

Date and Time: Tuesday, September 26, 2023 12:53:00 PM CST

Job Number: 206613441

Documents (100)

1. In re Pinkney, 47 Kan. 89

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

2. United States v. E. C. Knight Co., 60 F. 306

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

3. United States v. Cassidy, 67 F. 698

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

4. United States v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co., 85 F. 271

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

5. Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. State, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 1

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

6. State ex rel. Crow v. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co., 152 Mo. 1

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

7. Kevil v. Standard Oil Co., 11 Ohio Dec. 114

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

8. WOODBERRY v. MCCLURG, 78 Miss. 831

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

9. Metcalf v. American School Furniture Co., 108 F. 909

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

10. National Salt Co. v. United Salt Co., 12 Ohio Dec. 386

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022
11. Bement v. National Harrow Co., 186 U.S. 70
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by:
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022
12. State v. Shippers Compress &amp; Warehouse Co., 95 Tex. 603
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by:
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022
13. State ex rel. Crow v. Armour Packing Co., 173 Mo. 356
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by:
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022
14. Supreme Lodge United Benev. Ass'n v. Johnson, 77 S.W. 661
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by:
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022
15. Chicago, Wilmington &amp; Vermillion Coal Co. v. People, 114 Ill. App. 75
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by:
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

16. In re Bell, 69 Kan. 855

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

17. State v. Jack, 69 Kan. 387

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

18. Graf v. Master Horse-Shoers' Protective Ass'n, 15 Ohio Dec. 18

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

19. A. Booth & Co. v. Davis, 127 F. 875

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

20. Needles v. Bishop & Babcock Co., 14 Ohio Dec. 445

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

21. Ft. Worth & D. C. R. Co. v. State, 99 Tex. 34

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type
Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

22. Wills v. Central Ice & Cold Storage Co., 39 Tex. Civ. App. 483

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type
Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

23. Hunt v. Riverside Co-operative Club, 140 Mich. 538

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type
Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

24. Bobbs-Merrill Co. v. Straus, 139 F. 155

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type
Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

25. In re Goode, 16 Ohio Dec. 404

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type
Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

26. OPINION ON REHEARING, 73 Kan. 343

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

27. State v. Wilson, 73 Kan. 334

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

28. State v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co., 99 Tex. 516

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

29. Norton v. W. H. Thomas & Sons Co., 99 Tex. 578

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

30. State ex rel. Taylor v. Ross, 16 Ohio Dec. 704

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

31. State v. Hygeia Ice Co., 16 Ohio Dec. 735

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022
32. State v. Crystal Ice Mfg. &amp; Cold Storage Co., 17 Ohio Dec. 640
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by:
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022
33. John D. Park &amp; Sons Co. v. Hartman, 153 F. 24
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by:
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022
34. R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. v. Allen Bros. Tobacco Co., 151 F. 819
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by:
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022
35. State v. Ice Delivery Co., 17 Ohio Dec. 515
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by:
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022
36. Rubber Tire Wheel Co. v. Milwaukee Rubber Works Co., 154 F. 358
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by:
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

37. State v. Bovee, 17 Ohio Dec. 663

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

38. Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. State, 48 Tex. Civ. App. 162

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

39. Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. John D. Park & Sons Co., 164 F. 803

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

40. Redland Fruit Co. v. Sargent, 51 Tex. Civ. App. 619

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

41. Terr. v. Long Bell Lumber Co., 1908 OK 263

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

42. State v. Brady, 114 S.W. 895

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

43. Bigelow v. Calumet & H. Min. Co., 167 F. 721

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

44. State ex rel. Hadley v. Std. Oil Co., 218 Mo. 1

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

45. State v. General Fire Extinguisher Co., 20 Ohio Dec. 240

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

46. People v. Sacramento Butchers' Protective Asso., 12 Cal. App. 471

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

47. Corn Products Refining Co. v. Roser-Runkle Co., 22 Ohio Dec. 663

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

48. State v. Glenn Lumber Co., 83 Kan. 399

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

49. Malakoff Gin Co. v. Riddleberger, 133 S.W. 519

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

50. State v. Racine Sattley Co., 63 Tex. Civ. App. 663

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

51. Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U.S. 1

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

52. United States v. Union P. R. Co., 188 F. 102

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022
53. Larabee Flour Mills Co. v. Missouri P. R. Co., 85 Kan. 214
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by:
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022
54. Dukate v. Adams, 101 Miss. 433
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by:
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022
55. Smith v. Morganton Ice Co., 159 N.C. 151
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by:
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022
56. United States v. Union P. R. Co., 226 U.S. 61
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by:
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022
57. United States v. Lake Shore &amp; M. S. R. Co., 203 F. 295
Client/Matter: -None-
Search Terms: "antitrust law"
Search Type: Natural Language
Narrowed by:
Content Type	Narrowed by
Cases	Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline: Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

58. United States v. Great Lakes Towing Co., 208 F. 733

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

59. Robert H. Ingersoll & Bro. v. McColl, 204 F. 147

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

60. State ex rel. Jones v. Mallinckrodt Chemical Works, 249 Mo. 702

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

61. Continental Sec. Co. v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co., 207 F. 467

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

62. Standard Oil Co. v. State, 107 Miss. 377

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

63. International Harvester Co. v. Kentucky, 234 U.S. 589

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

64. Co-operative Live Stock Com. Co. v. Browning, 260 Mo. 324

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

65. State ex rel. Moose v. Frank, 114 Ark. 47

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

66. McCall Co. v. O'Neil, 25 Ohio Dec. 591

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

67. Guyton v. Eastern Electric Co., 91 Ohio St. 106

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

68. United States v. Rockefeller, 222 F. 534

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

69. State ex rel. Barker v. Armour Packing Co., 265 Mo. 121

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

70. Munter v. Eastman Kodak Co., 28 Cal. App. 660

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

71. Frey & Son, Inc. v. Cudahy Packing Co., 228 F. 209

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

72. Bogata Mercantile Co. v. Outcault Advertising Co., 184 S.W. 333

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

73. Woods v. Am. Brewing Ass'n, 183 S.W. 127

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type
Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

74. Henry Gildehaus Co. v. Busse & Borgman Co., 27 Ohio Dec. 111

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type
Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

75. Orebaugh v. Neu, 6 Ohio App. 404

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type
Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

76. People v. Baff, 99 Misc. 684

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type
Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

77. United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U.S. 300

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type
Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

78. United States v. United States Steel Corp., 251 U.S. 417

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type
Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

79. United States v. American Column & Lumber Co., 263 F. 147

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

80. United States v. United Shoe Machinery Co., 264 F. 138

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

81. United States v. Reading Co., 253 U.S. 26

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

82. McMaster v. Ford Motor Co., 114 S.C. 100

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

83. Coca-Cola Co. v. Vivian Ice, Light & Water Co., 150 La. 445

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

84. Washington Cranberry Growers Ass'n v. Moore, 117 Wash. 430

---

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

85. Griffin v. Palatine Ins. Co., 238 S.W. 637

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

86. Overland Publishing Co. v. Union Lithograph Co., 57 Cal. App. 366

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

87. Federal Baseball Club, Inc. v. National League of Professional Baseball Clubs, 259 U.S. 200

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

88. Federal Trade Com. v. P. Lorillard Co., 283 F. 999

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

89. Columbus Packing Co. v. State, 106 Ohio St. 469

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

90. People v. Apostolos, 73 Colo. 71

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

91. Hurt v. Brandt, 37 Idaho 186

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

92. State v. P. Lorillard Co., 181 Wis. 347

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

93. State ex rel. Thompson v. Nashville R. & L. Co., 151 Tenn. 77

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

94. State ex rel. Griffith v. Anthony Wholesale Grocery Co., 118 Kan. 394

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type
Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

95. A. B. Small Co. v. Lamborn & Co., 267 U.S. 248

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type
Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

96. Vandell v. United States, 6 F.2d 188

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type
Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

97. Mission v. Richards, 274 S.W. 269

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type
Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

98. McConnon & Co. v. Ralston, 275 S.W. 165

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type
Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

99. Gano v. Delmas, 140 Miss. 323

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type
Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

100. United States v. GE Co., 272 U.S. 476

Client/Matter: -None-

Search Terms: "antitrust law"

Search Type: Natural Language

Narrowed by:

Content Type

Cases

Narrowed by

Practice Areas & Topics: Antitrust & Trade Law; Timeline:
Jan 01, 1891 to Dec 31, 2022

In re Pinkney

Supreme Court of Kansas

July, 1891, Decided ; July 9, 1891, Filed

No Number in Original

Reporter

47 Kan. 89 *; 27 P. 179 **; 1891 Kan. LEXIS 324 ***

In the matter of the Petition of A. E. PINKNEY et al. for a writ of Habeas Corpus.

Prior History: [***1] Original Proceeding in Habeas Corpus.

ON May 12, 1891, a complaint was made charging that the petitioners did, in Leavenworth county, on the same day, "unlawfully agree and combine together and enter into, and then and there were in a contract, agreement and combination with each, and each of them with certain other persons and corporations, the names of which are now unknown to this affiant, which said agreement, contract and combination is and was designed and intended to control the cost and rate of insurance within said state by threatening persons and affiant in the insurance business with injury to their [said persons'] business, if such persons refused to demand the same cost and rate as should be named by said defendants and by them and the other persons and corporations with whom they have combined, in violation of the laws of Kansas." A warrant was issued upon this complaint in similar terms, and the petitioners appeared before the justice issuing the warrant without being arrested, where a preliminary examination was had, at the conclusion of which the petitioners were held for appearance and trial at the next term of the district court, and bail was fixed at $ 200 [***2] each. The petitioners refusing to give a recognizance, a commitment was issued, under which they were taken into the custody of the sheriff, and from this custody they seek release by the writ of habeas corpus. Other facts are stated in the opinion of the court, filed on July 9, 1891.

Disposition: Case remanded.

Core Terms

---

broad sense, occupation, provision of an act, combinations, trusts

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

International Trade Law > Forfeitures & Penalties > General Overview

HN1 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Cartels & Horizontal Restraints

Laws of 1889, ch. 257, § 1 (Kansas), embraces the provision with reference to the business of insurance, and is as follows: That all arrangements, contract, agreements, trusts, or combinations between persons or corporations, that are made with a view or which tend to prevent full and free competition in the importation, transportation, or sale of articles that are imported into the state of Kansas, or in the product, manufacture, or sale of articles of domestic growth or product of domestic raw material, or for the loan or use of money, or to fix attorneys' or doctors' fees, and all arrangements, contracts, agreements, trusts, or combinations between persons or corporations that are designed or which tend to advance, reduce, or control the price or the cost to the producer or to the consumer of any such products or articles, or to control the cost or rate of insurance, or which tend to advance or control the rate of interest for the loan or use of money to the borrower, or any other services, are hereby declared to be against public policy, unlawful, and void.

47 Kan. 89, *89 L<sup>2d</sup> 7 P. 179, **179 L<sup>2d</sup> 891 Kan. LEXIS 324, ***2

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Criminal Offenses > Miscellaneous Offenses > General Overview

**HN2** Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Cartels & Horizontal Restraints

Laws of 1889, ch. 257, § 1 (Kansas), provides as follows: That all persons entering into any such arrangement, contract, agreement, trust, or combination, or who shall, after the passage of this Act, attempt to carry out or act under any such arrangement, contract, agreement, trust, or combination that is described in the Act §§ 1, or 2, either on his own account or as agent or attorney for another, or as an officer, agent or stockholder of any corporation, or as a trustee, committee, or in any capacity whatever, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be subject to a fine of not less than $ 100 and not more than $ 1,000, and to imprisonment not less than 30 days and not more than 6 months, or to both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the trial court.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

**HN3** Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

The word "trade" is any occupation or business that is carried on for subsistence or profit. Generally equivalent to occupation, employment, or business, whether manual or mercantile. Any occupation, employment, or business that is carried on for profit, gain, or livelihood, not in the liberal arts or in the learned professions. The word is also defined as an occupation, employment, or business that is carried on for gain or profit. The business which a person has learnt, and which he carries on for subsistence or profit, occupation, particularly employment, whether manual or mercantile, as distinguished from the liberal arts or the learned professions and agriculture.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

Governments > Legislation > Overbreadth

**HN4** Legislation, Interpretation

The mere generality of the title to an act does not render it objectionable, so long as the act has but one general object, and the title is such that neither the members of the legislature nor the people to be affected can be misled.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

**HN5** Legislation, Interpretation

47 Kan. 89, *89 L<sup>2d</sup> 179, **179 L<sup>2d</sup> 891 Kan. LEXIS 324, ***2

The meaning given by the legislature to the terms used for expressing the subject of the act should be considered by the court in determining the sufficiency of the title. While the legislature cannot extend the scope of the title by giving to a word therein a definition which is unnatural and unwarranted by usage, still, if the word admits of the construction that is given to it by the legislature, and can be properly used in a sense broad enough to include the provisions of the act, the intention of the legislature is entitled to great weight in determining the sufficiency of the title.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

**HN6** Legislation, Interpretation

The breadth and comprehensiveness of a title is a matter of legislative discretion. The courts cannot modify a title, any more than they can change the body of the law. The title has to be construed even as the language of the act, and the courts may neither narrow nor enlarge the meaning which the legislature has intended the title should have.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

**HN7** Legislation, Interpretation

A liberal interpretation should be placed upon the construction of language that is employed in the title to express the subject of an act.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

**HN8** Legislation, Interpretation

A slight inaccuracy in the description of a thing in an act of the legislature, or in the title to the act, will not render the act void, where it may be known both from the act and the title thereto, and the circumstances then existing, what was meant and intended by the legislature.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

**HN9** Legislation, Interpretation

In determining the validity of legislative enactments, they will not be declared void if they can be upheld upon any reasonable grounds. If the invalidity of legislative enactments is a matter of any reasonable doubt, the doubt must be resolved in favor of the act.

Headnotes/Summary

---

Headnotes

ANTI-TRUST LAW -- Valid Statute. The provisions of the "anti-trust law," being chapter 257 of the Laws of 1889, so far as they relate to the business of insurance, are covered by the title of the act, and are, therefore valid.

Counsel: Thomas P. Fenlon, and E. F. Ware, for petitioners.

Lucien Baker, and J. H. Atwood, for respondent.

Judges: JOHNSTON, J., HORTON, C. J. VALENTINE, J., concurring.

Opinion by: JOHNSTON; HORTON

Opinion

---

[*90] [**179] The opinion of the court was delivered by

JOHNSTON, J.: The only question presented in behalf of the petitioners is the validity of what is known as the "antitrust law," so far as it relates to the business of insurance. (Laws of 1889, ch. 257.) The contention is, that the portion of the act pertaining to insurance is not clearly expressed in the title, as required by § 16, article 2, of the constitution, and is therefore void. The title is: "An act to declare unlawful trusts and combinations in restraint of trade and products, and to provide penalties therefor." HN1 [↑] Section 1 of that act embraces the provision with reference to the business of insurance, and is as follows:

[***3] "SECTION 1. That all arrangements, contract, agreements, trusts or combinations between persons or corporations, made with a view or which tend to prevent full and free competition in the importation, transportation or sale of articles imported into this state, or in the product, manufacture or sale of articles of domestic growth or product of domestic raw material, or for the loan or use of money, or to fix attorneys' or doctors' fees, and all arrangements, contracts, agreements, trusts or combinations between persons or corporations designed or which tend to advance, reduce or control the price or the cost to the producer or to the consumer of any such products or articles, or to control the cost or rate of insurance, or which tend to advance or control the rate of interest for the loan or use of money to the borrower, or any other services, are hereby declared to be against public policy, unlawful, and void."

[*91] HN2 [↑] Section 3 of the act provides as follows:

"SEC. 3. That all persons entering into any such arrangement, contract, agreement, trust, or combination, or who shall, after the passage of this act, attempt to carry out or act under any such arrangement, contract, agreement, [***4] trust, or combination described in sections 1 or 2 of this act, either on his own account or as agent or attorney for another, or as an officer, agent or stockholder of any corporation, or as a trustee, committee, or in any capacity whatever, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be subject to a fine of not less than $ 100 and not more than $ 1,000, and to imprisonment not less than 30 days and not more than six months, or to both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court."

It thus appears that the body of the act contains a specific provision for the prevention of trusts or combinations which tend to control the cost or rate of insurance, and to punish all persons who enter into or attempt to carry out such trusts or combinations.

The question presented is, does the word "trade," used in the title, fairly indicate and include the provisions of the act with reference to insurance? It is argued that the usual meaning of the word should govern, and in that sense it has reference to the business of selling or exchanging some tangible substance or commodity for money, or the business of dealing by [**180] way of sale or exchange in commodities; [***5] and it is said that the use of the word in connection with that of "products," in the title, qualifies the meaning of "trade," and makes it all the more apparent that the construction contended for is the correct one. This is the commercial sense of the word, and possibly may be the most common signification which is given to it, but it is not the only one, nor the most comprehensive meaning in which the word is properly used. In the broader sense, HN3 [↑] it is any occupation or business carried on for subsistence or profit. Anderson's Dictionary of Law gives the following definition: "Generally equivalent to occupation, employment, or business, whether manual or mercantile; any occupation, employment or business carried on for profit, gain, [*92] or livelihood, not in the liberal arts or in the learned professions." In Abbott's Law Dictionary the word is defined as "an occupation, employment or business carried on for gain or profit." Among the definitions given in the Encyclopaedic Dictionary is the following: "The business which a person has learnt, and which he carries on for subsistence or profit; occupation; particularly employment, whether manual or mercantile, as distinguished [***6] from the liberal arts or the learned professions and agriculture." A like definition of the word is given in the Imperial Dictionary.

Rapalje & Lawrence's Law Dictionary, to which we are cited by the petitioners, gives the restricted definition: "Traffic; commerce; exchange of goods for other goods, or for money." It is the only authority, however, which uses the word in its commercial sense alone. Bouvier limits the meaning to commerce and traffic and the handicraft of mechanics; and we are also cited by the petitioners to the definition given by Webster, which specifically is: "The act or business of exchanging commodities by barter, or by buying and selling for money; commerce; traffic; barter." This author, however, gives the more enlarged meaning of the word as well, as follows: "The business which a person has learned, and which he engages in, for procuring subsistence, or for profit; occupation; especially mechanical employment as distinguished from the liberal arts, the learned professions, and agriculture; as we speak of the trade of a smith, of a carpenter, or mason, but not now of the trade of a farmer, or a lawyer, or a physician." The broader signification given to the [***7] word by most of the lexicographers would fairly embrace and cover the provision of the act with reference to the business of insurance. The title prefixed to an act may be broad and general, or it may be narrow and restricted, but in either event it must be a fair index of the provisions of the act; that is, the subject of the act must be clearly expressed by the title. Here a term is employed in the title which, if given the broader meaning, would render the provision in question valid, while, by giving it the narrower and perhaps more common meaning, it would render [*93] the provision invalid. Which of these should be adopted? HN4↑ The mere generality of the title to an act does not render it objectionable, so long as the act has but one general object, and the title is such that neither the members of the legislature nor the people to be affected can be misled. Titles of a very general nature have been adopted in the legislation of this state, and their use has been encouraged and sustained. ( Bowman v. Cockrill, 6 Kan. 311; Division of Howard Co., 15 id. 194; Woodruff v. Baldwin, 23 Kan. 491; Comm'r's of Marion Co. v. Comm'r's of Harvey Co., 26 id. 181; The State [***8] ex rel. v. Sanders, 41 id. 228.) That the broader meaning of the word "trade" was the one intended by the legislature, is manifest from the incorporation of the insurance provision in the body of the act. HN5↑ The meaning given by the legislature to the terms used for expressing the subject of the act should be considered by the court in determining the sufficiency of the title. While the legislature cannot extend the scope of the title by giving to a word therein a definition which is unnatural and unwarranted by usage, still, if the word admits of the construction given to it by the legislature, and can be properly used in a sense broad enough to include the provisions of the act, the intention of the legislature is entitled to great weight in determining the sufficiency of the title. In Woodruff v. Baldwin, 23 Kan. 491, 494, it was said:

"Is it not more just and fair to say that the legislature has used the title in the broadest sense, a sense broad enough to include the subject-matter of this article, and that it meant by the expression 'criminal procedure' every proceeding resulting from crime, and not simply those for the prevention and punishment of crime? . . . HN6↑ The breadth [***9] and comprehensiveness of a title is a matter of legislative discretion. . . . The courts cannot modify a title, any more than they can change the body of the law. The title has to be construed even as the language of the act, and the courts may neither narrow nor enlarge the meaning which the legislature intended the title should have. Here is a title intrinsically broad and comprehensive. . . . Evidently the legislature intended by this title one whose scope was broad enough to include the article, and while there is a sense in which the article does not [*94] treat of criminal procedure, yet we must impute to the legislature an intent to use the title in a broader sense."

How can it be said that the business of insurance is foreign to the title of this act, when the subject expressed in the title, taken in its broadest sense, and the one intended by the legislature, would embrace such business? How can anyone be misled as to this provision by the use of the word "trade," when the leading lexicographers and writers employ the word in a sense which is comprehensive enough to cover the provision? The fact that the narrower meaning of the word is the one most frequently used will [***10] not justify the court in restricting the meaning which the legislature intended it should have. Suppose the legislature had passed a law entitled "An act to prevent and punish the obstruction of highways," and in the body of the act included specific [**181] provisions declaring it to be unlawful to place obstructions upon railroads, as well as upon county roads, streets, and alleys, and prescribed severe penalties for the violation of its provisions: could it be said that the provision with reference to railroads was invalid because it was not indicated by the title to the act? The term "highway," as commonly used, applies to the public roads and streets over which all may travel, on foot, or horseback, or in carriages, and yet in its broader sense it includes railroads; and hence, when by the provisions of the act it appeared that the legislature used it in its broader sense, it could hardly be said that the provision with reference to railroads was unconstitutional because it was not fairly embraced in the title of the act. So here, the legislature having employed the word "trade" in its broadest sense, and one which fairly covers the provision assailed, we do not feel warranted [***11] in adopting the narrower meaning or in holding the act invalid. The rigid and technical rule contended for by the petitioners has never been applied to § 16, article 2, of the constitution. Although the provision is mandatory, it has been repeatedly held by this and other courts that HN7↑ a liberal interpretation should be placed upon the construction of language employed in the title to express the subject of the act. In Bowman v. Cockrill, I<sup>951</sup> supra, the court said that the provision "should be liberally construed; otherwise the legislature would be confined within such narrow rules that they would be greatly embarrassed in the proper and legitimate exercise of their legislative functions." In City of Eureka v. Davis, 21 Kan. 578, it was said that "it must be borne in mind that while the constitutional provision is mandatory, it must be applied in a fair and reasonable way; otherwise it would become a source of more injury than the ills it was designed to remedy." In Philpin v. McCarty, 24 Kan. 393, it was remarked that "this constitutional requirement is not to be enforced in any narrow or technical spirit. It was introduced to prevent a certain abuse, and it should [***12] be construed so as to guard against that abuse, and not to embarrass or obstruct needed legislation." In City of Wichita v. Burleigh, 36 Kan. 34, 12 P. 332, it was said that HN8↑ "a slight inaccuracy in the description of a thing in an act of the legislature, or in the title to the act, will not render the act void, where it may be known both from the act and the title thereto, and the circumstances then existing, what was meant and intended by the legislature." (See, also, Woodruff v. Baldwin, supra; Comm'r's of Marion Co. v. Comm'r's of Harvey Co., supra; The State v. Barrett, 27 Kan. 213; Cooley's Const. Lim., 6th ed., 175, and cases cited.)

Another rule recognized and followed by all courts HN9↑ in determining the validity of legislative enactments is, that they will not be declared void if they can be upheld upon any reasonable grounds. If their invalidity is a matter of any reasonable doubt, the doubt must be resolved in favor of the act. (Comm'r's of Cherokee Co. v. The State, 36 Kan. 337, 13 P. 558.) Guided by these rules, we reach the conclusion, not without some doubt, however, that the provision of the act with reference to insurance is not foreign to the title of [***13] the act, nor violative of § 16, article 2, of the constitution. We do not desire or intend to determine at this time the validity of the act as to any profession, occupation or business beyond that of insurance.

Having decided the provision to be valid, and all other [*96] questions being waived, it follows that the petitioners must be remanded.

VALENTINE, J., concurring.

HORTON, C. J.: I do not think the word "trade," in the title of chapter 257, Laws of 1889, clearly or fairly indicates or includes lawyers, doctors, insurance agents, or insurance companies.

United States v. E. C. Knight Co.

Circuit Court, E.D. Pennsylvania

January 30, 1894

No Number in Original

Reporter

60 F. 306 *; 1894 U.S. App. LEXIS 2729 **

UNITED STATES v. E.C. KNIGHT CO. et al.

Core Terms

---

commerce, sugar refining, sugar, refineries, refined, monopoly, restrain, foreign nation, contracts, stockholders, monopolize, stock, refined sugar, percent, manufacture

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

International Trade Law > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Penalties

Criminal Law & Procedure > Sentencing > Fines

HN1 [] Conspiracy, Elements

Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal. Every person who shall make any such contract or engage in any such combination or conspiracy, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding five thousand dollars, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Sentencing > Fines

International Trade Law > General Overview

HN2 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several states, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding five thousand dollars, or, by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Preliminary & Temporary Injunctions

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Injunctions > Temporary Restraining Orders

HN3 [down arrow] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The several circuit courts of the United States are hereby invested with jurisdiction to prevent and restrain violation of this act; and it shall be the duty of the several district attorneys of the United States, in their respective districts, under the direction of the attorney general, to institute proceedings in equity to prevent and restrain such violations. Such proceedings may be by way of petition setting forth the case and praying that such violations shall be enjoined or otherwise prohibited. When the parties complained of shall have been duly notified of such petition the court shall proceed, as soon as may be, to the hearing and determination of the case; and pending such petition and before final decree, the court may at any time make such temporary restraining order or prohibition as shall be deemed just in the premises.

Counsel: [**1] Ellery P. lingham, U.S. Atty., and Robert Ralston, Asst. U.S. Atty.

John G. Johnson and R. C. McMurtrie, for defendants.

Opinion by: BUTLER

Opinion

---

[*306] BUTLER, District Judge. The bill charges, in substance, as follows:

E.C. Knight Company, Spreckels' Sugar Refining Company, Franklin Sugar Refining Company and the Delaware Sugar House, were, until on or about March 4, 1892, independently engaged in the manufacture and sale of refined sugar. That they were competitors with the American Sugar Refining Company and with one another; and that they were engaged in trade with the several states and with foreign nations. That the American Sugar Refining Company had, prior to March 4, 1892, obtained the control of all the sugar refineries in the United States, with the exception of the Revere, of Boston, and the refineries of the said four defendants. That the Revere produced annually about 2 per cent., and the said four defendants about 33 per cent. of the total amount of sugar refined in the United States. That in order that the American Sugar Refining Company might obtain complete control of the production and price of refined sugar in the United States, it and John E. Searles, [**2] Jr., acting for it, entered into an unlawful and fraudulent scheme to purchase the stock, etc., of the said four defendants by which they attempted to obtain control of all the sugar refineries in this district for the purpose of restraining the trade thereof among the other states. That in pursuance of this scheme, on or about March 4, 1892, John E. Searles, Jr., entered into a contract with the defendant Knight Company and individual stockholders named for the purchase of all the stock of the said company, and subsequently delivered to the said defendants in exchange therefor shares of the American Sugar Refining Company. That on or about the same [*307] time the said Searles entered into a similar contract with the Spreckels Company and individual stockholders and made a similar contract with the Franklin Company and stockholders and with the Delaware Sugar House and stockholders.

The bill further avers that the American Sugar Refining Company monopolizes the manufacture and sale of refined sugar in the United States and controls the price of sugar. That in making the said contracts the said Searles and the American Sugar Refining Company combined and conspired with the [**3] other defendants named to restrain trade and commerce in refined sugar among the several states and foreign nations. That the said contracts were made with intent to enable the said American Sugar Refining Company to monopolize the manufacture and sale of refined sugar among the several states.

The material facts proved are that the American Sugar Refining Co., one of the defendants, is incorporated under the laws of New Jersey and has authority to purchase, refine, and sell sugar; that the Franklin Sugar Refinery, the E.C. Knight Company, the Spreckels Sugar Refinery, and the Delaware Sugar House, were incorporated under the laws of Pennsylvania, and authorized to purchase, refine and sell sugar; that the four latter Pennsylvania companies were located in Philadelphia, and prior to March, 1892, produced about 33 per cent. of the total amount of sugar refined in the United States, and were in active competition with the American Sugar Refining Company and with each other, selling their product wherever demand was found for it throughout the United States; that prior to March, 1892, the American Sugar Refining Company had obtained control of all refineries in the United States, [**4] excepting the four located in Philadelphia, and that of the Revere Company in Boston, the latter producing about 2 per cent. of the amount refined in this country; that in March, 1892, the American Sugar Refining Company entered into contracts (on different dates) with the stockholders of each of the Philadelphia corporations named, whereby it purchased their stock, paying therefor by transfers of stock in its company; that the American Sugar Refining Company thus obtained possession of the Philadelphia refineries and their business; that each of the purchases was made subject to the American Sugar Refining Company obtaining authority to increase its stock $25,000,000; that this assent was subsequently obtained and the increase made; that there was no understanding or concert of action between the stockholders of the several Philadelphia companies respecting the sales, but that those of each company acted independently of those of the others, and in ignorance of what was being done by such others; that the stockholders of each company acted in concert with each other, understanding and intending that all the stock and property of the company should be sold; that the contract of sale [**5] in each instance left the sellers free to establish other refineries and continue the business if they should see fit to do so, and contained no provision respecting trade or commerce in sugar, and that no arrangement or provision on this subject has been made since; that since the purchase, the Delaware Sugar House Refinery [*308] has been operated in conjunction with the Spreckels Refinery, and the E. C. Knight Refinery in connection with the Franklin, this combination being made apparently for reasons of economy in conducting the business; that the amount of sugar refined in Philadelphia has been increased since the purchases; that the price has been slightly advanced since that event, but is still lower than it had been for some years before, and up to within a few months of the sales; that about 10 per cent. of the sugar refined and sold in the United States is refined in other refineries than those controlled by the American Sugar Refining Company; that some additional sugar is produced in Louisiana and some is brought from Europe, but the amount is not large in either instance.

The object in purchasing the Philadelphia refineries was to obtain a greater influence or more [**6] perfect control over the business of refining and selling sugar in this country.

Are the defendants' acts, as above shown, prohibited by the statute of 1890, relating to trade and commerce? The provisions involved are as follows:

HN1[] Section 1. Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal. Every person who shall make any such contract or engage in any such combination or conspiracy, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding five thousand dollars, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

HN2[] Sec. 2. Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several states, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding five thousand dollars, or, by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, [**7] in the discretion of the court.

HN3 Sec. 4. The several circuit courts of the United States are hereby invested with jurisdiction to prevent and restrain violation of this act; and it shall be the duty of the several district attorneys of the United States, in their respective districts, under the direction of the attorney general, to institute proceedings in equity to prevent and restrain such violations. Such proceedings may be by way of petition setting forth the case and praying that such violations shall be enjoined or otherwise prohibited. When the parties complained of shall have been duly notified of such petition the court shall proceed, as soon as may be, to the hearing and determination of the case; and pending such petition and before final decree, the court may at any time make such temporary restraining order or prohibition as shall be deemed just in the premises.

The principal questions raised are:

First, do the facts show a contract, combination or conspiracy to restrain trade or commerce, or a monopoly within the legal signification of these terms?

Second, do they show such contract, combination or conspiracy to restrain or monopolize trade or commerce "among [**8] the several states or with foreign nations?"

Third, can the relief sought be had in this proceeding?

In the view I entertain the first and third need not be considered. The second must receive a negative answer, and this will dispose of the controversy.

[*309] The federal government possesses no jurisdiction over the contracts, business or property of individuals within the states -- except to collect revenue for its support. Its powers are derived exclusively from the constitution. It has none other than such as are directly or impliedly conferred by that instrument; and the latter contains no suggestion of authority to intermeddle with such property rights. By the eighth section of article first, congress is empowered "to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several states, and with the Indian tribes." In pursuance of this power the statute of 1890 was enacted; and as the terms employed show, congress was duly careful to keep within the limits of its authority. It is "trade and commerce among the several states and with foreign nations" that the statutes seek to guard against restraint or monopoly.

The contracts and acts of the defendants relate [**9] exclusively to the acquisition of sugar refineries and the business of sugar refining, in Pennsylvania. They have no reference and bear no relation to commerce between the states or with foreign nations. Granting therefore that a monopoly exists in the ownership of such refineries and business, (with which the laws and courts of the state may deal,) it does not constitute a restriction or monopoly of interstate or international commerce. The latter is untouched, unrestrained and open to all who choose to engage in it. The plaintiff contends, however, that such monopoly in refineries and refining incidentally secures a monopoly of commerce among the states. This position, however, is unsound; the deduction is unwarranted. The alleged control of refining does not of itself secure such commercial monopoly; and at present none exists. The most that can be said is that it tends to such a result; that it might possibly enable the defendants to secure it, should they desire to do so. Whether it would or not depends on their ability with this advantage to control such commerce. They have not tested this ability by attempting to control it, nor shown a disposition to do so. They sell [**10] their product, and purchasers may use it in such commerce, or otherwise as they choose. At present the defendants neither have, nor have attempted to secure, such commercial monopoly. As before stated, if they have a monopoly it is in refineries and refining, alone -- over which the plaintiff has no jurisdiction. If they should retire from business, close their refineries or devote them to other purposes, the plaintiff could not object. This might and doubtless would indirectly produce some disturbance of or interference with such commerce, but it would not bring the defendants or their property within the jurisdiction to congress. Numerous instances might be cited, where contracts, business arrangements and combinations indirectly affect interstate and international commerce without bringing the parties to them or their property within this jurisdiction. It is the stream of commerce flowing across the states, and between them and foreign nations, that congress is authorized to regulate. To prevent direct interference with or disturbance of this flow alone, was the power granted to the federal government. Congress has therefore no authority over articles of merchandise or their [**11] owners, or contracts or combinations [*310] respecting them, which have not entered into this stream, or having entered, have passed out. It may prohibit and punish all acts which are intended and directed to restrain or otherwise interfere with or disturb such commerce, but it can go no further. To extend its authority to business transactions which have no direct relation to this commerce, but which may incidentally affect it, and to ownership and rights in property not involved in such commerce, because it may possibly become so involved, would be unwarranted by the terms of the constitutional provision, or the statute, -- would draw within the jurisdiction of congress most of the business transactions and property of individuals within the states, and would oust the jurisdiction of the states accordingly. A large proportion of the contracts which men enter into, and of the changes which they make in their business and business relations, may and probably do affect such commerce. The diminution or increase of production in agriculture or manufactures, changes from one branch of business or trade to another, all incidentally tend to this result. State legislation prohibiting [**12] or restraining the manufacture or sale of certain articles of merchandise, or increasing their cost by exacting license fees, have the same indirect tendency. Such legislative restraint of the manufacture or sale of poisons and alcoholic liquors, and even the increase in the cost or price of property by taxation, could only be sustained by favor of the federal government, in a different view of its power.

The discussion need not be extended; the question is not new. It was fully considered in a case which arose under the statute -- In re Greene, 52 Fed. 104 -- and the opinion of Jackson, J., (now of the supreme court,) is so clear and satisfactory that I am restrained from quoting what he says only by the desire to be brief. Veazie v. Moor, 14 How. 568, 574; Coe v. Errol, 116 U.S. 517 [6 Sup. Ct. 475]; Kidd v. Pearson, 128 U.S. 1 [9 Sup. Ct. 6], -- are to the same effect. The case of U.S. v. Greenhut, 50 Fed. 469, and In re Corning, 51 Fed. 213, cited by the plaintiff, are in affirmation of this view, rather than against it. Every element of combination and monopoly shown here was averred in the indictments under consideration there. It was held, however, that no offense [**13] against the statute was set out, no interference with interstate or international commerce being charged. The cases did not fail through matter of form or technically, but because the facts averred did not constitute an offense against the United States.

In the cases of U.S. v. Jellico Mountain Coal & Coke Co., 46 Fed. 432; Manufacturing Co. v. Klotz, 44 Fed. 721; Dueber Watch Case Manuf'g Co. v. E. Howard Watch & Clock Co., 55 Fed. 851, cited by the plaintiff, this question was not considered or raised.

People v. American Sugar Refining Co., 7 Rey & Corp. (Cal.) 83, and People v. North River Sugar Refining Co., 16 N.Y. Civ. Proc. 1 & 6, [3 N.Y. Supp. 401]; Id., 54 Hun, 354 [7 N.Y. Supp. 406], -- were suits in state courts and involved questions of state law, only.

The bill must lie dismissed, with costs.

United States v. Cassidy

District Court, N.D. California

April 1, 1895; April 2, 1895

No. 3059

Reporter

67 F. 698 *; 1895 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 158 **

UNITED STATES v. CASSIDY et al.

Core Terms

---

engine, train, mail, Railway, depot, conspiracy, track, killed, telegram, crowd, boycott, switch, employes, indictment, mail car, yards, mediation, testifies, railroad, couple, morning, pulled, coming, obstruct, strikers, lodge, conversation, relates, talk, passenger

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud Against the Government > Conspiracy to Defraud > Elements

International Trade Law > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud Against the Government > Conspiracy to Defraud > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Criminal Offenses > Inchoate Crimes > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Penalties

HN1[] Conspiracy to Defraud, Elements

U.S. Rev. Stat. § 5440 provides that if two or more persons conspire either to commit any offense against the United States or to defraud the United States in any manner or for any purpose, and one or more of such parties do any act to effect the object of the conspiracy all the parties to such conspiracy shall be liable to a penalty of not more than $ 10,000, or to imprisonment for not more than two years or to both fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

**HN2** [down] Conspiracy, Elements

The first element of conspiracy under U.S. Rev. Stat. § 5440 is the act of two or more persons conspiring together; the second is to commit any offense against the United States; and the third is what is termed the "overt act," or the element of one or more of such parties doing any act to effect the object of the conspiracy. With respect to the first element, a conspiracy is a combination of two or more persons, by concerted action, to accomplish a criminal or unlawful purpose, or some purpose not in itself unlawful or criminal, by criminal or unlawful means. The common design is the essence of the charge.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

**HN3** [down] Conspiracy, Elements

While it is necessary, in order to establish a conspiracy, to prove a combination of two or more persons, by concerted action, to accomplish the criminal or unlawful purpose, it is not necessary to constitute a conspiracy that two or more persons should meet together, and enter into an explicit or formal agreement for an unlawful scheme, or that they should directly, by words or in writing, state what the unlawful scheme was to be, and the details of the plan or means by which the unlawful combination was to be made effective. It is sufficient if two or more persons, in any manner, or through any contrivance, positively or tacitly come to a mutual understanding to accomplish a common and unlawful design. In other words, where an unlawful end is sought to be effected, and two or more persons, actuated by the common purpose of accomplishing that end, work together, in any way, in furtherance of the unlawful scheme, every one of said persons becomes a member of the conspiracy, although the part he was to take therein was a subordinate one, or was to be executed at a remote distance from the other conspirators.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

**HN4** [down] Conspiracy, Elements

A combination formed by two or more persons, to effect an unlawful end, is a conspiracy, said persons acting under a common purpose to accomplish the end designed. Any one who, after a conspiracy is formed, and who knows of its existence, joins therein, becomes as much a party thereto, from that time, as if he had originally conspired. Furthermore, where several persons are proved to have combined together for the same illegal purpose, any act done by one of the parties in pursuance of the original concerted plan, and with reference to the common object, is, in the contemplation of the law, the act of the whole party, and therefore the proof of such act will be evidence against any of the others who were engaged in the same conspiracy.

Evidence > ... > Exemptions > Statements by Coconspirators > General Overview

**HN5** [down] Exemptions, Statements by Coconspirators

Any declaration made by one of the parties during the pendency of the illegal enterprise is not only evidence against himself, but is evidence against the other parties, who, when the combination is proved, are as much responsible for such declarations and the acts to which they relate as if made and committed by themselves. This rule applies to the declaration of a co-conspirator, although he may not be under prosecution, his declaration being equally admissible with those of one under indictment and prosecution.

Criminal Law & Procedure > Criminal Offenses > Miscellaneous Offenses > General Overview

**HN6** [down] Criminal Offenses, Miscellaneous Offenses

U.S. Rev. Stat. § 3995 provides that any person who shall knowingly and willfully obstruct and retard the passage of the mail, or any carriage, horse, driver, or carrier carrying the same, shall, for every such offense, be punishable by a fine of not more than $ 100.

Criminal Law & Procedure > Criminal Offenses > Miscellaneous Offenses > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Acts & Mental States > Mens Rea > Knowledge

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Acts & Mental States > Mens Rea > Willfulness

**HN7** [down] Criminal Offenses, Miscellaneous Offenses

U.S. Rev. Stat. § 3995, making it an offense to obstruct and retard the passage of the mails, applies to those persons who "knowingly and willfully" obstruct and retard the passage of the mails, or the carrier carrying the same; that is to say, to those who know that the acts performed, however innocent they may otherwise be, will have the effect of obstructing and retarding the passage of the mail, and they perform the acts with the intention that such shall be their operation. The statute also applies to those persons who, having in view the accomplishment of other purposes, perform unlawful acts, which have the effect of obstructing and retarding the passage of the mails. In such case, the intention to obstruct and retard the passage of the mails will be imputed to the authors of the unlawful act, although the attainment of other ends may have been their primary object.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

International Law > Authority to Regulate > Anticompetitive Activities

International Trade Law > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Penalties

Criminal Law & Procedure > Sentencing > Fines

**HN8** [down] Conspiracy, Elements

26 Stat. 209 provides that every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal. Every person who shall make any such contract or engage in any such combination or conspiracy, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $ 5,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Restraints of Trade

HN9 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

"Trade" is defined as the exchange of commodities for other commodities or for money; the business of buying and selling; dealing by way of sale or exchange. The word "commerce," as used in 26 Stat. 209 and under the terms of the constitution, has, however, a broader meaning than the word "trade." Commerce among the states consists of intercourse and traffic between their citizens, and includes the transportation of persons and property, and the navigation of public waters for that purpose, as well as the purchase, sale, and exchange of commodities. Railroad cars are instrumentalities of commerce. The primary object of the statute is to prevent the destruction of legitimate and healthy competition in interstate commerce by individuals, corporations, and trusts, grasping, engrossing, and monopolizing the markets for commodities. But its provisions are broad enough to reach a combination or conspiracy that would interrupt the transportation of such commodities and persons from one state to another.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN10 [down] Inchoate Crimes, Conspiracy

The doing of some act in pursuance of a conspiracy is an ingredient of the crime, and must be established as a necessary element of the offense, although the act need not be in itself criminal or amount to a crime.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Strikes & Work Stoppages

HN11 [down] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

Employees have the right to quit their employment, but they have no right to combine to quit their employment, in order thereby to compel their employer to withdraw from the mutually profitable relations with a third person, for the purpose of injuring that third person, when the relation thus sought to be broken has no effect whatever upon the character or reward of their services. It is the motive for quitting and the end sought thereby that makes the injury involved unlawful, and the combination by which it is effected an unlawful combination. The distinction between an ordinary, lawful, and peaceable strike, entered upon to obtain concessions in the terms of the strikers' employment, and a boycott, is not a fanciful one, or one which needs the power of fine distinction to determine which is which. Boycotts, though unaccompanied by violations or intimidation, are unlawful.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

HN12 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A combination whose professed object is to arrest the operation of railroads whose lines extend from a great city into adjoining states until such roads accede to certain demands made upon them, whether such demands are in themselves reasonable or unreasonable, just or unjust, is an unlawful conspiracy in restraint of commerce among the states. Under the laws of the United States, as well as at common law, men may not conspire to accomplish a lawful purpose by unlawful means.

Criminal Law & Procedure > Accessories > Aiding & Abetting

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN13 [ ] Accessories, Aiding & Abetting

All who engage, either as principals, or as advisers, aiders, or abettors, in the commission of an unlawful or criminal act, are individually responsible for the criminal or injurious results which follow the commission or an attempt by any of their number to commit the intended crime or wrong. It is by the same rule that co-conspirators are responsible for the acts and declarations of each other in the furtherance of their unlawful purpose. A man may be guilty of a wrong which he did not specifically intend, if it came naturally, or even accidentally, through some other specific, or a general, evil purpose. When, therefore, persons combine to do an unlawful thing, if the act of one, proceeding and growing out of the common plan, terminates in a criminal result, though not the particular result meant, all are liable.

Criminal Law & Procedure > Trials > Burdens of Proof > Prosecution

Criminal Law & Procedure > Trials > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN14 [ ] Burdens of Proof, Prosecution

The presumption of innocence is in favor of defendants. A mere preponderance of testimony, in a criminal case, is not sufficient to justify a verdict of guilty. The burden of proof is upon the prosecution, and it must prove every material fact, and establish the guilt of the defendants to the jury's satisfaction, beyond a reasonable doubt. The degree of satisfaction and certainty required is not absolute conviction or certainty, but the evidence must produce that effect on the minds of the individual jurors, so that, after its consideration, he can, in view of his oath, have no reasonable doubt of the guilt of the accused. Reasonable doubt arises out of the evidence and is not imaginary doubt, fanciful conjecture, or strained inference, but such a doubt as a reasonable man would act upon, or decline to act upon, when his own concerns are involved, -- a doubt for which a good reason can be given, which reason must be based on the evidence, or the want of evidence. When such a doubt exists, the accused is entitled to its benefit, and should be acquitted. But where the evidence is satisfactory to the impartial mind that the crime was committed; that the defendant committed it as charged, -- when the mind comes naturally and reasonably to this conclusion, from a fair consideration of the evidence, properly, there can be no reasonable doubt, and the prisoner should be convicted.

Civil Procedure > Judicial Officers > Judges > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Juries & Jurors > Province of Court & Jury > General Overview

Evidence > Types of Evidence > Testimony > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Trials > Witnesses > Presentation

HN15 [ ] Judicial Officers, Judges

A witness is presumed to speak the truth. This presumption, however, may be repelled by the manner in which he testifies; by the character of his testimony, or by the evidence affecting his character for truth, honesty, or integrity, or his motives; by contrary evidence. And the jurors are the exclusive judges of his credibility. In judging credibility of witnesses, jurors may believe the whole or any part of the evidence of any witness, or may disbelieve the whole or any part of it, as may be dictated by their judgment as reasonable men.

Counsel: [**1] H. S. Foote, Special Asst. U.S. Atty., and Samuel Knight, Asst. U.S. Dist. Atty.

Geo. W. Monteith, for defendants.

Opinion by: MORROW

Opinion

---

[*701] MORROW, District Judge (charging jury). Gentlemen of the Jury: I congratulate you on the approaching termination of this case. For five months you have been required to give your constant, and, I might say, exclusive, attention to the daily proceedings in this court. The trial of the case has been protracted, but I am not prepared to say that any greater time has been occupied than was necessary, under the circumstances, to secure the testimony of the 216 witnesses who have appeared before you upon the stand. The nature of the charges against the defendants now on trial, covering, as they do, the whole field of the railroad strike of last summer in this district, necessarily involves the closest scrutiny into every feature of that affair. In this examination you have displayed a patient interest of such a commendable character as to call for the special acknowledgment of the court. You are, indeed, entitled to the gratitude of every good citizen of the community for the sacrifices you are making, and for the service you are rendering [**2] in the faithful performance of a public duty.

In submitting the case to your consideration, it becomes my duty to call your attention to the character of the charges against the defendants, and the provisions of law under which the prosecution is being conducted. It is the duty of the court to declare the law; it is your exclusive province and responsibility to apply the law so declared to the facts as you, upon your conscience, believe them to be established.

[*702] The indictment contains two counts, which, in general terms, charge that the defendants conspired, combined, and agreed together, and with divers other persons, to obstruct and retard the passage of the United States mails, and the carrier carrying the same, and also that they engaged in a combination and conspiracy in restraint of trade and commerce among the several states of the United States, and with foreign countries. The crime of conspiracy is based upon HN1 section 5440 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which provides as follows:

"If two or more persons conspire either to commit any offense against the United States or to defraud the United States in any manner or for any purpose, and one or [**3] more of such parties do any act to effect the object of the conspiracy all the parties to such conspiracy shall be liable to a penalty of not more than ten thousand dollars, or to imprisonment for not more than two years or to both fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court."

To make this statute as clear to you as possible, I will call your attention to its three essential provisions. HN2 The first element is the act of two or more persons conspiring together; the second is to commit any offense against the United States; and the third is what is termed the "overt act," or the element of one or more of such parties doing any act to effect the object of the conspiracy. With respect to the first element, we find that a conspiracy has been described as a combination of two or more persons, by concerted action, to accomplish a criminal or unlawful purpose, or some purpose not in itself unlawful or criminal, by criminal or unlawful means. Pettibone v. U.S., 148 U.S. 203, 13 Sup. Ct. 542. The common design is the essence of the charge, and HN3 while it is necessary, in order to establish a conspiracy, to prove a combination of two or more persons, by concerted action, to accomplish [**4] the criminal or unlawful purpose, it is not necessary to constitute a conspiracy that two or more persons should meet together, and enter into an explicit or formal agreement for an unlawful scheme, or that they should directly, by words or in writing, state what the unlawful scheme was to be, and the details of the plan or means by which the unlawful combination was to be made effective. It is sufficient if two or more persons, in any manner, or through any contrivance, positively or tacitly come to a mutual understanding to accomplish a common and unlawful design. In other words, where an unlawful end is sought to be effected, and two or more persons, actuated by the common purpose of accomplishing that end, work together, in any way, in furtherance of the unlawful scheme, every one of said persons becomes a member of the conspiracy, although the part he was to take therein was a subordinate one, or was to be executed at a remote distance from the other conspirators. HN4 [↑] A combination formed by two or more persons, to effect an unlawful end, is a conspiracy, said persons acting under a common purpose to accomplish the end designed. Any one who, after a conspiracy is formed, and who [**5] knows of its existence, joins therein, becomes as much a party thereto, from that time, as if he had originally conspired. U.S. v. Babcock, 3 Dill. 586, Fed. Cas. No. 14,487. Furthermore, where several persons are proved to have combined together for the same [*703] illegal purpose, any act done by one of the parties in pursuance of the original concerted plan, and with reference to the common object, is, in the contemplation of the law, the act of the whole party, and therefore the proof of such act will be evidence against any of the others who were engaged in the same conspiracy. It is also true that HN5 [↑] any declaration made by one of the parties during the pendency of the illegal enterprise is not only evidence against himself, but is evidence against the other parties, who, when the combination is proved, are as much responsible for such declarations and the acts to which they relate as if made and committed by themselves. This rule, you will understand, applies to the declaration of a co-conspirator, although he may not be under prosecution, his declaration being equally admissible with those of one under indictment and prosecution.

The confederacy to commit an offense [**6] is the gist of the criminality under the law. The law regards the act of unlawful combination and confederacy as dangerous to the peace of society, and declares that such combination and confederacy of two or more persons, to commit crime, requires an additional restraint to those provided for the commission of the crime, and makes criminal the conspiracy, with penalties and punishments distinctive from those prescribed for the crime which may be the object of the conspiracy. You will readily understand why this is true. A conspiracy becomes powerful and effective in the accomplishment of its illegal purpose in proportion to the numbers, power, and strength of the combination to effect it. It is also true that, as it involves a number in a lawless enterprise, it is proportionately demoralizing to the well-being and character of the men engaged in it, and, as a consequence, to the safety of the community to which they belong.

The second essential element in the offense described by the statute is the purpose of the conspirators to commit an offense against the United States. The indictment charges that the defendants conspired with others to commit two offenses against the United [*7] States, -- one to obstruct and retard the passage of the United States mail and the carrier carrying the same; and the other, that they engaged in a combination and conspiracy in restraint of trade and commerce among the several states of the United States and with foreign countries. The first charge is based upon the provisions of HN6 [↑] section 3995 of the Revised Statutes, which provides as follows:

"Any person who shall knowingly and willfully obstruct and retard the passage of the mail, or any carriage, horse, driver, or carrier carrying the same, shall, for every such offense, be punishable by a fine of not more than one hundred dollars."

This section of the Revised Statutes was originally section 9 of the act of March 3, 1825 (4 Stat. 104), and, having been passed prior to the introduction into the United States of the method of transporting mail by railroads, the phraseology of the law conformed to the conditions prevailing at that time, but it is equally applicable to the modern system of conveyance, and protects alike the transportation of the mail by the "limited express," as it does the carriage by the old-fashioned stagecoach. There are, however, certain [*704] provisions [**8] of law directed specifically to the transportation of the mail by railroad trains, to which I desire to call your attention.

Section 3964 of the Revised Statutes provides as follows:

"The following are established post-roads: * * * All railroads or parts of railroads which are now or hereafter may be in operation."

Section 3, Act March 3, 1879 (20 Stat. 358), provides "that the postmaster general shall, in all cases, decide upon what trains and in what manner the mails shall be conveyed." Section 4000 of the Revised Statutes provides that:

"Every railway company carrying the mail shall carry on any train which may run over its road, and without extra charge therefor, all mailable matter directed to be carried thereon, with the person in charge of the same."

There is still another provision of law applicable to the transportation of mails on the Pacific railroads, which is as follows:

"That the grants aforesaid are made upon the condition that said company shall * * * transport mails * * * upon said railroad for the government, whenever required to do so by any department thereof, and that the government shall at all times have the preference in the use of the same for all [**9] the purposes aforesaid (at fair and reasonable rates of compensation, not to exceed the amounts paid by private parties for the same kind of service), and all compensation for services rendered to the government shall be applied to the payment of said bonds and interest until the whole amount is fully paid." Act July 1, 1862, to aid in construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri river to the Pacific Ocean, § 6 (12 Stat. 493).

Recurring, now, to HN7 section 3995 of the Revised Statutes, making it an offense to obstruct and retard the passage of the mails, and you will observe that the statute applies to those persons who "knowingly and willfully" obstruct and retard the passage of the mails, or the carrier carrying the same; that is to say, to those who know that the acts performed, however innocent they may otherwise be, will have the effect of obstructing and retarding the passage of the mail, and they perform the acts with the intention that such shall be their operation. U.S. v. Kirby, 7 Wall. 485. "It would be no defense under this statute," said an eminent judge in a recent case, "that the obstruction was effected by merely quitting employment, where the motive [**10] of quitting was to retard the mails, and had nothing to do with the terms of employment." Thomas v. Railway Co., 62 Fed. 822.

The statute also applies to those persons who, having in view the accomplishment of other purposes, perform unlawful acts, which have the effect of obstructing and retarding the passage of the mails. In such case, the intention to obstruct and retard the passage of the mails will be imputed to the authors of the unlawful act, although the attainment of other ends may have been their primary object. U.S. v. Kirby, supra.

The second offense, which, it is charged in the indictment, was the object of the conspiracy, was to restrain trade and commerce among the several states and with foreign nations. This offense is described in an act of congress entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," approved July 2, 1890 HN8, (26 Stat. 209), which provides as follows:

[*705] "Section 1. Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal. Every person who shall make any such [**11] contract or engage in any such combination or conspiracy, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding five thousand dollars, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court."

HN9 "Trade" has been defined as "the exchange of commodities for other commodities or for money; the business of buying and selling; dealing by way of sale or exchange." The word "commerce," as used in the statute and under the terms of the constitution, has, however, a broader meaning than the word "trade." Commerce among the states consists of intercourse and traffic between their citizens, and includes the transportation of persons and property, and the navigation of public waters for that purpose, as well as the purchase, sale, and exchange of commodities. County of Mobile v. Kimball, 102 U.S. 702; Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 114 U.S. 203, 5 Sup. Ct. 826. Pullman cars in use upon the roads are instrumentalities of commerce. U.S. v. Debs, 64 Fed. 763.

The primary object of the statute was, undoubtedly, to prevent the destruction of legitimate and healthy competition in interstate [**12] commerce by individuals, corporations, and trusts, grasping, engrossing, and monopolizing the markets for commodities. U.S. v. Patterson, 55 Fed. 605. But its provisions are broad enough to reach a combination or conspiracy that would interrupt the transportation of such commodities and persons from one state to another. U.S. v. Workingmen's Amalgamated Council, 54 Fed. 995, 1000.

We come, now, to consider the third element involved in the crime of conspiracy, as it is declared in the statute under consideration; that is to say, the overt act, or the element of one or more of the parties to the conspiracy doing any act to effect its object. At common law, it was neither necessary to aver nor to prove an overt act in furtherance of a conspiracy. Bannon v. U.S., 15 Sup. Ct. 467. The offense was complete when the unlawful concert and agreement was entered into and concluded, although nothing was done in pursuance thereto, or to carry it into effect. It was one of the few cases in which the law undertook to punish criminally an unexecuted intent or purpose to commit a crime. U.S. v. Walsh, 5 Dill. 58, Fed. Cas. No. 16,636. But, under the statute of the United States now under [**13] consideration, HN10[<sup>1</sup>] the doing of some act in pursuance of a conspiracy is an ingredient of the crime, and must be established as a necessary element of the offense, although the act need not be in itself criminal or amount to a crime. U.S. v. Thompson, 12 Sawy. 155, 31 Fed. 331.

With this general statement and explanation of the statute involved in this case, I will proceed to consider the allegations in the indictment, which, as I said before, contains two counts.

The first count charges that the defendants conspired both to obstruct and retard the passage of United States mails, and to unlawfully engage in a combination and conspiracy in restraint of trade and commerce, while the second count charges a conspiracy in restraint [*706] of trade and commerce alone. Otherwise, both counts are, in substance and form, identical. In general terms, the two counts charge: (1) Formation of the conspiracy; (2) legal corporate existence of the Southern Pacific Company, and its means, manner, and methods of transporting the mails and interstate commerce; (3) means conspired to be used in effecting the object of the conspiracy; (4) overt act charged; (5) concluding with an allegation of [**14] unlawful intent.

Bearing these general features of the indictment in mind, you will now be able to understand the meaning of the various allegations of the indictment, as I proceed to refer to them somewhat more in detail.

Taking up the first count: The formation of the conspiracy is alleged, and it is charged that John Cassidy, John Mayne, Fred Clarke, and James Rice, with divers others, names unknown, did conspire to obstruct and retard the passage of the mails of the United States, and to restrain trade and commerce among the several states and with foreign nations. (2) The legal corporate existence of the Southern Pacific Company, and its means, manner, and method of carrying the mails and interstate commerce, are set out. It is averred that the Southern Pacific Company was a railroad corporation, duly organized and existing under the laws of the state of Kentucky, engaged in the business of a common carrier of the mails of the United States, and of passengers, freight, express matter, and other commodities, comprising and constituting trade and commerce, within the meaning of the act entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies, [**15] approved July 2, 1890." The lines of railroad over which it carried on its mail and interstate commerce; the manner and means employed and necessary to its doing so, viz. yards, depots, tracks, trains of cars, and other equipment suitable for the transportation of the United States mails, passengers, freight, and express matter, and other commodities, -- are also set out. (3) Then follow the means conspired to be used in effecting the object of the conspiracy. These are, briefly: First. By forcibly taking and keeping possession and control of all yards, depots, tracks, and trains of cars upon said lines of railway, and by forcibly holding and detaining the same. Second. By causing to be assembled, and assembling with, large crowds of persons in said depots and yards of said Southern Pacific Company, at various points and places upon said lines of railway, in said state and Northern district of California, to wit: 1. At the city and county of San Francisco. 2. City of Sacramento. 3. City of Oakland. 4. City of San Jose. 5. City of Stockton. 6. Town of Red Bluff. 7. Town of Dunsmuir, county of Siskiyou. 8. City of Vallejo, county of Solano. 9. Town of Lathrop, county of [**16] San Joaquin. 10. Town of Palo Alto, county of Santa Clara. By gathering in great numbers in said yards and depots, and other places, around, in, and upon the trains, cars, and engines of the said Southern Pacific Company, and upon the tracks of the railways, preventing the movement and passage of said engines, cars, and trains. Third. By threats, intimidation, personal assaults, and other force and violence, to prevent the engineers, firemen, conductors, [*707] brakemen, switchmen, and other employes of said Southern Pacific Company from discharging their duties, and from moving and operating said engines, trains, and railways. Fourth. By forcibly disconnecting air brakes upon such trains, -- mail, passenger, and freight. Fifth. By putting out the fires in the engines drawing the same. Sixth. By throwing switches, in order to prevent the passage of such trains through depots and stations. Seventh. By opening drawbridges over navigable and other streams, upon which drawbridges the tracks of said railway cars were situated. Eighth. By burning and destroying bridges, trestles, and culverts, over which such trains necessarily and usually would pass. Ninth. By loosening, [**17] removing, and displacing the rails of the tracks of said railroads. Tenth. By greasing the rails of the said tracks. Eleventh. By stopping trains upon railway crossings and upon switches, and by forcibly refusing to allow such trains to be hauled from such crossings and switches. Twelfth. By compelling the employes of said railroad company to leave their trains, shops, and the work of said company, while in the performance of their duty. Thirteenth. By using all such other forcible means as to them should seem expedient to prevent, for an indefinite period, the use of the said railways for the transportation of the mails of the United States and interstate commerce.

It will be well to observe, at this point, that the indictment does not charge that the defendants did, in fact, use or put in operation the means herein set out, in effecting the object of the conspiracy; the charge is that such were the means conspired to be used for that purpose. Now, when you come to consider the testimony, you will probably find that some of it tends to show that certain persons did, in fact, use such means to prevent the movement of railway trains. This testimony was admitted, not to prove [**18] that such acts had been committed, but because of the relevancy of such testimony to the charge in the indictment, -- that such means were to be used in effecting the object of the conspiracy. In other words, it tends to show that a conspiracy was formed to obstruct and retard the passage of the United States mails, and to restrain trade and commerce among the several states and with foreign nations, and that such means were to be used to carry the conspiracy into effect.

This brings us to a feature of this charge of conspiracy which you will bear in mind. It is not incumbent upon the prosecution to prove that all of the means set out in the indictment were, in fact, agreed upon to carry out the conspiracy, or that any of them were actually used or put into operation. It will be sufficient if it be established to your satisfaction, and beyond a reasonable doubt, that one or more of the means described in the indictment were to be used to execute that purpose.

After stating the means by which the conspiracy was to be effected, the indictment then sets out the overt acts; that is to say, it charges the doing of certain acts to effect the object of the conspiracy. They are as [**19] follows: That on the 6th day of July, 1894, the defendants, at Palo Alto, (1) forcibly took possession and control of the yards, depots, buildings, tracks, engines, and cars, and other appliances and [*708] property, of the Southern Pacific Company: 1. By causing to be assembled, and assembling with, a large crowd of persons in said depots, buildings, and yards of the Southern Pacific Company; and by gathering with said crowds of persons in said depots, buildings, and yards, around, in, and upon the aforesaid trains, cars, and engines, and upon the tracks of the railways. 2. By threats, intimidations, personal assaults, or other acts of force and violence, in, upon, and towards the engineers, firemen, conductors, brakemen, switchmen, agents, and other employes of said company having charge of said depot, buildings, and other property, etc. It is further charged (2) that, on the 6th day of July, 1894, said defendants, at Palo Alto, forcibly and violently prevented the movement of all trains of the Southern Pacific Company to, from, or through the town of Palo Alto: 1. By gathering in crowds, etc. 2. By placing physical obstructions upon said track. 3. By displacing the switches. [**20] 4. By forcibly and violently assaulting, threatening, and intimidating said engineers, firemen, conductors, brakemen, switchmen, agents, and other employes, while engaged as aforesaid. 5. By uncoupling the cars of said trains and disconnecting the same. 6. By removing said cars from said tracks. 7. By withdrawing the water from the boilers and tanks of said engines, and putting out and removing the fires therein. 8. By displacing and removing valves, pins, bolts, plates, and other appliances and portions of the machinery of said engines and cars, and of the rails of said railways, thereby loosening said rails. 9. By other violent, forcible, and unlawful acts and means to the grand jurors unknown. It is further charged (3) that said defendants, at the time and place above indicated, unlawfully, forcibly, and violently occupied and held possession and control of said yards, depots, tracks, engines, trains of cars, and other appliances and property of the Southern Pacific Company, by the means aforesaid, and by said means excluded the Southern Pacific Company and its employes from the possession, use, and control thereof, and by said means prevented the movement of said trains [**21] from and including July 6 to and including July 10, 1894.

The same observation, which I have just made to you with respect to the establishing of one or more of the means alleged to have been concocted and conspired to be used, is applicable to the overt acts charged. It is not necessary to a verdict of guilty that you should find that each and every one of the overt acts charged have, in fact, been committed. If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that one or more of these overt acts have been committed, and that they were done in furtherance of the conspiracy alleged to have been entered into by and between these defendants, and to carry out or effectuate in some way the object of the conspiracy, that is all that the law requires. The indictment concludes with allegations of intent, viz.: That the defendants, by the acts and means aforesaid, knowingly and willfully obstructed and retarded the passage of the mails and the carrier carrying the same, and restrained interstate commerce from the 6th of July to and including the 10th day of July, 1894, at Palo Alto. The second count, as stated above, is confined to charging a conspiracy to restrain trade and commerce [*709] [*22] alone; otherwise it is identical in form and substance with the count just elaborated upon.

Having directed your attention to the different provisions of law involved in the charges against these defendants, and having also stated to you, in brief terms, the several allegations of the indictment, you are now prepared to consider the testimony in the case in its proper light, for the purpose of determining the guilt or innocence of the defendants; but in referring to the testimony you will distinctly understand that you are the exclusive judges of the facts, and that it is not my province or purpose to intrude upon your jurisdiction in any particular or to any degree. If, in any of my rulings during the progress of this trial, I have appeared to indicate that any controverted fact has been established, or if I now assume or appear to consider or treat any fact as proved, unless it may be an admitted fact, you will disregard such assumption, and act entirely upon your own judgment and conscience in determining the facts of the case.

From what has been stated, it will appear to you that you are brought to the consideration of three questions which may be properly suggested to you [*23] as a guide for your deliberation: (1) Has the government proved the existence of a conspiracy alleged in the indictment? (2) If it did exist, were any of the alleged acts performed by one or more of the parties to the conspiracy? (3) If such a conspiracy existed, were the defendants parties to it?

Taking these questions in their order, you will first consider whether the conspiracy charged in the indictment has been established.

General Conspiracy.

This is the important question in this case, and is a question of fact for you to determine, subject to such rules of law as the court will give you to assist you in arriving at a correct conclusion. The evidence on this point is largely circumstantial, and involves a consideration of the acts of members of the American Railway Union; the course and methods of the association in boycotting the Pullman cars, and subsequently declaring a strike against the Southern Pacific Company; and, generally, the attitude and conduct of the strikers and those acting with them during the time the strike was in operation.

American Railway Union.

The evidence tends to show that the American Railway Union is a fraternal organization, composed [*24] of railroad employees below a certain grade. The headquarters of the association are located at Chicago, Ill. In June and July last Eugene V. Debs was its president; Geo. W. Howard, vice president; and Sylvester Keliher, secretary. The union is divided up into local unions. In the constitution of the order, introduced in evidence, the principles and purposes, so far as they are pertinent to this feature of the case, are stated as follows:

"It is a self-evident truth that 'in union there is strength,' and, conversely, without union weakness prevails; therefore the central benefit to be derived from organization is strength, -- power to accomplish that which defies individual [*710] effort. The American Railway Union includes all railway employees, born of white parents, organized within one great brotherhood. There is one supreme law for the order, one roof to shelter all, and all united when unity of action is required. The reforms sought to be inaugurated and the benefits to be derived therefrom, briefly stated, are as follows:

"First. The protection of members in all matters relating to wages and their rights as employes is the principal purpose of the organization. [*25] Railway employes are entitled to a voice in fixing wages and in determining conditions of employment. Fair wages and proper treatment must be the return for efficient service, faithfully performed. Such a policy insures harmonious relations and satisfactory results. The order, while pledged to conservative methods, will protect the humblest of its members in every right he can justly claim; but, while the rights of members will be sacredly guarded, no intemperate demand or unreasonable propositions will be entertained. Corporations will not be permitted to treat the organization better than the organization will treat them. A high sense of honor must be the animating spirit, and even-handed justice the end sought to be attained. Thoroughly organized in every department, with a due regard for the right wherever found, it is confidently believed that all differences may be satisfactorily adjusted; that harmonious relations may be established and maintained; that the service may be incalculably improved; and that the necessity for strike and lockout, boycott and black-list, alike disastrous to employer and employe, and a perpetual menace to the welfare of the public, will forever [**26] disappear.

"Second. In every department of labor, the question of economy is forced to the front by the logic of necessity. The importance of organization is conceded, but, if it costs more than a workingman is able to pay, the benefits to accrue, however great, are barred. Therefore, to bring the expenses of the organization within the reach of all is the one thing required, -- a primary question which must be settled before those who stand most in need can participate in the benefits to be derived; hence to reduce the cost to the lowest practical point is a demand strictly in accord with the fundamental principles of economy, and any movement which makes it possible for all to participate in the benefit ought to meet with popular favor.

Third. The organization will have a number of departments, each of which will be designed to promote the welfare of the membership in a practical way and by practical methods. The best thought of workingmen has long sought to solve a problem of making labor organizations protective, not only against sickness, disability, and death, but against the ills consequent upon idleness and those that follow in its train. Hence there will be established [**27] an employment department, in which it is proposed to register the name of every member out of employment. The department will also be fully informed where work may be obtained. It is doubtful if a more important feature could be suggested. It evidences fraternal regard without a fee, benevolence without alloy."

Section 54 of the constitution of the American Railway Union (entitled "Laws of Protection") provides for what is called a "board of mediation," and defines its powers. It is as follows:

"The board of mediation of each local union shall elect a chairman. The chairman of the local board of mediation shall be a member of the general board of mediation of the system or line on which they are employed. The general board of mediation shall elect a chairman and secretary. The general board of mediation shall meet on the second Tuesday of September of each year at the headquarters of the road on which they are employed, for the transaction of such business that may emanate from the local board of mediation. All complaints and adjustments of a general character shall be handled by the general board of mediation. All complaints and adjustments must be taken up first by the [**28] local union; if accepted by a majority vote, it shall be referred to the local board of mediation for adjustment; and, if failing, the case shall be submitted to the chairman of the general board of mediation; failing in which, they shall notify the president of the general union, who shall authorize the most available member of the board [*711] of directors to visit and meet with the general chairman of the board of mediation, and issue such instructions as will be promulgated by the directors."

The right of employes of railway companies to organize in this way for their own benefit and protection is not questioned. They are entitled to the highest wages and the best conditions they can command, and they may organize an association or union for that purpose. There is no controversy on this point. It is a benefit to them, and it is not prejudicial to the interests of the public, that they should unite in their common interests and combine for such lawful purposes. In Thomas v. Railway Co., 62 Fed. 817, Judge Taft, in the circuit court of the United States for the Southern district of Ohio, speaking of the relation of railway employes to the American Railway Union, says: [**29]

"If they (the employes) stand together, they are often able, all of them, to command better prices for their labor than when dealing singly with rich employers, because the necessities of the single employe may compel him to accept any terms offered him. The accumulation of a fund for the support of those who feel that the wages offered are below market prices is one of the legitimate objects of such an organization. They have the right to appoint officers who shall advise them as to the course to be taken by them in their relations with their employer. They may unite with other unions. The officers they appoint, or any other person to whom they choose to listen, may advise them as to the proper course to be taken by them in regard to their employment, or, if they choose to repose such authority in any one, they may order them, upon pain of expulsion from their union, peaceably to leave the employ of their employer, because any of the terms of their employment are unsatisfactory."

This is clearly the law; but there is a just and reasonable limitation to the power and privilege of railway employees, even under the protection of such an organization. They are not entitled to [**30] interfere with the rights and property of others, and by force and intimidation compel a carrier of United States mails or of interstate commerce to suspend the operations of such necessary and lawful business; or, to state the proposition a little more exactly, they have no privilege or right to violate a law of the United States.

Now, with respect to the general charge of conspiracy contained in this indictment, I will direct your attention to some of the testimony which the government claims tends to establish that element of the case.

Time When the Boycott Took Effect.

It is admitted that in the latter part of June, 1894, a convention of the American Railway Union, assembled at Chicago, resolved to boycott the Pullman Company; this boycott to take effect in five days, should the difficulties existing between that company and its employes not be settled at the expiration of that period. On June 26, 1894, the president of the general union sent the following telegram, which was received by the American Union Lodge, known as "Local Union No. 310," having its headquarters in Oakland: "Pullman boycott in effect to-day noon, by order of convention." The telegram was signed by [**31] E. V. Debs, the president of the union. G. D. Bishop, secretary of local union No. 310, at Oakland, identifies [*712] this telegram. The boycott was therefore declared at noon of June 26, 1894, which fell on a Tuesday.

Mr. Knox, who was an employe of the Southern Pacific Company at Sacramento, and a member of the American Railway Union at that place, being called as a witness for the defense, testified that he was chairman of the mediation committee; that the duties of the committee were to settle the differences between the employes and the corporation. He relates the circumstances connected with the commencement of the boycott, as follows:

"On the 26th of June we were asked to boycott the Pullman cars, and the union took action on it, and the mediation committee were ordered to call at Mr. Wright's office, -- this was about 11:20 at night, -- and notify him of the action of the union. Mr. Knox, Mr. Compton, and Mr. Mullen composed the mediation committee. We went down, and saw Mr. Wright, and told him what action the union had taken, and went back and reported again to the union. We were authorized then to lay off from our work, and to attend to this boycott; to notify [**32] the members, and the like. I went down and asked Mr. Halloran for leave of absence until the trouble was over with, and it was granted me. I was laying off at the time of the strike. Obtained leave of absence about two o'clock or 2:30 in the morning of the 27th of June. The object of the boycott was this: That the American Railway Union had a big lodge at Pullman, Illinois. The Pullman Company had reduced the wages of their employes so that they could hardly live. * * * Received a message from President Debs, asking us to boycott the Pullman cars, and the mediation committee went down to the depot after the meeting. We ordered the boycott. We decided to boycott Pullman cars. We were notified to go down and tell Mr. Wright of the action of the union, which we did. Then we reported back to the union again, and told them what Mr. Wright said, and, after that, the meeting was adjourned, and we went from there to the depot to carry out our instructions. We were given full power to act in the matter. When we got to the depot, or shortly after we arrived there, Mr. Halloran, the yardmaster, and Mr. Small, and several of the officials, showed up around there, and wanted to know [**33] what the trouble was. Mr. Halloran called me off to one side, and asked me, as a favor, not to ask the men to boycott the Pullmans on 2, 4, and 16. He said that if we did not wish to handle the Pullman cars, if we would agree not to call him a scab, he would switch the cars. After consulting with the balance of the mediation committee, it was decided to let the Pullman cars on 2, 4, and 16 go through to their destinations without boycotting them. We told him we would switch the cars instead of him. We did not ask him to do any work. On the morning of the 27th, about 8:30, I went through the shops, -- there were a great many shopmen belonging to our union, -- to see what action they had taken in reference to working on Pullman cars. I found a great many of the men idle. They were not working on the Pullman cars. We told them to go and complete their work; to never mind boycotting the work; to keep on with it. * * * After going through the shops, and notifying the men to keep on with their Pullman work, we then went back to the depot. There was a train due to leave there at 10:25 in the morning, known as 'No. 84.' She has a Pullman car off of No. 2, that comes from Chicago, [**34] and another one to put on there at Sacramento. There is a first-class car put on at Sacramento. The other is a tourist car. The one that came through from Sacramento was loaded and the other one was empty. We asked the switchmen not to handle the Pullman car, because it was empty, and it was not necessary for it to go. We thought it was proper to boycott the empty Pullmans. They refused to put Pullman cars on. Mr. Halloran then came to us, and said he would take the engine and go to couple on, and we should come up and ask him not to couple on, and tell him we did not want him to scab on us, and he would not couple on. With that understanding he took the engine, and went around on the track where the Pullman car was, and started to couple on. We went over, and told him we did not like to have the yardmaster [*713] scabbing on us; it did not look well. He said, 'Of course, I will have to yield;' and he went up to the office, and asked us if we would go with him. We went with him. Mr. Jones asked him if he could not get some one else to put on the Pullman cars. He said, 'No; they are all A.R.U. men.' Mr. Jones said, 'Cannot you hire some one else?' He said, 'No; they [**35] are all A.R.U. men.' That train stood there until leaving time. Then it started to pull out, and perhaps pulled four or five car lengths out, and some one ran down out of the office, and turned the plug on the hind end of the air hose, and stopped the train. She was backed up to the depot, and stood there for a couple of weeks. They refused to allow the engine to go without the Pullman car on. We tried to induce Mr. Wright to let her go, because it was a mail train, and we did not want to be no parties to holding the mail. He refused. We went to him, and asked him if he would not let this other Pullman car go on 104, because the passengers were very anxious to get through. He said they would, and they switched the loaded tourist car off of 84, and put it on 104. That is about all that happened on the 27th. * * * That train was made up at Sacramento. It runs between Sacramento and Oakland, by Tracy, and around that way. The Pullman cars go to Los Angeles. They carry the Pullmans down to Lathrop, and then they go to Los Angeles. The balance of the train comes into Oakland. It starts from Sacramento. The Pullman car, though, that goes through, that comes from Chicago, -- [**36] that loaded one, -- the tourist car. They sent it out on another train at night, 5:30. '104' it is called. Sent it out in the evening, -- on the same day. There was nothing left of that train, then, except the mail, baggage, express, and passenger cars. There was no one in the passenger cars. They went off on the next train, - - the passengers; the through passengers from Chicago that went on the next train. There were a good many of the local that went on the next train, too. That only runs to Tracy. It does not come clear around to San Francisco, but stops there. Know C. A. Newton. I had a conversation with him on the night of the 26th, and I might have had on the 28th. I would not say for certain. Had a conversation with him on the night of the 26th, at which I showed him a telegram. The telegram read: 'Boycott declared on Pullman cars. E. V. Debs.'"

C. A. Newton, called for the United States, night yardmaster at Sacramento, for the Southern Pacific Company, contradicts Mr. Knox on this point, and says that Mr. Knox handed him a telegram, which he read. That the telegram read: "H. A. Knox, Sacramento. Boycott declared against Pullman. Hold all Pullmans. E. V. [**37] Debs." That he handed the telegram back to Knox, who left the room where they had met, with the exclamation, "That is hell." The witness Knox further states:

"About 12:30, I think it was, on the morning of the 28th, I received a message from Los Angeles, saying that some men were discharged for refusing to handle Pullman cars, and saying that the Los Angeles Union had decided to strike for the reinstatement of those men, and asked us to participate in the strike. The committee having full power to act, we considered the matter, and came to the conclusion it was a just fight, and we would take it up and help them out. In that message from Los Angeles they asked us if we would notify all concerned, which we did. I went down to the depot, and that special that Mr. Newton was testifying about -- the officers' special -- was just pulling out of the depot. I had had a conversation with the engineer and the fireman before that, and they told me if there was any strike they wanted a finger in the pie, so I ran up and got on the engine, and told the engineer and fireman about what had occurred. They said, 'Well.' Some one stopped them; I don't know who. They were stopped from the hind [**38] end of the train, and they said, 'Cut us off, and we will go to the house,' so somebody cut the engine off. I don't know who it was. No one was with me on the cab of the engine, -- only the engineer and fireman. Did not offer any threats or intimidation or violence. * * * The [*714] engine was cut off, and the engineer was taking it around to the roundhouse. I was in the depot by that time. Mr. Wright wanted to know what was the matter with the special. I told him, as near as I could find out, the engineer was going to strike with us. He had Mr. Newton stop him there in front of the depot, and he had a conversation with the engineer, and they finally agreed to go on with the special, and asked us if we would couple on. We told him, 'Yes; if they wanted to go.' I told Mr. Wright I thought it was foolish for them to go. They would go just as far as Rocklin, and that was no place to stay. There were no accommodations there at all. He said, 'For God's sake, let them go out of Sacramento, if they don't get over the American river bridge.' I thought to accommodate him. We would not ask the conductor and brakeman to boycott the officers' special. We would let them go as [**39] far as Rocklin. I knew they would not get any further than that, because the men had already quit up there. I got on the engine, and rode up through Sixth street yard with them, to see that the switches were all set, and everything ready to go. I rode with the engineer on the engine. After I got back from Sixth street the committee then went up to the Western Union & Postal Telegraph Company, and we sent a good many dispatches notifying them that we had struck."

(These telegrams will appear further on.)

Newton testified as follows with relation to the special car, -- or officers' special, as it was called, -- and with reference to the statements made by Knox at the time:

"I know Mr. Knox personally. He used to work for me. Mr. Mullen, I knew him personally, too. Mr. Compton I did not know until after the strike. I saw Mr. Knox about the 26th of June. * * * The first train that came into the yard after that conversation I had with Mr. Knox (referring to above) was a special that came from Oakland. It got in about 12:25 on the morning of the 29th. It was a special passenger train, that ran out of its ordinary time. It was composed of two officers' cars and the engine. [**40] * * * Saw Mr. Knox on the arrival of the officers' train, a little while after it got in, when it got ready to leave. Knox came running through the depot, and hollered out: 'Stop that train! Stop that train! Not a son of a bitch of a wheel will turn on the system.' This was on the morning of the 29th, about 12:25."

This, it will be observed, flatly contradicts Knox as to what occurred at that time.

The witness Newton testifies further as to Knox's attitude, as follows:

"Did not have any direct conversation with Knox. When No. 3 came in, going east, there was quite a number of shopmen around there, standing in groups, I guess to the extent of forty or fifty. They came in charge of United States Marshal Long. This was along in the morning, about daylight, probably four o'clock, on the 29th. That was a mail train, -- the regular Eastern overland, -- the Atlantic express; the 'fast mail,' they call it. After No. 3 pulled out, the groups got moving towards the depot, -- after she pulled out, -- and some one in the groups made the remark to Mr. Knox why he did not hold the train, -- what he let her go out for. He said he did not have force enough to hold her, but when seven [**41] o'clock came he would call out the shop men, and he would have force enough to hold anything that came along."

Knox testifies that:

"The strike was formally declared about 12:30 or 1 o'clock on the morning of the 29th of June by the Los Angeles Union. In Sacramento it was left in the hands of the committee. The committee had full power to act. The committee decided to strike to have those men in Los Angeles reinstated. As soon as they got the message they consulted probably for 25 or 30 minutes, and went on and did as requested by the message, to notify all those concerned. That was about 12:30 or 1 o'clock on the morning of June 29th. Had not at that time received any notification from Oakland. Did not act [*715] on anything but the notification from Los Angeles. The members that were out on the road, -- we notified all the unions along, Truckee, and Rocklin, and Dunsmuir, and all over the system, -- we notified them that we had struck; that we had ordered a general strike in Sacramento, and those in Sacramento -- the shop men -- were all notified the next morning after they went to work, perhaps 8 o'clock or 8:30."

The attitude of the mediation committee, as representatives [**42] of the American Railway Union, is stated by Knox as follows:

"Mr. Baldwin and Mr. Knight wanted to know our position that we had taken in the matter, and between us we explained it as thoroughly as possible to them, and told them that, in the first place, we had boycotted the Pullman cars on legal advice; and, if I am not mistaken, I told them who our advice was from, -- Mr. Ingersoll; and Mr. Knight said that a Pullman car, as long as it was attached to a mail car regularly made up, was part of a mail car. Of course we had an opinion from a very eminent lawyer and attorney, and we thought he knew as much about it as Mr. Knight did. Consequently we told him we would not handle any trains with Pullman cars attached during the boycott, and, now that the strike had been ordered, we would not handle any trains at all, except mail trains, until those men that had been discharged had been reinstated. That was about the gist of our conversation all the way through. It was repeated several times."

Again he says:

"I told Mr. Baldwin our men would not work on Pullman cars. That is all I told him. * * * We were doing nothing with reference to preventing the movement of trains; only [**43] quit work, that is all. * * * We were trying to induce the men that showed up to strike with us. That was the understanding between Mr. Wright and myself. * * * I told Mr. Baldwin that our men would not work on Pullman cars. Did not make the statement that we would not allow Pullman cars to move."

As to the power possessed by the mediation committee, Knox says:

"The committee had full power to act. The union had given them full power to act."

On cross-examination Knox testifies as follows:

"We discriminated between Pullmans that were full of passengers and Pullmans that were empty, on the 27th and 28th of June. After the strike was ordered, we did not. All Pullmans were treated alike, and everything else, except mail. It grew from the Pullman cars to every other form of cars except the mail cars. After those men were discharged it did; did not matter what the destination of the cars was. We thought that we could control the A.R.U. organization, and we did. Anything that we knew anything about we controlled their action, through the strike. Anything that was done by any of the officers of the A.R.U. organization during the strike was done with the full consent, and [**44] was under the policy of our organization, as far as Sacramento was concerned. We were given full power to act. That power has never been taken away from us yet. Had control on the 3d of July, but do not know whether there was an A.R.U. man who moved the Pullman cars on that day or not. Could not swear to it. I do not think there were very many of them."

It appears that on July 5th, and during the strike, Knox, Compton, and Mullen, of the mediation committee, appeared before the Citizens' Protective Association of Sacramento, and made a statement concerning the attitude of the American Railway Union. Cornelius C. Howell, who was present at the meeting, testifies as follows:

"Was in Sacramento the latter part of June and the early part of July last. I was employed by the Industrial Improvement & Manufacturers' Association [*716] of Sacramento. I was looking up manufacturers' industries to locate at Sacramento for that company or association. Became a member of the Citizens' Protective Association, I believe, on the 3d of July. That association formed for to get together and see if they could not do something to open up the commerce connected with the city, and such [**45] other business as might be necessary, owing to the condition that things were in at that time from the cause of the strike that had been ordered on the 29th of June, or the strike that occurred on the 29th of June. I was secretary of the organization from the day that we organized, up until, I think, the 15th or 20th of July; somewhere along there. Performed the duties of secretary at meetings. Recollect a meeting held on or about the 5th day of July last. It was called by the association to see if they could not do something in order to open up the commerce. Members of the mediation committee of the A.R.U. were present at that meeting. They were Mr. Knox, Mr. Compton, and Mr. Mullen. After discussing the ways and means to adjust matters, it was decided that it would be better to bring these people before the association, this mediation committee, and find out the condition of affairs, -- what the causes were of all the trouble, -- and see if we could not do something to adjust matters; and in that connection it was agreed that we would admit them, and see what they had to say; they having, I believe, made a proposition to some member of the association that they would like [**46] to come before the association, as the mediation committee of the American Railway Union. They came before the meeting and made a statement. Parts of their statement were reduced to writing. This is a part of the record of the meeting of the Citizens' Protective Association held on the 5th of July. Not the entire statements, but I took down part of what they said, and then we dictated it out, and took the minutes to Mr. Knox in his room. Mr. Compton was present when I went there with the minutes. I asked them to read them over, and see if they were correct; that I did not wish to have them quoted as saying something before the association that they did not say, and, before they would become a part of the record, I wanted them to see if they were right. I read the minutes to them. These two were present at the time. They looked them all over; and wherever they wanted any changes made I run the pencil through them, as it appears here, and when they got through -- they looked it all over and read it -- I wrote this certificate attached, and Mr. Knox signed it, and Mr. Compton signed it, in my presence, -- both of them in my presence. I left the paper with them so that they might [**47] show it to Mr. Mullen, another member of the committee. He returned, as I understand, after I left, signed the paper, and they sent it down to my office. We had offices in the same building. The interlineations or erasures were made just before that was signed, while Mr. Compton and Mr. Knox were standing at my side. I think they were made -- in fact, I know -- at the request of Mr. Knox. He did the talking."

This document reads as follows:

"Sacramento, July 7th, 1894.

"When the committee returned and had introduced the mediation committee from the A.R.U. to the chairman, Mr. Katzenstein, he in turn introduced Mr. Knox, Mr. Mullen, and Mr. Compton to the association, and invited Mr. Knox to address the association, which he had come to meet. Mr. Knox, among other things, after thanking the association for allowing him to be heard, stated among the grievances that the original cause for this strike was on behalf of the wage-earners at Pullman, Illinois. Mr. Geo. Pullman had been grinding down his men with such small wages that it was impossible for them to get along. Mr. Knox went into detail as to treatment of the employes received at the hands of the Pullman Car Co., [**48] at Pullman, Ill. That through the president of the A.R.U. order he had declared a boycott against the Pullman cars, and to effectually accomplish the object he had ordered the strike, and it had now resolved itself to this: That the A.R.U. order, which he represented, demanded that Pullman restore his men in Chicago to their old places, with the same scale of wages paid to them in 1893; or that the S.P.R.R. Co. purchase the one-quarter ownership of the Pullman Co., paint out the Pullman name from the cars, and restore all the men on the railroad and in all shops to their old position and wages. Senator Cox inquired of Mr. [*717] Knox if he did not think this committee of citizens could be interested to an extent that something might be done to adjust matters between them and the railroad. Mr. Knox said it had gone so far that nothing could be done until the whole question was settled, and that he had given his ultimatum. Mr. McClatchy asked Mr. Knox what condition affairs were in at this time or what the situation was. Mr. Knox then stated that he would allow the mail and express to be moved, but that no passenger cars or freight cars of any kind or description would he consent [**49] to have moved until such time as the demand he made had been complied with. Mr. Mullen said, in part, after Mr. Knox had taken his seat, that this was a fight between capital and labor, and that from the chief justice of the United States down through all the branches -- judicial and legislative departments -- of the government, they were corrupt, and that labor could not get its just dues, and that his association had taken this way of forcing justice to assist their fellow men in obtaining for honest labor a proper compensation. Mr. Cox then asked what he could suggest. To this Mr. Knox replied that they might intercede with the government, and see if they could not move the mails and express to accommodate the business of the country. He said that that would help us out. 'We are in this fight to win, but we are as anxious to have it settled as you are, and we want to go to work, but will not until this question is settled as I have outlined. There is a revolution going on in this country. Today it is a principle that we are contending for. Should we give up, they would make us crawl on our bellies after them.' Mr. Compton stated, among other things, that the A.R.U. organization [**50] would not resort to any desperate means, so long as the Railroad Co. would deal with them without using armed force. That their organization was composed of law-abiding citizens, and would not commit any overt acts. At this point Mr. Ray tried to have his resolution read, but was declared out of order, and the resolution remained on the table. Several attempts were made by others, but without effect; whereupon Mr. Avery moved that a vote of thanks be tendered this committee for having made this association of business men so frank and fair a statement in relation to their position with the railroad company and this general boycott. The motion being seconded, it was unanimously carried, after which the committee retired.

"We have read the foregoing statement of the records kept by Mr. Howell of our statements, and certify to their correctness.

"Committee: H. A. Knox, Chairman.

"Thos. Compton.

"Jas. Mullen."

Mr. Knox was asked if he signed the statement produced by Howell. He said he did; that there were some alterations, but they were not material.

Continuing, Howell further stated:

"Saw Knox after the 7th. I had no conversation with him, although I saw him a number [**51] of times, after the time I went to his room and he signed that paper, until the 9th of July. I saw him then before the executive committee of the Citizens' Protective Association, at the Orangevale office in Sacramento. George B. Katzenstein, Mr. Van Vorhees, Gen. Llewellyn Tozier, Mr. Frank Miller, Mr. J. V. McClatchy, of the Sacramento Bee, and I am not sure but I think Senator Cox was present at that meeting. The executive committee was composed of nine members, but they were not always there. Mr. Knox was there. I was there. I think Mr. James Mott was there. He is the manager of the Crocker Company up there. During the time of this strike we were in the habit of meeting every day, sometimes twice a day, and we had received information from some source that the government was going to take charge of affairs, and we had heard a good many rumors. We sent for Knox. We brought him there to see what position he was going to take in view of the fact that the troops were to be expected there. This was the 9th of July. These gentlemen met Mr. Knox in the capacity of the executive board of the Citizens' Protective Association. Mr. Katzenstein, the chairman of the executive committee, [**52] asked Mr. Knox some questions in relation to the position that his [*718] association expected to take or that he expected to take after the troops got there. My recollection is that Mr. Katzenstein in one of the questions said that it was reported, and so published, that Mr. Debs, of Chicago, had issued a proclamation advising all men to keep away from these public places, from collecting at the depots, and so forth, and he asked him why that rule could not be enforced by the A.R.U. here. Mr. Knox handed Mr. Katzenstein a telegram. The telegram, as near as I can remember, -- the substance of the telegram, -- was about this: To pay no attention to newspaper rumors; that they were sure to win; that everything was progressing all right in their interests, or words to that effect. Mr. Katzenstein asked him this further question: That in view of the fact that the troops were ordered there, and would probably be there the next day, or the morning after, and as the matter was passing out from the civil authorities to the military, and in view of the fact that he was a citizen, the same as the balance of the people he had come there to meet, what position he would take; to which [**53] he said, as near as I recollect, that, so far as he was concerned himself, he could not do anything, for there were two or three injunctions against him. But, so far as his men were concerned, which was over 2,000, he had no control of them, and he did not believe they would allow any train to go out of the depot with Pullman cars attached. Then Mr. Katzenstein further asked him, as near as I can recollect, * * * that in view of the fact of the military coming there, and if it would be a question between the principles of his order and the protection of the citizens and his family and so forth, which course he would pursue. He said that the principles of the order of the A.R.U. stood first with him in relation to this business, or in relation to this strike. Mr. Katzenstein, as near as I can remember, called his (Knox's) attention to the proclamation, as it was published in the paper. I don't remember Mr. Knox saying anything in relation to the cause of the proclamation. He produced that telegram. It was read. He handed it out, and talked in about the same strain that was expressed in the language of the telegram. I would not undertake to repeat what he said. I remember distinctly [**54] he stated you could not depend on the proclamation. He did not believe there was any truth in it, and used this telegram as evidence to corroborate his statement."

V. S. McClatchy, called on behalf of the United States, testified:

"I am one of the proprietors and business manager of the Evening Bee, Sacramento."

A paper being shown the witness, he said:

"That paper is a statement made by the secretary of the Citizens' Protective Association, under instructions from its executive committee. * * * The paper was drawn up by Mr. Howell, secretary of the Citizens' Protective Association, under instructions of its executive committee, and purported to embody the statements made by the mediation committee of the American Railway Union before the Citizens' Protective Association at its meeting, I think, of July 5th. Mr. Howell was instructed to draw this paper up and present it to the mediation committee for their approval and signature. * * * I saw it signed by two gentlemen. I did not see the third member of the committee sign it. * * * Mr. Knox, who was chairman of the committee, signed it, and, as certain as I can be at this time, the second one was Mr. Compton. The third [**55] member, who I think was Mr. Mullen, was not present. * * * At this time I saw those two names signed Mr. Howell was present. He then left it with Mr. Knox, who was to obtain the signature of the third gentleman. * * * I have in my possession another statement signed by Knox, relative to the strike. * * * Mr. Knox made certain statements before the executive committee of the Citizens' Protective Association, I think about July 9th, -- I do not want to be certain of the date, -- and under instructions I prepared a report of Mr. Knox's remarks before the committee, or some of them, and submitted it to him for approval prior to its being published in the newspaper. Mr. Knox approved it, after minor amendments, and it was published. * * * Mr. Knox signed it in my presence. * * * Mr. Knox's signature was obtained in the afternoon, shortly before the Bee would go to press. In order to insure its publication [*719] that day, it had to be cut up in what printers call 'short takes.' * * * It was signed before being cut up. It can be readily pasted together."

After further testimony tending to identify the document, it was introduced, and is as follows:

"Chairman H. A. Knox, [**56] of the Sacramento mediation committee of the A.R.U., had a short conference this afternoon with the executive committee of the Citizens' Protective Association, at the request of the latter. The work of the committee so far had been directed towards preventing a conflict at Sacramento that could only result in bloodshed, without settling the main issue, and to this end had brought influence to bear on both the Southern Pacific Company and its striking employees to prevent any aggressive measures on either side. The position of the United States government, however, in ordering the opening of the road and the use of federal troops for such purpose, has practically taken all discretion out of the hands of the railroad company and the United States marshal. Mr. Knox was asked, therefore, if the United States government insisted on taking charge at Sacramento and running trains, would the A.R.U. permit it to be done without obstacle, or would it oppose by force the government officials and troops? Mr. Knox stated that personally he would do all he could to prevent a conflict with the government, and, if it moved trains, would not oppose, whether with Pullmans attached or not, and would [**57] so advise his men. He said, however, that if the government insisted on moving Pullmans without a settlement of the main question, he could not control the men under him, as they had notified him -- over 2,000 strong -- that they would not obey orders in that event, and would engage the troops. He said the position of the A.R.U. was in no way changed. It would not permit the running of any trains unless the demands of the organization, as outlined at a former conference with the citizens' committee, and published in the Bee of Friday last, were complied with. His attention being called to the declaration of Eugene V. Debs, head of the A.R.U., calling on all members not to attempt interference with trains or railway property, Mr. Knox said that he had not received officially any such notice, and had been warned by Debs to pay no attention to newspaper reports, unless officially reported to him. He could not, therefore, take any notice of the proclamation referred to, and doubted its genuineness. [Signed] H. A. Knox."

Mr. Knox denies having signed the statement produced by Mr. McClatchy. In this regard he testifies as follows:

"I never signed that statement in the world. [**58] That statement, or part of it, was when they called me before their committee in the afternoon, I think, of the 9th. It was simply said verbally, part of it, and part of it was not. I never signed the statement, and they have got more in there than I ever said. * * * The statement is about correct, until we get down to where it says: 'He said, however, that if the government insisted on moving Pullmans without a settlement of the main question, he could not control the men under him, as they had notified him, over 2,000 strong, that they would not obey orders in that event, and would engage the troops.' I never made any such statement as that."

Barry Baldwin, the United States marshal for the Northern district of California, was at Sacramento during the strike, and testifies as follows respecting statements made to him by members of the mediation committee and others, in relation to the attitude of the American Railway Union:

"I know Mr. Knox, Mr. Compton, and Mr. Mullen. Know Mr. Worden. I saw them on the evening of the 1st of July at the depot, in a caboose, in the yard there, right at the depot, on the tracks. I was told that they were a committee; that they were the [**59] leaders of the committee of the strikers. Found Mr. Worden there at the time. * * * I went there officially, in order to protect the mails, -- to protect the trains carrying the mails; in [*720] order to allow the railroad officials to run the trains carrying the mails. We heard that they were being prevented from doing so. This was Sunday evening, the 1st of July, about eight o'clock in the evening. * * * It was a caboose on the tracks adjacent to the depot building, -- the yard at Sacramento; possibly a hundred yards from the river, -- fifty to a hundred yards. The parties in the car went to find Mr. Knox. Mr. Knox was not in the car at the time. They found Mr. Knox, and Mr. Knox came in presently, after a little; and they requested a number of people there, who had no business with their committee, to withdraw. A number of people in there withdrew, leaving, I suppose, some six to ten inside the car. It was dark in the car. It was lighted afterwards, but poorly lighted. Mr. Knox was present, and also Mr. Worden, and I believe Mr. Compton, and Mr. Mullen, and several others whom I don't know, -- did not recognize at the time. * * * I stated to them the purpose for [**60] which I had come to Sacramento, and they asked me whether Pullman cars were to be moved with the train. Knox was the spokesman, and did most of the speaking. The others spoke a little, some of the others, and especially Mr. Worden, who was continually talking and interrupting. I told them who I was, and my purpose in going to Sacramento. * * * My business there was to see them and talk to them, and see what the trouble was, and why these trains could not be moved, and why they were preventing them from being moved. They objected to Pullman cars being moved, claiming that they were willing that the trains should go with the mails and other passenger cars, but not with Pullman cars. They said they had advice that Pullmans were no part of a train, -- no part of a mail train; and they gave me to understand that they would not be allowed to go, -- to be moved. They said they had eminent legal advice. That they had paid $250 for the advice. They did not state who had advised them. * * * I told them that I should perform my duties, and see that the trains were moved. I told them that the trains should be moved as often as made up, with Pullman cars attached where it was customary [**61] to place them. I told them that I was certain they were not right in doing it, -- in opposing the proper authorities and defying the law. They continued in the attitude that they could not allow Pullman cars to move. I told them my purpose in being there was to protect those mail trains, and trains carrying the mails, -- United States mails. * * * Had conversation with Mr. Worden on my way up from the caboose out across the tracks. He asked if we knew who he was, and I then first learned his name. He said that his name was Worden; that every one knew him there, and he was prominently connected with the movement. * * * It was the A.R.U. people that were organized there. They were the mediation committee of the A.R.U. They were the committee. I treated them officially as leaders of the movement, -- ostensible leaders of the movement."

The same witness further testifies, as to the action and attitude of the mediation committee, substantially as follows:

"I saw the members of the mediation committee again (the second time) on the evening of the 2d, at the Golden Eagle Hotel, at my room. Saw Knox, Mullen, and Compton. They came to see me as the mediation committee of the [**62] A.R.U. They came to see me as U.S. marshal. They came to see me at the room I occupied. I informed them that it was my intention to go down the next day, and clear the depot grounds of the crowds that were there, in order that the railroad company could move their trains, -- the mail trains, or trains carrying the mails, -- and that I hoped that the strikers would not offer any resistance; that I was there by lawful authority to do this; it was my duty to do it. Then we talked the matter over. They said that they had no wish to use any violence. They asked me to go down. They said they would do all they could to get the strikers to vacate the depot grounds. They asked me to go down myself, or with as few deputies as possible, for they thought there was less danger of a conflict if I did that; that I could get on better alone than to take down a number of deputies; that it might irritate the people, and we would not get on well. But they said they would assist me as much as they could in inducing the crowd to clear away from the depot, and allow the trains to be operated. [*721] They said that if they did this they wanted me to allow them to send a committee of three to [**63] induce the engineers, or those that were to work the trains, in together, to persuade them not to go out with the Pullman cars; to go inside of the line I might form. I told them that I did not know that I would object to their doing that, so long as they did not intimidate them, -- so long as they were not too persistent, and would not continue to talk to them too long, or in any other way threaten them, by numbers of talk; and also, if the people they were talking to did not wish to hear them, did not wish to listen to them, and requested them to leave, why, they should leave. But I told them that I could not promise even that I would let them do that; that I could not say at that moment; that there might be some objection arise at the time on the part of the railroad company, and I might have to further consider the question as to their right to be present at the depot grounds, but at that time I did not see any objection to it, as long as they did it peaceably."

Mr. Knox, in his testimony, details this interview in the caboose as follows:

"Mr. Baldwin and Mr. Knight wanted to know our position that we had taken in the matter, and between us we explained it as thoroughly as [**64] possible to them, and told them, in the first place, we had boycotted the Pullman cars on legal advice; and, if I am not mistaken, I told them who our advice was from, -- Mr. Ingersoll; and Mr. Knight said that a Pullman car, as long as it was attached to a mail car regularly made up, was part of a mail car. Of course, we had an opinion from a very eminent lawyer and attorney, and we thought he knew as much about it as Mr. Knight did; consequently we told him we would not handle any trains with Pullman cars attached during the boycott, and, now that the strike had been ordered, we would not handle any trains at all, except mail trains, until those men that had been discharged had been reinstated. That was about the gist of our conversation all the way through. It was repeated several times."

T. W. Heintzelman, master mechanic in the employ of the Southern Pacific Company at Sacramento, called for the United States, testified as follows:

"I know Knox and Compton. They were out on a strike. Before the strike, Knox was a switchman, and Compton was a machinist working in the shop. * * * I was present during a part of a conversation between Knox and Mr. Small at the roundhouse [**65] on June 30th. Mr. Small was the superintendent of motive power. * * * I heard Knox remark that they were in the strike to win, and they were going to win by any means."

E. C. Jordan, locomotive engineer at Sacramento, called for the United States, testified to attending a meeting on June 29, 1894, at which Knox was present, as follows:

"In relation to a telegram he said he would get, it was asked him as to what his jurisdiction was in this matter; and he stated that his jurisdiction extended from Sacramento to El Paso and to Portland and to Ogden, out of Sacramento. * * * There were three orders present, -- Conductors, the Engineers, and Mr. Knox, of the A.R.U. * * * The meeting was held for the purpose, as I understood it, of taking some action to bring the strikers or the A.R.U. men and the company together, in order to devise some means by which the strike could be adjusted in some manner to start the road."

The following telegrams, purporting to have been signed and sent by H. A. Knox to various unions within his jurisdiction, respecting the state of affairs at Sacramento, and transmitting advice to other local unions with reference to the action they should take, were [**66] introduced [*722] by the prosecution for the purpose of showing the concert of purpose and action among the different branches of the American Railway Union.

"June 27, 1894. To I. B. Hoffmire, Portland, Or.: Stop all Pullman sleepers. Answer. H. A. Knox."

"June 27, 1894. To E. V. Debs, Pres. A.R.U., Chicago: Will we stop loaded sleepers? Ans. H. A. Knox."

"June 27, 1894. To W. H. Clune, Los Angeles: Stop all Pullman sleepers. Answer. H. A. Knox."

"June 27, 1894. To J. M. Wagner, Ogden, Utah: Stop all Pullman sleepers. Answer. H. A. Knox."

"June 28, 1894. To M. C. Roberts, Dunsmuir, Cal.: Be ready to go out at moment's notice. H. A. Knox."

"June 28, 1894. To E. V. Debs, Chicago, Ill.: The ORC and BRI are going to take train out to-night. We are going to stop everything. Answer. H. A. Knox."

"June 28, 1894. To J. M. Wagner, Ogden, Utah: Be ready to go out at moment's notice. H. A. Knox."

"June 28, 1894. To M. C. Roberts, Dunsmuir: Don't know, but if any, you hold. H. A. Knox."

"June 29, 1894. To E. P. Condrey, Rocklin: Yes; stay in Rocklin. H. A. Knox."

"June 29, 1894. To C. B. McClintock, Truckee, Cal.: Hold Nos. 4 & 2 sure. H. A. Knox."

[**67] "June 29, 1894. To G. W. Lindsay, Wadsworth, Nev.: Hold No. 4 there sure. H. A. Knox."

"June 29, 1894. To E. P. Condrey, Rocklin: General tie up ordered. Notify all concerned. Answer. H. A. Knox."

"June 29, 1894. To McClintock, Truckee: General tie up ordered. Notify all concerned. H. A. Knox."

"June 29, 1894. To E. V. Debs, Pres. A.R.U., Chicago: General tie up ordered on S.P. system. All out. H. A. Knox."

"June 29, 1894. To E. V. Debs, Pres. A.R.U., Chicago, Ill.: Everything on system at standstill. Company makes their death struggle to-night. H. A. Knox."

"June 30, 1894. To F. Almas, Summit, Cal.: No; stop at once. H. A. Knox."

"June 30, 1894. To J. C. Church, Carlin, Nev.: Ice until further orders. Everything stopped. H. A. Knox."

"June 30, 1894. To J. T. Roberts, Oakland, Cal., A.R.U.: Have any troops left, and where are they going? H. A. Knox."

"June 30, 1894. To J. T. Roberts, A.R.U., Oakland: Has train left with deputy marshals? Rumor here. H. A. Knox."

"June 30, 1894. To E. V. Debs, Pres. A.R.U., Chicago, Ill.: This motion was adopted by B. of L.E. and O.R.C.: That the basis of the settlement be that all discharged men who have [**68] taken part in the Pullman boycott be reinstated, and guaranty given men won't be discharged for same cause. Pullman boycott to remain in force, and strike declared off. This is the grandest victory ever won, and everybody is on our side. H. A. Knox."

"July 1, 1894. To A. W. Wallace, Rocklin, Cal.: There was, but we stop at other points. Not wheel moving. H. A. Knox."

"July 1, 1894. To J. T. Roberts, A.R.U., Oakland, Cal.: Keep me posted on everything that leaves there. H. A. Knox."

"July 1, 1894. To W. H. Clune, Sec., Los Angeles, Cal.: How are engineers and conductors standing with us down your way? H. A. Knox."

"July 2, 1894. To E. V. Debs, Pres. A.R.U., Chicago, Ill.: Did you give permission to move Mrs. Stanford? H. A. Knox."

"July 2, 1894. To H. L. Walther, Dunsmuir, Cal.: She can go via Davis, not by Sacramento.

"July 2, 1894. To H. L. Walther, Dunsmuir, Cal.: Troops coming here. Stand firm; we are. Ans. H. A. Knox."

"July 3, 1894. To E. E. Barton, Ogden, Utah: We understand Co. tried to brake block, but we fooled them. H. A. Knox."

[*723] "July 3, 1894. To E. V. Debs, Pres. A.R.U., Chicago, Ill.: Hunt up the National Pres. of the Marine [**69] Engineers. Confer with him. Steamers are a terrible damage to us. H. A. Knox."

"July 4, 1894. To McClintock, Sec. A.R.U., Truckee, Cal.: Big army here. You come with all guns and volunteers. Come by train without orders at once. H. A. Knox."

"July 4, 1894. To E. E. Barton, Ogden, Utah: Good. Same here. We have 4,000 beside the city. Stand firm. H. A. Knox."

"July 4, 1894. To Arthur Wallace, Rocklin, Cal.: Soldiers on this end of American river. Don't stop. Bridge O.K. H. A. Knox."

"July 4, 1894. To Arthur Wallace, Rocklin, Cal.: Come. Bring all hands. Rush. H. A. Knox."

"July 4, 1894. To H. L. Walthers, Dunsmuir, Cal.: One thousand cavalrymen and militiamen here. Come with whole outfit by train, without orders, at once. H. A. Knox."

"July 4, 1894. To W. H. Walthers, Dunsmuir, Cal. Don't close the Western Union office. That will hurt our cause. And take guard away from the Postal office. H. A. Knox."

"July 4, 1894. To E. V. Debs, Pres. A.R.U., Chicago, Ill.: We have the troops on our side. They have refused to obey commands, and we are stayers from away back, -- bound to succeed. H. A. Knox."

"July 5, 1894. To C. B. McClintock, Truckee, [**70] Cal.: Please allow merchants to take perishable freight from cars, but agent must check it to them. H. A. Knox."

"July 5, 1894. To Madden & Turner, Dunsmuir, Cal.: All quiet here. We are sure to win. H. A. Knox."

"July 5, 1894. To E. V. Debs, Pres. A.R.U., Chicago, Ill.: It is reported the U.S. marshal and Gen. Dimond, of state troops, has turned our affair over to Washington. Have attorney there to work on it. We have everything our own way, and have not broke the law, only by keeping about 5,000 men in sight. Please advise us what to do. Not a wheel moving. H. A. Knox."

"July 6, 1894. To E. V. Debs, Pres. A.R.U., Chicago, Ill.: Any truth in report of strikers and soldiers having battle in Chicago? Please ans. We are as firm as rock. H. A. Knox."

"7/7/189. To J. M. Wagner, Ogden, Utah: All quiet. Stand firm. H. A. Knox."

"July 7, 1894. To Wm. O. Leary, Pres. Miners' Union, Virginia City, Nev.: Resolutions received, and return thanks. We are bound to win. We are as solid as rock. H. A. Knox, Chairman."

"July 8, 1894. To W. H. Clune, Los Angeles, Cal.: Force them to stop, or tell them when we settle, their firemen will run their engines. We done that, [**71] and you bet it brought them to time. All quiet here. We are solid as rock. H. A. Knox."

"July 9, 1894. To W. H. Clune, Los Angeles, Cal.: Everything very quiet here. Nothing moving here. How is things there? Stand firm, and don't let nothing go. H. A. Knox."

"July 9, 1894. To Chas. Fink, Oakland, Cal.: We sent Geo. Hale to Vallejo, but if there at Oakland he is O.K. H. A. Knox."

"July 11, 1894. To W. G. Boyce, Pres. Miners' Union, Silver City, Nev.: Thanks for sympathy. We are under heavy expense. Financial aid would be gratefully received. H. A. Knox, Chairman."

"July 11, 1894. To Chick Featherson, Summit, Cal.: I received orders from E. V. Debs to order strike on entire system. Hence my order. Sacto. is solid yet. H. A. Knox."

"July 11, 1894. To E. V. Debs, Pres. A.R.U., Chicago, Ill.: Sorry you are in jail, but be strong, and we will carry the strike on if they put all of you in jail. Lots of soldiers here, but everything quiet so far. Every man out here, but a few scab engineers. H. A. Knox."

"July 11, 1894. To J. S. Walton, Oakland, Cal.: Adopt code. Lots of soldiers here, but everything quiet yet. H. A. Knox."

"July 12, 1894. To J. Balder, [**72] Truckee, Cal.: Train of soldiers getting ready to leave here for Truckee. Everything quiet. H. A. Knox."

67 F. 698, *723A 1895 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 158, **72

"July 12, 1894. To E. V. Debs, Pres. A.R.U., Chicago, Ill.: I will stand [*724] by A.R.U. as long as life lasts. I refused to run for railroad commissioner because I thought so much of the fight. We are doing nothing but what is proper. We are going to fight it out on this line. We have 1,800 soldiers here, but no trains out yet. H. A. Knox."

"July 13, 1894. To Chairman A.R.U., Truckee, Cal.: Reports all fake. Stand pat. Freight left here, under protection of soldiers, for the East. H. A. Knox."

"July 13, 1894. To Clune, Chairman A.R.U., Los Angeles, Cal.: Reports all fakes. Strike is on in full force. Stay with them to the last. All O.K. here. H. A. Knox."

"July 13, 1894. To J. C. March, Carlin, Nev.: 1,800 soldiers here for two days, but have only got freight out east. Reports are all false. Stand pat. H. A. Knox."

"July 13, 1894. To F. M. Gillett, San Luis Obispo, Cal.: Reports all false. Stand pat. 1,800 troops here, but got only one train out in two days. Sure to win. H. A. Knox."

"July 13, 1894. To E. V. Debs, Pres. A.R.U., Chicago, [*73] Ill.: United Press dispatch says you have declared strike off. I have sent messages all over denying it. Answer. H. A. Knox."

Telegrams have been introduced purporting to have been signed by H. A. Knox, addressed to E. V. Debs, at Chicago, and to other persons, in relation to the strike, dated July 14th, and subsequent dates; but Knox testifies that he was arrested on July 14th, and was in jail for three weeks, and he denies specifically having signed the 11 telegrams dated July 22d, which bear his name. It is possible that some member of the mediation committee, or other officer of the American Railway Union at Sacramento, acting for the committee, may have signed these telegrams in the name of Mr. Knox; but as the testimony in the case, and particularly the telegrams sent out by T. H. Douglass, who appears to have been chairman of the mediation committee after July 14th, indicate that the strike was declared off on July 21st, telegrams purporting to have been signed by Knox, and dated after July 14th, and particularly those dated July 22d, are certainly discredited, and I will not, therefore, refer to them further in this connection. In any view, they do not appear to be important.

[**74] George Vice testified, on the part of the defense, that he had been a locomotive fireman for the Southern Pacific Company in June last; that he belonged to the American Railway Union at Sacramento; was the vice president of it; thinks he was present the night that the telegram came from Chicago, announcing the fact that there was going to be a Pullman boycott. He admits signing the following telegram:

"Sacto., July 6, 1894. H. F. Michaels, Master Cactus Lodge, 94, Tucson, Ariz.: Firemen of following lodges out with A.R.U., to the man: 260, 143, 312, 91, 97, 19, 58, 98, 366, 193, and Roseburg. If you tie division up, will guaranty full protection of A.R.U. Not a wheel turned here for six days. Answer. Geo. Vice, Master 260."

Also the following:

"Sacramento, Cal., July 16, 1894. J. Friant, Fresno, Cal.: Firemen here stand firm. Scabs scarce. We are winners. Geo. Vice."

Also the following:

"Sacto., July 16, 1894. Geo. W. Lindsay, Wadsworth, Nev.: Firemen here all firm. Scabs scarce. We're winners. You stand firm. Geo. Vice."

[*725] He also admits sending the following:

"Sacramento, Cal., July 17, 1894. R. E. Nobel, Summit: Quit immediately, and tie [*75] up everything. Come to Sacramento. We're sure winners. Answer. Geo. Vice."

The witness, being questioned about the wording of the telegram, testified further as follows:

"A Juror: Q. What did you mean by 'tie up everything'? A. Leave their work. Q. You said, 'Quit and tie up everything.' What do you mean by 'tie up everything'? A. Just to leave work. The Court: Q. You say, 'Quit and tie up everything.' 'Quit' seems to be your definition for 'tie up.' A. I meant the same thing by it. Q. 'Quit' and 'tie up' are the same thing? A. Yes, sir. Mr. Knight: Q. By 'tie up everything,' you mean leave work from everything? A. Leave the service. Q. From everything? A. Yes, sir. Q. What is the meaning of the word 'everything'? You said, 'tie up everything.' A. I suppose there is a whole lot of meaning to 'everything.' Q. What is your meaning in that connection? A. If a man is on a job, according to that, -- if he is on an engine, -- he will leave his work."

He also admits sending the following telegram:

"Sacramento, Cal., July 17, 1894. J. J. Brennan, Rocklin: Stand. Do not allow anybody to report for work. Stronger here than ever. We're sure winners. [**76] Geo. Vice."

The witness states:

"When this telegram was sent, it was only meant for the firemen. There were lots of firemen that did not belong to the A.R.U."

Admits writing and sending this telegram:

"Sacramento, Cal., July 17, 1894. Geo. W. Lindsay, Wadsworth, Nev.: Still firm, and will stay to last. Sure winners. Gaining recruits from scabs. Fillmore weakening. He interviews mediation board, and makes concessions. Geo. Vice."

Also this one:

"Sacramento, Cal., July 18, 1894. H. F. Michaels, Tucson, Ariz.: State situation. Tied up here tighter than ever. Use all means to do same there. We're winners. Geo. Vice."

Also this one:

"Sacramento, Cal., July 18, 1894. W. J. Featherson, Summit, Cal.: Quit immediately, and tie up everything. Come to Sacramento. We're sure winners. Answer. Geo. Vice."

Also this one:

"Sacramento, Cal., July 21, 1894. F. P. Sargent, Terre Haute, Ind.: Eastern B.L.F. men taking our jobs. For God's sake, save us. S.P. will not re-employ us. Use all means to save us. Answer. Geo. Vice, Master 260."

The witness states that he had no authority to send telegrams for the American Railway Union; that he sent them by virtue [**77] of his being a master of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen. He admits, however, that he was also an officer of the American Railway Union, being its vice president.

H. B. Breckenfeld, called for the United States, testified that he was chief train dispatcher for the Sacramento Division of the Southern Pacific, at Sacramento; that he knew Terry Douglass; that he knew that Douglass was connected with the A.R.U. during the recent strike, because Douglass appeared before Mr. Fillmore, or in his rooms, on one or two occasions, in connection with the strike; [**726] that on one occasion Douglass came in an official capacity; that, when he did come in an official capacity, Douglass announced that they had decided to declare the strike off. This was in the latter part of July. Douglass' position in the American Railway Union was a member of the mediation committee. Douglass was not a member of the mediation committee right through the strike. The witness understood that they (Douglass and the two men who accompanied him on the occasion just referred to) took the place of the original mediation committee at Sacramento. On the occasion referred to they came into the rooms of [**78] Mr. Fillmore, and requested the stenographer who was present to prepare upon the typewriter a statement to that effect, which was read to them by the stenographer, and was signed by them. The witness was present when this was done. Witness knows the handwriting of Douglass. Identifies the signature of Douglass on the following telegrams:

"Sacto., July 14th, 1894. To F. P. Cox, Rocklin, Cal.: Men are determined. Situation good. T. H. Douglass."

"Sacto., July 16, 1894. To E. V. Debs, Chicago, Ill.: A committee of fruit growers has waited on us. Are you any nearer a settlement? Ans. quick. T. H. Douglass."

"Sacto., July 16, 1894. To S. Brennan, Rocklin, Cal.: Message from Debs. Situation everywhere good. Switchmen have all quit here. T. H. Douglass."

"Sacto., July 16, 1894. To R. A. Battenfield, Rocklin: Four trains tied up at Red Bluff. No crews to move. T. H. Douglass."

"Sacto., July 16, 1894. To E. V. Debs, Chicago, Ill.: Scabs coming from East. With few exceptions, men solid here. T. H. Douglass."

"Sacramento, Cal., July 17, 1894. To R. A. Battenfield, Rocklin, Cal.: Situation better than yesterday. Prospects brighten every hour to A.R.U. T. H. Douglass."

[**79] "Sacto., July 18th, 1894. To R. A. Battenfield, Rocklin: Did any train leave Rocklin this morning? T. H. Douglass."

"Sacto., July 18th, 1894. To W. Balder, Truckee, Cal.: Received message from James Hogan. He states situation firm everywhere. T. H. Douglass."

"Sacto., July 18th, 1894. S. J. Brennan, Rocklin: Situation has not changed. No work for shopmen. T. H. Douglass."

"Sacto., July 18th, 1894. To E. E. Barton, Ogden, Utah: Committee waited on J. A. Fillmore. Nothing satisfactory. Men remain firm. T. H. Douglass."

"Sacto., July 19, 1894. To G. W. Lindsay, Wadsworth, Nev.: No change in situation here. Remain firm. T. H. Douglass."

"Sacto., July 20, 1894. To James Hogan, Chicago, Ill.: True situation men wavering in many places. Give your views affairs. T. H. Douglass."

"Sacto., July 21st, 1894. To F. P. Cox, Rocklin, Cal.: Probably strike will be declared off at 2 p.m. T. H. Douglass."

"Sacramento, Cal., July 21st, 1894. To W. Balder, Truckee, Cal.: Expect strike to be settled by 2 p.m. T. H. Douglass."

"Sacramento, Cal., July 21st, 1894. To G. W. Lindsay, Wadsworth, Nev.: This lodge has declared strike off by unanimous vote. T. H. Douglass."

[**80] "Sacto., July 21, 1894. To S. J. Brennan, Rocklin, Cal.: This lodge has declared strike off. T. H. Douglass."

"Sacramento, Cal., July 21, 1894. To W. Balder, Truckee, Cal.: Strike has been declared off Pacific, unconditional. T. H. Douglass."

T. H. Douglass, called for the defendants, testified: That he was a brakeman last June and July, running between Sacramento and Truckee. That he belonged to the American Railway Union and Order of Railway Conductors. That he acted as chairman of the mediation committee, he thinks, from the 12th or 13th or 14th [*727] of July. That the occasion of his so acting was because the original members on that committee were arrested. That John Hurley and G. H. Hale were on the committee with him. That he continued in that capacity until the strike was declared off. That he does not remember the day when the strike was declared off, but he thinks it was the 25th day of July. He attended a meeting of the American Railway Union on the 26th of June. There was a message read from E. V. Debs, declaring a boycott on Pullman cars. The union took action on the matter, and declared a boycott. Was in Truckee when the strike was ordered. First [**81] heard of it about 6:30 in the morning. "The train master asked the crew if they would go out on No. 20. They told him, 'Yes.' After he [the train master] left, seven or eight men came in, and told us there was a strike ordered, and we had not better go. Well, we did not go." Douglass admits having received and sent a number of dispatches during the strike.

Beginning of the Strike at Oakland.

Thomas J. Roberts, a witness for the defendants, testified that he resided in West Oakland; that he had been employed for six years as a locomotive engineer for the Southern Pacific Company; that he was president of local union No. 310, of the American Railway Union, which was organized in May, 1894; that the first he knew of any trouble was a communication he received from Mr. Worden, who was delegate to the convention in Chicago. He says:

"I received a letter from him stating that the Pullman boycott had been declared, to take effect in five days, unless the trouble between the Pullman Company and their employes was settled. On the same day a telegram was read in our meeting -- that was Tuesday, June 26th -- from the president of our general union, saying, 'Pullman boycott in effect [**82] to-day noon, by order of convention.'"

He further says:

"It was the evening before we received the telegram, and, that being our regular meeting night, the secretary held the telegram until the meeting opened; and after the meeting had opened, and we got through with our preliminary work, the telegram was read, and the matter was discussed, and I think the telegram said the Pullman boycott was in effect that day at noon. Still we did not want to take any snap judgment on the company, and we decided not to put it into effect until 12 o'clock the following day, June 27th. That would be Wednesday. A motion was put and carried to that effect, and our secretary was instructed to notify the Southern Pacific officials that after Wednesday, June 27th, at noon, we would not handle any Pullman cars, or do any Pullman work."

Continuing, the witness testified:

"June 27th the boycott took effect, at noon. That afternoon we had some trouble in the passenger yard where I was employed. Some of the boys that were cleaning cars were instructed by some foreman that they were working under to clean some certain Pullman cars, and they refused to do so. They told him that they belonged to [**83] the American Railway Union, and that there was a boycott in effect, and that they could not clean the Pullman cars. He told them that if they did not want to do that there was nothing else for them to do, and that they could go home."

The men were reinstated at his request. They went on with their customary work. The strike was to take effect the morning of the 29th, at 12:30. It was for the reinstatement of the men who had [*728] been discharged. By "strike," he means that the men were all to withdraw from the service of the company, and refuse to work. In case the men were reinstated, they would be returned to work. By "the men," he means the strikers. There was no resolution. That was the understanding, -- his understanding. The secretary was instructed to notify all the unions on this system, or in this state; he is not sure which. All the action that was taken was that they advised the men to try and keep men from going to work and taking their places; to persuade those that were at work to quit. "Tie up" is a railroad phrase. It means to cease work. It is used by officials and train dispatchers. Perhaps a train at Port Costa may get orders, "Train No. 18 [**84] will tie up at Tracy." That means that they will not go any further.

The witness was shown a number of telegrams, among others the following, which he admits having sent:

"West Oakland, Cala., June 28, 1894. To F. P. Sargent, Terre Haute: Firemen's lodge here indorsed Pullman boycott. Will not handle their cars. T. J. Roberts."

"Oakland, Cal., June 30, 1894. To W. H. Russell, Secretary B.R.T., Bakersfield, Cal.: What is situation? Define position of B.R.T. T. J. Roberts."

"Oakland, Cal., June 30, 1894. To H. A. Knox, A.R.U., Sacramento, Cal.: No troops sent out from here. T. J. Roberts."

"Oakland, Cal., June 29, 1894. To E. H. Leon, San Jose, Cal.: Firemen out here. Do not work. Come home. T. J. Roberts."

"West Oakland, July 14, 1894. To F. P. Sargent, Terre Haute, Ind.: Authorized American Railway Union strike here. Shall B.L.F. men work during strike? T. J. Roberts."

"West Oakland, July 18, 1894. To F. B. Porter, Reno, Nev.: Solid here. Do not waver. Victory is ours. T. J. Roberts."

He was in frequent correspondence with the officers of different lodges of the American Railway Union throughout the state, and in some instances with the American Railway [**85] Union headquarters at Chicago, during the strike. Does not know particularly that he sent them by virtue of his official position as president of the American Railway Union in Oakland. It was merely for information. The union sent a great many official notifications of the strike throughout the state. He did not. The secretary sent them. The union ordered the secretary to notify the different local unions in the state of the strike here. They had no authority to send them in his name. They related to the strike. He got some messages from Knox, of Sacramento, and sent him some.

G. D. Bishop, called for the defense, testifies that he was the secretary of the American Railway Union at Oakland. The secretary was instructed, the night of the boycott, to notify other unions in reference to the boycott.

Beginning of the Strike at Red Bluff, Truckee, and Dunsmuir.

John Kelly testified, as a witness on behalf of the government, that he went out on strike on June 28th or 29th; that he had been a fireman for the Southern Pacific Company; that he went out at Red Bluff; that he was a member of the American Railway Union; that that had to do with his going out on a strike.

J. P. [**86] Heaney, a witness called for the defendants, states that he [*729] went to Red Bluff from Sacramento on June 28th; that he lived at Sacramento, and belonged to the Sacramento lodge of the American Railway Union; that he had been braking for the Southern Pacific Company; that there was no American Railway Union organization at Red Bluff. He testifies as to being advised of the strike by a telegram from Mr. Knox; that he had asked Mr. Knox if there was a strike ordered, and the latter had replied, "Yes, there is a general strike ordered by Eugene V. Debs." The witness states that he was appointed chairman of a committee at Red Bluff. The committee were composed of railroad employes who had struck. Although the witness is very uncertain as to the purpose of the meetings, and the appointment of the committee of which he was chairman, he admits that at least one of its objects was in order that there might be some authorized person to receive and send dispatches for the men out on strike at other points, and be a channel of communication between Mr. Knox and the men at Red Bluff. He received quite a number of dispatches from Mr. Knox, and from other places. Although Heaney admits [**87] having received a great many telegrams, his recollection as to their contents is extremely vague. But one of these telegrams was introduced on the part of the prosecution. It is as follows:

"3:15 p.m., July 3/94. Red Bluff, Cal. Received at Sacramento, Cal. Jack Heaney: Trains switched by official. Coaches detained by three thousand people. H. A. Knox."

One from Heaney reads as follows:

"Red Bluff, Cal., July 2, '94. H. A. Knox, Sacramento, Cal.: Shall we let Adams, engineer that brought No. 15 in, go back with Mrs. Stanford's special? He has no fireman. Heaney."

The following is a telegram from Dunsmuir, purporting to be signed by M. C. Roberts:

"Dunsmuir, Cal., June 28th, 1894. H. A. Knox, S. P. Depot, Sacramento, Cal.: Has Portland boycotted Pullman? Answer. M. C. Roberts."

Mr. Knox replied:

"Sacramento, Cal., June 28, '94. M. C. Roberts, Dunsmuir, Cal.: Don't know. But if any, you hold. H. A. Knox."

From Truckee comes the following telegram:

"Truckee, Cal., July 4, 1894. H. A. Knox, Sac.: Do you still want us? Train on mail line ready to go. C. B. McClintock."

Mr. Knox replied:

"July 4, 1894. To C. B. McClintock, Truckee, Cal.: Come without [**88] fail; coming from all points. H. A. Knox."

The following telegram purports to have been sent by F. H. Almus to Mr. Knox:

"Summit, Cal., June 30/4. Harry Knox, Chairman of A.R.U. Committee, Sac.: Will I continue service on work train or not? Answer. F. H. Almus."

Almus testified for the defendants, and stated that he was a member of the American Railway Union. Knox's reply is as follows:

"June 30, 1894. To F. Almus, Summit, Cal.: No. Stop at once. H. A. Knox."

[*730] The following telegrams are from Los Angeles, signed by W. H. Clune:

"June 27/4. Los Angeles, Cal. G. D. Bishop, Secretary A.R.U. 310, W. Oakland, Cala.: Stand firm. Will boycott at Los Angeles this p.m. W. H. Clune, Sect. No. Eighty."

"L.A. 7/2, 1894. To T. J. Roberts, Prest. A.R.U., Oakland, Cal.: Resolutions in press is fake. Out of one hundred engineers here, ninety-seven are with us till the end. Trainmen, firemen, carmen, shopmen, section and bridge men, -- solid. W. H. Clune, Secty."

Strike in San Francisco by A.R.U. Lodge 345.

It is admitted by the defense that the defendants John Mayne and John Cassidy were members of this lodge at the time of the strike. Rice and Clark, the [**89] two other defendants charged in the indictment, but who are not on trial, were also members of the same lodge. Charles Ault, called for the government, testified: That he was a member of the American Railway Union. That the number of his lodge was 345, San Francisco. It was the same lodge to which the defendants belonged. One Bradley was president, and another person, by the name of Elliott, was on the executive committee. This lodge went out on the strike, as a body, on June 29th, -- the night of June 29th. It also appeared from the testimony of H. J. Bederman, a witness for defendants, that one J. E. Riordan was its secretary. McClintock was also a member of this lodge. The purpose which prompted the lodge to join the strike is stated by the testimony as follows: T. J. Roberts, president of the Oakland lodge, American Railway Union, testified that the union of which he was president authorized the secretary to send telegrams to different unions, as follows:

"American Railway Union three hundred ten declared strike. Takes effect twelve thirty a.m. to-day."

A telegram to this effect was sent to the lodge in San Francisco:

"Oakland, Calif., June 29, 1894. J. E. Riordan, [**90] 118 Sixth St., Room 71, S.F.: American Railway Union three hundred ten has declared strike. Takes effect twelve thirty a.m. to-day. T. J. Roberts, President."

Mr. Roberts, when examined, said that he had not personally authorized the sending of telegrams of such purport, and knew nothing about them. Some 21 others of a similar character were sent to different places.

Mr. Bishop, the secretary of the same organization, testified that these telegrams were sent out by direction of the union. They were authorized by the union. It will be noticed that the dispatch claimed by the government to have been sent to Riordan, of the San Francisco union, of which the defendants were members, is practically to the same effect. This witness acknowledged receiving the following telegram, purporting to come from J. E. Riordan:

"San Francisco, June 30, 1894. G. D. Bishop, Oakland: Committee out on organization Narrow Gauge. Your assistance required. J. E. Riordan."

He testified that he authorized the sending of the following telegram to J. E. Riordan on June 30, 1894:

"Oakland, Cal., June 30th, 1894. To J. E. Riordan, 118 6th St., S.F.: Will send men at once to confer with you. G. [**91] D. Bishop, Sec."

[*731] H. J. Bederman, a witness called for the defendants, and employed as a switchman by the Southern Pacific Company last spring, testifies, substantially, that he belonged to Lodge 345, San Francisco, of the American Railway Union; that the defendants belong to the same lodge; that the occasion of the strike by his union was on account of some of the members being discharged for not handling Pullman cars; that an executive and press committee was appointed; that the executive had charge of almost everything concerning the strike of the men; that most of the men belonging to his union worked on the Coast Division; that the committees were appointed on the evening of June 29th; that all the power regarding the strike was delegated to the executive committee, so that this committee had charge of the strike; did not seem inconsistent to him in striking on a division where there were no Pullman cars; not a question of sympathy; they were members of the union; they were supposed to do what was right by every member; if one was discharged for a cause he was not guilty of, they would try and protect him; the union protected them; Mr. Riordan was secretary of the [**92] union.

George Elliott testified, on being called as a witness for the defendants, that he was a foreman switchman in the passenger yards of the Southern Pacific Company, at Fourth and Townsend streets; that he joined the American Railway Union (Lodge 345, San Francisco) on the night of the 29th of June, or the 30th; that he became chairman of the executive committee; that this committee were to do everything that was to be done in connection with the strike; they had full power; the question of Pullman cars never, to his knowledge, came up; they struck for the reinstatement of employes that had been discharged. On cross-examination he states that he struck because of the discharged employes; he believes some were discharged in Los Angeles, and some in Sacramento; simply struck to see justice done. On redirect examination, he said that he first got some information about the strike from Mr. Bederman; that he believes that Bederman read a message to him; he doesn't know whether it came from Oakland or Sacramento.

Edward F. Gerald, a witness called for the government, gave testimony tending to prove the handwriting of Mr. Riordan. He states, respecting the following telegrams, [*93] that he "thinks they are all Mr. Riordan's signatures":

"San Francisco, 6/29, 1894. To Chas. E. Bradley, Engineer S.P. Co., Pajaro: Strike ordered to-day noon. Let trains come north. Notify San Jose and along the line. J. E. Riordan."

"June 29, 1894. F. Gillett, San Luis Obispo, S.P. Co. Caboose: Strike ordered immediately. Tie up everything. J. E. Riordan, Secretary #345, A.R.U."

"June 29, 1894. C. E. Bradley, Tres Pinos, S.P. Co.: Strike ordered immediately. Tie up everything. J. E. Riordan, Secretary #345, A.R.U."

"June 29, 1894. A. E. Pratt, Pacific Grove, S.P. Co.: Strike ordered immediately. Tie up everything. J. E. Riordan, Secretary #345, A.R.U."

"June 29, 1894. E. B. Stanwood, Castroville Station, S.P. Co.: Strike ordered immediately. Tie up everything. J. E. Riordan, Secretary #354, A.R.U."

"June 29, 1894. G. W. Gillett, Aptos, S.P. Co.: Strike ordered immediately. Tie up everything. J. E. Riordan, Secretary #345, A.R.U."

[*732] "F. W. Clark, Pac. Grove: Greer O. K. Keep on good work. Tie up strong. J. E. Riordan."

"San Francisco, 6-30, 1894. G. D. Bishop, Oakland Yard S.P. Co. Committee out on organizing Narrow Gauge. Your assistance [**94] required. J. E. Riordan."

It is admitted on the part of the defendants that the following telegrams were signed by George Elliott, although, when the latter was cross-examined, he could not recollect as to whether he signed some of them, and denied that he signed others. The witness J. E. Dillon identified his handwriting.

"San Fran., 7/1, 1894. To R. Gillett, Aptos, Cal.: Not a wheel turning between here and Chicago. It is our fight sure. Will keep you posted. George Elliott, Chairman."

"7/2, 1894. To Ed Stanwood, Castroville Station: Everything is coming our way. Not a wheel moving between here and Chicago. Victory is certain. George Elliott, Chairman A.R.U."

"7/2, 1894. To Ed Pratt, Pacific Grove: We are gaining strength rapidly. The fight is ours. Everything is coming our way. George Elliott, Chairman A.R.U."

"San Fran., 7/3, 1894. To R. W. Gillett, Aptos: No, sir. Allowing no trains to run we can help. Geo. Elliott, Chairman."

"San Francisco, 7/3, 1894. To J. Morehead, Pacific Grove: No, sir. Out to win, and going to. Will advise when settled. George Elliott, Chairman."

"7/3, 1894. To W. H. French, Aptos: You are all in to clear. Eugene V. [**95] Debs wires giving you full protection. Tie up everything at once. George Elliott, Chairman."

"7/3, 1894. To J. M. Smith, Tres Pinos: Fight is ours, and win we must. George Elliott, Chairman A.R.U."

"7/3, 1894. To W. Johnson, San Jose, Care Eureka Hotel: Do not move. Committee will see you to-morrow morning. George Elliott."

"7/3, 1894. To F. W. Gillett, San Luis Obispo: You are a brick. Debs wires that we will win. George Elliott."

I have now directed your attention to some of the testimony that tends to show the communications that passed between the various lodges of the American Railway Union and their members concerning the boycott and strike, and the concert of action that was had in pursuance of such communications. I have also called your attention to some of the statements of Knox and others as to the purpose of the boycott and strike, and the purpose they had in view in taking the action they did. To review all the testimony in the case bearing on this point would take too much time, and will not be necessary, in view of the argument of counsel for the defendants, who admits the concert of action claimed by the government, but denies that it involved a [**96] criminal purpose. With respect to these telegrams, and the testimony I have referred to in connection therewith, you will bear in mind that many of them have been admitted in evidence with the consent of counsel for defendants; the genuineness of others has been denied; and the testimony as to still others is, by reason of the contradictory nature of the testimony, involved in more or less uncertainty. As you are the sole judges of the credibility of the witnesses, and of all the evidence introduced in the case, whether it be oral or written or documentary, you will determine the genuineness of such of these telegrams as are in controversy, and this you will do from all the circumstances in the case. In passing upon the telegrams not admitted as genuine, you will be justified in resorting to all [*733] those facts and circumstances in the case which will tend to establish their genuineness, or, on the other hand, serve to show their want of genuineness. For example, you may consider the occasions and occurrences to which the telegrams purport to relate; whether they would have been sent, but for such occurrences; the relation they bear to the events which you may deem the [**97] evidence establishes to your satisfaction, and beyond a reasonable doubt; their tenor and subject-matter; the fact that the sender or the recipient, as the case might be, was connected with the American

Railway Union. In fact, all those circumstances and incidents which may be rationally and naturally connected may be considered by you in passing upon their authenticity, and the probability of their having been sent and received by the parties whose names appear upon said messages. The importance and materiality of these telegrams as showing, or tending to show, that the conspiracy charged in the indictment did in fact exist, is for you to determine. There are two important facts, however, to which it is proper for the court to call your attention, in your consideration of this question, and these are that most, if not all, of these telegrams were sent, or purport to have been sent, -- whether they were or not is, as I have stated, for you to determine, -- by and to members of the American Railway Union, and in the greater number of instances by those in authority in that organization, and who the testimony I have referred to, and other evidence adduced during the trial, tends to [**98] show were actively concerned in the strike, and took part in it with the avowed purpose of preventing the movement of all Pullman cars. Another significant circumstance, to which I call your attention, is that you are to consider whether these telegrams related to any of the facts charged in the indictment as constituting the conspiracy to commit the acts with which these defendants are accused, and whether they had any bearing or connection in any way with the acts charged in the indictment as means to effect the object of the conspiracy, and with reference to which -- or some of which -- acts the prosecution has introduced evidence showing, or tending to show, the conspiracy and overt acts, and the connection of these defendants with such conspiracy and acts. If you are satisfied from the evidence that these messages related to, formed a part of, or had any bearing upon the object of the conspiracy, and the means to effectuate such object, charged in the indictment, and the overt acts alleged to have been committed in furtherance of such conspiracy, it is a circumstance which you may consider in determining the existence of such conspiracy. You will consider whether they establish, [**99] or tend to establish, the concert or purpose and action which constitute important elements in this case as to the existence of the conspiracy charged; particularly, where a number of telegrams of similar purport and tenor are sent to different places at or about the same time, and all proceeding, or purporting to proceed, from the same person or local lodge of the American Railway Union. Thus, the telegrams sent by Knox, who, as testified to, was chairman of the mediation committee at Sacramento, [*734] and whose jurisdiction as such extended over a good part of the Pacific coast, or of Roberts, the president of the Oakland lodge or union, or of Bishop, its secretary, or of Douglass, Vice, Elliott, Riordan, and such others as the evidence shows, or tends to show, sent telegrams of the same general character, these persons being officially connected with the American Railway Union, -- whether these show, or tend to establish, a unity of design, a community of purpose, an express or tacit understanding to do the acts charged in the indictment.

It is claimed by the defendants that, while there may have been some concert of action on the part of the members of the American Railway [**100] Union with respect to the boycott and strike, the purpose of such concerted action was merely to advise members of that organization to quit work until the controversy between Pullman and his employes should be settled. As I have explained to you before, even this purpose would become a criminal conspiracy, if the concerted action were knowingly and willfully directed, by the parties to it, for the purpose of obstructing and retarding the passage of the mails of the United States, or in restraint of trade and commerce among the several states. The government claims, however, that the concerted action on the part of the American Railway Union had something more to it than merely advising its members to quit work. It is claimed that the language of the telegrams, to which reference has been made, indicates that it was the purpose of the strikers to prevent the movement of railway trains belonging to the Southern Pacific Company, by actual and unlawful obstruction; and in this connection the question will arise in your minds, if these telegrams were intended merely to advise members of the American Railway Union to quit the service of the company, why did they not so state that purpose [**101] in plain language? It would have been an easy thing to have said, "We advise you to quit work." Why, then, telegraph such instructions as these, -- if these telegrams were sent: "Stop all Pullman sleepers." "Tie up everything." "Hold Nos. 4 and 2 sure." "Tie up strong." Furthermore, if it were simply the purpose of the American Railway Union to advise its members to quit work, why did Mr. Knox use this language in his statement of the situation to the Citizens' Protective Association of Sacramento on July 7th, last? "Mr. Knox then stated that he would allow the mail and express to be moved, but that no passenger or freight cars of any kind or description would he consent to have moved until such time as the demand he made had been complied with." Why did Mr. Mullen, on the same occasion, say "that this was a fight between capital and labor, and that from the chief justice of the United States, down through all the branches -- judicial and legislative departments -- of the government, they were corrupt, and that labor could not get its just dues, and that his association had taken this way of forcing justice to assist their fellow men in obtaining for honest labor a proper compensation"? [**102] And why did Mr. Compton, at the same time, say "that the A.R.U. organization would not resort to any desperate means, so long as the railroad company would deal [*735] with them without using armed force"? Was this language used on those occasions consistent with the peaceful and lawful methods of procedure now claimed by Mr. Knox to have been the purpose and action of the members of the American Railway Union during the period of the strike?

But it is claimed by the prosecution that the purpose of the strikers to interpose actual and unlawful obstructions to the movement of railway trains, both passenger and freight, is further shown by certain acts alleged in the indictment and concerning which testimony has been introduced. I will therefore now direct your attention to that feature of the case.

One of the means alleged, in the indictment, that was adopted to promote, carry out, effect, and execute the conspiracy, was (1) that the conspirators were to "forcibly take and keep possession and control of all yards, depots, tracks, and trains of cars on said lines of railway and to forcibly hold and detain the same."

Sacramento.

The following testimony relates to what [**103] occurred at Sacramento, and it is claimed that it tends to prove the feature of the charge now under consideration:

Felix Tracy, agent of Wells, Fargo & Co. at Sacramento, called for the government, testifies on direct examination that: On the 27th of June, train No. 84, which ran from Sacramento to San Francisco by the way of Stockton, on which the express was, was held in Sacramento, and not sent out. The main office in Sacramento was at Sixth and K. He went down to the depot office to ascertain why it was not sent out. He ascertained that the train was not going out, and that the express was held there. The express was taken out of the train and held until they could send it away by different modes of conveyance. The express matter was destined for points between Sacramento and San Francisco, also Los Angeles; and matter for New Orleans also goes out on that train, connecting at Lathrop or Tracy. He could not tell positively whether there was or not any express matter on that train for New Orleans without examining the record. On the morning of the 29th, the express on train No. 4, which is the overland train from the East by the way of Ogden, was held at Sacramento, and [**104] he transferred the express from this train to the steamer. Sent it from Sacramento; that is, that portion of it for San Francisco, down on the steamer from Sacramento. This train was held at Sacramento about 10 o'clock in the morning. His recollection is that there was some freight or express matter on this train from New York for one place. The witness thus relates the manner in which he transferred this express:

"I saw that the train was held there and not moved. I saw a large crowd there, and the time for the steamer to leave Sacramento was about ten o'clock; that is, the regular time. I was satisfied, if I was going to get that express to San Francisco, that I must act very quickly. I did not know whether the steamer would be permitted to leave, or whether I would be permitted to transfer the express from this car to the steamer. Consequently I ordered two wagons -- the large two-horse wagon and the single wagon -- to [*736] the express car, with the idea that we might carry that express up to 6th and K. * * * I did not tell only one or two employees. I did not state to them what I was going to do. We loaded it in as quick as we could, and took the express over [**105] to the steamer, and transferred it to the steamer. There was a great deal of excitement both at the depot and the steamer landing. I heard men at the steamboat landing ask the employees of the steamer not to go out."

The witness further states: That a train which left San Francisco on the 28th of June was delayed at Rocklin. He sent up several days afterwards, and had the express brought back to Sacramento, and he saw himself that there was express there going to Ogden, and east of that, from San Francisco and other points. He saw the waybills. With reference to the detention of train No. 84 on the 27th of June, as testified to above by Tracy, Mr. Knox gives the following version of the cause of its detention, which I have heretofore referred to in another connection: He states that there was a train due to leave there at 10:25, known as No. 84. They asked the switchmen not to handle the Pullman car, because it was empty, and it was not necessary for it to go. They thought it was proper to boycott the empty Pullmans. They refused to put Pullman cars on. That train stood there until leaving time. Then it started to pull out, and perhaps pulled four or five car lengths out, [**106] and some one ran down out of the office and turned the plug on the hind end of the air hose, and stopped the train. She was backed up to the depot, and stood there for a couple of weeks. As to the detention of train No. 4 on the 29th, Mr. Knox testifies, in substance, that Mr. Saulpaugh, the engineer, declined to go out on the train, and that the fireman also refused to go with the Pullman cars, and that this was the cause of its not going out.

Barry Baldwin, United States marshal, who was at Sacramento from the 1st of July until the middle of August, called for the United States, testified, on direct examination, upon being asked in what condition the tracks and the cars and engines in and about the depot at Sacramento were on the evening of Sunday, July 1st, that they were in great disorder. Engines were driven head to in places, and wheels blocked, and obstructions -- cars -- placed across the tracks. The cars were placed in such a manner as to impede the business. Saw no steam arising from any of the engines. They were in such a position that the trains and engines could not have free movement. Mr. Knox denies the truth of this statement, and in answer to the question: [**107] "Q. What was the condition of the yard?" says:

"It was simply trains had been run in there, and the men refused to put them away, because they would not work until those men had been reinstated, and they simply died on the track of their own free will. No one injured them at all. So far as any obstruction on the track, there were none at all, except that one block I spoke of under that engine to keep her from running down hill into another engine."

Mr. Baldwin further testified on his direct examination that the depot was constantly overrun with men; that it was in the possession of the strikers. Mr. Knox states that this is not correct; that the depot was in the possession of the railroad officials all the time. [*737] Mr. Baldwin further states, in relation to the effort made on July 5th to couple the engine to delayed train No. 4, that it was standing on the track. It had come in there and had been stopped there. In the morning before commencing at all, he went to the mail car, and saw the postal clerk there, and made him open the car, and went into the car, and saw that the mail was there in the car, and that it was the mail that was ordinarily carried on that train, [**108] and had come down from the post office, and that is the way he ascertained. The crowd surged in through the depot. The crowd was heaviest around the engine, and standing in the way of the engine, and obstructing its coming up to the train. He had to get down and move them foot by foot to get the engine through. He got on the engine again, and it was moved up to the train, and, just as they reached the train, the crowd broke past and swept through the depot, and broke the train and rolled back the cars, -- the passenger coaches. There were some seven cars rolled back. Possibly 500 people took part in rolling back these coaches. They rolled them back at once with their hands, without any difficulty, there were so many of them.

Greenlaw, a witness for the defendants, testifies: That he heard cheering and hollering down at the east end of the depot. That he went down there. That when he got there the Pullman cars had been uncoupled. That there was quite a crowd around Marshal Baldwin when he got there. That he saw they were trying to get at Baldwin, and he did his best to defend him. That a fellow -- he thinks it was Jack Harris -- picked Marshal Baldwin up and started to [**109] carry him out of the crowd. While he was up in the air on Jack Harris' shoulder he drew his revolver. He said, "Let me down." Jack Harris let him down on the ground, and he shoved the pistol up under Greenlaw's nose. Greenlaw states that he said: "Don't point that thing at me. I have been trying to defend you." Marshal Baldwin said: "I will shoot the first man that lays his hand on me." Just then Mr. Galliner broke into the crowd, -- a great, large man, -- and he said: "What's the matter, Marshal Baldwin?" or, "Baldwin." Baldwin said: "These boys won't leave me alone." Galliner then said: "Leave him alone. He is all right, boys. Go away and leave him alone." That the crowd then dispersed and went over to the depot and Third street bridge. Mr. Baldwin also further testifies: That on July 4th there were larger crowds at the Sacramento depot than on the previous day. Nothing had been done towards cleaning up the yard; no work had been done from the previous day up to that time. That an attempt was made on that day by the militia to take possession of the depot. That at the termination of the militia's efforts the depot was still in the possession of the strikers. That from [**110] that time on to the 11th of July, in the morning, the depot, grounds, and tracks and yards around the depot were in the possession of the strikers. The witness Greenlaw, called for the defense, contradicts Mr. Baldwin's testimony on this point, and states that there were more outsiders at the depot than there were strikers; that the strikers were doing the same that the crowd was, -- looking on. No effort was made to [*738] keep them out. They just stood there in the depot. He did not see the militia make any effort to get in. In relation to the stoppage of the movements of all trains between the 3d and 11th days of July, Mr. Baldwin states that there was nothing moved out (of the Sacramento depot) between those dates.

Red Bluff.

The following testimony relates to the possession taken by the strikers of the yard, depot, and trains at Red Bluff:

Joseph C. Day, roundhouse foreman for the Southern Pacific Company at Red Bluff, called for the government, testified as follows: That he was roundhouse foreman at Red Bluff for the Southern Pacific Company in the months of June and July last; that he recollects an attempt to move the Sacramento local No. 12 from Red Bluff on [**111] or about the 29th day of June last; that it was composed of the day coach, smoker, and mail car; that he and Mr. Jones and Mr. Robb, the conductor, endeavored to move this train. After explaining the position of the train on the track by means of a diagram on the blackboard, he states:

"We were on the back of the mail car, -- myself, Mr. Jones, and Robb. We set the levers to couple on. When we got very near there, Mr. Ray threw one of the levers down onto the coach, so that we could not couple it. There was Ray, Clodtfelder, and Shepler. He told us we could as well give it up. We had done our part, and they would do theirs. That we could not couple that train together. Clodtfelder was the man that made that remark. We stayed there and talked quite a while. Mr. Robb made the remark they were too many for us. We could not make it up. We would have to give it up. The engine stood there for about an hour, and the engineer brought her back to the roundhouse. The mail car stayed there a few feet away from the coach, not coupled."

J. P. Heaney, a witness called for the defense, testified: That he was a brakeman for the Southern Pacific Company in June and July last. That [**112] he belonged to the Brotherhood of Railroad Brakemen and the American Railway Union at Sacramento. That he went to Red Bluff on the 28th of June. The following morning (the 29th) he went to the depot. As he turned the corner he saw no engine there. He walked along leisurely, and when he got down to the depot he inquired why the engine was not out. He was told that a strike had been declared. He saw the fireman, and asked him what he thought about it. The latter said he did not know. The witness said: "Will we go, or will we not?" and he told the fireman that he would like awful well to go, but that he would hate to go into Sacramento and have the boys holler "Scab" at him when he got there. That he would not do that for all the jobs he ever saw. That they talked around there a little while, and finally concluded not to go out. He took off his cap and uniform and gave the job up then. He was told that they were obstructing the mail; that that was a mail train. In answer to the question, "Who told you that?" he states:

"I don't know. I think it was some of our men who spoke to me about it. I think it was Montanya and Harper. They said it was a mail train, and we ought [**113] to go on it. I says: 'All right. If it is a mail train, we will go.' I went down and says: 'I will go with the mail car, and nothing else.' I [*739] told Mr. Jones and Mr. Robb so, -- that I would go with the mail car. I spoke to the fireman about it, and asked him what he thought. He says: 'Yes, we ought to go with the mail, anyhow.' I asked him to get the engine. He started to get the engine, came down, -- the train was in on the side track, -- and I let the engine in, and went up and cut the mail car from the coaches, and backed the engine up on it, coupled on, and pulled out on the main line. Put my uniform on again, and told Robb and Jones that I was ready to go. They said that I could not go with that train; to put the whole train on, or there would be nothing go. I says: 'That is all I intend to go with. If you won't let me go with that, I won't go.'"

J. C. Shepler, called for the defense, admits that he was present upon the occasion, on the morning of the 29th of June, related by the witness Day. He states that he had nothing to do with the uncoupling the mail from the rest of the train, -- the Sacramento local No. 12.

The persons Ray and Clodtfelder, who [**114] are implicated by Day in the uncoupling of train No. 12 on the 29th of June, were not called as witnesses.

Day further testifies, with relation to the stoppage of the Oregon express, train No. 15, on the 1st day of July: That he was not down at the train when she came in. After she was there a little while he went down. He saw the train had been cut in three different parts. This was somewhere about 9. He went down to the rear end of the train to see Mr. Kilburn. He saw the two sleepers were cut off and backed down over one crossing, the two coaches and a tourist car were cut in another section and standing on the crossing, and the two mail cars and engine standing in front of the depot, on the main track. At the south end there were two Pullmans; next came a tourist car, day coach, and smoker, and an express car and baggage car was with those coaches and smoker, and the next was two mail cars and engine, -- one a mail car and the other a box car. Men were working there taking off the appliances for connecting the train. He saw Mr. Shade there at work; also saw Richard Roe, and a fireman of the name of Hill. Hill's first name is Joe. Mr. Heaney was around there. He did [**115] not see him doing anything. There was probably a couple of dozen around there. He saw Mr. Shade and Clodtfelder cut the hose and the Miller hooks behind the mail car. They did that in his presence, when he went down to get the engine to pull her up. He looked at the couplings in the afternoon. He saw the safety chains taken off, and the nuts and keys at the back of the Miller hooks had been taken off.

J. C. Shepler, the same witness whose testimony has been previously referred to on the part of the defense, denies that he assisted in taking any nuts or chains or bolts, or in any way interfering with the Portland express which came in on the 1st of July; that he saw no one in any way interfering with the couplings or brake chains, or any of the nuts or bolts connected with the train. He admits, however, that he saw a couple of chains lying on the ground there. He admits, also, that he was at the station when the train came in, and that there was a crowd about the train. He states that he does not know who uncoupled the train.

Joseph B. Hill, called for the defense, and the person referred to by the witness Day as the fireman who was engaged, with others, [*740] in taking [**116] off the appliances for connecting the Portland express on July 1st, states that he was present when the express train came in; that there was quite a crowd about there. He denies that he ever did anything to prevent the coupling of the engine and mail car to the coaches of the Portland express.

J. P. Heaney, called for the defense, testifies that he was around the depot on the 1st of July when the Portland express came in, or shortly after it came in. He gives the following version of the uncoupling of the train:

"Mr. Jones came up there and wanted to know if we would put the train away. I believe I spoke up and said that we would put the train away if he would tell the engineer to obey our signals. He said he would. He went up there and told the engineer. After he told the engineer, we gave him a backup signal, and cut the train in three pieces, so as to clear the different crossings there. There are three crossings there that have got to be cut. If we would run the train all down there, we would stop the wagon transportation. We cut the train in three pieces, and let it stand there."

William H. Jones, agent and train master of the Southern Pacific Company at Red Bluff, [**117] testified that on June 29th an attempt was made to move the Red Bluff and Sacramento local. This train carried coaches, the ordinary baggage car, and a mail car. It carried no sleepers. This train is due to leave Red Bluff at 5:15 in the morning. He attempted to move the train. The strikers had cut the train in two, -- cut the mail car off. He could not say who cut it off. He did not see them cut it off. He attempted to put it on again and start the train in regular form. Mr. Clodtfelder and Mr. Ray prevented him from coupling it. Mr. Day and Mr. Robb, the conductor, assisted him in trying to put that train together. Mr. Day is the foreman of the roundhouse. They backed the train together. He set the Miller hooks to couple; set one of them to couple, and stepped over to the other platform to couple the other hook. Threw the lever up, as it were. Clodtfelder held it and prevented him from doing it. Mr. Ray got onto the other platform and threw back the other lever, so that it would not couple. The effect of this was that they could not couple the cars together. They were endeavoring to couple the mail car and the coaches. The mail and express and baggage were all [**118] in the one car at that time. He knows that that train had not been cut in two in that manner under the authority of the company. At the time that he endeavored to put this train together, Clodtfelder told him: "You cannot couple this train. You have made your attempt. You have done your part. Now we will do ours." The witness told him that his overpowering force -- there were 50 to 2 of them -- prevented them from coupling it. There was quite a large crowd about at that time. They were all opposing the railroad. They sympathized with the men who were stopping the train. They refused to assist the witness in starting the train, although he called on quite a number of them. They said they would not move any trains until the matter was settled. Clodtfelder and Ray said that the mail car could go. He thinks it was Clodtfelder who said that, or Demmick. Demmick was one of the leaders. They said the mail car could go by itself; no other cars of any kind, -- Pullmans or day coaches, -- none but the mail car. [*741] Knows a man named Joe Hill. He was a fireman. He was on strike at that time. He went to couple this train together on the morning of the 29th. Hill also [**119] took an active part in preventing that. As they started the engine and mail car to couple onto the coaches, Hill tried to apply the air. By "applying the air" the witness means that he opened the automatic air valve of the air hose at the rear of the mail car. That would set the brakes if there had been air enough on the car, but there was not enough pumped, and they went ahead.

As previously stated, Hill denies that he interfered with this train in any way.

It is to be noticed that this testimony of William H. Jones is corroborative of that of J. C. Day, the preceding witness.

South Vallejo.

The following testimony related to the possession by the strikers of the yard, tracks, and trains at South Vallejo:

Michael Keefe, yard engineer for the Southern Pacific Company at South Vallejo, called for the United States, testified as follows:

"The engines and yards of the Southern Pacific Company on the 10th and 11th of July were not in a condition for service. All the engines were killed; there was no steam in them."

The same witness further testifies:

"The number of my engine was No. 1. It was a switch engine. Some men took the engine away from me. One of them was [**120] Thomas Kelly; another was named Laurie; another was named Smith; another Hale. These men ran the engine off an open switch. They ran it off the track. This was on Tuesday, July 10th; about that time. They then hauled the fire, let the water out of the boiler, shut the engine down, let the water out of the tank, and disconnected the hose."

It would be hard for him to state the particular parts each man played. He did not exactly locate them at the time, or what they were doing, because he was talking with them. He tried to get on his engine. He got on the side. They would not let him get on. He thinks it was Smith who would not let him get on. He prevented him getting on. Kelly was a fireman for the company up to the time of the strike. He was out on strike. Laurie also went out on strike. He was a fireman. Smith was a stranger to him. He was the man that came there. Smith and Hale were the ones that came to Vallejo and made that trouble. Does not know where Smith came from. Thinks Hale told him he came from Folsom. Thinks Hale said he was a baggage man, a train man. He did not say why he came to Vallejo. The same witness further testifies that on the following [**121] day, he thinks it was, engine 1,190 was killed at South Vallejo. She came from Calistoga that morning. She pulled a mail train. Does not think that there were any Pullman cars on that train. He saw the engine killed. He was on the engine. He ran the engine. Smith came there, with a good many others, and took the engine away from him, and killed it. They took it right [*742] on the main track. They put the fire out, also disconnected the hose, and let the water out; also out of the boiler.

San Jose.

The following testimony relates to the possession taken by the strikers of the depot, yard, tracks, and trains at San Jose:

James Hewitt, called for the United States, testified: That he was the engineer of the San Jose train No. 19, running between San Francisco and San Jose. That he left San Francisco at 5:10. Was due at San Jose at 7 o'clock in the evening. That it was a mail train, having a combination mail and express and baggage car. That it carried no Pullmans. That he arrived on time. Going into the yard, people rushed from the depot onto the track, and he had to stop. This happened about 400 or 500 feet this side of the depot. The people rushed up the [**122] track, and he had to stop or else run over them. Knows a man named McClintock, and also a man named Runyon. When he stopped, Mr. McClintock came up on the front part of the engine, and came through the window on the left-hand side. The window was open. He came in and stepped over to him, and says: "I will take charge of this engine, Jim." Then Hewitt said to him: "Harry, you have got the main track blocked. This is as far as I am going. Let me put this train on the side track and put the engine in the roundhouse." Mr. Runyon stepped up and said: "No, sir. We will kill her right here." During this time there was a deputy United States marshal on the engine with the witness, -- one on each side in the gangway. They tried to keep the crowd off. They overpowered the one on the left-hand side. McClintock asked him what business he was doing there, or what he was doing there. He said he was a deputy United States marshal, and showed him his badge. At that time they were trying to get hold of the fireman. McClintock, after he asked him to show his authority, which he did, says: "We can't help that. Boys, take him away." They took the fireman off of the engine. That left the [**123] witness and McClintock and Runyon on the engine, and a lot of boys came up over the baggage car and came up on the tender. After that the witness had some conversation with McClintock with regard to putting the engine away and putting the train on a side track. He told him they had the main track blocked. It was not necessary to hold him there. Wells-Fargo's agent stepped up on the right-hand side, spoke to McClintock, and asked him to pull the train down to the crossing, where they could get out their express, mail, and baggage. He says: "All right. Boys, cut off the baggage car." Which they did, and pulled down to the crossing or over the crossing, right in the front part of the depot, and stopped the engine there. One of the gang says: "No one shall move this engine but McClintock." The witness sat down on the fireman's side, and took hold of the bell cord. They got down to the depot. McClintock told him he had better get off and go home; that he would not be responsible for his life. The witness said: "You never mind about my life. I guess I can take care of myself." They got the engine as far as they could get her.

[*743] W. S. Runyon, the person referred to [**124] by witness Hewitt in the testimony just quoted, was called on behalf of the defendants, and testified, in brief, that he was a locomotive fireman in the employment of the Southern Pacific Company in June last; that he belonged to the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, and also to the American Railway Union; that he was a member of the executive committee of the American Railway Union in San Francisco; that during the strike he went to San Jose, on the evening of July 5th; that he went there of his own accord, to suppress any acts of violence or any deeds of violence that might possibly be committed there, as he understood there were some very troublesome people in that locality. His statements as to what took place at San Jose, and his connection therewith, in his own words, are as follows:

"I left San Francisco shortly after five o'clock of the evening of July 5th, and got onto the train here in San Francisco, and rode until we got to San Jose. As we were going in the yard at San Jose, the train slowed up slightly, and when about midway between the roundhouse at San Jose and the depot she came to a standstill. The people in the coaches commenced to get out. I, in company with [**125] a Mr. McQuade, of the Southern Pacific, got out. There was a large delegation of people on the tracks and around the depot. Q. What was done? State what you saw there, -- what occurred. A. As I said, the train stopped. I got out, in company with Mr. McQuade, and stood on the outskirts of the crowd. They were doing a lot of scuffling around one place and another, and talking, and so on, and finally a remark was made that they would do Hewitt up, -- the man who had charge of the train. I edged my way through the crowd. In the near vicinity I saw a number of men who had those white ribbons on their coat lapels. I said to them: 'I am what you ordinarily term a "striker," and a member of the A.R.U. As you are sympathizers with us, I should like to get your assistance to suppress any violence that might be perpetrated on Mr. Hewitt.' I got up to the engine, and, as I did, those gentlemen followed me. I says to Mr. Hewitt: 'You need not have any fear of doing you up, Jim. If I can possibly lend you any assistance, I shall certainly do so.' He was in a very excited condition; about as pale as my shirt bosom is at the present time. After a while the engine and the train was run [**126] down to a crossing or street just north of the depot. They stopped, and cut off all the coaches, with the exception of a combination car that they have for baggage and Wells-Fargo's matter. After they severed the connection between the baggage and smoker, the engine and baggage car went on the south side of the depot, to leave this here crossing clear. Mr. Hewitt changed his overalls. When he left his engine I stepped down behind him. As I did so, the other gentlemen who had the white ribbons on, and who I asked to accompany me, came along, and we walked alongside of Mr. Hewitt until he got through the crowd, and then he left. While he was walking through the crowd they jeered at him some, but there was no acts of violence. After Mr. Hewitt got away there was quite a number of men on the tender of the engine, -- men and boys, -- upon what is termed the 'running board.' I got them to disperse and leave the engine alone."

The witness admits seeing Mr. McClintock there at that time. The testimony of Mr. Hewitt as to what took place at the engine being read to him, he stated that some of the statements were correct and others not. He states that Mr. Hewitt suggested putting [**127] the train on the side track. He testifies that the statement said to have been made by him, viz.: "No, sir. We will kill her right here," -- is false. He states that there were several thousand people at that time there. In answer to the question: "Q. Hewitt states here that you and McClintock were trying to get hold of the fireman," -- he replied: "He is a liar. I did not. I had nothing to do with the fireman, and [*744] did not see any one pull him off the engine at all. The fireman was off of the engine five or six minutes before I got on the engine."

Another of the means alleged in the indictment to promote, carry out, effect, and execute the conspiracy is (2) "by causing to be assembled, and by assembling with, large crowds of persons in said depots and yards of said Southern Pacific Company, at various points and places on said lines of railway, in said state and Northern district of California, and by gathering in great numbers in said yards and depots, to wit, * * * and other places around, in, and upon the trains, cars, engines of the Southern Pacific Company, and upon the tracks of the railways, preventing the movement and passage of said engines, cars, and [**128] trains."

Sacramento.

The following testimony relates to the assembling of crowds at Sacramento:

Felix Tracy, the agent of Wells, Fargo & Co., testified on direct examination: That there were no trains moving after the 29th of June. He saw a good many men down there at the station that were not at work, -- railroad men. He saw them there, and he saw them in other parts of the city. There were more people at the depot from the 28th or 29th of June, up to the time of the United States soldiers going there, -- some time about the 10th or 11th of July, -- than usual, a good many more than usual. There were more there on the 3d of July, more there on the 4th of July, than it was customary to see there. He noticed that whenever he went down there. It will be remembered that Mr. Baldwin's testimony that there were crowds around the station is to the same effect. On the other hand, Mr. Knox denies emphatically that the depot was in the "possession of the strikers."

Mr. Baldwin, United States marshal, testified on direct examination that the station and the tracks were overrun with people, -- people in the caboose and cars, and around them, sitting on the steps.

Mr. Knox admits [**129] this, but denies that he or his committee of the American Railway Union had anything to do with their coming there.

James Sims, called for the defendants, testified that the American Railway Union committee used one of the cars as an office on the 29th of June.

Mr. Baldwin further testifies, as to the crowd around delayed train No. 4, on July 3, 1894, that they were on the track and across the track, and they would not move out of the way of the engine. He had to get down from the engine and get in front of the engine and push them back and move them back, and the engine came foot by foot. They were threatening, and one man threw a rock at them. The same witness further testifies that he was at the depot subsequent to July 3d, and that the strikers continued to occupy the depot grounds. Being asked how he knew they were strikers, the witness stated that there was a crowd there. He was around among these men, and they were constantly informing him that they were strikers, -- that they were employees of the railroad [*745] company out on a strike. He was constantly talking with them, and walking among them, and they would address him and talk about the disturbances. That [**130] is the way he ascertained that they were strikers. The crowds never left. There was always more or less of a crowd of men there, night and day. With reference to the character of the crowd that was there late in the afternoon of the 6th of July, he states that they were strikers. Some of them said they were there to protect the property of the railroad company, and take care of it; and they were around on the cars, and it was the same crowd in character, except that they were men. The cars of the railroad company were being occupied by men, by strikers. Some of them were occupied apparently for sleeping quarters. They occupied cabooses on the tracks in the yard.

Thomas Compton, one of the mediation committee at Sacramento, called for the defense, testified that they "had our men stationed from one end of the yards to another, to see that the men did not get excited and do any damage to the property, and requested other men who came in on trains not to go out any more."

C. E. Leonard, a city trustee of Sacramento last June, and in the employ of the railroad company before the strike, testifies that there was a very large assemblage of people at the depot of the railroad company [**131] on the 3d of July.

San Jose.

The following testimony relates to the assembling of crowds at San Jose:

Frank Arnold, a railway postal clerk on the route from San Francisco to San Luis Obispo, testifying as to the crowd at San Jose, says on direct examination that there were several thousand people around the train that came in on July 5th. They were all around the train, -- inside of it, on the platform, swarming all over it. On cross-examination he says that they were occupying all the spaces in the depot, on the railroad car platforms, and so on.

Another of the means alleged in the indictment to promote, carry out, effect, and execute the conspiracy is (3) "by threats, intimidations, personal assaults, and other force and violence, to prevent the engineers, firemen, conductors, brakemen, switchmen, and other employes of said Southern Pacific Company from discharging their duties, and from moving and operating the said engines, cars, trains, and railways."

Sacramento.

The following testimony relates to threats, intimidations, and acts of violence at Sacramento:

Mr. Baldwin, speaking of the strikers at the Sacramento depot on July 3d, testified on direct examination [**132] that they were threatening, and there was one man that threw a rock at them. It struck the cab of the engine, just below where Mr. Clark was standing -- between Mr. Clark and himself. He further testifies that there were crowds around the semaphore. The crowd was demonstrative at this time. There were men threatening them as they took the engine through, -- hooting. He recollects one man saying, "I will fix you." He seemed [*746] to be particularly addressing himself to the witness that time, -- the people on the engine. Heard expressions of anger and defiance. They were angry.

Respecting this testimony of Mr. Baldwin, Greenlaw testifies that there was a good deal of yelling there. Some were "hollering." But he did not hear any threats made. He did not see any forcible means used to prevent the taking out of the train. No threats whatever were made towards Mr. Baldwin. He denies that he incited any people to do anything that day, or that he threatened Mr. Baldwin, or any one. He admits that he called some persons on the engine "scabs," but denies the statements imputed by Mr. Baldwin, in his testimony, to him.

While it is to be observed that Mr. Baldwin was not [**133] an employe of the railroad company, yet the testimony, if true, is significant with respect to the actions of the crowd towards Clark, the engineer, and the others on the engine.

Anthony Green, called for the defense, testified that he was captain of police of the city of Sacramento, and was such in June and July last; that he was present on the 3d of July at the depot; that he himself saw no acts of violence committed, but he admits, on cross-examination, that he did not see the cars actually shoved back by the crowd. He testified that he heard the crowd yelling at those who were in the cab of the engine that was being moved from the roundhouse to the delayed train No. 4; that such exclamations were used as follow: "Don't you go out;" "Don't you take that train out;" "Stand by one another;" "Don't be a scab;" "Don't take the places of those men who are working;" "Come out of there;" "Don't you take that engine out;" "Don't fire that engine;" "I appeal to you as a man;" "Come down out of there;" "Don't go out," -- and such questions as those, appealing to them; that he was in the cab himself several days, mornings and nights; that he stood in the first one.

Red Bluff.

The following [**134] testimony relates to what occurred at Red Bluff:

Joseph C. Day, roundhouse foreman for the Southern Pacific Company at Red Bluff, testified that he was not at liberty to go on the engine. He was told to keep away from the engine and let it alone. A brakeman by the name of Harper and two or three other men told him that. He does not know them. He thinks Harper was on strike. He was out with them. This occurred, according to the witness' testimony, on July 1, 1894. The same witness further states, after describing how engine 1,248 was killed by Van Devinter, Richard Roe, and Harper, that he had a conversation with Van Devinter about the matter. He told him he was doing very wrong, and Van Devinter said he did not think it was any of his damned business what he was doing. They told him if he did not get out of the roundhouse they would have him carried out on a board. Harper made that remark. Richard Roe and Van Devinter, and one or two others he did not know, were present. This was at the time they were killing engines.

[*747] South Vallejo.

The following testimony relates to what occurred at South Vallejo:

Jeff Gage, passenger conductor for the Southern Pacific [**135] Company, running out between South Vallejo and Santa Rosa, whose engine was killed, testified as follows: That on the 12th day of July last he was stopped between North and South Vallejo, and his engine killed. This was near 7:30 or 7:35 in the morning. It could not have been far from that. He was running the train, -- conductor. He left North Vallejo, and between North and South Vallejo he found an engine on the main line. The engine was called a "killed" engine, -- no steam in it. As they pulled up near that engine, a crowd of men came out and fixed theirs the same way. They were obliged to stop by this "dead" engine. He thinks he must have been very near on time. He makes connection, with passenger and mail cars, with a boat that runs between North and South Vallejo and Vallejo Junction. At Vallejo Junction connection is made with the San Ramon passenger train. It is a mail train that runs between San Ramon and the Oakland pier. He asked a man named Smith to let him couple on and push the dead engine on the siding, so that he could get the train down to the depot. This man refused to do it, saying he was there under orders, and had to obey his orders to stop the train [**136] where it was. Smith showed him a card with his (Smith's) name on it, -- an A.R.U. card.

William James, fireman of one of the Alameda local trains, testified, in answer to the question, "Did you have any trouble at tower No. 2 that day?" as follows: "The train was stopped by a mob of men, and I was taken off the engine." He further states that about 75 or 100 men got in front of the engine. The engineer stopped when they gave him the stop signals. The crowd, all of them, gave signals, -- all those that were on the track. He could not see who they were. They took him through the crowd, and wanted him to go and join the A.R.U. They took him half way to the roundhouse, he would judge about 400 feet. Engineer Willard came out and told them it was a free country, and he would go where he wanted to, and with that they let go of him.

Many witnesses on both sides have testified as to the personal assault claimed to have been made on Mr. James. The testimony is contradictory as to what actually took place at that time. I think, however, this feature of the case is sufficiently fixed in your minds to enable you to determine the actual facts of the case without any extended comments [**137] from me.

(With the usual admonition to the jury, an adjournment was here taken until tomorrow, Tuesday, April 2, 1895, at 10 o'clock a.m.)

Tuesday, April 2, 1895, at 10 o'clock a.m.

When the court adjourned last evening, I was directing your attention to testimony tending to show the means conspired to be used in carrying out the conspiracy. First, I called your attention to the testimony tending to show, or to disprove, that the conspirators [*748] forcibly took and kept possession and control of all yards, depots, tracks, and trains of cars on said lines of railway, and forcibly held and detained the same; second, that they caused to be assembled, and assembled with, large crowds of persons in said depots and yards of said Southern Pacific Company at various points and places on said lines of railway in said state and Northern district of California, and by gathering in great numbers in said yards, and depots, to wit, * * * and other places, around, in, and upon the trains, cars, engines of the Southern Pacific Company, and upon the tracks of said railways, preventing the movement and passage of said engines, cars, and trains; third, that by threats, intimidations, personal [**138] assaults, and other force and violence, they prevented the engineers, firemen, conductors, brakemen, switchmen, and other employes of said Southern Pacific Company from discharging their duties, and from moving and operating the said engines, cars, trains, and railways. I will now proceed to direct your attention to the testimony tending to show other means conspired to be used in carrying out the conspiracy.

Another of the means alleged in the indictment to promote, carry out, effect, and execute the conspiracy is (4) "by forcibly disconnecting air brakes upon such trains, -- mail, passenger, and freight."

Red Bluff.

The following relates to what occurred at Red Bluff:

William H. Jones, agent and train master of the Southern Pacific Company at Red Bluff, testified on direct examination that the Oregon express reached Red Bluff about 4:30 or 4:35 in the morning of July 1st last; that it comes from San Francisco, -- Oakland. Portland, Or., is its destination. She was on her regular trip. She was stopped at Red Bluff. The train was cut in two. The train came into the station, and they cut it in two; that is, they uncoupled it and uncoupled the hose. He was just passing [**139] there. He did not see the man who did it. There was a mob of men there. He elbowed his way through the crowd. As he passed, he heard the air holes pump as they do when they are open. The air was cut behind the mail car. The local cars followed first, then the baggage car, the express car, smoker, coaches, and Pullman. That is the way the train is made up. They all follow the mail car. They were all in the rear of the part cut off. The effect of that cut was to stop the movement of the train. That was about 5:30, a few minutes after they arrived.

Without repeating the testimony given by the defense, it is sufficient to say that the witnesses on their behalf, with reference to the Red Bluff occurrences, deny having had anything to do with the stoppage of the Portland express.

South Vallejo.

The following testimony relates to what occurred at South Vallejo:

Michael Keefe, yard engineer of the Southern Pacific Company at South Vallejo, testifying as to what occurred to his engine on [*749] July 10th, says that they hauled the fire, let the water out of the boiler, shut the engine down, let the water out of the tank, and disconnected the hose. They ran the engine [**140] off the open switch. The testimony of this witness respecting what occurred to engine 1,190 on the following day has already been referred to under a previous head.

Another of the means alleged in the indictment to promote, carry out, effect, and execute the conspiracy is (5) "by putting out the fires in the engines, and drawing the same."

South Vallejo.

The following testimony relates to what occurred at South Vallejo:

Jeff Gage, passenger conductor for the Southern Pacific Company, running between South Vallejo and Santa Rosa, whose engine was killed between North and South Vallejo on July 12th, called for the United States, testified, with reference to putting out the fires on his engine, as follows: That on the 12th day of July last he was stopped between North and South Vallejo, and his engine killed. They pulled the fire out of the engine. They shut the water off first in the tank valve, and started to pull the fire out. He asked them to turn the water back first, and then pull the fire on the engine, which they did. He asked them to do that to keep from burning the engine. The effect of letting the water out of the engine with the fire in it, he thinks, would be [**141] apt to burn the bricks considerable.

West Oakland.

The following testimony relates to what occurred at West Oakland:

C. F. Hall, general foreman of the railroad shops at West Oakland testified that a number of engines were killed in and about the shops in the latter part of June and early part of July last. He could not give the numbers. There were 8 or 10 engines with fire in them, and the fire was let out of them, and all the engines were emptied that were full; that is, all the engines that were about the place were emptied of water, -- water let out of them. This was done by the strikers.

Another of the means alleged in the indictment to promote, carry out, effect, and execute the conspiracy is (6) "by throwing switches, in order to prevent the passage of such trains through depots and stations."

Red Bluff.

The following testimony relates to occurrences at Red Bluff with reference to delayed train No. 15 on July 3d last:

William Jones testified as to the throwing and spiking of switches as follows: That, after the Portland express which arrived at Red Bluff on July 1st stood there a while, the engineer said he wanted coal, and Mr. Day, the foreman at the roundhouse, [**142] and the witness, took the engine and the mail car, as it was coupled on, -- two mail cars, - - there was a freight car which they said contained mail. [*750] It was with the mail car. It had United States mail locks on it. He did not see the inside of it. Mr. Monteith: "We will admit that car had mail." The witness, continuing, stated that they took it to the coal pile to give the engine coal. They passed over one of the switches in the yard, and while they were gone the switch was thrown and spiked to the side track, so that when the train backed down it could not back to the balance of the train. It was forced to go to the siding. The switch was opened. It was thrown off the main track to the siding, and spikes driven to hold it there, and the switch blocked. They could not have passed over it if it had been spiked. It was a switch in which the car could not go off the track. They could not have gone over it. It was not the case. The target was in its proper place and position. No orders were given by the railroad company for either the spiking of the switch or locking the switch. Such orders would come through him.

Charles F. Cadwalader, called for the United [**143] States, testifies that he saw Hehorn, Shade, Ray, and others spiking a switch on July 1, 1894.

W. H. Winter, also a witness for the government, testified that he saw the switch spiked, but the only person whom he can identify as having participated in the spiking is Hehorn.

Milton D. Clark, called for the United States, testified that he saw the spiking of the switch. He identifies Hehorn as the person who held spikes in his hand; Shade is the man who drove in the spikes; and that Ray was in the crowd with them.

John Kelly, a witness called for the United States, also testifies as to the spiking of the switch. He states that he was a member of the American Railway Union; that he was a fireman for the Southern Pacific Company; that he went out on strike at Red Bluff; that he did so because he was a member of the American Railway Union. He identifies John Shade as just in the act, when he saw him, of leaving with a spike-hammer and a couple of spikes in his hands. This switch, he states, connected with the main line. There were 30 or 40 men around there at that time. He gives the names of others, besides Shade, who were in the neighborhood of this switch, as Peter Ives, S. [**144] P. Roller, Jack Shepler, and Clodtfelder. He states that Roller locked the switch after it was spiked. As to the relation these persons bore to the strike, the witness testified that Roller was a brakeman, and that he was on strike at that time. He was an A.R.U. man. Ives was a car foreman up there. He was also on strike and an A.R.U. member. Clodtfelder and Shepler were on strike at that time. They are members of the A.R.U. Knows a man named Demmick. Knows a man named Harper. He (Harper) was there that morning. He is a brakeman, and a member of the A.R.U., and out on strike. Knows a man named Heaney. He did not see him there.

The persons referred to by the witnesses for the prosecution as having participated in the spiking of the switch, which prevented the engine and mail car of the Portland express from getting back to the passenger and Pullman coaches, or, more strictly speaking, those [*751] who have testified, deny that they have been guilty of the acts charged, or did anything in any way which contributed to the spiking of the switch.

South Vallejo.

The following testimony relates to what occurred at South Vallejo:

Michael Keefe, yard engineer of the [**145] Southern Pacific Company at South Vallejo, called for the government, testified that on July 12th last he was making up a passenger train for Calistoga and the vicinity; that it was a mail train, and that it did not carry any Pullmans. He took the engine and made up the train with it, to get ready to go out again. He was going to the roundhouse with the engine. He saw a gang of men. He thought that he would get to the shops before they took the engine away from him. The switch was set for the side track. He would have got to the shop, he thinks, but this man closed the switch on him, so he stopped. Had he gone on he would have run off the track. It was an open switch. The crowd remained there. The engine was killed after that, and was there a day or two.

Another of the means alleged in the indictment to promote, carry out, effect, and execute the conspiracy is (7) "by opening drawbridges over navigable and other streams, upon which drawbridges the tracks of said railways were situated."

Sacramento.

The following testimony relates to what occurred at Sacramento:

T. W. Heintzelman, a master mechanic in the employ of the Southern Pacific Company at Sacramento, called [**146] for the United States, testified that he experienced some difficulty, on June 29th, in attempting to get train No. 4, which is a mail train, and came from Ogden, out of Sacramento, -- in attempting to get her through. He testifies that he was requested by his superintendent, Mr. Wright, to back up the engine and mail car and express car, -- he thinks it was coupled to the engine, -- to couple on to the balance of the train that was left in the upper yard, and pull it down the depot. He did so. While pulling the train down in the depot, something was thrown at him while he was on the engine. After he saw what it was, -- it proved to be a monkey wrench, -- he got the train down to about its usual stopping place, and stopped there. After considerable persuasion he got the engineer and a fireman on the engine, and got the train started. The train had not moved a great ways -- about 50 yards -- when the drawbridge was swung open, and the train had to stop. This is the drawbridge across the Sacramento river. There was no vessel in sight to occasion the opening of the bridge. It was opened only for the purpose of stopping the train at that time. There was quite a crowd running down [**147] by the drawbridge just prior to the time it was opened.

Mr. Knox gives the following version of what transpired respecting the opening of the drawbridge: He says that on the morning of the 29th No. 4 came in. He guesses she got in about 6 o'clock, -- somewhere around there. She came in with an engine, mail, baggage, [*752] and express car. He went to Mr. Saulpaugh, -- he was the engineer that was going out on that train, -- and asked him if he was going to do any switching there. He said no, he was not; they would have to get some one else to do their switching. Mr. Wright came down there when they were talking, and asked him if he would back up to Sixth or Seventh street, he believes he said, and get the balance of the train. Mr. Saulpaugh suggested that it would be a pretty good idea to get Mr. Clark or Mr. Heintzelman to do that. They sent for Mr. Clark. The witness here stated that before this strike was ordered it was an understood thing with Mr. Wright and the committee that they should do all in their power to prevent any damage being done. On his (Wright's) side he was to give them permission to talk to the crews, engineers, conductors, firemen, and brakemen, [**148] and see if they could induce them to stay with them. When Mr. Clark came over they had the right to talk to him to see if they could induce him not to back up to get the cars. After they talked with him a while he turned around and said he did not want any of this in it. They simply asked him if he wanted to scab on his own son. His son was working there. He said he did not want to have anything to do with this, and turned around and went away. Heintzelman came, after some time, got up on the engine, and the first thing Knox saw was a monkey wrench coming out of the engine, which pretty nearly hit him. They backed up. While they were up there, he, with the balance of the committee, went through the shops, to notify the men that the strike had been decided on. While they were going through the shops a man was sent over after them to tell them that the drawbridge was open, and to ask them to come and see if they could not get it closed. He ran over there, and sent some men out in a boat to close the bridge, -- Mr. Hatch and Mr. Jefford, and two or three more. They closed the bridge, and he went back and told Mr. Saulpaugh that the bridge was closed. After the bridge was closed, [**149] he told Mr. Hatch to go up to Mr. Wright's office and get a lock, -- a Yale lock, -- and put it on there, so that the bridge could not be opened. Mr. Hatch went and got the lock and locked it on the bridge, so that they couldn't open it.

Both Hatch and Jefford corroborated Knox with respect to the latter's statement that he sent them to close the bridge, and Hatch, further, as to the lock being procured at Knox's instance, and being placed by Hatch on the bridge.

Another of the means alleged in the indictment to promote, carry out, effect, and execute the conspiracy is (8) "by burning and destroying bridges, trestles, culverts, over which such trains necessarily and usually would pass."

Trestle No. 2, Near Sacramento.

The following testimony relates to the wreck of train No. 4 at trestle No. 2, near Sacramento:

Mr. Baldwin, who saw the wreck of the delayed train No. 4 at trestle No. 2 about two hours after it occurred, testified on direct examination that the baggage and mail cars were off the track. When he says "baggage," it might have been express cars with the baggage. [*753] One mail car was badly damaged; also a baggage car badly damaged; also two mail cars slightly [**150] damaged. These cars were on the side, smashed over. Some of them had reached the water. He made an examination of the trestle. The engine apparently had gone probably three or four car lengths before it went off the trestle. The trestle is about 300 or 400 feet in length. He found that the east end of it, especially the north side, was badly smashed in, as though the bridge had been weakened and smashed down; the bents slivered up, the ties all broken very much more on that end of the bridge than further along, right at once where the engine struck the bridge. The trestle was very badly crushed in on the east side, towards Sacramento, immediately where it joins the track, the embankment, two or three car lengths from where the engine lay in the water. Then the train lay all along the trestle on to the embankment. The trestle, where it joined the embankment, was very badly slivered; there was only a piece of about six or eight inches where the ties were solid enough to walk on. The trestle was all crushed in below the ties at that corner.

The testimony of Mr. Baldwin tends to show that the trestle was blown up, and that delayed train No. 4 was wrecked. I will not take up [**151] your time in reading to you all the testimony introduced by the prosecution tending to show that the trestle was blown up by members of the American Railway Union, and was a part of the conspiracy to obstruct and retard the mails, and restrain interstate commerce, nor such testimony as has been put in by the defense contradictory of such design, or as to the participants engaged in such affair, or as to being or playing any part in the policy or plan of the members of the American Railway Union in carrying on the strike between themselves and the Pullman cars. The details of this unfortunate catastrophe, as told by the witnesses on the stand, are doubtless fresh in your minds. The testimony tends to show that a train was made up in Sacramento on July 11th last for Oakland, to be sent by the way of Davisville. It left Sacramento a few minutes past 12 o'clock, under charge of Conductor Reynolds, with Samuel Clark as the engineer and Danicamp for fireman. On the train was Postal Clerk J. A. Brown, in charge of the United States mail. Lieut. Skerrey and a number of United States soldiers were on the train for its protection, some of the troops being on the engine. The train consisted [**152] of four mail cars, baggage, passenger coaches, and a Pullman. About two miles west of Sacramento, in crossing trestle No. 2, the engine and four of the cars were thrown from the track into the slough. Clark, the engineer, and four soldiers were killed. The jurisdiction to try and punish the parties who were guilty of murder in this dastardly affair belongs to the state. It is only for you to ascertain who were the parties to the conspiracy that brought about this terrible result, that you may determine who were responsible for the minor offenses involved in the stoppage of the United States mails and interstate commerce. You will recall the testimony of the boy Sherburn, who drove the wagon carrying Worden and others out to a point near trestle No. 2 just prior to the time [*754] the wreck occurred, and the testimony of Knoblauch, Reed, and Winney as to the declarations and conduct of the parties who, the testimony tends to show, were sent out by the American Railway Union along the line of the road, and for a purpose. What was that purpose? To guard the road, or to wreck that train? It is for you to determine.

Another of the means alleged in the indictment to promote, [**153] carry out, effect, and execute the conspiracy is (9) "by loosening, removing, and displacing the rails of the tracks of said railroad."

Trestle No. 2, Near Sacramento.

The following testimony relates to the track at trestle No. 2, near Sacramento:

Mr. Baldwin, who testified that he saw the wreck of delayed train No. 4 shortly after the catastrophe, testified that he made a little diagram of the position of the rails. The north rail was swung over across the south rail. It apparently had been forced over, lifted over. He found there, right at the joint a nut, three washers, and two spikes. They were loose.

Red Bluff.

The following was testified to as having occurred at Red Bluff:

Joseph C. Day, roundhouse foreman for the Southern Pacific Company at Red Bluff, testified that the spikes and the bolts were pulled out of a rail on the main line. This was between 1 and 2 in the morning of July 1st last. He went to the coal bin, just a little ways from the turntable, to see if the coal bin was all right, and there were four men right across the other side of the fence, working at the rail. They had shovels there. He went to the turntable, and stood there talking to the [**154] fireman, when the four men came down with those tools in their hands. They came right from the direction where the rail was tampered with. He could hear them working with shovels, scratching away dirt and covering it up. He was not there more than a couple of minutes. He went back to the roundhouse. He saw John Shade, John Salstrum, Robert Lang, and George Werhing coming from this direction. Mr. Shade had a claw bar in his hand. Salstrum and Lang had a shovel apiece. He did not see anything in Werhing's hands. A claw bar is a long bar made in the shape of a claw, for drawing spikes. He examined that rail an hour afterwards, and found the spikes pulled from a rail and a half, the bolts taken from the fishplates and left lying on the ground. He put the bolts back himself.

J. F. Heaney, called for the defense, who was at Red Bluff on the occasion detailed by the preceding witness, with reference to the displacing of the rail states that he may know John Shade, Salstrum, Lang, and Werhing, but he does not know them by name; that he is pretty sure that they did not belong to the A.R.U. at that time; that they had no connection with him there.

Another of the means alleged [**155] in the indictment to promote, carry out, effect, and execute the conspiracy is (10) "by greasing the rails."

[*755] Red Bluff.

The following testimony was given as to what transpired at Red Bluff with reference to greasing of rails:

John Kelly, a fireman employed by the Southern Pacific Company prior to the strike, but who went out with the A.R.U., testifies on direct examination, as to the part he took, with other members of the A.R.U., in greasing the rails north of Red Bluff, that on July 1st, at about 3 o'clock in the morning, he was about four miles north of Red Bluff; that he was greasing the track; that there were with him Bill Ray, Joe Hill, Clodtfelder, and Archie Montanya; that Montanya is a member of the A.R.U.; that he was on strike; that they went about four miles further than Red Bluff, and greased the track, coming towards Red Bluff, for about three miles. This was done with engine oil. Both rails were greased. They just rubbed it on. There is a down-hill grade from Red Bluff, going north, for about a mile, and then for about three miles it is up hill. It is a pretty steep grade. They got the oil with which they greased the rails from the roundhouse, [**156] -- from the oil tanks. They had oil cans from the engines, and buckets with which to carry it. They got through greasing about 4 o'clock. There was not any oil left in one of the tanks.

The witnesses J. C. Shepler, William Sheehan, and J. B. Hill all deny that they participated in, or know anything about, the greasing of the rails as testified to by the witness Kelly.

Another of the means alleged in the indictment to promote, carry out, effect, and execute the conspiracy is (11) "by stopping trains upon railway crossings, and upon switches, and by forcibly refusing to allow such trains to be hauled from such crossings and switches."

Sacramento.

The following testimony was given as to what took place at Sacramento with reference to obstructing one of the railway crossings:

C. A. Newton, night yardmaster for the Southern Pacific Company, called for the United States, testified on direct examination that the three main tracks leading into the Sacramento depot were blocked with trains and engines from the 1st to the 11th of July, -- blocked east, west, and south. One of the tracks leads in off the Western Division, called "South"; one leads off the Sacramento Division, called [**157] "East"; one leads in from the California Pacific, "West," -- that is called the "California Pacific Division." These tracks lead both in and out. The roundhouse is situated north of the depot. There are several tracks leading from the roundhouse to the main track. There is one track direct to the roundhouse from the main track, that one can go to the roundhouse straight from, without doing any switching. There is another track that one can switch in off the main track, and there are several switches to throw to get to the roundhouse. All of these tracks were blocked between the 1st and 11th of July. By "blocked" he means trains and engines were on the tracks. The engines were dead; they had no steam in them. Some of the trains were made up, and some of them, that were coming into the yard, [*756] that were stopped on the main track. On Sunday, the 1st of July, the yard was in such a condition that trains could not pass through the Sacramento depot east or west. He knows the exact condition of the tracks on the 1st of July last. The main track from the west had, on the crossing leading to the roundhouse, No. 4 engine, just about to enter the crossing to go to the roundhouse. [**158] Then there was an engine that came in on No. 69, on the 29th of June. Both pilots came together right on the crossing. That blocked the main track to the roundhouse and another track, that we used to let freight trains up and down on, called the "old main track." Crossing Washington, which is on the other side of the river, in Yolo county, the coaches, the smoker, and the mail car and the baggage car stood there in Washington. One of the coaches was shoved part of the way in on a siding, and the other coaches run down against it. That blocked that track. On the Western Division there were some three or four freight and passenger trains down on the main track, mixed up, part on a siding and part on the main track. On the Sacramento Division the cars were sandwiched in every way, -- off the track and on the track, coaches among sleepers, and fruit cars, and everything else. That made the blockade complete. As night master he has control of the movement of all trains and engines in the Sacramento yard.

The testimony of Greenlaw, Compton, Knox, and others is to the effect that they had nothing to do with this obstruction, and that the American Railway Union did not countenance, [**159] nor was in any way responsible for, it.

Another of the means alleged in the indictment to promote, carry out, effect, and execute the conspiracy is (12), "by compelling the employes of said railroad company to leave their trains, shops, and the work of said company while in the performance of their duties."

Oakland.

The following testimony relates to what occurred at Oakland:

C. F. Hall, general foreman of the railroad shops at West Oakland, called for the United States, testified on direct examination that men in his shops were prevented from doing any work. He cannot name any of the parties who prevented his men from working, but they had a machinist working in there, with a helper, and they were taken out by a crowd that came in there. He could not now recognize any of the faces of the crowd. The same witness further testified that the crowds that came in took out the men that they had to work there, -- pushed them out of the shops, -- they took hold of them with their hands and shoved them out. Cannot name or designate or identify any men who were forced out of the shops, who were forcibly prevented from working. Cannot identify the men by their employment in the shops. [**160] This was on the 4th of July. He saw four men pushed out. He saw the stationary engineer taken out. He was surrounded by a gang that were forcing him out, -- telling him to get out. They put their hands on him. Referring to the persons who thus prevented the men in the shops from working, the witness stated that one would not see the same parties there [*757] every time. In the forenoon there were probably 150 or 200 men. In the afternoon, about 4 o'clock, he should judge about 300 came in, and so it was. There were small bodies coming in frequently. These crowds were composed partly of strikers, -- he would not say largely.

Red Bluff.

The following testimony relates to what occurred at Red Bluff:

William H. Jones, agent and train master of the Southern Pacific Company at Red Bluff, called for the United States, testified that on the 4th of July he did not remain in the continued occupancy of the telegraph office at Red Bluff. The telegraph office is his office. It is under his charge. It is the railroad office, the railroad wires doing the business of the railroad company. Mr. Clodtfelder and Mr. Demmick took possession of the office, and ordered him and his [**161] operator out. This was at 9:30 of the morning of the 4th of July. He asked them what for. He was told, "We have decided to close this office, and we want you to get out," and they locked it up. He immediately had the operator cut out the instruments, and locked the office and left. Both Demmick and Clodtfelder are operators, and have run both stations. They were on the strike at the time. Before the strike they were brakemen. He regained possession of the telegraph office at 6 o'clock in the evening. They, Clodtfelder and Demmick, opened it for their own use at about 1 o'clock. He was notified that he could come back to the office. Mr. Harper, another brakeman, -- a striker, -- also a leader, notified him that they had opened the office for their own benefit, or their own use, and he could come there and see nothing was disturbed. He did so. He went down after about half an hour. Mr. Demmick and Mr. Clodtfelder, Mr. Shepler, Mr. Heaney, came in at one time. Those that remained there all the time were Clodtfelder and Demmick. They used the office. His operator was telegraphing for them. The lines were working, and they were using the keys. Clodtfelder and Heaney both [**162] told him he could have possession of the office. Then he took possession. The night operator comes on at 6 and they took possession of the office until probably half past 9 or 10 of the evening, when another gang came in and said they had decided to close the office, and out they went. The other gang were Frierson and Roller. Both were brakemen. They were on strike. He thinks there were others there with Frierson and Roller at that time. There were about 17 there after the station train had left for Sacramento, -- about, 15 or 17. He does not recollect who was there particularly, but those two men came to the office. They said: "We have decided to close your office." He asked, "For what reason?" They could not give any reason at first. They went out and consulted together, several of them, outside on the platform. They held a meeting. They came back, and he said, "Have you decided why you are going to close me up?" or "that you are going to close me up?" They said, "Yes, we are going to close you up for the same reason that you were closed this morning." That is all the reason they gave.

[*758] J. C. Shepler, called for the defense, admits that the telegraph office [**163] was taken possession of by the men who were out on strike that day, and that he may have been there while it was in the exclusive control of those men, but he denies that he, with others, put Jones out, or told him he had to get out.

Finally, the indictment charges that it was sought to promote, carry out, effect, and execute the conspiracy "by using all such other forcible means as to them should seem expedient to prevent for an indefinite period the use of the said railway for the transportation of the mails of the United States and interstate commerce."

Red Bluff.

The following testimony relates to Red Bluff:

Miller Hooks.

John Kelly, previously referred to as one who went out on the strike at Red Bluff, and who had been previously employed by the Southern Pacific Company as a fireman, called as a witness for the government, testified on direct examination that he recollects train No. 15 coming into Red Bluff about half past 4 (of July 1st last). The train was prevented from going on. The bolts were taken out of the Miller hooks. He only noticed Will Ray, Richard Roe (Joe Hill) engaged in doing this, and he was there himself. He noticed what they were doing. These [**164] men whom he has mentioned were members of the A.R.U. They were among the strikers. They took the bolts out of the Miller hooks, so that they could not pull the train, and marked them all, and put them in a sack.

Joseph B. Hill, the person referred to in the testimony of the witness Kelly, just quoted, was called for the defense, and stated that he was present when the Portland express came in; that he did not see any safety chains or brake chains taken off, nor did he see any one at work taking off bolts or nuts from that train. He states, however, that all this could have been done without his knowing it; that there was quite a crowd around the station at the time the train came in. He states that he did not see Ray there, nor Richard Roe.

Dunsmuir.

The following testimony relates to Dunsmuir:

Ejected from Telegraph Office.

James Agler, superintendent of the Shasta Division, from Red Bluff to Ashland, Or., called for the United States, testified as to his being dispossessed from the telegraph office at the station as follows: That he has a telegraph office at the station at Dunsmuir; that on the 4th of July, from 10:30 until 12:15 p.m., he was dispossessed. After detailing [**165] how a crowd of 30 or 40 strikers rushed into the office, the witness states that Conductor Seyler was the man who did the talking. He said: "We are in here, and we have got to have this office." He (witness) said: "I don't see how you can [*759] do this." Seyler replied: "We have got to have it." That it looked a little shaky. Agler told the dispatcher: "You had better go home. It seems they want the office, and I guess they are going to have it." He went out. Agler passed out, and went upstairs to the resident engineer's office, and was upstairs there 25 or 30 minutes. The witness then goes on to state who was there, and whether those persons had been in the employ of the railroad company. To the question, "Q. Were these men who came into your office at that time then in the employ of the Southern Pacific Company?" he answers, "A. No, sir; they were not. Q. Of what class was the crowd made up? A. Employes; train men, car men, machinists of all the different departments. There was a large crowd of them. A Juror: Q. Men who had been in the employ of the company? A. Yes, sir. Q. They were not at that time? A. No, sir." The witness further states that after going [**166] upstairs he saw these people get the engine No. 1,762 out of the roundhouse, which pulled the irregular train out of Dunsmuir. At 12:15 he was notified by them that they were ready to turn the office back to him. He thereupon went to the office. At 12:20 they pulled out.

Dunsmuir.

The following testimony also relates what took place at Dunsmuir:

Irregular Train from Dunsmuir to Sacramento.

The same witness (Agler) testifies as to this irregular train substantially as follows: That on the 4th of July a train went from Dunsmuir to Sacramento. Did not know who ordered it out. Saw the engine getting out. Saw the train made up. It was not a regular train. Had an engine and two cars. The instructions from the railroad officials concerning the movement of trains came to no other person than himself. He states that he received no instructions from his superiors in the Southern Pacific Company concerning the movement of this train. The train went without his authority. Witness knew a good many men that went on that train. Some 45 left Dunsmuir on it. He saw one Seyler, Littlefield, Walther, Roberts, Price, Parrish. These men had been employes of the railroad company [**167] up to the 28th of June. H. L. Walther was running the engine. Conductor Seyler seemed to be in charge of her. He noticed guns in the car. He had a conversation with Seyler just before the train pulled out. He explained to him that the coach and engine that was carrying Mrs. Stanford from Red Bluff to Dunsmuir had the right of way, and that he did not want him to leave there with a train that he had no right to. Seyler replied, "We have received a message from Sacramento and must go there, and are going." Then they pulled out.

In this connection it might be well to refer to the following telegram, Exhibit No. 687, which reads:

"July 4, 1894. To H. L. Walther, Dunsmuir, Cal.: One thousand cavalrymen and militiamen here. Come with whole outfit by train, without orders, at once. H. A. Knox."

[*760] It will be noticed that this telegram is dated on the same day that this irregular train in charge of Walther left Dunsmuir.

Walthers, who was called for the defense, admits that on the morning of July 4th a message arrived in Dunsmuir, purporting to have come from Mr. Knox at Sacramento, asking the men to come down, -- asking their assistance, -- to come to Sacramento. [**168] Walthers testified as follows:

"The message was read to all those present, members and outsiders, men and employes in general, and they all signified their intention of going. They all said they would go, and they left in a body, went down there, prepared an engine and coach, met the mail agent, and told him we were going to Sacramento. I could not state positively whether we asked him to go with us, or whether he put the question."

He states that they had a number of guns on the train, -- perhaps 35. He states that the train was running without any orders at all. There were no orders from the company to run the train. He further states that he does not think Mr. Agler could have stopped his train.

M. C. Roberts, who was the secretary of the American Railway Union at Dunsmuir, of which Walthers was president, testifies to substantially the same facts as Walthers.

You will also recall that there is testimony with reference to an irregular train from Truckee to Sacramento, which arrived at the latter place about July 4th; and another from Lathrop to Sacramento, on the night of July 10th. You will observe that, so far, I have not alluded to the testimony tending to show [**169] acts committed by the defendants at Palo Alto on the 6th of July, although the indictment brings that place within the range of such testimony as I have referred to tending to show the means to be employed in carrying out the conspiracy. I have, however, deferred reference to this testimony until we reach the consideration of the overt acts charged to have been committed by the defendants, when such testimony may then be considered in the double aspect, namely, as tending to show, not only the overt acts required to be established by the statute, but also as tending to show the means whereby the conspiracy was to be carried out.

I have now directed your attention to the testimony which it is claimed by the prosecution tends to establish the means whereby the conspiracy was to be promoted, carried out, effected, and executed; that is to say, it is claimed that such means were, in fact, used, and were part and parcel of the conspiracy; that the acts concerning which testimony has been given were unlawful acts, which entered into and became part of the crime of conspiracy to prevent the use of the Southern Pacific Railways in this district for the transportation of the United States [**170] mails and interstate commerce. I have, however, not attempted to exhaust the testimony presented for the prosecution and defense, nor are you to conclude or assume that, in your deliberations upon these matters, you are confined to the testimony referred to by me. I have merely attempted to classify the general features in such a way that you may be able to apply the law, as I shall give it to you, to the facts as you may find them. It is for you to determine beyond a reasonable doubt, not alone from the testimony I [*761] have alluded to, but from any and all parts of the evidence, whether any one or more of such acts as have been referred to was or were, in fact, committed; and, if you should so determine, whether any one or more of them was or were the means conspired to be used to promote, carry out, effect, and execute the object of the conspiracy, as charged in the indictment. For, after all, the real question is not whether these acts were, in fact, committed, but whether these acts, or some of them, was or were the means to be used to carry out the conspiracy. You will observe that it is not necessary, to establish this element of the conspiracy, that you should find [**171] that all the means charged were to be used in carrying out its purpose. If you find beyond a reasonable doubt that there was a conspiracy to commit the offense charged, it will be sufficient if you also find beyond a reasonable doubt that one of the acts charged was to be the means for carrying out and executing that conspiracy. We have now arrived at a stage of the case where we may properly refer to the law applicable to the conditions which it is claimed prevailed during the occurrences now under consideration. With the merits of the controversy between the railroad company and its employes you have nothing to do, except in so far as the facts relating thereto may furnish evidence as to the actual parties engaged in violating the laws of the United States. Moreover, it is no defense in this case to say that the railroad company obstructed and retarded the passage of the mails, or entered into a conspiracy in restraint of trade and commerce. If the railroad company violated the law, it should be punished, but we are here now charged with the sole and only duty of determining whether these defendants at the bar have been engaged in a conspiracy as charged in the indictment; and [**172] the testimony to which I have referred, bearing upon this question, suggests certain questions of law, to which I will now direct your attention.

The testimony tends to show, as you will remember, that the boycott of the Pullman cars was declared by Debs at Chicago on June 26th, to take effect at noon on that day. It did not, however, take effect at Sacramento until about midnight or early on the morning of the 27th, and its first operation in this district appears to have been to stop train No. 84 at Sacramento, due to leave there at 10:25 in the morning, for Oakland, by the way of Tracy. This train, when regularly made up, carries a Pullman car which comes from Chicago to Sacramento on train No. 2. The Pullman car is destined for Los Angeles, and is carried from Sacramento to Lathrop, where it is attached to the train for Los Angeles. The members of the American Railway Union at Sacramento refused to handle this car, by reason of the boycott declared by Debs at Chicago the day before. This train carried the mails. Knox, speaking of this train, says:

"They [meaning the railroad officials] refused to allow the engine to go without the Pullman car on. We tried to induce [**173] Mr. Wright to let her go, because it was a mail train, and we did not want to be parties to holding the mail. He refused."

He says further:

"That train stood there until leaving time, when it started to pull out, and perhaps pulled four or five car lengths out, and some one ran down out of [*762] the office and turned the plug on the hind end of the air hose, and stopped the train. She was backed up to the depot, and stood there for a couple of weeks."

A mail train is a train as usually and regularly made up, including, not merely a mail car, but such other cars as are usually drawn in the train. If the train usually carries a Pullman car, then such a train, as a mail train, would include the Pullman car as a part of its regular make-up. The obligation which the railway company is under, as a common carrier, to employ such resources as it can command in the transportation of passengers, mails, express, and freight, without unnecessary delay, is one thing. The claim that the employes of a railroad company have the right to say what cars shall constitute a train is quite another thing. It is not for the employes of the railroad company to say whether a Pullman car shall [**174] constitute part of a mail train or not.

In the case of U.S. v. Clark, in the district court of the United States for the Eastern district of Pennsylvania (23 Int. Rev. Rec. 306), Fed. Cas. No. 14,805), the defendant was one of a number of persons who assembled at the depot of the Lehigh Valley Railroad at South Easton, Pa. On the arrival of the mail train at the depot, the defendant, who had no connection with the train, said to persons having charge of it that the mail car could go on, but not the rest of the train. The defendant afterwards got on the train, and, with others, placed it on a siding, where it remained for several days. Judge Cadwallader, in charging the jury upon these facts, said:

"The defendant is charged with retarding the transportation of the mail. * * * The mail, in point of fact, was retarded, as the postmaster testifies, two or three days. The occurrence which retarded it, according to the tendency of the proofs, was that several persons were assembled at the depot at Easton for no lawful purpose, and that one or more of them declared that the mail might go, but the passenger train should not. They uncoupled the mail, and afterwards coupled it, for [**175] the purpose of carrying it, as they did, to a siding. If that was the fact, and their purpose was to retard the train which transported the mail, it matters not, in point of law, whether they were or were not willing that the mail car or baggage car or the particular vehicle carrying the mail should go."

The learned judge then quotes with approval the opinion of Judge Drummond of Chicago upon the subject, as follows:

"In relation to the transportation of the mails by means of railroads, it is true that it appears by the evidence in this case that these defendants were willing that the mail car should go, but it must be borne in mind that the mail car can only go in such a way as to enable the railroad to transport the mail where there are other cars to accompany it. It is not practicable, as a general thing, for a railroad to transport a mail car by itself, because that would be attended by serious loss; so that, while nominally they permit the mail car to go, they really, by preventing the transit of other passenger cars, interfere with the transportation of the mails."

The law as thus declared by two learned judges many years ago is the law to-day. Apply that law to this [**176] case as you find the facts to be in relation to train No. 84 at Sacramento on June 27th; and also to train No. 2 at Sacramento on June 29th; and train No. 4 at Sacramento on June 28th, 29th, and July 3d, 4th, and 11th; train No. 69, from Red Bluff to Sacramento, on June 29th, stopped at Broderick; train No. 16, from Portland to San Francisco, stopped [*763] at Dunsmuir, June 28th; train No. 15, from San Francisco to Portland, stopped at Red Bluff, July 1st; train No. 42, Santa Rosa to South Vallejo, stopped at South Vallejo, July 12th; train No. 19, from San Francisco to San Jose, July 5th; train No. 13, stopped at Palo Alto, July 6th; train No. 33, known as the "San Ramon Train," stopped at Sixteenth street station, Oakland, July 3d; and train No. 1, known as the "Santa Cruz Narrow-Gauge Train," at Alameda pier, July 4th. I do not understand that the testimony tends to show that there was any mail or express on the three local trains stopped in the vicinity of tower No. 2, West Oakland, on July 4th.

It is contended on behalf of the defense in this case that the boycott declared by the American Railway Union on June 26th, and the strike declared on June 29th, were in themselves [**177] lawful. The logical effect of this contention would be that, if any unlawful acts were committed during the pendency of the boycott and strike, they should be separated from these general and admitted acts of the American Railway Union. This feature of the case calls for the most careful consideration of the law as declared by the courts.

In Thomas v. Railway Co., 62 Fed. 803, Judge Taft, in the United States circuit court for the Southern district of Ohio, determined that the boycott of Pullman cars, as it was enforced in Ohio, was unlawful. The facts in that case were substantially the same as in this case. He said:

"The employes of the railway companies had no grievance against their employers. Handling and hauling Pullman cars did not render their services any more burdensome. They came into no actual relation with Pullman in handling the cars. He paid them no wages. He did not regulate their hours, or in any way determine their services. Simply to injure him in his business, they were incited and encouraged to compel the railway companies to withdraw custom from him by threats of quitting their service, and actually quitting their service. This inflicted an injury [**178] upon the companies that was very great, and it was unlawful, because it was without lawful excuse. All the HN11[ employes had the right to quit their employment, but they had no right to combine to quit their employment, in order thereby to compel their employer to withdraw from the mutually profitable relations with a third person, for the purpose of injuring that third person, when the relation thus sought to be broken had no effect whatever upon the character or reward of their services. It is the motive for quitting and the end sought thereby that makes the injury involved unlawful, and the combination by which it is effected an unlawful combination. The distinction between an ordinary, lawful, and peaceable strike, entered upon to obtain concessions in the terms of the strikers' employment, and a boycott, is not a fanciful one, or one which needs the power of fine distinction to determine which is which. Every laboring man recognizes the one or the other as quickly as the lawyer or the judge. The combination under discussion was a boycott. Boycotts, though unaccompanied by violations or intimidations, have been pronounced unlawful in every state of the United States where the [**179] question has arisen, unless it be Minnesota. They are held to be unlawful in England. * * * But the illegal character of this combination with Debs at its head and Phelan as an associate does not depend alone on the general law of boycotts. The gigantic character of the conspiracy of the American Railway Union staggers the imagination. The railroads have become as necessary to life and health and comfort of the people of this country as are arteries in the human body, and yet Debs and Phelan and their associates proposed, by inciting all the employes of all the railways in the country to suddenly quit their service, without any dissatisfaction with the terms of their own employment, to paralyze utterly all the traffic by which the people live, and in this way to compel Pullman, for whose acts neither the public nor the railway companies are in the slightest [*764] degree responsible, and over whose acts they can lawfully exercise no control, to pay more wages to his employes. The merits of the controversy between Pullman and his employes have no bearing whatever on the legality of the combination effected through the American Railway Union. The purpose, shortly stated, was [**180] to starve the railroad companies and the public into compelling Pullman to do something which they had no lawful right to compel him to do. Certainly the starvation of a nation cannot be a lawful purpose of a combination, and it is utterly immaterial whether the purpose is effected by means usually lawful or otherwise. More than this, the combination is in the teeth of the act of July 2, 1890, which makes it an offense to restrain interstate commerce." 62 Fed. 821.

In U.S. v. Elliott, Id. 801, Judge Thayer, in the United States circuit court for the Eastern district of Missouri, states the law in the following language:

HN12 [+] "A combination whose professed object is to arrest the operation of railroads whose lines extend from a great city into adjoining states until such roads accede to certain demands made upon them, whether such demands are in themselves reasonable or unreasonable, just or unjust, is certainly an unlawful conspiracy in restraint of commerce among the states. Under the laws of the United States, as well as at common law, men may not conspire to accomplish a lawful purpose by unlawful means. Pettibone v. U.S., 148 U.S. 197, 13 Sup. Ct. 542; Com. v. Hunt, 4 Metc. [**181] (Mass.) 111."

In Arthur v. Oakes, 11 C.C.A. 209, 63 Fed. 324, Mr. Justice Harlan of the supreme court of the United States, sitting in the circuit court of appeals for the Seventh circuit, states the law in the following terms:

"It seems entirely clear, upon authority, that any combination or conspiracy upon the part of its employes would be unlawful which has for its object to cripple the property in the hands of the receivers, and to embarrass the operation of the railroads under their management, and thereby disabling or rendering unfit for use engines, cars, and other property in their hands, or by interfering with their possession, or by actually obstructing their control and management, or by using force, intimidation, threats, or other unlawful methods against the receivers or other agents, or against employes remaining in their service, or by using like methods to cause the employes to quit, or prevent or deter others from entering the service in place of those leaving it. Combinations of that character disturb the peace of society, and are mischievous in the extreme. They imperil the interests of the public, which may rightfully demand that the free course of trade shall [**182] not be unreasonably obstructed. They endanger the personal security and personal liberty of individuals who, in the exercise of their inalienable privilege of choosing the terms upon which they shall labor, enter and attempt to enter the service of those against whom such combinations are specially aimed."

The right of labor to organize for its own benefit and protection, as I have before explained to you, is a substantial right, which the laboring class is entitled to enjoy to the greatest extent consistent with the rights of others. The limitation is that in the exercise of this right the property and rights of others must be respected. It remains for you to apply this law to the facts in the case at bar.

I will now direct your attention to the overt acts charged against these defendants.

Overt Acts of Defendants.

George Cornwall, an engineer on train No. 13, going down towards San Jose, and No. 6, coming up, on the 6th of July, testified to what occurred at Palo Alto as follows: That he was the engineer on [*765] train No. 13 on the 6th day of July last; that they took No. 6's time in coming back. It was express train No. 13, from San Francisco. It went down as [**183] far as this side of Santa Cruz crossing. They carried the mail and had a mail car. He saw some mail on the train. * * * They stopped at all the main points going along. Left San Francisco at 3:15, he thinks. He returned towards San Francisco. He backed up a train to Lawrence's Station. He ran around it, got on the other end, and pulled it back. Going down, the mail car was on behind; when he was coming back it was in front, next to the engine. He backed up from Lawrence's Station towards Palo Alto station, at the switch there. Reached Palo Alto somewhere about 5 o'clock. It was after 5, pretty near 6, when he got back there. He don't recollect exactly. The mail had not been taken off the train before it reached Palo Alto. At Palo Alto they stopped, uncoupled, and went in on the turntable track. He knows Clark, Rice, Mayne, and Cassidy. * * * He first saw some of them on his engine. This was at Palo Alto. He went in to turn around on the turntable. He got about half way turned around, and was saying something to the brakeman, -- he forgets what it was, -- when Mayne said: "Never mind those fellows. We will take charge of this engine." Then Mayne began to shake the [**184] grates, and was going to open the blow-off cock. He could not get it open until he loosened the nut underneath. He was trying to loosen it with a coal pick. Cornwall told him: "Don't break it off. Take the monkey wrench and unscrew it." Rice gave him the wrench, and told Mayne to go under it, as he knew more about it than he did. Mayne then went under. These men let the water out of the tank; shook the fire down. Mayne tried it, but thinks Rice did most of the shaking. Mayne was on the engine. He said he would take charge of her, and commenced shaking the grates. Cornwall was saying something to the brakeman, and he said: "Never mind them. We will take charge of this engine." Cornwall looked around, -- that was the first time he saw them, -- and he saw three or four of them there, and seven or eight on the ground; seven or eight all together. He saw Rice, Cassidy, and Mayne. He knows a man named Clark, but is not acquainted with him much. Believes he knows him by sight. Could not swear whether Clark was there with those men or not. The hose was uncoupled. One side was uncoupled by Cassidy; the other side, he could not say. The hose was uncoupled between the tank and [**185] the engine. The effect of uncoupling that hose was to let the water all out of the tank if the valve was open on top. * * * It is necessary to go under this engine to unscrew the nut. He handed Mayne the wrench, and saw him go under. The turntable was then turned half around. Cornwall wanted them to turn it around, that he might clean the fire out of the ash pan, so that it would not burn the grates. Some one did turn it around, and he ran her over the pit where they put out the ashes. Then the boys went up to the other engine, and, as everything was all quiet down there, he put his coat on, and went up too. He had a talk with Mayne about the mail. He called him to one side and spoke to him. He said: "Mr. Mayne, aren't you [*766] afraid you will get into trouble by stopping the mail?" Mayne said: "Damn the mail. You ain't got no mail." Cornwall said: "You have fired on this train long enough to know we do carry the mail all the time." And then Mayne went away, and that is the last Cornwall saw of him to speak to him. * * * There is very seldom a Pullman car on that train. His engine was killed at that time. After these men left his engine, they went up to Mr. Minatt's [**186] engine and killed that one. He saw what was going on there. He saw her blowing off, and some one backed her on a split switch in front of the ticket office, and blew the steam right into the ticket office. The back drivers were partly off. It would take five minutes to get her on, if they had another engine there to do it. Could not see who was on the Minatt engine from the time it was moved from its position. There was too much steam. He could not say that these same men were there. Supposes they were. He believes he heard some of them say: "Come on. Let us go up to the other engine." * * * On cross-examination the witness stated that he did not tell those men that they were interfering with the United States mail train when he was on the turntable there, for the reason that there were so many around there he did not think of it. * * * Nothing said, to his knowledge, at the time that engine was killed, with reference to its being a mail train, by either party. It had a mail car on, though, and mail in it going north and south. * * * This conversation that he had with Mayne was close by the depot, on the other side of the track. He called him to one side, close by where [**187] Minatt's engine was. No one else heard it. Is sure that no one else heard it. That is the only conversation he had with him. Did not have a conversation with him to this effect, in which he said: "Aren't you afraid you will get into trouble about stopping the mail?" Mayne said: "No. I did not know there was any mail on the train, and, if there was, it is pretty late in the day to tell me." * * * Thinks there were more than four there. About seven or eight. Somewhere in that neighborhood. He had one brakeman and a fireman. He thinks he was helping turn around. He did not offer any resistance to them. They came on him so quickly that he did not think about much of anything.

W. R. Sowers testified that he was a brakeman in the employ of the Southern Pacific Company. That he was such on the 6th of July last. That he was on Conductor Gould's train as brakeman. Saw what happened to the engine of that train run by Cornwall. When they came into Palo Alto, coming back as No. 6, he cut the engine off from the train and took it over to the turntable, and started to turn it. He had the engine half or a third turned around, when there were five or six different parties came from [**188] over the field, -- five or six different men. They were all together, as close as they could be, coming towards the engine. They came over and proceeded to kill the engine. One of the gentlemen in the crowd spoke to him and said: "You don't need to turn it any further. You remain in Palo Alto over to-night. You have run far enough to-day." Does not know who that man was. He was a tall gentleman, with a black mustache. He would know any of the gentlemen that were [*767] with them at that time by sight, but not by name. (The defendants Mayne and Cassidy being directed to stand up, the witness identified them both.) After one of these men told him that he need not turn the engine further, but that he could remain in Palo Alto, the light-headed gentleman (Mr. Cassidy), who was on the left-hand side of the engine, and had something in the way of a hammer or monkey wrench, assisted to uncouple the hose between the tender and engine. He could not see who was on the other side. Did not notice who was in the cab. Mr. Mayne was in the cab, but what he was doing the witness does not know. He could not see unless he got into the cab. There were a couple of others in the cab at [**189] that time. Nothing else occurred, that he knows of, outside of uncoupling the hose between the tender and the engine, letting the water out, and blowing the steam off. Saw the steam escaping. Water escaped from the boiler. That engine was killed at that time. The fire was shook down. He supposes it was all out. * * * Mr. Mulder was in the cab before these men reached the cab. Mulder was helping to turn the engine. Mulder was on the opposite side from where he was. After they killed the engine, these men went from his engine over to Palo Alto station. * * * They were going at a moderate little trot. They were not running very fast, or anything like that. * * * Is acquainted with the signals that are used on passenger trains. This was a regular train.

Peter Mulder was fireman on the engine of which Cornwall was engineer. He was present when Cornwall's engine was killed, but he is unable to identify the defendants as being the persons who assisted in killing the engine. The material parts of his testimony are as follows: Having returned as far as Palo Alto, they stopped the train, uncoupled, backed it on the turntable, to turn the engine around, because she was headed [**190] the other way, and they were going to San Francisco. As soon as the engine stopped on the turntable, he got off the engine, to help push the engine round. * * * He was alone on the back end. He don't know whether any more were on the forward end with Long, or not. The engine was between them. Just as he put his shoulder to the lever to push it around, he saw some men coming from the back end of the engine towards the engine. They were walking pretty fast. Some were running a few steps. Some of them went up on the engineer's side of the engine; some of them stayed behind the engine. One of them turned open the air pipe under the engine while he was pushing around. He looked round and saw the air was blowing out of the hose. He stepped up and shut it off. Some one says, "God damn, leave that alone." With that this person opened it again, and Mulder went up on the engine. They pushed the engine partly around a little ways. Mulder got up on his seat, and sat down to see what was going on. Cornwall, the engineer, at the time he (Mulder) got up, was sitting on the seat box. * * * The engine was killed. Saw the squirt hose used. One of the men said to him, "Turn that squirt [**191] hose on." Mulder said, "No, I will have nothing to do with this," and with that he reached by him and turned it on himself. They opened the door of the fire box, and squirted the water over [*768] the fire, and killed it. They had already shaken the grates a little, although the fire was not altogether shaken down. This person was trying with a pick to open the blow-off cock, and the engineer told him it could not be opened that way; he would have to take a wrench and go underneath and loosen the nut before he could turn it. The engineer handed him a monkey wrench. One of the men went underneath and loosened the nut, and they blew the water out of the boiler and out of the tank. There were engaged in that work at least six, if not seven. He thinks there were seven, -- three behind the tank when he left there, and four in the cab when he got up there.

T. J. Long was also a brakeman on the train pulled by Cornwall's engine. He accompanied the engine to the turntable, to assist in turning it around. He saw the killing of the engine, but is unable, like Fireman Mulder, to identify the defendants, or to distinguish the part they took in the disabling of the engine. He noticed [**192] some of the men coming down in the train with him. He recognizes Cassidy as being a member of that party. Cannot say as to Mayne, nor as to Rice and Clark.

C. B. Gould was the conductor of the train whose engine, of which Cornwall was engineer, was killed. He states that he left San Francisco on July 6, 1894, at 3:05, on train No. 13. The time was 2:20, but they waited for troops to take to San Jose. It was a mail train, having a mail car. He had baggage and express and mail, smoker, and, he thinks, two or three coaches. He had no Pullman cars, -- no Pullman sleepers. He went as far as Santa Clara crossing, left the troops there, and returned immediately as No. 6; that is, on train No. 6's time. Those were his orders. It was a mail train returning. Left Santa Clara crossing at 5:15 p.m. Reached Palo Alto at 5:55. The engine had been backed all the way from Santa Clara crossing, there being no turntable between that place and Palo Alto. Arrived at Palo Alto, he left the train on the south switch. The engine was sent on to the turntable, to turn her, so that the pilot and engine would come first. He told his men to go up with the engineer and fireman and turn the engine, [**193] while he went to the depot to get orders, if there were any to obtain. It was his intention to take that train right through to the city. Did not intend to stay at Palo Alto more than about 10 minutes. It would have taken them only a couple of minutes had they not turned the engine. He had just arrived at the ticket office when some one sang out to him, "I saw some one running towards your engine." He ran to the engine from the ticket office. When he reached her she was virtually dead. Saw Rice, Clark, Cassidy, and Mayne around the engine when he reached it. Rice was shaking the grate. The hose of the engine was cut; that is, it was uncoupled. That is the hose between the tender and the engine. Did not see who cut it. While examining the engine, he noticed Cassidy, Mayne, and others make a run for the other engine, of which Engineer Minatt was in charge. She had just arrived with a train from San Francisco. He followed them up. When he arrived, it also had been killed. With the exception of seeing Rice [*769] shaking the grate, he did not see any of the acts connected with the killing of the two engines. In answer to the question, "Did you have any conversation [**194] with Mr. Rice and Mr. Clark in respect to this act?" the witness stated:

"After this was over I went to the telegraph office and notified the super-intendent what had been done. Shortly after, I passed down track to go to my train, which was on the main track below, to protect it, and I met Mr. Rice and Mr. Clark coming towards the ticket office. I said to Mr. Rice and Mr. Clark: 'Well, you have tied us up.' He said: 'Yes. Well?' I said: 'This is a very wrong, unlawful act, and you have no grievances whatever against the Southern Pacific company, or any other company;' that is, speaking of them as the A.R.U.'s. I says: 'It was only to make the railroad companies whip Pullman, or, in other words, bring him to their terms.' He stated: 'We had orders to do this, and we have done it.'"

Rice, Clark, Mayne, and Cassidy remained around Palo Alto about 20 or 30 minutes. Possibly it might have been more. There were no other engines at Palo Alto save those two. They laid there until the next morning, until they got another engine to pull these engines to Menlo Park, and filled them with water and got up steam, so that they were able to make the trip out. Got back to San Francisco [**195] about half past 10 or 11 o'clock the next morning. Were due in San Francisco the night before.

Edward J. Kincaid, assistant agent at Palo Alto, called for the United States, testified that his attention was attracted to Cornwall's engine by hearing some one holler, "They have got it." He was then in the ticket office, and ran out, and saw four or five men coming from the field between the county road and the railroad track. He saw the men climb over the fence and climb up on the engine. The engine was half turned around on the turntable, and he did not see what they were doing to her, but he states that steam soon began to issue from the boiler, and the engine was turned clear around and run onto a side track, and there the steam was blown off. This crowd remained around the engine probably about six or seven minutes. They then went to Minatt's engine, and climbed up on the engine and told them to get out, -- told the fireman to get out. They then let the steam and water out of the engine. Knows Rice, Clark, and Cassidy by sight. Does not know the others. He saw them there at the time these two engines were killed. Saw them mingling with the crowd. The only one he saw [**196] on the engine, to recognize, was Rice. Did not see either Clark or Cassidy on the engine. But they could have been on the engine, and still he might not have seen them. Could not see what they were doing. On redirect examination he states that he could see that the hose between the engine and tender was uncoupled, hanging down, and he could see under this hose where the water had run out.

Robert Dannenburg, station agent at Palo Alto, also agent for Wells, Fargo & Co., and Western Union operator, called for the prosecution, testified that he saw some five or six men coming from the county road towards the railroad track east, at a sort of dog trot; that they went to Cornwall's engine; that he saw them stop the turntable when about half way around, but he could not distinguish [*770] who it was that stopped the turntable. He saw steam escaping from the engine, and shortly after they (the crowd) turned the engine clean around, and ran over the ash pit. Ran her off the turntable, right onto the track. He could not see any particular thing that was done on the engine from where he was. The crowd then went over to Minatt's engine. He saw Rice board that engine, and also [**197] another man. All that he saw with reference to Minatt's engine was two or three men climbing the engine. He did not see the rest of it. But, probably two or three minutes after these men boarded the engine, he saw steam blowing off from the engine. Saw Cassidy, Mayne, Clark, and Rice in the neighborhood of those engines at these times. Distinguished them near Minatt's engine, but could not see what they were doing.

E. F. Minatt, called for the United States, testified that he was an engineer on the Southern Pacific system, running on the Coast Division; that he was an engineer on or about the 6th of July last. He went off on No. 17 according to the time card, which leaves San Francisco at 4:25 in the afternoon, but he thinks they were 10 minutes late on that day. Pulled a local train between San Francisco and Palo Alto. He reached Palo Alto that day. He was to return from Palo Alto the next morning at 6:40. Four of the boys, -- two of them fired for him before, and he pulled the other two as brakemen (Cassidy and Mayne, they both fired for him, and a fellow named Rice, a brakeman, and Clark), -- they came to his engine. He was down on the ground and they got up. He thinks [**198] Rice -- he is not sure -- commenced to shake the fire out of the grates down into the ash pan. Cassidy and Mayne commenced to uncouple the hose. They wanted to blow the water out of the boiler, and let it out of the tender. At this time Rice came around, and the witness said to him, "Boys, don't damage the engine." They said they would not; only let the water out of the boiler and tender; and they did that. There was such a crowd around there that he could not tell how many there were. Cassidy, Mayne, Rice, and Clark were actively taking part and killing the engine. Mr. Cassidy, he thinks, and Mr. Mayne, both had a hand in loosening the blow-off cock. The witness gave them a wrench to do it, -- to unloosen the blow-off cock, -- and they did it. After they had blown the water partly out of the boiler, -- the water was about out of the tender, -- the young man Clark got up and backed her out through an open switch. Witness hollered to him, and told him the switch was wrong. He got the tender out and the back drivers out over this switch, then he undertook to run her ahead on the main track, and derailed her. She stood there like that until they sent a man from San Francisco [**199] to pull her on. * * * There were some exclamations made of "Hip, hip, hurrah for the A.R.U." There was such a crowd around there -- such a jam -- that he could not get to the engine from the crowd. Who it was did it he don't know. The only man that he saw at the time of the hurrahing was Clark. The latter was on the engine after he derailed her. He did not see Mayne or Cassidy or Rice at the time the hip, hip, hurrahing was going on. After the excitement [*771] was over, he saw the parties going towards Menlo Park. He saw Mayne, Cassidy, Rice, and Clark going towards Menlo Park.

Edward C. Murray, a witness for the United States, testified that he was the railway postal clerk who accompanied train No. 13, coming back on the same train, -- it coming back as No. 6; that is, on No. 6's time. He testifies as to its being a mail train. He did not see the engine killed. He testifies as follows:

"Q. State what mail, if you recollect, you took up or delivered on the way down, or coming back. A. I received mail from all stations between San Francisco and Lawrence, inclusive. Coming back, I received mail from Lawrence, Mountain View, and Mayfield. Q. Did you have a mail [**200] car, or not, on that train? A. Yes, sir. Q. Did you reach Palo Alto? A. Yes, sir. Q. Did you go beyond Palo Alto that day. A. Not that night; no, sir. * * * Q. What time were you due at San Francisco with that mail? A. 6:26."

As to Conversations Had with Clark.

R. M. Donne states that he was a conductor on the Coast Division, and that he was at San Mateo on the evening of the 6th of July, and the morning of the 7th. He saw Cassidy, Rice, and Clark there that night (the 6th). Also saw a gentleman with them who weighed about 180 pounds; had a smooth face; was heavy set. He had a talk with Clark that night. He spoke to him outside of the ticket office, and asked him if he would come inside of the office with him (Donne), and that he would introduce him to their assistant general passenger agent, and several others. He acceded, and came in. F. S. Douty, the secretary of the Pacific Improvement Company; H. R. Judah, the assistant general passenger agent; L. H. Fuller, an employe in the ticket auditor's department; the station agent, Mr. Peckham; and his assistant, Mr. Elmes, -- were present. He testifies as to the conversation as follows:

"I introduced Mr. Clark [**201] to these men, and he was asked by Mr. Douty why they wanted to tie up the Coast Division. Well, he said that the boys on the other side were complaining that they were not taking any part in this affair; that they had the other side tied up, also the Narrow Gauge, and they had to do something on this side. Q. Do you recollect anything further that was said at that time? A. Nothing more, except that he was asked whether they had any grievances against the Coast Division. He replied by saying, 'No; not particularly.'"

F. S. Douty, a witness on the part of the government, narrates the conversation that passed between himself and Clark as follows:

"I think the conversation with Mr. Clark, after the introductions were over, by asking his reasons for this strike, -- to get some information. He said that the Pullman Company had not treated the boys right, so that they had to strike on any road where Pullmans were used. I suggested that no Pullmans were used on this division. He said, in effect: 'No; but the boys on the other side' (referring to the Oakland side) 'are kicking, thinking that we are not doing enough here; so we have to keep our end up.' I said, 'Why do you have [**202] to keep your end up?' 'Well, we belong to an organization where we have taken an oath to stand together.' And he added, 'If we don't win this fight, I will go to China.' I said, 'Have you got any complaint to make against this Coast Division?' He said, 'No; there is no kick coming.' I asked him if it was what he called a 'sympathetic strike'; if he was striking in sympathy. He said, 'Yes,' he thought that was substantially it, so far as the Coast Division was concerned. I am giving the essence of my recollection, without trying to repeat the language."

[*772] Upon being asked if he could give the names of any other person with Clark, he says one was called Cassidy; another, Rice.

H. R. Judah, who was present at the conversation carried on between Mr. Douty and Mr. Clark, thus gives his version of it:

"Mr. Douty took the leading part in opening the conversation, and in a general, pleasant way, asked Mr. Clark what was the object of their tying up the Coast Division. * * * I cannot give the exact language, but, according to my recollection, Mr. Clark replied that the men on the other side (having reference to the Oakland side) had complained that nothing had been done on [*203] the Coast Division in the way of tying up trains, and that they felt it necessary to do something (or words to that effect). Then Mr. Douty asked him -- I think that was the next question that was asked -- why the Coast Division should be singled out, you might say, entirely disconnected with the balance of the system, in so far as Pullman cars were concerned. Mr. Clark replied, in substance, that that did not cut any figure in the matter at that time; that they were into this fight, and that they were going to stay with it; and, furthermore, said that if they lost their cause he was going to China, -- he would not live in this country. The conversation was carried on by all of us. Questions would be asked, but I cannot recall every single question that was asked, or every answer that was given. In substance, it is the same as Mr. Douty has given, and Mr. Peckham. My memory might be refreshed if some questions were asked of me, but, in the main, what I have said covers the ground. Of course, a good deal was said to Mr. Clark, to try and persuade him to have the men cease on the Coast Division; to allow that to be an exception, as there did not exist, in fact, any cause for complaint [*204] on the part of those employed on the division, and if they continued in blocking the traffic it must be on the ground of sympathy, and nothing else. Then Mr. Clark reiterated -- in fact, he reiterated on two or three occasions -- the fact that they were in this fight, and they proposed to see it through."

The witnesses Peckham and Elmes testify substantially to the conversation between Clark and Douty as detailed above.

On page 644, vol. 8, of the testimony, appears the following admission:

"Mr. Monteith: We will admit that both of these defendants are members of lodge No. 345 of the American Railway Union, located in San Francisco. Mr. Knight: Q. In the latter part of June? Mr. Monteith: In all of June, and all of July last. Mr. Foote: Let that be taken down. Mr. Monteith: We will admit anything of that kind. We have nothing to conceal about it. Our side of the case is an open book."

Testimony on Behalf of Defendants.

The defendant John Mayne testified: That he was a locomotive fireman on the Coast Division last spring. That he was hostler at San Francisco at the time of the strike. He had charge of the engines after they came in off the road, put the necessary [*205] supplies on, put the engines in the house, and got other engines out to go out on the road. Had been employed on the railroad about six years. Understands all the duties of a fireman. Was familiar with the rules of the company at the time of the strike. Belonged to the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and the American Railway Union. That he attended meetings of the A.R.U. in the last part of June. He belonged to the San Francisco lodge. He attended a meeting on the night of the 29th of June. The lodge met on Mission street, between Fifth and Sixth. After the admission of members there was a message read stating that the members of the local union 310, in Oakland, had declared a strike on account of the discharge of [*773] men. He identifies Exhibit No. 296 as the message, as near as he could remember. It reads as follows:

"June 29, 1894, Oakland, Calif. To J. E. Riordan, 118 Sixth St., Room 71, S.F.: American Railway Union three hundred ten has declared strike takes effect twelve thirty a.m. to-day. T. J. Roberts, President."

He further states that he thoroughly understood the cause of the strike. His union never participated in the boycott against the Pullman [*206] cars. With regard to the strike at Oakland, a motion was made, and a standing vote taken, that they indorse the action of the Oakland Union in striking, and that a strike be declared by their lodge for the reinstatement of the discharged employes. So far as this lodge was concerned, there was no other purpose in striking than the reinstatement of these men. After the strike was declared, the next action of the meeting was the appointment of an executive committee. Harry Bederman, George Elliott, Pete Farrel, and W. S. Runyon were appointed on that committee. They had full power to manage the strike, and all the business connected with it. The union did not reserve any authority to itself. After the appointment and authorization of this committee, the next business transacted was a discussion in regard to handling the mail. This was on the night the strike was ordered. The meeting of the 29th, some one made a motion (he thinks, Mr. Achorn) that the lodge take a vote as to whether they were willing to handle the mail or not. A standing vote was taken. Everybody in the hall stood up, in favor of handling the mails at all times. He did not hear any reference to interstate commerce. [**207] After that they held a meeting every day, -- sometimes twice a day. He thinks he attended all meetings up to the afternoon of the 6th. Does not remember anything that was done, except routine business connected with the admission of new members, and so forth. He was in San Francisco on the 5th of July. Saw Cassidy every day. Has known him about six years. For the last three years he has been almost a constant companion of Cassidy. They roomed together, boarded together, and were together evenings, and all the time. Saw him on the 5th. On the morning of July 5th, Cassidy and he, after breakfast, attended a meeting of the union. After the meeting they went around town, -- he does not know just where, now; and in the afternoon they went to Valencia street, and took the train bound south, -- bound for San Jose. He invited Cassidy to go down with him to San Jose, to see his folks, on the morning of the 6th. He had been with him all the morning from the time they got up. He asked the agent if there would be a train along in the afternoon. The latter informed him there would. He asked him for two tickets to San Jose. He notified him they were only carrying passengers as far [**208] as Mayfield. He bought two tickets for Mayfield, and handed one to Cassidy. He thinks it was about 3:30 o'clock when he got on the train. It was an ordinary train. There was a mail car on the hind end of it. Next to the mail car there was a car load of passengers. He tried to get into the car, and did not know what was in it, and the brakeman refused him admission. He then took the car immediately ahead of that. Cassidy did not get in at the same time he did. He saw Clark and Rice on that day. [*774] When he got on at Valencia street, he was reading a newspaper. When he finished with the paper, he went into the smoking car. When he arrived there, there were quite a few people in the smoking car. There he saw Rice and Clark, and he believes Cassidy was in the smoker at the time. Rice and Clark and a number of passengers were talking to a captain of the militia, -- he supposes it was a captain; he had stripes on his uniform. Just before they got to Redwood, the captain left the car, and went back through the train. Fred Clark came and sat down alongside of him. They chatted along the way. Mayne asked him where he was going. He said he intended to go to San Jose, [**209] but he only had a ticket for Mayfield. When they got to Mayfield he and Cassidy got off, and Rice and Clark also, and a great number of the other passengers. The first thing they did was to look for a conveyance. He found nothing there; no wagons around the depot. They talked the matter over, and finally concluded to go back to Palo Alto. There are a couple of crews which run in there, and they thought they could get definite information of whether train 19 was coming out that afternoon or not. If there was no way of getting to San Jose they would have come back to the city. They walked up the county road very leisurely. Stopped just outside of Mayfield, and looked at the cavalry. There was a company of cavalry camping just outside of Mayfield. Walked up the county road to almost opposite Palo Alto. Cassidy complained that his shoes were hurting him, and wanted them to wait a moment. They jumped over the fence; sat down under a tree in University Park. They stayed there 10 or 15 minutes. While they were sitting there an engine came in on the turntable. They all got up and looked at it. He does not know whether he suggested that they go and kill it, or whether Rice did. [**210] He knows that Rice and he got over the fence, and went over and killed the engine. Rice and he were in advance of the rest. He did not know whether the rest were coming or not. He did not look around to see. They got to the engine first. He went up on the left-hand side, over the timber of the turntable, and thinks Rice went on the right-hand side. When he got on the engine, Engineer Cornwall was standing up with his head out of the window. There was a fireman, a man with overalls, and a man in citizen's clothes, turning the turntable. Cornwall was saying: "A little ahead. How is that, pard? A little ahead," -- repeating that remark two or three times. He (Mayne) said to him, "That is all right, George; she is all right where she is." Cornwall said, "What are you going to do?" Mayne replied, "Nothing in particular." Cornwall then stated, "Don't hurt my engine, boys." To which Mayne replied, "We have no intention of hurting your engine." That was all that was said. He caught hold of the grates, and started to shake the fire out. He tried to shake the fire out. It was in such a condition -- it was all clinkered -- that it would not go through the grates. He was about [**211] to give it up, when the idea struck him that he could put it out with a squirt on the left-hand injector. He put on the injector, turned the water into the fire box, and drowned the fire out. * * * About the time he thought the fire was quenched, he asked the engineer if he thought [*775] it would be safe to let the water out. The latter stooped down, looked into the fire box, and said he thought it was all right. Then Mayne took the coal pick, and tried the blow-off cock. He suggested to the engineer that they had better run the engine off the turntable, on account of the blow-off pipe coming against the timber of the turntable, and it would scald the paint on the engine. He approved of that, and the table was turned back for the straight track, and the engineer ran the engine off over the ash pit. Mayne tried the blow-off cock, and he could not open it. The engineer told him he would have to get down underneath with a monkey wrench, and loosen up the nut in the bottom of the car. Cornwall gave him the monkey wrench. Mayne jumped down on the ground. It was necessary for him to get under the engine, so he took off his hat and coat, and handed it to the engineer. The [**212] latter held his hat and coat while he opened it, and until he got back on the engine. * * * There was nothing said, further than what he has stated. The engineer requested them not to hurt his engine. He said: "Boys, don't hurt my engine. I like my engine." And he repeated that remark two or three times, and that was all that was said. * * * Just before he finished killing the engine, Rice came back from up towards the depot, and after he let about four inches of water out of her he went back into the cab, and opened the blow-off cock. Then he stood by the water glass, and watched it until the water went out of sight in the glass. Then he closed the blow-off cock. He did not know but what the fire might kindle up again, and he was not taking any chances on it. He shut the blow-off cock as soon as the water went out of sight. After they killed the engine, Rice and he walked up to the depot. There was a crowd of 20 people up there, he supposes. Just before they reached the depot, the other engine that Minatt was running was blowing out against the side of the stationhouse, -- a little station, six by six. He said to him (Rice): "That won't do. You don't want to spoil the [**213] paper in there." He mentioned the paper and instruments. Rice went up on one side, and he on the other. They moved the engine ahead a foot, so that she would clear the building. Rice was moving the engine, and he had hold of the brake wheel. About the time they moved a foot, some one hollered, "Whoop! you are off the track." They stopped immediately. The water was all, or nearly all, out. He kicked the blow-off cock shut, and got down off the engine. He had nothing whatever to do with the killing of Minatt's engine. He got up there. The fire was all out, and the water almost all out. He had a talk with Engineer Cornwall just before they left Palo Alto. Cornwall was up at the station. Cornwall called him over, and said to him: "Pard, don't you think you have done something pretty serious, in stopping the mail?" Mayne replied: "No, I don't think so. Even so, this is a hell of a time to tell us of it now, when it is all over." Mayne then turned round and walked off. He denies having made the statement testified to by Cornwall, as follows: "I says, 'Mr. Mayne, aren't you afraid you will get into trouble by stopping the mail?' He [Mayne] said, 'Damn the mail. You ain't [**214] got no mail.'" Cornwall replied, "You have fired on this train long enough to know [*776] we do carry the mail all the time." He, on the contrary, affirms that statement was just exactly as he gave it, word for word. He further states that he had no knowledge of any mail train coming along at that time, and before he killed the engine; did not know that a mail train was due at that time on the schedule. Is familiar with the surroundings at Palo Alto. The train could not be seen from that turntable. He remained in Palo Alto about 40 minutes; then went over to Menlo Park. Cassidy told him he had heard that Haydock had telegraphed to the constable at Palo Alto to arrest them. The first thing they thought of was to move over to Menlo Park. They stayed in Menlo Park an hour, or may be an hour and a half. Ate supper over at the hotel. Then they tried to get a rig. The livery stable man wanted too much. He suggested to the boys that they walk over to Redwood; there was a friend of theirs over there who would drive them up. They walked to Redwood, got a rig there, and they were taken as far as San Mateo. Got to San Mateo between half past 10 and 11 o'clock. Did not do anything [**215] in particular, only sat on the platform and talked with the boys around there. On cross-examination the defendant Mayne testified that he bought his ticket as far as he could go in the direction of going home, -- to San Jose. The distance from Mayfield to San Jose is 16 miles. He was there when the train left. He made no effort to get on and buy a ticket from the conductor, and proceed on his journey, when he saw it going further on, although his destination was his home, at San Jose. He did not think they were carrying passengers any further than Mayfield. He supposed he would find the regular Palo Alto crews at Palo Alto. He knew that two trains laid over at Palo Alto at night. From where he was, he could not see the train coming back. He did not hear it coming. He was over 200 yards from the road. He admits that, although he neither heard nor saw the train come in, he suddenly started over to kill a live engine. He had fired on that train. He knew that Cornwall sometimes went on that engine. He knows all the engineers on the Coast Division. He states that he did not know what engine was on the train that he went up on, but he admits that he knew train 6 was due at [**216] San Francisco at 6:30. Being asked to repeat the circumstances under which he jumped up and ran for that engine, he states that when the engine came over the switch, just before she came on the turntable the cylinder cocks were opened, and made a lot of noise, -- steam blowing off. They got up and looked at the engine. He don't know now whether he suggested to Rice, or the latter suggested to him, "Let's go and kill her." They did not debate the question at all. They went and killed her.

"Q. What was your purpose in killing a live engine there? A. I have not any good reason for killing the engine. We wanted to be doing something, I suppose. We wanted a frolic. Q. Did you not know that a live engine could pull a train? A. I did. Q. And a dead one could not? A. And a dead one could not. Q. Did you not kill that engine because you did not want it to pull a train? A. I did not know one was there at the time. Q. Did you not know that a live engine usually pulls a train? A. Yes, sir. Q. Did you not know that to kill that live engine was to disable it from pulling a train? A. I did. Q. Yet you killed it, and for no purpose? A. I did not know there was a train [**217] there, attached to it. I thought it was a light engine. [*777] It is customary -- Q. I do not want anything about customary. I want you to answer my question. Now, Mr. Mayne, did you not know that to kill that live engine would render it impossible to take a train that might be there back to San Francisco? A. I did not think anything about it. Q. You just went up there out of pure deviltry? A. Yes, sir. Q. You did not know whether there was a train or not, or whether or not there was any mail, or not any mail, and you killed it out of pure deviltry? A. I did not debate it. I thought it was a light engine, and went over there and killed her for no reason whatever. Q. Did you not do it for that reason? A. For deviltry? Q. Yes; from a pure spirit of mischief and deviltry. A. I guess you might as well put it that way. Q. Without caring what the result was? A. That is as good an answer as any."

Referring to the conversation he had with Cornwall about the mail, he states that, if he had stopped the mail, it was too late to start it then. The engine was killed. He made no effort whatever to repair that which he was told was a violation of the law. He left [**218] because he did not know just exactly what the consequences would be. He went off towards San Francisco. He went in company with these men, -- Clark, Cassidy, and Rice.

John Cassidy, the other defendant on trial, testifies, substantially, that he was a fireman employed by the Southern Pacific Company last spring; that he had been such for about eight years; that he belongs to the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, and San Francisco Lodge, No. 345, of the American Railway Union; that he attended the meeting of that union on June 29th; that "every one was there, and there was a telegram read about the Oakland strike, or about the Oakland boys going out on a strike, and we indorsed their action. * * * We all decided to strike." He states that most of the members of his union were employed on the Coast Division; that at that meeting, besides ordering a strike, they took in a number of new members, and appointed a crew to go down, and go out with the mail the next morning. They also appointed a mediation committee. The witness' statement as to the invitation tendered him by Mayne to go down to San Jose on July 6th, to visit Mayne's folks, agrees substantially with the latter's testimony. [**219] The witness further states that he first saw Rice and Clark on July 6th, somewhere between San Mateo and Redwood City, on the train. He got off the train at Mayfield. He states that, after an ineffectual attempt to secure a conveyance to San Jose --

"We concluded to go back to Palo Alto. We went back to Palo Alto to see if train 19 was coming through. When we got up about opposite Palo Alto, on the way up, there was some cavalry marching back from Santa Cruz; some regular troops. They were in the field. We stopped and talked with them for quite a while. We walked on until we got opposite Palo Alto. I had a new pair of shoes on. I told the fellows they could go on the rest of the way, if they wanted, but I was going to take my shoes off. I climbed over a fence in the park, took off my shoes, and laid down in the grass. They all got over the fence, too. We were sitting there, or laying there, telling stories and yarns, for about ten or fifteen minutes, when we heard the cylinder cock of an engine blowing off. Some of the boys got up, and looked over the fence, and saw an engine. Some one says, 'There is an engine on the turntable,' and they started for it. I had to [**220] put my shoes on, and, I believe, my coat. Somebody else had their coat off. They were on the engine before I got there. I got there just as quick as I could, after I got my shoes and coat on. There were two or three in the cab of the engine. I went around to the left, and started to take off or uncouple the tank hose. [*778] I turned around, and happened to see Minatt's engine up the track, and I quit my job, and went up to Minatt's engine. Q. What did you do with Minatt's engine? A. Between Minatt and myself, we loosened the blow-off cock, and blew the water out. The fire was already out of it. I had to crawl under the engine to do it. The tank valve was open, and the water was running out of the tank. Q. Did Minatt offer any resistance? A. No; he stood off, and seemed tickled. He gave me a wrench to do it; told me where I could get one. I had to lay down flat. There is an air drum under the deck, and I had to lay down flat, and crawl under it. Q. Was Mayne there when you were killing that engine? A. No, sir. Q. Who was there besides Minatt and yourself? A. I think Clark and I did that job. I am pretty sure Clark was there."

Upon being asked by his [**221] counsel if he knew what the indictment charged, he states that he does, but that he never did anything except to let water out of that engine. Respecting the cause of his leaving Palo Alto that night, he states that somebody in the crowd told him that the division superintendent, Haydock, had ordered the constable at Palo Alto to arrest them; that they thereupon went over the county line to Menlo Park, and subsequently to San Mateo. On cross-examination, being interrogated as to his motive in running towards Cornwall's engine to assist in killing her, he states that he went because the others did; that he helped kill the engine because the rest of them were killing it; that he simply wanted to be with the crowd, or, to use his own language, "I suppose I wanted to be in the swim." Respecting the killing of Minatt's engine, he states that he thinks he was the first man to reach it; that when he did he got up and looked into the fire box; the fire was out of her; he started in to open the blow-off cock; that the effect of this was to let the water out; that he let nearly all of the water out; that the effect of this was to kill the engine. He also states that, while engaged in killing [**222] Minatt's engine, he heard some one holler, "Three cheers for the A.R.U." Being asked to give his reason for killing Minatt's engine, he states it was "to have a good time." He states that he would have done what he could towards killing Cornwall's engine if the other engine (Minatt's) had not been there. Further, that he did not think of any consequences that might ensue, from the killing of those engines, to him; that the only reason that prompted him to kill those engines was "to keep my hand in."

F. W. Clark, one of the defendants in the indictment, but not on trial, was called for the defendants, and testified, briefly, that he was a brakeman on the Coast Division of the Southern Pacific Company, and had been such for about two years; that he was braking between San Francisco and Monterey, on freight trains; that he knows Rice; that he met him on the morning of the 6th of July at the A.R.U. meeting; that, after the meeting adjourned, Rice asked him to go down to San Jose with him; that they could not get tickets for San Jose, and they went as far as Mayfield. On cross-examination he states that he met Cassidy and Mayne on the train between San Mateo and Redwood City; that he [**223] stayed with them all the while until they got back to San Mateo; and that he finally came to San Francisco with them. He states that, when they got opposite University Park, Cassidy complained that his shoes were hurting him. They thereupon climbed over the fence [*779] of the park, and sat down under the shade of a tree. After they had been sitting there about 10 minutes, he heard a noise of steam blowing out of a cylinder cock of an engine. He rose up, and looked over, and saw an engine going on to the turntable. Either Mayne or Rice said: "There is an engine. Let's kill her." They jumped over the fence. He followed them over to the engine. When he reached there, Mayne got up on the engine, -- on the left side, -- and Rice on the right side. He got up behind Rice. Cornwall was standing by his lever. He had his head inside the cab when he (Clark) first got up. Then he stuck his head out, and said to some one in front of the engine: "What do you want? A little more ahead. Is she all right, pard?" He believes it was Mayne who replied, "She is all right where she is, George." Cassidy was some distance behind. The witness stayed on Cornwall's engine about a couple [**224] of minutes, and then went over to Minatt's engine. Cassidy also went over. Rice got on the engine, and Cassidy did also. The witness got up behind Cassidy. There was no fire in the fire box; the witness took out a hammer from the tool box on the tank, and disconnected the hose, and took the packing off, and pulled the strainer out, and put the hook and hammer and strainer back in the box. Respecting the conversation he had with Douty, Judah, Donne, and others in the station at San Mateo, he testifies that he was called by Conductor Donne, who said to him: "There is some people in here who want to have a talk with you." He asked: "Who are they?" Donne said: "Douty and Judah. They want to talk with you about the strike. This is no put-up job to put you in a hole, or anything like that." He states that he went in, and was introduced to Douty and Judah. He believes it was Douty who asked them what they had struck for. He told them members of the Oakland Union had been discharged for refusing to handle Pullman cars, and that the union over there had ordered a strike, and Union 345, in San Francisco, -- the union he was a member of, -- indorsed the action of Union 310, and they [**225] struck. Douty said: "What do you want to strike on the Coast Division for? They are not hauling any Pullman cars here." And he wanted him (Clark) to go back to San Francisco, and declare the strike off. Clark told him (Douty) that he could not declare the strike off. Respecting his motive in participating in the killing of the engines, the testimony is as follows:

"Q. (on cross-examination). What was your idea in killing these engines, where there were no Pullmans running on that end of the line, unless it was to help out those that were striking against the Pullmans? A. I do not know. I was with the others, and helped them. Q. You were with the others, and helping them? A. Yes, sir. Q. And you had no idea in the world as to what the object was? A. No, sir."

This concludes the review of the testimony relating to the overt acts charged as having been committed by the defendants at Palo Alto. It is for you to say whether it establishes, to your satisfaction and beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defendants committed any of the following acts charged in the indictment, to wit:

"(1) Forcibly taking possession and control of the * * * engines * * * of the Southern [**226] Pacific Company, by (1) * * * (2) threats, intimidations, [*780] personal assaults, or other acts of force and violence, in, upon, and towards the engineers, firemen, conductors, brakemen, switchmen, agents, and other employes of said company having charge of said * * * engines, etc.

"(2) By forcibly and violently preventing the movement of all trains of the Southern Pacific Company to, from, or through the town of Palo Alto, by (1) gathering in crowds, etc.; (2) by placing physical obstructions upon said track; (3) by displacing the switches; (4) by forcibly and violently assaulting, threatening, and intimidating said engineers, firemen, conductors, brakemen, switchmen, agents, and other employes while engaged as aforesaid; (5) by uncoupling the cars of said trains, and disconnecting the same; (6) by removing said cars from said tracks; (7) by withdrawing the water from the boilers and tanks of said engines, and putting out and removing the fires therein [I call your particular attention to this charge, and the evidence relating to the overt acts under this head]; (8) by displacing and removing valves, pins, bolts, plates, and other appliances and portions of the machinery [**227] of said engines and cars, and of the rails of said railways, thereby loosening said rails; (9) by other violent, forcible, and unlawful acts and means, to the grand jurors unknown."

As I have before explained to you, it is not necessary that the government should prove that all the overt acts charged were committed by the defendants. If you are satisfied, beyond a reasonable doubt, that they committed any one of the acts charged, it will be sufficient, in determining this element of the offense involved in the crime of conspiracy.

Whether the Southern Pacific Company was in June and July last a railway corporation, duly organized and existing under the laws of the state of Kentucky, engaged in the business of a common carrier of the mails of the United States, and of passengers, freight, and express matter, in this district, and over the lines of the railways mentioned in the indictment, is a material fact in the case, which you will be required to find, as you would any other material fact; that is to say, beyond a reasonable doubt. You will recall the testimony of Mr. Lansing upon this point, and the circumstance that no testimony was offered to contradict him in any particular.

[**228] Whether train No. 6, at Palo Alto, on July 6th, was a regular or special train, is immaterial. The testimony tends to show that the train carried the mail, and that it was being carried over post route No. 176,002. Whether some other train was annulled or not is also immaterial. The question is, was this train carrying the mail under the sanction of the postal authorities? If it was, it was a mail train, in the eye of the law.

It is claimed by counsel for the defendants that an intent to obstruct and retard the passage of the mails cannot be inferred against these defendants unless they had knowledge that the mails were on board the train when they killed the engine on the turntable. In the language of Judge Grosscup in the case of U.S. v. Debs (in the United States district court of Illinois) 65 Fed. 211:

"I do not concur in this view. The defendants are properly chargeable with an intent to do all the acts that are the reasonable and natural consequence of the acts done. The laws make all the railways post routes of the United States, and it is within every one's knowledge that a large portion of the passenger trains on these roads carry the mail. There is no stretch, [**229] therefore, either of law or common sense, to presume the person obstructing one of those trains contemplates, among other intents, the obstruction of the mail."

[*781] And in U.S. v. Debs, 64 Fed. 764, Judge Woods, of the circuit court, uses the following language:

"The rule is well settled, and I suppose well understood, that HN13 [↑] all who engage, either as principals, or as advisers, aiders, or abettors, in the commission of an unlawful or criminal act, are individually responsible for the criminal or injurious results which follow the commission or an attempt by any of their number to commit the intended crime or wrong. It is by the same rule that co-conspirators are responsible for the acts and declarations of each other in the furtherance of their unlawful purpose. * * * 'A man may be guilty of a wrong which he did not specifically intend (says Bishop), if it came naturally, or even accidentally, through some other specific, or a general, evil purpose. When, therefore, persons combine to do an unlawful thing, if the act of one, proceeding and growing out of the common plan, terminates in a criminal result, though not the particular result meant, all are liable.'"

But, [**230] aside from this responsibility which the law imposes upon those who commit unlawful acts, the testimony of the defendants Mayne and Cassidy may throw some light on the real motive that actuated the defendants in killing the engine at Palo Alto. When asked by Cornwall if he did not think he had done something serious in stopping the mail, he admits that he replied: "Even if I have, this is a hell of a time to come and tell us of it, after it is all over." And, hearing, soon after, that an officer was after them, the defendants fled from that place. Was the motive "deviltry," as Mayne says; and the consequences, whatever they might be? Was the motive "to be in the swim," as Cassidy says; and the consequences, whatever they might be? If so, how can they avoid responsibility for such consequences?

In considering the testimony relating to the whole case, it will be for you to determine whether there was such a general conspiracy as claimed by the government, involving the members of the American Railway Union in a combination and concert of action to obstruct and retard the passage of the mails of the United States, and in restraint of trade and commerce, and whether these defendants [**231] were members of that conspiracy; but you may also consider the case, under this indictment, within much narrower limits. A conspiracy may have been formed between these defendants, at Palo Alto, while Mayne, Cassidy, Clark, and Rice were sitting under the tree at University Park, to commit an offense against the United States, in obstructing and retarding the passage of the United States mails, and in restraint of trade and commerce, and in pursuance of such conspiracy they committed the overt act of killing the engine on the turntable; and if you believe from the testimony, beyond a reasonable doubt, that they did at that time form a conspiracy to commit such an offense and committed the act they did in pursuance of that conspiracy, it will be your duty to find the defendants guilty on the facts involved in that occurrence alone, without regard to the testimony relating to occurrences elsewhere.

Reasonable Doubt.

This is a criminal case. HN14[] The presumption of innocence is in favor of the defendants. A mere preponderance of testimony, in a criminal case, is not sufficient to justify a verdict of guilty. The burden [*782] of proof is upon the prosecution, and it must prove [**232] every material fact, and establish the guilt of the defendants to your satisfaction, beyond a reasonable doubt. The degree of satisfaction and certainty required is not absolute conviction or certainty, but the evidence must produce that effect on the minds of the individual jurors, so that, after its consideration, he can, in view of his oath, have no reasonable doubt of the guilt of the accused. By 'reasonable doubt,' I mean a reasonable doubt arising out of the evidence, and not an imaginary doubt, a fanciful conjecture, or strained inference, but such a doubt as a reasonable man would act upon, or decline to act upon, when his own concerns are involved, -- a doubt for which a good reason can be given, which reason must be based on the evidence, or the want of evidence. When such a doubt exists, the accused is entitled to its benefit, and should be acquitted. But where the evidence is satisfactory to the impartial mind that the crime was committed; that the defendant committed it as charged, -- when the mind comes naturally and reasonably to this conclusion, from a fair consideration of the evidence, properly, there can be no reasonable doubt, and the prisoner should be convicted.

[**233] Jury Sole Judges of Credibility of the Witnesses.

Now, in relation to all the testimony in this case, you, gentlemen of the jury, are the sole judges of the credibility and the weight which is to be given to the different witnesses who have testified upon this trial. HN15[] A witness is presumed to speak the truth. This presumption, however, may be repelled by the manner in which he testifies; by the character of his testimony, or by the evidence affecting his character for truth, honesty, or integrity, or his motives; by contrary evidence. And you are the exclusive judges of his credibility. In judging the credibility of the witnesses in this case (and their testimony is, to some extent, conflicting), you may believe the whole or any part of the evidence of any witness, or may disbelieve the whole or any part of it, as may be dictated by your judgment as reasonable men. You should carefully scrutinize the testimony given, and in doing so consider all the circumstances under which any witness has testified, his demeanor, his manner while on the stand, the relations which he bears to the government or the defendants, the manner in which he might be affected by the verdict, and the [**234] extent to which he is contradicted or corroborated by other evidence, if at all, and any construction that tends to shed light upon his credibility, and to determine the amount of credence to which each statement is entitled at your hands, as reasonable and intelligent men; but, in this respect, you must remember that your power and duty to judge the effect of evidence is not arbitrary. It must be exercised with legal discretion, and in subordination to the rules of evidence. This is a government of law, and you are charged with its administration in this case without fear, favor, or partiality. An honest, fair, and impartial trial of persons accused of crime is the highest obligation we owe to society. The law, properly administered, affords protection alike to the high and the low, to the rich and the poor. Popular clamor should not direct [*783] it, nor the insinuating influence of prejudice turn it aside. Courts never appeal to the passions, prejudices, or sympathies of a jury, in favor of a prosecution, or against the accused. They seek only equal and exact justice, and appeal only to reason. In this light only is the case presented to you by the court, and it is [**235] with the utmost confidence in your reason and intelligence, and in the fullest belief that you highly appreciate the important duty imposed upon you, that I commit this case to your careful and patient consideration.

NOTE. The jury, after deliberating four days and nights, failed to agree, and were discharged. On the final ballot, 10 jurymen voted for conviction, and 2 for acquittal, upon the count for conspiracy to retard the mails, and 8 for conviction, and 4 for acquittal, on the count for conspiring to obstruct and interfere with interstate commerce.

---

End of Document

United States v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co.

Circuit Court of Appeals, Sixth Circuit

February 8, 1898

No. 498

Reporter

85 F. 271 *; 1898 U.S. App. LEXIS 2157 **

UNITED STATES v. ADDYSTON PIPE & STEEL CO. et al.

Prior History: [**1] Appeal from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Tennessee.

Core Terms

---

contracts, monopoly, manufacture, commerce, prices, restraint of trade, cases, pipe, interstate commerce, void, restrain, territory, covenant, parties, common law, coal, transportation, courts, bid, combinations, anti-trust, conspiracy, articles, chief justice, main purpose, reserved, tending, sales, sugar, salt

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN1 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

If the contract of association is void and unenforceable at the common law because in restraint of trade, it is within the inhibition of the federal antitrust law if the trade it restrains is interstate.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Market Allocation

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Covenants

HN2 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Market Allocation

No conventional restraint of trade can be enforced unless the covenant embodying it is merely ancillary to the main purpose of a lawful contract, and necessary to protect the covenantee in the enjoyment of the legitimate fruits of the contract, or to protect him from the dangers of an unjust use of those fruits by the other party.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Partnership Agreements

Business & Corporate Law > General Partnerships > Management Duties & Liabilities > General Overview

Tax Law > ... > Sales & Exchanges > Business Property > Trade & Business Property

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN3 Types of Contracts, Partnership Agreements

A contract for the sale of property or of business and good will, or for the making of a partnership or a corporation, is not saved from invalidity if it can be shown that it was only part of a plan to acquire all the property used in a business by one management with a view to establishing a monopoly. In such cases the actual intent to monopolize must appear. It is not deemed enough that the mere tendency of the provisions of the contract should be to restrain competition. In such cases the restraint of competition ceases to be ancillary, and becomes the main purpose of the contract, and the transfer of property and good will, or the partnership agreement, is merely ancillary and subordinate to that purpose.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN4 Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

In order to vitiate a contract or combination, it is not essential that its result should be a complete monopoly. It is sufficient if it really tends to that end, and to deprive the public of the advantages which flow from free competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Contracts Law > ... > Affirmative Defenses > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

Real Property Law > Construction Law > General Overview

HN5 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Cartels & Horizontal Restraints

An agreement between intending bidders at a public auction or a public letting not to bid against each other, and thus to prevent competition, is a fraud upon the intending vendor or contractor, and the ensuing sale or contract will be set aside.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

International Trade Law > ... > Exports & Imports > Duties, Fees & Taxes > General Overview

International Trade Law > General Overview

HN6 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Commerce with foreign countries and among the states, strictly considered, consists in intercourse and traffic, and the transportation and transit of persons and property, as well as the purchase, sale, and exchange of commodities. The negotiation of sales of goods which are in another state, for the purpose of introducing them into the state in which the negotiation is made, is interstate commerce. Contracts in restraint of such solicitations, negotiations, and sales are contracts in restraint of interstate commerce.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Commerce Clause > Interstate Commerce > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Commerce Clause > Interstate Commerce > Prohibition of Commerce

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > State Powers

HN7 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The negotiations and making of sales which necessarily involve in their execution the delivery of merchandise across state lines are interstate commerce, and so within the regulating power of Congress even before the transit of the goods in performance of the contract has begun.

Counsel: J. H. Bible and Edward B. Whitney, for the United States.

Frank Spurlock, for appellees.

Opinion by: TAFT

Opinion

---

[*278] Before HARLAN, Circuit Justice, and TAFT and LURTON, Circuit Judges.

TAFT, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court.

The first section of the act of congress entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," passed July 2, 1890 (26 Stat. 209), declares illegal "every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states or with foreign nations." The second section makes it a misdemeanor for any person to monopoize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with others to monopolize, any part of the trade or commerce among the several states. The fourth section of the act gives the circuit courts of the United States jurisdiction to hear and determine proceedings in equity brought by the district attorneys of the United States under the direction of the attorney general to restrain violations of the act.

Two questions are presented [**2] in this case for our decision: First. Was the association of the defendants a contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of trade, as the terms are to be understood in the act? Second. Was the trade thus restrained trade between the states?

The contention on behalf of defendants is that the association would have been valid at common law, and that the federal anti-trust law was not intended to reach any agreements that were not void and unenforceable at common law. It might be a sufficient answer to this contention to point to the decision of the supreme court of the United States in U.S. v. Trans-Missouri Freight Ass'n, 166 U.S. 290, 17 Sup. Ct. 540, in which it was held that contracts in restraint of interstate transportation were within the statute, whether the restraints would be regarded as reasonable at common law or not. It is suggested, however, that that case related to a quasi public employment necessarily under public control, and affecting public interests, and that a less stringent rule of construction applies to contracts restricting parties in sales of merchandise, which is purely a private business, having in it no element of a public or quasi public character. [**3] Whether or not there is substance in such a distinction, -- a question we do not decide, -- it is certain that, HN1 if the contract of association which bound the defendants was void and unenforceable at the common law because in restraint of [*279] trade, it is within the inhibition of the statute if the trade it restrained was interstate. Contracts that were in unreasonable restraint of trade at common law were not unlawful in the sense of being criminal, or giving rise to a civil action for damages in favor of one prejudicially affected thereby, but were simply void, and were not enforced by the courts. Mogul Steamship Co. v. McGregor, Gow & Co., [1892] App. Cas. 25; Hornby v. Close, L.R. 2 Q.B. 153; Lord Campbell, C.J., in Hilton v. Eckersley, 6 El. & Bl. 47, 66; Hannen, J., in Farrer v. Close, L.R. 4 Q.B. 602, 612. The effect of the act of 1890 is to render such contracts unlawful in an affirmative or positive sense, and punishable as a misdemeanor, and to create a right of civil action for damages in favor of those injured thereby, and a civil remedy by injunction in favor of both private persons and the public against the execution of such contracts and the maintenance [**4] of such trade restraints.

The argument for defendants is that their contract of association was not, and could not be, a monopoly, because their aggregate tonnage capacity did not exceed 30 per cent. of the total tonnage capacity of the country; that the restraints upon the members of the association, if restraints they could be called, did not embrace all the states, and were not unlimited in space; that such partial restraints were justified and upheld at common law if reasonable, and only proportioned to the necessary protection of the parties; that in this case the partial restraints were reasonable, because without them each member would be subjected to ruinous competition by the other, and did not exceed in degree of stringency or scope what was necessary to protect the parties in securing prices for their product that were fair and reasonable to themselves and the public; that competition was not stifled by the association because the prices fixed by it had to be fixed with reference to the very active competition of pipe companies which were not members of the association, and which had more than double the defendants' capacity; that in this way the association only modified [**5] and restrained the evils of ruinous competition, while the public had all the benefit from competition which public policy demanded.

From early times it was the policy of Englishmen to encourage trade in England, and to discourage those voluntary restraints which tradesmen were often induced to impose on themselves by contract. Courts recognized this public policy by refusing to enforce stipulations of this character. The objections to such restraints were mainly two. One was that by such contracts a man disabled himself from earning a livelihood with the risk of becoming a public charge, and deprived the community of the benefit of his labor. The other was that such restraints tended to give to the covenantee, the beneficiary of such restraints, a monopoly of the trade, from which he had thus excluded one competitor, and by the same means might exclude others.

Chief Justice Parker, in 1711, in the leading case of Mitchel v. Reynolds, 1 P. Wms. 181, 190, stated these objections as follows:

"First. The mischief which may arise from them (1) to the party by the loss of his livelihood and the subsistence of his family; (2) to the public by depriving it of an useful member. [**6] Another reason is the great abuses these voluntary restraints are liable to; as, for instance, from corporations who are perpetually laboring for exclusive advantages in trade, and to reduce it into as few hands as possible."

[*280] The reasons were stated somewhat more at length in Alger v. Thacher, 19 Pick. 51, 54, in which the supreme judicial court of Massachusetts said:

"The unreasonableness of contracts in restraint of trade and business is very apparent from several obvious considerations: (1) Such contracts injure the parties making them, because they diminish their means of procuring livelihoods and a competency for their families. They tempt improvident persons, for the sake of present gain, to deprive themselves of the power to make future acquisitions; and they expose such persons to imposition and oppression. (2) They tend to deprive the public of the services of men in the employments and capacities in which they may be most useful to the community as well as themselves. (3) They discourage industry and enterprise, and diminish the products of ingenuity and skill. (4) They prevent competition and enhance prices. (5) They expose the public to all the evils [**7] of monopoly; and this especially is applicable to wealthy companies and large corporations, who have the means, unless restrained by law, to exclude rivalry, monopolize business, and engross the market. Against evils like these, wise laws protect individuals and the public by declaring all such contracts void."

The changed conditions under which men have ceased to be so entirely dependent for a livelihood on pursuing one trade, have rendered the first and second considerations stated above less important to the community than they were in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, but the disposition to use every means to reduce competition and create monopolies has grown so much of late that the fourth and fifth considerations mentioned in Alger v. Thacher have certainly lost nothing in weight in the present day, if we may judge from the statute here under consideration and similar legislation by the states.

The inhibition against restraints of trade at common law seems at first to have had no exception. See language of Justice Hull, Year Book, 2 Hen. V., folio 5, pl. 26. After a time it became apparent to the people and the courts that it was in the interest of trade that certain [**8] covenants in restraint of trade should be enforced. It was of importance, as an incentive to industry and honest dealing in trade, that, after a man had built up a business with an extensive good will, he should be able to sell his business and good will to the best advantage, and he could not do so unless he could bind himself by an enforceable contract not to engage in the same business in such a way as to prevent injury to that which he was about to sell. It was equally for the good of the public and trade, when partners dissolved, and one took the business, or they divided the business, that each partner might bind himself not to do anything in trade thereafter which would derogate from his grant of the interest conveyed to his former partner. Again, when two men became partners in a business, although their union might reduce competition, this effect was only an incident to the main purpose of a union of their capital, enterprise, and energy to carry on a successful business, and one useful to the community. Restrictions in the articles of partnership upon the business activity of the members, with a view of securing their entire effort in the common enterprise, were, of course, [**9] only ancillary to the main end of the union, and were to be encouraged. Again, when one in business sold property with which the buyer might set up a rival business, it was certainly reasonable that the seller should be able to restrain the buyer from doing him an injury which, but for the sale, the buyer would be unable to inflict. [*281] This was not reducing competition, but was only securing the seller against an increase of competition of his own creating. Such an exception was necessary to promote the free purchase and sale of property. Again, it was of importance that business men and professional men should have every motive to employ the ablest assistants, and to instruct them thoroughly; but they would naturally be reluctant to do so unless such assistants were able to bind themselves not to set up a rival business in the vicinity after learning the details and secrets of the business of their employers.

In a case of this last kind, Mallan v. May, 11 Mees. & W. 652, Baron Parke said:

"Contracts for the partial restraint of trade are upheld, not because they are advantageous to the individual with whom the contract is made, and a sacrifice pro tanto of the rights [**10] of the community, but because it is for the benefit of the public at large that they should be enforced. Many of these partial restraints on trade are perfectly consistent with public convenience and the general interest, and have been supported. Such is the case of the disposing of a shop in a particular place, with a contract on the part of the vendor not to carry on a trade in the same place. It is, in effect, the sale of a good will, and offers an encouragement to trade by allowing a party to dispose of all the fruits of his industry. * * * And such is the class of cases of much more frequent occurrence, and to which this present case belongs, of a tradesman, manufacturer, or professional man taking a servant or clerk into his service, with a contract that he will not carry on the same trade or profession within certain limits. * * * In such a case the public derives an advantage in the unrestrained choice which such a stipulation gives to the employer of able assistants, and the security it affords that the master will not withhold from the servant instruction in the secrets of his trade, and the communication of his own skill and experience, from the fear of his afterwards [**11] having a rival in the same business."

For the reasons given, then, covenants in partial restraint of trade are generally upheld as valid when they are agreements (1) by the seller of property or business not to compete with the buyer in such a way as to derogate from the value of the property or business sold; (2) by a retiring partner not to compete with the firm; (3) by a partner pending the partnership not to do anything to interfere, by competition or otherwise, with the business of the firm; (4) by the buyer of property not to use the same in competition with the business retained by the seller; and (5) by an assistant, servant, or agent not to compete with his master or employer after the expiration of his time of service. Before such agreements are upheld, however, the court must find that the restraints attempted thereby are reasonably necessary (1, 2, and 3) to the enjoyment by the buyer of the property, good will, or interest in the partnership bought; or (4) to the legitimate ends of the existing partnership; or (5) to the prevention of possible injury to the business of the seller from use by the buyer of the thing sold; or (6) to protection from the danger of loss to [**12] the employer's business caused by the unjust use on the part of the employee of the confidential knowledge acquired in such business. Under the first class come the cases of Mitchel v. Reynolds, 1 P. Wms. 181; Fowle v. Parke, 131 U.S. 88, 9 Sup. Ct. 658; Nordenfeldt v. Maxim Nordenfeldt Co., [1894] App. Cas. 534; Rousillon v. Rousillon, 14 Ch. Div. 351; Cloth Co. v. Lorsont, L.R. 9 Eq. 345; Whittaker v. Howe, 3 Beav. 383; Match Co. v. Roeber, 106 N.Y. 473, 13 N.E. 419; Tode v. Gross, 127 N.Y. 480, 28 N.E. 469; Beal v. Chase, [*282] 31 Mich. 490; Hubbard v. Miller, 27 Mich. 15; National Ben. Co. v. Union Hospital Co., 45 Minn. 272, 47 N.W. 806; Whitney v. Slayton, 40 Me. 224; Pierce v. Fuller, 8 Mass. 222; Richards v. Seating Co., 87 Wis. 503, 58 N.W. 787. In the second class are Tallis v. Tallis, 1 El. & Bl. 391, and Lange v. Werk, 2 Ohio St. 520. In the third class are Machinery Co. v. Dolph, 138 U.S. 617, 11 Sup. Ct. 412, Id., 28 Fed. 553, and Matthews v. Associated Press, 136 N.Y. 333, 32 N.E. 981. In the fourth class are American Strawboard Co. v. Haldeman Paper Co., 83 Fed. 619, and Hitchcock v. Anthony, Id. 779, both decisions of this court; Navigation Co. v. Winsor, 201<sup>**131</sup> Wall. 64; Dunlop v. Gregory, 10 N.Y. 241; Hodge v. Sloan, 107 N.Y. 244, 17 N.E. 335. While in the fifth class are the cases of Homer v. Ashford, 3 Bing. 322; Horner v. Graves, 7 Bing. 735; Hitchcock v. Coker, 6 Adol. & E. 454; Ward v. Byrne, 5 Mees & W. 547; Dubowski v. Goldstein, [1896] 1 Q.B. 478; Peels v. Saalfeld, [1892] 2 Ch. 149; Taylor v. Blanchard, 13 Allen, 370; Keeler v. Taylor, 53 Pa. St. 467; Herreshoff v. Boutineau, 17 R.I. 3, 19 Atl. 712.

It would be stating it too strongly to say that these five classes of covenants in restraint of trade include all of those upheld as valid at the common law; but it would certainly seem to follow from the tests laid down for determining the validity of such an agreement that HN2↑] no conventional restraint of trade can be enforced unless the covenant embodying it is merely ancillary to the main purpose of a lawful contract, and necessary to protect the covenantee in the enjoyment of the legitimate fruits of the contract, or to protect him from the dangers of an unjust use of those fruits by the other party. In Horner v. Graves, 7 Bing. 735, Chief Justice Tindal, who seems to be regarded as the highest English judicial authority on this [*284] branch of the law (see Lord Macnaghten's judgment in Nordenfeldt v. Maxim Nordenfelt Co., [1894] App. Cas. 535, 567), used the following language:

"We do not see how a better test can be applied to the question whether this is or not a reasonable restraint of trade than by considering whether the restraint is such only as to afford a fair protection to the interests of the party in favor of whom it is given, and not so large as to interfere with the interests of the public. Whatever restraint is larger than the necessary protection of the party requires can be of no benefit to either. It can only be oppressive. It is, in the eye of the law, unreasonable. Whatever is injurious to the interests of the public is void on the ground of public policy."

This very statement of the rule implies that the contract must be one in which there is a main purpose, to which the covenant in restraint of trade is merely ancillary. The covenant is inserted only to protect one of the parties from the injury which, in the execution of the contract or enjoyment of its fruits, he may suffer from the unrestrained competition of the other. The main purpose of the contract suggests the measure of [*285] protection needed, and furnishes a sufficiently uniform standard by which the validity of such restraints may be judicially determined. In such a case, if the restraint exceeds the necessity presented by the main purpose of the contract, it is void for two reasons: First, because it oppresses the covenantor, without any corresponding benefit to the covenantee; and, second, because it tends to a monopoly. But where the sole object of both parties in making the contract as expressed therein is merely to restrain competition, and enhance or maintain prices, it would seem that there was nothing to justify or excuse [*283] the restraint, that it would necessarily have a tendency to monopoly, and therefore would be void. In such a case there is no measure of what is necessary to the protection of either party, except the vague and varying opinion of judges as to how much, on principles of political economy, men ought to be allowed to restrain competition. There is in such contracts no main lawful purpose, to subserve which partial restraint is permitted, and by which its reasonableness is measured, but the sole object is to restrain trade in order to avoid the competition which [*286] it has always been the policy of the common law to foster.

Much has been said in regard to the relaxing of the original strictness of the common law in declaring contracts in restraint of trade void as conditions of civilization and public policy have changed, and the argument drawn therefrom is that the law now recognizes that competition may be so ruinous as to injure the public, and, therefore, that contracts made with a view to check such ruinous competition and regulate prices, though in restraint of trade, and having no other purpose, will be upheld. We think this conclusion is unwarranted by the authorities when all of them are considered. It is true that certain rules for determining whether a covenant in restraint of trade ancillary to the main purpose of a contract was reasonably adapted and limited to the necessary protection of a party in the carrying out of such purpose have been somewhat modified by modern authorities. In Mitchel v. Reynolds, 1 P. Wms. 181, the leading early case on the subject, in which the main object of the contract was the sale of a bake house, and there was a covenant to protect the purchaser against competition by the seller in the bakery business, [**17] Chief Justice Parker laid down the rule that it must appear before such a covenant could be enforced that the restraint was not general, but particular or partial, as to places or persons, and was upon a good and adequate consideration, so as to make it a proper and useful contract. Subsequently, it was decided in Hitchcock v. Coker, 6 Adol. & E.454, that the adequacy of the consideration was not to be inquired into by the court if it was a legal one, and that the operation of the covenant need not be limited in time. More recently the limitation that the restraint could not be general or unlimited as to space has been modified in some cases by holding that, if the protection necessary to the covenantee reasonably requires a covenant unrestricted as to space, it will be upheld as valid. Whittaker v. Howe, 3 Beav. 383; Cloth Co. v. Lorsont, L.R. 9 Eq. 345; Rousillon v. Rousillon, 14 Ch. Div. 351; Nordenfeldt v. Maxim Nordenfeldt Co., [1894] App. Cas. 535. See, also, Fowle v. Park, 131 U.S. 88, 9 Sup. Ct. 658; Match Co. v. Roeber, 106 N.Y. 473, 13 N.E. 419. But these cases all involved contracts in which the covenant in restraint of trade was ancillary to the main and lawful purpose [**18] of the contract, and was necessary to the protection of the covenantee in the carrying out of that main purpose. They do not manifest any general disposition on the part of the courts to be more liberal in supporting contracts having for their sole object the restraint of trade than did the courts of an earlier time. It is true that there are some cases in which the courts, mistaking, as we conceive, the proper limits of the relaxation of the rules for determining the unreasonableness of restraints of trade, have [*284] set sail on a sea of doubt, and have assumed the power to say, in respect to contracts which have no other purpose and no other consideration on either side than the mutual restraint of the parties, how much restraint of competition is in the public interest, and how much is not.

The manifest danger in the administration of justice according to so shifting, vague, and indeterminate a standard would seem to be a strong reason against adopting it. The cases assuming such a power in the courts are Wickens v. Evans, 3 Younge & J. 318; Collins v. Locke, 4 App. Cas 674; Ontario Salt Co. v. Merchants' Salt Co., 18 Grant (U.C.) 540; Kellogg v. Larkin, 3 Pin. 123; [**19] Leslie v. Lorillard, 110 N.Y. 519, 18 N.E. 363.

In Wickens v. Evans, three trunk manufacturers of England, who had competed with each other throughout the realm to their loss, agreed to divide England into three districts, each party to have one district exclusively for this trade, and, if any stranger should invade the district of either as a competitor, they agreed "to meet to devise means to promote their own views." The restraint was held partial and reasonable, because it left the trade open to any third party in either district. In answer to the subjection that such an agreement to divide up the beer business of London among the London brewers would lead to the abuses of monopoly, it was replied that outside competition would soon cure such abuses, -- an answer that would validate the most complete local monopoly of the present day. It may be, as suggested by the court, that local monopolies cannot endure long, because their very existence tempts outside capital into competition; but the public policy embodied in the common law requires the discouragement of monopolies, however temporary their existence may be. The public interest may suffer severely while new competition [**20] is slowly developing. The case can hardly be reconciled with later cases, hereafter to be referred to, in England and America. It is true that there was in this case no direct evidence of a desire by the parties to regulate prices, and it has been sometimes explained on the theory that the agreement was solely to reduce the expenses incident to a business covering the realm by restricting its territorial extent; but it is difficult to escape the conclusion that the restraint upon each two of the three parties was imposed to secure to the other a monopoly and power to control prices in the territory assigned to him, because the final clause in the contract implies that, when it was executed, there were no other competitors except the parties in the territory divided.

Collins v. Locke was a case in the privy council. The action was brought to enforce certain articles of agreement by and between four of the leading master stevedore contracting firms in Melbourne, Australia, who did practically all the business at that port. The court (composed of Sir Barnes Peacock, Sir Montague E. Smith, and Sir Robert P. Collier) describes the scope and purposes of the agreement and the view of [**21] the court as follows:

"The objects which this agreement has in view are to parcel out the stevedoring business of the port among the parties to it, and so to prevent competition, at least among themselves, and also, it may be, to keep up the price to be paid for the work. Their lordships are not prepared to say that an agreement having these objects is invalid if carried into effect by proper means, -- that is, by [*285] provisions reasonably necessary for the purpose, -- though the effect of them might be to create a partial restraint upon the power of the parties to exercise their trade."

No attempt is made to justify the view thus comprehensively stated, or to support it by authority, or to reconcile it with the general doctrine of the common law that contracts restraining competition, raising prices, and tending to a monopoly, as this is conceded by the court to have been, are void. The court ignores the public interest that prices shall be regulated by competition, and assumes the power in the court to uphold and enforce a contract securing a monopoly if it affect only one port, so as to be but a partial restraint of trade. The case is directly at variance with the [**22] decision of the supreme court of Illinois in More v. Bennett, 140 Ill. 69, 29 N.E. 888, hereafter discussed, and cannot be reconciled in principle with many of the other cases cited.

The Canadian case of Ontario Salt Co. v. Merchants' Salt Co. is another one upon which counsel for the defendants rely. That was the decision of a vice chancellor. Six salt companies, in order to maintain prices, combined, and put their business under the control of a committee, and agreed not to sell except through the committee. It was held that because it appeared that there were other salt companies in the province, and because the combiners denied that they intended to raise prices, but only to maintain them, the contract of union was not in unlawful restraint of trade. The conclusion and argument of the court in Salt Co. v. Guthrie, 35 Ohio St. 666, hereafter stated, would seem to be a sufficient answer to this case.

Kellogg v. Larkin, 3 Pin. 123, was an early case in Wisconsin, in which the action was on the covenant of a warehouseman in a lease of his warehouse, by which he agreed to devote his services to the lessee at certain compensation, and not to purchase or store wheat in the Milwaukee [**23] market. The covenant was held valid. Had nothing else appeared in the case, the conclusion would have been clearly right, because such a covenant might well have been reasonably necessary to the protection of the lessee in his enjoyment of the warehouse and the good will of the lessor. But it further appeared that this lease, with the covenant, was only one of many such executed by the warehousemen of Milwaukee to the united grain dealers of that city, to enable the latter to obtain absolute control of the wheat market in Milwaukee. The court held the latter combination valid also. The decision cannot be upheld, in view of the more modern authorities hereafter referred to.

The case of Leslie v. Lorillard, 110 N.Y. 519, 18 N.E. 363, would seem to be an authority against our view. In that case a stockholder sought to restrain the payment of an annual payment about to be made by the Old Dominion Steamship Company under a contract by which it bought off the Lorillard Steamship Company from continuing in competition with it in carrying passengers and freight between New York and Norfolk. The contract was held valid, although it had no purpose except the restraining of competition, [**24] and, so far as appears, the obtaining of the complete control of the business. The case is rested on Match Co. v. Roeber, 106 N.Y. 473, 13 N.E. 419, which was a case of the purchase of property and good will. It proceeds on the [*286] general proposition "that competition is not invariably a public benefaction; for it may be carried on to such a degree as to become a general evil," and thus leaves it to the discretion of the court to say how much competition is desirable, and how much is mischievous, and accordingly to determine whether a contract is bad or not. The case is directly opposed to Anderson v. Jett, 89 Ky. 375, 12 S.W. 670, hereafter cited. It should be said that nothing appears in the report of the case to show directly that the purpose of the contract was to reserve the entire business to the Dominion Company, or to secure to it the power of regulating prices, but this natural inference from the terms of the contract is not negatived.

The case of Mogul Steamship Co. v. McGregor, Gow & Co., [1892] App. Cas. 25, has been cited to sustain the position of the defendants. It does not do so. It was a suit for damages, brought by a company engaged in the tea-carrying [**25] trade at Hankow, China, against six other companies engaged in the same trade, for loss inflicted by an alleged unlawful conspiracy entered into by them to drive the plaintiff out of the trade, and to obtain control of the trade themselves. It appeared that the defendants agreed to conform to a plan of association, by which they should constantly underbid the plaintiff, and take away his trade by offering exceptional and very favorable terms to customers dealing exclusively with the members of the association, and that they did this to control the business the next season after he had been thus driven out of competition. It was held by the house of lords that this was not an unlawful and indictable conspiracy, giving rise to a cause of action by the person injured thereby; but it was not held that the contract of association entered into by the defendants was not void and unenforceable at common law. On the contrary, Lord Bramwell, in his judgment (at page 46), and Lord Hannen, in his (at page 58), distinctly say that the contract of association was void as in restraint of trade; but all the law lords were of opinion that contracts void as in restraint of trade were not unlawful [**26] in a criminal sense, and gave no right of action for damages to one injured thereby. The statute we are considering expressly gives such contracts a criminal and unlawful character. It is manifest, therefore, that whatever of relevancy the Mogul Steamship Co. Case has in this discussion makes for, rather than against, our conclusion.

Two other cases deserve mention here. They are Roller Co. v. Cushman, 143 Mass. 353, 9 N.E. 629, and Gloucester Isinglass & Glue Co. v. Russia Cement Co., 154 Mass. 92, 27 N.E. 1005. In these cases it was held that contracts in restraint of trade are not invalid if they affect trade in articles which, though useful and convenient, are not articles of prime or public necessity, and therefore contracts between dealers made to secure complete control of the manufacture and sale of such articles were supported. In the first case the article involved was a fastening of a certain shade roller, and in the other was glue made from fish skins. We think the cases hereafter cited show that the common law rule against restraint of trade extends to all articles of merchandise, and that the introduction of such a distinction only furnishes another opportunity [**27] for courts to give effect to the varying economical opinions of its individual [*287] members. It might be difficult to say why it was any more important to prevent restraints of trade in beer, mineral water, leather cloth, and wire cloth than of trade in curtain shades or glue. However this may be, the cases do not touch the case at bar, because the same court, in Telegraph Co. v. Crane, 160 Mass. 50, 35 N.E. 98, held that fire-alarm telegraph instruments were articles of sufficient public necessity to render unreasonable restraints of trade in them void, and certainly such articles are not more necessary for public use than water, gas, and sewer pipe.

There are other cases upon which counsel of defendants rely, which, in our judgment, have no bearing on the issue, or, if they have, are clearly within the rules we have already stated. One is a case in which a railroad company made a contract with a sleeping-car company by which the latter agreed to do the sleeping-car business of the railway company on a number of conditions, one of which was that no other company should be allowed to engage in the sleeping-car business on the same line. Chicago, St. L. & N.O.R. Co. v. Pullman Southern Car Co., 139 U.S. 79, 11 Sup. Ct. 490. The main purpose of such a contract is to furnish sleeping-car facilities to the public. The railroad company may discharge this duty itself to the public, and allow no one else to do it, or it may hire some one to do it, and, to secure the necessary investment of capital in the discharge of the duty, may secure to the sleeping-car company the same freedom from competition that it would have itself in discharging the duty. The restraint upon itself is properly proportioned to, and is only ancillary to, the main purpose of the contract, which is to secure proper facilities to the public. Exactly the same principle applies to similarly exclusive contracts with express companies, and stock-yard delivery companies. Express Cases, 117 U.S. 1, 6 Sup. Ct. 542, 628; Stock-Yards Co. v. Keith, 139 U.S. 128, 11 Sup. Ct. 461; Butchers' & Drovers' Stock-Yards Co. v. Louisville & N.R. Co., 31 U.S. App. 252, 14 C.C.A. 290, and 67 Fed. 35. The fact is that it is quite difficult to conceive how competition would be possible upon the same line of railway between sleeping-car companies or express companies. Such contracts involve the hauling [**29] of sleeping cars or express cars on each express train, the assignment of offices in each station, and various running arrangements, which it would be an intolerable burden upon the railroad company to make and execute for two companies at the same time. And the same is true of contracts with a stock delivery company. The railway company could not ordinarily be expected to have more than one general station for the delivery of cattle in any one town. It would only be required by the nature of its employment to furnish such facilities as were reasonably sufficient for the business at that place. There is hardly more objection on the ground of public policy to such a restriction upon a railway company in cases like these than there would be to a restriction upon a lessor not to allow the subject-matter of the lease to be enjoyed by any one but the lessee during the lease. The privilege, when granted, is hardly capable of other than exclusive enjoyment. The public interest is satisfactorily secured by the requirement, which may be enforced by any member of the public, to [*288] wit, that the charges allowed shall not be unreasonable, and the business is of such a public character [**30] that it is entirely subject to legislative regulation in the same interest.

Having considered the cases upon which the counsel for the defendants have relied to maintain the proposition that contracts having no purpose but to restrain competition and maintain prices, if reasonable, will be held valid, we must now pass in rapid review the cases that make for an opposite view.

In People v. Sheldon, 139 N.Y. 251, 34 N.E. 785, all the coal dealers in the city of Lockport, N.Y., entered into a contract of association, forming a coal exchange to prevent competition by constituting the exchange the sole authority to fix the price to be charged by members for coal sold by them, and the price was thus fixed. The court approved a charge to the jury that even if this was merely a combination between independent coal dealers to prevent competition between themselves for the due protection of the parties to it against ruinous rivalry, and although no attempt was made to charge unreasonable or excessive prices, it was inimical to trade and commerce, whatever might be done under it, and was within the state statute making a conspiracy injurious to trade indictable. Said Andrews, C.J. (page I\*\*311 264, 139 N.Y., and page 789, 34 N.E.):

"If agreements and combinations to prevent competition in prices are or may be hurtful to trade, the only sure remedy is to prohibit all agreements of that character. If the validity of such an agreement was made to depend upon actual proof of public prejudice or injury, it would be very difficult in any case to establish the invalidity, although the moral evidence might be very convincing."

See, to the same effect, Judd v. Harrington, 139 N.Y. 105, 34 N.E. 790; Leonard v. Poole, 114 N.Y. 371, 21 N.E. 707; De Witt Wire-Cloth Co. v. New Jersey Wire-Cloth Co. \(Com. Pl.\) 14 N.Y. Supp. 277.

In Morris Run Coal Co. v. Barclay Coal Co., 68 Pa. St. 173, five coal companies controlling the bituminous coal trade in Northern Pennsylvania agreed to allow a committee to fix prices and rates of freight, and to fix proportion of sales by each. Competition was not destroyed, because the anthracite coal and Cumberland bituminous coal were sold in competition with this coal. The association was, nevertheless, held void, as in illegal restraint of trade and competition, and tending to injure the public. In Nester v. Brewing Co., 161 Pa. St. 473, 29 Atl. I\*\*321 102, 45 brewers in Philadelphia made an agreement to sell beer in Philadelphia and Camden at a certain price to be fixed by a committee of their number. Though beer could hardly be said to be an article of prime necessity like coal, yet, as it was an article of merchandise, the contract was held void, as in restraint of trade, and tending to a monopoly.

In Salt Co. v. Guthrie, 35 Ohio St. 666, the salt manufacturers of a salt producing territory in Ohio, with some exceptions, combined to regulate the price of salt by preventing ruinous competition between themselves, and agreed to sell only at prices fixed by a committee of their number. The supreme court of Ohio held the contract void. Judge McIlvaine, who delivered the opinion of the court, said:

[*289] "The clear tendency of such an agreement is to establish a monopoly, and to destroy competition in trade, and for that reason, on the ground of public policy, courts will not aid in its enforcement. It is no answer to say that competition in the salt trade was not in fact destroyed, or that the price of the commodity was not unreasonably advanced. Courts will not stop to inquire as to the degree of injury inflicted upon [**33] the public. It is enough to know that the inevitable tendency of such contracts is injurious to the public."

Other Ohio cases which presented similar facts, and in which the same rule was enforced, are Emery v. Candle Co., 47 Ohio St. 320, 24 N.E. 660, and Hoffman v. Brooks, 11 Wkly. Law Bul. 258.

In Anderson v. Jett, 89 Ky. 375, 12 S.W. 670, two owners of steamboats running on the Kentucky river made an agreement to keep up rates, and divide net profits, to prevent ruinous competition and reduced rates. The contract was held void.

In Chapin v. Brown, 83 Iowa, 156, 48 N.W. 1074, the grocerymen in a town, in order to avoid a trade in butter which was burdensome, agreed not to buy any butter or to take it in trade except for use in their own families, so as to throw the business into the hands of one man who dealt in butter exclusively. The agreement was held invalid, because in restraint of trade, and tending to create a monopoly.

In Craft v. McConoughy, 79 Ill. 346, five grain dealers in Rochelle, Ill., agreed to conduct their business as if independent of each other, but secretly to fix prices at which they would sell grain, and to divide profits in a certain proportion. [**34] This was held void, as in restraint of trade, and tending to create a monopoly. In More v. Bennett, 140 Ill. 69, 29 N.E. 888, articles of association entered into by only a part of the stenographers of Chicago to fix a schedule of prices, and prevent competition among their members and a consequent reduction of prices, was held void. The court said:

"A combination among a number of persons engaged in a particular business to stifle or prevent competition, and thereby to enhance or diminish prices to a point above or below what they would be if left to the influence of unrestricted competition, is contrary to public policy. Contracts in partial restraint of trade which the law sustains are those entered into by a vendor of a business and its good will with its vendee, by which the vendor agrees not to engage in the same business within a limited territory; and the restraint, to be valid, must be no more extensive than is reasonably necessary for the protection of the vendee in the enjoyment of the business purchased."

As already said, this case is in direct conflict with Collins v. Locke, 4 App. Cas. 674, discussed above. To the same effect as More v. Bennett are Ford v. Association, 155 Ill. 166, 39 N.E. 651, and Bishop v. Preservers Co., 157 Ill. 284, 41 N.E. 765.

In Association v. Niezerowski, 95 Wis. 129, 70 N.W. 166, the suit was on a note given in pursuance of the secret rules of an association of 60 out of the 75 master masons in Milwaukee, by which all bids for work about to be let were first made to the association, and the lowest bidder was then required to add 6 per cent. to his bid, and, if the bid was more than 8 per cent. below the next lowest bidder, more than 6 per cent. might be added. Each member was required to pay to the association 6 per cent. of his estimates when due, for subsequent distribution. In declaring the contract void, the court said:

[*290] "The combination in question is contrary to public policy, and strikes at the interests of those of the public desiring to build, and between whom and the association or the members thereof there exist no contract relations."

In Vulcan Powder Co. v. Hercules Powder Co., 96 Cal. 510, 31 Pac. 581, four power companies of California agreed that each should sell at a price to be fixed by a committee of their representatives, and should pay over to the others the profits on any excess [**36] of sales over a fixed proportion of the total sales. The contract was held void.

In Oil Co. v. Adoue, 83 Tex. 650, 19 S.W. 274, five owners of cottonseed oil mills in Texas made an agreement not to sell at less than certain agreed prices. One guaranteed profits to the four others, and suit was brought on the guaranty. It was held void, as restraining trade, and tending to a monopoly, even though the evidence failed to establish that it effected a monopoly.

In Association v. Kock, 14 La Ann. 168, eight commercial firms in New Orleans holding a large quantity of cotton bagging entered into an agreement by which they stipulated that for three months no member should sell a bale except by a vote of the majority. It was held that the contract was "palpably and unequivocally a combination in restraint of trade, and to enhance the price in the market of an article of primary necessity to cotton planters. Such combinations are contrary to public order, and cannot be enforced in a court of justice."

In Hilton v. Eckersley, 6 El. & Bl. 47, it was held that an agreement between 18 cotton manufacturers of submit to the control of a committee of their number for 12 months the question [**37] as to prices to be paid for labor and the terms of employment, in order to resist the aggressions of an association of workingmen, was void and unenforceable, because in restraint of trade.

In Urmston v. Whitelegg, 63 L.T. (N.S.) 455, a case in the queen's bench division, before Day and Lawrence, JJ., the action was brought to enforce a penalty under the rules of the Bolton Mineral Water Manufacturers' Association, which recited that the object of the association was to maintain the price of mineral water, and bound the members for 10 years not to sell at less than 9d. a dozen bottles, or at not less than any higher price fixed by the committee, on penalty of £ 10 for each violation. Day, J., said:

"If a contract for raising prices against the public interest is a contract in restraint of trade, this is undoubtedly such a contract. During the last hundred years great changes have taken place in the views of the public, to the legislature, and therefore of the judges, on the matter, and many old-fashioned offenses have disappeared; But the rule still obtains that combination for the mere purpose of raising prices is not enforceable in a court of law. This contract is illegal [**38] in the sense of not being enforceable. It is not necessary that it should be such as to form the ground of criminal proceedings."

In the foregoing cases the only consideration of the agreement restraining the trade of one party was the agreement of the other to the same effect, and there was no relation of partnership, or of vendor and vendee, or of employer and employee. Where such relation exists between the parties, as already stated, restraints are usually enforceable if commensurate only with the reasonable protection [*291] of the covenantee in respect to the main transactions affected by the contract. But, in recent years, even the fact that the HN3 [ ] contract is one for the sale of property or of business and good will, or for the making of a partnership or a corporation, has not saved it from invalidity if it could be shown that it was only part of a plan to acquire all the property used in a business by one management with a view to establishing a monopoly. Such cases go a step further than those already considered. In them the actual intent to monopolize must appear. It is not deemed enough that the mere tendency of the provisions of the contract should be to restrain [**39] competition. In such cases the restraint of competition ceases to be ancillary, and becomes the main purpose of the contract, and the transfer of property and good will, or the partnership agreement, is merely ancillary and subordinate to that purpose. The principal cases of this class are Richardson v. Buhl, 77 Mich. 632, 43 N.W. 1102; Anot v. Coal Co., 68 N.Y. 558; People v. Milk Exchange, 145 N.Y. 267, 39 N.E. 1062; People v. Refining Co., 54 Hun, 366, 7 N.Y. Supp. 406; State v. Nebraska Distilling Co., 29 Neb. 700, 46 N.W. 155; State v. Standard Oil Co., 49 Ohio St. 137, 30 N.E. 279; Manufacturing Co. v. Klotz, 44 Fed. 721; Distilling & Cattle Feeding Co. v. People, 156 Ill. 448, 41 N.E. 188; Carbon Co. v. McMillin, 119 N.Y. 46, 23 N.E. 530; Harrow Co. v. Hench, 83 Fed. 36; Factor Co. v. Adler, 90 Cal. 110, 27 Pac. 36; Lumber Co. v. Hayes, 76 Cal. 387, 18 Pac. 391.

In addition to the cases cited, there are others which sustain the general principle, but in them there exists the additional reason for holding the contracts invalid that the parties were engaged in a quasi public employment. They are Gibbs v. Gas Co., 130 U.S. 396, 9 Sup. Ct. 553; People v. Chicago Gas Trust [**40] Co., 130 Ill. 268, 22 N.E. 798; Stockton v. Railroad Co., 50 N.J. Eq. 52, Atl. 964; West Va. Transp. Co. v. Ohio River Pipe-Line Co., 22 W. Va. 600; Hooker v. Vandewater, 4 Denio, 349; Stanton v. Allen, 5 Denio, 434; Railroad Co. v. Collins, 40 Ga. 582; Hazlehurst v. Railroad Co., 43 Ga. 13.

Upon this review of the law and the authorities, we can have no doubt that the association of the defendants, however reasonable the prices they fixed, however great the competition they had to encounter, and however great the necessity for curbing themselves by joint agreement from committing financial suicide by ill-advised competition, was void at common law, because in restraint of trade, and tending to a monopoly. But the facts of the case do not require us to go so far as this, for they show that the attempted justification of this association on the grounds stated is without foundation.

The defendants, being manufacturers and vendors of cast-iron pipe, entered into a combination to raise the prices for pipe for all the states west and south of New York, Pennsylvania, and Virginia, constituting considerably more than three-quarters of the territory of the United States, and significantly [**41] called by the associates "pay territory." Their joint annual output was 220,000 tons. The total capacity of all the other cast-iron pipe manufacturers in the pay territory was 170,500 tons. Of this, 45,000 tons was the capacity [*292] of mills in Texas, Colorado, and Oregon, so far removed from that part of the pay territory where the demand was considerable that necessary freight rates excluded them from the possibility of competing, and 12,000 tons was the possible annual capacity of a mill at St. Louis, which was practically under the same management as that of one of the defendants' mills. Of the remainder of the mills in pay territory and outside of the combination, one was at Columbus, Ohio, two in northern Ohio, and one in Michigan. Their aggregate possible annual capacity was about one-half the usual annual output of the defendants' mills. They were, it will be observed, at the extreme northern end of the pay territory, while the defendants' mills at Cincinnati, Louisville, Chattanooga, and South Pittsburg, and Anniston, and Bessemer, were grouped much nearer to the center of the pay territory. The freight upon cast-iron pipe amounts to a considerable percentage [**42] of the price at which manufacturers can deliver it at any great distance from the place of manufacture. Within the margin of the freight per ton which Eastern manufacturers would have to pay to deliver pipe in pay territory, the defendants, by controlling two-thirds of the output in pay territory, were practically able to fix prices. The competition of the Ohio and Michigan mills, of course, somewhat affected their power in this respect in the northern part of the pay territory; but, the further south the place of delivery was to be, the more complete the monopoly over the trade which the defendants were able to exercise, within the limit already described. Much evidence is adduced upon affidavit to prove that defendants had no power arbitrarily to fix prices, and that they were always obliged to meet competition. To the extent that they could not impose prices on the public in excess of the cost price of pipe with freight from the Atlantic seaboard added, this is true; but, within that limit, they could fix prices as they chose. The most cogent evidence that they had this power is the fact, everywhere apparent in the record, that they exercised it. The details of the way in [**43] which it was maintained are somewhat obscured by the manner in which the proof was adduced in the court below, upon affidavits solely, and without the clarifying effect of cross-examination, but quite enough appears to leave no doubt of the ultimate fact. The defendants were, by their combination, therefore able to deprive the public in a large territory of the advantages otherwise accruing to them from the proximity of defendants' pipe factories, and, by keeping prices just low enough to prevent competition by Eastern manufacturers, to compel the public to pay an increase over what the price would have been, if fixed by competition between defendants, nearly equal to the advantage in freight rates enjoyed by defendants over Eastern competitors. The defendants acquired this power by voluntarily agreeing to sell only at prices fixed by their committee, and by allowing the highest bidder at the secret "auction pool" to become the lowest bidder of them at the public letting. Now, the restraint thus imposed on themseleves was only partial. It did not cover the United States. There was not a complete monopoly. It was tempered by the fear of competition, and it affected only a part [**44] of the price. But this certainly does not [*293] take the contract of association out of the annulling effect of the rule against monopolies. In U.S. v. E.C. Knight Co., 156 U.S. 1, 16, 15 Sup. Ct. 255, Chief Justice Fuller, in speaking for the court, said:

"Again, all the authorities agree that, HN4↑ in order to vitiate a contract or combination, it is not essential that its result should be a complete monopoly. It is sufficient if it really tends to that end, and to deprive the public of the advantages which flow from free competition."

It has been earnestly pressed upon us that the prices at which the cast-iron pipe was sold in pay territory were reasonable. A great many affidavits of purchasers of pipe in pay territory, all drawn by the same hand or from the same model, are produced, in which the affiants say that, in their opinion, the prices at which pipe has been sold by defendants have been reasonable. We do not think the issue an important one, because, as already stated, we do not think that at common law there is any question of reasonableness open to the courts with reference to such a contract. Its tendency was certainly to give defendants the power to charge [**45] unreasonable prices, had they chosen to do so. But, if it were important, we should unhesitatingly find that the prices charged in the instances which were in evidence were unreasonable. The letters from the manager of the Chattanooga foundry written to the other defendants, and discussing the prices fixed by the association, do not leave the slightest doubt upon this point, and outweigh the perfunctory affidavits produced by the defendants. The cost of producing pipe at Chattanooga, together with a reasonable profit, did not exceed $15 a ton. It could have been delivered at Atlanta at $17 to $18 a ton, and yet the lowest price which that foundry was permitted by the rules of the association to bid was $24.25. The same thing was true all through pay territory to a greater or less degree, and especially at "reserved cities."

Another aspect of this contract of association brings it within the term used in the statute, "a conspiracy in restraint of trade." A conspiracy is a combination of two or more persons to accomplish an unlawful end by lawful means or a lawful end by unlawful means. In the answer of the defendants, it is averred that the chief way in which cast-iron pipe [**46] is sold is by contracts let after competitive bidding invited by the intending purchaser. It would have must interfered with the smooth working of defendants' association had its existence and purposes become known to the public. A part of the plan was a deliberate attempt to create in the minds of the members of the public inviting bids the belief that competition existed between the defendants. Several of the defendants were required to bid at every letting, and to make their bids at such prices that the one already selected to obtain the contract should have the lowest bid. It is well settled that HN5↑ an agreement between intending bidders at a public auction or a public letting not to bid against each other, and thus to prevent competition, is a fraud upon the intending vendor or contractor, and the ensuing sale or contract will be set aside. Breslin v. Brown, 24 Ohio St. 565; Atcheson v. Mallon, 43 N.Y. 147; Loyd v. Malone, 23 Ill. 41; Wooton v. Hinkle, 20 Mo. 290; Phioppen v. Stickney, 3 Metc. (Mass.) 384; Kearney v. Taylor, 15 How. 494, 519; [*294] Wilbur v. How, 8 Johns. 444; Hannah v. Fife, 27 Mich. 172; Gibbs v. Smith, 115 Mass. 592; Swan v. Chorpenning, 20 Cal. 182; [**47] Gardiner v. Morse, 25 Me. 140; Ingram v. Ingram, 49 N.C. 188; Brisbane v. Adams, 3 N.Y. 129; Woodruff v. Berry, 40 Ark. 251; Wald, Pol. Cont. 310, note by Mr. Wald, and cases cited. The case of Jones v. North, L.R. 19 Eq. 426, to the contrary, cannot be supported. The largest purchasers of pipe are municipal corporations, and they are by law required to solicit bids for the sale of pipe in order that the public may get the benefit of competition. One of the means adopted by the defendants in their plan of combination was this illegal and fraudulent effort to evade such laws, and to deceive intending purchasers. No matter what the excuse for the combination by defendants in restraint of trade, the illegality of the means stamps it as a conspiracy, and so brings in within that term of the federal statute.

The second question is whether the trade restrained by the combination of the defendants was interstate trade. The mills of the defendants were situated, two in Alabama, two in Tennessee, one in Kentucky, and one in Ohio. The invariable custom in sales of pipe required the seller to deliver the pipe at the place where it was to be used by the buyer, and to include in the price [**48] the cost of delivery. The contracts, as the answer of the defendants avers, were invariably made after public letting at the home, and in the state, of the buyer. The pay territory, sales in which it was the professed object of the defendants to regulate by their contract of association, included 36 states. The cities which were especially reserved for the benefit of the defendants were Atlanta and Anniston, reserved to the Anniston mill, in Alabama; New Orleans and Chattanooga, reserved to the Chattanooga mill, in Tennessee; St. Louis and Birmingham, reserved to the Bessemer mill, in Alabama; Omaha, reserved to the South Pittsburg mill, in Tennessee; Louisville, New Albany, and Jeffersonville, reserved to Dennis Long & Co., of Louisville; and Cincinnati, Newport, and Covington, reserved to the Addyston mill, in Ohio. Under the agreement, every request for bids from any place, except the reserved cities, sent to any one of the defendants, was submitted to the central committee, who fixed a price, and the contract was awarded to that member who would agree to pay for the benefit of the other members of the association the largest "bounus." In the case of the reserved cities, the [**49] successful bidder having been already fixed, The association determined the price and bonus to be paid. The contract of association restrained every defendant except the one selected to receive the contract from soliciting (in good faith) for making a contract for pipe with the intending purchaser at all, and restrained the defendant so selected from making the contract except at the price fixed by the committee. In cases of pipe to be purchased in any state of the 36 in pay territory, except 4, each one of the defendants, by his contract of association, restrained his freedom of trade in respect to making a contract in that state for the sale of pipe to be delivered across state lines; five of them agreeing not to make such a contract at all, and the sixth agreeing not to make the contract below a fixed price. With respect to sales in Ohio, Kentucky, [*295] Tennessee, and Alabama, the effect of the contract of association was to bind at least three, sometimes four, and sometimes five, of the defendants not to make a contract at all in those states for the sale and delivery of pipe from another state; and if the job were assigned, as it might be, to one living in a different [**50] state from the place of the contract and delivery, its effect would be to bind him not to sell and deliver pipe across state lines at less than a certain price. It thus appears that no sale or proposed sale can be suggested within the scope of the contract of association with respect to which that contract did not restrain at least three, often four, more often five, and usually all, of the defendants in the exercise of the freedom, which but for the contract would have been theirs, of selling in one state pipe to be delivered from another state at any price they might see fit to fix. Can there be any doubt that this was a restrain of interstate trade and commerce? Mr. Justice Field, in County of Mobile v. Kimball, 102 U.S. 691, 696, said.

HN6 [↑] "Commerce with foreign countries and among the states, strictly considered, consists in intercourse and traffic, and the transportation and transit of persons and property, as well as the purchase, sale, and exchange of commodities."

In Robbins v. Taxing Dist., 120 U.S. 489, 7 Sup. Ct. 592, a law of Tennessee, which imposed a tax on ally "drummers" who solicited orders on samples, was held unconstitutional in so far as it applied to the drummer [**51] of an Ohio firm, who was soliciting orders for goods to be sent from Ohio to purchasers in Tennessee, on the ground that it was a tax on interstate commerce. In delivering the opinion of the court in that case, Mr. Justice

Bradley said (page 497, 120 U.S., and page 596, 7 Sup. Ct.) that a tax on the sale of goods, or the offer to sell them before they are brought into the state, was clearly a tax on interstate commerce. He further said:

"The negotiation of sales of goods which are in another state, for the purpose of introducing them into the state in which the negotiation is made, is interstate commerce."

The principle thus announced has been reaffirmed by the court in Corson v. Maryland, 120 U.S. 502, 7 Sup. Ct. 655; in Asher v. Texas, 128 U.S. 129, 9 Sup. Ct. 1; in Stoutenburgh v. Hennick, 129 U.S. 141, 9 Sup. Ct. 256; and in Brennan v. City of Titusville, 153 U.S. 289, 14 Sup. Ct. 829. The point of these cases was emphasized by the distinction taken in Emert v. Missouri, 156 U.S. 296, 15 Sup. Ct. 367, in which the validity of a law of Missouri, imposing a tax on peddlers, was in question. The plaintiff in error, convicted under the law of failure to pay the tax, was the [**52] selling agent of a New Jersey sewing machine manufacturing company, who carried the machine for sale with him in his wagon. If was held that in such a case, the machine having become part of the mass of property in the state, the tax on the peddler was not a tax on interstate commerce.

If, then, the soliciting of orders for, and the sale of, goods in one state, to be delivered from another state, is interstate commerce in its strictest and highest sense, -- such that the states are excluded by the federal constitution from a right to regulate or tax the same, -- it seems clear that contracts in restraint of such solicitations, [*296] negotiations, and sales are contracts in restraint of interstate commerce. The anti-trust law is an effort by congress to regulate interstate commerce. Such commerce as the states are excluded from burdening or regulating in any way by tax or otherwise, because of the power of congress to regulate interstate commerce, must, of necessity, be the commerce which congress may regulate, and which, by the terms of the anti-trust law, it has regulated. We can see no escape from the conclusion, therefore, that the contract of the defendants was [**53] in restraint of interstate commerce.

The learned judge who dismissed the bill at the circuit was of opinion that the contract of association only indirectly affected interstate commerce, and relied chiefly for this conclusion on the decision of the supreme court in the case of U.S. v. E.C. Knight Co., 156 U.S. 1, 15 Sup. Ct. 249. In that case the bill filed under the antitrust law sought to enjoin the defendants from continuing a union of substantially all the sugar refineries of the country for the refining of raw sugars. The supreme court held that the monopoly thus effected was not within the law, because the contract or agreement of union related only to the manufacture of refined sugar, and not to its sale throughout the country; that manufacture preceded commerce, and although the manufacture under a monopoly might, and doubtless would, indirectly affect both internal and interstate commerce, it was not within the power of congress to regulate manufactures within a state on that ground. The case arose on a bill in equity filed by the United States under the anti-trust act, praying for relief in respect of certain agreements under which the American Sugar-Refining Company [**54] had purchased the stock of four Philadelphia sugar-refining companies with shares of its own stock, whereby the American Company acquired nearly complete control of the manufacture of refined sugar in this country. The relief sought was the cancellation of the agreements of purchase, the redelivery of the stock to the parties respectively, and an injunction against the further performance of the agreements and further violations of the act. The chief justice, in delivering the judgment of the court, said:

"The argument is that the power to control the manufacture of refined sugar is a monopoly over a necessity of life, to the enjoyment of which by a large part of the population of the United States interstate commerce is indispensable, and that, therefore, the general government, in the exercise of the power to regulate commerce, may repress such monopoly directly, and set aside the instruments which have created it. * * * Doubtless the power to control the manufacture of a given thing involves in a certain sense the control of its disposition, but this is a secondary, and not the primary, sense; and, although the exercise of that power may result in bringing the operation of [**55] commerce into play, it does not control it, and it affects it only incidentally and indirectly. Commerce succeeds to manufacture, and is not a part of it. The power to regulate commerce is the power to prescribe the rule by which commerce shall be governed, and is a power independent of the power to suppress monopoly. But it may operate in repression of monopoly whenever that comes within the rules by which commerce is governed, or whenever the transaction is itself a monopoly of commerce. * * * The regulation of commerce applies to the subjects of commerce, and not to matters of internal police. Contracts to buy, sell, or exchange goods to be transported among the several states, the transportation and its instrumentalities, and articles bought, sold, or exchanged for the purpose of such transit among the states, or pur in the way of transit, may be regulated: but this is because they form part of interstate trade or commerce. The fact [*297] that an article is manufactured for export to another state does not of itself make it an article of interstate commerce, and the intent of the manufacturer does not determine the time when the article or product passes from the control [**56] of the state, and belongs to commerce."

The chief justice then refers to the prior case of Coe v. Errol, 116 U.S. 517, 6 Sup. Ct. 475, in which it was held that logs were not made subjects of interstate commerce by the mere intent of the owner to ship them into another state, so that taxation upon them could be regarded as a burden upon interstate commerce, until that intent had been carried so far into execution that "they had commenced their final movement from the state of their origin to that of their destination." Kidd v. Pearson, 128 U.S. 1, 9 Sup. Ct. 6, is also referred to. In that case it was held that a law of Iowa, which forbade the manufacture of spirituous liquoro except for certain purposes, was not in conflict with the commerce clause of the federal constitution, although it appeared by proof that the liquor was to be manufactured only with intent to ship the same out of the state. The chief justice further said:

"It was in the light of well-settled principles that the act of July 2, 1880, was framed. Congress did not attempt thereby to assert the power to deal with monopoly directly as such; or to limit and restrict the rights of corporations created by the states [**57] or the citizens of the states in the acquisition, control, or disposition of property; or to regulate or prescribe the price or prices at which such property or the products thereof should be sold; or to make criminal the acts of persons in the acquisition and control of property which the states of their residence or creation sanctioned or permitted. Aside from the provisions applicable where congress might exercise municipal power, what the law struck at was combinations, constacts, and conspiracies to monopolize trade and commerce among the several states or with foreign nations; but the contracts and acts of the defendants related exclusively to the acquisition of the Philadelphia refineries and the business of sugar refining in Pennsylvania, and bore no direct relation to commerce between the states or with foreign nations. The object was manifestly private gain in the manufacture of the commodity, but not through the control of interstate or foreign commerce. * * * There was nothing in the proofs to indicate any intention to put a restraint upon trade or commerce, and the fact, as we have seen, that trade or commerce might be indirectly affected, was not enough to entitle [**58] complainants to a decree."

We have thus considered and quoted from the decision in the Knight Case at length, because it was made the principal ground for the action of the court below, and is made the chief basis of the argument on behalf of the defendants here. It seems to us clear that, from the beginning to the end of the opinion, the chief justice draws the distinction between a restraint upon the business of manufacturing and a restraint upon the trade or commerce between the states in the articles after manufacture, with the manifest purpose of showing that the regulating power of congress under the constitution could affect only the latter, while the former was not under federal control, and rested wholly with the states. Among the subjects of commercial regulation by congress, he expressly mentions "contracts to buy, sell, or exchange goods to be transported among the several states," and leaves it to be plainly inferred that the statute does embrace combinations and conspiracies which have for their object to restrain, and which necessarily operate in restraint of, the freedom of such contracts. The citation of the case of Coe v. Errol, [*298] was apt to show that [**59] merchandise, before its shipment across state lines, was not within the regulating power of congress, and, a fortiori, that its manufacture was not; while Kidd v. Pearson clearly made the distinction between the absence of power in congress to control manufacturing merely because the manufacture intends to add to interstate commerce with the product, and the power which congress has to prevent obstructions to interstate transportation in the product when made. But neither of these cases controls the one now under consideration. The subject-matter of the restraint here was not articles of merchandise or their manufacture, but contracts for sale of such articles to be delivered across state lines and the negotiations and bids preliminary to the making of such contracts, all of which, as we have seen, do not merely affect interstate commerce, but are interstate commerce. It can hardly be that a combination in restraint of what is interstate commerce does not directly affect and burden that commerce. The error into which the circuit court fell, it seems to us, was in not observing the difference between the regulating power of congress over contracts and negotiations for sales of goods [**60] to be delivered across state lines, and that over the merchandise, the subject of such sales and negotiations. The goods are not within the control of congress until they are in actual transit from state to another.

But HN7[↑] the negotiations and making of sales which necessarily involve in their execution the delivery of merchandise across state lines are interstate commerce, and so within the regulating power of congress even before the transit of the goods in performance of the contract has begun.

The language of the chief justice in the last passages quoted above from his opinion, upon which so much reliance was placed by the circuit court and the defendants' counsel at the bar, is to be interpreted by the facts of the case before the court. The statement in the opinion that congress did not intend by the anti-trust act to limit and restrict the rights of persons and corporations in the mere acquisition, control, or disposition of property, or to regulate the prices at which such property should be sold, or to make criminal the acts of persons or corporations in the acquisition and control of property which the states of their residence or creation sanctioned or permitted, does not [**61] imply that congress did not intend to strike down any combination which had for its object the restraint and attempted monopoly of trade and commerce among a given number of states in specified articles of commerce, and the resulting power to regulate prices therein. The obstacle in the way of granting the relief asked in U.S. v. E.C. Knight Co. was (to use the language of the chief justice) that "the contracts and acts of the defendant related exclusively to the acquisition of the Philadelphia refineries, and the business of sugar refining in Pennsylvania, and bore no direct relation to commerce between the state or with foreign nations." The supreme court distinctly adjudged that "what the law struck at was combinations, contracts, and conspiracies to monopolize trade and commerce among the several states or with foreign nations." That the defendants in the present case combined and contracted with each other for the purpose of restraining trade [*299] and commerce among the states covered by their agreement, in the articles manufactured by them, is too clear to admit of dispute. In the E.C. Knight Co. Case there was, the supreme court said, "nothing in the proofs to indicate [**62] any intention to put a restraint upon trade or commerce." In the present case the proofs show that no one of the companies in this pipe-trust combination was allowed to send its goods out of the state in which they were manufactured except upon the terms established by the agreement. Can it be doubted that this was a direct restraint upon interstate commerce in those goods? To give the language of the opinion in the Knight Case the construction contended for by defendants would be to assume that the court, after having in the clearest way distinguished the case it was deciding from a case like the one at bar, for the very purpose of not deciding any case but the one before it, then proceeded to confuse the cases by using language which decided both. We cannot concur in such an interpretation of the opinion.

Counsel for the defendants also find in the language of Mr. Justice Peckham, in the case of U.S. v. Trans-Missouri Freight Ass'n, 166 U.S. 290, 313, 326, 17 Sup. Ct. 540, an argument against our conclusion in this case. The question in that case was whether the antitrust act applied to railroad companies which combined in establishing traffic rates for the transportation of [**63] persons and property. It was vigorously contended on behalf of the railroad companies that the act was never intended to apply to them, because congress had already provided for their regulation by the interstate commerce law. In meeting this position, Mr. Justice Peckham used the following language (page 313, 166 U.S., and page 548, 17 Sup. Ct.):

"We have held that the trust act did not apply to a company engaged in one state in the refining of sugar under circumstances detailed in the case of U.S. v. E.C. Knight Co., 156 U.S. 1, 15 Sup. Ct. 249, because the refining of sugar under those circumstances bore no distinct relation to commerce between the states or with foreign nations. To exclude agreements as to rates by competing railroads for the transportation of articles of commerce between the states would leave little for the act to take effect upon."

Again, upon page 326, 166 U.S., and page 553, 17 Sup. Ct., Justice Peckham repeats the same idea:

"In the Knight Co. Case, supra, it was said that this statute applied to monopolies in restraint of interstate or international trade or commerce, and not to monopolies in the manufacture even of a necessary of life. It is [**64] readily seen from these cases that, if the act does not apply to the transportation of commodities by railroads from one state to another or to foreign nations, its application is so greatly limited that the whole act might as well be held inoperative."

This is not a declaration that cases might not arise within the statute which were not combinations of common carriers in relation to interstate transportation. The language used means nothing more than that, if such combinations were excluded from the effect of the act, the great and manifest scope for the operation of a federal statute on such a subject would be denied to it. To give the language more weight would be to violate the first canon for the construction of a judicial opinion laid down by chief Justice Marshal in Cohens v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. 264, 340, 399:

[*300] "It is a maxim, not to be disregarded, that general expressions in every opinion are to be taken in connection with the case in which those expressions are used. If they go beyond the case, they may be respected, but ought not to control the judgment in a subsequent suit when the very point is presented for decision. The reason for this maxim is obvious. [**65] The question actually before the court is investigated with care, and considered in its full extent. Other principles which may serve to illustrate it are considered in their relation to the case decided, but their possible bearing on all case is seldom completely investigated."

In re Greene, 52 Fed. 104, cited for the defendants, is to be distinguished from the case at bar in exactly the same way as the Knight Co. Case. The indictment against Greene, drawn under the antitrust act, charged him with being a member of a combination to acquire possession and control of 75 per cent. of the distilleries of the country, for the purpose of fixing the price of whisky, and controlling the trade in it between the states. The immediate object of the combination was a monopoly in manufacture. The effect upon interstate trade in whisky was as indirect as was the monopoly of the refining of sugar in the Knight Co. Case upon interstate trade in that article.

The case of Dueber Watch Case Mfg. Co. v. E. Howard Watch & Clock Co., 35 U.S. App. 16, 14 C.C.A. 14, and 66 Fed. 637, cannot be regarded as an authority upon either of the questions considered in this case, because of the division [**66] of opinion among the judges. It was a suit brought by a watch manufacturing company against 20 other companies to recover damages for a boycott of the plaintiff. The averment was that the defendants had agreed not to sell any goods manufactured by them to any person dealing with the plaintiff, and had caused this to be known in the trade, and that they fixed an arbitrary price for the sale of their goods to the public, and, because plaintiff's competition interfered with their maintaining this price, they were using the boycott against plaintiff, to stifle competition. The pleadings were not drawn with care to bring the case within the anti-trust law. The question arose on demurrer to the bill. Judge Lacombe held that the facts stated gave rise to no cause of action; Judge Shipman held that the averments were not sufficient to show that the trade restrained was interstate; and Judge Wallace dissented, on the ground that a cause of action was sufficiently stated, and that the restraint was upon interstate commerce. These varying views decided the case, but they certainly furnish no precedent or authority.

There is one case which seems to be quite like the one at bar. It is [**67] the case of U.S. v. Jellico Mountain Coal & Coke Co., 46 Fed. 432, a decision by Judge Key at the circuit. The owners of coal mines in Kentucky entered into a contract of association with coal dealers in Nashville, by which they agreed that the mine owners should only sell to dealers who were members, and the members should only buy from mine owners who were members, and that the dealers should sell at certain fixed prices, of which the mine owners should receive a proportionate part, after payment of freight, and that prices might be raised by a vote of the association, in which case the addition to the price should be divided between the dealers and [*301] the mine owners. The contract recited that it was intended to establish and maintain the price of coal at Nashville. It was held to be an attempt to create a monopoly in the interstate trade in coal between Kentucky and Nashville, Tenn., and it was enjoined.

It is pressed upon us that there was no intention on the part of the defendants in this case to restrain interstate commerce, and in several affidavits the managing officers of the defendants make oath that they did not know what interstate commerce was, and, therefore, [**68] that they could not have combined to restrain it. Of course, the defendants, like other persons subject to the law, cannot plead ignorance of it as an excuse for its violation. They knew that the combination they were making contemplated the fixing of prices for the sale of pipe in 36 different states, and that the pipe sold would have to be delivered in those states from the 4 states in which defendants' foundries were situate. They knew that freight rates and transportation were a most important element in making the price for the pipe so to be delivered. They charged the successful bidder with a bonus to be paid upon the shipment of the pipe from his state to the state of the sale. Under their first agreement, the bonus to be paid by the successful bidder was varied according to the state in which the sale and delivery were to be made. It seems to us clear that the contract of association was on its face an extensive scheme to control the whole commerce among 36 states in cast-iron pipe, and that the defendants were fully aware of the fact whether they appreciated the application to it of the anti-trust law or not.

Much has been said in argument as to the enlargement of [**69] the federal governmental functions in respect of all trade and industry in the states if the view we have expressed of the application of the anti-trust law in this case is to prevail, and as to the interference which is likely to follow with the control which the states have hitherto been understood to have over contracts of the character of that before us. We do not announce any new doctrine in holding either that contracts and negotiations for the sale of merchandise to be delivered across state lines are interstate commerce (see cases above cited), or that burdens or restraints upon such commerce congress may pass appropriate legislation to prevent, and courts of the United States may in proper proceedings enjoin. In re Debs, 158 U.S. 564, 15 Sup. Ct. 900. If this extends federal jurisdiction into fields not before occupied by the general government, it is not because such jurisdiction is not within the limits allowed by the constitution of the United States.

The prayer of the petition that pipe in transportation under the contract of association be forfeited in a proceeding in equity like this is, of course, improper, and must be denied. The sixth section of the anti-trust [**70] act, after providing that property owned and in transportation from one state to another or to a foreign country under a contract inhibited by the act "shall be forfeited to the United States," continues "and may be seized and condemned by like proceedings as those provided by law for the forfeiture, seizure and condemnation of property imported into the United States contrary to law." This requires a like procedure to that prescribed in sections [*302] 3309-3391, Rev. St., and involves a trial by jury. The only remedy which can be afforded in this proceeding is a decree of injunction.

For the reasons given, the decree of the circuit court dismissing the bill must be reversed, with instructions to enter a decree for the United States perpetually enjoining the defendants from maintaining the combination in cast-iron pipe described in the bill, and substantially admitted in the answer, and from doing any business thereunder.

---

End of Document

Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. State

Court of Civil Appeals of Texas, Austin

March 9, 1898, Decided

No Number in Original

Reporter

19 Tex. Civ. App. 1 *; 44 S.W. 936 **; 1898 Tex. App. LEXIS 175 ***

Waters-Pierce Oil Company v. The State of Texas.

Prior History: [***1] Appeal from Travis. Tried below before Hon. R. E. Brooks.

The following were among the assignments of error urged by appellant:

"31. The Court erred in admitting, over the objections of defendant, the testimony of W. C. Dugger, to the effect that this defendant's agent at Galveston, Arthur M Finlay, had never objected to any of the acts of said Dugger, done in obedience to the instructions of Waggoner and other agents, all as shown by exceptions duly reserved in the statement of facts."

"36. The court erred in refusing to admit in evidence the testimony of William Grice, for this defendant, to the effect as to whether or not he, as division manager, had ever had any authority from any officer of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company to sell oils in Texas on condition that they would be resold at a fixed price, which testimony was excluded by the court and exception saved, as shown by statement of facts."

The court ruled as follows: "I will permit defendant to show what his powers were as agents; that is, if it was in writing, to show what the writings were, to produce the writings, to show that the writings he received were all he received on the question of his powers as [***2] agent, you can show it in a negative way. I will permit you to show what instructions that have been destroyed were, not what they were not."

"38. The court erred in refusing to admit in behalf of defendant the testimony of H. C. Pierce, to the effect that if any contracts or agreements in violation of the laws of Texas were made by agents in Texas, they were not authorized either by himself or any other officer of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, all as shown by exception duly saved in statement of facts.

"39. The court erred in striking out from the circular of defendant, of date December 31, 1895, the following words as incompetent, upon objection by the State 'such arrangements, if made, were effected without the authority or knowledge of the company, and contrary to its policy and previous instructions on the point,' all as shown by the statement of facts."

Disposition: Affirmed.

Core Terms

---

oils, contracts, parties, transactions, interstate commerce, regulations, do business, buy, police power, commodities, railways, trusts, combinations, rights, commerce, deprive, conditions, products, cases, tends, terms, carriers, alleges, matters, due process of law, assigned error, public welfare, transportation, selling, evil

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Readjustments > Formation > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Sales of Goods > Readjustments > General Overview

HN1 [] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

A trust is a combination of capital, skill or acts, by two or more persons, firms, corporations, or associations of persons, or either two or more of them, for either, any, or all of the following purposes: (1) to create or carry out restrictions in trade, or commerce, or aids to commerce, or to create or carry out restrictions in the full and free pursuit of any business authorized or permitted by the laws of Texas; (2) to increase or reduce the price of merchandise, produce, or commodities; (3) to prevent competition in manufacture, making, transportation, sale, or purchase of merchandise, produce, or commodities, or to prevent competition in aids to commerce; and (4) to fix at any standard or figure, whereby its price to the public shall be in any manner controlled or established, any article or commodity or merchandise, produce, or commerce, intended for sale, use or consumption in this state.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > General Overview

HN2 [] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

A trust is a combination of capital, skill or acts, by two or more persons, firms, corporations, or associations of persons, or either two or more of them, for either, any, or all of the following purposes: to make or enter into or execute or carry out any contract, obligation, or agreement of any kind or description, by which they shall bind or have bound themselves not to sell, dispose of, or transport any article or commodity or article of trade, use, merchandise, commerce, or consumption, below a common standard figure, or by which they shall agree in any manner to keep the price of such article, commodity, or transportation at a fixed or graded figure, or by which they shall in any manner establish or settle the price of any article, or commodity, or transportation, between them or themselves and others, to preclude a free and unrestricted competition among themselves or others in the sale or transportation of any such article or commodity, or by which they shall agree to pool, combine or unite any interest they may have in connection with the sale or transportation of any such article or commodity, that its price might in any manner be affected.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Corporate Existence, Powers & Purpose > Powers > Acts Through Agents

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Duties & Liabilities > Authorized Acts of Agents > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Duties & Liabilities > Unlawful Acts of Agents > General Overview

HN3 [] Powers, Acts Through Agents

A corporation can only act through its agents and servants, but a corporation is not liable for all the acts of its agents or servants. It is liable, however, for the acts of its agents done in the scope of their employment and agency, and is also liable for the acts of its agents which it has authorized such agents to perform, and it is also liable for the unauthorized acts of its agents which have been acquiesced in or ratified by the governing body of said corporation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

HN4 Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

The Court of Civil Appeals of Texas has no jurisdiction over, and the laws of Texas do not apply to interstate commerce—that is, to commerce between the different states of the United States.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN5 Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

The law against trusts in Texas became a law on March 30, 1889, and was amended in 1895.

Constitutional Law > Substantive Due Process > Scope

Governments > Police Powers

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > Scope of Protection

HN6 Constitutional Law, Substantive Due Process

The rights flowing from U.S. Const. amend. XIV, which rights are of a citizen to contract concerning his property without the state depriving the citizen of his property or imposing restraints and burdens upon the property without due process of law, extend to corporations as well as persons. But a consideration of these questions necessarily leads to the inquiry whether the statutes that are assailed arise out of an exercise of the general police authority of the State.

Governments > Police Powers

HN7 Governments, Police Powers

The State may, in the exercise of its police power, legislate concerning many matters which, but for the authority in this respect, would be unauthorized. This power—generally stated as the "police power of the State"—extends to a variety of subjects which need not be enumerated, as it is generally admitted that matters and subjects which affect the general welfare and public interests are within the supervision of this power. But the power does authorize the establishment of laws requiring each citizen to so conduct himself and so use his own property as not unnecessarily to injure another's. This is the very essence of government, and has found expression in the maxim, sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedes. From this source come the police powers, which are nothing more or less than the powers of government, inherent in every sovereignty, that is to say, the power to govern men and things. Under these powers, the government regulates the conduct of its citizens one towards another, and the manner in which each shall use his own property, when such regulations become necessary for the public good.

19 Tex. Civ. App. 1, *144 S.W. 936, **936L898 Tex. App. LEXIS 175, ***2

Governments > Police Powers

HN8  Governments, Police Powers

The State can prescribe regulations for the health, good order, and safety of society, and adopt such measures as will advance its interests and prosperity.

Governments > Police Powers

HN9  Governments, Police Powers

The police power of the State is the authority vested in the legislature to enact all such wholesome and reasonable laws as they may deem conducive to public good.

Contracts Law > ... > Perfections & Priorities > Perfection > General Overview

Governments > Local Governments > Police Power

Contracts Law > ... > Secured Transactions > Perfections & Priorities > General Overview

Governments > Police Powers

HN10  Perfections & Priorities, Perfection

All property is held subject to the power of the State to regulate or control its use, to secure the general safety and the public welfare. Every holder of property, however absolute and unqualified may be his title, holds it under the implied liability that his use shall not be injurious to the equal enjoyment of others having an equal right to the enjoyment of their property, nor injurious to the rights of the community. All property is held subject to those general regulations which are necessary to the common good and general welfare. By the general police power of the State, persons and property are subjected to all kinds of restraints and burdens, in order to secure the general comfort, health, and prosperity of the State; of the perfect right of the Legislature to do which, no question ever was, or upon acknowledged general principles can be made. The police power, so called, inheres in every sovereignty, and is essential to the maintenance of public order and the preservation of mutual rights from disturbing conflicts.

Governments > Police Powers

HN11  Governments, Police Powers

The State in the exercise of its police power in the selection of remedies looking to the suppression of evils harmful to its people, may apply them to the most sacred contracts and to the uses of property of every description, not in the way of an arbitrary spoliation or confiscation under a capricious exercise of the police power, but a useful regulation in the interest of the public welfare.

19 Tex. Civ. App. 1, *144 S.W. 936, **936L898 Tex. App. LEXIS 175, ***2

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Governments > Police Powers

HN12 [  ] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Included in the list of subjects that may be acted upon by the State in the exercise of its police power is the restraint of trade. Manufacturing or trading companies may also affect prices by joining together in forming a trust or other combination, and by making agreements in restraint of trade and commerce which, when carried out, affect the interests of the public.

Governments > Police Powers

HN13 [  ] Governments, Police Powers

The rights of the individual must yield to the public wants, and his conduct and all property held by him is subject to the control of the State, to the end that he shall so demean himself and use his property with as little hurt and injury to the public as possible. While power does not exist with the whole people to control rights that are purely and exclusively private, government may require each citizen to so conduct himself, and so use his own property, as not unnecessarily to injure another.

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > State Application

Evidence > Relevance > Preservation of Relevant Evidence > Spoliation

Governments > Police Powers

HN14 [  ] Bill of Rights, State Application

This is one of the inherent rights of sovereignty, and it is as much in place that it shall be exercised when the public interest requires, as it is the duty of the State, by stringent laws, to protect society from the depredations of the thief and the ravages of the murderer. When it is once admitted that a matter is a subject of police supervision, the expediency and wisdom of the means resorted to are subjects solely confided to the legislative department of the State, subject, however, to limitations imposed by the organic law of the nation in excluding from their jurisdiction, for many purposes, certain matters of control solely reserved to the national government-such, for instance, as many of the matters relating to interstate commerce. It is not meant by that a Legislature may conclusively declare a matter subject to its police authority, when in fact such is not the case-for that is a question which the courts may determine-and under the guise of that power, by a system of confiscation and spoliation, which has no place in the government, deprive a citizen of his rights, but, as said before, when it is once determined that the subject dealt with really concerns the public welfare, it lies wholly within the police authority of the State, through its law makers, to determine how it shall be handled and dealt with.

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > State Application

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Licenses

Governments > Police Powers

HN15 [  ] Bill of Rights, State Application

By adequate laws looking to the suppression of evil, the State, through the exercise of its police power, must necessarily restrain the unbridled license of the citizen in his conduct and use of property, and restraints imposed in this way have never been held to illegally impair his liberty, as is attested from many of the provisions of the codes of Texas and of others and the constructions that have been given to them. The freedom of speech, the liberty of person, and life itself must be surrendered, when the public interests and the order of good government so require. The liberty of the citizen, which embraces the legal right to his property, and to lawfully contract concerning it, stand upon no higher ground.

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Freedoms > General Overview

Governments > Police Powers

HN16[] Bill of Rights, Fundamental Freedoms

However broad the right of everyone to follow such calling and employ his time as he may judge most conducive to his interests, it must be exercised subject to such general rules as are adopted by society for the common welfare. All sorts of restrictions are imposed upon the actions of men notwithstanding the liberty which is guaranteed to each. It is liberty regulated by just and impartial laws.

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > State Application

Governments > Police Powers

Torts > Transportation Torts > Rail Transportation > General Overview

HN17[] Bill of Rights, State Application

If legislative authority exists to restrain the conduct of owners in a particular way in the use of their property, deemed injurious to the public welfare, and the Legislature has acted in the manner required in passing laws, due process of law exists, in so far as it is necessary to find legal authority for prohibiting the act. Legal restraints imposed upon the use of property do not deprive the owner of it without due process of law.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Eminent Domain Proceedings > Process

Real Property Law > Eminent Domain Proceedings > Procedures

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Real Property Law > Eminent Domain Proceedings > Constitutional Limits & Rights > General Overview

Real Property Law > Eminent Domain Proceedings > Elements > Public Use

HN18[] Eminent Domain Proceedings, Process

The Texas law against trusts in Texas do not arbitrarily, by legislative decree, ipso facto, operate upon the liberty of the citizen or upon his property, and deprive him of these rights, but provide for an orderly procedure in the courts of the State, with a right of the accused to be heard before being condemned. Whenever a burden is imposed upon property for the public use, whether it be for the whole State, or some more limited portion of the community, and those laws provide for a mode of confirming or contesting the charge thus imposed in the ordinary courts of justice, with such notice to the person or such proceeding in regard to the property as is appropriate to the nature of the case, the judgment in such proceedings can not be said to deprive the owner of his property without due process of law.

19 Tex. Civ. App. 1, *144 S.W. 936, **936L898 Tex. App. LEXIS 175, ***2

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Constitutional Questions > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Equal Protection > Nature & Scope of Protection

HN19 [blue] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Texas's laws against trust are constitutional in many respects as has been decided in challenges that the laws are class legislation, and deny to certain citizens and classes equal protection of the laws; that the classification of subjects upon which the laws should bear, and those who are exempted from its operation, are purely capricious and arbitrary, in that there are no differences in the conditions of the classes which would justify the distinction made between them.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Rail Transportation > State & Local Regulation

Governments > Police Powers

Torts > Transportation Torts > Rail Transportation > General Overview

HN20 [blue] Railroads & Rail Transportation, State & Local Regulation

The right of the Legislature to classify railways as a special subject of legislation and impose duties, burdens, and restrictions upon them which are not imposed upon other carriers, are based upon the principle that they are public corporations and engaged in a public business, and that further, on account of the dangerous character of their business and by reason of benefits received, the power exists to impose duties and burdens upon them which are not applied to other carriers. But really, the true principle and doctrine upon which legislation of this character is bottomed, as affecting railways as a class, is that the public interests and welfare require that in the use of their property and the performance of their business it be conducted in a way least harmful to the public and most beneficial thereto consistent with the right of ownership in the property. It is the public interest and welfare that is involved in the business they carry on and conduct that really gives the State, in the exercise of its police power, jurisdiction over their affairs.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Governments > Police Powers

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Rail Transportation > State & Local Regulation

HN21 [blue] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

The general welfare of the people is no more important to be observed in restraining and controlling railways in their relation to the commerce of the country than is the public interest to be subserved by laws which restrain and prevent trusts and combinations concerning such commerce, and which seek to prevent conspiracies entered into for the purpose of affecting the prices of commodities which are useful and necessary to the enjoyment of life. In each case the interest of mankind requires that the selfishness of human nature, which seeks alone to advance its individual interests, shall, in the use of property and in conduct, be so far restrained, as may be compatible with individual right and liberty, as will prevent harm and injury to the public.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Rail Transportation > State & Local Regulation

Governments > Legislation > Types of Statutes

Torts > Transportation Torts > Rail Transportation > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Enactment

Governments > Police Powers

HN22 [] Railroads & Rail Transportation, State & Local Regulation

Regulations to prevent harm and injury to the public by classifying railways as a special subject of legislation and imposing upon the railways duties, burdens, and restrictions that are not imposed upon other carriers, may press with more or less weight upon one than upon another, but they are designed not to impose unequal or unnecessary restrictions upon one, but to promote, with as little individual inconvenience as possible, the general good. Though in many respects necessarily special in their character, they do not furnish just ground of complaint if they operate alike upon all persons and property under the same circumstances and conditions. Class legislation discriminating against some and favoring others is prohibited, but legislation which in carrying out a public purpose is limited in its application, if within the sphere of its operation it affects alike all persons similarly situated, is not within the amendment.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Rail Transportation > State & Local Regulation

Governments > Legislation > General Overview

Torts > Transportation Torts > Rail Transportation > General Overview

HN23 [] Railroads & Rail Transportation, State & Local Regulation

The hazardous character of the business of operating railways would seem to call for special legislation with respect to railroad corporations having for its object the protection of their employes as well as the safety of the public. The business of other corporations is not subject to similar dangers to their employes, and no objections, therefore, can be made to the legislation on the ground of its making an unjust discrimination. It meets a particular necessity, and all railroad corporations are, without discrimination, made subject to the same liabilities. It is simply a question of legislative discretion whether the same liabilities shall be applied to carriers by canal and stage coaches and to other persons and corporations using steam in manufactories.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Rail Transportation > State & Local Regulation

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

Governments > Police Powers

HN24 [] Railroads & Rail Transportation, State & Local Regulation

The state legislature, in the pursuit of its police power, in selecting subjects upon which it shall bear, cannot capriciously and arbitrarily classify those subjects, and impose burdens on some and relieve others, when in the nature of things they are similarly situated and no reason could exist for the distinction. But, viewing the subject of classification from any standpoint, if reasons for the distinction can in any event exist the legislation must be credited with being founded upon it. Doubtless the several legislatures, in passing statutes regulating railways as a distinct class of carriers, evidently contemplated that, from the magnitude of the service in which they were engaged and the relations they bore to the public and the injury that might result to the public welfare if they were not restrained, requiring rules and regulations for their conduct which were not necessary to be applied to other carriers because of their limited capacity and extent, the public were not so much concerned with the conduct of their business, and that they were not so situated as to seriously, in these particulars, affect or injure the public. It is not the duty of the State to discover the reasons and circumstances upon which these laws may rest, but the burden is upon the appellant to demonstrate that the classification was capricious and unauthorized.

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Constitutionality of Legislation > General Overview

HN25 [blue icon] Case or Controversy, Constitutionality of Legislation

In the absence of such facts showing the contrary, the presumption is in favor of a law's constitutionality.

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Constitutionality of Legislation > General Overview

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Legislatures

HN26 [blue icon] Case or Controversy, Constitutionality of Legislation

The domestic welfare of the people of Texas is within the keeping of its Legislatures, and they are supposed to best know their wants and necessities, and the policy that shall govern its internal affairs, and the remedies needful in the pursuit of this policy and that are necessary in order to extinguish or prevent evil and harmful conditions affecting the general interest and the public welfare. These are matters political and relate to the economic affairs of government, and are peculiarly within the knowledge of the law-making department thereof. The remedies, therefore, lie within the legislative province and are, to some extent, confided to their discretion and wisdom. Every possible presumption is in favor of the validity of a statute, and this continues until the contrary is shown beyond a rational doubt.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Rail Transportation > State & Local Regulation

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Legislatures

HN27 [blue icon] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

The Legislatures of the State, in making conclusions regarding antitrust matters pertaining to railways, are supposed to have acted intelligently and with a knowledge of the conditions and dangers confronting the people from combinations and trusts; and it requires little enlightenment to discover that the disturbing classes which were and now are so injuriously affecting the public welfare are the buyers, sellers, and dealers in the articles in use by the people of Texas. The unbridled license of these classes which in many instances was exercised, had, within Texas as well as other sections of the country, assumed such proportions that the danger to the welfare of the people was so apparent that the layman as well as the lawgiver could discern it.

Civil Procedure > Trials > Jury Trials > Province of Court & Jury

HN28 [+] Jury Trials, Province of Court & Jury

Where there is any evidence, however slight it may be, the court must leave it to the consideration of the jury.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Business & Corporate Law > Foreign Corporations > General Overview

HN29 [+] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Texas's Act of 1889, as well as that of 1895, provides for the forfeiture of the permit of a foreign corporation which may violate any of the provisions of the statute against trusts. Except where the foreign corporation is in the employ of the federal government or is engaged strictly in matters of interstate commerce, such bodies are entitled to no rights or privileges except those which may be conferred upon them as an act of grace by the State.

Business & Corporate Law > Foreign Corporations > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Contracts Clause > General Overview

Contracts Law > Contract Conditions & Provisions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Governments > Police Powers

HN30 [+] Business & Corporate Law, Foreign Corporations

The laws of the State that apply to domestic corporations and individuals in prohibiting certain conduct apply with equal force to foreign corporations. The State, in granting them privilege to do business, does not absolve them from responsibility and contract to relieve them from the operation of laws which expressly apply to them. The police power of the State cannot be bartered away, and there exist no contractual rights which are not subject to its exercise. Regarding the clause of the Constitution of the United States which forbids the States from passing any laws impairing the obligation of contracts, it has been held without dissent that the clause does not so far remove from State control the rights and properties which depend for their existence or enforcement upon contracts as to relieve them from the operation of such general regulations for the good government of the State and the protection of the rights of individuals as may be deemed expedient. All contracts and all rights are subject to this power, and not only may regulations which affect them be established by the State, but all such regulations must be subject to change from time to time, as the general well being of the community may require, or as circumstances may change, or as experience may demonstrate the necessity. The principle is applicable to charters of corporations.

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

HN31 [+] Evidence, Inferences & Presumptions

In no controversy of a civil nature would it be proper for the courts of Texas to give a jury charge to the effect that a jury must find in the favor of defendant unless its guilt of the conduct complained of was established beyond a reasonable doubt.

Headnotes/Summary

---

Headnotes

Unlawful Combination -- Foreign Corporation -- Permit to Do Business -- Forfeiture.

A course of dealing between a foreign corporation and dealers in oil, binding the latter to buy only of the former, to sell only at a fixed price, and not to sell to competing dealers, constituted such violation of the Acts of May 30, 1889, and April 30, 1895, prohibiting combinations in restraint of trade, as warranted the forfeiture of such corporation's permit to do business in the State, except as to interstate commerce.

Unlawful Combination -- Constitutional Law -- Police Power.

The laws prohibiting combinations in restraint of trade (Acts March 30, 1889, and April 30, 1895) are a legitimate exercise of the police power of the State, and are not within the prohibition of the Constitution of the United States or that of the State of Texas, either as denying to certain citizens or classes the equal protection of the laws, or depriving them of property without due process of law.

Pleading -- Anti-Trust Law -- Interstate Commerce.

See pleading held to charge a foreign corporation with engaging in domestic as well as interstate commerce, and hence to be subject to regulation by the State.

Evidence Showing Domestic Commerce.

See evidence held to show transactions constituting domestic commerce and subject to State regulation.

Foreign Corporation -- Illegal Combination -- Forfeiture of Permit as to Domestic Commerce.

Courts may pronounce judgment against a foreign corporation, engaged in both interstate and domestic business and found guilty of unlawful combinations in restraint of trade, forfeiting its permit to do business in the State as to domestic, but leaving unaffected its rights as to interstate commerce.

Foreign Corporation -- Forfeiting Permit -- Impairing Contract.

The right granted a foreign corporation to do business in the State for a term of years was subject to forfeiture for violation of the statutes, and such forfeiture did not impair the obligation of the contract granting it such permit.

Agency -- Criminal Act.

A corporation may become bound by the acts of its agents within the scope of their duty, though the act involves a criminal responsibility on the part of the agent.

Agency -- Knowledge of Principal.

See evidence held sufficient for holding a corporation responsible for unlawful contracts in restraint of trade made by its agents, on the ground that, with knowledge, it acquiesced in and accepted the benefits of their agreements.

Contracts in Restraint of Trade -- Evidence.

On the issue of unlawful trade combinations by a corporation, evidence tending to show the methods of its agents in doing business in the State and knowledge thereof by the corporation, is admissible.

Best Evidence.

Testimony of a witness that no objections were made by defendant's agent to his acts as reported to such agent, was not objectionable as implying a statement of the contents of such reports.

Agency -- Evidence.

An agent can not testify that he was not authorized by his principal to do certain acts, nor the principal that he did not authorize them.

Evidence -- Self Serving Declarations.

Statements in a circular letter issued by defendant, to the effect that certain transactions by its agents were without its authority or knowledge, were not admissible in its behalf.

Evidence -- Civil Cases -- Reasonable Doubt.

An action to forfeit the permit to a corporation to do business is a civil controversy and the charge need not be proven beyond a reasonable doubt.

Counsel: John D. Johnson and Clark & Bolinger, for appellant.

M. M. Crane, Attorney-General, and T. A. Fuller, Assistant, for appellee.

Judges: FISHER, Chief Justice.

Opinion by: FISHER

Opinion

---

[*3] [**936] FISHER, Chief Justice. -- The object of this suit, the laws under which it is brought, and the issues [***3] involved, are so accurately stated in the admirable charge of the trial court, that we set it out in full, as giving all the information needed upon these questions.

"1. This is a suit by the State of Texas, as plaintiff, against the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, a private corporation, and E. T. Hathaway, William Grice, F. A. Austin, J. W. Keenan, and Lewis Fries, as defendants, to cancel the permit of said Waters-Pierce Oil Company to do business in this State and to enjoin all of said defendants from further transacting the business of said company in this State, on account of an alleged violation of the laws of this State against trusts by said company, its agents, and employes.

"2. The plaintiff alleges that the defendant, Waters-Pierce Oil Company, is a private corporation, incorporated under the laws of the State of Missouri, for the purpose of dealing in petroleum and its products and in selling the same in the State of Missouri and other States, and that on July 6, 1889, said company filed its articles of incorporation in the Secretary of State's office in this State, and secured a permit to transact its said business in the State of Texas for a term of ten years, as provided [***4] by the laws of this State, and that since said date defendant company has been transacting its said business in this State and has divided this State into five general divisions for the purpose of transacting its said business, and that the defendants, E. T. Hathaway, F. A. Austin, William Grice, J. W. Keenan, and Lewis Fries are the respective managers of defendant company in said general divisions of this State, and have appointed various local agents throughout this State for the transaction of its business.

"3. Plaintiff further alleges that the defendant company has violated the law of this State against trusts by making and entering into a contract with and becoming a member of the Standard Oil Trust, which contract and agreement is set out in full in plaintiff's petition, and for doing certain other acts in connection with said Standard Oil Trust agreement.

"3 1/2. Plaintiff also alleges that the defendant company has violated the law of this State against trusts by entering into a contract with the Eagle Refining Company, with C. W. Robinson, with J. L. Lewis, and Stillwell Bros., as set out in plaintiff's petition and introduced in evidence before you

[*4] "4. Plaintiff [***5] further alleges that, since July 6, 1889, said defendant company has been and still is engaged in dealing in and selling the products of petroleum in this State, and that during that time said company has made and is still making, through its agents in this State, contracts and agreements by and between said company and other parties dealing in, buying, and selling similar oils in his State, by the terms of which agreements said parties, for a valuable consideration paid them by defendant company, agreed and contracted that they would not buy any oils from any other person or corporation, but would deal with and buy and sell oils obtained from said defendant company exclusively; that said company has further contracted with certain of said persons as aforesaid, for a valuable consideration paid by defendant company to said parties, by the terms of which said parties contracted and agreed to buy from and sell the oils of defendant company exclusively, and not to sell the oils so bought, as aforesaid, to anyone buying from or dealing with any other person or corporation dealing in such oils in [**937] competition with said defendant company. And further, that said company, since [***6] July 6, 1889, has made and entered into other contracts and agreements by and between it and various others dealing in, buying, and selling oils, by the terms of which said parties agree with said company to purchase its said oils and to sell the same to others desiring to purchase the same, at prices fixed and established by it or its agents and officers; the names and dates and contracts above referred to are set out in plaintiff's petition.

"5. Plaintiff further alleges that prior to July 6, 1889, and also since that date, the defendant company entered into certain contracts in writing with certain parties in Brownsville, Texas, by the terms of which said parties bound themselves to buy all their oil from defendant company for a fixed period, in consideration of certain rebates allowed them by defendant company, and also agreed to sell such oil at a price fixed by defendant company, and that such contracts as were entered into prior to 1889 have been carried out and executed and business done thereunder by said parties since that date to the present time; the parties with whom said contracts were made and the terms thereof are set out in plaintiff's petition.

"6. Plaintiff alleges [***7] that all of said contracts above mentioned were made by the agents of said defendant company, and were authorized by it and were fully ratified and carried out by it after same had been so made, and that the same were a violation of the laws against trusts of this State; that the products of petroleum are articles of prime necessity to the people of this State, and that, by reason of said acts and contracts, said defendant company has forfeited its right to transact business in this State; and prays for an injunction prohibiting the defendant company, its agents and employes from further violating said statute, and for a decree canceling the permit of said company to do business in this State.

[*5] "7. The defendants answer by a general denial of all the allegations of plaintiff's petition, and especially answer that the Waters-Pierce Oil Company is the real defendant in this action, and that the other parties named as defendants are simply its agents in the State of Texas.

"It further says that the State of Texas is estopped from canceling defendant's permit to do business in this State, because that on July 6, 1889, through its proper officers, and in pursuance of the provisions [***8] of the law of this State, it did for a sufficient and lawful consideration issue to said company a permit to do business in this State for a term of ten years from that date, and that said permit was a valid and binding contract between it and the State of Texas.

"8. Defendant further pleads that it is a foreign corporation, of the State of Missouri, having its principal office in said State of Missouri, and that the business transacted by it in the State of Texas was interstate commerce and not subject to the laws of the State of Texas.

"Defendant denies that it ever became a member of or a party to the Standard Oil Trust agreement, or that it acted with said trust or was controlled by said trust in any way; that said trust was dissolved March 21, 1892.

"Defendant denies that it ever entered into any of the contracts or agreements with the parties named in plaintiff's petition, for the sale of its oil, and that if any such contracts or agreements were entered into, as set forth in plaintiff's petition, with anyone representing the defendant company, either as agent, attorney, employe, servant, or otherwise, the same was never known to the defendant company, nor did it ever sanction [***9] or ratify such contract, either directly or indirectly; wherefore, they pray that plaintiff take nothing by this suit.

"9. Upon the law of the case, you are instructed as follows: Under the laws of this State, a trust is defined as follows:

HN1[] "A trust is a combination of capital, skill or acts, by two or more persons, firms, corporations, or associations of persons, or either two or more of them, for either, any, or all of the following purposes:

"(1) To create or carry out restrictions in trade, or commerce, or aids to commerce, or to create or carry out restrictions in the full and free pursuit of any business authorized or permitted by the laws of this State.

"(2) To increase or reduce the price of merchandise, produce, or commodities.

"(3) To prevent competition in manufacture, making, transportation, sale, or purchase of merchandise, produce, or commodities, or to prevent competition in aids to commerce.

"(4) To fix at any standard or figure, whereby its price to the public shall be in any manner controlled or established, any article or commodity or merchandise, produce, or commerce, intended for sale, use or consumption in this State.

HN2[] "(5) To make or enter into or execute [***10] or carry out any contract, obligation, or agreement of any kind or description, by which they shall bind or have bound themselves not to sell, dispose of, or transport any [*6] article or commodity or article of trade, use, merchandise, commerce, or consumption, below a common standard figure, or by which they shall agree in any manner to keep the price of such article, commodity, or transportation at a fixed or graded figure, or by which they shall in any manner establish or settle the price of any article, or commodity, or transportation, between them or themselves and others, to preclude a free and unrestricted competition among themselves or others in the sale [**938] or transportation of any such article or commodity, or by which they shall agree to pool, combine or unite any interest they may have in connection with the sale or transportation of any such article or commodity, that its price might in any manner be affected.

"10. Now, if you find from the evidence that the defendant company, acting through its duly appointed and authorized agents, entered into and performed a contract in the State of Texas with any of the parties dealing in, buying, and selling oils, [***11] as named and set out in plaintiff's petition, since July 6, 1889, by the terms of which contract it was agreed that said parties were to buy oil from the defendant company exclusively, for any specified time, and from no other source, in consideration of rebates allowed them by the defendant company, or for any other valuable consideration; or if you find that said company, so acting through its duly appointed and authorized agents, since said date, made, entered into and carried out a contract in this State with any of the persons named and as stated in plaintiff's petition, by the terms of which said parties bound and obligated themselves, for a valuable consideration, to buy all their oils from defendant company, and not to buy oils from any other source for any specified time, and not to sell said oils so bought from defendant company to any person handling or dealing in oils in competition with defendant company; or if said defendant company, so acting since said date, made and entered into and carried out in this State, a contract with any of the parties, as stated and named in plaintiff's petition, by the terms of which said parties, for a valuable consideration, bound and obligated [***12] themselves to said company, either verbally or in writing, to buy all their oils exclusively from defendant company, and from no other source, and to sell said oils so bought to other parties desiring to purchase the same at a price fixed by said company's officers or agents, and you further find that said sales of oils were not interstate commerce, as that is hereinafter explained to you, and that said officers or agents, so acting for said company in making said contracts, if any were so made, were acting in the scope of their employment and duty, and were authorized to make such contracts by the governing officers of said company, or that said governing officers, with a knowledge that said contracts had been made, consented to and ratified or carried out the same after they were made, then you are instructed that the defendant would be guilty of violating the law against trusts of this State; and if you so find the facts to be as above stated, you will return a verdict for the plaintiff against the defendant, Waters-Pierce Oil Company.

"11. You are further instructed that HN3[↑] a corporation can only act [*7] through its agents and servants, but a corporation is not liable for all [**13] the acts of its agents or servants. It is liable, however, for the acts of its agents done in the scope of their employment and agency, and is also liable for the acts of its agents which it has authorized such agents to perform, and it is also liable for the unauthorized acts of its agents which have been acquiesced in or ratified by the governing body of said corporation.

"12. Now if you find from the evidence that any or all of the contracts mentioned in section No. 10 of this charge, were made and carried out by the defendant company, acting through its agents with the parties therein named, but you do not find that said agents were authorized by the governing body of said corporation to make said contracts, nor that said contracts were made in the scope of the duty and employment of such agents, and do not find that said contracts, if any were made, were known to, or acquiesced in, or consented to by the governing body of said corporation, after being made by said agents, then you will return a verdict for the defendant company.

"13. But if you find said contracts mentioned in section No. 10 of this charge were entered into by the defendant company, acting through its agents, [***14] and that said agents were acting in the scope of their employment and agency in making said contracts, or, if said contracts were not authorized by the governing body of said corporation, that it acquiesced in or consented to or ratified said acts after knowing the same had been entered into, then said defendant company would be liable for such acts.

"14. You are further instructed that HN4[↑] this court has no jurisdiction over, and the laws of this State do not apply to interstate commerce, -- that is, to commerce between the different states of the United States. Shipments of oils or other products, made by the Waters-Pierce Oil Company from points without this State to its agents within this State is interstate commerce until such oils are sold by said company in the original packages in which it was shipped into this State, and as such is not subject to the laws of this State, regulating the sale thereof, and if the evidence introduced before you shows any of the contracts set out in plaintiff's petition were made in reference to interstate commerce. then you will not consider such contracts further, as the laws of this State do not cover such transactions; but, on the other hand, if [***15] the Waters-Pierce Oil Company shipped oils from points beyond this State to its agents, to points within this State, and after their receipt in this State the same were sold by said agents in this State, to parties in this State in broken packages or by retail, and not in the original packages in which said oils were shipped into this State, then such business is not interstate commerce, and is subject to the laws of this State; you are further instructed that, even though the contract may have reference to interstate shipments of oils, yet if the parties go farther and contract that such oils, after being sold by said Waters-Pierce Oil Company to parties in this [**939] State, shall be sold by said parties at a price fixed by the duly authorized agents of defendant company, then you are informed that such [*8] dealing with said oils, after its sale to parties in this State, is not protected by the interstate commerce laws, but such contracts, if made, are subject to the laws of this State.

"15. You are instructed that HN5[↑] the law against trusts in this State became a law on March 30, 1889, and was amended in 1895, and the defendant company obtained its permit to do business [***16] in this State on July 6, 1889, and all transactions in evidence before you, of date prior to July 6, 1889, are immaterial in this case, except where such contracts were continued and carried out subsequent to July 6, 1889, and for the purpose of showing the course of dealing of said company in this State, and such transactions prior to July 6, 1889, are no ground for forfeiture of defendant's permit to do business.

"16. There has been certain evidence introduced before you tending to show efforts and inducements offered by the agents of the defendant company to parties to handle oils of defendant company exclusively, and tending to show refusal of the agents of said company to sell parties handling other oils than those of defendant company, and of discrimination in prices against parties handling other oils than those of defendant company, and of cutting of prices by defendant company, to break down competition; none of these things are unlawful, and was only admitted as bearing upon the question of the course of dealing of defendant company in this State, and as bearing upon the question, whether or not the defendant company made or entered into the contracts, or any of them, as [***17] set out and mentioned in section number 10 herein, and as to whether or not such contracts or course of dealing, if any such there was, was known to the governing officers of the defendant company, or was authorized by them.

"17. There has been introduced in evidence before you a certain contract, known as the Standard Oil Trust agreement, and certain evidence tending to show that the defendant Waters-Pierce Oil Company became a member of and entered into said agreement; you are instructed that the evidence is not sufficient to show that defendant became a member of said organization, if at all, in a manner that violates the trust laws of this State, and you will, therefore, disregard all testimony upon this branch of the case.

"18. There has also been introduced in evidence before you certain evidence in regard to a contract made by the defendant company with the Eagle Refining Company, and also with C. W. Robinson, with J. L. Lewis and Stillwell Bros., in the State of Texas, by which they purchased the business of such concerns; you are instructed that such transactions as these are not believed to be in violation of the laws of this State, and the evidence in regard to these transactions [***18] will only be considered by you as bearing upon the course of dealing of defendant company in this State.

"19. The questions for you to determine in this case are:

"(1) Were any of the contracts mentioned in section 10 of this [*9] charge made and entered into and carried out by the defendant company in this State, since July 6, 1889, acting through its agents.

"(2) Whether such agents were acting in the scope of their authority and employment in making such contracts, or, if not, whether same were ratified or acquiesced in by defendant company after they were so made.

"(3) Whether said contracts, if any, relate to interstate commerce or to business within this State.

"20. In determining whether or not the agents of defendant company were authorized to make the contracts alleged, if any were so made, or whether same were known to or acquiesced in by defendant company's governing officers, the same does not necessarily have to be shown by positive or direct testimony, but may be shown by circumstances, and you will take into consideration all the facts and circumstances in evidence before you in determining this question.

"21. You will return a verdict for the defendants Hathaway, [***19] Austin, Grice, Keenan, and Fries, as they are only the agents of defendant company and not liable in this suit. If you find a verdict for the plaintiff, you will say, 'We the jury find for the plaintiff, the State of Texas, against the defendant, Waters-Pierce Oil Company, and in favor of the individual defendants,' naming them. If you find for the defendant company, you will say, 'We the jury find for all the defendants, and that plaintiff take nothing by this suit.'

"22. The burden of proof is on the plaintiff to show, by a preponderance of the evidence, the facts necessary to entitle it to recover.

"23. The jury are the exclusive judges of the credibility of the witnesses, the facts proven, and the weight to be given the testimony, but are bound to receive the law from the court and be governed thereby."

A verdict was rendered for the State, against the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, but against the State in favor of Hathaway and the other defendants, upon which verdict judgment was entered denying to the Waters-Pierce Oil Company the right to do any business in Texas, and revoking and canceling its permit to do business in Texas, and perpetually enjoining said company and its agents [***20] from doing business in Texas, but adding this provision, by way of qualification, viz: "Nothing herein contained shall be construed to in any way affect or apply to or prohibit said defendant's right to engage in interstate commerce within this State."

[**940] Opinion. -- It is needless for us to set out the evidence upon which we base our conclusions of facts, as it is sufficient for us to state that we find that there is evidence which tends to establish the combination of facts as set out in the tenth subdivision of the charge of the court, and that these facts constitute a violation of the anti-trust laws of this State; and that the appellant, through its agents, with knowledge of the facts, was connected with those transactions, and that there is some evidence which supports the two propositions of law given in the subsequent portion of [*10] the fourteenth subdivision of the charge, which takes the conduct complained of out of the domain of interstate commerce.

From these conclusions, we find that the facts warrant the judgment rendered, and that it should not be disturbed, unless for some legal grounds affecting its validity. The appellant is a foreign corporation, [***21] domiciled in Missouri, engaged in the business of shipping and selling oils within this State, and there is some evidence which shows that they are dealing in oils as a business within this State.

The charge of the court sufficiently defines what, under the statutes of this State, is an illegal trust and combination, and we may add that the first act upon the subject, which went into effect March 30, 1889, exempted from its operation agricultural products and live stock, while in the hands of the producer and raiser; and the second act, which went into effect April 30, 1895, which was intended to repeal the Act of 1889 (and was in its general features much similar to that act), contained the same exemption as to agricultural products and live stock while in the hands of the raiser or producer, with also an exemption from its operation of labor organizations created for the purpose of maintaining a standard of wages. Both acts provide for a forfeiture of the charter of domestic corporations and of permit of foreign corporations to do business in this State, as a penalty for the infraction of the provisions of the statutes.

It is insisted that the statutes in question illegally infringe [***22] upon the liberty of the citizen to contract concerning his property, and deprive him of his property and impose restraints and burdens upon it, without due process of law. HN6 The fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, from which these rights flow, extends its benefits in these respects to corporations, as well as persons. Railway v. Beckwith, 129 U.S. 26, 28; Turnpike Co. v. Sandford, 164 U.S. 578, 41 L. Ed. 560, 17 S. Ct. 198. But a consideration of these questions necessarily leads to the inquiry whether the statutes that are assailed arise out of an exercise of the general police authority of the State; for upon a solution of that question much depends the proper answer to be given to the contention of appellant.

HN7 The State may, in the exercise of its police power, legislate concerning many matters which, but for the authority in this respect, would be unauthorized. This power -- generally stated as the "police power of the State" -- extends to a variety of subjects which need not be enumerated, as it is generally admitted that matters and subjects which affect the general welfare and public interests are within the supervision of this power. The court in the [***23] case of Munn v. Illinois, 94 U.S. 113, 24 L. Ed. 77, speaking of this power, say: "But it does authorize the establishment of laws requiring each citizen to so conduct himself and so use his own property as not unnecessarily to injure another's. This is the very essence of government, and has found expression in the maxim, "sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedes." From this source come the police powers, which, as was said by Chief Justice Taney in the License Cases, 5 How. 554, 583, "are nothing more or less than the powers of government, inherent in every sovereignty, * * * that is to say, * * * the power to govern men and [*11] things." Under these powers, the government regulates the conduct of its citizens one towards another, and the manner in which each shall use his own property, when such regulations become necessary for the public good."

HN8 "The State can now as before prescribe regulations for the health, good order, and safety of society, and adopt such measures as will advance its interests and prosperity." Railway v. Beckwith, 129 U.S. 26, 29.

HN9 "The police power of the State is the authority vested in the Legislature to enact all such wholesome and reasonable laws * * [*24] * as they may deem conducive to public good." State v. Moore, 104 N.C. 714; same case, 17 Am. St. Rep., 698.

HN10 "All property is held subject to the power of the State to regulate or control its use, to secure the general safety and the public welfare. 'We think it is a settled principle,' says Chief Justice Shaw, in Commonwealth v.

Alger, 7 Cush. 84, 'growing out of the nature of well ordered civil society, that every holder of property, however absolute and unqualified may be his title, holds it under the implied liability that his use shall not be injurious to the equal enjoyment of others having an equal right to the enjoyment of their property, nor injurious to the rights of the community. All property is held subject to those general regulations which are necessary to the common good and general welfare.' Judge Redfield, in a passage often cited with approval, speaking of the police power, says: 'By this general police power of the State, persons and property are subjected to all kinds of restraints and burdens, in order to secure the general comfort, health, and prosperity of the State; of the perfect right of the Legislature to do which, no question ever was, or upon acknowledged [***25] general principles can be made.' Thorp v. Railway, 27 Vt. 140. The police power, so called, inheres in every sovereignty, and is essential to the maintenance of public order and the preservation of mutual rights from disturbing conflicts." Berthoff v. O'Reilly, 74 N.Y. 509.

HN11[] The State in the exercise of this power in the selection of remedies looking to the suppression of evils harmful to its people, may apply them to the most sacred contracts and to the uses of property of every description, not in the way of an arbitrary spoliation or confiscation under a capricious exercise of the police power, but a useful regulation in the interest of the public welfare. Cool. Const. Lim., 6 ed., 707-720.

HN12[] In enumerating the subjects which may be acted upon by the State in the exercise of its police power, Mr. Tiedeman, in his valuable work on Limitations of Police Powers, names combinations in restraint of trade, section 96; and as said in United States v. Freight Association, 166 U.S. 290, 41 L. Ed. 1007, 17 S. Ct. 540: "Manufacturing or trading companies may also affect prices by joining together in forming a trust or other combination, and by making agreements in restraint of trade [***26] and commerce which, when carried out, affect the interests of the public."

This is certainly a just acknowledgement of the power, for there are few acts which individuals may engage in that are more harmful in their [*12] effects upon the interests of the people generally than trusts and combinations concerning the commodities useful to mankind.

HN13[] The rights of the individual must yield to the public wants, and his conduct and all property held by him is subject to the control of the State, to the end that he shall so demean himself and use his property with as little hurt and injury to the public as possible. "As said in Munn v. Illinois, 94 U.S. 113, 24 L. Ed. 77, while power does not exist with the whole people to control rights that are purely and exclusively private, government may require each citizen to so conduct himself, and so use his own property, as not unnecessarily to injure another." Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U.S. 623, 31 L. Ed. 205, 8 S. Ct. 273.

HN14[] This is one of the inherent rights of sovereignty, and it is as much in place that it shall be exercised when the public interest requires, as it is the duty of the State, by stringent laws, to protect society from the depredations [***27] of the thief and the ravages of the murderer. When it is once admitted that a matter is a subject of police supervision, the expediency and wisdom of the means resorted to are subjects solely confided to the legislative department of the State, subject, however, to limitations imposed by the organic law of the nation in excluding from their jurisdiction, for many purposes, certain matters of control solely reserved to the national government, -- such, for instance, as many of the matters relating to interstate commerce. It is not meant by this that a Legislature may conclusively declare a matter subject to its police authority, when in fact such is not the case -- for that is a question which the courts may determine, -- and under the guise of that power, by a system of confiscation and spoliation, which has no place in our government, deprive a citizen of his rights, but, as said before, when it is once determined that the subject dealt with really concerns the public welfare, it lies wholly within the police authority of the State, through its law makers, to determine how it shall be handled and dealt with. Railway v. Mathews, 165 U.S. 1, 16.

HN15[] By adequate laws looking to the suppression [***28] of evil, the State, through the exercise of its police power, must necessarily restrain the unbridled license of the citizen in his conduct and use of property, and restraints imposed in this way have never been held to illegally impair his liberty, as is attested from many of the provisions of the codes of this State and of others and the constructions that have been given to them. The freedom of speech, the liberty of person, and life itself must be surrendered, when the public interests and the order of good government so require. The liberty of the citizen, which embraces the legal right to his property, and to lawfully contract concerning it, stand upon no higher ground.

In Soon Hing v. Crowley, 113 U.S. 703, 28 L. Ed. 1145, 5 S. Ct. 730, the court said: "The objection that the fourth section is void on the ground that it deprives a man of the right to work at all times is equally without force. HN16[<sup>1</sup>] However broad the right of everyone to follow such calling and employ his time as he may judge most conducive to his interests, it must be exercised [*13] subject to such general rules as are adopted by society for the common welfare. All sorts of restrictions are imposed upon the [***29] actions of men notwithstanding the liberty which is guaranteed to each. It is liberty regulated by just and impartial laws." Crowley v. Christensen, 137 U.S. 86, 34 L. Ed. 620, 11 S. Ct. 13.

The objection to the statutes that they deprive the owner of his property without due process of law is equally untenable. It was not the design of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States to interfere with a just and proper exercise of the police power by the States. Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U.S. 27, 28 L. Ed. 923, 5 S. Ct. 357; Davis v. Massachusetts, 167 U.S. 43, 42 L. Ed. 71, 17 S. Ct. 731. And when we determine, as we have, that the measures in question provided by these statutes were proper police regulations, we go far towards conclusively answering the objections to the statutes on the ground that they deprive the owners of their property, without due process of law. HN17[<sup>1</sup>] If legislative authority exists to restrain the conduct of owners in a particular way in the use of their property, deemed injurious to the public welfare, and the Legislature has acted in the manner required in passing laws, due process of law exists, in so far as it is necessary to find legal authority [***30] for prohibiting the act. Legal restraints imposed upon the [**942] use of property do not deprive the owner of it without due process of law: Railway v. Mathews, 165 U.S. 1, 23; Railway v. Humes, 115 U.S. 512, 519; Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U.S. 27, 28 L. Ed. 923, 5 S. Ct. 357; Walston v. Nevin, 128 U.S. 578, 32 L. Ed. 544, 9 S. Ct. 192; Railway v. Gibbes, 142 U.S. 386, 387; Bertholf v. O'Reilly, 74 N.Y. 509; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U.S. 623, 31 L. Ed. 205, 8 S. Ct. 273.

In the case last cited, the Supreme Court, in passing upon a statute of Kansas which in effect deprived owners of intoxicating liquors of their right to pursue the avocation of selling and disposing of that class of property, at length reviewed this question, and also that aspect of those statutes which tended to interfere with the liberty of the citizen. The conclusion was reached that the matter was the subject of police regulation, and the restraints imposed upon the use of the property in the prohibited way did not illegally affect the liberty of the citizen or deprive him of his property without due process of law.

HN18[<sup>1</sup>] The statutes here in question do not arbitrarily, by legislative decree, ipso facto, operate [***31] upon the liberty of the citizen or upon his property, and deprive him of these rights, but provide for an orderly procedure in the courts of the State, with a right of the accused to be heard before being condemned. Whenever a burden is "imposed upon property for the public use, whether it be for the whole State, or some more limited portion of the community, and those laws provide for a mode of confirming or contesting the charge thus imposed in the ordinary courts of justice, with such notice to the person or such proceeding in regard to the property as is appropriate to the nature of the case, the judgment in such proceedings can not be said to deprive the owner of his property without due process of law." Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U.S. 97, 24 L. Ed. 616.

HN19[<sup>1</sup>] The statutes are next assailed upon the ground that they are class legislation, and deny to certain citizens and classes equal protection of the [*14] laws, and that the classification of subjects upon which the laws should bear, and those who are exempted from its operation, are purely capricious and arbitrary, in that there are no differences in the conditions of the classes which would justify the distinction made between [***32] them. Therefore, for this reason, it is contended that the statutes are obnoxious to the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution.

That the statutes in these respects are constitutional, has, in effect, been admitted by the courts of this State in the following cases: Brewing Association v. Houck, 27 S.W. 692; same case in 30 S. W. Rep., 869; Brewing Co. v. Templeman, 90 Tex. 277, 38 S.W. 27; Fuqua v. Brewing Co., 90 Tex. 298, 38 S.W. 29.

We might be content with resting a disposition of this question upon these cases, but the gravity of the question and the earnestness with which the law is assailed command a more extended consideration of the subject. Of the many additional cases which may be cited, which by analogy sustain those noticed, are Fidelity and Casualty Co. v. Allibone, 90 Tex. 660, 40 S.W. 399; Insurance Co. v. Levy, 33 S.W. 992; Campbell v. Cook, 86 Tex. 630, 26 S.W. 486; Railway v. Mackey, 127 U.S. 205, 209; Railway v. Beckwith, 129 U.S. 26, 29; Railway v. New York, 165 U.S. 628, 633; Express Co. v. Seibert, 142 U.S. 339, 35 L. Ed. 1035, 12 S. Ct. 250; Railway v. Humes, 115 U.S. 512, 519; Soon Hing v. Crowley, 113 U.S. 703, 28 L. Ed. 1145, 5 S. Ct. 730; Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U.S. 27, 28 L. Ed. 923, 5 S. Ct. 357; Crowley v. Christensen, 137 U.S. 86, 34 L. Ed. 620, 11 S. Ct. 13; Hays v. Minnis, 120 U.S. 68; Bank v. Penn, 167 U.S. 461, 42 L. Ed. 236, 17 S. Ct. 829; Railway v. Mathews, 165 U.S. 1, 23; Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U.S. 678, 32 L. Ed. 253, 8 S. Ct. 992; State v. Moore, 17 Am. St. Rep., 697, 104 N.C. 714, 10 S.E. 143.

In discussing the great mass of case law which touches upon this subject, those that relate to railways as a class of carriers are sufficient as a basis for demonstrating our views. It is true that many of these cases which recognize HN20[<sup>1</sup>] the right of the Legislature to classify railways as a special subject of legislation and impose duties, burdens, and restrictions upon them which are not imposed upon other carriers, are based upon the principle that they are public corporations and engaged in a public business, and that further, on account of the dangerous character of their business and by reason of benefits received, the power exists to impose duties and burdens upon them which are not applied to other carriers. But really, the true principle and doctrine upon which legislation of this character is bottomed, as affecting [***34] railways as a class, is that the public interests and welfare require that in the use of their property and the performance of their business it be conducted in a way least harmful to the public and most beneficial thereto consistent with the right of ownership in the property. It is the public interest and welfare that is involved in the business they carry on and conduct that really gives the State, in the exercise of its police power, jurisdiction over their affairs. Now, HN21[<sup>1</sup>] the general welfare of the people is no more important to be observed in restraining and controlling railways in their relation to the commerce of the country than is the public interest to be subserved by laws which restrain and prevent trusts and combinations concerning [*15] such commerce, and which seek to prevent conspiracies entered into for the purpose of affecting the prices of commodities which are useful and necessary to the enjoyment of life. In each case the interest of mankind requires that the selfishness of human nature, which seeks alone to advance its individual interests, shall, in the use of property and in [**943] conduct, be so far restrained, as may be compatible with individual right [***35] and liberty, as will prevent harm and injury to the public.

The cases of Campbell v. Cook, Railway v. Mackey, Railway v. Mathews, and Railway v. Beckwith, supra, are instances of legislation creating and enforcing regulations concerning only railways as a class of carriers. They were not applied to other carriers. But the statutes operated with equal effect upon all railways.

In these cases the rule laid down in Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U.S. 27, 31, was applied, to the effect that HN22[<sup>1</sup>] "regulations for these purposes may press with more or less weight upon one than upon another, but they are designed not to impose unequal or unnecessary restrictions upon one, but to promote, with as little individual inconvenience as possible, the general good. Though in many respects necessarily special in their character, they do not furnish just ground of complaint if they operate alike upon all persons and property under the same circumstances and conditions. Class legislation discriminating against some and favoring others is prohibited, but legislation which in carrying out a public purpose is limited in its application, if within the sphere of its operation it affects alike all persons similarly [***36] situated, is not within the amendment."

The view of the court in these and similar cases, is fully illustrated by what is said in Railway v. Mackey, 127 U.S. 205, where a statute making railway corporations liable for damages resulting to employes by reason of the negligence of their fellow servants was held constitutional. HN23[<sup>1</sup>] "The hazardous character of the business of operating railways would seem to call for special legislation with respect to railroad corporations having for its object the protection of their employes as well as the safety of the public. The business of other corporations is not subject to similar dangers to their employes, and no objections, therefore, can be made to the legislation on the ground of its making an unjust discrimination. It meets a particular necessity, and all railroad corporations are, without discrimination, made subject to the same liabilities. As said by the court below, it is simply a question of legislative discretion whether the same liabilities shall be applied to carriers by canal and stage coaches and to other persons and corporations using steam in manufactoryes."

HN24[<sup>1</sup>] The Legislature, in the pursuit of its police power, in selecting subjects [***37] upon which it shall bear, can not capriciously and arbitrarily classify those subjects, and impose burdens on some and relieve others, when in the nature of things they are similarly situated and no reason could exist for the distinction. But, viewing the subject of classification from any standpoint, if reasons for the distinction can in any event exist the legislation must be credited with being founded upon it. Doubtless the several Legislatures, in passing statutes regulating railways as [*16] a distinct class of carriers, evidently contemplated that, from the magnitude of the service in which they were engaged and the relations they bore to the public and the injury that might result to the public welfare if they were not restrained, requiring rules and regulations for their conduct which were not necessary to be applied to other carriers because of their limited capacity and extent, the public were not so much concerned with the conduct of their business, and that they were not so situated as to seriously, in these particulars, affect or injure the public. It is not the duty of the State to discover the reasons and circumstances upon which these laws may rest, but the burden [***38] is upon the appellant to demonstrate that the classification was capricious and unauthorized.

We can not say that the law upon its face establishes its want of reason, or that circumstances and conditions existing in this State, in relation to the subjects dealt with in the acts and the evils sought to be suppressed, did not authorize the classification made in the statutes. This view might relieve us of any duty looking towards a discovery of reasons which might have been in the legislative mind for the distinction and classification. The law is not palpably in violation of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution, but whether it is so, depends much upon the facts and conditions existing at the time which would make it unjust to discriminate between the classes. HN25[<sup>1</sup>] In the absence of such facts showing the contrary, the presumption would be in favor of its constitutionality. State v. Moore, 17 Am. St. Rep. 698; State v. Addington, 77 Mo. 110; Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U.S. 678, 32 L. Ed. 253, 8 S. Ct. 992.

HN26[<sup>1</sup>] The domestic welfare of the people of this State is within the keeping of its Legislatures, and they are supposed to best know their wants and necessities, and the policy that [***39] shall govern its internal affairs, and the remedies needful in the pursuit of this policy and that are necessary in order to extinguish or prevent evil and harmful conditions affecting the general interest and the public welfare. These are matters political and relate to the economic affairs of government, and are peculiarly within the knowledge of the law-making department thereof. The remedies, therefore, lie within the legislative province and are, to some extent, confided to their discretion and wisdom. Hennington v. Georgia, 163 U.S. 299, 41 L. Ed. 166, 16 S. Ct. 1086; Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U.S. 678, 32 L. Ed. 253, 8 S. Ct. 992. In this last case it is said "Every possible presumption is in favor of the validity of a statute, and this continues until the contrary is shown beyond a rational doubt."

In the pursuit of this policy conditions might exist which would justify the Legislature in creating and providing remedies adequate to suppress the evil, when applied to one class of subjects, which might not, in their opinion, be necessary to be applied to other classes. For the danger to the public [*944] welfare from the pursuit of the evil by the one class may be of [***40] such magnitude and lead to such disastrous consequences that corrective measures are absolutely essential to the order of good government and to the repose and stability of society; while, upon the other hand, the danger in these respects from the excluded classes may be inappreciable [*17] and the acts denounced so difficult of consummation at their hands in injurious effects upon the welfare of the people that corrective measures are not necessary to be applied to them. Now, combinations and trusts in restraint of trade and the existence of monopolies which place it within the power of those combining to affect and elevate the prices of commodities in use by the peoples of the world for their enjoyment and necessities are harmful to the welfare of the public whenever and wherever such conditions are permitted to exist. With a knowledge of this fact within the mind of the law makers, the Legislature of this State, in the light of history, and with a knowledge of current events, may, with much reason, have concluded that the danger from trusts and combinations which in their operation would injuriously affect the people would be at the hands of the buyer and seller and dealer [***41] in commodities, and not at the hands of the producers, and that by reason of the generally admitted necessity of the producers to readily and speedily dispose of their products and the difficulties in their way to a successful combination relating to the disposition of their products, little if any danger to the public would be apprehended from that source. HN27[<sup>1</sup>] The Legislatures of the State are supposed to have acted in this matter intelligently and with a knowledge of the conditions and dangers confronting the people from combinations and trusts; and it requires little enlightenment to discover that, at the time these laws were passed and now, the disturbing classes which were and now are so injuriously affecting the public welfare are the buyers, sellers, and dealers in the articles in use by the people of this State. The unbridled license of these classes which in many instances was exercised, had, within this State as well as other sections of the country, assumed such proportions that the danger to the welfare of the people was so apparent that the layman as well as the lawgiver could discern it.

Whatever condition may exist elsewhere concerning the conduct of the producing class [***42] in affecting through combinations the prices of their productions, it can not be said to exist in this State, if at all, to any appreciable extent, at least not to such an extent as to be an evil of such proportions as to necessarily require corrective measures for its suppression. All these facts were known to the Legislature and evidently influenced them in selecting the subjects to which the law should apply. Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U.S. 537, 550. And as said in Railway v. Mackey, supra, "It was simply a matter of legislative discretion, whether the same liabilities" should be applied to the classes which were exempted from the operation of the statute. This case is quoted with approval by the recent case of Railway v. Mathews, 165 U.S. 1, 25.

The conditions of the classes embraced in the act and those excluded are not altogether similar, and there are many distinguishing features between the two which suggest the power in the one to successfully combine and which deny it to the other. The infant twenty years of age may possess the mental requisites to contract as one sui juris, and may as well [*18] understand the responsibilities of citizenship, and be as capable of intelligently [***43] exercising the functions of office and the duties of a citizen as an adult. The adult female often possesses as much intelligence as man, and appreciates the rights and duties of citizenship, and possesses a knowledge of the affairs of government; but in these instances a distinction is observed between their rights, on the one hand, and those of adults and males on the other. But in those cases, the power of the lawmakers to confer privileges upon the one class and deny them to the other has never been successfully questioned. But they are as much within the protection of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution as those of other classes. It is somewhat difficult to perceive why mechanics, as a class of laborers, should be entitled to more privileges and advantages than are conferred upon other classes of laborers and servants. But laws of this class, which provide means for mechanics in the collection of their debts, are not extended to other classes of laborers; and, as said in Railway v. Mackey, such statutes are not obnoxious to the fourteenth amendment.

These are simply haphazard illustrations that have just occurred to us, of many that could be given, showing the power [***44] of the lawmakers to classify subjects when, in their wisdom and discretion, reasons therefor may be suggested to them which, when viewed from the standpoint of some other body of lawmakers or of some court which may be called to pass upon such statutes, may not be fully understood or appreciated.

The learned counsel for appellant, in their most able presentation of this question in their brief, contend that the views here expressed are opposed to the case of Railway v. Ellis, 165 U.S. 150.

That case does not conflict with the views we entertain upon this subject. It is distinguishable upon the ground that there it was held that the Legislature did not have the power to arbitrarily and capriciously, without reason, distinguish between classes similarly situated. We do not oppose this view, but hold, as we have endeavored to show, that the classification made by the law in question was not of the character denounced in the case cited.

[**945] If the clause in the Act of 1895 which exempts from its operation labor organizations for the purpose of maintaining their wages would render that statute obnoxious to the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution, which we do not think to [***45] be the case, the entire act would be void and could not operate as a repeal of the former law of 1889; so that if it should be determined that this latter act was unconstitutional, the former act would be in force, and would not be subject to the objections urged against it, for the reasons stated by us in passing upon these objections; and therefore the State could maintain a case under this act.

In response to the first proposition urged under the fourth, eighteenth, twenty-sixth, and forty-second assignments of errors, it is sufficient to say that the petition went further than simply charging the appellant with transporting and shipping into Texas its oils; but in effect charged that it was engaged in business in Texas, in disposing of oils, and had [<sup>19</sup>] made and entered into contracts and agreements with various merchants within this State, and others dealing in oils, to buy and sell the oils of the defendant exclusively; and further agreed not to sell the oils so bought from the defendant company to anyone buying from or dealing with any other corporation, or person, dealing in competitive oils. These allegations in effect allege that the appellant was actually engaged [<sup>46</sup>] in business within this State, and had made and entered into such contracts with reference to the handling, disposition, and sale of oil in this State with merchants and local dealers, of the character denounced in the case of Fuqua v. Brewing Co., 90 Tex. 298, 38 S.W. 29.

In response to the second proposition under these assignments, it can be said that it does not conclusively appear that all of the transactions testified about by the witnesses, occurring between the appellant and certain merchants at Brownsville, Texas, related solely to interstate commerce. There were some facts testified about by these witnesses which made it proper for the jury to consider what was the nature and effect of the transactions that occurred at Brownsville. It would have been improper for the court to have given the charge requested by the appellant upon this subject. HN28[<sup>1</sup>] Where there is any evidence, however slight it may be, the court must leave it to the consideration of the jury.

The court, in rendering its judgment canceling and forfeiting the permit of the appellant, provided that it should not relate to and interfere with the right of appellant, in dealing in matters of interstate commerce. The [<sup>47</sup>] appellant, in its third proposition under these assignments, complains of this judgment, because, as the statute provides for a forfeiture of the permit, the court had no power to render judgment forfeiting the permit so as to apply to dealing in oils locally within this State. The contention is that, as the statute required a forfeiture of the permit to do business in all respects, the court had no power to limit that right in its judgment.

It was decided in the case of Fuqua v. Brewing Co., supra, that it was not the purpose of these statutes to undertake in any way to regulate or to prohibit transactions of interstate commerce, and it was clearly proper for the court to give to the statute this application. If the statute could be applied to domestic commerce and transactions occurring within the limits of this State, the court could give it application, and its inability to extend it to matters of interstate commerce would not affect its power in this respect.

It is contended in the eighth assignment of error that it was not competent for the State to impair the contract authorizing the appellant to do business in this State. After the Act of 1889 went into effect, the State [<sup>48</sup>] granted to appellant authority to engage in its business within this State for a period of ten years. HN29[<sup>1</sup>] The Act of 1889, as well as that of 1895, provides for the forfeiture of the permit of a foreign corporation which may violate any of the provisions of the statute. Except where the foreign corporation is in the employ of the Federal government or is engaged strictly in matters of interstate commerce, such bodies are entitled [<sup>20</sup>] to no rights or privileges except those which may be conferred upon them as an act of grace by the State. Mining Co. v. Penn, 125 U.S. 173.

HN30[<sup>1</sup>] The laws of the State which apply to domestic corporations and individuals in prohibiting certain conduct apply with equal force to foreign corporations. The State, in granting them privilege to do business, does not absolve them from responsibility and contract to relieve them from the operation of laws which expressly apply to them. The act in force when the appellant entered this State informed it that for a violation of its terms the permit to do business here would be forfeited. This provision of the law was as much a part of obligation and as binding upon the appellant as if it had been expressly made a part [<sup>49</sup>] of the permit. But there is another ground upon which this question may rest. The police power of the State can not be bartered away, and there exist no contractual rights which are not subject to its exercise. Speaking of police powers, Judge Cooley, in his work on Constitutional Limitations, section 707, says: "The occasion to consider this subject in its bearing upon the clause of the Constitution of the United States which forbids the States from passing any laws impairing the obligation of contracts, has been frequent and varied, and it has been held without dissent that this clause does not so far remove from State control the rights and properties which depend for their existence or enforcement upon contracts as to relieve them from the operation of such general regulations for the good government of the State and the protection [<sup>946</sup>] of the rights of individuals as may be deemed expedient. All contracts and all rights are subject to this power, and not only may regulations which affect them be established by the State, but all such regulations must be subject to change from time to time, as the general well being of the community may require, or as circumstances may change, [***50] or as experience may demonstrate the necessity." Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U.S. 623, 31 L. Ed. 205, 8 S. Ct. 273. And this principle is applicable to charters of corporations. Cool. Const. Lim., sec. 709; Railway v. Mathews, 165 U.S. 1, 18.

We can not agree with the appellant that it could not become bound by the acts of its agents performed in this State within the scope of their duty, because the conduct complained of, for which the State is seeking to make it responsible for the acts of its agents, involves a criminal responsibility in addition to their civil liability; and does not interpose any objection to the application of the principles of the law of agency which would make the appellant responsible to the State for a violation and infraction of its laws which it was guilty of through its agents while performing their duty with reference to the business confided to them. Meecham on Agency, secs. 745, 746; George v. Gobey, 128 Mass. 289. The charge of the court on the subject of agency was correct, it did not trench upon the province of the jury, and stated what we understand to be the correct rule upon that subject.

In reply to the twenty-fourth and twenty-fifth assignments [***51] of error, we think there was testimony authorizing the instructions given by the court complained of. There is evidence which tends to show that such [*21] combinations and agreements were entered into as were violative of the spirit and meaning of the anti-trust statutes, and the evidence shows that these agreements were entered into by appellant through its agents, and there is some testimony which tends to connect the appellant with this conduct, -- that it knew of it. The fact that reports were made to it by these agents tends to establish that it had knowledge of these contracts and the violation of the law in the respect complained of by the State, and that it accepted the fruits and benefits of these agreements.

The evidence complained of, in the twenty-second, twenty-seventh twenty-eighth, twenty-ninth, thirtieth, thirty-second, thirty-third, and thirty-fifth assignments of errors was admissible, controlled as it was by the charge of the court, which is also complained of. It tended to show, as a circumstance bearing upon the main issues in the case, the method of doing business in this State by the appellant. One principal reason why this testimony was admitted was for [***52] the purpose of showing that the appellant had knowledge of the transactions complained of by the State, that had some bearing and relation to that question. They were transacted by the trusted agents of the appellant, and we can not assume that the appellant did not have notice of this conduct; but, as said before, there are some facts which tend to indicate that it did have notice and received the benefits of the transactions and agreements entered into by the agents with the local merchants of this State.

The court did not err in admitting the testimony of witness Dugger, nor did it err in refusing to admit the evidence of witness Grice, as complained of in the thirty-first and thirty-sixth assignments of errors. Nor did it err in refusing to admit the testimony of witness Pierce, as set out in the thirty-eighth assignment of error, nor did it err in the ruling complained of in the thirty-ninth assignment of error.

No extended discussion is required upon the rulings complained of by these assignments, and it is sufficient to say that we have given them the consideration which their importance demands, and we reach the conclusion announced.

It is further contended, although the [***53] question is not properly raised, that the appellant was entitled to a charge to the effect that the jury must find in its favor unless its guilt of the conduct complained of was established beyond a reasonable doubt. Whatever may be the rule that exists in other jurisdictions, we do not think a charge of that nature would have been applicable in this case. This is a civil controversy; and as has been previously said by this Court in an opinion in which a number of cases were cited, HN31 [↑] "In no controversy of a civil nature would it be proper for the courts of this State to give such a charge." Pace v. Mortgage Co., 43 S.W. 36.

We find no error in the record and the judgment is affirmed.

Affirmed.

Writ of error refused.

---

End of Document

State ex rel. Crow v. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co.

Supreme Court of Missouri

July 15, 1899, Decided

No Number in Original

Reporter

152 Mo. 1 *; 52 S.W. 595 **; 1899 Mo. LEXIS 201 ***

The State ex inf. Crow, Attorney-General, v. Firemen's Fund Insurance Company et al.

Disposition: [***1] Writ of ouster awarded.

Core Terms

---

rates, defendant corporation, insurance company, lightning, storm, social club, Underwriters', insuring, local agent, anti-trust, pool, fire damage, slips, premium, contracts, policies, do business, confederation, insurance business, local resident, trusts, cases, fire insurance company, practices, furnish, conspiracy, deprive, fire insurance, daily report, combinations

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > General Partnerships > Management Duties & Liabilities > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Oil, Gas & Mineral Interests > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Energy & Utilities Law > Financing > Grants & Reservations > Joint Ventures & Partnerships

Insurance Law > Claim, Contract & Practice Issues > Premiums > General Overview

Insurance Law > Industry Practices > General Overview

HN1 Contracts, Sales of Goods

1897 Mo. Laws 208, § 1 provides, inter alia, that any corporation organized under the laws of Missouri or any other state or country for transacting or conducting any kind of business in the state, or which does transact or conduct any kind of business in the state, or any partnership or individual, or other association of persons whatsoever, who shall create, enter into, become a member of or a party to any pool, trust, agreement, combination, confederation or understanding with any other corporation, partnership, individual, or any other person or association of persons, to regulate or fix the price of any article of manufacture, mechanism, merchandise, commodity, convenience, repair, any product of mining, or any article or thing whatsoever, or the price or premium to be paid for insuring property against loss or damage by fire, lightning or storm, or to maintain said price when so regulated or fixed, or shall enter into become a member of or a party to any pool, agreement, contract or combination or confederation to fix or limit the amount or quantity of any article of manufacture, mechanism, merchandise, commodity, convenience, repair, any product of mining, or any article or thing whatsoever, or the price or premium to be paid for insuring property against loss or damage by fire, lightning or storm, shall be deemed and adjudged guilty of a conspiracy to defraud.

152 Mo. 1, *1L<sup>52</sup> S.W. 595, **595L<sup>899</sup> Mo. LEXIS 201, ***1

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Duties & Liabilities > Knowledge & Notice > General Overview

**HN2** Duties & Liabilities, Knowledge & Notice

A local agent's knowledge is the knowledge of his company, and his acts are the acts of his company.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Trusts > Trust Administration > Construction & Interpretation of Trusts

**HN3** Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

When people set out to do acts that are either mala in se or mala prohibita they do not put up a sign over the door or a stamp on the act declaring their purposes and intent. Concealment is generally their prime object. But as such matters exist without agreements and rest upon common understanding and practice, so the proof of their existence may be of the same character, and while such laws are penal in their nature and should be strictly construed, nevertheless a pool or trust may be as conclusively proved by facts and circumstances as by direct, written evidence, for in this regard they are like all other frauds.

Torts > Business Torts > Fraud & Misrepresentation > General Overview

**HN4** Business Torts, Fraud & Misrepresentation

While fraud is not to be assumed without proof, it is nevertheless often shown by circumstances than any other way. When things appear that are contrary to the ordinary ways of honest business men, and call for explanations which might be, but are not, given, it is no violent inference to conclude that there is something wrong. And where this occurs repeatedly, and is the general characteristic of the conduct and statements of the parties, it is their own fault if they are held to the consequences. Whenever fraud is the matter in issue, any unusual clause in an instrument, any unusual methods of transacting the business, apparently done with the view for effect and to give to the transaction of the business an air of honesty, is of itself a badge of fraud.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Penalties

**HN5** Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

152 Mo. 1, *1L<sup>52</sup> S.W. 595, **595L<sup>899</sup> Mo. LEXIS 201, ***1

A conspiracy is a combination of two or more persons to accomplish an unlawful end by lawful means or a lawful end by unlawful means.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

HN6 Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

A trust is a contract, combination, confederation, or understanding, express or implied, between two or more persons to control the price of a commodity or service, for the benefit of the parties thereto, and to the injury of the public, and which tends to create a monopoly.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

HN7 Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

In order to vitiate a contract or combination it is not essential that its result should be a complete monopoly. It is sufficient if it really tends to that end and to deprive the public of the advantages, which flow from free competition. For these reasons the suit of the government can be maintained without proof of the allegation that the agreement was entered into for the purpose of restraining trade or commerce or for maintaining rates above what was reasonable. The necessary effect of the agreement is to restrain trade or commerce, no matter what the intent was on the part of those who signed it.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN8 Legislation, Interpretation

When all the provisions of a statute fairly relate to the same subject, have a natural connection with it, are the incidents or means of accomplishing it, then the subject is single, and if it is sufficiently expressed in the title the statute is valid. In adopting a title the legislature may select its own language, and may use few or many words. It is sufficient that the title fairly embraces the subject matter covered by the act; mere matters of detail need not be stated in the title.

Constitutional Law > Substantive Due Process > Scope

HN9 Constitutional Law, Substantive Due Process

It is a misconception of the Fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States to suppose that any person acquires any vested rights by complying with existing police regulations or comity laws which can not be affected by subsequent changes in such regulations or laws.

Headnotes/Summary

---

Headnotes

1. Insurance Trust: Combination to Fix Rates for Fire Insurance, etc. The statute provides that "any corporation organized under the laws of this or any other State or county for transacting or conducting any kind of business in this State, . . . which shall enter into . . . any pool, trust, agreement, confederation or understanding with any other corporation, . . . person or association of persons, to regulate or fix . . . the price or premium to be paid for insuring property against loss or damage by fire, lightning or storm, or to maintain said price when so regulated and fixed, or shall enter into, become a member of or party to any pool, agreement, contract, combination or confederation to fix or limit . . . the price or premium to be paid for insuring property against loss or damage by fire, lightning or storm, shall be deemed and adjudged guilty of a conspiracy to defraud, and be subject to penalties as provided in this act." It was shown that prior to the enactment of this statute, the Association of Fire Underwriters of Missouri was maintained for the purpose of establishing and maintaining rates at which property in the State was insured, and one Fetter of Kansas City was employed to fix such rates and see they were maintained. After the statute was enacted, this association realized its practices were violative thereof, and ceased to exist, and Fetter on his own account published a book of rates which were the same as those previously fixed and maintained by the association. This book he sold to the defendant insurance companies, and all their local agents at St. Joseph had it, and all policies in that town were written according to the rates therein, and when there was a variance the general agent was, at the first, notified by a slip attached to the daily report turned over by the local agent to the secretary of a club, composed of the local agents of all the defendant companies except five, but later when it was deemed "inexpedient" to commit such matters to writing, the local agent was verbally notified by the secretary, and if he did not conform his policy to the Fetter rates he was called to account. The club had no constitution or by-laws and its president testified that it would put nothing to writing that would lay its members liable to prosecution, and that what was done towards maintaining rates was "understood" by the members. The daily report to the secretary included the policies written by the agent during the day, inclosed in an envelope addressed to the companies, and this the secretary after examining the policies, sealed and mailed to the company. The secretary was recommended by Fetter and had formerly been employed in his business, and the local agents contributed one dollar per month for each company towards his support, which was usually held back by the agents in their monthly remittances to the companies, and Fetter was paid by the companies for his books by charging a per cent on the entire business done by each company in the State. Held, that the club is a plain, palpable but bungling pool, trust, agreement, combination, confederation and understanding organized to evade said anti-trust statute. Held, also, that the knowledge of the local agents who composed the club, is the knowledge of the companies, and their acts are the acts of their companies. Held, also, that the companies be ousted of all the rights, privileges and franchises conferred by the laws of this State and of their licenses to do business in this State. Held, also, that, although five of the defendant companies were not members of the local club, yet as they have made common cause with the other defendants by the pleadings and their joint answer, the judgment of ouster will include them, too.

Held, by Gantt, C. J., that the five companies against whom the evidence failed to establish the charges, could not be held to have admitted the allegations of the petition because they joined in the answer denying the constitutionality of the statute.

Held, by Valliant, J., in a separate opinion, that the evidence is not sufficient to convict any of the defendants of the offense charged.

2. Insurance Trust: Combination to Fix Rates for Fire Insurance, etc Acts of Agents. If the acts and practices of agents of corporations are in violation of law, the companies must suffer therefor. The company must control its agents, and see to it that they do not violate the law while attending to the business of the company.

3. Pleading: Admissions: General Denial. The closing of the answer with a general denial of all the allegations of the petition not admitted therein to be true, avails nothing if the specific defenses pleaded are all predicated upon the facts charged being true.

4. Trust: Occasional Violations of Trust Agreements. The fact that certain parties to a trust were treacherous to each other, and in their desire to do business violated the trust agreement and occasionally wrote policies for less than the fixed rate, does not tend to disprove the existence of the trust.

5. Trust: Evidence of Existence. The existence of a trust may be as conclusively proved by facts and circumstances as by direct, written evidence.

6. Trust: Definition. A trust is a contract, combination, confederation or understanding, express or implied, between two or more persons, to control the price of a commodity or service, for the benefit of the parties thereto, and to the injury of the public, and which tends to create a monopoly. There is no difference in principle in contracts in restraint of trade and trusts. The difference is in extent and methods.

7. Trust: Intention of Members. If the practice of the members of a club composed of local insurance agents had the effect of maintaining fixed rates of insurance, it constituted them a trust, no matter whether the members intended it to have that effect or not.

8. Statute: Title: Constitutional. The title of the anti-trust law of 1891, and the amendments thereto in 1895 and 1897, does not infringe on the constitutional provision that "no bill shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title." The subject of insurance against loss or damage by fire, lightning or storm is not a different subject from that contained in the title, which is, "An Act providing for the punishment of pools, trusts and conspiracies to control prices, and as to evidence and prosecution in such cases."

9. Statute: Freedom of Contracts: Constitution: Due Process of Law. Said statute is not unconstitutional. It is not true that it "deprives insurance companies of their property, life or liberty without due process of law" on the theory that "it renders it unlawful for insurance companies to contract among themselves for the reasonable adjustment and maintenance of insurance rates." It permits any company to contract with any person who desires to insure his property upon any terms that they may agree upon. It does prohibit one company from agreeing with any other company not to contract with such person except upon terms which the confederating companies have previously fixed. The statute refuses to permit a company to strip itself of the power freely to contract. It guarantees to both insurance company and insured the free, unrestricted power to lawfully contract. It does not infringe upon the liberty of the citizen to contract concerning his property and prohibit him the enjoyment of his property and impose restraints and burdens upon it without due process of law.

10. Statute: Freedom of Contracts: Unrestrained. There is no such thing in civilized society as the unrestrained power to contract.

11. Statute: Discrimination between Home and Foreign Companies. Said act does not discriminate between foreign and domestic insurance companies, but expressly applies to all alike.

12. Statute: Vested Rights under Police Regulations. Nor as to foreign insurance companies doing business in this State when the law was enacted, does it violate that part of the U.S. Constitution that "no State shall deprive any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the law," as no person acquires any vested rights by complying with existing police regulations or comity laws which can not be affected by subsequent changes in such regulations or laws.

Counsel: Edward C. Crow, Attorney-General, and Sam B. Jeffries, Assistant Attorney-General, for informant.

(1) The anti-trust statute of Missouri does not infringe upon the liberty of the citizen to contract concerning his property and prohibit him the enjoyment of his property and impose restraints and burdens upon it without due process of law. Road Co. v. Sanford, 164 U.S. 592; Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. State, 44 H. R. W. R. 938; U. S. v. Joint Traffic Ass'n, 171 U.S. 505. These statutes are founded upon a proper exercise of the general police authority of the State. Beach on Trusts and Monopolies, sec. 13; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U.S. 124; Railroad v. Beckwith, 129 U.S. 29; State v. Moore, 104 N. C. 710; Thorp v. Railroad, 27 Vt. 140; Bertholf v. O'Rielly, 74 N. Y. 521. The State, in the exercise of this power in the selection of remedies looking to the suppression of evil and harm to its people, may apply them to the most sacred contracts and to the uses of property of every description, not in the way of an arbitrary spoliation or confiscation in the capricious exercise of the police power, but a useful regulation in the interest of the public welfare. Cooley's [***2] Const. Lim. (6 Ed.), pp. 707-720. In enumerating subjects which are acted upon by the State in the exercise of its police power, a late writer on limitations of police powers names combinations in restraint of trade. In U. S. v. Trans-Missouri Freight Ass'n, 166 U.S. 322, the court said: "While the statute prohibits all combinations in the form of trusts or otherwise, the limitation is not confined to that form alone.

152 Mo. 1, *1L<sup>52</sup> S.W. 595, **595L<sup>899</sup> Mo. LEXIS 201, ***2

All combinations which are in restraint of trade or commerce are prohibited, whether in the form of trusts or in any other form whatever." Tiedeman on Lims. of Police Powers, sec. 96a; Railroad v. Mathews, 165 U.S. 16; Crowley v. Christenson, 137 U.S. 89. The Federal Supreme Court has decided that it was not the design of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States to interfere with the just and proper exercise of the police power by the States. Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U.S. 31; Davis v. Mass, 167 U.S. 47; Oil Co. v. State, 44 S. W. Rep. 938. (2) If legislative authority does exist to restrain the conduct of owners of property in a particular way in the use of their property so as to work injury to the public welfare, and the legislature has acted [***3] in the manner required by the Constitution in passing laws, then due process of law exists in so far as it is necessary to find legal authority for passing a statute similar to our anti-trust act, prohibiting all combinations in restraint of trade. Legal restraint imposed upon the use of property does not deprive the owner of it of due process of law. Railroad v. Mathews, 165 U.S. 23; Railroad v. Hume, 115 U.S. 519; Barbier v. Connelly, 113 U.S. 31; Walston v. Nevin, 128 U.S. 582; Railroad v. Gibbes, 142 U.S. 387; Bertholf v. O'Reilly, 74 N. Y. 519; Mulger v. Kansas, 123 U.S. 653; Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U.S. 104. (3) The anti-trust statute is not obnoxious to the Fourteenth Amendment to the federal constitution, as being class legislation. U. S. v. Pipe Co., 85 Fed. Rep. 285; Association v. Houck, 27 S. W. Rep. 696; Brewing Co. v. Templeman, 38 S. W. Rep. 27; Puqua v. Chicago Milk Shippers' Ass'n, 155 Ill. 166; U. S. v. Trans-Missouri Freight Ass'n, 166 U.S. 299; People v. Railroad, 121 N. Y. 616; Hathaway v. State, 38 Tex. Crim. App. 261; People ex rel. v. American Tobacco Company (1897), 2 Chicago, L. J. Weekly, p. 249; Casualty Co. v. Alibone, 90 Tex. 660; Ins. Co. v. Levy, I<sup>**41</sup> 33 S. W. Rep. 992; Campbell v. Cook, 86 Tex. 684; Railroad v. Mackay, 127 U.S. 209; Railroad v. Beckwith, 129 U.S. 29; Railroad v. New York, 165 U.S. 623; Soone Hing v. Crowley, 113 U.S. 708; Bank v. Penn, 167 U.S. 462; Railroad v. Mathews, 165 U.S. 17; State v. Moore, 104 N. C. 714. (4) No covenant in restraint of trade can be enforced unless the covenant embodying it is merely ancillary to the main purpose of a lawful contract and necessary to protect the covenantee in the enjoyment of the legitimate fruits of the contract or to protect him from the dangers of an unjust use of those fruits by the other party. U. S. v. Pipe Co., Fed. Rep. 282; Frisbie v. U. S., 157 U.S. 160; Holden v. Hardy, 169 U.S. 391; Martin v. Hunter's Lessee, 1 Wheat. 304; Blair v. Ridgely, 41 Mo. 63. (5) Insurance combines to fix, maintain and control rates of insurance tend to and do suppress competition and such combines violate the anti-trust statute of Missouri. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Raymond, Ins. Com., 70 Mich. 485; Beechley v. Mulvihill, 70 N. W. Rep. 107; American Fire Ins. Co. v. State, 26 Ins. L. J. 861; State v. Phipps, 50 Kan. 609; People v. North River Sugar Refining Co., 121 N. Y. 582; People I<sup>**51</sup> v. Milk Exchange, 154 N. Y. 267; People v. Chicago Gas Trust Co., 130 Ill. 268; People v. Distilling and Cattle Feeding Co., 156 Ill. 448; U. S. v. Addyston Pipe and Steel Co., 85 Fed. Rep. 271; Moore v. Bennett, 140 Ill. 69; Cooke's Trade and Labor Combinations, p. 120; Greenhood on Public Policy, pp. 854-55-56-57; 3 Ins. Law Magazine, p. 42. (6) Agreements between insurance companies to fix and maintain rates tend to the suppression of competition and constitute a strict monopoly. Lawrence v. Kidder, 10 Barb. 64; Dunlop v. Gregory, 10 N. Y. 244; Beach on Industrial Trusts, secs. 10 and 11; People v. Sugar Refining Co., 54 Hun. 354; Sandiego Water Co. v. Flume Co., 108 Cal. 549; California Steam Navigation Co. v. Wright, 6 Cal. 259; U. S. Trans-Missouri Freight Ass'n, 166 U.S. 290. And monopolies are against common right. Craven v. Rodgers, 101 Mo. 243. (7) Where a corporation uses its franchises for the purpose of establishing a trust, or enters into a trust to create a monopoly and stifle competition, the State can forfeit the corporate franchise. People v. North River Sugar Refining Co., 121 N. Y. 582; People v. Milk Exchange, 145 N. Y. 267; State v. Standard Oil Co., 49 Oh. St. I<sup>**61</sup> 137; People v. Chicago Gas Trust Co., 130 Ill. 268; People v. Distilling and Cattle Feeding Co., 156 Ill. 448. The scheme inaugurated in the city of St. Joseph was intended to and did constitute a monopoly in the fixing of insurance rates in the hands of the respondent companies because it created a common rate and abolished competition. The "Social Club" fixed the rate of insurance and dominated the business. This created a trust. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Raymond, Ins. Com., 70 Mich. 485; State v. Krebs, 64 N. C. 604; People v. Sugar Refining Co., 121 N. Y. 624; Beach on Industrial Trusts, secs. 219-220; People v. W. T. B. Co., 47 N. Y. 586; London v. Van Acker, 1 Ld. Ryan 499; E. S., etc., Co. v. People, 121 Pa. St. 154; People v. F. Co., 27 Barb. 445; Com. v. Bank, 21 Pick. 542; Railroad v. Cave Co., 113 U.S. 384; State v. Railroad, 45 Wis. 590; People v. Railroad, 27 Barb. 452; F. Co. v. Hyde Park, 97 U.S. 666; People v. North River Sugar Refining Co., 121 N. Y. 582. (8) The acts of the agents of the foreign insurance corporations, in entering into a combination to fix rates of insurance in violation of the antitrust law, bind the corporations where reports are made to the companies [***7] and they accept the benefits of said organization. Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. State, 44 S. W. Rep. 936; Ins. Co. v. Raymond, 70 Mich. 485; State ex rel. v. Aetna Ins. Co., 150 Mo. 113. (9) It is no answer to a combination of this kind to say that it should be permitted to exist for the reason that it has reduced the prices of insurance, even though such were true. That policy may be necessary to crush competition. Such combinations have been frequently condemned by courts as unlawful and against public policy. Hoeker v. Vandewater, 4 Denio 349; Stanton v. Allen, 5 Denio 434; Coal Co. v. Coal Co., 68 Pa. St. 186; Craft v. McConoughy, 79 Ill. 346; Hannah v. Fife, 27 Mich. 172; Alger v. Thatcher, 19 Pick. 51. In numerous cases restrictions have been condemned, notwithstanding they produced for a while the lowering of prices. Anderson v. Jett, 89 Ky. 375; Hoffman v. Brooks, 23 Am. L. Reg. 648; People v. Milk Exchange, 145 N.Y. 267.

152 Mo. 1, *1L<sup>52</sup> S.W. 595, **595L<sup>899</sup> Mo. LEXIS 201, ***7

Given Campbell and Waddill, Ellerbe & Hereford for respondents.

(1) This suit is in the nature of a public accusation, and if the State makes out its case, the judgment is penal, and in such case the burden of proof is upon the State to prove the charges [***8] as alleged. 5 Thompson's Com. on Corps., sec. 6804; State ex. inf. v. Bland, 144 Mo. 534; High ex. Remedies, sec. 710; State ex rel. v. Talbots, 123 Mo. 69; 2 Spell ex. Relief, secs. 1850, 1851, 1860. (2) The overwhelming weight of evidence establishes the fact that the Underwriters' Social Club of St. Joseph, Mo., was not created, formed or organized, conducted or carried on for the purpose of fixing or maintaining rates of insurance in that city, or for the purpose of controlling rates of insurance in any respect, and that it did not either fix, control or maintain rates of insurance according to Fetter's estimates. Anderson v. U. S., 171 U.S. 604. (3) None of the respondents authorized directed or acquiesced in the acts of their local agents, in becoming members of the Underwriters' Social Club of St. Joseph, Mo., during the period covered by this suit, and none of the defendants, were aware or informed at any time prior to the production of this suit, that said club was engaged in the business of fixing or maintaining rates of fire insurance, or in any way, charged with doing same, in the city of St. Joseph, Mo. (4) The information filed by relator, does not state facts sufficient [***9] to constitute a cause of action. State ex inf. v. Bland, 144 Mo. 534. (5) The Act approved April 2, 1891, as amended by the Acts of April 11, 1895, and March 24, 1897, is repugnant to the Constitution of the State of Missouri, for the following reasons: First. It infringes the provisions of section 28 of article IV, which provides that no bill shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title. State v. Schofield, 41 Mo. 49; St. Louis v. Teifel, 42 Mo. 578; State v. Bensinger, 76 Mo. 346; State v. Blackstone, 115 Mo. 427; State ex rel. v. County Court, 128 Mo. 427; Witzman v. Railway Co., 131 Mo. 612; State ex rel. v. Hover, 134 Mo. 10; Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. 168; Philadelphia Fire Ass'n v. N. Y., 119 U.S. 110; Gloucester Co. v. Russia Cement Co., 154 Mass. 92; Hooper v. California, 155 U.S. 655. Second. It violates section 30 of article II, which provides that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law. State v. Loomis, 115 Mo. 316; State v. Julow, 129 Mo. 177; Cooley, Const. Lim. (6 Ed.), 481, 483. (6) That said Act, as amended, is unconstitutional, in that section 1, of said Act, is violative of section [***10] 1 of the XIVth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which provides that no State shall deprive any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law, nor deny any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the law, in this, that each of said companies having fully complied with the laws of the State, having paid the fees, made all the deposits, secured the necessary license required by law, they were each authorized to do business in this State, under the protection of the laws of the State, and that said Act deprives them of the right to carry on their business in a fair and just manner among themselves and not in any manner injurious to the public or any other person in the State, and deprives them of the right of making necessary and reasonable contracts relating to the business of insurance, and discriminates against them and in favor of other domestic and foreign fire insurance companies who are not embraced within the terms of said law. Duncan v. Missouri, 152 U.S. 377; Marchant v. Railroad, 153 U.S. 390; Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U.S. 27; Missouri v. Lewis, 101 U.S. 22. (7) Courts are extremely reluctant to adjudge a forfeiture of franchise, [***11] especially in a case of this character. Topeka v. Topeka Water Co., 49 Pac. Rep. 79; State ex rel. v. Republican, 9 Mo. App. 114; People v. Railroad, 67 Ill. 1; State ex inf. v. Lincoln Trust Co., 144 Mo. 562; High, Ex. Remedies, sec. 229; Spell, Ex. Relief, secs. 1777, 1828, 1829.

Judges: MARSHALL, J. Burgess, Sherwood and Brace, JJ., concur in all the opinion, Gantt, C. J., and Robinson, J., concur in all except the judgment as to the five companies specified in the last sentence, and dissent as to that. Valliant, J., dissents.

Opinion by: MARSHALL

Opinion

---

[*10] [**596] In Banc.

Quo Warranto.

MARSHALL, J. -- This is an original proceeding by quo warranto to oust seventy-three fire insurance companies of their corporate rights, privileges and franchises under the laws of Missouri, on account of a violation by them of the laws of [*11] this State relating to "Pools, Trusts and Conspiracies; unlawful combinations." The defendant companies are organized under the laws of other States or foreign countries, and are doing an insurance business in Missouri by reason of and compliance with the comity laws of this State.

The petition, after stating the necessary facts as to [***12] the character and organization of the defendants and their compliance with the laws of Missouri in respect to foreign insurance companies doing business in this State, is as follows:

"That afterwards on the __ day of November, 1896, each and all of defendant corporations unlawfully, illegally and willfully misused and abused their said franchises, rights and privileges as fire insurance companies authorized to do business under the laws of the State of Missouri, in this, to wit: That each and all of said defendant corporations having an agent and representative in the city of St. Joseph, a city of less than one hundred thousand inhabitants, did then and there, through and by means of a certain organization, known as the Underwriters' Social Club of said city (which said Underwriters' Social Club of said city was organized and has been maintained and is now maintained with the knowledge and consent, and according to the desire and wish of said defendant corporations, and for the sole purpose of the advancement of the business interests of said defendant corporations in said city of St. Joseph) create, enter into, become a member of and a party to a certain pool, trust, agreement, [***13] combination, confederation and understanding with each other and other fire insurance corporations and associations of persons to regulate, fix and control the price or premium to be paid for insuring property in St. Joseph, Buchanan county, Missouri, against loss or damage by fire, lightning and storm; and to maintain and control said price when so regulated and fixed, and to prevent competition in said business in said city.

"That each and every one of said corporations, being so represented in said city of St. Joseph, by a local resident fire [*12] insurance agent, legally and fully authorized by each of said several defendant corporations to act for their respective corporations in all matters relating to the insurance of property against loss or damage by fire, lightning and storm in said city, said agents, and each of them, did then and there, with the knowledge and consent and according to the wish and desire of the said respective defendant corporations, which the said agents represented, and for the sole and only purpose of advancing the business interests of said defendant corporations then and there willfully, unlawfully and knowingly did agree, confederate and combine [***14] with each other to form and organize on the __ day of November, A. D. 1896, a certain organization whose membership was composed exclusively of local resident fire insurance agents, representatives alone of defendant corporations; and said organization was then and there perfected by the said local resident agents of defendant corporations by the election of a president, secretary, treasurer and other officials whose names, except those of the secretary and president, are to the relator unknown, but who were at said time and are now local resident fire insurance agents representing different ones of the defendant corporations; that the said organization so formed was the Underwriters' Social Club of St. Joseph, Missouri, and it was formed by said local resident agents of said defendant corporations solely for the purpose of advancing the interest of said respective defendant corporations, and for the purpose of maintaining what is known in insurance circles as "correct practices;" or in other words, for the purpose of keeping up the agreed rate on all the different classes of risks of insurance; that the said rates so agreed upon to be maintained in said city of St. Joseph [***15] were fixed by one W. J. Fetter of Kansas City, Missouri, as relator is informed and believed; that __ Wise is president of said Underwriters' Social Club, and that Mr. E. F. Scott is secretary of said organization, and was brought from the office of Mr. Fetter in Kansas City, Missouri, as relator is informed, for the purpose of assuming the duties of secretary of said [*13] Underwriters' Social Club of St. Joseph, Missouri; that among other things the duties of Mr. E. F. Scott were to check the daily reports of the different agents belonging to said Underwriters' Social Club and to see that the policies written by said agents were all written at the agreed rate as fixed by said W. J. Fetter, and promulgated in the rate book sent to the resident local agents of defendant corporations; that the said secretary, E. F. Scott, was and is paid a salary, and that the method of paying the same is as follows: The local resident agents of defendant corporations each proportionately contributed according to the amounts assessed against them, respective sums sufficient in the aggregate to pay the monthly salary of said E. F. Scott, as secretary of said Underwriters' Social Club of [***16] St. Joseph, Missouri; each of said resident local agents of defendant corporations deduct the amount so contributed by said respective local agents of defendant corporations to the monthly salary of E. F. Scott from the monthly remittances of said respective local resident agents to the said respective defendant corporations represented by said local resident agents, and said respective defendant corporations acquiesced in said deduction from the remittances due from their said respective local resident agents and credited said local resident agents with the amount paid by each of said agents toward the salary of said E. F. Scott.

"That said W. J. Fetter of Kansas [**597] City, Missouri, styles himself an insurance expert, and that as such insurance expert he supplies the rates to be charged on all classes of risks by fire, lightning and storm in the State of Missouri, outside of the cities of Kansas City and St. Louis; and that the defendant corporations, each and all of them, do not write any insurance on any class of risk for fire, lightning and storm insurance, except at the rate fixed and agreed upon in the city of St. Joseph by the Underwriters' Social Club of St. Joseph, [***17] which rate is obtained from a rate book coming to members of said organization in a blank envelope from Kansas City, Missouri; [*14] that the rate so established, and at which all insurance agents against loss by fire, lightning and storm is written in the city of St. Joseph, by the local resident agent of defendant corporations is supplied said resident local agents in a rate book which comes from Kansas City, Missouri, in a blank envelope, and said Underwriters' Social Club of St. Joseph, Missouri, is organized and maintained by defendant corporations and their agents for the purpose of maintaining said rates so furnished as aforesaid; that if the resident local agent of any of said defendant corporations writes insurance against loss by fire, lightning and storm in St. Joseph, Missouri, at a rate not in accordance with that fixed in said rate book and agreed upon by the said Underwriters' Social Club of St. Joseph, Missouri, said defendant corporation in which said insurance is written instructs its local resident agent to cancel said policy or policies.

"That the general nature and object of the said combination and confederation so made as aforesaid by defendant corporations, [***18] by the means and in the manner aforesaid, in the city of St. Joseph, is, first, to fix and regulate and control the certain price and premium to be paid for insuring property against loss or damage by fire, lightning and storm in said city of St. Joseph, Missouri; and, second, to maintain the said certain price or premium when so regulated or fixed for insuring property against loss or damage by fire, lightning and storm in said city; and that the said defendant corporations through their said local resident agents in St. Joseph, Missouri, have entire control of and have monopolized to the exclusion of all others, and to the great detriment of the public, the business of writing insurance against loss or damage by fire, lightning and storm in the city of St. Joseph, Missouri, and that the purpose and intention of said defendant corporations has been and is now to unlawfully and willfully thus combine and confederate with each other to monopolize and control absolutely and prevent competition in the business of writing [*15] insurance against losses by fire, lightning and storm in the said city of St. Joseph, Missouri, and the said defendant corporations, through said Underwriters' [***19] Social Club of St. Joseph, Missouri, and in pursuance of the object, purpose and intention of said defendant corporations have willfully and unlawfully agreed, combined and confederated with each other, and with other fire insurance companies (doing business under the insurance laws of the State of Missouri), to form an insurance trust and pool in St. Joseph, Missouri, to regulate, fix and maintain the price and premium to be charged by each of said defendant corporations for insuring the different designated classes of risks on property against loss or damage by fire, lightning and storm in St. Joseph, Missouri; and the said defendant corporations and other insurance companies acting with them, in pursuance of the said agreement, combination, confederation and trust, and through the said Underwriters' Social Club of St. Joseph, Missouri, are each of them, through their respective resident local agents, willfully and unlawfully maintaining said agreed price and premium upon the respective classes of risks on property against loss by fire, lightning and storm in St. Joseph, Missouri, and which said rate so fixed in said rate book aforesaid, and so agreed to by members of said Underwriters' [***20] Social Club of St. Joseph, Missouri, aforesaid, is the minimum rate charged in St. Joseph, Missouri, by all said defendant corporations for insuring the different designated classes of property against loss or damage by fire, lightning and storm; and that said rate aforesaid, so fixed as aforesaid, is the minimum rate the said agents of said defendant insurance companies are allowed to charge by said defendant corporations in the city of St. Joseph, Missouri.

"And by reason of the premises aforesaid, relator now charges and avers that since the __ day of November, A. D. 1896, and up to the present time, said defendant corporations in the city of St. Joseph, Missouri, have grossly offended against the laws of this State, and have willfully, [*16] flagrantly and grossly abused and misused their corporate authority, franchises and privileges, and have willfully and unlawfully assumed and willfully usurped franchises and privileges not granted to said defendant corporations by the laws of the State of Missouri, by then and there entering into and becoming a member of and a party to said trust, combination and confederation and pool as aforesaid, in said city of St. Joseph, ***21 Missouri, to monopolize the business of writing insurance against loss or damage by fire, lightning and storm, and to by means of said combination and confederation prevent competition in said business, and to regulate, fix and maintain the price and premiums to be paid for insuring property against loss or damage by fire, lightning and storm in St. Joseph, Missouri.

"And relator further here now charges and avers that the action of the defendant corporations as hereinbefore set out is a willful, malicious and gross perversion of the franchises granted to said defendant corporations by the State of Missouri, and an illegal, willful usurpation of privileges not granted **598 to them, and which said gross and willful usurpation of privileges and franchises not granted them is of great and permanent injury to the public.

"Wherefore your relator herein, the Attorney-General, prosecuting in this behalf for the State of Missouri, prays that said defendant corporations, each and all of them, severally be excluded from all corporate rights, privileges and franchises under the laws of the State of Missouri, and that their rights and certificates to do business under the insurance laws ***22 of this State be declared forfeited and that proceedings at law may be issued against defendant corporations that they may each and every one of them be ousted of their said several franchises and corporate privileges."

The defendants answered jointly, as follows: "Defendants in the above entitled cause, by leave of court, file this their amended answer, and protesting that the information filed [*17] in said cause against these defendants is not sufficient in law, for their joint and several amended answers thereto, say that they admit that they are severally and respectively corporations legally organized under the laws of their respective States and countries, for the purpose of carrying on the business respectively stated in said information; that they have respectively complied with the laws of the State of Missouri relative to foreign insurance companies desiring to write fire and other insurance in this State; that they have been respectively duly licensed by the Superintendent of Insurance of this State to write said insurance in the State of Missouri; and that they have been from the date of their respective licenses, and are now writing fire insurance and insurance ***23 against loss by lightning and storm in the State of Missouri, in so far as they are respectively, by said license, authorized to write such insurance.

"And further answering these defendants say that the said act of the General Assembly of the State of Missouri, entitled "An Act providing for the punishment of pools, trusts and conspiracies to control prices, and as to evidence and prosecution in such cases," approved April 2, 1891, and the amendments thereto, approved April 11, 1895, and March 24, 1897, is violative of the provisions of the Constitution of the State of Missouri and of the United States as follows:

"1. The title to said act infringes that part of section 28 of article IV of the Constitution of the State of Missouri, which provides that no bill shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title, in this, that the subject of insurance against loss or damage by fire, lightning or storm, is a different subject and not germane to the matters contained in the title of said act; and defendants plead that said law, in so far as it attempts to cover the subject of such insurance, is unconstitutional and void.

"2. The Constitution of the State ***24 of Missouri, section 30, article II, provides 'that no person shall be deprived of [*18] life, liberty or property without due process of law;' and defendants say that the said act and the amendments thereto, especially as set forth in section 1 of said amended act 1897, does deprive defendants of their liberty without due process of law inasmuch as it renders it unlawful for defendants to contract or agree among themselves or with the agents of other insurance companies, or for their agents, to contract and agree among themselves, for the reasonable adjustment and maintenance of rates of premium to be charged for insurance against fire, lightning or storm in this State.

"3. Section 1 of said amended act contravenes and infringes section 10 of article I of the Constitution of the United States, which provides that no State shall pass any law impairing the obligation of contracts, inasmuch as each of defendants, prior to the enactment of said law made the deposits and paid the fees and moneys required by the insurance laws of this State to secure to themselves respectively the right to carry on their said business in said State, had complied with all the requirements of the insurance [***25] laws of said State, and were respectively duly authorized to conduct and carry on their said business in said State; thereby in virtue of said payments and said laws of the State of Missouri, there was vested in each of said defendants, at the time of their admission into said State, the right to contract and be contracted with, and to continue and carry on their said business in a reasonable, usual and lawful manner. And defendants say that until the enactment of said law they and their agents had, in the safe, reasonable and usual course of their business, been making and entering into contracts or agreements with each other for the conservation of their business, and the protection of their policyholders, by adjusting, agreeing upon and maintaining reasonable rates of insurance against fire, lightning and storm, in said State; defendants say that said act does not deprive said defendants and each of them, of their said vested rights in forbidding them or their agents to make or enter into such contracts [**19] or agreements and impairs the obligations of the contracts entered into by and between each of them, and said State of Missouri at the time of their respective admission [***26] into this State, that therefore said act is unconstitutional and void.

"4. Section 1 of the amended act is in violation of section 1 of the XIVth amendment of the Constitution of the United States, which provides 'that no State shall deprive any person of life, liberty or property, without due process of law, nor deny any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the law,' in this, that said act and section provides for a difference and discriminates between foreign insurance companies and domestic insurance companies, and discriminates and makes a difference and distinction between foreign insurance companies insuring [**599] property in this State against loss or damage by fire, lightning or storm and all other foreign and domestic insurance companies doing other kinds of insurance business in this State, by providing by section 1 of said amended act, that it should be unlawful for any corporation organized under the laws of this or any other country, insuring property against loss or damage by fire, lightning or storm, to make any agreement and to have any understanding with any other insurance company or with the agents thereof to fix or regulate the premiums to [***27] be paid for insuring property in this State against fire, lightning or storm, or to maintain said premiums when so regulated or fixed, or to fix or limit the price or premium to be paid for insuring property against such loss, or damage in the State; and these defendants say that each and every one of them did comply with the laws of this State before being admitted to do business in this State, and that in said compliance they have paid the fees and made all necessary deposits and secured the necessary licenses required by the insurance laws of this State, and that having done and performed all that was required by law, they were each of them, duly authorized to do the business of insurance in this State, and that thereby the right to do said business was secured [*20] and vested in each of them by the laws of the State of Missouri, and that they have been respectively conducting said business under the said laws of this State, and have paid and are paying sums of money for the right to conduct their said business in this State; and defendants say that said act deprives them of the right to carry on their business in a manner fair and just among themselves and not in any manner [***28] injurious to any other person in the State, and that said act deprives them of the right of making the necessary and proper contracts relating to the business of insurance, and discriminates against them and in favor of other domestic and foreign insurance companies, who are not embraced in said law, and that said act is unconstitutional and void.

"5. That section 6 of said amended act is violative of section 1 of article XIV of the amendments of the Constitution of the United States, in that it provides 'that in all proceedings to have such forfeiture declared, proof that any such person who has been acting as the agent of any such foreign corporation in transacting its business in this State, has been, while acting as such agent, in the name, behalf or interest of such foreign corporation, violating any provision of the preceding sections of this act, shall be received as prima facie proof of the act of the corporation itself;' and defendants say that said act discriminates and makes a difference and distinction between foreign insurance companies doing the business of insuring against fire, lightning and storm and domestic insurance companies doing like business in like situation, [***29] by providing rules of evidence and pleading in judicial proceedings under said act against foreign insurance companies, different and more onerous than those provided for domestic insurance companies who may be engaged in the same business and do the same thing, and defendants therefore say that said act is unconstitutional and void.

"6. And defendants plead that sections 9 and 10 of said Act, are violative of section 1 of the XIVth amendment [<sup>*21</sup>] to the Constitution of the United States, in that it imposes upon defendants and other corporations mentioned in said act, in case judgment is rendered against defendants in proceedings under said act, attorney's fees of not less than twenty-five dollars or more than five hundred dollars, and the expenses of attorneys for the State incurred in the prosecution of such suits, when such fees are not imposed upon other corporations or judgment defendants under the laws of this State; and defendants say that said law discriminates and makes a distinction and difference between defendants as aforesaid and the State of Missouri, by imposing such fees on defendant corporations against whom judgments are rendered, when in like situation where [<sup>***30</sup>] judgments should be rendered against the State in such proceedings, no attorney's fees or expenses are imposed upon or provided to be collected from the State; and defendants say that therefore said law is violative of the Constitution of the United States and is null and void.

"7. And further answering these defendants deny each and every allegation in said information contained, not hereinbefore admitted to be true.

"And defendants having fully answered pray to go hence respectively dismissed with their costs in this behalf expended."

The reply is a general denial of the new matter set up in the answer.

Upon these issues a vast volume of oral testimony has been taken. Briefly stated the ultimate facts established by the evidence are these: All of the defendants are corporations organized under the laws of sister States or of foreign countries, and are doing a fire insurance business in Missouri under licenses issued to them by the Superintendent of Insurance of this State. With the exception of The Newark Fire Insurance Company, Norwalk Fire Insurance Company, London Assurance Corporation, Citizens Insurance Company of New York, Union Insurance Company of Philadelphia, and [<sup>*22</sup>] [<sup>***31</sup>] Equitable Fire & Marine Insurance Company of Providence, R. I., all of the defendant companies are represented by agents at St. Joseph, Missouri, and all those agents had been prior to and were at the date of the institution of this proceeding, members of the Underwriters' Social Club of St. Joseph, Missouri.

Prior to the taking effect of the amendment of 1895 (Laws 1895, p. 237) to the laws relating to "Pools and Trusts," which for the first time brought fire insurance companies explicitly and specifically within the ban of the [<sup>**600</sup>] law prohibiting trusts, there existed in Missouri an association called the "Association of Fire Underwriters of Missouri," which was organized for the purpose of controlling rates of insurance in this State. W. J. Fetter was employed to fix such rates, and all insurance was required to be controlled by the rates fixed by him. When the act of 1895 went into effect, Fetter addressed the following letter to all the companies doing a fire insurance business in Missouri:

"MISSOURI FIRE INSPECTION AND ADVISORY BUREAU.

"Inspection of fire risks and estimates of rates furnished to order.

*"Also maps of rated towns not mapped by Sanborn-Perris Map [<sup>***32</sup>] Co. Offices: American Bank Building.*

"Kansas City, Mo., June 11, 1895.

"Dear Sir: -- You are probably aware that an amendment has been made to the anti-trust law of Missouri to include fire insurance companies, thus prohibiting all combinations of persons or corporations from making or maintaining fire insurance rates. My arrangement with the Association of Fire Underwriters of Missouri for state rating will therefore cease on 20th inst., and the State Board will then no longer exercise jurisdiction over rates.

"In view of these facts I have concluded to make estimates of fire insurance rates and publish maps, on my own volition, [*23] without any connection with any board whatever, and without combination with any companies or individuals. These rates so made will be published and sold to any person or company desiring to buy them. The price of the rate books, and corrections from time to time, will depend in some measure on the amount of work made necessary by the greater or less volume of business transacted in the State by the company. It is estimated, however, at about 8-10ths to 9-10ths of one per cent of the premiums. For his work bills will be sent quarterly.

"The [***33] local board of St. Louis and Kansas City being exempted from the operation of the law, have separate arrangements for rating, and will have no control of nor responsibility for the above proposed system of rating.

"Soliciting your subscription to my rate-books and supplements in cities or towns where you are represented, I remain," etc.

The prior and subsequent proceedings are best told by the testimony of Fetter himself.

"W. J. Fetter testified on behalf of informant, as follows:

"I have been in the insurance business in Missouri forty nine years, excepting two years that I was in Saline county, and have been in Kansas City sixteen years.

"Witness was here handed a list of the companies that were defendants in the suit, and he said that he had heard that they were all doing business at St. Joseph. I furnish estimates for Kansas City, Missouri; have been doing so since '91. I furnish them anywhere in the State they are asked for if I can. I furnish them in towns where they are asked for except St. Louis. Am satisfied that the rates furnished by me in the book known as the "Fetter Rate Book" for different towns of the State, are the basis of rates upon which a considerable [***34] amount of the business of the State is written. I do not know whether there is an agreement among the agents at St. [*24] Joseph or not. Have no real knowledge about the situation at St. Joseph. I have heard loose talk, and have heard it as a fact, that my rates are used. I do not furnish the rates to the agents at St. Joseph, but furnish the rates direct to the companies. I sell the book directly to the insurance companies. That is, I furnish the book either to the companies or the general agents of the companies, not to the local agents. I furnish my rate book to the general agents of all the companies that do business in St. Joseph. There are corrections that go with the book from time to time, and I supply those and they are sent direct to the companies. I had a young man named E. F. Scott in my office at Kansas City. He was a dry goods clerk when he came to my office and got acquainted with some of my boys and they asked me if I could not get him a job. He kept on coming there, and I gave him work at $ 10 a week, and he did good service and I increased his salary, and after a while somebody asked me if I knew a good clerk, some man that was good in figures, and I said yes [***35] I know a man, and they said they would like to see him. Well, I did not say anything to him; I thought maybe they would not employ him; I telephoned to him to come to the depot; that I had something I wanted to know about; and he came down and I introduced him to two insurance agents from St. Joseph, one of them was Mr. Buckingham, and I do not remember the other gentleman's name. I introduced Mr. Scott to them and he was employed, and I supposed that he was hired to work in the insurance business, but I never asked what his duties were. The general agent for Missouri of the Fireman's Fund Insurance Company is Mr. Chard of Chicago, and in the period from November, '96 to July, '97, I think I furnished the special agent of the Fireman's Fund a rate book for Missouri. The record in my office would simply show that I furnished it to the company. I did at one time send my rate books direct to the company, but I concluded that was wrong, or, rather, inexpedient. My rate books cover all of Missouri [*25] except Kansas City and St. Louis, except some few towns not surveyed and examined. I mean by this, small towns. If the companies want towns rated we go and make an estimate. These rate [***36] books are not furnished annually, but just as they are made. The last book I made for St. Joseph, Missouri, was in 1897. I can not say what the companies do with the rate book. I furnish them for St. Joseph. I sell the rate books to any company that wants to buy them. I do not know of anyone else in Missouri, outside of St. Louis and Kansas City, from whom the old line fire insurance [**601] companies buy rate books and rate sheets. Before the anti-trust law was passed, I was employed by the State Board for Missouri, on a salary, and I covered the same territory that I do now. The State Board was composed of seventy or eighty persons. Now I am not so tied down by rules and regulations, and I feel at liberty to increase or decrease the rates as I think feasible. For instance, at Jefferson City, Mr. Orear thought my rates were a little too high, and he wanted me to look into it. I found that the buildings had improved; that they had put in more fire proof buildings, and I made a reduction in the rates. I do not account to anybody for that: I just make it of my own volition, and two or three other places the same way. I have more discretion now than I had before, or, rather I exercise [***37] more. It is the tariff the companies accept at Jefferson City as fixed by myself. I get my rates in the following way: Take for instance St. Joseph. I take a brick building. An ordinary brick building at St. Joe, with gravel roof, makes the basis rate sixty cents, and then if the side walls do not extend two feet higher than the roof, that is where they are exposed, we add five cents. If there is a sky light that goes on to the building we add for that. If wooden cornice, not iron, add to the rates; if elevator in three or four story building, we add for that, and all similar charges add something for each. Then if an exposure -- other buildings might burn it -- we add to it in proportion to the hazard for exposure; and then the [*26] question of the area comes in, the size of the building. If a very large building we have a very small charge to it, and when the rate of the building is made up then we add for the stock being more perishable; or when a building is easier damaged by smoke, water, etc., from ten to twenty-five cents, more or less. There are two classes of stock, the preferred and the non-preferred. This is the method by which I get at the rate, and I get the personal [***38] knowledge of the buildings by going to St. Joseph and examining them. I had the rate book for St. Joseph printed in St. Joe, and it took me nine months to get it printed. I paid for having the book made. When the anti-trust law of '91 went into effect, we paid no attention to it, as we thought it did not include us, and I furnished rates for St. Joseph then just the same as I had been doing before...I furnished the rates for St. Joseph before 1895, I made a book for St. Joseph before that time. Before the anti-trust law, I was employed on a salary to make the rates and furnish them for the different towns, St. Joseph as well as the others...After the anti-trust law of 1895 became operative, I read the law. It seemed to me that the law provided against combinations to make rates. The State Board was then abolished. I sent out a circular to the companies and stated in substance that the State Board was out of existence, and that I proposed to make estimates of rates and sell them to the companies, without any connection or association with anything at all and sell these rates at a given price -- this book at a given price, and that included the keeping up of the books, too. *These [***39] books I offered to make were of the same kind and character I had been making.* I asked the companies to purchase my books and some purchased them and some did not. The agents that got my rate books at St. Joseph and the correction slips I furnish, got them from the companies."

Witness was here handed a copy of the petition containing a list of the companies against which suit is brought, and [*27] was asked if he had examined this list of companies, and he said he had, and that he furnished a portion of these companies with his rate book between November, 1896, and July, 1897 and he designated as those that he had furnished the rate book to as follows: Aetna of Hartford, Orient of Hartford, Phoenix of London, British America, Westchester Insurance Company, Atlas, Commercial Union, London & Lancashire, Lion's, Lancashire, London Assurance, Union & Crown, London & Globe, Imperial, Manchester, Northern, North British, Palatine, Royal Insurance Company, Sun Insurance Office, Aachen & Munich, Hamburg-Bremen, Prussian National, German of Freeport, Traders' Insurance Company, Springfield Fire & Marine, Michigan, Detroit, St. Paul, Merchants' of Newark, The Agricultural, Caledonian, [*40] American Fire Insurance Company of New York, Citizens' of Missouri, Commercial Union, German American, Hanover, Home, Niagara, Queen, Westchester, Glens Falls Insurance Company of North America, Union Insurance Company of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania Fire, Merchants' Insurance Company of New Jersey, Providence-Washington, Scottish Union & National, Concordia, Milwaukee Mechanics, Brooklyn.

"I know Mr. Buckingham at St. Joseph, and from November, '96 to July, '97, he was in the insurance business, and a local resident agent of various companies at St. Joseph; and he came to inquire about some one to do a certain class of work. I recommended Mr. Scott. The companies responded to my circular that they would buy the rates. I suppose the agents at St. Joseph got the rates from the companies, as I mail no rates from my office in Kansas City to the agents at St. Joseph, Missouri. I did at one time send the slips direct to St. Joseph. I do send the slips direct to the agents sometimes in this way: The companies buy my rates and they will say to me, 'I want you to send a copy to Mr. John Smith at Sedalia; he has not a copy'; and they want me to send to this one and to that one; and the agent [***41] at St. Joe wants me to send slips, [*28] and if the companies order me to I send the slips, but not otherwise. I did that a short time and I concluded I would not do it any more, but if the companies order me [**602] to send the slips or books to any town in Missouri, except Kansas City, I will do so.

"Q. Can you name any of these companies that were doing business as is charged in this petition in the city of St. Joseph, between November, 1896, and July, 1897, at whose instance you sent any of those slips? A. As I understand the fact, several, I think, have them, but to say that they do I could not. I was told recently that an agent there at St. Joseph who has the agency of the Northern and of the Home, and two or three companies that way, did, but I do not know, and there are no records in my office that would indicate whether or not I sent the slips or rates direct to the agents at St. Joseph, Missouri; but I probably did, occasionally, between November, 1896, and July, 1897. I think probably in the interim of time from November, 1896, to July, 1897, I did forward the slips, as well as the books, to some resident agent at St. Joseph, Missouri, I might have a record in my [***42] office, my books might show, probably I have. We have a list of the companies who take the slips and the rate books. Some of them do not want anything but this town and that town, but otherwise they get everything. We just send them to the company indiscriminately, and only send direct to the resident agents, either the slips or books, by direction of the company. I would send the slips regularly to resident agents at St. Joseph on condition that every agent have an order from some company of his, so that all the agents get the books; but in the absence of directions I send the slips to the companies. To the best of my knowledge, the insurance business at St. Joseph is generally done at the rate fixed in my rate book and my slips...The rate I fixed is based on the proposition that the companies will, by securing the rate I name, be enabled, according to insurance statistics, to meet losses, pay expenses and [*29] a fair dividend on the capital, and that is what we term an adequate rate. I aim to make an adequate rate. I suppose that is the reason the companies want my rates. I charge the companies about eight or nine-tenths of one per cent of the volume of business. That [***43] is the only way I can fix it. I can only do this work for the companies on a per cent of the business, and I get the volume of business of the companies from Mr. Orear, Superintendent of Insurance. This nine-tenths of one per cent is nine-tenths of one per cent of all the premiums, and for that I furnish the companies with my rate book and corrections, and such mass of information as they may desire and that I may have in my possession; and that is my compensation complete from the companies. I pay my own clerical force in my office. This book is a St. Joseph book." [Here book was shown witness]. "This is the only rate book published by myself for the city of St. Joseph. The policy that is written and the reports that are made of the daily business in St. Joseph does not come to my office."

Cross-examination: "I make the Fetter rate book. I sell it to any insurance company that desires it. I make it as an insurance expert. The use of a rate book of this kind is to give the agents an idea of the risks and the adequacy of the rate."

Re-direct examination: "My compensation is governed by the volume of business done by an insurance company. I sell this book to any company that wants [***44] to buy. I have been doing that since the anti-trust law went into effect. The rates were made about on the same basis by myself after the antitrust law became operative as before."

After the act of 1895 became operative, the agents of the defendant companies (except those above pointed out) got together and formed the Underwriters' Social Club of St. Joseph. The president of the club, Mr. Wise, said: "We can not in this club recognize anything in writing that would lay ourselves liable to a prosecution under the late law passed regarding trusts in Missouri. Consequently, anything that is [*30] done regarding the maintenance of rates shall be understood among the members of the club."

Accordingly no constitution or by-laws were ever adopted or put into writing. The secretary of the club was E. F. Scott, who had formerly been a dry goods clerk, and for a short time before he went to St. Joseph was a clerk in Fetter's office in Kansas City. He had no other experience in the insurance business. The club had two rooms. In one the secretary had a copy of Fetter's rate book, a map, a desk and a few chairs. In the other there were some chairs. It had no regular time for holding [***45] meetings. Sometimes it met once a week and sometimes not once in three or four weeks. One of the members defined its purpose to be, "that one of the objects of the club was social and advisory to our business. The social nature of the club was talking to each other about Lloyds insurance companies and the mutuals and inquiring about how business was and generally anything appertaining to our business . . . There were no billiard nor card tables in the room. No periodicals kept there. I guess there was a desk. I never took an inventory of it. I couldn't tell whether there was a carpet on the floor."

Another described the purposes of the club as follows: "To the extent of smoking cigars one of the objects was to cultivate good-fellowship, another object was to become better acquainted with each other and with the methods of doing business; also to become better acquainted with all risks in St. Joseph, and get wider and more general information about insurance business and about conducting insurance business; another object was to secure a uniformity of policies, as in adjustment of partial losses the losses become extremely complicated, and it requires the highest order of ability to [***46] adjust such a loss. Concurrency is therefore [**603] insisted upon by the manager, Mr. Scott; that is one of the things accomplished by the club. That is, it is deemed beneficial to the insurer and makes it easier to adjust any losses. In speaking of the objects [*31] of the club, I use the words 'correct practices,' which covers all this, and means the application of concurrency and the application of a general form to a big scattered risk. I also stated that the object was to maintain rates."

The salary of the secretary was made up by the members contributing one dollar a month for each company represented by the members. Some of the members charged this to their companies direct and it was allowed. Others put it in as "postage" or other expenses and their companies allowed it in that form.

After the formation of this club, the fire insurance done by the agents of the defendant companies was carried on in this way: the secretary had a list of the numbers of all policies in the agent's office, so as to enable him to keep check on every daily report that went to the company; the daily report contained the name of the company by which the policies were written, the name [***47] of the assured, the date of issuance and of expiration, the amount of insurance, premium, rate, general form of policy, the property insured with its location. These daily reports were made out by the agents, placed in stamped but unsealed envelopes addressed to the company issuing the policy, and the envelopes were turned over to the secretary of the club for inspection and to be sealed and mailed by him. He kept no record of anything that was done in his office, but at first, if there was a variance between the rate specified in the policy and that fixed by the Fetter rate, the secretary would put a small slip on the report to notify the general agent of the company of the variance; afterwards it was thought "inexpedient" to have any such matters in writing, so the secretary simply notified the agents verbally of any variance and demanded to know the reason therefor. In this way every daily report from an agent to his company passed under the inspection of the secretary, and he alone mailed all reports to the companies. To prevent an agent from writing a rate in the policy in conformity to the Fetter rate and afterwards [*32] giving the insured a rebate, all the agents also [***48] submitted all their monthly statements to the secretary and he inspected them and likewise mailed them. Several times an agent was detected not living up to the Fetter rate, and then the club met and the offending agent was called on for an explanation, which was accepted as satisfactory and "everybody arose to their feet and expressed a determination to live up to the rates" (Fetter's rates). There was an unwritten by-law of the club prescribing that "where a member was caught cutting a rate there was to be a penalty of not to exceed $ 50, for the first two offenses, and after that loss of his agency." Some of the general managers of the defendant companies testified that they had never heard of the club or its practices until this proceeding was begun; others testified that they had expressly refused to allow their agents these club expenses and had charged them back to the agent; while the manager of the Queen Insurance Company wrote the local agent as follows: "While we are not fully advised as to the situation in St. Joseph, yet, at the same time we understand that all agents, with the exception of your good self, are now members of the Social Club. In the interest of harmony [***49] and correct practice we trust you will find it convenient to associate with the organization referred to, as it will undoubtedly redound to our mutual welfare."

I.

The special provision of the Statutes of Missouri under which this proceeding is prosecuted and which it is claimed the defendants have violated is section 1 of the Act of 1897 (Laws 1897, p. 208) and is as follows:

HN1[] "Section 1. Any corporation organized under the laws of this or any other state or country for transacting or conducting any kind of business in this State, or which does transact or conduct any kind of business in this State, or any partnership or individual, or other association of persons whatsoever, [*33] who shall create, enter into, become a member of or a party to any pool, trust, agreement, combination, confederation or understanding with any other corporation, partnership, individual, or any other person or association of persons, to regulate or fix the price of any article of manufacture, mechanism, merchandise, commodity, convenience, repair, any product of mining, or any article or thing whatsoever, or the price or premium to be paid for insuring property against loss or damage by [***50] fire, lightning or storm, or to maintain said price when so regulated or fixed, or shall enter into become a member of or a party to any pool, agreement, contract or combination or confederation to fix or limit the amount or quantity of any article of manufacture, mechanism, merchandise, commodity, convenience, repair, any product of mining, or any article or thing whatsoever, or the price or premium to be paid for insuring property against loss or damage by fire, lightning or storm, shall be deemed and adjudged guilty of a conspiracy to defraud, and be subject to penalties as provided in this act: Provided, however, that the provisions of this section shall not apply to agreements of fire insurance companies, or their agents, or boards of fire underwriters, to regulate the price or premium to be paid for insuring property against loss or damage by fire, [**604] lightning or storm in cities in this State which now have or which may hereafter acquire a population of one hundred thousand inhabitants or more; and provided, further, that if such insurance companies or their agents, or the board of fire underwriters doing business in any such city, shall combine in such city, either [***51] directly or indirectly, or agree or attempt to agree, directly or indirectly, to fix or regulate the price or premium to be paid for insuring property located wholly outside of such city against loss or damage by fire, lightning or storm, such company so violating the provisions of this act, either by itself, its agents, or by any such board of underwriters, shall be taken and deemed to have forfeited its right to do business in this State, and shall become liable to all the [*34] penalties and forfeitures provided for by the provisions of this act."

The first question, therefore, is whether the defendant companies have entered into or become members of or parties to a pool, trust, agreement, combination, confederation or understanding to fix the price or premium to be paid for insuring property against loss or damage by fire, lightning or storm or to maintain said price when so regulated or fixed.

There is no room for doubt that prior to the amendment of 1895, which specifically brought insurance companies within the purview of the anti-trust laws, the Association of Fire Underwriters of Missouri, was organized and maintained for the purpose of establishing and maintaining [***52] the rates at which property in Missouri would be insured against loss or damage by fire, and that Fetter was employed by the association to fix such rates and see that they were maintained. Neither can it be doubted that when the Act of 1895 became effective that association realized that its practices were violative of that act and hence the association ceased to exist. This is clearly shown by the testimony of Fetter and by his letter of June 11th, 1895, above referred to. After the passage of that act Fetter, on his own account, published a book of rates which were the same as the rates that had been fixed and maintained by the Association before the law went into effect. This book, with correction-slips keeping it up to date, he sold and delivered to the defendant insurance companies direct, except that when specially instructed by a company he sent them to the local agent instead of to the company and having it (and the correction-slips) reach the agent through the company. All of the local agents of the defendant companies at St. Joseph, had the books and the slips. Except in very extraordinary cases, all policies were written according to the Fetter rates, and when there was [***53] a variance the general agent was, at first, notified by a slip attached to the daily report, and later when it was considered "inexpedient" to commit such matters to writing, [*35] the local agent was notified, and if it was not corrected the local agent was called to account therefor. Fetter had no fixed price for his book and slips but charged each company eight or nine-tenths of one per cent of the volume of business done by each.

After the Act of 1895 became a law, the local agents of all the defendant companies, except those above noted, formed the Underwriters' Social Club of St. Joseph. The president distinctly stated that it would not put anything in writing that would lay the members liable to prosecution under the Act of 1895 relating to trusts, and that everything that was done regarding the maintenance of rates would have to be understood by the members. No written constitution or by-laws were ever adopted. The club had no regular meetings, no club furnishings, paraphernalia or usual accompaniments. When it met each man smoked his own cigars, and talked about Lloyds insurance companies and the mutuals, about "concurrency" and "correct practices," which was but another [***54] name for maintaining the Fetter rates, or else called a member to account for a variance from the Fetter rates, and although "whitewashing" him, "everybody arose to their feet and expressed a determination to live up to the rates." When the club was formed a committee was appointed to select a secretary (doubtlessly one who was peculiarly social), and the committee went to Kansas City and consulted Fetter, who kindly let them have one of his clerks, whom he had taken out of a dry goods store a short time before and who was therefore presumably "social," even if he was not an insurance expert, and knew nothing about St. Joseph or its insurable risks. This young man was taken to St.

Joseph and made secretary of this Social Club. He was installed in a room, with a copy of Fetter's book, a map of St. Joseph, a desk and a few chairs. In order that he might not become lonesome in the club rooms (where the members assembled only on rare occasions to smoke their respective cigars, talk about Lloyds, the mutuals, concurrency, [*36] correct practices, call an offending member to account for writing a policy at a rate that varied from Fetter's, and stand up and promise to live up to the [***55] rates), and just to be social, each of the local agents of the defendant companies sent him their daily reports, already inclosed in unsealed envelopes, addressed to their respective companies, and just to be social he examined each report and so as not to forget his former benefactor, he compared the rates specified in each policy with the Fetter rates, and if there was a variance put a slip on the report calling the attention of the general agent of the company to the variance, until it was discovered that this practice was "inexpedient" and in conflict with the expressed policy of this social club not to put anything in writing that would lay the [**605] members liable to a prosecution under the anti-trust laws, and then he adopted the more social process of notifying the local agents personally of the variance. Of course each agent only wanted to keep up this daily social communication with the secretary of the club; and of course, the secretary only wanted to be social when he insisted upon concurrency, correct practices and the exclusive right to seal and mail all the reports from the local agents to the companies; and of course, the monthly reports were likewise submitted [***56] to the secretary for social reasons and not for the purpose of advising him that the agent had not circumvented Fetter's rates by giving the insured a rebate from the rate written on the face of the policy; and of course the higher officers of the defendant companies did not know (after it was deemed inexpedient for the secretary to put slips on the daily reports showing variances from the Fetter rates) that their naughty local agents belonged to the social club, whose practices might, if put in writing, make them liable to prosecution under the anti-trust laws, and hence had forbidden them to be social, notwithstanding they did know that the policies were all written according to the Fetter rates and were the same as they were before the anti-trust laws were enacted; and of course the general managers wondered [*37] why they had taken the trouble and gone to the expense of maintaining the Association of Fire Underwriters of Missouri and had paid Fetter a salary to fix and maintain a rate in Missouri before the passage of the anti-trust law in 1895, when after that law went into effect their local agents could maintain the same old rates, either unassisted and at no expense to [***57] their companies or else by means of a social club, which cost the companies nothing!

But we decline to believe anything of the kind. The formation of the club immediately after the passage of the Act of 1895, is admitted. The maintenance of the old Fetter rates as established and practiced by the Association of Fire Underwriters of Missouri, which was abolished immediately after the passage of the Act of 1895 because it would violate that law, is not denied. The character of the club arrangements and that it had no constitution or by-laws and only occasional meetings is conceded. The fact that all daily and monthly reports were submitted to this inexperienced young man, who was not an insurance expert, by all the local agents of the defendant companies, and that he alone had a right to seal and mail the reports to the companies is confessed. The fact that each company paid Fetter for his book and correction slips a percentage on the volume of its business, and that the book and slips were sent by Fetter to the company and by the company to the local agent or else by Fetter to the local agent direct when ordered so to do by his company, is proved and not controverted. And the conclusion [***58] is inevitable and irresistible that the Underwriters' Social Club of St. Joseph is a plain, palpable, but bungling, pool, trust, agreement, combination, confederation and understanding organized to evade the antitrust laws of Missouri but wholly inefficient for such a purpose. The local agents did it and all knew it, and their HN2↑ knowledge is the knowledge of their companies, and their acts are the acts of their companies. (Nickell v. Phoenix Insurance Co. of Brooklyn, 144 Mo. 420, 46 S.W. 435.) For it could not be tolerated [*38] for a moment that an insurance company could hide under the skirts of its agents and violate the anti-trust laws of our State with impunity. These corporations can only act through agents and if their agents' acts or practices are in violation of their orders, they must suffer the consequences, for the law must be enforced whether the act violating it is done by one or another of the agents of the corporation. The company can and must control its agents, and must see, at its peril, that its agents do not violate the law while attending to the business of the company. This is the rule as to libels, assaults, malicious torts by agents of incorporated companies [***59] and there is greater reason for it being the true rule in cases involving the anti-trust laws. In fact, unless it was so, no company could ever be convicted of a violation of those laws, for they would do as the president of the Social Club said the club must do, put nothing in writing that would make them liable to prosecution; keep no records; leave no tangible evidences or tracts of their doings.

152 Mo. 1, *38L<sup>52</sup> S.W. 595, **605L<sup>899</sup> Mo. LEXIS 201, ***59

A few illustrations of the liability of a corporation for the willful or malicious torts of its agents, committed while in the prosecution of the company's business committed to their care although the act is unknown to the president, board of directors or manager of the corporation, will be sufficient to point the rule: For libel, Buckley v. Knapp, 48 Mo. 152; Johnson v. St. Louis Dispatch Co., 65 Mo. 539, and this extends to liability for criminal libel. State v. Boogher, 3 Mo. App. 442; Brennan v. Tracy, 2 Mo. App. 540. For malicious prosecution, Boogher v. Life Association, 75 Mo. 319. For assault and battery, Perkins v. Railroad, 55 Mo. 201. For conversion, Sherman v. Commercial Printing Co., 29 Mo. App. 31. For trespass, Favorite v. Cottrill, 62 Mo. App. 119.

In this case, however, [***60] the companies can not be heard to say that they did not know of or sanction the acts of their agents for they have answered jointly, and boldly confess that they are writing insurance in this State because they have been [*39] licensed to do so; and then they challenge the constitutionality of the Act and assert that it violates five different provisions of the Constitution of Missouri or of the United States, and contend that having been admitted to do business in this State before the passage of the Act of [**606] 1895, they acquired a vested right to do so in a manner fair and just among themselves, which vested right can not be taken away from them by the Act of 1895, without violating the XIV amendment to the Constitution of the United States. In short their answer is a clear admission that they have violated and do violate the Act of 1895, but they declare that they have committed no offense in so doing because they say that act is unconstitutional. It is true that the answer closes with a general denial of all the allegations of the petition not admitted by the answer to be true, but this avails nothing in view of the character of specific defenses pleaded which are [***61] all predicated upon the facts charged being true. If this be not the meaning of the answer then so much of it as raises so many constitutional questions amounts only to a moot court proceeding, for if it be true that the defendants have never done the acts charged but have observed the requirements of the Act of 1895 and avoided its inhibitions, then it is wholly immaterial in this case whether the Act is constitutional or not. It is only upon the theory that they have violated it, that they can be heard to question its constitutionality. And this is clearly the idea of the pleader in this case, and is the only way in which the general denial can be made to consist with the specific defenses. [Mississippi Valley Trust Co. v. McDonald, 146 Mo. 467, 48 S.W. 483.]

This brings us to the question whether the acts done constitute a pool, trust, conspiracy or unlawful combination. The evident purpose of the Social Club was to maintain the Fetter rates. To accomplish this, their practice was for each agent to submit to their common agent -- the secretary of the club -- a daily report of all the policies written by each. This was done to enable him to see that they were not writing policies [***62] at a [*40] less rate than the Fetter rates. It could have been for no other purpose, for he was not an insurance expert and they were experts, so they did not need his judgment or advice as to whether the risk was a proper or safe one. He could only watch them and see that they followed "correct practices," that is, charged the Fetter rates. They could each have done this without him, but he was employed to watch them all for the benefit of each; to catch anyone who attempted to cheat his confederates in the trust. This could have been the only purpose of submitting all the daily and monthly reports to him and having him mail them to the companies. The companies all knew what rates their agents were to charge, for the Fetter books and slips were bought by the companies and furnished to their agents as a part of their supplies. They knew that the Fetter rates were charged and lived up to, because they could see that fact from every policy they issued. So that the purpose, plan, pool and trust is plain. The practice under the trust is also plain. The fact that the parties to the trust were treacherous to each other, and in the desire for business, violated the trust agreement and [***63] occasionally wrote policies for less than the Fetter rate, does not even tend to disprove the existence of the trust, for it is the experience of all lawful as well as unlawful associations that some of the members will violate the common agreement for a selfish purpose, and hence penalties are usually provided (as they were in this case) for such violations. Of course there was no written agreement forming the trust, for that was "inexpedient" and might make the members liable to prosecution under the trust laws, as the president of the club well and wisely remarked when the club was formed. HN3↑ When people set out to do acts that are either mala in se or mala prohibita they do not put up a sign over the door or a stamp on the act declaring their purposes and intent. Concealment is generally their prime object. But as such matters exist without agreements and rest upon common understanding and practice, so the proof of their existence may [*41] be of the same character, and while such laws are penal in their nature and should be strictly construed [State ex rel. v. Talbot, 123 Mo. 69, 27 S.W. 366; State ex inf. v. Bland, 144 Mo. 534, 46 S.W. 440], nevertheless a pool or [***64] trust may be as conclusively proved by facts and circumstances as by direct, written evidence, for in this regard they are like all other frauds, and as was well said by Campbell, J., in Webber v. Jackson, 79 Mich. 175, 44 N.W. 591, HN4↑ "While fraud is not to be assumed without proof, it is nevertheless oftener shown by circumstances than any other way. When things appear that are contrary to the ordinary ways of honest business men, and call for explanations which might be, but are not, given, it is no violent inference to conclude that there is something wrong. And where this occurs repeatedly, and is the general characteristic of the conduct and statements of the parties, it is their own fault if they are held to the consequences;" and as was equally as well said by Sherwood, C. J., in Baldwin v. Whitcomb, 71 Mo. 651, "Whenever fraud is the matter in issue, any unusual clause in an instrument, any unusual methods of transacting the business, apparently done with the view for effect and to give to the transaction of the business an air of honesty, is of itself a badge of fraud."

Pools and trusts are not of modern origin. The courts, at common law, ferreted them out and placed the [***65] stamp of disapproval on them. Then they usually took the form of contracts in restraint of trade or creating monopolies. As early as the case of Mitchell v. Reynolds, 1 P. Wms. 181, Chief Justice Parker laid down the rule that such contracts were void if they were general, and Best, C. J., in Homer v. Ashford, 3 Bingham 328, said: "The law will not permit anyone to restrain a person from doing what the public [**607] welfare and his own interests require that he should do." The same rule was laid down by Parke, B., in Mallan v. May, 11 M. & W. 653. In those early days there was no legislation against such practices, but from the beginning the courts have recognized the dangers attending such combinations and in the absence [*42] of criminal, penal or prohibitive statutes have refused to enforce such contracts. It is not necessary here to review the cases where courts have held contracts valid which only partially restrained trade. It is only necessary to call attention to the fact that in exceptional cases the main purpose of the contract was lawful and the restraint was only a necessary incident or ancillary to the contracts, "to protect the covenantee in the enjoyment of [***66] the legitimate fruits of the contract or to protect him from the dangers of an unjust use of those fruits by the other party." [United States v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co., 54 U.S. App. 747.]

In the case just quoted Taft, circuit judge, delivered the opinion of the court, which was concurred in by Mr. Justice Harlan and Lurton, circuit judge, and we might well leave the law of the case at bar to depend upon that decision, for it is a most lucid, learned and luminous exposition of all the law, ancient and modern, upon the questions here under consideration, so much so in fact, that any attempt to enlarge upon the authorities cited and reviewed and the reasoning employed by the learned judge, would prove futile, feeble and foolish. After reviewing the instances where pools and trusts have undergone judicial scrutiny and condemnation, Judge Taft says: "Upon this review of the law and the authorities we can have no doubt that the association of the defendants, however reasonable the prices they fixed, however great the competition they had to encounter, and however great the necessity for curbing themselves by joint agreement from committing financial suicide by ill-advised competition, [***67] was void at common law because in restraint of trade and tending to a monopoly." And so it is here. But the common law remedy of refusing to enforce such contracts proved insufficient to prevent the blighting injuries to the public interests which modern trusts produced, and hence is has been found necessary by the National and State legislatures to enact drastic laws against trusts, pools, unlawful combinations and conspiracies, which will prevent [*43] and punish them and not leave them to exist and enforce their contracts among themselves, denying them only the aid of the courts, as at common law. The General Assembly of Missouri has done its duty in this respect. Our statutory law has been progressive. The Act of May 18th, 1889 (Laws 1889, p. 96), entitled "An Act entitled an act for the punishment of pools, trusts and conspiracies, and as to evidence in such cases," as was to be expected, was not efficient to meet all cases, and it was therefore found necessary to amend it in 1891 (Laws 1891, p. 186). Even this proved insufficient, and it was amended again in 1895 (Laws 1895, p. 237). Again the law was found not comprehensive enough to meet all cases (like this case, for [***68] instance) and the General Assembly proved itself equal to the exigencies of the occasion and passed the Act of 1897, under which this proceeding was instituted (Laws 1897, p. 208). This Act in express terms covers the case at bar, and the courts would be recreant to their duty, their past meritorious rulings, and to the principles they profess to practice and to teach, if they let the game out of the legislative trap in which it has been caught, by any forced construction of law or any distortion of the facts or any maudlin sentimentality superinduced by the magnitude of the interests involved.

The Underwriters' Social Club of St. Joseph is a pool, trust and conspiracy organized and maintained by the defendant companies, and is therefore an unlawful combination, and subject to the penalties prescribed by the Act of 1897. HN5 "A conspiracy is a combination of two or more persons to accomplish an unlawful end by lawful means or a lawful end by unlawful means." [United States v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co., 54 U.S. App. 764.]

HN6 A trust is a contract, combination, confederation or understanding, express or implied, between two or more persons to control the price of a commodity or service, [\[\*\*\*69\]](#) for the benefit of the parties thereto, and to the injury of the public, and [\[\*44\]](#) which tends to create a monopoly. As was said by Chief Justice Fuller in United States v. Knight Co., 156 U.S. 16, "Again, all the authorities agree that HN7 in order to vitiate a contract or combination it is not essential that its result should be a complete monopoly; it is sufficient if it really tends to that end and to deprive the public of the advantages which flow from free competition." In the United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Association, 166 U.S. 290, 41 L. Ed. 1007, 17 S. Ct. 540, it was said: "For these reasons the suit of the government can be maintained without proof of the allegation that the agreement was entered into for the purpose of restraining trade or commerce or for maintaining rates above what was reasonable. The necessary effect of the agreement is to restrain trade or commerce, no matter what the intent was on the part of those who signed it." Just so here, the practice of the members of the Social Club had the effect of maintaining the Fetter rates and hence constituted it a trust, no matter whether the members intended it to have that effect or not (and we have no [\[\*\*\*70\]](#) doubt they did so intend it), and no matter whether they also intended it to be "social" in the manner hereinbefore indicated or not.

In the olden times such practices were called contracts in restraint of trade. Now-a-days they are called trusts. There is no difference in the principle. There is a difference in the extent and [\[\*\*608\]](#) methods. Those the courts condemned long ago were as mere saplings compared to the mammoth oaks, when considered alongside of those of to-day. When the evils to the public interests that flow from these trust combinations are attempted to be described, words become mere weaklings in their power of expression, and one stands appalled at the helplessness of the people outside of judicial aid. This case strikingly illustrates the condition and calls aloud for the enforcement of the statute.

The facts establish the case laid against the defendants, and the statutory results must follow, if the statute is valid.

[\[\*45\]](#) II.

The defendants challenge the constitutionality of the anti-trust law of Missouri, and cite two specific provisions of the Constitution of Missouri, and the XIV amendment of the Constitution of the United States which the Act, [\[\*\*\*71\]](#) or some part of it, violates, and we will consider the points in the order they are pleaded.

1st. The title of the Act of 1891 and the amendment thereof in 1895 and 1897 is said to infringe "that part of section 28 of article IV of the Constitution of Missouri, which provides that no bill shall contain more than one subject which shall be clearly expressed in its title, in this; that the subject of insurance against loss or damage by fire, lightning or storm, is a different subject and not germane to the matters contained in the title of said Act."

The title of the Act of 1891 is, "an Act providing for the punishment of pools, trusts and conspiracies to control prices, and as to evidence and prosecution in such cases."

In Ewing v. Hoblitzelle, 85 Mo. 64, it was held that: HN8 "When all the provisions of a statute fairly relate to the same subject, have a natural connection with it, are the incidents or means of accomplishing it, then the subject is single, and if it is sufficiently expressed in the title the statute is valid." In State ex rel. v. Miller, 100 Mo. 439, 13 S.W. 677, Black, J., said: "In adopting a title the legislature may select its own language, and may use few or many [\[\*\*\*72\]](#) words. It is sufficient that the title fairly embraces the subject-matter covered by the act; mere matters of detail need not be stated in the title." These cases have been many times cited approvingly and have never been overruled and state the law to-day. If a combination, arrangement or understood course of dealing to fix and maintain prices or premiums to be charged for insuring property against loss by fire constitutes a pool or trust or conspiracy then the title of the Act of 1891 and its amendatory Acts covers and embraces [\[\*46\]](#) it. That it is a pool or trust or conspiracy is fully shown by what is hereinbefore said. It follows that this contention is untenable. The Supreme Court of Kansas reached the same conclusion in the case of In re Petition of Pinkney, 47 Kan. 89, 27 P. 179.

2d. It is claimed that section 30 of article II of the Constitution of Missouri provides that "no person shall be deprived of life liberty or property without due process of law," and that this Act violates that provision because, "it renders it unlawful for defendants to contract or agree among themselves or with the agents of other insurance companies or for their agents to contract and agree [***73] among themselves for the reasonable adjustment and maintenance of rates of premium to be charged for insurance against fire, lightning or storm in this State."

This is a total misapprehension of the Act. It does not prohibit any company or the agent of any company from contracting with any person who desires to insure his property upon any terms they two may agree upon. This is the extent and true meaning of the right to contract.

It does prohibit any company by itself or through its agents contracting with any other company or its agent not to contract with the insured except upon terms which such insurance companies or their agents have previously established. In other words, it protects the company against the temptations of a trust or monopoly by refusing to permit it to strip itself of the power to freely contract, for under the arrangement shown in this case the applicant for insurance is free to contract but the company and its agent has already limited and qualified its power by its previous contract with another company or its agent. The law has made this provision more out of regard for the otherwise helpless insurer than from tender consideration for the insurance [***74] company, but it incidentally preserves what it is here claimed it denies, the free, unrestrained power to contract by both parties to it. Such laws [*47] have not only been adjudged constitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States (United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Association, 166 U.S. 290, 41 L. Ed. 1007, 17 S. Ct. 540; United States v. Joint Traffic Association, 171 U.S. 505, 43 L. Ed. 259, 19 S. Ct. 25), and by the United States Court of Appeals (United States v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co., 54 U.S. App. 723), but the principles they announce have been expressly sanctioned by the Supreme Courts of New York (People v. Sheldon, 139 N.Y. 251, 34 N.E. 785), of Pennsylvania (Morris Run Coal Co. v. Barclay Coal Co., 68 Pa. 173), of Ohio (Central Ohio Salt Co. v. Guthrie, 35 Ohio St. 666), of Kentucky (Anderson v. Jett, 89 Ky. 375, 12 S.W. 670), of Iowa (Chapin v. Brown Bros., 83 Iowa 156, 48 N.W. 1074), of Illinois (Craft v. McConoughy, 79 Ill. 346, More v. Bennett, 140 Ill. 69, 29 N.E. 888), of Wisconsin (Milwaukee Masons' and Builders' Association v. Niezerowski, 95 Wis. 129, 70 N.W. 166), of California ([Vulcan Powder Co. v. Hercules Powder Co., 96 Cal. 510, 31 P. \[\*\*\*751\] 581](#)), of Texas (Texas Standard Oil Co. v. Adoue, 83 Tex. 650, 19 S.W. 274), and of Louisiana (India Bagging Assn. v. Kock & Co., 14 La. Ann. 168).

There is no more merit in this contention that there would be that a law was unconstitutional which prohibited two or more persons from conspiring to commit murder, or burglary or any other felony. [*609] There is no such thing in civilized society as the unrestrained power to contract. Every man surrenders some of his individual rights when he associates with or becomes a part of any society or government, and the power of the government to legislate is complete, so that while according to every man the fullest possible liberty to do what he pleases with his own, he must not interfere with the similar right of others. This principle underlies and runs through all governments and societies,, and it is the corner stone of the police power of the State.

3d. It is contended that section 1 of the Act is in violation of section 1 of the 14th amendment to the Constitution of the United States which provides: "That no State shall deprive any person of life, liberty or property without due [*48] process of law, nor deny to any person [***76] within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws," because it discriminates between foreign and domestic insurance companies, and because these defendants had, prior to the enactment of this law, complied with the laws of the State of Missouri, and "that said Act deprives them of the right to carry on their business in a manner fair and just among themselves and not in any manner injurious to any other person in the State, and that said Act deprives them of the right of making the necessary and proper contracts relating to the business of insurance."

Section 1 of the Act of 1897 makes no distinction between foreign and domestic insurance companies, but on the contrary expressly covers, "any corporation organized under the laws of this or any other State or country." So the postulate of this proposition is not true and hence the conclusion fails.

HNG[↑] It is a misconception of the 14th amendment to the Constitution of the United States to suppose that any person acquires any vested rights by complying with existing police regulations or comity laws which can not be affected by subsequent changes in such regulations or laws. Such compliance is equally the duty of the citizen and [***77] the stranger, and both are treated alike by this section of the Act of 1897. Hence the protection which the Constitution of the United States affords has not been denied or abridged by the passage of this law. This is too plain to need the citation of authority to support it, and is fully illustrated in the cases hereinbefore referred to.

4th. It is insisted that section 6 of the Act of 1891 as amended by the Act of 1895, violates the 14th amendment to the Constitution of the United States, in that it discriminates between foreign and domestic companies by making the Act of the agent prima facie proof of the act of the company as to foreign companies, while such is not the case as to domestic companies.

[*49] It might be conceded for the purposes of this case that this section is void for this reason, but that would avail these defendants nothing, for this section is not involved in this case, and no prima facie presumptions are invoked by the Attorney-General or indulged in by the court. The case has been tried and submitted and will be decided just as any other case involving a question of fact is tried, and the defendants have been accorded every privilege and presumption [***78] in their favor that any litigant can have or is accorded in any other kind of a case -- even more so, for the proceeding being penal in its nature, it is strictly construed, and its abuse or violation must be clearly proven. State [ex rel. v. Talbot, 123 Mo. 69, 27 S.W. 366.]

Aside from this, however, this section is clearly separable from the remainder of the Act, and if eliminated from it, the remainder of the Act, and particularly sections 1 and 6a, would constitute a sufficient law to reach and cover the offenses here charged, and this being the case it is wholly immaterial -- in fact, a mere academic question -- whether section 6 is or is not constitutional. [County Court of St. Louis Co. v. Griswold, 58 Mo. 175.]

5th. It is further argued that sections 9 and 10 of the Act violate the 14th amendment of the Constitution of the United States, because they allow an attorney's fee of not less than $ 25 nor more than $ 500 to be taxed against defendants in such cases, while no such fees are taxable against defendants in ordinary cases.

What is said above as to section 6 applies to this contention with equal force. Besides, no such question, claim or demand is set up in this case, [***79] and it will be time enough to consider it when a proper case involving such a claim is presented. A decision, in this case, of that proposition, might well be regarded as obiter dictum.

We have thus at great length set out the facts and circumstances disclosed by the record and the evidence, examined and [*50] reviewed the law bearing upon the case, and with a lively appreciation of the effects and consequences to the seventy-three defendants, have reached the only conclusion which is possible on the facts under the law, that the defendants are guilty of the offense charged against them of deliberately forming a trust to fix and maintain the price or premium to be charged and paid for insurance against loss or damage by fire, lightning and storm, contrary to the provisions of the laws of this State, and having reached this conclusion, it only remains to pronounce and enforce the penalty which the law has fixed and prescribed in such cases.

The judgment of the court is that the defendants be ousted of all rights, privileges and franchises conferred by the laws of this State and of their certificates to do business under the insurance laws of this State, and that they pay [***80] the costs of this proceeding, and that execution issue therefor.

As before indicated, the evidence does not show that the Newark Fire Insurance Company, Norwalk Fire Insurance Company, London Assurance Corporation, Citizens' Insurance Company of New York, Union Insurance Company of Philadelphia or Equitable Fire and Marine Insurance Company of Providence, R. I., or their agents, were members of the [**610] Underwriters Social Club of St. Joseph, but as they have made common cause with the other defendants by the pleadings and joint answer, they will be treated in the same way as the other defendants and the judgment of ouster will include them. Burgess, Sherwood and Brace, JJ., concur in all the opinion, Gant, C. J., and Robinson, J., concur in all except the judgment as to the five companies specified in the last sentence, and dissent as to that. Valliant, J., dissents.

Dissent by: GANTT; VALLIANTVALLIANT, J.

Dissent

GANTT, C. J. (Dissenting). -- Concurring with my learned brother that the relator failed to establish [**612] by the testimony that five of the defendants or their agents were guilty of the charges against them in the information I am wholly unable to agree to [***81] his conclusion that because they challenged the [*51] constitutionality of the statute under which they are prosecuted in common with their confederates, that they should for that reason be held to have confessed the allegations of the information.

As I understand the law, each defendant is liable only when it is shown to have been a party to the trust.

The fact that it was sued in common with others and filed a joint answer denying its liability, and also the constitutionality of the act, does not amount to a plea of confession and avoidance. I regard this part of the opinion and the conclusion against them as a radical departure in the construction of pleadings, and hence I dissent.

Robinson and Valliant, JJ., concur with me in these views.

(Dissenting). -- I entirely agree with the majority of the court in the opinion that the acts charged in the information constitute an offense against the anti-trust statutes of this State, and I also agree that these statutes are constitutional and valid. I further agree that if the agents through whom the respondents have conducted their business in this State have been guilty of the offense charged in the information the respondents [***82] can not escape the condemnation of the law on the plea that they did not authorize or were ignorant of the unlawful conduct of their agents. But the evidence in my opinion is not sufficient to convict them of the offense charged.

It is shown by the evidence that the local agents of the respondent corporations were associated together in an organization called the Underwriters' Social Club, which was in its general character more of a business than a social society, though it was not devoid of the latter characteristics. In weighing the evidence the name of the society adopted falls rather into the side of the scales against the respondents, because it seems to indicate to that extent an intention to mislead. But it appears that that club was the successor of one [*52] that had for its purpose, or at least for one of its purposes, the maintaining of certain rates of premiums which, whatever its legal status might have been before, became when the antitrust statutes were adopted, unlawful, and in organizing the new society it may be that the members in choosing this name only desired to distinguish it, as far as a mere name could do so, from its predecessor, of which one Lancaster [***83] was the active officer.

A great deal of testimony is devoted to what is called the Fetter book and the use made of that book by the respondents. The author of the book is W. J. Fetter, an insurance expert of fifty years' experience. It is published on his own account, and sold to all insurance companies who will buy. The general purpose of the book is to indicate to the insurer the rate of premiums to be charged for insurance on the various classes of property in the locality, and to classify the property. According to the evidence these rates are estimated from data derived from surveys and maps of the city drawn with special reference to furnishing information to the insurers as to the nature of the risk, and from personal inspection of the property, and are calculated by an experienced actuary. It is a book of technical information for all persons interested in that business and is estimated in value like all technical works in proportion to its reputation, or in proportion to the reputation of its author. When used and relied upon the effect is that the insurance agent writes a policy without making a personal inspection and survey of the property, and the book being not only [***84] in the hands of the local agent but also in the home office of the company, the latter may pass on the policy without a special survey and certificate of inspection. The evidence shows that the book is in extensive use and that a large proportion of the business of the respondents in St. Joseph during the period covered by this inquiry was based on the rates given in the Fetter book.

There is nothing unlawful in the character of the book, [*53] and nothing unlawful in the insurance companies basing their business ventures on the information it contains, and even if the evidence showed that all their business was transacted on that basis, that would not of itself bring them under the condemnation of the law. The use that a fire insurance company, standing alone, may see fit to make of the book, is no more to be condemned than the use that a merchant may make of the daily price current reports or than that which a life insurance company may make of the tables of experience and of the prices at which such an insurance may be safely carried, compiled and computed by reputable authors and actuaries.

But there is a use to which the book might be put that would be unlawful, and that [***85] is the use to which it is charged in the information these respondents have put it, that is, that they have made it a standard of rates by agreement among themselves which shall not be lowered.

The evidence shows that before the anti-trust statutes were enacted there was a compact to maintain those or similar rates, and it shows that this so-called Social Club was organized just after that law went into effect and the organizers had that law very much in mind. There was testimony in support of the information tending to show that whilst the ostensible object of the society was innocent, its real object was to violate the law. But on the other hand, whilst the testimony of the respondents was weak in support of the idea of its being a social club, yet it very satisfactorily showed that its main object was the regulation among themselves of the insurance business transacted by its members in particulars in which their mutual convenience was promoted, the public interest not prejudiced and the law not violated.

The testimony in support of the charge of the unlawful agreement to maintain rates is chiefly that of two witnesses who were, or had been, members of the club, and between whom [***86] and the other members there seems to have arisen some unpleasant feeling growing out of their business. Whilst both [*54] of these [**611] witnesses testify that there was such an unlawful agreement, yet they state it rather as their conclusion; their understanding of a tacit agreement. They say that no written agreement to that effect was made and they do not state what if anything the members said among themselves that would constitute such an agreement. They undertook to give what they said the president said at the organization which was, in substance, that they could not put anything in writing that would lay themselves liable to prosecution under the anti-trust law, and that whatever was done on the subject of maintaining rates would have to be understood among the members. One of these witnesses said that if a member wrote a policy below the Fetter rate, the secretary would send it back to him and he would be required to take it up; when the witness was asked what would happen if the member failed to take up the policy, he said that usually there would be a big row and a whitewashing; when asked to state an instance in which a member had been thus disciplined, he was [***87] able to remember but one, and that he so vaguely stated that it did not clearly appear either that the member had violated the supposed rule or that any penalty followed. Another one of these witnesses testified that there was a penalty prescribed for cutting the rate which was a fine of $ 50 for the first two offenses and after that loss of his agency. On cross-examination he said that the agreement to submit to that $ 50 fine was in writing signed by all the members of the club. That is in contradiction of his own previous statement and that of the other witness just mentioned, to the effect that no agreement on that subject was reduced to writing for fear of the law.

The evidence showed that the club had a secretary whom it paid $ 75 a month. This secretary had been obtained by a committee sent by the club to Kansas City to consult Mr. Fetter on the subject, and was recommended by him as an efficient man for their business, he having been a clerk in Fetter's office. All policies written by the members, and their daily [*55] reports were sent to the secretary who examined them, and if the policies were found correct he forwarded them to the company, if anything wrong was discovered, [***88] either in the policies or reports, he sent them back to the agent for correction. The State's testimony tended to show that this was for the purpose of preventing any agent from cutting the rate. The testimony for respondents tended to show that the secretary was selected because of his skill in insurance business and to aid the members in their technical work; all policies were sent to him for his judgment as to their being properly written; if there was anything wrong in the form of the policy, or in the description of the property, it was his duty to note the correction and return it to the writer; when a number of policies were written by different agents on the same property it was desirable that they should all be what in technical language they call "concurrent," that is substantially in the same form; it was the secretary's duty to see that such policies were concurrent, and if one was found to be what they call "non-current" his duty was to note the difference and return it to the writer for correction; this could be done only by having a common agent of this kind or by the more inconvenient method of a meeting of all the agents interested; in a few instances when he first [***89] began his office, the secretary noted on policies that they were written below the rate indicated in the Fetter book, which was the usual standard, and returned them to the writers for such action as they might see fit to take, but it was done as a mere suggestion, the secretary took no further action on it, and he soon discontinued doing so; that he had nothing to do with fixing or maintaining the rates; that he made inspections of risks and when a change in the property or occupancy occurred he reported it to Mr. Fetter at Kansas City, who, if in his opinion the change required it, prepared for distribution to all his subscribers slips indicating a change in the rate of premium that should be made.

[*56] The testimony of the president, secretary and several members of the club was taken and they all testify that there was no agreement to maintain rates.

It is not every association of men engaged in the same business that is condemned by our anti-trust statutes, even though the object of the association be to facilitate the conduct of their business and promote their mutual interests. Such associations are not unusual nor necessarily injurious to the public well being. It was [***90] pointed out by witnesses in this case that there are features of the insurance business which render an association of the kind in question convenient and profitable to men engaged in the business, and that such an association may be conducted without in any particular violating the law.

The fact that before the anti-trust laws were enacted insurance companies were banded in an association to maintain rates doubtless conduces to place any society they may now form under suspicion, especially at a period when the public mind is excited on the subject of trusts. But when there is a legitimate purpose for which they may organize, and when we are told by reputable witnesses that such was the purpose of this organization and that there was no agreement to maintain rates, we have no right to disregard the testimony or overweigh it with suspicion.

I have given the evidence in this case a careful study and am satisfied that on the main question of fact the decided preponderance is in favor of the respondents, and the finding should be that they are not guilty of the acts charged and the judgment that they be discharged.

---

End of Document

Kevil v. Standard Oil Co.

Superior Court of Cincinnati, Ohio

1900, Decided

No Number in Original

Reporter

11 Ohio Dec. 114 *; 1900 Ohio Misc. LEXIS 141 **; 8 Ohio N.P. 311

H. C. KEVIL v. STANDARD OIL CO.

Disposition: [**1] Demurrer overruled.

Core Terms

---

Oil, transportation, allegations, anti-trust, commodity, contracts, territory, prices

Headnotes/Summary

---

Headnotes

CONTRACTS.

1. CONTRACT FOR EMPLOYMENT--SURRENDER OF BUSINESS.

An agreement to give a person employment at stipulated wages if he will give up his business and enter the service of the other party in a business of a similar nature, is not in violation of the act of April 18, 1898, 93 O. L., 143, and popularly known as the anti-trust law.

2. CONTRACT NOT TOO INDEFINITE TO BE ENFORCED.

Such a contract when properly construed as a contract to employ so long as the employer was engaged in that business and had work which the employee could do and desired to do and was able to do satisfactorily, is not too indefinite for enforcement.

3. SUCH AGREEMENT IF TERRITORY NOT TOO EXTENSIVE.

Such an agreement not to go into a similar business is valid if the prohibited territory is not more extensive than is necessary to enable the party contracting to enjoy the fruits of the contract. What extent of territory constitutes a reasonable limit is a question depending upon the particular circumstances of the contract.

Counsel: Rogers Wright, for plaintiff.

Stallo, Richards & Shaw, and B. P. Hollister, for defendant.

Judges: SMITH, J.

Opinion by: SMITH

Opinion

---

[*114] SMITH, J.

This case comes before me on a demurrer to the petition, the material allegations of which are as follows:

That on or about November, 1898, the plaintiff was engaged in the oil business in the city of Covington, Kentucky, buying oil from wholesale dealers and delivering the same in smaller quantities to divers customers, and that the business was a remunerative one.

That the Standard Oil Company is a corporation whose business is the manufacture of petroleum and its products, "that it was incorporated in 1870, and subsequently became a party to a certain trust agreement, constituting what is known as the Standard Oil Trust, and all of its stock is held by the trustees of said trust. By said agreement a large number of individuals, partnerships and corporations, dealing in oil, put all the property employed in the oil business into the hands of nine trustees who were to manage the same in accordance with the trust agreement, thus creating a gigantic monopoly, which controls the entire oil business in the United [**2] States."

That on or about December 16, 1898, the defendant entered into a contract with plaintiff, that if plaintiff would abandon his business, it would provide him with employment in one of its establishments within a reasonable time thereafter, and would pay him a reasonable salary for his services, and that until the defendant could provide such employment it would pay to plaintiff the sum of nine dollars a week.

[*115] That in pursuance of said agreement plaintiff discontinued his business, sold his horses, wagon and other assets, and his business thereby was broken up and destroyed; that defendant paid to plaintiff the sum of nine dollars a week until the last day of April, 1899, when the defendant refused any further payments and notified the plaintiff that it would no longer pay him any further sums and would not provide him any employment; that since April, 1899, plaintiff has endeavored to procure employment, but has been unable to do so; that by reason of said action of defendant, his business has been destroyed, and he has been unable to earn a livelihood for himself and family, and has been damaged in the sum of twenty thousand dollars, for which he asks judgment.

[**3] The question is, does the petition state a cause of action?

The position of the defendant is that under the law passed in this state in April, 1898, 93 O. L., 143, and popularly known as the antitrust law, the agreement set out in the petition is null and void, being a combination of property, skill and capital such as is forbidden by that statute; and that therefore the plaintiff cannot recover on the contract.

The two sections of this statute which the defendant contends support its position are the first and eighth, which are as follows:

"SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the general assembly of the state of Ohio, that a trust is a combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more persons, firms, partnerships, corporations or associations of persons, or of any two or more of them for either, any or all of the following purposes:

"1. To create or carry out restrictions in trade or commerce.

"2. To limit or reduce the production, or increase, or reduce the price of merchandise or any commodity.

"3. To prevent competition in manufacturing, making, transportation, sale or purchase of merchandise, produce or any commodity.

"4. To fix at any standard or figure, whereby its price [**4] to the public or consumer shall be in any manner controlled or established, any article or commodity of merchandise, produce or commerce intended for sale, barter, use or consumption in this state.

"5. To make or enter into or execute or carry out any contracts, obligations or agreements of any kind or description, by which they shall bind or have bound themselves not to sell, dispose of or transport any article or any commodity or any article of trade, use, merchandise, commerce or consumption below a common standard figure or fixed value, or by which they shall agree in any manner to keep the price of such article, commodity or transportation at a fixed or graduated figure, or by which they shall in any manner establish or settle the price of any article, commodity or transportation between them or themselves and others, so as to directly or indirectly preclude a free and unrestricted competition among themselves, or any purchasers or consumers in the sale or transportation of any such article or commodity, or by which they shall agree to [*116] pool, combine or directly or indirectly unite any interests that they may have connected with the sale or transportation of any such [**5] article or commodity, that its price might in any manner be affected. Every such trust as is defined herein is declared to be unlawful, against public policy and void."

"SECTION 8. That any contract or agreement in violation of the provisions of this act, shall be absolutely void and not enforceable either in law or equity."

It is difficult to understand why the plaintiff has inserted in his petition the allegations that the stock of the defendant company is held in common with that of other companies in a trust under what is known as the Standard Oil Trust, because such transfer of the stock does not destroy the corporation, and the action here is not against the Standard Oil Trust, but against the corporation, the Standard Oil Company, which the petition alleges through its officers entered into the contract with the plaintiff. The allegations, therefore, in regard to its stock being placed in trust in common with a number of other corporations may be rejected as surplusage. But if the allegations of the petition are to be construed as meaning that the contract was made for the benefit of the trust, this inference alone would not prevent a recovery, because it does not appear that [**6] at the time the contract was made the plaintiff was informed as to the internal affairs of the corporation. And a contract cannot be declared invalid because the intention of one of the parties is illegal. Such intention to invalidate the contract must be mutual.

The main contention of the defendant, that the contract set out in the petition is invalid, however, is based upon the broad language of the anti-trust statute, of which both parties are presumed to have knowledge, and the decision of our Supreme Court in which the constitutionality of the act was upheld. State ex rel. v. Buckeye Pipe Line Co., 61 Ohio St. 520, 547, 56 N.E. 464.

The last mentioned case was a proceeding in quo warranto, in which it was alleged that the defendant had combined with nineteen other corporations for the purpose of preventing competition in the production, transportation and refining of petroleum, and of fixing and maintaining the prices at which its various products should be sold. It was a combination of different companies solely for the purpose of restraining competition and maintaining prices.

But in deciding the last mentioned case the court distinctly says that, "The contract [**7] which we are asked to denounce is not incidental to the sale of property, or any interest therein. It does not concern the good will of any business. It does not contemplate the formation of any corporation or other company for the carrying on of any business. In the subject of the contract the interests of the contracting parties are not adverse; they do not even diverse. The agreement according to the allegations [*117] of the petition has no purpose whatever except to prevent competition in the production, transportation and refining of petroleum to the end that there may be received from the consumers of its products higher prices than would prevail under the condition of open competition. Counsel for the defendants admit that such a contract is within the inhibitions of the act, but deny the power of the legislature to inhibit it."

But as the contract set out in the petition is not a contract of combination solely for the purpose of restraining competition and maintaining prices, but is one in which a business is abandoned and good will as well as personal services transferred, the question whether such a contract falls with the inhibition of the anti-trust law is not passed [**8] upon by State ex rel. v. Buckeye Pipe Line Co., supra, and as far as I am informed is presented in this state now for the first time since the passage of that law.

In United States v. Addyston Pipe and Steel Co., 54 U.S. App. 723, the distinction between a case such as the one at bar and that which our Supreme Court had before it in State v. Buckeye Co., supra, is clearly stated and the law applicable to the two classes of cases thoroughly reviewed. In that case there was a combination of corporations solely for the purpose of restraining competition and maintaining prices and the federal anti-trust law was held applicable to it and constitutional, just as in State v. Buckeye Co., the Ohio statute was held applicable and constitutional.

But it will appear from an examination of the case of United States v. Addyston Co., supra, that the circuit court of appeals passed upon the question whether the federal anti-trust law applied to a case where the restraint imposed by the agreement is merely ancillary to the main purpose of a contract and not the sole object of the contract. And in that case it was held that at common law contracts by which a business is purchased and [**9] the purchase agrees to go out of the business for a certain length of time, and with respect to a certain territory, are valid, such restraints of trade being ancillary to the main purpose of the contract and necessary to the contractee in the enjoyment of the legitimate fruits of the contract. Thus in contracts by a merchant who sells his business to another, the merchant may agree that he will not engage in the business in the same territory for a certain length of time. In The Paragon Oil Co. v. Hall, 4 Ohio Cir. Dec. 576, and in Hitchcock v. Coker, 6 Ad. & El. 438, it was held that the covenant need not be limited as to time; and in other cases cited in United States v. Addyston Pipe Co., supra, it was held that the covenant need not be restricted as to territory if such covenants are ancillary to the main contract and are necessary to the proper enjoyment of the subject of the contract.

[*118] It was held in the United States v. Addyston Pipe Co., supra, case that such contracts were unaffected by the federal anti-trust law, and such I believe to be the proper construction of the Ohio anti-trust law.

The sole inquiry remaining then is whether [**10] the contract set up in the petition falls in this excepted class, not covered by the anti-trust law, and it is clear that it does.

The allegations of the petition are that the plaintiff agreed with the defendant to go out of business and go into the employ of the defendant. The allegations do not state for what period of time the contract was to continue, nor that the plaintiff was never to go into the same business again. But I think it is fairly to be inferred that the plaintiff was to have employment so long as the defendant was engaged in the oil business; that during that time the plaintiff was not to go into his former business; and that the agreement related to the territory of Covington.

In Lange v. Werk, 2 Ohio St. 519, it was held that an agreement not to go again into business in Hamilton county was valid; while in Lufkin Rule Co. v. Fringeli, 57 Ohio St. 596, 49 N.E. 1030, it was held that an agreement not to go into business in the United States or the state of Ohio was invalid, such restraint being regarded as too general and therefore against public policy and void.

In both cases, however, the court recognizes that where one sells his business [**11] to another, or goes himself into another firm or corporation, with whom he contracts not to set up in business for himself in opposition to the new business with which he has connected himself, that the agreement is valid if the prohibited territory is not more extensive than is necessary to enable the party contracting to enjoy the fruits of the contract. In this case there can be no doubt that the territory covered by the contract is reasonable.

A case almost identical to this is Carnig v. Carr, 35 L.R.A. 512, (Mass.), Feb'y, 1897. In that case it was held that

1. "An agreement to give a person permanent employment at stipulated wages if he would give up his business and enter the services of the other party in the same occupation is not too indefinite to be capable of enforcement when properly construed as a contract to employ him so long as the employer was engaged in that business, and had work which the employee could do and desired to do and was able to do satisfactorily.
2. "A contract whereby one is induced to give up his own similar business is not lacking in mutuality because he does not bind himself to continue in the employment.

11 Ohio Dec. 114, *118L 900 Ohio Misc. LEXIS 141, **11

4. "The restraint of an [**12] employee from engaging in business so long as he continues in the employment of a person who agrees to give him permanent employment does not make the contract unlawful or against public policy."

The demurrer will be overruled.

---

End of Document

WOODBERRY v. MCCLURG

Supreme Court of Mississippi

March, 1901, Decided

No Number in Original

Reporter

78 Miss. 831 *; 29 So. 514 **; 1901 Miss. LEXIS 131 ***

MADISON W. WOODBERRY ET AL. v. MONROE MCCLURG, ATTORNEY-GENERAL.

Prior History: [***1] FROM the circuit court, first district, of Hinds county.

HON. ROBERT POWELL, Judge.

The appellants, Woodberry and others, were plaintiffs in the court below; McClurg, attorney-general, the appellee, was defendant there. The facts are stated in the opinion.

Disposition: Judgment affirmed.

Core Terms

---

Gravel, attorney-general, charter of incorporation, railroad corporation, proposed charter, capital stock, gravel pit, incorporation, manufacturing, mercantile, legality, powers

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Corporate Existence, Powers & Purpose > Powers > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Types of Statutes

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Corporate Formation > Corporate Existence, Powers & Purpose > General Overview

HN1[] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

It is a principle of law that a corporation created under the general laws takes its authority from such general laws, and not from the articles of association, and a corporation created under chapter 25, annotated code 1892 (Mississippi), can only exercise the powers prescribed by that chapter. By that chapter it is clear that every corporation is intended to be a distinct and separate entity, and reading, in the light of Mississippi statutes and the principles of common law relating to corporations, the first clause of § 5, chapter 88, acts 1900 (the anti-trust law), the court construes it to mean, as therein expressly declared, that no corporation shall directly or indirectly purchase or own the capital stock, or any part thereof, of any other corporation, and that, too, without any question of competition between them.

Headnotes/Summary

---

Headnotes

1. CORPORATIONS. General laws. Corporate powers. Code 1892, ch. 25. Charter.

The powers of a corporation created under general laws are derived from the statute and not from its charter provisions, and a corporation chartered under code 1892, ch. 25, can only exercise the powers therein prescribed.

2. SAME. Distinct entity. Laws 1890, p. 125. Stock in other corporations.

Every corporation chartered under the general laws of this state is intended to be a distinct and separate entity, and under laws 1900, ch. 88, sec. 5, so providing, no such corporation can rightfully purchase or own the capital stock, or any part thereof, of any other corporation, whether or not a competing one.

3. ATTORNEY-GENERAL. Official opinions. Judiciary.

The courts will not undertake to control the attorney-general in the matter of his official opinions.

Counsel: Shannon & Street and Frank Johnston, for appellants.

The clause, sec. 5, ch. 88, laws 1900, "If such other corporation be engaged in the same kind of business and be a competitor therein," applies to both of the clauses preceding it--that is to say, it applies as well to the clause against a corporation, acquiring the capital stock of other corporations, as to the clause against a corporation acquiring the franchise, plant or equipments of other corporations. It is one entire sentence, with simply a comma before the word "nor." Ordinary grammatical construction of the sentence will demonstrate this.

Bearing in mind that the law under consideration was passed to define trusts and combines, and to provide for the suppression thereof, and to preserve to the people of this state the benefits derived from competition; and remembering that a trust or combination could not be created by one corporation, [***2] engaged in a certain kind of business, acquiring part or all of the capital stock of another corporation, engaged in a different kind of business, the unsoundness of the attorney-general's contention is apparent.

If the attorney-general's construction of this law is correct, a corporation may purchase the franchise, plant and equipments of a noncompetitive corporation, thereby getting absolute control of the whole thing with full power to dictate its full policy, and yet he would not allow the same corporation to purchase one share of stock in a noncompetitive corporation, in which latter event, its interest would be so small that it would have no control over its policy.

The effect of the construction contended for by the attorney-general will be looked to by the court in construing the statute. This is more extensive and far reaching than may appear at first view. Upon such construction an incorporated bank could not invest its surplus in the stock of any railroad company or other corporations, whose stock is quoted and sold every day in the stock exchanges of the country.

No insurance company could invest its surplus or earnings in the stock of any other corporation [***3] whatever. Savings banks, incorporated, would be restricted in their business investments to bonds or mortgages, and the stock exchanges of the world would be closed against them. In a word, every corporation in this state incorporated by the state, would be shut out of every stock exchange in the world, so far as dealings in stocks are concerned.

The interest of the individual stockholder would be seriously and injuriously affected by such a construction. No stockholder could sell his stock to a Mississippi corporation, but could only sell to individuals. Nor could any stockholder borrow money from any incorporated bank or financial institution in the state on his stock as collateral security, for no bank would take as collateral security a certificate of stock that it could not own.

The purpose to effect such extensive and radical changes in the business in the state cannot reasonably be attributed to the legislature.

Monroe McClurg, attorney-general, pro se.

An attorney-general, in giving his opinions to the governor as to whether a proposed charter is violative of the constitution and laws of the state, should resolve all doubts against the proposed charter for [***4] the same reason that the courts determine doubtful questions as to whether corporations possess certain powers against the corporation. All grants of power by the sovereign are to be strictly construed against the grant. The best interpretation of the law is the law itself. Section 8 of chapter 88 of the laws of 1900 is too plain and unambiguous to call for aids of construction outside of its own clear and logical language and meaning. The clear purpose and intent of the statute, as gathered from its own language, is (1) to deny the right to any corporation, as such, to purchase or own any of the capital stock of any other corporation, and (2) to deny one corporation the right to purchase or to acquire the franchise, plant or equipments of a competing corporation.

No man can conceive of a more powerful scheme for forming the most powerful combinations than that contended for by appellants. A single bank or a railroad company, a telegraph, express or telephone company might subscribe for or in some other manner "purchase or own" a majority of the capital stock of every noncompeting corporation in the state, and allow such other corporations to share in its stocks and profits. Nor [***5] is it easier to find a better illustration than the charter under consideration. A gravel company, organized for the purpose of owning and operating gravel pits, together with all other powers incidental thereto and necessary to the successful operation of the gravel pits, demands the power to "purchase, subscribe for, take and hold, sell and deal in the stock of and shares of the capital stock of any corporation, joint stock company or association organized under or chartered by the laws of any state of the United States, or under or by the laws of the United States; Provided, Such corporation, association or joint stock company is not a competitor or engaged in the same kind of business." How can such powers reasonably conduce to the lawful operation of a gravel pit? Who can imagine the extent of such powers? We must presume that full advantage will be taken of every power granted.

Section 883 of the code requires "clear and definite statement of the purposes for which the corporation is created . . . and the powers to be exercised." Here it is clearly and definitely stated that the purpose is to operate a "gravel pit," and it may be expected that all powers necessary to the [***6] successful operation of the pit should be granted, but nothing beyond that. So that, looking to this statute merely as a side light by which to read section 5 of the act of 1900, it is made the more evident that the power to invest in the capital stock of other noncompeting corporations is not within the reasonable contemplation of the powers to successfully operate a gravel pit.

Judges: TERRAL, J.

Opinion by: TERRAL

Opinion

---

[**515] [*835] TERRAL, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

M. W. Woodberry and five other citizens of Jones county applied to the governor of the state of Mississippi for a charter of incorporation of the Laurel Gravel Company. The governor referred the proposed charter to the attorney-general for his opinion as to its legality. The attorney-general declined to make such certificate, whereupon this writ of mandamus was brought against him to test the legality of the proposed charter.

A statement of the proposed articles of incorporation will best present the question for consideration.

The articles are styled, "Charter of incorporation of Laurel Gravel Company." Section 1 declares the purposes are to purchase and operate a gravel pit or pits and do a general mercantile [***7] and manufacturing business. Section 4 provides that the Laurel gravel pit corporation may acquire and operate saw and planing mills, own and operate electric light plants, build and own hotels, may purchase, hold and deal in the stock or shares of any incorporation organized under the laws of the United States or of any of the several states of the union, provided such corporation is not a competitor with it in business.

That the powers attempted to be lodged in the Laurel Gravel Company would be illegal, if granted, we cannot doubt. They would make it a stupendous monster, capable of swallowing [*836] into its insatiable maw all the mercantile and manufacturing institutions of the entire country, because none of them would be in any competition with it in the gravel business. Incorporated under chapter 25 of the code of 1892, which precludes the chartering of railroad corporations under it, yet, in direct conflict with § 832, it gives power to the Laurel Gravel Company to purchase and hold the capital stock of every railroad corporation of North America, because no one nor all of these transportation companies would be in competition with its gravel business.

HN1[] It is a principle [***8] of law that a corporation created under the general laws takes its authority from such general laws, and not from the articles of association (People v. Chicago Gas Trust Co., 130 Ill. 268, 22 N.E. 798), and a corporation created under chapter 25, annotated code 1892, can only exercise the powers prescribed by that chapter. By that chapter it is clear that every corporation is intended to be a distinct and separate entity, and reading, in the light of our statutes and the principles of common law relating to corporations, the first clause of section 5, chapter 88, acts 1900 (the anti-trust law), we construe it to mean, as therein expressly declared, that no corporation shall directly or indirectly purchase or own the capital stock, or any part thereof, of any other corporation, and that, too, without any question of competition between them. The question here made was passed upon at the request of the attorney-general. We assume no authority to pass upon his official opinions.

We approve and commend the advice of the attorney-general as sound, wholesome and patriotic, and

Affirm the judgment below with costs.

---

End of Document

Metcalf v. American School Furniture Co.

Circuit Court, W.D. New York

May 13, 1901

No Number in Original

Reporter

108 F. 909 *; 1901 U.S. App. LEXIS 4574 **

METCALF v. AMERICAN SCHOOL-FURNITURE CO. et al.

Core Terms

---

stockholder, damages, stock, treble damages, conspiracy, anti-trust, demurrer, demands

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN1 [down arrow] Private Actions, Standing

Section 7 of the federal antitrust act of July 2, 1890, is declaratory of a common-law right which existed in favor of parties injured by wrongs enumerated in other sections of that act, and confers jurisdiction to seek a remedy, and with treble damages, in a federal tribunal. The character of the right of action is in no way changed, and still remains one in tort.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Civil Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Equity > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > US Department of Justice Actions > General Overview

HN2 [down arrow] US Department of Justice Actions, Civil Actions

It is clear that the right to maintain a suit in equity is not expressly conferred by the antitrust act of July 2, 1890. Indeed, such right is by implication denied: First, because a private person is given (§ 7 of the act) the right to maintain an action at law; and, second, the district attorneys of the United States, under the direction of the attorney general (§ 4 of the act), are charged with the duty of commencing suits in equity. If it were intention of the lawmakers to vest in every irresponsible individual who may deem himself aggrieved the right to invoke the drastic and far-reaching remedies conferred by the act, is it not reasonable to suppose they would have said so in unambiguous terms?

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Equity > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > US Department of Justice Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Civil Actions > Injunctions

HN3 Private Actions, Costs & Attorney Fees

The antitrust law of July 2, 1890, has wrought no such change in the law as will enable the court to enforce its provisions in favor of a private party by a bill in equity. Under this act, the only remedy given to any other party than the government of the United States is an action at law for threefold damages, with costs and attorney's fees; and the only party entitled to maintain a bill in equity for injunctive relief for an alleged violation of its provisions is the United States, by its district attorney, on the authorization of the attorney general.

Counsel: [**1] Seymour, Seymour & Harmon, for orator.

Davies, Stone & Auerbach (Joseph Auerbach and Brainard Tolles, of counsel), for defendants American School-Furniture Co. and Oakman and Turnbull, trustees.

Maulsby Kimball, for defendants Buffalo School-Furniture Co. and others.

Opinion by: HAZEL

Opinion

---

[*909] HAZEL, District Judge. The orator, Caroline Metcalf, holder of 569 shares of stock in the Buffalo School-Furniture Company, is a citizen of Connecticut. She brings this bill in equity in behalf of herself and all other stockholders having like interests with her, not citizens of New York, against the Buffalo School-Furniture Company, incorporated in the state of West Virginia, but transacting its business and having its property in the state of New York; Oliver S. Garretson, Henry R. Hoffeld, Frederick C. Garretson, Edward C. Shafer, Robert L. Cox, and Albert D. Garretson, directors of that corporation, owning 80 per cent. of the capital stock, all of whom are residents of the state of New York; the American School-Furniture Company, a corporation of the state of New Jersey; and Walter G. Oakman and George R. Turnbull, residents of the state of New York, who claim to have an interest [**2] in the property described in the complaint, as trustees for the holders of bonds of the defendant American School-Furniture Company. She alleges that the directors of the defendant Buffalo School-Furniture Company, without her consent, [*910] and the defendant American School-Furniture Company, on the 2d day of March, 1899, entered into an unlawful combination and conspiracy whereby it was agreed that there should be no competition in the United States in the purchase and sale of school furniture and similar articles, and that the defendants contracted, combined, and conspired to restrict, restrain, monopolize, and control trade and commerce among the several states in school furniture; that this was done to increase and control the price in contracts for the delivery of school

furniture and the like among the several states and with foreign nations, and within the several states. The bill, at great length, alleges conspiracy, and after stating that the nominal capital of the defendant American School-Furniture Company is $10,000,000, all of which, after the formation of that corporation, was issued for property, or for options for property, held by promoters of the company, [**3] not exceeding $3,000,000 in value; that the defendant American School-Furniture Company borrowed $1,000,000, which still constitutes a liability, and which loan the promoters were able to obtain on the property acquired; that a large secret profit was made out of the transaction; that the consideration for the transfer of the property of the Buffalo School-Furniture Company to the American School-Furniture Company was the sum of $137,461 in cash, $15,000 in notes, 1,300 shares of the common stock, and 1,300 shares of the preferred stock, of the American School-Furniture Company, -- it is further alleged that no business whatever has been actually carried on by the defendant Buffalo School-Furniture Company since the transfer; that its board of directors, acting beyond their power, intend to wind up and dissolve the company and distribute all of its assets, including the stock of the American School-Furniture Company, among its stockholders, pro rata, although the American School-Furniture Company and the aforesaid directors know said stock to have no value. It is further alleged that the total capital stock of the Buffalo School-Furniture Company is $350,000, divided into 3,500 shares, [**4] of the par value of $100 each; that the complainant requested the Buffalo School-Furniture Company to bring an action in equity to undo the transactions herein complained of, and recover its real estate and other assets from the defendant American School-Furniture Company; that she has exhausted all the means within her reach to obtain within the corporation itself the redress of her grievances; that the property and earning capacity of the Buffalo School-Furniture Company will be destroyed; and that she brings this bill for the benefit of herself and all the stockholders of the Buffalo School-Furniture Company who may be similarly situated who are not residents of the state of New York. It is further alleged that this fraudulent combination and scheme were fully consummated by the defendant directors and the American School-Furniture Company, and that complainant has never consented thereto; that she being without remedy by the strict rules of the common law, prays that the American School-Furniture Company and the defendants the directors of the Buffalo School-Furniture Company may be decreed to be personally liable to her in the premises for treble [*911] the damages which [**5] she has sustained, and that the transfer of the real estate and all of the property and assets of the Buffalo School-Furniture Company may be set aside; that it be restored, reconveyed, and again vested in the Buffalo School-Furniture Company, and that her damages may be ascertained and trebled; that a receiver be appointed; that the treble damages that may be adjudged and awarded to her may be charged as a lien upon said real estate formerly of the Buffalo School-Furniture Company; that the lien may in this proceeding be foreclosed; and that she be paid the damages and treble damages awarded and adjudged to her out of the proceeds of such sale.

The defendants have all demurred to the bill on grounds of multifariousness and want of equity. This suit is properly brought by the plaintiff as a shareholder in the Buffalo corporation, suing, as she alleges, for herself and for and on behalf of all other stockholders not residents of the state of New York. The Buffalo School-Furniture Company is under control of the guilty parties, and they have refused to sue when requested by the complainant so to do. Hawes v. City of Oakland, 104 U.S. 450, 26 L. Ed. 827; 2 Cook, Corp. § 701; De [**6] Neufville v. Railroad Co., 26 C.C.A. 306, 81 Fed. 10; Porter v. Sabin, 149 U.S. 478, 13 Sup. Ct. 1008, 37 L. Ed. 815; Weir v. Gas Co. (C.C.) 91 Fed. 940.

The primary question immediately arises whether this individual demand for damages is not inconsistent and antagonistic to the equitable relief sought in the bill, and whether these are not demands for equitable and legal relief upon distinct and independent grounds. Innumerable acts are alleged to have been committed in pursuance of the conspiracy. It is also claimed that the conspiracy formed and carried out by the directors was and is in violation of the act of congress of July 2, 1890. Her grievance for which she demands relief is that of a minority stockholder suing for herself and several other stockholders. The damages alluded to in the bill, which she demands for her sole and individual benefit, appear to be the treble damages awarded to a person who is injured in his business or property by the acts of any other person or corporation forbidden or declared to be unlawful by the federal anti-trust law. It is strenuously clared to be unlawful by the federal anti-trust law. It is strenuously insisted that the subject-matter [**7] of this case, because of the diverse citizenship of the parties, is properly before the court, irrespective of the act of 1890, and that, as the bill states a cause of action in favor of the dissenting stockholder without reference to that statute, a court of equity, having thus obtained jurisdiction of the subject-matter, may administer all the relief which justice demands; that the damages sought are incidental to the demand for equitable relief, and the court has power to completely adjust all the rights of the parties. Madison Ave. Baptist Church v. Oliver St. Baptist Church, 73 N.Y. 96. It is a general rule that a court of equity, having acquired jurisdiction of the subject-matter, may mold its decrees according to the circumstances of each case. The damages, however, sought to be recovered in this suit, in the light of the demand set out in the complaint, at paragraphs 24, 26, 28, and 31, cannot be regarded [*912] as supplemental to the revesting of the property or incidental to the relief sought by the bill. The relief sought, other than the individual demand for treble damages, is in equity. Section 7 of the federal act of 1890 HN1 is declaratory of a common-law right [**8] which existed in favor of parties injured by wrongs enumerated in other sections of that act, and confers jurisdiction to seek a remedy, and with treble damages, in a federal tribunal. The character of the right of action is in no way changed, and still remains one in tort. Blindell v. Hagen (C.C.) 54 Fed. 40; Pidcock v. Harrington (C.C.) 64 Fed. 821; Gulf, C. & S.F.R. Co. v. Miami S.S. Co., 30 C.C.A. 142, 86 Fed. 407; Block v. Distributing Co. (C.C.) 95 Fed. 978. It inures in the case at bar to the complainant individually, and not to her as a stockholder, as an additional asset of the corporation. All other relief sought, if granted, must in the end belong and come into the hands of the corporation, to the advantage of the stockholders thereof. Cook, Corp. § 701, and cases cited; Church v. Railroad Co. (C.C.) 78 Fed. 526; Whitney v. Fairbanks (C.C.) 54 Fed. 985. This case is clearly distinguishable from De Neufville v. Railroad Co., 26 C.C.A. 306, 81 Fed. 10, cited by counsel for complainant. In that case the relief was demanded in form in favor of the complainant individually, but in law belonged to the corporation of which the complainant was a stockholder, while in this [**9] case the treble damages sought by virtue of the anti-trust act would belong to the individual complainant, and not to the corporation of which she is a stockholder. In the case of Pidcock v. Harrington, supra, Judge Coxe said, in relation to the anti-trust act:

HN2 "It is clear that the right to maintain in such a suit [in equity] is not expressly conferred by the act. Indeed, such right is by implication denied: * * * First, because a private person is given (section 7) the right to maintain an action at law; and, second, the district attorneys of the United States, under the direction of the attorney general (section 4), are charged with the duty of commencing suits in equity. If it were intention of the lawmakers to vest in every irresponsible individual who may deem himself aggrieved the right to invoke the drastic and far-reaching remedies conferred by the act, is it not reasonable to suppose they would have said so in unambiguous terms?"

To the same effect is the decision of Judge Baker in Southern Indiana Exp. Co. v. United States Exp. Co. (C.C.) 88 Fed. 659, affirmed by the circuit court of appeals in 35 C.C.A. 172, 92 Fed. 1022. The learned district judge said:

HN3 "The [**10] anti-trust law of July 2, 1890, has wrought no such change in the law as will enable the court to enforce its provisions in favor of a private party by a bill in equity. Under this act, the only remedy given to any other party than the government of the United States is an action at law for threefold damages, with costs and attorney's fees; and the only party entitled to maintain a bill in equity for injunctive relief for an alleged violation of its provisions is the United States, by its district attorney, on the authorization of the attorney general."

Without deeming it necessary to specifically set out all of the grounds of demurrer of the various defendants interposed herein, it may be said that the chief grounds argued by counsel were the multi-fariousness of the bill, and want of equity in favor of the orator generally. [*913] The bill, at great length, alleges conspiracy in restraint of trade and commerce, negligence, and ultra vires acts of the directors of the Buffalo School-Furniture Company, resulting in the depreciation of the value of its stock and property. I think that the bill, with its inferences, sufficiently avers a conspiracy in restraint of trade and commerce [**11] to enable the complainant to give proof of the charge in support of her allegation. If these alleged unlawful acts are proven, injury has been sustained by the corporation, and therefore equity will afford relief. This would entitle the plaintiff, as a stockholder, to equitable relief.

The objection that the bill is demurrable because it lacks equity fails. The defendants Oakman and Turnbull have filed a plea in addition to their demurrer. It is not strictly necessary for the court to pass upon the sufficiency of this plea, having come to the conclusion that the demurrer filed by these same defendants must be sustained. The court is of the opinion, however, that the benefit of the plea should be saved to the hearing, in accordance with the rule laid down in Story, Eq. Pl. §§ 697, 698. The motion for a temporary injunction is denied. Demurrers sustained, with costs to the various defendants; complainant having leave to amend within 30 days.

---

End of Document

National Salt Co. v. United Salt Co.

Court of Common Pleas of Cuyahoga County, Ohio

February 8, 1902, Decided

No Number in Original

Reporter

12 Ohio Dec. 386 *; 1902 Ohio Misc. LEXIS 18 **

NATIONAL SALT CO. v. THE UNITED SALT CO. ET AL.

Disposition: [**1] Demurrer overruled.

Core Terms

---

Salt, stockholders, stock, parties, trust company, cases, cause of action, contracts, combinations, certificates, demurrer, allegations, deposited, preferred stock, consolidation, anti-trust, alleged agreement, percent, provisions, executory, joined, shares of stock, pari delicto, trade in, installments, commodity

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Joinder of Parties > Compulsory Joinder > Necessary Parties

HN1 Compulsory Joinder, Necessary Parties

Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 5006 provides: any person may be made a defendant who has or claims an interest in the controversy adverse to the plaintiff, or who is a necessary party to a complete determination or settlement of a question involved therein.

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Joinder of Claims & Remedies > General Overview

HN2 Pleading & Practice, Joinder of Claims & Remedies

Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 5019 states: the plaintiff may unite several causes of action in the same petition, whether they are such as have heretofore been denominated legal or equitable or both, when they are included in either of the following classes: (1) the same transaction, (2) or transactions connected with the same subject of action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN3 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

An act to define trusts, 93 Ohio Laws 143, forbids independent corporations to enter into combinations to restrict competition in trade with a view to exacting from consumers higher prices than would prevail under the conditions of open competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Shareholder Duties & Liabilities > Controlling Shareholders > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Eminent Domain Proceedings > General Overview

HN4[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

A trust is created where a majority of the stockholders in competing corporations consolidated their interest by conveying all their property to a corporation organized for the purpose of taking their property, when the necessary consequence of the combination is to control prices, limit production or suppress competition in such a way as to create a monopoly.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Executory Contracts

Contracts Law > Standards of Performance > Partial Performance > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Contracts Law > Defenses > Illegal Bargains

HN5[] Types of Contracts, Executory Contracts

The law will not aid a party to such contract, that is, an illegal contract, either in its enforcement while it is executory or in its rescission when it is executed. When such contract has been partially performed by both parties so that the evil purpose of the contract has been in part effected by the co-operation of both parties, then as to such part performance the condition of the parties is the same as though the contract had been fully executed. The parties are in pari delicto, and the law will not aid either of them in enforcing performance or in undoing what has been done; hence, under such circumstances, the vendee can not maintain an action to recover from the vendor the money paid on the contract. A plaintiff who founds his cause of action on an illegal or immoral act has no standing in a court of equity, and where both parties have been engaged in an unlawful transaction, the court will neither lend its active aid to the one party to get rid of the securities taken upon such transaction nor assist the other party in retaining them, but will leave both to their strict legal rights.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

HN6[] Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

So long as the illegal acts contemplated by contracts remain wholly unexecuted, the party who has paid money to obtain their performance may repent of the wrongful purpose, abandon his contract and recover back the money so paid. The law will aid him in such a case in the furtherance of a policy which aims to prevent wrongdoing by encouraging such repentance and abandonment.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Duties & Liabilities > Unlawful Acts of Agents > Criminal Activities

Contracts Law > Defenses > Illegal Bargains

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Duties & Liabilities > Unlawful Acts of Agents > General Overview

HN7 [+] Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

While courts will not enforce an illegal contract between the parties, if an agent of one of the parties has in the illegal enterprise received money or property belonging to its principal, he is bound to turn it over to him and can not shield himself from liability on the ground of the illegality of the original transaction.

Headnotes/Summary

---

Headnotes

TRUSTS--CONTRACTS--PARTIES--PLEADING.

1. VIOLATION OF SEC. 4427-1, REV. STAT.--VALENTINE ANTI-TRUST LAW.

The petition in this case, the principal features of which are stated in the opinion of the court, states a cause of action and brings the case within the provisions of the Valentine Anti-Trust Law, 93 O. L. 143, Sec. 4427-1, Rev. Stat., et seq.

2. JOINDER OF PARTIES IN SUCH CASE.

A corporation having unlawfully entered into a contract to form a combination with another to control the output, trade and price of a commodity in Ohio, in violation of Sec. 4427-1, Rev. Stat., making certain combinations of capital unlawful, in effecting which stock and other property is deposited with a trust company pending the performance of certain conditions relating to the consolidation, the trust company, the consolidated company and such stockholders of the first mentioned corporation as have not joined in a proceeding by it to declare such contract null and void and asking for the return of all stock to the proper corporations and other relief in equity, are proper parties defendant under Sec. 5006, Rev. Stat., requiring the joining of all parties whose interests are adverse, etc.

3. JOINDER OF CAUSES.

It is not an improper joinder of causes of action, under Sec. 5019, Rev. Stat., permitting the joining in one petition of several causes of action included in or connected with one transaction, to ask for the setting aside of a contract between two corporations by which they unlawfully combined to restrain trade contrary to Sec. 4427-1, Rev. Stat., and an accounting for equitable relief, notwithstanding the proceeding concerns a number of parties.

4. SECTION 4427-1, REV. STAT., CONSTITUTIONAL.

Courts should not declare laws unconstitutional unless they are clearly so. Therefore, the court of common pleas held Sec. 4427-1, Rev. Stat., et seq., 93 O. L., 143, defining trusts and declaring them unlawful, constitutional and not against public, as in restraint of trade; and particularly inasmuch as the Supreme Court had held the act to be constitutional in a case involving questions not inconsistent with those in case at bar.

5. RULE AS TO AIDING PARTIES TO ILLEGAL CONTRACTS.

The law will not aid a party to an illegal contract either in its enforcement when executory or in its rescission when executed, but when the illegal acts remain wholly unexecuted the party who has paid money for their performance, may repent of the wrongful purpose, abandon the contract and recover back the money so paid. Whether where a contract part executed, but mostly executory, and its securities are pledged with a trustee subject to sale in case of default, and neither party in possession of the fruits of the contract, will be rescinded, quaere.

6. PARTIES NOT IN PARI DELICTO.

A corporation having unlawfully combined with another contrary to the provisions of Sec. 4427-1, Rev. Stat., the anti-trust law of Ohio, the non consenting stockholders having no knowledge of the transaction when made, having never assented thereto, but instead demanded the rescission of the contract by which the illegal combination was effected, and upon refusal of the officers either to rescind or bring suit for rescission, instituted a proceeding in the name of the corporation, are not in pari delicto, and it appearing that the contract is executory and the property in the hands of a trustee, and neither party has obtained the fruits of the wrong, a revision thereof will not be denied.

Counsel: Ford, Snyder, Henry & McGraw, for plaintiff, cited:

Misjoinder of parties: Section 5006, Rev. Stat.; Powers v. Bumcratz, 12 Ohio St. 273; Neill v. Trustees, 31 Ohio St. 15; Railroad v. Schuyler, 17 N.Y. 592; [Bensieck v. Cook, 19 S.W. 642 \[110 Mo. 173\]](#); 33 Am. St. Rep. 422; Alnutt v. Leper, 48 Mo. 319; Fultz v. Waters, 2 Mont. 165; [Bigelow v. Sanford, 57 N.W. 1037 \[98 Mich. 657\]](#); [Pate v. Hinson, 16 So. 527 \[104 Ala. 599\]](#); [Gardner v. Samuels, 47 P. 935 \[116 Cal. 84\]](#); 58 Am. St. Rep. 135; Gutridge v. Vanatta, 27 Ohio St. 366; Penn v. Hayward, 14 Ohio St. 302.

Misjoinder of causes of action: Sections 4971, 5058, 5059, Rev. Stat.; Robinson v. Flint, 16 How. Prac. 240; Globe Ins. Co. v. Boyle, 21 Ohio St. 119; Converse v. Hawkins, 31 Ohio St. 209; Gutridge v. Vanatta, 27 Ohio St. 366; Powers v. Bumcratz, 12 Ohio St. 273.

Misjoinder of separate causes of action against several defendants: Larwill v. Burke, 10 Circ. Dec. 605 [19 R. 449].

As to whether the plaintiff is a proper party plaintiff: Sections 1777, 1778, Rev. Stat.; [McClain v. McKisson, 54 Ohio St. 673 \[47 N.E. 1114\]](#); Knorr v. Miller, 3 Circ. Dec. 297 (5 R. 609) [Aff. 27 Bull. 64]; [\[\*\*2\] Elyria Water Works Co. v. Elyria, 57 Ohio St. 374 \[49 N.E. 335\]](#); Henry v. Railway, 5 Dec. 41 (2 N. P. 118); Larwill v. Burke, 10 Circ. Dec. 605 (19 R. 449); Dodge v. Woolsey, 59 U.S. \(18 How.\) 331; Dewing v. Perdicaries, 96 U.S. 193; Hawes v. Oakland, 104 U.S. 450; Detroit v. Bean, 106 U.S. 537 [1 S. Ct. Rep. 560]; [Allen v. Wilson, \[28 Fed. Rep. 677\]](#); De Neufville v. Railway, 81 Fed. Rep. 10, 11; Ball v. Railway, 93 Fed. Rep. 513; Rogers v. Railway, 91 Fed. Rep. 299; [Farmers Loan & Trust Co. v. Railway, 9 O. F. D. 49 \[67 Fed. Rep. 49\]](#); Ranger v. Cotton Press Co., 52 Fed. Rep. 611, 613; Hill v. Railway, 41 Fed. Rep. 610; Secor v. Singleton, 41 Fed. Rep. 725, 727; [Harding v. Glucose Co., 55 N.E. 577 \[182 Ill. 551\]](#); Carter v. Glass Co., 85 Ind. 180, 186; [Pasteur Vaccine Co. v. Burkey, 54 S.W. 804 \[22 Tex. Civ. App. 232\]](#); Cravens v. Carter--Crume Co., 13 O. F. D. 000 [92 Fed. Rep. 479; 34 C. C. A. 479]; [United States v. Fuel Co., 13 O. F. D. 000 \[105 Fed. Rep. 93, 104\]](#); Anheuser--Busch Brew. Co. v. Houck, 30 S.W. 869 [88 Tex. 184]; [People v. Sheldon, 34 N.E. 785 \[139 N.Y. 251\]](#); 23 L. R. A. 221; 36 Am. St. Rep. 690]; Morris Run Coal Co. v. Coal Co., 68 Pa. 173; [Anderson \[\*\*3\] v. Jelt, 12 S.W. 670 \[89 Ky. 375\]](#); 6 L. R. A. 390]; Chapin v. Brown, 48 N.W. 1074 \[83 Iowa 156; 12 L. R. A. 428; 32 Am. St. Rep. 297]; [Craft v. McConoughy, 79 Ill. 346 \[22 Am. Rep. 171\]](#); [Vulcan Powder Co. v. Powder Co., 31 P. 581 \[96 Cal. 510\]](#); 31 L. R. A. 242]; Association v. Keck, 14 La. Ann. 168; [Judd v. Harrington, 34 N.E. 790 \[139 N.Y. 105\]](#); [People v. Sugar Refining Co., 24 N.E. 834 \[121 N.Y. 582\]](#); 9 L. R. A. 33; 18 Am. St. Rep. 843]; [Pittsburgh Carbon Co. v. McMillin, 23 N.E. 530 \[119 N.Y. 46\]](#); 7 L. R. A. 46]; [People v. Milk Exchange, 39 N.E. 1062 \[145 N.Y. 267\]](#); 27 L. R. A. 437; 45 Am. St. Rep. 609]; Comer v. Burton-Lingo Co., 58 S.W. 969 \(Tex. Civ. App. 1900\); Cooke, Trade & Labor Comb., 141, 142.

The petitioner is entitled to a decree: Edgar v. Fowler, 3 East, 222; Cotton v. Thurland, 5 Term R. 405; Wharton on Cont., Sec. 354; Fisher v. Hildreth, 117 Mass. 558; Tyler v. Carlisle, 9 A. 356 [79 Me. 210; 1 Am. St. Rep. 301]; [Bernard v. Taylor, 31 P. 968 \[23 Ore 416\]](#); 18 L. R. A. 859; 37 Am. St. Rep. 693]; Taylor v. Bower, 1 Q. B. D. 291; Vischer v. Yates, 11 Johnson 23; McAllister v. Gallaher, 3 Penrose & Watts, 468; Conklin v. Conway, 18 Pa. 329; [Tarleton v. \[\*\*4\] Baker, 18 Vt. 9 \[44 Am. Dec. 358\]](#); Livingston v. Wootan, 1 Nott & McCord, 178; Perkins v. Eaton,

3 N. H. 152; Ball v. Gilbert, 12 Metc. 397; McKee v. Manice, 11 Cush. 357; Moore v. Trippe, 1 Spencer, 263; Heincke v Francis, 3 Dutcher, 55; Perkins v. Hyde, 6 Yerger, 288; Stacy v. Foss, 19 Me. 335 [36 Am. Dec. 755]; Wheeler v. Spencer, 15 Conn 28; Forrest v. Hart, 3 Murphy, 458; Wood v. Duncan, 9 Porter, 227; Shackelford v. Ward, 3 Ala. 37; Hardy v. Hunt, 11 Cal. 343 [70 Am. Dec. 787]; DeWees v. Miller, 5 Harrington, 347; Whitwell v. Carter, 4 Mich. 329; Conners v. Ragland, 15 Mon. (B.) 634; Hutchings v. Stilwell, 18 Mon. (B.) 776; Love v. Harris, 18 Mon. (B.) 122; Alvord v. Burke, 21 Ga. 46; Alexander v. Mount, 10 Ind. 161; Frybarger v. Simp son, 11 Ind. 59; Smith v. Bickmore, 4 Taunt. 474; Hastelow v. Jackson, 8 B. & C. 221; Bate v. Cartwright, 7 Price, 540; Hodson v. Ternl, 1 C. & M. 802; Robinson v. Mearns, 6 Dow & Ry. 26; Varney v. Kickman, 5 C. B. 271; Martin v. Hewson, 10 Excheq. 737; 29 Eng. & Eq. 424; Barrett v. Neill, Wright, 472; Norton v. Blinn, 39 Ohio St. 145; Merrit v. Willard, 4 Keyes, 208; Woodworth v. Bennett, 43 N.Y. 273; Tenant v. Elliot, 1 B. & P. 3; Farmer [**5] v. Russel, 1 B. & P. 296; Johnson v. Lansley, 12 C. B. 468; Hooker v. DePalos, 28 Ohio St. 251; Kahn v. Walton, 46 Ohio St. 195 [20 N.E. 203]; Spring Co. v. Knowlton, 103 U.S. 49; Block v. Darling, 140 U.S. 234, 239 [11 S. Ct. Rep. 832]; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Transportation Co., 171 U.S. 138, 151 [18 S. Ct. Rep. 808]; L'Herbette v. National Bank, 38 N.E. 368 [162 Mass. 137]; 44 Am. St. Rep. 354]; Anthony v. Machine Co., 18 A. 176 [16 R.I. 571]; 5 L. R. A. 575]; McCutcheon v. Capsule Co., 71 Fed. Rep. 787, 795, 796 [36 U. S. App. 586]; 19 C. C. A. 108; 31 L. R. A. 421]; Anson Cont. (1st Am. from 8th Eng. ed.), 266; Hampden v. Walsh, 1 Q. B. D. 189; Barclay v. Pearson, 2 Ch. 154; Leake Cont. (3 ed. Eng.) 672; Taylor v. Bowers, L. R., 1 Q. B. D. 291; 46 L. J. Q. B. 39; Lawson Cont., p. 54; Anson Cont. (4 ed.), 200; Harriman Cont. 130; Merz Capsule Co. v. Capsule Co., 67 Fed. Rep. 414; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Railway Co., 11 Fed. Rep. 1; Planters Bank v. Bank, 83 U. S. (16 Wall.) 483; Harding v. Glucose Co., 55 N.E. 577 [182 Ill. 551]; State v. Standard Oil Co., 49 Ohio St. 137 [30 N.E. 279]; 34 Am. St. Rep. 541]; Cook Corp. (4 ed.), Secs. 644, 645, 646, 647, 734, 735; [**6] Thompson Corp., Secs. 4471, 4476, 4477, 4479, 4511; Smith v. Hurd, 12 Metc. 371; 4 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law (1 ed.), 280, 281, and notes; Hawes v. Oakland, 104 U.S. 450; Huntington v. Palmer, 104 U.S. 482; Greenwood v. Freight Co., 105 U.S. 13; Taylor v. Miami Exp. Co., 5 Ohio, 162, 164, 167, 169 [22 Am. Dec. 785]; Goodwin v. Canal Co., 18 Ohio St. 169, 182, 183; Dodge v. Woolsey, 59 U. S. (18 How.) 342; Ware v. Grand Junction Co., 2 Russ. & M. 470; Gifford v. Railway Co., 10 N. J. Eq. 171; Stevens v. Railway, 29 Vt. 545; Bissell v. Railway, 22 N.Y. 258; Kean v. Johnson, 1 Stock Ch. 401; Field Corp., par. 141, 142; De Neufville v. Railway, 81 Fed. Rep. 10, 12, 13; Dannmeyer v. Coleman, 11 Fed. Rep. 97; Bell v. Donohue, 17 Fed. Rep. 710; Barnes v. Kornegay, 62 Fed. Rep. 671; Rogers v. Railway, 91 Fed. Rep. 299; Ball v. Railway, 93 Fed. 513; Farmers' L. & T. Co. v. Railway, 9 O. F. D. 230 [67 Fed. Rep. 49]; Hodges v. Screw Co., 1 R.I. 312 [53 Am. Dec. 624]; Robinson v. Smith, 3 Pai. Ch. (N. Y.) 222 [24 Am. Dec. 212]; Peabody v. Flint, 6 Ellen (Mass.) 52; Bremer v. Boston Theater, 104 Mass. 378; Hersey v. Veazie, 24 Me. 9 [41 Am. Dec. 364]; Smith v. Poor, 40 Me. 415 [63 Am. Dec. 1**71 672]; Kennebec, etc. Ry. v. Railway, 54 Me. 173, 181; Forbes v. Whitlock, 3 Edw. Chy. (N. Y.) 446; Greaves v. Gouge, 69 N.Y. 154; Butts v. Wood, 37 N.Y. 317; Barr v. Railway, 96 N.Y. 444; Ryan v. Railway, 21 Kas. 365; Brown v. Van Dyke, 8 N. J. Eq. 795 [55 Am. Dec. 250]; Knoop v. Bohmrick, 23 A. 118 [49 N. J. Eq. 82]; Allen v. Curtis, 26 Conn. 456; Chetlain v. Insurance Co., 86 Ill. 220; Wright v. Mining Co., 40 Cal. 20; Wickersham v. Crittenden, 28 P. 788 [93 Cal. 17]; Messina v. Goldwaite, 64 Tex. 125 [7 Am. Rep. 281]; Wallace v. Bank, 15 S.W. 448 [89 Tenn. 630]; 24 Am. St. Rep. 625]; Rothwell v. Robinson, 38 N.W. 772 [39 Minn. 1; 12 Am. St. Rep. 608]; Slattery v. Transportation Co., 4 S.W. 79, 91 Mo. 217; 60 Am. Rep. 245; Byers v. Rollins, 21 P. 894 [13 Colo. 22]; Miller v. Murray, 36 Fed. Rep. 627; Detroit v. Dean, 106 U.S. 537 [1 S. Ct. Rep. 560]; State v. Buckeye Pipe Line Co., 61 Ohio St. 520 [56 N.E. 464, 467]; Newby v. Railway, 1 Sawyer (U. S.), 63; Memphis v. Dean, 75 U. S. (8 Wall.) 64; La Grange v. State Treas., 24 Mich. 468, 473, 474; Armstrong v. Society, 13 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 552.

ARGUMENT.

The petitioner is not bound by the written contract between [**8] the parties, but may produce evidence establishing his allegations as to the surrounding circumstances, the conditions of trade in Ohio, the actual consummation of the consolidation, etc.: United States v. Hopkins, 82 Fed. Rep. 529; The New York Ice Trust Cases, Attorney General, In Re, 22 App. Div. 285; United States v. Pipe and Steel Co., 85 Fed. Rep. 271; State v. Insurance Co., 52 S.W. 595 [152 Mo. 1]; American Straw Board Co. v. Straw Board Co., 65 Ill. App. 502.

The constitutionality of the Valentine Trust Act as applied to the facts set forth in plaintiff's petition. State v. Buckeye Pipe Line Co., 61 Ohio St. 520 [56 N.E. 464]; United States v. Freight Assn., 166 U.S. 290 [17 S. Ct. Rep. 540]; United States v. Traffic Assn., [171 U.S. 505 19 S. Ct. Rep. 25]; State v. Oil Co., 49 Ohio St. 137 [30 N.E. 279]; 5 L.

12 Ohio Dec. 386, *386L 1902 Ohio Misc. LEXIS 18, **8

R. A. 145; 34 Am. St. Rep. 541]; Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Texas, 177 U.S. 28 [20 S. Ct. Rep. 518]; Lange v. Werk, 2 Ohio St. 520; Crawford v. Wick, 18 Ohio St. 190 [98 Am. Dec. 103]; Lufkin Rule Co. v. Fringeli, 57 Ohio St. 596 [49 N.E. 1030]; 41 L. R. A. 185; 63 Am. St. Rep. 736], disapproving Diamond Match Co. v. Roeber, 13 N.E. 419 [106 N.Y. 473]; [**9] 60 Am. Rep. 464]; National Harrow Co. v. Hench, 76 Fed. Rep. 667 [Aff., 83 Fed. Rep. 36; 27 C. C. A. 349]; National Harrow Co. v. Bement, 21 App. Div. 290; State v. Jacobs, 10 Dec. 252 (7 N. P. 261); Baily v. Association, 52 S.W. 853 [103 Tenn. 99]; 46 L. R. A. 561]; Central Ohio Salt Co. v. Guthrie, 35 Ohio St. 666, 672; Nester v. Brewing Co., 29 A. 102 [161 Pa. 473]; Moore v. Bennett, 29 N.E. 888 [140 Ill. 69; 15 L. R. A. 361; 33 Am. St. Rep. 216]; Texar Standard Cotton Oil Co. v. Adoue, 19 S.W. 274 [83 Tex. 650]; 15 L. R. A. 598; 29 Am. St. Rep. 690]; Dunphy v. Newspaper Assn., 16 N.E. 426 [146 Mass. 495].

The Valentine act is constitutional: State v. Buckeye Pipe Line Co., 61 Ohio St. 520 [56 N.E. 464].

Irrespective of the statute, contracts in restraint of trade are void: Crawford v. Wick, 18 Ohio St. 190 [98 Am. Dec. 103]; Lange v. Werk, 2 Ohio St. 520; Central Ohio Salt Co. v. Guthrie, 35 Ohio St. 666; Scofield v. Railway Co., 43 Ohio St. 571 [3 N.E. 907]; Emery v. Candle Co., 47 Ohio St. 320 [24 N.E. 660]; 21 Am. St. Rep. 819]; State v. Standard Oil Co., 49 Ohio St. 137 [30 N.E. 279]; 34 Am. St. Rep. 541]; Field Cordage Co. v. National Cordage Co., [**10] 3 Circ. Dec. 613 (6 R. 615); Paragon Oil Co. v. Hall, 4 Circ. Dec. 576 (7 R. 240); Lufkin Rule Co. v. Fringeli, 57 Ohio St. 596 [49 N.E. 1030]; 41 L. R. A. 185; 63 Am. St. Rep. 736].

The contract is ultra vires: Painesville & H. Ry. v. King, 17 Ohio St. 535; Elevator Co. v. Railway, 5 S.W. 52 [85 Tenn. 703]; 4 Am. St. Rep. 798]; Strauss v. Insurance Co., 5 Ohio St. 60; Hayes v. Gas Light & Coke Co., 29 Ohio St. 330; Bank v. Flour Co., 41 Ohio St. 552; Central Ohio Gas & Fuel Co. v. Capital City Dairy Co., 60 Ohio St. 96 [53 N.E. 711]; City of Findlay v. Pendleton, 62 Ohio St. 80 [56 N.E. 649]; Benedict v. Bank, 6 Dec. 320 [4 N. P. 231]; Andres v. Morgan, 62 Ohio St. 236 [56 N.E. 875]; Shaw v. Installation Co., 10 Re. 233 (19 Bull. 292); Hill v. Hotel Co., 11 Re. 281 (25 Bull. 425); Vos v. Building Assn., 8 Re. 682 (9 Bull. 194); Pearce v. Railway, 62 U.S. (21 How.) 441; Thomas v. Railway, 101 U.S. 71; Central Trans. Co. v. Car Co., 139 U.S. 24 [11 S. Ct. Rep. 478].

As to whether plaintiff is entitled to relief in this case: Norton v. Blinn, 39 Ohio St. 145, 148; Emery v. Ohio Candle Co., 47 Ohio St. 322 [24 N.E. 660]; 2 Am. St. Rep. 819; Kihlken] v. Kihlken, 59 Ohio [**11] St. 121 [51 N.E. 969]; Rogers v. Corre, 6 Circ. Dec. 602 (10 R. 346); Moore v. Cassily, 9 Circ. Dec. 505 (16 R. 708); Barrett v. Neill, Wright, 472; Townsend v. Bogert, 27 N.E. 555 [126 N.Y. 370; 22 Am. St. Rep. 835]; Wallace v. Bank, 15 S.W. 448 [89 Tenn. 630]; 24 Am. St. Rep. 625]; Baldwin v. Canfield, 1 N.W. 261 [26 Minn. 43]; Wickersham v. Crittenden, 28 P. 788 [93 Cal. 17]; Currier v. Railway, 35 Hun. 355; Slattery v. Transportation Co., 4 S.W. 79 [91 Mo. 217]; 60 Am. Rep. 245; Peabody v. Flint, 6 Allen [Mass.] 52, 57; Ribon v. Railway Co., 83 U.S. (16 Wall.) 446.

There are a large number of cases in Ohio and elsewhere which say that no relief will be given to either party to an illegal agreement, but such cases are supported by the proposition that one party or the other seeks relief based upon the affirmance of the illegal agreement: Goudy v. Gebhart, 1 Ohio St. 262; Trimble v. Doty, 16 Ohio St. 119; Hooker v. De Palos, 28 Ohio St. 251; Cooper v. Rowley, 29 Ohio St. 547; Harper v. Crain, 36 Ohio St. 338, 343 [38 Am. Rep. 589]; Kahn v. Walton, 46 Ohio St. 195 [20 N.E. 203]; Insurance Co. v. Hull, 51 Ohio St. 270 [37 N.E. 1116; 46 Am. St. Rep. 571]; Markley [**12] v. Mineral City, 58 Ohio St. 430 [51 N.E. 28; 65 Am. St. Rep. 776]; Shirey v. Ulsh, 1 Circ. Dec. 554 (2 R. 401); Carter v. Lily, 2 Circ. Dec. 204 [3 R. 364]; Railroad Co. v. Morris, 6 Circ. Dec. 640 (10 R. 502); Spring Co. v. Knowlton, 103 U.S. 49; Irwin v. Williar, 110 U.S. 499 [4 S. Ct. Rep. 160]; Gibbs v. Gas Co., 130 U.S. 396 [9 S. Ct. Rep. 553] Merz Capsule Co. v. Capsule Co., 67 Fed. Rep. 414; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Transportation Co., 65 Fed. Rep. 158; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Transportation Co., 171 U.S. 138 [18 S. Ct. Rep. 808]; Harding v. Glucose Co., 55 N.E. 577 [182 Ill. 551]; Levin v. Gas Light Co., 64 Ill. App. 393; Schubert v. Gas Light Co., 41 Ill. App. 181; Griffin v. Piper, 55 Ill. App. 213; Pratt v. Short, 79 N.Y. 437 [35 Am. Rep. 531]; Cameron v. Havemeyer, 25 Abb. (N. C.) 438; Vulcan Powder Co. v. Hercules Powder Co., 31 P. 581 [96 Cal. 510; 31 Am. St. Rep. 242]; Radcliffe v. Smith, 76 Ky. 172; Anthony v. Household S. M. Co., 18 A. 176 [16 R.I. 571; 5 L. R. A. 575].

A different rule prevails, however, where the party repents in due season, asks to withdraw from the contract, does withdraw from it, tenders back what he has received, and [**13] asks restitution of what is his. If the repentance comes in due season, and restitution can be made, courts will take jurisdiction of the matter and grant the relief. This is especially so where the movement is made on behalf of and for the benefit of stockholders who took no part in and had no knowledge of the transaction: Eddy Combinations, Secs. 1138, 1139, 1140; Leslie v. Lorillard, 40 Hun. 392; Sampson v. Shaw, 11 Mass. 145 [3 Am. Rep. 327]; Wells v. McGeoch, 35 N.W. 769 [71 Wis. 196]; Clancy v. Salt Mfg. Co., 62 Barb. 395; Nester v. Brewing Co., 29 A. 102 [161 Penn. St. 473]; 24 L. R. A. 247; 41 Am. St. Rep. 894]; Wright v. Cudahy, 48 N.E. 39 [168 Ill. 86]; Richardson v. Buhl, 43 N.W. 1102 [77 Mich. 632]; 6 L. R. A. 457].

Ultra Vires: Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Transportation Co., 11 S. Ct. Rep. 478; Atlantic & Pac. Tel. Co. v. Railway, 1 Fed. Rep. 745; New-castle Northern Ry. v. Simpson, 23 Fed. Rep. 214; Memphis & L. R. R. Co. v. Dow, 19 Fed. Rep. 388; Bissell v. Railway, 22 N.Y. 258; Mallory v. Oil Works, 8 S.W. 396 [86 Tenn. 598]; Thomas v. Railroad Co., 101 U.S. 71, 86; Northwestern Union Packet Co. v. Shaw, 37 Wis. 655 [19 Am. Rep. 781]; Miners Ditch Co. [**14] v. Zellerbach, 37 Cal. 543; Davis v. Railway, 131 Mass. 258; Long v. Railway, 8 So. 706 [91 Ala. 519]; Boyce v. Coal Co., 16 S.E. 501 [37 W. Va. 73]; Day v. Buggy Co., 23 N.W. 628 [57 Mich. 146].

Outhwaite, Linn & Thurman, for plaintiff, cited:

This petition states a cause of action under the Valentine Act and under the common law: State v. Oil Co., 49 Ohio St. 137 [30 N.E. 279]; 15 L. R. A. 145; 34 Am. St. Rep. 541].

As to whether the plaintiff is entitled to relief: Central Transportation Co. v. Car Co., 139 U.S. 24 [11 S. Ct. Rep. 478]; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Transportation Co., 171 U.S. 138 [18 S. Ct. Rep. 808]; Thomas v. Railway Co., 101 U.S. 71; Spring Co. v. Knowlton, 103 U.S. 49; De Neufville v. Railway Co., 81 Fed. Rep. 10 [51 U. S. App. 374]; 26 C. C. A. 306]; New Castle & N. Ry. v. Simpson, 21 Fed. Rep. 533; Merz Capsule Co. v. Capsule Co., 67 Fed. Rep. 414.

Action by non-assenting stockholders: Dodge v. Woolsey, 59 U.S. (18 How.) 331; Hawes v. Oakland, 104 U.S. 450; Sims v. Street Ry., 37 Ohio St. 556, 565; Day v. Buggy Co., 23 N.W. 28 [57 Mich. 146]; Taylor v. Railway Co., 13 Fed. Rep. 152; Kent v. Mining Co., 78 N. Y 159; Beach on Priv. Corp. [**15], Sec. 433.

John H. Clarke, for defendants, cited:

The public policy of Ohio in dealing with parties to an illegal contract: Kahn v. Walton, 46 Ohio St. 195 [20 N.E. 203]; Hooker v. De Palos, 28 Ohio St. 251; Williams v. Englebrecht, 37 Ohio St. 383; Markley v. Mineral City, 58 Ohio St. 430 [51 N.E. 28]; 65 Am. St. Rep. 776].

Henderson, Quail & Siddall, for defendant, cited:

The plaintiff is presumed to be authorized to transact its business in the state of Ohio: Brady v. Palmer, 10 Circ. Dec. 27 (19 R. 687).

The plaintiff is not entitled to relief on account of the pledge of the United Salt Company's stock: 5 Thompson on Corporations, Sec. 6172; Macomb v. Association, 31 N.E. 613 [134 N.Y. 598]; McMurray v. St. Louis, etc., Co., 33 Mo. 377; Greenpoint Sugar Co. v. Whitin, 69 N.Y. 328; Coman v. Lackey, 80 N.Y. 345; Jones on Pledges & Col. Sec., Secs. 4, 12, 14; Robinson v. Fitch, 26 Ohio St. 659; Root v. Davis, 51 Ohio St. 29 [36 N.E. 669]; 23 L. R. A. 445]; Vanstone v. Goodwin, 42 Mo. App. 39; Mechanics, etc., Ass'n v. Conover, 14 N.J. Eq. 219; Wilson v. Little, 2 N.Y. (2 Comst.) 443 [51 Am. Dec. 307]; Hermann v. Car Trust Co., 101 Fed. Rep. 41 [41 C. C. A. [**16] 176].

Virgil P. Kline, on demurrer:

The constitutionality of the Valentine trust act as applied to agreement set forth in plaintiff's petition: State v. Buckeye Pipe Line Co., 61 Ohio St. 520 [56 N.E. 464]; Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Texas, 177 U.S. 28 [20 S. Ct. Rep. 518]; section 1 of the Bill of Rights of the Constitution of Ohio; section 19 of the Constitution; Meredith v. Zinc & Iron Co., 37 A. 539 [55 N.J. Eq. 211]; Marsh v. Russell, 66 N.Y. 288; Lorillard v. Clyde, 86 N.Y. 384; Central Shade Roller Co. v. Cushman, 9 N.E. 629 [143 Mass. 353]; Diamond Match Co. v. Roeber, 13 N.E. 419 [106 N.Y. 473]; 60 Am. Rep. 464]; Leslie v. Lorillard, 18 N.E. 363 [110 N.Y. 519 534; 1 L. R. A. 456]; Matthews v. Associated Press, 32

12 Ohio Dec. 386, *386L A 902 Ohio Misc. LEXIS 18, **16

N.E. 981 [136 N.Y. 333]; 32 Am. St. Rep. 741]; Jones v. Fell, 5 Fla. 510, 515; Railroad Tax Cases, 13 Fed. Rep. 722, 743; United States v. Pipe & Steel Co., 85 Fed. Rep. 271; Coquard v. Oil Co., 49 N.E. 563 [171 Ill. 480].

Even if the contract is illegal, is the plaintiff entitled to the relief prayed for? 1 Pomeroy on Eq. Jurisp., p. 397; Moore v. Adams, 8 Ohio, 372 [32 Am. Dec. 723]; Roll v. Raguet, 4 Ohio, 400, 418 [22 Am. Dec. 759]; [**17] Raguet v. Roll, 7 Ohio (pt. 1) 76, 77; 2 Kent's Commentaries, 366; 2 Stack Ev. 87; Hooker v. De Palos, 28 Ohio St. 251; Kahn v. Walton, 46 Ohio St. 195 [20 N.E. 203]; Insurance Co. v. Hull, 51 Ohio St. 270 [37 N.E. 1116]; 25 L. R. A. 37; 46 Am. St. Rep. 571]; St. Louis, V. & T. H. Ry. Co. v. Railway Co., 145 U.S. 393 [12 S. Ct. Rep. 953].

Plaintiff cannot avoid its agreement on the ground of its being ultra vires: Dunhene v. Insurance Co., 12 Re. 608 (1 Dis. 257, 261); Royal British Bank v. Turquand, 6 L. & B. L. 325, 330; Miners' Ditch Co. v. Zellerbach, 37 Cal. 543 [99 Am. Dec. 30]; Miller v. Insurance Co., 21 S.W. 39 [92 Tenn. 167]; 20 L. R. A. 765, 771]; Bissell v. Railway Co., 22 N.Y. 258, 290; Farmers' & Mech. Bank v. Bank, 16 N.Y. 125 (69 Am. Dec. 673); Hill v. Hotel Co., 11 Re. 281 (25 Bull. 425); Bosche v. Horse Co., 7 Circ. Dec. 374 (14 R. 289); Larwill v. Fund Society, 40 Ohio St. 274, 284; Hays v. Gas Light & Coal Co., 29 Ohio St. 330, 340; Armstrong v. Karshner, 47 Ohio St. 276, 296 [24 N.E. 897].

Brief for defendant, William A. Dutton.

If the agreement which is made is within the clear legal rights of the parties, the intent of the transaction cannot [**18] affect the validity: Letts v. Kessler, 54 Ohio St. 73, 82 [42 N.E. 765]; 40 L. R. A. 177]; Cincinnati Volksblatt Co. v. Hoffmeister, 62 Ohio St. 189 [56 N.E. 1033]; Kelley v. Ohio Oil Co., 57 Ohio St. 317, 328 [49 N.E. 399]; 39 L. R. A. 765; 63 Am. St. Rep. 721].

Guaranteeing of dividends: Cramer v. Lepper, 26 Ohio St. 59 [20 Am. Dec. 756]; Union Bank v. Bell, 14 Ohio St. 200, 210; Jones v. Insurance Co., 40 Ohio St. 583.

Laches: Taylor v. Railway Co., 13 Fed. Rep. 152, 157, 159; Credit Co. v. Railway Co., 15 Fed. Rep. 46, 47 (Clause 5 of syllabus 53, clause 8 of syllabus 55, and clauses 3 and 4 of syllabi 155, 157, 159).

Upon the claim of plaintiff that the contract is not executed, but that the property is still in the hands of a stakeholder: 2 Rapalje's Law Dictionary, "stakeholder;" Fisher v. Hildreth, 117 Mass. 562.

Judges: STONE, J.

Opinion by: STONE

Opinion

---

[*394] STONE, J.

This case is before the court on demurrer to the petition, the grounds of the demurrer being:

1. A misjoinder of parties defendant.
2. Several causes of action are improperly joined.
3. Separate causes of action against several defendants are improperly joined.
4. The petition does not [**19] state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

The petition alleges in substance that the National Salt Company is a corporation, organized under the laws of the state of New Jersey, to manufacture and sell salt, with power to act outside of that state, and was engaged in selling salt in the state of Ohio, and as such was a competitor to the defendant, the United Salt Company; that the United Salt [*395] Company is an Ohio corporation and was under its charter engaged in the business of producing, manufacturing and selling salt in the state of Ohio, and was a competitor of the plaintiff in said business within the state of Ohio, and in so operating its business was able to and did control more than seventy-five per cent. of the salt business within the state of Ohio; that the American Trust Company is an Ohio corporation, and that the defendant stockholders were owners of the United Salt Company stock and received certain certificates of indebtedness issued by the National Salt Company, countersigned by the American Trust Company; that the plaintiff brings the action on request of certain of its stockholders who have never assented to the transaction, and on its own [**20] behalf; that the plaintiff, The National Salt Company, and the defendant. The United Salt Company, and defendant stockholders, desiring to combine their capital stock and acts to create and carry out restrictions in the trade in salt within the state of Ohio and to limit or reduce within the state of Ohio the production of salt and to increase or reduce the price of said commodity within this state and to prevent competition within this state in manufacturing, making, producing, transporting, selling or purchasing salt, made and entered into in the manner and form hereinafter stated certain alleged agreements, by which the plaintiff and the United Salt Company and the defendant stockholders, agreed to pool, combine and unite within the state of Ohio said interests which they and each of them had connected with the sale and transportation of said common article (salt), that its price in the state of Ohio might be affected; that in order to carry out this intention and purpose, the plaintiff and defendant stockholders, on September 22, 1899, executed the written documents, copies of which are annexed to the petition.

The plaintiff sets out the transaction in substance as follows: An [**21] agreement on the part of the National Salt Company and the stockholders of the United Salt Company whereby the United Salt Company stockholders agree to exchange the shares of stock held by them in the United Salt Company for the shares of stock in the National Salt Company, together with a cash consideration or payment on the basis of one share of stock of the United Salt Company in exchange for one and one-fourth share of the common and one and one-fourth shares of the preferred stock of the National Salt Company, the cash consideration being $ 106.25 per share.

The United Salt Company stockholders transferred their stock to the National Salt Company, which latter endorsed it in blank, and deposited with the American Trust Company as trustee or depositary, this stock being of the par value of $ 993,400, to be delivered to the National Salt Company, when the National Salt Company had performed certain other covenants and had paid $ 1,055,489.50 in cash, in ten equal semi-annual installments represented by certain debt certificates issued by the National Salt Company to the United Salt Company stockholders. [*396] The stock certificates so deposited with the American Trust Company [**22] were endorsed in blank by the United Salt Company.

The National Salt Company deposited with the American Trust Company as trustee $ 1,250,000 par value of its preferred stock and $ 1,250,000 par value of its common stock, to be delivered to the former stockholders of the United Salt Company after the dividends declared thereon had been applied to reduce the cash payment agreed to be paid, which was to be paid in ten equal semi-annual installments beginning January 1, 1900, the agreement and option being dated July 20, 1899, and the option exercised October 2, 1899. That pending the payment of this cash consideration the United Salt Company stock was deposited with the American Trust Company as trustee, to secure the due performance on the part of the National Salt Company of its agreement to pay the United Salt Company stockholders the $ 106.25 per share in money.

The stock of the National Salt Company to which the stockholders were entitled under this agreement was also deposited with the American Trust Company as trustee to hold until the full payment of the consideration, so as to secure to the National Salt Company the application of the dividends paid on such stock during the [**23] time of the running of the ten semi-annual installments.

It is alleged that the American Trust Company accepted the trust and is now acting thereunder.

It is also alleged that the National Salt Company issued its certificates of common and preferred stock to the amount of one and one-fourth shares of preferred stock and one and one-fourth shares of common stock for each share of the stock of the United Salt Company, to W. T. Hunter, the nominee of the American Trust Company, and such certificates were deposited with the American Trust Company as trustee. The American Trust Company then issued trust certificates to the defendant stockholders, certifying that after the National Salt Company had paid the cash consideration and after the dividends had been properly applied, they would be entitled to the stock from it. It is alleged that three installments have been paid on the certificates of indebtedness.

It is alleged that while the transaction between plaintiff and defendants, the United Salt Company and the defendant stockholders, took the form of the alleged agreements set forth in the petition, the real transaction was as hereinbefore set forth, and that the pretended purchase [**24] and sale of all of the stock issued and outstanding of the United Salt Company in exchange for cash and stock of the National Salt Company was for the purpose of combining the business of the United Salt Company and the National Salt Company in the state of Ohio into one combination and under one control, with a view and intent and for the purpose of restraining trade in said commodity in said state and preventing the competition theretofore existing between plaintiff and the United [*397] Salt Company in the purchase and sale of salt in the state of Ohio, so that they might be enabled to control, increase and decrease the price of salt in the state of Ohio at will; that in order to conceal the real object and purpose of the transaction and for the purpose of avoiding the antitrust law of the state of Ohio, and to avoid the appearance of corporate action on the part of both companies, the transaction took the form of a purchase and sale or exchange between the individual stockholders of the United Salt Company and plaintiff; that in order to further conceal the real object and purpose of the transaction, it was agreed that the business of the combination should be conducted in [**25] the name of the United Salt Company, and thereafter said business of said combination was so conducted in the state of Ohio. That thereafter and from September, 22, 1899, said combination between plaintiff and defendants became and was complete and effective, and thereafter and by reason of said combination in the sale of salt in the state of Ohio between plaintiff and the United Salt Company ceased and the trade in said commodity was thereafter restricted in the state of Ohio.

That the alleged agreement providing for a cash payment of $ 106.25 per share for each share of the United Salt Company and the issuing of certificates of indebtedness was a mere subterfuge, the real agreement being that the National Salt Company should make a guarantee of seven per cent. upon its preferred stock and ten per cent. upon its common stock to the stockholders of the United Salt Company who received that stock in exchange for the United Salt Company stock, and that thereby a preference was given to those stockholders over and above the stock in the National Salt Company held by the other stockholders therein, and that such making of preferred stock and guaranteeing of a dividend thereon was [**26] without power on plaintiff's part to make and was void.

It is further alleged that under the terms of the deposit of stock of the United Salt Company by the National Salt Company with the American Trust Company, such stock can be sold in case of default in payment of any of the installments of the cash consideration; and that the plaintiff's charter provided that no mortgage shall be created without first obtaining the consent in writing of the holders of seventy-five per cent. of the preferred stock outstanding at the time, and also the like consent of the holders of seventy-five per cent. of the common stock, and that no such consent was given to mortgage this stock, and the same is ultra vires and void.

It is averred that said alleged agreement were and are of no effect, are still executory and have not been executed, and being void and of no effect and being still unexecuted, plaintiff, on behalf of said requesting stockholders and on behalf of all of its stockholders as well as of itself, offers to release and relinquish to the defendants and each of them [*398] or their nominees or assigns, all interests or rights pretended to be transferred to it by said alleged agreements.

[**27] The plaintiff therefore prays that the alleged agreements may be declared null and void, that the parties be placed in their original position by a return of the United Salt stock to the United Salt Company stockholders, and by a return of the National Salt Company stock to the National Salt Company, and for other relief.

The first ground of demurrer is a misjoinder of parties defendant.

HN1 [↑] Section 5006, Rev. Stat., provides: "Any person may be made a defendant who has or claims an interest in the controversy adverse to the plaintiff, or who is a necessary party to a complete determination or settlement of a question involved therein."

This is an action in equity, and relief is sought against the trustee, the American Trust Company, the defendant stockholders of the United Salt Company, as well as against all parties who had acquired interests in any of the property delivered under the agreement prior to the commencement of the suit. If relief is had against the trustee, the other defendants are interested in the nature and extent of that relief, because it will affect each of them. If the plaintiff is entitled to relief against the stockholders, the trustee, who is a stakeholder, [**28] is an essential party to make it effective. If relief is granted against the certificate holders, both the trustee and the stockholders are necessary parties, that full relief may be had and a determination of their respective rights secured. It is reasonably clear that no defendant is joined who has not an interest in the controversy adverse to the plaintiff and who is not a proper party to a determination of the questions involved. We think the claim of misjoinder is not well taken.

Neither does it appear to the court that there are several causes of action improperly joined in this petition. The petition states one cause of action.

HN2[] Under Sec. 5019, Rev. Stat.: "The plaintiff may unite several causes of action in the same petition, whether they are such as have heretofore been denominated legal or equitable or both, when they are included in either of the following classes: (1) "The same transaction," (2) "or transactions connected with the same subject of action."

The petition, in our opinion, treats of one transaction, or one transaction is the subject of the action.

Neither does it appear to the court that separate causes of action against several defendants are improperly [**29] joined. There is no separate cause of action against several defendants, and therefore there can be no improper joinder, in the opinion of the court. There is but one cause of action, an action in equity that concerns a number of parties and against whom relief is sought, arising out of the same transactions, and in a sense, may be regarded as an action for an accounting and for relief, as it affects all the parties to the transaction. The subject is the alleged [*399] illegal contract entered into between the plaintiff and the defendants, and it is not perceivable to the court that separate causes of action are here improperly joined, within the meaning of our statute.

This brings me to the consideration of the really important question presented by the demurrer, namely, does the petition state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action? The defendants claim the petition does not, for the reasons, (1) that the act entitled "An act to define trusts," etc., 93 O. L., page 143, Sec. 4427-1, Rev. Stat., et seq., commonly called the Valentine anti-trust--law is unconstitutional, and (2) that if the law is constitutional, the plaintiff is in pari delicto with the defendants [**30] and not entitled to relief and that the court must in this and in cases involving illegal contracts, leave the parties where it finds them, by dismissing the petition.

The validity of this act was challenged in [State v. Pipe Line Co., 61 Ohio St. 520 \[56 N.E. 464\]](#), and was sustained.

The language of the syllabus in that case is as follows:

"The act entitled HN3[] 'An act to define trusts, etc.,' 93 O. L., page 143, in so far as it forbids independent corporations to enter into combinations to restrict competition in trade with a view to exacting from consumers higher prices than would prevail under the conditions of open competition, is an exercise of legislative power not repugnant to any limitation prescribed by either the state or federal constitution."

It is urged by counsel for the defendants that the case at bar is one involving a contract for the ordinary purchase and sale of property, and that this decision does not cover such a transaction as this. It will be observed that the petition follows very closely the language of the Valentine act, and, so far as applicable, the precedent for such a petition in State v. Pipe Line Co., supra, as well as in [State v. I\*\*31 Standard Oil Co., 49 Ohio St. 137 \[30 N.E. 279\]](#); 15 L. R. A. 145; 34 Am. St. Rep. 541. The pleader has taken the language of the Valentine act to plead a combination and trust, and inserted allegations to the effect that the whole transaction was for the purpose of combining the business of two parties and restraining trade and preventing competition so that they might be enabled to control and increase or decrease the price and production of salt within the state of Ohio at will. That "it was agreed among themselves that the business of the combination to be effected by them should be conducted in the name of the United Salt Company, and thereafter said business of said combination was so conducted in the state of Ohio." Further, "thereafter by reason of said combination competition in the sale of salt in the state of Ohio between plaintiff and said United Salt Company ceased, and the trade in said commodity was thereafter restricted in the state of Ohio."

Furthermore it is alleged that the United Salt Company, one of the parties to this consolidation or combination, before the consolidation, controlled more than seventy-five per cent. of [**32] the salt business within [*400] the state of Ohio; that the parties made a combination by exchanging their stock, thereby combining the two enterprises into one and carrying on the business under the name of the United Salt Company; that the competition between the parties ceased and that the trade in said commodity was thereafter restricted. With these allegations in the petition, the truth of which is admitted by the demurrer, it can not well be contended that the record presents a mere case of a sale of stock in one company to another company, a former competitor, whereby incidentally and only incidentally the former competition ceased. The transaction set forth in the petition is an unlawful agreement to affect the trade in Ohio, carried out by an exchange of securities, and that the agreement has been carried out to the extent stated and has had its effect on that trade. To what extent the allegations of this petition can be sustained upon the trial of the case and to what extent the agreements referred to in the petition and which are annexed to the petition but not made a part of it will sustain the averments of the petition is not the question before the court, but simply [**33] whether the admitted facts present a case that brings it within the Valentine act. Taking this petition as it stands, we cannot avoid the conclusion that the case is within the provisions of this law and that the decision of the Supreme Court in State v. Pipe Line Co., supra, is decisive and controlling as to the constitutional question presented upon this demurrer.

Chief Justice Shauck, in announcing the opinion, says in part:

"We do not, however, deem it necessary or prudent to pass upon all objections which are urged against the act. It is quite familiar doctrine that in determining the constitutional validity of statutes their different provisions are not necessarily subject to the same conclusion. They are not, unless they constitute a single scheme, and are so interdependent that it could not be rationally presumed that any of them would have been made if it had not been supposed that all could be enforced. The application of this doctrine to the act before us is quite clear in view of the differences in the nature of the several combinations which are forbidden and in the character of those against whom the prohibition is directed. * * *

"We are, therefore, to consider [**34] only those provisions of the act which are relevant to the cases before us. * * * The agreement, according to the allegations of the petition, has no purpose whatever except to prevent competition in the production, transportation and refining of petroleum, to the end that there may be received from the consumers if its products higher prices than would prevail under the condition of open competition. Counsel for defendants admit that such a contract is within the inhibitions of the act, but deny the power of the legislature to inhibit it. * * * The definite proposition of counsel upon this point is that although the act is an exercise of legislative power, it transcends the provisions of the state and federal constitutions which [*401] render inviolable the rights of liberty and property, which include the right to make contracts. It would be difficult to place too high an estimate upon these guaranties, and they include the right to make contracts. But it is settled that these guaranties are themselves limited by the public welfare or the exercise of the police power. Although that power may not be conclusively defined, its nature and attributes have been the subject of much [**35] investigation. In all considerate discussions of the subject it is conceded that in the exercise of this power the legislature can prohibit only those uses of property which are hurtful to the public, and the inhibited use must be hurtful in a legal sense. That contracts like these are hurtful in that sense has been held in more cases than it would be practicable to cite. They abound throughout nearly three centuries of the development and administration of the common law in England and America. We cite, because of their full consideration of the subject and their direct application to legislation of this character, United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Association, 166 U.S. 290, 41 L. Ed. 1007, 17 S. Ct. 540; United States v. Joint Traffic Association, 171 U.S. 505, 43 L. Ed. 259, 19 S. Ct. 25; United States v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co., 175 U.S. 211, 44 L. Ed. 136, 20 S. Ct. 96. "These cases," says the Judge, "are applicable, since the provisions of the federal anti-trust statute are not substantially different from those of the Ohio act which are brought under consideration in these cases and there is no substantial difference between the [**36] contracts or constitutional provisions involved. That the contracts there considered were in restraint of commerce between states, served only to bring the subject within federal jurisdiction. The considerations affecting the validity of the legislation are in all respects as applicable here as there. Since the contract alleged in these petitions is for the sole purpose of restraining trade or limiting competition, we find no decision which doubts that they are in a legal sense hurtful to the public. * * * Such contracts have been uniformly held to be unlawful."

The allegations of this petition contain the usual averments that are to be found in most of these contracts which the courts have so uniformly held to be unlawful. Whether these averments are sustained and justified by the written agreements which are annexed to the petition it is not our province to inquire for the agreements are not made a part of the petition, and we look to the petition only in determining whether it states a cause of action.

As stated by the Supreme Court in the case just considered, the anti-trust laws of the United States and of various states are not materially different in their provisions. The [**37] anti-trust law of Illinois varies in no essential particular from the Valentine act, indeed they may be said to be almost identical in arrangement and phraseology, and the Supreme Court of Illinois, in Harding v. Glucose Co., 182 Ill. 551 /55 N.E. 577, had occasion to consider the character of the anti-trust law in that state, in an action brought by individual stockholders [*402] to prevent a combination and a consolidation of competing corporations. Six different companies or partnerships, for the purpose of combining in one company, the business of manufacturing glucose, entered into agreements or gave options for the sale of their respective properties to the company to be organized under the laws of New Jersey, I believe, with a capital of forty million dollars. These contracts and agreements made provision as to how compensation should be made, either in money or in stocks, common and preferred, of the consolidated company. All these contracts, agreements and options were deposited with the Illinois Trust Company as trustee, as incidental to the carrying out of the scheme and plan proposed. The plaintiffs, who were dissenting stockholders in one of the constituent [**38] companies owning and operating a glucose plant, at Peoria, Illinois, brought an action to enjoin the carrying out of the proposed consolidation. The bill contained the usual averments to be found in this class of actions involving anti-trust law. The court, upon full hearing, sustained the petition and granted the relief sought. The court, among other things, held as follows: (I read from the fifth subdivision of the syllabus.)

HN4 [↑] "A trust is created where a majority of the stockholders in competing corporations consolidated their interest by conveying all their property to a corporation organized for the purpose of taking their property, when the necessary consequence of the combination is to control prices, limit production or suppress competition in such a way as to create a monopoly."

Further quoting from the syllabus:

"The public policy of the state of Illinois has always been against trusts and combinations organized for the purpose of suppressing competition and creating monopoly."

Undoubtedly the public policy of Ohio has been against trusts and combinations in restraint of trade. This public policy has found expression judicially in the case of *Central Ohio Salt Co. v. Guthrie, 1**391 35 Ohio St. 666; Emery v. Ohio Candle Co., 47 Ohio St. 320 /24 N.E. 660*; 21 Am. St. Rep. 819]; State v. Oil Co. 49 Ohio St. 137, 167 /30 N.E. 279; 15 L. R. A. 145; 34 Am. St. Rep. 541], and other cases that might be cited. It has found legislative expression and sanction in the passage of the so-called Valentine act.

Counsel for the defendants, in support of their contention, have cited very many cases which they deem applicable to this case, in which courts in different jurisdictions have held certain combinations or consolidations of persons and partnerships to be perfectly valid and lawful. We think this case and the question involved in it, must be determined and decided in view of the legislation of this state and the judicial interpretation made there under, or in other states upon similar laws.

This petition, in the opinion of the court, sets up a state of facts and has the important averments that are to be found in any of the [*403] cases to which my attention has been called where judicial construction has been given to anti-trust laws considered and, I believe, uniformly sustained. [**40] I see no ground for distinction between the allegations in this petition and those to be found in the cases to which I have referred. We are of the opinion that the decision of the Supreme Court sustaining the Valentine act is a decision binding and conclusive upon the question presented here. It would be presumptuous, probably, for an inferior court, in view of this decision and the facts as stated in this petition, to reach any other conclusion, especially so in the light of the well recognized rule that the court will not declare laws unconstitutional unless they are manifestly and clearly so.

2. Is the plaintiff in pari delicto with the defendants, and, therefore, not entitled to the relief prayed for? Counsel for defendants contend that the petition shows such a state of facts and contains such averments, that they are entitled to invoke in their behalf the principle announced in Hooker v. De Palos, 28 Ohio St. 251, and Kahn v. Walton, 46 Ohio St. 195 [20 N.E. 203], namely, that in regard to contracts that are entered into for fraudulent or illegal purposes, the law will aid neither party to enforce them, while they remain executory either in whole [**41] or in part, nor when executed will it aid either party to place himself in statu quo by a rescission, but will, in both cases, leave the parties where it finds them.

In Hooker v. De Palos, supra, it is held that HN5↑ the law will not aid a party to such contract, that is, an illegal contract, either in its enforcement while it is executory or in its rescission when it is executed. When such contract has been partially performed by both parties so that the evil purpose of the contract has been in part effected by the co-operation of both parties, then as to such part performance the condition of the parties is the same as though the contract had been fully executed. The parties are in pari delicto, and the law will not aid either of them in enforcing performance or in undoing what has been done; hence, under such circumstances, the vendee can not maintain an action to recover from the vendor the money paid on the contract.

In the Walton case the holding is that a plaintiff who founds his cause of action on an illegal or immoral act has no standing in a court of equity, and where both parties have been engaged in an unlawful transaction, the court will neither lend its active [**42] aid to the one party to get rid of the securities taken upon such transaction nor assist the other party in retaining them, but will leave both to their strict legal rights.

Other cases have been cited in support of this general doctrine, but these sufficiently illustrate the principle involved.

There is an exception to the general rule, which is stated in the language of the court in Hooker v. De Palos, supra, namely, HN6↑ so long as the illegal acts contemplated by such contracts remain wholly unexecuted, the party who has paid money to obtain their performance may [*404] repent of the wrongful purpose, abandon his contract and recover back the money so paid. The law will aid him in such a case in the furtherance of a policy which aims to prevent wrongdoing by encouraging such repentance and abandonment.

This action is brought, not to recover upon the contract, but for a rescission and through rescission to bring about a surrender to the respective parties the property or securities that were the subject of the transaction. The petition alleges that the contract is executory, although, in considering the averments of the petition in other respects, it is clear enough that [**43] the contract has been in part executed. Money has been paid on account of it to parties to this suit. The contention of the defendants is that it has been in the main, if not wholly, executed. We are of the opinion that the contract is in a large measure executory. The stock of the National Salt Company designed ultimately for delivery to the defendant stockholders was issued in the name of Sanford, nominee of the American Trust Company, and is in possession of the trust company. The shares of stock in the United Salt Company, upon delivery to the National Salt Company, were immediately endorsed in blank and delivered to the American Trust Company as security for the performance of certain features of the contract on the part of the National Salt Company, and it is alleged in the petition that the stock thus pledged as security is subject to sale by the trustee in case of default on the part of the National Salt Company in the payment of certain obligations arising under the contract. Neither party is in possession of the fruits of this contract. All of the securities which were the subject of sale or exchange, are in the possession of the trustee, subject to be so held for a period [**44] of five years from the date of the contract.

But passing this question as to the extent to which this contract is executory, we may inquire, do the principles announced in the cases to which I have just called attention apply in this case, or is there a clear distinction to be drawn between these cases and the case at bar?

Is the plaintiff in pari delicto? The demurrer admits that the suit is brought on the demand of certain non-consenting stockholders of the National Salt Company, and that the suit is brought in the name of the National Salt Company because of such demand. It is alleged that these non-consenting stockholders had no knowledge of the transaction at the time the agreement was made; that they never assented thereto; that as soon as they learned of the existence of the agreement they demanded of the company that it proceed forthwith to have the contract rescinded, and in the event of its refusal to take such action, they propose to take legal steps on their own behalf. So it can be said with reason that the suit is brought in the name of the non-consenting and protesting stockholders, for the reason that the general rule is that the stockholder has no right to bring [**45] suit in a matter that affects the corporation. That is for the corporation to do. If the officers of the corporation, after demand [*405] by the stockholders, refuse to bring such action, then the stockholders may bring it. Is it not then, in legal contemplation, the action of the non-consenting stockholders? If so, and the authorities would seem to support this proposition, the principle of the cases to which I have referred would seem to have no application. The case has in it this feature not to be found in any of the cases to which I have referred. The property that is the subject of the controversy and which was made the basis of the transaction, namely, the stock of the constituent companies, is all in the hands of a trustee and, therefore, the question is very naturally suggested, whether the rule that, HN7[] while courts will not enforce an illegal contract between the parties, if an agent of one of the parties has in the illegal enterprise received money or property belonging to its principal, he is bound to turn it over to him and can not shield himself from liability on the ground of the illegality of the original transaction. Norton v. Blinn, 39 Ohio St. 145. [**46] Whether the plaintiff, under the averments of this petition can recover back the money paid under the contract may well be doubted.

It seems to us that there is a clear distinction and difference between the case at bar and those in which the courts of this state have denied relief to parties in pari delicto and that a different rule would best comport with the interests of the public and the rights of the parties in this action. The property involved, according to the averments of the petition, is in the hands of a third party, under an illegal and unlawful contract. Certainly the trustee has no right to retain and have the fruit of an unlawful enterprise, and I am unable to find any good and sufficient reason why this petition as against a demurrer does not state a cause of action.

The demurrer is, therefore, overruled.

---

End of Document

Bement v. National Harrow Co.

Supreme Court of the United States

Argued April 9, 10, 1902 ; May 19, 1902

No. 215

Reporter

186 U.S. 70 *; 22 S. Ct. 747 **; 46 L. Ed. 1058 ***; 1902 U.S. LEXIS 2180 ****

BEMENT v. NATIONAL HARROW COMPANY

Prior History: [****1] ERROR TO THE SUPREME COURT OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK

Core Terms

---

contracts, patents, manufacture, parties, harrows, license, commerce, letters patent, void, invention, act of congress, telephone, monopoly, terms, violation of the act, conditions, interstate, discovery, licensee, patentee

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Contracts Law > Defenses > Illegal Bargains

HN1 Defenses, Illegal Bargains

Anyone sued upon a contract may set up as a defense that it is a violation of the act of Congress, and if found to be so, that fact will constitute a good defense to the action.

Contracts Law > Defenses > Illegal Bargains

Criminal Law & Procedure > Sentencing > Fines

International Trade Law > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN2 Defenses, Illegal Bargains

The first section of the Antitrust Act, 26 Stat. 209 (1890), provides that every contract, combination in the form of trust, or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal. Every person making such a contract is deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction is to be punished by fine or by imprisonment, or both. As the statute makes the contract in itself illegal, no recovery can be had upon it when the defense of illegality is shown to the court.

FÍ Í ÁMÉRICA ESTATUUNIDÉA I Í ÍÍLÁ I Í SEÓdÁFÉ I Í ÍÍÍFÉ I Í LAFJEGÁNÉEJSÓYÓAGFÍ Í ÍÍÍÍFÉ

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Assignments

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Licenses

Patent Law > Ownership > Conveyances > General Overview

HN3 Ownership & Transfer of Rights, Assignments

An owner of a patent has the right to sell it or to keep it; to manufacture the article himself or to license others to manufacture it; to sell such article himself or to authorize others to sell it.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Assignments

Patent Law > Ownership > Patents as Property

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Licenses

Patent Law > Ownership > Conveyances > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

HN4 Ownership & Transfer of Rights, Assignments

The general rule is absolute freedom in the use or sale of rights under the patent laws of the United States. The very object of these laws is monopoly, and the rule is, with few exceptions, that any conditions which are not in their very nature illegal with regard to this kind of property, imposed by the patentee and agreed to by the licensee for the right to manufacture or use or sell the article, will be upheld by the courts. The fact that the conditions in the contracts keep up the monopoly or fix prices does not render them illegal.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Assignments

Patent Law > Ownership > General Overview

Patent Law > Ownership > Conveyances > General Overview

HN5 Conveyances, Assignments

The owner of a patented article can charge such price as he may choose, and the owner of a patent may assign it or sell the right to manufacture and sell the article patented upon the condition that the assignee shall charge a certain amount for such article.

Lawyers' Edition Display

---

Headnotes

---

FÍ Í ÁMÉRÍKA ÉS A LÍGÁJÚDÓ ÉS A LÍMÁI ÁSÉDÁÉTÉ I ÉRTÉKELÉSI LÍFJEGÁMEJESÓYÓLÁGFI ÉRTÉKELÉS

Error to state court -- conclusiveness of findings of fact in a suit in equity -- Federal anti-trust act -- violation of, as defense to suit on contract -- validity of conditions in license from patentee. --

Headnote:

1. The findings of fact made in a state court in a suit in equity are conclusive upon the Supreme Court of the United States on writ of error to that court.
2. The defense that a contract is in violation of the act of Congress of July 2, 1890 (26 Stat. at L. 209, chap. 647), to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies, which makes illegal every contract violative of its provisions, may be set up by a private individual when sued thereon, and, if proved, constitutes a good defense to the action.
3. Conditions imposed by the patentee in a license of the right to manufacture or sell the patented article, which keep up the monopoly or fix prices, do not violate the act of Congress of July 2, 1890 (26 Stat. at L. 209, chap. 647), to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints or monopolies.
4. Reasonable and legal conditions imposed by the patentee in a license of the right to manufacture and sell the patented article, restricting the terms upon which the article manufactured under such license may be used, and the price to be demanded therefor, do not constitute such a restraint on commerce as is forbidden by the act of Congress of July 2, 1890 (26 Stat. at L. 209, chap. 647), to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies.
5. The agreement of the licensee of a patent for improvements relating to float spring tooth harrows, not to manufacture or sell any other such harrows than those which it had made under its patents before assigning them to the licensor, or which it was licensed to manufacture and sell under the terms of the license, except such other style and construction as it may be licensed to manufacture and sell by such licensor, is not void as an unlawful restraint on trade or commerce forbidden by the act of Congress of July 2, 1890 (26 Stat. at L. 209, chap. 647), since the plain purpose of this provision is to prevent the licensee from infringing on the rights of others under other patents, and not to stifle competition or prevent the licensee from attempting to make any improvement in harrows.
6. An agreement by the licensor of a patent for improvements relating to harrows, not to license any other person than the licensee to manufacture or sell any harrow of the peculiar style and construction then used or sold by such licensee, does not violate the act of Congress of July 2, 1890 (26 Stat. at L. 209, chap. 647), to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies.

Syllabus

---

Any one sued upon a contract may set up, as a defence, that it is a violation of an act of Congress.

The object of the patent laws is monopoly, and the rule is with few exceptions, that any conditions which are not in their very nature illegal with regard to this kind of property, imposed by the patentee, and agreed to by the licensee for the right to manufacture or use or sell the article, will be upheld by the courts; and the fact that the conditions in the contracts keep up the monopoly, does not render them illegal. The prohibition was a reasonable prohibition for the defendant, who would thus be excluded from making such harrows as were made by others, who were engaged in manufacturing and selling other machines under other patents; but it would be unreasonable to so construe the provision, as to prevent the defendant from using any letters patent legally obtained by it and not infringing patents owned by others.

Upon the facts found, there was no error in the judgment of the Court of Appeals, and it is affirmed.

FÍ Í ÁMÉRÍKA ÉS A LÁZÁRÓDÉI ÍRÁMI I Í LÁÍ ÁSEÓAÍRÉ I ÁRTÉFÉ I LAFJEGÁMEJESÓYÓGÁGI ÉS AÍRÉ

THIS was a writ of error to the Supreme Court of the State of New York, to which court the record had [****2] been remitted after a decision of the case by the Court of Appeals. The action was brought by the plaintiff below, the defendant in error here, a corporation, to recover the amount of liquidated damages arising out of an alleged violation by the defendant below, the plaintiff in error here, also a corporation, of certain contracts executed between the parties, in relation to the manufacture and sale of what are termed in the contracts "float spring tooth harrows," their frames and attachments applicable thereto, under letters patent owned by the plaintiff. The action was also brought to restrain the future violation of such contracts, and to compel their specific performance by the defendant. The case was tried before a referee pursuant to the statute of New York providing therefor, and he ordered judgment in favor of the plaintiff for over twenty thousand dollars, besides enjoining the defendant from violating its contract with the plaintiff, and directing their specific performance as continuing contracts. This judgment was reversed by the appellate division of the Supreme Court and an order made granting a new trial, but on appeal from such order the Court of Appeals reversed [****3] it and affirmed the original judgment. The defendant brings the case here by writ of error.

The particular character of the action appears from the pleadings. The complaint, after alleging the incorporation of both parties to the action, the plaintiff in New Jersey and the defendant in Michigan, averred that about April 1, 1891, the plaintiff's assignor, a New York corporation, entered with the defendant into certain license contracts, called therein Exhibits A and B. The substance of contract A is as follows: It stated that the plaintiff was the owner of certain letters patent of the United States, which had been issued to other parties and were then owned by the plaintiff, for improvements relating to float spring tooth harrows, harrow frames and attachments applicable thereto, eighty-five of which patents were enumerated, and that the defendant desired to acquire the right to use in its business of manufacturing at Lansing, (in the State of Michigan,) and to sell throughout the United States, under such patents or some one or more of them, and under all other patented rights owned or thereafter acquired by the plaintiff, which applied to and embraced the peculiar construction [****4] employed by the defendant, during the term of such patents or either or any thereof, applicable to and embracing such construction. The plaintiff then, in and by such contract, gave and granted to the defendant the license and privilege of using the rights under those patents in its business of manufacturing, marketing and vending to others to be used, float spring tooth harrows, float spring tooth harrow frames without teeth and attachments applicable thereto; a sample of the harrow frames and attachments the defendant was licensed to manufacture and sell, being (as stated) in the possession of the treasurer of the plaintiff, and marked and numbered as set forth in schedule A, which was made a part of the license. The license was granted upon the terms therein set forth, which were as follows:

- (1) The defendant was to pay a royalty of one dollar for each float spring tooth harrow or frame sold by it pursuant to the license, to be paid to the plaintiff at its office in the city of Utica in the State of New York.
- (2) The defendant was to make verified reports of its business each month and mail them to the plaintiff, and the defendant agreed that it would not ship these harrows [****5] to any person, firm or corporation to be sold on commission, or allow any rebate or reduction from the price or prices fixed in the license, except to settle with an insolvent debtor for harrows previously sold and delivered.
- (3) The defendant agreed that it would not during the continuance of the license sell its products manufactured under the license at a less price or on more favorable terms of payment and delivery to the purchasers than was set forth in schedule B, which was made a part of the license, except as thereafter provided.
- (4) The plaintiff reserved the right to decrease the selling price and to make the terms of payment and delivery more favorable to the purchasers, and it might reduce the royalty on the harrows manufactured under the license.
- (5) The plaintiff agreed to furnish license labels to the defendant, which were to be affixed to each article sold, and the amount of ten cents paid for each of such labels was to be credited and allowed on the royalty paid by the defendant at the time of such payment.
- (6) The defendant agreed that it would not, during the continuance of the license, be directly or indirectly engaged in the manufacture or sale of any [****6] other float spring tooth harrows, etc., than those which it was licensed to manufacture and make under the terms of the license, except such as it might manufacture and furnish another licensee of the National Harrow Company, and then only such constructions thereof as such other licensee should be licensed by the plaintiff to manufacture and sell, except such other style and construction as it might be licensed to manufacture and sell by the plaintiff.

FÍ Í ÁNEÚA ÉÁÍ ELÁGUAÉÓCAÍ Í ÉÁÍ LÁÍ ÁSEÓdÁFÉI Í ÉÁHFÉI Í LÁJEGÁNEÚASÓYÓÁGFÍ ÉÁÍ

(7) The defendant agreed to pay to the plaintiff for each and every of the articles sold contrary to the strict terms and provisions of the license, the sum of five dollars, which sum was thereby agreed upon and fixed as liquidated damages.

(8) The defendant agreed not to directly or indirectly, in any way, contest the validity of any patent applicable to and embracing the construction which the defendant was licensed to manufacture, or which it might manufacture, for another licensee, which such other licensee was itself licensed to manufacture or sell, or the reissues thereof, and no act of either party should invalidate this admission. The defendant also agreed not to alter or change the construction of the float spring tooth [****7] harrows, float spring tooth harrow frames, without teeth or attachments applicable thereto, which it was authorized to manufacture and sell under the license, in any part or portions thereof which embody any of the inventions covered by the letters patent, or any of them, or any reissues thereof.

(9) The plaintiff agreed that after the license was delivered it would not grant licenses or let to any other person the right to manufacture the articles named of the peculiar style and construction or embodying the peculiar features thereof used by the defendant, as illustrated and embodied in the sample harrow then placed in the possession of the treasurer of the plaintiff and referred to in schedule A of the license.

(10) Nothing contained in the license was to authorize the defendant to manufacture or vend, directly or indirectly, any other or different style of harrow than duplicates of such samples as had been deposited by it with the plaintiff, and such as were embraced in the license.

(11) Any departure from the terms of the license might at the option of the plaintiff be treated as a breach of the license, and the licensee might be treated as an infringer, or the plaintiff [****8] might restrain the breach thereof in a suit brought for that purpose and obtain an injunction, the licensee waiving any right of trial by jury; such remedy was to be in addition to the liquidated damages already provided for.

(12) The termination of the license by the plaintiff was not to release the defendant from its obligation to pay for articles sold up to the termination of the license.

(13) The plaintiff agreed to defend the defendant in any suit brought for an alleged infringement.

(14) No royalties were to be paid for articles exported for use in a foreign country.

(15) The license was personal to the licensee and not assignable, except to the successors of the defendant in the same place and business, without the written consent of the plaintiff, nor were the royalties or other sums specified to cease to be paid under any circumstances, except under the conditions named in the license during the continuance thereof.

(16) The parties agreed that the license should continue during the term of the patent or patents applicable to the license and during the term of any reissues thereof.

(17) The place of the performance of the agreement was the city of Utica, New York, [****9] and the agreement was to be construed and the rights of the parties thereunder determined according to the laws of New York.

(18) The consideration of the contract or license was one dollar, paid by each of the parties to the other, and the covenants contained therein to be performed by the other, and it applied to and bound the parties thereto, their successors, heirs and assigns.

Schedule A which followed contained a description of the particular kinds of harrow which the defendant was authorized to make and sell under the license. Schedule B contained a statement of the prices and terms of sale under the license, and it was therein stated that "A maximum discount of forty-two per cent may be allowed on sales of harrows, frames and teeth in the following territory: All of the New England States, also States of New York,

FÍ Í ÁNÉUÆA EØAÍ ELAGGÁUÆOGAÍ Í ÆAÍLÍ LÁ Í ÁSEØAðÆFÍ Í ÆAÍFÍLÍ LAFJEGÁNEUÆSÓYQJÁGFÍ ÆAÍLÍ

Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia and West Virginia. A maximum discount of forty-five per cent may be allowed on all sales in the territory throughout the United States not mentioned above."

This contract or license was signed by the president of the National Harrow Company for the plaintiff, and A. O. Bement, president of the defendant [****10] corporation, for the defendant.

The other license, called Exhibit B, was in substance the same as Exhibit A, excepting that the privilege of sale for the articles manufactured was that portion of the territory embraced within the United States lying south, and west of Virginia, West Virginia and Pennsylvania, and there was some difference in the machines which the defendant was authorized to manufacture and sell under this license, and in regard to the prices to be charged for those machines not covered by the former contract or license.

These two agreements were, as stated, made parts of the plaintiff's complaint, and the plaintiff then set forth various alleged violations of the two agreements on the part of the defendant, and claimed a recovery of a large amount of damages under the provisions of the contracts, and prayed for an injunction restraining future violations and for a specific performance of the contracts.

The plaintiff also alleged that the plaintiff's assignor, the New York corporation, duly assigned to the plaintiff all its rights and interests in regard to the subject-matter of the two contracts, and that the plaintiff, at the time of the commencement of the [****11] action, was the lawful owner of all such interests and rights, and was entitled to bring the action in its own name.

To this complaint the defendant made answer, denying many of its allegations and setting up certain other agreements which it alleged had been made by the plaintiff and other parties, including defendant, and which, as averred, amounted to a combination of all the manufacturers and dealers in patent harrows, to regulate their manufacture and to provide for their sale and the prices thereof throughout the United States. It was also in the answer averred that such contracts had been pronounced to be void by the Supreme Court of New York, and the contracts now before the court were, as contended by defendant, but a continuation and a part of the other contracts already declared void, and that these contracts between the parties to this action were also void. It also alleged that all of the various contracts were in violation of the act of Congress, approved July 2, 1890, being chapter 647 of the first session of the Fifty-first Congress, (26 Stat. 209,) entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies."

The case was referred [****12] to a referee to hear and decide, who, after hearing the testimony, reported in favor of the plaintiff. The material portions of his report are as follows:

"That for some time prior to the month of September, 1890, the spring tooth harrow business was conducted by the following-named parties: D.C. & H.C. Reed & Company, of Kalamazoo, Mich.; G.B. Olin & Company, Perry and Canandaigua, N.Y.; Chase, Taylor & Company, W. S. Lawrence, doing business under the name of Lawrence & Chapin, both of Kalamazoo, Mich.; J.M. Childs & Company, of Utica, N.Y.; and A. W. Stevens & Son, of Auburn, N.Y., who began the harrow business in substantially the order named above.

"The first two above-named firms conducted their business in separate portions or territory of the United States, under the same United States letters patent, and the other firms began their business in hostility to the same letters patent. The first two firms began a number of patent lawsuits against the other firms and their customers for infringement of patents. These suits were vigorously prosecuted and the court finally decided the patents valid, and ordered an accounting of profits against the firm of Chase, Taylor & Company, [****131] and W. S. Lawrence.

"Prior to September, 1890, the last four of the above-named firms settled their disputes over patents with the first two firms, and took licenses under their letters patent. Considerable sums of money were paid in settlement of these disputes and rights; and prior to said date, September, 1890, there was no other relation between the first two firms named, and the other parties than that of licensor and licensee under United States letters patent.

"In the year 1890, and just prior thereto, other persons, firms and corporations began the spring tooth harrow business and other patent lawsuits followed; Suits were begun against the defendants herein, and against their customers purchasing their spring tooth harrows; and one case had gone to final decree, in which the defendant was ordered to account for profits and damages; and an injunction had been granted in another suit. Proceedings were pending upon an application for rehearing in these cases.

FÍ Í ÁNUA ÉADH CLÁGUÉODAÍ I Í ÁNUA I Í LÁI ÁSÓDAÉ I ÁNUA I LÉJEGÁWEASÓYÓÁFI ÉADHF

"In September, 1890, the six firms first above named decided to organize a corporation known as the National Harrow Company of New York, with a view to transferring various United States letters patent owned by the [****14] six firms respectively to said corporation, and for the purpose of conducting the manufacture of some part or portion of the material which entered into their spring tooth harrow business.

"In the conduct of the spring tooth harrow business, the harrows came to be known in the market as 'float spring tooth harrows;' that name having been adopted to differentiate the harrows from those known in the market as 'wheel harrows,' which had frame bars and curved spring teeth supported from an axle above, which axle had wheels at either end of the diameter above thirty inches. The two classes of harrows were differentiated, one being called a 'float' and the others a 'wheel' spring tooth harrow. The litigations had been wholly over the 'float' spring tooth harrows.

"The members composing the first six firms, above named, in the harrow business in September, 1890, organized under the laws of the State of New York the 'National Harrow Company.' That corporation was duly legally incorporated, and after its incorporation it received from the said six firms the transfer of their separate United States letters patent, license contracts and privileges under patents. The defendant's president, [****15] Arthur O. Bement, became and continued a director of this corporation until its dissolution, which followed in a little over a year.

"This corporation entered into some contracts with spring tooth harrow manufacturers, which were decided by the Supreme Court of the State of New York to be illegal as against public policy, on account of restraints contained in the contracts, which extended beyond the lifetime of the patents. That case is reported in the New York Supplement, vol. 18, page 224. Strait et al. v. National Harrow Company et al.

"Immediately following this decision, all of the contracts then in existence which were affected thereby were immediately cancelled by the parties to such contracts.

"The defendant, E. Bement & Sons, in the fall of 1890, entered into a contract with the National Harrow Company, looking to the selling of its patents and rights under patents relating to the spring tooth harrow business; but this contract was abandoned, the conditions upon which it was executed not having been complied with, the contract became and was wholly void.

"The defendant had no contract with the National Harrow Company until about June 16 or 17, 1891, at which [****16] time several contracts were entered into between the defendant and the National Harrow Company of New York. Among other contracts the defendant executed and delivered assignments in writing of several United States letters patent and license rights and privileges under United States letters patent, all of which related to the defendant's float spring tooth harrow business. Such contracts constituted an absolute sale of the property and privileges thereby transferred, and the defendant agreed to accept in payment thereof the paid-up capital stock of the National Harrow Company of New York, and the value of the rights transferred were by agreement between the parties fixed and determined by arbitration, under which arbitration the defendant was awarded and the value was fixed at upwards of $ 29,000. The defendant was dissatisfied with the amount of the award, and such dissatisfaction and difference was afterwards adjusted by an agreement to issue to the defendant and the defendant to accept an additional amount of $ 16,000 of said capital stock. That by agreement, in the place of the said capital stock of the New York company, the defendant accepted and agreed to take the stock of [****17] the plaintiff in this action, and there has been issued to the defendant and the defendant has received the capital stock of this plaintiff in an amount upwards of $ 45,000 in payment for the property and rights sold and transferred by the defendant to the National Harrow Company of New York. That said upwards of $ 45,000 of stock was issued to the president of the defendant for defendant's benefit, and on said stock defendant has received several cash dividends.

FÍ Í ÁNUA ÉADH CLÁGUÉODAÍ I Í ÁNUA I Í LÁ Í SEÓAÉFÉ I FÉAFÉ I LÉJÉGÁWEASÓYÓÁFI ÉADHÉFÉ

"The transaction between the National Harrow Company of New York and this defendant had, in June, 1891, was intended by the parties to be an absolute sale by the defendant to the National Harrow Company of New York of the United States letters patent and licenses under United States letters patent relating to the float spring tooth harrow business conducted by the defendant, and it was founded on a good, valuable and adequate consideration moving between the parties.

"That, as a part of such transaction, the National Harrow Company of New York granted, issued and delivered to the defendant the license contracts A and B, which are attached to the complaint in this action and made a part thereof. Upon the consummation [****18] of the transaction in June, 1891, the controversy over patents and infringements existing between the first six firms named above, and the defendant and its customers, was settled. The papers which were executed in June, 1891, were all dated as of April 1, 1891, and were to take effect as of that date. At the date of the execution and delivery of the license contracts A and B, the National Harrow Company of New York was the owner by assignment and purchase of a large number of United States letters patent, which it is claimed fully monopolized and covered the defendant's float spring tooth harrow business.

"The sale by the defendant of its letters patent, and license rights and privileges to the National Harrow Company of New York, and the signing and delivering of license contracts A and B, were intended to and did, settle existing controversies with reference to the rights of the National Harrow Company of New York and the defendant.

"I decide that the contract entered into in June, 1891, including the contracts A and B between the National Harrow Company of New York and this defendant were and are good and valid contracts, founded on adequate considerations and were reasonable [****19] in their provisions; contracts A and B imposing no restraints upon the defendant beyond those which the parties had a right, from the nature of the transaction, to impose and accept.

"In July, 1891, a corporation was organized under the laws of the State of New Jersey, known and designated as the National Harrow Company, which corporation is the plaintiff in this action. None of the parties organizing this corporation were in the spring tooth harrow business. The New Jersey corporation was duly and legally organized in conformity with the laws of that State, and was by those laws and its charter authorized to purchase United States letters patent and to grant licenses under United States letters patent and to conduct the manufacturing business, and had a variety of other rights and privileges under its charter and said statutes. That this corporation, the plaintiff, still is a legal and valid corporation, entitled to hold and enjoy such of its property as it now or may hereafter own or acquire, and that it was not organized in hostility to any rule of public policy.

"That the National Harrow Company of New Jersey, this plaintiff, through its duly constituted officers purchased [****20] from the National Harrow Company of New York all of its various United States letters patent, and all contracts, licenses and privileges which the National Harrow Company of New York then owned and possessed, and also purchased a part of its other property, rights and privileges.

"That on the 9th of September, 1891, a formal transfer in writing was made from the National Harrow Company of New York to the National Harrow Company of New Jersey of the property and rights sold as aforesaid by the former company to the latter, which transfer was founded on a good, valuable and adequate consideration moving between the parties, and which transfer was sanctioned by the directors and stockholders of the New York corporation, and by the officers and directors of the National Harrow Company of New Jersey, this plaintiff, and separate assignments in writing were made of the various United States letters patent from the New York corporation to the New Jersey corporation.

"I decide that this transfer was in all respects legal and valid, being founded on a good and valuable consideration, and that it vested in the plaintiff in this action all the rights, privileges and benefits accruing the [****21] New York corporation under its contracts with the defendant, including contracts A and B, which contracts have been slightly modified by the parties as to price and terms of sale.

"The defendant's president, Arthur O. Bement, became a director and an active manager of the plaintiff, and continued as such down to September, 1893.

FÍ Í ÁNUA ÉADH CLÁGUÉODAÍ I Í ÁNUA I Í LÁ I ÁSÓDAÉ I FÍ Í LÉJ EGÁUÉASÓYÓÁFI ÉADHOF

"The defendant made monthly verified reports to this plaintiff down to and including the 8th of September, 1893, of the harrows embraced in contracts A and B, by such reports stating the total harrows sold to be 13,900, on which defendant paid to the plaintiff a royalty of $ 13,900.

"The National Harrow Company of New York and this plaintiff have performed all of the stipulations and provisions in the contracts entered into between the National Harrow Company of New York and this defendant, including all the provisions of contracts A and B, and the plaintiff is now ready, willing and able to perform all of the stipulations and agreements to be performed on its part, as assignee of the National Harrow Company of New York.

"That the defendant, after having received and retained large pecuniary benefits under the contracts, has failed, neglected and refused, [****22] and still fails, neglects and refuses to keep and perform its contracts entered into, including the stipulations and provisions contained in contracts A and B, and since September, 1893, it has wholly repudiated contracts A and B, and refused to perform any of the stipulations contained therein which it agreed to do and perform, and it has broken and violated all of the stipulations and agreements contained in contracts A and B which it agreed to do and perform."

The referee then states with some detail the various violations of the license agreements by the defendant, and finds the defendant indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of over twenty thousand dollars. He then continues as follows:

"I decide that the plaintiff is a legal and valid corporation authorized to enforce its rights in courts having jurisdiction, and that all of the contracts in evidence were and are legal, valid and binding contracts, such as might reasonably be made under the circumstances, founded upon an adequate consideration, and that they embodied no illegal restraints, and are not repugnant to any rule of public policy as in restraint of trade, or tending to create a monopoly, trust or any other illegal [****23] combination; and that the contracts entered into between the defendant and the National Harrow Company of New York, including contracts A and B, are and were intended to be continuing contracts, and should be enforced according to their true intent and meaning as hereby interpreted."

The referee then held the plaintiff entitled to a judgment against the defendant, declaring the validity of the plaintiff corporation and its title to the contracts and their validity, and decreeing specific performance thereof and restraining future violations of the contracts by the defendant. Judgment in accordance with the report was entered, from which the defendant appealed to the appellate division of the Supreme Court.

Some difficulties regarding the form in which the case was presented to that court arose upon the argument, and it was therefore suspended and the case sent back to the referee for a resumption, which was subsequently agreed upon by counsel for the respective parties, who entered into a stipulation in regard to what was to be reviewed by the courts above, and, among other things, it was agreed between counsel: "That the foregoing record, as amended and corrected in this stipulation, [****24] contains all of the evidence given and proceedings had before the referee material to the questions to be raised on this appeal by the appellant, which questions to be raised by the appellant on this appeal are to be only as follows." Those questions are eight in number, the fourth of which is: "Whether or not the contracts A and B are valid under the act of Congress approved July 2, 1890, chapter 647 of the first session of the Fifty-first Congress." This is the only Federal question raised and appearing in the record.

The case was thereupon argued before the appellate division, which reversed the judgment, and ordered a new trial, but it did not state in its order of reversal that the judgment was reversed on questions of fact as well as of law. The plaintiff then appealed to the Court of Appeals from the order granting a new trial, and after argument it was held by that court that it had no jurisdiction to review the facts, and that upon the findings of the referee there had been no error of law committed, and consequently the Supreme Court was wrong in reversing the judgment. The court therefore reversed the judgment of the Supreme Court, and affirmed the judgment entered upon [****25] the report of the referee.

Counsel: Mr. Clark C. Wood, Mr. Edward Cahill and Mr. Henry J. Cunningham for plaintiff in error.

FÍ Í ÁNUA ÉADH CLÁGUÉODAÍ I Í ÁNUA I Í LÁ Í SEÓAÉFÉ I ÁNUA I LÉJÉGÁNEASÓYÓÁFI ÉADH

Mr. Edwin H. Risley for defendant in error.

Judges: Fuller, Brewer, Brown, Shiras, Jr., Peckham, McKenna; Harlan, Gray and White took no part in the decision of this case.

Opinion by: PECKHAM

Opinion

---

[*83] [**752] [***1065] MR. JUSTICE PECKHAM, after making the foregoing statement of facts, delivered the opinion of the court.

In this court we are concluded by the findings [***1066] of fact made in a state court in a suit in equity, as well as in an action at law. Dower v. Richards, 151 U.S. 658, 666; Israel v. Arthur, 152 U.S. 355; Egan v. Hart, 165 U.S. 188; Hedrick v. Atchinson, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad Company, 167 U.S. 673, 677.

The only Federal question raised in the record is as to the validity of contracts A and B, with regard to the act of Congress on the subject of trusts. Act of July 2, 1890, c. 647, 26 Stat. 209. That is a question of law, plainly raised in the record, and we are not precluded from its consideration by any action of the state courts. If, however, facts not found by the referee [****26] are necessary for the purpose of connecting those contracts with others not found in such report, we cannot supply the omission to find those facts. The contention of the defendant is that [*84] the two contracts A and B are in truth a part and continuation of the agreements set forth in the defendant's answer, and that taken together they prove a purpose and combination on the part of all the dealers in patented harrows to control their manufacture, sale and price in all portions of the United States, and defendant avers that such a contract or combination was and is void, not only as against public policy, but also because it is a violation of the Federal statute upon the subject of trusts and illegal combinations. Those former alleged contracts are not mentioned in the report of the referee excepting, as he stated, they had been declared void as against public policy, and as being in restraint of trade because they extended beyond the life of the patents therein mentioned, and the referee found that following this decision all of the contracts then in existence, which were affected thereby, were immediately cancelled by the parties thereto.

The referee made no finding of [****27] any fact connecting the contracts A and B with prior contracts of a like nature including other parties, as alleged in the answer of the defendant. The referee did find, however, that [**753] the defendant had no contract with the National Harrow Company until June 16 or 17, 1891, at which time several contracts were entered into between the plaintiff and the National Harrow Company of New York, and among other contracts the plaintiff executed and delivered assignments in writing of several United States letters patent and license rights and privileges under United States letters patent, all of which relate to the defendant's float spring tooth harrow business. He also found that such contracts constituted an absolute sale of the property and privileges thereby transferred, and that the defendant agreed to and did accept in payment thereof paid up capital stock of the plaintiff. He further found that the transaction between the assignor of the plaintiff and the defendant in June, 1891, was intended by the parties to be an absolute sale by the defendant to such assignor of the United States letters patent and licenses under such patents relating to the float spring tooth harrow [****28] business conducted by the defendant, and that it was founded upon a good, valuable and adequate consideration between the parties; that as a part of such consideration [*85] the assignor of the plaintiff granted and delivered to the defendant the license contracts A and B, heretofore spoken of, and that upon the consummation of the transaction the controversy over patents and infringements existing between the first six firms named in the referee's report and the defendant and its customers was settled. The report also decided "that the contract entered into in June, 1891, including the contracts A and B between the National Harrow Company of New York and this defendant were and are good and valid contracts, founded on adequate considerations and were reasonable in their provisions; contracts A and B imposing no restraints upon the defendant beyond those which the parties had a right, from the nature of the transaction, to impose and accept."

FÍ Í ÁMÆÐA EÐA Í LÁGGJUÐÓÐA! Í ÆÐI Í HLAÐAÐÓÐA! Í ÆÐI Í LAFJEGÁÐUÐÓÐA! Í ÆÐI

The omission of the referee to find from the evidence that the contracts A and B were a continuation of former contracts held to have been void, and that there were in fact other manufacturers of harrows who had entered into the same kind [***29] of contracts with plaintiff as those denominated A and B, and that there was a general combination among the dealers in patented harrows to regulate the sale and prices of such harrows, furnishes no ground for this court to assume such facts. The contracts A and B are to be judged by their own contents alone and construed accordingly.

The referee also decided that the plaintiff was a legal and valid corporation, authorized to enforce its rights in courts having jurisdiction, and that all the contracts in evidence were and are legal, valid and binding contracts, and such as might reasonably be made under the circumstances, and were founded upon a good, valuable and adequate consideration, and were reasonable in their provisions, and that they embodied no illegal restraints, and were not repugnant to any rule of public policy as in restraint of trade, and were not intended to create a monopoly, trust or illegal combination, and that the contracts entered into between the defendant and the National Harrow Company of New York, including the contracts A and B, are, and were, intended to be continuing contracts, and should be enforced according to their true intent and meaning as hereby [***30] interpreted.

When he speaks of all the contracts in evidence, the referee [*86] plainly means all the contracts in evidence between the parties to this action, for it was of such contracts only that he had been speaking. There were, in fact, other contracts than those designated A and B between these parties, and such other contracts had been put in evidence, and previously referred to by the referee. He, therefore, must have included what is termed the escrow agreement in his finding, that all the agreements made by defendant with the [***1067] plaintiffs were valid. That agreement is set forth in the margin. <sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> "Escrow Agreemnt.

"This memoranda of agreement, made and entered into this 1st day of April, A.D. 1891, by and between the National Harrow Company, a corporation of Utica, in the State of New York, and Edward Norris of the same place; and E. Bement & Sons of Lansing, in the State of Michigan.

"Whereas, the said National Harrow Company is the owner of a large number of latters patent relating to float spring tooth harrows, and is desirous of granting licenses thereunder to the following-named persons, firms and corporations, to wit: Chas. H. Childs & Company, D.B. Smith & Company, A.W. Stevens & Son, Childs & Jones, Syracuse Chilled Plow Company, Geo. W. Sweet & Company, Walker Manufacturing Company, Taylor & Henry, the Herndean Manufacturing Company, D.C. & H.C. Reed & Company, L.C. Lull & Company, Williams Manufacturing Company, W.S. Lawrence, McSherry Manufacturing Company, D.O. Everst & Company, E. Bement & Sons, Hench & Dromgold, Farmers' Friend Manufacturing Company, Eureka Mower Company.

"And whereas, the said National Harrow Company has placed in the hands of said E. Norris in escrow, duly executed by it in duplicate, a certain contract and license for each of said persons, firms and corporations hereinbefore named, to be by the said E. Norris immediately presented to each of the above and foregoing named respective persons, firms and corporations, to be signed and executed by said respective persons, firms and corporations --

"Now, therefore, it is hereby understood and agreed by and between the parties hereto, that as the said licenses and contracts are signed and executed by the said respective persons, firms and corporations, they shall be held by said Norris, in escrow, for both parties until such time as all of said above-named persons, firms and corporations shall have signed, executed and delivered the same to said Norris, whereupon they shall become operative, and immediately thereafter the said Norris shall deliver one of the duplicates of each of said contracts and licenses to the said National Harrow Company and the other duplicate thereof to the respective licensees who have signed the same, in person or by mail.

"But in case any of the above-named persons, firms and corporations shall neglect or refuse to sign, execute and deliver said respective contracts and licenses on or before the 1st day of June next, then and in such case said E. Norris shall, provided he shall be so directed, by a resolution duly adopted by the board of trustees of said National Harrow Company, make delivery of such of said contracts and licenses as have been signed and executed as above provided, at which time said contracts and licenses shall become operative, and in case the said National Harrow Company shall conclude not to accept any less number than the whole of such respective contracts and licenses, then and in such case the said Norris shall cancel each of said contracts and licenses, and they shall be null and void.

"Witness the signatures of the parties.

FÍ Í ÁNUA ÉAS Í LÁGGÉADÁIL Í ÁNUA Í HLÁ Í ÁSÓAÉFÉ Í ÁFFE Í LÁJÉGÁNEASÓYÓÁFÍ ÉÁFHÉ

[****31] [*87] There is no finding by the referee that this agreement was ever signed by any one other than the parties to this action, or that any other person received the licenses from and made contracts with the plaintiff similar to the ones entered into between these parties. All that the referee finds is, that all the contracts in evidence were legal, by which was meant, as already stated, all the contracts in evidence between the parties to the action, which were in existence and uncancelled. In the absence of any finding as to the escrow agreement having been signed by others, it [**754] must be regarded as unimportant, and we are brought back to the question whether these contracts or licenses, A and B, irrespective of any contracts not found by the referee as in any way connected with, or forming a part thereof, are void as a violation of the act of Congress.

The plaintiff contends in the first place that only the Attorney General of the United States can bring an action under the statute, excepting that by section 7 of the act any person injured in his business or property, as provided for therein, may himself sue in any Circuit Court of the United States, in the district [****32] in [*88] which the defendant resides or is found. Assuming that the plaintiff is right so far as regards any suit brought under that act, we are nevertheless of opinion that HN1↑ any one sued upon a contract may set up as a defence that it is a violation of the act of Congress, and if found to be so, that fact will constitute a good defence to the action.

HN2↑ The first section of the act provides that "every contract, combination in the form of trust, or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal." Every person making such a contract is deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction is to be punished by fine or by imprisonment, or both. As the statute makes the contract in itself illegal, no recovery can be had upon it when the defence of illegality is shown to the court. The act provides for the prevention of violations thereof, and makes it the duty of the several district attorneys, under the direction of the Attorney General, to institute proceedings in equity to prevent and restrain such violations, and it gives to any person injured in his business or property the right to [****33] sue, but that does not prevent a private individual when sued upon a contract which is void as in violation of the act from setting it up as a defence, and we think when proved it is a valid defence to any claim made under a contract thus denounced as illegal.

This brings us to a consideration of the terms of the license contracts for the purpose of determining whether they violate the act of Congress. The first important and most material fact in considering this question [***1068] is that the agreements concern articles protected by letters patent of the Government of the United States. The plaintiff, according to the finding of the referee, was at the time when these licenses were executed the absolute owner of the letters patent relating to the float spring tooth harrow business. It was, therefore, the owner of a monopoly recognized by the Constitution and by the statutes of Congress. HN3↑ An owner of a patent has the right to sell it or to keep it; to manufacture the article himself or to license others to manufacture it; to sell such article himself or to authorize [*89] others to sell it. As stated by Mr. Justice Nelson, in Wilson v. Rousseau, 4 How. 646, 674, [****34] in speaking of a patent:

"THE NATIONAL HARROW CO.,

By CHAS. H. CHILDS, Pres't.

"EDWARD NORRIS.

"E. BEMENT & SONS,

By A. O. BEMENT, Pres't.

"Received of E. Bement & Sons a license and contract executed between the National Harrow Company and said E. Bement & Sons, which I agree to hold and deliver in accordance with an agreement between the said National Harrow Company and said E. Bement & Sons and myself, and hereto attached.

"Dated this 1st day of April, 1891.

EDWARD NORRIS."

FÍ Í ÁNUA ÉÉÉ JLAGGUÉDÁI Í ÁÉÉ I LÁ Í ÁÉÓAÉFÉ I ÁÉÉFÉ I LÁJÉGÁÉLÉSÓYÓÁFÍ ÉÁÉH

"The law has thus impressed upon it all the qualities and characteristics of property for the specified period; and has enabled him to hold and deal with it the same as in the case of any other description of property belonging to him, and on his death it passes, with his personal estate, to his legal representatives, and becomes part of the assets."

Again, as stated by Mr. Chief Justice Marshall, in Grant v. Raymond, 6 Pet. 218, 241:

"To promote the progress of useful arts, is the interest and policy of every enlightened government. It entered into the views of the framers of our Constitution, and the power 'to promote the progress of science and useful arts, by securing for limited times to authors and inventors, the exclusive right to their respective writings and discoveries,' is among those expressly given to Congress. This subject was among the first which followed the organization of our Government. It was taken up by the first Congress at its second session, and an act was passed authorizing a patent to be issued to the inventor of any useful art, etc., on his petition, 'granting to such petitioner, his heirs, administrators or assigns, [****35] for any term not exceeding fourteen years, the sole and exclusive right and liberty of making, using and vending to others to be used, the said invention or discovery.' The law further declares that the patent 'shall be good and available to the [**755] grantee or grantees by force of this act, to all and every intent and purpose herein contained.' The amendatory act of 1793 contains the same language, and it cannot be doubted that the settled purpose of the United States has ever been, and continues to be, to confer on the authors of useful inventions an exclusive right to their inventions for the time mentioned in their patent. It is the reward stipulated for the advantages derived by the public for the exertions of the individual, and is intended as a stimulus to those exertions. The laws which are passed to give effect to this purpose ought, we think, to be construed in the spirit in which they have been made; and to execute the contract fairly on the part of the United States, where the full benefit has been actually received: [*90] if this can be done without transcending the intention of the statute, or countenancing acts which are fraudulent or may prove mischievous. [****36] The public yields nothing which it has not agreed to yield; it receives all which it has contracted to receive. The full benefit of the discovery, after its enjoyment by the discoverer for fourteen years, is preserved; and for his exclusive enjoyment of it during that time the public faith is pledged."

In Heaton-Peninsular Company v. Eureka Specialty Company, 47 U.S. App. 146, 160, it is stated regarding a patentee:

"If he see fit, he may reserve to himself the exclusive use of his invention or discovery. If he will neither use his device nor permit others to use it, he has but suppressed his own. That the grant is made upon the reasonable expectation that he will either put his invention to practical use or permit others to avail themselves of it upon reasonable terms, is doubtless true. This expectation is based alone upon the supposition that the patentee's interest will induce him to use, or let others use, his invention. The public has retained no other security to enforce such expectations. A suppression can endure but for the life of the patent, and the disclosure he has made will enable all to enjoy the fruit of his genius. His title is exclusive, and so [****37] clearly within the constitutional provisions in respect of private property that he is neither bound to use his discovery himself nor permit others to use it. The dictum found in Hoe v. Knap, 27 Fed. Rep. 204, is not supported by reason or authority."

It is true that in certain circumstances the sale of articles manufactured under letters patent may be prevented when the use of such article may be subject, within the several States, to the control which they may respectively impose in the legitimate exercise of their powers over their purely domestic affairs, whether of internal commerce or of police regulation. Thus an improvement for burning oil, protected by letters patent of the United States, was condemned by the state inspector of Kentucky as unsafe for illuminating purposes under the statute requiring an inspection and imposing a penalty for [*91] the violation of the statute, and it was held that the enforcement of the statute was within the proper police powers of the State, and that it interfered with no right conferred by the letters patent. Patterson v. Kentucky, 97 U.S. 501.

There are decisions also in regard to telephone companies operating [****38] under licenses from patentees giving them the right to use their patents for the purpose of operating public telephone lines, but prohibiting companies from serving within such district any telephone company, and it has been held in the lower Federal courts that such a prohibition was of no force; that it was inconsistent with the grant, because a telephone company, being in the nature of a common carrier, was bound to render as equal service to all who applied and tendered the compensation fixed by law for the service; that while the patentees were under no obligation to license the use of their inventions by any [***1069] public telephone company, yet, having done so, they were not at liberty to place restraints upon such a public corporation which would disable it to discharge all the duties imposed upon companies engaged in the discharge of duties subject to regulation by law. It could not be a public telephone company and could not exercise the franchise of a common carrier of messages with such exceptions to the grant. See Missouri ex rel &c. v. Bell Telephone Company, 23 Fed. Rep. 539; State ex rel. &c. v. Delaware &c. Company, 47 Fed. Rep. 683; and Delaware [****39] & Atlantic &c. Company v. Delaware ex rel. &c., 3 U.S. App. 30.

FÍ Í ÁNUA ĚA FLÁGGÚ ÓDAI Í ÁE Í LÁ Í ÁSÓA EÍ Í ÁFFÉ Í LÁJ EGAUÉ ÁSÓYÓÁFI ĚA

These cases are cited in the opinion of the court in the case of Heaton-Peninsular Company v. Eureka Specialty Company, supra. Notwithstanding these exceptions, HN4↑ the general rule is absolute freedom in the use or sale of rights under the patent laws of the United States. The very object of these laws is monopoly, and the rule is, with few exceptions, that any conditions which are not in their very nature illegal with regard to this kind of property, imposed by the patentee and agreed to by the licensee for the right to manufacture or use or sell the article, will be upheld by the courts. The fact that the conditions in the contracts keep up the monopoly or fix prices does not render them illegal.

[*92] The contention that they do not affect interstate commerce, is not correct. We think the licenses do by their terms and by their plain meaning refer to, include and provide for interstate as well as other commerce. The contract called Exhibit B provides for the manufacture at Lansing, Michigan, and for the sale of the articles there made in territory lying south and west of Virginia and West Virginia [****40] and Pennsylvania, and the referee finds that a number of harrows have been sold under that contract. The contracts plainly look to the sale, and they also determine the price of the article sold, throughout the United States, as well as to the manufacture in the State of Michigan. As these [**756] contracts do, therefore, include interstate commerce within their provisions, we are brought back to the question whether the agreement between these parties with relation to these patented articles is valid within the act of Congress. It is true that it has been held by this court that the act included any restraint of commerce, whether reasonable or unreasonable. United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Association, 166 U.S. 290; United States v. Joint Traffic Association, 171 U.S. 505; Addystone Pipe &c. Company v. United States, 175 U.S. 211. But that statute clearly does not refer to that kind of a restraint of interstate commerce which may arise from reasonable and legal conditions imposed upon the assignee or licensee of a patent by the owner thereof, restricting the terms upon which the article may be used and the price to be demanded therefor. Such [****41] a construction of the act we have no doubt was never contemplated by its framers.

United States v. E.C. Knight company, 156 U.S. 1, does not bear upon the facts herein. That case related to a purchase of stock in manufacturing companies, by reason of which the purchaser secured control of a large majority of the manufactories of refined sugar in the United States. It was held by this court that the Federal act relating to trusts and combinations affecting interstate commerce could not reach and suppress the creation of a monopoly in regard to the refining of sugar, and that the manufacturing of a commodity bore no direct relation to commerce between the States or with foreign nations. It was said by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller, for the court, while [*93] speaking of such manufacture: "Nevertheless it does not follow that an attempt to monopolize, or the actual monopoly of, the manufacture was an attempt, whether executory or consummated, to monopolize commerce, even though, in order to dispose of the product, the instrumentality of commerce was necessarily invoked."

In these contracts provision is expressly made, not alone for manufacture, but for the sale of the manufactured [****42] product throughout the United States, and at prices which are particularly stated, and which the seller is not at liberty to decrease without the assent of the licensor. Addystone Pipe & Steel Company v. United States, 175 U.S. 211, 238. These contracts directly affected, not as a mere incident of manufacture, the sale of the implements all over the country, and the question arising is whether the contracts which thus affect such sales are void under the act of Congress.

On looking through these licenses we have been unable to find any conditions contained therein rendering the agreement void because of a violation of that act. There had been, as the referee finds, a large amount of litigation between the many parties claiming to own various patents covering these implements. Suits for infringements and for injunction had been frequent, and it was desirable to prevent them in the future. This execution of these contracts did in fact settle a large amount of litigation regarding the validity of many patents as found by the referee.

FÍ Í ÁNUA ÉEJHLÁGGUÉDÁI Í ÁNU Í LÁ Í ÁSÓAÉF Í ÁNFE JIÁF EGÁWÉSÓYÓQÁFI ÉAÍL G

This was a legitimate and desirable result in itself. The provision in regard to the price at which the licensee would sell the article manufactured [****43] under the license was also an appropriate and reasonable condition. It tended to keep up the price of the implements manufactured and sold, but that was only recognizing the nature of the property dealt in, and providing for its value so far as possible. This the parties were legally entitled to do. HN5
 ↑] The owner of a patented article can, of course, charge such price as he may choose, and the owner of a patent may assign it or sell the right to manufacture and sell the article patented upon the condition that the assignee [***1070] shall charge a certain amount for such article.

It is also objected that the agreement of the defendant not [*94] to manufacture or sell any other float spring tooth harrow, etc., than those which it had made under its patents before assigning them to the plaintiff, or which it was licensed to manufacture and make, under the terms of the license, except such other style and construction as it may be licensed to manufacture and sell by the plaintiff, is void under the act of Congress.

The plain purpose of the provision was to prevent the defendant from infringing upon the rights of others under other patents, and it had no purpose to stifle competition [****44] in the harrow business more than the patent provided for, nor was its purpose to prevent the licensee from attempting to make any improvement in harrows. It was a reasonable prohibition for the defendant, who would thus be excluded from making such harrows as were made by others who were engaged in manufacturing and selling other machines under other patents. It would be unreasonable to so construe the provision as to prevent defendant from using any letters patent legally obtained by it and not infringing patents owned by others. This was neither its purpose nor its meaning.

There is nothing which violates the act in the agreement that plaintiff would not license any other person than the defendant to manufacture or sell any harrow of the peculiar style and construction then used or sold by the defendant. It is a proper provision for the protection of the individual who is the licensee, and is nothing more in effect than an assignment or sale of the exclusive right to manufacture and vend the article. In brief, after a careful examination of these contracts, we are unable to find any provision in them, either taken separately or in connection with all the others therein contained, [****45] which would render the contracts between these parties void as in violation of the act of Congress.

It must, however, be conceded that the escrow agreement above set forth looks to the signing, by the parties mentioned therein, of contracts similar to those between the [**757] parties to this suit, designated A and B, and containing like conditions relating to the patents respectively, owned by such parties. But there is no finding by the referee that such contracts were in fact entered into by those other parties nor that they constituted [*95] a combination of most, if not all, of the persons or corporations engaged in the business concerning which the agreements between the parties to this suit were made. If such similar agreements had been made, and if, when executed, they would have formed an illegal combination within the act of Congress, we cannot presume for the purpose of reversing this judgment, in the absence of any finding to that effect, that they were made and became effective as an illegal combination. As between these parties, we hold that the agreements A and B actually entered into were not a violation of the act. We are not called upon to express an [****46] opinion upon a state of facts not found. Upon the facts found there is no error in the judgment of the Court of Appeals, and it must, therefore, be

Affirmed.

MR. JUSTICE HARLAN, MR. JUSTICE GRAY and MR. JUSTICE WHITE did not hear the argument and took no part in the decision of this case.

State v. Shippers Compress & Warehouse Co.

Supreme Court of Texas

June 19, 1902, Decided

No. 1125

Reporter

95 Tex. 603 *; 69 S.W. 58 **; 1902 Tex. LEXIS 206 ***

State of Texas v. Shippers Compress and Warehouse Company

Prior History: [***1] Error to the Court of Civil Appeals for the Third District, in an appeal from Travis County.

Disposition: Affirmed.

Core Terms

---

compress, charter, cotton, railroads, bales, shipment, commerce, forfeit, anti-trust, annually, public warehouse, average number, elevator, junction, railroad company, do business, concentration, destination, properties, products, situated, license, parties, revoke, void

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN1[

See Act of 1895, art. 5313 (Texas).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN2[

See Act of 1895, art. 5314 (Texas).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN3[

See Act of 1895, art. 5315 (Texas).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

**HN4** Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

In so far as the Act of 1895, art. 5313 (Texas), comes within the terms of the Connolly case, it is invalid; it will not support an action by the state to recover a penalty for a violation of the law, nor will it, in suits between corporations or individuals, support a defense based upon the fact that the right of action originated in a violation of the antitrust law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Foreign Corporations > Qualifications

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Licenses

Business & Corporate Law > Foreign Corporations > General Overview

**HN5** Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

The Act of 1895, art. 5313 (Texas), tested by the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, is valid to the extent that it authorizes the state to revoke the license of a foreign corporation, or to forfeit the charter of a domestic corporation, for acts done which are forbidden by the antitrust law.

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Corporate Formation > Corporate Existence, Powers & Purpose > General Overview

**HN6** Corporate Formation, Corporate Existence, Powers & Purpose

Tex. Rev. Stat. art. 642, subd. 28, expresses a purpose for which a corporation may be formed in the following terms: the construction or purchase and maintenance of mills, gins, cotton compresses, grain elevators, wharves, and public warehouses for the storage of products and commodities, and the purchase, sale, and storage of products and commodities by grain elevators and public warehouse companies, and the loan of money by such elevator or public warehouse companies.

Criminal Law & Procedure > Criminal Offenses > Acts & Mental States > Actus Reus

**HN7** Acts & Mental States, Actus Reus

In determining the question of intention, the court must consider as true every fact which can be fairly inferred from the evidence.

Headnotes/Summary

---

Headnotes

Trust Law -- Constitutionality.

Conforming the rulings in this State as to the constitutionality of the "trust law" ( Houck v. Brewing Association, 88 Texas, 189) to the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States ( Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Company, 184 United States, 540) it is held that the "trust law" of 1895 (Revised Statutes, articles 5313-5315), by exempting from its operations agricultural products, etc., in the hands of the producer, violates the fourteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution securing equal protection of the laws, to the extent that it will not support an action by the State to recover a penalty for a violation of the law nor afford a defense to an action on a right originating in its violation; but it is held to be constitutional and valid so far as to authorize the revocation of the license of a foreign corporation or the forfeiture of the charter of a domestic one for violation of its provisions. Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. State, 177 U.S., 28.

Trust Law -- Restricting Aids to Commerce.

The creation of [***2] a corporation for the purchase, etc., of cotton compresses, expressing such purposes in the language of the statute authorizing its incorporation (Revised Statutes, article 642, subdivision 28), does not furnish evidence of an intention to violate the trust law in doing the things which the law authorized it to be created for and to do, though such charter contemplates extension of its business over a large part of the State; the right to forfeit its charter depends on the intent with which it was procured, and it is for the State to establish that such intent was the prevention of competition in the aids to commerce, forbidden by the law.

Corporation -- Creation for Unlawful Purpose -- Evidence.

The acquisition by the corporation, on the same day, of six compresses in localities distant from each other, might afford evidence that it was the purpose of its promoters, in organizing it, to acquire such properties; but as the act was lawful, it did not in itself afford evidence of an unlawful purpose in creating the corporation.

Compressing Cotton -- Preventing Competition -- Regulations of Railroad Commission.

Under the rules adopted by the Railroad Commission [***3] regulating the compressing of cotton, competition in the rates of compressing is not probable and barely possible, and an intent to prevent competition by the purchase by one company of several independent compresses, could not be taken as evidence of an intent to suppress such competition.

Syllabus

---

The State procured writ of error from a judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals affirming that of the trial court, which had denied it recovery and from which it had appealed.

Counsel: C. K. Bell, Attorney-General, for plaintiff in error. -- Where the incorporators of a corporation obtain a charter for an illegal purpose they thereby perpetrate a fraud upon the State, on account of which the State can, in a proper judicial proceeding, recall or forfeit the charter granted to them. Debenture Co. v. Louisiana, 180 U.S., 330; Distilling Co. v. People of Illinois, 156 Ill., 448; People of Illinois v. Gas Trust Co., 130 Ill., 268; 2 Mora. on Priv. Corp., sec. 769.

Any action by a corporation whereby the directors or shareholders in it are enabled to and do, through the corporation, effect a combination of their capital, skill, and acts for the purpose of preventing competition between aids to [***4] commerce constitutes the corporation itself a trust and renders it, alike with those who under its guise accomplish their illegal purposes, guilty of a violation of and subjects it to the penalties prescribed by the law which defines trusts. Rev. Stats., art. 5313; Const. of Texas, art. 1, sec. 26; Railway v. Baptist Church, 108 U.S., 317; People of New York v. Sugar Ref. Co., 2 Law. Rep. Ann., 38; State of Ohio v. Oil Co., 15 Law. Rep. Ann., 158; Ford v. Milk Shippers' Assn., 27 Law. Rep. Ann., 303; People v. Sugar Ref. Co., 9 Law. Rep. Ann., 43; Harding v. Glucose Co., 55 N. E. Rep., 598; Moore v. Bennett, 140 Ill., 80; Salt Co. v. Guthrie, 35 Ohio St., 666; Gibbs v.

Smith, 115 Mass., 592; Swan v. Chorpenning, 20 Cal., 182; People v. Gas Trust Co., 130 Ill., 378; People v. Nussbaum, 66 N. Y. Supp., 136; 1 Mora. on Priv. Corp., section 1; Taylor on Corp., sec. 50.

The court erred in rendering a judgment for the defendant and in failing to render a judgment for the State forfeiting the charter of the defendant corporation, because the evidence established the fact, as found by the court, that the defendant had misused and abused its powers in violation of the policy and of the Constitution [***5] and laws of the State, and had usurped and exercised powers not conferred upon it, in a manner that produces injury to the public by affecting the welfare of the people, in this: (a) That it acquired and thereby brought under one management and prevented and is preventing competition between existing competing cotton compresses, the same being competing aids to commerce. (b) That it acquired and thereby brought under one ownership and management existing competing cotton compresses, the same being competing aids to commerce, for the purpose of closing them down. (c) That it acquired and thereby brought under one ownership and management existing competing cotton compresses, the same being competing aids to commerce, and thereby created and is now maintaining a monopoly in the business of compressing cotton.

A corporate franchise is granted and held upon condition that it be exercised for the attainment of the objects specified, and when a corporation is guilty of acts contrary to either the statute or common law, the charter of the corporation may be forfeited. Rev. Stats., art. 3528; Insurance Co. v. State, 86 Texas, 274; 1 Eddy on Combinations, 607; Coal Co. v. Coal Co., 68 [***6] Pa., 186; 2 Mora. on Priv. Corp., sec. 1024; People of New York v. Sugar Ref. Co., 2 Law. Rep. Ann., 39; People v. Live Stock Exchange Co., 39 Law. Rep. Ann., 377.

A corporation which exceeds its powers in any important particular commits a breach of an implied condition of the contract, and may be properly held subject to the penalty of a forfeiture. Insurance Co. v. State, 86 Texas, 274; Debenture Co. v. Louisiana, 180 U.S., 320; 5 Thomp. on Corp., 609; 2 Cook on Corp., 633; 1 Eddy on Combinations, sec. 607.

At the hearing of this case in the District Court and on its submission in the appellate court it was assumed that the anti-trust statutes of 1889 and 1895 were valid, but the Court of Civil Appeals, following the holding of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Connally v. Union Sewer Pipe Company, based their decision, affirming the judgment appealed from, upon the ground that each of these enactments were unconstitutional. It is respectfully submitted that the constitutionality of the statutes referred to is not involved in this case, the sole purpose of which is to forfeit the charter of the defendant corporation.

A charter of a corporation is a contract [***7] between the sovereignty which grants it and the incorporators. The State grants a charter subject to any conditions which it may see proper to impose. It could reserve the right to repeal the charter at any time and for any reason, or without reason. 4 Thomp. on Corp., sec. 4512. When the corporators accept the charter they accept it subject to this right, and are estopped from raising the question of the legality of the terms of the contract which they have made. There is no difference in this respect between the charter of a domestic corporation and the permit granted to a foreign corporation authorizing it to transact business within the State.

In the case of the Waters Pierce Oil Company v. State of Texas, 177 United States, 28, in which the constitutionality of the Texas anti-trust statutes of 1889 and 1895 were presented, the Supreme Court of the United States held that it was immaterial whether they were constitutional or not; that although discriminations were imposed by these statutes (discriminations which have since been held by the same court to have rendered the law nugatory), still the corporation acceded to the conditions (however reasonable or unreasonable, discriminatory [***8] or otherwise they may have been) upon which the State was willing to and did grant it the desired permit, and that for the violation of these conditions the permit could be canceled. If the Waters Pierce Oil Company had been a domestic corporation its charter could have been canceled as its permit was, and this entirely regardless of the question as to whether or not the statutes of 1889 and 1895 were constitutional.

In the case of Connally v. Union Sewer Pipe Company, 184 United States, 540, it is expressly stated by the justice who rendered the opinion of that court, that if the defendant in that case had been a domestic corporation its charter could have been forfeited. This is entirely in accord with the decision in the case of the Waters Pierce Oil Company v. State, and is in line with the holding of the courts, including the Supreme Court of the United States. Doyle v.

Insurance Co., 94 U.S., 535; People v. Fire Assn., 92 N. Y., 311; Vose v. Cockroft, 44 N. Y., 415; Phyfe v. Eimer, 45 N. Y., 103.

A. M. Carter and Crane, Greer & Wharton [from brief in appellate court], for defendant in error. -- There is no evidence that the incorporators or promoters of the defendant [***9] company had any illegal purpose in procuring the charter of defendant company, which the Attorney-General, in his brief, admits to be valid on its face. Hooper v. Gates, 39 S. W. Rep., 1079; Tobler v. Austin, 53 S. W. Rep., 706; Wolff v. Hirschfield, 57 S. W. Rep., 572; McClurg's Appeal, 58 Pa. St., 51; Kelsy v. Pf. C. Co., 19 Abb. M. C., 434; 45 Hun, 15; People v. Nussbaum, 66 N. Y. Supp., 134; Morse v. Mason, 103 Mass., 560; Match Co. v. Roeber, 106 N. Y., 483; 1 Eddy on Com., sec. 620; Craft v. McConoughy, 22 Am. Rep., 171.

The Legislature did not intend by the acts of 1889 and 1895, or either of them, to prohibit the organization of corporations for the purpose of purchasing competing properties. That end was sought to be attained only by the Act of 1899, which does not include compress companies within its aims. Anti-Trust Acts 1889; Anti-Trust Act 1895; Anti-Trust Act 1899; Insurance Co. v. State, 86 Texas, 250.

It is not unlawful for an individual or a corporation to merely acquire competing properties. 1 Eddy on Com., sec. 620; Match Co. v. Roeber, 106 N. Y., 483; Craft v. McConoughy, 22 Am. Rep., 171.

It was not unlawful for the promoters of the defendant corporation [***10] to procure the charter in question, it being authorized by statutes of the State. Rev. Stats., art. 642, subdiv. 28.

Two lawful acts committed in a lawful way, namely, the procuring of a charter in a manner authorized by law and the acquisition of property thereunder, do not prove a criminal conspiracy, but the intention to defraud or to restrain trade, if it existed, must be proven by evidence aliunde. 6 Am. and Eng. Enc. of Law, 2 ed., 840 and note thereto, 864 and note thereto; Blain v. State, 33 Texas Cr. App., 236; Atkinson v. State, 34 Texas Cr. App., 424; Menges v. State, 25 Texas Cir. App., 710; 2 Bish. New Crim. Proc., 237-247.

Crane, Greer & Wharton [on writ of error], for defendant in error. -- If the anti-trust statute of 1895 is void because in conflict with the Constitution of the United States, it is a nullity, and is not binding on any person, natural or artificial, or on any corporation, domestic or foreign, and can not impose any duty or inflict any penalty on any corporation. Coal Co. v. Barton, Sup. Court Rep., Dec. 5, 1901, p. 5; Insurance Co. v. Morse, 20 Wall., 445-459; Southern Pacific Co. v. Denton, 146 U.S., 207; Commonwealth v. Coal Co., 97 Ky., [***11] 243; Bigelow v. Nickerson, 30 Law. Rep. Ann., 340; Rece v. Newport News, 32 W. Va., 170-173.

The charter of the defendant company is a contract between it and the State, which can not be forfeited except for violation of the contract itself, or for the violation of a valid law of the State. Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat., 518, 519; Rev. Stats., arts, 2901, 4343; State v. Railway, 24 Texas, 80; People v. Manhattan, 9 Wend., 357; State v. Turnpike Co., 2 Sneed (Tenn.), 254.

The Court of Civil Appeals having decided that there was no evidence of any combination, or any agreement in violation of the statute, this court is without jurisdiction to revise its ruling and to determine to the contrary, and to substitute its decision on a question of fact for the decision of the Court of Civil Appeals. Const., art. 5, sec. 6; Rev. Stats., art. 940; Warren v. City of Denison, 89 Texas, 557; Agency Co. Case, 86 Texas, 179; Dillingham v. Richards, 87 Texas, 247; Railway v. Levine, 87 Texas, 440; Schley v. Blum, 22 S. W. Rep., 667.

Baker, Botts, Baker & Lovett, also for defendant in error. -- The anti-trust statutes of this State are in contravention of section 1, article 14, [***12] of the amendments of the Constitution of the United States, providing that no State shall deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws, and are therefore void.

Since the statutes are in contravention of the Federal Constitution, they are absolutely void, and can not authorize the forfeiture of defendant's charter, or be given any effect whatever as laws.

The transactions in question are not illegal under the common law, and if they were, the penalty of forfeiture could not be inflicted.

Even if the anti-trust statutes are entitled to any effect whatever in this case, they are not applicable to the occupation or service of compressing cotton, for there being no element of barter or sale involved, combinations affecting that business are not prohibited by such statutes.

The anti-trust statutes of this State were not intended to prohibit the purchase and sale of property where the restriction of competition is merely an incident but not the controlling object and purpose. An intent to suppress or restrict competition is the gist of the offenses denounced by the statute; [***13] and no such intent appears in this case.

Rates for the compression of cotton are subject to regulation by the Railroad Commission, and are therefore not within the operation of the anti-trust statutes in any event.

Judges: Brown, Associate Justice.

Opinion by: BROWN

Opinion

---

[*607] [**59] The Attorney-General instituted this suit in the District Court of Travis County, Fifty-third District, against [*608] the defendant in error, a corporation chartered under the general law of the State of Texas, on the 10th day of June, 1901, by a charter which authorized it "to construct or purchase and maintain mills, gins, cotton compresses, grain elevators, wharves, and public warehouses for the storage of products and commodities, and the purchase, sale, and storage of products and commodities by grain elevator and public warehouse companies, and the loan of money by such elevator and public warehouse companies." The place of business of said corporation being designated as "in the counties of Dallas, Ellis, Navarro, Henderson, Smith, Kaufmann, Van Zandt, Wood, Raines, Rockwall, Hunt, Hopkins, Delta, Fannin, Collin, Grayson, Cook, Montague, Clay, Jack, Wise, Denton, Tarrant, Parker, Eastland, [***14] Jones, Taylor, Wichita, Johnson, Hood, Erath and Hill."

It is charged that the incorporators, "Neil P. Anderson, B. L. Anderson, C. J. Sorrells, P. R. Freeman, Richard Clark, W. E. Campbell, and F. J. Phillips each made and entered into a combination of their capital, skill, and acts, and an agreement, confederation, and understanding with each of the others, and all together, for the purpose of creating and carrying on restrictions in trade and commerce and preventing competition in the aids of commerce."

It is alleged that said parties agreed to buy and acquire certain properties situated in the northern part of the State of Texas, and thereby prevent competition between the said cotton compresses, and, in pursuance of said agreement, the said parties executed and filed a charter in the form required by law; that in pursuance of the said agreement and by virtue of the authority conferred by the charter, the corporation, on the 11th day of September, 1901, purchased three compresses in the city of Dallas, -- being the only compresses in that city; a compress at Terrell; one at Gainesville, and one at Cisco, -- all of said compresses being competing aids to commerce, were bought [***15] and acquired for the purpose of, and did in fact, create and carry out restrictions in trade and commerce, and are preventing competition between aids to commerce. The petition declares that these acts were in violation of the anti-trust law of Texas and worked a forfeiture of the charter of the said corporation, and the court is asked, upon a hearing, to declare the said charter to be forfeited.

The case was tried before the Hon. F. G. Morris, judge of the Fifty-third District, Travis County, who rendered judgment against the State of Texas, from which judgment appeal was taken to the Court of Civil Appeals of the Third Supreme Judicial District, which court affirmed the judgment of the trial court.

We make the following condensed statement of the facts agreed upon by the parties:

The corporation was regularly chartered on the 10th day of June, 1901, by filing with the Secretary of State a written charter containing all of the essentials prescribed by the statute. The purposes declared in the charter are those alleged in the State's petition hereinabove copied, [*609] and the places designated in the charter are the same alleged in the said petition.

The City of Dallas [***16] is situated about the center of the north half of the State of Texas, 76 miles south of Red River. The town of Terrell is on the Texas & Pacific and Midland Railroads, about 30 miles east of the city of Dallas. The town of Gainesville is situated on the Missouri, Kansas & Texas and Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fe railroads, about 88 miles northwest of the city of Dallas; and the town of Cisco is situated on the Texas & Pacific and Texas Central railroads, 146 miles west of the city of Dallas.

That in the year 1901 there were raised in the counties in which the corporation was authorized to do business 1,431,000 bales of cotton.

There are about seventy compresses in the State of Texas, the location of each of which is not necessary to be stated here, but was agreed upon by the parties. The Clarksville Compress Company, a Texas corporation, owned a compress in Dallas, which was operated until about the 10th day of March, 1901; the defendant purchased the properties of the said compress company on the 11th day of September, 1901. The Dallas New Cotton Compress Company, organized under the laws of Texas, owned a compress in the city of Dallas, which the defendant purchased and acquired [***17] on the 11th day of September, 1901. The Texas Compress Company, a Texas corporation, owned a compress in the city of Dallas, which the defendant in error acquired on the 11th day [**60] of September, 1901. The Texas Compress Company, likewise a Texas corporation, owned a compress in the city of Terrell, which the defendant purchased on the 11th day of September, 1901. The Gainesville Compress and Warehouse Company, a Texas corporation, owned a compress in the city of Gainesville, which the defendant purchased on the 11th day of September, 1901. The Cisco Compress Company, a Texas corporation, owned a compress in the town of Cisco, which the defendant purchased on the 11th day of September, 1901.

We make a condensed statement of the rules and regulations of the Railroad Commission of Texas concerning the compression of cotton, presenting those provisions which bear upon the question before the court:

(1) The railroad companies are required to pay the cost of compressing cotton, which can not exceed 10 cents per hundred pounds.

(2) All cotton must be compressed at the shipping point if there be an accessible compress at that place.

(3) If there be no compress at the point [***18] of shipment, then the cotton must be compressed at the press nearest to the point of shipment and in the line of transportation towards the final destination of the cotton, being seventy miles from the point of destination.

(4) At the request of the shipper, the railroad company may carry the cotton to a place for compression not in the line of shipment, if it be the nearest compress to the place from which the shipment is made.

[*610] (5) If the point at which the shipment originates be a junction between two or more railroads, at which there is no compress, and the shipper shall direct the cotton to be compressed at another junction of the same railroads, if either railroad can, in accordance with the rules of the commission, carry the cotton to the junction for compression, then either of the other roads may carry it to the same place, although in doing so the cotton would be carried by other compresses on the line of the carrying road.

(6) The concentration of cotton shall be made at a point in the direction of the destination of the shipment, except that in case the shipper shall request the railroad company to carry the cotton for concentration to a point not in the [***19] direction of the shipment, but on its own line of road, if such point be nearer to the origin of the shipment.

(7) If it be desired to concentrate cotton at a point which is the junction of two or more railroads and the cotton to be concentrated is offered for shipment at another point or junction of the same railroads, if either railroad company can, in accordance with the rules, carry the cotton to the desired point for concentration, then either of the other railroads may carry it over their own line to the same point of junction, although in doing so it would be carried by other compresses.

The defendant in error has operated all of the compresses bought by it in compliance with the rules of the Railroad Commission, except that the compress purchased of the Clarksville Compress Company was dismantled for removal before it was purchased, and has not been operated; and the Texas compress at Dallas was out of repair, and the cotton crop so light that the other compress could do all the work that was required; hence the Texas compress has not been operated during the last year.

The capacity and average annual business of each compress purchased by the defendant is as follows: [***20] Clarksville compress, capacity 60,000 bales, average number of bales compressed annually 12,500; the Texas compress, capacity 60,000, average number of bales compressed annually 30,000; the Dallas new compress, capacity 100,000 bales, average number compressed annually 50,000; the Terrell compress, capacity 60,000 bales, average number compressed annually 40,000; the Gainesville compress, capacity 75,000 bales, average number of bales compressed annually 65,000; the Cisco compress, capacity 60,000 bales, average number of bales compressed annually 40,000.

To be profitable, a compress must turn out 25,000 bales annually. If run to their full capacity, the above named compresses would yield a net profit of 20 cents per bale. All compresses in the State of Texas charge the rate fixed by the commission, -- 10 cents per hundred pounds.

Before the incorporators filed the charter they consulted competent counsel, who advised that the transaction would not violate the anti-trust law.

The Act of 1895, under which this action was brought, contains the following provisions:

HN1 [↑] "Art. 5313. A trust is a combination of capital, skill, or acts by two [*611] or more persons, firms, corporations, [***21] or associations of persons, or either two or more of them, for either, any or all of the following purposes:

"1. To create or carry out restrictions in * * * aids to commerce * * *.

HN2 [↑] "Art. 5314. Any corporation holding a charter under the laws of the State of Texas which shall violate any of the provisions of this chapter shall thereby forfeit its charter and franchise, and its corporate existence shall cease and determine.

HN3 [↑] "Art. 5315. For a violation of any of the provisions of this chapter by any corporation mentioned herein, it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General or district or county attorney, or either of them, upon his own motion, and without leave or order of any court or judge, to institute suit or quo warranto proceedings in Travis County, at Austin, or at the county seat of any county in the State where such corporation exists, does business, or may have a domicile, for the forfeiture of its charter rights and franchise, and the dissolution of its corporate existence."

The State seeks to forfeit the charter of the defendant corporation because the incorporators combined "to restrict aids to commerce, [**611]" and procured the charter with intent to carry [***22] out that purpose. The defendant insists that the law is unconstitutional, therefore void in whole, and will not support the action to forfeit the charter. Upon the same objection we held the anti-trust law of 1889 to be constitutional, and [ILLEGIBLE WORD] is no such difference between the two laws as would affect the decision of this question. We believe that our decision is correct; that the law is not in contravention of the Constitution of the State nor of the United States. Houck v. Brewing Assn., 88 Texas, 189. In the case of [ILLEGIBLE WORD] v. The Union S. and P. Co., 22 Supreme Court Reporter, 431, the Supreme Court of the United States held that a statute of the State of Illinois, in all essential particulars the same as the act of 1895, was in conflict with the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States because it excepted "agricultural products and live stock while in the hands of the producer or raiser." We recognize the superior authority of the Supreme Court of the United States upon this question, and in obedience to its decision we shall hold that HN4 [↑] in so far as the law of 1895 comes within the terms of the Connolly case, it is invalid; it [***23] will not support an action by the State to recover a penalty for a violation of the law, nor will it, in suits between corporations or individuals, support a defense based upon the fact that the right of action originated in a violation of the anti-trust law. But to the extent that the statute of this State is not embraced in the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, we shall adhere to our former decision that it is constitutional and valid, and therefore enforceable by the State.

In the case of Waters Pierce Oil Company v. The State of Texas, 177 United States, 28, the very question that is now before this court was decided by the Supreme Court of the United States. In that case the State sued to revoke the license of the Waters Pierce Oil Company to do business in Texas, alleging as a reason therefor that it violated the anti-trust [*612] law of 1889. The judgment of the State court forfeited and revoked the license of the corporation to do business in Texas, and the case was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States upon a writ of error. The question was sharply presented upon the specific objection that the statute was void because of the very reasons [***24] upon which the court held the Illinois statute void in the Connolly case; but the Supreme Court of the United States held that under the law of 1889 the license to do business in Texas might be revoked, although the statute should be held void upon the grounds claimed by the corporation, which was conceded in the Connolly case. The judgment of the State court in the former case could not have been affirmed except by holding the statute to be constitutional, or if void as to the enforcement of the penalty, it was valid in so far as it reserved the right to the State to revoke the license because of the violation of the anti-trust law. There is no difference between that case and the present; we therefore hold that HN5[↑] the law of 1895, tested by the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, is valid to the extent that it authorizes the State to revoke the license of a foreign corporation, or to forfeit the charter of a domestic corporation, for acts done which are forbidden by the anti-trust law.

The defendant in error claims that there is no evidence tending to prove that the incorporators secured the charter and organized this corporation "to create and carry out restrictions [***25] in aids to commerce," and that the judgment should be affirmed, notwithstanding the State might have the right to forfeit the charter if the proof established a violation of the anti-trust law. We are of opinion that this contention is sound, and that there is no evidence which tends to support the charge upon which the forfeiture of the defendant's charter is sought.

HN6[↑] Article 642, Revised Statutes, subdivision 28, expresses a purpose for which a corporation may be formed in the following terms:

"The construction or purchase and maintenance of mills, gins, cotton compresses, grain elevators, wharves, and public warehouses for the storage of products and commodities, and the purchase, sale, and storage of products and commodities by grain elevators and public warehouse companies, and the loan of money by such elevator or public warehouse companies."

The charter expresses the purpose of the corporation in the very language of the statute; therefore it can not be said that the purposes for which it was organized, as expressed in the charter, furnish any evidence of an intention to violate the law. The corporation could lawfully do everything expressed in the charter, and might [***26] lawfully buy all of the compresses that it purchased. The right to forfeit the charter depends upon the intent with which it was procured, and it devolved upon the State to establish an unlawful intent to justify the forfeiture claimed.

HN7[↑] In determining the question of intention, we must consider as true every fact which can be fairly inferred from the evidence, and we are of opinion that the acquisition, on the same day, of six compresses situated in localities distant from each other, will support the inference that the [*613] purpose of the promoters in organizing the corporation was to acquire those properties, and if the facts show that in doing so they have violated the law, then we are of opinion the evidence would justify the conclusion that their intention in forming the corporation was to accomplish the unlawful purpose. It is not unlawful for the corporation to buy all of the properties that it acquired, nor was it unlawful for it to acquire them all at the same time, and we see nothing in that fact which tends to show that the object, at [**62] the time of organizing the corporation, was to do a lawful act to effect an unlawful purpose.

It is contended on behalf [***27] of the State that the effect of this purchase was to restrict aids to commerce and to destroy competition between the purchased compresses. We must bear in mind that we are searching for the intention of the parties in filing the charter, and to arrive at that must look at the facts from their standpoint. The evidence shows that seventy compresses existed in the State of Texas, located in various parts of the State, which at the time, and since, charged 10 cents per hundred pounds for compressing cotton; hence there was at that time no competition as to charges between any compresses in the State. It is true the Railroad Commission had no direct control over the rates to be charged for compressing cotton; but by fixing the amount to be paid by the railroad companies, the commission indirectly but effectually fixed the sum to be received by compresses, and by regulating the delivery of cotton, by the railroads, for compression, the compress at each point was protected in its legitimate business and confined to its own territory. Competition between compresses is not probable and barely possible under those rules. There being no competition between any of the compresses purchased [***28] by the defendant corporation, competition was not destroyed or restricted, -- it did not exist. Taking the rules of the Railroad Commission into account, we can not understand how the corporation expected to restrict competition between those properties, for under those rules it was impossible for the compress at Gainesville to compete with the compress at Terrell, at Dallas, or at Cisco, because if cotton should be started south at any point south of Gainesville, the rules required it to be compressed at the next press on its line of shipment in the direction of its final destination, by any route it would pass intermediate compresses, and could not reach Dallas for compression; this is true also of Cisco; neither could cotton be carried for compression from or through Terrell to Dallas, and all cotton shipped from intermediate points must be carried to the nearest compress in the direction of its destination. No competition could exist between compresses at Dallas and Terrell. But it is claimed that competition was destroyed between the three compresses in Dallas. The evidence shows that rates were never changed, and fully and fairly explains why the two compresses were not operated [***29] in Dallas last season. It is asserted that if the three compresses had remained separate at Dallas, one or more of them might have reduced the price of compressing cotton. This is so remote a probability that, under existing conditions, it can not have weight in determining the question of [*614] intent. We are of the opinion that there was no evidence upon which the court could have entered a judgment forfeiting the charter of the defendant corporation; we therefore affirm the judgments of the Court of Civil Appeals and of the District Court.

Affirmed.

---

End of Document

State ex rel. Crow v. Armour Packing Co.

Supreme Court of Missouri

March 20, 1903, Decided

No Number in Original

Reporter

173 Mo. 356 *; 73 S.W. 645 **; 1903 Mo. LEXIS 257 ***

THE STATE ex inf. CROW, Attorney-General, v. ARMOUR PACKING COMPANY, HAMMOND PACKING COMPANY, CUDAHY PACKING COMPANY, SWIFT & COMPANY, ARMOUR & COMPANY, and HENRY KRUG PACKING COMPANY.

Disposition: [***1] Writ of ouster awarded conditionally.

Core Terms

---

meat, prices, butchers, dressed, coolers, beef, pork, pool, packing company, combinations, retail, cured, products, dealers, fresh, lard, prevent competition, rebates, consuming public, do business, commodities, coal, employees, selling, plants, fine, confederation, manufactured, conspiracy, franchises

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Business & Corporate Law > General Partnerships > Management Duties & Liabilities > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Oil, Gas & Mineral Interests > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Energy & Utilities Law > Financing > Grants & Reservations > Joint Ventures & Partnerships

HN1 [blue icon] General Partnerships, Management Duties & Liabilities

Mo. Rev. Stat. § 8965 (1899) makes it unlawful for any persons, associations, partnerships, or corporations to become a member of or a party to any pool, trust, agreement, combination, confederation, or understanding with any other corporation, partnership, individual or any other person or association of persons, to regulate or fix the price of any article of manufacture, mechanism, merchandise, commodity, convenience, repair, any product of mining, or any article or thing whatsoever, or the price or premium to be paid for insuring property against loss or damage by fire, lightning, or storm, or to maintain said price when so regulated, or fixed, or to enter into any such pool to fix or limit the amount or quantity of any such articles.

173 Mo. 356, *356L<sup>A</sup>3 S.W. 645, **645L<sup>A</sup>903 Mo. LEXIS 257, ***1

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

HN2 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Cartels & Horizontal Restraints

Mo. Rev. Stat. § 8966 (1899) prohibits any combinations that are designed or tend to lessen full and free competition in the importation, manufacture or sale of any article, product or commodity in this state.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Foreign Corporations > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Sentencing > Forfeitures > General Overview

HN3 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Cartels & Horizontal Restraints

Mo. Rev. Stat. § 8971 (1899) punishes the violation of the law by a forfeiture of the corporate rights and franchises, if it be a home corporation, or a forfeiture of its right to do business in this state if it be a foreign corporation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN4 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Cartels & Horizontal Restraints

A combination between independent dealers to prevent competition between themselves in the sale of an article of prime necessity is, in the contemplation of law, an act inimical to trade or commerce, without regard to what may be done under and in pursuance of it, and although the object of such a combination was merely the due protection of the parties against ruinous rivalry, and no attempt was made to charge undue or excessive prices; where it appears that the parties acted under the agreement, an indictment for conspiracy is sustainable.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

HN5 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing

In order to vitiate a contract or combination it is not essential that its result shall be a complete monopoly; it is sufficient if it really tends to that end and to deprive the public of the advantages which flow from free competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN6 Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

The law will not permit any one to restrain a person from doing what his own interests and the public welfare require he should do.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

The punishment to be imposed rests in the sound judicial discretion of the court. It need not necessarily be a general judgment of ouster. It may be an ouster of the right to do the particular act complained of; or it may be a suspensive judgment of ouster with a fine accompaniment; or it may be a simple fine if it appears that the trust, pool or conspiracy complained of and proved, has been abandoned. In short, the character of the judgment rests in the discretion of the court.

Headnotes/Summary

---

Headnotes

1. Conspiracy in Restraint of Trade: Proof: Agency: Solicitors: Competency. In a quo warranto proceeding to oust certain packing house companies from doing business in the State on the ground that they had formed a pool, trust and conspiracy to fix and maintain the price of dressed beef within the State, the evidence which went to establish the pool or trust consisted of the statements of managers of the "coolers," where the dressed beef carcasses were cooled and kept till sold, or of solicitors engaged in the business of soliciting orders from retail butchers, the butchers dealing exclusively with these agents. These statements related to the price at which sales could be made and the reasons for such prices, and to schemes and subterfuges for billing the goods at a price stated or as of certain quantities, and afterwards giving a rebate of the price or sending more meat than the bills called for, and were made by the solicitors or managers of the coolers when engaged in making sales or when allowing such rebates. They were statements of agents touching the business of the companies then being transacted by such agents, who were their only agents whom the buying public saw. Held, that such statements were made by the authorized representatives of the companies, and were admissible in evidence against them for the purpose of establishing such pool or trust, and were just as competent as if they had been made by the highest officer of the company or had been solemnly adopted by the directors or stockholders and entered on the minutes of their meeting.

2. Conspiracy in Restraint of Trade: Proof: Facts in Evidence. The testimony of nine butchers who did business with the five packing companies in a certain city showed that they all got rebates in money or pounds of beef, which in every instance were given by respondents' cooler managers or solicitors, who had exclusive charge of respondents' sales and who said they could not sell the meat for less than a certain price because all the companies had an agreement as to prices which were fixed every Wednesday; that these prices were given to such agents every Thursday, and if any such agent cut the price so given, his company would be fined and that, therefore, they circumvented their fellow-conspirators by giving rebates in prices and weights. The butchers further testified that they had tested these statements by going to the coolers of the respective respondents, and trying to buy their meats at prices cheaper than those made by the agents, but in every instance the prices were exactly as the several agents had stated them; that on various occasions a cooler manager or solicitor had ascertained that a purchaser had got a rebate from another company and he would immediately obtain from such purchaser the papers showing the rebate and take them away with him, and afterwards the agent of the company granting the rebate had complained that the purchaser had got him into trouble by permitting the facts to become known. That on various occasions these agents told the butchers they had better lay in a supply of meat before a certain day, as the prices would go up on that day, which they uniformly did at all the coolers. That in all coolers "concession" meat, or meat that had remained on hand so long that it had become discolored or moldy, was sold, but before it could be sold for less than the established price the managers of the other coolers were called in to examine it and if they believed it to be otherwise than first-class they "conceded" that it might be sold for a price less than the agreed price, and thereupon the manager sold it at the best price he could get. It further appeared that as soon as the ouster proceeding was begun all these arrangements and agreements stopped. Eleven butchers, former managers and inspectors of respondents' coolers in another large city, testified to the same effect. And as to dressed pork in that city, it was admitted by the agents of the five companies that they had an association for fixing and maintaining prices, whose members met once a week, hired a secretary at a salary, and fined each member of the combine for each violation of the prices agreed upon. Held, that these facts abundantly prove that the said respondents had formed a pool, trust and conspiracy to fix and maintain the price of dressed beef within the State, under sections 8965, 8966, and 8971, Revised Statutes 1899, and authorize the court in ousting them from doing business within this State, or otherwise punishing them as the court may deem best for the public good.

3. Conspiracy in Restraint of Trade: Proof: Facts in Evidence: Defenses. Nor is it any defense or bar to such action of ouster that respondents' business has greatly increased in late years, that they employ a large number of persons, that they pay large sums in wages, that the cattle-raising business has greatly increased since they began business, that such business would be injured if respondents were ousted from doing business in the State, that respondents regulate the prices of meat by the prices of cattle, and that much loss would result to resident companies if they were not allowed to operate their plants; nor is the fact that the butchers are as bad as respondents are, in that while they bought "concession" beef at reduced rates and were given rebates in order to draw their trade from other companies or to keep it, they did not sell "concession" meat any cheaper to the public, nor give the public any benefit of the rebates; nor is the fact that the butchers belonged to a union, which fixed the price of beef to consumers, and kept newcomers out of the field; nor is the fact that the combine in one of the cities was never lived up to, their members proving false to their trust agreement so often that they could not make the trust agreement effective.

4. Conspiracy in Restraint of Trade: The Evils of a Trust. Pools, trusts and conspiracies to fix and maintain the prices of the necessities of life, strike at the foundations of government; instill a destructive poison into the life of the body politic; wither the energies of competitors; blight individual investments in legitimate business; drive small and honest dealers out of business for themselves, and make them mere "hewers of wood and drawers of water" for the trust; raise the cost of living and lower the price of wages; take from the average American freeman the ability to supply his family with necessary and wholesome food; force the boys away from school, and into the various branches of trade and labor, and the girls into workshops and other avenues of business and make them bread-winners while they are yet almost infants, because the head of the house can not earn enough to feed and clothe them. The wisdom and experience of all ages and all peoples have demonstrated the necessity for laws against such combinations and for the rigid enforcement of them.

5. Conspiracy in Restraint of Trade: The Evils of a Trust: Public Policy: Constitutionality of Statute. The Missouri statutes against pools, trusts and combinations between independent dealers to fix and maintain the price of an article of prime necessity, are constitutional. But such combinations are against public policy and void, as a matter of American common law, irrespective of whether there is any statute on the subject or not.

6. Conspiracy in Restraint of Trade: Complete Monopoly. In order to be declared invalid as against public policy, or as in violation of the Missouri statutes, it is not essential that the combination constitute a complete monopoly in the things it sells.

7. Conspiracy in Restraint of Trade: Ouster: Punishment. The punishment to be imposed against corporations for entering into a pool, combination and trust, to fix and maintain prices of an article of prime necessity, rests in the sound discretion of the court. And the record showing that the respondents, immediately on the beginning of a quo warranto proceeding by the Attorney-General, abandoned their pool and trust organized for the purpose of fixing and maintaining the price of dressed beef, each is ordered to pay a fine of $ 5,000, and costs within thirty days, and failing to do so that the writ of ouster go.

Counsel: Edward C. Crow, Attorney-General, for informant.

The Missouri statute, article 1, chapter 143, Revised Statutes 1899, has been passed upon by this court and held valid and constitutional. State ex inf. Firemens' Fund Insurance Co., 152 Mo. 45. Such laws have been adjudged constitutional by the United States Supreme Court. United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Association, 171 U.S.

558. The following State Supreme Courts have also held such laws constitutional: People v. Shealen, 139 N. Y. 251; Missouri River Coal Co., v. Barclay Coal Co., 68 Pa. St. 173; Central Ohio Salt Co. v. Guthrie, 35 Ohio St. 666; Anderson v. Jett, 89 Ky. 375; Chapin v. Brown, 83 Ia. 156; Craft v. McAnoughy, 79 Ill. 346; More v. Bennett, 140 Ill. 69; Milwaukee Masons and Builders Association v. Niezerounki, 95 Wis. 129; Vulcan Powder Co. v. Hercules Powder Co., 96 Cal. 150; Texas Standard Oil Co. v. Adowe, 83 Tex. 650; India Bagging Co. v. Kick & Co., 14 La. Ann. 168. The acts of the managers and salesmen and agents of respondents bind the corporations. A corporation can only act through agents, and if the agents' acts or practices are in violation of law, the [***2] corporation must suffer the consequences. A corporation can and must control its agents and must see at its peril that its agents do not violate the law while attending to the business of the company. 152 Mo. 38. The Supreme Court of Missouri, as well as the courts of other States, hold that a corporation is liable for the acts of its agents, committed while in the prosecution of the company's business entrusted to their care, although the act is unknown to the president or board of directors of the corporation. 152 Mo. 381; 47 Mo. 442; 75 Mo. 325; 48 Mo. 152; 3 Mo. App. 442; 2 Mo. App. 540; 55 Mo. 214; 29 Mo. 38; 62 Mo. App. 119; Cooley on Torts (2 Ed.), 119, 120; 44 S. W. 936; 70 Mich. 485; 150 Mo. 113. The officer or agent of the corporation represents the corporation when he is acting within the scope of his duties, and his knowledge, while so engaged, with reference to matters pertaining to that branch of the business of the corporation, is the knowledge of the corporation. Elliott on Private Corporations, 247. The admissions and statements of an agent made while he is acting in the course of the performance of his duties as agent, with reference to any existing state of affairs [***3] of the business in which he is engaged, become a part of the res gestae and are clearly admissible against the principal. 48 Mo. 41. In this case, however, no effort has been made to show that the president and board of directors and the chief officers of the corporation did not have knowledge of the acts of their agents in fixing, maintaining and controlling the prices of the packers' products in this State. In the insurance cases, the officers of the companies were put upon the stand and they testified that the acts of the agents were without authority from them and that they knew nothing of them, but the court held that as the company received the benefit of the acts of the agents and that as the agents were entrusted with the care and conduct of the business of the corporation in this state, their acts bound the corporation. In the case at bar, there is no such denial made by the president and board of directors of the corporation, and respondents stand silent in the face of the proof of the facts that their general managers and salesmen who were entrusted with the conduct of their business and the sale and disposition of their products direct to the butchers and the consuming [***4] public in this State, made and entered into a combination to fix, regulate, maintain and control the prices to be paid for dressed beef, pork and cured meats. The acts of agents of a corporation within the scope of their employment are the acts of the corporation, and are evidence against it. The Supreme Court of this State in 1871, in the case of Northrup v. Mississippi Valley Ins. Co., 47 Mo. 442, said: "A corporation acts through its officers; and the admissions of such officers made in the execution of the duties imposed upon them concerning matters in which they are called upon to act, and which matter is within the scope of the authority usually exercised by them, are evidence against the corporation." Pitts v. Steele Mercantile Company, 75 Mo. App. 232. Declarations and admissions of officers and agents of a corporation are admissible in evidence against the corporation for any purpose for which and under the same circumstances under which declarations and admissions of a natural person are admissible against him, although neither expressly authorized or ratified by the corporation, if they were made by an officer or agent in the course of a transaction on behalf of the corporation, [***5] and within the scope of his general power. 3 Clark & Marshall on Corporations, pp. 2216, 2217, 2218; Kirkstall Brewery Co. v. Railroad, L. R. Q. B. 468; Railroad v. Pearson, 17 Court of App. 401; 70 Fed. 303; 115 Ala. 334; 106 Cal. 337; 6 Colo. 365; 18 Conn. 484; 70 Ga. 86; 103 Ga. 376; 134 Ill. 481; 153 Ind. 119; 77 N. W. (Ia.) 504; 59 Kans. 111; 175 Mass. 471; 113 Mich. 284; 51 N. H. 116; 15 N. J. Eq. 469; 55 N. J. L. 158; 157 N. Y. 694; Steinback v. Ins. Co., 62 App. Div. (N. Y.) 133; 8 N. D. 215; 11 Oh. St. 153; 179 Pa. St. 271; 50 S. Car. 25; Ward v. Tenn. Coal Co., 57 S. W. 193; 91 Tex. 551; 23 Wash. 610; 11 W. Va. 94; 104 Wis. 173. An express agreement to fix, regulate and control the prices of the packers' product is proven in this case. The proof of this express agreement as to the fresh pork is competent evidence against each of the respondents tending to prove the conspiracy between respondents to fix, regulate and control the price to be paid for dressed beef, because it proves an unlawful agreement and relationship to exist between respondents with reference to carrying on a portion of the business that they all engaged in, to-wit, the pork business. 38 Oh. St. 581; 46 [***6] Mich. 268; 2 Day (Conn.) 205; 25 Conn. 486; 6 T. R. 527; 2 Esp. N. 719; 25 Ill. App. 350; 34 Ark. 649; 126 Ill. 150; 6 Am. and Eng. Ency. of Law, pp. 864 and 865; 1 Cush. (Mass.) 189. But the State is not required to prove that the agreement was made in express terms to fix and maintain the prices of dressed beef. State v. Walker, 98 Mo. 104; United States v. Ringskoff, 6 Bissell (U.S.) 259; United States v.

Goldberg, 7 Bissell (U.S.) 175; Drake v. Stewart, 22 C. C. A. 104; Gardner v. Preston, 2 Day (Conn.) 205; Speis v. People, 122 Ill. 213; Archer v. State, 106 Ind. 426; Taylor County v. Standlee, 79 Ia. 666; Bloomer v. State, 48 Md. 521; Kelly v. People, 55 N. Y. 565. Ordinarily conspiracies must be proved by circumstantial evidence. Bradford v. Sanner, 40 Pa. St. 9. An agreement between conspirators may be implied or expressed. 2 Fed. 754; 67 Fed. 698; 44 Fed. 896; 89 Ala. 121; Spies v. People, 122 Ill. 170; 6 Am. and Eng. Ency. of Law, 840. Where corporations receive the benefit of the acts of the agents and the fruits of the business transacted by them, the corporations are bound by the agents' acts. 44 S. W. 936; Elliott on Pri. Corp., sec. 247; 152 Mo. 37; 144 Mo. 420. It is [***7] not necessary to invoke the provisions of section 8971, Revised Statutes 1899, making acts of a foreign corporation prima facie proof of the act of the corporation, and the State invokes no prima facie presumptions under this statute, because agency of the managers and salesmen of respondents has been proven in this case just as it would be in any other where the question of the fact of agency is to be determined. If a conspiracy to fix, maintain, regulate and control the prices to be paid for dressed pork, beef and cured meats between respondents and others has been proven, then the acts and declarations of one of the respondents or its agents in the conduct of the business of respondent, is evidence against all of the respondents. 98 Mo. 104; 2 Pet. (U.S.) 359; 91 U.S. 426; 144 U.S. 263; 44 Fed. 896; 67 Fed. 698; 7 Wall. (U.S.) 132; 22 C. C. A. 104; 124 Mo. 1; 116 Mo. 605; Spies v. People, 3 Am. St. 320; 6 Am. and Eng. Ency. of Law (2 Ed.) 866, 870, 871; 7 Allen (Mass.) 541. This is the rule in civil as well as in criminal cases. 43 N. H. 36. The facts proven show a violation of the common law of Missouri by the respondents. Combinations and agreements which destroy or have a tendency [***8] to destroy competition in trade, by fixing, regulating and controlling the price of a commodity, are illegal at common law. 140 Ill. 80; 171 Ill. 484; 170 Ill. 551; 121 N. Y. 582. And if we had no antitrust statute in Missouri, the facts established in this case would make the respondents guilty of an unlawful combination and agreement at common law. 85 Fed. 282. Our Legislature has a right to declare, and has declared, that all corporations, foreign as well as domestic, violating our antitrust act, shall forfeit their right to do business in Missouri. 100 Mass. 531; 10 Wal. 410; 28 Oh. St. 521; 6 Kans. 245; 152 Mo. 1.

Karnes, New & Krauthoff, and Frank Hagerman for respondents.

(1) The report is founded upon hearsay and incompetent evidence. Adams v. Railroad, 74 Mo. 513; 1 Greenl. Ev. (14 Ed.), sec. 114; 1 Am. and Eng. Ency. Law (2 Ed.), 695; Dorne v. Mfg. Co., 11 Cush. (Mass.) 205; Barber v. Bennett, 62 Vt. 50. The res gestae was the sale to the butcher -- not as to whether the principal was in some combination. There was no pretense that the persons who made the statements had formed a combination, but the statement was that some one else higher in authority did so. (2) [***9] It is only fair to the commissioner to say that his idea must have been that the doctrine of the Insurance Cases, 152 Mo. 1, was that no corporation charged with a violation of the antitrust law could question the authority of any employee, and hence all statements of all employees could be shown. Such a rule applies to no other kind of case and would make such a discrimination as would deprive respondents of the protection of the fourteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution. The Insurance Cases teach no such doctrine, for the rule is as stated in 9 Am. and Eng. Ency. of Law (2 Ed.), 590. Milwaukee Harv. Co. v. Tymich, 68 Ark. 225; s. c., 58 S. W. 252; Winchester, etc., Co. v. Creary, 116 U.S. 161; Railroad v. Arnett, 111 Fed. 854; Gembel v. Adams, 54 Iowa 389; s. c., 6 N. W. 582; Corbin v. Adams, 6 Cush. 93; Batchelder v. Emery, 20 N. H. 165. (3) The alleged high prices in beef at the time of filing of the information was because of the high price of the live animals. The testimony on this subject is: The prices of the live animal controlled the price of the fresh meat. When the price of the live animal went up the price of the fresh meat likewise increased. It so happened that [***10] in the spring of 1902 the prices were unusually large, based on the short supply of cattle, and the high price of grain and the drouth. The testimony of R. H. Allen is especially valuable in this connection and it finds strong support in the article of Fred C. Croxton, one of statisticians of the United States Bureau of Statistics, entitled: "The Advance in Beef Prices," found in the January, 1903, number of the Review of Reviews (pp. 69-74.) Many of the State's witnesses expressly conceded that the advance in price was only in accordance with the advance in the price of the live animal. (4) The Attorney-General is insistent upon a judgment of ouster. A suspensive judgment of ouster was entered in the Insurance Cases and without careful thought a like judgment might be suggested in these cases. Unlike the case of the Insurance Companies, Swift & Company and Hammond Packing Company have extensive packing house plants at St. Joseph, and any kind of judgment of ouster would absolutely prevent the use of the property if section 8972, of the Revised Statutes 1899, be valid, or at least create such a cloud on the title as to render difficult any future sale of the property. (5) Even if a [***11] judgment of ouster should go, it should be limited to ousting respondents from the particular illegal act charged, i.

e., from fixing or maintaining prices to local butchers on the sale of fresh meats from the coolers at St. Joseph and St. Louis. The respondents have large and extensive packing houses; they buy millions of dollars of live stock in this State and ship their products to all portions of the State. These acts are separate and distinct from the mere sale of fresh meats to local butchers from local coolers, which was an infinitesimal part of respondents' business. Therefore, a judgment should go no further than to declare "respondents are ousted from the alleged right or privilege of being parties to any combination to fix and maintain the prices on fresh meats sold from the coolers at St. Joseph and St. Louis to the local butchers in those cities." Such is the extent of the offense or illegal right exercised. There is no doubt of the right to render a restricted judgment of ouster. This was decided in State ex inf. v. Lincoln Trust Co., 144 Mo. 599, where the court refused to enter a general ouster because of illegal acts but restricted the judgment to one of ouster against [***12] the particular illegal acts. So it has elsewhere been decided. State ex rel. v. Portland Natural Gas & Oil Co., 153 Ind. 483; s. c., 53 N. E. 1092; State ex rel. v. Railroad, 47 Oh. St. 130; s. c., 23 N. E. 928; State ex rel. v. Standard Oil Co., 49 Oh. St. 137; s. c., 30 N. E. 291. Such a course was pursued in Yore v. Superior Court, 108 Cal. 431; s. c., 41 Pac. 477; State v. Turnpike Co., 10 Conn. 167; State v. Topeka, 30 Kan. 653; s. c., 2 Pac. 592; State v. Regents, 55 Kan. 389; s. c., 40 Pac. 656; People v. Railroad, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 113; Com. v. Canal Co., 43 Pa. St. 301. These cases only apply the well-settled rule that in quo warranto the character of judgment rests entirely within the discretion of the court. State v. Bernoudy, 36 Mo. 281; Weston v. Lane, 40 Kan. 479; s. c., 20 Pac. 260; 5 Thompson on Corporations, sec. 6812. So it was decided in State ex rel. v. Omaha & Council Bluffs Ry. & Bridge Co., 91 Iowa 517; s. c., 60 N. W. 126, a case against a foreign corporation failing to take out a license, and where the judgment was of ouster unless defendant should within sixty days qualify under the foreign corporation act. (6) No judgment of ouster should be entered. (a) A [***13] general judgment of ouster would be unequal and unfair to Swift & Company and Hammond Packing Company. These companies have large packing houses at St. Joseph. A general judgment of ouster prevents the future use of this property (R. S. 1899, sec. 8972) by respondents or their assigns. Nelson Morris & Company have a like plant at St. Joseph. It is a copartnership, and can not be ousted, and yet it was found to be a party to the combination. Hence, for the same offense, Swift and Hammond lose their property and their right to do business, leaving their rival with its property and master of the St. Joseph business, and thus the court, by a stroke of the pen, creates an absolute monopoly. Armour Packing Company and Cudahy Packing Company have plants in Kansas City, almost adjoining the State line. They can cease doing business in this State but they still have their packing houses and can continue to serve the public elsewhere. They are found to have been in the same combination with Swift and Hammond, yet the latter must close and lose their packing houses while their lucky conspirators save theirs. It is, therefore, manifest that a general judgment of ouster would operate unequally, [***14] imposing upon those found equally guilty unequal penalties. (b) The following are other packers dealing in fresh meats at St. Joseph: Morton Gregson & Company, of Nebraska City, Nebraska; Wolff Packing Company, of Topeka, Kansas; Thudium Company, of Leavenworth, Kansas; and Morrell & Company, of Ottumwa, Iowa. These packers sold at the same prices as respondents, including the Krug Packing Company. No effort was made to charge or prove a case against any of them, though manifestly, if there was a combination, they, in maintaining the same prices, were privy to it. (c) The beef packers in St. Louis are Armour Packing Company, Swift & Company, Nelson Morris & Company, Cudahy Packing Company, St. Louis Dressed Beef Company, Thomas Stringer, Missouri Packing Company, Union Stock Yards Company, Prendeville & Brother, Steitz & Company, John Ball and William Tamme, and the evidence is about as strong against some of these packers as it is against any of the respondents, including that objected to as hearsay. No prosecution was instituted against any of them. (d) At the St. Louis coolers the following are engaged in pork packing and were in the alleged combination as to fresh pork: Philip [***15] Keim, Henry Sartorius, John H. Belz & Company, Louis Gruensfelder, Krey Packing Company, Wissmath & Sons, Charles Heil, D. W. Grant and Laux & Son. Of these Laux & Son, Krey Packing Company, Wissmath & Sons, Charles P. Heil and Louis Gruensfelder openly concede that they were in combination held to be unlawful. No effort is made to prosecute them, though confessedly guilty, and even if it be claimed that they turned State's evidence, and therefore are freed from punishment, it is enough not to punish any of these concerns, and the State ought not to reward them by ousting respondents so as to permit them to do all the business without competition. As to the Krug Packing Company, the report states that no effort was made to press the case against it. (e) At St. Joseph the butchers say that, although they got great concessions in prices, they never gave any benefit thereof to any customer. (f) These same butchers at St. Joseph, Missouri, were in a union or voluntary organization for the purpose of fixing and maintaining prices to the consumers of meat as harmful to the public as anything claimed against respondents.

Judges: MARSHALL, J.

Opinion by: MARSHALL

Opinion

---

[**645] [*368] In [***16] Banc

Quo Warranto.

MARSHALL, J. -- This is a proceeding by quo warranto, instituted by the Attorney-General ex-officio, to oust the defendant corporations from their franchise to do business in this State, because of alleged violations by them of their powers and privileges.

The information charges that between August 22, 1899, and May 9, 1902, they "entered into an agreement, confederation, combination, pool and understanding among themselves, and with each other and Nelson Morris & Company, and Schwartzchild & Sulzberger, and other corporations and persons, to regulate, fix, and control the price to be paid by retail butchers and others for all dressed pork, beef and cured meats and [*369] lard, slaughtered, manufactured and prepared and offered for sale or to be sold in the State of Missouri; and to maintain and control said prices for said products in this State when so regulated and fixed; and to prevent competition in said business in preparing, marketing and selling said products in this State between themselves and others engaged in like business; and that respondents and those others above named have maintained the said prices of dressed beef and pork and fresh [***17] meat, cured meat and lard so prepared, sold and offered for sale by them in this State, by and through their officers, managers, agents, salesmen, servants and employees acting for and in behalf of said corporations, and that by the acts and conduct of said corporations through their officers, salesmen, managers, agents, [*646] servants, and employees competition in the sale of dressed beef, dressed pork, fresh beef and cured meats of all kinds and lard in the markets of Missouri, has been unlawfully prevented and destroyed, to the great detriment of the public."

The information charges that "respondents and those who have combined with them, own, control and supply to the general public, ninety per cent of the dressed pork, beef and meats and all smoked and cured pork, beef and meats and lard and all fresh beef and pork and meats slaughtered, manufactured and cured and prepared and offered for sale or sold for general consumption in the State of Missouri, and that the object and purpose of said combination and agreement is to fix, regulate and maintain the price to be paid by the consuming public for said products above mentioned, and to control said price when so fixed, maintained [***18] and regulated and to destroy competition among themselves and others engaged in like business;" it is charged that "the officers, managers, agents, servants, and employees of the respondents, legally and fully authorized by each of the said several respondents to [*370] act for them and in their behalf in matters relating to the sale and price to be charged for the products above mentioned have since the 21st day of August, 1899, met and continuously from time to time since said day continued to meet, when they have deemed it necessary, and unlawfully agreed and combined to fix and maintain from week to week and day to day an agreed price on the different grades, classes and kinds of dressed beef, fresh beef, dressed pork, hams, bacon, cured meats and lard, which should be sold or offered for sale to the retail butchers and others and the consuming public in Missouri; that at said meetings the officers, managers, employees, and agents of respondents would and did agree upon and fix the price which the respondent corporations through their officers, agents and employees would sell in Missouri from week to week and day to day, the products above mentioned to the consuming public; [***19] that said meetings were held by the said officers, agents and representatives of the respondents for the purpose of fixing and maintaining the agreed price to be charged in St. Louis, Kansas City, St. Joseph and elsewhere in Missouri for the products manufactured, prepared and sold by the respondents; that at said meeting so held from time to time as aforesaid, and for the purpose of controlling and monopolizing the market and preventing competition in the sale of dressed meat, cured meat, pork and lard, and in order that a common uniform price should be charged the retail butchers and the consuming public and all others in the State of Missouri by the agents of all the respondents for the same or similar grades of dressed beef, pork, cured meats and lard, the said officers, managers and agents would agree upon the prices at which all the different classes and kinds of the products above mentioned should be sold in the State of Missouri."

The information then charges that, "the said prices which should be so charged in Missouri for the [*371] said different commodities having been agreed upon as aforesaid at the said meetings, all the officers, managers, agents and servants of [***20] respondents charged and entrusted with the sale to butchers and others of said products throughout Missouri were notified of the prices agreed upon for the period of time during which it had been agreed said prices should be charged, and that the officers, managers, agents and employees of respondents entrusted and charged with the sale to retail butchers, meat dealers, and all others of said products in Missouri, were directed and required to sell said products for said period theretofore agreed upon at the prices fixed and not below the said prices agreed upon at said meeting so held as aforesaid." The information then alleges that "after the prices to be charged had been fixed and agreed upon as aforesaid, the said officers, managers, agents and employees of respondents did not sell and have not sold any of the kinds, classes, and grades of the products above mentioned, in this State to retail butchers, meat dealers and the consuming public, except at the prices fixed and agreed upon." It is then charged that "the agreement and combination so made in the manner as aforesaid, has prevented and does prevent competition in Missouri among respondents and others engaged in the same line [*21] or lines of business in this State, and that said acts of respondents have deprived and do deprive the public of free, full and wholesome competition in the sale of the commodities above mentioned, to the great damage and detriment of the public."

Informant then charges that "the general nature and object of the said combination, pool, agreement and confederation so made as aforesaid by the said respondent corporations by the means and in the manner aforesaid, are:

"First, to fix, regulate, maintain and control by the respondents the price and prices to be paid for all classes, kinds, brands and grades of dressed beef, dressed [*372] pork, hams, bacon and all kinds of cured meats and lard, sold to the retail butchers and dealers in all kinds of fresh and cured meat and the consuming public in the cities of St. Joseph, Kansas City, St. Louis and throughout the State of Missouri.

"Second, to maintain the said price or prices when so fixed as aforesaid to be paid for all classes, kinds and brands of dressed beef, dressed pork, hams, bacon and all other cured meats and lard by the retail butchers, dealers in meat and the consuming public in the cities of St. Joseph, Kansas City, [*22] St. Louis and throughout the State of Missouri; and

"Third, that it is one of the objects of said combination, agreement, pool and confederation [*647] so made as aforesaid by the respondent corporations by the means and in the manner aforesaid to prevent, prohibit and avoid competition among themselves and others in the sale in Missouri of the said commodities dealt in and handled by the said respondents."

The information then charges that "the respondents by the means and manner aforesaid have obtained control of and monopolized to the exclusion of all others, the business of selling all classes and kinds and grades and brands of dressed beef, dressed pork, hams and bacon and cured meats and lard, to the retail butchers, dealers in meat and the consuming public in the State of Missouri to the great detriment of the public."

It is then charged that "by reason of the monopoly and control and exclusion of competition in the sale of said commodities aforesaid in the manner and means aforesaid, the respondents and their agents, officers and managers, have been enabled and now are selling to the butchers and dealers in meat and the consuming public in Missouri, certain grades of [*23] dressed beef, pork, hams, bacon, cured meats and lard of an unwholesome and inferior quality, to the great detriment of the public."

[*373] It is then charged that "the purpose and intention of respondents have been and now are to willfully and unlawfully combine and confederate as aforesaid, with each other, to monopolize and control absolutely and prevent competition in the business of dressed beef and meats as aforesaid in the State of Missouri, and that said respondents are now willfully and unlawfully maintaining said illegal agreement and unlawfully and illegally fixing and controlling prices in the manner aforesaid for said commodities, and which said price for the aforesaid commodities so fixed by the respondent and others acting with them as aforesaid is the minimum price to be charged by respondents throughout the State of Missouri for the different classes, kinds, grades and brands of dressed meat and pork, hams, bacon and cured meats and lard, and that said prices so fixed as aforesaid are the minimum prices at which agents, employees and officers of respondents are allowed to sell said products throughout Missouri."

It is then charged that "by reason of the premises [***24] and facts aforesaid since the 21st of August, 1899, and up to the present time, respondent corporations have grossly offended against the laws of this State and willfully and flagrantly and grossly abused and misused their corporate authority and franchises and privileges and have willfully and unlawfully assumed and willfully usurped authority and privileges not granted said corporations by the laws of Missouri by entering into and becoming a member of and a party to said trust, combination, confederation and pool as aforesaid, to monopolize and control the business of selling dressed beef, dressed pork, ham, bacon and all cured meats and lard in the State of Missouri and by means of said combination aforesaid to prevent competition in said business and to regulate, fix and maintain the price or prices to be charged retail butchers, dealers in meat and the consuming public for the aforesaid [*374] products, and that in pursuance of the aforesaid agreement so made, respondents are now unlawfully and willfully monopolizing and regulating, fixing, maintaining and controlling the prices to be paid by retail butchers, dealers in meat and the consuming public for the products above [***25] mentioned, and that the action of the respondent corporations as hereinabove set out, is a willful and malicious perversion of the franchises granted to said corporations by the State of Missouri, and an illegal, willful usurpation of privileges not granted to them and is a great and permanent injury to the public."

The prayer of the petition is "that respondent corporations each and all of them severally be excluded from all corporate rights and franchises under the laws of the State, and that their rights, authority, license and certificate to do business under the laws of Missouri be declared forfeited, and that each of them and every one of them be ousted from their several franchises, corporate rights and privileges."

The Krug Packing Company answered separately, denying generally the allegations of the information.

The other respondents answered jointly, setting up many specific defenses. On motion of the Attorney-General the court struck out all of the defenses except the sixth paragraph of the second defense pleaded, which "first alleged the corporate organization of each of the above named Armour, Hammond and Cudahy and Swift packing companies as corporations and their [***26] right to do business in Missouri, and then respondents denied that they ever made or entered into an agreement, confederation, combination, pool or understanding, by and among either of them or any other person or corporation to regulate, fix and control the price to be paid by retail butchers or any one else for any kind of pork, beef, cured meats or lard, slaughtered or manufactured, prepared or offered for sale or to be sold in the State of Missouri and elsewhere, [*375] or to maintain or control the prices thereof in this State or to prevent competition in business between respondents and others engaged in like business, nor did respondents ever take any part in maintaining any such agreement, combination, pool or understanding. That none of the officers, managers, agents, servants or employees of this respondent at any time with the consent of the respondent or otherwise agreed and combined to fix or maintain an agreed price of the products handled by respondents which should by respondents be sold or offered for sale to the retail butchers or others or to the consuming public in Missouri, and that respondents never did agree upon or fix the prices at which they would sell [***27] in Missouri such products. Respondents then [**648] denied generally each and every allegation in the information contained except as in this paragraph six of the second defense admitted. Respondents then denied that they ever agreed, entered into, or became a member of or a party to any pool, trust, agreement or understanding with any other person or persons or association of persons, to regulate and fix the price of any article or commodity whatsoever, or the price to be paid therefor; respondents then deny that they were ever parties to any contract, agreement or combination, designed or made with a view to lessen or which tended to lessen full and free competition in the importation, manufacture or sale of any article, product or commodity in this State. Respondents then also denied that they had ever sold to any one any kind of dressed beef, dressed pork, ham, bacon, cured meats and lard, which is or was unwholesome and of an inferior quality, and which was a detriment to the public.

It will be seen that this paragraph is in substance a general denial, and raised a general issue upon the pleadings.

All of the respondents, except the Krug Packing Company, which is a Missouri [***28] corporation, are corporations [*376] organized under the laws of sister States, and have complied with the laws of this State with respect to foreign corporations, and have been licensed to do business in this State. Armour & Company has never done any business in this State, and never was a member of any pool or guilty of any of the acts charged. The Krug Packing Company is not shown ever to have been guilty of the acts charged. This proceeding is therefore quashed as to them, and in speaking of the respondents hereinafter, reference is had only to the Armour Packing Company, the Hammond Packing Company, the Cudahy Packing Company and Swift & Company. Of these the Hammond Packing Company and Swift & Company have extensive packing plants at St. Joseph, Missouri. The Armour Packing Company and the Cudahy Packing Company have extensive plants in Kansas City, Kansas. Swift & Company, the Cudahy Company, the Armour Packing Company, have "coolers" in St. Joseph and St. Louis, and the Hammond Packing Company has a "cooler" in St. Joseph. The Armour Packing Company, the Cudahy Packing Company and Swift & Company, have no "coolers" in Kansas City, Missouri, but they sell their meats [***29] at their plants in Kansas City, Kansas, to the butchers and their customers in Kansas City, Missouri, and deliver them to said butchers and customers in Kansas City, Missouri.

Of the other corporations and persons alleged to have been with the respondents in the combination, Schwartzschild & Sulzberger Company had its plant in Kansas City, Kansas, and had "coolers" in Kansas City and St. Joseph, Missouri, and Nelson Morris & Company had their plant in East St. Louis, Illinois, and had "coolers" in St. Louis, Kansas City and St. Joseph.

The case was referred to Hon. I. H. Kinley, a member of the Kansas City bar, as special commissioner to take the testimony and make and report a [*377] finding of the facts, and with leave to the parties to file exceptions thereto.

The report of the special commissioner covers twenty-five printed pages and is too voluminous to be embodied herein. In brief, he finds:

1. That the respondents, together with Nelson Morris & Company, between August 21, 1899, and May 9, 1902, entered into "agreements, confederations, combinations and understandings between themselves, to fix, regulate and control the prices of dressed beef, and fresh pork, slaughtered, [***30] manufactured, prepared and offered for sale, or to be sold by respondents to the retail butchers and others at St. Joseph, Missouri, and that respondents, with Nelson Morris & Company, agreed among themselves and with each other to maintain and control the prices of such dressed beef and fresh pork, and that in pursuance of said agreements to fix, maintain, and regulate the prices for which said dressed beef and fresh pork should be sold, said respondents above named, during said time between August 21, 1899, and May 9, 1902, have sold to the butchers at St. Joseph, Missouri, said dressed beef and fresh pork at the prices so fixed, regulated and maintained, except where such respondents gave rebates in money or in pounds of meat to their customers."
2. The commissioner makes a similar finding of fact as to dressed beef in St. Louis, except that he finds that the Hammond Packing Company did not do business in that city and was not in the combination, but that the St. Louis Dressed Beef Company was in the combination in that city with the respondents.
3. The commissioner finds that the respondents, and others, in St. Louis, "about 1899 or 1900, formed a voluntary association for the [***31] purpose of meeting once a week at some hotel or place designated and discussing and fixing the list prices to be charged the butchers for fresh pork, and at these meetings these representatives agreed among themselves and with [*378] each other to maintain these prices as fixed under a penalty of paying a fine of five dollars for each sale under such fixed price. They employed a secretary at ten dollars per week, and paid the same by assessments on the members of the organization. These fines were expended for incidental expenses of the meetings and cigars. This organization, these meetings and agreements were testified to by several who were parties thereto and participated in the agreements and fixed prices for which each should sell fresh pork to the butchers in St. Louis, and that in pursuance of said combination, agreement and conspiracy said respondents maintained the prices so fixed in selling such fresh pork to the butchers at St. Louis, except where the prices were cut as aforesaid, and those testifying stated that they did not keep such agreements and did not [**649] intend to when they were made, and the most of the witnesses testified that the prices agreed on [***32] were reasonable."

4. The commissioner finds that respondents at St. Joseph, St. Louis and Kansas City sell to the trade from sixty-five to eighty per cent of all the dressed beef and from fifty to sixty per cent of all the dressed pork that is handled in those cities, but that such sales amount to "comparatively a very small portion of their business in selling fresh beef, fresh pork and provisions throughout this and foreign countries."

5. The commissioner finds that as soon as the Attorney-General began the initiatory steps in this case all of the respondents abandoned all of the said combinations.

6. The commissioner finds that at St. Joseph and St. Louis, after meat had been in the coolers a certain length of time, the owners were allowed to sell it at a price less than the price fixed, and this is what is termed "concession meat."

7. The commissioner excluded evidence showing that if a butcher did not pay his bills to the respondent [*379] with whom he dealt by Wednesday of each week, he was put on the C. O. D. list of all the respondents and persons in the combine, and that the members of the combine had a meeting every Wednesday night to hear such reports and make [***33] such order.

8. Over the objection of the Attorney-General the commissioner permitted the respondents to show how the cattle business in Kansas City had increased from $ 4,210,605 in 1890 to $ 1,655,966,699 in 1901, but afterwards excluded all except what related to the years 1899, 1900 and 1901. The commissioner also allowed the respondents to show the number of animals the respondents killed, the number of persons they employ, and the amount they pay for salaries and expenses. He refused to allow the respondents to show by various cattle-raisers that the cattle-raising business has become more profitable since the respondents have been engaged in business, and that it would be injured if the respondents were ousted from doing business in this State.

Both sides have filed voluminous exceptions to the findings of fact by the commissioner. The case has been argued orally at length and exhaustive briefs have been filed. The evidence has been printed in full, covering two volumes aggregating nine hundred and forty-nine pages, while the brief of the informant covers one hundred and six printed pages, and the two briefs of the respondents cover two hundred pages.

I.

HN1[<sup>A</sup>] The statute of this [***34] State (R. S. 1899, sec. 8965), relating to "Pools, Trusts and Conspiracies," makes it unlawful for any persons, associations, partnerships, or corporations to become a member of or a party to "any pool, trust, agreement, combination, confederation, or understanding with any other corporation, partnership, individual or any other person or association [*380] of persons, to regulate or fix the price of any article of manufacture, mechanism, merchandise, commodity, convenience, repair, any product of mining, or any article or thing whatsoever, or the price or premium to be paid for insuring property against loss or damage by fire, lightning, or storm, or to maintain said price when so regulated, or fixed," or to enter into any such pool to fix or limit the amount or quantity of any such articles. HN2[<sup>A</sup>] Section 8966 prohibits any combinations that are designed or tend "to lessen full and free competition in the importation, manufacture or sale of any article, product or commodity in this State." And HN3[<sup>A</sup>] section 8971 punishes the violation of the law by a forfeiture of the corporate rights and franchises, if it be a home corporation, or a forfeiture of its right to do business in this State [***35] if it be a foreign corporation. Other penalties and forfeitures are imposed by section 8968, but are not involved in nor sought to be enforced in this proceeding.

The commissioner reported that over the objections of the respondents he had admitted "the statements and admissions of the managers of these coolers and solicitors of respondents showing that such combinations and agreements to fix and regulate prices as aforesaid had been made and entered into by respondents; without such testimony it is doubtful if the existence of such combination could be found, but if such statements and admissions are admissible, as I have ruled them to be, then" he found that the respondents were guilty.

To appreciate the force of what is thus said it is necessary to understand how the respondents did business in this State. Great care has been taken to show that the business done by the respondents in this State is but an "infinitesimal" portion of the total business it does all over the world. The business done in this State is not done from the slaughtering or packing plants of the respondents, nor is it conducted or [*381] personally managed by any of the higher officers or agents of the [***36] respondents, but it is all done through "coolers" and the agents of the respondents who manage the "coolers" and transact the business.

The commissioner finds the facts in this regard, and the conceded facts show the finding is correct, to be as follows: "A 'cooler' as shown by the testimony, consists of two or more rooms, at least one of which is refrigerated, the temperature being kept down from about thirty-four to forty degrees Fahrenheit; fresh meat is taken from the packing house and placed in this refrigerating room for sale to the butchers in the city where the cooler is located. As a rule the packers only sell to the butchers who sell to the [**650] public from their shops. At each cooler is a 'cooler manager' in charge thereof, one or more city solicitors, who solicit trade of the butchers, and a driver, who, from a wagon driven by him, delivers the meat to the butcher, who has purchased it. As a rule the butcher goes to the 'cooler,' inspects the carcass he wishes to buy, and if it suits him he purchases it and it is delivered to him at his shop, and he pays therefor at the cooler."

In other words, the purchasers deal exclusively with either the solicitors, who urge [***37] them to buy, or with the manager of the cooler. The drivers, of course, only deliver the goods. There is also a bookkeeper or cashier and an auditor at each cooler, who are subordinate to the manager, but in referring to the statements and admissions of the agents of the respondents these subordinate agents are not intended, but the managers of the coolers and the solicitors or salesmen are alone referred to.

The statements and admissions referred to, were made by the solicitors when engaged in the business of soliciting orders from the retail butchers, and related to the prices at which sales could be made and the reasons for such prices, and to schemes and subterfuges for billing the goods at a price stated or as of certain [*382] quantities and afterwards giving a rebate of the price or for sending more meat than the bills called for -- or, as it is termed by the witnesses, of allowing a rebate in cash or in pounds of meat -- or they were made by the managers of the coolers when engaged in making sales or when allowing such rebates. They were, therefore, statements made by these persons who were employed by the respondents, and who transacted all the respondents' business [***38] of selling in this State, were made while so engaged, and related to the business being transacted. They, were, therefore, statements of agents touching the business of the principal then being transacted by such agents, and such agents were the only representatives of the respondents that the buying public ever saw or dealt with. They quoted the prices to the public. They made and carried out the arrangements for rebates. They delivered the goods and collected the bills. They were, therefore, statements made by the authorized representatives of the respondents, while in the transaction of their business and touching the business. They were, therefore, admissible in evidence and were just as binding upon the respondents as if those statements had been made by the highest officer of the company or had been solemnly adopted by the directors or stockholders of the company and entered on the minutes of their meeting. [Northrup v. Ins. Co., 47 Mo. 435; Benevolent Assn. v. Kribben, 48 Mo. 37; Adams v. Railroad, 74 Mo. 553; Boogher v. Life Association of America, 75 Mo. 319; State ex inf. v. Ins. Co., 150 Mo. 113, 134, 51 S.W. 413; Nickell v. Ins. Co., 144 Mo. 420, 46 S.W. 435; State [***39] ex inf. v. Ins. Co., 152 Mo. 1, 52 S.W. 595.]

The testimony introduced by the State was abundant to show that the respondents were members of a combination or pool to fix and maintain prices. The State called as witnesses nine butchers who did business with the respondents in St. Joseph whose testimony showed that they all got rebates in money or pounds [*383] of meat from the respondents, and that in every instance they were given by the solicitors or cooler managers, who said they could not sell the meat for less than a certain price because all of the respondents had an agreement as to prices which was fixed every Wednesday by the head men of the packing plants, and the prices -- given by them to the cooler managers on Thursday -- by the cooler managers and solicitors were given to the trade, and that if any one cut the price he would be fined, so they circumvented their fellow-conspirators by giving rebates as herein described. That such a combination existed at the time charged in this case is further shown by the facts and circumstances outside of any admissions and statements of the agents of the respondents. The witnesses testified that they had tested the various respondents [***40] by going to the several coolers, of the different respondents, on the same day, and trying to buy cheaper from one than was offered them by another, and in every instance they found the prices to be exactly the same at all of the coolers. It further appeared that on various occasions a manager or solicitor ascertained that a purchaser had gotten a rebate from one of the other companies, and he would immediately secure from the customer the papers showing the rebate and take them away with him, and afterwards the agent of the company that had granted the rebate complained that the purchaser had gotten him into trouble by allowing the fact to become known. In fact, it appears that in every instance when a rebate was granted, secrecy was strictly enjoined upon the customer. It further appeared that on various occasions the cooler managers or solicitors would tell the butchers they had better lay in a supply of meat before a certain day, as the prices would go up on that day, and that in every instance the prices did go up uniformly at the time specified, at all the coolers of all the respondents. It further appeared that at all of the coolers "concession meat," [*384] as it is called, [***41] was sold. By "concession meat" is meant meat that has remained so long on hand in the cooler that it has become discolored or mouldy or not exactly what would be termed as first-class, but as some of the witnesses call it, unfit for sale, but not exactly unfit for use after it had been trimmed up. When any cooler had such meat on hand, the manager of another or of other [**651] coolers would be called in and they would examine it and if they believed it to be of such a character, they would "concede" to the manager of the cooler having such meat, the right or privilege to sell it for a price less than the agreed price. The manager who had obtained such concession would then sell it or try to sell it to the trade, at such price as he could get for it.

It further appeared that no butcher could buy meat from any packer that did not do business in St. Joseph, because packers located elsewhere refused to sell to them, stating as a reason that St. Joseph was the respondents' territory and such outside packers were afraid to invade their territory.

It further appeared that when the Attorney-General took the initiatory steps in this case, the respondents immediately dissolved, discontinued [***42] and stopped the pool and combination arrangements.

The State called eleven witnesses in St. Louis, butchers, city meat inspectors and former managers of the respondents' coolers, who testified to the same facts, circumstances and conditions in St. Louis, as to dressed beef in St. Louis. As to dressed pork the State called five witnesses, who were themselves members of such a pool, trust or combination, who testified that the respondents (except the Hammond Packing Company) were also members of the pool; that the representatives of the pool, trust or combination met every week at either the Southern or Lindell Hotels; that the prices were fixed by an arbitrator named McCall, who was paid a salary of ten dollars a week, [*385] raised by assessments on all of the members, and if any one cut the prices he was fined five dollars; that the combination ran for two or three years and until the institution of this suit, when it was abandoned. As to the existence of a combination as to dressed pork, therefore, the facts and circumstances show it as plainly as they do in regard to dressed beef, and in addition, five of the conspirators testified directly to it.

It is quite too plain for [***43] doubt that persons or companies who are engaged in the same line of business, in the same place, do not bill goods at one price and give rebates in money or goods or weights, and do not give notice of an uniform advance of rates at a certain date, always followed by such a rise, and do not maintain an uniform selling price, and do not call in their competitors and get them to "concede" to them a right to sell shopworn or old goods at a price less than such uniform price, and do not gather up papers or bills of their competitors showing that they have been selling below a certain price, and do not abandon, dissolve and discontinue their understandings or combinations as soon as the legality thereof is called in question by the State's officers, unless there has been an unlawful pool, trust or combination to fix and maintain prices. Such acts and circumstances and practices speak as loudly, as directly and as certainly, and tell as strong and conclusive a tale of wrongdoing in those regards as any witness could possibly testify to it or any resolution formally adopted by the directors or stockholders could prove it.

Independent, therefore, of any admissions or statements of the managers [***44] of the coolers or of the solicitors, which, however, were clearly admissible, the State has made out a case against the respondents under the facts and circumstances of the case. The commissioner, therefore, reached the right conclusion, and properly followed the rules of law as to the admissions [*386] and statements of the managers of the coolers and solicitors, as laid down in the cases hereinbefore cited, but he was in error in saying that outside of such admissions and statements it is doubtful if the charges against the respondents could be sustained.

As against all such direct testimony, admissions and statements the respondents offer no proofs, call no witnesses, and remain absolutely mute. They do not even do, as was done in State ex inf. Atty.-Genl. v. Ins. Co., 152 Mo. 1, call the chief officers of the conspirators and show that they never knew of nor authorized any such arrangements or combinations by their agents. They do not show or pretend that they have not reaped the benefits of such arrangements or combinations for all the years they existed. They simply let the State's showing stand uncontradicted, and content themselves with claiming that the admissions and [***45] statements were not made at the time the agents were engaged in transacting the business they were given power to transact, but were made before or after the said time, which an analysis of the evidence shows is not the fact, and with further showing how their business has increased in the last ten years, how many persons they employ, how much wages they pay, how the cattle-raising business has increased since they began business, and how it would be injured if they are ousted of their right to do business in this State, how they regulate their prices by the price of cattle, how much loss the resident companies would suffer by reason of not being allowed to operate their plants, how the butchers in St. Joseph are as bad as they are, and worse, because while they sell concession beef to the butchers at reduced prices, and give butchers rebates to get their trade from each other or to retain their trade, the butchers do not sell concession meat any cheaper to the public, nor do they give the public the benefit of any rebates, and that the butchers belong to a union, which fixes the price of meat for [*387] the consumers and keeps newcomers out of the trade, and prohibits or tries [***46] to prohibit the packers from selling directly to the trade, and that as to the dressed pork combine in St. Louis, it was never lived up to, and never was intended to be lived up to, and the members were false to their trust [**652] agreements so often that they could not make the combination effective.

None of these matters constitute any defense or bar to this action. The commissioner admitted the testimony bearing on most of these matters for the purpose of enabling the court to be fully advised as to all the conditions when it came to fixing the punishment to be imposed.

"Competition is the life of trade." Pools, trusts and conspiracies to fix or maintain the prices of the necessities of life, strike at the foundation of government; instill a destructive poison into the life of the body politic; wither the energies of competitors, blight individual investments in legitimate business; drive small and honest dealers out of business for themselves, and make them mere "hewers of wood and drawers of water" for the trust; raise the cost of living and lower the price of wages; take from the average American freeman the ability to supply his family with necessary, adequate and wholesome [***47] food; force the boys away from school, and into the various branches of trade and labor, and the girls into workshops and other avenues of business, and make them breadwinners while they are yet almost infants, because the head of the house can not earn enough to feed and clothe his family.

The people are helpless to protect themselves. The powers that be must protect them, or as surely as history records the story of republican government in Rome, so surely will the foundations of our government be shaken and its perpetuity threatened. Missouri ( State ex inf. Atty.-General v. Insurance Co., 152 Mo. 1); New York ( People v. Sheldon, 139 N.Y. 251); [*388] Pennsylvania ( Coal Co. v. Coal Co., 68 Pa. 173); Ohio ( Salt Co. v. Guthrie, 35 Ohio St. 666); Kentucky ( Anderson v. Jett, 89 Ky. 375); Iowa ( Chapin v. Brown, 83 Iowa 156); Illinois ( Craft v. McConoughy, 79 Ill. 346, and More v. Bennett, 140 Ill. 69, 29 N.E. 888); Wisconsin ( Builders' Assn. v. Niezerowski, 95 Wis. 129); California ( Vulcan Powder Co. v. Powder Co., 96 Cal. 510); Texas ( Texas Standard Oil Co. v. Adoue, 83 Tex. 650, 19 S.W. 274); Louisiana ( India Bagging Co. v. Kock, 14 La. Ann. 168), and the Supreme [***48] Court of the United States ( U.S. v. Trans-Missouri Freight Association, 171 U.S. 505 ) have held statutes which prohibited such combinations or trusts to be constitutional, and further, that all such combinations or agreements are against public policy and void at common law, and as a matter of American common law, irrespective of whether there is any statute on the subject or not.

The rule is well stated in the syllabus to People v. Sheldon, 139 N.Y. 251, 34 N.E. 785: HN4 [↑] "A combination between independent dealers to prevent competition between themselves in the sale of an article of prime necessity [the combination was to fix and maintain the price of coal] is, in the contemplation of law, an act inimical to trade or commerce, without regard to what may be done under and in pursuance of it, and although the object of such a combination was merely the due protection of the parties against ruinous rivalry, and no attempt was made to charge undue or excessive prices; where it appears that the parties acted under the agreement, an indictment for conspiracy is sustainable."

The court further aptly says:

"But the question here does not, we think, turn on the point whether the agreement [***49] between the retail dealers in coal did, as matter of fact, result in injury to the public or to the community in Lockport. The question is, was the agreement, in view of what might have been done under it and the fact that it was an agreement the effect of which was to prevent competition [*389] among the coal dealers, one upon which the law affixes the brand of condemnation. It has hitherto been an accepted maxim in political economy that 'competition is the life of trade.' The courts have acted upon and adopted this maxim in passing upon the validity of agreements, the design of which was to prevent competition in trade, and have held such agreements to be invalid. It is to be noticed that the organization of the 'exchange' was of the most formal character. The articles bound all who became members to conform to the regulations. The observance of such regulations by the members was enforced by penalties and forfeitures. A member accused by the secretary of having violated any provision of the constitution or by-laws was required to purge himself by affidavit, although evidence to sustain the charge should be lacking. The shippers of coal were to be notified in case of persistent [***50] default by the member that 'he is not entitled to the privileges of membership in the exchange.' No member was permitted to sell coal at less than the price fixed by the exchange. The organization was a carefully devised scheme to prevent competition in the price of coal among the retail dealers, and the moral and material power of the combination afforded a reasonable guaranty that others would not engage in the business in Lockport except in conformity with the rules of the exchange.

"The cases of Hooker v. Vandewater (4 Denio 349), and Stanton v. Allen (5 Id. 434) are, we think, decisive authorities in support of the judgment in this case. They were cases of combinations between transportation lines on the canals, to maintain rates for the carriage of goods and passengers, and the court, in those cases, held that the agreements were [**653] void, on the ground that they were agreements to prevent competition, and the doctrine was affirmed that agreements having that purpose, made between independent lines of transportation, were, in law, agreements injurious [*390] to trade. In those cases it was not shown that the rates fixed were excessive. In the case in 5th Denio, [***51] the judge delivering the opinion referred to the effect of the agreement upon the public revenue from the canals. This was an added circumstance, tending to show the injury which might result from agreements to raise prices or prevent competition. [See, also, People v. Fisher, 14 Wend. 10; Arnot v. P. & E. Coal Co., 68 N.Y. 558.] The gravamen of the offense of conspiracy is the combination. Agreements to prevent competition in trade are, in contemplation of law, injurious to trade, because they are liable to be injuriously used. The present case may be used as an illustration. The price of coal now fixed by the exchange may be reasonable in view of the interests both of dealers and consumers, but the organization may not always be guided by the principle of absolute justice. There are some limitations in the constitution of the exchange, but these may be changed and the price of coal may be unreasonably advanced. It is manifest that the exchange is acting in sympathy with the producers and shippers of coal. Some of the shippers were present when the plan of organization was considered, and it was indicated on the trial that the producers had a similar organization between themselves. [***52] If agreements and combinations to prevent competition in prices are or may be hurtful to trade, the only sure remedy is to prohibit all agreements of that character. If the validity of such an agreement was made to depend upon actual proof of public prejudice or injury, it would be very difficult in any case to establish the invalidity, although the moral evidence might be very convincing. We are of opinion that the principle upon which the case was submitted to the jury, is sanctioned by the decisions in this State, and that the jury were properly instructed that if the purpose of the agreement was to prevent competition in the price of coal between the retail dealers, it was illegal and justified the conviction of the defendants."

[*391] In People v. North River Sugar Refining Co., 121 N.Y. 582, 24 N.E. 834, it was held, as stated in syllabus, that "as corporate grants are always assumed to have been made for the public benefit, any conduct which destroys their functions, maims and cripples their separate activity, and takes away free and independent action, affects unfavorably the public interests." Accordingly where a number of persons, including the defendant in that case, [***53] entered into an agreement, the purposes of which were declared to be, "1. To promote economy of administration and to reduce the cost of refining, thus enabling the price of sugar to be kept as low as is consistent with reasonable profit. 2. To give to each refinery the benefit of all appliances and processes known or used by the others, and useful to improve the quality and diminish the cost of refined sugar. 3. To furnish protection against unlawful combinations of labor. 4. To protect against inducements to lower the standard of refined sugar. 5.

173 Mo. 356, *391<sup>A</sup> S.W. 645, **653<sup>A</sup> 903 Mo. LEXIS 257, ***53

Generally to promote the interests of the parties hereto in all lawful and suitable ways," and each of the parties transferred all its shares of stock to a board and the board managed the whole business, it was held to be against public policy, in restraint of trade and void.

It is not essential that the combination or trust shall constitute a complete monopoly. For as was said by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller, in United States v. Knight, 156 U.S. 1, 39 L. Ed. 325, 15 S. Ct. 249: "Again, all the authorities agree that HN5[<sup>A</sup>] in order to vitiate a contract or combination it is not essential that its result shall be a complete monopoly; it is sufficient [***54] if it really tends to that end and to deprive the public of the advantages which flow from free competition."

As was well said by Best, C. J., in Homer v. Ashford, 3 Bing. 326: HN6[<sup>A</sup>] "The law will not permit any one to restrain a person from doing what his own interests and the public welfare require he should do."

[*392] If it be true that a combination or trust among the respondents has increased the cattle business in this State and has encouraged the stock-raising business and its prohibition hereafter will injure or destroy such business, or if such trust arrangements have given employment to so many people and put in circulation so many millions of dollars of money in this State, or if it be that the home corporations would lose their plants entirely if their franchises were taken away from them, such considerations would not amount to a defense, or excuse for the offense charged. They are matters that should have been thought of before the offense was committed. So long as the law puts the stamp of condemnation on all arrangements, agreements, pools, trusts and conspiracies to fix and maintain the prices of articles of prime necessity, the courts have no option but to enforce [***55] the law.

The wisdom and experience of all ages and all people have demonstrated the necessity for such laws, and for the rigid enforcement of them. And even after so many years of unfailing enforcement of such laws, the terrors and consequences thereof have not been sufficient to deter people from violating them.

The conclusion is irresistible that the defendants are guilty of being members of a trust, pool or conspiracy to fix and maintain the prices of dressed beef and dressed pork in this State at the times charged in the petition, except as before stated, Armour & Company, and the Henry Krug Packing Company, as to whom the writ must be quashed.

[**654] II.

This leaves only the question of punishment. HN7[<sup>A</sup>] The punishment to be imposed rests in the sound judicial discretion of the court. It need not necessarily be a general judgment of ouster. It may be an ouster of the right to do the particular act complained of ( State [*393] ex inf. v. Lincoln Trust Co., 144 Mo. 562, 46 S.W. 593; State ex rel. v. Gas & Oil Co., 153 Ind. 483, 53 N.E. 1089; State ex rel. v. Railroad, 47 Ohio St. 130; State ex rel v. Standard Oil Co., 49 Ohio St. 137, 30 N.E. 279; Yore v. Superior [***56] Court, 108 Cal. 431, 41 P. 477; State v. Turnpike Co., 10 Conn. 167; State ex rel. v. Topeka, 30 Kan. 653, 2 P. 587; People v. Railroad, 15 Wend. 113; Commonwealth v. Canal Co., 43 Pa. 295); or it may be a suspensive judgment of ouster with a fine accompaniment ( State ex inf. v. Ins. Co., 152 Mo. 1, 52 S.W. 595), or it may be a simple fine if it appears that the trust, pool or conspiracy complained of and proved, has been abandoned. In short, the character of the judgment rests in the discretion of the court. [5 Thompson on Corp., sec. 6812; Weston v. Lane, 40 Kan. 479, 20 P. 260; State ex rel. v. Railroad, 91 Iowa 517; State ex inf. v. Bernoudy, 36 Mo. 281.]

Under all the circumstances, a judgment of absolute ouster is not necessary, but the ends of justice will be satisfied by the imposition of a fine, and the payment of all the costs in the case. It is accordingly ordered that the respondents, the Armour Packing Company, the Hammond Packing Company, the Cudahy Packing Company and Swift & Company, each pay to the clerk of this court within thirty days from this date, the sum of five thousand dollars as a fine, and that they also pay the costs in this case. And it is further [***57] ordered that if the respondents or any of them fail to pay said fine, and costs, within said time then they or those so failing be ousted of all rights, privileges and franchises of every nature and kind, conferred upon them by the laws of this State, and be forever prohibited from doing business in this State.

173 Mo. 356, *393<sup>7</sup> S.W. 645, **654<sup>19</sup> Mo. LEXIS 257, ***57

All concur.

---

End of Document

Supreme Lodge United Benev. Ass'n v. Johnson

Court of Civil Appeals of Texas

November 14, 1903, Decided

No Number in Original

Reporter

77 S.W. 661 *; 1903 Tex. App. LEXIS 877 **

SUPREME LODGE UNITED BENEV. ASS'N v. JOHNSON.

Subsequent History: Reversed by *Supreme Lodge United Benevolent Ass'n v. Johnson, 98 Tex. 1, 81 S.W. 18, 1904 Tex. LEXIS 205 \(Tex., May 26, 1904\)*

Prior History: [**1] Appeal from Tarrant County Court; R. F. Milam, Judge.

Action by J. E. Johnson against Mrs. W. F. Walker, the Supreme Lodge United Benevolent Association, garnishee. From a judgment for plaintiff, garnishee appeals. Affirmed.

Core Terms

---

associations, fraternal, orders, certificate, exemption, insurance company, classification, conferred

Counsel: W. R. Booth, for appellant.

Q. T. Moreland, for appellee.

Judges: CONNER, C. J.

Opinion by: CONNER,

Opinion

---

[*662] CONNER, C. J.

The facts in this case are as shown by the trial court's conclusions. Therefrom it appears that appellant is a duly incorporated fraternal insurance organization under the laws of Texas, with its chief place of business in Tarrant county; that its business is conducted for the sole benefit of its members and beneficiaries, and not for profit; that it has a lodge system, with ritualistic form of work and elective representative form of government; and that the fund from which it pays its beneficiaries is derived from a monthly assessment against its members, and that in all other respects it conforms to our laws relating to fraternal beneficiary associations, as set forth in title 49a, Supp. Sayles' Civ. St. 1899-1900. It further appears that one W. F. Walker died on the 26th day of March, 1902, holding a certificate of the appellant association for the sum of $1,000, payable [**2] to his wife, Mrs. W. F. Walker, by virtue of which appellant is now indebted in the sum of $500; that after the death of her husband Mrs. Walker became justly indebted to the appellee in this case, who sued her upon such indebtedness in the justice court, and at the same time duly sued out garnishee process, which was served on the appellant association. Appellant pleaded that the fund due on the certificate mentioned was exempt from such process, and from the judgment of the justice court against this contention an appeal to the county court was taken, where a like judgment was rendered, and hence this appeal.

The exemption claimed in the justice and county courts rests upon section 11 of the act relating to fraternal beneficiary associations, approved May 12, 1899 (title 49a, Supp. Sayles' Civ. St. 1899-1900; Gen. Laws 1899, p. 199, c. 115), which is as follows: "Sec. 11. The money or other benefits, charity, relief or aid to be paid, provided or rendered by any association authorized to do business under the provisions of this act, shall not be liable for the debts of the beneficiary or holder of any certificate, and shall not be subject to garnishment or other process at the suit [**3] of any creditor, nor shall it be taken, seized, appropriated or applied by any legal or equitable process or by operation of law to the debts of the certificate holder or any beneficiary named in such certificate or any person who may have any rights thereunder." Appellee's contention, with which the trial courts agreed, is that said section conflicts with section 1 of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, providing that no state shall deny the equal protection of its laws to persons within its jurisdiction; and also with section 3, art. 1, of the Constitution of Texas, providing that no man or set of men is entitled to exclusive, separate, public emoluments or privileges but in consideration of public services. Delicate as it undoubtedly is to declare an act of the co-ordinate legislative branch of our state government void for violation of constitutional principles, it is nevertheless the duty of the courts to unhesitatingly do so when such act is clearly within the prohibition of the fundamental law of the land. And this we conceive to be the condition of the act of the Legislature we are now called upon to consider. The principles upon which such conclusion is based are so fully stated and discussed in the cases hereinafter named and in the authorities therein cited that [**4] we will attempt to be as brief as possible. An Ohio law relating to fraternal associations containing exemption in substantially the same terms as those from our own law hereinbefore quoted was declared to be unconstitutional and void in the case of Williams v. Donough, 65 Ohio St. 499, 63 N.E. 84, 56 L.R.A. 766, which counsel for appellee presses upon us as in point in this case. Appellant insists, however, that insuring fraternal beneficiary associations were classed by the Ohio law together with insurance companies generally, and hence that is inapplicable. But, however this may be, it seems clear that in our insurance laws the Legislature has very plainly distinguished insurance companies generally from fraternal beneficiary associations such as appellant. By our laws they are evidently given distinct and different classification. See Sayles' Civ. St. 1888-89, tit. 53, c. 3, relating to insurance companies [*663] generally; title 49a, Supp. Sayles' Civ. St. 1899-1900, relating alone to fraternal beneficiary associations; and Ins. Co. v. Parker (Tex. Sup.) 72 S.W. 168-620; Life Association v. Mettler, 185 U.S. 308, 22 Sup. Ct. 662, 46 L.Ed. 922. And in our judgment such differing classification is not a mere arbitrary one, resting on insufficient reason. As said by the Supreme Court of the United States in construing Texas insurance statutes: "The ground for placing [**5] life and health insurance companies in a different class from fire, marine, and inland insurance companies is obvious, and we think that putting them in a different class from mutual benefit and relief associations of the character mentioned in the Texas statutes is not an arbitrary classification, but rests on sufficient reason." See Life Association v. Mettler, supra. From which it follows, as we conclude adversely to appellee's contention, that the law under consideration cannot be declared unconstitutional for the reason that special benefits and privileges are conferred upon fraternal beneficiary associations that are not conferred upon other classes of insurance organizations. For it is well settled that legislation is not open to the constitutional objections urged "if all persons or associations brought under its influence are treated alike under the same conditions." Campbell v. Cook (Tex. Sup.) 26 S.W. 486, 40 Am. St. Rep. 878; Ins. Co. v. Chowning (Tex. Sup.) 26 S.W. 982, and authorities therein cited. The converse of the proposition, however, is as firmly and plainly maintained by the authorities, and it is upon this ground that we think the law under consideration invalid. Section 16 of the same act is as follows, viz.: "Sec. 16. The provisions of this act shall not apply to nor include the Order of Railway [**6] Conductors, Order of Locomotive Engineers, Order of Locomotive Firemen or Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen or Order of Railway Telegraphers, which issue policies of insurance or benefit certificates only to members of their respective organizations, and said organizations shall be exempt from the provisions of this act." There is nothing in the record to show that the orders named in section 16 may reasonably receive a different classification from associations such as appellant. For aught that appears, such orders may now have every characteristic essential to bring them within the definition of fraternal beneficiary associations as defined in the first section of the act. We think it apparent from the section itself that in the feature of insurance, at least, such orders are substantially fraternal beneficiary associations, although the method of deriving the benefit fund and other immaterial features may be different. In other words, it appears, as we think, from the whole law, that the orders named in section 16 now are, or at least may hereafter by voluntary action become, in all substantial features fraternal beneficiary associations, and that the law as a whole, therefore, is [**7] invalid as discriminative in the matter of privileges conferred and burdens devolved between designated associations and other associations of the same general classification.

The act under consideration in the public interest requires fraternal beneficiary associations, as conditions to their right to engage and continue in the business of insurance, to make certain reports, to pay valid final judgments against them within 60 days, to pay certain fees of office, to obtain certificate of authority from the commissioner of insurance, etc. These are all burdens from which the orders named in section 16 are expressly relieved whatever be their present or future character, while, on the other hand, the associations doing business under the act and their certificate holders have conferred upon them the important privilege of an insurance fund entirely freed from the claims of creditors; a privilege not conferred upon the orders designated in section 16, or upon insurance beneficiaries thereof. Such discrimination, in our judgment, plainly violates the fundamental doctrine of equal rights to all and special privileges to none. Nor do we think that we can dispose of the objections to the act [**8] by rejecting section 16, which alone seems subject to constitutional conflict. The rule, briefly, is that where the unconstitutional portion is essentially and inseparably connected in substance with that which is constitutional, the whole must be rejected. See Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co., 184 U. S. 540, 22 Sup. Ct. 431, 46 L. Ed. 679, followed by our Supreme Court in the case of State v. Compress Co., 95 Tex. 611, 69 S. W. 58. In the case first cited the court held in effect that an exemption of "agricultural products and live stock while in the hands of the producer or raiser" in the antitrust law of the state of Illinois invalidated the act. And in the case cited from our Supreme Court the Texas anti-trust law of 1895 (Laws 1895, p. 112, c. 83), exempting from its operation, among other things, labor organizations, was, in obedience to the Connolly Case, in effect held (save as therein limited) violative of constitutional safeguards. The exemptions indicated in the anti-trust laws named were, in effect, held to be so interwoven and inseparably connected with other portions as to taint the whole. Say the court in disposing of the Connolly Case: "The principles applicable to such a question are well settled by the adjudications of this court. If different sections of a statute are independent of each [**9] other, that which is unconstitutional may be disregarded, and valid sections may stand and be enforced. But if an obnoxious section is of such import that the other sections without it would cause results not contemplated or desired by the Legislature, then the entire statute must be held inoperative. The first section of the act here in question embraces [*664] by its terms all persons, firms, corporations, or associations of persons who combine their capital, skill, or acts for any of the purposes specified, while the twelfth section declares that the statute shall not apply to agriculturists or live-stock dealers in respect of their products or stock in hand. If the latter section be eliminated as unconstitutional, then the act, if it stands, will apply to agriculturists and live-stock dealers. Those classes would in that way be reached and fined, when evidently the Legislature intended that they should not be regarded as offending against the law, even if they did combine their capital, skill, or acts in respect of their products or stock in hand. Looking, then, at all the sections together, we must hold that the Legislature would not have entered upon or continued the policy indicated [**10] by the statute unless agriculturists and live-stock dealers were excluded from its operation, and thereby protected from prosecution. The result is that the statute must be regarded as an entirety, and in that view it must be adjudged to be unconstitutional, as denying the equal protection of the laws to those within its jurisdiction who are not embraced by the twelfth section." So in the law before us a sweeping exception of the orders named in section 16 is made. It certainly was not the legislative intention that any one or more of the specified orders should ever be subject to the restrictions of the act. Such, however, would be the necessary effect of a mere rejection of section 16 in event said orders either now have or should hereafter assume the substantial characteristics of fraternal benefit associations, and it is by no means clear that the Legislature would have enacted the law without the exceptions noted.

We conclude that the trial courts reached the proper conclusion, and it is accordingly ordered that the conclusions of fact and law shown by the record be adopted, and the judgment affirmed.

Chicago, Wilmington & Vermillion Coal Co. v. People

Court of Appeals of Illinois, Chicago, First District

1904, Decided ; May 12, 1904, Opinion Filed

Gen. No. 11,267.

Reporter

114 Ill. App. 75 *; 1904 Ill. App. LEXIS 387 **

The Chicago, Wilmington & Vermillion Coal Company, et al., v. The People of the State of Illinois.

Prior History: [**1] Criminal prosecution for conspiracy in violation of Anti-Trust Act. Error to the Criminal Court of Cook County; the Hon. OLIVER H. HORTON, Judge, presiding. Heard in this court at the October term, 1903. Affirmed.

Statement by the Court. The plaintiffs in error (who hereinafter will be designated as defendants) were indicted at the January term, 1903, of the Criminal Court of Cook county.

The first count alleged that on January 5, 1903, in said county of Cook the defendants "unlawfully, fraudulently, maliciously, wrongfully and wickedly did conspire and agree together to do an illegal act injurious to the public trade, to wit: To then and there in restraint of trade and to the injury of the public trade unlawfully create, enter into and become members of and parties to a pool, trust, agreement, combination, confederation and understanding with each other wrongfully to regulate and fix the price at which coal should be sold in the said State of Illinois, which said coal was then and there an article of necessity to the said public and consumers thereof in the said State of Illinois, to the great damage and injury of all purchasers of said coal and contrary to the statute, and [**2] against the peace and dignity of the same people of the State of Illinois."

The second count charged that they "then and there unlawfully, fraudulently, maliciously, wrongfully and wickedly did conspire and agree together to do an illegal act injurious to the public trade, to wit: To then and there in restraint of trade and to the injury of the public trade, unlawfully create, enter into and become members of and parties to a pool, trust, agreement, combination, confederation and understanding with each other wrongfully to regulate and fix the price at which coal should be sold in the said State of Illinois, which said coal was then and there an article of necessity to the said public and consumers thereof in the said State of Illinois, to the great damage and injury of all purchasers of said coal, contrary to the law and against the peace and dignity of the same people of the State of Illinois."

The third count set forth that they "then and there unlawfully, fraudulently, maliciously, wrongfully and wickedly did conspire and agree together to do an illegal act injurious to the public trade, to wit: To then and there in restraint of trade and to the injury of the public trade, [**3] unlawfully regulate and fix the price at which coal should be sold in the said State of Illinois, which said coal was then and there an article of necessity to the said public and consumers thereof in the said State of Illinois, said coal being then and there a commodity and article of merchandise, contrary to the statute and against the peace and dignity of the same people of the State of Illinois."

It is stated in the fourth count that they "then and there unlawfully, fraudulently, maliciously, wrongfully and wickedly did conspire and agree together to do an illegal act injurious to the public trade, to wit: To then and there in restraint of trade and to the injury of the public trade, unlawfully regulate and fix the price at which coal should be sold in the said State of Illinois, which said coal was then and there an article of necessity to the said public and consumers thereof in the said State of Illinois, said coal being then and there a commodity and article of merchandise, contrary to the law and against the peace and dignity of the same people of the State of Illinois."

The fifth count declared that they, each being then and there engaged in or interested in the [**4] business of selling coal to the general public and to consumers of said coal, did then and there wickedly and unlawfully create, enter into and become members of and parties to a pool, trust, agreement, combination, confederation and understanding with each other, then and there to unlawfully regulate and fix the price at which coal should be sold in the State of Illinois, which said coal was to be thereafter mined, produced and sold in the State of Illinois, and was then and there an article of necessity to the said public and consumers thereof in the said State of Illinois, said coal being then and there a commodity and article of merchandise, whereby and by force of the statute in such case made and provided, the said defendants, and each of them, are deemed and adjudged to be guilty of a conspiracy to defraud, contrary to the statute and against the peace and dignity of the same people of the State of Illinois.

The first count is drawn under section 46 of the Criminal Code. The second is based upon the common law concerning combinations to regulate and fix the price of a necessary of life. The third alleges a conspiracy to do an illegal act injurious to public trade, and concludes [**5] "contrary to the statute." The fourth is at common law charging a combination to regulate the price of coal, an article of necessity, etc. The fifth alleges the formation of a pool to unlawfully regulate and fix the price at which coal should be sold in the State of Illinois, and is based upon the AntiTrust Law of 1891.

In each of these counts it is the conspiracy, and not the object sought to be accomplished by it, that is the subject of indictment. In all these counts each defendant is designated by its proper name. The only words of description following the several names are "a corporation."

A motion in writing to quash the indictment was filed for each defendant. These motions are identical except as to the name of the defendant in whose behalf it is filed. This motion was overruled; to which action each of the defendants then and there excepted.

A jury having been duly waived, and the cause having been by agreement of all parties submitted for trial by the court, the People, to sustain the issue upon their part, offered in evidence the following statement of facts:

"For the purposes of submitting the issues of fact and law in the above entitled case to the [**6] court for trial and decision upon the indictment herein (it being hereby expressly understood that the admissions and agreements herein made are made for such purposes only, and shall not be binding upon the defendants herein in any other proceeding at law or in chancery or of whatsoever nature), the following statement of facts is hereby agreed to by and between the respective parties hereto, and each of them, and it is further agreed that the said statement shall be received as evidence of such facts upon the trial of the above entitled cause, to wit:

- (1) That the Northern Illinois Soft Coal Association is a voluntary association, which was formed and organized about fifteen or twenty years ago, then composed of various corporations and individuals engaged in the business of operating in and mining soft coal in the northern part of the State of Illinois.
- (2) That said association has been in existence from the date of the formation thereof to the present time, and assumed the name and style aforesaid in the year 1897.
- (3) That at the first meeting thereof, one A. L. Sweet, then an officer of The Chicago, Wilmington & Vermillion Coal Company, one of the defendants herein, [**7] was chosen and acted as president of said meeting, and one Edward T. Bent, an authorized representative of the Oglesby Coal Company, one of the defendants herein, was chosen and acted as secretary of said meeting; that at said meeting there were various authorized representatives of different coal companies then operating in and mining soft coal in the northern part of said State of Illinois, including some of the defendant companies herein, and that various meetings of said association have been held since the formation thereof up to and including December 13, 1902, at most of which said A. L. Sweet has acted as the president and presiding officer thereof, and said Bent as the secretary thereof, each of whom was duly authorized to act at said association meetings for said Chicago, Wilmington & Vermillion Coal Company and said Oglesby Coal Company, respectively.

(4) That said association has never adopted any constitution, by-laws or provisions for penalties or terms of admission to or expulsion from said association; that the several defendant companies, through their authorized representatives, have from time to time held meetings, which were called by said Bent as secretary [**8] of said association, and that all of said meetings have, since some time in the year of 1897, been held in Chicago, in the County of Cook and State of Illinois, and that assessments for routine expenses were levied and paid upon and by said companies, the last being levied and paid September 20, 1902.

(5) That at said meetings discussions were had and resolutions passed respecting the subject of wages, transportation and prices at which the several defendant companies and others there represented, as aforesaid, should sell the coal so mined by them on the market to consumers thereof in the State of Illinois and elsewhere; that between July 1, 1891, and July 1, 1897, no action was taken by said association at its said meetings with respect to prices of said coal.

(6) That during the existence of said association the said Edward T. Bent has acted as the secretary of said association, and as such has called said meetings by sending notices thereof to the defendant companies and other coal mining companies so operating in and mining coal in Northern Illinois, and that after each meeting, with a few exceptions, he has transmitted to each of the defendant companies, and said other [**9] coal mining companies, copies of the proceedings had at said meeting.

(7) That at a meeting of said association held in Chicago, aforesaid, March 26, 1900, the following resolution was adopted and a copy thereof transmitted to the defendant companies, and said other coal mining companies represented in said association, as aforesaid, to wit:

'NORTHERN ILLINOIS SOFT COAL ASSOCIATION.

CHICAGO, ILL., March 26, 1900.

DEAR SIR: At a meeting of this association held this day, the following were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the price on mine run coal be ten (10) cents per ton less than on standard lump; that when coal is sold through jobbers, the shipping company shall see that full circular prices are maintained by said jobbers; that the maximum commission to jobbers shall be ten (10) cents per ton; that no factory or steam coal shall be sold through jobbers or local dealers at less than established prices thereupon, except to parties or at points fully approved and listed; that no firms shall be recognized as linemen, except as duly approved and listed; that no coal shall be sold to listed linemen, except direct and without commission to any jobber; that [**10] no coal shall be sold to linemen at a fixed price for any specified time; and that listed linemen may be sold from time to time at ten (10) cents per ton less than existing circular prices.

Resolved, That until further action of the association, the circular price to dealers be $ 2.15 for standard lump and $ 2.25 for chunks at mines.

A committee, consisting of Messrs. Booth, Lemmon and Bent, was appointed to prepare a list of points at which selling factory or steam coal through local dealers is permissible, and the dealers entitled to a commission thereupon; and an official list of linemen entitled to a ten (10) cents per ton commission from circular prices. Please send at once to one of the members of the committee a list of the points (such as Rockford and Freeport) where you consider it necessary to sell steam and factory coal through dealers, and what dealers at such points you understand should properly participate in this business, and also a list of linemen ("elevator" and "lumber") who, and who only in your view, should get ten (10) cents concession from established circular prices.

The desire is to restrict these concessions to the utmost extent practicable, [**11] so please drop all names possible. The list finally compiled will be uniform throughout the northern field, so that no company's interests will be prejudiced.

Yours truly,

E. T. BENT, Sec'y.'

(8) That following a meeting of said association called as aforesaid, and held in Chicago, September 26, 1902, the following circular was prepared and sent out by said secretary to said defendant companies and said other coal mining companies represented in said association as aforesaid, to wit:

'NORTHERN ILLINOIS SOFT COAL ASSOCIATION.

CHICAGO, ILL., Sept. 26, 1902.

DEAR SIR: At a meeting held this day the following was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That prices of association coal, including steam and all other business, except on such continuous sales as are legally or morally binding, effective Oct. 1, '02, and subject to change without notice (quotations to be made Sept. 29, 1902), shall be as follows:

Ottawa.

Third Vein Standard Lump	$ 2 90	delivered.
Chunks	3 00	delivered.
Streator and Cardiff Standard Lump	2 80	delivered.

Joliet.

Third Vein and Wilmington Standard Lump	2 80	delivered.
Chunks	2 90	delivered.

Streator.

Standard Lump	2 70	delivered.
Chunks	2 80	delivered.

Lemont and Lockport.

Standard Lump	2 40	mines.
Chunks	2 50	mines.

Chicago.

Wilmington (no switching)	2 75	delivered.
Third Vein and Streator	Open.

Rockford and Freeport.

Standard Lump	2 95	delivered.
Chunks	3 05	delivered.

Galena.

Standard Lump	3 40	delivered.
Chunks	2 50	delivered.

Dixon.

Standard Lump	2 90	delivered.
Chunks	3 00	delivered.

Davenport, Rock Island, Moline,

Chicago Heights, St. Paul, Minneapolis, Milwaukee and Ft.

Madison. Open.

Clinton, Lyons and Fulton.

Mendota and Amboy.

Standard Lump	3 25	delivered.
Chunks	3 35	delivered.
Standard Lump	2 80	delivered.

Chunks	2 90	delivered.
Lostant.
Third Vein and Wilmington Standard Lump	2 75	delivered.
Streator and Cardiff Standard Lump	2 60	delivered.
Chunks	2 70	delivered.
Rochelle and Malta.
Standard Lump	3 20	delivered.
Chunks	3 30	delivered.
Sterling and Rockford Falls.
Standard Lump	3 00	delivered.
Chunks	3 10	delivered.
Aurora.
Standard Lump	3 00	delivered.
Chunks	3 10	delivered.
Batavia, DeKalb, Sycamore, Waukegan, St. Charles and Geneva.
Standard Lump	3 00	delivered.
Chunks	3 10	delivered.
Elgin, Earlville and West Chicago.
Standard Lump	3 05	delivered.
Chunks	3 15	delivered.
Belvidere.
Standard Lump	3 15	delivered.
Chunks	3 25	delivered.
Alton.
Standard Lump	2 40	at mines.
Chunks	2 50	at mines.
LaCrosse.
Standard Lump	2 40	at mines.
Chunks	2 50	at mines.
West Chicago to Belvidere, not inclusive and not including Elgin.
Standard Lump	2 40	at mines.
Chunks	2 50	at mines.
Crystal Lake to Rockford, not including Rockford, and to Lake Geneva, inclusive.
Standard Lump	2 40	at mines.
Chunks	2 50	at mines.
Elsewhere, all lines.
Standard Lump	2 40	at mines.
Chunks	2 50	at mines.

[**12] Mine run coal thirteen cents less than standard lump. Otherwise regulations of circular letter March 26, 1900, continue effective. The foregoing prices are minimum, and any member is at liberty to charge more for any size at his discretion.

Yours truly,

E. T. BENT, Sec'y.'

(9.) That following a meeting of said association, called, as aforesaid, and held in Chicago, aforesaid, October 13, 1902, the following circular was prepared and sent out by said secretary to said defendant companies and said other coal mining companies represented in said association, as aforesaid, to wit:

'NORTHERN ILLINOIS SOFT COAL ASSOCIATION.

CHICAGO, ILL., October 13, 1902.

DEAR SIR: At a meeting held this day the following was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That prices of association coal, including steam and all other business, except on such continuous sales as are legally or morally binding, effective October 15, 1902, and subject to change without notice, and acceptance of orders to be subject to price ruling on date of shipment, shall be as follows:

Ottawa.

Third Vein Standard Lump and Egg	$ 3 90	delivered.
Chunks	4 00	delivered.
Streator and Cardiff.
Standard Lump and Egg	3 80	delivered.
Joliet.
Third Vein and Wilmington Standard Lump and Egg	3 80	delivered.
Chunks	3 90	delivered.
Streator and Cardiff Standard Lump
and Egg	3 70	delivered.
Chunks	3 80	delivered.
Lemont and Lockport.
Standard Lump and Egg	3 40	at mines.
Chunks	3 50	at mines.
Chicago.
Wilmington (no switching)	3 75	delivered.
Third Vein and Streator	Open.
Rockford and Freeport.
Standard Lump and Egg	3 95	delivered.
Chunks	4 05	delivered.
Galena.
Standard Lump and Egg	4 40	delivered.
Chunks	4 50	delivered.
Dixon.
Standard Lump and Egg	3 90	delivered.
Chunks	4 00	delivered.
Davenport, Rock Island, Moline,
Chicago Heights, St. Paul, Minneapolis, Milwaukee and Ft.
Madison. Open.
Clinton, Lyons and Fulton.
Standard Lump and Egg	4 25	delivered.
Chunks	4 35	delivered.
Mendota and Amboy.

Standard Lump and Egg	3 80	delivered.
Chunks	3 90	delivered.
Lostant.
Third Vein and Wilmington Stand-
ard Lump and Egg	3 75	delivered.
Chunks	3 85	delivered.
Streator and Cardiff Standard Lump
and Egg	3 60	delivered.
Chunks	3 70	delivered.
Waukegan, Ill.
Standard Lump and Egg	3 40	delivered.
Chunks	3 50	delivered.
Rochelle and Malta.
Standard Lump and Egg	4 20	delivered.
Chunks	4 30	delivered.
Sterling and Rock Falls.
Standard Lump and Egg	4 00	delivered.
Chunks	4 10	delivered.
Aurora.
Standard Lump and Egg	4 00	delivered.
Chunks	4 10	delivered.
Batavia, DeKalb, Sycamore, St. Charles and Geneva.
Standard Lump and Egg	4 00	delivered.
Chunks	4 10	delivered.
Elgin, Earlville and West Chicago.
Standard Lump and Egg	4 05	delivered.
Chunks	4 15	delivered.
Belvidere.
Standard Lump and Egg	4 15	delivered.
Chunks	4 25	delivered.
Alton.
Standard Lump and Egg	3 40	at mines.
Chunks	3 50	at mines.
LaCrosse.
Standard Lump and Egg	3 40	at mines.
Chunks	3 50	at mines.
West Chicago to Belvidere, not inclusive and not including Elgin.
Standard Lump	3 40	at mines.
Chunks	3 50	at mines.
Crystal Lake to Rockford, not including Rockford, and to Lake Geneva, inclusive.
Standard Lump and Egg	3 40	at mines.
Chunks	3 50	at mines.
Elsewhere, all lines.
Wilmington and Third Vein Stand-

and Lump and Egg	3 40	at mines.
Chunks	3 50	at mines.
Streator and Cardiff Standard Lump
and Egg	3 30	at mines.
Chunks	3 40	at mines.

[**13] Mine run coal thirteen cents less than standard lump. Otherwise regulations of circular letter March 26, 1900, continue effective. The foregoing prices are minimum, and any member is at liberty to charge more for any size at his discretion.

Yours truly,

E. T. BENT, Sec'y.'

(10) That following a meeting of said association, called, as aforesaid, and held in the city of Chicago, aforesaid, December 13, 1902, the following circular was prepared and sent out by said secretary to said defendant companies and said other coal mining companies represented in said association, as aforesaid, to wit:

'NORTHERN ILLINOIS SOFT COAL ASSOCIATION.

CHICAGO, ILL., December 13, 1902.

DEAR SIR: At a meeting held this day the following was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That at the pending annual meeting of the Illinois Coal Operators' Association, this district nominate for its members of the State Executive Committee Messrs. Sweet, Dalzell and Taylor.

Resolved, That at the pending annual election of the Illinois Coal Operators' Association this district urge the re-election of President Garrison and the other existing state officers.

Resolved, That on [**14] and after December 16, until further notice, circular prices on association coal, with differentials, as established in circular October 13, 1902, including steam and all other business, except on such continuous sales as are legally or morally binding and subject to change without notice, and acceptance of orders to be subject to prices ruling on date of shipment, shall be $ 2.90 per ton for Standard Lump and Egg; $ 3.00 for Chunks and $ 2.50 per ton for No. 1 Nut at mines; and

Resolved, Further, that no price shall be made for Chicago; that local points in Illinois on the 'Chicago & Alton,' 'Wabash' and 'Santa Fe' be adjusted locally by the shippers in interest, and that all special prices other than as above in special list of October 13, 1902, be reduced 50 cents per ton; and

Resolved, Further, that no quotations, as above, be made by mail, word or in person, prior to December 13, 1902.

Yours truly,

E. T. BENT, Sec'y.'

(11) That each of the said defendant companies was represented at one or more of the meetings aforesaid, held on September 26, 1902, October 13, 1902, and December 13, 1902, by duly authorized representatives, and most of said defendant companies [**15] have been so represented at several previous meetings since the year 1897; that at said meetings held September 26, October 13 and December 13, 1902, the prices at which soft coal, so mined, as aforesaid, should be sold in the State of Illinois and elsewhere was discussed, and the prices thereof were designated, which it was agreed should be set forth in a circular and forwarded by the secretary, aforesaid, to the said defendant companies, and it was further agreed thereat that said defendant companies should send out to the trade, dealers and consumers of soft coal in the State of Illinois and elsewhere, circulars in conformity to said circular prices and in accordance with the action so taken, as aforesaid.

(12) That after the transmission, as aforesaid, of said resolutions, some of said defendant companies sent out circulars to the trade, dealers and consumers of said soft coal in the State of Illinois and elsewhere, stating the prices at which the said coal, so mined, as aforesaid, by them respectively, would thereafter be sold in said State of Illinois and elsewhere, as aforesaid, said prices mentioned in said circulars being in conformity with those stated in said resolutions.

[**16] (13) That all but one, to wit, Bell & Zoller Coal Company, of said defendant companies, and said other coal mining companies represented, as aforesaid, at said meetings of said association, were at the time of the holding of said meetings, as aforesaid, engaged in the business of operating in and mining soft coal in the said State of Illinois, and all of said defendant companies in the selling thereof to consumers thereof in the State of Illinois and elsewhere, which said coal was then and there an article of necessity to the consumers thereof and a commodity and article of merchandise, mined and to be mined, produced and to be produced, and sold, and to be sold upon the market to the public and to consumers thereof in the said State of Illinois and elsewhere.

(14) The defendant corporations include the larger producers in Northern Illinois. The state is divided into nine commercial coal-producing districts, of which the Northern Illinois is called the 'First.' The 'First' district produced during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, about 6,000,000 tons out of the 30,000,000 tons produced throughout the State of Illinois during the same time.

This coal is sold in direct [**17] competition with other districts of Illinois and Eastern coal.

Over two-thirds of the produce of the First district is sold under contract for the year in competition with other producers thereof to railroad companies at prices affording little or no profit and in some cases at an actual loss.

The cost of mining coal is mainly made up of wages. The wage scale is maintained by reason of selling free coal in the fall and winter at such prices by cooperation between producers in Northern Illinois as can be obtained in competition with other districts and states. The mining rate paid in the First district is the highest in the state.

The First district shipped to Chicago in 1902, 174,210 tons of bituminous coal, out of a total shipment thereto of 8,712,451 tons of coal of all kinds, of which 7,434,613 was bituminous.

July 4, 1897, a national strike of bituminous miners was inaugurated and continued in the First district until December 1, when mining wages were advanced in what is known as the Wilmington field, the Streator field and Third Vein field, both of which are in the First district, aforesaid.

The following January the system of annual trade agreements [**18] in the coal mining industry of Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois was inaugurated, resulting in a reduction in hours of labor from ten to eight per day, and a further advance in wages on April 1, 1898. These agreements were entered into between the United Mine Workers of America and the Coal Operators at a joint annual convention, composed of representatives from said workers and operators, respectively, in said four states, and like agreements as to wages being binding on miners and operators for the entire fiscal year, beginning April 1 of each year, and subject to no change.

At this time, January, 1898, the Illinois Coal Operators' Association, a state association, to which most of the coal operators in the state belong, was organized for the purpose, and the purpose only, of dealing with organized labor and participating in the interstate joint movement aforesaid.

April 1, 1900, a further advance, of wages was fixed by agreement at an annual convention, as aforesaid, for the mining rate in Northern Illinois.

The abnormal demand for coal during the last few months was caused primarily by reason of the strike in the anthracite region, which began May 1, 1902, and [**19] ended November 1, 1902. The shortage in production of coal by reason thereof amounted to 25,000,000 tons of anthracite coal, the equivalent of 50,000 tons of bituminous coal.

Whereupon said defendants, and each of them, objected to the introduction of the first thirteen paragraphs as numbered of said agreed statement of facts, and each and every part thereof, on the ground that the same was incompetent, irrelevant and insufficient, which objections the court overruled, and permitted said agreed statement of facts, and each and every part thereof, to be received as evidence in said cause.

To which ruling the defendants, and each of them, then and there excepted.

Which was all the evidence offered or introduced by either party upon the trial of said cause."

At the close of the evidence each of the defendants submitted to the court written propositions and asked the court to hold the same and each of them as law in this case, and requested the court to mark upon each of them the word "held," in accordance with the statute, etc. But the court refused to consider such propositions, and also refused to mark them "held" or "refused." To which refusal each defendant then [**20] and there excepted.

Upon the hearing the court found each of the defendants guilty in manner and form as charged in the indictment, and fixed the punishment of each of the defendants at a fine of $ 500. Thereupon each of the defendants filed a written motion for a new trial. The court overruled this motion; to which action each of the defendants then and there excepted. These motions are the same, except that each contains the name of the defendant in whose behalf it is filed. Thereupon each of the defendants filed a written motion in arrest of judgment, which the court overruled. To which action each of the defendants then and there excepted. These motions, except as to the name of the defendant presenting the same, are alike.

(The reasons set out as grounds for quashing the indictment, for a new trial, and in arrest of judgment, need not be here stated, as they form the basis of the arguments presented to us for and against the defendants. In so far as we deem them material they will be noticed in the opinion which follows.)

The court thereupon entered a separate judgment against each defendant, finding it guilty of the crime of conspiracy to do an illegal act injurious [**21] to public trade upon the indictment in this cause on the said finding of guilty, and that it be and is sentenced to pay a fine of $ 500, and pay the costs of these proceedings, taxed at $ 13.18, and that execution issue therefor.

From these several judgments the present writ of error was sued out.

Disposition: Judgment affirmed.

Core Terms

---

conspiracy, indictment, common law, prices, coal, circular, repeal, soft coal, Northern, meetings, words, statement of facts, consumers, monopoly, salt, accomplished, combinations, conspirators, cases, tends, lump, no necessity, trial court, authorities, commodity, territory, by-law, counts, courts, pool

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Oral Agreements

Contracts Law > Defenses > Illegal Bargains

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN1  Types of Contracts, Oral Agreements

A mere tacit understanding between conspirators to work to a common purpose is all that is essential to a guilty actionable combination. It makes no difference that the agreement for the illegal combination is not a formal written agreement. It may be a verbal agreement or understanding, or a scheme not embodied in writing, but evidenced by the action of the parties.

Criminal Law & Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Accusatory Instruments > Indictments > General Overview

HN2 Appeals, Standards of Review

If there be one count in an indictment sufficient to sustain a sentence and judgment of the court, it makes but little difference in what manner the remaining counts are disposed of. If there be one good count in the indictment, a general finding that the defendant is guilty will not be disturbed because the indictment contains other counts which are bad.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Accusatory Instruments > Indictments > General Overview

HN3 Inchoate Crimes, Conspiracy

Where the object of the conspiracy is unlawful, the means by which it is to be accomplished are not material ingredients in the offense; and therefore in such a case it is never necessary to set them forth. The offense is complete the moment the conspiracy is made, whether any acts be done in pursuance of it or not. Such acts form no part of the offense, and the statement of them in the indictment is but surplusage.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN4 Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

All combinations among persons or corporations for the purpose of raising or controlling the prices of merchandise or any of the necessities of life, are monopolies, and ought to receive the condemnation of all courts.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Acts & Mental States > Mens Rea > General Intent

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Accusatory Instruments > Indictments > General Overview

HN5 Mens Rea, General Intent

If a conspiracy to do an illegal act be set forth in an indictment, the charge is complete without the addition of words alleging a criminal intent in the doing of the act. In stating such an offense the criminal intent appears prima facie in the statement of the act itself.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN6 Legislation, Interpretation

When there is a clear repugnance between two laws, and the provisions of both cannot be carried into effect, the latter law must prevail as the last expression of the legislative will.

Governments > Legislation > Expiration, Repeal & Suspension

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN7 Legislation, Expiration, Repeal & Suspension

If a subsequent statute revises the whole subject of a former one, and is intended as a substitute for it, it operates as a repeal of the former, although it contains no express words to that effect.

Governments > Courts > Common Law

Governments > Legislation > Effect & Operation > General Overview

HN8 Courts, Common Law

Where a statute is not repugnant to the common law, the latter is not abrogated, in the absence of express words, or of affirmative implication repealing the common law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

International Trade Law > State Legislation > General Overview

International Trade Law > General Overview

HN9 Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

To vitiate a combination such as the Anti-trust Act of Congress condemns, it need not be shown that the combination, in fact, results or will result in a total suppression of trade or in a complete monopoly, but it is only essential to show that by its necessary operation it tends to restrain interstate or international trade or commerce, or tends to create a monopoly in such trade or commerce, and to deprive the public of the advantages that flow from free competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN10 Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

A combination, the object of which is to prevent general competition and to control prices, is detrimental to the public, and consequently unlawful.

Headnotes/Summary

---

Headnotes

1. COMBINATION IN RESTRAINT OF TRADE--when, criminal. A systematic attempt, covering a period of years, by an association made up of large producers of coal, to control the output, sale and price of a certain kind of coal within certain territory of Illinois, is a criminal combination in restraint of trade, both at common law and under the statutes of Illinois.
2. COMBINATION IN RESTRAINT OF TRADE--what deemed common law offense. A combination by an association of persons which has a tendency to diminish production, to limit competition, and to increase prices, was and is a common law offense and punishable in this state, notwithstanding the prices fixed by such association may have been fair and reasonable, and notwithstanding, further, such association may not, in fact, have advanced the price of the product involved in such illegal combination.
3. PROPOSITIONS OF LAW--failure to mark. A failure to mark propositions of law, either given or refused, is equivalent to a refusal thereof.
4. JUDICIAL NOTICE--of what, not taken. Judicial notice will not be taken of a report of the grand jury which is voluntary upon its part and not made pursuant to any law providing therefor.
5. INDICTMENT--what will not be considered in determining validity of. The report made by a grand jury as its voluntary act will not be considered in determining whether an indictment returned by it is valid or invalid.
6. INDICTMENT--when, sufficient to sustain conviction. If one count of an indictment is good, a general finding that the defendants are guilty will not be disturbed because the indictment contains other counts which are bad.
7. CONSPIRACY--when offense of, complete. Conspiracy as a criminal offense is complete when the agreement to do the unlawful act in question is entered into.
8. CONSPIRACY--what indictment for, need not set forth. An indictment for conspiracy need not set out the means by which the conspirators intended to accomplish their unlawful purposes.
9. CONSPIRACY--when indictment for, is sufficient. An indictment charging the statutory offense of conspiracy is sufficient if in the language of the statute pertaining thereto.
10. CONSPIRACY--when indictment for, sufficiently charges intent. If a conspiracy to do an illegal act be set forth in an indictment, the charge is complete without the addition of words alleging the criminal intent in the doing of the act; in stating such an offense the criminal intent appears prima facie in the statement of the act itself.
11. CONSPIRACY--when indictment for, sufficiently charges intent. Where an indictment alleges that a conspiracy was entered into "unlawfully, fraudulently, maliciously and wickedly," it is sufficient, even in those cases where the object for which the combination was formed was not unlawful until forbidden by statute.
12. CONSPIRACY--how existence of, established. The evidence of combination, ordinarily, must be gleaned from conduct; the test is not what an agreement may profess but what it actually accomplishes. Proof of an agreement actually entered into is not essential; the mere tacit understanding between conspirators to work to a common purpose is all that is essential to an actionable combination.

13. CONSPIRACY--common law with respect to, not abolished in this state. The common law concerning conspiracies is not abolished by statute in Illinois.

14. CONSPIRATORS--joint responsibility of. Each member of an unlawful association and conspiracy is bound by the acts of all its or his fellows done in furtherance of the object to accomplish which the combination is formed.

15. ANTI-TRUST ACT--provision of, unconstitutional. The provision, added by amendment to the Anti-Trust Act, which exempts combinations, where their principal object or effect is to maintain or increase wages, is unconstitutional and void.

16. ANTI-TRUST ACT--what need not be alleged or proved to establish violation of. In a prosecution for a violation of such act, it is not necessary to allege and prove the place of organization of the corporation defendant.

17. ANTI-TRUST ACT--how corporation violating, should be prosecuted. A prosecution against a corporation violating this act is properly by indictment, although it may, at the election of the people, be by action of debt to recover the penalty prescribed by such statute.

18. UNCONSTITUTIONAL LAW--no defense to criminal charge. An unconstitutional act, in legal contemplation, is not a law and affords no protection to a criminal charge.

19. COMMON LAW--how far, in force in this state. By statute the common law of England, so far as applicable, is adopted in this state, and such adoption includes all the statutes or acts of the British Parliament made in aid and to supply the defects of the common law, prior to the fourth year of James 1, (except three chapters specifically mentioned) which are of a general nature and not local to that kingdom.

20. COMMON LAW--when, not superseded by statute. When the common law and a statute differ, the common law gives place to the statute only where the latter is couched in negative terms or where it is made so clearly repugnant that it necessarily implies a negative.

21. REPEALS BY IMPLICATION--rules with respect to. When there is a clear repugnancy between two laws and the provisions of both cannot be carried into effect, the latter law must prevail as the last expression of the legislative body; also, if the subsequent statute revises the whole subject-matter of a former one and is intended as a substitute for it, it operates as a repeal of the former, although it contains no express words to that effect; but repeals by implication are not favored.

22. STATUTORY CRIME--effect of creation of, upon analogous common law offense. The adoption of a statute with reference to a crime does not abolish the doctrines and practice of the common law in relation thereto so far as that crime is not covered by the act. Where the statute has not in express words defined the crime and fixed the punishment, the common law remains in full force and vigor, and if it be abated by statute, when that statute is repealed it springs up anew.

23. CRIMINAL CODE--section 46 of, relating to the offense of conspiracy, not repealed. This section of the Criminal Code was not repealed by the enactment of the Anti-Trust Act of 1891.

24. "MAY"--how construed. It is true that "may" oftentimes means "must" but it always retains its primitive meaning unless common fairness and the rights of the parties litigant demand that it be supplanted by "must," or unless it is used in a sentence which creates an exception in favor of the public.

25. TRUST--definition of. A pool or trust is a combination having the intention and power or tendency to monopolize business or to control production or to interfere with trade or to fix and regulate prices, and the like, and under the statutes of this state the application of the rule does not depend upon the number of those who may be implicated, nor the extent of territory covered by the combination, but does depend upon the existence or non-existence of a tendency to injure the public.

Counsel: MASTIN & MOSS and LAWRENCE & FOLSOM, for plaintiffs in error.

CHARLES S. DENEEN, State's Attorney, and ALBERT C. BARNES, Assistant State's Attorney, for defendant in error.

Judges: MR. JUSTICE BALL.

Opinion by: BALL

Opinion

---

[*94] MR. JUSTICE BALL delivered the opinion of the court.

It appears from the agreed statement of facts that the association, formed years ago by the defendants and other coal mining companies of Northern Illinois, is a voluntary one. In 1897 it assumed the name of the "Northern Illinois Soft Coal Association," having a president and secretary. Its expenses are paid out of assessments levied upon its members. Its meetings, which were held in the city of Chicago, were called by notices sent out by the secretary. Copies of the proceedings had at each meeting, with a few exceptions, were sent to the several defendants.

At a meeting of the association [**22] held March 26, 1900, it was resolved "That the price of mine run coal be ten (10) cents per ton less than standard lump; that when coal is sold through jobbers the shipping company shall see that full circular prices are maintained by said jobbers; that the maximum commission to jobbers shall be ten (10) cents per ton," etc. "That until further action of the association the circular price to dealers be $ 2.15 for standard lump, and $ 2.25 for chunks at mines." Then follows directions to the members as to the selection of the retail dealers who are permitted to handle association coal, accompanied by this statement: "The desire is to restrict these concessions to the utmost extent practicable, so please drop all names possible. The list finally compiled will be uniform through the Northern field, so that no company's interests will be prejudiced."

After a meeting of the association held September 26, 1902, under that date the secretary sent out "to said defendant companies and said other coal mining companies represented in said association" a circular, which reads, in part:

"At a meeting held this day the following was unanimously adopted:

'Resolved, That prices of association coal, [**23] including steam and all other business, except on such continuous sales as are legally or morally binding, effective October 1, '02, and subject to change without notice (quotations to be made September 29, 1902,) shall be as follows:

Ottawa.

Third Vein Standard Lump	$ 2 90 delivered.
Chunks	3 00 delivered.
Streator and Cardiff Standard Lump	2 80 delivered."

In this manner the price of coal is set forth and established in some forty other cities and towns in Northern Illinois. The list ends:

"Elsewhere, all lines.

Standard Lump	$ 2 40 delivered
Chunks	2 50 delivered

Mine run coal thirteen cents less than standard lump. Otherwise regulations of circular letter March 26, 1900, continue effective. The foregoing prices are minimum, and any member is at liberty to charge more for any size at his discretion."

At a meeting of the association held October 13, 1902, a similar resolution was adopted, and a like detailed list of cities and towns in Northern Illinois and prices was sent out to the several defendants. This circular closed as follows: "Mine run coal thirteen cents less than standard lump. Otherwise regulations of circular letter March 26, 1900, continue [**24] effective. The foregoing prices are minimum; and any member is at liberty to charge more for any size at his discretion."

At a meeting December 13, 1902, the association resolved "that on and after December 16, until further notice, circular prices on association coal with differentials, as established in circular October 13, 1902, * * * shall be $ 2.90 per ton for standard lump and egg; $ 3.00 for chunks, and $ 2.50 per ton for No. 1 nut at mines; and, resolved further, that no price shall be made for Chicago; that local points in Illinois on the 'Chicago & Alton' 'Wabash' and 'Santa Fe' be adjusted locally by the shippers in interest, and that all special prices other than as above in special list of October 13, 1902, be reduced fifty cents per ton; and resolved further, that no quotations, as above, be made by mail, word or in person prior to December 15, 1902."

[*96] The statement of facts further shows:

"(1) That each of the said defendant companies was represented at one or more of the meetings aforesaid, held on September 26, 1902, October 13, 1902, and December 13, 1902, by duly authorized representatives, and most of said defendant companies have been so represented [**25] at several previous meetings since the year 1897; that at said meetings held September 26, October 13, and December 13, 1902, the prices at which soft coal, so mined as aforesaid, should be sold in the State of Illinois and elsewhere was discussed, and the prices thereof were designated, which it was agreed should be set forth in a circular and forwarded by the secretary, aforesaid, to the said defendant companies; and it was further agreed thereat that said defendant companies should send out to the trade, dealers and consumers of soft coal in the State of Illinois and elsewhere, circulars in conformity to said circular prices and in accordance with the action so taken, as aforesaid."

That after the receipt of the several circulars some of the defendants sent out their own circulars to the trade, stating the prices of coal as mentioned in the association resolutions.

That all of the members of said association, except the Bell & Zoller Coal Company, during all this time were engaged in mining soft coal and selling it to consumers in the State of Illinois and elsewhere, "which said coal was an article of necessity to the consumers thereof, and a commodity and article of merchandise, [**26] mined and to be mined, produced and to be produced, sold and to be sold upon the market to the public and to consumers thereof in the State of Illinois and elsewhere."

And that the defendants include the larger producers of coal in Northern Illinois.

Whether or not a criminal conspiracy upon the part of the defendants is shown by the statement of facts, is a question which was submitted to the consideration of the learned trial judge who heard this cause. He found this issue against the defendants, and we agree with him in that conclusion. If a systematic attempt, covering years [*97] of time, by an association made up of the larger producers of coal in the northern part of the State of Illinois to control the output, sale and price of soft coal in every city and railroad town in that territory "and elsewhere," and to dictate who should and who should not locally handle that coal, be not criminal in its character, then pools, trusts and combinations have nothing to fear from the law.

The defendants presented to the trial court twenty-two written propositions of law to be by him marked "Held" or "Refused." He did neither. This non-action upon his part is claimed to be reversible [**27] error. Assuming that the court in a criminal case submitted for trial without a jury is governed by section 41 of the Practice Act, (a question we do not decide,) the effect to neglect to mark the propositions presented is the same as if each of them was marked "Refused." Calef v. Thomas, 81 Ill. 478. The defendants do not discuss the law as laid down in these propositions, but confine their argument to the supposed error in refusing to consider them. In such case it is not our duty to search them for possible errors in law. They stand before us as "refused." Every statement of law contained in these propositions is repeated in the motions to quash and in the motions in arrest of judgment. Hence these propositions need not be set out herein nor be considered separately, since, if neither of the above motions is well founded, the trial court did not commit error in this regard.

The grand jury which found this indictment made a written report to the Criminal Court concerning the respective amounts of hard and of soft coal received in the city of Chicago during the year 1902, and their deductions therefrom. We are asked to take judicial notice of that report and to consider [**28] its contents in our efforts to reach a proper conclusion in this case. We cannot so do. Such report is the voluntary act of the grand jury, for which there is no authority in the law. That body performed its whole duty when it passed upon all criminal cases of which it had knowledge, and returned to the court all the true bills it found. The indictment is the completed act of the [*98] grand jury; and that paper stands upon its merits or falls because of its demerits, wholly uninfluenced by any report, written or verbal, which the "accusing jury" may make to the court under whose guidance it has performed its labors. This rule of exclusion of that which is immaterial is carried so far that the United States courts refuse to look into the debates in Congress in search of information as to the meaning of the language of a statute passed by that body. U.S. v. Freight Association, 166 U.S. 290, 41 L. Ed. 1007, 17 S. Ct. 540.

The objection made by the defendants to the introduction in evidence of the first thirteen paragraphs of the statement of facts, because the means employed by the defendants in carrying out the object of the conspiracy are not set forth in the indictment, [**29] cannot be sustained. As will be shown hereafter, the offense of conspiracy to do an unlawful act is complete when the agreement is entered into. Hence it is not necessary to state in the indictment the means by which the conspirators intended to accomplish their unlawful object. While this is true, it does not relieve the state from the necessity of showing that the conspiracy existed; and therefore any acts of the defendants which fairly tend to establish the conspiracy, done and performed by them in furtherance of the object of their conspiracy, may be offered and received in evidence.

The defendants are not profited by the apparently voluntary nature of the association, nor by its lack of stringent by-laws, or want of penalties as against any offending member. The law discerns reality through whatever disguises it may assume. When inexperienced men form a combination to control a necessary of life they are very apt to furnish in the written agreement to combine all the evidence needed to convict them of this offense. But those who have seriously studied the subject do not make this mistake. Little can be learned from their admissions, written or otherwise. The evidence of combination, [*30] if there be such, must be gleaned from their conduct. The test is not what the agreement professes, but what it accomplishes. Proof of an agreement actually entered into is not necessary. [*99] HN1 [↑] A mere tacit understanding between conspirators to work to a common purpose is all that is essential to a guilty actionable combination. Patnode v. Westenhaver, 114 Wis. 460, 90 N.W. 467. "It makes no difference that the agreement for the illegal combination is not a formal written agreement. It may be a verbal agreement or understanding, or a scheme not embodied in writing, but evidenced by the action of the parties." Harding v. Am. Glucose Co., 182 Ill. 551, 55 N.E. 577.

The contention that the prosecution has not shown that the acts of the association were assented to by each defendant, and that therefore the findings of guilty cannot be sustained, is not well taken. The statement of facts shows three meetings of the association in 1902, at all of which the prices of soft coal were discussed and fixed, and it was ordered at each of such meetings that these prices should be sent out to the trade. The results of these meetings were sent to each defendant by their [**31] secretary, and many of the defendants sent out circulars to their local agents containing the same information. All of the defendants were members of the association in 1902, and had been such for some years previous to that date. Each defendant was represented by its duly authorized representatives at one or more of these meetings. Each and every of the defendants obeyed the resolutions passed at these meetings. Under these circumstances, and under an unbroken line of authorities extending back for 200 years, it is now too late successfully to assert that each member of this association and conspiracy is not bound by the acts of all its fellows done in furtherance of the object to accomplish which the combination was formed. When a combination and conspiracy is shown, the law does not individualize. Responsibility rests upon each for the acts of his fellows which tend to advance the purposes of the combination. "When two or more conspire together to commit an actionable wrong, everything said, done or written by any one of them in execution or furtherance of their common purpose, is deemed to be so said, done and written by every one, and is a relevant fact as against each." Hamilton v. Smith, 39 Mich. 222. [**32] [*100] See also, Lasher v. Little, 202 Ill. 551; Cooley of Torts, 127; U.S. v.

114 Ill. App. 75, *100 L.A. 904 Ill. App. LEXIS 387, **32

Cassidy, 67 F. 698; Spies v. People, 202 Ill. 551; Doremus v. Hennessy, 176 Ill. 608, 52 N.E. 924; Hawarden v. Coal Co., 111 Wis. 545, 87 N.W. 472; London v. Horn, 206 Ill. 493, 69 N.E. 526 (in which Allen v. Flood, 67 L. J. Q. B. 119, is disapproved).

Counsel for defendants say that the association did not fix prices for soft coal until after the passage of the Act of 1897, with its proviso relating to wages, and they interpose that proviso as a shield against this prosecution. There are two answers to this contention: First there is no evidence to show that the association or its members were moved to fix such prices and to decide who should handle their product by any sympathy for the workman, or by any desire to raise his wages, or with any intention of carrying this proviso into effect. It is true that at such meetings "discussions were had and resolutions passed respecting the subject of wages, transportation and prices" at which the defendants should sell their coal; but in none of the [*33] resolutions adopted, nor in any of the circulars sent out is the question of wages referred to. It is well known that such corporations are not organized or run as eleemosynary institutions, and that benevolence is not a necessary element in the mining and sale of coal by corporate bodies. Hence it is not strange that the learned trial judge found the evidence in this record insufficient to acquit the defendants of the offense charged, on the ground that "the principal object or effect" of the association and of its acts "was to maintain or increase wages;" nor that we agree with him in that conclusion. The scope of the agreement, not the possible self-restraint of the parties to it, is the test of its validity. The parties to this combination had the power to raise the price of soft coal within the territory over which it operated. Cummings v. Union B. S. Co., 164 N.Y. 401, 58 N.E. 525; Craft v. McConoughy, 79 Ill. 346; Morris Run C. Co. v. Barclay C. Co., 68 Pa. 173. Second. The proviso never was the law. In The People v. Butler S. F. Co., 201 Ill. 236, 66 N.E. 349, the Supreme Court held it to be unconstitutional, "as being [*34] an [*101] unlawful discrimination in favor of the persons sought to be exempted by the amendment from the operation of the Act of 1891, as amended by the Act of 1893." The defendants cannot use a law "that never was" as a shield to protect them against liability for acts which are forbidden by law. "An unconstitutional act is not a law; it confers no rights; it imposes no duties; it affords no protection; it creates no office; it is in legal contemplation as inoperative as though it had never been passed." Norton v. Shelby Co., 118 U.S. 425, 442, 30 L. Ed. 178, 6 S. Ct. 1121.

The defendants assert that the trial court erred in overruling the motion to quash the indictment, and also in overruling the motion in arrest of judgment.

It is urged (1) that the indictment does not charge nor does the agreed statement of facts establish a criminal conspiracy at common law, and therefore counts 2 and 4, each of which alleges a common law offense, cannot be sustained; (2) that the indictment does not charge nor does the agreed statement of facts establish a criminal conspiracy under the law of 1874, and therefore counts 1 and 3, drawn over that statute, cannot be sustained; [*35] and (3) that the fifth count of the indictment, which follows the wording of the Act of 1891, cannot be sustained because it does not allege (nor was it proved) where the defendants severally were incorporated; and because the form of the action should be debt, and not by indictment.

HN2 If there be one count in this indictment sufficient to sustain the sentence and judgment of the court, it makes but little difference either to the People or to the defendants, in what manner the remaining counts are disposed of. Hazen v. Com., 23 Pa. 355. If there be one good count in the indictment, a general finding that the defendant is guilty will not be disturbed because the indictment contains other counts which are bad. Duffin v. People, 107 Ill. 113; Lyons v. People, 68 Ill. 271.

To determine the issue here presented it is necessary to ascertain the common law rule governing combinations intended to fix the price or to control the market of any necessary of life.

[*102] In King v. Norris, 2 Kenyon's Notes of Cases, 300, decided in the King's Bench by that great common law judge, Lord Mansfield, it is said: "This was a motion for leave to file an information [*36] against the defendants, who were separate proprietors of salt works at Droitwich, for a conspiracy to raise the price of salt there, by entering into an article, whereby they bound themselves, under a penalty of # 200, not to sell salt under a certain price, which exceeded the price then received for it. * * * The articles were now cancelled and destroyed; but notwithstanding that, the court were unanimous for making the rule absolute; and Lord Mansfield declared, that if an agreement was made to fix the price of salt, or of any other necessary of life (which salt emphatically was) by people dealing in that commodity, the court would be glad to lay hold of an opportunity, from what quarter soever the complaint came, to show their sense of the crime, and that at what rate soever the price was fixed, high or low, made no difference, for all such agreements were of bad consequence and ought to be discountenanced. He mentioned an indictment upon one of the last home circuits against the bakers of the Town of Farnham for such an agreement."

In Mitchel v. Reynolds, 1 Peere Williams 181, 197 (decided in 1711), Parker, C. J., declared that "in all restraints of trade, where [**37] nothing more appears, the law presumes them bad."

In State v. Buchanan, et al., 5 Harris & J. (Md.) 317, decided in 1821, the defendants were indicted in one count for an executed conspiracy to cheat and defraud the president, directors and company of the Bank of the United States, and in a second count for a conspiracy only to cheat and defraud the same parties. The defendants' demurrer was sustained by the trial court; whereupon the State took the case to the Court of Appeals by writ of error. Counsel for the State, in support of the propositions that conspiracy was an offense at common law, that the statute de conspiratoribus, passed in the thirty-third year of the reign of Edward I., did not introduce a new rule, but merely was [*103] in affirmation of the common law, and that the gravamen of the offense consisted in the unlawful combination or confederacy to injure a third person, cited more than eighty English cases decided and text books published before the revolution; and Buchanan, Judge, after reviewing nearly of these authorities, finds by a course of decisions running through a space of more than four hundred years, without a single conflicting [**38] adjudication, nine points clearly settled. Of these we cite, in effect, the following: That the offense of conspiracy is of common law origin, and is not restricted or abridged by the statute 33 Edward I.; that a conspiracy to do any act that is criminal per se is an indictable offense at common law; that an indictment will lie at common law * * * for a conspiracy to do an act not illegal nor punishable if done by an individual, when done by the conspirators to effect a purpose which has a tendency to prejudice the public; that a conspiracy is a substantive offense and punishable at common law though nothing be done in execution of it--the conspiracy being the gist of the offense; that in a prosecution for a conspiracy it is sufficient to state in the indictment the conspiracy and the object of it, and that the means by which it was intended to be accomplished need not be set out, being only matters of evidence to prove the charge, and not the crime itself, and may be perfectly indifferent. The learned judge then goes on to say (p. 352): "From all which it results that every conspiracy to do an unlawful act, or to do a lawful act for an illegal, fraudulent, malicious, or corrupt [**39] purpose, or for a purpose which has a tendency to prejudice the public in general, is at common law an indictable offense, though nothing be done in execution of it, and no matter by what means the conspiracy was intended to be effected; which may be perfectly indifferent, and makes no ingredient of the crime, and therefore need not be stated in the indictment."

In King v. Eccles, 1 Leach Grim. Cases, 274, the defendants were charged with a conspiracy by wrongful and indirect means to impoverish Booth, a tailor, and to hinder [*104] and to prevent him from following his trade; but the acts done or intended to be done were not set out in the indictment. Upon this objection being made, the court declared that the offense did not consist in acts done or agreed to be done, but that the offense was the conspiracy and the object of it; and that therefore the acts need not be stated in the indictment, since the means adopted "were only matters of evidence to prove the charge and not the crime itself."

When our forefathers came to America they brought with them their rights and privileges as free men, and per consequence they also brought with them all the laws and customs of England [**40] suitable to their new surroundings and necessary for the preservation of those rights and privileges. Such was the understanding and rule of the English colonists; and each state settled by them or by their descendants, in due time, and except as modified by constitution or statute, has so declared. Boyer v. Sweet, 3 Scam. 119. Our statute adopts the common law so far as the same is applicable to our society and institutions, and all the statutes or acts of the British Parliament made in aid and to supply the defects of the common law prior to the fourth year of James I. (except three chapters specifically mentioned) which are of a general nature and not local to that Kingdom. R. S., Hurd, ch. 28. Hence we must look to the acts of Parliament enacted and to the judicial decisions handed down prior to the fourth year of James I. for evidence of what the common law is. An examination of them shows that the points made and the conclusion reached by the learned judge in The State v. Buchanan, supra, are clear and correct statements of the common law concerning conspiracy as it existed at the time from which we adopted the same.

In Smith v. People, 25 Ill. 9, [\[\*\*41\]](#) the defendants were indicted and convicted of a conspiracy to seduce a minor female. The indictment did not set out the means resorted to. Upon error to the Supreme Court it is said: "To attempt to define the limit or extent of the law of conspiracy, as deducible from the English decisions, would be a [\[\*105\]](#) difficult, if not an impracticable task, and we shall not attempt it at the present time. We may safely assume that it is indictable to conspire to do an unlawful act by any means, and also that it is indictable to conspire to do any act by unlawful means. In the former case it is not necessary to set out the means used, while in the latter it is, as they must be shown to be unlawful." To the assertion of counsel for the defendants that the term "unlawful" means "criminal," the court said that by the common law governing conspiracies, the term is not so limited; and that it was not necessary in such a case to show that the means to be used by the conspirators were unlawful or criminal.

To the proposition that this offense was but a common law offense, and is not punishable in Illinois where we have a criminal code defining most criminal offenses and prescribing their punishment, [\[\*\*42\]](#) the court answered that our criminal code prescribes punishment for offenses not enumerated, which can mean nothing other than common law offenses; thus showing conclusively that it was not the intention of the legislature to repeal that portion of the common law by implication; and reference is made to Johnson v. The People, 22 Ill. 314, where that question is decided.

HN3↑ "Where the object (of the conspiracy) is unlawful, the means by which it is to be accomplished are not material ingredients in the offense; and therefore in such a case it is never necessary to set them forth. The offense is complete the moment the conspiracy is made, whether any acts be done in pursuance of it or not. Such acts form no part of the offense, and the statement of them in the indictment is but surplusage." Hazen v. Com., 23 Pa. 355. See also, State v. Noyes, 25 Vt. 415.

In Thomas v. People, 113 Ill. 531, which was an indictment for a conspiracy to wrongfully obtain the goods of another, it was urged that the indictment was insufficient because it failed to set out the means used by the defendants. The court said: "The first count, under the ruling in [\[\*\*43\]](#) this state, whatever may be decided elsewhere, is clearly good. To obtain goods by false pretenses is, to every apprehension, [\[\*106\]](#) an illegal act; and the rule here is, where the act to be accomplished by the conspiracy is illegal, it is unnecessary to specify the means by which it was intended to be accomplished."

"The offense of conspiracy was complete at common law on proof of the unlawful agreement. It is not necessary to allege or prove any overt act in pursuance of the agreement." People v. Sheldon, 139 N.Y. 251, 34 N.E. 785. "The word illegal used in the statute is synonymous with unlawful, and means contrary to any law, whether criminal or civil." O'Donnell v. People, 110 Ill. App. 250, 263, and authorities cited. See also, State v. Parker, 43 N.H. 83; Ry. v. Warburton L. R., 1 C. C. 276; Bishop's Directions and Forms, sec. 283; Bishop v. Am. P. Co., 157 Ill. 284, 41 N.E. 765. Every misdemeanor is a crime. Van Meter v. People, 60 Ill. 168.

Counsel for defendants cite authorities from other jurisdictions to show that the word "illegal" as used in the statute means "criminal" or "unlawful" [\[\*\*44\]](#) as distinguished from "void" or "non-enforceable." Such authorities are entitled to great consideration as the settled conclusions of learned men upon questions which they have seriously considered, but they are not to be followed by us when such conclusions are adverse to the decisions of our Supreme Court, since the latter are final and are binding upon us.

From what has been said it appears that the combination shown in the statement of facts and found by the trial court to exist in this case was and is forbidden and punishable by the common law. Such a combination has a tendency to diminish production, to limit competition, and to enhance prices. The defendants are not aided by the fact, if it be a fact, that the prices fixed by the association were fair and reasonable, (Gibbs v. McNeeley, 118 F. 120, and cases cited; Harding v. Am. Glucose Co., 182 Ill. 551, 55 N.E. 577; People v. Milk Exchange, 145 N.Y. 267, 39 N.E. 1062;) or that the association had not in fact advanced the price of coal. That policy may not have been necessary to crush competition. Richardson v. Buhl, 77 Mich. 632, 43 N.W. 1102; U.S. v. Freight Ass'n, 166 U.S. 290; [\[\*\*45\]](#) State v. Standard Oil Co., 49 Ohio 186.

[\[\*107\]](#) HN4↑ "All combinations among persons or corporations for the purpose of raising or controlling the prices of merchandise or any of the necessities of life, are monopolies, and ought to receive the condemnation of all courts." Richardson v. Buhl, supra; see also, Arnot v. Pittston & E. C. Co., 68 N.Y. 558; India B. Co. v. Kock, 14 La. Ann. 168.

The first count of the indictment is based upon section 46 of the Criminal Code. It plainly sets out a combination and conspiracy upon the part of the defendants wrongfully, fraudulently and maliciously to regulate, and fix the price at which coal should be sold in the State of Illinois. The charge follows the wording of the Act so closely that the defendants cannot consistently complain that they were Surprised on the trial, or were unable to prepare for their defense by reason of any uncertainty or want of particularity in that regard. Further strictness in pleading is unnecessary. Cannady v. People, 17 Ill. 158; Williams v. People, 67 Ill. App. 344; Cole v. People, 84 Ill. 216.

But it is said that [**46] a criminal intent upon the part of the defendants is not alleged in this count; that such intent is material, and therefore the count, lacking this allegation, is fatally defective. This contention is based upon the words "with the fraudulent and malicious intent," which appear in the first part of the section. Five separate offenses are named in this section. The first, "to injure the person, character, business or property" of another, may or may not be a misdemeanor. That depends upon the intention of the accused. Under certain conditions it is admissible and not unlawful to thus injure another. Hence when that offense is charged the intent of the defendant is material and must be alleged and proved. Bishop's Directions & Forms, sec. 301. The remaining four offenses are in themselves illegal and criminal, and have always been so at common law. HN5↑ If a conspiracy to do an illegal act be set forth in an indictment, the charge is complete without the addition of words alleging a criminal intent in the doing of the act. In stating such an [*108] offense the criminal intent appears prima facie in the statement of the act itself. 1 Bish. N. Crim. Proc., sec. 521, pars. 3 and 4.

[**47] But if such intent should be alleged, the count sets forth that the act was done "unlawfully, fraudulently, maliciously, wrongfully and wickedly," thus clearly charging the intent of the defendants in the formation of the conspiracy and in the objects for which it was created. The terms of the statute are "wrongfully and wickedly." An indictment which alleges that the conspiracy was thus entered into is good, even in those cases where the object for which the combination was formed was not unlawful until forbidden by the statute. Ulery v. Chicago L. S. Ex., 54 Ill. App. 233. It follows that this count is good if section 46 is still in force. It is not asserted that this section is expressly repealed, but it is said that it is abrogated and superseded by the Act of 1891 by implication. The rule is that HN6↑ when there is a clear repugnance between two laws, and the provisions of both cannot be carried into effect, the latter law must prevail as the last expression of the legislative will. Sullivan v. People, 15 Ill. 233; Devine v. Board of Commissioners, 84 Ill. 590. Also, HN7↑ if a subsequent statute revises the whole subject of a former one, and is intended [**48] as a substitute for it, it operates as a repeal of the former, although it contains no express words to that effect. People v. Town of Thornton, 186 Ill. 162, 57 N.E. 841. Repeals by implication are not favored. Had the legislature thought section 46 covered the entire ground of conspiracy relating to injuries of the public trade, they would not have passed the Anti-Trust Act of 1891. Had they thought that the latter Act covered every offense provided for in section 46, we would expect them to repeal the latter section in express words. This they did not see fit to do. Where the legislature neglects to act in such case the courts are slow to declare the first law to be abrogated and superseded by the second. We do not think there is such a repugnancy between these two acts as will warrant us in deciding that section 46 stands repealed. When the common law and a [*109] statute differ, the common law gives place to the statute only where the latter is couched in negative terms, or where its matter is so clearly repugnant that it necessarily implies a negative. Black. Com. 89.

But if it were true that section 46 is repealed by the Act of 1891, the third count sets up [**49] the same facts as are contained in the first count, with the conclusion that they are "contrary to law." The first count is drawn over section 46, while the third count is framed at common law. If the facts charged in these counts are sufficient, and we hold that they are, then it is immaterial whether section 46 is or is not in force. The defendants must respond to one or the other of these two counts.

Counsel seem to infer that because certain conspiracies are legislated against, that the common law concerning conspiracies is abolished in this state. However this might be did our Criminal Code cover the entire ground of conspiracy, it is clear that it does not. That a conspiracy to commit any felony is indictable at common law was never questioned. This is also true of many misdemeanors. The adoption of a statute with reference to a crime does not abolish the doctrines and practice of the common law in relation thereto so far as that crime is not covered by the act. Wherever the statute has not in express words defined the crime and fixed the punishment, the common law remains in full force and vigor; and if it be abated by statute, when that statute is repealed it springs up [**50] anew, ever ready to protect the law-observing citizen from the evil designs of the law breaker. People v. Buchanan, 5 H. & J. 317, supra. It cannot be supposed that by such repeal the lawmaking power intended to extend perfect immunity thereafter to those who should commit that crime. State v. Rollins, 8 N.H. 550; State v. F. F. Company, 49 N.H. 240. But we need not go so far as this argument implies. HN8 Where the statute is not repugnant to the common law, the latter is not abrogated, in the absence of express words, or of affirmative implication repealing the common law.

"It is every-day practice in the criminal courts to proceed [*110] against offenders, either under a statute or at the common law, as the prosecuting power elects. Even where an indictment is meant to be drawn on a statute, if it proves defective as such, yet is good at the common law, it stands--the court rejecting the concluding words, 'against the form of the statute' as surplusage." Bishop on Stat. Crimes, sec. 164, also notes to same.

In State v. Norton, 3 Zab. (N.J.) 33, where a conspiracy statute did not contain a clause repealing the common law, it was held that [**51] the common law offense of conspiracy is not abolished by such statute, but that every conspiracy which was indictable at common law before the passage of the act is still indictable. That the law-making power did not intend to do away with common law conspiracies when it passed section 46, is shown in the latter part of the section, providing punishment, which reads, "and every such offender * * * and every person convicted of conspiracy at common law, shall be imprisoned," etc. This statute is either declaratory of the common law, or it is in addition thereto. In either case, it leaves the common law in full force outside of the express provisions of the act.

The contention that the indictment should allege and the facts prove that the defendants were incorporated under the laws of this state, or under the laws of some other state or country, for the purpose of doing business in this state, is answered by the words of the statute. The clear intention of the phrase "any corporation organized under the laws of this or any other state or country for transacting or conducting any kind of business in this state," is to include all corporations, wherever created. Hence the place of organization [**52] is immaterial, and therefore allegation or proof thereof is unnecessary. The "transacting or conducting any kind of business in this state" must be read in the light of the object of the statute, which is to prevent the forming of pools and combinations in this state for the purposes named in the Act by any and all corporations, wherever organized. To hold that the corporation created outside of this state, without being given specific power to do business [*111] in this state, may, by virtue of the lack of that specific power, come here and violate the statute and be immune from punishment, is a legal absurdity which is not to be tolerated. Sections 7a and 7b of the Act of 1891 show that what is referred to is the doing of business in this state. "It is the settled doctrine of this state, established by many decisions of this court, that foreign corporations do not come into this state as a matter of legal right, but only by comity, and that said corporations are subject to the same restrictions and duties as corporations formed in this state, and have no other or greater powers." Harding v. American G. Co., 182 Ill. 551, 55 N.E. 577.

Counsel for defendants say [**53] that any one may lawfully fix the price at which he will sell his product, or he may lawfully refuse to sell it at any price. This is true. The injury to the public, if any, from the acts of an individual are infinitesimal; and in the long run they correct themselves. Hence the law places few restrictions upon a man in the management of his own affairs. But "men can often do by the combination of many, what severally no one could accomplish, and even what when done by one would be innocent." Morris Run v. Barclay, supra. Whenever the act to be done by such a combination necessarily tends to prejudice the public or to oppress individuals, the combination has always been held to be criminal. "There is a potency in numbers when combined, which the law cannot overlook where injury is the consequence." Morris Run v. Barclay, supra. See also, People v. Chicago G. T., 130 Ill. 268, 22 N.E. 798; State v. Burnham, 15 N.H. 396; Com. v. Carlisle, Brightley (Pa.) 40; Northern Securities Co. v. U. S., Supreme Court of the United States, opinion delivered March 14, 1904, and cases therein cited.

Defendants say that an action of debt for [**54] the recovery of the penalty prescribed by the statute, and not an indictment, is the proper remedy against a corporation charged with a violation of the Anti-Trust Law of 1891. Section 1 of that Act declares that if any corporation, person, partnership or association shall enter into a pool or combination to regulate [*112] or fix the price of any article of merchandise or commodity, etc., he or they shall be deemed and adjudged guilty of a conspiracy to defraud, and be subject to indictment and punishment as provided in this Act. It follows that the doing of the forbidden act is a criminal offense, and it is expressly declared that the prosecution therefor shall be by indictment.

It is true that section 7 says that "the fines hereinbefore provided for may be recovered in an action of debt." The word "may" in this section is used in its permissive sense. To hold otherwise would violate the meaning of the words "and be subject to indictment" contained in section 1. It is true that "may" oftentimes means "must;" but it always retains its primitive meaning unless common fairness and the rights of parties litigant demand that it be supplanted by "must;" or unless it is used in [**55] a sentence which creates an exception in favor of the public. In this statute its meaning is plain. By its use the law-making power intended to give the people an election of remedies. Fowler v. Pirkins, 77 Ill. 271.

A pool or trust is a combination having the intention and power, or tendency, to monopolize business, or to control production, or to interfere with trade, or to fix and regulate prices, and the like. The primary object of a pool or trust is to secure a monopoly, since from that point of advantage it can destroy its competitors, and can control production, sales and prices. However, in practice, a pure monopoly, except in an extremely limited territory, is never reached. Nor does the law call for proof of monopoly in order to declare such combinations unlawful. The statement of facts herein shows that this association is wide in its scope, general in its control of the production and sale of soft coal over the greater part of Northern Illinois, and injurious in its effects upon the consumer and the general public. These things made it an unlawful combination, notwithstanding its control of the product of the market was not exclusive. Cummings v. Union B. S. Co., 164 N.Y. 401, 58 N.E. 525. [**56]

The statute of 1874 says: "If any two or more persons [*113] conspire," etc. The Act of 1891 declares, "If any corporation * * * shall create, enter into or become a member of or a party to any pool, trust," etc. Under these statutes it is obviously immaterial whether or not the restraint be general or partial. The application of the rule does not depend upon the number of those who may be implicated, nor the extent of territory covered by the combination; but does depend upon the existence or the non-existence of a tendency to injure the public. Nester v. Cont. Brew. Co., 161 Pa. 473, 29 A. 102.

In More v. Bennett, 140 Ill. 69, 29 N.E. 888, it is held as follows: "True, the restraint is not so far-reaching as it would have been if all of the stenographers in the city had joined the association, but so far as it goes, it is precisely of the same character, produces the same results, and is subject to the same legal objection. * * * We can see no legal difference between the restraint upon competition which it now exercises and that which it will exercise when it is in a position to dictate terms to all who are engaged in the business, and to all who [**57] may wish to obtain the services of law-stenographic reporters."

"To render the contract void it is not necessary that it should create pure monopoly. It would seem that the agreement may be illegal if the natural or necessary consequences of its operation are to prevent competition and create fictitious prices independent of the law of demand and supply, and to such an extent as to injuriously affect the interests of the public or the interests of a particular class of citizens who may be especially interested, either as producers or consumers, in the articles or staples which are the subject of the restriction imposed by the contract." Texas Standard O. Co. v. Adoue, 83 Tex. 650, 19 S.W. 274.

In Foss v. Cummings, 149 Ill. 353, 36 N.E. 553, twelve persons and firms formed a combination to force up the price of corn upon the Chicago market. With this object in view they purchased large amounts of May corn and withheld it from the market. The tendency of this action was to advance the price of one of the necessities of life, and to compel [*114] consumers to pay an unnatural price therefor. The adventure proved to be a losing one. Appellants brought assumpsit [**58] against others of the combination to recover moneys paid out, etc., in the transaction. Upon the trial the nature and object of the combination were disclosed. The trial court held the law to be that if the combination was entered into for the purpose of advancing the price of corn above what it would be if left free from manipulation, appellants had no right of recovery. The Supreme Court, upon appeal, declare this to be the law. They cite 9 Am. & Eng. Ency., 895, with approval. "All compacts between merchants, speculators or any class of men to elevate or depress the market are injurious to the public interest and in restraint of trade. When such a purpose is apparent in a contract, it strikes the agreement with nullity. Such a combination of dealers is nothing less than a conspiracy against trade, entered into for selfish purposes, and tending to make the poor poorer and the rich richer. Whether the design is to bring down the price of any commodity to a point below its value in a fair and open market, or to raise it above its true worth, the illegality of the combination is the same. Such designs will not be furthered by the courts, though there may be circumstances under which [**59] the object of such a contract does not sufficiently appear to expose the illegality. If the true character is known, the contract will be held void." The court then says: "It makes no difference that the agreement is only in partial restraint of trade. If the public is injuriously affected (and that is necessarily so when the combination tends to increase the price of a commodity in general use), it is illegal."

114 Ill. App. 75, *114 L<sup>A</sup> 904 Ill. App. LEXIS 387, **58

"Again, all the authorities agree that in order to vitiate a contract or combination, it is not essential that its results should be a complete monopoly; it is sufficient if it really tends to that end and to deprive the public of the advantages which flow from free competition." U.S. v. Knight, 156 U.S. 1, 39 L. Ed. 325, 15 S. Ct. 249, cited and followed in Addyston P. & S. Co. v. U. S., 175 U.S. 211, 44 L. Ed. 136, 20 S. Ct. 96.

HN9 [↑] "To vitiate a combination such as the (anti-trust) Act of [*115] Congress condemns, it need not be shown that the combination, in fact, results or will result in a total suppression of trade or in a complete monopoly, but it is only essential to show that by its necessary operation it tends to restrain interstate or [**60] international trade or commerce, or tends to create a monopoly in such trade or commerce, and to deprive the public of the advantages that flow from free competition." Northern Securities Co. v. U. S., Supreme Court of the United States, supra.

In Morris Run Coal Co. v. Barclay Coal Co., 68 Pa. 173, the combining companies did not include all the coal producers of the district in which they operated, and yet it was held that as the tendency of the association was to prejudice the public or to oppress consumers by unjustly subjecting them to the power of the confederates, the combination was criminal.

In the city of Memphis the master plumbers formed an association, one of the by-laws of which required each member to pay to the association a certain penalty upon all work done in competition with another member. Under this by-law Bailey, a member, owed the association $ 444, for which it brought suit. It was shown that the demand had no other basis than that by-law. Hence the question arose, is that by-law valid or invalid? The court held that it was destructive of free and natural competition among members, tended to the arbitrary and unreasonable increase of prices [**61] to customers, and therefore was contrary to public policy and void under the common law. The court add: "It is not the number of persons participating in the by-law, or the extent of the territory included, but the injury to the public in that territory, however restricted, that characterizes the interruption of trade as illegal." Bailey v. Master Plumbers Association, 103 Tenn. 99, 52 S.W. 853.

The majority, but not all, of the manufacturers of salt in the valleys of the Muskingum and Hocking rivers entered into an association, the objects of which were to control the prices and grades of salt made by them. Other salt makers sold their product in the localities where the association [*116] operated. Suit was brought to enforce the association agreement. The defense was that the agreement was unlawful. The court said: "It is no answer to say that competition in the salt trade was not in fact destroyed, or that the price of the commodity was not unreasonably advanced. Courts will not stop to enquire as to the degree of injury inflicted upon the public; it is enough to know that the inevitable tendency of such contracts is injurious to the public." Salt Co. v. Guthrie, 35 Ohio St. 666, 672. [**62]

"All the cases, ancient and modern, agree that HN10 [↑] a combination, the object of which is to prevent general competition and to control prices, is detrimental to the public, and consequently unlawful." People v. N. River S. F. Co., 2 L.R.A. 40.

The combination in this case threatened a practical monopoly in an article necessary to the home comfort and to the business success of the individual. Its combined weight and power compelled the consumer to comply with its demands. Its acts tended to increase the price of an article of prime necessity in general use. Such a combination is forbidden by the common law and by the statute as being a conspiracy in restraint of trade.

114 Ill. App. 75, *116 Ill. App. LEXIS 387, **62

Finding no reversible error in this record, the judgment of the Criminal Court as to each of the plaintiffs in error is affirmed.

Affirmed.

---

End of Document

In re Bell

Supreme Court of Kansas

January, 1904, Decided ; May 7, 1904, Filed

No. 13,750.

Reporter

69 Kan. 855 *; 76 P. 1129 **; 1904 Kan. LEXIS 360 ***

In re JOHN BELL, Petitioner.

Prior History: [***1] Original proceeding in habeas corpus. Opinion filed May 7, 1904. Petitioner remanded.

Disposition: Case remanded.

Core Terms

---

questions, due process of law, guilty of contempt, propounded, adjudged, deprive

Counsel: Rossington, Smith & Histed, J. T. Pringle, and R. B. Gilluly, for petitioner.

C. C. Coleman, attorney-general, Edwin A. Austin, Otis E. Hungate, and Thompson, Springer & Price, for respondent.

Opinion

---

[**1129] [*855] Per Curiam: This is an original proceeding in habeas corpus. On the 8th day of September, 1903, the petitioner, John Bell, who had appeared as a witness before the district court of Shawnee county, pursuant to subpoena, refused to answer certain questions in a proceeding or investigation in that court concerning the existence of combinations of coal operators in violation of the "antitrust law" (Laws of 1897, ch. 265; Gen. Stat. 1901, §§ 7864-7874), and was adjudged guilty of contempt and [*856] committed to the county jail of Shawnee county until he should be willing to answer the questions propounded to him, but not beyond a period of thirty days.

Petitioner charges that he is illegally restrained of his liberty by the sheriff of Shawnee county for the reason that chapter 265 of the Laws of 1897, under which this proceeding was had, is [***2] in violation of the fourteenth amendment to the federal constitution, in this, that it deprives one of liberty without due process of law; that it takes property without due process of law; and that it denies the equal protection of the law; all of which provisions are contrary to the guaranties of said constitutional amendment. It is also charged that to require petitioner to answer the questions propounded to him, his refusal so to do having resulted in his being adjudged guilty of contempt, was to deprive him of the rights, privileges and immunities guaranteed by section 10 of the bill of rights. This case arises out of the same proceeding, and involves the same questions, as The State v. Jack, ante, page 387, and that decision is decisive of this one.

The petitioner should have answered the questions asked him upon the inquiry, and, hence, he will be remanded.

State v. Jack

Supreme Court of Kansas

January, 1904, Decided ; May 7, 1904, Filed

No. 13,774.

Reporter

69 Kan. 387 *; 1904 Kan. LEXIS 262 **; 76 P. 911

THE STATE OF KANSAS v. JOHN D. JACK.

Prior History: [**1] Appeal from Shawnee district court; Z. T. HAZEN, judge. Opinion filed May 7, 1904. Affirmed.

Disposition: Judgment affirmed.

Core Terms

---

anti-trust, immunity, subpoenaed, combinations, violations, questions, criminal prosecution, district court, witnesses, contempt, immunity afforded, commerce, courts, trusts, fines, coal, constitutional privilege, interstate commerce, legislative power, imprisonment, forfeitures, deprived, pools, violation of the act, due process of law, provide by law, prosecutions, disclosure, punish

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Witnesses > Subpoenas > Challenges & Modifications

Governments > Courts > Court Personnel

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Civil Procedure > Discovery & Disclosure > Discovery > Subpoenas

Civil Procedure > Sanctions > Contempt > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Witnesses > Subpoenas > Service of Subpoenas

Governments > Courts > Clerks of Court

HN1[] Subpoenas, Challenges & Modifications

Section 10 of ch. 265 of the Act of 1897 states that the several district courts of Kansas and the judges thereof shall have jurisdiction to cause to be issued by the clerk of said court subpoenas for witnesses as may be named in the application of a county attorney or the attorney-general, and to cause the same to be served by the sheriff of the county where such subpoena is issued. Such witnesses shall be compelled to appear before such court or judge at the time and place set forth in the subpoena, and shall be compelled to testify as to any knowledge they may have of the violations of any of the provisions of the act. Any witness who fails or refuses to attend and testify shall be punished as for contempt, as provided by law. Any person subpoenaed and examined shall not be liable to criminal prosecution for any violation of the act about which he may testify. Neither shall the evidence of any such witness be used against him in any criminal proceeding. The evidence of all witnesses so subpoenaed shall be taken down by the reporter of said court, and shall be transcribed and placed in the hands of the county attorney or the attorney-general, and he shall, in the proper courts, at once prosecute such violator or violators of the act as the testimony so taken shall disclose. Witnesses subpoenaed as provided for in § 10 shall be compelled to attend from any county in the state.

Constitutional Law > Equal Protection > Nature & Scope of Protection

Governments > Courts > Authority to Adjudicate

HN2[ Equal Protection, Nature & Scope of Protection

A state has full control over the procedure in its courts, both in civil and criminal cases, subject only to the qualification that such procedure must not work a denial of fundamental rights, or conflict with specific and applicable provisions of the federal constitution. The Fourteenth Amendment does not profess to secure to all persons in the United States the benefit of the same laws and the same remedies. Great diversities in these respects may exist in two states. Any legal proceeding enforced by public authority, whether sanctioned by age and custom, or newly devised in the discretion of the legislative power, in furtherance of the general public good, which regards and preserves these principles of liberty and justice, must be held to be due process of law.

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Jurisdictional Sources > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Sanctions > Contempt > General Overview

HN3[ Jurisdiction, Jurisdictional Sources

Gen. Stat. § 1923 (1901) gives to district courts general original jurisdiction of all matters, both civil and criminal, not otherwise provided by law. Gen. Stat. § 1924 (1901) provides that district judges shall have and exercise such power in vacation or at chambers as may be provided by law, and shall also have power to punish for contempt in open court or at chambers.

Civil Procedure > Sanctions > Contempt > General Overview

HN4[ Sanctions, Contempt

The right of a district court and district judges to punish for contempt, without a jury, is well recognized.

Administrative Law > ... > Scope of Authority > Methods of Investigation > Subpoenas

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Civil Procedure > Sanctions > Contempt > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Discovery & Disclosure > Discovery > Subpoenas

HN5 Methods of Investigation, Subpoenas

The procedure under § 10 of ch. 265 of the Act of 1897 is an investigation, or preliminary proceeding, and can result in no final judgment, except in a proceeding for contempt against a recalcitrant witness, unless it be the result of a regular judicial trial, conducted in the manner provided by statute. It is a valid exercise of judicial power, and the procedure is due process of law.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Alcohol Related Offenses > Manufacture > General Overview

Evidence > ... > Competency > Disability > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > Self-Incrimination Privilege

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Alcohol Related Offenses > Distribution & Sale > Penalties

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Miscellaneous Offenses > Gambling > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > Sentencing > Fines

Evidence > Privileges > Self-Incrimination Privilege > General Overview

HN6 Alcohol Related Offenses, Manufacture

Legislative bodies possess the power to grant amnesty to witnesses and compel them to give testimony against themselves. When the testimony sought cannot, by reason of an immunity statute, be used as a basis for, or in aid of, a prosecution which might result in fine or imprisonment, or involve a penalty or forfeiture, the privilege cannot be claimed. Immunity statutes are given a reasonable construction, and when it is apparent to the court that a person is fully protected from the effect of his testimony he should be required to testify, even though it may show him guilty of a criminal offense.

Criminal Law & Procedure > Trials > Witnesses > Presentation

Evidence > Privileges > Self-Incrimination Privilege > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > Self-Incrimination Privilege

HN7 Witnesses, Presentation

The protection afforded the witness by the constitution is that of not being a witness against oneself. If the act of which inquiry is made does not constitute a crime, or, if made a crime, it has no punishment prescribed for its violation, or be no longer punishable, or if the act be barred by the statute of limitations, with no action pending, or the law has been repealed, or if the witness has been tried for the offense and acquitted, or convicted and satisfied the sentence imposed by the law, he can claim no exemption from answering questions relating thereto. Likewise the witness is deprived of claiming this exemption from testifying if the legislature, by the enactment of an immunity statute, has provided that he shall not be liable to criminal prosecution for any violation of the act about which he may testify, nor his evidence used against him in any criminal proceeding. As to prosecutions for those crimes to which his evidence relates, under the immunity act the witness is in the same position, in so far as there is a possibility of using his evidence against him, as though there were no such crimes provided by statute.

Civil Procedure > Sanctions > Contempt > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Sentencing > Fines

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Civil Procedure > Discovery & Disclosure > Discovery > Subpoenas

HN8 Sanctions, Contempt

Section 5 of ch. 265 of the Act of 1897 provides, as a punishment for one convicted of a violation of the act, a fine of not less than $ 100 nor more than $ 1,000, and confinement for not less than 30 days nor more than six months. Sections 5 and 6 provide a penalty of $ 100 per day for each and every day such violation shall continue after conviction. It is further provided by § 5 that every person, company, or corporation who shall violate any of the provisions of the act, be denied the right of, and be prohibited from, doing any business within Kansas. The last provision contemplates the prohibiting of the continuance of, or engagement in, business in the state only when such business is in violation of the act. It does not prohibit persons from continuing or engaging in any lawful business in the state, not conducted or carried on in violation of the act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN9 Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Section 7 of ch. 265 of the Act of 1897 provides that in any civil action, there may be pleaded in defense that the plaintiff, or any person interested in the prosecution, has within one year been guilty of a violation of any of the provisions of the anti-trust act.

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > Self-Incrimination Privilege

Criminal Law & Procedure > Trials > Witnesses > Presentation

Evidence > Privileges > Self-Incrimination Privilege > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN10 Procedural Due Process, Self-Incrimination Privilege

The immunity afforded by the anti-trust act is coextensive with the constitutional privilege against self-incrimination. Such immunity is sufficient, and a witness, thus protected, cannot invoke the constitutional privilege of silence.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Civil Actions > General Overview

Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Federal Powers

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN11[] US Department of Justice Actions, Civil Actions

The United States has no jurisdiction over combinations, pools, and trusts, relating to commerce wholly within a state, nor does it acquire jurisdiction over that part of a combination or agreement relating wholly to commerce within a state by reason of the fact that the combination covers and regulates commerce which is interstate. In so far as such combinations interfere with interstate commerce, they are under the control of the United States; in so far as they interfere with commerce wholly within the state, they are subject only to the jurisdiction of the state.

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > General Overview

HN12[] Preliminary Considerations, Federal & State Interrelationships

Where two governments like the United States and a state exercise their authority within the same territory, and over the same citizens, the legislation of that which, as to certain subjects, is subordinate should be construed with reference to the powers and authority of the superior government, and not be deemed as invading them, unless such construction be absolutely demanded.

Syllabus

---

SYLLABUS BY THE COURT.

1. ANTI-TRUST LAW -- Provision for Preliminary Examination of Witnesses Approved. A proceeding before the district court or judge thereof upon the written application of the county attorney or attorney-general, under section 10 of chapter 265, Laws of 1897 (Gen. Stat. 1901, § 7873), to subpoena witnesses to testify of their knowledge of violations of provisions of the act known as the "anti-trust law," is of the nature of an investigation, or preliminary proceeding, and is a valid exercise of judicial power, the procedure being "due process of law," within the meaning of the *fourteenth amendment to the federal constitution*.
2. ANTI-TRUST LAW -- Exemption Provision of Bill of Rights Held Not Available. The exemption provided by section 10 of the bill of rights (Gen. Stat. 1901, § 92), that "no person shall be a witness against himself," cannot be claimed by a witness when, by the terms of a statute, the immunity afforded is coextensive with the constitutional privilege of silence.
3. ANTI-TRUST LAW -- *Immunity Provision [**2] Held Coextensive with Constitutional One*. The immunity afforded by section 10 of the **antitrust law** of 1897 to a witness subpoenaed in a proceeding or inquiry to testify of his knowledge of violations of that law is coextensive with the constitutional privilege that "no person shall be a witness against himself."
4. ANTI-TRUST LAW -- Possibility of Prosecution under Federal Anti-trust Law Will Not Excuse Witness from Testifying. A witness subpoenaed in a proceeding or inquiry to testify of his knowledge of violations of the anti-trust law cannot refuse to give his evidence on the ground that the immunity provided by section 10 of the act does not afford protection against the use of his evidence in a prosecution against him for violations of the federal **antitrust law**.
5. ANTI-TRUST LAW -- Prohibition of Doing Further Business in the State Construed. The provision of section 5 of the anti-trust law of 1897, that every person, company or corporation violating any of the provisions of the act be denied the right of, and prohibited from, doing any business within the state, contemplates the prohibiting of the continuance of, or the engagement in, business only when such [**3] business is in violation of the act.

6. ANTI-TRUST LAW -- Provision of Defense in Civil Action Construed. The provision of section 7 of the anti-trust law of 1897, that in any civil action there may be pleaded in defense that the plaintiff, or any person interested in the prosecution, has, within one year, been guilty of a violation of any of the provisions of the act, contemplates only civil actions relating to, and growing out of, transactions prohibited by the act.

7. ANTI-TRUST LAW -- Law Held Not in Contravention of Fourteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution. The anti-trust law of 1897 is held not to be in contravention of the provisions of the fourteenth amendment to the constitution of the United States, but to be a valid exercise of legislative power.

Counsel: C. C. Coleman, attorney-general, Otis E. Hungate, county attorney, Edwin A. Austin, and Thompson, Springer & Price, for The State.

Rossington, Smith & Histed, J. T. Pringle, and R. B. Gilluly, for appellant.

Judges: ATKINSON, J. All the Justices concurring.

Opinion by: ATKINSON

Opinion

---

[*389] The opinion of the court was delivered by

ATKINSON, J.: This is an appeal by John D. Jack from a judgment of [*4] imprisonment for contempt by the district court of Shawnee county. Appellant, as a witness, refused to answer certain questions in a proceeding, or investigation, in that court concerning the existence of unlawful combinations of coal-operators, and was adjudged guilty of contempt.

On September 3, 1903, the attorney-general and the county attorney of Shawnee county, proceeding under section 10 of chapter 265, Laws of 1897 (Gen. Stat. 1901, § 7873), filed in the district court of Shawnee county their verified application, informing the court of the existence of unlawful combinations of persons engaged in the operation of coal-mines in Osage county, for the purpose of fixing the price of coal at the mines and the price to be charged to purchasers. It was therein averred that the members of these combinations met monthly in the county of Shawnee and fixed minimum prices to be charged for coal, and agreed that they would not sell it for less than such minimum prices, and that these agreements were carried out and executed by the members. Among others named in said application as having knowledge of the existence of these combinations was appellant, and for him it was therein asked that [*5] a subpoena issue. The district judge awarded subpoenas upon the application. The court denied the motion of appellant to quash the subpoena issued, and he thereupon appeared in court as a witness, and was asked the following questions:

"Ques. Do you know of any meetings of the operators of Osage county being held in this city [Topeka] at intervals during the last year?

[*390] "Q. I will ask you if you have any knowledge of a combine's or an agreement's being entered into by operators in coal of Osage county for the purpose of fixing the price of coal sold to residents and citizens of Kansas?

"Q. Have you any knowledge of any meetings of coal-operators of Osage county, Kansas, being held in this city on the last Saturday night of each month during the last year, the purpose of which was to fix the price of coal which was to be charged to citizens of Kansas?

"Q. Do you know of any agreement's having been entered into within this county within the last year between the operators in coal who operate in Osage county, Kansas, by which they attempted to fix and settle the price of coal between themselves and citizens of Kansas?"

Appellant refused to answer each of the foregoing [**6] questions, assigning the following as his reason therefor:

"I am engaged in operating a coal-mine in Osage county, Kansas, and in dealing in the output of said mines, and am one of the persons named in the application for subpoenas in this proceeding. The product of the mines of Osage county is the subject of both domestic and interstate commerce. I respectfully decline to answer the questions, or to testify with reference to the subject of this inquiry, for the reason that, in answering the questions and in submitting myself to an examination as a witness, I may incriminate myself and give information as to the details of the said alleged combination and agreement, and the names of parties and witnesses which might supply the means of convicting me of a crime and of subjecting me to imprisonment, fines, forfeitures, and penalties, and I therefore claim the privilege and immunity of section 10 of the bill of rights."

The anti-trust law (Laws 1897, ch. 265; Gen. Stat. 1901, §§ 7864-7874) is vigorously assailed. It is [*391] charged that the act is in violation of the fourteenth amendment to the federal constitution, in that it deprives a person of liberty and property without [**7] due process of law, and denies him the equal protection of the law. It is also charged that the requiring of appellant to answer these questions (his refusal so to do being the cause of his imprisonment for contempt) deprives him of the rights, privileges and immunities guaranteed by section 10 of the bill of rights (Gen. Stat. 1901, § 92). The motion to quash the subpoena raised the question whether the proceedings upon the application and the issuing of subpoenas thereunder, as provided by section 10 of the act of 1897, were "due process of law," within the meaning of the fourteenth amendment to the federal constitution. HN1↑ Said section reads:

"The several district courts of this state and the judges thereof shall have jurisdiction, and it shall be their duty, upon good cause shown and upon written application of the county attorney or the attorney-general, to cause to be issued by the clerk of said court subpoenas for such witnesses as may be named in the application of a county attorney or the attorney-general, and to cause the same to be served by the sheriff of the county where such subpoena is issued; and such witnesses shall be compelled to appear before such court or judge [**8] at the time and place set forth in the subpoena, and shall be compelled to testify as to any knowledge they may have of the violations of any of the provisions of this act; and any witness who fails or refuses to attend and testify shall be punished as for contempt, as provided by law. Any person subpoenaed and examined shall not be liable to criminal prosecution for any violation of this act about which he may testify. Neither shall the evidence of any such witness be used against him in any criminal proceeding. The evidence of all witnesses so subpoenaed shall be taken down by the reporter of said [*392] court, and shall be transcribed and placed in the hands of the county attorney or the attorney-general, and he shall, in the proper courts, at once prosecute such violator or violators of this act as the testimony so taken shall disclose. Witnesses subpoenaed as provided for in this section shall be compelled to attend from any county in the state."

It is urged by appellant that the proceeding provided by this section is not judicial in its character, and is not "due process of law," in that it is not founded upon complaint, information, or indictment. District courts are expressly [**9] created by the constitution, and therein given such jurisdiction as may be provided by law (Const., § 6, art. 3), its extent and practice being left to the legislature. Judges of the district courts are expressly created by the constitution, and therein given such jurisdiction at chambers as may be provided by law (Const., § 16, art. 3), its extent being left to the legislature.

The wide scope given to the states in the matter of their judicial tribunals and the character of their procedure, as recognized by the federal government, was clearly set forth in the opinion by Mr. Justice Brewer, in the case of Brown v. New Jersey, 175 U.S. 172, 175, 20 S. Ct. 77, 44 L. Ed. 119, where it was said:

HN2↑ "The state has full control over the procedure in its courts, both in civil and criminal cases, subject only to the qualification that such procedure must not work a denial of fundamental rights, or conflict with specific and applicable provisions of the federal constitution. ( Ex parte Reggel, 114 U.S. 642, 5 S. Ct. 1148, 29 L. Ed. 250; Iowa Central Railway v. Iowa, 160 id. 389, 16 S. Ct. 344, 40 L. Ed. 467; Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad v. Chicago [**10], 166 id. 226, 17 S. Ct. 581, 41 L. Ed. 979.) 'The fourteenth amendment does not profess to secure to all persons in the United States the benefit of the same [*393] laws and the same remedies. Great diversities in these respects may exist in two states separated only by an imaginary line. On one side of this line there may be a right of trial by jury, and on the other side no such right. Each state prescribes its modes of judicial proceeding.' Missouri v. Lewis, 101 U.S. 22, 31, 25 L. Ed. 989. . . .

"A perfectly satisfactory definition of due process may perhaps not be easily stated. In Hurtado v. California, 110 U.S. 516, 537, 4 S. Ct. 111, 121, 28 L. Ed. 232, Mr. Justice Matthews, after reviewing previous declarations, said: 'It follows that any legal proceeding enforced by public authority, whether sanctioned by age and custom, or newly devised in the discretion of the legislative power, in furtherance of the general public good, which regards and preserves these principles of liberty and justice, must be held to be due process of law.' In Leeper v. Texas, 139 U.S. 462, 468 11 S. Ct. 577, 579, 35 L. Ed. 225, Chief Justice [**11] Fuller declared 'that law in its regular course of administration through courts of justice is due process, and when secured by the law of the state the constitutional requirement is satisfied.' "

HN3 Section 1923, General Statutes of 1901, gives to district courts general original jurisdiction of all matters, both civil and criminal, not otherwise provided by law. Section 1924 provides that district judges "shall have and exercise such power in vacation or at chambers as may be provided by law, and shall also have power . . . to punish for contempt in open court or at chambers." HN4 The right of the district courts and district judges to punish for contempt, without a jury, is well recognized. (In re Millington, Petitioner, &c., 24 Kan. 214; The State, ex rel., v. Durein, 46 id. 695, 27 P. 148; 7 A. & E. Encycl. of L., 2d ed., 66; Interstate Commerce Comm. v. Brimson, 154 U.S. 447, 14 S. Ct. 1125, 38 L. Ed. 1047.) By section 10 of the act of 1897 the legislature conferred upon district [*394] courts and judges thereof the power to order the issue of subpoenas for witnesses, upon written application, and to compel them to attend and testify, with [**12] authority to punish as for a contempt upon a refusal so to do. In the case of Interstate Commerce Comm. v. Brimson, supra, the court upheld a somewhat analogous provision of the interstate-commerce act wherein the circuit court is given power to entertain an application of the commission, issue subpoenas, examine witnesses, and commit for contempt where a witness refuses to testify. HN5 The procedure under section 10 is an investigation, or preliminary proceeding, and can result in no final judgment, except in a proceeding for contempt against a recalcitrant witness, unless it be the result of a regular judicial trial, conducted in the manner provided by statute. It is a valid exercise of judicial power, and the procedure is "due process of law."

The case of The State v. Smiley, * 65 Kan. 240, 69 P. 199, was an appeal from a judgment of conviction for a violation of this law. It was there charged that the act imposed such limitations upon freedom of contract as to constitute a deprivation of the right of property, contrary to the fourteenth amendment to the federal constitution. This court held that it did not conflict with the right to acquire property [**13] by lawful contract, the guaranty of which is secured by the federal constitution, and that the forbiddance of membership in combinations in restraint of trade was a valid exercise of legislative power.

It is contended by appellant that compliance with the requirement to answer the foregoing questions would have deprived him of the privileges and immunities guaranteed to him by section 10 of the bill [*395] of rights, which provides that "no person shall be a witness against himself." This is not only a constitutional right, but it is also a fundamental principle of the common law, embodied in the maxim that "no man can be compelled to criminate himself." This proceeding before the district court was of the nature of an investigation to inquire whether there had been criminal violations of the anti-trust law. If appellant were guilty of any of the offenses of which inquiry was made by the questions which [**14] he refused to answer, he was liable to criminal prosecution under this law. He assigned as a reason for his refusal to answer the questions that in doing so he might criminate himself under the anti-trust law, he being an operator of coal-mines in the state, and dealing in their output. The legislature, by section 10 of the act of 1897, provided immunity to witnesses subpoenaed to testify concerning violations of the act in the following language:

"Any person subpoenaed and examined shall not be liable to criminal prosecution, for any violation of this act about which he may testify. Neither shall the evidence of any such witness be used against him in any criminal proceeding."

---

* Affirmed by supreme court of the United States, February 20, 1905 (25 S. Ct. 289).--REP.

Was appellant, as a witness upon this investigation, entitled to invoke the protection of section 10 of the bill of rights? Was he entitled to plead the privilege of silence? If the immunity against prosecution, provided for by section 10 of the anti-trust law, afford the witness upon such investigation the protection against future prosecutions that is guaranteed to him by section 10 of the bill of rights, then appellant was not entitled to invoke the protection of the latter provision; nor was he entitled [**15] to plead the privilege of silence. ( Counselman v. Hitchcock, 142 U.S. 547, 12 S. Ct. 195, 35 L. Ed. 1110; [*396] Brown v. Walker, 161 id. 591, 16 S. Ct. 644, 40 L. Ed. 819.)

It is well settled that HN6[<sup>1</sup>] legislative bodies possess the power to grant amnesty to witnesses and compel them to give testimony against themselves. This power has been recognized as a public necessity in the enforcement of laws. Congress and the legislatures of many states have enacted immunity statutes for the purpose of securing convictions for such offenses as gambling, bribery, the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquors, usury, combinations in restraint of trade, and like offenses, in which two or more persons participate to constitute the crime, the necessities of the case and the difficulty of obtaining witnesses to establish the offense, punish the offenders, and suppress the crime, being deemed sufficient to warrant the extending of immunity to a participant in order to constitute him a competent witness against the other offenders. The constitutional privilege that a person shall not be required to be a witness against himself is of great value to the citizen accused. [**16] However, the authorities, state and federal, recognize the rule that when the testimony sought cannot, by reason of an immunity statute, be used as a basis for, or in aid of, a prosecution which might result in fine or imprisonment, or involve a penalty or forfeiture, the privilege cannot be claimed. Immunity statutes must be given a reasonable construction--not a strained and artificial one, and when it is apparent to the court that a person is fully protected from the effect of his testimony he should be required to testify, even though it may show him guilty of a criminal offense.

It is claimed, however, that the immunity afforded by section 10 of the anti-trust law is not sufficient to constitute a substitute for the privilege of silence [*397] guaranteed the witness by section 10 of the bill of rights. The legislature determines what acts of the individual shall constitute a crime against the state, and what shall constitute the punishment of an offender, upon conviction. It determines within what period a prosecution for the commission of an offense shall be commenced, and may determine, within constitutional limitation, what shall and what shall not constitute evidence [**17] competent to be used upon the trial of an HN7[<sup>1</sup>] offender. The protection afforded the witness by the constitution is that of not being a witness against himself. If the act of which inquiry is made do not constitute a crime, or, if made a crime, it have no punishment prescribed for its violation, or be no longer punishable, or if the act be barred by the statute of limitations, with no action pending, or the law have been repealed, or if the witness have been tried for the offense and acquitted, or convicted and satisfied the sentence imposed by the law, he can claim no exemption from answering questions relating thereto. Likewise the witness is deprived of claiming this exemption from testifying if the legislature, by the enactment of an immunity statute, have provided that he shall not be liable to criminal prosecution for any violation of the act about which he may testify, nor his evidence used against him in any criminal proceeding. As to prosecutions for those crimes to which his evidence relates, under the immunity act the witness is in the same position, in so far as there is a possibility of using his evidence against him, as though there were no such crimes provided by statute.

[**18] It is urged that the amnesty provided by section 10 is not complete, as it affords no immunity to a stockholder in any such corporation. There is nothing in the record disclosing appellant to be a stockholder, [*398] an officer, or an agent, or otherwise connected with any corporation that might, in any manner, be affected or suffer, as the result of his disclosure as a witness. The constitutional provision was intended for the protection of the witness; "the hurt must be to himself"; he himself must be included in the terms of the law before he can have just grounds for complaint. (The State v. Smiley, supra.) However, it was never intended that the immunity afforded the witness by this act should extend to, and protect, the stockholders, officers and agents of a corporation, as such; the immunity extends to the witness alone; it was not contemplated that it would be made use of as a pretext for securing immunity to others. That the immunity afforded the witness, to be complete, must extend to the officers, agents and stockholders of a corporation, as contended by appellant, is too remote.

HN8[<sup>1</sup>] Section 5 provides, as a punishment for one convicted of a violation of the act, [**19] a fine of not less than one hundred dollars nor more than one thousand dollars, and confinement for not less than thirty days nor more than six months. Sections 5 and 6 provide a penalty of one hundred dollars per day for each and every day such violation shall continue after conviction. It is further provided by section 5, that every person, company or corporation who shall violate any of the provisions of the act, be denied the right of, and be prohibited from, doing any business within this state. The last provision contemplates the prohibiting of the continuance of, or engagement in, business in the state only when such business is in violation of the act; it was not intended thereby to prohibit persons from continuing or engaging in any lawful business. in the state, not conducted or carried on in violation [*399] of the act. Viewed in the light of the interpretation thus given it, the provision is a valid exercise of legislative power, and is not open to the charge made against it by appellant that it constitutes, in effect, banishment from the state.

The provisions of HN9[↑] section 7 that in any civil action there may be pleaded in defense that the plaintiff, or any person interested [**20] in the prosecution, has within one year been guilty of a violation of any of the provisions of the act, as held in Barton v. Mulvane, 59 Kan. 313, 52 P. 883, under a very similar provision of the anti-trust act of 1889 (Laws 1889, ch. 257), contemplates only civil actions relating to, and growing out of, transactions prohibited by the act. It was not intended by the legislature to deprive the litigant of the right to resort to the courts for the protection of property rights and interests not connected with such combinations or trusts. Thus interpreted, the provision is a valid exercise of legislative power, and is not open to the charge of appellant that it constitutes outlawry.

It was the intention of the legislature, by section 10 of the act, to afford the witness complete immunity against criminal prosecution, fines, imprisonment, penalties, and forfeitures, for any violation of the act about which the witness might give evidence upon a proceeding or investigation by the state to acquire information as to violations of the act; and also to afford the witness complete immunity against such testimony's being used against him in any proceeding of a criminal nature. [**21] HN10[↑] The immunity afforded by the act is coextensive with the constitutional privilege. A statute providing such immunity is sufficient; a witness, thus protected, cannot invoke the constitutional privilege of silence. ( [Counselman v. \[\*400\] Hitchcock, supra](#); Brown v. Walker, supra; The People v. Butler Street Foundry, 201 Ill. 236, 66 N.E. 349; Bradley v. Clark, 133 Cal. 196, 65 P. 395.)

Appellant assigned as a further reason why he should not answer the questions propounded to him that the immunity afforded does not protect him against criminal prosecution, fines and forfeitures for violations of the federal anti-trust law; that the proceeding before the district court was an investigation to inquire whether there had been a violation of the state anti-trust law; that appellant, as a witness in the district court upon the inquiry, stated that the product of the mines of Osage county was the subject of both domestic and interstate commerce.

If the product of the mines of Osage county were the subject of interstate commerce, as stated, and appellant, as an operator of these mines, violated the provisions of the federal anti-trust [**22] law, and thereby became liable to criminal prosecution, fines and forfeitures thereunder, could he, in an investigation in the state courts to inquire if there had been violations of the state anti-trust law, refuse to testify, if the immunity provided did not protect him against the possibility of criminal prosecutions, fines and forfeitures for violations of the federal anti-trust law? It is not to be presumed that the examination, upon inquiry, will go beyond violations of the state law. If such examination be confined to its legitimate scope, it will not include, but will exclude, all acts which might connect it with interstate commerce, in violation of the federal anti-trust law. Under its power to regulate interstate commerce the United States may legislate upon the subject of private contracts relating to such commerce, and prohibit combinations, pools, and trusts, so far as they relate to inter-state commerce, [*401] but it HN11[↑] has no jurisdiction over combinations, pools, and trusts, relating to commerce wholly within the state; nor does the United States acquire jurisdiction over that part of a combination or agreement relating wholly to commerce within a state, by reason [**23] of the fact that the combination covers and regulates commerce, which is interstate. In so far as such combinations interfere with interstate commerce, they are under the control of the United States; in so far as they interfere with commerce wholly within the state, they are subject only to the jurisdiction of the state. ( Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U.S. 211, 20 S. Ct. 96, 44 L. Ed. 136.) HN12[↑] Where two governments like the United States and a state exercise their authority within the same territory, and over the same citizens, the legislation of that which, as to certain subjects, is subordinate should be construed with reference to the powers and authority of the superior government, and not be deemed as invading them, unless such construction be absolutely demanded. ( Commonwealth v. Gagne, 153 Mass. 205, 26 N.E. 449, 10 L. R. A. 442.)

In the case of Brown v. Walker, supra, Brown, who was auditor of the Alleghany Railway Company, was subpoenaed as a witness to give testimony before a federal grand jury upon an investigation concerning alleged violations of the interstate-commerce act by the railway company. He refused to testify, [**24] claiming that to answer the questions would tend to accuse and criminate him. He was adjudged to be in contempt. Proceedings in habeas corpus were instituted in the United States circuit court and he was remanded to the custody of the marshal. An appeal was had to the United States supreme court. It was claimed there by appellant that the immunity provided [*402] by the interstate-commerce act was insufficient to satisfy the constitutional guaranty of protection against being compelled to be a witness against himself. The immunity provided by the act was by the court held sufficient. Mr. Justice Brown, in delivering the opinion of the court, with reference to the construction of the immunity clause of the act said:

"It can only be said in general that the clause should be construed, as it was doubtless designed, to effect a practical and beneficent purpose -- not necessarily to protect witnesses against every possible detriment which might happen to them from their testimony, nor to unduly impede, hinder or obstruct the administration of criminal justice. That the statute should be upheld, if it can be construed in harmony with the fundamental law, will be admitted. Instead [**25] of seeking for excuses for holding acts of the legislative power to be void by reason of their conflict with the constitution, or with certain supposed fundamental principles of civil liberty, the effort should be to reconcile them if possible, and not to hold the law invalid unless, as was observed by Mr. Chief Justice Marshall, in Fletcher v. Peck, 10 U.S. 87, 6 Cranch 87, 128, 3 L. Ed. 162, 'the opposition between the constitution and the law be such that the judge feels a clear and strong conviction of their incompatibility with each other.'"

It was further claimed, in this same case, that the amnesty provided by the interstate-commerce act, though sufficient to grant immunity from prosecution by the federal courts, did not afford immunity against prosecution in the state courts. In treating the proposition and the improbability of being subjected to the criminal laws of another sovereignty, after having quoted extensively, with approval, from the opinion of Lord Chief Justice Cockburn upon that subject, Mr. Justice Brown said:

"But even granting that there was still a bare possibility that by his disclosure he might be subjected to [*403] the criminal laws [**26] of some other sovereignty, that, as Chief Justice Cockburn said in Queen v. Boyes, 1 B. & S. 311, in reply to the argument that the witness was not protected by his pardon against an impeachment by the house of commons, is not a real and probable danger, with reference to the ordinary operations of the law in the ordinary courts, but 'a danger of an imaginary and unsubstantial character, having reference to some extraordinary and barely possible contingency, so improbable that no reasonable man would suffer it to influence his conduct.' Such danger it was never the object of the provision to obviate. The same answer may be made to the suggestion that the witness is imperfectly protected by reason of the fact that he may still be prosecuted and put to the annoyance and expense of pleading his immunity by way of confession and avoidance. This is a detriment which the law does not recognize. There is a possibility that any citizen, however innocent, may be subjected to a civil or criminal prosecution, and put to the expense of defending himself, but unless such prosecution be malicious, he is remediless, except so far as a recovery of costs may partially indemnify him. He may even [**27] be convicted of a crime and suffer imprisonment or other punishment before his innocence is discovered, but that gives him no claim to indemnity against the state, or even against the prosecutor, if the action of the latter was taken in good faith and in a reasonable belief that he was justified in so doing."

The anti-trust act of Illinois requires corporations doing business in the state to make and file annually with the secretary of state a verified statement which is termed an "anti-trust affidavit." In People v. Butler Street Foundry, supra, a proceeding to recover the penalty of fifty dollars per day for failure to make and file such affidavit, as a defense to such action it was charged that the requirement of the making of the affidavit was a violation of the constitutional provision of the state, that "no person shall be compelled [*404] in any criminal case to give evidence against himself." The act provided immunity against criminal prosecutions for truthful disclosures of matters required to be shown by the affidavit; and by the affidavit a disclosure of any connection of the corporation with any combination, pools, trusts, and the like combines, in [**28] restraint of trade or commerce, was required. It was urged that the immunity was not coextensive with the constitutional privilege, and that it did not cover prosecutions under laws of other states or under laws of the United States. In passing upon the validity of the act it was held that, while it might be broad enough to include trusts, pools and combines formed with parties outside the state, yet, in construing the act, the court must consider it as relating to trusts, pools and combines formed within the state. As to the sufficiency of the immunity provision challenged, it was held that it was complete as against prosecution by the federal authorities or by the authorities of other states, as the affidavit required, to the making of which immunity was extended, need relate only to trusts, pools and combines within the state. In making reference to the sufficiency of the immunity afforded by the act, as applied to violations of the federal law, the court said:

"The possibility that the affidavit required by section 7a of the anti-trust act of 1891 might contain disclosures tending to show a violation of the antitrust law of some other state, or of the United States, is not [**29] a real and probable danger of criminal prosecution within the constitutional privilege against giving self-incriminating evidence."

The anti-trust law is a valid exercise of legislative power, and is not violative of the fourteenth amendment to the federal constitution, as claimed by appellant. Section 10 of the act contemplates that, in the [*405] proceeding or investigation before the district court or the judge thereof, to discover if there have been violations of the state anti-trust law, the inquiry will be confined to violations of that law. The record discloses that the examination of appellant was confined to its legitimate scope, within which the immunity afforded him by section 10 was coextensive with the constitutional privilege invoked for his protection. The possibility that his answers to the inquiries might disclose violations of the federal law, and the evidence thus given be used against him in a criminal prosecution for a violation of that law, was not a real and probable danger.

Appellant should have answered the questions asked him upon the inquiry. The judgment of the court below is affirmed.

All the Justices concurring.

---

End of Document

Graf v. Master Horse-Shoers' Protective Ass'n

Superior Court of Cincinnati, Ohio

January 12, 1904, Decided

No Number in Original

Reporter

15 Ohio Dec. 18 *; 1904 Ohio Misc. LEXIS 63 **; 1 Ohio N.P. (n.s.) 423

PETER GRAF ET AL. v. MASTER HORSESHOERS' PROTECTIVE ASSN.

Disposition: [**1] Plaintiffs entitled to a decree in their favor.

Core Terms

---

shoes, by-law, horseshoeing

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN1 Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Contracts, agreements, combinations or arrangements between persons in the same business, the tendency of which is to impair competition and to enhance prices, to the injury of the public, are against public policy and therefore illegal and void; and if the combined action of members of an association is to prevent competition among such members and to increase prices to the public any resolution or by-law whose object is to effect such combined action is illegal and void.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Contracts Law > Defenses > Illegal Bargains

HN2 Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

When parties enter into an illegal agreement the courts regard them as in pari delicto and consequently will leave them where they find them, affording no relief to either of them either in law or equity. But this statement is too broad as it is subject to a number of exceptions, one of which is that where a contract prohibited by law is not malum in se but malum prohibitum, and has not been fully executed, either party may rescind the contract and have relief against it both in law and equity. The principle upon which the exception is made is that public policy is best subserved by granting a locus penitentiae to a party, and by permitting him to disaffirm the contract prevent the execution of it.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Contracts Law > Defenses > Illegal Bargains

HN3 Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

In accordance with the doctrine applicable generally to agreements illegal as against public policy, no proceeding, whether legal or equitable can be maintained, as between such parties, to enforce any provision of the agreement, though it may be otherwise as to a proceeding in disaffirmance of the agreement.

Headnotes/Summary

---

Headnotes

MONOPOLIES--CONTRACTS--ASSOCIATIONS.

1. COMBINATIONS TO IMPAIR COMPETITION AND CONTROL PRICES, AND RESOLUTIONS OR BY-LAWS TO EFFECT SUCH PURPOSES, ILLEGAL.

All contracts, agreements, combinations or arrangements between persons, partnerships or corporations engaged in the same business, the tendency of which is to impair competition and enhance prices, to the injury of the public, are against public policy, illegal and void. Hence, a resolution, adopted by a horseshoers' association composed of proprietors and employers engaged in carrying on the business of horseshoeing in a particular city, and whose combined action is to prevent competition among themselves and control prices to the injury of the public, "that any member suspected of shoeing horses below the regular price list be notified to make an affidavit to same; if he refuses he be fined the sum of $ 25, to be enforced by the chairman," and a by-law of such association to the effect that unless the fine be paid within thirty days such member shall be suspended from membership, the tendency of both being to effect such combined action of the members of the association, are illegal and void; a fortiori, where defendant is an incorporated association and, therefore, limited to acts which neither violate the statutes or common law of the state.

2. STATUS OF UNLAWFUL TRADE COMBINATION NOT CHANGED BECAUSE MEMBERS ARE NOT EMPLOYES.

The status of an unlawful combination to prevent competition and enhance prices to the injury of the public, is not changed by reason of the fact that the members of the combination are employers instead of employees and may themselves do the same work as the employees.

3. MEMBER NOT ESTOPPED FROM ENJOINING ENFORCEMENT OF ILLEGAL RESOLUTIONS OR BY-LAWS OF ASSOCIATION.

A member of an association who assisted in passing a resolution which has a tendency to prevent competition among the members and enhance prices to the injury of the public, and which inflicts a penalty upon or provides for the ultimate expulsion of any member for a violation of the schedule of prices fixed by the association, may enjoin its enforcement against him for such violation. The principle that one in pari delicto can have no relief at law or in equity, and that he who comes into equity must come with clean hands, have no application where the matter involved is merely malum prohibitum and executory, and not malum in se; and, as an action to enjoin the enforcement of such resolution and by-law is in disaffirmance thereof, plaintiff is entitled to relief upon the principle that public policy is best subserved by granting a locus penitentiac to the complaining party and, permitting him to disaffirm, thus prevent their object.

4. WHETHER ASSOCIATION OF PROPRIETORS TO MAINTAIN PRICE BETWEEN ITS MEMBERS IS ILLEGAL, QUAERE.

Whether Sec. 4427-1 Rev. Stat. et seq. (commonly called the Valentine antitrust law) applies to an association composed of individuals, partnerships and corporations engaged in carrying on the business of horseshoers, all of whom are proprietors or employers, and which fixes, from time to time, a price list for work done in the business and imposes a penalty for a violation of such schedule of prices by any member, quaere.

Counsel: John C. Healy and A. L. Herrlinger, for plaintiffs.

H. D. Peck, for defendant.

Judges: SMITH, J.

Opinion by: SMITH

Opinion

---

[*18] SMITH, J.

Plaintiffs are partners under the firm name of P. Graf & Son and are engaged in carrying on the business of horseshoers in the city of Cincinnati; [*19] and the defendant, The Master Horseshoers' Protective Association, is a corporation not for profit.

The association is regularly incorporated under the laws of Ohio; is composed of about seventy-five members consisting of individuals, partnerships and corporations doing business in the city of Cincinnati and its declared object is "the promotion of the interests of the master horseshoers of the association; to preserve and disseminate valuable business information; and to adjust as far as practicable all controversies and misunderstandings."

The plaintiffs paid an initiation fee of $ 50 to become a member of the defendant association.

The association from time to time fixes a price list for work done in the horseshoeing business; and in July, 1902, a resolution was adopted, "That any member suspected of shoeing horses below the regular [*2] price list be notified to make an affidavit to same; if he refuses he be fined the sum of $ 25, to be enforced by the chairman."

In June, 1903, the following price list was adopted:

4	New shoes, each 50 cents. Per set Driving or pleasure horse extra.	$ 2.00
4	Shoes reset, each 35 cents. Per set Shoes toed, each 40 cents. Per set	1.25 1.50
	Shoes sharpened, each 40 cents. Per set	1.50
	Bar shoes, each $ 1.
	Bar shoes toed or heeled, each 50 cents.
	Bar shoes sharpened, each 50 cents.
	Drop shoes, each 25 cents.
	Whitman & Barnes shoes. Per set	5.00
	All other pads, etc. Per set	5.50
	Sending man to stable, per hour	1.00

15 Ohio Dec. 18, *19 L.A. 904 Ohio Misc. LEXIS 63, **2

All city work, 4 new shoes	2.50
All city work, 4 shoes reset or sharpened	2.00
Old shoes for city, each	50

On or about October 1, 1903, the president of the association called upon Peter Graf, one of the members of plaintiff firm, and requested him to make affidavit that he had not done work for the National Ice Company and other persons for a less price than that fixed by the association's scale of prices. He refused to make such affidavit and thereupon the plaintiff firm was fined $ 25; and by the [**3] rules of the association unless the fine is paid within thirty days the firm will be suspended from membership in the same.

A few days after the imposition of the fine the plaintiff firm brought this action to enjoin the defendant from suspending him or in any way depriving him of his rights in said association by reason of his failure to make the affidavit referred to.

[*20] It is contended by the plaintiff that the combination of the members of the defendant association is forbidden by the antitrust statute of this state (Secs. 4427-1 to 4427-12 Rev. Stat.), and that as this statute authorizes courts of equity by injunction to prevent a threatened violation of the terms of the statute the plaintiff is entitled under this statute to the relief prayed for.

It is very doubtful, to say the least, whether this statute applies to a combination such as is presented by this case; and by the construction given to this statute by Dempsey, J., in a very carefully considered opinion: Runck v. Cloud, 11 Ohio Dec. 444 (8 Ohio N.P. 436)--the statute would not be applicable. As I do not find it necessary to decide this question I pass it by without any expression of opinion [**4] upon it.

It is contended by the defendant that the combination is a lawful one for the reason that combinations of workmen known as trade unions for the purpose of raising their wages are now upheld by the courts, and that this combination falls under that class.

I shall not undertake to define here the rights of workingmen to combine nor the limitations upon such right.

Because the argument of counsel for the defendant based upon the legality of trade unions or workingmen is not applicable to the present case, for the reason that the members of the defendant association are not employes but employers of labor, and each the proprietor of the business in which he works, the fact that such employers may themselves do the same work as the employes does not change the character of the combination. It is a combination of proprietors and employers, not employes.

The principle is well settled that HN1 contracts, agreements, combinations or arrangements between persons in the same business, the tendency of which is to impair competition and to enhance prices, to the injury of the public, are against public policy and therefore illegal and void; and as the combined action of the members of [**5] this association is to prevent competition among such members and to increase the price of horseshoeing to the public any resolution or by-law whose object is to effect such combined action is illegal and void. Emery v. Ohio Candle Co., 47 Ohio St. 320 [24 N.E. 660]; 21 Am. St. Rep. 819; Central Ohio Salt Co. v. Guthrie, 35 Ohio St. 666; State v. Standard Oil Co. 49 Ohio St. 137 [30 N.E. 279].

A case directly in point is that of Bailey v. Master Plumbers Assn. 103 Tenn. 99 [52 S.W. 853]; 46 L. R. A. 561]. In that case a by-law of an association of master plumbers of the city of Memphis provided that each member of the association was required to report each week what work he had done, and if such work was done in competition with any other member, the member doing the work was to pay into the [*21] treasury of the association a fixed sum, according to a schedule agreed on and made a part of the by-law.

The by-law was held to be in restraint of trade and void. It was also held in that case that "it is not the number of persons participating in such by-law or the extent of the territory included, [**6] but the injury to the public in the territory which characterizes the interruption of trade as illegal."

15 Ohio Dec. 18, *21L<sup>A</sup>904 Ohio Misc. LEXIS 63, **6

As the resolution adopted by the defendant fixing a schedule of prices and inflicting a money penalty and suspension for a violation of the schedule has a tendency to prevent competition and enhance prices, it is against public policy and void; and an additional reason for the application of this rule of law is found in this case in the fact that the defendant association is acting under a charter from the state of Ohio and is limited therefore to acts which do not violate either the statute or the common law of the state. [Sayre v. Benevolent Assn., 62 Ky. 143 \[85 Am. Dec. 613\]](#); 1 Thompson, Corporations, Sec. 23.

It is urged for the defendant, however, that conceding the illegality of the resolutions of the defendant the plaintiff cannot complain of them for the reason that he assisted in the passage of the same and in inflicting the penalties thereby provided upon other members; that he is in pari delicto with the defendant; and he does not therefore come into a court of equity with clean hands, and therefore can have no relief.

The principle is often broadly [**7] stated that HN2 when parties enter into an illegal agreement the courts regard them as in pari delicto and consequently will leave them where they find them, affording no relief to either of them either in law or equity. But this statement is too broad as it is subject to a number of exceptions, one of which is that where a contract prohibited by law is not malum in se but malum prohibitum, and has not been fully executed, either party may rescind the contract and have relief against it both in law and equity. The principle upon which the exception is made is that public policy is best subserved by granting a locus penitentiae to a party, and by permitting him to disaffirm the contract prevent the execution of it.

One of the leading cases on this subject is [Congress & Empire Spring Co. v. Knowlton, 103 U.S. 49 \[26 L. Ed. 347\]](#), in which the principle is declared and applied in an action at law.

The same principle was applied by this court in general term in equity in Hafer v. Railway Co. 9 Ohio Dec. Rep. 470 \(14 Week. L. Bull. 68\), the court relying upon [Congress & Empire Spring Co. v. Knowlton, 103 U.S. 49 \[26 L. Ed. 347\]](#). [**8]

One of the latest cases on this subject is McCutcheon v. Capsule Co. 71 F. 787 [19 C.C.A. 108; 37 U.S. App. 586]. In that case certain corporations entered into and partially executed a contract which was illegal on the ground that it was in restraint of trade and tended to [*22] create a monopoly. One of the parties sought to disaffirm the contract and to have relief in equity.

In deciding that he was entitled to such relief the court said:

"Under all these circumstances, to hold that the complainant is estopped to rely upon the illegality of the agreement and conveyance to which it was a party would be to effectuate an unexecuted, unlawful object, and aid in the defeat of a legal prohibition. The door of this court should not be closed against one seeking to extricate himself from an unlawful connection, provided relief is sought without delay, and before the contract is executed, or other persons have irrevocably acted in reliance upon its supposed legality."

In Cooke, Trade & Labor Combin. Sec. 30, it is said:

HN3 "In accordance with the doctrine applicable generally to agreements illegal as against public policy, no proceeding, whether legal or equitable can [**9] be maintained, as between such parties, to enforce any provision of the agreement, though it may be otherwise as to a proceeding in disaffirmance of the agreement."

In [Huston v. Reutlinger, 91 Ky. 333 \[15 S.W. 867\]](#); 34 Am. St. Rep. 225], it was held that where by-laws in restraint of trade were passed by an association of underwriters and the association was undertaking to suspend or expel a member from the association for a violation of the same, the chancellor would interfere by injunction to prevent the enforcement of such by-laws against an offending member.

To refuse relief to the plaintiffs in this case would have the effect of enforcing an illegal arrangement that had not as yet been carried into execution; whereas to grant them relief would be to permit them to refuse to abide by the arrangement and thus to contribute materially towards its dissolution.

15 Ohio Dec. 18, *22L904 Ohio Misc. LEXIS 63, **9

I am of the opinion that the plaintiffs are entitled to a decree in their favor.

---

End of Document

A. Booth & Co. v. Davis

Circuit Court, E.D. Michigan, S.D.

January 19, 1904

No Number in Original

Reporter

127 F. 875 *; 1904 U.S. App. LEXIS 4645 **

A. BOOTH & CO. v. DAVIS et al.

Core Terms

---

Fish, good will, Fresh, Salt, stockholders, territory, indirectly, commodity, restraining, contracts, commerce, proofs, vendor

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN1 [] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The Sherman Act's purpose and scope is to avoid all contracts and combinations in the form of trusts or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade and commerce among the several states and with foreign nations.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN2 [] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Michigan's antitrust law is in terms prospective, and cannot be invoked to defeat a contract lawful when made.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Dissolution & Winding Up > Dissolution > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

HN3 [] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Michigan's antitrust law is directed only against combinations of persons, firms, partnerships, corporations, or associations of persons conspiring to co-operate in violation of its provisions. It contains nothing prohibitive of the acquisition by a person, persons, corporation, or association of the business or property of any person or association, natural or artificial. All such persons or associations may acquire property and carry on business at as many different places as their capital will warrant, and fix their own prices for their commodities, providing they do not, for that purpose and in its accomplishment, combine with other persons, firms, or organizations to effect any of the ends denounced by the statute.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Trade Secrets Law > Employee Duties & Obligations > Right to Compete > Covenants Not to Compete

HN4 Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Agreements by the seller of property or business not to compete with the buyer in such a way as to impair the business sold are perfectly valid.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN5 Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

An agreement which operates merely as a partial restraint of trade is good, provided it be not unreasonable and there be a consideration to support it.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN6 Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

In order that a contract may not be unreasonable, a restraint imposed must not be larger than is required for the protection of the party with whom the contract is made; but a contract not to use a trade at a particular place, if it be founded upon a good consideration and be made for a good purpose, is valid. Of course, a contract not to exercise a trade generally would be obnoxious to the rule, and would be void.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contract Formation > Consideration > Sufficient Consideration

HN7 Consideration, Sufficient Consideration

Damage to a promisee constitutes as good a consideration as benefit to the promisor. Any damage or suspension of a right, or possibility of a loss, occasioned to a plaintiff by the promise of another, if a sufficient consideration for such promise, and will make it binding, although no actual benefit accrued to the party promising.

Counsel: [**1] Chas. S. Thornton and Henry M. Duffield, for complainant.

Fred A. Baker and E. E. Kane, for defendants.

Opinion by: SWAN

Opinion

---

[*875] SWAN, District Judge. In this cause the motion to vacate the restraining order issued herein and the motion for a preliminary order was continued until the further order of the court. The main defense to the bill presented, it was then though, a question to be determined upon plenary proofs rather than upon affidavits. In the expectation that the taking of proofs, then in progress, would obviate the labor of [*876] digesting the many voluminous affidavits submitted upon the hearing of the motion for injunction, and reviewing upon the proofs and facts in issue, the formal disposition of that motion was postponed with that end in view. The taking of the testimony, however, has been extended by stipulations of the parties, and is not completed. The defendants now urge that their interests will suffer injury by deferring decision until the completion of the proofs. To avert that result, and to facilitate the review of this matter, the conclusions here reached are founded upon the affidavits filed, notwithstanding the unsatisfactory nature of [**2] such data compared with plenary proofs.

The bill is filed to restrain the defendant Davis from a breach of his contract hereinafter set forth, which contract, it is claimed by complainant, was and is a part of the consideration for the purchase by complainant of the property and good will of the Davis Fresh & Salt Fish Company, a corporation organized under and by virtue of the laws of the state of Michigan, and transacting a general fish business, and also engaged in buying, catching, producing, and selling salt and fresh fish. The company had its principal office in the city of Detroit, in said state. It also carried on business at Cleveland, Columbus, and Dayton, Ohio; Louisville, Ky.; Nashville, Tenn.; St. Louis and Kansas City, Mo.; Buffalo and New York City, in the state of New York; Grand Rapids, Jackson, East Saginaw, Lansing, Port Huron, and Detroit, Mich. The bill also seeks to have the Wolverine Fish Company, Limited, restrained from aiding Davis to violate his contract with complainant by employing said Davis in its business.

On August 14, 1898, in consideration of the sum of $17,473.14, the Davis Fresh & Salt Fish Company sold to William Vernon Booth, of Chicago, [**3] with the consent of all of its officers and stockholders, all of the goods, chattels, and property of every kind, nature, and description to it belonging, or in which it had any interest at that time, and, as part thereof, the good will of the business conducted by it at Detroit, and gave said Booth a bill of sale, with warranty of title, signed by defendant Davis, its president, and James T. Donaldson, its secretary, appended to which was the following, signed by said Davis:

"For and in consideration of one dollar and other valuable consideration, which I acknowledge, I hereby agree to perform the covenants and agreements above made and to be performed by the Davis Fresh & Salt Fish Company.

"Witness my hand and seal this 14th day of September, A.D. 1898."

Said Davis was a stockholder and the principal officer and manager of the vendor corporation, and apparently very desirous that the contract of sale should be completed, and he and other stockholders of the Davis Fresh & Salt Fish Company executed the following agreement:

"This instrument witnesseth, That William Vernon Booth has purchased the plant, business and good will of the business of the Davis Fresh & Salt Fish Company, [**4] and has paid therefor the sum of $17,473 14; that in making said transfer, and as an inducement to said William Vernon Booth to purchase said plant, business and good will and pay the sum aforesaid for the same, we have each agreed that we would not, and we now do agree, each for himself, jointly and severally with him, the said William Vernon Booth, his heirs and assigns, forever, that we will not, during the next ten years, in the territory or the immediate vicinity of the territory dealt in by our company, or operated in by ourselves or the agents or employes of the company, engage or in any [*877] manner be interested in, either directly or indirectly, for ourselves or for others, the same or like kind or character of business as that heretofore conducted and now being carried on by said company, and that we will not, during the said period of ten (10) years, either directly or indirectly, be guilty of any act interfering with the business, its good will, its trade or its customers, or come in competition with the same; and we will not, jointly or severally, either in firms or corporations, or as individuals, or in any other way, directly or indirectly interfere with the said [**5] trade or business or do any act prejudicial to the same or any part thereof, or interfere with the persons employed therein; the meaning hereof being that the said William Vernon Booth is buying and paying for the good will of the business in the largest and fullest scope of the term; and that we will not, and each agrees that he will not, do anything to interfere with or injure the said business, but will during said period, lend his aid and best influence to the promotion and advancement of the same.

"In witness whereof we have hereunto subscribed our names and affixed our seals, jointly and severally, this first day of August, A.D. 1898.

"Edgar A. Davis.

"James T. Donaldson.

"Belle R. Harper.

"Ed. E. Kane.

"Belle B. Davis."

The consideration named in the instrument quoted above was paid on or about the 14th of September, 1898, to the Davis Fresh & Salt Fish Company, and by it distributed among its stockholders, defendant Davis receiving his full share thereof. The purchase and agreement recited above were made by said Booth, as agent for complainant, and a formal transfer was made by Booth to his principal of all the property, rights, and contracts involved in the [**6] transaction. The property was duly delivered. The complainant has entered into the possession thereof, and, the bill claims, is continuing such business in Detroit and the other places where the Davis Fresh & Salt Fish Company conducted its business before said sale. The bill seeks an injunction against Davis from violating his said agreement, and against the Wolverine Fish Company, Limited, and other defendants (except Edson, who was not served), from aiding and assisting Davis in the violation of his contract. The answer of the defendants, and the separate answer of defendant Davis, do not dispute the purchase of the property and good will of the Davis Fresh & Salt Fish Company. The defense is, first, that the contract is against public policy and in restraint of trade; that it is void under the provisions of the "Sherman Act," so-called (Act July 2, 1890, c. 647, 26 Stat. 209 [U.S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3200]), and an act of the Legislature of the state of Michigan, entitled "An act to prevent trusts, monopolies and combinations of capital, skill and arts, and carrying out restraints in trade and commerce," etc., approved June 23, 1899 (Sess. Laws 1899, p. 409, No. 255).

[**7] The Sherman act has no bearing upon this controversy. HN1[↑] Its purpose and scope is to avoid all contracts and combinations in the form of trusts or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade and commerce among the several states and with foreign nations. United States v. E. C. Knight Co., 156 U.S. 1, 15 Sup. Ct. 249, 39 L. Ed. 325; United States v. Freight Ass'n, 166 U.S. 290, 17 Sup. Ct. 540, 41 L. Ed. 1007. The business of the complainant is lawfully conducted by the sale of its commodities at the different points where the business acquired from the Davis Fresh & Salt Fish Company was carried on. It had nothing [*878] to do with the interstate or foreign trade or commerce subject to congressional legislation. It produced and sold its goods at the several places where it did business, just as its vendor had and as any individual or corporation might do, and it had the same right to engage in such business on complying with the laws in the states in which it was carried on. The statute of HN2[↑] Michigan which defendants have invoked as invalidating the contracts and business of the complainant acquired from the Davis Fresh & Salt Fish Company was not passed until a year after [**8] the purchase by complainant of that company's property and good will. It is in terms prospective, and cannot be invoked to defeat a contract lawful when made. Its first section defines a trust as -- "A combination of capital, skill or arts by two or more persons, firms, partnerships, corporations or associations of persons, or of any two or more of them, for either, any or all of the following purposes:

"(1) To create and carry out restrictions in trade or commerce.

"(2) To limit or reduce the production, or increase or reduce the price of merchandise or any commodity.

"(3) To prevent competition in manufacturing, making, transportation, sale or purchase of merchandise, produce or any commodity.

"(4) To fix at any standard or figure whereby its price to the public or consumer shall be in any manner controlled or established any article or commodity of merchandise, produce or commerce intended for sale, barter, use or consumption in this state."

Examination of the provisions of this act is convincing that it HN3↑ is directed only against combinations of persons, firms, partnerships, corporations, or associations of persons conspiring to co-operate in violation of its provisions, [\[\*\*9\]](#) and that it contains nothing prohibitive of the acquisition by a person, persons, corporation, or association of the business or property of any person or association, natural or artificial. All such persons or associations may acquire property and carry on business at as many different places as their capital will warrant, and fix their own prices for their commodities, providing they do not, for that purpose and in its accomplishment, combine with other persons, firms, or organizations to effect any of the ends renounced by the statute. The prior Michigan statute of 1889, in existence at the time of the execution of the contracts under which complainant claims, was repealed by an act of 1899. There is grave question as to its validity, and that doubt probably prompted the act of 1899. The transaction by which the complainant acquired the title and interest for which it seeks protection in this cause was an out and out purchase of the vendor corporation's property and good will, and of the ancillary agreement of its stockholders, the breach of which agreement is the gravamen of the complainant's case. That such a transaction is lawful seems clear. In United States v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co., 85 Fed. 271-281 et seq., 29 C.C.A. 141, 46 L.R.A. 122, Judge Taft considers the question here involved, and in a forcible opinion demonstrates that HN4↑ agreements by the seller of property or business not to compete with the buyer in such a way as to impair the business sold are perfectly valid. The opinion has so carefully and fully reviewed the authorities in support of this proposition as to exhaust the subject. The judgment of the Court of Appeals (except in a minor part having [\[\*879\]](#) no concern with the main question) was affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States. 175 U.S. 211, 20 Sup. Ct. 96, 44 L. Ed. 136. It is therefore a matter of no concern whether or not the complainant is conducting its business in such a way as to reduce the cost of its commodity, and to increase its profits in that way, or by raising the price otherwise. The contract of purchase which it made with the Davis Fresh & Salt Fish Company, and its agreement with the defendant Davis and the other stockholders, by which they engage not to compete, individually or otherwise, directly or indirectly, with the complainant, was a contract wholly collateral to the scheme and method of [\[\*\*11\]](#) its business and its rights and equities under the contract of sale; and the agreement with Davis and the other stockholders can be enforced with as much propriety as any other lawful contract or agreement into which it might enter. Atlanta v. Chattanooga F. & P. Works \(C.C.A., Sixth Circuit, decided Dec. 8, 1903\) 127 Fed. 23. It is well settled that HN5↑ an agreement which operates merely as a partial restraint of trade is good, provided it be not unreasonable and there be a consideration to support it. In Oregon Steamship Navigation Co. v. Winsor, 20 Wall. 67, 22 L. Ed. 315, Mr. Justice Bradley says:

HN6↑ "In order that it may not be unreasonable, the restraint imposed must not be larger than is required for the protection of the party with whom the contract is made; * * * but a contract not to use a trade at a particular place, if it be founded upon a good consideration and be made for a good purpose, is valid. Of course, a contract not to exercise a trade generally would be obnoxious to the rule, and would be void."

Examining this agreement between complainant and Davis, it will be found that it has no feature which the law condemns. It is limited, as to time, for the 10 years ensuing [\[\*\*12\]](#) its date; "and to the territory or immediate vicinity of the territory dealt in by the company, or operated in by ourselves or the agents or employes of the company." Its validity is fully sanctioned by the case of the Oregon Steamship Navigation Company v. Winsor, 20 Wall. 67, 22 L. Ed. 315. The execution of the contract is admitted by the defendants. It is no answer to its enforcement against Davis that he did not get the consideration he expected from the sale, because, as he alleges, complainant did not carry out an understanding subsequently made with him. The defense that the Davis Fresh & Salt Fish Company had no business and no good will, but its business at the time of the contract was carried on by Davis as trustee for the company, is unconscionable and without merit. The objection that the complainant is a trust and a monopoly is answered by the view taken of the statute of Michigan of 1899, and it is shown by the affidavits that the complainant's business in this line is but a small fraction of that done by other dealers in the same commodities in the territory covered by its operations, and that it is but one of several hundred dealers in that territory.

It is further [**13] claimed that the bill does not aver that the complainant has complied with the statute with regard to foreign corporations. The affidavits submitted by complainant completely negative this objection.

It is urged that the agreement with Davis and the other stockholders is not supported by any consideration. There is no force in this position. [*880] It recites that the signers do agree, "as an inducement to said William Vernon Booth to purchase said plant, business and good will and pay the sum aforesaid ($17,473 14) for the same, we each have agreed that we would not, and we now do agree, each for himself, jointly and severally * * * that we will not during the next ten (10) years, in the territory or the immediate vicinity of the territory dealt in by our company, or operated in by ourselves or the agents or employes of the company, engage or in any manner be interested in, either directly or indirectly, for ourselves or for others, the same or like kind or character of business as that heretofore conducted and now being carried on by said company, its officers, agents, employes or assigns," etc. The signers of this instrument are estopped from denying want of consideration [**14] for its provisions. Their express acknowledgement in the instrument is that an inducement to the purchase at the time was their several contracts not to compete, directly or indirectly, as individuals or otherwise, with their vendee during the time and in the territory designated. The effect of such competition, it is obvious, would be to impair the value of the property and good will purchased, and, as has been said, a contract which would insure against this is not in restraint of trade, but valid. In Hendrick v. Lindsay, 93 U.S. 148, 23 L. Ed. 855, it is said:

HN7 "Damage to the promisee constitutes as good a consideration as benefit to the promisor. In Pillan v. Van Mierop, 3 Burr. 1663, the court say: 'Any damage or suspension of a right, or possibility of a loss, occasioned to the plaintiff by the promise of another, if a sufficient consideration for such promise, and will make it binding, although no actual benefit accrued to the party promising.' This rule is sustained by a long list of adjudged cases."

The restraint upon the defendants secured by this contract, it is clear beyond question from the terms of the contract itself, was regarded by both parties thereto as consideration. [**15] It does not lie in the mouth of Davis, when he had deliberately and for the purpose of inducing the complainant to pay the large sum of $17,473.14 for the business, which he now states was worthless, to deny that there was any consideration for his agreement. In fact, the denial of what of consideration, and Davis' objections to the contract that the Davis Fresh & Salt Fish Company had no business or good will at the time of the sale, are inconsistent in themselves, and compel the conclusion that, if the vendor corporation had no business, the sale of its property and the inventory upon which it was made was a fraud upon the purchaser, which discredits the claim of Davis that the agreement of himself and fellow stockholders was an independent transaction.

In behalf of the Wolverine Fish Company, Limited, it is urged that it had no knowledge of the agreement entered into by Davis to refrain, directly or indirectly, from engaging in the fish business for himself or others, and that to deprive it of his services and experience is a hardship. The equities of the case in favor of the complainant, in view of the facts, are much stronger than the consideration urged by the Wolverine [**16] Company against being enjoined from the employment of Davis in violation of his contract with complainant. Whatever injury results to the Wolverine Fish Company, Limited, from the enforcement of Davis' contract with complainant, is chargeable, not to the latter, but to Davis himself. If that company is injured, it is because [*881] of Davis' willful breach of his contract with the complainant, and not by reason of any act or omission of the complainant. It is no answer to the enforcement of complainant's contract that Davis has broken it and entered into relations with others whereby the benefit of his experience and services will operate inevitably to the detriment of the complainant, although Davis' employer did not know of his self-imposed disability. To hold otherwise would sanction the doctrine that one entering into a like contract to that executed by Davis to the complainant might be absolved from his obligations under the contract by hiring his services to one ignorant of his disability. Such a construction of the letter and spirit of like engagements would make them entirely nugatory, and would be grossly unjust to the party who had paid in good faith a valuable [**17] consideration for the property and good will of a business which his vendors collectively and individually have covenanted not to impair or invade.

It results from these views that the complainant is entitled to the injunction restraining Davis from a breach of his contract with the complainant, and restraining the Wolverine Fish Company, Limited, from benefiting in any way by his services and experience in the fish business, as defined in the contract between complainant and Davis, and an injunction will be issued, according to the prayer of the bill, against Davis and the Wolverine Fish Company, Limited.

---

End of Document

Needles v. Bishop & Babcock Co.

Court of Common Pleas of Franklin County, Ohio

February 24, 1904, Decided

No Number in Original

Reporter

14 Ohio Dec. 445 *; 1904 Ohio Misc. LEXIS 19 **; 2 Ohio N.P. (n.s.) 77

NEEDLES v. BISHOP & BABCOCK CO.

Disposition: [**1] Demurrer overruled.

Core Terms

---

supplies, member of the association, plumbing supply, monopoly

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Constitutionality of Legislation > General Overview

HN1 Case or Controversy, Constitutionality of Legislation

Where an act is claimed to be in violation of the constitution the court must be clearly satisfied that it is so or the act must be upheld.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN2 Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

The true test of the illegality of combinations is their tendency to endanger the public, and as to whether or not their necessary consequence is to control prices, limit production, and suppress competition in such a way as to restrain trade and create a monopoly. Furthermore to render such combinations void as against public policy it is not necessary that evil intent or actual injury to the public be shown, but it is sufficient that the inevitable tendency of the combination is to control prices to the detriment of the public. It is true that contracts in partial restraint of trade which do not include all of a commodity or trade nor such as to materially affect the freedom of trade or commerce, are not unlawful. But if the combination operate even in a restricted locality to create a monopoly in the hands of a few individuals of a particular commodity or trade, and to exclude all others in competition, it is in contravention of public policy, illegal and void.

Headnotes/Summary

---

Headnotes*CONSTITUTIONAL LAW--MONOPOLIES--RESTRAINT OF TRADE.*1. STATUTE UPHELD UNLESS CLEARLY UNCONSTITUTIONAL--VALENTINE ANTITRUST LAW.

A legislative enactment will be upheld unless its unconstitutionality clearly appears. Whether Secs. 4427-1 to 4427-12 Rev. Stat. (commonly called the Valentine antitrust law) are invalid in part, quaere.

2. UNLAWFUL COMBINATION AMONG JOBBERS OF PLUMBING SUPPLIES, WHAT IS.

A common-law unlawful combination tending to create a monopoly and restrain trade, contrary to public policy, is pleaded in a petition which avers that defendants are the only persons in the particular city engaged as jobbers furnishing plumbers' supplies; that defendants have combined and conspired together by uniting their capital, labor and skill for the purposes of limiting the production of such supplies, and increasing the purchase price thereof to persons not members of the association; that defendants have agreed neither to sell below a certain schedule of prices, sell to any person not a member of the association, nor sell supplies to be used in any building or structure not being plumbed or furnished with plumbing supplies by some member of the association; that they have agreed not to compete with each other in furnishing supplies, or in plumbing buildings; that they will not sell supplies to any person unless some member of the association is employed to furnish the labor to install the plumbing supplies in the building for which they are furnished; and that such combination is formed to enhance the price of supplies without regard to their cost. Plaintiff is entitled, under such petition, to recover whatever damages he has sustained as a direct result of such unlawful combination.

3. EVIL INTENT OR ACTUAL INJURY TO PUBLIC NOT NECESSARY; TEST OF ILLEGALITY IS TENDENCY TO INJURE PUBLIC.

Evil intent or actual injury to the public need not be shown to render trade combinations void as against public policy. The test of illegality is their tendency to endanger the public, whether or not their necessary consequence is to control prices, limit production and suppress competition in a manner to restrain trade, and create a monopoly.

4. MONOPOLY IN RESTRICTED LOCALITY IS ILLEGAL--PARTIAL RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

Contracts in partial restraint of trade which do not include all of a particular commodity or trade so as to materially affect the freedom of trade or commerce, are not unlawful; but if the combination, even in a restricted locality, creates a monopoly of a particular commodity of trade in the hands of a few, and excludes others in competition, it is in contravention of public policy, illegal and void.

Counsel: D. F. Pugh, for plaintiff.

Sater & Sater, for defendant:

The petition does not state a cause of action, and the Valentine law is unconstitutional. Macaulay v. Tierney, 19 R.I. 255 [33 A. 1]; 61 Am. St. Rep. 770]; Bohn Mfg. Co. v. Hollis, 54 Minn. 223 [55 N.W. 1119]; 21 L. R. A. 337; 40 Am. St. Rep. 319]; Eddy, Combinations Secs. 198, 199, 204, 205, 261, 901, 907, and first chapter of Vol. 2; Gage v. State, 24 O. C. C. 724; State v. Buckeye Pipe Line Co. 61 Ohio St. 520 [56 N.E. 464]; Leslie v. Lorillard, 110 N.Y. 519 [18 N.E. 363]; 1 L. R. A. 456]; Grice, In re, 79 Fed. Rep. 627.

Judges: BIGGER, J.

Opinion by: BIGGER

---

Opinion

[*446] BIGGER, J.

This action is brought by the plaintiff who states that for many years he has been, and is now, by occupation, a plumber, and dealer in plumbing supplies. He brings the action against the defendants for engaging in an unlawful combination to control and regulate the quantity and price of such supplies in this city to his damage. He alleges that it is necessary for him in carrying on his business to purchase these supplies from the defendants who were at the times mentioned all the persons and firms engaged in [*2] the business of selling and jobbing such supplies, and that by reason of the combination stated he was compelled to close [*447] up and discontinue his business. The averments of the petition are somewhat voluminous and I will not undertake to state them in detail.

General demurrers have been filed to the petition, and as a second ground of demurrer it is claimed that the act known as the Valentine act, defining trusts and providing penalties as a violation thereof, is unconstitutional and void.

Elaborate briefs have been filed by counsel upon both sides citing numerous cases in support of their respective claims. I have not the time either to formulate or to deliver an opinion at great length upon the questions raised, but will content myself with stating my conclusion with a brief statement for the reasons leading to it.

In the first place HN1[

where an act is claimed to be in violation of the constitution the court must be clearly satisfied that it is so or the act must be upheld. There may be some doubt as to the constitutionality of this act in some of its provisions at least, but that it is as a whole in violation of the constitutional requirements I am not at all clear. But [*3] I am of opinion that without regard to the constitutionality of the so-called Valentine act, that this petition states a good cause of action against the defendants at common law.

It is averred that these defendants were the only persons engaged in this city, in the business of furnishing plumbers' supplies as jobbers; that these defendants have combined and conspired together by uniting their capital, labor and skill, for the purpose of limiting the production of such supplies in this city, and to increase the purchase price of such articles to all persons not members of the association, to not sell below certain figures fixed by them; that it was further agreed that they should not sell plumbing supplies to any person not a member of the association; that they would not sell such supplies to be used in any building or structure that was not being plumbed or supplies with plumbing supplies by some member of the association; that they would not compete with each other in furnishing such supplies, or in plumbing buildings; that they would not sell plumbing supplies to any person desiring to purchase unless some member of the association was employed to furnish the labor to put the [*4] plumbing supplies in the building or buildings for which they were furnished.

It is further averred that the combination was formed for the purpose of enhancing the price of such supplies without regard to their cost. There are other averments as to the purposes of the combination, but it seems to me that these averments state a case of unlawful combination tending to restrain trade and to establish a monopoly which is contrary to public policy and unlawful and void; and that the plaintiff is entitled to recover whatever damages he may be able to prove he has sustained as a direct result of such unlawful combination.

HN2[ The true test of the illegality of such combinations, it seems, is their tendency to endanger the public, and as to whether or not their necessary [*448] consequence is to control prices, limit production, and suppress competition in such a way as to restrain trade and create a monopoly.

Furthermore to render such combinations void as against public policy it is not necessary that evil intent or actual injury to the public be shown, but it is sufficient that the inevitable tendency of the combination is to control prices to the detriment of the public. It is true [*5] that contracts in partial restraint of trade which do not include all of a commodity or trade nor such as to materially affect the freedom of trade or commerce, are not unlawful. But if the combination operate even in a restricted locality to create a monopoly in the hands of a few individuals of a particular commodity or trade, and to exclude all others in competition, it is in contravention of public policy, illegal and void.

Now the petition avers that these defendants were the only persons and firms handling these supplies in this city as jobbers, and that it was necessary for the plaintiff in his business as plumber to purchase his supplies from some one or more of them. I can well understand how a man of small means engaged in the plumbing business might not be able to keep on hand a complete stock of all sorts of supplies which he might need in the regular course of his business, that it might be impracticable to order such supplies from a distant city and await their shipment. It is probably true that these defendants may unite their capital and their skill in the business of purchasing and supplying plumbers' supplies, and that they may use all lawful means to increase their [**6] sale at the expense of their competitors; if they may unite their capital and efforts, then such means are only that wholesome competition which is the life of trade. But if they adopt means whose only tendency is to monopolize the entire business of not only furnishing but also putting in such supplies, refusing to sell to any person not a member of the association, or their organization, including all those engaged in that business in this city, it seems to me the object and purpose of such a combination could be nothing less than the creation of such a monopoly in the hands of the defendant to the exclusion of small dealers and artisans engaged in that particular trade and occupation. The tendency would be to drive those smaller concerns who might not be able to buy and keep on hand such a varied stock as the daily demands of the business might require, into the organization to obtain this protection, and that such a combination, one of whose principles is that there should be no competition between members of the organization, would clearly tend to monopoly, and in restraint of trade and competition would seem to be too clear to admit of any doubt.

I am, therefore, of opinion [**7] that the facts stated do make a proper case in favor of the plaintiff. I will not stop to cite or discuss the decided cases which are numerous, but an examination of the cases cited, and others, leads me to the conclusion I have stated and the demurrer is therefore overruled.

---

End of Document

Ft. Worth & D. C. R. Co. v. State

Supreme Court of Texas

May 18, 1905, Decided

No. 1412

Reporter

99 Tex. 34 *; 87 S.W. 336 **; 1905 Tex. LEXIS 155 ***

Fort Worth & Denver City Railway Company et al. v. State of Texas

Prior History: [***1] Questions certified from the Court of Civil Appeals for the Third District, in an appeal from Travis County.

Core Terms

---

railway company, sleeping, railroad company, railroads, passengers, furnish, lines, mileage, repairs, trains, sleeping car, charges, per car, transportation, parties, terminated, haul, per mile, accommodations, berths, notice, roads, seats, antitrust statute, thousand dollars, exclusive right, per annum, convenience, questions, employes

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN1[] Private Actions, Remedies

The antitrust Act does not create a new business for any person, nor does it give a new right in the property of others, but the object of the law was to prevent interference with business authorized and carried on in accordance with the laws of Texas.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Transportation > General Overview

Transportation Law > Rail Transportation > Sleeping Cars

HN2[] Regulated Industries, Transportation

The demand of the traveling public for sleeping cars and like conveniences imposes upon railroads an obligation as potent as a rule of law; the demand must be complied with, which the carrier may do either by furnishing its own coaches or by contracting with another corporation. In order to justify a sleeping car company in furnishing such accommodations the railroad may give the exclusive right, because it is necessary to permanent and reliable service, which is in the interest of the public.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Transportation > General Overview

HN3 Regulated Industries, Transportation

No corporation or person has a right to have sleeping cars attached to the passenger trains of a railroad company; therefore, to exclude them does not restrict the free pursuit of any business authorized or permitted by law, because such business is not authorized to be pursued on a railroad without the consent of the owner.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Transportation > General Overview

HN4 Regulated Industries, Transportation

The Supreme Court of the United States holds that a railroad company has the right to make contracts whereby it would limit the number of persons or companies who might pursue a business on its train.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Business & Corporate Law > Corporations > Corporate Finance > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > General Overview

HN5 Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

Section 2 of the antitrust law of 1903 (Act), 1903 Tex. Gen. Laws, defines a monopoly as follows: Section 2. A monopoly is a combination or consolidation of two or more corporations when effected in either of the following methods: 1. When the direction of the affairs of two or more corporations is in any manner brought under the same management or control for the purpose of producing, or where such common management or control tends to create a trust as defined in the first section of this Act. 2. Where any corporation acquires the shares or certificates of stock or bonds, franchise or other rights, or the physical properties, or any part thereof, of any other corporation or corporations, for the purpose of preventing or lessening, or where the effect of such acquisition tends to affect or lessen competition, whether such acquisition is accomplished directly or through the instrumentality of trustees or otherwise.

Headnotes/Summary

---

Headnotes

Antitrust Law -- Railway -- Sleeping Car Company.

A contract between a railway and a sleeping car company for the exclusive operation of the sleeping cars of the latter upon passenger trains over the lines of the former for the term of fifteen years, was not violative of section 1 of the Antitrust Law of March 31, 1903 (Acts, 28th, Leg. p. 119), where it did not fix the cost of transportation on such cars, leaving same to be fixed and to be changed at will by the sleeping car company, with the restriction only that it should not exceed the charges made for such service on the lines of competing roads, and where there was no pooling or combination of rates, but each company fixed the charges for its respective service.

Antitrust Law.

A contract by which the railway paid mileage to the sleeping car company on the cars run over its road where the annual revenue per car to the latter company from its charges failed to reach a fixed sum had no tendency to affect the cost of transportation by increasing the rates charged by such sleeping car company [***2] for its service.

Antitrust Law -- Restrictions on Freedom of Business.

Such contract did not create or carry out a restriction in the free pursuit of business authorized by the laws of the State; the railway could discharge its duties to the public in the matter of sleeping cars either by furnishing its own coaches or contracting with another to furnish them; and could make such contract exclusive because no other person or corporation had a right to demand that its sleeping cars should be attached to the passenger trains of the railway to be violated by such exclusive contract.

Antitrust Law -- Monopoly.

A contract between a railway and a sleeping car company giving the latter the exclusive right to operate sleeping cars in connection with passenger trains on the road, does not constitute a monopoly such as is prohibited by section 2 of the Antitrust Law of 1903, as the term is there defined; it neither brought the direction of the affairs of the two corporations under one management or control, nor did one acquire thereby, the shares, etc., or physical properties of the other.

Counsel: Stanley, Spoonts & Thompson, for appellant, Ft. Worth & Denver City [***3] Railway. -- Independent of the Act of 1903 of the Texas Legislature, commonly known as the antitrust statute, the contract between the defendant railway company and the Pullman Company was a valid and binding contract, not against public policy, and not at all in restraint of trade or commerce. The Express Cases, 117 U.S., 1; The Pullman Cases, 139 U.S., 89; Donovan v. Railway Co., 120 Fed. Rep., 215; Cole v. Rowen, 13 Law. Rep. Ann., 848; Atlantic Exp. Co. v. Railway Co., 18 Law. Rep. Ann., 393; Barney v. Steamship Co., 67 N. Y. 301; Fluker v. Railway Co., 2 Law. Rep. Ann., 843; Kates v. Baggage Co., 16 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cases (N. S.), 140; Lewis v. Railway Co., 81 S. W. Rep., 111.

The contract between the Pullman Company and the railway company is not in conflict with the Act of 1903, and the making or carrying out of said contract would not violate any of the provisions of said law.

The agreement between the Pullman Company and the railway company does not create a trust, a monopoly nor a conspiracy in restraint of trade as prohibited by the Act of 1903.

In order for a trust to be created under the Act of 1903 there must be a combination of capital, skill or acts, and [***4] the contract between the defendant companies does not create a combination. A combination is a union, -- a joining of two or more factors into one result; a blending by which the original separate identity is merged into a result in which each of the original factors or parties have a common and not a separate interest. A contract may create a combination if it brings about a union of interest, but if it does not, and if each party is contracting at arm's length and seeking to secure the best results, and if after the contract is made the interest of each party in the performance of the contract is separate, no combination will be created and no trust formed.

A monopoly under the Act of 1903 is a combination or consolidation of two or more corporations so as to bring them under the same control and create a trust as defined in said Act, or when one corporation acquires control of the stock of another so as to lessen or destroy competition.

A conspiracy in restraint of trade, under said Act of 1903, results when parties engaged in buying and selling agree to refuse to buy or sell to some other person, or when they boycott some other person.

Before any contract will create a [***5] trust, it must be mutual and obligate each party thereto to grant to the other party rights that are exclusive. If the Pullman Company had obligated itself not to furnish cars to any other railway company and the railway company had bound itself to lease cars from no other company than the Pullman

Company, the contract might be injurious to the public and unreasonable; but, in the absence of such mutual covenants, the obligation is unilateral and fails to create any combination.

It is not contended that the railway company can not lawfully lease cars from the Pullman Company. If, by reason of the Act of 1903, the exclusive feature of the contract became unlawful, the contract will be treated as divisible, and those provisions thereof which are not in conflict with the law will be binding, and those in conflict will be held to have been annulled. Queen Ins. Co. v. State, 86 Texas, 250; Gates v. Hooper, 90 Texas, 563; State v. Shipper's Compress Co., 95 Texas, 613; 25 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law (2d ed.), 1110; Lemon v. Pullman, 52 Fed. Rep., 262.

Andrews, Ball & Streetmann and J. D. Guinn, for appellant, Pullman Company. -- The contract in question was not a violation of the [***6] antitrust law of 1903, because the Pullman Co. was not a competitor of the R. R. Co. and the R. R. Co. giving it the exclusive privilege to furnish cars over its line and connect with its train, it merely operated a part of its own business through the instrumentality which the R. R. Co. had the right to select. Welch v. Windmill Co., 89 Texas, 655; Gates v. Hooper, 90 Texas, 565; Lewis v. Railway Co., 81 S. W. Rep., 111; Express Co. Cases, 117 U.S., 1; Wiggins Ferry Co. v. Railway Co., 27 S. W. Rep., 570; Donovan v. Railway Co., 120 Fed. Rep., 215; Barney v. Steamship Co., 67 N. Y., 301; Kates v. Baggage Co., 16 Am. & Eng. Ry. Cases (N. S.), 140; Pullman Palace Car Cases, 139 U.S., 89; U.S. v. Freight Assn., 166 U.S., 341; Hopkins v. U.S., 171 U.S., 578; U.S. v. W. A. Council, 26 Law. Rep., Ann., 158; Addyston P. & S. Co. v. U.S., 175 U.S., 211; State v. Compress Co., 95 Texas, 603.

The contract in question is not a "combination" as defined in the acts of 1903 and the petition therefore fails to state the violation of the terms of that statute.

C. K. Bell, Attorney-General, Jno. W. Brady, County Attorney, D. A. McFall and Allen & Hart, for appellee. -- The [***7] allegations of plaintiff's second amended petition were sufficient to bring the case within the scope of the Act of 1903, and the proof was ample to sustain the judgment rendered by the court under said act. Plaintiff's cause of action was complete upon such pleading and proof and it was not incumbent upon plaintiff to show specifically that the exclusive provisions of the contract complained of had been enforced by showing that there were other competing sleeping car companies, or that other sleeping car companies applied to the railroad company to be allowed to furnish sleeping cars to it, nor is it any excuse to say that the contract did not bind the Pullman Company not to lease sleeping cars to other railroads. Bill of Rights, State of Texas, sec. 26; City of Brenham v. Brenham Water Co., 67 Texas, 561; Texas & P. Co. v. Lawson, 89 Texas, 394; Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. State, 19 Texas Civ. App., 1; United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Assn., 166 U.S. 290; United States v. Joint Traffic Assn., 171 U.S. 505; Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Southern P. Ry. Co., 41 La. Ann., 970; Criminal Code, arts. 15, 16, 17; Gulf C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. State, 72 Texas, 404; Const., sec. 5, art. 10; secs. [***8] 1, 2, 3 and 5, art. 12; Chicago Gas L. and C. Co. v. Gas Light Co., 121 Illinois, 530; State v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co., 52 S. W. Rep., 595; the People v. North River Sugar Refining Co., 5 Law. Rep., Ann., 386, same case, 2 Law. Rep., Ann., 33; Judd v. Harrington, 139 N. Y., 105; State v. Standard Oil Co., 49 O. State, 137; Arnot v. Pittston Coal Co., 68 N. Y. 559; Kettle River Ry. Co. v. Eastern R. R. Co., 6 Law. Rep., Ann., 111; Diamond Glue Co. v. Glue Co., 187 U.S., 611.

Judges: Brown, Associate Justice.

Opinion by: BROWN

Opinion

---

[*36] [**337] This is a certified question from the Court of Civil Appeals of the Third Supreme Judicial District. The statement and questions are as follows:

"The Court of Civil Appeals of the Third Supreme Judicial District certifies that the above styled and numbered cause is now pending and undecided in this court, wherein the State of Texas was plaintiff in the court below, in a suit against the defendants, the Fort Worth & Denver City Railway Company and the Pullman Palace Car Company, to recover penalties for a violation of the antitrust laws of 1899, and the antitrust statute of 1903.

"The case was tried before the court without a jury, and [***9] the trial court concluded that there had been no violation of the antitrust law of 1899, but that there was a violation of the antitrust statute of [*37] 1903, and assessed a penalty against each of the defendant corporations in the sum of $ 18,550.

"The findings of fact of the trial court, which we adopt and approve, are as follows:

"First. The Fort Worth & Denver City Railway Company is a railway corporation, chartered by a special act of the Legislature, approved May 26, 1873, which said Act is hereby made a part of this statement of facts, and acting under said charter the said company's railway line was constructed and since its construction has been in operation, and during said time it has operated a line of railway, and still operates a line of railway, from Fort Worth, in Tarrant County, Texas, to Texline, in Dallam County, Texas. The Pullman Company is a corporation organized, chartered and doing business under and by authority of the laws of the State of Illinois.

"Second. That on the 1st day of February, 1899, or the 13th day of March, 1899, the Fort Worth & Denver City Railway Company and the Pullman Palace Car Company made and entered into a contract, [***10] such contract being signed in the city of Chicago, Ill., by the vice-president and secretary of said Pullman Palace Car Company, and signed in the city of Denver, Colorado, by the president of the Fort Worth & Denver City Railway Company, and was attested and the seal of the Fort Worth & Denver City Railway Company affixed thereto by the secretary of said last named company at Forth Worth, Texas, and such contract is as follows:

"This agreement, made the 1st day of February, A. D. 1899, between Pullman's Palace Car Company, hereinafter called Pullman Company, party of the one part, and the Fort Worth & Denver City Railway Company, hereinafter called the Railway Company, party of the other part witnesseth:

"Whereas, on the 1st day of March, A. D. 1888, a contract was made between the Pullman Company and the Railway Company, in pursuance of which the sleeping cars of the Pullman Company were to be operated over the lines of the Railway Company for a period of fifteen years from the 1st day of March, A. D. 1888; and

"Whereas, the Railway Company desires to terminate said contract for the purpose of entering into a new contract, and the Pullman Company is willing to enter into [***11] such new contract.

"Now, therefore, in consideration of the premises and of the agreements hereinafter contained, the said contract is terminated between the parties hereto, and they agree as follows:

"Article I.

"Section 1. The Pullman Company shall furnish sleeping cars, properly equipped and acceptable to the Railway Company, sufficient in the judgment of the general manager or superintendent of the Railway Company, to meet the requirements of travel over the lines of railroads now owned or controlled by the Railway Company, and over all [*338] additional railroads which it shall hereafter own or control.

"Section 2. The Pullman Company remaining the owner of all the sleeping cars furnished hereunder, and maintaining the same except as herein provided, shall have the right to collect such fares from railroad [*38] passengers occupying such cars for the use of seats and berths therein, as are customary on competing lines of railroads where equal sleeping car accommodations are furnished; no more room in said sleeping cars shall be furnished to any person or persons than is usually furnished to passengers by railroad companies which use their own sleeping cars, [***12] unless by the assent of the proper officers of the Railway Company.

"Section 3. The Pullman Company shall furnish with each of such sleeping cars one or more employes, as may be necessary, whose duties shall be to collect fares from railroad passengers, occupying said cars, for the use of seats or berths therein, and generally to wait upon and provide for the comfort of passengers therein; such employes at all times shall be subject to the rules of the railway company governing its own employes.

"Section 4. The Pullman Company, except as hereinafter provided, shall keep all such sleeping cars in good order and repair and shall renew and improve the same so far as may be necessary to keep them up to the average standard of approved sleeping cars furnished by the Pullman Company for general use on competing lines.

"Section 5. The Pullman Company shall save harmless the Railway Company from damages, costs and expenses, growing out of, or incident to, any claim that may be made to the effect that any of such sleeping cars or any part thereof, or any improvements therein or thereon, is an infringement upon Letters Patent of the United States covering like cars, or like parts [***13] thereof, or like improvements thereon or therein; provided the Railway Company shall first give the Pullman Company written notice of any such claim, when made, in order that it may resist the same should it desire to do so.

"Section 6. The Pullman Company will place its tickets for seats and berths on sale in such of the railroad ticket offices as either party may consider necessary for the convenience and accommodation of passengers.

"Section 7. The Pullman Company shall furnish free passes to the general and division officers of the railway company, for use in said sleeping cars, over the lines of railroad now owned or controlled by the railway company, and over any additional railroads which it may hereafter own or control.

"Article II.

"Section 1. The Railway Company shall haul all said sleeping cars furnished by the Pullman Company hereunder that may at any time be necessary in operating the lines of railroad now owned or controlled by the Railway Company, and any additional railroads which it shall hereafter own or control; and shall use such cars as a part of all passenger trains controlled, in whole or in part, by it, where sleeping cars are required, in such [***14] manner as shall best accommodate passenger travel.

"The Railway Company shall also, in consideration of the use of said sleeping cars for the transportation of its passengers, bear the cost of maintaining the running gear and bodies of such cars, and other parts thereof as are essential to ordinary first-class passenger cars, [*39] and are not incidental to a sleeping car, which cost is understood and agreed to amount to an average of two cents per mile run, and shall, except as hereinafter provided, pay to the Pullman Company, in satisfaction of such obligation, two cents per car per mile for every mile run by said sleeping cars upon the roads of the railway company, or upon the roads of other railroad companies by direction of the officer of the Railway Company.

"The Railway Company shall pay one cent per car per mile for every mile run by tourist or second-class sleeping cars furnished under this contract.

"Section 2. The Railway Company shall haul, without charge to the Pullman Company, said sleeping cars to and from repair shops, and to and from other points on the lines of railroads at any time owned or controlled by it, as may be necessary in order that such sleeping [***15] cars may be put in good order and repair or be renewed or improved as required hereunder. No mileage shall be paid on the cars so hauled.

"Section 3. The Railway Company shall furnish and apply to said sleeping cars all necessary lubricating material, ice and water, fuel for heating, and oil, fluids or other proper material for lighting; and shall wash and clean said cars; and shall replace bell cords and couplings and air-brake hose and couplings, as often as necessary.

"Section 4. The Railway Company shall pay to the Pullman Company the cost of repairing and making good all damages to any of its sleeping cars resulting from accident or casualty on the lines of its roads, or on any other roads upon which any of said cars may be run by direction of the Railway Company, except damages resulting from accident or casualty arising from defective heating or lighting apparatus, or from the actual negligence of the employes of the Pullman Company in the line of their employment.

"Section 5. The Railway Company shall promptly make all such repairs as may be necessary to put any of said sleeping cars in good order, whenever requested by the Pullman Company so to do; and shall, [***16] without request, make such repairs as may be required at any time to insure the safety of said cars, and when the Pullman

Company is, by the terms hereof, under obligation to make [**339] such repairs, shall, at the end of each month, render to the Pullman Company bills therefor, charging the actual cost of material and labor expended on such repairs, with an addition of ten percent to cover general expenses.

"Section 6. The Railway Company shall furnish, free of charge at convenient points, rooms and necessary facilities for airing and storing bedding, linen, supplies and other moveables belonging to or designed for the use of said sleeping cars.

"Section 7. The Railway Company shall require its ticket agents, at such offices as may be designated by either party, to sell tickets for seats and berths in said sleeping cars, without charge to the Pullman Company; the proceeds of such sales to be at the risk of the Pullman Company.

"Section 8. The Railway Company shall furnish free passes to the general and division officers of the Pullman Company, over the lines of [*40] railroads now owned or controlled by the Railway Company, and over any additional railroads, [***17] which it shall hereafter own or control.

"Article III.

"Section 1. All settlements and payments for mileage and repairs shall be made monthly between the parties hereto; subject, however, to adjustment at the close of each contract year on the following basis:

"Whenever the revenue from the sales of seats and berths on any line shall be at a rate less than five thousand dollars per car per annum, on all the cars employed upon such lines, the Railway Company shall pay two cents per car per mile run by the cars on such line.

"Whenever such revenue upon any line shall be at a rate of five thousand dollars or more, but less than six thousand dollars per car per annum, on all the cars employed upon such line, the Railway Company shall pay one cent per car per mile run by the cars on such line.

"Whenever such revenue upon any lines shall be at a rate six thousand dollars or more per car per annum, on all the cars employed on such line, the Railway Company shall not pay any mileage on the cars on such line.

"If any line shall be operated for a fraction of a year, then the mileage payable by the Railway Company on such cars shall be adjusted at the rate per mile run which [***18] would be payable thereon continued during the entire year at the same rate during the entire year as during the period of such employment.

"Whenever such revenue equals or exceeds an average of six thousand dollars per car per annum from the whole number of cars furnished, the Railway Company shall not pay any mileage on such cars.

"In determining the number of cars furnished, and the rate of revenue per car per annum, upon any line or upon all lines, twenty percentum shall be added to actual days' service of such cars in order to cover shoppage and idle time of cars.

"Section 2. The Railway Company shall have the right to co-operate with other railroad companies in forming through and continuous lines of sleeping car service; and if it should become necessary for the Railway Company so to cooperate with other railroad companies using sleeping cars not owned by the Pullman Company, the Pullman Company shall have the right to furnish its pro rata of sleeping cars, for services on such through or continuous lines, based upon the mileage of the Railway Company in said lines; and in all cars operated on such through or continuous lines the Pullman Company shall be entitled to [***19] receive all local fares for the use of seats and berths therein upon the roads of the Railway Company, and its mileage proportion of through and intermediate fares.

"Section 3. If any of the Pullman Company's employes furnished with any of the sleeping cars operated under this agreement, should be injured or killed in consequence of a railroad accident, or casualty, when serving in the line of his duties, the Railway Company shall save harmless the Pullman Company from damages, costs and expenses growing out of or incident to such injury or death, to the extent that the Railway Company would be liable if such employee were in fact an employe [*41] of the Railway Company when so injured or killed, and the Pullman Company shall save harmless the Railway Company from such damages, costs and expenses to any greater extent; each party to have immediate notice from the other of any claim or suit for such injury or death, and the right to resist or defend such claim or suit.

"Section 4. If either of the parties hereto shall fail to clean or repair, according to its obligation under this agreement, any of said sleeping cars, and shall, after written notice from the other party [***20] of the neglect complained of, further neglect or refuse to so clean or repair said sleeping cars within a reasonable time, such other party shall have the right to clean said cars and to make or cause to be made all necessary repairs and renewals thereof, and shall, at the next monthly settlement between the parties, be repaid the cost of such portion of the cleaning or repairs as the party in fault is liable for by the terms of this contract.

"Section 5. If either of the parties hereto shall fail to keep or perform any of its agreements hereunder, and shall continue in default for sixty days after written notice of such failure from the other party, then such other party shall have the right to declare this agreement terminated at such time as shall be specified by written notice of its intention to terminate the same.

"Section 6. This agreement shall be construed [**340] liberally, so as to secure to each party all the rights, privileges and benefits herein provided or manifestly intended, and if any difference between the parties shall arise which can not be amicably adjusted by and between the parties, it may be submitted to referees, one to be appointed by the Railway [***21] Company, and one by the Pullman Company, the two, in case of disagreement, to appoint a third; the decision of two of them to be final.

"Section 7. The Pullman Company shall have the exclusive right during the continuance of this agreement, to furnish all sleeping cars for use on all the lines of railroads now owned or in any way controlled by the railway company, including branches and bridges, and on all the additional railroads which it shall hereafter own or in any way control; and also on all passenger trains on which it may, by virtue of contracts or running arrangements with person, companies or corporations owning or controlling other lines of railroad, have the right to use such cars; and the Railway Company, except as provided in Section 2 of this article, shall not contract with any other person, company or corporation to run any sleeping cars on or over any of the lines of railroads aforesaid during the said period.

"Section 8. This agreement shall take effect February 1, A. D. 1899, and shall remain in force for the full term of fifteen years from the date hereof, subject to the right of either party, at its option, to terminate the same on the 1st day of February, [***22] A. D. 1909, by giving notice in writing to the other party of its intention to do so at least six months before the date last named; unless the same shall be sooner terminated by virtue of the provisions of section 5 or article 3 of this agreement, or by the mutual agreement of the parties hereto.

[*42] "In witness whereof, the parties hereto have signed, sealed and delivered these presents, the day and year first herein written.

"Pullman's Palace Car Company,

"Attest:

"by T. H. Wickes, Vice-President.

"A. M. Weimsheiner, Secretary.

"The Fort Worth & Denver City Railway Company,

"Attest:

"by Frank Trumbull, President.

"Geo. Strong, Secretary.

"Signed at Denver, Colo., March 13, 1899.

"That since the execution of said contract continuously up to the time of the trial of this case, sleeping cars have been operated by the defendants under said contract."

We omit the facts certified which are irrelevant to the questions under our view of the law.

The Court of Civil Appeals certified these questions:

"I. Is the contract in question, as set out in the findings of fact, executed between the Railway Company and the Pullman Company, in view [***23] of the facts as stated, in violation of any provision of the first section of the antitrust statute of March 31, 1903, page 119 of the Session Laws of the 28th Legislature?

"II. Does such contract, in view of the facts, constitute a monopoly within the meaning of section 2 of said antitrust statute, or is its tendency to create a monopoly within the meaning of that section?"

The acts forbidden by the law of 1903 are so numerous that we will not undertake an examination of each one separately in this opinion. We have carefully examined the entire Act and each specification in reference to its application to the facts of this case and we are of the opinion that the following are the only provisions of the Act which have a semblance of applicability to this contract:

First. To fix or maintain any standard or figure whereby the cost of transportation shall be in any manner affected or established.

Second. To make any contract by which they shall agree to keep the cost of transportation at a fixed or graded figure, or by which they shall in any manner affect or maintain the cost of transportation or by which they shall agree to pool, combine or unite any interest they may have [***24] in connection with any charge for transportation.

Third. To create or carry out restrictions in the free pursuit of any business authorized or permitted by the laws of this State.

Without so deciding, we will, for the purposes of this opinion, assume that the facts of the case show a combination between the corporations named, and that the word "transportation" as it occurs in the Act embraces carriage of both passengers and freight. The first inquiry that we shall address ourselves to is, do the facts and the contract set out in the statement upon which the questions are submitted, show that the law has been violated by the corporations through any interference with transportation of passengers. The only reference in the contract to any charges to be made by either company is the stipulation that the Pullman Company should not charge passengers in its cars on the line [*43] of the Ft. Worth & Denver City Railroad Company more than it charged on the lines of competing railroads. The contract did not require that the charges should be maintained as they were then fixed, nor did it fix any standard of charges by which either company should be governed. No pooling or combining [***25] of rates between the said companies was provided for, but each was at liberty to prescribe its own charges and to change them at its pleasure. Neither corporation was entitled to receive any part of the charges made by the other; in fact, there was no semblance of a pooling or combination of rates, nor is there anything in the contract by which it would be possible to hold that the making, maintaining or charging of rates by either company, or by [**341] any other company, corporation or person, would be in the least affected, or could possibly be affected.

Counsel for the State contend that the provisions of the contract by which the mileage to be paid by the railroad company for the use of the sleeping cars was to be regulated by the average amount received from each sleeping car, so that in case the collection on each car should exceed $ 6000 a year, no mileage should be paid by the railroad company, had a tendency to increase the rates charged on the sleeping cars in order to reach the maximum revenue of each car. Certainly this could not have been an inducement to the Pullman Company to increase its charges, because by increasing its rates and the revenue from each car, [***26] it would lose the mileage to be paid by the railroad company; for although its increased revenue might be greater than the mileage, yet the loss of the mileage could not have been an inducement for the increase of the rates. The railroad company would be benefited by the increased revenue of the other company by a reduction or release from mileage, but it had no power over the charges of the Pullman Company. It is manifest that the contract did not in any way affect or tend to affect transportation or charges therefor.

Did the contract "create or carry out restrictions in the free pursuit of a business authorized or permitted by the laws of this State?" HN1[] The antitrust Act does not create a new business for any person, nor does it give a new right in the property of others, but the object of the law was to prevent interference with business authorized and carried on in accordance with the laws of the State. It is therefore pertinent to inquire what business interest was in any way affected by this contract? The two companies unquestionably had the right to contract that the one should furnish the sleeping cars and maintain them, thereby furnishing accommodations to the passengers [\[\*\*\*27\]](#) of the other, and to collect fares therefor. So far the contract is in conformity to law. This action rests alone upon the alleged illegality of the provision of the contract which grants to the Pullman Company the exclusive right to furnish sleeping cars for use on all lines of road owned or controlled by the Ft. Worth and Denver City Company, and all roads which it might thereafter acquire or operate. Waiving the fact that at the time the law of 1903 was enacted there was no other persons or company engaged in the like business in Texas, we come to the question, did the railroad company have the lawful right to make a contract with the Pullman Company, whereby it excluded all other companies, for fifteen years, from furnishing to the Railroad Company sleeping cars for use on all [\[\*44\]](#) of its lines? That question suggests this, did all sleeping car companies have a right to demand of the railroad company to haul their coaches on its railroad? If yea, the contract restricted the free pursuit of a lawful business and constitutes a trust under the Act of 1903, otherwise the law has not been violated by the agreement. The effect of this contract was that the railroad company [\[\*\*\*28\]](#) rented from the sleeping car company its coaches, agreeing to haul them over its lines of road, the sleeping car company furnishing sleeping accommodations and other conveniences to such passengers of the railroad as should desire them. HN2[] The demand of the traveling public for sleeping cars and like conveniences imposes upon railroads an obligation as potent as a rule of law; the demand must be complied with, which the carrier may do either by furnishing its own coaches or by contracting with another corporation as in this case. In order to justify a sleeping car company in furnishing such accommodations the railroad may give the exclusive right, because it is necessary to permanent and reliable service which is in the interest of the public. This contract in no way interfered with the right of any other sleeping car company, if any existed, to build or furnish its cars to other railroads. Neither the Pullman nor any HN3[] other corporation or person had a right to have sleeping cars attached to the passenger trains of the Ft. Worth & Denver City Railroad Company, therefore, to exclude them did not restrict "the free pursuit of any business authorized or permitted by law," because such [\[\*\*\*29\]](#) business was not authorized to be pursued on a railroad without the consent of the owner, and, since no such business right existed, it could not be restricted. Lewis v. Railroad Co., 10 Texas Ct. Rep., 423; Kates v. Atlanta Baggage and Cab Co., 107 Ga., 636; Express Cases, 117 U.S., 26; Chicago, St. L. & N. O. Ry. Co. v. Pullman So. Car Co., 139 U.S., 79; Fluker v. Georgia Ry. & B. Co., 81 Ga., 461; Barney v. O. B. & H. Steamboat Co., 67 N. Y., 301.

Lewis v. Railroad Company, above cited, was decided by the Court of Civil Appeals of the Second District in this State and an application for writ of error was refused by this court. In that case the facts showed that the railroad company had granted an exclusive privilege to one person to go upon its trains and solicit of passengers baggage to be hauled from the train to different parts of the city. Lewis was engaged in the same business at Mineral Wells and insisted that he had the right to have a solicitor upon the trains of that railroad with like privilege. The railroad company brought an action to enjoin him from so doing. The injunction was granted and at the trial was perpetuated by the trial court, which judgment was affirmed [\[\*\*\*30\]](#) by the Court of Civil Appeals. It was contended that the contract between the railroad company and the person authorized to solicit on its train was a restriction upon [\[\*\*\*342\]](#) a business authorized and permitted by the laws of this State. In a well considered opinion by Judge Speer, the Court of Civil Appeals held that while Lewis had the right to pursue that business, he could not prosecute it on the train of the railroad company without its consent.

In Kates v. Baggage Company, before cited, the Supreme Court of Georgia, in an elaborate and able opinion, held the railroad company [\[\*45\]](#) had the right to make a contract with one person, whereby it excluded all others from "the business" of soliciting baggage on its trains.

Express Cases (117 U.S., 1), consisted of three separate suits by express companies against three different railroads, to compel the latter to furnish the same facilities for carrying express matter on the respective railroads that the express companies had enjoyed under contracts which each railroad company had terminated. The issue is clearly stated in this language: "The exact question, then, is whether these express companies can now demand as [***31] a right what they have heretofore had only as by permission. That depends, as is conceded, on whether all railroad companies are now by law charged with the duty of carrying all express companies in the way that express carriers when taken are usually carried, just as they are with the duty of carrying all passengers and freights when offered in the way that passengers and freight are carried." Practically the same question is presented in this case. Upon a thorough examination of this issue HN4↑ the Supreme Court of the United States held that express companies had no such rights, and that a railroad company had the right to make contracts whereby it would limit the number of persons or companies who might pursue such a business on its train.

In Railroad Company v. Pullman Car Company, before cited, a contract almost identical in terms with this was the basis of the action; two cars of the Pullman Company having been destroyed, it brought suit upon the contract to recover for their value, to which the railroad company pleaded that the contract by which it gave the exclusive right to the Pullman Company to furnish sleeping cars for use upon the railroad was void, because it was contrary [***32] to public policy and was in restraint of trade. In answer to the contention that the contract was in restraint of trade, the Supreme Court of the United States said: "The stipulation, therefore, that the plaintiff, not being in default, should have the exclusive right for fifteen years to furnish drawing-room and sleeping cars for the defendant's use, and that the defendant should not, during that period, contract for cars of that kind with any other party, rightfully construed is not unreasonable, and, properly performed, will promote the convenience of the public in that it enables the defendant to have on its lines, at all times, and as the requirements of travel demand drawing-room and sleeping cars for use by passengers. It is a stipulation that does not interfere in any degree with its right and duty to disregard the contract whenever the plaintiff fails in furnishing cars that are adequately safe and sufficient in number for the travel on defendant's lines. The suggestion that the agreement is void, upon grounds of public policy, or because it is in general restraint of trade, can not, for the reasons stated, be sustained." That case is analogous to this and supports our [***33] conclusion.

HN5↑ Section 2 of the antitrust law of 1903 defines a monopoly as follows:

"Sec. 2. That a monopoly is a combination or consolidation of two or more corporations when effected in either of the following methods:

"1. When the direction of the affairs of two or more corporations is in any manner brought under the same management or control for the purpose of producing, or where such common management or control tends to create a trust as defined in the first section of this Act.

[*46] "2. Where any corporation acquires the shares or certificates of stock or bonds, franchise or other rights, or the physical properties, or any part thereof, of any other corporation or corporations, for the purpose of preventing or lessening, or where the effect of such acquisition tends to affect or lessen competition, whether such acquisition is accomplished directly or through the instrumentality of trustees or otherwise."

The direction of the "affairs" of neither of the corporations to this contract is brought under the control of the other; nor are the affairs of both corporations brought under the management of another corporation or person. Neither of these corporations [***34] acquired the shares or certificates of stock or bonds of the other by this contract, nor does the contract transfer to either company any "franchise, or other rights, or the physical properties" of the other company. The agreement by the railroad company to haul the cars of the Pullman Company did not transfer to the latter any of the franchise of the former by which it was authorized to operate trains over the road. On the contrary, the railroad company in the performance of the contract exercised its franchise. The sleeping cars were the only physical "properties" which were involved, or in any way dealt with in this transaction, and they were not acquired by the railroad company, but remained the property of the Pullman Company. The control which the railroad company acquired over the sleeping cars did not tend to affect or lessen competition either in transportation by the railroad company or in the business of the sleeping car company. We conclude, therefore, that the contract

99 Tex. 34, *46L<sup>87</sup> S.W. 336, **342L<sup>905</sup> Tex. LEXIS 155, ***34

[**343] between the two corporations "did not constitute a monopoly within the meaning of section 2 of the antitrust statute."

We answer both questions propounded in the negative.

---

End of Document

Wills v. Central Ice & Cold Storage Co.

Court of Civil Appeals of Texas

May 20, 1905, Decided

No Number in Original

Reporter

39 Tex. Civ. App. 483 *; 1905 Tex. App. LEXIS 349 **; 88 S.W. 265

Joe B. Wills v. Central Ice and Cold Storage Company et al.

Prior History: [**1] Appeal from the District Court of Dallas. Tried below before Hon. Richard Morgan.

Disposition: Affirmed.

Core Terms

---

wagons, contracts, Factory, buy, telephone, ice company, conspiracy, dealers, talked, Fuel, handled, morning, phoned, last year, shipped, started, bought, conversation, answered, replied, retail

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Torts > ... > Concerted Action > Civil Conspiracy > General Overview

HN1 [down arrow] Concerted Action, Civil Conspiracy

A conspiracy can not be made the subject of a civil action, although damages result, unless something is done which, without the conspiracy would give a right of action. It is held that the true test as to whether such action will lie is whether the act accomplished after the conspiracy is formed is itself actionable.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Torts > ... > Concerted Action > Civil Conspiracy > General Overview

HN2 [down arrow] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

A person has an absolute right to refuse to have business relations with any person whomsoever, whether the refusal is based upon reason or is the result of whim, caprice, prejudice or malice, and there is no law which forces a man to part with his title to property. However, the latter proposition must be limited to the individual action of the party who asserts the right; one person, from such motives, may not influence another to do the same thing.

Civil Procedure > Trials > Judgment as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN3 Trials, Judgment as Matter of Law

Although there is slight testimony, if its probative force is so weak that it only raises a mere surmise or suspicion of the existence of the facts sought to be established, it is the duty of the court to instruct a verdict.

Headnotes/Summary

---

Headnotes

Conspiracy to Secure Monopoly -- Right of Action -- Test.

A conspiracy can not be made the subject of a civil action, although damages result, unless something is done which without the conspiracy would give a right of action; the true test as to whether such action will lie being whether the act accomplished after the conspiracy is formed is itself actionable.

Conspiracy to Secure Monopoly -- Refusal to Sell to Dealer.

A person has an absolute right to refuse to have business relations with any person whomsoever, even though the refusal is the result of whim, caprice, prejudice or malice, but one person may not, from such motives, influence another to do the same thing.

Conspiracy to Secure Monopoly -- Fact Case.

Evidence considered in an action by an ice dealer for damages resulting from an alleged conspiracy to secure a monopoly of the ice business and to boycott plaintiff by refusing to sell him ice, and held not to warrant submitting the case to the jury, since it showed only a refusal by one of defendants to sell ice to plaintiff.

Court and Jury -- Instructing Verdict.

Where there is slight testimony, but its probative force is so weak that it only raises a mere surmise or suspicion of the existence of the facts sought to be established, it is the duty of the court to instruct a verdict.

Counsel: W. M. Holland, for appellant.

1. One who suffers injury by reason of a conspiracy formed for the purpose of preventing competition in trade in commodities in common use, which combinations are declared illegal by statute, has a right of action to recover damages sustained. 8 Cyc. of Law, p. 651; Rourke v. Elk Drug Co., 77 N. Y. Supp., 373; 75 N. Y. App. Div., 145; Murray v. McGarigle (Wis.), 34 N. W. Rep., 522; Montague v. Lowry, 193 U.S., 38; Texas Anti-Trust Statute of 1903; Supp. Sayles Statutes, pp. 559, 560; Delz v. Winfree, 80 Texas, 400; International & G. N. Ry. v. Greenwood, 2 Texas Civ. App., 77; Olive v. Van Patten, 7 Texas Civ. App., 630.

2. The judge is not authorized to direct verdict for the defendants if the plaintiff has introduced any evidence tending to sustain the material allegations of his petition. Newberger & Sons v. Heintze & Co., 3 Texas Civ. App., 261; Ney v. Ladd, 68 S. W. Rep., 1014; Burnett v. Burnett, 11 Texas Ct. Rep., 366; Lee v. International & G. N. R. R., 89 Texas, 588; Joske v. Irvine, 91 Texas, 581.

Read & Lowrance, Crane & Gilbert, [**2] Muse & Allen and Cockrell & Gray, for appellees.

1. The court did not err in giving peremptory instruction for the defendant, because there was no evidence to support any of the material allegations in plaintiff's petition. Delz v. Winfree, 80 Texas, 403, 25 S. W. Rep., 50; Olive v. Van Patten, 25 S. W. Rep., 429; Grand Lodge v. Schuetze, 83 S. W. Rep., 241; State v. Shippers C. & W. Co., 69 S. W. Rep., 58; Hunt v. Simonds, 19 Mo., 589; Cooley on Torts (2d ed.), secs. 126, 278, 690.

2. An individual can not recover damages on account of a conspiracy unless the facts alleged and proved constituted damages to him personally, independent of the alleged conspiracy. A person or corporation has an absolute right to refuse to have business relations with any person whomsoever, for any cause, and the law does not force any one to sell to another. Delz v. Winfree, 80 Texas, 403; Grand Lodge v. Schuetze, 83 S. W. Rep., 241; Hunt v. Simonds, 19 Mo., 583, 586; Cooley on Torts (2d ed.), secs. 124-126, 278, 690; Bishop on Non-contract Law, sec. 354; 6 Am. and Eng. Ency. Law, (2d ed.), 873, 874.

3. It was the duty of the court to instruct a verdict for appellee, because the testimony [**3] adduced at the trial of the case did not, in legal contemplation, amount to "any evidence," and "it is the duty of the court to instruct a verdict, though there be slight testimony, if its probative force be so weak that it only raises a mere surmise of suspicion of the existence of the fact sought to be established. Joske v. Irvine, 91 Texas, 582; Improvement & Ry. Co. v. Munson, 14 Wall., 442, 81 U.S., 442; Wittkowsky v. Wasson, 71 N. C., 454; Banlec v. Railway, 59 N. Y., 356; Texas Loan Agency v. Fleming, 49 S. W. Rep., 1041.

Judges: TALBOT, Associate Justice.

Opinion by: TALBOT

Opinion

---

[*484] TALBOT, Associate Justice. -- We adopt appellant's statement of the nature of the suit as follows: This suit was instituted by appellant in the Forty-fourth Judicial District Court of Texas on March 24, 1904, against appellees, Central Ice and Cold Storage Company, C. L. Wake-field, doing business as Dallas Ice and Fuel Company, the Peoples' Ice Company, Armstrong Packing Company and Dallas Ice Factory, Light and Power Company. It is a suit in the nature of a civil conspiracy for damages on account of injuries suffered by appellant by reason of an alleged conspiracy entered into by appellees on or [**4] about March 1, 1904, for the following purposes, viz: to secure a monopoly of all the ice manufactured in the city of Dallas for local consumption; to lessen competition and to fix and maintain the price of ice in the city of Dallas; to prevent lawful competition in the dealing of ice in the city [*485] of Dallas; to boycott appellant and to refuse to sell ice to appellant and to otherwise unlawfully meddle and interfere with appellant's business and deprive him of making a living out of his business as a wholesale and retail dealer in ice.

The defendants answered by general and special exceptions and general and special denial. A jury was empaneled to try the case, but upon the close of plaintiff's evidence the court, upon motion of the defendants, gave a peremptory instruction to the jury to return a verdict in their favor, which was done and judgment entered in accordance therewith. From this judgment appellant has appealed.

The petition discloses a cause of action, and the sole question presented for our determination is, whether or not the evidence was sufficient to require the submission of the case to the jury. C. L. Wakefield, one of the defendants and witness for plaintiff, [**5] testified by deposition: "I am interested in Dallas Ice and Fuel Company. The firm doing business under this name was formed in February, 1904. It was formed for the purpose of buying and selling ice in Dallas. It is a simple partnership composed of C. L. Wakefield, J. E. Cockrell and E. Gray, who alone compose the firm. At the time this suit was filed there were, I think, five factories or companies engaged in the manufacture of ice in Dallas, viz: the Lemp Company, the Armstrong Packing Company, the Dallas Ice Factory, Light & Power Company, the Peoples' Ice Company and the Central Cold Storage Company. I have a contract for the purchase of a certain amount of ice from the Armstrong Packing Company, the Dallas Ice Factory, Light and Power Company, the Peoples' Ice Company and William Lemp. These contracts were made with me and in my name. The contracts are in writing and were made with the executive officers of said three companies and with William J. Lemp, personally. I do not attach copies, because these are contracts relating to a private business and in which the plaintiff in this case is not interested. We bought some wagons and teams from the Lemp people. We bought them outright [**6] and paid for them part money and part in our notes. They have no interest whatever in our business. We have paid about two-thirds of the cost of such wagons and teams in money and owe the balance on notes. It was not agreed in said contract that the Lemp people should not sell ice to be used in the city of Dallas. They are at perfect liberty so far as our contract is concerned, to sell ice to whomsoever they please and where they please. The Lemp people did run wagons and sell ice to retail dealers last year, but decided not to do so this year. It is our understanding that they have long desired to get out of the retail business. The ice department of the Lemp people have telephone number 712 and Dallas Ice and Fuel Company has telephone number 712 in its office. We pay the additional charge to get our names also on this telephone number. We need phone service there where we get, load and deliver a great deal of ice, and we simply pay for the privilege. My agreement to purchase ice from the Peoples' Ice Company is in writing. I do not attach a copy for reasons already given. The contract is signed by the president and secretary of said company. We were not to take their entire output, [**7] for reasons already given. I decline to go into our private affairs. We have simply complied with our contract with them and have taken and paid for the ice [*486] we have contracted for. We bought part of their wagons and teams, not all. They sold some of the balance to other retail dealers. Under our contract it was not agreed that the Peoples' Ice Company should sell to no one else in Dallas. They can sell to whom they please, and I understand they are selling other dealers like ourselves. I do not know what you mean by independent dealers. There is no community of interest between our firm and this company. We are as independent dealers as the plaintiff or any one else. Mr. Jones while in our employ made a suggestion that we cut the selling price of ice so as to get more custom for our business. The suggestion was prompted by Fort Worth ice being shipped into Dallas and sold here. He seemed to think the Dallas factories should sell all the ice sold in Dallas. Whether Mr. Jones made this suggestion in our interest, as he was then working for us, or in the interest of the Peoples' Ice Company, of which he is a large stockholder, I do not know. But, in any event, we declined [**8] to adopt the suggestion or make any cut. We understand that Mr. Jones, for the Peoples' Ice Company, sold a lot of white ice at 12 1/2 cents to whosoever would buy it. We know of such sales by hearsay. But, as our consent was not necessary, it was not asked. The Peoples' Ice Company is not a subsidiary company to our firm. We have nothing on earth to do with them save we buy ice from them. It is not a fact that the ice companies operating in Dallas agreed with my company or myself that they were not to sell to any person, firm or corporation dealing in ice in Dallas city, except myself or my company. They can sell ice to whomsoever they please, so far as any contract we have with them is concerned, and on whatever terms they see fit. I did not engage in this business for the purpose of securing a monopoly or a partial monopoly, but did engage in it because I thought by economy, with lawful, honest and fair men for partners, I could do my share of the business and make some money in a legitimate way. Yes, I was formerly manager of Dallas Ice Factory, Light and Power Company. My connection with said company wholly ceased on February 29, 1904, when I resigned to embark in my present business. [**9] It is not a fact that some other party is manager in name only of said Power Company and that I am still its manager in fact. I have nothing whatever to do with said company save that we buy ice from it. I decline to answer the question as to the approximate amount of money, if any, paid by myself or Dallas Ice and Fuel Company to Dallas Ice Factory, Light and Power Company up to the present time. This is a private matter. Mr. Armstrong represented his company in contracting with me for the sale of ice. Said contract was in writing. I decline to give its terms for the reasons already given. The question as to whether said contract was in violation of the antitrust law was mentioned when the subject was first broached. It is a fact that neither myself nor my firm have any agreement, contract or understanding of any kind, form or character with my codefendant, the Central Ice and Cold Storage Company. Neither myself nor Dallas Ice and Fuel Company ever at any time had any understanding, contract or agreement with said codefendant. I never confederated or conspired with any person whomsoever to injure or affect the business of plaintiff or to prevent him from buying ice wherever he could."

[**10] [*487] Joe B. Wills, plaintiff, testified: that he had been engaged in the ice business since March, 1903; that he was well acquainted with the trade in that business and with the people who bought ice; that prior to the acts of defendants complained of he had a good trade in the ice business; that in addition to his city trade he sold ice to country men living in the little towns near Dallas; that he got the biggest part of his ice last season from Armstrong Packing Company and a good deal from Central Ice and Cold Storage Company, till March 1, but that thereafter they would not sell him ice, though he made efforts to get it from them; that during the latter part of February he phoned Mr. Flippin, the secretary of the Armstrong Company, and asked him about getting ice next year, as he thought there was danger about his getting ice, and that Mr. Flippin replied that he would tell him without authority that Mr. Wakefield was going to get Armstrong's ice, and that while the papers were not signed now, yet he could depend on getting ice elsewhere. That Mr. Wakefield was going to get Armstrong's as well as the other three; that he phoned Mr. Armstrong in August about getting ice [**11] from him, and he said that he couldn't sell me; that he (Armstrong) had a five years' contract with Mr. Wakefield, and that he didn't have any ice to sell him, Wills, at all; that it was simply Wakefield's ice, and to sell it would simply be selling someone else's ice that did not belong to him, Armstrong; that when he, Armstrong, "pulled" the ice it belonged to Mr. Wakefield and that he had nothing further to do with it when he turned it over to him, Wakefield, and that he, Armstrong, couldn't sell him, Wills, any ice at all. That along about March 1, he, Wills, had a contract with Gardner & Tarver, Earl S. Graham, and T. L. Benning to get ice from them that they had contracted for with the Central Ice and Cold Storage Company. That he got ice through them from Central Ice and Cold Storage Company till the 10th of March, when the Central Ice and Cold Storage Company refused to let him have any more ice; that after this he got his ice from Fort Worth, and had it shipped over the Texas & Pacific and Houston & Texas Central Railroads. That Mr. Jones had made a statement to him about the defendant companies having an agreement; that at the time Jones made the statement he was acting for [**12] the Peoples' Ice Company and represented himself to be an officer of the company. That Jones came to his, Wills, place to see him about cutting off ice from the dealers who were getting ice from Wills. That Jones told him that if he would cut them off that he, Wills, could get all the ice he wanted at the Peoples' Company, or that he, Jones, would arrange it so that he, Wills, could get ice anywhere. That Jones offered him $ 500 to cut off the Oak Cliff wagons and $ 4,000 to cut off the Dallas wagons without notice, or to ship them in ice that was inferior. That prior to the alleged unlawful acts of defendants, that he, Wills, was making money out of the ice business. That on March 1, 1904, his business had a value; that it was worth $ 5,000 to $ 6,000, the way he, Wills, figured it. That on December 1, of this year, 1904, under the present circumstances, his business was not worth anything.

He further testified: "I begun business in March, 1903; I didn't have any ice business at that time, I was in the fuel business; when I [*488] started the business I didn't have any trade; I didn't have any ice business worked up at that time, and it was worth very little in March, 1903. [**13] The business gradually grew from the time I started it; I had some mules and wagons when I started; when I first started the whole business was probably worth $ 800 to $ 1,100, or something like that; on December 1, 1903, I figured that my ice business was worth $ 2,000 to $ 2,500; I am not doing much ice business this winter, but I did more last winter; I have not kept track of the number of pounds of ice I sold last winter, but I sold a great deal of ice compared to what I sold this December. I bought my ice from Armstrong Packing Company and the Central Ice and Cold Storage Company last winter; I ran two wagons last year; I did not sell ice to dealers last year, except to those from the country, who would put it in their wagons and haul it out; I just had two ice wagons running and sold from them; this year, 1904, I ran two wagons to commence with, and then I got another one in July and another one in August; I ran four wagons this year, and two last year; I sold a great deal of ice this year at wholesale, but didn't sell any last year; between December, 1903, and December, 1904, I handled more ice than I did the year previous; I handled a great deal more ice during the year 1904 [**14] than I did during the year 1903; I handled a right smart of ice in March, 1904; I commenced the 10th of March, 1904, and handled a car every other day until about the 20th, and then a car every day; that was in March, 1904; I did build up my business and sold four times as much ice as I had ever sold before; I didn't do anything like that in March, 1903, because I had just started then; in March, 1904, I handled nearly a carload a day, but not over a car a day at any time; I thought it was wise to make a contract early for my supply of ice; I did not try to get every bit of the output of the Armstrong Company; he sent for me to come down and wanted me to handle his ice; he didn't say all of it; he said he wanted me to take about twenty-five tons a day; I was not going to take all of his ice that he could spare; I was not going to contract for all I could get from him; I wouldn't sew myself up to take any certain amount. Along about the first of March I had a contract with Gardner & Tarver, Earl S. Graham and with T. L. Benning, to get ice from them that they had contracted for with the Central Ice and Cold Storage Company; I went to the Central Ice and Cold Storage Company after that [**15] ice; I went there in March -- I commenced, I believe, the first of March, and got ice there the first, second and third of March, and paid Gardner & Tarver for it, and on the 4th of March I saw Mr. Drebelsis, the manager of the Central Ice and Cold Storage Company, and he told me then that they didn't have any ice there to sell to me; that if I got any ice there I would have to buy it from him; that he would be glad to sell me ice, and would sell it to me as long as there was a block in the vaults, and I told him I had already made arrangements with those parties to get part of their ice any time I needed it, and that I didn't see any very good reason why I should change my arrangements with those parties, and he says, "Well, they can't sell any ice to you; they can simply use any ice they get here!" and that was the extent of the conversation, and I said to him that I would not change my arrangements with them; that was on the 5th of March, and I continued to get ice there and had it [*489] charged to Gardner & Tarver and paid them for it whenever I would see them, and took a written order there a time or two signed by them, for blank number of pounds and they would fill it out, [**16] I don't know how many times, and had it charged to them, and the 10th morning of March, I went down with Mr. Grigsby and Mr. Trapp who were running a wagon, and had just started up the day before, and I hadn't got any ice on the Texas & Pacific that morning, and I went down and asked Mr. Kiser, their engineer, for some ice, and he says, "No, I can't let you have any," and I told him I had paid Gardner & Tarver and Mr. Benning for it, and wanted it out and he refused to let me have it; the engineer would not let me have the ice; he was the man that had charge of delivering the ice early in the morning before anyone else came down; the time I was there was about three or four o'clock in the morning; he was the night engineer that I speak of. About 11 o'clock on the 17th of last March, I telephoned for number 84 and asked for Mr. Wakefield, and I don't know who answered the phone, but they said he wasn't in and to call his residence, and I called his residence and was not able to talk to him and then I called number 62, the Dallas Ice Factory and asked to speak to their manager, and they said to call the engine room, and give me the number to call, and I called the engine room and they [**17] said Mr. Galloway was not there, and then they gave me still another number, the office of the Dallas Ice Factory, and I called that and asked for Mr. Galloway and didn't get him, and I talked to Mr. Herber, who answered the telephone, and asked him if I could get some ice there; then I phoned to Mr. Flippen at the Armstrong Packing Company; then I phoned number 712, that is Wm. J. Lemp's factory, and was referred to number 46, and asked for Mr. Feickert; I talked over the phone to Mr. Feickert and he said, "We have no ice to sell here, you will have to call Mr. Wakefield, he has our ice." That was the extent of the conversation between me and Mr. Wakefield."

F. A. Gillette testified that he was local freight agent of the Houston and Texas Central Railroad Company. That plaintiff, Wills, shipped considerable ice over his road this year, 1904; that he had a conversation with Mr. Jones with reference to his road shipping ice for Wills. That Jones asked him if his road was shipping ice from Fort Worth for Wills. That he told him that it was, and Jones asked him if there was any money in it for handling the ice, and that he asked Jones what he meant. That since he thought about it he [**18] believed Mr. Jones did ask him if there wasn't some way by which he could decline to haul the ice, and that he told him no, there wasn't; that they were common carriers and had to haul it. None of the other defendants approached me on that subject at any time.

R. Zink testified that last summer he was running a candy kitchen and ice cream parlor on Ross Avenue and Central Avenue, and that he sold ice; that about the first of March he called up Wakefield over the telephone and talked with him with reference to the price of ice; that Wakefield quoted him price and that he told him, Wakefield, that he could make better arrangements and could get ice from Mr. Wills for 25 cents, and Wakefield answered that he could furnish ice only on those terms, and that he, Zink, replied that he could buy ice from Wills [*490] at 25 cents, and Wakefield said he, Zink, could get it till warm weather came and then he couldn't get it, and then what would he do? That Mr. Wakefield raised the price of ice on his this year as compared with last year.

Joe Bell testified that he was running a store and blacksmith shop at Rylie. That during October he got 1,100 pounds of ice at Lemp's factory for Wills. [**19] That he got it in his wagon, not in Wills's wagon. That his wagon was a farm wagon. That when he went after the ice they asked him if he lived in the country. That when he went after the ice he went to the place where he had always gone after ice, and that they would not let him have it there, but sent him up to the office. That when he formerly bought ice from them he never did have to go to the office after it, and that they never asked him before that where he wanted to take the ice.

A. J. Pulaski testified that he lived at Mesquite. That during the summer he was engaged in the ice and meat business. That this season he had got ice from Dallace Ice and Fuel Company, from Lemp and from Mr. Armstrong. That the only question they asked him was where he was doing business at, and that this question was only asked at Dallas Ice and Fuel Company and at Lemp's, but that Mr. Armstrong was acquainted with him, and he presumed knew where he was doing business.

Ed Tarver testified that he was engaged in the retail ice business; that plaintiff, Wills, got ice from him up to March 10, 1904, that during the latter part of February; he, Tarver, asked Mr. Drebelbis, manager of the Central Ice [**20] and Cold Storage Company, if he, Drebelbis, would object to his, Tarver's, selling ice to Wills, and he replied that he would not; that Wills got ice there until March 10; that Mr. Drebelbis then told him, Tarver, that they, Gardner & Tarver, could not sell Wills any more ice. He, Drebelbis, said that he, Tarver, could neither buy any ice from Wills nor sell any ice to Wills as he was a competitor of theirs.

W. C. Wills testified that he was a brother of the plaintiff; that he was familiar with plaintiff's business and had worked for plaintiff; that plaintiff's business had a value prior to March 1, 1904; that the value at that time was some thousands of dollars, between $ 5,000 and $ 6,000; that he left plaintiff's business in July, and that the value of plaintiff's business had depreciated until it was worth only between $ 200 and $ 400 at that time.

George Gardner testified that he was engaged in the ice business; that on the last day of February he and Tarver went down to the Central Company's office and talked with Mr. Drebelsis in regard to his factory allowing Mr. Wills to use their ice through them, Gardner & Tarver; that Mr. Drebelsis said he was perfectly willing for them [**21] to let Wills have ice; that this conversation took place about the last day of February, just before the Armstrong contract expired, which was on the first of March; that they, Gardner & Tarver, gave Mr. Wills orders for ice and they were accepted till the morning of March 10, 1904, at which time the Central Ice and Cold Storage Company refused to honor their, Gardner & Tarver's orders in favor if Wills; that the man in charge, Kiser, stated that he had instructions from Drebelsis, [*491] the manager, not to load out Mr. Wills and Mr. Grigsby; that Mr. Grigsby was a man that had been getting ice there under Mr. Wills -- one of Mr. Wills' men.

The foregoing, we think, is all the testimony, contained in the record, material to a decision of the question presented and an understanding of our ruling.

In the case of Delz v. Winfree, 80 Tex. 400, our Supreme Court approves the doctrine, that HN1[↑] a conspiracy can not be made the subject of a civil action, although damages result, unless something is done which, without the conspiracy, would give a right of action. It is held that the true test as to whether such action will lie is whether the act accomplished after the conspiracy is formed [**22] is itself actionable. In that case the following proposition is also conceded to be correct: HN2[↑] "A person has an absolute right to refuse to have business relations with any person whomsoever, whether the refusal is based upon reason or is the result of whim, caprice, prejudice or malice, and there is no law which forces a man to part with his title to property." It is said, however, that the latter proposition must be limited to the individual action of the party who asserts the right; that one person, from such motives, may not influence another to do the same thing.

Now, if we should concede, which we do not, that there was sufficient evidence introduced, which would have justified a finding that the conspiracy had been established, still the record will be searched in vain, we think, for any testimony which would have authorized a finding by the jury that appellees, or either of them, did any act, after such conspiracy was formed, which in itself constituted actionable wrong and on account of which appellant was entitled to recover damages. The nearest approach to any evidence tending to show a cause of action for damages, without the conspiracy alleged, is the testimony of Gardner [**23] and statement of appellant that he had a contract with Gardner & Tarver to get ice from them that they had contracted for with the Central Ice and Cold Storage Company, and that Mr. Drebelsis, manager of said company, on or about the 4th day of March, 1904, told him that Gardner & Tarver could not sell ice to him, and on the morning of March 10, 1904, refused to let him have ice on the order of Gardner & Tarver, and the testimony of Tarver to the effect that on the evening of the 9th of March, 1904, Mr. Drebelsis told him that the firm of Gardner & Tarver could not sell appellant any more ice; that Drebelsis said that he, Tarver, could neither buy ice from appellant nor sell any ice to him. There is no evidence, however, that Gardner & Tarver or either of them, refused to sell appellant ice, or that he sustained any damage whatever by reason of Drebelsis's statement. Nor does the evidence show that Drebelsis ever attempted in any manner to induce Gardner & Tarver or any one else not to sell ice to appellant, unless his statements to appellant and Tarver referred to can be so construed. But applying the principle recognized in the case of Delz v. Winfree, supra, we think this testimony [**24] insufficient to show a cause of action against the Central Ice and Cold Storage Company. It had the right to refuse to sell its ice to appellant, either directly or through Gardner & Tarver, and the mere exercise of that right, no matter what may have been the motive for doing so, whether caprice, malice or prejudice, did not render it liable [*492] to appellant in damages on account of such refusal. As seen in the case cited the assertion of this privilege by the Central Ice and Cold Storage Company could not, legally, be carried beyond its individual action. It did not have the right to influence Gardner & Tarver or any other person to refuse the sale of ice to appellant, and the evidence, as said, fails to show any such attempt on said appellee's part to exercise such influence as amounted to a breach of the privilege mentioned or rule announced. It appears without contradiction that after Drebelsis told appellant that Gardner & Tarver could not sell him ice, the appellee, Central Ice and Cold Storage Company continued to let him have ice through Gardner & Tarver until March 10, 1904, and that prior to March 10, 1904, appellant had contracted to get his ice from Fort Worth, [**25] and about 10 o'clock a. m. on that day received from Fort Worth a car of ice containing about fifteen tons. It further appears that in the conversation in which Drebelsis told appellant that Gardner & Tarver could not sell him ice, he stated to appellant that if he got any ice from the Central Ice and Cold Storage Company he would have to buy it from him; that he, Drebelsis, would be glad to sell him ice and would do so as long as there was a block in the vault. Appellant replied to this statement, in effect, that he had made arrangements with Gardner & Tarver to get a part of the ice they had contracted to get from the Central Ice and Cold Storage Company and would make no change, and did not thereafter, so far as the record shows, try to buy any ice directly from that company. Nor does it appear that after the morning of March 10, 1904, he ever attempted to do so through Gardner & Tarver or upon their order and was refused. Again, it is shown beyond controversy that this appellee had no contract whatever with the other appellees in regard to the sale of ice. In reference to the other appellees, C. L. Wakefield, Lemp, the People's Ice Company and the Dallas Ice Factory, Light and [**26] Power Company, the evidence fails to show that appellant made any demand upon either of them for the sale to him of any of their ice. The extent of his efforts to get ice from either of these appellees, if it can be said that such was his purpose, will be found in appellant's testimony to the effect that on March 17, 1904, he asked for Mr. Wakefield over telephone No. 84, and was informed by some unknown person to call his residence; that he called his residence and "was not able to talk to him," why, he does not say; that he then called the Dallas Ice Factory, over telephone No. 62, and asked to speak to the manager and was directed to call the engine room, which he did, and they said Mr. Galloway was not there; that after another effort over another telephone to the Dallas Ice Factory he failed to get Mr. Galloway, but that Mr. Herber answered his call and he asked him if he, appellant, could get some ice there, but does not state what reply Mr. Herber made; that he then telephoned Mr. Flippin, of the Armstrong Packing Company, for what purpose he does not say, neither does he say whether or not he reached and talked with Mr. Flippin. That he then telephoned to Wm. J. Lemp's factory [**27] and talked to Mr. Feickert, and that Mr. Feickert, said, "We have no ice to sell here; you will have to call Mr. Wakefield, he has our ice." If at any other time or in any other manner during the period covered by the allegations of his petition appellant tried to buy ice from either of said appellees, it is not disclosed by the record.

[*493] We think the right of C. L. Wakefield to purchase the ice of his coappellees as disclosed by the evidence before us can not be doubted. If these contracts of either of them, which were in writing, were in violation of our anti-trust statutes or any other law, there is no evidence of the fact contained in the statement of facts sent to this court. Insofar as the testimony shows these contracts were independent of each other, involved only an ordinary business transaction for the purchase of the ice contracted for, and in no way infringed upon the rights of appellant or any other ice dealer. There is no concerted action or scheme shown, whatever may have been the real facts, on the part of these appellees to injure appellant's business or to destroy or forbid competition in trade. It is true the record shows that appellee Wakefield refused [**28] to attach to his deposition copies of these contracts and failed to state the exact terms thereof; and it is argued, in effect, that the withholding of this evidence gives rise to a strong legal presumption of the truth of appellant's allegations. Now, while such conduct may furnish a circumstance tending to show that the terms of the contracts, had they been disclosed, might have affected injuriously the interest of appellees, still it was not of such probative force, either alone or considered together with all the other evidence in the record, as would have authorized a verdict for appellant. It may be that by the failure to produce these contracts and reveal their contents to the court and jury important facts were not disclosed, and the case in that respect and to that extent undeveloped. If, however, any effort was made, further than propounding interrogatories and taking Wakefield's deposition, under the ample provisions of the law to require the production of these instruments or to compel the witness to state their exact contents, instead of his conclusion of their legal effect, it is not shown.

We conclude the evidence adduced was insufficient to sustain the charge of conspiracy [**29] or to authorize a recovery against appellees, or either of them, on account of any of the matters alleged, and that the court correctly instructed a verdict in their favor. The rule is that HN3 though there be slight testimony, yet "if its probative force be so weak that it only raises a mere surmise or suspicion of the existence of the facts sought to be established, it is the duty of the court to instruct a verdict." (Joske v. Irvine, 91 Tex. 574.)

The judgment of the court below is affirmed.

39 Tex. Civ. App. 483, *493L 905 Tex. App. LEXIS 349, **29

Affirmed.

---

End of Document

Hunt v. Riverside Co-operative Club

Supreme Court of Michigan

February 9, 1905, Submitted ; June 29, 1905, Decided

Docket No. 44

Reporter

140 Mich. 538 *; 104 N.W. 40 **; 1905 Mich. LEXIS 605 ***

HUNT v. RIVERSIDE CO-OPERATIVE CLUB

Core Terms

---

plumbers, supplies, wholesale, monopoly, provisions, regulating, enjoined, defendants', eliminated, installing, commodity, estimates, decree, nonmembers, contracts, parties, fixing, prices, transportation, obligated, forbids, selling, percent, objectionable, merchandise, restricting, forbidden

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN1 [down arrow] Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

See 1899 Mich. Pub. Act no. 255 § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Defenses > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

HN2 [down arrow] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

It is no defense to say that a monopoly has in fact reduced prices. That policy may have been necessary to crush competition. Where it rests in the discretion of a company at any time to raise the price to an exorbitant degree, such combinations have frequently been condemned by courts as unlawful and against public policy. Neither is it an answer to say that the monopoly created, or attempted to be created, is not a complete and perfect monopoly. In order to vitiate a contract or combination it is not essential that its result should be a complete monopoly; it is sufficient if it really tends to that end, and to deprive the public of the advantages which flow from free competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN3 Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

In general, it may be said that 1899 Mich. Pub. Act no. 255 § 1 forbids certain contracts and certain defined trusts. An agreement fixing and regulating the price of labor is not one of these contracts, nor one of these trusts. If it may be said that an agreement fixing the price of labor violates the statute when it forms part of an undertaking which the statute forbids, it must also be said that it does not violate the statute unless it does form part of some undertaking forbidden by the statute.

Counsel: [***1] Ormond F. Hunt, in pro. per.

J. J. & R. T. Speed, for defendants.

Opinion by: CARPENTER

Opinion

---

[*540] [**41] CARPENTER, J. HN1 Section 1, Act No. 255, Pub. Acts 1899, reads as follows:

"That a trust is a combination of capital, skill or arts by two or more persons, firms, partnerships, corporations or associations of persons, or of any two or more of them, for either, any or all of the following purposes:

"1. To create or carry out restrictions in trade or commerce.

"2. To limit or reduce the production, or increase or reduce the price of, merchandise or any commodity.

"3. To prevent competition in manufacturing, making, transportation, sale or purchase of merchandise, produce or any commodity.

"4. To fix any standard or figure, whereby its price to the public or consumer shall be in any manner controlled or established, any article or commodity of merchandise, produce or commerce intended for sale, barter, use or consumption in this State.

"5. It shall hereafter be unlawful for two or more persons, firms, partnerships, corporations or associations of persons, or of any two or more of them, to make or enter into or execute or carry out any contracts, obligations [***2] or agreements of any kind or description, by which they shall bind or have bound themselves not to sell, dispose of or transport any article or any commodity or any article of trade, use, merchandise, commerce or consumption below a common standard figure or fixed value, or by which they shall agree in any manner to keep the price of such article, commodity or transportation at a fixed or graduated figure, or by which they shall in any manner establish or settle the price of any article, commodity or transportation between them or themselves and others, so as to directly or indirectly preclude a free and unrestricted competition among themselves, or any purchasers or consumers, in the sale or transportation of any such article or commodity, or by which they shall agree to pool, combine or directly or indirectly unite any interests that they may have connected with the sale or transportation of any such article or commodity, that its price might in any manner be affected. Every such trust as is defined herein is declared to be unlawful, against public policy and void."

Under the claim that the purpose of the organization of the first two named defendants was to violate the above-quoted [***3] [*541] section, relator filed this information in equity asking a decree restraining their further operation. Defendants answered, and the case was heard in the court below on pleadings and proof. A decree was granted in conformity with the prayer of the bill. Defendants appeal to this court.

Each of said first two named defendants is an unincorporated association. The Master Plumbers' Exchange was organized in January, 1902. The Riverside Co-operative Club was organized in the following July. The members of the exchange are master plumbers doing business in the city of Detroit and its vicinity. The importance of that organization is shown by the fact that, of the 168 master plumbers doing business in Detroit, 131 -- and these "the most reputable" modestly states one of defendant's witnesses -- are members of the exchange. The membership of the Riverside Club consists of the master plumbers belonging to the exchange and seven wholesale dealers and manufacturers in plumbers' supplies. (These seven comprise all the manufacturers and dealers in plumbers' supplies in the city of Detroit.) According to the rules and regulations of the Riverside Co-operative Club (these rules [**4] and [**42] regulations constitute an agreement between the members of said club), the price of plumbers' supplies is to be fixed by a committee consisting of one wholesaler and one master plumber. At this price the wholesale members agree to sell without discrimination to the master plumber members, and the master plumber members agree to buy their entire supplies, distributing their trade equitably, from the wholesale members. The wholesalers agree to sell only to qualified master plumbers (this includes plumbers who are not, as well as those who are, members of the club) whose names appear on a list approved by the officers of the club. They also agree to charge nonmembers 15 to 30 per cent. more than members. The master plumber members agree that they will not sell labor or material at prices below those fixed by a schedule approved by the club. The master plumbers [*542] agree to do no contract work for, and the wholesale members agree to furnish no supplies to, one who has failed to make a satisfactory settlement with any member of the club. According to the rules and regulations of the Master Plumbers' Exchange, each member agrees -- and a heavy penalty is provided [**5] for the failure to perform this agreement -- that in bidding for contract work he will estimate materials according to the cost price fixed by said Riverside Club, and labor at wages specified in said rules; that he will add to these prices at least 30 per cent. for plumbers' and helpers' time, add to this total 5 per cent. to be paid to the exchange, and then add to this total at least 25 per cent. for profit. Each member also agreed to submit such estimate to the clerk of the exchange, who was also clerk of the Riverside Club. While defendants claim that the object of submitting these estimates was to correct errors of computation, there was a more important object, viz., to prevent competition and to enhance the plumbers' profit. This is shown by the following letters from the clerk to one of the members:

October 27, 1902. "I am quite anxious to have the estimates on that Penberthy Injector Company job thoroughly examined. * * * The estimates as they now stand seem to indicate that if the job had been figured fairly by all the competitors on it, you could just as well have secured it at an advance of from $250 to $400 over the price at which you did secure it. * * * In this [**6] connection I may also state that some time ago we compared the estimate of the Forrester and Cheney job. Two of these estimates were low and yours the lowest of all, seemed to be very low. We felt at the time these estimates were examined that the cost figures on the job should have been from $100 to $150 higher than your cost figure which would have given you a profit of from $120 to $180 more than you are now making on the job."

May 7, 1903. (Another letter from the clerk to the same member.)

"Referring again to the letting of that Ford job, I beg to advise you that I am sure that if I could have told Mr. [*543] Harrigan that his figure was much too low compared with your figure and the figures of Mr. Dickson and Mr. Ryan, he would have 'pulled' his bid and have let the job go to one of the other three men."

There are other agreements between the members of these two associations, but it may be said of them that they are either inconsequential, or that they are designed to further the object shown by the agreements herein stated. The business of the various members was carried on under this agreement for more than a year, or until the filing of this bill, in December, [**7] 1903. Was this agreement forbidden by the statute?

In determining the legality of defendants' undertaking it would be confusing, rather than helpful, to examine and determine the legality of each specific agreement. If it may be said that many of these agreements, considered by themselves, are legal, it may also be said (and this will be made to appear hereafter) that these agreements are merely steps to effect the accomplishment of an illegal object, and for that reason they are also illegal. See Pacific Factor Co. v. Adler, 90 Cal. 110. The legality of defendants' undertaking is to be determined by ascertaining their central and controlling object. We cannot determine this object by looking at either organization as an entity apart from the other. The two organizations are intimately connected -- so intimately that their common clerk testifies that he does not know whether the fund derived from the 5 per cent. addition to contracts by master plumbers, which aggregates $11,000, belongs to the one or to the other. The two organizations co-operate, and were intended to co-operate. As members of the Riverside Club the plumbers arrange to purchase their supplies. Under [***8] that arrangement each member secures the same prices, and prices more favorable than competing nonmembers can secure. As members of the Master Plumbers' Exchange, these plumbers fix the price at which they will sell these supplies. It is scarcely necessary to say that this agreement restricts, if it does not destroy, competition [*544] between these members. The advantage that this arrangement gives the plumber members over the plumber nonmembers is obvious. The latter must buy their supplies either in the local markets at excessive prices, or abroad at a great disadvantage. It is scarcely necessary to say that this arrangement was designed to create, and tends to create, a practical, though possibly incomplete, monopoly in favor of the plumber members. As members of the Master Plumbers' Exchange, the plumbers fixed the prices -- thereby restricting competition among themselves -- at which they will sell the supplies, of which they had a practical monopoly. The manifest purpose of the two [**43] organizations, then, is to give to the master plumber members a monopoly of selling plumbers' supplies in the city of Detroit, and at the same time to restrict competition among [***9] themselves in effecting such sales.

Much stress is placed on the fact that on December 22, 1903, the day before this bill was filed, defendants' trustees, acting on the advice of their attorney, abrogated the provision which obligated wholesalers to discriminate against nonmember plumbers, and the provision which obligated master plumbers not to sell labor and material below a schedule rate. It is insisted that with these provisions eliminated nothing objectionable remains. As a matter of fact, the trustees had, under the by-laws, no authority to abrogate these provisions. Their action in undertaking to abrogate them was utterly ineffectual until approved at a meeting of defendants' members. This approval did not take place until January 5, 1904, and therefore, at the time this suit was instituted, the objectionable provisions were in full force. If the public authorities had the right to institute this suit and obtain a decree enjoining defendants from enforcing those objectionable provisions, it is difficult to believe that they were bound to dismiss their suit the moment defendants eliminated them from their plan of organization. It may well be said in such a case that the [***10] public has a right to some other security than defendants' [*545] statement that they would thereafter desist from their illegal undertaking. But we do not base our decision upon that proposition, for, as I shall endeavor to show, the elimination of these objectionable provisions did not materially change the character of defendants' undertaking. The master plumbers, though no longer obligated to refrain from competition in selling supplies and labor, remained obligated to refrain from free and unrestricted competition when they installed plumbers' supplies on contracts. In other words, the elimination of the objectionable provisions did not restore freedom of competition. It merely limited the field of restricted competition. After the elimination of the provision expressly obligating the wholesalers to discriminate against nonmembers, they still remained bound to sell only to such nonmembers as should be approved by the joint representatives of the wholesalers and the master plumbers, and they also remained bound to sell to the master plumbers at prices fixed by such joint representatives.

It is obvious that by these remaining provisions the parties to the contract may, [***11] if they choose, insure discrimination in favor of the plumber members against the plumber nonmembers. Is it the purpose of the parties to use these provisions to secure discriminations? This may be determined by considering their financial advantages and desires. Discrimination is certainly to their financial advantage. Only by such discrimination can the plumber members control the business of selling plumbers' supplies in the city of Detroit. By controlling that business, both the wholesalers and their associates, the master plumbers, may hope to increase their trade and their profits. Do the parties desire discrimination? If we have not answered this by showing that discrimination was to their financial advantage (and the object of the contract was to secure financial advantage to the parties), additional evidence is furnished by the original provision requiring discrimination. It is true that by the advice of their counsel they [*546] have eliminated that provision, but we may still, under the circumstances of this case, look to it as evidence of their purpose. See Detroit Salt Co. v. National Salt Co., 134 Mich. 103. Indeed, one must be blind if he does not [***12] see that the essential object of the parties in organizing the Riverside Club was to secure such discrimination. When they struck from their rules the provision requiring discrimination they did not change that object. Their purpose remained unchanged. The only effect of eliminating the provision expressly requiring discrimination was to make discrimination an implied, instead of an expressed, part of the contract. We are warranted, therefore, in declaring that the parties now intend, by means of appropriate provisions still remaining in their contract, to secure discrimination. It should be construed in accordance with that intention. I conclude, therefore, that by the agreement between defendants they have attempted to create a monopoly in the business of selling plumbers' supplies in the city of Detroit and restricted competition among themselves.

It is insisted that agreements restricting competition "for contract work -- that is to say, to work for which work is to be done and materials furnished for a certain lump sum -- are not within the statute of 1899." It is true that a plumber who, under contract, installs his supplies in a building, furnishes the labor which installs [***13] said supplies; but it is also true that by the performance of his contract the title of such supplies passes from him to the owner or occupant of the building. These supplies are thus either sold or disposed of. It is unnecessary to determine whether or not the statute prohibits contracts fixing and regulating the price of labor employed in installing the supplies sold, for it certainly does prohibit contracts which restrict competition by fixing the price of the supplies installed; and the statute was therefore violated when defendants agreed to restrict competition in contract work, for the effect and intent of that agreement was "to keep the price" of their supplies "at a fixed or graduated figure, [*547] * * * so as to * * * preclude a free and unrestricted competition among themselves."

Nor is the agreement of the master plumbers unobjectionable because it leaves some opportunity for competition between them. They have agreed "not to sell * * * an article of [**44] merchandise * * * below a common standard figure or fixed value, * * * so as to * * * preclude a free and unrestricted competition among themselves;" and this the statute in express terms forbids. Moreover, [***14] this record warrants our saying that it is the aim and purpose of defendants (and this purpose may be accomplished by their contract) to altogether abolish competition between themselves. But the justification for enjoining the further prosecution of defendants' undertaking does not rest upon the narrow ground that the agreement restricting competition among the master plumbers was unlawful. As heretofore indicated, that rests upon the ground that defendants have undertaken, by means forbidden by the statute, viz., by agreeing to keep the selling price for both wholesale and retail dealers at a fixed or graduated figure, to create a monopoly in the business of selling plumbers' supplies in the city of Detroit, and to secure to themselves the profits of that monopoly.

Defendants' testimony tends to prove that, instead of raising, they have lowered, prices. It is our duty to disregard that testimony.

HN2 [↑] "It is no answer to say that this monopoly has in fact reduced the price. * * * That policy may have been necessary to crush competition. The fact exists that it rests in the discretion of this company at any time to raise the price to an exorbitant degree. Such combinations have [***15] frequently been condemned by courts as unlawful and against public policy." Richardson v. Buhl, 77 Mich., at pages 660, 661 (6 L.R.A. 457).

See, also, *People v. Sheldon*, 139 N.Y. 251 \(23 L.R.A. 221\). Neither is it an answer to say that the monopoly created, or attempted to be created, is not a complete and perfect monopoly.

[*548] "All the authorities agree that in order to vitiate a contract or combination it is not essential that its result should be a complete monopoly; it is sufficient if it really tends to that end, and to deprive the public of the advantages which flow from free competition." U.S. v. E.C. Knight Co., 156 U.S., at page 16.

Did defendants violate the statute of 1899 when, by agreeing to keep the selling price -- both the wholesale and retail selling price -- at a fixed or graduated figure, they undertook to create a monopoly of the business of selling plumbers' supplies in the city of Detroit, and to secure to themselves the profits of that monopoly? To answer this question we are not required to enter into a critical examination of the statute. At common law such an agreement was against public policy, and between the parties [***16] thereto was void. See Richardson v. Buhl, supra; *Detroit Salt Co. v. National Salt Co., supra*; *Bailey v. Master Plumbers*, 103 Tenn. 99 \(46 L.R.A. 561\). If the statute of 1899 is constitutional -- and its constitutionality is not questioned -- it was violated by defendants when they made the arrangement set forth in this opinion. Decisions from other courts based upon statutes either precisely like or similar to our own may be cited to sustain this conclusion. See *San Antonio Gas Co. v. Texas*, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 118; *State v. Ice Co.*, 96 Tex. 461; *Harding v. Glucose Co.*, 182 Ill. 551; *State v. Armour Packing Co.*, 173 Mo. 356 \(61 L.R.A. 464\); *Walsh v. Ass'n of Master Plumbers*, 97 Mo. App. 280.

The decree in this case not only enjoined defendants from continuing the undertaking heretofore described and all similar undertakings, but it also enjoined them "from fixing and regulating, or attempting to fix and regulate, the price of labor employed in installing plumbing supplies and goods in the city of Detroit and its vicinity." This provision goes further than to enjoin defendants from fixing and regulating the price of [***17] labor employed in executing a contract for the installment of supplies unlawfully sold by them. Indeed, if it did not go further than that, [*549] it was unnecessary to insert it in the decree, because such regulation of the price of labor is sufficiently enjoined by other provisions, viz., provisions which have the effect of enjoining defendants from proceeding with their undertaking and with all similar undertakings. The provision in question prevents defendants, as employers of labor, from making an agreement fixing the wages they will pay their employes for installing supplies. I think it clear that prior to the enactment of the statute of 1899 courts had no authority, at the instance of a representative of the people, to enjoin the making of such agreements. See Beck v. Protective Union, 118 Mich. 516, 517 \(42 L.R.A. 407\). They have now, then, no such authority unless such agreements are forbidden by that statute. If that statute forbids such agreements, it follows that it forbids all agreements fixing and regulating the price of labor, and that associations, whether of employees or employers, when endeavoring to fix and regulate the price of labor, are engaged [***18] in a criminal undertaking. Does that statute forbid such agreements? HN3 In general, it may be said that the statute forbids certain contracts and certain defined trusts. An agreement fixing and regulating the price of labor is not one of these contracts, nor one of these trusts. See [Cleland v. Anderson, 66 Neb. 258. If it may be said that an agreement fixing the price of labor violates the statute when it forms part of an undertaking which the statute forbids, it must also be said that it does not violate the statute unless it does form part of some undertaking forbidden by the statute. As defendants are, by the provision under consideration, enjoined from [**45] fixing or regulating the price of labor when it does not form a part of an undertaking forbidden by the statute, they are entitled to have that provision eliminated from the decree.

This suit is brought "by Ormond F. Hunt, prosecuting attorney in and for the county of Wayne, State of Michigan, who sues for the people of the State of Michigan." Defendants insist that the prosecuting attorney has no right to maintain this suit. They insist that he had no [*550] such right before the statute of 1899 was [***19] enacted, and that section 2 of that act gives him such right only in cases where the law is violated by some association incorporated under the laws of this State. If we assume that defendants are right in this contention, it by no means follows that the decree should be reversed. The real complainant in this case is the people of the State of Michigan. The prosecuting attorney of Wayne county is merely the representative of the people. Except in form, this is a suit by the people of the State of Michigan, by Ormond F. Hunt, their attorney. The complaint, then, of defendants is this: That the prosecuting attorney who instituted this suit did not have authority or did not prove his authority to institute it. Had this objection been made in the lower court, it may be assumed that it would have been obviated either by an amendment or by an exhibition of proof of authority. No such objection was made until the case was heard in this court. It may therefore be said that, as the objection is only a formal one, raised for the first time in this court, it should be disregarded. Wright v. Wright, 37 Mich. 55.

The decree appealed from will be modified as heretofore indicated, [***20] and, as so modified, it will be affirmed.

MOORE, C.J., and McALVAY, GRANT, and HOOKER, JJ., concurred.

Bobbs-Merrill Co. v. Straus

Circuit Court, S.D. New York

July 11, 1905

No Number in Original

Reporter

139 F. 155 *; 1905 U.S. App. LEXIS 4678 **

BOBBS-MERRILL CO. v. STRAUS et al.

Core Terms

---

dealers, publisher, discount, notice, net price, booksellers, fiction, prices, retail price, retail, purchaser, copies, printed, patent, percent, selling, associations, license, cutting, member of the association, cases, juvenile, monopoly, rules and regulations, conditions, jobbers, restrained, patentee, machine, licensee

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Assignments

Governments > Police Powers

Patent Law > Ownership > Patents as Property

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Licenses

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > General Overview

Patent Law > Ownership > Conveyances > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

HN1 [L] Ownership & Transfer of Rights, Assignments

The general rule is absolute freedom in the use or sale of rights under the patent laws of the United States. The very object of these laws is monopoly, and the rule is, with few exceptions, that any conditions which are not in their very nature illegal with regard to this kind of property, imposed by the patentee and agreed to by the licensee for the right to manufacture or use or sell the article, will be upheld by the courts. The fact that the conditions in the contracts keep up the monopoly or fix prices does not render them illegal. That reasoning is employed as to patent rights.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Assignments

139 F. 155, *155L<sup>A</sup>905 U.S. App. LEXIS 4678, **4678

Patent Law > Ownership > Conveyances > General Overview

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > General Overview

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Infringing Acts > Intent & Knowledge

HN2 Ownership & Transfer of Rights, Assignments

The owner of a patent, who manufactures and sells the patented article, may reserve to himself, as an ungranted part of his monopoly, the right to fix and control the prices at which jobbers or dealers buying from him may sell to the public, and a dealer, who buys from a jobber with knowledge of such reservation and resells in violation of it, is an infringer of the patent.

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Presumptions > General Overview

Estate, Gift & Trust Law > ... > Will Contests > Testamentary Formalities > Publication

HN3 Civil Infringement Actions, Presumptions

It is an infringement to do any of the following acts in respect of a copyrighted work: In the case of books, without the consent of the proprietor, in writing, signed in the presence of two witnesses (1) to print or publish; (2) to dramatize or translate; (3) to import; (4) knowingly to sell or expose for sale copies unlawfully made or imported.

Contracts Law > Breach > Breach of Contract Actions > General Overview

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Presumptions > General Overview

HN4 Breach, Breach of Contract Actions

If buyer has agreed that he will not sell a copyright for certain purposes or to certain persons, and violates his agreement and sells to an innocent purchaser, he can be punished for a violation of his agreement; but neither is guilty under the copyright statutes of an infringement. If the new purchaser participates in the fraud, he may also share in the punishment.

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Presumptions > General Overview

Copyright Law > Scope of Copyright Protection > Assignments & Transfers > General Overview

Copyright Law > Scope of Copyright Protection > Ownership Interests > General Overview

Copyright Law > Scope of Copyright Protection > Ownership Interests > Initial Ownership

HN5 Civil Infringement Actions, Presumptions

The owner of the copyright may not be able to transfer the entire property in one of his copies and retain for himself an incidental power to authorize a sale of that copy, or, rather, the power of prohibition on the owner that he shall not sell it, holding that much, as a modicum of his former estate, to be protected by the copyright statute; and yet he may be entirely able, so long as he retains the ownership of a particular copy for himself, to find abundant protection under the copyright statute for his then incidental power of controlling its sale. This copyright incident of control over the sale, as contradistinguished from the power of sale incident to ownership in all property, copyrighted articles, like any other, is a thing that belongs alone to the owner of the copyright itself, and as to him only so long as and to the extent that he owns the particular copies involved. Whenever he parts with that ownership, the ordinary incident of alienation attaches to the particular copy parted with in favor of the transferee, and he cannot be deprived of it. This latter incident supersedes the other, swallows it up, and the two cannot coexist in any owner of the copy, except he be the owner at the same time of the copyright; and, they cannot be separated, so that one may remain in the owner of the copyright as a limitation upon or denial of the other in the owner of the copy.

Contracts Law > Personal Property

Copyright Law > ... > Civil Infringement Actions > Presumptions > General Overview

Copyright Law > Scope of Copyright Protection > Assignments & Transfers > General Overview

Copyright Law > Scope of Copyright Protection > Ownership Interests > Initial Ownership

HN6 Contracts Law, Personal Property

The law of copyright also gives privileges to authors and publishers that do not pertain to property which anybody may make and sell if he can; but even under the law of copyright, when the owner of a copyright and of a particular copy of a book to which it pertains has parted with all his title to the book, and has conferred an absolute title to it upon a purchaser, he cannot restrict the right of alienation, which is one of the incidents of ownership in personal property.

Counsel: [**1] Boardman, Platt & Soley (W. H. H. Miller, Albert B. Boardman, and Henry W. Clark, of counsel), for complainant.

Spiegelberg & Wise (John G. Carlisle and Edmond E. Wise, of counsel), for defendants.

Opinion by: RAY

Opinion

---

[*157] RAY, District Judge. The main facts in this case are not disputed. They may be stated as follows:

(1) The Bobbs-Merrill Company, the complainant, is, and at all times mentioned in the bill of complaint was, a corporation duly organized and existing under the laws of the state of Indiana, engaged in the business of publishing and selling books, and having its principal office in the city of Indianapolis, in the state of Indiana.

(2) The complainant is, and at all times mentioned in the bill of complaint was, the owner and proprietor of a book or novel in one volume, entitled "The Castaway," written by Hallie Erminie Rives.

(3) The allegations contained in paragraphs of the bill of complaint numbered III to VI, inclusive, relating to the complainant's compliance with the copyright laws of the United States, are true. Such paragraphs read as follows:

"III. That your orator is the proprietor of a copyright book or novel in one volume, entitled and known [**2] as 'The Castaway.' That the author of said book was Hallie Erminie Rives. That prior to the publication of said book, and prior to the month of May, 1904, the author thereof, said Hallie Erminie Rives, duly sold, assigned, and transferred to your orator all her right, title, interest, and property in and to said book, and your orator thereupon became, and at all times since said sale has been, and still is, the sole and exclusive proprietor and owner thereof.

"IV. That your orator, being then proprietor of said book as aforesaid, and desiring to secure a copyright thereof, before the day of publication of said book duly deposited in the mail within the United States, to wit, in the city of Indianapolis, in the state of Indiana, addressed to the Librarian of Congress, at Washington, District of Columbia, a printed copy of the title of said book, and duly paid to said Librarian of Congress the fees required by law, to wit, fifty cents, for recording said title, and your orator did also, not later than the day of publication of said book in this or any foreign country, to wit, on the 24th day of May, 1904, deposit in the mail within the United States, to wit, in the city of Indianapolis, [**3] in the state of Indiana, addressed to the Librarian of Congress, at Washington, District of Columbia, two copies of said book printed from type set within the limits of the United States.

"V. Your orator is informed and verily believes, and therefore avers, that the Librarian of Congress on the 18th day of May, 1904, duly recorded the name and title of said copyright book in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided.

"VI. That your orator has given due notice and information of its said copyright by inserting and printing in each and every copy of said book published, upon the page immediately following the title-page thereof, the words and figures: 'Copyright 1904. The Bobbs-Merrill Company. May.'"

(4) No copies of "The Castaway" were sold or otherwise issued prior to securing the copyright thereon.

(5) Each and every copy of "The Castaway" printed, published, or issued by complainant contained at the time of such publication and issue the following notice, printed upon the page of the book immediately following the title-page, and just below the statutory copyright notice:

"The price of this book at retail is one dollar net. No dealer is licensed to sell [**4] it at a less price, and a sale at a less price will be treated as an infringement of the copyright.

The Bobbs-Merrill Company." [*158] (6) The defendants in the course of their business procured copies of said book before the commencement of this suit for the purpose of sale at retail. The defendants purchased 90 per cent. of said copies from dealers at wholesale at a reduction from said specified retail price of about 40 per cent., and 10 per cent. of said copies they purchased at retail, paying the full retail price therefor.

(7) Defendants at the time of their purchase of copies of said book knew that said book was a copyright book, and were familiar with the terms of the notice printed in each copy thereof, as described in paragraph 5 of this statement, and knew that this notice was printed in every copy of said book purchased by them.

(8) The wholesale dealers, from whom defendants purchased copies of said book, obtained the same either directly from the complainant or from other wholesale dealers at a discount from the net retail price, and at the time of their purchase knew that said book was a copyright book, and were familiar with the terms of the notice printed [**5] in each copy thereof, as described in paragraph 5 of this statement, and such knowledge was in all wholesale dealers through whom the books passed from the complainant to defendants. But said wholesale dealers were under no agreement or obligation to enforce the observance of the terms of said notice by retail dealers or to restrict their sales to retail dealers who would agree to observe said terms.

(9) The defendants have sold copies of said book at retail at the uniform price of 89 cents a copy, and are still selling, exposing for sale, and offering copies of said book at retail at said price of 89 cents per copy, without the consent of the complainant.

(10) That during the year 1900 a large number of publishers in the state of New York and throughout the states of the United States entered into an agreement for the purpose of maintaining the net retail price of copyrighted books published by any of them as designated by the publisher of each book, and to prevent the sale at retail of any such copyrighted books by any dealer at retail at less than said fixed net retail price. That pursuant to that agreement a membership corporation was formed under the laws of the state of [**6] New York under the name of the "American Publishers' Association," which included among its members the complainant herein and a large majority of the publishers of all books, copyrighted or uncopyrighted, in the state of New York and throughout the United States.

(11) That immediately after the incorporation of said American Publishers' Association a resolution was adopted and its members entered into agreements with each other and with the American Publishers' Association, a copy of which is as follows:

Exhibit A.

"The American Publishers' Association, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York.

"The following plan to correct some of the evils connected with the cutting of prices on copyright books was adopted at the meeting of the American Publishers' Association held February 13, 1901:

"I. That the members of the American Publishers' Association agree that all copyrighted books first issued by them after May 1, 1901, shall be [*159] published at net prices, which it is recommended shall be reduced from the prices at which similar books have been issued heretofore: Provided, however, that there shall be exempt from this agreement all school books, such works of fiction (not juveniles) [**7] and new editions as the individual publisher may desire, books published by subscription and not through the trade, and such other books as are not sold through the trade.

"II. It is recommended that the retail price of a net book, marked 'Net,' be printed on a paper wrapper covering the book.

"III. That the members of the association agree that such net copyrighted books and all other of their books shall be sold by them to those booksellers only who will maintain the retail price of such net copyrighted books for one year, and to those booksellers and jobbers only who will sell their books further to no one known to them to cut such net prices, or whose name has been given to them by the association as one who cuts such prices, or who fails to abide by such fair and reasonable rules and regulations as may be established by local associations as hereinafter provided. A dealer or bookseller may be defined as one who makes it a regular part of his business to sell books and carries stock of them for public sale.

"IV. That the only exception to the rule of maintaining the retail price shall be in the case of libraries, which may be allowed a discount of not more than 10 per [**8] cent. Libraries entitled to this discount may be defined as those libraries to which access is either free or by annual subscription. Book clubs are not to be entitled to discount.

"V. That the association suggests a discount on net copyrighted books of twenty-five per cent. to dealers as a general discount, leaving the question of discount, however, entirely to the individual publisher.

"VI. That after the expiration of a year from the publication of any such net copyrighted book dealers shall not be held to the above restrictions, and may sell such book at a cut price; but if, on learning of such action, the publisher shall desire to buy back at purchase price the copies then remaining in the dealers' hands, they must be so resold to him on demand.

"VII. That when the publisher sells at retail a book published under the rules, it shall be at the retail price, and he shall add the cost of postage or expressage on all books sent out of the city in which the publisher does business.

"VIII. That for the purpose of carrying out the above plan the directors of the association be authorized to establish an office and engage a suitable person as manager, and endeavor to secure [**9] from all dealers in books assent to the above conditions of sale. Under the direction of the board the manager shall investigate all cases of cutting reported, and when directed shall send out notices to the association, jobbers, and the trade of any persons violating the above provisions.

"IX. That it shall be the duty of all members of the association to report immediately to the said office all cases of the cutting of prices which may come to their knowledge.

"X. That the association, through its agents and members, aid in the formation of booksellers' associations in the important centers and cities in the United States, the object of which association shall be to assist the Publishers' Association in maintaining prices on net books as aforesaid, and to establish such lawful rules and regulations respecting the conduct of business in their locality as will tend to secure fair, honorable, and uniform methods of business in each important center or section of the country. That the association pledge itself to support such local associations by every means in its power in maintaining such lawful rules and regulations as may in this way be agreed to.

"XI. That the report, [**10] when adopted by the board of directors, be submitted to the association and voted upon in accordance with the association's rules, article II, section 1."

(12) That thereafter a voluntary association, called the "American Booksellers' Association," was formed, which was intended to and did include a large majority, to wit, about 90 per cent., [*160] both in number and extent of business, of all wholesale and retail book dealers throughout the state of New York and the United States. That the avowed purpose of this association was to co-operate with and assist the American Publishers' Association and its members in the maintenance of the so-called net price or restricted price system for the sale of books at retail, and to supply the American Publishers' Association with the names of booksellers who cut the prices of net price or restricted books at retail, and to refrain from selling such price-cutters, or any individuals, firms, or dealers believed to be price-cutters, any books of any kind, whether copyrighted or uncopiedrighted, at wholesale or at retail prices. That said American Booksellers' Association thereafter at its annual convention in June, 1901, adopted the following [**11] resolution:

Exhibit B.

"Reform Resolution No. 1.

"Whereas, the American Publishers' Association has adopted a net price system and entered into an agreement for its maintainance, by which the members of said association will cut off the supply of all their books, net, copyrighted, or otherwise, to any dealer who fails to maintain the net price of any or all books published under the net price system:

"(1) Now, therefore, be it resolved, that this, the American Booksellers' Association, in convention assembled, accept the said net price system, with the distinct understanding that it is the intention of the American Publishers' Association to include fiction under the net price system as repidly as possible; and

"(2) Furthermore, be it resolved, that all members of the American Booksellers' Association shall give to each of the members of the American Publishers' Association, and to all publishers who co-operate with them in the maintenance of the net price system, our most cordial support; and that to this end we agree not to buy, not to keep in stock, nor to offer for sale, after due notification, the books of any publisher who declines to support the net price system.

[**12] "(3) Furthermore, be it resolved, that we instruct our secretary promptly to notify all members of this association that this resolution is applicable and in force with reference to any publisher who shall have made it manifest that he is unwilling to co-operate with this association, and with the members of the Publishers' Association, in the maintenance of the net price system.

"(4) Furthermore, be it resolved, that this resolution, on being ratified by two-thirds of the members of this association, voting by formal ballot, shall immediately become a law to each and all of the members of this association; and if it shall appear, upon the presentment of any three members of this association, that a member has purchased, put in stock, or offered for sale the books of the publisher who has been formally denounced, such member shall be expelled from membership in this association, and all members of this association shall then and thereafter be restrained from supplying any books to such expelled member at a discount from the usual retail price.

"(5) Furthermore, be it resolved, that all members of this association shall be restrained from furnishing any books at less than the net [**13] or usual retail price to any dealer who shall have been denounced by the Publishers' Association for cutting the price of net books, or for otherwise violating the net price system, and who shall have been therefor cut off by the members of the Publishers' Association from the supply of their books.

"(6) Furthermore, be it resolved, that all members of this association shall endeavor to keep in stock and push the sale of net books so long as they are reasonably in demand, provided such discount is allowed by the publishers to the dealers as will yield them a living profit; and they shall maintain [*161] the net prices of the same in accordance with the terms of the publishers' agreement for the maintenance of the net price system.

"I [or we] vote for the adoption of Reform Resolution No. 1 as above stated.

"[Signed]

Name

"Address "

(13) That thereafter and in pursuance of said agreements neither of said associations nor any of the members thereof, including the complainant, would sell or supply, or sanction the sale or supply, of any books at any price to any dealer in the state of New York, or elsewhere in the United States, whether a member [**14] of said associations or not, and whether said books were copyrighted or not, or were published by any of the members of the said American Publishers' Association or not, who did not maintain the arbitrary net retail price on copyrighted books published by the members of the American Publishers' Association, or would resell or was believed to resell such copyrighted books to any dealers who thereafter sold the same at less than the arbitrary price named by the publisher and maintained pursuant to the rules and agreements of the two associations and their members.

(14) That on or about the 8th day of January, 1902, the plan, resolutions, or agreements of the American Publishers' Association were amended by the addition thereto of the article relating to a certain discount to be allowed from the published price of works of fiction (not net) published by members of the said association, and a change in article 4 relating to discounts to be allowed to libraries, and in article 6, and the omission of article 11 of the original plan. A copy of said resolutions, with the said amended articles indicated by italics, is marked "Exhibit C." Thereafter, on the 27th day of May, 1902, the said [**15] plan, resolutions, or agreements were further amended by the addition to article 4 thereof of a paragraph relating to the sending of a work of fiction postpaid, a copy of which said resolutions as so amended is marked "Exhibit D." That thereafter, and on the 15th day of January, 1903, the said plan, resolutions, and agreements were amended by the addition to article 3 of a paragraph relating to the sale of protected books in combination with a periodical, and in article 12 a paragraph was added relating to an agreement to be entered into by all purchasers of books from the members of the Publishers' Association. A copy of said resolutions as amended is marked "Exhibit E." That thereafter, and on or about the 13th day of February, 1903, the said plan, resolutions, or agreements were again amended as to articles 1 and 4, so as to provide for the exclusion at the option of a publisher of certain copyrighted juvenile books from the class of so-called net publications, and the inclusion of such books in the class of copyrighted works of fiction not net. Article 5 was likewise amended so as to grant libraries a discount on certain juvenile books (not net), a copy of which resolutions or [**16] agreements as amended is marked "Exhibit F." That thereafter, on the 13th day of January, 1904, the said resolutions or agreements were amended as to articles 1 and 5, so as to apply to all juvenile [*162] books, and article 4 thereof was so amended as to provide for the publication and sale of all juvenile books (not net) under the system applying to the publication and sale of copyrighted works of fiction, a copy of which said resolutions or agreements as so amended is marked "Exhibit G."

Exhibit C.

"The American Publishers' Association, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York.

"The following plan to correct evils connected with the cutting of prices on copyright books was adopted at a meeting of the American Publishers' Association held February 13, 1901:

"Amendments referring to fiction were adopted at a meeting held February 8, 1902.

"I. That the members of the American Publishers' Association agree that all copyrighted books first issued by them after May 1, 1901, shall be published at net prices, which it is recommended shall be reduced from the prices at which similar books have been issued heretofore: Provided, however, that there shall be exempt from this agreement all [**17] school books, such works of fiction (not juveniles) and new editions as the individual publisher may desire, books published by subscription and not through the trade, and such other books as are not sold through the trade.

"II. It is recommended that the retail price of a net book, marked 'Net,' be printed on a paper wrapper covering the book.

"III. That the members of the association agree that such net copyrighted books and all others of their books shall be sold by them to those booksellers only who will maintain the retail price of such net copyrighted books for one year, and to those booksellers and jobbers only who will sell their books further to no one known to them to cut such net prices, or whose name has been given to them by the association as one who cuts such prices, or who fails to abide by such fair and reasonable rules and regulations as may be established by local associations as hereinafter provided. A dealer or bookseller may be defined as one who makes it a regular part of his business to sell books and carries stock of them for public sale.

"IV. *That the members of the association agree that on all copyrighted works of fiction (not net) published by [**18] them after February 1st, 1902, the greatest discount allowed at retail for one year after publication shall be 28 per cent.; and all the rules for the protection of net books shall apply to the protection of fiction to this extent. The conditions governing the sale of fiction are such that the association does not attempt to fix a uniform price at which works of fiction (not net) shall be sold, but only to name a maximum discount, which, however, it is hoped will rarely be given.*

"V. The only exceptions to the foregoing rules shall be in the case of libraries, which may be allowed a discount of not more than 10 per cent. on net books and 33 1-3 per cent. on fiction. Libraries entitled to these discounts may be defined as those libraries to which access is either free or by annual subscription. Book clubs are not to be entitled to discount on net books, nor to any special discount on fiction.

"VI. That the association suggests a discount on net copyrighted books of twenty-five per cent. to dealers as a general discount, leaving the question of discount, however, entirely to the individual publisher.

"VII. That after the expiration of a year from the publication of [**19] any copyrighted books issued under these regulations dealers shall not be held to the above restrictions, and may sell such book at a cut price; but if, on learning of such action, the publisher shall desire to buy back at purchase price the copies then remaining in the dealers' hands, they must be so resold to him on demand.

"VIII. That when the publisher sells at retail a net book published under the rules, it shall be at the retail price, and he shall add the cost of postage or expressage on all books sent out of the city in which the publisher does business.

"IX. That for the purpose of carrying out the above plan the directors of the association be authorized to establish an office and engage a suitable [*163] person as manager, and endeavor to secure from all dealers in books assent to the above conditions of sale. Under the direction of the board the manager shall investigate all cases of cutting reported, and when directed shall send out notices to the association, jobbers, and the trade of any persons violating the above provisions.

"X. That it shall be the duty of all members of the association to report immediately to the said office all cases of the [**20] cutting of prices which may come to their knowledge.

"XI. That the association, through its agents and members, aid in the formation of booksellers' associations in the important centers and cities in the United States, the object of which associations shall be to assist the Publishers' Association in maintaining prices on net books as aforesaid, and to establish such lawful rules and regulations respecting the conduct of business in their locality as will tend to secure fair, honorable, and uniform methods of business in each important center or section of the country. That the association pledge itself to support such local associations by every means in its power in maintaining such lawful rules and regulations as may in this way be agreed to."

Exhibit D.

"The American Publishers' Association, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York.

"The following plan to correct evils connected with the cutting of prices on copyright books was adopted at a meeting of the American Publishers' Association held February 13, 1901:

"Amendments referring to fiction were adopted at meetings held January 8, 1902, and May 27, 1902.

"I. That the members of the American Publishers' Association agree that [**21] all copyrighted books first issued by them after May 1, 1901, shall be published at net prices, which it is recommended shall be reduced from the prices at which similar books have been issued heretofore: Provided, however, that there shall be exempt from this agreement all school books, such works of fiction (not juveniles) and new editions as the individual publisher may desire, books published by subscription and not through the trade, and such other books as are not sold through the trade.

"II. It is recommended that the retail price of a net book, marked 'Net,' be printed on a paper wrapper covering the book.

"III. That the members of the association agree that such net copyrighted books and all others of their books shall be sold by them to those booksellers only who will maintain the retail price of such net copyrighted books for one year, and to those booksellers and jobbers only who will sell their books further to no one known to them to cut such net prices, or whose name has been given to them by the association as one who cuts such prices, or who fails to abide by such fair and reasonable rules and regulations as may be established by local associations as hereinafter [**22] provided. A dealer or bookseller may be defined as one who makes it a regular part of his business to sell books and carries stock of them for public sale.

"IV. That the members of the association agree that on all copyrighted works of fiction (not net) published by them after February 1st, 1902, the greatest discount allowed at retail for one year after publication shall be 28 per cent.; and all the rules for the protection of net books shall apply to the protection of fiction to this extent. The conditions governing the sale of fiction are such that the association does not attempt to fix a uniform price at which works of fiction (not net) shall be sold, but only to name a maximum discount, which, however, it is hoped will rarely be given.

"When a work of fiction published under this rule is sent postpaid, the price to the purchaser shall be not less than the minimum price plus the postage.

"V. The only exceptions to the foregoing rules shall be in the case of libraries, which may be allowed a discount of not more than 10 per cent. on net books and 33 1/3 per cent. on fiction. Libraries entitled to these discounts may be defined as those libraries to which access is either [**23] free or by annual subscription. Book clubs are not to be entitled to discount on net books, nor to any special discount on fiction.

[*164] "VI. That the association suggests a discount on net copyrighted books of 25 per cent. to dealers as a general discount, leaving the question of discount, however, entirely to the individual publisher.

"VII. That after the expiration of a year from the publication of any copyrighted book issued under these regulations, dealers shall not be held to the above restrictions, and may sell such book at a cut price; but if, on learning of such action, the publisher shall desire to buy back at purchase price the copies then remaining in the dealers' hands, they must be resold to him on demand.

"VIII. That when the publisher sells at retail a net book published under the rules, it shall be at the retail price, and he shall add the cost of postage or expressage on all books sent out of the city in which the publisher does business.

"IX. That for the purpose of carrying out the above plan the directors of the association be authorized to establish an office and engage a suitable person as manager, and endeavor to secure from all dealers in [**24] books assent to the above conditions of sale. Under the direction of the board the manager shall investigate all cases of cutting reported, and when directed shall send out notices to the association, jobbers, and the trade of any persons violating the above provisions.

"X. That it shall be the duty of all members of the association to report immediately to the said office all cases of the cutting of prices which may come to their knowledge.

"XI. That the association, through its agents and members, aid in the formation of booksellers' associations in the important centers and cities in the United States, the object of which associations shall be to assist the Publishers' Association in maintaining prices on net books as aforesaid, and to establish such lawful rules and regulations respecting the conduct of business in their locality as will tend to secure fair, honorable, and uniform methods of business in each important center or section of the country. That the association pledge itself to support such local associations by every means in its power in maintaining such lawful rules and regulations as may in this way be agreed to."

Exhibit E.

"The American Publishers' [**25] Association, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York.

"The following plan to correct evils connected with the cutting of prices on copyright books was adopted at a meeting of the American Publishers' Association held February 13, 1901:

"Amendments referring to fiction were adopted at meeting held January 15, 1903.

"I. That the members of the American Publishers' Association agree that all copyrighted books first issued by them after May 1, 1901, shall be published at net prices, which it is recommended shall be reduced from the prices at which similar books have been issued heretofore: Provided, however, that there shall be exempt from this agreement all school books, such works of fiction (not juveniles) and new editions as the individual publisher may desire, books published by subscription and not through the trade, and such other books as are not sold through the trade.

"II. It is recommended that the retail price of a net book, marked 'Net,' be printed on a paper wrapper covering the book.

"III. That the members of the association agree that such net copyrighted books and all others of their books shall be sold by them to those booksellers only who will maintain the retail price [**26] of such net copyrighted books for one year, and to those booksellers and jobbers only who will sell their books further to no one known to them to cut such net prices, or whose name has been given to them by the association as one who cuts such prices, or who fails to abide by such fair and reasonable rules and regulations as may be established by local associations as hereinafter provided. A dealer or bookseller may be defined as one who makes it a regular part of his business to sell books and carries stock of them for public sale.

"It is further agreed by the members of the association that they will not themselves offer, nor sell their books to any one who offers, protected [*165] books in combination with a periodical at less than the trade subscription price of such periodical, plus the net or minimum retail price of the book.

"IV. That the members of the association agree that on all copyrighted works of fiction (not net) published by them after February 1st, 1902, the greatest discount allowed at retail for one year after publication shall be 28 per cent.; and all the rules for the protection of net books shall apply to the protection of fiction to this extent. The [**27] conditions governing the sale of fiction are such that the association does not attempt to fix a uniform price at which works of fiction (not net) shall be sold, but only to name a maximum discount, which, however, it is hoped will rarely be given. When a work of fiction published under this rule is sent postpaid, the price to the purchaser shall be not less than the minimum price plus the postage.

"V. The only exceptions to the foregoing rules shall be in the case of libraries, which may be allowed a discount of not more than 10 per cent. on net books and 33 1/3 per cent. on fiction. Libraries entitled to these discounts may be defined as those libraries to which access is either free or by annual subscription. Book clubs are not to be entitled to discount on net books, nor to any special discount on fiction.

"VI. That the association suggests a discount on net copyrighted books of 25 per cent. to dealers as a general discount, leaving the question of discount, however, entirely to the individual publisher.

"VII. That after the expiration of a year from the publication of any copyrighted book issued under these regulations, dealers shall not be held to the above restrictions, [**28] and may sell such book at a cut price; but if, on learning of such action, the publisher shall desire to buy back at purchase price the copies then remaining in the dealers' hands, they must be so resold to him on demand.

"VIII. That when the publisher sells at retail a net book published under the rules, it shall be at the retail price, and he shall add the cost of postage or expressage on all books sent out of the city in which the publisher does business.

"IX. That for the purpose of carrying out the above plan the directors of the association be authorized to establish an office and engage a suitable person as manager, and endeavor to secure from all dealers in books assent to the above conditions of sale. Under the direction of the board the manager shall investigate all cases of cutting reported, and when directed shall send out notices to the association, jobbers, and the trade of any persons violating the above provisions.

"X. That it shall be the duty of all members of the association to report immediately to the said office all cases of the cutting of prices which may come to their knowledge.

"XI. That the association, through its agents and members, aid in the [**29] formation of booksellers' associations in the important centers and cities in the United States, the object of which associations shall be to assist the Publishers' Association in maintaining prices on net books as aforesaid, and to establish such lawful rules and regulations respecting the conduct of business in their locality as will tend to secure fair, honorable, and uniform methods of business in each important center or section of the country. That the association pledge itself to support such local associations by every means in its power in maintaining such lawful rules and regulations as may in this way be agreed to.

"XII. That in making sales and contracts of sales of their books involving future delivery, members shall stipulate that such delivery is contingent on the observance by the purchaser of the rules of the association."

Exhibit F.

"The American Publishers' Association, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York.

"Plan as Amended to March 4th, 1903.

"The following plan to correct evils connected with the cutting of prices on copyright books was adopted at a meeting of the American Publishers' Association held February 13, 1901:

"Amendments referring to fiction, juveniles, [**30] and other matters were adopted at later meetings.

[*166] "Special attention is called to changes in the following sections: 1, 3 (last paragraph), 4, 5, and 12.

"I. That the members of the American Publishers' Association agree that all copyrighted books first issued by them after May 1, 1901, shall be published at net prices, which it is recommended shall be reduced from the prices at which similar books have been issued heretofore: Provided, however, that there shall be exempt from this agreement all school books, books published by subscription and not through the trade, such other books as are not sold through the trade; also, at the desire of the individual publisher, any new editions, any work of fiction (not juveniles), or any juveniles of the class that may be described as board books, flat picture books, or toy books.

"II. It is recommended that the retail price of a net book, marked 'Net,' be printed on a paper wrapper covering the book.

"III. That the members of the association agree that such net copyrighted books and all others of their books shall be sold by them to those booksellers only who will maintain the retail price of such net copyrighted books [**31] for one year, and to those booksellers and jobbers only who will sell their books further to no one known to them to cut such net prices, or whose name has been given to them by the association as one who cuts such prices, or who fails to abide by such fair and reasonable rules and regulations as may be established by local associations as hereafter provided. A dealer or bookseller may be defined as one who makes it a regular part of his business to sell books and carries stock of them for public sale.

"It is further agreed by the members of the association that they will not themselves offer, nor sell their books to any one who offers, protected books in combination with a periodical at less than the trade subscription price of such periodical, plus the net or minimum retail price of the book.

"IV. That the members of the association agree that on all copyrighted works of fiction (not net) published by them after February 1st, 1902, and on all juvenile board books, flat picture books, or toy books (not net), published after March 1st, 1903, the greatest discount allowed at retail for one year after publication shall be 28 per cent.; and all the rules for the protection of net [**32] books shall apply to this extent to the protection of fiction and juvenile books published on the same basis as fiction. The conditions governing the sale of fiction are such that the association does not attempt to fix a uniform price at which works of fiction (not net) shall be sold, but only to name a maximum discount, which, however, it is hoped will rarely be given.

"V. The only exceptions to the foregoing rules shall be in the case of libraries, which may be allowed a discount of not more than 10 per cent. on net books and 33 1/3 per cent. on fiction and juvenile board books, flat picture books, or toy books (not net). Libraries entitled to these discounts may be defined as those libraries to which access is either free or by annual subscription. Book clubs are not to be entitled to discount on net books, nor to any special discount on fiction.

"VI. That the association suggests a discount on net copyrighted books of twenty-five per cent. to dealers as a general discount, leaving the question of discount, however, entirely to the individual publisher.

"VII. That after the expiration of a year from the publication of any copyrighted book issued under these regulations, [**33] dealers shall not be held to the above restrictions, and may sell such book at a cut price; but if, on learning of such action, the publisher shall desire to buy back at purchase price the copies then remaining in the dealers' hands, they must be so resold to him on demand.

"VIII. That when the publisher sells at retail a net book published under the rules, it shall be at the retail price; and he shall add the cost of postage or expressage on all books sent out of the city in which the publisher does business.

"IX. That for the purpose of carrying out the above plan the directors of the association be authorized to establish an office and engage a suitable person as manager, and endeavor to secure from all dealers in books assent to the above conditions of sale. Under the direction of the board the manager shall investigate all cases of cutting reported, and, when directed, shall send out notices to the association, jobbers, and the trade of any persons violating the above provisions.

[*167] "X. That it shall be the duty of all members of the association to report immediately to the said office all cases of the cutting of prices which may come to their knowledge.

[**34] "XI. That the association through its agents and members aid in the formation of booksellers' associations in the important centers and cities in the United States, the object of which associations shall be to assist the Publishers' Association in maintaining prices on net books as aforesaid, and to establish such lawful rules and regulations respecting the conduct of business in their locality as will tend to secure fair, honorable, and uniform methods of business in each important centre or section of the country. That the association pledge itself to support such local associations by every means in its power in maintaining such lawful rules and regulations as may in this way be agreed to.

"XII. That in making sales and contracts of sales of their books involving future delivery, members shall stipulate that such delivery is contingent on the observance by the purchaser of the rules of the association.

"Dated March, 1903."

Exhibit G.

"The American Publishers' Association, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York.

"Plan as Amended to January 14th, 1904.

"The following plan to correct evils connected with the cutting of prices on copyright books was adopted at a meeting of the American [**35] Publishers' Association held February 13, 1901:

"Amendments referring to fiction, juveniles, and other matters were adopted at later meetings.

"Special attention is called to changes in the following sections: 1, 3 (last paragraph), 4, 5, and 12.

"I. That the members of the American Publishers' Association agree that all copyrighted books first issued by them after May 1, 1901, shall be published at net prices, which it is recommended shall be reduced from the prices at which similar books have been issued heretofore: Provided, however, that there shall be exempt from this agreement all school books, books published by subscription and not through the trade, such other books as are not sold through the trade; also, at the desire of the individual publisher, any new editions, any work of fiction, or any juvenile.

"II. It is recommended that the retail price of a net book, marked 'Net,' be printed on a paper wrapper covering the book.

"III. That the members of the association agree that such net copyrighted books and all others of their books shall be sold by them to those booksellers only who will maintain the retail price of such net copyrighted books for one year, and [**36] to those booksellers and jobbers only who will sell their books further to no one known to them to cut such net prices, or whose name has been given to them by the association as one who cuts such prices, or who fails to abide by such fair and reasonable rules and regulations as may be established by local associations as hereinafter provided. A dealer or bookseller may be defined as one who makes it a regular part of his business to sell books and carries stock of them for public sale.

"It is further agreed by the members of the association that they will not themselves offer, nor sell their books to any one who offers, protected books in combination with a periodical at less than the trade subscription price of such periodical, plus the net or minimum retail price of the book.

"IV. That the members of the association agree that on all copyrighted works of fiction (not net) published by them after February 1st, 1902, and on all juvenile books (not net), published after April 1st, 1904, the greatest discount allowed at retail for one year after publication shall be 28 per cent.; and all the rules for the protection of net books shall apply to this extent to the protection of [**37] fiction and juvenile books published on the same basis as fiction. The conditions governing the sale of fiction are such that the association does not attempt to fix a uniform price at which works of fiction (not net) shall be sold, but only to name a maximum discount, which, however, it is hoped will rarely be given.

[*168] "V. The only exceptions to the foregoing rules shall be in the cases of libraries, which may be allowed a discount of not more than 10 per cent. on net books and 33 1/3 per cent. on fiction and juvenile books (not net). Libraries entitled to these discounts may be defined as those libraries to which access is either free or by annual subscription. Book clubs are not to be entitled to discounts on net books, nor to any special discount on fiction or juvenile books.

"VI. That the association suggests a discount on net copyrighted books of twenty-five per cent. to dealers as a general discount, leaving the question of discount, however, entirely to the individual publisher.

"VII. That after the expiration of a year from the publication of any copyrighted book issued under these regulations, dealers shall not be held to the above restrictions, and [**38] may sell such book at a cut price; but if, on learning of such action, the publisher shall desire to buy back at purchase price the copies then remaining in the dealers' hands, they must be so resold to him on demand.

"VIII. That when the publisher sells at retail a net book published under the rules, it shall be at the retail price; and he shall add the cost of postage or expressage on all books sent out of the city in which the publisher does business.

"IX. That for the purpose of carrying out the above plan the directors of the association be authorized to establish an office and engage a suitable person as manager, and endeavor to secure from all dealers in books assent to the above conditions of sale. Under the direction of the board, the manager shall investigate all cases of cutting reported, and when directed shall send out notices to the association, jobbers, and the trade of any persons violating the above provisions.

"X. That it shall be the duty of all members of the association to report immediately to the said office all cases of the cutting of prices which may come to their knowledge.

"XI. That the association through its agents and members aid in the formation [**39] of booksellers' associations in the important centers and cities in the United States, the object of which associations shall be to assist the Publishers' Association in maintaining prices on net books as aforesaid, and to establish such lawful rules and regulations respecting the conduct of business in their locality as will tend to secure fair, honorable, and uniform methods of business in each important center or section of the country. That the association pledge itself to support such local associations by every means in its power in maintaining such lawful rules and regulations as may in this way be agreed to.

"XII. That in making sales and contracts of sales of their books involving future delivery, members shall stipulate that such delivery is contingent on the observance by the purchaser of the rules of the association."

(15) That thereafter, and during the month of February, 1904, in an action brought in the Supreme Court of the state of New York, it being a court of competent jurisdiction, wherein the defendants in this action were plaintiffs and the American Publishers' Association and the American Booksellers' Association and such of their respective members as were [**40] within the jurisdiction of the said court were made parties defendant, the New York Court of Appeals, being the highest appellate court in the said state, rendered its decision that the combinations and agreements described in paragraphs 10, 11, 12, and 14 of this statement were unlawful and void, and contrary to the statute law and public policy of the state of New York, and more especially of the statute law of said state known as chapter 690, p. 1514, of the Laws of 1899, which said law, for the purposes of this statement, is made part of the record. The prevailing opinion of the court, to which reference is hereby made for the [*169] true construction of said decision, reported 177 N.Y. 473, 69 N.E. 1107, 64 L.R.A. 701, 101 Am. St. Rep. 819, is as follows:

"Isidore Straus et al., Composing the Firm of R.H. Macy & Company, Respondents, v. American Publishers' Association et al., Appellants.

"Monopolies -- An Agreement Which in Effect Prevents the Sale of Uncopyrighted Books in the State is Illegal under the Anti-Monopoly Act (Laws 1899, c. 690). An agreement between publishers representing ninety-five per cent. of the books published in the United States, and ninety per [**41] cent. of the business done in the book trade, that all copyrighted books published by any of them after a specified date should be published and sold at retail at net prices; that such net copyrighted books, and all other books, whether copyrighted or not, or whether published by them or not, should be sold by them to those booksellers and jobbers only who would maintain the retail net price of such net copyrighted books for one year, and to those booksellers and jobbers only who would furthermore sell books at wholesale to no one known to them to cut or sell at a lower figure than such net retail price, or whose name would be given to them by the association as one who cut such prices; and that evidence shall not be required by the bookseller or jobber in order to restrain him from selling to one who has been blacklisted, but that all that shall be required to govern his action and to prevent him from selling to such persons shall be that the name has been given to him by the association as one who cuts such net prices -- is an agreement which, while purporting to secure to the owner and publisher of copyrighted books the monopoly permitted by federal law, may, and as practically [**42] construed by the parties does, operate in fact so as to prevent the sale of books of any kind or at any price to any dealer who resells, or is suspected of reselling, copyrighted books at less than the arbitrary net price, whether such dealer be a member of the association or not. Such an agreement undertakes to interfere with the free pursuit in this state of a lawful business in which a monopoly is not secured by the federal statute, viz., that of dealing in books which are not protected by copyright. It is, therefore, in violation of chapter 690, p. 1514, of the Laws of 1899, enacted to prevent monopolies in articles or commodities of common use, and to prohibit restraint of trade and commerce.

" *Straus v. American Publishers' Ass'n, 85 App. Div. 446, 83 N.Y. Supp. 271*, affirmed.

(Argued January 19, 1904; decided February 23, 1904.)

"Appeal, by permission, from an order of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court in the First Judicial Department, entered July 30, 1903, which reversed an interlocutory judgment of Special Term sustaining demurrer to the complaint.

"Stephen H. Olin and Thaddeus D. Kenneson, for appellants. John G. Carlisle and Edmond E. Wise, for respondents.

[**43] "Parker, C.J. Chief Justice Marshall said long ago, in *Grant v. Raymond, 6 Pet. 217, 241, 8 L. Ed. 376*: 'To promote the progress of useful arts is the interest and policy of every enlightened government. It entered into the views of the framers of our Constitution, and the power "to promote the progress of science and useful arts, by securing for limited times to authors and inventors, the exclusive right to their respective writings and discoveries," is among those expressly given to Congress. * * * It is the reward stipulated for the advantages derived by the public from the exertions of the individual, and is intended as a stimulus to those exertions. The laws which are passed to give effect to this purpose ought, we think, to be construed in the spirit in which they have been made, and to execute the contract fairly on the part of the United States, where the full benefit has been actually received, if this can be done without transcending the intention of the statute or countenancing acts which are fraudulent or may prove mischievous. The public yields nothing which it has not agreed to yield. It receives all which it has contracted to receive. The full benefit of the [**44] discovery after its enjoyment by the discoverer for 14 years is preserved, and for his exclusive enjoyment of it during that time the public faith is pledged.' That case and many [*170] others were considered recently by the United States Supreme Court in Bement v. National Harrow Co., 186 U.S. 70, *22 Sup. Ct. 747, 46 L. Ed. 1058*, Mr. Justice Peckham writing. After an examination of the cases which may be said to restrict the exceptions which grow out of a proper exercise of the police power of the state, of which *Patterson v. Kentucky, 97 U.S. 501, 24 L. Ed. 1115*, is an illustration, he says (186 U.S. 91, *22 Sup. Ct. 755, 46 L. Ed. 1058*): 'Notwithstanding these exceptions, HN1[] the general rule is absolute freedom in the use or sale of rights under the patent laws of the United States. The very object of these laws is monopoly, and the rule is, with few exceptions, that any conditions which are not in their very nature illegal with regard to this kind of property, imposed by the patentee and agreed to by the licensee for the right to manufacture or use or sell the article, will be upheld by the courts. The fact that the conditions in the contracts keep up the monopoly or fix prices [**45] does not render them illegal.' That reasoning is employed as to patent rights. It is equally applicable to copyrights, the protection of which was perhaps the leading object of the association and agreement attacked in this action. And it points to the principle underlying the decision in the *Park & Sons Co. Case, 175 N.Y. 1, 67 N.E. 136, 62 L.R.A. 632, 96 Am. St. Rep. 578*, upon which defendants apparently rest their claim that the judgment of the Appellate Division should be reversed. But there is a feature in this case not to be found in that one, and which requires a different judgment than the one rendered therein, which will now be pointed out.

"While the leading object of this association and agreement purports to be to secure to the owner and publisher of copyrighted books that protection which the federal government permits them to enjoy for the reasons stated by Chief Justice Marshall (supra), it does not stop there. It also affects the right of a dealer to sell books not copyrighted at the price he chooses, or to sell at all, if he fails to comply with the rules of the association. A combination creating a monopoly of the sale of books not protected by copyright offends [**46] against the law of this state as much as if it related to bluestone (Cummings v. Stone Co., 164 N.Y. 401, 58 N.E. 525, 52 L.R.A. 262, 79 Am. St. Rep. 655), or to envelopes (Cohen v. Envelope Co., 166 N.Y. 292, 59 N.E. 906); and according to this complaint, which must be accepted as true on this review, such an outcome is not only possible, but probable. But it is not of moment whether such a result is probable or not; for the test to be applied is, what may be done under the agreement? Reference to the complaint makes it clear that the association has undertaken to provide for the practical exclusion from the business of selling books not protected by copyright all who refuse to be bound by the rules of the association; and it appears from the complaint that the practical construction given to this agreement by those operating together under it is that, if a dealer is suspected of selling copyrighted books at less than the arbitrary net price, it is quite sufficient to exclude him from selling books altogether. The agreement nowhere suggests that it is the object of the association to control the sale of books not protected by copyright. Indeed, the object of the association seems [**47] to be merely to protect the copyrighted books. But while the other part of the scheme is apparently sought to be hidden, it is after all uncovered by the clauses authorizing the exclusion of any members of the association, or those who refuse to be bound by its rules, from selling books of any description. The fifteenth paragraph of the complaint alleges 'that during the year 1900 a number of prominent publishers, including defendants, hereinbefore described as publishers, for the purpose of securing to themselves an unreasonable and extortionate profit, and at the same time with intent to prevent competition in the sale of books, and for the purpose of establishing and maintaining the prices of all books published by them, or any of them, and all books dealt in by them, or any of them, and preventing competition in the sale thereof, unlawfully, illegally, and contrary to the public policy and the statutes of the state of New York, * * * combined and associated themselves together,' etc. The sixteenth paragraph refers to the method of organization, and the fact of the adoption of a resolution and an agreement to carry out their object, while the seventeenth states the nature of [**48] the agreement as follows: 'That [*171] as a part of said unlawful scheme and combination the members of said association agreed that such net copyrighted books, and all other books, whether copyrighted or not, or whether published by them or not, should be sold by them to those booksellers only who would maintain the retail net price of such net copyrighted books for one year, and to those booksellers and jobbers only who would furthermore sell books [the word "copyrighted" is omitted at this point] at wholesale to no one known to them to cut or sell at a lower figure than such net retail price, or whose name would be given to them by the association as one who cut such prices.' It will be seen that, while the leading object of this portion of the agreement apparently is to maintain the retail net price of copyrighted books, it operates in fact so as to prevent the sale of books to dealers who sell books of any kind to one who retails copyrighted books at less than the net retail price. And the agreement further provides that evidence shall not be required by the bookseller or jobber in order to restrain him from selling to one who has been blacklisted, but that all that shall [**49] be required to govern his action and to prevent him from selling to such a person shall be that the name has been given to him by the association as one who cuts such net prices. It has been admitted, and must be, that the agreement may be so worked out as to deprive a dealer from selling any books whatever, thus breaking up his business.

"But it is said that is only intended as a punishment for one who refuses to be bound by the wishes of the owner of the copyrighted book as to its selling price; in other words, that the association inflicts upon him the penalty of a destruction of his business because of his refusal to abide by the rules of the association. It is, of course, of no consequence how this course of action may be described by those who invented it; for, if it be the fact that the combination which agrees to exclude others from an unprotected business violates the statute, then it matters not what excuse may be offered for it. It is the excuse, not the statute, which must give way. The eighteenth paragraph of the complaint contains what purports to be a practical construction given to this agreement by the members of the association. It states: 'That in pursuance [**50] of said unlawful combination and agreement said American Booksellers' Association and its members have continuously co-operated with and assisted the American Publishers' Association and the members thereof in establishing and maintaining prices of such books, and preventing competition in the supply and sale of the same, and still continue so to do; and plaintiffs say that in compliance with said agreement neither said associations nor any of the members thereof will sell or supply books at any price to any dealer, whether a member of said association or not, and whether such books are copyrighted or not, or are not published by said American Book Publishers' Association or its members, who resells, or is suspected of reselling, such copyrighted books at less than the arbitrary net price fixed by said unlawful combination, nor will the said association nor any of their members sell or supply any books whatever to any one who resells, or is suspected of reselling, such copyrighted books to any dealer who thereafter sells the same at less than such arbitrary net price.' Here, then, we have a practical construction of the agreement, one put upon it by the parties to it; and it is such [**51] a construction as the language employed calls for. And it discloses that the parties who are acting under the agreement assume it to be their right and their duty by virtue of it not to sell or permit to be sold books of any kind or at any price to any dealer 'who resells or is suspected of reselling copyrighted books at less than the arbitrary net price,' whether such dealer be a member of the association or not. The intended effect of this is to prevent any dealer who is even suspected of reselling copyrighted books at less than the net price from obtaining books at any price or on any terms, whether copyrighted or not. And it does not stop there, for the members of the association agree not to supply him any books at any price, whether he resells copyrighted books or not at less than the arbitrary net price, provided he is suspected of selling to any dealer who thereafter sells the same at less than such arbitrary net price. And this means, inasmuch as the members represent 95 per cent. of the publishers and 90 per cent. of the business done in the book trade, that he may be practically driven out of the business if any one chooses to suspect [*172] that a dealer to whom [**52] he has sold books has resold them at less than the price fixed. The members of the association, therefore, have entered into an agreement which by its terms -- as we read it, and as they have construed it in their everyday working under it -- undertakes to interfere with the free pursuit in this state of a lawful business in which any member of the community has a right to engage, a business in which a monopoly is not secured by the federal statutes, namely, that of dealing in books which are not protected by copyrights; and hence it is in violation of chapter 690, p. 1514, Laws 1899, which provides: 'Every contract, agreement, arrangement or combination whereby a monopoly in the manufacture, production or sale in this state of any article or commodity of common use is or may be created, established or maintained, or whereby competition in this state in the supply or price of any such article or commodity is or may be restrained or prevented, or whereby for the purpose of creating, establishing or maintaining a monopoly within this state of the manufacture, production or sale of any such article or commodity, the free pursuit in this state of any lawful business, trade or occupation [**53] is or may be restricted or prevented, is hereby declared to be against public policy, illegal and void.'

"The order should be affirmed, with costs.

"Haight, Martin, Vann, and Werner, JJ., concur with Parker, C.J. Gray and Barrett, JJ., read dissenting opinions.

"Order affirmed."

That the judgment upon this decision was duly adopted by the New York Supreme Court and entered on its records.

(16) That thereafter, and on or about the 13th day of March, 1904, the said resolutions or agreements were amended as to article 3 so as to cover copyrighted books only, and so as to provide for the placing of the seller's name on the cut-off list of the association only under certain changed conditions. A copy of such resolutions as amended, with the words stricken out by said amendment indicated by brackets, and the words thereby added in italics, are hereto annexed and marked "Exhibit H."

Exhibit H.

"The American Publishers' Association, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York.

"Plan as Amended to April 1st, 1904.

"The following plan to correct evils connected with the cutting of prices on copyright books was adopted at a meeting of the American Publishers' Association held February 13, 1901.

[**54] "Amendments referring to fiction, juveniles, and other matters were adopted at later meetings.

"Special attention is called to changes in the following sections: 1, 3, 4, 5, 9, and 12.

"I. That the members of the American Publishers' Association agree that all copyrighted books first issued by them after May 1, 1901, shall be published at net prices, which it is recommended shall be reduced from the prices at which similar books have been issued heretofore: Provided, however, that there shall be exempt from this agreement all school books, books published by subscription and not through the trade, such other books as are not sold through the trade; also, at the desire of the individual publisher, any new editions, any work of fiction, or any juvenile.

"II. It is recommended that the retail price of a net book, marked 'Net,' be printed on a paper wrapper covering the book.

"III. That the members of the association agree that [such net] copyrighted books [and all others of their books] shall be sold by them to those booksellers only who will maintain the retail price of such net copyrighted books for one year, and to those booksellers and jobbers only who will sell their [**55] copyrighted books except at retail [further] to no one who [known to them to] cuts such [*173] net prices [or whose name has been given to them by the association as one who cuts such prices, or who fails to abide by such fair and reasonable rules and regulations as may be established by local associations as hereinafter provided]. A dealer or bookseller may be defined as one who makes it a regular part of his business to sell books and carries stock of them for public sale. It is further agreed by the members of the association that they will not themselves offer, nor sell their copyrighted books to any one who offers, protected books in combination with a periodical at less than the trade subscription price of such periodical, plus the net or minimum retail price of the book.

"IV. That the members of the association agree that on all copyrighted works of fiction (not net) published by them after February 1st, 1902, and on all juvenile books (not net) published after April 1st, 1904, the greatest discount allowed at retail for one year after publication shall be 28 per cent.; and all the rules for the protection of net books shall apply to this extent to [**56] the protection of copyrighted fiction and copyrighted juvenile books published on the same basis as fiction. The conditions governing the sale of fiction are such that the association does not attempt to fix a uniform price at which works of fiction (not net) shall be sold, but only to name a maximum discount, which, however, it is hoped will rarely be given.

"V. The only exceptions to the foregoing rules shall be in cases of libraries, which may be allowed a discount of not more than 10 per cent. on net books and 33 1/3 per cent. on fiction and juvenile books (not net). Libraries entitled to these discounts may be defined as those libraries to which access is either free or by annual subscription. Book clubs are not to be entitled to discount on net books, nor to any special discount on fiction or juvenile books.

"VI. That the association suggests a discount on net copyrighted books of 25 per cent. to dealers as a general discount, leaving the question of discount, however, entirely to the individual publisher.

"VII. That after the expiration of a year from the publication of any copyrighted book issued under these regulations dealers shall not be held to the above restrictions, [**57] and may sell such book at a cut price; but if, on learning of such action, the publisher shall desire to buy back at purchase price the copies then remaining in the dealers' hands, they must be so resold to him on demand.

"VIII. That when the publisher sells at retail a net book published under the rules, it shall be at the retail price, and he shall add the cost of postage or expressage on all books sent out of the city in which the publisher does business.

"IX. That for the purpose of carrying out the above plan the directors of the association be authorized to establish an office and engage a suitable person as manager, and endeavor to secure from all dealers in books assent to the above conditions of sale. Under the direction of the board, the manager shall investigate all cases of cutting reported, and when directed shall send out notices to the association, jobbers, and the trade of any persons violating the above provisions, after giving the person accused of such violation an opportunity to explain his action.

"X. That it shall be the duty of all members of the association to report immediately to the said office all cases of the cutting of prices which may come [**58] to their knowledge.

"XI. That the association, through its agents and members, aid in the formation of booksellers' associations in the important centers and cities in the United States, the object of which associations shall be to assist the Publishers' Association in maintaining prices on net books as aforesaid, and to establish such lawful rules and regulations respecting the conduct of business in their locality as will tend to secure fair, honorable, and uniform methods of business in each important center or section of the country. That the association pledge itself to support such local associations by every means in its power in maintaining such lawful rules and regulations as may in this way be agreed to.

"XII. That in making sales and contracts of sales of their books involving future delivery, members shall stipulate that such delivery is contingent on the observance by the purchaser of the rules of the association."

[*174] That thereafter the American Booksellers' Association passed a so-called Reform Resolution No. 2 in April, 1904, which said resolution is as follows:

Exhibit I.

"Reform Resolution No. 2.

"Whereas, the American Publishers' Association [**59] has adopted a net price system, and entered into an agreement for its maintenance, by which the members of said association will cut off the supply of all their copyrighted books to any dealer who fails to maintain the net price of any or all copyrighted books published under the net price system:

"(1) Now, therefore, be it resolved, that this, the American Booksellers' Association, in convention assembled, accept the said net price system, with the distinct understanding that it is the intention of the American Publishers' Association to include copyrighted fiction under the net price system as rapidly as possible; and

"(2) Furthermore, be it resolved, that all members of the American Booksellers' Association shall give to each of the members of the American Publishers' Association, and to all publishers who co-operate with them in the maintenance of the net price system, our most cordial support; and that to this end we agree not to buy, not to keep in stock, nor to offer for sale, after due notification, the copyrighted books of any publisher who declines to support the net price system.

"(3) Furthermore, be it resolved, that we instruct our secretary promptly to notify all [**60] members of this association that this resolution is applicable and in force with reference to any publisher who shall have made it manifest that he is unwilling to co-operate with this association, and with the members of the Publishers' Association, in the maintenance of the net price system.

"(4) Furthermore, be it resolved, that this resolution, on being ratified by two-thirds of the members of this association, voting by formal ballot, shall immediately become a law to each and all of the members of this association; and if it shall appear upon the presentment of any three members of this association that a member has purchased, put in stock, or offered for sale the copyrighted books of a publisher who has been formally denounced, such member shall be expelled from membership in this association, and all members of this association shall then and thereafter be restrained from supplying any copyrighted books to such expelled member at a discount from the usual retail price.

"(5) Furthermore, be it resolved, that all members of this association shall be restrained from furnishing any copyrighted books at less than the net or usual retail price to any dealer who shall have been [**61] denounced by the Publishers' Association for cutting the price of net copyrighted books, or for otherwise violating the net price system, and who shall have been therefor cut off by the members of the Publishers' Association from the supply of their copyrighted books.

"(6) Furthermore, be it resolved, that all members of this association shall endeavor to keep in stock and push the sale of net copyrighted books so long as they are reasonably in demand, provided such discount is allowed by the publishers to the dealers as will yield them a living profit; and they shall maintain the net prices of the same in accordance with the terms of the publishers' agreement for the maintenance of the net price system.

"I [or we] hereby vote to rescind Reform Resolution No. 1 and to adopt Reform Resolution No. 2.

[Signed]

Name

"Address

"Dated March 10, 1904."

(17) That since May, 1901, the date that the first resolutions and agreements of the American Publishers' Association and the American Booksellers' Association and their respective members went into effect, and until April, 1904, a large majority of all the publishers, in numbers and extent of business, including the complainant [**62] herein, [*175] and a large majority of all the booksellers throughout the United States, consisting of about 90 per cent. both in numbers and in extent of business, have obeyed the rules and regulations of the two associations as from time to time amended. They and each of them refused to sell or sanction the sale of any books of any kind, whether copyrighted or uncopyrighted, whether published by any member of the American Publishers' Association or not, to any dealer throughout the United States who did not maintain at retail the net or restricted price at which each copyrighted book was published under the net price or restricted price system, nor would they sell or sanction the sale of any books of any kind to any one who was known or believed to sell such net or restricted copyrighted books at retail at less than the net or restricted price, nor would they sell or sanction the sale of any books of any kind to any one who sold books of any kind to a price-cutter on copyrighted books, or who was known or believed to supply a price-cutter with any books of any kind; and when any dealer or person sold any net price books or restricted price books at less than the net or restricted [*63] price, or any jobber or wholesaler supplied a price-cutter with any books of any kind, or was known or believed to so supply him, the two associations circulated and published notices warning all persons in the trade, whether members of either of such associations or not, that the book supply of such persons had been cut off pursuant to the rules of the two associations.

(18) That since April, 1904, any dealer who does not maintain the net or restricted price at retail of any copyrighted book published by any member of the Publishers' Association under the net price or restricted price system cannot purchase any copyrighted books of any kind from any of the members of either of the associations at less than the retail price, whether such copyrighted book is published by any of the members of the associations or not, and whether such copyrighted book was published under the net price system or not, or prior thereto.

(19) That the defendants were placed on the cut-off list in May, 1901, because they refused to maintain the net retail price of $1.40 on the copyrighted book "Tarry Thou Till I Come," published by Funk & Wagnalls, but uniformly sold the same at retail at $1.24; and since [**64] said time their name has been circulated monthly upon the list of dealers whose supplies have been cut off under the rules of the two associations, and against whom the trade at large was warned as price-cutters and as coming under the rules of the two associations as dealers to whom books should not be sold, and, furthermore, that books should not be sold to any one who in turn was known or believed to resell the same to these defendants. That since March, 1904, the rules have been amended and relaxed as above set forth, so as to permit dealings with the defendants in uncopyrighted books only. That as to all copyrighted books of any and all kinds the members of said associations are not permitted under the rules to sell to the defendants, nor to sell to any one who resells or is believed to resell to the defendants; and the cut-off lists or blacklists have been published against these defendants and [*176] against such other dealers as have been cut off from their supply of books, copyrighted or otherwise, without any interruption or intermission from the time they were first included in the list of dealers whose supplies were cut off until the present time, without any change [**65] in the method employed prior to the passage of the last amendment, which eliminated uncopyrighted books from the rules.

(20) That such combination and agreement as hereinbefore described are now in force, and that it is intended by the members of the two associations and the two associations to continue them in force.

(21) That the complainant was, since May, 1901, a member of the American Publishers' Association, and a party to all the agreements of said association hereinbefore set forth, and obeyed and lived up to all the rules and regulations of the American Publishers' Association hereinbefore set forth, and published all its books, including "The Castaway," in accordance with the rules and regulations of the association above set forth.

(22) That the members of the said two associations, including the complainant herein, do now, and at all the times herein mentioned have, resided and carried on their business of selling books in many different states, and, in the conduct of their respective business as publishers and wholesale and retail dealers in books, the members of the said two associations, including the complainant, were and now are engaged in the business of purchasing [**66] books, copyrighted and uncopyrighted, from each other and from other persons, in many states other than the states in which the purchasers resided, or now reside, and do business; and all such books were and have been transported, in compliance with the contract of purchase, from the state where such books were purchased to the purchaser, and delivered to the purchaser in the state where he resided, or now resides in and conducts his business, and members of both of such associations, including the complainant herein, also sell and have sold books to many persons who are not members of the said associations, in states other than the ones in which the sellers reside and conduct their business, and all such books were and have been transported, in compliance with the contract of purchase, from one state to another, and then delivered to the purchaser, and all the rules, regulations, and agreements made by the said two associations and its members, including the complainant, as hereinbefore set forth, were intended to be applied and be enforced, and have been and are now applied to and enforced, against all publishers and dealers in books throughout all the states of the United States, [**67] whether such publishers and dealers were or were not members of either of such associations, and whether they purchased books in one state for transportation and delivery in another, or for delivery in the state where purchased.

(23) That the members of the said two associations, including the complainant herein, have heretofore produced, distributed, and sold, and still produce, distribute, and sell, the majority of all books purchased and dealt in throughout the state of New York and all other states and territories of the United States.

[*177] From these facts, which are conceded, it appears that the original purpose of the combination and agreement of the association of publishers, including the complainant, was (1) to maintain the net retail price of all copyrighted books published by the members of such association, or any of them, at such price per book as might be fixed by the publisher of that book, and (2) to prevent the sale at retail of any one or more of such copyrighted books by any dealer in books at retail at a less price per copy than that so fixed. (See finding 10.) Thereupon the persons, firms, and corporations in the combination, including the complainant, [**68] formed a corporation under the name "American Publishers' Association." This corporation included a large majority of all the publishers of all books, both copyrighted and uncopyrighted, in the United States. This corporation, immediately on its organization, adopted the resolution (Exhibit A), and it and its members entered into an agreement with each other, and combined together to do the acts and things, and refrain from doing the acts and things, mentioned in such resolution (Exhibit A). That subdivision or paragraph III thereof was illegal and in restraint of interstate commerce is perfectly plain. (See finding 22.) In fact, the effect of the decision of the Court of Appeals of the state of New York, quoted in the findings (finding 15), is so to declare. By paragraph or subdivision X of such resolution the combination to keep up the price of books and limit and restrain interstate commerce was to be further extended. Thereupon the American Booksellers' Association was formed. (See finding 12.) That the object and purpose as there set forth was illegal cannot be doubted. We now have the combination extended to at least 90 per cent. of the booksellers of the United States, [**69] and including, not only 90 per cent. of all booksellers, but 90 per cent. of all publishers of books. The combination as existing under those resolutions, etc., is not confined to publishers and sellers of copyright books, but includes the publishers and sellers of all books. The declared object and purpose of this combination is (1) to fix the retail price of books; (2) to maintain such retail price; (3) to refuse to furnish or sell any books to any dealer in books who does not maintain such prices -- that is, who sells a book at less than the fixed price; (4) to compel all publishers and dealers in books, in practical effect at least, to come into the combination and enforce and maintain these prices, or be blacklisted and driven from the business; (5) to drive out of the business of general publishing and bookselling all who refuse or neglect to maintain these prices. The freedom of the owner of a book -- any book, except those specially excepted -- duly purchased and paid for to sell the same, soiled or injured, or read and no longer desired, was thus attempted to be destroyed. The right of a retail bookseller to sell to the purchaser of 50 books for his library at a less price [**70] than to the purchaser of one book must not be exercised under the pain and penalty of having his supply of books cut off and of being driven from the business and financially ruined. (See Exhibit B, finding 12.) As to what was done in restraint of interstate commerce, see finding 13.

[*178] An attempt was then made by the American Publishers' Association to eliminate the vicious provision of the written agreements and resolutions adopted by the combination by the substitution of article or subdivision III of Exhibit H. (See finding 16.) This must be read with the words included in brackets left out. The American Booksellers' Association followed, with the adoption of Exhibit I, or "Reform Resolution No. 2." In finding 17 is set out what was done up to April, 1904. What has been done by the combination since April, 1904, is set out in finding 18. As appears from finding 19, the defendants were put on the so-called cut-off list, or blacklist, in May, 1901, when the unmodified agreement or combination was being enforced. Its offense was in refusing to maintain the retail price of a copyrighted book, however. Defendants' name has not been taken from the list at any time. [**71] It is found and conceded that the complainant is living up to and enforcing the agreements, rules, and regulations aforesaid, as modified, of course, and has published and is publishing all its books, including "The Castaway," because thereof, and in accordance and compliance therewith. It follows, necessarily, from the facts recited from 1 to 23, inclusive, and is found as a further fact, that the notice in "The Castaway," on the page following the fly leaf, viz.: "The price of this book at retail is one dollar net. No dealer is licensed to sell it at a less price, and a sale at a less price will be treated as an infringement of the copyright. The Bobbs-Merrill Company" -- is an act done by the complainant, acting in combination with the said American Publishers' Association and the American Booksellers' Association, and the members thereof, in execution of the said combination and agreement, and for the purpose of enforcing same, and because of the said combination and agreement as evidenced by the acts of, and the resolutions and rules adopted and made by, such associations, and agreed to and being executed by the members of said association, including this complainant. It [**72] also follows and is found as a fact that such notice was put in such books, and that its enforcement as an alleged license agreement is attempted, by means of this action, not because the complainant reserved or intended to reserve to itself any interest in said books containing such printed notices, nor because it merely licensed or intended to license the purchasers thereof, who purchased same in the first instance from the complainant, to use or sell such books in a certain way, or on certain terms and conditions, or at certain prices, but as an attempt by complainant, as a member of said American Publishers' Association, to enforce as against this defendant the rules of such associations and combination fixing prices, in an effort to maintain them. It is part of a scheme, and the right of the complainant to maintain this action depends on the validity of that scheme or combination. Is such notice in such books sufficiently explicit in its terms to constitute a license agreement or contract, or any restriction on or modification of the absolute title thereto in the defendant? It does not purport to reserve to the complainant any interest in the book, or any right to control it, [**73] or the action of its owner in his use and disposition of it, except by possible inference.

[*179] In Heaton Peninsular Button-Fastener Co. v. Eureka Specialty Co. et al., 77 Fed. 288, 25 C.C.A. 267, 35 L.R.A. 728, the owner of a patent for fastening buttons to shoes with metallic fasteners made and sold the machines with this notice on a metal plate, so conspicuously fastened thereto that all must see it, and so securely fastened as to constitute substantially an integral part of the machine, viz.:

"Condition of Sale. This machine is sold and purchased to use only with fasteners made by the Peninsular Novelty Company, to whom the title to said machine immediately reverts upon violation of this contract of sale."

Here is a plain, unequivocal statement, one that cannot be misconstrued or misunderstood, that there is a condition attached to the sale, viz., that the machine is to be used with fasteners of a certain make only, and that a use with other fasteners will be such a violation of the agreement as to defeat the title or right given. This was seen by the purchaser, and he took the machine on that condition, and by so doing agreed to the condition and became bound thereby. [**74] He became a mere licensee. He acquired the right to use that machine in a certain way only.

In Cortelyou and Another and Neostyle Company v. Charles Eneu Johnson & Co. (recently decided by this court) 138 Fed. 110, the patented rotary neostyle was sold with this notice on a metal plate firmly and conspicuously attached thereto, viz.:

"License Agreement. This machine is sold by the Neostyle Company and purchased by the user with the express understanding that it is licensed to be used only with stencil paper and ink (both of which are patented), made by the Neostyle Company New York City."

When the purchaser took this machine he assented to this condition and became bound by it, and became a licensee. He is told that he is licensed to use the machine in a certain way and with certain supplies only. Had he been licensed to sell only -- that is, made an agent to sell -- and empowered to sell at a certain fixed price only, it is unquestionably true that, had he violated the agreement by selling at a lower, or even a higher, price, he could have been enjoined. Having the sole power to vend his patented articles, he would undoubtedly have the right to fix the price at which they [**75] should be sold, and stop sales made by his agents and licensees in violation of the authority conferred. This is now settled as to a patent right. Bement v. National Harrow Co., 186 U.S. 70, 88, 92, 93, 22 Sup. Ct. 747, 46 L. Ed. 1058. In the opinion in that case (pages 92-93, 186 U.S., page 755, 22 Sup. Ct. 46 L. Ed. 1058), we find the following:

"The contracts plainly look to the sale, and they also determine the price of the article sold, throughout the United States, as well as to the manufacture in the state of Michigan. As these contracts do, therefore, include interstate commerce within their provisions, we are brought back to the question whether the agreement between these parties with relation to these patented articles is valid within the act of Congress. It is true that it has been held by this court that the act included any restraint of commerce, whether reasonable or unreasonable. United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Association, 166 U.S. 290, 17 Sup. Ct. 540, 41 L. Ed. 1007; United States v. Joint Traffic Association, 171 U.S. 505, 19 Sup. Ct. 25, 43 L. Ed. 259; Addystone Pipe, etc., Company v. United States, 175 U.S. 211, 20 Sup. Ct. 96, 44 L. I<sup>**761</sup> Ed. 136. But that statute clearly does not refer to that kind of a restraint of interstate commerce which may arise from reasonable and legal conditions, imposed upon the assignee or licensee of a patent by the owner thereof, restricting the terms upon which the article may be used and the price to be demanded therefor. * * * The provision in regard to the price at which the licensee would sell the article manufactured under the license was also an appropriate and reasonable condition. It tended to keep up the price of the implements manufactured and sold, but that was only recognizing the nature of the property dealt in, and providing for its value so far as possible. This the parties were legally entitled to do. The owner of a patented article can, of course, charge such price as he may choose, and the owner of a patent may assign it or sell the right to manufacture and sell the article patented upon the condition that the assignee shall charge a certain amount for such article."

In Victor Talking Machine et al. v. The Fair, 123 Fed. 424, 61 C.C.A. 58, the syllabus reads:

HN2 [↑] "The owner of a patent, who manufactures and sells the patented article, may reserve to himself, as an [**77] ungranted part of his monopoly, the right to fix and control the prices at which jobbers or dealers buying from him may sell to the public, and a dealer, who buys from a jobber with knowledge of such reservation and resells in violation of it, is an infringer of the patent."

And in the opinion, after stating that the grant of a patent by its terms covers three separate or separable fields, the learned judge giving the opinion says:

"The field of sale is as much within the monopoly as the others, and so it has been decided. Bement v. National Harrow Co., 186 U.S. 70, 22 Sup. Ct. 747, 46 L. Ed. 1058. And in Edison Phonograph Co. v. Kaufmann (C.C.) 105 Fed. 960, and Same v. Pike (C.C.) 116 Fed. 863, the holdings were that a patentee may reserve to himself, as an ungranted part of his monopoly of sale, the right to fix and control the prices at which jobbers and dealers may sell the patented article to the public, and that whoever without permission enters the reserved portion is an infringer."

In the Victor Talking Machine Case, supra, the notice affixed to the machine read:

"Notice. This machine, which is registered in our books No. , is licensed by us for sale and use [**78] only when sold to the public at a price not less than $ . No license is granted to use this machine when sold at a less price. * * * A purchase is an acceptance of these conditions. All rights revert to the undersigned in the event of any violation."

"Victor Talking Machine Co."

In the Edison Phonograph Company Cases, cited (see supra) by Judge Baker in the Victor Talking Machine Case, supra, there was a restrictive contract, and this was referred to in the following language by a notice on the box containing the instrument when sold, viz.:

"Notice to Dealers. This record is sold subject to restrictions as to the persons to whom and the prices at which it may be sold. Any violation of such restrictions makes the seller or user an infringer of the Edison patents."

A reference to the case in 116 Fed. 863, will show that the restriction was very clear and explicit. The notice in "The Castaway" does not suggest a restriction upon the title to the book, or that the person or persons taking the book for sale are obtaining anything short of an absolute title, and no one would suppose that the [*181] publisher of the book would attempt or assume to fix the price at which [**79] dealers should sell after obtaining absolute title to the book from such publisher. The words, "No dealer is licensed to sell it at a less price," are notice that licensees, not absolute owners, are so restricted. The words, "and a sale at a less price will be treated as an infringement of the copyright," clearly do not even tend to make such a sale by an absolute owner of such books an infringement of the copyright.

It is a close question whether a copyright may be infringed by selling in violation of express and explicit restrictions placed on the dealer, expressly made an agent or licensee only, as to the mode of sale or the price at which same is to be sold. Act March 3, 1891, c. 565, 26 Stat. 1106 [U.S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3406], entitled "An act to amend title sixty, chapter three, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to copyrights," amends section 4952 so as to read:

"The author * * * or proprietor of any book * * * shall, upon complying with the provisions of this chapter have the sole liberty of printing, reprinting, publishing, completing, copying, executing, finishing, and vending the same."

Section 7 of that act (26 Stat. 1109 [U.S. Comp. St. [\[\*\*80\]](#) 1901, p. 3413]) amends section 4964 of the Revised Statutes so as to read as follows:

"Every person, who after the recording of the title of any book and the depositing of two copies of such book, as provided by this act, shall, contrary to the provisions of this act, within the term limited, and without the consent of the proprietor of the copyright first obtained in writing, signed in the presence of two or more witnesses, print, publish, dramatize, translate, or import, or knowing the same to be so printed, published, dramatized, translated, or imported, shall sell or expose to sale any copy of such book, shall forfeit every copy thereof to such proprietor, and shall also forfeit and pay such damages as may be recovered in a civil action by such proprietor in any court of competent jurisdiction."

This section declares what acts constitute a violation of the copyright of a book. It declares that, to constitute a violation of the copyright, the offender must have, within the term limited -- that is, the life of the copyright -- and without the consent of the proprietor thereof, first obtained in writing and executed in the presence of two or more witnesses, printed or published [\[\*\*81\]](#) or imported, contrary to the provisions of the act, such copyrighted book, or contrary to the provisions of the act, within such time and without such consent, must have sold or exposed to sale a copy of such copyrighted book, known to have been illegally printed. In substance this section declares that it is an infringement of a copyright to print or publish the copyrighted book without the consent of the proprietor, given in writing, signed in the presence of two witnesses, or to import a copy of such book without such consent, or knowingly to sell or expose for sale a copy or copies of such copyrighted book when unlawfully printed or imported. From this it would appear that an infringement by the sale of a copyrighted book consists in the selling or exposing for sale of a copy of such book that has been unlawfully printed or imported. If this be the law, it is not an [\[\*182\]](#) infringement of a copyright to sell or expose for sale a copy or copies of such book, when the same was lawfully printed or lawfully imported. The result would be that it is not an infringement of the copyright of a book to sell a copy or copies thereof lawfully printed, as in this case, in violation [\[\*\*82\]](#) of a mere condition imposed upon a dealer by the publisher, by which such dealer agrees not to sell below a certain price; the title to the book having been vested in such dealer by the publisher thereof, or even in cases where the absolute title had not passed to the dealer. If the publisher of the book, being the proprietor of the copyright, parts with the title to such book, either a single copy or any number of copies, and receives his pay therefor, he has voluntarily parted with all control over that or those particular books. The owner of those books is neither a licensee nor an agent. He has the absolute property therein, and the absolute ownership of an article of personal property carries with it the right to give away or sell for such consideration as the owner sees fit to impose, prescribe, or demand, so long as he violates no law. This view of the copyright laws of the United States, as amended by the act of March 3, 1891, seems to be taken by Macgillivray in his work on the Law of Copyright, p. 287, c. 4, § 2. He there says:

"Prohibited Acts and Remedies. HN3[] It is an infringement, subject to the remedies stated below, to do any of the following acts in respect of [**83] a copyrighted work: In the case of books, without the consent of the proprietor, in writing, signed in the presence of two witnesses (1) to print or publish; (2) to dramatize or translate; (3) to import; (4) knowingly to sell or expose for sale copies unlawfully made or imported."

We find no suggestion that it is an infringement of the copyright of a book for the owner of the book to sell copies at a price which violates a valid contract between the publisher of the book and the dealer, and which was made at the time such dealer became the owner.

In Harrison v. Maynard, Merrill & Co., 26 U.S. App. 99, 61 Fed. 689, 10 C.C.A. 17, the complainants, publishers of books and the owners of a copyrighted book, sent a quantity of the printed and unbound sheets of such book to the bindery of one Alexander for binding, and such sheets were to be stored until complainants should order bound copies. Sometimes they bound copies in advance. A fire occurred in the bindery, and both complainants and Alexander supposed the commercial value as books of all such bound or unbound sheets of such book in such bindery was destroyed. On examination complainants' agent so reported. Thereupon Alexander, [**84] without objection from complainants, sold the entire debris to one Fitzgerald, who, without moving it, sold same to some dealers in old paper. Alexander imposed no restriction or condition when he sold. Fitzgerald, who had become the ownwr of the debris, including the printed sheets and bound volumes, put this condition and restriction in the bill of sale:

"It is understood that all paper taken out of the building is to be utilized as paper stock, and all books to be sold as paper stock only, and not placed on the market as anything else."

[*183] Harrison, a dealer in books, visited the place and purchased of these dealers in old paper some of the volumes of the copyrighted book not destroyed, and put them on the market. He had no notice of the restriction or condition put in the bill of sale given by Fitzgerald. Complainants, owners of the copyright, brought suit to enjoin such sale by Harrison. On these facts the court (Wallace, Lacombe, and Shipman, Circuit Judges) held that, so long as the owner of a copyright retains the title to the copies of the book which he has the exclusive right to vend by virtue of the copyright, he can impose restrictions upon the manner [**85] in which and upon the persons to whom the copies are to be sold. They also held that if the agents of the owner of the copyright, intrusted with the possession of such books, violates his instructions and fraudulently sells to a person who has knowledge of the restrictions, such sale by the agent constitutes a fraud upon the owner of the copyright, and that such fraud constitutes an infringement of the copyright, with which the owner has never parted, and that such fraud -- meaning, of course, such sales -- can be restrained by virtue of the statutes applicable thereto. The court states that this right to enjoy the benefit of the copyright statutes results from the fact that the owner has never parted with the title to the book or the copyright, although he may have parted with the possession of the book. The court also holds that the right to restrain the sale of a particular copy of the book by virtue of such statutes has gone when the owner of the copyright and of that copy has parted with all his title to it, and has conferred an absolute title to the copy upon a purchaser, although with an agreement for a restricted use. If this is true of one particular book, it is also [**86] true of a large number of copies. The court also says, in substance, that the new purchaser cannot reprint the copy, but that, the copy having been absolutely sold to him, the ordinary incidents of ownership in personal property, among which is the right of alienation, attaches to it. The court further says:

HN4[] "If he has agreed that he will not sell it for certain purposes or to certain persons, and violates his agreement and sells to an innocent purchaser, he can be punished for a violation of his agreement; but neither is guilty under the copyright statutes of an infringement. If the new purchaser participates in the fraud, he may also share in the punishment."

The court cites in support of these statements Clemens v. Estes, 22 Fed. 899. If this be a correct statement of the law, and this court does not doubt that it is, we recur to the simple proposition whether or not the complainant in the case now under consideration, the Bobbs-Merrill Company, retained any title in the books in question by printing on the page following the title-page the statement: "Copyright 1904. The Bobbs-Merrill Company. May." And thereunder the statement:

"The price of this book at retail is one [**87] dollar net. No dealer is licensed to sell it at a less price, and a sale at a less price will be treated as an infringement of the copyright.

The Bobbs-Merrill Company."

The defendants in this case purchased 90 per cent. of its copies of this book from dealers at wholesale at a reduction of 40 per cent. from said mentioned retail price. The other 10 per cent. of their [*184] copies they purchased at retail, paying the full retail price therefor. The defendants knew of the statement printed in said books above quoted, and knew that it was printed in each copy of the book. The wholesale dealers from whom the defendants purchased their copies obtained such copies either from complainants direct or from other wholesale dealers at a discount from the above-mentioned retail price. Such wholesale dealers knew that the book was copyrighted, and were familiar with the said statement printed in each copy thereof. The books that came to the defendants prior to reaching them did not pass through the hands of any person or persons who were ignorant of the said notice printed therein. It is expressly found, however, and conceded, that these wholesale dealers from whom the defendants [*88] here obtained their copies were under no agreement or obligation to enforce the observance of the terms of said notice by retail dealers, or to restrict their sales of copies of such book to retail dealers who would agree to observe the said notice.

As has been stated, the notice contains no suggestion that the title of the purchaser to the book is in any way limited. The notice is that the price of the book at retail is one dollar net; and, if the words "no dealer" are to be construed as referring solely to retail dealers, then the notice is that the Bobbs-Merrill Company has not licensed any retail dealer to sell the book at retail for less than one dollar per copy. The fair meaning of this is that, in cases where the Bobbs-Merrill Company has granted a license to some retail dealer or dealers to sell the book, such licensee or licensees are limited and restricted in his or their authority; but the notice is not a suggestion or an intimation to any person that those who buy and pay for the book in the open market, or even of the Bobbs-Merrill Company, without entering into an express license agreement different from that suggested by this notice, are bound or obligated in any [**89] way to demand one dollar per copy for such book. It well may be that the Bobbs-Merrill Company has licensed or will license certain dealers to sell this book, and when it grants a license it has the right to impose conditions on its licensees; but this notice does not state or suggest that every purchaser of one of these books containing this notice becomes a licensee with a limited title, or, in fact, no title, to the book. A person cannot be both licensee and absolute owner.

Again, it is contended that the words "the price of this book" refer to the particular copy containing the notice, and that the words "no dealer is licensed to sell it" refer to the particular copy containing the notice. It is further contended that the court is bound to give this construction to this language, and that therefore the defendants, having knowledge of the notice, assented to the proposition and in effect entered into a contract or agreement with the Bobbs-Merrill Company whereby they became its agents to sell the copies at one dollar per volume, and no less, or its licensee with power to sell such books, for which it had paid the wholesale dealer the price demanded, at one dollar per copy only. [**90] This court refuses to give that construction to this notice. This court declines to hold [*185] that the words in such notice "this book" and "it" refer to the particular copy of the book in which the notice is found. The language of the notice is a general statement, referring to the book known as "The Castaway" generally, and not to any particular copy or copies thereof, and, at best, is but a notice that licensees of the publishers are only at liberty to sell such book at one dollar per copy. The notice forms no part of a contract between the purchaser from the publisher and such publisher, nor does it limit or restrict the title of the purchaser. And this court will say here that it would be lending itself to the perpetration of a fraud upon the public should it hold differently. If the Bobbs-Merrill Company, in putting its books upon the market, desires to say to wholesalers and to retailers that it is not selling the entire title to the copies put upon the market, let it say so in plain and unambiguous terms. Let it say in its notice that the purchaser of copies of the book from either the publisher or any wholesale or retail dealer is obtaining but a limited or qualified [**91] title in the copies purchased, or that in purchasing one or more copies such purchaser becomes but a mere licensee of the publisher, without title to the copies, and with power to dispose of the same only on receiving a specified sum of money. The Circuit Court of Appeals, in Harrison v. Maynard, Merrill & Co., supra, also quotes with approval the language of *Judge Hammond in Henry Bill Publishing Co. v. Smythe \(C.C.\) 27 Fed. 914-925*, viz.:

HN5 "The owner of the copyright may not be able to transfer the entire property in one of his copies and retain for himself an incidental power to authorize a sale of that copy, or, rather, the power of prohibition on the owner that he shall not sell it, holding that much, as a modicum of his former estate, to be protected by the copyright statute; and yet he may be entirely able, so long as he retains the ownership of a particular copy for himself, to find abundant protection under the copyright statute for his then incidental power of controlling its sale. This copyright incident of control over the sale, if I may call it so, as contradistinguished from the power of sale incident to ownership in all property -- copyrighted articles, like any other [**92] -- is a thing that belongs alone to the owner of the copyright itself, and as to him only so long as and to the extent that he owns the particular copies involved. Whenever he parts with that ownership, the ordinary incident of alienation attaches to the particular copy parted with in favor of the transferee, and he cannot be deprived of it. This latter incident supersedes the other -- swallows it up, so to speak -- and the two cannot coexist in any owner of the copy, except he be the owner at the same time of the copyright; and, in the nature of the thing, they cannot be separated, so that one may remain in the owner of the copyright as a limitation upon or denial of the other in the owner of the copy."

In *Garst v. Hall & Lyon Co., 179 Mass. 588, 61 N.E. 219, 55 L.R.A. 631*, decided October 17, 1901, without dissent, the court, speaking of copyrights, said:

HN6 "The law of copyright also gives privileges to authors and publishers that do not pertain to property which anybody may make and sell if he can; but even under the law of copyright, when the owner of a copyright and of a particular copy of a book to which it pertains has parted with all his title to the book, and has conferred [**93] an absolute title to it upon a purchaser, he cannot restrict the right of alienation, which is one of the incidents of ownership in personal property. *Harrison v. Maynard, 61 Fed. 689*, 10 C.C.A. 17. See, also, *Clemens v. Estes \(C.C.\) 22 Fed. 899*; *Meyer v. Estes, 164 Mass. 457, 1\*186 41 N.E. 683, 32 L.R.A. 283*; *Waterman Co. v. Waterman, 27 App. Div. 133, 50 N.Y. Supp. 131*."

The same doctrine is plainly expressed in *Keeler v. Standard Folding Bed Company, 157 U.S. 659, 15 Sup. Ct. 738, 39 L. Ed. 848*. In that case it was held that one who purchases patented articles of manufacture from one authorized to sell them at the place where sold becomes possessed of an absolute property in such articles, unrestricted in time or place. In that case the complainants were the assignees for the state of Massachusetts of certain letters patent granted to one Welch. This assignment as matter of course gave to the complainants the rights of the patentee in and for the state of Massachusetts, viz., the sole right to make, use, and sell the patented article in that state. The Welch Folding Bed Company owned the patent rights for the state of Michigan, and it of course had the same right to [**94] make, use, and vend the patented article in that state. The defendants purchased a car load of the patented articles from the Welch Folding Bed Company at Grand Rapids in the state of Michigan. It proposed to sell these articles in the state of Massachusetts, and thereafter did sell some of such articles in the state of Massachusetts, and was engaged in selling the remainder in that state at the city of Boston when the bill of complaint was filed. The Supreme Court held that the defendants, having purchased the patented articles in Michigan from the assignee of the patent for the territory included within the boundaries of the state of Michigan, had the right to sell them anywhere within the United States, including the state of Massachusetts, notwithstanding the fact that all the patent rights for the state of Massachusetts had been assigned to another person, to wit, to the complainants. The decision is based upon the proposition that where the patentee, not having parted with his rights granted by the patent, makes and vends a patented article, the purchaser can use the article in any part of the United States, and, unless restrained by contract with the patentee, can sell or [**95] dispose of the same in any part of the United States. The court says:

"It has passed outside of the monopoly, and is no longer under the peculiar protection granted to patented rights."

The court approves the language of *Mr. Justice Clifford in Good-year v. Beverly Rubber Co., 1 Cliff. 348-354*, Fed. Cas. No. 5,557, wherein he states, in substance, that, the patentee having manufactured the article and sold it for a satisfactory compensation, the patentee, so far as that quantity of the product of his invention is concerned, has enjoyed all the rights secured to him by his letters patent, and the manufactured article, and the material of which it is composed, go to the purchaser for a valuable consideration, discharged of all the rights of the patentee previously attached to or impressed upon it by the law under which the patent was granted. The court further says:

"If, as is often the case, the patentee has divided the territory of the United States into 20 or more specified parts, must a person who has bought and paid for the patented article in one part, from a vendor having an exclusive right to make and vend therein, on removing from one part of the country [*187] [*96] to another, pay to the local assignee for the privilege of using and selling his property, or else be subjected to an action for damages as a wrongdoer? And is there any solid distinction to be made in such a case between the right to use and the right to sell?"

The court then cites with approval several cases, and especially the language of *Mr. Justice Clifford in Mitchell v. Hawley, 16 Wall. 544, 546, 547, 21 L. Ed. 322*, as follows:

"Patentees acquire by their letters patent the exclusive right to make and use their patented inventions, and to vend to others to be used, for the period of time specified in the patent; but when they have made one or more of the things patented, and have vended the same to others to be used, they have parted to that extent with their exclusive right, as they are never entitled to but one royalty for a patented machine, and consequently a patentee, when he has himself constructed a machine and sold it without any conditions, or authorized another to construct, sell, and deliver it, or to construct, use, and operate it, without any conditions, and the consideration has been paid to him for the thing patented, the rule is well established that the [*97] patentee must be understood to have parted to that extent with all his exclusive right, and that he ceases to have any interest whatever in the patented machine so sold and delivered or authorized to be constructed and operated. Where such circumstances appear, the owner of the machine, whether he built it or purchased it, if he has also acquired the right to use and operate it during the lifetime of the patent, may continue to use it until it is worn out, in spite of any and every extension subsequently obtained by the patentee or his assigns."

At page 666, 16 Wall., 21 L. Ed. 322, the court calls attention to the case of *Wilson v. Rousseau, 4 How. 646, 11 L. Ed. 1141*, and says that it was there held that:

"As between the owner of a patent on the one side, and a purchaser of an article made under the patent on the other, the payment of a royalty once, or, what is the same thing, the purchase of the article from one authorized by the patentee to sell it, emancipates such article from any further subjection to the patent throughout the entire life of the patent, even if the latter should be by law subsequently extended beyond the term existing at the time of the sale; and in respect [*98] of the time of enjoyment, by those decisions the right of the purchaser, his assigns, or legal representatives is clearly established to be entirely free from any further claim of the patentee or any assignee."

The court then says:

"Upon the doctrine of these cases we think it follows that one who buys patented articles of manufacture from one authorized to sell them becomes possessed of an absolute property in such articles, unrestricted in time or place. Whether a patentee may protect himself and his assignees by special contracts brought home to the purchasers is not a question before us, and upon which we express no opinion. It is, however, obvious that such a question would arise as a question of contract, and not as one under the inherent meaning and effect of the patent laws."

In the case now before this court it appears that the publisher of the book "The Castaway" printed and sold these copies. It put them upon the market. It received its price therefor, and reserved no right to demand any further compensation. The defendants purchased in the open market and paid the price demanded. It is conceded that the wholesalers of whom the defendants purchased were under [**99] no contract or obligation to impose any condition upon the defendants, and they did not. There is no privity of contract between the defendants and the complainants. There is no suggestion [*188] in the notice that the retail dealer who buys the copies of the book in the open market enters into any contractual relation with the publishers. It is not stated that the copy of the book is sold on condition that the purchaser will abide by and enforce the price arrangement. The notice is assertive in its terms. It is a dictum. It says that the price of the book at retail is one dollar net. The plain meaning of this language is that if the signer of the notice sells a copy of the book, or the book in question, containing the notice, at retail, the price is one dollar. The notice also asserts that the Bobbs-Merrill Company has not licensed any retail dealer to sell at a less price. It does not say or suggest that the Bobbs-Merrill Company has not sold millions of copies of the book for the trade, parting with the title absolutely and unconditionally. This court is aware that the Keeler Case, cited above, is a patent, and not a copyright case; but the principle is the same.

[**100] In a supplemental brief filed by the counsel for the complainant, he states that he does not consider the notice published in the book as in the nature of a license. He says:

"In my opinion, the putting of the book upon the market and selling it by the owner of the copyright constitutes the license; and this notice published in the book is a limitation and qualification of that license. If the book is put out without any notice, the license is unqualified, and the sale is absolute; but my contention is that the owner of the copyright has the authority to restrict the license, and, being published in this way, the restriction attaches to the property, and is a charge and limitation upon the rights of all parties purchasing the book for resale."

This is a claim that the owner of a copyright for a book, who prints the book and sells it for a consideration, gives to the purchaser a license, and does not sell and convey a piece of personal property absolutely. The contention here is that any notice printed in a book and brought to the attention of the purchaser is a restriction of that license to that extent, and may be enforced, and that a violation of the obligation imposed by [**101] the notice is an infringement of the copyright which may be restrained by the federal courts. This doctrine, it seems to this court, is contrary to the adjudicated cases. I do not think this contention can be sustained upon principle. Clearly it is opposed to public policy. The purchaser of an article not patented may duplicate it if he can. The purchaser of an article made under a patent right may not duplicate it, but he may use the article purchased and sell the same as his own in any way or for any price he sees fit. The purchaser of a book not copyrighted may duplicate it -- make copies or a reprint. The purchaser of a copyrighted book may not make or print or publish a copy, as this would be an infringement of the copyright; but this restriction in no way interferes with the absolute ownership of the particular copy of the book. The owner of an article made under a patent right or of a book printed under a copyright is in no sense a licensee of the patentee or of the owner of the copyright.

"License," with reference to real estate, is a permission or authority to do a particular act or a series of acts on the land of another without possessing any estate therein. So, [**102] with reference [*189] to personal property, "license" implies and carries the power to do some act upon or in reference to or to do something with the property of another. Herein it differs from an easement. The word "easement" always implies an interest in the land. See Words & Phrases, vol. 5, tit. "License."

What is the Present Combination and Its Object, or Purpose?

1. The American Publishers' Association has adopted a net price system for all copyright books published or controlled by any member or members of the association and made an agreement to maintain it. By this agreement the members thereof are to cut off all supply of their copyrighted books to any dealer who fails to maintain the net price of such books as fixed by such association, or, what is the same thing, by its members. In short, this combination fixes the price of copyrighted books published by its members, and the price at which such books are to be sold, both at wholesale and at retail, and agrees not to furnish or sell any of these books to any dealer who fails to maintain such price; that is, demand and exact from the purchaser the price so fixed.
2. Another association, the American Booksellers' [**103] Association, assents to this, agrees to co-operate and be bound by such system and arrangement and to aid and assist in carrying it into effect, and to this end agrees not to buy, or keep in stock, or offer for sale, the copyrighted book of any publisher who refuses to join the combination and enforce this price system and demand and exact of the customer this price fixed by the combination. Two-thirds of the members of this association govern. If any member fails to live up to the agreement, etc., he may be expelled, and he is not to have books, and all members are "restrained" from supplying books, etc. (See subdivisions 4 and 5 of Exhibit I.) The objects are: (1) To compel the would-be owners and readers of copyrighted books to purchase their books of the members of this combination, made up of two combinations embracing at least 90 per cent. of all publishers and dealers in copyrighted books, at an arbitrary price fixed by the combination, regardless of the actual value of the book as determined by a demand therefor established in a free and open market or the condition of the books. (2) To compel all publishers of and dealers in copyrighted books to come into the combination, [**104] submit to and be controlled by it, and sell books at prices fixed by it, regardless of the value of the books, etc., or of the exigencies of the trade and situation of the seller, or be deprived of the privilege of purchasing, owning, and selling such books. In short, such as refuse to come in are to be crippled, or perhaps ruined, in their business. As the combination extends throughout the United States by the very terms of the agreement, interstate commerce is necessarily restrained. A judgment for the complainants in this action will restrain interstate commerce.

If this suit is one to restrain the infringement of a copyright, granted to the complainant and now owned by it, by the doing of any act that constitutes infringement of that right, and defendant has infringed, it is entirely immaterial that the combination [*190] described exists, or that complainant is a member thereof, or that its objects are those described. It is no defense to such a trespass upon the complainant's rights that it has violated and is violating the Sherman anti-trust law (Act July 2, 1890, c. 647, 26 Stat. 209 [U.S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3200]), or some statute of the state of New York. In [**105] General Electric Co. v. Wise, 119 Fed. 922-924, this court so held, citing cases. This court there said:

"It is difficult to understand how or why a violation of the Sherman antitrust law by this complainant, if there has been such a violation, confers any right on the defendant to infringe this patent. That act points out the penalties for its violation, and it is not understood that such law denies the grantees of patents the protection of the law because they may be violating some statute. However that may be, the evidence falls far short of establishing such a violation by this complainant. The testimony on that subject is squarely contradicted. An individual cannot confiscate the property or property right of a corporation on the ground it has violated that act. Soda Fountain Co. v. Green \(C.C.\) 69 Fed. 333; Columbia Wire Co. v. Freeman Wire Co. \(C.C.\) 71 Fed. 302; Bement v. Harrow Co., 186 U.S. 70, 88-91, 22 Sup. Ct. 747, 46 L. Ed. 1058. Harrow Co. v. Quick \(C.C.\) 67 Fed 131, cannot be accepted as authority on this question."

See, also, Strait v. National Harrow Co. \(C.C.\) 51 Fed. 819.

But if the complainant has turned over to the combination the fixing of prices, [**106] and has entered into the combination described, and becomes a party to the agreement for the purposes described, and is now, through this suit, attempting, as this court holds it is, to enforce such combination agreement in whole or in part, and such agreement is unlawful, because in violation of the act referred to, then this action cannot be maintained. The complainant confessedly is a party to the combination and the agreement, and cannot, if it be illegal, have a standing in a court of equity to enforce any part of it, directly or indirectly. When a complainant comes into court, asking equity, it must come with clean hands, so far as the transaction involved is concerned. If a party, person, or corporation, in attempting to violate the rights of the public and the rights of those persons who will not join in the attempted violation of law, suffers some injury to his property or property rights, which are being used by his consent by those who are thus violating the law, in perpetrating such violation, at the hands of one who is lawfully resisting such attempted injury, he or it cannot, while continuing the illegal acts, have an injunction to enjoin the resisting acts resulting [**107] in such injury. Each owner of the copyright of a book has a monopoly of that particular book. Copyrights, like patents, are assignable, and hence a person or a corporation may lawfully become the owner of any number of copyrights or of all the copyrights of books issued by the United States, and it is immaterial that the purpose is to monopolize the whole business of publishing and selling copyrighted books. In such case such person or corporation would hold and control all the monopolies for such copyrights of books, and he or it could print and sell, or print and not sell, or refuse to print at all, or refuse to allow others to print or publish. Should he or it print or publish one or more copies of these books, such person or corporation could appoint agents to sell and prescribe and limit their powers. He or it could [*191] license one or more persons to sell, and prescribe the terms and conditions of such sale, and limit the price at which same should be sold. Assume that such person or corporation has fixed the price at whcih such book shall be sold at retail by such agents and licensees, and may restrain a disposition of such books in violation of the conditions, [**108] we have no combination or conspiracy. One man cannot combine or conspire. It takes two or more to make a combination or a conspiracy. So an agreement by all holders of copyrights to assign same to one person or corporation is but a sale of their own, and they may take pay in cash, horses, scrap iron, or licenses to sell the copyrighted book, provided they actually sell their copyrights. If the agreement be a mere pretense, however, a mere cover for a combination to violate some statute, then such agreement to sell their copyrights would be void, and the whole combination would be illegal and void. So one person may purchase and own all the hay, oats, or potatoes existing in the country. If he becomes such owner, he may fix the price at which he will sell. Here there is no conspiracy or illegal combination. But if the several owners of such produce combine, and agree that they will fix prices, interfere with and limit interstate commerce, drive all other dealers and owners of similar property who will not join them in their purposes out of business, and deprive them, if possible, of their right to purchase and ship produce from state to state as a part of interstate commerce, [**109] we undoubtedly have an illegal combination, and no member of such a conspiracy can enforce in a court of equity any contract or agreement made in execution, in whole or part, of such a conspiracy. It is evident that one may do, in fixing and enforcing prices, and in exacting tribute from the people and restraining interstate commerce, what two or more cannot do in pursuance of an agreement or combination. A corporation, on becoming the owner of several patents or of several copyrights, may do all acts under each that the person to whom such rights were originally granted might have done. Having become the owner, it is entitled to the benefits and privileges of the monopolies granted. But all this affords no sanction or support whatever to the doctrine that the several owners of distinct patents, each having a monopoly of his particular patent, or the several owners of distinct copyrights, each having a monopoly of his particular copyright, may combine and conspire as to their patented articles, or as to their copyrights or books published under and protected thereby, to restrain interstate commerce in articles made or produced thereunder. A right or privilege to form such a combination [**110] or conspiracy is not embraced or included within the monopoly granted. The monopoly of one patentee cannot be extended and made more of a monopoly by that of another. The grant of an exclusive right to make and vend a certain machine does not include a license to combine and conspire with another having a like exclusive right to restrain trade and commerce between the states in those articles, if made and put on the market, or to conspire not to put them on the market. The right to elect not to make or sell is necessarily included. The right to combine [*192] and conspire is not. In any event the so-called Sherman law forbids any and all combinations in restraint of such commerce.

In the case of copyrighted books it is evident that, if the publisher of one or two should demand and exact of the purchaser at retail a grossly unreasonable price, he would sell but few, if any, copies. Others would supply the market, for readers would forego that book, or those books, and find reading matter elsewhere. But when all publishers of and dealers in copyrighted books -- and nearly all new books are now copyrighted -- combine to exact a fixed, arbitrary price, etc., the readers of [**111] books become powerless, if they would read at all, not because of the monopoly granted or sanctioned by the government in granting the copyright, but because of the new monopoly (the conspiracy of monopolists), created by the agreement and combination of these monopolists -- one that is forbidden and denounced by Act July 2, 1890, c. 647, 26 Stat. 209 [U.S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3200], entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies." Section 1 of that act reads:

"Every contract, combination in the form of a trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce amongst the several states, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal."

It is not necessary that the effect necessarily be to restrain trade or commerce. It is sufficient if the combination may have that effect. It seems to this court impossible to hold that this section of the act does not apply to a combination of patentees to restrain trade and commerce in patented articles made under their patents as much as to such a combination made by dealers in other articles of commerce.

In 1 Page on Contracts, p. 698, § 445, after a statement regarding [**112] the law as to "Monopoly Contracts concerning Patents," it is said:

"But if the owners of distinct patents combine to prevent competition in business, and to control the price of the patented article, such combinations and all contracts for such purposes are as invalid as if the articles were not patented."

The following cases are cited to sustain the statement: National Harrow Co. v. Hench, 83 Fed. 36, 27 C.C.A. 349, 55 U.S. App. 53, 39 L.R.A. 299; National Harrow Co. v. Quick \(C.C.\) 67 Fed. 130; Vulcan Powder Co. v. Powder Co., 96 Cal. 510, 30 Pac. 1113, 31 Am. St. Rep. 242; Gamewell, etc., Co. v. Crane, 160 Mass. 50, 35 N.E. 99, 22 L.R.A. 673, 39 Am. St. Rep. 458.

In 1 State and Federal Control of Persons and Property (Tiedeman) 412-413, it is said:

"But the mere fact that the subject-matter of the monopolistic combination may be patent rights, covering machines employed in the same art or industry, will not protect the combination from the penal provisions of the antitrust laws. If a corporation or association is formed among manufacturers and patentees of certain articles of kindred character, in order to control the trade and prices of such articles, the combination is [**113] nevertheless illegal, although the exclusive manufacture of the goods is guaranteed by letters patent from the United States government."

At the time of that writing (1900) the author was not aware of the decision in Bement v. National Harrow Co., 186 U.S. 70, 22 I<sup>1</sup>931 Sup. Ct. 747, 46 L. Ed. 1058, which modifies some of the cases cited by him, but not in respect to the general doctrine stated.

In Bement v. Harrow Co., supra, the court, at page 94, 186 U.S., page 756, 22 Sup. Ct. \(46 L. Ed. 1058\), plainly intimates that the several owners of several patents may not combine to restrain commerce in their patented articles. It is unnecessary to cite many cases. If Montague & Co. v. Lowry, 193 U.S. 38, 24 Sup. Ct. 307, 48 L. Ed. 608, and Northern Securities Company v. United States, 193 U.S. 197, 24 Sup. Ct. 436, 48 L. Ed. 679, are to be respected as law and followed in cases where there is no hue and cry against railroads, this combination is illegal as in restraint of interstate commerce. If anything can be found in the prevailing opinion in John D. Park & Sons Co. v. Wholesale Druggists' Association et al., 175 N.Y. 1, 67 N.E. 136, 62 L.R.A. 632, 96 Am. St. Rep. 578, supporting [**114] the contention of the complainant here, it is sufficient to say that this court does not agree with the prevailing opinion or decision in that case, but does agree with the dissenting opinions of Martin, J., and Cullen, C.J., with whom Vann, J., concurred.

The defendants have not infringed and are not threatening to infringe complainant's copyright, nor have they violated any contract. The complainant is seeking to enforce against defendants an unlawful combination agreement, to which such defendants are not parties, and by which they have not consented to be bound to prevent defendants selling books of which they are the absolute owners. The same result on a similar state of facts as to the effect of such notice was reached by the court in Bobbs-Merrill Co. v. Snellenburg, 131 Fed. 530.

The defendants are entitled to a decree dismissing the complaint, with costs.

In re Goode

Court of Common Pleas of Hamilton County, Ohio

October 24, 1905, Decided

No Number in Original

Reporter

16 Ohio Dec. 404 *; 1905 Ohio Misc. LEXIS 146 **; 3 Ohio L. Rep. 401

CORA DOW GOODE, IN RE.

Prior History: [**1] APPLICATION for writ of habeas corpus.

Disposition: Writ granted, and petitioner released.

Core Terms

---

refuse to answer, habeas corpus, notary, trade secret, Druggists, alleges, dealers, jail, article of merchandise, anti trust law, blacklist, consumer, supplied, damages, matters, bought, commit, courts, cease

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Governments > Local Governments > Employees & Officials

HN1 [down arrow] Local Governments, Employees & Officials

A notary has no power to determine whether a question which a witness has refused to answer is relevant or competent. His only recourse is to commit the witness to jail, leaving to a court of competent jurisdiction the determination of the question of relevancy upon application for release by habeas corpus.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Interstate Commerce > Restraints of Trade

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Sales of Goods > Performance > Rights of Buyers

HN2 [down arrow] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

The Antitrust Law of Ohio, Lan. R. L. 7586, prohibits the creation or carrying out of restrictions in trade or commerce to prevent competition in the sale or purchase of merchandise, to fix at any standard or figure any article of merchandise intended for sale in this state, whereby its price to the public or consumer shall be in any manner controlled or established, or to make or carry out any agreement of any kind or description by which they shall bind themselves not to sell any article of merchandise, below a common standard figure, or by which they shall in any manner establish the price of any article between themselves and others, so as directly or indirectly to preclude a free and unrestricted competition among themselves, or any purchasers or consumers in the sale or transportation of any such article.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Costs & Attorney Fees > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Sales of Goods > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN3 [down arrow] Private Actions, Costs & Attorney Fees

Section 11 of the Antitrust Law of Ohio provides that in addition to the criminal and civil penalties herein provided, any person who shall be injured in his business by any other person or corporation or association or partnership, by reason of anything forbidden or declared to be unlawful by this act, may sue therefor and recover twofold the damages sustained and the costs of the suit.

Headnotes/Summary

---

Headnotes

EVIDENCE--HABEAS CORPUS--WITNESSES.

1. WITNENSS NEED NOT ANSWER IRRELEVANT OR PRIVILEGED QUESTION BEFORE NOTARY.

At the hearing of a writ of habeas corpus, testimony may be introduced by the petitioner showing that the question asked by the notary was either irrelevant or privileged, the latter under the Ohio rule not being competent to pass thereon

2. WITNESS NEED NOT ANSWER QUESTION OPERATING TO CONFER UNFAIR BUSINESS ADVANTAGE ON ADVERSE PARTY.

If it appear that the answer to a question propounded to a witness would injure the plaintiff by affording the defendants an opportunity to commit certain acts forbidden by the Valentine Antitrust Law, technical rules of evidence will be disregarded and the witness not required to answer.

Counsel: J. S. Graydon and Smith Hickenlooper, for petitioner:

Testimony in habeas corpus proceedings. Church, Habeas Corpus (2 ed.) Secs. 170, 178 et seq.; Hurd, Habeas Corpus (2 ed.) 301, 302.

Relevancy. Jennings, Ex parte, 60 Ohio St. 319 [54 N.E. 262]; 71 Am. St. Rep. 720]; Robbins v. Railway, 180 Mass. 51 [61 N.E. 265]; Storm v. United States, 94 U.S. 76 [24 L. Ed. 42]; Gorham Mfg. Co. v. Dry-Goods Co. 92 F. 774.

Privileged trade secrets. 3 Wigmore, Evidence 2212; Krieger, Ex parte, 7 Mo. App. 367; Jennings, Ex parte, 60 Ohio St. 319 [54 N.E. 262]; 71 Am. St. Rep. 720]; Jenkins v. Putman, 106 N.Y. 272 [12 N.E. 613]; Gorham Mfg. Co. v. Dry-Goods Co. 92 F. 774; Badische Anilin & Soda Fabrik v. Levinstein, L. R. 24 Ch. Div. 156; Moore v. Craven, L. R. 7 Ch. App. 94; Saccharin Corporation v. Chemicals & Drugs Co. 2 Ch. Div. 557; Tetlow v. Savournin, 15 Phila. 170; Moxie Nerve-Food Co. v. Beach, 35 F. 465; Dobson v. Graham, 49 F. 17.

F. H. Freericks and R. B. Smith, contra:

Legality of the commitment. Church, Habeas Corpus Sec. 169; Miller, In re, 11 Dec. 69 (8 N. P. 142); Jennings, Ex parte, 60 Ohio St. 319 [54 N.E. 262]; 71 Am. St. Rep. 720].

Relevancy and privilege. Jennings, Ex parte, 60 Ohio St. 319 [54 N.E. 262], 71 Am. St. Rep. 720]; Wigmore, Evidence Secs. 2210, 2212; Commonwealth v. Pratt, 126 Mass. 462; People v. Freshour, 55 Cal. 375; Coburn v. Odell, 30 N.H. 540; State v. Fay, 43 Iowa 651; State v. Nichols, 29 Minn. 357 [13 N.W. 153]; Samuel v. People, 164 Ill. 379 [45 N.E. 728]; Pollock v. Pollock, 1 Ohio Cir. Dec. 410 (2 R. 143); Chambers v. Frazier, 29 Ohio St. 362; Bush v. Critchfield, 5 Ohio 109; Eddy, Combinations Sec. 1010, par. 2; Buss v. Horrocks, 1 Ohio Dec. Rep. 376 (8 Jo. 419); Meader v. Root, 5 Ohio Cir. Dec. 61 (11 R. 81); Conner v. Mackey, 20 Tex. 747; Blackburn v. Morton, 18 Ark. 384; Glenn v. Brush, 3 Colo. 26; Packard v. Hill, 7 Cow. 489; Odivene v. Hills, 1 Wend. 18; Rauh, In re, 65 Ohio St. 128 [61 N.E. 701].

Judges: SPIEGEL, J.

Opinion by: SPIEGEL

Opinion

---

[*405] SPIEGEL, J.

This is an application for a writ of habeas corpus for Mrs. Cora Dow Goode, retail druggist of this city, for restoration to liberty, she having been theoretically committed to jail by a notary for refusal to answer a question, the nature of which will [**3] be found further on.

Before determining the merit of the question involved, it will be necessary to consider the question raised at the hearing of the writ, whether testimony can be introduced during such hearing. Counsel for respondent claims this cannot be done in the present case, there being only a question of law for determination. The record shows that, before the notary, the petitioner was asked of whom she bought certain goods, which she refused to answer, claiming her privilege upon the ground that the question was irrelevant and in the nature of a trade secret. The notary, thereupon, committed her to jail for refusal to answer. Upon the hearing before me, I permitted the petitioner to testify and introduce testimony. Whether the question asked contained a trade secret, was a matter of fact, which required elucidation. In that course I was justified both by general practice and the law of Ohio (see Church, Habeas Corpus Secs. 178 and 192, and Hurd, Habeas Corpus 302). In Ohio the law is stated by me in Miller, Ex parte, 11 Dec. 69 (8 Ohio N.P. 142), syllabus 2:

HN1 [↑] "A notary has no power to determine whether a question which a witness has refused to answer is [**4] relevant or competent. His only recourse is to commit the witness to jail, leaving to a court of competent jurisdiction the determination of the question of relevancy upon application for release by habeas corpus."

This being the rule, the court, in furtherance of justice, was compelled to hear testimony, the question being, not whether the notary was right in his ruling, but whether the prisoner was entitled to her liberty.

This brings me to the consideration of the question, whether the petitioner was right in her refusal to answer the question. The petition in this case is filed under HN2 [↑] the antitrust law of Ohio (Lan. R. L. 7586; B. 4427-1, et seq.), prohibiting the creation or carrying out of restrictions in trade or commerce; to prevent competition in the sale or purchase of merchandise; to fix at any standard or figure any article of merchandise intended for sale in this state, whereby its price to the public or consumer shall be in any manner controlled or established; to make or carry out any agreement of any kind or description by which they [*406] shall bind themselves not to sell any article of merchandise, etc., below a common standard figure, or by which they [**5] shall in any manner establish the price of any article between themselves and others, so as directly or indirectly to preclude a free and unrestricted competition among themselves, or any purchasers or consumers in the sale or transportation of any such article. The petitioner alleges in her petition that, by reason of her refusal to join said unlawful combination (meaning the Ohio Valley Druggists' Association) or to maintain the prices fixed by the defendants (meaning the National Association of Wholesale Druggists, the Peruna Drug Manufacturing Company and the other defendants named), they have refused to sell commodities to her, and have induced others to refuse to sell to her, under threats of being cut off from supplies if they sell to her. In the hearing of the writ of habeas corpus she introduced testimony that dealers who had sold her were placed under the ban of these different combinations, who refused to sell to them unless they ceased selling to the petitioner. She further testified that if she revealed the names of those dealers who had supplied her with goods they would be placed on the black list, and her source of supply would entirely cease. She, therefore, claims [**6] the right to refuse to answer this question as being both irrelevant and in the nature of a trade secret.

Petitioner files her suit under Sec. 11 of the antitrust, better known as the Valentine law, which HN3 provides that in addition to the criminal and civil penalties herein provided, any person who shall be injured in his business by any other person or corporation or association or partnership, by reason of anything forbidden or declared to be unlawful by this act, may sue therefor and recover twofold the damages sustained and the costs of the suit. She claims to have sustained damages, and the names of the parties from whom she bought goods, possibly at higher prices, may well become relevant, giving defendants the right to examination. But there is a wider inquiry involved. Would not an order compelling petitioner to answer this question destroy the very object which the antitrust law seeks to accomplish? She alleges in her petition, and submitted evidence in her examination, that a disclosure of these dealers would place them on the black list and deprive her of the opportunity of obtaining any of these goods.

It is the duty of the courts where the state has made criminal certain [**7] rules of action in economic matters, to see that the purpose of these laws is carried out, and not nullify their very purpose by the enforcement of a technical rule of evidence. Whether the allegations of the petitioner are based on facts is a matter for the investigation of the trial court; but prior to that time, the court certainly ought not compel her to disclose matters which, while hardly trade secrets, would nevertheless [*407] tend to injure her in her business and give the defendants the very opportunity to commit the acts which the state has made criminal. In saying this, I am not passing on the merits of the case, but I am using that wide discretion, which must always be vested in courts, to see that full and complete justice shall be done.

The writ is granted, and the petitioner ordered released.

---

End of Document

OPINION ON REHEARING

Supreme Court of Kansas

January, 1906, Decided

No. 13,737.

Reporter

73 Kan. 343 *; 84 P. 737 **; 1906 Kan. LEXIS 257 ***

OPINION ON REHEARING.

Disposition: [***1] Judgment reversed.

Core Terms

mortgage, void, promise, commerce, cattle, illegality, provisions, commodity, selling, cases, livestock, transportation, merchandise, purchaser, partial, courts, carry out, combinations, indebtedness, buying

LexisNexis® Headnotes

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN1 [down arrow] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Cartels & Horizontal Restraints

Section 1 of the act of 1897, Kan. Gen. Stat. § 7864 (1901) makes unlawful any combination to create or carry out restrictions in trade or commerce, or aids to commerce, or to carry out restrictions in the full and free pursuit of any business authorized or permitted by the laws of this state, and whether or not any other provisions of this act should be construed as having that purpose, the portion quoted is intended to reach among other evils the very one denounced by the statute of 1891, for an agreement between persons engaged in buying and selling live stock for others that a minimum commission for their services shall be maintained is of necessity a restriction in commerce and in the full and free pursuit of a lawful business.

Governments > Legislation > Expiration, Repeal & Suspension

HN2 [down arrow] Legislation, Expiration, Repeal & Suspension

The Act of 1897 leaves no field for the operation of the statute of 1891, and therefore becomes a substitute for it and effects its repeal by implication.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN3 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Cartels & Horizontal Restraints

Section 1 of the Laws of 1897 reads: A trust is a combination of capital, skill, or acts, by two or more persons, firms, corporations, or associations of persons, or either two or more of them, for either, any or all of the following purposes: First: to create or carry out restrictions in trade or commerce or aids to commerce, or to carry out restrictions in the full and free pursuit of any business authorized or permitted by the laws of this state. Second: to increase or reduce the price of merchandise, produce or commodities, or to control the cost or rates of insurance. Third: to prevent competition in the manufacture, making, transportation, sale or purchase of merchandise, produce or commodities, or to prevent competition in aids to commerce. Fourth: to fix any standard or figure, whereby its price to the public shall be, in any manner, controlled or established, any article or commodity of merchandise, produce or commerce intended for sale, use or consumption in this state.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN4 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Cartels & Horizontal Restraints

1897 Kan. Sess. Laws 265, § 1 reads in part: A trust is a combination of capital, skill, or acts, by two or more persons, firms, corporations, or associations of persons, or either two or more of them, for either, any or all of the following purposes: to make or enter into, or execute or carry out, any contract, obligation or agreement of any kind or description by which they shall bind or have to bind themselves not to sell, manufacture, dispose of or transport any article or commodity, or article of trade, use, merchandise, commerce or consumption below a common standard figure or by which they shall agree in any manner to keep the price of such article, commodity or transportation at a fixed or graded figure, or by which they shall in any manner establish or settle the price of any article or commodity or transportation between them or themselves and others, to preclude a free and unrestricted competition among themselves or others in transportation, sale or manufacture of any such article or commodity, or by which they shall agree to pool, combine or unite any interest they may have in connection with the manufacture, sale or transportation of any such article or commodity, that its price may in any manner be affected. And any such combinations are hereby declared to be against public policy, unlawful and void. 1897 Kan. Sess. Laws 265, § 1; Kan. Gen. Stat. § 7864 (1901).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN5 Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Parts of Kan. Gen. Stat. §§ 7868-7870 (1901) read: § 5: Every person, company or corporation within or without this state, their officers, agents, representatives or consignees, violating any of the provisions of this act, within this state, are hereby denied the right, and are hereby prohibited from doing any business within this state. Section 6: Each and every person, company or corporation, their officers, agents, representatives or consignees, who, either directly or indirectly, violate any of the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and on conviction thereof shall be subject to a fine of not less than one hundred dollars nor more than one thousand dollars, and shall be imprisoned not less than thirty days nor more than six months. 1897 Kan. Sess. Laws 265; Kan. Gen. Stat. §§ 7868-7870 (1901).

73 Kan. 343, *343 LEXIS 84 P. 737, **737 LEXIS 906 Kan. LEXIS 257, ***1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Business & Corporate Law > ... > Duties & Liabilities > Authorized Acts of Agents > General Overview

HN6 Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Parts of Kan. Gen. Stat. 1901, §§ 7868-7870 read: § 7: Any contract or agreement in violation of any of the provisions of this act shall be absolutely void and not enforceable in any of the courts of Kansas, and when any civil action shall be commenced in any court of this state, it shall be lawful to plead in the defense thereof that the plaintiff or any other person interested in the prosecution of the case is at the time or has within one year next preceding the date of the commencement of any such action been guilty, either as principal, agent, representative, or consignee, directly or indirectly, of a violation of any of the provisions of this act, or that the cause of action grows out of any business transaction in violation of this act. 1897 Kan. Sess. Laws 265; Kan. Gen. Stat. §§ 7868-7870 (1901).

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > General Overview

HN7 Defenses, Demurrers & Objections, Affirmative Defenses

The provisions of 1897 Kan. Sess. Laws 265, §7, Kan. Gen. Stat. § 7870 (1901), provide that in any civil action there may be pleaded in defense that the plaintiff, or any person interested in the prosecution, has within one year been guilty of a violation of any of the provisions of the act, contemplates only civil actions relating to, and growing out of, transactions prohibited by the act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN8 Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Kan. Gen. Stat. § 7870 (1901) forbids a member of a trust to do any business in the state, that is to say, as properly interpreted, to do any business in promotion of, or in pursuance of, the purposes of the trust.

Contracts Law > Defenses > Illegal Bargains

HN9 Defenses, Illegal Bargains

If any part of a single consideration or either of two separate considerations of a contract is illegal the entire contract is void, although where two promises, one of which is illegal, are made upon a lawful consideration, the promise which is unobjectionable is ordinarily held to be enforceable.

73 Kan. 343, *343L<sup>A</sup>84 P. 737, **737L<sup>A</sup>906 Kan. LEXIS 257, ***1

Contracts Law > Defenses > Illegal Bargains

Contracts Law > ... > Discharge & Payment > Defenses > Illegalities

HN10[ Defenses, Illegal Bargains

Where one of two considerations, or a distinct part of one consideration, is unlawful, as being forbidden either by the statute or by the common law, the prevailing view is that the partial illegality taints the entire transaction, and the contract itself is void. According to the great weight of authority, this doctrine is applicable where a note or series of notes is given for a consideration a specific and ascertained amount of which is illegal.

Contracts Law > ... > Discharge & Payment > Defenses > Failure of Consideration

Contracts Law > Defenses > Illegal Bargains

Contracts Law > ... > Discharge & Payment > Defenses > Illegalities

HN11[ Defenses, Failure of Consideration

If one of two considerations of a promise be void merely, the other will support the promise; but that if one of two considerations be unlawful, the promise is void. When, however, for a legal consideration, a party undertakes to do one or more acts, and some of them are unlawful, the contract is good for so much as is lawful, and void for the residue. Whenever the unlawful part of the contract can be separated from the rest it will be rejected, and the remainder established. But this cannot be done when one of two or more considerations is unlawful, whether the promise be to do one lawful act, or two or more acts, part of which are unlawful; because the whole consideration is the basis of the whole promise. The parts are inseparable. Whilst a partial want or failure of consideration avoids a bill or note only pro tanto, illegality in respect to a part of the consideration avoids it in toto.

Contracts Law > Defenses > Illegal Bargains

HN12[ Defenses, Illegal Bargains

If any part of the entire consideration for a promise, or any part of an entire promise, is illegal, whether by statute or at common law, the whole contract is void. Indeed, the courts go far in refusing to found any rights upon wrongdoing.

Contracts Law > ... > Discharge & Payment > Defenses > Failure of Consideration

Contracts Law > Defenses > Illegal Bargains

Contracts Law > ... > Discharge & Payment > Defenses > General Overview

Contracts Law > ... > Discharge & Payment > Defenses > Illegalities

HN13[ Defenses, Failure of Consideration

When the defense is founded on illegality of consideration it is to be distinguished from a defense on the ground of a want or failure in the consideration by this peculiarity: that a partial illegality vitiates the bill or note in toto, while the partial want or failure of consideration only vitiates it pro tanto. And a mortgage to secure a bill or note of which the consideration is in part illegal is also wholly void. If, however, the legal portion of the consideration were distinctly severable, the party could still recover by the proper action to its proportionate extent, though not upon the bill or note.

Contracts Law > ... > Methods of Perfection > Financing Statements > General Overview

Contracts Law > Defenses > Illegal Bargains

Contracts Law > Types of Commercial Transactions > Secured Transactions > General Overview

Contracts Law > ... > Secured Transactions > Security Agreements > General Overview

Real Property Law > ... > Mortgages & Other Security Instruments > Satisfaction & Termination > General Overview

HN14 [blue icon] Methods of Perfection, Financing Statements

Where a chattel mortgage is made to secure, in part, a valid debt, and, in part, money advanced upon an illegal contract, the chattel mortgage may be enforced to the extent of the valid debt, although void as to the residue.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud > False Pretenses > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Fraud > False Pretenses > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Trials > Burdens of Proof > Prosecution

HN15 [blue icon] False Pretenses, Elements

In order to sustain a prosecution for obtaining property by false pretenses the pretenses must be shown to have been false. It is not enough even that the defendant believed them to be false; there can be no conviction unless they were false in fact. The allegation in an information that a defendant obtained money by false pretenses through the sale of property represented to be clear when in fact there was a mortgage upon it can only be responded to by proof of the existence of a valid mortgage.

Syllabus

---

SYLLABUS BY THE COURT.

1. STATUTORY CONSTRUCTION -- Statute Prohibiting Combinations--Repeal by Implication. Chapter 158 of the Laws of 1891 (Gen. Stat. 1901, §§ 2439-2441), prohibiting combinations to prevent competition among persons engaged in buying and selling live stock, is superseded by the general antitrust law of 1897 (Laws 1897, ch. 265; Gen. Stat. 1901, §§ 7864-7874), and is no longer in force.
2. MONOPOLIES--Dealing in Live Stock--Violation of Antitrust Law. An association of persons and corporations engaged in the business of buying and selling live stock, and practically controlling that business at the place of operation, which has a by-law forbidding its members to buy or sell live stock for others without charging a commission therefor of at least fifty cents a head, is a combination to carry out restrictions in the full and free pursuit of a lawful business, and in virtue of that fact is a trust within the terms of chapter 265 of the Laws of 1897.

3. CONTRACTS--Commission--Void Because Made in Violation of Law. The charging of a commission for services in the purchase of live stock for another, by a member of such a [***2] trust, in pursuance of the by-law referred to, is an act made a misdemeanor by that statute, and a contract to pay a commission exacted under such circumstances is void because made in violation of law.

4. CONTRACTS--Illegal Consideration--Case Disapproved. A note and mortgage given for a consideration, a part of which is unlawful because based upon a transaction made criminal by the statute, are wholly void. The language of the second paragraph of the syllabus in Rathbone v. Boyd, 30 Kan. 485, 2 P. 664, and of the corresponding portion of the opinion, is disapproved.

5. CONTRACTS--Consideration in Part Unlawful. Where two notes secured by a mortgage are given for a consideration in part unlawful, although the unlawful portion of the consideration is less than either of the notes, both of the notes and the mortgage are wholly void.

6. CRIMINAL LAW--Obtaining Money by False Pretenses--Defense. In a prosecution under an information charging the obtaining of money by false pretenses through selling as clear cattle that were in fact mortgaged, it is competent for the defendant to show in defense that the mortgage relied upon by the state, although fair on [***3] its face, was void by reason of being based in part upon a consideration made illegal by the antitrust statute.

Judges: MASON, J. All the Justices concurring.

Opinion by: MASON

Opinion

---

[**737] [*344] The opinion of the court was delivered by

MASON, J.: Charles L. Wilson was prosecuted and convicted upon a charge of obtaining money by false pretenses by selling cattle which he represented to be clear of encumbrance when in fact they were covered by a mortgage. At the trial, for the purpose of establishing that the mortgage in question was void, and therefore in law no mortgage at all, he offered to prove that the mortgagee was a member of the Kansas City Livestock Exchange, that this exchange was an unlawful combination under the provisions of various statutes of Kansas known as the antitrust laws, and that the mortgage was given in pursuance of the unlawful purposes of such combination, and was therefore, by the very terms of these acts, illegal and unenforceable. The trial court rejected all evidence bearing upon this matter, and at the original hearing of the defendant's appeal the most serious question presented was whether this ruling was erroneous. Three statutes were invoked [***4] by the defendant in this connection, namely: Chapter 257 of the Laws of 1889 (Gen. Stat. 1901, §§ 2430-2438), which forbids divers enumerated agreements in restraint of trade; chapter 158 of the Laws of 1891 (Gen. Stat. 1901, §§ 2439-2441), which relates specifically to combinations of persons engaged in buying or selling live stock; and chapter 265 of the Laws of 1897 (Gen. Stat. 1901, §§ 7864-7874), which denominates associations for various purposes as [*345] trusts, makes them unlawful, and provides direct and indirect penalties for the doing by their members of the prohibited acts.

This court upon first consideration was of the opinion that the statutes of 1891 and 1897 should be construed together. Under such construction it was held that the validity of the mortgage must be tested by the provisions of the act of 1891, because of their more specific reference to transactions of the character of that involved, and that as so tested it was not void. This view involved deciding in the negative a question which in the course of the discussion had been suggested by the state, but had not been fully argued upon either side, namely, whether the statute of 1897 was intended to [***5] cover the whole subject-matter of the act of 1891, and therefore to supersede it entirely. By reason of a very serious doubt of the correctness of the first impression of the court in this respect a rehearing was granted, and upon further consideration in the light of a full presentation of the matter the unanimous conclusion is reached that the later enactment was designed as a complete substitute for the earlier one.

The legislation of 1891 was entitled "An act prohibiting combinations to prevent competition among persons engaged in buying or selling live stock," etc. It forbade any agreement among such persons having the purpose or effect to prevent competition in the business of selling live stock for others, or to fix a minimum commission for such services. The act of 1897 makes no specific reference to agreements concerning commissions for the purchase or sale of live stock, and in the opinion announcing the decision of the case in this court it was said that the mere general expressions of the later act did not evince a purpose to replace the more definite provisions of the earlier one. However, HN1[<sup>1</sup>] the first subdivision of section 1 of the act of 1897 (Gen. Stat. 1901, § 7864) [***6] makes unlawful [**738] any combination "to create or carry out restrictions in trade or [*346] commerce, or aids to commerce, or to carry out restrictions in the full and free pursuit of any business authorized or permitted by the laws of this state," and our final conclusion is that, whether or not any other provisions of this act should be construed as having that purpose, the portion quoted was intended to reach among other evils the very one denounced by the statute of 1891, for an agreement between persons engaged in buying and selling live stock for others that a minimum commission for their services shall be maintained is of necessity a restriction in commerce and in the full and free pursuit of a lawful business. Upon this ground we hold that HN2[<sup>1</sup>] the law of 1897 leaves no field for the operation of that of 1891, and therefore becomes a substitute for it and effects its repeal by implication.

This view is supported by two additional considerations: The act of 1897 presents a plan of handling the whole subject of trusts, and it is difficult to fit into it the provisions of the act of 1891 without marring its completeness and recognizing distinctions between essentially [***7] similar matters, such as we cannot believe the legislature intended; and, while there is no repealing clause in the law of 1897, section 11 (Gen. Stat. 1901, § 7874) provides that the act of which it is a part shall not be construed to affect any action pending under any earlier law. This saving clause, which expressly retains the vitality of the former statutes so far as concerns proceedings already begun under them, fairly implies that they are to have no further force, but are to be regarded as repealed except to the extent indicated.

The view that the law of 1897 is complete in itself, and does not require to be interpreted in connection with that of 1891, reopens the entire question whether the defendant should have been permitted to give in evidence the circumstances under which the mortgage referred to was made. He offered, among other things, to prove that it was given to a member of the Kansas City Live-stock Exchange; that this exchange was an [*347] association of persons engaged in buying and selling live stock for others, and practically controlling that business at Kansas City; that a by-law of such association forbade its members to charge a less commission for [***8] such services than fifty cents a head; that a part of the consideration of the two notes to secure which the mortgage was given was a charge of $ 201 for the services of the mortgagee in purchasing for the mortgagor the 402 head of cattle covered by the mortgage; that this commission was fixed and exacted in pursuance of the by-law already mentioned. Would these facts, if proved, render the mortgage void? It follows from what has already been said that they would show that the Kansas City Live-stock Exchange was a trust within the terms of the statute of 1897. HN3[<sup>1</sup>] Section 1 of that statute reads:

"A trust is a combination of capital, skill, or acts, by two or more persons, firms, corporations, or associations of persons, or either two or more of them, for either, any or all of the following purposes:

"First, To create or carry out restrictions in trade or commerce or aids to commerce, or to carry out restrictions in the full and free pursuit of any business authorized or permitted by the laws of this state.

"Second, To increase or reduce the price of merchandise, produce or commodities, or to control the cost or rates of insurance.

"Third, To prevent competition in the [***9] manufacture, making, transportation, sale or purchase of merchandise, produce or commodities, or to prevent competition in aids to commerce.

"Fourth, To fix any standard or figure, whereby its price to the public shall be, in any manner, controlled or established, any article or commodity of merchandise, produce or commerce intended for sale, use or consumption in this state.

HN4[] "Fifth, To make or enter into, or execute or carry out, any contract, obligation or agreement of any kind or description by which they shall bind or have to bind themselves not to sell, manufacture, dispose of or transport any article or commodity, or article of trade, use, merchandise, commerce or consumption below a common standard figure or by which they shall agree [*348] in any manner to keep the price of such article, commodity or transportation at a fixed or graded figure, or by which they shall in any manner establish or settle the price of any article or commodity or transportation between them or themselves and others, to preclude a free and unrestricted competition among themselves or others in transportation, sale or manufacture of any such article or commodity, or by which they shall [***10] agree to pool, combine or unite any interest they may have in connection with the manufacture, sale or transportation of any such article or commodity, that its price may in any manner be affected.

"And any such combinations are hereby declared to be against public policy, unlawful and void." (Laws 1897, ch. 265, § 1; Gen. Stat. 1901, § 7864.)

It is needless to determine in this connection the effect of any of the subdivisions of the section except the first, for that is sufficient for the present purpose. The business of buying and selling cattle is one permitted by the laws of this state. An agreement among the members of an association which practically controls this business at a great commercial center that they will make no purchases or sales for others without charging as a commission for their services at least fifty cents for each head of cattle handled obviously creates a restriction in the full and free pursuit of that business. It also seemingly creates a restriction in commerce, although Hopkins v. United States, 171 U.S. 578, 19 S. Ct. 40, 43 L. Ed. 290, and Anderson v. United States, 171 U.S. 604, 19 S. Ct. 50, 43 L. Ed. 300, are [***11] cited as holding against this. These cases, however, merely [**739] decide that agreements such as that referred to are not in direct restraint of interstate commerce, as such.

Was the mortgage void if it was made to a member of a trust under the circumstances claimed by the defendant? The question is rendered one of great importance by reason of the possible far-reaching consequences of an affirmative answer. It, together with related questions, has been argued at length, not only by counsel for the parties to this action but also by [*349] attorneys appearing as amici curiae, presumably in behalf of clients whose interests may be affected by the conclusion reached. Since the motion for a rehearing was granted requests for extensions of time for presentation of the matter have been repeatedly granted, in order that the fullest opportunity for discussion might be given. HN5[] The parts of the statute especially relied upon by the defendant in this connection read:

"SEC. 5. Every person, company or corporation within or without this state, their officers, agents, representatives or consignees, violating any of the provisions of this act, within this state, are hereby denied [***12] the right, and are hereby prohibited from doing any business within this state. . . .

"SEC. 6. Each and every person, company or corporation, their officers, agents, representatives or consignees, who, either directly or indirectly, violate any of the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and on conviction thereof shall be subject to a fine of not less than one hundred dollars nor more than one thousand dollars, and shall be imprisoned not less than thirty days nor more than six months. . . .

HN6[] "SEC. 7. Any contract or agreement in violation of any of the provisions of this act shall be absolutely void and not enforceable in any of the courts of this state, and when any civil action shall be commenced in any court of this state, it shall be lawful to plead in the defense thereof that the plaintiff or any other person interested in the prosecution of the case is at the time or has within one year next preceding the date of the commencement of any such action been guilty, either as principal, agent, representative, or consignee, directly or indirectly, of a violation of any of the provisions of this act, or that the cause of action grows out of any business transaction [***13] in violation of this act." (Laws 1897, ch. 265; Gen. Stat. 1901, §§ 7868-7870.)

They who contend that the mortgage in question would be valid notwithstanding this statute, although executed under the circumstances stated by the defendant, rely upon the cases of Barton v. Mulvane, 59 Kan. 313, 52 P. 883, Ice Co. v. Wylie, 65 Kan. 104, 68 P. 1086, and The State v. Jack, 69 Kan. 387, 76 P. 911. [*350] These cases, however, proceed upon the theory that a wrong-doer is not to be deprived of his right to maintain an action in court merely because he has violated the law in some matter having no relation to the subject of the litigation. This principle forbids the enforcement of the literal terms of the section last quoted, but leaves an abundant field for their operation as reasonably construed. As was said in the case last cited:

HN7[<sup>14</sup>] "The provisions of section 7 (Gen. Stat. 1901, § 7870) that in any civil action there may be pleaded in defense that the plaintiff, or any person interested in the prosecution, has within one year been guilty of a violation of any of the provisions of the act, as held in Barton v. Mulvane, 59 Kan. 313, 52 P. 883, [***14] under a very similar provision of the antitrust act of 1889 (Laws 1889, ch. 257), contemplates only civil actions relating to, and growing out of, transactions prohibited by the act. It was not intended by the legislature to deprive the litigant of the right to resort to the courts for the protection of property rights and interests not connected with such combinations or trusts. Thus interpreted, the provision is a valid exercise of legislative power, and is not open to the charge of appellant that it constitutes outlawry." (Page 399.)

The contention here made is that the mortgage was void, not because it was given to one who was a member of an unlawful combination, but because a part of its consideration--the charge made for commission--was itself illegal. This is not an instance of an attempt to fasten a disability to sue upon an individual because of his violation of the law in some independent or collateral matter; the objection goes to the contract itself. HN8[<sup>15</sup>] The statute forbids a member of a trust to do any business in the state--that is to say, as properly interpreted, to do any business in promotion of, or in pursuance of, the purposes of the trust. Assuming the facts to be [***15] as alleged by the defendant, the mortgagee, a member of the trust, bought these cattle for him, and in pursuance of the obnoxious by-law made him a charge of fifty cents a head for such service. This was an illegal act, and the contract to pay such [*351] commission was a contract to pay a sum exacted in defiance of the law. The contract for this payment was, therefore, a contract in violation of the statute, by the very terms of which such contracts are made not merely non-enforceable, but absolutely void. (9 Cyc. 475.)

A part of the consideration of the mortgage was therefore illegal, if the facts were as the defendant attempted to show. Would this render the mortgage itself void? The generally accepted rule is that HN9[<sup>16</sup>] if any part of a single consideration or either of two separate considerations of a contract is illegal the entire contract is void, although where two promises, one of which is illegal, are made upon a lawful consideration, the promise which is unobjectionable is ordinarily held to be enforceable. (See 9 Cyc. 564-566, where the cases bearing upon the matter are collected and classified by states.) It is true that there are cases arising upon contracts based in [***16] part upon a legal, and in part upon an illegal, consideration where the courts [*740] have permitted an enforcement to the extent of the good consideration. But for the most part such cases purport to follow the general rule as above stated, but reach a result at variance therewith by failing to distinguish between a consideration which is merely insufficient to support a promise and one which is actually against the law or contrary to good morals. Where one of two considerations, or a distinct part of one consideration, is for any reason not capable of sustaining a contract, but is not otherwise obnoxious to the law, the courts universally recognize the situation as a partial failure of consideration and permit a pro tanto recovery. But HN10[<sup>17</sup>] where one of two considerations, or a distinct part of one consideration, is unlawful, as being forbidden either by the statute or by the common law, the prevailing view is that the partial illegality taints the entire transaction, and the contract itself is void. According to the great weight of authority, and as we think also according to the better reason, this doctrine [*352] is applicable where a note or series of notes is given [***17] for a consideration a specific and ascertained amount of which is illegal--for example, for an indebtedness composed of various items, some lawful and some unlawful. A typical and often-cited case is that of Widoe v. Webb, 20 Ohio St. 431, 5 Am. Rep. 664, where an action was brought upon a note given in settlement of an account which included various separate charges made for intoxicating liquor sold in violation of law. In the opinion it was said:

"The concurrent doctrine of the text-books on the law of contracts is that HN11[<sup>18</sup>] if one of two considerations of a promise be void merely, the other will support the promise; but that if one of two considerations be unlawful, the promise is void. When, however, for a legal consideration, a party undertakes to do one or more acts, and some of them are unlawful, the contract is good for so much as is lawful, and void for the residue. Whenever the unlawful part of the contract can be separated from the rest it will be rejected, and the remainder established. But this cannot be done when one of two or more considerations is unlawful, whether the promise be to do one lawful act, or two or more acts, part of which are unlawful; [***18] because the whole consideration is the basis of the whole promise.

The parts are inseparable. [Citing text-writers.] Whilst a partial want or failure of consideration avoids a bill or note only pro tanto, illegality in respect to a part of the consideration avoids it in toto. The reason of this distinction is said to be founded, partly at least, on grounds of public policy, and partly on the technical notion that the security is entire, and cannot be apportioned; and it has been said with much force that, where parties have woven a web of fraud or wrong, it is no part of the duty of courts of justice to unravel the threads and separate the sound from the unsound. . . . The suit was upon a promissory note alone--upon a single and entire promise. This note was given in settlement of an account embracing transactions between the parties for a period of eighteen months. The evidence tended to show that whilst some of these transactions were proper and legal, yet many of the items of the account were for intoxicating liquors sold by the plaintiff to the defendant in direct violation of [*353] the provisions of a highly penal statute. The contract evidenced [***19] by the note was illegal and void, because these sales of liquors, which formed a part of its consideration, were clearly illegal.

"With respect to the items of the plaintiff's account which were unconnected with the illegal sales, he might well have maintained an action on the original contracts of sale, even after the giving of this note, for, being utterly void, it discharged none of the just indebtedness of the defendant. But he chose to sue upon the note which was prima facie evidence of indebtedness to the extent of the whole sum promised to be paid, and thus attempted to throw upon the defendant the burden of showing how much of it was given upon an illegal consideration, and upon the court the task of separating the sound from the unsound. If this effort should result in his losing what was justly due him, we can but repeat what was said in a similar case: 'It is but a reasonable punishment for including with his just due that which he had no right to take.'" (Pages 435, 437.)

So in the case of Wadsworth v. Dunnam, 117 Ala. 661, 23 So. 699:

"The doctrine of the common law, as it is laid down in the text-books, and supported by numerous adjudications, [***20] is that HN12 if any part of the entire consideration for a promise, or any part of an entire promise, is illegal, whether by statute or at common law, the whole contract is void. Indeed, the courts go far in refusing to found any rights upon wrong-doing.' [Citing authorities.] . . . There has not, perhaps, been more frequent application of the doctrine than to promissory notes, or other evidences of debt, taken in settlement of accounts for goods, wares, or merchandise, items of which were for goods sold on Sunday, or for spirituous liquors sold in violation of law. The accounts may have contained items having no connection with the illegal sales; items for goods not sold on Sunday, or items for the sales of goods not prohibited. When all are blended, and a promissory note is taken for the whole, the note is entire and indivisible, and upon it there can be no recovery. . . . The complaint declares on eight several promissory notes, and the uncontested fact is that these notes were given in settlement of an account for goods and merchandise [*354] sold by the plaintiffs to the defendant. And there was evidence tending to show that some of the sales were made on Sunday, and some [***21] were of ginseng cordial, an intoxicating drink, in violation of a law prevailing in the locality of the sale, rendering such sale an indictable [**741] offense. If there were items of the account closed by the notes not tainted with illegality--unconnected with the illegal sale--the plaintiffs could have maintained an action on the original contracts of sale, though the notes had been taken. The notes, if tainted with illegality, are utterly void; incapable of discharging the just indebtedness of the defendant." (Page 670.)

To the same effect are: Hanauer v. Doane, 79 U.S. 342, 20 L. Ed. 439; Douthart v. Congdon, 197 Ill. 349, 64 N.E. 348; Bick v. Seal, 45 Mo. App. 475; Cotten v. McKenzie, 57 Miss. 418; Carleton v. Woods, 28 N.H. 290; Snyder v. Willey, 33 Mich. 483; Deering v. Chapman, 22 Me. 488, 39 Am. Dec. 592. This application of the doctrine is almost universally upheld by the text-writers. For instance, in volume 1 of Daniel on Negotiable Instruments, fifth edition, section 204, the author says:

HN13 "When the defense is founded on illegality of consideration [***22] it is to be distinguished from a defense on the ground of a want or failure in the consideration by this peculiarity--that a partial illegality vitiates the bill or note in toto, while the partial want or failure of consideration only vitiates it pro tanto. And a mortgage to secure a bill or note of which the consideration is in part illegal is also wholly void. The reason of the distinction is based mainly upon the ground of public policy, the court not undertaking to unravel a web of fraud for the benefit of the party who has woven it. If, however, the legal portion of the consideration were distinctly severable, the party could still recover by the proper action to its proportionate extent, though not upon the bill or note."

(See, also, 1 Parsons, Cont., 9th ed., 456; Chitty, Cont., 10th Am. ed., 730; Jones, Chat. Mort., 4th ed., § 350; Pollock's Prin. of Cont., 1st Am. ed., 318; Anson, Cont., 2d Am. ed., 252; 1 Edwards, Bills, Notes & Neg. [*355] Inst., 3d ed., § 471; Bishop, Cont. § 74; 2 Beach, Modern Law of Cont. § 1422; Benj. Prin. of Cont. 27; Comyn, Cont., 3d Am. ed., 20; Metcalf, Cont. 247; MacLaren, Bills, Notes & Cheques, 2d ed., 185; Story, Prom. Notes, [***23] 5th ed., § 190; Wood's Byles, Bills & Notes, 146; 1 Story, Cont., 5th ed., § 583; 1 Page, Cont. 777; Lawson, Cont., 2d ed., § 335; 2 Addison, Cont., 8th ed., with American notes, 1169, note; Clark, Cont. 471; 4 A. & E. Encycl. of L. 192; 17 A. & E. Encycl. of L. 308.)

The second paragraph of the syllabus in Rathbone v. Boyd, 30 Kan. 485, 2 P. 664, seemingly does not accord with the general rule already stated. It reads:

HN14 [↑] "Where a chattel mortgage is made to secure, in part, a valid debt, and, in part, money advanced upon an illegal contract, the chattel mortgage may be enforced to the extent of the valid debt, although void as to the residue."

This portion of the syllabus and the corresponding part of the opinion may not have been essential to the determination of the case, but whether this be so or not we cannot accept the view there expressed as controlling upon the matter now under consideration, for the reason that it was announced without discussion and seemingly without examination of the consequences attached by the courts to a partial illegality of consideration, as distinguished from mere insufficiency. In a later case, Fleming v. Greene, 48 Kan. 646, 30 P. 11, [***24] while the precise point was not directly involved, the court quoted with approval a statement of the general doctrine taken from Widoe v. Webb, 20 Ohio St. 431, 5 Am. Rep. 664, which is included in the quotation already made from that case. (See, also, Gerlach v. Skinner, 34 Kan. 86, 8 P. 257, 55 Am. Rep. 240; Stansfield v. Kunz, 62 Kan. 797, 64 P. 614.)

There are cases holding that where a mortgage is given to secure two separate debts, one only of which is unlawful, the mortgage may be enforced to the extent of the valid indebtedness. In Shaw v. Carpenter, 1\*3561 54 Vt. 155, 41 Am. Rep. 837, although the court professed to approve and follow Carleton v. Woods, 28 N.H. 290, a mortgage given to secure several notes a part of the consideration of which was illegal was permitted to be enforced to the extent of the valid consideration, upon the theory that equity was thereby done. In a dissenting opinion these cases were reviewed, and it was pointed out that even if a mortgage securing two notes, one good and one unlawful, may have vitality as to the valid note, yet where the notes themselves are [***25] void because tainted with an illegal consideration the mortgage can have no efficacy whatever. The distinction is obviously sound, and even though the correctness of the conclusion in Rathbone v. Boyd, 30 Kan. 485, 2 P. 664, were conceded it would not give force to the mortgage in the present case, for the two notes secured by it are equally affected by the illegality of consideration, and if the notes are void the mortgage is necessarily so.

The supreme court of Indiana, in Hynds v. Hays, 25 Ind. 31, repudiated the generally accepted doctrine in an opinion which presents a plausible and complete argument in favor of the position taken, based upon the view that a note given for two distinct considerations is to be treated as a severable contract. We cannot, however, regard it as affording sufficient ground for departing from a rule so reasonable in itself and so firmly entrenched in the authorities.

The case of Carradine v. Wilson, 61 Miss. 573, is one which supports the validity of the mortgage, but upon a different theory. It was there held that where two notes were given for a consideration a part of which was illegal, each note [***26] being for a greater amount than the illegal portion of the consideration, and a mortgage was given securing both notes, the unlawful consideration could be referred to one of the notes, rendering it void, but thereby purging the other note of the illegality and leaving [**742] the mortgage as a valid security for the second note. The facts of the present case are substantially [*357] the same. The illegal consideration was but $ 201. Two notes were given, respectively for $ 6000 and $ 7366.80. We cannot agree, however, that there is any doctrine of law or reason that would justify considering the commission charge as having entered as an entirety into one note and none of it as having been incorporated in the other. There was in fact but one transaction. The Mississippi court bases its view largely upon Zundt v. Roberts, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 139, and Warren v. Chapman, 105 Mass. 87. The former case is at variance with the prevailing view, and has done much to promote such conflict as there is in the decisions. The latter holds that where one owes two debts, one legal and one illegal, and gives his creditor a note for an amount less than the valid part of his [***27] obligation, with no express direction as to its application, the law will apply it to the good and not to the bad account, and treat it as supported by a valid consideration. This is an entirely reasonable proposition, but it has no tendency to support the conclusion reached in Carradine v. Wilson, 61 Miss. 573. It results from what has been said that the view of this court is that upon the facts as the defendant sought to develop them the mortgage given by him was void.

Some attack has been made upon the constitutionality of the antitrust statute of 1897, but we think the questions so suggested are set at rest by the decisions of this court and of the federal supreme court. ( The State v. Smiley, 65 Kan. 240, 69 P. 199, 67 L.R.A. 903; Smiley v. Kansas, 196 U.S. 447, 25 S. Ct. 289, 49 L. Ed. 546.)

Was it competent for the defendant to show that the mortgage was in fact void for the reason suggested, although the invalidity did not appear on the face of the instrument? The notes were non-negotiable, so that the question is not affected by any considerations of the possible rights of an innocent purchaser. There was evidence that the [***28] complaining witness, who bought the cattle from the defendant, was required to pay the [*358] mortgage, not being advised of any fault in its origin. There is an obvious incongruity under the circumstances in permitting the defendant to escape punishment by showing that his representations that the cattle were clear were in fact true because the mortgage upon them was void under the antitrust law, although fair and legal on its face. The wrong and fraud practiced upon the complainant are not mitigated by the existence of this concealed defense to the mortgage. Yet the criminal law can only be administered in accordance with fixed and unyielding rules. And no principle of criminal law is better settled than that HN15[↑] in order to sustain a prosecution for obtaining property by false pretenses the pretenses must be shown to have been false. It is not enough even that the defendant believed them to be false; there can be no conviction unless they were false in fact. (19 Cyc. 394.) The allegation in an information that a defendant obtained money by false pretenses through the sale of property represented to be clear when in fact there was a mortgage upon it can only be responded to by proof [***29] of the existence of a valid mortgage. ( Satchell v. The State, 1 Tex. Ct. App. 438; State v. Asher, 50 Ark. 427, 8 S.W. 177; State v. Garris, 98 N.C. 733, 4 S.E. 633; Keller v. The State, 51 Ind. 111.) If, for instance, the mortgage had been paid, there is no doubt that the establishment of this fact would require an acquittal, although the notes and mortgage were outstanding, uncanceled and unreleased, and although the purchaser might have been inconvenienced thereby.

The information in this case charged in set terms that the mortgage in question constituted a valid lien on the cattle. But even in the absence of an express averment of its validity the mortgage referred to must have been understood to be a valid and not a void one. It is possible that if this defense had been anticipated a good information might have been framed by charging the defendant with selling cattle under the representation that he had signed no instrument purporting [*359] to encumber them by which a colorable claim of lien upon them might be asserted, whereas in truth he had executed what appeared to be a good mortgage upon them, which [***30] fact caused them to be less valuable to the purchaser than they would otherwise have been, and that by reason of this apparent lien the purchaser, not being advised of any defect in the mortgage, was required to pay the amount or lose the cattle. Under such allegations a conviction might perhaps have been sustained irrespective of the legal sufficiency of the mortgage.

The judgment of conviction is reversed, and a new trial ordered.

All the Justices concurring.

State v. Wilson

Supreme Court of Kansas

January, 1906, Decided ; April 8, 1905, Filed

No. 13,737.

Reporter

73 Kan. 334 *; 80 P. 639 **; 1906 Kan. LEXIS 256 ***

THE STATE OF KANSAS v. CHARLES L. WILSON.

Prior History: [***1] Appeal from Shawnee district court; Z. T. HAZEN, judge. First opinion filed April 8, 1905. Affirmed. Rehearing granted June 10, 1905. Second opinion filed April 7, 1906. Reversed.

Core Terms

---

mortgage, cattle, buying, provisions, selling, livestock, commerce

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Contracts Law > Contract Conditions & Provisions > General Overview

Contracts Law > Defenses > Illegal Bargains

HN1[] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

There are provisions of 1897 Kan. Sess. Laws ch. 265, Kan. Gen. Stat. §§ 7864-7874 (1901), that purport to make the fact that a business is an unlawful combination alone a complete bar to the enforcement of a contract made in Kansas by one of its members. Such provisions must be interpreted, however, as applying only to contracts made pursuant to the illegal combination, and in furtherance of its unlawful purposes.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN2[] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

1897 Kan. Sess. Laws ch. 265, Kan. Gen. Stat. §§ 7864-7874 (1901), being penal, requires a strict rather than a free construction. Moreover, its interpretation is affected by another consideration. The Act of 1897 is so similar in many respects to 1889 Kan. Sess. Laws ch. 257, Kan. Gen. Stat. §§ 2430-2438 (1901), as to give plausibility to the suggestion that it was intended to cover the whole of the subject-matter of the earlier statute and entirely to supersede it. On the other hand, 1891 Kan. Sess. Laws ch. 158, Kan. Gen. Stat. §§ 2439-2441 (1901), is so specific in its terms, and there is such a lack of any apparent attempt to accomplish its precise purpose by the later enactment, that there is little room for a contention that it has been repealed by implication, and it is still in force. This being decided, 1897 Kan. Sess. Laws ch. 265, Kan. Gen. Stat. §§ 2439-2441 (1901), since they relate to the same general subject, must be construed together, as though parts of the same enactment. In this situation, it is to the specific statute, and not to the general one, that a court must look for an expression of the intent of the legislature with regard to the matter of regulating the business of buying and selling cattle upon commission.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Contracts Law > Defenses > Illegal Bargains

HN3 Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Upon a cursory inspection 1891 Kan. Sess. Laws ch. 158, Kan. Gen. Stat. §§ 2439-2441 (1901), may seem abundantly sufficient to stamp as illegal any agreement for the control of the commission to be charged for services either in buying or selling live stock. A careful reading, however, discloses that while the persons against whom it is directed are described as those engaged in the business of buying or selling live stock upon commission, the agreements declared to be illegal are in every instance those relating to the establishment of fixed or minimum charges for services in the sale, but not in the purchase, of live stock for others.

Syllabus

---

SYLLABUS BY THE COURT.

1. STATUTORY CONSTRUCTION--Statute Prohibiting Combinations Not Repealed by Subsequent Enactment. Chapter 158 of the Laws of 1891 (Gen. Stat. 1901, §§ 2439-2441), prohibiting combinations to prevent competition among persons engaged in buying or selling live stock, is not superseded by the general antitrust law of 1897 (Laws 1897, ch. 265; Gen. Stat. 1901, §§ 7864-7874), but is still in force. (See post, p. 343.)
2. CONTRACTS--Commissions for Buying and Selling Live Stock--Legislative Restrictions. The intention of the legislature as to restrictions to be placed upon agreements among persons engaged in buying and selling live stock for others for the control of the commissions to be charged must be determined from the act of 1891, above cited, having specific relation thereto, and not from the general antitrust act of 1897 or from that of 1889 (Laws 1889, ch. 257; Gen. Stat. 1901, §§ 2430-2438).
3. MONOPOLIES--Dealing in Live Stock--Statute Construed. [***2] The act of 1891 above cited forbids agreements to maintain minimum rates of commission for services in the sale of live stock for others, but contains no such prohibition as to agreements concerning charges to be made for services in purchasing live stock.
4. MONOPOLIES--Mortgage Given to Secure Purchase-money and Commissions--Validity. Where a member of an association having for one of its purposes the maintenance of a minimum rate of charges for services in buying or selling live stock for others purchases cattle for another, and in pursuance of a bylaw of such association charges a commission for such services at the rate of fifty cents per head, which is included in the amount of a note and mortgage given to such member of such association by the purchaser in payment for such cattle, such mortgage is not on account thereof rendered void by the provisions of any of the statutes above cited.
5. CRIMINAL LAW--Obtaining Money by False Pretenses--Information. In a prosecution for obtaining money by false pretenses by selling property encumbered by a mortgage under the representation that it is clear, it is not essential that the information should show whether the [***3] mortgagee, described as "the A. J. Gillespie Commission Company," is a corporation or a partnership.

6. CRIMINAL LAW--Same. In such prosecution an allegation of the information that at the time of the sale the property was encumbered by a mortgage sufficiently charges that the mortgage was unpaid.

7. CRIMINAL LAW--Allegations and Proof--Variance. In such a prosecution the proof of a mortgage given for $ 13,366.80, the amount stated in the information being $ 13,336.80, is not a fatal variance.

8. CRIMINAL LAW--Same. In such a prosecution the allegation of the information that the mortgage had been by the mortgagee as signed to, and was owned by, a bank and one Louis Hax is sufficiently sustained by proof that the mortgagee had sold the two notes secured by the mortgage, under a blank indorsement, to a buyer who in turn without further writing sold and delivered them to the bank, and that the bank then sold one of them to Hax.

9. CRIMINAL LAW--Draft--Defendant's Title as Trustee Not Conclusively Shown. In such a prosecution the fact that the draft charged to have been fraudulently obtained by the defendant was made payable to him "for the use of" [***4] the person alleged to have been defrauded does not conclusively show that the defendant acquired title to it only as a trustee, but is open to the explanation that the words quoted were intended as a mere memorandum to indicate upon whose account the payment was made.

Counsel: C. C. Coleman, attorney-general, Otis E. Hungate, county attorney, and Aaron P. Jetmore, for The State; Frank Hagerman, and Botsford, Deatherage & Young, as amici curiae.

Eugene Hagan, A. F. Williams, A. E. Crane, and Hayden & Hayden, for appellant; D. R. Hite, of counsel.

Judges: MASON, J. All Justices concurring.

Opinion by: MASON

Opinion

---

[**640] [*335] The opinion of the court was delivered by

MASON, J.: Charles L. Wilson appeals from a conviction upon a charge of fraudulently obtaining property by false pretenses. The evidence of the state [*336] tended to show that in October, 1898, Wilson and one George Maris purchased a herd of 402 steers, in payment for which they executed two notes to the A. J. Gillespie Commission Company for the aggregate amount of $ 13,366.80, secured by a mortgage upon the cattle; that in the following December they sold 397 of these steers to the Elk Grove Land and Cattle Company, [***5] under the representation that they were clear of all encumbrance, obtaining in payment a check for $ 500 and a draft for $ 10,547; and that the buyer was compelled to lose the cattle or pay the mortgage.

A large number of assignments of error have been made and argued, but the one most urgently presented is based upon a contention of the defendant that the cattle were in fact unencumbered because the mortgage executed by himself and Maris was rendered incapable of enforcement by various provisions of the Kansas statutes known generically as the antitrust laws. This question was raised in the trial court by an offer on the part of the defendant to prove that the A. J. Gillespie Commission Company was a member of a voluntary association known as the Kansas City Live-stock Exchange, composed of persons and corporations engaged in the business of buying and selling live stock for themselves and for others, organized for unlawful purposes, among which was that of fixing and maintaining a minimum charge for commissions for their services in buying and selling cattle for others, such minimum charge being established by a by-law at fifty cents per head; that the cattle here involved were [***6] purchased by the Gillespie company for the defendant and Maris, a commission being charged in pursuance of the by-law referred to, amounting to $ 201, which was included in the sum for which the notes and mortgage were given. The offer was made in greater detail than here shown, and included a tender of a copy of the articles of association, rules and by-laws of the live-stock exchange. It was rejected by the court, and the controversy [*337] so far as this matter is concerned turns upon the correctness of that ruling.

Defendant in support of his contention invokes three statutes, enacted in different years--chapter 257 of the Laws of 1889 (Gen. Stat. 1901, §§ 2430-2438), chapter 158 of the Laws of 1891 (Gen. Stat. 1901, §§ 2439-2441), and chapter 265 of the Laws of 1897 (Gen. Stat. 1901, §§ 7864-7874). The first of these forbids certain contracts in restraint of trade. The second is narrow in its scope, and applies only to persons or corporations engaged in buying or selling live stock, who are prohibited by it from entering into any agreement to control the amount to be charged as compensation for services in making sales of live stock for others. The third is very sweeping [***7] in its provisions. It defines and denounces five kinds of combinations, which it denominates trusts. The definitions are couched in general terms, but cover almost every conceivable device by which freedom of commerce might be hampered, competition restricted, or the price of commodities controlled. All acts done in pursuance of any of the arrangements interdicted by these various statutes are made misdemeanors. The act of 1897 also contains these provisions:

"Any contract or agreement in violation of any of the provisions of this act shall be absolutely void and not enforceable in any of the courts of this state; and when any civil action shall be commenced in any court of this state it shall be lawful to plead in the defense thereof that . . . the cause of action grows out of any business transaction in violation of this act." (Gen. Stat. 1901, § 7870.)

The argument in behalf of the defendant is that, assuming the truth of the rejected evidence, the Kansas City Live-stock Exchange was an unlawful combination under each of these statutes; that in charging the defendant $ 201 as a commission for services in [**641] buying 402 head of cattle for him the Gillespie company acted [***8] under and in pursuance of the unlawful bond which [*338] united the members of the exchange, and thereby was guilty of a public offense; that the mortgage was unenforceable both because $ 201 of its consideration was on this account illegal and because it was made in violation of the provisions of the statute of 1897, or grew out of a business transaction in violation of that statute.

It may be assumed for the purposes of the case that the live-stock exchange was a trust within the meaning of the law of 1897 by reason of a number of its rules other than those relating to the regulation of commission charges. HN1 There are provisions of that law which purport to make such fact alone a complete bar to the enforcement of a contract made in this state by one of its members. Such provisions must be interpreted, however, as applying only to contracts made pursuant to the illegal combination, and in furtherance of its unlawful purposes. ( [Barton v. Mulvane, 59 Kan. 313, 52 P. 883; The State v. Jack, 69 Kan. 387, 76 P. 911.) Whether this mortgage was a contract of that character is the pertinent inquiry in this connection. The mere fact that the Gillespie [***9] company was a member of a trust when it bought these cattle for Wilson, paid for them, and took his notes and mortgage for the amount, did not taint the transaction with illegality. The feature of the proceeding of which complaint is made, and which causes the doubt of its validity, is the charge of a commission for services in making such purchase at the rate of fifty cents a head--the minimum rate fixed by & unlawful association. This being true, the mortgage was void only in case an agreement to maintain a minimum rate for such services is held to be one of those forbidden by statute.

There are general expressions in the law of 1897 which, if given a liberal construction, might be held to prohibit such an agreement; for instance, those directed against combinations intended "to create or carry out restrictions in trade or commerce, or aids to commerce," or "to carry out restrictions in the full and [*339] free pursuit of any business," or "to increase or reduce the price of merchandise, produce, or commodities," or "to prevent competition in the . . . sale or purchase of merchandise, produce, or commodities, or to prevent competition in aid to commerce," or "to fix any standard [***10] or figure, whereby its price to the public shall be, in any manner, controlled or established, any article or commodity of merchandise, produce or commerce intended for sale, use or consumption in this state." (Gen. Stat. 1901, § 7864.) HN2 The statute being penal, however, requires a strict rather than a free construction. Moreover, its interpretation is affected by another consideration. The act of 1897 is so similar in many respects to that of 1889 as to give plausibility to the suggestion that it was intended to cover the whole of the subject-matter of the earlier statute and entirely to supersede it. ( [The State v. Smiley, 65 Kan. 240, 69 P. 199.) On the other hand, the act of 1891 is so specific in its terms, and there is such a lack of any apparent attempt to accomplish its precise purpose by the later enactment, that there is little room for a contention that it has been repealed by implication, and we regard it as still in force. This being decided, the two acts, since they relate to the same general subject, must be construed together, as though parts of the same enactment. ( Wren & Clawson v. Comm'r's of Nemaha Co., 24 Kan. 301.) The precise scope [***11] of the earlier one is indicated by its title, which is "An act prohibiting combinations to prevent competition among persons engaged in buying or selling live stock," etc. In the later enactment there is no reference to this subject by any terms more definite than those already quoted. In this situation, it is to the specific statute, and not to the general one, that we must look for an expression of the intent of the legislature with regard to the matter of regulating the business of buying and selling cattle upon commission, and the prohibition against the transaction complained of by defendant must be found, if at all, in the statute of [*340] 1891, and not in that of 1897. ( Long v. Culp, 14 Kan. 412.)

HN3 Upon a cursory inspection the act of 1891 may seem abundantly sufficient to stamp as illegal any agreement for the control of the commission to be charged for services either in buying or selling live stock. A careful reading, however, discloses that while the persons against whom it is directed are described as those engaged in the business of buying or selling live stock upon commission, the agreements declared to be illegal are in every instance those [***12] relating to the establishment of fixed or minimum charges for services in the sale, but not in the purchase, of live stock for others. This cannot be deemed the result of a mere error, clerical or otherwise, for the expression occurs no less than four times. Why the legislature should have made a distinction between agreements relating to commissions for selling and those relating to commissions for buying is not a matter of inquiry here; that it has done so admits of no doubt. We cannot insert in the law an inhibition against the establishment of minimum charges for services in buying cattle, nor can we ignore the effect of the omission of the legislature so to do. As the commission charged to the defendant by the Gillespie company was for the purchase of cattle for him, not for their sale, it was not under the ban of the statute and did not invalidate the mortgage. If the law of 1889 is to be considered still in force the application of its general provisions to the matter here involved must be denied, upon the reasoning already employed with regard to the act of 1897. It results from these conclusions [**642] that the trial court committed no error in rejecting the evidence [***13] under consideration.

The matter of defense just discussed was advanced under singular circumstances. There is no pretense that the defendant informed the Elk Grove company, or that it was otherwise notified, of any claim that the mortgage was void because based upon an unlawful [*341] consideration, either before the cattle were sold or in time to have enabled the company to raise the question against the holder of the mortgage when the cattle were demanded under it. Selling property under the representation that the title is clear when in fact there is in existence a mortgage against it which is valid except for some latent defect unknown to the purchaser, and in virtue of which the property is successfully replevied from him, may be an offense in law, as it assuredly is in morals. But we have assumed that it was necessary for the state in order to convict in this case to prove the existence of a valid mortgage.

The defendant challenged the sufficiency of the information on the ground that it did not show whether the A. J. Gillespie Commission Company was a corporation or a partnership. Such an omission in laying the ownership of the stolen property in a prosecution for larceny [***14] would be fatal. ( The State v. Suppe, 60 Kan. 566, 57 P. 106.) The same degree of particularity is not required, however, in the description of the mortgagee in a case of this kind.

Another objection made was that the information did not state that the mortgage was unpaid. It did allege that at the time of the sale to the Elk Grove company the cattle were encumbered by the mortgage, and this was equivalent to an allegation that the mortgage at that time remained unsatisfied. ( Keyes v. The People, 197 Ill. 638, 64 N.E. 730.)

The information described the mortgage given by the defendant and Maris to the Gillespie company as one securing an indebtedness of $ 13,336.80. The proof showed that the mortgage debt was $ 13,366.80. This is claimed to be a fatal variance. It would not be profitable to review the great number of authorities cited in support of this contention. Whether or not it is possible to distinguish this case from those relied upon by the defendant, it is not necessary to do so. Notwithstanding anything that may have been said to the contrary by courts of eminent respectability, it is so [*342] manifest that the defendant could not [***15] by the most remote possibility have been misled by the inaccurate statement of the amount for which the mortgage was given that we have no hesitancy in holding that there is nothing substantial in the objection made.

The information alleged that the mortgage had been by the mortgagee assigned and transferred to, and was then owned by, the Central Savings Bank, of St. Joseph, Mo., and Louis Hax. The evidence was that the mortgagee sold the notes under a blank indorsement, that the buyer sold them to the St. Joseph bank, delivering them without further writing, and that the bank sold one of the notes to Louis Hax, retaining the other. This is also complained of as a variance. Granting that for some purposes the description of the notes as having been assigned to, and as being owned by, the bank and Hax was inapt, this is likewise a matter by which no prejudice could result to the defendant and for which it would be folly to set aside the conviction.

The draft which the defendant (jointly with Maris) was charged with having fraudulently obtained was issued by a bank cashier to the order of John Wilson & Co., and by the payees indorsed to "Maris & Wilson, for the use of Elk Grove Land [***16] and Cattle Company." It is urged that because of this restrictive indorsement Maris and Wilson acquired no beneficial title to the draft, but took it only in trust for the Elk Grove company. This might be deemed the effect of the indorsement in the absence of any explanation, but the evidence warrants the conclusion that it was intended to mean simply that the draft, although transferred by John Wilson & Co. direct to Maris and Wilson, was delivered to them on account of the Elk Grove company.

Other assignments of error have been argued with regard to the admission of evidence, the giving and refusing of instructions, and the denying of the motion for a new trial. It is not thought that they require [*343] separate statement or discussion. They have all been examined, and we reach the conclusion that the record is free from material error. The judgment is therefore affirmed.

All the Justices concurring.

---

End of Document

State v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co.

Supreme Court of Texas

February 26, 1906, Decided

No. 1491

Reporter

99 Tex. 516 *; 91 S.W. 214 **; 1906 Tex. LEXIS 125 ***

State of Texas v. Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway Company and American Express Company

Prior History: [***1] Questions certified from the Court of Civil Appeals for the Third District, in an appeal from Travis County.

Core Terms

---

transportation, railway company, Railroad, commodities, rates, combinations, facilities, parties, railroad company, carry out, skill, preparation, carriers, lines, transportation costs, merchandise, Antitrust, contracts, questions, carrying, commerce, pursuit, railway, restrictions, demurrer, products, binding, lessen, terms, deem

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Transportation > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN1[] Regulated Industries, Transportation

The Antitrust Act of 1903 provides in part that a trust is a combination of capital, skill, or acts by two or more persons, firms, or corporations or associations of persons, or either two or more of them for either, any, or all of the following purposes: To create or carry out restrictions in the free pursuit of any business authorized or permitted by the laws of Texas; To prevent or lessen competition in the transportation of merchandise, produce, or commodities; To fix or maintain any standard or figure whereby the cost of transportation shall be in any manner affected, controlled, or established.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Transportation > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN2[] Regulated Industries, Transportation

The Antitrust Act of 1903 provides in part that a trust is a combination of capital, skill, or acts by two or more persons, firms, or corporations or associations of persons, or either two or more of them for either, any, or all of the following purposes: To make, enter into, maintain, execute or carry out any contract, obligation or agreement by which the parties thereto bind, or have bound themselves not to sell, dispose of, transport or to prepare for market or transportation any article or commodity, or to make any contract of insurance at a price below a common standard or figure, or by which they shall agree in any manner to keep the price of such article or commodity or charge for transportation or insurance, or the cost of the preparation of any product for market or transportation at a fixed or graded figure, or by which they shall in any manner affect or maintain the price of any commodity or article or the cost of the transportation or insurance or the cost of the preparation of any product for market or transportation between them or themselves and others.

99 Tex. 516, *516L<sup>A</sup> S.W. 214, **214L<sup>A</sup>906 Tex. LEXIS 125, ***1

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > Transportation > General Overview

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Regulated Industry Mergers

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN3 Regulated Industries, Transportation

The Antitrust Act of 1903 provides in part that a trust is a combination of capital, skill, or acts by two or more persons, firms, or corporations or associations of persons, or either two or more of them for either, any, or all of the following purposes: To preclude a free and unrestricted competition among themselves or others in the sale or transportation of any such article or commodity or business of transportation or insurance or the preparation of any product for market or transportation, or by which they shall agree to pool, combine or unite any interest they may have in connection with the sale or purchase of any article or commodity or charge for transportation or insurance or charge for the preparation of any product for market or transportation whereby its price or such charge might be in any manner affected.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Rail Transportation > Rates & Tariffs

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Transportation Law > Rail Transportation > State & Local Regulation

HN4 Railroads & Rail Transportation, Rates & Tariffs

Tex. Rev. Civ. Stat. Ann. art. 4540 provides that every railroad company operating a railroad within Texas shall furnish reasonable and equal facilities and accommodations, and upon reasonable and equal rates, to all corporations and persons engaged in the express business, for the transportation of themselves, agents, servants, merchandise, and other property; for the use of their cars, depots, buildings, and grounds; and for exchanges at points of junction with other roads.

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Contracts Clause > General Overview

Governments > Police Powers

HN5 Congressional Duties & Powers, Contracts Clause

The state may, in the exercise of its police power, prohibit the continuance in the future of those things already in existence which are so injurious to the rights and interests of its citizens generally as to justify such an exercise of the power whether the continuance of the things is provided for by contract or not. The same power which may upon sufficient occasion, destroy other property of the citizen to secure the general welfare, may, to the same end, destroy the binding obligation of contracts. The constitutional inhibition against the impairment of the obligation of contracts is not a limitation upon the police power when exercised within its legitimate sphere.

Headnotes/Summary

---

Headnotes

Antitrust Law -- Railway -- Express Company.

Railroads being required by statute (Rev. Stat., art. 4540) to furnish to all express companies equal facilities for doing business over their lines, any combination of their capital, skill or acts by a railway with one express company which would limit or narrow the scope to be given to the business of others over such line would be a violation of the trust law of 1903.

Antitrust Law -- Contract -- Exclusive Rights.

A contract between a railway and express company by which the former bound itself merely not to contract with other express companies to do business on its road might not prevent it from furnishing them facilities for doing such business without contracting to do so; but where the rights granted are spoken of by the contract as "exclusive facilities," and are only to be awarded by the railway when compelled by legislative or judicial proceedings, and in that event the contracting express company is to have credit for the sums paid by other companies on the amount due from it under its contract, [***2] the obstacles interposed to the admission of other companies to do business, evidence the intention to make the rights of the contracting company exclusive, and to create and carry out a restriction on others in the free pursuit of the business.

Antitrust Law.

While the mere purpose without the combination does not constitute the offense, the formation of such purpose and the agreement upon a contract by which it is to be carried out, in which contract the capital, skill or acts of both are to be used, completes the offense.

Antitrust Law -- Contracts Prior to Enactment.

Whenever, after the Act begins to operate, a combination for the prohibited purposes is found to exist, it falls within the terms of the law. The fact that it was formed by contract made before the law was passed is immaterial, if it was in active existence thereafter.

Antitrust Law -- Retroactive Law -- Police Power -- Impairing Contract.

The constitutional prohibition against impairing the obligation of a contract does not apply to a legitimate exercise of the police power by the state in prohibiting the continuance of things already in existence which are so injurious to [***3] the rights and interests of citizens generally as to justify the exercise of such power, though their continuance may be provided for by contracts previously made.

Antitrust Law -- Unlawful Contract.

Whatever limitations there may be to the exercise of the police power to impair existing contracts, they do not apply to a contract already prohibited by a statute existing when it was made, e. g., the application of the antitrust law of 1903 to a contract for exclusive rights to an express company made unlawful by article 4540 of the Revised Statutes.

Trusts -- Control of Rates by Commission.

The fact that the regulation of the rates of both railways and express companies is placed under the control of the Railroad Commission does not exempt them from penalties for forming combinations made unlawful by the antitrust law.

Pleading.

The allegation that the parties to a contract constituting an unlawful combination under a law passed after it was entered into, continued to treat it as valid and executed and carried it out after the law went into effect, was sufficient, as against a general demurrer, to charge them with acts violating the law.

Counsel: [***4] R. V. Davidson, Attorney-General, and Warren W. Moore, District Attorney (Lackey & Lewright and Allen & Hart, of Counsel), for appellant. -- The allegations in the petition showed a violation of the Antitrust Act of 1903. Bill of Rights, sec. 26; Constitution of the State of Texas, secs. 1, 2 and 5, art. 10, and secs. 3 and 5 of art. 12; Rev. Stat., art. 4540; arts. 15, 16 and 17, Criminal Code; Brenham v. Brenham Water Company, 67 Texas, 561; Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. The State, 72 Texas, 404; Coal Co. v. Lawson, 89 Texas, 394; Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. The State, 19 Texas Civil Appeals, 1; Wells-Fargo Express Comany v. Williams, 71 S. W. Rep., 314; Thompson v. San Antonio & A. P. Ry. Co., 32 S. W. Rep., 427; United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Association, 166 U.S., 290; United States v. Joint Traffic Association, 171 U.S., 505; Diamond Glue Company v. United States Glue Company, 187 U.S., 611; Pearsall v. Great Northern R. R. Co., 161 U.S., 646; Louisville & N. R. R. Co. v. Kentucky, 161 U.S. Rep., 677; Doyle v. Continental Ins. Co., 94 U.S., 535.

Baker, Botts, Parker & Garwood and Alexander & Thompson, for appellee, American Express Co.

*T. S. [***5] Miller, Fiset & McClendon* and Clarence H. Miller, for appellee, Mo., K. & T. Ry. Co. -- The antitrust Acts in question were intended to prohibit combination generally, which restrain trade, or suppress competition, but not those contracts within the purview of the Railroad Commission law. The Commission under that law has exclusive power and is charged with the exclusive duty to protect the public against unjust or excessive rates on the part of railway and express companies, and hence the contract in question is not within the meaning of the antitrust laws. Thorpe v. Adams, L. R., 6 C. P., 135; Moore v. Bell, 95 Texas, 157; Rev. Stat., arts. 4561-4584; San Diego Water Co. v. San Diego Flume Co., 108 Cal., 549; State v. Shippers Compress Co., 95 Texas, 603.

The contract in question was entered into before the Antitrust Act of 1903 and plaintiff's petition does not allege that the exclusive feature of the contract was carried out in such a way after that Act became effective, as to violate the terms of the Act. We submit that the allegations are insufficient to show a violation of the law, if it applied to the contract in question. See also United States v. Dietrich, 126 [***6] Fed. Rep., 671; Oregon Co. v. Windsor, 20 Wal., 64; Erie Ry. Co. v. Union L. Co., 6 Vroom, 244; Stephen v. Southern P. Co., 109 Cal., 95; 9 Cyc., 575-6; Brewster v. Kitchell, 1 Salk, 198. The petition should allege an intentional violation of the law. State v. Compress Co., 95 Texas, 607; 6 A. & E. Enc. of Law, 2d ed., 840, and note, and 864 and note.

The contract in question was not a violation of either the Antitrust Acts of 1899 or of 1903, because the express company was not a competitor of the railway company, and the railway company in giving the express company the exclusive privilege of transporting express matter over its lines merely operated a part of its own business through an instrumentality which it had the right to select. Northern Securities Case, 193 U.S., 197; Welch v. Phelps & B. Windmill Co. 89 Texas 655; Gates v. Hooper, 90 Texas, 565; Lewis v. Weatherford, etc., Ry. Co., 36 Texas Civ. App., 48; Express Co. Cases, 117 U.S., 1; Wiggins Ferry Co. v. Chicago & A. Railway Co., 27 S. W. Rep., 570; Donovan v. Pennsylvania Co., 120 Fed. Rep., 215; Barney v. Oyster Bay & H. Steamship Co., 67 N. Y., 301; Kates v. Atlanta B. & C. Co., 16 Am. & Eng. Ry. Cases (N. S.), [***7] 140; Pullman Palace Car Cases, 139 U.S., 89; Welch v. Phelps & B. Windmill Co., 89 Texas 655; Anderson v. Rowland, 44 S. W. Rep., 912; Atchison T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Denver & N. O. R. R., 110 U.S., 667.

The contract in question is not a "combination" as defined in the Act of 1903, and the petition therefore fails to state a violation of the terms of that Act.

99 Tex. 516, *516 A. 91 S.W. 214, **214 A. 906 Tex. LEXIS 125, ***7

In Addyston Pipe Co. case, 85 Fed. Rep., 271, the rule is stated to be "where the main and controlling purpose of the contract is a lawful purpose and the restriction of competition is merely collateral or incidental to the main purpose, such incidental and contingent restraint of trade is not within the purpose of the statute."

In United States v. E. C. Knight, 156 U.S., 1, it was decided that "the fact that trade or commerce might be indirectly affected, was not enough to entitle complainant to a decree." To same effect is United States v. Traffic Association, 171 U.S., 505.

In the express cases, 117 U.S., page 1, and the Pullman Palace car cases, 139 U.S., 89, the Federal Supreme Court holds that the contract between the railroad company and an express company or a sleeping car company, whereby the latter acquire exclusive [***8] rights on the lines of railroads is not monopolistic in its character nor opposed to public policy. These utterances by the highest federal court fully establish the proposition that the contract in question looked at from the most extreme standpoint, was only a partial restriction in competition, and was not unreasonable at common law or contrary to public policy. If it was not so at common law then it was not so, if our argument holds good, under the language of the Antitrust Act of 1903. United States v. Freight Association, 166 U.S., 341; Hopkins v. United States, 171 U.S., 578; United States v. Workman's A. Council, 26 L.R. A., 158; Addyston P. & S. Co. v. United States, 175 U.S., 211, and 95 Texas, 603; Addyston Pipe Co. case, 85 Fed. Rep., 271; 175 U.S., 211.

We think the case is distinguishable from the cases heretofore held to violate the antitrust law, and within the doctrine announced in Gates v. Hooper, 90 Texas, 563. Vanderweghe v. American Brewing Co., 61 S. W. Rep., 526. See also White Dental Co. v. Hertzberg, 51 S. W. Rep., 355.

The contract in question is not an unreasonable restriction in trade or upon competition and is not illegal because the Antitrust [***9] Act of 1903 applies only to unreasonable restraints in trade and substantial restrictions in competition.

If the Antitrust Act of 1903 prohibits reasonable restrictions in trade and competition in the manufacture, making, transportation, sale or purchase of merchandise, produce or commodities, then it is void because it deprives the prohibited persons from exercising the constitutional right of making contracts. Dobbins v. City of Los Angeles, 195 U.S. Rep., 223; Lawton v. Steele, 152 U.S., 133; Express cases, 117 U.S., 1; Pullman cases, 139 U.S., 89.

If the Act of 1903 prohibits reasonable restrictions upon trade and competition, then the statute takes away the appellees' liberty and property without due process of law, and it is an impairment of rights protected by the fourteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution.

The contract in question appears from the plaintiff's petition to have been entered into before the passage of the Antitrust Act of 1903, and that Act is an ex post facto law and a law impairing the obligations of the contract within the meaning of the United States Constitution as regards their contract. Express cases, 117 U.S., 1; Pullman cases, 139 U.S., [***10] 89.

The Antitrust Act of 1903, the violation of which is complained of, is contrary to the fourteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution and denies the appellees the equal protection of the law, because in the 17th section of the Act, it provides that nothing in the act shall be construed to destroy any rights of the state to recover penalties or forfeit charters of domestic corporations, or prohibit foreign corporations from doing business in the state for acts committed before the Act takes effect, but does not provide for the recovery of penalties either against an individual or a foreign corporation for acts committed before the Act takes effect. Connolly v. Union Pipe Line Co., 184 U.S., 540.

Judges: Williams, Associate Justice.

Opinion by: WILLIAMS

Opinion

---

[*519] [**215] This case is submitted upon the following certificate from the Court of Civil Appeals for the Third District:

"This is a case now pending in the Court of Civil Appeals of the Third Supreme Judicial District of Texas, wherein the State of Texas in the District Court of Travis County sought to recover from the appellees penalties for an alleged breach and violation of the Antitrust Acts of 1899 and 1903. [***11] A general demurrer in the court below was sustained to the petition, and the case dismissed, from which judgment the state of Texas has appealed. The petition is as follows:

"First. That the state of Texas is the plaintiff herein and is represented by Warren W. Moore, her district attorney in and for the Twenty-sixth Judicial District of Texas, and acting under the authority and by the direction of the attorney-general of the state of Texas. That said district attorney applied to the Railroad Commission of Texas for permission and direction to bring this suit, but such permission and direction were declined by said Railroad Commission of Texas, because they had no jurisdiction in the matter and had nothing to do with the case. The defendants are the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway Company, of Texas, a railroad company incorporated under the laws of the state of [*520] Texas, and the American Express Company, a joint stock company organized under the laws of the state of New York, doing business in Texas and having about fifteen hundred stockholders or members of said stock company residing in various parts of the country, whose names and residences are unknown to the [***12] plaintiff.

"Second. That on the days and dates hereinafter mentioned, the defendant, Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway Company of Texas, was engaged in operating a railroad from Denison to Galveston with various branches and feeders, and was a common carrier for hire in the state of Texas, being the owner of and in control of a railroad as above set out. That the defendant, the American Express Company, along with three other express companies, the Pacific Express Company, the Wells-Fargo Express Company and the United States Express Company, were each and all engaged in the express business in the state of Texas, and were carrying on such business as common carriers for hire over the various lines of railway within the state of Texas, and were in active competition with each other in such express business; that they, the said express companies, competed actively with each other in the rates charged, the promptness of service rendered for a given rate, the facilities afforded shippers and the public generally in dealing with them, in the courtesy of employes, and in the nature and character of the services rendered, and in many other ways were competing and did compete and could [***13] compete with each other in the state of Texas."

The certificate here sets out the allegations of the petition as to a contract made between the parties defendant January 31, 1900, and as to that contract and the acts done under it, being in violation of the Antitrust Act of 1899, which allegations are omitted for reasons hereinafter stated. The petition then proceeds to allege the making of a second contract as follows:

"Seventh. Plaintiff says that heretofore, to wit: On the 23d day of September, A. D. 1902, the defendant, the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway Company of Texas, entered into a contract and agreement with the defendant, American Express Company, a joint stock association doing business in the state of Texas, whereby it was agreed by and between said railway company and said express company among other things as follows:

"(a) That the railway company agreed to transport all the express matter of the express company to and from all stations upon its lines of railroad and branches which were then owned and operated by it and which might thereafter be owned and operated by it during the life of said contract.

"(b) The railway company further agreed that 'none [***14] of its employes for himself, or for the railway company, shall be allowed during the continuance of this agreement to transmit money, valuable packages, goods or merchandise of any kind whatsoever, except regular passengers' baggage and supplies for the railway company's eating houses upon the passenger trains of the said railway company, except that the railway company reserves the right to transport dogs in its passenger trains when accompanied by the owner, and also to transport corpses.'

"(c) It was further agreed that the railway company would not [*521] contract with any party or parties to do an express business over said road, or any portion thereof, during the existence of the agreement.

"(d) It was further agreed that if the railway company constructed, leased, operated or acquired other lines during the life of the agreement, the express company should have the same exclusive facilities over all such lines insofar as the railway company could legally grant such facilities, 'it being understood that if the railway company by its trackage arrangement with other railway companies which it may deem best to make hereafter, or if it compelled by legislation [**216] [***15] or judicial proceedings to grant to any other express or transportation company facilities for carrying on an express business on its lines, or any part of the same, the revenue derived from the facilities so afforded such other express or transportation company shall be credited to the express company in its payment provided for under the terms of the agreement,' and it was further agreed that the compensation to such other transportation company or companies should not be less than the compensation provided for by the contract to be paid to the express company for the same service.

"(e) It was further agreed that the express company would transport, free of charge, over its lines, matters of any kind, property of the railway company, when such shipments did not exceed twenty pounds in weight, between any points reached by said express company and would charge on shipments exceeding twenty pounds in weight of the property of the railway company to and from any points reached by the express company off of the line of the railway company and the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway Company (of Kansas) 75 percent of its regular tariff on such shipments, and it was provided that the above [***16] should apply to the business of the Southwestern Development Company, 'being an associated company of the railway company.'

"(f) The express company further agreed that it would not issue any local rates per hundred pounds between points on the railway company's lines 'which shall be less than one and one-half times the railway company's freight rate per hundred pounds on the same commodity between the same points,' unless consent to the contrary had been obtained from the traffic manager of the railway company, but it was provided that the express company shall be permitted to make such rates between competitive points as will enable it to compete successfully with other express companies operating on other lines of railway, the express company agreeing to notify the railway company of any reduction of rates made on account of competition, when such competitive rates are reduced to one and one-half times the freight rates of such commodity, the express company agrees that no further reduction shall be made in such competitive rates without the consent of the railway company.

"(g) It was agreed that the sum of $ 7,732.12 shall be paid by said express company quarterly to said railway [**17] company and that if 50 percent of the gross receipts of such company from traffic on the lines thereof should be in excess of that sum that such 50 percent should be paid.

"(h) It was further agreed by and between said parties that said [*522] contract should become effective and be in force from and after the 1st day of February, 1903, and should continue in force for a period of ten years."

The petition then charges violations of the Act of 1899 in the making and carrying out of this contract up to March 31, 1903, when the Act of that year became a law, and proceeds:

"Ninth. Plaintiff says that after the 31st day of March, 1903, and up to and including the trial of this case, the defendant railway company and defendant express company, aforesaid, continued to treat said contract, last aforesaid, that is to say, the contract entered into on the 23d day of September, 1902, as a valid and binding contract between said parties, and executed and carried out said contract.

"Tenth. That by the execution and carrying out of the contract last aforesaid, after the 31st day of March, 1903, said defendant railway company and said express company each became and was a trust, and [***18] each entered into a combination of capital, skill and acts by and with persons, firms, corporations and associations of persons, to wit: each defendant with the other for the following purposes:

"1. To create and carry out restrictions in trade and aids to commerce and in preparation of products for market and transportation and to create and carry out restrictions in the free pursuit of a business authorized and permitted by the laws of this state and said combination tended to carry out and create such restrictions.

"2. To prevent and lessen competition in the transportation of merchandise, products and commodities, and to prevent and lessen competition in aids to commerce and in the preparation of products for market and transportation.

"3. To fix and maintain a standard or figure whereby the price of articles or commodities of merchandise, products and commerce and the cost of transportation should be affected, controlled and established.

"4. To make, enter into, maintain, execute and carry out a contract, obligation or agreement by which the parties thereto bound themselves not to transport any article or commodity below a common standard or figure, and by which they [***19] agreed to keep the price of such article, or charge for transportation at a fixed or graded figure and by which they might affect and maintain the price or cost of transportation and to preclude free and unrestricted competition among themselves in the transportation of articles or commodities of transportation and by which they agreed to pool, combine and unite an interest which they had in connection with a charge for transportation.

"Eleventh. Plaintiff further says that by the contract and agreement aforesaid and the execution and carrying out of the same after said 31st day of March, 1900, said railway company and said express company entered into and carried out an agreement:

"1. Creating and tending to create and carry out restrictions in trade and commerce and [**217] aids to commerce and in transportation and in the free pursuit of business authorized and permitted by the laws of this state, and

"2. Fixing, maintaining and increasing the price of merchandise produce [*523] and commodities and the preparation of products for market and transportation, and

"3. Preventing and lessening competition in the transportation of merchandise, produce and commodities [***20] and preventing and lessening competition in aids to commerce and in transportation, and

"4. Fixing and maintaining a standard and figure whereby the price and cost of transportation is affected, controlled and established, and

"5. By which the said parties, bind and have bound themselves not to transport articles and commodities, and by which they agree to keep the price of charges for transportation at a fixed and graded figure, and by which they affect and maintain the price and cost of transportation and the cost of transportation between them and themselves and others, and to preclude a free and unrestricted competition among themselves and others in the transportation of articles and commodities and the business of transportation, and by which they agree to pool, combine and unite their interest in connection with the charge for the transportation of express matter, whereby such charge is affected.

"And plaintiff says that by the execution of the contract aforesaid and the carrying out of same after the 31st day of March, A. D. 1903, said defendant railway company and said defendant express company each formed a trust and a monopoly and a conspiracy in restraint of trade [***21] and thereby violated the laws of the state of Texas, and especially the Act of March 31, 1903, and thereby each became liable to plaintiff for the penalties denounced and provided by said statute, to wit: the sum of fifty dollars per day for each day from and including the 1st day of April, 1903, to and including the date of the trial of this case, an aggregate of $ 20,000 and for the sum of $ 20,000 plaintiff now asks judgment against said defendant railway company, and for the sum of $ 20,000, plaintiff asks judgment against said express company.

"Twelfth. That during the month of September, 1903, the Railroad Commission of Texas promulgated a general tariff of rates and classifications of freights and all express matter to be hauled by the express companies doing business in the state of Texas, such rates and classifications to govern in the transportation by said express companies of all express matter wholly within the state; that the defendant, the American Express Company, together with the other express companies doing business in the state of Texas, applied for and obtained from the United States Circuit Court an injunction against the Railroad Commission of Texas, restraining [***22] them from promulgating or enforcing such rates and classifications; that such tariff was a general tariff and covered every sort of express matter; that said defendant express company and said other express companies claim in their bill upon which they obtained such injunction that the Railroad Commission is without authority of law to fix and regulate charges to be made by them; that they also claim that they had no right on various grounds to enforce such rates and classifications, and said suit has been pending since September, 1903, and is now pending and can not be tried or finally disposed of by the court until January, 1905.

"And plaintiff prays for judgment severally against said defendants for the sums hereinbefore prayed to be adjudged against them respectively, [*524] and it prays for judgment for costs and for such other relief as it may be entitled to.

"In view of the fact that we are reliably informed that there are thirty or more cases pending in the court below of practically the same nature as this case, and that are dependent upon a decision hereof; and in view of the public interest involved in the question, so that an early and final decision may be reached, [***23] we have concluded to certify the questions raised by the plaintiff's petition to your honorable court. However, there is one question pointed out in appellee's brief as supporting the ruling of the trial court which we have agreed upon. It is insisted by appellees that the trial court correctly sustained the demurrer, because the attorney-general in an action to recover penalties for a breach of the antitrust statutes in question, so far as they affect railway and express companies, could not maintain the same without permission or consent of the Railroad Commission of Texas. The petition does contain an averment that the Railroad Commission did not give its consent to the bringing and filing of this suit, but it affirmatively appears upon the face of the petition that it was instituted under the consent and direction of the attorney-general. Without comment or stating the reasons that have influenced us in the ruling, we deem it only sufficient to say that we are of the opinion that the attorney-general could maintain the action without the consent or permission of the Railroad Commission.

"It will be observed that the petition specifically points out and calls the court's attention [***24] to the grounds relied upon as showing and indicating wherein the contract as described in the petition comes within the condemnation of the Antitrust Acts of 1899 and 1903. Such being the case, we deem it unnecessary to make the questions propounded more specific than to merely ask the court whether the plaintiff's petition states a cause of action, and whether the trial court erred in sustaining the general demurrer. Therefore we propound to the Supreme Court the following question:

"Was the contract in question, as it is alleged [**218] and described in plaintiff's petition, in violation of either the Antitrust Act of 1899 or of 1903, in any of the respects specifically insisted upon by the plaintiff in the petition?"

Those allegations based upon the two contracts intended to show violations of the Act of 1899 are omitted for the sake of brevity, because it was conceded at the argument that the petition did not show that Act had been violated. It may be stated, however, that the terms of the first contract alleged were in substance the same as those of the second. In view of the admission made by counsel for the state, which is regarded as proper, we deem it unnecessary [***25] to discuss the questions put with reference to the Act of 1899, but content ourselves with answering that no violation of that Act is shown.

HN1[] The Act of 1903, so far as we need to consider its provisions, is as follows: "That a trust is a combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more persons, firms or corporations or associations of persons, or either two or more of them for either, any or all of the following purposes:

[*525] "1. . . To create or carry out restrictions in the free pursuit of any business authorized or permitted by the laws of this state.

"3. To prevent or lessen competition in the . . . transportation . . . of merchandise, produce or commodities.

"4. To fix or maintain any standard or figure whereby the . . . cost of transportation . . . shall be in any manner affected, controlled or established.

HN2[] "5. To make, enter into, maintain, execute or carry out any contract, obligation or agreement by which the parties thereto bind, or have bound themselves not to sell, dispose of, transport or to prepare for market or transportation any article or commodity, or to make any contract of insurance at a price below a common standard or figure, or by [***26] which they shall agree in any manner to keep the price of such article or commodity or charge for transportation or insurance, or the cost of the preparation of any product for market or transportation at a fixed or graded figure, or by which they shall in any manner affect or maintain the price of any commodity or article or the cost of the transportation or insurance or the cost of the preparation of any product for market or transportation between them or themselves and others, HN3[<sup>A</sup>] to preclude a free and unrestricted competition among themselves or others in the sale or transportation of any such article or commodity or business of transportation or insurance or the preparation of any product for market or transportation, or by which they shall agree to pool, combine or unite any interest they may have in connection with the sale or purchase of any article or commodity or charge for transportation or insurance or charge for the preparation of any product for market or transportation whereby its price or such charge might be in any manner affected."

To answer the questions certified it is necessary only to bring to bear upon the contract alleged the first subdivision of the statute [***27] and inquire whether or not the contract shows a combination of capital, skill or acts to create or carry out a restriction in the free pursuit of a business authorized or permitted by law, and in determining this we may further restrict the inquiry to the effect intended by the parties upon the businesses of other express companies. Whether or not a restriction in the pursuit of those businesses was contemplated must be determined by ascertaining their lawful scope in respect of the right of such companies to pursue them upon the railroads of the state. In 1885 it was decided by the Supreme Court of the United States that "railroad companies are not required by usage, or by the common law, to transport the traffic of independent express companies over their lines in the manner in which such traffic is usually carried and handled," and that "railroad companies are not obliged either by the common law or by usage to do more as express carriers than to provide the public at large with reasonable express accommodations; and they need not, in the absence of a statute, furnish to all independent express companies equal facilities for doing an express business upon their passenger trains." [***28] Express Company Cases, 117 U.S., 1. This may be regarded as the rule of law existing in this state until 1887 when was enacted a statute now forming article 4540 of the Revised Statutes, which was evidently passed in order to remedy what the legislature, agreeing with the views expressed [*526] by the judges who dissented in the Express Company Cases, regarded as a defect in the existing law. It reads as follows:

HN4[<sup>A</sup>] "Art. 4540. Every railroad company operating a railroad within this state shall furnish reasonable and equal facilities and accommodations, and upon reasonable and equal rates, to all corporations and persons engaged in the express business, for the transportation of themselves, agents, servants, merchandise and other property, and for the use of their cars, depots, buildings and grounds, and for exchanges at points of junction with other roads."

Unquestionably this authorized and permitted express companies to pursue their businesses on all the railways controlled by state legislation, with "equal and reasonable facilities and accommodations, and upon equal and reasonable rates." Thus the scope of this business, as "authorized or permitted" by law, is defined, [***29] and any combination of the kind denounced by the antitrust statute, the carrying out of which would limit or narrow such scope, is necessarily one to create or carry out a restriction in the free pursuit of the business. This proposition can not be made plainer by any amount of elaboration. Ft. Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. v. The State, ante p. 34; 12 Texas Ct. Rep., 1002-3.

The contract in question shows by its own terms, that its purpose was to secure to the [**219] express companies, as far as it was in the power of the parties to do so, the exclusive right to do an express business upon the railroad, and to exclude other express companies from the enjoyment of like rights. It is true that by clause (c) the railroad company only bound itself not to contract with others to do an express business on its road, and, if this were all, it might be urged that all of the equal and reasonable facilities, accommodations and rates exacted by the law might be accorded without express contract; but the purpose to grant an exclusive right to the express company is made too plain for argument by the succeeding clause. Clause (d) expressly calls the rights granted "exclusive facilities" [***30] and plainly evinces the understanding that they shall not be given to any one else unless such action be compelled by legislation or judicial proceedings, and that, should this be done, the express company shall have credit for the sums paid by other companies. This clause shows plainly the intention that the only express business to be conducted on this road should be that of the contracting express company, and that that company should receive the benefit of the earnings of the railroad company from the business of any other express companies which it might be compelled to admit to its lines, which stipulation is made, presumably, in return for sufficient consideration moving from the express company to the railroad company. The obstacle such an agreement interposes to the admission of other companies to the facilities given to them by the statute is easily understood, seeing that every other express company is to be charged for the facilities to be enjoyed by it the same price that the favored company is to pay as the consideration for everything the railroad company agrees to do for it, including the undertaking, in effect, to exact such prices from all other companies for the [***31] benefit of this one. We conclude that there was the purpose to create and carry out a restriction in [*527] the free pursuit of a business, and next inquire whether or not there was a combination of capital, skill or acts to accomplish that purpose.

The capital, the skill and the acts of the railroad company were employed in conducting its business of a common carrier, which included the transportation of the servants of the express company and the express matter controlled by it. The capital, the skill and the acts of the express company were employed in conducting, as a common carrier, the express business upon the railroad. The two businesses, although the same instrumentalities are, to an extent, used by the two companies in forwarding each, may be kept distinct and there is not necessarily a combination of any character in the mere fact that they are thus carried on. But when the two companies unite in the purpose defined and frame their contract with a view to its accomplishment, all that is promised on one side being the consideration for all that is promised on the other, the combination of their capital, their skill and their acts for the common purpose is complete. [***32] The capital, skill and acts of each being employed in its business, when they agree upon the unlawful purpose and to so direct their businesses as to effect that purpose, they necessarily combine to that extent the capital, skill and acts by which such businesses are sustained. While the mere purpose without the combination, does not constitute the offense, the formation of the purpose and the agreement upon a contract by which it is to be carried out, in the execution of which contract the capital, skill or acts of both are to be used, does complete the offense. All of the power for mischief inherent in the union of two or more for the accomplishment of a purpose injurious to others is thus exerted, and this is the consideration that led the Legislature to prohibit such combinations for purposes which are not made unlawful when entertained by one.

The contract through which this combination was formed was made before the Act of 1903 was passed and the question whether or not there has been a violation of that Act must be determined by inquiring whether or not it applies to such combinations formed before, but carried out after, it took effect. The language in which the offense [***33] is defined and described requires an affirmative answer. A trust is defined as a combination for certain purposes. Whenever, after the Act begins to operate, such a combination is found to exist it falls within the terms employed. All such combinations are declared by section 4 to be illegal and are prohibited. This language makes their existence a violation of the Act and other sections impose penalties upon parties causing such violation. The fact that a combination may have been formed before the statute took effect is immaterial if it is in active existence thereafter. The statute has no retroactive or ex post facto operation, and applies only to offenses occurring after its enactment; the offense does not consist in the formation and existence of the combination before the law went into operation, but in the persistence of the parties in it after it has become unlawful. This the terms of the Act make reasonably clear when they define the existence of certain elements to constitute a trust, and provide that one of the elements may be the purpose "to carry out" restrictions and the like, and make the penalties provided (section 11), apply for each day the offense is "continued." [***34] That such is the correct [*528] interpretation of such statutes is held by the Supreme Court of the United States in United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Association, 166 U.S., 342. But it is said that this interpretation of the statute would render it unconstitutional as [**220] impairing the obligation of a valid contract. The answer is that HN5↑ the state may, in the exercise of its police power, prohibit the continuance in the future of those things already in existence which are so injurious to the rights and interests of its citizens generally as to justify such an exercise of the power whether the continuance of the things is provided for by contract or not. The same power which may upon sufficient occasion, destroy other property of the citizen to secure the general welfare, may, to the same end, destroy the binding obligation of contracts. The constitutional inhibition against the impairment of the obligation of contracts is not a limitation upon the police power when exercised within its legitimate sphere, and therefore the mere objection that an exercise of that power impairs the obligation of a contract does not reach the true question, which is whether or not [***35] the attempted exercise is within the scope of the power exercised. It is unnecessary in this case to go into any extended examination of the question as to the extent of this power. If we had before us a contract which was originally lawful and reasonable in itself and which, although falling within the literal language of the statute, could not justly be regarded as so injurious to the state or its citizens as to afford reasonable grounds for its destruction, a different question would be presented. It is true that there are limitations upon the power of the Legislature to either strike down contracts already made, or unreasonably and arbitrarily to restrict the liberty of citizens in contracting in future, but there is no occasion for applying them here. This contract was, as we have seen, made in the face of a statute then existing, and was not a reasonable, and can hardly be said to have been a lawful one; and it is wholly unnecessary to pursue an inquiry which might arise with reference to contracts of a different character.

The argument is advanced that because of the existence of the laws creating the Railroad Commission and investing it with power to regulate the rates [***36] to be charged by railroad and express companies, combinations between them do not fall within the reason and purpose of the statute which we are considering and which was passed subsequently to those just referred to. The Act of 1903 expressly deals with combinations affecting transportation, competition therein, and the cost thereof, and it is improbable that the Legislature intended to omit from its operation the two most prominent kinds of carriers engaged in transportation, combinations between whom would have greater effect on the things intended to be protected than the combinations of any other persons. Extensive powers are given to the Railroad Commission by which unjust practices among such carriers may be prevented or curtailed, and it is doubtless true also, that there was no purpose, in enacting laws to suppress trusts, to interfere with the regulation by it of matters placed under its control. But it is certainly not unreasonable to suppose that the Legislature may have thought that further checks might be necessary or useful by way of penalties prescribed for combinations calculated to impede the carriers' full performance of their duties [*529] and to defeat [***37] the laws enacted to define and enforce those duties. The language of the statute undoubtedly embraces railroads and express companies and no rule of construction would authorize the courts to take them out of its operation.

A contention like this was advanced by the railroad companies, in United States v. Traffic Ass'n, supra, and United States v. Joint Traffic Ass'n, 171 U.S., 505, based on the Federal Antitrust Act and the Interstate Commerce Act, with much greater reason in the provisions of those statutes than can be found in the terms of ours, but was held to be unfounded.

Finally, it is claimed, that the petition fails to show a violation of the Act of 1903 in that it does not allege that the features of the contract, constituting the unlawful combination, were carried out after the law went into effect. The natural meaning, or the reasonable intendment, at least, of the allegation that, after the law was passed, the defendants "continued to treat said contract . . . as a valid and binding contract between said parties, and executed and carried out said contract" is that the whole contract was so treated. This was sufficient at least to meet a general demurrer.

While [***38] we have discussed the case upon the application of the first subdivision of the statute, the reasons we have stated lead obviously to the conclusion that there was also a combination for the purpose mentioned in the third subdivision. Questions much more far-reaching would arise under the fourth and fifth subdivisions, when applied to clauses (d), (f) and (g) of the contract, upon a discussion of which we find it unnecessary to enter. To do so would require a consideration of how far a railroad company in adjusting its business to that of an express company, to be carried on upon its road may regulate the terms upon which it is to be done so as to protect itself and its own business, whether or not stipulations made for that purpose are reasonable and, if so, valid, although coming within the general language of the subdivisions of the statute referred to, whether or not such questions could be determined from a mere inspection of the contract or would require for their decision the statement in the petition charging violations of the law of other facts upon which the legality of the things charged might depend, and probably other matters that need not be stated. These in most part [***39] have not been argued and as a decision of them is not essential to an answer to the questions asked by the Court [**221] of Civil Appeals, we deem it inadvisable to go further than we have done.

We answer that the petition showed a violation, in the particulars stated, of the Act of 1903, and that the court erred in sustaining a general demurrer.

Norton v. W. H. Thomas & Sons Co.

Supreme Court of Texas

March 19, 1906, Decided

No. 1526

Reporter

99 Tex. 578 *; 91 S.W. 780 **; 1906 Tex. LEXIS 140 ***

H. N. Norton v. W. H. Thomas & Sons Company

Prior History: [***1] Question certified from the Court of Civil Appeals for the First District, in an appeal from Galveston County.

Core Terms

---

barrels, quantity, whisky, pool, buy, provisions, void, president of the corporation, anti trust law, no application, uncollectible, accomplished, decisions, purposes, sections, parties, selling, Courts, induce, liquor, brand, ship

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

HN1 Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

1899 Tex. Acts 286, § 1 applies to agreements, etc., (1) to regulate or fix the price of any article, etc.; or (2) to maintain said price when so regulated or fixed; or (3) to fix or limit the amount or quantity of any article, etc.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Monopolies & Monopolization > General Overview

HN2 Regulated Practices, Monopolies & Monopolization

1899 Tex. Acts 286, § 2 defines a "monopoly" as a "union or combination," etc., "of capital, credit," etc., whereby any of the purposes mentioned in the act is accomplished or sought to be accomplished, etc.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

HN3 Monopolies & Monopolization, Conspiracy to Monopolize

1899 Tex. Acts 286, § 6 makes it unlawful for persons engaged in buying or selling articles, etc., to enter into any pool, trust, agreement, etc., to control or limit the trade in such article, etc., or to limit competition in such trade by refusing to buy from or to sell to any other person or corporation any such article, etc., for the reason that such other person or corporation is not a member of or party to such pool, trust, agreement, etc.

Headnotes/Summary

---

Headnotes

Antitrust Law.

An agreement on a contract for sale of merchandise (whisky) that the vendor would not sell any liquor of that age and brand in either of three cities where the vendee was engaged in business till the latter had closed out his purchase was not prohibited by the antitrust law of 1899 (Acts of 1899, p. 246).

Antitrust Law -- Limiting Amount.

The prohibition in section 1 of the antitrust law of 1899, of agreements "to fix or limit the amount or quantity of any article" embraces limitations on the amount or quantity in existence, not on that to be sold in or supplied to any particular community or territory.

Antitrust Law -- Limiting Sales.

Section 6 of the Antitrust Law of 1899, prohibits agreements limiting trade, competition, etc., to members of the pool, trust, etc., and does not cover agreements not to sell within specified limits.

Antitrust Law -- Cases Overruled.

The rulings of the Courts of Civil Appeals in Troy Buggy Works v. Fife & Miller, 74 S. W. Rep., 956, and Simmons & Co. v. Terry, 79 S. W. [***2] Rep., 1103, disapproved.

Counsel: R. H. and Alice S. Tiernan, for appellant. -- The undisputed evidence shows that the plaintiff, through its president, gave Norton the exclusive sale of the whisky, for the payment of which the notes herein sued on were given, in the towns of Beaumont, Houston and Galveston, Texas. This agreement was made in Galveston, Texas. This agreement being in contravention of the anti-trust statutes of Texas, rendered the said contract null and void; hence the notes are null and void, and they can not be recovered on by the plaintiff. Troy Buggy Works v. Fife & Miller, 74 S. W. Rep., 956; Antitrust Statutes of Texas, Laws of 26th Leg., p. 346, chap. 146; Fuqua v. Pabst Brewing Co., 38 S. W., 30, 31; Act of Congress, August 8, 1890.

A contract whereby a retail merchant agreed to handle a manufacturer's or wholesaler's gloves exclusively, except so far as he should buy inferior or cheaper gloves from others, and by which the wholesaler or manufacturer agreed not to sell to any other merchant in the retailer's city, so that the latter should have the exclusive sale and control of the retail business in certain lines of gloves in that city, was in violation [***3] of the antitrust law of 1899, laws of 26th Leg., p. 246, making void any agreement to limit trade in any article or limit competition, and neither party could sustain any claim against the other on the contract. Francis Simmons & Co. v. Terry, 79 S. W. Rep., 1103, citing Troy Buggy Co. v. Fife & Miller, 74 S. W. Rep., 956; Columbia Carriage Co. v. Hatch, 47 S. W. Rep., 288; Pasteur Vaccine Co. v. Burkey, 54 S. W. Rep., 804; Texas Brewing Co. v. Templeman, 90 Texas, 277; Fuqua v. Pabst Brewing Co., 90 Texas, 298.

E. P. Gailey, for appellees. -- An agreement made in Galveston, by appellee, with Norton, a wholesale dealer in whisky, not to sell the same brand of whisky to any other dealer in the towns of Houston, Beaumont and Galveston, is not in contravention of the antitrust statutes of Texas. Antitrust Statutes of Texas, Act of 1899, Laws of 26th Leg., p. 246, chap. 146; Gates v. Hooper, 90 Texas, 563; Vandeweghe v. American Brewing Co., 61 S. W., 526.

Judges: Williams, Associate Justice.

Opinion by: WILLIAMS

Opinion

---

[*579] [**780] Certified question from the Court of Civil Appeals for the First District, as follows:

"The record on this appeal shows that in 1902 W. H. Thomas [***4] & Sons Company, incorporated under the laws of Kentucky, entered into a contract with H. N. Norton, resident of Galveston, Texas, whereby it agreed to sell to Norton fifty barrels of whisky of a named brand and age at a stipulated price per gallon. Under the agreement the corporation was to ship one hundred barrels from Germany to Galveston, the first fifty above named to be a credit sale, and Norton to have the option to take the second fifty barrels at the same price for cash. In pursuance of this agreement, the whisky was shipped to Galveston, and Norton took and finally paid for the first fifty barrels, according to the contract.

"The president of the corporation being in Galveston, sought to induce him to take the other [**781] fifty barrels, but Norton declined to exercise his option, giving business reasons. Thereupon the president of the corporation offered the whisky on a credit, the debt to be evidenced by Norton's notes. As a further inducement, the company agreed that it would not sell in Galveston, Beaumont or Houston (three points in which Norton was engaged in the liquor business) any liquor of that brand and age until Norton had closed out his purchase.

[***5] "Norton accepted the proposition, the remaining fifty barrels were [*580] delivered to him, and his notes for the purchase money duly executed and delivered to the corporation.

"Norton having defaulted on the last two notes for $ 559.94 each, the corporation brought this suit to enforce their payment, and recovered judgment in the court below, and the cause is before this court on the appeal of Norton.

"One of his defenses in the court below was that the contract of sale was within the provisions of the antitrust law of 1899, and therefore void, and the question has arisen for our decision.

"In view of the holding in Troy Buggy Works v. Fife & Miller, 74 S. W., 956, the soundness of which we doubt, we respectfully certify for your decision: Was the contract void and the notes uncollectible by reason of the 'antitrust law' of 1899?"

Section 1 of the act HN1 [↑] referred to in the question (Acts 1899, p. 246) applies to agreements, etc., (1) "to regulate or fix the price of any article," etc.; or (2) "to maintain said price when so regulated or fixed"; or (3) "to fix or limit the amount or quantity of any article," etc.

Section 2 HN2 [↑] defines a "monopoly" as a "union or combination," [***6] etc., "of capital, credit," etc., whereby any of the purposes mentioned in the act is accomplished or sought to be accomplished, etc.

Section 3 and 4 define other offenses, but their provisions are so clearly foreign to this case that they need not be stated.

Section 6 HN3 [↑] makes it unlawful for persons engaged in buying or selling articles, etc., to enter into any pool, trust, agreement, etc., "to control or limit the trade in such article," etc., "or to limit competition in such trade by refusing to buy from or to sell to any other person or corporation any such article," etc., "for the reason that such other person or corporation is not a member of or party to such pool, trust, agreement," etc. The section has further provisions against threats, boycotts, etc., which plainly have no application here.

The contract stated in the certificate does not in our opinion fall within any of the provisions of the act stated. It belongs to a class which are usually treated as contracts in restraint of or imposing restrictions upon trade or competition, and which have been dealt with by other statutes, such as that of 1889, 1895 and 1903. All of the decisions cited in support of the defense, [***7] except two, were based upon the other statutes. In the excepted cases (Troy Buggy Works v. Fife & Miller, 74 S. W., 956, and Francis T. Simmons & Co. v. Terry, 79 S. W., 1103) by the Courts of Civil Appeals for the Fourth and Fifth Districts, the courts seem to have followed the former decisions, without noticing the difference between the statutes upon which they were founded and the Act of 1899.

We think it quite clear that the terms of the statute last referred to do not embrace this case. The contract does not attempt to fix or regulate the price of the whisky, nor to fix or limit the amount or quantity thereof. It must be borne in mind that the provision of the statute against limitations on the amount or quantity of an article does not refer to the amount to be sold in or supplied to any particular community or territory, but to the amount or quantity in existence; that is, to [*581] what is generally called the supply, or output. The contract imposes no limitation such as the statute, when thus understood, prohibits.

The sixth section might apply to the case but for the requirement that the pool, agreement, etc., to limit trade, or competition therein, by a refusal [***8] to sell to others besides the parties to the arrangement, must be for the reason that such others are not parties to it. By this it is made clear that the offense denounced does not consist simply of an agreement between two that one of them will not sell to others, but of an association which seeks to limit trade, or competition in trade, in some article, by confining the buying and selling thereof to the members of such pool, trust, agreement, etc., and by refusing to sell to, or buy from, others, for the reason that they have not become such members.

Since it is thus shown that none of the other sections apply to the case, it follows that the second has no application, because it refers only to unions, combinations, etc., for the purposes defined in the other sections. We therefore answer that the contract was not void, and the notes were not uncollectible by force of the Act of 1899.

---

End of Document

State ex rel. Taylor v. Ross

Court of Common Pleas of Ashtabula County, Ohio

May 5, 1906, Decided

No Number in Original

Reporter

16 Ohio Dec. 704 *; 1906 Ohio Misc. LEXIS 59 **; 4 Ohio N.P. (n.s.) 377

STATE EX REL. TAYLOR, PROS. ATTY. v. ALBERT ROSS ET AL.

Prior History: [**1] DEMURRER to indictment.

Disposition: Demurrers overruled.

Core Terms

---

commerce, commodity, words, convenience, terms, combinations, restrictions, indictment, fire insurance, carry out, merchandise, occupation, inserted, transportation, provisions, demurrsers, counts, subdivision, transacting, contracts, lawmakers, embraces, includes, insurance company, anti trust law, purposes, affords, barter

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN1 [down arrow] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

See Ohio Rev. Stat. § 4427-1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN2 [down arrow] Antitrust & Trade Law, Regulated Industries

Wherever any occupation, employment, or business is carried on for the purpose of profit or gain, or a livelihood, not in the liberal arts or in the learned professions, it is constantly called a trade.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

16 Ohio Dec. 704, *704L 1906 Ohio Misc. LEXIS 59, **1

HN3 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Regulated Industries

The word "trade" embraces within its meaning commercial traffic, and it also has a limited and restricted significance, which applies to mechanical pursuits; but, in its broad and general sense it covers and embraces all occupations in business, with the possible exception of the learned professions, and those that pertain to liberal arts and the pursuit of agriculture.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN4 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Regulated Industries

The business of an insurance agent is included in the term "trade."

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN5 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Regulated Industries

In the general sense a commodity is something of convenience, advantage, benefit, or profit; and in a special sense a commodity is something produced for use as an article of trade or commerce. The privilege of transmitting or receiving, by will or descent, property on the death of the owner is a commodity within the meaning of this word in the constitution of Massachusetts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN6 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Regulated Industries

The primary meaning of the word commodity according to the lexicographers, is convenience, and its secondary meaning is that which affords convenience or advantage, especially in commerce, including everything which is bought and sold.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN7 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Regulated Industries

Commodity is a general term and includes the privilege and convenience of transacting a particular business.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

**HN8** [L] Antitrust & Trade Law, Regulated Industries

Commerce, undoubtedly, is traffic, but it is something more; it is intercourse. It describes the commercial intercourse between nations, and parts of nations, in all its branches, and is regulated by prescribing rules for carrying on that intercourse.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > General Overview

**HN9** [L] Antitrust & Trade Law, Regulated Industries

From the recognized and well settled definitions and meanings of the words "trade," "commodity" and "commerce" as given by lexicographers as established by courts and sanctioned and approved by long and general usage, it follows that these words could properly have been used in a sense broad enough to include fire insurance, by the legislature, in Ohio Rev. Stat. § 4427-1, and that the words are susceptible of such definition as will include and cover fire insurance.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

**HN10** [L] Legislation, Interpretation

The intention of the lawmakers may be collected from the cause, or necessity of the act. Every statute should be construed with a reference to its object, and the will of the lawmakers is best promoted by such a construction as secures that object, and excludes every other. It being the duty of courts to give such a construction to statutes as will suppress the mischief, and advance the remedy. In giving a construction to any statute, the court must consider its policy, and give it such an interpretation, as may appear best calculated to advance its object by effecting the design of the legislature. It is a rule of interpretation universally accepted, that in giving a construction to a statute the court will consider its policy and the mischief to be remedied, and give it such an interpretation as appears best calculated to advance its object by effectuating the design of the legislature. It is equally well settled that where the legislature has employed explicit and unambiguous terms to express its purpose and object, the ordinary meaning of such terms is to be adopted.

Governments > Legislation > Enactment

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

**HN11** [L] Legislation, Enactment

It is a fundamental rule of construction, that the language of a statute is to be interpreted according to the sense in which the terms are employed and the plain intention of the legislature. The great object of the rules and maxims of interpretation has been to discover the true intention of the law. Regard must be had to the real object of the law, and the effect and substance of the subject-matter, and not barely to the nicety of form or circumstance. The reason, intent, and spirit of a law, therefore, must often prevail over the literal import of the terms employed. While, on the one hand, the judiciary should be careful not to make its office of expounding statutes a cloak for the exercise of legislative power, on the other hand it is equally bound not to stick in the mere letter of a law, but rather to seek for its reason and spirit in the mischief that required a remedy and the general scope of the legislation designed to effect it. In construing statutes so as to give them the legislative intent, interpretation may expand their meaning beyond the literal significance of the words. In each case regard must be had to the subject and the circumstances, as well as to the words used.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN12[] Legislation, Interpretation

The object of judicial investigation in the construction of a statute is to ascertain and give effect to the intent of the lawmaking body which enacted it. And where its provisions are ambiguous, and its meaning doubtful, the history of legislation on the subject, and the consequences of a literal interpretation of the language may be considered; punctuation may be changed or disregarded; words transposed, or those necessary to a clear understanding and, as shown by the context manifestly intended, inserted. But the intent of the lawmakers is to be sought first of all in the language employed, and if the words be free from ambiguity and doubt, and express plainly, clearly and distinctly, the sense of the lawmaking body, there is no occasion to resort to other means of interpretation. When the real design of the legislature in ordaining a statute, although it be not precisely expressed, is yet plainly perceivable, or ascertained with reasonable certainty, the language of the statute must be given such a construction as will carry that design into effect, even though in so doing the exact letter of the law be sacrificed, or although the construction be, indeed, contrary to the latter.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

Governments > Legislation > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Types of Statutes

HN13[] Legislation, Interpretation

The rule requiring the strict construction of a penal statute, as against the prisoner, is not violated by giving every word of the statute its full meaning, unless restrained by the context. It is not intended, however, to ignore the rule which requires penal statutes, as against the prisoner, to be construed strictly, and in his favor, liberally. But it does prevent a construction, as against him, so strict, or, in his favor, so liberal, as to defeat the obvious intention of the legislature. A statute defining an offense is not to be extended by construction to persons not within its descriptive terms, yet it is just as well settled that penal provisions are to be fairly construed according to the expressed legislative intent, and mere verbal nicety, or forced construction, is not to be resorted to in order to exonerate persons plainly within the terms of the statute.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN14[] Legislation, Interpretation

It is not to be presumed that favoritism was intended.

Governments > Legislation > Enactment

HN15[] Legislation, Enactment

See Ohio Const. art. II, § 16.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN16 [  ] Legislation, Interpretation

The title is one of the indices pointing, feebly it may be, to the legislative intent. The title is framed in the same manner as the bill, and is sanctioned by the vote of both branches of the legislature; the court may therefore consider it as explanatory of the object of the law. In trying to determine what the object of the words of a statute are, the court is authorized to look at its title.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > General Overview

Insurance Law > Industry Practices > General Overview

HN17 [  ] Antitrust & Trade Law, Regulated Industries

Insurance is a commodity. Commodity is defined to be that which affords advantage or profit.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > General Overview

Insurance Law > Industry Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN18 [  ] Antitrust & Trade Law, Regulated Industries

No good reason has been given that will hold insurance exceptional and accord to it a support that is denied to every other branch of industry. Business and law regard insurance as a commodity in the market, to be purchased as any other property, or beneficial interest.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Legislatures

HN19 [  ] Legislation, Interpretation

When the legislature of one state adopts legislation from another state, which has been construed by a court of last resort in that state, there is a presumption (not conclusive however), that it does so with the construction that has been so given it.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN20 [  ] Legislation, Interpretation

It is a general presumption that every word in a statute was inserted for some purpose. Mere idle and useless repetitions of meaning are not to be supposed, if it can be fairly avoided.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

**HN21** [blue] Legislation, Interpretation

It is a general presumption that every word in a statute was inserted for some purpose.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

Governments > Courts > Judicial Precedent

**HN22** [blue] Legislation, Interpretation

The rule ejusdem generis is that when general words follow an enumeration of particular cases, such general words are held to apply to cases of the same kind as those which are expressly mentioned. It is generally held to be the law that this rule does not apply when the particular precedent words exhaust a whole genus; in which case the general term is held to refer to a larger class.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Industries > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

**HN23** [blue] Antitrust & Trade Law, Regulated Industries

The word "commerce," is a generic word, the name of a whole class, and "all classes of business" must be used in a more comprehensive sense.

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Rights > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Effect & Operation > General Overview

Constitutional Law > State Constitutional Operation

**HN24** [blue] Bill of Rights, Fundamental Rights

It is held by the Supreme Court of Ohio, that it is essential to validity of an act undertaking to regulate the business that it shall in its requirements, operate equally; and that, the Ohio bill of rights prohibits the granting of privileges to one which are denied to others of the same class, and the imposition of restrictions or burdens upon certain citizens from which others of the same class are exempt, and Ohio Const. art. II, § 26 requires that all laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation throughout the state.

Headnotes/Summary

---

Headnotes

MONOPOLIES--VALENTINE ANTITRUST LAW--INSURANCE.*VALENTINE ANTITRUST LAW APPLIES TO INSURANCE BUSINESS.

The provisions of the Valentine antitrust law (Rev. Stat. 4427-1; Lan. 7586 et seq.) clearly comprehend the business of fire insurance within their purview; hence an indictment that the defendants did unlawfully conspire, combine and agree together to restrict "the trade, business and commerce of insuring property," and to increase and fix the premiums therefor, and prevent competition in such business, sets forth facts sufficient to constitute a crime under the laws of this state.

Counsel: C. L. Taylor and H. E. Starkey, for plaintiff.

T. E. Hoyt, A. M. Cox and H. B. Arnold, for defendant.

Judges: ROBERTS, J. Roberts and Metcalf, JJ.

Opinion by: ROBERTS

---

Opinion*[*704] ROBERTS, J.

The grand jury returned an indictment against Albert Ross and twenty-eight others, the first count of which charges that they, "on the thirtieth day of December, in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and three, with force and arms, in said county of Ashtabula and state of Ohio, unlawfully did conspire, combine, confederate, and agree together, to create and carry out restrictions in the trade, business, and commerce of insuring property against loss and damage by fire, lightning, and tornado; and to increase the price of such insurance and to prevent competition in the making, sale, and purchase of such insurance; and to fix the price, premium, and rate of such insurance at a standard, and figure whereby its price to the public, and to the consumer shall be established, and controlled; and to make, enter into, execute, and carry out contracts, obligations, and agreements to keep the price of such insurance at a graduated figure, to not [*2] sell or dispose of such insurance below a common standard, and fixed value, to establish and settle the price of such insurance between themselves and between themselves and others so as to preclude a free and unrestricted competition among themselves in the sale thereof, and to pool, combine, and unite their interests in the sale of such insurance so as to affect the price thereof," and they * * * "then and there, unlawfully acted with, were members of, and aided in carrying out the purposes of an unlawful trust and combination known as Ashtabula County Underwriters' Association, then and there being and existing for each and all of the aforesaid purposes and which said trust and combination did then and there unlawfully effect and accomplish each and all of the aforesaid purposes, [*705] contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided and against the peace and dignity of the state of Ohio."

The second and third counts differ from the first count only in alleging different dates.

To this indictment the defendants, Albert Ross and Isaac Hewitt, have demurred severally, and all other defendants jointly. The demurrers are alike and allege the following reasons:

[**3] "First: The facts stated and alleged in the said first, second and third counts in said indictment do not constitute, in either of said counts, an offense punishable by the laws of the state of Ohio.

Second: That the facts stated and alleged in the said first, second and third counts in said indictment, are not sufficient in either of said counts, to constitute an offense or crime under the laws of the state of Ohio.

Third: The facts stated and alleged in said first, second and third counts in said indictment do not constitute in either of said counts, an offense punishable under Chapter 19 A, entitled 'trusts' of the Revised Statutes of Ohio.

Fourth: The intent is not alleged in either the first, second or third counts of said indictment and proof of such intent is necessary to make out the offense charged."

This indictment was intended to be based upon the Stewart-Valentine antitrust law, so-called, and is found in 93 O. L. 143 (Rev. Stat. 4427-1; Lan. 7586).

The law, so far as pertinent in this consideration, reads as follows:

HN1 [↑] "AN ACT

"To define trust and to provide for criminal penalties and civil damages, and punishment of corporations, persons, firms and associations, [**4] or persons connected with them, and to promote free competition in commerce and all classes of business in the state.

"Section 1. Be it enacted by the general assembly of the state of Ohio, that a trust is a combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more persons, firms, partnerships, corporations or associations of persons, or of any two or more of them for either, any or all of the following purposes:

"1. To create or carry out restrictions in trade or commerce.

"2. To limit or reduce the production, or increase, or reduce the price of merchandise or any commodity.

"3. To prevent competition in manufacturing, making, transportation, sale or purchase of merchandise, produce or any commodity.

"4. To fix at any standard or figure, whereby its price to the public or consumer shall be in any manner controlled or established, any [*706] article or commodity of merchandise, produce or commerce intended for sale, barter, use or consumption in this state.

"5. To make or enter into or execute or carry out any contracts, obligations or agreements of any kind or description, by which they shall bind or have bound themselves not to sell, dispose of or transport any article or [**5] any commodity or any article of trade, use, merchandise, commerce or consumption below a common standard figure or fixed value, or by which they shall agree in any manner to keep the price of such article, commodity or transportation at a fixed or graduated figure, or by which they shall in any manner establish or settle the price of any article, commodity or transportation between them or themselves and others, so as to directly or indirectly preclude a free and unrestricted competition among themselves, or any purchasers or consumers in the sale or transportation of any such article or commodity, or by which they shall agree to pool, combine or directly or indirectly unite any interests that they may have connected with the sale or transportation of any such article or commodity, that its price might in any manner be affected. Every such trust as is defined herein is declared to be unlawful, against public policy and void."

The questions involved in the consideration of these demurrs have been learnedly and exhaustively argued by counsel for the state and for the defendants, both orally and by briefs submitted, even to the extent of going beyond the legal propositions before the [**6] court and embracing a discussion concerning the business of fire insurance generally, its purposes, its methods and its profits, which makes it proper to remark that in a consideration of these demurrs the court has nothing to do with the guilt or innocence of the defendants, with the manner of doing business by insurance companies, or agents, their designs or acts, or with the facts whatever they may be, embraced in the transactions alleged in the indictments.

The demurrs admit the truth of the allegations of the indictment, and considering them true, say that they do not constitute an offense under or punishable by, the laws of Ohio, and that they do not constitute an offense under the provisions of the Stewart-Valentine law.

In other words, and briefly stated, the issue is whether the business of insurance is included in, or provided for, in said law. If it is not, the demurrs should be sustained.

It will be observed that specific kinds of business are not enumerated in the law, and it is claimed by the state that insurance is included in "trade," "commerce" and "commodity," mentioned in the law.

The problem to be solved is whether these terms, or any of them, by proper [**7] definition and by rightful construction of the law, include insurance.

[*707] Recourse to the definitions of lexicographers and of courts becomes necessary. Webster defines trade as follows:

1. The act or business of exchanging commodities by barter, the business of buying or selling for money.
2. The business which a person has learned and which he carries on for procuring subsistence or for profit, occupation, especially mechanical employment.
3. Business pursued, occupation, employment.

The definitions found in the Standard and Century Dictionaries are substantially the same.

Bouvier says:

Trade. In exemption laws, it is usually confined to the occupation of a mechanic, but in its broader sense it is generally construed as equivalent to any occupation, employment, handicraft or business.

Anderson's Law Dictionary says: "Trade, generally, equivalent to occupation, employment, or business, whether manual or mercantile; any occupation, employment or business carried on for profit, gain or livelihood, not in the liberal arts or learned professions."

"The word 'trade' includes not only the business of exchanging commodities by barter, but the business of buying and selling [**8] for money, or commerce and traffic generally."

[May v. Sloan, 101 U.S. 231 \[25 L. Ed. 797\].](#)

Story, J., said in [The Nymph, 1 Sumn. 516 \[18 F. Cas. 506\] HN2](#)  "Wherever any occupation, employment, or business is carried on for the purpose of profit or gain, or a livelihood, not in the liberal arts or in the learned professions, it is constantly called a trade."

In this broader sense the word is used in [The Eliza, 2 Gall. 4 \[8 F. Cas. 455\]; United States v. Brig Eliza, 11 U.S. \(7 Cranch\) 113 \[3 L. Ed. 286\].](#)

The business of a telegraph company was held to be a trade in 3 Exch. Div. 108.

In [Betz v. Maier, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 219 \[33 S.W. 710\]](#), it is said, HN3  "The word 'trade' embraces within its meaning commercial traffic, and it also has a limited and restricted significance, which applies to mechanical pursuits; but, in its broad and general sense it covers and embraces all occupations in business, with the possible exception of the learned professions, and those that pertain to liberal arts and the pursuit of agriculture."

In this case it was held that HN4  the business of an [**9] insurance agent was included in the term "trade."

The word or term "commodity" is defined by Webster as,

1. Convenience; accommodation; profit; advantage; interest.
2. That which affords ease, convenience or advantage, especially [*708] in commerce, including everything that is bought and sold, goods, wares, merchandise.

In the Century Dictionary:

1. Accommodation; convenience; suitableness.
2. Profit; advantage; interest.
3. That which is useful, anything that is useful, convenient or serviceable.

The definition in the Standard Dictionary is substantially the same.

Anderson's Law Dictionary, in addition to the definitions given, says that, "Commodity is a general term and includes the privilege and convenience of transacting a particular business."

8 Cyc. page 338.

"Commodity. In its primary and most comprehensive sense, accommodation; advantage; benefit; commerce [convenience]; commodiousness; convenience; gain; interest; privilege profit; the privilege and convenience of transacting a particular business. In its secondary and commercial sense, that which affords advantage or profit; that which affords convenience or advantage, especially in commerce, including [**10] everything movable which is bought and sold; and article of trade or commerce, a movable article of value, something that is bought and sold; any movable and tangible thing that is ordinarily produced or used as the subject of barter or sale; anything movable that is subject of trade or acquisition; articles of trade or commerce; goods, wares, and merchandise of any kind; property; something produced for use, and an article of trade or commerce."

HN5 [↑] "In the general sense a commodity is something of convenience, advantage, benefit, or profit; and in a special sense a commodity is something produced for use as an article of trade or commerce * * *. The privilege of transmitting or receiving, by will or descent, property on the death of the owner is a 'commodity' within the meaning of this word in the constitution of Massachusetts." Minot v. Winthrop, 162 Mass. 113 [38 N.E. 512]; 26 L. R. A. 259].

"Commodity is a general term and includes the privilege and convenience of transacting a particular business." Commonwealth v. Bank, 123 Mass. 493.

HN6 [↑] "The primary meaning of the word commodity according to the lexicographers, is convenience, [**11] and its secondary meaning is that which affords convenience or advantage, especially in commerce, including everything which is bought and sold."

McKeon v. Wolf, 77 Ill. App. 325.

"If regarded as meaning goods and wares only, there would be much difficulty in the case, but if it signifies 'convenience, privilege, profit, and gains,' as uniformly held by the state court, then all difficulty vanishes, and the case is clear."

[*709] Hamilton Mfg. Co. v. Massachusetts, 73 U.S. (6 Wall.) 632 [18 L. Ed. 904].

HN7 [↑] "Commodity is a general term and includes the privilege and convenience of transacting a particular business."

Portland Bank v. Apthorp, 12 Mass. 252, 256.

Commerce is defined by Webster as being "The exchange of merchandise on a large scale between different places or communities."

Anderson's Law Dictionary quotes from Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U.S. (9 Wheat.) 1 [6 L. Ed. 23], as follows:

"In its simplest signification an exchange of goods; but in the advancement of society, labor, transportation, intelligence, care, and various mediums of exchange become commodities and enter into commerce. [**12] "

"A term of the widest import comprehending intercourse for the purpose of trade in any and all its forms."

It was said by Marshall, C. J., in Gibbons v. Ogden, supra, HN8 "Commerce, undoubtedly, is traffic, but it is something more; it is intercourse. It describes the commercial intercourse between nations, and parts of nations, in all its branches, and is regulated by prescribing rules for carrying on that intercourse."

In this case it was held that commerce included navigation.

In [Leloup v. Mobile, 127 U.S. 640 \[8 S. Ct. 1380; 32 L. Ed. 311\]](#), it is held that communication by telegraph is commerce.

In Black's Law Dictionary, it is said to the effect that commerce includes the various agreements which have for their object, facilitating the exchange of the products of the earth or the industry of man, with an intent to realize a profit.

HN9 From the recognized and well settled definitions and meanings of the words "trade," "commodity" and "commerce" as given by lexicographers as established by courts and sanctioned and approved by long and general usage, it follows that these words could properly have been used in a sense broad enough to include \*\*13 fire insurance, by the legislature, in the law under consideration, and that the words are susceptible of such definition as will include and cover fire insurance.

The question now for determination is whether these words were used by the legislature in such broad and general sense, under such circumstances, and with such other language in the act, as requires or justifies a construction of the act, giving to these words a meaning which includes fire insurance.

Rules should now be considered for the construing of the statute and to determine what should be considered in so doing.

HN10 "The intention of the lawmakers may be collected from the cause, or necessity of the act * * *.

"Every statute should be construed with a reference to its object, \*\*710 and the will of the lawmakers is best promoted by such a construction as secures that object, and excludes every other * * *.

"It being the duty of courts to give such a construction to statutes as will suppress the mischief, and advance the remedy." [Burgett v. Burgett, 1 Ohio 469, 482 \[13 Am. Dec. 634\]](#).

"In giving a construction to any statute, the court must consider its policy, and give it such an interpretation, \*\*14 as may appear best calculated to advance its object by effecting the design of the legislature. The great object of the statute in question, is clearly expressed in the title prefixed to it." Wilber v. Paine, 1 Ohio 251.

"It is a rule of interpretation universally accepted, that in giving a construction to a statute the court will consider its policy and the mischief to be remedied, and give it such an interpretation as appears best calculated to advance its object by effectuating the design of the legislature * * *. It is equally well settled that where the legislature has employed explicit and unambiguous terms to express its purpose and object, the ordinary meaning of such terms is to be adopted." [Davis v. Justice, 31 Ohio St. 359, 367 \[27 Am. Rep. 514\]](#).

HN11 "It is a fundamental rule of construction, that the language of a statute is to be interpreted according to the sense in which the terms are employed and the plain intention of the legislature. The great object of the rules and maxims of interpretation has been to discover the true intention of the law * * *. Regard must be had to the real object of the law, and the effect and substance \*\*15 of the subject-matter, and not barely to the nicety of form or circumstance. The reason, intent, and spirit of a law, therefore, must often prevail over the literal import of the terms employed." Slater v. Cave, 3 Ohio St. 80, 82.

"While, on the one hand, the judiciary should be careful not to make its office of expounding statutes a cloak for the exercise of legislative power, on the other hand it is equally bound not to stick in the mere letter of a law, but rather to seek for its reason and spirit in the mischief that required a remedy and the general scope of the legislation designed to effect it." Tracy v. Card, 2 Ohio St. 431.

"In construing statutes so as to give them the legislative intent, interpretation may expand their meaning beyond the literal significance of the words. In each case regard must be had to the subject and the circumstances, as well as to the words used." [Cincinnati Gas Light & Coke Co. v. Avondale, 43 Ohio St. 257, 267 \[1 N.E. 527\].](#)

HN12[] "The object of judicial investigation in the construction of a statute is to ascertain and give effect to the intent of the lawmaking body which enacted it. **16 And where its provisions are ambiguous, and its meaning doubtful, the history of legislation on the subject, and the consequences of a literal interpretation of the language may be considered; punctuation may be changed or disregarded; words transposed, [*711] or those necessary to a clear understanding and, as shown by the context manifestly intended, inserted.

"But the intent of the lawmakers is to be sought first of all in the language employed, and if the words be free from ambiguity and doubt, and express plainly, clearly and distinctly, the sense of the lawmaking body, there is no occasion to resort to other means of interpretation." [Slingluff v. Weaver, 66 Ohio St. 621 \[64 N.E. 574\].](#)

"When the real design of the legislature in ordaining a statute, although it be not precisely expressed, is yet plainly perceptible, or ascertained with reasonable certainty, the language of the statute must be given such a construction as will carry that design into effect, even though in so doing the exact letter of the law be sacrificed, or although the construction be, indeed, contrary to the latter." [Logan Nat. Gas & Fuel Co. v. Chillicothe, 65 Ohio St. 186, 206 \[62 N.E. 122.\]](#) **17

Rules applying directly to criminal cases will now be cited. In Woodworth v. State, 26 Ohio St. 196, 198, which was a case from this county, the Supreme Court said: HN13[] "The rule requiring the strict construction of a penal statute, as against the prisoner, is not violated by giving every word of the statute its full meaning, unless restrained by the context * * *.

"It is not intended, however, to ignore the rule which requires penal statutes, as against the prisoner, to be construed strictly, and in his favor, liberally. But it does prevent a construction, as against him, so strict, or, in his favor, so liberal, as to defeat the obvious intention of the legislature."

Again in [Barker v. State, 69 Ohio St. 68, 74 \[68 N.E. 575\],](#) it is said: "We are quite aware that the rule of law and of this court is that a statute defining an offense is not to be extended by construction to persons not within its descriptive terms, yet it is just as well settled that penal provisions are to be fairly construed according to the expressed legislative intent, and mere verbal nicety, or forced construction, is not to be resorted to in order to exonerate persons **18 plainly within the terms of the statute."

The meaning of the words of the statute being doubtful and its provisions subject to ambiguity, it becomes a duty, under the authorities cited, to consider "the history of the legislation," "the cause or necessity of the act," "the object and will of the lawmakers," and what "appears best calculated to advance its object."

This act was passed April 19, 1898, at a time when the great industrial and commercial interests of the county were being concentrated and united under single control; when syndicates and trusts were being formed to control, not only production, but transportation; [*712] when competition was being stifled, and the result of individual effort was failure.

The necessities of life were passing under the control of monopolies and the condition of the masses was becoming subject to the power of combined wealth.

Widespread apprehension existed in the mind of the people, as to the result of these conditions, and the efforts of well meaning legislators were being directed to the remedy of evil conditions, and the protection of the people.

National legislation had resulted in the Sherman law, and various states had enacted **19 antitrust laws; the object of all which was to protect the people from unjust monopoly, and to promote free competition.

Insurance had become and was generally recognized as a necessity. As pertinently remarked by counsel for the defendants, "Its great growth has been within the last half century."

The home of the poor man and the business investments of the rich are not safe without it. Business would not prosper except for its protection. Credit, perhaps the greatest factor of the various enterprises of civilized life, is dependent upon it.

It has become and is universally recognized as a necessity of life, progress and prosperity.

From the nature of insurance, its business is transacted by comparatively few companies of great wealth, and thus its becoming a trust, as defined by the statute, was of comparatively easy accomplishment, and the danger to be apprehended correspondingly great.

Considering the "history of legislation" and the "necessity of the act," it seems incredible that the legislature in adopting this law should have considered and intended only to include and provide against restrictions in trade or commerce, and the control of the price or production of commodities [**20] in the narrow and restricted sense of articles of trade and barter of goods, wares and merchandise.

Is it reasonable that the legislature intended to prevent monopoly in practically all classes of business except fire insurance? Did it intend to give to that business a special privilege and immunity?

HN14  It is not to be presumed that favoritism was intended.

The title of the act, which is declaratory of its object, says that it is "to promote free competition in commerce and all classes of business in the state."

That fire insurance is a business will not be seriously contended.

To what extent may the title of the act be considered for a construction of the act?

Section 16, Art. 2 of the constitution of the state of Ohio provides that HN15  "No bill shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title."

[*713] HN16  "It (the title) is one of the indices pointing, feebly it may be, to the legislative intent." [State v. Pugh, 43 Ohio St. 98 \[1 N.E. 439\]](#). It follows that to the full extent that we may rely upon the title of this act to determine its meaning, it must be said that it was intended to and does include insurance.

"The title [**21] is framed in the same manner as the bill, and is sanctioned by the vote of both branches of the legislature; we may therefore consider it as explanatory of the object of the law." [Burgett v. Burgett, 1 Ohio 469-480 \[13 Am. Dec. 634\]](#).

"In trying to determine what the object of the words of a statute are, we are authorized to look at its title." [Bronson v. Oberlin, 41 Ohio St. 476, 483 \[52 Am. Rep. 90\]](#).

It was held by the Supreme Court of Mississippi, in [American Fire Ins. Co. v. State, 75 Miss. 24 \[22 So. 99\]](#), that a statute providing against combinations "of business" in those words, included fire insurance.

It is said, Pinkney, In re, 47 Kan. 89 [27 P. 179]:

"The question presented is, does the word 'trade,' used in the title, fairly indicate and include the provisions of the act with reference to insurance? It is argued that the usual meaning of the word should govern, and in that sense it has reference to the business of selling or exchanging some tangible substance or commodity for money, or the business of dealing by way of sale or exchange in commodities; and it is said that the use of [**22] the word in connection with that of 'products,' in the title qualifies the meaning of 'trade,' and makes it all the more apparent that the construction contended for is the correct one. This is the commercial sense of the word, and possibly may be the most common signification which is given to it; but it is not the only one, nor the most comprehensive meaning in which the word is properly used. In the broader sense, it is any occupation or business carried on for subsistence or profit * * *. The broader signification given to the word by most of the lexicographers would fairly embrace and cover the provision of the act with reference to the business of insurance. The title prefixed to an act may be broad and general, or it may be narrow and restricted, but in either event it must be a fair index of the provisions of the act; that is, the subject of the act must be clearly expressed by the title."

In State v. Phipps, 50 Kan. 609 [31 P. 1097]; 18 L. R. A. 657; 34 Am. St. Rep. 152], it was again held that insurance comes within the purview of "trade."

The statute of Iowa provided against combinations "to regulate or fix the price of oil, [**23] lumber, coal, flour, provisions or any other commodity or article whatever," and the supreme court of Iowa in Beechley v. Mulville, 102 Iowa 602 [70 N.W. 107]; 63 Am. St. Rep. 479], [*714] held "that insurance companies and a compact to charge uniform rates" was included in "any other commodity." The court said: "It is thought by appellants that such statute has no application to insurance companies, but the only reason assigned for it is that the same subject has been before each successive legislature since the act passed, and no one has thought that the act referred to such companies. However that may be, we have no doubt of its application to insurance companies because of the language of the act. There is a manifest purpose to make the section comprehensive as to the subject-matter, as well as to persons, both natural and artificial, coming within its prohibitions. It prohibits combinations to fix the price of oil, lumber, coal, grain, flour, provisions, or any other commodity or article whatever. HN17↑ Insurance is a commodity. 'Commodity' is defined to be that which affords advantage or profit. Mr. Anderson, in his Law Dictionary, defines the [**24] word as 'convenience, privilege, profit, gain; popularly, goods, wares, merchandise.' We see no reason why, in the act, the word should be restricted to its popular use. It is common to speak of 'selling insurance.' It is a term used in insurance business, and law writers have, to quite an extent, adopted it. Again, there are the same reasons why it should be protected against combinations as there are in matters clearly within the provisions of the law. The district court instructed the jury that the combination was prohibited by the act in question, and we think the holding was right."

In the case of Metzger v. Adams, 28 Ins. L. Jo. 176 (Ind.), it is said: HN18↑ "No good reason has been given that will hold insurance exceptional and accord to it a support that is denied to every other branch of industry. Business and law regard insurance as a commodity in the market, to be purchased as any other property, or beneficial interest."

Revised Statutes 6969 (Lan. 10660) and Doll v. State, 45 Ohio St. 445, 446 [15 N.E. 293], construing that section, speak of purchasing fire insurance.

In Paul v. Virginia, 75 U.S. (8 Wall.) 168 [19 L. Ed. 357], [**25] the restricted definition of commerce was applied to insurance and insurance contracts were said not to be commodities to be shipped from one state to another.

This decision was followed in several others in the same court, but the subject under consideration was interstate commerce and insurance has been frequently held not subject thereto.

It may be proper to remark that this rule was laid down many years ago and insurance occupies a much more important position than then, and there has been much recent discussion to the effect that insurance should now be subject to interstate commerce.

[*715] In 1889 the state of Texas enacted what was perhaps the first antitrust law of the states.

In 1893 the supreme court of Texas in Queen Ins. Co. v. State, 86 Tex. 250 [24 S.W. 397]; 22 L. R. A. 483], held that the law did not apply to insurance.

In 1895 the legislature of Texas enacted a second antitrust law broadening its terms apparently for the purpose of including therein the subject of insurance.

The argument of counsel for the defendants is largely an effort to show that the legislature of Ohio at the time of the passage of the law under consideration [**26] had before it the original Texas law, the decision of the Texas court and the amended Texas law, and that a comparison of the three laws indicates that our legislature followed the original Texas law. That by a rule of construction recognized in Ohio, HN19↑ when the legislature of our state adopts legislation from another state, which has been construed by a court of last resort in that state, there is a presumption (not conclusive however), that it does so with the construction that has been so given it.

Taking into consideration the evils productive of the law, the purpose of suppressing the mischief and of advancing the remedy, in connection with the suggestion that the legislature had its attention directly called to the subject of insurance, by considering the first Texas law from which it was omitted, the Texas decision so holding and the second law so drafted as to include insurance, it seems to be extremely improbable that the Ohio legislature should have purposely followed a statute which excluded insurance and which had been found deficient as shown by subsequent legislation in the pioneer state of antitrust laws.

With due deference to the careful analysis and comparison of these [**27] laws by counsel for the defendants, in arguing that original Texas law was followed, it is not thought that the comparison warrants this conclusion.

The original Texas law in section one, subdivision first read as follows: "To create or carry out restrictions in trade."

This was amended so as to include insurance, and to read, "To create or carry out restrictions in trade or commerce, or aids to commerce, or to create or carry out restrictions in the full and fee pursuit of any business authorized or permitted by the laws of the state."

It was held in Queen Ins. Co. v. State, supra, "That the words in the first subdivision of section one, of the act, 'to create or carry out restrictions in trade,' were intended only as a general expression of the purpose of the law."

This is the subdivision changed to include insurance and in our statute the words, "all classes of business" were inserted in the title as expressive of the purpose of the law.

[*716] In the Ohio statute, subdivision one, of section one, is constituted a separate offense, as held in State v. Gage, 72 Ohio St. 210, 73 N.E. 1078.

This suggests the thought that our legislature intended [**28] to include insurance, and the words bringing it in, as found in the Texas act, being where the court said was expressive of the purpose of the law, prompted their insertion in a corresponding place in the Ohio law, viz., the title.

It is said in the Texas decision. "It is true that while trusts are defined in the first section, nowhere either in that or any other section are they expressly declared unlawful * * *. There is no express declaration that trusts are unlawful--the acts which are declared to constitute a trust are not expressly made punishable, nor is any act expressly declared to be a violation of the provisions of the statute."

That the Ohio law had before it the Texas decision and intended to remedy the defect suggested and not to follow the original act is apparent from the insertion in the Ohio law, in section one, subdivision five, the following provision: "Every such trust as defined herein is declared to be unlawful, against public policy and void."

Subdivision first, section one, Texas act of 1889, reads, "To create or carry out restrictions in trade." In the Texas act of 1895, to these words "or commerce" is added, and they are also found in section one, subdivision [**29] one of the Ohio law, thus indicating that the second Texas law was followed.

It is said in Bloom v. Richards, 2 Ohio St. 387, 402, HN20 "It is a general presumption that every word in a statute was inserted for some purpose. Mere idle and useless repetitions of meaning are not to be supposed, if it can be fairly avoided."

The insertion of the words "or commerce" after "trade" means something and if "trade" be used in the narrow sense, then "commerce" should be accorded a more general definition, more in consonance with the meaning urged by counsel for the state.

While it can readily be believed that the legislature had before it both Texas acts, and that it drew for material from both, it is not apparent from comparison, that the Ohio law was taken from the original Texas law, with the intention of excluding insurance.

It is urged by counsel for the defendants that Rev. Stat. 3659 (Lan. 5872), the anticompetitive law, having been amended since the enacting of the Stewart-Valentine law, which is said not to include associations of agents, and not having had inserted therein provision such as is contended for in the Stewart-Valentine law, is reason to support the claim [**30] that the legislature did not intend to include insurance. With as much reason it may be said that the legislature understanding that insurance was in the Stewart-Valentine law, did not therefore perceive any reason for inserting it in the anticompetitive law, when amended.

[*717] The decision in Queen Ins. Co. v. State, supra, was largely based upon the provisions of the penal code of Texas which have no application in this state. It being provided in the penal code that no person shall be punished for an act which is not made a penal offense, and the fact has been heretofore mentioned that the original Texas act did not expressly declare trusts to be unlawful. That code also provides for a strict construction of penal laws

Further, the Texas decision held that under the terms of the original act providing against restraints of trade, many contracts and conditions of business would be punishable which are proper and necessary in the affairs of life; that no distinction is made between what is reasonable and proper and what is unreasonable and improper, which considerations seem to have largely influenced the court.

In State v. Gage, 72 Ohio St. 210, 73 N.E. 1078, [**31] it was urged that the Stewart-Valentine law was void because its terms do not except from its prohibitions, contracts, acts and transactions which are protected by the constitution; but the court held that the case offered no opportunity for the application of a rule that when an act contains an indivisible prohibition, whose terms include contracts which the legislature is powerless to prohibit, the courts cannot save the act by restricting the natural and obvious meaning of its terms.

Thus it will be observed that the Supreme Court of Ohio and the supreme court of Texas construe this antitrust legislation along widely diverging lines.

Runck v. Cloud, 11 Ohio Dec. 444 (8 Ohio N.P. 436), is cited as authority that insurance is not to be considered in the act and the court in that case so held.

In so deciding, the court assumes that the statute is "a literal copy" of the Texas act, which counsel for defendants do not claim it to be, and then the court proceeds to adopt the argument of the Texas court.

If it be not true that our statute was borrowed from the Texas act of 1889, then the foundation on which the case of Runck v. Cloud, supra, rests is destroyed.

[**32] In this decision it is said, "Our legislature, very evidently then to avoid this ambiguity in our statute added on the word 'commerce,' to trade, as a synonym or equivalent and not by way of contrast."

This is a plain violation of the rule of construction laid down in Bloom v. Richards, 2 Ohio St. 387, 402, that, HN21 [↑] "It is a general presumption that every word in a statute was inserted for some purpose."

This discussion further argues that all classes of business should be construed to mean all classes of business devoted to commerce, otherwise it is said if it is given a larger signification "embracing everything about which a person can be employed" it will include classes of [*718] unions and combinations recognized to be lawful, devoted to working men.

State v. Gage, supra, held that lawful business can be excluded from the act and it still remain constitutional and operative. The decision seems to have been framed to avoid a danger said by our Supreme Court not to exist.

The effort of the court to restrict the meaning of "all classes of business" to the same class as commerce, by an application of HN22 [↑] the rule eiusdem generis, that when general [**33] words follow an enumeration of particular cases, such general words are held to apply to cases of the same kind as those which are expressly mentioned, is not warranted. It is generally held to be the law, that this rule does not apply when the particular preceding words exhaust a whole genus; in which case the general term is held to refer to a larger class.

McKeon v. Wolf, 77 Ill. App. 325; 23 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law (1 ed.) 442; Sutherland, Stat. Constr. Secs. 278-279; Woodworth v. State, 26 Ohio St. 196.

HN23 [+] The word "commerce," is a generic word, the name of a whole class, and under the rule of the Illinois court and other authorities, "all classes of business" must be used in a more comprehensive sense.

HN24 [+] It is held by the Supreme Court of Ohio, that "it is essential to validity of an act undertaking to regulate the business that it shall in its requirements, operate equally;" and that, "Our bill of rights prohibits the granting of privileges to one which are denied to others of the same class, and the imposition of restrictions or burdens upon certain citizens from which others of the same class are exempt, and Sec. 26 of Art. 2 of the constitution [**34] requires that all laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation throughout the state." State v. Gardner, 58 Ohio St. 599 /51 N.E. 136; 41 L. R. A. 689; 65 Am. St. Rep. 785].

The Stewart-Valentine law, having been held valid in State v. Gage, supra, and if the terms "trade," "commerce" and "commodity," properly defined, include insurance, then insurance must be held to be within the statute.

The Iowa case of Beechley v. Mulville, supra, which held that insurance is a commodity, is cited with evident approval by the Supreme Court of the United States in Carroll v. Greenwich Ins. Co. decided November 27, 1905. In a concurring opinion by Justice Harlan in that case, he said: "The business of fire insurance is of such a peculiar character, so intimately connected with the prosperity of the whole community, and so vital to the security of property owners, that it is competent for the state to forbid combinations and agreements among fire insurance companies doing business within its limits, in reference to rates, agents, commissions and the manner of doing their business."

[*719] The fourth ground [**35] of the demurrer that intent is not alleged in the indictment, has not been argued, and it is understood that nothing is now claimed for it.

The issues presented by the demurrs have been considered in conjunction with Judge Metcalfe, who concurs in the conclusions herein made, and in the finding that the demurrs should be overruled.

---

End of Document

State v. Hygeia Ice Co.

Court of Common Pleas of Lucas County, Ohio

August 3, 1906, Decided

No Number in Original

Reporter

16 Ohio Dec. 735 *; 1906 Ohio Misc. LEXIS 62 **; 4 Ohio N.P. (n.s.) 361

STATE OF OHIO v. HYGEIA ICE CO. ET AL.

Disposition: [**1] Motions overruled.

Core Terms

---

sentence, guilty plea, classification, trial judge, confession, leniency, parties, motions, rights, imprisonment, withdraw, prosecuting attorney, embarrassing, artificial, promise

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN1 [down arrow] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

See Ohio Rev. Stat. § 4427-12.

Constitutional Law > State Constitutional Operation

HN2 [down arrow] Constitutional Law, State Constitutional Operation

Ohio Const. art. 2, § 26 provides that all laws, of a general nature shall have a uniform operation throughout the state.

Constitutional Law > Equal Protection > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Effect & Operation > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN3 [down arrow] Constitutional Law, Equal Protection

A law operates uniformly when it has uniform operation upon all of a particular class, if the classification made is a reasonable one.

Constitutional Law > Equal Protection > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Effect & Operation > General Overview

HN4 Constitutional Law, Equal Protection

When a law operates uniformly on all natural persons within the state, it operates uniformly.

Constitutional Law > ... > Case or Controversy > Constitutionality of Legislation > General Overview

HN5 Case or Controversy, Constitutionality of Legislation

Unless it manifestly contravenes the constitution, the judicial department is not warranted in declaring it void.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Crimes Against Persons > Coercion & Harassment > General Overview

Evidence > ... > Exemptions > Confessions > General Overview

HN6 Crimes Against Persons, Coercion & Harassment

The judge is to determine how the confession was produced by looking at the circumstances; among which are the strength or weakness of the prisoner's intellect, his knowledge or ignorance. If satisfied, however, that the confession was produced by the representations or threats, the court cannot receive it in evidence, the strongest mind is liable to be unhinged, and the question is not what the prisoner ought to have believed, but what did he believe. It does not follow that the same rule safeguarding the prisoner's rights which applies to an extrajudicial confession should be employed in the case of a confession in court; in fact, the rule is otherwise.

Criminal Law & Procedure > Preliminary Proceedings > Entry of Pleas > Changes & Withdrawals

Criminal Law & Procedure > Preliminary Proceedings > Entry of Pleas > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Entry of Pleas > Types of Pleas > Not Guilty

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Entry of Pleas > Guilty Pleas > Changes & Withdrawals

HN7 Entry of Pleas, Changes & Withdrawals

The rule is universal that a person who has been indicted and who has pleaded not guilty, may, by leave of the court, on the advice of counsel or of his own motion, withdraw that plea and enter a plea of guilty; but it has long been held that where a defendant has pleaded guilty and sentence has been passed upon him, he cannot retract his plea and plead not guilty.

Criminal Law & Procedure > Postconviction Proceedings > Arrest of Judgment

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Entry of Pleas > Guilty Pleas > Changes & Withdrawals

HN8 Postconviction Proceedings, Arrest of Judgment

In most courts, where leave to substitute not guilty is asked in a reasonable time, it is granted pretty nearly as of course. Even where, after a defendant has pleaded guilty, has moved an arrest of judgment and his motion has been overruled, the court, if justice requires, will allow a substitute of not guilty for guilty, but it is too late after sentence.

Headnotes/Summary

---

Headnotes

CRIMINAL LAW--CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

1. VALENTINE ANTITRUST LAW--IMPRISONMENT CLAUSE NOT UNCONSTITUTIONAL.

Revised Statutes 4427-4 (Lan. 7589), the "imprisonment clause" of the Valentine antitrust law, does not manifestly contravene the constitution in that its operation is not uniform as to all persons, both natural and artificial, and is not, therefore, unconstitutional.

2. DEFENDANTS SENTENCED UNDER PLEAS OF GUILTY MAY NOT WITHDRAW PLEAS AND CHANGE TO PLEAS OF NOT GUILTY--NOT CONFESSIONS.

Defendants who have pleaded guilty to indictments against them and have been sentenced under such pleas may not be allowed to withdraw such pleas of guilty and substitute pleas of not guilty on the ground that they have been misled into making such pleas by expectation of leniency in the sentence to be imposed, however that expectation may have been aroused. Such plea of guilty, after sentence, may not be considered as an involuntary confession made under an apprehension or hope of reward.

3. PARDONING POWER NECESSARY TO RELIEVE AGAINST SEVERITY OF SENTENCE.

Within the limitations of the statute prescribing punishment the law vests the trial court with discretion in imposing sentence which cannot be reviewed for severity. The only relief is to be found in the pardoning power.

4. CONFESSION IN OPEN COURT NOT WITHIN RULE AS TO SAFEGUARDING RIGHTS OF PRISONER IN EXTRAJUDICIAL CONFESSIONS.

The rule safeguarding the rights of a prisoner, which applies to extrajudicial confessions, should not necessarily be applied to a confession made in court; and were this not true, it would not follow that it should be applied where intelligent business men under the advice of counsel, have speculated for weeks as to the best thing to do, have consulted with the prosecutor, and after turning the matter over in every possible light, conclude to plead guilty and throw themselves on the mercy of the court.

Counsel: L. W. Wachenheimer, Pros. Atty., Ralph Emery, Asst. Pros. Atty., and H. W. Seney, for plaintiff.

King & Tracy, Brown & Geddes, Schmettau & Williams, Smith & Beckwith and Hamilton & Kirby, for defendants.

Judges: BABCOCK, J.

Opinion by: BABCOCK

Opinion

[*735] BABCOCK, J.

The three motions of the several defendants have been heard and will be disposed of together as heard. The vital questions are the same in each. It is true that in Joseph Miller's case a trial and conviction had already taken place and motions for new trial and in arrest of judgment had been filed, while in the cases of Reuben C. Lemmon and Roland A. Beard, defendants, trials had not taken place, but they were before the court, awaiting trial and had pleaded not guilty to the charge preferred. On June 11 these defendants pleaded guilty. Later defendant, Miller, withdrew his motions and awaited sentence. His motion is for the vacation of the sentence pronounced upon him, with application for reinstatement of the motions as before the withdrawal, while Lemon and [*736] Beard's motion is for the vacation of the sentences with application for leave to withdraw the pleas of guilty and enter [**2] in their stead pleas of not guilty. The grounds for vacating the sentences are so nearly alike that the court can properly make its findings of law and fact on all three motions at the same time.

The movers in all of the motions contend for four propositions:

1. That Rev. Stat. 4427-4 (Lan. 7589) is unconstitutional so far as the imprisonment clause is concerned.
2. That the court promised leniency to defendants, if they would plead guilty, and therefore misled them to their prejudice.
3. That the court, by words and conduct, misled them into pleading guilty, to the like prejudice of their rights as defendants in the case.
4. That said defendants were wrongfully induced, and, in violation of their rights, were led to withdraw their pleas of not guilty and plead guilty through hope and expectation of leniency excited in their minds by counsel who were laboring under misapprehension and mistake as to leniency of sentence about to be pronounced.

While this grouping is not in the language of the motions, it does cover the grounds contended for.

The first question, in the order named, is that of the power to imprison for violation of the subsection styled the imprisonment or penalty [**3] clause of the so-called Valentine antitrust law. Revised Statutes 4427-12 (Lan. 7597) reads:

HN1 [↑] "The word 'person' or 'persons,' whenever used in this act shall be deemed to include corporations," etc.

It is contended that this act, providing for fine and imprisonment of natural and artificial persons, is invalid as being in violation of Sec. 26, Art. 2 of the constitution, HN2 [↑] which provides that "all laws, of a general nature shall have a uniform operation throughout the state." It is contended that since corporations cannot be imprisoned, natural persons are discriminated against by this imprisonment clause. It is further contended that, if a classification may be made, this act is not saved, for the reason that the legislature has not made any classification.

The court is of opinion that the first contention is without force, for the reason that, were it otherwise, no criminal act could stand which omitted corporations from its provisions. This seems true for an entire exemption of artificial persons would be as grievous as a partial exemption--in fact, would be a wider departure from uniformity

HN3 [↑] A law operates uniformly when it has uniform operation upon all of a particular class, [**4] if the classification made is a reasonable one.

It is contended that the legislature has not attempted any classification, and therefore the statute cannot be saved on the classification theory. The court does not concede the proposition that classification between natural and artificial persons is necessary to meet this constitutional [*737] provision; but for the argument's sake, assumes the contention of counsel to be correct and is seeking to determine whether classification in fact has not been made. If the court apprehends the claim of counsel, it is that there has been a classification made of natural persons on one hand and artificial persons on the other. The complaint is of this classification, yet the fact of classification is denied. But it is said classification involves a purpose to classify, which is obvious upon the face of the statute, and this plainly shows classification was not in mind; for it is contended that the legislature would not have laid a more grievous burden on individuals than on corporations, which are known to be the class against which the corrective force of this statute is aimed. It appears to the court that this is begging the question; that [**5] it is speculative and fanciful; and, finally, that there is nothing in even-handed justice calling for any different penalty upon artificial than upon natural persons. At least the court feels it is not justified in saying that the legislature may not have taken this brief manner of classifying by expressing it all in one section of the statute, leaving it to the very nature of the two different kinds of persons to suggest the classification. I am further inclined to believe that HN4[<sup>1</sup>] when a law operates uniformly on all natural persons within the state, it operates uniformly.

At a time when the constitutional question is pending in the circuit court and when that question is not plainer than it is in this case, it would be manifestly rash for the court, on this motion, with the consequences involved, to hazard the opinion that this solemn enactment of the legislature is invalid, and when, as said in Western Union Tel. Co. v. Mayer, 28 Ohio St. 521, 540, HN5[<sup>1</sup>] "Unless it manifestly contravenes the constitution, the judicial department is not warranted in declaring it void."

The second ground for setting aside the sentences is withdrawn from consideration by the movers, [**6] who say they do not claim any promise expressly made by the trial judge and have never intended to be so understood.

The third ground is the claim that the court, by what it said and did, misled the defendants into withdrawing pleas of not guilty and entering pleas of guilty to the prejudice of their rights. This does not involve the question of express promise, but of indiscretion or that which amounts to an implied promise of the court resulting in an injury to the defendants and which fairness and justice require should be repaired by putting the parties back in the position they were in before. The question is this: Did the trial judge do or say anything to mislead these defendants to their prejudice? If he did, the sentences should be set aside. Before taking up in detail the history of what took place leading up to the sentences, I wish to say that I have been struck with the unusual care taken to avoid embarrassing complications. The parties [*738] handled each other at arm's length. The defendant's counsel were unusually delicate in observing the ethics of the profession, in avoiding any attempt to either influence the trial judge or solicit favor at his hands.

In May, [**7] they sought to bring about a conference with the court through the prosecuting attorney. This is not unusual. The prosecuting attorney is necessarily in close relationship with the trial judge. He declined to take any part in this, and told the parties to speak for themselves. They first concluded to do this, but, on second thought abandoned it.

On June 6, the Miller case had reached that stage in which the state had substantially made whatever case it had. It seems that a contract signed by these parties, who constitute the Toledo Ice & Coal Company and the Hygeia Ice Company, had been introduced in evidence, and which, unexplained, was very damaging to the defense. It was consequently liable to be embarrassing to these other defendants when their cases were put on trial. From what the trial judge said at the time of sentence, as to the powers of the court to accomplish in this class of cases the real ends of justice, it would seem that he conceived the idea, that the defendant, Miller, was in danger of embarrassing himself and possibly of swearing falsely if he took the witness stand and denied the combination, and that, if there was a combination, it was in the interest of public [**8] justice that it be broken up and restitution made of such money as had been extorted from the customers. He realized the delicacy of the position. He must not assume but what Miller had a good defense; neither must he assume that there was any combination, notwithstanding what appeared in the state's proof; he must not do anything that would injure the defendant in the conduct of his case, and at so critical a juncture; yet it apparently seemed to him that he might be of service to public justice and subserve the interests of all parties if the defendants could see their way, in case they were guilty, to obey the law and make some reparation for the wrong. If he safeguarded all these rights, it was proper that this idea should be conveyed to Miller's counsel, Alexander Smith. But it must not be done so as to invade his rights, and the presumption of innocence with which the accused stood clothed.

The trial judge is uncertain which motive was strongest with him, leading him to do what he did. He says that he had no clear idea as to what could or ought to be done to accomplish the ends of justice; he only wanted Mr. Smith to think about it and left it to his good judgment to act in [**9] such way as was consistent with the discharge of his duties. He therefore said to him: "I want to get an idea to you, but I don't want you to commit yourself--you needn't say a word. It might be well, however, to think along these lines;" and when the prosecuting attorney said to Mr. Smith, "What do you think about [*739] Miller's guilt?" the court immediately stopped him--as it might wear the complexion of something inquisitorial--and said, "Mr. Smith is not here to be asked any questions, to make any statements or admissions." The court was simply attempting to show some way of safety to Mr. Smith, if his client was guilty and in danger, and he left it to him to do as he wished without exposing his hand to anyone.

I think that much that Mr. Smith claims in his affidavit, was, in substance, said. It is admitted that it was in the mind of the trial judge, and he might, with entire propriety, have expressed it, and it seems to have been along the line of his thought. He thinks, however, he did not say anything further than this: "Mr. Smith, this inquiry has been running through my mind as I have heard the case tried. These men have been indicted by the grand jury and I have listened [**10] to the state's side of the case, and, of course, I don't know anything about what your proof will be. It might completely answer the case of the state--it may not answer it at all. It will have to be a pretty strong case, in my judgment, to answer the case that the state has made. The inquiry has been running through my mind, if this combination was formed as testified to by the witnesses on the part of the state--the inquiry has been running through my mind, why don't they abandon the whole thing, restore conditions; and I have simply called you in to make this inquiry; you can answer it or not, or you can answer it later or not as you wish; but I have thought of whether it might be practicable to bring about this result and I want to say to you that even if it were practicable, I do not wish the inquiry to indicate any line of action that I might take with reference to the cases even if it were done."

Smith then said he wished to talk with his associates before he said anything,--and that he might talk with the prosecuting attorney. It was properly suggested that it should be kept secret; and the reason is plain, for if the jury got the idea that there was some talk of surrender [**11] on the part of the defendant, it would be most damaging to his defense. The situation was called to the attention of counsel by way of admonition; it was proper, and evidenced an appreciation on the part of the trial judge of the delicacy which the administration of justice demands at his hands. Mr. Smith thinks and makes affidavit, that the judge went so far as to suggest that none of the indicted parties could or should be allowed to testify; that if they did not testify they would probably be found guilty, and that if they did testify and the jury convicted, there might be a disagreeable necessity for a further inquiry--hinting at an investigation of perjury by the defendant.

I have this to say: that a judge who would so impose upon a defendant or his counsel, should resign his office. But it is so unreasonable, and is shown by the context to be so far from the truth, that the court refrains from saying that it is wilfully false by the consciousness [*740] that Mr. Smith at the time was in that position of uncertainty as to what was best to do, that his mind was in no condition to receive what the court said on the subject of the strength of the state's case, without distorting [**12] it and mixing his own impressions with what was said. He feared that his client was in danger of conviction; was analyzing in his mind whether he could safely put Miller upon the stand, and when the trial judge called his attention to the fact that the state had made a pretty strong case, he received the impression that it was unwise to put his client on the stand and he has confused that with saying that the court admonished him that he must not put him on the stand.

It is unreasonable to conclude that a court would guard him against saying anything that might be embarrassing, would stop the prosecuting attorney from even asking him an opinion about the merits of the case, and at the same time prejudge the matter and tell him that his client must not exercise his constitutional right of testifying in his own defense. I believe that Mr. Smith has confused his fears and what he thought he better not do with the words of the judge. I prefer this to thinking that he has intentionally sworn false; but that it is false, in words and in spirit, is clearly shown. The judge even took the pains to say that, if he acted in any manner upon the suggestions made, he must not consider it as indicating [**13] anything the court would do by way of punishment. Smith, of course, communicated this to Brown, who immediately saw that it could lead only to unconditional surrender. Brown knew that he must not attempt to bargain with the court; neither did he have the disposition or wish to do so, for he had before that observed the ethics of the profession to such an extent as to abandon a purpose to even see the judge.

The trial judge in suggesting this idea to Smith's mind, did that which made it entirely proper for Brown to go and see him and it was entirely proper that he should seek to find out what he could, as to the consequences, if they pleaded guilty. I am inclined to say that if he had not done so he would have been remiss in the discharge of his duty to his clients. I think that Brown saw that it was liable to involve restitution to the customers from whom money had been extorted. He naturally wished to yield as little as possible and get as much in return as possible in the way of leniency. He knew that this suggestion came from the judge and not from the prosecutor. He therefore, sought to rebuke the suggestion of undoing the wrong by whipping the judge over the prosecutor's shoulders; [**14] so he said: "Why, Wachenheimer can't fix prices; if he attempts that, we will have him indicted for violation of the law." And he went on to say that the men were justified in all they had done; that there had been an increase of expenditures and that nobody had done anything that was wrong, and that they would show the whole thing to be lawful when they got to the trial. The judge saw that the attitude of counsel was such that what he had suggested [*741] was not liable to be accepted kindly, and that anything further was liable to lead into embarrassment, and he immediately admonished Mr. Brown that he need not say anything further, and said to him: "There isn't any occasion for talking about this matter any further," and left the room.

Mr. Smith went forward with his defense; and later, very properly, sought to open further conversation along the same line that had been suggested to him by the court at the noon recess. The court's short interview with Mr. Brown had determined and closed the entire incident, and he said to Smith, "I do not care to discuss this thing any further at all; you may dismiss the whole matter and consider it as if nothing had been said about it."

[**15] This is the entire matter complained of. The conduct of every one in the case indicates that it was considered entirely abandoned. Even the associate counsel of Mr. Brown, who went with the parties into court and withdrew the pleas of not guilty and pleaded guilty, says that before the sentence was pronounced he speculated with the prosecutor as to what the court would probably do, in which he suggested that he did not believe the court would impose a workhouse sentence, but that the prosecutor said he wasn't so sure of that. This is strong, almost conclusive, that there was nothing held out and that the defense did not think there was anything held out in the way of favor to be received; otherwise this conversation is unintelligible.

In a word, the situation was this: The defendants had learned that the court's idea was that, if the defendants were guilty, it would be wise to stop the contest and do the proper thing by way of restoration. They, therefore, within forty-eight hours before entering the plea of guilty, made a deduction of two dollars a ton to home consumers, threw themselves upon the mercy of the court and hoped for some leniency. They were not surprised by anything [**16] the court did unfairly; they were surprised at the court's severity. It was not that he had done some wrong, but that he had enforced the law with vigor and apparently with the intention to cut up root and branch the unlawful combination. They were chagrined that they had wrongly anticipated the outcome. They should not have attacked the court as they did. I wish, however, to say in this connection, that the counsel who were called in this emergency, have acted in a manner entirely commendable insofar as the court can observe, and that in filing the charge made in the motion they might properly feel that they needed to characterize the conduct as a promise, lest otherwise, it might be held that the grounds upon which they were claiming that the sentences should be set aside were not sufficient. I prefer to believe, and do believe, that it was filed under a belief that it was a proper thing for them to say and do, under the information they had, but I add that this information was entirely without foundation.

This principle is contended for, that it makes no difference who [*742] excited the hope or expectation of leniency in the minds of the prisoners, if the court shall find [**17] that they did have that expectation and were thereby led to withdraw their plea of not guilty and enter a plea of guilty. It is based upon the familiar doctrine that an extrajudicial confession will not be received in evidence in a criminal case, unless it is voluntarily made; and counsel contend, with a good deal of show of plausibility, that if a partial confession of guilt, induced by hope or fear excited in the mind of the prisoner by anyone, is not to be considered as voluntary, then the confession in open court, induced by hope of leniency excited in the mind of the prisoner by anyone, ought to be equally protected. In case of an extrajudicial confession thus brought about, the ruling is, that it shall not be received in evidence. The contention is that the same principle ought to obtain and the pleas of guilty which have been entered ought to be withdrawn. The rule as to extrajudicial confessions is exhaustively treated in Spears v. State, 2 Ohio St. 583, wherein the court says:

HN6 [↑] "The judge is to determine how the confession was produced by looking at the circumstances; among which are the strength or weakness of the prisoner's intellect, his knowledge or [**18] ignorance

"If satisfied, however, that the confession was produced by the representations or threats, the court cannot receive it in evidence, * * * the strongest mind is liable to be unhinged, and the question is not what the prisoner ought to have believed, but what did he believe."

It does not follow that the same rule safeguarding the prisoner's rights which applies to an extrajudicial confession should be employed in the case of a confession in court; in fact, the rule is otherwise. But, if it did apply, what would the court say in this case, under the rule which says that the court should look to the circumstances, the strength or weakness of the prisoner's intellect, his knowledge or ignorance? When one is suddenly accused of crime, taken into custody, threatened with the opening of prison doors, the heralding of the offense in all ears, the blasting of reputation, the court properly says: "In such instances the strongest mind is liable to be unhinged." Justice requires that a party thus circumstanced should be safeguarded, for he will catch at anything which looks like hope. Human nature is such that many times persons have been persuaded to plead guilty to things they were [**19] innocent of, for the apparent temporary rescue of themselves. Here intelligent, shrewd business men, flanked by good lawyers, speculated for weeks as to what was the best thing to do; sought interviews with the prosecutor in season and out of season; went over the whole matter time and again, turned it over in every possible light and finally concluded to plead guilty and throw themselves upon the mercy of the court. It would be a strange doctrine if the rule safeguarding their rights should be that of one suddenly overwhelmed and in fright at the arrest and charge of crime.

[*743] HN7 [↑] The rule is universal, that a person who has been indicted and who has pleaded not guilty, may, by leave of the court, on the advice of counsel or of his own motion, withdraw that plea and enter a plea of guilty; but it has long been held that where a defendant has pleaded guilty and sentence has been passed upon him, he cannot retract his plea and plead not guilty. The English case announcing that a prisoner will not be permitted thus to do, is Regina v. Tell, 9 Car. & P. 346. The same doctrine is announced in State v. Buck, 59 Iowa 382 \(13 N.W. 342\); [Mastronada \[\*\*20\] v. State, 60 Miss. 86](#). I call attention to the statement of the law as made by eminent text writers in criminal law. 1 Bishop, New Crim. Proced. Sec. 789:

HN8 [↑] "In most of our courts, where leave to substitute not guilty is asked in a reasonable time, it is granted pretty nearly as of course. Even where, after a defendant has pleaded guilty, has moved an arrest of judgment and his motion has been overruled, the court, if justice requires, will allow a substitute of not guilty for guilty, but it is too late after sentence." To the same effect is Wharton, Crim. Pl. & Pr. Sec. 441.

It would be to trifl[e] with courts of justice to permit parties to speculate on what the sentence will be, and when it is not satisfactory to say, "What I did was not voluntary, because I expected leniency, which I failed to receive."

Concerning the severity of this sentence and its wisdom, I have nothing to suggest. First, because it is not within my province; second, because it would be discourteous to the judge who pronounced it. With its suspension or modification I have nothing to do.

It is therefore adjudged that each and every of the three motions be overruled.

State v. Crystal Ice Mfg. & Cold Storage Co.

Court of Common Pleas of Franklin County, Ohio

November 30, 1906, Decided

No Number in Original

Reporter

17 Ohio Dec. 640 *; 1906 Ohio Misc. LEXIS 155 **; 5 Ohio N.P. (n.s.) 149

STATE OF OHIO v. CRYSTAL ICE MFG. & COLD STORAGE CO.

Prior History: [**1] MOTIONS to quash indictment.

Disposition: Objections and the motions overruled.

Core Terms

---

indictment, conspiracy, indefinite, purposes, carrying, grand jury, objected, formation, combine, unknown, jurors, exact

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN1 [down arrow] Inchoate Crimes, Conspiracy

Time is not of the essence of the offense of conspiracy against trade unless by virtue of Lan. 7586 (B. 4427-4), which makes each day's violation of the provisions of the statute a separate offense.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

Evidence > Weight & Sufficiency

HN2 [down arrow] Inchoate Crimes, Conspiracy

It is competent, as a matter of evidence, to show that at certain times, previous to the time when it is alleged certain individuals entered into an illegal combination, these individuals had met together for the purpose of inducing each other to enter into it.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN3 Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

The gist of the offense of conspiracy against trade is not the particular act done under the conspiracy but the formation of the conspiracy. The offense under the statute is the unlawful combination of skill and acts for this purpose. The particular means to be employed to accomplish the unlawful purposes may not have been agreed upon and are not in my opinion essential to the statement of an offense under the statute. The gist of the offense is the formation of a combination for such purpose. It is the purpose which is made unlawful and the means used to that end are immaterial and may be one thing at one date, and another at another and still be but the carrying out of a single unlawful purpose of combination.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN4 Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

The carrying out of the purposes of an illegal combination is made a separate offense under the statute from conspiring to do so.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN5 Inchoate Crimes, Conspiracy

At common law, no overt act was essential to the offense of conspiracy.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN6 Inchoate Crimes, Conspiracy

The offense of conspiracy may, unlike most offenses, be committed without any overt act. A criminal purpose to do an unlawful act, or to do a lawful act by criminal means, mutually assented to or agreed upon by two or more persons, may, by such assent and agreement, ripen into a crime, although no act be done in pursuance of it.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN7 Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

By the terms of statute the formation of a trust or conspiracy against trade is made penal, although its purposes are not carried out. This is plain from the language of the statute. A combination whose purpose is to do the things forbidden in the future is denounced by the statute. It is made an offense to enter such a combination, to make or enter into, or execute or carry out any contracts, obligations, or agreements of any kind or description, by which they shall combine or have combined themselves. The carrying out of the unlawful purposes stated in the statute is made a separate offense by the terms of Lan. 7589 (B. 4427-4).

Headnotes/Summary

---

Headnotes

CONSPIRACY--INDICTMENT--MONOPOLIES.

1. SUFFICIENCY OF ALLEGATION OF DATE OF FORMATION IN INDICTMENT AGAINST A TRUST.

It is not essential to an indictment for forming a combination in restraint of trade, under the Valentine antitrust law, that it should state the exact date, with certainty, upon which the combination was effected, and such an indictment is not bad for indefiniteness or uncertainty when it charges the defendants with having met on or about February 1, 1905, and at divers times between that date and June, 1906, met for the purpose of forming such a combination.

2. FORMATION OF TRUST AS A SEPARATE OFFENSE.

It is not an essential to the offense of forming a monopoly that the conspiracy should include the particular means to be used to attain the end sought, and an indictment alleging that one of the purposes of an alleged monopoly was increasing the price of ice, is not indefinite in that it does not state how this is to be done.

3. EFFECT OF DESCRIBING ACCUSED AS DEFENDANT.

The fact that the persons named in an indictment are afterwards described as defendants does not vitiate the indictment, as being indefinite and uncertain.

4. WHAT IS UNLAWFUL COMBINATION.

Under the antitrust law, Lan. 7586 et seq. (B. 4427-1 et seq.), it is an offense to form a combination for any of the purposes specified in the above statutes, independent of any overt act.

Counsel: K. T. Webber, prosecuting attorney, for plaintiff.

Booth, Keating & Peters, for defendants.

Judges: BIGGER, J.

Opinion by: BIGGER

Opinion

---

[*640] BIGGER, J.

Motions to quash the indictment have been filed by the several defendants. It is objected that the indictment is so indefinite and uncertain as that the exact nature and cause of the accusation against the defendants is not apparent and does not appear from the indictment; and that it is so indefinite on account of the surplusage contained therein, that the defendants are not advised of the exact nature of the accusation made against them.

The indictment contains but one count. It charges that the defendants, naming them, and describing them as defendants, on or about February 1, 1905, and at divers other times between the said February 1, 1905, and June 1, 1906, the particular date being to the grand jury unknown, did meet and come together at the said county of Franklin, [*641] in the state of Ohio, for the purpose and with the intent of inducing each and all of said defendants to engage in and take part in the conspiracy against trade hereinafter [**2] set forth; that on or about February 1,

1906, the particular date to the grand jury unknown, the said defendants, at the said county of Franklin, in the state of Ohio, unlawfully did combine their skill and acts for the purposes following, to wit: To increase the price of a certain commodity, to wit, ice, to the purchasers and to the customers in the city of Columbus, and in said Franklin county, to prevent competition in the sale of a certain commodity, to wit, ice, among themselves and others, in the city of Columbus, and in said county of Franklin, to fix at a certain common standard figure, the price of a certain commodity, to wit, ice, to the purchasers and consumers thereof, whereby the price of said commodity, to wit, ice, should be established in the city of Columbus and in said county of Franklin, and be controlled by said combination, and the indictment concludes as follows:

"And so the jurors of the grand jury aforesaid, upon their oaths as aforesaid, do say that the defendants, and each of them, at the county of Franklin aforesaid, on or about the first day of February, 1906, the particular date being to the grand jury unknown as aforesaid, by so unlawfully combining their [**3] skill and acts as aforesaid, for the purposes aforesaid, did engage in and take part in a conspiracy against trade, contrary to the statute in such cases made and provided and against the peace and dignity of the state of Ohio."

This conclusion of the grand jury adds nothing to the statement of facts contained in the indictment, but is only the conclusion of the grand jury from the matters found and stated by the grand jurors in the indictment, and may therefore be disregarded, upon the consideration of the question of the sufficiency of the matters stated in the indictment as constituting an offense under the statute.

Is this indictment so indefinite and uncertain as that it does not advise the defendants clearly of the offense charged against them, or does it contain so much surplusage as to obscure the real charge? The charge is, that these various persons natural and artificial, on or about February 1, 1906, did combine their skill and acts for the specific purpose named in the indictment and which are declared by the statute to constitute a trust and to be a conspiracy against trade. HN1[<sup>1</sup>] Time is not of the essence of this offense unless by virtue of Lan. 7586 (B. 4427-4), which [**4] makes each day's violation of the provisions of the statute a separate offense.

It is stated in this indictment that upon a particular day, the exact date not being known to the grand jurors, but about February 1, 1906, this combination was entered into. It is certainly not essential to such [*642] an indictment that the grand jurors must be able to state the exact date with certainty upon which this combination was effected. They state the exact date is to them unknown. Neither do I see how the indictment is indefinite because it is stated that the persons named did meet upon certain other dates for the purpose of inducing each and all of them to engage in the conspiracy described in the indictment. It would certainly not make an indictment for murder in the first degree indefinite or uncertain, if it were to allege that the defendant had deliberated upon the commission of the crime upon certain days preceding its commission. It is sufficient to state that it was deliberated upon, and it would not have the effect to render it indefinite if it were averred that the defendant had deliberated at divers times previous to the commission of the crime. It is objected that this indictment [**5] charges that they met for this purpose up to June 1, 1906, or for a period of four months after it is alleged the illegal combination was formed. It is certainly manifest that persons could not meet together to induce each other to do something after they had done it. Upon trial such evidence would not be competent. But it is only surplusage and cannot make the charge indefinite. HN2[<sup>1</sup>] It would certainly be competent, as a matter of evidence, to show that at certain times, previous to the time when it is alleged they entered into this combination, these individuals had met together for the purpose of inducing each other to enter into it.

It would not be conclusive evidence, doubtless, that such combination was entered into, but it would certainly be competent evidence, tending to show it, as disclosing a disposition and desire to do so, which with other evidence, might be sufficient to warrant a jury in finding that it was entered into. I am unable to see how any indefiniteness can arise by reason of this averment.

It is said it is indefinite because, while it charges that one of the purposes of the combination was to increase the price of ice, it does not state how this was to be done, [**6] but it is not essential, as I view it, to the statement of an offense, that the conspiracy should have included the particular means to be used to that end. That may have been left for future determination. But if the purpose of the combination was to do this, it is made unlawful without regard to the particular means to be employed. The same may be said as to the charge that one of the purposes was to prevent competition. The particular means to that end may not have been determined upon but a combination for that purpose is made unlawful. But it is objected that the indictment is indefinite because it charges that the purpose was to prevent competition between themselves and others, without naming the others. Here again it would not be essential in my judgment to the statement of an offense to charge the names of the other persons, for, non constat, but that the others, who might be competitors, were unknown even to those charged with [*643] being members of the conspiracy. The term is in my opinion, sufficiently comprehensive in itself to include all others engaged in the same business.

HN3[] The gist of this offense is not the particular act done under the conspiracy, but the [**7] formation of the conspiracy, and I think it is sufficiently descriptive in its purposes to advise the defendants of what they are to meet. The offense under the statute is the unlawful combination of skill and acts for this purpose. The particular means to be employed to accomplish the unlawful purposes may not have been agreed upon and are not in my opinion essential to the statement of an offense under the statute. The gist of the offense is the formation of a combination for such purpose. It is the purpose which is made unlawful and the means used to that end are immaterial and may be one thing at one date, and another at another and still be but the carrying out of a single unlawful purpose of combination.

It is also objected that the persons named in the indictment are described as defendants. It is probably true that the term is not technically correct, but does it result in any indefiniteness? After the persons are named in the indictment, their names are followed by this statement "each and all defendants herein," and they are afterwards referred to as "said defendants." I do not see how any indefiniteness results from this. The said defendants, after they are described as [**8] each and all defendants, certainly include all that are named and so described.

It is further objected that the indictment is bad for duplicity. I think this indictment does not charge more than one offense. The offense charged here is the formation of a trust and not its continuance, and it is alleged to have been formed upon a date not known exactly to the grand jurors, but stated to have been about February 1, 1906. This offense is unlike the indictment recently held to be bad upon motion and demurrer, which in a second count alleged, with a continuendo, the carrying out of the illegal purposes by the combination. I did state it as my opinion, in deciding these motions and demurrers, that this would probably not render an indictment subject to the charge of duplicity. Whether that opinion be correct or not, I think this indictment is not open to that objection, as it does not state the carrying out of the illegal purposes of the combination, between certain dates or its continuance for any length of time, but only the single offense of the formation of an illegal combination upon a date, stated to be about February 1. HN4[] The carrying out of the purposes of such an illegal combination [**9] is made a separate offense under the statute, but this indictment does not charge that the conspiracy was carried out. It is said that there is no statement of any overt act on the part of the defendants in the carrying out of the illegal purposes of the combination. In my judgment this statute [*644] makes it an offense to form such a combination for the purposes stated, independent of any overt acts. HN5[] At common law, no overt act was essential to the offense of conspiracy.

As was said by Lyon, Judge, in the case of State v. Crowley, 41 Wis. 271, 277 [22 Am. Rep. 719]:

HN6[] "The offense of conspiracy, in one respect, is doubtless peculiar. It may, unlike most offenses, be committed without any overt act. A criminal purpose to do an unlawful act, or to do a lawful act by criminal means, mutually assented to or agreed upon by two or more persons, may, by such assent and agreement, ripen into a crime, although no act be done in pursuance of it."

HN7[] By the terms of this statute the formation of a trust or conspiracy against trade is made penal, although its purposes are not carried out. This is plain from the language of the statute. A combination, whose purpose is [**10] to do the things forbidden in the future, is denounced by the statute. It is made an offense to enter such a combination, to make or enter into, or execute or carry out any contracts, obligations or agreements of any kind or description, by which they shall combine or have combined themselves, not to sell, etc. The carrying out of the unlawful purposes stated in the statute is made a separate offense by the terms of Lan. 7589 (B. 4427-4).

17 Ohio Dec. 640, *644A 1906 Ohio Misc. LEXIS 155, **10

It is objected that the capacity in which the defendants are charged with taking part, is not stated. It is true that Lan. 7589 (B. 4427-4) makes it an offense to carry out the purposes of such illegal combination, whether the person so doing acts as principal, manager, director, agent, servant or employer, or in any other capacity; but I do not think this would make it necessary to state in an indictment in what capacity he acted; if he was personally charged with offending against the statute, and it should appear that he acted in either of these capacities, he would be liable to the penalties of the statute.

This provision of Lan. 7589 (B. 4427-4), it is also to be observed, relates only to the carrying out of the purpose of the combination, [**11] and these defendants are not charged with carrying out of the purpose of the combination.

The objections which are pointed out to this indictment do not seem to me to be valid objections and the motions are overruled.

---

End of Document

John D. Park & Sons Co. v. Hartman

Circuit Court of Appeals, Sixth Circuit

March 14, 1907

No. 1,581

Reporter

153 F. 2d *; 1907 U.S. App. LEXIS 4375 **; 5 Ohio L. Rep. 5

JOHN D. PARK & SONS CO. v. HARTMAN

Prior History: [**1] Appeal from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Kentucky.

Core Terms

---

contracts, patent, articles, covenants, medicines, monopoly, manufacturer, restraint of trade, prices, formula, retailers, sales, cases, secret process, trade secret, preparations, restraining, wholesale, dealers, selling, restricting, patentee, rights, vendee, secret formula, purchaser, orator's, secret, buy, common-law

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Patent Law > Ownership > Conveyances > General Overview

HN1 Ownership, Conveyances

Articles made under patents may be the subject of contracts by which their use and price in sub-sales may be controlled by the patentee, and such contracts, if otherwise valid, are not against restraints of interstate commerce or the rules of the common law against monopolies and restraints of trade.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > Manufacture, Sale & Use

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > General Overview

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Infringing Acts > General Overview

Patent Law > Ownership > Conveyances > General Overview

Patent Law > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

HN2 Conveyances, Licenses

The patent grants an exclusive right to use, to make, and to sell. The patentee may grant, if he will, an unrestricted right to make and sell or use the device embodying his invention, or may grant only a restricted right in either the field of making, using, or selling. To the extent that he restricts either one of these separable rights, the article is not released from the domain of the patent, and any one who violates the restrictions imposed by the patentee, with notice, is an infringer. When a patentee imposes such restrictions, it may likewise constitute a contract between the patentee and his direct vendee or licensee. In such case, the patentee has a double remedy--an action in tort for infringement, or an action for the breach of the contract.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Assignments

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Licenses

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > General Overview

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Infringing Acts > General Overview

Patent Law > Ownership > Conveyances > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

Patent Law > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

Patent Law > Remedies > Equitable Relief > Injunctions

HN3 Ownership & Transfer of Rights, Assignments

Whether a remedy is sought for the violation of restrictions placed by a patentee, upon either the use or sale of an article made under the patent, is in tort or in contract, the rules of the common law in respect of monopolies and restraints of trade have no application, because the very object of the patent law is to give to the patentee an exclusive monopoly in using, making, and selling the device which embodies the invention, and this exclusive right he may exercise by contracts under which he reserves to himself so much of his exclusive right as he does not elect to sell or assign or license. Thus, contracts restraining subsequent sales or use of a patented article which would contravene the common-law rules against monopolies and restraints of trade, if made in respect of unpatented articles, are valid because of the monopoly granted by the patent.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Assignments

Patent Law > Ownership > Patents as Property

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Licenses

Patent Law > Ownership > Conveyances > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

HN4 Ownership & Transfer of Rights, Assignments

Any conditions which are not in their very nature illegal with regard to patentable property, imposed by the patentee and agreed to by the licensee for the right to manufacture or use or sell the article, will be upheld by the courts. The fact that the conditions in the contracts keep up the monopoly or fix prices does not render them illegal.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Assignments

Patent Law > Ownership > General Overview

Patent Law > Ownership > Conveyances > General Overview

HN5 Conveyances, Assignments

The owner of a patented article can charge such price as he may choose, and the owner of a patent may assign it or sell the right to manufacture and sell the article patented upon the condition that the assignee shall charge a certain amount for such article.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Assignments

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Assignments

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Licenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Patent Law > Ownership > Conveyances > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

HN6 Ownership & Transfer of Rights, Assignments

26 Stat. 209 (1901) does not refer to that kind of a restraint of interstate commerce which may arise from reasonable and legal conditions imposed upon the licensee or assignee of a patent by the owner thereof, restricting the terms upon which the article may be used and the price to be demanded therefor.

Patent Law > ... > Utility Patents > Process Patents > General Overview

Trade Secrets Law > Federal Versus State Law > Antitrust Law

HN7 Utility Patents, Process Patents

One who makes or vends an article which is made by a secret process or private formula cannot appeal to the protection of any statute creating a monopoly in his product. He has no special property in either a trade secret or a private formula. The process or the formula is valuable only so long as he keeps it secret. The public is free to discover it if it can by fair and honest means, and, when discovered, anyone has the right to use it.

Patent Law > ... > Utility Patents > Process Patents > General Overview

HN8 Utility Patents, Process Patents

If a valuable medicine, not protected by patent, is put upon the market, any one may, if he can by a chemical analysis and a series of experiments, or by any other use of the medicine itself aided by his own resources only, discover the ingredients and their proportions. If he thus finds out the secret of the proprietor, he may use it to any extent that he desires without danger of interference by the courts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Assignments

Patent Law > Ownership > Patents as Property

HN9 [blue downward arrow] Ownership & Transfer of Rights, Assignments

In the case of a patent the monopoly endures for the whole term of the patent. It gives the patentee the right to control the use of his invention during the entire period, and he may rightfully protect by contract his power to regulate all manufacture, sale, or use of things embodying his invention. It is this continuity of the right granted to the patentee which distinguishes it from the right to manufacture, sell, or use unpatented articles.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Assignments

Civil Procedure > Discovery & Disclosure > General Overview

Trade Secrets Law > Civil Actions > Discovery

Patent Law > Ownership > Patents as Property

Patent Law > ... > Utility Patents > Process Patents > General Overview

HN10 [blue downward arrow] Ownership & Transfer of Rights, Assignments

If a man shall make a new invention or make a new discovery and it is useful, he may obtain a patent and thus secure a reward. But even then he must pursue the prescribed course in order to obtain it. He may keep his secret if he can. But, if he puts upon the market things embodying it, he forever loses his right to acquire a monopoly in it. But it does not follow that because the owner of a secret formula cannot protect himself against discovery of his secret by fair means that he cannot protect himself against a betrayal of his secret by one who has received it through confidential relations. So also will the owner of a secret process or formula be protected against a breach of contract, when the secret is communicated in confidence and under restrictions as to its use.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Covenants

Patent Law > ... > Utility Patents > Process Patents > General Overview

HN11 [blue downward arrow] Types of Contracts, Covenants

Upon the sale of a secret process, a covenant, express or implied, that the seller will not use the process himself or communicate it to any other person, is lawful, because the process must be kept secret in order to be of any value, and the public has no interest in the question by whom it is sold.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > General Overview

153 F. 2d, *24L907 U.S. App. LEXIS 4375, **1

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Covenants

Trade Secrets Law > Federal Versus State Law > Governmental Agencies

Contracts Law > Defenses > Illegal Bargains

Patent Law > ... > Utility Patents > Process Patents > General Overview

Trade Secrets Law > Federal Versus State Law > Antitrust Law

Trade Secrets Law > Protection of Secrecy > General Overview

HN12 [blue icon] Intellectual Property, Ownership & Transfer of Rights

The most satisfactory ground upon which covenants, restraining the use to be made of a trade secret, may be said not to contravene the common-law rules against monopoly and restraints lies in the peculiar character of the property right which is concerned. So long as the owner of such a secret can preserve its secrecy, he has necessarily a monopoly in its use, and there is no illegal restraint because he refuses to make it public. Neither is the public interest affected whether the process or formula is used by A or B or by both, for there can be no restraint of trade in respect of a method or formula which is known only to the discoverer and those to whom he chooses to communicate it under restrictions. Having no right to compel a publication, the public loses no right by respecting a restricted disclosure.

Civil Procedure > Discovery & Disclosure > General Overview

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > Manufacture, Sale & Use

Trade Secrets Law > Civil Actions > Discovery

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > General Overview

Patent Law > Ownership > Patents as Property

HN13 [blue icon] Civil Procedure, Discovery & Disclosure

The patent law, in consideration of a full and complete publication of the discovery or invention of the patentee, grants to him a monopoly of his invention, including the making, selling, and using of devices embodying it, for a limited term of years. At the end of that time the disclosure made at the time he applied for his patent will enable the public to enjoy his discovery, and thus find compensation for the exclusive right temporarily conceded to the inventor. No statute grants any such monopoly to anyone who does not elect to avail himself of the benefits of the patent or copyright law.

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Conditions & Terms > Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition > Trade Secrets

Patent Law > ... > Utility Patents > Process Patents > General Overview

HN14 [blue icon] Trade Secrets & Unfair Competition, Trade Secrets

A trade secret or medical formula protects its owner only against those who acquire it under a confidential obligation to guard against disclosure, and one is free not only to use the process or formula if discovered by skill and investigation without breach of trust, but to make and sell the thing or preparation as made by the process or formula of the original discoverer, if that be the truth.

Contracts Law > Personal Property > Rights of Possessors

Patent Law > Ownership > Conveyances > General Overview

Real Property Law > Estates > Future Interests > Invalid Restraints & Rule Against Perpetuities

Real Property Law > Estates > Future Interests > General Overview

HN15 [blue icon] Personal Property, Rights of Possessors

The right of alienation is one of the essential incidents of a right of general property in movables, and restraints upon alienation have been generally regarded as obnoxious to public policy, which is best subserved by great freedom of traffic in such things as pass from hand to hand. General restraint in the alienation of articles, things, chattels, except when a very special kind of property is involved are generally held void.

Estate, Gift & Trust Law > Estate Interests > Invalid Restraints & Rule Against Perpetuities

Real Property Law > Estates > Present Estates > Leasehold & Real Estates

HN16 [blue icon] Estate Interests, Invalid Restraints & Rule Against Perpetuities

If a man be possessed of a horse or any other chattel real or personal, and give his whole interest or property therein, upon condition that the donee or vendee shall not alien the same, the same is void, because his whole interest and property is out of him so as he hath no possibility of reverter; and it is against trade and traffic and bargaining and contracting between man and man.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Covenants

Real Property Law > Encumbrances > Restrictive Covenants > Covenants Running With Land

Contracts Law > Defenses > Illegal Bargains

Estate, Gift & Trust Law > Estate Interests > Invalid Restraints & Rule Against Perpetuities

Real Property Law > Purchase & Sale > Contracts of Sale > Formalities

Real Property Law > Encumbrances > Restrictive Covenants > General Overview

HN17 [blue icon] Types of Contracts, Covenants

It is a general rule of the common law that a contract restricting the use or controlling sub-sales cannot be annexed to a chattel so as to follow the article and obligate the sub-purchaser by operation of notice. A covenant which may be valid and run with land will not run with or attach itself to a mere chattel.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Covenants

Contracts Law > Defenses > Illegal Bargains

HN18 [↑] Types of Contracts, Covenants

No conventional restraint of trade can be enforced unless the covenant embodying it is merely ancillary to the main purpose of a lawful contract, and necessary to protect the covenantee in the enjoyment of the legitimate fruits of the contract, or to protect him from the dangers of an unjust use of those fruits by the other party.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN19 [↑] Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

If agreements and combinations to prevent competition are or may be hurtful to trade, the only sure remedy is to prohibit all agreements of that character.

Counsel: Alton B. Parker, William J. Shroder, and Henry T. Tay, for appellant.

Frank F. Reed, Edward S. Rogers, and Frederick W. Hinkle, for appellee.

Opinion by: LURTON

Opinion

---

[*26] Before LURTON, SEVERENS, and RICHARDS, Circuit Judges.

LURTON, Circuit Judge, after making the foregoing statement of the case, delivered the opinion of the court.

The system of contracts by means of which the complainant proposes to retain control of all sales and resales of its goods is not unique. It was first applied to commodities made under patents or productions covered by copyright. According to one of the averments of the bill, the same system of contracts has been generally adopted by the wholesale and retail druggists of the United States. But this, we take it, means no more than it has been adopted as a plan for maintaining prices and controlling sales of proprietary medicines, a business which amounts to more than $60,000,000 annually. That the same plan has been extended to sales in respect to other commodities, not coming under the peculiar claims advanced for "patent" medicines, we may take notice. [*27] The question, in its shortest form, is whether the exemption from common-law rules against monopoly and restraints of trade, and the provisions of the federal anti-trust act, which has been extended to contracts affecting the sale and resale, the use or the price of articles made under a patent or productions covered by a copyright, extend also to articles made under a secret process or medicine compounded under a private formula. The fundamental position of counsel for the complainant is that in principle there is no distinction between the monopoly secured to a patent or copyright and the monopoly of a trade secret, and they advance and defend the claim that articles made [*27] under patents, copyrights, and trade secrets may lawfully be contracted for and sold under any conditions and limitations with respect to price and subsales which the vendor chooses to impose, and that "contracts relating to any such articles are not within the restraint of trade rules." If this contention is sound, the contracts under which the complainant conducts his business are legal, and no question remains but a consideration of the matter of the relief equity may give against one not a party [*28] to such contracts under the facts of this case.

HN1 [↑] That articles made under patents may be the subject of contracts by which their use and price in subsales may be controlled by the patentee, and that such contracts, if otherwise valid, are not within the terms of the act of Congress against restraints of interstate commerce or the rules of the common law against monopolies and restraints of trade, is now well settled. Heaton-Peninsular Button Co. v. Eureka Specialty Co., 77 Fed. 288, 25 C.C.A. 267, 35 L.R.A. 728; Dickerson v. Tinling, 84 Fed. 192, 28 C.C.A. 139; Edison Phonograph Co. v. Kaufmann

(C.C.) 105 Fed. 960; Edison Phonograph Co. v. Pike (C.C.) 116 Fed. 863; Rupp et al. v. Elliott, 131 Fed. 730, 65 C.C.A. 544; Victor Talking Machine Co. v. The Fair, 123 Fed. 428, 61 C.C.A. 58; Bement v. National Harrow Co., 186 U.S. 70, 22 Sup. Ct. 747, 46 L. Ed. 1058. HN2↑ The patent grants an exclusive right to use, to make, and to sell. The patentee may grant, if he will, an unrestricted right to make and sell or use the device embodying his invention, or may grant only a restricted right in either the field of making, using, or selling. To the extent that he restricts either one of these [**4] separable rights, the article is not released from the domain of the patent, and any one who violates the restrictions imposed by the patentee, with notice, is an infringer. This is the ground upon which the cases stand which uphold restrictions upon either use or sale of a patented article where infringement is alleged. But, when a patentee imposes such restrictions, they may likewise constitute a contract between the patentee and his direct vendee or licensee. In such case the patentee would have a double remedy -- an action in tort for infringement, or an action for the breach of the contract. The double remedy in such circumstances is noticed in Heaton-Peninsular Button Fastener Co. v. Eureka Specialty Co., 77 Fed. 288, 25 C.C.A. 267, 35 L.R.A. 728, and in Victor Talking Machine Co. v. The Fair, 123 Fed. 424, 61 C.C.A. 58. In Bement v. National Harrow Co., 186 U.S. 70, 22 Sup. Ct. 747, 46 L. Ed. 1058, the action was one for breach of a contract by which the patentee had suffered his invention to be used on condition that the articles embodying it should not be sold below a certain price. In National Phonograph Co. v. Schlegel, 128 Fed. 733, 64 C.C.A. 594, the bill was not [**5] to restrain infringement, but to enjoin sales by a vendee who was a jobber and who by direct contract had purchased phonographs made under the patent, agreeing to sell only at a named price and only to retailers who signed an agreement regulating retail sales. HN3↑ Whether a remedy is sought for the violation of restrictions placed by a patentee, upon either the use or the sale of an article made under the patent, is in tort or in contract, the rules of the common law in respect of monopolies and restraints of trade have no application, because the very object of [*28] the patent law is to give to the patentee an exclusive monopoly in using, making, and selling the device which embodies the invention, and this exclusive right he may exercise by contracts under which he reserves to himself so much of his exclusive right as he does not elect to sell or assign or license. It follows therefore that contracts restraining subsequent sales or use of a patented article which would contravene the common-law rules against monopolies and restraints of trade, if made in respect of unpatented articles, are valid because of the monopoly granted by the patent. Bement v. National Harrow Co., 186 [**6] U.S. 70, 91, 93, 22 Sup. Ct. 747, 46 L. Ed. 1058; Edison Phonograph Co. v. Kaufmann (C.C.) 105 Fed. 960; Edison Phonograph Co. v. Pike (C.C.) 116 Fed. 863; Victor Talking Machine Co. v. The Fair, 123 Fed. 424, 61 C.C.A. 58. In the Bement Case, cited above, the action was at law to recover liquidated damages for the breach of a contract in respect of the price at which articles made under a patent should be sold. The court, among other things, said:

"The very object of these laws is monopoly, and the rule is, with very few exceptions, that HN4↑ any conditions which are not in their very nature illegal with regard to this kind of property, imposed by the patentee and agreed to by the licensee for the right to manufacture or use or sell the article, will be upheld by the courts. The fact that the conditions in the contracts keep up the monopoly or fix prices does not render them illegal."

In regard to the provision in respect to price the court said:

"The provision in regard to the price at which the licensee would sell the article manufactured under the license was also an appropriate and reasonable condition. It tended to keep up the price of the implements manufactured and sold, [**7] but that was only recognizing the nature of the property in, and providing for its value as far as possible. This the parties were legally entitled to do. HN5↑ The owner of a patented article can, of course, charge such price as he may choose, and the owner of a patent may assign it or sell the right to manufacture and sell the article patented upon the condition that the assignee shall charge a certain amount for such article."

It was urged in the same case that the stipulations restricting the price at which sales might be made was in violation of the act of Congress of July 2, 1890 (26 Stat. 209, c. 647 [U.S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3200]), upon the subject of trusts and restraints of interstate trade, but the court held that the act did not apply to contracts in relation to patented articles, saying:

HN6↑ "But that statute clearly does not refer to that kind of a restraint of interstate commerce which may arise from reasonable and legal conditions imposed upon the licensee or assignee of a patent by the owner thereof, restricting the terms upon which the article may be used and the price to be demanded therefor. Such a construction of the act we have no doubt was never contemplated by [**8] its framers."

In National Phonograph Co. v. Schlegel, 128 Fed. 733, 64 C.C.A. 594, the same reasoning was followed and the validity of an agreement restraining prices held to be a valid contract, because it related to a patented article. There are such wide differences between the right of multiplying and vending copies of a production protected by the copyright statute and the rights secured to an inventor under the patent statutes that the cases which relate to the one subject are not altogether controlling as to the other. See *Bobbs-Merrill Co. v. I<sup>*29</sup> Straus (C.C.A.) 147 Fed. 15, 23*. Nevertheless, the statutory right to exclusively publish and vend copies of a copyrighted production would seem to take direct contracts between the publisher and his vendees in respect to the price at which subsequent sales shall be made outside of the rule as to restraints of trade which might otherwise apply. Murphy v. Christian Press Ass'n, 38 App. Div. 426, 56 N.Y. Supp. 597. But HN7[↑] one who makes or vends an article which is made by a secret process or private formula cannot appeal to the protection of any statute creating a monopoly in his product. He has no special property in either [**9] a trade secret or a private formula. The process or the formula is valuable only so long as he keeps it secret. The public is free to discover it if it can by fair and honest means, and, when discovered, anyone has the right to use it. Chadwick v. Covell, 151 Mass. 190, 23 N.E. 1068, 6 L.R.A. 839, 21 Am. St. Rep. 442; Tabor v. Hoffman, 118 N.Y. 30, 23 N.E. 12, 16 Am. St Rep. 740; Peabody v. Norfolk, 98 Mass. 452, 96 Am. Dec. 664; Vulcan Detinning Co. v. American Contracting Co., 58 Atl. 290, 67 N.J. Eq. 243. In Chadwick v. Covell, Justice Holmes, speaking of the character of the title one has to a secret formula, said:

"Dr. Spencer had no exclusive right to the use of his formulas. His only right was to prevent anyone from obtaining or using them through a breach of trust or contract. Any one who came honestly to the knowledge of them could use them, without Dr. Spencer's permission and against his will. Peabody v. Norfolk, 98 Mass. 452, 458, 96 Am. Dec. 664; Morison v. Moat, 9 Hare, 241, 263; Williams v. Williams, 3 Meriv. 157. The defendant got his knowledge honestly, and therefore has a right to make and sell the medicines. Having the right to make and sell the medicines, [**10] the defendant has the right to signify to the public that the medicines are made according to the formulas used by Dr. Spencer."

In Tabor v. Hoffman, cited above, the New York court said:

HN8[↑] "If a valuable medicine, not protected by patent, is put upon the market, any one may, if he can by a chemical analysis and a series of experiments, or by any other use of the medicine itself aided by his own resources only, discover the ingredients and their proportions. If he thus finds out the secret of the proprietor, he may use it to any extent that he desires without danger of interference by the courts."

HN9[↑] But in the case of a patent the monopoly endures for the whole term of the patent. It gives the patentee the right to control the use of his invention during the entire period, and he may rightfully protect by contract his power to regulate all manufacture, sale, or use of things embodying his invention. It is this continuity of the right granted to the patentee which distinguishes it from the right to manufacture, sell, or use unpatented articles. HN10[↑] If a man shall make a new invention or make a new discovery and it is useful, he may obtain a patent and thus secure a reward. But even [**11] then he must pursue the prescribed course in order to obtain it. He may keep his secret if he can. But, if he puts upon the market things embodying it, he forever loses his right to acquire a monopoly in it; i.e., to obtain a patent, either for manufacture, sale, or use. But it does not follow that because the owner of a secret formula cannot protect himself against discovery of his secret by fair means that he cannot protect himself against a betrayal of his secret by one who has received it through [*30] confidential relations. Jarvis v. Knapp, 121 Fed. 34, 58 C.C.A. 1; Harrison v. Glucose Co., 116 Fed. 304, 311, 53 C.C.A. 484, 58 L.R.A. 915; Tabor v. Hoffman, 118 N.Y. 30, 23 N.E. 12, 16 Am. St. Rep. 740; Morison v. Moat, 9 Hare, 241; Chadwick v. Covell, 151 Mass. 190, 23 N.E. 1068, 6 L.R.A. 839, 21 Am. St. Rep. 442. So also will the owner of a secret process or formula be protected against a breach of contract, when the secret is communicated in confidence and under restrictions as to its use. Fowle v. Park, 131 U.S. 88, 9 Sup. Ct. 658, 33 L. Ed. 67.

In Fowle v. Park, the owner of the formula sold the right to make the remedy and sell it under its trade-name at a restricted [**12] price within a given territory. The court enjoined the breach of this agreement. The conclusion of the learned Chief Justice who wrote the opinion of the court seems to rest, not upon any notion that contracts touching the sale of a secret formula or trade secret were outside the rules of the common law in regard to restraints of trade, but rather upon the theory that such contracts were governed by the principle against restraints, but valid because the covenants were made in connection with the sale of a business and not larger than necessary to protect the reserved rights of the assignor to carry on the same business. In Central Transportation Co. v. Pullman Palace Car Co., 139 U.S. 24, 53, 11 Sup. Ct. 478, 35 L. Ed. 55, Justice Gray seems to have rested the legality of such covenants upon the peculiar nature of the property which is the subject of the sale, saying:

HN11 [↑] "Upon the sale of a secret process, a covenant, express or implied, that the seller will not use the process himself or communicate it to any other person, is lawful, because the process must be kept secret in order to be of any value, and the public has no interest in the question by whom it is sold."

HN12 [↑] The most [**13] satisfactory ground upon which covenants restraining the use to be made of a trade secret may be said to not contravene the common-law rules against monopoly and restraints lies in the peculiar character of the property right which is concerned. So long as the owner of such a secret can preserve its secrecy he has necessarily a monopoly in its use, and there is no illegal restraint because he refuses to make it public. Neither is the public interest affected whether the process or formula is used by A. or B. or by both, for there can be no restraint of trade in respect of a method or formula which is known only to the discoverer and those to whom he chooses to communicate it under restrictions. Having no right to compel a publication, the public lose no right by respecting a restricted disclosure, for no freedom of traffic has been stifled. The language of Justice Holmes in Board of Trade v. Christie, 198 U.S. 236, 25 Sup. Ct. 637, 49 L. Ed. 1031, in respect of contracts limiting the right of those who receive the market quotations to a special use, is equally applicable to trade secrets in general. The learned justice said:

"But, so far as these contracts limit the communication [**14] of what the plaintiff might have refrained from communicating to any one, there is no monopoly or attempt at monopoly and no contract in restraint of trade, either under the statutes or at common law."

In Ammunition Co. v. Nordenfeldt, L.R. 1 Ch. Div. 630, 1894, Lord Justice Bowen said that the sale of a trade secret was not within [*31] the mischief of restraint of trade, because, "unless such a bargain was treated as outside the doctrine of general restraint of trade, there could be no sale of secret processes of manufacture."

The basis of the common-law protection accorded to an author is the same. His legal rights grow out of the peculiar nature of the property. His composition is properly regarded as his absolute property. He need not disclose it. But the unrestricted offer of a single copy to the public operates as a disclosure or publication, and his exclusive right to make other copies is gone. But he may in confidence exhibit his work under restrictions, and this, like the confidential disclosure of a trade secret, will not amount to a dedication to the public, and he will be protected against a violation of the conditions imposed. The whole subject of the common-law [**15] rights of an author is so fully and carefully discussed by Judge Townsend in Werckmeister v. American Lithographic Co., 134 Fed. 321, 69 C.C.A. 553, 68 L.R.A. 591, and in Bobbs-Merrill Co. v. Straus (C.C.A.) 147 Fed. 15, that it would be a work of supererogation to again go over the subject. The cases relating to the distribution of news and information rest also upon the peculiar kind of property rights involved. So long as one who by his own industry has gathered together news or information, and does not disclose it, he cannot be compelled to make publication. The matter is his own in as true a sense as a trade secret or private formula, or the composition of an author. In such circumstances it is not illegal to protect the news gatherer against the piratical use of his news and prevent a public disclosure by one who has placed himself under obligation to respect a restricted use. In such case public disclosure is destructive of its value as property. Board of Trade v. Christie, 186 U.S. 236, 250, 25 Sup. Ct. 637, 49 L. Ed. 1031; Jewelers' Mercantile Agy. v. Jewelers' Pub. Co., 84 Hun. 12, 32 N.Y. Supp. 41; Id., 155 N.Y. 251, 49 N.E. 872, 41 L.R.A. 846, 63 Am. St. Rep. 666; [**16] National Tel. News Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 119 Fed. 294, 56 C.C.A. 198; Exchange Tel. Co. v. Gregory, etc., Co., 1 Q.B. Div. 147 (1896); F.W. Dodge, etc., Co. v. Construction Co., 183 Mass. 62, 66 N.E. 204, 60 L.R.A. 810, 97 Am. St. Rep. 412. In the Board of Trade Case, cited above, Justice Holmes, speaking of the protection granted to the business of distributing stock quotations, said:

"In the first place, apart from special objections, the plaintiff's collection of quotations is entitled to the protection of the law. It stands like a trade secret. The plaintiff has the right to keep the work which it has done, or paid for doing it, to itself. * * * The plaintiff does not lose its rights by communicating the result to persons, even if many, in confidential relations to itself, under a contract not to make it public."

The trading stamp and railroad ticket cases, such as Sperry & Hutchinson Co. v. Mechanics' Clothing Co. \(C.C.\) 135 Fed. 833, and Nashville, etc., Ry. Co. v. McConnell \(C.C.\) 82 Fed. 65, likewise rest upon the peculiar character of the property rights involved. Neither concern the buying and selling of articles of general commerce, and both relate to things [**17] in the nature of contracts personal in character, and not to things which can ever become the subject of general trade and traffic. But it does not follow that because a secret process [*32] or formula for a medicine or beverage will be protected against betrayal by employes or those to whom it has been communicated in confidence under a contract for a restricted use that a system of contracts for the control of all sales and subsales of the device, medicine, or beverage when once made will be outside of the rules in restraint of trade simply because the product of such secret process or formula. We have here to deal not with contracts which relate to the secret formula itself, or the right to use a trade-name or dress, as in Fowle v. Park, 131 U.S. 88, 9 Sup. Ct. 658, 33 L. Ed. 67, but with the preparation when made by the owners of the process. The preparation when ready for the market and the formula are two separate and distinct things and may have distinct ownerships. Contracts in respect of a restricted use of the formula are not within the rule against restraint because of the character of the property right in such a secret. There can be no unrestricted use, before [**18] discovery by fair means, to which the owner does not consent, and then only at the expense of the destruction of its commercial value as a secret; but this is not the case with contracts which affect only traffic in the manufactured product of the secret formula. Freedom of traffic in that is consistent with its value and does not involve exposure of the formula.

Neither is there any such analogy between an article made under a patent and an article made under a secret formula as to require like exemptions from the rules which relate to articles made under neither. It is well at this point to notice that the exemption from the rule against restraint has never been extended to contracts in respect of articles made under a patent which have once passed beyond the domain of the patent by an original sale without restriction. The only reason which has ever been given for holding that a contract restricting the field of using, selling, or making of an article made under a patent is that the patent statute has granted an exclusive monopoly which cannot be cut down by the rule against restraint for that would be to grant a monopoly by law and then proceed to take it away by law.

But, [**19] if the owner of a secret process or a private formula does not or cannot bring himself under the protection of the patent statute by securing a patent upon his discovery, he cannot claim the advantage of the statute. HN13↑ The patent law, in consideration of a full and complete publication of the discovery or invention of the patentee, has granted to him a monopoly of his invention, including the making, selling, and using of devices embodying it, for a limited term of years. At the end of that time the disclosure made at the time he applied for his patent will enable the public to enjoy his discovery, and thus find compensation for the exclusive right temporarily conceded to the inventor. No statute grants any such monopoly to anyone who does not elect to avail himself of the benefits of the patent or copyright law. HN14↑ A trade secret or medical formula protects its owner only against those who acquire it under a confidential obligation to guard against disclosure, and, as we have already seen, one is free not only to use the process or formula if discovered by skill and investigation without breach of trust, but to make and sell the thing or preparation as made [*33] by the process [**20] or formula of the original discoverer, if that be the truth. Chadwick v. Covell, 151 Mass. 190, 23 N.E. 1068, 6 L.R.A. 839, 21 Am. St. Rep. 442. To say that the owner of this secret need not make the medicine, nor sell it when made, unless it suits his convenience, is true. But the same thing may be said of the man who grows potatoes. He need not grow them, and need not sell them when grown. But, if something be conceded in favor of an article which no one can produce except the owner of the formula over one which any one can produce, what shall it be? There is no statute creating a lawful monopoly such as seems to take articles made thereunder without the rule against illegal restraint. Neither will the commercial value of the manufactured product vanish if subjected to the principles which apply to things not so made. None of the reasons which apply to patented articles, copyrighted productions, or to restricted disclosure of the secret formula itself apply to the product of the formula.

Without assenting to the claim that the making and selling of the preparation is a "publication" in the technical sense of that term, we are nevertheless unable to discover any legal or economic [**21] reason which justly exempts such articles when made from all of the rules of the common law which forbid unreasonable restraints in trade and from the anti-trust act of Congress in so far as trade in the prepared medicine is the subject of interstate commerce. Judge Cochran, who heard this case below, after considering the differences between a secret process and the article made, said:

"What is there, then, in the nature of the articles made under a secret process to occasion any difference between them and articles not so made or between them and articles which one may not have made at all, but simply owns, in the matter of the validity of restraining contracts entered into by the purchasers thereof from the owner? It is hard to conceive of any. It is true that the manufacturer and owner of the articles made under the secret process may refrain from making them and selling them to purchasers and thus putting them on the market. Equally so the manufacturer and owner of any other articles may refrain from so doing. So, also, the owner of articles that he has not made, but purchased or obtained otherwise from the manufacturer, may refrain from selling them to purchasers and thus [**22] putting them on the market. Suppose the owner of a patent should sell all the articles made under it to another with license to use or resell them, thus passing them outside of the monopoly of the patent hands of the purchaser, would the mere fact that they had been made under the patent lend any sanctioning force to a restraining contract entered into in reference thereto by a subpurchaser thereof? I must conclude, therefore, that the fact that the complainant's medicine has been made under a secret process has no effect whatever upon the validity of the system of contracts involved herein. He has no greater rights in relation thereto, as distinguished from the secret process under which it was made, than the owner of any other tangible personal property, whether made by him or not, would have in relation to such property".

Although Judge Cochran concluded that the complainant's preparations were no more exempt from the common-law rules against restraints of trade by reason of the fact that they had been prepared under secret formulas than if that had not been the case, he reached the ultimate conclusion that any vendor of an article might make similar contracts to those in suit, [**23] and that the control which was thereby secured over subsequent sales was not an unreasonable restraint [*34] of trade. Most of the cases which he cites in support of his conclusion are in conflict with the grounds upon which he rests his decision, and, indeed, the learned counsel for the Hartman Company have not assented to so much of Judge Cochran's opinion as holds that a trade secret remedy stands in no better plight than it would if the preparation had been disclosed upon the label. And so it has come about that the cases which have directly involved the Hartman system of contracts, and which are relied upon by counsel to sustain their legality, all stand upon the assumption that an article made under a secret formula may be the subject of contracts maintaining prices and controlling subsequent sales to as full an extent as an article made under a patent or a production secured by a copyright. The cases directly in point are all nisi prius decisions, except Jayne v. Loder, 149 Fed. 21, decided by the Circuit Court of Appeals, Third Circuit, and are all quite recent. They include three cases in which the Dr. Miles Medical Company was the plaintiff, namely, [Dr. Miles Medical \[\*\*24\] Company v. Goldthwaite \(C.C.\) 133 Fed. 794](#). The force of this case is weakened because the decree was not resisted. The next is Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. Jaynes Drug Co., 149 Fed. 838, decided by the same judge who decided the Goldthwaite Case. The next is Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. Platt \(C.C.\) 142 Fed. 606. This was followed by Wells & Richardson v. Abraham \(C.C.\) 146 Fed. 190, in which the legality of the contracts was not denied, thus lessening the value of the opinion as an authority. The ground upon which the two contested cases cited above was rested was the identity between the rights of a patentee and the owner of a mere trade secret or private formula with respect to the product or manufactured article. Thus, in Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. Jaynes, cited above, Judge Colt said:

"The contention of the defendants is that these contracts are unlawful because they are in restraint of trade. In support of this they do not rely so much upon the common-law rule as upon the federal statute (26 Stat. 209). The bill alleges that the complainant is the exclusive owner of these secret formulas, and the exclusive manufacturer of these remedies. It follows that, until voluntary disclosure [**25] or lawful discovery, the complainant has an exclusive property in these trade secrets and has the exclusive right to make and use and vend the articles made thereunder. The exclusive right of property in a trade secret is of necessity a monopoly, the same as a patent or a copyright. The complainant may make these articles, or refrain from making them. It may sell them, or refrain from selling them: It may sell them to one person, and not to another, and at such prices and upon such conditions as it may deem most advantageous. Contracts like those set out in the bill concerning articles made under trade secrets, the same as similar contracts concerning articles made under a patent or copyright, are outside the rule of restraint of trade whether at common law or under the federal statute. Hartman v. Park \(C.C.\) 145 Fed. 358; Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. Platt \(C.C.\) 142 Fed. 606; Wells & Richardson Co. v. Abraham \(C.C.\) 146 Fed. 190; Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. Goldthwaite \(C.C.\) 133 Fed. 794; Bement v. National Harrow Co., 186 U.S. 70, 22 Sup. Ct. 747, 46 L. Ed. 1058; Board of Trade v. Christie, 198 U.S. 236, 252, 25 Sup. Ct. 637, 49 L. Ed. 1031; [Garst v. Harris, 177 Mass. 72, 74, 58 \[\*\*261 N.E. 174\]](#); Fowle v. Park, 131 U.S. 88, 97, 9 Sup. Ct. 658, 33 L. Ed. 67; Park & Sons Co. v. National Wholesale Druggists' Association, 175 N.Y. 1, 67 N.E. 136, 62 L.R.A. 632, 96 Am. St. Rep. 578; Standard Fireproofing Company v. St. Louis Company, 177 Mo. 559, 76 S.W. 1008; Victor Company v. The Fair, 123 Fed. 424, 61 C.C.A. 58; Heaton-Peninsula Company v. Eureka Company \(C.C.\) 77 Fed. 288, 25 C.C.A. 267, 35 L.R.A. 728; [*35] Central Shade Company v. Cushman, 143 Mass. 353, 9 N.E. 629; Good v. Daland, 121 N.Y. 1, 24 N.E. 15."

In Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. Platt \(C.C.\) 142 Fed. 606, 610, Judge Kohlsaat says:

"These suits are brought for an infringement or violation of the property right of the complainants in the secret process owned or controlled by them. The right of a patentee, owner of a copyright, or owner of a secret process is merely the right of exclusion or debarment. The holder of such a property right, as said by the court in the Victor Talking Machine Case, cited above, is a czar in his own domain. He may sell or not, as he chooses. He may fix such prices as he pleases. He may sell at one price to one person, and another to another person. He is not required [**27] to give reasons or deal fairly with purchasers. Why is it material, then, in a suit to prevent infringement of complainants' rights in their secret processes, to inquire whether complainants have entered into a combination or conspiracy to control the very thing they are lawfully entitled to control?"

Jayne v. Loder, cited above, was decided by the Third Circuit Court of Appeals. It was an action under the seventh section of the antitrust act against a combination of three distinct national associations, one that of the wholesale druggists, another that of the retail druggists, and the Association of Manufacturers of Proprietary Medicines. The object of the combination was to exclude every dealer from trading in proprietary medicines at all who would not consent to sell to members of the combine only and at prices named by it. Arguedo Judge Archbald did say that an individual proprietor might enforce his own terms in respect to his own goods. But this was not involved. The combination was in the teeth of the law whether an individual proprietor could or could not enforce such a system as that there involved.

If we are right in our conclusion that the manufactured product [**28] of a trade secret or private formula is not immune from the common-law rules forbidding monopolies and unreasonable restraints in trade, the cases above referred to must be disapproved, at least in so far as they are grounded upon the cases which deal with articles made under patents or copyrights. In addition to the cases cited above, counsel for the appellees cite and rely upon Park v. National Wholesale Druggists' Ass'n, 175 N.Y. 1, 67 N.E. 136, 62 L.R.A. 632, 96 Am. St. Rep. 578. That case involved the validity of a method of doing business and a system of contracts between manufacturers of proprietary medicines and wholesale druggists dealing in such medicines for the purpose of suppressing competition in prices. The opinion does not support the validity of such a system of contracts with reference to medicines not protected by any patent, for the decision is bottomed upon the assumption that the "proprietary medicines," the subject of the contracts then involved, were made under patents. Judge Haight, who delivered the opinion of the court, said:

"The matter in controversy has reference to the sale by manufacturers of those particular medicines or remedies covered by trade-marks, [**29] copyrights, or patents which secure to the manufacturer or proprietor the exclusive right to manufacture and sell the same. These medicines are known as 'proprietary goods,' and their manufacture and sale are confessedly under the control and management of the owner or manufacturer, who may fix his own price and adopt such plan for the sale thereof as he, in his judgment, may determine."

[*36] To the objection that the contracts were in restraint of trade, he said:

"Nor does the plan appear to me to be in restraint of trade. It is true that it does away with the competition among dealers as to prices, but it creates no restriction upon them as to the quantities that they may be able to sell or the territory within which they may confine their transactions; but upon the question of prices we must bear in mind that the goods are covered by patent rights and trade-marks, which give the proprietors the exclusive right of specifying prices at which the articles shall be sold, and, following this, the right also to require dealers to maintain the prices specified."

The principle upon which Park & Sons Co. v. National Wholesale Druggists' Association was decided is emphasized [**30] in the subsequent case of Straus v. American Publishers' Assn, 177 N.Y. 473, 477, 69 N.E. 1107, 64 L.R.A. 701, 101 Am. St. Rep. 819, where was involved the validity of an agreement between publishers of copyrighted books to regulate the price at which retail dealers should sell such books. If the agreement had stopped there, the New York court thought the agreement valid and not in unlawful restraint of trade under the principles announced in Bement v. National Harrow Company, 186 U.S. 70, 22 Sup. Ct. 747, 46 L. Ed. 1058, an opinion to which we have heretofore referred, which involved contracts for controlling prices of articles made under patents. After referring to the Bement Case Judge Parker, who had written a concurring opinion in the previous case, after setting out the reasoning of Justice Peckham in the Bement Case, said:

"That reasoning is employed as to patent rights. It is equally applicable to copyrights, the protection of which was perhaps the leading object of the association and agreement attacked in this action. And it points to the principle underlying the decision in the Park & Sons Co. Case, 175 N.Y. 1, 67 N.E. 136, 62 L.R.A. 632, 96 Am. St. Rep. 578, upon [**31] which defendants apparently rest their claim that the judgment of the Appellate Division should be reversed. But there is a feature in this case not to be found in that one, and which requires a different judgment than the one rendered therein, which will now be pointed out."

The dissenting opinion of Judge Martin, in case of Park & Sons Company, 175 N.Y. 1, 67 N.E. 136, 62 L.R.A. 632, 96 Am. St. Rep. 578, also proceeds upon the assumption that the subject-matter of the agreement concerned medicines made under patents. See page 42 of 175 N.Y., on page 140, of 67 N.E. (62 L.R.A. 632, 96 Am. St. Rep. 578). The vice which the New York court found in the Straus Case was, not that the agreement obliged publishers not to sell copyrighted books to dealers who would not maintain the retail price dictated by the publishers, but that they also refused to sell uncopyrighted books to all such dealers as did not maintain prices on copyrighted books. This the court found under the facts of the case would operate practically to exclude all persons from the business of selling uncopyrighted books who would not become parties to the agreement to maintain the price of copyrighted books, and tended [**32] to create a monopoly of sale of books not copyrighted. Touching this, the court said:

"While the leading object of this association and agreement purports to be to secure to the owner and publisher of copyrighted books that protection [**37] which the Federal government permits them to enjoy for the reasons stated by Chief Justice Marshall (supra), it does not stop there. It also affects the right of a dealer to sell books not copyrighted at the price he chooses, or to sell at all if he fails to comply with the rules of the association. A combination creating a monopoly of the sale of books not protected by copyright offends against the law of this state as much as if it related to bluestone [Union Bluestone Co. Case, 164 N.Y. 401, 58 N.E. 525, 52 L.R.A. 262, 79 Am. St. Rep. 655] or envelopes [Berlin & Jones Envelope Co. Case, 166 N.Y. 292, 59 M.E. 906], and according to this complaint, which must be accepted as true on this review, such an outcome is not only possible but probable. But it is not of moment whether such a result is probable or not; for the test to be applied is: What may be done under the agreement? Reference to the complaint makes it clear that the association [**33] has undertaken to provide for the practical exclusion from the business of selling books not protected by copyright all who refuse to be bound by the rules of the association."

That decision puts the New York court squarely in opposition to agreements, combinations, and "systems of contracts" between a manufacturer of unpatented or uncopyrighted articles and his vendees which tend to an unreasonable restraint of trade or to create a monopoly, and makes plain the ground upon which such contracts had been maintained in the Park & Sons Co. Case. That the "proprietary medicines," called more than once "patent medicines," were not in fact patented, is of no significance, if true, for the court assumed they were, and it does not appear from anything in any of the opinions that the fact assumed was not true. That opinion, by its own language, as well as by the pointed reference to the principle upon which it rested in the later opinion of the same court, has no application when, as here, the subject of the contracts in question is unpatented and uncopied articles. The cases of Elliman & Sons v. Carrington & Son, L.R. 1901, 2 Ch. Div. 275, and Garst v. Harris, 177 Mass. 72, 58 N.E. 174, are also cited as supporting the legality of such a series of agreements as that under which complainant conducts his business. Both cases involved contracts of sale of article, presumably made under secret formulas, though no stress is laid upon the fact in the Elliman Case. Each was a suit directly between the vendor and his vendee. Each involved only a single transaction by which the article was sold upon an agreement that the purchaser would not resell at less than a named price. Neither concerned any other rights than those of the contracting parties, and neither decides more than that an agreement of sale of a chattel by which the purchaser agrees that he will not sell below a certain price is valid and not such a restraint of trade as to be obnoxious to the law. Neither case holds that a buyer from such a vendee, even with notice, would not get title or come under the obligation of the contract between the original parties. The most that can be made of the decisions is that, having regard to the subject-matter and the limited character of each agreement, neither contract had that sweep and extent which would constitute the restraint an unreasonable one, and therefore [**35] not within the mischief of the rule against restraints. The Elliman Case was decided by a single judge.

Walsh v. Dwight (Sup.) 58 N.Y. Supp. 91, another case relied upon to support the decree, was an action by a maker and dealer in salsaratus and soda, alleged to be an article in common use, against another maker who sold another brand which he called "Dwight's [*38] Cow Brand Salsaratus and Soda," for damages to him through a course of business by which his brand of the same article lost much demand. The defendant did this, first, by extensive advertising; second, by giving to all dealers a rebate who would agree to sell its article at a minimum price named and to charge a like price for every other brand. The price thus fixed was, as averred, an extravagant price and operated to enlarge the demand for the defendant's advertised brand and diminish that for the plaintiff's. The court found no illegal restraint of trade, as there was "nothing to prevent others from engaging in the business or the manufacturers of other articles from selling their products to anyone willing to buy." The substance of the decision is well stated in the syllabus as follows:

"An agreement by a [**36] manufacturer with his customers to give them a rebate if they should refuse to sell his article, or other similar articles, at less than a certain price, is not in restraint of trade."

The fact that "Peruna" is a trade-name, that it is put on the market in a distinctive trade dress, has no bearing upon the question. The defendants are not charged with infringing the trade-mark or trade dress. The medicine they bought was the medicine put up by the complainant, and the defendants have neither sold nor offered to sell a preparation of their own for and as the preparation of the complainant. A trade-mark, or a trade-name, or trade dress, have no other effect than to prevent one from "palming" off his goods for those of another. Garst v. Hall & Lyon Co., 179 Mass. 588, 61 N.E. 219, 55 L.R.A. 631; Singer Mfg. Co. v. June Mfg. Co., 163 U.S. 169, 16 Sup. Ct. 1002, 41 L. Ed. 118. The averments of the bill as to the complainant's trade-name and trade dress are irrelevant, for no exemption from the principles of the common law is secured by either. Garst v. Hall & Lyon Co., 179 Mass. 588, 61 N.E. 219, 55 L.R.A. 631; Singer Mfg. Co. v. June Mfg. Co., 163 U.S. 169, 16 Sup. Ct. 1002, 41 L. Ed. 118. The transactions described in the bill plainly constitute sales of complainant's medicines and the general title passes to every such purchaser and subpurchaser. Garst v. Hall & Lyon Co., 179 Mass. 588, 590, 61 N.E. 219, 55 L.R.A. 631. To call such a purchaser an "agent" is to juggle with words. "Sale" is a word of precise legal import, and every wholesaler who orders goods under one of complainant's uniform contracts becomes a buyer, obtains the title, and may convey the title to another. The case must therefore turn upon the legality of the restrictions imposed by the complainant in sales which pass the general property in chattels, as well as the possession, and provide for no reverter.

Neither is the suit based upon any breach of contract by the defendants. Confessedly, they have made no contract with complainants, and have definitely refused to conform to complainant's methods of doing business. That they have bought "Peruna" on the market from sellers who had it for sale is true. That the bill avers that they bought without being licensed to buy is true. That they bought from vendors who knew this fact and who thereby breached their agreement not to sell [**38] to dealers who had not been certified to them as licensed buyers who had entered into an agreement with the complainant restricting resales is also averred. That Park & Sons Company knew [*39] complainant's plan of business, and that in selling to them every such vendor thereby breached his agreement, is also charged, and, for the purpose of the demurrer, admitted. What is the result? Did the defendants by so purchasing, with knowledge of the restrictions imposed upon sales, thereby enter into contractual relations with complainant? Manifestly not. Did they obtain the absolute title, notwithstanding their knowledge that the sale was in breach of restrictions imposed upon the seller? Undoubtedly. The restrictions imposed by complainant upon sales and resales, if valid at all, are only so because they constitute personal contracts upon which an action will lie only against the contracting party. Garst v. Hall & Lyon Co., 179 Mass. 588, 61 N.E. 219, 55 L.R.A. 631. A prime objection to the enforceability of such a system of restraint upon sales and prices is that they offend against the ordinary and usual freedom of traffic in chattels or articles which pass by mere delivery.HN15

[**39] The right of alienation is one of the essential incidents of a right of general property in movables, and restraints upon alienation have been generally regarded as obnoxious to public policy, which is best subserved by great freedom of traffic in such things as pass from hand to hand. General restraint in the alienation of articles, things, chattels, except when a very special kind of property is involved, such as a slave or an heirloom, have been generally held void."If HN16 a man," says Lord Coke, in Coke on Littleton, § 360, "be possessed of a horse or any other chattel real or personal, and give his whole interest or property therein, upon condition that the donee or vendee shall not alien the same, the same is void, because his whole interest and property is out of him so as he hath no possibility of reverter; and it is against trade and traffic and bargaining and contracting between man and man." HN17 It is also a general rule of the common law that a contract restricting the use or controlling subsales cannot be annexed to a chattel so as to follow the article and obligate the subpurchaser by operation of notice. A covenant which may be valid and run with land will not run with [**40] or attach itself to a mere chattel. Spencer's Case, 3 Resolution, 5 Coke, 16; Wald's Pollock on Contracts (3d Ed.) 278; Splidt v. Bowles, 10 East, 279, 282; Smith v. Williams, 117 Ga. 782, 45 S.E. 394, 97 Am. St. Rep. 220; Prater v. Campbell, 110 Ky. 23, 60 S.W. 918; Appollinaris Co. v. Scherer \(C.C.\) 27 Fed. 18, 21; Garst v. Hall & Lyon Co., 179 Mass. 588, 691, 61 N.E. 219, 55 L.R.A. 631; Taddy Co. v. Sterions Co., 73 Law Journal, 1904, Ch. Div. p. 191; De Mattos v. Gibson, 4 De J. & Jones, 276, 282. Against this conclusion, and in supposed opposition to the above authorities, counsel for the appellee have cited the line of cases heretofore referred to relating to contracts restraining the use or sale of articles made under patents or copyrights. We have already indicated herein that these cases do not apply to contracts which do not relate to articles not made under patents or copyrights. They also cite New York Bank Note Co. v. Hamilton Bank Note Co., 180 N.Y. 280, 294-295, 73 N.E. 48, De Mattox v. Gibson, 4 De J. & Jones, 276, and Whitwell v. Tobacco Co., 125 Fed. 454, 60 C.C.A. 290, 64 L.R.A. 689. The New York Bank Note Company Case concerned the legality of a contract for [**41] the sale of "Kidder [*40] Printing Presses" with attachments enabling them to do a certain class of work. There were patents upon certain parts of the press, but none upon the attachments. It was contended that a covenant which restricted the sales of the press with the attachments was void as in restraint of trade. The fourth syllabus is in these words:

"The fact that the contract restricted the sale of presses except to the printing company, and that a separate consideration was paid for the covenant of restriction, does not render the contract so unreasonable in its restraint of trade that it is void for that reason, where the adoption of the press to the special use was the work of both parties and the covenant not to sell other presses for similar work accompanied the manufacture and sale of a press, and constituted an integral part of the thing sold."

The ground is better shown by the following extract from the opinion itself:

"So far as the machine was the subject of patent its use was lawfully a monopoly, and therefore no contract relating to it could be condemned as creating a monopoly. But, whatever may have been the case as to the patentable character of the [**42] machine, we think the fact that its adaption to the special use was the joint work of both parties, and that the covenant not to sell other presses for similar work accompanied the manufacture and sale of a machine, rendered that covenant reasonable as constituting an integral part of the value of the thing sold."

See Tode v. Gross, 127 N.Y. 480, 28 N.E. 469, 13 L.R.A. 652, 24 Am. St. Rep. 475. It is manifest that the case is not in point. De Mattox v. Gibson is still less an authority.

Under a bill for specific performance of a charter party the question arose as to whether a mortgagee of the chartered vessel should be allowed to foreclose and thereby intercept a voyage which the vessel was under contract to make when the mortgage was given, of which contract the mortgagee had notice. It was in respect of such facts that Justice Bruce used the language which is supposed to support the notion that a covenant may attach to chattels which pass by delivery from hand to hand and bring any one who buys with notice under the restrictions against a resale at less than a dictated price. But even in that case it was said that the mortgagee who took his mortgage with notice incurred no [**43] liability in respect to the charter party, and was only obliged to desist from doing anything which would prevent performance. Whitwell v. Tobacco Co. involved nothing more than whether a tobacco manufacturer might sell his goods at one price to those who would agree to buy only from him and at a higher price to those who would not.

The conclusion we reach upon all the foregoing considerations is that the complainant cannot obtain the active interposition of a court of equity against one who is under no contract relation to him, unless the covenants which he has imposed upon his vendee and subvendees are only such reasonable and partial restraints, for his own protection, as may be legally exacted by one who sells a business or property. This court in United States v. Addyston Pipe Co. et al., 85 Fed. 271, 281, 29 C.C.A. 141, 46 L.R.A. 122 et seq., speaking by Judge Taft, laid down as an indispensable condition that "no HN18 conventional restraint of trade can be enforced unless the covenant embodying it is merely ancillary to the main purpose of a lawful contract, and necessary [*41] to protect the covenantee in the enjoyment of the legitimate fruits of the contract, or to protect [**44] him from the dangers of an unjust use of those fruits by the other party." Covenants in partial restraint, and ancillary to a principal contract, which had generally been upheld, the learned judge divided into five principal classes. The fourth of these classes he defined as covenants "by the buyer of property not to use the same in competition with the business retained by the seller." As typical cases under this class, he cited American Strawboard Co. v. Haldeman Paper Co., 83 Fed. 619, 27 C.C.A. 634, and Hitchcock v. Anthony, 83 Fed. 779, 28 C.C.A. 80, both being decisions by this court. Navigation Co. v. Winsor, 20 Wall. (U.S.) 64, 22 L. Ed. 315; Dunlop v. Gregory, 10 N.Y. 241, 61 Am. Dec. 746; Hodge v. Sloan, 107 N.Y. 244, 17 N.E. 335, 1 Am. St. Rep. 816. The court below located the contracts here involved as coming under the fourth class, being covenants ancillary to the sale of the medicines put up by the complainant, which he concluded were not unreasonable for the protection of the retained business of the covenantee. Assuming that these contracts operate only as a partial and not a general restraint, a question which we do not concede, and that they are properly to be [**45] considered as covenants ancillary to a principal contract, are the restraints thereby imposed necessary to protect the complainant in his retained business, or to protect him from an unjust use of the articles by the purchaser? In the first place, we are to consider that we are not here dealing with a single contract. The complainant has made a multitude of them in identical terms, and the opposite parties comprehend, according to his bill, a large majority of the wholesale and retail druggists in the United States. The reasons which might uphold covenants restricting the liberty of a single buyer might prove quite inadequate when there are a multitude of identical agreements. The single covenant might in no way affect the public interest, when a large number might. So, also, the question as to whether the restraint was necessary to the retained business, and therefore ancillary to the principal purpose of the agreement, or whether the restraining covenants were not the principal rather than the ancillary matter, would largely depend upon the general sweep and result of a multiplication of identical contracts. The general purpose of each separate contract is the regulation of [**46] the prices and sales of the line of preparations made by complainant. A common purpose unites each covenantee to every other and the "system" is to be construed as "one piece," in which the complainant and every assenting dealer, whether wholesaler or retailer, is a party, and the agreement of each such covenantee to sell only at the prices dictated by the manufacturer constitutes one general scheme. The question here is therefore one of a totally different character from that which would arise if the question was the more simple one presented by a breach by a single covenantee. In Continental Wall Paper Co. v. Voight & Sons Co. (C.C.A.) 148 Fed. 939, where was involved a combination in restraint of trade, and, where each wholesaler and retailer in the business had executed separate but identical contracts with the corporation representing the combined manufacturers, we held that each such separate covenantee was a party to the general scheme for enhancing [*42] prices. This was rested upon the holding that the several agreements constituted one whole. See, also, observations of Judge Taft in United States v. Addyston Pipe Co., 85 Fed. 275, 29 C.C.A. 141, 46 L.R.A. 122, and [**47] of Justice Peckham in Montague v. Lowry, 193 U.S. 38, 45, 46, 24 Sup. Ct. 307, 48 L. Ed. 608.

The plain effect of the "system of contracts," the purposed relation of each to every other being confessed by the very description of the method of carrying on business stated in the bill, is, first, to destroy all competition between jobbers or wholesale dealers in selling complainant's preparations. Complainant restrains himself by agreeing to sell at only one price and to only such persons as will sign one of his system of contracts. The contracting wholesalers or jobbers covenant that they will sell to no one who does not come with complainant's license to buy, and that they will not sell below a minimum price dictated by complainant. Next, all competition between retailers is destroyed, for each such retailer can obtain his supply only by signing one of the uniform contracts prepared for retailers, whereby he covenants not to sell to any one who proposes to sell again unless the buyer is authorized in writing by the complainant, and not to sell at less than a standard price named in the agreement. Thus all room for competition between retailers, who supply the public, is made impossible. [**48] If these contracts leave any room at any point of the line for the usual play of competition between the dealers in the product marketed by complainant, it is not discoverable. Thus a combination between the manufacturer, the wholesalers, and the retailers to maintain prices and stifle competition has been brought about. It is true that the complainant is not in a combination with other makers of "Peruna." There are no others. If there were, there would not be a complete or general restraint; for it might then happen that these others, not being bound by any covenants, could supply the public. If the supply to come from them was adequate for the public demand, the public might be in no wise affected. Now, if the complainant had absorbed all the sources from which the demand for lumber, or furniture, or stoves could be supplied and then should say, "I will sell only to those who will resell only to those I shall license to buy and only at the price I dictate," could any voice be raised to say that the covenants, which every dealer should sign in order to prevent exclusion from trade in such articles, would be upheld by the courts and a remedy by injunction granted to restrain [**49] breaches? But it is said that a distinction exists between contracts which relate to articles which any one can make and sell and those which are made under a secret process, and that covenants in respect to the former might affect the public interest, while the public would not be affected by like covenants relating to the latter class of subjects. But, unless we are willing to say that that fact places such products wholly outside of the mischief incident to restraints of trade and upon a plane of equality in that respect with that occupied by things made under the statutory monopoly of a patent, the fact can be of no weight except as it may be a factor in determining whether the covenants exacted of jobbers and retailers, alike regulating subsequent sales and selecting subsequent buyers, are [*43] no more than necessary to afford a fair protection to the business of the complainant and not so large as to interfere with the interests of the public. There can be no hard and fast rule by which the result can be reached in such cases. At last the question must come to this: "What is a reasonable restraint with reference to a particular case?" This was the test applied in Horner [**50] v. Graves, 7 Bing. 735, and in Nordenfeldt v. Maxim Nordenfeldt Co., 1894, App. Cases, 535, 567, and also approved by this court in the Addyston Pipe Co. Case, 85 Fed. 271, 282, 29 C.C.A. 141, 46 L.R.A. 122. A general system of contracts, such as that which the complainant seeks to enforce and which the bill avers is a method generally adopted in his line of business, involves very different questions from those which arise when a single contract only is involved and when the action is between the contracting parties for a breach, as was the case in Garst v. Harris, 177 Mass. 72, 58 N.E. 174, and Elliman v. Carrington, L.R. 1901, 2 Ch. Div. 275.

Now, in what way is only a fair protection afforded the interests of complainant by stifling all competition between the jobbers of the United States who deal in complainant's preparations? In what way are the covenants which forbid them to resell to any one who will buy "necessary," to use Judge Taft's phrase, "to protect the covenantee in the enjoyment of the legitimate fruits of the contract or to protect him from the dangers of an unjust use of those fruits by the other party"? In what way are covenants which compel retailers to maintain [**51] prices, to quote Chief Justice Tindal, "such only as to afford a fair protection to the interests of the party in favor of whom it is given, and not so large as to interfere with the interests of the public"? Horner v. Graves, 7 Bing. 735. The learned trial judge found it difficult to answer these questions. He says in his opinion (145 Fed. 358):

"That complainant's vendees and subvendees should be so restrained is advantageous to complainant's business. It would be an injury to it for them not to be so restrained. Exactly how it is so advantaged and how it would be injured by a removal of the restraint has not been developed in the argument; and I do not feel sufficiently advised of such matters to say as to this. It would seem that the existence of such a system of contracts in relation to complainant's medicine would tend to prevent demoralization in the trade therein through competition amongst its vendees and subvendees and enable him to maintain his prices for his medicine."

The averments of the bill are very general. Thus it is averred that:

"Some time since the class of stores known as 'department stores' and 'cut rate stores' have inaugurated a system of obtaining [**52] from cut rate wholesale and jobbing druggists and elsewhere, and offering for sale your orator's medicines, remedies, and preparations at retail prices lower than the prices fixed by your orator and stamped upon the cartons and packages. Said system is known as the 'cut rate' or 'cut price' system and resulted in much confusion, trouble, and damage to your orator's business, and has injuriously affected the reputation and depleted the sale of your orator's remedies, medicines, and preparations. Thereupon, and in order to protect its trade, custom, and business, and the manufacture and sale of his remedies, medicines, and preparations, your orator has established and put in force the following methods and system of governing, regulating, and controlling the sale and marketing of your orator's said medicines, remedies, and preparations."

Then, after setting out the system of contracts, which is now sought to be enforced, it is said:

[*44] "The entire purpose and object of the said system of contracts, serial numbers, lists, and cards being to prevent the cutting of prices and the demoralization of trade, both wholesale and retail in your orator's medicines and remedies, and [**53] the injury and damage resulting to your orator's aforesaid trade and business in the manufacture and sale of said remedies and medicines, as aforesaid, which said system and method your orator charges both in its form and purposes, and the prices therein fixed are reasonable, regular and proper, and which, if observed, will accomplish the aforesaid purposes and greatly benefit your orator in his aforesaid business by increasing the sales of and demands for his remedies, medicines, and preparations."

"These allegations," said the court below, "must be taken as true," and upon these he held that the complainants were advantaged by the covenants and injured if not so restrained. In this conclusion we cannot concur. Prima facie the contracts are plainly in restraint of trade. It was for the complainant to show that the covenants were not larger than necessary for his protection against an unjust use to the injury of complainant's retained business. Unless he could do this, he could not ask equitable relief under such covenants. This the bill does not do, unless the court is to be content with general averments that the competition methods called derisively the "cut rate" or "cut [**54] price" system had "demoralized," "confused," "troubled," and "damaged" the complainant's business. So, also, it is averred that the "system" had and will accomplish the suppression of the competition plan "and greatly benefit your orator in his business by increasing the sales of and demand for his remedies." Doubtless the "system" rigidly enforced will put an end to the "demoralization," the "trouble," and "confusion" incident to competition. But such an averment as this can be of no legal consequence, for it is no more than to say that a noncompetitive system of conducting trade and traffic in the line of articles made by complainant is of more advantage than the ordinary competitive system. That the suppression of even unreasonable competition will sanctify an agreement or combination to restrain trade will not be claimed. The whole economic system which has made our civilization is founded upon the theory that competition is desirable, and the common-law rules against restraints of trade rest upon that foundation. A partial restraint of competition may be upheld when one sells a business or other property, provided it is no greater than necessary to enable the vendor to realize [**55] the value of his good will or to secure to the buyer the enjoyment of his purchase, or to prevent the use of the property to the prejudice of the seller. But here the only competition which the contracts in question tend to suppress is competition between those who buy his goods to sell again. How the suppression of competition between his vendees and subvendees is to secure to him the enjoyment of the legitimate fruits of his contracts of sale, to which the restrictive covenants are supposed to be ancillary, or to protect him against an unjust competition, is not clear, and the bill states no facts from which we can determine whether these covenants are necessary and reasonable. The general averment that under the "cut rate" plan of doing business, demoralization and damage resulted, while under the "contract system" enlarged sales and increased emoluments have and will follow, does not answer the question as to why such covenants are necessary to protect complainant against [*45] consequences which may fairly require protection. Looking to the averments of the bill as a whole and to the scheme of business as disclosed by the contracts themselves, we cannot escape the conclusion [**56] that the covenants restricting sales and resales have as their prime object the suppression of competition between those who buy to sell again. Any benefit to the retained business to result from them is manifestly but an incident of the main purpose, which is to benefit his vendees and subvendees by breaking down their competition with each other. Restraints which might be upheld if ancillary to some principal contract cannot be enforced if, when unmasked, they appear to be the main purpose of the contract and not subordinate. The covenants in the contracts signed by the retailers are not even collateral to any sales by the complainant, but to sales made by the wholesalers. Although they run to the complaint, their prime purpose is neither the protection of the retained business of the complainant nor of the wholesaler, but only to prevent competition between retailers. Covenants protecting the seller of property against the competition of the buyer, by its use against the business retained by the seller, which are upheld if not wider than necessary for that purpose, have been covenants where the main purpose has been to protect the seller himself against competition directed against [**57] his retained business. No instance has been called to our attention where the main purpose and principle, if not only result, is to protect buyers against the competition of each other. If such a principle shall find lodgment in the law, it must be upon economic reasons which are in conflict with those which now prevail. The single direct effect of the "system of contracts" is to limit and restrain the right of each wholesaler and each retailer to transact business in the ordinary way. Each obtains a price enhanced by the "system" over the "cut rate" or "cut price" method which had before prevailed, and which it was the object of the new plan to abolish. It may be that sales went on as before; but at a higher price to the consumer than would otherwise have been paid. In Addyston Pipe Co. v. United States, 175 U.S. 211, 244, 20 Sup. Ct. 96, 44 L.Ed. 136, it was said:

"We have no doubt that where the direct and immediate effect of a contract or combination among particular dealers in a commodity is to destroy competition between them and others, so that the parties to the contract or combination may obtain increased prices for themselves, such contract or combination amounts [**58] to a restraint of trade in the commodity, even though contracts to buy such commodity at the enhanced price are continually being made. Total suppression of the trade in the commodity is not necessary in order to render the combination one in restraint of trade. It is the effect of the combination in limiting and restraining the right of each of the members to transact business in the ordinary way, as well as its effect upon the volume or extent of the dealing in the commodity, that is regarded."

It is no answer to such restrictive covenants that after all they only prevent injurious competition between such dealers and only result in maintenance of reasonable prices. These are not the tests by which the validity of such agreements are determined. In People v. Sheldon, 139 N.Y. 251, 264, 34 N.E. 785, 789, 23 L.R.A. 221, 36 Am. St. Rep. 690, it was said:

[*46] HN19 [↑] "If agreements and combinations to prevent competition are or may be hurtful to trade, the only sure remedy is to prohibit all agreements of that character. If the validity of such an agreement was made to depend upon an actual proof of public prejudice or injury, it would be very difficult in any case to establish [**59] the invalidity although the moral evidence might be very convincing."

This principle was very strongly approved by this court in the Addyston Pipe Case, so frequently referred to, and many other cases cited in its support. It has been suggested that we should have regard to new commercial conditions and a tendency toward a relaxation of old common-law principles which tend to prevent development on modern lines. This is an argument better addressed to legislative bodies than to the courts. Neither is it wise for the courts to countenance the introduction of artificial distinctions dependent upon the variant economic views of individual judges. Distinctions which are specious or analogies which are but apparent will but afford opportunities to whittle away broad economic principles lying at the bottom of our public policy, principles which have long received the sanction of statesmen and the approving recognition of a long line of jurists. A like argument is expected whenever some new method of circumventing freedom of commerce comes under the tests of the law. It was made and answered by Judge Taft in the Addyston Pipe Case with a strength to which we can add nothing.

Our [**60] conclusion is that complainant's system of contracts is not enforceable. The injunction must be discharged.

The case will be remanded, with directions to proceed as may be consistent with this opinion.

R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. v. Allen Bros. Tobacco Co.

Circuit Court, W.D. Virginia

March 20, 1907

No Number in Original

Reporter

151 F. 819 *; 1907 U.S. App. LEXIS 4990 **

R. J. REYNOLDS TOBACCO CO. v. ALLEN BROS. TOBACCO CO.

Core Terms

---

tag, tobacco, brand, color, trade-mark, label, advertising, manufacture, peculiar, plug tobacco, purchaser, letters, red, copies, style, words, appearing, deceive, unfair, good will, designated, fraudulent, consumer, plugs, customer, bottle, boxes, conveyance, packages, dealers

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Trademark Law > Conveyances > Assignments

Contracts Law > Contract Conditions & Provisions > General Overview

Trade Secrets Law > Federal Versus State Law > Antitrust Law

Patent Law > Ownership > Conveyances > General Overview

HN1 [down arrow] Conveyances, Assignments

A clause in a conveyance of property which includes good will, trade-marks, trade-secrets, and letters patent, is perfectly valid, and not in restraint of trade at all, and clearly a clause of that character does not so directly affect interstate trade or commerce as to be within the statute, even if it were in restraint of trade.

Trademark Law > Trademark Cancellation & Establishment > General Overview

Trademark Law > Conveyances > General Overview

HN2 [down arrow] Trademark Law, Trademark Cancellation & Establishment

Where a device or mark is in part arbitrary and, to that extent, would have no natural or necessary significance in that connection with the article manufactured, apart from its use in that connection, yet, by such use of the plaintiffs' in connection with their manufacture and sale of these articles, it has become well known to the trade, and has come to be taken by dealers as a peculiar designation by which the plaintiffs' goods are distinguished in the market, it is therefore, both in its character and use, when taken together, a lawful trade-mark.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Sales of Goods > Performance > Insurable Interest & Identification

Trademark Law > Subject Matter of Trademarks > Labels, Packaging & Trade Dress

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Likelihood of Confusion > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Sales of Goods > Performance > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Factors for Determining Confusion > Similarity of Marks > General Overview

HN3 Performance, Insurable Interest & Identification

The general rule of law is that, if a manufacturer has applied a peculiar and distinctive label to designate his goods, and has so used it that his goods are identified by it, a court of equity will restrain another party from adopting and using one so similar that its use is likely to lead to confusion by purchasers exercising the ordinary degree of caution which purchasers are in the habit of exercising with respect to such goods.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Trademark Law > Special Marks > Trade Names > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Unfair Competition > Federal Unfair Competition Law > General Overview

HN4 Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

When an alleged trade-mark is not in itself a good trade-mark, yet the use of the word has come to denote the particular manufacturer or vendor, relief against unfair competition or perfidious dealing will be awarded by requiring the use of the word by another to be confined to its primary sense by such limitations as will prevent misapprehension on the question of origin. In the latter class of cases such circumstances must be made out as will show wrongful intent in fact, or justify that inference from the inevitable consequences of the act complained of.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse > Fraud

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Governments > Agriculture & Food > Distribution, Processing & Storage

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Unfair Competition > Federal Unfair Competition Law > General Overview

Trademark Law > Causes of Action Involving Trademarks > Infringement Actions > General Overview

151 F. 819, *819 U.S. App. LEXIS 4990, **4990

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Causes of Action Involving Trademarks > Infringement Actions > Determinations

Trademark Law > ... > Remedies > Equitable Relief > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Trademark Cancellation & Establishment > Conveyances > Valid Transfers

HN5 Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse, Fraud

An ownership and an interest in the means by which a fraud or wrong is about to be committed are not essential to the maintenance of a suit to enjoin its perpetration. A title to the property about to be injured is sufficient. Where a company has no property in the words or in the means by which this fraud is committed, but it owns the good will -- the custom -- which the false and fraudulent use of these words and names injures and destroys, its proprietary interest in that good will is ample to warrant the court in enjoining its destruction by the fraud. Suits for infringements of trade-marks rests on the ownership of the trade-marks. Suits for unfair competition in trade are founded upon the damage to the trade of the complainants by the fraudulent passing of the goods of one manufacturer for those of another. In the former, title to the trade-marks is indispensable to a good cause of action; in the latter, no proprietary interest in the words, names, or means by which the fraud is perpetrated is requisite to maintain a suit to enjoin it. It is sufficient that the complainant is entitled to the custom -- the good will -- of a business, and that the good will is injured, or is about to be injured, by the palming off of the goods of another as his.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Likelihood of Confusion > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > General Overview

Trademark Law > Likelihood of Confusion > Consumer Confusion > General Overview

HN6 Consumer Protection, Likelihood of Confusion

No man is entitled to represent his goods as being the goods of another man; and no man is permitted to use any mark, sign or symbol, device or other means, whereby, without making a direct false representation of himself to a purchaser who purchases from him, he enables such purchaser to tell a lie, or to make a false representation to somebody else who is the ultimate customer.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Likelihood of Confusion > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Sales of Goods > Performance > Rights of Buyers

Trademark Law > Likelihood of Confusion > Consumer Confusion > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Sales of Goods > Performance > General Overview

HN7 Consumer Protection, Likelihood of Confusion

Rivals manufacturers may lawfully compete for the patronage of the public in the quality and price of their goods, in the beauty and tastefulness of their inclosing packages, in the extent of their advertising, and in the employment of agents, but they have no right, by imitative devices, to beguile the public into buying their wares under the impression they are buying those of their rivals.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Similarity of Marks > Appearance, Meaning & Sound > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Likelihood of Confusion > General Overview

Trademark Law > Conveyances > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Factors for Determining Confusion > Intent of Defendant to Confuse > General Overview

HN8 Contracts, Sales of Goods

The intention on the part of an alleged infringer to induce purchasers through the use of simulated trade-mark or dress, to buy his goods under the belief that they are another, furnishes no ground for relief, unless the similarity between the two trade-marks is of character to convey a false impression to the public mind, and to mislead and deceive the ordinary purchaser.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > General Overview

HN9 Consumer Protection, Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices

The public, as well as individuals, is entitled to protection from those, who by unfair means and methods seek to palm off an article which is not what it is represented to be.

Counsel: [**1] Frank F. Reed, for complainant.

Caskie & Coleman, for defendant.

Opinion by: PRITCHARD

Opinion

---

[*820] PRITCHARD, Circuit Judge. This suit was instituted in March, 1906, and seeks to enjoin the defendant from unfair and fraudulent competition. Both the complainant and defendant are engaged in the business of manufacturing smoking and chewing tobacco, the complainant at Winston-Salem, N.C., and the defendant at Lynchburg, Va. Complainant is a corporation created under the laws of New Jersey, and the defendant is a Virginia corporation. The sum or value in controversy exceeds $2,000, exclusive of cost and interest. In 1880 Richard J. Reynolds, then a manufacturer of plug tobacco, originated a formula or recipe, selected the name "Schnapps" as the trade-mark or trade-name for the product, and placed his article upon the market under that style. R. J. Reynolds was succeeded in business in 1888 by R.J. Reynolds & Co., a copartnership, composed of R. J. Reynolds, William N. Reynolds, and Henry Roan. In 1890 the copartnership was converted into the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Company of North Carolina, and this company, in 1899, sold out to, and was succeeded by, the R.J. Reynolds Tobacco [**2] Company of New Jersey, the complainant. The copartnership and corporations in each instance acquired the plant, assets, property, good will, trade-names, trade-marks, trade-dress, recipes, and trade-rights of the predecessor, announced succession, preserved the Schnapps formula as a trade-secret, and continued the manufacture of the brand at the same place, and in substantially the same way under the general conduct and supervision of the originator of both the business and [*821] brand. Prior to 1894, Schnapps had been marketed with the tag in various designs. In that year a new and theretofore unused style of tag was gotten up, and from that date employed for the tag, consisting of a narrow tin rhomboid, exhibiting a dark brown or black background with the word "Schnapps" imprinted thereon in red back-slanting letters. Two or three such tags, one for each cut, are placed upon each plug, and are the only badges or marks of origin or identification attached to the tobacco and accompanying it, usually seen by the consumer. The plugs with the tags attached are packed in the usual way in boxes or caddies which bear the name and address of the maker, and an enlarged reproduction [**3] of the tag upon the sides and ends. In retail stores, where the tobacco is sold to users, the caddies are usually unheaded and placed in show cases or rear shelves where but little of the letter press thereon is visible, but where the general appearance of the tag can be seen; and from such caddies the retailer passes out the plugs or cuts to the buyer. The market for this brand embraces the Southern states. The brand has been, especially since 1894, extensively advertised by signs, hangers, posters, and circulars, which usually have reproduced on an enlarged scale the peculiar identifying tag. About $1,000,000 have been expended in advertising the brand of tobacco called "Schnapps." The sales have reached 11,500,000 pounds annually. The consumers are largely colored and white people unable to read. The tag is thoroughly associated with and in the minds of users, and identifies the product of complainant, directly or indirectly, by signifying the thing desired. Beginning in 1902, after defendant's infringement started, indented letters were used for the Schnapps tag, and to some extent advertised as identifying the genuine product. Six years after Schnapps was well established [**4] and known, and the peculiar features of the tag associated and identified with, and relied upon as a badge of origin, defendant, a rival plug tobacco manufacturer, with knowledge of the facts relative to Schnapps came upon the market with a new brand styled "Traveller," and employed a tag of same dimension, shape, and color, and the word "Traveller" inscribed thereon in red back-slanting letters. The plugs of tobacco are identical in shape, size, color, and weight with complainant's; have the tag affixed in the same places and numbers, and are packed in boxes and caddies of the same sizes. The shapes, sizes, and colors of plugs, number of cuts, and places of tags, method of packing, and sizes and shapes of boxes, are common to the trade. Traveller tobacco is inferior in quality, is sold to the trade for a less price than the brand of complainant known and designated as "Schnapps," and sold to the consumer for the same prices, and is not advertised to any extent. It is exposed for sale and sold in the same way and to the same class of consumers, and in the same markets as Schnapps.

It is insisted by the complainant that the defendants' salesmen are requested to suggest to retail [**5] dealers that the "Traveller" brand can be substituted for "Schnapps" with greater profit; and this has been done, and is being done. It is also insisted that it is shown by the testimony that the defendants at the suggestion of a customer by the name of Tom Morton, of Tennessee, adopted the size, color of tag, etc., and color of letterpress to enable such substitution and passing off of the [*822] Traveller brand of tobacco; that the defendants' salesmen had deliberately and methodically represented to retail dealers that by similarity of the label "Traveller" brand could be palmed off on buyers as "Schnapps"; that the imitation is calculated and does deceive buyers; that the defendants have been repeatedly and cautiously warned, but have refused, to desist their conduct; that although the imitation tag has been on the market for four or five years, it is only within the last 18 months that it has been actively urged or pushed and that it was not until after the institution of this suit that the fraudulent inception of Traveller was ascertained by complainant. The injunction sought is to stay the use in the manufacture, packing, and distributing of plug tobacco, containing a [**6] tag identical or like that of complainant, or the tag used by defendants of the same style or color, style, color, or arrangement of letterpress, calculated to enable or of enabling the plug tobacco of the defendants to be substituted and passed off, and sold as the plug tobacco of complainant. It is not claimed that the Traveller brand is an infringement of the Schnapps brand as a trade-mark or trade-name. This is a suit to enjoin unfair and fraudulent competition in trade. It is insisted by counsel for defendants that there is a want of title to the Schnapps brand and tag, because of a stipulation in the conveyance from the R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Company of North Carolina to the complainant, the R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Company of New Jersey, upon the ground that the contract in question contains a clause in restraint of interstate commerce or trade, and therefore void.

The amended bill of complaint shows the inception of the business in 1880 by Richard J. Reynolds, its transfer in 1888 to R.J. Reynolds & Co.; the succession in 1890, of the R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Company of North Carolina, and the acquisition of the business by the R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Company of New Jersey in 1899. [**7] These averments, which are practically unchallenged by the answer, save that the legality or the validity of the conveyance from the North Carolina Company to the New Jersey Company is denied as violative of the anti-trust act, are amply sustained by the conveyances, of which copies are annexed to the affidavit of Richard J. Reynolds as exhibits 1 to 11, inclusive. Exhibit 1, Copartnership articles, dated January 2, 1888, between Richard J. Reynolds, W. N. Reynolds, and Henry Roan; the former retaining the ownership of all brands. Exhibit 2. Articles of incorporation of R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Company of North Carolina, dated February 11, 1890, showing R. J. Reynolds, W. N. Reynolds, and Henry Roan, taking all the shares of stock. Exhibit 3. Deed from R. J. Reynolds to R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Company of North Carolina, conveying the factory, fixtures, furniture, and brands. Exhibit 5. Articles of incorporation of R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Company of New Jersey dated April 3, 1899. Exhibit 6. Resolution of stockholders of R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Company of North Carolina, authorizing the directors to sell and convey as of March 21, 1899, the good will, business, trade-marks, brands, patents, [**8] trade-secrets, processes, formulas, bills and accounts receivable, real estate, factory, plant machinery, and all assets and property of the North Carolina Company to the R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Company of New Jersey. Exhibit 7. Resolutions [*823] of board of directors of North Carolina Company April 10, 1899, authorizing such transfer. Exhibits 8 and 9. Deeds of factory from R. J. Reynolds and North Carolina Company to New Jersey Company, dated January 30, and April 11, 1899. Exhibit 10. General conveyance April 11, 1899, from R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Company of North Carolina and its stockholders, to R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Company of New Jersey, conveying the tobacco manufacturing business of vendor as a going concern with all good will, personal property, chattels, trade-marks, trade-names, brands, labels, copyrights, trade-secrets, etc., and all property effects, assets, and estate of vendor. Among the registered brands scheduled as "Schnapps." Exhibit 11. Separate transfer, dated April 11, 1899, of registered trade-marks and brands, enumerating Schnapps as registered April 22, 1884. The defendant seeks to show that the complainant is not the legal owner of the Schnapps tag, [**9] and, in support of this contention, it is insisted that the conveyance from the North Carolina Company to the New Jersey Company is violative of the anti-trust act.

In order to sustain the proposition contended for by defendants, it must first appear that the contract is in restraint of trade, and it must also appear that it is in restraint of interstate commerce or trade. It has been repeatedly held that HN1[<sup>A</sup>] a clause of this description in a conveyance of property which includes good will, trade-marks, trade-secrets, and letters patent, is perfectly valid, and not in restraint of trade at all, and clearly a clause of this character does not so directly affect interstate trade or commerce as to be within the statute, even if it were in restraint of trade. The questions thus sought to be raised do not apply in a suit of this character. While the court is of opinion that the evidence amply shows that the contract entered into between the R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Company of North Carolina and the R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Company of New Jersey in 1899, is not in violation of the anti-trust act, at the same time, it is admitted that the complainant is in the possession of the trade-mark "Schnapps," [**10] and the label, and that it has been in possession of the same for a long time under color of title and right. It necessarily follows that it is in the rightful possession of the same. It is a well-settled principle that, as against a trespasser, possession of the premises is sufficient.

The tag which is asked to be protected having been adopted in 1894, while the trade-mark Schnapps was owned by the R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Company of North Carolina, and it appearing that all of the business and assets have been transferred to complainant, this would be sufficient without a specific assignment of the trade-mark to give complainant a perfect title to all rights pertaining to the tag. Pillsbury v. Pillsbury-Washburn F. Mills Co., 64 Fed. 841, 12 C.C.A. 432; Prince Co. v. Prince Co., 57 Fed. 938, 6 C.C.A. 647; Kidd v. Johnson, 100 U.S. 617, 25 L. Ed. 769; Hoxie v. Chaney, 143 Mass. 592, 10 N.E. 713, 58 Am. Rep. 149. The evidence shows that Schnapps tag has been constantly used and employed since April, 1899, by complainant and such use was long prior to the adoption of the Traveller tag. It thus appearing that the North Carolina Company has ceased to use the Schnapps tag, under these [**11] circumstances the complainant acquired title to the same independent of any conveyance that may have [*824] been made to it by the North Carolina Company. Baking Powder Co. v. Raymond (C.C.) 70 Fed. 376, two cases.

The court will now consider the question whether the adoption of the Schnapps tag in shape, size, and color of same were in combination new, peculiar, and distinctive.

The verified bill of complaint on page 6, among other things, alleges:

"In the year 1894, while the said R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Company of North Carolina was the owner and proprietor of said business, and was engaged in the manufacture, exploitation, and sale of plug tobacco under said secret formula and recipe at said plant and place, and employing the said trade-mark and trade-name thereon, said R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Company of North Carolina did devise, and thereforth use and employ, in connection with said trade-mark and trade-name, Schnapp, a new, peculiar, original, and theretofore unused tag exhibiting a new, peculiar, original and theretofore unused form and combination of color, shape, and size, and color, and style of letterpress, wherein the word 'Schnapp' was printed in red back-slanting [**12] letters upon a very dark or black tin tag of rhomboidal form. Said form of letterpress, and color of type, and color and form of tag were new, original, striking, and distinctive, and not theretofore used or employed upon or in connection with plug tobacco."

R. J. Reynolds syas in his affidavit:

"When, in 1894, the Schnapp tag was changed and the present style adopted, this style, so far, as I then knew, or now know, was absolutely new and original. I had been selling, manufacturing and dealing in plug tobacco at that time for a period of over 20 years, and was well posted as to the style of tags employed. Prior to that time, I never saw or heard of a tag of this description; that is, an elongated lozenge or parallelogram, with slanting ends, dark background, and the name of the brand in red letters inscribed thereon. This tag was devised for the express purpose of identifying and distinguishing the manufacture of the R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Company, and from the beginning was extensively advertised for that very purpose."

W. V. Birchfield, after stating that he has known the Schnapps brand for 12 or 14 years, says:

"The tag in its present form was adopted in 1894. When [**13] I first became acquainted with the brand, it was new and distinctive, and I cannot remember of ever having seen anything like it on plug tobacco."

Tom Morton, who has been in the tobacco business in the South since 1889, and is familiar with brands, says:

"When I first saw the Schnapps tag, it was to me new, peculiar, and distinctive in shape and colors, and was, so far as I know, new and peculiar to the R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Company."

W. Z. Stultz says:

"I am well acquainted with the Schnapps brand, and knew it prior to 1894, when the present form of label was adopted. So far as I know, the combination of shape of label, color of label, and color and slant of letters, was new and original."

George P. Cornell, Jr., says:

"I have known Schnapps brand since about 1894. In 1894 a new tag of the present form was adopted. Prior to that time I never saw a similar tag."

R. U. Falkner says:

"That the present form of Schnapps, when adopted in 1894, was new and original, and affiant had never seen anything like it before."

[*825] W.T. Brown, of Brown Bros. Company, is familiar with plug tobacco brands and has known Schnapps since its appearance on the market, and knew [**14] of the new tag adopted in 1894, and says:

"That at the time of the adoption and placing upon the market of the present Schnapps tag, its design and combination of shape, color, and color of letters a distinctively original and new tag."

Geo. T. Brown, president of Brown & Williamson Tobacco Company, of Winston-Salem, N.C., who has been manufacturing and selling plug tobacco in Southern states for 12 years, and who has known the brand Schnapps since put on the market says:

"The tag adopted in 1894, was in design and combination of shape, color, and color of letters, new and original."

E. M. Bohannon, of Winston-Salem, has been a manufacturer and seller of plug tobacco in the South for 18 years and has known Schnapps from its origin, gives the same evidence as to the newness and originality of the Schnapps tags. W. A. Whitaker, of Winston-Salem, who has made and sold plug tobacco for 25 years, says the same thing. So do J. P. Taylor, a member of the firm of Taylor Bros., manufacturers, and C.D. Ogden, of Ogden Hill & Co., both of Winston-Salem, after an experience as a manufacturer of plug tobacco of 25 years' duration. The peculiar and distinctive tag for Schnapps has been [**15] extensively advertised and used, and is now thoroughly associated with and identifies the R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Company's product. Bill of complaint (page 96) affidavit of Richard J. Reynolds, and exhibits thereto. The evidence shows that over 783,676,524 tags have been used upon the plugs sold since 1894. This advertisement and association of the peculiar and distinctive tag as a badge of identification is stated in the bill of complaint, and abundantly sustained by the proof.

R. J. Reynolds says:

"It is safe to say that since the adoption of the new form of Schnapps tag in 1894, the R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Company of North Carolina and the R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Company of New Jersey, has expended the sum of $1,000,000 in advertising Schnapps tobacco, of which sum the advertising matter which reproduced the Schnapps tag. During the same period 83,773,776 pounds of Schnapps, bearing 783,676,524 tags, have been sold."

The exhibits of advertising matter reproducing the 1894 Schnapps tag are exhibit 13, May 6, 1901, 50,000 copies; Exhibit 14, May 15, 1901, 25,000 copies; Exhibit 15, August 17, 1901, 50,000 copies; Exhibit 16, March 20, 1902, 100,000 copies; Exhibit 17, store signs, [**16] showing caddies and tag; April 19, 1902, 50,000; October 8, 1902, 50,000; Exhibit 18, April 11, 1902, 20,000 copies; Exhibit 19, July 19, 1902, 50,000 copies; October 16, 1902, 50,000; February 2, 1903, 100,000; April 6, 1903, 50,000; Exhibit 20, June 20, 1903, 50,000 copies; August 19, 1903, 50,000 copies; Exhibit 21, November 14, 1903, 42,000 copies; Exhibit 22, April 20, 1904, 100,000 copies; Exhibit 23, February 16, 1904, 100,000 copies; Exhibit 24, January 30, 1904, 500,000 copies; Exhibit 25, April 30, 1904, 100,000 copies; Exhibit 26, before 1900; Exhibit 27, before 1900; Exhibit 28, issued 1901; Exhibit 29, prior to 1900; Exhibit 30, issued in 1898 or 1899; [*826] Exhibit 31, issued several years since; Exhibit 32, 1895 or 1896; Exhibit 33, issued in 1901. These signs and hangers were distributed all over the South. In 1899, Exhibit 34, showing Schnapps tag on cover was extensively distributed. In March, 1903, Exhibit 35, a pamphlet, showing tag reproduction was issued to the extent of 1,000,000 copies. Keeping in mind the enormous sales, and that all of the mass of advertisement was of a permanent character, and hung up in public places, and that the prominent and [**17] striking features were in most instances of advertising, and in all instances of sales, the tag itself, it necessarily follows that the tag, original, individual, and peculiar, became closely associated with the product in the minds of buyers.

W. V. Birchfield says that the tag from its adoption has served to identify the tobacco, and adds:

"From the earliest date of my experience, the people identified the product by the peculiar shape and style of this tag. I know there are thousands of people in my territory who chew Schnapps, and identify it by the shape and color of the tag without being able to read the word Schnapps."

Tom Morton, after stating that he has noticed throughout the South for a great number of years the advertisements reproducing the tag, says:

"Beyond question this peculiar tag is thoroughly identified with and identifies and designates the tobacco of the Reynolds Company, and the people rely on the shape, color, and arrangement and the general appearance of the tag as identifying that tobacco, as well as the word 'Schnapps' itself. This is particularly true of many of the consumers of plug tobacco. Of these a great many are ignorant people who cannot [**18] read, and who depend upon not the printed name, but simply the general appearance of the tag as identifying the tobacco asked for."

W. Z. Stultz says:

"I know that this label in its general appearance is thoroughly identified with the Schnapps brand of tobacco, and is relied upon by purchasers as identifying the thing that they want."

Geo. P. Cornell, Jr., says:

"I know that the people rely on the general appearance of this tag as identifying the goods."

In order to properly determine the merits of this controversy, it is well to understand what it takes to constitute unfair and fraudulent competition in trade. The complainant seeks to enjoin the defendant from the use of a tobacco tag known and designated as "Traveller," which it alleges has been used by the defendant in an unfair and fraudulent manner in the manufacture and sale of plug tobacco. The title of complainant to the Schnapps tag is clearly established, as will appear by the statement of facts in this cause. It appears from the evidence that Geo. T. Brown, Wm. T. Brown, F. M. Bohannan, W. O. Whitaker, J. B. Taylor, and C. D. Ogburn, rival manufacturers, and not all interested in the result of this suit, without [**19] exception, state that, owing to the extensive reproduction of the tag in advertising Schnapps brand and tag it had become generally understood on the part of the public as well as dealers that the Schnapps brand was and is associated and identified as the product of the R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Company. [*827] The extensive advertising of this particular brand, and the familiarity with the tag on the part of the public, and the further fact that complainant's goods are known and identified thereby, will be presumed in law from the undisputed facts shown by the testimony as to extensive advertising, long use, and extensive sale.

The New England Awl Co. v. Marlborough Awl Co., 168 Mass. 154, 46 N.E. 386, 60 Am. St. Rep. 377, was a suit for the protection of a bronze colored box. The court, among other things ruled:

"The report states that it did not appear whether or not any purchaser of awls had learned to recognize the plaintiff's awls by the appearance of the packages. This cannot mean more than that there was no direct testimony to that effect. But the fact that the plaintiff had used the combination since 1885, and largely since 1893, is enough to raise a presumption in [**20] its favor. McAndrew v. Bassett, 4 De Gex. J. & S. 380."

It appearing that the Schnapps style of label is identified with complainant's product and that it has a trade or secondary meaning, it will in equity be protected from imitation. The theory upon which the ruling in cases like this is based is that where one adopts a means of advertising, new and peculiar, and has extensively advertised and used the same for a considerable period of time that he thereby becomes the owner of the good will and particular trade in which he is engaged and no one can legally by fraud or falsehood deprive him of the proprietary interest thus acquired, and it being made to appear to the satisfaction of the court that the right thus acquired is being interfered with by trick, artifice, fraud, or falsehood by those who come in competition with him in the sale of his product, a court of equity will by injunction prevent such interference upon the ground that it constitutes unfair and fraudulent competition in trade. The following cases clearly establish the principle that if a manufacturer has adopted a new, peculiar and distinctive label, for the purpose of designating his goods, and the evidence [**21] shows that he has used it -- his goods being identified by it -- a court of equity will restrain another party from adopting and using a similar label arranged so as to mislead purchasers who exercise ordinary care in the purchase of such articles.

In Morrison v. Case, 9 Blatchf. 548, Fed. Cas. No. 9,845, in speaking of the name and figure of a star employed in connection with shirts, it was said:

HN2 [↑] "Though this device or mark is in part arbitrary and, to that extent, would have no natural or necessary significance in that connection with the article manufactured, apart from its use in that connection, yet, by such use of the plaintiffs' in connection with their manufacture and sale of these articles, it has become well known to the trade, and has come to be taken by dealers as a peculiar designation by which the plaintiffs' goods are distinguished in the market. It is therefore, both in its character and use, when taken together, a lawful trade-mark. It has long been employed by the plaintiffs, and well understood, by dealers and the public, as designating such articles of their manufacture."

In Anheuser-Busch Brewing Ass'n v. Clarke \(C.C.\) 26 Fed. 410, it was said in reference [**22] to a red diagonal band or label used upon a bottle of beer:

HN3 "The general rule of law applicable to this case is that, if a manufacturer has applied a peculiar and distinctive label to designate his goods, and has [*828] so used it that his goods are identified by it, a court of equity will restrain another party from adopting and using one so similar that its use is likely to lead to confusion by purchasers exercising the ordinary degree of caution which purchasers are in the habit of exercising with respect to such goods. McLean v. Fleming, 96 U.S. 245, 24 L. Ed. 828. The complainant's affidavits show that the complainant was the first to use for bottled beer a label with a diagonal red band, with the name of the kind of beer appearing in white letters on the red band, and that he had been habitually using this label for two years. The label is very noticeable and distinctive; one by reason of the diagonal red band. The result of the effect upon the eye from seeing a number of bottles is that it is a beer labeled with a diagonal red band, and the more frequently one sees it the more this one effect is deepened. It does appear altogether probable that a consumer who has [**23] been accustomed to getting bottles labeled with complainant's label would more and more rely on the diagonal red band as its distinctive mark, and would be likely to accept the respondent's beer with his diagonal label on it as supplying what he was in the habit of getting. There is nothing in the differences in the labels calculated to counteract this; and, I think, it is a strong case of a similarity likely to deceive."

In Hires Co. v. Consumers Co., 100 Fed. 809, 41 C.C.A. 71, where the defendant had first adopted, advertised, and used for root beer a certain form of bottle, it was said:

"It was proven that the complainant's root beer was principally known to and recognized by consumers from the peculiar form of bottle. It was this distinguishing feature which caught the eye, and abided prominently in the memory. Indeed, the court below declared in its opinion that the changes made by the defendant in its label tended to deceive, 'when taken in connection with the shape of the bottle,' thus clearly recognizing the fact that the form of the bottle employed was an effective factor in the deception practiced."

In case of Elgin National Watch Co. v. Illinois Watch Co., 179 U.S. 1\*\*24 665, 21 Sup. Ct. 270, 45 L. Ed. 365, where the controversy was over the word "Elgin" as a trade-mark, it was held incapable of protection as a trade-mark, but the court declared:

"But HN4 when an alleged trade-mark is not in itself a good trade-mark, yet the use of the word has come to denote the particular manufacturer or vendor, relief against unfair competition or perfidious dealing will be awarded by requiring the use of the word by another to be confined to its primary sense by such limitations as will prevent misapprehension on the question of origin. In the latter class of cases such circumstances must be made out as will show wrongful intent in fact, or justify that inference from the inevitable consequences of the act complained of. Lawrence Manufacturing Co. v. Tennessee Mfg. Co., 138 U.S. 537, 11 Sup. Ct. 396, 34 L. Ed. 997; Coats v. Merrick Thread Co., 149 U.S. 562, 13 Sup. Ct. 966, 37 L. Ed. 847; Singer Mfg. Co. v. June Mfg. Co., 163 U.S. 169, 16 Sup. Ct. 1002, 41 L. Ed. 118."

In Walter Baker & Co. v. Puritan Pure Food Co. \(C.C.\) 139 Fed. 680, it is said:

"Evidence has been introduced to show that complainant has constantly used its trade-mark or emblem since about [**25] 1875, and at enormous expense has thus advertised its product in the leading newspapers and periodicals published throughout the United States and Canada. As a natural result thereof, complainant's appropriation, not only attracted the attention of the public generally, but was the means of identification of its chocolates and cocoa by the consumer. That such chocolate and cocoa is frequently purchased and designated by the buyers as 'the cocoa with the picture of the woman or girl,' or 'the chocolate with the picture of the lady,' is abundantly established by the evidence. Hence, it cannot be successfully controverted that complainant's chocolate and cocoa, irrespective of the words 'Walter Baker & Co.' printed upon [*829] the labels, became and were distinctly known and identified by its trade-mark. The full enjoyment of such reputation and means of identification by complainant is unmistakably entitled to protection. The fact that its product is also known or identified by the name of 'Baker,' or 'Walter Baker's Chocolate or Cocoa,' is not material. The purchaser is entitled to receive the commodity which he desires and intends to buy, although other persons may know [**26] it by different marks of identification or accessories."

In the case of Johnson v. Seabury & Johnson (N.J. Ch.) 61 Atl. 5, it is said:

"Every case of this class must be dealt with according to the facts in each, having in mind the rights of the public as well as those of the parties. In the case under consideration the complainant, by conspicuous and continued use of, and by extensively advertising its goods under, the red cross symbol, so impressed the public that it came to rely upon the red cross as indicating complainant's goods, and to look upon the red cross symbol as an indicia of origin; and from this grew the habit of the consumer, when desiring complainant's goods, to call for 'Red Cross Cotton,' as in a similar manner was supplied the word 'Angostura' in Seigert v. Finlater, 7 Ch. Div. 801, so that, by the act of the public these words became the usual designation of the article, which the court will protect. Levy v. Waitt, 61 Fed. 1008, 1011, 10 C.C.A. 227, 25 L.R.A. 190."

The Schnapps brand is not claimed by complainant to be a trade-mark, nevertheless complainant is entitled to protection against any imitative device or style of dress which enables the substitution [**27] of another's product.

In the case of Shaver v. Heller & Merz Co., 108 Fed. 825, 48 C.C.A. 48, 65 L.R.A. 878 (Circuit Court of Appeals, Eighth Circuit), Judge Sanborn, who delivered the opinion of the court, in discussing this proposition, among other things, said:

"Another proposition of counsel for the appellants is that the appellee has, and can have, no proprietary interest in the word 'American,' or in its exclusive use; and therefore it is entitled to no injunction to restrain its use by another. HN5 But an ownership, and an interest in the means by which a fraud or wrong is about to be committed are not essential to the maintenance of a suit to enjoin its perpetration. A title to the property about to be injured is sufficient. One gathers the seeds of pernicious weeds, and threatens to sow them on the field of his neighbor. The latter has no proprietary interest in the seeds; but he owns the field, and the crop it is producing, an these facts are sufficient to warrant any court in granting him summary relief by injunction against the threatened injury. The appellants scatter throughout the land for the purpose of deceiving the public and diverting to themselves the trade, [**28] custom, and the good will of the appellee, words and names which convey false statements that the goods they are selling were made by the Heller & Merz Company. That company has no property in the words or in the means by which this fraud is committed, but it owns the good will -- the custom -- which the false and fraudulent use of these words and names injures and destroys; and its proprietary interest in this good will is ample to warrant the court in enjoining its destruction by the fraud. The contention of counsel for the appellants here is a confusion of the basis of two classes of suits -- those for infringements of trade-marks, and those for unfair competition in trade. Suits of the former class rest on the ownership of the trade-marks. Suits of the latter class are founded upon the damage to the trade of the complainants by the fraudulent passing of the goods of one manufacturer for those of another. In the former, title to the trade-marks is indispensable to a good cause of action; in the latter, no proprietary interest in the words, names, or means by which the fraud is perpetrated is requisite to maintain a suit to enjoin it. It is sufficient that the complainant is [**29] entitled to the custom -- the good will -- of a business, and that this good will is injured, or is about to be injured, by the [*830] palming off of the goods of another as his. Lee v. Haley, 5 Ch. App. 155; Flour Mills Co. v. Eagle, 86 Fed. 608, 30 C.C.A. 386, 41 L.R.A. 162; Coats v. Thread Co., 149 U.S. 562, 13 Sup. Ct. 966, 37 L. Ed. 847; Singer Mfg. Co. v. June Mfg. Co., 163 U.S. 169, 16 Sup. Ct. 1002, 41 L. Ed. 118."

In Reddaway v. Banham, 13 R.P.C. 218, a suit was instituted for the purpose of securing protection for the words "Camel Hair" which were used as the name of belting which constituted about 60 per cent. of camel hair. The evidence in that case showed that the words "camel hair" had by long use by the complainant acquired a secondary meaning and to signify his goods. The court, in discussing this proposition, said:

"I think the fallacy lies in overlooking the fact that a word may acquire in a trade a secondary signification differing from its primary one, and that if it is used, to persons in the trade who will understand it, and be known and intended to understand it in its secondary sense, it will none the less be a falsehood because in its primary sense [**30] it may be true."

And, in discussing the doctrine of unfair competition in trade, the court said:

"I have often endeavored what I am going to express now (and probably I have said it in the same words, because it is very difficult to find other words in which to express it), that is, that HN6↑ no man is entitled to represent his goods as being the goods of another man; and no man is permitted to use any mark, sign or symbol, device or other means, whereby, without making a direct false representation of himself to a purchaser who purchases from him, he enables such purchaser to tell a lie, or to make a false representation to somebody else who is the ultimate customer."

In the case of Coats v. Thread Co., 149 U.S. 562, 13 Sup. Ct. 966, 37 L. Ed. 847, it is said:

"There can be no question of the soundness of the plaintiffs' proposition that, irrespective of the technical question of trade-mark, the defendants have no right to dress their goods up in such manner as to deceive an intending purchaser, and induce him to believe that he is buying those of the plaintiffs. HN7↑ Rivals manufacturers may lawfully compete for the patronage of the public in the quality and price of their goods, [**31] in the beauty and tastefulness of their inclosing packages, in the extent of their advertising, and in the employment of agents, but they have no right, by imitative devices, to beguile the public into buying their wares under the impression they are buying those of their rivals."

Counsel for defendant cite the case of Coats v. Thread Co., 149 U.S. 562, 13 Sup. Ct. 966, 37 L. Ed. 847, in support of their contention, but a careful reading of the same shows that, instead of sustaining the views urged by the defendant, it rather tends to support the theory upon which this suit was instituted. Counsel for defendant also rely upon the case of Centaur Co. v. Marshall, 97 Fed. 791, 38 C.C.A. 419, the court said:

HN8↑ "The intention on the part of an alleged infringer to induce purchasers through the use of simulated trade-mark or dress, to buy his goods under the belief that they are another, furnishes no ground for relief, unless the similarity between the two trade-marks is of character to convey a false impression to the public mind, * * * and to mislead and deceive the ordinary purchaser."

In that case it was held that, while there were elements in both labels that were common, yet [**32] inasmuch as there were many distinguishing [*831] elements, and each manufacturer put its name on the labels, so that any one who desired to look and see could do so, that was sufficient. Relief was denied. It necessarily follows from the quotation in the case, supra, if the labels had been without distinguishing features save the name employed, a different conclusion would have been reached by the court. In the case at bar the defendant adopted and used a simulated trade-mark or dress which was calculated to convey a false impression to the public mind, "and to mislead and deceive an ordinary purchaser."

Again, in the case of Heide v. Wallace & Co. (C.C.) 129 Fed. 649, and Id., 135 Fed. 346, 68 C.C.A. 16, relied upon by counsel for defendants. In the former case, it is said:

"This device stamping or embossing the monogram has been employed for the purpose of marking their goods by others in the same trade, including the defendants, fully as long, if not longer, than the complainant."

The language used by the court in the above paragraph is sufficient to distinguish that case from the one at bar. The evidence in that case clearly shows that the device employed in marking [**33] the goods by others than the complainant had been in use by them as long, if not longer, than the complainant. Complainant was, therefore, met at the threshold of the proceeding with an insuperable barrier which he could never overcome in a suit of this character.

Again, referring to the diamond form and lettering, the court said:

"Furthermore, except as these so-called pastilles are sold in bulk, neither the form nor the lettering is brought to the attention of purchasers until after they have bought them; and while both, no doubt, even so, might aid in an intended deception, it has to be initially induced and practically accomplished by the outside of the package, as addressed to the eye of the customer, which is thus controlling."

This is sufficient to differentiate that case from the one at bar.

In the case now under consideration, the tag on the plug of tobacco may be seen when the purchase is made, and before the purchaser asks for the article. The court, in continuing the discussion, among other things, said:

"The case, in this view, is brought down to the use by the defendants of the words 'Liquorice Pastilles,' and the manner they have taken to dress their packages."

[**34] From this quotation, it appears that the words "Liquorice Pastilles" are descriptive and in common use, and hence no right exclusive or otherwise obtainable therein; and the court, in conclusion, said:

"In the face of this demonstration, it cannot be successfully contended that the term 'Liquorice Pastille,' which has been in such long and familiar use, is distinctive of the plaintiff's manufacture."

The court also said:

"It is only when he adds his name and trade-mark that we have anything that is, and these the defendants in no way imitate. Neither do they the style or coloring with which he dresses out his package. This is in mixed red and blue, set off in gilt, with the diamond trade-mark prominently displayed; while the defendant's package is predominantly yellow, with an entirely different style of lettering in red, shaded with white on a black background, with their name written below."

[*832] These statements taken from the opinion in that case fully differentiate it from the case at bar, leaving the proposition upon which plaintiff relies for relief in this instance, not only unaffected, but to a certain extent sustained, thereby; the theory in that case being [**35] that the shape and size of the boxes were common to the trade, and not susceptible of a monopoly. It was also held that the boxes not being the same in coloring and marking, it was not likely that a customer of ordinary intelligence would be misled or deceived thereby.

In the opinion of the Court of Appeals, where this case was heard, the court, among other things, said:

"There is nothing whatever to suggest an attempt to catch the unwary purchaser and inveigle him into taking the one when he was seeking the other, nor could the most careless be deceived, except he was in reality unconcerned as to which he got."

The inference to be drawn from the opinion in that case is that, if the colors of the boxes labeled by defendant had been similar to those of complainant, the complainant would have been entitled to relief. The use of distinctive colors, together with the arrangement upon the exterior of the boxes, and the use of the respective manufacturers' names, were deemed insufficient by the court to justify the relief sought, upon the theory that the name "Pastille," and size of the packages were old and known to the trade, and the use of the same was a right that was common [**36] to all persons engaged in the mercantile business. How different are the facts in the case at bar. Here, we have a tag which has been adopted and used by the complainant consisting of a peculiar background, the use of the word "Schnapps" on slanting letters, and the tag being rhomboid in shape. This tag, as stated, has been extensively advertised throughout the country, and, as a result of which, has become identified with the particular grade of tobacco sold by complainant, and has been used by the public to such an extent that such brand has established a reputation by virtue of the means thus employed to identify and advertise the same. The evidence shows conclusively that the R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Company conceived the idea of placing upon the market a certain grade of tobacco stamped with the word "Schnapps" as a means of identifying and advertising the same. It appears that about $1,000,000 have been expended by this company in advertising this particular product; as a result of which, it has become well known and identified as a particular brand of chewing tobacco.

While the elements taken as a whole constitute entirely new and distinct features unknown to the trade prior [**37] to the adoption of this particular brand, at the same time, the different elements thus combined, when considered separate and distinct the one from the other, do not constitute an element new and unknown to the trade. Therefore, it is the result of the combination, letterpress, background, color, size and form of tag which give to the label of complainant features that are separate, new, and distinctive and which were unknown to the trade at the time of its adoption. The principle invoked by complainant is well defined, and is governed by a long line of decisions intended to secure fair and impartial dealings, among those who may seek to place their goods, wares, and merchandise on the market.

[*833] The evidence of Tom Morton, reading at Memphis, Tenn., is, that while he was engaged in selling the product of the defendant that the brand of Traveller was adopted solely with the view of enabling the defendant to find a ready market for this kind of tobacco which the defendant at that time was exceedingly anxious to introduce as a new brand of tobacco. The testimony of this witness shows that it was agreed that a tag should be used of the same size, color of background, type, [**38] and peculiar slant of letters as that of Schnapps brand, the only difference being that the word "Traveller" instead of "Schnapps" was to be used on the new brand.

The question involved in this controversy, not only affected the rights of the parties, but the public also. HNG↑ The public, as well as individuals, is entitled to protection from those, who by unfair means and methods seek to palm off an article which is not what it is represented to be. The evidence shows conclusively that the brand known as "Traveller" is an inferior grade of tobacco, sold at wholesale, at a much less price per pound than the Schnapps brand. The adoption of the Traveller brand enabled the defendant to secure an undue advantage over the Schnapps brand in that it was enabled to offer to unscrupulous dealers a cheaper grade of tobacco which was to all appearances of the same grade as Schnapps, labeled with a tag so similar thereto as to deceive the public into purchasing the same, believing it to be the genuine Schnapps brand of tobacco. The cheapness of the grade, and the similarity of the brand both as to shape, size, and lettering, made it possible for the defendant by these means to engage in unfair [**39] and fraudulent competition by which it could ultimately drive its competitor out of the market. The adoption of this peculiar device by the defendant enabled it to offer a persuasive argument to the retail dealer by pointing out to him the fact that here was a brand of tobacco; the plug of which was of the exact shape, size, and color, as that of the Schnapps brand, and that the brand thereon similar in shape, size, color of background, and lettering, and which could be placed upon the market at a cheaper price than the Schnapps brand, and in this way supplanting the Schnapps brand by selling what appeared to be the same tobacco at a much cheaper price.

It is insisted by complainant that most of this brand of tobacco was consumed in communities where ignorant white and colored persons, who, being unable to read, relied solely on the general appearance of the brand and size of the plug; but the court is of opinion that this is really not the true test, and does not deem it necessary if such were so, to make the application in this instance, in view of the fact that the similarity of the brands are such that the Traveller brand is calculated to deceive any one of ordinary intelligence [**40] who might desire to purchase the Schnapps brand. By placing plugs of the Schnapps and Traveller brands of tobacco along side each other in a storeroom with such light as stores usually have, at a distance of six or eight feet (the distance usually intervening between the place where tobacco is placed on the shelves, and the position occupied by customers), and without a magnifying glass, it would be a physical impossibility for an expert reader to distinguish the one from the other.

[*834] We know by observation that the average purchaser of tobacco rarely ever takes time to examine the brand on tobacco before removing the same. The rush incident to the great amount of business that is now being transacted throughout the country renders it quite impossible for the average man to take time to closely scrutinize the brands which may be attached to a particular piece of tobacco which he may purchase. Therefore, the public has come to rely mainly upon the well-established brands for almost every article purchased, and is entitled to receive the same free from deception and fraud. Common honesty, public policy, and every consideration of fair dealing, demand that the public should [**41] be protected in this respect. This peculiar brand of tobacco, having been so thoroughly advertised by all manner of devices, through the public press, bill posters, and cards, has become so thoroughly identified as the product of the R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Company that one who desires to purchase this particular product relies exclusively on the first impression he gains when looking at a caddy of plug tobacco, and does not stop to critically examine the same in order to ascertain whether or not a fraud is being practiced upon him.

That the means employed by the defendant are such as to mislead those who may desire to purchase the Schnapps brand of tobacco cannot be doubted; and it being further shown that the public has been misled by the means thus employed, and inasmuch as it appears from the evidence that the Traveller brand was adopted with the intent of entering into unfair and fraudulent competition with the complainant, the relief demanded will be granted.

---

End of Document

State v. Ice Delivery Co.

Court of Common Pleas of Hamilton County, Ohio

March 23, 1907, Decided

No Number in Original

Reporter

17 Ohio Dec. 515 *; 1907 Ohio Misc. LEXIS 142 **; 5 Ohio N.P. (n.s.) 89

STATE OF OHIO v. ICE DELIVERY CO. ET AL.

Disposition: [**1] Demurrer overruled.

Core Terms

---

indictment, purposes, duplicity, conspiracy, overt act, venue, demurrer, cases, charging, offenses, motion to quash, single count, charged offense, carrying, pursuance, supplies, averred, clauses, distinct offense, adulteration, combinations, intoxicated, grounds, no allegation, carry out, constitutes, belonging, knowingly, liquors, trusts

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Grand Juries > Investigative Authority > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Procedures > Return of Indictments > Motions to Quash

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Accusatory Instruments > Indictments > General Overview

HN1[ Grand Juries, Investigative Authority]

Under Ohio Rev. Stat. 7249 (Lan. 11003), a motion to quash may be made in all cases where there is a defect apparent upon the face of the record, including defects in the form of the indictment, or in the manner in which an offense is charged.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN2[ US Department of Justice Actions, Criminal Actions]

17 Ohio Dec. 515, *515L 907 Ohio Misc. LEXIS 142, **1

A trust is a combination of (1) capital, (2) skill or (3) acts by two or more (a) persons, (b) firms, (c) partnerships, (d) corporations, (e) or associations of persons, or of any two or more of them for either, any or all of the following purposes: 1. to create or carry out restrictions in trade or commerce; 2. to limit or reduce the production, or increase, or reduce the price of merchandise or any commodity; 3. to prevent competition in manufacturing, making, transportation, sale or purchase of merchandise, produce or any commodity; 4. to fix at any standard or figure any article or commodity of merchandise, produce or commerce intended for sale, barter, use or consumption in this state, whereby its price to the public or consumer shall in any manner be controlled or established.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Sentencing > Fines

HN3 US Department of Justice Actions, Criminal Actions

Any violation of either or all of the provisions of the Valentine-Stewart Antitrust Law shall be and is hereby declared a conspiracy against trade, and any person who may become engaged in any such conspiracy or take part therein, or aid or advise in its commission, or who shall as principal, manager, director, agent, servant or employer, or in any other capacity, knowingly carry out any of the stipulations, purposes, prices, rates, or furnish any information to assist in carrying out such purposes, or orders thereunder or in pursuance thereof, shall be punished by a fine of not less than $ 50 nor more than $ 5,000, or be imprisoned not less than six months nor more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment. Each day's violation of this provision shall constitute a separate offense.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Accusatory Instruments > Indictments > General Overview

HN4 US Department of Justice Actions, Criminal Actions

In any indictment for any offense named in the Valentine-Stewart antitrust law, it is sufficient to state the purpose or effects of the trust or combination. And that the accused is a member of, acted with or in pursuance of it, or aided or assisted in carrying out its purposes, without giving its name or description, or how, when and where it was created.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Trials > Burdens of Proof > Prosecution

HN5 US Department of Justice Actions, Criminal Actions

In prosecutions under the Valentine-Stewart antitrust law, it shall be sufficient to prove that a trust or combination, as defined herein, exists, and that the defendant belonged to it, or acted for or in connection with it, without proving all the members belonging to it, or proving or producing any article of agreement, or any written instrument on which it may have been based; or that it was evidenced by any written instrument at all. The character of the trust or combination alleged may be established by proof of its general reputation as such.

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Defects of Form

**HN6** [blue downward arrow] Defenses, Demurrs & Objections, Defects of Form

A demurrer searches the whole record.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Alcohol Related Offenses > Distribution & Sale > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Criminal Offenses > Alcohol Related Offenses > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Defective Joinder & Severance > Duplicity > General Overview

**HN7** [blue downward arrow] Alcohol Related Offenses, Distribution & Sale

Under the act to provide against the evils resulting from the sale of intoxicating liquors in the state of Ohio, a count in an indictment charging that the defendant unlawfully, etc., sold intoxicating liquors to one being then and there intoxicated and in the habit of getting intoxicated, defendant knowing, etc., is not bad for duplicity.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Crimes Against Persons > Robbery > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Criminal Offenses > Crimes Against Persons > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Defective Joinder & Severance > Duplicity > General Overview

**HN8** [blue downward arrow] Crimes Against Persons, Robbery

A count in an indictment in which the defendant is charged with robbery and with murder while in the commission of the robbery, and in which it is alleged that the blows which caused death were struck by the defendant with a piece of iron, a sledge and a shovel, is not bad for duplicity; the state cannot be required to elect upon a trial on such count, and evidence of the robbery and the use of each of the implements in producing death is admissible.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Defective Joinder & Severance > Duplicity > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Accusatory Instruments > Indictments > General Overview

**HN9** [blue downward arrow] Defective Joinder & Severance, Duplicity

When an offense against a criminal statute may, in the same transaction, be committed in one or more of several ways, as therein provided, the indictment may, in a single count, charge its commission in any or all of the ways specified in the statute, if they are not repugnant; and proof of any one of them will sustain the indictment.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Entry of Pleas > Types of Pleas > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Defective Joinder & Severance > Duplicity > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Accusatory Instruments > Indictments > General Overview

**HN10** [blue downward arrow] Entry of Pleas, Types of Pleas

A statute often makes punishable the doing of one thing, or another, sometimes specifying a considerable number of things. Then by proper and ordinary construction a person who, in one transaction does all, violates the statute but once, and incurs only one penalty. Yet he violates it equally by doing one of the things. Therefore, an indictment on such a statute may allege, in a single count, that the defendant did as many of the forbidden things as the pleader chooses, employing the conjunction "and" where the statute has "or," and it will not be double, and it will be established at the trial by proof of any one of them.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Accusatory Instruments > Indictments > General Overview

HN11 [blue download icon] US Department of Justice Actions, Criminal Actions

The Valentine-Stewart antitrust law § 5, 93 Ohio Laws 144, provides that it shall be unnecessary in any indictment brought under this act to give the name or description of the trust or combination or to state how, when or where, it was created.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Domestic Offenses > Nonpayment of Child Support > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > Jurisdiction & Venue > Venue

HN12 [blue download icon] Domestic Offenses, Nonpayment of Child Support

One who commits a crime is answerable therefor only in the jurisdiction where the crime is committed, and in all criminal prosecutions, in the absence of statutory provision to the contrary, venue must be laid as in the county of the offense. An offense is committed in that county in which the acts constituting the same are done. This statute defines and prescribes but a single offense; that of nonsupport of a parent; and it is the act of the child in failing to support that constitutes the offense.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Acts & Mental States > Mens Rea > Knowledge

HN13 [blue download icon] Inchoate Crimes, Conspiracy

In cases of conspiracy, while overt acts may be averred and proven they are not required to be, as a rule. Especially is that true where the conspiracy is made an offense as in this case by a statute which sets forth all the essential elements of the offense.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN14 [blue download icon] Conspiracy, Elements

The crime of conspiracy consists in the unlawful combination and not in what is done toward carrying out such combination, and the crime is completed when the conspiracy is entered into although no act done in pursuance thereof is committed.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

HN15 [blue icon] Inchoate Crimes, Conspiracy

A conspiracy to do an unlawful act is a separate and distinct offense from that of the act itself, and is to be governed in its prosecution by the provisions relating to conspiracies and not those relating to the specific offense. Indeed, it is not necessary that the overt act be the completed purpose intended to be accomplished by the combination, and it may be done outside the jurisdiction of the court in which the conspiracy is prosecuted.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Accusatory Instruments > Indictments > General Overview

HN16 [blue icon] Accusatory Instruments, Indictments

Where the statute is silent as to the defendant's intent and knowledge, the indictment need not allege, or the government's evidence show, that he knew the fact; his being misled concerning it is matter for him to set up in the defense and prove.

Criminal Law & Procedure > Defenses > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Accusatory Instruments > Indictments > General Overview

HN17 [blue icon] Criminal Law & Procedure, Defenses

An indictment should aver with certainty the nature of the offense charged so that defendant may have opportunity to prepare his defense and to be entitled to the claim of former jeopardy in case of conviction.

Headnotes/Summary

---

Headnotes

MONOPOLIES--INDICTMENTS AND INFORMATIONS.

1. JOINDER OF OFFENSES IN ONE COURT OF INDICTMENT.

An indictment which charges in one count the commission of several offenses of the same general character, committed at the same time and forming part of the same transaction, is not bad for duplicity.

2. CHARGING ONE OFFENSE IN SEVERAL WAYS.

An indictment which charges in a single count conjunctively several different ways of committing an offense described in the statute disjunctively, is not bad for duplicity.

3. STATING VENUE IN INDICTMENT AGAINST MONOPOLIES.

In an indictment under the Valentine antitrust act against individuals, firms, partnerships, corporations or associations, or any two or more of them, it is not necessary to aver that the trust or illegal combination exists or does business in the county in which the indictment is formed.

4. WHAT CONSTITUTES AN OFFENSE UNDER VALENTINE ANTITRUST LAW.

No overt act need be charged in the indictment against the persons, firms, partnerships, corporations or associations mentioned in Sec. 1 of the Valentine act. The mere membership in the illegal combination or trust is sufficient to constitute an offense under said act and in such case the venue of the indictment is the county where such members of said combination reside or exist, without reference to where the trust itself as an entity exists or does business.

5. SUFFICIENCY AND REQUISITES OF INDICTMENT AGAINST AGENTS OR EMPLOYEES OF A MONOPOLY.

Laning 7589 (B. 4427-4) distinguishes between two classes of persons who may become liable under the act, viz: First, "any person who may become engaged in any such conspiracy or take part therein, or aid or advise in its commission," and, second, "any person who shall as principal, manager, director, agent, servant or employer, or in any other capacity, knowingly carry out any of the stipulations, purposes, prices, rates or furnish any information to assist in carrying out such purposes or orders thereunder or in pursuance thereof." In an indictment charging any person in the first of said classes with a violation of the act, knowledge need not be averred nor proven, but knowledge must be averred and proven in an indictment against any member of the second class.

Counsel: H. M. Rulison, F. Morris, L. B. Sawyer and C. O. Rose, for plaintiff:

Indictment bad for duplicity denied. [Hale v. State, 58 Ohio St. 676, 679 \[51 N.E. 154\].](#)

No overt act is necessary to be charged, as the crime of conspiracy is complete with the combination. Limber v. State, 28 O. C. C. 761.

Miller Outcalt, Oscar Stoehr, Harmon, Colston, Goldsmith & Hoadly, Paxton & Warrington, Thomas Darby, A. G. Turnipseed and H. L. Gordon, for defendants.

Judges: BROMWELL, J.

Opinion by: BROMWELL

Opinion

---

[*516] BROMWELL, J.

The grand jury of Hamilton county returned an indictment against the Ice Delivery Company and the other defendants herein, charging that said defendants--

"On the fifteenth day of June, in the year 1906, with force and arms, at the county of Hamilton aforesaid, were active members of, acted with and in pursuance of, and aided and assisted in carrying out the purposes of an association of persons, firms, partnerships and corporations, the said association being organized for the following purposes, to wit:

"First. To create and carry out restrictions in trade and commerce in ice.

"Second. To increase the price of a certain commodity, to wit, [*2] ice.

"Third. To prevent competition in the manufacturing, making, purchase and sale of a certain commodity, to wit, ice.

"Fourth. To fix at a certain standard and figure, whereby the price of ice, an article of merchandise intended for sale, barter, use and consumption in the state of Ohio, to the public and consumer was controlled, then and there, by said association, contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the state of Ohio."

To this indictment the defendants have filed a motion to quash on the following grounds, viz.:

"That there are defects upon the face of the record in this, to wit:

"First. Said indictment contains a charge of more than one offense.

"Second. The indictment contains no allegation as to where the alleged association existed.

"Third. The indictment contains no allegation in the first three clauses of purposes named, of any intention to restrict trade, increase the price of, or prevent competition in ice in the state of Ohio.

"Fourth. The indictment fails to show or set forth the manner in which the price of ice was fixed, or controlled.

"Fifth. The indictment contains no allegation of knowledge [**3] of the purposes of the association on the part of the defendants, or that any of the defendants performed any act in violation of said section.

"Sixth. Other defects apparent upon the record."

HN1[] Under Rev. Stat. 7249 (Lan. 11003), "A motion to quash may be made in all cases where there is a defect apparent upon the face of the record, including defects in the form of the indictment, or in the manner in which an offense is charged."

It is sometimes difficult to distinguish between proper grounds for a motion to quash and those for a demurrer; but, although the state suggests that some of the grounds alleged in this case might more properly be urged by demurrer than by motion to quash we shall, for the [*517] purposes of this case, consider all of the reasons set forth in the motion we are considering as being appropriate to that motion and will pass upon them in the order in which they are presented.

1. As to duplicity in the indictment.

The defendant claims that "Said indictment contains a charge of more than one offense, and that it sets out, in one count, the violation of each of the subdivisions of the first section of the so-called Valentine antitrust act," and that by [**4] reason thereof, it must be defective for duplicity.

To support this contention defendant cites the case of [State v. Gage, 72 Ohio St. 210 \[73 N.E. 1078\]](#), and particularly, the language of the court in that case as found on page 229.

This was a suit brought under the so-called Valentine-Stewart antitrust law, 93 O. L. 143, (Lan. 7586 to 7597; B. 4427-1 to 4427-12), being the same act under which the indictment is brought in this case.

The following are the sections of said act involved in the present proceeding:

Laning 7586 (B. 4427-1). HN2[] "A trust is a combination of [1] capital, [2] skill or [3] acts by two or more [a] persons, [b] firms, [c] partnerships, [d] corporations [e] or associations of persons, or of any two or more of them for either, any or all of the following purposes:

"1. To create or carry out restrictions in trade or commerce.

"2. To limit or reduce the production, or increase, or reduce the price of merchandise or any commodity.

"3. To prevent competition in manufacturing, making, transportation, sale or purchase of merchandise, produce or any commodity.

"4. To fix at any standard or figure * * * any article or commodity [**5] of merchandise, produce or commerce intended for sale, barter, use or consumption in this state," whereby--i. e., by the standard or figure fixed--its price to the public or consumer shall in any manner be controlled or established.

HN3[] Laning 7589 (B. 4427-4). "Any violation of either or all of the provisions of this act shall be and is hereby declared a conspiracy against trade, and any person who may become engaged in any such conspiracy or take part therein, or aid or advise in its commission, or who shall as principal, manager, director, agent, servant or employer, or in any other capacity, knowingly carry out any of the stipulations, purposes, prices, rates, or furnish any information to assist in carrying out such purposes, or orders thereunder or in pursuance thereof, shall be punished by a fine of not less than fifty ($ 50) dollars nor more than five thousand ($ 5,000) dollars, or be imprisoned not less than six months nor more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment. Each day's violation of this provision shall constitute a separate offense."

HN4[] Laning 7590 (B. 4427-5). "In any indictment for any offense named in this act, it is sufficient to state the purpose [**6] or effects of the [*518] trust or combination. And that the accused is a member of, acted with or in pursuance of it, or aided or assisted in carrying out its purposes, without giving its name or description, or how, when and where it was created."

HN5[] Laning 7591 (B. 4427-6). "In prosecutions under this act, it shall be sufficient to prove that a trust or combination, as defined herein, exists, and that the defendant belonged to it, or acted for or in connection with it, without proving all the members belonging to it, or proving or producing any article of agreement, or any written instrument on which it may have been based; or that it was evidenced by any written instrument at all. The character of the trust or combination alleged may be established by proof of its general reputation as such."

Laning 7594 (B. 4427-9). "That the provisions hereof shall be held cumulative of each other and of all other laws in any way affecting them now in force in this state."

The indictment against Gage, in State v. Gage, supra, page 211, charged that he,

"Said Perley W. Gage, late of said county of Delaware, was an active member of, acted with and in pursuance of, aided and assisted [**7] in carrying out the purposes of the Delaware Coal Exchange, an association of persons organized for the purpose of preventing competition in the sale, and to maintain a uniform and graduated figure for the sale of coal, and to directly preclude a free and unrestricted competition among the members of said association, purchasers and consumers in the sale and transportation of coal, contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the state of Ohio."

The defendant demurred to the indictment on the grounds:

First. "That the facts charged do not constitute an offense against the laws of Ohio.

Second. "That the statute under which the indictment was presented is unconstitutional and void."

The demurrer was overruled, plea of guilty entered, sentence of fine and motion of arrest of judgment, which was overruled.

The court decided that the act was constitutional and that the indictment was sufficient to charge the offense.

The question of duplicity was not raised either by motion or demurrer, although the indictment shows that the defendant was charged with being a member of an association * * * organized for the purpose of "preventing [**8] competition in the sale of coal"--which charge relates to the third paragraph of Sec. 1 of the act--and also "to maintain a uniform and graduated figure for the sale of coal" which relates to the fifth paragraph, and also "to directly preclude a free and unrestricted [*519] competition among the members, etc., which relates also to the fifth paragraph.

According to the theory of the defense in this case the indictment in State v. Gage, supra, was defective because three separate and distinct offenses were charged in one count, one made so by paragraph 3 of the act and the other two by paragraph 5.

But it is a familiar rule of pleading that HN6 [↑] a demurrer "searches the whole record;" and, as the Supreme Court had this indictment before it on demurrer, it was its duty to, and no doubt it did, examine the indictment for other defects than those alleged especially as ground for demurrer; the fact that the court made no such criticism upon the indictment in that case would seem to be conclusive against the claim of duplicity charged in the present case which resembles the Gage indictment and differs from it only in setting forth four of the methods and purposes of the combination \*\*9 instead of three as in that case.

But we do not have to rely on that case alone in reaching this conclusion. The following citations from Ohio cases seem to make clear the rule as to duplicity in a single count in an indictment.

In the case of Foster v. State, 1 Ohio Cir. Dec. 261 \(1 Ohio C.C. 467\), three persons were indicted for three several acts, each of which was a violation of law. But the court held that, as but a single general offense was charged, and the three defendants might have been found guilty either as principals or as aiders and abettors, of each of the offenses, the indictment was not bad for duplicity.

In the case of Blair v. State, 3 Ohio Cir. Dec. 242 \(5 Ohio C.C. 496\), the indictment charged defendant with an assault with intent to rob, an attempt to perpetrate a robbery, and with murder, all in one count. A demurrer was filed charging duplicity. The court said, page 245:

"So that, conceding for the sake of argument, that, omitting the alleged independent charge of assault with intent to rob, the indictment sufficiently charges an 'attempt to perpetrate a robbery,' how is plaintiff in error injured by two averments \*\*10 of the same attempt, or two averments of some of the facts amounting to such attempt to rob?

"Not all indictments charging two offenses in one and the same count are bad. Breese v. State, 12 Ohio St. 146."

In the case of State v. Bauer, 1 Ohio Dec. 199 \(1 Ohio N.P. 103\), tried before Judge Evans of this court, two of the counsel for defendants in the present case represented opposite sides. The charge was soliciting a bribe. The language of the indictment was in the conjunctive, i. e., "with respect to his action, vote, opinion, and judgment," while the language of the statute under which it was drawn was in the disjunctive, i. e., "with respect to his action, vote, opinion or judgment."

A motion to quash for duplicity was overruled, the court citing \*520 Watson v. State, 39 Ohio St. 123; State v. Conner, 30 Ohio St. 405; Mackey v. State, 3 Ohio St. 362.

In the case of Mackey v. State, supra, the third syllabus reads as follows:

"An allegation of uttering a 'false, forged, and counterfeited bank note,' is not bad for repugnancy."

Here, according to contention \*\*11 of defendants in this case (and as claimed in the case cited), are three distinct offenses, viz.: uttering a false note, uttering a forged note, and uttering a counterfeit note. It is true that the statement of this case does not inform us whether these three offenses were charged in a single count or in several; but the natural inference from the manner in which they are grouped in the syllabus would be, that they were in a single count. The court did not pass upon the question of duplicity but did upon the question of repugnancy as above.

In the case of [Breese v. State, 12 Ohio St. 146 \[80 Am. Dec. 340\]](#), there was but one count which contained a charge of burglary and also a charge of larceny. Demurrer filed for duplicity because the "indictment contains but one count charging two distinct crimes--burglary, a penitentiary offense and larceny, punishable only by fine and imprisonment in the county jail."

17 Ohio Dec. 515, *520L 1907 Ohio Misc. LEXIS 142, **11

The court, while stating the general rule to be, that two distinct crimes or offenses cannot properly be shown in the same count of an indictment, also stated that this rule was by no means of universal application and that one of the exceptions, as well established [**12] as the rule itself, is, that a burglary and larceny, committed at the same time, may be thus united. The court thinks that the clause, "committed at the same time," taken in connection with the fact that the two offenses while distinct crimes, grew out of, and formed parts of, the same transaction, is the key to this decision.

In the case of [State v. Hennessey, 23 Ohio St. 339 \[13 Am. Rep. 253\]](#), the syllabus is:

"Where several articles of property are stolen at the same time, the transaction being the same, the whole, although they belong to different owners, may be embraced in one count of the indictment and the taking thereof charged as one offense."

The indictment was for larceny. The second count charged the stealing of certain articles belonging to one person, and also the stealing of certain other articles belonging to another person, the values being separately stated. The court held as above.

In the case of State v. Conner, 30 Ohio St. 405, the first syllabus is as follows:

HN7 [↑] "Under the act 'to provide against the evils resulting from the sale of intoxicating liquors in the state of Ohio' [52 O. L. 153] (2 S. & C. 1431) [**13] [4 Curwen 2669; see Rev. Stat. 6940 (Lan. 10589) et seq.], [*521] a count in an indictment charging that the defendant unlawfully, etc., sold intoxicating liquors to one 'being then and there intoxicated and in the habit of getting intoxicated,' defendant knowing, etc., is not bad for duplicity."

This was an indictment in which it was claimed that in the third count two distinct offenses were charged, viz. That of selling to a person intoxicated and that of selling to a person in the habit of getting intoxicated, and that it was bad for duplicity. The court said, page 406:

"The offense is but a single one. There is but one sale of liquor, and but one person to whom it was sold. The fact that such person represents two characters, under the statute, does not make the offense double. * * * It is universally laid down, that where the offense is thus marked by the disjunctive 'or,'" [in the statute defining it], "the indictment may well charge by substituting 'and.'

"Bishop, Statutory Crimes Sec. 383, speaking of the alternative crimes, says: 'If an indictment is to be drawn on a statute in alternative clauses, the pleader, as a general rule, * * * may elect to charge no [**14] more than constitutes an offense within one clause, or he may proceed upon two clauses, or three, or all, as he deems best, and all in a single count, employing the conjunctive 'and,' when the statute has the disjunctive 'or.'"

In the case of Jackson v. State, 39 Ohio St. 37, the first syllabus is as follows:

HN8 [↑] "A count in an indictment in which the defendant is charged with robbery and with murder while in the commission of the robbery, and in which it is alleged that the blows which caused death were struck by the defendant with a piece of iron, a sledge and a shovel, is not bad for duplicity; the state cannot be required to elect upon a trial on such count, and evidence of the robbery and the use of each of the implements in producing death is admissible."

In the case of Watson v. State, 39 Ohio St. 123, the second clause of the syllabus is as follows:

"A single count in such indictment, which charged that B was a member of the house, and also a member of a standing committee of such house to which the bill was referred, and that the offer or promise was made to influence his vote therefor in the house, and his vote for a favorable report [**15] thereon in the committee, is not bad for duplicity. The charge thus made constitutes but one offense under the statute."

In the case of [Hale v. State, 58 Ohio St. 676 \[51 N.E. 154\]](#), the first two clauses of the syllabus are as follows:

17 Ohio Dec. 515, *521 [907 Ohio Misc. LEXIS 142, **15

"1. When an offense against a criminal statute may, in the same transaction, be committed in one or more of several ways, as therein provided, the indictment may, in a single count, charge its commission in any or all of the ways specified, if they are not repugnant.

[*522] "2. An indictment drawn under the act 'to regulate the practice of medicine in the state of Ohio' (92 O. L. 44), which charges that the defendant, without having complied with the provisions of the act, for a fee prescribed, directed, and recommended for the use of a person named, a drug medicine, and agency, put up in a paper box on which he wrote directions to which he signed his name and appended thereto the letters 'M. D.,' is not bad for duplicity."

It was contended in this case (page 679) that as the indictment, in the same count, charged that the accused prescribed a medicine for the use of a person named, and appended the letters "M. D." to [**16] his name subscribed to directions written on the package for the use of the medicine, two distinct offenses were charged and the indictment therefore bad for duplicity. The court said, page 679:

"It appears to be a well-settled rule of criminal pleading that, HN9 [↑] when an offense against a criminal statute may, in the same transaction, be committed in one or more of several ways, as therein provided, the indictment may, in a single count, charge its commission in any or all of the ways specified in the statute, if they are not repugnant; and proof of any one of them will sustain the indictment. This rule is more fully stated in Bishop, New Criminal Procedure Sec. 436, as follows:

HN10 [↑] "A statute often makes punishable the doing of one thing, or another, sometimes specifying a considerable number of things. Then by proper and ordinary construction a person who, in one transaction does all, violates the statute but once, and incurs only one penalty. Yet he violates it equally by doing one of the things. Therefore, an indictment on such a statute may allege, in a single count, that the defendant did as many of the forbidden things as the pleader chooses, employing the conjunction "and" where [**17] the statute has "or," and it will not be double, and it will be established at the trial by proof of any one of them."

The court further said, page 680:

"Nor is this indictment open to the objection of duplicity because it charges that the defendant prescribed, directed and recommended the remedy, and describes the latter as a drug, medicine and agency for the treatment, cure and relief of a wound, fracture and bodily injury, although the statute is in the alternative, and makes it an offense to do either of the things mentioned; for they are not repugnant, and all of them may occur in the same transaction, constituting but one offense. Upon this principle it was held that where a statute made it a crime to use instruments, or administer drugs, to produce an abortion, an indictment drawn on it, was not double which charged that both of those means were employed by the defendant in the commission of the offense. Commonwealth v. Brown, 80 Mass. 419. And under a statute which prohibited the unlicensed sale of rum, brandy, whiskey [*523] or gin it was held proper to charge, in a single count, the sale of all these various kinds of liquors. Rawson v. State, 19 Conn. 292. Numerous cases are found in the books in which indictments so drawn on alternative statutes, have been sustained. Bishop, Statutory Crimes Sec. 244, 383; Bishop, New Criminal Procedure Sec. 586."

In the case of [Smith v. State, 59 Ohio St. 350 \[52 N.E. 826\]](#), the first syllabus is as follows:

"An indictment which charges that the accused on a specified day received and concealed different chattels which had been stolen from different owners, is not bad for duplicity."

The first sentence of the fourth syllabus draws a distinction between offenses growing out of the same transaction at the same time, referred to in the first clause of the syllabus, and different offenses at different times growing out of different transactions. It reads as follows:

"Receiving or concealing different articles of property at different times and on separate occasions, constitutes distinct offenses and cannot be prosecuted as one crime, though all the property be thereafter found in the possession of the defendant at one time and place."

17 Ohio Dec. 515, *523L<sup>A</sup>907 Ohio Misc. LEXIS 142, **18

In the case of the [State v. Inskeep, 49 Ohio St. 228 \[34 N.E. 720\]](#), the defendant was [**19] indicted for making an assault and also for striking and wounding. The trial court sustained a motion to quash on the ground that it contained but one count and two separate and distinct offenses. This was reversed by the Supreme Court, which held that,

"The indictment is not bad for duplicity and is in proper form."

In the case of [Gordon v. State, 46 Ohio St. 607 \[23 N.E. 63\]](#); 6 L. R. A. 749], the court, on page 626, said:

"No matters, however multifarious, will operate to make a declaration or information double, provided, that all taken together, constitute but one connected charge, or one transaction.' A man may, accordingly, be indicted for the battery of two or more persons in the same count; or for a libel upon two or more persons, when the publication is one single act; or for selling liquor to two or more persons without rendering the count bad for duplicity."

The indictment in this case charged that defendant unlawfully sold intoxicating liquors, other than cider, * * * to be used as a beverage, to divers persons whose names to the jurors were unknown * * *, following almost exactly the language of the statute defining the offense. [**20] Defendant claimed that it was bad for duplicity in charging several different offenses in a single count. The court ruled otherwise as above.

See also State v. Sparks, 1 Ohio Dec. 275 \(31 Week. L. Bull. 84\).

The language of the Supreme Court in State v. Gage, supra, page 230, cited by defendant, must be taken in connection with the subject it was then passing upon. The claim had been made that the entire act [*524] was indivisible and was to be construed as a whole; that certain sections of it, viz., Secs. 4, 5, 6 and 7, were unconstitutional and if that were true the entire act was tainted and of no validity. It was in connection with these sections and this claim of unconstitutionality that the court said:

"The case, therefore, offers no opportunity for the application of the principle * * * that where an act contains an indivisible proposition whose terms include contracts which the legislature is powerless to prohibit the courts cannot save the act by restricting the natural and obvious meaning of its terms."

That the court in this case would go beyond the two grounds urged by the plaintiff in error and search the indictment for any other defect [**21] is sustained by the case of Reed v. State, 15 Ohio 217, 222, where Judge Wood says:

"For, while in civil cases we are not astute in searching for errors not expressly raised on the record, but consider our duty as discharged when we dispose of the case made by those who represent the parties in interest, in criminal prosecutions a different rule prevails. The court, then, in the administration of criminal justice, are, at least, quasi counsel for the accused; and, in revising the proceedings of an inferior tribunal, will overlook no substantial defect in the record, though not expressly assigned, any more than permit on trial an improper conviction to be obtained by false issues presented through the forms of pleading, and by the unskillfulness of counsel."

I have gone thus fully into the question of duplicity, not because it seems to be directly involved in the case under consideration but because of the stress laid upon it by counsel for defendant in support of the motion. The indictment and the statute being read in the light of the foregoing decisions would seem beyond a doubt to set up but one offense charged in the indictment, viz.: That defendants [**22] "were active members of, acted with and in pursuance of, and aided and assisted in carrying out the purposes of an association, etc."

The court therefore finds the claim of defendant that the indictment is bad for duplicity is not well taken.

2. The second reason urged by defendant as a ground to quash is that "The indictment contains no allegation as to where the alleged association existed."

In considering this alleged defect in the indictment it seems sufficient to call attention to the fact that the locus of the association or combination is not prescribed, fixed by or in any manner referred to in the statute itself, and so far as anything appears in the law, it is entirely immaterial where the trust or combination itself exists, whether in Ohio or outside of Ohio.

HN11[] Section 5 of the act (93 O. L. 144), provides that it shall be unnecessary in any indictment brought under this act to give the name [*525] or description of the trust or combination or to state how, when or where, it was created. It does not, in so many words, say that it shall be unnecessary to set out where such trust or combination is located and doing business at the time charged in the indictment, [**23] but as this is a collateral fact and not the gist of the offense charged, is it not reasonable to presume that the word "description" as used in the act is sufficiently explicit and broad enough to cover as a part of the description the place where the trust or combination exists? In support of this inference we again call attention to the Gage case, in which the indictment was similar to the one under consideration in that it contained no averment as to the place where the trust or combination of which the defendant was a member existed or did business, and again we may well assume that in searching the record for errors in that case the Supreme Court would have detected this omission if it were error as claimed.

It must be remembered that this indictment is not against the trust or combination as an entity; if it were, the venue of such indictment would probably be the county where said trust or combination carried on its business or committed some overt act in violation of the law and this venue would have to appear in the indictment. But the offense charged in the indictment before us is against the individual members of the combination and not against the combination itself and [**24] the individual members are not charged with overt acts unless, indeed, the language that they "aided and assisted in carrying out the purposes" of said combination constituted an overt act.

But even with such an assumption this language might be construed as redundant and there would still be enough left in the indictment properly to charge an offense against the law.

The act does not require the charging of any overt act. The mere passive condition of being members of the trust or combination is all that is required and the venue of this indictment is the place where these defendants individually, and not as a trust or combination taken as a whole, were existing or residing at the time they were active members of said combination; or acted with said combination or aided or assisted in carrying out its purposes, and this venue is plainly charged in the indictment to be Hamilton county, Ohio.

If it should appear on the trial of this cause that any one or more of the defendants were not residing or existing in Hamilton county, Ohio, at the time of the alleged offense such fact might be pleaded as a defense for such nonresidence; but that is a matter that cannot be set up in a motion [**25] to quash, which goes only to defects apparent upon the record and no such defect as to the venue of any of the defendants appears in the indictment but, on the contrary, is expressly averred.

In the case of State v. Dangler, 74 Ohio St. 49, 77 N.E. 271, where the offense charged was the failure of a child to support his parent and where the [*526] evidence showed that the former resided in one county and the latter in a different county and also showed that the defendant had not been present in the county of the parent during the time laid in the indictment, the court found that the venue of the indictment was that of the child and not that of the parent. Here was no overt act but only a passive offense of failing to perform the duty of giving support. The court said, page 51:

"Generally speaking, it is a fundamental rule of criminal procedure that HN12[] one who commits a crime is answerable therefor only in the jurisdiction where the crime is committed, and in all criminal prosecutions, in the absence of statutory provision to the contrary, venue must be laid as in the county of the offense. * * * An offense is committed in that county in which the acts constituting [**26] the same are done. * * * This statute defines and prescribes but a single offense; that of nonsupport of a parent; and it is the act of the child in failing to support * * * that constitutes the offense."

We agree with counsel for defendants that the legislature of Ohio "has no extraterritorial jurisdiction" and that the offense must be laid in the indictment as having been committed in Ohio and, generally, in the county where the offense was committed. But this statement of the law of venue has no application in this case for the reasons already given. We do not agree with them in the inference that the act under consideration "could relate only to combinations organized and existing within the state of Ohio." Section 5 of the act expressly dispenses with the necessity of stating how, when or where such trust or combination is created.

Granting that the title of the act casts light upon the intention of the legislature in framing the law, we still cannot agree with the defendants that the title in this case limits the provisions of the act to membership in Ohio trusts or combinations. The title is in the following words:

"An act to define trusts and to provide for criminal penalties [**27] and civil damages, and punishment of corporations, persons, firms and associations, or persons connected with them, and to promote free competition in commerce and all classes of business in the state."

While we recognize, under the opinion of the Supreme Court, in the case of Burgett v. Burgett, 1 Ohio 469 [13 Am. Dec. 634], and State v. Pugh, 43 Ohio St. 98, 113 [1 N.E. 439], the rule that the title may be read, as explanatory of any doubtful matter in the act itself, it does not seem to us that there is anything doubtful in the meaning of the act which requires explanation or that there is any inconsistency between the language of the title and the purposes of the act.

Sutherland, Stat. Constr. Sec. 339, says:

"But the title cannot enlarge or confer powers, control the plain words of the act, or extend the purview to objects mentioned in the [*527] title but not in the act. Where the text of the statute is plain and unambiguous, the title cannot have the effect to modify it."

The last clause of this title states one of the purposes of the act to be, "to promote free competition in commerce and all classes of business in the [**28] state," and this is the only clause in the title which limits the scope of any of the purposes of the act to the state of Ohio. It does not set forth that this act is to define trusts created or existing in Ohio; it does not limit its penalties and punishments to Ohio corporations or associations, for Sec. 3 of the act contains a special provision against foreign corporations and associations violating its provisions.

If there were any doubt whatever upon the applicability of the act to foreign corporations, trusts or combinations, Sec. 12, defining the meaning of the word "persons," wherever it appears in the act, says that it shall include "corporations, partnerships and associations existing under or authorized by the state of Ohio, or any other state, or any foreign country." Substituting these last words in place of the word "person" or "persons" where they occur in the act, makes it evident that the contention of defendant upon the point raised in its second objection to the indictment is not well taken.

3. The third claim advanced by defendant is, that

"The indictment contains no allegation in the first three clauses of purposes named, of any intention to restrict trade, [**29] increase the price of, or prevent competition in ice in the state of Ohio."

If we are correct in our interpretation of the legislative intent, there is in the act no limitation upon the first three purposes set forth in Sec. 1 (93 O. L. 143), to Ohio trusts and combinations. Such combinations as have the purpose to do the things set forth in these three sections are declared to be trusts under our law, no matter whether the purposes are to be carried out in Ohio or outside of this state. The allegation or averment in the indictment that the illegal combination is formed to do these things in Ohio is dispensed with by the statute itself in Secs. 4, 5 and 12.

The fourth clause of the first section "fixing at a standard or figure, etc.,," closes with the clause "in this state." This clause would undoubtedly require that the averment in the indictment which recites this fourth clause as one of the purposes of the trust or combination should set out that the purposes contained in said clause were to be carried out in the state of Ohio and that averment is found in the indictment in this case. This last statement is made applicable to a case where the purpose is that contained in the fourth [**30] clause alone.

But the indictment in this case goes further than that and places the venue of these purposes in Hamilton county, Ohio, the semicolon at the end of each of the first three sections being only an abbreviated form of the word "and" and all of the causes being connected up into one continuous sentence by that means.

[*528] It may well be construed that it was the intention of the legislature to have this clause "in this state" apply to the first three purposes as well as the fourth, it being omitted only in order to avoid tautology.

Incidentally we might say that even if this objection made by defendant to the first three clauses in the indictment as not alleging venue were tenable, which we do not think to be the case for the reasons given above, yet they might be rejected as surplusage and, the fourth clause being free from this infirmity, if it is one, would save the indictment from being quashed.

Recurring again to the Gage case, we call attention to the fact that the indictment in that case and this are identical in omitting the clauses fixing venue which defendants claim should have been contained in the present indictment and again assuming that the Supreme [**31] Court in the Gage case found no objection, we must conclude that the claim of defendants upon this point is not well taken.

4. The next contention of defendants is, that

"The indictment fails to show or set forth the manner in which the price of ice was fixed or controlled."

It might be sufficient to say that the price of ice was not fixed nor controlled by the defendants in this case, whatever may have been done by the trust or combination to which they are alleged to belong. In the view which we have already expressed as to the proper construction of this act, there are but three elements necessary to constitute the offense charged in the indictment, viz.:

First. Was there an ice trust, as defined by the act?

Second. Were defendants members of that trust?

Third. Were defendants, at the time of the alleged offense, residents of or existing in Hamilton county, Ohio?

Whether the trust did or did not carry out any, a part or all of the purposes referred to, or the manner in which it carried any or all of them out by overt acts is entirely immaterial. The fact that the indictment does not aver the particular manner in which the trust controlled the price of ice or the means by [**32] which it proposed to do so does not, in view of the language of Sec. 5 (93 O. L. 144), viz.: "In any indictment for any offense named in this act, it is sufficient to state the purpose or effects of the trust or combination," make it defective.

If we construe the law correctly, it is not necessary for the trust to do any overt act beyond the organization of the conspiracy or combination, nor for the individual members of the trust to do anything more than to be a member of it. Of course, overt acts may be done by both; but for the purposes of this case no overt act needed to be alleged to make out the offense.

Again we refer to State v. Gage, supra, in support of our belief that this objection to the indictment is not well founded.

5. The next claim of defendants is that

[*529] "The indictment contains no allegation of knowledge of the purposes of the association on the part of the defendants or that any of the defendants performed any act in violation of said section."

This objection raises the question of knowledge and overt acts. As to overt acts, we may repeat what we have previously called attention to--that the gist of the offense charged in this indictment [**33] is the conspiracy. It is well settled that HN13 in cases of conspiracy, while overt acts may be averred and proven they are not required to be, as a rule. Especially is that true where the conspiracy is made an offense as in this case by a statute which sets forth all the essential elements of the offense.

In the case of Needles v. Bishop, 14 Ohio Dec. 445, which was a suit under the Valentine act, the second and third clauses of the syllabus are as follows:

"A common-law unlawful combination tending to create a monopoly and restrain trade, contrary to public policy, is pleaded in a petition which avers that defendants are the only persons in the particular city engaged as jobbers furnishing plumbers' supplies; that defendants have combined and conspired together by uniting their capital, labor and skill for the purposes of limiting the production of such supplies, and increasing the purchase price thereof to persons not members of the association; that defendants have agreed neither to sell below a certain schedule of prices, sell to any person not a member of the association, nor sell supplies to be used in any building or structure not being plumbed or furnished [**34] with plumbing supplies by some member of the association; that they have agreed not to compete with each other in furnishing supplies, or in plumbing buildings; that they will not sell supplies to any person unless some member of the association is employed to furnish the labor to install the plumbing supplies in the building for which they are furnished; and that such combination is formed to enhance the price of supplies without regard to their cost. Plaintiff is entitled, under such petition, to recover whatever damages he has sustained as a direct result of such unlawful combination."

"Evil intent or actual injury to the public need not be shown to render trade combinations void as against public policy. The test of illegality is their tendency to endanger the public, whether or not their necessary consequence is to control prices, limit production and suppress competition in a manner to restrain trade, and create a monopoly."

In 2 McClain, Crim. Law Sec. 966, we find the following:

HN14 [+] "The crime" [conspiracy] "consists in the unlawful combination and not in what is done toward carrying out such combination, and the crime is completed when the conspiracy is entered into although [**35] no act done in pursuance thereof is committed"--citing in footnote a large number of cases.

[*530] Also from the same section we cite the following:

HN15 [+] "A conspiracy to do an unlawful act is a separate and distinct offense from that of the act itself, and is to be governed in its prosecution by the provisions relating to conspiracies and not those relating to the specific offense. * * * Indeed, it is not necessary that the overt act be the completed purpose intended to be accomplished by the combination, and it may be done outside the jurisdiction of the court in which the conspiracy is prosecuted."

Section 972, same work, might have been cited in connection with the previous discussion upon the subject of venue, but is here inserted as reflecting upon the general rule governing conspiracies.

"Section 972. The venue of the offense is either where the conspiracy is formed or where the overt act thereunder is done. * * * It seems also that the offense is punishable where the conspiracy is entered into, although it contemplates the doing of a wrongful act elsewhere." Citing Wolf, In re, 27 F. 606, and Bloomer v. State, 48 Md. 521.

Section 977, [**36] of the same work says:

"From what has already been said in regard to an overt act, it is plain that it is not necessary to charge anything that is done in pursuance of the conspiracy except where, by statute an overt act is required. If the indictment alleges substantially the facts necessary to show a conspiracy, no act done or injury suffered in consequence thereof need be charged."

There is but one place in the entire act under consideration where the scienter or knowledge of the unlawful act is required and that is in Sec. 4. This section groups offenders against the act into two classes. The first commit the offense by doing certain acts whether knowingly or not, and the second class must have the guilty knowledge before they can be considered as violating the law. Let us separate these groups so as to discover whether the defendants, if guilty as charged, are described in either group and if so in which one.

The language which describes the first group is as follows:

"Any person who may become engaged in any such conspiracy or take part therein, or aid or advise in its commission."

This refers to the constituents or members who form the component parts of the combination [**37] and furnish the capital, skill or acts referred to in the first section. The very fact of their engaging in the conspiracy creates a presumption of knowledge of the purposes for which it was formed and dispenses with the averment or proof of knowledge. We doubt, however, whether actual ignorance of such purposes could be proven as a defense upon the trial of the charge.

The second group is described as follows:

"Any person * * * who shall, as principal, manager, director, [*531] agent, servant or employer, or in any other capacity, knowingly carry out any of the stipulations, purposes, prices, rates, or furnish any information to assist in carrying out such purposes, or orders thereunder or in pursuance thereof."

In this group the knowledge of the wrongful act is material, is set out in the statute and must be averred in the indictment. The persons described in this second group are the active factors or servants, speaking broadly, of the combination, who put into operation the machinery of the trust to carry out its purposes, as distinguished from the more passive persons described in the first group who, while members of the trust, have no active connection with the management [**38] of its business.

Counsel for the defendants argue that the word "knowingly" in this section relates back and attaches to the first group as well as the second. If that were the intent, its natural position in the statute would be in the third line instead of the sixth and the section would read, "Any person who knowingly may become engaged, etc."

This would be the grammatical and rhetorical location of the word "knowingly" if the intent of the legislature had been as suggested by defendants, and the fact that it is thus detached would seem to be conclusive that it was to refer to the second group only.

The indictment in the present case, by its averment, puts the defendants in the first group where knowledge is not made a material or essential part of the offense and, as it would not require proof, so it need not be averred in the indictment.

The right of the legislature to pass laws making acts criminal, regardless of the knowledge or intent of the persons who may be accused of committing them, is well recognized. While there has been an extended discussion as to whether, when the act itself which describes the offense does not make knowledge a requisite part thereof, it must, [**39] nevertheless, be averred in the indictment and be proven on the trial, it is quite certain that in certain classes of offenses the act may dispense with knowledge as one of its essential elements. This is particularly the case with acts under the police power; acts for the preservation of health; to prevent food adulteration and defining offenses against public policy.

The cases cited by counsel for defendants, in which knowledge was required to be averred in the indictment, all involved as a necessary ingredient of the crime, from its very nature, a knowledge of the unlawful character of the act done and an intent, nevertheless, to carry it out. Thus the case of Drake v. State, 19 Ohio St. 211, was a forgery case; the cases of Fouts v. State, 8 Ohio St. 98; Jones v. State, 51 Ohio St. 331 [38 N.E. 79]; Kain v. State, 8 Ohio St. 306; Hagan v. State, 10 Ohio St. 459, were all murder cases; the case of Mann v. State, 47 Ohio St. 556 [26 N.E. 226]; 11 L. R. A. 656], decided that [*532] "punishable by law" was not sufficient in describing the [**40] offense of administering poison to two colts, etc. The law, Rev. Stat. 6851 (Lan. 10459), made malice, (which implies knowledge and intent) as an essential to the crime described in said act. All the cases cited involved offenses in which malice or wicked intent and knowledge were necessarily essential elements.

But, as above stated, there are other classes of offenses which relate to the health, public policy, and similar subjects which have been created by the legislature in which the element of knowledge has been dispensed with and for the commission of which the accused will be held responsible, although he may, at the time of the offense, have been entirely ignorant that he was violating the law.

A collection of these cases, under the food adulteration and similar statutes, is found elaborately discussed in the case of State v. Fromer, 6 Ohio Dec. 374 (7 Ohio N.P. 172); also in the case of Altschul v. State, 4 Ohio Cir. Dec. 402, 405 (8 Ohio C.C. 214), in the course of which reference is made to the following citation from Bishop, Statutory Crimes Sec. 1022:

HN16 [+] "Where the statute is silent as to the defendant's intent and knowledge, the [**41] indictment need not allege, or the government's evidence show, that he knew the fact; his being misled concerning it is matter for him to set up in the defense and prove."

In the case of State v. Kelly, 54 Ohio St. 166 [43 N.E. 163], which involved the sale of an adulterated food product, the statute did not make knowledge of the adulteration an element in this crime. The second syllabus of the decision is as follows:

"2. In a prosecution under said act it is not a defense that the accused is ignorant of the adulteration of the article which he sells or offers for sale."

The court, on page 179, of this case, said:

"If this statute had imposed upon the state the burden of proving the purpose of the vendor in selling an article of food or his knowledge of its adulteration, it would thereby have defeated its declared purpose. Since it is the duty of courts to so construe doubtful statutes as to give effect to the purpose of the legislature, they cannot in case of a statute whose provisions are unambiguous and whose validity is clear, defeat its purpose by construction.

"The correct view of statutes of this general nature is stated by the supreme court of Massachusetts [**42] in Commonwealth v. Murphy, 165 Mass. 66 [42 N.E. 504]; 30 L. R. A. 734; 52 Am. St. Rep. 496]. 'Considering the nature of the offense, the purpose to be accomplished, the practical methods available for the enforcement of the law, and such other matters as throw light upon the meaning of the language, the question in interpreting a criminal statute is whether the intention of the legislature was to make knowledge of the facts an essential element of the offense, or to put upon everyone the burden of finding out [*533] whether his contemplated act is prohibited, and of refraining from it if it is.'"

See also the case of Mitchell v. State, 11 Ohio Cir. Dec. 446 (21 Ohio C.C. 24), where a very full discussion of the subject is given.

One of the latest decided cases on this point is that of Studer v. State, 19 Ohio Cir. Dec. 33, where the offense charged was procuration. The court decided that in the indictment charging the offense, where the girl solicited was less than eighteen years of age it was not necessary to aver that the defendant had knowledge of her age. This case was afterwards affirmed [**43] without report by the Supreme Court.

See also the second syllabus in the case of Bissman v. State, 6 Ohio Cir. Dec. 712 (9 Ohio C.C. 714), a food adulteration case.

The case of the State v. Ross, 16 Ohio Dec. 704, was a prosecution under the Valentine act for conspiracy involving restrictions on furnishing fire insurance. In this case the same claim was made on demurrer that because the intent was not averred in the first two counts of the indictment and that such intent was necessary to make out the offense, the indictment was bad. This contention was abandoned, however, before the court passed upon the case.

The case of State v. Bridge Co. 18 Ohio Cir. Dec. 147, was a quo warranto proceeding to oust the defendants for violation of this same Valentine act. The first two paragraphs of the syllabus relate to the venue and decide that suit may be brought in any county where any one or more of the defendant corporations forming the trust is situated or has a place of business, or may be brought in any county where the trust itself does business as a separate entity.

Once more, and finally, we call attention to the fact [**44] that upon this question of knowledge and overt act State v. Gage, supra, is on all fours with the present as to the form of the indictment and must be conclusive upon this point for the reasons heretofore stated.

While we recognize the well-established principle that HN17[] an indictment should aver with certainty the nature of the offense charged so that defendant may have opportunity to prepare his defense and to be entitled to the claim of former jeopardy in case of conviction, we also desire to call attention to the fact that the certainty which is required in the indictment is only certainty to a common intent. Carper v. State, 27 Ohio St. 572; Roberts v. State, 32 Ohio St. 171, 172.

We are of the opinion that the indictment in this case sets forth with sufficient certainty the offense charged as to protect the defendants.

In conclusion, having carefully and as thoroughly as is possible in the limited time at our disposal examined the various grounds urged by defendants for quashing the indictment and the authorities cited in support of their contention and finding the same not well taken, especially in view of the rule that a motion [**45] to quash should not be [*534] granted except upon the most convincing proof that it has good reasons to support it, the court overrules the motion to quash the indictment.

Unless counsel wish to advance cause for demurrer in addition to those which have been considered in connection with the motion to quash, counsel may, as a matter of form, if they so desire, file their demurrer upon the same grounds and the court will, without further argument, overrule said demurrer.

After the giving of this decision all of the defendants except three pleaded guilty and were fined $ 100 each: two of the cases were nollied and the remaining one remains undisposed of.

---

End of Document

Rubber Tire Wheel Co. v. Milwaukee Rubber Works Co.

Circuit Court of Appeals, Seventh Circuit

April 16, 1907

No. 1,336

Reporter

154 F. 358 *; 1907 U.S. App. LEXIS 4536 **

RUBBER TIRE WHEEL CO. v. MILWAUKEE RUBBER WORKS CO.

Prior History: [**1] In Error to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Wisconsin.

Core Terms

---

patent, monopoly, parties, tires, contracts, prices, patentee, manufacturers, commerce, royalties, conclusions of law, infringement, articles, percent, invention, license

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Assignments

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > General Overview

Patent Law > Jurisdiction & Review > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Governments > Police Powers

HN1[ Conveyances, Assignments

A state cannot subtract from the right conferred upon a patentee and his assigns by the federal laws. For the protection of the physical or moral health of its citizens a state may restrain the use of the corporeal thing or article brought into existence by the application of the patented discovery.

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > General Overview

Patent Law > Ownership > General Overview

Patent Law > Ownership > Patents as Property

HN2[ Infringement Actions, Exclusive Rights

Under its constitutional right to legislate for the promotion of the useful arts, Congress passed the patent statutes. The public policy thereby declared is this: Inventive minds may fail to produce many useful things that they would produce if stimulated by the promise of a substantial reward; what is produced is the property of the inventor; he and his heirs and assigns may hold it as a secret till the end of time; the public would be largely benefited by obtaining conveyances of these new properties; so the people through their representatives say to the inventor: deed us your property, possession to be yielded at the end of 17 years, and in the meantime we will protect you absolutely in the right to exclude every one from making, using, or vending the thing patented, without your permission.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Arson > Simple Arson > General Overview

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > General Overview

Patent Law > Ownership > Conveyances > General Overview

HN3 Arson, Simple Arson

The monopoly is of the invention, the mental concept as distinguished from the materials that are brought together to give it a body. Use of the materials, as noted above, may be enjoined as injurious to the public; but that does not invade the monopoly. Use of the invention cannot be had except on the inventor's terms. Without paying or doing whatever he exacts, no one can be exempted from his right to exclude. Whatever the terms, courts will enforce them, provided only that the licensee is not thereby required to violate some law outside of the patent law, like the doing of murder or arson.

Constitutional Law > ... > Commerce Clause > Interstate Commerce > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Penalties

HN4 Commerce Clause, Interstate Commerce

Congress made illegal every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states, and subjected to liability to fine or imprisonment every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine, or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several states. Congress, having created the patent law, has the right to repeal or modify it, in whole or in part, directly or by necessary implication. The Sherman Antitrust Act, ch. 647, 26 Stat. 209 (1901), contains no reference to the patent law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > General Overview

Patent Law > Ownership > Conveyances > General Overview

**HN5** Intellectual Property, Ownership & Transfer of Rights

Each statute, the Sherman Antitrust Act, ch. 647, 26 Stat. 209 (1901) and the patent laws was passed under a separate and distinct constitutional grant of power; each was passed professedly to advantage the public; the necessary implication is not that one iota was taken away from the patent law; the necessary implication is that patented articles, unless or until they are released by the owner of the patent from the dominion of his monopoly, are not articles of trade or commerce among the several states.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

**HN6** Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The true test of violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act, ch. 647, 26 Stat. 209 (1901), is whether the people are injured, whether they are deprived of something to which they have a right.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Assignments

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > General Overview

Patent Law > Ownership > Conveyances > General Overview

**HN7** Ownership & Transfer of Rights, Assignments

The only grant to the patentee is the right to exclude others, to have and to hold for himself and his assigns a monopoly, not a right limited or conditioned according to the sentiment of judges, but an absolute monopoly constitutionally conferred by the sovereign lawmakers.

Counsel: A. L. Humes and Edwin E. Jackson, Jr., for plaintiff in error.

Charles Quarles, for defendant in error.

Opinion by: BAKER

Opinion

---

[*359] Before GROSSCUP, BAKER, and KOHLSAAT, Circuit Judges.

BAKER, Circuit Judge. Plaintiff in error began this action to recover royalties on account of defendant's use, under a license system set forth in the complaint, of patent No. 554,675, issued February 18, 1896, to Grant, plaintiff's assignor, for an improvement in rubber-tired wheels. The license system was embodied in three papers, Exhibits A, B, and C. That they "were all executed at one and the same time and were intended to constitute and did constitute one agreement" is not open to question, for such is the explicit admission in defendant's answer. The covenants of defendant must therefore be taken as having been made in consideration of plaintiff's grant. The license system, briefly, was this: Plaintiff authorized 18 companies, of which defendant was one, to make, use, and sell tires under the patent for 1 year; each company's share of the trade was fixed at a certain proportion of the whole, [**2] defendant's at 2 per cent.; two qualities of tires were to be made; the minimum selling price of the first quality was established at 65 cents a pound, of the second quality at 55 cents a pound; each company agreed to pay plaintiff monthly 4 per cent. of its sales, and, if in any month its sales proved to be larger than its proportional share of the total sales for that month, to pay plaintiff an additional royalty of 20 per cent. of the amount over its quota; plaintiff agreed to employ a commission of five persons to supervise the transactions of all the parties, and to turn over to the commission all royalties in excess of 2 per cent.; from the moneys so put into their hands the commission, after deducting their expenses and compensation for services in supervising and auditing, were to pay monthly to any company that had sold less than its quota of the preceding month's total business a sum equal to 20 per cent. of such deficiency; the commission then were to accumulate $50,000, and to distribute any sums in excess monthly among the companies according to their quotas of the trade, and at the expiration of the arrangement to distribute all funds then on hand; and it was agreed in [**3] paragraph 10 "that the commission shall have power upon the written consent of a [*360] majority of the parties in interest hereto, to purchase tires from any or all of the parties hereto at the prices hereinbefore provided and to dispose of such tires to the trade at such prices as said commission shall deem to the interest of all the parties hereto, and in making such purchases the commission is hereby authorized to use any money in its possession." The complaint proceeded to charge that defendant under this arrangement had made and sold certain amounts of the patented tires on which it had failed and refused to pay the stipulated royalties.

The defenses were that the arrangement was in violation of the Sherman anti-trust act of July 2, 1890 (26 Stat. 209, c. 647, § 1 [U.S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3200]), and of section 1791j of the Wisconsin Statutes of 1898, which prohibits Wisconsin corporations (defendant was one) from entering into any arrangement or contract intended to restrain competition in the supply or price of any commodity constituting a subject of commerce within the state. As reasons why defendant's promise to pay was unenforceable in the face of those statutes, [**4] the answer averred that the letters patent "were and were believed by all the parties to said agreement to be invalid and void, and had been so adjudged by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit, and that the Supreme Court of the United States had refused to review such decision; that said patent was resorted to in said contracts merely as a pretext to enable said contracting parties to evade the laws; and that said contracts were not and were not intended to be license contracts under letters patent, but were intended to establish and bring about the illegal trade combination herein mentioned; that the aforesaid purpose was carried out by the said agreement, and by reason thereof the price of the articles of commerce mentioned in plaintiff's complaint was raised beyond the former price thereof and beyond the natural and legitimate price thereof; and that the amount of said articles manufactured by the said parties was, by reason of said combination and monopoly, restricted."

A jury having been duly waived, the court heard the evidence, entered findings of fact and conclusions of law, and thereupon rendered judgment for defendant.

The court found that [**5] plaintiff was the owner of the patent; that the patent was valid; that prior to the execution of the contracts in suit the patent had been sustained by the Circuit Court for the Southern District of New York, 91 Fed. 978, by the Circuit Court for the Southern District of Ohio (unreported), by the Circuit Court for the Northern District of Georgia, 116 Fed. 629, and by the Court of Appeals for the Republic of France, and had been declared invalid by the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit, 116 Fed. 363, 53 C.C.A. 583, and the Supreme Court had declined to take the case on certiorari, 187 U.S. 641; that after the last-named decision was rendered, and down to the execution of the contracts in suit, the manufacturers of tires disregarded the patent, paid no royalties, and cut the prices of the respective qualities to 50 and 40 cents a pound; that all of the parties to the contracts in suit entered into the arrangement in good faith, believing that the patent was valid and that the adverse decision was erroneous; that all of the manufacturers that had been infringing, [*361] except two small concerns, came into the pool; that the provision in paragraph 10 was never in any [**6] manner acted upon or executed; that defendant made and sold tires under the contracts, and failed to pay plaintiff certain specified sums which were due if the promise to pay was enforceable; that after the expiration of the arrangement prices went back to former rates.

As conclusions of law the court stated (1) that the patent was and is valid; (2) that the decision of the Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit is controlling only between the parties to that case and their privies; (3) that as a practical result, however, the effect of that decision is to denude the patent of the attributes of a monopoly in that circuit; (4) that the provisions of the contracts respecting the payment of royalties are separate from the provisions of paragraph 10, and are not thereby rendered illegal or void; (5) that the contracts authorized the creation of a fund for crushing competition in interstate commerce throughout the whole country, not only in Grant tires but in all other rubber tires; (6) that the contracts make an illegal combination under the laws of the United States, and are illegal and void.

The assignments of error go to the third, fifth, and sixth conclusions of law.

The Wisconsin [**7] statute is eliminated not only because it is not involved in any assignment of error, but also because HN1[↑] a state cannot subtract from the right conferred upon a patentee and his assigns by the federal laws. Columbia Wire Co. v. Freeman Wire Co. (C.C.) 71 Fed. 302; U.S. Consolidated Seeded Raisin Co. v. Griffin & Skelly Co., 126 Fed. 364, 61 C.C.A. 334. For the protection of the physical or moral health of its citizens a state may restrain the use of "the corporeal thing or article brought into existence by the application of the patented discovery" ( Patterson v. Kentucky, 97 U.S. 501, 24 L. Ed. 1115), but such a laying on of hands does not touch the monopoly of the federal grant. Nothing in this record questions the innocence of rubber tires.

Apart from any support that may be afforded by the third and fifth conclusions, is the sixth conclusion sound? Does the Sherman law shield the defendant from its promise to pay?

HN2[↑] Under its constitutional right to legislate for the promotion of the useful arts, Congress passed the patent statutes. The public policy thereby declared is this: Inventive minds may fail to produce many useful things that they would produce if stimulated by the [**8] promise of a substantial reward; what is produced is the property of the inventor; he and his heirs and assigns may hold it as a secret till the end of time; the public would be largely benefited by obtaining conveyances of these new properties; so the people through their representatives say to the inventor: Deed us your property, possession to be yielded at the end of 17 years, and in the meantime we will protect you absolutely in the right to exclude every one from making, using, or vending the thing patented, without your permission. Bloomer v. McQuewan, 14 How. 539, 548, 14 L. Ed. 532; United States v. American Bell Telephone Co., 167 U.S. 224, 17 Sup. Ct. 809, 42 L. Ed. 144; Bement v. National Harrow Co., 186 U.S. 70, 22 Sup. Ct. 747, 46 L. Ed. 1058; Good v. Daland, 121 N.Y. 1, 24 N.E. 15; Fuller v. Berger, I*362I 120 Fed. 274, 56 C.C.A. 588, 65 L.R.A. 381; Victor Talking Machine Co. v. The Fair, 123 Fed. 424, 61 C.C.A. 58; Rupp-Wittgenfeld Co. v. Elliott, 131 Fed. 730, 65 C.C.A. 544. Congress put no limitations, excepting time, upon the monopoly. Courts can create none without legislating. HN3[↑] The monopoly is of the invention, the mental concept as distinguished from the [**9] materials that are brought together to give it a body. Use of the materials, as noted above, may be enjoined as injurious to the public; but that does not invade the monopoly. Use of the invention cannot be had except on the inventor's terms. Without paying or doing whatever he exacts, no one can be exempted from his right to exclude. Whatever the terms, courts will enforce them, provided only that the licensee is not thereby required to violate some law outside of the patent law, like the doing of murder or arson. Does the requirement that the licensee join other licensees in a combination or pool to control the prices and output of an innocuous patented article violate the Sherman law? We cannot dispose of the question on the authority of Bement v. National Harrow Co., 186 U.S. 70, 22 Sup. Ct. 747, 46 L. Ed. 1058 (see United States Consolidated Seeded Raisin Co. v. Griffin & Skelly Co., 126 Fed. 364, 61 C.C.A. 334), for according to our reading the question was expressly excepted from the decision; and so, aided by the declarations of general principles in that and other cases, we must formulate our own answer.

Under its constitutional right to regulate interstate commerce [**10] HN4[↑] Congress made illegal "every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states," and subjected to liability to fine or imprisonment "every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine, or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several states." Congress, having created the patent law, had the right to repeal or modify it, in whole or in part, directly or by necessary implication. The Sherman law contains no reference to the patent law.

HN5[↑] Each was passed under a separate and distinct constitutional grant of power; each was passed professedly to advantage the public; the necessary implication is not that one iota was taken away from the patent law; the necessary implication is that patented articles, unless or until they are released by the owner of the patent from the dominion of his monopoly, are not articles of trade or commerce among the several states. The evils to be remedied by the Sherman law are well understood. Articles in which the people are entitled to freedom of trade were being taken as the subjects of monopoly; [**11] instrumentalities of commerce between which the people are entitled to free competition were being combined. The means of effecting and the form of the combination are immaterial; the result is the criterion. HN6↑ The true test of violation of the Sherman law is whether the people are injured, whether they are deprived of something to which they have a right. *Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U.S. 197, 24 Sup. Ct. 436, 48 L. Ed. 679.*

Grant produced a new integer in the useful arts. See [*Consolidated Rubber Tire Co. v. Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. \(C.C.A., Second \[\*363\] Circuit, February 1, 1907\) 151 Fed. 237.*](#) Plaintiff, as his successor in interest, is the owner of a valid patent. That stands as an unquestionable fact on this writ of error. HN7↑ The only grant to the patentee was the right to exclude others, to have and to hold for himself and his assigns a monopoly, not a right limited or conditioned according to the sentiment of judges, but an absolute monopoly constitutionally conferred by the sovereign lawmakers. Over and above an absolute monopoly created by law, how can there be a further and an unlawful monopoly in the same thing? If plaintiff were the sole maker [\[\*12\]](#) of Grant tires, how could plaintiff's control of prices and output injure the people, deprive them of something to which they have a right? Is a greater injury or deprivation inflicted, if plaintiff authorizes a combination or pool to do what plaintiff can do directly? To say yes means that substance is disregarded, that mere words confer upon the people some sort of a right or interest counter to the monopoly, when by the terms of the bargain the people agreed to claim none until Grant's deed to them shall have matured.

True that "it is as important to the public that competition should not be repressed by worthless patents as that the patentee of a really valuable invention should be protected in his monopoly." *Pope Mfg. Co. v. Gormully, 144 U.S. 224, 234, 12 Sup. Ct. 632, 36 L. Ed. 414.* But worthless patents and other supposititious cases are not on review.

What is stated as the third conclusion of law does not affect the result. The case in the Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit was not a proceeding in rem. The defendant in that particular suit has a decree on which, if he were again sued for infringement of the Grant patent, he could base a plea of res adjudicata. [\[\*13\]](#) That plea would be as good in the other circuits as in the Sixth. No other member of the public could plead that decree in any circuit. The right conclusion of law from the facts found is that, so far as the parties to the contract in suit are concerned, the patent is valid throughout the United States, and is enforceable against every one who is not able to shield himself behind an erroneous decree. If any inference of fact (or prophecy) was to be drawn from the facts found, it should have been that the Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit will not exempt other members of the public from the monopoly of the Grant patent. That infringers may be more contumacious in one locality than in another does not change the rights of the parties before the court. If defendant, or any other of those who entered the pool, had been before the court below in an infringement suit, the validity of the patent and defendant's use thereof without license would have compelled a decree enjoining the sale of the patented articles in Michigan, Ohio, Kentucky and Tennessee and requiring an accounting of sales already made. Consequently there was full warrant for the parties to the contract in suit [\[\*14\]](#) to agree to pay for the use of the patent throughout the United States.

None of the provisions of the contract, in our judgment, touched any matter outside of the monopoly under the patent. The control of prices and output, for reasons already stated, did not deprive the public of any right. Both before and after the period covered by the contract the market was demoralized, prices were cut, and the owner [\[\*364\]](#) of the patent was getting nothing except by the slow and expensive process of litigation; but the public was not entitled to profit by competition among infringers. The internal agreements relating to royalties, proportioning the business, supervision, and penalties, did not affect or concern the public at all. Equally innocuous, in our view, was the matter stated as the fifth conclusion of law. First, the public was not injured, because the finding of fact is that the provision was never acted upon in any way. Second, if a defense had been predicated on the presence of that provision in the contract, it would have been unavailing, because that provision is separable from the royalty and other valid parts of the contract. And, third, the owner of the patent had [\[\*15\]](#) the right, either alone or through licensees, to accumulate funds with which to push the Grant tire on the market, and in so doing to undersell the makers of other tires and infringing makers of the Grant tires. It is not for a defendant's sake that courts listen to the defense that he ought not to pay because his promise was under an arrangement to injure the public. The public is not injured by an arrangement to compete with adversaries for the public's patronage.

The evidence has not been brought up. No assignment of error questions the fullness and accuracy of the finding of facts. No cross-assignment has been made. The amount due, with interest to the date of entering the judgment hereby directed, can be computed.

The judgment is therefore reversed with the direction to enter judgment in plaintiff's favor.

Concur by: GROSSCUP

Concur

---

GROSSCUP, Circuit Judge (concurring). I concur in the foregoing judgment; but am not prepared to hold that patented articles are never, under any circumstances, articles of trade or commerce among the several states, within the meaning of the Sherman Act; and do not think that that premise is essential to the conclusion arrived at.

The patentee, [**16] in this case, in good faith believed the patent valid, as did also all the parties entering into the contracts. Whatever, therefore, their effect may have actually been, the contracts were not intended to affect prices, except as the parties believed they had the right, because of the patent, to fix and maintain prices.

Now were the patentee the manufacturer, he would unquestionably have had the right to fix and maintain his own prices; and were the other parties to the contract manufacturers for the patentee, at a given figure for such manufacture, the patentee's right to fix and maintain the selling price would still remain; nor could this be questioned were he to make the manufacturers his selling agents also. How, then, does the contract under review make a case in which the patentee, through his manufacturer, is not entitled to fix and maintain prices -- how is the arrangement, in effect, different in any way of restraining trade or competition, from the arrangement just supposed, in which the patentee unquestionably has that right?

True, in the case under review, the manufacturers, as to the public, are not competitors; but neither would they be in the cases supposed; in [**17] both cases the public suffering nothing, except what the patentee had the right to exact; for so long, at least, as the patentee is not [*365] exacting, as the value of his invention, an unreasonable sum (and his action in that respect is not here questioned) it is within his own right to say whether the price exacted should be retained by himself, or shall be distributed among the people manufacturing for him. The contracts, therefore, in the case before us, having been made in good faith, and not as a mere subterfuge, I can see in them nothing that the Sherman Act was intended to prevent.

State v. Bovee

Court of Common Pleas of Lorain County, Ohio

June 8, 1907, Decided

No Number in Original

Reporter

17 Ohio Dec. 663 *; 1907 Ohio Misc. LEXIS 157 **; 6 Ohio N.P. (n.s.) 337

STATE OF OHIO v. M. O. BOVEE ET AL.

Subsequent History: [**1] For prior contra holding, see State v. Ross, 16 Dec. 704.

Prior History: DEMURRERS to indictment.

Disposition: Demurrs sustained and the defendants discharged.

Core Terms

---

commodity, combinations, transportation, commerce, tangible, insurance business, merchandise, words, movable, barter, broad sense, restrictions, terms, fire insurance, enact a law, common law, consumption, consumed, intend

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN1 Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

See Ohio Rev. Stat. § 7586 et seq.

Insurance Law > Claim, Contract & Practice Issues > Policy Interpretation > General Overview

HN2 Claim, Contract & Practice Issues, Policy Interpretation

The issuing of a policy of insurance is not a transaction of commerce, but is a simple contract of indemnity against loss.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Case Transfers

Insurance Law > Claim, Contract & Practice Issues > Policy Interpretation > General Overview

HN3 Appeals, Case Transfers

Insurance contracts are not articles of commerce in any proper meaning of the word. They are not subjects of trade and barter offered in the market as something having an existence and value independent of the parties to them. They are not commodities to be shipped or forwarded from one state to another, and then put up for sale. They are like other personal contracts between parties which are completed by their signature and the transfer of the consideration.

Insurance Law > Claim, Contract & Practice Issues > Policy Interpretation > General Overview

Insurance Law > ... > Business Insurance > Marine & Inland Marine Insurance > General Overview

Insurance Law > ... > Marine & Inland Marine Insurance > Coverage > Perils of the Sea

HN4 Claim, Contract & Practice Issues, Policy Interpretation

The business of insurance is not commerce. The contract of insurance is not an instrumentality of commerce. The making of such a contract is a mere incident of commercial intercourse, and in this respect there is no difference whatever between insurance against fire and insurance against the perils of the sea.

Governments > Courts > Common Law

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN5 Courts, Common Law

In Ohio an act is not criminal unless made so by statute, and the statute should describe the act which is forbidden with reasonable certainty, and where a word which has two significations is used in a statute, it should ordinarily receive that meaning which is generally given to it.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN6 Legislation, Interpretation

A criminal statute must be strictly but fairly construed, and any reasonable doubt that there may be should be resolved in favor of the defendants.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN7 Legislation, Interpretation

In construing a statute the court has a right to consider the history of the legislation, the cause or necessity for it, its object and what appears best calculated to advance the same, for the purpose of determining what the intent of the legislature was in enacting the law.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN8 Legislation, Interpretation

When a statute is taken principally from the statute of another state and prior to its adoption had received a construction in that state, it is reasonable to suppose that the legislature in adopting this provision did so in view of the construction which had been put upon it and with the intention that it should receive the same construction in Ohio.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN9 Legislation, Interpretation

General words following particular and specific words must, ordinarily, be confined to things of the same kind as those specified.

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN10 Legislation, Interpretation

Before an act can be held to be criminal in Ohio it must clearly appear that the legislature intended to make that act criminal. It must be borne in mind that there are no common-law offenses in Ohio. No act or omission, however hurtful or immoral in its tendencies, is punishable as a crime in Ohio unless such act or omission is specifically enjoined or prohibited by the statute laws of the state.

Headnotes/Summary

---

Headnotes

CRIMINAL LAW--INSURANCE--MONOPOLIES--STATUTES.

1. COMBINATIONS OF INSURANCE AGENTS NOT VIOLATION OF ANTITRUST LAW.

The business of soliciting and selling fire, lightning or tornado insurance is not commerce; contracts of insurance are not commodities, and the insurance business is not a trade so as to come within the meaning of these terms as used in the Valentine antitrust law, Lan. 7586 (B. 4427-1) et seq.

2. CONSTRUCTION OF CRIMINAL STATUTES.

In Ohio an act is not criminal unless made so by statute, and the statute should describe the act which is forbidden with reasonable certainty, and where a word which has two significations is used in a statute, it should ordinarily receive that meaning which is generally given to it.

3. EFFECT OF CONSTRUCTIONS OF COURTS OF FOREIGN STATE ON LAWS ADOPTED FROM THAT STATE.

When the Ohio legislature adopts the law of another state it does so intending that it shall receive the same construction by the Ohio courts that had been put upon it, up to the time of its enactment in Ohio, by the courts of the state from which it is adopted.

Counsel: F. M. Stevens, prosecuting attorney, for plaintiff.

Stroup & Fauver and Thompson, Glitch & Cinniger, for defendants.

Judges: WASHBURN, J.

Opinion by: WASHBURN

Opinion

---

[*663] WASHBURN, J.

At the April term, 1907, of the court of common pleas of Lorain county, Ohio, twenty-three individuals and one corporation were jointly indicted under Lan. 7586 (B. 4427-1) et seq., known as the Valentine antitrust law, for combination in restraint of trade.

The indictment contains four counts, each charging the offense in identical language, but on different dates, the charge being that the defendants--

"Unlawfully did conspire, combine, confederate, agree and associate themselves together to create and carry out restrictions in the trade, business and commerce of insuring property against loss and damage by fire, lightning and tornado, and to increase the price, premium and rate of such insurance and to prevent competition in the making, sale and purchase of such insurance and to fix the price, premium and rate of such insurance at a standard and [*2] figure, whereby its price to the public and to the consumer shall be established and controlled, [*664] in that the price, premium and rate of such insurance shall be maintained as fixed, and to make, enter into, execute and carry out contracts, obligations and agreements to keep and maintain the price of such insurance at a graduated figure, to not sell or dispose of such insurance below a common standard and fixed value, to establish and settle the price of such insurance between themselves and between themselves and others, so as to preclude a free and unrestricted competition among themselves in the sale thereof, and to pool, combine and unite their interests in the sale of such insurance so as to affect the price thereof; and that they" (naming the defendants) "then and there unlawfully acted with, were members of, aided and assisted in carrying out the purposes of, said unlawful trust and combination, the exact name of which is to the grand jurors unknown, then and there being and existing for each and all of the aforesaid unlawful purposes and which said trust and combination did then and there unlawfully bring about, effect and accomplish each and all of the aforesaid [*3] purposes, contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided and against the peace and dignity of the state of Ohio."

To this indictment the defendants have each, with one exception, interposed a demurrer, upon several grounds, the principal ground being that the facts stated do not constitute an offense punishable by the laws of the state of Ohio.

The principal question presented by the demurrs is, whether or not the business of fire insurance is included in the terms "trade," "commerce" or "commodity" as the same are used in the Valentine law. The object of that law, as stated in its title, is "To promote free competition in commerce and all classes of business in the state." Section 1 declares that:

HN1 [+] "A trust is a combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more persons, firms, partnerships, corporations or associations of persons, or any two or more of them, for either, any or all of the following purposes:

"1. To create or carry out restrictions in trade or commerce.

"2. To limit or reduce the production, or increase, or reduce the price of merchandise or any commodity.

"3. To prevent competition in manufacturing, making, transportation, sale or purchase [*4] of merchandise, produce or any commodity.

"4. To fix at any standard or figure, whereby its price to the public or consumer shall be in any manner controlled or established, any article or commodity of merchandise, produce or commerce intended for sale, barter, use or consumption in this state.

"5. To make or enter into or execute or carry out any contracts, obligations or agreements of any kind or description, by which they shall bind or have bound themselves not to sell, dispose of or transport [*665] any article or any commodity or any article of trade, use, merchandise, commerce or consumption below a common standard figure or fixed value, or by which they shall agree in any manner to keep the price of such article, commodity or transportation at a fixed or graduated figure, or by which they shall in any manner establish or settle the price of any article, commodity or transportation between them or themselves and others, so as to directly or indirectly preclude a free and unrestricted competition among themselves, or any purchasers or consumers in the sale or transportation of any article or commodity, or by which they shall agree to pool, combine or directly or indirectly [**5] unite any interests that they may have connected with the sale or transportation of any such article or commodity, that its price might in any manner be affected. Every such trust as is defined herein is declared to be unlawful, against public policy and void."

Without stopping to quote the definitions of the word "commodity" as given by lexicographers, it is sufficient to say that the word as commonly used and understood means something movable and tangible. It is true that the word "commodity" in its broad sense is said to mean "convenience, accommodation, profit, benefit, advantage, interest, commodiousness," but its use in that sense has become obsolete. In that sense it cannot be said to be a thing that can be produced, used or transported, and the act in question, as shown by reference to the terms used in Subds. 2, 3, 4 and 5 of Sec. 1, refers to things that can be "produced," "manufactured," "made," "transported," "sold," "used" or "consumed;" hence I think that the word "commodity" was used in this act in its ordinary and well-understood commercial sense of something that is produced or used and is the subject of barter or sale, something movable and tangible. In the opinion [**6] of the case cited hereafter, [Paul v. Virginia, 75 U.S. 168 \[19 L. Ed. 357\]](#), it is said that contracts of insurance are not commodities. I will later refer to an Iowa case which decides that insurance is a commodity.

The word "commerce," as ordinarily used, has to do with the sale or transportation of commodities or tangible and movable things, but it is a term of wide import, and it includes communications and intercourse for the purpose of trade in any and all its forms, and yet the Supreme Court of the United States, by repeated decisions, has held that-

HN2 [↑] "The issuing of a policy of insurance is not a transaction of commerce--but is a simple contract of indemnity against loss." Paul v. Virginia, supra.

Mr. Justice Field, in deciding this case, uses this language:

HN3 [↑] "These contracts are not articles of commerce in any proper meaning of the word. They are not subjects of trade and barter offered in the market as something having an existence and value independent of the parties to them. They are not commodities to be shipped or forwarded [*666] from one state to another, and then put up for sale. They are like other personal contracts between parties [**7] which are completed by their signature and the transfer of the consideration."

In 1895 the Supreme Court of the United States reiterated this doctrine in the following language:

HN4 [↑] "The business of insurance is not commerce. The contract of insurance is not an instrumentality of commerce. The making of such a contract is a mere incident of commercial intercourse, and in this respect there is no difference whatever between insurance against fire and insurance against the 'perils of the sea.'" [Hooper v. California, 155 U.S. 648, 655 \[15 S. Ct. 207, 210; 39 L. Ed. 297\]](#).

And the same court again, as late as 1900, specifically decided that "The business of life insurance is not commerce." [New York Life Ins. Co. v. Cravens, 178 U.S. 389 \[20 S. Ct. 962; 44 L. Ed. 1116\]](#).

So far as I know, no court has decided to the contrary, and I therefore hold that the word "commerce," as used in the act in question, does not include the business of fire insurance.

The word "trade" is ordinarily understood as meaning one's occupation or employment, or else the business of buying and selling. In the latter sense it is of no wider import [**8] than "commerce" or "traffic," for "trade," in the sense of "exchanging commodities by barter, the business of buying or selling for money," has to do with movable and tangible things.

In the exemption laws of certain states the word "trade" is used in the broad sense of occupation or employment, and in the state of Texas, where the law exempted from attachment and execution all tools, apparatus and books belonging to "any trade or profession," the words "any trade or profession" were construed to include all employment and to include the business of an insurance agent so as to entitle him to the exemption therein provided for. Betz v. Maier, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 219 [33 S.W. 710].

In its broadest sense the word "trade" applies not only to skilled handicraft, but to any business that a man regularly engages in for a livelihood. If this broad meaning was intended, then the law applies to practically all business affairs, not only to the production, consumption, use, sale and transportation of tangible things, but to all cases where any occupation or employment is engaged in for the purpose of profit or gain, or a livelihood, except the learned professions. In this [**9] broad sense it would include the occupation of the mechanic, the laborer, the agent, clerk or servant and all those who are employed for hire, except the lawyer, doctor, minister and those engaged in the liberal arts.

If that is the sense in which the word "trade" is used in this act, then it is made a criminal offense for two men to agree with each other not to work for less than two dollars per day. That construction would [*667] render illegal all that class of unions and combinations of working men and tradesmen which are unqualifiedly recognized to be lawful and which have been encouraged and protected by the state. That men can combine for the purpose of regulating their wages by proper means, is now the settled law of the land; and such a combination was held not to be made criminal by a law very similar to our antitrust law. Hunt v. Co-operative Club, 140 Mich. 538 [104 N.W. 40].

Before giving to the Ohio statute a construction which will render criminal all combinations of laboring men, the court should be satisfied that such was the intention of the legislature.

It has been suggested that this statute applies only to such combinations as were [**10] illegal at common law, and that such construction would exclude labor combinations and include insurance combinations, but that construction would render the law very indefinite and uncertain, for many combinations are legal at common law, and but few people know what combinations are legal and what are illegal at common law. In fact, few attorneys without research and study know just what combinations are upheld and enforced and what are illegal and unenforceable under the common law. HN5↑ In Ohio an act is not criminal unless made so by statute, and the statute should describe the act which is forbidden with reasonable certainty, and where a word which has two significations is used in a statute, it should ordinarily receive that meaning which is generally given to it.

It will be noticed that the word "trade" is used just twice in Sec. 1 of the act hereinbefore quoted,--in Subd. 1, where "restrictions in trade" are spoken of, and in Subd. 5, where reference is made to "any commodity or any article of trade, use, merchandise, commerce or consumption." It is apparent that as used in Subd. 5 the word "trade" has reference to something movable and tangible.

Throughout the act terms are used [**11] which clearly indicate that the legislature had in mind concrete things which could be produced, transported, used or consumed. The language of Subd. 4 is: "any article or commodity of merchandise, produce or commerce intended for sale, barter, use or consumption in this state." To say that this language describes such an intangible thing as a contract of indemnity by which one person insures the property of another against loss by fire, is certainly to disregard the ordinary meaning of words.

That the terms "merchandise, product, or any commodity" were not intended to include intangible things, is shown by the fact that the legislature took particular pains to mention "transportation" among the list of things which might be the subject of a trust, thus evidently not intending to include such an intangible thing as transportation within the definition of such tangible things as "article" or "commodity."

[*668] The transportation of an article is as much trade as is the insurance of an article, and as combinations for the purpose of preventing competition in the transportation of an article are specifically prohibited in Subd. 3 of Sec. 1, it is evident that the legislature did [**12] not intend to include transportation in the word "trade" as used in Subd. 1, or the words "merchandise" or "commodity" as used in Subd. 2, or the words "merchandise, product, or any commodity" as used in Subd. 3, thus showing that the word "trade," as used in Subd. 1, was not used in its broadest sense, but rather in the sense of barter and sale.

If the term "restrictions in trade," as used in the first subdivision, is given its broadest and most comprehensive meaning, it includes all that is thereafter described in Subds. 2, 3, 4 and 5, and much that is not included in said subdivisions; hence, if it had been used in this broad sense, there was no need for the specific restrictions contained in Subds. 2, 3, 4 and 5--they were included and covered in Subd. 1. Indeed, it seems quite apparent that Subd. 1 is explained by Subds. 2, 3, 4 and 5, and that "trade" as there used has reference to the business of selling or exchanging some tangible substance or commodity for money; at least, it does not clearly appear that it was used in its broadest and most comprehensive sense.

This is HN6 a criminal statute and must be strictly (State v. Meyers, 56 Ohio St. 340, 350 [47 N.E. 138]) [**13] but fairly (Barker v. State, 69 Ohio St. 68 [68 N.E. 575]) construed, and any reasonable doubt that there may be should be resolved in favor of the defendants. HN7 In construing a statute the court has a right to consider the history of the legislation, the cause or necessity for it, its object and what appears best calculated to advance the same, for the purpose of determining what the intent of the legislature was in enacting the law. The history of the law in question shows that the necessity for it grew out of the fact that there had been great combinations of corporations and capitalists for the purpose of controlling the price of tangible things--articles of prime necessity--or the charges for the transportation of the same, and that the state of Texas long before the Ohio law was passed had enacted a law very similar to what is now the Ohio law; in fact, the Ohio law is almost a literal copy of the Texas law, and before the Ohio law was passed the supreme court of Texas had decided that the legislature did not intend, in the use of the terms "restrictions in trade," "commerce" and "commodity," to include the business of fire insurance. [Queen Ins. Co. v. \[\*\*14\] State, 86 Tex. 250 \[24 S.W. 397\]](#); 22 L. R. A. 483]. Then the legislature of Texas amended the law so as to include the business of insurance, and thereafter the legislature of Ohio enacted the law in question, following, except as to title, practically the original Texas statute, and specifically omitting the provision in the amended Texas statute which brought the business of insurance within the terms [*669] of the statute. The title to the Texas statute states that the law was passed "to promote free competition in the state of Texas," while the Ohio statute recites that it is an act "to promote free competition in commerce and all classes of business in the state."

But for this difference in the title of the Ohio statute the conclusion that the legislature of Ohio intended to enact a law which did not include insurance, is irresistible, and, considering the kind and character of the combinations which brought about the necessity for the legislation, I cannot give to the change in the title of the Ohio act a force and effect which would overcome the intention not to include the business of insurance in the act which is shown by the deliberate [**15] omission from the body of the law of the provision in reference to insurance.

The title of the act is proper to be considered in determining the intention of the legislature in enacting the law, but it cannot be given controlling force in a criminal statute so as to give words of the law itself a meaning repugnant to that which, but for the title, is apparent from a consideration and fair construction of the law itself. Bennett v. Lewis, 7 Ohio 80, 86; Seeley v. Thomas, 31 Ohio St. 301, 306; Sutherland, Statutory Construction Sec. 339.

The statute of Ohio is, as I have said, practically identical with the first Texas act, and the rule is, that where our legislature adopts the law of another state it does so intending that it shall receive the same construction by the Ohio courts that had been put upon it, up to the time of its enactment in Ohio, by the courts of the state from which it is adopted.

HN8 "When a statute is taken principally from the statute of another state and prior to its adoption had received a construction in that state, it is reasonable to suppose that the legislature in adopting this provision did so in view of the construction [**16] which had been put upon it and with the intention that it should receive the same construction here." Favorite v. Booher, 17 Ohio St. 548; see also Ives v. McNicoll, 59 Ohio St. 402 [53 N.E. 60; 43 L. R. A. 772; 69 Am. St. Rep. 780], and Gale v. Priddy, 66 Ohio St. 400 [64 N.E. 437].

17 Ohio Dec. 663, *669L<sup>A</sup> 1907 Ohio Misc. LEXIS 157, **16

Having in mind that this is a criminal statute, a careful reading and consideration of the whole act leads me to the conclusion that the words in question were used in their ordinary and commonly-understood meaning and not in their obsolete or unusual meaning, and that the legislature intended the act to apply to tangible things, their manufacture, making, production, transportation, sale or purchase, and that it did not intend the law to apply to insurance. Runck v. Cloud, 8 Ohio N.P. 436, 11 Ohio Dec. 444.

I have not overlooked a case reported in State v. Phipps, 50 Kan. 609 [31 P. 1097; 18 L. R. A. 657; 34 Am. St. Rep. 152], but that merely holds that where insurance was specifically mentioned in the [*670] body of the law it indicated [**17] a legislative intention to use the word "trade" in the title of the act in a sense broad enough to include the business of insurance. Neither does the case reported in State v. Insurance Co. 152 Mo. 1 [52 S.W. 595; 45 L. R. A. 363], apply to the case at bar, because the law in that case especially mentioned and prohibited combinations of those engaged in the insurance business.

Counsel insist that this court should follow the supreme court of Iowa, where it is held that the word "commodity" in a somewhat similar statute included the business of fire insurance. That statute prohibited combinations "to regulate or fix the price of oil, lumber, coal, flour, provisions, or any other commodity or article whatever," and the supreme court of Iowa held that the business of fire insurance was included in the term "any other commodity or article whatever;" but in so deciding the court violated a well-settled rule of construction, which is, HN9[↑] "General words following particular and specific words must, ordinarily, be confined to things of the same kind as those specified." Shultz v. Cambridge, 38 Ohio St. 659.

Here the words "oil, lumber, [**18] coal, flour and provisions" all refer to tangible and movable things, and the word "commodity," while including all of them, embraced many other things of the same general kind, and under the above rule the word "commodity" applied only to things like oil, lumber, etc., which were tangible and movable. In spite of that, the court gave to the word "commodity" an obsolete and unusual meaning and held that it included the business of insurance, because "there are the same reasons why it should be protected against combinations as there are in matters clearly within the provisions of the law." The court recognized the fact that the business of insurance was not clearly within the provisions of the law, but seemingly held that it ought to be, and therefore was included. I do not regard the case as authority, for in Ohio "a statute defining a crime or offense cannot be extended, by construction, to persons or things not within its descriptive terms, though they appear to be within the reason and spirit of the statute." State v. Meyers, supra.

There may be good reasons why combinations by insurance agents for the purpose of increasing rates of insurance should be prohibited, but [**19] that will not justify a court in holding that such combinations are prohibited by a law which prohibits combinations with reference to articles which may be produced, transported and used and which are the subject of barter and sale.

If it is thought wise to extend the provisions of the antitrust law of Ohio so as to include the business of insurance, labor unions and everything about which a person may be engaged, the legislature can very easily use language which will clearly express that intention, but [*671] it is sufficient for the determination of this case to say that such intention does not clearly appear from a consideration of the present law.

HN10[↑] Before an act can be held to be criminal in Ohio it must clearly appear that the legislature intended to make that act criminal. "It must be borne in mind that we have no common-law offenses in this state. No act or omission, however hurtful or immoral in its tendencies, is punishable as a crime in Ohio unless such act or omission is specifically enjoined or prohibited by the statute laws of the state. It is, therefore, idle to speculate upon the injurious consequences of permitting such conduct to go unpunished, or to regret [**20] that our criminal code has not the expansiveness of the common law." Smith v. State, 12 Ohio St. 466, 469 [80 Am. Dec. 355].

The demurrers will, therefore, be sustained and the defendants discharged.

---

End of Document

Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. State

Court of Civil Appeals of Texas

December 11, 1907, Decided

No. 4212.

Reporter

48 Tex. Civ. App. 162 *; 106 S.W. 918 **; 1907 Tex. App. LEXIS 203 ***

The Waters-Pierce Oil Company v. State of Texas.

Prior History: [***1] Appeal from the District Court of Travis County. Tried below before the Hon. V. L. Brooks.

Disposition: Affirmed.

Core Terms

---

oil, anti-trust, violations, preponderance of evidence, do business, prescribed, forfeitures, dollars, tended, merchandise, alleged violation, civil action, prosecutions, forfeited, convicted, recovered, Refining, alleges, lessen, pecuniary, monopoly, indictment, petroleum, pleadings, suits, authorized agent, two year, declarations, provisions, imported

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Overbreadth

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN1[ Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The Sherman Anti-trust Law enacted by the United States Congress is not more definite and specific than the Texas anti-trust Acts of May 25, 1899, and March 31, 1903, and that law has stood the test against similar objections in the United States Supreme Court.

Criminal Law & Procedure > Defenses > Statute of Limitations

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

HN2[ Defenses, Statute of Limitations

See Tex. Crim. Stat. art. 219.

Governments > Legislation > Types of Statutes

HN3  Legislation, Types of Statutes

Offenses which are punishable by pecuniary fine only are misdemeanors.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN4  Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Sections 2, 3, 4, and 6 of the Texas Act of May 25, 1899, declare that all persons, firms, corporations or associations of persons who violate those sections shall be deemed and adjudged guilty of a conspiracy to defraud, and shall be subject to the penalties prescribed in the act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN5  US Department of Justice Actions, Criminal Actions

Section 11 of the Texas Act of May 25, 1899, states that all who do the things therein condemned shall be adjudged a monopoly and be subject to all the pains and penalties provided in the act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Business & Corporate Law > Foreign Corporations > General Overview

HN6  Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Section 7 of the Texas Act of May 25, 1899, provides for the forfeiture of the charter of any domestic corporation and permit to do business granted to any foreign corporation for violations of the statute.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN7  Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Section 5 of the Texas Act of May 25, 1899, reads as follows: Any person, partnership, firm or association, or any representative or agent thereof, or any corporation or company, or any officer, representative or agent thereof, violating any of the provisions of the act shall forfeit not less than $ 200 nor more than $ 5000 for every offense, and each day such person, corporation, partnership or association shall continue to do so shall be a separate offense, the penalties in such cases to be recovered by an action in the name of the State at the relation of the Attorney-General or the district or county attorney; the moneys thus collected to go into the State treasury, and to become a part of the general fund, except as hereinafter provided.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Employees & Officials

Legal Ethics > Prosecutorial Conduct

HN8 [blue icon] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

Under § 9 of the Texas Act of May 25, 1899, it shall be the duty of the attorney general and the prosecuting attorney of each district or county, respectively, to enforce the provisions of the act. The attorney general and the prosecuting attorney shall institute and conduct all suits begun in the district courts, and upon appeal the attorney general shall prosecute said suits in the courts of civil appeals and the state supreme court.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Accusatory Instruments > Indictments > General Overview

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Employees & Officials

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Criminal Law & Procedure > Sentencing > Forfeitures > Proceedings

HN9 [blue icon] Accusatory Instruments, Indictments

Section 11 of the anti-trust Act of March 31, 1903, reads as follows: Each and every firm, person, corporation or association of persons who shall in any manner violate any of the provisions of the act shall for each and every day that such violation shall be committed or continued, forfeit and pay the sum of $ 50, which may be recovered in the name of the state in any county where the offense is committed or where either of the offenders reside, or in Travis County, and it shall be the duty of the attorney general, or the district or county attorney, under the direction of the attorney general, to prosecute for the recovery of the same, and the fees of the prosecuting attorney for representing the state in proceedings under the act shall be over and above the fees allowed him under the general fee bill.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Claims By & Against

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Legislatures

HN10 [blue icon] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

It is the intention of the state legislature in enacting the Texas anti-trust Acts of May 25, 1899, and March 31, 1903 to create a cause of action in behalf of the state for the pecuniary penalties therein prescribed, to be recovered in a civil suit.

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Claims By & Against

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

48 Tex. Civ. App. 162, *162LÁ06 S.W. 918, **918LÁ907 Tex. App. LEXIS 203, ***1

Governments > Legislation > Statutory Remedies & Rights

HN11[] State & Territorial Governments, Claims By & Against

An action of debt will lie for the recovery of statutory penalties.

Governments > Legislation > Statutory Remedies & Rights

International Trade Law > International Commerce & Trade > Exports & Imports > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Claims By & Against

HN12[] Legislation, Statutory Remedies & Rights

The state may bring an action for debt for the recovery of statutory penalties.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Criminal Law & Procedure > Defenses > Statute of Limitations

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN13[] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

If it is conceded that criminal prosecutions are barred within two years, it does not follow that the penalties which might have been recovered by such prosecutions can not, when authorized, be recovered in a civil action. The state penal code and code of criminal procedure deal exclusively with criminal cases, and that portion of the latter which deals with the subject of limitation only purports to fix the time within which criminal actions may be commenced. Tex. Crim. Stat. art. 219 merely forbids prosecutions by indictment or information after two years from the commission of the offense.

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN14[] Legislation, Statute of Limitations

In prescribing a limitation for criminal proceedings, the legislature has in mind cases criminal, both in substance and form, and has no intention of affecting any right the state might assert in a civil action.

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Claims By & Against

48 Tex. Civ. App. 162, *162LÁ06 S.W. 918, **918LÁ907 Tex. App. LEXIS 203, ***1

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Governmental Entities

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

HN15[ State & Territorial Governments, Claims By & Against

A civil statute of limitation does not apply to the state unless so expressly provided.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Business & Corporate Law > Foreign Corporations > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Effect & Operation > Prospective Operation

Governments > Legislation > Expiration, Repeal & Suspension

HN16[ Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

The proviso in the Texas Act of March 31, 1903, stated that nothing in the act shall be held or construed to affect or destroy any rights of the State of Texas to recover penalties or forfeit charters of domestic corporations, or prohibit foreign corporations from doing business in this State, for acts committed before this Act took effect. This proviso preserved whatever rights the State had under the Texas anti-trust statute of May 25, 1899, including the right to enforce the penalties prescribed by that Act.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > Motions for New Trials

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > General Overview

HN17[ Relief From Judgments, Motions for New Trials

In construing written laws, courts are not bound by rules of grammar, and may disregard them in order to give effect to manifest legislative intention.

Headnotes/Summary

---

Headnotes

Receiver -- Appeal.

One who has appealed from an order appointing a receiver and obtained a review of the proceedings with reference thereto is not entitled to raise the same questions again on appeal from the final judgment in the cause.

Unlawful Combination -- Ownership of Corporate Stock -- Charge.

The prohibition in the Act of March 31, 1903 (anti-trust law) against a combination of capital etc., of corporations for preventing or lessening competition by the acquisition by one corporation of the stock of another does not render the corporation whose stock is so acquired liable to the penalties therein denounced except on its participation in the unlawful act. But see charge held (Key, J. dissenting) not to have the effect of imposing such liability.

Unlawful Combination -- Harmless Error.

Where one penalty is imposed by a verdict and judgment establishing the violations of several provisions of the anti-trust law of 1903, error in the submission of the issues arising on the alleged commission of one of the prohibited acts is not ground for reversal if the issue as to the other unlawful act was properly submitted and the recovery thereon sustained.

Constitutional Law -- Anti-trust Laws.

The constitutionality and validity of the Acts of May 25, 1899, and March 31, 1903 (the anti-trust laws) sustained.

Anti-trust Law -- Limitation -- Civil and Criminal Actions.

The Acts of May 25, 1899, and March 31, 1903 (the anti-trust laws) vest in the State a civil right of action for the pecuniary penalties prescribed for violations of the provisions of those statutes, to be prosecuted in the district courts and governed by the rule that limitation does not run against the State, and not affected by articles 218 and 219 requiring indictments or informations for felonies to be prosecuted within three years from the commission of the offense and indictments or informations for misdemeanors within two years.

Anti-trust Law -- Suit by State.

If an exception to the rule that limitation does not run against the State should be recognized in cases merely for actions for debt, not for the preservation of public rights, still its suits for penalties under the anti-trust laws is to preserve public rights and promote public policy, and would not fall within such exception, and neither the two years nor the four years limitation of civil actions would apply.

Constitutional Law -- Labor Organization -- Discrimination.

The Act of May 27, 1899, protecting working men in the right of organization, does not authorize anything to be done by trades unions which was prohibited by the Act of May 25, 1899 (anti-trust law) and creates no such discrimination as would under the latter act be unconstitutional.

Penalties Under Repealed Law -- Saving Clause.

The repeal by the Act of March 31, 1903, of the Act of May 25, 1899, reducing the amount of the penalties (anti-trust laws) but with a proviso saving the right of the State to penalties and forfeitures already incurred did not prevent action by it for such penalties under the repealed law.

Penalties Under Repealed Law.

The substitution by the Act of March 31, 1903, of a lower penalty for violating its prohibitions than was imposed for similar violations by the Act of May 25, 1899, saving the State's right to recover penalties for things done before the latter Act took effect left the original and not the reduced penalties in force as to such prior offenses.

Penalties Under Repealed Law -- Statutory Construction -- Punctuation.

The location of a comma in a proviso saving the "rights of the State of Texas to recover penalties or forfeit charters of domestic corporations, or prohibit foreign corporations from doing business in this State, for acts committed before this Act took effect," did not justify the construction that the right to penalties against domestic corporations only was preserved, no reason existing for such discrimination.

Excessive Fines and Forfeitures.

The Acts of May 25, 1899, and of March 31, 1903 (the anti-trust laws) are not unconstitutional as imposing excessive fines and forfeitures (State v. Laredo Ice Co., 96 Texas, 467); nor was the imposition of penalties aggregating $ 1,623,900 excessive when its magnitude was due to defendant's repeated and long continued violations of the law, covering a period of six years.

Anti-trust Law -- Recovery Sustained.

Evidence considered and held to show a violation of the anti-trust laws of Texas by an agreement between defendant and another foreign corporation, the object of which was to create a monopoly and control the price of petroleum oil in the State and acts done in the State in pursuance of such agreement.

Counsel: Clark & Bolinger, Cochran & Penn, D. W. Odell, and N. A. Stedman (J. D. Johnson and N. S. Priest, of counsel), for appellant.

The anti-trust Act of May 25, 1899, was repealed by the anti-trust Act of March 31, 1903. Section 35, article 3, Constitution of Texas; Anti-trust law of May 25, 1899, General Laws of Texas, Twenty-sixth Legislature, p. 246; Anti-trust law of March 31, 1903, General Laws of Texas, Twenty-eighth Legislature, p. 119; Constitution of the United States, and section 1 of the Fourteenth Amendment thereto.

No right was reserved to the State by said Act of March 31, 1903, to recover penalties against foreign corporations for violations of said Act of May 25, 1899, or any other law upon said subject. Act May 25, 1899, supra; Act March 31, 1903, supra; Collins v. Warren, 63 Texas, 315; Roberts v. Yarboro, 41 Texas, 452; 26 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law, p. 680; United States v. Dickson, 15 Peters, 165.

This suit, though civil in form, is a prosecution against the defendant to recover penalties for an offense, the plaintiff's cause of action is criminal in [***2] its character, and the bar of limitation of two years prescribed by article 219 of the Code of Criminal Procedure precludes a recovery by the plaintiff of any penalties against the defendant under such anti-trust Act of May 25, 1899. Article 219, Code Criminal Procedure; Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. State, 100 Texas, 420; Queen Insurance Co. v. State, 86 Texas, 250; Stocksbury v. Swan, 85 Texas, 563; Clepper v. State, 4 Texas, 242; 1 Bishop's Criminal Law, sec. 32; 22 Cyc., p. 186; Wisconsin v. Pelican Insurance Co., 127 U.S., 265; Boyd v. United States, 116 U.S., 616; United States v. Shapleigh, 54 Fed. Rep., 126; Lees v. United States, 150 U.S., 480; Commonwealth v. Equitable Life Ass. Soc., 38 S. W. Rep., 491; Wood on Limitation, sec. 16; Ex parte Lange, 18 Wallace, 163; Bristol v. Washington County, 177 U.S., 147.

It appears from the face of the plaintiff's petition that the plaintiff's cause of action, if any it ever had, to recover penalties under the anti-trust Act of May 25, 1899, accrued more than two years before the institution of this suit and therefore if the plaintiff's cause of action is not to be regarded as criminal in its nature, and not governed by article 219 [***3] of the Code of Criminal Procedure, such cause of action must be treated as civil in its character, and having accrued more than two years before the institution of this suit, it is barred by the statute of limitation of two years, as prescribed in article 3354 of the Revised Civil Statutes of Texas. Revised Civil Statutes, art. 3354; Buswell on Limitation, sec. 97; Stockwell v. United States, 13 Wallace, 531; Davidson v. Missouri Pacific Ry. Co., 3 Willson's Cases, p. 216; Rockwell v. Ohio, 11 Ohio, 130; State v. Moore, 19 Tenn. (Meigs), 476.

Plaintiff's cause of action, if not regarded as criminal in its nature, is civil in its character, so much thereof as accrued prior to the 22d day of September, 1902, is barred by the statute of limitation of four years as prescribed in article 3358 of the Revised Civil Statutes of Texas. Revised Civil Statutes, art. 3358; Boswell v. Robinson, 33 N. J. Law, 273, and also same as above.

Any violator of said Act is guilty of a felony, and as to such violator the period of limitation for the commission of the felony is three years as prescribed by article 218 of the Code of Criminal Procedure of the State of Texas, and therefore a person [***4] prosecuted by an action, civil in form, for the recovery of the penalty of $ 50 per day for violating said Act is, if no other period of limitation is available to him, entitled to the protection of the statute of limitation of three years prescribed by said article 218 of the Code of Criminal Procedure by analogy. Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence, 419; Roller v. Holly, 176 U.S., 398.

Section 2 of the anti-trust Act of May 25, 1899, does not sufficiently designate an offense against the laws within the requirement of article 3 of the general provisions of the Penal Code of the State of Texas, which declares that no person shall be punished for any act or omission unless the same is made a penal offense and a penalty is affixed thereto by the written law of this State; nor within the requirement of article 6 of the general provisions of the Penal Code of the State of Texas, which prescribes that whenever it appears that a provision of the penal law was indefinitely framed or of such doubtful construction that it can not be understood, either from the language in which it is expressed or from some other written law of the State, such penal law shall be regarded as wholly inoperative; [***5] nor within the requirement of article 9 of the general provisions of the Penal Code of the State of Texas, which prescribes that no person shall be punished for an offense not made penal by the plain import of the words of the law.

Section 6 of the anti-trust Act of May 25, 1899, does not sufficiently define an offense within the requirement of article 3 of the general provisions of the Penal Code of the State of Texas, which declares that no person shall be punished for any act or omission unless the same is made a penal offense and a penalty is affixed thereto by the written law of this State; nor does it sufficiently define an offense within the requirement of article 6 of the general provisions of the Penal Code of the State of Texas; nor does it sufficiently define an offense within the requirement of article 9 of the general provisions of the Penal Code of the State of Texas. Queen Ins. Co. v. State, 86 Texas, 250; Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. State, 100 Texas, 420; Louisville & N. Ry. Co. v. Commonwealth, 35 S. W. Rep., 129; Tozer v. United States, 52 Fed. Rep., 917; Louisville & N. Ry. Co. v. R. R. Commission of Tenn., 19 Fed. Rep., 679.

The Acts in question [***6] denied to defendant the benefit of that part of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States which provides that no State shall deprive any person of property without due process of law. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. State, 100 Texas, 420; Louisville & N. Ry. Co. v. Commonwealth, 35 S. W. Rep., 129; Chicago, B. & Q. Ry. Co. v. Chicago, 166 U.S., 226; Hagar v. Reclamation Dist., 111 U.S., 701; Bank of Columbia v. Okely, 4 Wheaton, 235; State v. Loomis, 115 Missouri, 307; People v. Gillson, 109 New York, 389.

The verdict of the jury in assessing penalties against the defendant at the sum of $ 1,549,500 for alleged violations of law, for each of the days between May 31, 1900, and March 31, 1903, was so grossly and shockingly excessive as to show passion and prejudice on the part of the jury against the defendant. Constitution of Texas, art. 1, sec. 13; Penal Code, art. 2; Acts of 1903, p. 119; State v. Laredo Ice Co., 96 Texas, 467; Cooley's Constitutional Limitations, 401.

The action of the court in overruling appellant's motion for a new trial, and its refusal to set aside the verdict of the jury, and in entering judgment upon the verdict against appellant, [***7] results in depriving appellant of its property without due process of law, in violation of section 1 of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. Cotting v. Kansas City Stock Yards Co., 183 U.S., 101; Gates v. Hooper, 90 Texas, 563; State v. Shippers Comp. Co., 95 Texas, 603; Railway Co. v. State, 87 S. W. Rep., 336.

The court erred in overruling defendant's general exception to the motion or application of the State for the appointment of a receiver. (Tr., p. 655); Revised Statutes, arts. 1177, 1181, 1191 and 1337; Hall v. Jackson, 3 Texas, 305; Nye v. Gribble, 70 Texas, 458; May v. Taylor, 22 Texas, 348; Mann v. Falcon, 25 Texas, 276; Bledsoe v. Wills, 22 Texas, 650; McConkey v. Henderson, 24 Texas, 212; Ex parte Lange, 18 Wallace, 175; Townes' Pleading, pages 18 to 20; Bailey on Jurisdiction, sec. 23; Pomeroy Eq. Remedies, sec. 118. That a proceeding after judgment must be brought as a new suit: Munds v. Cassidey, 98 N. C., 558; Thayer v. Hart, 24 Fed. Rep., 558.

Robert V. Davidson, Attorney-General; Jewel P. Lightfoot, Assistant; John W. Brady, County Attorney; Gregory & Batts and Allen & Hart, for appellee.

The anti-trust Act of March 31, [***8] 1903, expressly preserves all the rights of the State to recover penalties, to forfeit charters and prohibit foreign corporations from doing business in the State, and the cause of action asserted in this cause is not affected by the repeal of the Act of 1899. Anti-trust law, May 25, 1899, General Laws of Texas, Twenty-sixth Legislature, p. 246, and amendment, General Laws of Texas, Twenty-sixth Legislature, p. 310; Anti-trust law of March 31, 1903, General Laws of Texas, Twenty-eighth Legislature, p. 119, sec. 17; Penal Code, arts. 15, 16, 17, 18, 19 and 20; Snyder v. Compton, 87 Texas, 374.

This being a civil suit to recover statutory penalties, limitation does not run against the State. Acts Twenty-sixth Legislature, General Laws of 1899, pp. 246 and 310; Acts Twenty-eighth Legislature, General Laws, p. 119; Brown v. Sneed, 77 Texas, 471; Mellinger v. Houston, 68 Texas, 37; Governor v. Albright, 21 Texas, 753; Davidson v. Missouri Pacific Ry. Co., 3 Texas App. Civ., 217; State v. Waters-Pierce Oil Company, 67 S. W. Rep., 1057; Stockwell v. United States, 13 Wallace, 531; In re Rosey, Federal Cases, 12,066; United States v. Colt, Federal Cases, 14,839; United States v. Lyman, [***9] Federal Cases, 15,647; United States v. Bougher, Federal Cases, 14,627; United States v. C. B. Church, Federal Cases, 14,762; Thompson v. Bassett, 5 Indiana, 535.

The Acts of 1899 and 1903, being valid acts, the court did not err in overruling the several special exceptions. State v. Laredo Ice Co., 96 Texas, 461; State v. Shippers' Compress Co., 95 Texas, 603; National Cotton Oil Co. v. The State, 6 Texas Court Rep., 510; 197 U.S., 115; State v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co., 91 S. W. Rep., 214.

The anti-trust law of 1903 did not ameliorate the penalty provided for violations of the Act of 1899. Wall v. State, 18 Texas, 682; Martin v. State, 24 Texas, 61; Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, vol. 28, sec. (c), p. 738.

The verdict of the jury was amply warranted by the evidence, was not excessive and showed neither bias nor prejudice on the part of the jury against the defendant. Texas anti-trust Act of 1899; State v. Laredo Ice Company, 96 Texas, 467; Martin v. Johnston, 33 S. W. Rep., 306; 13 Am. and Eng. Ency. of Law (2d ed.), 60; Southern Express Company v. Walker, 92 Va., 66; 15 Century Digest, secs. 3304-3309; State v. Rodman, 58 Minn., 402; 27 Am. and Eng. Ency. of Law, 779.

The [***10] judgment did not deprive defendant of its property without due process of law in contravention of section 1 of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States; in that the court proceeded under a valid law of the State of Texas in accordance with the law, passed in the lawful exercise of the police power of the State. Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Texas, 177 U.S., 28; Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. State, 44 S. W. Rep., 936; National Cotton Oil Co. v. State, 197 U.S., 115; Smiley v. Kansas, 196 U.S., 447.

Judges: KEY, Associate Justice.

Opinion by: KEY

Opinion

---

[*167] [**919] KEY, Associate Justice. -- This case involves alleged violations of the anti-trust laws of this State, and as the charge of the able judge who tried the case sufficiently states the nature of the suit as it was submitted to the jury, and correctly defines the provisions of the anti-trust statutes applicable to the case, and states the issues that were decided by the jury, it is deemed proper to set out the charge in full, which is as follows:

"Gentlemen of the jury: In this case the State of Texas, as plaintiff, has sued the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, a private corporation chartered under the laws of the State [***11] of Missouri, and doing business in Texas by virtue of a permit issued to it by the State of Texas on May 31, 1900, as defendant, to cancel said permit and to recover penalties for violations of the anti-trust laws of [*168] Texas, which the State alleges the defendant has committed on each and every day from May 31, 1900, to April 29, 1907.

"The State alleges that on or about January 1, 1870, John D. Rockefeller, John D. Archbold, H. H. Rogers, Henry M. Flagler, and a number of other persons conceived the scheme of monopolizing and controlling the business of refining, transporting and selling petroleum and the products thereof throughout the United States, including the State of Texas, and that said persons to that end and for that purpose entered into a conspiracy among themselves and with other individuals and corporations, including the defendant corporation, which conspiracy the State alleges continued in force and effect from the date of its formation until the date of the filing of the State's second amended petition in this case, and the State further alleges that in pursuance of said alleged conspiracy the defendant has done various acts and entered into various agreements [***12] which constitute violations of the anti-trust laws of Texas.

"The State further alleges that the defendant's predecessor, the Waters-Pierce Oil Company, incorporated in 1878, on or about the 5th day of October, 1894, entered into a contract with the Eagle Refining Company, A. W. Clem and certain other individuals named in its petition, by the terms of which defendant acquired the property of said Eagle Refining Company, situated in the city of Dallas, Texas, and the right to operate its business under the name of the said Eagle Refining Company. It further alleges that the defendant did, subsequent to May 31, 1900, operate said Eagle Refining Company and maintain the plant thereof at Dallas, as an apparently competing concern for various purposes prohibited by the anti-trust laws.

"The State further alleges that in the year 1896, the defendant's said predecessor bought out the business of the Texas Oil and Gasoline Company and of one Roy Campbell, who were at that time doing business in the city of San Antonio, Texas, and elsewhere, and entered into contracts and agreements with the said Texas Oil and Gasoline Company and Roy Campbell, whereby said Texas Oil and Gasoline Company [***13] was thereafter to be operated under said name by defendant as an apparently competing concern with defendant at San Antonio, in the sale of the products of petroleum. It further alleges that said Texas Oil and Gasoline Company was operated by defendant as a concern apparently competing with it at San Antonio subsequent to May 31, 1900, for various purposes in violation of the anti-trust laws of the State. For full particulars of the State's allegations you are referred to its second amended original petition.

"The defendant denies all and singular the allegations of the State, and in addition to various other special defenses, pleads specially that, if it has entered into any of the agreements or committed any of the acts alleged by the State, none of same constitute violations of the anti-trust laws of Texas, because said agreements were made and said acts done (if at all) solely with reference to subjects of interstate commerce. For full particulars of defendant's allegations, you are referred to its third amended original answer.

[*169] "As the law of the case you are instructed as follows, viz.:

"I. -- The burden of proof rests upon the State to establish the affirmative [***14] of the issues which will hereafter be submitted in this charge for your consideration by a preponderance of the evidence, and you will find in favor of the defendant on each issue so submitted for your consideration, except such issue or issues, if any, as you find that the State has established by a preponderance of the evidence, and you will return a general [**920] verdict for the defendant, unless you find that the State has established by a preponderance of the evidence some combination or combinations of facts which will entitle it to recover under the law as it is given you in charge by the court.

"II. -- The statute known as the anti-trust law of 1899 was in force on May 31, 1900, and thereafter remained continuously in force until March 31, 1903.

"For the purposes of this charge you are instructed that this Act made it unlawful for any corporation transacting or conducting any kind of business in this State to enter into, or become a party to, any agreement or understanding with any other corporation or individual to fix or regulate the price in Texas of any article of manufacture or merchandise or to control or limit in Texas the trade in any article of manufacture [***15] or merchandise.

"You are further instructed that said statute also made it unlawful for any corporation transacting or conducting any kind of business in this State to bring about or permit any union or combination of its capital, property, trade or acts with the capital, property, trade or acts of any other person or corporation, whereby the price in Texas of any article of manufacture or merchandise would be fixed, or sought to be fixed, regulated or sought to be regulated; or whereby the price in Texas of any article of manufacture or merchandise would be reasonably calculated to be fixed or regulated, or whereby the trade in such article of manufacture or merchandise in Texas would be sought to be controlled or limited, or would be reasonably calculated to be controlled or limited.

"The statute known as the anti-trust law of 1903, became effective on March 31, 1903, and has since continued in force. For the purposes of this charge you are instructed that this statute defines a trust to be a combination of capital, skill or acts, by two or more persons, firms, corporations or associations of persons, or either two or more of them, for either, any or all of the following purposes, [***16] viz.:

"1. -- To create or which may tend to create or carry out restrictions in trade or commerce in Texas, or to create or carry out restrictions in the free pursuit in Texas of any business authorized or permitted by the laws of this State.

"2. -- To fix, maintain or increase the price of merchandise in Texas.

"3. -- To prevent or lessen competition in Texas in the sale of merchandise.

"4. -- To abstain from engaging in business or in the sale of merchandise in Texas, or any portion thereof.

"Said statute of 1903 further defines a monopoly to be a combination [*170] or consolidation of two or more corporations when effected in any of the following methods, viz.:

"1. -- When the direction of the affairs of two or more corporations is in any manner brought under the same management or control for the purpose of producing, or where such common management or control tends to create, a trust as above defined.

"2. -- When any corporation acquires the shares or certificates of stock, franchise or other rights, or the physical properties or any part thereof of any other corporation for the purpose of preventing or lessening, or where the effect of such acquisition tends to affect [***17] or lessen competition, whether such acquisition is accomplished directly or through the instrumentality of trustees or otherwise.

"III. -- Oil, all other products of petroleum, and goods, wares or merchandise of any character which the defendant or its agents may have purchased or acquired in any manner outside of the State of Texas and caused to be transported to its agents or others within the State, are the subjects of interstate commerce when they enter this State, and so remain until such commodities are removed from the original tanks, vessels or other packages in which they are imported into the State and become mixed with the common mass of property of similar character in this State. The anti-trust laws of Texas have no reference to agreements or pools or arrangements of any character concerning subjects of interstate commerce, and no agreement, pool or other arrangement, if any, which the defendant may have entered into with reference to the sale of any subject of interstate commerce can be considered by you as violating any antitrust law of Texas. But neither oil purchased by the defendant from the Corsicana Refinery or elsewhere in Texas, nor other merchandise purchased [***18] by defendant at points in Texas, nor such oil or other merchandise purchased by defendant at points outside the State and transported into the State and removed from the original packages or vessels in which it was brought into the State and mingled with other property of similar character in the State, is the subject of interstate commerce, but on the contrary is the subject of local commerce, and any agreement or pool or arrangement entered into by defendant with reference to such property or the sale thereof, if any such sale there were, would be unlawful, if in violation of the anti-trust laws of this State.

"IV. -- A corporation such as defendant can only act through its agents and servants, but such a corporation is not liable for all of the acts of its agents or servants. It is liable, however, for the acts done in the scope of their employment and agency, and is also liable for the acts of its agents which it has authorized such agents to perform, and it is also liable for the unauthorized acts of its agents, if any, which have been knowingly acquiesced in or ratified by the governing body of said corporation.

"V. -- Much evidence has been introduced before you relating to [***19] the doings and agreements of the agents of corporations other than defendant, and to the doings and agreements of defendant's predecessor's agents prior to June 1, 1900, and to the doings and agreements of defendant's agents, and the agents of other corporations, [*171] outside the State [**921] of Texas, and to the doings and agreements of individuals both prior and subsequent to June 1, 1900, and both outside and within the State of Texas. None of this evidence is competent or can be considered by you against the defendant, except within the limitations and for the purposes hereinafter stated, viz.:

"If you find from a preponderance of the other evidence in the case, independent of all declarations or statements made by any person or persons, except their evidence given while testifying by deposition or personally as witnesses on the trial of this case, that on June 1, 1900, there was formed or existed an agreement between the governing officers of defendant and the governing officers of any of the other corporations alleged in the State's petition to be co-conspirators with defendant relating to the management of defendant's business, or between the governing officers [***20] of defendant and any of the individuals alleged in the State's petition to be co-conspirators with defendant relating to the management of defendant's business, then you may consider for what, if anything, you think it worth, such acts or declarations of all the parties to said agreement, if any, and such acts and declarations of their authorized agents, if any, as were done or made, as the case may be, during the existence of said agreement, if any, and in furtherance of its execution, for the purpose of determining the character of said agreement, and whether or not it contemplated a violation by defendant of the anti-trust laws of Texas.

"You may further consider for what, if anything, you think it worth as tending to show or explain the course of defendant's dealing in Texas, said evidence, if any, of what it did through its duly appointed and authorized agents, if any, outside the State.

"None of said evidence can be considered by you against the defendant for any other purpose whatsoever, and none of it can be so considered by you against the defendant for said purposes, except such of it, if any, as you think proper to be considered when tested by the rules above stated relating [***21] to its competency.

"VI. -- No agreement made by the defendant outside the State of Texas, to violate the anti-trust laws of Texas, if any such there were, can be made the basis for forfeiting its permit to do business in Texas, or for imposing penalties upon it, unless such agreement was executed or attempted to be executed in Texas by the duly authorized agents of defendant; but inasmuch as the undisputed evidence in the case shows that the defendant has continuously maintained its agents in this State and prosecuted its business therein since May 31, 1900, you will be authorized to convict it of violating the anti-trust laws of Texas, if you find from a preponderance of the evidence in favor of the State on the issues submitted for your consideration in paragraphs VII, VIII, IX, X or XI of this charge.

"VII. -- If you find from a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant company, acting through its duly appointed and authorized agents, entered into or became a party to an agreement or understanding with the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, on June 1, 1900, to fix or regulate the price in Texas of oil refined from [*172] petroleum, and if you further find from a preponderance [***22] of the evidence that the defendant company remained or continued to be a party to said agreement or understanding, if any, and persisted in carrying same out in Texas, if any, through its duly authorized agents on June 1, 1900, or on any other date or dates subsequent to June 1, 1900, and prior to March 31, 1903, and if you further find from a preponderance of the evidence that the oil with reference to which said agreement or understanding, if any, was so made and carried out, was the subject of local as distinguished from interstate commerce, you will return a verdict for the State and say by your verdict, we, the jury, find for the State on the issues submitted for our consideration in paragraph seven of the court's charge. You are instructed in this connection that if you find in favor of the State on the issue above submitted for your consideration in this paragraph of the charge, each day embraced between May 31, 1900, and March 31, 1903, during which the defendant remained a party to the agreement or understanding herein mentioned, if there were any such agreement or understanding, and if it remained a party to same on any of said days, would constitute a separate and distinct [***23] violation of the anti-trust laws of Texas.

"If you do not find from a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant was on June 1, 1900, or on some date subsequent thereto and prior to March 31, 1903, through the action of its duly appointed and authorized agents, a party to an agreement or understanding with the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey to fix or regulate the price in Texas of oil refined from petroleum, and if you do not further find from a preponderance of the evidence that the oil with reference to which defendant entered into said agreement or understanding, if any such there were, was the subject of local, as distinguished from interstate, commerce, you will say by your verdict, we, the jury, find for the defendant on the issues submitted for our consideration in paragraph seven of the court's charge.

"VIII. -- If you find from a preponderance of the evidence that on June 1, 1900, or on any date subsequent thereto and prior to March 31, 1903, the defendant acting through its duly appointed and authorized agents, had brought about or permitted any combination or union of its capital with the capital of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, whereby the price in [***24] Texas of oil refined from petroleum, other than oil which was the subject of interstate as distinguished from local commerce, was sought to be fixed or regulated, or whereby the price in Texas of such oil would be reasonably calculated to be fixed [**922] or regulated (or whereby the trade in such oil in Texas was sought to be controlled or limited), you will return a verdict for the State and say by your verdict, we, the jury, find for the State on the issues submitted for our consideration in paragraph eight of the court's charge. In this connection you are instructed that if the defendant became a party to a pool of the character mentioned in this paragraph of the charge, each day between May 31, 1900, and March 31, 1903, that it remained a party to such pool, if there were any such days, would [*173] constitute a separate violation of the anti-trust laws of Texas. If you do not find from a preponderance of the evidence that on June 1, 1900, or that on some date subsequent thereto and prior to March 31, 1903, the defendant acting through its duly appointed and authorized agents had brought about or permitted a combination or union of its capital with the capital of the [***25] Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, and if you do not further find from a preponderance of the evidence that by said combination or union, if such there were, the price in Texas of oil refined from petroleum, other than oil which was the subject of interstate as distinguished from local commerce, was sought to be fixed or regulated, or that thereby the price in Texas of such oil was reasonably calculated to be fixed or regulated, or that thereby the trade in such oil in Texas was sought to be controlled or limited, you will say by your verdict, we, the jury, find for the defendant on the issues submitted for our consideration in paragraph eight of the court's charge.

