile Source. It is a direct competitor to ours sales reps. They are a buying club and have agreements with study clubs, state institutions, and everybody they can connect with." (Compl. ¶ 72). On July 29, 2015, McFadden was informed by Bill Neal, Patterson special markets executive, that he met with a GPO named Dentistry Unchained and told them "that we [Patterson] have not elected to participate in these types of programs in the past." (Compl. ¶ 72).

Patterson issued its fiscal year 2015 third quarter earnings on February 19, 2015 and held an earnings call. (Compl. ¶ 164). Anderson attributed growth to "strong core and technology offerings, industry leading service and support, and the trend toward digitization of the dental office," as well as the ability of its "industry-leading sales force to meet the needs of [its] dental customers." (Compl. ¶¶ 164-65).

Patterson, as well as Schein and Benco, continued boycotting state dental associations' conventions and meetings where those state [*19] dental associations partnered with SourceOne or other entities to establish GPOs. (Compl. ¶¶ 100-104). In April 2015, Patterson informed the Louisiana Dental Association it would boycott its annual convention unless it abandoned its relationship with SourceOne, which had begun in January 2015. (Compl. ¶ 101). Patterson also did not attend trade meetings of the Colorado Dental Association and Maryland State Dental Association. (Compl. ¶¶ 102, 104).

Patterson issued its fiscal year 2015 fourth quarter earnings on May 21, 2015 and held an earnings call. (Compl. ¶¶ 167-68). Anderson attributed growth and share gains to "technology-oriented sales driven by Patterson's industry-leading sales, technical service and after-sales support." (Compl. ¶ 167). Anderson also attributed the results to "just very strong [and consistent] execution at Patterson and high demand for the portfolio of products [it] sell[s]." (Compl. ¶ 168). Around the same time, Patterson filed its 2015 Form 10-K with the SEC. (Compl. ¶ 170). The 2015 Form 10-K included statements similar to the 2013 Form 10-K and 2014 Form 10-K. (Compl. ¶ 170).

On August 7, 2015, Patterson received a letter from the Texas AG informing it that [*20] the Federal Trade Commission began an investigation of the alleged price-fixing scheme between Patterson, Schein, and Benco and that the Texas AG planned to share its own investigative materials with the FTC. (Compl. ¶¶ 72, 110).

Patterson issued its fiscal year 2016 first quarter earnings on August 27, 2015 and held an earnings call. (Compl. ¶¶ 171-72). Anderson attributed "sustained growth in the consumables category" to "stable-to-steadily improving dynamics in the dental market." (Compl. ¶ 171). Anderson discussed that the "continued healthy conditions of the dental market position [Patterson] well for continued growth and market share gains," and noted that the "North American Markets are very stable," including consumables. (Compl. ¶ 172).

On September 1, 2015, SourceOne commenced suit in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York against Patterson, Schein, and Benco alleging a violation of the Sherman Act were they "conspired to exclude it from the market and took overt acts in furtherance of that conspiracy by boycotting the Texas and Arizona Dental Associations' annual meetings and by pressuring manufacturers and individual dentists not to do business [*21] with SourceOne." SourceOne Dental, Inc. v. Patterson Cos., Inc., 310 F. Supp. 3d 346, 352-53 (E.D.N.Y. 2018); (see Compl., at 2).

In September 2015, the Georgia Dental Association ("GDA") contacted Patterson about an RFP for its newly formed buying group. (Compl. ¶ 103). Peter Cousins, Patterson sales manager, responded: "After careful consideration Patterson Dental has made the decision not to respond to the RFP at this time." (Compl. ¶ 103). Frank Capaldo, executive director of the GDA, replied: "I am confused as your immediate prior email indicated you were setting up dates to sit down and talk with us and include your president!" (Compl. ¶ 103). Cousins forwarded Capaldo's email to Fruehauf and McFadden: "The sooner the better on some sort of positioning statement that I can give to the sales team . . . my phone is ringing today b/c Frank took my email reply and relayed it to the board last night." (Compl. ¶ 103). Cousins also told Fruehauf: "I think we just say the company has chosen not to participate in GPOs at this time." (Compl. ¶ 103).

On November 10, 2015, Guggenheim texted Cohen, requesting that the two meet at an upcoming trade convention in New York. (Compl. ¶¶ 9, 72). After receiving no response, Guggenheim texted again two days later. (Compl. ¶ 72). Cohen responded: [*22] "Paul, sorry for the delayed response. Spoke with our attorney this week and I think we should pass on any conversations until current antitrust issues are resolved." (Compl. ¶¶ 9, 72).

Patterson issued its fiscal year 2016 second quarter earnings on November 24, 2015 and held an earnings call. (Compl. ¶¶ 174-75). Anderson attributed dental sales growth to "stable-to-steadily improving dynamics in the North American dental market." (Compl. ¶ 174). On the earnings call, Gugino reported "organic sales [in the dental segment] improved 3.1% on a constant currency basis" and "consumables grew 3.3% reflecting continued stability in this end market." (Compl. ¶ 175).

On February 11, 2016, a group of dental practices and dentists sued Patterson, Benco, and Schein in the Eastern District of New York under Section 1 of the Sherman Act alleging they "engaged in conduct that has led to higher prices for dental supplies, eliminating competition between themselves, and thereby keeping their profit margins artificially high." *In re Dental Supplies Antitrust Litig., 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 133410, 2016 WL 5415681, at 1 (E.D.N.Y. Sept. 28, 2016); (see Compl., at 2).

Patterson issued its fiscal year 2016 third quarter earnings on February 25, 2016 and held an earnings call. (Compl. ¶¶ 177-78). Anderson highlighted "solid growth [*23] in the consumables category" due to "stable to steadily improving dynamics in the North American dental market" and that Patterson was "increasingly well-positioned to capitalize on this trend" due to technology leadership and support infrastructure. (Compl. ¶ 177). In response to an analyst's question, Anderson also attributed growth to the "strong execution" of its sales force and that Patterson felt it was "growing faster than the market." (Compl. ¶ 179).

Patterson issued its fiscal year 2016 fourth quarter earnings on May 26, 2016 and held an earnings call. (Compl. ¶¶ 181-83; Aff. of Aaron G. Thomas, Ex. C, ECF No. 92). Sales for Patterson's dental unit, representing approximately 46% of total company sales, were $662.1 million and a 3.3% increase in consumable dental supplies. (Compl. ¶ 181). Anderson stated Patterson was taking market share from its competitors and growth was due to "an era of stability" in the dental market. (Compl. ¶ 183). Anderson further stated, in response to an analyst's question, that growth in consumables was attributable to "really stable, consistent growth throughout our customer base both in our largest customers as well as our midsized and smaller [*24] customers." (Compl. ¶ 183).

On June 29, 2016, Patterson filed its 2016 Form 10-K with the SEC. (Compl. ¶ 185). The 2016 Form 10-K contained certifications from Anderson and Gugino. (Compl. ¶ 185). The 2016 Form 10-K discussed Patterson's competition in the dental supply market, noting the "industry is highly competitive" and explained Patterson's strategy of differentiating itself from competition through > premium customer service with multiple value-added components, a highly qualified and motivated sales force, highly-trained and experienced service technicians, an extensive breadth and mix of products and services, technology solutions allowing customers to easily access our inventory, accurate and timely delivery of product, strategic location of sales offices and fulfillment centers, and competitive pricing.

(Compl. ¶ 185). Patterson touted "competitive strengths" that included broad product offerings at competitive prices, proprietary branded products, and a "[f]ocus on customer relationships and exceptional customer service," including "personal visits by field sales representatives." (Compl. ¶¶ 186-87). Patterson noted it competed with Benco and Schein. (Compl. ¶ 188). Patterson [*25] warned that GPOs "may place [it] at a competitive disadvantage." (Compl. ¶ 190). Patterson noted the formation of GPOs "may shift purchasing decisions to entities or persons with whom we do not have a historical relationship" which may threaten its ability to compete effectively. (Compl. ¶ 190). Patterson noted it was "seeking to obtain access to lower prices demanded by GPO contracts or other contracts, and develop relationships with provider networks and new GPOs" but it "cannot assure that such terms will be obtained or contracts will be executed." (Compl. ¶ 190).

Patterson issued its fiscal year 2017 first quarter earnings on August 25, 2016 and held an earnings call. (Compl. ¶¶ 192-95). Sales for Patterson's dental unit, representing approximately 43% of total company sales were $555 million, a 3.5% decrease. (Compl. ¶ 192). Gugino attributed Patterson's sales decline to strategic "sales force realignment." (Compl. ¶ 194). Anderson responded to an analyst's question, indicating that the sales force realignment was not a reaction to changes in the competitive landscape, but rather about finding effective ways to serve its customers and lead the market. (Compl. ¶ 195).

Patterson issued [*26] its fiscal year 2017 second quarter earnings on November 22, 2016 and held an earnings call. (Compl. ¶¶ 197-99). Sales for Patterson's dental unit, representing approximately 43% of total company sales were $601.6 million, flat with the previous year and a 2.5% decrease in consumable dental supplies. (Compl. ¶ 197). Gugino again attributed the decline to the sales force realignment. (Compl. ¶ 199). Patterson's stock dropped $7.95 per share, a 16.7% decline. (Compl. ¶¶ 201, 242-43).

Patterson issued its fiscal year 2017 third quarter earnings on February 23, 2017 and held an earnings call. (Compl. ¶¶ 202-06). Sales for Patterson's dental unit, representing approximately 45% of total company sales were $626.3 million, a 1.8% decrease from the previous year and a 2.8% decrease in consumable dental supplies. (Compl. ¶ 202). Anderson and Gugino attributed the decline to "disruption from [Patterson's] sales force realignment initiative." (Compl. ¶ 204). Anderson touted the "very strong long-term fundamentals" and stability of the consumables market. (Compl. ¶¶ 205-06).

In March 2017, Travis Almquist, Patterson's team lead for products and pricing, emailed his supervisor, Joseph Lepley, Patterson's [*27] director of strategic pricing and forwarded a contract from Schein that appeared to show it was instituting a discount program for GPOs. (Compl. ¶ 107). Almquist's email said: "Normally I would send this back to the GM (or have the pricing desk send something) stating that we do not participate in buying groups for multiple reasons, but I wanted your feedback on it since so many things are changing in that MidMarket space." (Compl. ¶ 107). Lepley forwarded the email to Rogan, adding: "Attached is some competitive intel from Schein on a program on Buying Groups . . . Given our recent discussions with Smile Source are we looking at talking with Buying Groups now?" (Compl. ¶ 107).

Patterson issued its fiscal year 2017 fourth quarter earnings on May 25, 2017 and held an earnings call. (Compl. ¶¶ 208-11). Sales for Patterson's dental unit, representing approximately 42% of total company sales were $607.3 million, an 8.3% decrease from the previous year and a 4.3% decrease in consumable dental supplies. (Compl. ¶ 208). Patterson and Anderson attributed the decline to the sales force realignment. (Compl. ¶¶ 210-11). Anderson believed Patterson's sales force would "continue to be a key competitive [*28] differentiator." (Compl. ¶ 211).

On June 1, 2017, Anderson "abruptly resigned" as CEO and Chairman of the Board. (Compl. ¶ 236). There was no reason proffered and it was not noted in the earnings call that took place less than one week prior. (Compl. ¶ 236).

On June 28, 2017, Patterson filed its 2017 Form 10-K with the SEC. (Compl. ¶ 213). The 2017 Form 10-K contained certifications from Gugino, Anderson, and James Wiltz, Patterson's interim CEO. (Compl. ¶ 213). The 2017 Form 10-K included statements similar to the 2016 Form 10-K. (Compl. ¶ 214).

On August 17, 2017, IQ Dental Supply, Inc., sued Patterson, Benco, and Schein in the Eastern District of New York under the Sherman Act, state antitrust laws, and common law. IQ Dental Supply, Inc. v. Henry Schein, Inc., 924 F.3d 57, 62 (2d Cir. 2019); (see Compl., at 2). IQ alleged Patterson, Benco, and Schein "engaged in [a] campaign to force SourceOne out of business by conspiring to organize a boycott" and a price-fixing conspiracy. IQ Dental Supply, Inc., 924 F.3d at 61.

Patterson issued its fiscal year 2018 first quarter earnings on August 24, 2017 and held an earnings call. (Compl. ¶¶ 215-17). Sales for Patterson's dental unit, representing approximately 40% of total company sales were $518.8 million, an 6.5% decrease from the previous year and a 3.6% [*29] decrease in consumable dental supplies. (Compl. ¶ 215). Wiltz, in response to an analyst's question, stated that Patterson had not yet seen competition from the online marketplace, specifically referencing Amazon. (Compl. ¶ 217).

Patterson issued its fiscal year 2018 second quarter earnings on November 21, 2017 and held an earnings call. (Compl. ¶¶ 219-22). Sales for Patterson's dental unit, representing approximately 40% of total company sales were $553.6 million, an 8% decrease from the previous year and a 4.4% decrease in consumable dental supplies. (Compl. ¶ 219). In response to analysts questioning Patterson's "leaking market share," Gugino asserted it was due to "a variety of competitors" and could "win[] it back" with competitive prices but also a "value-added business model approach." (Compl. ¶¶ 221-22).

Following its three-year investigation, the FTC filed a formal complaint against Patterson, Benco, and Schein on February 12, 2018, alleging they "entered into an agreement refusing to provide discounts to or compete for the business of buying groups," constituting a per se violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. (Compl. ¶¶ 2, 12, 117).

Once the FTC complaint was filed, [*30] several financial investment reports issued drawing attention to the magnitude of the FTC's action. (Compl. ¶ 119-20). A February 13, 2018 report from Jeffries commented that "the FTC move should be taken seriously & could have negative [long term] implications for margin." (Compl. ¶ 120). The report continued, noting that the "core tenets of the FTC's case" were "levied in other lawsuits" against Patterson, "[b]ut the FTC's move here is very serious & much more severe, in our view." (Compl. ¶ 120). Patterson's stock price fell, in one day, from $39.92 per share to $31.21 per share, on a trading volume of 5.5 million shares; a market cap loss of $160 million. (Compl. ¶¶ 12, 121, 246).

On March 1, 2018, Patterson announced their third quarter results from fiscal year 2018, disclosing a 26% drop in earnings. (Compl. ¶¶ 12, 123; Thomas Aff., Ex. B). Patterson announced dental sales had declined 7.7%. (Compl. ¶ 123). Gugino, Patterson's CFO, resigned. (Compl. ¶¶ 12, 123). Reports from financial investment research firms were bleak. (Compl. ¶¶ 125-26). Patterson's stock dropped 24% on March 1, from $31.58 per share to $24.11 on a trading volume of 15 million shares; a market cap loss of [*31] approximately $700 million. (Compl. ¶¶ 14, 127, 247-48).

The Texas AG filed a formal complaint against Patterson on April 19, 2018—it had already brought complaints against Benco in 2015 and Schein in 2017. (Compl. ¶ 131). The Texas AG alleged Patterson "participated in a group boycott by dental supply distributors to suppress the entry of a new market participant in the dental supply distribution market" in violation of Texas antitrust laws. (Compl. ¶¶ 15, 131). Benco, Schein, and Patterson all settled with the Texas AG the day the respective complaints were filed against them. (Compl. ¶¶ 15,131). Patterson agreed to cease its anticompetitive conduct, pay $200,000, and provide the Texas AG an ongoing log of all oral and written communications between its senior executives and other dental supply distributors for one year. (Compl. ¶¶ 15,131).

On May 3, 2018, Misiak resigned. (Compl. ¶ 132).

On August 30, 2018, Patterson reported that its earnings missed expectations. (Compl. ¶¶ 15, 133). Mark Walchirk, Patterson's new CEO, explained that Patterson fell short of earnings expectations because of "competitive pricing pressures at the point of sale." (Compl. ¶ 133). In respond to an analyst's [*32] question, Walchirk stated that the source of the competitive pricing pressure was a changing customer base that "purchases a larger volume of products, and obviously, commands an improve price position." (Compl. ¶ 134). Patterson's stock fell 5%. (Compl. ¶¶ 15, 134).

On September 7, 2018, Patterson, Benco, and Schein reached an agreement to pay $80 million to settle the consumer antitrust class action pending in the Eastern District of New York entitled In re Dental Supplies Antitrust Litig. (Compl. ¶ 135). Patterson expected to contribute $28.5 million towards the settlement. (Compl. ¶ 135).

Throughout the relevant time period, Patterson maintained on its website its "Principles of Business Conduct and Code of Ethics." (Compl. ¶ 224). Patterson expressly incorporated it by reference into its Form 10-K filings. (Compl. ¶ 224). One section is entitled "Competing Ethically," and it states: "Patterson fully complies with the antitrust laws and fair trade practices of the United States and all other applicable jurisdictions." (Compl. ¶ 224). Patterson claimed it instituted "specific guidelines that should be observed by all employees," including:

> (1) "[n]ever discuss pricing policy with competitors"; [*33] (2) "[n]ever engage in a joint selling activity with a competitor"; (3) "[n]ever ask a vendor to cease doing business with a competitor"; and (4) "[a]void even the appearance of improper or collusive conduct when meeting with competitors or vendors at trade shows or trade association meetings."

(Compl. ¶ 225).

II. ANALYSIS

A. Legal Standard

"To survive a motion to dismiss, a complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Sletten & Brettin Orthodontics v. Cont'l Cas. Co., 782 F.3d 931, 934 (8th Cir. 2015) (quoting Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 547, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007)). Facial plausibility of a claim exists "when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555). Although a sufficient complaint need not be detailed, it must contain "[f]actual allegations . . . enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555 (citation omitted); see id. ("The pleading must contain something more . . . than . . . a statement of facts that merely creates a suspicion of a legally cognizable right of action.") (quotations and citation omitted). Additionally, complaints are insufficient if they contain "naked assertions devoid of further factual [*34] enhancement." Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678 (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 557) (internal quotation marks omitted).

Section 10(b) of the Securities Exchange Act makes it unlawful "[t]o use or employ, in connection with the purchase or sale of any security . . . any manipulative or deceptive device or contrivance in contravention of such rules and regulations as the [SEC] may prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors." 15 U.S.C. § 78j(b). "SEC Rule 10b-5 implements [§ 10(b)] by making it unlawful to, among other things, 'make any untrue statement of a material fact or to omit to state a material fact necessary in order to make the statements made, in the light of the circumstances under which they were made, not misleading.'" *Matrixx Initiatives, Inc. v. B. Misrepresentations of Material Fact

To allege a securities-fraud claim, the complaint must "specify each statement alleged to have been misleading, the reason or reasons why the statement is misleading, and if an allegation regarding the statement or omission is made on information and belief, the complaint shall state with particularity all facts on which that belief is formed." 15 U.S.C. § 78u-4(b)(1). "A misrepresentation or omission is material if there is 'a substantial likelihood that the disclosure of the omitted fact would have been viewed by the reasonable investor as having significantly altered the total mix of information made available.'" Parnes v. Gateway 2000, Inc., 122 F.3d 539, 546 (8th Cir. 1997) (quoting Basic Inc. v. Levinson, 485 U.S. 224, 231-32, 108 S. Ct. 978, 99 L. Ed. 2d 194 (1988)); Detroit Gen. Ret. Sys., 621 F.3d at 805. "The trier of fact is uniquely competent to determine materiality, as that inquiry requires 'delicate assessments of inferences a [reasonable investor] would draw from a given set [*37] of facts.'" In re Control Data Corp. Sec. Litig., 933 F.2d 616, 621 (8th Cir. 1991) (quoting TSC Indus., Inc. v. Northway, Inc., 426 U.S. 438, 450, 96 S. Ct. 2126, 48 L. Ed. 2d 757 (1976)). But "[w]here a reasonable investor could not have been swayed by an alleged misrepresentation, however, a court may determine, as a matter of law, that the alleged misrepresentation is immaterial." Parnes, 122 F.3d at 546.

Here, Plaintiffs allege Defendants proffered various misrepresentations or omissions of material fact. For ease of analysis, these alleged misrepresentations can be grouped into categories: (1) 2013-15 Form 10-K filings; (2) Patterson's code of ethics incorporated into its Form 10-K filings; (3) quarterly earnings reports and accompanying earnings calls; and (4) 2016-17 Form 10-K filings.

1. 2013, 2014, and 2015 Form 10-K Filings

Plaintiffs assert the 2013, 2014, and 2015 Form 10-K filings are all similar. Patterson touted itself as a market leader with a strong competitive position, that the dental supply industry was highly competitive and fragmented, that Patterson used competitive pricing to beat out its competitors, and new competitors increased competition, but that Patterson's value-added services, technology, and operational efficiencies placed it in a strong market position. Plaintiffs assert Defendants violated Section 10(b) and Rule 10b-5 by not disclosing their alleged anti-competitive [*38] behavior and the ongoing government investigations into that behavior.

"Before liability for non-disclosure can attach, the defendant must have violated an affirmative duty of disclosure." Kushner v. Beverly Enters., Inc., 317 F.3d 820, 831 (8th Cir. 2003) (quoting In re Sofamor Danke Grp., Inc., 123 F.3d 394, 400 (6th Cir. 1997)); Basic Inc., 485 U.S. at 239 n.17 ("Silence, absent a duty to disclose, is not misleading under Rule 10b-5."). Under Regulation 2-K Item 103, a company must "[d]escribe briefly any material pending legal proceedings, other than ordinary routine litigation incidental to the business, to which the registrant" is subjected, as well as "any such proceedings known to be contemplated by governmental authorities." 17 C.F.R. § 229.103. "An investigation on its own is not a 'pending legal proceeding' until it reaches a stage when the agency or prosecutorial authority makes known that it is contemplating filing suit or bringing charges." Richman v. Goldman Sachs Grp., Inc., 868 F. Supp. 2d 261, 272 (S.D.N.Y. 2012) (quoting ABA Disclosure Obligations under the Federal Securities Laws in Government Investigations—Part II.C.) (holding that a Wells Notice issued by the SEC falls "well short of litigation" and thus is not required to be disclosed under Item 103); In re Lions Gate Entm't Corp. Sec. Litig., 165 F. Supp. 3d 1, 19 (S.D.N.Y. 2016) (SEC investigation not a "pending legal proceeding" or a "proceeding known to be contemplated by governmental authorities" until the agency brings charges). Courts have likewise [*39] held that state investigations are not "pending legal proceedings" subject to Item 103 disclosure. City of Westland Police & Fire Ret. Sys. v. MetLife, Inc., 928 F. Supp. 2d 705, 718 (S.D.N.Y. 2013) (Item 103 did not render a duty to disclose more than thirty state investigations into MetLife's compliance with unclaimed property laws).

The Texas AG initiated its investigation in July 2014. The Arizona AG initiated its investigation in October 2014. The FTC started investigating Patterson sometime before August 2015. These investigations dragged on for several years, not materializing into complaints until the FTC brought suit on February 12, 2018. The Texas AG followed by filing suit on April 19, 2018, which was instantly settled by Patterson. There is no indication that the Arizona AG ever commenced suit or an enforcement action. Thus, the only reporting requirement under Item 103 during the class period—June 26, 2013 to February 28, 2018—would be the FTC's complaint. But Patterson had no public statements between February 12, 2018 and February 28, 2018, let alone any to which this duty to disclose attached. Accordingly, something beyond the mere existence of governmental investigations must trigger a disclosure obligation to beget liability for non-disclosure.

Plaintiffs argue that [*40] where Defendants touted their success in the "highly competitive" dental supply market, they were required to disclose their anticompetitive scheme to render those statements not misleading. As the Eighth Circuit has noted, "even absent a duty to speak, a party who voluntarily discloses material facts in connection with securities transactions assumes a duty to speak fully and truthfully on those subjects." Kushner, 317 F.3d at 831 (quoting Helwig v. Vencor, Inc., 251 F.3d 540, 561 (6th Cir. 2001) (en banc)). Thus, "[e]ven where a party does not otherwise have an affirmative duty to disclose certain information, once a material topic has been broached, the party has an affirmative duty to disclose sufficient additional information to prevent the original disclosure from being misleading." In re Xcel Energy, Inc., Sec., Derivative & "ERISA" Litig., 286 F. Supp. 2d 1047, 1057 (D. Minn. 2003). This is because "companies can control what they have to disclose under these provisions by controlling what they say to the market." Matrixx Initiatives, Inc., 563 U.S. at 45.

This Court is not convinced that merely speaking about competitiveness renders a duty to report all anti-competitive behavior. There is no "duty to disclose 'soft information,' such as a matter of opinion, predictions, or a belief as to the legality of the company's own actions." Kushner, 317 F.3d at 831. The "federal [*41] securities laws do not require a company to accuse itself of wrongdoing." In re Citigroup, Inc. Sec. Litig., 330 F. Supp. 2d 367, 377 (S.D.N.Y. 2004), aff'd sub nom Albert Fadem Trust v. Citigroup, Inc., 165 F. App'x 928 (2d Cir. 2006). "Disclosure is not a rite of confession, and companies do not have a duty to disclose uncharged, unadjudicated wrongdoing." City of Pontiac Policemen's & Firemen's Ret. Sys. v. UBS AG, 752 F.3d 173, 184 (2d Cir. 2014) (internal quotations, alterations, and citations omitted). "Rule 10b-5 was not intended to provide shareholders with an avenue for relief against executives for alleged illegal practices or corporate mismanagement," thus illegal conduct does not establish a Rule 10b-5 violation unless made in conjunction with a misleading statement. *Galati v. Commerce Bancorp, Inc., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 26851, 2005 WL 3797764, at 8 (D.N.J. Nov. 7, 2005), aff'd 220 F. App'x 97 (3d Cir. 2007). Thus, there was no automatic duty for Defendants to disclose their alleged anticompetitive behavior in the 2013, 2014, and 2015 Form 10-K filings. *But see Utesch v. Lannett Co., Inc., 385 F. Supp. 3d 408, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 82428, 2019 WL 2136467, at *6-8 (E.D. Pa. May 15, 2019) (finding plaintiff appropriately pled a misleading statement where generic drug manufacturer stated it "face[d] strong competition" but allegations showed the market was not competitive as it would have misled a reasonable investor).

2. Code of Ethics

Plaintiffs assert Patterson's code of ethics, incorporated into all of its Form 10-K filings, was a misstatement because it averred compliance with antitrust laws while Defendants conspired with their competitors to violate those same laws. Defendants [*42] point this Court to various cases that hold particular companies' ethics codes constituted puffery sufficient to render them immaterial. For example, in Singh v. Cigna Corp., Cigna "published a pamphlet titled 'Code of Ethics and Principles of Conduct'" that included "statements from senior Cigna executives affirming the importance of compliance and integrity." 918 F.3d 57, 61 (2d Cir. 2019). The pamphlet stated "'it's so important for every employee . . . to handle, maintain, and report on [Cigna's financial] information in compliance with all laws and regulations,' and that 'we have a responsibility to act with integrity in all we do, including any and all dealings with government officials.'" Id. (alterations in original). The Second Circuit concluded that a reasonable stockholder would not consider these statements as important in deciding whether to buy or sell shares of stock because they amounted to "general declarations about the importance of acting lawfully and with integrity." Id. at 63.

Unlike Singh, however, Patterson's code of ethics went further than simply touting compliance with "all laws and regulations." See *In re Signet Jewelers Ltd. Sec. Litig., 389 F. Supp. 3d 221, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 97959, 2019 WL 2428529, at 8 (S.D.N.Y. June 11, 2019) ("Cigna's code of conduct statements were not actionable, because they were exceptionally vague [*43] and aspirational."). Indeed, it went even further than touting compliance with antitrust laws. Patterson's code of ethics instituted specific guidelines for compliance with antitrust laws: no discussions of policy with competitors, no joint selling with competitors, no asking vendors to boycott a competitor, and avoiding appearances of improper or collusive conduct when meeting with competitors at trade shows. This Court finds the distinction important; this is not a code of ethics that merely aspires to be "open, honest, and direct in all our dealings," or something similarly fuzzy. Cement & Concrete Workers Dist. Council Pension Fund v. Hewlett Packard Co., 964 F. Supp. 2d 1128, 1135-1140 (N.D. Cal. 2013) (declining to find such language in a code of ethics to constitute a material statement because doing so would "render every code of ethics materially misleading whenever an executive commits an ethical violation following a scandal"). Rather, this is a code of ethics that outlines specific guidance for compliance with a specific subset of laws.

"Absent a clear allegation that the defendants knew of the scheme and its illegal nature at the time they stated the belief that the company was in compliance with the law, there is nothing further to disclose." Kushner, 317 F.3d at 831. Here, there are allegations that various Patterson [*44] employees knew their collusive scheme with Benco and Schein was illegal. After letting Reinhardt know of the fallout from the Texas Dental Association boycott—an antitrust investigation by the Texas AG—Misiak informed him to discuss the matter "live" and send no more emails about the proposed Arizona Dental Association boycott. Misiak, alongside McFadden, is a key player in Patterson's misconduct. Misiak reported directly to Anderson and there are allegations showing a line of communication between Misiak, Anderson, and Guggenheim. For example, Misiak emailed Anderson and Guggenheim on September 3, 2013, noting he has told his staff to reject GPOs. Anderson did not refute that plan of action but instead suggested further monitoring. The next day, Misiak and McFadden distributed a memo telling their sales managers not to work with GPOs. Anderson was informed in June 2013 of Guggenheim's conversations with Benco's Cohen concerning an agreement to reject GPOs. While Anderson received only a "FYI" email, there is no indication he repudiated Guggenheim's conduct. Like Misiak, Guggenheim directly reported to Anderson. Thus, starting with the June 2013 discussion forwarded to Anderson, Plaintiffs [*45] have sufficiently alleged Anderson knew the incorporated code of ethics statements to be false.

Compared to Anderson, there is no clear allegation that other certifiers of the Form 10-K filings—Armstrong, Gugino, and Wiltz—knew the incorporated code of ethics statements to be false. Rather, their inclusion is based on their certifications as high-ranking members of Patterson. Indeed, these three named defendants only appear in the complaint with respect to quarterly reports, earnings calls, and Form 10-K filings; there are no particular allegations lodged against them with respect to the underlying anticompetitive conduct. As such, this Court concludes the incorporation of the code of ethics into the Form 10-K filings are not attributable to Armstrong, Gugino, and Wiltz as misstatements.

3. Quarterly Earnings and Earnings Calls

In Patterson's various earnings reports and follow-up earnings calls conducted by Anderson and Gugino, Patterson's performance was attributed to various factors, including: the stability or growth of the dental market (FY2014 Q1, FY2015 Q4, FY2016 Q1, FY2016 Q2, FY2016 Q3, FY2016 Q4); industry-leading technology wrapped by a suite of value-added services (FY2014 [*46] Q2, FY2015 Q1, FY2015 Q2, FY2015 Q3, FY2015 Q4, FY2016 Q3); a strong sales force (FY2014 3Q, FY2015 Q2, FY2015 Q3, FY2015 Q4, FY2016 Q3); and the digitalization of dental offices (FY2015 Q3). When Patterson's performance faltered in FY2017, Anderson and Gugino, attributed it to a sales force realignment. Anderson emphasized that the sales force alignment was not due to competitive changes to the market, but about effective customer service. Starting in FY2018, with Wiltz at the helm, the decline in Patterson's performance was no longer attributed to sales force realignment, but due to various competitors, but not yet competition from online marketplaces (FY2018 Q1, FY2018 Q2).

"A statement is not material and is mere puffery if it is 'so vague and such obvious hyperbole that no reasonable investor would rely upon them.'" In re Stratasys Ltd. S'holder Sec. Litig., 864 F.3d 879, 882 (8th Cir. 2017) (quoting Parnes, 122 F.3d at 547). "No reasonable investor would rely on 'soft, puffing statements'—which encompass 'optimistic rhetoric' and 'promotional phrases used to champion the company but devoid of any substantive information.'" In re Stratasys Ltd. S'holder Sec. Litig., 864 F.3d at 882 (quoting Parnes, 122 F.3d at 547). "Optimistic statements are not actionable if they cannot be supported by objective data or otherwise subject to verification by proof." In re Stratasys Ltd. S'holder Sec. Litig., 864 F.3d at 882 (quotation [*47] omitted).

Defendants' statements during these quarterly earnings reports and earnings calls are vague and unverifiable. None of these statements relate to GPOs and, despite the Plaintiffs' desire to read in things left unsaid, they do not relate to Patterson's compliance with antitrust law. These corporate statements amount to little more than corporate gobbledygook self-justifying Patterson's existence and place in the dental supply economy—"industry-leading technology" and "value-added services." These constitute "optimistic rhetoric" and "promotional phrases used to champion the company," but they are "devoid of any substantive information" and constitute puffery.

Certainly, Plaintiffs would have this Court read in added language to some of these earnings statements: the dental market was stable or grew due to an anticompetitive agreement to keep out GPO competition; a strong sales force due to an anticompetitive agreement that kept out GPO competition; the sales force realignment was required due to an unraveling anticompetitive agreement. But this reading would stretch these statements too far, as there is no clear link between the illegal conduct and these statements. *See Menkes v. Stolt-Nielsen S.A., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 28208, 2005 WL 3050970, at 7 (D. Conn. Nov. 10, 2005) ("Courts [*48] that have determined that corporations had a duty to disclose uncharged illegal conduct in order to prevent other statements from misleading the public have required a connection between the illegal conduct and the statements beyond the simple fact that a criminal conviction would have an adverse impact upon the corporation's operations in general or bottom line.") (collecting cases). The connection is too attenuated here. In re Axis Capital Holdings Ltd. Sec. Litig., 456 F. Supp. 2d 576, 588 (S.D.N.Y. 2006) ("The connection between the alleged inaccurate statement and the underlying conduct may not be too attenuated, and, again, must be pled with sufficient specificity."). The statements here are generic descriptions of the state of the market and a recitation of Patterson's supposedly unique operations. *See Menkes, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 28208, 2005 WL 3050970, at 8.

4. 2016 and 2017 Form 10-K Filings

The 2016 Form 10-K indicated that Patterson competed with Benco and Schein and that GPOs may place it at a competitive disadvantage. Patterson noted it was seeking to obtain access to lower prices demanded by GPO contracts and develop relationships with GPOs. Although the language is not provided in the complaint, Plaintiffs allege the 2017 Form 10-K contains similar representations. The allegations show Patterson was actually [*49] doing the opposite; Patterson was not competing with Benco and Schein, at least with respect to GPOs, and Patterson was not seeking to develop relationships with GPOs, but was seeking to choke off GPOs from the market. The parties appear to agree Patterson made no misrepresentation when it stated that GPOs could put it at a competitive disadvantage.

Defendants argue that there are no misrepresentations in these Form 10-K filings. This Court disagrees. While Patterson added the caveat that it could not guarantee obtaining access to lower prices demanded by GPO contracts or that any such contracts would be executed, it clearly stated it was already in the process of seeking out such contracts. "Seeking to obtain access" does not equal "will seek to obtain access." It indicates present, current action and Defendants cannot paint this as a purely forward-looking statement. By June 2016, Patterson was waist-deep in its alleged anticompetitive agreement; indeed, it was under investigation by the FTC, Texas, and Arizona by that time.

As noted with the code of ethics, there is no clear allegation that the certifiers other than Anderson—Gugino and Wiltz—knew these statements to be false. Rather, [*50] their inclusion is based on their certifications as high-ranking members of Patterson. Thus, this Court concludes the 2016 Form 10-K and 2017 Form 10-K are not attributable to Gugino and Wiltz as misstatements.

C. Scienter

"'Rote allegations that the defendants knowingly made false statements of material fact' fail to satisfy the heightened pleading standard of the Reform Act." Kushner, 317 F.3d at 827-28 (quoting In re Navarre Corp. Sec. Litig., 299 F.3d 735, 745 (8th Cir. 2002)). The complaint must "state with particularity facts giving rise to a strong inference that the defendant acted with the requisite state of mind." 15 U.S.C. § 78u-4(b)(2). "The required state of mind for private securities fraud actions is 'scienter, i.e., the defendant's intention to deceive, manipulate, or defraud,' or the defendant's 'severe recklessness.'" *Horizon Asset Mgmt. Inferences of scienter must be "cogent and at least as compelling as any opposing inference of nonfraudulent intent." Tellabs, Inc., 551 U.S. at 314. The question "is whether [*51] all of the facts alleged, taken collectively, give rise to a strong inference of scienter, not whether any individual allegation, scrutinized in isolation, meets that standard." Id.; Minneapolis Firefighters' Relief Ass'n v. MEMC Elec. Materials, Inc., 641 F.3d 1023, 1029 (8th Cir. 2011) (quoting Tellabs, Inc., 551 U.S. at 323-24).

1. Gugino, Armstrong, and Wiltz

As noted above, Defendants Gugino, Armstrong, and Wiltz are only included in the complaint with respect to their certification of the Form 10-K filings and quarterly earnings reports and calls. Armstrong's sole involvement is his certification of the 2013 and 2014 Form 10-K filings. Wiltz certified the 2017 Form 10-K filing and participated on the FY2018 Q1 earnings call, noting that Patterson had not yet seen competition from the online marketplace such as Amazon. Gugino had the largest role, but she mostly recounted financial information during various earnings calls—unsurprising given her role as Patterson's CFO. On the FY2017 Q1, Q2, and Q3 earnings calls, she attributed poor financial performance to a sales force realignment, but Anderson was the Patterson representative who expanded upon the purpose of the sales force realignment. During the FY2018 Q2 earnings call, Gugino attributed Patterson's "leaking market share" to a "variety of competitors" but that [*52] Patterson could rebound with competitive prices and value-added business practices.

Plaintiffs cannot solely rely on Gugino, Armstrong, and Wiltz's positions as officers at Patterson to support an inference of scienter. In re Citigroup, Inc. Sec. Litig., 330 F. Supp. 2d at 382 (citing In re Health Mgmt., Inc., Sec. Litig., 970 F. Supp. 192, 204 (E.D.N.Y. 1997)); In re United Am. Healthcare Corp. Sec. Litig., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6362, 2007 WL 313491, at *17 (E.D. Mich. Jan. 30, 2007) (holding that, without more, certifications of the accuracy of quarterly and annual reports do not permit a strong inference of scienter as it is required of all corporate officers and directors and says nothing about the defendants' intent). "[C]orporate officials are not required to be clairvoyant and are responsible only for revealing the material facts reasonably available to them." In re Patterson Cos., Inc. Sec., Derivative & ERISA Litig., 479 F. Supp. 2d 1014, 1032 (D. Minn. 2007) (citing In re Navarre Corp. Sec. Litig., 299 F.3d at 743); Bovee v. Coopers & Lybrand C.P.A., 272 F.3d 356, 361 (6th Cir. 2001) (it is insufficient to "simply rely on the proposition that Defendants must have known or should have known of, and participated in, the fraud"). Absent any direct connection to the underlying anticompetitive actions of Anderson's subordinates, Plaintiffs have not pointed to any "badges of fraud" showing that Gugino, Armstrong, and Wiltz knowingly made false statements of material fact or that they intended to deceive, manipulate, or defraud.[11]

After the poor fiscal performances in FY2017 and the first three quarters of FY2018, Gugino resigned. Plaintiffs argue scienter [*53] can be inferred from Gugino's resignation. Absent any other allegation tying Gugino to the underlying anticompetitive actions, her departure does not establish scienter. In re Cornerstone Propane Partners, L.P., 355 F. Supp. 2d 1069, 1093 (N.D. Cal. 2005) (holding that "notable departures are not in and of themselves evidence of scienter" because "[m]ost major stock losses are often accompanied by management departures, and it would be unwise for courts to penalize directors for these decisions").

2. Anderson

As compared to Gugino, Armstrong, and Wiltz, the complaint does contain "badges of fraud" detailing Anderson's knowledge of the alleged anticompetitive behavior: Plaintiffs assert that Anderson was aware of the collusive agreement as early as June 2013, that he communicated with the principle enforcers of the collusive agreement, and that he directly supervised those actors.

Looking at all the facts alleged, Anderson's connection to the anticompetitive conduct perpetrated by his underlings gives rise to a strong inference of scienter. The complaint alleges, at the least, that Anderson knew of an anticompetitive agreement between Patterson, Benco, and Schein, that he allowed that agreement to persist, and that he did nothing to prevent his direct reports from furthering [*54] and enforcing that agreement. Specifically, Anderson was apprised early on by Guggenheim that he had been in contact with Benco's Cohen regarding GPOs. Anderson took no action to curtail these missives. Several months later, Guggeheim affirmed to Anderson that Patterson was rejecting GPOs and monitoring how its competitors interacted with GPOs. Rather that reject Guggenheim's handling of GPOs, Anderson doubled down by pointing out the weakness of those entities doing business with GPOs and requested continued monitoring. Buttressing this, Anderson directly supervised Misiak and received reports of how he communicated the anti-GPO position to subordinate sales staff. Moreover, Anderson made statements as to the competitiveness of the market[12] and Patterson while the company was under investigation, suggesting his statements "were made with the requisite scienter." Utesch, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 82428, 2019 WL 2136467, at *8. Thus, it is reasonable to infer Anderson's scienter; Plaintiffs have pleaded Anderson's repeated statements concerning the competitive nature of the dental supply market, the competitiveness of Patterson, Patterson's competition with Benco and Schein, and that Patterson was seeking business opportunities with GPOs were made [*55] with the requisite state of mind.

[11] This Court will not use the "core operations" theory as urged by Plaintiffs where the Eighth Circuit has not addressed it and noted that it has been rejected by other circuit courts. Elam v. Neidorff, 544 F.3d 921, 929 (8th Cir. 2008).

[12] Ignoring statements certified by Anderson in Patterson's Form 10-K filings, Anderson repeatedly cited the dental supplies market's stability, (Compl. ¶¶ 148, 172, 174, 177, 183), and Patterson's competitiveness, (Compl. ¶¶ 158, 160-62, 164-65, 179), in earnings calls.

Unlike Gugino, Anderson's resignation is accompanied by allegations tying him to the underlying anticompetitive actions. Anderson's resignation was abrupt and not discussed on the earnings call held one week prior. Based on the allegations of the complaint, it is difficult to tie Anderson's resignation to any specific precipitating factor. See In re UTStarcom, Inc. Sec. Litig., 617 F. Supp. 2d 964, 976 (N.D. Cal. 2009) ("At the very least, the timing of Defendants' departures might suggest that the Company believed Defendants had been involved in wrongdoing with respect to corporate finances."). Thus, while not much standing alone, Anderson's resignation buttresses the inference of scienter under the holistic approach. Id. ("Even though it is also possible to infer, for example, that Defendants left of their own volition or that they were removed for mismanagement unrelated to wrongdoing, the Court finds that the proximity of Defendants' departures to the financial restatements and investigations adds one more piece to the scienter puzzle.") (quotation omitted).

3. Patterson

The "Eighth Circuit has not directly addressed the issue of 'collective scienter,'" but "has done so implicitly." In re Medtronic Inc., Sec. Litig., 618 F. Supp. 2d at 1035; Horizon Asset Mgmt. Inc., 508 F.3d at 767 ("The appropriate standard for considering [*56] the pleading of corporate scienter under the PSLRA appears to be an open question in this circuit."). Accordingly, courts in this District have not applied the "collective scienter" doctrine but instead require plaintiffs "establish corporate scienter by adequately alleging the scienter of individual corporate officers." In re Medtronic Inc., Sec. Litig., 618 F. Supp. 2d at 1035. "The knowledge and scienter of a corporate officer such as its CEO or CFO may of course be imputed to the corporate entity." In re St. Jude Med., Inc. Sec. Litig., 836 F. Supp. 2d 878, 896 (D. Minn. 2011); Beaver Cty. Employees' Ret. Fund v. Tile Ship Holdings, Inc., 94 F. Supp. 3d 1035, 1054 (D. Minn. 2015). As concluded above, Plaintiffs have adequately pled scienter as to Anderson, Patterson's CEO. This also imputes sufficient scienter to Patterson.

Even if this Court were to consider the "collective scienter" reasoning, the collective action of Patterson's employees satisfies the standard. As discussed, Misiak had a line of communication with Anderson. Misiak and McFadden repeatedly distributed marching orders to their sales managers who then passed on that information to their middle-management and ground-level sales representatives. Sales representatives' requests for guidance on how to proceed with GPOs, even with substantial business opportunities on the line, were repeatedly met with the same answer: "No business with GPOs—just like [*57] Benco and Schein." Indeed, there were frequent check-ins with counterparts at Benco and Schein when Patterson employees suspected their competitors of reneging on their plan towards GPOs. Where the "wrongdoing alleged was not a single act of a low-level employee, but rather, an ongoing method of doing business," corporate scienter is sufficiently pled. In re Faro Techs. Sec. Litig., 534 F. Supp. 2d 1248, 1263 (M.D. Fla. 2007).

D. Loss Causation

"Loss causation in a securities fraud case is analogous to the common law's requirement of proximate causation. The plaintiff must show 'that the loss was foreseeable and that the loss was caused by the materialization of the concealed risk.'" McAdams v. McCord, 584 F.3d 1111, 1114 (8th Cir. 2009) (citing and quoting Schaaf v. Residential Funding Corp., 517 F.3d 544, 550 (8th Cir. 2008)). The securities statutes make fraud actions available "not to provide investors with broad insurance against market losses, but to protect them against those economic losses that misrepresentations actually cause." Dura Pharm., 544 U.S. at 345; see also 15 U.S.C. § 78u-4(b)(4) (requiring plaintiffs to prove the defendant "caused the loss"). "A complaint must 'provide a defendant with some indication of the loss and the causal connection that the plaintiff has in mind.'" McAdams v. McCord, 584 F.3d at 1114 (quoting Dura Pharm, 544 U.S. at 347).

Defendants point out that the alleged antitrust misconduct was already known to the market prior to the FTC's complaint by reason [*58] of the various private lawsuits against Patterson and its collusive competitors. Private lawsuits were filed against Patterson on September 21, 2015, February 11, 2016, and August 17, 2017, well before the February 12, 2018 FTC complaint was filed and made public. Defendants also assert that Patterson's stock "quickly rebounded" following the FTC action's commencement.

This Court is unpersuaded by Defendants' argument that the alleged antitrust misconduct was already known to the market prior to the FTC's complaint. Defendants essentially ask this Court to weigh their truth-on-the-market defense. This a defense that seeks to "rebut the fraud-on-the-market presumption of reliance by proving that 'the market makers were privy to the truth.'" In re Stellent, Inc. Sec. Litig., 326 F. Supp. 2d 970, 985 (D. Minn. 2004) (quoting Basic Inc., 485 U.S. at 248). This is an intensely fact-specific defense that is rarely appropriate to determine at the motion to dismiss stage. In re Stellent, Inc. Sec. Litig., 326 F. Supp. 2d at 985-86 (citing Ganino v. Citizens Utils. Co., 228 F. 3d 154, 167 (2d Cir. 2000)). As Plaintiffs point out, the FTC complaint provided new information to the market unrevealed by the previous private lawsuits, mainly internal communications, and a financial analyst described the FTC complaint "as very serious [and] much more severe" than the allegations of the private lawsuits.

This Court is more [*59] sympathetic to Defendants' arguments concerning the causal connection between the FTC complaint and the stock losses, particularly where Defendants point to data that shows Patterson's stock price was ultimately unaffected in the weeks following the FTC complaint until the March 1, 2018 earnings report was released. (See Thomas Aff., Ex. A). As detailed in the various earnings reports above, Patterson's earnings had been dropping for some time before the FTC complaint was revealed. Plaintiffs have not clearly explained how the FTC complaint was the precipitating cause of the stock price fall in March 2018 as compared to the accumulated effects of Patterson's near-continuous declining earnings. To counteract Defendants' argument, Plaintiffs assert that the declining earnings were the result of Patterson's unraveling anticompetitive conduct; essentially, Patterson's previously-inflated financial performance had to normalize to the reality that Patterson was not actually as competitive in the dental supply marketplace as it had continuously touted. Thus, Plaintiffs assert, the stock price drop in March 2018 was due to the materialization of the concealed anticompetitive conduct.

These [*60] entangled facts are difficult to resolve in the absence of discovery and would be better suited for resolution on summary judgment where experts can weigh in with their analysis. See Gebhardt v. ConAgra Foods, Inc., 335 F.3d 824, 832 (8th Cir. 2003) (declining "to attach dispositive significance to the stock's price movements absent sufficient facts and expert testimony, which cannot be considered at this procedural juncture, to put this information in its proper context"). Nonetheless, Defendants' argument may be more relevant to the economic harm analysis than that of loss causation. At this stage in the proceeding, this Court cannot draw appropriate boundaries for stock value consideration and what impact the FTC complaint's revelation of the extent of Patterson's anticompetitive behavior had on Patterson's stock prices as compared to its declining earnings. As the Eighth Circuit has noted, the "causation requirement for damages is not very stringent." Id. at 831. Plaintiffs have pleaded a revelation—the February 2018 FTC complaint—followed by the March 2018 earnings call and contemporaneous drop in stock value. At this point in the litigation, this Court concludes Plaintiffs have sufficiently provided Defendants "some indication of the loss" and the causal [*61] connection to survive the motion to dismiss.

E. Summary

Plaintiffs have alleged a long-running scheme at Patterson, concocted in the upper echelons of corporate management, to collude with its direct competitors to stifle new entrants to the market to protect its artificially inflated prices charged by reason of unorganized buyers with little power. Because of an FTC complaint, Plaintiffs have provided allegations with a degree of clarity ordinarily unavailable. But those allegations are insufficient to assert securities violations against all Defendants. This Court concludes Plaintiffs have properly pled securities violations against Anderson and Patterson. As to the other named Defendants—Gugino, Armstrong, and Wiltz—Plaintiffs have failed to sufficiently plead their involvement with the underlying misconduct and this Court concludes they should be dismissed as defendants.

Because this Court concludes Plaintiffs have adequately pled a Section 10(b) claim against Anderson, their Section 20(a) claim survives against him and Patterson. In re St. Jude Med., Inc. Sec. Litig., 836 F. Supp. 2d at 911. As noted above, Plaintiffs have sufficiently alleged that Anderson supervised the principle actors in the misconduct and was apprised of their actions. Lustgraaf v. Behrens, 619 F.3d 867, 873-74 (8th Cir. 2010); Beaver Cty. Employees' Ret. Fund, 94 F. Supp. 3d at 1054-55.

III. RECOMMENDATION

Based [*62] on the foregoing, and all the files, record, and proceedings herein, IT IS HEREBY RECOMMENDED that Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the Amended Class Action Complaint, (ECF No. 89), be GRANTED IN PART and DENIED IN PART as set forth herein.

HN1[] Standards of Review, Abuse of Discretion

A district court's order denying class certification is reviewed for abuse of discretion. A district court necessarily abuses its discretion if it bases its ruling on an erroneous view of the law. But, if the district court applied the correct legal standard, then an appellate court will set aside its decision only if its reasoning was illogical, implausible, or without support in inferences that may be drawn from the facts in the record.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Predominance

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > Superiority

HN2[] Prerequisites for Class Action, Predominance

In order to certify a class under Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3), a court must find that questions of law or fact common to class members predominate over any questions affecting only individual members, and that a class action is superior to other available methods for fairly and efficiently adjudicating the controversy. Although uncertain damages calculations do not alone defeat certification, the United States Supreme Court emphasizes that at the class-certification stage, any model supporting a plaintiff's damages case must be consistent with its liability case. Plaintiffs must be able to show that their damages stemmed from the defendant's actions that created the legal liability. Uncertainty regarding class members' damages does not prevent certification of a class as long as a valid method has been proposed for calculating those damages.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN3[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

The California Consumers Legal Remedies Act (CLRA) shall be liberally construed and applied to promote its underlying purposes, which are to protect consumers against unfair and deceptive business practices and to provide efficient and economical procedures to secure such protection. Cal. Civ. Code § 1760; Class-wide damages calculations under the CLRA are particularly forgiving. California law requires only that some reasonable basis of computation of damages be used, and the damages may be computed even if the result reached is an approximation.

Contracts Law > ... > Measurement of Damages > Foreseeable Damages > Benefit of the Bargain

HN4[] Breach, Breach of Warranty

The Song-Beverly Act provides that the measure of a buyer's damages in an action shall include the rights of replacement or reimbursement. Cal. Civ. Code § 1794(b). Under California law, the remedies for breach of implied warranty include benefit of the bargain damages.

Contracts Law > ... > Measurement of Damages > Foreseeable Damages > Benefit of the Bargain

HN5[] Foreseeable Damages, Benefit of the Bargain

A benefit-of-the-bargain model of damages is concerned with satisfying the expectancy interest of the defrauded plaintiff by putting him in the position he would have enjoyed if the false representation relied upon had been true; it awards the difference in value between what the plaintiff actually received and what he was fraudulently led to believe he would receive.

Summary:

SUMMARY[]

[] This summary constitutes no part of the opinion of the court. It has been prepared by court staff for the convenience of the reader.

Class Certification

The panel reversed the district court's denial of class certification in an action against Nissan North America pursuant to state and federal warranty laws arising from an allegedly faulty hydraulic clutch system in plaintiff's 2012 Nissan vehicle.

The district court denied plaintiff's motion for class certification on the ground that he failed to satisfy the predominance requirement of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23(b)(3) due to what the district court viewed as an inappropriate measure of damages.

The panel held that plaintiff's proposed damages model based on the benefit of the bargain is cognizable under California's Consumers Legal Remedies Act, the Song-Beverly Consumer Warranty Act, and the Magnuson-Moss Warranty Act. The panel held that plaintiff sufficiently demonstrated a nexus between his legal theory—that Nissan violated California law by selling vehicles with a defective clutch system that was not reflected in the sale price—and his damages model—the average cost of repair. The panel determined that plaintiff did not seek damages for the faulty performance of the clutch [2] system, which as the district court concluded, would require an individualized analysis that might defeat predominance. Instead, plaintiff's theory was that the allegedly defective clutch was itself the injury, regardless of whether the faulty clutch caused performance issues. The panel concluded that the district court abused its discretion when it denied class certification based on a misconception of plaintiff's legal theory.

system. After the clutch purportedly malfunctioned—and Plaintiff spent more than $700 replacing it—he filed a putative class action against Defendant Nissan North America, Inc. (Nissan), asserting causes of action under state and federal warranty laws.

[*814] The district court denied Plaintiff's motion for class certification, concluding that he failed to satisfy the predominance requirement of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23(b)(3) due to what it viewed as an inappropriate [4] measure of damages. Ed. 2d 515 (2013)*, Plaintiff's proposed damages model is consistent with his theory of liability, we reverse the district court's denial of class certification and remand.

FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

I. Factual Background

A. Alleged Defect

This case involves an allegedly faulty hydraulic clutch system in various vehicles manufactured by Nissan (the Class Vehicles).[1]

The typical components of a hydraulic clutch system include a fluid reservoir, a clutch master cylinder (CMC), and a clutch slave cylinder (CSC), which is sometimes referred to as the release bearing.[2] As explained by Plaintiff's expert, Michael Stapleford, P.E., the clutch system is a dry friction system that uses brake fluid in a discrete reservoir to transfer heat from the clutch components through the base of the CSC to the attached transmission front cover and the surrounding atmosphere. Such a system routinely generates heat ranging from 200 to 300 degrees Celsius, with hard use resulting in temperatures as high as 400 degrees Celsius.

Plaintiff alleges that, in reconfiguring the Class Vehicles' factory-installed clutch system in 2007, Nissan failed to properly account for heat [5] transfer and produced a defective aluminum/plastic composite CSC that causes the system to overheat. Consequently, the clutch fluid boils and generates air that causes failure of the clutch pedal, such that it sticks to the floor and prevents a driver from shifting gears. A "sticky" clutch can make it difficult to control a vehicle's speed, presenting both safety and performance issues.

B. Nissan's Response

A consumer complaint submitted as evidence by Plaintiff indicates that the Class Vehicles began to malfunction as early as June 2007, while Nissan's own records identified the issue starting in October of that year. An internal Nissan report suggested that "abnormal high-temperature [during] continued use of partial clutch engagement might be the cause." Emails exchanged between Nissan employees in 2012 further discussed the sticky clutch problem and its potential causes, and in July 2012, a Nissan project engineer wrote,

> This issue is great enough that it warrants a serious look by R&D as to how we can improve the feel, and function of the clutch system. . . . Customers are universally dissatisfied with the feel and performance of the > system even when it is performing as designed. [6] . . . Combine [*815] that with the frequent claims of clutch pedal sticking to floor and you've taken a dissatisfaction item and made it into a breakdown item. I think a wholesale approach to a whole new hydraulic system, including a new pedal, is warranted.

[1] Specifically, the Nissan 350Z, model years 2007-09; the Nissan 370Z, model years 2009-15; the Infiniti G35, model years 2007-08; the Infiniti G37, model years 2008-14; and the Infiniti Q60.

[2] A properly functioning hydraulic clutch system is engaged when the driver depresses the clutch pedal, which causes a piston in the CMC to push fluid through the steel hydraulic line to the CSC and against the integrated release bearing, pressurizing the system. This in turn causes the clutch kit (pressure plate, clutch disc, and flywheel) to disengage the engine from the transmission. Releasing the clutch pedal releases the fluid pressure, which allows the gears to engage smoothly and efficiently.

Plaintiff claims that "[d]espite its investigations and testing, or even the change to a higher quality hydraulic fluid in the Class Vehicles, Nissan never informed consumers that the clutch system in the Class Vehicles had an inherent defect that made it prone to heat-related problems." In his complaint, Plaintiff asserted that if he and the other putative class members "knew about these defects at the time of sale or lease, [they] would not have purchased or leased the Class Vehicles or would have paid less for them."

C. Plaintiff's 2012 Nissan 370Z

Plaintiff purchased a new 2012 Nissan 370Z from an authorized Nissan dealer in Santa Clara County, California, as a college graduation present for his son, Michael. In March 2014, Michael was driving the 370Z on the freeway when the clutch pedal lost pressure and did not return to its depressed position; Michael had to pull over to the shoulder of the freeway and slow down until the clutch [7] allowed him to shift into second gear. The Nissan dealership replaced the CSC at no charge because the vehicle was still under warranty. When a similar situation developed two years later, however, the 370Z was no longer under warranty, and so Plaintiff had the CSC replaced by an auto repair shop for $721.75.

II. Procedural History

Plaintiff's first amended complaint alleged five causes of action against Nissan: (1) violations of California's Consumers Legal Remedies Act (CLRA); (2) violations of California's Unfair Competition Law (UCL); (3) breach of implied warranty pursuant to the Song-Beverly Consumer Warranty Act (Song-Beverly Act); (4) breach of implied warranty pursuant to the Magnuson-Moss Warranty Act (Magnuson-Moss Act); and (5) unjust enrichment. The district court granted in part Nissan's motion to dismiss, removing Plaintiff's UCL and unjust enrichment claims, and his request for injunctive relief under the CLRA.

Plaintiff moved for class certification pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23(b)(3) (or, in the alternative, under Rule 23(c)(4) for liability only), seeking to certify (1) a class of "[a]ll individuals in California who purchased or leased, from an authorized Nissan dealer, a new Nissan vehicle equipped [8] with a FS6R31A manual transmission"; and (2) a CLRA subclass of "[a]ll members of the Class who are 'consumers' within the meaning of California Civil Code § 1761(d)." Although Nissan opposed class certification for various reasons—including that Plaintiff was not an adequate class representative, that individual issues predominated due to the varying types of automobiles included in the Class Vehicles, and that Nissan's purported knowledge of the defect changed over the course of the class period—a major point of dispute, and the issue on which the district court's eventual order hinged, concerned Plaintiff's damages model.

According to Plaintiff, his "damages model is based on the economic principle of benefit-of-the-bargain and is consistent with [his] theory of liability." Assuming that class members would have either paid less than sticker price or not purchased a defective vehicle at all had the nature of the clutch system been divulged by Nissan, Plaintiff seeks "to recover the difference in value between the non-defective vehicles Nissan promised and the defective vehicles that were delivered based on the cost[] to [*816] replace the composite CSC with one that is solid cast-aluminum." Nissan challenges this proposed [9] damages model, citing the report of an expert who, in its words, "rejected the notion that average-cost-of-repair represented the amount that informed consumers would discount the price of the [Class] Vehicles."

The district court agreed with Nissan and denied Plaintiff's motion for class certification. It concluded that "Plaintiff [] failed to satisfy the predominance requirement of Rule 23(b)(3)," based on what the court viewed as a "problematic" damages model. The court explained,

> Under the proposed benefit of the bargain model, damages are the difference between the value Nissan represented and the value class members received, measured at the time of purchase. However, the difference between value represented and value received only equals the cost to replace the defective CSC if consumers would have deemed the defective part valueless.

(citation omitted). The court reasoned that, under Plaintiff's proposed model, if a class member "derived value from the defective CSC—be it by selling it, repurposing it, or simply driving a ways before replacing it—the class member will have received the full benefit of the bargain and the monetary value of the defective part. That is not an appropriate measure [10] of damages." Because the record contained no evidence that the defective clutch was valueless—but did contain evidence to the contrary, since "Plaintiff's vehicle was driven for approximately 26,629 miles before the original CSC malfunctioned"—the court rejected Plaintiff's damages model as being an improper measure of the benefit of the bargain. Therefore, the district court concluded that Plaintiff could not satisfy the predominance requirement of Rule 23(b)(3).

We subsequently granted Plaintiff's timely petition for permission to appeal the denial of class certification pursuant to Rule 23(f).

JURISDICTION AND STANDARD OF REVIEW

We have jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1292(e) and Rule 23(f). See Chamberlan v. Ford Motor Co., 402 F.3d 952, 955 (9th Cir. 2005).

HN1[] "A district court's order denying class certification is reviewed for abuse of discretion." Civil Rights Educ. & Enf't Ctr. v. Hosp. Props. Tr., 867 F.3d 1093, 1103 (9th Cir. 2017). "A district court would necessarily abuse its discretion if it based its ruling on an erroneous view of the law." United States v. Hinkson, 585 F.3d 1247, 1259 (9th Cir. 2009) (en banc) (quoting Cooter & Gell v. Hartmarx Corp., 496 U.S. 384, 405, 110 S. Ct. 2447, 110 L. Ed. 2d 359 (1990)). But, if the district court "applied the correct legal standard," then we will "set aside its decision only if the court's reasoning was 'illogical, implausible, or without support in inferences that may be drawn from the facts in the record.'" Civil Rights Educ. & Enf't Ctr., 867 F.3d at 1103 (quoting Jimenez v. Allstate Ins. Co., 765 F.3d 1161, 1164 (9th Cir. 2014)).

ANALYSIS

The central issue before us is whether Plaintiff's [11] proposed damages model—specifically, a benefit-of-the-bargain model as measured by the average cost of replacing the allegedly defective clutch system—satisfies Rule 23(b)(3)'s predominance requirement.

HN2[] In order to certify a class under Rule 23(b)(3), a court must find that "questions of law or fact common to class members predominate over any questions affecting [*817] only individual members, and that a class action is superior to other available methods for fairly and efficiently adjudicating the controversy." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3); see also Zinser v. Accufix Research Inst., Inc., 253 F.3d 1180, 1189 (9th Cir. 2001), as amended, 273 F.3d 1266 (9th Cir. 2001). Although uncertain damages calculations do not alone defeat certification, Yokoyama v. Midland Nat'l Life Ins. Co., 594 F.3d 1087, 1094 (9th Cir. 2010), the Supreme Court has emphasized that "at the class-certification stage (as at trial), any model supporting a 'plaintiff's damages case must be consistent with its liability case.'" Comcast, 569 U.S. at 35 (emphasis added) (quoting ABA Section of Antitrust Law, Proving Antitrust Damages: Legal and Economic Issues 57, 62 (2d ed. 2010)); see also id. at 38 ("The first step in a damages study is the translation of the legal theory of the harmful event into an analysis of the economic impact of that event." (quoting Fed. Judicial Ctr., Reference Manual on Scientific Evidence 432 (3d ed. 2011))).

Comcast did not alter our holding that individualized [12] damages issues do not alone defeat certification. See Pulaski & Middleman, LLC v. Google, Inc., 802 F.3d 979, 988 (9th Cir. 2015) ("Yokoyama remains the law of this court, even after Comcast."); see also Jimenez, 765 F.3d at 1168 ("So long as the plaintiffs were harmed by the same conduct, disparities in how or by how much they were harmed did not defeat class certification."). But Comcast requires that "plaintiffs [] be able to show that their damages stemmed from the defendant's actions that created the legal liability." Leyva v. Medline Indus. Inc., 716 F.3d 510, 514 (9th Cir. 2013); see also Just Film, Inc. v. Buono, 847 F.3d 1108, 1120 (9th Cir. 2017) ("[P]laintiffs must show that 'damages are capable of measurement on a classwide basis,' in the sense that the whole class suffered damages traceable to the same injurious course of conduct underlying the plaintiffs' legal theory." (quoting Comcast, 569 U.S. at 34)). In short, "[u]ncertainty regarding class members' damages does not prevent certification of a class as long as a valid method has been proposed for calculating those damages." Lambert v. Nutraceutical Corp., 870 F.3d 1170, 1182 (9th Cir. 2017), rev'd on other grounds, 139 S. Ct. 710, 203 L. Ed. 2d 43 (2019).

I. Plaintiff's Causes of Action

We must first consider Plaintiff's causes of action in order to determine whether they permit recovery based on the benefit of the bargain. Following the district court's partial grant of Nissan's motion to dismiss, Plaintiff was left with three viable causes of action at the time [13] of class certification: claims under the CLRA, the Song-Beverly Act, and the Magnuson-Moss Act.[3]

A. The CLRA

HN3[] The CLRA "shall be liberally construed and applied to promote its underlying purposes, which are to protect consumers against unfair and deceptive business practices [*818] and to provide efficient and economical procedures to secure such protection." Cal. Civ. Code § 1760; see also Hinojos v. Kohl's Corp., 718 F.3d 1098, 1108 (9th Cir. 2013) ("[T]he CLRA's 'any damage' requirement is a capacious one that includes any pecuniary damage as well as opportunity costs and transaction costs that result when a consumer is misled by deceptive marketing practices."); Wilens v. TD Waterhouse Grp., Inc., 120 Cal. App. 4th 746, 15 Cal. Rptr. 3d 271, 274 (Ct. App. 2003) (noting that "[i]f the consumer suffers damage as a result of an unlawful act" under the CLRA, then "the consumer can bring an action against the defendant for actual damages, punitive damages, injunctive relief or restitution"). We have noted that "[c]lass wide damages calculations under the . . . CLRA are particularly forgiving. California law 'requires only that some reasonable basis of computation of damages be used, and the damages may be computed even if the result reached is an approximation.'" Lambert, 870 F.3d at 1183 (quoting Pulaski, 802 F.3d at 989).

Here, we are satisfied that Plaintiff's proposed benefit-of-the-bargain measure of damages is [14] both cognizable under the CLRA and a reasonable basis of computation. Courts have viewed similar models of recovery favorably in the past. See, e.g., Colgan v. Leatherman Tool Grp., Inc., 135 Cal. App. 4th 663, 38 Cal. Rptr. 3d 36, 42-43 (Ct. App. 2006) (describing a "market approach" for "determin[ing] the amount of actual damages for a CLRA award," which provides that "[o]ne defrauded in the purchase, sale or exchange of property is entitled to recover the difference between the actual value of that with which the defrauded person parted and the actual value of that which he received, together with any additional damage arising from the particular transaction" (quoting Cal. Civ. Code § 3343)); see also Astiana v. Kashi Co., 291 F.R.D. 493, 506 (S.D. DaimlerChrysler Corp., 534 F.3d 1017, 1022 (9th Cir. 2008) ("[T]his court's disposition of the state law warranty claims determines the disposition of the Magnuson-Moss Act claims."); Walsh v. Cir. 1986) ("[E]xcept in the specific instances in which Magnuson-Moss expressly prescribes a regulating rule, the Act calls for the application of state written and implied warranty law, not the creation of additional federal law."). Accordingly, we focus only on Plaintiff's causes of action under California law—the CLRA and Song-Beverly Act.

amount that the defendant wrongfully acquired.'" (quoting Wiener v. Dannon Co., 255 F.R.D. 658, 670 (C.D. Cal. 2009))).[4] Nissan has cited no authority, and we are not aware of any, precluding Plaintiff's theory of recovery under the CLRA.

B. The Song-Beverly Act

Plaintiff's damages model is similarly cognizable under HN4[] the Song-Beverly Act, which provides that "[t]he [15] measure of the buyer's damages in an action . . . shall include the rights of replacement or reimbursement." Cal. Civ. Code § 1794(b); see also id. § 1794(b)(2) ("Where the buyer has accepted the goods, Sections 2714 and 2715 of the Commercial Code shall apply, and the measure of damages shall include the cost of repairs necessary to make the goods conform."). California Commercial Code section 2714 provides that "[t]he measure of damages for breach of warranty is the difference at the time and place of acceptance between the value of the goods accepted and the value they would have had if they had been as warranted, unless special circumstances show proximate damages of a different amount." Cal. Com. Code § 2714(2); see also S. M. Wilson & Co. v. Smith Int'l, Inc., 587 F.2d 1363, 1375 [*819] (9th Cir. 1978) (explaining that section 2714(2) entitles a plaintiff "to recover the monetary equivalent of the benefit of his bargain").[5] Accordingly, "[u]nder California law the remedies for breach of the implied warranty include 'benefit of the bargain' damages." *Ironshore Specialty Ins. Co. v. 23andMe, Inc., No. 14-cv-03286-BLF, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 64145, 2015 WL 2265900, at 4 (N.D. Cal. May 14, 2015).

II. Plaintiff's Theory of Liability

Having determined that recovery based on the benefit of the bargain is cognizable under Plaintiff's causes of action, we must now determine whether this damages model flows from his theory of liability. See Comcast, 569 U.S. at 35.

In his motion for class certification, [16] Plaintiff asserted that he > has alleged, and can prove through common evidence, that the Class Vehicles were sold with defective CSCs. That allegation is susceptible to common proof regarding the design of the CSC, which is substantially the same for all Class Vehicles, and individual factors do not affect whether the Class [V]ehicles were sold with a defective CSC.

(citation omitted). This characterization is crucial. Plaintiff's legal theory is not based on the performance of the allegedly defective clutch system, but instead the system itself, which he claims is defective. Had Plaintiff alleged that performance problems constituted the defect and caused his and the class members' injuries, then the benefit of the bargain would not be the appropriate measure of damages because, as the district court noted, class members might have received varying levels of value based on if and when they experienced a sticky clutch problem. But Plaintiff's theory is that Nissan knowingly designed a defective clutch system and did not inform consumers of the defect. His expert explained that the CSC "is defectively designed because its wrought aluminum cylinder and plastic base assembly does not provide [17] enough thermal conductivity to effectively transfer heat from the clutch components to the transmission front cover and surrounding air during clutch engagement." This allegedly defective clutch system "is the same or substantially similar in all of the Class Vehicles." Accordingly, as Plaintiff argues, "under [his] theory, the defect exists—and must be remedied—whether or not the symptoms have manifested yet."

[4] We further note that Plaintiff's damages model is consistent with the CLRA's safe harbor provision, which requires that a customer "[n]otify the person alleged to have" employed unlawful practices and "[d]emand that the person correct, repair, replace, or otherwise rectify the goods or services." Cal. Civ. Code § 1782(a) (emphasis added).

[5] Section 2715 provides for incidental and consequential damages, which are not at issue here.

Both Nissan and the district court mischaracterized Plaintiff's theory as being centered on performance issues, rather than the defective system itself. Nissan argues that Plaintiff's "model assumed that 100% of the vehicles would manifest a clutch assembly defect, and none of them would malfunction but for the design flaw." But this is not accurate; Plaintiff's theory is that the defect was inherent in each of the Class Vehicles at the time of purchase, regardless of when and if the defect manifested. He alleges that Nissan violated the CLRA because it knew about the defective clutch system and failed to disclose it at the point of sale, that "a reasonable person would have considered [the fact of the alleged defect] to be important in deciding whether to purchase or lease Class [18] Vehicles," and thus that Plaintiff and class members "would not have purchased or leased Class Vehicles equipped with transmissions, or would have paid less for them." See *Soule v. Gen. Motors Corp., 8 Cal. 4th 548, [820] 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 607, 882 P.2d 298, 308 n.3 (Cal. 1994) ("[T]he ordinary consumers of modern automobiles may and do expect that such vehicles will be designed so as not to explode while idling at stoplights, experience sudden steering or brake failure as they leave the dealership, or roll over and catch fire in two-mile-per-hour collisions."). Plaintiff further alleges that, under the Song-Beverly Act, the Class Vehicles "suffered from an inherent defect at the time of sale." Plaintiff correctly contends that "under both causes of action, the sale of the vehicle with the known defect is the liability-triggering event, not when the overheating manifests." See *Daniel v. Ford Motor Co., No. 2:11-02890 WBS EFB, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 65723, 2016 WL 2899026, at 7 (E.D. Cal. May 18, 2016) ("[A] reasonable jury could conclude that a consumer would demand that the purchase price of a vehicle with a defect be reduced by the cost of remedying that defect."); *Kearney v. Hyundai Motor Co., No. SACV 09-1298 DOC (MLGx), 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 68242, 2010 WL 9093204, at 5 (C.D. Cal. June 4, 2010) (determining that if "the receipt of a vehicle whose alleged defects reduced the car's value and deprived the consumer of the benefit of the bargain, even when the alleged [19] defects did not later materialize," then "the loss was suffered 'at the moment' of purchase" (citing Cole v. GMC, 484 F.3d 717, 723 (5th Cir. 2007))).

Plaintiff's theory is consistent with our opinion in Wolin v. Jaguar Land Rover North America, LLC, in which we concluded that "[t]he district court erred when it concluded, without discussion, that certification is inappropriate because [the plaintiffs] did not prove that the defect manifested in a majority of the class's vehicles." 617 F.3d 1168, 1173 (9th Cir. 2010). We explained that the plaintiff > alleges breach of implied warranty because the vehicles were defective and not of merchantable quality at the time they left Land Rover's possession. Common issues predominate such as whether Land Rover was aware of the existence of the alleged defect, whether Land Rover had a duty to disclose its knowledge and whether it violated consumer protection laws when it failed to do so. . . . [W]e have held that proof of the manifestation of a defect is not a prerequisite to class certification.

Id. Moreover, in Pulaski, we clarified that a restitution calculation under California law > need not account for benefits received after purchase [where] the focus is on the value of the service at the time of purchase. Instead . . . the [20] focus is on the difference between what was paid and what a reasonable consumer would have paid at the time of purchase without the fraudulent or omitted information.

802 F.3d at 989.[6] Here, in denying Plaintiff's motion for class certification, the district court focused on potential post-purchase value, suggesting that "the difference between value represented and value received only equals the cost to replace the defective CSC if consumers would have deemed the defective part valueless." Given Plaintiff's theory of liability, [*821] this conclusion was inconsistent with Wolin and Pulaski.[7]

[6] Pulaski dealt with claims under the UCL and California's False Advertising Law, not the CLRA. See 802 F.3d at 983. But although "[d]amages under the CLRA on the one hand and restitution under the False Advertising and Unfair Competition Laws on the other hand are different remedies," the CLRA contemplates restitution, and that concept is treated similarly under the three laws. Colgan, 38 Cal. Rptr. 3d at 58-59; see also Cortez v. Purolator Air Filtration Prods. Co., 23 Cal. 4th 163, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 518, 999 P.2d 706, 713 (Cal. 2000) (discussing the overlap of "restitution" and "damages").

[7] That conclusion was also inconsistent with the holdings of other circuits, which have described benefit-of-the-bargain recovery much as we did in Pulaski. In Carriuolo v. General Motors Co., for example, the Eleventh Circuit cited with approval a Florida state case that asked, "Is a car with defective seatbelt buckles worth less than a car with operational seatbelt buckles? Common

Plaintiff alleges that Nissan concealed the clutch system's defects from consumers, that the defect was material because it adversely affected the "safety and reliability" [21] of the Class Vehicles, and that he did not get what he bargained for—a transmission "fit for [its] intended use." HN5[] A benefit-of-the-bargain model of damages aligns with this legal theory; that measure > is concerned with satisfying the expectancy interest of the defrauded plaintiff by putting him in the position he would have enjoyed if the false representation relied upon had been true; it awards the difference in value between what the plaintiff actually received and what he was fraudulently led to believe he would receive.

Stout v. Turney, 22 Cal. 3d 718, 150 Cal. Rptr. 637, 586 P.2d 1228, 1232 (Cal. 1978). Plaintiff seeks to recover damages equaling the amount he purportedly overpaid in purchasing a vehicle with a defective clutch; he "is not seeking a full refund for the vehicle purchase, but for the cost of replacing [] a defective component, which is a proxy for [his] overpayment of the vehicle at the point of sale." Whether his proposed calculation of the replacement cost is accurate, whether the clutch was actually defective, and whether Nissan knew of the alleged defect are merits inquiries unrelated to class certification. For now, it is sufficient that Plaintiff has demonstrated the nexus between his legal theory—that Nissan violated California law by selling [22] vehicles with a defective clutch system that was not reflected in the sale price—and his damages model—the average cost of repair.

In response, Nissan maintains that "[t]he manifestation requirement [] impacts the damages analysis." It cites Cardinal Health 301, Inc. v. Tyco Electronics Corp., in which the California Court of Appeal noted that "[u]nless a product actually manifests an alleged defect, the plaintiff [*822] has not suffered damages with respect to an implied warranty claim." 169 Cal. App. 4th 116, 87 Cal. Rptr. 3d 5, 33 (Ct. App. 2008); see also Hicks v. Kaufman & Broad Home Corp., 89 Cal. App. 4th 908, 107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 761, 772-73 (Ct. App. 2001) ("If the defect has not manifested itself . . . the buyer has received what he bargained for."). Nissan's argument, however, conflates cases where a defect causes an injury, and those, like this one, where the defect itself is the injury. As the Court of Appeal has explained, describing the facts of Anthony v. General Motors Corp., 33 Cal. App. 3d 699, 109 Cal. Rptr. 254 (Ct. App. 1973),

> There the plaintiffs did not seek to recover for physical injury or property damage caused by the defect in the truck wheels. Rather, they sought to recover the cost of replacing the defective wheels. The primary right alleged to have been violated in Anthony, as in the case before us, was the right to take a product free from defect. The defect did not cause the plaintiffs' injury; the defect was [23] the injury.

Hicks, 107 Cal. Rptr. 2d at 771-72.

This distinction is key, and it underscores the fundamental disconnect between Plaintiff's damages theory and Nissan's mischaracterization of what it entails. As we have explained, Plaintiff does not seek damages for the faulty sense indicates that it is[.]" 823 F.3d 977, 987 (11th Cir. 2016) (alteration in original) (quoting Collins v. DaimlerChrysler Corp., 894 So. 2d 988, 991 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 2004)). The Carriuolo court determined that it confronted a "similar question" that was also "amenable to classwide resolution," explaining that > a manufacturer's misrepresentation may allow it to command a price premium and to overcharge customers systematically. Even if an individual class member subjectively valued the vehicle equally with or without the accurate [safety information] sticker, she could have suffered a loss in negotiating leverage if a vehicle with perfect safety ratings is worth more on the open market.

Id. The court therefore rejected the defendant's argument that "the liability determination will be highly individualized because the buying and leasing experiences of each proposed class member were not uniform." Id. at 985. Instead, the court concluded that "damages should reflect the difference between the market value" of what was promised and what was delivered; "[u]nlike the calculation of an individual consumer's direct pecuniary loss, which would limit the plaintiff to the difference of what she paid and the actual value received, the [applicable] 'benefit of the bargain' model provides a standardized class-wide damages figure because the plaintiff's out-of-pocket payment is immaterial." Id. at 986; see also In re Whirlpool Corp. Front-Loading Washer Prods. Liab. Litig., 722 F.3d 838, 856-57 (6th Cir. 2013) ("Because all Duet owners were injured at the point of sale upon paying a premium price for the Duets as designed, even those owners who have not experienced a mold problem are properly included within the certified class.").

performance of the clutch system; such a theory of liability would, pursuant to Cardinal Health, Hicks, and the district court's analysis, require individualized analysis that might defeat predominance. Instead, Plaintiff's theory is that the allegedly defective clutch is itself the injury, regardless of whether the faulty clutch caused performance issues. Accordingly, Nissan's argument is unavailing.[8]

CONCLUSION

Plaintiff's theory of liability—that Nissan's manufacture and concealment of a defective clutch system injured class members at the time of sale—is consistent with his proposed recovery based on the benefit of the bargain. We conclude that the district court abused its discretion when it denied class certification based on a misconception of Plaintiff's legal theory. We therefore REVERSE the district court's denial of class certification and REMAND for further proceedings.

[8] Nissan also argues that the district court's denial of class certification is supported by other grounds in the record, but we observe that at least some of these additional contentions—for example, that Plaintiff's "model misperceives the bargain" because Nissan did not promise that the Class Vehicles were free of defects—are merits arguments, and beyond the scope of our review. See Stockwell v. City and County of San Francisco, 749 F.3d 1107, 1113 (9th Cir. 2014) ("Under Rule 23(f), the limitation on consideration of the merits to the relevant class certification questions is of jurisdictional significance.").

HN2[] Defenses, Demurrers & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

An attack on subject matter jurisdiction may be facial or factual. A facial attack asserts that the allegations contained in a complaint are insufficient on their face to invoke federal jurisdiction, while a factual attack disputes the truth of the allegations that, by themselves, would otherwise invoke federal jurisdiction. When the challenge is facial, all allegations of material fact are taken as true and construed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. In a facial attack on jurisdiction, the court confines the inquiry to allegations in the complaint. In a factual attack on jurisdiction, a court may review evidence beyond the complaint without converting the motion to dismiss into a motion for summary judgment. In such a challenge, the court need not presume the truthfulness of the plaintiff's allegations. Once the moving party has converted the motion to dismiss into a factual motion by presenting affidavits or other evidence properly brought before the court, the party opposing the motion must furnish affidavits or other evidence necessary to satisfy its burden of establishing subject matter jurisdiction.

HN3[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), a complaint may be dismissed for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. The court's review is generally limited to the contents of a complaint. If matters outside the pleadings are considered, the Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) motion is treated as one for summary judgment. However, the court may take judicial notice of and consider matters of public record without converting a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss into a motion for summary judgment.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN4[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

On a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss, all allegations of material fact are taken as true and construed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. However, conclusory allegations of law, unwarranted deductions of fact, and unreasonable inferences are insufficient to defeat a motion to dismiss. Dismissal under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) may be based on either lack of a cognizable legal theory or the absence of sufficient facts alleged under a cognizable legal theory.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN5[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

To survive a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss, factual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level, on the assumption that all the allegations in the complaint are true (even if doubtful in fact). The pleading standard does not require detailed factual allegations, but it demands more than an unadorned, the-defendant-unlawfully-harmed-me accusation. A plaintiff's obligation to provide the grounds of his entitlement to relief requires more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do. A complaint must state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face. A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged.

HN6[] Motions to Strike, Immaterial Matters

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(f), the court may strike from a pleading an insufficient defense or any redundant, immaterial, impertinent, or scandalous matter, on its own or upon a motion made by a party. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(f). Redundant matter is an allegation that includes a needless repetition of other averments or is foreign to the issue. Immaterial matter has no essential or important relationship to the claim for relief or the defenses being pleaded. Impertinent matter consists of statements that do not pertain, and are not necessary, to the issues in question. Scandalous matter improperly casts a derogatory light on someone, most typically on a party to the action. The purpose of Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(f) motion is to avoid the expenditure of time and money that must arise from litigating spurious issues by dispensing with those issues prior to trial. A Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(f) motion to strike is a severe measure and is generally viewed with disfavor. Because of this, a motion to strike is not normally granted unless prejudice would result to the movant from the denial of the motion. In considering a motion to strike, the court views the challenged pleadings in the light most favorable to the plaintiffs.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Scope

HN11[] Trade Practices & Unfair Competition, State Regulation

Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-2(a) provides that unfair methods of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any trade or commerce are unlawful. Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-2, as its federal counterpart in the Federal Trade Commission Act, was constructed in broad language in order to constitute a flexible tool to stop and prevent fraudulent, unfair or deceptive business practices for the protection of both honest consumers and honest businesspersons. Only a consumer, the attorney general or the direct of the office of consumer protection may bring a claim of unfair or deceptive acts or practices. Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-2(e). However, any person may bring a claim of unfair methods of competition (UMOC) based upon conduct that could also support a claim of unfair or deceptive acts or practices as long as the nature of the competition is sufficiently alleged in the complaint.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Claims

HN12[] State Regulation, Claims

An act is unfair when: [1] it offends established public policy and [2] when the practice is immoral, unethical, oppressive, unscrupulous or [3] substantially injurious to consumers. All three factors need not be alleged to assert that an act is unfair. An unfair act does not require violation of a statute or satisfaction of the elements of an analogous claim. A plaintiff need not prove a claim for tortious interference with prospective business advantage in order to demonstrate a Haw. Rev. Stat. § 480-2(a) violation because the evaluation of whether particular, non-statutorily-enumerated conduct is unfair is simply a question of fact that does not require incorporating the elements of an analogous claim.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Claims

HN13[] State Regulation, Claims

The question of whether a practice constitutes an unfair or deceptive trade practice is ordinarily a question of fact.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Claims

HN14[] State Regulation, Claims

The second element of an unfair methods of competition (UMOC) claim requires the plaintiff to demonstrate both an injury in fact to his or her business or property and the nature of competition. The nature of competition element is met by demonstrating how the defendant's conduct negatively affects competition or harms fair competition. The alleged conduct must harm competition itself, not merely a competitor.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Claims

HN15[] State Regulation, Claims

In an unfair competition claim, the elimination of a single competitor, standing alone, does not prove anticompetitive effect. Impact upon the market must be proven.

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Case & Controversy Requirements > Actual Controversy

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Justiciability > Mootness

HN16[] Case & Controversy Requirements, Actual Controversy

The rule in federal cases is that an actual controversy must be extant at all stages of review, not merely at the time the complaint is filed. A case becomes moot when the issues presented are no longer live or the parties lack a legally cognizable interest in the outcome. The basic question in determining mootness is whether there is a present controversy as to which effective relief can be granted.

HN17[] Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA), Civil Penalties

The notice requirements for continuing health insurance coverage are set forth in 29 U.S.C.S. § 1166, and, with respect to those requirements, ERISA provides that any administrator (A) who fails to meet the requirements of paragraph (1) or (4) of section 1166 of this title with respect to a participant or beneficiary, or (B) who fails or refuses to comply with a request for any information which such administrator is required by this subchapter to furnish to a participant or beneficiary (unless such failure or refusal results from matters reasonably beyond the control of the administrator) by mailing the material requested to the last known address of the requesting participant or beneficiary within 30 days after such request may in the court's discretion be personally liable to such participant or beneficiary in the amount of up to $100 a day from the date of such failure or refusal, and the court may in its discretion order such other relief as it deems proper. 29 U.S.C.S. § 1132(c)(1). 29 C.F.R. § 2575.502c-1 increases the maximum statutory penalty from $100 per day to $110 per day for violations occurring after July 29, 1997.

HN18[] Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA), Civil Penalties

Whether to impose statutory penalties under 29 U.S.C.S. § 1132 and the amount of those penalties (up to $110 a day) is discretionary. Appropriate factors to be considered include: [1] bad faith or intentional misconduct on the part of the administrator, [2] the length of the delay, [3] the number of requests made and documents withheld, and [4] the existence of any prejudice to the participant or beneficiary. None of these factors is dispositive. The absence or presence of one or even multiple factors is not dispositive. 29 U.S.C.S. § 1132 penalties are meant to be in the nature of punitive damages, designed more for the purpose of punishing the violator than compensating the participant or beneficiary.

ORDER (1) GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART PLAINTIFF'S MOTION TO DISMISS COUNTERCLAIM AND (2) GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART DEFENDANTS' COUNTERMOTION TO STRIKE

I. INTRODUCTION.

Defendants Robert Sonny Lessary and Hicoustix LLC began competing for business with Plaintiff Admor HVAC Products, Inc., while Lessary was an Admor employee. No longer employed by Admor, Lessary and his company, Hicoustix, remain in competition [*2] with Admor, which has sued them. Defendants have counterclaimed.

Before the court are Admor's motion to dismiss the Counterclaim, and Defendants' countermotion to strike certain matters raised in Admor's motion to dismiss. ECF Nos. 55, 67.

ORDER (1) GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART PLAINTIFF'S MOTION TO DISMISS COUNTERCLAIM AND (2) GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART DEFENDANTS' COUNTERMOTION TO STRIKE

Defendants' Counterclaim asserts three claims against Admor: (1) unfair competition in violation of section 480-2 of Hawaii Revised Statutes, (2) failure to pay commissions/wages pursuant to chapter 388 of Hawaii Revised Statutes, and (3) violation of the notice requirements in the Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act ("COBRA"). ECF No. 24-1. Admor argues that Defendants' unfair competition claim fails as a matter of law and that their remaining two claims are moot.

Defendants' countermotion argues that Admor's motion to dismiss presents matters outside the pleadings and should be stricken.

The court grants in part and denies in part Defendants' countermotion to strike and excludes certain matters from its consideration of Admor's motion to dismiss.

Defendants have not alleged sufficient facts to state a claim of unfair competition or for statutory damages [*3] under COBRA. However, Admor has not established that Defendants' claim for failure to pay is moot. The court therefore grants Admor's motion to dismiss in part, dismisses the unfair competition and COBRA notification claims, and grants Defendants leave to amend the Counterclaim.

II. BACKGROUND.

Admor alleges that Lessary, while an Admor salesperson, began soliciting business for Hicoustix, an Admor competitor, and misappropriated Admor's trade secrets. Admor filed its Complaint against Defendants on February 8, 2019, asserting nine claims: (1) violation of the Defend Trade Secrets Act, 18 U.S.C. § 1836; (2) violation of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C. § 1962; (3) breach of the duty of loyalty; (4) unfair competition under 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a); (5) unfair competition under section 480-2 of Hawaii Revised Statutes; (6) tortious interference with prospective business advantage; (7) tortious interference with business relations; (8) conversion; and (9) unjust enrichment. ECF No. 1.

The Complaint seeks several forms of relief, including the "[e]ntry of preliminary and permanent injunctions (1) prohibiting Sonny and Hicoustix from working with any of Admor's customers; (2) prohibiting Sonny and Hicoustix from working with any of Admor's vendors; (3) [*4] prohibiting anyone acting in concert with Defendants from working with Admor's customers and vendors; (4) preventing any further use or disclosure of the Trade Secrets by Defendants; (5) preventing Sonny and Hicoustix from using Admor's name, symbols, and logos in association with Hicoustix or any other company, and (6) preventing Defendants from otherwise unfairly competing with Admor." Id., PageID # 40. The Complaint states that Admor has "approximately 2042 active customer/contractors" and "423 vendors." Id. at 8-9.

Admor moved for a preliminary injunction "[p]reserving the status quo by preventing Defendants from servicing any and all entities and individuals who were Admor customers and vendors as of April 1, 2018." ECF No. 10, PageID # 60.

On April 5, 2019, Defendants filed a Counterclaim against Admor. ECF No. 24-1. Defendants allege that Lessary had no contractual agreement with Admor containing noncompete, nonsolicitation, or nonacceptance-of-business provisions, and that, while at Admor, Lessary did no work with at least 1,900 of Admor's 2,042 customers or with 400 of Admor's 423 vendors. Id., PageID #s 431-35. The Counterclaim argues that Admor violated section 480-2 of Hawaii Revised Statutes by seeking to prohibit Defendants [*5] from working with customers and vendors with whom Lessary had done no business and had not engaged in any inappropriate conduct. Id. at 435-40. The Counterclaim further asserts a claim for failure to pay Lessary's full commissions and wages and a claim for failure to provide Lessary with COBRA information following his termination from Admor. Id. at 440-45.

An evidentiary hearing on Admor's motion for preliminary injunction was held on April 16, 2019.

On April 26, 2019, Admor filed its motion to dismiss the Counterclaim. ECF No. 55. On June 10, 2019, Defendants filed their countermotion to strike along with their opposition to Admor's motion to dismiss. ECF No. 67.

The court issued its Findings of Fact, Conclusions of Law, and Order on June 18, 2019, denying Admor's preliminary injunction motion. ECF No. 69.

III. STANDARDS OF REVIEW.

A. Rule 12(b)(1) Motion To Dismiss For Lack Of Subject Matter Jurisdiction.

Admor's motion to dismiss is brought under Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. However, Admor raises the issue of mootness, which is a matter of subject matter jurisdiction properly considered under Rule 12(b)(1). See Gemtel Corp. v. Cmty. Redev. Agency, 23 F.3d 1542, 1544, 1544 n.1 (9th Cir. 1994); see also Bland v. Fessler, 88 F.3d 729, 732 n.4 (9th Cir. 1996) (citing Gemtel for the principle that HN1[] "mootness and ripeness [are] properly challenged under Rule 12(b)(1)"). Therefore, the court treats Admor's motion [*6] as having been brought in part under Rule 12(b)(1), which governs dismissal for lack of subject matter jurisdiction.

HN2[] An attack on subject matter jurisdiction "may be facial or factual." Safe Air for Everyone v. Meyer, 373 F.3d 1035, 1039 (9th Cir. 2004). A facial attack asserts that "the allegations contained in a complaint are insufficient on their face to invoke federal jurisdiction[,]" while a factual attack "disputes the truth of the allegations that, by themselves, would otherwise invoke federal jurisdiction." Id.

When the challenge is facial, all allegations of material fact are taken as true and construed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. Fed'n of African Am. Contractors v. City of Oakland, 96 F.3d 1204, 1207 (9th Cir. 1996). In a facial attack on jurisdiction, the court "confin[es] the inquiry to allegations in the complaint." Savage v. Glendale Union High Sch., Dist. No. 205, Maricopa Cty., 343 F.3d 1036, 1040 n.2 (9th Cir. 2003).

Before this court is a factual attack. In a factual attack on jurisdiction, a court "may review evidence beyond the complaint without converting the motion to dismiss into a motion for summary judgment." Wood v. City of San Diego, 678 F.3d 1075, 1083 n.8 (9th Cir. 2012) (quoting Meyer, 373 F.3d at 1039). In such a challenge, "[t]he court need not presume the truthfulness of the plaintiff's allegations." Id. "Once the moving party has converted the motion to dismiss into a factual motion by presenting affidavits or other evidence properly brought before the court, the party opposing the [*7] motion must furnish affidavits or other evidence necessary to satisfy its burden of establishing subject matter jurisdiction." Savage, 343 F.3d at 1039 n.2.

B. Rule 12(b)(6) Motion To Dismiss For Failure To State A Claim.

HN3[] Under Rule 12(b)(6), a complaint may be dismissed for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. The court's review is generally limited to the contents of a complaint. Sprewell v. Golden State Warriors, 266 F.3d 979, 988 (9th Cir. 2001); Campanelli v. Bockrath, 100 F.3d 1476, 1479 (9th Cir. 1996). If matters outside the pleadings are considered, the Rule 12(b)(6) motion is treated as one for summary judgment. Keams v. Tempe Tech. Inst., Inc., 110 F.3d 44, 46 (9th Cir. 1997); Anderson v. Angelone, 86 F.3d 932, 934 (9th Cir. 1996). However, the court may take judicial notice of and consider matters of public record without converting a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss into a motion for summary judgment. Lee v. City of Los Angeles, 250 F.3d 668, 688 (9th Cir. 2001); Emrich v. Touche Ross & Co., 846 F.2d 1190, 1198 (9th Cir. 1988).

HN4[] On a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss, all allegations of material fact are taken as true and construed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. Fed'n of African Am. Contractors, 96 F.3d at 1207. However, conclusory allegations of law, unwarranted deductions of fact, and unreasonable inferences are insufficient to defeat a motion to dismiss. Sprewell, 266 F.3d at 988; In re Syntex Corp. Sec. Litig., 95 F.3d 922, 926 (9th Cir. 1996). Dismissal under Rule 12(b)(6) may be based on either "lack of a cognizable legal theory or the absence of sufficient facts alleged under a cognizable legal theory." Balistreri v. Pacifica Police Dep't, 901 F.2d 696, 699 (9th Cir. 1988) (citing Robertson v. Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc., 749 F.2d 530, 533-34 (9th Cir. 1984)).

HN5[] To survive a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss, "[f]actual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative [*8] level, on the assumption that all the allegations in the complaint are true (even if doubtful in fact)." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007) (citations omitted); accord Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) ("[T]he pleading standard . . . does not require detailed factual allegations, but it demands more than an unadorned, the-defendant-unlawfully-harmed-me accusation." (internal quotation marks omitted)). "[A] plaintiff's obligation to provide the grounds of his entitlement to relief requires more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555 (internal quotation marks omitted). A complaint must "state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Id. at 570. "A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678.

C. Rule 12(f) Motion To Strike.

HN6[] Under Rule 12(f), the "court may strike from a pleading an insufficient defense or any redundant, immaterial, impertinent, or scandalous matter," on its own or upon a motion made by a party. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(f).

Redundant matter is an allegation that includes a "needless repetition of other averments or [is] foreign to the issue." Sligher v. Prospect Mortg., LLC, 789 F. Supp. 2d 1212, 1216 (E.D. Cal. 2011) (citations omitted); see also *Walker-Cook v. Integrated Health Res., LLC, Civ. No. 12-00146 ACK-RLP, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 137179, 2012 WL 4461159, at 1-2 (D. Haw. Aug. 10, 2012) [*9] . Immaterial matter has "no essential or important relationship to the claim for relief or the defenses being pleaded." Fantasy, Inc. v. Fogerty, 984 F.2d 1524, 1527 (9th Cir. 1993) (citations omitted), rev'd on other grounds, 510 U.S. 517, 114 S. Ct. 1023, 127 L. Ed. 2d 455 (1994). Impertinent matter "consists of statements that do not pertain, and are not necessary, to the issues in question." Id. Scandalous matter "improperly casts a derogatory light on someone, most typically on a party to the action." Guerrero v. Halliburton Energy Servs., Inc., 231 F. Supp. 3d 797, 802 (E.D. Cal. 2017) (quoting Germaine Music v. Universal Songs of Polygram, 275 F. Supp. 2d 1288, 1300 (D. Nev. 2003)). The purpose of a Rule 12(f) motion is to "avoid the expenditure of time and money that must arise from litigating spurious issues by dispensing with those issues prior to trial." Sidney-Vinstein v. A.H. Robins Co., 697 F.2d 880, 885 (9th Cir. 1983). A Rule 12(f) motion to strike is a "severe measure and is generally viewed with disfavor." United States v. 729.773 Acres of Land, 531 F. Supp. 967, 971 (D. Haw. 1982); see also *Sky-Med, Inc. v. Skydiving Sch., Inc., Civ. No. 13-00193 DKW/BMK, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5901, 2014 WL 198801, at 2 (D. Haw. Jan. 16, 2014). Because of this, a motion to strike is "not normally granted unless prejudice would result to the movant from the denial of the motion." 729.773 Acres of Land, 531 F. Supp. at 971. In considering a motion to strike, the court "views the challenged pleadings in the light most favorable to the plaintiffs." Wailua Assocs. v. Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co., 183 F.R.D. 550, 554 (D. Haw. 1998) (citing Hoeft v. Tucson Unified Sch. Dist., 967 F.2d 1298, 1301 (9th Cir. 1992)).

IV. ANALYSIS.

A. Defendants' Countermotion To Strike.

Defendants' countermotion seeks to the strike the following matters included [*10] in Admor's motion to dismiss:

- Reference to: https://dqydj.com/ income-percentile-calculator/;
- References to exhibits that were made part of the record during the evidentiary hearing on Plaintiff's Motion for Preliminary Injunction that was heard April 16, 2019;
- References to the declarations of Mr. Lessary, Drew Santos, Rogene Gaspar; and
- Declaration of Mark G. Valencia [part of ECF No. 55] and Exhibit "A" attached thereto [ECF No. 55-1].

ECF No. 67, PageID # 1285. Defendants argue that these matters are outside the pleadings, are immaterial, and should not be considered by the court in deciding Admor's motion to dismiss. Id. at 1284-85. Concluding that the matters should not be considered in deciding a Rule 12(b)(6) motion, the court grants in part Defendants' countermotion to strike. However, because the court may properly consider evidence beyond the complaint under Rule 12(b)(1) when deciding whether an issue is moot, the court denies the countermotion with respect to evidence relevant to Admor's mootness arguments.

1. Online "Income Percentile Calculator."

Admor cited a website as support for the following sentence in its motion to dismiss: "This case involves an employee, Defendant Robert Sonny Lessary, who was unsatisfied [*11] with earning more than $200,000 in annual compensation, or more than about 97 percent of all working Americans." ECF No. 55, PageID # 1017. The website is a personal finance and investing blog called "DQYDJ," and the web page referenced by Admor is titled "Income Percentile Calculator for the United States in 2018." See PK, Income Percentile Calculator for the United States in 2018, DQYDJ, https://dqydj.com/income-percentile-calculator (last visited Jul. 26, 2019). Lessary's income percentile has "no essential or important relationship" to any arguments in Admor's motion to dismiss and the relief sought therein. See Fantasy, 984 F.2d at 1527. The court strikes the website as immaterial to the motion to dismiss.

Admor requests that the court take judicial notice of the website as a "matter of public record." ECF No. 68, PageID # 1296. HN7[] "[D]ocuments attached to the complaint, documents incorporated by reference in the complaint, or matters of judicial notice" may be considered "without converting the motion to dismiss into a motion for summary judgment." United States v. Ritchie, 342 F.3d 903, 907 (9th Cir. 2003) (citations omitted). A court "may take judicial notice of 'matters of public record,'" but it "may not take judicial notice of a fact that is 'subject to reasonable [*12] dispute.'" Lee, 250 F.3d at 689 (quoting MGIC Indem. Corp. v. Weisman, 803 F.2d 500, 504 (9th Cir. 1986); Fed. R. Evid. 201(b)).

HN8[] Typical matters of public record include documents filed with courts and records of government agencies. See Dent v. Holder, 627 F.3d 365, 371-72 (9th Cir. 2010); United States ex rel. Robinson Rancheria Citizens Council v. Borneo, Inc., 971 F.2d 244, 248 (9th Cir. 1992). This web page was written by "PK," who describes himself as someone who "founded DQYDJ in 2009 to educate and learn from others in finance and investing. By day he writes prose and code in Silicon Valley." This description does not convince the court that the website is akin to court documents or government records. The information on the website is subject to reasonable dispute, and the court declines to take judicial notice of it.

2. Evidence from the Hearing on Admor's Motion for Preliminary Injunction.

In its arguments under Rule 12(b)(6), Admor references exhibits and declarations that were submitted as evidence during the evidentiary hearing on Admor's motion for preliminary injunction on April 16, 2019. See, e.g., ECF No. 55, PageID #s 1018-20. As stated above, HN9[] in deciding a Rule 12(b)(6) motion, the court's review is generally limited to the complaint, but a court may consider documents attached to the complaint, documents incorporated by reference in the complaint, or matters of judicial notice. Evidence from the April 16 evidentiary hearing does not fall into any [*13] of these categories and therefore will not be considered. The Counterclaim references Admor's motion for preliminary injunction, but does not reference any exhibits or declarations submitted in support of that motion.

Admor states that "the Court may consider matters outside of the pleadings, convert the Motion to Dismiss to one for summary judgment, provide Lessary with a reasonable opportunity to submit evidence showing past commissions were not in fact paid, the COBRA notice has not in fact been provided, Lessary has in fact suffered out-of-pocket losses as a result of the COBRA notice, and that lack of notice was intentional." ECF No. 68, PageID # 1297. It is unclear whether Admor is requesting that the court convert its motion to dismiss into a motion for summary judgment or merely reminding the court that it has the ability to do so.

The court sees no reason to convert Admor's motion to dismiss into one for summary judgment. Admor argues that, under Rule 12(b)(6), the Counterclaim fails to state a claim upon which can be granted. Evidence from subsequent proceedings is unnecessary for the court to determine whether or not the Counterclaim states a claim. Moreover, Admor is free to file a motion [*14] for summary judgment if it so chooses. The court notes that the deadline for the filing of dispositive motions is November 6, 2019, which is several months from now. ECF No. 27, PageID # 454.

3. Declaration of Mark G. Valencia and the Attached Exhibit.

Admor attaches to its motion a declaration of its counsel. ECF No. 55. The declaration attaches Exhibit A, which is a letter dated April 25, 2019, from Admor's counsel to Defendants' counsel. ECF No. 55-1. The letter discusses Defendants' claims that Admor failed to pay Lessary commissions and wages and that Admor violated COBRA notice requirements.

HN10[] With a Rule 12(b)(6) motion, "[d]eclarations can be used to bring materials that are properly considered to the attention of the court." Gerritsen v. Warner Bros. Entm't Inc., 112 F. Supp. 3d 1011, 1020 (C.D. Cal. 2015) (citing In re Silicon Graphics, Inc. Sec. Litig., 970 F. Supp. 746, 758-59 (N.D. Cal. 1997)). However, courts "regularly decline to consider declarations and exhibits submitted in support of or opposition to a motion to dismiss . . . if they constitute evidence not referenced in the complaint or not a proper subject of judicial notice." Id. at 1021 (citing City of Royal Oak Ret. Sys. v. Juniper Networks, Inc., 880 F. Supp. 2d 1045, 1060 (N.D. Cal. 2012)) (other citations omitted). The declaration and exhibit attached to Admor's motion to dismiss were not referenced in the Counterclaim and are not "matters of public record" to be judicially noticed. The court [*15] declines to consider these attachments with respect to Admor's Rule 12(b)(6) arguments.

However, the declaration and exhibit are directly relevant to Admor's mootness arguments under Rule 12(b)(1). Admor argues that Defendants' claims of failure to pay and insufficient COBRA notification have become moot, as evidenced by the letter. ECF No. 55, PageID #s 1028-31. In addressing a factual attack on jurisdiction under Rule 12(b)(1), a court "may review evidence beyond the complaint without converting the motion to dismiss into a motion for summary judgment." Wood, 678 F.3d at 1083 n.8. Therefore, the court considers these attachments in determining whether Defendants' failure to pay and COBRA notification claims are moot.

B. Admor's Motion To Dismiss.

1. Count I: Unfair Competition.

In Count I of the Counterclaim, Defendants assert a claim of unfair competition under section 480-2 of Hawaii Revised Statutes. ECF No. 24-1, PageID # 435. Admor's Complaint seeks to prohibit Defendants from working with all of Admor's customers and vendors. Admor argues that Defendants' unfair competition claim fails as a matter of law because "the mere act of filing the Verified Complaint and seeking relief allowed by law" is not unfair competition. See ECF No. 55, PageID # 1021.

HN11[] Section 480-2(a) provides that "[u]nfair methods [*16] of competition and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in the conduct of any trade or commerce are unlawful." The Hawaii Supreme Court has explained that "HRS § 480-2, as its federal counterpart in the [Federal Trade Commission] Act, was constructed in broad language in order to constitute a flexible tool to stop and prevent fraudulent, unfair or deceptive business practices for the protection of both honest consumers and honest businesspersons." Haw. Comm. Fed. Credit Union v. Keka, 94 Haw. 213, 228, 11 P.3d 1, 16 (2000) (citation and alteration omitted)). Only "a consumer, the attorney general or the direct of the office of consumer protection" may bring a claim of unfair or deceptive acts or practices. HRS § 480-2(e). However, "any person may bring a claim of unfair methods of competition [("UMOC")] based upon conduct that could also support a claim of unfair or deceptive acts or practices as long as the nature of the competition is sufficiently alleged in the complaint." Haw. Med. Ass'n v. Haw. Med. Serv. Ass'n, Inc., 113 Haw. 77, 113, 148 P.3d 1179, 1215 (2006).

Defendants bring a UMOC claim, which requires proof of "(1) a violation of HRS Chapter 480; (2) an injury to the plaintiff's business or property that flows from the defendant's conduct that negatively affects competition or harms fair competition; and (3) proof of damages." Field, Tr. Of Estate Of Aloha Sports Inc. v. Nat. Collegiate Athletic Ass'n, 143 Haw. 362, 372, 431 P.3d 735, 745 (2018) (citing Gurrobat v. HTH Corp., 133 Haw. 1, 21, 323 P.3d 792, 812 (2014)).

Admor's arguments go to [*17] the first two elements. The court concludes that Defendants sufficiently plead the first element, but not the second.

a. Unfair Act.

The first element of a UMOC claim requires proof of an unfair or deceptive act, and Defendants argue that Admor committed an unfair act. See ECF No. 67, PageID #s 1275-76. HN12[] An act is unfair when "[1] it offends established public policy and [2] when the practice is immoral, unethical, oppressive, unscrupulous or [3] substantially injurious to consumers." Hungate v. Law Office of David B. Rosen, 139 Haw. 394, 411, 391 P.3d 1, 18 (2017) (quoting Keka, 94 Haw. at 228, 11 P.3d at 16) (alterations in original). All three factors need not be alleged to assert that an act is unfair. See id. ("Hungate need not allege that Deutsche Bank's actions meet all three of these factors to assert an unfair act or practice."). An unfair act does not require violation of a statute or satisfaction of the elements of an analogous claim. See Field, 143 Haw. at 373, 431 P.3d at 746 (concluding that plaintiff need not "prove a claim for tortious interference with prospective business advantage in order to demonstrate a HRS § 480-2(a) violation" because "the evaluation of whether particular, non-statutorily-enumerated conduct is unfair is simply a question of fact that does not require incorporating the elements of an analogous claim").

Admor argues [*18] that the Counterclaim does not plead an unfair or deceptive act because Admor's Complaint "credibly accuses [Defendants] of trade secret misappropriation, breach of the duty of loyalty, and unfair competition," and Admor was permitted to seek an injunction of Defendants' unlawful practices. See ECF No. 55, PageID #s 1023-26. Admor is correct that its unfair competition and trade misappropriation claims against Defendants allow for injunctive relief. Section 480-13(a)(2) of Hawaii Revised Statutes provides that "any person who is injured in the person's business or property by reason of anything forbidden or declared unlawful by this chapter . . . [m]ay bring proceedings to enjoin the unlawful practices[.]" HRS § 480-13(a)(2). The Defend Trade Secrets Act provides, "In a civil action brought under this subsection with respect to the misappropriation of a trade secret, a court may . . . grant an injunction . . . to prevent any action or threatened misappropriation . . . [.]" 18 U.S.C. § 1836(b)(3)(A)(i).

However, Defendants are not alleging that Admor committed an unfair act by filing claims and seeking to prevent Defendants from engaging in unlawful practices or misappropriation. The Counterclaim more narrowly alleges that, at the time the Complaint was filed, Admor (1) knew [*19] that Lessary had not conducted any business with 1,900 of Admor's 2,042 customers and 400 of Admor's 423 vendors, (2) was unaware of whether Lessary had misappropriated or engaged in inappropriate conduct with any of those customers and vendors, and (3) believed that preventing Lessary from working with 2,042 customers and 423 vendors would limit Defendants' ability to compete with Admor. See ECF No. 24-1, PageID #s 435-36. The Counterclaim further alleges that there was no noncompete, nonsolicitation, or nonacceptance-of-business contract in place. See id. at 431-32. In other words, Defendants allege that Admor attempted to limit competition by prohibiting Defendants from lawfully doing business with over 2,000 customers and vendors.[1]

There does not appear to be Hawaii case law directly addressing the issues presented here. Defendants argue that Admor's actions offend public policy because the Hawaii Legislature, through the passage of chapter 480 of Hawaii Revised Statutes, "has recognized a strong public policy in favor of competition." ECF No. 67, PageID # 1278 (quoting Cieri v. Leticia Query Realty, Inc., 80 Haw. 54, 59, 905 P.2d 29, 34 (1995) ("The genesis of Hawai'i's consumer protection statute is in federal antitrust law. Although the federal arsenal of antitrust laws is comprised of several differently [*20] worded statutes of varying scope that have generated volumes of case law, all of the acts have a common focus on trade, commerce, and business, and all share a concern for the preservation of unrestrained economic competition and free trade." (emphasis added))). Defendants also argue that Admor's actions "have been substantially injurious to consumers because they have caused Mr. Lessary to refrain from expanding Hi[]coustix's business, thereby limiting the pool of providers from whom consumers may obtain products." Id. at 1280.

Importantly, HN13[] "the question of whether a practice constitutes an unfair or deceptive trade practice is ordinarily a question of fact." Hungate, 139 Haw. at 410, 391 P.3d at 17 (quoting Balthazar v. Verizon Haw., Inc., 109 Haw. 69, 72 n.4, 123 P.3d 194, 197 n.4 (2005)). It is therefore up to the fact-finder to determine whether Admor committed an unfair act by seeking to prohibit Defendants from working with customers and vendors with whom Defendants never did business and never did anything unlawful. Defendants' unfair competition claim does not fail to allege an unfair act as a matter of law.

[1] Admor states that "the request for injunctive relief has been limited to precluding Defendants from serving contractors and vendors that were actually misappropriated. This was based on information learned after the Complaint and Motion for Preliminary Injunction were filed." ECF No. 55, PageID # 1027. Admor narrowed the scope of its requested preliminary injunction in its Proposed Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law for the preliminary injunction proceedings. However, Admor has not amended its Complaint. Therefore, the scope of the permanent injunction sought in the Complaint remains unchanged.

Defendants also argue that "'an unfair act' is committed whenever 'the unfair method is being employed under circumstances which involved flagrant oppression of the weak by the strong,'" and Admor, a large [*21] company, has flagrantly oppressed Lessary, an individual. ECF No. 67, PageID #s 1276-77 (quoting Cunha v. Ward Foods, Inc., 804 F.2d 1418, 1433 (9th Cir. 1986)). The "flagrant oppression" standard does not appear to apply to the first element of a UMOC claim. Cunha quoted Ailetcher v. Beneficial Finance Company of Hawaii, 2 Haw. App. 301, 632 P.2d 1071 (1981), which was abrogated by Hac v. University of Hawai'i, 102 Haw. 92, 73 P.3d 46 (2003). Ailetcher had quoted Ai v. Frank Huff Agency, Ltd., 61 Haw. 607, 607 P.2d 1304 (1980), which was overruled by Robert's Hawaii School Bus, Inc. v. Laupahoehoe Transportation Company, Inc., 91 Haw. 224, 982 P.2d 853 (1999), which, in turn, was superseded by statute.

In Ai v. Frank Huff Agency, Ltd., the Hawaii Supreme Court applied the "flagrant oppression" standard to determine whether plaintiffs had standing to sue for damages under the "public interest requirement" in section 480-13 of Hawaii Revised Statutes. See 61 Haw. at 614-15, 607 P.2d at 1309. Section 480-13 has since been amended, and no longer includes the public interest requirement. See HRS § 480-13; Davis v. Four Seasons Hotel Ltd., 122 Haw. 423, 441, 228 P.3d 303, 321 (2010) (explaining that Ai addressed the "now-repealed public interest requirement"). The Hawaii Supreme Court has not mentioned the "flagrant oppression" standard in its recent cases analyzing the first element of a UMOC claim. See, e.g., Field, 143 Haw. at 373, 431 P.3d at 746; Hungate, 139 Haw. at 410-11, 391 P.3d at 17-18. In any event, because this court concludes that Defendants sufficiently allege an unfair act, the court need not decide this issue.

b. Nature of Competition.

HN14[] The second element of a UMOC claim requires the plaintiff to demonstrate both "an injury in fact to his or her business or property" and the "nature of competition." Field, 143 Haw. at 372-73, 431 P.3d at 745-46 (citing Gurrobat v. HTH Corp., 133 Haw. 1, 21, 323 P.3d 792, 812 (2014)) [*22] . The nature of competition element is met "by demonstrating how the defendant's conduct negatively affects competition or harms fair competition." Id. at 373, 431 P.3d at 746 (citation omitted). The alleged conduct must harm "competition itself, not merely a competitor." *Sky-Med, Inc. v. Skydiving Sch., Inc., Civ. No. 13-00193 DKW/BMK, 2014 WL 12600271, at 3 (D. Haw. May 1, 2014).

Admor argues that, although Defendants have alleged harm to themselves, they have not alleged sufficient facts going to the nature of competition. ECF No. 55, PageID #s 1026-28. According to Admor, the Counterclaim's only allegation going to the nature of competition is the following:

> 70. Admor's actions have reduced competition in the market by limiting Mr. Lessary's and Hicoustix's ability to compete.

Id. at 1027 (citing ECF No. 24-1, PageID # 439).

Admor ignores several other factual allegations in the Counterclaim. The Counterclaim alleges that Admor's actions have caused Defendants to refrain from expanding their product offerings and from obtaining warehouse space, and have prevented Defendants from being able to stock and sell various products. ECF No. 24-1, PageID # 439. The Counterclaim goes on to allege that "[a]s a result of Admor's actions," "Mr. Lessary has greatly limited the amount of sales of Service Partners products, which generally require stock in a warehouse space," and "contractors have refrained [*23] from conducting business with Mr. Lessary and Hicoustix." Id. at 440.

Whether these allegations are sufficient to allege the nature of competition is a close call. Although the Counterclaim can be fairly read as alleging that the contractors and vendors that work with Hicoustix were harmed by Admor's conduct, it is unclear whether harm to customers alone can satisfy the nature of competition element. Other courts have focused on the presence of other competitors in the market when determining whether conduct has harmed competition. See *Sky-Med, 2014 WL 12600271, at 2 ("Although Plaintiff alleges that Defendant's goal is to put Plaintiff out of business, the elimination of a single competitor does not establish anticompetitive effect."); *GSI Tech. v. United Memories, Inc., Case No. 5:13-cv-01081-PSG, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 54371, 2014 WL 1572358, at 3 (N.D. Cal. Apr. 18, 2014) (HN15[] "[T]he elimination of a single competitor, standing alone, does not prove anticompetitive effect. Impact upon the market must be proven." (quoting Kaplan v. Burroughs Corp., 611 F.2d 286, 291 (9th Cir. 1979))).

The Counterclaim does not describe Hicoustix's or Admor's competitors or the nature of the market affected. At the hearing on July 1, 2019, Defendants' counsel explained that, given the limited market for the products sold by Admor and Hicoustix, the elimination of Hicoustix would essentially [*24] create a monopoly for Admor. This court cannot glean that from the Counterclaim, and Defendants' counsel conceded at the hearing that that allegation was not set forth in the Counterclaim. As a result, the court dismisses Defendants' unfair competition claim, but grants leave to amend to provide additional facts regarding the nature of competition.

2. Count II: Failure to Pay Wages/Commissions.

Count II of the Counterclaim asserts a claim under chapter 388 of Hawaii Revised Statutes based on Admor's alleged failure to pay Lessary the full amount of wages and commissions that he was due. ECF No. 24-1, PageID #s 440-42. The Counterclaim alleges that "Admor has failed to pay commissions/wages to Mr. Lessary in excess of $16,000," and that "[p]ursuant to Haw. Rev. Stat. § 388-10, Admor is liable to Mr. Lessary 'in addition to the wages legally proven to be due, for a sum equal to the amount of unpaid wages and interest at a rate of six per cent per year from the date that the wages were due.'" Id. at 442 (quoting HRS § 388-10(a)(1)).

Admor argues that this claim is moot because, after receiving the Counterclaim, "Admor reviewed Sonny's commission schedule, made a correction, and delivered a check for the full amount of his commissions." ECF No. 55, PageID # 1028. In the letter [*25] accompanying the check, Admor stated that it had "determined that an unintentional error was made in the calculation of Mr. Lessary's commissions," and enclosed "a check payable to Mr. Lessary in the amount of $18,886.90, along with the supporting calculations." ECF No. 55-1, PageID # 1036.

HN16[] "The rule in federal cases is that an actual controversy must be extant at all stages of review, not merely at the time the complaint is filed." Steffel v. Thompson, 415 U.S. 452, 459 n.10, 94 S. Ct. 1209, 39 L. Ed. 2d 505 (1974). A case becomes moot "when the issues presented are no longer 'live' or the parties lack a legally cognizable interest in the outcome." Murphy v. Hunt, 455 U.S. 478, 481, 102 S. Ct. 1181, 71 L. Ed. 2d 353 (1982) (quoting U.S. Parole Comm'n v. Geraghty, 445 U.S. 388, 396, 100 S. Ct. 1202, 63 L. Ed. 2d 479 (1980). "The basic question in determining mootness is whether there is a present controversy as to which effective relief can be granted." Bayer v. Neiman Marcus Group, Inc., 861 F.3d 853, (9th Cir. 2017) (quoting Ruiz v. City of Santa Maria, 160 F.3d 543, 549 (9th Cir. 1998)).

Even if Admor paid Lessary the amount owed to him, effective relief may still be granted. Section 388-10(a) of Hawaii Revised Statutes provides:

> (a) Civil. Any employer who fails to pay wages in accordance with this chapter without equitable justification or violates this chapter or the administrative rules adopted under this chapter shall be liable:
> > (1) To the employee, in addition to the wages legally proven to be due, for a sum equal to the amount of unpaid wages and interest at a rate of six per cent per year [*26] from the date that the wages were due; and
> > (2) For a penalty of not less than $500 or $100 for each violation, whichever is greater. The penalty shall be deposited into the labor law enforcement special fund.

In addition to the wages due, Lessary may be entitled to additional damages such as interest. Thus, the claim that Admor failed to pay Lessary commission and wages under chapter 388 of Hawaii Revised Statutes is not moot.

3. Count III: Violation of COBRA's Notice Requirements.

Finally, Count III asserts a claim against Admor under COBRA based on Admor's alleged failure to "provide Mr. Lessary with any COBRA paperwork or information following his termination." ECF No. 24-1, PageID #s 442-43.

The Counterclaim alleges that "Admor is liable to Mr. Lessary and each of his three minor children pursuant to [the Employment Retirement Income Security Act ("ERISA")], 29 U.S.C. § 1132(c)(1)(A), 29 U.S.C. § 1166 and 29 C.F.R. § 2575.502c-1 for civil penalties of $110 per day, per person, for each day that Admor failed to provide each participant and beneficiary with notice of their right to elect continuing coverage pursuant to . . . 29 U.S.C. § 1161(a)." ECF No. 24-1, PageID # 445.

Admor argues that this claim is moot, that the Counterclaim fails to allege facts going to Lessary's mental anguish, and [*27] that Lessary lacks standing over the claims of his children. ECF No. 55, PageID #s 1029-31.

At the hearing on July 1, 2019, Defendants' counsel conceded several aspects of the COBRA notification claim. Defendants' counsel explained that Defendants now seek only statutory penalties, and no longer seek damages for medical expenses or mental anguish. Defendants also concede that Lessary lacks standing over his children's claims.

The court concludes that the claim is not moot, but that the Counterclaim fails to alleged sufficient facts going to Defendants' claim for statutory penalties.

a. Mootness.

Admor argues that Defendants' COBRA claim is moot because "Admor has agreed to pay for any unpaid medical expenses incurred due to the failure to receive a timely COBRA notice." ECF No. 55, PageID # 1029. In support, Admor cites the letter dated April 25, 2019, from Admor's counsel to Defendants' counsel, which states that "Kaiser has recently sent a COBRA notice to Mr. Lessary[,] and Admor intends to pay any medical expenses incurred by Mr. Lessary as a result of not previously receiving the COBRA notice." ECF No. 55-1, PageID # 1036.

Relief may still be granted on Defendants' COBRA claim. HN17[] The [*28] notice requirements for continuing health insurance coverage are set forth in 29 U.S.C. § 1166, and, with respect to those requirements, ERISA provides:

> Any administrator (A) who fails to meet the requirements of paragraph (1) or (4) of section 1166 of this title . . . with respect to a participant or beneficiary, or (B) who fails or refuses to comply with a request for any information which such administrator is required by this subchapter to furnish to a participant or beneficiary (unless such failure or refusal results from matters reasonably beyond the control of the administrator) by mailing the material requested to the last known address of the requesting participant or beneficiary within 30 days after such request may in the court's discretion be personally liable to such participant or beneficiary in the amount of up to $100 a day from the date of such failure or refusal, and the court may in its discretion order such other relief as it deems proper.

29 U.S.C. § 1132(c)(1) (emphasis added); see also 29 C.F.R. § 2575.502c-1 (increasing the maximum statutory penalty from $100 per day to $110 per day for violations occurring after July 29, 1997). At this stage in the proceedings, the court cannot determine whether an award of these statutory penalties is warranted [*29] and, if so, what the amount of such penalties should be. As a result, this claim is not moot.

b. Statutory Penalties.

HN18[] "Whether to impose statutory penalties [under § 1132] and the amount of those penalties (up to $110 a day) is discretionary." Hemphill v. Estate of Ryskamp, 619 F. Supp. 2d 954, 975 (E.D. Cal. 2008). "Appropriate factors to be considered include [1] bad faith or intentional misconduct on the part of the administrator, [2] the length of the delay, [3] the number of requests made and documents withheld, and [4] the existence of any prejudice to the participant or beneficiary." Moon v. Rush, 69 F. Supp. 3d 1035, 1046 (E.D. Cal. 2014) (quoting Hemphill, 619 F. Supp. 2d at 967) (modification omitted). None of these factors is dispositive. Honey v. Dignity Health, 27 F. Supp. 3d 1113, 1124 (D. Nev. 2014) ("The absence or presence of one or even multiple factors is not dispositive.").

"Section 1132 penalties are 'meant to be in the nature of punitive damages, designed more for the purpose of punishing the violator than compensating the participant or beneficiary.'" Moon, 69 F. Supp. 3d at 1046 (quoting Scott v. Suncoast Beverage Sales, Ltd., 295 F.3d 1223, 1232 (11th Cir. 2002)).

The Counterclaim does not allege that Admor's conduct stemmed from bad faith or intentional misconduct. The Counterclaim states that "Mr. Lessary, individually and/or through his legal counsel, requested COBRA paperwork or information following his termination," and that "[t]o date, Admor has failed to provide the requested COBRA paperwork or [*30] information despite requests for same." ECF No. 24-1, PageID # 444. Nothing in the Counterclaim suggests that Lessary was prejudiced by the delay. In short, the Counterclaim does not allege facts demonstrating Defendants' entitlement to statutory penalties.

The COBRA notification claim is dismissed. It is not clear that amendment of the Counterclaim would be futile, and this court allows Defendants to amend their Counterclaim.

V. CONCLUSION.

The court grants Defendants' countermotion to strike, except with respect to material relevant to Admor's mootness arguments. The court grants Admor's motion to dismiss in part, dismissing the unfair competition and COBRA notification claims. The remainder of Admor's motion is denied.

Defendants are granted leave to amend their Counterclaim consistent with this order. That is, Defendants may file amended unfair competition and COBRA notification claims, and may add other claims. This document must be complete in itself; it may not incorporate by reference anything previously filed with this court. Any amended counterclaim must be filed no later than August 12, 2019.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Opinion

MARTINOTTI, DISTRICT JUDGE

Before this Court is a Motion to Dismiss filed by Defendant REV Ambulance Group Orlando, Inc. d/b/a McCoy Miller Emergency Vehicles, Marque Emergency Vehicles, and Road Rescue Emergency Vehicles ("REV" or "Defendant") seeking to dismiss Plaintiff First Priority Emergency Vehicles, Inc.'s ("First Priority" or "Plaintiff") Amended Complaint pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6). (ECF No. 18.) First Priority filed an Opposition to Defendants' Motion to Dismiss (ECF No. 24.) Also before this Court is First Priority's Cross-Motion for Leave to Amend its antitrust claims. (ECF No. 25.) REV filed an Opposition to First Priority's Cross-Motion for Leave to Amend. (ECF No. 30.) Having reviewed the submissions filed in connection with the motion and having declined [*2] to hold oral argument pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 78(b), for the reasons set forth below and for good cause appearing, Defendant's Motion to Dismiss is GRANTED IN PART and DENIED IN PART and First Priority's Cross-Motion for Leave to Amend the Amended Complaint is GRANTED.

I. BACKGROUND

A. Factual Background

For the purposes of this Motion to Dismiss, the Court accepts the factual allegations in the Amended Complaint as true and draws all inferences in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. See Phillips v. Cty. of Allegheny, 515 F.3d 224, 228 (3d Cir. 2008). Furthermore, the Court also considers any "document integral to or explicitly relied upon in the complaint." In re Burlington Coat Factory Sec. Litig., 114 F.3d 1410, 1426 (3d Cir. 1997) (quoting Shaw v. Dig. Equip. Corp., 82 F.3d 1194, 1220 (1st Cir. 1996)).

First Priority is a New Jersey corporation with its principal place of business in Manchester, New Jersey. (ECF No. 17 ¶ 6.) REV is a Florida corporation with its principal place of business in Florida. (Id. ¶ 7.) REV does business under a variety of names, including McCoy Miller Emergency Vehicles ("McCoy Miller"), Marque Emergency Vehicles ("Marque"), Road Rescue Emergency Vehicles ("Road Rescue"), and Wheeled Coach Vehicles ("Wheeled Coach"), among others. (Id.)

First Priority "provides a range of expertise that encompasses design, manufacturing, uplifting, service, fleet management and infrastructure [*3] installment." (Id. ¶ 11.) For over twenty years, First Priority has also sold and serviced new and remounted ambulance vehicles, remounted ambulances, and parts for ambulances. (Id. ¶ 12.) There are three "major categories" of ambulance vehicles in the United States: Type I is based upon a heavy truck chassis and is used primarily for advanced life support and rescue work; Type II is a van-based ambulance with few modifications, except for a raised roof; and Type III is a van chassis that has a custom made rear compartment with the same use as Type I ambulances. (Id. ¶ 13.) REV owns seven of the twenty-one Type I, II, and III ambulance brands marketed in the United States and "controls more than 50% of the [United States] market for new ambulances." (Id. ¶ 14.)

On September 12, 2002, First Priority entered into a written agreement with Road Rescue, the Road Rescue Dealer Agreement ("RR Agreement"). (Id. ¶ 15.) The RR Agreement had a term of one year, expiring on October 1, 2003, and was renewable "for one year periods thereafter by written agreement of both parties at the time of annual review." (Id. ¶ 16.) The RR Agreement granted First Priority the right to sell Road Rescue-branded [*4] products throughout New Jersey, requiring First Priority to use its "best efforts" to meet or exceed certain sales goals. (Id. ¶¶ 16-17.) Specifically, the RR Agreement required First Priority to: aggressively promote, market, and sell the products; use its best efforts to manufacture and deliver Defendant's products; purchase a demonstrator vehicle; establish and maintain a place of business and a sales office in New Jersey; and maintain all applicable licenses and insurance, among other things. (Id. ¶ 17.) This relationship has continued "despite the fact the parties have never prepared a formal written renewal of the RR Agreement." (Id. ¶ 18.) Additionally, First Priority contends that, on multiple occasions, representatives from First Priority and Road Rescue "discussed their mutual understanding" that First Priority would remain a dealer of Defendant's products so long as it performed adequately and Defendant "would provide [First Priority] a reasonable time to cure the claimed deficiency before terminating the relationship." (Id. ¶ 19.)

On October 10, 2010, Road Rescue assigned its rights and obligations under the RR Agreement to Wheeled Coach. (Id. ¶ 22.)[1] On March 30, 2011, First [*5] Priority and SJC Industries Corporation ("SJ Industries") entered into a Dealer Sales and Service Agreement (the "SJC Agreement") for an ambulance dealership franchise that included the right to sell ambulances in New Jersey. (Id. ¶ 24.)[2] On May 8, 2013, SJC Industries assigned its rights and obligations under the SJC Agreement to Wheeled Coach. (Id. ¶¶ 26.)[3]

[1] On or about December 3, 2015, Wheeled Coach changed its name to REV Ambulance Group Orlando, Inc. (ECF No. 17 ¶ 22.)

First Priority alleges that REV provided it with "poor quality" vehicles. (Id. ¶¶ 28-41.) Specifically, First Priority alleges: in 2012, Brick Township purchased two Marque-branded ambulances from REV but refused delivery because the vehicles "did not meet specifications" thereby requiring Brick Township to purchase vehicles from a competing brand (id. ¶ 29); in 2013, a client, Fairview, claimed it was dissatisfied with the ambulance vehicles due to electrical issues (id. ¶ 30); in 2013, a client, Hopatcong, was forced to purchase a demonstrator vehicle because of excessive delays in production (id. ¶ 31); in 2013, a client experienced an electrical fire in the Road Rescue vehicle and has since refused to purchase REV products (id. ¶ 32); in 2013, a client, Beach Haven, "changed its entire fleet from [] Road Rescue to a different [*6] brand due to numerous quality issues" (id. ¶ 33); between 2012 and 2013, a client, University Hospital, grew dissatisfied due to delays in production and delivery and has since refused to do business with REV (id. ¶ 34); a client, Maplewood, refuses to purchase Road Rescue products due to their poor quality (id. ¶ 35); clients South Orange, Roxbury, and Lakewood EMS have each grown so dissatisfied with Road Rescue vehicles that they refuse to purchase any products from REV (id. ¶¶ 36-38); in 2015, REV refused to honor a warranty with a client, Hightstown, which is now unlikely to do any further business with REV (id. ¶ 39); and between 2016 and 2017, clients Ocean Township and Atlantic Ambulance purchased vehicles that "experienced quality issues" to the extent that each client now refuses to purchase REV products. (id. ¶¶ 40-41).

First Priority alleges it made these quality and service issues well known to REV, which subsequently "failed to follow through on correcting the deficiencies." (Id. ¶¶ 42-43.) Specifically, on December 21 and 22, 2016, First Priority's Vice President, Ken Clark ("Clark"), e-mailed REV representative Enrique Gimenez ("Gimenez") expressing First Priority's [*7] "frustration at REV's conduct in shipping incomplete ambulances of poor quality and its failure to support" First Priority. (Id. ¶ 43.) Thereafter, at REV's annual dealer summit in February 2017, REV's Vice President of Marketing and Sales, Scott Barnes ("Barnes"), told Clark that "REV wanted to get its Road Rescue brand in New Jersey back on track," yet provided "no such support." (Id. ¶ 44.)

On or about March 28, 2017, during a meeting between First Priority representative Zach Yeager ("Yeager") and REV representative Irina Hot ("Hot"), REV "revealed its plan to limit competition by restricting its dealers' ability to continue to sell ambulances from brands not affiliated" with it. (Id. ¶ 46.) Specifically, REV "indicated that it intended to convert all of its dealers of its ambulance brands toward being either 'factory owned' or REV only dealers." (Id.) Under this new policy, REV's ambulance dealers would be prohibited from offering products services to clients that were not manufactured by REV. (Id.) During this meeting, First Priority "expressed its reluctance to become a REV-exclusive dealer in light of the quality problems its customers had been experiencing." (Id. ¶ 47.)

Between [*8] April 2016 and November 2017, REV reduced the percentage of its multi-line dealers by 59% - from sixty-nine to thirty-six - whereas it increased the number of factory-owned and REV-exclusive dealers by twenty-five percent - from 197 to 222. (Id. ¶ 47.) By the end of 2017, 86% of REV dealers were either factory-owned or REV-exclusive dealers. (Id.)[4]

[2] The SJC Agreement includes many similar clauses to the RR Agreement, including First Priority's obligation to actively and effectively sell vehicles, promote the purchase of such vehicles, and maintain an adequate staff and insurance. (ECF No. 17 ¶ 25.)

[3] The Amended Complaint notes that, following the execution of the SJC Agreement, "three of the five ambulance brands [First Priority] sold and serviced were owned by [REV]: (1) Road Rescue; (2) McCoy Miller; and (3) Marque." (ECF No. 17 ¶¶ 27.) First Priority also sold and serviced two other brands of ambulance vehicles, Demers and Braun, which were unaffiliated with REV. (Id.)

[4] First Priority further alleges that, in an effort to "economically coerce [it]" and others similarly situated to become "REV only" dealers, REV introduced a new line of "economically" priced Type I and III ambulance vehicles called "Frontline." (Id. ¶ 49.) The Frontline ambulances are "priced significantly below the wholesale cost of REV's other similar vehicles and have only been offered to REV only dealers." (Id.) Additionally, REV requires its Frontline dealers to sell those vehicles exactly at the MSRP. (Id.)

In a June 30, 2017 letter from Barnes to First Priority's Alex Cherepakhov ("Cherepakhov"), REV terminated its business relationship with First Priority, stating in pertinent part:

> As you know, First Priority is a REV dealer for the McCoy Miller, Marque, and Road Rescue brand of emergency vehicles in the state of New Jersey pursuant to a Retail Sales and Service Agreement between the parties (the "Dealer Agreement and Dealer Relationship"). However, as a result of First Priority's failure to perform in accordance with the Dealer Agreement, this letter shall serve as REV's official notice of termination of the Dealer Agreement and Dealer Relationship effective sixty (60) days from First Priority's receipt.
> Pursuant to the Dealer Agreement, First Priority obligated itself to meet its mutually agreed upon sales objectives and has failed [*9] to do so. For example, the sales objective for all three brands for fiscal year 2017 was 18 vehicles and First Priority has only sold 1 vehicle thus far. In fiscal year 2015 and 2016, First Priority only sold a total of 5 and 3 vehicles respectively. The inadequacy of these sales numbers are highlighted by the fact that in 2015 and 2016 a comparable dealer sold 40 and 30 vehicles respectively. First Priority's repeated failure to meet its mutually agreed upon sales objective cannot persist. Accordingly, as a result of First Priority's failure to perform in accordance with the requirements outlined in the Dealer Agreement, REV is terminating the Dealer Agreement and Dealer Relationship effective sixty (60) days from receipt of this notice.

(Id. ¶ 50.)

Contrary to REV's termination letter, First Priority contends specific sales goals were never "mutually agreed upon" and the only discussion of such goals took place in November 2016 "when [REV] intimated that [First Priority] must sell 13 Road Rescue vehicles in 2017." (Id. ¶¶ 51-52.)

On August 3, 2017, David Rapaport ("Rapaport"), a First Priority representative, emailed Leslie Fischer ("Fischer"), a REV representative, acknowledging receipt [*10] of the termination letter and requesting "a schedule of the [number] of vehicles sold by [First Priority] from 2012 to 2016 against the performance target for each year." (Id. ¶ 54.) On August 8, 2017, Fischer replied to Rapaport's e-mail attaching data sheets for Marque and McCoy Miller brand ambulances, First Priority's 2017 sales objectives, and First Priority's sales against performance targets. (Id. ¶ 55.)

On August 21, 2017, Jeffery Goldstein ("Goldstein"), First Priority's outside counsel, sent a letter to Barnes asserting, among other things: the termination letter is procedurally defective under the New Jersey Fair Practices Act ("NJFPA") because it fails to identify with specificity the particular agreement it claims to be terminating and the grounds for the termination; the termination letter is substantively flawed as the requirements listed in the letter constitute "unreasonable standards of performance;" REV lacks good cause for the termination; REV committed prior breaches to the agreement; REV "manipulated the system" to cause First Priority's alleged breaches; REV has established and enforced the performance objectives in a discriminatory manner; and the NJFPA does [*11] not permit a franchisor to terminate a franchise for any reason "other than the franchisee's substantial breach of legitimate current obligations." (Id. ¶ 56.) Goldstein further requested that REV agree to extend the termination effective date from sixty to ninety days to "allow the parties to engage in a meaningful discussion about the future of the parties' business." (Id.)

Thereafter, on September 14, 2017, Rapaport sent a letter to Barnes claiming that First Priority "objected promptly to [the] wrongful termination" of the agreements and indicating that First Priority "has removed all REV Ambulance brand signs from its facilities and has ceased selling and or servicing REV Ambulance vehicles." (Id. ¶ 57.) Rapaport further noted the termination "has inflicted significant costs" on First Priority. (Id.) These costs include First Priority's purchase of a Wheeled Coach Van demo vehicle and a Road Rescue Ambulance demo vehicle from REV - for $64,551 and $154,871, respectively - and $221,718 in "incurred floor plan interest," which was continuing to accrue at a rate of $40.18 per day. (Id.)

REV did not reply to Rapaport's September 14, 2017 letter. (Id. ¶ 58.) On October 5, 2017, Rapaport [*12] sent Barnes a second letter, requesting REV take possession of the two demo vehicles and reimburse First Priority for the purchases, and that REV reimburse First Priority for the cost of keeping the vehicles on the floor plan "after the wrongful termination." (Id. ¶ 59.) REV repurchased the Wheeled Coach Van demo vehicle but refused to repurchase the Road Rescue Ambulance demo vehicle. (Id. ¶ 60.)

B. Procedural History

On May 29, 2018, First Priority filed a Complaint (the "Complaint") against REV asserting causes of action for violations of the NJFPA, breach of contract and of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and violations of state and federal antitrust law. (ECF No. 1.) On November 9, 2018, First Priority filed an Amended Complaint (the "Amended Complaint") against REV asserting causes of action for violations of the NJFPA (Count One), breach of contract and of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing (Count Two), violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1 (Count Five), violations of Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2 (Count Six), violations of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 14 (Count Eight), violations of New Jersey State Antitrust Laws (Count Nine), and promissory estoppel (Count Ten). [*13] (ECF No. 17.)[5]

On November 29, 2018, REV filed a Motion to Dismiss the Amended Complaint. (ECF No. 18.) On January 23, 2019, First Priority filed an Opposition to REV's Motion to Dismiss the Amended Complaint. (ECF No. 24.) On the same date, First Priority filed a Cross-Motion for Leave to Amend the antitrust claims in the Amended Complaint, complete with a Supplemental Proposed Second Amended Complaint with changes highlighted. (ECF No. 25.) On February 4, 2019, REV filed an Opposition to First Priority's Cross-Motion to Amend (ECF No. 29), and on February 13, 2019, First Priority filed a Reply Brief to REV's Opposition to its Cross-Motion to Amend. (ECF No. 30).

II. LEGAL STANDARDS

A. Rule 12(b)(6) Standard

In deciding a motion to dismiss pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6), a district court is "required to accept as true all factual allegations in the complaint and draw all inferences in the facts alleged in the light most favorable to the [plaintiff]." Phillips v. Cty. of Allegheny, 515 F.3d 224, 228 (3d Cir. 2008). "[A] complaint attacked by a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss does not need detailed factual allegations." Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007) (citations omitted). However, the plaintiff's "obligation to provide the 'grounds' of his 'entitle[ment] to relief' requires more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic [*14] recitation of the elements of a cause of action." Id. (citing Papasan v. Allain, 478 U.S. 265, 286, 106 S. Ct. 2932, 92 L. Ed. 2d 209 (1986)). A court is "not bound to accept as true a legal conclusion couched as a factual allegation." Papasan, 478 U.S. at 286. Instead, assuming the factual allegations in the complaint are true, those "[f]actual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555.

"To survive a motion to dismiss, a complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to 'state a claim for relief that is plausible on its face.'" Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570). "A claim has facial plausibility when the pleaded factual content allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for misconduct alleged." Id. This "plausibility standard" requires the complaint allege "more than a sheer possibility that a defendant has acted unlawfully," but it "is not akin to a probability requirement.'" Id. (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556). "Detailed factual allegations" are not required, but "more than an unadorned, the defendant-harmed-me accusation" must be pled; it must include "factual enhancements" and not just conclusory statements or a recitation of the elements of a cause of action. Id. (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555, 557).

"Determining whether a complaint states a plausible [*15] claim for relief [is] . . . a context-specific task that requires the reviewing court to draw on its judicial experience and common sense." Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 679. "[W]here the well-pleaded facts do not permit the court to infer more than the mere possibility of misconduct, the complaint has alleged—but it has not 'show[n]'—'that the pleader is entitled to relief.'" Id. at 679 (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2)). However, courts are "not compelled to accept 'unsupported conclusions and unwarranted inferences,'" Baraka v. McGreevey, 481 F.3d 187, 195 (3d Cir. 2007) (quoting Schuylkill Energy Res. Inc. v. Pa. Power & Light Co., 113 F.3d 405, 417 (3d Cir. 1997)), nor "a legal conclusion couched as a factual allegation." Papasan, 478 U.S. at 286.

While, as a general rule, the court may not consider anything beyond the four corners of the complaint on a motion to dismiss pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6), the Third Circuit has held that "a court may consider certain narrowly defined types of material without converting the motion to dismiss [to one for summary judgment pursuant to Rule 56]." In re Rockefeller Ctr. Props. Sec. Litig., 184 F.3d 280, 287 (3d Cir. 1999). Specifically, courts may consider any "document integral to or explicitly relied upon in the complaint." Burlington Coat Factory, 114 F.3d at 1426 (quoting Shaw, 82 F.3d at 1220).

B. Motion to Amend

Amendments of pleadings are governed by Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 15 and 16. A motion to amend a pleading that is filed before the deadline for amendments of pleadings has passed in a Rule 16 Scheduling Order will be governed by Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 15(a) only. Pursuant to [*16] Rule 15(a), a "party may amend its pleading only with the opposing party's written consent or the court's leave. The court should freely give leave when justice so requires." Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a).

"The grant or denial of leave to amend is a matter committed to the sound discretion of the district court." Arab African Int'l Bank v. Epstein, 10 F.3d 168, 174 (3d Cir. 1993). The Third Circuit has adopted a liberal approach under Rule 15 to the amendment of pleadings to ensure that "a particular claim will be decided on the merits rather than on technicalities." Dole v. Arco Chem Co., 921 F.2d 484, 487 (3d Cir. 1990) (internal citations omitted). The burden is generally on the party opposing the amendment to demonstrate why the amendment should not be permitted. Foman v. Davis, 371 U.S. 178, 180, 83 S. Ct. 227, 9 L. Ed. 2d 222 (1962). Leave to amend a pleading may be denied where the court finds: (1) undue delay; (2) undue prejudice to the non-moving party; (3) bad faith or dilatory motive; or (4) futility of amendment. Shane v. Fauver, 213 F.3d 113, 115 (3d Cir. 2000).

III. DECISION

REV contends First Priority's NJFPA claim should be dismissed because First Priority does not have a license to grant use of REV trademarks, First Priority's antitrust claims should be dismissed for failure to allege a relevant market, First Priority's Sherman Act claims should be dismissed as the alleged conduct is not actionable under the statute, First Priority's breach of contract [*17] and implied covenant of good faith claims should be dismissed, and First Priority's promissory estoppel claim fails as a matter of law because express contracts cover the subject matter of the dispute. (ECF No. 18-1 at 8-26.) First Priority argues each of its claims are adequately pled, and in the alternative, requests this Court grant leave to amend the Amended Complaint should it be inclined to grant REV's Motion to Dismiss with respect to the antitrust causes of action. (ECF No. 25-1 at 10-36.) This Court addresses each argument in turn.

A. First Priority's NJFPA Claims

Count One of the Amended Complaint alleges a violation of the NJFPA and seeks damages stemming therefrom as well as attorney's fees as allowed by law. (ECF No. 17 ¶¶ 62-84.) "The protections of the NJFPA [] apply only to a 'franchise.'" Ocean City Express Co., Inc. v. Atlas Van Lines, Inc., 194 F. Supp. 3d 314, 322 (D.N.J. 2016). The NJFPA defines a franchise as:

> [A] written agreement for a definite or indefinite period, [1] in which a person grants to another person a license to use a trade name, trade mark, service mark, or related characteristics, and [2] in which there is a community of interest in the marketing of goods or services at wholesale, retail, by lease, agreement, or otherwise.

N.J. Stat. Ann. § 56:10-3(a).

"In other words, [*18] a franchise under the NJFPA requires the franchisor's grant of a license to the franchisee and a community of interest between the parties in the relevant market." Atlas Van Lines, 194 F. Supp. 3d at 322 (citing Colt Indus., Inc. v. Fidelco Pump & Compressor Corp., 844 F.2d 117, 119 (3d Cir. 1988)).

The New Jersey Supreme Court has held that "not every grant of permission to use a trademark in the sale of goods or services is a license within the meaning of the [NJFPA]." Instructional Sys., Inc. v. Comput. Curriculum Corp., 130 N.J. 324, 614 A.2d 124, 138 (N.J. 1992). Rather, the "term 'license' as used in the context of the [NJFPA] constitutes a more narrowly-defined type of entitlement." Id. at 139. Specifically, the term "license" means "to use as if it is one's own" and "implies a proprietary interest." Id. (quoting Finlay & Assocs., Inc. v. Borg-Warner Corp., 146 N.J. Super. 210, 369 A.2d 541, 549 (N.J. Law. Div. 1976)). "At a minimum, the term 'license' means that the alleges franchisee must use the name of the franchisor 'in such a manner as to create a reasonable belief on the part of the consuming public that there is a connection between the . . . licensor and licensee by which the licensor vouches, as it were, for the activity of the licensee." Instructional Sys., 614 A.2d at 138 (quoting Neptune T.V. & Appliance Serv., Inc. v. Litton Sys., Inc., 190 N.J. Super. 153, 462 A.2d 595, 599 (N.J. App. Div. 1983)).

Here, the Amended Complaint does not explicitly allege that any language in either the RR or SJC Agreement creates a trademark right pursuant to the NJFPA. On the contrary, the RR Agreement indicates: (1) First Priority "shall not use the name of Road Rescue [*19] or Road Rescue trademarks in its corporate business name;" (2) First Priority shall "purchase and sell all products in its own name, for its own account and at its own risk;" (3) absent prior written approval - which has not been alleged in the Amended Complaint - First Priority may not use Road Rescue trademarks "in any fashion;" and (4) "nothing contained in [the RR Agreement] shall be deemed to create a[] . . . franchise." (RR Agreement (ECF No. 18-3, Ex. A).) Similarly, the SJC Agreement indicates that dealers have the "right to use such trademarks and trade names as registered by SJC from time to time" but only "with prior written approval of SJC." (SJC Agreement (ECF No. 18-4, Ex. B).)

Rather than maintain the language of the respective agreements create explicit licenses, First Priority contends its "allegations are sufficient to create a reasonable belief on the part of the consuming public that there is a connection between the trade name licensor and licensee by which the licensor vouches." (ECF No. 25-1 at 17.) In support of this contention, First Priority highlights its allegations that: (1) it was listed on REV's website as being an authorized dealer for the McCoy Miller [*20] and Road Rescue marks; (2) REV's McCoy Miller and Road Rescue marks were displayed on its website during all applicable times; (3) First Priority used REV's McCoy Miller and Road Rescue marks in its sales literature; and (4) REV's McCoy Miller and Road Rescue marks were displayed on First Priority's headquarters building in New Jersey since 2008. (ECF No. 17 ¶ 66.)

None of First Priority's allegations imply a proprietary interest in REV's trademarks sufficient to determine it held a license pursuant to the NJFPA.[6] Indeed, the relevant case law interpreting the NJFPA compels this conclusion. For instance, in Finlay, the Law Division determined that no license existed as, inter alia, plaintiff's business did not operate under the name of any alleged franchisor, but used only its own name, and the written agreement itself included "no requirement of economic dependency except to the extent plaintiff by its own choice elected to concentrate on the line of merchandise it preferred for whatever business reasons." Finlay, 369 A.2d at 546.[7] The

[6] This conclusion is further supported by the fact that the RR and SJC Agreements explicitly provide that the right to use trademarks and tradenames was subject to prior written approval of the respective contractors and First Priority has failed to allege such written approval was provided. (ECF No. 18-3, Ex. A; ECF No. 18-4, Ex. B.)

[7] Similarly, in Colt Indus., the Third Circuit determined that no license existed because, inter alia, the plaintiff had been prohibited from using the defendant's trade name as part of its own. Colt Indus., 844 F.2d at 120. As here, the plaintiff in Colt Indus. "could use [defendant's] name only in a limited sense and that [defendant's] brand name could not be used in [plaintiff]'s business

Finlay court further held that the "[m]ere furnishing of advertising materials as contemplated by the [] agreement, and allowing plaintiff to have its name placed on certain [*21] items, if it wished, as advertising . . . for their own benefit does not fulfill the letter or intent of the [NJFPA]." Id. The court elaborated that an entity's distribution of "advertising materials of another's products . . . or participating in advertising or listing advertisements that certain individuals or businesses sell certain products, is not what is meant by a license" pursuant to the NJFPA. Id. Here, First Priority did not operate under any of REV's trademark names and did not allege an exclusive relationship with REV. As in Finlay, First Priority merely sold and advertised certain REV products, and as such, its relationship was insufficient to create a franchisor-franchisee license agreement.

Furthermore, the facts in the Appellate Division's holding in Neptune are distinguishable and therefore do not provide persuasive support to First Priority's position. Specifically, the Neptune plaintiff was designated an "authorized service source" for the defendant, and services it performed were billed directly to and paid by the defendant. Neptune, 462 A.2d at 597. Moreover, the plaintiff was "authorized to represent and hold itself out as an authorized [defendant] [*22] service source in its advertising, letterheads, calling cards and service vehicle markings" such that plaintiff gave its "imprimatur to [plaintiff]'s business enterprise" and plaintiff's services were quality controlled and endorsed by defendant itself. Id. at 598-99. Here, although First Priority alleges that REV's McCoy Miller and Road Rescue marks were displayed on its website and physical headquarters, the relationship did not rise to the level of that in Neptune as First Priority was never granted a license and did not have the same level of corporate entanglement as in Neptune.[8] Accordingly, REV's Motion to Dismiss Count One is GRANTED and Count One is DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE.

B. First Priority's Antitrust Claims - Relevant Market

REV contends each of First Priority's antitrust claims - Counts Five (15 U.S.C. § 1), Six (15 U.S.C. § 2 - attempt to monopolize), Seven (15 U.S.C. § 2 - monopolization), Eight (15 U.S.C. § 14), and Nine (New Jersey state antitrust violations, N.J. Stat. Ann. § 56:9, et seq.) - because First Priority has not met its burden of alleging a relevant market. (ECF No. 18-1 at 14-17.) First Priority argues the allegations in its Amended Complaint satisfy the "reasonable interchangeability" standard and that as such, REV's Motion to Dismiss should [*23] be denied.

In antitrust actions, plaintiffs have the "burden of defining the relevant market." Queen City Pizza v. Domino's Pizza, Inc., 124 F.3d 430, 436 (3d Cir. 1997) (citing Tunis Bros. Co., Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 952 F.2d 715, 726 (3d Cir. 1991)).[9] "The outer boundaries of a product market are determined by the reasonable interchangeability of use or the cross-elasticity of demand between the product itself and substitutes for it." Queen City, 124 F.3d at 436 (quoting Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 375, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962)). Furthermore, the test for determining interchangeability of use is not "reasonably interchangeable by a particular plaintiff, but 'commodities reasonably interchangeable by consumers for the same purpose.'" Queen City, 124 F.3d at 436 (quoting United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 395, 76 S. Ct. 994, 100 L. Ed. 1264 (1956)). The relevant market is legally insufficient, and thus dismissal is appropriate, when a plaintiff "fails to define name." Id. In justifying its holding, the Third Circuit noted that if such an agreement "constitutes a license to use a trademark, then any business selling a brand name product would . . . necessarily be considered as holding a license." Id.

[8] Similarly, this Court is also unpersuaded by First Priority's argument that the holding in McPeak v. S-L Distrib. Co., No. 12-348, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 123728, 2014 WL 4388526 (D.N.J. Sept. 5, 2014) supports a finding that First Priority had a proprietary interest in REV's trademarks. In McPeak, the court identified several factors relevant to showing that a proprietary interest in the trademarks were licensed, including, among others, the use of the defendant's marks on business cards, invoices bearing defendant's names and marks, and a representation that plaintiff's salespersons were employees or agents of defendant. *2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 123728, [WL] at 9. None of these factors apply to First Priority.

[9] Importantly, the Third Circuit has also held that although defining a proper market can be a fact intensive inquiry requiring discovery, see Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Tech. Servs, Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 482, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992), there is no "per se prohibition against dismissal of antitrust claims for failure to plead a relevant market under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6)." Queen City, 124 F.3d at 436.

its proposed relevant market with reference to the rule of reasonable interchangeability and cross-elasticity of demand, or alleges a proposed relevant market that clearly does not encompass all interchangeable substitute products even when all factual inferences are granted in plaintiff's favor." Queen City, 124 F.3d at 436 (citing TV Commc'ns Network, Inc. v. Turner Network Television, 964 F.2d 1022, 1025 (10th Cir. 1992)). The New Jersey Antitrust Act has incorporated the "reasonable interchangeability" standard applicable to federal antitrust claims by virtue of statute. See N.J. Stat. Ann. § 56:9-18 (the New Jersey Antitrust Act "shall be construed in harmony with ruling judicial interpretations [*24] of comparable Federal antitrust statutes and to effectuate, insofar as practicable, a uniformity in the laws of those states which enact it").

In the Amended Complaint, First Priority defines the relevant market as the "manufacture of ambulances," explaining:

> 92. The relevant market for purposes of the antitrust claims in this case is the manufacture of ambulances. REV has, through acquisitions and the use of prolific explicit and de facto exclusive dealing agreements and demands, unreasonably injured competition in this relevant market. REV, in carrying out this wrongful conduct, has also attempted to monopolize and monopolized the market for ambulance manufacturers.
> 93. The relevant market for the manufacture of ambulances recognizes that ambulances are not reasonably interchangeable with other non-ambulance vehicles. Consumers do not believe or act as though non-ambulance vehicles can be used for the same purposes, taking into account their price, use and qualities.
> 94. Ambulances by federal regulation must include certain life safety equipment and meet certain safety standards that are not included in ordinary vehicles. Therefore, non-ambulance vehicles cannot be used as [*25] ambulances to transport patients. Ambulance manufacturers have equipment, knowledge and training that is unique to the manufacturing and regulatory requirements of the ambulance market and that is not possessed by manufacturers of other vehicles.
> 95. Ambulance vehicles are not interchangeable with other vehicles, and their function is unique. From the perspective of a consumer (both an ambulance dealer as well as the end-user of ambulances - municipalities, hospitals), such vehicles are not interchangeable with other vehicles. This latter observation means that there is a very low cross-elasticity of demand between ambulances and other vehicles. Further, ambulances do not have multiple uses. There simply is no reasonable interchangeability. No other products are capable of performing the same function as an ambulance.
> 96. The relevant economic market encompasses all economic substitutes for ambulances; there simply are not any. Again, ambulance vehicles are functionally distinct from other vehicles. Ambulance manufacturers offer a unique product and services associated therewith that other manufacturers cannot.
> 97. The complicated and demanding regulatory overlay permeating the ambulance [*26] market includes, but is not limited to, three federal regulatory organizations that enact ambulance "standards." KKK which is a federal ambulance standard, CAAS (Commission on Accreditation of Ambulance Standards) and NFPA (National Fire Protection Agency). KKK has been in effect since 1974 and are observed by state Health Departments, CAAS is fairly new and is still organizing, and NFPA is a Fire standard that started getting involved in Ambulance standards in the mid-2000's as more and more Fire Depts have gotten involved in emergency medical matters.
> 98. There is no substitute for an ambulance. Emergency patients cannot be transported by Fire Truck or other emergency vehicle.

(ECF No. 17 ¶¶ 92-98.)

First Priority alleges that the New Jersey ambulance market - from the consumer point-of-view - is broken down into several categories, including hospital-based EMS systems, municipal based EMS systems, volunteer EMS systems, and commercial EMS providers. (Id. ¶ 100.) First Priority further alleges the "[r]elevant patterns of trade, including purchasing patterns" support its definition of the relevant market as consumers "do not consider other vehicles to be substitutes of ambulances," and [*27] from the "supply-side, manufacturers of other vehicles do not have the ability to easily start manufacturing and selling ambulances in the . . . market." (ECF No. 17 ¶¶ 101-02.)

REV contends the relevant market, as defined in the Amended Complaint, lacks all interchangeable economic substitutes because it does not include used ambulances. (ECF No. 18-1 at 16-17.) REV argues the proposed relevant market lacks all substitutes "by First Priority's own admission" (Id. at 16), as the Amended Complaint alleges that "approximately 84 ambulance companies in the state of New Jersey went out of business by the end of 2016" thereby "result[ing] in a flood of used ambulances in good condition being thrown onto the market, substantially impacting the ability to sell new ambulances." (ECF No. 17 ¶ 53.) Accordingly, REV argues that the proposed market must fail as a matter of law.

Here, the relevant market proposed in the Amended Complaint is insufficient as a matter of law. As conceded in the Amended Complaint, the relevant market does not encompass all reasonably interchangeable substitutes, nor does it adequately distinguish between the role of used versus new ambulances in the subject market. Accordingly, [*28] REV's Motion to Dismiss Counts Five, Six, Seven, Eight, and Nine of the Amended Complaint is GRANTED and Counts Five, Six, Seven, Eight, and Nine are DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE. Additionally, this Court determines that none of the four grounds precluding a Motion to Amend - undue delay, undue prejudice to the non-moving party, bad faith or dilatory motive, or futility of amendment - are present in this case, and therefore, First Priority's Motion for Leave to Amend the Amended Complaint is GRANTED.[10]

C. First Priority's Breach of Contract/Implied Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing Claims

REV argues First Priority does not have a cognizable breach of contract claim or breach of implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing claim, Count Two, because the termination was in accordance with express contractual provisions. (ECF No. 18-1 at 21-24.) First Priority counters that dismissal of its breach of contract and implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing causes of action is unwarranted because it has pled oral modifications to the contract which created an understanding that, among other things, if First Priority performed adequately, REV would provide a reasonable time to cure [*29] before terminating the relationship. (ECF No. 25-1 at 27-34.)

REV contends its termination of the RR and SJC Agreements with First Priority conformed with the explicit contractual terms of the respective agreements. The RR Agreement's termination provision provides, in pertinent part:

> Notwithstanding anything contained in this Agreement to the contrary, Road Rescue shall have the right to terminate this Agreement upon occurrence of any of the following events:
> . . .
> (F) Failure to meet established sales and performance quota, as described in Section 2 - Items A & B[: ten vehicle sales per year, taking into account, among other things, present performance, potential performance, the competition and economic conditions that are affecting the market].
> (G) Either party may terminate without cause by written notice to the other party giving at least thirty (3) days prior to the effective date specified by such notice. Road Rescue shall not be required to accept any order placed by Dealer for delivery after the effective date of termination. Once termination notice is given, Road Rescue may, at its option and before effective termination date, sign a new dealer for said territory.

(ECF No. 18-3, Ex. A [*30] at 8-9.)

Meanwhile, the SJC Agreement's termination provision provides, in pertinent part, that SJC may terminate the SJC Agreement on thirty days' notice for the breach of any contractual provision, which includes First Priority's obligation to meet or exceed sales criteria. (ECF No. 18-4, Ex. B at 8-10.) The sales criteria for the relevant time period were

[10] REV also contends that First Priority's Sherman Act causes of action - Counts Five and Eight - should be dismissed as the "alleged conduct is not actionable under the statute" as it fails to allege a "concerted action" between REV and another party. (ECF No. 18-1 at 17-21.) As this Court has already granted REV's Motion to Dismiss First Priority's antitrust claims for failure to adequately define a relevant market, it need not consider REV's additional claims concerning these causes of action. Nevertheless, in light of First Priority's allegations that First Priority has been harmed by REV's "exclusive dealing, recent mergers to take over competitors, and terminations of dealers for no legitimate reason," this Court finds that First Priority's antitrust claims have pled concerted actions between REV and third-parties so as to constitute actionable conduct pursuant to the applicable antitrust statutes. (ECF No. 17 ¶ 112.)

thirty-six McCoy Miller ambulances and ten Marque ambulances, and the SJC Agreement indicates that such goal is binding on the dealer absent any written amendment. (Id. at 6-10.) Accordingly, REV argues First Priority has failed to state a cognizable claim for breach of contract and breach of implied covenant of fair dealing and good faith as its termination comported with the applicable contractual termination provisions.

While First Priority does not dispute that it failed to sell the volume of ambulances required by the RR and SJC Agreements, it alleged that the agreements were orally modified to require, among other things, a notice of deficiency and a commensurate reasonable opportunity to cure, stating in pertinent part:

> 88. Furthermore, on multiple occasions, the parties' representatives discussed their mutual understanding that for their [*31] relationship to continue, [First Priority] would simply need to perform adequately, and, if [First Priority] was not performing adequately, [REV] would provide [First Priority] a reasonable time to cure the claimed deficiency before the relationship would be terminated. Similarly, REV had an obligation to discuss and determine reasonable performance standards with [First Priority], the substance of which are the subject to the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and the agreement. To the extent REV failed to reasonably discuss and agree upon such standards, REV violated the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and the agreement. And, to the extent that REV, after execution of the agreement, agreed not to enforce or require such standards - but used an alleged failure to meet any such standards - REV violated the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and the agreement.

First Priority contends that the parties made an oral modification via course of dealing and course of performance, and as such, this Court should not be guided exclusively by the terms in the contract. (ECF No. 25-1 at 28-31.) Indeed, the parties agree that such a modification is permitted [*32] - even where the contract explicitly requires a written amendment - pursuant to the laws of Indiana,[11] which the parties agree govern the RR Agreement, and Minnesota,[12] which the parties agree govern the SJC Agreement. Citing Hamlin v. Steward, 622 N.E.2d 535, 539 (Ind. App. 1993), REV contends that such a modification constitutes a new contract, which necessitates all the requisite elements of the formation of a new contract, and First Priority "does not allege that any benefit accrued to REV [] from the alleged modification or that First Priority incurred any detriment from the alleged modification." (ECF No. 29 at 14-15.)

REV's argument is unpersuasive. First Priority has adequately met its pleading obligation under the federal rules by alleging the parties' written contracts were modified by their course of dealings and oral agreements. Voluminous case law from both Indiana and Minnesota confirms that modifications to a contract may be implied by the subsequent conduct of the parties and need not be in writing, even where so stipulated in the contract. Sees v. Bank One, Ind., N.A., 839 N.E.2d 154, 161 (Ind. 2005); Larson v. Hill's & Refrig. Of Bemidji, Inc., 400 N.W.2d 777, 781 (Minn. Ct. App. 1987). As such, First Priority's failure to explicitly allege the benefit accrued to REV and the legal detriment incurred by it as consideration for the modification is not fatal to its claims. [*33] Accordingly, REV's Motion to Dismiss Count Two is DENIED.

D. First Priority's Promissory Estoppel Claim

REV argues this Court should dismiss First Priority's promissory estoppel claim because it is a quasi-contract claim which is "unavailable" where an express contract covers the subject matter of the dispute. (ECF No. 18-1 at 24-25.) Relying on Lano Equip., Inc. v. Clark Equip. Co., 399 N.W.2d 694, 698 (Minn. Ct. App. 1987), First Priority contends that its promissory estoppel claim is adequately pled and its reliance on REV's representations caused it substantial and definite harm. (ECF No. 25-1 at 34-36.)

---

[11] Ind. Code 26-1-2-202 (Final written expression; parol or extrinsic evidence).

[12] Minn. Stat. § 336.2-202 (Final written expression; parol or extrinsic evidence).

Here, First Priority alleges REV "promised" it a "reasonable time to cure" any "claimed deficiency before the relationship would be terminated," and that First Priority relied upon the representation to its detriment. (ECF No. 17 ¶¶ 161-64.) However, under the laws of Minnesota and Indiana,[13] the application of the doctrine of promissory estoppel is an equitable quasi-contract remedy available only when there is not an adequate remedy at contract law. See Olson v. Synergistic Techs. Bus. Sys., Inc., 628 N.W.2d 142, 149 (Minn. 2001); see also Indiana Bureau of Motor Vehicles v. Ash, Inc., 895 N.E.2d 359, 367 (Ind. Ct. App. 2008) (holding that promissory estoppel is a quasi-contractual remedy permitting recovery in the absence of a contract to prevent unjust enrichment). Furthermore, the decision in Lano - the primary authority [*34] relied upon by First Priority - does not stand for the proposition that promissory estoppel may be applied alongside a breach of contract claim, but only that a party is precluded from denying the existence of a long term contractual relationship where a contract had expired but was informally renewed. Lano, 399 N.W.2d at 698-99. Indeed, the decision in Lano did not deal with the application of promissory estoppel whatsoever. Accordingly, REV's Motion to Dismiss Count Ten is GRANTED and Count Ten is DISMISSED WITHOUT PREJUDICE.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above, REV's Motion to Dismiss is GRANTED with respect to Counts One, Five, Six, Seven, Eight, Nine, and Ten and DENIED with respect to Count Two, and First Priority's Cross-Motion for Leave to Amend the Amended Complaint is GRANTED.

MEMORANDUM OPINION

WILLOCKS, Administrative Judge

[*1] ¶1 THIS MATTER is before the Court on the Motion to Dismiss (hereinafter "Motion") of Defendants St. Croix District Government Board of Directors, Governor Juan F. Luis Hospital and Medical Center, Jeff Nelson, Dr.

Franklin, Jr., and John Does 1-10 (hereinafter collectively "Defendants"), filed on April 30, 2012. In response, the Plaintiffs Walter G. Gardiner, individually and as a member of HealthQuest, LLC, Virgin Islands Kidney Center, and Caribbean Kidney Center (hereinafter collectively "Plaintiffs"), filed a Motion in Opposition (hereinafter "Opposition"), on June 18, 2012.

BACKGROUND

[*2] ¶2 Plaintiff Walter G. Gardiner's (hereinafter "Dr. Gardiner"), is a medical doctor and founder of HealthQuest, LLC d/b/a/ the Caribbean Kidney Center, also now known as the Virgin Islands Kidney Center. (Id.) Dr. Gardiner was also previously employed [2] by Governor Juan F. Luis Hospital (hereinafter "JFL"). (Compl. ¶ 3.) As an employee of JFL, Dr. Gardiner was subject to the Medical Staff Bylaws (hereinafter "Bylaws"). (Opp'n 11). According to the Bylaws "[a] practitioner against whom an adverse recommendation or action has been taken shall be given special notice." (Ex. A 44.) Moreover, "[a] practitioner shall have thirty (30) calendar days following the receipt of the notice to file a written request for a hearing." (Id.)

[*3] ¶3 On February 23, 2012, a nurse at JFL asked Dr. Gardiner for a written order so that she may comply with his directions. (Compl. $10.) As a result, Dr. Gardiner became upset and slammed a binder containing medical charts on the countertop of the nurse's workstation. (Compl. ¶ 11.) Following the incident, Dr. Franklin, chairman of the Medical Executive Committee (hereinafter "MEC"), contacted Dr. Gardiner to discuss the incident and informed him that the matter would be discussed at the St. Croix District Governing Board meeting. (Mot. 2.) Subsequently, at the board meeting, Dr. Franklin read a letter detailing the incident that took place on February 23, 2012. (Id.) The Motion states that Dr. Gardiner attended [3] the meeting and was given an opportunity to speak in order to address the incident. (Id.)

[*4] ¶4 On February 29, 2012, the Defendants terminated Dr. Gardiner's employment as a Staff Physician II as well as his hospital privileges at JFL. (Compl. ¶¶ 2, 3.) On March 9, 2012, the Plaintiffs filed the proceeding Complaint. In the Complaint, the Plaintiffs allege that the Defendants termination of Dr. Gardiner's privileges at JFL was improper and have prevented him from offering a full range of hemodialysis service. (Compl. ¶ 6.) Moreover, because Dr. Gardiner is incapable of treating his hemodialysis patients without access to the hospital he is being forced to refer his patients to JFL physicians. (Id.) The Plaintiffs' Complaint asserts seven claims including: 1) Wrongful Termination; 2) Violation of the Virgin Islands' Antitrust Statute; 3) Tortious Interference with Prospective Economic Advantage; 4) Breach of Implied Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing; 5) Defamation; 6) Unfair Competition and; 7) Violation of the Virgin Islands Criminally Influenced and Corrupt Practice Act.

LEGAL STANDARD

[*5] ¶5 Under Rule 12(b)(6) of the Virgin Islands Rules of Civil Procedure, a party may seek to dismiss a claim due [4] to "failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted."[1] In ruling on a 12(b)(6) motion, a court determines whether the claim has been adequately stated in the pleadings.[2] The court must accept all well-pleaded allegations as true and view them in a light most favorable to the pleader.[3] According, to the Supreme Court of the Virgin Islands the court must:

> [f]irst, take note of the elements a plaintiff must plead to state a claim in order for the court to be aware of each item the plaintiff must sufficiently plead. Secondly, the court must identify allegations that are mere conclusions and not entitled to the assumption of the truth. Finally, the court must "assume the veracity of well-pleaded factual allegations and then determine whether they are plausible to entitle relief. However, since the Supreme Court adopted the Virgin Islands Rules of Civil Procedure the plausibility requirement is now omitted.[4]

DISCUSSION

Count I: Wrongful Termination of Hospital Staff Privileges

[*6] ¶6 The Defendants argue that the Plaintiffs have not presented facts that plausibly show that the Defendants denied [5] Dr. Gardiner his right to procedural due process. (Mot. 5.) In addition, the Defendants assert that the Supreme Court has found due process to be flexible and require such procedural protection as the situation demands. (Id.) Moreover, Article VII of the Bylaws provides for a fair hearing following an adverse action or recommendation and that there are situations in which a post-deprivation hearing is appropriate. (Id.)

[*7] ¶7 The Plaintiffs allege that the Court can draw a reasonable inference from the Complaint that Dr. Gardiner's due process rights were violated because he was terminated without a hearing. (Mot. 3.) In addition, the Plaintiffs claim that the three cases the Defendants cite in support of a post-deprivation were all decided by summary judgment once discovery had occurred rather than during an earlier stage when a 12(b)(6) motion is appropriate. (Id.) Therefore, this case should proceed in order to properly determine whether Dr. Gardiner's due process rights were violated. (Id.)

[*8] ¶8 Rule 8 of the Virgin Islands Rules of Civil Procedure states "that the Virgin Islands is a notice pleading jurisdiction, therefore an approach that dismisses a case based on failure to allege specific facts that if established would [6] plausibly entitle the pleader to relief is not applicable."[5] Rather, a complaint need only present a short, plain statement of the cause of action and the basis for the claim for relief.[6]

[*9] ¶9 Here, the Complaint states that the Defendants violated Dr. Gardiner Fourteenth Amendment right to due process by terminating his hospital privileges without having an opportunity to address the allegations against him first. As such, the Plaintiffs have sufficiently informed the Defendants of the claims against them in a manner that makes them more than just conclusory. Therefore, given that the Virgin Islands is a notice pleading jurisdiction, the Complaint has sufficiently met the requirements of Rule 8. Thus, the Court must deny the Defendants' Motion to Dismiss for failure to state a claim in regard to Count 1 of the Plaintiffs' Complaint.

Count II: Violation of Virgin Islands Antitrust Statute

[*10] ¶10 To succeed on a claim under Title 11 of the Virgin Islands Code § 1518, a plaintiff must show that the defendant "[b]y contract, combination, or conspiracy with one or more other persons unreasonable restrain trade or commerce."[7]

[*11] ¶11 The Defendants contend that the accusation that they, on behalf of a single corporate entity, acted [7] to unreasonably restrain trade must fail as a matter of law because unilateral conduct under the Sherman Act does not violate antitrust law. (Mot. 8-9.) Moreover, since courts in the Virgin Islands have held that 11 V.I. Code § 1518

must be applied in a manner consistent with the Sherman Act and other federal antitrust laws, the claim must be dismissed. (Mot. 7.) In addition, the Defendants also assert that as an instrumentality of the Government of the Virgin Islands, JFL is immune from antitrust claims. (Mot. 9.)

[*12] ¶12 In response, the Plaintiffs' contend that the Complaint clearly states what actions were taken by the Defendants and other outsiders identified as John Does 1-10. (Mot. 8.) Therefore, the conduct by the Defendants was not unilateral. (Id.) The Plaintiffs' claim that the issue as to whether JFL is a semi-autonomous corporation of the government and thus immune to antitrust actions has yet to be determined, therefore it is an issue that is not appropriate for determination under a 12(b)(6) motion. (Mot. 9.)

[*13] ¶13 The Complaint states that JFL conspired with outsiders who were interested in investing or purchasing the hospital and thus had an interest in ensuring that JFL maintains a monopoly. [8] (Opp'n. 8.) The Plaintiffs also acknowledge that while the John Doe Defendants are unknown through discovery they can be identified. (Id.)

[*14] ¶14 The hospital as a government entity is funded by the Government of the Virgin Islands and cannot accept gifts, grants, or loans on its own behalf.[8] Rather the Legislature has vested the Virgin Islands Government Hospitals and Health Facilities Corporation Board of Directors with the power to secure funds from private individuals and then disburse the funds to the local District Boards.[9] In addition, legislative approval is required in order to sell the property to private investors.[10] Therefore, even in a light most favorable to the Plaintiff, it is unlike that the Defendants engaged in conduct that would violate § 1508.

[*15] ¶15 Moreover, while the question of whether JFL is exempt from antitrust actions is an issue of first impression, the Court finds consistent with previous case law that the Legislature did not intend to subject JFL to lawsuits. From inception JFL, formerly St. Croix Hospital, has been owned by the Government.[11] Later, the Legislature enacted the Virgin Islands Government Hospitals and Health Facilities Corporation Act (hereinafter "Corporation [9] Act").[12] Under the Corporation Act, the Virgin Islands Health Facilities Corporation (hereinafter "VIHHFC"), was established as a public corporation to manage JFL and other health care facilities.[13] In addition, the VIHHFC was given power to "sue and be sued" in its own name.[14] However, the Corporation Act did not vest JFL with that same power, as JFL has consistently been referenced as a government-owned hospital that is a facility of the Government and therefore generally not subject to suits. Furthermore, if the Legislature had intended for JFL to be subject to suits then it could have recognized the hospital as a public corporation, as actions may be brought against any public corporation in the Virgin Islands within the scope of its authority. Additionally, the Legislature could have vested the hospital with the power to "sue and be sued" as the Legislature has with other government entities.[15] Moreover, case law also indicates that JFL is not its own entity that is capable of being sued as the hospital has always been named alongside the Government, the VIHHFC or the individual doctors when subject to lawsuits.[16]

[*16] ¶16 Accordingly, JFL as a facility of the Government [10] is immune from antitrust claims. Thus, the Defendants' Motion to Dismiss regarding Count II of the Plaintiffs' Complaint shall be granted. Moreover, since the individual Defendants cannot engage in an antitrust violation on behalf of the hospital, Count II of the Plaintiffs' Complaint is dismissed.

Count III: Tortious Interference with Prospective Economic Advantage

[*17] ¶17 To prevail on interference with prospective business relations claim, a plaintiff must demonstrate:

> (1) the existence of a professional or business relation that is reasonably certain to produce an economic benefit for the plaintiff; (2) intentional interference with that relationship by the defendant; (3) that was accomplished through improper means or for an improper purpose; and (4) that the defendant's interference damaged the plaintiff.[17]

[*18] ¶18 The Defendants allege that the Plaintiffs have not presented any facts demonstrating that the Defendants intentionally or improperly interfered with Plaintiffs' prospective patients. (Mot. 11.) However, the Plaintiffs contend that the facts in the Complaint are sufficient because it states that "due to the Defendants terminating Dr. Gardiner's [11] hospital privileges, he will no longer be able to provide full service to his patients." (Opp'n 10.) Moreover, "revoking Dr. Gardiner's hospital privileges following the incident that took place on February 23, 2012, was inherently improper and therefore intentional." (Id.)

[*19] ¶19 The Plaintiffs' Complaint alleges that by wrongfully terminating Dr. Gardiner's hospital privileges the Defendants interfered with his existing and future business prospects. (Compl. 15.) However, the Complaint fails to identify any business relationship between Dr. Gardiner and a third party that the Defendants knew of and in which they improperly interfered with. (Id.) Therefore, in accordance with Rule 8 of the V.I.R. of Civ. Pro. the Complaint lacks the necessary facts required to presume the claim as being true.[18] Thus, the Court must grant the Defendants' Motion in regard to the Plaintiffs' tortious interference with prospective business relationships and as a result, Count III of the Plaintiffs' Complaint is dismissed.

Count IV: Breach of Implied Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing

[*20] ¶20 An implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing is a common law principle that's generally included in every contract.[19] Moreover, [12] the covenant is not explicitly bargained for by the parties but rather implied covenant that "neither party will do anything which will injure the right of the other to receive the benefits of the agreement."[20] As such, this Court in Merchant Commercial Bank v. Oceanside Village, Inc., determined that the soundest rule for the Virgin Islands for breach of implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing requires that a party "take action that deprives another party of the benefits for which it had bargained."[21] Thus, to successfully bring a claim for breach of implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing the plaintiff must set forth a plausible breach of said covenant.[22]

[*21] ¶21 The Defendants assert that the Plaintiffs have failed to cite any facts that plausibly establish that the Defendants breached the covenant of good faith and fair dealing. (Mot. 12.) Moreover, the Defendants contend that the Bylaws provide for a hearing after an adverse action at the request of the affected party, thus the Plaintiffs have not stated any facts that plausibly establish that the Defendants conspired [13] to deny him his right to due process. (Id.)

[*22] ¶22 The Plaintiffs assert that "the facts in the Complaint present a plausible argument that Defendants acted with bad motives or intentions to deny him the benefit of the bargain initially intended by the parties." (Opp'n. 11.)

[*23] ¶23 Here, the Plaintiffs have not pleaded facts when assumed to be true would establish that the Defendants breaching the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing by denying Dr. Gardiner due process under the Hospital's bylaws. Rather, the Complaint states that "Dr. Gardiner was entitled to a fair proceeding and due process under the Hospital's [b]ylaws, which constitute a contract between the parties" and that the "covenant was breached when the Defendants denied Dr. Gardiner due process." (Compl. 16.) However, the Bylaws state that "[a] practitioner shall have thirty (30) calendar days following his receipt of notice pursuant to Section 1.3 to file a written request for a hearing" and "[a] practitioner who fails to request a hearing within thirty (30) days waives any right to such a hearing or to an appellate review." (Def. Ex. A, Art. VII § 1.4.) Therefore, Dr. Gardiner was not denied his right to due process under the Bylaws but [14] rather failed to request a hearing as he was entitled to do so under the Bylaws. Thus, Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Count IV of the Plaintiffs' Complaint shall be granted and Count IV of the Plaintiffs' Complaint will be dismissed.

Count V: Defamation Against Dr. Franklin

[*24] ¶24 In order to prevail on a claim for defamation the plaintiff must show that:

> (1) the existence of a false and defamatory statement concerning another; (2) the existence of an unprivileged publication of a false and defamatory statement to a third party; (3) fault amounting to at least negligence on the part of the publisher; and (4) "either the actionability of the statement irrespective of special harm or the existence of special harm caused by the publication."[23]

[*25] ¶25 The Defendants argue that the Plaintiffs have failed to allege which statements in the letter ready by Dr. Franklin were false and defamatory. (Mot. 13.) Moreover, because Dr. Franklin is chairman of the board and the letter was read at a MEC meeting, the statement is conditionally privileged. (Id.)

[*26] ¶26 In response, the Plaintiff argues that the Complaint specifically identifies the false and defamatory statements [15] made by Dr. Franklin in previous sections of the Complaint. (Opp'n. 11-12.) Therefore, by incorporating all the proceeding paragraphs, the Plaintiffs have sufficiently identified which statements in Dr. Franklin's letter were defamatory. (Id.) In addition, the Plaintiffs claim that the statements made by Dr. Franklin are not conditionally privileged because Title 19 of the Virgin Islands Code § 248(h), only protects members of a peer review committee "for acts to be done with due diligence in the furtherance of the purpose for which the committee was established." (Id.)

[*27] ¶27 According to the Plaintiffs by incorporating the paragraphs prior to Count V they have sufficiently alleged a claim for defamation. (Opp'n. 11-12.) Paragraph eighty-six of the Complaint states that "at the board meeting a letter was read from Dr. Franklin outlining the incident." (Compl. 11.) Subsequently, paragraphs 125 and 126 of the Complaint state that "Dr. Franklin made defamatory statements about Dr. Gardiner to a third party" and "these statements as alleged above were false and injuries to Dr. Gardiner." (Compl. 16.) Given these allegations, the Complaint satisfies prong two and three of the defamation claim by stating [16] that Dr. Franklin read the letter at the board meeting and that as a result, "Dr. Gardiner has suffered a loss of reputation, customer good will [sic], and loss of patient confidence." (Compl. 16.) However, the Complaint does not satisfy prong one and three because it fails to identify which statements in Dr. Franklin's letter outlining the incident were false and defamatory or how Dr. Franklin reading the letter at the MEC meeting constituted at least negligence.[24] Therefore, in considering the Complaint as a whole the Plaintiff has failed to satisfy all the prongs necessary to assert a claim for defamation.[25]

[*28] ¶28 Further, the Court finds that the letter read by Dr. Franklin is conditionally privileged. This Court has stated that a statement can avoid liability for publication if the conditional privilege applies and the privilege is not abused.[26] Moreover, a statement is conditionally privileged "if the circumstances induce a correct or reasonable belief that (a) there is information that affects a sufficiently important interest of the publisher, and (b) the recipient's knowledge of the defamatory matter will be of service in the lawful protection of the interest."[27]

[*29] ¶29 [17] Here, the statement was conditionally privileged because Dr. Franklin was the chairman of the MEC, which is tasked with maintaining the professionalism of JFL. Dr. Franklin read the letter at a MEC board meeting where Dr. Gardiner's conduct was being reviewed. As the chairman of the MEC, the letter affected an important interest of JFL. In addition, it was also necessary for Dr. Franklin to read the letter to the other board members in order for them to review Dr. Gardiner's conduct as a JFL employee. Therefore, the letter read by Dr. Franklin at the MEC meeting was conditionally privileged. Thus, the Court must dismiss Count V of the Plaintiffs' Complaint.

Count VI: Unfair Competition

[*30] ¶30 The laws of the Virgin Islands prohibit unfair competition under Title 11 § 1503, also known as the Virgin Islands Anti-Monopoly Law.[28] Moreover, § 1503 states in relevant part that:

> "every person shall be deemed to have committed a violation of this chapter who shall … [l]ease or make a sale or contract for … services … where the effect of such lease, sale or contract for such sale or such condition, agreement, or understanding may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in [18] any line of commerce."[29]

[*31] ¶31 The Defendants claim that the Plaintiffs have failed to allege any facts that the Defendant, were engaged in unfair competition, and that the Plaintiffs are merely restating their antitrust claim under a different name. (Mot. 13.) Nevertheless, the Defendants assert that as an instrumentality of the Government, the Defendants are immune from antitrust actions. (Mot. 16.)

[29] 11 V.I.C. § 1503(4).

[*32] ¶32 The Plaintiffs argue that although unfair competition is prohibited under the Virgin Islands Anti-Monopoly Act and the Defendants are a semi-autonomous corporate entity of the Virgin Islands Government the unfair competition claim is still valid due to the Defendants unfairly restricting the Plaintiff from serving his clients at JFL. (Opp'n 13.)

[*33] ¶33 The Defendants are correct in their assertion that unfair competition is prohibited under § 1503 of the Virgin Islands Antimonopoly Law.[30] Therefore the Plaintiffs' are merely restating their antitrust claim because unfair competition is a subset of the antitrust law. Thus, for the reasons described above, the Court will grant the Defendants' Motion to Dismiss for failure to state a claim for unfair competition and Count IV of the Plaintiffs' Complaint [19] will be dismissed.

Count VII: Criminally Influenced and Corrupt Practice Act

[*34] ¶34 Title 14 Virgin Islands Code § 605 states that:

> "[i]t is unlawful for any person employed by, or associated with, any enterprise, as that term is defined herein, to conduct or participate in, directly or indirectly, the affairs of the enterprise through a pattern of criminal activity. It is unlawful for any person, through a pattern of criminal activity, to acquire or maintain, directly or indirectly, any interest in, or control of, any enterprise or real property. It is also unlawful for any person who has received any proceeds derived, directly or indirectly, any of those proceeds, in the acquisition of any title to, or any right, interest, or equity in, real property, or in the establishment or operation of any enterprise. Finally, it is unlawful for any person to conspire or attempt to violate, either directly or through another or others, the provisions of section 605 … .[31]

[*35] ¶35 Moreover, criminal activity under Title 14 of the Virgin Islands Code § 605 "means to engage in, attempting to engage in, conspiring to engage in, or soliciting, coercing, or intimidating another person to engage in the crimes, offenses, violations or the prohibited conduct [20] as described by the laws within the jurisdiction including any federal criminal law … ."[32]

[*36] ¶36 The Defendants argue that the Plaintiffs only claim under the Virgin Islands Criminally Influenced and Corrupt Organization Act was the alleged improper termination of Dr. Gardiner's hospital privileges. (Mot. 17.) Aside from this accusation, the Plaintiffs have not stated any conduct on behalf of the Defendants that were illegal or conspiratorial in nature. (Id.) Therefore, the Plaintiffs have failed to allege any facts that suggest criminal activity or establish an intent on behalf of the Defendants to destroy the Plaintiffs' business. (Id.) In addition, the Defendants also allege that the Plaintiffs' intra-conspiracy claim cannot stand where a corporation is acting in concert with its officers and employees. (Id.)

[*37] ¶37 In response, the Plaintiffs claim that the Complaint details the use of "email communication, cellphone communication, landlines, facsimile transmission, and the U.S. mail" to construct unwarranted disciplinary actions against Dr. Gardiner. (Opp'n 13.) Additionally, the Plaintiffs allege that due to the involvement of the John Doe Defendants the conspiracy included separate [21] outside actors. (Id.) Thus, the conspiracy did not just entail JFL. (Id.)

[*38] ¶38 Here, the Plaintiffs have alleged that the Defendants are in violation of § 605 and therefore they are entitled to relief under § 607. However, to be in violation of § 605 the Defendants must be engaged in a pattern of criminal activity.[33] Count VII of the Plaintiffs' Complaint only consists of conclusory statements that the Defendants

[30] Id.

[32] Id. at 605.

were engaged in a pattern of racketeering activity that affects interstate and foreign commerce. This statement lacks any further factual advancement and the Plaintiffs fail to state what actions by the Defendants constituted a pattern of racketeering. Consequently, the Court needs not address the issue of inter-corporation conspiracy and will grant Defendants' Motion to Dismiss for failure to state a claim under the Criminal Conspiracy and Corrupt Practices Act.

CONCLUSION

[*39] ¶39 After careful consideration of the above, the Court must grant Defendants Motion to Dismiss in regard to Counts II, III, IV, V, VI, and VII of the Plaintiffs' Complaint. However, Count I of the Plaintiffs' Complaint still remain. An Order consistent with the Memorandum Opinion shall follow.

DONE and so ORDERED this 30th [22] day of July, 2019.

SPECIAL MASTER'S REPORT AND RECOMMENDATION

Introduction

This matter arises from a motion by Class Counsel for the Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs ("DPPs") seeking Court approval of DPPs' proposed settlement allocation. Two members of the DPP class, Cisco Systems, Inc. ("Cisco") and Aptiv Services US, LLC fka Delphi Automotive LLP ("Aptiv") (collectively "Objecting Members") oppose that motion, and filed [*34] a separate motion for an order approving their proposed settlement claims. The issues raised by the Objecting Members were presented to the Court on March 21, 2019, and the Court then referred this matter to the Special Master pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 53(a)(1)(C) on April 10, 2019. The parties have since narrowed their arguments, and this Report recommends the following resolution of those issues still in dispute.

Facts and Procedural History

The parties to this dispute are participants in a multidistrict litigation ("MDL") matter which alleges that various capacitor manufacturers artificially raised, fixed, or stabilized the prices of capacitors in violation of U.S. federal antitrust law. Capacitors are a common electronic component that are used to even out the flow of electrical energy, and so are contained in most electrical products.

Two sets of capacitor manufacturers, Hitachi Chemical Co., Ltd., Hitachi AIC, Inc., and Hitachi Chemical Co. America, Ltd. ("Hitachi Chemical defendants" or "Hitachi"); and Soshin Electic Co., Ltd. and Soshin Electronics of America, Inc. ("Soshin defendants" or "Soshin") (collectively, "Settling Defendants") are defendants in this action. Both are Japan-based entities that [*35] sold capacitors to DPPs, among others, in the United States. Hitachi and Soshin agreed to settle the civil claims filed by all DPPs in this action against them for $66 9 million ("the Second Round Settlement").[1] By order dated June 23, 2018, the Court granted approval of that settlement between DPPs and Settling Defendants.[2]

DPPs consist of plaintiffs that purchased capacitors directly from any of the defendants between January 1, 2002, and December 31, 2013, and also met one of two conditions. Either, these plaintiffs were situated inside the U.S. and were billed or invoiced by Settling Defendants for the capacitors, or they were located outside of the U.S., but purchased the capacitors for shipment directly to the U.S. MDL Dkt. No. 249. The Court's order provides that the Settlement Class extends to all such persons "in the United States that purchased Capacitors (including through controlled subsidiaries, agents, affiliates, or joint-ventures) directly from any of the Defendants, their subsidiaries, agents, affiliates or joint ventures from January 1, 2002 through July 22, 2015."[3] MDL Dkt. No. 249, Para. 4; Dkt. No. 1989-2, Para. bb; Dkt. No. [*36] 1989-3, Para. Z.

The parties' settlement agreement includes a release, the effect of which is at issue in this proceeding. That release applies to the following claims:

> [A]ny and all manner of claims . . . that [Settlement Class Members], or any one of them, whether directly, representatively, derivatively, or in any other capacity ever had, now have, or hereafter can, shall or may have against [Defendants] alleged in the Action . . . whether such claims are known or unknown, suspected or unsuspected, asserted or unasserted, foreseen or unforeseen. . . regardless of legal theory. . . , or claims that have been, could have been, or in the future might have in law or equity. . . arising out of, resulting from, or in any way related to any conduct regardless of where it occurred at any time prior to the Effective Date, concerning the purchase, pricing, selling, discounting, marketing, manufacturing, and/or distributing Capacitors in the United States and its territories or for delivery in the United States and its territories. The Released Claims also include, but are not limited to, all claims asserted or which could have been asserted in the Action relating to or arising out of the facts. [*37] . . alleged in the Action, including but not limited to, claims arising under federal or state antitrust, unfair competition, unfair practices, price discrimination, unitary pricing, trade practice, or civil conspiracy law, including without limitation the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. Sec. 1, et seq., but excluding. . . (c) claims based on purchases of Capacitors excluded by the Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvement Act, 15 U.S.C. Sec. 6a.

As required by the Court's order granting approval of the Settlements, Class Counsel completed a notice plan and a process for allocating settlement proceeds among the DPPs. Members of the Settlement Class submitted their claims seeking their requested portion of the Settlement Funds. Class Counsel's designated Claims Administrator thereafter evaluated and processed the submitted claims forms. This process included reviewing all submissions

Class Counsel thereafter prepared a proposed allocation and submitted its motion on November 8, 2018, requesting Court approval of that allocation. A. Objecting Members' Claims Relating to Incorporated Capacitors

Cisco and Aptiv ("Objecting Members"), are both members of the DPP Class, and filed objections to Class Counsel's motion.

Cisco principally designs, builds, and sells networking equipment which includes many components that contain capacitors. Cisco contends that Class Counsel improperly released and excluded a substantial portion of its claims totaling $191,759,460.10.[4] Specifically, Cisco claims that of the total claims submitted, Class Counsel disallowed $154,050,329.40 in losses.

Aptiv manufactures automotive parts including vehicle electronics and systems that likewise rely on internal capacitors. Aptiv contends that Class Counsel improperly released and excluded portions of its claims totaling $198,910,686.94.[5] Aptiv contends that Class Counsel disallowed $48,567,508.65 in incorporated capacitor losses.

Both Objecting Members base their objections/motions principally on Class Counsel's determination to disallow distribution of settlement funds for alleged losses due to the purchase of so-called "incorporated [*39] capacitors." An "incorporated capacitor," simply put, is a foreign-made capacitor that has been incorporated inside a finished product before it is shipped to its original purchaser in the United States.

Aptiv and Cisco have somewhat different claims regarding their application for compensation for incorporated-capacitor purchases.

Aptiv asserts that all of its claims for incorporated capacitors relate to capacitors that it purchased outside the U.S. from the Settling Defendants which were then shipped to an Aptiv entity outside the U.S. for incorporation into an Aptiv product, before then being shipped to the U.S. for sale.[6]

Cisco claims that some of its incorporated capacitors were acquired in the U.S. in the same way (i.e., through sales to a Cisco entity that incorporated them overseas before final shipment to the U.S.). But Cisco also claims that it purchased some of Defendants' capacitors through contracts with third parties who incorporated them into their products for shipment to Cisco in the U.S. for sale in the U.S. Tr. at 54:13-55:12. Cisco contends that regarding this latter set of purchases, all of them are "direct purchases" because Cisco stands in the shoes of the third [*40] parties who incorporated the capacitors for sale in the U.S. Specifically, Cisco relies on its assignments from these third parties, and asserts that these parties granted Cisco assignments because they had acquired the capacitors at Cisco's direction for ultimate shipment to Cisco in the United States. Accordingly, Cisco claims its position with respect to this latter category is indistinguishable from a Cisco entity acting as an intermediary, because Cisco both directed the purchase of capacitors and stands in the shoes of these third-party entities. Id.

[4] Cisco's initial claim in its Opposition was $199,426,277.79. This figure was revised in its Motion. That motion states that the total is $191,759,460.10. MDL Dkt. No. 473 at 11 n. 10. In its Reply Brief, Cisco further reduced the final figure in dispute from $154,050,329.40 to $142,070,717.01 based on its decision to exclude Quanta purchases from its second-round settlement claim. MDL Dkt. No. 496 at 8 n. 3.

[5] Aptiv initially claimed "at least $180,576,936.74" in its Opposition to Class Counsel's motion. MDL Dkt. No. 391, at 7-9. It revised this figure during the course of briefing this matter, and in its final motion for approval of its settlement claims, it claims $146,111,638.53 for foreign purchases, and $2,367,303.69 for additional U.S. Purchases (relating to the NCC/UCC dispute discussed infra). MDL Dkt. No. 473 at 13. Combined with its approved claims, Aptiv claims $198,910,686.94 in total qualifying purchases.

B. Related Proceedings Involving Flextronics

The genesis of the parties' dispute over the status of incorporated capacitors stems — at least in part — from similar claims in a prior round of settlements, and from a related set of Orders issued to resolve motions by another party to the MDL proceedings, Flextronics. Because the parties disagree about the holding and relevance of the Flextronics proceedings, those proceedings are addressed here.

Prior to the current settlements with Soshin and Hitachi, DPPs — including Aptiv and Cisco — entered into a settlement agreement with different defendants ("First Round Settlement"). While the [*41] allocation process was moving forward in the First Round Settlement process, Aptiv and Cisco presented claims to recover settlement funds relating to incorporated-capacitor purchases from those First Round Defendants. Aptiv and Cisco initially requested that — to the extent they could not reach agreement with Class Counsel on those claims — funds be held back for resolution of those claims later.

While those First Round Settlement discussions were ongoing, the Court issued an initial order ("FTAIA I Order") regarding claims by an opt-out plaintiff, Flextronics, regarding Flextronics' own claims for incorporated capacitor purchases, which appear to have influenced the parties' resolution of the First Round Settlement.

The principal issues in Flextronics' motion were: (1) whether certain sales of incorporated capacitors qualified as "import trade or commerce" and are therefore actionable under the Sherman Act; and (2) whether, even if such sales were deemed to involve non-import trade or commerce, they nonetheless produce actual and reasonably foreseeable domestic effects on U.S. commerce to qualify for an exception to the bar on non-import commerce in the Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements [*42] Act ("FTAIA").

In its FTAIA I Order, the Court rejected Flextronics' theory for claiming that its incorporated capacitor purchases were actionable. However, it found that such claims were not necessarily barred as a matter of law, and the Court reserved the issue of whether Flextronics' incorporated capacitors claims were potentially actionable under the Sherman Act and/or FTAIA. Specifically, the Court ruled that plaintiff's initial theory of liability (which was based on a global pricing model), was insufficient to state a cause of action. The Court, however, invited Flextronics to present facts in the second round of proceedings on that motion that would establish liability. In doing so, the Court thus left the door open for Flextronics to pursue its claims under a different theory.

Following the FTAIA I Order, Cisco and Aptiv withdrew their request for First Round Settlement funds to be held back. Instead, they entered into a First Round Settlement and release that did not include compensation for their incorporated capacitor claims. In doing so, however, Objecting Members expressly reserved the right to pursue such claims against other Defendants.

After the First Round Settlement [*43] was completed, the Court issued its second order on Flextronics' incorporated capacitor claims ("FTAIA II Order"), which were presented on motion for summary judgment. In that proceeding, Flextronics offered a new theory by which it claimed that its purchases of capacitors for units built outside the U.S. for sale in the U.S. were actionable under the Sherman Antitrust Act and were not precluded by the FTAIA. On September 20, 2018, the Court issued its FTAIA II Order, finding that Flextronics had, in fact, made a colorable claim that its incorporated capacitor purchases were actionable, and survived summary judgment.

Although the FTAIA II Order was expressly limited to the facts presented by Flextronics in that case, Aptiv and Cisco claimed that those facts were sufficiently analogous to their own incorporated capacitor claims that they too should be entitled to compensation through the Second Round Settlement. After extensive discussion and debate, Class Counsel and Objecting Members were unable to reach an agreement on this dispute, and it was thereafter presented to the Court for resolution.

C. Issues Resolved and Those Still in Dispute

Although the Objecting Members take issue with [*44] various aspects of Class Counsel's allocation motion, their principal contention is that Class Counsel's proposed allocation improperly excludes a large set of valid claims for incorporated capacitors that they timely presented, documented, and released as part of the settlement. The specifics of this dispute have evolved somewhat over the past year, and narrowed in the most recent filings and oral arguments.

1. Resolved Disputes

Accuracy of Claims and Fairness of Claims Review Process: In their respective pleadings, Class Counsel disputed the accuracy of Objecting Members' showing regarding actual incorporated capacitor purchases, while Objecting Members complained that Class Counsel's requirements of proof were unduly onerous. Class Counsel's Motion to approve the Second Round Settlement Allocation noted that some parties had unresolved disputes relating to claims that had been disallowed as inadequately substantiated. Originally, Class Counsel proposed that the Special Master be appointed to address these claims on a case-by-case basis and that Objecting Members with unresolved issues be given an opportunity to present proof of qualifying purchases to the Special Master. MDL Dkt. [*45] No. 381 at 3:5-7.[7] Class Counsel also contended that claims of assignments were inadequate, but that those assignments should be disregarded for purposes of allocation, regardless of their adequacy.[8]

In their written objections to the Class Counsel's motion, Objecting Members claimed they had submitted raw purchase data at that time adequately supporting over $531.39 million (MDL Dkt. No. 391 at 1), which included $199.43 million in incorporated capacitor claims by Cisco and $180.58 million in such claims by Aptiv.[9] Objecting Members also argued that Class Counsel's standard of proof of claims was unduly onerous and "betrays the purpose of a fair claims process." MDL Dkt. No. 391 at 11. Class Counsel objected that Cisco failed to support its claims that it received assignments. MDL Dkt. No. 396 at 5-9. Class Counsel further claimed that Cisco and Aptiv failed to provide sufficient back-up documentation. Id. at 9-10.

Mercifully, the parties have agreed to certain stipulations that will spare the Special Master from reviewing — and determining the adequacy of— each and every submission for an incorporated capacitor claim, or the fairness of the process by which the Claims Administrator considered [*46] and rejected certain methods of proof. Specifically, the parties agreed in January "that the data included in the spreadsheets that [Objecting Members] submitted are accurate" for their Second Round claims. On that basis, Objecting Members assert that the Special Master need not adjudicate the accuracy of their claims, and they also no longer press the claim that Class Counsel's administrative process was unduly exacting, or uniquely disadvantaged them as DPPs. Tr. at 107.

At oral argument, Class Counsel raised the issue whether the Objecting Members voided the stipulation by reducing their actual claims significantly in their post-stipulation briefing. Tr. at 45. Although the Special Master appreciates that the scope of the claims has varied significantly over time, the argument lacks merit. Certainly, if Objecting Members had sought to add new claims, those additional claims would not be subject to a prior stipulation. But they would not void that prior stipulation either. In this case, Objecting Members have not even included new claims. Instead, they have chosen to pursue only a subset of the total claims at issue as a matter of law, thereby reducing their total claims. Their shift [*47] in position therefore does not go to the accuracy of the data to which the parties stipulated, but only to Objecting Members' litigation judgment about which claims they can successfully establish as a matter of law.

[7] Class Counsel also requested that the Court proceed with allocation relating to all other non-objecting parties and reserve a "Hold Back Fund" for unresolved claims by potential objecting parties. MDL Dkt. No. 381 at 3:14-16.

[8] Specifically, Class Counsel argued that if an "indirect purchaser" held assignments from a direct purchaser, those should not be held back for payment, but should be resolved separately by the assignor and assignee. MDL Dkt. No. 381 at 7:26-28. Class Counsel proposed that the funds be distributed based on each claimant's pro rata share of capacitors directly purchased from Defendants during the relevant time period. Id. at 4:10-14.

[9] Class Counsel correctly observed that these figures changed substantially between the time of Objecting Members' filing of objections to Class Counsel's Allocation Motion, and Objecting Members' own motion to approve their Second Round claims. Class Counsel in both its pleadings and at oral argument refer to this disparity as further proof of the lack of certainty and reliability in Objecting Members' submissions.

The stipulation is not, however, comprehensive. Based on the (notably contentious) correspondence between counsel, there appears never to have been an agreement about what, if any, portion of Aptiv's claims relating to Nippon Chemi-Con ("NCC") were duplicative of United Chemi-Con ("UCC") data. Class Counsel claims that Aptiv is effectively demanding $2,307,540 in duplicative claims. MDL Dkt. No. 489 at 15. Aptiv contends that there was no double-counting. Accordingly, this one issue is not determined to be subject to the stipulation and, depending on the outcome of other issues, would require separate review to determine the accuracy of these claims.

Adequacy of Class Counsel: In their Opposition to Class Counsel's motion and in their subsequent motions, Objecting Members appeared to contend that Class Counsel had failed to adequately represent their interests as members of the DPP class. In their Opposition to Class Counsel's motion, Objecting Members claimed that Class [*48] Counsel had failed to "meet their fiduciary duty of candor owed to Aptiv as a member of the class" (MDL Dkt. No. 391 at 2 n. 1), suggested Class Counsel had "inherent conflicts . . . in resolving intra-class disputes about claims that may be in and out of a class" (id. at 4 n.2), and contended that in light of the FTAIA II Order, "as a fiduciary to Objecting Members, Class Counsel have an obligation to ensure and fight for the inclusion of these [FTAIA] claims." Id. at 6. In their own motion, Objecting Members asserted that "[t]he instant dispute demonstrates an intra-class conflict. . . because Class Counsel inadequately represents Objecting Members and similarly situated class members." MDL Dkt. No. 473 at 6 n.7. At oral argument, Objecting Members did not assert that Class Counsel had behaved in a manner that had uniquely prejudiced them (Tr. 27-28), or that there was an irreconcilable conflict in Class Counsel's continued representation, nor did they request any particular relief with respect to Class Counsel's continued representation going forward. Tr. at 104-07. Again, the Special Master is grateful to the parties for limiting their claims such that these issues are not presented to the Court.

[*49] Prior Admissions, Representations, and Reliance:

In their respective pleadings and at oral argument, the parties cast various aspersions on one another for past statements. Class Counsel initially claimed Objecting Members had previously acknowledged that incorporated capacitors did not qualify for compensation in the DPP proceedings during the First-Round Settlements. MDL Dkt. No. 396 at 10-12. Class Counsel has since acknowledged that positions taken in the First Round Settlements do not bind the parties in this round. Tr. at 102 (Mr. Williams: "[T]he first round sort of stood on its own, and it's over, and we're now in the second round, and they have the right to bring the arguments they're bringing, and that's why we're here, to try to resolve them."). Objecting Members claimed that Class Counsel had misleadingly caused them to believe it would pursue incorporated capacitor claims and had acknowledged their legitimacy. MDL Dkt. No. 391 at 1 ("Class Counsel improperly deny portions of Objecting Members' claims for capacitors incorporated into finished products sold in the US. . . in spite of. . . Class Counsel's own assertions that such claims are recoverable."). Objecting Members [*50] now acknowledge this is not one of their contentions. Tr. at 75 ("Mr. Sasse: We're not resting on any representation made by class counsel directly to Cisco and Aptiv. And that may be a full stop answer to your question.").

2. Issues As Yet Unresolved

The issues now in dispute have reduced to four discrete issues.

First, whether the claims for incorporated capacitors were actually released as part of the settlement such that they need to be compensated if viable.

Second, whether based on the Court's FTAIA decisions and other precedents, Objecting Members have stated a sufficiently viable claim for relief for incorporated capacitor claims under the Sherman Act or the FTAIA to warrant compensating these claims in the allocation process.

Third, whether this class-wide allocation process is an inappropriate mechanism for resolving claims for the incorporated capacitor purchases at issue because it does not allow for a proper individualized showing, and whether Cisco and Aptiv's claims should be denied for their failure either to object to the settlement or to opt out and pursue a remedy as Flextronics has.

And fourth, whether — even if such claims theoretically warrant compensation and are appropriate [*51] for this proceeding — Objecting Members have failed to provide the Court or Class Counsel with proof of particular elements to support such a claim. This includes, for example, failure to establish that the Settling Defendants in this action knew or should have known that the capacitor sales at issue were intended for a U.S. market at the time of sale.

Special Masters' Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law

A. Release Language

The parties agree that a foundational question concerns whether incorporated capacitor claims are even included in the Settlement's release provisions with Hitachi and Soshin. Class Counsel asserts that regardless of whether the Objecting Members' incorporated capacitor claims would be legally viable, those claims were not included in the settlement or release, and thus Objecting Members are not prejudiced by the proposed allocation in this proceeding. The scope of the release is ultimately a question of contract interpretation and requires addressing each aspect of the disagreement over the meaning of the release language.[10]

Class Counsel argues that the plain language of the release[11] demonstrates that incorporated [*52] capacitors are not covered because that language refers only to: (1) "capacitors" (rather than "incorporated capacitors"); (2) "directly shipped to or billed to the United States" (rather than non-U.S. purchases); and (3) sold in a manner not excluded from liability by the FTAIA. Class Counsel contends that none of these three requirements applies to Objecting Members' incorporated capacitor claims. Class Counsel also contends that the Objecting Members' contemporaneous conduct further demonstrates that Objecting Members did not believe the release covered incorporated capacitor claims.

1. "Capacitors" versus "Incorporated Capacitors"

The first point of disagreement is whether the term "capacitors" in the settlement agreement refers only to raw capacitors billed or shipped to the U.S. or whether it may encompass capacitors that were purchased for delivery to the U.S. once they were incorporated into another product.

Class Counsel contends that the plain language of the release makes clear that it refers only to raw capacitors. The release, it points out, refers to "capacitors" but contains no reference to "incorporated capacitors." Tr. at 32:11-33:8. Class Counsel argues this is because [*53] the parties only contemplated releasing claims associated with the sale of raw or unincorporated capacitors. Accordingly, Class Counsel argues that as a matter of contract interpretation, the Court should not insert the word "incorporated" where it does not belong.

Objecting Members respond that the language of the release and their course of dealings shows just the opposite. They note that the release is extremely broad and does not expressly or implicitly exclude their claims related to incorporated capacitors. Objecting Members argue that incorporated capacitors are still "capacitors"; they were purchased in their original state for ultimate shipment to the U.S. Accordingly, they maintain, the settlement agreement does not need to refer to incorporated versus non-incorporated capacitors, because that distinction does not bear on whether a claim exists, or to whom the capacitor is shipped or billed at the time of its original purchase.

On this issue, the Objecting Members' position is more persuasive. If the release, for example, referred only to "unincorporated" or "raw" capacitors, that would be dispositive for Class Counsel. But the release refers only to the purchase of "capacitors," [*54] and does not draw a distinction beyond that. Because the term is not modified in some way, in the context of a broad release, the natural reading is that it applies to any and all sales of these defendants' aluminum, tantalum, or film capacitors. Indeed, it seems unlikely, that having submitted such claims in the First Round, and having expressly reserved their right to make claims for incorporated capacitors in this subsequent round, Objecting Members would deliberately omit those claims from the release and undermine their basis for receiving compensation for them in the Second Round settlement. At the very least, one would expect the parties to use more specific language if their intention was indeed to exclude these claims from the release.

[10] The Special Master notes that the district court in a separate MDL action recently recognized the obligation of counsel to ensure that class members not release their claims without compensation in the context of a settlement. See In re Cathode Ray Tube (CRT) Antitrust Litigation, MDL No. 1917, Case No. 3:07-cv-05944-JST ("CRT"), Dkt. No. 5362 (Order Denying JPPs' Mot. Pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. Proc. 62.1) at 1 (N.D. Cal. Nov. 8, 2018).

[11] Although there are separate releases in this matter, the operative language for these parties is identical.

2. "Shipped To" or "Billed To" the United States

Class Counsel argues next that the release is expressly limited to capacitors "shipped to" or "billed to" the U.S., and therefore capacitors acquired by foreign agents of Cisco and Aptiv on behalf of Cisco and Aptiv outside the U.S. for incorporation into finished U.S. products do not qualify. Tr. at 73:24-74:5. Class Counsel notes that the release specifically refers to acts "concerning the purchase, [*55] pricing, selling, discounting marketing manufacturing and/or distributing of Capacitors in the United States and its territories or for delivery in the United States and its territories." MDL Dkt. No. 489 at 4 (quoting Hitachi release at para. 14). Class Counsel maintains that incorporated capacitor sales do not meet this requirement because — by definition — they are not sold directly into the United States, but are sold and shipped to an entity outside the U.S. to be incorporated into a finished good.

Objecting Members argue that Class Counsel simply misreads the releases and thus the scope of compensable claims. In their view, the releases expressly encompass their incorporated capacitor purchases. Specifically, they contend the release extends to acts "concerning the purchase, pricing, selling, discounting, marketing, manufacturing and/or distributing of Capacitors in the United States and its territories or for delivery in the United States and its territories." MDL Dkt. No. 473 (quoting Dkt. No. 1989-2, Para. 2; Dkt. No. 1989-3, Para. 14) (emphasis added). Objecting members contend that they priced and marketed all of their purchases of capacitors in their U.S. headquarters, including [*56] capacitors that were incorporated into products for import into the United States.

The plain language of the release better supports Objecting Members' interpretation. The settlement and release encompass capacitors negotiated for purchase from the U.S. or for delivery to the U.S. in the manner that Objecting Members allege for incorporated capacitors. As noted, Objecting Members claim they negotiated the price and sale of the Settling Defendants' capacitors from the United States, and that they also arranged for distribution and delivery of these products into the U.S. in finished goods. The natural reading of this provision does not preclude claims for a capacitor that was sold to a U.S. entity to be incorporated into a finished product on its way to the U.S. In addition, this comports with other rulings already issued by the Court in this matter. As the Court has already found in its FTAIA II Order, incorporated capacitor purchases can be a form of transaction that qualifies as import trade or import commerce under the Sherman Act, or that satisfies the domestic effects exception to the FTAIA. Accordingly, Class Counsel's arguments are not persuasive on this point.

3. Exception for [*57] Claims Excluded by the FTAIA

Alternatively, Class Counsel relies on Section C of the release, which specifically excludes any claims based on purchases of capacitors that are not allowed under the FTAIA. The language upon which Class Counsel relies is as follows:

> The Released Claims also include, but are not limited to, all claims asserted or which could have been asserted in the Action relating to or arising out of the facts. . . alleged in the Action, including but not limited to, claims arising under federal or state antitrust, unfair competition, unfair practices, price discrimination, unitary pricing, trade practice, or civil conspiracy law, including without limitation the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. Sec. 1, et seq., but excluding. .. (c) claims based on purchases of Capacitors excluded by the Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvement Act, *15 U.S.C. Sec. 6a.

Dkt No. 1989-2, Para 12; Dkt. No. 1989-3, Para. 14 (emphasis added).

Class Counsel contends that Objecting Members did not release their claims for incorporated capacitors without compensation, because such claims are excluded by the FTAIA, and thus excluded from the release. Class

Counsel suggests that Section C should also be read in light of the provisions limiting the released [*58] claims to purchases and deliveries in the United States.

Objecting Members argue that Class Counsel's argument about the FTAIA proves too much. At the time of this settlement, the FTAIA I Order had left open the possibility that incorporated capacitor cases could be viable under the FTAIA (albeit not under a global pricing theory). Objecting Members had, in fact, reserved all of their claims for the Second Round and submitted claims for incorporated capacitors. Tr. at 38. This would suggest that there was no agreement that their incorporated capacitor claims were excluded under the FTAIA. Objecting Members moreover contend that their purchases were functionally indistinguishable from the transactions alleged by Flextronics in the FTAIA proceedings. Aptiv asserts that its method of purchasing incorporated capacitors was not different from that of Flextronics — i.e., like Flextronics, its overseas subsidiary capacitors bought on Aptiv's behalf that it incorporated into a finished product for shipment to Aptiv in the U.S. to sell. Likewise, Cisco claims its subsidiaries either operated in that same way through Cisco subsidiaries, or that Cisco acquired assignments from other parties (including [*59] Flextronics) that it engaged outside the U.S. who operated as their subsidiaries would. Thus, Objecting Members contend that the parties' conduct and this Court's decisions demonstrate that the claims presented here do not fall under Section C's exception to the release, and are thus released.

Objecting Members have the better argument in this instance, as well. At the time the release language was negotiated, the parties were aware of the dispute about whether incorporated capacitor claims were barred by the FTAIA. Objecting Members had reserved those claims for the Second Round, and the Court in its FTAIA I Order had acknowledged the potential viability of some incorporated capacitor claims depending on the facts. Thus, it would be reasonable to assume that Objecting Members believed that the release encompassed actions that relied upon FTAIA claims, and that Section C would not exclude from release their incorporated capacitor claims which were viable under the FTAIA.[12]

4. Course of Dealings

Lastly, in support of their interpretation of the release, Class Counsel looks to the course of dealings between the parties, and their understanding at the time the release was signed. Class [*60] Counsel emphasizes that the notice and claim form negotiated with the Settling Defendants by DPPs did not refer to incorporated capacitors. Moreover, as of July 2018 when the release was executed, there had been no determination that Objecting Members' claims for incorporated capacitors would be allowed under the FTAIA and no indication that Class Counsel would pursue them. Moreover, Class Counsel claims the Court itself had raised concerns in proceedings with the Indirect Product Purchaser (IPP) class, about the workability of including incorporated capacitor claims in a class context. Tr. at 34. If anything, the FTAIA I Order that had been issued at this time emphasized the individualized nature of these claims, and suggested they had a limited prospect for success in any case. Class Counsel contends that until the FTAIA II Order came out two months later, in September, Objecting Members did nothing to suggest they believed their incorporated capacitor claims were genuinely DPP class claims eligible for compensation in the Second Round Settlement and subject to its release. Thus, Class Counsel argues that Objecting Members had no reasonable expectation that these claims were at issue [*61] and could be resolved in this settlement, and thus never objected to, opted out of, or raised concerns about the release's application to incorporated capacitors claims at the time the release was negotiated and executed.

Class Counsel makes a valid point that Objecting Members' attitude regarding their incorporated capacitor claims appears to have changed significantly after the FTAIA II Order was issued. As Class Counsel notes, if Objecting Members had been committed to ensuring that they would be compensated for such claims at the time of the settlement and release, they had several options available to them to express that expectation. They could have opted out of the settlement to pursue these claims; they could have negotiated for language that expressly included incorporated capacitor claims in the settlement and release; or — in Cisco's case — they could have pursued compensation through separate negotiations or proceedings with their third-party contractors. However, while Class Counsel's arguments may go to the appropriateness of the approach Objecting Members have selected to resolve their claims, it does not prove that they understood their claims to be outside the scope [*62] of the settlement. There are a number of strategic and tactical reasons why Objecting Members might not take the actions Class Counsel suggests that have nothing to do with their assumptions about the scope of the settlement and release. Moreover, the Court's FTAIA I Order — while expressing skepticism about incorporated capacitor claims — did not foreclose DPPs from pursuing such claims. Rather, it found them sufficiently meritorious to allow Flextronics to bring forward facts and new legal theories in support of those claims in the FTAIA II proceeding. It therefore seems unlikely that — again — Objecting Members would abandon that claim without doing so expressly or with some clear strategic reason for doing so. Accordingly, the Special Master is not persuaded by the parties' course of conduct that the release reflects the parties' intention to exclude incorporated capacitor claims from the scope of the release.

Accordingly, the Special Master finds that incorporated capacitor claims were encompassed within the Second Round Settlement Release agreement.

B. Viability of an Incorporated Capacitor Claim

Objecting Members urge that the Court's FTAIA II Order defines qualifying capacitor [*63] purchases in a manner that requires that they receive compensation for their incorporated capacitor purchases. MDL Dkt. No. 391 at 4; MDL Dkt. No. 473 at 8-10. They further contend that these claims must be compensated in this proceeding not only because the Second Round Settlement Release includes incorporated capacitor claims, but also because the FTAIA II Order demonstrates that these are viable claims. MDL Dkt. No. 391 at 5-7. They have refined these arguments further in their Motion for an Order Approving their Second Round Settlement Claims.

Objecting Members observe that the Court's FTAIA I Order held that DPPs' claims for incorporated capacitors were not barred as a matter of law, and that the FTAIA II Order found that incorporated capacitors "may be subject to the Sherman Act as 'import trade or commerce'. . . [and] might also come within the FTAIA's domestic effects exception." MDL Dkt. No. 472 at 7 (quoting FTAIA II Order at 7-9).[13] Objecting Members argue that their claims are functionally indistinguishable from those presented by Flextronics in the FTAIA proceedings, and thus are no less viable in these proceedings. They note that like Flextronics, they make claims for incorporated [*64] capacitors where the defendants knew a substantial portion of the capacitors purchased on their behalf would be sold in the United States. Their fact pattern is thus substantially similar to that of Flextronics, in that: (1) the Objecting Members negotiated prices directly with the Settling Defendants; (2) the Objecting Members either purchased or directed the purchase of capacitors based on these prices; and (3) Defendants knew or should have known that a substantial share of the capacitors being purchased were destined for finished products that would be sold in the U.S. MDL Dkt. No. 329.

Class Counsel argues that the FTAIA Orders do not support Objecting Members' claims, and if anything, demonstrate the inappropriateness of this procedure for resolving their claims. First, Class Counsel notes that the Court based its decision in the FTAIA II Order on a specific factual showing in the context of a summary judgment hearing. The Court's decision reveals how this type of claim is inherently fact-specific and not readily susceptible to class-treatment. Tr. at 15. Class Counsel further argues that the Court itself emphasized to Objecting Members at a prior hearing that the FTAIA decision [*65] was fact-based and limited to Flextronics.[14] Indeed, Class Counsel

[13] Like the Court, Objecting Members rely on various Ninth Circuit authorities that reach similar conclusions, including United States v. Hsiung, 778 F.3d 738, 748-58 (9th Cir. 2015), and five district court decisions in this Circuit. MDL Dkt. No. 473 at 7.

[14] Tr. at 23 (quoting the Court): "I held for Flextronics, not you or anyone else, that they were entitled to do that set of claims. . . . I did not articulate a general principle that was based on what I did for Flextronics on its evidentiary showing. So I'm not sure why you think this is a broad proposition that applies to every potential claimant."

explains that it is precisely this fact-bound nature of such claims that make them inappropriate for class treatment, and why Class Counsel chose not to pursue such claims on behalf of the DPPs. Class Counsel explains that in light of the FTAIA I Order, it deliberately limited the class to parties who purchased capacitors "shipped to" and "billed to" the U.S. precisely to avoid these sorts of factual differences. MDL Dkt. No. 489 at 12. Class Counsel further relies on the Court's own order certifying the DPP class as commending Class Counsel's determination to "accept the Court's prior FTAIA ruling and to limit their case only to those categories of transactions the Court ruled were properly in the case." Id. at 12 (citing MDL Dkt. No. 385 at 6-7).

While the Special Master is sympathetic to Class Counsel's arguments that the Objecting Members have not at this juncture provided evidence comparable to that offered by Flextronics, that Flextronics itself might not prevail at trial (it merely survived summary judgment), and that Objecting Members may have an even weaker case than Flextronics (or for that matter other DPPs who did not [*66] present claims for incorporated capacitors), these issues go to the value of the claims, not their viability. Class Counsel has discretion to evaluate claims in a manner that recognizes that some categories of claims are more compelling than others, and to treat them accordingly. However, in the context of a class settlement, class members need not prove they would prevail at trial — a point on which both parties ultimately agreed at the hearing on this matter. Tr. at 19-20. Rather, the claim need only be viable. Accordingly, Class Counsel may choose to apply a lower recovery rate to these sorts of claims based on their value relative to other categories of claims, but this is different from determining that the claims are not viable at all.

Likewise, Class Counsel's contention that this category of claim is too fact-specific to be subject to class-wide relief goes to the appropriateness of the process Objecting Members pursued rather than the viability of the claim. The FTAIA II Order establishes that incorporated capacitor claims of the type alleged here are potentially viable. The Court's order granting class certification did not expressly foreclose incorporated capacitor claims [*67] and indeed those claims were made by class members in both the first and second settlement rounds following certification. Accordingly, while the process that Objecting Members have selected to vindicate their claims may diminish the value of those claims, it does not bear on whether those claims are ultimately viable as a matter of law for DPPs.

Accordingly, without judging their merits, the Special Master finds that incorporated capacitor claims alleged by Objecting Members that are sufficiently analogous to those that survived summary judgment in the FTAIA II proceeding, are viable. The Special Master addresses separately the effect of the procedural posture on those claims.

C. Appropriateness of Procedural Posture

Class Counsel makes a compelling argument that even if Objecting Members (and some other DPPs) have potentially viable incorporated capacitor claims and even if those claims are released in this settlement, it is Class Counsel's prerogative not to pursue them, if doing so would be damaging to the Class as a whole.

Class Counsel argues that Objecting Members chose the wrong process by which to address their incorporated capacitor claims, and that Class Counsel is within its [*68] discretion not to pursue them in future rounds or to allocate funds to them now to the detriment of the class as a whole. Class Counsel suggests that other DPPs may have incorporated capacitor claims that they did not bring because they were too individualized, and that they sacrificed those claims for the advantages of gaining class-wide relief. Class Counsel commends Flextronics as having made an appropriate choice that was equally available to the Objecting Members to opt out from the class and make a particularized showing to establish that the transaction affected import commerce and/or had a domestic effect in the United States. Objecting Members, Class Counsel complains, want to have it both ways. If they wished to pursue these claims, they should either have objected to the settlement or opted out so that they could make their showing to the Court as Flextronics did.

Class Counsel also condemns Cisco's approach of seeking to recover claims on behalf of Foxconn, Jabil, Celestica, and Flextronics based on assignments obtained post-litigation. Class Counsel notes that how Cisco and these companies wish to divvy up any settlements is a separate matter for them, and that Cisco is [*69] needlessly complicating this proceeding by demanding that it receive other parties' allocation in the first instance.

Objecting Members respond, essentially, that the approach they've pursued is the least worst option among a number of imperfect choices. Given their millions of dollars in "raw" capacitor claims and the uncertainty of the Court's treatment of incorporated capacitor claims, no option was ideal. Objecting Members point out that they have been consistent. They brought incorporated capacitor claims in the First Round, they preserved their right to do so in the Second Round, and they appropriately pressed those claims after receiving the Court's FTAIA II Order. Accordingly, their actions are neither incompatible with participation in the class nor a surprise to Class Counsel. They contend that they did not have to object to the settlement because, by its terms, the settlement did not exclude incorporated capacitor claims; if anything, they read the release to encompass such claims. Likewise, they maintain that they should not be forced to opt out of the class to pursue those claims. They urge that it would be unfair to deny them the efficiencies of class treatment merely [*70] because they have an additional sub-category of direct purchase claims that — while distinct — are still claims for capacitors that were ultimately shipped to the United States. Finally, they contend it is irrelevant whether they pursued these claims when other class members did not. Other class members were free to bring such claims in this round or pursue them in future rounds, and their decisions going forward will likely depend on the quality of those claims, their resources, and other such factors. Out of a sense of fairness, they have suggested procedures by which other DPPs would be able to make Second Round claims for incorporated capacitors as well.[15]

Finally, with respect to assignments, Cisco contends that its approach is neither inefficient nor improper. It notes that as the holder of assignments from Foxconn, Celestica, Jabil, and Flextronics, Cisco stands in their shoes and so is the appropriate party to obtain relief for losses they incurred. Paying these claims directly to Cisco is thus appropriate and more efficient than Class Counsel's approach of paying the wrong party and then requiring Cisco to obtain those funds through a private process.

While there is merit in [*71] both parties' positions, this simply confirms that — in fact — this issue requires a choice among various imperfect processes for resolving these claims. There is obviously some tension in having incorporated capacitor claims brought in the DPP class because the volume of these claims may swamp the recovery of plaintiffs who do not have such claims. But incorporated capacitor claims are not inherently antagonistic to those of other class members. The volume of both types of claims may vary by plaintiff. To the extent that incorporated capacitors are a subcategory of DPP claims, any member of the class is equally capable of pursuing them. Requiring them to either opt out to preserve those claims, or remain in the class and forego those claims, does not seem necessary. And, to the extent that there was any ambiguity about the scope of the release or the availability of such claims in this proceeding, all plaintiffs were equally capable of pursuing them as Objecting Members did, or to object earlier to demand greater clarity.

Moreover, the choice that Objecting Members made is not cost-free. As noted, had Objecting Members chosen a different path, they would have been entitled to seek [*72] full recovery of their claims (rather than a portion of a settlement) and they would not be subject to Class Counsel's discretion in allocating settlement proceeds towards those claims. As noted, Class Counsel has discretion to take into account the percentage of recovery for categories of claims where the law is well-settled versus those where the merits are more iffy and attenuated.

Accordingly, the Special Master finds that Objecting Members' incorporated capacitor claims may proceed with these claims through the settlement allocation process.

D. Sufficiency of Objecting Members' Showing

[15] To prevent prejudice to other Second Round claimants with significant incorporated capacitor claims, Objecting Members have proposed that the Court direct that the claim deadline for the Second Round be reopened and merged with the upcoming Third Round for the Nichicon and Rubycon settlements. MDL Dkt. No. 473 at 15 n. 14. They propose sending updated information to all Second and Third Round claimants advising them of the opportunity to include incorporated capacitor claims. Id. Because the Third Round claims are not before the Special Master and this is a matter of Court administration for the Court and the parties, the Special Master defers on this suggestion.

Having determined that incorporated capacitor claims are encompassed in the settlement release, that — with one exception[16] — the accuracy of Objecting Members' incorporated capacitor claims are not in dispute, that such claims are legally viable, and that they may be pursued through the settlement allocation process, issues nonetheless remain regarding Objecting Members' showing with respect to the appropriateness of a pro rata allocation of these claims from the settlement proceeds.

Under the stipulation, Class Counsel may have agreed to accept the extent of damages claimed (excluding the NCC/UCC claims), [*73] but as Class Counsel noted at hearing, that does not equate to agreeing that the Objecting Members have made a sufficient showing that they would have a reasonable chance of prevailing on such a claim. In fact, Class Counsel argues that Objecting Members have as yet failed to provide essential information demonstrating at least one key element of their claim. Specifically, Class Counsel contends Objecting Members would need to establish that these Settling Defendants were actually aware that Objecting Members intended the capacitors they purchased through Aptiv's non-U.S. entities, Cisco's non-U.S. entities, or Jabril, Celestica, Foxconn, or Flextronics were for finished products to be delivered to the United States. Class Counsel also suggests that while the parties may have stipulated to the Objecting Members' calculation of the losses they sustained from over-priced capacitors, Class Counsel has not stipulated to the percentage of sales that Settling Defendants reasonably anticipated would go to the United States. This concern raises two separate issues — the applicable legal standard regarding Defendants' state of knowledge, and the quality of evidence required to establish what [*74] the Defendants did or should have known about the percentage of sales that would be shipped to the United States.

The parties disagree about the law regarding an FTAIA defendant's state of mind Class Counsel argues that the evidence provided to it by Cisco does not demonstrate that anyone other than Cisco and Aptiv was aware of where these items would ultimately be delivered. Tr. at 67. Class Counsel states that "the test of the FTAIA is whether it would be expected by that defendant that [the sale] would have an impact [in the U.S.]. I don't see anything in. . . the November 12, 2018 [declaration] that says why any defendant would have any expectation about anything. . . . There isn't anything that supports any intent of what the defendants would have been anticipating in terms of an impact in the U.S." Tr. at 67. Although Objecting Members provided records of large volumes of incorporated capacitor products acquired by Cisco and Aptiv (or their agents) being shipped to the U.S., those records do not concern the state of knowledge of defendants at the time of sale. In response, Objecting Members' position at the hearing was simply, "[T]here's no mens rea requirement under the FTAIA. [*75] Full stop." Tr. at 72.

On the issue of the relevant legal standard, the Special Master finds that Class Counsel is essentially correct. As the Court noted in the FTAIA II decision, "the domestic effects exception states that conduct involving non-import trade or commerce with foreign nations is subject to the Sherman Act only if. . . the conduct had a 'direct, substantial and reasonably foreseeable effect' on U.S. domestic commerce. FTAIA II Order at 10 (quoting 15 U.S.C. Sec. 6a(1) (2012)) (emphasis added).

The exact type of knowledge possessed by, or attributed to, a defendant required by the FTAIA is not well-settled (like many other aspects of the FTAIA). See, e.g., Comment, From Sea to Shining Sea: A New Approach to Interpreting the Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act, 64 Emory L.J., 869, 897-905 (2015). The FTAIA was a legislative response designed largely to codify United States v. Aluminum Co. of America (Alcoa), 148 F.2d 416, 444 (2d Cir. 1945). The U.S. Supreme Court in Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. California, 509 U.S. 764, 774-76, 113 S. Ct. 2891, 125 L. Ed. 2d 612 (1993), appeared to adopt the intent standard established in Alcoa, that Sherman Act liability "applies to foreign conduct that was meant to produce and did in fact produce some substantial effect in the United States." Id. at 796. Other lower courts have subsequently adopted this standard as well. See, e.g., Carrier Corp. v. Outokumpu Oyj, 673 F.3d 430, 438 (6th Cir. 2012). Other courts however have applied an objective standard to the knowledge requirement in the FTAIA, observing that this element is satisfied [*76] only if a direct and substantial effect on U.S. commerce would have been foreseeable to a reasonable person. In Animal Science Products, Inc. v. China Minmetals Corp., 654 F.3d 462, 471 (3rd Cir. 2011), the Third Circuit vacated and remanded a case that had dismissed an FTAIA action based on lack of evidence of defendants' intent, holding that the standard for "reasonably foreseeable" was "whether the alleged domestic effect would have been evident to a reasonable person making practical business judgments."

While the Court need not resolve this issue in the settlement context, it is clear that Objecting Members need to come forward with at least some showing in order to establish the scope of Settling Defendants' liability, and hence the reasonable value of their claims. Notably, in the Court's FTAIA II decision, the plaintiff Flextronics "presented evidence that defendants sold capacitors to Flex Affiliates knowing that the capacitors would be incorporated into goods that were intended to be (and were) shipped to the U.S." FTAIA II Order at 8 (quoting Dkt. No. 1722-3 at 20 n.20).[17] Accordingly, there is a mens rea requirement under the FTAIA in that, at the very least, it must be reasonably foreseeable to a defendant that its sale of goods at artificially inflated prices [*77] will be shipped to the United States where it will have an effect on U.S. commerce.

Objecting Members may be able to make a fair argument based on existing evidence that — given the massive volume of capacitor purchases for eventual delivery into the United States presented here — it should have been reasonably foreseeable that some percentage of sales were destined to the U.S. At the hearing, Objecting Members argued that Cisco's business partners would certainly know what's in the public record about the percentage of Cisco's business that comes into the United States, and stated that — if necessary — Cisco could make a showing as strong as Flextronics did in the FTAIA II summary judgment proceeding. Tr. at 67-68.

In this respect, Objecting Members have an imperfect vehicle for resolving this dispute, but it is the vehicle they chose. While Objecting Members could likely establish that Settling Defendants knew that some percentage of capacitor sales to Cisco, Aptiv, Flextronics, Jabil, Celestica, and Foxconn were probably destined for the United States market, what percentage was reasonably foreseeable is likely harder to prove and is subject to an uncertain standard. [*78] Objecting Members argue that Settling Defendants had constructive notice that establishes subjective intent because of various indicia that a product was intended for shipment to the U.S., including the voltage, certain NHTSA requirements, or the PPAP test. Tr. at 56-57. Even if this is so, Class Counsel generally should not be put to the burden of conducting a summary judgment-like proceeding. Here, Class Counsel would be required to consider Objecting Members' evidence of the state of mind of Defendants concerning the percentage of their sales that were likely to be shipped to the U.S., because that percentage bears upon the amount to which Objecting Members would ultimately be entitled.

The evidentiary challenge here is not insignificant. It is not in the record — let alone established — that all capacitors in products shipped to the U.S. are differentiated based on whether a product will be subject to NHTSA requirements, the PPAP test, U.S. voltage requirements, or some other unique signature feature. Moreover, past dealings may be relevant even under an objective standard. For example, if the percentage of purchases that went to the United States varied substantially from year [*79] to year, the Settling Defendants may not be in a position to reasonably estimate the impact of their sales outside the United States that would ultimately have a direct effect on U.S. commerce. In short, that may not be reasonably foreseeable to a Settling Defendant such that Class Counsel would deem the claim viable.

Class Counsel has an obligation to the class not to simply accept a ballpark guess as to the actual dimensions of Objecting Members' adequately documented claims for incorporated capacitors. Although Class Counsel has stipulated to the accuracy of the numbers presented by Objecting Members for final sales of incorporated capacitors, it is also fair to acknowledge that this number has jumped around quite a bit during the course of these proceedings. As Class Counsel correctly recounted, Cisco's incorporated capacitor claims alone jumped from $81 million in July 2017, to $429 million in October 2017, to $488 million in February 2018, to $493 million in April 2018, to $199 million in November 2018, to $142 million in March 2019. In fact, the Special Master notes that while Cisco's opening brief on its Motion originally sought $154,050,329.40 in supplemental commerce for [17] The Hsiung case from the Ninth Circuit, on which the Court relies, cites with approval other cases noting that defendants' conduct must be "directed at a U.S. import market,' even if the defendants did not engage in importation of products into the United States." Hsiung, 778 F.3d at 755 n.8 (quoting Animal Sci. Prods., Inc. v. China Minmetals Corp., 654 F.3d 462, 471 & n. 11 (3rd Cir. 2011)).

incorporated [*80] capacitors, it reduced that figure to $142,070,717.01 in its Reply Brief. MDL Dkt. No. 496 at 8 n.3. This drop of over $12 million between February 8, 2019 and March 1, 2019 in the same pleading does not afford Class Counsel much confidence in the reliability of the figures regarding what Settling Defendants reasonably should or should not have known about the ultimate destination of various capacitor sales. Those numbers matter, however, because any overpayment to Objecting Members would come at the expense of compensating other DPP class members.

Based on these circumstances and the preceding rulings, the Special Master recommends that Objecting Members be allowed — within 20 days of any final order by the Court approving this Report — to present their best evidence to Class Counsel of the percentage of their respective incorporated capacitor claims that Settling Defendants either knew or should reasonably have foreseen being shipped to the United States. Class Counsel may then determine in the interest of the entire class whether the evidence is sufficient, which may include disallowing some percentage of that claim, or applying a uniform discount to this category of claims, or some [*81] other method to account for the uncertain value of this category of claims relative to claims for unincorporated capacitors. If the Court determines that this is in the interest of judicial efficiency, any hearing on the reasonableness of this final figure would be subject to the Special Master's review.

Conclusion

The Objecting Members' incorporated capacitor claims are deemed to be subject to the Second Round settlement and release, and are viable, and compensable through the allocation process. The amount of those claims is subject to proof regarding the scope of such claims that were reasonably foreseeable to the Settling Defendants, and may be further discounted based on their relative viability and in the interest of fairness to the class as a whole. Issues of reopening any claims dates in this round is referred back to the Court. The Objecting Members should provide the further information required in the Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law set forth above, including any adjustments based on the NCC/UCC dispute, to Class Counsel within 20 days of a Court order approving this Report. The Special Master is available to resolve any further disputes regarding that process if they [*82] arise and at the discretion of the Court. Dated: 7/30/19

CIVIL MINUTES — GENERAL

PROCEEDINGS: (IN CHAMBERS) ORDER GRANTING DEFENDANT'S MOTION TO DISMISS (Doc. 16)

Before the Court is a Motion to Dismiss filed by Defendant Antech Diagnostics, Inc. (Mot., Doc. 16.) Plaintiffs Jill Patt and Little Critters Vet, LLC opposed. (Opp., Doc. 22.) Defendant replied. (Reply, Doc. 23.) After considering the briefs, holding oral argument, and taking the matter under submission, for the following reasons, the Court GRANTS Defendant's Motion.

I. Background

Plaintiff Dr. Jill Patt, D.V.M. is a veterinarian and Plaintiff Little Critters is the corporate entity through which she operates her veterinary practice. (Compl., Doc. 1 ¶¶ 1-2.) Both are citizens of Arizona. (Id. ¶¶ 1-2, 4.) Defendant is a California corporation that provides laboratory testing services. (Id. ¶¶ 3, 8.) Plaintiffs allege that Defendant wields substantial market share because it has only one competitor in the national market for veterinary lab diagnostic services, provides such services to over 19,000 animal hospitals throughout [*2] North America, and receives daily up to 45,000 samples for testing. (Id. ¶¶ 47-48.)

Plaintiffs allege that Defendant "represents that its lab results are of high quality and can be trusted because, among other things, it claims to employ high quality staff." (Id. ¶¶ 3, 8.) Plaintiffs claim that Defendant's website represents that:

> No one better understands the importance of quality patient care and the value of accurate, dependable diagnostic testing than VCA ANTECH . . . Dependable testing is more than technology; accurate and dependable results rely on highly skilled and trained technicians. Each and every ANTECH Laboratory Technician is under daily QA/QC programs designed to ensure accurate results while receiving annual mandatory testing to insure their skills and knowledge are second to none.

(Id. ¶ 11.) Plaintiffs allege that Dr. Patt relied on such representations in choosing to enter a contract with Defendant. (Id.)

On July 6, 2017, Dr. Patt entered a contract for laboratory testing services with Defendant (the "Services Agreement"). (Id. ¶ 11.) Among other terms, the Services Agreement requires that: with limited exception, Dr. Patt direct all of Little Critters's laboratory testing [*3] needs to be exclusively performed by Defendant; Dr. Patt purchase an annual minimum amount of $24,000 in services; and Defendant issue to Dr. Patt a $12,000 loan, with 7% annual interest, to be partially forgiven on an annual basis if Dr. Patt fulfills the corresponding year's minimum purchase. (Id. ¶¶ 15-17.) The Services Agreement has a term of six years. (Id. ¶ 15.)

In December 2017, Dr. Patt allegedly began to have concerns with the accuracy of Defendant's lab results. The Complaint chronicles several instances over the ensuing six months where Dr. Patt alleges she was furnished inaccurate lab results. (Id. ¶¶ 21-22, 29-30.) Plaintiffs allege there are "[m]any more documented false lab results" in addition to those examples. (Id. ¶ 22.) The Complaint also describes Dr. Patt's effort to raise her concerns regarding the alleged inaccurate test results with Defendant. (Id. ¶¶ 21-23, 26.) In response to her concerns, Defendant would sometimes, but not always, furnish corrected results. (Id. ¶¶ 23-24.)

Plaintiffs allege that Defendant "does not disclose and actively conceals the high level of incorrect lab results that it generates." (Id. ¶ 10.) Plaintiffs further allege that Dr. Patt [*4] would not have entered into the Services Agreement if she had known that Defendant provides false lab results. (Id.) Likewise, Plaintiffs claim that reasonable veterinarians would not enter into similar agreements if they knew "the significant amount of false lab results that [Defendant] reports to veterinarians." (Id. ¶ 68.) Plaintiffs allege that Defendant's inaccuracies are primarily driven by human error due to poor working conditions and labor cost-cutting measures that undermine accurate testing efforts and protocols. (Id. ¶¶ 32-35.)

Along with raising concerns regarding the accuracy of Defendant's test results, Plaintiffs allege that Dr. Patt repeatedly requested to modify the Services Agreement and that such requests went unanswered. (Id. ¶ 26.) On August 15, 2018, Defendant sent Dr. Patt a demand letter for breach of contract. (Id. ¶¶ 37-38; Exhibit B to Compl., Doc. 10-2.) Defendant's letter asserts that Dr. Patt breached the Services Agreement by failing to exclusively utilize Defendant for her testing needs. (Exhibit B to Compl. at 1.) The letter asserts damages of $298,704.76. (Id. at 2.) Plaintiffs allege that Defendant has threatened or filed similar suits against other veterinarians. [*5] (Compl. ¶¶ 36-44.)

Plaintiffs filed the instant action on September 19, 2018, bringing four causes of action: one each under the respective "fraudulent," "unlawful," and "unfair" business practices prongs of the California Unfair Competition Law, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq. ("UCL"), as well as a common law claim for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. (Compl. ¶¶ 60-86.) Plaintiffs' UCL claim of unlawful business practices is predicated on allegations that Defendant's conduct amounts to state and federal antitrust violations under 15 U.S.C §§ 1-2 ("Sherman Act"), 15 U.S.C §§ 14 ("Clayton Act"), and Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 16720, 16726-16727 ("Cartwright Act"). (Compl. ¶¶ 73-78.)

II. Legal Standard

In deciding a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6), courts must accept as true all "well-pleaded factual allegations" in a complaint. Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 679, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). A court must draw all reasonable inferences in the light most favorable to the non-moving party. See Daniels-Hall v. Nat'l Educ. Ass'n, 629 F.3d 992, 998 (9th Cir. 2010). Yet, "courts 'are not bound to accept as true a legal conclusion couched as a factual allegation.'" Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007) (quoting Papasan v. Allain, 478 U.S. 265, 286, 106 S. Ct. 2932, 92 L. Ed. 2d 209 (1986)). "To survive a motion to dismiss, a complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to 'state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.'" Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678 (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570). "A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff [*6] pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Id. (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556). A plaintiff must not merely allege conduct that is conceivable; "[w]hen a complaint pleads facts that are merely consistent with a defendant's liability, it stops short of the line between possibility and plausibility of entitlement to relief." Id. (internal quotation marks omitted).

III. Discussion

The facts of this case resemble a run-of-the-mill contract dispute. Plaintiffs contracted to pay Defendant for certain services. At some point, Plaintiffs became unsatisfied with and ceased to purchase those services. Defendant threatened suit for breach and Plaintiffs now bring suit to vindicate their own injuries caused by Defendant's allegedly inadequate performance. Plaintiffs' legal theories, however, are anything but ordinary. Plaintiffs brings no claims for express breach or nonperformance; rather, Plaintiffs claim fraud, antitrust violations, and breach of an implied covenant. The Court examines each in turn.

A. UCL Claims

"The UCL prohibits, and provides civil remedies for, unfair competition, which it defines as 'any unlawful, unfair [*7] or fraudulent business act or practice.'" Kwikset Corp. v. Superior Court, 51 Cal. 4th 310, 320, 120 Cal. Rptr. 3d 741, 246 P.3d 877 (2011) (quoting Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200). "Its purpose 'is to protect both consumers and competitors by promoting fair competition in commercial markets for goods and services.'" Id. (quoting Kasky v. Nike, Inc. 27 Cal. 4th 939, 949, 119 Cal. Rptr. 2d 296, 45 P.3d 243 (2002)). "The UCL's scope is broad. By defining unfair competition to include any unlawful [] business act or practice, the UCL permits violations of other laws to be treated as unfair competition that is independently actionable." Kasky, 27 Cal. 4th at 949 (internal quotation marks omitted) (emphasis original). Moreover, "[b]y defining unfair competition to include also any unfair or fraudulent business act or practice, the UCL sweeps within its scope acts and practices not specifically proscribed by any other law." Id. (internal quotation marks and citations omitted) (emphasis original).

Plaintiffs bring three causes of action under the UCL: one count under each of the statute's three prongs. Specifically, Plaintiffs assert that Defendant's conduct violates the UCL as follows:

> (1) Defendant's conduct is unlawful because it violates certain antitrust statutes;
> (2) Defendant's conduct is fraudulent, even if otherwise lawful, because it misrepresents the quality of Defendant's services; and
> (3) Defendant's conduct is [*8] unfair, even if otherwise not violative of the UCL.

(Opp. at 2-18.)

1. Unlawful Business Practices

"With respect to the unlawful prong of section 17200, it is clear that "[v]irtually any state, federal, or local law can serve as the predicate." Friedman v. AARP, Inc., 855 F.3d 1047, 1052 (9th Cir. 2017) (citing People ex rel. Lockyer v. Fremont Life Insurance Co., 104 Cal.App.4th 508, 128 Cal. Rptr. 2d 463 (2002)). Here, Plaintiff avers predicate violations of multiple antitrust statutes, namely the federal Sherman Act and Clayton Act, as well as analogous portions of California's Cartwright Act.

i. Sherman Act

a. Section 1

Section 1 of the Sherman Act prohibits any "contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce." 15 U.S.C. § 1. "To state a claim under Section 1, a plaintiff must allege facts that, if true, will prove: (1) the existence of a conspiracy, (2) intention on the part of the co-conspirators to restrain trade, and (3) actual injury to competition. Coalition for ICANN Transparency, Inc. v. VeriSign, Inc., 611 F.3d 495, 501-02 (9th Cir. 2010) (citing Kendall v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., 518 F.3d 1042, 1047 (9th Cir.2008)). A conspiracy exists where "defendants 'ha[ve] a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective.'" County of Tuolumne v. Sonora Community Hospital, 236 F.3d 1148, 1155 (9th Cir. 2001) (quoting Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Services Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 764, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 (1984)).

Plaintiffs do not adequately allege the existence of a conspiracy or intention on the part of any co-conspirators to restrain trade. The Complaint charges only one defendant and identifies no other parties accused of misconduct. Unless the Court accepts [*9] that the exclusivity provision of the Services Agreement amounts to a conspiracy between Plaintiffs and Defendant to restrain trade—which the Court doubts is Plaintiffs' intended allegation—there is no adequate allegation of conspiracy. Accordingly, Plaintiffs fail to state a claim under Section 1 of the Sherman Act.

b. Section 2

In contrast to Section 1, violations of Section 2 of the Sherman Act turn on the conduct of a single entity in its exercise of monopoly power to restrain competition. "There are three essential elements to a successful claim of Section 2 monopolization: (a) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market; (b) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power; and (c) causal 'antitrust' injury." Allied Orthopedic Appliances Inc. v. Tyco Health Care Group. LP, 592 F.3d 991, 998 (9th Cir. 2010).

As to the first factor, Plaintiffs argue that Defendant wields over 50% market share in the relevant market and that such share is "sufficient to raise the specter of monopolization" in the present circumstances. (Opp. at 11 (citing Rebel Oil Co. v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 51 F.3d 1421, 1438 (9th Cir. 1995)).) Sidestepping the question of whether claims of a certain level of market share may serve as a proxy for allegations of actual monopoly power, however, Plaintiffs allege no facts to support a plausible inference that Defendant holds worrying market share in the first place. A lone [*10] allegation that Defendant has one major competitor does not say anything about those entities' relative size, scope of operations and services, or other indicia of market share. Similarly, Plaintiffs' references to the bare the numbers of contracting facilities and daily receipt of samples by Defendant mean little absent contextualizing facts about competitors and the overall market. Thus, Plaintiffs do not adequately plead that Defendant has monopoly power, or even adequate market share to suggest such power.

As to the third factor, the Court finds that Plaintiffs do not sufficiently allege causal antitrust injury. "Antitrust injury is made up of four elements: "(1) unlawful conduct, (2) causing an injury to the plaintiff, (3) that flows from that which makes the conduct unlawful, and (4) that is of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent." Glen Holly Entertainment, Inc. v. Tektronix, Inc., 352 F.3d 367, 372 (9th Cir. 2003) (internal quotation marks omitted). Plaintiffs do not argue that they suffered anticompetitive prices—the prototypical injury antitrust laws are designed to prevent—but instead argue that the pervasive inaccuracy of Defendant's test results is a degradation of quality "of the type the antitrust laws were designed to prevent . . . [M]onopolistic [*11] companies often allow the quality of the goods and services they provide to degrade in order to reap supracompetitive profits because they have no incentive to compete on quality they way firms do in a typical market." (Opp. at 14 (citing Telex Corp. v. International Business Machines Corp., 510 F.2d 894, 913 (10th Cir. 1975)).)

Assuming without deciding that Plaintiffs correctly state the law as to their type of alleged injury, they do not adequately plead facts from which one could infer that such injury was caused by or otherwise flowed from Defendant's monopoly power. Particularly, the Complaint lacks any allegations that the quality of Defendant's testing is any less than would be found in a competitive environment. Indeed, Plaintiffs allege neither an industry-standard rate of erroneous lab results, nor the degree to which Defendant's lab results deviated from such a rate. Plaintiffs do not even allege the precise rate of inaccuracy, and Plaintiffs' counsel was unable to state such a figure when requested by the Court at oral argument. Moreover, even assuming an actual deficit from competitive-level quality, Plaintiffs must allege facts that show how such a deficit arose by way of Defendant's exercise of monopoly power. As pleaded, the Complaint alleges that Defendant's allegedly [*12] poor quality of services is due to efforts to cut labor costs—a hallmark of corporations that are looking to stay viable in a competitive marketplace.

As noted above, the Complaint largely indicates that Plaintiffs were dissatisfied with a service they purchased and are piggybacking antitrust claims onto a simple contract dispute. Plaintiffs' alleged facts offer no reason to believe that the quality of Defendant's services—if even if assumed to be less than a competitive marketplace would warrant—is directly traceable to anti-competitive conduct rather than any of the myriad reasons that competitive firms offer products and services that ultimately do not live up to a particular consumer's standards. Plaintiffs' argument suggests that any consumer dissatisfied with the quality of a product or service purchased from a company possessing significant market share could state a claim for antitrust violation. That is not the law. Viable antitrust claims require plausible allegations of particular anti-competitive conduct as the source of an antitrust-type injury. Without facts to build a bridge from Defendant's supposed monopoly power to Plaintiffs' alleged injuries in receiving diminished-quality [*13] services, Plaintiffs allegations are merely consistent with Defendant's holding of such power and stop short of the line of plausible entitlement to relief. Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678.[1]

ii. Clayton Act

As codified at 15 U.S.C. § 14, the Clayton Act prohibits price manipulation and monopolization of "goods, wares, merchandise, machinery, supplies, or other commodities." Defendant argues that its testing services at issue here are not covered by the statute. (Mot. at 16; Reply at 15-16.) Plaintiffs insist the Clayton Act applies to Defendant's testing because the Services Agreement contemplates the use of certain sample collection and shipping vessels, which are goods. (Opp. at 16-17.)

The Ninth Circuit has adopted the "'dominant nature' standard to determine if transactions are for sale of services or goods." May Department Store v. Graphic Process Co., 637 F.2d 1211, 1215 (9th Cir. 1980). Under that standard, courts acknowledge that "[v]irtually no transfer of an intangible in the nature of a service, right, or privilege can be accomplished without the incidental involvement of tangibles . . . [Therefore,] in such circumstances[,] the dominant nature of the transaction must control in determining whether it falls within the provisions of the Act." Tri-State Broad. Co. v. United Press International, Inc., 369 F.2d 268, 270 (5th Cir. 1966).

Here, any tangible testing supplies are plainly incidental to Defendant's [*14] testing services, which form the core of the Services Agreement and the instant dispute. Accordingly, Plaintiffs do not state a claim for a Clayton Act violation.

1 Because the Court finds that Plaintiffs' allegations are insufficient as to the essential elements of monopoly power and antitrust injury, the Court declines to address the element of willfulness.

iii. Cartwright Act

Like Section 1 of the Sherman Act, which requires a "combination" or "conspiracy" to restrain trade, Section 16720 of the Cartwright Act requires restraint be carried out by "a combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more persons." Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16720. Hence, because "the Cartwright Act and the federal Sherman Act share similar language and objectives, California courts often look to federal precedents under the Sherman Act for guidance." Fisherman's Wharf Bay Cruise Corp. v. Superior Court of San Francisco, 114 Cal. App. 4th 309, 334, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 628 (2003) (collecting cases). Similarly, "Section 16727, added to the Cartwright Act in 1961, was patterned after section 3 of the federal Clayton Act, and cases interpreting [the] Clayton Act section 3 are applicable when construing section 16727." Morrison v. Viacom, Inc., 66 Cal. App. 4th 534, 541, 78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 133, 137 (1998). Therefore, Plaintiffs' failure to state claims under either the Sherman Act or Clayton Act dooms their respective claims under the Cartwright Act.

Because they do not sufficiently allege the elements of their asserted predicate statutory violations, Plaintiffs UCL claim for unlawful business practices is dismissed.

2. Fraudulent Business Practices

Plaintiffs allege that Defendant made deceptive and misleading [*15] claims regarding the "accuracy and dependability of its lab results." (Compl. ¶ 69.) Under the UCL, such claims "are governed by the 'reasonable consumer' test. Williams v. Gerber Products Co., 552 F.3d 934, 938 (9th Cir. 2008) (citing Freeman v. Time, Inc., 68 F.3d 285, 289). "Under the reasonable consumer standard, [Plaintiffs] must 'show that members of the public are likely to be deceived.'" Id. (quoting Freeman, 68 F.3d at 288); see also Kasky, 27 Cal. 4th at 951. Plaintiffs posits two inverse theories of deception: first, that Defendant deceptively affirmatively misrepresented the accuracy of its lab results; second, that Defendant deceptively omitted the inaccuracy of its lab results. (Opp. at 2-7.) Distinct standards govern each theory. See e.g., Elias v. Hewlett-Packard Co., 950 F. Supp. 2d 1123, 1132-36 (N.D. Cal. 2013) (employing separate analyses for distinct theories of deception by affirmative misrepresentation and deception by omission).

i. Affirmative Misrepresentation

Plaintiffs allege that Defendant's marketing materials contain the following statements:

> No one better understands the importance of quality patient care and the value of accurate, dependable diagnostic testing than VCA ANTECH . . . Dependable testing is more than technology; accurate and dependable results rely on highly skilled and trained technicians. Each and every ANTECH Laboratory Technician is under daily QA/QC programs designed to ensure [*16] accurate results while receiving annual mandatory testing to insure their skills and knowledge are second to none.

(Compl. ¶ 8.) Plaintiffs aver that these representations were "intended to and did create the false impression that [Defendant] manages its laboratory technician staff in such a way as to insure accurate and dependable test results." (Id.; see also Opp. at 6-7.) Defendant contends that such statements cannot be misleading as a matter of law because they amount to mere nonactionable puffery. (Mot. at 8-10; Reply at 5-7.)

"To be actionable as an affirmative misrepresentation, a statement must make a 'specific and measurable claim, capable of being proved false or of being reasonably interpreted as a statement of objective fact.'" Vitt v. Apple Computer, Inc., 469 F. App'x 605, 607 (9th Cir. 2012) (quoting Coastal Abstract Services v. First American Title Insurance Co., 173 F.3d 725, 731 (9th Cir.1999)). "[P]roduct superiority claims that are vague or highly subjective often amount to nonactionable puffery, [whereas] misdescriptions of specific or absolute characteristics of a product are actionable." Southland Sod Farms v. Stover Seed Co., 108 F.3d 1134, 1145 (9th Cir. 1997) (internal quotation marks and citations omitted). Whether an alleged misrepresentation is an absolute statement of fact or mere puffery is a question of law appropriate for decision on a motion to dismiss. Cook, Perkiss & Liehe, Inc. v. Northern California Collection Service, Inc., 911 F.2d 242, 245 (9th Cir. 1990).

Defendant cites a number of persuasive opinions [*17] demonstrating a virtual consensus among courts in the Ninth Circuit that generalized claims of dependability, reliability, or accuracy are mere nonactionable puffery. *See Shields v. Alere Home Monitoring, Inc., 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 156148, 2015 WL 7272672, at 10 (N.D. Cal. Nov. 18, 2015) (finding "accurate and reliable" to be nonactionable puffery); Annunziato v. eMachines, Inc., 402 F. Supp. 2d 1133, 1140 (C.D. Cal. 2005) ("reliability"); *Long v. Hewlett-Packard Co., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 79262, 2007 WL 2994812, at 7 (N.D. Cal. July 27, 2007), aff'd, 316 F. App'x 585 (9th Cir. 2009) ("reliable"); Tietsworth v. Sears, 720 F. Supp. 2d 1123, 1136 (N.D. Cal. 2010) ("designed and manufactured for years of dependable operation"); Summit Technology, Inc. v. High-Line Medical Instruments, Co., 933 F. Supp. 918, 931 (C.D. Cal. 1996) ("reliable"); Elias, 950 F. Supp. 2d 1123, 1133 (N.D. Cal. 2013) ("ultra-reliable"). Plaintiffs, however, cite only to Rutledge v. Hewlett-Packard Co., 238 Cal. App. 4th 1164, 1176, 190 Cal. Rptr. 3d 411 (2015), which is not on point. That case addressed whether certain representations of reliability triggered a duty to disclose a latent defect under an omission theory of misrepresentation, not whether such representations were themselves actionable affirmative misrepresentation. Id. Considering the weight of authority favoring Defendant's position, the Court concludes that Defendant's representations that it provides "accurate, dependable diagnostic testing" and implements protocols designed to "ensure accurate results" are nonactionable puffery and therefore cannot be said to deceive a reasonable consumer as a matter of law.[2]

ii. Omission

"For an omission to be actionable [*18] under the [] UCL, 'the omission must be contrary to a representation actually made by the defendant, or an omission of a fact the defendant was obliged to disclose.'" Elias, 950 F. Supp. 2d at 1134 (quoting Daugherty v. American Honda Motor Co., 144 Cal. App. 4th 824, 835, 51 Cal. Rptr. 3d 118 (2006)). "[A] failure to disclose a fact one has no affirmative duty to disclose is [not] 'likely to deceive' anyone within the meaning of the UCL." Daugherty, 144 Cal. App. 4th at 838. "A failure to disclose a fact can constitute actionable fraud or deceit in four circumstances: (1) when the defendant is the plaintiff's fiduciary; (2) when the defendant has exclusive knowledge of material facts not known or reasonably accessible to the plaintiff; (3) when the defendant actively conceals a material fact from the plaintiff; and (4) when the defendant makes partial representations that are misleading because some other material fact has not been disclosed." Collins v. eMachines, Inc., 202 Cal. App. 4th at 255-56 (2011) (citing LiMandri v. Judkins, 52 Cal. App. 4th 326, 336, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 539 (1997)).

Here, the parties primarily dispute the "materiality" of Defendant's alleged omissions. "A misrepresentation is judged to be 'material' if a reasonable man would attach importance to its existence or nonexistence in determining his choice of action in the transaction in question." Engalla v. Permanente Medical Group, Inc., 15 Cal. 4th 951, 977, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 843, 938 P.2d 903 (1997) (internal quotation marks omitted); see also Collins, 202 Cal. App. 4th at 256.

Plaintiffs claim that "[Defendant] does [*19] not disclose and actively conceals the high level of incorrect lab results that it generates." (Compl. ¶ 10.) Allegedly, such "representations regarding the accuracy and dependability of its lab results and its concealment of the significant amount of false lab results that it reports to veterinarians . . . induced reasonable veterinarians, including [Dr. Patt], to enter into Exclusive Agreements with [Defendant] which they otherwise would not have entered into." (Id. ¶ 68.) Plaintiffs' materiality arguments, however, put the cart before the horse because Plaintiffs have not sufficiently alleged the "fact" that is supposedly omitted, i.e., the "significant amount" or "high level" of incorrect lab results provided by defendant. Plaintiffs argue that they are not required to allege a certain threshold number or rate of inaccuracy at the pleading stage to allege materiality. (Opp. at 3-4 (citing Herron v. Best Buy Co., 924 F. Supp. 2d 1161, 1174 (E.D. Cal. 2013).) But this argument is inapposite. Even assuming that Plaintiffs are not required to clear some numerical or rate threshold of materiality, Plaintiffs are still required to put forth some facts to support their claims that the occurrence of inaccurate lab results are "significant" and at a "high level" [*20] such that a reasonable consumer would be misled by nondisclosure.

[2] Defendant's representation that "[e]ach and every ANTECH Laboratory Technician is under daily QA/QC programs designed to ensure accurate results" is not mere puffery per se. See Annunziato, 402 F. Supp. 2d at 1140-41 (C.D. Cal. 2005) (finding representation of use of the "most stringent quality control tests" to be actionable because it "is a specific factual assertion which could be established or disproved through discovery"). Here, however, Plaintiffs do not allege misrepresentation as to the existence or extent of Defendant's daily programming. Rather, they allege misrepresentation as to the inferable outcome of such programming, i.e., accurate test results, which is nonactionable. For example, in Tietsworth, the court found an assertion that products were "designed, manufactured and tested for years of dependable operations," to be mere puffery. 720 F. Supp. 2d at 1137 (emphasis added). Defendant's assertion that certain programming is implemented to ensure accurate results is likewise nonactionable.

Put simply, Plaintiffs have not provided any facts indicating why a reasonable consumer would not enter into a contract for Defendant's services knowing the particular number or rate of nondisclosed inaccuracies alleged by Plaintiffs, whatever that may be. Yet, Plaintiffs allege that such particular level is critical to the question of materiality. The Complaint does not merely allege that a reasonable consumer would not enter a contract for Defendant's services knowing the possibility of any or a de minimis number of inaccuracies—as Plaintiffs' brief seems to imply. Rather, the Complaint indicates that a reasonable consumer would be misled by the Defendant's nondisclosure of some significant amount or high rate of error. The pleading, however, provides no indication of the error quantity or rate that Plaintiffs allege to be materially significant. Without doing so, the Complaint does not fairly notice Defendant of the misconduct with which it is charged. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556.

The Complaint does contain an allegation that Dr. Patt herself would not have contracted for Defendant's services "if she had known that it provides false lab results"—which [*21] is fairly read to include any or a de minimis number of inaccuracies. This allegation, however, does not cure the aforementioned deficiency because Dr. Patt does not necessarily stand in for the reasonable consumer. Her tolerance for error is apparently zero, but there are no allegations that reasonable consumers share her sentiments. To the contrary, as discussed above, Plaintiffs allege that reasonable consumers would be dissuaded by some elusive "high" and "significant" non-zero rate of error, but Plaintiffs then fail to sufficiently allege their self-described threshold.

Because they do not sufficiently allege deceptive misrepresentation, either by affirmation or omission, Plaintiffs UCL claim for fraudulent business practices is dismissed.

3. Unfair Business Practices

Under the UCL, "a practice may be deemed unfair even if not specifically proscribed by some other law." Cel-Tech Communications, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Telephone Co., 20 Cal. 4th 163, 180, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 (1999). Relying on Cel-Tech, Plaintiffs argue that Defendant's conduct is "unfair" under the UCL because it "violates the same policy or spirit as antitrust law violations, even [if] falling short of meeting every element of an antitrust violation." (Opp. at 18.) Cel-Tech, however, expressly limited itself to antitrust disputes [*22] between direct competitors. 20 Cal. 4th at 187 n. 12. Although there is some ambiguity as to the appropriate legal test to apply to allegations of unfair fraud or unfair and antitrust conduct affecting consumers, courts have consistently reached the same result in both of those contexts: holding "that where the unfair business practices alleged under the unfair prong of the UCL overlap entirely with the business practices addressed in the fraudulent and unlawful prongs of the UCL, the unfair prong of the UCL cannot survive if the claims under the other two prongs of the UCL do not survive." Hadley v. Kellogg Sales Co., 243 F. Supp. 3d 1074, 1104-05 (N.D. Cal. 2017); see also Chavez v. Whirlpool Corp., 93 Cal. App. 4th 363, 375, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 175 (2001) ("If the same conduct is alleged to be both an antitrust violation and an 'unfair' business act or practice for the same reason—because it unreasonably restrains competition and harms consumers— . . . a separate inquiry into essentially the same question under the unfair competition law would only invite conflict and uncertainty and could lead to the enjoining of procompetitive conduct."); LiveUniverse, Inc. v. MySpace, Inc., 304 F. App'x 554, 557 (9th Cir. 2008) ("Where . . . the same conduct is alleged to support both a plaintiff's federal antitrust claims and state-law unfair competition claim, a finding that the conduct is not an antitrust violation precludes a finding of unfair [*23] competition."); DocMagic, Inc.

v. Ellie Mae, Inc., 745 F. Supp. 2d 1119, 1147 (N.D. Cal. 2010); Punian v. Gillette Co., 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 34164, 2016 WL 1029607, at *17 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 15, 2016) (dismissing claims under the UCL's unfair prong that "overlap entirely" with insufficient claims of deception under the fraudulent prong); In re Actimmune Marketing Litigation, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 103408, 2009 WL 3740648, at *14 (N.D. Cal. Nov. 6, 2009), aff'd, 464 F. App'x 651 (9th Cir. 2011) (Where "[p]laintiffs suggest no other theory by which defendants' conduct could be considered unfair, but non-fraudulent, . . . [and] plaintiffs have not pled defendants' fraudulent conduct with sufficient specificity[,] . . . plaintiffs' claims under the unfair prong of the UCL must be dismissed as well.")

Accordingly, because Plaintiffs' claims for fraud and consumer antitrust violations are deficient, and they advance no other theory of "unfairness" under the UCL, Plaintiffs' claim under the unfair prong of the UCL is likewise dismissed.

B. Claim of Breach of Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing

"Under California law, every contract imposes upon each party a duty of good faith and fair dealing in its performance and its enforcement. R Power Biofuels, LLC v. Chemex LLC, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 156727, 2016 WL 6663002, at *17 (N.D. Cal. Nov. 11, 2016) (internal quotation marks omitted). Such duty "is circumscribed by the purposes and express terms of the contract." Carma Developers (Cal.), Inc. v. Marathon Dev. California, Inc., 2 Cal. 4th 342, 373, 6 Cal. Rptr. 2d 467, 826 P.2d 710, (1992). Therefore, the "implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing is limited to assuring compliance with the express terms of the contract, and cannot be extended to create [*24] obligations not contemplated by the contract." Pasadena Live, LLC v. City of Pasadena, 114 Cal. App. 4th 1089, 1094, 8 Cal. Rptr. 3d 233 (2004) (citation omitted) (emphasis original). It does "not [] protect some general public policy interest not directly tied to the contract's purpose." Kheradpezhouh v. Fagan, 2018 Cal. App. Unpub. LEXIS 6373, 2018 WL 4443252, at *6 (Cal. Ct. App. Sept. 18, 2018) (unpublished).

"The covenant of good faith finds particular application in situations where one party is invested with a discretionary power affecting the rights of another." Carma Developers, 2 Cal. 4th at 372. That is, the covenant applies where one party had opportunity under the contract to make a choice affecting another party and made that choice in bad faith. Thus, a claim for breach of the covenant must show that the defendant's conduct amounts to "a failure or refusal to discharge contractual responsibilities, prompted not by an honest mistake, bad judgment or negligence but rather by a conscious and deliberate act, which unfairly frustrates the agreed common purposes and disappoints the reasonable expectations of the other party thereby depriving that party of the benefits of the agreement." Careau & Co. v. Security Pacific Business Credit, Inc., 222 Cal. App. 3d 1371, 1395, 272 Cal. Rptr. 387 (1990).

Plaintiffs' breach claim fails for two reasons. First, as discussed above, Plaintiffs do not allege that error-free testing was an express term of the contract. Nor do they allege that an error rate less than some industry standard [*25] or other benchmark was an express term of the contract. Indeed, Plaintiffs do not allege nonperformance or substantial nonperformance by Defendant. Thus, Plaintiffs do not allege that they were deprived of an express contractual right, as required for this claim. Second, even if Plaintiffs were deprived of a contract benefit, they make no allegations that such deprivation was the product of Defendant's willful and deliberate action. To the contrary, Plaintiffs specifically allege that their injuries were caused by poor oversight and management, amounting at most to mistake, bad judgment, or negligence. Hence, Plaintiffs' allegations are merely consistent with Defendant's liability for breach of the implied convent of good faith and fair dealing but stop short of a plausible claim for entitlement to relief. Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678. Accordingly, this claim is dismissed.

C. Leave to Amend and Standing

Rule 15(a)(2) indicates that a court should "freely give leave [to amend] when justice so requires." Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a)(2); see also AmerisourceBergen Corp. v. Dialysist West, Inc., 465 F.3d 946, 951 (9th Cir. 2006); Eminence Capital, LLC v. Aspeon, Inc., 316 F.3d 1048, 1051 (9th Cir. 2003) (indicating that the Rule 15(a)(2) policy is to be applied with "extreme liberality"). Rule 15's "liberality does not apply when amendment would be futile." Ebner v. Fresh, Inc., 838 F.3d 958, 968 (9th Cir. 2016). But nothing in the record here indicates "that the complaint could not be [*26] saved by any amendment." Jackson v. Carey, 353 F.3d 750, 758 (9th Cir. 2003). Therefore, Plaintiffs are granted leave to cure the deficiencies described herein through amendment of the Complaint.

Such leave is granted as to both Plaintiffs on all claims. Defendant argues that Little Critters lacks standing to bring at least some of the claims at issue because Plaintiffs do not allege (1) Little Critters's reliance on an alleged misrepresentation, as necessary to support a fraudulent business practices claim, or (2) facts to establish that Little Critters is privy to the Services Agreement, as required to sustain a claim for breach of covenant of good faith and fair dealing.[3] (Mem. at 19-20.) Plaintiffs respond that their allegations show Little Critters (1) suffered from Defendant's alleged misrepresentations the same as Dr. Patt and (2) is either a party or third-party beneficiary to the Services Agreement with standing to sue. (Opp. at 21-22.) Having dismissed all claims as to both Plaintiffs on other grounds and granted leave to amend, the Court declines to address Little Critters's standing at this juncture. Assuming without deciding that Defendant's construction is correct on the facts currently alleged, the Court does not find that any such [*27] standing issues are necessarily incurable by amendment. Defendant may renew its standing arguments if and when Plaintiffs file an amended pleading.

IV. Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, Defendant's Motion is GRANTED in its entirety. Plaintiffs are GRANTED leave to file an amended pleading, consistent with this Order and the Local Rules.

End of Document

[3] Defendant insinuates that Little Critters has no standing to bring any of the asserted claims but does not provide argument why Little Critters would not have standing to bring an unlawful business practices claim predicated on an antitrust violation, which would not require reliance on a misrepresentation or privity of contract.

MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

RICHARD J. SULLIVAN, Circuit Judge:

Plaintiffs Tera Group, Inc., Tera Advanced Technologies, LLC, and TeraExchange, LLC (collectively, "Tera") bring this action against twelve financial institutions (collectively, "Defendants")[1], alleging that Defendants conspired to "block [Tera's] electronic [credit default swap] trading platform . . . from successfully entering the market" in violation of the Sherman Act and state antitrust law. (Doc. No. 1 ¶¶ 1, 159-77.) Tera also brings claims for unjust enrichment and tortious interference with business relations. (Id. ¶¶ 178-83.) Now before the Court is Defendants'

[1] The Defendants include Citigroup, Citibank, Citigroup Global Markets Inc., and Citigroup Global Markets Limited ("Citi"); Bank of America Corporation, Bank of America N.A., and Merrill Lynch ("Bank of America"); Barclays PLC, Barclays Bank, and Barclays Capital Inc. ("Barclays"); BNP Paribas, S.A. and BNP Paribas Securities Corp. ("BNP Paribas"); Credit Suisse Group AG, Credit Suisse AG, Credit Suisse International, and Credit Suisse Securities (USA) LLC ("Credit Suisse"); Deutsche Bank AG and Deutsche Bank Securities Inc. ("Deutsche Bank"); Goldman Sachs Group, Goldman Sachs & Co., Goldman Sachs Bank USA, Goldman Sachs Financial Markets, L.P., and Goldman Sachs International ("Goldman Sachs"); HSBC Holdings plc, HSBC Bank plc, HSBC Bank USA, N.A., and HSBC Securities (USA) Inc. ("HSBC"); JPMorgan Chase & Co., JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A., J.P. Morgan Securities LLC, and J.P. Morgan Securities plc ("JP Morgan"); Morgan Stanley, Morgan Stanley Bank, N.A., Morgan Stanley & Co., Morgan Stanley Capital Services LLC, Morgan Stanley Derivative Products Inc., and Morgan Stanley Bank International Limited ("Morgan Stanley"); Royal Bank of Scotland plc, The Royal Bank of Scotland Group plc, and RBS Securities Inc. ("RBS"); UBS Securities LLC ("UBS") and UBS AG, and the affiliates and subsidiaries of these organizations that participated in the CDS market. As discussed in further detail below, the Court previously dismissed all claims with respect to Defendants UBS AG and RBS in its September 28, 2018 Opinion and Order.

joint motion to dismiss all claims. (Doc. No. 96.) For the reasons stated below, the motion to dismiss Tera's Sherman Act claim and Donnelly Act claim is granted as to HSBC, Deutsche Bank, Goldman Sachs, Morgan Stanley, and Bank of America and denied with respect to the remaining Defendants, [*5] while the motion to dismiss Tera's unjust enrichment and tortious interference with business relations claims is granted as to all Defendants.

I. BACKGROUND

A. Facts[2]

1. Credit Default Swaps and the Pre-Dodd-Frank Environment

A credit default swap ("CDS") is a widely-traded financial instrument that functions like a tradable insurance contract, deriving its value from the risk associated with a specified credit event.[3] (Compl. ¶ 2.) A CDS can be either single-name (based on a single debt instrument issued by one underlying reference entity) or a CDS index (referencing a basket of underlying single-name reference-entities). (Id. ¶ 64.) Together, Defendants control approximately ninety-five percent of the CDS market, with JP Morgan, Bank of America, and Citigroup together comprising forty percent of all CDS dealing in the United States. (Id. ¶ 3.) Defendants generate significant profit by creating and selling CDS contracts to the "buy-side," which includes mutual funds, insurance companies, hedge funds, and other investors. (Id. ¶ 4.)

As the exclusive market-makers for CDS, Defendants dictated the structure of the CDS market, establishing two distinct tiers. (Id. ¶ 5.) Defendants traded [*6] CDS among themselves using anonymous interdealer platforms and maintained exclusive access to the price at which CDS was trading. (Id.) The buy-side, meanwhile, was relegated to trading exclusively through a "Request for Quote" ("RFQ") system — an opaque, over-the-counter protocol that kept information about CDS pricing solely in the hands of Defendants. (Id. ¶¶ 5-6.) Under the inefficient RFQ protocol, a customer who wanted to buy a CDS had to contact a Defendant directly, disclose their identity, specify the terms of the CDS they wanted, and then receive a price quote from that Defendant. (Id. ¶ 6.) According to Tera, this cumbersome procedure empowered Defendants to set CDS prices and create grossly inflated "bid/ask" spreads that generated massive profits. (Id.)

2. Dodd-Frank Transforms the CDS Landscape

On July 21, 2010, in the wake of the 2008 financial crisis, Congress passed the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act, which enacted a sweeping overhaul of the U.S. financial system. (Id. ¶ 62.) Title VII of the Dodd-Frank Act was intended to reform the swaps market through increased price transparency. (Id. ¶ 7; 7 U. S .C. §§ 2(a)(1)(A), 2(h).) To this end, Dodd-Frank sought [*7] to end the RFQ-only model by requiring CDS and other swaps to be traded on a regulated electronic exchange called a Swap Execution Facility ("SEF"), which would allow market participants to make bids and offers on CDS in the same manner that they would trade common stock. (Id. ¶ 7.) Like other public exchanges, SEFs are regulated by the CFTC, thereby "introducing a layer of oversight into a previously-unregulated market." (Id. ¶ 63.) Because customers could choose which swaps they wanted to buy or sell based on available competitive bids and offers prior to entering a transaction, the new system would promote pre-trade price transparency relative to the RFQ-only model. (Id.) Dodd-Frank's other reforms to the swaps market included creating "post-trade" price transparency by requiring that (1) market participants promptly report the details of their transactions to a centralized recordkeeping entity known as a Swap Data Repository ("SDR"), (2) swap

[2] The following facts are taken from the Complaint (Doc. No. 1 ("Complaint" or "Compl.")), and are assumed true for purposes of this motion. See ATSI Cominc'ns, Inc. v. Shaar Fund, Ltd., 493 F.3d 87, 98 (2d Cir. 2007). In ruling on the motion, the Court has also considered Defendants' memorandum of law (Doc. No. 97 ("Mem.")), Defendant HSBC's supplemental memorandum of law (Doc. No. 98 ("HSBC Mem.")), Plaintiffs' memorandum of law in opposition to Defendants' motion (Doc. No. 116 ("Opp'n")), Plaintiffs' supplemental memorandum of law in opposition to HSBC's memorandum (Doc. No. 117 ("Opp'n to HSBC")), Defendants' reply (Doc. No. 123 ("Reply")), Defendant HSBC's supplemental reply (Doc. No. 125 ("HSBC Reply")), Plaintiffs' notice of supplemental authority (Doc. No. 135), and Defendants' response to Plaintiffs' notice of supplemental authority (Doc. No. 136).

[3] As used here, the term "CDS" refers to both the singular and plural form.

values be reported continuously for the duration of the trade, and (3) swap transactions be cleared through a central Derivatives Clearing Organization ("DCO"), which removed the risk of a counterparty defaulting. (Id ¶¶ 67-69.)

Under Dodd-Frank, [*8] regulation of the CDS market was divided, with the CFTC maintaining authority over CDS indices while the SEC regulates single-name CDS. (Id. ¶ 65.) The CFTC's SEF execution mandate went into effect on February 26, 2014 for CDS indices, which made up seventy-six percent of total CDS transaction volume in the first half of 2014. (Id.) The SEC, meanwhile, "has yet to mandate SEF execution and central clearing" for single-name CDS. (Id. ¶ 66.) Nevertheless, a significant volume of single-name CDS have been executed on SEFs and centrally cleared through clearinghouses since 2013. (Id)

3. Tera Develops an All-to-All CLOB Platform for CDS

Seeking to capitalize on the opportunity presented by Dodd-Frank's reforms, a group of experienced former Wall Street traders founded TeraExchange. (Id. ¶¶ 8, 70.) Tera secured millions of dollars from outside investors and spent several years developing a CDS trading platform that used a central limit order book ("CLOB") to enable anonymous electronic trading among all market participants ("all-to-all trading"). (Id. ¶¶ 8, 71.) Tera maintains that it was "the first SEF to offer an anonymous all-to-all CLOB to the CDS market." (Id.)

TeraExchange offered unique [*9] features to the market, including sophisticated charting capabilities and arbitrage opportunities as the only anonymous all-to-all CLOB licensed to list CDS indices. (Id. ¶¶ 10, 76.) Its product involved sophisticated back-end technologies, including connectivity to clearinghouses and other intermediaries, as well as a front-end execution management system that enabled advanced order management and analytics. (Id. ¶¶ 73-74.) In addition to maintaining connectivity to industry-standard credit hubs, TeraExchange also "developed a proprietary embedded pre-trade credit confirmation tool, TeraCheck," which market participants could use to pre-screen orders and receive credit confirmation in real time prior to execution. (Id. ¶ 75.)

After the CFTC finalized its SEF registration rules, TeraExchange devoted resources to making its platform compliant and received a temporary SEF certification on September 9, 2013. (Id. ¶ 78.) In granting the certification, the CFTC reviewed and commented on TeraExchange's rulebook, a document required by the CFTC "that sets out protocols for how trades are initiated, routed, and executed on the platform." (Id.)

Tera thereafter developed an "aggressive marketing [*10] plan," seeking liquidity from Defendants and other market participants such as inter-dealer brokers ("IDBs") and hedge funds, and garnering "overwhelming" market response. (Id. ¶ 9.) An April 2014 survey by IPC Systems Inc. reported that fifty percent of market participants surveyed stated that they had already connected or planned to connect to the TeraExchange platform, while The Wall Street Letter nominated TeraExchange for three of its 2013 Institutional Trading Awards. (Id. ¶¶ 9, 79.) IDBs, banks, and large buy-side CDS trading firms were among the market participants that signed up to use TeraExchange, while the top CDS clearinghouses agreed to clear CDS and other derivatives executed on the platform. (Id. ¶¶ 9, 80-81, 84.) Many of Tera's prospective customers had signed end-user license agreements and were in "simulation" with the platform, meaning that "they were in the process of testing and integrating TeraExchange with their own systems." (Id. ¶ 80.)

In particular, IDBs — which serve as Defendants' intermediaries in CDS trading — were eager to use TeraExchange to satisfy Dodd-Frank's "cross border" SEF requirement for swap trades. (Id. ¶ 87.) Under that requirement, all swap [*11] trades involving "U.S. persons" had to be executed through a CFTC-registered SEF, regardless of whether the trading was domestic or international. (Id.) Accordingly, any IDB handling trades for a foreign branch or affiliate of a U.S. bank "had to execute those trades on a SEF or become a SEF themselves." (Id.) TeraExchange offered IDBs a cost-effective way to execute those trades and fulfill the cross-border SEF requirements in exchange for a fee. (Id. ¶ 88.) Because it was an independent platform, Tera was not a competitor to the IDBs and therefore offered an attractive solution relative to interdealer SEFs. (Id.) Recognizing this opportunity, Tera made significant marketing efforts; by January 2014, Tera announced agreements with twelve international IDBs. (Id. ¶ 89.)

In conjunction with its agreements with large proprietary trading firms, which agreed to be CDS market makers on TeraExchange, Tera had "the necessary commitments to ensure liquidity in CDS on its all-to-all CLOB, and customers were eager to begin executing CDS trades on TeraExchange." (Id. ¶¶ 83-84.) Market observers took note of the interest in the platform and predicted that SEFs would fundamentally shift the CDS [*12] market. (Id. ¶ 85.) By late 2013, investors increased their estimate of TeraExchange's valuation to exceed $50 million, even before a single trade had taken place on the platform. (Id. ¶ 86.)

4. Defendants Launch their Boycott

On June 13, 2014, the world's first anonymous swap transaction on any all-to-all CLOB was executed on TeraExchange. (Id. ¶ 11.) The trade took place between Annaly Capital Management, Inc. and Mitsubishi UFJ Financial Group and was cleared by BNP Paribas's clearing division, also known as a futures commissions merchant ("FCM"). (Id. ¶¶ 11, 91.) Tera alleges that the June 13 trade demonstrated TeraExchange's viability and represented a threat to Defendants' "supracompetitive profits" in the CDS market. (Id. ¶¶ 12, 91.)

Immediately afterward, according to Tera, Defendants "began working together to shut down TeraExchange."[4] (Id. ¶ 13.) After observing that buy-side customers were trading on TeraExchange, BNP Paribas's FCM "notified the bank's trading desk of the transgression." (Id. ¶ 92.) BNP Paribas's trading desk then contacted the parties to the transaction, threatening them with loss of access to clearing services, execution services for other asset classes, and [*13] general market research if they continued to use the platform. (Id.) Word of the threat spread to other market participants, leading them to "avoid TeraExchange for fear of risking similar reprisals." (Id. ¶ 93.) The Mistubishi UFJ trader who was a counterparty to the June 13 trade immediately stopped responding to Tera, and Mitsubishi UFJ never attempted to execute another trade on the platform despite previously expressing interest. (Id.) A BNP Paribas official later told Annaly Capital to abstain from using the platform, citing unknown temporary "operational issues" that were never reported to Tera. (Id. ¶ 94.) According to Tera, Annaly Capital was never given a green light to resume using TeraExchange. (Id.)

The next business day, June 16, 2014 — despite the fact that the trade had never been publicly announced — BNP Paribas, Citi, JP Morgan, and UBS "almost simultaneously called and told TeraExchange that they would not clear any trades executed on TeraExchange until they conducted an 'audit' of TeraExchange's Rulebook." (Id. ¶ 95.) Although many Defendants had previously expressed interest in trading on or providing liquidity to the platform, they too blocked trading on the [*14] platform pending a rulebook "audit," even though some had already been reviewing the document for lengthy periods. (Id. ¶¶ 96, 98-99.) None of these audits were ever completed, and the rulebook, which was largely standardized and mirrored those of other SEFs, had already been reviewed by the CFTC, which granted TeraExchange a temporary certification. (Id ¶¶ 96-97.) Other rationales given by Defendants for delaying or refusing to conduct business with TeraExchange included the need to review the end-user license agreement and other core documents. (Id. ¶ 101.) But while Tera promptly provided the requested documents, Defendants never completed their reviews and consistently refused to direct any of their CDS business to the platform or allow their buy-side customers to trade on TeraExchange. (Id.)

5. Defendants Use their Control Over CDS Clearing to Block Trades on Tera

Tera also alleges that Defendants controlled the CDS clearing business in their capacity as owners of ICE Clear, the largest clearinghouse for CDS, and in their roles as the dominant clearing members at ICE Clear, CME, and LCH.Clearnet. (Id. ¶¶ 110-111.) As clearing members of CDS clearinghouses, Defendants were gatekeepers [*15] to the clearinghouse and also controlled the pre-trade mechanisms of clearing by providing pre-trade credit checks. (Id. ¶¶ 106-107.) Defendants allegedly leveraged this control over CDS clearing and took advantage of Dodd-Frank's central clearing requirement to carry out their boycott of TeraExchange by (1) using their internal clearing divisions, known as FCMs, to block buy-side customers from using the platform by refusing to participate in the pre-

---

[4] Plaintiffs also allege that this is not the first time Defendants have been accused of conspiring to block an independent electronic CDS platform to maintain supracompetitive CDS trading profits, as the U.S. Department of Justice and the European Commission both investigated Defendants' conduct in the CDS market in 2011. (Compl. 11 16.) Furthermore, as discussed in greater detail below, in September 2015, Defendants paid $1.86 billion to settle a class action lawsuit brought by investors who alleged that Defendants fixed prices on CDS transactions and blocked the launch of the Credit Market Derivatives Exchange ("CDMX"), an electronic exchange and clearinghouse for CDS. (Id.)

trade credit check process or clear trades for transactions executed on TeraExchange, and (2) quoting TeraExchange customers "obscenely high clearing fees" while simultaneously offering to clear similar trades for lower fees or for free if they traded on other SEFs that adhered to the RFQ protocol. (Id. ¶¶ 105, 116.) Defendants directed their FCMs, which were in regular communication with one another, to block trades on TeraExchange even though doing so required the FCMs to forgo fees they would otherwise earn for clearing CDS transactions. (Id. ¶¶ 109, 113.) As a result, market participants began to "waver in their support for TeraExchange's platform" and were unable to find FCMs to clear their trades because of the alleged coordination [*16] between Defendants. (Id. ¶¶ 117-119.)

6. Defendants Prohibit IDBs from Using Tera

Tera had enlisted a dozen international IDBs to use its platform to fulfill their cross-border requirements under Dodd-Frank; however, because the IDBs served as brokers on behalf of their clients, those clients — which included Defendants — had to consent to their use of TeraExchange to execute trades. (Id. ¶¶ 120-121.) Tera alleges that Defendants engaged in delay tactics and ultimately refused to give their permission for the IDBs to use TeraExchange. (Id.) They did so using similar pretexts, including the excuse that a given Defendant had not yet approved Tera's rulebook (even though one Defendant, Citi, acknowledged that the refusal was "more of an internal policy rather than a regulatory one"). (Id. ¶ 121, 123.) Numerous IDBs told Tera that Defendants were inexplicably refusing to consent to their use of the platform and that they were ultimately forced to back out of their agreements with Tera as a result. (Id. ¶¶ 122-126.) In refusing this consent, multiple Defendants referred to TeraExchange as a "Trojan Horse," presumably implying that it posed a covert threat to their highly profitable RFQ-based [*17] business, (Id. ¶ 126.)

7. Defendants Forcibly Maintain a Two-Tiered Market Structure

Tera alleges that Defendants jointly used a variety of techniques to enforce their boycott and maintain the status quo in the CDS market. First, Defendants agreed to collectively insist on the practice of "name give-up," or post-trade name disclosure, as a means of surveilling who was conducting trades on all-to-all SEFs. (Id. ¶¶ 127, 129.) Although name give-up was necessary in the pre—central clearing era to enable parties to manage counterparty risk, it no longer serves a practical purpose in the post-Dodd-Frank era, (Id. ¶¶ 128-133.) Whereas anonymous trading would have opened up the CDS market and encouraged competition, enforcing name give-up discouraged the use of all-to-all CLOBs and contributed to an information asymmetry, as buy-side customers were forced to reveal their trading positions, and thus elements of their trading strategies, to Defendants and other customers. (Id. ¶¶ 133, 140.)

Recognizing the importance of preserving name give-up, Defendants allegedly agreed to "keep the practice in place by making their provision of liquidity to a trading platform conditional on the use of the practice" [*18] and boycotting any platform that refused to require it. (Id. ¶ 134.) They also ensured name give-up by insisting on the use of a service known as MarkitWIRE, operated by MarkitSERV — a company whose top officers included former Goldman Sachs and Deutsche Bank officials. (Id. ¶¶ 135, 137.) MarkitWIRE is a trade processing service that offers counteiparties a "last look" at a trade, revealing their identities and permitting an opportunity to terminate the transaction. (Id. ¶ 136.) Buy-side firms expressed opposition to the use of MarkitWIRE because it is inefficient relative to straight-through processing and enables Defendants to control information flow and preserve the traditional market structure. (Id. ¶¶ 137-138.) Nevertheless, Tera alleges that numerous SEFs, including all the largest inderdealer SEFs, caved to this "collective pressure" from Defendants to adhere to name give-up, resulting in "no meaningful volume on the few order-book platforms built by SEFs to date." (Id. ¶ 139.)

Defendants further enforced their boycott by placing transgressors — those who attempted to introduce or use anonymous trading — into what Tera terms the "penalty box." (Id. ¶¶ 142-144.) With respect [*19] to interdealer SEFs — the platforms used by Defendants to trade CDS among themselves — Defendants threatened to withdraw liquidity from any interdealer SEF that considered permitting buy-side entities to trade anonymously on their platforms. (Id.) Interdealer SEFs reported receiving "heated phone calls" and other "collective threats" from Defendants pressuring them not to introduce trade anonymity to the buy-side. (Id. ¶¶ 144-146.) As to buy-side customers, the "penalty box" meant refusing to trade with the investor in any venue and withholding other key banking services if they attempted to engage in anonymous all-to-all trading, effectively cutting them off from the ability to trade any derivatives. (Id. ¶ 147.) According to Tera, the financial media widely reported Defendants' threatened retaliation, contributing to a chilling effect in the CDS market. (Id. ¶¶ 148, 150.)

8. Tera is Forced Out of the Market

Though Tera had obtained commitments from numerous non-traditional liquidity providers and stood ready to inject increased price competition into the CDS market, the alleged collective boycott and pressure placed on IDBs, the buy-side, and other market participants starved the platform [*20] of the liquidity it needed to survive, (Id. ¶¶ 119, 152.) No further trading occurred on TeraExchange after its initial trade on June 13, 2014. (Id. ¶ 151.)

B. Procedural History

Tera filed its complaint in this action on June 8, 2017. (Doc. No. 1.) On the same day, Tera filed a Statement of Relatedness seeking to designate this case as related to In re Credit Default Swaps Antitrust Litigation, 13-md-2476 (DLC) (hereinafter "In re CDS"), a previously-settled multidistrict litigation before Judge Cote that involved allegations of exclusionary conduct in the CDS market during 2008-2013 against the same set of bank defendants. (Doc. No. 3.)[5] On June 12, 2017, Defendants responded with a letter addressed to Judges Cote and Engelmayer, arguing that the case was not related to the closed In re CDS case, but rather to In re Interest Rate Swaps Antitrust Litigation, 16-md-2704 (PAE) (hereinafter "In re IRS") — an ongoing case before Judge Engelmayer. (Doc. No. 16.) In re IRS concerns allegations against the same group of Defendants (as well as additional non-bank defendants) involving a parallel antitrust conspiracy in the interest rate swap ("IRS"), rather than CDS, market.[6] (Id.) Tera responded [*21] on June 15, 2017, objecting to Defendants' request in light of the differences between IRS and CDS products and markets, and reaffirming their position that the case should be designated as related to the closed In re CDS case that was previously assigned to Judge Cote. (Doc. No. 18.) Ultimately, neither Judge Cote nor Judge Engelmayer accepted the case as related and it was subsequently assigned to my docket.

The Court set a briefing schedule and stayed discovery on July 7, 2017. (Doc. No. 63.) Defendants filed their joint motion to dismiss all claims and a memorandum of law in support thereof on September 11, 2017. (Doc. Nos. 96, 97.) That same day, HSBC filed a supplemental memorandum of law in support of the joint motion to dismiss (Doc. No. 98), RBS filed a motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction and for failure to state a claim with respect to RBS (Doc. Nos. 101, 102), and UBS AG filed a motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction (Doc. Nos. 104, 105). Tera filed oppositions on October 11, 2017. (Doc. Nos. 116, 117, 118, 119.) On November 3, 2017, Defendants filed a joint reply (Doc. No. 123), alongside replies by RBS (Doc. No. 124), HSBC (Doc. [*22] No. 125), and UBS AG (Doc. No. 126) in further support of their respective motions, at which point the motions were fully briefed.

On September 28, 2018, the Court issued an opinion and order granting RBS and UBS AG's motions. (Doe. No. 134.) The Court found that Tera failed to allege that either UBS AG or RBS engaged in conduct in, or directed at, the United States and thus failed to establish specific personal jurisdiction over either entity. (Id. at 3-5.) The Court further found that Tera failed to specify any activities by any affiliate or subsidiary of RBS in the Complaint. (Id. at 6.) Accordingly, the Court dismissed all claims with respect to RBS and UBS AG, while reserving decision on the motions of the remaining Defendants. (Id.) On October 25, 2018, Tera submitted a notice of supplemental authority in opposition to the joint motion to dismiss (Doc. No. 135), to which Defendants responded on November 7, 2018 (Doc. No. 136). The Court now turns to the remaining Defendants' joint motion to dismiss the Complaint.

[5] The parties in In re CDS reached a settlement resolving all claims, to which Judge Cote granted preliminary approval in October 2015 and final approval in April 2016. (Doc. No. 3 at 2.)

[6] On July 28, 2017, Judge Engelmayer issued an opinion and order in which he granted defendants' motion to dismiss Sherman Act Section 1 claims covering the period 2008-2012, denied the motion with respect to the period spanning 2013-2016, granted the motion to dismiss tortious interference with business relations and unjust enrichment claims except as to claims made by class plaintiffs, limited plaintiffs' state law claims to the 2013-2016 period, and dismissed all claims against HSBC and the two non-bank defendants. See In re IRS, 261 F. Supp. 3d 430, 500 (S.D.N.Y. 2017). Discovery in that case remains ongoing while the parties brief class certification. (See Case No. 16-md-2704 (PAE), Doc. No. 828.)

II. LEGAL STANDARD

To withstand a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, a complaint must "provide the grounds upon which [the] claim rests." ATSI Commc'ns, Inc. v. Shaar Fund, Ltd., 493 F.3d 87, 98 (2d Cir. 2007); see also Fed. R. Civ, P. 8(a)(2) ("A pleading that states a claim for relief must [*23] contain . . . a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief . . ."), To meet this standard, plaintiffs must allege "enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). "A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009).

In reviewing a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss, a court must accept as true all factual allegations in the complaint and draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the plaintiff. ATSI Commc'ns, 493 F.3d at 98. That tenet, however, "is inapplicable to legal conclusions." Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678. Thus, a pleading that offers only "labels and conclusions" or "a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do," Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555. If the plaintiffs "have not nudged their claims across the line from conceivable to plausible, their complaint must be dismissed." Id. at 570.

III. DISCUSSION

A. Sherman Act Claim

Section 1 of the Sherman Antitrust Act prohibits "[e]very contract, combination . . . , or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States." 15 U.S.C. § 1. To plead a violation of Section 1, a plaintiff must allege facts showing (1) "a combination or [*24] some form of concerted action between at least two legally distinct economic entities," and (2) "that the agreement constituted an unreasonable restraint of [interstate] trade." Capital Imaging Assocs., P.C. v. Mohawk Valley Med. Assocs., Inc., 996 F.2d 537, 542 (2d Cir. 1993). With respect to the first element, "[t]he crucial question" is "whether the challenged conduct 'stems from independent decision or from an agreement, tacit or express.'" Starr v. Sony BMG Music Entm't, 592 F.3d 314, 321 (2d Cir. 2010) (quoting Theatre Enters., Inc. v. Paramount Film Distrib, Corp., 346 U.S. 537, 540, 74 S. Ct. 257, 98 L. Ed. 273 (1954) (alterations omitted)). Agreements may be "vertical," meaning that they involve "persons at different levels of the market structure," or — as alleged by Tera here — "horizontal," meaning that they are "between competitors at the same level of the market structure." United States v. Topco Assocs., 405 U.S. 596, 608, 92 S. Ct. 1126, 31 L. Ed. 2d 515 (1972).

To plead the second element, a plaintiff may allege either a per se unlawful agreement or one that violates the "rule of reason," which requires courts to apply a totality-of-the-circumstances test to determine if a practice constitutes an unreasonable restraint on competition. See Leegin Creative Leather Prods., Inc. v. PSKS, Inc., 551 U.S. 877, 885, 127 S. Ct. 2705, 168 L. Ed. 2d 623 (2007). A group boycott — the conduct alleged by Tera here — constitutes a per se violation of the Sherman Act. Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., 359 U.S. 207, 212, 79 S. Ct. 705, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741 (1959).

To plausibly allege a conspiracy under Section 1, plaintiffs must set forth "enough factual matter (taken as true) to suggest that an [illegal] agreement was made." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556. Thus, while there is no [*25] "probability requirement at the pleading stage," plaintiffs must plead "enough fact to raise a reasonable expectation that discovery will reveal evidence of illegal agreement." Id. "'The ultimate existence of an 'agreement' under antitrust law . . . is a legal conclusion, not a factual allegation.'" Mayor & City Council of Balt. v. Citigroup, Inc., 709 F.3d 129, 135-36 (2d Cir, 2013).

Direct evidence of a conspiracy is not required. Plaintiffs may rely on "indirect or circumstantial evidence, that is, 'inferences that may fairly be drawn from the behavior of the alleged conspirators.'" In re IRS, 261 F. Supp. 3d 432, 461 (S.D.N.Y. 2017) (quoting Anderson News, LLC v. Am. Media, Inc., 680 F.3d 162, 183 (2d Cir. 2012)). Typically, a "horizontal agreement among competitors, the sort of pact alleged here, is . . . based on claims of parallel conduct by the alleged co-conspirators." Id. at 461-62. "Examples of parallel conduct allegations that might be sufficient under Twombly's standard include parallel behavior that would probably not result from chance, coincidence, independent responses to common stimuli, or mere interdependence unaided by an advance understanding among the parties." Citigroup, 709 F.3d at 137 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted).

Yet, "as the Supreme Court held in Twombly, 'alleging parallel conduct alone is insufficient, even at the pleading stage.'" In re IRS, 261 F. Supp. 3d at 462 (quoting Citigroup, 709 F.3d at 136). Rather, to withstand a motion to dismiss, [*26] plaintiffs must also place the allegations "in a context that raises a suggestion of a preceding agreement, not merely parallel conduct that could just as well be independent action." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 557. Courts have interpreted this additional obligation as a requirement that plaintiffs plead "plus factors" or other circumstantial evidence that, combined with parallel conduct, demonstrate "circumstances under which . . . the inference of rational independent choice [is] less attractive than that of concerted action." In re IRS, 261 F. Supp. 3d at 463 (quoting In re Ins. Brokerage Antitrust Litig., 618 F.3d 300, 323 (3d Cir. 2010)). The three "plus factors" the Second Circuit has previously recognized as supporting a plausible inference of conspiracy are "(1) 'a common motive to conspire,'; (2) 'evidence that shows that the parallel acts were against the apparent individual economic self-interest of the alleged conspirators'; and (3) `evidence of a high level of interfirm communications.'" Gelboim v. Bank of Am. Corp., 823 F.3d 759, 781 (2d Cir. 2016) (quoting Twombly v. Bell Atl. Corp., 425 F.3d 99, 114 (2d Cir. 2005), rev'd on other grounds, 550 U.S. 544, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929). "[T]hese plus factors are neither exhaustive nor inclusive, but rather illustrative of the type of circumstances which, when combined with parallel behavior, might permit a jury to infer the existence of an agreement." Citigroup, 709 F.3d at 136 n.6.

Before turning to the parallel conduct and plus factors alleged [*27] by Tera, the Court considers three of Defendants' threshold arguments in favor of dismissing the Complaint: first, that the complaint constitutes impermissible "claim splitting;" next, that the conspiracy alleged by Tera is facially implausible; and, finally, that the Complaint engages in improper group pleading.

1. Claim Splitting

As an initial matter, Defendants contend that Tera's claims should be dismissed in their entirety for violating a prohibition against "claim splitting." (Mem. at 38-43.) Defendants argue that because "plaintiffs have no right to maintain two actions on the same subject in the court, against the same defendant at the same time" (Mem. at 38 (quoting Curtis v. Citibank, NA., 226 F.3d 133, 140 (2d Cir. 2000))), the Complaint must be dismissed in light of its "striking overlap" with Tera's earlier complaint in In re IRS (id. at 43). The Court is unpersuaded.

"Claim splitting" is a variant of the res judicata doctrine that bars a plaintiff from "'splitting' his claim into various suits, based on different legal theories." Waldman v. Dill. of Kiryas Joel, 207 F.3d 105, 110 (2d Cir. 2000); see also Am. Stock Exchange v. Mopex, Inc., 215 F.R.D. 87, 91 (S.D.N.Y. 2002) ("It is well established, under the doctrine of 'claim splitting,' that a party cannot avoid the effects of res judicata by splitting her cause of action into separate grounds of recovery and then raising [*28] the separate grounds in successive lawsuits.") (citations omitted). This rule against claim splitting "is based on the belief that it is fairer to require a plaintiff to present in one action all of his theories of recovery relating to a transaction, and all of the evidence relating to those theories, than to permit him to prosecute overlapping or repetitive actions in different courts or at different times." AmBase Corp. v. City Investing Co. Liquidating Tr., 326 F.3d 63, 73 (2d Cir. 2003) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted).

As recently articulated by the Tenth and Eleventh Circuits, claim splitting occurs when "the first suit, assuming it were final, would preclude the second suit." Vanover v. NCO Fin. Servs., Inc., 857 F.3d 833, 841 (11th Cir. 2017) (quoting Katz v. Gerardi, 655 F.3d 1212, 1218 (10th Cir. 2011)); see also Kanciper v. Suffolk Cty. SPCA, Inc., 722 F.3d 88, 92 (2d Cir. 2013) (citing Katz, 655 F.3d at 1218-19). In assessing whether the two actions arise from "the same nucleus of operative facts" for purposes of the preclusion inquiry, courts consider "(1) whether the case involves the same parties and their privies, and (2) whether separate cases arise from the same transaction or series of transactions." Vanover, 857 F.3d at 841-42.

But the focus of the claim splitting doctrine is as much about preserving judicial resources as it is about fairness to defendants. See Kanciper, 722 F.3d at 92 ("[T]he claim splitting rule exists to allow district courts to manage their dockets and dispense with duplicative [*29] litigation.") (quoting Katz, 655 F.3d at 1218-19); Ritchie v. Landau, 475

F.2d 151, 156 n.5 (2d Cir. 1973) ("Courts should not permit splitting of causes of action when the result of doing so could result in vexatious litigation for the defendant and an undue clogging of the dockets of the court"); see also Elgin v. Dep't of Treasury, 567 U.S. 1, 14, 132 S. Ct. 2126, 183 L. Ed. 2d 1 (2012) ("[A] tribunal generally has discretion to decide whether to dismiss a suit when a similar suit is pending elsewhere.") (citing 18 Charles Alan Wright et al., Federal Practice and Procedure § 4406 (2d ed. 2002)). In the Southern District of New York, Local Rule 13 of the Court's Rules for the Division of Business Among District Judges typically resolves issues related to relatedness and judicial economy. Under Rule 13, in determining relatedness, a judge considers:

> [W]hether (A) the actions concern the same or substantially similar parties, property, transactions or events; (B) there is substantial factual overlap; (C) the parties could be subjected to conflicting orders; and (D) whether absent a determination of relatedness there would be a substantial duplication of effort and expense, delay, or undue burden on the Court, parties or witnesses.

Applying the above standards, the Court finds that no impermissible claim splitting has taken place here. While this case and In re IRS arise [*30] from substantially the same events, encompass many of the same defendants, and involve sometimes identical allegations in the pleadings (see Mem. at 39-40), there are also key differences between the two cases. For example, the product characteristics and markets for IRS as opposed to CDS are quite distinct, and Plaintiffs will be required to introduce different proof in order to establish a conspiracy in this case as opposed to the IRS case. (See Opp'n at 41-43.) In light of these differences, the Court finds that the cases are not so intertwined as to render the second action impermissible.

The prior history of this case further bolsters the Court's conclusion that dismissal is not warranted on the basis of claim splitting, The parties briefed these issues in the context of the Local Rule 13 determination (see Doc. Nos. 3, 16, 18), which concluded with neither Judge Cote nor Judge Engelmayer accepting the case as related to prior actions. In a sense, Defendants' claim splitting argument asks the Court to overrule the determination of unrelatedness made by Judge Cote and Judge Engelmayer. But Defendants point to no authority in which a court has done so. Accordingly, the Court declines to dismiss [*31] the Complaint on claim splitting grounds.

2. Facial Plausibility

Defendants also argue that the conspiracy alleged by Tera is facially implausible, meaning it fails to "make . . . economic sense," United Magazine Co. v. Murdoch Magazines Distrib., Inc. 146 F. Supp. 2d 385, 401 (S.D.N.Y. 2001), or accord with "common economic experience," Twombly, 550 U.S. at 565. (See Mem. at 17.) But "[s]uch an argument presents a high hurdle in the context of a motion to dismiss, and a hurdle that is not crossed here." Iowa Pub. Emples. Ret. Sys. ("IPERS") v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith Inc., 340 F. Supp. 3d 285, 312 (S.D.N.Y. 2018).

First, Defendants point out that Tera failed to allege that the Defendants boycotted four other CDS platforms, rendering the alleged conspiracy economically nonsensical. (Mem. at 21-22.) Yet Tera readily accounts for Defendants' decision to target its platform specifically by alleging that it was the first SEF to offer an anonymous all-to-all CLOB for CDS and that it was the only independent CLOB, in contrast to platforms like "Tradeweb — a SEF created and owned by the . . . Defendants — or Bloomberg, which did not object to their RFQ requirement." (Compl. ¶¶ 8, 15, 88.) The Complaint further alleges that Tera was unique because it was the only anonymous all-to-all CLOB SEF licensed to list CDX and iTraxx index products [*32] alongside single-name CDS, providing valuable arbitrage opportunities to market participants, among other features — such as advanced analytics and a proprietary credit check hub — that rendered it particularly valuable to the market. (Id. ¶ 10.) Defendants push back on Tera's allegation that it was the first all-to-all CDS platform, citing CFTC records purportedly demonstrating that "Bloomberg began offering an anonymous all-to-all CLOB for CDS long before Tera did." (Mem. at 22.) But as Tera's opposition brief demonstrates, the question of whether Bloomberg's offering was comparable to Tera's is a complex fact issue not amenable to resolution at the motion-to-dismiss stage. (See Opp'n at 10 (arguing that "there was little to no CDS volume on the Bloomberg or MarketAxxess CLOB because these two SEFs, at Defendants' request, directed all CDS transactions to their electronic RFQ trading platforms").) And even assuming that Bloomberg was the first SEF to meaningfully offer all-to-all CDS trading, taking Tera's well-pleaded factual allegations as true, TeraExchange still brought exclusive capabilities to the market which could plausibly warrant a boycott of that platform alone. Defendants' [*33] response attempts to read out of the Complaint Tera's allegations that Bloomberg deferred to Defendants in adhering to the RFQ protocol, as well as its other assertions about the uniqueness of Tera's value proposition. (See Reply at 5; Compl. ¶¶ 10, 15, 76.) Thus, the failure to plead that Defendants boycotted all CDS platforms does not doom the Complaint at this stage. See In re IRS., 261 F. Supp. 3d at 472 (denying a motion to dismiss where complaint alleged Defendants boycotted three out of five platforms for all-to-all IRS trading).

Next, Defendants argue that the conspiracy is facially implausible because the alleged conduct is fully consistent with unilateral and independent decision-making. (Mem. at 22-25.) Defendants argue that Tera had too little trading volume to be attractive to Defendants, and that refraining from supporting Tera was consistent with the individual business goals of each Defendant because helping Tera become successful would have strengthened a threat to their own individual business profits. (Id.) But these arguments fall short of the "high hurdle" for establishing facial implausibility, IPERS, 340 F. Supp. 3d at 312, particularly in light of Tera's allegations regarding the market's enthusiasm for its product (Compl. [*34] ¶¶ 8, 79-82, 84, 87-90), not to mention Defendants' common motive to conspire (Compl. ¶¶ 4, 12, 71-76, 79-86, 91, 129-130, 140, 142). At the motion-to-dismiss stage, plaintiffs "must only put forth sufficient factual matter to plausibly suggest an inference of conspiracy, even if the facts are susceptible to an equally likely inteipretation." Gelboim, 823 F.3d at 782; see also Anderson News, 650 F.3d at 184 ("Because plausibility is a standard lower than probability, a given set of actions may well be subject to diverging interpretations, each of which is plausible."). The Court is not at liberty, on a motion to dismiss, to discard Plaintiffs' version of events in favor of the narrative advanced by Defendants simply because the Defendants' version is "fully consistent" with the alleged facts.

3. Group Pleading

Defendants next argue that Tera's allegations fail because they rely excessively on "group-pleading allegations directed at 'the Dealer Defendants' as an undifferentiated whole." (Mem. at 18.) Indeed, the Complaint is rife with homogenous group allegations. Of the seventy-four paragraphs in the Complaint that set forth factual allegations about Defendants' conduct, forty consist of allegations that are directed solely at the Defendants [*35] as a group without providing any examples or otherwise specifying a Defendant who engaged in the alleged acts. (See Compl. ¶¶ 84-158.)[7]

Notably, as Judge Engelmayer recognized in In re IRS, not all group allegations are improper. "Given [Tera's] thesis that the [Defendants] participated in a collective boycott, it is natural that the [Complaint] express some factual allegations collectively." In re IRS, 261 F. Supp. 3d at 478. While "collective allegations about 'Dealer Defendants' that lack allegations about a particular" Defendant should be "discount[ed] as worthy of less weight" relative to detailed claims, they may nevertheless be taken into account, alongside more specific allegations, in determining whether Tera has pleaded a plausible Section 1 conspiracy. Id. at 474. Furthermore, for purposes of establishing a Section 1 claim, "it is proper to name a corporate sub-entity as a Defendant, such as 'Credit Suisse Securities (USA) LLC,' while pleading allegations using a more generic name, such as 'Credit Suisse,'" as long as the Complaint contains enough detail to "provide[] each Defendant with sufficient notice of the claims against that Defendant and their grounds."[8] IPERS, 340 F. Supp. 3d at 317.

Nevertheless, the Complaint's pervasive reliance on group allegations [*36] impacts the viability of Tera's claims because it results in a paucity of details linking certain of the Defendants to the alleged conspiracy. It is Tera's burden to set forth sufficient facts to establish that each Defendant, "in their individual capacities, consciously committed themselves to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective." AD/SAT, a Div. of Skylight

[7] For purposes of this calculation, the Court did not include the facts set forth in the Complaint's introduction, which are appropriately phrased at a higher degree of generality than those alleged in the Complaint's facts section.

[8] While the use of a generic corporate name may pose obstacles to establishing personal jurisdiction over a defendant, as the Court found in its September 28, 2019 Order dismissing Tera's claims against UBS AG (Doc. No. 134), only UBS AG and RBS challenged the Court's personal jurisdiction. All other Defendants have waived any objections to personal jurisdiction by failing to raise them in their motion to dismiss. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 12.

Inc. v. Associated Press, 181 F.3d 216, 234 (2d Cir. 1999). At the pleading stage, Tera must provide each Defendant with 'fair notice of what the claim is and the grounds on which it rests,' including the factual connection of that defendant to the scheme and the identity of its alleged co-conspirators." In re IRS, 261 F. Supp. 3d at 478 (first quoting Anderson News, 680 F.3d at 182; then citing In re Foreign Exch. Benchmark Rates Antitrust Litig., 74 F. Supp. 3d 581, 594 (S.D.N.Y. 2015)). Absent specific allegations that link an individual Defendant to the boycott, the Complaint must be dismissed as to that Defendant — as Judge Engelmayer found in In re IRS when he dismissed all claims against HSBC on the basis that the complaints in that case contained a "lone claim" that was "insufficient to link HSBC to the alleged conspiracy." Id. at 483.

This insufficiency is even more pronounced here than it was in In re IRS. That case involved two operative pleadings — the 145-page Second Consolidated Amended Class Action Complaint (16-md-2704-PAE, Doc. No. 142) [*37] and the 134-page Javelin and TeraExchange Plaintiffs' Second Consolidated Amended Complaint (16-md-2704-PAE, Doc. No. 145), both of which contained ample factual allegations against specified Defendants. Judge Engelmayer accordingly observed that, despite the "many references to 'Dealer Defendants' . . . the lengthy complaints are also rife with specifics," containing "many allegations against individual defendants that are quite particular, both as to the actor and the act." Id. at 478. Many of those specifics are absent in the 58-page Complaint now before the Court.[9]

In its September 28, 2018 Order, the Court dismissed Tera's claims with respect to Defendant RBS on these grounds, finding that the Complaint lacked any allegation specific to RBS and therefore failed to establish a link between RBS and the alleged conspiracy. (Doc. No. 134 at 6.) Tera protests against this analysis, arguing that examining the Complaint's allegations as to each Defendant in isolation fails to "consider[] [the allegations] in context." (Opp'n at 33.) Yet the Court's duty to consider the Complaint as a whole in making the overall determination of whether Tera has plausibly [*38] pleaded a conspiracy does not supplant Tera's basic obligation to set forth facts connecting each individual Defendant to the conspiracy. See, e.g., IPERS, 340 F. Supp. 3d at 317 n.11 (identifying specific factual allegations in the complaint linking each defendant to the alleged conspiracy). Accordingly, the Court will now consider each remaining Defendant in turn to determine whether Tera has alleged sufficient facts to establish the requisite connection to the alleged conspiracy.

a. HSBC

With respect to HSBC, Judge Engelmayer's ruling in In re IRS is directly on point. Here, too, the only specific claim made against HSBC is that its FCM "'gave TeraExchange the runaround for over a year before finally refusing to clear for the platform,' in that an HSBC official, despite receiving approximately a half-dozen 'successful demonstrations' of Tera's trading platform, 'refused to give a direct answer on whether HSBC would clear customers' trades on the platform,'" In re IRS, 261 F. Supp. 3d at 483, before ultimately "inform[ing] Tera in or around March 2014 that HSBC would not clear trades on TeraExchange without the approval of HSBC's trading desks." (Compl. ¶ 115.) The Complaint also alleges that HSBC is one of twelve CDS clearing members at LCH. Clearnet [*39] and one of thirteen clearing members at CME, but does not allege that HSBC did anything specific to further the conspiracy in those capacities. (Id. ¶ 111 nn.25-26.)

---

[9] In re IRS is broader in scope than the instant case and therefore the longer complaints in that action included many factual allegations inapposite here. However, even as to conduct and events that are equally significant in both cases, the In re IRS pleadings contain more detail than does the Complaint. Some allegations included in the In re IRS pleadings that would strengthen Tera's CDS allegations are mysteriously absent from the Complaint. See, e.g., In re IRS Javelin and TeraExchange Plaintiffs' Second Consolidated Amended Complaint ¶ 231 (alleging that "in July 2015, certain of the Dealer Defendant FCMs, including those of Barclays, BNP [Paribas], Credit Suisse, and JP Morgan, began jointly penalizing certain buy-side firms that were pushing against the bifurcated market structure by hiking their clearing fees by as much as ten-fold, while obedient buy-side customers [were] protected" (internal quotations omitted)); Id. ¶ 199 (describing a named Barclays official who used the excuse that Barclays was "resource constrained" as a pretext for refusing to establish trade clearing for TeraExchange and alleging that Deutsche Bank, Morgan Stanley, and Credit Suisse used the same language).

Tera argues that these factual allegations are sufficient to show that HSBC consciously committed itself to the scheme because they "give rise to the plausible inference that HSBC's misconduct does not stand alone" and HSBC's "runaround" can "be fairly viewed as one of several delay tactics . . . employed by the Defendants who conspired to boycott TeraExchange." (Opp'n to HSBC at 4.) Yet Tera does not plead any facts that elevate HSBC's action in taking its time considering Tera's proposal and ultimately deciding not to clear for Tera into anything other than a unilateral business decision unrelated to any prior agreement with other Defendants. Tera therefore cannot establish that HSBC, "in [its] individual capacit[y], consciously committed" to the conspiracy, AD/SAT, 181 F.3d at 234, nor can they furnish the requisite "fair notice of what the . . . claim is and the grounds upon which it rests," Anderson News, 680 F.3d at 182 (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555). In arguing otherwise, Tera misguidedly relies on the premise that "only 'slight evidence' is necessary to connect a defendant to an antitrust [*40] conspiracy once the conspiracy is established." (Opp'n to HSBC at 1-2 (quoting *Precision Assocs., Inc. v. Panalpina World Transport (Holding) Ltd., No. 08-cv-00042 (JG) (VVP), 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 113829, 2012 WL 3307486, at 2 (E.D.N.Y Aug. 13, 2012) (emphasis added by Tera)).) Yet the "slight evidence" standard in the antitrust context was imported from the criminal conspiracy context, see Apex Oil Co. v. DiMauro, 822 F.2d 246, 257 (2d Cir. 1987) (quoting United States v. Wilkinson, 754 F.2d 1427, 1436 (2d Cir. 1985)), where — as Judge Engelmayer pointed out in refusing to apply the standard — the Second Circuit has expressly "repudiated that formulation as inaccurately describing the burden of proof in conspiracy cases." In re IRS, 261 F. Supp. 3d at 482 n.30 (citing United States v. Huezo, 546 F.3d 174, 180 n.2 (2d Cir. 2008)). In light of the eroded doctrinal underpinnings of the "slight evidence" standard in the antitrust context and the obvious tension between such a standard and the Second Circuit's exhortations in AD/SAT and Anderson News that plaintiffs must plead a substantial connection between each individual defendant and the alleged conspiracy, the Court rejects that standard here.

The Court thus finds that, as in In re IRS, a "close review of the [Complaint] reveals no allegations that HSBC took any action against any trading platform that proposed all-to-all trading or against any customer that sought to so trade," and that the "lone claim" regarding HSBC's delay in [*41] declining to provide clearing services for Tera "is insufficient to link HSBC to the alleged conspiracy among" Defendants. Id. at 483.

Accordingly, the Court dismisses the Section 1 claim against HSBC.

b. Deutsche Bank

As to Deutsche Bank, the Complaint's allegations are similarly sparse. The only factual allegations about Deutsche Bank are that it has an ownership stake in ICE Clear and is a clearing member of LCH. Clearnet and CME; that a former Deutsche Bank official previously worked for another Defendant and communicated with his counterparts working for other Defendants; and that a former Deutsche Bank official once worked at MarkitSERV. (Compl. ¶¶ 110 n.24, 111 & nn.25-26, 113, 135.) These claims pale in comparison to the substantial factual allegations against Deutsche Bank in In re IRS and are arguably even more lacking than the Complaint's allegations with regard to HSBC. They describe ordinary business activities and unremarkable communications that do nothing to tie Deutsche Bank to an illicit anticompetitive scheme.

Accordingly, for the reasons stated above in dismissing the Section 1 claim against HSBC, the Court dismisses the Section 1 claim against Deutsche Bank.

c. Goldman Sachs

The Complaint's allegations [*42] regarding Goldman Sachs are substantially identical to those against Deutsche Bank. The Complaint alleges that Goldman Sachs has an ownership stake in ICE Clear and is a clearing member of LCH.Clearnet and CME; that a Goldman Sachs official regularly communicated — about who knows what — with a former Deutsche Bank official who also previously worked for another Defendant; and that a former Goldman Sachs official is the CEO of MarkitSERV. (Id. ¶¶ 110 n.24, 111 & nn.25-26, 113, 135.) As above, these generic assertions do not sufficiently link Goldman Sachs to the alleged conspiracy.

Accordingly, the Court dismisses the Section 1 claim against Goldman Sachs.

d. Morgan Stanley

The Complaint contains essentially no specific factual allegations as to Morgan Stanley whatsoever. The only references to Morgan Stanley state that it has an ownership stake in ICE Clear and is a clearing member of LCH.Clearnet and CME — clearly not a sufficient basis to establish Morgan Stanley's ties to the alleged scheme. (Id. ¶¶ 110 n.24, 111 & nn.25 26.)

Accordingly, the Court dismisses the Section 1 claim against Morgan Stanley.

e. Bank of America

Tera's claims as to Bank of America also fall short. Tera alleges the following facts [*43] regarding Bank of America: together with JP Morgan and Citigroup, Bank of America controls forty percent of all CDS dealing in the United States; Bank of America has an ownership stake in ICE Clear; Bank of America is a clearing member of LCH.Clearnet and CME; an official who previously worked for other Defendants regularly communicated with his counterpart at Bank of America; the head of clearing at Bank of America regularly met with Tera to discuss the prospect of clearing trades on TeraExchange and then ultimately, in March 2014, told Tera that "his bosses would never let him;" and ANZ Bank used Bank of America's clearing services. (Id. ¶¶ 3, 110 n.24, 111 & nn.25-26, 113-114, 116.)

As with HSBC and Deutsche Bank, none of these facts alleges anything outside of ordinary business dealings and a unilateral decision not to clear for TeraExchange. Tera has therefore failed to plead enough facts to plausibly connect Bank of America to the alleged conspiracy.

f. Barclays

As to Barclays, Tera's allegations are slightly more substantial. The Complaint first makes the usual boilerplate assertion that Barclays was a clearing member of both LCH.Clearnet and CME. (Id. ¶ 111 nn.25-26.) However, [*44] the Complaint then goes on to state that at an October 2014 meeting with two Barclays officials from the Fixed Income Currency and Commodities Electronic Distribution division, Tera was told that Barclays "regarded TeraExchange's platform as a 'Trojan Horse.'" (Id. ¶ 126.) Tera further alleges that it "heard this same language in meetings with other Dealer Defendants." (Id.) Thus, only one factual allegation plausibly alleges any connection between Barclays and the alleged conspiracy. Yet "a single act may support an inference of involvement in a conspiracy if [it is] 'of a nature justifying an inference of knowledge of the broader conspiracy.'" In re IRS, 261 F. Supp. 3d at 482 (quoting Huezo, 546 F.3d at 180). Unlike the facts pleaded about the Defendants discussed above, Tera's allegation that Barclays used the phrase "Trojan Horse" to describe Tera — part of a shared vocabulary used by multiple Defendants that Tera argues illustrates a prior agreement — directly links Barclays to the scheme. Accordingly, the Court finds that Tera has alleged sufficient facts to connect Barclays with the alleged conspiracy.

g. Credit Suisse

Likewise, Tera sufficiently pleads individual facts about Credit Suisse. Specifically, Tera alleges that Credit [*45] Suisse is a partial owner of ICE Clear and a clearing member of LCH.Clearnet and CME; executives at Credit Suisse made a heated phone call to an interdealer SEF run by GFI Group in response to that platform's statement that it would begin to allow anonymous trading, creating pressure that spurred GFI to "promptly reverse[] course;" and that Tera had a "similar experience" with Credit Suisse as it did with UBS, namely, that Credit Suisse repeatedly requested revisions to Tera's core documents as a precondition to routing customer orders to Tera and never ultimately executed an end-user license agreement. (Compl. ¶¶ 102-103, 110 n.24, 111 nn.25-26, 144.) By alleging that Credit Suisse took active steps to block anonymous trading, placed pressure on another platform to maintain the status quo, and participated in obstructionist conduct that was similar to that of another Defendant, these claims sufficiently link Credit Suisse to the alleged conspiracy.

h. JP Morgan

The Complaint's allegations regarding JP Morgan are relatively robust. With respect to JP Morgan, Tera sets forth its usual generic allegations that, together with Bank of America and Citigroup, JP Morgan controls forty percent [*46] of all CDS dealing in the United States, as well as that JP Morgan has an ownership stake in ICE

Clear and is a clearing member of LCH.Clearnet and CME. (Id. 3, ¶¶ 110 n.24, 111 & nn.25-26.) The Complaint also alleges that a former official of JP Morgan once worked at Deutsche Bank and regularly communicated with his counterparts working for other Defendants. (Id. ¶ 113.) These, alone, are insufficient to link JP Morgan to the alleged conspiracy.

But Tera also makes numerous more specific claims. The Complaint states that JP Morgan was one of four Defendants who almost simultaneously contacted Tera the day following the June 13, 2014 trade — which the Complaint alleges had not been made public — and told TeraExchange they would not clear any trades executed on the platform "until they conducted an 'audit' of TeraExchange's Rulebook." (Id. ¶ 95.) According to Tera, JP Morgan had already been reviewing the rulebook in the months leading up to the trade, but nevertheless demanded to conduct a new audit in the wake of the first trade. (Id. ¶ 98.) Tera further alleges that GMG Brokers, an IDB who wanted to use TeraExchange, told Tera that JP Morgan was "inexplicably delaying its approval for [*47] GMG to do so," (Id. ¶ 123.) In an effort to resolve the issue, Tera provided JP Morgan with a list of its "own traders that wanted to execute trades on TeraExchange" through various IDBs, but JP Morgan "would not budge," and a JP Morgan official cited the fact that they had not yet signed on to Tera's rulebook as the reason for the delay. Id. Tera also details a July 2014 exchange with a JP Morgan official who rebuffed Tera's request for an update regarding the status of its approval for IDBs to execute over TeraExchange, and cites an official at GMG who called JP Morgan "the biggest issue" in preventing IDBs from using TeraExchange. (Id. ¶¶ 124-125.) Finally, Tera alleges that, like Credit Suisse, JP Morgan made "heated phone calls" to an interdealer SEF that planned to introduce anonymous trading, pressuring the SEF to "reverse[] course." (Id. ¶ 144.)

These specific allegations provide an ample basis for linking JP Morgan to Tera's alleged conspiracy. See In re IRS, 261 F. Supp. 3d at 482 (emphasizing allegations of participation in the post-June 2014 audit request in upholding claims against BNP Paribas). While Defendants contest the relevance of JP Morgan's response to the June 13, 2014 trade because that trade [*48] involved IRS rather than CDS (see Mem. at 27), Tera's successful execution of its first swap trade was an indicator of the platform's viability, regardless of the specific type of instrument traded. Accordingly, the alleged tandem actions of Defendants to implement a boycott of Tera in the wake of its first trade supports an inference of a conspiracy with respect to its CDS offering, as discussed in further detail below in considering the parallel conduct alleged by Tera. The Court thus concludes that Tera has pleaded enough facts to maintain JP Morgan as a defendant in this action.

i. BNP Paribas

Tera's allegations regarding BNP Paribas are likewise sufficient. The Complaint alleges, per usual, that BNP Paribas is a clearing member of LCH.Clearnet and CME. (Compl. ¶ 111 & n.25-26.) But BNP Paribas is further alleged to have had a key role in the post-June 13, 2014 trade response by multiple Defendants. Tera alleges that, immediately after the trade, BNP Paribas's FCM notified its trading desk that buy-side customers were using Tera, and BNP's trading desk then contacted the parties to the transaction, threatening them with loss of clearing services, general market research, and execution [*49] services for other asset classes. (Id. ¶ 92.) The Complaint further alleges that word of BNP Paribas's threat spread to other market participants and had a chilling effect, including on one of the counterparties to the June 13 trade, who stopped responding to TeraExchange. (Id. ¶ 93.) A BNP official then told one of the counterparties to the trade to abstain from using Tera pending the resolution of unspecified operational issues, which were never reported to Tera; subsequently, BNP Paribas never gave the bank "the green light to resume trading." (Id. ¶ 94.) Tera further alleges that BNP Paribas colluded with Citi, JP Morgan, and UBS by alerting them to the June 13 trade, prompting the post-trade phone calls by all four Defendants regarding their "audit" of the Tera rulebook. (Id. ¶ 95.) As with JP Morgan, these facts suffice to link BNP Paribas to the conspiracy alleged by Tera. See In re IRS, 261 F. Supp. 3d at 482.

j. UBS[10]

[10] Because the Court's September 28, 2019 Order dismissed Tera's claims against UBS AG for lack of personal jurisdiction (see Doc. No. 134 at 4), the term "UBS" as used here refers to UBS Securities LLC, the only UBS entity that remains a party to this lawsuit.

For substantially the same reasons, Tera sufficiently links UBS to the conspiracy. The Complaint states that UBS has an ownership stake in ICE Clear and is a clearing member of CME. (Compl. ¶¶ 110 n.24, 111 & n.25-26.) The Complaint also alleges that UBS was among the four Defendants who responded [*50] to Tera's first trade with a phone call the next day seeking a pretextual audit. (Id. ¶ 95.) The Complaint also details UBS's ultimate refusal to use TeraExchange as part of its "agency execution model" after months of negotiations and repeated requests for revisions to Tera's core documents — an experience Tera alleges was similar to the one it had with Credit Suisse. (Id. ¶¶ 102-103.[11] Consistent with the Court's findings above, these allegations suffice to establish a connection between UBS and the alleged conspiracy.

k. Citi

The Complaint's allegations about Citi are likewise sufficient to withstand Defendants' group pleading challenge. The Complaint alleges that, together with IP Morgan and Bank of America, Citi controls forty percent of all CDS dealing in the United States; that Cid has an ownership stake in ICE Clear; and that Citi is a clearing member of LCH.Clearnet and CME. (Id. ¶¶ 3, 110 n.24, 111 & nn.25-26.) As discussed above, Citi is named as one of the four Defendants who made the post-trade call regarding auditing Tera's rulebook. (Id. ¶ 95.) The Complaint further specifies that Citi cited its refusal to approve Tera's rulebook as one reason why the IDB OTCex could not [*51] use Tera. (Id. ¶ 98.) Tera also makes specific allegations that a Citi official quoted excessively high clearing fees to ANZ Bank for clearing trades made on Tera, while offering to clear and settle for free trades made using other platforms. (Id. ¶ 116.) Finally, the Complaint alleges that a Citi official refused to allow an IDB to use Tera and admitted that the refusal was "more of an internal policy rather than a regulatory one" — underscoring, according to Tera, the lack of a valid basis for Citi's withholding of permission. (Id. ¶ 121.) For all the reasons discussed above, the Court finds that Tera has pleaded enough facts to establish a link between Citi and the overall conspiracy alleged.

* * *

As to Barclays, Credit Suisse, JP Morgan, BNP Paribas, UBS, and Citi, the Court will now analyze the parallel conduct and plus factors set forth in the Complaint to determine the viability of Tera's Section 1 claim. "Unanimity of action" among all the remaining Defendants "is not required;" rather, "[a]t the pleading stage, the issue is whether the inference of conspiracy, viewing the well-pled allegations holistically, is plausible." In re IRS, 261 F. Supp. 3d at 479. For the reasons stated below, the Court finds that Tera has [*52] adequately alleged parallel conduct and plus factors to survive Defendants' motion to dismiss.

4. Parallel Conduct

Tera argues that a conspiracy to boycott the TeraExchange platform can be inferred from parallel conduct by Defendants, in addition to circumstantial evidence and "plus factors" that indicate a prior agreement rather than mere parallelism. See Id. at 472. The Complaint alleges the following parallel conduct:

- Parallel refusal to trade on TeraExchange. Though Defendants, including Credit Suisse and UBS, initially claimed an interest in trading on TeraExchange, potentially as part of their "agency execution models" in which Defendants served as introducing brokers who routed trades to SEFs, they all ultimately refused to trade on the platform. Defendants refused to direct any of their CDS business to Tera and ultimately starved the platform of liquidity. (See, e.g., Compl. ¶¶ 99, 101-104, 119.)

- Parallel action towards Tera in response to its first swap trade. After Tera conducted its first trade on June 13, 2014, which was cleared by BNP Paribas's FCM, the FCM notified BNP Paribas's trading desk of the "transgression." (Id. ¶ 92.) The trading desk immediately threatened the parties [*53] to the trade with loss of access to clearing services and alerted three other Defendants — Citi, JP Morgan, and UBS. (Id. ¶¶ 92-95.) The next business day, despite the fact that the trade had never been publicized, all four Defendants [11] The Complaint also refers to UBS when it alleges that a UBS official publicly stated his opposition to the ongoing practice of name give-up (Compl. ¶ 131); however, this claim is not a factual allegation about UBS's participation in the conspiracy, but rather a component of Tera's argument that the practice of name give-up no longer had a legitimate purpose.

separately, yet "almost simultaneously," called and told Tera that they would not clear any trades, all citing the need to conduct an "audit" of Tera's rulebook — a document that was largely standardized with other SEFs and had already been reviewed by the CFTC in granting preliminary certification to the platform. (Id. ¶¶ 95-97.) Other Defendants later blocked trading on the platform pending a rulebook "audit," though "[n]one of these audits have ever been completed." (Id. ¶ 96.)

• Parallel withholding of clearing services by Defendants' FCMs. Defendants wielded enormous influence over the clearing business, since they own ICE Clear (the largest clearinghouse for CDS) and make up the majority of CDS clearing members at the other two major clearinghouses. (Id. ¶¶ 110-112.) Defendants, including BNP Paribas, leveraged this control by refusing to participate in the pre-trade credit check process and refusing to clear trades for buy-side customers who wanted [*54] to use TeraExchange, despite the resulting loss of income from clearing and settlement fees for Defendants' FCMs. (Id. ¶¶ 84, 105-119.) This uniform refusal effectively paralyzed prospective CDS transactions on TeraExchange, blocking third parties from using the platform. (Id. ¶¶ 107-108.)

• Similar clearing fee differentials. Defendants, including Citi, also sought to steer customer transactions to SEFs that engaged in RFQ trading. Multiple Defendants quoted prohibitively high rates to clear trades on TeraExchange while simultaneously offering to execute those same transactions for free or at a substantially reduced rate if traded through one of their preferred SEFs, which were either owned by Defendants or otherwise agreed to adhere to RFQ and name give-up. (Id. ¶¶ 15, 105, 116, 134.)

• Common excuses and vocabulary. Defendants relied on the same pretextual reasons for delaying or refusing to conduct business with TeraExchange, including insisting upon the need to "audit" Tera's rulebook and stringing Tera along by repeatedly reviewing and revising core documents but ultimately failing to actually execute end-user license agreements. (Id. ¶ 101.) Defendants also used similar language [*55] in describing the threat posed by TeraExchange, with multiple Defendants, including Barclays, referring to the platform as a "Trojan Horse." (Id. ¶ 126.)

• Similar exertion of pressure on customers and interdealer SEFs. Defendants, including BNP Paribas, enforced their boycott by threatening access to other banking services for buy-side customers who traded on Tera, collectively making it known that any investor caught dealing with Tera would be cut off from the ability to trade. (Id. ¶¶ 14, 118, 147-148.) Defendants, including Credit Suisse and JP Morgan, also pressured interdealer SEFs to not allow buy-side entities to trade on their platforms, threatening to place any SEFs who did not conform to these demands into the "penalty box" by withdrawing liquidity from them. (Id. ¶¶ 143-144.)

• Similar treatment of IDBs. Tera signed up a dozen international IDBs to use TeraExchange to execute their CDS and other swap trades in order to satisfy Dodd-Frank's cross-border requirements. (Id. ¶ 120.) But Defendants, including Citi and JP Morgan, singled out Tera and — in their capacities as customers of those IDBs — "unjustifiably delayed and ultimately refused to give their permission" for these [*56] IDBs to use Tera. (Id. ¶¶ 120-121.) Defendants relied on similar pretexts, such as the fact that they had not signed onto Tera's rulebook, to explain their withholding of consent. (Id. ¶¶ 121, 123.) Defendants threatened IDBs with a boycott should they participate in anonymous all-to-all trading. (Id. ¶¶ 149-150.)

• Parallel adherence to name give-up. Defendants insisted on the practice of "name give-up," or post-trade name disclosure, in order to police whether market participants were abiding by their demands. (Id. ¶¶ 127, 129.) The practice no longer served any legitimate purpose in the wake of Dodd-Frank's central clearing requirement, and was insisted upon by Defendants as a surveillance and information-control mechanism. (Id ¶ 129.) Defendants boycotted any trading platforms that refused to adhere to name give-up, starving them of liquidity. (Id. ¶ 134.) One means by which Dealer Defendants enforced name give-up was by requiring IDBs to use MarkitWIRE — a cumbersome and unnecessary service that offered counterparties a "last look" at the trade and thereby removed anonymity. (Id. ¶¶ 134-138.)

The Court finds that, viewed holistically, the Complaint adequately pleads parallel conduct [*57] that makes the inference of a conspiracy among the six remaining Defendants plausible. As in In re IRS, "[t]hat is so even discounting as worthy of less weight the [Complaint's] collective allegations about 'Dealer Defendants' that lack allegations about a particular" Defendant, In re IRS, 261 F. Supp. 3d at 474, and disregarding specific allegations about Defendants against whom the Court dismissed Tera's Section 1 claims above. True, as Judge Engelmayer recognized and as Defendants point out, some of the parallel conduct, if considered in isolation, is consistent with unilateral action based on each Defendant's own business prerogatives — including Defendants' refusal to trade on Tera or to provide clearing services to Tera via their FCMs. (See id; see also Mem. at 25.) Yet this conduct does not stand alone. Tera also pleads "allegations of other common behavior that is less easily explained as unilateral action." In re IRS, 261 F. Supp. 3d at 475. Chief among the allegations suggesting coordination is Defendants' synchronized response to Tera's first swap trade, which entailed four different Defendants calling Tera "almost simultaneously" on the first business day following the trade and making near-identical statements that each Defendant would not clear [*58] trades on TeraExchange until they completed an "audit" of the rulebook. As Judge Engelmayer found in considering the same allegation in In re IRS, the fact "that four [Defendants] called Tera the next business day, and made the identical demand of Tera . . . as a condition for clearing trades, is improbable enough to support the inference of collaboration." Id. at 475-76. Here, too, "[t]hat inference is strengthened by the [Complaint's] well-[pleaded] allegation that the Dealer's interest in Tera's rulebook was pretextual," based on allegations that "(1) the Tera rulebook had already been audited by the CFTC, which had provisionally approved Tera's platform, and (2) despite their expressions of interest in the rulebook, no Dealer ever completed this supposedly important audit," Id. at 476. Other claims, in combination with this one, lend further support to the inference that Defendants' actions transcend mere coincidence. These include the allegations that Defendants used similar language in describing Tera as a Trojan Horse; the similar excuses and delay tactics used by Defendants; the similar kinds of pressure applied by Defendants on buy-side customers and interdealer SEFs by threatening to place them [*59] in the "penalty box;" the common insistence on name give-up, including through the use of MarkitSERV; and Defendants' shared practice of blocking international IDBs from using Tera.

Defendants maintain that this parallel conduct alleged by Tera is not "meaningful" enough to support the inference of a plausible conspiracy, pointing to material contained in an email cited by the Complaint to argue that JP Morgan was in fact providing clearing services to Tera. (Mem. at 26.) However, on a motion to dismiss, "defendants may not use plaintiffs' sources as an archive from which to build what amounts to a factual rebuttal. Defendants may argue implausibility on other grounds, but not by stacking facts extracted from secondary sources to construct an alternative narrative, at odds with the [Complaint's] well-pled allegations." In re IRS, 261 F. Supp. 3d at 481; see also, e.g., Global Network Commc'ns, Inc. v. City of New York, 458 F.3d 150, 156 (2d Cir. 2006) (district court erred by relying on materials external to complaint to "make a finding of fact that controverted the plaintiff's own factual assertions set out in its complaint"); Sira v. Morton, 380 F.3d 57, 67 (2d Cir. 2004) ("Limited quotation from or reference to documents that may constitute relevant evidence in a case is not enough to incorporate those documents, wholesale, into the complaint."). [*60] The Court therefore will not resolve Defendants' competing interpretations of emails and other documents at this stage. The Court also declines Defendants' invitation to "draw a negative inference from the absence" of certain allegations in the Complaint (see Mem. at 26), since doing so would contravene the Court's duty to draw all factual inferences in favor of Tera at the motion-to-dismiss stage.

Similarly, Defendants urge the Court to disregard Tera's allegations regarding the Defendants' June 16, 2014 response to Tera's first trade because that trade, as revealed in the In re IRS pleadings, was an IRS trade rather than a CDS one. (See Mem, at 12.) But even assuming that the Court may take judicial notice of information contained in pleadings filed in other cases, see Rothman v. Gregor, 220 F.3d 81, 92 (2d Cir. 2000), the Court does not agree that the Complaint's allegations as to the June 13, 2014 trade are irrelevant merely because the instrument traded was an IRS rather than a CDS. As Defendants themselves acknowledge, "Tera registered just one trading platform with the CFTC, the SEF operated as 'TeraExchange.'" (Mem. at 13 n.26.) That SEF was designed as a trading platform for multiple instruments, including IRS and CDS. It is therefore [*61] perfectly appropriate to conclude, drawing every reasonable inference in Tera's favor, that Tera's first successful trade of any instrument was indicative of its potential viability in the CDS market and could have spurred Defendants to initiate a group boycott to protect their CDS business. The Court therefore agrees with Tera that Defendants' "focus on the nature of [the June 13] transaction is misplaced." (Opp'n at 17 n.12.)

Defendants' other arguments regarding the Complaint's allegations of parallel conduct are equally unavailing. Defendants insist that the request to audit Tera's rulebook was wholly legitimate (Mem. at 27-28), but — as Judge Engelmayer concluded in In re IRS — Tera pleaded sufficient facts to render plausible the inference that the requests were pretextual, including that the rulebook was largely standardized, had already been reviewed by the CFTC, and that none of the audits were ever completed. See Compl, ¶¶ 96, 97, 100; see also In re IRS, 261 F. Supp. 3d at 456-76. As to Defendants' attempt to contradict Tera's allegations regarding JP Morgan's audit request with reference to the meaning of an email cited in the Complaint (Mem. at 28-30), the Court — as discussed above — will not wade into a [*62] factual dispute at the motion-to-dismiss stage and instead accepts Tera's well-pleaded factual allegations as true.

The Court is equally unpersuaded by Defendants' argument that the IDB allegations should be disregarded because the Complaint fails to specify whether the IDBs at issue operate in the CDS market or the IRS market. (Mem. at 30.) In fact, the Complaint does specify that TeraExchange enlisted the IDBs "to execute their CDS and other swap trades" — a representation that binds the Court at this stage of the litigation. (Compl. ¶ 120.) While, as discussed above, Defendants are correct in pointing out that Defendants' refusal to direct their own business to Tera via the IDBs is consistent with unilateral action, the Complaint's allegations that Defendants did so using similar pretexts and patterns of behavior nevertheless contribute to Tera's showing of parallel conduct.

Thus, the Court concludes that Tera has adequately pleaded parallel conduct that, if combined with sufficient plus factors, would withstand a motion to dismiss. The Court accordingly now turns to the plus factors alleged by Tera.

5. Plus Factors

Of the three "plus factors" previously recognized by the Second Circuit, [*63] the Court finds that one — a common motive to conspire — lends strong support to the inference of a prior agreement, and another — a high degree of interfirm communications — lends moderate support. Tera also pleads circumstantial evidence that gives further credence to the conspiracy claim. Tera has therefore adequately pleaded plus factors "which, when combined with parallel behavior, might permit a jury to infer the existence of an [illegal] agreement." Citigroup, 709 F.3d at 136 n.6.

With respect to the first plus factor, the Complaint amply pleads that Defendants had a common motive "to preserve the 'profit center' supplied by maximal use of non-anonymous RFQ trading with the buy-side" — a motive as relevant in the CDS market as it was in the IRS market. In re IRS, 261 F. Supp. 3d at 476; see also Compl. ¶¶ 4, 12, 71-76, 79-86, 91, 129-130, 140, 142. Here, too, "conspiracy, if successful, would assure that the new platforms were starved of liquidity; there was otherwise a risk that enough [Defendants] would participate to give the new platforms enough sufficient liquidity to be viable." In re IRS, 261 F. Supp. 3d at 476. Judge Cote recognized a similar common motive to conspire in finding that plus factors were adequately pleaded in In re CDS, observing that "no single [Defendant] [*64] could prevent [electronic] exchanges [for CDS trading] from emerging, but all [Defendants] would profit from such prevention." *In re CDS, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 123784, 2014 WL 4379112 at 10.[12] As Tera points out, this interdependence critically distinguishes the CDS market from the telephone market at issue in Twombly, where each defendant controlled a regional market in which they alone were dominant and thus could unilaterally take actions to block new competitors from encroaching on their territory. (See Twombly, 550 U.S. at 566; Opp'n at 37.)

[12] Tera argues that this plus factor is particularly weighty here because, in light of Judge Cote's finding in In re CDS, "this is the second time Defendants have conspired to prevent exchange-based CDS trading to preserve the RFQ system." (Opp'n at 24.) The Court disagrees. Because In re CDS concluded in a settlement without any determination of liability, see Order Preliminarily Approving Settlements and Providing for Notice to the Settlement Class, I3-md-2476-DLC (Doc. No. 465), Judge Cote's finding that a common motive to conspire had been sufficiently pleaded to withstand a motion to dismiss does not support the conclusion that "this is the second time Defendants have conspired" in the CDS market. Likewise, the Court does not find the Complaint's allegations about past regulatory investigations related to Defendants' conduct in the CDS market to be probative because those investigations were closed without adverse findings and were related to conduct in a different time period and regulatory landscape. See Compl. ¶ 16; In re IRS, 261 F. Supp. 3d at 477 n.25 (citing In re Elevator Antitrust Litig., 502 F.3d 47, 51-52 (2d Cir. 2007) (discounting as irrelevant alleged anticompetitive conduct by the same defendants in another region and rejecting the claim that "if it happened there, it could have happened here")).

Defendants argue that Tera failed to adequately plead common motive, citing cases for the proposition that a "common motive for increased profits always exists" and arguing that declining to trade on Tera was within each Defendant's unilateral interest. (Mem. at 33-34 (citing In re Musical Instruments and Equipment Antitrust Litig., 798 F.3d 1186, 1194 n.8 (9th Cir. 2015)).) But that criticism is misplaced. Tera pleads not that Defendants had a generic interest in generating increased profit, but a specific motive to protect a highly lucrative existing business that was jeopardized by the potential viability of Tera's trading platform, which could be defeated only through cooperation among multiple Defendants. As discussed above, Tera pleads far more parallel conduct in support of that common motive [*65] than merely refraining from trading on Tera. Bearing in mind that Tera is under no obligation to rule out the possibility of independent action at the pleading stage, see Anderson News, 680 F.3d at 184, Tera has sufficiently pleaded this plus factor.

The Complaint also makes a substantial showing with respect to the second plus factor — a high degree of interfirm communications. The Complaint alleges that BNP Paribas communicated with JP Morgan, Citi, and UBS to alert them to the June 13, 2014 trade and states that regular communications took place between Defendants' clearing divisions. (Compl. ¶¶ 95-96, 113.)[13] The Complaint also points to Defendants' overlapping roles in institutions critical to the CDS market, including their joint ownership and status as clearing members of ICE Clear (id. ¶ 110), as well as their roles as clearing members at CME and LCH.Clearnet (id. ¶ 111).[14] As Defendants point out, the interfirm communications alleged here are not as extensive as those in In re IRS, where the plaintiffs also alleged monthly meetings among the heads of Defendants' trading desks, common participation in trade associations, informal meals, and other gatherings. (See In re IRS, 261 F. Supp. 3d at 476; Mem. at 34-35.) Nevertheless, the Complaint [*66] does make allegations about significant communications that, in combination with allegations of common language and techniques used by Defendants in carrying out the boycott, contribute to the plausibility of the inference that the alleged parallel conduct flowed from a preceding agreement rather than unilateral action.

As to the fmal plus factor previously enumerated by the Second Circuit — actions against a defendant's self-interest — the Complaint provides some (admittedly less compelling) support for the existence of concerted action among the remaining Defendants. Specifically, the Complaint alleges that Defendants' FCMs acted against their own self-interest when they withheld clearing services from TeraExchange, thereby forgoing the fees they would have otherwise earned for every trade submitted to a clearinghouse. (Compl. ¶¶ 104, 109.) Although this conduct could arguably be the result of independent decisions to forgo doing any business with Tera because of a desire not to help a potential competitor become successful, multiple actors passing up a guaranteed income stream is more suggestive of a prior agreement to drive Tera out of the market. Accordingly, [*67] this factor lends further, albeit only "marginal[]," support to the conspiracy claim. In re IRS, 261 F. Supp. 3d at 477.

Tera argues that several additional facts and pieces of circumstantial evidence function as "plus factors" that support the inference of a prior agreement. (Opp'n at 22-25.) Most of these, including the timing of Defendants' audit request, the use of similar language, and the deployment of shared techniques to punish IDBs and buy-side customers who engaged in all-to-all trading, have been previously discussed in the context of Tera's pleading of parallel conduct. Nevertheless, the Court agrees that those facts contribute to a context suggestive of prior

[13] The parties dispute whether Tera publicly reported the June 13 trade on its website, which bears upon the question of whether the other Defendants could have found out about the trade absent communication from BNP Paribas. Compare Mem. at 27 & n,35 (citing a post—oral argument letter by plaintiffs in In re IRS, which refers to data sharing regarding this trade as required by CFTC regulations) with Opp'n at 26 (maintaining that Tera did not post any information about the trade or counterparties on its website). In light of the Court's obligation to "accept as true all of the factual allegations contained in the complaint" at the motion-to-dismiss stage, Twombly, 550 U.S. at 572 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted), and because the materials cited by Defendants fall far short of the level of clarity necessary to permit the Court to take judicial notice of a fact in contradiction of the well-pleaded allegations of the complaint, see Global Network, 458 F.3d at 156, the Court adopts Tera's allegation as true.

[14] The Complaint also alleges, without supporting facts, that "Defendants communicated regarding their conspiracy in secret via telephone, email, instant messaging, and Bloomberg messaging." (Compl. ¶ 154.) The Court did not consider this bald assertion in determining the degree of interfirm communications alleged by Tera.

agreement rather than merely "actions taken by market actors who are aware of and anticipate similar actions taken by competitors, but which fall short of a tacit agreement." Apex Oil, 822 F.2d at 254.

Tera also recasts two additional factual allegations as "plus factors" in its brief: first, the sudden withdrawal of IDBs and the buy-side from using TeraExchange in response to Defendants' threats, despite initial enthusiasm, and, second, the structure of the CDS market, which was dominated by Defendants and had high bathers to entry. (Opp'n at 23, 25.) However, the Court finds [*68] that these do not bear on the likelihood of a prior agreement and therefore do not amount to "plus factors." The reaction of IDBs and buy-side customers to Defendants' threats speaks to the efficacy of the alleged conspiracy, while Tera's allegations about the nature of the CDS market demonstrate an opportunity to conspire; neither tend to suggest that Defendants' conduct stemmed from a prior agreement rather than unilateral action. Still, as discussed above, Tera has sufficiently pleaded other "plus factors" that adequately place the alleged parallel conduct in a context that suggests prior agreement among Defendants. Tera has thus cleared Twombly's requirement that a complaint contain "enough fact to raise a reasonable expectation that discovery will reveal evidence of illegal agreement." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556.

Viewed holistically, the Court finds that Tera has pleaded sufficient parallel conduct and plus factors to state a plausible Section 1 claim with respect to Barclays, Credit Suisse, JP Morgan, BNP Paribas, UBS, and Citi. The Defendants' motion to dismiss is therefore DENTED with respect to those Defendants. The Court now turns to the Defendants' motion to dismiss Tera's statelaw claims.

B. Donnelly [*69] Act Claim

New York's Donnelly Act prohibits "[e]very contract, agreement, arrangement or combination whereby . . . competition . . . may be restrained." N.Y. Gen. Bus. Law § 340(1). The Donnelly Act was "modelled on" the Sherman Act and therefore "should generally be construed in light of Federal precedent and given a different interpretation only where State policy, differences in the statutory language or the legislative history justify such a result." X.L.O. Concrete Corp. v. Rivergate Corp., 83 N.Y.2d 513, 518, 634 N.E.2d 158, 611 N.Y.S.2d 786 (1994) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted); see also Williams v. Citigroup Inc., 659 F.3d 208, 211 n.2 (2d Cir. 2011) (observing that the Donnelly Act "was modeled on the Sherman Act and has generally been construed in accordance with federal precedents"); Nat'l Gear & Piston, Inc. v. Cummins Power Sys., LLC, 861 F. Supp. 2d 344, 370 (S.D.N.Y. 2012) ("The standard for a well-pleaded Donnelly Act claim is the same as a claim under Section 1 of the Sherman Act.").

Because Tera's Donnelly Act claim therefore rises and falls with the Section 1 claim, the motion to dismiss is GRANTED with respect to HSBC, Deutsche Bank, Goldman Sachs, Morgan Stanley, and Bank of America, and DENIED with respect to Barclays, Credit Suisse, JP Morgan, BNP Paribas, UBS, and Citi.[15]

C. Unjust Enrichment Claim

The Court next turns to Tera's unjust enrichment claim, While the Complaint's boilerplate unjust enrichment language fails to plead which state's unjust [*70] enrichment law is applicable, "[t]he elements of unjust enrichment are similar in every state" and "[D]efendants have made no showing that any differences in the various states' laws are material at this early stage of the litigation." In re CDS, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 123784, 2014 WL 4379112, at *18. Accordingly, the Court will address the sufficiency of Tera's unjust enrichment claim under New York law.

"Under New York law, a claim for unjust enrichment requires that '(1) [the] defendant was enriched, (2) at plaintiff's expense, and (3) equity and good conscience militate against permitting defendant to retain what plaintiff is seeking to recover." In re IRS, 261 F. Supp. 3d at 500 (quoting Diesel Props S.r.l. v. Greystone Bus. Credit LLC, 631 F.3d 42, 55 (2d Cir. 2011)).

[15] The Court previously dismissed Tera's Donnelly Act claim against RBS and UBS AG in its September 28, 2018 Order. (Doc. No. 134.)

However, where an unjust enrichment claim is made in connection with alleged antitrust violations, the law is clear that "to the extent that the [Section] 1 claims have been found deficient, the unjust enrichment claims must fall," since "without a viable underlying claim of illegality," there can be no unjust enrichment. In re IRS, 261 F. Supp. 3d at 500 (quoting Kramer v. Pollock-Krasner Found., 890 F. Supp. 250, 257 (S.D.N.Y. 1995)). Accordingly, the motion to dismiss Tera's unjust enrichment claim is granted to the extent that the Section 1 claims were dismissed.

Furthermore, as to the remaining Defendants, the Court agrees with Judge Engelmayer that Tera's unjust enrichment theory is too attenuated to state [*71] a claim. See id. Here, too, Tera "alleges an indirect theory of unjust enrichment, in that, by destroying . . . Tera, the Dealer Defendants cost [the platform] per-transaction usage revenue, while enabling themselves to benefit from the wider bid-ask spreads characteristic of other modes" of CDS trading. Id. But to prevail on its unjust enrichment claim, Tera must demonstrate that Defendants received a "specific and direct benefit' from the property sought to be recovered, rather than an 'indirect benefit.'" Id. (quoting In re Commodity Exch., Inc., 213 F. Supp. 3d 631, 676 (S.D.N.Y. 2016)). Because Tera alleges "no relationship, direct or indirect," between itself and Defendants, and since "the usage revenue of which . . . Tera [was] allegedly deprived is different from the money [Defendants] ostensibly gained (via wide trading spreads)," the Court agrees with Judge Engelmayer that Tera's theory "is too indirect to state an unjust enrichment claim." Id. at 500-01.

Accordingly, the motion to dismiss Tera's unjust enrichment claims is GRANTED as to all Defendants.

D. Tortious Interference with Business Relations Claim

Finally, the Court turns to Tera's claim for tortious interference with business relations. Here, too, the Complaint asserts merely three boilerplate sentences [*72] and fails to identify the applicable state law, though the Court agrees with Defendants' position that the applicable law of all three possible jurisdictions is substantively similar. (See Mem. at 44 n.52.) To state a claim for tortious interference with business relations in New York, "a plaintiff must show that '(1) there is a business relationship between the plaintiff and a third party; (2) the defendant, knowing of that relationship, intentionally interferes with it; (3) the defendant acts with the sole purpose of harming the plaintiff, or, failing that level of malice, uses dishonest, unfair, or improper means; and (4) the relationship is injured.' In re IRS, 261 F Supp. 3d at 499 (quoting Goldhirsh Grp. v. Alpert, 107 F.3d 105, 108-09 (2d Cir. 1997)). "'This tort is a difficult one to sustain, with requirements more demanding than those for interference with [the] performance of an existing contract.'" Id. (quoting PKG Grp., LLC v. Gamma Croma, S.p.A., 446 F. Supp. 2d 249, 251 (S.D.N.Y. 2006)).

Judge Engelmayer previously determined that the same "three boilerplate sentences" that Tera pleads here were insufficient to state a tortious interference claim, finding that they failed to "identify any customer with whose prospective business relations with . . . Tera the . . . Defendants sought to interfere or the particular [*73] nature of the prospective business relations." Id; see Commercial Data Servers, Inc. v. Int'l Bus. Mach. Corp., 166 F. Supp. 2d 891, 898 (S.D.N.Y. 2001) ("Plaintiff must specify some particular, existing relationship through which plaintiff would have done business but for the allegedly tortious behavior," (internal quotation marks and citation omitted)).

The Court agrees that the Complaint fails to state a claim for tortious interference with business relations. Even assuming that the Complaint satisfied the requirement of identifying specific customer relationships by pleading that Tera had secured agreements with hedge funds, IDBs, and other entities who committed to using the platform (see, e.g., Compl. ¶¶ 80, 89), the Complaint does not plead that Defendants had "actual knowledge of any specific relationships" allegedly harmed by Defendants' actions. 4 K & D Corp. v. Concierge Auctions, LLC, 2 F. Supp. 3d 525, 546 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 10, 2014).

Accordingly, the motion to dismiss Tera's claim for tortious interference with business relations is GRANTED as to all Defendants.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the forgoing reasons, the motion to dismiss Tera's Sherman Act claim and Donnelly Act claim is GRANTED as to HSBC, Deutsche Bank, Goldman Sachs, Morgan Stanley, and Bank of America, and DENIED with respect to Barclays, Credit Suisse, JP Morgan, BNP Paribas, UBS, and Citi. The motion [*74] to dismiss Tera's unjust enrichment and tortious interference with business relations claims is GRANTED as to all Defendants.

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED THAT the parties shall submit a joint letter setting forth their views of the next steps in this litigation no later than August 16, 2019.

The Clerk of Court is respectfully directed to terminate the motion pending at Doc. No. 96.

SO ORDERED.

Opinion

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

Plaintiff EuroTec Vertical Flight Solutions, LUC ("Plaintiff") brings this action against Safran Helicopter Engines USA, Inc. ("SafranHE USA"), and against Safran Helicopter Engines S.A.S, ("SafranHE France") and Safran Helicopter Engines Canada, Inc. ("SafranHE Canada") (together, "International Defendants," and collectively with SafranHE USA, "Defendants"). In the Third Amended [*2] Complaint (the "Complaint")—which is the fourth complaint in this case—Plaintiff alleges violations of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2, California Cartwright Act, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16720 et seq., Kansas Restraint of Trade Act, Kan. Stat. Ann. § 50-101 et seq., § 35 of the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1117, Texas Deceptive Trade Practices Consumer Protection Act ("DTPA"), Tex. Bus. & Com. Code Ann. §§ 17.46, 17.50, as well as common law claims for breach of contract, wrongful detention, conversion, negligence, tortious interference, civil conspiracy, unfair competition, misrepresentation, and concealment.

Pending before the Court is SafranHE USA's and the International Defendants' Motions to Dismiss [ECF Nos. 103, 104]. For the foregoing reasons, the Court grants in part and denies in part the Motions.

I. BACKGROUND

Pursuant to Special Order 3-318, this case was transferred from the docket of Judge Jane J. Boyle to the docket of this Court on March 8, 2018.

Plaintiff filed its original complaint on October 23, 2015, and amended the complaint to join new defendants on March 28, 2016. On June 1, 2016, Defendants filed a Motion to Compel Arbitration and a Motion to Dismiss, which the Court granted, staying the case pending arbitration. Following arbitration, the Court reopened the case on September 18, 2017, Plaintiff filed its [*3] Second Amended Complaint on October 9, 2017, and Defendants filed a new set of motions to dismiss. The Court held a hearing on the second set of motions to dismiss on November 18, 2018. The Court dismissed the Second Amended Complaint in its entirety but granted Plaintiff's motion for leave to amend. Although the Court expressed hope that affording Plaintiff an opportunity to replead would result in "some of the weaker of [the] 14 claims . . . [getting] taken out," ECF No. 92, at 65:21-23, Plaintiffs fourth attempt includes thirty causes of actions over the course of 130 pages, and includes many of the same weaker claims as its prior attempt. See Third Am. Compl. Defendants filed a third set of motions to dismiss on January 25, 2019, which is the subject of this Memorandum Opinion and Order.

A. Parties

Plaintiff is a Kansas limited liability company that owns helicopters and helicopter engines, is a certified repair station, and is in the business of buying, selling, and leasing helicopters, engines, and engine parts. See Third Am. Compl. ¶¶ 1-4. Plaintiff also provides consumers with various services, including engine maintenance, repair, and overhaul services ("MRO Services"). Id. [*4] ¶ 5. Defendants are manufacturers, marketers, sellers, and lessors of helicopter engines and of modules, components, parts, and accessories for those engines. Id. ¶¶ 9, 12-15, 18. Defendants also market and provide MRO Services for their engines. Id.

With the exception of SafranHE USA, which is a Delaware corporation with its principal place of business in Dallas County, Texas, the Defendants are foreign companies. Id. ¶ 11. SafranHE France, formerly Turbomeca, S.A. and Turbomeca S.A.S., is a French company and domiciliary. Id. ¶ 7. SafranHE Canada is a Canadian corporation and domiciliary. Id. ¶ 17. Plaintiff contends, however, that there is a significant unity of interest in ownership and control between the three Defendants, such that they are alter egos of one another. Id. ¶ 20. Plaintiff alleges that either SafranHE France is able to exert a great degree of control over the other Defendants, that Defendants are agents of one another, or that they acted in concert, pursuant to agreements, or as a joint venture, such that they should be considered a single business enterprise. Id. ¶¶ 21-24.

B. Market Allegations

Civilian and military helicopters are designed and manufactured by Airbus Helicopters ("Airbus"), Bell Helicopter, Leonardo Helicopters, Sikorsky Aircraft [*5] Corporation and other companies. Id. ¶ 70. According to Plaintiff, approximately 45% of all civil and parapublic helicopters worldwide are manufactured by Airbus. Id. ¶ 73. Airbus does not manufacture the engines used in its helicopters, instead relying on companies in the business of designing and manufacturing engines. Id. ¶ 75. Defendants are the largest manufacturers dedicated solely to the manufacturing of helicopter engines, and compete with "General Electric, Rolls-Royce, and Pratt & Whitney Canada." Id.

Plaintiff alleges that there is one geographic market and two relevant product markets.[1] Id. ¶ 244. The geographic is allegedly the United States, while the product markets are: (1) market for Defendants' engines and parts; and (2) market for MRO Services for Defendants' engines.

(1) Geographic Market

Plaintiff asserts that the relevant geographic market is the United States. Id. ¶ 244. Nonetheless, Plaintiff contends that (1) Defendants deal in the United States and Canada; (2) Defendants' customers are located in the United States and Canada, and turn to sellers in both countries for engines and parts; and (3) sellers of Safran engines and parts, as well as providers [*6] of MRO Services, view as competition sellers and service providers in both the United States and Canada, Id, ¶¶ 245-49.

(2) Market for Engines and Parts

The first relevant product market is allegedly the market for Defendants' engines and parts. Id. ¶ 252. Plaintiff states that SafranHE France is the largest supplier of helicopter engines to Airbus, manufacturing all of the engines for the ten Airbus models sold in the United States, Id. ¶ 79. According to the Complaint, there are approximately 1,632 helicopters in existence with Defendants engines. Id. ¶ 74. Airbus's other supplier, Pratt & Whitney Canada, is the exclusive supplier for only one Airbus model. Id. Plaintiff alleges that a consumer would not find it cost-effective either to replace an entire engine or to seek FAA recertification of a helicopter for use with another engine to avoid paying Defendants' higher prices. Id. ¶¶ 258-60.

Moreover, engines and parts manufactured by Defendants are allegedly neither interchangeable nor compatible with engines and parts manufactured by other manufacturers. Id. ¶¶ 253-55. Thus, a part manufactured by General Electric, for example, cannot be used in Defendants' engines.[2] Id. ¶ 257. According [*7] to Plaintiffs, the demand for Defendants' engines and parts is thus independent of the demand for other manufacturers' engines and parts. Id. ¶ 256.

Plaintiff has not alleged, however, the total number of Airbus helicopters or other facts from which the Court could deduce Defendants' market share with Airbus. Similarly, Plaintiff alleged that there are more than 2,300 helicopters with Defendants' engines, id. ¶ 81, but has not alleged Defendants' market share of all engines or parts in the United States or worldwide, aside from the conclusory statement that Defendants have "a market share of over 50 percent." Id. ¶ 668.

Plaintiff further claims that while some manufacturers use distributors to sell engine parts, some sell refurbished or used parts, and others sell new replacement parts, id. ¶¶ 83-86, Defendants are the sole distributors of their own parts. Id. ¶¶ 670-71. Plaintiff thus contends that Defendants have monopoly power in the market for their own parts. Id. ¶¶ 668-73.

[1] These allegations are relevant to Plaintiff's antitrust claims. As explained in more detail below, most of Plaintiff's claims require it to plead a relevant market, which is composed of a geographic market—the geographic area where Defendants compete—and a product market—a market of reasonably interchangeable goods. See infra § III.C. 1.a.iii.a.

[2] Plaintiff's allegations on this point are inconsistent. Plaintiff later alleges that Defendants sought to "prevent competition from manufacturers of new PMA Parts (substitute parts otherwise manufactured by companies not affiliated with defendants, under an FAA program known as Part Manufacturing Authorization)." Id. ¶ 689 (emphasis added). Thus, there appears to be some substitutability of parts.

(3) Market for MRO Services

Plaintiff alleges that there is a market for MRO Services. Id. ¶ 93. Plaintiff asserts that "[s]ervices [*8] provided to helicopter manufacturers are not within [this] relevant [product] market." Id. ¶ 262. Some manufacturers provide MRO Services themselves, while others authorize independent service providers to perform MRO Services, Id. ¶¶ 93-94. Purportedly, there is no cross-elasticity[3] between the MRO Services for Defendants' engines and MRO Services for other manufacturers engines. Id. ¶ 263.

Defendants provide MRO Services and have also authorized other companies to perform MRO Services subject to limitations—for example, one company is authorized to perform only "Level 4" engine repair and overhaul on a limited number of models. Id. ¶¶ 93-100. Defendants allegedly choose whom to authorize to perform repair services, restrain access to technical information, and withhold the supply of parts necessary to perform certain repairs. Id. ¶ 264, Plaintiff also states, with no factual support, that Defendants have a market share of at least 50% in the MRO Services for their engines and parts, mirroring its conclusory allegations regarding Defendants' share of the engines and parts market. Compare id. ¶ 674, with id. ¶ 668. Plaintiff thus contends that Defendants have monopoly power in the [*9] MRO Services for their engines and parts. Id. ¶¶ 674-83.

C. The Dispute over Parts

For more than a decade, Plaintiff would request MRO Services or engine parts from SafranHE USA or SafranHE Canada, and these Defendants would honor Plaintiff's requests. Id. ¶¶ 101-03. Moreover, Plaintiff allegedly had a business arrangement in which SafranHE USA provided it with access to technical information, allowing Plaintiff to perform MRO Services on Defendants' engines and parts. Id. ¶ 104.

According to the Complaint, Plaintiff would routinely send parts to SafranHE USA or SafranHE Canada, requesting a quote of an estimated cost for the inspection and service. Id. ¶ 109. SafranHE USA and SafranHE Canada would review the documentation, disassemble the parts, and develop a quote for Plaintiff's review, Id. ¶¶ 110-11. The parties would then negotiate the nature of the service and any remaining or unused parts would be promptly returned to Plaintiff certified as airworthy or marked "as is."[4] Id. ¶¶ 112-18, Between 2001 and 2010, SafranHE USA and SafranHE Canada allowed their customers to request "scrap parts" to be returned in their "as is" condition without SafranHE USA or SafranHE Canada certifying [*10] the parts as airworthy, repairable, or unserviceable. Id. ¶¶ 119-20. SafranHE USA and SafranHE Canada would also offer to compensate Plaintiff if its part was lost in their course of dealing. Id. ¶¶ 122-23.

SafranHE USA and SafranHE Canada did not, however, return to Plaintiff all of the parts it sent them for MRO Services. Id. ¶¶ 125-28 & Exs. A-C. They allegedly lost some of the parts after assigning them work order numbers. Id. ¶¶ 127-31. SafranHE USA and SafranHE Canada marked some other parts as "scrap" but sent them to SafranHE France to be made serviceable again. Id ¶¶ 136-38. According to Plaintiff, SafranHE USA and SafranHE Canada agreed to compensate Plaintiff for some of these parts, and the parties continued discussing compensation for the remaining lost parts. Id. ¶¶ 132-35, 139-47.

[3] "Cross-elasticity" refers to the responsiveness of the demand for one product to a change in price of another product. This concept is used to define a product market in antitrust claims. See United States v. E. I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 404, 76 S. Ct. 994, 100 L. Ed. 1264 (1956). For example, if "a slight decrease in the price of cellophane causes a considerable number of customers of other flexible wrappings to switch to cellophane, it would be an indication that a high cross-elasticity of demand exists between [flexible wrappings and cellophane]; that the products compete in the same market." Id. at 400. If the products have low cross-elasticity of demand—i.e., a change in the price of one product does not affect demand for another product, then the products are likely competing in different markets.

[4] The Complaint does not explain what "as is" certification entails.

Plaintiff further alleges that SafranHE USA and SafranHE Canada instituted a policy of "defacing" parts by scratching through the part or serial number, engraving a triangle into the part, or otherwise physically damaging the part (the "Defacing Policy"). Id. ¶ 148. A part that has been defaced allegedly cannot be repaired or serviced pursuant to Federal Aviation Administration ("FAA") regulations. [*11] Id. ¶ 149. Even if a part was "scrap," it was still valuable to Plaintiff, Defendants, and their customers, because it could become approved for use in engines if, among other things, the manufacturer increased the usage or service life, or the manufacturer or the FAA approved a new repair method, Id. ¶¶ 150-51, Moreover, Plaintiff alleges that the defacing of its parts was contrary to the parties' course of dealing, FAA regulations, and SafranHE USA's and SafranHE Canada's terms and conditions. Id. ¶¶ 152-58, On prior occasions, SafranHE USA and SafranHE Canada allegedly offered to compensate Plaintiff for the defaced parts. Id. ¶¶ 156-57.

In late 2008 or early 2009, however, SafranHE USA began holding Plaintiff's unserviceable parts pending policy review and gave Plaintiff an option of either allowing SafranHE USA to hold Plaintiff's parts, or allowing it to return the parts defaced. Id. ¶¶ 159-60. Plaintiff claims that SafranHE USA did not inform it of any decision to change the original course of dealing, but also alleges that SafranHE USA began including language in their quotes authorizing SafranHE USA to deface the parts. Id. ¶¶ 162-63. SafranHE USA emailed Plaintiff about the [*12] new Defacing Policy on April 25, 2011, and sought to impose the policy on any part already stored. Id. ¶¶ 164, 290-92. Subsequent attempts to resolve the dispute were unfruitful, with SafranHE France requiring SafranHE USA to implement the policy, and Plaintiff objecting to it and refusing to allow its parts to be defaced. Id. ¶¶ 165-69, 171-76. Plaintiff claims that by this time, SafranHE Canada had already defaced some of Plaintiff's parts. Id. ¶ 170.

After Plaintiff filed the present action, Defendants announced that they would not deface parts before returning "unsalvageable parts" to customers, so long as the customers would sign an indemnification agreement holding Defendants harmless and commit not to equip Defendants' engines with unserviceable parts. Id. ¶¶ 176-77. Defendants' authorized service providers adopted similar requirements for returning unserviceable parts. Id. ¶¶ 178-82.

In addition to its allegations regarding the Defacing Policy, Plaintiff complains about Defendants' policy regarding engines and parts involved in an accident (the "Accident Policy") and SafranHE USA and SafranHE Canada's refusal to certify or return parts serviced by Plaintiff. Id. ¶ 185. Pursuant [*13] to the Accident Policy, Defendants allegedly restricted the scope of available repair services unless certain conditions are met, id. ¶ 184, and SafranHE USA refused to return Plaintiff's parts certified "as is." Id. ¶¶ 190, 193, 290-92. Plaintiff, however, alleges that it never agreed to be bound by this policy, that the policy is contrary to the parties' course of dealing, and that the policy is not required by FAA regulations. Id. ¶¶ 186-88, 191-92. Additionally, Defendants allegedly refused to repair or certify parts that Plaintiff serviced because Plaintiff was not "approved" to perform Level 3 and 4 services. Id. ¶¶ 194-95. As a result, Plaintiff contends that its parts are not as marketable or profitable. Id. ¶ 198.

D. The Dispute over Plaintiff's Role as a Service Provider

In 2007 and 2008, Plaintiff and SafranHE USA discussed allowing Plaintiff to be an authorized provider of "Level 3" MRO Services. Id. ¶ 383, To meet SafranHE USA's requirements, Plaintiff trained personnel and made other investments. Id. ¶ 385. Nonetheless, SafranHE France, through SafranHE USA, denied Plaintiff's request to become an authorized service provider in 2008 and again in 2009. Id. ¶¶ 386-88.

In 2010, [*14] however, SafranHE USA offered Plaintiff a Maintenance Authorization Agreement ("MAA"), which allowed Plaintiff to perform Level 3 maintenance. Id. ¶ 389. Plaintiff maintains that it could not negotiate any change to this agreement because of its significant investment, and so agreed. Id. The MAA obligated Defendants to provide Plaintiff with various documentation including technical information. Id. ¶¶ 389-92. Either party could terminate the MAA for any reason, provided it gave ninety days written notice. Id. ¶ 393. A breaching party had thirty days to cure a breach of the MAA. Id. ¶ 394.

In May 2012, SafranHE USA and SafranHE France terminated Plaintiff's access to certain technical information. Id. ¶¶ 395-402. Moreover, SafranHE USA allegedly breached the MAA by refusing to train Plaintiff's technicians. Id. ¶

411. Mike Gaines[5] admitted to SafranHE USA's president that the MAA was still in effect, but suggested that it be terminated. Id. ¶ 403. According to Plaintiff, SafranHE USA attempted to formally terminate the MAA in August 2014, when it sent Plaintiff a notice of termination due to Plaintiff's breach of the MAA. Id. ¶ 404. Plaintiff alleges, however, that the termination letter [*15] was not effective to terminate the agreement because Plaintiff did not receive notice that it was in breach of the MAA.[6] Id. ¶ 405. Plaintiff further alleges that it had a right to continued access to Defendants technical information because of its substantial investment. Id. ¶ 406.

E. Alleged Anticompetitive Conduct

According to Plaintiff, Defendants engaged in various anticompetitive conduct. Plaintiff's allegations can be grouped into the following categories: (1) MAAs; (2) the Defacing Policy and the Accident Policy; (3) the Fleet Service Agreements; (4) alleged price fixing; (5) alleged group boycott; (6) alleged exclusive supply agreements; (7) other restraints on MRO Services; and (8) monopolization allegations.

(1) Maintenance Authorization Agreements

Plaintiff alleges that the MAAs SafranHE USA signed with Plaintiff and Helicopter Services of Nevada LLC ("HSN") restrain competition in the engines and parts market and the MRO Services market. Id. ¶¶ 421-58. The MAAs purportedly insulate Defendants from rivals offering less expensive engine parts and services. Id. ¶¶ 433-34, 451-52. Plaintiff alleges to have been harmed by its own MAA and by SafranHE USA's MAA with HSN. Id. [*16] ¶¶ 438, 457. (2) *Defacing and Accident Policies

Plaintiff also complains that Defendants conspired together and with other MRO Service Providers to implement the "Defacing Policy" and the Accident Policy. Id. ¶¶ 270-76. SafranHE France specifically required authorized service providers to abide by the Defacing Policy, and Defendants required service providers to observe the Accident Policy through a series of service letters. Id. ¶¶ 275-77. For example, SafranHE USA and SafranHE France purportedly entered into contracts with service providers Heli-One Colorado, Inc., Heli-One Canada, Inc., and Heli-One American Support LLC (collectively "Heli-One"), Advanced Helicopter Services of Woodland, CA ("Advanced"), and Vector Aerospace Helicopter Services, Inc. ("Vector"), requiring the service providers to observe Defendants' policies. Id. ¶ 278. Thus, Heli-One, Advanced, and Vector have Defacing Policies, Id. ¶¶ 279-83. Additionally, Defendants and other service providers return unserviceable parts only after a customer agrees to indemnify and hold them harmless, and agrees not to use unserviceable parts in Defendants engines or other helicopters. Id. ¶¶ 285-87. Similarly, Plaintiff claims [*17] that SafranHE USA and SafranHE Canada contracted with Heli-One, Vector, and Advanced to enforce the Accident Policy, meaning that Plaintiff has no available provider to make parts involved in an accident serviceable again. Id. ¶ 288.

According to Plaintiff, the alleged contracts adopting, and the purported conspiracy to adopt, the Defacing Policy and Accident Policy suppresses intrabrand competition in both the engine and parts market and the MRO Services market. Id. ¶ 294. The contracts and conspiracy allegedly allow Defendants to entrench their position in the markets for their own parts and services. Id. ¶ 299. In other words, the alleged conduct is meant to prevent the emergence of a market for second-hand parts and for unauthorized repair centers. Id. ¶¶ 300-02.

(3) Fleet Parts and Service Agreements

[5] The Complaint does not state who Gaines is.

[6] At an unspecified time, Defendants did notify Plaintiff that Plaintiff was breaching the MAA by failing to maintain trained technicians, failing to comply with audit requirements, and failing to maintain insurance. Id. ¶ 408. Plaintiff disputes that it breached any provision. Id. ¶ 408-10, 412.

SafranHE USA and SafranHE Canada allegedly entered into Fleet Service Agreements or Fleet Parts Agreements with owners of helicopter fleets. Under a Fleet Service Agreement, a fleet owner is granted access to technical information solely for the purpose of performing services on Defendants' parts that the owners owned, leased, or operated. Id. ¶ 461. SafranHE USA purportedly has such [*18] agreements with HSN and Papillon Airways, Inc. ("Papillon"). Id. ¶¶ 452-65. A Fleet Parts Agreement, in turn, provides that SafranHE USA's or SafranHE Canada's certification of any part they service for a fleet owner is nontransferable. Id. ¶ 479. According to Plaintiff, these agreements suppress intrabrand competition for Defendants' parts and have harmed Plaintiff. Id. ¶¶ 466, 471-75, 484, 489-94.

(4) Price Fixing

Plaintiff claims that Defendants conspired to fix the price of MRO Services. Id. ¶ 497-502. Specifically, SafranHE USA allegedly entered into agreements with Heli-One, Advanced, Arrow Aviation Company LLC ("Arrow"), and Precision Aviation Services ("Precision"), whereby these service providers agreed not to "undercut" SafranHE USA's MRO Services pricing. Id. ¶¶ 497-500. Advanced, in turn, entered into similar agreements with Rorotech Services, Inc. ("Rorotech") and Helicopter Specialties, Inc. ("Helicopter Specialties"). Id. ¶ 501. Plaintiff contends that this scheme harms intrabrand competition and has caused Plaintiff to pay higher prices for MRO Services. Id. ¶¶ 508-12.

(5) Group Boycott

According to the Complaint, Defendants were also concerned with whether Plaintiff was [*19] a true end user of its parts, or whether it was secretly reselling them. Id. ¶¶ 555-56. Defendants asked Plaintiff about the real end user and were allegedly not convinced by the information Plaintiff provided. Id. ¶¶ 557-59. Beginning in February 2015, SafranHE USA allegedly instructed its network of authorized service providers not to do business with Plaintiff. Id. ¶¶ 561-65. This alleged group boycott was aimed at eliminating the market for second-hand parts, and harmed competition and Plaintiff. Id. ¶¶ 560-77.

(6) Exclusive Supply Agreements

Plaintiff claims that Defendants entered into exclusive supply agreements with Zodiac Aerospace ("Zodiac") and other vendors, such that the vendors agreed to supply engine parts and accessories only to Defendants. Id. ¶¶ 615-18. Defendants allegedly entered into such agreements to ensure control over pricing, quality, and reliability. Id. ¶¶ 617, 624, Plaintiff asserts that customers complain that these supply agreements increase time and cost. Id. ¶¶ 618-22. Plaintiff argues that this vertical restraint harmed Plaintiff, increased costs for consumers, and was unreasonable, unjustified, and anticompetitive. Id. ¶¶626-40.

(7) Other Restraints [*20] on MRO Services

Plaintiff alleges that Defendants imposed other unreasonable restraints on MRO Services. Defendants allegedly: (1) required the use of Defendants' parts and prohibited the installation of a customer's own parts or parts from other repair stations not authorized by Defendants; (2) conditioned the sale of some services on the purchase of modifications a customer has not requested; and (3) conditioned the return of parts used in a level of service a customer is not allowed to perform on the return of the part to an authorized service center. Id. ¶¶ 644-53. These restraints harmed Plaintiff and are allegedly unreasonable, unjustified, and anticompetitive. Id. ¶¶ 653-65.

(8) Monopolization Allegations

Finally, Plaintiff alleges that Defendants monopolized or attempted to monopolize the markets for Defendants engines and parts and MRO Services by: (1) preventing competition from manufacturers of substitute parts by directing repair centers to throw away any substitute part found in Defendants' engines and by informing its customers of this fact; and (2) preventing unauthorized repair centers from accessing Defendants' technical information. Id. ¶¶ 689-92, 701. By taking these [*21] actions, Defendants were purportedly able to obtain or maintain monopoly power in the relevant markets. Id. ¶¶ 693-96, 700.

F. Summary of the Claims

Plaintiff alleges thirty separate state and federal law claims against Defendants. For the sake of clarity, the Court will group these claims into four categories: (1) breach of contract claims; (2) antitrust claims; (3) tort claims; and (4) deceptive practices claims.

(1) Breach of Contract Claims

In Count I, Plaintiff alleges that SafranHE USA and SafranHE Canada breached an express or implied contract by losing, misappropriating, defacing, withholding, or refusing to certify Plaintiff's parts. In Count VIII, Plaintiff alleges that SafranHE USA and SafranHE France breached the MAA.

(2) Antitrust Claims

In Counts V and VI, brought under Sherman Act § 1 and California's Cartwright Act, respectively, Plaintiff alleges that Defendants are liable for conspiring and entering into the Defacing Policy and Accident Policy together and with other service providers. In Count VII, Plaintiff alleges that Defendants imposed the Defacing Policy on its unwilling customers in violation of Sherman Act § 1. In Counts IX and X, Plaintiff alleges that the MAAs Defendants [*22] signed with Plaintiff and HSN unreasonably restrain trade in violation of Sherman Act § 1. In Counts XI and XII, Plaintiff claims that the Fleet Service Agreements and the Fleet Parts Agreements violate Sherman Act § 1. In Counts XIII and XIV, Plaintiff seeks to recover under Sherman Act § 1 and the Cartwright Act, respectively, for the alleged price fixing. Counts XVII and XVIII purport to state claims under Sherman Act § 1 and the Cartwright Act, respectively, for the alleged group boycott. In Count XX, Plaintiff claims that the alleged exclusive supply agreements violate Sherman Act § 1, Count XXI states a Sherman Act § 1 claim premised on the various other restraints Defendants impose on the MRO Services. In Counts XXII and XXIII Plaintiff seeks damages and an injunction for Defendants' alleged monopolization or attempted monopolization of the relevant markets under Sherman Act § 2. Finally, Plaintiff appears to recast all of the alleged claims under the Kansas Restraint of Trade Act in Counts XXIV and XXV.

(3) Tort Claims

In Count II, Plaintiff alleges that Defendants are all liable as bailees for wrongful detention, conversion, or negligence of Plaintiff's parts. Plaintiff alleges in Counts III and IV that SafranHE [*23] France directed or induced SafranHE USA and SafranHE Canada to breach their contracts with Plaintiff, and so is liable for tortious interference with contracts or existing business relationships. In Counts XV and XVI, Plaintiff alleges that SafranHE USA is liable for tortious interference because it instructed Advanced to breach its contracts with Plaintiff, to not do business with Plaintiff, or to refuse to extend Plaintiff credit, and otherwise restricted that business relationship. In Count XIX, Plaintiff claims that SafranHE USA tortiously interfered with its business relationship with Zodiac by instructing it not to deal with Plaintiff. Count XXVI recasts the aforementioned conduct as a claim for civil conspiracy.

(4) Deceptive Practices Claims

Plaintiff alleges two sets of claims arising out of SafranHE USA's allegedly deceptive conduct. First, according to Plaintiff, SafranHE USA falsely stated in service bulletins and marketing that all manuals and technical documentation were proprietary and not available to service providers not approved by SafranHE USA. Id. ¶¶ 733-36. This statement was allegedly false because the FAA recently suggested that a manufacturer may not deny access [*24] to such technical information. Id. ¶¶ 737, 745, 758. Plaintiff alleges in Counts XXVII and XXVIII that these statements are actionable under Lanham Act § 35 or as common law unfair competition through deceptive marketing. Id. ¶¶ 732-63.

Second, Plaintiff complains of a certain helicopter engine module ("Module 3"). Id. ¶ 765, SafranHE USA allegedly serviced and overhauled this module in October 2009. Id. ¶ 766. At the time of the service, SafranHE USA allegedly knew that its current service procedure caused problems with the module's blades, and had already developed a new procedure to address this problem. Id. ¶¶ 773-76. Nonetheless, SafranHE USA allegedly serviced the module pursuant to the old procedure, concealed the issue from the owner of the module, and intentionally or negligently misrepresented to the owner that the module would operate for 800 hours. Id. ¶¶ 769, 778-79. After Plaintiff purchased the module and resold it to "Heli Afrique," it failed after only 96.5 hours of service. Id. ¶¶ 770, 784. SafranHE USA refused to repair it, informing Plaintiff that there was no justifiable reason for extending the warranty period. Id. ¶¶ 784-86, 789. Based on the foregoing allegations, [*25] Plaintiff alleges that SafranHE USA's statements regarding the availability of the new service procedure and the lack of justifiable reason for extending the warranty were false or misleading. Id. ¶¶ 789, 797, 800-12. Plaintiff seeks to hold SafranHE USA liable for these alleged false statements in Count XXIX, under the DTPA, and in Count XXX, under theories of misrepresentation or concealment.

G. Pending Motions

In their Motions, Defendants raise multiple reasons for the Court to dismiss twenty-seven Counts in whole or in part. SafranHE USA argues that Plaintiff did not sufficiently plead claims under the Sherman Act, Cartwright Act, Kansas Restraint of Trade Act, Lanham Act, or for unfair competition, tortious interference, and civil conspiracy. See Br. of SafranHE USA (hereinafter, "Br.") 3-17, 19-25. SafranHE USA also argues that some of Plaintiff's antitrust claims are barred by the applicable statutes of limitations. See id. 17-19. The International Defendants join SafranHE USA's arguments, but also ask the Court to dismiss the alter ego allegations, to hold that the Court lacks subject matter jurisdiction over the antitrust claims, and to hold that SafranHE France is not subject to personal [*26] jurisdiction over any claims asserted against it. See Int'l Defs.' Br. 4-25.

II. LEGAL STANDARDS

A. Subject Matter Jurisdiction

Under the Constitution, a federal court may decide only actual cases or controversies. U.S. CONST. art. III, § 2. A court properly dismisses a case where it lacks the constitutional power to decide it. See Home Builders Ass'n of Miss., Inc. v. City of Madison, 143 F.3d 1006, 1010 (5th Cir. 1998). Dismissal for lack of subject matter jurisdiction is warranted when "it appears certain that the plaintiff cannot prove any set of facts in support of his claim that would entitle plaintiff to relief." Gilbert v. Donahoe, 751 F.3d 303, 307 (5th Cir. 2014) (quoting Ramming v. United States, 281 F.3d 158, 161 (5th Cir. 2001)). "Lack of subject matter jurisdiction may be found in any one of three instances: (1) the complaint alone; (2) the complaint supplemented by undisputed facts evidenced in the record; or (3) the complaint supplemented by undisputed facts plus the court's resolution of disputed facts." Ramming, 281 F.3d at 161 (citing Barrera-Montenegro v. United States, 74 F.3d 657, 659 (5th Cir. 1996)).

B. Personal Jurisdiction

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(2) allows defendants to move to dismiss claims for lack of personal jurisdiction. The plaintiff bears the burden of making a prima facie showing that a court has personal jurisdiction over a defendant. Monkton Ins. Servs., Ltd. v. Ritter, 768 F.3d 429, 431 (5th Cir. 2014). In considering a motion to dismiss pursuant to Rule 12(b)(2), the court must accept the plaintiff's "uncontroverted allegations, and resolve in its favor all conflicts." Alpine View Co. v. Atlas Copco AB, 205 F.3d 208, 215 (5th Cir. 2000) [*27] . The court may consider "affidavits, interrogatories, depositions, oral testimony, or any combination of the recognized methods of discovery." Stuart v. Spademan, 772 F.2d 1185, 1192 (5th Cir. 1985).

Because Texas's long-arm statute extends to the limits of federal due process, this Court has personal jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant so long as the assertion of jurisdiction comports with the Due Process Clause of the United States Constitution. See Sangha v. Navig8 Shipmanagement Private Ltd., 882 F.3d 96, 101 (5th Cir. 2018). "Due process requires that the defendant have 'minimum contacts' with the forum state . . . and that exercising jurisdiction is consistent with 'traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice,'" Id. (quoting Johnston v. Multidata Sys. Int'l Corp., 523 F.3d 602, 609 (5th Cir. 2008)).

Personal jurisdiction can be general or specific. See Lewis v. Fresne, 252 F.3d 352, 358 (5th Cir. 2001). General jurisdiction allows a court to hear any claim against a nonresident defendant, and it exists when that defendant's "affiliations with [Texas] are so 'continuous and systematic' as to render them essentially at home in [Texas]." Daimler AG v. Bauman, 571 U.S. 117, 127, 134 S. Ct. 746, 187 L. Ed. 2d 624 (2014) (quoting Goodyear Dunlop Tires Operations, S.A. v. Brown, 564 U.S. 915, 919, 131 S. Ct. 2846, 180 L. Ed. 2d 796 (2011)). "Establishing general jurisdiction is 'difficult' and requires 'extensive contacts between a defendant and a forum,'" Sangha, 882 F.3d at 101-02 (quoting Johnston, 523 F.3d at 609).

In evaluating specific jurisdiction, courts consider:

> (1) whether the defendant has minimum contacts with the forum state, i.e., whether it purposely directed its activities toward [*28] the forum state or purposefully availed itself of the privileges of conducting activities there; (2) whether the plaintiffs cause of action arises out of or results from the defendant's forum-related contacts; and (3) whether the exercise of personal jurisdiction is fair and reasonable.

Carmona v. Leo Ship Mgmt., Inc., 924 F.3d 190, 193 (5th Cir. 2019) (quoting Seiferth v. Helicopteros Atuneros, Inc., 472 F.3d. 266, 271 (5th Cir. 2006)). "In order for a . . . court to exercise specific jurisdiction, 'the suit' must aris[e] out of or relat[e] to the defendant's contacts with the forum.'" Bristol-Myers Squibb Co. v. Super. Ct., 137 S. Ct. 1773, 1780, 198 L. Ed. 2d 395 (2017) (first alteration added) (quoting Daimler AG, 571 U.S. at 127). "In other words, there must be 'an affiliation between the forum and the underlying controversy, principally, [an] activity or an occurrence that takes place in the forum State and is therefore subject to the State's regulation.'" Id. (alteration in original) (quoting Goodyear, 564 U.S. at 919).

The minimum contacts analysis is fact intensive, and the touchstone is "whether the defendant's conduct shows that it 'reasonably anticipates being hauled into court'" in the forum state. McFadin v. Gerber, 587 F.3d 753, 759 (5th Cir. 2009) (quoting Luv n' Care, Ltd. v. Insta-Mix, Inc., 438 F.3d 465, 470 (5th Cir. 2006)). Once the plaintiff establishes minimum contacts, the burden shifts to the defendant to show that the exercise of jurisdiction is "unfair and unreasonable." Sangha, 882 F.3d at 102. In determining whether the defendant has carried this burden, courts [*29] balance five factors: (1) the burden on the nonresident defendant of having to defend itself in the forum; (2) the interests of the forum state in the case; (3) the plaintiffs interest in obtaining convenient and effective relief; (4) the interstate judicial system's interest in the most efficient resolution of controversies; and (5) the shared interests of the states in furthering fundamental social policies. Id.

C. Failure to State a Claim

To defeat a motion to dismiss filed pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6), a plaintiff must plead "enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007); Reliable Consultants, Inc. v. Earle, 517 F.3d 738, 742 (5th Cir. 2008). To meet this "facial plausibility" standard, a plaintiff must "plead[] factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). Plausibility does not require probability, but a plaintiff must establish "more than a sheer possibility that a defendant has acted unlawfully." Id. The court must accept well-pleaded facts as true and view them in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. Sonnier v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins., 509 F.3d 673, 675 (5th Cir. 2007). However, the court does not accept as true "conclusory allegations, unwarranted factual inferences, or legal conclusions." Ferrer v. Chevron Corp., 484 F.3d 776, 780 (5th Cir. 2007). A plaintiff must provide [*30] "more than labels and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555 (internal citations omitted). "Factual allegations must be enough to raise a right to relief above the speculative level . . . on the assumption that all the allegations in the complaint are true (even if doubtful in fact)." Id. (internal citations omitted).

The ultimate question is whether the complaint states a valid claim when viewed in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. Great Plains Tr. Co. v. Morgan Stanley Dean Witter & Co., 313 F.3d 305, 312 (5th Cir. 2002). At the motion to dismiss stage, the court does not evaluate the plaintiff's likelihood of success. It only determines whether the plaintiff has stated a claim upon which relief can be granted. Mann v. Adams Realty Co., 556 F.2d 288, 293 (5th Cir. 1977).

III. ANALYSIS

A. Alter Ego

The Complaint states that "[D]efendants are the alter-egos of one another." Third Am. Compl. ¶¶ 20-24. A sufficiently pleaded alter ego theory could affect the Court's analysis of the challenges to its subject matter jurisdiction or its personal jurisdiction over the International Defendants, and so the Court will address this issue first. See, e.g., Patin v. Thoroughbred Power Boats Inc., 294 F.3d 640, 653 (5th Cir. 2002) ("[A] court [may] exercise personal jurisdiction over . . . a corporation that would not ordinarily be subject to personal jurisdiction [*31] in that court when the . . . corporation is an alter ego . . . of a corporation that would be subject to personal jurisdiction in that court." (collecting cases)).

The Court resolves alter ego issues by considering "the totality of the circumstances," in light of the following list of non-exhaustive factors:

> (1) the parent and the subsidiary have common stock ownership; (2) the parent and the subsidiary have common directors or officers; (3) the parent and the subsidiary have common business departments; (4) the parent and the subsidiary file consolidated financial statements and tax returns; (5) the parent finances the subsidiary; (6) the parent caused the incorporation of the subsidiary; (7) the subsidiary operates with grossly inadequate capital; (8) the parent pays the salaries and other expenses of the subsidiary; (9) the subsidiary receives no business except that given to it by the parent; (10) the parent uses the [subsidiary's] property as its own; (11) the daily operations of the two corporations are not kept separate; and (12) the subsidiary does not observe the basic corporate formalities, such as keeping separate books and records and holding shareholder and board meetings. [*32]

Gundle Lining Constr. Corp. v. Adams Cty. Asphalt, Inc., 85 F.3d 201, 208-09 (5th Cir. 1996) (quoting United States v. Jon-T Chems., Inc., 768 F.2d 686, 691-92, 694 (5th Cir. 1985)). Texas state courts consider similar factors. See, e.g., Mancorp, Inc. v. Culpepper, 802 S.W.2d 226, 229 (Tex. 1990). Generally, the Court will only find corporations to be alter egos of one another "when there is such unity between [the corporations] that the separateness of the corporation[s] has ceased and holding only [one] corporation liable would result in injustice," SEC v. Res. Dev. Int'l

LLC, 487 F.3d 295, 302 (5th Cir. 2007) (quoting Castleberry v. Branscum, 721 S.W2d 270, 272 (Tex. 1986)). The Court can dismiss an alter ego claim where the complaint lacks sufficient factual allegations to state the claim. See, e.g., In re Parkcentral Global Litig., Civ. A. No, 3:09-CV-0765-M, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 79385, 2010 WL 3119403, at *10-11 (N.D. Tex. Aug. 5, 2010) (dismissing a claim to pierce the corporate veil); Rolls-Royce Corp. v. Heros, Inc., 576 F. Supp. 2d 765, 789 (N.D. Tex. 2008) (dismissing alter ego claim where complaint was devoid of factual assertions in support of it).

The Court finds that the Complaint lacks sufficient factual allegations to suggest that the Defendants are alter egos of one another. First, the Court does not credit Plaintiff's conclusory allegation that "there has existed . . . a unity of interest in ownership and control between [Defendants]." Third Am. Compl. ¶ 20. This leaves only one allegation to support the alter ego theory: that SafranHE France exercised substantial decision-making power over the other Defendants. See id. ¶¶ 21-24. After foraging the Complaint [*33] for examples of such control, the Court found the following allegations: (1) SafranHE France decided who would be an authorized service provider, see id. ¶¶ 52-53; (2) SafranHE France imposed various policies upon the other Defendants, see id. ¶¶ 55, 149, 186; and (3) the other Defendants shipped parts to SafranHE France for repairs, see id. ¶ 138. Even accepting these allegations as true, the relationship between Defendants is a far cry from "such unity between [the corporations] that the separateness of the corporation[s] has ceased." Res. Dev. Int'l, 487 F.3d at 302. Thus, the Court finds that Plaintiff did not plead sufficient facts to show that Defendants are alter egos of one another, Accordingly, the Court grants the Motions as to the alter ego allegations and will treat Defendants separately for jurisdictional purposes.

B. Jurisdiction

Having determined that the Complaint does not state a viable alter ego claim, the Court now turns to whether the Complaint alleges sufficient facts to establish the Court's subject matter jurisdiction and personal jurisdiction. Here, Defendants raise four arguments: (1) that the Foreign Trade Antitrust Improvements Act ("FTAIA") bars the federal antitrust claims against them; [*34] (2) that the FTAIA also bars the state antitrust claims; (3) that Plaintiff lacks standing to bring a Cartwright Act claim; and (4) that the Court lacks personal jurisdiction over SafranHE France. For the reasons stated below, the Court finds that it lacks subject matter jurisdiction over Counts IX and X as to the International Defendants, lacks subject matter jurisdiction over Count XI as to SafranHE Canada, and lacks personal jurisdiction over SafranHE France as to Count II. The Court otherwise denies the Motions to dismiss on these bases.

(1) FTAIA and Sherman Act Claims

The FTAIA limits the application of the federal antitrust laws when non-import foreign commerce is involved. See 15 U.S.C. § 6a; Den Norske Stats Oljeselskap As v. HeereMac v.o.f., 241 F.3d 420, 421 (5th Cir. 2001). The FTAIA specifically excludes claims under the Sherman Act for non-import activity unless (1) the conduct has a direct, substantial, and reasonably foreseeable effect on United States imports, domestic commerce, or United States exports, and (2) such effect gives rise to a claim under the Sherman Act. See 15 U.S.C. § 6a(1); Hartford Fire Ins. v. California, 509 U.S. 764, 796 n.23, 113 S. Ct. 2891, 125 L. Ed. 2d 612 (1993). The FTAIA also "precludes subject matter over claims by foreign plaintiffs against defendants where the situs of the injury is overseas and that injury arises from effects in a non-domestic market." [*35] Den Norske, 241 F.3d at 428.

In this case, the Court finds that the FTAIA does not bar the antitrust claims pleaded in Counts V, VII, XI (against SafranHE France only), XII, XIII, XVII, XXI, and XXII. For these Counts, Plaintiff alleged that the International Defendants' conduct harmed domestic commerce and Plaintiff, a domestic corporation. See, e.g., Third Am. Compl. ¶¶ 298, 374, 702. Moreover, Plaintiff alleged that the International Defendants either directly participated in the U.S. markets, see, e.g., id. ¶¶ 245, 285, 358, 672, 701, entered into alleged anticompetitive agreements with U.S. companies, see, e.g., id. ¶¶ 273, 278, 280, 463, 479, 503, or allegedly conspired to restrain U.S. commerce, see, e.g., ¶¶ 270, 483, 561, 643, 645. At this stage of the litigation, these allegations are sufficient for the Court to exercise subject matter jurisdiction over these claims.

Conversely, the Court finds that it lacks subject matter jurisdiction over the antitrust claims asserted against the International Defendants in Counts IX and X, and against SafranHE Canada in Count XI. In Counts IX and X, Plaintiff alleged only that SafranHE France had a practice of denying access to technical information to unauthorized [*36] service centers, see id. ¶¶ 425, 444, and that SafranHE France "approved the restraint in the . . . MAA[s]." See id. ¶¶ 426, 444. Plaintiff cannot, however, state a Sherman Act § 1 claim against SafranHE France premised on its approval of the contract alone, absent allegations that it was a party to the contract or a co-conspirator, See Rio Grande Royalty Co. v. Energy Transfer Partners, L.P., 786 F. Supp. 2d 1190, 1199-1200 (S.D. Tex. 2009). As for SafranHE Canada, the Complaint is silent about its involvement in these allegations; therefore, Plaintiff has not pleaded conduct that gives rise to a Sherman Act claim against SafranHE Canada in these Counts. See 15 U.S.C. § 6a(1); Hartford Fire Ins., 509 U.S. at 796 n.23..

Accordingly, the Court finds that it lacks subject matter jurisdiction over Counts IX and X insofar as they are pleaded against the International Defendants, and Count XI against SafranHE Canada.

(2) FTAIA and State Law Antitrust Claims

The International Defendants assert that the FTAIA also bars the Kansas and California antitrust claims against them (Counts VI, XIV, XVIII, XXIV, and XXV), see Int'l Defs.' Br. 17-18, and Plaintiff does not respond to this argument. The Court, however, liberally construes Plaintiff's Response to encompass the International Defendants' challenge of this Court's subject matter jurisdiction over the state [*37] antitrust claims. First, the Court notes that it is without binding authority as to whether the FTAIA extends to state law claims. Some federal courts have concluded that it does. See *Proview Tech. Inc. v. AU Optronics Corp. (In re TFT-LCD Flat Panel Antitrust Litig.), No. C 12-3802 SI, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 57828, 2014 WL 1568870, at 4 (N.D. Cal. Apr. 18, 2014) (collecting cases, but refusing to reach the issue). The Court does not need to decide this question, however, because all of the state law claims allege that the International Defendants engaged in domestic conduct that caused domestic harm. See Third Am. Compl. ¶¶ 311, 326, 338, 341, 517-21, 523, 530, 532, 588, 592, 597, 710-12, 719-21. Accordingly, even if the Court found that the FTAIA extends to the Cartwright Act and the Kansas Restraint of Trade Act, a conclusion the Court specifically does not reach, the Court would find that it has subject matter jurisdiction over these claims.

(3) Personal Jurisdiction

SafranHE France also moves to dismiss all claims brought against it, arguing that the Court lacks personal jurisdiction over it. The Court finds that it lacks personal jurisdiction over SafranHE France as to Count II, but finds that it has specific or pendent personal jurisdiction over [*38] SafranHE France as to the other Counts.

a. General Jurisdiction

As explained above, general jurisdiction allows a court to hear any claim against a nonresident defendant, and it exists when that defendant's "affiliations with [Texas] are so 'continuous and systematic' as to render them essentially at home in [Texas]." Daimler AG, 571 U.S. at 127 (quoting Goodyear, 564 U.S. at 919). "It is . . . incredibly difficult to establish general jurisdiction in a forum other than the place of incorporation or principal place of business." Monkton, 768 F.3d at 432 (citations omitted). Plaintiff does not contend in its response that the Court has general jurisdiction over SafranHE France. Nor could it, as the Complaint makes clear that SafranHE France is a French company. See Third Am. Compl. ¶ 7. Moreover, SafranHE France's main customer is headquartered in France, and nothing in the Complaint suggests that SafranHE France's principal place of business is anywhere in the United States. See id. ¶ 71. Accordingly, the Court finds that it lacks general jurisdiction over SafranHE France.

b. Specific Jurisdiction

The specific jurisdiction analysis differs for federal antitrust claims and state law claims. For the federal antitrust claims, "jurisdiction over [SafranHE France] [*39] may be obtainable based on nationwide contacts rather than just Texas contacts," because Congress authorized nationwide service of process for these claims. Access Telecom, Inc. v. MCI Telecomms. Corp., 197 F.3d 694, 718 (5th Cir. 1999) (citing 15 U.S.C. § 22). For state law claims, however, the focus is on SafranHE France's contacts with Texas, because "'the suit' must 'aris[e] out of or relat[e] to the defendant's contacts with the forum.'" Bristol-Myers Squibb, 137 S. Ct. at 1780 (quoting Daimler AG, 571 U.S. at 127). Regardless,

> Pendent personal jurisdiction "exists when a court possesses personal jurisdiction over a defendant for one claim, lacks an independent basis for personal jurisdiction over the defendant for another claim that arises out of the same nucleus of operative fact, and then, because it possesses personal jurisdiction over the first claim, asserts personal jurisdiction over the second claim."

*Nat'l Oil Well Varco, L.P. v. Sadagopan, Civ. A. No. H-16-2261, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 107115, 2017 WL 2957908, at 6 (S.D. Tex. July 11, 2017) (quoting Rolls-Royce, 576 F. Supp. 2d at 783). "The decision to exercise pendent personal jurisdiction is discretionary with the court." *GE Capital Corp. v. Mackzilla, LLC, Civ. A. No. H-15-2425, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 34752, 2016 WL 1059529, at 5 (S.D. Tex. Mar. 17, 2016) (citing Rolls-Royce, 576 F. Supp. 2d at 784). "Although the Fifth Circuit has not yet addressed pendent personal jurisdiction, this district and every circuit to decide the issue have approved the doctrine." Id. In this case, SafranHE [*40] France argues that Plaintiff did not plead sufficient minimum contacts for the Court to exercise jurisdiction over it, but does not argue that the exercise of personal jurisdiction would be otherwise unfair or unreasonable. See Int'l Defs.' Br. 18-21.

The Court finds that it has specific or pendent personal jurisdiction over SafranHE France as to Counts III, IV, V, VI, VII, VIII, IX, X, XI, XII, XIII, XIV, XXI, XXII, XXIII, XXIV, XXV, and XXVI. For each of these Counts, Plaintiff alleged that SafranHE France either contracted with, conspired with, or directed a Texas or domestic entity to engage in certain conduct—e.g., to adopt the Defacing and Accident Policies, to authorize the defacing of unserviceable parts, or to set prices, refuse services to a customer. See, e.g., Third Am. Compl. ¶¶ 278, 350, 498-503, 558-62. The Court finds that these allegations suffice to show minimum contacts with the forum and a claim arising out of those contacts. See Access Telecom, 197 F.3d at 719 ("While [the defendant] did not conduct much business in Texas, it conducted a high volume of business with Texas and Texas corporations. It was this business with which [the defendant] was concerned when [it] allegedly canceled [the plaintiff's] [*41] numbers. Such actions, if done without a legal right, may amount to a violation of U.S. law."). Even if specific jurisdiction did not exist as to one or more of these claims, the Court finds that these claims arise out of a common nucleus of operative facts and exercises pendent jurisdiction as to these claims.

On the other hand, the Court finds that Plaintiff did not plead sufficient facts for the Court to exercise specific or pendent personal jurisdiction over SafranHE France as to Count II, in which Plaintiff claims that SafranHE France converted Plaintiff's property. The Fifth Circuit addressed this precise issue in Pervasive Software Inc. v. Lexware GmbH & Co. KG, 688 F.3d 214 (2012). In Pervasive, the Fifth Circuit considered whether specific jurisdiction existed over a German corporation regarding a claim of conversion of property. See id. at 229. The Fifth Circuit noted that specific jurisdiction would exist if the German corporation committed the tort "in whole or in part" in Texas. Id. (quoting Tex. Civ. Prac. & Rem. Code Ann § 17.042). Finding that the complaint alleged that the German corporation had offices only in Germany and did not allege that any act occurred in Texas, the Fifth Circuit concluded that the alleged conversion occurred in Germany and so did not fall under Texas's long-arm [*42] statute. Id. (citations omitted).

The Court finds the present case analogous. Plaintiff alleged that SafranHE France, a French company, converted and refused to return Plaintiff's property. See Third Am. Compl. ¶¶ 211, 218. There are no allegations showing that SafranHE France took any tortious action in Texas. Accordingly, the Court lacks specific jurisdiction over SafranHE France as to Count IL The Court further finds that the conversion allegations do not arise out of the same nucleus of operative fact as the other claims and so declines to exercise pendent personal jurisdiction over SafranHE France as to this Count. For these reasons, the Court grants the International Defendants' Motion as to Count II.

(4) Standing under the Cartwright Act

SafranHE USA challenges Plaintiff's Cartwright Act claims, arguing that Plaintiff has not alleged that it was injured in California. See Br. 19-20. The Court construes this as a challenge to Plaintiff's standing to bring these claims. The Cartwright Act "is California's version of the federal Sherman Act and sets forth California's antitrust laws." Cellular Plus, Inc. v. Super. Ct., 14 Cal. App. 4th 1224, 1232 n.2, 18 Cal. Rptr. 2d 308 (1993). In order for a private plaintiff to have standing to sue under the Cartwright Act, the plaintiff [*43] must prove antitrust injury, "which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." Id. at 1234 (citations omitted). Standing is broader under the Cartwright Act than under the Sherman Act, because the Cartwright Act allows even indirect purchasers to recover. Lorenzo v. Qualcomm Inc., 603 F. Supp. 2d 1291, 1302 (S.D. Cal. 2009). Here, Plaintiff alleges that its injury implicates California because the various conspiracies involve Advanced, which appears to be a corporation located in California. See Third Am. Compl. ¶¶ 98, 338, 530, 597. The Complaint also suggests that Plaintiff was Advanced's customer. See, e.g., id. ¶¶ 283, 536. For the purposes of the pending motions, the Court finds that these allegations, viewed in the light most favorable to Plaintiff, are sufficient to confer standing upon Plaintiff as a customer of a California company, See Lorenzo, 603 F. Supp. 2d at 1302 (quoting Cellular Plus, 14 Cal. App. 4th at 1233)).

C. Failure to State a Claim

Defendants further contend that the Complaint does not include sufficient facts to state twenty-six of the thirty causes of action alleged therein. Defendants do not challenge the sufficiency of the pleadings as to the alleged breach of contract involving Plaintiff's parts, wrongful detention, [*44] conversion, or negligence as to the parts, violation of the DTPA, and misrepresentation or concealment. For the following reasons, the Court grants the Motion as to every challenged claim except Count XV.[7]

(1) Antitrust Claims

a. Sherman Act § 1

Section 1 of the Sherman Act prohibits "[e]very contract, combination . . . , or conspiracy in [unreasonable] restraint of trade or commerce." MM Steel, L.P. v. JSW Steel (USA) Inc., 806 F.3d 835, 848 (5th Cir. 2015) (alteration in original) (quoting 15 U.S.C. § 1). "[A] key distinction in antitrust law" is that certain restraints on trade are deemed per se illegal while others are analyzed under the rule of reason. Id. Thus, the Court will first determine whether the claims should be analyzed under the rule of reason or per se mode of analysis, and will then address the sufficiency of Plaintiff's allegations for these claims.

i. Mode of Analysis

Most arrangements challenged under § 1 are analyzed under the "rule of reason," which "requires the factfinder to decide whether under all the circumstances of the case the restrictive practice imposes an unreasonable restraint on competition." Arizona v. Maricopa Cty. Med. Soc'y, 457 U.S. 332, 343, 102 S. Ct. 2466, 73 L. Ed. 2d 48 (1982). Experience has shown, however, that certain arrangements are generally found to be unlawful under the rule of reason, and so are presumed to unreasonably restrain [*45] competition. Id. at 344. These practices are referred to as per se violations and include certain types of "price fixing, division of markets, group boycotts and tying arrangements." N. Tex. Speciality Physicians v. FTC, 528 F.3d 346, 360 (5th Cir. 2008) (quoting Maricopa Cty., 457 U.S. at 344 n.15); but see Leegin Creative Leather Prods. v. PSKS, Inc., 551 U.S. 887, 899, 127 S. Ct. 2705, 168 L. Ed. 2d 623 (2007) (holding that vertical price fixing is analyzed under rule of reason); Meyer, Inc. v. Barr Pharm., Inc., 572 F. Supp. 2d 38, 48-49 (D.D.C. 2008) (collecting cases where exclusive supply agreements were analyzed under rule of reason). Courts generally do not expand the per se category absent demonstrable economic effect and a substantial history of declaring particular conduct unlawful. See Abadir & Co. v. First Miss. Corp., 651 F.2d 422, 428 (5th Cir. Unit A July 1981) (first quoting Cont'l T. V.., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 58-59, 97 S. Ct. 2549, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568 (1977); and then quoting United States v. Topco Assocs., Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 607, 92 S. Ct. 1126, 31 L. Ed. 2d 515 (1972)).

---

[7] To the extent the Court already dismissed a claim in whole or in part, the following analysis constitutes additional grounds for dismissing that claim.

Counts V, VII, IX, X, XI, XII, XX, and XXI[8] appear to be premised on contracts or conspiracies between entities at different levels of the distribution chain. Such vertical restraints are analyzed under the rule of reason. See, e.g., Sylvania, 433 U.S. at 58 (holding that vertical restraints are generally analyzed under rule of reason); Abadir & Co., 651 F.2d at 428 (refusing to extend per se category to "include all suppliers who also compete with their distributors"). Even if these Counts alleged contracts or conspiracies between competitors alone, these Counts do not allege price fixing, division of markets, group boycotts, or tying arrangements, and the Court will not unduly expand the per [*46] se category. Thus, the Court will analyze Counts V, VII, IX, X, XI, XII, XX, and XXI under the rule of reason.

This leaves Counts XIII and XVIII, which are labeled "price fixing" and "group boycott," respectively. See Third Am. Compl, 77, 90. Viewing the Complaint in the light most favorable to Plaintiff, the Court finds that Count XIII alleges a conspiracy to set prices among competitors. See, e.g., id. ¶ 497 ("SafranHE USA and Heli-One [agreed] not [to] undercut SafranHe [sic] USA's MRO services pricing . . . ."). Horizontal price fixing agreements are per se unlawful. See N. Tex. Speciality, 528 F.3d at 360. For the purpose of resolving the pending Motions, therefore, the Court will apply the per se mode of analysis to Count XIII.

With regard to the group boycott claim, "[t]he Supreme Court has regularly applied per se liability to agreements described as 'either directly denying or persuading or coercing suppliers or customers to deny relationships the competitors need in the competitive struggle.'" MM Steel, 806 F.3d at 848 (quoting Nw. Wholesale Stationers, Inc. v. Pac. Stationery & Printing Co., 472 U.S. 284, 294, 105 S. Ct. 2613, 86 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1985)). Viewed in the light most favorable to Plaintiff, the Complaint appears to suggest that Defendants and other authorized repair centers conspired not to sell parts to [*47] Plaintiff, a competitor. See Third Am. Compl. ¶¶ 554, 564. Accordingly, the Court will analyze Count XVII under the per se mode of analysis for the purpose of resolving the pending Motions.

ii. Per Se Claims

Although price fixing and group boycotts generally are found to be per se unlawful, it is not enough for a plaintiff to summarily assert that a price fixing or group boycott conspiracy is afoot. The Supreme Court analyzed the sufficiency of conspiracy allegations in Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, and held that a complaint must state more than "an allegation of parallel conduct and a bare assertion of conspiracy." 550 U.S. at 556; see also Schafer v. State Farm Fire & Cas. Co., 507 F. Supp. 2d 587, 596-97 (E.D. La. 2007) (finding that the plaintiff did not adequately plead the existence of a conspiracy).

The Court finds that Plaintiff did not plead sufficient facts to state a conspiracy either to fix prices or to boycott Plaintiff. Count XIII, for example, alleges that Defendants conspired to fix prices through a series of agreements with competitors. See Third Am. Compl. ¶¶ 495-514. The Complaint does not mention, however, any agreement to which SafranHE Canada or SafranHE France was a party. Even when the Complaint discusses a specific agreement, the Complaint states no more [*48] than that SafranHE USA entered into agreements with its

[8] On its own review of the Complaint, the Court is of the opinion that Count XXI includes allegations that could be construed as giving rise to a tying claim under the Sherman Act. Although Plaintiff never raises this legal theory, "[t]o survive a 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss, a complaint need not correctly categorize the legal theories giving rise to the claims." Rathborne v. Rathborne, 683 F.2d 914, 917 n.8 (5th Cir. 1982); see also *Shippitsa Ltd. v. Slack, Civ. A. No. 3:18-CV-1036-D, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 121994, 2019 WL 3304890, at 12 (N.D. Tex. July 23, 2019) ("Even if [the] complaint fails to identify a specific legal theory, the court cannot dismiss it on that ground."). Accordingly, the Court addresses a potential tying claim and dismisses it for the reasons stated below. See infra § III.C.1.c.

competitors "not to undercut SafranHe [sic] USA's service pricing." See id. ¶¶ 497-502. This allegation simply rephrases the claim—i.e., that SafranHE USA contracted with competitors to fix prices. Plaintiff did not allege facts showing the purported conspiracy, such as allegations showing a decrease in price competition, changes in pricing, or other facts establishing "more than a sheer possibility that [Defendants] ha[ve] acted unlawfully." Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678. Similarly, Count XVII describes in significant detail how Defendants and other companies keep track of the end user of their products, see Third Am, Compl. ¶¶ 555-60, and then summarily states that "SafranHE USA instructed Advanced . . . as well as the entire network of repair centers ... not to do business with [Plaintiff]." Id. ¶ 561. These allegations, without more, are conclusory and do not raise Plaintiff's claim above the speculative level.[9] Accordingly, the Court grants the Motions as to Counts XIII and XVII.

iii. Rule of Reason Claims

(a) Market Definition

For the Court to declare a contract or conspiracy unlawful under the rule of reason, a plaintiff must allege that the contract or [*49] conspiracy restrains a particular market. See MM Steel, 806 F.3d at 843 (quoting Spectators' Commc'n Network Inc. v. Colonial Country Club, 253 F.3d 215, 220 (5th Cir. 2001)); Muenster Butane, Inc. v. Stewart Co., 651 F.2d 292, 295 (5th Cir. Unit A July 1981). To allege a relevant market, a plaintiff must allege a product market and a geographic market. See PSKS, Inc. v. Leegin Creative Leather Prods., Inc., 615 F.3d 412, 417 (5th Cir. 2010). A product market is defined by considering cross-elasticity of demand—i.e., two products are in the same market if an increase in the price of one product increases demand for another product. See E.I. du Pont, 351 U.S. at 404. Although the definition of the product market usually presents a question of fact, the Court may determine it as a matter of law:

> [w]here the plaintiff fails to define its proposed [product] market with reference to the rule of reasonable interchangeability and cross-elasticity of demand, or alleges a proposed relevant market that clearly does not encompass all interchangeable substitute products even when all factual inferences are granted in plaintiff's favor. . . .

Apani Sw., Inc. v. Coca-Cola Enters., Inc., 300 F.3d 620, 628 (5th Cir. 2002).

The geographic market is based on the area of "effective competition ... [which] must be charted by careful selection of the market area in which the seller operates and to which the buyers can practicably turn for supplies." Id. at 626 (citation omitted). Specifically, the geographic market includes all areas "not just where consumers currently purchase the product, but where [*50] consumers could turn for alternative products or sources of the product if a competitor raises prices." Surgical Care Ctr. of Hammond, L.C. v. Hosp. Serv. Dist. No. 1, 309 F.3d 836, 840 (5th Cir. 2002). Here, the market definition is deficient in several ways.

Plaintiff alleges two product markets: a market for Defendants' engines and parts, and a market for MRO Services for Defendants' engines and parts. See Third Am. Compl. ¶¶ 252, 261. Even if the Court accepted that the product markets are limited to Defendants' products, Plaintiff provides no justification for defining the markets in reference to all of Defendants' customers except helicopter manufacturers. See id. ¶¶ 253, 262. Plaintiff argues that helicopter manufacturers are properly excluded because they "are not long-term owners of the engines and thus are not participants in the MRO [S]ervices or engine/parts markets." Resp. to SafranHE USA's Mot. to Dismiss (hereinafter, "Resp.") 13. The Court will not credit this implausible assertion and unwarranted factual inference. See Ferrer, 484 F.3d at 780, Nothing in the Complaint suggests that helicopter manufacturers cannot sell leftover engines or parts, or request or perform MRO Services on old parts in lieu of purchasing new parts. Even if helicopter [*51] manufacturers are properly excluded, Plaintiff's product market allegations do not include "manufacturers of new

[9] Even if Plaintiff had adequately pleaded that SafranHE USA entered into a conspiracy to fix prices or boycott Plaintiff, the Complaint is devoid of any facts showing SafranHE France's or SafranHE Canada's participation in the alleged conspiracies. This deficiency is fatal to Plaintiff's claims against SafranHE France and SafranHE Canada, PMA Parts (substitute parts otherwise manufactured by companies not affiliated with [Defendants], under an FAA program known as Part Manufacturing Authorization)." Third Am. Compl. ¶ 689. A substitute part is by definition interchangeable for the part it substitutes, meaning that the demand for substitute and original parts is typically cross-elastic. By the same token, the market definition presumably needed to include companies that service PMA parts. Finally, the Court finds that Plaintiff's allegations that the parts and services of other manufacturers are not interchangeable for Defendants' parts and services, id. ¶¶ 254-55, 263, are conclusory. See Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555.

Even if Plaintiff's product markets were properly defined, Plaintiff incomprehensibly limits the geographic market to the United States.[10] See Third Am. Compl. ¶ 245. Plaintiff's own allegations suggest that the geographic market is broader than this: the Complaint states that Defendants' customers and competitors are located in the United States and Canada. Id., ¶¶ 245-49. Additionally, there are numerous allegations that [*52] would suggest the relevant geographic market might be worldwide. For example, Plaintiff alleges that: (1) SafranHE France transacts business in the United States, id. ¶¶ 42, 45; (2) Defendants' principal customer Airbus allegedly has its headquarters in Marginane, France, id. ¶ 71; (3) SafranHE France "is the largest solely dedicated manufacturer of Helicopter Engines in the world," id. ¶¶ 76, 79; and (4) Defendants would ship parts for service across the Atlantic, see id. ¶¶ 64, 138. These allegations show that companies in this industry operate globally—i.e., a French company can profitably conduct business in the United States while maintaining a physical location abroad. The Complaint provides no reason for the Court to ignore Defendants' international competitors. See Surgical Care, 309 F.3d at 840 (considering whether consumer would turn to areas outside the United States for "alternative products or sources of the product if a competitor raises prices"). In short, Plaintiff's "geographic market definition does not comport with the commercial realities of the industry" as described by Plaintiff. See Honeywell Int'l Inc. v. MEK Chem. Corp., Civ. A. No. 3:17-cv-1390-M, 2018 WL 6737514, at *3 (N.D. Tex. July 5, 2018).

For the foregoing reasons, the Court [*53] finds that Plaintiff did not properly allege a relevant market and grants the Motions as to Counts V, VII, IX, X, XI, XII, XX, and XXI.

(b) Injury to Competition

Even if Plaintiff adequately alleged a market for these Counts, the Court finds that Plaintiff's assertions regarding market injury are speculative. To state a claim under Sherman Act § 1, a plaintiff must allege facts showing an anticompetitive effect stemming from the unlawful conduct alleged. See Marucci Sports, L.L.C. v. NCAA, 751 F.3d 368, 375 (5th Cir. 2014) ("[Plaintiff's] Second Amended Complaint must allege facts showing that the [conduct] unreasonably restrained trade in the . . . market." (citations omitted)). "Speculation about anticompetitive effects is not enough." Roy B. Taylor Sales, Inc. v. Hollymatic Corp, 28 F.3d 1379, 1385 (5th Cir. 1994) (holding that plaintiff needed to show "that the tie 'as it actually operate[d] in the market' harmed competition," rather than the mere existence of a tie (quoting Jefferson Par. Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 29, 104 S. Ct. 1551, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2 (1984))). Here, Plaintiff pleaded no facts showing an injury to competition for any of its Sherman Act § 1 claims. Plaintiff alleges, for example, that certain practices "suppress intrabrand competition," Third Am. Compl. ¶¶ 294, 466, 627, "harm[] competition, foreseeably, directly, and substantially," id. ¶¶ 298, 364, 432, 450, 488, 658, or raise prices. See id. ¶ [*54] 635. Plaintiff does not, however, provide any details about competition in the relevant markets. Accordingly, the Court finds Plaintiff's allegations of anticompetitive effect to be speculative and conclusory, and grants the Motions as to Counts V, VII, IX, X, XI, XII, XX, and XXI.

---

[10] Plaintiff contends that this is a typo and that the sentence should have read "United States and Canada." See Resp. 12 & n.17. It is axiomatic that Plaintiff cannot amend the complaint by a brief in opposition to a motion to dismiss. Energy Coal v. Citgo Petroleum Corp., 836 F.3d 457, 462 n.4 (5th Cir. 2016) (citing Roebuck v. Dothan Sec., Inc., 515 F. App'x 275, 280 (5th Cir, 2013)). In any event, this correction would not save Plaintiff's defective market definition. Therefore, the Court will not grant Plaintiff leave to amend. See Resp. 12 n.17 (requesting leave to amend); Legate v. Livingston, 822 F.3d 207, 211 (5th Cir. 2016) ("[A] district court need not grant a futile motion to amend.").

b. Sherman Act § 2

To state a claim for monopolization, a plaintiff must plausibly allege "(1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Tech, Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 481, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992). To state a claim for attempted monopolization, a plaintiff must plausibly allege "(1) that the defendant has engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct with (2) a specific intent to monopolize and (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power [in the relevant market]." Retractable Techs., Inc. v. Becton Dickinson & Co., 842 F.3d 883, 891 (5th Cir. 2016) (citation omitted). For both claims, Plaintiff must properly define a geographic and product market. See Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 456, 113 S. Ct. 884, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1993) (noting that an attempted monopolization claim generally requires "a definition of the relevant market and examination of market power"); Eastman Kodak, 504 U.S. at 481 (noting that a plaintiff must allege "monopoly power [*55] in the relevant market" for a monopolization claim).

Plaintiff purports to have defined the market for its monopolization and attempted monopolization claims in its Sherman Act § 1 claims. See Third Am. Compl. ¶¶ 667, 698. As explained above, Plaintiff's market definition is deficient. Without a validly defined market, the Court cannot determine whether Defendants have market or monopoly power in those markets, See *Honeywell Int'l Inc., 2018 WL 6737514, at 3. Accordingly, the Court finds that Plaintiff did not sufficiently plead claims for monopolization and attempted monopolization, and grants the Motions as to Counts XXII and XXIII.

c. Tying Claim

A tying arrangement is "an agreement by a party to sell one product [(also called a tying product)] but only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different (or tied) product, or at least agrees that he will not purchase that product from any other supplier." Schlotzsky's, Ltd. v. Sterling Purchasing & Nat'l Distrib. Co., 520 F.3d 393, 405 (5th Cir. 2008) (quoting Eastman Kodak, 504 U.S. at 461-62). The essential characteristic of an illegal tying arrangement "lies in the seller's exploitation of its control over the tying product to force the buyer into the purchase of a tied product that the buyer either did not want at all, or might have preferred to purchase elsewhere on different terms." Ill. Tool Works Inc. v. Indep. Ink, Inc., 547 U.S. 28, 34-35, 126 S. Ct. 1281, 164 L. Ed. 2d 26 (2006) (citation [*56] omitted).

While tying arrangements are often included in the list of per se violations of the Sherman Act, see N. Tex. Speciality, 528 F.3d at 360 (quoting Maricopa Cty., 457 U.S. at 344 n.15), not all tying arrangements are per se unlawful. To state a claim for per se tying, a plaintiff must plausibly allege facts showing:

> (1) Two separate products (as opposed to components of a single product); (2) The two products are tied together or customers are coerced; (3) The supplier possesses substantial economic power over the tying product; (4) The tie has an anticompetitive effect on the tied market; and (5) The tie affects a not insubstantial volume of commerce.

United Farmers Agents Ass'n v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 89 F.3d 233, 235 n.2 (5th Cir. 1996) (citation omitted), Specifically, a plaintiff must plead "two, distinct markets," Paramount Pictures Corp. v. Johnson Broad. Inc., 432 F. Supp. 2d 707, 709 (S.D. Tex. 2006) (citing Jefferson Par., 466 U.S. at 21), properly "define the parameters of each of these markets," id. (emphasis added), and allege that the defendant has market power in the market for the tying product. See *Honeywell Int'l Inc., 2018 WL 6737514, at 6 (citations omitted). A tying arrangement that does not meet these requirements is analyzed under the rule of reason, which requires a plaintiff to show, among other things, an actual adverse effect on competition. Id. (citations omitted).

Here, Plaintiff does not affirmatively raise a tying claim but alleges in Count XXI that "SafranHE USA [*57] and SafranHE Canada . . . conditioned the sale of MRO Services on the purchase of unnecessary 'modifications,'" Third Am. Compl. ¶ 645. As the Court should not dismiss a claim solely because Plaintiff did not identify a legal theory, Rathborne, 683 F.2d at 917 n.8, the Court must determine whether Plaintiff stated a plausible tying claim under either the per se or the rule of reason mode of analysis. First, the Court finds that Plaintiff did not state a per se tying claim, because the Complaint does not include a proper market definition, see supra § III.C.1.a.iii.a., let alone valid definitions of two distinct markets. See Paramount Pictures, 432 F. Supp. 2d at 709. And, in the absence of a validly defined market, the Court cannot determine that SafranHE USA or SafranHE Canada had market power in the sale of MRO Services. See *Honeywell Int'l Inc., 2018 WL 6737514, at *3, 6, Second, Plaintiff cannot recover for tying under the rule of reason, because the Complaint does not plead facts showing actual injury to competition. *Id. at 6. As explained above, Plaintiff's allegations of injury to competition are speculative and conclusory. See supra § III.C.1.a.iii.b. Accordingly, the Court grants the Motions as to Count XXI insofar as it states a tying claim.

d. Cartwright Act and Kansas Restraint of Trade Act

The same [*58] analysis conducted in conjunction with Plaintiff's Sherman Act claims governs Plaintiff's Cartwright Act and Kansas Restraint of Trade Act claims. See Cty. of Tuolumne v. Sonora Cmty. Hosp., 236 F.3d 1148, 1160 (9th Cir, 2001) (holding that the Cartwright Act was "modeled after the Sherman Act" and so the analysis "mirrors the analysis under federal law" (citations omitted)); Kan. Stat. Ann. § 50-163(b) ("[T]he Kansas restraint of trade act shall be construed in harmony with ruling judicial interpretations of federal antitrust law by the United States [S]upreme [C]ourt."). Accordingly, the Court grants the Motions as to Counts VI, XIV, XVIII, XXIV, and XXV for the reasons stated above.

e. Statute of Limitations

Even if the Court did not dismiss every antitrust claim for one or more of the deficiencies described above, the Court finds that Plaintiff did not assert Count IX and portions of Counts XI, XXII, XXIII, XXIV, and XXV, within the relevant limitations period.

"[A] complaint that shows relief to be barred by . . . the statute of limitations[] may be dismissed for failure to state a cause of action." Kaiser Aluminum & Chem. Sales, Inc. v. Avondale Shipyards, Inc., 677 F.2d 1045, 1050 (5th Cir. 1982) (collecting cases). Federal antitrust claims that are not brought within four years of their accrual are "forever barred." 15 U.S.C. § 15b. "Generally, a cause of action accrues and the statute begins [*59] to run when a defendant commits an act that injures a plaintiff's business." Rx.com v. MedcoHealth Sols., Inc., 322 F. App'x 394, 396 (5th Cir. 2009) (quoting Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 401 U.S. 321, 338, 91 S. Ct. 795, 28 L. Ed. 2d 77 (1971)). If a plaintiff alleges a continuing antitrust violation, suit may be brought within four years after the defendant "commits an overt act in furtherance of an antitrust conspiracy . . . or commits an act that by its very nature is a continuing antitrust violation." Kaiser, 677 F.2d at 1051. The key question is whether some injurious act actually occurred during the limitations period. See *Hibernia Nat'l Bank v. Indus. Alloys Co., No. 93-3035, 1993 U.S. App. LEXIS 40801, 1993 WL 209995, at 2 (5th Cir. June 4, 1993); Kaiser, 677 F.2d at 1053 (citing Poster Exch., Inc. v. Nat'l Screen Serv. Corp., 517 F.2d 117, 128 (5th Cir. 1975)). Thus, a plaintiff could allege a continuing antitrust violation by pleading that the defendant violated an antitrust duty to deal at a subsequent time during the limitations period, see Rx.com, 322 F. App'x at 396, but not by pleading that a contract was in existence at that time. See Kaiser, 677 F.2d at 1053. Importantly, even if a plaintiff alleges a continuing antitrust violation, the plaintiff can only recover for harm that occurred within the limitations period. See Klehr v. A.O. Smith Corp., 521 U.S. 179, 189, 117 S. Ct. 1984, 138 L. Ed. 2d 373 (1997) ("But the commission of a separate new overt act generally does not permit the plaintiff to recover for the injury caused by old overt acts outside the limitations period." (collecting cases)).

The analysis is similar for the state law antitrust claims. A claim brought under either California's Cartwright Act [*60] or the Kansas Restraint of Trade Act is not barred if the plaintiff alleges a continuous violation—a new, independent overt act that inflicts a new injury on the plaintiff. See Garrison v. Oracle Corp., 159 F. Supp. 3d 1044, 1071-72 (N.D. Cal. 2016); Manildra Milling Corp. v. Ogilvie Mills, Inc., 723 F. Supp. 567, 570 (D. Kan. 1989). Like federal claims, a Cartwright Act claim is subject to a four-year statute of limitations. See Home Depot U.S.A., Inc. v.

*AU Optronics Corp. (In re TFT-LCD (Flat Panel) Antitrust Litig.), No. M 07-1827 SI, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 77417, 2014 WL 2527221, at 3 (N.D. Cal. June 4, 2014) (citing Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 16750.1, 17200). On the other hand, a Kansas Restraint of Trade Act is subject to a three-year statute of limitations. See Four B Corp. v. Daicel Chem. Indus,, Ltd., 253 F. Supp. 2d 1147, 1155-56 (D. Kan. 2003) (citing Kan. Stat. Ann. 60-512(2)). The two statutes also differ as to when the limitation period begins to run. While the limitations period under Kansas law begins to run when "the plaintiff knew or should have known of the harm," *In re Vitamins Antitrust Litig., No. MISC 99-197, 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11351, 2000 WL 1524912, at 2 (D.D.C. July 14, 2000) (discussing McCue v. Franklin, 156 Kan. 1, 131 P.2d 704 (Kan. 1942)), a Cartwright Act claim accrues "when [it] is complete with all of its elements." Garrison, 159 F. Supp. 3d at 1065 (quoting Pooshs v. Philip Morris USA, Inc., 51 Cal. 4th 788, 797, 123 Cal. Rptr. 3d 578, 250 P.3d 181 (2011)).

In this case, Plaintiff first alleged antitrust claims in its First Amended Complaint, filed March 28, 2016. See ECF No. 10. Consequently, any federal claim premised on injury that occurred solely before March 28, 2012, is barred, see Kaiser, 677 F.2d at 1051, any Cartwright Act claim that Plaintiff could have brought before [*61] March 28, 2012, is barred, see Garrison, 159 F. Supp. 3d at 1071-72, and any Kansas Restraint of Trade Act premised on injury that Plaintiff should have discovered before March 28, 2013, is barred, see Manildra Milling, 723 F. Supp. at 570.

Viewing the Complaint in the light most favorable to Plaintiff, the Court finds that Plaintiff timely brought the following claims: (1) Counts V, VI, and VII premised on the alleged Defacing or Accident Policies that were enforced from 2013 to 2015 and harmed Plaintiff until 2014, see Third Am. Compl. ¶¶ 174, 190, 279, 281-82, 289-90, 353-55; (2) Count X that is premised on SafranHE USA's MAA with HSN signed in October 2012, see id. ¶ 442; (3) Counts XI and XII based on the Fleet Parts or Service Agreements, except the agreement with Heli-One signed in May 2009, see id. ¶ 462; (4) Counts XIII, XIV, XVII, and XVIII, purporting to state price-fixing and group-boycott claims based on conduct occurring in 2014 or 2015, see id. ¶¶ 498-502; (5) Counts XX and XXI that are based on exclusive supply agreements and other alleged MRO Services restraints adopted between 2013 and 2016, see id. ¶¶ 616, 623, 646-48; (6) Count XXII insofar as it alleges monopolization based on Defendants agreements with Advanced or the Fleet Parts or [*62] Service Agreements, see id. ¶¶ 679, 681; and (7) Counts XXIII, XXIV, and XXV, to the extent they state claims not otherwise found untimely. These allegations suffice to show that the claims arose, Plaintiff was injured, or Defendants committed a continuous violation during the limitations period.

Conversely, the Court finds that the following claims are time-barred: (1) Count IX based on Plaintiff's MAA that was entered into on April 30, 2010, see id. ¶¶ 390, 421-39; (2) Count XI insofar as it purports to state a claim for Heli-One's agreement entered into in February 2010, see id. ¶ 497; (3) Count XXII to the extent it is premised on Defendants adopting policies of throwing away substitute parts and informing customers of this policy on February 9, 2003, see id. ¶¶ 689-90; and (4) Counts XXIII, XXIV, and XXV, to the extent they are based on Plaintiff's MAA, SafranHE USA's February 2010 agreement with Heli-One, or Defendants' policy regarding substitute parts. Additionally, the Court finds that Counts XXIV and XXV are barred by the three-year statute of limitations applicable to Kansas Restraint of Trade claims, see Four B. Corp., 253 F. Supp. 2d at 1155-56, to the extent they are based on SafranHE USA's MAA with HSN. See [*63] Third Am. Compl. ¶ 442. The Court further finds that Plaintiff did not allege any facts for these Counts showing that Defendants entered into, acted pursuant to, or harmed Plaintiff as a result of these contracts or policies during the limitations period. See Kaiser, 677 F.2d at 1051; Garrison, 159 F. Supp. 3d at 1071-72; Manildra Milling, 723 F. Supp. at 570. As such, the Court cannot conclude that these Counts describe a continuing antitrust violation. Accepting all of Plaintiff's well-pleaded allegations as true, the Court find that any antitrust injury arising out Plaintiff's MAA, Heli-One's agreement, Defendants' policy with regards to substitute parts, and SafranHE USA's MAA with HSN under the Kansas Restraint of Trade Act, occurred outside of the relevant limitations periods.

For the reasons stated above, the Court grants the Motions on limitations grounds as to Count IX, denies the Motions on this basis as to Counts V, VI, VII, XIII, XIV, XVII, XVIII, XX, and XXI, and grants in part and denies in part the Motions on this basis as to Counts XI, XXII, XXIII, XXIV, and XXV to the extent described in the preceding paragraph.

(2) Deceptive Practices Claims

a. Lanham Act

> A prima facie case of false advertising under [Lanham Act § 43(a)] requires the plaintiff to establish: (1) A false or [*64] misleading statement of fact about a product; (2) Such statement either deceived, or had the capacity to deceive a substantial segment of potential consumers; (3) The deception is material, in that it is likely to influence the consumer's purchasing decision; (4) The product is in interstate commerce; and (5) The plaintiff has been or is likely to be injured as a result of the statement at issue.

Pizza Hut, Inc. v. Papa John's Int'l, Inc., 227 F.3d 489, 495 (5th Cir. 2000) (citations omitted). "The failure to prove the existence of any element of the prima facie case is fatal to the plaintiff's claim." Id. (citation omitted). The first element of a § 43(a) claim requires a plaintiff to "demonstrate that the commercial advertisement or promotion is either literally false, or that [if the advertisement is not literally false,] it is likely to mislead and confuse consumers." Id. (alteration in original) (quoting Seven-Up Co. v. Coca-Cola Co., 86 F.3d 1379, 1390 (5th Cir. 1996)).

Here, Plaintiff alleges that the following statements of SafranHE USA are false or misleading: (1) unauthorized service centers do not have access to Defendants' technical documentations, see Third Am. Compl. ¶¶ 733-35, 742, 744; (2) unauthorized repair centers are "issuing falsified release documents" when they repair Defendants' engines, id. ¶ 734; (3) Defendants [*65] may withhold instructions or other documentation as proprietary, see id. ¶ 736; and (4) repair centers that Defendants neither authorized nor did not authorize to provide repair service do so in violation of FAA regulations,[11] see id. ¶ 742. Plaintiff posits that these statements are "false and misleading because FAA regulations require [Defendants] to make available Technical Instructions . . . to all owners and maintenance providers." Id. ¶¶ 737, 745. The Lanham Act is not, however, an appropriate vehicle to enforce Plaintiff's interpretation of FAA regulations. *See Greater Houston Transp. Co. v. Uber Techs., Inc., Civ. A. No. 4:14-0941, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 28867, 2015 WL 1034254, at 10-11 (S.D. Tex. Mar. 10, 2015) (citing, among other things, IQ Prods. Co. v. Pennzoil Prods. Co., 305 F.3d 368, 373-74 (5th Cir. 2002)) (holding that the plaintiffs "failed to plead a cognizable cause of action that [the defendant's] representations that they 'meet all local regulations' are false or misleading" because local regulations were subject to multiple interpretations). Thus, the fact that Plaintiff's Lanham Act claim seeks to enforce Plaintiff's preferred interpretation of FAA regulations is alone sufficient to warrant dismissal of Count XXVII.

The Court further finds that Plaintiff did not allege sufficient facts to show that any of SafranHE [*66] USA's statements were false or misleading. Plaintiff's only non-conclusory allegation showing that the statements were false or misleading is the FAA's November 10, 2016, letter to First Aviation Services, Inc., stating that "a design approval holder . . . may not deny access to [technical information] based on claims of proprietary data." Third Am. Compl. ¶ 737. Nothing in the Complaint explains how a 2016 FAA letter renders SafranHE USA's statements from 2009 to 2013 false or Misleading. See S. Snow Mfg. Co. v. Snow Wizard Holdings, Inc., 829 F. Supp. 2d 437, 453 (ED. La. 2011) (finding that subsequent agency action did not render prior statements false). Accordingly, the Court grants Safran HE USA's Motion as to Count XXVII.

[11] The pertinent statement reads: "Turbomeca USA, Inc. specializes in the design, production, sale and support of low to medium power gas turbine engines for helicopters. . . . There are no other FAA authorized . . . Repair Centers within the United States qualified to provide all levels of repair and overhaul of the engine and fuel control unit other than Turbomeca USA, Inc.. [sic] Also, all manuals and technical documentation required to perform any repairs and/or overhauls on the Turbomeca engines are proprietary to Turbomeca USA, Inc. and are not available to non-authorized Repair Centers. Any other company providing repair service on this engine would be in violation of FAA regulations." Third Am. Compl. ¶ 742.

b. Common Law Unfair Competition

"Unfair competition under Texas law 'is the umbrella for all statutory and nonstatutory causes of action arising out of business conduct which is contrary to honest practice in industrial or commercial matters." Taylor Publ'g Co. v. Jostens, Inc., 216 F.3d 465, 486 (5th Cir. 2000) (quoting Am. Heritage Life Ins. v. Heritage Life Ins., 494 F.2d 3, 14 (5th Cir. 1974)). Liability for unfair competition must be premised on some "independent substantive tort or other illegal conduct." Schoellkopf v. Pledger, 778 S.W.2d 897, 904-05 (Tex. App.—Dallas 1989, writ denied). Plaintiff's common law unfair competition claim is premised on the same allegedly false or misleading statements as its Lanham Act claim. See Third Am, Compl. ¶¶ 755-63; Resp. 24 [*67] (arguing that Plaintiff adequately pleaded a common law unfair competition claim because Plaintiff alleged a Lanham Act claim). As the Court grants SafranHE USA's Motion as to the Lanham Act claim, the Court finds that Plaintiff's unfair competition claim is not premised on any independent substantive tort or other illegal conduct. See Schoellkopf; 778 S.W.2d at 904-05. Even if the unfair competition claim was premised on some tort, the Court finds that Plaintiff did not plead sufficient facts to show that SafranHE USA made any false or misleading statement for the reasons stated above. See also S & H Indus. v. Selander, 932 F. Supp. 2d 754, 763 (N.D. Tex. 2013) (explaining that a common law unfair competition claim is analyzed under the same standard as a claim under the Lanham Act (quoting Amazing Spaces, Inc. v. Metro Mini Storage, 608 F.3d 225, 236 n.7 (5th Cir. 2010))). Consequently, the Court grants SafranHE USA's Motion as to Count XXVIII.

(3) Breach of Contract

SafranHE France moves to dismiss the portion of Count VIII that asserts that SafranHE France breached Plaintiff's MAA. "In Texas, '[t]he essential elements of a breach of contract action are: (1) the existence of a valid contract; (2) performance or tendered performance by the plaintiff; (3) breach of the contract by the defendant; and (4) damages sustained by the plaintiff as a result of the breach.'" [*68] Smith Int'l, Inc. v. Egle Grp., LLC, 490 F.3d 380, 387 (5th Cir. 2007) (alteration in original) (quoting Valero Mktg. & Supply Co. v. Kalama Int'l, L.L.C., 51 S.W.3d 345, 351 (Tex, App.—Houston [1st Dist.] 2001, no pet.)).

In this case, the Complaint makes clear that SafranHE France was not a party to the contract between SafranHE USA and Plaintiff. See Third Am. Compl. ¶ 390 ("[Plaintiff] and SafranHE USA entered into the [MAA] . . . ."). Plaintiff does not dispute that SafranHE France was not a party to this agreement, but argues that due to SafranHE France's control over the technical instructions, an implied contract existed between the two. See Resp. to Int'l Defs.' Mot. to Dismiss 19-20. Even if the Court permitted this eleventh hour amendment of the Complaint, which it does not, see Energy Coal, 836 F.3d at 462 n.4, the Court would still grant the International Defendants' Motion as to this claim. A claim for breach of an implied contract requires a plaintiff to "plead the existence of a valid implied contract," which, in turn, requires allegations showing "(1) an offer, (2) an acceptance, (3) a meeting of the minds, (4) each party's consent to the terms, and (5) execution and delivery of the contract with the intent that it be mutual and binding." Electrostim Med. Servs., Inc. v. Health Care Serv. Corp., 614 F. App'x 731, 744 (5th Cir. 2015) (quoting Plotkin v. Joekel, 304 S.W.3d 455, 476 (Tex. App.—Houston [1st Dist.] 2009, pet. denied)). The Complaint includes no facts showing that SafranHE France offered, accepted, or consented to any terms of Plaintiffs MAA with SafranHE [*69] USA. Accordingly, the Court grants the International Defendants' Motion as to the portion of Count VIII asserted against SafranHE France.

(4) Tort Claims

a. Tortious Interference with Contract

"The elements of a tortious interference with contract claim are (1) the existence of a contract subject to interference; (2) a willful and intentional act of interference; (3) such act was a proximate cause of damage; and (4) actual damage or loss occurred." Fluorine On Call, Ltd. v. Fluorogcts Ltd., 380 F.3d 849, 864 (5th Cir. 2004) (citation omitted). To prevail on a claim for tortious interference with an existing contract, a plaintiff must present evidence that the defendant induced a third party to breach the contract, El Paso Healthcare Sys., Ltd. v. Murphy, 518 S.W.3d 412, 421-22 (Tex. 2017). For the act of interference to be intentional or willful, "[t]he interfering party must know of the existence of a contract between the plaintiff and a third party." Hill v. Heritage Res., Inc., 964 S.W.2d 89, 123 (Tex. App.—El Paso 1997, pet. denied).

The Court finds that Count III should be dismissed because Plaintiff did not allege sufficient facts to show that SafranHE France had knowledge of any contract subject to interference. Plaintiff merely stated, in conelusory fashion, that "SafranHE France had knowledge of th[e] contracts," Third Am. Compl. ¶ 225, which is insufficient to state a claim for tortious interference. See Hoffman v. L&M Arts, 774 F. Supp. 2d 826, 846 (N.D. Tex. 2011). [*70] The only other allegation even remotely on point—that "a SafranHE France employee[] specifically mentioned [Plaintiff] in a presentation addressing both the Defacing Policy and the Accident Policy," Third Am. Compl. ¶ 225—does nothing to suggest that SafranHE France was aware of any specific contract. Accordingly, the Court grants the International Defendants Motion as to Count III.

The Court denies, however, SafranHE USA's Motion as to Count XV. SafranHE USA argues that Count XV should be dismissed because Plaintiff did not plead that Defendants engaged in an independently tortious act. See Br. at 24-25. Plaintiff was not required, however, to plead an independently tortious act for this claim. See El Paso, 518 S.W.3d at 421 ("[I]nterference with an existing contract does not" require "a finding that the defendant engaged in independently tortious or unlawful conduct."). Accordingly, the Court denies SafranHE USA's Motion as to Count XV.

b. Tortious Interference with Business Relationships

The Complaint does not clearly state whether Plaintiff is alleging tortious interference with an existing or prospective business relationship. See Third Am. Compl. ¶¶ 541-51. To the extent Plaintiff is alleging tortious interference [*71] with an existing business relationship, "its elements are: `(1) unlawful actions undertaken by [the defendants] without a legal right or justifiable excuse; (2) with the intent to harm [the plaintiff]; and (3) resulting actual harm or damage.'" D'Onofrio v. Vacation Publ'ns, Inc., 888 F.3d 197, 214-15 (5th Cir. 2018) (alteration in original) (quoting Am. Med. Int'l, Inc. v. Giurintano, 821 S.W.2d 331, 335 (Tex. App.—Houston [14th Dist.] 1991, no writ)). To the extent Plaintiff alleges tortious interference with a prospective business relationship, its elements are:

> 1) a reasonable probability that the parties would have entered into a contractual relationship; 2) an independently tortious or unlawful act by the defendant that prevented the relationship from occurring; 3) the defendant acted with a conscious desire to prevent the relationship from occurring, or it knew that the interference was certain or substantially certain to occur as a result of his conduct; and 4) the plaintiff suffered actual harm or damage as a result of the defendant's interference.

Ewbank v. ChoicePoint Inc., 551 F. Supp. 2d 563, 566-67 (N.D. Tex. 2008) (citing RAJ Partners, Ltd. v. Darco Constr. Corp., 217 S.W.3d 638, 649 n.10 (Tex. App.—Amarillo 2006, no pet.); Richardson-Eagle, Inc, v. William. M. Mercer, Inc., 213 S.W.3d 469, 475 (Tex. App.—Houston [1st Dist.] 2006, rev. denied)).

Either way, Plaintiff must establish that Defendants committed an independently tortious or unlawful act. See Ewbank, 551 F. Supp. 2d at 566-67; *Adrain v. Genetec, Inc., No, 2:08-CV-423, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 90946, 2009 WL 3161386, at 3 (ED. Tex. Sept. 30, 2009) (holding that unlawful act requirement of tortious interference with an existing business relationship claim is satisfied by showing that [*72] a defendant engaged in conduct that is "independently tortious or unlawful"). To be independently tortious or unlawful, the conduct must be more than "merely 'sharp' or unfair"—it must be "actionable under a recognized tort [theory]." *Centuria, Inc. v. Regiment Sec., LLC, Civ. A. No. 3:11-CV-2500-N, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 203187, 2013 WL 12250941, at 2 (N.D. Tex. Jan. 11, 2013) (alteration in original) (quoting Ash v. Hack Branch Distrib. Co., 54 S.W.3d 401, 414-15 (Tex. App.—Waco 2001, pet. denied)).

In this case, Plaintiff alleges that Defendants' anticompetitive conduct satisfies the independently tortious act requirements of Counts IV, XVI, and XIX. See Third Am. Compl. ¶¶ 234, 236, 545; Resp. 25 (suggesting that the antitrust violations satisfy the independently wrongful action element). Alleged antitrust violations satisfy the independently tortious act requirement, regardless of whether the violations rise to the level of valid antitrust claims. See In re Mem'l Hermann Hosp. Sys., 464 S.W.3d 686, 704-06 (Tex. 2015). Nevertheless, for the reasons discussed above, the Court cannot conclude that Plaintiff has pleaded a plausible antitrust violation. The various antitrust violations are deficient because Plaintiff did not plead sufficient facts to allege a conspiracy, to define a relevant market, or to show injury to competition, or because the claim itself is untimely. See supra § Consequently, the Court finds that [*73] Plaintiff did not plead an independently tortious act and grants the Motions as to Counts IV, XVI, and XIX.

Furthermore, the Court notes that Count IV suffers from an incurable defect. Plaintiff alleges in this Count that the independently tortious act is SafranHE France's decision to have SafranHE USA and SafranHE Canada adopt the Defacing Policy. See Third Am. Compl. ¶¶ 234, 236. Plaintiff clarifies that this decision is independently tortious because it is an unlawful anticompetitive scheme. Se*See*e Resp. to Int'l Defs.' Mot. to Dismiss 19. The Court finds that Plaintiff did not sufficiently plead that the Defacing Policy violates the antitrust laws. SafranHE France would not violate § 1 of the Sherman Act by "conspiring" with SafranHE USA or SafranHE France to adopt certain policies, because Defendants are in a parent-subsidiary relationship. See Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp., 467 U.S. 752, 771-72, 104 S. Ct. 2731, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1984) (holding a parent and a wholly-owned subsidiary do not "conspire" for the purposes of Sherman Act § 1); Century Oil Tool, Inc. v. Prod. Specialties, Inc., 737 F.2d 1316, 1317 (5th Cir. 1984) (holding two corporations owned by a single entity do not "conspire" for the purposes of Sherman Act § 1). Nor has Plaintiff adequately pleaded that SafranHE France's decision to adopt the Defacing Policy violates Sherman Act § 2. In the absence [*74] of a validly defined market, the Court cannot determine if SafranHE France possessed monopoly power in the relevant market—a necessary element of a § 2 claim. See Eastman Kodak, 504 U.S. at 481. As the analysis of the state antitrust claims would be the same, see supra § III.C.1.d., the Court finds that Plaintiff did not sufficiently plead that the decision to adopt the Defacing Policy is independently tortious and grants the International Defendants' Motion as to Count IV for this additional reason.

c. Civil Conspiracy

A civil conspiracy claim has the following elements: "(1) two or more persons; (2) an object to be accomplished; (3) a meeting of the minds on the object or course of action; (4) one or more unlawful, overt acts; and (5) damages as a proximate result." Wackman v. Rubsamen, 602 F.3d 391, 408 (5th Cir. 2010) (quoting Tri v. J.T.T., 162 S.W.3d 552, 556 (Tex. 2005)). Defendants allege that Plaintiff's allegations regarding "a meeting of the minds" are conclusory. The Court agrees that Plaintiff's civil conspiracy claim should be dismissed.

The only remaining claims at this point are: Count I alleging that SafranHE USA and SafranHE Canada breached contracts; Count II alleging that SafranHE USA and SafranHE Canada are liable for wrongful detention, conversion, and negligence; Count VIII alleging that SafranHE [*75] USA breached Plaintiff's MAA; Count XV stating that SafranHE USA tortiously interfered with Plaintiff's contracts with Advanced; and Counts XXIX and XXX alleging that SafranHE USA is liable for misrepresentations or concealment under the DTPA or common law. The civil conspiracy claim does not, however, relate to any of these Counts. Rather, the conspiracy claim appears to be premised on the dismissed antitrust allegations. See Third Am. Compl. ¶ 727 ("The object to be accomplished by the conspiracy or conspiracies was to prevent competition . . . ."). As the Court grants the Motions as to the predicate claims, the Court also grants the Motions as to the civil conspiracy claim. See *Walker v. Beaumont Indep. Sch. Dist., Civ. A. No. 1:15-CV-379, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 41408, 2016 WL 6666828, at 10 (ED. Tex. Mar. 11, 2016) (dismissing conspiracy claim after dismissing predicate claim). Accordingly, the Court grants the Motions as to Count XXVI.

D. Dismissal with Prejudice

The Court has discretion whether to dismiss a claim with or without prejudice. See Club Retro L.L.C. v. Hilton, 568 F.3d 181, 215 n.34 (5th Cir. 2009). "[A]t some point, a court must decide that a plaintiff has had fair opportunity to make his case; if, after that time, a cause of action has not been established, the court should finally dismiss the suit." Schiller v. Physicians Res. Grp., Inc., 342 F.3d 563, 567 (5th Cir. 2003) (quoting [*76] Jacquez v. Procunier, 801 F.2d 789, 792 (5th Cir. 1986)). "[P]leadings review is not a game where the plaintiff is permitted to file serial amendments until he finally gets it right." United States ex rel. Adrian v. Regents of the Univ. of Cal., 363 F.3d 398, 404 (5th Cir. 2004); see also United States ex rel. Willard v. Humana Health Plan of Tex. Inc., 336 F.3d 375, 387 (5th Cir. 2003) (holding that leave to amend was properly denied where the plaintiff had two prior opportunities to amend the complaint and the district court had once before granted leave to cure the complaint's lack of specificity). This is especially true where a plaintiff "did not suggest in [his or her] responsive pleading any additional facts not initially pled that could, if necessary, cure the pleading defects raised by the defendants." Goldstein v. MCI WorldCom, 340 F.3d 238, 255 (5th Cir. 2003). Additionally, a district court may deny the plaintiff an opportunity to replead if an amendment of a claim is futile. See Legate, 822 F.3d at 211 (citing Stripling v. Jordan Prod. Co., 234 F.3d 863, 872 (5th Cir. 2000)).

Plaintiff did not move for leave to amend the Complaint. In fact, Plaintiff only requested to amend the definition of the geographic market, and the Court found this proposed amendment to be futile. See supra note 10. Moreover, Plaintiff had the benefit of an entire arbitration proceeding, see ECF No. 44, four prior motions to dismiss, ECF Nos. 25, 31, 54, 55, and oral argument before this Court, see ECF No. 91. In fact, the Court previously dismissed the Second Amended Complaint due to numerous [*77] pleading deficiencies, see ECF No. 92 at 61:20-24, and many of these deficiencies stayed the same after Plaintiff's third amendment. See ECF Nos. 54, 55. Despite being afforded significant opportunities to state its case, Plaintiff used these opportunities to expand the number of its claims while failing to substantiate with facts existing claims. The Court will not condone Plaintiff's scattershot pleading tactics. The Fifth Circuit has held that a court may, in its sound discretion, deny leave to amend on substantially similar facts. See Humana Health Plan, 336 F.3d at 387. Accordingly, in its discretion, the Court finds that Plaintiff "has had fair opportunity to make [its] case," Schiller, 342 F.3d at 567, and grants the Motions as to Counts II and VIII against SafranHE France with prejudice and Counts III, IV, V, VI, VII, IX, X, XI, XII, XIII, XIV, XVI, XVII, XVIII, XIX, XX, XXI, XXII, XXIII, XXIV, XXV, XXVI, XVII, and XXVIII against all Defendants in their entirety with prejudice. The Court additionally finds that amendment of Counts III, IV, V, VI, VII, VIII, IX, X, XI, XII, XX, XXI, XXII, XXIII, XXIV, XXV, XVI, XXVII, and XXVIII would be futile.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the reasons discussed above, the Court grants in part and denies in part the Motions. The [*78] Court grants the Motions as to Counts II and VIII against SafranHE France with prejudice and Counts III, IV, V, VI, VII, IX, X, XI, XII, XIII, XIV, XVI, XVII, XVIII, XIX, XX, XXI, XXII, XXIII, XXIV, XXV, XXVI, XVII, and XXVIII against all Defendants in their entirety with prejudice. The Court denies SafranHE USA's Motion as to Count XV.

HN1[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

To survive a motion to dismiss, the complaint must include enough factual detail to give defendants fair notice of the claims and the grounds upon which they rest, and the allegations must amount to a claim for relief that is plausible on its face. To state a plausible claim, plaintiffs must allege enough factual matter, taken as true, to raise a right to relief above the speculative level and nudge its claims across the line from conceivable to plausible. In determining whether the compliant meets this test, the court accepts all well-pleaded facts as true and draws all reasonable inferences in favor of plaintiff. The court does not, however, accept as true legal conclusions couched as factual allegations. Formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action supported by conclusory statements are insufficient.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Elements

HN2[] Attempts to Monopolize, Elements

To state a claim for attempted monopolization, a plaintiff must plead that (1) the defendant had specific intent to achieve monopoly power in a relevant market; (2) the defendant engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct directed to accomplishing this purpose; and (3) there is a dangerous probability that the attempt at monopolization will succeed.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Elements

HN3[] Actual Monopolization, Claims

Possessing or attempting to possess monopoly power does not by itself violate 15 U.S.C.S. § 2. Rather, the law is well-settled that defendant must have engaged in predatory or anticompetitive conduct to be subject to Section 2 liability. The offense of monopolization is the acquisition of monopoly by improper methods or, more commonly the abuse of monopoly. Section 2 forbids not the intentional pursuit of monopoly power but the employment of unjustifiable means to gain that power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection

Antitrust & Trade Law > Procedural Matters

HN4[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Consumer Protection

A private antitrust plaintiff cannot recover damages unless it proves the existence of antitrust injury. Antitrust lawsuits are to be brought to enforce rights of those persons for whose benefit the laws were enacted—that is, consumers. Antitrust is designed to protect consumers from producers, not to protect producers from each other or to ensure that one firm gets more of the business. When conduct excludes a competitor from the marketplace, it raises antitrust concerns only if it impairs the health of the competitive process itself. To challenge its exclusion from the market as an antitrust violation, therefore, a plaintiff must prove that the likely effect of the exclusion will be to raise prices above the competitive level, or otherwise injure competition. Antitrust law is meant to protect consumers from producers, not to protect producers from each other.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Rights Law > ... > Contractual Relations & Housing > Equal Rights Under the Law (sec. 1981) > Protected Rights

HN6[] Equal Rights Under the Law (sec. 1981), Proof of Discrimination

41 U.S.C.S. § 1981 protects the equal right of all persons within the jurisdiction of the United States to make and enforce contracts without respect to race. The statute defines the making and enforcing of contracts as the making, performance, modification, and termination of contracts, and the enjoyment of all benefits, privileges, terms, and conditions of the contractual relationship. 42 U.S.C.S. § 1981(b). It applies to public and private contracts, as well as to existing and "would-be" contracts. To state a claim under § 1981, a plaintiff must allege that (1) it is a member of a racial minority; (2) the defendant had an intent to discriminate on the basis of race; and (3) the discrimination concerned one or more of the activities enumerated in the statute, such as the making and enforcing of a contract. Moreover, a plaintiff cannot state a claim under § 1981 unless he has (or would have) rights under the existing (or proposed) contract that he wishes to make and enforce.

Civil Rights Law > ... > Contractual Relations & Housing > Equal Rights Under the Law (sec. 1981) > Protected Classes

HN7[] Equal Rights Under the Law (sec. 1981), Protected Classes

In some circumstances, a corporation has standing to assert a 42 U.S.C.S. § 1981 claim, such as when the corporation has assumed an imputed racial identity from its shareholders and can therefore be a direct target of discrimination.

Civil Rights Law > ... > Contractual Relations & Housing > Equal Rights Under the Law (sec. 1981) > Proof of Discrimination

HN8[] Equal Rights Under the Law (sec. 1981), Proof of Discrimination

Plaintiffs must plead a prima facie case of discrimination under 42 U.S.C.S. § 1981 before the burden shifts to defendants to articulate a legitimate, non-discriminatory reason for its allegedly discriminatory actions. To sufficiently plead its prima facie case, plaintiffs must allege, among other things, that the defendant treated plaintiff less favorably than a similarly situated business outside the protected class. Establishing a prima facie case for racial discrimination in making and enforcing contracts requires showing that the plaintiff (1) is a member of a protected class, (2) satisfactorily performed the contract, (3) suffered an adverse action, and (4) was treated differently than another similarly situated contractor outside the protected class.

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction

HN9[] Subject Matter Jurisdiction, Supplemental Jurisdiction

When all federal claims in a suit in federal court are dismissed before trial, the presumption is that the court will relinquish federal jurisdiction over any supplemental state-law claims.

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

The parties to this case are both in the business of providing temporary workers to other businesses. Between July 2015 and May 2017, Plaintiff Labor One, Inc. was a subcontractor for Defendant Staff Management Solutions, Inc. Under the parties' contract, Labor One provided temporary employees to Staff Management's clients, including Defendants Aramark Services, Inc. and Aramark Food and Support Services Group, Inc. (collectively, Aramark). A billing dispute [*2] arose, however, and Staff Management terminated the contract in May 2017. This lawsuit, between two Illinois entities, followed.

In a ruling last year, this court concluded that Plaintiff Labor One's claims do not arise under federal law, and that there is no other basis for federal jurisdiction. Labor One, Inc. v. Staff Management Solutions LLC, No. 17 C 7580, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 146657, 2018 WL 4110676 (N. D. Ill. Aug. 8, 2018). Labor One has filed an amended complaint, but the court stands by its conclusion that the parties' business dispute does not give rise to claims under federal antitrust or civil rights law. Accordingly, Defendants' motion to dismiss [62] is granted.

BACKGROUND

Labor One's amended complaint [52] alleges the following: Staff Management is a procurement manager for temporary labor services. (Am. Compl. ¶¶ 13, 22.) It is also "in the business of providing its own temporary workers to other entities while performing centralized management services" in connection with those workers. (Id. ¶ 13.) At some point, Aramark "retained Staff Management as the procurement manager" for temporary employees at McCormick Place, a venue in Chicago, Illinois. (Id. ¶ 22.)

Labor One, too, is in the business of providing temporary workers. (Id. ¶ 13.) In what it calls a "Community First Program," [*3] Labor One hires temporary employees from "specifically targeted low-income neighborhoods" of Chicago "to create local jobs." (Id. ¶¶ 15, 20.) In July 2015, Aramark "contacted Labor One about providing temporary labor services at McCormick Place" under the Community First Program. (Id. ¶ 14.) At the time, Aramark "was aware that Staff Management had its own preferred vendor list for temporary workers" and that Staff Management "did not want Labor One as the provider of temporary labor services at McCormick Place." (Id.) Nonetheless, on July 22, 2015, Labor One and Staff Management entered into a contract under which Labor One would supply temporary employees to Aramark—via Staff Management—for work at McCormick Place. (Id. ¶ 22.) Because Labor One planned to provide temporary workers from its Community First Program, "most, if not all, of the temporary workers to be supplied under the" contract were African American. (Id. ¶ 20.) Indeed, in its original complaint, Labor One alleged that it "only hired African-American workers." (Compl. [1] ¶ 94). Perhaps in response to the court's concern about that allegation (see Memorandum Order [46] at 6-7), Labor One now alleges it "has laborers [*4] from various ethnic and racial backgrounds." (Am. Compl. [52] ¶ 21.)[1]

Under the contract between Labor One and Staff Management, Staff Management would receive "a fee of 3% for providing centralized management services" to Aramark in connection with temporary employees that Staff Management procured for McCormick Place. (Id. ¶ 22.) The contract also required Staff Management to use a "Vendor Managed System (VMS) . . . for the acquisition, tracking, reporting and billing of Services for" Aramark. (Id. ¶ 24.) In addition, it required Labor One to "enter its billing hours for temporary labor services into the VMS system." (Id. ¶ 25.) Finally, it required Staff Management to pay Labor One after Aramark approved Labor One's billing entries. (Id. ¶ 26.) Staff Management, in turn, would "receive a commission from all invoices created by Labor One in the VMS system." (Id.)[2]

Between 2015 and 2017, Labor One "encountered technical issues with the VMS system . . . in entering its billing hours." (Id. ¶ 29.) Labor One made repeated efforts to seek assistance from Staff Management with these issues, but its efforts were "to no avail." (Id. ¶ 31.) On some occasions, Aramark participated in the negotiations [*5] between Staff Management and Labor One. (See, e.g., id. ¶¶ 36-46.) Staff Management, for its part, failed to timely pay Labor One for the services it provided. (See id. ¶¶ 28, 34.)

After this billing dispute arose, Staff Management "began to raise concerns about the honesty and quality of Labor One's temporary workers." (Id. ¶ 41.) At one point, Staff Management "accused Labor One's temporary workers of 'stealing time and hours' when assigned to a job with Aramark" and stated that the workers' conduct in this regard "was the reason for the delay in payment of the invoices." (Id. ¶ 42.) In addition, "[a]s a result of Labor One's efforts to get paid for its services, Staff Management began to request [repeated] background checks and drug tests for all of its temporary laborers working at McCormick place." (Id. ¶ 44; see also id. ¶ 46 (alleging that Staff Management started requesting "full-scale drug testing . . . even though the [contract with Labor One] provided for random testing").) And in a meeting around November 2016, Staff Management asked Labor One to "stop providing 'those people'"—meaning workers from the Community First Program—to Aramark at McCormick Place. (Id. ¶ 45.) Staff [*6] Management tried to force Labor One to instead "hire temporary workers from Staff Management's parent company or transition [Labor One's] temporary workers to Staff Management's preferred vendor list." (Id. ¶ 98; see also id. ¶ 45.) Around the same time, "Aramark employees" disclosed to Labor One supervisors that Staff Management was withholding payment from Labor One "in an attempt to force [it] to terminate the Contract and get rid of Labor One's workers from the Community First Program." (Id. ¶ 46.) In a letter dated May 26, 2017, "Staff Management unilaterally terminated" the contract with Labor One and "claim[ed] that the termination was due to Labor One's failure to enter time correctly in the VMS system." (Id. ¶ 48.)

According to Labor One, Staff Management still owes it $48,063.75. (Id. ¶ 49.) Labor One asserts claims against Staff Management for breach of contract (Count I); intentional interference with prospective economic relations (Count II); negligent interference with economic relations (Count III); violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2 (Count V); violation of Illinois' unfair competition law (Count VI); commercial disparagement under Illinois common law (Count VII); and [*7] violation of the Civil Rights Act, 42 U.S.C. § 1981 (Count VIII). Labor One asserts a claim against Aramark for unjust enrichment (Count IV).

DISCUSSION

As in Labor One's original complaint, only two of the counts in the amended complaint invoke federal law: Count V, which asserts a claim arising under the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, and Count VIII, which asserts a claim arising under the Civil Rights Act, 42 U.S.C. § 1981. HN1[] To survive Staff Management's motion to dismiss these counts, Labor One's amended complaint must include enough factual detail to give Staff Management fair notice of the claims and the grounds upon which they rest, and the allegations must amount to a claim for relief that is plausible on its face. Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678-79, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). To state a plausible claim, Labor One must allege enough factual matter, taken as true, to "raise a right to relief above the speculative level" and "nudge[] [its] claims across the line from conceivable to plausible." Bell Atl. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555-57, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). In determining whether Labor One meets this test, the court accepts all well-pleaded facts as true and draws all reasonable inferences in favor of Labor One. Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 679. The court does not, however, accept as true legal conclusions couched as factual allegations. Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 679. As the court will explain, Labor One's allegations that Staff Management violated the Sherman Act and the Civil Rights Act do not meet these pleading standards.

A. Sherman Act

Labor One alleges that Staff Management violated Section 2 of the Sherman Act by attempting to monopolize the business of "suppl[ying] . . . temporary workers to Aramark at McCormick Place." (Am. Compl. ¶¶ 94-97.)[3] Under Section 2, "[e]very person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize" is subject to antitrust liability. 15 U.S.C. § 2; see also 15 U.S.C. § 15 (providing individual right of action). HN2[] To state a claim for attempted monopolization, a plaintiff must plead that (1) the defendant had "specific intent to achieve monopoly power in a relevant market"; (2) the defendant engaged in "predatory or anticompetitive conduct [*9] directed to accomplishing this purpose"; and (3) there is "a dangerous probability that the attempt at monopolization will succeed." Mercatus Grp., LLC v. Lake Forest Hosp., 641 F.3d 834, 854 (7th Cir. 2011).

HN3[] Possessing or attempting to possess monopoly power does not by itself violate Section 2. See Pac. Bell Tel. Co. v. Linkline Commc'ns, Inc., 555 U.S. 438, 447, 129 S. Ct. 1109, 172 L. Beckley-Cardy, Inc., 922 F.2d 1317, 1320 (7th Cir. 1991) ("The offense of monopolization is the acquisition of monopoly by improper methods or, more commonly . . . the abuse of monopoly."); State of Ill. ex rel. Burris v. Panhandle E. Pipe Line Co., 935 F.2d 1469, 1481 (7th Cir. 1991) ("Section 2 forbids not the intentional pursuit of monopoly power but the employment of unjustifiable means to gain that power."). In ruling on defendants' first motion to dismiss, the court observed that Labor One's Section 2 claim appeared to be based only on Staff Management's termination of the contract with Labor One. See Memorandum Opinion at 5-6.. Because the antitrust laws generally do not prohibit a company from refusing to deal with a rival, the court reasoned, "Labor One's allegation that Staff Management has terminated the parties' agreement does not on its face constitute an attempt to monopolize." Id. at 5 (citing, inter alia, Verizon Commc'ns, Inc. v. Law Offices of Curtis V. Trinko, LLP, 540 U.S. 398, 409-10, 124 S. Ct. 872, 157 L. Ed. 2d 823 (2004)).

In its effort to allege anticompetitive [*10] conduct, the amended complaint fares no better. Specifically, Labor One asserts that Staff Management engaged in anticompetitive conduct by (1) refusing to pay Labor One (and thereby attempting to force Labor One into insolvency); (2) making false statements to Aramark about the quality of Labor One's temporary employees, including by accusing them of inaccurately reporting hours worked; (3) repeatedly requesting background checks and drug tests for Labor One's temporary employees; and (4) "attempt[ing] to [3] Labor One equivocates in defining the relevant market for purposes of this claim. In some places, it defines the market as "staffing temporary labor services at McCormick Place." (Am. Compl. ¶ 96; see also, e.g., id. ¶¶ 97-98, 101-02, 104, 106.) In other places, it defines the relevant market as "the Chicago Market for staffing services." (Id. ¶ 94; see also Labor One Opp. to Defs.' Mot. ("Labor One Opp.") [68], 4 (alleging that Staff Management excluded Labor One "from the relevant market of providing temporary labor services at McCormick Place, as well as at any location Aramark services in the Chicago market").) In still others, Labor One defines the relevant market as providing temporary labor services at McCormick Place and Navy Pier, another venue in Chicago. (See Labor One Opp. 6.) Because the amended complaint does not contain any factual allegations concerning the "Chicago market" or Navy Pier, the court will assume that Labor One is relying on the first definition listed here. In any event, this issue is immaterial; as the court explains below, it need not address whether Labor One has sufficiently alleged a relevant market because it dismisses the antitrust claim on other grounds.

require Labor One to either hire temporary workers from Staff Management's parent company or transition [its] temporary workers to Staff Management's preferred vendor list." (Am. Compl. ¶¶ 44, 96-98; Labor One Opp. 3, 8.)[4]

Labor One admits that it was able to provide Aramark with temporary employees for McCormick Place—in other words, to participate in what it defines as the relevant market—only through its contract with Staff Management. (See, e.g., Am. Compl. ¶¶ 22, 96; Labor One Opp. 7.) Accordingly, Labor One's allegations that Staff Management engaged in anticompetitive conduct are, in essence, allegations that Staff Management terminated the contract or [*11] sabotaged Labor One's ability to perform under it. Indeed, Labor One alleges that Staff Management terminated the contract only after trying to manipulate Labor One into doing the same. (See Am. Compl. ¶ 36 (alleging that according to Aramark, "Staff Management was dragging its feet with payments in an attempt to force Labor One to terminate the Agreement").) As noted, the antitrust laws generally do not require Staff Management to deal with Labor One, a competitor. Verizon Commc'ns, 540 U.S. at 409-10; Memorandum Opinion at 5. Nor do they require Staff Management to honor a subcontract with Labor One for services under its contract with Aramark. See Colsa Corp. v. Martin Marietta Servs., Inc., 133 F.3d 853, 856 (11th Cir. 1998) (where defendant terminated subcontract with plaintiff for services under a separate contract between defendant and a third party, defendant's conduct could not "be characterized as anticompetitive" and plaintiff's rights against defendant, if any, "sound[ed] in contract"). Accordingly, Labor One's allegations that Staff Management terminated or otherwise sabotaged the parties' contract—whether by delaying payments, souring Aramark on Labor One's temporary employees, or imposing disruptive screening requirements—do not plead anticompetitive conduct.

Labor One cites Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 105 S. Ct. 2847, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467 (1985), for [*12] the proposition that in some circumstances, a court can impose antitrust liability for refusal to deal with a competitor. (Labor One Opp. 8-9.) Labor One argues that the court should do so here because like the defendant in Aspen Skiing, Staff Management displayed "a willingness to forsake short-term profits to achieve an anticompetitive end." (Labor One Opp. 9.) The court is not persuaded. In Aspen Skiing, defendant discontinued an agreement with its competitor to offer a ski pass that customers could use interchangeably at the parties' resorts. See Aspen Skiing, 472 U.S. at 589-91. The evidence showed, among other things, that if defendant continued to offer the interchangeable pass, it would still be compensated at retail price. See id. at 593 n.14, 610. The evidence also showed that offering the interchangeable pass "provided [defendant] with immediate benefits" and benefitted consumers. Id. at 610. This evidence, the court determined, supported an inference that in ceasing to offer the pass, defendant "was not motivated by efficiency concerns" and instead "was willing to sacrifice short-run benefits and consumer goodwill in exchange for a perceived long-run impact on its smaller rival." Id. at 610-11.

The circumstances in the present case are not comparable. [*13] First, in Aspen Skiing, defendant's rival was an independent market participant. See, e.g., 472 U.S. at 590-91. Here Labor One concedes that it was participating in the relevant market only through its contract with Staff Management. Accordingly, Staff Management could harm Labor One's position in the market only by terminating the parties' contract or rendering Labor One unable to perform its contractual obligations. Labor One's remedy, if any, for such harm arises under contract law. Second, although Staff Management was entitled to three percent of Labor One's gross sales per invoice under the parties' contract (see Labor One Opp. 9; Am. Compl. ¶ 22), Labor One alleges that Staff Management would "receive 100% of the revenues for any temporary workers it provided to Aramark" directly rather than through Labor One. (Am. Compl. ¶ 13.) It is not clear, therefore, that Staff Management's alleged anticompetitive actions left it worse off in the short-term than it would have been by making good on the parties' contract. Third, other than alleging in a conclusory fashion that Staff Management's actions "result[ed] in increased labor costs," Labor One does not allege that Staff Management was "willing to [*14] sacrifice . . . consumer goodwill." (Am. Compl. ¶ 106; Aspen Skiing, 472 U.S. at 611.) For these reasons, Labor One has not convinced the court that this is one of the rare cases in which refusal to deal with a competitor can give rise to antitrust liability.

[4] Because Labor One does not allege that its business involves anything other than providing temporary employees, it is unclear what incentive Labor One would have to use Staff Management's temporary employees. Likewise, because Labor One alleges that Staff Management tried to prevent it from supplying temporary employees from the Community First Program (see, e.g., id. ¶¶ 36, 45-46), the court does not understand why Staff Management would permit or even desire that Labor One "transition" those employees to its "preferred vendor list." (Id. ¶ 98.) Accordingly, the court assumes that this last allegation is coextensive with the allegation that Staff Management tried to exclude Labor One from the relevant market by replacing Labor One's temporary employees with its own or those from preferred vendors. (See id. ¶ 36.)

Labor One's Section 2 claim fails for an additional reason as well: Labor One has not "plausibly [pleaded] the existence of an antitrust injury," which it must do in order to state a Section 2 claim. Tamburo, 601 F.3d at 699; see also, e.g., Atl. Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 334, 110 S. Ct. 1884, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333 (1990) (stating that HN4[] a private antitrust plaintiff cannot recover damages unless it "prove[s] the existence of antitrust injury" (internal quotation marks omitted)). Antitrust lawsuits are to be brought to enforce rights of "those persons for whose benefit the laws were enacted"—that is, consumers. Robert F. Booth Trust v. Crowley, 687 F.3d 314, 317 (7th Cir. 2012); Ehredt Underground, Inc. v. Commonwealth Edison Co., 90 F.3d 238, 240 (7th Cir. 1996) ("[W]e stress that antitrust is designed to protect consumers from producers, not to protect producers from each other or to ensure that one firm gets more of the business.") When conduct excludes a competitor from the marketplace, it raises antitrust concerns "only if it impairs the health of the competitive process itself." Roland Mach. Co. v. Dresser Indus., Inc., 749 F.2d 380, 394 (7th Cir. 1984). To challenge its exclusion from the market as an antitrust violation, therefore, a plaintiff must prove that the likely "effect of the exclusion [*15] will be to raise prices above . . . the competitive level, or otherwise injure competition." Id.

The court dismissed Labor One's original complaint in part because "Labor One ma[de] no such allegation." Memorandum Opinion [42] at 6. In its amended complaint, Labor One alleges that Staff Management's anticompetitive conduct "result[ed] in increased labor costs." (Am. Compl. ¶ 106.) As noted above, this conclusory statement is unsupported; there are no factual allegations concerning the actual cost of temporary laborers at McCormick Place at any given time. Moreover, both the amended complaint and Labor One's briefing suggest that companies other than Labor One and Staff Management supply temporary employees in the relevant market. (See id. ¶ 98 (alleging that Staff Management has a "preferred vendor list"); Labor One Opp. 9 (suggesting that there are "similarly situated companies" in the market "that are not part of [Staff Management's] preferred vendor list").)[5] Accepting this allegation as true, it undermines Labor One's allegation that labor costs increased merely because Staff Management excluded it from the market. Labor One's allegation that Staff Management's conduct "increased [*16] labor costs" is a "formulaic recitation" of an antitrust injury and therefore does not sufficiently plead that element of Labor One's Section 2 claim. Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678 (internal quotation marks omitted).

Labor One's allegations that Staff Management's actions "impair[ed] the competitive process," "injured competition," and "caused an antitrust injury" are also legal conclusions couched as facts, and the court declines to credit them. (Am. Compl. ¶¶ 97, 102-03; see Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555.) And Labor One's remaining allegations fail to plead an antitrust injury because they concern injuries only to Labor One itself as a competitor. (See Am. Compl. ¶¶ 100, 105 (alleging that Staff Management's conduct "undermined [its] ability to provide temporary labor services to Aramark as contemplated" and interfered with "current and future contractual relationships" that would have enabled Labor One to "provid[e] temporary workers in the service industry"); Ehredt, 90 F.3d at 240 (antitrust law is meant "to protect consumers from producers, not to protect producers from each other").)

Labor One argues that it has sufficiently pleaded antitrust injury because its exclusion from the market is "inseparable" from harm to the competitive process. (Labor One Opp. 3-4.) [*17] In making this argument, Labor One relies on Gulf States Reorganization Group, Inc. v. Nucor Corp., 466 F.3d 961, 967 (11th Cir. 2006). Labor One's reliance on Nucor is misplaced. In that case the court credited at the summary judgment stage plaintiff's evidence that it was capable of entering the market and that if it had been allowed to do so, it would have become "a viable competitor" of the dominant market participant. Id. at 967. In addition, the court credited evidence that "[plaintiff's] becoming a viable competitor" would likely have generated pressure to reduce prices. Id. at 968. The court concluded that "the injury to [plaintiff]—its exclusion from the relevant market—is inseparable from the alleged harm to competition" because the exclusion "denies consumers the benefit of the pressure to lower prices . . . ." Id.

[5] Labor One argues that Staff Management excluded these "similarly situated" companies (see Labor One Opp. 9), but no such allegation appears in the amended complaint.

at 967-69. Here, as already noted, Labor One has not provided factual allegations to support the conclusion that its presence in the market exerted any pressure on Staff Management to lower the cost of temporary employees. Labor One's exclusion from the market, therefore, is not "inseparable" from harm to the competitive process. Nucor, 466 F.3d at 967.

Finally, Labor One maintains that its allegations concerning antitrust injury are similar to those in OverEnd Technologies, LLC v. Invista S.A.R.L., 431 F. Supp. 2d 925 (E.D. Wis. 2006). Labor One, however, ignores major differences between [*18] the allegations in OverEnd and those in this case. In OverEnd, plaintiff alleged that "defendants control[led] roughly three quarters of the market . . . and [were] using a fraudulently-obtained patent to force competitors out of business and to inhibit others from entering the field." Id. at 930. The court noted that "[s]uch behavior could lead to reduced competition, decreased innovation, and higher prices to consumers," and determined that plaintiff had plausibly alleged an antitrust injury. Id. By contrast, Labor One alleges that Staff Management drove only it—not multiple competitors—out of the market. (Again, Labor One's suggestion in its opposition that other staffing companies are also victims finds no support in the amended complaint.) Moreover, Labor One does not allege that Staff Management tried to block other competitors from entering the market. Because the record lacks allegations that were crucial to the court's decision in OverEnd, that case does not assist Labor One. The court also notes that OverEnd was decided before Twombly and Iqbal. Cf. OverEnd, 431 F. Supp. 2d at 928 (stating that HN5[] "[d]ismissal of an action . . . is warranted if the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claims that would [*19] entitle him to relief" (citing, inter alia, Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1957)).)

For the foregoing reasons, the court dismisses Labor One's Sherman Act claim.[6]

B. Section 1981

Labor One's alternative claim to federal jurisdiction over this contract dispute rests on the Civil Rights Act. Thus, Labor One claims that Staff Management violated 42 U.S.C. § 1981 by willfully "impeding [Labor One's] right to make and to enforce contracts based on racial discrimination . . . ." (Am Compl. ¶ 122.) In support of this claim, Labor One alleges that after it "informed Staff Management[] . . . that its temporary workers were almost entirely African-American, Staff Management asked that Labor One not continue to use those workers, referring to them as 'those people' . . . ." (Id. ¶ 121.) Relatedly, Labor One alleges that Staff Management asked it to replace the workers with workers "from Staff Management's hiring system." (Id.) Labor One further alleges that "Staff Management's acts or omissions were motivated, at least in part, by the fact that Labor One has a workforce of minority-based temporary workers of African-American descent under the Community First Program." (Id. ¶ 123.)

HN6[] Section 1981 "protects the equal right of '[a]ll persons within the jurisdiction of the United [*20] States' to 'make and enforce contracts' without respect to race." Domino's Pizza, Inc. v. McDonald, 546 U.S. 470, 474-75, 126 S. Ct. 1246, 163 L. Ed. 2d 1069 (2006) (quoting 42 U.S.C. § 1981(a)). The statute defines the making and enforcing of contracts as "the making, performance, modification, and termination of contracts, and the enjoyment of all benefits, privileges, terms, and conditions of the contractual relationship." 42 U.S.C. § 1981(b). It applies to public and private contracts, see, e.g., Saint Francis Coll. v. Al-Khazraji, 481 U.S. 604, 609, 107 S. Ct. 2022, 95 L. Ed. 2d 582 (1987), as well as to existing and "would-be" contracts. Domino's Pizza, 546 U.S. at 476. To state a claim under § 1981, a plaintiff must allege that (1) it is a member of a racial minority; (2) the defendant had an intent to discriminate on the basis of race; and (3) the discrimination concerned one or more of the activities enumerated in the statute, such as the making and enforcing of a contract. Black Agents & Brokers Agency, Inc. v. Near N. Ins. Brokerage, Inc., 409 F.3d 833, 837 (7th Cir. 2005). Moreover, "a plaintiff cannot state a claim under § 1981 unless

[6] Because the court is dismissing this claim for failure to sufficiently plead anticompetitive conduct and an antitrust injury, the court need not address Staff Management's arguments that Labor One has failed to allege (1) a relevant market; (2) that Staff Management's actions had a substantial effect on interstate commerce; and (3) that Staff Management had monopoly power. (See Defs.' Mot. to Dismiss [62], 5-8.)

he has (or would have) rights under the existing (or proposed) contract that he wishes 'to make and enforce.'" Domino's Pizza, 546 U.S. at 479-80.

HN7[] In some circumstances, a corporation has standing to assert a § 1981 claim, such as when the corporation has "assume[d] an 'imputed racial identity' from its shareholders" and can therefore be a direct target of discrimination. Amber Pyramid, Inc. v. Buffington Harbor Riverboats, LLC, 129 F. App'x 292, 294-95 (7th Cir. 2005) (unpublished) (quoting Thinket Ink Info. Res., Inc. v. Sun Microsystems, Inc., 368 F.3d 1053, 1059 (9th Cir. 2004)); see also, e.g., Jones v. Culver Franchising Sys., Inc., 12 F. Supp. 3d 1079, 1084-85 (N.D. Ill. 2013) (determining that corporations had [*21] standing to pursue a claim under § 1981); *A.H. Empl. Co. v. Fifth Third Bank, No. 11 C 4586, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 27666, 2012 WL 686704, at 5 (N.D. Ill. Mar. 1, 2012) (similar). Neither party has addressed whether Labor One has standing to assert its § 1981 claim, and Labor One has not pleaded facts that would allow the court to make this determination. The court will assume for the sake of argument that Labor One has standing because, even if the claim is properly before the court, it must be dismissed. As in the original complaint, the allegations in the amended complaint do not "raise [Labor One's] right to relief above the speculative level." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555. First, Labor One still fails to explain how any of Staff Management's actions impeded Labor One's own right to enter into employment agreements with its workers. Second, as the court addresses in more detail below, Labor One's allegations offer no plausible basis for a conclusion that Staff Management acted with an intent to discriminate based on race.

Labor One argues that Staff Management acted with discriminatory intent because "it stated in its termination letter that it was going to transition Labor One workers into Staff Management's workforce, which never occurred because it did not want African American workers under the Community First Program." (Labor One Opp. 12 [*22] (citing Am. Compl. ¶¶ 36, 38, 99).) But Labor One's argument that Staff Management "did not want African American workers" is unsupported by factual allegations. Indeed, in paragraphs 36 and 38 of the amended complaint, Labor One merely alleges that Staff Management wanted to replace Labor One's temporary employees with its own. In paragraph 99, Labor One alleges that Staff Management's only stated reason for terminating the contract was Labor One's "failure to enter time correctly in the VMS system." (Am. Compl. ¶ 99.) On its face, that reason is unrelated to race. Even viewed in the light most favorable to Labor One, the allegations in paragraphs 36, 38, and 99 of the amended complaint permit only a conclusion that Staff Management terminated the contract or otherwise sought to replace Labor One's temporary employees as a result of the parties' billing dispute.

Other arguments in Labor One's opposition suffer from the same flaws. Labor One, for example, argues that Staff Management acted with discriminatory intent when it questioned "the honesty and integrity of Labor One's temporary workers," including by accusing them of "stealing time and hours." (Labor One Opp. 13.) But Labor [*23] One admits that Staff Management began questioning the workers' honesty and integrity only "after Labor One complained to Aramark of not being paid for six months." (Id.; see also Am. Compl. ¶¶ 32, 39-42 (similar).) In addition, Labor One now suggests that Staff Management required its temporary employees to undergo extra background checks and drug tests because it knew that most of the workers were African-American. (Labor One Opp. 13.) In the amended complaint, however, Labor One alleges that Staff Management began requesting the extra background checks and drug tests "[a]s a result of Labor One's efforts to get paid for its services." (Am. Compl. ¶¶ 44.) Finally, Labor One maintains that because Staff Management knew that most of its temporary employees were African-American, its request for Labor One to stop using "those people" exhibited discriminatory motive. (Labor One Opp. 13.) Without more, however, the allegation that Staff Management used that phrase does not "nudge[] [Labor One's] claims across the line from conceivable to plausible." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570. In short, Labor One has not offered any basis for the conclusion that Staff Management's conduct, including its decision to terminate the [*24] contract, was racially motivated; to the contrary, Labor One's allegations instead support the inference that Staff Management's goal was to avoid paying Labor One amounts to which Labor One is entitled.

Labor One separately argues that it has satisfied the pleading standard for its § 1981 claim under the burden-shifting framework set forth in McDonnell Douglas Corp. v. Green, 411 U.S. 792, 802-05, 93 S. Ct. 1817, 36 L. Ed. 2d 668 (1973). HN8[] Under the McDonnell Douglas framework, Labor One must plead a prima facie case of discrimination before the burden shifts to Staff Management to articulate a legitimate, non-discriminatory reason for its allegedly discriminatory actions. See id. at 802. To sufficiently plead its prima facie case, Labor One must allege, among other things, that Staff Management treated Labor One less favorably than a similarly situated business outside the protected class. See Amber Pyramid, 129 F. App'x at 295 (establishing a prima facie case for racial discrimination in making and enforcing contracts requires showing that the plaintiff "(1) is a member of a protected class, (2) satisfactorily performed the contract, (3) suffered an adverse action, and (4) was treated differently than another similarly situated contractor outside the protected class") According to Labor One, it has alleged that "it was treated [*25] differently." (Labor One Opp. 13 (citing Am. Compl. ¶¶ 14, 30-33, 43, 45, 47).) But the amended complaint (including the paragraphs that Labor One cites) contains no such allegations. Because Labor One has not pleaded this element, it has not satisfied its burden under the McDonnell Douglas framework.

For the foregoing reasons, the court dismisses Labor One's § 1981 claim. Having also dismissed Labor One's claim under the Sherman Act, there is no other basis for federal jurisdiction. Moreover, Labor One has not attempted to establish that the court has diversity jurisdiction. The court, therefore, dismisses the amended complaint in its entirety without prejudice. See RWJ Mgmt. Co. v. BP Prods. N. Am., Inc., 672 F.3d 476, 479 (7th Cir. 2012) HN9[] ("[W]hen all federal claims in a suit in federal court are dismissed before trial, the presumption is that the court will relinquish federal jurisdiction over any supplemental state-law claims." (quoting Al's Serv. Ctr. v. BP Prods. N. Am., Inc., 599 F.3d 720, 727 (7th Cir. 2010))).

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the court grants Defendants' motion to dismiss Labor One's amended complaint [62]. The Clerk is directed to terminate the case in this court, without prejudice to litigation of Labor One's breach of contract claim in any court having jurisdiction over that claim.

Opinion

MEMORANDUM DECISION AND ORDER GRANTING DEFENDANT'S MOTION TO DISMISS WITH LEAVE TO AMEND.

I. PRELIMINARY STATEMENT TO PARTIES AND COUNSEL

Judges in the Eastern District of California carry the heaviest caseloads in the nation, and this Court is unable to devote inordinate time and resources to individual cases and matters. Given the shortage of district judges and staff, this Court addresses only the arguments, evidence, and matters necessary to reach the decision in this order. The parties and counsel are encouraged to contact the offices of United States Senators Feinstein and Harris to address this Court's inability to accommodate the parties and this action. The parties are required to reconsider consent to conduct all further proceedings before a Magistrate Judge, whose schedules are far more realistic [*2] and accommodating to parties than that of U.S. Chief District Judge Lawrence J. O'Neill, who must prioritize criminal and older civil cases.

Civil trials set before Chief Judge O'Neill trail until he becomes available and are subject to suspension mid-trial to accommodate criminal matters. Civil trials are no longer reset to a later date if Chief Judge O'Neill is unavailable on the original date set for trial. Moreover, this Court's Fresno Division randomly and without advance notice reassigns civil actions to U.S. District Judges throughout the Nation to serve as visiting judges. In the absence of Magistrate Judge consent, this action is subject to reassignment to a U.S. District Judge from inside or outside the Eastern District of California.

II. INTRODUCTION

Plaintiff Robert Lawrence ("Plaintiff" or "Lawrence") brings the present action against Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. ("Wells Fargo" or "Defendant") and First American Title Insurance Company ("First American")[1] for the alleged wrongful foreclosure of Plaintiff's home. Plaintiff brings claims of wrongful foreclosure, fraudulent misrepresentation, negligent misrepresentation, promissory estoppel, and for violation of California's Unfair [*3] Competition Law (UCL), California Business & Professions Code § 17200 et seq.

Under review is Wells Fargo's motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6). ECF No. 4. For the reasons set forth below, the Court grants Defendant's motion to dismiss with leave to amend.

III. BACKGROUND [2]

Plaintiff Robert Lawrence was the owner of the residential real property located at 935 East Laurel Avenue, Porterville, California 93257 (the "Property"). ECF No. 1-1 ¶ 1. Defendant Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. is a national association conducting business in Tulare County California. ECF No. 1-1 ¶ 2. First American is a Nebraska corporation conducting business in Tulare County California.

On or around August 15, 2003, Lawrence entered into a loan agreement ("Loan") with Wells Fargo for $190,000 to finance the purchase of the Property. ECF No. 1-1 ¶ 12. To secure the note and Property, Lawrence executed a deed of trust. Id. Wells Fargo is the beneficiary under the deed of trust, and Fidelity National Title Insurance Company was named as the trustee under the deed of trust. Id.

In 2013, Lawrence began to experience a financial hardship from an illness that caused medical expenses and time away from work. Id. ¶ 13. Lawrence fell behind on his payments on the Loan. [*4] Id. ¶ 13. Lawrence claims he sought to reinstate the Loan and requested a payoff quote from Wells Fargo. Id. ¶ 14. In or around May 2016, Lawrence made a payment of $15,244.75 according to a reinstatement quote from Wells Fargo to reinstate the Loan. Id. Lawrence contends he "immediately followed up with Wells Fargo to ensure that his payment was applied to the Loan but never received confirmation." Id. ¶ 14.

Lawrence continued to make monthly payments on the Loan. ECF No. 1-1 ¶ 15. Shortly thereafter, Lawrence discovered that the reinstatement funds had been applied to a separate account rather than to the Loan. Id. ¶ 16.

[2] Unless otherwise noted, the facts are taken from the Complaint, ECF No. 1-1. For purposes of the motion to dismiss all alleged material facts are taken as true and viewed in the light most favorable to Plaintiff. Coalition For ICANN Transparency, Inc. v. VeriSign, Inc., 611 F.3d 495, 501 (2010).

On September 26, 2017, First American, on behalf of Wells Fargo issued a notice of default on the Property that was recorded on October 2, 2017.[3] ECF No. 1-1, Ex. B at 29, 32. The notice of default declared that Lawrence was in default for the installment due May 1, 2017 and all subsequent installments. Id., Ex. B at 31. The total amount in default as of September 26, 2017 was $6,953.65. Id., Ex. B at 29.

In January 2018, Lawrence applied for a loan modification with Wells Fargo and Wells Fargo denied the request. Id. ¶ 18.

On May 15, 2018, the Property sold at foreclosure [*5] sale to Wells Fargo as the highest bidder for $144,000. ECF No. 1-1, Ex. C at 45-46.

On January 22, 2019, Lawrence filed the present lawsuit against Wells Fargo, First American, and 1 to 100 unknown defendants, the "DOES" defendants. ECF 1-1, at 1.

IV. LEGAL STANDARD

A. Motion to Dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6)

A motion to dismiss under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) challenges the legal sufficiency of the opposing party's pleadings. Dismissal of an action under Rule 12(b)(6) is proper where there is either a "lack of a cognizable legal theory or the absence of sufficient facts alleged under a cognizable legal theory." Balistreri v. Pacifica Police Dep't, 901 F.2d 696, 699 (9th Cir. 1990). When considering a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim under Rule 12(b)(6), all allegations of material fact must be accepted as true and construed in the light most favorable to the pleading party. Cahill v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 80 F.3d 336, 337-38 (9th Cir. 1996). The inquiry is generally limited to the allegations made in the complaint. Lazy Y Ranch LTD v. Behrens, 546 F.3d 580, 588 (9th Cir. 2008).

Under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8(a), a complaint must contain "a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief," in order to "give the defendant fair notice of what the . . . claim is and the grounds upon which it rests." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). A plaintiff is required to allege "enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Id. "A claim has facial [*6] plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009). "The plausibility standard is not akin to a 'probability requirement,' but it asks for more than a sheer possibility that a defendant has acted unlawfully." Id. (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556).

While Rule 8(a) does not require detailed factual allegations, "it demands more than an unadorned, the defendant-unlawfully-harmed-me accusation." Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678. A pleading is insufficient if it offers mere "labels and conclusions" or "a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555; see also Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678 ("Threadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements, do not suffice."). Moreover, it is inappropriate to assume that the plaintiff "can prove facts that it has not alleged or that the defendants have violated the . . . laws in ways that have not been alleged[.]" Associated Gen. Contractors of Cal., Inc. v. Cal. State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 526, 103 S. Ct. 897, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723 (1983). In practice, "a complaint . . . must contain either direct or inferential allegations respecting all the material elements necessary to sustain recovery under some viable legal theory." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 562. In other words, the complaint must describe the alleged misconduct in [*7] enough detail to lay the foundation for an identified legal claim.

[3] Lawrence contends that he never received notice of the change in trustee and avers that the notice of default is therefore void.

V. ANALYSIS

1. Fraudulent Misrepresentation and Negligent Misrepresentation

In Lawrence's second cause of action, he contends that "Defendants . . . knowingly and willfully made false representations to Plaintiff, as described above." ECF No. 1-1 ¶ 32. Lawrence purports that Wells Fargo made a false statement when it told him he could reinstate the loan. Id. ¶ 26. Under Lawrence's negligent misrepresentation claim (third cause of action), he contends that Defendants made a false representation that they knew or should have known was false. Id. ¶ 39. For the elements of fraud, the Court looks to state law. Kearns v. Ford Motor Co., 567 F.3d 1120, 1126 (9th Cir. 2009). In California, the elements of fraud are (1) a misrepresentation; (2) made with knowledge of its falsity (scienter); (3) with the intent to defraud and induce reliance; (4) which did induce reasonable reliance; and (5) resulting damages. Id. The elements for the cause of action for negligent misrepresentation are the same as those of a claim of fraud, except that the defendant need not actually know the representation was false. Neilson v. Union Bank of California, N.A., 290 F. Supp. 2d 1101, 1141 (C.D. Cal. 2003). For negligent misrepresentation, it is sufficient to allege that the defendant lacked [*8] reasonable grounds to believe that the representation was true. Id.

Because these claims sound in fraud, Lawrence must meet the heightened pleading standard of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b). Vess v. Ciba-Geigy Corp., 317 F.3d 1097, 1103-04 (9th Cir. 2003). Rule 9(b) requires a party alleging fraud to "state with particularity the circumstances constituting [the] fraud[.]" In the Ninth Circuit, claims for fraud and negligent misrepresentation must meet Rule 9(b)'s particularity requirements. Khan v. CitiMortgage, Inc., 975 F. Supp. 2d 1127, 1139 (E.D. Cal. 2013); Neilson, 290 F. Supp. 2d at 1141. This heightened pleading standard requires the party to do more than simply identify a transaction and allege in a conclusory manner that the transaction was fraudulent. See In re GlenFed, Inc. Sec. Litig., 42 F.3d 1541, 1548 (9th Cir. 1994) (en banc), superseded by statute on other grounds. Rather, the party must set forth in detail "the who, what, when, where, and how" of the misconduct charged. Vess, 317 F.3d at 1106 (citation omitted). In a fraud action against a corporation, a plaintiff must allege the names of the persons who made the fraudulent representation, their authority to speak, to whom they spoke, what they said, and when the representation was made. Khan, 975 F. Supp. 2d at 1140.

The purpose of Rule 9(b) is to protect defendants from factually baseless claims of fraud as much as it is meant to give defendants notice of the claims asserted against them. See Kearns, 567 F.3d at 1125. When a party averring fraud fails to meet the heightened [*9] pleading standard of Rule 9(b), dismissal of the claim is proper. See Vess, 317 F.3d at 1107 ("A motion to dismiss a complaint or claim 'grounded in fraud' under Rule 9(b) for failure to plead with particularity is the functional equivalent of a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6) for failure to state a claim.").

The Court dismisses the claims of fraudulent and negligent misrepresentation because Lawrence fails to plead the circumstances of the fraud with particularity. Lawrence's complaint does not set forth the who, what, when, where, and how the fraudulent conduct occurred. Instead, the complaint vaguely alleges that Wells Fargo falsely informed Lawrence that he could reinstate the loan when Wells Fargo knew this was false or should have known this to be false. ECF 1-1, ¶¶ 32-33, 39. Lawrence then alleges that "[i]n bad faith, Defendants wrongfully refused to honor its promise to reinstate the Loan." Id. ¶ 35.

According to the allegations in the complaint, Lawrence experienced financial hardship in or around 2013, and he "shortly thereafter" requested a payoff quote. ECF No. 1-1, ¶ 13. Then in May 2016, Lawrence made the required $15,244.75 payment to reinstate the loan. Id. ¶ 14. Lawrence fails to allege when Wells Fargo provided [*10] the reinstatement quote, only offering a timeframe spanning from on or around 2013 to May 2016—a period of more than three years. Next, the complaint does not allege who provided the quote. The complaint alludes to an oral promise to reinstate the loan, ECF No. 1-1 ¶ 44, but fails to identify who made such a promise.

The vague allegations that Wells Fargo promised to reinstate the loan for a specific amount and subsequently failed to honor the promise does not apprise Wells Fargo of its allegedly fraudulent conduct.

"Dismissal without leave to amend is proper if it is clear that the complaint could not be saved by amendment." Kendall v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., 518 F.3d 1042, 1051 (9th Cir. 2008). If the court concludes that dismissal under Rule 12(b)(6) is warranted, the court should not dismiss the complaint "unless it determines that the pleading could not possibly be cured by the allegation of other facts." Cook, Perkiss and Liehe, Inc. v. N. Cal. Collection Serv. Inc., 911 F.2d 242, 247 (9th Cir. 1990) (citations omitted).

Given the opportunity, Plaintiff may be able to state the ostensibly fraudulent conduct with particularity which would place Defendants on notice of the who, what, when, where, and how the conduct was committed. Accordingly, the claims of fraudulent misrepresentation and negligent misrepresentation are dismissed with leave to amend.

2. Wrongful [*11] Foreclosure

Lawrence's first cause of action alleges that Wells Fargo engaged in wrongful foreclosure of the Property in violation of California's Homeowner Bill of Rights ("HBR"), California Civil Code Section 2923, et seq. Lawrence contends that Wells Fargo acted in bad faith by misapplying Lawrence's reinstatement payment to another account. ECF No. 1-1 ¶ 26. According to the complaint, Wells Fargo falsely stated that Lawrence could reinstate the Loan and Wells Fargo knew the statements were false. Id. In addition, Lawrence argues that Wells Fargo violated the HBR by failing to comply with the requirements of California Civil Code Section 2923.5 ("Section 2923.5") and the notice of default provisions of California Civil Code Section 2924, et seq. ECF No. 1-1 ¶ 28.

The Court holds that the complaint fails to allege facts that give rise to a plausible claim of wrongful foreclosure. The elements of an equitable cause of action to set aside a foreclosure sale are:

> (1) the trustee or mortgagee caused an illegal, fraudulent, or willfully oppressive sale of real property pursuant to a power of sale in a mortgage or deed of trust; (2) the party attacking the sale (usually but not always the trustor or mortgagor) was prejudiced or harmed; and (3) in cases where the trustor or mortgagor challenges the sale, the trustor or mortgagor tendered [*12] the amount of the secured indebtedness or was excused from tendering.

Lona v. Citibank, N.A., 202 Cal. App. 4th 89, 104, 134 Cal. Rptr. 3d 622 (2011).

Alleged facts do not show illegal, fraudulent, or willfully oppressive sale

First, Lawrence fails to adequately plead how Wells Fargo caused an illegal, fraudulent, or willfully oppressive sale of real property. Plaintiff argues that the complaint states a claim under the "illegal" and "willfully oppressive" prongs of this element, claiming that Wells Fargo violated Section 2923.5, which requires a lender or its agent to attempt to contact a defaulted borrower prior to foreclosure. See ECF No. 10 at 6. Section 2923.5(a)(2) requires a "mortgagee beneficiary or authorized agent" to "contact the borrower in person or by telephone in order to assess the borrower's financial situation and explore options for the borrower to avoid foreclosure." Section 2923.5(b) requires a default notice to include a declaration of compliance with Section 2923.5, including an attempt "with due diligence to contact the borrower as required by this section." Lawrence also points to California Civil Code Section 2924.11 ("Section 2924.11"), which prohibits a trustee's sale while a complete foreclosure prevention alternative application is pending. See ECF No. 10 at 6.

It is not clear from the complaint how Lawrence claims that the requirements of Section 2923.5 or Section 2924.11 were [*13] not followed. The complaint states, "Defendants cannot prove that the non-judicial foreclosure proceedings have complied with the statutory requirements of California Civil Code Sections 2923.5 and 2924, et seq." ECF No. 1-1 ¶ 28. Plaintiff continues, "[a]s set forth above, Defendants have failed to comply with the requirements of California Civil Code [S]ections 2923.5 and 2924." ECF No. 1-1 ¶ 28. Plaintiff must allege "enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570. These conclusory allegations fail to plausibly allege that Wells Fargo caused an illegal or willfully oppressive sale of real property pursuant to a power of sale in a mortgage or deed of trust.[4]

To the extent Plaintiff attempts to base this claim upon "fraudulent" conduct, that claim fails for the reasons set forth above in the discussion on the claims of fraudulent and negligent misrepresentation.

Failure to tender full amount of secured indebtedness

Lastly, in a wrongful foreclosure claim, the plaintiff must show that the mortgagor tendered the amount of the secured indebtedness (or at least the amount the plaintiff was in default), or was excused from tendering. Compare, e.g., Arnolds Mgmt. Corp. v. Eischen, 158 Cal. App. 3d 575, 578, 205 Cal. Rptr. 15 (Ct. App. 1984) ("It is settled that an action to set aside a trustee's sale for [*14] irregularities in sale notice or procedure should be accompanied by an offer to pay the full amount of the debt for which the property was security."), *Alicea v. GE Money Bank, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 60813, 2009 WL 2136969, at 3 (N.D. Cal. 2009) (same), Lona, 202 Cal. App. 4th at 104 (allowing for exceptions to full tender requirement), with, e.g., Miller v. Washington Mut. Bank FA, 776 F. Supp. 2d 1064, 1069 (N.D. Cal. 2011) (requiring tender of amount in default); *Lopez v. Chase Home Fin., LLC, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 34647, 2009 WL 1120318, at 6 (E.D. Cal. 2009) (same). The basic rule is that an offer of performance is of no effect if the person making it is not able to perform. Karlsen v. American Sav. & Loan Assn., 15 Cal. App. 3d 112, 118, 92 Cal. Rptr. 851 (Cal. Ct. App. 1971).

In the complaint, Lawrence makes the blanket statement that "Plaintiff stands ready, willing, and able to tender and pay the amounts due under the Loans . . . and is ready, willing, and able to make such payment at the times required of them by law." ECF No. 1-1 ¶ 24. This is insufficient to establish a credible tender offer by Plaintiff. Attempting to obscure the absence of tender by alleging that the plaintiff is ready, willing, and able to tender will not satisfy the tender requirement. Flores v. EMC Mortg. Co., 997 F. Supp. 2d 1088, 1107 (E.D. Cal. 2014). Rather than supporting a credible tender offer, the complaint tends to show the absence of such an offer. Lawrence complains of a failed promise to reinstate the Loan in May 2016, yet Wells Fargo initiated foreclosure in September 2017 for defaulted payments starting in May 2017. Following the notice of default, [*15] Lawrence sought to modify the Loan which was denied in January 2018. These facts suggest that Lawrence was not able to tender the amount he was in default, let alone the full amount of secured indebtedness prior to the May 15, 2018 foreclosure sale. Accordingly, the complaint fails to allege a credible tender as required.

Prejudice or harm to Lawrence

To prevail on a claim of wrongful foreclosure, the plaintiff must show that she was prejudiced or harmed. Lona, 202 Cal. App. 4th at 104. Because the Court finds the claim defective on other grounds, it will not address prejudice or harm.

For these reasons, the complaint fails to make a plausible claim for relief under the theory of wrongful foreclosure. That claim is dismissed with leave to amend.

3. Promissory Estoppel

[4] To the extent Plaintiff is attempting to base his wrongful foreclosure claim on the assertion that he did not receive notice that "First American had replaced, substituted, and removed the prior named trustee under the Deed of Trust," ECF No. 1-1 ¶ 17, any amended complaint must make it clear that he is doing so. Counsel is warned, however, that any assertion that the procedure underlying the trustee substitution voided the notice of default must comport with Counsel's obligations under Rule 11, and frivolous allegations will not be tolerated in this overburdened Court.

Lawrence alleges promissory estoppel as his fourth cause of action. ECF No. 1-1 ¶¶ 43-49. A promissory estoppel claim requires a showing that (1) the defendant made a promise that is definite and clear; (2) the plaintiff reasonably relied on the promise; and (3) the plaintiff suffered substantial detrimental effect because of the reliance. U.S. Ecology, Inc. v. State, 129 Cal. App. 4th 887, 901, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 894 (2005).

Promissory estoppel is "a doctrine which employs equitable principles to satisfy the requirement that consideration [*16] must be given in exchange for the promise sought to be enforced." Raedeke v. Gibraltar Sav. & Loan Asso., 10 Cal. 3d 665, 672, 111 Cal. Rptr. 693, 517 P.2d 1157 (1974). "[P]romissory estoppel claims are aimed solely at allowing recovery in equity where a contractual claim fails for a lack of consideration, and in all other respects the claim is akin to one for breach of contract . . . ." US Ecology, Inc., 129 Cal. App. 4th at 904. "The vital principle is that he who by his language or conduct leads another to do what he would not otherwise have done shall not subject such person to loss or injury by disappointing the expectations upon which he acted." Garcia v. World Sav., FSB, 183 Cal. App. 4th 1031, 1041, 107 Cal. Rptr. 3d 683 (2010).

Wells Fargo argues that any alleged oral promise to reinstate the loan was not a definite and clear promise. ECF No. 4, at 13. Similarly, Wells Fargo argues that Lawrence fails to show reliance on any alleged promise by Wells Fargo because the default occurred in October 2017, one year and five months after Lawrence made the reinstatement payment. Id., at 13-14. In addition, the notice of default declares that Lawrence was in default on the installment due May 1, 2017 and for all subsequent installments. ECF No. 1-1, Ex. B, at 31. Therefore, by evaluating the notice of default, even if we assume that Wells Fargo promised to reinstate the Loan in May 2016, the foreclosure arose out of defaults [*17] on payments that occurred between May 2017 and October 2017. Accordingly, Lawrence cannot show that he relied on the promise or that he suffered a substantial detrimental impact as a result of such reliance. For these reasons, the promissory estoppel claim is dismissed with leave to amend.

4. Unfair Competition Law (UCL) Claims

Lastly, Lawrence brings a claim under the Unfair Competition Law ("UCL"), California Business and Professions Code Section 17200, et seq. Under the UCL, any person or entity that has engaged, is engaging or threatens to engage in unfair competition may be enjoined in any court of competent jurisdiction. Wilson v. Hewlett-Packard Co., 668 F.3d 1136, 1140 (9th Cir. 2012) (citing Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 17201, 17203). Unfair competition includes any "unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business act or practice and unfair, deceptive, untrue or misleading advertising." Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200. A business act or practice needs to meet one of three criteria—unlawful, unfair, or fraudulent—to be considered unfair competition under the UCL. Abramson v. Marriott Ownership Resorts, Inc., 155 F. Supp. 3d 1056, 1066 (C.D. Cal. 2016) (citing Daro v. Superior Court, 151 Cal. App. 4th 1079, 1093, 61 Cal. Rptr. 3d 716 (2007)).

Lawrence claims to have statutory standing to bring the UCL claim by the mere fact that Wells Fargo initiated foreclosure proceedings against him. Because the Court holds that the complaint fails to state a plausible claim for relief under the UCL, the Court does not need to address whether Lawrence has statutory [*18] standing to pursue the UCL claim.

"Unlawful" prong

The complaint fails to identify unlawful conduct that would support a UCL claim.

The UCL's "unlawful" prong "borrows violations of other laws and treats them as independently actionable." Wilson, 668 F.3d at 1140. A violation of another law is a predicate for stating a cause of action under the UCL's unlawful prong. DocMagic, Inc. v. Ellie Mae, Inc., 745 F. Supp. 2d 1119, 1146 (N.D. Cal. 2010). Where a plaintiff cannot state a claim under the borrowed law, she cannot state a UCL claim under the "unlawful" prong either. See Smith v. State Farm Mutual Automobile Ins. Co., 93 Cal. App. 4th 700, 718, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 399 (2001).

Lawrence alleges that the Defendants committed unlawful business practices and "said acts and practices violate the contract between the parties, and Defendants' fiduciary duties." ECF No. 1-1 ¶ 59. The singular piece of specific misconduct alleged by Lawrence is that Wells Fargo promised to reinstate his loan and instead of applying the lump sum payment to reinstate the loan, applied it to another account. The complaint fails to set forth how Wells Fargo's conduct violated another law. Even if the Court assumes that Wells Fargo broke its promise to reinstate the loan, Lawrence does not demonstrate how this conduct broke the law.

"Unfair" prong

The UCL does not define the term "unfair" and the California courts are unresolved [*19] as to the exact definition under the statute. Davis v. HSBC Bank Nevada, N.A., 691 F.3d 1152, 1169 (9th Cir. 2012). The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals has acknowledged a split in the California courts as to whether a claim under the "unfair" prong may be properly brought by consumers or if the cause of action is limited to competitors. Id. at 1170. Prior to the decision in Cel-Tech Commc'ns Inc. v. L.A. Cellular Tel. Co., 20 Cal. 4th 163, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 (1999), the California courts held that "unfair" conduct occurs when the practice offends an established public policy or when the practice is immoral, unethical, oppressive, unscrupulous, or substantially injurious to consumers. Davis, 691 F.3d at 1169 (citing S. Bay Chevrolet v. Gen. Motors Acceptance Corp., 72 Cal. App. 4th 861, 886, 85 Cal. Rptr. 2d 301 (1999)). Under this approach, a court must balance the utility of the defendant's conduct against the gravity of the harm to the alleged victim. Id. Cel-Tech held that this balancing test provided too little guidance to the courts. 20 Cal. 4th at 185.

Accordingly, Cel-Tech adopted a separate analysis, holding that "unfair" means "conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition." Id. at 544. California courts have been split on whether to apply the Cel-Tech approach or the pre-Cel-Tech balancing [*20] test to consumer actions alleging unfair conduct under the UCL. Davis, 691 F.3d at 1170. The Davis Court declined to decide which approach applied, holding that the plaintiff's claims failed under either alternative. Id. Similarly, Lawrence's claim that Wells Fargo's conduct was unfair fails under either approach.

As with Lawrence's other claims for relief, the UCL claims are overly broad and framed in a conclusory manner. The UCL allegations lack facts of Wells Fargo's specific wrongdoing to provide fair notice in order to defend the lawsuit.

In his opposition to Defendant's motion to dismiss, Lawrence contends that Wells Fargo's conduct was unfair because it lacked authority to conduct the foreclosure and it failed to follow its own "pre-Notice of Default outreach requirements." ECF No. 10, at 13. The complaint makes the unsupported, conclusory allegation that Wells Fargo was without authority to foreclose on Lawrence's property. Lack of authorization to initiate foreclosure does not support a wrongful foreclosure claim. See Gomes v. Countrywide Home Loans, Inc., 192 Cal. App. 4th 1149, 1154, 121 Cal. Rptr. 3d 819 (2011) (allowing a judicial proceeding to determine the authority of the party initiating foreclosure would be contrary to the comprehensive statutory scheme of nonjudicial foreclosures).

Because Lawrence's UCL claim is grounded in alleged fraudulent conduct, he must meet the heightened pleading standard of Rule 9(b). He fails to meet that heightened pleading standard.

Where a UCL claim is grounded in alleged fraudulent conduct, it is subject to the heightened pleading standard of Rule 9(b). See Vess, 317 F.3d at 1103-04. When a plaintiff relies entirely on a unified course of fraudulent conduct as a basis for a UCL claim, the claim must satisfy the particularity requirements of Rule 9(b). Kearns, 567 F.3d at 1126-27.

Lawrence's UCL claim fails to plead the circumstances of the alleged fraudulent conduct with particularity. As analyzed above in the fraudulent and negligent misrepresentation claims, Lawrence fails to plead the who, what, when, where and how the misconduct was committed.

In sum, Lawrence does not substantiate his claim that Wells Fargo committed an unlawful, unfair, or fraudulent business act or practice that would allow his UCL claim to proceed. To the extent that his UCL claim relies on fraudulent conduct, he fails to plead with particularity as required by Rule 9(b). Therefore, the UCL claim is dismissed with leave to amend.

VI. CONCLUSION AND ORDER

For the foregoing reasons, Wells Fargo's motion to dismiss is GRANTED with [*22] leave to amend. Plaintiff must file an amended complaint within 21 days of the date of this order. If Plaintiff cannot plead to satisfy the legal requirements outlined in this Order, the Court has no time to reeducate in any subsequent order.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

ORDER DENYING DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT ON PLAINTIFF'S ANTITRUST CLAIMS AND GRANTING DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT ON PLAINTIFF'S RICO CLAIM

This matter is before the Court on two motions for summary judgment by Defendant OneOK Energy Services Company, L.P. ("OESC"). The first motion seeks judgment against Sinclair Oil Corporation ("Sinclair") as to its federal and state antitrust claims. CM/ECF Document (Doc.) 60. The second motion seeks judgment against Sinclair as to its claim for violation of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO claim"). Doc. 61. Both pending motions have been fully briefed by the parties and are ready for disposition. Finding that Sinclair presented sufficient evidence to create a genuine issue of material fact as to whether OESC participated in the industry's effort to manipulate natural gas prices, the Court denies OESC's first motion seeking judgment against Sinclair's antitrust [*3] claims. However, finding that no genuine issue of material fact exists and concluding that OESC is entitled to judgment as a matter of law against Sinclair's RICO claim, the Court grants OESC's second summary judgment motion.

Background

This matter returns to the Court following pretrial management in a multi-district litigation consolidated in the District of Nevada. The procedural history along with a summary of the facts and regulatory framework can be found in the case, In re Western States Wholesale Natural Gas Antitrust Litigation, 715 F.3d 716 (9th Cir. 2003). For purposes of OESC's motion, between June 1999 to December 2002 ("the Relevant Period"), Sinclair purchased natural gas from OESC. During the Relevant Period, buyers and sellers relied on industry trade publications that published daily and monthly price indices as reference points to determine the market price for natural gas transactions. The crux of the claims before the Court is that the natural gas industry, including OESC, collectively manipulated price indices compiled by these trade publication, which resulted in market distortion and price fixing. Id. at 725. More specifically, Sinclair alleges that OESC conspired with others in violation of antitrust laws to manipulate the natural gas market in order to sell natural [*4] gas at artificially inflated prices. Doc. 1, pp. 15-19. Sinclair further alleges that, in its antitrust efforts to manipulate price indices in order to fix and inflate natural gas prices, OESC conducted an "enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity" in violation of Section 1962(c) of RICO, 18 U.S.C. §§ 1961-1968. Id. at pp. 19-20.

Discussion

A. Summary Judgment Standard

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c), summary judgment is only appropriate if the movant shows "there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." W. Diversified Servs., Inc. v. Hyundai Motor Am., Inc., 427 F.3d 1269, 1272 (10th Cir. 2005). An issue is "genuine" if there is sufficient evidence on each side so that a rational trier of fact could resolve the issue either way. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986). An issue of fact is "material" if under the substantive law it is essential to the proper disposition of the claim. Id. The non-moving party is entitled to all reasonable inferences from the factual record, which is viewed in the light most favorable to the party opposing summary judgment. Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 587, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986). However, to defeat summary judgment, a plaintiff must support the claim with more than conjecture and speculation. Self v. Crum, 439 F.3d 1227, 1236 (10th Cir. 2006). The burden of persuasion rests squarely on the moving party. Trainor v. Apollo Metal Specialties, Inc., 318 F.3d 976, 980 (10th Cir. 2002).

The Tenth Circuit has noted "that in a broad sense, summary [*5] judgment in antitrust cases should be used sparingly. [Citations omitted.] Nonetheless, the usual rules governing summary judgment still apply." Sports Racing Servs., Inc. v. Sports Car Club of Am., Inc., 131 F.3d 874, 882 (10th Cir. 1997).

For purposes of OESC's pending motion against the antitrust claims, Sinclair has pled a § 1 conspiracy in violation of the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.), in addition to conduct by OESC in violation of Oklahoma's antitrust statute (79 O.S. § 203A). The same legal standards apply to Sinclair's federal and Oklahoma antitrust claims.[1] Cohlmia v. Ardent Health Servs., LLC, 448 F. Supp. 2d 1253, 1262-63 (N.D. Okla. 2006). Therefore, the Court will only discuss the legal standards for the Sherman Act claim. "Because § 1 of the Sherman Act 'does not prohibit [all unreasonable restraints of trade . . . but only restraints effected by a contract, combination, or conspiracy,' . . . '[t]he crucial question' is whether the challenged anticompetitive conduct 'stem[s] from independent decision or from an agreement, tacit or express,'" Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 553, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 1964, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). "It is not necessary to find an express agreement in order to find a conspiracy. It is enough that a concert of action is contemplated and that the defendants conformed to the arrangement." U.S. v. Paramount Pictures, 334 U.S. 131, 142 (1948), 68 S. Ct. 915, 92 L. Ed. 1260 (citation omitted). Indeed, "acquiescence in an illegal scheme" violates the Sherman act as much as the creation and promotion of one. Id. at 161. Nonetheless, "at the summary judgment stage a §1 plaintiff's [*6] offer of conspiracy evidence must tend to rule out the possibility that the [alleged conspirators] were acting independently." Bell Atlantic, 550 U.S. at 554.

For purposes of OESC's pending motion against the RICO claim, Sinclair has pled a civil RICO claim which requires proof: "(1) that the defendant violated § 1962; (2) that the plaintiff's business or property was injured; and (3) that the defendant's violation [was] the cause of that injury." Safe Streets Alliance v. Hickenlooper, 859 F.3d 865, 881 (10th Cir. 2017) (citations omitted). To establish a violation of § 1962(c) by OESC, Sinclair would be required to prove that OESC "(1) conducted the affairs (2) of an enterprise (3) through a pattern (4) of racketeering activity." Id. at 882 (citations and internal quotation marks omitted).

A RICO enterprise may include "any union or group of individuals associated in fact although not a legal entity." 18 U.S.C. § 1961(4). However, to constitute a so-called "association-in-fact" enterprise, the group of persons must be "associated together for a common purpose of engaging in a course of conduct." United States v. Turkette, 452 U.S. 576, 583, 101 S. Ct. 2524, 69 L. Ed. 2d 246 (1981). "The concept of association requires both interpersonal relationships and a common interest." Boyle v. U.S., 556 U.S. 938, 946 (2009), 129 S. Ct. 2237, 173 L. Ed. 2d 1265. Section 1962(c) also requires proof that the defendant "conduct[ed] or participate[d], directly or indirectly, in the conduct of [the] enterprise's [*7] affairs." 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c). Proving this requires a plaintiff show the defendant "participate[d] in the operation or management of the enterprise itself." Reves v. Ernst & Young, 507 U.S. 170, 185, 113 S. Ct. 1163, 122 L. Ed. 2d 525 (1993). In order to participate, directly or indirectly, in the conduct of such enterprise's affairs, "a plaintiff must demonstrate that the defendant conducted the affairs of the enterprise rather than simply conducting the defendant's own affairs." George v. Urban Settlement Servs., 833 F.3d 1242, 1249 (10th Cir. 2016). "Racketeering activity" refers to various state or federal offenses known as "predicate offenses," such as mail fraud and wire fraud. 18 U.S.C. § 1961(1)(B). Finally, a RICO claim requires proof that a defendant's alleged RICO violation was both a but-for cause and a proximate cause of a plaintiff's injury. Safe Streets, 859 F.3d at 889.

B. Sinclair's Antitrust Claims

Sinclair alleges a price fixing conspiracy involving OESC and other natural gas suppliers which it claims is supported by direct evidence of false reporting to trade publications of trades that did not occur as actual OESC trades. NV CM/ECF 03-cv-1431, Doc. 2756-4, p. 5 (Skoog depo.).[2] Sinclair also points to evidence involving an

[1] It should be noted that Oklahoma's antitrust law differs from federal law in one respect. If properly pled, a unilateral act can give rise to liability under Oklahoma law. See Harolds Stores, Inc. v. Dillard Dept. Stores, Inc., 82 F.3d 1533, 1550 (10th Cir. 1996).

OESC trader who acknowledged false reporting as well as inexplicable differences between his actual experience with trades and index price reports. NV CM/ECF 03-cv-1431, [*8] Doc. 2756-5, pp. 7-8 (Robertson depo.). Other evidence involved a different OESC trader who engaged in a recorded phone call with an alleged co-conspirator in which the two discussed reporting "funky numbers" and how they both knew "how the game works," with the OESC trader admitting to reporting some of his index deals as fixed price deals. NV CM/ECF 03-cv-1431, Doc. 2756-2, p. 71-72, 73. Further, Sinclair points to what it claims were collusive "wash trades" involving OESC. Id. at p. 74. Finally, Sinclair's expert opined on circumstantial evidence supporting collusion, including the structure of the natural gas market which "provide[d] the opportunity for high level interaction among industry participants." Id. at p. 97.

In response, OESC argues Sinclair's evidence shows, at most, only bare "conscious parallelism," which is insufficient to support an antitrust conspiracy claim. Further, OESC argues it had no reason to engage in the alleged conspiracy because its business model was indifferent to the price of gas because it hedged away the opportunity to benefit from increased prices. Rather, OESC's model was designed to generate trading profits based on a positive trading margin on [*9] its balanced book of natural gas sales offset by natural gas purchases. Thus, it had no financial incentive to manipulate prices. As to the alleged false reporting, OESC argues there is a plausible alternative interpretation for its reporting conduct that rebuts the alleged conspiracy, namely that its reporters were attempting to provide index publishers an accurate representation of what they observed in the marketplace even if certain reports were not of actual OESC trades. As to the alleged "wash trades," OESC provides evidence that these six pairs of transactions did not meet the definition of a "wash trade" as a prearranged pair of trades between the same counterparties that involves no economic risk, no net change in beneficial ownership, and serves no legitimate business purpose. In short, OESC argues Sinclair's evidence shows, at most, only that: (i) OESC submitted some transaction reports which, viewed individually, were inaccurate; and (ii) certain OESC natural gas traders were aware that other gas marketing companies had submitted inaccurate reports of their gas transactions. OESC argues this evidence does not give rise to an inference of conspiracy because it had no motive [*10] to conspire in that, with balanced positions, OESC could not possibly skew the indices to its benefit, and its conduct is plausibly explained by traders unilaterally attempting to provide publishers with an accurate picture of the market.

In the form of proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law, Sinclair responds that self-serving and conclusory statements by OESC about its wash trades don't refute the existence of these prearranged trades, which has already been concluded by the MDL Court to imply an antitrust conspiracy contrary to the goal of market competition. Sinclair also reargues its direct evidence of agreement with competitors to report "funky numbers" in the "game" played by the industry. In addition, Sinclair argues that the explanation by OESC that its traders were unilaterally attempting to provide publishers with an accurate picture of the market makes no sense as OESC fails to explain how false reporting can provide an accurate picture of the market. Further, Sinclair points to the prevalence of false reporting in the industry — and the discussion among competitors that it was occurring, including by OESC — which excludes the possibility OESC acted alone. Sinclair [*11] argues absent collusion, OESC's false reporting would not further its own interests or achieve the goal of providing an accurate picture of the market, thus the likely (or only) explanation for false reporting is that it was part of a conspiracy to move market prices to its benefit. As to OESC's motive to conspire, OESC points to a FERC report identifying a number of motives including to "influence reported gas prices, to enhance the value of financial positions or purchase obligations, and to increase reported volumes to attract participants by creating the impression of more liquid markets." CM/ECF Doc. 62-1, p. 19. Finally, Sinclair argues OESC acquiesced to the industry-wide conduct of reporting false prices to the indices. "[A]cquiescence in an illegal scheme is as much a violation of the Sherman Act as the creation and promotion of one." Paramount Pictures, 334 U.S. at 161. According to Sinclair, OESC "both engaged in trade talk and exchanged information with its competitors and then conformed its actions to that of its competitors, which all support an inference that it was part of a price manipulation conspiracy." Doc. 62-1, p. 24.

In considering the arguments of the parties, the Court agrees with Sinclair that it has gone [*12] beyond speculation and conjecture to create a genuine issue of material fact as to whether OESC participated in the larger price manipulation conspiracy shown in the record for the Relevant Time Period, when false and misleading reporting of gas transactions for use in calculating index prices was prevalent among some in the natural gas industry. In summary, OESC admits to some inaccurate transaction reports, the record shows evidence of what may be considered "wash" trades that can be viewed as characteristic of an antitrust conspiracy, the record shows OESC engaged in "trade talk" with its competitors which indicates knowledge of others submitting false and misleading reports and tends to show OESC acquiesced (if not conformed) to that conduct, and the record includes economic evidence tending to show that price-fixing was feasible, including evidence about the structure of the natural gas industry and the standardized nature of the natural gas commodity. While OESC argues its price-neutral business model supports "conscious parallelism" as an explanation for its conduct rather than involvement in a price-fixing conspiracy, these arguments go to evidentiary matters best considered [*13] and weighed by the jury, and are not for the Court at the summary judgment phase.

C. Sinclair's RICO Claim

In arguing against the RICO claim, OESC claims Sinclair has no admissible evidence to establish the essential elements of the claim, which caused Sinclair to admit it "is not at this time in possession of sufficient information to describe with certainty the precise details of the RICO enterprise that Sinclair alleges in its complaint." Doc. 61-5, p. 3. Following this admission, Sinclair only identifies the FERC Final Report on Market Manipulation in Western Markets (CM/ECF 03-cv-1431, Doc. 2758) and the CFTC Order Instituting Proceedings Pursuant to Sections 6(c) and 6 d) of the Commodity Exchange Act (Doc. 61-6) as demonstrating "a high probability that [OESC] engaged in market manipulation and defrauded Sinclair." Doc. 61-5, p. 3. According to OESC these documents fail to show either the existence of a RICO "enterprise," or that OESC "conducted the affairs" of such enterprise as opposed to conducting its own affairs. OESC points out that the FERC report never mentioned OESC, and the CFTC Consent Order (which OESC does not admit) found that OESC inappropriately conducted its own reporting affairs, not that OESC had any part in [*14] directing the affairs of an enterprise whose common purpose was to inflate indices through conspiratorial false reporting.[3]

In response, Sinclair relies on the FERC report, the CFTC Consent Order, and the same evidence it argued to support its antitrust claim to advance the argument that the natural gas traders, including OESC, banded together to engage in a pattern of false reporting over a number of years with the common purpose of manipulating natural gas prices. As to whether OESC conducted the affairs of the RICO enterprise, Sinclair argues the "operation or management" test is a broad standard and OESC's traders knew false reporting occurred and stated its intent to participate in the false reporting enterprise with its competitors. Sinclair also points out that OESC conducted wash trades with competitors which undercuts the contention it was conducting only its own affairs. Finally, Sinclair argues it made no explicit and unambiguous statement that it had abandoned its RICO claim.

In reply, OESC points out none of Sinclair's evidence tends to show OESC was engaged in or participated in any form of "enterprise" whose purpose was to manipulate the indices. OESC continues to argue [*15] that the FERC report makes no reference to it and the CFTC's Order made no finding or allegation that OESC made any attempt to manipulate the price of natural gas. In short, the fact of "false reporting" alone is not enough to satisfy the elements of a RICO claim. OESC also continues to advance its arguments that the FERC Report and the CFTC Order are inadmissible.

Following OESC's reply, Sinclair filed a motion for leave to file a sur-reply to address a new argument made by OESC on the public records exception under Rule 803(8). Doc. 83. Because the reason for the Court's decision on OESC's motion does not depend on a ruling as to whether the FERC Report is admissible, a sur-reply will not be permitted.

[3] OESC argues both reports are inadmissible. According to OESC, the FERC report is inadmissible hearsay and the CFTC Consent Order is an inadmissible settlement agreement between the CFTC and OESC.

As to the arguments made by the parties on Sinclair's RICO claim, the Court agrees with OESC. There is no evidence that OESC conducted the affairs of a RICO enterprise comprising natural gas traders by reporting to certain reporting firms trades that did not occur or reporting to those firms certain trades at false or misleading prices or volumes. Further, the evidence that certain OESC traders knew others were submitting false or misleading reports to the trading firms is not evidence that OESC [*16] conducted the affairs of a RICO enterprise. Contrary to Sinclair's argument, there is nothing beyond guess and conjecture that OESC banded together with its competitors to engage in a pattern of false reporting with the common purpose of manipulating natural gas prices. While some false reporting conduct might be similar, that evidence is simply not sufficient to defeat summary judgment. The FERC Report, the CFTC Order and the testimony by OESC traders simply don't support the conclusion that OESC associated itself with other traders or natural gas companies for the common purpose or common interest of manipulating the natural gas market sufficient to support a § 1962(c) civil RICO violation.

Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, the Court finds there exist genuine questions of material fact precluding summary judgment against Sinclair on its antitrust claims. The Court further finds there are no genuine questions of material fact as to Sinclair's RICO claim, and OESC is entitled to summary judgment against Sinclair as to this claim.

IT IS THEREFORE HEREBY ORDERED that Defendant OESC's motion for summary judgment on Plaintiff's Antitrust Claims (Doc. 60) is DENIED; and

IT IS FURTHER HEREBY ORDERED [*17] that Defendant OESC's motion for summary judgment on Plaintiff's RICO Claim (Doc. 61) is GRANTED; and

IT IS FINALLY ORDERED that Sinclair's motion for leave to file a sur-reply in opposition to OESC's motion for summary judgment on Plaintiff's RICO Claim (Doc. 83) is DENIED.

ORDER GRANTING MOTION TO DISMISS [Dkt. 44]

I. INTRODUCTION

Plaintiff Fireworks Lady & Co., LLC ("Fireworks Lady") brings this putative class action against Defendants Firstrans International Co. ("Firstrans"), Hua Yang Transportation Co. ("Hua Yang"), and Ding Yan Zhong asserting claims arising under both federal antitrust law and state law. (Dkt. 41 [First Amended Complaint, hereinafter "FAC"].)

Before the Court is Firstrans's motion to dismiss Plaintiff's [*2] First Amended Complaint pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6). (Dkt. 44 [hereinafter "Mot."].) For the following reasons, the motion is GRANTED.[1]

II. BACKGROUND

This lawsuit arises out of Defendants' alleged monopolization of the fireworks shipping business. Defendant Firstrans is allegedly an Indiana corporation that specializes in the shipping of fireworks from the People's Republic of China ("PRC") to the United States. (FAC ¶¶ 48, 71.) Defendant Hua Yang was allegedly an Indiana corporation that, after several name changes, became Firstrans in 2012. (Id. ¶¶ 51-53). Defendant Ding Yan Zhong is a citizen of the PRC and is allegedly the current president of Firstrans. (Id. ¶¶ 50, 55.)

Plaintiff, a Florida fireworks merchant, purchases fireworks from nonparty manufacturers located in the inland Hunan and Jiangxi provinces of the PRC. (Dkt. 52 [Opp'n] at 1.) According to the First Amended Complaint, the fireworks' journey from these manufacturers to Plaintiff's place of business occurs in two distinct stages. First, the fireworks are shipped from Hunan and Jiangxi provinces to Shanghai. (FAC ¶¶ 4-15.) Next, they are shipped from Shanghai to the United States. (Id. ¶ 16.) The PRC heavily regulates the transportation [*3] of fireworks and requires fireworks carriers to obtain special permits. (Id. ¶ 4.) According to Plaintiff, the Defendants hold one of only four permits that the PRC has issued to companies engaged in shipping fireworks from the inland provinces to Shanghai. (Id. ¶ 11.)

Plaintiff utilizes Defendants' shipping services to carry the fireworks it purchases from the nonparty manufacturers to its locations in the United States. (Id. ¶ 20.) Plaintiff's allegations arise out of this business relationship. Plaintiff asserts that Firstrans has violated federal antitrust laws in two ways. First, it alleges that Firstrans has established an unlawful tying arrangement by conditioning the shipment from the inland provinces to Shanghai on customers continuing to use their shipping services from Shanghai to the United States. (Id. ¶ 107.) This arrangement allegedly prevents Plaintiff from utilizing the services of other merchants who would otherwise be willing to ship Plaintiff's fireworks at lower costs. (Id. ¶ 20.) Next, Plaintiff alleges that Defendants have engaged in unlawful monopolization of inland transportation services. (Id. ¶ 121.) This monopolization allegedly allows Firstrans to charge [*4] inflated prices for their shipping services, causing injury to Plaintiff and similarly situated buyers. (Id. ¶ 43.)

Plaintiff also brings several state law claims against Firstrans, including breach of contract, (id. ¶¶ 128-131), negligence, (id. ¶¶ 132-36), "piercing the corporate veil," (id. ¶¶ 137-152), civil conspiracy, (id. ¶¶ 153-156), Florida's Deceptive Trade Practices Act claims, (id. ¶¶ 157-160), and unjust enrichment, (id. ¶¶ 161-64).

III. LEGAL STANDARD

A motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6) tests the legal sufficiency of the claims asserted in the complaint. The issue on a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim is not whether the claimant will ultimately prevail, but whether the claimant is entitled to offer evidence to support the claims asserted. Gilligan v. Jamco Dev. Corp., 108 F.3d 246, 249 (9th Cir. 1997). Rule 12(b)(6) is read in conjunction with Rule 8(a), which requires only a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief. Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2). When evaluating a Rule 12(b)(6) motion, the district court must accept all material allegations in the complaint as true and construe them in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. Moyo v. Gomez, 32 F.3d 1382, 1384 (9th Cir. 1994). The district court may also consider additional facts in materials that the district court may take judicial notice, [*5] Barron v. Reich, 13 F.3d 1370, 1377 (9th Cir. 1994), as well as "documents whose contents are alleged in a complaint and whose authenticity no party questions, but which are not physically attached to the pleading," Branch

---

[1] Having read and considered the papers presented by the parties, the Court finds this matter appropriate for disposition without a hearing. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 78; Local Rule 7-15. Accordingly, the hearing set for August 12, 2019, at 1:30 p.m. is hereby vacated and off calendar.

v. Tunnell, 14 F.3d 449, 454 (9th Cir. 1994), overruled in part on other grounds by Galbraith v. Cty. of Santa Clara, 307 F.3d 1119 (9th Cir. 2002).

However, "the tenet that a court must accept as true all of the allegations contained in a complaint is inapplicable to legal conclusions." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009); see also Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007) (stating that while a complaint attacked by a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss does not need detailed factual allegations, courts "are not bound to accept as true a legal conclusion couched as a factual allegation" (citations and quotes omitted)). Dismissal of a complaint for failure to state a claim is not proper where a plaintiff has alleged "enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570. In keeping with this liberal pleading standard, the district court should grant the plaintiff leave to amend if the complaint can possibly be cured by additional factual allegations. Doe v. United States, 58 F.3d 494, 497 (9th Cir. 1995).

III. ANALYSIS

A. Tying Claim (Count I)

Plaintiff's first claim alleges that Defendants violated Section 1 of the Sherman Act by unlawfully tying the purchase of their "inland delivery services" to the purchase of their Shanghai-to-United States delivery services. [*6] (FAC ¶ 107.) According to Plaintiff, Defendants agree to ship fireworks from the inland provinces to Shanghai only after Plaintiff promises to use Defendant's services on the Shanghai-to-United States leg. (Id. ¶ 108.) Because Defendants allegedly provide the only viable shipping service from inland to Shanghai, Plaintiff has no choice but to do business with them for this leg of the journey and agree to the tying arrangement. (Id. ¶ 19.) Plaintiff alleges that by being forced to agree with Defendants, it cannot seek out the services of other carriers who would be willing to ship from Shanghai to the United States at a lower cost. (Id. ¶ 21.)

In a tying arrangement, a "seller conditions the sale of one product (the tying product) on the buyer's purchase of a second product (the tied product)." Cascade Health Sols. v. PeaceHealth, 515 F.3d 883, 912 (9th Cir. 2008). "Tying arrangements are forbidden on the theory that, if the seller has market power over the tying product, the seller can leverage this market power through tying arrangements to exclude other sellers of the tied product." Id. To establish Section 1 liability based on a tying arrangement, a plaintiff must allege "(1) that the defendant tied together the sale of two distinct products or services, (2) [*7] that the defendant possesses enough economic power in the tying product market to coerce its customers into purchasing the tied product, and (3) that the tying arrangement affects a 'not insubstantial volume of commerce' in the tied product market." Id. at 913 (quoting Paladin Assocs., Inc. v. Mont. Power Co., 328 F.3d 1145, 1159 (9th Cir. 2003)).

Firstrans argues that Plaintiff has failed to plead the first element of a tying arrangement: a tie between two distinct products or services. The Court agrees. To establish a tie between "distinct products or services," a plaintiff must allege facts that show "a sufficient demand for the purchase of the tied product separate from the tying product." Rick-Mik Enters. Inc. v. Equilon Enters., LLC, 532 F.3d 963, 974 (9th Cir. 2008). Plaintiff's First Amended Complaint, however, does not allege sufficient facts to establish two distinct services. It only alleges facts showing two separate segments of a single journey. Fireworks purchasers in the United States have no use for a service that delivers fireworks from the inland provinces to Shanghai without one that, in turn, ships those fireworks from Shanghai to the United States. See Unigestion Holding, S.A. v. UPM Tech., Inc., 305 F. Supp. 3d 1134, 1150 (D. Or. 2018) (rejecting claim that international phone termination services and transportation services were distinct products because Plaintiff did not "sufficiently allege[] that there is [*8] independent consumer demand for international call transportation services as a standalone product."). Contrary to Plaintiff's assertion, shipping fireworks from producers in the PRC to purchasers in the United States is a single service, not a tie between each of the different segments of that service. See *Debjo Sales, LLC v. Houghton Mifflin Harcourt Publ'g Co., 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 56504, 2015 WL 1969380, at 4 (D.N.J. Apr. 29, 2015) (holding that defendant's production of textbooks and delivery of those same textbooks were not distinct services and could not form the basis of a tying claim).

The Court previously dismissed Plaintiff's tying claim with leave to amend. (Dkt. 39.) Because Plaintiff has failed to cure the deficiencies in this claim despite being given an opportunity to do so, and because the Court does not believe that Plaintiff can cure the deficiencies, the Court finds that granting further leave to amend would be futile. Accordingly, Plaintiff's tying claim is DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE.

B. Monopolization Claim (Count II)

Plaintiff's second claim alleges that Defendants violated the Section 2 of the Sherman Act "by monopolizing the market for inland transportation services from Hunan and Jiangxi provinces to Shanghai." (FAC ¶ 121.) To state a valid monopolization claim, Plaintiff must allege both (1) the [*9] possession of monopoly power and (2) "the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." Verizon Commc'n Inc. v. Law Offices of Curtis V. Trinko, LLP, 540 U.S. 398, 407, 124 S. Ct. 872, 157 L. Ed. 2d 823 (2004) (quoting United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 571-72, 86 S. Ct. 1698, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778 (1966)). "The Supreme Court has consistently held that there must be 'predatory' conduct to attain or perpetuate a monopoly" for this second element to be met. See Alaska Airlines, Inc. v. United Airlines, Inc., 948 F.2d 536, 549 (9th Cir. 1991) (refusing to impose Section 2 liability on airline companies absent evidence of predatory conduct).

Plaintiff has failed to allege that Firstrans engaged in any such predatory conduct. Plaintiff's monopolization claim centers around Sinotrans Hunan Co. ("Sinotrans"), an alleged state-owned enterprise that began offering the same shipping services as Firstrans sometime in 2018. According to Plaintiff, Sinotrans secured government permits which allowed it to participate in the shipment of fireworks and compete with Firstrans. (Dkt. 52 [Opp'n] at 6.) After a short period of time, however, "Sinotrans terminated service due to the fact that it was losing money." (FAC ¶ 126.) Though Plaintiff alleges that Sinotrans's exit was caused by "an exercise of monopoly powers by Defendants," (id.), it fails to allege any facts that [*10] show Firstrans engaged in any specific predatory conduct designed to eliminate Sinotrans. Given that such conduct is required to state a valid monopolization claim, Firstrans's motion to dismiss with respect to this claim is GRANTED. Because it is unclear whether the deficiencies in the First Amended Complaint could be cured by amendment, Plaintiff's monopolization claim is DISMISSED WITH FOURTEEN DAYS' LEAVE TO AMEND.

C. State Law Claims (Counts III—VIII)

Plaintiff's first state law claim alleges breach of contract by Defendants. Plaintiff asserts that "Defendants have breached their agreed upon responsibilities and obligations causing Plaintiff to suffer damages." (Id. ¶ 130.) Under California law, "the elements of a cause of action for breach of contract are (1) the existence of the contract, (2) plaintiff's performance or excuse for nonperformance, (3) defendant's breach, and (4) the resulting damages to the plaintiff." Oasis W. Realty, LLC v. Goldman, 51 Cal. 4th 811, 821, 124 Cal. Rptr. 3d 256, 250 P.3d 1115 (2011). "While it is unnecessary for a plaintiff to allege the terms of a contract with precision, the Court must be able to discern at least what material obligation of the contract the defendant allegedly breached." Langan v. United Servs. Auto. Ass'n, 69 F. Supp. 3d 965, 979 (N.D. Cal. 2014) (internal citations omitted).

Plaintiff's First Amended [*11] Complaint fails to meet this requirement because it does not offer evidence of any specific obligation that Firstrans allegedly breached. Instead, it alleges only that "Defendants have breached their agreed upon responsibilities and obligations causing Plaintiff to suffer damages." (FAC ¶ 130.) Plaintiff cannot validly state a breach of contract claim without pointing to a specific obligation or duty breached by Firstrans. Firstrans's motion to dismiss with respect to this claim is GRANTED. Because it is unclear whether the deficiencies in the First Amended Complaint could be cured by amendment, Plaintiff's breach of contract claim is DISMISSED WITH FOURTEEN DAYS' LEAVE TO AMEND.

Plaintiff's next state law claim is under a negligence theory and stems from the alleged mishandling of two fireworks containers purchased by Plaintiff. The elements of negligence are duty, breach, causation, and damages. See Burgess v. Superior Court, 2 Cal. 4th 1064, 1072, 9 Cal. Rptr. 2d 615, 831 P.2d 1197 (1992). According to Plaintiff, after it filed this action against Firstrans, Firstrans substituted another vendor to deliver one of Plaintiff's pending orders. (Dkt. 52 [Opp'n] at 13.) Plaintiff alleges that Firstrans acted negligently when it substituted this vendor without notifying Plaintiff [*12] because those fireworks were subsequently damaged. (Id.)

Plaintiff alleges no facts to indicate that defendant acted negligently in selecting the substitute vendor. Nor does Plaintiff allege any causal connection between Firstrans's selection of the new vendor and Plaintiff's alleged damages. Plaintiffs' boilerplate recitations of the elements of a negligence action are insufficient to state a claim. See Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556-57. Firstrans's motion to dismiss with respect to this claim is GRANTED. Because it is unclear whether the deficiencies in the First Amended Complaint could be cured by amendment, Plaintiff's negligence claim is DISMISSED WITH FOURTEEN DAYS' LEAVE TO AMEND.

Plaintiff's next cause of action asks the Court to "pierce the corporate veil to obtain a court order as [sic] against individual defendant Mr. Ding." (FAC ¶ 126.) However, piercing the corporate veil is not an independent cause of action, but rather a procedural device that allows courts to disregard a corporate entity and hold individuals liable for the corporation's obligations. See Hennessey's Tavern, Inc. v. Am. Air Filter Co., 204 Cal. App. 3d 1351, 1359, 251 Cal. Rptr. 859 (1988). Under California law, two conditions must be met before courts are permitted to invoke this doctrine. First, there must be "such a unity of interest [*13] and ownership between the corporation and its equitable owner" that separate personalities do not exist. Sonora Diamond Corp. v. Superior Court, 83 Cal. App. 4th 523, 538, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 824 (2000). Next, "there must be an inequitable result if the acts in question are treated as those of the corporation alone." Id. Piercing the corporate veil is "an extreme remedy, sparingly used" by courts. Id.

Plaintiff has not alleged any facts to suggest that it is appropriate for the Court to pierce the corporate veil in this case. Plaintiff's sole allegation regarding this claim is that "Mr. Ding dominates and controls the corporate defendants Firstrans and Hua Yang." (FAC ¶ 138.) This allegation alone does not provide sufficient grounds for the application of the doctrine. Firstrans's motion to dismiss with respect to this claim is GRANTED. Because it is unclear whether the deficiencies in the First Amended Complaint could be cured by amendment, Plaintiff's "piercing the corporate veil" claim is DISMISSED WITH FOURTEEN DAYS' LEAVE TO AMEND.

Plaintiff also brings a claim under the Florida Deceptive and Unfair Trade Practices Act ("FDUTPA"), Fla. Stat. Ann. § 501.201, et seq. To state a claim under the FDUTPA, a plaintiff must allege (1) a deceptive act or unfair practice, (2) causation, and (3) actual damages. Rollins, Inc. v. Butland, 951 So. 2d 860, 869 (Fla. Ct. App. 2006). A deceptive [*14] practice is "one that is likely to mislead consumers," whereas an unfair practice is "one that offends established public policy and one that is immoral, unethical, oppressive, unscrupulous or substantially injurious to consumers." Tuckish v. Pompano Motor Co., 337 F. Supp. 2d 1313, 1320 (S.D. Fla. 2004) (internal quotation marks and citations omitted). The FDUTPA can be violated in two ways: "(1) a per se violation premised on the violation of another law proscribing unfair or deceptive practice and (2) adopting an unfair or deceptive practice." Hap v. Toll Jupiter Ltd. P'ship, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5866, 2009 WL 187938, at *9 (S.D. Fla. Jan. 27, 2009).

Given that Plaintiff has failed to plead that Firstrans violated any law proscribing unfair or deceptive practices, the first approach is inapplicable here. Nor can Plaintiff rely on the second approach. Plaintiff's First Amended Complaint merely asserts, without support, that "[t]he acts described above . . . are both deceptive and unfair." (FAC ¶ 158.) Plaintiff fails to allege any specific actions taken by Firstrans that were deceptive or unfair. Again, "[t]hreadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements," cannot alone defeat a motion to dismiss. See Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678. Firstrans's motion to dismiss with respect to this claim is GRANTED. Because it is unclear whether the deficiencies [*15] in the First Amended Complaint could be cured by amendment, Plaintiff's FDUTPA claim is DISMISSED WITH FOURTEEN DAYS' LEAVE TO AMEND.

Plaintiff's next cause of action alleges that Firstrans engaged in a civil conspiracy. (FAC ¶¶ 153-56.) However, "[c]onspiracy is not a cause of action, but a legal doctrine that imposes liability on persons who, although not actually committing a tort themselves, share with the immediate tortfeasors a common plan or design in its perpetration." _Applied Equip. Corp. v. Litton Saudi Arabia Ltd., 7 Cal. 4th 503, 510-11, 28 Cal. Rptr. 2d 475, 869 P.2d 454 (1994)_. To state a claim for civil conspiracy, a plaintiff must allege (1) the formation and operation of a conspiracy, (2) the wrongful act or acts done pursuant thereto, and (3) the damage resulting from such act or acts. _Younan v. Equifax, Inc., 111 Cal. App. 3d 498, 511 n.9, 169 Cal. Rptr. 478 (1980)_. A civil conspiracy "must be activated by the commission of an actual tort," _Applied Equip. Corp., 7 Cal. 4th at 511_, or other wrong, _Younan, 111 Cal. App. 3d at 511 n.9_.

Plaintiff's First Amended Complaint fails to allege that such a tort has been committed. Rather, Plaintiff's claims for civil conspiracy are entirely premised on Defendants' alleged antitrust violations. (FAC ¶ 154.) Because Plaintiffs failed to allege sufficient facts to establish such violations, there is no independent wrongful act on which to base their civil conspiracy claims. Firstrans's motion [*16] to dismiss with respect to this claim is GRANTED. Because it is unclear whether the deficiencies in the First Amended Complaint could be cured by amendment, Plaintiff's civil conspiracy claim is DISMISSED WITH FOURTEEN DAYS' LEAVE TO AMEND.

Plaintiff's final cause of action alleges that Firstrans has been unjustly enriched by the inflated prices it allegedly charges for the shipment of fireworks. (FAC ¶¶ 161-64.) Under California law, unjust enrichment is not an independent cause of action, but rather the theory "underlying a claim that a defendant has been unjustly conferred a benefit 'through mistake, fraud, coercion, or request.'" _Astiana v. Hain Celestial Grp., Inc., 783 F.3d 753, 762 (9th Cir. 2015)_ (quoting 55 Cal. Jur. 3d Restitution § 2). A plaintiff seeks the return of that benefit typically in a quasi-contract cause of action. Id. Here, Plaintiff alleges that the prices it paid for shipping services unjustly conferred a benefit on Firstrans. (FAC ¶ 162.) However, Plaintiff alleges no facts to indicate that defendant received this benefit unjustly. Plaintiff does not allege how any benefit was obtained through "mistake, fraud, coercion, or request." _Astiana, 783 F.3d at 762_ (internal quotations omitted). The bare allegation that Firstrans was unjustly enriched "as a result [*17] of [its] wrongful and illegal conduct" is insufficient to survive a motion to dismiss. See _Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678_. Firstrans's motion to dismiss with respect to this claim is GRANTED. Because it is unclear whether the deficiencies in the First Amended Complaint could be cured by amendment, Plaintiff's unjust enrichment claim is DISMISSED WITH FOURTEEN DAYS' LEAVE TO AMEND.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, Firstrans's motion is GRANTED. Plaintiff's tying claim is DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE. The remainder of Plaintiff's claims are DISMISSED WITH FOURTEEN DAYS' LEAVE TO AMEND.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > Limitations

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements

HN1[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Courts have universally applied the rule of reason to reverse payment settlements, including those involving a no-AG agreement. The per rule is appropriate only after courts have had considerable experience with the type of restraint at issue.

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Magistrates > Objections

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Magistrates > Standards of Review

HN2[] Magistrates, Objections

Objections that do not attempt to undermine the magistrate judge's findings or recommendations by presenting additional arguments do not require the court to make de novo determinations of the R&R findings.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN3[] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Per Se Violations

The per se rules treat certain business practices as necessarily illegal. By treating a particular business practice as necessarily illegal, the per se rules, by their very nature, preclude a court from considering the surrounding circumstances of that practice before deeming it illegal.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Intellectual Property

HN4[] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

Patent and antitrust policies are both relevant in determining the scope of the patent monopoly-and consequently antitrust law immunity-that is conferred by a patent.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Intellectual Property

HN5[] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

It would be incongruous to determine antitrust legality by measuring a reverse payment settlement's anticompetitive effects solely against patent law policy, rather than by measuring them against procompetitive antitrust policies as well.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Intellectual Property

HN6[] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

Courts are bound to evaluate a reverse payment settlement under the rule of reason, regardless of the settlement's form. Reverse payment settlements can sometimes violate the antitrust laws. Accordingly, reverse payment settlements should not be evaluated under presumptive rules (or a quick look approach). Applying presumptive rules is appropriate only where an observer with even a rudimentary understanding of economics could conclude that the arrangements in question would have an anticompetitive effect on customers and markets. Reverse payment settlements do not meet this criterion.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Intellectual Property

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

HN7[] Actual Monopolization, Anticompetitive & Predatory Practices

Applying presumptive rules to reverse payment settlements would be inappropriate because the likelihood of a reverse payment bringing about anticompetitive effects depends upon its size, its scale in relation to the payor's anticipated future litigation costs, its independence from other services for which it might represent payment, and the lack of any other convincing justification. To account for these complexities of a reverse payment settlement, a court reviewing a reverse payment settlement should apply the rule of reason to determine whether that settlement violates the antitrust laws. Under the rule of reason, the factfinder weighs all of the circumstances of a case in deciding whether a restrictive practice should be prohibited as imposing an unreasonable restraint on competition. An analysis of the reasonableness of particular restraints includes consideration of the facts peculiar to the business in which the restraint is applied, the nature of the restraint and its effects, and the history of the restraint and the reasons for its adoption. Applying a per se rule to a reverse payment settlement would be inappropriate because a presumptive rule would not account for the circumstances and complexities surrounding a reverse payment settlement.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN8[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A district court's dismissal under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) is, of course, with prejudice unless it specifically orders dismissal without prejudice. That determination is within the district court's discretion.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN9[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A complaint must be dismissed if plaintiff's allegations fail to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b) (6). To survive a motion to dismiss, a complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face. Facial plausibility means that a plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged. It is, therefore, not enough for a plaintiff to allege facts demonstrating a sheer possibility or mere consistency with unlawful conduct. The court accepts facts alleged in the complaints as true and views those facts in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. A motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6) tests the sufficiency of a complaint; importantly, it does not resolve contests surrounding the facts, the merits of a claim, or the applicability of defenses.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN10[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

When a court considers relevant facts from the public record at the pleading stage, the court must construe such facts in the light most favorable to the plaintiffs.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN11[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

The court need not accept as true, for purposes of Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), allegations contradicting documents that are referenced in the complaint.

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Ambiguities & Contra Proferentem

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation

HN12[] Contract Interpretation, Ambiguities & Contra Proferentem

An ambiguity in a contract exists if the terms of the contract are susceptible to at least two reasonable alternative interpretations. Consistent with familiar canons of construction, the words of an agreement are given their ordinary meaning. Technical terms or words of art will be given their technical meaning, unless the context or local usage shows a contrary intention.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN13[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

The plausibility pleading standard requires plaintiffs to plead sufficient facts that when accepted as true allow the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged. At the pleading stage, the court considers plausibility, not probability.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Procedural Matters

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Members > Absent Members

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Class Members > Named Members

HN14[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Procedural Matters

Thus, a class representative that is not a Utah citizen or resident may bring claims under the Utah Antitrust Act on behalf of absent class members who are citizens or residents of Utah.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN15[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

Arizona's consumer protection statute covers an unfair act, Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 44-1522(A), includes a Federal Trade Commission Act harmonization provision, § 44-1522(C), and therefore, broadly covers unfair trade practices.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN16[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

Idaho's consumer protection statute is limited to unconscionable sales conduct that is directed at the consumer.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN17[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

Maine's consumer protection statute encompasses claims of unfair methods of competition and includes a Federal Trade Commission Act harmonization provision, Me. Stat. tit. 5, § 207.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN18[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

Vermont's consumer protection statute should be broadly read, and the Federal Trade Commission Act harmonization provision in Vermont's consumer protection statute applies to Vt. Stat. Ann. tit. 9, § 2453(a), which sets out the practices prohibited under the Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Procedural Matters

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions

HN19[] Antitrust & Trade Law, Procedural Matters

The Illinois Antitrust Act class-action bar does not apply in federal court.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN20[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

Virginia's consumer protection statute provides a remedy for any person who suffers loss as the result of a violation of the chapter. Va. Code Ann. § 59.1-204. "Person" means any natural person, corporation, trust, partnership, association and any other legal entity. Va. Code Ann. § 59.1-198. And, the loss must be the result of fraudulent acts or practices committed by a supplier in connection with a consumer transaction. Va. Code Ann. §§ 59.1-204, 59.1-200.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN21[] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

The plain text of W. Va. Code § 46A-6-106(c) clearly permits a post-filing demand letter.

Contracts Law > Remedies > Equitable Relief > Quantum Meruit

HN22[] Equitable Relief, Quantum Meruit

For an unjust enrichment claim to proceed in New York, the relationship between the purchasers and the producers cannot be too attenuated. This means that a product's indirect purchaser cannot assert an unjust enrichment claim against an entity that manufactured one of that product's ingredients, but that an indirect purchaser can assert such an unjust enrichment claim against the manufacturer of the product itself.

Opinion

[*422] These matters come before the court on the Glenmark Defendants'[1] Motion to Dismiss Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs' Consolidated Class Action Complaint, ECF No. 157;[2] the Defendants' Joint Motion to Dismiss the Retailer Plaintiffs' Complaints, ECF No. 160; and the Defendants' Joint Motion to Dismiss All Claims [12] Asserted by End Payer Plaintiffs, ECF No. 162.

On November 27, 2018, these matters were referred to United States Magistrate Judge Douglas E. Miller pursuant to the provisions of 28 U.S.C. § 636(b) (1)(B) and Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 72(b), to conduct necessary hearings, including the hearing that was held on January 14, 2019, and to submit to the undersigned district judge proposed findings of fact, if applicable, and recommendations for the disposition of the Motions. Referral Order, ECF No. 208.

By copy of the Magistrate Judge's Report and Recommendation ("R&R"), filed on February 6, 2019, the parties were advised of their right to file written objections to the findings and recommendations made by the Magistrate Judge within fourteen (14) days from the date of service of the R&R on the objecting party. R&R at 105, ECF No. 234. Three sets of objections were filed on February 20, 2019: Retailer Plaintiffs' Objections to Report and Recommendation Regarding Motions to Dismiss ("Retailer Plaintiffs' Objections"), ECF No. 235; Glenmark Defendants' Objections to the February 6, 2019 Report and Recommendation Denying Motions to Dismiss Claims by Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs, End-Payor Plaintiffs, and Retailer Plaintiffs ("Glenmark Defendants' Objections"), [13] ECF No. 236; and Merck Defendants' Written Objections to the Magistrate Judge's Report and Recommendation Dated February 6, 2019 ("Merck Defendants' Objections"), ECF No. 237.[3] Responses to each set of objections were filed on March 6, 2019: Defendants' Joint Response to Retailer Plaintiffs' Objections

[1] The Glenmark Defendants consist of Glenmark Pharmaceuticals, Ltd. and Glenmark Pharmaceuticals Inc., USA, the latter incorrectly identified as Glenmark Generics Inc., USA.

[2] The Merck Defendants filed a Notice of Joinder in the Glenmark Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs' Consolidated Class Action Complaint on October 11, 2018. ECF No. 164. The Merck Defendants consist of Merck & Co., Inc.; Merck Sharp & Dohme Corp.; Schering-Plough Corp.; Schering Corp.; and MSP Singapore Co. LLC.

[3] The Merck Defendants join in the Glenmark Defendants' Objections, Merck Defs.' Objs. at 2, and the Glenmark Defendants join in the Merck Defendants' Objections, Glenmark Defs.' Objs. at 1 n.1.

("Defendants' Response"), ECF No. 240; Plaintiffs' Response to Glenmark Defendants' Objections ("Plaintiffs' Response"), ECF No. 239; and End-Payor Plaintiffs' Opposition to the Merck Defendants' Objections ("EPPs' Opposition"), ECF No. 238. On March 6, 2019, the Glenmark Defendants filed a request for hearing on [*423] their Objections. ECF No. 241. The court finds a hearing unnecessary to resolve the Glenmark Defendants' Objections.

Pursuant to Rule 72(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the court, having reviewed the record in its entirety, hereby makes a de novo determination of those portions of the R&R to which the Defendants have specifically objected. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 72(b). The court may accept, reject, or modify, in whole or in part, the recommendation of the Magistrate Judge, or recommit the matter to him with instructions. 28 U.S.C. § 636(b) (1).

I. Retailer Plaintiffs' Objections

The Retailer Plaintiffs object to the portion of the R&R "that recommends dismissal [14] of Retailer Plaintiffs' per se claim under section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1." Retailer Pls.' Objs. at 1. Specifically, the Retailer Plaintiffs assert that this "recommendation rests on two legally untenable propositions." Id. The first proposition is that Merck's existing patent rights preclude application of the per se rule. Id. (citing R&R at 51). The second proposition is that applying a per se rule would preclude the court from examining the Defendants' proffered justifications for settlement. Id. As explained below, the court finds that both propositions are legally tenable and consistent with controlling Supreme Court precedent.

The Retailer Plaintiffs' objections assume that the form of the alleged reverse payment settlement in this case, an agreement by Merck not to compete with Glenmark by launching an authorized generic (a "no-AG agreement"), requires this court to depart from FTC v. Actavis, Inc., 570 U.S. 136, 133 S. Ct. 2223, 186 L. Ed. 2d 343 (2013), and apply a per se rule. Retailer Pls.' Objs. at 15 ("Retailer Plaintiffs do not contend that all reverse-payment settlement[s] should be subject to per se condemnation, but rather that no-AG agreements should be subject to such condemnation."). However, the Retailer Plaintiffs have not put forth any meritorious argument [15] why the form of a reverse payment settlement, such as a no-AG agreement, warrants a departure from Actavis. HN1[] The Retailer Plaintiffs also have not identified any case in which a court applied a per se rule to a reverse payment settlement or a no-AG agreement, and courts have universally applied the rule of reason to reverse payment settlements, including those involving a no-AG agreement. See, e.g., United Food & Commercial Workers Local 1776 & Participating Emps. Health & Welfare Fund v. Teikoku Pharma USA, Inc., 74 F. Supp. 3d 1052, 1075 & n.30 (N.D. Cal. 2014) (citing cases in which "district courts have considered no-authorized generic agreements under the rule of reason approach as set forth by the Court in Actavis"); see also Leegin Creative Leather Prods., Inc. v. PSKS, Inc., 551 U.S. 877, 886, 127 S. Ct. 2705, 168 L. Ed. 2d 623 (2007) ("[T]he per se rule is appropriate only after courts have had considerable experience with the type of restraint at issue." (citing Broadcast Music, Inc. v. Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc., 441 U.S. 1, 9, 99 S. Ct. 1551, 60 L. Ed. 2d 1 (1979))).

Instead, the Retailer Plaintiffs have analogized the alleged no-AG agreement to three instances in which per se rules apply: a horizontal market-allegation agreement, a horizontal output restriction, and a price-fixing agreement. See Retailer Pls.' Objs. at 18-23. In the R&R, the Magistrate Judge aptly concluded that these analogies to various per se violations all share "the same fatal defect. Each relies solely on a characterization of the [16] [no-AG] Agreement's effects while ignoring entirely the admittedly lawful basis Defendants assert for those same effects." R&R at 54. The [*424] Retailer Plaintiffs do not challenge this conclusion by adjusting their analogies or making any new arguments for applying a per se rule. See Retailer Pls.' Objs. In fact, the Retailer Plaintiffs' objections appear to repeat verbatim their entire argument for applying a per se rule, including the analogies, from their Memorandum in Opposition to Defendants' Motion to Dismiss. Compare id. at 15-23, with ECF No. 186 at 7-16.[4]

[4] This portion of the Retailer Plaintiffs' Objections that repeats verbatim prior arguments is not a proper objection and is not entitled to de novo review. HN2[] Objections that "do not attempt to undermine the Magistrate Judge's findings or recommendations by presenting additional arguments . . . do not require this court to make de novo determinations of the R&R findings." *Bennett v. Zydron, No. 2:17CV92, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 154692, 2017 WL 4176972, at 2 (E.D. Va. Sept. 21, 2017) (citing Nichols v. Colvin*, 100 F. Supp. 3d 487, 498 (E.D. Va. 2015)); Williams v. Astrue, No. 2:09cr60, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS

To undermine the Magistrate Judge's conclusion, the Retailer Plaintiffs attack his consideration of "the admittedly lawful basis Defendants assert for [the] effects [of the no-AG agreement]" in determining that a per se rule would be inappropriate. R&R at 54. The Retailer Plaintiffs do so by objecting to the Magistrate Judge's recognition of Merck's patent rights and the Magistrate Judge's proper application of Actavis, which permits courts to consider the proffered justifications for an alleged reverse payment settlement. Retailer Pls.' Objs. at 1. The Retailer Plaintiffs' objections overlook the very [17] nature of the per se rules and disregard the clear and binding precedent of Actavis that directs courts to analyze reverse payment settlements under the rule of reason.

HN3[] The per se rules treat certain business practices as "necessarily illegal." Leegin Creative Leather Prods., Inc., 551 U.S. at 886 ("The per se rule, treating categories of restraints as necessarily illegal, eliminates the need to study the reasonableness of an individual restraint in light of the real market forces at work . . . ." (emphasis added) (citing Bus. Elecs. Corp. v. Sharp Elecs. Corp., 485 U.S. 717, 723, 108 S. Ct. 1515, 99 L. Ed. 2d 808 (1988))). Thus, if the court applied a per se rule to an alleged reverse payment settlement because it took the form of a no-AG agreement, the court must treat that settlement as "necessarily illegal." See id. By treating a particular business practice as "necessarily illegal," the per se rules, by their very nature, preclude a court from considering the surrounding circumstances of that practice before deeming it illegal. See id.

Thus, applying a per se rule to the alleged no-AG agreement and finding it to be necessarily illegal would preclude the court from balancing the competing patent and antitrust polices that arise in the context of a reverse payment settlement. See Actavis, 570 U.S. at 148 HN4[] ("[P]atent and antitrust policies are both relevant [18] in determining the 'scope of the patent monopoly'-and consequently antitrust law immunity-that is conferred by a patent."). The line of reasoning in the R&R related to Merck's patent rights does nothing more than recognize that applying a per se rule would be inappropriate in this case because of the balance that must be struck between competing patent and antitrust policies. See R&R at 51-53. This line of reasoning in the R&R further recognizes that patent polices do not become any less relevant in determining the antitrust immunity conferred by a patent when the reverse payment settlement [*425] takes the form of a no-AG agreement. See id.

Similarly, applying a per se rule to the alleged no-AG agreement and finding it to be necessarily illegal would preclude the court from considering the reasonableness of and the procompetitive justifications for the alleged reverse payment settlement, as required by Actavis. See Actavis, 570 U.S. at 148 HN5[] ("[I]t would be incongruous to determine antitrust legality by measuring the settlement's anticompetitive effects solely against patent law policy, rather than by measuring them against procompetitive antitrust policies as well."); id. at 154 ("We concede that settlement on terms permitting the patent [19] challenger to enter the market before the patent expires would also bring about competition, again to the consumer's benefit.").

HN6[] Moreover, this court is bound by Actavis to evaluate a reverse payment settlement under the rule of reason, regardless of the settlement's form. In Actavis, the Supreme Court held that "reverse payment settlements . . . can sometimes violate the antitrust laws." Id. at 141 (emphasis added). Accordingly, the Court specifically refused to evaluate reverse payment settlements under "presumptive rules (or a 'quick look' approach)." Id. at 159. The Court reasoned that applying presumptive rules "is appropriate only where 'an observer with even a rudimentary understanding of economics could conclude that the arrangements in question would have an anticompetitive effect on customers and markets.'" Id. (quoting Cal. Dental Ass'n v. FTC, 526 U.S. 756, 770, 119 S. Ct. 1604, 143 L. Ed. 2d 935 (1999)). The Court did "not believe that reverse payment settlements . . . meet this criterion." Id.

HN7[] The Court further reasoned that applying presumptive rules to reverse payment settlements would be inappropriate "because the likelihood of a reverse payment bringing about anticompetitive effects depends upon its size, its scale in relation to the payor's anticipated future litigation [20] costs, its independence from other services for which it might represent payment, and the lack of any other convincing justification." Id. To account for "these complexities" of a reverse payment settlement, the Court also held that a court reviewing a reverse payment settlement should apply the "rule of reason" to determine whether that settlement violates the antitrust laws. Id.; see also Cont'l T. V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 49, 97 S. Ct. 2549, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568 (1977) ("Under th[e] rule [of reason], the factfinder weighs all of the circumstances of a case in deciding whether a restrictive practice should be prohibited as imposing an unreasonable restraint on competition."); United States v. Topco Assocs., Inc., 405 U.S. 596, 607, 92 S. Ct. 1126, 31 L. Ed. 2d 515 (1972) ("An analysis of the reasonableness of particular restraints includes consideration of the facts peculiar to the business in which the restraint is applied, the nature of the restraint and its effects, and the history of the restraint and the reasons for its adoption." (citing Chicago Board of Trade v. United States, 246 U.S. 231, 238, 38 S. Ct. 242, 62 L. Ed. 683 (1918))). In reaching this conclusion, the Court implicitly held that applying a per se rule to a reverse payment settlement would be inappropriate because a presumptive rule would not account for the circumstances and complexities surrounding a reverse payment settlement. See Actavis, 570 U.S. at 159.

Accordingly, the court finds that the reasoning [21] and conclusions in the R&R that the Retailer Plaintiffs have specifically objected to are consistent with controlling Supreme Court precedent. The court [*426] further agrees with the Magistrate Judge's conclusion that the reverse payment settlement at issue in this case is properly evaluated under the rule of reason. Therefore, the Retailer Plaintiffs' Objections are hereby OVERRULED, and the Retailer Plaintiffs' per se claim under § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, is DISMISSED with prejudice.[5]

II. Glenmark Defendants' Objections

The Glenmark Defendants "object[] to Section V(A) of the R&R that concludes Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs, End-Payor Plaintiffs, and Retailer [Plaintiffs] have plausibly pled (1) the existence of a reverse payment that is large and unjustified, and (2) anticompetitive effects." Glenmark Defs.' Objs. at 1. The Glenmark Defendants also object to Sections V(C), (D) (1), and (D) (4) of the R&R to the extent those Sections incorporate the reasoning in Section V(A). Id.

HN9[] At this stage of the litigation, the Complaints must be dismissed if Plaintiffs' allegations "fail[] to state a claim upon which relief can be granted." Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b) (6). "To survive a motion to dismiss, a complaint must contain sufficient [22] factual matter, accepted as true, to 'state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.'" Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (quoting Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007)). Facial plausibility means that a "plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Id. (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556). It is, therefore, not enough for a plaintiff to allege facts demonstrating a "sheer possibility" or "mere[] consist[ency]" with unlawful conduct. Id. (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 557).

The court accepts facts alleged in the Complaints as true and views those facts in the light most favorable to the Plaintiffs. See, e.g., Venkatraman v. REI Sys., Inc., 417 F.3d 418, 420 (4th Cir. 2005). "A motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b) (6) tests the sufficiency of a complaint; importantly, it does not resolve contests surrounding the facts, the merits of a claim, or the applicability of defenses." Republican Party of N.C. v. Martin, 980 F.2d 943, 952 (4th Cir. 1992) (emphasis added).[6]

A. Objection Regarding the Existence of a Large and Unjustified Reverse Payment

[5] HN8[] "A district court's dismissal under Rule 12(b)(6) is, of course, with prejudice unless it specifically orders dismissal without prejudice. That determination is within the district court's discretion." Carter v. Norfolk Cmty. Hosp. Ass'n, Inc., 761 F.2d 970, 974 (4th Cir. 1985).

[6] To the extent that the analysis and conclusions in the R&R improperly relied upon Advanced Health-Care Servs., Inc. v. Radford Cmty. Hosp., 910 F.2d 139, 144 (4th Cir. 1990), R&R at 27, the court clarifies that the analysis and conclusions in this Order rely on the standards outlined here, and not on Advanced Health-Care Servs., 910 F.2d 139. See Glenmark Defs.' Objs. at 11.

The Glenmark Defendants object to two different aspects of the Magistrate Judge's finding that the Plaintiffs have plausibly pled the existence of a large and unjustified reverse payment. First, the Glenmark Defendants assert that the Magistrate Judge's conclusion that the Settlement Agreement contains a no-AG [23] provision applies the improper legal standard and misreads the Settlement Agreement. Glenmark Defs.' Objs. at 4-5, 14-19. Second, the Glenmark Defendants assert that the Plaintiffs' circumstantial allegations of parallel conduct, without more, are insufficient [*427] to plausibly allege the existence of a no-AG agreement. Id. at 5, 19-22.

1. The Settlement Agreement

As a threshold matter, the Settlement Agreement is properly considered at this stage of litigation. HN10[] Consideration of the Settlement Agreement does not convert, under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(d), the Motions to Dismiss into Motions for Summary Judgment under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56, because the Settlement Agreement is "integral to and explicitly relied on in the [C]omplaint[s] and because [P]laintiffs do not challenge its authenticity." Phillips v. LCI Int'l, Inc., 190 F.3d 609, 618 (4th Cir. 1999). The Settlement Agreement must be viewed in the light most favorable to the Plaintiffs and all reasonable inferences from it must be drawn in the Plaintiffs' favor. See, e.g., Zak v. Chelsea Therapeutics Int'l, Ltd., 780 F.3d 597, 607 (4th Cir. 2015) HN11[] ("[W]hen a court considers relevant facts from the public record at the pleading stage, the court must construe such facts in the light most favorable to the plaintiffs.").

The Glenmark Defendants assert that the R&R is incorrect when it states that the Settlement Agreement's "language is [24] only relevant if it unambiguously contradicts the factual claims in the Complaint." Glenmark Defs.' Objs. at 14 (emphasis omitted) (quoting R&R at 34). There is no question that the Settlement Agreement's language is relevant, as its contents are directly at issue in this case, the point here being relevancy. Better stated, and what the court concludes, is that the Settlement Agreement language only requires dismissal of the Plaintiffs' claims if it unambiguously contradicts the allegations in the Complaints. See R&R at 40; see also, e.g., Lazy Y Ranch Ltd. v. Behrens, 546 F.3d 580, 588 (9th Cir. 2008) ("[W]e need not accept as true allegations contradicting documents that are referenced in the complaint."); Alt. Energy, Inc. v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 267 F.3d 30, 34-36 (1st Cir. 2001) (concluding the complaint was properly dismissed under 12(b)(6) because the contract language at issue was unambiguous and released defendant from liability as a matter of law).

The Glenmark Defendants assert that three provisions of the Settlement Agreement, sections 1.14, 5.3, and 7.2(c), "unambiguously contradict" the Plaintiffs' allegations that Merck agreed not to compete with Glenmark by launching an AG. Glenmark Defs.' Objs. at 14 n.8. Section 5.3 of the Settlement Agreement grants Glenmark a limited exclusive license to market "Generic Ezetimibe":

> During any period of exclusivity to [25] which Glenmark is entitled under 21 U.S.C. § 355(j) (5) (B)(iv), and through the expiration of Schering's rights under the '721 Patent and Ezetimibe Pediatric Exclusivity, Schering's grant of the rights in Paragraphs 5.1 and 5.2 is exclusive to Glenmark and its Affiliates with respect to the commercial distribution and sale of Generic Ezetimibe, subject only to Schering's right to grant rights to or otherwise authorize Third Parties to make, have made, use, sell, offer to sell, import or distribute Generic Ezetimibe pursuant to such Third Parties' ANDAs or applications pursuant to 21 U.S.C. § 355(b) (2).

Settlement Agreement § 5.3, ECF No. 159.[7] Section 1.14 of the Settlement Agreement [*428] defines the term "Generic Ezetimibe":

> The term 'Generic Ezetimibe' shall mean a drug product containing ezetimibe as its sole active ingredient (a) that refers to the Approved Zetia Product as the reference-listed drug in an ANDA or pursuant to an application under 21 U.S.C. § 355(b)(2) or (b) that is sold pursuant to NDA No. 21-445 but is not sold under the trademark Zetia® or another trademark or trade name of Schering, MSP or their Affiliates.

[7] The Settlement Agreement remains filed under seal. The sections quoted and cited herein have previously been quoted or cited in publicly filed documents. See, e.g., R&R at 19-20, 32.

Id. § 1.14. Section 7.2(c) reserves Merck's right to engage in "conventional commercial conduct in competition with the Glenmark Product." Id. § 7.2(c).

The Glenmark Defendants have aptly identified [26] the current question before the court as "whether [this] license can plausibly be read to be an anticompetitive agreement by Merck not to compete with Glenmark by launching an AG." Glenmark Defs.' Objs. at 10. The answer to this question depends on the interpretation of the Settlement Agreement's definition of "Generic Ezetimibe," and whether that definition permits Merck to sell an AG. The Settlement Agreement's definition of "Generic Ezetimibe" permits Merck to sell a product pursuant to its NDA, provided the product is "sold under the trademark Zetia® or another trademark or trade name of Schering, MSP or their Affiliates." Settlement Agreement § 1.14.

The parties and the court agree that the Settlement Agreement's definition of "Generic Ezetimibe" clearly permits Merck to sell a branded product, that is, a product "sold under the trademark Zetia® or another trademark . . . of Schering, MSP or their Affiliates." Id.; Glenmark Defs.' Objs. at 17 ("'Zetia' and 'trademark' already refer to branded products."); Pls.' Resp. at 10 ("Glenmark's exclusivity does not extend to branded Zetia or to an ezetimibe product that Merck might sell under another trademark or trade name."). The Magistrate [27] Judge and the Plaintiffs agree that the Settlement Agreement's definition of "Generic Ezetimibe," permitting Merck to sell a product that is "sold under . . . another . . . trade name of Schering, MSP or their Affiliates," can plausibly be read to allow Merck to sell only a branded product. Settlement Agreement § 1.14 (emphasis added); R&R at 35-39; Pls.' Resp. at 10 ("Glenmark's exclusivity does not extend to branded Zetia or to an ezetimibe product that Merck might sell under another trademark or trade name."). The Glenmark Defendants contend that this same language unambiguously "allowed Merck to . . . launch a nonbranded form of Zetia under a 'trade name' of Merck or an affiliate, i.e., an in-house AG." Glenmark Defs.' Objs. at 14 (citing Settlement Agreement § 1.14).

The court agrees with the Magistrate Judge and the Plaintiffs that the Settlement Agreement's definition of "Generic Ezetimibe" can plausibly be read as a no-AG agreement because it permits Merck to sell only a branded, and not a generic, product. See Settlement Agreement § 1.14. As the Magistrate Judge noted, "pharmaceuticals are not sold 'under' a manufacturer's name, but under either a trademarked specialty name for branded drugs (e.g. Zetia, [28] Lipitor, or Celebrex) or under the generic name assigned by the [United States Adopted Names ("USAN")] Council (e.g. ezetimibe, atorvastatin, celecoxib)." R&R at 38. Moreover, the pharmaceutical industry uses the term "trade name" to refer to "a drug product, not the drug company." Pls.' Resp. at 13. This usage of the term "trade name" in the pharmaceutical industry is supported by statutory and regulatory provisions, industry publications, and the Glenmark Defendants' [*429] filings in the underlying litigation between the Defendants.

At least one provision of the Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act ("FDCA") specifically uses the term "trade name" to refer to a pharmaceutical product, not a pharmaceutical company. See 21 U.S.C. § 355(t)(1)(A)(i). Title 21 U.S.C. § 355(t)(1)(A)(i) directs that the "drug trade name" and "brand company manufacturer" are to be included in a "[d]atabase for authorized generic drugs." Id. The United States Food & Drug Administration's ("FDA") Listing of Authorized Generics indicates that a drug's trade name is the same as its proprietary or brand name, as the Listing of Authorized Generics includes the "[p]roprietary [n]ame," but not the generic name of a given product.[8]

At least [29] three provisions in Title 21 of the Code of Federal Regulations also use the term "trade name" to refer to a pharmaceutical product, not a pharmaceutical company. See, e.g., 21 C.F.R §§ 1.101, 60.20, 316.28. At least two of these provisions also distinguish the "trade name" of a product from its "generic name." See, e.g., id. §§ 60.20, 316.28. Section 1.101 requires "[t]he product's trade name" be identified in the notifications required "for drugs, biological products, and devices exported under section 802 of the act." Id. § 1.101(d) (1) (i). Under § 60.20, the FDA will include "[t]he trade name and generic name (if applicable) of the product" in the "regulatory review period determination" notice published in the Federal Register. Id. § 60.20(c) (2). Pursuant to § 316.28, the FDA will include "[t]he generic name and trade name, if any, or if neither is available, the chemical name or a meaningful descriptive name of the drug" in a "publicly available cumulative posting of all drugs designated as orphan drugs." Id. § 316.28(b).

Publications from the FDA and Merck further support the Plaintiffs' reading of the term "trade name" to refer to a pharmaceutical product, not a pharmaceutical company. The FDA's publication Approved Drug Products with Therapeutic Equivalence Evaluations, commonly known as the "Orange Book," uses [30] the term "trade name" to refer to the proprietary name of a pharmaceutical product. FDA, Approved Drug Products with Therapeutic Equivalence Evaluations ("Orange Book") at vi (39th ed. 2019) ("This publication also includes indices of prescription and OTC drug products by trade name (proprietary name) or established name (if no trade name exists)."); see also id. at xii, xxii, 2-2. A publication from Merck discussing drug naming explains that pharmaceuticals are "given a [g]eneric (official) name" and a "[b]rand (proprietary or trademark or trade) name."[9] This publication not only demonstrates the use of "trade name" to identify a drug, but further illustrates that a drug's "trade name" refers to a brand, proprietary, or trademark name, not a generic name. See Marsh, supra note 9. This use and understanding of the term "trade name" is further confirmed by the Glenmark Defendants' filing in the underlying litigation between the Glenmark and the Merck Defendants. In that litigation, Glenmark identified Zetia as "Schering's trade name of the drug product at issue in this litigation." Defendant/Counterclaim Plaintiff Glenmark Pharmaceuticals Inc. USA's, [*430] Corrected Answer, Affirmative Defenses, and Counterclaims [31] to Complaint ¶ 82, Schering Corp. v. Glenmark Pharm., Inc. USA, No. 2:07-cv-01334 (D.N.J. Jun. 7, 2007), ECF No. 20 ("Ezetimibe is the active ingredient in Schering's drug product Zetia®, Schering's trade name of the drug product at issue in this litigation." (emphasis added)).

Thus, the court can conclude that the term "trade name," as used in the Settlement Agreement's definition of "Generic Ezetimibe," can plausibly mean the proprietary or brand name of a drug product, and the Settlement Agreement permitted Merck to sell only a branded product. Because the Settlement Agreement allowed Merck to sell ezetimibe under a "trade name," or brand name, and not under the generic name "ezetimibe," the Settlement Agreement did not allow Merck to sell a generic product, including an AG. See R&R at 38. Therefore, the Settlement Agreement's definition of "Generic Ezetimibe" can plausibly be read as a no-AG agreement.

The Glenmark Defendants advance a competing interpretation of the Settlement Agreement that does not unambiguously contradict Plaintiffs' reading and render it implausible. See Glenmark Defs.' Objs. at 14-19. HN12[↑] Instead, the Glenmark Defendants' competing [32] interpretation highlights an ambiguity in the Settlement Agreement. See, e.g., Cooper River Plaza E., LLC v. Briad Grp., 359 N.J. Super. 518, 528, 820 A.2d 690 (App. Div. 2003) ("An ambiguity in a contract exists if the terms of the contract are susceptible to at least two reasonable alternative interpretations." (quoting Kaufman v. Provident Life & Cas. Ins. Co., 828 F. Supp. 275, 283 (D.N.J. 1992))); see also Settlement Agreement § 10.3 (selecting New Jersey Law). The Glenmark Defendants' interpretation relies upon the ordinary, dictionary, meaning of "trade name" to refer to a company. Glenmark Defs.' Objs. at 15-18; Flanigan v. Munson, 175 N.J. 597, 606, 818 A.2d 1275 (2003) ("Consistent with familiar canons of construction, the words of an agreement are given their 'ordinary' meaning."). Whereas, the Plaintiffs' interpretation relies on the meaning of "trade name" as used in the pharmaceutical industry to refer to a branded product. Plfs.' Resp. at 13-14; Guide to New Jersey Contract Law § 5.4.5 (2013) ("Technical terms or words of art will be given their technical meaning, unless the context or local usage shows a contrary intention." (citing Josefowicz v. Porter, 32 N.J. Super. 585, 591, 108 A.2d 865 (App. Div. 1954))).

At this juncture, the court does not need to determine which interpretation is more probable or correct. Martin, 980 F.2d at 952 ("A motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6) . . . does not resolve contests surrounding the facts."). Rather, the court finds that the Settlement Agreement's definition of "Generic Ezetimibe," [33] specifically, the meaning of "sold under . . . another . . . trade name of Schering, MSP or their Affiliates," is open to at least two reasonable alternative interpretations, and thus, the meaning of "trade name" is ambiguous. See Cooper River Plaza E., LLC, 359 N.J. Super. 518, 820 A.2d 690. Accordingly, the Settlement Agreement does not clearly and unambiguously allow Merck to sell an AG, and it can plausibly be read as a no-AG agreement because it only permits Merck to sell a branded, rather than a generic, product.

2. The Circumstantial Allegations

The Glenmark Defendants assert that the Plaintiffs' circumstantial allegations of parallel conduct, without more, are insufficient to plausibly allege the existence of a no-AG agreement. Glenmark Defs.' Objs. at 5-6, 19-22. The Glenmark Defendants [*431] further assert that "[t]he R&R erred in concluding otherwise." Id. at 19. However, the Magistrate Judge did not conclude in the R&R that the Plaintiffs' circumstantial allegations alone plausibly allege the existence of a no-AG agreement. See R&R at 31-32, 39-40.

The Magistrate Judge's conclusion that the Plaintiffs had plausibly alleged the existence of a no-AG agreement relied on the Plaintiffs' detailed allegations in the Complaints and the language in the Settlement Agreement. [34] Id. at 39-40 ("The other allegations in the Complaint[s], and the language of the Settlement Agreement itself, are sufficient to plausibly allege [a no-AG agreement]." (emphasis added)). The Magistrate Judge's analysis in the R&R viewed the Plaintiffs' circumstantial allegations as "corroborating," not independently supporting, the Plaintiffs' allegation of a no-AG agreement. Id. ("This is particularly so in light of other corroborating evidence of the Agreement, including Glenmark's claims to exclusivity on release of its generic ezetimibe and Merck's failure to release any authorized generic in competition with Glenmark's generic product throughout the 180-day period of exclusivity.").

Moreover, the success of the Glenmark Defendants' argument relies on the court finding that the Settlement Agreement does not plausibly contain a no-AG clause. Glenmark Defs.' Objs. at 19 ("In the absence of a plausible allegation as to the existence of a full No-AG clause in the Settlement Agreement, Plaintiffs are left only with alleged circumstantial evidence."). As discussed above, the court agrees with the conclusion in the R&R that the Settlement Agreement, when viewed in the light most favorable to the Plaintiffs, [35] plausibly contains a no-AG clause and does not render the Plaintiffs' allegation of a no-AG agreement implausible. Accordingly, the court agrees with the Magistrate Judge's analysis and views the Plaintiffs' circumstantial allegations as corroborating, rather than independently supporting, the Plaintiffs' plausible allegation of a no-AG agreement.

B. Objection Regarding Anticompetitive Effects

The Glenmark Defendants object to the Magistrate Judge's finding that the Plaintiffs have plausibly pled anticompetitive effects. Glenmark Defs.' Objs. at 1, 6, 22-25. The Glenmark Defendants assert that the Magistrate Judge erred in two different ways with respect to this finding. Id. at 22-25. First, the Glenmark Defendants assert that the Magistrate Judge applied the wrong legal standard in the R&R. Id. at 22-23. Second, the Glenmark Defendants assert that the Magistrate Judge incorrectly concluded that "important differences between the Mylan and Glenmark challenges undercut the Defendants' argument that the Plaintiffs' claims of anticompetitive effect lack plausibility." Id. at 23 (quoting R&R at 44).

First, the Magistrate Judge applied the correct legal standard. HN13[] The plausibility pleading standard requires the Plaintiffs to plead [36] sufficient facts that when accepted as true "allow[] the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678 (citing Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556). "[A]t the pleading stage," the court "consider[s] plausibility, not probability." In re Lipitor Antitrust Litig., 868 F.3d 231, 260 (3d Cir. 2017); see also id. at 267-68 (considering whether prior litigation rendered plaintiffs' allegations implausible).[10] Thus, [*432] the Magistrate Judge applied the correct legal standard when he assessed whether the later Mylan litigation renders Plaintiffs' allegations implausible, not whether it makes Plaintiffs' allegations less probable. See R&R at 44-45, 47-48.

[10] To the extent the Glenmark Defendants' object to the Magistrate Judge's reliance on In re Lipitor Antitrust Litig., 868 F.3d 231, 260 (3d Cir. 2017), Glenmark Defs.' Objs. at 24 n.15, the court agrees with the Magistrate Judge's consideration of this persuasive authority as instructive, R&R at 44-45.

Second, the Magistrate Judge correctly concluded that Merck's success in the later Mylan patent litigation does not render the Plaintiffs' allegations of anticompetitive effects implausible. R&R at 47 ("In short, the fact that Merck successfully defeated a single challenge by a later-in-time ANDA filer does not totally undermine Plaintiffs' claims of anticompetitive effect."). The Plaintiffs' allegations of anticompetitive effects are that "but for the no-AG promise, the strength of Glenmark's patent challenge would have produced one of two outcomes. The two companies would have settled with an earlier generic entry date, or Glenmark [37] would have prevailed in the litigation, invalidated the '721 patent, and launched its generic thereafter." Id. at 41 (citing DPP Compl. ¶¶ 199-203). If the Plaintiffs have plausibly alleged that Glenmark's patent claims against Merck had substantial merit, then the Plaintiffs have alleged "anticompetitive effect because Glenmark's delay is not entirely out of respect for a valid patent, but rather the result of the Defendants' agreement to allocate unlawful monopoly profits obtained by paying Glenmark to delay generic entry in the form of the no-AG agreement." Id. at 41-42.

The Glenmark Defendants' arguments to the contrary fail. The Glenmark Defendants again apply an incorrect probability standard, as opposed to the correct plausibility standard, to the Plaintiffs' allegations. Glenmark Defs.' Objs. at 23-25 ("Those allegations plainly are not enough to tip the scales in Plaintiffs' favor when weighed against the actual outcome of the trial and appeal."). Additionally, the Glenmark Defendants' argument that the Plaintiffs' allegations are implausible because Merck prevailed in the Mylan litigation, id. at 24-25, ignores the Plaintiffs' allegations that not all claims raised in the Glenmark litigation were litigated to final [38] judgment in the Mylan litigation.

The court agrees with the Magistrate Judge's review of the Plaintiffs' detailed allegations regarding the claims raised in the Glenmark litigation that were not litigated to final judgment in the Mylan litigation. R&R at 42, 45-47 (citing DPP Compl. ¶¶ 155-60). Accordingly, the court agrees with the Magistrate Judge's conclusion that the Mylan litigation does not render the Plaintiffs' allegations implausible and the Plaintiffs have adequately pled anticompetitive effects.[11] Because the Plaintiffs have plausibly alleged a no-AG agreement and anticompetitive effects, the Glenmark Defendants' Objections are hereby OVERRULED, and the Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the § 1 Sherman Act claims is DENIED.

III. Merck Defendants' Objections

The Merck Defendants raise numerous objections to Sections V.D.2 through V.D.6 of the R&R. Merck Defs.' Objs. at 2. The [*433] court has conducted a de novo review of the record and will briefly address the objections by Section below.

A. Objections to Section V.D.2.

The Merck Defendants object to the Magistrate Judge's finding that the EPPs have Article III standing, and his conclusion that the ability of the named class representatives [39] to represent absent class members' state law claims should be addressed under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23. Merck Defs.' Objs. at 3-7. The court agrees with the Magistrate Judge's well-reasoned analysis and conclusion that the Article III standing issue is properly addressed at the time of class certification. R&R at 59-62. Thus, the Merck Defendants' objection is OVERRULED, and the Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the EPPs' claims for lack of standing is DENIED.

B. Objections to Section V.D.3.

[11] To the extent that the Glenmark Defendants object to other portions of the R&R because "they rely on or incorporate the reasoning of Section V(A), including Sections V(D)(1), and V(D)(4)," Glenmark Defs.' Objs. at 1, the court OVERRULES those objections for the reasons stated in Part II of this Order. Similarly, to the extent there are objections to Section V(B) of the R&R based on the arguments already addressed, the court OVERRULES those objections for the reasons stated in Part II of this Order.

The Merck Defendants raise several objections to the Magistrate Judge's recommendation that the EPPs' state antitrust claims in nineteen jurisdictions should proceed. Merck Defs.' Objs. at 7-16.

1. Objections Regarding Section V.D.3.a.

The Merck Defendants object to the Magistrate Judge's finding that indirect purchasers have standing under Puerto Rico law. Merck Defs.' Objs. at 8-11. The court agrees with the Magistrate Judge's conclusions and reliance on Pressure Vessels of P.R. v. Empire Gas de P.R., 137 D.P.R. 497, 518-20, 1994 Juris P.R. 144 (1994), and Rivera-Muniz v. Horizon Lines Inc., 737 F. Supp. 2d 57, 61 (D.P.R. 2010). R&R at 63-65. Thus, the Merck Defendants' objections is hereby OVERRULED, and the Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the EPPs' claim under Puerto Rico law is DENIED.

2. Objections Regarding Section V.D.3.b.

The Merck Defendants object to the Magistrate Judge's finding that the EPPs plausibly allege [40] an intrastate connection sufficient to meet the requirements of state law. Merck Defs.' Objs. at 11-12. The court agrees with the Magistrate Judge's well-reasoned analysis and conclusion that EPPs have "sufficiently allege[d] the necessary intrastate connections in each of the challenged jurisdictions." R&R at 65-67. Thus, the Merck Defendants' objection is hereby OVERRULED, and the Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the EPPs' claims for insufficient intrastate connections is DENIED.

3. Objections Regarding Section V.D.3.c.

The Merck Defendants object to the Magistrate Judge's conclusion that the EPPs' failure to timely comply with statutory notice requirements does not warrant dismissal. Merck Defs.' Objs. at 12-13. The court agrees with the Magistrate Judge and finds the reasoning in In re Broiler Chicken Antitrust Litig., 290 F. Supp. 3d 772, 817 (N.D. Ill. 2017), and *In re Aftermarket Filters Antitrust Litig., No. 08C4883, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 104114, 2009 WL 3754041, at 6 (N.D. Ill. Nov. 5, 2009), to be persuasive that failure to timely comply with pre-suit notice requirements does not warrant dismissal. Assuming arguendo that the statutory notice requirements apply in federal court, the statutes do not require dismissal for failing to comply precisely with the notice requirement. See R&R at 69.[12] Moreover, [*434] the court agrees with the Magistrate Judge that dismissal is unwarranted in this case because the EPPs' delay [41] in providing notice did not prejudice the Defendants. See id. Thus, the Merck Defendants' objection is hereby OVERRULED, and the Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the EPPs' claims for improper notice is DENIED.

4. Objections Regarding Section V.D.3.d.

The Merck Defendants object to the Magistrate Judge's conclusion that the Illinois Antitrust Act class-action bar does not apply in federal court. Merck Defs.' Objs. at 13-15. The court agrees with the Magistrate Judge's analysis of the plain text of the Illinois Antitrust Act, 740 Ill. Comp. Stat. 10/7(2), and the Magistrate Judge's finding that pursuant to Shady Grove Orthopedic Assocs., P.A. v. Allstate Ins. Co., 559 U.S. 393, 130 S. Ct. 1431, 176 L. Ed. 2d 311 (2010), "Rule 23 governs class actions in federal court and permits the EPPs' suit under the Illinois statute."

---

[12] Contrary to the Merck Defendants' objection, the Magistrate Judge did not conclude that the notice requirements are procedural and inapplicable in federal court. See R&R at 67-69. Rather, the Magistrate Judge properly assumed the requirements apply in federal court, but the late or improper notice did not warrant dismissal. Id. at 68-69. The Magistrate Judge merely noted, without concluding, that "Shady Grove may preclude" "more complex procedural requirements" from applying in federal court. Id. at 69.

R&R at 69-72. Thus, the Merck Defendants' objection is hereby OVERRULED, and the Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the EPPs' Illinois antitrust claims is DENIED.

5. Objections Regarding Section V.D.3.e.

The Merck Defendants object to the Magistrate Judge's finding that the EPPs have standing under the Utah Antitrust Act. Merck Defs.' Objs. at 15-16. The court agrees with the Merck Defendants that the Magistrate Judge's reasoning seems to "conflat[e] Defendants' Article III standing arguments with the arguments Defendants actually make concerning [42] Utah." Id. Specifically, the Merck Defendants argue that the EPPs have not sufficiently alleged that "any [named] EPP is a Utah citizen or resident," and only a Utah citizen or resident may bring a claim under the Utah Antitrust Act. Id. at 16 (citing Utah Code Ann. § 76-10-3109(1)(a)). This argument is distinct from the Merck Defendants' Article III argument that the EPPs lack standing to bring claims in jurisdictions where the named EPPs "do not reside and do not claim to have made even a single purchase." Id. at 3-7 (emphasis added) (asserting the named EPPs have not alleged an injury in those jurisdictions); see also EPP Compl. ¶ 12, ECF No. 130 (alleging Self-Insured Schools of California "indirectly purchased, paid for and/or provided reimbursement for Zetia and/or its generic equivalent" in Utah).[13]

Nevertheless, the court finds, drawing all reasonable inferences in favor of the EPPs, that the EPPs have sufficiently alleged that the class includes Utah residents. EPP Compl. ¶ 311 (bringing claims "on behalf of the following Class: All persons and entities in the Indirect Purchaser States that indirectly purchased, paid and/or provided reimbursement for some or all of the purchase price of Zetia or its AB-rated generic equivalents [*435] in any form . . . [43] ."); id. ¶ 337(x) (alleging a violation of the Utah Antitrust Act "with respect to purchases of Zetia and AB-rated generic equivalents in Utah by Class members and/or purchases by Utah residents"). Moreover, to the extent that the Merck Defendants argue that the Utah Antitrust Act requires that a named EPP or class representative is a Utah citizen or resident, the court agrees with the EPPs that there is no such requirement in the text of the statute. See Utah Code Ann. § 76-10-3109(1)(a) ("A person who is a citizen of this state or a resident of this state and who is injured or is threatened with injury in his business or property by a violation of the Utah Antitrust Act may bring an action for injunctive relief and damages, regardless of whether the person dealt directly or indirectly with the defendant."); see also EPPs' Opp. at 12. HN14[] Thus, a class representative that is not a Utah citizen or resident may bring claims on behalf of absent class members who are citizens or residents of Utah. See, e.g., In re Generic Pharms. Pricing Antitrust Litig., 368 F. Supp. 3d 814, 838-39 (E.D. Pa. 2019) ; *In re Liquid Aluminum Sulfate Antitrust Litig., No. 16-md-2687, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 115294, 2017 WL 3131977, at 28 (D.N.J. July 20, 2017); *In re Asacol Antitrust Litig., No. 15-cv-12730, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 94605, 2016 WL 4083333, at 13 (D. Mass. July 20, 2016).

Based on this reasoning set forth above, with supporting case law, the court agrees with the Magistrate Judge's conclusion [44] that the EPPs can bring claims under Utah's Antitrust Statute. See R&R at 72-73. Thus, the court MODIFIES the reasoning in the R&R, OVERRULES the Merck Defendants' objection, and DENIES the Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the EPPs' Utah antitrust claim.

C. Objection to Section V.D.4.

The Merck Defendants object to the Magistrate Judge's recommendation that the EPPs' state law monopolization claims may proceed, with the exception of the claim under California Code § 17200. Merck Defs.' Objs. at 16-17.

[13] Self-Insured Schools of California is the only named EPP that asserts it "indirectly purchased, paid for and/or provided reimbursement for Zetia and/or its generic equivalent" in Utah. EPP Compl. ¶ 12. On May 7, 2019, Self-Insured Schools of California voluntarily dismissed its claim without prejudice. ECF No. 248. To the extent this voluntary dismissal raises an Article III standing issue with respect to the ability of the named class representatives to represent absent class members' claims under Utah law, that issue should be addressed under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23 during class certification. See supra Part III.A.

The Merck Defendants acknowledge that the EPPs' state law monopolization claims "rely on the same factual allegations [that] the DPPs and Retailers rely on for their federal monopolization claim." Id. at 16 (citing R&R at 73). For the reasons discussed supra Part II, the court agrees with the Magistrate Judge that all Plaintiffs have "alleged sufficient facts to state a claim of conspiracy to monopolize under" federal and state law. R&R at 74.

To the extent the Merck Defendants object to the Magistrate Judge's assertion that the Defendants did not raise any specific challenges to the state law monopolization claims, Merck Defs.' Objs. at 16-17, the court acknowledges that the Defendants' arguments and objections addressed supra Part III.B, [45] would apply to both the EPPs' conspiracy and monopolization claims. See also Merck Defs.' Mem. Supp. Mot. Dismiss at 11, ECF No. 163 (addressing the EPPs' conspiracy and monopolization claims together). For the reasons stated supra Parts II and III.B, the court OVERRULES the Merck Defendants' objection and DENIES the Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the EPPs' state law monopolization claims, with the exception of the claim under California Code § 17200. The court DISMISSES with prejudice the EPPs' claim under California Code § 17200.

D. Objections to Section V.D.5.

The Merck Defendants raise several objections to the Magistrate Judge's recommendation that some of the EPPs' consumer protection claims should proceed. Merck Defs.' Objs. at 18-24.

[*436] 1. Objections Regarding Section V.D.5.a.

The Merck Defendants object to the Magistrate Judge's conclusion that the EPPs can bring indirect purchaser actions under the consumer protection laws of Illinois and Missouri. Merck Defs.' Objs. at 18-19. The Merck Defendants objection regarding the EPPs' claim under the consumer protection laws of Illinois is based on the same reasoning as the objection previously addressed supra Part III.B.4. The court agrees with the Magistrate [46] Judge's reasoning and conclusion that the EPPs can bring an indirect purchaser action under the consumer protection statutes of Illinois. See R&R at 75-76. The court further agrees with the Magistrate Judge's reasoning and conclusion that Gibbons v. J. Nuckolls, Inc., 216 S.W.3d 667 (Mo. 2007), permits an action by indirect purchasers under Missouri's consumer protection statutes. See R&R at 77. Thus, the Merck Defendants' objections are hereby OVERRULED, and the Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the EPPs' Illinois and Missouri consumer protection claims is DENIED on this basis. However, the court DISMISSES the EPPs' consumer protection claim under Missouri law without prejudice on other grounds, namely, the EPPs are not proper plaintiffs under Missouri's consumer protection statutes. See R&R at 91, 93.

2. Objections Regarding Section V.D.5.b.

The Merck Defendants object to the Magistrate Judge's recommendation that the court permit the EPPs' claims to proceed under the consumer protection statutes of Arizona, Idaho, Maine, Rhode Island, and Vermont. Merck Defs.' Objs. at 19-20.

HN15[] With respect to Arizona, the court agrees with the Magistrate Judge's conclusion that Arizona's consumer protection statute covers an "unfair act," Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 44-1522(A), includes a Federal Trade Commission Act ("FTC Act") [47] harmonization provision, id. § 44-1522(C), and therefore, broadly covers unfair trade practices. See R&R at 79. Moreover, the court finds the Merck Defendants' citation to Watts v. Medicis Pharm. Corp., 239 Ariz. 19, 365 P.3d 944 (Ariz. 2016), unpersuasive. Watts merely recites the elements of a consumer fraud claim under the Arizona consumer protection statute prior to the addition of "unfair act" to the statute in 2013. Id. at 953 ("[T]o succeed on a claim of consumer fraud, a plaintiff must show (1) a false promise or misrepresentation made in connection with the sale or advertisement of 'merchandise,' and (2) consequent and proximate injury resulting from the misrepresentation. (citing Kuehn v. Stanley, 208 Ariz. 124, 91 P.3d 346, 351 (Ariz. Ct. App. 2004))). As such, the Merck Defendants' objection is hereby OVERRULED, and the Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the EPPs' claim under Arizona's consumer protection statute is DENIED.

HN16[] With respect to Idaho, the Merck Defendant's object to the Magistrate Judge's initial conclusion in § V.D.5.b of the R&R that the EPPs' claim premised on anticompetitive conduct may proceed under Idaho's consumer protection statute because the statute "prohibits unfair methods of competition and aligns its consumer protection statute with the FTC Act." R&R at 80 (citing Idaho Code §§ 48-603, -604). This part of the objection is well-taken, but it overlooks [48] the Magistrate Judge's later conclusion in § V.D.5.c that the same claim should be dismissed because Idaho's consumer protection statute is limited to "unconscionable 'sales conduct' that is directed at the consumer." Id. at 85 (quoting *State ex rel. Wasden v. Daicel Chem. Indus., Ltd., 141 Idaho 102, 106 P.3d 428, 433-35 [437] (2005)). The court agrees with the Magistrate Judge's conclusion that the EPPs cannot pursue a claim under Idaho's consumer protection statute because the EPPs have not alleged "unconscionable 'sales conduct' that is directed at the consumer." See Wasden, 106 P.3d at 433-35. Thus, the Merck Defendants' objection is OVERRULED AS MOOT, and the EPPs' claim under Idaho's consumer protection statute is DIMISSED with prejudice.

With respect to Maine, the court agrees with the Magistrate Judge's reasoning and conclusion that the EPPs' claim premised on anticompetitive conduct may proceed under Maine's consumer protection statute. R&R at 80-81. The Merck Defendants assertion that "consumer-directed deception or inducement" is required, Merck Defs.' HN17[] Objs. at 19, ignores the plain language of Maine's consumer protection statute that encompasses claims of "unfair methods of competition" and includes a FTC Act harmonization provision, Me. Stat. tit. 5, § 207. The court finds the Merck Defendants' citation to In re TFT-LCD (Flat Panel) Antitrust Litig., 586 F. Supp. 2d 1109, 1126-27 (N.D. Cal. 2008), unpersuasive [49] because it misreads Tungate v. MacLean-Stevens Studios, Inc., 1998 ME 162, 714 A.2d 792 (Me. 1988), a case about "unfair or deceptive acts or practices," specifically an unfair pricing claim, to apply to cases about unfair methods of competition. Thus, the Merck Defendants' objection is hereby OVERRULED, and the Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the EPPs' claim under Maine's consumer protection statute is DENIED on this basis. However, the EPPs' claim under Maine's consumer protection statute is DISMISSED without prejudice because the EPPs are not the proper plaintiffs under that statute. R&R at 91-92.

With respect to Rhode Island, the court agrees with the Magistrate Judge's reasoning and conclusion that the EPPs' claim premised on anticompetitive conduct may proceed under Rhode Island's consumer protection statute. R&R at 83. The court is persuaded by the Supreme Court of Rhode Island's broad reading of Rhode Island's consumer protection statute in Ames v. Oceanside Welding & Towing Co., Inc., 767 A.2d 677, 681 (R.I. 2001). Thus, the Merck Defendants' objection is hereby OVERRULED, and the Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the EPPs' claim under Rhode Island's consumer protection statute is DENIED on this basis. However, the EPPs' claim under Rhode Island's consumer protection statute is DISMISSED without prejudice because the EPPs are not the proper plaintiffs [50] under that statute. R&R at 91, 93.

With respect to Vermont, the court agrees with the Magistrate Judge's reasoning and conclusion that the EPPs' claim premised on anticompetitive conduct may proceed under Vermont's consumer protection statute. R&R at 84. HN18[] Moreover, Elkins v. Microsoft Corp., 174 Vt. 328, 817 A.2d 9 (Vt. 2002), requires a broad reading of Vermont's consumer protection statute and clarifies that the FTC Act harmonization provision in Vermont's consumer protection statute applies "to § 2453(a), which sets out the practices prohibited under the Act." Id. at 13, 17. The court finds In re Propranolol Antitrust Litig., 249 F. Supp. 3d 712, 729 (S.D.N.Y. 2017), cited by the Merck Defendants, to be unpersuasive because it fails to account for the clear precedent of Elkins. Thus, the Merck Defendants' objection is hereby OVERRULED, and the Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the EPPs' claim under Vermont's consumer protection statute is DENIED on this basis. However, the EPPs' claim under Vermont's consumer protection statute is DISMISSED without prejudice because the [*438] EPPs are not the proper plaintiffs under that statute. R&R at 91, 93.

3. Objections Regarding Section V.D.5.c.

The Merck Defendants object to the Magistrate Judge's finding that the consumer protection statutes of Illinois and West Virginia encompass antitrust violations. Merck Defs.' Objs. at 20-21. The Merck [51] Defendants' objection regarding Illinois is premised on the assertion that only the Illinois Attorney General may bring an antitrust class action on behalf of indirect purchaser plaintiffs. Id. at 20. HN19[] As the court concluded supra Part III.B.4, the Illinois Antitrust Act class-action bar does not apply in federal court. Because the court found that the EPPs' claims under Illinois's antitrust statute may proceed, the EPPs' claims under Illinois's consumer protection statute may also proceed. See Siegel v. Shell Oil Co., 480 F. Supp. 2d 1034, 1046-48 (N.D. Ill. 2007) ("[A] plaintiff may not use the Consumer Fraud Act when doing so would be inconsistent with the legislative intent manifested in the Illinois Antitrust Act."). Thus, the Merck Defendants' objection is hereby OVERRULED, and the Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the EPPs' claim under Illinois's consumer protection statute is DENIED.

With respect to West Virginia, the court agrees with the Magistrate Judge's reasoning and conclusion that the EPPs' claim under West Virginia's consumer protection laws may proceed. R&R at 85. The court finds persuasive the reasoning in In re Packaged Seafood Prods. Antitrust Litig., 242 F. Supp. 3d 1033, 1087-88 (S.D. Cal. 2017), which permitted claims to proceed under West Virginia's consumer protection statute on the basis of the statute's FTC Act harmonization provision. The [52] Merck Defendants misread and misconstrue the citations in In re Packaged Seafood Prods. to require allegations of false or misleading statements for a claim to proceed under West Virginia's consumer protection statute. Merck Defs.' Objs. at 20-21. Thus, the Merck Defendants' objection is hereby OVERRULED, and the Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the EPPs' claim under West Virginia's consumer protection statute is DENIED.

4. Objections Regarding Section V.D.5.d.

The Merck Defendants object to the Magistrate Judge's finding that the EPPs have adequately alleged sufficient intrastate connections with respect to the EPPs' claims under the consumer protection laws of New Hampshire, New York, and North Carolina. Merck Defs.' Objs. at 21. In support of this objection, the Merck Defendants rely on arguments previously considered supra Part III.B.2. The court, again, agrees with the Magistrate Judge's reasoning and conclusion that the allegation of "a nationwide pattern of conduct that resulted in consumers in each of the challenged jurisdiction purchasing ezetimibe at elevated prices" adequately pleads sufficient intrastate connections. R&R at 87-88; see also Sheet Metal Workers Local 441 Health & Welfare Plan v. GlaxoSmithKline, PLC, 737 F. Supp. 2d 380, 400 (E.D. Pa 2010) (denying motion to dismiss [53] for failure to allege sufficient intrastate effects in North Carolina "[w]ithout clear authority for the proposition that the sale and marketing of a product in North Carolina is insufficient intrastate conduct to expose [the defendant] to antitrust liability there"); LaChance v. U.S. Smokeless Tobacco Co., 156 N.H. 88, 931 A.2d 571, 578 (N.H. 2007) (noting that New Hampshire's consumer protection statute covers "any trade or commerce directly or indirectly affecting the people of this state" (quoting N.H. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 358-A:1)); Goshen v. [*439] Mutual Life Ins. Co. of N.Y., 98 N.Y.2d 314, 774 N.E.2d 1190, 1195, 746 N.Y.S.2d 858 (N.Y. 2002) ("We conclude that the transaction in which the consumer is deceived must occur in New York.").

Thus, the Merck Defendants' objection is hereby OVERRULED, and the Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the EPPs' consumer protection claims for lack of intrastate connections is DENIED. However, the EPPs' claim under New York's consumer protection statute is DISMISSED without prejudice "[b]ecause the allegations here do not reflect consumer-oriented deception by any Defendants." R&R at 82.

5. Objections Regarding Section V.D.5.e.

The Merck Defendants object to the Magistrate Judge's conclusion that the EPPs are proper plaintiffs under Virginia's consumer protection statute. Merck Defs.' Objs. at 21-22. The Merck Defendants contend that the Magistrate Judge's reasoning, that "the mere [54] fact that the underlying transaction (that is, the drug purchase) is for 'personal, family, or household use,' as most of the laws at issue require, does not extend a right of action to third-party payors which reimburse those payments as part of a separate insurance obligation," should apply to the EPPs' claim under Virginia's consumer protection statute. Id. (quoting R&R at 91). The Magistrate Judge's reasoning, quoted above, is premised on the fact that the EPPs "do not actually make purchases—rather, they reimburse their members or pharmacies for the costs of Zetia or ezetimibe purchases when their members fill prescriptions." R&R at 90-91 (emphasis added).

The Merck Defendants overlook the plain language of Virginia's consumer protection statute, which does not require that the EPPs themselves purchased Zetia or ezetimibe. Cf. Me. Stat. tit. 5, § 213 (providing a remedy only to "[a]ny person who purchases or leases goods, services or property, real or personal, primarily for personal, family or household purposes"); Mo. Rev. Stat. § 407.025 (providing a remedy only to "[a]ny person who purchases or leases merchandise primarily for personal, family or household purposes"); 6 R.I. Gen. Laws § 6-13.1-5.2 (providing a remedy only to "[a]ny person who purchases [55] or leases goods or services primarily for personal, family, or household purposes"). Instead, HN20[] Virginia's consumer protection statute provides a remedy for "[a]ny person who suffers loss as the result of a violation of this chapter." Va. Code Ann. § 59.1-204. "'Person' means any natural person, corporation, trust, partnership, association and any other legal entity." Id. § 59.1-198. And, the loss must be the result of "fraudulent acts or practices committed by a supplier in connection with a consumer transaction." Id. § 59.1-204, -200.

In sum, Virginia only requires that the EPPs suffered a loss in connection with a consumer transaction. Thus, the court agrees with the Magistrate Judge's interpretation of the plain language of Virginia's statute, and the court concludes that the EPPs have sufficiently alleged that they suffered a loss in connection with a consumer transaction by reimbursing consumer transactions. See R&R at 90. The Merck Defendants' objection is hereby OVERRULED, and the Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the EPPs' consumer protection claim under Virginia law is DENIED.

6. Objections Regarding Section V.D.5.f.

The Merck Defendants object to the Magistrate Judge's conclusion that the [*440] "EPPs' failure to send pre-suit notice to Defendants [56] does not warrant dismissal of their Massachusetts and West Virginia consumer protection claims." Merck Defs.' Objs. at 22-23 (citing R&R at 93-95). HN21[] With respect to West Virginia, the court agrees with the Magistrate Judge's interpretation of the plain text of the statute, which clearly permits a post-filing demand letter. See R&R at 94-95 (citing W. Va. Code §46A-6-106(c)).[14]

With respect to Massachusetts, the Magistrate Judge recommended dismissal of the EPPs' Massachusetts consumer protection claim on other grounds. R&R at 92. The Magistrate Judge found that the EPPs "engaged in trade or commerce" and "must proceed under section 11 of the Massachusetts Consumer Protection Act." Id. "However section 11 bars indirect purchaser claims." Id. The EPPs "did not formally object" to this conclusion, but they "respectfully disagree with the court's finding." EPPs' Opp. at 22 n.16. 147. The court has reviewed the Magistrate Judge's finding and agrees that the EPPs' claims are properly brought under section 11. R&R at 92; see also United Food & Commercial Workers Local 1776 & Participating Employers Health & Welfare Fund v. Teikoku Pharma USA, Inc., 74 F. Supp. 3d 1052, 1084-85 (N.D. Cal. 2014) ("The Plan and the City appear to be engaged in the 'trade or commerce' of providing health and welfare benefits. I conclude that the City and Iron Workers were engaged in trade or commerce and are covered by Section 11."). The court further agrees [57] with the Magistrate Judge that "[t]he Massachusetts notice provision only applies to claims under section 9 of the state's consumer protection act." R&R at 94; see also Mass. Gen. Laws ch. 93A, § 11. Thus, no notice was required, and this is not a proper basis for dismissal. Nevertheless, the court agrees with the Magistrate Judge's recommendation of dismissal of the EPPs' Massachusetts consumer protection claim on other grounds. See R&R at 92.

Thus, the Merck Defendants' objections are hereby OVERRULED, and the Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the EPPs' consumer protection claims in West Virginia and Massachusetts for lack of pre-suit notice is DENIED. The EPPs' consumer protection claim in Massachusetts is DISMISSED without prejudice on other grounds, namely, the EPPs' claims must proceed under section 11, which bars indirect purchaser claims.

[14] To clarify, record of the West Virginia notice is located in MDL Member Case No. 2:18cv108, ECF No. 54-6. See R&R at 95 n.23 (misstating the MDL Member Case No. as 4:18cv108).

7. Objections Regarding Section V.D.5.g.

The Merck Defendants object to the Magistrate Judge's conclusion that Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b)'s heightened pleading standard does not apply to the EPPs' claim under Florida's consumer protection laws. Merck Defs.' Objs. at 23-24. The court agrees with the Magistrate Judge's conclusion that Rule 9(b)'s heightened pleading standard is inapplicable in this case because "the EPPs are proceeding under the statute's [58] 'unfair methods of competition' prong," and the EPPs are not bringing any claims alleging fraudulent conduct. R&R at 95; see also Hill v. Hoover Co., 899 F. Supp. 2d 1259, 1263 (N.D. Fla. 2012) (citing Jovine v. Abbott Labs., Inc., 795 F. Supp. 2d 1331 (S.D. Fla. 2011)). Thus, the Merck Defendants' objection is hereby OVERRULED, and the Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the EPPs' consumer protection claim under Florida law is DENIED.

[*441] 8. Objections Regarding Section V.D.5.h.

The Merck Defendants object to the Magistrate Judge's conclusion that Tennessee's class-action bar does not apply in federal court. Merck Defs.' Objs. at 24. As the Merck Defendants acknowledge, the Magistrate Judge recommends that the court dismiss the EPPs' claim under Tennessee's consumer protection statute on other grounds. Id.; R&R at 86. The EPPs have not filed any objections to the R&R, and the court agrees with the Magistrate judge that the EPPs' claim under Tennessee's consumer protection statute should be dismissed on those other grounds. R&R at 86 ("[P]laintiffs cannot bring claims based on anticompetitive conduct under the Tennessee Consumer Protection Act." (quoting In re Flonase Antitrust Litig. (Flonase I), 610 F. Supp. 2d 409, 417 (E.D. Pa. 2009))). Nevertheless, the court agrees with the Magistrate Judge's conclusion that Shady Grove governs class actions in federal court and permits the EPPs' suit under the Tennessee statute. R&R at 95-96. Thus, the Merck [59] Defendants' objection is hereby OVERRULED, and the Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the EPPs' consumer protection claim under Tennessee law is DENIED on this basis. However, the EPPs' consumer protection claim under Tennessee law is DISMISSED with prejudice on other grounds, namely, the EPPs' cannot bring claims based on anticompetitive conduct under Tennessee's consumer protection statute. R&R at 86-87.

E. Objections to Section V.D.6.

The Merck Defendants raise several objections to the Magistrate Judge's recommendation that some of the EPPs' unjust enrichment claims should proceed. Merck Defs.' Objs. at 25-28.

1. Objections Regarding Section V.D.6.a.

The Merck Defendants object to the Magistrate Judge's conclusion that the EPPs' Consolidated Complaint satisfies the Rule 8 pleading requirement for unjust enrichment. Merck Defs.' Objs. at 25-26. The Merck Defendants argue that because "the requirements for stating an unjust enrichment claim vary from jurisdiction to jurisdiction, . . . blanket incorporation of antitrust-based allegations without accounting for material differences in jurisdictions' requirements for unjust enrichment claims cannot satisfy Rule 8's pleading standards." Id. at 25. However, the Merck Defendants [60] do not point to any specific material differences in jurisdictions' requirements for unjust enrichment claims that warrant consideration, other than those already raised before the Magistrate Judge. Id. at 25 ("The R&R itself shows the inadequacy of this broad-brush approach when it reasons that some jurisdictions require conferral of a direct benefit to state an unjust enrichment claim while others do not." (citing R&R at 100-03)). Moreover, the court agrees with the Magistrate Judge's reasoning and conclusion that when considering the EPPs' Consolidated Complaint as a whole, it satisfies the Rule 8 pleading requirement for pleading unjust enrichment. R&R at 97-99. Thus, the Merck Defendants' objection is hereby OVERRULED, and the Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the EPPs' unjust enrichment claims is DENIED on this basis.

2. Objections Regarding Section V.D.6.c.

The Merck Defendants object to the Magistrate Judge's conclusion that indirect unjust enrichment claims are permitted in Kansas, Maine, New York, and North Dakota. Merck Defs.' Objs. at 26-27.

[*442] With respect to Kansas, the court agrees with the Magistrate Judge's conclusion and citation to In re Automotive Parts Antitrust Litig., 29 F. Supp. 3d 982, 1019-1020 (E.D. Mich. 2014), which addresses and disposes of the arguments raised by the Merck Defendants regarding [61] Haz-Mat Response, Inc. v. Certified Waste Servs. Ltd, 259 Kan. 166, 910 P.2d 839 (1996), and Spires v. Hosp. Corp. of Am., 289 Fed. App'x 269 (10th Cir. 2008). The court also finds the reasoning in *In re Keurig Green Mt. Singleserve Coffee Antitrust Litig., 383 F. Supp. 3d 187, 2019 WL 1789789, at 54 (S.D.N.Y. 2019), and In re Processed Egg Prods. Antitrust Litig., 851 F. Supp. 2d 867, 929-30 (E.D. Pa. 2012), to be persuasive and support the conclusion that the EPPs' unjust enrichment claim in Kansas may proceed.

With respect to Maine, the court agrees with the Magistrate Judge's conclusion that the EPPs' unjust enrichment claim in Maine may proceed. R&R at 102. In addition to the case cited by the Magistrate Judge, the court also finds the analysis in *In re Keurig, 383 F. Supp. 3d 187, 2019 WL 1789789, at 54, and *Sergeants Benevolent Ass'n Health & Welfare Fund v. Actavis, PLC, No. 15 CIV. 6549 (CM), 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 220574, 2018 WL 7197233, at 62 (S.D.N.Y. Dec. 26, 2018), to be persuasive and support the conclusion that the EPPs' unjust enrichment claim in Maine may proceed.

With respect to New York, the court, the court agrees with the Magistrate Judge's reading of Sperry v. Crompton Corp., 8 N.Y.3d 204, 863 N.E.2d 1012, 1018, 831 N.Y.S.2d 760 (N.Y. 2007), and conclusion that the EPPs' unjust enrichment claim in New York may proceed. R&R at 102. HN22[] For an unjust enrichment claim to proceed in New York, the relationship between the EPPs and the Defendants cannot be "too attenuated." Sperry, 863 N.E.2d at 1018 ("Here, the connection between the purchaser of tires and the producers of chemicals used in the rubber-making process is simply too attenuated to support such a claim."). The court also finds the reasoning in In re Processed Egg Prods., 851 F. Supp. 2d at 930 ("One federal court has explained that this means that 'a product's indirect purchaser cannot assert [62] an unjust enrichment claim against an entity that manufactured one of that product's ingredients,' but that an 'indirect purchaser can assert such an unjust enrichment claim against the manufacturer of the product itself.'" (quoting Waldman v. New Chapter, Inc., 714 F. Supp. 2d 398, 403-04 (E.D.N.Y. 2010))), to be persuasive and support the conclusion that the EPPs' unjust enrichment claim in New York may proceed.

With respect to North Dakota, the court agrees with the Magistrate Judge's conclusion that the EPPs' unjust enrichment claim in North Dakota may proceed. R&R at 103. The court agrees with the Magistrate Judge's citation to In re Automotive Parts Antitrust Litig., 29 F. Supp. 3d 982, 1019-1020 (E.D. Mich. 2014), which distinguishes Apache Corp. v. MDU Res. Grp., Inc., 1999 ND 247, 603 N.W.2d 891, 895-96 (N.D. 1999), from the case at bar. The court further finds the reasoning and cases cited in *Sergeants Benevolent Ass'n Health & Welfare Fund, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 220574, 2018 WL 7197233, at 65-66, to be persuasive and support the conclusion that the EPPs' unjust enrichment claim in North Dakota may proceed.

Thus, the Merck Defendants' objections are hereby OVERRULED, and the Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the EPPs' unjust enrichment claims in Kansas, Maine, New York, and North Dakota is DENIED.

3. Objections Regarding Section V.D.6.d.

The Merck Defendants object to the Magistrate Judge's conclusion that the [*443] EPPs may plead unjust enrichment in the alternative. Merck Defs.' Objs. at 27-28. This objection applies to the EPPs unjust enrichment [63] claims in Alabama, Hawaii, and Massachusetts. Id.

With respect to Alabama, the Merck Defendants objection is entirely premised on the assumption that the EPPs have an adequate remedy at law that precludes the EPPs from bringing an unjust enrichment claim. Merck Defs.' Objs. at 27 ("Merck's argument is that the EPPs cannot avail themselves of these claims at all given the existence of adequate remedies at law."). However, the Merck Defendants overlook the fact that the EPPs have not alleged claims in Alabama on a legal theory other than unjust enrichment. Cf. EPP Compl. ¶¶ 337, 347, 357 (alleging violations of state antitrust and consumer protection laws in jurisdictions, not including Alabama). Additionally, the Merck Defendants do not point to any available adequate remedy at law that would preclude the EPPs from pursuing an unjust enrichment claim in Alabama at this juncture. Thus, the court agrees with the Magistrate Judge that the EPPs' unjust enrichment claim in Alabama should proceed.

With respect to Massachusetts, the Magistrate Judge recommended dismissing the EPPs' unjust enrichment claim in Massachusetts on other grounds. R&R at 99-100. The EPPs have not filed any objections to the R&R, [64] and the court agrees with the Magistrate judge that the EPPs' unjust enrichment claim in Massachusetts should be dismissed on those other grounds. Id. (finding that the EPPs cannot circumvent Illinois Brick by bringing unjust enrichment claims in jurisdictions that do not allow indirect purchaser antitrust actions). Nevertheless, as discussed below with respect to Hawaii, the court agrees with the Magistrate Judge's reasoning and conclusion that the unjust enrichment claim in Massachusetts should not be dismissed on this basis.

HN23[] With respect to Hawaii, the court agrees with the Magistrate Judge that Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8 allows the EPPs to plead claims in the alternative and assert inconsistent claims. Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(d) (2)-(3). Moreover, the EPPs explicitly pled their claims of unjust enrichment in the alternative, and explicitly pled that they have no adequate remedy at law. EPP Compl. ¶¶ 361, 365. To the extent that the EPPs have alleged violations of Hawaii's antitrust and consumer protection laws, see EPP Compl. ¶¶ 337, 347, 357, it is not certain that the EPPs will prevail on those claims, and thus, it would be premature to dismiss the EPPs unjust enrichment claim in Hawaii. See, e.g., In re Chocolate Confectionary Antitrust Litig., 749 F. Supp. 2d 224, 237 (M.D. Pa. 2007) (evaluating the same argument and declining [65] to dismiss an unjust enrichment claim in Hawaii).

The Merck Defendants' objections are hereby OVERRULED, and the Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the EPPs' unjust enrichment claims in Alabama, Massachusetts, and Hawaii is DENIED. The EPPs' unjust enrichment claim in Massachusetts is DISMISSED with prejudice on other grounds, namely, the EPPs cannot circumvent Illinois Brick by bringing an unjust enrichment claim.

IV. Conclusion

The court, having examined all of the Objections to the R&R, and having made de novo findings with respect thereto, hereby OVERRULES the Retailer Plaintiffs' Objections, ECF No. 235, and the Glenmark Defendants' Objections, ECF No. 236. The court OVERRULES the Merck Defendants' Objections. ECF No. 237. The court MODIFIES the reasoning in the R&R, as noted supra Part III.B.5. The court ADOPTS AND APPROVES IN [*444] FULL the recommended disposition of each claim as set forth in the Magistrate Judge's thorough and well-reasoned R&R, ECF No. 234, filed on February 6, 2019. Accordingly, the Defendants' Motions to Dismiss, ECF Nos. 157, 160 & 162, are GRANTED IN PART AND DENIED IN PART as set forth in the R&R and Exhibits A and B attached thereto. See R&R at 104, Exs. A & B.

The Clerk is [66] DIRECTED to send a copy of this Opinion to counsel for all parties.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

HN1[] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

The appellate court reviews a district court's grant of a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim de novo. Additionally, the court takes all allegations of material fact as true and construes them in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. However, conclusory allegations of law and unwarranted inferences are insufficient to avoid a Rule 12(b)(6) dismissal.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN2[] Sherman Act, Claims

Section 1 of the Sherman Act prohibits every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. Although on its face, § 1 appears to outlaw virtually all contracts, it has been interpreted as outlawing only unreasonable restraints of trade.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN3[] Sherman Act, Claims

The court determines whether a particular restraint of trade is unreasonable and thus a violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act under the so-called rule of reason. Under this rule, the court examines the facts peculiar to the business, the history of the restraint, and the reasons why it was imposed, to determine the effect on competition in the relevant product market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN4[] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Per Se Violations

Under antitrust law, some restraints of trade, such as horizontal agreements among competitors to fix prices, restrict output, and divide markets, are generally deemed to be per se unreasonable, and therefore it is unnecessary to apply the rule of reason in order to determine whether such agreements violate § 1 of the Sherman Act. The per se rule does not apply to agreements involving teams engaged in league sports, on the ground that such sports can only be carried out jointly. Therefore, when considering agreements among entities involved in league sports, a court must determine whether the restriction is unreasonable under the rule of reason.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN5[] Sherman Act, Claims

In order to state a § 1 of the Sherman Act claim under the rule of reason, plaintiffs must plead four separate elements. Plaintiffs must plead facts which, if true, will prove: (1) a contract, combination or conspiracy among two or more persons or distinct business entities; (2) by which the persons or entities intended to harm or restrain trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations; (3) which actually injures competition. Additionally, the plaintiffs must plead antitrust standing, meaning they must allege that (4) they are the proper parties to bring the antitrust action because they were harmed by the defendants' contract, combination, or conspiracy, and the harm they suffered was caused by the anti-competitive aspect of the defendants' conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

HN6[] Sherman Act, Claims

In order to satisfy the third requirement for stating a § 1 of the Sherman Act claim under the rule of reason, the plaintiffs must identify a harm that is attributable to an anti-competitive aspect of the practice under scrutiny. A harm that could have occurred under the normal circumstances of free competition fails to satisfy this requirement. An agreement between competitors (a horizontal agreement) satisfies the requirement of showing injury to competition if it reduces competitors' independent decisions about whether and how often to offer to provide services, or otherwise limits competitors' freedom to compete. In order to show that an agreement injures competition, a plaintiff must generally show that the defendants have market power within a relevant market, meaning that the defendants have the ability to raise prices above those that would be charged in a competitive market. Alternatively, plaintiffs can show that a restraint injures competition if they plausibly allege a naked restriction on price or output, such as an agreement not to compete in terms of price or output. An agreement between companies at different levels of a supply chain (a vertical agreement) may injure competition if it facilitates horizontal collusion.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN7[] Scope, Monopolization Offenses

An agreement among college football teams and the NCAA violates § 1 of the Sherman Act where the agreement eliminates competition in the market for college football telecasts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN8[] Scope, Monopolization Offenses

Courts are required to take a holistic look at how interlocking agreements actually impact competition. Indeed, the essential inquiry is whether or not the challenged restraint enhances competition, which is assessed by considering the totality of the nature or character of the contracts. Thus, the law requires that the character and effect of a conspiracy are not to be judged by dismembering it and viewing its separate parts, but only by looking at it as a whole. Accordingly, the court must give plaintiffs the full benefit of their proof without tightly compartmentalizing the various factual components and wiping the slate clean after scrutiny of each.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Nonprice Restraints

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN9[] Scope, Monopolization Offenses

A horizontal agreement among competitors to pool separate property rights and enter into an agreement to license their rights vertically can constitute a § 1 of the Sherman Act violation.

Copyright Law > Scope of Copyright Protection > Subject Matter > Specific Subject Matter

HN10[] Subject Matter, Specific Subject Matter

Under copyright law, it is well-established that an underlying sporting event is not copyrightable subject matter. The initial performance of a game is an athletic event outside the subject matter of copyright.

Copyright Law > Scope of Copyright Protection > Subject Matter > Specific Subject Matter

HN11[] Subject Matter, Specific Subject Matter

The telecasts of sporting events are plainly copyrightable motion pictures under the Copyright Act of 1976. 17 U.S.C.S. § 102(a)(6). Recorded broadcasts of sporting events, as opposed to the games themselves, are entitled to copyright protection.

Copyright Law > Scope of Copyright Protection > Ownership Interests > Initial Ownership

HN12[] Ownership Interests, Initial Ownership

Under general copyright law, copyright ownership vests initially in the author of the work, 17 U.S.C.S. § 201(a), who, as a general rule, is the party who actually creates the work, that is, the person who translates an idea into a fixed, tangible expression entitled to copyright protection. Thus, in the absence of an agreement otherwise, the person or company that creates the telecast is the author of the telecast for the purposes of copyright law. Assuming that this rule applies in the league sports setting, the team or network that creates the telecasts would be the sole owner of the copyright in the telecasts, absent some agreement to the contrary.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN13[] Scope, Monopolization Offenses

When there is an agreement not to compete in terms of output, no elaborate industry analysis is required to demonstrate the anticompetitive character of such an agreement.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN14[] Scope, Monopolization Offenses

To plead the fourth element of a § 1 of the Sherman Act claim under the rule of reason, antitrust standing or antitrust injury, plaintiffs must allege that they were harmed by the injury to competition. Further, plaintiffs must allege that their harm was caused directly by the antitrust violator. Indirect purchasers who are two or more steps removed from the violator in a distribution chain may not sue. Allowing every purchaser in a distribution chain to claim damages flowing from a single antitrust violation would create a serious risk of multiple liability for defendants. This avoids the evidentiary complexities and uncertainties that would be multiplied in the offensive use of pass-on by a plaintiff several steps removed from the defendant in the chain of distribution. Accordingly, a bright-line rule that authorizes suits by direct purchasers but bars suits by indirect purchasers has been established. Said otherwise, purchasers who are two or more steps removed from the antitrust violator in a distribution chain may not sue. To illustrate, under this rule, if manufacturer A sells to retailer B, and retailer B sells to consumer C, then C may not sue A. However, C may sue B if B is an antitrust violator.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN15[] Scope, Monopolization Offenses

If the direct purchaser conspires to fix the price paid by the plaintiffs, then the plaintiffs pay the fixed price directly and are not indirect purchasers (i.e., there is no pass-on theory involved). In other words, when coconspirators have jointly committed the antitrust violation, a plaintiff who is the immediate purchaser from any of the conspirators is directly injured by the violation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN16[] Scope, Monopolization Offenses

If the direct purchaser conspires to limit the output that will ultimately be available to the plaintiffs, then the plaintiffs are directly impacted by the output limitation and have standing to sue. In other words, when plaintiffs adequately allege that their injury was caused by a conspiracy to violate antitrust laws, even when the conspiracy involves multiple levels of producers, distributors, and sales, the plaintiffs sufficiently allege an antitrust injury that can withstand a motion to dismiss.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Sherman Act

HN17[] Scope, Monopolization Offenses

Price-fixing conspiracies are functionally indistinguishable from output-restricting conspiracies. An agreement on output also equates to a price-fixing agreement, because if firms raise price, the market's demand for their product will fall, so the amount supplied will fall too, in other words, output will be restricted. On the other hand, if instead the firms restrict output directly, price will as mentioned rise in order to limit demand to the reduced supply. Accordingly, with exceptions, raising price, reducing output, and dividing markets have the same anticompetitive effects. A conspiracy between a cartel of widget producers and their widget retailer to set an artificially high price for widgets is functionally the same as a conspiracy to set an artificially low total output of widgets, which causes prices to rise. Therefore, the consumer of widgets would be directly injured by the antitrust violators at both levels of the distribution chain and would have standing to sue those coconspirators in both scenarios.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Elements

HN18[] Conspiracy to Monopolize, Elements

Section 2 of the Sherman Act makes it unlawful for any person to monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations. 15 U.S.C.S. § 2. To establish a conspiracy to monopolize claim under Section 2, plaintiffs must plead: (1) the existence of a combination or conspiracy to monopolize; (2) an overt act in furtherance of the conspiracy; (3) the specific intent to monopolize; and (4) causal antitrust injury. To plausibly plead a monopolization claim, plaintiffs must allege: (a) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market; (b) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power; and (c) causal antitrust injury.

Summary:

SUMMARY[]

Antitrust

The panel reversed the district court's dismissal for failure to state a claim of an antitrust action brought by a putative class of residential and commercial subscribers to DirecTV's NFL Sunday Ticket, a bundled package of all NFL games available exclusively to subscribers of DirecTV's satellite television service.

Each NFL team entered into a "Teams-NFL Agreement" with the NFL to pool their telecasting rights and give the NFL the authority to exercise those rights. Acting on behalf of its teams, the NFL entered into two additional agreements licensing the teams' telecast rights. Under the "NFL-Network Agreement," CBS and Fox coordinate to create a single telecast for every Sunday-afternoon NFL game, and the NFL permits CBS and Fox to broadcast a limited number of what are known as local games through free, over-the-air television. Under the "NFL-DirecTV Agreement," the NFL allows DirecTV to obtain all of the live telecasts produced by CBS and Fox, package those telecasts, and deliver the bundled [2] feeds to NFL Sunday Ticket subscribers.

Plaintiffs alleged that defendants' interlocking agreements work together to suppress competition for the sale of professional football game telecasts in violation of §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act.

The panel held that plaintiffs stated a § 1 claim under the rule of reason because they adequately alleged (1) a contract, combination, or conspiracy among two or more persons or business entities; (2) by which the persons or entities intended to harm or restrain trade; (3) and which actually injured competition; and (4) antitrust standing. The first and second elements were undisputed. As to the third element, the panel held that, under Nat'l Collegiate Athletic Ass'n v. Bd. of Regents of Univ. of Oklahoma, 468 U.S. 85, 104 S. Ct. 2948, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70 (1984), plaintiffs plausibly alleged that the interlocking agreements caused injury to competition. As to the fourth element, it was undisputed that plaintiffs had standing to challenge the Teams-NFL Agreement and the NFL-DirecTV Agreement. The panel held that plaintiffs also had standing to challenge the Teams-NFL Agreement because they alleged that their injury was caused by a single conspiracy. The panel concluded that Illinois Brick, limiting the standing of indirect purchasers, did not apply.

The panel held that the plaintiffs [3] stated a claim under § 2 of the Sherman Act in alleging that, by entering into interlocking agreements, the defendants conspired to monopolize the market for professional football telecasts and have monopolized it.

[] This summary constitutes no part of the opinion of the court. It has been prepared by court staff for the convenience of the reader.

Judge N.R. Smith dissented from Part III(C) of the majority's opinion, addressing antitrust standing. Judge Smith disagreed with the majority's conclusion that, because plaintiffs alleged a conspiracy among defendants to limit output, the direct purchaser rule of Illinois Brick did not apply to plaintiffs' damages claim related to the Teams-NFL Agreement.

[*1143] IKUTA, Circuit Judge:

Every Sunday during football season, millions of National Football League (NFL) fans tune in to watch their team play. If they live in the same area as their favorite team—such as Los Angeles Rams fans who live in Los Angeles—they can tune into their local Fox or CBS station to enjoy their team's game on free, over-the-air television. But if NFL fans happen to live far away from their favorite team—such as Seattle Seahawks fans residing in Los Angeles—they can watch every Seahawks game only if they purchase DirecTV's NFL Sunday Ticket, a bundled package of all NFL games available exclusively to subscribers of DirecTV's satellite television service.

The plaintiffs, a putative class of Sunday Ticket subscribers, claim that this arrangement harms NFL fans because it eliminates competition in the market for live telecasts of NFL games. Without this arrangement restricting the televising of NFL games, plaintiffs argue, the individual teams would create multiple telecasts of [*1144] each game and would compete [5] against one another by distributing telecasts of their games through various cable, satellite, and internet channels. We conclude that at this preliminary stage, plaintiffs have stated a cause of action for a violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act that survives a motion to dismiss. We therefore reverse the district court's decision to the contrary.

I

To analyze the challenged arrangement between the NFL teams, the NFL, and DirecTV, it is necessary to understand the history of television broadcasting of NFL games. The NFL, an association of "separately owned professional football teams," was formed in 1920. Am. Needle, Inc. v. Nat'l Football League, 560 U.S. 183, 187, 130 S. Ct. 2201, 176 L. Ed. 2d 947 (2010). While the NFL had a rocky first two decades, its teams gradually became successful. See U.S. Football League v. Nat'l Football League, 842 F.2d 1335, 1343 (2d Cir. 1988). Indeed, by 1959, a majority of NFL team owners felt that there was a "growing interest in professional football and the healthier financial condition of the NFL teams." Am. Football League v. Nat'l Football League, 205 F. Supp. 60, 67 (D. Md. 1962), aff'd, 323 F.2d 124 (4th Cir. 1963). And as professional football gained popularity, so did the telecasts of its games.

* The Honorable George Caram Steeh III, United States District Judge for the Eastern District of Michigan, sitting by designation.

In the 1950s, the right to telecast NFL games was "controlled by individual teams," which independently licensed the telecasts of their games to television networks. U.S. Football League, 842 F.2d at 1346.[1] For example, in 1951, the "Dumont network televised five regular season [6] games (twelve by 1954), as well as the championship game each year." Id. Additionally, in the mid-1950s, "the Columbia Broadcasting System ('CBS') began broadcasting certain NFL regular season games for $1.8 million per year, and the National Broadcasting Company ('NBC') acquired the right to televise the NFL championship game." Id.

Concerned that too much competition between the teams in the market for broadcast rights might drive some teams out of business, the NFL amended its 1951 bylaws to address this issue. In Article X of the bylaws, the NFL required each NFL team to agree to minimize competition by refraining from telecasting its games into another team's local market whenever that local team was either playing at home or broadcasting its away game in its local territory.[2] United States v. [*1145] Nat'l Football League, 116 F. Supp. 319, 321 (E.D. Pa. 1953) (NFL I).

In 1951, the Justice Department brought suit in district court to enjoin enforcement of Article X, alleging that it violated Section 1 of the Sherman Act. Id. at 321. After a bench trial, Judge Grim held that the NFL could restrict the broadcast of distant games into home territories in order to protect attendance for the local team's game without violating [7] antitrust law. Id. at 325-26. Because "primarily all of NFL revenues were derived from gate receipts," protecting live attendance at NFL games was important to the league's success. H.R. Rep. No. 93-483 at 5 (1973), reprinted in 1973 U.S.C.C.A.N. 2032, 2035; see NFL I, 116 F. Supp. at 325. However, the NFL could not restrict teams from broadcasting their games into another team's local market when that team was playing away games. NFL I, 116 F. Supp. at 326-27. Such a restriction, Judge Grim held, would be an impermissible restraint of trade that violated the Sherman Act. Id. at 327. Judge Grim therefore enjoined the NFL teams from entering into a contract that restricts "the sale of rights for the telecasting of outside games in club's home territory on a day when the home club is permitting the telecast of its away game in its home territory." Id. at 330.

The NFL did not appeal the 1953 injunction imposed by NFL I, which remained in force until Congress addressed the issue. "For a number of years after the 1953 decision, the broadcasting practices of the member clubs of the National Football League stabilized." H.R. Rep. No. 93-483 at 4 (1973). The individual NFL teams competed against each other on the field and in the market for telecasting rights. Indeed, "[b]y the [8] late 1950s, eleven individual teams had signed contracts with the Columbia Broadcasting System; two teams—Baltimore and Pittsburgh—had signed contracts with the National Broadcasting Company; and one team—Cleveland—had organized its own network." Id.

This changed when the NFL began to face competition from its newly formed rival, the American Football League (AFL). While the NFL was precluded under NFL I from restricting the sale of telecasts, the AFL was not. Id. at 2034. As a result, the AFL "entered into league-wide television contracts," id., and pooled its television rights and revenues in a broadcast contract with ABC, U.S. Football League, 842 F.2d at 1346.

[1] By this time, courts had agreed that sports teams had a property interest in their games. In Pittsburgh Athletic Co. v. KQV Broadcasting Co., the leading case on this issue, a radio station broadcast play-by-play descriptions of the Pirates' baseball games without the consent of the team. 24 F. Supp. 490, 492 (W.D. Pa. 1938). The Pirates sued to enjoin the unauthorized broadcasts. Id. The district court enjoined the radio station, holding that the baseball team, "by reason of its creation of the game, its control of the park, and its restriction of the dissemination of news therefrom, has a property right in such news, and the right to control the use thereof for a reasonable time following the games." Id.; see Nat'l Exhibition Co. v. Fass, 133 N.Y.S.2d 379, 380 (Sup. Ct. 1954) (enjoining the "defendant from the unauthorized transmission, subsequently broadcast, of detailed accounts of games"); Sw. Broad. Co. v. Oil Ctr. Broad. Co., 210 S.W.2d 230, 234 (Tex. Civ. App. 1947) (granting an injunction to prevent a radio broadcaster from broadcasting play-by-play accounts of football games); cf. Zacchini v. Scripps-Howard Broad. Co., 433 U.S. 562, 575, 97 S. Ct. 2849, 53 L. Ed. 2d 965 (1977) (citing Pittsburgh Athletic Co., 24 F. Supp. 490).

[2] Article X would have prevented, for example, the New England Patriots from broadcasting their game against the Minnesota Vikings within 75 miles of Washington, D.C. when the Washington Redskins were either (1) playing at home or (2) playing an away game but telecasting that game in Washington, D.C. See NFL I, 116 F. Supp. at 325.

In light of this disparity with the AFL, and out of concern "that the league's competitive balance on the field would eventually be destroyed if teams in major television markets continued to sell their broadcast rights individually," in 1961, the NFL teams also decided "to sell their collective television rights as a single package and to share broadcast revenues equally among all franchises." Id. (quoting the testimony of Commissioner Rozelle). In 1961, the NFL filed a petition with Judge Grim seeking to implement a new television contract between the NFL and CBS. United States v. Nat'l Football League, 196 F. Supp. 445, 447 (E.D. Pa. 1961) (NFL [9] II). Under the terms of the NFL-CBS contract, the NFL teams would pool their television rights in the NFL and then the NFL would jointly sell those rights to CBS. Id. at 446-47. Judge Grim denied the petition, holding that the proposed agreement violated the 1953 injunction because if the agreement went into effect, "the member clubs of the League [would] have eliminated competition among themselves in the sale of television rights to their games." Id. at 447. Judge Grim therefore issued a second injunction (the 1961 injunction) enjoining the implementation of the pooled rights contract between NFL and CBS. Id.

[*1146] Rather than appeal the 1961 injunction, the NFL sought Congressional relief. In response to the NFL's lobbying, Congress passed the Sports Broadcasting Act (SBA), which "was specifically designed to establish parity between the National Football League and the American Football League." H.R. Rep. No. 93-483 at 5 (1973). The SBA effectively overruled NFL II, providing:

> The antitrust laws, as defined in section 1 of the [Sherman] Act . . . shall not apply to any joint agreement by or among persons engaging in or conducting the organized professional team sports of football, baseball, basketball, or hockey, by [10] which any league of clubs participating in professional football, baseball, basketball, or hockey contests sells or otherwise transfers all or any part of the rights of such league's member clubs in the sponsored telecasting of the games of football, baseball, basketball, or hockey, as the case may be, engaged in or conducted by such clubs.

15 U.S.C. § 1291. Thus, the SBA provides a tailored exemption for "professional team sports" to sell their rights to "sponsored telecasts" through a joint agreement. Id. In passing the SBA, Congress recognized "that agreements among league members to sell television rights in a cooperative fashion could run afoul of the Sherman Act," and that therefore an exemption from Section 1 of the Sherman Act was required. Nat'l Collegiate Athletic Ass'n v. Bd. of Regents of Univ. of Oklahoma, 468 U.S. 85, 104 n.28, 104 S. Ct. 2948, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70 (1984) (NCAA).

For the next 25 years, the NFL teams pooled their telecasting rights to their games and sold them as a single package through free, over-the-air television. See In the Matter of Implementation of Section 26 of the Cable Television Consumer Protection & Competition Act of 1992, 8 F.C.C. Rcd. 4875, 4879-80 (1993).

Because the SBA applied only to professional sports leagues, it did not apply to college football, which continued to be subject to the Sherman Act. See 15 U.S.C. § 1291. Like the NFL, the NCAA had a long-standing [11] restriction on televising team games. See NCAA, 468 U.S. at 89-90. Beginning in 1951, the NCAA enforced procedures ensuring that "only one game a week could be telecast in each area, with a total blackout on 3 of the 10 Saturdays during the season," and "[a] team could appear on television only twice during a season." Id. at 90. The NCAA maintained this approach for the next two decades.

Finally, in the 1980s, the NCAA's arrangement was challenged by colleges that wanted to negotiate more lucrative television deals for their popular football teams. Id. at 90-91. This challenge resulted in the Supreme Court's authoritative opinion on the antitrust law of league sports, National Collegiate Athletic Association v. Board of Regents of University of Oklahoma, 468 U.S. 85, 104 S. Ct. 2948, 82 L. Ed. 2d 70 (1984).

In NCAA, the Supreme Court struck down the NCAA's restrictive telecast agreements as violating the Sherman Act. According to the Court, "[b]y participating in an association which prevents member institutions from competing against each other on the basis of price or kind of television rights that can be offered to broadcasters, the NCAA member institutions have created a horizontal restraint—an agreement among competitors on the way in which they will compete with one another." Id. at 99. Such an arrangement violated Section 1 of the Sherman Act because "[i]ndividual competitors [12] lose their freedom to compete," and "[p]rice is higher and output lower than they would otherwise be, and both are [*1147] unresponsive to consumer preference." Id. at 106-07.

After NCAA, commentators documented the changes caused by the increased competition in college football telecasts. "With conferences and teams now free to sign their own deals, the number of televised college football games grew exponentially." Nathaniel Grow, Regulating Professional Sports Leagues, 72 Wash. & Lee L. Rev. 573, 617 (2015). Moreover, because college football teams could compete "against one another in the marketplace, broadcasters collectively pa[y] half as much for the rights to televise a larger number of games than the NCAA had previously received for its collective package." Id. By contrast, under the SBA, the NFL's control over the pooled broadcasting rights increased revenues from telecasting, see Michael A. McCann, American Needle v. NFL: An Opportunity to Reshape Sports Law, 119 Yale L.J. 726, 732 (2010), while decreasing the number of telecasts available to consumers, see Ariel Y. Bublick, Note, Are You Ready for Some Football?, 64 Fed. Comm. L.J. 223, 231, 234-36 (2011).

While the NFL's collective sale of telecast rights to free, over-the-air television networks was squarely covered by the SBA, as television technology [13] advanced, from over-the-air to cable to satellite television, the NFL and other professional leagues began using new methods of distributing telecasts of the games.[3] In 1987, the NFL entered into its first cable deal, selling the right to telecast eight Sunday games to ESPN. See 8 F.C.C. Rcd. 4875, 4879. Beginning in 1994, the NFL entered into an agreement with DirecTV, allowing DirecTV to sell Sunday Ticket exclusively through its satellite television service. Babette Boliek, Antitrust, Regulation, and the "New" Rules of Sports Telecasts, 65 Hastings L.J. 501, 541 (2014).

Courts considering challenges to the telecasting arrangements between sports leagues and satellite television services have concluded that "'sponsored telecasting' refers to broadcasts which are financed by business enterprises (the 'sponsors') in return for advertising time and are therefore provided free to the general public." Shaw v. Dallas Cowboys Football Club, Ltd., 172 F.3d 299, 301 (3d Cir. 1999). Therefore, the SBA does not exempt league contracts with cable or satellite television services, for which subscribers are charged a fee, from antitrust liability. Id. at 303; see also Chicago Prof'l Sports Ltd. P'ship v. Nat'l Basketball Ass'n, 961 F.2d 667, 671 (7th Cir. 1992) (Bulls I) (holding that the SBA applies when a league has transferred rights to sponsored telecasting and therefore did not apply to the NBA's efforts to limit [14] distribution by the Bulls of their games on a cable network); Chicago Professional Sports Ltd. Pshp. v. NBA, 95 F.3d 593, 595 (7th Cir. 1996) (Bulls II) (same); Kingray, Inc. v. NBA, Inc., 188 F. Supp. 2d 1177, 1183 [*1148] (S.D. Cal. 2002) ("'Sponsored telecasting' under the SBA pertains only to network broadcast television and does not apply to non-exempt channels of distribution such as cable television, pay-per-view, and satellite television networks.").

The current arrangements for cable broadcasting of NFL games is as follows. The 32 individual NFL teams, each of which is a separate "independently owned, and independently managed business," Am. Needle, 560 U.S. at 196, entered into an agreement with the NFL ("Teams-NFL Agreement") to pool their telecasting rights and give the NFL the authority to exercise those rights, rather than exercising those rights individually. The consequence of this agreement is that an individual team cannot enter into individual agreements with networks, satellite TV providers, or internet streaming services. Instead, only the NFL can enter into an agreement to sell those rights.

[3] Over-the-air television is conveyed by "[b]roadcast stations [that] radiate electromagnetic signals from a central transmitting antenna." Turner Broad. Sys., Inc. v. F.C.C., 512 U.S. 622, 627, 114 S. Ct. 2445, 129 L. Ed. 2d 497 (1994). It is free to "any television set within the antenna's range." Id. Cable television, in contrast, typically relies upon "cable or optical fibers strung aboveground or buried in ducts to reach the homes or businesses of subscribers." Id. at 628. Satellite television providers deliver their "signals via satellite directly into its customers' homes." DirecTV, Inc. v. Webb, 545 F.3d 837, 841 (9th Cir. 2008). As with "conventional radio and television broadcasting, [satellite television] signals are broadcast through the air and can be received—or intercepted—by anyone with the proper hardware." Id. Because satellite signals could be received by anyone with a satellite dish, satellite providers typically "encrypt[] [their] signals to protect against signal theft." Id.

Acting on behalf of its teams, the NFL entered into two additional agreements licensing the teams' telecast rights: (1) "the NFL-Network Agreement," which governs "local games," and (2) "the NFL-DirecTV Agreement," which governs "out-of-market games."

Under [15] the NFL-Network Agreement, CBS and Fox coordinate to create a single telecast for every Sunday-afternoon NFL game. Pursuant to that agreement, NFL owns the copyright in the telecasts. See, e.g., U.S. Copyright Office, NFL 2016 Season: Cowboys @ Packers, Week #6, Reg. No. PA0002069024 (Jan. 4, 2017) (noting that copyright was held by the NFL pursuant to transfer "[b]y contract"). The NFL, in turn, permits CBS and Fox to broadcast a limited number of games through free, over-the-air television. These are the so-called local games.

Under the NFL-DirecTV Agreement, the NFL allows DirecTV to obtain all of the live telecasts produced by CBS and Fox, package those telecasts, and deliver the bundled feeds to NFL Sunday Ticket subscribers. Thus, Sunday Ticket subscribers have access to both local and out-of-market games.

As a result of these agreements, fans who do not subscribe to Sunday Ticket have access to, at most, two to three local games each Sunday afternoon, in any given geographic area. This means, for example, that Los Angeles fans would be able to use over-the-air cable to watch the Rams play the Chargers at 1:00PM E.T. on Fox, the Vikings play the Patriots at 1:00PM E.T. on CBS, [16] and the Dolphins play the Cowboys at 4:00PM E.T. on CBS. But there is no option for NFL fans to watch any of the other 7 to 10 games played each Sunday afternoon which are not available on free, over-the-air television.

Fans who want to watch other out-of-market games cannot purchase games individually or by team, but are required to buy the entire package of NFL games. Additionally, in order to subscribe to the Sunday Ticket, consumers must also purchase a basic television package from DirecTV. In 2015, the cost of a basic Sunday Ticket package was $251.94 annually for residential subscribers. For commercial subscribers, the price varied depending on the capacity of the establishment, ranging from $2,314 to $120,000 per year.

II

Four plaintiffs (Ninth Inning, Inc., 1465 Third Avenue Restaurant Corp., Robert Gary Lippincott, Jr., and Michael Holinko) filed a consolidated complaint against the National Football League, NFL Enterprises LLC, all 32 individual NFL teams, DirecTV Holdings LLC, and DirecTV, LLC, on behalf of a putative class of residential and commercial NFL Sunday Ticket subscribers. (Our reference to "plaintiffs" [*1149] refers to the plaintiffs collectively. We will refer to the [17] defendants collectively, or as the NFL, the NFL teams, and DirecTV, as appropriate.)

The plaintiffs' consolidated complaint alleges that the defendants' interlocking agreements work together to suppress competition for the sale of professional football game telecasts in violation of Section 1 and Section 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act. Specifically, the complaint alleges that absent the anti-competitive Teams-NFL and NFL-DirecTV Agreements, the telecasts broadcast solely on Sunday Ticket would be available through other distributors. Additionally, each NFL team could make its own arrangements for telecasts of its games, and could contract with competing distribution channels or media, including other cable, satellite or internet carriers or competing networks. As a result of competition, the complaint alleges, a greater number of telecasts of NFL games would be created, and those telecasts would be more accessible to more viewers at lower prices.

The district court dismissed the consolidated complaint for failure to state a claim under either Section 1 or Section 2 of the Sherman Act. HN1[] "We review a district court's grant of a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim de novo." Bain v. Cal. Teachers Ass'n, 891 F.3d 1206, 1211 (9th Cir. 2018). Additionally, we "take all allegations [18] of material fact as true and construe them in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party." Turner v. City & Cty. of S.F., 788 F.3d 1206, 1210 (9th Cir. 2015). However, "conclusory allegations of law and unwarranted inferences are insufficient to avoid a Rule 12(b)(6) dismissal." Cousins v. Lockyer, 568 F.3d 1063, 1067 (9th Cir. 2009) (internal quotation marks omitted). We examine the district court's dismissal of the Section 1 and Section 2 claims in turn.

It is significant here that the defendants do not argue on appeal that the SBA applies to the Teams-NFL or NFL-DirecTV Agreements. As the foregoing history indicates, the NFL and the NFL teams' early decision to pool their telecast rights into a single package and share broadcast revenues was invalidated by Judge Grim as a violation of the Sherman Act. NFL I, 116 F. Supp. at 329-30. The NFL recovered its ability to enter into such pooling arrangements only by the enactment of the SBA, which offered the NFL and the NFL teams an exemption from antitrust law. See 15 U.S.C. § 1291. Because the defendants do not argue that the SBA applies to satellite broadcasting, we assume (without deciding) that it is not applicable to the Teams-NFL or NFL-DirecTV Agreements. Accordingly, our analysis of the complaint's allegations regarding those agreements is largely governed by the Supreme Court's decision in NCAA, 468 U.S. 85, which analyzed a similar [19] league sport broadcasting arrangement under the Sherman Act, without any applicable statutory exemption.[4]

III

HN2[] Section 1 of the Sherman Act prohibits "[e]very contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States." 15 U.S.C. § 1. Although on its face, Section 1 appears to outlaw virtually all contracts, it has been interpreted as "outlaw[ing] only unreasonable restraints" of trade. *State Oil Co. v. Khan, [1150] 522 U.S. 3, 10, 118 S. Ct. 275, 139 L. Ed. 2d 199 (1997).

HN3[] We determine whether a particular restraint of trade is unreasonable and thus a violation of Section 1 under the so-called "rule of reason."[5] Under this rule, we examine "the facts peculiar to the business, the history of the restraint, and the reasons why it was imposed," to determine the effect on competition in the relevant product market. National Soc. of Professional Engineers v. United States, 435 U.S. 679, 692, 98 S. Ct. 1355, 55 L. Ed. 2d 637 (1978).

HN5[] "In order to state a Section 1 claim under the rule of reason, plaintiffs must plead four separate elements." Brantley v. NBC Universal, Inc., 675 F.3d 1192, 1197 (9th Cir. 2012). "[P]laintiffs must plead facts which, if true, will prove: (1) a contract, combination or conspiracy among two or more persons or distinct business entities; (2) by which the persons or entities intended to harm or restrain trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations; (3) which actually injures competition." [20] Id. (internal quotation marks and citations omitted). Additionally, the plaintiffs must plead antitrust standing, meaning they must allege that (4) they are the proper parties to bring the antitrust action because they were harmed by the defendants' contract, combination, or conspiracy, and the harm they suffered was caused by the anti-competitive aspect of the defendants' conduct. Id.

A

The defendants do not dispute that the complaint adequately alleges that defendants have contracts for the purpose of restraining trade, the first and second elements. The defendants argue only that the complaint does not adequately allege the third and fourth elements of a Section 1 claim. We begin with the third element of a Section 1 claim, whether plaintiffs have adequately alleged that the restraint injures competition.

[4] The defendants argue, and the plaintiffs do not dispute, that the NFL-Network Agreement is covered by the SBA. But the parties do not argue that the agreements at issue here are exempt from antitrust liability merely because the NFL-Network Agreement has such immunity.

[5] HN4[] Under antitrust law, some restraints of trade, such as horizontal agreements among competitors to fix prices, restrict output, and divide markets, are generally deemed to be per se unreasonable, and therefore it is unnecessary to apply the rule of reason in order to determine whether such agreements violate Section 1. See In re Musical Instruments & Equip. Antitrust Litig., 798 F.3d 1186, 1191 (9th Cir. 2015). Although this case concerns a horizontal agreement, the Supreme Court has concluded that the per se rule does not apply to agreements involving teams engaged in league sports, on the ground that such sports "can only be carried out jointly." NCAA, 468 U.S. at 101 (quoting Bork, The Antitrust Paradox 278 (1978)). Therefore, when considering agreements among entities involved in league sports, such as here, a court must determine whether the restriction is unreasonable under the rule of reason. Id. at 103.

HN6[] In order to satisfy this third requirement, the plaintiffs must identify a harm that is "attributable to an anti-competitive aspect of the practice under scrutiny." Atl. Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 334, 110 S. Ct. 1884, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333 (1990). A harm that could have occurred under the normal circumstances of free competition fails to satisfy this requirement. See Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 458, 113 S. Ct. 884, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1993). An agreement between competitors (a horizontal agreement) satisfies the requirement of showing injury to competition [21] if it reduces competitors' independent decisions about "whether and how often to offer to provide services," F.T.C. v. Superior Court Trial Lawyers Ass'n, 493 U.S. 411, 422, 110 S. Ct. 768, 107 L. Ed. 2d 851 (1990), or fixes prices, United States v. Socony—Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U.S. 150, 223, 60 S. Ct. 811, 84 L. Ed. 1129 (1940), or otherwise limits competitors' "freedom to compete," [*1151] NCAA, 468 U.S. at 106. In order to show that an agreement injures competition, a plaintiff must generally show that the defendants have market power within a relevant market, Newcal Indus., Inc. v. Ikon Office Sol., 513 F.3d 1038, 1044 (9th Cir. 2008), meaning that the defendants have "the ability to raise prices above those that would be charged in a competitive market," NCAA, 468 U.S. at 109 n.38. Alternatively, plaintiffs can show that a restraint injures competition if they plausibly allege "a naked restriction on price or output," such as "an agreement not to compete in terms of price or output." Id. at 109. An agreement between companies at different levels of a supply chain (a vertical agreement) may injure competition if it facilitates "horizontal collusion." Brantley, 675 F.3d at 1198.

B

In this case, the plaintiffs' allegations on their face adequately allege an injury to competition. The interlocking agreements at issue are similar to those that have historically required an exemption from antitrust liability by the SBA: they are "joint agreement[s]" whereby a "league of clubs participating in professional football . . . sells [22] or otherwise transfers all or any part of the rights of such league's member clubs" in the telecasting of such games. 15 U.S.C. § 1291. This is the exact type of arrangement that Judge Grim concluded violated the Sherman Act—and, more importantly, that the Supreme Court held caused an injury to competition in the context of college football. See NCAA, 468 U.S. at 104.

Because we assume that the NFL's interlocking agreements are not protected by the SBA, the Supreme Court's decision in NCAA controls our analysis. In that case, the Supreme Court held that HN7[] an agreement among college football teams and the NCAA violated Section 1 of the Sherman Act because the agreement eliminated competition in the market for college football telecasts. See generally id. Here, the interlocking agreements impose similar restrictions. First, the Supreme Court noted in NCAA that the agreement at issue "limits the total amount of televised intercollegiate football and the number of games that any one team may televise." Id. at 94. The complaint here alleges that the interlocking agreements in this case impose analogous limitations: plaintiffs assert that the Teams-NFL and NFL-DirecTV Agreements limit the "amount of televised [professional] football" that one team [23] may televise because they restrict the number of telecasts made to a single telecast for each game.

Second, the Supreme Court noted that the agreements in NCAA provided that "[n]o member [college] is permitted to make any sale of television rights except in accordance with the basic plan." Id. In our case, plaintiffs allege that the NFL teams are similarly restricted. Under the terms of the Teams-NFL and NFL-DirecTV Agreements, no individual NFL team is permitted to sell its telecasting rights independently. Independent telecasts are forbidden under the terms of the Agreements because they would cause the teams to compete with each other and with DirecTV. Just as the University of Oklahoma was forbidden from increasing the number of telecasts made of its games, so too are the Seattle Seahawks forbidden from selling their telecast rights independently from the NFL.

Third, in NCAA the Court concluded that the agreement among the member colleges was a horizontal agreement among competitors because "the policies of the NCAA with respect to television rights are ultimately controlled by the vote of member institutions." Id. at 99. The same type of agreement is alleged [*1152] here. According to the complaint, [24] the NFL members vote to approve the contract between DirecTV and the NFL. Therefore, the complaint adequately alleges that the Teams-NFL Agreement is a "horizontal restraint—an agreement among competitors" that "places an artificial limit on the quantity of televised football that is available [for sale] to broadcasters and consumers." Id.

Finally, NCAA held that the agreements constituted a naked restriction on output, and defined the relevant output to be "the quantity of television rights available for sale," meaning "the total amount of televised intercollegiate football," Id. at 94, 99, as opposed to whether each game was broadcast in some market at some time. In our case, the complaint likewise alleges that the interlocking agreements restrain the production and sale of telecasts in a manner that constitutes "a naked restriction" on the number of telecasts available for broadcasters and consumers.

Because the complaint alleges that the interlocking agreements in this case involve the same sorts of restrictions that NCAA concluded constituted an injury to competition, we likewise conclude that the complaint plausibly alleges an injury to competition. Further, because the alleged restrictions [25] on the production and sale of telecasts constitute "a naked restriction" on the number of telecasts available for broadcasters and consumers, the plaintiffs were not required to establish a relevant market. Id. at 109.

The defendants make a number of arguments against this conclusion. We consider each in turn.

First, the defendants argue that under In re Musical Instruments & Equipment Antitrust Litigation, 798 F.3d 1186 (9th Cir. 2015), it is necessary to analyze the horizontal NFL Teams agreement separately from the vertical NFL-DirecTV agreement, and when viewed in that light, the NFL-DirecTV agreement does not injure competition because it is an exclusive distribution agreement of the type that is presumptively legal. We disagree. First, Musical Instruments does not require a court to break down an alleged conspiracy into its constituent parts. Musical Instruments merely explained the uncontroversial principle that, in general, horizontal agreements are analyzed under per se rules, while vertical agreements are analyzed under the rule of reason. Id. at 1191-92. But as noted above, both types of agreements are analyzed under the rule of reason in cases involving league sports. NCAA, 468 U.S. at 101-03.

Contrary to the defendants' argument, HN8[] we are required to take a holistic look at how the interlocking agreements actually [26] impact competition. See Nat'l Soc'y. of Prof'l Eng'rs, 435 U.S. at 692. Indeed, "the essential inquiry" is "whether or not the challenged restraint enhances competition," which is assessed by considering the totality of "the nature or character of the contracts." NCAA, 468 U.S. at 103-04 (quoting Nat'l Soc'y of Prof'l Eng'rs, 435 U.S. at 690). Thus, the law requires that the "character and effect of a conspiracy are not to be judged by dismembering it and viewing its separate parts, but only by looking at it as a whole." Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 698-99, 82 S. Ct. 1404, 8 L. Ed. 2d 777 (1962) (quoting United States v. Patten, 226 U.S. 525, 544, 33 S. Ct. 141, 57 L. Ed. 333 (1913)). Accordingly, we must give plaintiffs "the full benefit of their proof without tightly compartmentalizing the various factual components and wiping the slate clean after scrutiny of each." City of Long Beach v. Standard Oil [*1153] Co., 872 F.2d 1401, 1404-05 (9th Cir. 1989), opinion amended on denial of reh'g, 886 F.2d 246 (9th Cir. 1989) (quoting Continental Ore Co., 370 U.S. at 699).

Looking holistically at the alleged conduct, we conclude that the complaint adequately pleads that the vertical NFL-DirecTV Agreement works in tandem with the Teams-NFL agreement to restrain competition. The Supreme Court has held thatHN9[] a horizontal agreement among competitors to pool separate property rights and enter into an agreement to license their rights vertically can constitute a Section 1 violation. See Am. Needle, 560 U.S. at 201 (holding that an agreement among the NFL and its member teams to create an entity that jointly licensed their separately owned intellectual [27] property constituted concerted action in violation of the Sherman Act). Accordingly, we reject the defendants' argument that we cannot view the effects of both the horizontal and vertical agreements working together.

Defendants further argue that plaintiffs have failed to allege an injury to competition because the production of the telecasts necessarily requires joint action, and therefore the restrictions are pro-competitive. According to defendants, each NFL game broadcast is a copyrighted work jointly authored by the NFL, the two competing teams, and the broadcast network, and the agreement of all participants is necessary in order to create the telecasts at all.

Thus, defendants argue, the Supreme Court's decision in American Needle is inapposite because that decision concerned separately owned intellectual property, id. at 187, whereas here, the telecasts could only be created through cooperation between competitors.

We disagree. Defendants have failed to identify, and we are unaware of, any binding precedent requiring the teams and the NFL to cooperate in order to produce the telecasts.

HN10[] Under copyright law, it is well-established that the underlying NFL game is not copyrightable subject [28] matter. See Dryer v. NFL, 814 F.3d 938, 942 (8th Cir. 2016) (noting that "courts have recognized that the initial performance of a game is an 'athletic event' outside the subject matter of copyright"); Nat'l Basketball Ass'n v. Motorola, Inc., 105 F.3d 841, 846 (2d Cir. 1997) ("NBA") ("In our view, the underlying basketball games do not fall within the subject matter of federal copyright protection because they do not constitute 'original works of authorship' under 17 U.S.C. § 102(a).").

However, HN11[] the telecasts of sporting events are plainly copyrightable "motion pictures" under the Copyright Act of 1976. 17 U.S.C. § 102(a)(6); NBA, 105 F.3d at 847 ("[R]ecorded broadcasts of NBA games—as opposed to the games themselves—are . . . entitled to copyright protection."). Indeed, "[t]he Copyright Act was amended in 1976 specifically to insure that simultaneously-recorded transmissions of live performances and sporting events would meet the Act's requirement that the original work of authorship be 'fixed in any tangible medium of expression.'" NBA, 105 F.3d at 847 (citing 17 U.S.C. § 102(a); H.R. Rep. No. 94-1476, at 52); see also Nat'l Football League v. McBee & Bruno's, Inc., 792 F.2d 726, 732 (8th Cir. 1986) ("[T]he legislative history demonstrates a clear intent on the part of Congress to 'resolve, through the definition of "fixation" . . . , the status of live broadcasts,' using—coincidentally but not insignificantly—the example of a live football game.").

[*1154] HN12[] Under general copyright [29] law, copyright ownership vests initially in the author of the work, 17 U.S.C. § 201(a), who, as a general rule, "is the party who actually creates the work, that is, the person who translates an idea into a fixed, tangible expression entitled to copyright protection." See Cmty. for Creative Non-Violence v. Reid, 490 U.S. 730, 737, 109 S. Ct. 2166, 104 L. Ed. 2d 811 (1989). Thus, in the absence of an agreement otherwise, the person or company that creates the telecast is the "author" of the telecast for the purposes of copyright law. See id.; see also Garcia v. Google, Inc., 786 F.3d 733, 744 (9th Cir. 2015) (en banc). Assuming that this rule applies in the league sports setting, the team or network that creates the telecasts would be the sole owner of the copyright in the telecasts, absent some agreement to the contrary. See Reid, 490 U.S. at 737; see also Baltimore Orioles, Inc. v. Major League Baseball Players Ass'n, 805 F.2d 663, 668-69 (7th Cir. 1986) ("When a football game is being covered by four television cameras, with a director guiding the activities of the four cameramen and choosing which of their electronic images are sent to the public and in which order, there is little doubt that what the cameramen and the director are doing constitutes 'authorship.'" (internal quotation marks and citations omitted)).

In the absence of a legal requirement that the NFL teams, NFL, and broadcasters coordinate in filming and broadcasting live games, the Los Angeles Rams (for instance) [30] could contract for their own telecast of Rams games and then register the telecasts for those games with the Rams (and perhaps the team against whom they are playing). Only the agreements that are the subject of plaintiffs' antitrust action prevent such independent actions. Thus, we reject the defendants' argument that American Needle, 560 U.S. at 190, is inapposite; here, like in American Needle, the agreements not to compete concern separately owned intellectual property, and impose an unlawful restraint on independent competition.

Indeed, the history of the NFL, as well as the practice in other professional sports leagues, supports our conclusion. As discussed above, prior to the passage of the SBA, the telecast rights in NFL games "were controlled by individual teams" and NFL teams routinely licensed telecasts of their games to television networks. U.S. Football League, 842 F.2d at 1346. Indeed, by the late 1950s, thirteen individual teams had signed contracts with either CBS or NBC and one team "had organized its own network." H.R. Rep. No. 93-483 at 4 (1973). Thus, the Supreme Court explained that college football teams "are clearly able to negotiate agreements with whatever broadcasters they choose." NCAA, 468 U.S. at 114 n.53 (quoting the district court, Board of Regents v. National Collegiate Athletic Asso., 546 F. Supp. 1276, 1307-08 (W.D. Okla. 1982)). Further, after [31] the decision in NCAA, the NCAA teams arranged telecasting on their own. Grow, supra, 72 Wash. & Lee L. Rev. at 617. Additionally, in comparable sports leagues, namely the National Hockey League and Major League Baseball, "each team owns the initial right to control telecasts of its home games." Laumann v. NHL, 907 F. Supp. 2d 465, 473, 485 (S.D.N.Y. 2012); see also New Boston Television, Inc. v. ESPN, No. 81-1010-Z, 1981 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15032, 1981 WL 1374, at *1 (D. Mass. Aug. 3, 1981) ("The copyright of the teleplays of all Red Sox games is owned by the Red Sox."). And in another form of media, radio broadcasting, plaintiffs allege that the NFL Teams already negotiate individual radio broadcasting contracts.

Therefore, we reject defendants' argument that the complaint fails to allege a Section 1 violation because the telecasts [*1155] can be created only through cooperation among competitors.

Defendants next assert that plaintiffs' complaint failed to allege injury to competition because the NFL-DirecTV agreement did not reduce the output of NFL game broadcasts. From the supply side, defendants argue, every regular season NFL game is broadcast over free television in some geographic area, and therefore, the entire potential supply of NFL game broadcasts is produced and distributed to the public. From the demand side, defendants argue, NFL broadcasts receive the most views [32] of any sports league; 202.3 million unique viewers watched an NFL football game in 2014.

We disagree that the defendants' definition of output is the only permissible definition for purposes of determining whether plaintiffs have stated a claim. As noted above, NCAA indicated that the relevant output is "the total amount of televised intercollegiate football," available to consumers. 468 U.S. at 94. We therefore reject the defendants' argument that because all NFL Sunday-afternoon games are broadcast somewhere, there is no limitation on output as a matter of law.

The complaint alleges that defendants have limited output by restricting the quantity of telecasts available for sale, and that the NFL has set a uniform quantity of telecasts of football games—one per game—with no regard to the actual consumer demand for the telecasts. The plaintiffs plausibly allege that "if member institutions were free to sell television rights, many more games would be shown," 468 U.S. at 105, because an individual NFL team would "be free to sell the right to televise its games for whatever price it could get." Id. at 106 n.30 (quoting the district court's findings, 546 F. Supp. at 1318). "The prices would vary for the games, with games between prominent [NFL teams] [33] drawing a larger price than games between less prominent [NFL teams]." Id. (quoting the district court's findings, 546 F. Supp. at 1318). We conclude that for purposes of determining whether plaintiffs have stated an injury to competition, the plaintiffs have plausibly alleged that the output in this case is the number of telecasts of games, and that the defendants' interlocking agreements reduce that output.

Finally, defendants claim that the complaint fails to allege injury to competition because it has not alleged a properly defined market in which defendants have market power. Defendants argue that the complaint failed to plausibly allege that they have market power in either the market for live video presentations of regular season NFL games or the submarket for out-of-market game broadcasts. We reject these arguments. Given that professional football games have no substitutes (as fans do not consider NFL games to be comparable to other sports or forms of entertainment), see L.A. Mem'l Coliseum Comm'n v. Nat'l Football League, 726 F.2d 1381, 1393 (9th Cir. 1984), the defendants in this case have effective control over the entire market for telecasts of professional football games. The complaint therefore plausibly alleges a naked restraint on output: that the defendants' interlocking [34] agreements have the effect of limiting output to one telecast of each game, which is then broadcast in a limited manner, solely according to the NFL's agreements with CBS, Fox, and DirecTV. HN13[] When there is such an agreement not to compete in terms of output, "no elaborate industry analysis is required to demonstrate the anticompetitive character of such an agreement." NCAA, 468 U.S. at 109 (quoting Nat'l Soc'y of Prof'l Eng'rs, [*1156] 435 U.S. at 692). Here, as in NCAA, "an observer with even a rudimentary understanding of economics could conclude that the arrangements in question would have an anticompetitive effect on customers and markets."

Cal. Dental Ass'n v. F.T.C., 526 U.S. 756, 770, 119 S. Ct. 1604, 143 L. Ed. 2d 935 (1999). Because the complaint adequately alleged that the defendants have imposed "a naked restriction" on output, it has not failed to allege market power. NCAA, 468 U.S. at 109.

We conclude that the complaint adequately alleges the element of injury to competition by alleging that the interlocking Teams-NFL and NFL-DirecTV Agreements injure competition.

C

Defendants next argue that the plaintiffs lack antitrust standing to challenge the Teams-NFL Agreement.[6] HN14[] To plead the fourth element, antitrust standing or antitrust injury, plaintiffs must allege that they were harmed by the injury to competition. Brantley, 675 F.3d at 1197. Further, plaintiffs must allege that their [35] harm was caused directly by the antitrust violator. See Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 746, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707 (1977). In Illinois Brick, the Supreme Court incorporated "principles of proximate cause" into an action for violation of the Sherman Act, holding "that indirect purchasers who are two or more steps removed from the violator in a distribution chain may not sue." Apple Inc. v. Pepper, 139 S. Ct. 1514, 1520-21, 203 L. Ed. 2d 802 (2019). The Supreme Court reasoned that allowing every purchaser in a distribution chain to claim damages flowing from a single antitrust violation "would create a serious risk of multiple liability for defendants." Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at 730. The Court also wanted to avoid "the evidentiary complexities and uncertainties" that would be "multiplied in the offensive use of pass-on by a plaintiff several steps removed from the defendant in the chain of distribution." Id. at 732. Accordingly, Illinois Brick "established a bright-line rule that authorizes suits by direct purchasers but bars suits by indirect purchasers." Pepper, 139 S. Ct. at 1521. Said otherwise, "purchasers who are two or more steps removed from the antitrust violator in a distribution chain may not sue." Id. To illustrate, under this rule, if "manufacturer A sells to retailer B, and retailer B sells to consumer C, then C may not sue A." Id. However, "C may sue B if B is an antitrust [36] violator." Id.

These "principles of proximate cause," id. at 1520, apply differently when the injury to plaintiffs is caused by a multi-level conspiracy to violate antitrust laws. We first considered this issue in Arizona v. Shamrock Foods Co., 729 F.2d 1208 (9th Cir. 1984). In that case, a class of consumers brought an antitrust action against dairy producers and grocery stores, alleging they had jointly conspired to fix the price of dairy products at the retail level. Id. at 1211. Because the consumers alleged a price-fixing conspiracy implicating both the dairy producers and the grocery retailers, we concluded the plaintiffs' claim was not barred. Id. at 1210. Under the principles of Illinois Brick, we reasoned that the [*1157] plaintiffs' injuries were caused by the conspiracy itself (the concerted action of the dairy producers and grocery retailers), and thus the case did not require calculating the pass-through effects of an indirect injury or raise the risk of duplicative damage claims. Id. at 1213-14; see also In re ATM Fee Antitrust Litig., 686 F.3d 741, 750 (9th Cir. 2012). As we subsequently explained, HN15[] "[i]f the direct purchaser conspires to fix the price paid by the plaintiffs, then the plaintiffs pay the fixed price directly and are not indirect purchasers (i.e., there is no pass-on theory involved)." In re ATM Fee Antitrust Litig., 686 F.3d at 750. In other words, when co-conspirators have jointly [37] committed the antitrust violation, a plaintiff who is the immediate purchaser from any of the conspirators is directly injured by the violation. See Pepper, 139 S. Ct. at 1522.

Here, the plaintiffs allege that DirecTV has conspired with the NFL and the NFL teams. According to the complaint, the conspiracy involves both the Teams-NFL agreement and the NFL-DirecTV agreement, which work together as a single conspiracy to limit the output of NFL telecasts. This output limitation in turn results in prices for out-of-market games being higher than they would be in the absence of the conspiracy. Because, as in Shamrock Foods, the complaint alleges that plaintiffs' injuries were proximately caused by a single conspiracy, their complaint does not require calculating the pass-through effects of an indirect injury or raise a risk of claims for duplicative harms.

[6] There is no dispute that the plaintiffs have standing to challenge the NFL-DirecTV Agreement because they are direct purchasers of DirecTV. Nor is there a dispute that the plaintiffs have standing to seek injunctive relief based on the Teams-NFL Agreement because "indirect purchasers are not barred from bringing an antitrust claim for injunctive relief against manufacturers." Lucas Auto. Eng'g, Inc. v. Bridgestone/Firestone, Inc., 140 F.3d 1228, 1235 (9th Cir. 1998). The dissent agrees on these points, as well. Dissent at 41 n.2.

See 729 F.2d at 1213-14.[7] Even though DirecTV is the immediate seller to the plaintiffs, the plaintiffs' allegation that they were directly injured by the conspiracy among the NFL teams, the NFL, and DirecTV is sufficient to allege antitrust standing for purposes of surviving a motion to dismiss. See Pepper, 139 S. Ct. at 1521.

The defendants argue (and the dissent [38] agrees) that the plaintiffs do not have standing to challenge the Teams-NFL Agreement because In re ATM Antitrust Fee Litigation limited the co-conspirator exception to Illinois Brick to cases where an indirect purchaser "establishes a price-fixing conspiracy between the manufacturer and the middleman." Id. at 749. Because the conspiracy in this case involved an output restriction, defendants argue, Illinois Brick applies and precludes the plaintiffs from challenging an agreement that did not affect them directly. This argument misunderstands ATM Antitrust Fee Litigation. As we explained, the "co-conspirator exception is not really an exception at all," but rather describes a situation in which Illinois Brick is simply not applicable. Id. at 750. Because the [*1158] conspiracy alleged in ATM Antitrust Fee Litigation was a price-fixing conspiracy, we analyzed that sort of conspiracy, and held Illinois Brick did not apply because "[i]f the direct purchaser conspires to fix the price paid by the plaintiffs, then the plaintiffs pay the fixed price directly and are not indirect purchasers." Id.[8]

Although ATM Antitrust Fee Litigation focused on an alleged price fixing conspiracy, its [39] reasoning is equally applicable to an output-restriction conspiracy, such as the situation here: HN16[] if the direct purchaser conspires to limit the output that will ultimately be available to the plaintiffs, then the plaintiffs are directly impacted by the output limitation and have standing to sue. See Pepper, 139 S. Ct. at 1521. In other words, under our caselaw, when plaintiffs adequately allege that their injury was caused by a conspiracy to violate antitrust laws, even when the conspiracy involves multiple levels of producers, distributors, and sales, the plaintiffs sufficiently allege an antitrust injury that can withstand a motion to dismiss.

Defendants argue that we should distinguish between price-fixing and output-restricting conspiracies, but provide no reasoned basis for doing so.[9] Nor can they, because the Supreme Court has concluded that HN17[] price-fixing conspiracies are functionally indistinguishable from output-restricting conspiracies. See Cal. Dental Ass'n, 526 U.S. at 777. As the Supreme Court explained, "[a]n agreement on output also equates to a price-fixing agreement," because "[i]f firms raise price, the market's demand for their product will fall, so the amount supplied will fall too—in other words, output will be restricted." [40] Id. (internal quotations omitted). On the other hand, "[i]f instead the firms restrict output directly, price will as mentioned rise in order to limit demand to the reduced supply." Id. (internal quotations omitted). Accordingly, the Supreme Court noted, "with exceptions not relevant here, raising price, reducing output, and dividing markets have the same anticompetitive effects." Id. (internal quotations omitted). A conspiracy between a cartel of widget producers and their widget retailer to set an artificially high price for widgets is functionally the same as a conspiracy to set an artificially low total output of widgets, which causes prices to rise. See id. Therefore, the consumer of widgets would be directly injured by the antitrust violators at both levels of the [7] The dissent argues that our holding would require the complex damages calculations that the rule in Illinois Brick was intended to avoid. Dissent at 41. In Illinois Brick, the Court expressed concern that the judicial system would be too burdened if it had to determine how much of the antitrust violator's overcharge to the first purchaser was passed on to the second, third, or fourth purchasers in the distribution chain. 431 U.S. at 733 n.13 ("[T]he final purchaser still will have to trace the overcharge through each step in the distribution chain."). But those sorts of calculations are not required in this context. Unlike the situation in Illinois Brick, the plaintiffs here do not allege that an innocent middleman has passed through damages caused by a higher-level antitrust violator. Because plaintiffs allege that DirecTV is part of the conspiracy, DirecTV directly caused the injury to the consumers. Thus, to calculate the plaintiffs' damages, a court would not need to determine to what extent the NFL overcharged DirecTV; it would need to consider only the prices consumers paid compared to the prices that would have existed in a competitive market. See Los Angeles Mem'l Coliseum Comm'n, 791 F.2d at 1367.

[8] Our analysis of ATM Antitrust Fee Litigation accords with the Supreme Court's instruction that in a distribution chain where "manufacturer A sells to retailer B, and retailer B sells to consumer C, . . . C may sue B if B is an antitrust violator." Pepper, 139 S. Ct. at 1521. Because this rule applies so long as B is an antitrust violator, it is irrelevant whether B is engaged in a price-fixing or an output-restricting conspiracy. See id.

[9] The dissent echoes this argument, see Dissent at 41 n. 3, but likewise fails to explain a reasoned basis for such a distinction.

distribution chain and would have standing to sue those co-conspirators in both scenarios. See Pepper, 139 S. Ct. at 1521.

Accordingly, we conclude that Illinois Brick is not applicable here because the complaint adequately alleges that DirecTV conspired with the NFL and the NFL Teams to limit the production of telecasts to one per game, and that plaintiffs suffered antitrust injury due to this conspiracy to limit output.

IV

We now turn to the [41] question whether the complaint adequately alleges a violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act. HN18[] Section 2 makes it unlawful for any person to "monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any [*1159] part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations . . . ." 15 U.S.C. § 2. Plaintiffs allege two forms of Section 2 violations, a conspiracy to monopolize claim and a monopolization claim. To establish a conspiracy to monopolize claim under Section 2, plaintiffs must plead: "(1) the existence of a combination or conspiracy to monopolize; (2) an overt act in furtherance of the conspiracy; (3) the specific intent to monopolize; and (4) causal antitrust injury." Paladin Assocs., Inc. v. Mont. Power Co., 328 F.3d 1145, 1158 (9th Cir. 2003). To plausibly plead a monopolization claim, plaintiffs must allege: "(a) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market; (b) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power; and (c) causal antitrust injury. " Somers v. Apple, Inc., 729 F.3d 953, 963 (9th Cir. 2013) (quoting Allied Orthopedic Appliances Inc. v. Tyco Health Care Grp. LP, 592 F.3d 991, 998 (9th Cir. 2010)).[10]

Plaintiffs allege that by entering into interlocking agreements, the defendants conspired to monopolize the market for professional football telecasts and have monopolized it. Defendants argue that the complaint fails to state a claim for the same reason that the Section 1 claim [42] fails: plaintiffs have failed to allege injury to competition or a properly defined relevant market. Defendants also claim that plaintiffs have failed to allege that the defendants had the specific intent to monopolize a relevant market.

We reject this argument. For the reasons explained above, plaintiffs have adequately alleged injury to competition, and have adequately alleged that defendants have market power in the market for professional football telecasts. Moreover, the complaint adequately alleges that the interlocking NFL-Team and NFL-DirecTV agreements were designed to maintain market power, which is sufficient to allege defendants' specific intent. Accordingly, we conclude that the complaint adequately alleges a Section 2 violation.

REVERSED.

Dissent

SMITH, N.R., Circuit Judge, dissenting from Part III(C) of the Majority's opinion[*]

The Majority concludes that the direct purchaser rule articulated in Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 97 S. Ct. 2061, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707 (1977) does not apply to Plaintiffs' damages claim related to the Teams-NFL Agreement, because Plaintiffs have alleged a conspiracy among Defendants to limit output. Maj. Op. at 33-37. Because this conclusion is controverted by Supreme Court and Ninth Circuit caselaw, I cannot agree.

---

[10] By its terms, the SBA applies only to Section 1 of the Sherman Act and has no relevance to the plaintiffs' Section 2 claims. 15 U.S.C. § 1291.

[*] I concur in the rest of the Majority's opinion.

In Illinois [43] Brick, the Supreme Court articulated the direct purchaser rule, which instructs that "indirect purchasers may not use a pass-on theory to recover damages [on an anti-trust claim] and thus have no standing to sue." Brennan v. Concord EFS, Inc. (In re ATM Fee Antitrust Litig.), 686 F.3d 741, 748 (9th Cir. 2012) (citing Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at 745-46). The Court created this rule to alleviate the concern that pass-on theories of recovery would require courts to "trac[e] a wholesale overcharge through an intermediary and allocat[e] the retail price between an unlawful wholesale overcharge and market forces."Arizona v. Shamrock Foods Co., 729 F.2d 1208, 1214 (9th Cir. 1984); Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at 737 ("[T]he use of pass-on theories . . . essentially would transform [damages] actions into massive efforts to [*1160] apportion the recovery among all potential plaintiffs that could have absorbed part of the overcharge from direct purchasers to middlemen to ultimate consumers. However appealing this attempt to allocate the overcharge might seem in theory, it would add whole new dimensions of complexity to [damages] suits and seriously undermine their effectiveness.").

The rule has an exception: where a plaintiff alleges a price-fixing conspiracy between a manufacturer and the direct purchaser. We refer to this exception as the "co-conspirator exception." In re ATM Fee Antitrust Litig., 686 F.3d at 750. With a price-fixing conspiracy, "[t]he injury suffered by [44] the [consumer] through the effectuation of a voluntary co-conspiracy [to fix the consumer price] can be determined by computing the retail price of [the product] but-for the alleged price fix, and subtracting that total from the actual purchase price." Shamrock Foods Co., 729 F.2d at 1214 (quoting In re Mid-Atlantic Toyota Antitrust Litig., 516 F. Supp. 1287, 1295 (D. Md. 1981)). In other words, where there is a price-fixing conspiracy, the court need not engage in a complex damages calculation, because the overcharge "was not passed on to the consumers through any other level in the distribution chain." Id.

In our case, Plaintiffs' challenge to the horizontal agreement among the NFL Teams is unquestionably based on a pass-on theory of injury, and the co-conspirator exception does not apply. After all, Plaintiffs have not alleged that the NFL Teams set, or conspired to set, the actual price paid by any consumers. Instead, they allege only that DirecTV has set an artificially high consumer price—an allegation that would require the court to determine whether the payment DirecTV made to the NFL for the telecast rights was an overpayment,[1] how much of an overpayment it was (relative to what DirecTV would have had to pay had the NFL Teams not agreed to pool all of their broadcast rights), and how much of [45] that overpayment was actually then passed on to the consumers. Thus, Plaintiffs' claim for damages stemming from the alleged horizontal agreement among the NFL Teams would require the very analysis prohibited by the Illinois Brick rule. That claim fails.[2]

The Majority disagrees, claiming that, because Plaintiffs have alleged a conspiracy between the manufacturer and the distributor to restrict output, the Illinois Brick rule is inapplicable. Maj. Op. at 38. The Majority's theory creates problems for three reasons.

First, this court has already rejected the Majority's notion that the Illinois Brick rule does not apply when an alleged conspiracy has the same anti-competitive effect as fixing the consumer price.[3] See In [*1161] re ATM Fee

[1] If DirecTV did not overpay the NFL, then consumers have not been damaged by the NFL's horizontal agreement. Under those circumstances, any arbitrary inflation in the price set by DirecTV could not have stemmed from that agreement, but must stem from some other source.

[2] On the other hand, Plaintiffs are correct in asserting that, notwithstanding the direct purchaser rule, they "have standing to challenge the agreements between the teams and the league" for injunctive relief. Freeman v. San Diego Ass'n of Realtors, 322 F.3d 1133, 1145 (9th Cir. 2003) ("Illinois Brick doesn't apply to equitable relief."). Thus, because Plaintiffs seek injunctive relief in addition to their damages requests, their claim challenging the NFL Teams' horizontal Agreement is not entirely precluded by the direct purchaser rule.

[3] The Majority claims that a distinction between price-fixing and output-fixing restrictions is foreclosed by California Dental Association. Maj. Op. at 36 (citing Cal. Dental Ass'n v. FTC, 526 U.S. 756, 777, 119 S. Ct. 1604, 143 L. Ed. 2d 935 (1999)). However, California Dental Association does not discuss the Illinois Brick rule or the distinction between indirect and direct purchasers. See generally 526 U.S. 756, 119 S. Ct. 1604, 143 L. Ed. 2d 935. Instead, that case stands only for the uncontested proposition that a conspiracy to price fix and a conspiracy to restrict output both injure consumers by arbitrarily raising the price they pay for a product—i.e., both types of conspiracy have the same anti-competitive effects. Id. at 777. That says nothing about Antitrust Litig., 686 F.3d at 753 (rejecting an argument that Illinois Brick did not apply because "conspiring to set a [pre-market] price for the purpose and effect of raising the [market] price . . . equates to fixing [the market] price and makes the payers of the raised [market] price direct purchasers." (emphasis added)). It simply does not matter that the alleged pre-market conspiracy has the same effect as setting a specific market price. Id. at 752. Similarly, it does not matter that the ultimate [46] consumers "are purchasing from a violator" of the Sherman Act. Id. at 755. As long as a party challenging anti-competitive behavior relies on a pass-on theory of injury, it may recover damages only if it alleges and demonstrates a conspiracy that actually sets the consumer price—not just a conspiracy that may have the same practical effect. Id. at 754 ("[U]nder the co-conspirator exception recognized in this circuit, the price paid by a plaintiff must be set by the conspiracy and not merely affected by the setting of another price.").

Second, the conspiracy alleged by Plaintiffs—that Defendants conspired to reduce the output of television broadcast rights—does not alleviate the concerns expressed in Illinois Brick. Unlike a price-fixing conspiracy, the injury to the consumer from an output-reduction conspiracy still depends on a pass-on theory of damages. The initial overcharge occurs between the manufacturer and the distributer—i.e., a distributor pays a manufacturer an anti-competitive price for distribution rights—and that overcharge is passed on by the distributor to the consumer. [47] In such cases, courts must determine how much of the consumer price stems from ordinary market forces, and how much of it stems from the distributor's efforts to recoup its overpayment to the manufacturer.[4] See Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at 744-46. [*1162] Thus, unlike with a price-fixing conspiracy, the reviewing court must still make the exact determination "sought to be avoided in Illinois Brick." Shamrock Foods Co., 729 F.2d at 1214.

Finally, in In re ATM Fee Antitrust Litigation, we ruled that the co-conspirator exception "only applies when the co-conspirators fix the price paid by the plaintiff." 686 F.3d at 752 (emphasis added). Thus, because Plaintiffs have not alleged that Defendants conspired to fix the price paid by the consumer, the co-conspirator exception—at least in its present form—does not apply. See Dickson v. Microsoft Corp., 309 F.3d 193, 215 (4th Cir. 2002) ("[W]e interpret these cases as standing for the more narrow proposition that Illinois Brick is inapplicable to a particular type of conspiracy—price-fixing conspiracies." (emphasis added)); In re ATM Fee Antitrust Litig., 686 F.3d at 752 (approving of the Fourth Circuit's analysis in Dickson). In other words, to conclude that Plaintiffs have anti-trust standing, we must create a new exception to the Illinois Brick rule. The Supreme Court has instructed us not to do so. Kansas v. UtiliCorp United, Inc., 497 U.S. 199, 216, 110 S. Ct. 2807, 111 L. Ed. 2d 169 (1990) ("[A]mple justifications exist for [48] the Court's stated decision not to carve out exceptions to the indirect purchaser rule for particular types of markets." (quoting Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at 744)); Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at 745 ("As we have noted . . . Hanover Shoe itself implicitly discouraged the creation of exceptions to its rule barring pass-on [theories], and we adhere to the narrow scope of exemption indicated by our decision there.").

whether a particular consumer's injury is direct or indirect, or which consumers are authorized to seek judicial redress (i.e., which consumers do not rely on a pass-on theory of injury). Indeed, in Illinois Brick itself, the Court acknowledged that the indirect purchasers were injured by the manufacturer overcharging the distributor, but held that those purchasers were not the proper parties to sue to recover damages. 431 U.S. at 744-46.

The Majority's reliance on Apple Inc. v. Pepper, is likewise misplaced, as the plaintiffs in that case purchased the relevant good directly from the monopolizing entity—not from a middleman who conspired with the monopolizing entity down the line. 139 S. Ct. 1514, 1521, 203 L. Ed. 2d 802 (2019). Here, Plaintiffs purchased a service from DirecTV, which is not a party to the NFL's horizontal agreement. While the Majority is correct that "we are required to take a holistic look at how the interlocking agreements actually impact competition," Maj. Op. at 24, determining whether a party has alleged anti-competitive effects is distinct from determining whether the party is a direct or indirect purchaser with respect to a specific agreement—and none of the cases cited by the majority say otherwise, or even address that issue.

[4] Relying exclusively on the fact that Plaintiffs "allege that DirecTV is part of the conspiracy," the Majority conclusively states that "a court would not need to determine to what extent the NFL overcharged DirecTV," because "it would need to consider only the prices consumers paid compared to the prices that would have existed in a competitive market." Maj. Op. at 34 n. 7. However, it is unclear how in practice a court could consider what the theoretical consumer price would have been in a competitive market (absent the NFL's horizontal agreement) without considering whether and how much of an overpayment DirecTV made.

A motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted tests the legal sufficiency of a claim. While a complaint need not contain detailed factual allegations, it must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face. A claim is facially plausible when it allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged.

Section 1 of the Sherman Act states that every contract, combination, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce is illegal. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. Because every commercial agreement restrains trade, whether particular conduct violates § 1 of the Sherman Act depends on whether it is adjudged an unreasonable restraint. Restraints can be unreasonable in one of two ways. A small group of restraints are unreasonable per se because they always or almost always tend to restrict competition and decrease output. Restraints that are not unreasonable per se are judged under the rule of reason. The rule of reason requires courts to conduct a fact-specific assessment of market power and market structure to assess the restraint's actual effect on competition.

In order to defeat a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) motion, a plaintiff asserting Sherman Act § 1 claims, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, must allege enough factual matter (taken as true) to suggest that an agreement was made. It is insufficient to allege the existence of a conspiracy in conclusory terms, or to allege facts that suggesting the mere possibility of a conspiracy. The plaintiff must plead facts that are suggestive enough to render a § 1 conspiracy plausible.

HN7[] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Per Se Violations

At least one court in the United States District Court for the Northern District of California, San Jose Division, has held that standard setting organizations (SSO) are not illegal per se under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 and often create a net pro-competitive effect. Accordingly, any alleged agreement among the members of an SSO is analyzed under a rule of reason.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN8[] Horizontal Refusals to Deal, Boycotts

Recognizing that there is more confusion about the scope and operation of the per se rule against group boycotts than in reference to any other aspect of the 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 per se doctrine, three characteristics that are indicative of a per se illegal boycott are: (1) the boycott cuts off access to a supply, facility, or market necessary to enable the victim firm to compete; (2) the boycotting firm possesses a dominant market position; and (3) the practices are not justified by plausible arguments that they enhanced overall efficiency or competition. A concerted refusal to deal need not necessarily possess all of these traits to merit per se treatment.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN9[] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Per Se Violations

When a defendant advances plausible arguments that a practice enhances overall efficiency and makes markets more competitive, per se treatment under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 is inappropriate, and the rule of reason applies. This is so because plausible arguments that a practice is procompetitive make the court unable to conclude the likelihood of anticompetitive effects is clear and the possibility of countervailing procompetitive effects is remote.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN10[] Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason, Per Se Violations

A per se approach under 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 is inappropriate when a defendant advances a plausible efficiency justification. At least one United States District Court for the Northern District of California court has applied that reasoning to preclude per se claims at the motion to dismiss stage.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN11[] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason

Under the 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 rule of reason, a plaintiff must plead four separate elements: (1) the existence of a conspiracy, (2) the intention on the part of the co-conspirators to harm or restrain competition, (3) actual injury to competition, and (4) that the plaintiffs suffered antitrust injury as a result of the conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests > Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Sherman Act

HN12[] Per Se Rule Tests, Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

Proving injury to competition in a 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 rule of reason case almost uniformly requires a claimant to prove the relevant market and to show the effects upon competition within that market. That is, the plaintiff must allege both that a relevant market exists and that the defendant has power within that market. The term "relevant market" encompasses notions of geography as well as product use, quality, and description. The product market includes the pool of goods or services that enjoy reasonable interchangeability of use and cross-elasticity of demand.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests > Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Sherman Act

HN13[] Per Se Rule Tests, Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

Three factors must be considered in assessing a plaintiff's definition of the relevant market in a 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 rule of reason case. First, the relevant market must be a product market. Second, the market must encompass the product at issue as well as all economic substitutes for the product. The outer boundaries of a product market are determined by the reasonable interchangeability of use or the cross-elasticity of demand between the product itself and substitutes for it. Third, although the general market must include all economic substitutes, it is legally permissible to premise antitrust allegations on a submarket. Failure to identify a relevant market is a proper ground for dismissing a Sherman Act claim. A complaint may be dismissed under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) if the complaint's relevant market definition is facially unsustainable.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Sherman Act

HN14[] Sherman Act, Claims

To establish the effects on competition within a relevant product market, the plaintiff in a 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 case must allege market power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > Damages

HN15[] Sherman Act, Claims

Only those who possess antitrust standing by virtue of having suffered antitrust injury may bring a private action for damages for violation of the antitrust laws. Plaintiff must allege harm to competition in the market and cannot succeed by merely showing harm to itself as a competitor. There are four requirements for antitrust injury: (1) unlawful conduct, (2) causing an injury to the plaintiff, (3) that flows from that which makes the conduct unlawful, and (4) that is of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent.

ORDER GRANTING MOTIONS TO DISMISS WITH LEAVE TO AMEND

[Re: ECF 42, 43, 51]

Plaintiff NSS Labs, Inc. ("NSS Labs") provides cybersecurity testing services for vendors and end users of cybersecurity products. NSS Labs alleges that several vendors, including Defendants Symantec Corporation ("Symantec") and ESET, LLC ("ESET"), conspired with Defendant Anti-Malware Testing Standards Organization ("AMTSO") to exclude NSS Labs from cybersecurity testing markets. NSS Labs sues Symantec, ESET, and AMTSO for violations of federal and state antitrust laws, specifically, Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, and California's Cartwright Act, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16700 et seq.

Each of the Defendants has filed a motion to dismiss the complaint under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6). The Court has considered the briefing of the parties and the oral arguments presented at the hearing on May 30, 2019. For the reasons discussed below, the motions are GRANTED WITH LEAVE TO AMEND.

I. BACKGROUND[1]

The Parties

Plaintiff NSS Labs is the world's leading provider of cybersecurity testing services. Compl. ¶ 15, ECF 1. NSS [*3] Labs tests cybersecurity products known as Endpoint Protection ("EPP") products, which category includes Advanced Endpoint Protection ("AEP") products. Id. ¶¶ 6, 17. EPP products are primarily designed to protect endpoint devices such as personal computers, laptops, and smartphones. Id. ¶ 27. AEP products "attempt to continuously monitor threats to file systems" so as to allow users to act against these threats in real-time. Id. ¶ 28.

NSS Labs began its business by performing "public tests," in which it tested a number of competing cybersecurity products, assessed the products' abilities to protect from cyberattacks, and then distributed a report to paying customers. Compl. ¶ 37. NSS Labs' customers for public reports include users, potential users, and vendors of the tested products. Id. NSS Labs also performs "private tests" for vendors, in which NSS Labs tests a single product under a non-disclosure agreement with the vendor. Id. ¶ 40.

Defendants Symantec and ESET are vendors of EPP and AEP products. Compl. ¶¶ 48, 50. Defendant AMTSO holds itself out as a standards setting organization. Id. ¶ 52. According to AMTSO's website, it "was founded in 2008 to improve the business conditions [*4] related to the development, use, testing and rating of anti-malware products and solutions." Id. Most EPP product vendors are members of AMTSO. Id. ¶ 53. Symantec, ESET and other EPP product vendors have had representatives serve on AMTSO's Board of Directors. Id. ¶¶ 56-59. AMTSO's membership also includes companies that provide EPP testing services, including NSS Labs, but those companies are in the minority and are outvoted by the EPP vendors. Id. ¶¶ 54, 60.

The Alleged Conspiracy

Symantec, ESET, and other EPP vendors (collectively, "Vendor Conspirators") conspired "to license their products under terms of use or end user license restrictions that purport to prevent competitive or comparative testing of their products, and purport to prohibit their customers from allowing their copies or 'instances' of EPP products to be used for competitive or comparative testing." Compl. ¶ 64. In February 2017, the Vendor Conspirators met at a conference held in San Francisco, California. Id. ¶ 65. The Vendor Conspirators agreed that AMTSO would adopt standards for testing and rating anti-malware products, and that the Vendor Conspirators would refuse to deal with any cybersecurity testing service [*5] that did not adhere to those standards. Id. ¶ 66.

In May 2018, AMTSO adopted the AMTSO Testing Standard ("the Standard"), which is attached to the complaint as Exhibit A. Compl. ¶ 75 and Exh. A. The Standard does not mandate any particular testing methodology. Compl. Exh. A. Instead, it requires advance disclosure of a test plan to EPP Vendors. Compl. ¶¶ 77-78 and Exh. A. According to NSS Labs, the purpose of the Standard is to let the Vendor Conspirators know in advance exactly how their products will be tested. Id. ¶ 76. This gives "Vendor Conspirators the ability to tailor their products in advance to the threats against which their products will be tested." Id. ¶ 79. NSS Labs asserts that the Standard is intended to, and does, "defeat the purpose of independent third-party testing by giving the EPP Vendor Conspirators the ability to cheat the tests they will be subject to and to give consumers the false impression that EPP products are free from EPP Security Defects when in fact they are not." Id.

On May 19, 2018, Mark Kennedy of Symantec sent an email to AMTSO membership stating that Symantec is committed to using the AMTSO Standard for all privately commissioned tests, and that [*6] Symantec will not deal with a testing company that does not follow the Standard. Compl. ¶ 73. On May 21, 2018, at an AMTSO meeting in Portland, Oregon, other Vendor Conspirators announced that they too would refuse to deal with cybersecurity testing companies that do not adhere to the AMTSO Standard. Id. ¶ 74. At a June 2018 AMTSO meeting, one of the agenda items was "Driving Adoption: Companies Requiring AMTSO Standards." Id. ¶ 83. In September 2018, the president of AMTSO posted to the AMTSO website a blog "strongly" encouraging all testing organizations and other parties engaged in anti-malware testing to follow the AMTSO Standard. Id. ¶ 84.

NSS Labs refuses to adhere to the AMTSO Standard, and it continues its practice of testing without giving EPP product vendors advance information about how the tests will be performed. Compl. ¶¶ 99-100. NSS Labs claims that as a result, it is the principal target of a group boycott by the Vendor Conspirators. Id. ¶¶ 98-100. The Vendor Conspirators purport to prohibit even private testing of their products unless the testing company adheres to the AMTSO Standard. Id. ¶ 103. The Vendor Conspirators have conspired to license their products under [*7] terms of use that prevent competitive or comparative testing of their products and prohibit customers from allowing their copies of EPP products to be used for competitive or comparative testing. Id. ¶ 64.

Antitrust Claims

NSS Labs filed the complaint in this action on September 18, 2018, alleging federal and state law antitrust claims against Symantec, ESET, and AMTSO. Compl., ECF 1. NSS Labs also named EPP Vendor CrowdStrike, Inc. as a defendant, but NSS Labs has voluntarily dismissed CrowdStrike, Inc. pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 41(a). Notice of Voluntary Dismissal, ECF 75.

NSS Labs asserts claims for: (1) Per Se Violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act (Group Boycott); (2) Violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act under the Rule of Reason (Group Boycott); (3) Per Se Violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act (Being Disadvantaged by a Membership Organization); (4) Violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act under the Rule of Reason (Being Disadvantaged by a Membership Organization); (5) Per Se Violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act (Use of Membership Organization to Commit Antitrust Violations); (6) Violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act under the Rule of Reason (Use of Membership Organization to Commit Antitrust Violations); (7) Per Se Violation of Section 1 [*8] of the Sherman Act (Membership Organization is Inherently Anticompetitive); (8) Violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act under the Rule of Reason (Membership Organization is Inherently Anticompetitive); (9) Per Se Violation of the Cartwright Act; and (10) Violation of the Cartwright Act under the Rule of Reason.

Symantec, ESET, and AMTSO seek dismissal of all claims under Rule 12(b)(6).

II. LEGAL STANDARD

HN1[] "A motion to dismiss under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted tests the legal sufficiency of a claim." Conservation Force v. Salazar, 646 F.3d 1240, 1241-42 (9th Cir. 2011) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). While a complaint need not contain detailed factual allegations, it "must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to 'state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.'" Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (quoting Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007)). A claim is facially plausible when it "allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Id.

III. DISCUSSION

The complaint asserts ten antitrust claims, eight under the Sherman Act § 1 and two under California's Cartwright Act. The claims fall into two categories: per se claims based on the alleged conspiracy and group boycott (Claims 1, 3, 5, 7, and 9), and rule of reason claims based on the same conduct (Claims 2, 4, 6, 8, and 10). Defendants contend that both sets of claims are subject [*9] to dismissal under Rule 12(b)(6), while NSS Labs asserts that its per se and rule of reason claims are pled adequately. When evaluating the adequacy of the pleading, the Court applies federal antitrust law to all claims, including those asserted under the Cartwright Act.HN2[] "The analysis under California's antitrust law mirrors the analysis under federal law because the Cartwright Act, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16700 et seq., was modeled after the Sherman Act." Cty. of Tuolumne v. Sonora Cmty. Hosp., 236 F.3d 1148, 1160 (9th Cir. 2001). The parties agree that, for pleading purposes, the Cartwright Act claims rise and fall with the Sherman Act § 1 claims.

A. Sherman Act § 1

HN3[] Section 1 of the Sherman Act states that "[e]very contract, combination . . . , or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce" is illegal. 15 U.S.C. § 1. Because "every commercial agreement restrains trade," whether particular conduct "violates § 1 of the Sherman Act depends on whether it is adjudged an unreasonable restraint." Nw. Wholesale Stationers, Inc. v. Pac. Stationery & Printing Co., 472 U.S. 284, 289, 105 S. Ct. 2613, 86 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1985). "Restraints can be unreasonable in one of two ways." Ohio v. Am. Express Co., 138 S. Ct. 2274, 2283-84, 201 L. Ed. 2d 678 (2018). "A small group of restraints are unreasonable per se because they always or almost always tend to restrict competition and decrease output." Id. (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). "Restraints that are not unreasonable per se are judged under the rule of reason." Id. (internal [*10] quotation marks and citation omitted). "The rule of reason requires courts to conduct a fact-specific assessment of market power and market structure to assess the restraint's actual effect on competition." Id. (internal quotation marks, citation omitted, and alterations omitted).

Before addressing the pleading requirements particular to each of these theories of antitrust liability, the Court takes up the more basic question of whether NSS Labs has alleged enough facts to suggest the existence of a conspiracy. Defendant ESET contends that NSS Labs has not done so, and that all claims against ESET are subject to dismissal on that basis. While framed slightly differently, AMTSO also argues that the complaint alleges no unlawful conduct on its part, and therefore that it cannot be liable under NSS Labs' conspiracy theory. Defendant Symantec has stated expressly that it does not challenge the conspiracy allegations for purpose of its motion to dismiss. Accordingly, the Court first addresses the challenges to NSS Labs' conspiracy allegations raised by ESET and AMTSO, then it turns to all Defendants' motions to dismiss the per se claims, and finally it addresses all Defendants' motions to [*11] dismiss the rule of reason claims.

B. Conspiracy Allegations Against ESET and AMTSO

HN4[] In order to defeat a Rule 12(b)(6) motion, a plaintiff asserting Sherman Act § 1 claims must allege "enough factual matter (taken as true) to suggest that an agreement was made." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 556, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007). It is insufficient to allege the existence of a conspiracy in conclusory terms, or to allege facts that suggesting the mere possibility of a conspiracy. See id. The plaintiff must plead "facts that are suggestive enough to render a § 1 conspiracy plausible." Id.

1. ESET

ESET argues that the complaint is devoid of allegations that ESET representatives agreed to, or took action in furtherance of, the conspiracy. The Court agrees. NSS Labs alleges that the conspiracy began in February 2017 when CrowdStrike's CTO "organized a meeting of the EPP Vendor Conspirators with the express intent, purpose and effect of obtaining agreement among the competitors to refuse to do business with companies, including specifically NSS Labs, who attempt to perform public tests of their products using testing methodologies other than those agreed to by the EPP Vendor Conspirators and embodied in the AMTSO Testing Standard." Compl. ¶ 65. According to NSS Labs, "[t]he [*12] EPP Vendor Conspirators agreed that defendant AMTSO would adopt 'standards' for 'testing and rating of anti-malware products and solutions,' that adherence to such standards would be mandatory at least among the EPP Vendor Conspirators, and that at least the EPP Vendor Conspirators would refuse to deal with any cybersecurity testing service that did not adhere to the testing 'standards' to be adopted by AMTSO." Id. ¶ 66. However, the complaint does not allege that ESET representatives were at the February 2017 meeting or voted to adopt the proposed testing standards.

ESET points out that it appears from documents attached to the complaint that ESET was not a member of the AMTSO Standards Working Group that developed the Standard. See Compl. Exh. A at 4 (listing of AMTSO Standards Working Group). ESET requests that the Court take judicial notice of information on AMTSO's website showing that, in fact, ESET voted against adoption of the Standard. See ESET's RJN Exh. 1, ECF 44-1. HN5[] The request for judicial notice is granted, as no party disputes ESET's vote and the vote "can be accurately and readily determined from sources whose accuracy cannot reasonably be questioned." Khoja v. Orexigen Therapeutics, Inc., 899 F.3d 988, 999 (9th Cir. 2018).

At the hearing, [*13] NSS Labs' counsel argued that ESET voted against the AMTSO Standard because ESET wanted a more restrictive standard, and therefore that ESET's vote does not undermine the allegation of conspiracy. ESET's desire for a more restrictive standard is not alleged in the complaint. Further, NSS Labs does not explain how ESET's vote against the Standard that was the apparent focus of the conspiracy could give rise to a plausible inference that ESET was part of the conspiracy. HN6[] "For an agreement to constitute a violation of section 1 of the Sherman Act, a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective must be established." Toscano v. Prof'l Golfers Ass'n, 258 F.3d 978, 983 (9th Cir. 2001) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted).

NSS Labs alleges that the Vendor Conspirators have conspired to license their products under terms of use that prevent competitive or comparative testing of their products and prohibit customers from allowing their copies of EPP products to be used for competitive or comparative testing. Id. ¶ 64. ESET points out that the complaint does not allege that ESET's EULAs contain such restrictions.

In summary, the complaint contains no facts plausibly suggesting that ESET agreed to or participated in the alleged [*14] conspiracy to boycott NSS Labs. All of the claims against ESET are subject to dismissal on that basis as well as on the grounds discussed below.

2. AMTSO

AMTSO argues that it is not alleged to have done anything unlawful, as its only relevant conduct was adopting the AMTSO Standard through a vote of its members. The Standard is not mandatory, nor does it address the type of licensing restrictions described by NSS Labs. See Compl. Exh. A, Standard. It is entirely unclear from the complaint how AMTSO joined or participated in the alleged conspiracy. AMTSO is not a vendor and it does not hire companies such as NSS Labs to provide testing services. In short, the complaint contains no facts plausibly suggesting that AMTSO agreed to or participated in the alleged conspiracy to boycott NSS Labs. All of the claims against AMTSO are subject to dismissal on that basis as well as on the grounds discussed below.

C. Per Se Claims

Defendants argue that this case does not present the type of circumstances that traditionally have warranted application of the per se rule, and they request that the Court dismiss the per se claims without leave to amend. AMTSO makes the additional argument that per se claims [*15] cannot be asserted against it in light of the Standards Development Organization Advancement Act of 2004 ("SDOAA"), 15 U.S.C. § 4302. In opposition, NSS Labs claims that it has alleged a "classic group boycott" falling squarely within the scope of the per se rule, and that the SDOAA does not prohibit application of the per se rule with respect to AMTSO.

1. Circumstances Traditionally Warranting Application of Per Se Rule

Exactly what kinds of activity fall within the per se rule is "far from certain." Nw. Wholesale Stationers, 472 U.S. at 293. Defendants argue that cases in which the Supreme Court has applied a per se approach generally have involved joint efforts to disadvantage competitors by denying them suppliers or customers needed to compete. For example, in Fashion Originators' Guild of America, Inc. v. FTC, the Supreme Court applied the per se rule when dress and textile manufacturers who sold original designs agreed to boycott retailers that dealt with manufacturers who sold copies of those original designs. 312 U.S. 457, 61 S. Ct. 703, 85 L. Ed. 949, 32 F.T.C. 1856 (1941). While the manufacturers boycotted retailers, with whom they had a vertical relationship, the purpose of the boycott was to injure competitors — manufacturers who sold copies. Id. at 467. In Klor's, Inc. v. Broadway-Hale Stores, Inc., [*16] the Supreme Court applied the per se rule to a boycott created when a retail store, Broadway-Hale, obtained agreement from manufacturers and distributors of household appliances that they would not sell (or would sell only at discriminatory prices) to Broadway-Hale's competitor, Klor's. 359 U.S. 207, 208-09, 79 S. Ct. 705, 3 L. Ed. 2d 741 (1959). As Defendants point out, NSS Labs is not a competitor of any Defendant.

NSS Labs contends that a per se illegal boycott need not be aimed at a competitor, citing F.T.C. v. Superior Court Trial Lawyers Ass'n. In Trial Lawyers Ass'n, "a group of lawyers agreed not to represent indigent criminal defendants in the District of Columbia Superior Court until the District of Columbia government increased the lawyers' compensation." 493 U.S. 411, 414, 110 S. Ct. 768, 107 L. Ed. 2d 851 (1990). The lawyers, who were in private practice, were appointed and compensated pursuant to the District of Columbia Criminal Justice Act ("CJA"). Id. at 415. The Supreme Court held that the lawyers' "boycott constituted a classic restraint of trade within the meaning of Section 1 of the Sherman Act," observing that "[t]he agreement among the CJA lawyers was designed to obtain higher prices for their services and was implemented by a concerted refusal to serve an important customer in the market for legal services [*17] and, indeed, the only customer in the market for the particular services that CJA regulars offered." Id. at 422-23 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). Characterizing the CJA lawyers' conduct as "the essence of price-fixing," the Supreme Court concluded that "[t]he horizontal arrangement among these competitors was unquestionably a 'naked restraint' on price and output." Id. at 423.

While Trial Lawyers Ass'n demonstrates that the per se rule may be applied where the conspiracy does not target a direct competitor, it involved a price-fixing cartel and thus presented factual circumstances very different from those at issue in this action. NSS Labs has not cited, and the Court has not discovered, any case in which the per se rule has been applied to conduct centered on standard setting activities such as those alleged here. At least one court in this district has held that "SSO's are not illegal per se and often create a net pro-competitive effect. . . . HN7[] Accordingly, any alleged agreement among the members of a SSO is analyzed under a rule of reason." *Analogix Semiconductor, Inc. v. Silicon Image, Inc., No. C 08-2917 JF PVT, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 118508, 2008 WL 8096149, at 4 (N.D. Cal. Oct. 28, 2008).

HN8[] Recognizing that "there [*18] is more confusion about the scope and operation of the per se rule against group boycotts than in reference to any other aspect of the per se doctrine," the Supreme Court in Nw. Wholesale

Stationers offered guidance by identifying three characteristics that are indicative of a per se illegal boycott. Nw. Wholesale Stationers, 472 U.S. at 294 (internal quotation marks, citation, and alterations omitted). The Ninth Circuit has summarized those three characteristics as follows: "(1) the boycott cuts off access to a supply, facility, or market necessary to enable the victim firm to compete; (2) the boycotting firm possesses a dominant market position; and (3) the practices are not justified by plausible arguments that they enhanced overall efficiency or competition." Adaptive Power Sols., LLC v. Hughes Missile Sys. Co., 141 F.3d 947, 950 (9th Cir. 1998) (summarizing Nw. Wholesale Stationers). "[A] concerted refusal to deal need not necessarily possess all of these traits to merit per se treatment." Nw. Wholesale Stationers, 472 U.S. at 295. Defendants argue NSS Labs' per se claims possess none of the three characteristics articulated above. Defendants focus primarily on the third characteristic, arguing that the AMTSO Standard reveals a plausible efficiency justification on its face that makes application of the per [*19] se rule inappropriate. However, Defendants also argue that the complaint lacks facts showing that Defendants cut off NSS Labs' access to a necessary facility or market, or that Defendants have a dominant position in any relevant market.

a. Plausible Efficiency Justification

Defendants argue that a plausible efficiency justification for the AMTSO Standard appears from the document itself. The Forward to the Standard states that "AMTSO is a non-profit organization established to help improve the business conditions related to the development, use, testing, and rating of anti-malware solutions." Standard at 3, Exh. A to Compl., ECF 1-1. The Forward goes on to discuss the critical nature of anti-malware testing, and articulates the view that "the lack of proper testing protocols can create unnecessary expense for vendors, which ultimately can impact the amount of resources devoted to research and development, and shift focus from critical threat detection toward compliance with opaque or unfair testing procedures." Id. The Forward states that it is "based on a premise that although testers and vendors must retain their independence, anti-malware testing is more likely to be transparent and Fair if there [*20] is communication between the parties regarding the solution being tested, and the testing methodology." Id.

HN9[] The justification for adoption offered in the Forward to the Standard is plausible on its face. Under the applicable authorities, that alone appears to doom the per se claims. "When a defendant advances plausible arguments that a practice enhances overall efficiency and makes markets more competitive, per se treatment is inappropriate, and the rule of reason applies." Paladin Assocs., Inc. v. Montana Power Co., 328 F.3d 1145, 1155 (9th Cir. 2003). "This is so because plausible arguments that a practice is procompetitive make [the court] unable to conclude 'the likelihood of anticompetitive effects is clear and the possibility of countervailing procompetitive effects is remote.'" Id. (quoting Nw. Wholesale Stationers, 472 U.S. at 294).

NSS Labs argues that the justification set forth in the Standard's Forward cannot be accepted at face value but must be evaluated on a more developed record. NSS Labs points out that in Paladin the determination whether a per se approach was appropriate was made at summary judgment and not on a first round motion to dismiss. See Paladin, 328 F.3d at 1155. While NSS Labs is correct as to the procedural posture of Paladin, it is not apparent from the decision that the Ninth Circuit's discussion [*21] of the plausible efficiency justification turned on any particular evidence in the record. HN10[] The Ninth Circuit found that a per se approach is inappropriate when a defendant "advances" a plausible efficiency justification. See id. At least one district court in the Northern District of California has applied that reasoning to preclude per se claims at the motion to dismiss stage, finding that a policy enacted by eBay, Inc. regarding the auctioning of coins on its website arguably was pro-competitive and thus that a per se approach was inappropriate. *See Universal Grading Serv. v. eBay, Inc., No. C-09-2755 RMW, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25193, 2011 WL 846060, at 5 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 8, 2011). Other district courts, however, have declined to determine the applicability of the per se rule on a motion to dismiss, finding "that decision is more appropriate on a motion for summary judgment." In re High-Tech Employee Antitrust Litig., 856 F. Supp. 2d 1103, 1122 (N.D. Cal. 2012).

This Court concludes that because the per se claims in this case turn on enactment of a Standard which articulates plausible pro-competitive justifications on its face, dismissal is appropriate at the motion to dismiss stage. NSS Labs argues that its per se claims are not grounded wholly in the enactment of the Standard, but also in the [*22] EPP Vendors' agreement to boycott testing companies that refuse to comply with the Standard. NSS Labs also argues that the proffered pro-competitive justification actually is not plausible because there is no legitimate reason for EPP Vendors to control how their products are tested.

The separation between the enactment of the Standard and the alleged agreement to boycott is not apparent to the Court upon a reading of the complaint. The Court reads the complaint to allege that the Vendor Conspirators conceived of a scheme to enact a standard for the purpose of restricting testing of their products, and thereafter used the resulting AMTSO Standard as a justification to boycott NSS Labs. It may be that NSS Labs can clarify its theory to show anticompetitive conduct not grounded in the Standard, and to allege facts demonstrating that the justification articulated in the Forward to the Standard is not plausible. As presently framed, however, the Court reads the per se claims to be firmly grounded in a non-mandatory standard, which was passed by AMTSO's members in what appears to have been a legitimate vote, and which articulates a plausible efficiency justification on its face.

b. Access [*23] / Market Power

Defendants argue that NSS Labs also has failed to allege facts showing the existence of the first two characteristics listed above, specifically, that NSS Labs was denied access to a supply, facility, or market necessary to enable the victim firm to compete, or that Defendants hold a dominant position in any relevant market. Defendants' argument on these points is well-taken, and is not refuted by NSS Labs. As noted above, it appears from the face of the complaint and attached documents that the Standard is voluntary. NSS Labs is not required to adhere to the Standard, nor are its customers. NSS Labs appears to argue that it needs access to test all anti-malware products on the market in order to provide accurate results to its customers. However, it is unclear from the complaint that Defendants deprived NSS Labs of such access. While NSS Labs suggests that Defendants' EULAs restrict access to their products such that NSS Labs does not have access to Symantec and ESET products even for public testing, NSS Labs does not allege any specific facts to support that suggestion. Moreover, it is entirely unclear whether Symantec and ESET together make up 1% or 100% of NSS Labs' [*24] potential customer base among EPP Vendors. It therefore is unclear what effect, if any, a boycott by Symantec and ESET would have on NSS Labs. AMTSO is not alleged to participate in or hold a dominant position in any market.

c. Conclusion

Because it has failed to allege facts showing the existence of any of the three characteristics that are indicative of a per se illegal boycott, the Court concludes that NSS Labs has failed to allege a per se claim. While Defendants urge the Court to dismiss the per se claims without leave to amend, the Court is reluctant to do so without granting NSS Labs the opportunity to clarify its per se theories and attempt to cure the deficiencies noted herein. Accordingly, Defendants' motions to dismiss the per se claims are GRANTED WITH LEAVE TO AMEND.

2. SDOAA

Defendant AMTSO argues that the per se claims against it are barred by the Standards Development Organization Advancement Act of 2004 ("SDOAA"), 15 U.S.C. § 4302. That statute provides in relevant part that, in any antitrust action under federal or state law, the conduct of "a standards development organization while engaged in a standards development activity, shall not be deemed illegal per se; such conduct shall be [*25] judged on the basis of its reasonableness, taking into account all relevant factors affecting competition, including, but not limited to, effects on competition in properly defined, relevant research, development, product, process, and service markets." 15 U.S.C. § 4302(2). Defendants Symantec and ESET argue that even if the SDOAA does not bar the per se claims against them on its face, the statute should be extended to cover them as AMTSO's members.

In opposition, NSS Labs argues that AMTSO is not a true standards setting organization covered by the SDOAA. After the hearing, the United States filed a Statement of Interest urging the Court not to dismiss NSS Labs' per se claims pursuant to the SDOAA. See Gov't's Statement of Interest, ECF 91. The Government argues that there are factual questions whether AMTSO is a standards development organization falling within the SDOAA. The Court granted Defendants leave to respond to the Government's Statement of Interest. See Order Granting Leave, ECF 94. Symantec and AMTSO filed responses; ESET did not.

After reviewing the Government's Statement of Interest and the responses thereto, the Court concludes that there may be factual issues as to whether the SDOAA applies [*26] in this case. The AMTSO Standard does not proscribe any particular testing methodology but rather focuses on what information must be exchanged between the testing company and the vendor. The Court need not make any determination regarding the application of the SDOAA at this time, however, because NSS Labs' per se claims are subject to dismissal on other grounds, as discussed above.

D. Rule of Reason Claims

HN11[] Under the rule of reason, a plaintiff must plead four separate elements: (1) the existence of a conspiracy, (2) the intention on the part of the co-conspirators to harm or restrain competition, (3) actual injury to competition, and (4) that the plaintiffs suffered "antitrust injury" as a result of the conspiracy. See Brantley v. NBC Universal, Inc., 675 F.3d 1192, 1197 (9th Cir. 2012). Defendants attack NSS Labs' pleading with respect to the first, third, and fourth elements.

1. Existence of Conspiracy

As discussed above, both ESET and AMTSO successfully challenge the sufficiency of NSS Labs' conspiracy allegations. The complaint does not allege facts showing that ESET's representatives were at the February 2017 where the conspiracy allegedly began, were involved in creating the AMTSO Standard, or even voted for the Standard. The complaint likewise [*27] contains no facts plausibly suggesting that AMTSO agreed to or participated in the alleged conspiracy to boycott NSS Labs.

2. Injury to Competition

HN12[] "Proving injury to competition in a rule of reason case almost uniformly requires a claimant to prove the relevant market and to show the effects upon competition within that market." Oltz v. St. Peter's Cmty. Hosp., 861 F.2d 1440, 1446 (9th Cir. 1988). "That is, the plaintiff must allege both that a 'relevant market' exists and that the defendant has power within that market." Newcal Indus., Inc. v. IKON Office Sol., 513 F.3d 1038, 1044 (9th Cir. 2008). "The term 'relevant market' encompasses notions of geography as well as product use, quality, and description." Oltz, 861 F.2d at 1446. "The product market includes the pool of goods or services that enjoy reasonable interchangeability of use and cross-elasticity of demand." Id.

Symantec and ESET argue that NSS Labs has not stated enough facts to plausibly establish a relevant product market or power within the market. AMTSO does not focus on the relevant product market in its motion.

Relevant Market

HN13[] In Newcal, the Ninth Circuit discussed three factors, drawn from Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962), that must be considered in assessing a plaintiff's definition of the relevant market. See Newcal Indus., Inc. v. IKON Office Sol., 513 F.3d 1038, 1044 (9th Cir. 2008). First, "the relevant market must be a product market." Id. at 1045. Second, "the market must encompass the product [*28] at issue as well as all economic substitutes for the product." Id. As noted by the Supreme Court in Brown Shoe, "[t]he outer boundaries of a product market are determined by the reasonable interchangeability of use or the cross-elasticity of demand between the product itself and substitutes for it." Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. at 325. Third, "although the general market must include all economic substitutes, it is legally permissible to premise antitrust allegations on a submarket." Newcal, 513 F.3d at 1045. "Failure to identify a relevant market is a proper ground for dismissing a Sherman Act claim." Tanaka, 252 F.3d at 1063; see also Newcal, 513 F.3d at 1045 ("[A] complaint may be dismissed under Rule 12(b)(6) if the complaint's 'relevant market' definition is facially unsustainable.").

The complaint alleges four product markets in the United States, referred to collectively herein as the "Relevant Product Markets": (1) national market for EPP products, (2) national market for AEP products, (3) national market for EPP product testing, and (4) national market for AEP product testing. Compl. ¶¶ 90-95. Thus, the first of the Brown Shoe factors is satisfied. However, the second factor is not satisfied, because NSS Labs fails to identify the economic substitutes for the product markets. Nor does NSS Labs [*29] plead any facts regarding the cross-elasticity of demand between the Relevant Product Markets and their substitutes. NSS Labs also does not distinguish between any general or submarkets in its complaint. Accordingly, even applying a liberal pleading standard, NSS Labs has failed to allege the relevant markets.

Market Power

HN14[] To establish the effects on competition within a relevant product market, the moving party must allege market power. Newcal, 513 F.3d at 1044. NSS Labs has not alleged any facts with respect to Defendants' market power in the Relevant Product Markets.

3. Antitrust Injury

HN15[] Only those who possess antitrust standing by virtue of having suffered antitrust injury may bring a private action for damages for violation of the antitrust laws. See Glen Holly Entm't, Inc. v. Tektronix, Inc., 352 F.3d 367, 371 (9th Cir. 2003). Plaintiff must allege harm to competition in the market and cannot succeed by merely showing harm to itself as a competitor. See Brantley v. NBC Universal, Inc., 675 F.3d 1192, 1200 (9th Cir. 2012). There are "four requirements for antitrust injury: (1) unlawful conduct, (2) causing an injury to the plaintiff, (3) that flows from that which makes the conduct unlawful, and (4) that is of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent." Am. Ad Mgmt., Inc. v. Gen. Tel. Co. of California, 190 F.3d 1051, 1055 (9th Cir. 1999).

Symantec and AMTSO argue that NSS Labs has not alleged facts showing antitrust injury. [*30] They argue that even if NSS Labs has suffered an injury, there has been no harm to competition. AMTSO also asserts that any injury suffered by NSS Labs does not flow from unlawful conduct on the part of AMTSO.

NSS Labs alleges that it has suffered an antitrust injury due to Defendants' actions because it has suffered a group boycott and lost revenue based on its refusal to adhere to the AMTSO Standard. Compl. ¶¶ 98-103. NSS Labs does not link its alleged loss of revenue to conduct that also harms competition. NSS Labs argues that competition is harmed by EPP Vendors' EULAs restricting access to their products for testing, suggesting that NSS Labs does not have access to Symantec and ESET products even for public testing. Those facts are not alleged in the complaint.

With respect to AMTSO, standards setting organizations can run afoul of antitrust laws under certain circumstances, for example, where the standard is a result of coercion. See Coalition for ICANN Transparency, Inc. v. VeriSign, Inc., 611 F.3d 495, 505-07 (9th Cir. 2010) (finding that allegations of financial pressure and litigation threats demonstrated improper coercion of a standard-setting body at the motion to dismiss stage); see also Allied Tube & Conduit Corp. v. Indian Head, Inc., 486 U.S. 492, 496, 108 S. Ct. 1931, 100 L. Ed. 2d 497 (1988) (stating that packing a standard-setting organization with paid support to [*31] ban a competing product violated antitrust laws). Here, no coercion or similar activity is alleged in the complaint. It appears that the only relevant action AMTSO took was to adopt the Standard at issue pursuant to a vote of its membership. NSS Labs asserts that the Standard is anti-competitive, and causes harm to competition, because under the Standard companies such as NSS Labs are to give EPP Vendors advance notice of the test plan. However, the Standard is voluntary, not mandatory. NSS Labs has made clear on the face of the complaint that it does not adhere to the Standard, that is, that it continues to provide testing without giving EPP Vendors advance notice. NSS Labs therefore has failed to allege how AMTSO's adoption of the Standard itself, as opposed to the EPP Vendors' alleged boycott, has caused it to suffer antitrust injury.

4. Conclusion

NSS Labs has failed to state a claim under the rule of reason, because it has failed to allege facts showing: the existence of a conspiracy and participation in such conspiracy by ESET and AMTSO; the relevant markets and Defendants' power within those markets; or antitrust injury. NSS Labs' opposition briefs suggest that NSS Labs can allege [*32] additional facts addressing all of these elements. Accordingly, the motions to dismiss are GRANTED WITH LEAVE TO AMEND as to NSS Labs' rule of reason claims.

IV. ORDER

(1) The motions to dismiss are GRANTED WITH LEAVE TO AMEND.

(2) Any amended complaint shall be filed on or before September 12, 2019.

(3) Leave to amend is limited to the deficiencies addressed in this order. NSS Labs may not add new parties or claims without first obtaining leave of the Court.

(4) With respect to any future motions to dismiss, the Court sets the following page limits:

- (a) Defendants collectively are limited to a single main brief of no more than 20 pages. Defendants ESET and AMTSO may, but are not required to, file supplemental briefs of no more than 5 pages each. In no event may the total pages of the moving briefs exceed 30 pages.
- (b) The opposition brief is limited to single brief that shall not exceed the total pages of the moving briefs.
- (c) Defendants collectively are limited to a single reply brief of no more than 15 pages.

CIVIL MINUTES - GENERAL

Proceedings: (IN CHAMBERS) ORDER RE: PLAINTIFF DISH NETWORK, LLC'S MOTION TO COMPEL SAJID SOHAIL'S PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS [DKT. NO. 75]

INTRODUCTION

Before the Court is Plaintiff Dish Network, LLC's ("Plaintiff's") Motion to Compel Defendants Jadoo TV, Inc. and Sajid Sohail's Production of Documents filed on May 24, 2019 in the joint stipulation format pursuant to Local Rule 37-2 (the "Motion"). (Dkt. No. 75.) The caption page of the Notice of Motion refers to "Defendants Jadoo TV, Inc.

and Sajid Sohail's Production of Documents." (Dkt. No. 75.) In the body of the Motion, Plaintiff [*2] identifies Jadoo TV, Inc. and Sohail collectively as "JadooTV." (Joint Stip. at 1.) Here, for clarity and ease of reference, the Court refers to the defendants separately as "JadooTV" and "Sohail."

On May 31, 2019, a week after Defendants filed the Motion, Jadoo filed a Suggestion of Bankruptcy indicating that it had filed a voluntary petition for relief in the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Northern District of California. (Dkt. No. 78.) On June 12, 2019, Defendant Sohail filed a Supplemental Memorandum regarding the Motion ("Dft's Supp. Memo."). (Dkt. No. 80.)

On June 26, 2019, the Court heard oral argument on the Motion. (Dkt. No. 85.) At the hearing, Plaintiff's counsel confirmed that, due to JadooTV's bankruptcy filing, this action is stayed as to JadooTV and the motion to compel is now only directed at Sohail in his individual capacity. (Id.) Accordingly, the Court determined that "in light of [JadooTV's] bankruptcy filing, it would be helpful to have supplemental briefing from the parties on whether Sohail may be compelled to produce emails and other documents that he created in his capacity as a corporate officer of [JadooTV]." (Id.) On July 3, 2019, Plaintiff submitted [*3] a supplemental brief citing authority that addresses whether a corporate officer of a company that is subject to a bankruptcy stay can be compelled to produce corporate documents related to the individual's work activities for the bankrupt debtor and whether any such documents are considered to be in the possession, custody, or control of the individual officer for the purposes of discovery as to that person in his individual capacity. (Dkt No 87.) On July 9, 2019, Defendant Sohail filed a Supplemental Opposition regarding the Motion along with a Declaration of Sajid Sohail in Support of Supplemental Opposition to the Motion ("Dft's Supp. Opp'n"). (Dkt. Nos. 90, 91.) Upon receipt of Defendant Sohail's Supplemental Opposition, the Court took the matter under submission for decision.

RELEVANT BACKGROUND

Plaintiff's Complaint in this copyright infringement action, alleges that defendant JadooTV's engaged in "a wide-ranging, deliberate, multi-year effort . . . to transmit television channels it failed to license in blatant disregard of DISH's exclusive rights." (Complaint ¶ 1.) Specifically, Plaintiff alleges that JadooTV initially "designed its service to directly stream unlicensed television [*4] channels through the Jadoo branded set-top box," but later "changed the way it offered unlicensed channels by requiring users to download extra software files to their Jadoo set-top boxes to integrate those channels." (Id. at ¶ 2.) Plaintiff alleges that "[t]oday, the latest model Jadoo set-top boxes are sold to users preconfigured to locate and install software files needed to integrate the unlicensed television channels and seamlessly incorporate those channels into the Jadoo on-screen electronic program guide." (Id. at ¶ 3.) Plaintiff further alleges that JadooTV and defendant Haseeb Shah "provide unlicensed video on demand content to Jadoo users, including infringing versions of the programs that air on the unlicensed television channels." (Id. at ¶ 4.) On that basis, Plaintiff alleges that "JadooTV and its co-defendants are liable for copyright infringement." (Id. at ¶ 5.)

Plaintiff identifies Sohail as "the founder, chief executive officer, president, and an owner of Jadoo TV, Inc." and alleges that "Sohail authorized, controlled, participated in, and received direct financial benefits from the infringing activities of Jadoo TV, Inc.[.]" (Id. at ¶ 8.) The Complaint asserts claims [*5] against JadooTV and Sohail for direct copyright infringement under 17 U.S.C. § 501 (Count I); inducing and materially contributing to copyright infringement under 17 U.S.C. § 501 (Count II); and vicarious copyright infringement under 17 U.S.C. § 501 (Count III, (alternative to Count I)). (Id. at ¶¶ 63-93.) Plaintiff seeks permanent injunctive relief under 17 U.S.C. § 502, statutory damages or profits attributable to the infringement of registered and unregistered works under 17 U.S.C. § 504(b); attorneys' fees and costs under 17 U.S.C. § 505; and impoundment and disposition of all infringing articles under 17 U.S.C. § 503. (Id. at pp. 26-27.)

THE MOTION

I. The Disputed Discovery Requests and Jadoo TV, Inc.'s Opposition

The Motion as initially filed sought an order compelling "JadooTV"—meaning both JadooTV and Sohail, individually—to produce documents in response to Plaintiff's Request for Production of Documents ("RFPs") served on February 7, 2019. (Id. at 2.) In RFP Nos. 71 and 73, Plaintiff seeks documents relating to JadooTV's eMedia technology:

(1) "the use, design, structure, and operation of eMedia from January 2014 to present"; and
(2) "the design, structure, or operation of eMedia from January 2014 to present."

(Id.) Plaintiff also seeks an order compelling defendants to "produce all non-privileged documents [*6] that it agreed to produce as a result of the parties' meet and confer discussions. (Id.) Specifically, the Motion seeks an order compelling defendants to respond to Plaintiff's RFP Nos. 1-3, 6-7, 14-21, 23-28, 32, 34-41, 44-46, 48, 50-53, 55, 57-65, 68-70. 72 74-81, 83, 85-86, 89-103, 105, and 111-112.)[1] Plaintiff contends the information sought is highly relevant to the claims and defense at issue in the lawsuit and "JadooTV has not produced a single document in this case . . . has not gathered, and does not intend to gather, documents from Defendant Sohail or any other custodians[.]" (Id. at 2.) Plaintiff seeks an award of attorneys' fees costs related to the Motion. (Id.)

JadooTV's primary argument in opposition was that Motion was "pointless" because JadooTV expected to file for bankruptcy protection that "will automatically stay DISH's case against Jadoo TV, Inc., "well before June 26 when this motion is noticed to be heard." (Joint Stip. at 4.) Therefore, Jadoo TV urged that the Motion be denied without prejudice and Plaintiff's request for attorneys' fee should be denied. (Id. at 5.)

II. Jadoo TV's Bankruptcy Filing and Automatic Stay of this Lawsuit

True to its promise, JadooTV filed a Suggestion [*7] of Bankruptcy on May 31, 2019, which automatically stayed this litigation as to debtor JadooTV, pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 362(a). (See Dkt. No. 78.) On June 12, 2019, Defendant Sohail filed a Supplemental. Memorandum regarding the Motion ("Supp. Opp'n") in which he acknowledged that JadooTV's petition for bankruptcy "operated to stay this case against JadooTV" and suggested that "[t]he case against Sohail is also very likely to be stayed." (Supp. Opp'n at 2.) Sohail further argued that "[e]ven if the case against Mr. Sohail is not stayed, the Court should refrain from compelling Mr. Sohail to produce any documents in this case because most, if not all, of the documents DISH seeks in its motion are in JadooTV's possession, custody, or control — not Mr. Sohail's." (Id.)

III. The Parties' Supplemental Briefing After Oral Argument

As noted above, after hearing oral argument on the Motion, the Court requested supplemental briefing from the parties on the impact, if any, of JadooTV's bankruptcy petition and stay on Sohail's individual obligation to respond to Plaintiff's RFPs. (Dkt. No. 85.) Plaintiff's Supplemental Brief in Support of the Motion to Compel Sajid Sohail's Production of Documents ("Plt's Supp. [*8] Br." [Dkt. No. 87]) argues that the bankruptcy stay against debtor JadooTV does not apply to non-debtor Sohail in his individual capacity. (Plt's Supp. Br. at 2-3.) Therefore, Plaintiff argues, Sohail can be compelled to "respond to discovery requests aimed at establishing his individual liability." (Id.)

Plaintiff acknowledges that "some courts have extended the automatic stay to non-bankrupt co-defendants when 'unusual circumstances' warranted," but emphasizes that the Ninth Circuit has not adopted the "unusual circumstances exception." (Id. at 4.) Plaintiff further argues that even if he Ninth Circuit had adopted the "unusual circumstances" exception, "to apply the exception, Sohail and JadooTV would need to request the bankruptcy court to 'extend the automatic stay under its equity jurisdiction.'" (Id. (citing In re Chugach Forest Prods., Inc., 23 F.3d 241, 247 n.6 (9th Cir. 1994)).) Finally, Plaintiff contends that as the founder, CEO and owner of JadooTV, "Sohail is

[1] Because of the voluminous nature of the disputed RFPs and responses, the Court will not recite each of the requests and objections in this Order, but has attached the relevant requests, along with Sohail's responses and objections as Appendix A.

in control of the relevant JadooTV documents for purposes of discovery relating to Sohail" in his individual capacity and he should be compelled to produce these documents. (Plt's Supp. Br. at 6.)

In his Supplemental Brief ("Deft's Supp. Br." [Dkt. No. 90]), Sohail contends that Plaintiff's effort [*9] to obtain discovery from Sohail "subverts the automatic stay" resulting from JadooTV's chapter 11 case. (Deft's. Supp. Br. at 1.) Sohail urges that he should not be compelled to respond to Plaintiff's discovery requests because of an indemnity agreement between Sohail and JadooTV. (Id.) Sohail also maintains that the allegations against Sohail in his official capacity as CEO and president of JadooTV are indistinguishable from Plaintiff's claims against debtor JadooTV and render Sohail "indispensable to JadooTV's successful reorganization efforts in the chapter 11 case." (Id.) Sohail contends, therefore, that the Court should find that discovery and other litigation against Sohail should be stayed "as an extension of the automatic stay in favor of JadooTV" and the Motion should be denied. (Id.)

LEGAL STANDARD

Under Rule 26 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, a party may obtain discovery concerning any nonprivileged matter that is relevant to any party's claim or defense and proportional to the needs of the case. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(1). As amended in December 2015, Rule 26(b)(1) identifies six factors to be considered when determining if the proportionality requirement has been met, namely, the importance of the issues at stake in the action, the amount in controversy, [*10] the parties' relative access to the relevant information, the parties' resources, the importance of the discovery in resolving the issues and whether the burden or expense of the proposed discovery outweighs its likely benefit. Id. Relevant information need not be admissible to be discoverable. Id.

Rule 37 provides that "[a] party seeking discovery may move for an order compelling an answer, designation, production, or inspection." Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(3). The party seeking to compel production of documents under Rule 34 has the "burden of informing the court why the opposing party's objections are not justified or why the opposing party's responses are deficient." *Best Lockers, LLC v. American Locker Group, Inc., Case. No. SACV 12-00403 CJC (ANx), 2013 WL 12131586, at 4 (C.D. Cal. Mar. 27, 2013).

District courts have broad discretion in controlling discovery. See Hallett v. Morgan, 296 F.3d 732, 751 (9th Cir. 2002). When considering a motion to compel, the Court has similarly broad discretion in determining relevancy for discovery purposes. Surfvivor Media, Inc. v. Survivor Productions, 406 F.3d 625, 635 (9th Cir. 2005) (citing Hallet, 296 F.3d at 751).

DISCUSSION

I. The Discovery Sought is Relevant and Proportional to the Needs of the Case Against Sohail Individually

Notably, Sohail does not argue that the discovery sought with respect to his potential individual liability is not relevant to the claims or defenses in the action or that [*11] the requests are not proportional to the needs of the case within the meaning of Rule 26. Indeed, Plaintiff argues that in meet and confer discussions held prior to JadooTV's bankruptcy filing, the parties reached agreements regarding a majority of the RFPs that are the subject of the Motion including RFP Nos. 1-3, 6-7, 14-21, 23-28, 32, 34-41, 44-46, 48, 50-53, 55, 57-65, 68-70. 72 74-81, 83, 85-86, 89-103, 105, and 111-112. (See Joint Stip. at 10-65.) Plaintiff now asks that Sohail be compelled to produce what "JadooTV" already agreed to produce. (Id. at 2.)

It is undisputed that JadooTV's bankruptcy petition automatically stayed this litigation and all discovery as to JadooTV. See *11 U.S.C. § 362(a)*1). The Ninth Circuit has emphasized that "[t]he sweep of the automatic stay is broad and 'serves as one of the most important protections in bankruptcy law.'" Porter v. Nabors Drilling USA L.P., 854 F.3d 1057, 1061 (9th Cir. 2017). But the Motion is no longer directed at the debtor, JadooTV. Rather, the Motion seeks to compel co-defendant Sohail respond to the RFPs in his individual capacity.[2] Further, the Complaint clearly asserts individual claims against Sohail. (See Complaint, Counts I, II, III.) That said, the Complaint expressly alleges that Plaintiff's copyright infringement allegations [*12] against Sohail, arise directly out of Sohail's role as founder, CEO, president, and owner of JadooTV. (Complaint at ¶ 8.) Further, Plaintiff alleges that "[t]he acts Sohail engaged in as an agent of JadooTV, Inc. are believed to have been within the scope of such agency." (Id.)

Thus, the resolution of the Motion turns on whether the scope of the automatic stay of litigation as to JadooTV also precludes Plaintiff's ability to seek discovery against Sohail individually. For the reasons discussed below, the Court concludes it does not.

II. Automatic Bankruptcy Stay Does Not Extend to Non-Debtor Sohail

It is well established that an automatic bankruptcy stay does not extend to non-debtors. In re Chugach Forest Prods., Inc., 23 F.3d 241, 246 (9th Cir. 1994) ("as a general rule, the automatic state of section 362(a) protects only the debtor, property of the debtor or property of the estate. It does not protect non-debtor parties or their property.") (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). This principle applies even when the individual co-defendant is closely associated with the bankrupt debtor or even a senior executive of the debtor. See, e.g., In re Related Asbestos Cases, 23 B.R. 523, 529 (N.D. Cal. 1982) (collecting cases and noting that stay under section 362 does "not encompass actions against related but independent codefendants"); [*13] Seiko Epson Corp. v. Nu-Kote Int'l, Inc., 190 F.3d 1360, 1364 (Fed. Cir. 1999) ("It is clearly established that the automatic stay does not apply to non-bankrupt co-defendants of a debtor even if they are in a similar legal or factual nexus with the debtor.") (internal quotations and citations omitted).

Sohail, an officer and owner of JadooTV, insists that his individual interests are so intertwined with the debtor corporation's property that the "exceptional circumstances" doctrine should be applied to extend the bankruptcy stay to preclude discovery as to him. (Deft's Supp. Br. at 2.) In particular, Sohail argues that an indemnity agreement between himself and JadooTV, among other things, "warrants the finding that discovery and other litigation against Sohail should be stayed[.]" (Deft's Supp. Opp'n at 1.) But mere fact of the indemnity agreement does not preclude Plaintiff from seeking discovery from Sohail.

Indeed, should any judgement of liability be ultimately found against Sohail individually, the indemnity agreement may provide the basis for Sohail to file his own proof of claim in the JadooTV bankruptcy proceeding. *See, e.g., In Re Meruelo Madduz Properties, Inc. Nos. CC-12-1479-TaPaKi, 09-13356-VK, 2013 Bankr. LEXIS 4672, 2013 WL 1615784 at 8 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. Apr. 15, 2013) (discussing advancement claims included in "timely filed [*14] Proofs of Claim which were based, in part on the Indemnity Agreement.")

III. The Ninth Circuit Has Not Adopted the "Unusual Circumstances" Exception

Some courts have recognized an "unusual circumstances" exception to the general rule that a bankruptcy stay does not extend to non-debtor defendants. The Fourth Circuit has held that "unusual circumstances" may justify an extension of the stay to nonbankrupt codefendants when

> There is such identity between the debtor and the third-party defendant that the debtor may be said to be the real party defendant and that a judgment against the third-party defendant will in effect be a judgement or finding against the debtor.

A.H. Robins Co. v. Piccinin (In re A.H. Robins Co.), 788 F.2d 994, 999 (4th Cir.), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 876, 107 S. Ct. 251, 93 L. Ed. 2d 177 (1986); and see Matter of S.I. Acquisition, Inc., 817 F.2d 1142, 1148 (5th Cir. 1987)

[2] Based on the Court's review of the RFPs at issue, it appears that neither the Motion nor Plaintiff's Supplemental Brief makes any distinction between RFPs that are directed at JadooTV and those that may be more specifically targeted to obtain information regarding Sohail's potential liability in an individual capacity.

(noting Fourth Circuit's recognition of "very limited situations" where a section 362(a) stay may apply to actions against nonbankrupt defendants). At least one court in this circuit has noted that "unusual circumstances" may be found "when proceeding against non-debtor defendants would impose a substantial discovery burden on the debtor defendant." Bradford Technologies, Inc. v. Biggers, No. C 11-4621 EDL, 2014 WL 12641953, at *6 (N.D. Cal. May 27, 2014) (internal citations omitted). That said, even in Bradford, [*15] the court ultimately concluded that there was "no evidence of unusual circumstances here sufficient to overcome the general rule" that the stay only applies to the debtor. (Id.) This Court reaches the same conclusion here.

As Plaintiff points out, the Ninth Circuit has not adopted the "unusual circumstances" exception. See Chugach Forest Prods. Inc., 23 F.3d at 247 (stating "[i]n the Ninth Circuit, the vitality of the 'unusual circumstances' exception is not clear," citing decisions that have not recognized the exception, and declining to resolve the issue); see also Klinkenborg Aerial Spraying and Seeding, Inc. v. Rotorcraft Dev. Corp. 690 Fed Appx. 540, 541 (9th Cir. 2017) ("We have never adopted the 'unusual circumstances' exception in the Ninth Circuit and we decline to do so here."). Sohail argues that although the Ninth Circuit has not adopted the "unusual circumstances" exception, it has also not explicitly rejected it either. (Deft's Suppl. Opp'n at 1-2.) This argument is unpersuasive. Sohail cites *In re O'Reilly, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13264, 2014 WL 460767, at 10 (N.D. Cal. Feb. 3, 2014) noting that the District Court in that unpublished case "affirmed the bankruptcy court's ruling that the 'unusal circumstances') exception applied to say the case against a law firm shareholder[.]" (Deft's Suppl. Opp'n at 2.) O'Reilly, however, affirmed a decision of the bankruptcy court, in a case involving allegations of fraudulent [*16] transfer and alter ego claims. *O'Reilly, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13264, 2017 WL 460767, at * 4*. Further, and more importantly, O'Reilly was not a case where the district court itself applied the "unusual circumstances" doctrine, but instead specifically noted that "section 362(d) gives the bankruptcy court wide latitude in crafting relief from the automatic stay[.]" *2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13264, [WL] at 3 (internal citation and quotation marks omitted (emphasis added).) The other cases on which Sohail relies are equally distinguishable because they are not binding on this Court, pre-date Chugach, and were based on findings by the bankruptcy courts exercising their unique jurisdiction with respect with respect to the automatic stay. See, e.g., In re Family Health Servs., Inc. 105 B.R. 937, 942 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 1989); In re Circle K Corp., 121 B.R. 257, 261 (Bankr. D. Ariz 1990). Accordingly, the Court here declines to step into a breach where the Ninth Circuit has, thus far, expressly declined to do so.

Finally, as emphasized in Klinkenborg, "even if we were to adopt 'unusual circumstances' exception, the exception requires the bankruptcy court to extend the automatic stay using its equity jurisdiction." (Id. at 540-41.) The bankruptcy court has not done so here.

IV. Plaintiff's Request for Attorneys' Fees

Rule 37 requires that when a motion to compel is denied, the court "must, after giving an opportunity to be heard, require the movant, the attorney [*17] filing the motion, or both to pay the party or deponent who opposed the motion, its reasonable expenses incurred in opposing the motion, including attorney's fees. But the court must not order this payment if the motion was substantially justified or other circumstances make an award of expenses unjust." Fed. R. Civ. P. 37(a)(5)(B). Discovery conduct is "substantially justified if it is a response to a genuine dispute or it reasonable people could differ as to the appropriateness of the contested action." Pierce v. Underwood, 487 U.S. 552, 563, 108 S. Ct. 2541, 101 L. Ed. 2d 490 (1988).

Here, Plaintiff seeks an award of costs and attorney's fees incurred in bringing the motion. (Joint Stip. at 2.) The Court finds that Sohail's wholesale refusal to produce documents in response to Plaintiff's properly served discovery requests is unjustified. First, in the months prior to JadooTV's bankruptcy, Sohail had no principled basis to refuse to comply with Plaintiff's discovery requests seeking information relevant and proportionate to Plaintiff's claims against Sohail in his individual capacity. Further, in light of well-settled authority confirming that an automatic bankruptcy stay does not extend to a non-debtor co-defendant, even one who may be closely affiliated with the debtor, Sohail's opposition [*18] to the Motion based on the assertion that "the case against Sohail is also very likely to be stayed" was tenuous at best. (Deft's Supp. Br. at 2 [Dkt No. 80].) Consequently, an award of reasonable expenses, including attorneys' fees, that Plaintiff incurred in bringing the Motion is warranted.

CONCLUSION

Accordingly, in the absence of an order of the bankruptcy court expressly extending the automatic stay to Sohail, the Motion is GRANTED as to Defendant Sohail in his individual capacity. No later than ten (10) days from the date of this Order, Sohail shall produce any non-privileged responsive documents in his personal possession, custody, and control in response to Plaintiff's RFP Nos. 1-3, 6-7, 14-21, 23-28, 32, 34-41, 44-46, 48, 50-53, 55, 57-65, 68-70, 72 74-81, 83, 85-86, 89-103, 105, and 111-112. This Order specifically requires Sohail to search any personal email accounts or other electronically stored databases, home offices or other locations and/or repositories that are separate from facilities owned and/or controlled by JadooTV. To the extent that Sohail, after a reasonable and diligent search, asserts that he has no responsive documents in his possession, custody or control, [*19] Sohail must provide supplemental written responses so indicating within ten (10) days of the date of this Order. Any documents for which Sohail asserts a privilege must be listed on a Privilege Log.

Further, pursuant to Rule 37(a)(5)(A), Plaintiff's request for its expenses, including attorney's fees, incurred in bringing the Motion is GRANTED. Therefore, the following briefing schedule governs a motion for an award of expenses incurred in bringing the Motion to Compel: (1) Plaintiff shall file and serve his opening brief on or before August 21, 2019; (2) Defendant Sohail shall file an Opposition no later than 21 days after service of the motion; and (3) Plaintiff shall file an optional Reply (of no more than 5 pages) to the Opposition no later than 14 days after service of the Opposition. A hearing is scheduled on the motion for expenses for October 2, 2019 at 11:00 a.m. in Courtroom 580 of the Roybal Federal Building, 255 E. Temple Street, Los Angeles, California 90012.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

JADOO DEFENDANTS' RESPONSES AND OBJECTIONS TO PLAINTIFF DISH NETWORK L.L.C.'S FIRST SET OF REQUESTS FOR PRODUCTION TO DEFENDANTS JADOOTV, INC. AND SAJID SOHAIL (NOS. 1-103)

PROPOUNDING PARTY: PLAINTIFF DISH NETWORK L.L.C.

RESPONDING PARTY: DEFENDANTS JADOOTV, INC. AND SAJID SOHAIL

SET NUMBER: ONE (NOS. 1-103)

Pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 34, Defendants JadooTV, Inc. ("JadooTV") and Sajid Sohail ("Sohail") (collectively. "Jadoo Defendants"), hereby submit the following Responses and Objections to Plaintiff DISH Network, L.L.C.'s ("DISH") First Set of Requests for Production to Defendants JadooTV. Inc. and Sajid Sohail (the "Requests") as follows:

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

This case is still in the early stages of discovery. Despite diligent efforts to respond to these Requests, Jadoo Defendants reserve the right to amend or supplement their objections and responses herein if necessary at [*21] a later date, and to use subsequently discovered documents and documents now known but whose relevance, significance, or applicability has not yet been ascertained. Furthermore, Jadoo Defendants' responses are made without in any way intending to waive, but, on the contrary, intending to preserve:

1. The right to raise all questions of authenticity, foundation, relevancy, materiality, privilege and admissibility as evidence for any purpose of the documents produced in response to DISH's Requests that may arise in any subsequent proceeding in, or the trial of, this or any other action;

2. The right to object to the use of the documents produced in response to DISH's Requests in any subsequent proceeding in, or the trial date of. this or any other action on any grounds;

3. The right to object to introduction into evidence of these responses; and

4. The right to object on any ground at any time to other discovery involving the subject matter thereof.

GENERAL OBJECTIONS

Jadoo Defendants incorporate the following General Objections into each and every objection and/or individualized response contained herein, and into each and every amendment, supplement or modification to these responses:

1. [*22] Jadoo Defendants object to the Requests to the extent that they purport to impose obligations beyond those set forth in the Local Rules of the United States District Court for the Central District of California and the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

2. Jadoo Defendants object to each Request and the Definitions and Instructions to the extent they purport to require the production of documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery because they are neither relevant to a claim or defense of a party nor proportional to the needs of the case, considering the importance of the issues at stake in the action, the amount in controversy, the parties' relative access to relevant information, the parties' resources, the importance of the discovery in resolving the issues, and whether the burden or expense of the proposed discovery outweighs its likely benefit.

3. Jadoo Defendants object to each Request and the Definitions and Instructions to the extent they purport to require the production of documents that are not in Jadoo Defendants' possession, custody, or control, and thereby seeks to expand obligations of Jadoo Defendants beyond those imposed by law.

4. Jadoo Defendants object to each [*23] Request and the Definitions and Instructions to the extent they seek unreasonably cumulative and duplicative documents for which the burden, expense, and intrusiveness of production outweighs the likelihood of further discovery of admissible evidence.

5. Jadoo Defendants object to each Request and the Definitions and Instructions to the extent they are vague and ambiguous and fail to describe the documents requested with reasonable particularity.

6. Jadoo Defendants object to each Request and the Definitions and Instructions as unduly burdensome, expensive, and oppressive to the extent they seek documents that are currently in DISH's possession, custody or control, including but not limited to documents that are publicly available or can be obtained from some other source that is more convenient, less burdensome or less expensive than Jadoo Defendants.

7. Jadoo Defendants object to each Request and the Definitions and Instructions to the extent they seek information protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, or similar privileges or protections. Jadoo Defendants hereby assert all such applicable privileges [*24] and protections. In the event that any privileged or protected document is inadvertently produced, such production shall not be deemed or construed to constitute a waiver of any privilege or right of Jadoo Defendants, who reserve their rights to demand that DISH return any such document and copies thereof and to prevent the use of such documents. Jadoo Defendants also object to each and every individual request for production to the extent that it seeks proprietary or confidential business or personal information or other sensitive information protected from disclosure by applicable authorities. Jadoo Defendants further object to each and every individual request for production to the extent that it seeks information or the production of documents that are within the scope of a confidentiality agreement, employment agreement, protective order or settlement agreement. Any production of information or documents subject to one or more of the aforementioned privileges or rights belonging to Jadoo Defendants should not be considered a waiver of such privileges or rights, which Jadoo Defendants reserve the right to exercise. And Jadoo Defendants will produce such information or document, [*25] if at all, only after entry of a suitable protective order.

8. Jadoo Defendants object to each Request and the Definitions and Instructions to the extent they seek information protected by rights of privacy under federal law.

9. Jadoo Defendants object to each Request and the Definitions and Instructions to the extent they seek trade secrets, confidential and/or proprietary information of Jadoo Defendants or any other third party. Jadoo Defendants further object to each and every Request to the extent that it seeks information falling within the scope of a confidentiality agreement, protective order or settlement agreement, or that otherwise requires the consent of any third part prior to production. No such information will be provided unless DISH secures the required consent from the appropriate third parties. In addition, no confidential, proprietary or trade secret information will be produced except pursuant to the terms of a protective order.

10. By submitting these objections, Jadoo Defendants do not in any way adopt the purported definitions of words and phrases contained in the Requests and Instructions. Jadoo Defendants object to those definitions to the extent that they are [*26] inconsistent with either (i) the definitions used by Jadoo Defendants or (ii) the ordinary and customary meaning of such words and phrases. Likewise, Jadoo Defendants object to the purported definitions in the Requests and Instructions to the extent that the definitions seek to impose any obligations or duties broader than, or inconsistent with, those contemplated by the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

11. Jadoo Defendants object to DISH's Definition of "JadooTV" to the extent that definition includes persons or entities other than Jadoo Defendants and those within their control. Jadoo Defendants will respond to a Request that uses that term only with respect to JadooTV, Inc. and Sajid Sohail, and those within their control.

12. Jadoo Defendants object to DISH's Definition of "Jadoo Box" to the extent that the definition includes Jadoo set top boxes other than the Jadoo4, Jadoo5, and Jadoo5S set top boxes as identified in DISH's Complaint. Jadoo Defendants will respond to a Request that uses that term only with respect to Jadoo4, Jadoo5, and Jadoo5S set top boxes.

13. Jadoo Defendants object to DISH's Definition of "Jadoo Service" and all Definitions using that term to the extent that [*27] "Jadoo Service" includes streaming services accessed on platforms other than the Jadoo4, Jadoo5, and Jadoo5S set top boxes as identified in DISH's Complaint. Jadoo Defendants will respond to a Request that uses that term or other Definitions incorporating that term only with respect to Jadoo4, Jadoo5, and Jadoo5S set top boxes.

14. Jadoo Defendants object to DISH's Definition of "SASP" as vague and ambiguous. Neither the Requests nor the cited paragraphs of DISH's complaint provide a definition of the term "SASP" or "South Asian Super Pack."

15. Jadoo Defendants object to Instruction No. 13 on the grounds that the specified period ("January 2015 to the present") for the Requests is overbroad and unduly burdensome, and seeks information not relevant to the claim or defense of any party or not proportional to the needs of the case. For the purpose of responding to the Requests, unless otherwise specified in their responses and objections, Jadoo Defendants define the relevant time period to be the three years before DISH filed its Complaint in this litigation, i.e., November 20, 2015 to November 20, 2018.

16. Jadoo Defendants object to each and every request for production to the extent [*28] they seek the production of "all" documents, or similar phrases, on the ground that such requests for production are overbroad, unduly burdensome, oppressive and, consequently, call for production of documents and things not relevant to a claim or defense of a party or not proportional to the needs of the case, considering the importance of the issues at stake in the action, the amount in controversy, the parties' relative access to relevant information, the parties' resources, the importance of the discovery in resolving the issues, and whether the burden or expense of the proposed discovery outweighs its likely benefit.

17. Jadoo Defendants object to each and every request for production to the extent they seek the production of information or documents "concerning" a subject matter on the ground that such requests for production are overbroad, unduly burdensome, oppressive and, consequently, call for production of documents and things not relevant to a claim or defense of a party or not proportional to the needs of the case, considering the importance of the issues at stake in the action, the amount in controversy, the parties' relative access to relevant information, the parties' [*29] resources, the importance of the discovery in resolving the issues, and whether the burden or expense of the proposed discovery outweighs its likely benefit.

18. Jadoo Defendants object to each and every request for production to the extent that they seek the production of documents or things without any limitation as to time period and are therefore overbroad, unduly burdensome, and, consequently, call for the production of documents and things not proportional to the needs of the case, considering the importance of the issues at stake in the action, the amount in controversy, the parties' relative access to relevant information, the parties' resources, the importance of the discovery in resolving the issues, and whether the burden or expense of the proposed discovery outweighs its likely benefit

19. As used in each objection and response made herein, "and" or "or" shall be construed both conjunctively and disjunctively, and each will include the other whenever such a dual construction would serve to bring within a category documents or information that would not otherwise be within its scope; "each" means "each and every."

20. As used in each objection and response made herein, "produce" [*30] shall mean either to make available for inspection and copying or to produce copies.

21. Any objection Jadoo Defendants make to any particular Request in no way limits the application of the foregoing objections to each Request. Jadoo Defendants expressly assert the objections set forth above with respect to each Request that follows.

SPECIFIC OBJECTIONS AND RESPONSES TO REQUESTS FOR PRODUCTION (SET ONE)

REQUEST NO. 1:

Documents sufficient to identify all owners of JadooTV and their percentage of ownership.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 1

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request purports to seek information about every owner of JadooTV, regardless of any relevance to the present litigation.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants respond as follows: Jadoo Defendants will meet and confer with DISH to address how this Request may be limited and/or clarified to (i) seek documents [*31] that are relevant to the claims or defenses in this litigation and proportional to the needs of this case; and (ii) avoid placing an undue burden on Jadoo Defendants.

REQUEST NO. 2:

Documents sufficient to identify all current and former officers and directors of JadooTV.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 2

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request purports to seek information about every current and former officer and director of JadooTV, regardless of any relevance to the present litigation.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants respond as follows: Jadoo Defendants will meet and confer with DISH to address how this Request may be limited and/or clarified to (i) seek documents that are relevant to the claims or defenses in this litigation and proportional to the needs of this case; and (ii) avoid placing an undue burden on Jadoo Defendants.

REQUEST NO. 3:

Documents sufficient to [*32] identify all employees, technical support agents, customer service agents, and contractors of JadooTV that have or had managerial or supervisory responsibilities or duties concerning eMedia. SASP, VOD. or the manufacture, distribution, marketing, sale, customer support, or network design of the Jadoo Box or Jadoo Service.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 3

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants will produce (i) non-privileged documents sufficient to identify employees of JadooTV in charge of the creation of the eMedia application and (ii) non-privileged documents sufficient to identify employees of JadooTV in charge of the manufacture and distribution of Jadoo4, Jadoo5, and Jadoo5S set top boxes in the United States that are discovered after a reasonable search and diligent inquiry and that are within the permissible scope of discovery, to the extent any exist within their possession, custody or control, once a valid protective order has been entered by the Court.

REQUEST NO. 4:

Documents sufficient to identify each business involved in television products or services, whether incorporated or fictitious, that JadooTV held ownership in, operated, managed, or has been affiliated with at any time.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 4

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and [*34] not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request purports to seek the identification of any television-related business JadooTV has ever been "affiliated with," regardless of any relevance to the present litigation. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request as overbroad and unduly burdensome to the extent that it seeks documents identifying "each business involved in television products or services" that JadooTV has "held ownership in, operated, managed, or has been affiliated with" without any limit as to time period. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request because the term "affiliated with" is vague and ambiguous. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants respond as follows: Jadoo Defendants will meet and confer with DISH to address how this Request may be limited and/or clarified to (i) seek documents that are relevant to the claims or defenses in this [*35] litigation and proportional to the needs of this case; and (ii) avoid placing an undue burden on Jadoo Defendants.

REQUEST NO. 5:

Documents sufficient to identify all monetary payments and any other benefits that JadooTV provided to Sajid Sohail.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 5

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request purports to seek information about every payment or benefit ever provided to Mr. Sohail, at any time and regardless of any relevance to the present litigation. Jadoo Defendants further object to this request as vague and ambiguous with respect to the term "any other benefits." Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, [*36] Jadoo Defendants respond as follows: Jadoo Defendants will meet and confer with DISH to address how this Request may be limited and/or clarified to (i) seek documents that are relevant to the claims or defenses in this litigation and proportional to the needs of this case; and (ii) avoid placing an undue burden on Jadoo Defendants.

REQUEST NO. 6:

Documents sufficient to identify all monetary payments and any other benefits that JadooTV provided to Haseeb Shah at any time.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 6

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request purports to seek information about every payment or benefit ever provided to Mr. Shah, at any time and regardless of any relevance to the present litigation. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request as overbroad and unduly burdensome to the extent that it seeks documents identifying "all monetary payments" and "any other benefits that JadooTV provided to Haseeb [*37] Shah" without any limit as to time period. Jadoo Defendants further object to this request as vague and ambiguous with respect to the term "any other benefits." Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants respond as follows: Jadoo Defendants will meet and confer with DISH to address how this Request may be limited and/or clarified to (i) seek documents that are relevant to the claims or defenses in this litigation and proportional to the needs of this case; and (ii) avoid placing an undue burden on Jadoo Defendants.

REQUEST NO. 7:

Documents sufficient to identify each email address that Sajid Sohail uses or has used to conduct business.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 7

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any [*38] party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request purports to seek information about every email address Mr. Sohail has ever used to conduct any business whatsoever, at any time and regardless of any relevance to the present litigation. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants will produce non-privileged documents sufficient to identify each email address that Sajid Sohail has used to conduct business pertaining to distribution of Jadoo4, Jadoo5, and Jadoo5S set top boxes in the United States that are discovered after a reasonable search and diligent inquiry and that are within the permissible scope of discovery, to the extent any exist within their possession, custody or control, once a valid protective order has been entered by the Court.

REQUEST NO. 8:

Documents sufficient to identify each domain name and website that JadooTV registered, [*39] held ownership in, paid for, or operated at any time.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 8

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request purports to seek information about every domain name or website ever used by JadooTV, regardless of any relevance to the present litigation. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request as overbroad and unduly burdensome to the extent that it seeks documents identifying "each domain name and website" that "JadooTV registered, held ownership in, paid for, or operated" without any limit as to time period. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants respond as follows: Jadoo Defendants [*40] will meet and confer with DISH to address how this Request may be limited and/or clarified to (i) seek documents that are relevant to the claims or defenses in this litigation and proportional to the needs of this case; and (ii) avoid placing an undue burden on Jadoo Defendants.

REQUEST NO. 9:

Documents sufficient to identify each YouTube, DailyMotion, and GitHub username and account that JadooTV has used at any time.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 9

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request purports to seek information about every YouTube, DailyMotion, or GitHub account ever used by JadooTV, regardless of any relevance to the present litigation. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request as overbroad and unduly burdensome to the extent that it seeks documents identifying "each YouTube, DailyMotion, and GitHub username and account that JadooTV has used" without any limit as to time period. Jadoo Defendants [*41] further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections. Jadoo Defendants respond as follows: Jadoo Defendants will meet and confer with DISH to address how this Request may be limited and/or clarified to (i) seek documents that are relevant to the claims or defenses in this litigation and proportional to the needs of this case; and (ii) avoid placing an undue burden on Jadoo Defendants.

REQUEST NO. 10:

Documents sufficient to identify each server that JadooTV leased, held ownership in, paid for, operated, or used.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 10

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request purports to seek information about every server ever used in any way by [*42] JadooTV, regardless of any relevance to the present litigation. Jadoo Defendants further object to the term "used" as vague and ambiguous. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants respond as follows: Jadoo Defendants will meet and confer with DISH to address how this Request may be limited and/or clarified to (i) seek documents that are relevant to the claims or defenses in this litigation and proportional to the needs of this case; and (ii) avoid placing an undue burden on Jadoo Defendants.

REQUEST NO. 11:

Documents sufficient to identify each Content Delivery Network ("CDN") that JadooTV uses or has used.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 11

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, [*43] and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request purports to seek information about every CDN ever used in any way by JadooTV. regardless of any relevance to the present litigation. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants respond as follows: Jadoo Defendants will meet and confer with DISH to address how this Request may be limited and/or clarified to (i) seek documents that are relevant to the claims or defenses in this litigation and proportional to the needs of this case; and (ii) avoid placing an undue burden on Jadoo Defendants.

REQUEST NO. 12:

All documents, including emails, that JadooTV exchanged with Verizon Trademark Services, LLC; Verizon Digital Media Services; Verizon Business Services; MCI Communications Services, Inc.; EdgeCast Networks, Inc.; INXY Ltd.; Highwinds Network Group, Inc.; StackPath, LLC; Lease Web CDN B.V.; Akamai Technologies, Inc.; [*44] Fishnet Communications; WorldStream B.V.; CDN.tm; or any other CDN concerning the Protected Channels, eMedia, SASP, alleged copyright infringement, or Haseeb Shah.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 12

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request purports to seek information about any communications with a CDN regarding eMedia, without any limitation rendering the request relevant to the present litigation. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants respond as follows: Jadoo Defendants will meet and confer with DISH to address how this Request may be limited and/or clarified to (i) seek documents that are relevant to [*45] the claims or defenses in this litigation and proportional to the needs of this case; and (ii) avoid placing an undue burden on Jadoo Defendants.

REQUEST NO. 13:

All documents exchanged between JadooTV and Haseeb Shah.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 13

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request purports to seek every communication between JadooTV and Mr. Shah, at any time and regardless of any relevance to the present litigation. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants will produce non-privileged documents sufficient to show Jadoo Defendants' communications with Haseeb Shah pertaining to the Protected Channels [*46] and SASP that are discovered after a reasonable search and diligent inquiry and that are within the permissible scope of discovery, to the extent any exist within their possession, custody or control, once a valid protective order has been entered by the Court.

REQUEST NO. 14:

All documents exchanged with Google, Inc. or YouTube concerning the Protected Channels, eMedia, SASP, copyright infringement, or Haseeb Shah.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 14

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request purports to seek any documents exchanged with Google, Inc. or YouTube regarding eMedia. without any limitation rendering the request relevant to the present litigation.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants respond as follows: Jadoo Defendants will meet and confer with DISH to address how this Request may be limited and/or clarified to (i) seek documents that are relevant to the claims or [*47] defenses in this litigation and proportional to the needs of this case; and (ii) avoid placing an undue burden on Jadoo Defendants.

REQUEST NO. 15:

All documents that JadooTV exchanged with GitHub. Inc. or Dropbox Inc. concerning the Protected Channels, eMedia, SASP, copyright infringement, or Haseeb Shah.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 15

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request purports to seek any documents exchanged with GitHub, Inc. or Dropbox, Inc. regarding eMedia, without any limitation rendering the request relevant to the present litigation.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants respond as follows: Jadoo Defendants will meet and confer with DISH to address how this Request may be limited and/or clarified to (i) seek documents that are relevant to the claims or defenses in this litigation and proportional to the needs of this case; and (ii) avoid placing an undue burden [*48] on Jadoo Defendants.

REQUEST NO. 16:

All documents that JadooTV exchanged with DailyMotion concerning the Protected Channels, eMedia, SASP, copyright infringement, or Haseeb Shah.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 16

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request purports to seek any documents exchanged with DailyMotion regarding eMedia, without any limitation rendering the request relevant to the present litigation.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants respond as follows: Jadoo Defendants will meet and confer with DISH to address how this Request may be limited and/or clarified to (i) seek documents that are relevant to the claims or defenses in this litigation and proportional to the needs of this case; and (ii) avoid placing an undue burden on Jadoo Defendants.

REQUEST NO. 17:

All documents, including diagrams, charts, maps, and schematics, concerning the process by which JadooTV's [*49] Live TV channels are made available on the Jadoo Service or Jadoo Box.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 17

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request purports to seek "all documents" relating to the making available of Live TV channels on the Jadoo Service or Jadoo Box, regardless of any relevance to the present litigation. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks confidential business information, trade secrets, or competitively or technically sensitive information. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request because the term "the process" is vague and ambiguous. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, [*50] Jadoo Defendants will produce non-privileged documents sufficient to describe the overall manner by which JadooTV's Live channels are made available on the Jadoo4, Jadoo5, and Jadoo5S set top boxes that are discovered after a reasonable search and diligent inquiry and that are within the permissible scope of discovery, to the extent any exist within their possession, custody or control, once a valid protective order has been entered by the Court.

REQUEST NO. 18:

All documents, including diagrams, charts, maps, and schematics, concerning the process, at any time, by which SASP is made available on the Jadoo Service or Jadoo Box.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 18

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request could be read to require all documents relating in any way to the technical functioning of the way channels are loaded on the Jadoo Service or Jadoo Box, regardless of any relevance to the present litigation. Jadoo [*51] Defendants further object to the request as overbroad and unduly burdensome to the extent that it seeks "[a]ll documents, including diagrams, charts, maps, and schematics, concerning the process" "by which SASP is made available on the Jadoo Service or Jadoo Box" without any limit as to time period. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks confidential business information, trade secrets, or competitively or technically sensitive information. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request because the term "the process" is vague and ambiguous. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants will produce non-privileged documents concerning making SASP available on the Jadoo4, Jadoo5, and Jadoo5S set top boxes that are discovered after a reasonable search and diligent inquiry and that are within the permissible scope of discovery, to the extent any exist within their [*52] possession, custody or control, once a valid protective order has been entered by the Court.

REQUEST NO. 19:

All documents, including diagrams, charts, maps, and schematics, concerning the process, at any time, by which eMedia files, including SASP, are created for use on the Jadoo Service and Jadoo Box.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 19

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request could be read to require all documents relating in any way to the technical functioning of the way eMedia files are created, regardless of any relevance to the present litigation. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request as overbroad and unduly burdensome to the extent that it seeks "[a]ll documents, including diagrams, charts, maps, and schematics, concerning the process" "by which eMedia files, including SASP, are created for use on the Jadoo Service and Jadoo Box" without any limit as to time period. Jadoo Defendants further [*53] object to the request to the extent it seeks confidential business information, trade secrets, or competitively or technically sensitive information. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request because the term "the process" is vague and ambiguous. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants will produce non-privileged documents sufficient to describe the overall manner by which eMedia files are created that are discovered after a reasonable search and diligent inquiry and that are within the permissible scope of discovery, to the extent any exist within their possession, custody or control, once a valid protective order has been entered by the Court.

REQUEST NO. 20:

All documents, including diagrams, charts, maps, and schematics, concerning the process by which SASP is added to the Jadoo Box at any time.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 20

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General [*54] Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request could be read to require all documents relating in any way to the technical functioning of the way channels are loaded on the Jadoo Service or Jadoo Box, regardless of any relevance to the present litigation. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request as overbroad and unduly burdensome to the extent that it seeks "[a]ll documents, including diagrams, charts, maps, and schematics, concerning the process by which SASP is added to the Jadoo Box" without any limit as to time period. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks confidential business information, trade secrets, or competitively or technically sensitive information. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request as duplicative of Request No. 18 above. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request because the term "the process" is vague and ambiguous, Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents [*55] protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants will produce non-privileged documents concerning adding SASP to the Jadoo4, Jadoo5, and Jadoo5S set top boxes that are discovered after a reasonable search and diligent inquiry and that are within the permissible scope of discovery, to the extent any exist within their possession, custody or control, once a valid protective order has been entered by the Court.

REQUEST NO. 21:

All documents concerning the creation or potential creation, at any time, of XML files for eMedia, including how to use CDNs or encrypt files.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 21

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request purports to seek all documents about the creation of any XML [*56] file for eMedia at any time, regardless of any relevance to the present litigation. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request as overbroad and unduly burdensome to the extent that it seeks "[a]ll documents concerning the creation or potential creation" "of XML files for eMedia, including how to use CDNs or encrypt files" without any limit as to time period. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks confidential business information, trade secrets, or competitively or technically sensitive information. Jadoo Defendants object to the term "including how to use CDNs or encrypt files" as unclear and ambiguous in the context of the request. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections. Jadoo Defendants will produce non-privileged documents sufficient to describe the overall manner in which XML files are created for eMedia that are discovered after a reasonable search and diligent [*57] inquiry and that are within the permissible scope of discovery, to the extent any exist within their possession, custody or control, once a valid protective order has been entered by the Court.

REQUEST NO. 22:

Documents sufficient to identify the authors and contributors to each document concerning the creation or potential creation, at any time, of XML files for eMedia.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 22

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request purports to seek information about the authorship of every document relating to the creation of any XML file for eMedia, regardless of any relevance to the present litigation. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request as overbroad and unduly burdensome to the extent that it seeks documents "sufficient to identify the authors and contributors to each document concerning the creation or potential creation" "of XML files for eMedia" without any limit as to time period. [*58] Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants respond as follows: Jadoo Defendants will meet and confer with DISH to address how this Request may be limited and/or clarified to (i) seek documents that are relevant to the claims or defenses in this litigation and proportional to the needs of this case; and (ii) avoid placing an undue burden on Jadoo Defendants.

REQUEST NO. 23:

All documents, including diagrams, charts, maps, and schematics concerning the process by which VOD content is made available on the Jadoo Service or Jadoo Box. including the selection, incorporation, and arrangement of such content.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 23

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not [*59] proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request could be read to seek all documents concerning the way that VOD content is made available on the Jadoo Service or Jadoo Box, regardless of any relevance to the present litigation. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks confidential business information, trade secrets, or competitively or technically sensitive information. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request because the term "the process" is vague and ambiguous. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants respond as follows: Jadoo Defendants will meet and confer with DISH to address how this Request may be limited and/or clarified to (i) seek documents that are relevant to the claims or defenses in this litigation and proportional to the needs of this case; and (ii) avoid placing an undue burden on Jadoo Defendants.

REQUEST NO. 24:

Documents [*60] sufficient to identify the dates on which each Protected Channel was transmitted or otherwise made available for viewing on the Jadoo Service or Jadoo Box.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 24

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request because the term "transmitted or otherwise made available for viewing" is vague and ambiguous in the context of the request. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants will produce non-privileged documents sufficient to identify the dates on which each Protected Channel was purportedly transmitted on the Jadoo4, Jadoo5, and Jadoo5S set top boxes that are discovered [*61] after a reasonable search and diligent inquiry and that are within the permissible scope of discovery, to the extent any exist within their possession, custody or control, once a valid protective order has been entered by the Court.

REQUEST NO. 25:

Documents sufficient to identify each source or location from which JadooTV acquired each of the Protected Channels that were transmitted or otherwise made available for viewing on the Jadoo Service or Jadoo Box.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 25

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. In Jadoo Defendants object to the terms "source or location," "acquired," and "transmitted or otherwise made available for viewing" as vague and ambiguous in the context of the request. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest [*62] privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants will produce non-privileged documents sufficient to identify the source of each of the Protected Channels purportedly transmitted on the Jadoo4, Jadoo5, and Jadoo5S set top boxes that are discovered after a reasonable search and diligent inquiry and that are within the permissible scope of discovery, to the extent any exist within their possession, custody or control, once a valid protective order has been entered by the Court.

REQUEST NO. 26:

All documents concerning making the Protected Channels available on the Jadoo Service or Jadoo Box.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 26

REQUEST NO. 27:

All documents, including any agreements or communications, that JadooTV alleges gives JadooTV the rights to transmit or provide access to the Protected Channels.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 27

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product [*64] doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants will produce non-privileged documents responsive to this request that are discovered after a reasonable search and diligent inquiry and that are within the permissible scope of discovery, to the extent any exist within their possession, custody or control, once a valid protective order has been entered by the Court.

REQUEST NO. 28:

Documents sufficient to identify each payment that JadooTV made to acquire the rights to transmit or provide access to the Protected Channels.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 28

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest [*65] privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants will produce non-privileged documents responsive to this request that are discovered after a reasonable search and diligent inquiry and that are within the permissible scope of discovery, to the extent any exist within their possession, custody or control, once a valid protective order has been entered by the Court.

REQUEST NO. 29:

All cease and desist correspondence, notices of claimed infringement, and other documents and communications requesting that JadooTV stop transmitting or providing access to a channel or program.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 29

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, this request purports to seek documents relating to channels and programs that are not at issue in the litigation.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants respond as follows: [*66] Jadoo Defendants will meet and confer with DISH to address how this Request may be limited and/or clarified to (i) seek documents that are relevant to the claims or defenses in this litigation and proportional to the needs of this case; and (ii) avoid placing an undue burden on Jadoo Defendants.

REQUEST NO. 30:

All responses and documents concerning each cease and desist correspondence, notices of claimed infringement, and other documents and communications requesting that JadooTV stop transmitting or providing access to a channel or program.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 30

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, this request purports to seek documents relating to channels and programs that are not at issue in the litigation. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client [*67] privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants respond as follows: Jadoo Defendants will meet and confer with DISH to address how this Request may be limited and/or clarified to (i) seek documents that are relevant to the claims or defenses in this litigation and proportional to the needs of this case; and (ii) avoid placing an undue burden on Jadoo Defendants.

REQUEST NO. 31:

Documents sufficient to identify each advertisement for the Jadoo Service or Jadoo Box that was made by JadooTV, or for which JadooTV paid, either in whole or in part.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 31

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, this request purports to seek documents regarding every single advertisement for the Jadoo Service or Jadoo Box, regardless of any relevance to the present litigation. In addition, Jadoo Defendants object to the [*68] request as duplicative, unduly burdensome, expensive, and oppressive on the ground that it seeks documents currently in DISH's possession, custody or control, or that are obtainable from some other source that is more convenient, less burdensome or less expensive than Jadoo Defendants. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants respond as follows: Jadoo Defendants will meet and confer with DISH to address how this Request may be limited and/or clarified to (i) seek documents that are relevant to the claims or defenses in this litigation and proportional to the needs of this case; and (ii) avoid placing an undue burden on Jadoo Defendants.

REQUEST NO. 32:

Documents sufficient to identify each advertisement for eMedia, SASP, or Protected Channel VOD that was made by JadooTV, or for which JadooTV paid, either in whole or in part.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 32

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference [*69] each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, this request purports to seek documents regarding every single advertisement for eMedia by JadooTV, regardless of any relevance to the present litigation. In addition, Jadoo Defendants object to the request as duplicative, unduly burdensome, expensive, and oppressive on the ground that it seeks documents currently in DISH's possession, custody or control, or that are obtainable from some other source that is more convenient, less burdensome or less expensive than Jadoo Defendants. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants will produce non-privileged documents sufficient to identify advertisements by JadooTV, or [*70] for which JadooTV paid, for SASP or Protected Channel VOD that are discovered after a reasonable search and diligent inquiry and that are within the permissible scope of discovery, to the extent any exist within their possession, custody or control, once a valid protective order has been entered by the Court.

REQUEST NO. 33:

Documents sufficient to identify all of JadooTV's present and former resellers in the United States.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 33

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request purports to seek information about every one of JadooTV's resellers in the United States, regardless of any relevance to the present litigation. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks confidential business information, trade secrets, or competitively or technically sensitive information. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure [*71] by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants respond as follows: Jadoo Defendants will meet and confer with DISH to address how this Request may be limited and/or clarified to (i) seek documents that are relevant to the claims or defenses in this litigation and proportional to the needs of this case; and (ii) avoid placing an undue burden on Jadoo Defendants.

REQUEST NO. 34:

All documents concerning communications with JadooTV's customers or resellers concerning the Protected Channels.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 34

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client [*72] privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants will produce non-privileged documents responsive to this request that are discovered after a reasonable search and diligent inquiry and that are within the permissible scope of discovery, to the extent any exist within their possession, custody or control, once a valid protective order has been entered by the Court.

REQUEST NO. 35:

All documents concerning communications with JadooTV's customers or resellers concerning eMedia, SASP, or Protected Channel VOD.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 35

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request purports to seek information about any communications with JadooTV's customers or resellers concerning eMedia. regardless of any relevance to the present litigation. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks [*73] documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants will produce non-privileged documents concerning communications with JadooTV's customers or resellers concerning SASP or Protected Channel VOD that are discovered after a reasonable search and diligent inquiry and that are within the permissible scope of discovery, to the extent any exist within their possession, custody or control, once a valid protective order has been entered by the Court.

REQUEST NO. 36:

All documents concerning communications with JadooTV's customers or resellers concerning the addition or removal of channels or programs from the Jadoo Service or Jadoo Box.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 36

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, [*74] the request purports to seek documents concerning any change in channels or programs, regardless of any relevance to the present litigation. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants respond as follows: Jadoo Defendants will meet and confer with DISH to address how this Request may be limited and/or clarified to (i) seek documents that are relevant to the claims or defenses in this litigation and proportional to the needs of this case; and (ii) avoid placing an undue burden on Jadoo Defendants.

REQUEST NO. 37:

All documents concerning communications with JadooTV's employees or agents concerning eMedia, SASP, or Protected Channel VOD at any time.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 37

JadooTV's employees or agents concerning eMedia. SASP, or Protected Channel VOD" without any limit as to time period. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections. Jadoo Defendants will produce non-privileged documents concerning communications with JadooTV's employees or agents concerning SASP or Protected Channel VOD that are discovered after a reasonable search and diligent inquiry and that are within the permissible scope of discovery, to the extent any exist within their possession, [*76] custody or control, once a valid protective order has been entered by the Court.

REQUEST NO. 38:

All documents concerning efforts JadooTV made to ensure that the Protected Channels are not transmitted or otherwise accessed using the Jadoo Service or Jadoo Box.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 38

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks confidential business information, trade secrets, or competitively or technically sensitive information. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections. Jadoo Defendants will produce non-privileged documents sufficient to describe efforts JadooTV made to ensure [*77] that the Protected Channels are not transmitted or otherwise accessed on the Jadoo4, Jadoo5, and Jadoo5S set top boxes that are discovered after a reasonable search and diligent inquiry and that are within the permissible scope of discovery, to the extent any exist within their possession, custody or control, once a valid protective order has been entered by the Court.

REQUEST NO. 39:

All documents concerning unfavorable comments, reviews, or criticisms about the Jadoo Service or Jadoo Box.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 39

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request purports to seek all negative commentary about the Jadoo Service or Box, regardless of any relevance to the present litigation. In addition, Jadoo Defendants object to the request as duplicative, unduly burdensome, expensive, and oppressive on the ground that it seeks documents currently in DISH's possession, custody or control, or that are obtainable [*78] from some other source that is more convenient, less burdensome or less expensive than Jadoo Defendants. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants respond as follows: Jadoo Defendants will meet and confer with DISH to address how this Request may be limited and/or clarified to (i) seek documents that are relevant to the claims or defenses in this litigation and proportional to the needs of this case; and (ii) avoid placing an undue burden on Jadoo Defendants.

REQUEST NO. 40:

All documents that reference the Jadoo Service or Jadoo Box, and also reference the Protected Channels.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 40

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs [*79] of the case. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants will produce non-privileged documents that reference Jadoo4, Jadoo5, and Jadoo5S set top boxes and that also reference the Protected Channels that are discovered after a reasonable search and diligent inquiry and that are within the permissible scope of discovery, to the extent any exist within their possession, custody or control, once a valid protective order has been entered by the Court.

REQUEST NO. 41:

All documents that reference the Jadoo Service or Jadoo Box, and also reference eMedia, SASP, or Protected Channel VOD at any time.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 41

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional [*80] to the needs of the case. For example, the request purports to seek documents that reference the Jadoo Service or Jadoo Box, and also reference eMedia, regardless of any relevance to the present litigation. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request as overbroad and unduly burdensome to the extent that it seeks "[a]ll documents that reference the Jadoo Service or Jadoo Box, and also reference eMedia, SASP. or Protected Channel VOD" without any limit as to time period. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks confidential business information, trade secrets, or competitively or technically sensitive information. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants will produce non-privileged documents that reference Jadoo4, Jadoo5, and Jadoo5S set top boxes and that also reference SASP or Protected Channel VOD that are discovered after a reasonable search and diligent [*81] inquiry and that are within the permissible scope of discovery, to the extent any exist within their possession, custody or control, once a valid protective order has been entered by the Court.

REQUEST NO. 42:

All documents concerning the creation, domain registration, ownership, or design of the website www.jadootv.com.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 42

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request purports to seek all documents concerning the design of the JadooTV website, regardless of any relevance to the present litigation. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks confidential business information, trade secrets, or competitively or technically sensitive information. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest [*82] privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants respond as follows: Jadoo Defendants will meet and confer with DISH to address how this Request may be limited and/or clarified to (i) seek documents that are relevant to the claims or defenses in this litigation and proportional to the needs of this case; and (if) avoid placing an undue burden on Jadoo Defendants.

REQUEST NO. 43:

Documents sufficient to identify each person involved in designing, updating, or supplying content for the website www.jadootv.com.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 43

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request purports to seek the identities of every person involved in supplying content for JadooTV's website, regardless of any relevance to the present litigation. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks confidential business information, [*83] trade secrets, or competitively or technically sensitive information. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants respond as follows: Jadoo Defendants will meet and confer with DISH to address how this Request may be limited and/or clarified to (i) seek documents that are relevant to the claims or defenses in this litigation and proportional to the needs of this case; and (ii) avoid placing an undue burden on Jadoo Defendants.

REQUEST NO. 44:

Documents sufficient to identify each social media account, including Facebook, Twitter, Instagram, and Snapchat. that JadooTV registered or used at any time.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 44

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional [*84] to the needs of the case. For example, the request purports to seek documents identifying all of JadooTV's social media accounts, regardless of any relevance to the present litigation. In addition, Jadoo Defendants object to the request as duplicative, unduly burdensome, expensive, and oppressive on the ground that it seeks documents currently in DISH's possession, custody or control, or that are obtainable from some other source that is more convenient, less burdensome or less expensive than Jadoo Defendants. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request as overbroad and unduly burdensome to the extent that it seeks "[d]ocuments sufficient to identify each social media account, including Facebook. Twitter, Instagram. and Snapchat. that JadooTV registered or used" without any limit as to time period.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants respond as follows: Jadoo Defendants will meet and confer with DISH to address how this Request may be limited and/or clarified to (i) seek documents that are relevant to the claims or defenses in this litigation and proportional to the needs of this case; and (ii) avoid placing an undue burden on Jadoo Defendants. [*85]

REQUEST NO. 45:

Documents sufficient to identify all posts made to JadooTV's social media pages, including Facebook, Twitter, Instagram. and Snapchat, concerning the Protected Channels.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 45

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. In addition, Jadoo Defendants object to the request as duplicative, unduly burdensome, expensive, and oppressive on the ground that it seeks documents currently in DISH's possession, custody or control, or that are obtainable from some other source that is more convenient, less burdensome or less expensive than Jadoo Defendants. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants will produce [*86] non-privileged documents responsive to this request that are discovered after a reasonable search and diligent inquiry and that are within the permissible scope of discovery, to the extent any exist within their possession, custody or control, once a valid protective order has been entered by the Court.

REQUEST NO. 46:

Documents sufficient to identify all posts made to JadooTV's social media pages, including Facebook. Twitter, Instagram, and Snapchat, concerning eMedia, SASP, or Protected Channel VOD.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 46

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request purports to seek documents identifying every post made on every one of JadooTV's social media pages concerning eMedia, regardless of any relevance to the present litigation. In addition, Jadoo Defendants object to the request as duplicative, unduly burdensome, expensive, and oppressive on the ground that it seeks documents currently in DISH's [*87] possession, custody or control, or that are obtainable from some other source that is more convenient, less burdensome or less expensive than Jadoo Defendants. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants will produce non-privileged documents sufficient to identify all posts made to JadooTV's social media pages concerning SASP or Protected Channel VOD that are discovered after a reasonable search and diligent inquiry and that are within the permissible scope of discovery, to the extent any exist within their possession, custody or control, once a valid protective order has been entered by the Court.

REQUEST NO. 47:

Documents sufficient to identify JadooTV's monthly and annual unit and dollar sales separately for each type or line of product or service that JadooTV sold.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 47

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo [*88] Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request purports to seek information regarding JadooTV's sales of any product or service, regardless of any relevance to the present litigation. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks confidential business information, trade secrets, or competitively or technically sensitive information.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants respond as follows: Jadoo Defendants will meet and confer with DISH to address how this Request may be limited and/or clarified to (i) seek documents that are relevant to the claims or defenses in this litigation and proportional to the needs of this case; and (ii) avoid placing an undue burden on Jadoo Defendants.

REQUEST NO. 48:

Documents sufficient to identify each purchaser of JadooTV's products or services, the type of product or service purchased, and amount paid.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 48

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth [*89] above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request purports to seek the identities of each of JadooTV's customers, regardless of any relevance to the present litigation. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks confidential business information, trade secrets, or competitively or technically sensitive information. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants respond as follows: Jadoo Defendants will meet and confer with DISH to address how this Request may be limited and/or clarified to (i) seek documents that are relevant to the claims or defenses in this litigation and proportional to the needs of this case; and (ii) avoid placing an undue burden on Jadoo Defendants. [*90]

REQUEST NO. 49:

Documents sufficient to identify JadooTV's revenues, costs, and gross profits, including advertising revenue, relating to the Jadoo Service and Jadoo Box.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 49

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request purports to seek financial information regarding any Jadoo Service and Jadoo Box, regardless of any relevance to the present litigation. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks confidential business information, trade secrets, or competitively or technically sensitive information.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants respond as follows: Jadoo Defendants will meet and confer with DISH to address how this Request may be limited and/or clarified to (i) seek documents that are relevant to the claims or defenses in this litigation and proportional to the needs of this case; and (ii) avoid placing an undue burden [*91] on Jadoo Defendants.

REQUEST NO. 50:

Documents sufficient to identify each type of Jadoo Box that JadooTV acquired or distributed.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 50

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request purports to seek information regarding any Jadoo Box, regardless of any relevance to the present litigation. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks confidential business information, trade secrets, or competitively or technically sensitive information. Jadoo Defendants further object to the terms "type" and "acquired or distributed" as vague and ambiguous. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, [*92] Jadoo Defendants respond as follows: Jadoo Defendants will meet and confer with DISH to address how this Request may be limited and/or clarified to (i) seek documents that are relevant to the claims or defenses in this litigation and proportional to the needs of this case; and (ii) avoid placing an undue burden on Jadoo Defendants.

REQUEST NO. 51:

Documents sufficient to identify the total number of each type of Jadoo Box that JadooTV acquired or distributed.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 51

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request purports to seek information regarding any Jadoo Box, regardless of any relevance to the present litigation. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks confidential business information, trade secrets, or competitively or technically sensitive information. Jadoo Defendants further object to the terms "type" and "acquired or distributed" as vague and ambiguous. [*93] Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants respond as follows: Jadoo Defendants will meet and confer with DISH to address how this Request may be limited and/or clarified to (i) seek documents that are relevant to the claims or defenses in this litigation and proportional to the needs of this case; and (ii) avoid placing an undue burden on Jadoo Defendants.

REQUEST NO. 52:

Documents sufficient to identify all costs that JadooTV incurred to acquire and distribute each type of Jadoo Box.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 52

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request purports to seek the identification of every individual [*94] cost related to acquisition and distribution of any Jadoo Box, regardless of any relevance to the present litigation. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks confidential business information, trade secrets, or competitively or technically sensitive information. Jadoo Defendants further object to the terms "type" and "acquired and distributed" as vague and ambiguous. REQUEST NO. 53:

Documents sufficient to identify each payment that JadooTV received from its sale of each type of Jadoo Box.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST [*95] NO. 53

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request could be read as seeking information about every single payment associated with any Jadoo Box, regardless of any relevance to the present litigation. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks confidential business information, trade secrets, or competitively or technically sensitive information. Jadoo Defendants further object to the terms "each payment ' and "type" as vague and ambiguous. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants respond as follows: Jadoo Defendants will meet and confer with DISH to address how this Request [*96] may be limited and/or clarified to (i) seek documents that are relevant to the claims or defenses in this litigation and proportional to the needs of this case; and (ii) avoid placing an undue burden on Jadoo Defendants.

REQUEST NO. 54:

Documents sufficient to identify each source or supplier of each type of Jadoo Box that JadooTV acquired or distributed.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 54

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request purports to seek the identities of every source of any Jadoo Box, regardless of any relevance to the present litigation. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks confidential business information, trade secrets, or competitively or technically sensitive information. Jadoo Defendants further object to the terms "source or supplier." "type." and "acquired or distributed" as vague and ambiguous. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it [*97] seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants respond as follows: Jadoo Defendants will meet and confer with DISH to address how this Request may be limited and/or clarified to (i) seek documents that are relevant to the claims or defenses in this litigation and proportional to the needs of this case; and (ii) avoid placing an undue burden on Jadoo Defendants.

REQUEST NO. 55:

Documents sufficient to identify each payment that JadooTV made to each source or supplier from which JadooTV acquired each type of Jadoo Box.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 55

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request could be read as seeking information about every single individual payment made to one of [*98] the sources or suppliers at issue in the request, regardless of any relevance to the present litigation. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks confidential business information, trade secrets, or competitively or technically sensitive information. Jadoo Defendants further object to the terms "source or supplier," "type," and "acquired" as vague and ambiguous. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants respond as follows: Jadoo Defendants will meet and confer with DISH to address how this Request may be limited and/or clarified to (i) seek documents that are relevant to the claims or defenses in this litigation and proportional to the needs of this case; and (ii) avoid placing an undue burden on Jadoo Defendants.

REQUEST NO. 56:

All documents concerning actual or potential uses of each type of Jadoo Box.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 56

Jadoo Defendants incorporate [*99] by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request purports to seek every document detailing any functionality of any Jadoo Box. regardless of any relevance to the present litigation. In addition. Jadoo Defendants object to the request as duplicative, unduly burdensome, expensive, and oppressive on the ground that it seeks documents currently in DISH's possession, custody or control, or that are obtainable from some other source that is more convenient, less burdensome or less expensive than Jadoo Defendants. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks confidential business information, trade secrets, or competitively or technically sensitive information. Jadoo Defendants further object to the terms "actual or potential uses" and "type as vague and ambiguous. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney [*100] work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants respond as follows: Jadoo Defendants will meet and confer with DISH to address how this Request may be limited and/or clarified to (i) seek documents that are relevant to the claims or defenses in this litigation and proportional to the needs of this case; and (ii) avoid placing an undue burden on Jadoo Defendants.

REQUEST NO. 57:

All documents that JadooTV exchanged with each supplier or source from whom JadooTV acquired each type of Jadoo Box.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 57

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request purports to seek every document exchanged with a "source or supplier" of any Jadoo Box, regardless of any relevance to the present litigation. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent [*101] it seeks confidential business information, trade secrets, or competitively or technically sensitive information. Jadoo Defendants further object to the terms "source or supplier," "type," and "acquired" as vague and ambiguous. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants respond as follows: Jadoo Defendants will meet and confer with DISH to address how this Request may be limited and/or clarified to (i) seek documents that are relevant to the claims or defenses in this litigation and proportional to the needs of this case; and (ii) avoid placing an undue burden on Jadoo Defendants.

REQUEST NO. 58:

Documents sufficient to identify each iteration of the JadooTV App and JadooGO App that JadooTV acquired or distributed.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 58

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that [*102] it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request purports to seek information regarding the Jadoo IV App and JadooGO App, regardless of any relevance to the present litigation. In addition, Jadoo Defendants object to the request as duplicative, unduly burdensome, expensive, and oppressive on the ground that it seeks documents currently in DISH's possession, custody or control, or that are obtainable from some other source that is more convenient, less burdensome or less expensive than Jadoo Defendants. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks confidential business information, trade secrets, or competitively or technically sensitive information. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants respond as follows: Jadoo Defendants will [*103] meet and confer with DISH to address how this Request may be limited and/or clarified to (i) seek documents that are relevant to the claims or defenses in this litigation and proportional to the needs of this case; and (ii) avoid placing an undue burden on Jadoo Defendants.

REQUEST NO. 59:

Documents sufficient to identify the total number of each iteration of the JadooTV App and JadooGO App that JadooTV acquired or distributed.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 59

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request purports to seek information regarding the JadooTV App and JadooGO App, regardless of any relevance to the present litigation. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks confidential business information, trade secrets, or competitively or technically sensitive information. Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants respond as follows: Jadoo Defendants will meet and confer with DISH to address how this Request may be limited and/or clarified to (i) seek documents that are relevant to the claims or defenses in this litigation and proportional to the needs of this case; and (ii) avoid placing an undue burden on Jadoo Defendants.

REQUEST NO. 60:

Documents sufficient to identify all costs that JadooTV incurred to acquire and distribute each iteration of the JadooTV App and JadooGO App.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 60

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request could be read as seeking information about every single one of the costs described in the request, regardless of any relevance to the present [*105] litigation. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks confidential business information. trade secrets, or competitively or technically sensitive information. Jadoo Defendants further object to this request because the term "acquire and distribute" is vague and ambiguous in the context of the request. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants respond as follows: Jadoo Defendants will meet and confer with DISH to address how this Request may be limited and/or clarified to (i) seek documents that are relevant to the claims or defenses in this litigation and proportional to the needs of this case; and (ii) avoid placing an undue burden on Jadoo Defendants.

REQUEST NO. 61:

Documents sufficient to identify each payment that JadooTV received from its sale of each iteration of the JadooTV App and JadooGO App.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 61

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by [*106] reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request could be read as seeking information about each individual instance in which JadooTV received a payment relating to JadooTV App or JadooGO App, regardless of any relevance to the present litigation. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks confidential business information, trade secrets, or competitively or technically sensitive information. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants respond as follows: Jadoo Defendants will meet and confer with DISH to address how this Request may be limited and/or clarified to (i) seek documents that are relevant to the claims [*107] or defenses in this litigation and proportional to the needs of this case; and (ii) avoid placing an undue burden on Jadoo Defendants.

REQUEST NO. 62:

Documents sufficient to identify each source or supplier of each iteration of the JadooTV App and JadooGO App that JadooTV acquired or distributed.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 62

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request purports to seek the identities of every "source or supplier" of every iteration of the JadooTV App and JadooGO App, regardless of any relevance to the present litigation. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks confidential business information, trade secrets, or competitively or technically sensitive information. Jadoo Defendants further object to the terms "source or supplier" and "acquired or distributed" as vague and ambiguous in the context of the request. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to [*108] the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants respond as follows: Jadoo Defendants will meet and confer with DISH to address how this Request may be limited and/or clarified to (i) seek documents that are relevant to the claims or defenses in this litigation and proportional to the needs of this case; and (ii) avoid placing an undue burden on Jadoo Defendants.

REQUEST NO. 63:

Documents sufficient to identify each payment that JadooTV made to each source or supplier from which JadooTV acquired each iteration of the JadooTV App or JadooGO App.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 63

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request could be read as seeking documents relating to each [*109] individual payment set forth in the request, regardless of any relevance to the present litigation. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks confidential business information, trade secrets, or competitively or technically sensitive information. Jadoo Defendants further object to the term "source or supplier" as vague and ambiguous in the context of the request. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants respond as follows: Jadoo Defendants will meet and confer with DISH to address how this Request may be limited and/or clarified to (i) seek documents that are relevant to the claims or defenses in this litigation and proportional to the needs of this case; and (ii) avoid placing an undue burden on Jadoo Defendants.

REQUEST NO. 64:

All documents concerning actual or potential uses of each iteration of the JadooTV App and JadooGO App.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 64 [*110]

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request purports to seek every document detailing any functionality of the JadooTV App or JadooGO App, regardless of any relevance to the present litigation. In addition. Jadoo Defendants object to the request as duplicative, unduly burdensome, expensive, and oppressive on the ground that it seeks documents currently in DISH's possession, custody or control, or that are obtainable from some other source that is more convenient, less burdensome or less expensive than Jadoo Defendants. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks confidential business information, trade secrets, or competitively or technically sensitive information. Jadoo Defendants further object to the term "actual or potential uses" as vague and ambiguous in the context of the request. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected [*111] from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants respond as follows: Jadoo Defendants will meet and confer with DISH to address how this Request may be limited and/or clarified to (i) seek documents that are relevant to the claims or defenses in this litigation and proportional to the needs of this case; and (ii) avoid placing an undue burden on Jadoo Defendants.

REQUEST NO. 65:

All documents, including emails, that JadooTV exchanged with each supplier or source from whom JadooTV acquired each iteration of the JadooTV App and JadooGO App.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 65

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request could be read as seeking, potentially, a large swath of documents regarding the JadooTV App and [*112] JadooGO App, regardless of any relevance to the litigation. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks confidential business information, trade secrets, or competitively or technically sensitive information. Jadoo Defendants further object to the term "source or supplier" as vague and ambiguous in the context of the request. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants respond as follows: Jadoo Defendants will meet and confer with DISH to address how this Request may be limited and/or clarified to (i) seek documents that are relevant to the claims or defenses in this litigation and proportional to the needs of this case; and (ii) avoid placing an undue burden on Jadoo Defendants.

REQUEST NO. 66:

Documents sufficient to identify each iteration of eMedia that JadooTV acquired or distributed at any time.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 66

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference [*113] each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request purports to seek information regarding eMedia, regardless of any relevance to the present litigation. In addition, Jadoo Defendants object to the request as duplicative, unduly burdensome, expensive, and oppressive on the ground that it seeks documents currently in DISH's possession, custody or control, or that are obtainable from some other source that is more convenient, less burdensome or less expensive than Jadoo Defendants. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request as overbroad and unduly burdensome to the extent that it seeks "[d]ocuments sufficient to identify each iteration of eMedia that JadooTV acquired or distributed" without any limit as to time period. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request because the term "acquired or distributed" is vague and ambiguous in the context of the request. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks confidential business [*114] information, trade secrets, or competitively or technically sensitive information.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants respond as follows: Jadoo Defendants will meet and confer with DISH to address how this Request may be limited and/or clarified to (i) seek documents that are relevant to the claims or defenses in this litigation and proportional to the needs of this case; and (ii) avoid placing an undue burden on Jadoo Defendants.

REQUEST NO. 73:

All documents concerning the design, structure, or operation of each iteration of eMedia at any time.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 73

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request purports to seek every document regarding the functionality of eMedia, regardless of any relevance to the present litigation. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request as overbroad and unduly burdensome to the extent that it seeks "[a]ll documents concerning [*124] the design, structure, or operation of each iteration of eMedia" without any limit as to time period. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks confidential business information, trade secrets, or competitively or technically sensitive information. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants respond as follows: Jadoo Defendants will meet and confer with DISH to address how this Request may be limited and/or clarified to (i) seek documents that are relevant to the claims or defenses in this litigation and proportional to the needs of this case; and (it) avoid placing an undue burden on Jadoo Defendants.

REQUEST NO. 74:

All documents providing information or instructions about eMedia at any time, including the creation of eMedia files.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 74

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants [*125] object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request could be read as seeking all documents containing any information about eMedia, regardless of any relevance to the present litigation. In addition, Jadoo Defendants object to the request as duplicative, unduly burdensome, expensive, and oppressive on the ground that it seeks documents currently in DISH's possession, custody or control, or that are obtainable from some other source that is more convenient, less burdensome or less expensive than Jadoo Defendants. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request as overbroad and unduly burdensome to the extent that it seeks "[a]ll documents providing information or instructions about eMedia" "including the creation of eMedia files" without any limit as to time period. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks confidential business information, trade secrets, or competitively or technically sensitive information. Jadoo Defendants further object to the term "information or instructions about [*126] eMedia" as vague and ambiguous in the context of the request. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants will produce non-privileged documents sufficient to describe the overall manner in which eMedia functions that are discovered after a reasonable search and diligent inquiry and that are within the permissible scope of discovery, to the extent any exist within their possession, custody or control, once a valid protective order has been entered by the Court.

REQUEST NO. 75:

All documents concerning software or firmware updates to eMedia or SASP at any time.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 75

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For [*127] example, the request purports to seek all documents regarding updates to eMedia, regardless of relevance to the present litigation. In addition, Jadoo Defendants object to the request as duplicative, unduly burdensome, expensive, and oppressive on the ground that it seeks documents currently in DISH's possession, custody or control, or that are obtainable from some other source that is more convenient, less burdensome or less expensive than Jadoo Defendants. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request as overbroad and unduly burdensome to the extent that it seeks "[a]ll documents concerning software or firmware updates to eMedia or SASP" without any limit as to time period. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks confidential business information, trade secrets, or competitively or technically sensitive information. Jadoo Defendants further object to the term "software or firmware updates to . . . SASP" as vague and ambiguous in the context of the request. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client [*128] privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants will produce non-privileged documents relating to software updates made by JadooTV to eMedia pertaining to making SASP available on the Jadoo4, Jadoo5, and Jadoo5S set top boxes that are discovered after a reasonable search and diligent inquiry and that are within the permissible scope of discovery, to the extent any exist within their possession, custody or control, once a valid protective order has been entered by the Court.

REQUEST NO. 76:

All documents concerning SASP at any time.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 76

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. In addition, Jadoo Defendants object to the request as duplicative, unduly burdensome, expensive, and oppressive on the ground that it seeks documents currently in DISH's possession, custody or control, or that are obtainable from some [*129] other source that is more convenient, less burdensome or less expensive than Jadoo Defendants. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request as overbroad and unduly burdensome to the extent that it seeks "[a]ll documents concerning SASP" without any limit as to time period. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections. Jadoo Defendants will produce non-privileged documents concerning SASP that are discovered after a reasonable search and diligent inquiry and that are within the permissible scope of discovery, to the extent any exist within their possession, custody or control, once a valid protective order has been entered by the Court.

REQUEST NO. 77:

All documents concerning making SASP available on the Jadoo Box or Jadoo Service at any time.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 77

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds [*130] that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. In addition, Jadoo Defendants object to the request as duplicative, unduly burdensome, expensive, and oppressive on the ground that it seeks documents currently in DISH's possession, custody or control, or that are obtainable from some other source that is more convenient, less burdensome or less expensive than Jadoo Defendants. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request as overbroad and unduly burdensome to the extent that it seeks "[a]ll documents concerning making SASP available on the Jadoo Box or Jadoo Service" without any limit as to time period. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request as duplicative of Request Nos. 18, 20, and 76 above. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections. Jadoo Defendants will produce non-privileged documents [*131] concerning making SASP available on the Jadoo4, Jadoo5, and Jadoo5S set top boxes that are discovered after a reasonable search and diligent inquiry and that are within the permissible scope of discovery, to the extent any exist within their possession, custody or control, once a valid protective order has been entered by the Court.

REQUEST NO. 78:

All documents concerning the design, structure, or operation of SASP at any time.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 78

Defendants further object to the request as duplicative of Request Nos. 75 and 76 above. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants will produce non-privileged documents concerning the design, structure, or operation of SASP that are discovered after a reasonable search and diligent inquiry and that are within the permissible scope of discovery, to the extent any exist within their possession, custody or control, once a valid protective order has been entered by the Court.

REQUEST NO. 79:

All documents providing information or instructions about adding SASP or Protected Channel VOD to the Jadoo Service or Jadoo Box at any time.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 79

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request [*133] on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. In addition, Jadoo Defendants object to the request as duplicative, unduly burdensome, expensive, and oppressive on the ground that it seeks documents currently in DISH's possession, custody or control, or that are obtainable from some other source that is more convenient, less burdensome or less expensive than Jadoo Defendants. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request as overbroad and unduly burdensome to the extent that it seeks "[a]ll documents providing information or instructions about adding SASP or Protected Channel VOD to the Jadoo Service or Jadoo Box" without any limit as to time period. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request as duplicative of Request Nos. 76-78 above. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, [*134] Jadoo Defendants will produce non-privileged documents providing instructions about adding SASP or Protected Channel VOD to Jadoo4, Jadoo5, and Jadoo5S set top boxes that are discovered after a reasonable search and diligent inquiry and that are within the permissible scope of discovery, to the extent any exist within their possession, custody or control, once a valid protective order has been entered by the Court.

REQUEST NO. 80:

All documents concerning the provision of information or instructions to customers, potential customers, and resellers about how to add channels to the Jadoo Service or Jadoo Box.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 80

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request purports to seek information relating to the addition of any channel to the Jadoo Service or Jadoo Box, regardless of any relevance to the present litigation. In addition, Jadoo Defendants object to the request as duplicative, unduly [*135] burdensome, expensive, and oppressive on the ground that it seeks documents currently in DISH's possession, custody or control, or that are obtainable from some other source that is more convenient, less burdensome or less expensive than Jadoo Defendants. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants respond as follows: Jadoo Defendants will meet and confer with DISH to address how this Request may be limited and/or clarified to (i) seek documents that are relevant to the claims or defenses in this litigation and proportional to the needs of this case; and (ii) avoid placing an undue burden on Jadoo Defendants.

REQUEST NO. 81:

All Jadoo customer service chat logs, recordings, and call notes concerning eMedia, Protected Channel VOD, SASP, or the Protected Channels.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 81

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants [*136] object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request purports to seek information regarding any contact between JadooTV and its customers regarding eMedia, regardless of any relevance to the present litigation. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants will produce non-privileged documents sufficient to describe customer service logs or communications concerning Protected Channels, Protected Channel VOD, or SASP that are discovered after a reasonable search and diligent inquiry and that are within the permissible scope of discovery, to the extent any exist within their possession, custody or control, once a valid protective order has been entered by the Court.

REQUEST NO. 82:

All documents concerning training and instructions [*137] provided to Jadoo technical support and customer service agents.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 82

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 100

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants will produce non-privileged documents responsive to this request that are discovered after a reasonable search and diligent inquiry and that are within the permissible scope of discovery, to the extent any exist within their possession, custody or control, once [*157] a valid protective order has been entered by the Court.

REQUEST NO. 101:

All documents that support your Thirteenth Affirmative Defense that "Plaintiffs claims are barred, in whole or in part, because the activities of Jadoo Defendants are a fair use of the alleged copyrighted works under Section 107 of the Copyright Act."

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 101

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants will produce non-privileged documents responsive to this request that are discovered after a reasonable search and diligent inquiry and that are within the permissible scope of discovery, to the extent any exist [*158] within their possession, custody or control, once a valid protective order has been entered by the Court.

REQUEST NO. 102:

All documents that support your Fourteenth Affirmative Defense that "Plaintiff's claims are barred, in whole or in part, on the grounds that Plaintiff misused its copyright in violation of antitrust law and public policy."

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 102

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants will produce non-privileged documents responsive to this request that are discovered after a reasonable search and diligent inquiry and that are within the permissible scope of discovery, [*159] to the extent any exist within their possession, custody or control, once a valid protective order has been entered by the Court.

REQUEST NO. 103:

All documents that support your Fifteenth Affirmative Defense that "[t]o the extent that Plaintiff's claims of copyright infringement are directed to acts occurring wholly outside the United States, those claims for relief are barred, in whole or in part, by the doctrine of territoriality."

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 103

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants will produce non-privileged documents responsive to this request that are discovered [*160] after a reasonable search and diligent inquiry and that are within the permissible scope of discovery, to the extent any exist within their possession, custody or control, once a valid protective order has been entered by the Court.

JADOO DEFENDANTS' RESPONSES AND OBJECTIONS TO PLAINTIFF DISH NETWORK L.L.C.'S SECOND SET OF REQUESTS FOR PRODUCTION TO DEFENDANTS JADOOTV, INC. AND SAJID SOHAIL (NOS. 104-113)

PROPOUNDING PARTY: PLAINTIFF DISH NETWORK L.L.C.

RESPONDING PARTY: DEFENDANTS JADOOTV, INC. AND SAJID SOHAIL

SET NUMBER: SET TWO (NOS. 104-113)

Pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 34, Defendants JadooTV, Inc. ("JadooTV") and Sajid Sohail ("Sohail") (collectively, "Jadoo Defendants"), hereby submit the following Responses and Objections to Plaintiff DISH Network, L.L.C.'s ("DISH") Second Set of Requests for Production to Defendants JadooTV. Inc. and Sajid Sohail (the "Requests") as follows:

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

This case is still in the early stages of discovery. Despite diligent efforts to respond to these Requests, Jadoo Defendants reserve [*161] the right to amend or supplement their objections and responses herein if necessary at a later date, and to use subsequently discovered documents and documents now known but whose relevance, significance, or applicability has not yet been ascertained. Furthermore. Jadoo Defendants' responses are made without in any way intending to waive, but, on the contrary, intending to preserve:

1. The right to raise all questions of authenticity, foundation, relevancy, materiality, privilege and admissibility as evidence for any purpose of the documents produced in response to DISH's Requests that may arise in any subsequent proceeding in, or the trial of, this or any other action;

2. The right to object to the use of the documents produced in response to DISH's Requests in any subsequent proceeding in, or the trial date of, this or any other action on any grounds;

3. The right to object to introduction into evidence of these responses; and

4. The right to object on any ground at any time to other discovery involving the subject matter thereof.

GENERAL OBJECTIONS

Jadoo Defendants incorporate the following General Objections into each and every objection and/or individualized response contained herein, [*162] and into each and every amendment, supplement or modification to these responses:

1. Jadoo Defendants object to the Requests to the extent that they purport to impose obligations beyond those set forth in the Local Rules of the United States District Court for the Central District of California and the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

2. Jadoo Defendants object to each Request and the Definitions and Instructions to the extent they purport to require the production of documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery because they are neither relevant to a claim or defense of a party nor proportional to the needs of the case, considering the importance of the issues at stake in the action, the amount in controversy, the parties' relative access to relevant information, the parties' resources, the importance of the discovery in resolving the issues, and whether the burden or expense of the proposed discovery outweighs its likely benefit.

3. Jadoo Defendants object to each Request and the Definitions and Instructions to the extent they purport to require the production of documents that are not in Jadoo Defendants' possession, custody, or control, and thereby seeks to expand obligations [*163] of Jadoo Defendants beyond those imposed by law.

4. Jadoo Defendants object to each Request and the Definitions and Instructions to the extent they seek unreasonably cumulative and duplicative documents for which the burden, expense, and intrusiveness of production outweighs the likelihood of further discovery of admissible evidence.

5. Jadoo Defendants object to each Request and the Definitions and Instructions to the extent they are vague and ambiguous and fail to describe the documents requested with reasonable particularity.

6. Jadoo Defendants object to each Request and the Definitions and Instructions as unduly burdensome, expensive, and oppressive to the extent they seek documents that are currently in DISH's possession, custody or control, including but not limited to documents that are publicly available or can be obtained from some other source that is more convenient, less burdensome or less expensive than Jadoo Defendants.

7. Jadoo Defendants object to each Request and the Definitions and Instructions to the extent they seek information protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, or similar [*164] privileges or protections. Jadoo Defendants hereby assert all such applicable privileges and protections. In the event that any privileged or protected document is inadvertently produced, such production shall not be deemed or construed to constitute a waiver of any privilege or right of Jadoo Defendants, who reserve their rights to demand that DISH return any such document and copies thereof and to prevent the use of such documents. Jadoo Defendants also object to each and every individual request for production to the extent that it seeks proprietary or confidential business or personal information or other sensitive information protected from disclosure by applicable authorities. Jadoo Defendants further object to each and every individual request for production to the extent that it seeks information or the production of documents that are within the scope of a confidentiality agreement, employment agreement, protective order or settlement agreement. Any production of information or documents subject to one or more of the aforementioned privileges or rights belonging to Jadoo Defendants should not be considered a waiver of such privileges or rights, which Jadoo Defendants reserve [*165] the right to exercise. And Jadoo Defendants will produce such information or document, if at all, only after entry of a suitable protective order.

8. Jadoo Defendants object to each Request and the Definitions and Instructions to the extent they seek information protected by rights of privacy under federal law.

9. Jadoo Defendants object to each Request and the Definitions and Instructions to the extent they seek trade secrets, confidential and/or proprietary information of Jadoo Defendants or any other third party. Jadoo Defendants further object to each and every Request to the extent that it seeks information falling within the scope of a confidentiality agreement, protective order or settlement agreement, or that otherwise requires the consent of any third party prior to production. No such information will be provided unless DISH secures the required consent from the appropriate third parties. In addition, no confidential, proprietary or trade secret information will be produced except pursuant to the terms of a protective order.

10. By submitting these objections, Jadoo Defendants do not in any way adopt the purported definitions of words and phrases contained in the Requests and [*166] Instructions. Jadoo Defendants object to those definitions to the extent that they are inconsistent with either (i) the definitions used by Jadoo Defendants or (ii) the ordinary and customary meaning of such words and phrases. Likewise, Jadoo Defendants object to the purported definitions in the Requests and Instructions to the extent that the definitions seek to impose any obligations or duties broader than, or inconsistent with, those contemplated by the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

11. Jadoo Defendants object to DISH's Definition of "JadooTV" to the extent that definition includes persons or entities other than Jadoo Defendants and those within their control. Jadoo Defendants will respond to a Request that uses that term only with respect to JadooTV, Inc. and Sajid Sohail, and JadooTV's United States employees.

12. Jadoo Defendants object to DISH's Definition of "Jadoo Box" to the extent that the definition includes Jadoo set top boxes other than the Jadoo4, Jadoo5, and Jadoo5S set top boxes as identified in DISH's Complaint. Jadoo Defendants will respond to a Request that uses that term only with respect to Jadoo4, Jadoo5, and Jadoo5S set top boxes.

13. Jadoo Defendants object [*167] to DISH's Definition of "Jadoo Service." Jadoo Defendants use the term "Jadoo Service," and will respond to a Request or other Definitions incorporating that term, as referring to only the JadooTV smart TV applications and the JadooGO mobile device applications.

14. Jadoo Defendants object to DISH's Definition of "SASP" as vague and ambiguous. Neither the Requests nor the cited paragraphs of DISH's complaint provide a definition of the term "SASP" or "South Asian Super Pack."

15. Jadoo Defendants object to Instruction No. 13 on the grounds that the specified period for the Requests is overbroad and unduly burdensome, and seeks information not relevant to the claim or defense of any party or not proportional to the needs of the case. For the purpose of responding to the Requests, unless otherwise specified in their responses and objections, Jadoo Defendants will respond for the time period of January 1, 2015 to the present.

16. Jadoo Defendants object to each and every request for production to the extent they seek the production of "all" documents, or similar phrases, on the ground that such requests for production are overbroad, unduly burdensome, oppressive and, consequently, call for [*168] production of documents and things not relevant to a claim or defense of a party or not proportional to the needs of the case, considering the importance of the issues at stake in the action, the amount in controversy, the parties' relative access to relevant information, the parties' resources, the importance of the discovery in resolving the issues, and whether the burden or expense of the proposed discovery outweighs its likely benefit.

17. Jadoo Defendants object to each and every request for production to the extent they seek the production of information or documents "concerning" a subject matter on the ground that such requests for production are overbroad, unduly burdensome, oppressive and, consequently, call for production of documents and things not relevant to a claim or defense of a party or not proportional to the needs of the case, considering the importance of the issues at stake in the action, the amount in controversy, the parties' relative access to relevant information, the parties' resources, the importance of the discovery in resolving the issues, and whether the burden or expense of the proposed discovery outweighs its likely benefit.

18. Jadoo Defendants object [*169] to each and every request for production to the extent that they seek the production of documents or things without any limitation as to time period and are therefore overbroad, unduly burdensome, and, consequently, call for the production of documents and things not proportional to the needs of the case, considering the importance of the issues at stake in the action, the amount in controversy, the parties' relative access to relevant information, the parties' resources, the importance of the discovery in resolving the issues, and whether the burden or expense of the proposed discovery outweighs its likely benefit.

19. As used in each objection and response made herein. "and" or "or" shall be construed both conjunctively and disjunctively, and each will include the other whenever such a dual construction would serve to bring within a category documents or information that would not otherwise be within its scope; "each" means "each and every."

20. As used in each objection and response made herein, "produce" shall mean either to make available for inspection and copying or to produce copies.

21. Any objection Jadoo Defendants make to any particular Request in no way limits the application [*170] of the foregoing objections to each Request. Jadoo Defendants expressly assert the objections set forth above with respect to each Request that follows.

SPECIFIC OBJECTIONS AND RESPONSES TO REOUESTS FOR PRODUCTION

(SET TWO) REOUEST NO. 104:

Documents sufficient to identify all monetary payments and any other benefits that JadooTV provided to IDC Resources Pvt Ltd., Faisal Aftab, and Awais Malik from January 2014 to the present.

RESPONSE TO REOUEST NO. 104:

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request purports to seek information about every payment or benefit ever provided to IDC Resources Pvt Ltd., Faisal Aftab, and Awais Malik, regardless of any relevance to the present litigation. Jadoo Defendants further object to this request as vague and ambiguous with respect to the term "any other benefits."

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants respond as follows: Jadoo Defendants [*171] will meet and confer with DISH to address how this Request may be limited and/or clarified to (i) seek documents that are reievant to the claims or defenses in this litigation and proportional to the needs of this case; and (ii) avoid placing an undue burden on Jadoo Defendants.

REQUEST NO. 105:

All version of the software or "patch" designed or developed by JadooTV to block access to Protected Channels in SASP or eMedia VOD.

RESPONSE TO REOUEST NO. 105:

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request purports to seek production of all versions of the software or "patch" designed or developed by JadooTV, despite the fact that only the final version of the software or "patch" is even arguably relevant. Jadoo Defendants further object to the phrase "Protected Channels in SASP or eMedia VOD" as unclear, vague, and ambiguous. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected [*172] from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine. the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections. Jadoo Defendants will produce a non-privileged, final version of the software or "patch" designed or developed by JadooTV to block access to content added by third parties to the general purpose eMedia external media player once a source code addendum to the Protective Order has been entered by the Court.

REQUEST NO. 106:

All documents concerning Peter May, pmay360, pmay360@gmail.com, or rayred@gmail.com.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 106:

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request purports to seek production of all documents concerning an individual named "Peter May." and a series of user names and email accounts, but provides no context as to their connection or relevance [*173] to the present litigation. Without additional context, Jadoo Defendants are unable to determine how this request is relevant, whether the request is overly burdensome, whether the request is proportional to the needs of the case, what relevant documents may exist, and if they do exist, who might have custody or control of such documents. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections. Jadoo Defendants respond as follows: Jadoo Defendants will meet and confer with DISH to address how this Request may be limited and/or clarified to (i) seek documents that are relevant to the claims or defenses in this litigation and proportional to the needs of this case; and (ii) avoid placing an undue burden on Jadoo Defendants.

REQUEST NO. 107:

All documents concerning ali85one or ali85one@gmail.com.

RESFONSE TO REQUEST NO. 107:

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants [*174] object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request purports to seek production of all documents concerning "ali85one or ali85one@gmail.com," but provides no context as to their connection or relevance to the present litigation. Without additional context, Jadoo Defendants are unable to determine how this request is relevant, whether the request is overly burdensome, whether the request is proportional to the needs of the case, what relevant documents may exist, and if they do exist, who might have custody or control of such documents. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants respond as follows: Jadoo Defendants will meet and confer with DISH to address how this Request may be limited and/or clarified to (i) seek [*175] documents that are relevant to the claims or defenses in this litigation and proportional to the needs of this case; and (ii) avoid placing an undue burden on Jadoo Defendants.

REQUEST NO. 108:

All documents concerning betacdnzone.com, tlismoo.com, orseethen.net.

RESFONSE TO REQUEST NO. 108:

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request purports to seek production of all documents concerning "betacdnzone.com, tlismoo.com, or seethen.net," but provides no context as to their connection or relevance to the present litigation. Without additional context, Jadoo Defendants are unable to determine how this request is relevant, whether the request is overly burdensome, whether the request is proportional to the needs of the case, what relevant documents may exist, and if they do exist, who might have custody or control of such documents. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents [*176] protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protection.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants respond as follows: Jadoo Defendants will meet and confer with DISH to address how this Request may be limited and/or clarified to (i) seek documents that are reievant to the claims or defenses in this litigation and proportional to the needs of this case; and (ii) avoid placing an undue burden on Jadoo Defendants.

REQUEST NO. 109:

All documents concerning Robert Endrison, erobert8200@gmail.com, or robert@10pennycdn.net.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 109:

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request purports to seek production of all documents concerning an individual named "Robert Endrison" and a series of email accounts, but provides no context as to [*177] their connection or relevance to the present litigation. Without additional context, Jadoo Defendants are unable to determine how this request is reievant, whether the request is overly burdensome, whether the request is proportional to the needs of the case, what relevant documents may exist, and if they do exist, who might have custody or control of such documents. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disciosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants respond as follows: Jadoo Defendants will meet and confer with DISH to address how this Request may be limited and/or clarified to (i) seek documents that are relevant to the claims or defenses in this litigation and proportional to the needs of this case; and (ii) avoid placing an undue burden on Jadoo Defendants.

REQUEST NO. 110:

All documents concerning CDN.tm, Rafa Abdul, and DV3 Electronics Inc.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 110:

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General [*178] Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request purports to seek production of all documents concerning DV3 Electronics Inc., but this is a Canadian electronics store. It is not clear why any documents relating to DV3 Electronics Inc. would be relevant to this litigation, let alone all documents. As another example, the request purports to seek production of all documents concerning "CDN.tm [and] Rafa Abdul" but provides no context as to their connection or relevance to the present litigation. Without additional context, Jadoo Defendants are unable to determine how this request is relevant, whether the request is overly burdensome, whether the request is proportional to the needs of the case, what relevant documents may exist, and if they do exist, who might have custody or control of such documents. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disciosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, [*179] the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants respond as follows: Jadoo Defendants will meet and confer with DISH to address how this Request may be limited and/or clarified to (i) seek documents that are relevant to the claims or defenses in this litigation and proportional to the needs of this case; and (ii) avoid placing an undue burden on Jadoo Defendants.

REQUEST NO. 111:

Documents sufficient to identify all current and former addresses and phone numbers of Haseeb Shah.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 111:

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissibie discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request purports to seek information about every past address and phone number Mr. Shah has ever used, regardless of any relevance to the present litigation. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected [*180] from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants will produce non-privileged documents sufficient to identify the current address and phone number of Haseeb Shah.

REQUEST NO. 112:

Documents sufficient to identify all email addresses of Haseeb Shah.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 112:

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissibie discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request purports to seek information about every email address Mr. Shah has ever used, regardiess of any relevance to the present litigation. Jadoo Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges [*181] or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants will produce non-privileged documents sufficient to identify each email address that Haseeb Shah has used to conduct business pertaining to distribution of Jadoo4, Jadoo5, and Jadoo5S set top boxes in the United States that are discovered after a reasonable search and diligent inquiry and that are within the permissible scope of discovery, to the extent any exist within their possession, custody or control.

REQUEST NO. 113:

Documents sufficient to identify all JadooTV financial accounts in which Haseeb Shah has been a user or held any privileges on the account.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 113:

Jadoo Defendants incorporate by reference each of the General Objections set forth above. Jadoo Defendants object to the request on the grounds that it seeks documents beyond the scope of permissible discovery, not relevant to any party's claims or defenses, and not proportional to the needs of the case. For example, the request purports to seek information about all JadooTV financial accounts in which Haseeb Shah has been a user or held any privileges on the account, regardless of any relevance to the present litigation. [*182] Whether or not Haseeb Shah has been "a user or held any privileges" on a JadooTV financial account is irrelevant to the claims and defenses in the litigation. Jadoo Defendants further object to the terms "user" and "privileges" as vague and ambiguous in the context of the request. Defendants further object to the request to the extent it seeks documents protected from disclosure by the attorney-client privilege, the attorney work product doctrine, the accountant-client privilege, common-interest privilege, or similar privileges or protections.

Subject to and without waiving any of their objections, Jadoo Defendants respond as follows: Jadoo Defendants will meet and confer with DISH to address how this Request may be limited and/or clarified to (i) seek documents that are relevant to the claims or defenses in this litigation and proportional to the needs of this case; and (ii) avoid placing an undue burden on Jadoo Defendants.

ORDER GRANTING IN PART, AND DEYING IN PART, YARDI'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

Before the court is Yardi's Motion for Summary Judgment, (ECF No. 527). At the time Yardi originally filed its Motion, it moved for summary adjudication of (I) Entrata's business tort claims—claims 1, 2, 3, and 4; (II) Entrata's contract claims—claims 8 and 9; and (III) Entrata's antitrust claims—claims 5, 6, and 7. Entrata has since dismissed its seventh claim, (ECF No. 515) and its third, fourth, and eighth claims. (ECF No. 833.) The remaining claims before the court are therefore Entrata's first, second, fifth, sixth, and ninth claims. As explained below, the court GRANTS Yardi's Motion for Summary Adjudication of Entrata's first and ninth claims but DENIES Yardi's Motion for Summary Adjudication of Entrata's second, fifth, and sixth claims.

Facts

In support of its Motion for Summary Judgment, Yardi included sixty exhibits spanning approximately 1,900 pages. In support of its Opposition, Entrata included 264 exhibits spanning approximately 5,400 [*4] pages. The facts at issue are largely in dispute. (See ECF No. 596 at 9 ("Entrata disputes all but the following 'facts' alleged in Yardi's Motion: Nos. 2,4,10, 17, 22, 24, 25, 27 and 33."); see also (ECF No. 629 at 7 ("Yardi disputes as irrelevant, immaterial, misleading, and/or lacking in foundation all but the following 'facts' alleged in Entrata's Opposition: Nos. 31, 33, 39, 61, 63.").) Given the case's extensive factual background, the court discusses only those facts necessary for the court's resolution of Yardi's Summary Judgment Motion.

Summary Judgment Standard

Yardi, as the movant, "bears the initial burden of making a prima facie demonstration of the absence of a genuine issue of material fact and entitlement to judgment as a matter of law." Libertarian Party of N.M. v. Herrera, 506 F.3d 1303, 1309 (10th Cir. 2007) (citing Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L.Ed.2d 265 (1986)). Because Yardi does not bear the burden of persuasion at trial, it may satisfy this burden "by pointing out to the court a lack of evidence on an essential element of" Entrata's claims. Id. (citing Celotex, 477 U.S. at 325, 106 S. Ct. 2548).

If Yardi meets "this initial burden, the burden then shifts to" Entrata "to set forth specific facts from which a rational trier of fact could find for the nonmovant." Id. (quotations omitted) (citing, among others, Celotex, 477 U.S. at 324, 106 S. Ct. 2548). To satisfy [*5] this burden, Entrata must identify facts "by reference to affidavits, deposition transcripts, or specific exhibits incorporated therein." Id. (citation omitted). These facts "must establish, at a minimum, an inference of the presence of each element essential to the case." Bausman v. Interstate Brands Corp., 252 F.3d 1111, 1115 (10th Cir. 2001); see also Celotex, 477 U.S. at 323, 106 S. Ct. 2548 (explaining that a movant is entitled to summary judgment when "the nonmoving party has failed to make a sufficient showing on an essential element of her case with respect to which she has the burden of proof").

Analysis

Yardi moves for summary adjudication of (I) Entrata's remaining business tort claims—claims 1 and 2; (II) Entrata's remaining contract claim—claim 9; and (III) Entrata's remaining antitrust claims—claims 5 and 6.

I. Business Tort Claims

Entrata's remaining tort claims against Yardi are for: (A) Injurious Falsehoods (see First Amended Complaint (FAC) ¶ 109, ECF No. 55 at 47) and (B) False Advertising (see FAC ¶ 117, ECF No. 55 at 48). For these tort claims, Entrata argues that Yardi made public announcements about Entrata that Yardi knew were false.[1] Yardi argues that these tort claims fail because "[e]ven assuming Yardi made false statements," "Entrata cannot show that these statements caused [*6] Entrata any economic loss." (ECF No. 528 at 35.)

A. Injurious Falsehoods

Entrata alleges that "Yardi's assertions in the Yardi January 14 Announcement that Entrata engages in SQL injection and arbitrary alteration of Yardi .dll files in the Yardi Voyager code are false." (FAC ¶ 110, ECF No. 55 at 47.) Entrata argues that "the injurious falsehoods described herein have resulted in, among other things: (a) Entrata losing customers; (b) Entrata not gaining prospective customers who otherwise would have engaged with Entrata, but for the injurious falsehoods disseminated by Yardi described herein; and (c) Entrata's current customers reducing or discontinuing their business with Entrata." (FAC ¶ 113, ECF No. 55 at 47.)

As it does with the other tort claim, Yardi argues that Entrata's Injurious Falsehood claim fails because "Entrata cannot show that [Yardi's] statements caused Entrata any economic loss." (See ECF No. 528 at 35.) "To establish a claim for injurious falsehood" under Utah law, a "plaintiff 'must prove falsity of the statements made, malice, and special damages.'" *IHC Health Servs. Inc. v. ELAP Servs., LLC, No. 217CV01245JNPEJF, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 168459, 2018 WL 4688358, at 7 (D. Utah Sept. 28, 2018 [*7]) (bold added) (quoting Direct Imp. Buyers Ass'n v. KSL, Inc., 538 P.2d 1040, 1042 (Utah 1975), overruled on other grounds in later appeal sub nom. Direct Import Buyers Ass'n v. KSL, Inc., 572 P.2d 692 (Utah 1977)). "The damages must specifically relate to the economic harm caused by the disparagement of title, product, or business." Id. (emphasis added). The briefing on this cause of action was limited and largely inadequate on both sides; nevertheless, the court agrees with Yardi that Entrata points to no evidence that the damages Entrata complains of—losing customers, not gaining customers, and customers discontinuing their business with Entrata—were caused by the disparaging statements regarding SQL injection. The court GRANTS Yardi's Motion for Summary Adjudication of Entrata's first claim for Injurious Falsehoods.

B. False Advertising 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a)(1)(B)

Entrata alleges that Yardi's "January 14 Announcement and Yardi's other false and misleading communications to the industry constitute commercial speech, in that they were made by Yardi in connection with its offering a variety of software products that compete with those offered by Entrata." (FAC ¶ 119, ECF No. 55 at 48-49.) Entrata further alleges that "[a]s a direct and proximate result of Yardi's . . . misleading communications to the industry, Entrata has [*8] suffered injury and damages." (FAC ¶ 119, ECF No. 55 at 49.) Entrata argues that Yardi's communications "constitute actionable false advertising under 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a)(1)(B) . . . ." (FAC ¶ 120, ECF No. 55 at 49.) Entrata further argues that it "is entitled to injunctive and monetary relief . . . pursuant to, at the least, sections 34, 35, and 43 of the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1116, 1117, and 1125." (FAC ¶ 123, ECF No. 55 at 50.)

"In order to succeed on its false advertising claim under 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a)(1)(B), [Entrata] must show:"

> (1) defendant made false or misleading representations of fact in connection with the commercial or promotion of its product or services;
> (2) in commerce;

---

[1] (FAC ¶ 110, ECF No. 55 at 47 ("Yardi's assertions in the Yardi January 14 Announcement that Entrata engages in SQL injection and arbitrary alteration of Yardi .dll files in the Yardi Voyager code are false." (bold added).); (FAC ¶ 118, ECF No. 55 at 48 ("Yardi, in interstate commerce and in commercial promotion of its Voyager and Plug-In Products, has made materially false or misleading representations of fact, including but not limited to those found in the Yardi January 14 Announcement accusing Entrata of engaging in SQL injection and alteration of .dll files in the Voyager code, as well as stating that newer versions of the Voyager application do not integrate with Entrata's Point Solutions Products." (bold added).)

(3) the misrepresentations are material, i.e., likely to influence the purchasing decision;

(4) that are either likely to cause confusion or mistake as to (a) the origin, association or approval of the product or services with or by another; or (b) the characteristics of the goods or services; and

(5) injured plaintiff.

Electrology Lab., Inc. v. Kunze, 169 F. Supp. 3d 1119, 1157 (D. Colo. 2016). Yardi argues that Entrata cannot satisfy the last element because it cannot show economic loss resulting from Yardi's false advertising. (See ECF No. 528 at 36.)

In support of its argument, Yardi cites an Eighth Circuit case for the proposition that "[a] 'heightened level of [*9] proof of causation and specific injury' is required when the plaintiff is seeking money damages" under the Lanham Act.[2] (ECF No. 528 at 36 (quoting Porous Media Corp. v. Pall Corp., 110 F.3d 1329, 1335-36 (8th Cir. 1997).) The language Yardi quotes regarding the "heightened level of proof of injury" relates to "suit[s] for money damages where a defendant misrepresents its own product . . . ." Porous, 110 F.3d at 1336 (emphasis added).

But Entrata does not argue that Yardi misrepresented one of Yardi's own products. Rather, Entrata argues that Yardi sent out a notice to mutual Entrata and Yardi customers on January 14, 2015, that misrepresented Entrata's products. Entrata argues that Yardi falsely alleged that Entrata's custom interface uses SQL injection. (See ECF No. 596 at 18.[3]) Courts have made clear that a plaintiff's burden when a defendant misrepresents its own products is different than when a defendant misrepresents a competitor's products. See Porous, 110 F.3d at 1334 ("In Harper House, the defendant made false statements about its own product with no reference to another's product. Under the circumstances, the court required specific proof of causation and damage. This is in contrast to a case of comparative advertising where the plaintiff's product is specifically targeted."). "[I]n cases [*10] where there is no comparative advertising involved, the plaintiff must shoulder the full burden of proof of both cause in fact and injury." Id. But "in comparative advertising cases where money damages are sought and where there exists proof of willful deception," a plaintiff is entitled to a "presumption of causation and harm to the plaintiff." See id. at 1336.

The Tenth Circuit has discussed the "presumption of causation and injury" "that allows a factfinder to presume injury caused by representations which are literally false or demonstratively deceptive." Hutchinson v. Pfeil, 211 F.3d 515, 522 (10th Cir. 2000). "[T]his presumption is . . . invoked primarily to resolve the merits of Lanham Act claims—to establish injury as an essential element of the claim . . . ." Id. The Tenth Circuit has provided that "the presumption is properly limited to circumstances in which injury would indeed likely flow from the defendant's objectionable statements, i.e., when the defendant has explicitly compared its product to the plaintiff's or the plaintiff is an obvious competitor with respect to the misrepresented product." Id.

Viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to Entrata, the court finds that there are sufficient facts to allow a factfinder to presume [*11] Entrata's injury. Yardi's own witness admitted that the representation that "Entrata's customer interface is known to use SQL injection" "was a wording choice . . . that was incorrect." (See ECF No. 597-4 at 129, Schindelbeck 131: 2-3.) This is sufficient evidence for a factfinder to determine that Yardi's statement was false.

Yardi's (possibly) false statement was that Entrata's "custom interface" "is known to use SQL injection." (ECF No. 597-13 at 9.) Entrata has presented evidence that "SQL injection" "is a term used typically by hackers and attackers

---

[2] Yardi does not address the fact that Entrata, in its First Amended Complaint, seeks injunctive relief under the Lanham Act. (See FAC ¶ 123, ECF No. 55 at 50.) Yardi's own cited authority provides that "cases involving injunctive relief and those seeking monetary damages under the Lanham Act have different standards of proof." Porous Media Corp., 110 F.3d at 1335. Because Yardi does not seek summary adjudication of Entrata's request for injunctive relief, the court only focuses on Yardi's arguments related to monetary damages.

[3] Entrata agues: "Yardi's January 2015 Notice claimed that Entrata's custom interface 'is known to use SQL injection and to make .dll modifications without notice.' This was untrue." (ECF No. 596 at 18) (citations omitted).)

to attack a system. It is a technique used to attack a system intentionally. So it does have negative connotations to the public, for certain." (ECF No. 597-14 at 247.) Yardi's announcement to mutual customers was that Yardi's "standard interface application" "does not allow SQL injection . . . ." (ECF No. 597-13 at 9.) In contrast, as discussed above, Yardi's announcement made clear that Entrata "custom interface" applications were "known to use SQL injection." (ECF No. 597-13 at 9.) Yardi's announcement associated Entrata's custom interfaces with illegal hacking while simultaneously making clear that Yardi's standard interface did [*12] not suffer from that vulnerability. In short, Yardi made an objectionable statement that compared its standard interface to Entrata's custom interface. A reasonable factfinder could therefore apply the presumption of causation and injury. With the presumption in place, Entrata has established its entitlement to damages at this stage of the proceedings.

Of course, at trial, Yardi can overcome the presumption "by proof that customers and/or prospective customers were not deceived" by the statements related to SQL injection "and/or that [Entrata] has not suffered any damages as a result of" Yardi's statements. Porous, 110 F.3d at 1333. Moreover, even if Entrata establishes its claim at trial, it will "still [bear] the burden of proving an evidentiary basis to justify any monetary recovery." Id. at 1336.

The court DENIES Yardi's Motion for Summary Adjudication of Entrata's second claim.

II. Contract Claim

Entrata brings one remaining contract claim against Yardi for Breach of Express Contract—2006 NDA (See FAC ¶ 172, ECF No. 55 at 60.)

A. Breach of Express Contract

In its ninth claim, Entrata alleges that Yardi breached a 2006 non-disclosure agreement (NDA) when it "modified, reverse engineered, duplicated, simulated, decompiled, [*13] [and] created derivative works from, or disassembled one or more of Entrata's software programs without Entrata's prior written consent . . . ." (FAC ¶ 175, ECF No. 55 at 60.) Entrata argues that Yardi breached the NDA in two ways. (See FAC ¶¶ 176-177, ECF No. 55 at 60.) First, Entrata argues that Yardi's CEO in 2009 "instruct[ed] his software developers to decompile the Entrata custom integration to obtain its source code . . . ." (FAC ¶ 176, ECF No. 55 at 60.) Second, Entrata argues that "Yardi purposefully" modified, removed, renamed, or disabled "the diagnostics.asmx file located within Entrata's custom interface files" in 2015. (FAC ¶ 177, ECF No. 55 at 60.)

The NDA provided that it "shall be construed and enforced in accordance with the laws of the State of California." (ECF No. 597-10 at 303.) In this case, there is complete diversity of citizenship. (See FAC ¶¶ 1-2, ECF No. 55 at 2.) "A federal court sitting in diversity applies the . . . choice of law rules . . . of the forum state." Barrett v. Tallon, 30 F.3d 1296, 1300 (10th Cir.1994). The forum state is Utah. "Under Utah's choice of law rules, a contractual provision selecting a particular state's law will be upheld." Wakefield Kennedy, LLC v. State Capital Holdings, LLC, 614 F. App'x 929, 933 (10th Cir. 2015) (citing Jacobsen Constr. Co. v. Teton Builders, 2005 UT 4, 106 P.3d 719, 723 (Utah 2005)). California law governs Entrata's breach of express [*14] contract claim.

In California, "the elements of a cause of action for breach of contract are (1) the existence of the contract, (2) plaintiff's performance or excuse for nonperformance, (3) defendant's breach, and (4) the resulting damages to the plaintiff." Oasis W. Realty, LLC v. Goldman, 51 Cal. 4th 811, 821, 124 Cal. Rptr. 3d 256, 250 P.3d 1115, 1121 (2011). Yardi argues that Entrata is unable to satisfy the last element because Entrata "fails to show any damage resulting from [Yardi's] alleged breach." (ECF No. 528 at 46.)

Yardi argues that "Entrata provides no evidence that the 2009 decompilation or 2015 Quarantine caused Entrata any harm." (ECF No. 528 at 46.) With respect to the 2009 decompilation, Yardi argues that "it is undisputed that Entrata voluntarily allowed Yardi to review the Custom interface source code" in 2007, and "it is also undisputed that decompilation reveals no more information about source code than does direct source code review itself." (ECF No. 528 at 46.) Yardi further argues that Entrata has offered "no evidence that the specific version that Yardi decompiled" in 2009 had, "in fact, been upgraded or otherwise changed since 2007." (ECF No. 528 at 46 n. 154.)

In response, Entrata argues that its harm from the 2015 Quarantine is the same harm that it described [*15] with respect to its tort damage. (ECF No. 596 at 45.) The court agrees with Yardi that Entrata's conclusory response on this issue is insufficient to survive summary judgment. Regarding the 2009 decompilation, Entrata relies on two cases—Artifex Software, Inc. v. Hancom, Inc., No. 16-CV-06982-JSC, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 147637, 2017 WL 4005508 (N.D. Cal. Sept. 12, 2017) and Foster Poultry Farms, Inc. v. SunTrust Bank, 377 F. App'x 665 (9th Cir. 2010).

Entrata cites Foster Poultry for the proposition that "a violation of a confidentiality obligation can be harmful in and of itself, which is a fact in dispute for the jury." (ECF No. 596 at 45.) But in Foster Poultry, the defendant "misused" the plaintiff's "information for its own profit." Foster Poultry, 377 F. App'x at 669 (emphasis in original). Moreover, the "gains from the breach" of the confidentiality agreement were "specifically quantifiable." Id. at 668. It was for this reason that the Ninth Circuit held that "under California law, a defendant's unjust enrichment can satisfy the 'damages' element of a breach of contract claim, such that disgorgement is a proper remedy." Id. at 669. But Entrata has pointed to no specific evidence that Yardi gained an unfair profit from its breach. Entrata's reliance on Foster Poultry is therefore misplaced.

Entrata also cites to Artifex in support of its argument that "Yardi gained valuable, proprietary [*16] information about Entrata's superior technology, which has harmed Entrata and precludes summary judgment." (ECF No. 596 at 45.) But in Artifex, the court held that the defendant "failed to establish as a matter of law that unjust enrichment or disgorgement [were] not available as a measure of Plaintiff's damages" because in that case "a party obtained a benefit they would not have otherwise obtained and profited from that benefit without providing a corresponding benefit to the other party." *Artifex, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 147637, 2017 WL 4005508, at 4 (emphasis added).

Unlike in Artifex and Foster Poultry, Entrata has pointed to no evidence that Yardi profited from its breach. Based on the arguments made, the court holds that Yardi is entitled to summary judgment on Entrata's direct breach of contract claim. Yardi's Motion for Summary Adjudication of Entrata's ninth claim is GRANTED.

III. Antitrust Claims

Entrata's fifth and sixth claims allege violations of Section 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2. (See FAC ¶ 143, ECF No. 55 at 54; FAC ¶ 151; ECF No. 55 at 56.) Section 2 of the Sherman Act prohibits monopolization or attempted monopolization of "any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations." 15 U.S.C. § 2. "Illegal monopolization under [*17] § 2 of the Sherman Act has two distinct elements: '(1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident.'" SOLIDFX, LLC v. Jeppesen Sanderson, Inc., 841 F.3d 827, 841 (10th Cir. 2016) (citation omitted). "'A refusal to deal may be one of the mechanisms by which a monopolist maintains its power.'" Id. (citation omitted). Entrata brings its antitrust claims under the refusal to deal doctrine.

To invoke the refusal to deal doctrine, the Supreme Court and the Tenth Circuit have explained that "at least two features" "must be present." Novell, Inc. v. Microsoft Corp., 731 F.3d 1064, 1074 (10th Cir. 2013). First, "there must be a preexisting voluntary and presumably profitable course of dealing between the monopolist and rival." Id. Second, "the monopolist's discontinuation of the preexisting course of dealing must suggest a willingness to forsake shortterm profits to achieve an anti-competitive end." Id. at 1075 (internal quotation marks omitted) (citations omitted). That is, "the monopolist's conduct must be irrational but for its anticompetitive effect." Id.

Yardi makes several arguments in support of its position for summary adjudication of Entrata's antitrust [*18] claims. The court addresses each in turn.

A. Entrata's Antitrust Claims Are Not Foreclosed by Tenth Circuit Precedent

Yardi argues that two Tenth Circuit cases require summary judgment—Novell and SOLIDFX. (See ECF No. 629 at 8 ("Novell Requires Summary Judgment."); see also ECF No. 629 at 17 ("Jeppesen Requires Summary Judgment.").)

Preexisting Course of Dealing

Yardi argues that Entrata cannot satisfy the first feature of a refusal to deal claim—a preexisting voluntary and profitable course of dealing. (See ECF No. 629 at 11.) Yardi argues that Entrata changed the preexisting course of dealing when "it introduced Entrata Core to compete head-to-head with Voyager." (See ECF No. 629 at 12.) But on this point, Entrata has pointed to ample evidence of a preexisting, profitable course of dealing and provides evidence that Yardi unilaterally ended the relationship. (See e.g., ECF No. 597-16 at 40.) Entrata's evidence creates a dispute that precludes summary judgment.

Some Evidence that Yardi Was Willing to Sacrifice Short-Term Profits

Next, Yardi argues that "there is no evidence that Yardi gave up short-term profits." (ECF No. 629 at 12.) In Novell, the plaintiff "presented no evidence from [*19] which a reasonable jury could infer that Microsoft's discontinuation of [a prior] arrangement suggested a willingness to sacrifice short-term profits . . . ." Novell, 731 F.3d at 1076 (bold added). In Novell, the cotemporaneous evidence presented demonstrated that Bill Gates' decision was motivated by a desire to increase Microsoft's profits—and did not "suggest Microsoft intended to forgo profits." Id. at 1078; see also id. at 1076 ("[I]t's not clear Microsoft lost or expected to lose revenues in the short term." (bold added)). Novell does not require summary judgment on this issue because—viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to Entrata, as this court must—Entrata has presented at least some contemporaneous evidence that Yardi was willing "to forsake short-term profits to achieve an anti-competitive end." Novell, 731 F.3d at 1075. For example, Entrata has provided evidence that Yardi's CEO was willing to lose 100 customers to "cut off" Entrata's "custom integration." (ECF No. 597-8 at 76.[4]) And Entrata has pointed to evidence that Yardi offered substantial discounts to mutual Entrata/Yardi customers to persuade them to remain with Yardi after Yardi cutoff Entrata. Because Entrata has provided some evidence of Yardi's willingness to sacrifice [*20] short-term profits, the factfinders will have to weigh Yardi's competing evidence and decide whether Yardi's decision was motivated by a desire to increase its profits.

Some Evidence that Yardi's Conduct Was Irrational

Next, Yardi argues that "there is no evidence that Yardi acted irrationally." (ECF No. 629 at 16.) In addition to a willingness to give up short-term profits, Novell "require[s] a showing that the monopolist's refusal to deal was part of a larger anticompetitive enterprise, such as . . . seeking to drive a rival from the market or discipline it for daring to compete on price." Novell, 731 F.3d at 1075. "Put simply, the monopolist's conduct must be irrational but for its anticompetitive effect." Id. at 1075.

Yardi argues that "[e]ven if Yardi accepted that it would lose profits, Yardi still had multiple rational justifications to end its relationship with Entrata—reasons which . . . support summary judgment." (ECF No. 629 at 16.) A refusal to deal with a competitor does not violate Section 2 if "valid business reasons exist for that refusal." Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 597, 105 S. Ct. 2847, 2854, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467 (1985). Yardi argues that it "need only have a single valid business reason to defeat Entrata's claims." (ECF No. 629 at 16.)

Yardi's argument presupposes that the reasons it now [*21] offers for refusing to deal with Entrata were valid. But Aspen makes clear that that is a question for the jury to decide—not the court—so long as there is some evidence in the record that could support a finding that Yardi's proffered business reasons for its refusal to deal with Entrata were invalid. See Aspen, 472 U.S. at 604-05 ("Since the jury was unambiguously instructed that Ski Co.'s refusal to deal with Highlands 'does not violate Section 2 if valid business reasons exist for that refusal,' we must assume that

[4] Entrata has presented evidence that Yardi's CEO made this statement to a (previously) mutual Entrata/Yardi customer shortly after Yardi's November 2015 announcement that it would no longer host custom interfaces. (See ECF No. 597-8 at 72-73.)

the jury concluded that there were no valid business reasons for the refusal. The question then is whether that conclusion finds support in the record."). The court cannot at this time hold, as a matter of law, that Yardi's justifications are valid.[5]

Factual Disputes Preclude Yardi's Invocation of SOLIDFX

In its Motion for Summary Judgment, Yardi argued that "[i]t is undisputed that, at the time Yardi made its decision to no longer work with Entrata," it "believed that Entrata had violated Yardi's intellectual property rights . . . ." (ECF No. 528 at 23.) Yardi argues that [*22] its "decision to discontinue Entrata's access to its intellectual property is shielded from antitrust liability" because that decision is a presumptively valid business justification that Entrata cannot rebut. (See ECF No. 528 at 23-24.)

Yardi relies on SOLIDFX, LLC v. Jeppesen Sanderson, Inc., 841 F.3d 827 (10th Cir. 2016) in support of its argument. In SOLIDFX, the Tenth Circuit referenced decisions from the First and Federal Circuits stating that a company's "unilateral refusal to sell or license copyrighted expression" to a competitor triggers a "presumptively rational business justification for a unilateral refusal to deal." See SOLIDFX, 841 F.3d at 841-42. Although the Tenth Circuit stated that it agreed with that approach, it was not required to resolve what facts would be necessary to rebut the presumption because "SOLIDFX did not present any rebuttal evidence to prove [the defendant] acted solely with an anticompetitive motivation." Id. at 843. Thus, the metes and bounds of what evidence is required to rebut any presumption remains to be resolved in an appropriate case presenting that factual issue.

In SOLIDFX, it was undisputed that the antitrust plaintiff required access to the antitrust defendant's copyrighted toolkits in order to develop an Ipad app that would allow the antitrust [*23] plaintiff to develop software that would allow end users to display the defendant's copyrighted terminal charts. See SolidFX, LLC v. Jeppesen Sanderson, Inc., 935 F. Supp. 2d 1069, 1082 (D. Colo. 2013) ("it is undisputed that, in order to develop its app, Plaintiff needs access to Defendant's JIT, for which Defendant also holds a copyright.").[6] After previously granting the plaintiff

[5] In order to answer this question, "perhaps [the] most significant" consideration for the fact finder "is the evidence relating to" Yardi itself, and whether Yardi's conduct "was justified by any normal business purpose." Aspen, 472 U.S. at 608. Yardi argues that it had multiple rational business purposes to end its relationship with Entrata—among them that Entrata misappropriated and lied about possessing a copy of Voyager and also that it was protecting its own intellectual property. Entrata argues that Yardi's "proffered business justifications" "are pretextual," as evidenced by Yardi's "shifting" and "inconsistent" positions. (See ECF No. 596 at 33.) The court agrees with Entrata that there is evidence that Yardi has offered shifting justifications for its conduct. As in Aspen, there is at least some evidence that from which a jury could conclude that Yardi's justifications are invalid.

Additionally, in determining whether Yardi's "refusal to deal was part of a larger anticompetitive enterprise," Novell, 731 F.3d at 1075, "it is [also] relevant [for the fact finder] to consider the impact on consumers and whether [Yardi] has impaired competition in an unnecessarily restrictive way." See Aspen, 472 U.S at 605. "If a firm has been attempting to exclude rivals on some basis other than efficiency, it is fair to characterize its behavior as predatory." Id. (internal quotation marks omitted) (citation omitted). "It is, accordingly, appropriate to examine the effect of the challenged conduct on consumers . . . ." Id.

Entrata has offered ample evidence that mutual customers preferred Entrata's integration products and were displeased at being forced to choose between Yardi and Entrata—especially because that choice increased costs for some customers. (See e.g, ECF No. 597-14 at 40 (An email from a (previously) mutual Yardi/Entrata customer to a Yardi representative provided, in relevant part: "Given our history with Yardi, and the reputation management Marisa has cultivated over the past two decades, Sentinel chose to align itself with Yardi at a greater financial cost than we were paying to Entrata. To now tell our executive committee that the increased cost comes with decreased functionality is going to damage that reputation within our company." (bold added).))

The effect of Yardi's conduct on consumers, and the evidence that Yardi was willing to damage its own reputation in order to cut off Entrata, provides further evidence of Yardi's irrational conduct.

[6] See also SolidFX, LLC v. Jeppesen Sanderson, Inc., 935 F. Supp. 2d 1069, 1076 (D. Colo. 2013) ("In addition to the Terminal Charts, the Agreement gave Plaintiff a license to use Defendant's copyrighted Jeppesen Integration Toolkits ("JIT") which access to the copyrighted toolkits to develop software for e-readers, the defendant decided to not grant the plaintiff access to the copyrighted toolkits to develop software for the Ipad apps.[7] Rather, the defendant decided to develop its own application using its own intellectual property. Thus, it used its own intellectual property to innovate and compete in the relevant market.

As explained below, the court holds that Yardi is not entitled to summary judgment based on SOLIDFX because unlike in that case, it is not undisputed that Entrata requires access to any of Yardi's copyrighted materials in order for its custom integration to function or that Yardi took the challenged action to use its intellectual property to innovate a new competitive product.

As an initial matter, the court notes that Yardi, in its Motion for Summary [*24] Judgment, failed to specifically identify the intellectual property that it (purportedly) refused to license to Entrata. Instead it simply stated, in a conclusory fashion, that "Yardi's decision to discontinue Entrata's access to its intellectual property is shielded from antitrust liability." (ECF No. 528 at 24.) A prerequisite to the invocation of SOLIDFX's presumption is that the antitrust defendant had refused to license or sell a copyrighted or patented technology. Yardi cannot invoke the presumption and argue that it is entitled to summary judgment without identifying the copyrighted technology, and the scope of protection afforded by such a copyright, in its Motion for Summary Judgment. Because it did not, it is not entitled to summary judgment based on its invocation of SOLIDFX.

In its Reply, with the benefit of new counsel, Yardi did specifically identify two technologies that it argues entitles it to the SOLIDFX presumption. Yardi argued that its "refusal to license its intellectual property to Entrata, whether through [1] SIPP or [2] a custom interface, is a per se valid business justification that defeats Entrata's claims." (ECF No. 629 at 17 (bold added).) Yardi argues [*25] that "it is undisputed that Entrata would have access to Yardi's intellectual property as a SIPP partner." (ECF No. 629 at 19 n. 16.) But Entrata disputes that claim. At oral argument, Entrata's counsel argued that "the standard interface, the purpose of the way it's designed, is to protect access to the Voyager program as well as the databases. And vendors that use the standard interface[-] they don't have access to the Voyager program or even the databases beyond what a customer might allow. That's the design of the standard interface. So there is nothing that is copyrighted here that is needed to keep this relationship alive and make the products work together." (ECF No. 835 at 173 (emphasis added).) In its Opposition to Yardi's Motion in Limine No. 2, Entrata similarly argues that it would not need to access any of Yardi's copyrighted software to continue its own custom interface. (See ECF No. 775 at 12 ("Yardi's unilateral modification and ultimate block of Entrata's own intellectual property underlie Entrata's antitrust claims. Entrata did not want a license to any Yardi copyrighted software—it simply sought to stop Yardi from blocking Entrata's own interface.") (emphasis added).) [*26]

Thus, unlike in SOLIDFX, it is not "undisputed that, in order" for Entrata to develop its custom integration products, it "needs to access" Yardi's copyrighted materials. See SOLIDFX, 935 F. Supp. 2d at 1082. This disputed fact precludes summary judgment on this issue.

B. Triable Issues of Fact Regarding Market Definition and Injury Preclude Summary Judgment

Yardi argues that "Entrata cannot carry its burden to define a relevant market," and argues that "Entrata cannot show that its alleged injury flows from a harm to competition." (ECF No. 528 at 25.) "It is well settled that defining the relevant market is an issue of fact." Telecor Communs., Inc. v. Southwestern Bell Tel. Co., 305 F.3d 1124, 1131 (10th Cir. 2002). The court agrees with Entrata that its market definition boundaries constitute material fact disputes for the jury.

(emphases added)); see id. at 1077 ("In January 2010, Plaintiff requested the JIT from Defendant so that Plaintiff could develop an app for the iPad."); see id ("Plaintiff repeatedly informed Defendant that it was moving forward with plans to develop an iPad app that would display Defendant's Terminal Charts.").

[7] See id. at 1077 ("On May 26, 2010, Defendant informed Plaintiff that it would not allow others, including Plaintiff, to have the JIT for the iPad.").

Yardi cites Mathews v. Lancaster Gen. Hosp., 87 F.3d 624, 641 (3d Cir. 1996) for the proposition that "[a]n antitrust plaintiff must prove that challenged conduct affected the prices, quantity or quality of goods or services, not just his own welfare." (ECF No. 528 at 34 (citation omitted).) "In other words, because 'antitrust law aims to protect competition, not competitors, [a court] must analyze the antitrust injury question from the viewpoint of the consumer.'" Mathews, 87 F.3d at 641. Entrata has pointed to ample evidence that Yardi's actions have harmed consumers. [*27] (See e.g., ECF No. 596 at 21-22.) Yardi is not entitled to summary judgment on these points.

REPORT AND RECOMMENDATION

This is an antitrust case. Plaintiff 3Shape Trios A/S ("3Shape" or "Plaintiff") filed suit against Defendant Align Technology, Inc. ("Defendant" or "Align") on August 28, 2018, alleging violations of Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2. (D.I. 1.) Align sells the Invisalign system, an orthodontic treatment for straightening teeth without metal braces. It involves the use of custom-made, plastic dental aligners. To make the aligners, Align requires a dental professional to obtain an impression of the patient's teeth and transmit that impression to Align. One way to take an impression is with a digital intraoral scanner. In September 2015, Align introduced a scanner [*2] called the iTero Element, which can be used to order Invisalign from Align. When the iTero Element entered the market, 3Shape was already selling a competing scanner called the Trios. This dispute ensued.

This case is not the only litigation between these two parties. On November 14, 2017, Align filed four separate patent infringement lawsuits (asserting 26 patents) against 3Shape, all of which relate to 3Shape's Trios scanner. (Nos. 17-1646, -1647, -1648, -1649 (D. Del.).) 3Shape then filed two patent infringement lawsuits against Align, both of which relate to Align's iTero Element scanner. (Nos. 18-697, -886 (D. Del.).)

This case is the parties' latest dispute in this Court. Here, 3Shape alleges that Align has (1) attempted to monopolize the market for scanners and (2) monopolized the market for aligners. Unlike many antitrust cases filed against patent-wielding competitors, 3Shape does not allege that Align's infringement suits against 3Shape were baseless or that Align obtained its patents through fraud. Instead, 3Shape points to several actions taken by Align (including patent litigation activity) that, according to 3Shape, together amount to an anticompetitive scheme that violates [*3] the antitrust laws.

Pending before the Court is Align's motion to dismiss under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6). Because 3Shape has failed to allege acts that—taken individually or together—constitute anticompetitive conduct, I recommend that Align's motion be GRANTED.

I. BACKGROUND[1]

Defendant Align is a Delaware corporation that sells Invisalign, a system of clear plastic aligners for straightening teeth. (D.I. 1 ¶¶ 13-14.) Align is the leading seller of dental aligners in the United States and has over 80% of the market. (Id. ¶¶ 15, 29-30.) Align originally obtained market dominance as a result of numerous patents covering its Invisalign technology. (Id. ¶¶ 29-31.) Many of those patents have now expired and more will be expiring this year. (Id. ¶ 31.)

Invisalign aligners are custom made and must be obtained from dental professionals, who order them from Align. (Id. ¶¶ 14, 18.) To order Invisalign, a dental professional must send a digital or physical impression of a patient's teeth to Align. (Id. ¶ 34.) Align also sells the iTero Element digital intraoral scanner, which can be used to obtain a digital impression for ordering aligners. (Id. ¶ 20.)

Plaintiff 3Shape is a Danish corporation that designs and manufactures [*4] dental equipment and software, including digital intraoral scanners. (Id. ¶¶ 12, 25.) 3Shape sells the Trios digital intraoral scanner, which "can be used for scanning, designing and ordering of clear aligners and a number of other orthodontic treatments or dental products." (Id. ¶ 25.) 3Shape's Trios scanner was already on the market when Align introduced the iTero Element scanner in September 2015. (Id. ¶¶ 20, 25-26.)

According to the Complaint, Align's iTero Element and 3Shape's Trios are the only two scanners on the market that can effectively and efficiently be used to order clear aligners. (Id. ¶ 28.) There are other digital scanners on the market, including the 3M True Definition and Sirona CEREC Omnicam. According to the Complaint, those scanners were designed to scan individual teeth for crowns and for other local dental restorative work, and they are not viable options for ordering clear aligners. (Id. ¶¶ 38-39, 42.)

The Complaint describes the following categories of conduct that, 3Shape contends, demonstrate Align's anticompetitive scheme to monopolize the scanner and aligner markets. (D.I. 17 at 6-8, 10-12.) The first category includes Align's patent litigation activities. [*5] (D.I. 1 ¶ 64.) Align filed patent infringement suits against OrthoClear and SmileDirectClub, two smaller aligner manufacturers. (Id. ¶¶ 65-66.) The OrthoClear case settled in 2006, resulting in OrthoClear going out of business. (Id. ¶ 65.) The SmileDirectClub case settled in 2016, resulting in

[1] I assume the facts alleged in the Complaint to be true for purposes of resolving this motion. Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009).

SmileDirectClub going into business with Align. (Id. ¶ 66.) Subsequently, in November 2017, Align sued 3Shape for infringement of Align's scanner technology. (Id. ¶ 50.) The Complaint alleges that these lawsuits were designed to drive Align's competitors out of business. But it does not allege that any of the litigations were objectively baseless or that Align's patents were obtained through fraud.

The second category relates to Align's unsuccessful attempts to enter into business deals with 3Shape. From 2015 to 2017, Align repeatedly asked 3Shape to configure its Trios scanners to send scans exclusively to Align (and not to other clear aligner manufacturers). (Id. ¶¶ 44-49.) 3Shape refused. (Id.) In 2016, Align asked 3Shape to enter into a joint business venture, but 3Shape again refused. (Id.)

The third category of conduct relates to the execution and termination of a 2015 agreement between Align [*6] and 3Shape, which the parties refer to as the "Interoperability Agreement." Prior to the agreement, 3Shape's Trios scanners were incapable of sending digital scans directly to Align. (Id. ¶ 35.) Under the agreement, Trios scanners could (but were not required to) send scans directly to Align, and Align agreed to accept Invisalign orders directly from Trios scanners. (Id. ¶ 35.) The parties signed the agreement in December 2015, and Align "certified" the Trios scanner to send scans directly to Align beginning in October 2016. (Id.) Between October 2016 and January 2018, dental professionals sent over 40,000 Invisalign orders using Trios scanners. (Id. ¶ 36.)

In December 2017, the month after Align filed four patent infringement lawsuits against 3Shape relating to the Trios scanner, Align notified 3Shape that it was terminating the Interoperability Agreement. (Id. ¶¶ 50-53.) Since the termination, which became effective in January 2018, Align no longer accepts scans sent directly from Trios scanners. (Id. ¶¶ 53, 59.) Align still has interoperability agreements with two other scanner manufacturers, 3M and Sirona. (Id. ¶ 38.) But Align told 3Shape in November 2017 that it "will not validate [*7] any additional intraoral scanners for use with Invisalign." (Id. ¶ 60.)

The fourth category of conduct relates to Align's introduction of the iTero Element Scanner in 2015. (Id. ¶ 20.) Align designed the iTero Element with the capability to send digital scans directly to Align for orders of Invisalign. (Id. ¶ 22.) The iTero Element cannot send scans directly to Align's competitors in the aligner market. (Id. ¶¶ 22-23.) However, a dental professional can send iTero Element scans to other aligner manufacturers by taking additional "steps" and paying Align a "fee." (Id. ¶ 23.) The Complaint does not provide any further information about the additional steps or the fees.

The fifth and final category of conduct involves Align's offering of price discounts. Around the time it terminated the Interoperability Agreement with 3Shape, Align launched a discount program for its iTero Element scanner. (Id. ¶ 57.) Under the program, owners of 3Shape's Trios scanners received a "steep" discount on the purchase of an iTero Element scanner, conditioned on the purchaser meeting a "target" number of Invisalign orders over three years.[2] (Id.) The Complaint contains no further details about the size of the [*8] discount or the target number.

According to the Complaint, Align's conduct has harmed 3Shape's scanner business. Dental professionals have stopped buying 3Shape's Trios scanner because it cannot send scans directly to Align. (Id. ¶¶ 68-69.) For the same reason, 3Shape has experienced some order cancellations and returns of the Trios scanner, and 3Shape lost a bid to supply scanners to a large Dental Service Organization. (Id. ¶¶ 68, 70.)

[2] The Complaint alleges that Align "improperly" used 3Shape's customer list in connection with the discount program, but it doesn't say what Align did or why it was improper. (Id. ¶ 57.) There are no allegations that Align employed bad faith, deceptive, or illegal conduct.

[3] The Complaint also contains a request styled as "Count Three," in which 3Shape seeks an anti-suit injunction against Align. (D.I. 1 ¶¶ 104-113.) 3Shape does not oppose dismissal of this Count. (D.I. 17 at 3 n.2.) Accordingly, I recommend dismissal of Count 3.

Align filed the pending motion to dismiss on October 17, 2018 (D.I. 11), and the parties have completed the briefing. (D.I. 12, 17, 18.) Both parties requested oral argument (D.I. 19, 20), and I heard oral argument on August 1, 2019. ("Tr. __".)

II. LEGAL STANDARDS

A defendant may move to dismiss a complaint under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) for failure to state a claim. "To survive a motion to dismiss, a complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to 'state a claim to relief that [*9] is plausible on its face.'" Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009) (quoting Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929 (2007)). A claim is plausible on its face when the complaint contains "factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Id. A possibility of relief is not enough. Id. "Where a complaint pleads facts that are 'merely consistent with' a defendant's liability, it 'stops short of the line between possibility and plausibility of entitlement to relief.'" Id. (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 557). In determining the sufficiency of the complaint under the plausibility standard, all "well-pleaded facts" are assumed to be true, but legal conclusions are not. Id. at 679.

"[W]hen the allegations in a complaint, however true, could not raise a claim of entitlement to relief, this basic deficiency should be exposed at the point of minimum expenditure of time and money by the parties and the court." Twombly, 550 U.S. at 558 (internal marks omitted). "Antitrust claims in particular must be reviewed carefully at the pleading stage because false condemnation of competitive conduct threatens to 'chill the very conduct the antitrust laws are designed to protect.'" In re Keurig Green Mt. Singleserve Coffee Antitrust Litig., 383 F. Supp. 3d 187, 218 (S.D.N.Y. 2019) (quoting Verizon Commc'ns., Inc. v. Law Offices of Curtis V. Trinko, LLP, 540 U.S. 398, 414, 124 S. Ct. 872, 157 L. Ed. 2d 823 (2004)). However, the same Twombly plausibility standard applies. W. Penn Allegheny Health Sys., Inc. v. UPMC, 627 F.3d 85, 98 (3d Cir. 2010) ("[I]t is inappropriate [*10] to apply Twombly's plausibility standard with extra bite in antitrust and other complex cases.").

III. DISCUSSION

Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, makes it unlawful to "monopolize" or "attempt to monopolize."[4] It does not prohibit monopolies. Indeed, the possession of monopoly power is not only legal, "it is an important element of the free-market system." Trinko, 540 U.S. at 407 ("The opportunity to charge monopoly prices—at least for a short period—is what attracts 'business acumen' in the first place; it induces risk taking that produces innovation and economic growth.").

A Section 2 plaintiff must therefore do more than just prove a monopoly. To succeed on a monopolization claim, the plaintiff must demonstrate both (1) the defendant's possession of monopoly power in a relevant market and (2) anticompetitive conduct. Broadcom Corp. v. Qualcomm Inc., 501 F.3d 297, 307 (3d Cir. 2007). To establish attempted monopolization, the plaintiff must show (1) anticompetitive conduct, (2) a specific intent to monopolize, and (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power in a relevant market. Phila. Taxi Ass'n, Inc. v. Uber Techs., Inc., 886 F.3d 332, 339 (3d Cir. 2018). Importantly, both types of claims require "anticompetitive conduct." See id. at 338 ("Anticompetitive conduct is the hallmark of an antitrust claim."). A private plaintiff (as opposed to a government plaintiff) [*11] must also demonstrate that it suffered injuries caused by the defendant's anticompetitive conduct. Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 (1977); ZF Meritor, LLC v. Eaton Corp., 696 F.3d 254, 281 (3d Cir. 2012).

Align argues that the Complaint fails to plausibly allege anticompetitive conduct. I agree. Anticompetitive conduct is "generally defined as conduct to obtain or maintain monopoly power as a result of competition on some basis other than the merits." Broadcom, 501 F.3d at 308. On the other hand, "[c]onduct that merely harms competitors, . . . while not harming the competitive process itself, is not anticompetitive." Id.; W. Penn, 627 F.3d at 108 ("The line between anticompetitive conduct and vigorous competition is sometimes blurry, but distinguishing between the two is critical, because the Sherman Act 'directs itself not against conduct which is competitive, even severely so, but against conduct which unfairly tends to destroy competition itself.'"). Accordingly, in order to be deemed exclusionary, a monopolist's conduct must have an anticompetitive effect on the market. United States v. Microsoft Corp., 253 F.3d 34, 58, 346 U.S. App. D.C. 330 (D.C. Cir. 2001).

"'Anticompetitive conduct' can come in too many different forms, and is too dependent upon context, for any court or commentator ever to have enumerated all the varieties." LePage's Inc. v. 3M, 324 F.3d 141, 152 (3d Cir. 2003) (quoting Caribbean Broad. Sys., Ltd. v. Cable & Wireless PLC, 148 F.3d 1080, 1087, 331 U.S. App. D.C. 226 (D.C.Cir.1998)). Examples of agreements that may constitute anticompetitive [*12] conduct under Section 2 include conspiracies to exclude a rival, W. Penn, 627 F.3d at 109, exclusive dealing arrangements, United States v. Dentsply, 399 F.3d 181, 187 (3d Cir. 2005), and tying agreements, Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Tech. Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 483, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992).

As a general rule, however, "purely unilateral conduct does not run afoul of section 2 - 'businesses are free to choose' whether or not to do business with others and free to assign what prices they hope to secure for their own products." Novell, Inc. v. Microsoft Corp., 731 F.3d 1064, 1072 (10th Cir. 2013) (citing Pac. Bell Tel. Co. v. linkLine Commc'ns, 555 U.S. 438, 448, 129 S. Ct. 1109, 172 L. Ed. 2d 836 (2009)); see also Trinko, 540 U.S. at 408 ("[A]s a general matter, the Sherman Act 'does not restrict the long recognized right of [a] trader or manufacturer engaged in an entirely private business, freely to exercise his own independent discretion as to parties with whom he will deal.'" (quoting United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U.S. 300, 307, 39 S. Ct. 465, 63 L. Ed. 992, 1919 Dec. Comm'r Pat. 460 (1919)); Broadcom, 501 F.3d at 316 ("A firm is generally under no obligation to cooperate with its rivals.").

But general rules generally have exceptions, and the rule protecting unilateral conduct does too. One exception is predatory pricing. Brooke Grp. Ltd. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 509 U.S. 209, 222-23, 113 S. Ct. 2578, 125 L. Ed. 2d 168 (1993). A more controversial exception (albeit one recognized in the Third Circuit) is bundled discounts. LePage's, 324 F.3d at 154-58. Another is antitrust duty to deal. Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 600-01, 105 S. Ct. 2847, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467 (1985). Courts also recognize that deceptive or bad faith conduct can be anticompetitive. See Broadcom, 501 F.3d at 314 (patentee's deception of a standards setting organization can be anticompetitive); Professional Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Industries, Inc., 508 U.S. 49, 60-61, 113 S. Ct. 1920, 123 L. Ed. 2d 611 (1993) ("PRE") (sham litigation can [*13] be anticompetitive). As explained in more detail below, there are legal rules that govern the application of each of these exceptions.

The Complaint in this case sets forth five categories of conduct that, 3Shape alleges, are anticompetitive: (1) Align's institution of patent infringement suits against its competitors; (2) Align's unsuccessful attempts to enter into business deals with 3Shape; (3) Align's termination of the agreement to accept scans directly from 3Shape's Trios scanners; (4) Align's introduction of the iTero Element scanner; and (5) Align's provision of price discounts on iTero Element scanners. For the reasons set forth below, I agree with Align that those actions do not constitute actionable anticompetitive conduct, viewed either alone or together.

A. Patent litigation

"A patent . . . is an exception to the general rule against monopolies." King Drug Co. of Florence, Inc. v. SmithKline Beecham Corp., 791 F.3d 388, 394 (3d Cir. 2015) (quoting Walker Process Equip., Inc. v. Food Mach. & Chem Corp., 382 U.S. 172, 177, 86 S. Ct. 347, 15 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1965)). Because a party petitioning the government for redress is immune from antitrust liability under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, the institution of patent infringement litigation generally cannot violate the antitrust laws. See PRE, 508 U.S. at 56; see also In re Wellbutrin XL Antitrust Litigation Indirect Purchaser Class, 868 F.3d 132, 147-48 (3d Cir. 2017).

There are only two exceptions to that general rule, and they are narrow. Nobelpharma AB v. Implant Innovations, Inc., 141 F.3d 1059, 1068 (Fed. Cir. 1998); see also [*14] In re Wellbutrin, 868 F.3d at 147 ("A plaintiff claiming that a lawsuit is, by its very existence, anticompetitive and unlawful faces an uphill battle."). The first exception is when the patent infringement litigation is a "sham." PRE, 508 U.S. at 60-61. Litigation is a sham, and therefore not immune from antitrust scrutiny, only when the antitrust plaintiff can establish that the patent infringement suit was both objectively baseless and brought with an improper subjective motivation. Id. The second exception requires the antitrust plaintiff to show that the asserted patent was obtained through fraud. See Walker Process, 382 U.S. at 176-78; Nobelpharma, 141 F.3d at 1068.

In this case, the Complaint alleges that Align instituted "harassing" and "aggressive" patent suits against its competitors. (D.I. 1 ¶¶ 64-66.) But the Complaint does not allege that the suits were shams or that Align's patents were obtained by fraud. Nor does it allege any facts that plausibly suggest either theory. See, e.g., Pac. Biosci. of Cal. v. Oxford Nanopore Techs., Inc., Nos. 17-275, 17-1353, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25578, 2019 WL 668843, *3-4 (D. Del. Feb. 19, 2019) (dismissing sham litigation and Walker Process claims when the complaint failed to plausibly allege improper subjective motivation or deceptive intent).

Because the Complaint fails to plausibly allege sham litigation or Walker Process [*15] fraud, Align's litigation activity is protected by Noerr-Pennington immunity and cannot by itself constitute anticompetitive conduct.

B. Unaccepted proposals

The next category of conduct alleged to be anticompetitive involves Align's proposals to enter into exclusive dealing arrangements with 3Shape. The parties dispute whether Align's proposed arrangements would have been anticompetitive if consummated, but it is undisputed that 3Shape never agreed to them.

Conduct is not considered anticompetitive under Section 2 unless it has an anticompetitive effect. Dentsply, 399 F.3d at 187; Microsoft, 253 F.3d at 58. It follows that a mere offer to enter into a business deal—absent something more, like a threat that might affect the offeree's conduct—does not amount to anticompetitive conduct.

3Shape's allegations about Align's unaccepted proposals do not suggest a plausible harm to competition, nor has 3Shape explained how an unaccepted offer to enter into a business arrangement could have resulted in any harm to competition.[5] Accordingly, Align's proposals do not by themselves constitute anticompetitive conduct.[6]

C. Termination of the agreement with 3Shape

---

[5] Nor has 3Shape explained how Align's offers, which 3Shape rejected, could have possibly resulted in any injury to 3Shape. See Brunswick Corp., 429 U.S. at 489 (requiring antitrust plaintiffs to prove injury "that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful").

[6] 3Shape does not argue that Align's "attempt" to enter into an exclusive dealing arrangement qualifies as anticompetitive conduct that supports 3Shape's claim that Align "attempted monopolization" of the scanner market. Which makes sense. For one thing, the proposed arrangement would have kept 3Shape on the market. See Oxbow Carbon & Minerals LLC v. Union Pacific R. Co., 926 F. Supp. 2d 36, 46 (D.D.C. 2013) ("In enacting the prohibitions on monopolies, Congress was concerned about 'the complete domination of a market by a single economic entity,' and therefore did not include 'shared monopolies' or oligopolies within the purview of Section 2." (quoting Sun Dun, Inc. of Washington v. Coca-Cola Co., 740 F. Supp. 381, 391 (D. Md. 1990))). Nor did 3Shape suffer any injury as a result of Align's mere proposal. See n.5, supra.

The third category of conduct alleged to be anticompetitive is Align's termination [*16] of its agreement to accept scans sent directly from 3Shape's Trios scanners. (D.I. 1 ¶¶ 53-55.) As explained above, a firm generally has no duty to cooperate with its rivals. Firms can usually choose to do business with their rivals or they can choose not to, and they can change their minds. See linkLine, 555 U.S. at 448 ("As a general rule, businesses are free to choose the parties with whom they will deal, as well as the prices, terms, and conditions of that dealing."); Christy Sports, LLC v. Deer Valley Resort Co., Ltd., 555 F.3d 1188, 1198 (10th Cir. 2009) ("The antitrust laws should not be allowed to stifle a business's ability to experiment in how it operates, nor forbid it to change course upon discovering a preferable path."). Thus, the mere termination of a contract with a rival, while potentially invoking contract remedies, does not constitute anticompetitive conduct. See, e.g., In re Adderall XR Antitrust Litig., 754 F.3d 128, 135 (2d Cir. 2014) ("The mere existence of a contractual duty to supply goods does not by itself give rise to an antitrust 'duty to deal.'"); *Insight Equity A.P. X, LP v. Transitions Optical, Inc., No. 10-635, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 85751, 2016 WL 3610155, at 13 (D. Del. July 1, 2016).

If there is any requirement that Align cooperate with 3Shape, it must fall under the narrow refusal to deal doctrine created by the Supreme Court in Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 105 S. Ct. 2847, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467 (1985). In that case, the plaintiff and defendant ski operators had previously cooperated to offer joint passes to both companies' mountains, [*17] until the defendant terminated the arrangement. Id. at 587-95. When the plaintiff tried to recreate the multi-mountain pass by offering to pay the defendant market price for its tickets, the defendant refused. Id. at 593-94.

The Supreme Court affirmed a jury verdict finding that the defendant's termination of the arrangement was anticompetitive and violated Section 2. While Aspen could be interpreted to require a competitor to continue to engage in a pre-existing course of dealing once it starts, the Supreme Court has since held that Aspen "is at or near the outer boundary of § 2 liability." Trinko, 540 U.S. at 409. To proceed under the limited duty to deal exception created by Aspen, not only must the plaintiff show a pre-existing business relationship with the defendant, the circumstances surrounding the termination of that relationship must "suggest[] a willingness to forsake short-term profits to achieve an anticompetitive end." Trinko, 540 U.S. at 409.

In Aspen, the circumstances suggested that the preexisting joint ticket arrangement was profitable for the defendant, and the defendant was unwilling to renew the ticket even if compensated at its own retail price. 472 U.S. at 589-94; Trinko, 540 U.S. at 409. Those facts permitted an inference that the defendant acted solely to reduce the value of the plaintiff's [*18] ski mountain and force it to sell. Trinko, 540 U.S. at 409. In other words, the defendant's conduct was "irrational but for its anticompetitive effect." Novell, 731 F.3d at 1075; see also Areeda & Hovencamp, Antitrust Law ¶ 772d3 (Supp. 2019) ("[B]efore a unilateral refusal to deal is unlawful under §2, the refusal must be 'irrational' in the sense that the defendant sacrificed an opportunity to make a profitable sale only because of the adverse impact the refusal would have on a rival.").

Limiting antitrust scrutiny of refusals to deal to circumstances where the defendant's conduct is economically irrational is potentially underinclusive, i.e., it may allow some refusals to deal to evade antitrust scrutiny even when they actually have anticompetitive effects. See Novell, 731 F.3d at 1073, 1076. But the Supreme Court has concluded that the benefits of expanding the refusal to deal doctrine do not outweigh the costs, including (1) the risk of false positives, which may harm innovation, (2) the risk of collusion between companies forced to deal, (3) the inability of courts to supervise the terms and conditions of forced dealing, and (4) the absence of fair notice to business people. linkLine, 555 U.S. at 452-453; Trinko, 540 U.S. at 408, 414; see also Novell, 731 F.3d at 1076 ("If the [refusal to deal] doctrine fails to capture every [*19] nuance, if it must err still to some slight degree, perhaps it is better that it should err on the side of firm independence—given its demonstrated value to the competitive process and consumer welfare—than on the other side where we face the risk of inducing collusion and inviting judicial central planning.").

Because companies are generally free to choose with whom they deal, the only path forward for 3Shape's allegations about Align's termination of their agreement is under the refusal to deal doctrine. But 3Shape's allegations lack the essential feature of an anticompetitive refusal to deal. Assuming the parties' prior agreement was profitable for Align (as alleged in the Complaint), that does not by itself lead to a plausible inference that Align's termination of the agreement was economically irrational, as required by Aspen. Rather, Align's conduct, as alleged, is equally consistent with an inference that Align wanted to increase sales of its own scanner. See Novell, 731 F.3d at 1075 (explaining that a firm may choose to withdraw from a profitable course of dealing for procompetitive reasons, such as when a firm desires "to pursue an innovative replacement product of its own," and that courts should [*20] look at profits across business lines to determine if conduct is economically irrational); *Viamedia, Inc. v. Comcast Corp., No. 16-5486, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24213, 2017 WL 698681, 5-6 (N.D. Ill. Feb. 22, 2017) (dismissing refusal to deal claim when complaint failed to plead facts plausibly suggesting that the defendants' conduct was economically irrational); *VBR Tours, LLC v. Yankee Leisure Grp., Inc., No. 14-00804, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 130455, 2015 WL 5693735, 8-9 (N.D. Ill. Sept. 28, 2015) (same).

Because the Complaint does not plausibly allege circumstances invoking the refusal to deal doctrine, Align's termination of its agreement with 3Shape by itself is not anticompetitive.

D. Introduction of the iTero Element scanner

The fourth category of conduct alleged to be anticompetitive covers Align's introduction of its iTero Element scanner in 2015. (D.I. 1 ¶¶ 20-24.) 3Shape takes issue with the design of Align's iTero Element scanner, which is capable of sending scans directly to Align. (Id. ¶¶ 22-23.) If a dental professional desires to send a scan taken by the iTero Element to one of Align's competitors, the dental professional must take additional steps and pay a fee. (Id. ¶ 23.) In essence, 3Shape contends that Align should have designed its scanner to make it easier for dental professionals to order scans from Align's competitors.

That is just another refusal to deal claim. 3Shape is asking Align to deal with its rivals in the aligner [*21] market by designing its iTero Element scanner to send them business on favorable terms, namely, (1) directly from the scanner and (2) without charge to the user. However, as already explained, "[a]s a general rule, businesses are free to choose the parties with whom they will deal, as well as the prices, terms, and conditions of that dealing." linkLine, 555 U.S. at 448.

Once again, the only path forward for 3Shape is under the refusal to deal doctrine set forth in Aspen Skiing. But the Complaint here fails to plausibly allege the first requirement of Aspen: "a preexisting voluntary and presumably profitable course of dealing between the monopolist and the rival." Novell, 731 F.3d at 1074. Align never had a deal with its rivals in the aligner market governing the terms and conditions under which the iTero Element could be used to send them business.[7]

Absent a duty to deal, antitrust law does not require a firm to lend its competitors a helping hand. See Novell, 731 F.3d at 1072. Align's design of its iTero Element scanner by itself does not constitute anticompetitive conduct.

E. Scanner discounts

The final category of alleged anticompetitive conduct relates to Align's offering of price discounts on its scanners. The Complaint alleges that shortly after [*22] it terminated its agreement with 3Shape, Align offered current owners of 3Shape's Trios scanners a "steep" discount on Align's iTero Element scanner conditioned on the purchaser meeting a "target" number of Invisalign orders over a three-year period. (D.I. 1 ¶ 57.) The Complaint contains no further details about the size of the "steep" discount or the "target" number of orders. As alleged, Align's discount program is not an exclusive dealing arrangement, since the purchaser is not required to buy only Invisalign aligners.[8] It is not a traditional tying arrangement, since the scanner purchaser is not required to buy any Invisalign

---

[7] The Complaint does not allege that the design of Align's iTero Element scanner has ever changed. The Court is therefore not confronted with an allegation of anticompetitive product redesign.

aligners at all; it only must do so if it wants the discount. As pled, the arrangement is merely a price discount conditioned on the purchaser taking two of the seller's products.

Price discounts are generally not anticompetitive. linkLine, 555 U.S. at 451; Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 594, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986); Philadelphia Taxi Ass'n, 886 F.3d at 340 ("It is well established that lower prices, as long as they are not predatory, benefit consumers—'regardless of how those prices are set.'" (quoting Atl. Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 340, 110 S. Ct. 1884, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333 (1990)). That general rule has exceptions too.

The first exception is predatory pricing, which is when a monopolist prices its goods below cost in order to drive other [*23] competitors out of the market. Once its competitors have been eliminated, the monopolist raises its prices to supracompetitive levels.

Actual predatory pricing schemes are rare, and firms who try them rarely succeed. Brooke Grp., 509 U.S. at 226; Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colo., 479 U.S. 104, 121 n.17, 107 S. Ct. 484, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427 (1986). And, "because cutting prices in order to increase business often is the very essence of competition[,] mistaken inferences are especially costly, because they chill the very conduct the antitrust laws are designed to protect." Brooke Grp., 509 U.S. at 226 (internal marks omitted). For these reasons, the predatory pricing exception to the rule protecting unilateral conduct is narrow, and it requires the antitrust plaintiff to show both (1) "that the prices complained of are below an appropriate measure of [the defendant's] costs"; and (2) that the defendant had "a dangerous probability[] of recouping its investment in below-cost prices." Id. at 222-24; ZF Meritor, 696 F.3d at 272. The rule is underinclusive in the sense that it may not capture all anticompetitive pricing schemes. But a broader rule would allow "intolerable risks of chilling legitimate price-cutting." Brooke Grp., 509 U.S. at 223.

3Shape's Complaint in this case does not allege predatory pricing. The Complaint contains no allegations about the cost of Align's scanner, or the amount of the discounts, [*24] other than to say they were "steep." (D.I. 1 ¶ 57.) Nor has 3Shape alleged that Align sold its scanners below cost. On that basis alone, 3Shape has failed to plausibly allege that the Align's scanner discounts were predatory. See *Varentec, Inc. v. Gridco, Inc., No. 16-217-RGA-MPT, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86185, 2017 WL 2438846, at 4-5 (D. Del. June 6, 2017) ("Without alleging plaintiff's actual costs, or industry standard costs, it is impossible to plausibly conclude that those alleged discounts resulted in below-cost pricing.").

The Third Circuit (but not the Supreme Court) has also recognized a bundled discount exception to the general rule protecting price discounts. A bundled discount is when a firm sells a bundle of goods for a lower price than the seller charges for the goods purchased individually. In LePage's, the Third Circuit held that bundled discounts can constitute anticompetitive conduct even when the predatory pricing test is not met (for example, because the goods are sold above cost). 324 F.3d at 154-157. Under the LePage's standard, the antitrust plaintiff must show that the effect of the discounts is to "foreclose portions of the market to a potential competitor who does not manufacture an equally diverse group of products and who therefore cannot make a comparable offer." [*25] Id. at 155. The LePage's standard for bundled discounts has not been adopted by any other Circuit, and it has not been expanded in the Third Circuit. See Cascade Health Solutions v. Peacehealth, 515 F.3d 883, 894-903, 908-09 (9th Cir. 2008) (discussing the controversy over LePage's). The Third Circuit has instructed courts to interpret LePage's narrowly in light of more recent Supreme Court precedent. See ZF Meritor, 696 F.3d at 274 n.11 (acknowledging the Supreme Court's recent emphasis on adherence to the predatory pricing test to assess the legality of price discounts).

In this case, 3Shape disclaims any reliance on a bundled discounts theory. (Tr. 25:7-13.) Even if I were to analyze Align's conduct as a bundled discount, the facts alleged in the Complaint do not satisfy the standard set forth in [8] At oral argument, 3Shape's counsel suggested that Align's scanner discount program operated as a de facto exclusive dealing arrangement. (Tr. 25:9-26:22.) According to 3Shape's counsel, the "target" number of Invisalign orders was so high that a scanner purchaser was essentially unable to order any other types of aligners. The problem with that argument, which counsel acknowledged, is that the Complaint does not allege that fact. (Id.) Nor does it allege any facts about the size of the target number or, more importantly, its size in relation to a dental professional's total number of aligner orders.

LePage's. The Complaint fails to allege facts permitting a plausible inference that 3Shape was unable to offer a comparable discount on its own scanners. Nor has 3Shape explained how the discounting program could have plausibly foreclosed it from the scanner market, as required by LePage's, because the program was restricted to dental professionals who had already purchased 3Shape's scanner. The Third Circuit has instructed lower courts not to extend LePage's, and I see no basis to do so on the limited allegations [*26] here.

In sum, 3Shape has failed to allege that Align's scanner discount program was itself anticompetitive.

F. Anticompetitive scheme

Not so fast, says 3Shape: Align's acts viewed individually may not be anticompetitive, but they must be examined together. And when they are, 3Shape argues, they demonstrate an anticompetitive scheme cognizable under Section 2.

The case law is replete with language that appears to support 3Shape's argument. The Supreme Court, for example, has stated that "plaintiffs should be given the full benefit of their proof without tightly compartmentalizing the various factual components and wiping the slate clean after scrutiny of each." Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 699, 82 S. Ct. 1404, 8 L. Ed. 2d 777 (1962). Likewise, the Third Circuit has stated that "courts must look to the monopolist's conduct taken as a whole rather than considering each aspect in isolation." LePage's, 324 F.3d at 162.

Read in context, however, those statements stand for the proposition that courts must look at anticompetitive acts in combination to assess their anticompetitive effect. Those cases do not hold that unilateral acts otherwise insulated from antitrust scrutiny can be pled together to state a Section 2 violation. Continental Ore involved an exclusive dealing conspiracy, not unilateral conduct. [*27] 370 U.S. at 698-99. LePage's dealt with an anticompetitive bundled discount arrangement. 324 F.3d at 158.

The other cases cited by 3Shape do not address the circumstances here either. In Rochester Drug Coop. v. Braintree Laboratories, the plaintiff alleged sham litigation, which is recognized anticompetitive conduct. 712 F. Supp. 2d 308, 318-19 (D. Del. May 19, 2010). Likewise in In re Gabapentin Patent Litigation, 649 F. Supp. 2d 340, 361-65 (D.N.J. 2009) and *In re Neurontin Antitrust Litigation, No. 02-1830, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 77475, 2009 WL 2751029, 13 (D.N.J. Aug. 28, 2009). In In re Remeron Antitrust Litigation, the Court concluded that the complaint alleged standalone anticompetitive conduct in addition to an overall scheme. 335 F. Supp. 2d 522, 528 (D.N.J. 2004) (stating that the court was "reserv[ing] judgment" on the viability of the scheme claim). In Microsoft Mobile Inc. v. Interdigital, Inc., the plaintiff alleged the type of bad faith conduct that was recognized as anticompetitive in *Broadcom. No. 15-723, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 49498, 2016 WL 8302609, 2 (D. Del. Apr. 13, 2016). In American Tobacco Co. v. United States, the Supreme Court affirmed a Section 2 violation based on a conspiracy, not unilateral conduct. 328 U.S. 781, 809, 66 S. Ct. 1125, 90 L. Ed. 1575 (1946). The monopolization claim in West Penn Allegheny Health Systems also involved a conspiracy. 627 F.3d at 109.

As 3Shape has not pointed to any controlling authority, this question remains: can (1) patent litigation activity that does not satisfy the sham litigation or Walker Process rules, (2) an unaccepted offer to enter into a business deal that had no effect on the market, (3) refusals [*28] to deal that do not satisfy the Aspen Skiing rule, and (4) price discounts that don't meet the Brooke Group predatory pricing rules or invoke the circumstances of LePage's, all be combined to state an antitrust claim? The Supreme Court's analysis in linkLine suggests that the answer is no.

In linkLine, the Supreme Court considered whether antitrust plaintiffs could state a monopolization claim under a "price-squeeze" theory that consisted of two types of conduct otherwise protected from antitrust scrutiny. In that case, the defendant operated in two markets: it sold services to consumers in the retail market; and it sold wholesale services to its retail competitors. linkLine, 555 U.S. at 442-43. The plaintiffs, competitors in the retail market, alleged that the defendant charged them a high wholesale price and simultaneously charged consumers a low retail price. Because the plaintiffs had to match the defendant's low retail price to make sales, the plaintiffs argued that the defendants set the wholesale and retail prices to "squeeze" the plaintiffs' profit margins and force them to out of business. Id. at 443-44.

The Supreme Court rejected the plaintiffs' monopolization claim, reasoning that the allegations were essentially [*29] an amalgamation of two claims—the defendant's refusal to deal with its competitors at the wholesale level and the defendant's low pricing at the retail level—both of which are theories of anticompetitive conduct for which the Supreme Court has set forth specific legal rules. Id. at 448-52. Applying the refusal to deal rule set forth in Aspen and Trinko and the predatory pricing rule set forth in Brooke Group, the Supreme Court concluded that the plaintiffs' complaint stated neither type of claim. Id. at 452. Consequently, the Supreme Court refused to recognize the "price squeeze" claim, reasoning that "[t]wo wrong claims do not make one that is right." Id. at 457. In so doing, the Supreme Court acknowledged "the importance of clear rules in antitrust law[,]" noting specifically the inability of courts to supervise generalized duties to deal, the risk of chilling price discounts, and the need to provide guidance to businesses. Id. at 452-53.

Although linkLine was framed as a "price-squeeze" claim, the plaintiffs in that case could have just as easily characterized it as a scheme of anticompetitive conduct consisting of a refusal to deal and price discounting. linkLine, however, is consistent with the proposition that, when there [*30] are developed legal rules that restrict when otherwise-protected conduct can be scrutinized under the antitrust laws, an antitrust plaintiff must satisfy at least one of those rules in order to proceed under a theory that the combined conduct is anticompetitive.[9]

Just as the rules governing refusal to deal claims and pricing claims are underinclusive in capturing conduct with anticompetitive effects, as explained above, so too is a rule requiring an antitrust plaintiff to plead more than just unilateral conduct that is otherwise protected from antitrust scrutiny. It could be the case that a defendant's refusals to deal with its competitors, combined with its patent litigation and its offering of above-cost discounts in fact has an adverse effect on competition, as 3Shape contends here. But the Supreme Court's rules governing those types of conduct are not based on its determination that they could never harm competition. The rules are based on other considerations, including First Amendment rights, the risk of false positives, the inability of courts to administer forced dealing, and the need to give fair notice to businesses. linkLine, 555 U.S. at 452-453, 455; Trinko, 540 U.S. at 408, 414; PRE, 508 U.S. at 56 Brooke Grp., 509 U.S. at 223; see also Daniel Crane, [*31] Does Monopoly Broth Make Bad Soup?, 76 Antitrust L.J. 663, 668 (2010) ("To reduce all monopolization law to a case-by-case inquiry on whether the sum of the defendant's conduct harms competition is to miss a much more complex set of policy and juridical inputs into monopolization law and to create excessive uncertainty in adjudication.").

A rule requiring plaintiffs to plead at least one instance of conduct not otherwise insulated from antitrust scrutiny is also consistent with the approach taken by other courts. See, e.g., Eatoni Ergonomics, Inc. v. Research in Motion Corp., 486 Fed. Appx. 186, 191 (2d Cir. 2012) (affirming dismissal of an antitrust scheme claim; "[b]ecause these alleged instances of misconduct are not independently anti-competitive, we conclude that they are not cumulatively anti-competitive either"); *In re Solodyn (Minocycline Hydrochloride) Antitrust Litig., No. 14-md-02503-DJC, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 125999, 2015 WL 5458570, at 12 (D. Mass. Sept. 16, 2015) (concluding that a complaint failed to state a Section 2 claim under an "overarching scheme" theory when none of the alleged conduct was independently anticompetitive); *In re Lipitor Antitrust Litig., No. 13-2389, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 126468, 2013 WL 4780496, 23 (D.N.J. Sept. 5, 2013) ("Having already determined that all of the specific allegations of conduct in violation of Section 2 . . . are meritless and insufficient to state a claim for relief, the Court finds that a claim based on the purported 'combined' impact of Plaintiffs' claims is also [*32] without merit."); *cf. Valassis Comm'ns, Inc. v. News Corp., No-17-7378 (PKC), 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 27770, 2019 WL 802093, 9-10 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 21, 2019) (price discounts not anticompetitive by themselves could not be considered as part of an antitrust scheme claim).

[9] The question of whether non-sham patent litigation can support a claim of an overall scheme to monopolize when the there are other alleged instances of anticompetitive conduct does not need to be addressed here, since the Complaint does not allege any other anticompetitive conduct. For the same reason, the Court need not answer the related question of whether unilateral conduct otherwise insulated from antitrust review can be combined with anticompetitive conduct when analyzing an antitrust scheme claim.

In short, two wrong claims did not make a right in linkLine and five wrong claims do not make a right here. 3Shape's contention that Align engaged in a scheme consisting of acts otherwise insulated from antitrust scrutiny is insufficient to allege anticompetitive conduct under Section 2.

As 3Shape's failure to plead anticompetitive conduct fully supports granting Align's motion to dismiss, the Court need not decide whether the other grounds raised by Align (lack of standing[10] and failure to allege relevant product markets) would also support dismissal.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above, 3Shape's Complaint fails to plausibly allege anticompetitive conduct, a required element of monopolization and attempted monopolization under Section 2 of the Sherman Act. I recommend that Align's motion be GRANTED, that the Complaint be DISMISSED without prejudice, and that 3Shape be granted leave to amend the Complaint within 21 days.[11]

This Report and Recommendation is filed pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 636(b)(1)(B),(C), Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 72(b)(1), and District of Delaware Local Rule 72.1 [*33] . Any objections to the Report and Recommendation shall be filed within fourteen days and limited to ten pages. Any response shall be filed within fourteen days thereafter and limited to ten pages. The failure of a party to object to legal conclusions may result in the loss of the right to de novo review in the district court.

The parties are directed to the Court's "Standing Order for Objections Filed Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 72," dated October 9, 2013, a copy of which can be found on the Court's website.

[10] Antitrust standing is a prudential limitation. As it does not affect subject matter jurisdiction, there is no requirement that the Court consider it at this time. See *Shionogi Pharma, Inc. v. Mylan, Inc., No. 10-1077, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 58774, 2011 WL 2174499, 3 (D. Del. May 26, 2011) (dismissing Section 2 claim for failure to state a claim without addressing the parties' dispute over antitrust standing).

[11] Align requests that the Complaint be dismissed without leave to amend because any amendment would be futile. However, it is not clear on this limited record that amendment would necessarily be futile. See Alston v. Parker, 363 F.3d 229, 235-36 (3d Cir. 2004) (holding that leave to amend should be granted "unless a curative amendment would be inequitable, futile, or untimely").

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN1[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) provides for dismissal of a complaint for failure to state a claim when a plaintiff's plain statement lacks enough substance to show that it is entitled to relief. Judging the sufficiency of a pleading is a context-dependent exercise. On a motion to dismiss, the Court considers plausibility, not probability. Plaintiffs must allege enough fact to raise a reasonable expectation that discovery will reveal evidence of illegal agreement. Speculative or conjectural assertions are not sufficient. However, Plaintiffs are not required to plead facts that, if true, definitively rule out all possible innocent explanations. It is improper at this stage of the proceedings to weigh alternatives and decide which is more plausible. And, of course, a well-pleaded complaint may proceed even if it strikes a savvy judge that actual proof of those facts is improbable, and that a recovery is very remote and unlikely.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN2[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

With respect to a motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), the task of the district court is not to sustain or dismiss a complaint based on whether the Court feels it is a winner or has curb appeal. The Court's task is to determine whether the facts alleged in the complaint rise above mere speculation, even if the Court has doubts about them, and whether they plausibly suggest an entitlement to relief, such that it is not unfair to require the opposing party to be subjected to the expense of discovery and continued litigation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize

HN3[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

So long as an alleged conspiracy is supported by enough facts to make it plausible, it is of no matter whether it involves three conspirators or a score or more. Mere size or breadth alone is not a reason to peremptorily jettison a conspiracy allegation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN4[] Conspiracy to Monopolize, Sherman Act

To state a claim for a Sherman Act conspiracy, Plaintiffs must allege enough factual matter (taken as true) to suggest that an agreement was made. In the absence of allegations of direct evidence of such an agreement, Plaintiffs may allege parallel conduct plus a context that raises a suggestion of a preceding agreement, not merely parallel conduct that could just as well be independent action. The necessary context may be shown through allegations of plus factors that serve as proxies for direct evidence of an agreement. Plaintiffs are not required to plead simultaneous price increases — or that the price increases were identical — in order to demonstrate parallel conduct. At least three plus factors support a finding that there is a suggestion of a preceding agreement: (1) evidence that the defendant had a motive to enter into a price fixing conspiracy; (2) evidence that the defendant acted contrary to its interests; and (3) evidence implying a traditional conspiracy. The conspiracy must not be compartmentalized. The character and effect of the conspiracy are not to be judged by dismembering it and viewing its separate parts, but only by looking at it as a whole.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN5[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

HN6[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

Twombly sets the bar for reviewing overarching conspiracy allegations at the motion to dismiss stage.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize

HN7[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

To determine whether conspirators shared a common goal, a court should consider the purpose of the alleged conspiracy in a fairly broad sense.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize

HN8[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

A common goal may exist even when conspirators individually or in groups perform different tasks in pursuing the common goal, and a single conspiracy may attract different members at different times or involve different sub-groups committing acts in furtherance of the overall plan. A defendant need not be accused of having engaged in all activities alleged to have advanced the conspiracy. In other words, one conspiracy can involve multiple subsidiary schemes.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN9[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

With respect to the sufficiency of a complaint alleging an overarching conspiracy, to evaluate interdependence, the court engages in an inquiry focused on the extent to which the success or failure of one conspiracy is independent of a corresponding success or failure by the other. Courts consider how helpful one individual's contribution is to another's goals. Interdependence helps establish whether the alleged coconspirators are all committed to the same set of objectives in a single conspiracy.

Opinion

[*513] Rufe, J.

This is a multidistrict antitrust litigation involving allegations that certain pharmaceutical companies engaged in an unlawful scheme or schemes to fix, maintain, and stabilize prices, rig bids, and engage in market and customer allocations of certain generic pharmaceutical products. In this Opinion, the Court considers Defendants' joint motion to dismiss claims asserting the existence of an overarching multi-drug conspiracy in the following pleadings (collectively, the "Overarching Complaints"): Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs' First Amended Class Action [83] Complaint ¶¶ 108-121[1]; End Payor Plaintiffs' Amended Class Action Complaint ¶¶ 99-181[2]; Indirect Reseller

---

[1] The Direct Purchaser Plaintiffs ("DPPs") allege they directly purchased generic pharmaceuticals from Defendants. They include the following drug purchasing cooperatives and retail pharmacy operators: Ahold, USA, Inc.; César Castillo, Inc.; FWK Holdings, LLC; KPH Healthcare Services, Inc. a/k/a Kinney Drugs, Inc.; and Rochester Drug Co-Operative, Inc. DPP Am. Class Action Compl. ¶¶ 43-47.

[2] The End Payer Plaintiffs ("EPPs") are employee welfare benefits funds, labor unions, and private insurers that allege either that they indirectly purchased generic pharmaceuticals manufactured by one or more Defendants or that they provided reimbursements for some or all of the purchase price for certain generic drugs. Specifically, they are: American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees District Council 37 Health & Security Plan; Detectives Endowment Association of the City of New York; Louisiana Health Service & Indemnity Company d/b/a Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Louisiana and HMO Louisiana, Inc; Self-Insured Schools of California; Sergeants Benevolent Association of the Police Department of the City of New York Health and Welfare Fund; Unite Here Health; 1199SEIU National Benefit Fund; 1199SEIU Greater New York Benefit Fund; 1199SEIU National Benefit Fund for Home Care Workers; and 1199SEIU Licensed Practical Nurses Welfare Fund. EPP Am. Class Action Compl. ¶¶ 37-42.

Plaintiffs' Amended Overarching Complaint ¶¶ 65-72[3]; Kroger Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint ¶¶ 813-32[4]; Marion Plaintiffs' Second Amended Complaint, ¶¶ 51-59[5]; Humana Inc.'s Second Amended Complaint ¶¶ 261-72[6]; and the Plaintiff [*514] States' Consolidated Amended Complaint[7] ¶¶ 89-109. For the reasons set forth below, the motion will be denied.[8]

I. BACKGROUND

The first complaints filed in this multidistrict litigation were drug-specific and alleged a scheme or schemes to allocate markets and fix prices for various individual drugs. In August 2016, the United States Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation ("JPML") transferred actions regarding digoxin and doxycycline to this Court for coordinated or consolidated pretrial proceedings.[9] When the JPML transferred actions regarding additional generic drugs (clobetasol, desonide, fluocinonide, econazole, levothyroxine, and propranolol) into this MDL in April 2017, it noted that the separate conspiracies alleged in the individual complaints "may overlap significantly" because they "stem from the same [84] government investigation into price fixing, market allocation, and other anticompetitive conduct in the generic pharmaceuticals industry."[10]

---

[3] The Indirect Reseller Plaintiffs ("IRPs") are the following independent pharmacies that allege they acquire drugs indirectly through drug wholesalers rather than directly from drug manufacturers: Chet Johnson Drug, Inc.; Falconer Pharmacy, Inc.; Halliday's & Kovisto's Pharmacy; Russell's Mr. Discount Drugs, Inc.; and WestVal Pharmacy. IRP Am. Overarching Compl ¶¶ 12-16.

[4] The Kroger Plaintiffs are Kroger Co., on its own behalf and as the assignee of Cardinal Health, Inc.; Albertsons Companies, LLC; and H.E. Butt Grocery Company. Kroger Am. Compl. ¶¶ 60-62. Kroger Plaintiffs allege they own and operate retail stores and pharmacies that sell generic drugs and that they purchased generic drugs directly from Defendants and/or Defendants' co-conspirators. Id.

[5] The Marion Plaintiffs are Marion Diagnostic Center LLC and Marion HealthCare, LLC. Marion Second Am. Compl. ¶¶ 12-13. Marion Diagnostic alleges that it "operates a multidisciplinary healthcare facility including an outpatient surgery practice, a diagnostic center, and a walk-in clinic," and that it purchased generic drugs through distributor McKesson-Medical-Surgical, Inc. Id. ¶ 12. Marion HealthCare alleges that it "operates a multi-specialty surgery center" and that it purchased generic drugs through distributor McKesson-Medical-Surgical, Inc. Id. ¶ 13.

[6] "Humana, either directly or through its health plan subsidiaries, insure[s] and administers health plan benefits for its members and group customers, including self-funded group customers that contract with Humana to administer claims on their behalf and pursue recoveries related to those claims. Many of these health plan benefits provide members with prescription drug coverage under which claims for drugs manufactured by Defendants were submitted and paid." Humana Second Am. Compl. ¶ 48.

[7] The Plaintiff States' claims are brought by and through the Attorneys General for the following 49 jurisdictions: Connecticut, Arkansas, Alabama, Alaska, Arizona, California, Colorado, Delaware, the District of Columbia, Florida, Hawaii, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New Mexico, New York, North Carolina, North Dakota, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Puerto Rico, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Tennessee, Utah, Vermont, Virginia, Washington, West Virginia, Wisconsin, and Wyoming. See Plaintiff States' Consol. Am. Compl. (Civ. A. No. 17-3768, Dkt. No. 14). This Opinion does not address the States' complaint in Connecticut v. Teva Pharmaceuticals USA (Civ. A. No. 19-2407), a separate case filed by the State of Connecticut and 43 other jurisdictions that was transferred into this MDL on May 30, 2019.

[8] Certain individual Defendants have filed separate motions seeking to dismiss the claims against them in the Overarching Complaints. Those motions are not addressed in this Opinion.

[9] See In re Generic Drug Pricing Antitrust Litig., 227 F. Supp. 3d 1402, 1403-04 (J.P.M.L. 2016).

[10] In re Generic Digoxin & Doxycycline Antitrust Litig., 222 F. Supp. 3d 1341, 1343 (J.P.M.L. 2017).

After Plaintiff States joined the MDL with a complaint asserting claims regarding two additional drugs (glyburide and doxycycline hyclate delayed release),[11] they moved for leave to file a consolidated amended complaint alleging an overarching conspiracy by manufacturers seeking to minimize or prevent competition across the generic drug industry. Pursuant to Rule 15 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the Court granted the motion in June 2018, finding that Plaintiff States had "not acted with undue delay, bad faith, or dilatory motives" and that amendment would not be futile and would not prejudice Defendants.[12] The Court explained that Defendants' prejudice arguments, including arguments regarding the imposition of joint and several liability would "be [*515] carefully assessed, whether in the context of a consolidated complaint or a single-pharmaceutical complaint."[13]

In October 2018, the Court considered motions to dismiss drug-specific complaints for clobetasol, digoxin, divalproex ER, doxycycline hyclate, econazole, and pravastatin (the "Group [85] 1" drugs) and determined that Group 1 Plaintiffs' individual drug conspiracy allegations were sufficient to permit most of their Sherman Act claims to withstand dismissal.[14] In deciding those motions, the Court declined to consider allegations in the Plaintiff States' then-operative complaint regarding an overarching conspiracy.[15] Thereafter, DPPs, EPPs, IRPs, Humana, Kroger Plaintiffs, and Marion Plaintiffs filed their own Overarching Complaints alleging a multi-drug conspiracy or series of conspiracies involving multiple generic pharmaceuticals and multiple generic pharmaceutical manufacturers. Defendants now ask the Court to decide the sufficiency of Plaintiffs' claims that there was an overarching scheme to fix prices or otherwise interfere with the market for generic drugs.

Not every Overarching Complaint names the same Defendants[16] or asserts claims regarding the same individual drugs, drug formulations, and/or dosages.[17] But each of the Overarching Complaints alleges that Defendants pursued a common goal — to achieve artificially-inflated generic drug prices through the allocation of markets and through price-fixing agreements — and that they did so through a wide-ranging "fair share" [86] arrangement.[18] EPPs allege that "subsidiary agreements among the manufacturing Defendants relating to each of the" individual drugs involved sprang from the overarching "fair share" understanding.[19] DPPs allege that the existence of the overarching conspiracy is supported by the sheer number of generic drugs that are a part of this MDL.[20] The claims asserted in the Overarching Complaints would impose joint and several liability on Defendants not just for their participation in any individual drug conspiracy, but also for their participation in the alleged overarching scheme.

[20] DPP Am. Class Action Compl. Ex. A (table identifying MDL 2724 generic drugs as of December 2018).

"Fair share," as the Plaintiff States allege, approximates "how much market share each competitor is entitled to, based on the number of competitors in the particular drug market, with a potential adjustment based on the timing of the entry."[21] They allege that the "fair share" scheme has an objective of attaining "a state of equilibrium, where none are incentivized to compete for additional market [*516] share by eroding price" and that it is "implemented in different ways."[22] "There is no precise method for apportioning" market share between participants in the alleged scheme "because market share is obtained by winning the [87] business of various customers, which is inherently variable in a given year."[23]

IRPs describe the fair share scheme as > a system by which each Defendant is allocated its 'fair share' of the market for a certain drug or formulation[ ] based on the number of pre-existing competitors and their seniority. By making room for new entrants, the Defendants ensure that the newcomers will not attempt to win market share by offering lower prices . . . . The newcomers are therefore able to enter the market at artificially elevated prices, and thereafter, all of the competitors are able to raise their prices, customer by customer, with knowledge that their share is mostly safe from competition.[24]

EPPs allege that "[b]ecause Defendants are repeat players who routinely enter new markets but face the same competitors, their basic agreement—to eschew price competition and seek only a 'fair share' of the market — became the 'rules of the road' that governed their overarching conspiracy."[25] Kroger Plaintiffs allege that "Manufacturers implemented the 'fair share' agreement by refusing to bid for a particular customer or by providing a pretextual bid that they knew would not be successful."[26] Plaintiff [88] States allege that the "rules about "'fair share' apply equally to price increases. . . . [T]he larger understanding dictates that [Defendants] will not seek to compete or take advantage of a competitor's price increase by bidding a lower price to take that business."[27]

> Defendants that "played fair" and maintained a "fair share" would benefit from the overarching conspiracy as a whole, even if Defendants would occasionally "lose out" on one specific drug. . . . Defendants who undercut other Defendants' prices were seen as "not playing fair" and "punishing" a competitor, which was contrary to the "fair share" agreement.[28]

Kroger Plaintiffs explain that "the success of each conspiratorial price increase, each rigged bid, and/or each individual market allocation agreement was interdependent, because a given Defendant's commitment to one price increase helped solidify and protect other conspiracy price increases that were implemented."[29]

Plaintiffs allege that the fair share arrangement necessarily extended beyond any individual drug. For example, Humana alleges that "Defendants understood that to effectuate a successful price-fixing and market allocation agreement on one drug, they would need [89] to effectuate an agreement across each Defendant's portfolio of drugs."[30] Plaintiff States allege that "[d]ecisions on 'fair share' can, at times, be based on conduct that occurs between competitors across more than one generic drug market."[31] Correspondingly, IRPs allege that the > [*517] "fair share" scheme was not limited to a specific drug. For example, customers in one generic drug market were sometimes traded for customers in a different generic drug market so that fair shares could be allocated across the industry as a whole. In other instances, competitors would support a price increase for one drug with the understanding that their competitors would support a price increase for a different drug.[32]

DPPs allege that "achieving a fair share as to one generic drug could involve horse trading across other generic drugs," noting that "manufacturers were generally aware of each manufacturer's entire portfolio of generic drugs, as well as pending and/or approved Abbreviated New Drug Applications ('ANDAs')."[33] IRPs allege that "[t]he overarching conspiracy works because, to manufacture a generic drug and sell it in the United States, a manufacturer must have a Food and Drug Administration approval known [90] as an ANDA . . . ."[34] They contend that "Defendants can buy, trade, or license already-approved ANDAs," meaning that they "are always industry competitors of one another even if they are not product competitors at a certain moment."[35] Thus, EPPs cite common ANDAs between Defendants[36] as evidence of competitive overlap between the Defendants.[37] As an example, they allege that Defendants Par, Mylan, and Sun have overlapping ANDAs for at least three generic drug formulations and Defendants "Mylan and Heritage have overlapping ANDAs for at least 7" generic drug formulations.[38] EPPs contend that the Defendants named in their Overarching Complaint "are actual or potential competitors for all" of the generic drugs identified in their Overarching Complaint because of their overlapping ANDAs and, if all of the drugs in the MDL were taken into consideration, "the web of competitive overlap would be even denser."[39]

DPPs allege that under the fair share arrangement, generic drug manufacturers did not need to compete because they were "playing nice in the sandbox," which "entailed, among other things, getting along with ostensible competitors, communicating with them frequently about customers, [91] new drug launches, prices, bids, and generally not disturbing their share of the generic industry sandbox."[40] IRPs allege that "[i]mplementation of the overarching conspiracy was accomplished by a series of overlapping bilateral calls, emails, texts, and online messages and by multilateral meetings at industry conferences, private dinners, cocktails, and similar social outings."[41] Plaintiff States allege that, "[f]or [*518] example, between February 20, 2013 and December 20, 2013 (a 41-week period), there were at least forty-four (44) different tradeshows or customer conferences where the Defendants had the opportunity to meet in person."[42] DPPs similarly allege that "[p]laying nice in the sandbox was facilitated by generic manufacturer employees frequently communicating and socializing both in-person at near constant trade association events, via telephone and texting, or via other electronic means (e.g., email, social media platforms, LinkedIn, WhatsApp)."[43] DPPs also allege that generic drug manufacturers' employees had opportunities for interaction "in less formal settings such as happy hours, events for women in the industry, dinners, lunches, golf outings, . . . etc."[44]

EPPs [92] allege that

> Defendants implemented their conspiracy through numerous meetings and communications between and among their representatives, including at industry events such as [gatherings of] the Generic Pharmaceutical Association ("GPhA") (now the Association for Accessible Medicines), the National Association of Chain Drug Stores ("NACDS"), the Healthcare Distribution Management Association ("HDMA") (now the Healthcare Distribution Alliance) ("HDA"), Efficient Collaborative Retail Marketing ("ECRM"), and Minnesota Multistate Contracting Alliance for Pharmacy ("MMCAP").[45]

DPPs' Overarching Complaint alleges that generic drug manufacturers had extensive contacts through "almost constant trade association meetings," and, as an exhibit, includes a 49-page list of "Trade Association Contacts as to the Named Generic Drugs" identifying trade group meetings, their dates and locations, individual representatives of Defendants in attendance and their job titles.[46] Kroger Plaintiffs allege that "[t]he frequent trade association meetings provided an ideal mechanism through which Defendants could and did meet in person and reach agreements with their competitors to increase prices on the Price-Fixed [93] Generic Drugs sold to Plaintiffs and others in the United States."[47]

Plaintiffs also allege that "the interwoven, cooperative generic drug industry culture" was furthered by movement of generic drug manufacturers' employees and executives between various generic drug manufacturers.[48] IRPs allege that the fair share scheme was often implemented by "salespeople at the rank of 'National Account Manager' (NAM) or equivalent."[49] They allege that

> [m]ost of these NAMS had had several years of experience in the generic drug industry and personal connections that facilitated the overarching conspiracy. NAM Susan Knoblauch worked at Caraco (Defendant Sun) for nearly ten years [*519] before moving to a different sales position at Defendant Citron. NAM Beth Hamilton worked at Defendant Apotex before moving to Defendant Mayne. NAM Daniel Lukasiewicz began his career at Defendant Aurobindo, moved to Defendant Zydus, and currently works at Defendant Heritage. These individuals all reached back to their prior employers in order to allocate markets and agree to higher prices.[50]

DPPs cite the following examples of employee movement:

> [Rajiv] Malik[51] worked at Ranbaxy (now Defendant Sun) and Defendant Sandoz before [94] working at Defendant Mylan; Dan Lukasiewicz worked at Defendants Aurobindo and Zydus before working at Defendant Heritage; Susan Knoblauch worked at Defendant Sun before leaving to work as a NAM at Citron; Jan Bell worked at Defendant G&W before working at Defendant Mylan; Joseph Papa left Defendant Perrigo to become [51] Malik is named as a Defendant in the DPP, EPP, IRP and Plaintiff States' actions.

> Chairman and CEO of Defendant Valeant; Carole Ben-Maimon who worked in different roles at Defendants Impax, Par, and Teva; and Bhaskar Chaudhuri who was the General Manager of the Dermatology Division at Defendant Mylan before later becoming President of Defendant Valeant and a member of MDL Defendant Teligent's board of directors.[52]

EPPs also cite several examples of employee movement and continuing relationships, including the allegation that:

> Teva's Director of Strategic Customer Marketing Nisha Patel met Heritage's then-Sr. Vice President [Jason] Malek when she worked at [drug wholesaler] Amerisource Bergen, which was a Heritage customer that Malek managed. When Patel Moved to Defendant Teva in April 2013, she contacted Malek to determine which generic drug products Teva sold that overlapped with generic drugs sold by Heritage so that they could coordinate pricing.[53]

Illustrating the alleged consequences of the overlap between Defendants' employees, IRPs allege that Patel (then at Teva) and Malek (Heritage) had a "series of phone calls discussing price increases for multiple drugs, including at least Nystatin [tablets] and Theophylline" in February and March 2014, including a call from Malek to Patel on February 5, 2014 where they "spoke for more than an hour and discussed a price increase for at least the drugs Nystatin and Theophylline."[54] They also allege that Malek and Patel "had a seventeen-minute phone conversation" on April 15, 2014 where "they discussed at least seven different drugs," including acetazolamide, and agreed "that Teva would lead the price increases for Nystatin and Theophylline, and that if Heritage increased prices for the other five drugs . . . Teva would increase its prices for these drugs, or at a minimum, would not challenge Heritage's price increase."[55] Humana [*520] alleges that this phone conversation was part of "Heritage's attempt to impose industry-wide price increases simultaneously on eighteen drugs," an effort that "involved reaching out to competitors as to each of the drugs in an attempt to agree on price increases." [96] [56] IRPs contend that effective April 4, 2014, Teva more than doubled its list price for nystatin tablets.[57] They allege that Teva began implementing price increases for theophylline on the same day and that it held to its price increase even though a customer emailed Teva seeking price relief.[58] IRPs also allege that by July 9, 2014, "Heritage increased Theophylline prices to at least 20 different customers."[59]

IRPs allege that Heritage's communications regarding nystatin tablet prices also extended to Defendant Sun. They assert that Ann Sather (Heritage) called Knoblauch (then at Sun) on April 22, 2014, to discuss an agreed upon price for nystatin tablets and other drugs.[60] IRPs allege that Sather then emailed colleagues at Heritage "to report that Sun was 'on board.'"[61] Glazer responded to Sather's email with an email telling her "not to write such emails."[62]

EPPs allege that on April 16, 2014, one day after her seventeen minute conversation with Malek, Patel spoke on the phone for "nearly twenty minutes" with a Zydus employee to discuss acetazolamide pricing.[63] They allege that "Malek believed it was important to 'socialize' the idea of an Acetazolamide price increase with [97] competitors before implementing it" and therefore, "he and the Heritage NAMs contacted Teva and Zydus to discuss pricing and customers either via phone, text or email, or in person, often through industry trade association meetings and conferences."[64] IRPs allege that Malek sent emails on May 6 and 7, 2014 explaining "that he had obtained agreements to raise the price of acetazolamide."[65] Plaintiff States allege that Heritage raised its acetazolamide prices to at least 17 different customers by July 19, 2014.[66] EPPs allege that Teva and Zydus employees "were also in close contact with each other about Acetazolamide" during the same timeframe, citing an exchange of "numerous text messages between Teva and Zydus employees on May 14, 2014.[67] Plaintiff States contend that because of Defendants' collective agreement to raise prices for generic drugs, they eliminated price competition between Heritage, Teva, and Zydus for acetazolamide.[68]

Other allegations in the Overarching Complaints demonstrate overlapping [*521] points of contact between Defendants and their employees. For example, DPPs allege that on May 14, 2014 (the same day as the above-referenced alleged text messages between Teva and Zydus [98] employees), "executives from Heritage, Aurobindo and Sandoz met in person to discuss a fosi-HCTZ price increase at a MMCAP conference in Minnesota."[69] They allege that executives from Aurobindo and Sandoz continued discussions regarding the intended price increase via text message and telephone the next day.[70] DPPs allege that additional calls and text messages between executives for Aurobindo, Glenmark, and Sandoz regarding a planned fosi-HCTZ price increase continued into June 2014.[71] A Heritage executive is alleged to have had an 18 minute phone call with an Aurobindo executive on June 25, 2014 — the day before Heritage issued price increase letters for numerous drugs, including fosi-HCTZ . . . ."[72] After further alleged internal and external discussions, Citron began implementing its own fosi-HCTZ price increases on July 15, 2014.[73] DPPs allege that "[b]y early 2015, Defendants Heritage, Aurobindo, Citron, Glenmark, and Sandoz" had each increased their prices for fosi-HCTZ and "[n]o non-collusive market factors (e.g., product shortages) can explain Defendants' artificially inflated prices."[74]

More broadly, the States allege that from "July 1, 2013 through July 30, 2014, senior sales [99] executives and other individuals responsible for the pricing, marketing and sales of generic drugs at Defendant Heritage spoke to representatives of every other U.S.-based corporate Defendant [in the Plaintiff States' action] by phone and/or text on multiple occasions."[75] Taking their allegations as true, Heritage had at least 513 phone or text contacts with alleged co-conspirators during that one year period.[76] The States also allege that "senior sales executives and other individuals responsible for the pricing, marketing and sales of generic drugs at Defendant Teva spoke by phone and/or exchanged text messages with representatives of every other U.S.-based corporate Defendant [in the Plaintiff States' action] during the same period."[77] Again, taking their allegations as true, Teva had at least 1,501 phone or text contacts with alleged co-conspirators that year.[78]

Some Overarching Complaints also specifically include allegations linking Defendants with portfolios that did not include the same generic drugs. In their Overarching Complaint, EPPs contend that the overarching nature of the conspiracy is underscored by alleged communications such as those between Teva and Defendants that [100] did not concurrently sell any Teva-manufactured drug (Dr. Reddy's, Glenmark, Lannett, Mayne, Par and Sandoz).[79] EPPs also note that during one of the alleged text exchanges between Heritage's Sather and Sun's Knoblauch, "Sather informed [*522] Knoblauch of Heritage's pricing discussions with Actavis on Glyburide-Metformin and Verapamil, two drugs that Sun did not sell."[80]

The Overarching Complaints allege that the market for generic drugs is conducive to collusive activity between generic drug manufacturers.[81] For example, DPPs allege that "[a]bsent collusion, individual Defendants and co-conspirators could not have increased their prices to the high levels they did (or maintain high prices in the face of a competitor's significantly lower price) without incurring the loss of a significant volume of sales."[82] Kroger Plaintiffs allege that "each Price-Fixed Generic Drug has commodity-like characteristics, there are barriers to entry of a new competitor, the demand is highly inelastic, and the market for the sale of each generic drug is relatively concentrated. These economic conditions make the market for the manufacture and sale of the Price-Fixed Generic Drugs conducive to cartelization."[83] EPPs allege [101] that "[b]ecause purchasers choose whose generic pharmaceutical product to buy based primarily on price, and unilateral price increases generally result in loss of market share, it would have been economically irrational for any one Defendant to raise its prices without assurance that its competitors either would also increase prices or at least not compete on pricing."[84] DPPs assert that "as the industry grew more comfortable with the Fair Share Agreement, generic drug manufacturers became bolder and would, at times, substantially raise generic drug prices."[85] Humana contends that the alleged [*523] "increases are not 5% or even 10% jumps—they are of far greater magnitude."[86] DPPs allege that during the time relevant to their claims the "pricing dynamics in the generic drug industry changed"[87] from what would have been expected given the characteristics of the generic drug market.[88]

Alleged price changes across a broad range of generic drugs "prompted close scrutiny of the industry,"[89] including: (1) a criminal investigation by the Antitrust Division of the U.S. Department of Justice ("DOJ") that has "resulted in price-fixing guilty pleas from two senior executives at Defendant [102] Heritage" — Chief Executive Officer Jeffrey Glazer and President Jason Malek — "relating to the sale of Glyburide and Doxycycline Hyclate;"[90] (2) an "ongoing" investigation initiated by the State of Connecticut and joined by other states;[91] and (3) various congressional inquiries.[92] DPPs allege that many generic drug manufacturers have publicly reported that they have received investigative subpoenas regarding pricing and other information relevant to their generic drug portfolios — subpoenas reaching beyond any individual drug.[93] Humana alleges that "subpoenas to Defendants targeting inter-Defendant communications further support the existence of communication lines between competitors with respect to generic pricing and market allocation."[94] For example, it cites a quarterly report that Defendant Lannett filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission which reported that Lannett's Senior Vice President of Sales and Marketing had been "served with a grand jury subpoena relating to a federal investigation of the generic pharmaceutical company into possible violations of the Sherman Act" and explained that the subpoena was "not specifically directed to any particular product and is not limited [103] to any time period."[95] EPPs allege that "DOJ's and the Connecticut AG's investigations, and the grand jury subpoenas and investigative demands that have issued in conjunction with them, have uncovered numerous inter-competitor communications."[96] Plaintiffs' claims that Defendants [*524] engaged in an overarching multi-drug conspiracy rely on allegations arising from these investigations.

II. Standard of Review

HN1[] Defendants seek to dismiss the overarching conspiracy claims against them pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6), which provides for dismissal of a complaint for failure to state a claim when a plaintiff's "plain statement" lacks enough substance to show that it is entitled to relief.[97] "[J]udging the sufficiency of a pleading is a context-dependent exercise."[98] On a motion to dismiss, the Court "consider[s] plausibility, not probability . . . ."[99] Plaintiffs must allege "enough fact to raise a reasonable expectation that discovery will reveal evidence of illegal agreement."[100] "Speculative or conjectural assertions are not sufficient."[101] However, Plaintiffs are not required "to plead facts that, if true, definitively rule out all possible innocent explanations."[102] "[I]t is improper at [104] this stage of the proceedings to weigh alternatives and [decide] which is more plausible."[103] "And, of course, a well-pleaded complaint may proceed even if it strikes a savvy judge that actual proof of those facts is improbable, and that a recovery is very remote and unlikely."[104]

III. Discussion[105]

In this Opinion, the Court does not consider any Defendant's challenge to the sufficiency of allegations regarding any drug-specific conduct. Instead, the Court considers whether Plaintiffs have sufficiently alleged the existence of a conspiracy that extends beyond the boundaries of any individual drug. HN3[] "So long as an alleged conspiracy is supported by enough facts to make it plausible, . . . it is of no matter whether it involves three conspirators or a score or more."[106] As EPPs argue, "the question here goes to the scope of each Defendants' anticompetitive agreement, not its existence" and, based on the facts alleged in the Overarching Complaints, [*525] discovery will be required to answer the question.[107]

A. TWOMBLY

HN4[] To state a claim for a Sherman Act conspiracy, Plaintiffs must allege "enough factual matter (taken as true) to suggest that an agreement was made."[108] In the absence of [105] allegations of direct evidence of such an agreement, Plaintiffs may allege parallel conduct plus "a context that raises a suggestion of a preceding agreement, not merely parallel conduct that could just as well be independent action."[109] The necessary context may be shown through allegations of "plus factors" that "serve as proxies for direct evidence of an agreement."[110] "Plaintiffs are not required to plead simultaneous price increases — or that the price increases were identical — in order to demonstrate parallel conduct."[111] At least three "plus factors" support a finding that there is a suggestion of a preceding agreement: "(1) evidence that the defendant had a motive to enter into a price fixing conspiracy; (2) evidence that the defendant acted contrary to its interests; and (3) evidence implying a traditional conspiracy."[112] "[T]he conspiracy must not be compartmentalized. The character and effect of [the] conspiracy are not to be judged by dismembering it and viewing its separate parts, but only by looking at it as a whole."[113]

For purposes of alleging an overarching conspiracy, plaintiffs have alleged parallel conduct in the form of price increases across the market for generic drugs that [106] are "reasonably proximate in time and value."[114] Also, Plaintiffs have alleged that the structure of the market for generic drugs motivated Defendants to enter into an antitrust conspiracy and undertake actions against self interest in the form of pricing and bidding decisions that would be irrational in a competitive market for generic drugs. Plaintiffs' Overarching Complaints also allege facts implying the existence of a traditional conspiracy: inter-defendant communications, trade association leadership, membership, and meeting attendance, and ongoing state and federal investigations into generic drug pricing. Plaintiffs' allegations are not mere "labels and conclusions," "allegation[s] of parallel conduct and . . . bare assertion[s] of conspiracy."[115]

In support of their motion to dismiss the overarching conspiracy claims, Defendants cite a 2016 decision in In re: Automotive Parts Antitrust Litigation that denied a motion seeking to consolidate claims and amend complaints in order to assert an overarching conspiracy.[116] There, the court [*526] declined to allow the plaintiffs to file an amended complaint alleging an overarching conspiracy for certain auto parts sold to Original Equipment Manufacturers, [107] explaining that the plaintiffs were required to "allege facts creating at least an inference as to each Defendant's knowing participation in a conspiracy to raise, fix, maintain, or stabilize the price of auto parts, not just the parts it makes or sells."[117] The court determined that the plaintiffs alleged "multiple, separate, and product-specific" conspiracies rather than a single overarching conspiracy because the plaintiffs made "no allegations . . . of deals between makers of different component parts" and declined to make an inference of the defendants' knowledge outside their "own specific deals."[118]

Here, however, the Overarching Complaints allege that Defendants engaged in conduct that reached beyond their individual drugs (e.g., attendance at trade association events that "were not partitioned into drug-specific conclaves").[119] The facts in the Overarching Complaints are more like those alleged in a 2018 decision in the Auto Parts MDL, which determined that the plaintiffs had sufficiently stated a broad conspiracy among multiple defendants to rig bids and fix prices of air conditioning systems where the plaintiffs alleged defendants who [108] manufactured different component parts of the systems (similar to Defendants here, who manufacture different drugs) "participated in trade meetings involving the AC Systems market, in which they discussed the market generally" and also alleged some admissions of guilt by certain defendants and "market conditions conducive to a price-fixing conspiracy."[120] Those allegations, combined with the plaintiffs' allegations that "employees attended automotive air conditioning industry meetings and discussed with employees of other Defendants the status of their respective companies' negotiations with [Original Equipment Manufacturers]," and "allegations about industry conditions supporting an inference that the market was susceptible to collusion," were sufficient to satisfy Twombly.[121]

The allegations in Plaintiffs' Overarching Complaints plausibly allege that Defendants engaged in a conspiracy regarding the broader market for generic drugs, and not just the market for any individual drug. The connective tissue Plaintiffs have alleged in their Overarching Complaints gives credence to a claim that Defendants engaged in "behavior that would probably not result from [109] chance, coincidence, independent response to common stimuli, or mere interdependence unaided by an advance understanding among the parties."[122] Plaintiffs make plausible claims that the alleged individual drug conspiracies were connected by common goals, methods, or actors so as to form a broader overarching conspiracy.[123] Defendants' arguments that [*527] there are plausible alternative explanations for the overarching conspiracy should be tested by discovery. They are not a matter for decision at this stage of the proceedings.

B. UNITED STATES V. KELLY

To determine whether Plaintiffs' allegations are enough to state an overarching conspiracy claim, Defendants argue the Court should apply the three-factor test set forth in United States v. Kelly.[124] They argue that "plaintiffs must plead facts showing that (1) each alleged conspirator was aware of, and committed to, a common goal that transcended individual agreements in which it is specifically alleged to have participated; (2) the alleged agreement contemplated a result 'that will not continue without the cooperation of the conspirators,' — i.e., that the individual conspiracies were interdependent; and (3) there [110] was sufficient overlap among the participants in the individual conspiracies."[125]

In Kelly, the Third Circuit considered whether there was enough evidence to support the conclusion that a drug-dealer's criminal activities were part of a larger illegal drug distribution operation in the context of a post-trial appeal of a criminal conviction. Obviously, the circumstances here are different. This is not a criminal matter[126] and there has not yet been a trial — or even full discovery. Instead, the Court has been asked to consider the sufficiency of Plaintiffs' overarching conspiracy allegations in the context of motions to dismiss and the Court is required to accept all facts alleged in the complaints as true.[127] Defendants do not cite any binding precedent that would require the Court to apply the Kelly factors at the pleading stage in the context of an alleged civil conspiracy.[128]

[*528] Twombly HN6[] sets the bar for Plaintiffs' overarching conspiracy allegations, not Kelly. But even if Kelly were the proper measuring stick for Plaintiffs' Overarching Complaints, their allegations plead an overarching conspiracy. Kelly requires consideration [111] of the totality of the circumstances.[129] No one allegation must [126] In the criminal context, "[t]he issue of whether a single conspiracy or multiple conspiracies exist is a fact question to be decided by a jury." United States v. Bobb, 471 F.3d 491, 494 (3d Cir. 2006). Also, the question of whether a criminal defendant may be charged with participation in a single overarching conspiracy or multiple independent conspiracies raises questions under the Double Jeopardy Clause, which protects against successive prosecutions and punishments for the same criminal offense. Cf. United States v. Becker, 892 F.2d 265, 268 (3d Cir. 1989). ("[T]he double jeopardy clause prohibits [the government] from splitting one conspiracy into several prosecutions."). That concern is not implicated here.

[128] In their joint response, Plaintiffs state that "the parties agree that Kelly supplies the substantive law with which Plaintiffs' overarching conspiracy allegations should be evaluated." Pls.' Joint Opp. Br. at 7-8. However, like Defendants, Plaintiffs do not cite any binding precedent that would require the court to apply Kelly in the context of a motion to dismiss civil antitrust conspiracy claims where Plaintiffs' allegations must be taken as true. See id. In the nearly 30 years since Kelly was decided, the Third Circuit has not cited it in a civil case, and except for the decision in *In re K-Dur Antitrust Litig., No. 01-1652, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22982, 2016 WL 755623, at 18 (D.N.J. Feb. 25, 2016), cited by the parties, Kelly has not been featured in civil antitrust cases. See, e.g., In re Processed Egg, 821 F. Supp. 2d 709 (not citing Kelly in evaluating claims of an overarching civil antitrust conspiracy). Moreover, in the criminal context, Kelly applies to post-trial motions. Cf. United States v. Keystone Biofuels, 350 F. Supp. 3d 310, 320 (M.D. Pa. 2018) (holding that the Kelly "test cannot be dispositive of whether a defendant's pre-trial motion to dismiss based upon the purported duplicity of a conspiracy count in an indictment should be granted . . . because, at the pretrial stage of prosecution, t[he] Court's standard of review requires us to accept as true all of the allegations in the Superseding Indictment").

prove Plaintiffs' overarching conspiracy claims. And "the absence of one [Kelly] factor does not necessarily defeat an inference of the existence of a single conspiracy."[130] The allegations that permit Plaintiffs' overarching conspiracy claims to withstand a challenge under Twombly also permit them to withstand a challenge under Kelly.

1. Common Goal

The "common goal" required under Kelly need not be complex or detailed to state a claim. In Kelly, the common goal "was simply to make money selling 'speed.'"[131] In the Overarching Complaints, Plaintiffs have alleged that Defendants shared the common goal of increasing and stabilizing the prices of generic drugs. For example, DPPs allege that Defendants had a "common understanding and goal . . . to achieve artificially inflated prices" by disincentivizing competition for additional market share through price erosion.[132] EPPs allege that "[t]he purpose of Defendants' unlawful "fair share" allocation was to fix, maintain and stabilize prices—either for a particular generic drug or any number of generic drugs. In this way, each entrant would benefit from coordination as a whole, [112] even if a manufacturer did not seek a market allocation for a particular drug."[133] Humana alleges that "Defendants' shared understanding and goal is for the competitors in a particular market to discuss amongst themselves an agreement on 'fair share' with the objective of attaining a state of equilibrium where no competitor is incentivized to compete for additional market share by eroding price."[134] Kroger Plaintiffs allege that Defendants' common goal was "to cartelize the Price-Fixed Generic Drugs in order to achieve substantial supracompetitive [*529] profits."[135] Plaintiff States allege that Defendants' "overarching goal" was "to avoid price erosion and maintain inflated pricing within and across their respective broad product portfolios and, at times, increase pricing for targeted products without triggering a 'fight to the bottom' among existing competitors."[136] No more is required to allege a common goal at this stage of the case.[137]

Defendants argue that the Overarching Complaints should be dismissed because Plaintiffs have not alleged facts "showing that each Defendant shares the common goal of an overarching conspiracy involving other drugs sold by other Defendants."[138] HN8[] But Kelly does not require [113] proof "that each defendant knew all the details, goals or other participants in order" for the Court to find there was a single conspiracy.[139] "[A] common goal may exist even when conspirators individually or in groups perform different tasks in pursuing the common goal, and a single conspiracy may attract different members at different times or involve different sub-groups committing acts in furtherance of the overall plan."[140] "[A] defendant need not be accused of having engaged in all activities alleged to have advanced the conspiracy."[141] In other words, "one conspiracy can involve multiple subsidiary schemes."[142] That is what Plaintiffs have alleged in their Overarching Complaints: a single conspiracy with a common goal, facilitated by multiple schemes specific to various individual generic drugs.

[129] To determine whether conspiracy defendants are part of a single conspiracy or multiple conspiracies in the context of a double jeopardy claim arising from criminal conspiracy charges, the Third Circuit applies a "totality of the circumstances" test. See United States v. Travillion, 759 F.3d 281, 295 (3d Cir. 2014). Factors considered are whether the alleged conspiracies occurred in the same place, had a significant degree of temporal overlap or an overlap of personnel, and whether the defendants' roles and actions in the alleged conspiracies were similar. Id. But the "factors need not be applied in a rigid manner, as different conspiracies may warrant emphasizing different factors." Id. (citation omitted).

2. INTERDEPENDENCE

HN9[] The second Kelly factor asks the Court to consider whether Defendants' conduct was intended to "bring to pass a continuous result that w[ould] not continue without the continuous cooperation of the conspirators."[143] "To evaluate interdependence, the court engages in an inquiry focused on 'the extent to which the success or failure of one conspiracy is independent of a corresponding [114] success or failure by the other.'"[144] Courts "consider how helpful one individual's contribution is to another's goals."[145] Interdependence "helps establish whether the alleged coconspirators are all committed to the same set of objectives in a single conspiracy."[146]

Defendants argue that Plaintiffs' Overarching Complaints should fail because they "fail to allege facts demonstrating why an agreement as to all drugs would be necessary to reach agreement on one [*530] drug."[147] Responding to Defendants, Plaintiffs explain that "[w]hile Defendants' massive web of interlocking market allocation and price-fixing agreements might not have completely unraveled if one strand had to come apart, the Complaints contain multiple examples of how the agreements fit together and reinforced each other, allowing for easy collaboration and policing."[148] Further, by connecting multiple single-drug conspiracies, Defendants were able to better conceal their overarching conspiracy by "varying the leader of the price increase across drugs."[149]

Defendants argue that Plaintiffs' interdependence allegations make no economic sense — that individual Defendants had no incentive to increase prices for products that they did not sell. [115] But in the Overarching Complaints, Plaintiffs have alleged the contrary. Humana alleges that "putative competitors declined to compete meaningfully on a bid for one drug in exchange for the opportunity to provide a pre-determined winning bid for a different drug" and that "an agreement by a putative competitor to join in the price increase for one drug often instigated a trade-off for that same competitor to lead a price increase for another drug."[150] Plaintiff States allege that

> [t]he agreement among all of the Defendants to adhere to the rules regarding 'fair share' is critical in order to maintain high prices. If even one competitor is not aware of (and behaving in accordance with) the larger understanding, it can lead to unwanted competition and lower prices. In the relatively few instances where a competitor prioritizes gaining market share over the larger understanding of maintaining "fair share," that competitor is viewed as "irresponsible," and is spoken to by competitors.[151]

EPPs assert that

> The effectiveness of an agreement on any one drug would be limited and unstable without a broader agreement that encompassed other drugs as well. For example, an agreement between two Defendants [116] to raise prices or to allocate market share on one drug would not likely hold where those same two Defendants engaged in vigorous price competition on another drug, or where a third manufacturer not party to that agreement entered the market with an intent to compete on price. Therefore, Defendants understood that in order to be effective, their agreement needed to extend to multiple manufacturers and drugs.[152]

Similarly, IRPs allege that "Defendants who undercut other Defendants' prices were chastised for 'not playing fair' because lowering prices is considered irresponsible and to the detriment of all."[153] Under the allegations in the Overarching Complaints, Defendants who refused to "play fair" with competitors when asked to allocate markets or to raise prices risked retribution not just for the individual drugs implicated, but also for other generic drugs in their portfolios. These allegations create a plausible inference that "Defendants knew that they would need to [*531] enter into future agreements with other combinations of would-be competitors (in their existing markets or new markets) and therefore had a vested interest in 'playing fair' according to their shared code of conduct."[154] Whether [117] this will ultimately prove to be the case is not before the Court at this time.

Defendants insist that Plaintiffs cannot show interdependence by alleging "the existence of an alleged 'series' of numerous individual conspiracies in the same industry."[155] They argue that "to state a claim for an overarching conspiracy, a complaint must allege facts demonstrating 'how, when, or where' the individual conspiracies became connected to each other in a single overarching conspiracy."[156] However, through detailed allegations regarding communications and other interactions between individual Defendants, Plaintiffs' Overarching Complaints have sufficiently alleged the how, when, or where needed to make plausible a claim that Defendants' actions regarding the prices of individual generic drugs in their portfolios were beneficial to and reinforced a broader scheme regarding generic drug prices. At this stage of the litigation, Plaintiffs have sufficiently alleged interdependence.

3. SUFFICIENT OVERLAP

Even if Plaintiffs' allegations did fall short on the other Kelly factors, their allegations of significant overlap among Defendants and the alleged individual drug conspiracies permit their overarching conspiracy [118] claims to withstand dismissal. Defendants argue that there is insufficient overlap between the participants in the alleged individual conspiracies because "none of the Private Plaintiffs alleges that any single Defendant participated in each of the individual drug conspiracies, and the Plaintiff States allege that only one Defendant participated in each of the 15 individual drug conspiracies alleged in the State Complaint."[157] Plaintiffs respond that their claims "rest on far more than the 'mere overlap' of some defendants in the interlocking conspiracies alleged."[158] The States argue that their Overarching Complaint "contains much more connective tissue between the Defendants and their agreements: overlapping, but not identical, sets of Defendants discussing price increases for multiple drugs at the same time; discussions on pricing activities for drugs that a Defendant did not manufacture; constant, crisscrossing communications among each other."[159]

There is no question that "mere overlap of some defendants in some of the transactions is, on its own, insufficient to establish an overarching agreement."[160] But in the Overarching Complaints, Plaintiffs allege much [119] more than the "mere [*532] overlap" of some of the Defendants. Plaintiffs allege that Defendants have numerous and sustained contacts through (1) representation on trade association boards of directors; (2) trade association membership; (3) attendance at trade association meetings and events; and (4) other industry gatherings. Under the allegations in the Overarching Complaints, "Defendants participated in (and in many cases governed) the same trade associations and attended numerous trade association activities."[161] As EPPs argue, "Defendants' meetings at trade association events were not partitioned into drug-specific conclaves. Trade events . . . are broadly focused; there were not, for example, Glyburide conferences and Acetazolamide conferences, but rather, an incredible number of events at which all manufacturers of all drugs were together."[162]

DPPs cite their allegations regarding Defendant Zydus as an example of the points of overlap between the alleged individual drug conspiracies. They cite their allegations that: (1) Zydus was one of many Defendants that received a congressional letter inquiring about drug pricing; (2) like many other Defendants, Zydus received government subpoenas regarding [120] generic drug industry practices; (3) Zydus and its co-Defendants actively participated in numerous trade associations; (4) Zydus's Chairman of the Board served on the GPhA's Board of Directors throughout the relevant time period and attended trade association gatherings at key points during alleged anticompetitive conduct as to acetazolamide pricing; (5) Defendant Heritage's NAM previously worked at Zydus and is alleged to "have colluded with other Defendants' personnel as to many drugs," including his former Zydus colleagues who moved to Citron; (6) communications between Zydus's Senior Director of National Accounts and Teva's Patel regarding pricing of at least acetazolamide; and (7) contacts between Zydus's Vice President of Sales and both Heritage's Malek (who has entered a guilty plea for his conduct relevant to glyburide and doxycycline hyclate) and Teva, which sold over a dozen drugs implicated in this MDL.[163] Many other allegations in the Overarching Complaints paint a similar picture of overlap between Defendants, although the allegations are more detailed with respect to some Defendants than others.

When Plaintiffs' allegations in each Overarching Complaint are viewed as a whole, [121] they "do not simply reflect a series of disconnected conspiracies . . . ."[164] Plaintiffs "do not rely exclusively on the illustrative examples of collusive activity among Defendants or the trade meetings."[165] They also allege similar price trends across the market for generic drugs and various investigations involving overlapping Defendants, including one resulting in Malek's admission of guilt. Malek is specifically alleged to have had numerous contacts with employees of Defendants other than his own employer. These allegations bolster the plausibility of the antitrust claims set forth in the Overarching Complaints. Whether the points of overlap alleged in the Overarching Complaints ultimately will be sufficient to prove Plaintiffs' overarching conspiracy claims is not the question before the Court. Plaintiffs have alleged enough overlap under Kelly to allow them to proceed with discovery regarding [*533] the question of whether there was or is a broad overarching conspiracy connecting the alleged individual generic drug conspiracies.

IV. CONCLUSION

Plaintiffs have sufficiently alleged the existence of an overarching conspiracy and the Court will permit the claims based on an overarching conspiracy [122] theory to proceed. Defendants' joint motion to dismiss plaintiffs' overarching conspiracy claims will be denied. Whether any individual Defendant has a specific defense to the claims raised against it in the Overarching Complaints is a separate question not here resolved.

An appropriate Order follows.

APPENDIX B

The generic drugs identified in DPPs' first [127] amended class action complaint (Civ. A. No. 18-2641) are: acetazolamide, doxycycline delayed release, doxycycline monohydrate, fosinopril-HCTZ, glipizide-metformin, glyburide, glyburide-metformin, leflunomide, meprobamate, metronidazole, nimodipine, nystatin, paromomycin, theophylline, verapamil, and zoledronic acid.

The generic drugs identified in EPPs' amended class action complaint (Civ. A. No. 18-2401) are: acetazolamide, doxycycline hyclate (regular release and delayed release), doxycycline monohydrate, fosinopril-HCTZ, glipizide-metformin, glyburide, glyburide-metformin, leflunomide, meprobamate, nimodipine, nystatin, paromomycin, theophylline, verapamil, and zoledronic acid.

The generic drugs identified in the IRPs' amended overarching complaint (Civ. A. No. 18-2533) are acetazolamide, doxycycline hyclate (regular release and delayed release), doxycycline monohydrate, fosinopril-HCTZ, glipizide-metformin, glyburide, glyburide-metformin, leflunomide, meprobamate, nimodipine, nystatin, paromomycin, theophylline, verapamil, and zoledronic acid.

The generic drugs identified in the second amended complaint in the Humana action (Civ. A. No. 18-3299) are: acetazolamide, [*535] doxycycline hyclate [128] (regular release and delayed release), doxycycline monohydrate, leflunomide, nystatin, theophylline ER and verapamil.

The generic drugs identified in Kroger Plaintiffs' amended complaint (Civ. A. No. 18-824) are: acetazolamide, albuterol, amitriptyline, baclofen, benazepril-HCTZ, clobetasol, clomipramine, desonide, digoxin, divalproex ER, doxycycline hyclate (regular release and delayed release), doxycycline monohydrate, econazole, fluocinonide, fosinopril-HCTZ, glipizide-metformin, glyburide, glyburide-metformin, leflunomide, levothyroxine, lidocaine-prilocaine, metronidazole, meprobamate, nimodipine, nystatin, paromomycin, pravastatin, propranolol, theophylline ER, ursodiol, verapamil, and zoledronic acid.

The generic drugs specifically identified as being subject to market allocation and price fixing conspiracies in Marion Plaintiffs' second amended class action complaint (Civ. A. No. 14-4137) are: acetazolamide, doxycycline hyclate delayed release, doxycycline monohydrate, fosinopril-HCTZ, glipizide-metformin, glyburide, glyburide-metformin, leflunomide, meprobamate, nimodipine, nystatin, paromomycin, theophylline ER, verapamil, and zoledronic acid. Marion Second Am. Compl. ¶ 51. [129] Marion Plaintiffs allege an overarching conspiracy that includes "all, or nearly all generic drugs" and they allege they purchased many other generic drugs not included in the above list. See Marion Second Am. Compl. ¶¶ 12-13.

The generic drugs identified in Plaintiff States' consolidated amended complaint (Civ. A. No. 17-3768) are: acetazolamide, doxycycline hyclate delayed release, doxycycline monohydrate, fosinopril-HCTZ, glipizide-metformin, glyburide, glyburide-metformin, leflunomide, meprobamate, nimodipine, nystatin, paromomycin, theophylline, verapamil, and zoledronic acid.

ORDER

[*3] Before the Court is a Motion of the National Association of Realtors to Transfer this Case to the Northern District of Illinois (Doc. #58). For the following reasons the motion is DENIED.

I. Background

Plaintiffs "bring this action on behalf of themselves and on behalf of the plaintiff classes . . . consisting of all persons and entities who listed properties on one of four Multiple Listing Services[1] (the "Subject MLS") and paid a broker commission from at least April 29, 2015 until the Present (the "Subject MLS Class Period)." (Doc. #38, p. 1). Defendants are the National Association of Realtors ("NAR") "and the four largest national real estate broker franchisors[,] . . . each of which has a significant presence in the Kansas City metropolitan area." (Doc. #38, p. 1). Plaintiffs allege that "[t]ogether, Defendants have conspired to require home sellers to pay the broker representing the buyer of their homes, and to pay an inflated amount, in violation of federal antitrust law, the Missouri Merchandising Practices Act ("MMPA")[2], and the Missouri Antitrust Law[.]" (Doc. #38, p. 1). Plaintiffs allege that "[t]he cornerstone of Defendants' conspiracy is NAR's adoption and implementation of [*4] a rule that requires all seller's brokers to make a blanket, unilateral and effectively non-negotiable offer of buyer broker compensation (the "Adversary Commission Rule") when listing a property on a [MLS]." (Doc. #38, p. 3). Plaintiffs allege "[t]he MLSs at issue in this case are controlled by local NAR associations, and access to such MLSs is conditioned on brokers agreeing to follow all mandatory rules set forth in NAR's Handbook on Multiple Listing Policy." (Doc. #38, p. 3). NAR moves the Court to transfer this case to the Northern District of Illinois, arguing "this Court lacks personal jurisdiction over NAR under either the Missouri long-arm statute, Mo. Rev. Stat. § 506.500.1, [or] under § 12 of the Clayton Act[.]" (Doc. #58, p. 1).

II. Legal Standards

A. Transfer to Cure Lack of Personal Jurisdiction

When a "court finds that there is a want of jurisdiction, the court shall, if it is in the interest of justice, transfer such action or appeal to any other such court . . . in which the action or appeal could have been brought at the time it was filed[.]" 28 U.S.C. § 1631.

B. Transfer to Cure Improper Venue under the Clayton Act

"The district court of a district in which is filed a case laying venue in the wrong division or district [*5] shall dismiss, or if it be in the interest of justice, transfer such case to any district or division in which it could have been brought." 28 U.S.C. § 1406(a). "[W]hen reviewing a motion to transfer, a court may consider evidence outside of the pleadings but must draw all reasonable inferences and resolve factual conflicts in favor of the non-moving party." *Thompson v. Titus Transp., LP, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 168730, 2012 WL 5933075, at 3 (D. Kan. Nov. 27, 2012) (internal citation and quotation marks omitted).

III. Discussion

A. Personal Jurisdiction Under the Missouri Long-Arm Statute

---

[1] Plaintiffs describe an MLS as "a database of properties listed for sale in a particular geographic region." (Doc. #38, p. 3). Plaintiffs state that if brokers are members of an MLS, they "are required to list all properties on the MLS." (Doc. #38, p. 3).

[2] Plaintiff states that "[t]he Class Period for the MMPA Class is April 29, 2014 (or earlier) until the Present." (Doc. #38, p. 1)

NAR argues this Court lacks personal jurisdiction over NAR under the Missouri long-arm statute. Plaintiffs do not rely on the Missouri long-arm statute to argue this Court's personal jurisdiction over Defendants. Plaintiffs rely solely on the Clayton Act's personal jurisdiction and venue rules. Accordingly, the Court will not entertain NAR's argument relating to personal jurisdiction under Missouri's long-arm statute, and NAR's motion to transfer pursuant to § 1631 is denied.

B. Personal Jurisdiction Under the Clayton Act

Section 12 of the Clayton Act provides special venue and service of process rules for private antitrust actions brought against corporate defendants. Section 12 provides:

> Any suit, action, or proceeding under the antitrust laws against [*6] a corporation may be brought not only in the judicial district whereof it is an inhabitant, but also in any district wherein it may be found or transacts business; and all process in such cases may be served in the district of which it is an inhabitant, or wherever it may be found.

15 U.S.C. § 22. "[A] corporation is engaged in transacting business in a district . . . if in fact, in the ordinary and usual sense, it 'transacts business' therein of any substantial character." United States v. Scophony Corp. of Am., 333 U.S. 795, 807, 68 S. Ct. 855, 92 L. Ed. 1091 (1948) (internal citation omitted). If venue is proper under Section 12, personal jurisdiction may be established by worldwide service of process. *In re Vitamin C Antitrust Litig., 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 100075, 2012 WL 2930109, 4 (E.D. N.Y. July 18, 2012); Go-Video, Inc. v. Akai Elec. Co. Ltd., 885 F.2d 1406, 1413-14 (9th Cir. 1989); 14D Fed. Prac. & Proc. Juris. § 3818 (4th ed.).

The Circuits are split regarding how the two clauses of Section 12—the venue clause and the service of process clause—may be used. The Third Circuit and Ninth Circuit have adopted a broad interpretation that permits plaintiffs to establish venue by using either the general venue statute, 28 U.S.C. § 1391, or the Section 12 venue clause, combined with the Section 12 service of process clause in order to establish personal jurisdiction over a corporate defendant. See In re Auto. Refinishing Paint Antitrust Litig., 358 F.3d 288, 296-97 (3rd Cir. 2004); Go-Video, Inc., 885 F.2d at 1413. The D.C. Circuit, Second Circuit, and Seventh Circuit require that in order to take advantage of the Section 12 service of process clause to establish [*7] personal jurisdiction, plaintiffs may only establish venue by using the Section 12 venue clause. See GTE New Media Servs., Inc. v. BellSouth Corp., 199 F.3d 1343, 1351, 339 U.S. App. D.C. 332 (D.C. Cir. 2000); Daniel v. Am. Bd. Of Emergency Med., 428 F.3d 408, 423-24 (2d Cir. 2005); KM Enters., Inc., v. Global Traffic Techs., Inc., 725 F.3d 718, 730 (7th Cir. 2013). The Eighth Circuit has not adopted an interpretation.

Defendants urge the Court to adopt the narrow reading of Section 12 and forbid Plaintiff from combining the general venue statute with the nationwide service of process clause of Section 12 in order to establish this Court's personal jurisdiction over NAR. Defendants argue venue is improper in this District under the narrow reading of Section 12 because "plaintiffs do not allege any facts to support the conclusion that NAR 'transacts business' in this District within the meaning of § 12." (Doc. #59, p. 15). Defendants also argue that sporadic contact with this District does not rise to the level of transacting business within the District in a substantial way. Defendants argue that because venue is improper under Section 12, "the Court lacks personal jurisdiction over NAR under the nationwide service of process provisions of § 12." (Doc. #59, p. 18). Defendants also argue that NAR has insufficient minimum contacts with Missouri to support a finding of personal jurisdiction over NAR that satisfies Due Process.

Plaintiffs argue that venue is proper in the Western District of Missouri, [*8] and thus this Court has personal jurisdiction over NAR in this District, under both the broad and narrow interpretations of Section 12's personal jurisdiction provision. Plaintiffs argue venue is proper under the broad approach because "a substantial part of the events . . . giving rise to the claim occurred" in this District. § 1391. Plaintiffs argue "four of the five named class representative Plaintiffs sold homes located in this District, where they were injured because Defendants implemented and enforced NAR's Adversary Commission Rule on the Heartland [or the Kansas City] MLS." (Doc. #65, p. 16). Plaintiffs argue venue is proper under the stricter approach because NAR transacts business in this District as contemplated by the Clayton Act. Plaintiffs argue that NAR has sufficient contacts with the United States, as is required by Section 12, to support a finding of personal jurisdiction that satisfies Due Process.

The Court need not adopt an interpretation of Section 12 because this Court has personal jurisdiction over NAR in accordance with both the broad and narrow reading. Defendants urge the Court to adopt the narrow reading, but do not argue that personal jurisdiction is not satisfied under the broad reading. [*9] The broad reading allows Plaintiffs to establish venue by showing that "a substantial part of the events . . . giving rise to the claim occurred" in this District. § 1391. Here, four of the five named plaintiffs "sold homes located in this District, where they were injured because Defendants [allegedly] implemented and enforced NAR's Adversary Commission Rule on the Heartland MLS," which corresponds with the Kansas City area within this District. (Doc. #65, p. 16). A substantial part of NAR's alleged implementation and enforcement of the Adversary Commission Rule against the sellers' brokers occurred in the District, given that three of the four Subject MLSs[3] correspond with cities within this District. Accordingly, venue is proper in the Western District of Missouri under § 1391.

Venue is also proper in this District under Section 12's venue clause, which dictates that venue is proper in any district in which a corporation, "in the ordinary and usual sense [] 'transacts business' therein of any substantial character." Scophony Corp., 333 U.S. at 807 (internal citation omitted). Section 12 of the Clayton Act was enacted to enlarge jurisdiction over corporations. Id. at 806-07. "The construction gave the words 'transacts business' a much broader meaning for establishing [*10] venue than the concept of 'carrying on business' denoted by 'found' under the preexisting statute and decisions." Id. at 807 (internal citation omitted). In enacting Section 12 of the Clayton Act, Congress "relieved persons injured through corporate violations of the antitrust laws from the 'often insuperable obstacle' of resorting to distant forums for redress of wrongs done in the places of their business or residence." Id. (internal citation omitted). "A foreign corporation no longer could come to a district, perpetrate there the injuries outlawed, and then by retreating or even without retreating to its headquarter defeat or delay the retribution due." Id.

"[T]he substantiality of the business transacted is to be judged from the point of view of the average businessman and not in proportion to the sales or revenues of the defendant." Black v. Acme Markets, Inc., 564 F.2d 681, 687 (5th Cir. 1977) (internal citations omitted); Katz Drug Co. v. W. A. Sheaffer Pen Co., 6 F. Supp. 210, 212 (W.D. Mo. 1932). Further, "the purchases and/or sales which constitutes the transaction of business need not be connected to the subject matter of th[e] suit." Id. "The language of a particular case should not be taken as a standard to be erected as a set of rigid prescriptions of the particular incidents of business conduct which may constitute the transaction [*11] of business." 3 A. L. R. Fed. 120 (2019) (citing Austad v. United States Steel Corp. 141 F. Supp. 437, 440 (N.D. Cal. 1956)). "[W]hat constitutes transacting business . . . cannot be determined by drawing up a checklist of specific incidents of business done and comparing it with the activities in a particular case." Id. (citing Abrams v. Bendix Home Appliances, Inc. 96 F. Supp. 3, 8 (S.D.N.Y. 1951)). "Although there is no 'singular definitive test for transacting business,' the most important factor to consider is 'the dollar amount of business transacted in the district.'" In re Blue Cross Blue Shield Antitrust Litig., 225 F. Supp. 3d 1269, 1293 (N.D. Ala. 2016) (internal citation omitted).

NAR collects "substantial revenues and fees[] from its members located in this District." (Doc. #65, p. 12). NAR's affidavit filed as an exhibit to the instant motion confirms that approximately 22,600 of its members are located in Missouri but fails to specify how many of those members are located within the Western District of Missouri. Even assuming 10,000 of the Missouri members are located within the Western District of Missouri, which evidence supports and Defendants do not refute, with annual membership dues near $150 per member, NAR receives nearly $1.5 million in dues yearly from members in this District. See Blue Cross Blue Shield, 225 F. Supp. 3d at 1296 ("Frankly, it is incredible for BCBS—MS to assert that its collection of approximately $190,000 in premiums per year from approximately [*12] 1,900 subscribers in this district constitutes de minimis business. That in itself would be enough for the court to conclude that BCBS—MS engages in substantial business in this district."). That "[l]ess than 1% of NAR's total dues revenue is derived from members in the Western District of Missouri" is inconsequential.

[3] Plaintiffs bring this class action on behalf of home sellers who paid a broker commission and whose homes were listed on MLSs corresponding with Kansas City, Missouri; Springfield, Missouri; Columbia, Missouri; and St. Louis, Missouri.

(Doc. #59-1, p. 2). See Brandt v. Renfield Imps., Ltd., 278 F.2d 904, 911 (8th Cir. 1960) ("The large amounts of the sales made . . . by [defendants] . . . demonstrate that the business transacted was very substantial. That the sales constituted a very small fraction of the business carried on in all the districts throughout the country . . . is immaterial.").

In addition to collecting membership dues, evidence supports—and NAR does not deny—that NAR requires its member associations to incorporate mandatory provisions verbatim into their bylaws. Membership associations must certify that their bylaws include such provisions, and the MLS Rules and Regulations of member associations and MLSs must also be reviewed and approved by NAR. Member associations and MLSs must also adopt new or amended NAR policies. The above demonstrates that NAR not only transacts substantial business in a monetary sense, but also exerts substantial power and [*13] control over its members in this District. See Daniel, 428 F.3d at 429 (citing Myers v. Am. Dental Assoc., 695 F.2d 716, 730, 19 V.I. 642 (3d Cir. 1983) ("[A] defendant professional organization transacts business in a district when it enforces its standards against constituent organizations through direct, continual supervision of those organizations in the judicial district.").

Additionally, NAR formed a partnership with Blue Springs, Missouri-based company Xceligent, "a national public marketing platform for commercial real estate listings" in 2013. Evidence demonstrates that Xceligent paid NAR directly at least $35,000 for royalties, goods, and services in 2017. NAR also hosted 140 NAR communication directors from state and local associations at a three-day Communication Directors Institute conference at the Crown Center Westin in Kansas City, Missouri, in 2019. Additionally, undisputed evidence shows that the Missouri Realtors, a trade association representing realtors throughout Missouri, budgets to pay NAR over $100,000 a year for unspecified expenses. These business transactions, combined with the roughly $1.5 million in dues NAR receives from its members within this District, show that NAR transacts business of a substantial character within the Western District of Missouri. [*14] That NAR does not have an "office, facilities, or employees in this District, [] is not registered to do business in Missouri," and does not specifically target Missouri residents for business solicitation or advertising does not change the analysis. See, e.g., Health Care Equalization Comm. of Iowa Chiropractic Soc. v. Iowa Med. Soc., 501 F. Supp. 970, 980-83 (S.D. Iowa 1980) (finding defendant professional association transacted business in Southern District of Iowa even though association was "not licensed to do business in Iowa," had "no office, employees, or agents in Iowa," had "no property and [made] no purchases in Iowa, and" had "not held any meetings, seminars or workshops in Iowa," because "1.3% of its members reside in Iowa and receive publications, newsletters and other information from the [association], and are subject to its canon of ethics" and because a committee of the association had additional contacts with Iowa)[4]; Blue Cross Blue Shield, 225 F. Supp. 3d at 1298 (finding defendant entity conducted substantial business in district where entity had four members in district, "collected approximately $12,508 per year in premiums from its members" within the district, and "paid an average of approximately $86,700 per year . . . to settle claims" within the district).

None of the cases NAR cites involved such substantial business transactions as those transacted by NAR described above. See Bartholomew v. Virginia Chiropractors Asso., 612 F.2d 812 (4th Cir. 1979) abrogated on other grounds by Union Labor Life Ins. Co. v. Pireno, 458 U.S. 119, 102 S. Ct. 3002, 73 L. Ed. 2d 647 (1982) (Defendant's solicitation of advertising time and dissemination of correspondence did amount to transacting business within meaning of Section 12); Golf City, Inc. v. Wilson Sporting Goods, Co., 555 F.2d 426, 438 (5th Cir. 1977) (fifty-five members of defendant association living in district, members' receipt of association's publications in district, and five-day business school in district did not amount to transacting business within meaning of Section 12); Daniel, 428 F.3d at 429-30 (no substantial business transactions where defendant professional organization's contacts were with the state as a whole rather than the relevant district, and defendant "certified an unspecified number of physicians in New York" and "received an unspecified amount of revenue from the application fees of physicians in New York.").

[4] NAR argues plaintiffs failed "to mention the controlling decision of the Eighth Circuit in [this] case on appeal from the district court . . . compels the conclusion that assertion of jurisdiction over NAR in this case would violate the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment." (Doc. # 71, p. 3). NAR is mistaken. In the Eighth Circuit's opinion, the Court affirmed the district court's finding that the court lacked personal jurisdiction over a defendant pursuant to the Iowa long-arm statute because that defendant did not have "sufficient minimum contacts with Iowa to satisfy the requirements of the due process clause of the fourteenth amendment." Health Care Equalization Comm. of the Iowa Chiropractic Soc. v. Iowa Med. Soc., 851 F.2d 1020, 1022-23 (8th Cir. 1988). The district court's finding of personal jurisdiction over a separate defendant based on Section 12 of the Clayton [*15] Act was not appealed. Accordingly, the Eighth Circuit's opinion and Due Process analysis do not affect the Section 12 personal jurisdiction standard and analysis.

NAR argues that "[s]ince it would violate due process to assert jurisdiction over NAR under the Missouri long-arm statute, it would also violate due process to assert jurisdiction under § 12 of the Clayton Act." (Doc. #71, p. 4). In support of this argument, NAR cites South Dakota v. Kansas City S. Indus., Inc., 880 F.2d 40, 44 n.10 (8th Cir. 1989), which states that the application of Section 12 "must in every case satisfy constitutional [*16] due process principles, including "the familiar 'minimum contacts' requirements for personal jurisdiction." Defendants failed to cite the later-decided In re Fed. Fountain, Inc., 165 F.3d 600, 601 (8th Cir. 1999) (en banc), in which the Eighth Circuit "[took] the opportunity to disagree with that holding and to align [itself] with virtually every other court that has ruled on the issue" of whether there must "be minimum contacts between a defendant and the state in which he or she is expected to answer, before the court that issued the process may constitutionally assume personal jurisdiction over that defendant." The Court went on to clarify that when Congress "exercise[s] its authority to furnish federal district courts with the power to exert personal jurisdiction nationwide," as Congress did in Section 12 of the Clayton Act, "the fairness that due process of law requires" is satisfied when a defendant "has sufficient contacts with the United States." Id. at 602; see also Action Embroidery Corp. v. Atl. Embroidery, Inc., 368 F.3d 1174, 1180 (9th Cir. 2004) ("In a statute providing for nationwide service of process, the inquiry to determine minimum contacts is thus whether the defendant has acted within any district of the United States or sufficiently caused foreseeable consequences in this country.") (internal citation and quotation marks [*17] omitted); KM Enters., Inc., 725 F.3d at 731; Go-Video, Inc., 885 F.2d at 1416; Blue Cross Blue Shield, 225 F. Supp. 3d at 1300. NAR does not dispute that it has minimum contacts with the United States. Aside from NAR's multiple points of contact with the state of Missouri discussed above, NAR acknowledges that it is incorporated in Illinois, its principal place of business is in Chicago, Illinois, and it has an office in Washington, D.C. NAR is an association of real estate professionals throughout the United States and satisfies the standard of minimum contacts with the United States.

Accordingly, because venue is proper under Section 12's special venue provision, nationwide service of process is authorized, and this Court has personal jurisdiction over NAR. The Court will not certify its decision to the Eighth Circuit, as NAR's request that this Court do so relies on a mistaken interpretation of the law, as this Court addressed in footnote 4 above.

IV. Conclusion

The Motion of the National Association of Realtors to Transfer this Case to the Northern District of Illinois (Doc. #58) is DENIED.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

CIVIL MINUTES - GENERAL

Proceedings: (IN CHAMBERS) Order Regarding Motion for Relief from Judgment or for Expedited Discovery, Motion to Stay, and Motion for Summary Adjudication

The Court, having been informed by the parties in this action that they submit on the Court's tentative ruling previously issued, hereby rules in accordance with the tentative ruling as follows:

Defendant Swisher International, Inc. ("Swisher") filed a motion for relief from judgment pursuant to Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 60(b)(2), 60(b)(3), and 60(d), or in the alternative, for an order accelerating discovery into Plaintiffs' Trendsettah USA, Inc. and Trend Settah International, Inc. (collectively, "TSI") alleged misconduct. Mot., Docket No. 377. TSI filed an opposition. Opp'n, Docket No. 397. Swisher replied. Reply, Docket No. 414. With leave of the Court, TSI filed a sur-reply. Sur-Reply, Docket No. 421-1.

Swisher also moved to stay execution of any judgment against it in this case and related discovery under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 62 until five business days after the filing of an order resolving the above motion for relief from judgment or, if later, [*2] five business days after notice of entry of any judgment entailed by such resolution. Docket No. 380. TSI opposed. Docket No. 404. Swisher replied. Docket No. 418.

Lastly, TSI moved for summary adjudication as to Swisher's supersedeas bond. Docket No. 364. Swisher opposed. Docket No. 372. Swisher replied. Docket No. 386.

For the following reasons, the Court grants the motion for relief from judgment. Therefore, the motions to stay and for summary adjudication are denied as moot.

I. BACKGROUND

The background of this case is familiar to the parties and detailed in the Court's prior orders. Docket Nos. 262, 274, 340; see also Docket No. 349. The Court recites only those facts necessary to this order.

A. Procedural History

The parties are manufacturers of cigars and other related products who entered into multiple supply agreements between 2011 and 2014. See Docket No. 262 at 1-2. In 2014, TSI filed this action against Swisher, initially alleging nine causes of action: (1) monopolization and attempted monopolization in violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2; (2) monopolization and attempted monopolization in violation of Florida Antitrust Law, Fl. Stat. § 542.19; (3) breach of contract; (4) breach of the implied covenant [*3] of good faith and fair dealing; (5) trade libel; (6) tortious interference with contract; (7) intentional interference with prospective business relationships; (8) negligent interference with prospective business relationships; and (9) unfair competition in violation of the California Unfair Competition Law, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq. Docket No. 1.

In May 2015, the Court dismissed the state law claims for negligent interference and unfair competition for failure to state a claim. Docket No. 40. In January 2016, the Court dismissed the state law claims for trade libel, tortious interference with contract, and intentional interference with prospective business relationships on summary judgment. Docket No. 99. The Court then scheduled trial on the remaining antitrust and contract claims for March 2016.

On August 17, 2016, following a jury verdict for TSI on its antitrust and breach of contract claims, the Court granted Swisher's motion for a new trial as to TSI's antitrust claims, but not its contract claims. Docket No. 262. The Court also granted Swisher judgment as a matter of law as to TSI's monopolization claim, but not as to its attempted monopolization claim. Id. Following the Ninth Circuit's decision in Aerotec Int'l Inc. v. Honeywell Int'l, Inc., 836 F.3d 1171 (9th Cir. 2016) [*4] , the Court reconsidered its earlier decision denying Swisher summary judgment on TSI's antitrust claims, and granted Swisher summary judgment as to those claims. Docket No. 274.

Subsequently, the Ninth Circuit reversed the Court's grant of summary judgment to Swisher as to its antitrust claims, its grant of a new trial to Swisher as to the attempted monopolization claim, and its grant of judgment as a matter of law to Swisher as to the monopolization claim. Docket No. 349.

On July 8, 2019, TSI filed motions for attorneys' fees, expenses, and post-judgment interest, and for summary judgment as to Swisher's supersedeas bond. Docket Nos. 363, 364. On July 22, 2019, Swisher filed motions for relief from judgment or for expedited discovery, and to stay the proceedings. Docket Nos. 377, 380. The Court now turns to these motions.

B. Relevant Factual Background

On April 12, 2019, the Southern District of California unsealed the criminal indictment of Akrum Alrahib ("Alrahib") in connection with his arrest. See Declaration of Minae Yu, Docket No. 379, Ex. A. Alrahib is the founder, chief executive officer of TSI, and one of its principals/shareholders. Docket No. 162 at 3. He also oversees the [*5] day-to-day operations of TSI. Id.

The federal excise tax on imported cigarillos during the relevant time period was 52.75%. See Docket No. 377 at 4 n.3. According to the indictment, TSI fraudulently avoided paying federal excise taxes on cigarillos it imported from the Dominican Republic through its importer, Havana 59, for a period between 2013 and 2015. Yu Decl., Ex. A; see also Declaration of Ryan Roman, Docket No. 378, Ex. K at Response No. 22. The indictment lists a number of allegedly falsified invoices which marked down the price TSI was actually paying for cigars to avoid federal excise taxes. Yu Decl., Ex. A. The indictment further alleges that, in reality, TSI did not purchase cigarillos from Havana 59; instead, it purchased them from Productos del Tobacco ("Productos") at prices approximately 3 to 4 times the sales price reported to the government by wiring money from TSI's bank account in California to Productos' bank account. Id.; see also Yu Decl., Ex. G at Attachment C-6. The government also alleges that TSI received over $700,000 from Havana 59 as kickbacks in the form of payroll checks for TSI's employees and free cigar manufacturing equipment that TSI sent to Products. [*6] See id., Ex. A at 7, Ex. B at 7. The government is seeking a forfeiture judgment of $9,914,921 against property in which Alrahib has an interest allegedly traceable to these violations. Id., Ex. A at 14.

In a voluntary video-recorded interview conducted by Internal Revenue Service ("IRS") and Alcohol and Tobacco Tax and Trade Bureau ("ATTAB") agents on May 11, 2017, Alrahib made a number of admissions regarding his and Bryant's participation in a tax evasion scheme. Relevant portions of the interview are reproduced below:

> ALRAHIB: Okay. That's the time that Tony Bryant approached me and says, look, I could import it for you, and I could save you money, and then I'll kick you back the money on the side. Okay. . . .
> . . . .
> AGENT 2: On him giving you kickbacks on the 2 to 3 million dollars --
> ALRAHIB: Yes.
>
> AGENT 2: Just to be clear, the kickbacks were from federal excise taxes evaded.
> ALRAHIB: That he evaded, yes. Yes.
> . . . .
> ALRAHIB: Well, he was the importer. But was I aware that he was evading federal excise tax? Yes, if that's what you want me to say.
> AGENT 1: Yeah.
> ALRAHIB: I mean, that's what it was. Everybody knew that.
> . . . .
> AGENT 1: . . . [W]hat was your part in that?
>
> ALRAHIB: My part [*7] in what? In --
> AGENT 1: With the activity related to Tony [Bryant]'s importation.
> ALRAHIB: My part is, as the cheaper you could get it for me, Tony, and the more I could save on the back end, thank you very much.
> . . . .
> AGENT 1: What was it that you and Tony were doing, specifically, that allowed the product to, you know, be available cheaper? What was it that you were doing specifically to reduce your burden, your financial burden?

ALRAHIB: I wasn't doing anything. I wouldn't know how Tony was breaking up the importation tax. He would just send me an email of how his BS breakdown was and then give us the invoice. That was it. And then from that invoice of the total amount, I was supposed to take back 40, 50 percent, ...
AGENT 1: Okay. And then, so he would then have money to send back to you, to kick back to you, correct?
ALRAHIB: Yes.
AGENT 2: All right. So Tony invoices [ALRAHIB's company]. And you send him 36 grand. Of that 36 grand, your understanding was, you're getting half of it back?
ALRAHIB: I'm supposed to get 30 to 40 percent of that, of that money.
AGENT 2: And it's supposed to come back to you?

ALRAHIB: Yes. And however you break it down, however you do it, good luck to you. [*8] That's great. Give me my rebate.

AGENT 2: No, I got -- let me figure -- but the rebate, though, is based on him evading federal excise tax.

ALRAHIB: Yes.
AGENT 2: Okay.
AGENT 1: Thank you.
ALRAHIB: Yes, it is. Of course it is. I don't know what else to say, but I know I'm screwing — I mean, it is. I mean, yes. We all know that.
. . . .
AGENT 2: So Tony's scheme, there's -- putting someone in between, but Tony -- The scheme you worked with Tony, he took the extra step of instead of just putting someone in between --

ALRAHIB: I didn't work the scheme with Tony. I rode Tony's train because his scheme was already moving. And then Tony said, you want to come and save money riding my train? Then I realized it's a scheme. Then when I saw his scheme, I said, wait a minute, I need to benefit from your scheme.
. . . .
ALRAHIB: . . . let's say, for example, [the manufacturer] was charging me at the time 6 or 7 cents a stick, but Tony [Bryant] was claiming 2 cents a stick, so he never had extra money. He never had extra money because he never put the actual dollar amount that [the manufacturer] was charging us.
. . . .

AGENT 2: Tony [Bryant] never charged Trendsettah, being you, enough money to cover the [*9] actual cost of the product?

ALRAHIB: No. Of course not. It was all a game.
AGENT 2: No.
ALRAHIB: This water costs a dollar, right. But when Tony [Bryant] -- he's the importer, right?
AGENT 1: Yeah.
ALRAHIB: He's showing that this water is 30 cents. And then from the 30 cents, he's supposed to give me 10 cents.

Yu Decl., Ex. B at 3-5, 10-11 (quoting interview transcript) (emphasis in prosecutors' reproduction). Bryant pled guilty to related fraud and tax-evasion charges in 2016, and was sentenced to seven years in prison. See Yu Decl., Exs. D—F. Alrahib's criminal trial is scheduled to commence on December 16, 2019. Id., Ex. C.

C. Evidentiary Objections and Requests for Judicial Notice

On Rule 60 motions, "[t]he proffered evidence must be admissible." *Winding v. Wells Fargo Bank, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24089, 2012 WL 603217, at 9 (E.D. Cal. Feb. 23, 2012), aff'd 706 F. App'x 918 (9th Cir. 2017); *Norris v. F.B.I., 914 F.2d 263, 1990 WL 134276, at 2 (9th Cir. 1990) (same). Furthermore, "[w]hen alleging a claim of fraud on the court, the plaintiff must show by clear and convincing evidence that there was fraud on the court, and all doubts must be resolved in favor of the finality of the judgment." Weese v. Schukman, 98 F.3d 542, 552 (10th Cir. 1996) (emphasis added).

TSI objects to the Court's consideration of either the indictment or the government's brief appealing the magistrate's grant of bail to Alrahib, which contains passages from Alrahib's interview [*10] transcript with IRS and ATTAB agents. Docket No. 403; see also Yu Decl., Exs. A, B.

TSI objects to the indictment on the ground that it is well-established that an indictment is not evidence. See United States v. Ramirez, 710 F.2d 535, 545 (9th Cir. 1983) ("[An] indictment is not evidence against the accused and affords no inference of guilt or innocence."). The Court agrees. Therefore, the Court will not consider the facts contained in the indictment for their truth. However, the Court takes judicial notice of the existence of the indictment and its contents as a public record, the accuracy of which cannot reasonably be questioned.

TSI objects to the government's brief appealing the magistrate's grant of bail to Alrahib, arguing (1) that statements in a brief are not evidence, and (2) that the evidence is inadmissible hearsay. Docket No. 403 at 2. However, admissions of a party opponent are not hearsay and are admissible. Fed. R. Evid. 801(d)(2). Moreover, the record of the interrogations is also admissible as a public record, resolving concerns about a potential second layer of hearsay as to the government's filing itself. Mike's Train House, Inc. v. Lionel, L.L.C., 472 F.3d 398, 412 (6th Cir. 2006) (affirming admission of interrogation transcripts as public records and statements against declarant's interests). Therefore, TSI's objection [*11] to the Court's consideration of Alrahib's admissions in his interview with government agents is overruled because Alrahib's conduct is imputable to TSI, and thus his confession contained in the brief is admissible as an admission of a party opponent. Fed. R. Evid. 801(d)(2); see also Fed. R. Evid. 803(5), 803(8), and 804(b)(3).

TSI also objects to Exhibit A to the Supplemental Declaration of Minae Yu, Docket Nos. 415, 415-1. The document is a transcript of an April 30, 2019 hearing in the matter of USA v. Akrum Alrahib. TSI argues that the document, which contains statements of government employees characterizing what Alrahib supposedly told other government employees, constitutes double hearsay. Docket No. 419 at 1. The Court agrees. This evidence is distinct from direct statements from Alrahib quoted from an interview transcript. Therefore, the objection is sustained.

Swisher also filed evidentiary objections. Docket No. 416. Because there are 39 separate objections, the Court declines to address each one-by-one. To the extent the Order cites evidence to which Swisher objects, the objection is impliedly overruled. To the extent the Court does not rely on the evidence submitted, the Court declines to rule on the objections.

Finally, TSI filed [*12] a request that the Court take judicial notice of (1) The Order Denying Government's Motion for Pretrial Detention, filed in United States v. Alrahib, in the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida, No. 1:19-cr-20165-RS, on May 1, 2019, as Docket Entry 17; (2) Swisher's Motion to Stay the Mandate, filed with the Ninth Circuit in the matter of Trendsettah USA, Inc., et al. v. Swisher International Inc., No. 1656823, on April 23, 2019, as Docket Entry 87; and (3) Swisher's Opposition to Lift Stay of the Mandate, filed with the Ninth Circuit in the matter of Trendsettah USA, Inc., et al. v. Swisher International Inc., No. 16-56823, on May 9, 2019, as Docket Entry 90. RJN, Docket No. 402, Exs. A—C. The Court may take judicial notice of matters of public record, Lee v. City of Los Angeles, 250 F.3d 668, 689 (9th Cir. 2001), including related filings from another case. Headwaters Inc. v. U.S. Forest Service, 399 F.3d 1047, 1051 n.3 (9th Cir. 2005). Therefore, TSI's request for judicial notice is granted.

II. Legal Standards

A. Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 60(b)(2) and (b)(3)

"[T]he court may relieve a party or its legal representative from a final judgment, order, or proceeding [based on] . . . newly discovered evidence that, with reasonable diligence, could not have been discovered in time to move for a new trial under Rule 59(b)." Fed. R. Civ. P. 60(b)(2). To prevail, "the movant [*13] must show the evidence (1) existed at the time of the trial, (2) could not have been discovered through due diligence, and (3) was 'of such magnitude that production of it earlier would have been likely to change the disposition of the case.'" Jones v. Aero/Chem Corp., 921 F.2d 875, 878 (9th Cir. 1990).

The court may also grant relief from judgment based on "fraud (whether previously called intrinsic or extrinsic), misrepresentation, or misconduct by an opposing party." Fed. R. Civ. P. 60(b)(3). To prevail under this subsection, the movant "must prove by clear and convincing evidence that the verdict was obtained through fraud, misrepresentation, or other misconduct and the conduct complained of prevented the losing party from fully and fairly presenting the defense." De Saracho v. Custom Food Mach., Inc., 206 F.3d 874, 880 (9th Cir. 2000). In addition, this subsection "require[s] that [the alleged] fraud . . . not be discoverable by due diligence before or during the proceedings." Casey v. Albertson's Inc., 362 F.3d 1254, 1260 (9th Cir. 2004).

Under either subsection (b)(2) or (b)(3), the motion "must be made . . . no more than a year after the judgment or order." Fed. R. Civ. P. 60(c)(1).

B. Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 60(d)

The court may also "set aside a judgment for fraud on the court." Fed. R. Civ. P. 60(d)(3). Relief under this subsection is not subsection is not subject to the one-year time limit. United States v. Sierra Pac. Indus., Inc., 862 F.3d 1157, 1167 (9th Cir. 2017) (citation omitted), cert. denied, 138 S. Ct. 2675, 201 L. Ed. 2d 1072 (2018).

"A court's power to grant relief from judgment for fraud on [*14] the court stems from 'a rule of equity to the effect that under certain circumstances, one of which is after-discovered fraud, relief will be granted against judgments regardless of the term of their entry.'" Id. (quoting Hazel-Atlas Glass Co. v. Hartford-Empire Co., 322 U.S.238, 244, 64 S. Ct. 997, 88 L. Ed. 1250, 1944 Dec. Comm'r Pat. 675 (1944)). "[R]elief from judgment for fraud on the court is 'available only to prevent a grave miscarriage of justice.'" Id. (quoting United States v. Beggerly, 524 U.S. 38, 47, 118 S. Ct. 1862, 141 L. Ed. 2d 32 (1998)). Thus, "not all fraud is fraud on the court." Id. (citation omitted).

"In determining whether fraud constitutes fraud on the court, the relevant inquiry is not whether fraudulent conduct prejudiced the opposing party, but whether it harmed the integrity of the judicial process." United States v. Estate of Stonehill, 660 F.3d 415, 444 (9th Cir. 2011) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). Therefore, fraud on the court must be an "intentional, material misrepresentation," In re Napster, Inc. Copyright Litig., 479 F.3d 1078, 1097 (9th Cir. 2007),[1] and "involve an unconscionable plan or scheme which is designed to improperly influence the court in its decision." Pumphrey v. K.W. Thompson Tool Co., 62 F.3d 1128, 1131 (9th Cir. 1995) (citation omitted).

III. DISCUSSION

A. Rule 60(d)

As noted, to grant Swisher relief for fraud on the court, it must prove that (1) TSI engaged in misconduct [*16] that undermined the judicial process and (2) the misconduct went to the central issues in the case. See Estate of Stonehill, 660 F.3d at 445, 452.

Swisher sought information relevant to TSI's payment of federal excise taxes during discovery. Swisher served on TSI requests for production seeking federal excise tax filings made by or on behalf of TSI, its costs and profits, and the sources of funds for its machinery. See Roman Decl., Ex. A, RFP Nos. 26-29, 32-34; Ex. B, Interrogatory No. 17; Ex. L, RFP Nos. 21-24, 26, 57. In response to the requests for production seeking the federal excise tax filings made by or on behalf of TSI, TSI objected on the grounds that the production of the actual filings was burdensome and that the documents were irrelevant. Id., Ex. C, Resp. Nos. 26-28. Swisher responded that "FET payments are an essential component to calculating profits and profitability, which, of course, is the baseline for the lost profits analysis TSI's allegations require." Id. ¶ 3, Ex. E. However, TSI would later argue that "[t]he information Swisher seeks will already be found in TSI's financial records, sales orders, and invoices, which it has agreed to produce," id. ¶ 4, Ex. F, and that "[g]iven that the tax rates are [*17] publicly available, and given that the same information you seek will be available in TSI's sales records (and it's fair to say that TSI has no incentive to overestimate its tobacco sales to the government), we do not think the probative value of these filings outweighs the burden of collecting them." Id. ¶ 7, Ex. I. TSI also sought to remove search terms relating to federal excise taxes in connection with electronically-stored information ("ESI") production. Id. ¶¶ 5-6, Exs. G—I. Swisher then agreed to remove these search terms. Id. ¶ 8. TSI's general counsel subsequently testified that TSI had produced all documents responsive to Swisher's discovery requests. See Yu Decl., Ex. R at 164:24-165:22.

Of course, TSI never disclosed the information Alrahib later admitted in his interview with federal agents, i.e., the scheme through which Bryant evaded federal excise taxes on TSI's cigarillos and passed along a portion of the profits from this evasion to Alrahib in the form of kickbacks. Nor did TSI disclose documents which demonstrated what Alrahib admits were falsified invoices prepared by Bryant which perpetrated the scheme. Therefore, the documents produced did not reflect the true [*18] cost of manufacturing and importing TSI's cigarillos, even though they were presented to Swisher as an accurate reflection of TSI's costs and profits. See, e.g., Yu Decl., Exs. J—L; Romand Decl., Ex. K at Resp. No. 17, Ex. P at Resp. No. 17, Ex. S at 88:5-95:2, 100:22-105:25, 113:1-7.

These misleading financial records were in turn relied on by TSI's economic expert, Dr. Deforest McDuff ("Dr. McDuff"), who used them as the basis of his damages analysis. See, e.g., Yu Decl., Ex. G at 42-48, Attachments C-1, C-6, C-7, D-13, D-14, E-12. Dr. McDuff also worked with Alrahib and Bryant, who submitted to his interviews. See, e.g., id. at 2-3, 23-25, 33-36. Dr. McDuff's damages calculations relied on TSI's profit margins during 2013 and 2014 which, based on Alrahib's admissions, were artificially inflated by the underpayment of federal excise taxes, infecting Dr. McDuff's entire analysis. See id. at 47-48, Attachments C-6, C-7. Swisher also presents the declaration of its own expert, Dr. Alan Cox ("Dr. Cox") concluding that TSI's avoidance of federal excise taxes would allow it to lower costs and charge "artificially low prices . . . to sell more cigarillos than they would have in the absence of fraud." Declaration of Alan Cox [*19] ("Cox Decl."), Docket No. 377-2 ¶ 20. Dr. Cox also opines that, because of TSI's low gross profit margins, when corrected for the correct federal excise tax, TSI would have operated on a negative margin on sales of imported cigarillos from 2013-15. Id. ¶¶ 30-31.

At trial, TSI moved to exclude "any evidence or argument regarding any tax or regulatory enforcement actions Mr. Alrahib faced in the years prior to TSI's manufacturing relationship with Swisher." Docket No. 112 at 1. Prior to founding TSI, Alrahib faced a civil forfeiture action for failing to pay excise taxes on tobacco products distributed through one of his prior businesses. Yu Decl., Ex. M at 48:11-51:12. In support of its motion, TSI argue that Alrahib's failure to pay excise taxes more than a decade prior had nothing to do with the two central issues in this case, and that the admission of such past crimes, wrongs, or tax issues would lead to unfair prejudice. Docket No. 112 at 1. The Court ruled in TSI's favor on the basis of these representations, reasoning that "[s]tripped of a proper link, the evidence is merely improper character evidence." Docket No. 163 at 4. Of course, had TSI disclosed Alrahib and Bryant's scheme, [*20] that "proper link" would have been clear. But based on TSI's inaccurate arguments that Alrahib's federal excise tax violations were merely past wrongs, Swisher was foreclosed from asking Alrahib about excise tax evasion, a line of questioning that, absent perjury, would likely have led to the disclosure of the fraudulent scheme he later disclosed to federal IRS and ATTAB agents.

Alrahib's credibility was central to the trial. He was TSI's first witness, and offered testimony regarding nearly element of TSI's claims. See Yu Decl., Ex. U at 28-102. In addition, other TSI witnesses presented a materially false portrayal of TSI's financial records, costs, profitability, injury, and damages. For instance, TSI's CFO Salah Kureh testified that every item of revenue or expense was properly recorded in TSI's financial records and that all this information was provided to TSI's expert. Id., Ex. V at 9-13. He also testified that TSI had higher profits on Productos-manufactured products compared to Swisher-manufactured products because Products' costs were lower, without disclosing the tax evasion scheme which reduced these costs. Id. at 20. Dr. McDuff further testified about TSI's profit margins, projected [*21] sales, lost profits, and the fact and extent of TSI's damages. Id. at 175-82, 187-88, 190, 193-98. TSI also offered, and the Court admitted into evidence, Trial Exhibits 135 and 136, which set forth artificially inflated profit margins for TSI. Id. at 193-95; id., Exs. X—Z. Based on these inaccurate profit margins, Dr. McDuff opined that TSI suffered $9,062,679 in lost profits between 2012 and 2015, and $5,752,815 in future sales, totaling $14,815,494 in damages. Id., Ex. V at 193-97, Exs. X—Y, Ex. A at 35, 53. After trial, the jury awarded the exact amounts Dr. McDuff computed based on TSI's false financial records. Id., Ex. Z at 35.

Based on the foregoing, TSI presented to the jury and the Court a theory of "lost profits" premised on inaccurate data which was a product of a fraudulent tax evasion scheme. Therefore, TSI's conduct tainted the integrity of the trial and interfered with the judicial process, and the judgment must be set aside. Fed. R. Civ. P. 60(d).

TSI's opposition does not present any argument which persuades the Court to alter this conclusion. TSI argues that, even if it falsely represented that further responsive information did not exist, it is not "fraud on the court" because the representation was made to Swisher, not the Court. [*22] Opp'n, Docket No. 410 at 21-22. However, this "trail of fraud continued without break" into proceedings before the Court and infected key evidence presented to the jury. Hazel-Atlas, 322 U.S. at 250.

TSI further argues that no misrepresentations were made to the jury because, regardless of Alrahib's participation in a "private conspiracy," the cost basis that formed the basis of Dr. McDuff's damages calculations "would have been the same anyway." Opp'n, Docket No. 410 at 18. However, as demonstrated above, this statement is untrue based on Alrahib's own admissions. His tax evasion was not a "private conspiracy" because it was engineered to avoid taxes on TSI's products, artificially boosting TSI's profits. TSI contends that no false evidence was presented because "Swisher does not allege that Trendsettah actually had higher costs than were reported to the jury, or that it actually had a lower profit margin . . . only that Trendsettah should have had higher costs and/or lower profit margins" from 2013-15. Docket No. 410 at 12. This argument is unavailing. TSI had no rights to the "profits" that were, by Alrahib's admission, stolen from the government. See AlphaMed Pharms. Corp. v. Arriva Pharms., Inc., 432 F. Supp. 2d 1319, 1348 (S.D. Fla. 2006) ("It is beyond dispute that [a plaintiff] cannot recover [*23] lost profits that are predicated on the completion of illegal activity."); Carruthers v. Flaum, 365 F. Supp. 2d 448, 470 (S.D.N.Y. 2005) (dismissing claims with prejudice because plaintiff's claims for damages "are predicated on the completion of illegal activity . . . and are not recoverable for that reason alone").

TSI also argues that relief is not justified based on Swisher's counsels' lack of diligence, i.e., failure to uncover the fraud sooner. Id. at 6Opp'n, Docket No. 410 at 22. For instance, TSI argues that Swisher failed to pursue documentation regarding TSI's obligation to pay federal excise taxes, and failed to ask "a single witness a single question about" the subject. . However, as noted, Swisher served discovery calling for the production of the information which would have revealed the fraud, including "all documents showing or reflective of federal excise tax paid with respect to Splitarillos, whether paid by TSI or on TSI's behalf." Roman Decl., Ex. A, RFP Nos. 26, 27 (emphasis added). TSI resisted this discovery by objecting to its production on grounds of irrelevance and undue burden. Id., Ex. C, Resp Nos. 26, 27. Moreover, TSI's witnesses testified that all relevant documents were collected and produced. See Yu Decl., Ex. R at 164-65. [*24]

TSI also successfully moved in limine to exclude any evidence or argument regarding Alrahib's past tax-related enforcement actions, in part based on the argument that Alrahib's tax evasion was merely past conduct that had no relevance to this trial. Docket Nos. 112 at 1, 148-1 at 2. The Court found that there was no "proper link" between such evidence and this case. Docket No. 163 at 4. TSI also claimed that Swisher would be able to determine the amount of federal excise taxes paid on its products using other documents to be produced and the publicly available tax rate; however, this misrepresentation did not account for TSI's failure to comply with the law by paying that rate. Roman Decl.¶¶ 4, 7, Exs. F, I. Alrahib also testified in a deposition that he had learned from his past tax-related mistakes, giving Swisher even less of a basis on which to pursue a theory of ongoing tax fraud. Yu Decl., Ex. M at 48:11-49:1, 50:3-7, 541:7-12. Furthermore, TSI submits invoices with its opposition that it argues show that TSI did not fail to pay excise taxes, but those are the very types of documents that TSI's CEO has admitted are fraudulent. Docket No. 379-2 at 3-5, 10-11; Docket No. 410-2 at [*25] 3-4, 10-11. Therefore, TSI's claim that excise taxes were of "no interest" to Swisher in discovery or trial, and that the "criticality" of the issue was not asserted until over three years after the verdict was returned, is incorrect.

Based on the foregoing, Swisher's discovery efforts constituted "due diligence" for purposes of Rule 60(d)(3). Swisher was "entitled to accept [TSI's] answers to [its] discovery requests as accurate and not to seek additional discovery relating to the issue." Schreiber Foods, Inc. v. Beatrice Cheese, Inc., 305 F. Supp. 2d 939, 961 (E.D. Wis. 2004), reversed on other grounds, 402 F.3d 1198 (Fed. Cir. 2005). TSI cannot blame Swisher for the success of its obstructionist conduct. Id.; see also Wyle v. R. J. Reynolds Industries, Inc., 709 F.2d 585, 591 (9th Cir. 1983) (holding that it would be improper to allow a party to "profit from its own failure to provide discovery"); Alpern v. UtiliCorp United, Inc., 84 F.3d 1525, 1537 (8th Cir. 1996) (holding that plaintiff's failure to timely produce relevant documents requested by the defendant should not be viewed as lack of due diligence on the part of the defendant); Hazel-Atlas, 322 U.S. at 246 (stating "[w]e cannot easily understand how, under the admitted facts, Hazel should have been expected to do more than it did to uncover the fraud" where plaintiff interfered with defendant's attempts to uncover the fraud); Pumphrey, 62 F.3d at 1133 (where defendant prevented disclosure of critical evidence during trial through the use of [*26] misleading, inaccurate, and incomplete responses to discovery requests and presentation of fraudulent evidence and testimony during trial, defendant "is in no position to dispute the effectiveness of the scheme in helping to obtain a favorable jury verdict").

Moreover, where, as here, the Court itself was a victim of the fraud, "even if [the moving party] did not exercise the highest degree of diligence [the] fraud cannot be condoned for that reason alone." Hazel-Atlas, 322 U.S. at 246. As the Supreme Court explained, "[t]ampering with the administration of justice in the manner indisputably shown here involves far more than an injury to a single litigant. It is a wrong against the institutions set up to protect and safeguard the public, institutions in which fraud cannot complacently be tolerated consistently with the good order of society." Id. Thus, "it cannot be that the preservation of the integrity of the judicial process must always wait upon the diligence of litigations." Id.

In sum, Swisher has shown by clear and convincing evidence that TSI engaged in misconduct that undermined the judicial process which went to the central issues in the case. See Estate of Stonehill, 660 F.3d at 445, 452; Fed. R. Civ. P. 60(d)(3). Accordingly, the motion for relief from judgment under [*27] Federal Rule 60(d)(3) is granted.

B. Rules 60(b)(2) and (b)(3)

TSI argues that relief under subsections (b)(2) and B. Rules 60(b)(2) and *(b)(3) is time-barred by their one-year statute of limitations. Opp'n, Docket No. 410 at 13-15. TSI argues that Swisher is not entitled to relief under Rule 60(b)(2) because Swisher discovered TSI's fraud before the Court entered a new operative judgment in this case. However, Rule 60(b)(2) states that new evidence is that which "could not have been discovered in time to move for a new trial under Rule 59(b)." Fed. R. Civ. P. 60(b)(2). Here, the evidence demonstrating fraud — Alrahib's May 2017 interview which was revealed to the public in April 2019 — was not available during that time frame.

TSI also points to Ninth Circuit precedent holding that this "one-year limitation period is not tolled during an appeal." Nevitt v. United States, 886 F.2d 1187, 1188 (9th Cir. 1989). However, "if the appeal results in a substantive change, then the time would run from the substantially modified order entered on mandate of the appellate court." Transit Casualty Co. v. Security Trust Co., 441 F.2d 788, 791 (5th Cir. 1971). Here, the Ninth Circuit's decision substantially altered the judgment, and the time for bringing a Rule 60(b) motion restarts. Therefore, this case is distinguishable from Nevitt, in which the court affirmed the district court's initial judgment. Nevitt, 886 F.2d at 1187. TSI argues that "the clock is restarted only if the resulting 'change' to the [*28] prior judgment was such as to present a new basis for the moving party's challenge, which had not existed under the prior judgment," citing to Jones v. Swanson, 512 F.3d 1045, 1049 (8th Cir. 2008). Opp'n, Docket No. 410 at 15. However, Jones states that the relevant inquiry is whether the "legal rights and obligations of the parties" have changed as a result of the appellate court's decision. Jones, 512 F.3d at 1049. Distinguishing between liability and damages, the Eight Circuit in Jones found that the appellate court's decision did not result in substantial changes because it only modified the amount of damages, not the liability determination, while the defendant's Rule 60 motion challenged only the liability ruling. Id. Here, as noted, the Ninth Circuit's decision substantially altered both Swisher's liability and damages, and its motion challenges both. Therefore, the motion is timely.[2]

Moreover, based on the same reasoning applied above to Swisher's motion for relief from judgment under Rule 60(d), the requirements of Rule 60(b)(2) and 60(b)(3) are satisfied. To prevail under subsection (b)(2), the movant must show that (1) the evidence constitutes "newly discovered evidence" within the meaning of Rule 60(b), (2) the movant exercised due diligence to discover this evidence, and (3) the newly discovered evidence would have [*29] likely changed the disposition of the case. Feature Realty, Inc. v. City of Spokane, 331 F.3d 1082, 1093 (9th Cir. 2003). Subsection (b)(3) requires that the movant show (1) fraud, misrepresentation, or misconduct by an opposing party which (2) prevented it from fully and fairly presenting its case or defense. Jones, 921 F.2d at 879. As demonstrated above, Swisher exercised the requisite diligence, newly discovered evidence of fraud was uncovered in 2019, and the evidence fraud would have likely changed the disposition of the case. Furthermore, the absence of this evidence of fraud from the record substantially interfered with Swisher's defense.

In sum, because Swisher has shown that relief is appropriate under Rule 60(b)(2) and Rule 60(b)(3) by clear and convincing evidence, its motion is granted under these subsections as well.

C. Mandate Rule

TSI also argues that the Ninth Circuit's mandate deprives the Court of authority to grant Swisher's Rule 60 motion. Opp'n, Docket No. 410 at 22-25. The Court disagrees. "Absent a mandate which explicitly directs to the contrary, a district court upon remand can permit the plaintiff to 'file additional pleadings, vary or expand the issues.'" Nguyen v. United States, 792 F.2d 1500, 1502 (9th Cir. 1986) (quoting Rogers v. Hill, 289 U.S. 582, 587-88, 53 S. Ct. 731, 77 L. Ed. 1385 (1933)). The Supreme Court and several Courts of Appeals have held that district courts have the authority to rule on Rule 60 motions after the issuance of [*30] an appellate mandate. Standard Oil Co. of California v. United States, 429 U.S. 17, 18, 97 S. Ct. 31, 50 L. Ed. 2d 21 (1976); Gould v. Mut. Life Ins. Co. of New York, 790 F.2d 769, 775 (9th Cir. 1986); Rembrandt Vision Techs., L.P. v. Johnson & Johnson Vision Care, Inc., 818 F.3d 1320, 1329 (Fed. Cir. 2016). Therefore, the Ninth Circuit's mandate does not preclude the Court's consideration of Swisher's Rule 60 motion.

---

[2] The Ninth Circuit's ruling did not alter anything with respect to the breach of contract claims. Therefore, they are time barred from relief under Rules 60(b)(2) and (b)(3). However, it is immaterial for purposes of this ruling because the judgment in favor of TSI on its breach of contract claims is vacated under Rule 60(d)(3).

IV. Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, the Court grants the motion for relief from judgment. Therefore, the motions to stay and for summary adjudication are denied as moot.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Opinion

REPORT AND RECOMMENDATION

This is an antitrust action by Plaintiffs tyntec, Inc. and tyntec Group Ltd.'s (collectively "tyntec") against Defendant Syniverse Technologies, LLC ("Syniverse") alleging (1) monopolization, specifically refusal to deal, under § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2; (2) attempted monopolization under § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2; (3) common law tortious interference [*2] with contract; and (4) common law tortious interference with business relations. Doc. 42. The parties have filed cross-motions for summary judgment (Docs. 116 & 119), statements of undisputed facts in support of their motions (Docs. 117 & 120), responses (Docs. 132 & 130), as well as statements of disputed facts in support of their responses (Docs. 134 & 131). For the reasons that follow, it is recommended that tyntec's Motion for Summary Judgment (Doc. 116) be denied, and Syniverse's Motion for Summary Judgment (Doc. 119) be granted.

I. BACKGROUND

The amended complaint alleges that Syniverse is a monopolist in the U.S. inter-carrier vendor ("ICV") market. An ICV facilitates the delivery of text or short messages (SMS messages) and multimedia messages (MMS messages) from the subscribers of one wireless telecommunications carrier's network to the subscribers of another wireless telecommunications carrier's network. In other words, the ICVs allow interoperability for cell phone users to communicate between their provider and their recipients' provider such as Verizon and AT&T. The ICV uses its own facilities as an intermediary to "bridge the gap" between the two networks for delivery of [*3] messages. Doc. 52-1 at ¶ 10. There are three companies that sell ICV services in the U.S. ICV market: Syniverse, SAP, and tyntec.[1] Doc. 42 at ¶ 2.

ICVs have two types of customers: (1) telecommunication companies that hold Commercial Mobile Radio Service ("CMRS") licenses issued by the FCC, and (2) telecommunications companies that do not hold a CMRS license but have a "use case" that has been approved by the four major wireless carriers in the U.S. ("Non-CMRS"). Doc. 116, Ex. 4 at 42:23-43:2; Doc. 120 at ¶ 4. SMS and MMS message traffic predominantly occurs between individual wireless telecommunications customers. Messages are identified as either person-to-person ("P2P") messages, typically delivered from one human subscriber to another via carrier, or application-to-person ("A2P") messages, usually software communicating with a person, or carrier subscriber. Doc. 120 at ¶ 2.

Some telecommunication companies charge per-message fees to Non-CMRS companies who wish to deliver messages to carrier subscribers. Doc. 120 at ¶ 6. As a result, some Non-CMRS companies disguise A2P messages as P2P traffic to avoid paying fees; this is also known as "gray routing." Doc. 120 at ¶ 18. In [*4] turn, some telecommunication companies rely on ICVs for policing of A2P messages and messages from Non-CMRS companies, including ensuring Non-CMRS have approved use codes and do not spam customers. Doc. 120 at ¶ 5; Doc. 131 at ¶ 5. Syniverse is contractually obligated to some of its telecommunication carriers to stop unwanted A2P and Non-CMRS messages. Doc. 120 at ¶ 18. Efforts to stop unwanted A2P and Non-CMRS messages are complicated, labor-intensive, and expensive for ICVs. Doc. 120 at ¶ 18.

The two largest ICVs providers in the United States are Syniverse and SAP. Syniverse enjoys between a 75% and 80% market share of the U.S. ICV market. Doc. 116, Ex. 5 at 237:3-238:3. tyntec alleges "a dangerous possibility" of Syniverse acquiring monopoly power because there are high barriers to entry into the ICV market, and Syniverse is presently using its power to exclude tyntec by "increasing tyntec's peering costs to anti-competitive levels." Doc. 42 at ¶ 104(c).

A. Peering Agreements

ICVs interconnect with other ICVs through peering agreements. Wireless customers have become accustomed to being able to send messages from any wireless provider to any other, yet no ICVs provider has an agreement [*5] with every wireless provider. Therefore, ICVs have established peering agreements between themselves to deliver messages to their respective telecommunication clients and improve their reach and message delivery capabilities. Doc. 116, Ex. 2 at ¶ 8, Ex. 22 at ¶ 9, Ex. 23 at ¶ 8; Doc. 52-1 at ¶¶ 4-19; Doc. 237, Ex. 76 at 155:16-157:8.

[1] Syniverse disputes the categorization of tyntec as an ICV as there is no binding definition of an ICV, and tyntec had no carrier customers at the inception of this suit while SAP and Syniverse had numerous wireless carrier customers. Doc. 134 at ¶ 16; see also ¶¶ 5, 26.

Historically, parties to peering agreements do not directly charge each other for carrying the other's messaging traffic, but rather pass the charges on to the telecommunications carriers for providing the interconnectivity. Doc. 42 at ¶ 61. This billing arrangement is referred to as "bill and keep," which has been the business model employed between Syniverse and other ICVs for more than twelve years. Doc. 42 at ¶¶ 37, 38, 51, 62.

Syniverse, however, has never directly entered into a domestic peering agreement with tyntec.[2] Syniverse's peering agreements with tyntec originated as peering agreements between Syniverse and Iris Wireless LLC ("Iris"), an ICV. Doc. 120 at ¶ 19. Syniverse's first peering agreement with Iris, executed in 2004, was amended in 2011 and 2012 to account for international message traffic imbalance.[3] Doc. 120 at ¶ 22. By 2014, Syniverse [*6] decided not to renew the peering agreement with Iris and exercised its contractual right to terminate. Doc. at 120 ¶ 30. In response, Iris filed a lawsuit seeking a temporary restraining order to keep the agreement in place and, after amending its complaint, alleging an antitrust violation. Doc. 120 at ¶ 31; see Doc. 11 in Iris Wireless LLC v. Syniverse Techs., No. 8:14-cv-1741-T-30TGW (M.D. Fla.) ("Iris Litigation"). However, by late 2014, Syniverse and Iris settled the lawsuit. Doc. 120 at ¶ 34; Doc. 131 at ¶ 34. The Wireless Peer-to-Peer Messaging Peering Services Agreement Between Syniverse and Iris Wireless ("P2P Agreement") and the MMS Interworking Services Agreement Between Syniverse and Iris Wireless ("MMSAgreement"), both dated April 7, 2015, (collectively, the "Iris Peering Agreements") at issue here resulted from the Iris Litigation and were part of a package settlement deal. Doc. 42 at ¶ 60; Doc. 120 at ¶ 53; see also Docs. 65-1, 65-2. The Iris Peering Agreements provide for an initial two-year term with the option for one-year renewals.[4] Either party could choose to not renew with 90 days' written notice. Syniverse, however, did not plan to renew the Iris Peering Agreements [*7] with Iris because Iris's "only real customers were not companies that were licensed wireless telecommunications carriers but companies that traffic in SMS-IP messages."[5]See Doc. 52-1 at ¶ 30. Syniverse asserts that it did not earn a profit from the Iris Peering Agreements, Iris did not provide Syniverse any reach to carriers, and the Iris Peering Agreements were not otherwise beneficial to Syniverse. Doc. 120 at ¶ 57.

The Iris Peering Agreements were non-transferable without Syniverse's consent unless a company (1) merged with, acquired, or purchased a controlling interest in Iris, or (2) purchased all or substantially all of Iris's assets. Doc. 120 at ¶ 56; Doc. 236, Ex. 42. In June 2016, tyntec acquired all of Iris's assets, including the Iris Peering Agreements and its existing business.[6] Doc. 116, Exs. 29, 30; Doc. 120 at ¶ 49. In August 2016, tyntec gave Syniverse notice that Iris had transferred the Iris Peering Agreements to tyntec. Doc. 120 at ¶ 52.

[2] Syniverse asserts that it has never done business with tyntec for P2P messaging prior to tyntec's acquisition of the peering agreements at issue in this suit. Doc. 120 at ¶ 54. tyntec, however, asserts that tyntec and Syniverse did have a business relationship for messaging in the form of an International SMS Hubbing Interconnect Services Agreement dated November 1, 2007. Doc. 120-9 at Ex. 67.

[3] Syniverse's corporate representative, Christopher Wright, testified:"[Syniverse] noticed that all the traffic was mainly coming from Iris Wireless. So [Syniverse] wanted to make sure that [it was] compensated and covered [its] potential losses for those termination fees. So [Syniverse] went through an amendment process to amend the agreement [with Iris] to cover those termination fees." See Doc. 236, Ex. 10 at 158:21-162:23.

[4] See Doc. 65-1, P2P Agreement, § 10.1; Doc. 65-2, MMS Agreement, § 10.1. ("This Agreement shall commence on the Effective Date and shall continue in full force and effect for two (2) year [sic] from the Effective Date (the "Initial Term"). This Agreement shall automatically be renewed for successive one (1) year terms (each a "Renewal Term") unless and until any Party gives the other Parties ninety (90) days' prior written notice prior to the end of the Initial Term or the applicable Renewal Term of its intent to terminate this Agreement as of the end of such Term.").

[5] SMS-IP companies obtain access to blocks of 10-digit telephone numbers to be used as the originating or terminating number for sending text messages over the Internet. Doc. 52-1 at ¶ 30. In those instances, Syniverse charges a "transit fee" when routing SMS-IP traffic to Syniverse's wireless telecommunications carrier customers. Id.

[6] tyntec's acquisition of Iris's assets originated with an option agreement entered into between Iris and Enigma Technology Services Consulting, Ltd. ("Enigma"), a personal holding company for a tyntec officer. Doc. 120 at ¶ 45; Doc. 131 at ¶ 45. Under the option agreement, Enigma could acquire the Iris Peering Agreements and an Iris-SAP peering agreement. Doc. 120 at ¶ 45. On June 28, 2016, Enigma assigned the option agreement to Phoenix Spring, Ltd ("Phoenix"), which was an acquisition Syniverse was concerned about tyntec's acquisition of the Iris Peering Agreements for several reasons. tyntec had never provided ICV Services in North America to wireless carriers. Doc. 120 at ¶ 54. Syniverse questioned [*8] whether tyntec had the technical proficiencies to provide ICV services. Doc. 120 at ¶ 54. Syniverse knew of tyntec as an A2P operator in Europe and believed tyntec engaged in gray routing messages. Doc. 120 at ¶ 55. Syniverse was unsure if tyntec intended to use the Iris Peering Agreements to deliver Non-CMRS messages or gray route messages. Doc. 120 at ¶ 55. Finally, Syniverse remained (and remains) unsure whether Iris appropriately transferred the Iris Peering Agreements. Doc. 120 at ¶ 64. As such, Syniverse weighed whether to peer with tyntec for the five months left in the Initial Term of the Iris Peering Agreements. Doc. 120 at ¶ 64.

B. Alleged Antitrust Violations

On November 10, 2016, Syniverse conveyed to tyntec its intent not to renew the Iris Peering Agreements.[7] Doc. 42 at ¶ 5; Doc. 65-3 (the "November Letter"). The November Letter expressed Syniverse's skepticism concerning the validity of the assignment of the Iris Peering Agreements to tyntec, but also conveyed Syniverse's decision to honor the Iris Peering Agreements through April 7, 2017—the termination date of the Initial Term. Doc. 65-3 at 3. Syniverse stated that if tyntec desired to receive messaging services from [*9] Syniverse after April 7, 2017, it would be happy to provide tyntec with their "standard message aggregator agreement." Doc. 65-3 at 3. A "standard message aggregator agreement" would provide tyntec access to Syniverse's network by paying per-message and other fees for carrying tyntec's message traffic. Doc. 42 at ¶ 63; Doc. 65-4. tyntec characterizes the terms of the new proposed agreement set forth in the November Letter as evidence of a "predatory act that will exclude tyntec from the U.S. ICV market." Doc. 42 at ¶ 7. tyntec alleges that despite the "long-standing, customary and mutually advantageous course of dealing, and without any legitimate pro-competitive justification," Syniverse intended to terminate the Iris Peering Agreements without knowing the volume of traffic tyntec planned to send Syniverse's telecommunications customers. Doc. 42 at ¶ 5. On December 14, 2016, Syniverse sent formal notice of termination effective April 7, 2017, in compliance with the terms of the Iris Peering Agreements. Doc. 65-4.

On January 27, 2017, the President of tyntec Inc., Eddie DeCurtis, met with two representatives from Syniverse, Senior Vice President and General Manager of Connectivity and [*10] Mobility Services, John Wick, and Group Vice President for Syniverse, John McRae, in Tampa to negotiate a deal. Doc. 42 at ¶ 9; Doc. 120 at ¶¶ 64, 66. McRae presented new pricing terms to DeCurtis at the meeting. Doc. 120 at ¶ 68. According to Syniverse, these new terms were designed to reflect pricing that Syniverse had with customers similar to tyntec, such as Centurylink, i.e., companies with a two Non-CMRS customer base. Doc. 120 at ¶ 66. As such, the pricing terms offered by Syniverse during the January 27 meeting were terms of a "customer agreement." Doc. 131 at ¶ 75. tyntec, however, wanted terms more like the Iris Peering Agreements; specifically, bill and keep terms. Doc. 120 at ¶ 73. tyntec argues that Syniverse was attempting to use its U.S. market monopoly to exclude tyntec by breaking the "bill and keep" course of dealing that had existed among the U.S. ICVs since 2004 by charging tyntec exclusionary per-message fees for +1 to +1 SMS and MMS messages. Doc. 117 at ¶¶ 53-68. tyntec disagrees that it is similar to Centurylink, or other Syniverse customers, because those customers do not have ICV capabilities nor did they invest the time and money that tyntec did in developing [*11] those capabilities. Doc. 131 at ¶¶ 66, 67. tyntec further disputes that its customer base was "two Non-CMRS companies."[8] Doc. 131 at ¶¶ 66, 67. McRae expected tyntec to make a counteroffer to the January 27, 2017 proposed agreement. Doc. 120 at ¶¶ 68, 109.

Subsequently, Syniverse claimed to have been drafting a peering agreement in reliance on tyntec's assurances, during a February 22, 2017, phone conference, that tyntec had signed a deal with Transaction Network Services company formed by tyntec. Doc. 120 at ¶ 49. On June 29, 2016 Phoenix exercised the option. Doc. 120 at ¶ 50; Doc. 42 at ¶¶ 18, 21,48, 60. Phoenix was later renamed tyntec Group Ltd. The peering agreement between Iris Wireless and SAP was also acquired by tyntec. See Doc. 42 at ¶ 48.

[7] The Initial Term of the Iris Peering Agreements terminated on April 7, 2017, during the pendency of this action.

[8] During the pendency of this litigation, tyntec negotiated and signed an exclusive contract to provide ICV services to Globe Telecom, the largest Philippine wireless carrier and a former Syniverse customer. Doc. 116, Exs. 15, 72. tyntec, however, did not procure this contract until January 2018.

("TNS") to provide ICV services to 21 of its carriers. Doc. 116, Ex. 60; Doc. 120 at ¶ 75. In February 2017, McRae directed Niaz Alibhai, the Director of Production Management in charge of Syniverse's ICV business, and his supervisor, Kyle Spinks, to prepare a peering agreement that included reciprocal transit fees payable by each party with a "guard band" that only required payment if the messages were out of balance by more than an agreed upon percentage. Doc. 120 at ¶ 75. The execution of this agreement depended on tyntec's verification of the 21 wireless carriers. Doc. 120 at ¶ 75.

McRae and DeCurtis met face-to-face again in March 2017 at a telecommunications trade show called Mobile World Congress. Doc. 120 at [*12] ¶ 77. They discussed the potential commercial relationship between Syniverse and tyntec, which McRae characterized as a reciprocal messaging agreement with certain protections for out-of-balance traffic (e.g., "guardrails") provided that tyntec provide the names of its carrier customers. Doc. 120 at ¶ 77. tyntec, however, initiated this litigation on March 10, 2017, before DeCurtis could finish his negotiations. Doc. 120 at ¶ 78. tyntec's decision to sue ended the negotiations with Syniverse. Doc. 120 at ¶ 78. tyntec has continued trying to negotiate a "bill and keep" deal since filing suit, but Syniverse has refused tyntec's offers.[9] Doc. 116, Ex. 57. Syniverse claims that tyntec never actually wanted to negotiate a deal. See Doc. 134 at ¶ 73.

The amended complaint alleges that Syniverse refused to deal with tyntec on the traditional "bill and keep" or "no-fee" terms and, instead, sought to impose a restructuring of the agreement that would require tyntec to pay a per message fee, much like the charge Syniverse charges its telecommunication carrier customers. Doc. 42 at ¶ 6. According to tyntec, peering agreements always "involve a bill and keep revenue model whereby Syniverse and tyntec [*13] do not charge each other for carrying messaging traffic, but where Syniverse and tyntec generate revenue by billing their respective telecommunications carrier customers and keeping the proceeds." Doc. 42 at ¶ 51. The amended complaint alleges that Syniverse possessed the specific intent to "unilaterally terminate a voluntary, beneficial, and profitable multi-year course of dealing in order to achieve an anti-competitive end—the destruction of tyntec—even at the risk of degrading Syniverse's own service in the short run by jettisoning its connectivity with tyntec and the subscribers that tyntec delivers." Doc. 42 at ¶ 69. tyntec's allegations, however, focus on the course of dealing between Syniverse and Iris. The amended complaint further alleges that Syniverse's actions would "leave telecommunications carriers in the United States with only two ICVs to compete for their business - Syniverse and SAP. And, if Syniverse eliminates SAP, telecommunications carriers would be left with no choice at all - only Syniverse. This would leave Syniverse with the unrestricted ability to raise prices in the long run." See Doc. 42 at ¶ 70; see also Doc. 42 at ¶ 11.

II. STANDARD OF REVIEW

Summary judgment [*14] is appropriate if all the pleadings, discovery, affidavits, and disclosure materials on file show that there is no genuine disputed issue of material fact, and the movant is entitled to judgment as matter of law. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(a) and (c). The existence of some factual disputes between the litigants will not defeat an otherwise properly supported summary judgment motion; "the requirement is that there be no genuine issue of material fact." Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 247-48, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986) (emphasis in original). A fact is material if it is a legal element of the claim that may affect the outcome of the suit under the substantive governing law. Allen v. Tyson Foods, Inc., 121 F.3d 642, 646 (11th Cir. 1997). A dispute about a material fact is "genuine" if the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could find for the non-moving party. Anderson, 477 U.S. at 248. In determining whether a genuine dispute of material fact exists, the court must view the evidence and all factual inferences drawn therefrom in the light most favorable to the non-moving party and must [9] Over a year after filing this lawsuit, tyntec offered to pay Syniverse $40,800 per year and then $48,000 per year in exchange for a bill and keep peering agreement. Doc. 131 at ¶ 69; Doc. 120 at ¶ 109; Doc. 237, Exs. 118, 119. Although not on bill and keep terms, Syniverse provided a counteroffer to tyntec's offer of $40,800 per year. Doc. 120, Ex. 27 ("Syniverse is willing to enter into a new messaging agreement with tyntec based upon the current type of traffic that tyntec carries. It is our understanding that none of tyntec's current customers are mobile network operators and therefore we believe the appropriate pricing is our SMS-IP aggregator pricing.").

resolve any reasonable doubts in the non-movant's favor. Skop v. City of Atlanta, 485 F.3d 1130, 1136 (11th Cir. 2007).

The non-moving party, however, "must do more than simply show that there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 586, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986). Rather, the non-movant must go beyond the pleadings and "identify affirmative evidence" that [*15] creates a genuine dispute of material fact. Crawford-El v. Britton, 523 U.S. 574, 600, 118 S. Ct. 1584, 140 L. Ed. 2d 759 (1998). "[M]ere conclusions and unsupported factual allegations are legally insufficient to defeat a summary judgment motion." Ellis v. England, 432 F.3d 1321, 1326 (11th Cir. 2005) (citing Bald Mountain Park, Ltd. v. Oliver, 863 F.2d 1560, 1563 (11th Cir. 1989)). Moreover, "[a] mere 'scintilla' of evidence supporting the opposing party's position will not suffice; there must be enough of a showing that the jury could reasonably find for that party." Walker v. Darby, 911 F.2d 1573, 1577 (11th Cir. 1990) (citing Anderson, 477 U.S. at 252). Summary judgment "may be especially appropriate in an antitrust case because of the chill antitrust litigation can have on legitimate price competition." McGahee v. N. Propane Gas Co., 858 F.2d 1487, 1493 (11th Cir. 1988) (citing Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 594) (noting three Supreme Court decisions that vacated appellate reversals of district court orders granting summary judgment).

III. DISCUSSION

Section 2 of the Sherman Act prohibits the monopolization or attempted monopolization of "any part of the trade or commerce among the several States." 15 U.S.C. § 2. tyntec alleges that Syniverse both monopolized and attempted to monopolize the ICV industry in the United States by terminating the Iris Peering Agreements and refusing to offer any terms that would allow tyntec to remain as a competitor. tyntec also alleges claims for tortious interference with a contract and tortious interference with a prospective business relationship [*16] based on the termination of the Iris Peering Agreements. The Court will address each claim in turn.

A. Monopolization Claim

Monopolization under § 2 of the Sherman Act requires: (1) possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) willful acquisition or maintenance of that monopolistic power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident. See U.S. v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 86 S. Ct. 1698, 16 L. Ed. 2d 77 (1966). However, "[e]ven a company with monopoly power has no general duty to cooperate with its business rivals and may refuse to deal with them if valid business reasons exist for such refusal." Morris Communs. Corp. v. PGA Tour, Inc., 364 F.3d 1288, 1295 (11th Cir. 2004) (citing Mid-Texas Commc'ns Sys., Inc. v. Am. Tel & Tel. Co., 615 F.2d 1372, 1388 (5th Cir. 1980)[10]). The purpose of the Sherman Act, however, is not to force firms to help one another as the results themselves would likely be inconsistent with the goals of antitrust law. Novell, Inc. v. Microsoft Corp., 731 F.3d 1064, 1073 (10th Cir. 2013). "In the absence of any purpose to create or maintain a monopoly, ... a company may deal or refuse to deal with whomever it pleases." Morris Communs, 364 F.3d at 1294-95 (citing Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 105 S. Ct. 2847, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467 (1985)).

In fact, "'as a general rule ... purely unilateral conduct' does not run afoul of section 2 - 'businesses are free to choose' whether or not to do business with others and free to assign what prices they hope to secure for their own products.'" Novell, 731 F.3d at 1072 (quoting Pac. Bell Tel. Co. v. Linkline Commc'ns, 555 U.S. 438, 448, 129 S. Ct. 1109, 172 L. Ed. 2d 836 (2009)); see also [*17] Verizon Commc'ns Inc. v. Law Offices of Curtis V. Trinko, 540 U.S. 398, 408, 124 S. Ct. 872, 157 L. Ed. 2d 823 (2004) ("[T]he Sherman Act does not restrict the long recognized right of [a] trader or manufacturer engaged in an entirely private business, freely to exercise his own independent discretion as to parties with whom he will deal." (quotations and citation omitted; alteration in the original)). The Supreme Court has "been very cautious in recognizing ... exceptions" to this long-recognized rule "because of the uncertain virtue of forced sharing and the difficulty of identifying and remedying anticompetitive conduct by a single firm." Trinko, 540 U.S. at 408. Accordingly, there are only a few "rare" exceptions to this general rule. Novell, Inc., 731 F.3d at 1073. Refusal to deal is one of these exceptions and is what tyntec alleges occurred here. Id. "Refusal to deal doctrine targets only a discrete category of section 2 cases attacking a firm's unilateral decisions about with whom it will deal and on what terms." Id. at 1076.

To bring a claim for a refusal to deal, a party must show not just a refusal to deal, but a refusal that was unlawful. At least two elements must be present in order to establish a refusal as unlawful. First, there must be a "preexisting voluntary and presumably profitable course of dealing between the monopolist and rival." Novell, 731 F.3d at 1074. This requirement [*18] protects from antitrust liability unadulterated, unilateral conduct where no course of dealing ever existed. Id. Second, "the monopolist's discontinuation of the preexisting course of dealing must 'suggest[] a willingness to forsake short-term profits to achieve an anti-competitive end.'" Id. at 1075 (quoting Trinko, 540 U.S. at 407) (alteration in the original). Moreover, this proof must be more than just the monopolist deciding to forsake short-term profits; "the monopolist's conduct must be irrational but for its anticompetitive effect." Id. at 1075 (citing Aspen Skiing, 472 U.S. at 597 (a refusal to deal with a competitor doesn't violate § 2 if "valid business reasons exist for that refusal"); Trinko, 540 U.S. at 407 (defendant must be seeking "an anti-competitive end"); 3B Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law ¶ 772, at 223 (3d ed. 2008) (the refusal must be "irrational" but for its anticompetitive tendencies); Gregory J. Werden, Identifying Exclusionary Conduct Under Section 2: The "No Economic Sense" Test, 73 Antitrust L.J. 413, 422-25 (2006)). With this in mind, the Court turns to the required elements of a monopolization claim.

1. Relevant Market & Monopoly Power

When determining whether a defendant has violated § 2 of the Sherman Act, the Court first determines the relevant market and then decides whether [*19] the defendant possessed monopoly power in that market. See U.S. Anchor Mfg., Inc. v. Rule Indus., Inc., 7 F.3d 986, 994 (11th Cir. 1993). The relevant market has two components: the geographic market and the product market. Duty Free Americas, Inc. v. Estee Lauder Cos., Inc., 797 F.3d 1248, 1263 (11th Cir. 2015). "The proper market definition in this case can be determined only after a factual inquiry into the 'commercial realities' faced by consumers." Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Tech. Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 482, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992) (quoting Grinnell, 384 U.S. at 572). The Court cannot decide the relevant market and market power based on the record before it.

Defining the relevant product market is a fact-intensive endeavor. Duty Free Americas, 797 F.3d at 1264. A product market consists of "products that have reasonable interchangeability for the purposes for which they are produced." McWane, Inc. v. F.T.C., 783 F.3d 814, 828 (11th Cir. 2015) (quoting United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 404, 76 S. Ct. 994, 100 L. Ed. 1264 (1956)). "The reasonable interchangeability of use or the cross-elasticity of demand between a product and its substitutes constitutes the outer boundaries of a product market for antitrust purposes." U.S. Anchor, 7 F.3d at 995 (footnote omitted). "[A] high cross-elasticity of demand indicates that the two products in question are reasonably interchangeable substitutes for each other and hence are part of the same market." Jacobs v. Tempur-Pedic Int'l, Inc., 626 F.3d 1327, 1337 n.13 (11th Cir. 2010). tyntec argues that the relevant product market is the market for ICV services for which there is no viable economic substitutes. Doc. 116 at 13-14. Syniverse contends Over-The-Top ("OTT") applications like [*20] WhatsApp, Facebook Messenger, and iMessage provide messaging services that compete with ICVs. Doc. 134 at ¶ 10.

The relevant geographic market is defined as "the area of effective competition in which a product or its reasonably interchangeable substitutes are traded." Duty Free Americas, 797 F.3d at 1263 (quoting L.A. Draper & Son v. Wheelabrator-Frye, Inc., 735 F.2d 414, 423 (11th Cir. 1984)). The Court considers whether outside sellers are precluded from entering the market and whether consumers could realistically obtain the product from outside the geographic area. See id. (citing T. Harris Young & Assocs., Inc. v. Marquette Elecs., Inc., 931 F.2d 816, 823 (11th Cir. 1991)). Therefore, barriers to expansion, including "transportation costs, delivery limitations and customer convenience and preference" are relevant to this determination. Id. (quoting L.A. Draper & Son, 735 F.2d at 423). tyntec argues that the relevant geographic market is the United States. tyntec asserts that Syniverse has a monopoly on ICV services within the United States due to its market share of between 75% and 80%. Doc. 116, Ex. 5 at 237:3-238:3. Syniverse does not dispute its market share in the United States but argues that the relevant ICV market is a global market. Price competition in the global market is extremely competitive and includes other ICV companies like SAP, TNS, BICs, and Orange France. Doc. 134 at ¶¶ 15, 32, 38.

The parties have [*21] established that material issues of fact exist as to the relevant market. Because "[t]he parameters of a given market are questions of fact . . . summary judgment is inappropriate if there are material differences of fact." Thompson v. Metro. Multi-List, Inc., 934 F.2d 1566, 1573-74 (11th Cir. 1991) (citation omitted). Regardless of whether Syniverse possessed monopoly power in the relevant market, however, Syniverse is entitled to summary judgment because, as shown below, it did not refuse to deal with tyntec, the parties did not have a preexisting voluntary and presumably profitable course of dealing, and Syniverse had valid business justifications for its actions. Therefore, even if Syniverse is monopolistic, it has not violated § 2 of the Sherman Act.

2. Refusal to Deal

tyntec argues that Syniverse's refusal to agree to a "bill and keep" arrangement or alternate but feasible terms constitutes a refusal to deal. The record, however, reflects that Syniverse's actions were lawful.

Syniverse first offered tyntec a "standard message aggregator agreement" in the November Letter, which would provide tyntec access to Syniverse's network by paying per-message and other fees for carrying tyntec's message traffic. Doc. 42 at ¶ 63; Doc. 65-4. Thereafter, on January 27, [*22] 2017, Syniverse provided tyntec with proposed terms that tracked agreements it had with companies Syniverse believed to be similarly situated to tyntec (i.e., Centurylink). In addition, it is undisputed that the parties' negotiation did not end on January 27, 2017. Based on tyntec's representations that it had signed an exclusive deal to provide ICV services for P2P messaging for "ten wireless carriers," McRae explained during a February 22, 2017, conference call with tyntec that Syniverse required the carriers' names in order to negotiate a new agreement. Doc. 120 at ¶¶ 72, 73. DeCurtis later represented to Syniverse that there were actually 21 wireless carriers. Doc. 120 a ¶ 74. Based on this representation regarding tyntec's expanded customer base, McRae instructed Alibhai and his supervisor, Spinks, to begin drafting a peering agreement. Doc. 120 at ¶ 75. The peering agreement was to include reciprocal transit fees payable by each party with a "guard band" that only required payment if the messages were out of balance by more than an agreed upon percentage. Doc. 120 at 75. While tyntec disputes whether Syniverse began drafting such an agreement, it does not dispute that McRae and [*23] DeCurtis subsequently met face-to-face in March 2017 at a telecommunications trade show called Mobile World Congress, discussed the potential commercial relationship between Syniverse and tyntec, and were still negotiating an agreement based on tyntec's representations of an expanded customer base. Doc. 120 at ¶ 77; Doc. 131 at ¶ 75, 77. Shortly thereafter, however, tyntec filed this suit on March 10, 2017. Doc. 1. As such, there is no genuine issue of material fact as to whether Syniverse was willing to negotiate an agreement with tyntec, albeit on terms other than strictly "bill and keep."

Indeed, tyntec acknowledges that Syniverse attempted to negotiate a deal with tyntec but argues that Syniverse's offers, if accepted, would force tyntec to exit the market. Doc. 116 at 32.[11] In other words, tyntec urges this Court to consider Syniverse's offers as "practical refusals to deal" because they were offers that tyntec could not accept. See MetroNet Servs. Corp. v. Qwest Corp., 383 F.3d 1124, 1132 (9th Cir. 2004) ("An offer to deal with a competitor only on unreasonable terms and conditions can amount to a practical refusal to deal."). tyntec, however, does not explain specifically why it was unable to accept Syniverse's initial or subsequent offers and does [*24] not submit any pertinent evidence in support of the proposition that tyntec would be "forced to exit the market" based on the terms offered by Syniverse. tyntec only asserts that "the January 2017 Proposal was so far afield of a 'bill and keep' course of dealing, tyntec could not possibly accept it," cites to the deposition testimony of tyntec Group, Ltd.'s board member Roland Dennert, and parenthetically describes the testimony as "noting that Syniverse's offer of a customer agreement was not a basis for negotiation, as it would not have allowed tyntec to compete in the U.S. ICV market." Doc. 130 at 26. This deposition testimony, however, does not support its contention as it fails to address tyntec's inability to compete, does not mention tyntec being "forced to exit the market," does not define "compete," and does not explain or support why the terms of the "customer agreement" offered by Syniverse were unreasonable. Doc. 236, Ex. 5 at 170:22-172:6. As such, this testimony does not create a material factual dispute as to whether Syniverse's offers equate to practical refusals to deal.

tyntec likens its situation to that found in Aspen Skiing Co. v. Aspen Highlands Skiing Corp., 472 U.S. 585, 105 S. Ct. 2847, 86 L. Ed. 2d 467 (1985), where the defendant extended an offer plaintiff could [*25] not accept. In Aspen Skiing, the defendant owned three of the four mountains comprising the ski area of Aspen, Colorado. The plaintiff owned the fourth mountain. For many years, the parties had jointly offered a multiple-day, multiple-area ticket that gave skiers admission to all four mountains (the "Joint Ticket"). Id. at 589-90. The Joint Ticket was often cheaper than purchasing multiple single-day tickets. Id. at 589. Revenues from the Joint Ticket were divided between the parties according to the relative percentage that buyers with the Joint Ticket used each mountain. Id. The defendant decided to discontinue the Joint Ticket by giving the plaintiff "an offer that it could not accept"—the defendant would continue participating in the Joint Ticket only if the plaintiff agreed to receive a fixed percentage of Joint Ticket revenues that was considerably lower than the historical average revenue based on actual usage of the plaintiff's mountain. Id. at 592. After the plaintiff rejected the offer, the defendant sold a joint ticket featuring only its three mountains. Id. at 593. The plaintiff attempted to market its own multiple-day, multiple-area package by offering ski passes to its mountain along with vouchers, each equal [*26] to the retail price of a single-day ticket, to defendant's three mountains. Id. at 593-94. The defendant, however, refused to accept these vouchers and to sell any of its lift tickets to the plaintiff at retail price. The Supreme Court upheld a jury verdict for the plaintiff, finding that "[t]he jury may well have concluded that [the defendant] elected to forgo these short-run benefits because it was more interested in reducing competition ... over the long run by harming its smaller competitor." Id. at 608. While considered the leading case for § 2 liability regarding refusal to deal claims, the Supreme Court subsequently recognized that "Aspen Skiing is at or near the outer boundary of § 2 liability." Trinko, 540 U.S. at 409; see also Novell, 731 F.3d at 1074 ("Refusal to deal doctrine's high water mark came in Aspen.").

Here, unlike the Aspen Skiing defendant, Syniverse is not demanding that tyntec agree to a revenue or cost structure that is considerably out of sync with actual usage. To the contrary, Syniverse's offers were based on either a per message basis (i.e., usage) or a "guard band" that only required payment if the messages were out of balance by more than an agreed upon percentage. Syniverse's offers demonstrated a willingness to engage in a [*27] cost structure that accounted for the relative percentage that each parties' customers used ICV services. In this regard, Syniverse's offers were more analogous to the historical agreement that was terminated by the defendant in Aspen Skiing.

Moreover, tyntec's insistence on a "bill and keep" agreement is distinguishable from the plaintiff in Aspen Skiing. To put tyntec's position in the context of Aspen Skiing, tyntec essentially wants to bill its customers for, and keep all revenue from, a ski ticket that its competitor must honor at their mountains regardless of whether tyntec's customers are disproportionately using the competitor's mountains. To go a step further, tyntec appears to want to be able to undercut the defendant by selling its ski ticket (i.e., ICV service) at a price below what its competitor charges its own customers. See Doc. 116-1, Ex. 3 at ¶ 40, Ex. 62 at 0130 (tyntec was willing to sell ICV services to companies at prices lower than those offered by Syniverse). Neither Aspen Skiing, nor antitrust law generally, require a company to continue offering its competitor such favorable terms just because it may have done so in the past.

In addition, the Supreme Court, [*28] in Aspen Skiing, found "defendant's unwillingness to renew the ticket even if compensated at retail price revealed a distinctly anticompetitive bent." Trinko, 540 U.S. at 409 (emphasis in original). The defendant's refusal to sell to the plaintiff at the prevailing retail price, in the Supreme Court's view, indicated a willingness to sacrifice short-term benefits in order to obtain higher profits in the long run from the exclusion of competition. See Aspen Skiing, 472 U.S. at 608. Here, Syniverse is attempting to charge tyntec the equivalent of retail prices, which indicates that it is attempting to maximize both short and long-term benefits. Syniverse has entered into agreements with Non-CMRS customers for the delivery of approved messages to telecommunication customers on a per-message fee. Doc. 120 at ¶ 14. Syniverse's offer to tyntec was consistent with its pricing to some of Syniverse's other SMS-IP customers. Doc. 237, Ex. 78 at ¶ 44. For example, for its first five million MMS messages in a given month, Twilio pays the same rate per MMS Message as Syniverse offered to tyntec. Id. In this regard, tyntec's insistence on a "bill and keep" agreement and refusal to pay retail rates more closely resembles the Trinko plaintiff and its [*29] insistence that the defendant had to deal with its rivals at cost. See Trinko, 540 U.S. at 409 ("[Defendant's] reluctance to interconnect at the cost-based rate of compensation ... tells us nothing about dreams of monopoly."); see also Duty Free Americas, 797 F.3d at 1267-68 (finding plaintiff's resistance of defendant's across the board price increases more similar to Trinko plaintiff than Aspen Skiing plaintiff).

tyntec also raises comments made by Alibhai as evidence that Syniverse was attempting to exclude tyntec from the U.S. ICV market. These comments, however, do not suggest Syniverse intended to forgo profits. See Novell, 731 F.3d at 1078 (holding correspondence not anticompetitive if only shows "uncharitable intent towards rival); see also Conoco Inc. v. Inman Oil Co., 774 F.2d 895, 905 (8th Cir. 1985) (finding statements that head of division wanted "to drive [plaintiff] out of business" and wanted "100% of the lubricant business in the region" insufficient for attempt to monopolize intent).

Finally, the fact that Syniverse did not accept tyntec's proposals in April and May 2018, to pay Syniverse a monthly fixed fee is also irrelevant to the analysis of tyntec's refusal to deal claim because tyntec's offers occurred after tyntec had initiated this litigation.[12] An antitrust suit filed against a party is a legitimate reason [*30] for that party's refusing to deal. See House of Materials, Inc. v. Simplicity Pattern Co., 298 F.2d 867, 871 (2d Cir. 1962) (holding refusal to deal with litigating customer was not unreasonable because "the relationship between a manufacturer and his customer should be reasonably harmonious; and the bringing of a lawsuit by the customer may provide a sound business reason for the manufacturer to terminate their relation"); Zoslaw v. MCA Distrib. Corp., 693 F.2d 870, 890 (9th Cir. 1982) (affirming summary judgment for defendants on an antitrust claim where defendants' aim to avoid future litigation after settlement with plaintiffs constituted a legitimate business reason for refusing to deal). As such, tyntec's proposals made after initiating litigation are immaterial, and the undisputed material facts establish that Syniverse has not refused to deal with tyntec.

3. Voluntary Course of Dealing

Even if tyntec could establish a genuine issue of material fact regarding Syniverse's refusal to deal, it has not shown a course of established, voluntary, and profitable dealing between tyntec and Syniverse as required for a refusal to deal claim. tyntec argues that its course of dealing with Syniverse is derivative of the course of dealing between Iris and Syniverse; i.e., tyntec contends it stepped into the shoes of Iris with the [*31] assignment of the Iris Peering Agreements, and Syniverse's course of dealing with Iris satisfies the voluntary, continuous and profitable course of dealing requirement. In support of this contention, tyntec argues that "[c]ase law from this state and district makes clear that, where a contract is assigned, the assignee 'stands in the shoes' of its assignor and has the legal right to enforce contract provisions and to pursue causes of action that the assignor would have been able to pursue." Doc. 130 at 32. tyntec then makes the tenuous argument that it, therefore, "has the right to pursue causes of action derived from the Peering Agreements, including this refusal to deal claim." Doc. 130 at 33. The cases cited by tyntec in support stand for the proposition that "[a]n assignment is a transfer of all the interests and rights to the thing assigned." *Gateway Greens Cmty. Ass'n, Inc. v. Comcast of the South, Inc., No. 2:09-cv-652-FtM-DNF, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 51513, 2011 WL 1832724, at 3 (M.D. Fla. May 13, 2011) (quotations and citations omitted). Indeed, the general rule is that the assignee "stands in the shoes of the assignor" and is able to enforce the terms of the contract. Id.

[12] The Amended Complaint, for obvious reasons, does not contain allegations regarding tyntec's subsequent proposals or Syniverse's response thereto. Doc. 42; see n.9 supra.

To the extent tyntec is arguing that it has the right to pursue a refusal to deal claim [*32] because Iris had such a cause of action, the argument fails. First, the refusal to deal claim as alleged had not accrued prior to the assignment of the Iris Peering Agreements. Moreover, even if a claim had accrued that could be assigned, an explicit assignment of an antitrust claim from Iris to tyntec would be required, and the record does not establish such an assignment. See *Winn-Dixie Stores, Inc. v. Southeast Milk, Inc., No. 3:15-cv-1143-J-39PDB, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8804, 2019 WL 2347021, at 4 (M.D. Fla. Apr. 18, 2019) (citing Gulfstream III Assocs., Inc. v. Gulfstream Aerospace Corp., 995 F.2d 425, 438-39 (3d Cir. 1993) ("Because we conclude that the inclusion of antitrust claims in a general assignment would be disfavored under the direct purchaser rule, we hold that only an express assignment of an antitrust claim can be valid."); BUC Int'l Corp. v. Int'l Yacht Council Ltd., 517 F.3d 1271, 1278 n.7 (11th Cir. 2008) (following Gulfstream in a copyright infringement case involving the application of the one-satisfaction rule to federal claims); In re Prudential of Fla. Leasing, Inc., 478 F.3d 1291, 1302 (11th Cir. 2007) (citing Gulfstream in a bankruptcy matter regarding issues of settlements involving multiple claims and parties); In re: Domestic Drywall Antitrust Litig., 322 F.R.D. 188, 198 (E.D. Pa. 2017) ("In order to be effective, the assignment must expressly relate to antitrust claims; a general assignment is insufficient." (citing Gulfstream, 995 F.2d at 437-39)); Texas Life, Acc. Health & Hosp. Serv. Ins. Guar. Ass'n v. Gaylord Entm't Co., 105 F.3d 210, 218 (5th Cir. 1997) ("[O]nly an express and knowing assignment of an ERISA fiduciary breach claim is valid." (citing Gulfstream, 995 F.2d at 439))). As such, there has been no assignment [*33] by Iris to tyntec of an antitrust claim.

tyntec's argument that Syniverse's course of dealing with Iris was assigned to tyntec along with the Iris Peering Agreements is equally unavailing. None of the cases cited by tyntec extend the assignee's ability to enforce the terms of an assigned contract to include the assignee's assumption of the assignor's course of dealing history in an antitrust refusal-to-deal claim. See *Gateway Greens, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 51513, 2011 WL 1832724, at 3; Dep't of Revenue v. Bank of Am., N.A., 752 So.2d 637, 642 (Fla. 1st DCA 2000); Steward Health Care Sys., LLC v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield of R.I., 311 F. Supp. 3d 468 (D.R.I. 2018). In addition, in the context of antitrust litigation, the prior course of dealing between two parties is used, in part, as a gauge by which to measure the anticompetitive motivation of a defendant's refusal to deal, and, as such, Syniverse's prior course of dealing with Iris would be irrelevant to Syniverse's motivation when dealing with tyntec. See Trinko, 540 U.S. at 409 ("The complaint does not allege that [defendant] voluntarily engaged in a course of dealing with its rivals, or would ever have done so absent statutory compulsion. Here, therefore, the defendant's prior conduct sheds no light upon the motivation of its refusal to deal—upon whether its regulatory lapses were prompted not by competitive zeal but by anticompetitive malice."). It is, therefore, counterintuitive that the [*34] course of dealing between Syniverse and Iris, even if assignable, would be considered by the Court when determining Syniverse's motivation for terminating the Iris Peering Agreements as assigned to tyntec or for the terms offered during re-negotiation of an agreement with tyntec.

Similarly, the assignment of the Iris Peering Agreements to tyntec belies the required "voluntary" aspect of the course of dealing between tyntec and Syniverse. See, e.g., Covad Commc'ns Co. v. BellSouth Corp., 374 F.3d 1044, 1049 (11th Cir. 2004) (affirming dismissal of refusal to deal claim where the relationship between the monopolist and rival was mandated by the Federal Telecommunications Act "and thus cannot be said to have initiated a 'voluntary' course of dealing, profitable or otherwise"); see also Trinko, 540 U.S. at 409. It is undisputed that Syniverse and tyntec never had an ICV relationship prior to tyntec's acquisition of the Iris Peering Agreements. Doc. 120 at ¶¶ 54-55, 80, 84, 113 (tyntec had never before provided ICV services in North America). There is no evidence that Syniverse would have entered into a peering agreement with tyntec absent tyntec's acquisition of the Iris Peering Agreements. As in Trinko, this lack of voluntary course of dealing removes the ability to gauge Syniverse's [*35] motivation for its conduct as competitive zeal or anticompetitive malice. Because Syniverse's relationship with tyntec was not "voluntary" but imposed by tyntec's acquisition of the Iris Peering Agreements, tyntec's refusal to deal claim fails. Covad, 374 F.3d at 1049 ("Trinko now effectively makes the unilateral termination of a voluntary course of dealing a requirement for a valid refusal-to-deal claim under Aspen.").

tyntec also argues a course of dealing has been established directly between Syniverse and tyntec. Specifically, tyntec points to the fact that tyntec and Syniverse have been exchanging SMS and MMS messages on bill and keep terms for two customers, Flyp and Shelcomm, since late 2016 when tyntec acquired the Iris Peering Agreements. Doc. 130 at 33. The bill and keep terms for tyntec's two customers, however, was inherited under the Iris Peering Agreements, and, for the reasons discussed above, does not constitute a voluntary course of dealing.

In addition, any continuation of this course of dealing after the April 2017 termination of the Iris Peering Agreements was borne only from the initiation of this litigation.

Even if the Court gave credence to the assignability of Iris's course of dealing [*36] to tyntec, the course of dealing between Syniverse and Iris was not profitable and, therefore, would still not satisfy this requirement. tyntec argues that Syniverse and Iris's course of dealing must have been profitable at least to some extent because Syniverse would not have continued its peering relationship with Iris for over a decade otherwise. tyntec also argues that the course of dealing would have been profitable absent Syniverse's sabotage of Iris's customer relationships. However, "unadorned representations of counsel cannot create genuine issues of material fact." *Davidson v. Gov't Emps. Ins. Co., No. 8:09-cv-727-T-33MAP, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 126728, 2010 WL 4973494, at 4 n.7 (M.D. Fla. Dec. 1, 2010) (quotation and citation omitted). Regardless of whether Syniverse's peering relationship with Iris could have potentially been profitable given various alternate scenarios, there is no dispute that the Iris Peering Agreements were, in fact, of no financial benefit to Syniverse. See Doc. 120 at ¶¶ 108, 110; Doc. 116, Ex. 7 at 513 (email dated 2/28/2017 from Alibhai to Spinks regarding draft contract for tyntec stating "There is no financial gain for us to sign them up as they would be more dependent on us for reach and with that comes high overhead."). [*37] Where, as here, there is no evidence that Syniverse has sacrificed short-term profits to further an anticompetitive agenda, tyntec cannot prevail.

4. Business Justifications for Refusal to Deal

Even assuming tyntec could establish Syniverse's refusal to deal along with a prior voluntary and profitable course of dealing, the claim will still fail if Syniverse had a valid business justification for the refusal. See, e.g., Morris Communs, 364 F.3d at 1295 ("refusal to deal that is designed to protect or further the legitimate business purposes of a defendant does not violate the antitrust laws, even if that refusal injures competition"); Tech. Res. Servs., Inc. v. Dornier Med. Sys., Inc., 134 F.3d 1458, 1466 (11th Cir. 1998) ("A defendant can escape § 2 liability if the defendant's actions can be explained by legitimate business justifications."). Once the defendant has shown valid business justifications, the burden shifts and the plaintiff must show that the defendant's proffered business justifications are pretextual. Morris Communs, 364 F.3d at 1296.

Syniverse asserts several reasons for not renewing the Iris Peering Agreements with tyntec: it had concerns about the validity of the assignment of the Iris Peering Agreements from Iris to tyntec; it was worried that tyntec would send A2P messages over the P2P network; and there was no "strategic [*38] advantage" for Syniverse to have a peering arrangement with tyntec. Doc. 119 at 30-33. tyntec contends that Syniverse's proposed justifications for terminating the Iris Peering Agreements are pretextual. Specifically, it asserts that the timing of Syniverse's decision to terminate the Iris Peering Agreements renders Syniverse's business justifications pretextual. tyntec argues that it is "obvious that Syniverse's real motivation in terminating the Peering Agreements was to exclude tyntec from the U.S. ICV market; not the 'business justifications' that Syniverse cites...." Doc. 130 at 39.

Syniverse first asserts that it was apprehensive about tyntec's acquisition of the Iris Peering Agreements because it received inadequate information and answers from tyntec when trying to determine whether the assignment of the Iris Peering Agreements was valid.[13] Doc. 120 at ¶¶ 59, 60, 63. tyntec contends that representatives of tyntec and Iris answered Syniverse's questions in emails and at least two conference calls. Doc. 237, Exs. 131, 132, 133. tyntec also points to the timing of the November Letter and asserts that, because the November Letter was sent to tyntec less than 24 hours after receiving [*39] tyntec's answers to Syniverse's questions, this business justification is pretextual. Specifically, tyntec argues that there had not been enough time for Syniverse to have seriously considered tyntec's responses. Doc. 130 at 38.

The November Letter, however, details the contradictory information Syniverse received in response to its questions and concludes:

[13] In the absence of Syniverse's prior written consent, assignment of the Iris Peering Agreements could only be validly made in connection with a sale of all or substantially all of Iris's assets. Doc. 120 at ¶ 56; Doc. 236, Ex. 42.

> Syniverse strongly believes that it does not have any obligation, based on the information it has received to date, to recognize the attempted assignment of the Peering Agreements from Iris Wireless to [tyntec]. However, at this point Syniverse does not desire to incur additional effort or expense on this matter. Therefore we will provide the information that [tyntec] is requesting and provide the services outlined in the Peering Agreements to [tyntec] until they expire on April 7, 2017. Under separate letters, Syniverse will be providing the written notices described in ... [the Peering Agreements] of Syniverse's intention not to renew the Peering Agreements. If [tyntec] desires to receive messaging services from Syniverse after April 7, 2017, we will be happy to provide [tyntec] with our current standard message aggregator agreement. [*40]

Doc. 236, Ex. 42. tyntec does not dispute Syniverse's summary of the contradictory information regarding the assignment of the Iris Peering Agreements outlined in the November Letter or the legitimacy of Syniverse's concerns regarding the same. As evidence of pretext, tyntec simply relies on the proximity in time of the November Letter with some of tyntec's responses to some of Syniverse's inquiries. This is insufficient evidence that Syniverse's concerns about the validity of the assignment of the Iris Peering Agreements was a pretextual business justification for terminating the Iris Peering Agreements.

Syniverse states that it was also worried that tyntec, because it was an A2P business, would use the Iris Peering Agreements to send A2P messages or only Non-CMRS messages to Syniverse's customers. Syniverse asserts that this concern was justified because, in late 2016 and early 2017, tyntec did not have any wireless carrier customers, and other than DeCurtis's suggestion of 21 unnamed carriers, there was no indication that tyntec would be a real partner for P2P messaging. Doc. 119 at 32; Doc. 120 at ¶¶ 74, 80. Syniverse also argues that it had rational financial fears that tyntec was [*41] free riding on Syniverse's labors. Syniverse contends there is no dispute that the Iris Peering Agreements whether with Iris or as assigned to tyntec did not financially benefit Syniverse. Doc. 119 at 32; Doc. 120 at ¶¶ 108, 110. Syniverse points to the fact that tyntec has two small Non-CMRS customers with an "infinitesimal" amount of messaging traffic compared to Syniverse's relationships with more than a thousand carrier and Non-CMRS customers on a global scale. Doc. 120 at ¶¶ 13-14, 66. tyntec's argument that it "has indications of activity . . . that would map to an ICV" is not sufficient to establish pretext regarding these concerns. Doc. 116 at 17. Although tyntec asserts that its relationship with Globe Telecom, a Philippine carrier, qualifies tyntec as an ICV entitled to a peering agreement, this relationship is not relevant for purposes of this motion because tyntec did not enter into an agreement with Globe until a year after this litigation was filed. Doc. 120 at ¶ 118. As such, it cannot serve as evidence of pretext for Syniverse's decision to terminate the Iris Peering Agreements.

Syniverse's business relies in part on charging companies for the contractual right to send [*42] messages to those carriers. As such, the Court does not find it "irrational" for Syniverse to want to charge tyntec rather than give its services away via tyntec's preferred billing terms. See Morris Communs, 364 F.3d at 1295-96 (finding defendant met its business justification burden by showing that defendant sought to prevent plaintiff from "free-riding" on defendant's technology and rejecting plaintiff's claims of pretext) (citing Cont'l T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 55, 97 S. Ct. 2549, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568 (1977) (stating that prevention of "free-riding" by competitors is a legitimate business purpose); Consultants & Designers, Inc. v. Butler Serv. Grp., Inc., 720 F.2d 1553, 1559 (11th Cir. 1983) (concluding that defendant "had a legitimate interest in protecting from opportunistic appropriation its investment in acquiring the information necessary to carry on its business")). Accordingly, summary judgment is additionally warranted on the basis of Syniverse's business justifications. See Aerotec Int'l, Inc. v. Honeywell Int'l, Inc., 836 F.3d 1171, 1184 (9th Cir. 2016) ("[T]here is only a duty not to refrain from dealing where the only conceivable rationale or purpose is to sacrifice short-term benefits in order to obtain higher profits in the long run from the exclusion of competition." (citations and internal quotations omitted)).

5. Harm to Competition

An antitrust plaintiff must show harm to competition in general rather than harm to an individual competitor. Spanish Broad. Sys. of Fla., Inc. v. Clear Channel Commc'ns, Inc., 376 F.3d 1065, 1069 (11th Cir. 2004); see [*43] also Am. Key Corp. v. Cole Nat'l Corp., 762 F.2d 1569, 1579 n.8 (11th Cir. 1985) ("Harm to competition is a necessary element of all private antitrust suits under Section[] ... 2 of the Sherman Act...."). The Sherman Act is not intended to protect businesses from conduct that is competitive but, instead, is to protect the public from conduct that unfairly tends to destroy competition itself. Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 459, 113 S. Ct. 884, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1993). Here, tyntec alleges that Syniverse's anticompetitive conduct harmed market-wide competition. Doc. 116 at 24. More specifically, tyntec asserts that by excluding tyntec from the U.S. ICV market, Syniverse limited customer choice and price competition. Doc. 116 at 24. tyntec's argument that many of its contract negotiations are "waiting for Syniverse . . . [litigation] issue to be resolved" and that companies such as Sprint and TNS expressed an interest in purchasing ICV services from tyntec but were denied that choice is unavailing. Doc. 116, Ex. 2 at ¶ 13, Ex. 3 at ¶¶ 49-50, Ex. 22 at ¶ 14, Ex. 27 at 171:11-173:2, Ex. 33 at ¶ 13, Ex. 60, Ex. 61 at ¶ 13, Ex. 63. tyntec points solely to Syniverse's negotiations with Flyp as an illustration of how tyntec's exclusion from the market affects pricing. This isolated example, however, is insufficient to establish market-wide [*44] harm because it pertains to only one customer in an industry of hundreds of messaging companies and may not be representative of the market as a whole. Additionally, Flyp rejected the increased pricing offered by Syniverse. tyntec has not offered any other evidence that Syniverse otherwise has any power to control prices or restrict output in any relevant market. See Ohio v. Am. Express Co., 138 S. Ct. 2274, 201 L. Ed. 2d 678 (2018) (holding that, despite evidence of increased fees, plaintiffs did not prove the ability to charge anticompetitive prices); Smalley & Co. v. Emerson & Cuming, Inc., 13 F.3d 366, 368 (10th Cir. 1993) ("To establish a § 2 violation, a plaintiff must prove a defendant had 'the power to control prices or exclude competition' in the relevant market.").

tyntec also contends that Syniverse's exclusion has done serious damage to tyntec's plans to compete in the U.S. ICV market. Doc. 116 at 25. This contention, however, is irrelevant as a monopolist's harm, as discussed above, "must tend to cause harm to competition; unrelated harm to an individual competitor or consumer is not sufficient." Mr. Furniture Warehouse, Inc. v. Barclays Am./Commercial Inc., 919 F.2d 1517, 1522 (11th Cir. 1990); see also Spanish Broad., 376 F.3d at 1075 ("[C]onduct that injures individual firms rather than competition in the market as a whole does not violate Section Two."). As such, tyntec has failed to establish harm to competition in general.

B. Attempted [*45] Monopolization Claim

Section 2 of the Sherman Act forbids attempts to monopolize. 15 U.S.C. § 2. "The phrase 'attempt to monopolize' means the employment of methods, means and practices which would, if successful, accomplish monopolization, and which, though falling short, nevertheless approach so close as to create a dangerous probability of it...." Gulf States Reorganization Grp., Inc. v. Nucor Corp., 721 F.3d 1281, 1285 (11th Cir. 2013) (quoting Am. Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U.S. 781, 785, 66 S. Ct. 1125, 90 L. Ed. 1575 (1946)). The elements of an attempted monopolization are: (1) the defendant engaged in predatory or anti-competitive conduct with (2) a specific intent to monopolize the relevant market and (3) a dangerous probability of achieving monopoly power. Spectrum Sports, 506 U.S. at 456. "This anticompetitive conduct criterion captures the critical antitrust idea of harm to competition, rather than to competitors." Spanish Broad., 376 F.3d at 1075. Just as for the monopolization claim, conduct that injures individual firms rather than competition in the market as a whole is not violative of § 2 in the form of an attempted monopolization claim. Id. If a defendant's conduct proves lawful despite the defendant's possession of monopoly power in the relevant market for purposes of a monopolization claim, then the defendant's conduct could not constitute an attempt to monopolize. Transamerica Comput. Co., Inc. v. Int'l Bus. Machs. Corp., 698 F.2d 1377, 1382 (9th Cir. 1983). Because tyntec has failed to establish harm to competition [*46] in general and because Syniverse's conduct was otherwise lawful, tyntec's attempted monopolization claim fails.

C. Tortious Interference Claims

Tortious interference with a contract and tortious interference with a prospective business relationship have roughly equivalent elements: (1) the existence of a contract or business relationship, (2) defendant's knowledge of it, (3) defendant's intentional procurement of the contract's breach or interference with the relationship, (4) absence of any justification, and (5) damages. *Jeunesse, LLC v. LifeWave, Inc., No. 6:15-cv-131-Orl-28DAB, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 108310, 2015 WL 4911349, at 3 (M.D. Fla. Aug. 17, 2015); Smith v. Ocean State Bank, 335 So.2d 641, 642 (Fla. 1st DCA 1976) (the two claims are "basically the same cause of action"). "The only material difference appears to be that in one there is a contract and in the other there is only a business relationship." Smith, 335 So.2d at 642; see also Pilkington v. United Airlines, Inc., 921 F. Supp. 740, 749 (M.D. Fla. 1996).

Here, tyntec simply asserts that Syniverse was aware that tyntec acquired Iris's assets and planned to compete for many of Syniverse's existing customers and argues that "Syniverse knowingly interfered in tyntec's ongoing negotiations and existing contracts for ICV services by breaking the traditional bill and keep course of dealing and did so with a naked intent to exclude tyntec from the market." Doc. [*47] 116 at 37. These claims are exclusively predicated on tyntec's inability to peer with Syniverse under the Iris Peering Agreements. See Doc. 42 at ¶¶ 107-112 ("If tyntec is unable to peer with Syniverse under the current terms of the Peering Agreements, neither tyntec nor its customers will be able to honor the terms of the Customer Contracts and tyntec's customers will have no choice but to do business with an ICV other than tyntec, namely Syniverse itself or SAP."). For the reasons discussed above, these claims concomitantly fail. Syniverse had a contractual right not to renew the Iris Peering Agreements and engaging in acts expressly permitted under the terms of a contract does not constitute tortious interference. See Networkip, LLC v. Spread Enters., Inc., 922 So.2d 355, 358 (Fla. 3d DCA 2006) ("No cause of action for intentional interference exists which is the consequence of a rightful action."). As such, Syniverse is entitled to summary judgment on these claims.

Accordingly, it is hereby

RECOMMENDED:

1. tyntec's Motion for Summary Judgment (Doc. 116) be denied.
2. Syniverse's Motion for Summary Judgment (Doc. 119) be granted.

An appellate court reviews de novo the denial of a motion to dismiss based on state-action immunity.

HN2[] Defenses, Demurrers & Objections, Motions to Dismiss

On a motion to dismiss, the factual allegations in the complaint are taken as true, even if they are subject to dispute. But a court is not bound to accept as true a legal conclusion couched as a factual allegation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Local Governments & Private Parties

HN3[] Parker State Action Doctrine, Local Governments & Private Parties

The doctrine of state-action immunity insulates states from suit under the federal antitrust laws. Because nothing in the language of the Sherman Act or in its history suggested that Congress meant to restrict the states' sovereign prerogative to regulate their economies, the act should not be read to bar states from engaging in anticompetitive conduct as an act of government. But because political subdivisions are not themselves sovereign, they do not receive all the federal deference of the states that create them. Instead, political subdivisions enjoy state-action immunity when they undertake activities pursuant to a clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed state policy to displace competition. This is commonly known as the clear-articulation requirement.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Local Governments & Private Parties

HN4[] Parker State Action Doctrine, Local Governments & Private Parties

The clear-articulation requirement for municipalities invoking state-action immunity is itself anything but pellucid. And unlike clear-statement requirements in other domains of law, the clear-articulation requirement is often satisfied by articulations that are admittedly less than clear. The Supreme Court has rejected the contention that the clear-articulation requirement can be met only if the delegating statute explicitly permits the displacement of competition. Instead, state-action immunity applies when a municipality's anticompetitive conduct is the foreseeable result of state legislation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Local Governments & Private Parties

HN5[] Parker State Action Doctrine, Local Governments & Private Parties

State policy to displace federal antitrust law is sufficiently expressed where the displacement of competition is the inherent, logical, or ordinary result of the exercise of authority delegated by the state legislature. The ultimate requirement is that the state must have affirmatively contemplated the displacement of competition such that the challenged anticompetitive effects can be attributed to the state itself.

Governments > Public Improvements > Sanitation & Water

HN6[] Public Improvements, Sanitation & Water

By state statute and constitution, Georgia municipal corporations have the power to acquire, to construct, to reconstruct, to improve, to better, and to extend any water system or sewage system, or both, within the municipal corporation. O.C.G.A. § 36-34-5(a)(1); Ga. Const. art. IX, § 2, para. 3(a)(7). Also by state constitution, Georgia cities may choose to deny water and sewer services to areas outside their corporate limits. Ga. Const. art. IX, § 2, para. 3(b)(2). Georgia statutes even provide that in the exercise of powers specifically granted to them by law, local governing authorities of cities and counties are acting pursuant to state policy, as stated in O.C.G.A. § 36-65-1, meaning that in the exercise of such powers, such local governing authorities shall be immune from antitrust liability to the same degree and extent as enjoyed by the State of Georgia. O.C.G.A. § 36-65-2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Local Governments & Private Parties

Governments > Public Improvements > Sanitation & Water

HN7[] Parker State Action Doctrine, Local Governments & Private Parties

The "exercise of such powers" referred to in O.C.G.A. § 36-65-2 refers to the powers authorized in O.C.G.A. § 36-34-5(a)(3), the authority to operate water or sewage systems. And the immunity granted by § 36-34-5(a)(3)—in conjunction with § 36-65-2—is only immunity "to operate and maintain any such systems," which is a reference to water and sewage systems. Read together, these statute suggest that the Georgia legislature expressly contemplated municipal anticompetitive conduct in the provision of water and sewage services. Accordingly, some actions directly connected to the provision of water and sewage services—e.g., a municipality's dividing up water-service territory with neighboring municipalities—are protected. This is because market division and similar anticompetitive actions are the inherent, logical, or ordinary result of § 36-34-5(a)(3). But the tying of an unrelated service in a different market to the provision of water service falls outside the statutes' grant of immunity.

Opinion

[*1271] TJOFLAT, Circuit Judge:

This interlocutory appeal asks us to determine whether the City of LaGrange, Georgia, enjoys state-action immunity when it ties its water-utility service to its natural-gas service for customers in unincorporated Troup County, Georgia. The District Court held that LaGrange was not entitled to state-action immunity and, for the reasons explained below, we affirm.

I.

LaGrange owns and operates a water-utility system that serves customers within LaGrange's city limits as well as customers beyond its city limits in unincorporated Troup County. For much of unincorporated Troup County, LaGrange is the only provider of water-utility [2] service. LaGrange maintains this monopoly through explicit, market-dividing agreements with other municipalities in the area. In addition to water, LaGrange provides natural gas to customers inside and outside its city limits. As with water, LaGrange's gas is the only game in town for much of unincorporated Troup County.

Diverse Power is a Georgia corporation that provides electric service throughout much of unincorporated Troup County. While LaGrange also provides electric service, it does so primarily within its city limits. Where Diverse Power's electric service and LaGrange's gas service overlap—in much of unincorporated Troup County—the two entities are in direct competition for retail energy customers.

In 2004, the LaGrange City Council enacted Ordinance No. 4-29 (the "Ordinance"), now codified at § 20-15-6 of the LaGrange Code of Ordinances. Titled "Water service outside city limits," the Ordinance provides:

> For all new construction outside of the corporate limits of the city, . . . water service as set forth in this chapter shall be available only to those customers who install at least one (1) natural gas furnace, one (1) natural gas water heater, and at least one (1) additional natural [3] gas outlet sufficient for potential future use for a clothes dryer, range, grill, pool heater or outdoor lighting fixture.

LaGrange, Ga. Code § 20-15-6 (2004). LaGrange enforces the Ordinance by sending form letters to prospective builders and developers in the area informing them of the Ordinance's conditions. The letter, headed "IMPORTANT NOTICE CONCERNING WATER SERVICE OUTSIDE THE CITY LIMITS," states:

> This letter is to inform you of a utility policy that applies to all new water connections outside of the city limits of LaGrange. In areas where natural gas service is available, new homes or businesses must install gas appliances in order to receive water service from the City. Specifically, at least one gas furnace, one gas water heater, and one gas outlet for a future appliance such as a dryer or stove must be installed. Builders that do not comply with this policy will be denied permanent water service.

The purpose of the Ordinance is clear. As LaGrange's utility director stated in a 2008 email, "[LaGrange] decided to use water as leverage to require gas" in developments outside LaGrange's city limits. But for subdivisions within LaGrange's city limits, the utility director explained that LaGrange [4] "can't use water as leverage to require gas." For these intracity developments, the director continued, LaGrange uses a combination of rebates and incentives to encourage developers to install gas appliances.

The effect of the Ordinance is equally clear. Consider the Cameron Pointe subdivision, which sits on the north and south [*1272] sides of Cameron Mill Road in unincorporated Troup County. The houses on the south side of the road were built before the enactment of the Ordinance, and the houses on the north side were built afterward. Predictably, the houses on the south side of the road were built to use electricity for all appliances, while the houses on the north side of the road were built for natural-gas appliances. To be sure, this temporal relationship doesn't prove that developers switched to natural gas because of the Ordinance. But lest one suspect that market forces drove this strange arrangement, the developer told Diverse Power that, but for the Ordinance, it would have built the houses on the north side of the road to use electric rather than natural-gas appliances.

On March 3, 2017, Diverse Power filed suit against LaGrange for violations of the Sherman and Clayton Antitrust [5] Acts. Specifically, Diverse Power alleged that LaGrange's practice of conditioning water service on the installation of natural gas appliances constituted an unlawful tying arrangement. LaGrange moved to dismiss the complaint under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) on several bases, including immunity under the state-action doctrine. The District Court denied LaGrange's motion. Diverse Power, Inc. v. City of LaGrange, No. 3:17-v-00003-TCB, slip op. at 25 (N.D. Ga. Feb. 21, 2018). LaGrange timely appealed the District Court's order denying state-action immunity, which we have jurisdiction to review under the collateral order doctrine. See Commuter Transp. Sys., Inc. v. Hillsborough Cty. Aviation Auth., 801 F.2d 1286, 1289-90 (11th Cir. 1986) (holding that denial of state-action immunity is an appealable collateral order under Cohen v. Beneficial Industrial Loan Corp., 337 U.S. 541, 69 S. Ct. 1221, 93 L. Ed. 1528 (1949)).[1]

[1] Diverse Power argued in response to LaGrange's civil appeal statement that the District Court's order denying state-action immunity was not an appealable collateral order under Cohen v. Beneficial Industrial Loan Corp., 337 U.S. 541, 69 S. Ct. 1221, 93 L. Ed. 1528 (1949). See Diverse Power's Resp. to Civil App. Statement at 4 (filed April 16, 2018). A.

HN3[] The doctrine of state-action immunity insulates states from suit under the federal antitrust laws. In Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 63 S. Ct. 307, 87 L. Ed. 315 (1943), the Supreme Court held that because "nothing in the language of the Sherman Act or in its history" suggested that Congress meant to restrict the states' sovereign prerogative to regulate their economies, the Act shouldn't be read to bar states from engaging in anticompetitive conduct "as an act of government." Id. at 350, 352, 63 S. Ct. at 313-14. But because political subdivisions—like the City of LaGrange—"are not themselves sovereign[,] they do not receive all the federal deference of the States that create them." City of Lafayette v. La. Power & Light Co., 435 U.S. 389, 412, 98 S. Ct. 1123, 1136, 55 L. Ed. 2d 364 (1978) (plurality opinion). Instead, political subdivisions enjoy state-action immunity when they undertake activities "pursuant to a 'clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed' state policy to displace competition." FTC v. Phoebe Putney Health Sys., Inc., 568 U.S. 216, 226, 133 S. Ct. 1003, 1011, 185 L. Ed. 2d 43 (2013) (quoting Cmty. Commc'ns Co. v. Boulder, 455 U.S. 40, 52, 102 S. Ct. 835, 841, 70 L. Ed. 2d 810 (1982)). This is commonly known as the clear-articulation requirement.

Cohen to denials of state-action immunity—was either "wrongly decided" and/or "abrogated by more recent decisions of the Supreme Court emphasizing the narrowness of [the collateral order] doctrine." Id.

We happen to think that Commuter Transportation was correctly decided. For the reasons articulated in that opinion and more, we think it's clear that state-action immunity is a form of immunity from suit, not merely from liability. And denials of immunity from suit—like denials of sovereign and qualified immunities—are immediately appealable under the collateral order doctrine. P.R. Aqueduct & Sewer Auth. v. Metcalf & Eddy, Inc., 506 U.S. 139, 147, 113 S. Ct. 684, 689, 121 L. Ed. 2d 605 (1993) (sovereign immunity); Mitchell v. Forsyth, 472 U.S. 511, 536, 105 S. Ct. 2806, 2820, 86 L. Ed. 2d 411 (1985) (qualified immunity). But even if we agreed with Diverse Power on this point, we'd be powerless to do anything: Commuter Transportation is a decision of this Court that has not been overturned en banc.

That we haven't overturned Commuter Transportation wouldn't matter if the Supreme Court had abrogated Commuter Transportation or another case presenting the same issue. This brings us to Diverse Power's second argument: that Commuter Transportation has been abrogated by more recent Supreme Court decisions narrowing the collateral order doctrine. Though Diverse Power confidently stated this conclusion in its response, none of the cases it cited has anything to do with the state-action doctrine. See Mohawk Indus., Inc. v. Carpenter, 558 U.S. 100, 130 S. Ct. 599, 175 L. Ed. 2d 458 (2009) (attorney-client privilege); Will v. Hallock¸ 546 U.S. 345, 126 S. Ct. 952, 163 L. Ed. 2d 836 (2006) (Federal Tort Claims Act's judgment bar); Cunningham v. Hamilton County, 527 U.S. 198, 119 S. Ct. 1915, 144 L. Ed. 2d 184 (1999) (order imposing sanctions for discovery abuses); Dig. Equip. Corp. v. Desktop Direct, Inc., 511 U.S. 863, 114 S. Ct. 1992, 128 L. Ed. 2d 842 (1994) (order vacating dismissal and rescinding a settlement agreement); P.R. Aqueduct, 506 U.S. 139, 113 S. Ct. 684, 121 L. Ed. 2d 605 (Eleventh Amendment immunity); Van Cauwenberghe v. Biard, 486 U.S. 517, 108 S. Ct. 1945, 100 L. Ed. 2d 517 (1988) (immunity from civil process).

So Diverse Power must be inferring from refusals to extend Cohen in completely different areas of substantive law that the Supreme Court will eventually declare denials of state-action immunity to be outside of Cohen. Suffice it to say, that's a far cry from an abrogation.

HN4[] The clear-articulation requirement is itself anything but pellucid. And unlike clear-statement requirements in other domains of law,[2] the clear-articulation requirement is often satisfied by articulations that are admittedly less than clear. [7] The Supreme Court has "rejected the contention that [the clear-articulation] requirement can be met only if the delegating statute explicitly permits the displacement of competition." City of Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Advert., Inc., 499 U.S. 365, 372, 111 S. Ct. 1344, 1350, 113 L. Ed. 2d 382 (1991). Instead, state-action immunity applies when a municipality's anticompetitive conduct is the "foreseeable result" of state legislation. Town of Hallie v. City of Eau Claire, 471 U.S. 34, 42, 105 S. Ct. 1713, 1718, 85 L. Ed. 2d 24 (1985).

For example, in City of Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Advertising, Inc., 499 U.S. 365, 111 S. Ct. 1344, 113 L. Ed. 2d 382 (1991), the City of Columbia, South Carolina used its zoning power to protect an entrenched billboard provider—who had 95% market share—against outside competition. Id. at 367-68, 111 S. Ct. at 1347-48. Even though the state zoning statute under [*1274] which the city promulgated the zoning restrictions had nothing to do with the suppression of competition—much less in the commercial billboard industry—the Supreme Court held that the city's actions were immune from federal antitrust liability. As the Court explained,

> The very purpose of zoning regulation is to displace unfettered business freedom in a manner that regularly has the effect of preventing normal acts of competition, particularly on the part of new entrants. A municipal ordinance restricting the size, location, and spacing of billboards (surely a common form of zoning) necessarily protects [8] existing billboards against some competition from newcomers.

Id. at 373, 111 S. Ct. at 1350.

And Omni isn't an outlier. In the earlier Hallie case, the Supreme Court held that the City of Eau Claire was immune from federal antitrust liability based on similarly broad state statutes that were facially unrelated to the suppression of competition. In Hallie, a Wisconsin statute authorized cities to construct sewage systems and provided that municipal utilities had no obligation to serve areas outside their corporate limits. 471 U.S. at 41, 105 S. Ct. at 1717. Under these statutes, Eau Claire offered sewage-treatment services (over which it had a local monopoly) to adjacent towns, but only on the condition that the towns accepted sewage-collection and-transportation services from Eau Claire. Id. at 36-37, 105 S. Ct. at 1715. Several neighboring towns sued, alleging that Eau Claire had impermissibly used its monopoly over sewage-treatment services to increase its share of the sewage-collection and-transportation markets. Id. Eau Claire raised the defense of state-action immunity, and the towns responded that the state laws authorizing Eau Claire to refuse service to unincorporated towns did "not evidence a state policy to displace competition in the provision of sewage services because [9] they ma[d]e no express mention of anticompetitive conduct." Id. at 41-42, 105 S. Ct. at 1718.

The Court disagreed. Rejecting the towns' clear-articulation argument, the Supreme Court explained that Eau Claire's anticompetitive conduct logically resulted from the city's authority under Wisconsin law:

> [T]he statutes clearly contemplate that a city may engage in anticompetitive conduct. Such conduct is a foreseeable result of empowering the City to refuse to serve unannexed areas. . . . [I]t is sufficient that the statutes authorized the City to provide sewage services and also to determine the areas to be served. We think it is clear that anticompetitive effects logically would result from this broad authority to regulate.

Id. at 42, 105 S. Ct. at 1718.

It was against this legal backdrop that we decided FTC v. Phoebe Putney Health System, Inc., 663 F.3d 1369 (11th Cir. 2011), rev'd, 568 U.S. 216, 133 S. Ct. 1003, 185 L. Ed. 2d 43 (2013).

B.

In Phoebe Putney, two Georgia laws—a provision of the state constitution and a concurrently enacted statute—gave municipally created hospital authorities 27 enumerated powers, including "the power '[t]o acquire by purchase, lease, or otherwise and to operate projects [i.e., hospitals and other public health facilities].'" Phoebe Putney, 568 U.S. at 221, 133 S. Ct. at 1007-08 (first alteration in original). Under these laws, the Hospital Authority of Albany-Dougherty County—which already owned [10] one major regional hospital—sought to acquire another hospital. Id. at 221-22, 133 S. Ct. at 1008. Together, the two hospitals accounted for 86 percent of the market for acute-care hospital services in the six surrounding counties. Id. As such, the transaction raised the regulatory [*1275] eyebrows of the FTC, which ultimately filed suit (along with the State of Georgia) to enjoin the transaction.

---

[2] See generally John F. Manning, Clear Statement Rules and the Constitution, 110 Colum. L. Rev. 399 (2010).

When the case came before us, we acknowledged that the transaction would "substantially lessen competition or tend to create, if not create, a monopoly." Id. at 222-23, 133 S. Ct. at 1009. But we also acknowledged that Georgia law gave hospital authorities the prerogative to purchase hospitals and other health facilities, a grant of authority that might foreseeably produce anticompetitive results. Id. This was especially true given that many of Georgia's more rural healthcare markets were at the time of the authorizing laws' passage so sparsely populated as to support only a few regional hospitals. Id. at 231, 133 S. Ct. at 1014. As a result, most state-law-authorized purchases of a hospital by a hospital authority would substantially lessen competition in a given market. Accordingly, because it appeared clear that the power to acquire hospitals in markets with few hospitals reasonably anticipated [11] the power to anticompetitively consolidate the hospital-services market, we affirmed the District Court's order granting state-action immunity. Phoebe Putney, 663 F.3d at 1378.

We got reversed, nine-zip. While the Supreme Court reaffirmed foreseeability as the touchstone of the clear-articulation test, id. at 226-27, 133 S. Ct. at 1011, the Court placed narrower bounds on the meaning of foreseeability. Under the reformulated test, HN5[] "state policy to displace federal antitrust law [is] sufficiently expressed where the displacement of competition [is] the inherent, logical, or ordinary result of the exercise of authority delegated by the state legislature." Id. at 229, 133 S. Ct. at 1012-13. "[T]he ultimate requirement [is] that the State must have affirmatively contemplated the displacement of competition such that the challenged anticompetitive effects can be attributed to the 'state itself.'" Id. at 229, 133 S. Ct. at 1012 (citation omitted).

How did this rearticulated test apply to the facts of Phoebe Putney? According to the Court, the state-conferred power of hospital authorities to acquire hospitals did not "inherent[ly], logical[ly], or ordinar[ily] result" in the displacement of competition for two reasons. First, the Georgia law allowing hospital authorities to acquire hospitals, O.C.G.A. § 31-7-75(4), "is not principally [12] concerned with hospital authorities' ability to acquire multiple hospitals and consolidate their operations" because it allows them to acquire other healthcare facilities as well. Id. at 232, 133 S. Ct. at 1014. So presumably many of the actions taken under § 31-7-75(4) would not relate to hospitals, let alone reduce competition in the market for hospital services. Second, "the power to acquire hospitals still does not ordinarily produce anticompetitive effects." Id. at 232, 133 S. Ct. at 1014. This is because the acquisition of a hospital by a hospital authority would significantly decrease competition "only in markets that are large enough to support more than one hospital but sufficiently small that the merger of competitors would lead to a significant increase in market concentration." Id. In other contexts—e.g., the acquisition of a hospital authority's initial hospital or of one in a large hospital-services market like Atlanta—the acquisition of a new hospital doesn't significantly decrease competition.

Whatever the merits of the Court's new and improved clear-articulation requirement, it's hard to argue that the result in Phoebe Putney naturally follows from Hallie and Omni.[3] To illustrate the point, [*1276] consider the facts of Hallie. Was the anticompetitive [13] tying arrangement there the "inherent, logical, or ordinary result" of a pair of statutes authorizing the construction of sewage treatment facilities and the withholding of services from areas outside cities' limits? Probably not—most cities likely just constructed sewage-treatment facilities and limited their services to city residents. There's nothing "inherent[ly], logical[ly], or ordinar[ily]" anticompetitive about giving cities the ability to construct sewage facilities and the right to deny service to out-of-towners. But it was still foreseeable—albeit not in the sense that Phoebe Putney uses the term—that Eu Claire would use its sewage-services monopoly to gain leverage in another market. See Hallie, 471 U.S. at 42, 105 S. Ct. at 1718 ("[T]he statutes clearly contemplate that a city may engage in anticompetitive conduct. Such conduct is a foreseeable result of empowering the City to refuse to serve unannexed areas." (emphasis added)).

Nevertheless, Phoebe Putney is the law, and our job is to apply it to the facts of this case. Turning to those facts, it's hard to see much legally relevant daylight between the conduct described in Diverse Power's complaint and the facts [14] of Hallie. HN6[] By state statute and constitution, Georgia municipal corporations have the power "[t]o acquire . . ., to construct, to reconstruct, to improve, to better, and to extend any water system or sewage system, or both, within the municipal corporation." O.C.G.A. § 36-34-5(a)(1).[4] Also by state constitution, Georgia cities may choose to deny water and sewer services to areas outside their corporate limits.[5] Georgia statutes even provide that "in the exercise of powers specifically granted to them by law, local governing authorities of cities and counties are acting pursuant to state policy," O.C.G.A. § 36-65-1, meaning that "in the exercise of such powers, such local governing authorities shall be immune from antitrust liability to the same degree and extent as enjoyed by the State of Georgia," O.C.G.A. § 36-65-2.

So for those keeping score at home, in both Hallie and the instant case a state law empowered municipalities to develop a certain utility. In both cases, another state law gave municipalities the right to refuse service to unannexed areas. And in both cases, the municipality foreseeably used those two powers to gain leverage in another market.[6]

There are two potential differences between Hallie and the instant [15] case, but we don't think either difference is especially salient under these circumstances. First, [*1277] the tied service here (natural gas) is arguably less related to water service than sewage-collection and-transportation services were to sewage treatment in Hallie. But monopolists tie products and services in unrelated markets all the time—that's kind of the point of a tying arrangement. So it would seem foreseeable that a monopolist would seek to leverage his monopoly in one market to increase his share of another.

Second, the statute in Hallie authorized the city to operate the typing service (sewage treatment) and the tied service (sewage collection and transportation). See Wis. Stat. § 66.076.[7] Here, in contrast, the relevant statute authorizes the city to operate the tying service (water), but is silent as to the tied service (natural gas). But this distinction does not affect the foreseeability of the anticompetitive conduct. What makes the anticompetitive conduct foreseeable is the ability to deny services to unincorporated areas—not the number of services tied together. Besides, the Supreme Court did not rely on the fact that the statute authorized both services in its foreseeability analysis in [16] Hallie, so it would be odd for us to endow that fact with dispositive impact now.

[5] See Ga. Const. art. IX, § 2, para. 3(b)(2) ("Unless otherwise provided by law, ... [n]o municipality may exercise any of the powers listed in subparagraph (a) of this Paragraph or provide any service listed therein [including "treatment, purification, and distribution of water," see supra note 4] outside its own boundaries except by contract with the county or municipality affected."); Zepp v. Mayor of Athens, 255 Ga. 449, 339 S.E.2d 576, 577 (Ga. 1986) ("A municipal corporation may not compel any person outside its territorial limits to accept water service which it undertakes to furnish, nor may the municipal authorities be compelled to render such service." (quoting Barr v. City Council of Augusta, 206 Ga. 753, 58 S.E.2d 823, 824-25 (Ga. 1950))).

[6] The case for immunity is arguably stronger than in Hallie because O.C.G.A. § 36-65-1 and § 36-65-2 clearly express the legislature's intent that municipalities receive immunity when performing enumerated functions.

[7] Although that statutory provision has been amended and renumbered since Hallie was decided, the Wisconsin State Legislature website contains the text of the provision as it was then. See https://docs.legis.wisconsin.gov/1995/statutes/statutes/66/076; see also Br. for Petitioners, *Hallie, 471 U.S. 34, 1984 WL 564126, at 30-31.

In any event, we're in a post-Phoebe Putney world. And in that world we have to ask not only whether the Georgia legislature could have foreseen that cities would use their water monopoly to increase their share of an unrelated market. We also have to ask if such an anticompetitive move is the "inherent, logical, or ordinary result" of the legislative scheme.

The answer to that question is no.

O.C.G.A. § 36-65-2 provides that "in the exercise of such powers [i.e., the "powers specifically granted to them by law," O.C.G.A. § 36-65-1], . . . local governing authorities shall be immune from antitrust liability to the same degree and extent as enjoyed by the State of Georgia." If LaGrange is immune from federal antitrust liability, it is by virtue of this statute. The "power[] specifically granted to [LaGrange] by law" here is the power authorized by O.C.G.A. § 36-34-5(a)(3), which is the authority to operate water or sewage systems. LaGrange argues that so long as it's exercising a power granted by state law, its related anticompetitive actions are beyond federal antitrust liability. So it doesn't matter if LaGrange conditions water service on the installation [17] of natural-gas fixtures or the purchase of Goodyear tires. So long as the condition is connected to the "power specifically granted . . . by law," the entire arrangement is above board, immunity-wise.

We don't think this is the best reading of O.C.G.A. § 36-65-2, especially after Phoebe Putney. As the District Court recognized, HN7[] the "exercise of such powers" referred to in O.C.G.A. § 36-65-2 (the immunity statute) refers here to the powers authorized in O.C.G.A. § 36-34-5(a)(3), the authority to operate water or sewage systems. And the immunity granted by O.C.G.A. § 36-34-5(a)(3)—in conjunction with O.C.G.A. § 36-65-2—is only immunity "[t]o operate and maintain any such systems," which is a reference to "water and sewage systems." Read together, these statute suggest that the Georgia legislature expressly "contemplate[ed] . . . municipal anticompetitive conduct" in the provision of water and sewage services. [*1278] McCallum v. City of Athens, 976 F.2d 649, 655 (11th Cir. 1992). Accordingly, some actions directly connected to the provision of water and sewage services—e.g., LaGrange's dividing up water-service territory with neighboring municipalities in Troup County, see supra page 2—are protected. See McCallum, 976 F.3d at 655. This is because market division and similar anticompetitive actions are the "inherent, logical, or ordinary result" of O.C.G.A. §§ 36-34-5(a)(3). But whatever the outer limits of [18] Phoebe Putney's "inherent, logical, or ordinary" gloss, we think it is safe to say that the tying of an unrelated service in a different market to the provision of water service falls outside the statutes' grant of immunity.

Buttressing this interpretation is the astonishingly vast power LaGrange would have if we adopted its read of Georgia law. In its briefing and at oral argument, LaGrange contended that its actions are blanketed in state-action immunity whenever it exercises its water-utility power. The District Court rightly observed that there is "no limiting principle to this assertion" which, if true, "would [give LaGrange] immunity to take anticompetitive actions affecting any industry so long as the demand were made as a condition of refusing water service." Diverse Power, slip op. at 11-12. And our attempts to ferret out a limiting principle fared no better. See Oral Argument at 2:42-7:48, Diverse Power, Inc. v. City of LaGrange, __ F.3d __ (2019) (No. 18-11014), http://bit.ly/2YOksqM. We have a hard time believing that the Georgia legislature could have foreseen granting LaGrange powers so unlimited.

IV.

The District Court correctly denied LaGrange's motion to dismiss for state-action immunity, the only issue we review in this interlocutory appeal. We accordingly [19] affirm the District Court's judgment and remand the case for further proceedings.

AFFIRMED and REMANDED.
