In Standard Oil Co., this Court reasoned that the state legislature knew it did not have the power to enact laws that regulated interstate commerce and thus did not intend to enact unconstitutional law. 100 S.W. at 710. We further reasoned that the state legislature intended to correct and punish the wrongs to trade that were being perpetrated against commerce within the state, which the Sherman [\[\*\*19\]](#) Antitrust Act could not reach and for which no efficient remedy was available. Id. Thus, HN20↑ we concluded that "the Legislature clearly intended to prohibit trusts, combinations, and agreements affecting all commerce not covered by the federal statute, and upon which it had a right to legislate. It did not intend to stop short of its power or to exceed it." Id. at 711.

The language of Tennessee's antitrust statutes have not changed significantly since Standard Oil Co. Compare Standard Oil Co., 100 S.W. at 707, with Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-25-101 (2001). In Standard Oil Co., however, this Court did not rely upon the plain language of this state's antitrust statutes in determining its scope. Rather, our holding was based upon two principles of statutory construction. First, HN21↑ courts have a duty to construe statutes in such a manner as to avoid conflict with the United States Constitution if the construction can be accomplished without disregarding the legislature's intent. Standard Oil Co., 100 S.W. at 710. Second, HN22↑ although a statute includes terms that are overly broad, courts have a duty to limit a [\[\*\*20\]](#) statute's application to circumstances within the legislature's intent. Id. at 711. We based our holding upon the state legislature's constitutionally permitted scope of authority in the areas of antitrust law and interstate commerce that prevailed at that time as well as upon our duty to construe a statute so as to avoid any unconstitutionality.

The dual sovereignty theory presuming mutually exclusive jurisdiction for state antitrust laws and federal antitrust laws has since been rejected. HN23↑ The United States Supreme Court now considers state antitrust regulations to supplement and complement the federal antitrust laws and the enforcement of these state laws to be consistent with the federal antitrust laws. See ARC Am. Corp., 490 U.S. at 101-02. Furthermore, a state generally is not prohibited from giving effect to its antitrust laws merely because the regulation affects interstate commerce. See Standard Oil Co. v. Tenn., 217 U.S. 413, 54 L. Ed. 817, 30 S. Ct. 543 \(1910\). Specifically, HN24↑ a state antitrust regulation that has only incidental effects on interstate commerce and is regulated evenhandedly to effectuate a legitimate local interest does not [\[\*\*21\]](#) run afoul of the Commerce Clause unless the burden imposed on interstate commerce is clearly excessive when compared to the punitive local benefits. See Pike v. Bruce Church, Inc., 397 U.S. 137, 142, 25 L. Ed. 2d 174, 90 S. Ct. 844 \(1970\).

[*522] HN25 In construing statutes, we must ascertain and give effect to the legislature's intent and purpose. See Lipscomb v. Doe, 32 S.W.3d 840, 844 \(Tenn. 2000\). Furthermore, we must construe a statute so as to avoid a constitutional conflict if any reasonable construction exists that satisfies the Constitution's requirements. Davis-Kidd Booksellers, Inc. v. McWherter, 866 S.W.2d 520, 529 \(Tenn. 1993\). Thus, in construing the reach of the TTPA, we must develop a standard that is consistent with the legislature's intent and purpose without offending constitutional provisions.

HN26 The TTPA prohibits agreements adversely affecting competition in the "sale of articles imported into this state" or influencing the "price or the cost to the producer or the consumer of any such product or article." Tenn. Code Ann. § 47-25-101 (2001). According to its plain language, the TTPA prohibits arrangements that [**22] decrease competition or affect the prices of goods even if those goods arrived in Tennessee through interstate commerce. The act does not contain any language indicating that the legislature intended that the scope of the act be limited to intrastate commerce. Had the legislature intended such a limitation, the legislature simply could have included the limitation in the act.

In developing a standard for determining the application of the TTPA to a particular set of circumstances, we must determine whether the focus should be upon the anticompetitive conduct of the defendant or the effects of the anticompetitive conduct. In examining whether the circumstances of a particular case fall within the TTPA, the Court of Appeals has employed a conduct-based test focusing upon the character of the defendant's anticompetitive conduct giving rise to the dispute. See Lynch Display Corp. v. Nat'l Souvenir Ctr., Inc., 640 S.W.2d 837, 840 \(Tenn. Ct. App. 1982\) (holding that a lease between a Tennessee corporation and a Maryland corporation and an associated franchise agreement between a Tennessee corporation and a District of Columbia corporation were "predominantly interstate [**23] in character" and "only incidentally affected intrastate commerce"). Any test focusing upon the anticompetitive conduct giving rise to the dispute, however, would be difficult to apply when the plaintiff is an indirect purchaser who did not transact directly with the defendant.

Furthermore, HN27 the purpose of the TTPA is to protect the state's trade or commerce affected by the anticompetitive conduct. See State ex rel. Astor v. Schlitz Brewing Co., 104 Tenn. 715, 59 S.W. 1033, 1039 \(Tenn. 1900\) ("The thing condemned and punished by the Act is injury to trade. The thing intended to be protected is trade. . . ."). Thus, we reject any standard that requires examination of the anticompetitive conduct in determining whether a particular case falls within the scope of the TTPA. Rather, the effect of the anticompetitive conduct on Tennessee trade or commerce is determinative of whether the TTPA is applicable under the circumstances.

We must now determine the standard to employ in examining whether the effects of the anticompetitive conduct on Tennessee trade or commerce fall within the scope of the TTPA. One possible standard is a "predominant effects" standard. The term [**24] "predominant" is defined as "something greater or superior in power and influence to others with which it is connected or compared." Black's Law Dictionary 1177 (6th ed. 1990). Thus, HN28 anticompetitive conduct cannot predominantly affect both intrastate commerce and interstate commerce. Under a "predominant effects" standard, courts would be required to [*523] weigh the effects of anticompetitive conduct on Tennessee commerce against its effects on interstate commerce and determine which effects are greater. If the effects on interstate commerce are greater than the effects on Tennessee commerce, the TTPA would not apply.

In construing the TTPA, other jurisdictions have utilized a "predominant" standard in applying a conduct-based test. See e.g., In re Terazosin Hydrochloride Antitrust Litig., 160 F. Supp. 2d 1365, 1378 \(S.D. Fla. 2001\); FTC v. Mylan Labs., Inc., 99 F. Supp. 2d 1, 4 \(D.C. Cir. 1999\). In our modern society, however, interstate and international transactions have become more common. Numerous technological advances, including the internet, enable consumers and businesses from opposite areas of the country to engage in transactions with ease. [**25] See generally, John Rothchild, Protecting the Digital Consumer: The Limits of Cyberspace Utopianism, 74 Ind. L.J. 893 \(1999\) (discussing the increase in business-to-consumer online commerce). Adoption of a predominant effects standard would render the TTPA obsolete except in those rare circumstances in which the effects on intrastate commerce are greater than the effects on interstate commerce. We do not believe that this standard is sufficient to advance the TTPA's purpose of protecting Tennessee trade and commerce.

We conclude that HN29[↑] the proper standard for determining whether a case falls within the scope of the TTPA is a "substantial effects" standard. Pursuant to this standard, courts must decide whether the alleged anticompetitive conduct affects Tennessee trade or commerce to a substantial degree. Federal courts have applied the substantial effects standard to the Sherman Antitrust Act. See Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. California, 509 U.S. 764, 796, 125 L. Ed. 2d 612, 113 S. Ct. 2891 \(1993\) (concluding that "the Sherman Act applies to foreign conduct that was meant to produce and did in fact produce some substantial effect in the United States"); McLain v. Real Estate Bd. of New Orleans, Inc., 444 U.S. 232, 242, 62 L. Ed. 2d 441, 100 S. Ct. 502 \(1980\) [**26] (holding that "to establish the jurisdictional element of a Sherman Act violation it would be sufficient for petitioners to demonstrate a substantial effect on interstate commerce" generated by activity that is primarily local in nature). Other states also apply a form of substantial effects standard in determining whether an action falls within their antitrust statute. See e.g., Amarel v. Connell, 202 Cal. App. 3d 137, 248 Cal.Rptr. 276, 284 \(Cal. Ct. App. 1988\) (holding that a cause of action under California's antitrust law is not precluded so long as the anticompetitive conduct had a "direct, substantial and reasonably foreseeable effect within the state"); Olstad v. Microsoft Corp., 2005 WI 121, 700 N.W.2d 139 \(Wis. 2005\) (concluding that Wisconsin's antitrust statute applies if the actionable conduct "substantially affects' the people of Wisconsin and has impacts in [the] state, even if the illegal activity resulting in those impacts occurred predominantly or exclusively outside [the] state"). We believe that HN30[↑] a "substantial effects" standard furthers the TTPA's goal of protecting Tennessee commerce without offending constitutional provisions.

[**27] HN31[↑] The determination of whether an effect is substantial does not involve "mathematical nicety." Anesthesia Advantage, Inc. v. Metz Group, 912 F.2d 397, 401 \(10th Cir. 1990\). Rather, the test is pragmatic, turning upon the particular facts of the case. See id. at 402; Huelsman v. Civic Ctr. Corp., 873 F.2d 1171, 1175 \(8th Cir. 1989\). The anticompetitive conduct, however, need not threaten the demise of Tennessee businesses or affect market prices to substantially affect intrastate [*524] commerce. See Hosp. Bldg. Co. v. Trs. of Rex Hosp., 425 U.S. 738, 745-47, 48 L. Ed. 2d 338, 96 S. Ct. 1848 \(1976\) (referring to the Sherman Antitrust Act).

In the present case, Freeman alleges that Eastman engaged in conduct from its principal place of business in Kingsport, Tennessee, including: 1) communicating with its co-defendants through in-person meetings, telephone calls, letters, and email resulting in an agreement to fix the prices of sorbates; 2) implementing the agreement by drafting price schedules and letters to third parties, adjusting prices and production volumes of sorbates, and taking orders and implementing sales to customers at the new [**28] prices; and 3) attempting to conceal its conduct by limiting the number of its employees having knowledge of the agreement. These allegations primarily relate to the defendants' actions in conspiring and implementing the conspiracy to fix the prices of sorbates.

The focus under the substantial effects standard, however, is not on the anticompetitive conduct itself but on the effects of the conduct on Tennessee commerce. While Freeman alleged that Eastman took orders and implemented sales to customers at the new prices from Tennessee, we do not believe that this bare allegation without more is sufficient to establish that Tennessee commerce was substantially affected. Furthermore, Freeman fails to establish how the defendants' anticompetitive conduct affected Tennessee commerce to a substantial degree even though the conduct resulted in Freeman paying higher prices to retailers for items containing sorbates. To the contrary, there is no indication that the items that Freeman purchased contained sorbates manufactured by Eastman, the lone defendant with ties to Tennessee. Therefore, we conclude that Freeman's claim does not fall within the scope of the TTPA and that the trial court [**29] properly granted the defendants' motion to dismiss Freeman's claim.

B. Unjust Enrichment

We must next determine whether the trial court erred in denying the defendants' motion for summary judgment regarding Freeman's claim of unjust enrichment. HN32[↑] Summary judgment is appropriate only when the moving party demonstrates that no genuine issues of material fact exist and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. See Tenn. R. Civ. P. 56.04; Penley v. Honda Motor Co., 31 S.W.3d 181, 183 \(Tenn. 2000\). HN33[↑] Its purpose "is to resolve controlling issues of law rather than to find facts or resolve disputed factual issues." XJ

Props., Inc. v. Racetrac Petroleum, Inc., 151 S.W.3d 443, 446 (Tenn. 2004) (citation omitted). Thus, HN34[<sup>1</sup>] we must review a trial court's decision to grant or deny summary judgment de novo with no presumption of correctness attached to the trial court's conclusions. See Mooney v. Sneed, 30 S.W.3d 304, 306 (Tenn. 2000). We must also view the evidence in the light most favorable to the non-moving party, drawing all reasonable inferences in the non-moving party's favor. Staples v. CBL & Assocs., Inc., 15 S.W.3d 83, 89 (Tenn. 2000). [**30]

HN35[<sup>1</sup>] We have previously recognized two types of implied contracts: contracts implied in fact and contracts implied in law. See Paschall's, Inc. v. Dozier, 219 Tenn. 45, 407 S.W.2d 150, 153-54 (Tenn. 1966). Contracts implied in fact arise under circumstances establishing the parties' mutual intention to contract. Id. at 154 (citation omitted). Contracts implied in law or quasi contracts are created by law without the parties' assent and are based upon reason and justice. Id. (citation omitted); Angus v. City of Jackson, 968 S.W.2d 804, 808 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1997). Courts may impose a contract implied in law where no [*525] contract exists under various quasi contractual theories, including unjust enrichment. Whitehaven Cnty. Baptist Church v. Holloway, 973 S.W.2d 592, 596 (Tenn. 1998).

HN36[<sup>1</sup>] The elements of an unjust enrichment claim are: 1) "[a] benefit conferred upon the defendant by the plaintiff"; 2) "appreciation by the defendant of such benefit"; and 3) "acceptance of such benefit under such circumstances that it would be inequitable for him to retain the benefit without payment of the value thereof." Paschall's, Inc., 407 S.W.2d at 155. [**31] The most significant requirement of an unjust enrichment claim is that the benefit to the defendant be unjust. Id.; Whitehaven Cnty. Baptist Church, 973 S.W.2d at 596. The plaintiff must further demonstrate that he or she has exhausted all remedies against the person with whom the plaintiff enjoyed privity of contract. Paschall's, Inc., 407 S.W.2d at 155; Whitehaven Cnty. Baptist Church, 973 S.W.2d at 596.

HN37[<sup>1</sup>] A plaintiff need not be in privity with a defendant to recover under a claim of unjust enrichment. See Paschall's, Inc., 407 S.W.2d at 154. Thus, Freeman may bring a cause of action for unjust enrichment against the defendants even though Freeman did not purchase the items containing sorbates directly from the defendants. The defendants, however, contend that Freeman must establish that it conferred a direct benefit, rather than an indirect or incidental benefit, upon the defendants. HN38[<sup>1</sup>] A benefit is any form of advantage that has a measurable value including the advantage of being saved from an expense or loss. Lawrence Warehouse Co. v. Twohig, 224 F.2d 493, 498 (8th Cir. 1955). The underlying [**32] principle of the doctrine of unjust enrichment is that a party who receives a benefit that he or she desires, under circumstances rendering retention of the benefit without providing compensation inequitable, must compensate the provider of the benefit. Paschall's, Inc., 407 S.W.2d at 154. In accordance with this underlying principle, we conclude that HN39[<sup>1</sup>] to recover for unjust enrichment, a plaintiff need not establish that the defendant received a direct benefit from the plaintiff. Rather, a plaintiff may recover for unjust enrichment against a defendant who receives any benefit from the plaintiff if the defendant's retention of the benefit would be unjust. Our conclusion is consistent with other jurisdictions that have also concluded that the benefit received by a defendant need not be direct to establish an unjust enrichment claim. See, e.g., Hirsch v. Bank of Am., 107 Cal. App. 4th 708, 132 Cal.Rptr.2d 220, 229 (Cal. App. 2003) (holding that to confer a benefit, the plaintiff need not pay the money directly to the defendant); HPI Health Care Servs., Inc. v. Mt. Vernon Hosp., Inc., 131 Ill. 2d 145, 545 N.E.2d 672, 679, 137 Ill. Dec. 19 (Ill. 1989) [**33] (permitting recovery of a benefit transferred to the defendant by a third party where the third party mistakenly gave the benefit to the defendant instead of the plaintiff, where the defendant procured the benefit from the third party through wrongful conduct, or where the plaintiff's claim to the benefit is superior to the defendant's claim); State v. ex rel. Palmer v. Unisys Corp., 637 N.W.2d 142, 155 (Iowa 2001) (concluding that "benefits can be direct or indirect, and can involve benefits conferred by third parties").

The defendants further contend that Freeman failed to establish that it exhausted its remedies against the supermarket from which it purchased the food products that contained sorbates. The defendants submitted various affidavits to demonstrate that Freeman had not sought to recover from the supermarket. We conclude that through these affidavits, the [*526] defendants have negated the exhaustion of remedies element of Freeman's unjust enrichment claim. Thus, the burden shifts to Freeman to provide specific facts establishing the existence of disputed issues of material fact that must be resolved by the trier of fact. See Blair v. West Town Mall, 130 S.W.3d 761, 767 (Tenn. 2004). [**34]

In response, Freeman submitted an affidavit from its counsel maintaining that he was unaware of any viable claims against the supermarket. Freeman essentially contends that pursuit of any causes of action against the supermarket would have been futile. Although our courts have not addressed the issue of futility with regard to the exhaustion of remedies element of an unjust enrichment claim, our courts have recognized this exception in other causes of action with an exhaustion of remedies requirement. See e.g., Wilson v. Miller, 194 Tenn. 390, 250 S.W.2d 575, 578 (Tenn. 1952) (action by a union member to recover union funds pursuant to a union agreement); Cantrell v. Walker Die Casting, Inc., 121 S.W.3d 391, 396 n.3 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2003) (ERISA action). Likewise, we conclude that HN40[↑] to maintain an action for unjust enrichment, a plaintiff is not required to exhaust all remedies against the party with whom the plaintiff is in privity if the pursuit of the remedies would be futile. We do not believe, however, that a bare allegation that any attempt to exhaust its remedies against the supermarket would be futile without providing a factual basis to [**35] support the allegation is sufficient to establish a disputed issue of material fact as to the exhaustion-of-remedies element of Freeman's unjust enrichment claim against the defendants. Thus, the trial court erred in denying the defendants' motion for summary judgment.

CONCLUSION

We conclude that although Freeman may bring a claim against the defendants under the TTPA as an indirect purchaser, the conduct of which Freeman complains does not fall within the scope of the act because Tennessee commerce was not substantially affected by the conduct. As to the unjust enrichment claim, we hold that Freeman was not required to establish that the defendants directly benefitted from the transaction between Freeman and the supermarket. We further hold, however, that the trial court erred in declining to grant the defendants' motion for summary judgment as to the unjust enrichment claim due to Freeman's failure to provide a factual basis to support its allegation that any attempt to exhaust its remedies against the supermarket would have been futile. Accordingly, we affirm the judgment of the Court of Appeals in part and reverse in part, and we remand the case to the trial court for further [**36] proceedings consistent with this opinion.

The costs of appeal are taxed to the appellant, Freeman Industries, and its sureties, for which execution may issue if necessary.

JANICE M. HOLDER, JUSTICE

Hydril Co., L.P. v. Grant Prideco, L.P.

United States District Court for the Southern District of Texas, Houston Division

August 25, 2005, Decided

CIVIL ACTION NO. H-05-0337

Reporter

385 F. Supp. 2d 609 *; 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18647 **

HYDRIL COMPANY, L.P., et al., Plaintiffs, v. GRANT PRIDECO, L.P., et al., Defendants.

Subsequent History: Reversed by, in part, Vacated by, in part, Remanded by Hydril Co. LP v. Grant Prideco LP, 2007 U.S. App. LEXIS 1621 \(Fed. Cir., Jan. 25, 2007\)

Prior History: Hydril Co., L.P. v. Grant Prideco, L.P., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18646 \(S.D. Tex., July 26, 2005\)

Core Terms

---

Patent, motion to dismiss, alleges, apprehension, drill, breach of contract claim, antitrust, pipe, patent infringement, antitrust claim, infringement

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > Failure to State Claims

HN1 [] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A district court may dismiss a complaint under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) if it appears beyond doubt that a plaintiff can prove no set of facts consistent with his factual allegations which would entitle him to the requested relief. Thus, a court must determine whether the complaint states any valid claim for relief in the light most favorable to the plaintiff and with every doubt resolved in the plaintiff's behalf. The complaint must be liberally construed in favor of the plaintiff, and all facts pleaded in the complaint must be taken as true. However, the plaintiff must plead specific facts, not mere conclusory allegations, in order to avoid dismissal for failure to state a claim. Statements that merely create a suspicion that the plaintiff may have a right of action do not foreclose a motion to dismiss.

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Motion Practice > Content & Form

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > Failure to State Claims

**HN2** Motion Practice, Content & Form

In considering a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, a district court must limit itself to the contents of the pleadings, including attachments thereto. Documents attached to a motion to dismiss are considered part of the pleadings if they are referred to in the complaint and are central to the claim.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Enforcement & Execution > General Overview

Patent Law > Jurisdiction & Review > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Declaratory Judgments

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Declaratory Judgments > Federal Declaratory Judgments > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Patent Law > Remedies > Declaratory Judgments

**HN3** Judgments, Enforcement & Execution

The United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit has clearly held that as a matter of Federal Circuit antitrust law, the standards for determining jurisdiction in a declaratory judgment action of patent invalidity also define the minimum level of enforcement necessary to expose the patentee to a Walker Process claim for attempted monopolization. The test for determining jurisdiction in a declaratory judgment action challenging patent validity requires both (1) an explicit threat or other action by the patentee which creates a reasonable apprehension on the part of the plaintiff that it will face an infringement suit, and (2) present activity which could constitute infringement or concrete steps taken with the intent to conduct such activity. The first prong looks to the patent holder's conduct, and the second prong looks to the potential infringer's conduct. The reasonable apprehension of suit test requires more than the nervous state of mind of a possible infringer; it requires that the objective circumstances support such an apprehension.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

**HN4** Inequitable Conduct, Anticompetitive Conduct

Because a Walker Process claim is aimed at removing patent law immunity from antitrust claims, the level of enforcement required for a Walker Process claim is an issue associated with patent law and Federal Circuit law rather than Fifth Circuit law. Fifth Circuit law governs whether a patent holder has taken adequate steps to enforce the patent. Which actions can cause a patentee to lose the general protection of the patent law and to risk liability for antitrust damages is clearly an issue unique to the patent law -- and therefore inappropriate for resolution under the potentially varying interpretations of the regional circuits.

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > Pendent Claims

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Supplemental Jurisdiction > General Overview

**HN5** Supplemental Jurisdiction, Pendent Claims

If the federal claims are dismissed before trial, the state claims should be dismissed as well.

Counsel: [**1] For Hydril Company LP, Plaintiff: Mitchell D Lukin, Michael Hawes, Baker & Botts, Houston, TX; David Michael Rodi, Baker Botts LLP, Houston, TX.

For Hydril U.K., Ltd., Plaintiff: David Michael Rodi, Baker Botts LLP, Houston, TX; Michael Hawes, Baker Botts, Houston, TX.

For Grant Pridaco LP, Grant Pridaco Inc, Defendants: Gerard G Pecht, Peter Andrew Stokes, Fulbright and Jaworski, Houston, TX; Daniel James Pirolo, Fulbright and Jaworski LLP, Houston, TX.

Judges: Nancy F. Atlas, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: Nancy F. Atlas

Opinion

---

[*609] MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

This case is before the Court on the Motion to Dismiss Plaintiffs' Second Amended Complaint ("Motion to Dismiss") [Doc. # 38] filed by Defendants Grant Pridaco, L.P. and Grant Pridaco, Inc. (collectively "Grant Pridaco"). Plaintiffs Hydril Company L.P. and Hydril U.K., Ltd. ("Hydril") filed their Response [Doc. # 44] and [*610] Grant Pridaco filed a Reply [Doc. # 45]. Based on the Court's review of the full record and the application of governing legal authorities, the Court concludes that the Motion to Dismiss should be granted.

I. FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

The factual background of this [**2] case was set forth fully in the Court's Memorandum and Order entered June 22, 2005 ("June 22 Order"), and will not be repeated here. Briefly, Hydril manufactures and sells connections used to join segments of drill pipe in the drilling of oil and gas wells. Hydril U.K., Ltd., has sold finished drill pipe on one occasion. Grant Pridaco manufactures and sells both drill pipe and connections.

Grant Pridaco is the owner of United States Patent 6,244,631 ("the 631 Patent), which has been surrendered as part of a reissue proceeding beginning June 6, 2003. Hydril alleges that Grant Pridaco obtained the 631 Patent through fraud and, therefore, its assertion of rights under that patent constitutes a violation of the antitrust laws as recognized in Walker Process Equipment, Inc. v. Food Machinery & Chem. Corp., 382 U.S. 172, 15 L. Ed. 2d 247, 86 S. Ct. 347 \(1965\) (referred to herein as a "Walker Process" claim).

Hydril in this lawsuit asserted a breach of contract claim, a patent infringement claim involving a different patent, and the Walker Process claim. In the June 22 Order, the patent infringement claim was dismissed and Hydril was permitted to amend its Walker Process claim. Hydril filed [**3] its Second Amended Complaint, adding Hydril U.K., Ltd. as a Plaintiff. Defendants then moved to dismiss the Walker Process antitrust claim for a variety of reasons. Specifically, Defendants argue that Plaintiffs have failed to allege facts establishing that they have standing to assert the antitrust claim because they have not alleged an injury-in-fact, antitrust injury, or that Hydril is a proper antitrust Plaintiff. Defendants also argue that Hydril has failed to allege a viable Walker Process claim because they have not alleged facts to show that Grant Pridaco engaged in the required level of activity to enforce the 631 Patent. Defendants also asked the Court to decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over the pending breach of contract claim. The Motion to Dismiss has been fully briefed and it is now ripe for decision.

II. ANALYSIS

A. Standard for Motion to Dismiss

HN1[] A district court may dismiss a complaint under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) if it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts consistent with his factual allegations which would entitle him to the requested relief. *Manguno v. Prudential Property and Cas. Ins. Co.*, 276 F.3d 720, 725 \(5th Cir. 2002\). [**4] Thus, the Court must determine whether the complaint states any valid claim for relief in the light most favorable to the plaintiff and with every doubt resolved in the plaintiff's behalf. *Collins v. Morgan Stanley Dean Witter*, 224 F.3d 496, 498 \(5th Cir. 2000\). The complaint must be liberally construed in favor of the plaintiff, and all facts pleaded in the complaint must be taken as true. *Manguno*, 276 F.3d at 725. However, the plaintiff must plead specific facts, not mere conclusory allegations, in order to avoid dismissal for failure to state a claim. *Jones v. Alcoa*, 339 F.3d 359, 362 \(5th Cir. 2003\), cert. denied, 540 U.S. 1161, 157 L. Ed. 2d 1206, 124 S. Ct. 1173 (2004). Statements that merely create a suspicion that the plaintiff may have a right of action do not foreclose a motion to dismiss. *Campbell v. City of San Antonio*, 43 F.3d 973, 975 \(5th Cir. 1995\).

HN2[] "In considering a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, a district court [*611] must limit itself to the contents of the pleadings, including attachments thereto." *Collins*, 224 F.3d at 498. Documents "attached to a motion to dismiss are considered part [**5] of the pleadings if they are referred to in the complaint and are central to the claim." *Id. at 498-99*.

B. "Enforcement" Requirement for a Walker Process Claim

Grant Pridaco argues that Hydril's Walker Process claim should be dismissed because, inter alia, Hydril has not alleged the required level of activity by Grant Pridaco to enforce the 631 Patent. HN3[] The Federal Circuit has clearly held that "as a matter of Federal Circuit antitrust law, the standards . . . for determining jurisdiction in a Declaratory Judgment Action of patent invalidity also define the minimum level of enforcement' necessary to expose the patentee to a Walker Process claim for attempted monopolization."<sup>1</sup> *Unitherm Food Systems, Inc. v. Swift-Eckrich, Inc.*, 375 F.3d 1341, 1358 \(Fed. Cir. 2004\), cert. denied, 161 L. Ed. 2d 190, 125 S. Ct. 1399 (2005). The test for determining jurisdiction in a Declaratory Judgment Action challenging patent validity requires both (1) an explicit threat or other action by the patentee which creates a reasonable apprehension on the part of the plaintiff that it will face an infringement suit, and (2) present activity which could [*66] constitute infringement or concrete steps taken with the intent to conduct such activity. *Sierra Applied Sciences, Inc. v. Advanced Energy Industries, Inc.*, 363 F.3d 1361, 1373 \(Fed. Cir. 2004\) (citing *BP Chem. Ltd. v. Union Carbide Corp.*, 4 F.3d 975, 978 \(Fed. Cir. 1993\)). "The first prong looks to the patentholder's conduct, and the second prong looks to the potential infringer's conduct." Id. "The reasonable apprehension of suit' test requires more than the nervous state of mind of a possible infringer; it requires that the objective circumstances support such an apprehension." *Phillips Plastics Corp. v. Kato Hatsujou Kabushiki Kaisha*, 57 F.3d 1051, 1053-54 \(Fed. Cir. 1995\).

[**7] In this case, Hydril alleges that Grant Pridaco "has widely publicized the existence of the 631 Patent to the industry in general." Second Amended Complaint, P 48. Hydril also alleges that Grant Pridaco's attorney wrote a letter to OMSCO, a drill pipe distributor, asserting that certain orders from OMSCO's customers may violate the 631 Patent.<sup>2</sup> Id. Hydril also alleges "on information and belief that Grant Pridaco sent similar letters to "others in the pipe and drilling industries." Id.

<sup>1</sup>

HN4[] Because a Walker Process claim is aimed at removing patent law immunity from antitrust claims, the level of enforcement required for a Walker Process claim is an issue associated with patent law and Federal Circuit law rather than Fifth Circuit law governs whether a patentholder has taken adequate steps to enforce the patent. See *Unitherm Food Sys. v. Swift-Eckrich, Inc.*, 375 F.3d 1341, 1357 \(Fed. Cir. 2004\) ("which actions can cause a patentee . . . to lose the general protection of the patent law and to risk liability for [antitrust] damages is clearly an issue unique to the patent law -- and therefore inappropriate for resolution under the potentially varying interpretations of the regional circuits").

<sup>2</sup>

Neither Hydril Company L.P. nor Hydril U.K., Ltd., alleges enforcement activity by Grant Pridco which would create an objectively reasonable apprehension that Grant Pridco might sue Hydril for [*612] patent infringement. Initially, there is no [**8] allegation in the Second Amended Complaint that Grant Pridco has accused Hydril of infringing the 631 Patent. The general advertisements mentioning Grant Pridco's patent do not create a reasonable apprehension that Grant Pridco would sue Hydril. Similarly, the January 2003 letter to OMSCO does not contain an explicit threat or other language which, under the totality of the circumstances, could create a reasonable apprehension on Hydril's part that Grant Pridco might sue it for patent infringement. There is no allegation that any similar letters sent by Grant Pridco or its counsel to others in the pipe and drilling industry were more explicit or otherwise indicated Grant Pridco's intention to enforce the 631 Patent against Hydril or others. Additionally, there is no allegation that Grant Pridco engaged in any further activity to follow up on the January 2003 letter to OMSCO, or on any other similar letters to others.

Because Hydril has failed to allege enforcement activity by Grant Pridco which would create an objectively reasonable apprehension that Grant Pridco intended to enforce the 631 Patent against Hydril, Plaintiffs have failed to allege the minimum level of enforcement [**9] necessary to state a Walker Process claim against Grant Pridco.

Hydril has been given two opportunities to amend its Complaint, most recently after Defendants' explicit arguments that Hydril's antitrust claim failed for various enumerated reasons. Hydril has had ample time to investigate its Walker Process claim, yet has failed to allege legally sufficient facts. The Court concludes Hydril cannot state a claim upon which relief can be granted on the *Walker Process* claim, and that claim is dismissed.

C. Contract Claim

Hydril alleges that Grant Pridco breached a Merger Agreement entered into between the parties in 1997, pursuant to which the parties also entered into a licensing agreement referred to as the "Wedge Agreement." The Court has only supplemental jurisdiction over this state law breach of contract claim.

The case is in its very early stages. Indeed, the Court has not yet entered a docket control order and discovery except as to Plaintiffs' antitrust standing and antitrust injury has been stayed. Because the federal claims have been dismissed at such an early stage of the proceedings, under 28 U.S.C. § 1337\(c\)\(3\), the Court [**10] declines to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over Plaintiffs' pendent state law claim for breach of contract. See *Moore v. Willis Independent School Dist.*, 233 F.3d 871, 876 \(5th Cir. 2000\); *Robertson v. Neuromedical Center*, 161 F.3d 292, 296 \(5th Cir. 1998\), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1098, 143 L. Ed. 2d 671, 119 S. Ct. 1575 (1999) ("Certainly, HN5 if the federal claims are dismissed before trial, . . . the state claims should be dismissed as well.").

III. CONCLUSION AND ORDER

Based on the foregoing, the Court concludes that Hydril has failed to allege the minimum level of patent enforcement activity necessary to support its Walker Process claim. The patent infringement claim was previously dismissed, and the Court declines to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over the state law breach of contract claim. Accordingly, it is hereby

ORDERED that Defendants' Motion to Dismiss [Doc. # 38] is GRANTED. Hydril's Walker Process antitrust claim is DISMISSED with prejudice. It is further

---

The letter, attached as Exhibit 9 to the Second Amended Complaint, states that Grant Pridco believes the 631 Patent "maybe relevant to" pending orders for certain drill pipe and does not mention Hydril. See Letter to OMSCO, Exh. 9 to Second Amended Complaint.

[*613] ORDERED that the breach of contract claim is DISMISSED without prejudice to Plaintiffs' refiling the claim in state court. Plaintiffs should [**11] take note that the period of limitations for the dismissed state claim is tolled for an additional period of thirty (30) days after the date of this Order unless state law provides for a longer tolling period. 28 U.S.C. § 1367\(d\). The Court will issue a separate Final Order.

SIGNED at Houston, Texas, this 25th day of August, 2005.

Nancy F. Atlas

United States District Judge

FINAL ORDER

For the reasons stated in the accompanying Memorandum and Order, it is hereby

ORDERED that Defendants' Motion to Dismiss [Doc. # 38] is GRANTED and Hydril's Walker Process antitrust claim is DISMISSED with prejudice. It is further

ORDERED that the breach of contract claim is DISMISSED without prejudice to Plaintiffs' refiling the claim in state court. It is further

ORDERED that all prior ruling by the Court are hereby made final.

This is a final, appealable order.

SIGNED at Houston, Texas, this 25th day of August, 2005.

Nancy F. Atlas

United States District Judge

---

End of Document

Insignia Sys., Inc. v. News Corp., Ltd.

United States District Court for the District of Minnesota

August 25, 2005, Decided ; August 25, 2005, Filed

Civil No. 04-4213 (JRT/FLN)

Reporter

2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 42851 *; 2005 WL 2063890

INSIGNIA SYSTEMS, INC., Plaintiff, v. NEWS CORPORATION, LTD., NEWS AMERICA MARKETING IN-STORE, INC., and ALBERTSON'S INC., Defendants.

Subsequent History: Motion to strike denied by, Motion denied by Insignia Sys. v. News Am. Mktg. In-Store, Inc., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 47015 \(D. Minn., June 30, 2006\)

Motion granted by, in part, Motion denied by, in part Insignia Sys. v. News Am. Mktg. In-Store, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 136296 \(D. Minn., Mar. 26, 2008\)

Related proceeding at Insignia Sys. v. News Am. Mktg. In-Store Servs., 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 130204 \(D.N.J., Aug. 27, 2008\)

Motion denied by Insignia Sys. v. News Am. Mktg. In-Store, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 158219 \(D. Minn., Feb. 4, 2010\)

Core Terms

---

retailers, advertising, motion to dismiss, in-store, Sherman Act, allegations, conspiracy, antitrust, competitors, restraint of trade, relevant market, market power, boycott, markets, rule of reason, anticompetitive, foreclosure, foreclosed, horizontal, contracts

Counsel: [*1] Willie L. Hudgins, COLLIER SHANNON SCOTT, PLLC, Washington, D.C., and Robert L. Meller, Jr. and Cynthia L. Hegarty, BEST & FLANAGAN LLP, Minneapolis, MN, for plaintiff.

Stacey Anne Mahoney, CONSTANTINE CANNON, New York, NY, and Todd Wind, FREDRIKSON & BYRON, Minneapolis, MN, for defendants News Corporation, Ltd. and News America Marketing In-Store, Inc.

Michael A. Lindsay, DORSEY & WHITNEY LLP, Minneapolis, MN, and Phillip A. Proger, JONES DAY, Washington, D.C., for defendant Albertson's Inc.

Judges: JOHN R. TUNHEIM, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: JOHN R. TUNHEIM

Opinion

---

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

BACKGROUND

Plaintiff Insignia, Inc. ("Insignia") and defendant News America Marketing In-Store, Inc. ("NAMI") are direct competitors in the in-store advertising market. Each buys shelf space and other advertising space from retailers, like defendant Albertson's, and sells advertising services, including in-store placement in retailers, to consumer packaged goods companies ("CPGs"), i.e. manufacturers of packaged products. Insignia contends that NAMI has engaged in activity that excludes Insignia and other competing in-store advertisers from access to retailers' advertising [*2] space by (1) signing exclusive agreements with retailers; (2) orchestrating a boycott of other in-store advertisers by retailers; (3) engaging in exclusionary and anticompetitive conduct designed to harm Insignia and consumers; and, (4) making false and disparaging representations about Insignia. Insignia alleges state and federal antitrust violations against NAMI and Albertson's and false advertising violations against NAMI. NAMI and Albertson's move to dismiss under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) for failure to state a claim. For the following reasons, the Court grants the motions to dismiss.

ANALYSIS

1. STANDARD OF REVIEW

In a motion to dismiss, the Court construes the complaint in the light most favorable to the plaintiff and presumes all facts alleged in the complaint to be true. Hishon v. King & Spalding, 467 U.S. 69, 73, 104 S. Ct. 2229, 81 L. Ed. 2d 59 \(1984\); Schmedding v. Tnemec Co. Inc., 187 F.3d 862, 864 \(8th Cir. 1999\). The Court may dismiss a claim only where the plaintiff cannot prove any set of facts in support of his claim that would entitle him to relief. Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 \(1957\); Schmedding, 187 F.3d at 864. [*3]

II. CLAIMS 3,4,5,7,8, AND 9 - UNLAWFUL BOYCOTT AND EXCLUSIVE DEALING (Sherman Act § 1, Clayton Act § 3, Minn. Stat. §§ 325D.51 and .53)

To establish a claim under section 1 of the Sherman Act, section 3 of the Clayton Act, or Minnesota Statute sections 325D.51 and 325D.53, a plaintiff must demonstrate (1) that there was a contract, combination, or conspiracy; and (2) that the agreement unreasonably restrained trade under either a per se rule of illegality or a rule of reason analysis. Minn. Ass'n of Nurse Anesthetists v. Unity Hospital, 5 F. Supp. 2d 694, 704 \(D. Minn. 1998\) (section 1 of the Sherman Act); see 3M Appleton Papers Inc., 35 F. Supp. 2d 1138, 1142-43 \(D. Minn. 1999\) (analyzing claims under section 3 of the Clayton Act and section 1 of the Sherman Act together); Howard v. Minn. Timberwolves Basketball Ltd., 636 N.W.2d 551, 557 \(Minn. Ct. App. 2001\) (stating that Section 1 of the Sherman Act is analogous to Minnesota Statutes sections 325D.51 and 325D.53).

A. Contract, Combination, Or Conspiracy

"In order to withstand a motion to dismiss, a plaintiff must go further than merely alleging [*4] a conspiracy existed, for a bare bones accusation of conspiracy without any supporting facts is insufficient to state an antitrust claim." Northwest Title & Escrow Corp. v. Edina Realty, 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20734, 1993 WL 593995, \*1 \(D. Minn. Dec. 11, 1993\) (internal quotation omitted); see also Five Smiths, Inc. v. Nat'l Football League Players Ass'n, 788 F. Supp. 1042, 1048 \(D. Minn. 1992\) ("general allegations of conspiracy, without a statement of the facts constituting the conspiracy, its objects and accomplishment are inadequate to state a cause of action"). A plaintiff must demonstrate that the defendants "had a conscious commitment to a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective." Minn. Nurse Anesthetists, 5 F. Supp. 2d at 704 (quoting Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 768, 104 S. Ct. 1464, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775 \(1984\)). "[C]oncerted action forms the essence of a section 1 claim; unilateral actions do not give rise to antitrust liability under section 1." Id. (citing Willman v. Heartland Hosp. E., 34 F.3d 605, 610 \(8th Cir. 1994\)). Furthermore, "conduct as consistent with permissible competition as with [*5] illegal conspiracy does not, standing alone, support an inference of antitrust conspiracy."

Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co., Ltd. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 587-88, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 \(1986\).

Insignia has asserted that Albertson's and, possibly, other unnamed retailers have entered into long-term exclusive relationships with NAMI in exchange for unusually high up-front and guaranteed payments. According to Insignia, these induced relationships were intended to eliminate Insignia from the market. On their face, Insignia's allegations indicate only that NAMI unilaterally initiated a series of relationships that had the effect of preventing Insignia from doing business with some mostly unspecified retailers for an uncertain period of time, and that Albertson's and unspecified other retailers each agreed to exclusive relationships with NAMI at favorable terms. Offering a better deal than does the competition is a time-tested competitive strategy, and accepting a good deal when offered is generally considered to be a sound business practice. Insignia's allegations, therefore, provide insufficient indication of a common scheme designed to achieve an unlawful objective.

[*6] B. Unreasonable Restraint Of Trade

Most agreements are evaluated under the "rule of reason," a standard that asks whether the alleged contract or agreement unreasonably restrains trade in a relevant product or geographic market. Certain kinds of agreements, however, are considered unlawful per se because they are of a type that is so often harmful and so rarely justified that proof of anticompetitiveness is not required. Minnesota Ass'n of Nurse Anesthetists v. Unity Hosp., 208 F.3d 655, 659 \(8th Cir. 2000\) (quoting NYNEX Corp. v. Discon, Inc., 525 U.S. 128, 133, 119 S. Ct. 493, 142 L. Ed. 2d 510 \(1998\)); see also Concord Boat Corp. v. Brunswick Corp., 207 F.3d 1039, 1058 \(8th Cir. 2000\).

1. Per se violation

A "group boycott" is a narrow category of per se violation, "limited to cases in which firms with market power boycott suppliers or customers in order to discourage them from doing business with a competitor." Minn. Nurse Anesthetists, 208 F.3d at 659 (quoting FTC v. Ind. Fed'n of Dentists, 476 U.S. 447, 458, 106 S. Ct. 2009, 90 L. Ed. 2d 445 \(1986\)). "It is not an antitrust 'boycott' when one supplier enters [*7] into an exclusive supply agreement with one customer, even though the supplier's competitors are 'foreclosed' from that customer for the life of the contract." Id. A horizontal restraint of trade is another category of per se violation. See Double D Spotting Service, Inc. v. Supervalu, Inc., 136 F.3d 554, 558 \(8th Cir. 1998\). Horizontal restraints of trade result when combinations of traders at one level of the market structure agree to exclude direct competitors from the same level of the market. Id.

According to Insignia, Albertson's and other retailers, at the instigation of NAMI, agreed to deal only with NAMI and to exclude Insignia from the in-store advertising market resulting in a group boycott of Insignia and a horizontal restraint of trade. As noted above, Insignia's evidence and allegations indicate only that NAMI arranged one exclusive agreement with Albertson's, and may have arranged other similar relationships. This is insufficient to support an allegation of a group boycott. Additionally, as NAMI and Albertson's are not participants in the market at the same level, any agreement between the two cannot constitute a horizontal restraint of [*8] trade. Although an agreement between retailers could constitute a horizontal restraint of trade, Insignia has not provided any indication that Albertson's has ever spoken to, let alone entered into an agreement with, another retailer regarding or resulting in the exclusion of Insignia from the market. The Court, therefore, finds that Insignia has not adequately alleged a per se violation of the antitrust laws, and Insignia's claims must therefore be analyzed under the Rule of Reason.

2. Rule Of Reason

Exclusive dealing contracts are usually analyzed under the Rule of Reason. Minn. Nurse Anesthetists, 208 F.3d at 660 (citing Tampa Elec. Co. v. Nashville Coal Co., 365 U.S. 320, 333-335, 81 S. Ct. 623, 5 L. Ed. 2d 580 \(1961\)). In order to prevail, a plaintiff must produce evidence to show that the defendant's contractual arrangements were unreasonable, based on the extent to which competition has been foreclosed in a substantial share of the relevant market, the duration of any exclusive arrangement, and the height of entry barriers. Concord Boat, 207 F.3d at 1059-60. "Where the degree of foreclosure caused by the exclusivity provisions [*9] is so great that it invariably indicates that the supplier imposing the provisions has substantial market power, we may rely on the foreclosure rate alone to establish the violation. However, where ... the foreclosure rate is neither substantial nor even apparent, the plaintiff must demonstrate that other factors in the market exacerbate the detrimental effect of the challenged restraints." Ryko Mfg. Co. v. Eden Servs., 823 F.2d 1215, 1235 \(8th Cir. 1987\). Alternatively, a plaintiff may demonstrate that the challenged practice has actually produced significant anti-competitive effects, in which case formal market analysis is unnecessary. Minn. Nurse Anesthetists, 5 F. Supp. 2d at 707 (citing Ind. Dentists, 476 U. S. at 460-61)).

a. Market power/foreclosure

A plaintiff must demonstrate that the defendant has a dominant market share in a well-defined relevant market. Flegel v. Christian Hosp., 4 F.3d 682, 689 \(8th Cir. 1993\). Assuming that there are, as Insignia asserts, local, regional, and national markets for in-store advertising services, Insignia's complaint provides insufficient indication of NAMI's market [*10] share or ability to foreclose competitors' participation in the relevant markets. Insignia asserts that NAMI dominates the relevant markets, that Insignia and Floorgraphics, Inc. pose the only significant competition to NAMI, and that NAMI has foreclosed Insignia from doing business with retailers in local, regional, and national markets by entering into exclusive contracts with 35,000 retail stores including the 2,500 Albertson's outlets throughout the nation. Based on this information, NAMI could, conceivably, dominate (in the colloquial sense) any given market with a 50% share as compared to Insignia's and Floorgraphics' hypothetical 25% shares, but fail to be dominant in the legal sense. See Tops Mkts., Inc. v. Quality Mkts., Inc., 142 F.3d 90, 97 \(2d Cir. 1998\) (finding 72% market share insufficient to support a section 1 claim); Minn. Nurse Anesthetists, 5 F. Supp. 2d at 708 (stating that a market share of 30% is insufficient as a matter of law to constitute sufficient market power to achieve significant foreclosure). Furthermore, absent some indication of the percentage of the local, regional, or national markets that the 35,000 retail outlets [*11] allegedly under exclusive contract constitute, it is impossible to evaluate the percentage of the market with which Insignia and other competitors are prevented from doing business, let alone determine that Insignia and other competitors are prevented from dealing with a significant number of retailers. See Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 45-46, 104 S. Ct. 1551, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2 \(1984\) (O'Connor, J., concurring) (quoted in Minn. Nurse Anesthetists, 208 F.3d 655 at 661) ("Exclusive dealing is an unreasonable restraint on trade only when a significant fraction of buyers and sellers are frozen out of a market by the exclusive deal"). These same deficiencies prevent the Court from determining whether significant barriers to entering this market or other factors exacerbating the detrimental effect of the challenged restraints exist. Insignia provides no indication of any barriers other than NAMI's exclusive contracts with the 35,000 retail outlets. Because it is unclear how large the markets are, or what the terms of the NAMI's alleged contracts are, it is impossible to determine how high a barrier is created by NAMI's exclusive contracts.

b. [*12] Actual detrimental effects

Actual detrimental effects may include an actual increase in the price of the good or service, a decrease in output, or a decline in quality. Minn. Nurse Anesthetists, 5 F. Supp. 2d at 707. Insignia broadly alleges that in-store information and advertising has been reduced and that higher prices have resulted. The Court finds that, as when demonstrating the existence of a contract, combination or conspiracy, such broad, unsupported allegations are inadequate to withstand a motion to dismiss.

Insignia's allegations indicate that NAMI is large and successful - but do not indicate that NAMI wields any particular degree of market power or ability to foreclose competitors from the market, or has entered into any sort of agreement in an attempt to do so. "Size in itself does not create an unlawful monopoly within the meaning of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act." Kansas City Star Co. v. United States, 240 F.2d 643, 658 \(8th Cir. 1957\). As Insignia's complaint insufficiently alleges either a contract, combination, or conspiracy or an unreasonable restraint of trade, the Court will grant NAMI's and Albertson's motions to dismiss with [*13] respect to claims 3, 4, 5, 7, 8, and 9.

III. CLAIMS 1 AND 10 - UNLAWFUL MONOPOLIZATION (Sherman Act § 2 and Minn. Stat. § 325d.52)

In order to make out a claim under either section 2 of the Sherman Act or its Minnesota corollary, Minnesota Statute section 325D.52, a plaintiff is required to plead and, ultimately, prove that the defendant "(1) possessed monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) willfully acquired or maintained that power as opposed to gaining it as a result 'of a superior product, business acumen, or historical accident.'" Double D, 136 F.3d at 560; Howard, 636 N.W.2d at 556 (stating that Minnesota antitrust law should be interpreted consistently with federal court interpretations of federal antitrust law unless Minnesota law clearly conflicts.); Prestressed Concrete, Inc. v. Bladholm Bros. Culvert Co., 498 N.W.2d 274, 276 \(Minn. Ct. App. 1993\) (noting that section 2 of the Sherman Act provided the model for Minn. Stat. § 325D.52).

Monopoly power under § 2 of the Sherman Act requires something greater than market power under § 1. See Fortner Enterprises v. US. Steel, 394 U.S. 495, 89 S. Ct. 1252, 22 L. Ed. 2d 495 \(1969\). [*14] Thus, assuming arguendo that Insignia has adequately defined the relevant market and has alleged anticompetitive conduct sufficient to withstand a motion to dismiss, based on the Court's analysis in section II(B)(2)(a), supra, Insignia has not adequately established NAMI's monopoly power. Accordingly, the Court will grant NAMI's motion to dismiss claims 1 and 10.

IV. CLAIMS 2 AND 11- ATTEMPTED MONOPOLIZATION (Sherman Act § 2 and Minn. Stat. § 325d.52)

To prevail on an unlawful attempt claim, Insignia must prove "(1) a specific intent by the defendant to control prices or destroy competition; (2) predatory or anticompetitive conduct undertaken by the defendant directed to accomplishing the unlawful purpose; and (3) a dangerous probability of success." General Indus. Corp. v. Hartz Mountain Corp., 810 F.2d 795, 803 \(8th Cir. 1987\).

"To determine whether there is a dangerous probability of monopolization, courts have found it necessary to consider the relevant market and the defendant's ability to lessen or destroy competition in that market." Spectrum Sports, Inc. v. McQuillan, 506 U.S. 447, 456, 113 S. Ct. 884, 122 L. Ed. 2d 247 \(1993\). "Proof [*15] of market power in a monopolization claim and proof of dangerous probability of success in an attempt claim are of the same character." 3M v. Appleton Papers, 35 F. Supp. 2d at 1146. Thus, under the Court's analysis in section II(B)(2)(a), supra, Insignia has not adequately established NAMI's dangerous probability of success and the motion to dismiss these claims will be granted.

V. CLAIMS 6 AND 12 - FALSE ADVERTISING (Lanham Act and Minnesota Deceptive Trade Practices Act)

In order to establish its false advertising claims, Insignia must establish (1) a false statement of fact made in a commercial advertisement, (2) which actually deceived or had a tendency to deceive a substantial segment of the intended audience, (3) which was material in that it was likely to influence purchasing decisions, (4) which has or is likely to injure Insignia, in the form of lost sales or lost goodwill. 3M Innovative Props. Co. v. Dupont Dow Elastomers LLC, 361 F. Supp. 2d 958, 968 \(D. Minn. 2005\).

Insignia alleges that "NAMI has made repeated false and misleading ... statements of fact regarding Insignia and the nature, qualities and character of [NAMI's] [*16] Price Pop Guaranteed program and Insignia's Price POPSign program," including its quality and efficacy, causing "CPGs and retailers to be confused, misled, and deceived about the nature, qualities and character of Insignia's in-store marketing vehicles" and influencing the decisions of "(a) CPGs to purchase Insignia's in-store advertising and promotion products and services; and (b) retailers to grant or honor the right to allow Insignia to sell its in-store advertising and promotion products and services for use in their respective retail stores." (Compl. PP101 and 102.) As a result, "Insignia has suffered economic injury, loss of good will, and other injuries in an amount to be determined at trial." (Compl. P103.)

The Court finds that Insignia fails to adequately allege a false statement of fact made in a commercial advertisement. Insignia's complaint does nothing to indicate what allegedly false statements were made to which party in what context. The allegations seem to indicate that NAMI made objectionable statements to CPGs and retailers in connection with sales of its own product, but not that NAMI engaged in something akin to a widespread advertising campaign to discredit [*17] Insignia's product and, thereby, boost its own product's success. Such an allegation is insufficient to satisfy the first prong. See Med. Graphics Corp. v. SensorMedics Corp., 872 F. Supp. 643, 650 (D. Minn. 1994) (infrequent statements by a sales representative to potential customers, as opposed to a traditional advertising campaign, are unlikely to constitute commercial advertising). Accordingly, the Court will grant NAMI's motion to dismiss counts 6 and 12.

VI. CONCLUSION

The Court is mindful that a party is required only to make a short and plain statement of its claims, and that this bar is not high. Nevertheless, the Court finds that Insignia's complaint, as it stands, simply provides insufficient information with which to determine whether any set of facts exists under which Insignia might be able to support its claims. As such, it is appropriate to grant defendants' motions to dismiss. However, the Court will permit Insignia to amend its complaint within 30 days from the date of this Order.

ORDER

Based on the foregoing, all the records, files, and proceedings herein, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that:

1. Defendant News America Marketing [*18] In-Store, Inc.'s motion to dismiss [Docket No. 28] is GRANTED.
2. Defendant Albertson's Inc.'s motion to dismiss [Docket No. 30] is GRANTED.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that plaintiff shall have 30 days from the date of this Order to file an amended complaint.

DATED: August 25, 2005

at Minneapolis, Minnesota.

JOHN R. TUNHEIM

United States District Judge

---

End of Document

MGA Entm't, Inc. v. Mattel, Inc.

United States District Court for the Central District of California

August 25, 2005, Decided ; August 26, 2005, Filed

CASE NO. CV 05-2727 NM (RNBx)

Reporter

2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18594 *; 2005 WL 5894689

MGA ENTERTAINMENT, INC., Plaintiff, v. MATTEL, INC., a Delaware Corporation, and DOES 1-10, Defendants.

Prior History: Mattel, Inc. v. Bryant, 441 F. Supp. 2d 1081, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3568 \(C.D. Cal., Mar. 4, 2005\)

Core Terms

---

allegations, competitor, unfair, demand letter, anti-competitive, products, doll, trade dress, litigation privilege, anti trust law, disgorgement, retailers, lawsuit, toy, unfair competition, intimidate, former employee, restitution, infringed, argues, factual allegations, proceedings, employees, distributors, manipulative, stricken, supplier, asserts, Scene, immaterial

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Jurisdiction Over Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN1[] Subject Matter Jurisdiction, Jurisdiction Over Actions

A Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(1\) motion is a challenge to the court's jurisdiction over a matter. The plaintiff bears the burden of establishing that the court has subject matter jurisdiction to hear the action.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN2[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\), a motion to dismiss should be granted only if it appears beyond a doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief. For purposes of such a motion, the complaint is construed in a light most favorable to the plaintiff and all properly pleaded factual allegations are taken as true. All reasonable inferences are to be drawn in favor of the plaintiff.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Strike > Immortal Matters

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Strike > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Strike > Redundant Matters

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrs & Objections > Motions to Strike > Scandalous Matters

HN3 Motions to Strike, Immaterial Matters

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(f\), a court has the discretion to strike a pleading or portions thereof. Rule 12\(f\) provides that a court may order stricken from any pleading any redundant, immaterial, impertinent or scandalous matter. Immaterial matter is that which has no essential or important relationship to the claim for relief or the defenses being pleaded. Impertinent matter consists of statements that do not pertain, and are not necessary, to the issues in question. The function of a Rule 12\(f\) motion to strike is to avoid the expenditure of time and money that must arise from litigating spurious issues by dispensing with those issues prior to trial. Such motions are generally not granted unless it is clear that the matter sought to be stricken could have no possible bearing on the subject matter of the litigation. Any doubt concerning the import of the allegations to be stricken weighs in favor of denying the motion to strike.

International Trade Law > General Overview

Trademark Law > Subject Matter of Trademarks > Nontraditional Trademarks > Color Marks

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Trade Dress Protection > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Trade Dress Protection > Causes of Action

Trademark Law > ... > Trade Dress Protection > Infringement Actions > Burdens of Proof

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Trade Dress Protection > Infringement Actions > Elements of Trade Dress Infringement

Trademark Law > Causes of Action Involving Trademarks > Infringement Actions > Burdens of Proof

Trademark Law > ... > Factors for Determining Confusion > Intent of Defendant to Confuse > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Eligibility for Trademark Protection > Evidence of Secondary Meaning > General Overview

HN4 International Trade Law

In the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, trade dress refers to the total image of a product and may include features such as size, shape, color, color combinations, texture, or graphics. To establish trade dress infringement, a plaintiff must show: (1) that its product design is non-functional, (2) that the design is inherently distinctive or has acquired a secondary meaning, and (3) that there is a likelihood of confusion. The intent of the alleged infringer may be relevant to both the second and third elements of this test.

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Trade Dress Protection > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Trade Dress Protection > Infringement Actions > Elements of Trade Dress Infringement

Trademark Law > Likelihood of Confusion > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Factors for Determining Confusion > Intent of Defendant to Confuse > General Overview

Trademark Law > Special Marks > Trade Names > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Particular Subject Matter > Names > General Overview

HN5 Federal Unfair Competition Law, Trade Dress Protection

The relevant intent for purposes of a trade dress claim (and the likelihood of confusion analysis) is the defendant's intent to deceive the public or the intent of deriving benefit from the reputation of the plaintiff's trade-mark or trade name.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN6 Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

The California Unfair Competition Law (UCL), Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq., prohibits, among other things, unfair business acts or practices. California courts generally define "unfair" broadly under the UCL in order to provide the courts with the maximum discretion to prohibit new schemes to defraud.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN7 Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

When a plaintiff who claims to have suffered injury from a direct competitor's unfair act or practice invokes Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200, the word "unfair" in that section means conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN8 Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

The antitrust laws were enacted for the protection of competition, not competitors.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN9 Private Actions, Remedies

Restitution and disgorgement are sometimes appropriate remedies under the California Unfair Competition Law, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN10 [ ] Private Actions, Remedies

The California Unfair Competition Law, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq., does not allow for an individual to recover disgorgement of profits allegedly obtained by means of an unfair business practice where those profits are neither money taken from a plaintiff nor funds in which the plaintiff has an ownership interest.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > Injury in Fact

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Lanham Act > Standing

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

HN11 [ ] Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17204 provides that a party has standing to bring an action pursuant to the California Unfair Competition Law (UCL), Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq., if it has suffered injury in fact and has lost money or property as a result of a violation of the UCL.

Torts > ... > Defenses > Privileges > Statutory Privileges

HN12 [ ] Privileges, Statutory Privileges

See Cal. Civ. Code § 47\(b\).

Torts > ... > Defenses > Privileges > Statutory Privileges

HN13 [ ] Privileges, Statutory Privileges

The litigation privilege set out in Cal. Civ. Code § 47\(b\) applies to any communication: (1) made in judicial or quasi-judicial proceedings; (2) by litigants or other participants authorized by law; (3) to achieve the objects of the litigation; and (4) to have some connection or logical relation to the action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

HN14 [ ] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

The Noerr-Pennington doctrine extends to all three branches of government, and thus exempts bringing a lawsuit--that is, petitioning a court--from antitrust liability.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN15 [blue icon] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A district court ruling on a motion to dismiss may consider a document the authenticity of which is not contested, and upon which the plaintiff's complaint necessarily relies.

Torts > ... > Defenses > Privileges > Statutory Privileges

HN16 [blue icon] Privileges, Statutory Privileges

Pre-litigation demand letters are protected by the litigation privilege only when the statement is made in connection with a proposed litigation that is contemplated in good faith and under serious consideration.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Sham Exception

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN17 [blue icon] Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, Sham Exception

While Noerr-Pennington immunity is broad, it is not so broad as to cover all litigation: sham petitions do not fall within the protection of the doctrine. There are three circumstances when litigation might be sham. First, if the alleged anticompetitive behavior consists of bringing a single sham lawsuit (or a small number of such suits), the antitrust plaintiff must demonstrate that the lawsuit was (1) objectively baseless, and (2) a concealed attempt to interfere with the plaintiff's business relationships. Second, if the alleged anticompetitive behavior is the filing of a series of lawsuits, the question is not whether any one of them has merit--some may turn out to, just as a matter of chance--but whether they are brought pursuant to a policy of starting legal proceedings without regard to the merits and for the purpose of injuring a market rival. Finally, in the context of a judicial proceeding, if the alleged anticompetitive behavior consists of making intentional misrepresentations to the court, litigation can be deemed a sham if a party's knowing fraud upon, or its intentional misrepresentations to, the court deprive the litigation of its legitimacy.

Counsel: [*1] For MGA Entertainment Inc, Plaintiff: Diana M Torres, Paula Elise Ambrosini, O'Melveny and Myers, Los Angeles, CA; Patricia L Glaser, Christensen Miller Fink Jacobs Glaser, Weil & Shapiro, Los Angeles, CA.

For Mattel Inc, a Delaware corporation, Defendant: Daniel P Collins, Munger Tolles & Olson, Los Angeles, CA; Duane R Lyons, John B Quinn, Michael T Zeller, Tania Marie Krebs, Timothy L Alger, Quinn Emanuel Urquhart Oliver and Hedges, Los Angeles, CA

Judges: Nora M. Manella, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: Nora M. Manella

Opinion

---

ORDER AND OPINION GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART DEFENDANT'S MOTION TO DISMISS AND STRIKE PORTIONS OF COMPLAINT

I. INTRODUCTION

On April 13, 2005, plaintiff MGA Entertainment, Inc. ("MGA") initiated this action against rival toy doll maker, defendant Mattel, Inc. ("Mattel"). MGA contends that it "seeks by this action to halt Mattel's habitual and unfair tactics of competition-by-intimidation and serial copycatting of MGA's products." Compl. P 7. The Complaint asserts causes of action for: (1) False Designation of Origin or Affiliation in Violation of 15 U.S.C. § 1125\(a\); (2) Unfair Competition in Violation of 15 U.S.C. § 1125\(a\), [*2] Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq., and California Common Law; (3) Dilution in Violation of 15 U.S.C. § 1125\(c\), Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 14330, and California Common Law; and (4) Unjust Enrichment. On May 13, 2005, Mattel filed the instant Motion to Dismiss and Strike Portions of Complaint Pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\), 12\(f\), and 12\(b\)\(1\). For the reasons set forth below, Mattel's motion is GRANTED in part and DENIED in part.

II. FACTUAL & PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

1

MGA's Complaint is divided into four parts: (1) background factual allegations, see Compl. PP 7-30; (2) allegations regarding Mattel's "serial copycatting" of MGA's products, See id. PP 31-73; (3) allegations regarding Mattel's [*3] "strong-arm tactics, and other illegitimate, unfair and anti-competitive" conduct, Id. PP 74-100; and (4) MGA's causes of action and claims for relief, Id. PP 101-25.

A. Background Factual Allegations

In paragraphs 7 through 30 of the Complaint, MGA provides various background factual allegations. See id. PP 7-30. In particular, this section of the Complaint details how Mattel came to dominate the fashion doll market in the twentieth century through sales of its mainstay product, "Barbie"; how both the public's interest in Barbie and Mattel's success began to wane in the late 1990s; and how MGA's 2001 release of its new and "fresh-looking" doll line, the "Bratz," came at just the right time to take advantage of the public's growing apathy for Barbie. See id.<sup>2</sup> The Complaint uses these facts to set the scene for MGA's claim that Mattel was "in trouble," and had to do something to regain the market share it was losing to MGA. MGA then alleges that Mattel, rather than "respond . . . with a new, creative product of its own," decided to "wage[] war against MGA using a wide-array of tortious, unfair and anti-competitive practices including systematic, serial [*4] copycatting and intellectual property infringement, aided by intimidation, threats and other acts of unfair competition and anti-competitive conduct." Id. P 32.

B. Serial Copycatting

In the second section of the Complaint, paragraphs 33 through 73, MGA alleges that Mattel responded to the competition posed by the Bratz by creating and marketing various dolls and products that infringed on the trade dress of the Bratz and MGA's other products. See id. PP 33-73. In particular, MGA alleges that Mattel introduced a line of dolls in October 2002 called "My Scene" that infringed on the Bratz's trade dress. Id. MGA also contends that Mattel's "serial copycatting" "extended to MGA's packaging, themes, accessories, advertising and even other product lines." Id. Finally, MGA mentions a failed Mattel doll line called the "Flavas." See id. P 35. MGA suggests [*5] that Mattel's My Scene dolls "may have been . . . intended to buy Mattel time while it worked to release . . . Flavas." Id. However, according to MGA, the Flavas failed in the market because they "took the urban, hip-hop' look too far, and were widely viewed as portraying a trampy, bad-girl' image." Id.

<sup>1</sup> The following facts from the Complaint are assumed true for purposes of this motion only.

<sup>2</sup> MGA describes the Bratz as "multi-ethnic fashion dolls that sport a fresh new urban and contemporary look and fashion." Compl. P 8.

C. Unfair, Manipulative, and Anti-Competitive Conduct

In the third section of the Complaint, entitled "Mattel's additional unfair, manipulative, anti-competitive conduct," MGA alleges that Mattel has engaged in "strong-arm tactics, and other illegitimate, unfair and anti-competitive means . . . to manipulate the market and ensure that its control and domination of the industry can continue unabated." Id. P 74. See id. PP 74-100. Because Mattel's Motion focuses on this portion of the Complaint, a detailed description is in order.

MGA first alleges that "Mattel has sent threatening letters to several of its former employees who now work for MGA warning them not to disclose even publicly available information about Mattel, including the names and positions of Mattel employees." Id. P 75 (emphasis in original). Additionally, MGA alleges, "Mattel [*6] even went so far as to sue one of its former senior executives, after he had the temerity to resign and join MGA in October 2004." Id. According to MGA, this lawsuit was dismissed with prejudice because Mattel's Complaint "fail[ed] to state a viable claim" and Mattel could not "muster up a shred of evidence sufficient to support an amended complaint." Id.

MGA next alleges that Mattel has intimidated various companies, such as publishing entities, into not doing business with MGA. Id. P 76.<sup>3</sup> Similarly, MGA alleges that "Mattel has used . . . intimidation to pressure distributors and retailers, particularly in foreign countries, not to distribute Bratz, to reduce shelf and display space for Bratz and to place Bratz in unfavorable locations at retail outlets." Id. P 77.

[*7] MGA also alleges that Mattel has tried to lock MGA out of the market by buying up the supply of necessary products. In particular, MGA contends: "When MGA faced a shortage of doll hair in October 2002, MGA is informed and believes that the reason for that shortage was that Mattel had locked MGA out by buying up the supply from the two main hair supply companies." Id. P 78.

MGA further accuses Mattel of "manipulat[ing] the retail market." Id. P 79. For example, MGA asserts: "Mattel merchandisers have been caught tampering with MGA's retail displays, replacing favorably located MGA merchandise with Mattel merchandise." Id. P 79. Additionally, "Mattel . . . falsely told a major United States retailer that MGA was giving another major United States retailer below-market pricing and falsely told a United Kingdom retailer that MGA was discontinuing one of its lines, in order to make such line less attractive to buyers and thereby attempt to increase sales of the competitive Mattel product and improve its own sales, at MGA's expense." Id.

MGA then details how "[e]ven supposedly unbiased and impartial industry organizations have fallen prey to Mattel's abusive wield[ing] [*8] of power, to MGA's detriment." Id. P 80. For example, MGA alleges:

NPD Funworld ("NPD") . . . is the leading supplier of sales statistics in the toy industry. Accurate NPD statistics are essential for efficient product-line management. Without these statistics, it is difficult, if not impossible, for toy companies to assess and measure the relative success of their products in key categories. It is, however, a subscription service, and NPD restricts the manner in which its subscribers may use the data it provides. Mattel has regularly ignored the restrictions. . . . Mattel generates substantially more annual subscription revenue for NPD than does MGA, and carries more clout. After MGA had subscribed to the service for more than 12 years, NPD terminated MGA's subscription in 2003 theoretically on the grounds that MGA misused NPD data in a press release. MGA is informed and believes that the termination was the result of pressure from Mattel, notwithstanding Mattel's own frequent violations of NPD's restrictions.

---

<sup>3</sup> In particular, MGA alleges:

Mattel has . . . warned a number of companies, including the biggest publishing entity in the United Kingdom, not to license MGA products, or risk retribution. The threats are not idle. In May 2004, Mattel terminated one of its licensees, apparently in retribution for licensing "Bratz." While some companies have been courageous enough to take the risk, others have not, and MGA has lost valuable licensing opportunities as a result.

In addition to this, the market share numbers that NPD generates are heavily dependent on the category in which NPD places a particular product. MGA is informed [*9] and believes that Mattel also pressured NPD into changing certain product classifications for its Bratz products in order to manipulate the data and preserve Mattel's market share rankings in the critical fashion doll category -- and thereby lower MGA's.

The Children's Advertising Review Unit ("CARU") is . . . is the toy industry's supposedly independent self-regulatory body in charge of maintaining standards in advertising. . . . CARU is heavily subsidized by Mattel. . . . Upon information and belief, Mattel has used its influence as a major contributor to CARU's budget to induce CARU to place onerous restrictions on MGA advertisements, and require MGA to amend aspects of commercials that have gone unchallenged in other parties' commercials. . . .

Even [the Toy Industry Association ("TIA")], the toy industry's trade association, is apparently not untainted by Mattel's influence and power. Each year, TIA presents the Toy-of-the-Year Awards, the most prestigious of which had been the award for Toy of the Year. Winning the Toy of the Year Award is a significant achievement that not only very likely increases the sales of the winning toy, but also denotes the winning company [*10] as a leader in toy innovation and generates substantial goodwill with retailers, distributors, licensees, and customers.

For the years 2000 . . . , 2001 and 2002, the Toy of the Year award was chosen by consumer vote. . . . Leap Frog won the 2000 . . . Award and MGA won[in] 2001 and 2002. . . . With the 2003 . . . Award, however, the rules suddenly changed. Now, the award is selected by members of the industry. Upon information and belief, this change was orchestrated by a Fisher Price (a Mattel subsidiary) executive who, until recently, served as the Chairman of TIA. Perhaps not surprisingly given this change in the winner selection procedures, "Hokey Pokey Elmo" ("Elmo"), a Fisher Price toy, won for the year 2003 . . . , beating out the other leading nominee, "Bratz Formal Funk Super Stylin' Runway Disco."

TIA has refused to provide MGA with the vote count procedure and totals for this award, despite repeated requests.

MGA is also informed and believes that Mattel was instrumental in attempting to keep MGA from participating as a sponsor in this year's "Kids' Choice Awards."

Compl. PP 81-97.

Finally, MGA alleges:

Mattel has clearly engaged in tortious, [*11] illegal and unethical behavior in its unfettered efforts to disrupt, if not destroy, MGA. Indeed, this is apparently Mattel's current modus operandi when it comes to "competing" in the industry. The once immensely successful "LeapFrog" interactive learning product, for example, has apparently been one of Mattel's other recent victims.

Id. P 98.

D. Causes of Action and Claims for Relief

In the last section of the Complaint, MGA asserts the following four causes of action: (1) "False Designation of Origin in Violation of 15 U.S.C. § 1125\(a\)"; (2) "Unfair Competition in Violation of 15 U.S.C. § 1125\(a\) and Unfair Competition and Unfair Business Practices in Violation of Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq. and California Common Law"; (3) "Dilution in Violation of 15 U.S.C. § 1125\(c\); Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 14330 and California Common Law"; and (4) "Unjust Enrichment." Among other remedies, MGA requests restitution and disgorgement. Id. P 118; Prayer P 3(b).

On April 13, 2005, MGA filed the Complaint against Mattel. [*12] On May 13, 2005, Mattel filed the instant Motion to Dismiss and Strike Portions of Complaint Pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\), 12\(f\), and 12\(b\)\(1\).

III. LEGAL STANDARD

HN1 A Rule 12\(b\)\(1\) motion is a challenge to the court's jurisdiction over a matter. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(1\). The plaintiff bears the burden of establishing that the court has subject matter jurisdiction to hear the action. Kokkonen v. Guardian Life Ins. Co., 511 U.S. 375, 377, 128 L. Ed. 2d 391, 114 S. Ct. 1673 (1994); Stock West v. Confederated Tribes, 873 F.2d 1221, 1225 (9th Cir. 1989).

HN2 Under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\), a motion to dismiss should be granted only if it appears beyond a doubt that the plaintiff "can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief." Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 (1957). See also Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\). For purposes of such a motion, the complaint is construed in a light most favorable to the plaintiff and all properly pleaded [*13] factual allegations are taken as true. Jenkins v. McKeithen, 395 U.S. 411, 421, 23 L. Ed. 2d 404, 89 S. Ct. 1843 (1969); Everest and Jennings, Inc. v. American Motorists Ins. Co., 23 F.3d 226, 228 (9th Cir. 1994). All reasonable inferences are to be drawn in favor of the plaintiff. Jacobson v. Hughes Aircraft, 105 F.3d 1288, 1296 (9th Cir. 1997).

HN3 Finally, under Rule 12\(f\), the court has the discretion to strike a pleading or portions thereof. Federal Sav. and Loan v. Gemini Management, 921 F.2d 241, 243 (9th Cir. 1990). See also Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(f\). Rule 12(f) provides that a court "may order stricken from any pleading . . . any redundant, immaterial, impertinent or scandalous matter." Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(f\). "Immaterial" matter is that which has no essential or important relationship to the claim for relief or the defenses being pleaded. Fantasy, Inc. v. Fogerty, 984 F.2d 1524, 1527 (9th Cir. 1993) (citing 5 Charles A. Wright & Arthur R. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure § 1382, at 706-07 (1990)), rev'd on other grounds, 510 U.S. 517, 127 L. Ed. 2d 455, 114 S. Ct. 1023 \(1994\). [*14] "Impertinent" matter consists of statements that do not pertain, and are not necessary, to the issues in question." Id. "[T]he function of a Rule 12\(f\) motion to strike is to avoid the expenditure of time and money that must arise from litigating spurious issues by dispensing with those issues prior to trial. . . ." Sidney-Vinstein v. A.H. Robins Co., 697 F.2d 880, 885 (9th Cir. 1983). Such motions are "generally not granted unless it is clear that the matter sought to be stricken could have no possible bearing on the subject matter of the litigation." Rosales v. Citibank, Federal Sav. Bank, 133 F. Supp. 2d 1177, 1179 (N.D. Cal. 2001). Any doubt concerning the import of the allegations to be stricken weighs in favor of denying the motion to strike. See In re 2TheMart.com, Inc. Secs. Litig., 114 F. Supp. 2d 955, 965 (C.D. Cal. 2000).

IV. ANALYSIS

Mattel argues that the court should dismiss and/or strike: (1) the majority of the first section of the Complaint, which consists of the background factual allegations; (2) the third section of the Complaint, entitled "Mattel's additional unfair, manipulative, anti-competitive conduct, [*15]" as well as related parts of the Complaint, including MGA's request for restitution and disgorgement; (3) specifically paragraph 98 of the Complaint, which includes allegations regarding Mattel's "modus operandi" and LeapFrog; and (4) paragraph 75 of the Complaint, which alleges that Mattel has harassed employees who have left Mattel for MGA.

A. First Section of Complaint -- Background Factual Allegations

Mattel argues that the court should strike the background factual allegations contained in paragraphs 11-20 and 30-31 of the Complaint. According to Mattel, these paragraphs, which primarily discuss Mattel's financial and corporate history, are immaterial to MGA's case. MGA responds that these paragraphs should not be stricken because they help elucidate Mattel's motive/intent in creating the My Scene dolls and the various other products that allegedly infringe upon the trade dress of the Bratz and MGA's other products, in violation of the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1125\(a\).

HN4 In the Ninth Circuit, trade dress "refers to the total image of a product' and may include features such as size, shape, color, color combinations, texture or graphics." International Jensen, Inc. v. Metrosound U.S.A., Inc., 4 F.3d 819, 822 (9th Cir. 1993); [*16] Vision Sports, Inc. v. Melville Corp., 888 F.2d 609, 613 (9th Cir. 1989). To establish trade dress infringement, a plaintiff must show: (1) that its product design is non-functional, (2) that the design is inherently distinctive or has acquired a secondary meaning, and (3) that there is a likelihood of confusion. Disc Golf Ass'n, Inc. v. Champion Discs, Inc., 158 F.3d 1002, 1005 (9th Cir. 1998); Kendall-Jackson Winery, Ltd. v. E. & J. Gallo Winery, 150 F.3d 1042, 1046-47 (9th Cir. 1998); International Jensen, Inc. v. Metrosound U.S.A., Inc., 4 F.3d 819, 823 (9th Cir. 1993). The "intent" of the alleged infringer may be relevant to both the second and third elements of this test. See Fuddruckers, Inc. v. Doc's B.R. Others, Inc., 826 F.2d 837, 844-45 (9th Cir. 1987) (evidence of deliberate copying may support inference of secondary meaning); AMF, Inc. v. Sleekcraft Boats, 599 F.2d 341, 348-49 (9th Cir. 1979) (factors considered in determining "likelihood of confusion" include intent of defendant in selecting allegedly infringing mark); id. at 354 (when infringer knowingly [¶17] adopts mark, court can presume public will be deceived).

MGA's background factual allegations regarding Mattel's corporate and financial history set the scene and circumstantially bolster MGA's claim that Mattel intentionally copied MGA's trade dress. In particular, these allegations paint a picture of an industry giant which had recently fallen on hard times and was willing to do whatever was necessary to stop the hemorrhaging and eliminate the rising tide of competition stemming from a new company with a drastically different product. According to MGA, Mattel, because of its corporate culture and history, was unable to "nimbly respond . . . with a new, creative product of its own." Compl. ¶ 31. Instead, Mattel (intentionally) copied the Bratz and released its My Scene line. Mattel's financial and corporate history -- and, particularly, its vulnerability at the time of the Bratz's release -- play into MGA's theory that Mattel intentionally copied MGA's trade dress. Accordingly, paragraphs 11-20 and 30-31 of the Complaint are not "immaterial," and Mattel's motion to strike these paragraphs is denied.<sup>4</sup>

[¶18] B. Third Section of Complaint -- "Mattel's Additional Unfair, Manipulative, Anti-Competitive Conduct"

Mattel argues that the court should dismiss and/or strike the third section of the Complaint, entitled "Mattel's additional unfair, manipulative, anti-competitive conduct," as well as various other related allegations. According to Mattel, these allegations, contained in paragraphs 74-100, 113-114, and 118 of the Complaint, are not material to any of MGA's causes of action. Furthermore, Mattel contends that the court should strike MGA's request for restitution and disgorgement.

1. Materiality and/or Relevance

MGA responds to Mattel's first argument by asserting that the allegations in the third section of the Complaint are relevant and/or material to both its trade dress claims and its unfair competition claims.

a. Relevance to Trade Dress Claims

MGA argues that the allegations in the third section of the Complaint are relevant to its trade dress claims because they help elucidate Mattel's "intent."

HN5 The relevant "intent" for purposes of a trade dress claim (and the likelihood of confusion analysis) is the defendant's "intent to deceive the public" or the [¶19] "intent of deriving benefit from the reputation of the [plaintiff's] trade-mark or trade name." Brookfield Commc'n, Inc. v. West Coast Entm't Corp., 174 F.3d 1036, 1059 (9th Cir. 1999). See also Toho Co., Ltd. v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 645 F.2d 788, 791 n. 2 (9th Cir. 1981) ("In order to raise the inference of a likelihood of confusion, a plaintiff must show that the defendant intended to profit by confusing consumers."); J. Thomas McCarthy, McCarthy on Trademarks and Unfair Competition § 23:113 (2005) ("[W]hen the accused infringer's state of mind is introduced as relevant to the liability issue of the likelihood of confusion, . . . the only relevant intent is intent to confuse.").

---

<sup>4</sup> For the same reason, the court denies Mattel's motion to strike paragraph 35 of the Complaint, which provides relevant background information regarding the purpose of Mattel's release of the My Scene dolls and its release of the "Flavas." See Compl. PP 35-36 ("[Mattel's My Scene dolls,] [the] confusingly similar Bratz imitators [,] may have been originally intended to buy Mattel time while it worked to release another product the following summer, called Flavas.' . . . The [Flavas] were not well-received. . . . Mattel has seemingly abandoned this line. Realizing that My Scene' was its best bet for riding MGA's successful coattails and capitalizing on the unique and inherently distinctive look that MGA had developed in its Bratz' dolls -- and MGA's substantial goodwill -- Mattel has systematically proceeded to modify the My Scene' dolls since their original release, particularly their eyes, to increase their similarity to Bratz' more and more over time.").

The allegations contained in the third section of the Complaint do not help demonstrate that Mattel had this particular "intent" when it created the My Scene dolls or any other allegedly infringing product. For example, Mattel's alleged "intent to deceive the public" in creating the My Scene dolls or its intent to "derive benefit from the reputation" of MGA's Bratz is not evidenced by the fact that "Mattel has sent threatening letters to several of its former employees" or [*20] has intimidated others into not dealing with MGA. These alleged facts, and the others asserted in the third section of the Complaint, demonstrate that Mattel is a fierce (and perhaps unfair) competitor, not that it acted with an "intent to deceive" in creating its products. Therefore, the third section of the Complaint cannot be sustained on the ground that it supports MGA's trade dress claims.<sup>5</sup>

b. Relevance to Unfair Competition Claims

MGA also argues that the allegations in the third section of the Complaint support its claim for "unfair competition" under Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq.

HN6 [↑] California Business and Professions Code section 17200 et seq. [*21] (the "Unfair Competition Law" or "UCL") prohibits, among other things, "unfair business acts or practices." Id. California courts have generally defined "unfair" broadly under the UCL in order to "provide the courts with the maximum discretion to prohibit new schemes to defraud." National Rural Telecomm. Coop. v. DirectTV, Inc., 319 F. Supp. 2d 1059, 1075 (C.D. Cal. 2003) (Baird, J.) (citing Motors, Inc. v. Times Mirror Co., 102 Cal. App. 3d 735, 740, 162 Cal. Rptr. 543 (1980)). See also People ex rel. Renne v. Servantes, 86 Cal. App. 4th 1081, 1095, 103 Cal. Rptr. 2d 870 (2001) ("The [UCL] is intentionally broad to give the court maximum discretion to control whatever new schemes may be contrived, even though they are not yet forbidden by law.").

In Cel-Tech Communications, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Telephone Co. ("Cel-Tech"), 20 Cal. 4th 163, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 (1999), the California Supreme Court clarified the definition of "unfair" insofar as it applies to cases between direct competitors, such as that now before the court. In particular, the Cel-Tech court turned to section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act ("FTCA"), 15 U.S.C. § 45(a), [*22] and stated:

HN7 [↑] When a plaintiff who claims to have suffered injury from a direct competitor's "unfair" act or practice invokes section 17200, the word "unfair" in that section means conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition.

Id. at 186-87.

Here, MGA claims that Mattel's conduct alleged in the third section of the Complaint "violated the policy or spirit" of the antitrust laws "because its effects were comparable" to a violation of those laws, and/or "otherwise significantly threatened or harmed competition." At this early stage in the proceedings, assuming all facts and all reasonable inferences in MGA's favor, the court agrees.

MGA alleges that Mattel has chosen to "compete" with MGA (and others in the industry) not by creating a better product or lowering its prices, but by using its extraordinary market power to unfairly preclude other companies and brands from entering and competing. For example, MGA alleges that Mattel has used its [*23] massive influence to corruptively cause industry groups to discriminate against MGA even though MGA needs to be associated with these groups to exist, survive, and thrive in the industry. See Compl. PP 81-96. Similarly, MGA contends that Mattel has used its great market power, which included a 90% share of the fashion doll market in 1997, to intimidate others into not dealing with MGA. Id. PP 74-77. MGA also asserts that Mattel has intentionally engaged in schemes to buy up supplies to lock MGA (and others) out of the market. Id. P 78. Finally, Mattel employees have allegedly been caught tampering with MGA's displays, and have lied to others about MGA's products. Id. P 79.

<sup>5</sup> This same reasoning applies to defeat MGA's arguments that the third section of the Complaint supports MGA's claims for attorneys' fees, injunctive relief, and "unfair competition" under the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a). The relevant "intent" raised by each of these claims is the same as that raised by MGA's trade dress claims.

At this early stage in the proceedings, the court cannot say that this collective conduct is consistent with the "policy and spirit" of the antitrust laws, and/or provides no "significant threat or harm" to competition. In Cel-Tech, itself, the California Supreme Court stated that "the purpose of the antitrust law is to foster and encourage competition' by prohibiting practices by which fair and honest competition is destroyed or prevented." Cel-Tech, 20 Cal. 4th at 186 (quoting [*24] Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17001). See also Northeast Airlines, Inc. v. World Airways, Inc., 262 F. Supp. 316, 319 (D. Mass. 1966) ("we believe that the purpose of destroying a competitor by means that are not within the area of fair and honest competition is a purpose that clearly subverts the goal of the [antitrust laws] "). Similarly, it is recognized that the federal antitrust laws were "designed to be a comprehensive charter of economic liberty aimed at preserving free and unfettered competition as the rule of trade." See William Meade Fletcher, 10A Fletcher Cyclopedia f the Law of Private Corporations § 4981 (2004) (discussing the Sherman Act). Mattel, by its above-mentioned conduct, has prevented "fair competition" from occurring and has undermined "free and unfettered competition."

Additionally, the antitrust laws and the FTCA have been applied to enjoin conduct arguably similar to Mattel's. Compare Compl. PP 75-77 (alleging that Mattel, using its extraordinary market power, has intimidated employees, publishing entities, distributors, and retailers into not doing business with and discriminating against MGA), [*25] with Federal Trade Commission ("FTC") v. Brown Shoe Co., 384 U.S. 316, 321, 16 L. Ed. 2d 587, 86 S. Ct. 1501 (1966) ("basic policies" of antitrust laws violated when second largest shoe manufacturer employed extremely attractive program that required retailers "substantially to limit their trade with [manufacturer's] competitors"); Adolph Coors Co. v. FTC, 497 F.2d 1178 (10th Cir. 1974) (affirming FTC finding that powerful supplier violated FTCA by coercing distributors and retailers into participating in a variety of anticompetitive conduct, including excluding products of supplier's competitor); Union Circulation Co. v. FTC, 241 F.2d 652, 655-56 (2d Cir. 1957) (affirming FTC finding that defendants violated FTCA by "coercing" others into not doing business with defendants' competitor); Hastings Mfg. Co. v. FTC, 153 F.2d 253, 42 F.T.C. 887 (6th Cir. 1946) (affirming FTC finding that defendant violated FTCA by using various means to induce distributors into refusing to handle competitors' products); Carter Carburetor Corp. v. FTC, 112 F.2d 722, 734-36, 31 F.T.C. 1793 (8th Cir. 1940) (affirming FTC finding that powerful supplier violated FTCA by "inducing, coercing and compelling" [*26] many independent [retailers] to cancel existing sales contracts with . . . competitor and to cease and refuse to deal in the products of such competitor"); FTC v. Wallace, 75 F.2d 733, 20 F.T.C. 713 (8th Cir. 1935) (affirming FTC finding that defendant coal dealers violated FTCA by intimidating and threatening to boycott suppliers that dealt with competitors); Amarel v. Connell, 202 Cal. App. 3d 137, 142, 145, 248 Cal. Rptr. 276 (1988) (plaintiff rice growers stated antitrust claim against powerful vertically-integrated competitors, in part, because competitors refused to do business with those who dealt with plaintiffs' customers); Kolling v. Dow Jones & Co., Inc., 137 Cal. App. 3d 709, 187 Cal. Rptr. 797 (1982) (violation of antitrust laws for supplier to threaten, intimidate, and coerce distributor into participating in anticompetitive conduct); R.E. Spriggs Co., Inc. v. Adolph Coors Co., 94 Cal. App. 3d 419, 425, 156 Cal. Rptr. 738 (1979) (violation of antitrust laws for supplier to force distributors into anticompetitive behavior "through suggestions which the distributors could not refuse"). Compare Compl. P 78 (alleging Mattel bought up supply of doll hair from two largest suppliers [*27] to lock MGA out of market), with Amarel, 202 Cal. App. 3d at 142, 145 (plaintiff rice growers stated antitrust claim against integrated competitors, in part, because competitors locked plaintiffs' customers out of ports necessary for business). Compare Compl. P 79 (alleging Mattel manipulated market by lying about MGA's products), with Northeast Airlines, Inc., 262 F. Supp. at 319 ("[W]e believe that the purpose of destroying a competitor by means that are not within the area of fair and honest competition is a purpose that clearly subverts the goal of the [anti-trust laws]. . . . The making of false and disparaging statements about a competitor . . . [is] not within the area of fair and honest competition.").

Thus, at least at this stage in the proceedings, the court finds that the allegations in the third section of MGA's Complaint support a claim for "unfair competition" under the UCL.<sup>6</sup> [*28] Accordingly, the court denies Mattel's motion to strike paragraphs 74-100, 113-114, and 118 of the Complaint.<sup>7</sup>

2. Request for Restitution and Disgorgement

Mattel argues that regardless, the court should strike MGA's request for restitution and disgorgement insofar as it relates to MGA's UCL claim. Mattel's argument is rejected. First, it is undisputed that MGA's request for restitution and disgorgement will remain in the Complaint regardless, because the request is potentially relevant to MGA's other claims. Compare Opp. at 21 ("[Restitution and disgorgement] [are] entirely proper [forms of relief] under the Lanham Act and California common law, and Mattel does not contest this."), with Rep. at 10 (failing to respond to this argument). Second, and more important, HN9 restitution and disgorgement are sometimes appropriate remedies under the UCL. See Korea Supply Co. v. Lockheed Martin Corp., 29 Cal. 4th 1134, 1148, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 29, 63 P.3d 937 (2003) (under UCL, "an individual may recover profits unfairly obtained to the extent that these profits represent monies given to the [*29] defendant or benefits in which the plaintiff has an ownership interest."); Id. at 1144, 1148 (UCL allows for "disgorgement" of profits that is "restitutionary in nature"). See also Inline, Inc. v. Apace Moving Systems, Inc., 125 Cal. App. 4th 895, 903, 23 Cal. Rptr. 3d 216 (2005) ("The [California Supreme] [C]ourt has further specified that [t]he only nonpunitive monetary relief available . . . is the disgorgement of money that has been wrongfully obtained or, in the language of the statute, an order restor[ing] . . . money . . . which may have been acquired by means of . . . unfair competition."") (quoting Bank of the West v. Superior Court, 2 Cal. 4th 1254, 1266, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 538, 833 P.2d 545 (1992)). Here, MGA's UCL claim survives, and it is too early in these proceedings to determine definitively whether MGA might be entitled to restitution and disgorgement based upon its UCL-related allegations.<sup>8</sup> Accordingly, the court denies Mattel's motion to strike MGA's request for restitution and disgorgement.

[*30] C. Paragraph 98 -- "LeapFrog"

Mattel asserts that the court should strike paragraph 98 of the Complaint, which provides:

Mattel has clearly engaged in tortious, illegal and unethical behavior in its unfettered efforts to disrupt, if not destroy, MGA. Indeed, this is apparently Mattel's current modus operandi when it comes to "competing" in the industry. The once immensely successful "LeapFrog" interactive learning product, for example, has apparently been one of Mattel's other recent victims.

<sup>6</sup> Mattel attempts to avoid this result by relying upon Cel-Tech's statement that HN8 "the antitrust laws were enacted for the protection of competition, not competitors." Cel-Tech, 20 Cal. 4th at 186 (internal quotation marks omitted) (emphasis omitted) (quoting Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colorado, Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 115, 93 L. Ed. 2d 427, 107 S. Ct. 484 (1986)). Although true, this statement does not aid Mattel because MGA's UCL claim does seek to protect "competition," not just "competitors." The essence of MGA's claim is that Mattel has engaged in conduct stifling fair "competition," not that competitors can only compete with Mattel (when Mattel is competing fairly) with court assistance. That MGA may benefit from fair "competition" does not imply that MGA seeks only the protection of "competitors." See Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 352-53, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333, 110 S. Ct. 1884 (1990) (Stevens, J., dissent) ("The antitrust laws were enacted for the protection of competition, not competitors. This proposition . . . cannot be read to deny all remedial actions by competitors. When competitors are injured by [conduct that violates the antitrust laws] rather than by the free play of market forces, the antitrust laws protect competitors precisely for the purpose of protecting competition.") (citations and quotation marks omitted). Mattel additionally argues that MGA's UCL claim fails because MGA has not alleged that Mattel's conduct harmed "consumers." However, by contending that Mattel's conduct inappropriately hindered inter-brand competition, MGA has necessarily alleged harm to consumers. See generally Amarel, 202 Cal. App. 3d at 142 (consumers benefit from "full and unrestricted competition").

<sup>7</sup> Because of this holding, the court need not address MGA's other arguments as to why these paragraphs should not be stricken.

<sup>8</sup> The court notes, however, that HN10 the UCL does not allow for an individual to recover "disgorgement of profits allegedly obtained by means of an unfair business practice . . . where [those] profits are neither money taken from a plaintiff nor funds in which the plaintiff has an ownership interest." Korea Supply Co., 29 Cal. 4th at 1140.

Compl. P 98. Mattel argues that this paragraph should be stricken because MGA lacks standing to assert a UCL claim on behalf of LeapFrog and because the allegations are immaterial.

Mattel's arguments fail. First, MGA is not attempting to assert a claim on behalf of LeapFrog. Instead, MGA proffers its allegation regarding LeapFrog as an example of how Mattel treats its competition, of which MGA is a part. Therefore, MGA need not have "standing" with respect to this allegation. Moreover, at this stage of the proceedings, it would be premature to conclude that the allegation is necessarily immaterial. Accordingly, the court denies Mattel's motion to strike paragraph [*31] 98 of the Complaint.

D. Paragraph 75 -- Suing and Sending Demand Letters to Former Employees

Finally, Mattel argues that the court should strike paragraph 75 (and related allegations in paragraph 113) of the Complaint. Paragraph 75 provides:

[W]ielding the litigation privilege as a potential shield for intimidating conduct, Mattel has sent threatening letters to several of its former employees who now work for MGA warning them not to disclose even publicly available information about Mattel, including the names and positions of Mattel employees. Mattel even went so far as to sue one of its former senior executives, after he had the temerity to resign and join MGA in October 2004. Not only was Mattel's lawsuit dismissed for failure to state a viable claim, but Mattel thereafter seemingly could not muster up a shred of evidence sufficient to support an amended complaint. As a result, Mattel's case against its former executive was dismissed with prejudice.

Compl. P 75 (emphasis in original). As mentioned, these allegations, while not capable of supporting MGA's trade dress claims, arguably support MGA's UCL claim. See supra Part IV.B.1. Mattel [*32] argues that these allegations should nevertheless be stricken because: (1) MGA lacks standing under the UCL to assert such allegations; and (2) the conduct alleged in paragraph 75 is rendered actionable by California's "litigation privilege" and the Noerr-Pennington doctrine.

1. Standing

HN11 [↑] Section 17204 of the California Business and Professions Code provides that a party has standing to bring an action pursuant to the UCL if it "has suffered injury in fact and has lost money or property as a result of a violation [of the UCL]." MGA specifically alleges that as a result of Mattel's conduct, including that alleged in paragraph 75, MGA's "ability to attract, hire, and retain employees has been affected." Compl. P 100. See also id. P 113 (Mattel has . . . used its power and influence to attempt to, if not actually, intimidate and threaten MGA's current and potential employees so as to cause MGA competitive injury."). Therefore, even if it is necessary for MGA to demonstrate it has "standing" to assert the allegations in paragraph 75, MGA has adequately alleged that it "has suffered injury in fact and has lost money or property as a result" of Mattel's alleged conduct. [*33] See Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 561, 119 L. Ed. 2d 351, 112 S. Ct. 2130 (1992) (where 12(b) motion to dismiss is based on lack of standing, court must defer to plaintiff's factual allegations, and must "presume that general allegations embrace those specific facts that are necessary to support the claim") (quotation marks omitted). Therefore, MGA has "standing" under the UCL to assert the allegations contained in paragraph 75.

2. The Litigation Privilege and the Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

Mattel argues that regardless, the conduct alleged in paragraph 75 is actionable under California's litigation privilege and the Noerr-Pennington doctrine.

California's litigation privilege is codified at section 47(b) of the California Civil Code, which provides that HN12 [↑] "[a]privileged publication or broadcast is one made . . . in any judicial proceeding." Cal. Civ. Code § 47(b). HN13 [↑] This privilege applies to "any communication (1) made in judicial or quasi-judicial proceedings; (2) by litigants or other participants authorized by law; (3) to achieve the objects of the litigation; and (4) to have some connection or logical relation to the action." Silberg v. Anderson, 50 Cal. 3d 205, 212, 266 Cal. Rptr. 638, 786 P.2d 365 (1990). [*34]

The Noerr-Pennington doctrine is a federal court creation. Originally, it was "[t]he First Amendment aspect of antitrust law." Freeman v. Lasky, Haas & Cohler, 410 F.3d 1180, 1183-84 (9th Cir. 2005). The doctrine was announced in Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464, 81 S. Ct. 523 (1961), where the Supreme Court interpreted the Sherman Act, in view of "the right of the people . . . to petition the Government for a redress of grievances," to not cover political lobbying:

To hold that the government retains the power to act in [its] representative capacity [to make laws that operate to restrain trade] and yet hold, at the same time, that the people cannot freely inform the government of their wishes would impute to the Sherman Act a purpose to regulate, not business activity, but political activity, a purpose which would have no basis whatever in the legislative history of that Act. . . . [S]uch a construction of the Sherman Act would [also] raise important constitutional questions. The right of petition is one of the freedoms protected by the Bill of Rights, and we cannot, of course, lightly impute [*35] to Congress an intent to invade these freedoms.

Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. at 137-38. HN14↑ "The doctrine extends to all three branches of government, and thus also exempts bringing a lawsuit -- that is, petitioning a court -- from antitrust liability." Freeman, 410 F.3d at 1183 (citing Cal. Motor Transp. Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 510, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642, 92 S. Ct. 609 (1972)). To date, some courts have even applied this doctrine to immunize pre-litigation demand letters from lawsuits unrelated to antitrust law. See, e.g., Directv, Inc. v. Lewis, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8187, No. 03-CV-6241-CJS-JWF, 2005 WL 1006030, at 5-7 (W.D.N.Y. Apr. 29, 2005).

These doctrines apply differently to MGA's allegations regarding Mattel's suing one of its former employees and its allegations regarding Mattel sending demand letters to its former employees.

a. The Brewer Litigation

In the second part of paragraph 95, MGA refers to a lawsuit filed by Mattel against one of its former senior executives, Ronald Brewer, who left Mattel for MGA. In that lawsuit, Mattel sought declaratory relief that certain information allegedly possessed by Brewer was confidential to Mattel [*36] and that Brewer did not have the "ability . . . to undertake the responsibilities inherent in his new position with MGA without disclosing or using the confidential . . . [i]nformation that [he] learned while employed by Mattel." See Mot., Ex. A (Mattel, Inc. v. Brewer, Compl. PP 47,48).<sup>9</sup> The Los Angeles Superior Court dismissed Mattel's case against Brewer with prejudice, and the decision is currently on appeal. Mot. at 5.

Despite MGA's arguments to the contrary, its allegations regarding the Brewer litigation are rendered actionable by California's litigation privilege. The Complaint essentially asserts that the Brewer lawsuit was meritless and that Mattel instituted the suit simply [*37] to harass Brewer and intimidate others who might consider leaving Mattel for MGA. The initiation of such a lawsuit and the statements made therein are clearly protected by the litigation privilege. See Rubin v. Green, 4 Cal. 4th 1187, 1195, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 828, 847 P.2d 1044 (1993) ("filing the complaint and subsequent pleadings in the litigation" is protected by the litigation privilege); Abraham v. Lancaster Community Hospital, 217 Cal. App. 3d 796, 822, 266 Cal. Rptr. 360 (1990) ("[I]t cannot be disputed that the filing of a lawsuit is a publication in the course of a judicial proceeding."); Microsoft Corp. v. BEC Computer Co., Inc., 818 F. Supp. 1313, 1319 (C.D. Cal. 1992) (Kenyon, J.) ("the filing of improper or meritless pleadings . . . is privileged").

---

<sup>9</sup>The court takes judicial notice of this document. See Parrino v. FHP Inc., 146 F.3d 699, 706 (9th Cir. 1998) HN15↑ ("a district court ruling on a motion to dismiss may consider a document the authenticity of which is not contested, and upon which the plaintiff's complaint necessarily relies").

Thus, MGA's allegations regarding the Brewer litigation are based upon privileged conduct, and such allegations are ordered stricken from the Complaint.<sup>10</sup>

[*38] b. Demand Letters

Paragraph 75 also includes the allegation that "Mattel has sent threatening letters to several of its former employees who now work for MGA[,] warning them not to disclose even publicly available information about Mattel, including the names and positions of Mattel employees." Compl. P 75 (emphasis in original). At least at this stage in the proceedings, neither the litigation privilege nor the Noerr-Pennington doctrine provides a basis for striking this allegation.

First, because this allegation relates to "pre-litigation conduct," the scope of the litigation privilege is narrowed. In particular, HN16<sup>11</sup> pre-litigation demand letters are "protected by the litigation privilege [only] when the statement is made in connection with a proposed litigation that is contemplated in good faith and under serious consideration." Blanchard v. DIRECTV, Inc., 123 Cal. App. 4th 903, 919, 20 Cal. Rptr. 3d 385 (2004) (quoting Aronson v. Kinsella, 58 Cal. App. 4th 254, 262, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 305 (1997)) (citing Silberg, 50 Cal. 3d at 212; Laffer v. Levinson, Miller, Jacobs & Phillips, 34 Cal. App. 4th 117, 124, 40 Cal. Rptr. 2d 233 (1995); Fuhrman v. California Satellite Systems, 179 Cal. App. 3d 408, 420-21, 225 Cal. Rptr. 140, 231 Cal. Rptr. 113 (1986), [*39] overruled on other grounds by Silberg v. Anderson, 50 Cal. 3d 205, 212, 266 Cal. Rptr. 638, 786 P.2d 365 (1990)). Here, it is at least arguable that Mattel's demand letters did not meet the "good faith" requirement because they allegedly threatened to sue former employees even if the employees disclosed only "publicly available information." Cf. Herzog v. "A" Company, Inc., 138 Cal. App. 3d 656, 188 Cal. Rptr. 155 (1982) ("good faith" requirement not met when employer sends demand letter to former employee threatening suit if employee engages in conduct not barred by agreement between employer and former employee). See also Aronson v. Kinsella, 58 Cal. App. 4th 254, 270, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 305 (1997) (must determine whether party writing demand letter "honestly believed he had a viable legal claim"). In any event, this determination is not one that should be made on the pleadings. See, e.g., Fuhrman, 179 Cal. App. 3d at 422 (whether demand letters were sent in good faith and serious contemplation of litigation is factual question that cannot be decided on demurrer). Therefore, the litigation privilege cannot be used as a basis at this time to strike the allegations regarding Mattel's demand letters.

[*40] Second, the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, even if applicable, does not provide a basis at this time for striking the allegations regarding Mattel's demand letters, because MGA's allegations suggest that these letters fall within the "sham" exception to the doctrine. As stated by the Ninth Circuit:

<sup>10</sup> MGA attempts to avoid this result by arguing that the Brewer litigation does not provide a "basis" for its UCL claim, but merely "evidence" of Mattel's unfair business practices. See Opp. at 20-21 (citing White v. Western Title Ins. Co., 40 Cal. 3d 870, 888, 221 Cal. Rptr. 509, 710 P.2d 309 (1985) ("[T]here is] a careful distinction between a cause of action based squarely on a privileged communication, such as an action for defamation, and one based upon an underlying course of conduct evidenced by the communication."); Stacy & Witbeck, Inc. v. City and County of San Francisco, 36 Cal. App. 4th 1074, 1091, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 472 (1995) ("[A]lthough section 47, subdivision (b), bars certain tort causes of action predicated on a judicial statement or publication, it does not create an evidentiary privilege for those statements. Thus, as an example, those statements can be used for evidentiary purposes to determine a person's intent."); Oren Royal Oaks Venture v. Greenberg, Bernhard, Weiss & Karma, 42 Cal. 3d 1157, 232 Cal. Rptr. 567, 728 P.2d 1202 (1986) (in abuse of process action, plaintiff may use statements made during settlement negotiations in prior suit as "evidence" of defendant's improper "ulterior" purpose in initiating prior suit)). MGA, however, misrepresents the nature of its Complaint. Reading the Complaint as a whole, it is clear that the allegations in paragraph 75 provide one of the "bases" upon which MGA rests its claim that Mattel engaged in "unfair competition." The allegations in paragraph 75 are not mere "evidence" tending to show an element of some other cause of action, such as malicious prosecution or abuse of process. Indeed, MGA itself appears to admit as much in a separate portion of its opposition. See Opp. at 1-2 (describing its allegations, including those based upon the Brewer litigation, as being "at the heart of Mattel's anti-competitive behavior"). Consequently, MGA's allegations regarding the Brewer litigation are subject to the litigation privilege. See Dong v. Board of Trustees of Leland Stanford Junior University, 191 Cal. App. 3d 1572, 1594, 236 Cal. Rptr. 912 (1987) (documents subject to litigation privilege if they provide "the nuclei" for causes of action); Block v. Sacramento Clinical Labs, Inc., 131 Cal. App. 3d 386, 392-93, 182 Cal. Rptr. 438 (1982) (privilege applies where litigation-related conduct is "the actionable wrong").

HN17[] While Noerr-Pennington immunity is broad, it is not so broad as to cover all litigation: "Sham" petitions don't fall within the protection of the doctrine. We have recognized three circumstances when litigation might be sham:

First, if the alleged anticompetitive behavior consists of bringing a single sham lawsuit (or a small number of such suits), the antitrust plaintiff must demonstrate that the lawsuit was (1) objectively baseless, and (2) a concealed attempt to interfere with the plaintiff's business relationships.

Second, if the alleged anticompetitive behavior is the filing of a series of lawsuits, "the question is not whether any one of them has merit -- some may turn out to, just as a matter of chance -- but whether they are brought pursuant to a policy of starting legal proceedings without regard to the merits and for the purpose of injuring a market rival. [*41]"

Finally, in the context of a judicial proceeding, if the alleged anticompetitive behavior consists of making intentional misrepresentations to the court, litigation can be deemed a sham if "a party's knowing fraud upon, or its intentional misrepresentations to, the court deprive the litigation of its legitimacy."

Freeman, 410 F.3d at 1183-84 (citations omitted).

Here, MGA's allegations suggest that the first exception is applicable: the requests in Mattel's demand letters were "objectively baseless," and the demand letters were a "concealed attempt to interfere" with MGA's business relationships. Therefore, at least at this stage in the proceedings, the court cannot say that the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, even if applicable, serves as a basis for striking MGA's allegations regarding Mattel's demand letters. Accordingly, the court denies Mattel's motion to strike MGA's allegations regarding Mattel's demand letters.

V. CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above, Mattel's Motion is GRANTED in part and DENIED in part. Mattel's Motion is granted insofar as it requests that MGA's allegations regarding the Brewer litigation be stricken; otherwise, [*42] Mattel's Motion is denied. No later than September 19, 2005, Mattel shall file an Amended Answer.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

DATED: August 25, 2005

Nora M. Manella

United States District Judge

Mpt, Inc. v. Marathon Labels, Inc.

United States District Court for the Northern District of Ohio, Eastern Division

August 25, 2005, Decided ; August 26, 2005, Filed

CASE NO. 1:04 CV 2357

Reporter

2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18270 *; 2005 WL 2086069

MPT, Inc., Plaintiff, Vs. Marathon Labels, Inc., et al., Defendants.

Subsequent History: Motion granted by MPT, Inc. v. Marathon Labels, Inc., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 29278 \(N.D. Ohio, Nov. 22, 2005\)

Disposition: [*1] Defendants Marathon Labels and Polymeric Converting's Motion for Leave of Court to Amend their Answers granted.

Core Terms

---

bad faith, infringed, Labels, counterclaims, patents, unfair competition, patent infringement, defendants', baseless, Amend, marketplace, customers, patentee, invalid, affirmative defense, motion to dismiss, motion for leave, leave to amend, patent law, cease-and-desist, communications, preempted, placards, argues, futile

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Leave of Court

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

HN1 [down arrow] Amendment of Pleadings, Leave of Court

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 15\(a\), leave to amend a pleading shall be freely given "when justice so requires." In determining whether to grant leave to amend, the trial court must consider several factors. Undue delay in filing, lack of notice to the opposing party, bad faith by the moving party, repeated failures to cure deficiencies by previous amendments, undue prejudice to the opposing party, and futility of amendment are all factors which may affect the decision. To deny a motion for leave to amend, a district court cannot base its decision on delay alone and, instead, must determine whether the amendment will cause significant prejudice to the nonmoving party. However, when an amendment is sought at a late stage in the litigation, there is an increased burden to show justification on the part of the party requesting the amendment. Lastly, a motion for leave to amend may be denied for futility if the trial court concludes that the pleading as amended could not withstand a motion to dismiss.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Trade Dress Protection > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Bad Faith Enforcement

Trademark Law > ... > Unfair Competition > Federal Unfair Competition Law > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Advertising > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Designation of Origin > Elements of False Designation of Origin

HN2 [down arrow] Inequitable Conduct, Anticompetitive Conduct

Before a patentee may be held liable under § 43(a) of the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1125\(a\), for marketplace activity in support of its patent, and thus be deprived of the right to make statements about potential infringement of its patent, the marketplace activity must have been undertaken in bad faith. The "bad faith" prerequisite is a function of the interaction between the Lanham Act and patent law, and is in addition to the elements required by § 43(a) itself, as § 43 alone does not require bad faith.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse > Bad Faith

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Bad Faith Enforcement

Torts > Business Torts > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

HN3 [down arrow] Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse, Bad Faith

A state unfair competition claim based on a patentholder's marketplace activity in support of a patent is not preempted by the patent laws if the claimant can allege and ultimately prove that the patentholder acted in bad faith.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > General Overview

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Contracts > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse > Bad Faith

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Bad Faith Enforcement

**HN4** [down] Inequitable Conduct, Anticompetitive Conduct

State tortious interference with contractual relations claims are not preempted by the patent laws where the claims involved allegations of bad faith marketplace conduct by the patentee.

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > General Overview

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

Torts > Procedural Matters > Preemption > General Overview

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Bad Faith Enforcement

**HN5** [down] Constitutional Law, Supremacy Clause

Federal patent law preempts state-law tort liability for a patent-holder's good faith conduct in communications asserting infringement of its patent and warning about potential litigation. State-law claims can survive federal preemption only to the extent that such claims are based on a showing of "bad faith" action in asserting infringement. Accordingly, to avoid preemption, bad faith must be alleged and ultimately proven, even if bad faith is not otherwise an element of the tort claim.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Bad Faith Enforcement

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Burdens of Proof

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > General Overview

**HN6** [down] Defenses, Bad Faith Enforcement

Bad faith must be demonstrated by a showing of objective baselessness, i.e., clear and convincing evidence that the patentee had no reasonable basis to believe that the accused product infringed the patents at issue.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Counterclaims > General Overview

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Bad Faith Enforcement

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Advertising > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Designation of Origin > Elements of False Designation of Origin

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Trade Dress Protection > General Overview

HN7 [L] Inequitable Conduct, Anticompetitive Conduct

The initiation of an infringement suit is clearly not covered by the text of § 43(a) of the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1125\(a\), while a communication to the customers of the accused infringer, in certain circumstances, may be.

Counsel: For MPT, Inc., Plaintiff: Kyle B. Fleming, David E. Kitchen, Baker & Hostetler, Cleveland, OH; Thomas H. Shunk, Baker & Hostetler, LLP, Cleveland, OH.

For Marathon Labels, Inc., Defendant: Bret A. Hrvnak, Hahn Loeser & Parks, Akron, OH; Mark E. Miller, Miller & Associates, Evansville, IN; Richard E. Gaum, Hahn Loeser & Parks LLP, Akron, OH.

For Marathon Labels, Inc., Counter-Claimant: Richard E. Gaum, Hahn Loeser & Parks LLP, Akron, OH.

For MPT, Inc., Counter-Defendant: Thomas H. Shunk, Baker & Hostetler, LLP, Cleveland, OH.

For Polymeric Converting LLC, Sunbelt Consulting Group, Inc., Counter-Claimants: Richard M. Klein, Christopher B. Fagan, Fay, Sharpe, Fagan, Minnich & McKee, Cleveland, OH; James V. Costigan, John F. Volpe, Kathleen A. Costigan, Hedman & Costigan, New York, NY.

Judges: PATRICIA A. GAUGHAN, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: PATRICIA A. GAUGHAN

Opinion

---

Memorandum of Opinion & Order

Introduction

This matter is before the Court upon the Motion and Memorandum of Defendants Marathon Labels and Polymeric Converting for [*2] Leave of Court to Amend their Answers (Doc. 50). The issue presently before the Court is whether defendants should be permitted to amend their Answers to assert additional defenses and counterclaims relating to a federal claim of unfair competition under the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1125\(a\), as well as state law claims for unfair competition and tortious interference with contract and business relations. For the following reasons, the Court grants defendants' Motion.

Facts

On November 29, 2004, plaintiff MPT, Inc. ("MPT") filed a complaint in this Court against defendant Marathon Labels, Inc., ("Marathon Labels") alleging infringement of its Patent No. 5,417,790 ("the '790 patent") and Patent No. RE 37, 164 E ("the '164 patent").<sup>1</sup> Defendant Marathon Labels filed its Answer on February 1, 2005, in which it asserted various affirmative defenses and alleged two counterclaims against plaintiff MPT. These counterclaims sought a declaratory judgment that (1) defendant Marathon Labels "has not infringed, and is not infringing,

---

1

The '790 and '164 patents relate to label systems for reusable containers. The patents were issued by the United States Patent and Trademark Office to Robert J. Petrou on May 23, 1995 and May 8, 2001, respectively. Plaintiff MPT is the assignee of all rights in both the '790 and '164 patents.

contributorily infringing, or inducing infringement of any claim of the '790 and '164 patents;" and (2) that the '790 and '164 [*3] patents are invalid and/or unenforceable under federal patent laws.

Thereafter, on April 8, 2005, plaintiff MPT filed its First Amended Complaint for Patent Infringement. This Amended Complaint also alleged infringement of the '790 and '164 patents, and added as defendants the following parties: Marathon Durable Labeling Systems LLC ("MDLS"), Polymeric Converting LLC ("Polymeric"), and Sunbelt Consulting Group, Inc. ("Sunbelt"). In addition, the First Amended Complaint alleged that Marathon Labels, MDLS, Polymeric and Sunbelt are jointly engaged in the manufacture and/or marketing of placards and labels for use in labeling reusable containers ("Reusable Labels"), and are "thereby jointly engaged in inducing purchasers [*4] of the Reusable Labels in wrongfully practicing the methods of the" '790 and '164 patents. (First Am. Compl. at P7).

Defendants Marathon Labels and Polymeric filed their Answers on April 18, 2005 and April 21, 2005, respectively. As before, these Answers asserted various affirmative defenses and sought declaratory judgments of non-infringement and of the invalidity of the '790 and '164 patents.

Meanwhile, defendants claim that, by letter dated April 21, 2005, Seaway Bolt and Specials Corp. (a customer of defendant Marathon Labels) (hereinafter "Seaway") returned a purchase of labels, which had been supplied by defendant Polymeric. The basis for returning the purchase was an April 11, 2005 letter from counsel for plaintiff MPT to Seaway. This letter provides, in part, as follows:

You should know that MPT, Inc., which licenses The Kennedy Group to make and sell placards for container re-labeling applications, is the owner of U.S. Patent 5,417,790 and U.S. Patent Re. 37, 164, and is currently suing Marathon Labels, Inc., for patent infringement based on Marathon Labels' sale of its Smart Surface Placards.

If your company purchases placards from Marathon Labels and uses the placards [*5] in the way described in the patents, it may be infringing on the patented process.

See Exh. C to defendants' Motion to Amend Answers.

In response to this letter, defendants Marathon Labels and Polymeric filed the instant Motion for Leave of Court to Amend Their Answers. As discussed below, in this Motion, these defendants seek leave to assert additional counterclaims for unfair competition under Section 43\(a\) of the Lanham Act, as well as state law claims for unfair competition and tortious interference with contract and business relations. Plaintiff MPT filed a Brief in Opposition, and defendants have filed a Reply in Support.

Standard of Review

HN1 [↑] Under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 15\(a\), leave to amend a pleading shall be freely given "when justice so requires." Fed. R. Civ. Pro. 15\(a\); See also Wade v. Knoxville Utilities Board, 259 F.3d 452 \(6th Cir. 2001\). In determining whether to grant leave to amend, this Court must consider several factors. "Undue delay in filing, lack of notice to the opposing party, bad faith by the moving party, repeated failures to cure [*6] deficiencies by previous amendments, undue prejudice to the opposing party, and futility of amendment are all factors which may affect the decision." Id. at 458. To deny a motion for leave to amend, a district court cannot base its decision on delay alone and, instead, must determine whether the amendment will cause significant prejudice to the nonmoving party. Duggins v. Steak 'N Shake, 195 F.3d 828, 834 \(6th Cir. 1999\). However, when an amendment is sought at a late stage in the litigation, there is an increased burden to show justification on the part of the party requesting the amendment. Wade, 259 F.3d at 459; See also Duggins, 195 F.3d at 834. Lastly, a motion for leave to amend may be denied for futility "if the court concludes that the pleading as amended could not withstand a motion to dismiss." Martin v. Associated Truck Lines, Inc., 801 F.2d 246, 249 \(6th Cir. 1986\). See also Midkiff v. Adams County Regional Water District, 409 F.3d 758, 767 \(6th Cir. 2005\).

Discussion

Defendants Marathon Labels and Polymeric argue that they should be granted leave to amend their [*7] Answers in response to plaintiff MPT's April 11, 2005 cease-and-desist letter for the following reasons. First, defendants argue that there has been no undue delay since their Motion to Amend was filed less than two months after the Court's April 8, 2005 Pleading Amendment date and the filing of plaintiff's Amended Complaint. Further, defendants maintain that plaintiff cannot claim prejudice since "this action is in its infancy." (Motion to Amend at 5).<sup>2</sup> In addition, defendants note that their proposed amendment is motivated by plaintiff's conduct in sending its cease-and-desist letter, and not by any bad faith or delay on the part of defendants.

[*8] Lastly, defendants argue that the Federal Circuit has recognized the viability of the federal and state common law claims defendants now seek to assert and, thus, their proposed amendments are not futile. In support of this argument, defendants rely principally on Zenith Electronics Corp. v. Exzec, Inc., 182 F.3d 1340 (Fed. Cir. 1999). In that case, plaintiffs Zenith Electronics ("Zenith") and Elo Touchsystems, Inc. ("Elo Touch") sued defendant Exzec, Inc. for patent infringement. Defendant Exzec then asserted counterclaims against plaintiffs for unfair competition under both § 43(a) of the Lanham Act and Illinois common law. The basis for Exzec's counterclaims was its allegation that Elo Touch had falsely stated to potential customers of Exzec that Exzec's product infringed plaintiffs' patents and that Exzec could not manufacture or sell a non-infringing product. Exzec further alleged that Elo Touch's "bad faith" conduct in so communicating with Exzec's potential customers was done willfully and with the intent to deceive. Zenith, 182 F.3d at 1343-1344.

Elo Touch moved to dismiss pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. Proc. 12(b)(6) [*9]. The district court denied Elo Touch's motion, finding that Exzec's pleading adequately alleged viable claims for unfair competition under both the Lanham Act and Illinois common law. Elo Touch moved to reconsider, arguing that Exzec's unfair competition claims were pre-empted by federal patent and/or antitrust law. The district court denied Elo Touch's motion for reconsideration, but granted its alternative motion to certify the court's order for immediate appeal pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b).

On immediate appeal, the Federal Circuit held as follows. First, with regard to Exzec's Lanham Act unfair competition claim, the court found (after a detailed discussion and analysis of its prior precedent) that HN2 [↑] "before a patentee may be held liable under § 43(a) of the Lanham Act for marketplace activity in support of its patent, and thus be deprived of the right to make statements about potential infringement of its patent, the marketplace activity must have been undertaken in bad faith." Id. at 1353. This "bad faith" prerequisite, the court noted, is "a function of the interaction between the Lanham Act and patent law, and is in addition to [*10] the elements required by § 43(a) itself, as § 43 alone does not require bad faith." Id.

Applying this conclusion to the facts of the case before it, the court then found that both of the allegedly false statements at issue (i.e., that Exzec's product infringed plaintiffs' patents and that Exzec could not manufacture a non-infringing product) "if made in bad faith, can be reached by § 43(a) (assuming the elements of such a claim are otherwise made out) without conflicting with the patent or antitrust laws." Id. at 1354.

With regard to Exzec's state law claim, the court similarly found that HN3 [↑] a state unfair competition claim based on a patentholder's marketplace activity in support of a patent is not preempted by the patent laws if the claimant can allege and ultimately prove that the patentholder acted in bad faith. Id. at 1355. This conclusion was based in large part on the court's previous decisions in Dow Chemical v. Exxon Corp., 139 F.3d 1470 (Fed. Cir. 1998) and Hunter Douglas, Inc. v. Harmonic Design, Inc., 153 F.3d 1318 (Fed. Cir. 1998) overruled on other grounds by Midwest Industries, Inc. v. Karavan Trailers, Inc., 175 F.3d 1356 (Fed. Cir. 1999), [*11] in which the court held that HN4 [↑] state tortious interference with contractual relations claims were not preempted by the patent laws where the claims involved allegations of bad faith marketplace conduct by the patentee. On this basis, the court found that both of the allegedly false statements at issue in the case before it, if made in bad faith, could state a claim for unfair competition under Illinois law.

---

<sup>2</sup> As of the date of the filing of defendants' Motion, the non-expert discovery and Markman brief deadline was September 1, 2005, and the expert discovery and dispositive motion deadline was January 15, 2006. On August 24, 2005, however, this Court granted the parties' joint motion to extend the discovery deadlines by forty-five days. Thus, although the Court does not agree that "this action is in its infancy," the Court does agree that discovery has not yet been concluded.

Finally, the court noted that "what constitutes bad faith remains to be determined on a case by case basis." Id. at 1354. However, the court did note that, "obviously, if the patentee knows that the patent is invalid, unenforceable, or not infringed, yet represents to the marketplace that a competitor is infringing the patent, a clear case of bad faith representations is made out." Id.

Based on the above, the Federal Circuit affirmed the district court's order denying Elo Touch's Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion to dismiss Exzec's federal and state law unfair competition claims.<sup>3</sup>

[*12] Pursuant to Zenith, defendants Marathon Labels and Polymeric argue herein that their proposed amended counterclaims are not futile since they specifically allege that plaintiff MPT made false representations of patent infringement in bad faith when it sent its April 11, 2005 cease-and-desist letter to Seaway.<sup>4</sup> See Marathon Labels, Inc.'s Amended Answer to MPT's First Amended Complaint and Counterclaims at PP37-39; Amended Answer, Affirmative Defenses and Counterclaims of Defendant Polymeric Converting LLC at PP35-38.<sup>5</sup> Thus, defendants claim that their proposed federal and state common law unfair competition claims are not preempted and are adequately pled as a matter of law.

[*13] In response, plaintiff MPT argues that defendants' Motion for Leave should be denied "because the causes of action sought to be added by them are, on their face, not properly assertable in this action and will only serve to add expense to the parties." (Brief in Opp. at 1). Specifically, MPT argues that the "bad faith" test set forth in Zenith is no longer the test for determining the viability of federal and state common law unfair competition counterclaims in the context of a patent infringement suit. Rather, MPT maintains that, in the recent case of Globetrotter Software, Inc. v. Elan Computer Group, Inc., 362 F.3d 1367 (Fed. Cir. 2004), the Federal Circuit adopted an "objectively baseless" standard for such claims, which requires a showing that the patentee had no reasonable basis to believe that the accused product infringed the patents at issue. MPT then argues that defendants herein fail to plead that the cease-and-desist letter at issue was objectively baseless, and that no facts are pled which support such a claim. Moreover, even if the Court were to find that "bad faith" is the proper test, MPT maintains that defendants plead no facts which suggest in [*14] what way MPT's assertion of its claims to Seaway constitutes "bad faith." Thus, MPT argues that the Federal Circuit's decision in Globetrotter prohibits defendants' federal and state law unfair competition claims as a matter of law and, therefore, defendants' Motion for Leave should be denied.<sup>6</sup>

In Globetrotter, plaintiff Globetrotter sued Elan Computer Group ("Elan") and its CEO Ken Greer for patent infringement. Defendant Greer then asserted state law counterclaims for tortious interference and unfair competition based on the following circumstances. Greer claimed that Rainbow Technologies ("Rainbow") was negotiating to purchase all the outstanding shares of Elan for a price [*15] of $ 4,000,000. While these negotiations were pending, plaintiff Globetrotter sent two letters and an e-mail to Rainbow, alleging infringement of Globetrotter's patents by Elan. Defendant Greer alleged that Globetrotter in bad faith notified Rainbow of alleged patent infringement solely to cause Rainbow to abandon the planned purchase, which Rainbow did, with the result that Rainbow later acquired Elan for a much lower price. Globetrotter, 362 F.3d at 1370. The district court granted

<sup>3</sup> In so doing, the circuit court noted that the district court's determination that Exzec had adequately pled bad faith was not before it.

<sup>4</sup>

In their Motion, defendants assert that MPT's cease-and-desist letter was sent in bad faith because the accused products do not, in fact, infringe the '790 and '164 patents. Specifically, defendants claim that the patents at issue (1) are invalid over prior art not considered by the U.S. PTO and (2) only claim methods of using the products. (Motion at 3).

<sup>5</sup> Marathon Labels and Polymeric's proposed Amended Answers and Counterclaims are attached as Exhibits A and B to defendants' Motion for Leave to Amend.

<sup>6</sup> Significantly, MPT does not argue that leave to amend should be denied on grounds of undue delay and/or prejudice. Further, MPT does not argue that defendants' proposed counterclaims fail to adequately allege the specific elements of an unfair competition claim under either § 43\(a\) of the Lanham Act or Ohio common law.

summary judgment in Globetrotter's favor with respect to defendant Greer's state law counterclaims, and Greer appealed.

The Federal Circuit began its analysis by reaffirming the "bad faith" standard announced in Zenith:

We have held that HNS federal patent law preempts state-law tort liability for a patent-holder's good faith conduct in communications asserting infringement of its patent and warning about potential litigation. See e.g. *Zenith Elecs. Corp. v. Exzec, Inc.*, 182 F.3d 1340, 1355 \(Fed. Cir. 1999\). State-law claims such as Greer's can survive federal preemption only to the extent that such claims are based on a showing of 'bad faith' action in asserting [*16] infringement. Id. Accordingly, to avoid preemption, 'bad faith must be alleged and ultimately proven, even if bad faith is not otherwise an element of the tort claim.' Id.

*Globetrotter*, 362 F.3d at 1374. The court then noted that Greer endeavored to show bad faith only through attempts to demonstrate subjective bad faith on Globetrotter's part. Id. at 1375. However, he had "made no effort to establish that the claims asserted by Globetrotter with respect to the [patents at issue] were objectively baseless, either because those patents were obviously invalid or plainly not infringed." Id. Thus, the court framed the issue before it as "whether the bad faith standard of Zenith can be satisfied in the absence of a showing that the claims asserted were objectively baseless." Id.

After a detailed analysis, the court determined that Zenith's bad faith standard required a showing of objective baselessness in the context of state law claims based on pre-litigation communications alleging patent infringement. Specifically, the court found that, to show bad faith, a claimant must offer clear and convincing evidence that the [*17] patentee had no reasonable basis to believe that the accused infringing product infringed the patents at issue. Id. at 1377. See also *Golan v. Pingel Enter., Inc.*, 310 F.3d 1360 \(Fed. Cir. 2002\). Because defendant Greer had "not even attempted to make such a showing here," the court affirmed the district court's granting of summary judgment in Globetrotter's favor with respect to Greer's state law counterclaims. Id.

Based on the above, the Court rejects plaintiff MPT's argument that "bad faith is not really the test" in evaluating the viability of federal and state common law unfair competition claims based on pre-litigation communications alleging patent infringement. As set forth above, *Globetrotter* expressly discusses and applies Zenith's bad faith test. Nowhere in Globetrotter does the Federal Circuit overrule, vacate, or even question that test. Rather, Globetrotter elaborates on the showing necessary to satisfy Zenith's bad faith test in the context of state common law claims based on pre-litigation communications alleging patent infringement. Specifically, the Globetrotter court explains that, in this context, HNS "bad faith" [*18] must be demonstrated by a showing of objective baselessness, i.e., clear and convincing evidence that the patentee had no reasonable basis to believe that the accused product infringed the patents at issue.

Notably, Globetrotter discusses and applies the "objectively baseless" requirement in the summary judgment context; i.e., the court determined that the defendant therein had failed to offer sufficient evidence of objective baselessness to survive summary judgment. However, as defendants herein correctly note, Globetrotter did not involve (and does not address) the issue of the nature and quality of the allegations that must be pled with regard to this issue in order to survive a motion to dismiss under *Fed. R. Civ. Proc. 12\(b\)\(6\)*. As this is essentially the issue before the Court herein,<sup>7</sup> the Court concludes that Globetrotter does not require a finding herein that defendants' proposed Amendments fail to state a claim as a matter of law.

[*19] To the contrary, the Court finds that defendants have adequately pled "bad faith" sufficient to survive a *12\(b\)\(6\)* motion to dismiss and, thus, it would not be futile to allow defendants leave to amend their Answer to assert the federal and state counterclaims at issue herein. Defendants' proposed Answers and Counterclaims specifically discuss the April 11, 2005 cease-and-desist letter sent by MPT to Seaway herein; allege that that letter makes false representations of patent infringement; and further allege that these representations were made in bad faith. See Marathon Labels, Inc.'s Amended Answer to MPT's First Amended Complaint and Counterclaims at PP37-39; Amended Answer, Affirmative Defenses and Counterclaims of Defendant Polymeric Converting LLC at PP35-38. Moreover, defendants specifically assert counterclaims seeking a declaratory judgment that the patents at issue herein are invalid, void and/or unenforceable. See Marathon Labels, Inc.'s Amended Answer to MPT's First Amended Complaint and Counterclaims at P35; Amended Answer, Affirmative Defenses and Counterclaims of Defendant Polymeric Converting LLC at P33.

---

<sup>7</sup> This is the case because MPT is essentially arguing that defendants' motion for leave should be denied on the grounds that defendants' proposed federal and state law unfair competition claims are not "properly assertable" as a matter of law and, thus, it would be futile to allow amendment.

While plaintiff MPT is correct that an eventual finding of invalidity [*20] or unenforceability may not in and of itself necessarily demonstrate objective baselessness, the Court finds that defendants' allegations, taken as a whole, are sufficient at this stage in the litigation to satisfy the "bad faith" requirement set forth in Zenith. Whether defendants will ultimately be able to demonstrate by clear and convincing evidence that MPT's communication to Seaway was "objectively baseless" is another matter, one that is not before the Court today. Accordingly, the Court rejects plaintiff MPT's argument on this issue.

Finally, MPT argues that defendants' Motion for Leave should be denied because there is no legal basis for the assertion of a federal unfair competition claim based on the allegedly fraudulent procurement of a patent where such a claim is premised solely on a patentee's conduct of sending a cease and desist letter to a customer of an alleged infringer.

The Court finds that this argument is without merit. In Zenith, the Federal Circuit acknowledged prior precedent which explained that "there is no legal basis for a holding that inequitable conduct, or the assertion of a patent procured through inequitable conduct, constitutes unfair competition" [*21] under § 43\(a\) of the Lanham Act. Zenith, 182 F.3d at 1348 (discussing Pro-Mold and Tool Co. v. Great Lakes Plastics, Inc., 75 F.3d 1568 \(Fed. Cir. 1996\)). However, the court then noted that the federal unfair competition claim at issue in Zenith was not premised on the filing of a patent infringement suit based on alleged inequitable conduct but, instead, was "based on alleged marketplace statements, i.e., the alleged Elo Touch statements to potential Exzec customers that Exzec's product is infringing. . ." Id. at 1349. This difference, the Zenith court held, was critical because HN7 [↑] "the initiation of an infringement suit is clearly not covered by the text of § 43\(a\), while a communication to the customers of the accused infringer, in certain circumstances, may be." Id.

In the instant case, defendants' proposed federal unfair competition counterclaim is not premised upon the filing of a patent infringement suit based on inequitable conduct. Rather, as was the case in Zenith, the basis of defendants' proposed counterclaim is an allegedly bad faith marketplace statement, i.e., MPT's statement to Seaway (a customer of defendants) that [*22] defendants' product is infringing MPT's patents. Thus, the instant case falls squarely within the circumstances identified by Zenith which may support a claim under § 43\(a\). Accordingly, the Court rejects plaintiff's argument on this issue.

Accordingly, for the reasons set forth above and in light of the fact that plaintiff MPT does not oppose defendants' arguments regarding the lack of undue delay and prejudice, the Court grants defendants Marathon Labels and Polymeric Converting's Motion for Leave of Court to Amend their Answers.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

PATRICIA A. GAUGHAN

United States District Judge

Dated: 8/25/05

Reifert v. S. Cent. Wis. MLS Corp.

United States District Court for the Western District of Wisconsin

August 25, 2005, Decided

04-C-969-S

Reporter

2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23431 *; 2005-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P74,919

JAY REIFERT, Plaintiff, v. SOUTH CENTRAL WISCONSIN MLS CORPORATION, REALTORS ASSOCIATION OF SOUTH CENTRAL WISCONSIN, INC., ROBERT L. COURTER, SUSAN MATHEWS, DAVID STARK, ROBERT WEBER, THOMAS BUNBURY, MAURICE W. HILL, PETER SVEUM, MARSHALL ZWYGART and DAVID MCGRATH, Defendants.

Subsequent History: Affirmed by *Reifert v. S. Cent. Wis. MLS Corp., 2006 U.S. App. LEXIS 14327 \(7th Cir. Wis., June 12, 2006\)*

Prior History: *Reifert v. S. Cent. Wis. MLS Corp., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9741 \(W.D. Wis., May 20, 2005\)*

Core Terms

---

membership, associations, real estate professional, substitutes, join, summary judgment, tie, buyer, multiple listing service, brokers, organizations, foreclosed, markets, south central, anti-competitive, commerce, provide a service, tied product, annual

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Per Se Rule

HN1[] Tying Arrangements, Per Se Rule

A per se tying violation requires proof of four elements: (1) a tying arrangement between two distinct products or services, (2) sufficient market power in the tying market to restrain free competition in the tied product market, (3) a substantial effect on interstate commerce, (4) the tying company has an economic interest in the sales of the tied product.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN2[] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

Summary judgment is appropriate when, after both parties have the opportunity to submit evidence in support of their respective positions and the Court has reviewed such evidence in the light most favorable to the nonmovant, there remains no genuine issue of material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed.

R. Civ. P. 56(c). A fact is material only if it might affect the outcome of the suit under the governing law. Disputes over unnecessary or irrelevant facts will not preclude summary judgment. A factual issue is genuine only if the evidence is such that a reasonable factfinder, applying the appropriate evidentiary standard of proof, could return a verdict for the nonmoving party.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN3 Summary Judgment, Burdens of Proof

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e) it is the obligation of the nonmoving party to set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Per Se Rule

HN4 Tying Arrangements, Per Se Rule

A tying arrangement is a violation of antitrust law only if a substantial volume of commerce is foreclosed by the tie. Similarly, when a purchaser is "forced" to buy a product he would have otherwise bought even from another in the tied-product market, there can be no adverse impact on competition because no portion of the market which would otherwise have been available to other sellers has been foreclosed.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Per Se Rule

HN5 Tying Arrangements, Per Se Rule

Merely establishing that customers purchased an unwanted product does not establish foreclosure of competition. When there are no rival sellers of a tied product, then the alleged tie-in might affect a substantial volume of commerce in the tied product and yet not foreclose anyone.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Per Se Rule

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > Allocation

HN6 Tying Arrangements, Per Se Rule

In the context of tying arrangements, services are in the same market when they are good substitutes for one another. That is, when there is interchangeability of use or the cross elasticity of demand between the product and the substitutes for it. A plaintiff bears the burden to prove by econometric evidence that the products are good substitutes. Observing things that to the untutored eye seem to be substitutes need not mean they are good substitutes.

Civil Procedure > Discovery & Disclosure > Discovery > Misconduct During Discovery

HN7 Discovery, Misconduct During Discovery

It is inappropriate to introduce expert testimony on an element of a claim under the guise of "rebuttal" simply because a defendant has denied the existence of the element. Under such circumstances exclusion is mandated by Fed. R. Civ. P. 37\(c\)\(1\) unless the delay was harmless.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Practices Governed by Per Se Rule > Boycotts

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Per Se Rule

HN8 [down arrow] Practices Governed by Per Se Rule, Boycotts

To sustain a group boycott claim, a plaintiff must demonstrate that a tie-in requirement has an adverse impact on competition in the relevant market.

Counsel: [*1] For JAY REIFERT, Plaintiffs: DAVID BARRY, STEVEN FINLEY.

For SOUTH CENTRAL WISCONSIN MLS CORPORATION, REALTORS ASSOCIATION OF SOUTH CENTRAL WISCONSIN, INC., ROBERT L. COURTER, SUSAN MATHEWS, DAVID STARK, ROBERT WEBER, THOMAS BUNBURY, MAURICE W. HILL, PETER SVEUM, MARSHALL ZWYGART, DAVID MCGRATH, Defendants: BRADY C. WILLIAMSON, LA FOLLETTE, GODFREY & KAHN, S.C., MADISON, WI.

Judges: JOHN C. SHABAZ, District Judge.

Opinion by: JOHN C. SHABAZ

Opinion

---

MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

Plaintiff Jay Reifert commenced this anti-trust action alleging that defendant South Central Wisconsin MLS Corp. ("SCWMLS") unlawfully ties the sale of its services to the purchase of services from its corporate parent, defendant Realtors Association of South Central Wisconsin, Inc. ("Realtors"). Plaintiff also alleges that conditioning access to MLS services on membership in Realtors is an unlawful group boycott. Plaintiff named as defendants the individual directors of SCWMLS (collectively, "individual defendants"). Jurisdiction is based on 28 U.S.C. § 1331. The matter is presently before the Court on cross motions for summary judgment. The following is a summary of relevant undisputed facts.

FACTS

[*2] Defendant Realtors is a real estate professionals trade association and the owner of 100% of SCWMLS' stock. It offers services to its members including arbitration and mediation, enforcement of a code of ethics, education courses, professional recognition, referral programs, contract forms, legal information, conventions, publications, lobbying, website, and social functions. As a condition of membership Realtors requires members to join the Wisconsin Association of Realtors ("WAR") and the National Association of Realtors ("NAR"). NAR offers additional services including use of the "Realtors" trademark, an annual conference, a magazine and membership discounts. Defendant Realtors generally accepts as a member any licensed real estate professional who agrees to abide by the NAR code of ethics and pays the fees.

In 2005, annual fees to join all three associations are $ 441. Realtor dues are established by members who are elected to the board of directors. Dues are set solely to cover anticipated cost of operations and there is no attempt to make a profit. On March 18, 2005 RASCW had 2419 members, including 2306 real estate licensees and 113 appraisers.

Defendant SCWMLS operates a [*3] multiple listing service which includes a computerized data base of homes and properties for sale in south central Wisconsin. To participate in the multiple listing service members must pay $ 90 per quarter. Fees are set by members elected to the board of directors. Fees are set solely to cover anticipated cost of operations and there is no attempt to make a profit. Licensed real estate brokers who are members of any local association of Realtors may participate in the SCWMLS multiple listing service. A high percentage of broker represented residential property sold in south central Wisconsin is listed in defendant's MLS. On March 18, 2005 only 84 of the 2306 real estate professionals who were Realtor members did not use SCWMLS. On March 18, 2005 SCWMLS gave access to 331 members of local Realtor associations other than defendant Realtors. SCWMLS operates the only multiple listing service primarily within Dane, Sauk and Columbia Counties.

Plaintiff is a licensed real estate broker in south central Wisconsin and the principal of Excel Exclusive Buyer Agency since 1997. He has been a member of Realtors and a participant in SCWMLS since 1988. He wants to continue his participation in [*4] SCWMLS but does not want to continue his membership in Realtors. He has continued his membership in Realtors solely to gain access to the multiple listing service.

According to a survey by plaintiff's expert Riddle, between 19 and 24% of Dane county SCWMLS users would not join Realtors if they were not required to join to gain access to the multiple listing service. In Massachusetts and Alaska where multiple listing service access does not require membership in a local Realtors association more than 20% of MLS users do not belong to a Realtors association.

The National Association of Exclusive Buyer Agents ("NAEBA"), Colorado Exclusive Buyer Agents Association ("CEBAA"), and Massachusetts Association of Buyers Agents ("MABA") are associations of real estate professionals who are exclusive buyer agents. Plaintiff is a member of NAEBA, which offers services specific to representations of buyers. He knows of only one other exclusive buyer agent in Wisconsin eligible to join. CEBAA and MABA offer membership in Colorado and Massachusetts, respectively.

The Appraisal Institute ("AI"), National Association of Independent Fee Appraisers ("NAIFA"), and National Association of Real Estate [*5] Appraisers ("NAREA") are associations of professional real estate appraisers. They offer certifications, professional standards, education, appraisal databases, software, insurance, legislative monitoring, membership directories, conferences and commercial discounts. Annual membership fees for AI are $ 740. AI Membership requires payment of local chapter dues which are $ 110 in Wisconsin. NAIFA dues are $ 400 per year. NAREA dues are $ 215 per year.

The Asian Real Estate Agent Association ("AREAA"), Chinese Real Estate Association of America ("CREAA"), Chinese American Real Estate Professional Association ("CAREPA") and the National Association of Hispanic Real Estate Professionals ("NAHREP") are associations of real estate professionals which promote the advancement and interests of ethnic communities. They offer networking, education, websites, lobbying, information resources and community service events. CREAA and CAREPA are headquartered and hold meetings in California. CAREPA is supported by the California Association of Realtors and NAR. Annual dues for these organizations are as follows: AREAA $ 100, CREAA $ 30, CAREPA $ 100, NAHREP $ 99.

The National Association of Independent [*6] Real Estate Brokers ("NAIREB") is open exclusively to brokers who are not affiliated with a franchised real estate company. NAIREB offers referrals, education networking and a magazine. It encourages members to join Realtor associations. NAIREB annual dues are $ 79.

MEMORANDUM

HN1 A per se tying violation requires proof of four elements: (1) a tying arrangement between two distinct products or services, (2) sufficient market power in the tying market to restrain free competition in the tied product market, (3) a substantial effect on interstate commerce, (4) the tying company has an economic interest in the sales of the tied product. Carl Sandburg Village Ass'n No. 1 v. First Condominium Development Co., 758 F.2d 203, 207 \(7th Cir. 1985\). Plaintiff argues that each of the elements has been established as a matter of law. Defendants contend that plaintiff has failed as a matter of law to adequately establish the third or fourth elements and that factual disputes preclude summary judgment on the other elements. Additionally, defendants seek summary judgment based on a statute of limitations defense and the absence of antitrust injury.

HN2 Summary judgment is appropriate [*7] when, after both parties have the opportunity to submit evidence in support of their respective positions and the Court has reviewed such evidence in the light most favorable to the nonmovant, there remains no genuine issue of material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Rule 56(c), Fed. R. Civ. P. A fact is material only if it might affect the outcome of the suit under the governing law. Disputes over unnecessary or irrelevant facts will not preclude summary judgment. A factual issue is genuine only if the evidence is such that a reasonable factfinder, applying the appropriate evidentiary standard of proof, could return a verdict for the nonmoving party. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 254, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 (1986). HN3 Under Rule 56(e) it is the obligation of the nonmoving party to set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial.

Viewing the facts and drawing inferences most favorable to plaintiff, there is insufficient evidence for a fact finder to find that a tie between the defendant's multiple listing service and Realtor membership has had an effect on interstate commerce as that element has been defined by [*8] the Supreme Court. HN4 A tying arrangement is a violation of antitrust law only if a substantial volume of commerce is foreclosed by the tie. Jefferson Parish Hospital District No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 16, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 (1984). "Similarly, when a purchaser is "forced" to buy a product he would have otherwise bought even from another in the tied-product market, there can be no adverse impact on competition because no portion of the market which would otherwise have been available to other sellers has been foreclosed." Id.

Two courts of appeal have considered this requirement in the context of a tie between MLS access and Realtor association membership. In Wells Real Estate, Inc. v. Greater Lowell Board of Realtors, 850 F.2d 803, 815 (1st Cir. 1988) the Court upheld a directed verdict dismissing the claim, reasoning as follows:

However, Wells' action is indeed fatally affected by the excerpt from Hyde quoted above. Wells has failed to demonstrate the slightest market for membership in real estate boards that might have been affected by the defendants' alleged tying arrangement. There is no evidence that any other broker would have "purchased" membership [*9] in any other board but for the power exerted by the lure of the defendants' MLS. There is no evidence that a substantial volume of "commerce" in board membership was foreclosed by the tie-in.

In contrast, the Eleventh Circuit found a substantial effect on commerce resulting from an MLS-Realtor board tie. Thompson v. Metropolitan Multi-List, Inc., 934 F.2d 1566 (11th Cir. 1991). One of the plaintiffs in Thompson, Empire Real Estate Board, provided services similar to the defendant real estate board. Empire was established in 1939 to serve African American real estate professionals at a time when the local Realtor association excluded them. Both boards continue to exist and to provide a similar range of services to members. Evidence established that 400 members of Metropolitan would have been members of Empire but for the MLS-Realtor board tie. The Court found a substantial foreclosure of competition based on the facts.

The issue before this Court is whether plaintiff has brought forth sufficient evidence from which a fact finder could conclude that competition in the south central Wisconsin real estate services market has been foreclosed by the SCWMLS tie to [*10] defendant Realtors. In an effort to meet its burden plaintiff has presented survey evidence from Wisconsin and statistical analysis from other markets, that supports the finding fewer real estate professionals would join defendant Realtors in the absence of the tie. This evidence suggests that about 20% of Realtor members would not join if they could obtain MLS services without membership. The law is clear, however, that HN5 merely establishing that customers purchased an unwanted product does not establish foreclosure of competition. Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 16. "When there are no rival sellers of the tied product, then the alleged tie-in might affect a substantial volume of commerce in the tied product and yet not foreclose anyone." 9 Phillip A. Areeda, et. al., Antitrust Law, P 1723 (2d ed. 2004).

In an effort to demonstrate foreclosure plaintiff has produced a laundry list of entities that he asserts are competitors in the market for the services provided by defendant Realtors. However, examination of the undisputed facts about these entities and the related expert report does not suggest that they are in the same product market with defendant Realtors. While [*11] it is true that there is superficial overlap in the offerings of these associations - conventions, websites, education, publications, lobbying - these similarities do little to establish that any are competing in the same product market with Realtors. Virtually all professional organizations offer such services while undoubtedly serving different product markets.

HNG↑ Services are in the same market when they are good substitutes for one another. That is, when there is "interchangeability of use or the cross elasticity of demand between the product and the substitutes for it." Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 325, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510, 82 S. Ct. 1502 (1962). Furthermore, plaintiff bears the burden to prove by econometric evidence that the products are good substitutes. Menasha Corp. v. News America Marketing In-Store, Inc., 354 F.3d 661, 664 (7th Cir. 2004). "Observing things that to the untutored eye seem to be substitutes need not mean they are good substitutes." Id. Not only has plaintiff failed to bring forth econometric evidence, its proffered competitive associations do not appear to be good substitutes even to the "untutored eye."

Three of the associations, NAEBA, [*12] CEBAA and MABA, serve only exclusive buyer agents. The latter two serve agents in Colorado and Massachusetts and are therefore unlikely to be substitutes for services provided in Wisconsin even if the services offered were similar. Plaintiff, who is a member of NAEBA, has testified that the Realtors and NAEBA offer distinctly different services because NAEBA is directed specifically to the concerns of buyer agents. He testified that he joined NAEBA without regard to his membership in Realtors and that he knew of only one other real estate professional in Wisconsin eligible to join NAEBA.

Three other associations, AI, NAIFA and NAREA are devoted to providing services to real estate appraisers.. An unlikely substitute for the far more general services offered to real estate professionals by Realtors.

Four additional associations which plaintiff suggests as substitutes, AREAA, CREAA, CAREPA and NAHREP, serve distinct ethnic communities and have as their purpose the advancement of those communities and real estate professionals within them. It seems unlikely that their services would be substitutes for Realtors. This inference is further supported by the fact that one of the organizations, [*13] CAREPA, is affiliated with the California Association of Realtors and NAR thereby dispelling any suggestion that they are competitors. Similarly, NAIREB is devoted to the needs of independent brokers apparently providing services unique to their needs while encouraging membership in Realtor associations.

Not only do none of these associations appear to be good substitutes, plaintiff has not offered evidence of a single real estate professional who has joined one of these organizations instead of Realtors or who has declined to join because he or she is a member of Realtors. The lack of such evidence is in stark contrast to the evidence in Thompson that 400 brokers fell into those categories. Furthermore, the dramatic differences in membership costs between the organizations and Realtors belies the suggestion that they are substitutes in the same product market.

On June 30, 2005 plaintiff offered a supplemental expert testimony of Riddle in the form of an analysis of non-random markets throughout the United states which purports to demonstrate that some of the alleged substitutes have higher membership rates in areas where there is no MLS tie ("open MLS") than in areas where there [*14] is such a tie ("closed MLS"). Defendants have objected to this evidence as untimely and inadmissible under Rule 702.

The supplemental report is untimely. The existence of competing real estate service providers in the relevant product market whose sales were foreclosed is an essential element of plaintiff's claim. Yet the initial expert report, filed within the time requirement of Rule 26(a)(2)(C), included nothing that would support this element. In fact, when he was deposed after issuing the report Riddle denied any opinion concerning whether other providers were in the same product market as Realtors. Riddle deposition of June 23, 2005 at 26-27. In light of the prevailing law it was apparent that this element would be critical to proving the claim. HNZ↑ It is inappropriate to introduce expert testimony on this element under the guise of "rebuttal" simply because defendants subsequently denied the existence of the element. Under such circumstances exclusion is mandated by Rule 37(c)(1) unless the delay was harmless, an argument not made by plaintiff and unlikely to be sustained based on the prior deposition responses indicating that the expert would have no opinion on the topic.

[*15] Even if the belatedly disclosed expert testimony was admitted there appears to be little relevant, probative value in the analysis. It is likely that markets for professional real estate services are different in California, Georgia, Alaska and Massachusetts and Wisconsin. For example, the proffered competing organizations are directed at specific ethnic communities yet there is no apparent effort to control for the significant differences in populations between markets. Comparison of the data indicates great disparities in membership rates within the open and closed markets which suggest that other factors, far more than open or closed status, impact membership rates.

Whatever minimal value the survey might have it is certainly not evidence that the organizations included in the survey are in the same product market as Realtors. Riddle, who conducted the analysis and offered the evidence, expressly testified at his deposition that the comparison of membership rates between open MLS and closed MLS markets does not demonstrate that the associations are in the same product market as defendant Realtors and that he has not done any analysis that would support such a conclusion. Riddle [*16] deposition of June 23, at 31. He further testified that demonstrating that the associations competed in the same product market would require an analysis of comparative prices and price movements and an analysis of specific services offered by the compared providers. Id. at 30. No such analysis has been proffered even in the belated supplemental report.

Viewing the facts most favorable to plaintiff, he has failed to offer evidence sufficient to sustain a finding that there are competing providers of services in the tied product market whose sales have been foreclosed by the tie between MLS and Realtors. Accordingly, summary judgment must be granted in favor of defendants. The Court does not address the merits of the additional independent bases for judgment offered by defendants.

Plaintiff offers far less evidence or argument in support of his group boycott claim. HN8 To sustain such a claim plaintiff must demonstrate that the anti-competitive effects of the membership requirement outweigh any anti-competitive effects of the membership rule. Initially, plaintiff must demonstrate that the membership requirement has an adverse impact on competition in the relevant market. Bi-Rite Oil Co., Inc. v. Indiana Farm Bureau Co-op. Ass'n, Inc., 908 F.2d 200, 203 (7th Cir. 1990). [*17] Plaintiff has not demonstrated that he or any other real estate professional was denied access to the MLS. His evidence in support of anticompetitive effect consists of referencing arguments made in support of the tying claim which have previously been rejected as establishing an anti-competitive effect.

In opposition to summary judgment plaintiff merely argues that defendants have failed to meet their burden to prove the absence of anti-competitive effects. This argument misapprehends the summary judgment process which permits a defendant to put the plaintiff to its proof merely by asserting the absence of evidence to support a particular element of plaintiff's claim. Outlaw v. Newkirk, 259 F.3d 833, 837 (7th Cir. 2001). For the reasons set forth in the analysis of the tying claim, plaintiff has failed to provide evidence sufficient to sustain a finding of anti-competitive effect from the membership requirement. Accordingly, there is no need to proceed to a balancing of pro-competitive effects of the rule. Defendants are entitled to summary judgment on the group boycott claim.

ORDER

IT IS ORDERED that plaintiff's motion for summary judgment is DENIED.

IT IS FURTHER [*18] ORDERED that defendants' motion for summary judgment is GRANTED.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that judgment is entered against plaintiff in favor of defendants dismissing plaintiff's complaint with prejudice and costs.

Entered this 25th day of August, 2005.

BY THE COURT:

JOHN C. SHABAZ

District Judge

---

End of Document

*Andrx Pharms., Inc. v. Elan Corp., PLC*

United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit

August 29, 2005, Decided ; August 29, 2005, Filed

No. 03-13605

Reporter

421 F.3d 1227 *; 2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 18580 **; 76 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1295 ***; 2005-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P74,906; 18 Fla. L. Weekly Fed. C 936

ANDRX PHARMACEUTICALS, INC., Plaintiff-Appellant, versus ELAN CORPORATION, PLC, Defendant-Appellee, SKYEPHARMA, INC., Defendant.

Prior History: [\[\*\*1\]](#) Appeal from the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida. D. C. Docket No. 00-03481-CV-AJ.

*Elan Corp., PLC v. Andrx Pharms., Inc., 366 F.3d 1336, 2004 U.S. App. LEXIS 8850 \(Fed. Cir., 2004\)*

Core Terms

---

naproxen, district court, antitrust, allegations, generic, medication, immunity, sham, patent infringement, pleadings, patent, manufacture, amend, settlement agreement, proceedings, competitors, antitrust violation, antitrust liability, motion for judgment, infringement, monopolize, initiated, further proceedings, amended complaint, license agreement, motion for leave, leave to amend, marketing, triggered, baseless

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Leave of Court

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > Judgment on Pleadings

HN1 [down arrow] Appeals, Standards of Review

When an appeal arises from the district court's grant of a defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings, the facts are derived from the allegations in the plaintiff's complaint, which the appellate court must accept as true, and are presented in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. The appellate court need not accept as true, however, conclusory legal allegations made in the complaint.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Governments > Agriculture & Food > Federal Food, Drug & Cosmetic Act

**HN2** [down] Agriculture & Food, Federal Food, Drug & Cosmetic Act

The Food and Drug Administration (FDA) must give its approval before any new drug can be marketed or sold in the United States. 21 U.S.C.S. § 355\(a\). Under § 355, different FDA approval standards apply depending on the drug the applicant is attempting to market. To gain approval for a drug that has not been introduced previously to the market, an applicant must file a new drug application (NDA) and must meet the requirements outlined in § 355\(b\). Section 355\(b\) requires the submission of exhaustive information about the drug, including reports about the safety and efficacy of the drug. To gain approval for a generic, bioequivalent version of a drug which has already gained approval under § 355\(b\), however, an applicant may file an abbreviated new drug application (ANDA), in which the applicant must satisfy the less exhaustive requirements outlined in § 355\(j\).

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Governments > Agriculture & Food > Federal Food, Drug & Cosmetic Act

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Experimental Use & Testing

**HN3** [down] Agriculture & Food, Federal Food, Drug & Cosmetic Act

While 21 U.S.C.S. § 355\(j\) allows an abbreviated new drug application (ANDA) applicant to satisfy its burden by demonstrating a certain bioequivalency between its drug and a drug approved under § 355\(b\), § 355\(j\) does require the ANDA applicant to certify that the manufacture and sale of its drug would not violate any patents held on the drug approved under § 355\(b\). 21 U.S.C.S. § 355\(j\)\(2\)\(A\)\(vii\). If an ANDA applicant certifies that its generic drug would not violate an existing patent, or would only violate a patent on a § 355\(b\)-approved drug which is invalid, 21 U.S.C.S. § 355\(j\)\(2\)\(A\)\(vii\)\(IV\), the ANDA applicant must notify the patentholder, which is then given 45 days to initiate patent infringement proceedings against the ANDA applicant. 21 U.S.C.S. § 355\(j\)\(5\)\(B\)\(iii\). If the patentholder timely initiates such litigation, Food and Drug Administration approval for the generic drug will be stayed for up to 30 months, unless the patent being litigated expires or a final determination on the patent's validity is reached at an earlier date.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Governments > Agriculture & Food > Federal Food, Drug & Cosmetic Act

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Exclusive Rights > Manufacture, Sale & Use

**HN4** [down] Agriculture & Food, Federal Food, Drug & Cosmetic Act

As an incentive for drug manufacturers to submit abbreviated new drug application (ANDA) applications for the production of generic drugs, 21 U.S.C.S. § 355 grants the first manufacturer to file an ANDA application for a generic drug using the type of certification outlined in § 355\(j\)\(2\)\(A\)\(vii\)\(IV\) an exclusive 180-day period to market the generic drug before another ANDA application is approved for a similar generic drug. 21 U.S.C.S. § 355\(j\)\(5\)\(B\)\(iv\)\(I\). This 180-day exclusivity period begins to run after the date of the first commercial marketing of the drug.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

421 F.3d 1227, *1227L<sup>2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 18580, **1L</sup>6 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1295, ***1295

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > Judgment on Pleadings

HN5 Standards of Review, De Novo Review

The appellate court reviews de novo the district court's ruling on a motion for judgment on the pleadings pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(c\). The application of the Noerr-Pennington doctrine is a question of law, and therefore also reviewed de novo. Judgment on the pleadings is proper when no issues of material fact exist, and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law based on the substance of the pleadings and any judicially noticed facts.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

International Law > Authority to Regulate > Anticompetitive Activities

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Bad Faith, Fraud & Nonuse > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Assignments

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

HN6 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The Sherman Anti-Trust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., provides in part that every contract in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is illegal. 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. The Act also proscribes acts which seek to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations. 15 U.S.C.S. § 2. The Florida antitrust statutes, Fla. Stat. chs. 542.18, 542.19, closely track the language of the Sherman Act and are analyzed under the same rules and case law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom to Petition

Torts > Public Entity Liability > Immunities > Judicial Immunity

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Labor > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

421 F.3d 1227, *1227L<sup>2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 18580, **1L</sup>6 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1295, ***1295

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Scope

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Right to Petition Immunity

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Exemptions

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Freedoms > General Overview

HN7 Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

While the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., proscribes activity in restraint of trade, its reach has been tempered when its invocation would impair the exercise of constitutional rights. Recognizing that the First Amendment guarantees the right to petition the Government for a redress of grievances and that this guarantee overrides the effect of a contrary federal statute, and not wanting to impute to Congress an intent to invade the First Amendment right to petition, the United States Supreme Court has held that a defendant is immune from Sherman Act liability for concerted efforts to petition government to pass legislation which has the effect of restraining or monopolizing trade in favor of the defendant. Subsequent precedent has extended Noerr-Pennington immunity to defendants who exercise their right to petition government by resorting to administrative and/or judicial proceedings. Noerr-Pennington immunity thus shields a defendant from antitrust liability for resorting to litigation to obtain from a court an anticompetitive outcome.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Exemptions

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Sham Exception

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Right to Petition Immunity

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN8 Scope, Exemptions

An exception to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine exists where the defendant engages in "sham litigation." To prevail on the argument that Noerr-Pennington immunity should be abrogated based on the sham litigation exception, a litigant must establish that: (1) the lawsuit is objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits; and (2) the party bringing the allegedly baseless suit did so with a subjective motivation to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor. The existence of probable cause to bring a lawsuit is sufficient to thwart a claim that litigation was objectively baseless. Moreover, a winning lawsuit is by definition a reasonable effort at petitioning for redress and therefore not a sham.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Right to Petition Immunity

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

421 F.3d 1227, *1227L<sup>2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 18580, **1L</sup>6 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1295, ***1295

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Civil Actions > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Congressional Duties & Powers > Copyright & Patent Clause

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Freedoms > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Bill of Rights > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom to Petition

HN9 [blue] Antitrust & Trade Law, Exemptions & Immunities

The United States Constitution expressly permits the government to grant exclusive monopolies in the form of patents, U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 8, and therefore the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., cannot be read to impede a litigant from seeking to defend constitutionally-permitted patent rights. Moreover, engaging in litigation to seek an anticompetitive outcome from a court is First Amendment activity that is immune from antitrust liability.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Ownership > Conveyances > Licenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > Licenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Pretrial Judgments > Judgment on Pleadings

Patent Law > ... > Specifications > Description Requirement > General Overview

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > General Overview

HN10 [blue] Antitrust & Trade Law, Exemptions & Immunities

Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the plaintiff is required in the complaint to make a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the plaintiff is entitled to relief. Fed. R. Civ. P. 8\(a\)\(2\). While courts had previously applied a heightened pleading requirement in antitrust cases, this view has subsequently been rejected in favor of applying Rule 8\(a\)'s notice pleading standard. Accordingly, absent some doctrine which immunizes the conduct alleged, such as the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, dismissals on the pleadings are particularly disfavored in fact-intensive antitrust cases.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

International Trade Law > General Overview

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Burdens of Proof

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Settlement Agreements

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > General Overview

HN11 [blue document icon] Sherman Act, Claims

Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, provides that every contract in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is illegal. To prevail on a claim that a patent infringement settlement agreement violates § 1 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must prove: (1) the scope of the exclusionary potential of the patent; (2) the extent to which the agreement exceed that scope; and (3) the resulting anticompetitive effects in the relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Scope > Monopolization Offenses

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN12 [blue document icon] Attempts to Monopolize, Elements

Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, outlaws conduct which seeks to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations. To state a claim for attempted monopolization, plaintiff must show specific intent on the part of the defendant to bring about a monopoly and a dangerous probability of success.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > Abuse of Discretion

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Leave of Court

HN13 [blue document icon] Standards of Review, Abuse of Discretion

The appellate court reviews the district court's denial of a motion for leave to amend for clear abuse of discretion. Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, after a responsive pleading has been filed, a litigant must obtain leave to amend the complaint, which shall be freely given when justice so requires. Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a). Leave may be denied because of undue delay, bad faith or dilatory motive on the part of the movant, repeated failure to cure deficiencies by amendments previously allowed, undue prejudice to the opposing party by virtue of allowance of the amendment, or futility of amendment.

Counsel: For Andrx Pharmaceuticals, Inc., Appellant: Gerald J. Houlihan, Houlihan and Partners, P.A., Miami, FL.

For Elan Corporation, PLC, Appellee: Michael J. Flibbert, Finnegan, Henderson, Farabow, Garrett & Dunner, L.L.P., WASHINGTON, DC.

For Skyepharma, Inc., Appellee: Paul W. Browning, James B. Monroe, Finnegan, Henderson, Farabow, Garrett & Dunner, L.L.P., WASHINGTON, DC.

Judges: Before BIRCH and WILSON, Circuit Judges, and DOWD *, District Judge.

Opinion by: BIRCH

Opinion

---

[***1296] [*1230] BIRCH, Circuit Judge:

In this appeal, we address whether the district court properly granted a patentholder's motion for judgment on the pleadings in a competitor's antitrust suit. The district court granted the motion because it found that the Noerr-Pennington doctrine immunized Defendant-appellee Elan Corporation, PLC ("Elan") from the maintenance of an antitrust suit based on the allegations of Plaintiff-appellant Andrx Pharmaceuticals, Inc. ("Andrx") that Elan [**2] engaged in patent infringement proceedings to improperly protect its monopoly on the market for a controlled release naproxen medication. In addition, the district court found that Andrx's allegations regarding a licensing agreement entered into [***1297] by Elan and another competitor to settle a separate infringement suit were insufficient to support an antitrust action under the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 and 2. Finally, the district court denied Andrx's motion for leave to amend its complaint. For the reasons discussed more fully in this opinion, we conclude the district court properly construed the Noerr-Pennington doctrine to immunize Elan from liability for its infringement suits, and did not abuse its discretion in denying leave to amend. The district court erred, however, in dismissing Andrx's claims regarding its settlement agreement with one of Andrx's competitors. Accordingly, the district court's order is AFFIRMED in part, REVERSED in part, and REMANDED for further proceedings.

I. BACKGROUND

1

---

* Honorable David D. Dowd, Jr., United States District Judge for the Northern District of Ohio, sitting by designation.

<sup>1</sup> HN1 Because this appeal arises from the district court's grant of Elan's motion for judgment on the pleadings, the facts are derived from the allegations in Andrx's complaint, which we must accept as true, and are presented in the light most favorable to Andrx. See Ortega v. Christian, 85 F.3d 1521, 1524 (11th Cir. 1996). We need not accept as true, however, conclusory legal allegations made in the complaint. See Green Leaf Nursery v. E.I. DuPont de Nemours & Co., 341 F.3d 1292, 1304 n.12 (11th Cir. 2003), cert. denied 541 U.S. 1037, 124 S. Ct. 2094, 158 L. Ed. 2d 723 (2004). Because the district court denied Andrx leave to file a second amended complaint, see R2-73 at 11, our inquiry is limited to the allegations in the first amended complaint.

[**3] At its core, this litigation concerns the right to manufacture and sell the drug naproxen, an analgesic medication prescribed to treat pain and other disorders. Because the complex statutory regulations which govern the manufacture and sale of drugs in the United States provide context for the facts in this case, we will begin by briefly summarizing the relevant statutory provisions, after which we will recount the relevant facts specific to the parties.

HN2 [↑] The Food and Drug Administration ("FDA") must give its approval before any new drug can be marketed or sold in the United States. 21 U.S.C. § 355\(a\). Under § 355, different FDA approval standards apply depending on the drug the applicant is attempting to market. See Valley Drug Co. v. Geneva Pharms., 344 F.3d 1294, 1296 \(11th Cir. 2003\), cert. denied 543 U.S. 939, 160 L. Ed. 2d 248, 125 S. Ct. 308 (2004). To gain approval for a drug that has not been introduced previously to the market, an applicant must file a new drug application ("NDA") and must meet the requirements outlined in § 355\(b\). Id. Section 355\(b\) requires the submission of "exhaustive information [**4] about the drug," including reports about the safety and efficacy of the drug. Id. To gain approval for a generic, bioequivalent version of a drug which has already gained approval under § 355\(b\), however, an applicant may file an abbreviated new drug application ("ANDA"), in which the applicant must satisfy the less exhaustive requirements outlined in § 355\(j\). See id. HN3 [↑] [*1231] While § 355\(j\) allows an ANDA applicant to satisfy its burden by demonstrating a certain bioequivalency between its drug and a drug approved under § 355\(b\), § 355\(j\) does require the ANDA applicant to certify that the manufacture and sale of its drug would not violate any patents held on the drug approved under § 355\(b\). See § 355\(j\)\(2\)\(A\)\(vii\). If an ANDA applicant certifies that its generic drug would not violate an existing patent, or would only violate a patent on a § 355\(b\)-approved drug which is invalid, see § 355\(j\)\(2\)\(A\)\(vii\)\(IV\),<sup>2</sup> the ANDA applicant must notify the patentholder, which is then given forty-five days to initiate patent infringement proceedings against the ANDA applicant, see § 355\(j\)\(5\)\(B\)\(iii\). If the patentholder timely initiates such litigation, FDA approval for [**5] the generic drug will be stayed for up to thirty months, unless the patent being litigated expires or a final determination on the patent's validity is reached at an earlier date. Id.

Against this background of information on drug approval procedures, we proceed to the facts relevant to the parties on appeal. Elan was the owner of U.S. Patent No. 5,637,320 ("the '320 patent"), which granted it the exclusive right to manufacture and sell in the United States a controlled release naproxen [**6] medication. In 1998, SkyePharma Inc. ("SkyePharma")<sup>3</sup> filed an ANDA application pursuant to § 355\(j\) to manufacture and sell a [***1298] generic version of Elan's controlled release naproxen medication. In making its application, SkyePharma certified pursuant to § 355\(j\)\(2\)\(A\)\(vii\)\(IV\) that its activity would not constitute patent infringement. Consequently, pursuant to § 355\(j\)\(5\)\(B\)\(iii\), Elan initiated patent infringement proceedings against SkyePharma. According to Andrx's complaint, Elan and SkyePharma settled the litigation by entering into an agreement in which SkyePharma admitted to infringing the '320 patent in exchange for a license from Elan to manufacture a generic controlled release naproxen medication. Because SkyePharma was the first filing ANDA applicant, pursuant to § 355\(j\)\(5\)\(B\)\(iv\)\(I\), the license agreement effectively would have given SkyePharma an exclusive 180-day period to market a generic naproxen medication. According to Andrx's complaint, however, SkyePharma had no intention of marketing its generic drug and therefore would never trigger the running of the 180-day exclusivity period. Accordingly, the settlement agreement had the effect of preventing any generic [**7] competition in the controlled release naproxen market and constituted a conspiracy to restrain trade.

In addition to SkyePharma's alleged attempt to seek FDA approval for a generic controlled release naproxen medication, Andrx contends that it also sought to introduce a generic naproxen to the market. After Andrx filed notice of non-infringement as required by § 355\(j\)\(2\)\(B\)\(ii\), however, Elan filed patent infringement proceedings against Andrx. According to Andrx's complaint, Elan initiated this litigation "despite the absence of any reasonable belief that the claim might fairly be [*1232] held to be valid upon adjudication." R1-3 P 29, at 5. Andrx alleged that Elan could not maintain its suit because the '320 patent had not been "validly issued because of inter alia, the SCRIP publication of June 22, 1988 which advertised its controlled [**8] release naproxen in the United States more than one year prior to the filing of the application which resulted in the '320 patent." Id. P 27.<sup>4</sup> Moreover, Andrx alleged that "Elan's goal and intention in bringing [the infringement proceedings] was solely to . . . cause Andrx damage from the automatic administrative delay in the approval process" pursuant to § 355\(j\)\(5\)\(B\)\(iii\). Id. P 29, at 5-6. In addition to these allegations, Andrx alleged that "Elan has engaged in a pattern and practice of baseless and sham litigation" against companies seeking to complete ANDAs for generic controlled release naproxen medications. Id. P 26, at 5. According to Andrx, Elan sought through this behavior to preserve its monopoly over the controlled release naproxen market in the United States. Id. P 39, at 7.

<sup>2</sup> HN4 [↑] As an incentive for drug manufacturers to submit ANDA applications for the production of generic drugs, § 355 grants the first manufacturer to file an ANDA application for a generic drug using the type of certification outlined in § 355\(j\)\(2\)\(A\)\(vii\)\(IV\) an exclusive 180-day period to market the generic drug before another ANDA application is approved for a similar generic drug. § 355\(j\)\(5\)\(B\)\(iv\)\(I\). This 180-day exclusivity period begins to run "after the date of the first commercial marketing of the drug." Id.

<sup>3</sup> Although SkyePharma was also a named defendant in Andrx's first amended complaint, Andrx settled and voluntarily dismissed its claims against SkyePharma. See R2-73 at 1.

[**9] Based on these allegations, Andrx filed suit against Elan and SkyePharma and alleged violations of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 and 2, and the Florida antitrust laws, FLA. STAT. ch. 542.18 and ch. 542.19. Citing the Noerr-Pennington doctrine and precedent which allowed for the licensing settlement reached by Elan and SkyePharma, the district court granted Elan's motion for judgment on the pleadings. In addition, the district court denied Andrx's motion to amend its complaint on account of Andrx's undue delay. On appeal, Andrx argues that the district court erred in dismissing with prejudice its suit against Elan because the district court misconstrued the Noerr-Pennington doctrine and its sham litigation exception. In addition, Andrx argues that the district court erred by denying its motion for leave to amend its complaint. [***1299]

II. DISCUSSION

A. Judgment on the Pleadings

HN5 [↑] "We review de novo the district court's ruling on a motion for judgment on the pleadings pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(c)." Horsley v. Rivera, 292 F.3d 695, 700 (11th Cir. 2002). [**10] The application of the Noerr-Pennington doctrine is a question of law, and therefore also reviewed de novo. See Tec Cogeneration Inc. v. Fla. Power & Light Co., 76 F.3d 1560, 1567 (11th Cir. 1996), modified in part on other grounds, 86 F.3d 1028 (11th Cir. 1996) (per curiam). Judgment on the pleadings is proper when no issues of material fact exist, and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law based on the substance of the pleadings [*1233] and any judicially noticed facts. See Horsley, 292 F.3d at 700.

HN6 [↑] The Sherman Anti-Trust Act provides that "every contract . . . in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is . . . illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1. The Act also proscribes acts which seek "to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations." 15 U.S.C. § 2.<sup>5</sup>

---

<sup>4</sup> Patent law provides that a patent shall not be granted if the invention was "described in a printed publication in this or a foreign country or in public use or on sale in this country, more than one year prior to the date of the application for patent in the United States." 35 U.S.C. § 102. This statutory provision is termed the "on-sale bar" to patent validity. See Ferag AG v. Quipp Inc., 45 F.3d 1562, 1566 (Fed. Cir. 1995). Because Elan purportedly advertised its controlled release naproxen for sale in the publication SCRIP World Pharmaceutical News, Andrx argued that the on-sale bar was triggered, thereby invalidating the '320 patent. Andrx's arguments notwithstanding, the district court found that the SCRIP publication did not trigger the on-sale bar. See Elan Corp., PLC v. Andrx Pharms., Inc., 272 F. Supp. 2d 1325, 1340 (S.D. Fla. 2002). The district court did find, however, that a letter written by Elan to Lederle Laboratories in 1987 triggered the on-sale bar and invalidated the '320 patent. Id. at 1349. This latter finding was reversed by the Federal Circuit, which remanded Elan's patent infringement suit for further proceedings. See Elan Corp., PLC v. Andrx Pharms., Inc., 366 F.3d 1336, 1342 (Fed. Cir. 2004).

<sup>5</sup> As the district court noted, the Florida antitrust statutes, FLA. STAT. ch. 542.18 and ch. 542.19, closely track the language of the Sherman Act and are analyzed under the same rules and case law. See All Care Nursing Serv. v. High Tech Staffing Servs., Inc., 135 F.3d 740, 745 n.11 (11th Cir. 1998). Accordingly, our discussion of federal antitrust law applies with equal force to the Florida statutory provisions.

Citing the Sherman Act and the Florida antitrust statutes, Andrx alleges that Elan improperly sought to monopolize the controlled release naproxen market and prevent competition by: (1) initiating sham patent infringement litigation against \*\*11 Andrx; and (2) entering into a settlement agreement with SkyePharma which granted SkyePharma exclusive licensing rights to manufacture and sell a generic controlled release naproxen medication. We will examine each set of allegations in turn.

1. Patent Infringement Proceedings

HN7 While the Sherman Anti-Trust Act does proscribe activity in restraint of trade, its reach has been tempered when its invocation would impair the exercise of constitutional rights. Recognizing that the First Amendment guarantees the right to "petition the Government for a redress of grievances," U.S. CONST. I<sup>\*\*121</sup> amend I, and that this guarantee overrides the effect of a contrary federal statute, see Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. 137, 177-78, 2 L. Ed. 60 \(1803\), and not wanting to "impute to Congress an intent to invade the First Amendment right to petition," Prof'l Real Estate Investors v. Columbia Pictures Indus., Inc., 508 U.S. 49, 56, 113 S. Ct. 1920, 1926, 123 L. Ed. 2d 611 \(1993\) (internal quotations omitted), the Supreme Court has held that a defendant is immune from Sherman Act liability for concerted efforts to petition government to pass legislation which has the effect of restraining or monopolizing trade in favor of the defendant. See E. R.R. Presidents Conf. v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 136, 81 S. Ct. 523, 529, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464 \(1961\) (granting antitrust immunity for publicity campaign designed to spur the adoption of monopoly-facilitating legislation); United Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 670, 85 S. Ct. 1585, 1593, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626 \(1965\) (noting that Noerr shielded a defendant from antitrust liability for "efforts to influence public officials . . . even though intended to eliminate \*\*13 competition"). Subsequent precedent has extended Noerr-Pennington immunity to defendants who exercise their right to petition government by resorting to administrative and/or judicial proceedings. See Cal. Motor Transp. Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 510, 92 S. Ct. 609, 611-12, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642 \(1972\). Noerr-Pennington immunity thus shields a defendant from antitrust liability for resorting to litigation to obtain from a court an anticompetitive outcome.

HN8 An exception to the Noerr-Pennington doctrine exists, however, where the defendant engages in "sham litigation." Prof'l Real Estate Investors, 508 U.S. at 56, 113 S. Ct. at 1926; see Noerr, 365 U.S. at 144, 81 S. Ct. at 533 (finding Sherman Act immunity inappropriate where the exercise of the right to petition was "a mere sham to cover what is actually nothing more than an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor"). [\[\*1234\]](#) To prevail on the argument that Noerr-Pennington immunity should be abrogated based on the sham litigation exception, a litigant must establish that: (1) "the lawsuit [is] objectively baseless in the sense \*\*14 that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits"; and (2) the party bringing the allegedly baseless suit did so with a "subjective motivation . . . to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor." [\[\*\*\*1300\] Prof'l Real Estate Investors, 508 U.S. at 60-61, 113 S. Ct. at 1928](#). Construing the first prong of the sham litigation exception test, the Court noted that the existence of probable cause to bring a lawsuit is sufficient to thwart a claim that litigation was objectively baseless. See Prof'l Real Estate Investors, 508 U.S. at 62, 113 S. Ct. at 1929. Moreover, the Court noted that "[a] winning lawsuit is by definition a reasonable effort at petitioning for redress and therefore not a sham." Prof'l Real Estate Investors, 508 U.S. at 60 n.5, 113 S. Ct. at 1928 n.5.

Based on this precedent, we agree with the district court that the Noerr-Pennington doctrine shields Elan from antitrust liability for filing two patent infringement suits against Andrx in relation to the manufacture and sale of controlled release naproxen. HN9 The United States Constitution expressly permits the government \*\*15 to grant exclusive monopolies in the form of patents, see U.S. CONST. art. I, § 8, cl. 8, and therefore the Sherman Act cannot be read to impede a litigant from seeking to defend constitutionally-permitted patent rights. See Prof'l Real Estate Investors, 508 U.S. at 56, 113 S. Ct. at 1926 (declining to impute an unconstitutional purpose to Sherman Anti-Trust Act). Moreover, as the Supreme Court has noted, engaging in litigation to seek an anticompetitive outcome from a court is First Amendment activity that is immune from antitrust liability. See Cal. Motor Transp. Co., 404 U.S. at 510, 92 S. Ct. at 611-12. Thus, we conclude Noerr-Pennington immunity was triggered by Elan's filing suit against Andrx. In addition, we conclude that the sham litigation exception is inapplicable. Andrx's main contention in its complaint that the patent litigation was a sham hinged on its claim that the on-sale bar found in 35 U.S.C. § 102 was triggered by Elan's naproxen advertisement in the publication SCRIP World Pharmaceutical

News. Two courts have subsequently rejected that argument. See Elan Corp., PLC, 272 F. Supp. 2d at 1340 [**16] (rejecting argument that the SCRIP advertisement triggered on-sale bar); Elan Corp., PLC, 366 F.3d at 1342 (rejecting the argument that the on-sale bar was triggered). Thus, while Elan may not have won its infringement lawsuit at this point, it certainly has made a winning argument against Andrx's contentions of patent invalidity. Cf. Pro'l Real Estate Investors, 508 U.S. at 60 n.5, 113 S. Ct. at 1928 n.5. Thus, it is manifest that Elan's patent infringement proceedings were not objectively baseless, and therefore not a sham. Accordingly, because the Noerr-Pennington doctrine applies, and the sham litigation exception is inapplicable, the district court properly found that Elan was immunized from antitrust liability for filing infringement proceedings against Andrx.

2. Elan-SkyePharma Settlement Agreement

In contrast, we conclude that the district court erred in finding that Andrx had not sufficiently pled an antitrust violation in relation to the licensing agreement which Elan signed with SkyePharma to terminate patent infringement litigation. HN10 Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the plaintiff is required in the complaint to make "a [**17] short and plain statement of the claim showing that the [plaintiff] is entitled to relief." Fed. R. Civ. P. 8\(a\)\(2\). While [*1235] courts had previously applied a heightened pleading requirement in antitrust cases, this view has subsequently been rejected in favor of applying Rule 8\(a\)'s notice pleading standard. Quality Foods de Centro America, S.A. v. Latin American Agribusiness Dev. Corp., S.A., 711 F.2d 989, 995 (11th Cir. 1983); see Spanish Broad. Sys. of Fla., Inc. v. Clear Channel Communications, Inc., 376 F.3d 1065, 1077 (11th Cir. 2004) (concluding that the "liberal pleading regime" outlined by Fed. R. Civ. P. 8\(a\)\(2\) applies to allegations of antitrust violations); Covad Communications Co. v. BellSouth Corp., 299 F.3d 1272, 1279 (11th Cir. 2002) (describing the threshold requirements for properly pleading an antitrust violation as "exceedingly low"), vacated on other grounds by 540 U.S. 1147, 124 S. Ct. 1143, 157 L. Ed. 2d 1040 (2004). Accordingly, absent some doctrine which immunizes the conduct alleged, such as the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, "dismissals [**18] [on the pleadings] are particularly disfavored in fact-intensive antitrust cases." Covad Communications Co., 299 F.3d at 1279. Against this background, we examine whether Andrx's allegations sufficiently state a claim under § 1 and/or § 2 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act.

As we noted previously, HN11 Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides that "every contract . . . in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is . . . illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1. To prevail on a claim that a patent infringement settlement [**1301] agreement violates § 1 of the Sherman Act, a plaintiff must prove "(1) the scope of the exclusionary potential of the patent; (2) the extent to which the agreements exceed that scope; and (3) the resulting anticompetitive effects" in the relevant market. Schering-Plough Corp. v. FTC, 402 F.3d 1056, 1066 (11th Cir. 2005) (citing Valley Drug Co., 344 F.3d at 1312). With regard to the first element, the allegations in Andrx's complaint demonstrated that the '320 patent was necessary to the manufacture and sale of a controlled release naproxen medication, and that its owner could effectively [**19] exclude competitors from making other controlled release naproxen medications. See R1-3 PP 22-23, 33-35. With regard to the second element, Andrx alleged that the Elan-SkyePharma licensing agreement, coupled with SkyePharma's putative agreement to refrain from ever marketing a generic controlled release naproxen medication, "effectively barred any generic competitors from entering the market. Id. PP 22-23. If true, this dynamic would exceed the scope of exclusion intended by the '320 patent. See 21 U.S.C. § 355\(j\) (outlining criteria for drug manufacturers to enter the market with a generic version of previously-approved patented products). With regard to the third element, Andrx described the relevant market as the "controlled release naproxen" market. See R1-3 P 17. Andrx alleged that Elan had sufficient market power to affect the controlled release naproxen market because it was the only supplier of naproxen in the United States. See id. P 16. Finally, demonstrating the anticompetitive effects, Andrx alleged that Elan's licensing agreement with SkyePharma, and SkyePharma's putative agreement to refrain from marketing its generic drug, would [**20] "prevent competition in the market for controlled release naproxen." Id. PP 22-23; see also id. P 44 (stating that the conduct of Elan and SkyePharma "foreclosed" entry by competitors into the relevant market and "precluded" competition). Additionally, Andrx alleged that the agreement had the result of depriving the general public of a less expensive generic product. See id. P 43. Thus, Andrx sufficiently pled facts for a § 1 claim that the Elan-SkyePharma settlement agreement constituted an antitrust violation.

HN12 [+] [*1236] Section 2 of the Sherman Act outlaws conduct which seeks "to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations." 15 U.S.C. § 2. "To state a claim for attempted monopolization, plaintiff must show specific intent on the part of the defendant to bring about a monopoly and a dangerous probability of success." Quality Foods de Centro America, S.A., 711 F.2d at 996. In its complaint, Andrx alleged that Elan had the "specific intent to monopolize and preserve a monopoly in the controlled release naproxen market." R1-3 P 49. In addition, as we already noted, Andrx alleged that Elan was [*21] the only supplier of naproxen in the United States, see id. P 16, and therefore had "achieved a probability of success," id. P 56. Accordingly, we conclude that Andrx sufficiently pled a violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act.

In sum, then, while the allegations regarding Elan's infringement suits against Andrx were immunized under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, Andrx did sufficiently state a claim under both § 1 and § 2 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act that Elan's settlement agreement with SkyePharma, coupled with SkyePharma's putative agreement not to market, violated antitrust law. Accordingly, we remand this case for further proceedings as to those allegations. Our conclusion as to the sufficiency of the complaint does not preclude, however, Andrx's claims from being challenged at the summary judgment stage. See Quality Foods de Centro America, S.A., 711 F.2d at 999 (reversing a district court's dismissal of antitrust claims on the pleadings, but noting that the claims "may very well wash out on summary judgment"). Our determination recognizes that antitrust cases are "fact-intensive," Covad Communications Co., 299 F.3d at 1279, and require [*22] appropriate market analysis, see Schering-Plough Corp., 402 F.3d at 1065-66, and therefore are typically inappropriate for a Rule 12 dismissal in the absence of an applicable immunity doctrine. Accordingly, with regard to Andrx's allegations that the Elan-SkyePharma settlement agreement and SkyePharma's alleged agreement to refrain from marketing a generic controlled release naproxen medication violated §§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, the case is remanded for further proceedings.

B. Motion to Amend

HN13 [+] We review the district court's denial of a motion for leave to amend for clear abuse of discretion. See Lowe's Home Ctrs., Inc. v. Olin [*1302] Corp., 313 F.3d 1307, 1315 \(11th Cir. 2002\). Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, after a responsive pleading has been filed, a litigant must obtain leave to amend the complaint, which "shall be freely given when justice so requires." FED. R. CIV. P. 15\(a\). Leave may be denied because of "undue delay, bad faith or dilatory motive on the part of the movant, repeated failure to cure deficiencies by amendments previously allowed, undue prejudice to the opposing [*23] party by virtue of allowance of the amendment, [or] futility of amendment." Foman v. Davis, 371 U.S. 178, 182, 83 S. Ct. 227, 230, 9 L. Ed. 2d 222 \(1962\).

Based on the foregoing precedent and the facts of this case, we discern no abuse of discretion in the district court's denial of Andrx's motion for leave to amend. As the district court noted, Andrx filed its first amended complaint in March 2001, and was put on notice that its "sham litigation exception" theory was insufficient at least by March 2002. However, Andrx did not move to amend until it appeared in the district court in April 2003 to argue Elan's motion for judgment on the pleadings. See Smith v. Duff & Phelps, Inc., 5 F.3d 488, 493 \(11th Cir. 1993\) (finding no abuse of discretion where litigant waited [*1237] more than a year to seek leave to amend after it was put on notice that its claim was defective). Moreover, we note that in its second amended complaint, Andrx purported to advance a "sham litigation exception" theory based on Walker Process Equipment, Inc. v. Food Machinery & Chemical Corp., 382 U.S. 172, 86 S. Ct. 347, 15 L. Ed. 2d 247 \(1965\), a theory not pled in the [*24] first amended complaint. See Burger King Corp. v. Weaver, 169 F.3d 1310, 1319 \(11th Cir. 1999\) (finding no abuse of discretion where plaintiff attempted to introduce new theory of recovery in amended complaint). Finally, we agree with the district court that Andrx's explanations for its delay in filing for leave to amend do not demonstrate that justice required the grant of the motion to amend. See Carruthers v. BSA Adver., Inc., 357 F.3d 1213, 1218 \(11th Cir. 2004\) (per curiam). Accordingly, even though Andrx was motivated to amend its complaint to avoid the court's grant of Elan's motion for judgment on the pleadings, Andrx's undue delay in moving for leave to amend, its attempt to inject a new theory of recovery, and its failure to show that justice required the grant of its motion demonstrate that the district court did not clearly abuse its discretion in denying Andrx's motion for leave to amend. See Lowe's Home Ctrs., Inc., 313 F.3d at 1315.

III. CONCLUSION

In this appeal, we were called upon to determine whether Andrx, a drug manufacturer seeking to introduce to the market a generic controlled release naproxen medication, [**25] could maintain suit against Elan, the owner of the patent for controlled release naproxen, for its initiation of patent infringement proceedings against Andrx and for its settlement agreement with SkyePharma which purportedly shielded Elan from generic competition in the naproxen market.

Because the Noerr-Pennington doctrine immunized Elan from antitrust liability as to the former allegations, the district court properly found that the allegations could not state a claim for relief under antitrust law. But, because the latter allegations sufficiently pled antitrust violations, the district court erred by granting Elan's motion for judgment on the pleadings, and therefore the case must be remanded for further proceedings in relation to the alleged antitrust violations stemming from the Elan-SkyePharma settlement agreement. On remand, because the district court did not clearly abuse its discretion in denying Andrx's motion for leave to amend, the district court's inquiry should be limited to the allegations of antitrust violations contained in Andrx's first amended complaint. Accordingly, the district court's grant of Elan's motion for judgement on the pleadings is AFFIRMED [**26] in part and REVERSED in part, and REMANDED for further proceedings.

---

End of Document

In re Wireless Tel. Servs. Antitrust Litig.

United States District Court for the Southern District of New York

August 29, 2005, Decided ; August 30, 2005, Filed

02 Civ. 2637 (DLC)

Reporter

385 F. Supp. 2d 403 *; 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18293 **; 2005-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P74,909; 2005 WL 2086031

IN RE WIRELESS TELEPHONE SERVICES ANTITRUST LITIGATION; This Document Relates to: ALL ACTIONS

Subsequent History: As Amended September 2, 2005.

Related proceeding at Freeland v. AT&T Corp., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 57394 \(S.D.N.Y., Aug. 17, 2006\)

Prior History: In re Wireless Tel. Servs. Antitrust Litig., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19977 \(S.D.N.Y., Oct. 6, 2004\)

Core Terms

---

handsets, market power, consumers, wireless service, Wireless, manufacturers, carriers, percent, defendants', prices, tying arrangement, anticompetitive, effects, network, providers, market share, tied product, summary judgment, features, plaintiffs', seller, technology, digital, brand, tying product, spectrum, locking, retail, costs, customers

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Discovery > Methods of Discovery > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Supporting Materials > General Overview

HN1 [+] Discovery, Methods of Discovery

Summary judgment may be granted only if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\).

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

385 F. Supp. 2d 403, *403LÁ2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18293, **18293

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

HN2 Summary Judgment, Burdens of Proof

The burden of showing that no genuine factual dispute exists rests on the party seeking summary judgment, and in assessing the record to determine whether there is a genuine issue as to a material fact, the court is required to resolve all ambiguities and draw all permissible factual inferences in favor of the party against whom summary judgment is sought.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

HN3 Summary Judgment, Opposing Materials

When the moving party has asserted facts showing that it is entitled to summary judgment, the opposing party must set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial, and cannot rest on the mere allegations or denials of the movant's pleadings. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e). If there is evidence, however, from which a reasonable inference could be drawn in favor of the opposing party, summary judgment is improper.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN4 Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

In the realm of antitrust law, summary judgment serves a vital function, by avoiding wasteful trials and prolonged litigation that may have a chilling effect on procompetitive market forces. If the plaintiff's theory is economically senseless, no reasonable jury could find in its favor, and summary judgment should be granted. Nevertheless, no special burden is imposed on a plaintiff opposing summary judgment in an antitrust case.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

HN5 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

HN6 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Among the activities prohibited by § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 are restraints of trade in the form of an agreement by a party to sell one product but only on the condition that the buyer also purchase a different (or tied) product, or at least agrees that he will not purchase that product from any other supplier. Such agreements are known as tying arrangements. Courts have repeatedly emphasized that the essential characteristic of an invalid tying arrangement lies in the seller's exploitation of its control over the tying product to force the buyer into the purchase of the tied product that the buyer either did not want at all, or might have preferred to purchase elsewhere on different terms.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN7 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

When a consumer is forced to purchase a tied product when the consumer would not do so in a competitive market, a tying arrangement is unlawful. In essence, a seller may not use its market power in one market to impair competition on the merits in another market. Competition in the tied market can be impaired by injuring existing businesses in the market or creating barriers to entering the market. The consumer is injured when her freedom to select the best bargain is impaired by her need to purchase the tying product. She may also be injured when she is unable to evaluate the true cost of either product when they are only available as a package.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Claims

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN8 [down] Sherman Act, Claims

The United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit has required proof of five specific elements to state an unlawful tying claim: first, a tying and a tied product; second, evidence of actual coercion by the seller that forced the buyer to accept the tied product; third, sufficient economic power in the tying product market to coerce purchaser acceptance of the tied product; fourth, anticompetitive effects in the tied market; and fifth, the involvement of a "not insubstantial" amount of interstate commerce in the tied market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Defenses

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

[**HN9**\[\] Tying Arrangements, Defenses](#)

Certain tying arrangements pose an unacceptable risk of stifling competition and therefore are unreasonable "per se." Analysis under the per se rule is, by definition, without inquiry into actual market conditions. Put another way, where a tying arrangement may be condemned as illegal per se, plaintiffs need not allege, let alone prove, facts addressed to the fourth element of the Second Circuit test for an unlawful tying claim. If a plaintiff succeeds in establishing the existence of sufficient market power to create a per se violation, the plaintiff is also relieved of the burden of rebutting any justifications the defendant may offer for the tie.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Per Se Rule

[**HN10**\[\] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act](#)

A tying arrangement may be condemned as illegal per se only if the existence of forcing is probable because there is a substantial potential for impact on competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Product Market Definition

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

[**HN11**\[\] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act](#)

Where the plaintiff has alleged a tying violation, and the showing of market power is insufficient to find a per se violation of antitrust law, courts apply a rule of reason analysis at the fact-finding stage through a burden-shifting scheme. Specifically, the plaintiffs bear an initial burden to demonstrate the defendants' challenged behavior had an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in the tied product market. Whether an actual adverse effect has occurred is determined by examining factors like reduced output, increased prices and decreased quality. So too may a demonstration of significant barriers to entry into a particular market show an actual adverse effect on competition. If the plaintiff fulfills this preliminary burden, however, the burden shifts to the defendants to offer evidence of the pro-competitive effects of their agreement. Assuming defendants can provide such proof, the burden shifts back to the plaintiffs to prove that any legitimate competitive benefits offered by defendants could have been achieved through less restrictive means.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN12 [ ] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The third element of a tying claim -- market power in the tying product market -- requires that the plaintiff prove that the defendant has the power to force a purchaser to do something that he would not do in a competitive market, which is often equated with the ability of a single seller to raise price and restrict output. A seller's market power ordinarily is inferred from its possession of a predominant share of the market. Nevertheless, market power may also exist in other circumstances, such as where the government has granted the seller a patent or similar monopoly over a product, or when the seller offers a unique product that competitors are not able to offer.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN13 [ ] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit requires proof of market power in all tying cases. Without evidence that defendants are using market power to force consumers to purchase the product or service in the tied market, there is no basis to view the arrangement as unreasonably restraining competition. This is so, because only if consumers are forced to purchase the tied product as a result of the defendants' market power would the arrangement have anticompetitive consequences.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN14 [ ] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

A single branded product may, in rare cases, constitute its own relevant market. Entrenched buyer preferences for established brands can also create significant barriers to entry. Yet the mere existence of a brand and brand identification in the marketplace are not synonymous with market power. In general, where interbrand competition exists it provides a significant check on the exploitation of interbrand market power because of the ability of consumers to substitute a different brand of the same product.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Jury Trials > Jury Instructions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > Sherman Act Violations

**HN15** [L] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Market share data serves as strong, perhaps presumptive, evidence of the presence or absence of market power, but careful analysis of market share, and the structure of the market, including the activities of the defendant and others within the market, is necessary to ascertain whether a defendant has monopoly power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > Price Fixing

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

**HN16** [L] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Although liability may be imposed on the basis of conscious parallelism in certain antitrust contexts, our the Second Circuit's tying case law lends no support for an inference of market power to be drawn from defendants' parallel behavior. Indeed, unless the plaintiff has alleged a conspiracy, it is inappropriate to assess one defendant's market power by measuring the cumulative power of all defendants practicing tying.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

**HN17** [L] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The test for market power is not whether a defendant can raise its prices somewhat, but whether the defendant has the power to control prices or exclude competition.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

**HN18** [L] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

In order to show market power from a defendant's practice of selling its products above marginal cost, a plaintiff must accurately measure price and all appropriate costs. Moreover, the test for the existence of market power is the ability to control price or exclude competition, not simply pricing a product above marginal cost when that price differential can be explained by the existence of economic realities entirely separate from the existence of market power, for instance, the presence of high fixed costs.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Rule Tests > Manifestly Anticompetitive Effects

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

**HN19** [ ] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The United States Supreme Court has long recognized the interrelationship between market power and anticompetitive effects. Indeed, at the heart of the per se rule of tying is the intuition that where a seller has significant market power, one may presume unreasonableness without the necessity of any analysis of the market context in which the alleged tying arrangement may be found. As a consequence, where a defendant's market power is sufficiently great that its tie qualifies as a per se violation, a plaintiff is relieved of the separate burden of showing an anticompetitive effect from the tying in the tied product market. Conversely, the tying case law also reflects the understanding that where market power is not present, an alleged tying violation cannot be a threat to competition in the tied product market. A seller must have power in the tying product market. Absent such power, tying cannot conceivably have any adverse impact in the tied product market and can only be pro-competitive in the tying product market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

**HN20** [ ] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

To demonstrate anticompetitive effects, a plaintiff must demonstrate that the tie as it actually operates in the market harmed competition in the tied product market. For a tie to create an anticompetitive effect there must be a substantial threat that the tying seller will acquire market power in the tied product market. No such threat exists if the tied product market is occupied by many stable sellers who are not likely to be driven out by tying, or if entry barriers in the tied product market are low. Speculation about anticompetitive effects is not enough. At no time may expert testimony rooted in hypothetical assumptions substitute for actual market data.

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses

Evidence > Types of Evidence > Testimony > General Overview

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > General Overview

**HN21** [ ] Admissibility, Expert Witnesses

Fed. R. Civ. P. 702 provides that expert testimony concerning technical or specialized knowledge is admissible to assist the trier of fact if (1) the testimony is based upon sufficient facts or data, (2) the testimony is the product of reliable principles and methods, and (3) the witness has applied the principles and methods reliably to the facts of the case.

Evidence > Admissibility > Expert Witnesses > Daubert Standard

Evidence > Admissibility > Scientific Evidence > General Overview

Evidence > Admissibility > Scientific Evidence > Standards for Admissibility

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > General Overview

**HN22** [+] Expert Witnesses, Daubert Standard

A court has an obligation to act as a gatekeeper to ensure the reliability and relevancy of expert testimony presented to a jury. Specifically, the court must determine that an expert employs in the courtroom the same level of intellectual rigor that characterizes the practice of an expert in the relevant field.

Evidence > ... > Testimony > Expert Witnesses > General Overview

**HN23** [+] Testimony, Expert Witnesses

Where an expert conducts a regression analysis and fails to incorporate major independent variables, such analysis may be excluded as irrelevant.

Counsel: [**1] For Plaintiffs: Scott A. Burson, Law Offices of Scott A. Burson, New York, New York; Nadeem Faruqi, Lubna Faruqi, Adam R. Gonnelli, Faruqi & Faruqi, LLP, New York, New York; David Pastor, Gilman and Pastor LLP, Saugus, MA; Robert M. Bramson, Alan R. Plutzik, L. Timothy Fisher, Bramson, Plutzik, Mahler & Birkhaeuser, LLP, Walnut Creek, CA; Daniel A. Edelman, Edelman, Combs & Latturner, LLC, Chicago, IL; Ashish Mahendru, Mahendru, PC, Houston, TX.

For Cingular, Defendants: Thomas G. Slater, Jr., Douglas M. Garrou, John D. Adams, Hunton & Williams LLP, Richmond, Virginia; Joseph J. Saltarelli, Hunton & Williams LLP, New York, New York.

For AT&T, Defendants: Robert D. Kaplan, Daniel D. Rapport, Friedman Kaplan Seiler & Adelman, LLP, New York, NY; Michael E. Kipling, Summit Law Group, P.L.L.C., Seattle, WA.

For Sprint, Defendants: Lawrence Kill, James M. Andriola, Anderson Kill & Olick, P.C., New York, NY.

For Verizon, Defendants: Reid M. Figel, Aaron M. Panner, Michael J. Guzman, Kellogg, Huber, Hansen, Todd, Evans & Figel, P.L.L.C., Washington, D.C.

For T-Mobile, Defendants: Alan M. Unger, John J. Lavelle, Mark E. Walli, Sidley Austin Brown & Wood LLP, New York, [**2] New York.

Judges: DENISE COTE, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: DENISE COTE

Opinion

---

[*405] AMENDED OPINION AND ORDER

DENISE COTE, District Judge:

On February 25, 2005, the defendants in this action, the five largest carriers of wireless telephone services in the U.S. market,<sup>1</sup> moved for summary judgment on plaintiffs' claim that each defendant's practice of requiring customers to purchase an approved handset in order to subscribe to the defendant's wireless telephone services constitutes an unlawful tying arrangement in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1. Specifically, defendants collectively move for summary judgment on three grounds: 1) that none of them has sufficient economic power in the market for wireless services to coerce the purchase of wireless handsets, 2) that the plaintiffs have offered no evidence of anticompetitive effects in the market for wireless handsets; and 3) that the plaintiffs have supplied no evidence of antitrust damages. Four of the defendants, Verizon Wireless, Cingular, T-Mobile, and Sprint, have also submitted separate supplemental briefs, asserting, inter alia, that they each are entitled to summary judgment on the [\[\*\*3\]](#) ground that as a matter of law, none of them tie the sale of handsets to the sale of wireless service. Because the plaintiffs have not presented sufficient evidence to prove that any one defendant has the degree of market power necessary to sustain a tying claim or to show that any of the defendants' alleged tying arrangements has an actual adverse effect on competition in the U.S. market for wireless handsets, defendants' motion is granted.

---

<sup>1</sup>The defendants are AT&T Wireless Services, Inc.; Cellular Telephone Company; AT&T Wireless PCS, LLC; AT&T Cellular Services, Inc.; Claircom Communications Group, Inc.; and Bay Area Cellular Telephone Company (collectively, "AT&T Wireless"); Cingular Wireless LLC; Pacific Telesis Mobile Services, LLC; Southwestern Bell Mobile Systems, LLC; Texas Rsa 18 Limited Partnership; Cingular Wireless Spectrum Sub B LLC; and Corpus Christi SMSA Limited Partnership (collectively

[\[\*\*4\]](#) Facts

The plaintiffs bring this action on behalf of themselves and other persons who have purchased cellular or Personal Communications Services ("PCS") (collectively "wireless") telephone services from the defendants from 1998 to the present. They allege that beginning in 1998, the defendants [\[\*406\]](#) have unlawfully tied the sale of handsets to the sale of wireless services. None of the defendants manufactures handsets, but each of them purchases handsets for direct resale to consumers through their retail stores or for sale to their respective retail agents.

This summary judgment motion requires an understanding of the evolution of the wireless telephone services industry. The facts recited here are either undisputed or as shown by the plaintiffs, unless otherwise identified. A brief description of the history of this litigation and the context for the summary judgment motions precedes the factual recitation.

Procedural History

The background and procedural history of this action have been set forth in several prior Opinions, which are incorporated by reference.<sup>2</sup> Familiarity with these Opinions is assumed, and only the procedural history relevant to the instant motion [\[\*\*5\]](#) is described here.

On April 5, 2002, the plaintiffs in an action captioned Brook v. AT&T Cellular Servs. Inc., No. 02 Civ. 2637, filed suit in this District, alleging that several wireless services providers violated federal antitrust law. On November 19, 2002, a conference was held in the Brook action, at which it was agreed that the defendants' motions to dismiss would be dismissed as moot and that plaintiffs could amend their complaint on the understanding that [\[\*\*6\]](#) such amended pleading would essentially be the last. On January 9, 2003, the Brook plaintiffs filed an amended complaint, which alleged that each defendant individually ties the sale of handsets to the provision of wireless services and that each of the five defendants monopolizes the market for wireless handsets compatible with its wireless services. The defendants jointly moved to dismiss the amended complaint on February 21, 2003. Shortly thereafter, the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation ("JPMDL") transferred four putative class actions raising similar claims as Brook to this Court.

"Cingular"); Sprint Spectrum, L.P.; Wirelessco, L.P.; and Sprintcom, Inc. (collectively "Sprint"); T-Mobile USA, Inc., f/k/a VoiceStream Wireless Corporation; Omnipoint NY MTA License, LLC; Omnipoint New York D License, LLC; Omnipoint Facilities Spectrum 2 LLC; Omnipoint Boston Area DE License, LLC; Omnipoint Boston D License, LLC; VoiceStream GSM I License Co., LLC; VoiceStream GSM II, LLC; VoiceStream PCS BTA I License Corp.; VoiceStream PCS II License Corp.; Cook Inlet/VS GSM IV PCS, LLC; and Omnipoint Holdings, Inc. (collectively "T-Mobile"); and Celco Partnership d/b/a Verizon Wireless; New York SMSA Limited Partnership d/b/a Verizon Wireless; San Antonio MTA, LP; Chicago SMSA Limited Partnership; and GTA Mobilenet of California Limited Partnership (collectively "Verizon Wireless").

<sup>2</sup> See, e.g., In re Wireless Tel. Servs. Antitrust Litig., 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13886, No. 02 Civ. 2637 \(DLC\), 2003 WL 21912603 \(S.D.N.Y. Aug. 12, 2003\); In re Wireless Tel. Servs. Antitrust Litig., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5949, No. 02 Civ. 2637 \(DLC\), No. 02 Civ. 2637 \(DLC\), 2004 WL 764833 \(S.D.N.Y. Apr. 9, 2004\); In re Wireless Tel. Servs. Antitrust Litig., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8607, No. 02 Civ. 2637 \(DLC\), 2004 WL 1087262 \(S.D.N.Y. May 17, 2004\); In re Wireless Tel. Servs. Antitrust Litig., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19977, No. 02 Civ. 2637 \(DLC\), 2004 WL 2244502 \(S.D.N.Y. Oct. 6, 2004\).

Through an August 11, 2003 Order, and with the agreement of the parties, the Brook action and the four transferred actions were consolidated for pretrial purposes. The August 11 Order noted that any action relating to the same subject matter as these five actions would be consolidated with them and provided that the amended complaint filed in the Brook litigation would serve as the Consolidated Amended Class Action Complaint for all actions "alleging antitrust claims against national wireless services carriers and assigned to the undersigned which is subsequently filed in or [**7] transferred to this Court." Brook v. AT&T Cellular Servs., 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13796, Nos. 02 Civ. 2637, 03 Civ. 1712 \(DLC\), 03 Civ. 1713 \(DLC\), 03 Civ. 1714 \(DLC\), 03 Civ. 1715 \(DLC\), 2003 WL 21911123, at \*1 \(S.D.N.Y. Aug. 11, 2003\). The August 11 Order further provided that the consolidated actions would be collectively referred to as In re Wireless Telephone Services Antitrust Litigation. Id.

An Opinion and Order issued the subsequent day, August 12, 2003, addressed the defendants' joint motion to dismiss. In re Wireless, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13886, 2003 WL 21912603 ("Motion to Dismiss Opinion"). The Motion to Dismiss Opinion dismissed all of the plaintiffs' monopolization claims on the ground that the plaintiffs failed to define properly the relevant [*407] market. [2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13886, \[WL\] at \*9-10](#). In declining to dismiss the tying claim, however, the Motion to Dismiss Opinion first observed that the plaintiffs had not alleged that the defendants "engaged in a conspiracy to tie or to raise handset prices, []or that they have entered into any kind of an agreement with each other regarding bundling or handset pricing." [2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13886, \[WL\] at \*6](#). Instead, the Opinion noted, "each Defendant is alleged to have independently [**8] violated the Sherman Act by virtue of the tying arrangement of its own services and handsets." Id. Given that, the Motion to Dismiss Opinion concluded that the plaintiffs failed to state a per se tying claim as none of the defendants were alleged to "dominate the wireless service market." [2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13886, \[WL\] at \*7](#).

As the plaintiffs alleged that "each of the Defendants possesses sufficient market power such that its tying arrangement adversely affects competition in the tied market," the Motion to Dismiss Opinion held, however, that plaintiffs had sufficiently stated a tying claim under the rule of reason doctrine. Id. The Motion to Dismiss Opinion further explained that "at trial, the plaintiffs will have the burden to show that each Defendant's market power and tying arrangement had an anticompetitive impact on the handset market." [2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13886, \[WL\] at \*8](#). Plaintiffs never objected to this description of their claims, nor did they move for reconsideration of the Motion to Dismiss Opinion. Consequently, fact discovery proceeded on the basis that plaintiffs' tying claim was separately pled against each defendant.

On July 30, 2004, with the close of fact discovery just two months away, plaintiffs [**9] moved for leave to amend their amended complaint. Plaintiffs' proposed second amended complaint included a tying claim, inter alia, which alleged that the defendants, both collectively and individually, have significant market power in the tying and tied product markets. Through an October 6, 2004 Opinion and Order, plaintiffs' motion for leave to amend was denied. In re Wireless, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19977, 2004 WL 2244502, at \*1. The October 6 Opinion explained that the plaintiffs' proposed second amended complaint would "transform the lawsuit from one asserting five tying claims against each of the defendants individually to a lawsuit alleging collective action on the tying claim." [2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19977, \[WL\] at \*6](#). The October 6 Opinion further noted that having included conspiracy allegations in its original complaint, which they then chose to drop, the plaintiffs' decision to "reassert the conspiracy allegations they initially abandoned" could not constitute the good cause needed for "a substantial and untimely amendment" that would significantly delay the resolution of the litigation.<sup>3</sup> Id.

---

<sup>3</sup> On August 17, 2004, while the motion to amend was being briefed, plaintiffs' counsel, representing a separate plaintiff, also brought an action in the Northern District of California captioned Freeland v. AT&T Corp. The Freeland action, which was transferred to this Court by the JPMDL in November 2004 and is now captioned 04 Civ. 8653 (DLC), not only alleges that the defendants in this action have engaged in collective action to tie the sale of handsets to wireless services, but also charges that by engaging in certain practices, the defendants have entered into a conspiracy to restrain trade and contracts in restraint of [**10] Fact discovery in this action closed on October 8, 2004, and expert discovery ended on January 21, 2005. The defendants jointly moved for summary judgment on February 28, 2005, and briefing was complete on this motion, including the related [*408] motions to strike certain declarations and expert testimony, on June 17, 2005.

4

The parties have made extensive submissions in connection with this motion and the associated motions in limine and motions to strike. Because of the analysis that follows, it is only essential to set forth a small portion of the factual material presented through these motions. The essential facts as shown through the evidence presented with these motions include the following.

The Evolution of Wireless Services in the U.S.

Wireless telephone service was first introduced in the U.S. in the early 1980s. At that time, the [**11] Federal Communications Commission ("FCC") allocated spectrum such that only two companies could provide service in any given market. Beginning in 1995, however, the FCC auctioned new spectrum for PCS, which ultimately consisted of more than twice the amount of spectrum previously allocated to wireless telephone service. The allocation of PCS spectrum enabled as many as eight competitors to operate within a single market.<sup>5</sup> As PCS providers began operating their networks, the number of wireless subscribers rose from under 25 million in 1994 to 86 million in 1999. In 2003, over 160 million people subscribed to wireless service.

The mid-1990s increase in the amount of spectrum allocated paralleled and enabled another significant change in the wireless industry: the switch from analog to digital technology. Although the FCC had maintained a specific technological standard for [**12] analog service, it decided not to do so for digital service. Consequently, multiple digital technologies were introduced in the mid-1990s, among them CDMA, which is used by Sprint and Verizon Wireless; and GSM, which is used by T-Mobile and to which Cingular and AT&T Wireless are in the process of converting their networks.<sup>6</sup> The parties dispute the compatibility of these technologies. While the defendants assert that these technologies are mutually incompatible, the plaintiffs state that they are only incompatible to the extent that the carriers have manipulated them so as to inhibit a consumer's ability to use her wireless telephone, or handset, with multiple carriers and to heighten the costs of switching from one carrier to another.

While the defendants employ varying digital protocols, each defendant has captured similar benefits [**13] from the advent of digital service. Digital service not only expanded the types of services wireless carriers can provide, enabling, among other things, caller ID, text messaging, and e-mail, but it also eradicated some of the security problems, such as service theft and eavesdropping, associated with analog service. Most importantly, however, digital service enabled wireless service providers to accommodate more users within any given amount of spectrum, thereby reducing their need to set up additional transmitters or cell sites.

Digital technology has also wrought major changes in consumer use and the providers' revenue. In 1994, the average [*409] monthly usage per subscriber was 119 minutes. This figure rose to 185 minutes in 1999 and skyrocketed to 507 minutes by 2003. During the same time frame, the providers' average revenue per minute fell from 47 cents to 10 cents with a 66 percent drop alone from 1998 to 2003.

trade in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, and a conspiracy to monopolize in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act. Plaintiffs' motion for an order setting a pretrial schedule in the Freeland action is pending, as is defendants' cross-motion to dismiss the Freeland action as duplicative.

<sup>4</sup> On February 25, 2005, the plaintiffs moved for class certification. Because of the resolution of the instant motion, it is unnecessary to rule on that motion.

<sup>5</sup> Since the mid-to-late 1990s, another frequency block, referred to as SMR spectrum, has also been used for wireless telephone services.

<sup>6</sup> The two other digital technologies are TDMA, which is now obsolete and from which Cingular and AT&T Wireless are switching, and iDEN, the technology used by non-party Nextel.

The Development of Handsets and How They've Changed

Because wireless service providers cannot implement more efficient service unless subscribers are using handsets that operate on their respective networks, handsets sold for use in the U.S. wireless services [**14] market are developed by manufacturers in collaboration with the wireless service providers. The quality of handsets available to subscribers is particularly important to the service providers because the use of "outmoded" handsets not only affects the quality of that subscriber's service, but also diminishes the quality of service to other subscribers. As a result, at least two of the defendants, Verizon Wireless and AT&T Wireless, subject or have subjected handset models to an approval process involving testing and maintain a list of models approved for use with their respective services.

It is undisputed that the handset manufacturers compete with one another to offer the highest quality, maximum spectral efficiency, and lowest prices to the wireless service providers who purchase their handsets. The parties dispute, however, whether certain companies have manufactured or currently do manufacture wireless telephones, and more importantly, whether the handset market has been "dynamic" since 1999.<sup>7</sup> In addition, while the parties agree that certain companies, including Sony, Palm, Hewlett Packard, Danger, and RIM, have entered the U.S. handset market during the relevant time frame, [**15] the plaintiffs argue that these entrants collectively account for an insignificant portion of the U.S. handset market.

In 1995, just three percent of handsets sold in the U.S. were digital. By contrast, by 2000, essentially all handsets sold in the U.S. were digital. Today's digital handsets feature many improvements over their predecessors, such as enhanced battery life, smaller size and diminished weight, and a host of improved features, including automatic redial, speed dial, alarm clocks, address books, speakerphones, voice-activated dialing, and color screens. All of the defendants also currently sell handsets equipped with cameras as well as data [**16] services, such as text messaging, the downloading of ring tones, music, and games. Even as handsets have become increasingly more sophisticated, the cost of handsets has dropped.<sup>8</sup>

Just as the parties dispute the inherent compatibility of the various digital technologies with one another, they also dispute whether a handset designed to work on one digital network can function on another network. The plaintiff argues, for example, that certain handsets are designed to operate across multiple protocols, but that the defendants program the handsets used in conjunction with their respective [*410] service so as to prevent such [**17] usage. In addition, the parties dispute the extent to which consumers desire the innovations now featured on handsets and disagree as to whether handsets offered in the U.S. sufficiently incorporate other emerging technologies.

The Distribution and Sale of Handsets in the U.S.

It is undisputed that since the inception of wireless service in the U.S., wireless service providers have sold their respective service and handsets as a package, and that in doing so, the carriers have subsidized the cost of handsets to make initial entry into the wireless services market "more palatable." Although wireless handsets have become much more affordable over the last fifteen years, wireless service providers continue to package service and handsets, subsidizing the latter, "to continue to open up markets and make it affordable" for consumers to obtain wireless service.

The plaintiffs allege that in an effort to prevent customers from switching carriers, each of the defendants requires that handsets sold for use with its respective network are programmed, or "locked," to prevent the use of such

---

<sup>7</sup> The parties dispute which entities can appropriately be called handset manufacturers. The defendants contend that companies that develop and build handsets and then sell them under different brand names should be considered manufacturers. The plaintiffs, by contrast, argue that only the company listed as a handset's manufacturer should be considered as such.

<sup>8</sup> The plaintiffs argue, by way of citation to the expert report of Nicholas Economides, that even though the wholesale prices for digital handsets have dropped since 2000, they were artificially inflated between 1999 and 2003 as a direct result of the defendants' tying arrangements. For reasons that will be described below, Economides's analysis of handset prices cannot be admitted into evidence.

handsets with another carrier.<sup>9</sup> [**19] The defendants deal with this assertion in varying [**18] ways. Verizon Wireless, for example, contends that it does not lock handsets on the ground that its "post-pay"<sup>10</sup> handsets are set to a widely-known default equivalent to leaving a handset unlocked. By contrast, T-Mobile acknowledges that since the mid-1990s, the handsets sold for use on its network have featured locked SIM cards, hardware chips embedded in handsets that identify a particular user and allow her access to a specific network. T-Mobile contends that it employs handset locking to prevent retailers from selling and/or activating T-Mobile-subsidized handsets on other networks and to deter theft on the basis that it can deactivate the SIM card of a stolen handset.<sup>11</sup> T-Mobile further asserts that it has a policy of unlocking any handset at a subscriber's request.

The parties also dispute the extent to which the defendants' sales of wireless service are tied to that of handsets and whether aside from their direct handset sales, the defendants also dominate the purchase and distribution of handsets that are sold subsequently to consumers through other, non-carrier-owned retail channels. This Opinion does not reach the legal issue most closely associated with these disputes: whether as a condition of receiving wireless services from a particular defendant, consumers are required to purchase a handset from that defendant as well. Nevertheless, so as to provide a full picture of the wireless services industry, it is necessary to illustrate how the distribution and sale of handsets in the U.S. function.

The following paragraph uses Verizon Wireless, which, as of 2003, possessed the largest market share among U.S. wireless service providers and among the defendants, as an example of how the defendants [**20] sell and/or distribute handsets. Like other carriers, Verizon Wireless not only operates its own retail stores, but it also maintains agreements with more than 2,000 sales agents, which are authorized to [*411] sell its service and which independently sell handsets as well. In acquiring the handsets they sell to consumers, Verizon's sales agents "typically have the right to purchase either from Verizon Wireless or from third-party sources, provided that the handsets purchased are approved for operation on Verizon Wireless's CDMA network." Although large retailers, such as Radio Shack, often choose to purchase handsets directly from Verizon Wireless, retailers' contracts with Verizon Wireless specifically empower them to purchase equipment through non-Verizon sources, notably manufacturers or distributors, so long as such equipment has been approved by Verizon and is prepared for use on Verizon's network.<sup>12</sup> These contracts also reflect that most covered retailers establish handset prices without Verizon's involvement and that they have responsibility for the installation and maintenance, as well as warranties for, the handsets they sell.

[**21] The Changing Structure of the Wireless Industry

Since the late 1990s, the structure of the wireless services industry has fundamentally changed. Just as digital technology offers certain efficiencies, so too does having a nationwide network, which eliminates a provider's need to pay roaming costs to other carriers. Whereas some carriers, such as AT&T Wireless, already had extensive geographic coverage by the late 1990s, other, more regionally-focused carriers began to join forces to achieve nationwide coverage. Verizon Wireless, Cingular, and T-Mobile, all of which now provide national coverage, each <sup>9</sup>A substantial share of plaintiffs' evidentiary submissions regarding locking concerns the defendants' coordinated efforts, primarily through various wireless industry organizations, to promulgate handset locks as an industry standard by requiring manufacturers to incorporate such locks in handsets developed for use with their respective networks.

---

<sup>10</sup>Verizon does not define, however, what it means by "postpay."

<sup>11</sup>Sprint, which also admits to locking handsets, cites similar justifications for locking.

<sup>12</sup>Pursuant to an agreement with the plaintiffs, approximately one dozen contracts were produced and served as a sample. This paragraph also relies on the declaration of Thomas Bryant, an associate director for indirect distribution for Verizon Wireless. The plaintiffs have moved to strike the Bryant declaration, inter alia, because he did not sufficiently disclose the bases of his personal knowledge and on other grounds. The motion to strike is denied; the defendants have cured any relevant deficiencies. This Opinion determines that the defendants are entitled to summary judgment even if they control sales and distribution in the U.S. handset market.

emerged from the combination of smaller carriers in 2000.<sup>13</sup> [**22] More recently, AT&T Wireless and Cingular merged in 2004, and Sprint merged with Nextel, a non-party to this action, in 2005.<sup>14</sup>

Pursuant to congressional mandate, since 1995, the FCC has reported annually [*412] on competitive conditions in the wireless services industry.<sup>15</sup> Such reports reveal the changing nature of the wireless services industry. According to the FCC, in 1998, none of the five largest service providers possessed more than 11 [**23] percent of the nationwide market, and together, they comprised only 47 percent of the market. Since 2000, however, Verizon Wireless has maintained a 24 percent market share, and in 2003, the five largest wireless service providers accounted for 70 percent of the market. The FCC reports that Verizon's market share of 24 percent is the largest in the industry; that Cingular's market share has fluctuated between 15 and 18 percent; that AT&T has held between 10 and 15 percent; that Sprint's share has never exceeded 11 percent; and that T-Mobile has never held more than 8 percent. The FCC has also reported that as of 2004, 97 percent of the American population could choose from at least three providers that own their own network, and 87 percent of the population had a choice of at least five carriers.

In the above-referenced reports, the [**24] FCC has not only assessed the carriers' respective market shares but has also observed other indicia of competition, such as "the continued rollout of differentiated pricing plans" by different providers, which it has recognized since 2001. In 2003, for instance, the FCC described the wireless providers as exhibiting "independent pricing behavior, in the form of continued experimentation with varying pricing levels and structures, for varying service packages, with various available handsets and policies on handset pricing." The FCC has also measured how many customers each wireless service provider typically loses per month, a figure known in the industry as "churn." Since 2000, wireless service providers have lost 1.5 to 3 percent of their customers each a month, resulting in a loss, or "churn," of between 18 and 36 percent of customers each year.

On the basis of specific findings such as these, the FCC has repeatedly described the wireless services market as competitive. In 1999, for instance, the FCC observed "steady competitive progress" in the wireless services industry; in 2000, it found the industry continuing to benefit from "the effects of increased competition as evidenced [**25] by lower prices to consumers and increased diversity of service offerings;" in 2001 and 2002, it determined the industry featured "increased competition;" in 2003, it concluded that "effective competition" was present in the wireless services market; and in 2004, it wrote that "U.S. consumers continue to benefit greatly from robust competition in the marketplace."

<sup>13</sup> As the FCC related in 2004,

Verizon Wireless's national system was based on a combination of wireless-owned systems (Bell Atlantic, NYNEX, GTE) with those accumulated and consolidated by Vodafone (including AirTouch). Cingular was formed by merging SBC's (including former SNET, PacBell, and Ameritech) and BellSouth's systems. T-Mobile acquired the systems constructed and combined by VoiceStream and Omnipoint.

Mem. Op. & Order, Applications of AT&T Wireless Servs., Inc. and Cingular Wireless Corp. for Consent to Transfer Control of Licenses and Authorizations, 19 FCC Rcd 21522 \(2004\) ("AT&T/Cingular Order").

<sup>14</sup> Through an August 8, 2005 memorandum opinion and order, the FCC approved the merger of Sprint and Nextel. See Mem. Op. & Order, Applications of Nextel Comm., Inc. and Sprint Corp. for Consent to Transfer Control of Licenses and Authorizations, 2005 FCC LEXIS 4524, FCC 05-148, WC Docket No. 05-63 \(Aug. 8, 2005\) ("Sprint/Nextel Order"). In an August 16, 2005 letter, the defendants argue that this order, which concludes that the wireless services industry is characterized by vigorous competition and that the national service providers are each substitutes for one another, should be considered in connection with this motion. Because the briefing of this motion was completed before the issuance of the Sprint/Nextel Order, it will not be relied upon in reaching the merits of the defendants' motions.

<sup>15</sup> The plaintiffs do not dispute the accuracy of the FCC's findings, but instead dispute their import, arguing that they do not address the defendants' alleged tying arrangements.

In 2004, Cingular and AT&T Wireless merged, a transaction that required FCC approval and generated substantial analysis of the industry as a whole by the FCC. In approving this merger, the FCC noted that its approval of such mergers is conditioned on a finding that it is in the public interest, which entails honoring the Communications Act's "deeply rooted preference for preserving and enhancing competition in relevant markets." With this mandate in mind, the FCC concluded that "the nationwide firms are all relatively close substitutes for each other in the eyes of consumers and that the nationwide firms," meaning Verizon Wireless, Sprint, T-Mobile, and Nextel, "have the incentive and ability to reposition in response to any attempted exercise of market power by the merged firm."<sup>16</sup> AT&T Wireless Order at P 147.

[**26] [*413] Discussion

HN1 Summary judgment may be granted only "if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Rule 56\(c\), Fed. R. Civ. P.; see also Sec. Ins. Co. of Hartford v. Old Dominion Freight Line, Inc., 391 F.3d 77, 82 \(2d Cir. 2004\). HN2 "The burden of showing that no genuine factual dispute exists rests on the party seeking summary judgment, and in assessing the record to determine whether there is a genuine issue as to a material fact, the court is required to resolve all ambiguities and draw all permissible factual inferences in favor of the party against whom summary judgment is sought." Old Dominion Freight Line, 391 F.3d at 83 (citation omitted) (emphasis supplied).

HN3 When the moving party has asserted facts showing that it is entitled to summary judgment, the opposing party must "set forth" specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial, and cannot rest on the "mere allegations or denials" of the movant's pleadings. Rule 56\(e\), Fed. R. Civ. P.; accord Burt Rigid Box, Inc. v. Travelers Prop. Cas. Corp., 302 F.3d 83, 91 \(2d Cir. 2002\). If there is evidence, however, "from which a reasonable inference could be drawn in favor of the opposing party, summary judgment is improper." Old Dominion Freight Line, 391 F.3d at 83 (citation omitted).

HN4 In the realm of antitrust law, "summary judgment serves a vital function," Tops Markets, Inc. v. Quality Markets, Inc., 142 F.3d 90, 95 \(2d Cir. 1998\), by avoiding "wasteful trials and prolonged litigation that may have a chilling effect on procompetitive market forces." Virgin Atlantic Airways Ltd. v. British Airways PLC, 257 F.3d 256, 263 \(2d Cir. 2001\) (citation omitted). "If the plaintiff's theory is economically senseless, no reasonable jury could find in its favor, and summary judgment should be granted." Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Servs., 504 U.S. 451, 468-69, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 \(1992\). Nevertheless, [*28] "no special burden is imposed on a plaintiff opposing summary judgment in an antitrust case." Virgin Atlantic, 257 F.3d at 262 (citation omitted).

I. Legal Framework

A. Elements of Tying

Section 1 of the Sherman Act provides that HN5 "every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be illegal." 15 U.S.C. § 1. The Sherman Act exists "to protect competition, not individual competitors." Virgin Atlantic, 257 F.3d at 265.

HN6 Among the activities prohibited by Section 1 are restraints of trade in the form of "an agreement by a party to sell one product but only on the condition that the buyer also purchase a different (or tied) product, or at least agrees that he will not purchase that product from any other supplier." Eastman Kodak, 504 U.S. at 461 (citation omitted); see also Edward M. Iacobucci, Tying as Quality Control: A Legal and Economic Analysis, 32 J. Legal Stud. 435, 435 \(2003\). Such agreements are known as tying arrangements. Courts have repeatedly emphasized [*29] that the essential characteristic of an invalid tying arrangement lies in the seller's [*414] exploitation of its control over the tying product to force the buyer into the purchase of the tied product that the buyer either did not want at all, or might have preferred to purchase elsewhere on different terms.

---

<sup>16</sup> Again, the plaintiffs do not challenge the FCC's findings in the AT&T/Cingular Order but argue that the order "does not address the issue of tying in the context of the merger."

385 F. Supp. 2d 403, *413L 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18293, **29

Hack v. President and Fellows of Yale College, 237 F.3d 81, 85 (2d Cir. 2000) (citing Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 12, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 (1984)).

HN7[] When a consumer is forced to purchase a tied product when the consumer would not do so in a competitive market, a tying arrangement is unlawful. See Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 13-14. In essence, a seller may not use its market power in one market "to impair competition on the merits in another market." Id. at 14. Competition in the tied market can be impaired by injuring existing businesses in the market or creating barriers to entering the market. Id. The consumer is injured when her freedom to select the best bargain is impaired by her need to purchase the tying product. Id. at 15. She may also be injured when she is unable to evaluate [**30] the true cost of either product when they are only available as a package. Id.

Both before and after the Supreme Court's 1984 decision in Jefferson Parish, which is viewed as one of the Court's most significant decisions on Sherman Act tying claims, HN8[] the Second Circuit has required proof of five specific elements to state an unlawful tying claim:

first, a tying and a tied product; second, evidence of actual coercion by the seller that forced the buyer to accept the tied product; third, sufficient economic power in the tying product market to coerce purchaser acceptance of the tied product; fourth, anticompetitive effects in the tied market; and fifth, the involvement of a 'not insubstantial' amount of interstate commerce in the tied market.

Hack, 237 F.3d at 86; see also DeJesus v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 87 F.3d 65, 70 (2d Cir. 1996); Gonzalez v. St. Margaret's House Housing Dev. Fund Corp., 880 F.2d 1514, 1516-17 (2d Cir. 1989); Yentsch v. Texaco, Inc., 630 F.2d 46, 56 (2d Cir. 1980).

B. The Per Se Rule of Tying

As the Supreme Court has repeatedly held, HN9[] "certain tying arrangements [**31] pose an unacceptable risk of stifling competition and therefore are unreasonable 'per se.'" Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 9. Analysis under the per se rule is, by definition, "without inquiry into actual market conditions." Id. at 15. Put another way, where a tying arrangement may be condemned as illegal per se, plaintiffs need not allege, let alone prove, facts addressed to the fourth element. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Visa USA Inc. (In re Visa Check/MasterMoney Antitrust Litig.), 280 F.3d 124, 133 n.5 (2d Cir. 2001); In re Wireless, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13886, 2003 WL 21912603, at *4-5. If a plaintiff succeeds in establishing the existence of sufficient market power to create a per se violation, the plaintiff is also relieved of the burden of rebutting any justifications the defendant may offer for the tie.

HN10[] A tying arrangement may be condemned as illegal per se only "if the existence of forcing is probable" because there is a "substantial potential for impact on competition." Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 15-16. While the Supreme Court has never defined how much market power is necessary to condemn a tying arrangement as illegal per se, the [**32] Jefferson Parish Court concluded that a thirty percent market share was "far from overwhelming" and did "not establish the kind of dominant market position" that entitles a plaintiff to a finding that the [*415] tying arrangement is per se illegal. Id. at 26-27.

C. The Rule of Reason

HN11[] Where the plaintiff has alleged a tying violation, and the showing of market power is insufficient to find a per se violation of antitrust law, courts apply a rule of reason analysis at the fact-finding stage through a burden-shifting scheme. In re Wireless Tel. Servs., 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13886, 2003 WL 21912603, at *5, 7. Specifically, the plaintiffs "bear an initial burden to demonstrate the defendants' challenged behavior had an actual adverse effect on competition as a whole in the [tied product] market." Geneva Pharms. Tech. Corp. v. Barr Labs., Inc., 386 F.3d 485, 506-07 (2d Cir. 2004) (citation omitted) (emphasis in original); see also In re Visa Check, 280 F.3d at 134 n.5.

"Whether an actual adverse effect has occurred is determined by examining factors like reduced output, increased prices and decreased quality." Virgin Atlantic, 257 F.3d at 264. [**33] So too may a demonstration of "significant barriers to entry into [a particular] market" show an actual adverse effect on competition. CDC Techs., Inc. v. IDEXX Lab., Inc., 186 F.3d 74, 80 \(2d Cir. 1999\). If the plaintiff fulfills this preliminary burden, however, "the burden shifts to the defendants to offer evidence of the pro-competitive effects of their agreement." Geneva Pharms. Tech. Corp., 386 F.3d at 507 (citation omitted). "Assuming defendants can provide such proof, the burden shifts back to the plaintiffs to prove that any legitimate competitive benefits offered by defendants could have been achieved through less restrictive means." Id. (citation omitted).

D. Market Power in a Rule of Reason Case

HN12[<sup>16</sup>] The third element of a tying claim -- market power in the tying product market -- requires that the plaintiff prove that the defendant has "the power to force a purchaser to do something that he would not do in a competitive market," which is often equated with "the ability of a single seller to raise price and restrict output." Eastman Kodak, 504 U.S. at 464 (citation omitted). A seller's market power "ordinarily is inferred [**34] from [its] possession of a predominant share of the market." Id. Nevertheless, market power may also exist in other circumstances, such as where "the government has granted the seller a patent or similar monopoly over a product," Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 16, or "when the seller offers a unique product that competitors are not able to offer." Id. at 17.

As noted above, HN13[<sup>17</sup>] the Second Circuit requires proof of market power in all tying cases. As the Court observed in Jefferson Parish, "without evidence that [defendants] are using market power to force" consumers to purchase the product or service in the tied market, "there is no basis to view the arrangement as unreasonably restraining competition." Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 24 n.40. This is so, because "only if" consumers "are forced to purchase" the tied product "as a result of [the defendants'] market power would the arrangement have anticompetitive consequences." Id. at 25. In her concurrence in Jefferson Parish, Justice O'Connor emphasized the centrality of a market power analysis for tying claims even as she argued that it was time to abandon [**35] the per se label for a class of tying claims.<sup>17</sup> She recommended [*416] reducing all analysis of tying claims to a three-part inquiry, the first element of which would be an unqualified requirement that the seller have "power in the tying product market." Id. at 35, 38 (O'Connor, J., concurring).<sup>18</sup> As the Honorable Frank H. Easterbrook has written in connection with his analysis of a tying claim,

Antitrust law is based on the premise that when markets are competitive, the process of sellers' rivalry and buyers' choice produces the best results. Unless courts insist on a showing of market power, they run the risk of deleting one of the existing options and so reducing rather than enhancing the vigor of competition and the welfare of consumers.

Will v. Comprehensive Accounting Corp., 776 F.2d 665, 673-74 \(7th Cir. 1985\).

[**36]

Since Jefferson Parish, most Circuit Courts of Appeals have explicitly insisted on a showing of market power for a plaintiff to succeed on a tying claim. The Sixth and Seventh Circuits have adopted the three-step analysis proposed by Justice O'Connor, including the threshold requirement of a showing of market power for all tying claims. See <sup>17</sup> While continuing to list proof of market power as an essential component of a tying claim, the Second Circuit has not yet addressed the ramifications of the Jefferson Parish majority and concurring opinions in any detail. In Gonzalez, the sole occasion on which our Circuit has even commented on the divergence between the Jefferson Parish majority and Justice O'Connor's concurrence, the Honorable Wilfred Feinberg observed that despite "weaknesses in the per se tying analysis," the court was obligated to "adhere to the views of a majority of the Supreme Court, which has not abandoned the per se test." Gonzalez, 880 F.2d at 1519.

<sup>18</sup> In adopting Justice O'Connor's framework for analysis of all tying claims, the Sixth Circuit noted that in Eastman Kodak, 504 U.S. at 451, issued eight years after Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 2, the majority opinion did not even mention the terms per se or rule of reason. PSI, 104 F.3d at 815 n.2.

PSI Repair Servs., Inc. v. Honeywell, Inc., 104 F.3d 811, 815 n.2, 821 (6th Cir. 1997) (affirming summary judgment for defendant for plaintiff's failure to show market power in tying product market); Hardy v. City Optical Inc., 39 F.3d 765, 767 (7th Cir. 1994) (per curiam) (reinstating lawsuit with admonition that district court must find a 30 percent market share [**37] at a minimum); Hand v. Cent. Transport, Inc., 779 F.2d 8, 11 (6th Cir. 1985) (reinstating lawsuit for failure to consider evidence of market power in a submarket); Will, 776 F.2d at 673-74 (reversing a jury verdict on a tying claim for a failure to prove defendant had market power). Thus, as the Honorable Richard A. Posner explained in Hardy, since "substantial market power is a threshold requirement of all rule of reason" cases in these Circuits, a tying arrangement is not illegal "unless the defendant has substantial market power in the tying product." Hardy, 39 F.3d at 767.

Other circuits have disclaimed the requirement of market power for a rule of reason tying claim, but have imported such a requirement through other means. The Third Circuit, for instance, has explained on one hand that Jefferson Parish has foreclosed it from requiring a plaintiff to prove the existence of market power in the tying market under a rule of reason analysis, Town Sound & Custom Tops, Inc. v. Chrysler Motors Corp., 959 F.2d 468 at 485, yet it imposes an equivalent burden on a plaintiff by requiring a showing of a "plausible theory of causation of injury of the type the [**38] antitrust laws were designed to prevent," id. at 486 (citation omitted). The Third Circuit also observes that an antitrust tying claim "falls apart" where a defendant lacks sufficient power in the tying product market to leverage power in the tied product market. Id. But see Grappone, Inc. v. Subaru of New England, 858 F.2d 792 at 798-99 (proceeding to analyze anti- and pro-competitive effects of the tie after finding that plaintiff had not shown existence of market power in the tying market).<sup>19</sup>

[**39] [*417] The law regarding what constitutes sufficient market power to create an illegal tie is still developing. Consistent with Jefferson Parish, both the Sixth and Seventh Circuits, however, have opined that thirty percent serves as the minimum market share from which the market power in the tying product market can be inferred. Hardy, 39 F.3d at 767; PSI Repair Servs., 104 F.3d at 815 n.2, 818. In Town Sound, the Third Circuit acknowledged the thirty percent threshold and found that Chrysler's share of 10 to 12 percent of the United States car market did not create "any genuine issue of material fact" as to its "economic power" in that market. Town Sound, 959 F.2d at 481.

II. Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment: Market Power

Defendants move for summary judgment on the ground that the plaintiffs have not presented evidence raising a question of fact that any one of the defendants had sufficient power in the market for wireless service to "force" consumers, within the meaning of the federal antitrust laws, to purchase unwanted handsets. The defendants are correct.

None of the defendants enjoys a market share that would, [**40] standing alone, permit an inference of market power to be drawn, and the plaintiffs have not shown that questions of fact exist with respect to any other issue which, when combined with a defendant's market share, would allow a finding of market power. Between 1998 and 2003, no defendant has ever possessed more than twenty-four percent of the wireless services market.<sup>20</sup> At the end of 1998, when plaintiffs allege that each of the defendants (or their predecessors) first tied their service to the purchase of handsets, the largest wireless service provider carried no more than eleven percent of subscribers. The defendants compete against each other in terms of service and price, and the high churn rate is striking evidence of their respective lack of control over the market and the impediments each of them faces to any effort to control price.

<sup>19</sup> Despite the repeated emphasis of the Jefferson Parish Court on the importance of proof of market power to a tying claim, some courts have fixated on the fact that, after finding that the defendant did not have sufficient market power to warrant application of a per se tying analysis, the Court proceeded to analyze the claim without further discussion of the defendant's market power. Having already accepted that the defendant had a 30 percent market share, 466 U.S. at 26, a number it characterized as "far from overwhelming," id., there was no obvious need for the Court to discuss the defendant's market power further. When the entire Jefferson Parish decision is read, and even more so when it is read with the other decisions that comprise the Court's tying jurisprudence, it is obvious that proof of market power remains a critical component of a tying claim.

<sup>20</sup> Defendants acknowledge that Cingular and AT&T Wireless's combined market share in 2003 was 29 percent. Cingular and AT&T Wireless did not even announce, much less complete, their merger until 2004. Given that the defendants assert that the plaintiffs' tying claims target the period 1998 through 2003, and the plaintiffs do not contest that they and their experts have relied entirely on data from this period to support their tying claims and to estimate their purported damages, it is not necessary to contemplate Cingular's post-merger market share.

[**41] The plaintiffs acknowledge that vigorous competition exists in the wireless services market and that to succeed on a tying claim that they must show that a defendant holds market power, but urge that they need make "only a minimal showing of market power," citing *Northern Pac. R. Co. v. United States*, 356 U.S. 1, 6, 7-8, 11, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545, 78 S. Ct. 514 \(1958\).<sup>21</sup> Northern Pacific provides no comfort to the plaintiffs.

[*418] In Northern Pacific, the Court upheld an injunction issued against the Northern Pacific Railway Company that barred it from enforcing or entering into preferential routing clauses. [**42] The railroad had received forty million acres of land in several northwestern states and territories to facilitate its construction of a railroad line, and had sold or leased most of this land. Most of the sales contracts and lease agreements contained a preferential routing clause that required the purchaser or lessee to ship all commodities produced or manufactured on that land over its railroad. For a large portion of these shipments there were two other major competing railroad systems. *Id. at 517*. The Court defined the illegality involved in tying as forcing buyers to forego their free choice. *Id. at 518*. It observed, "of course where the seller has no control or dominance over the tying product so that it does not represent an effectual weapon to pressure buyers into taking the tied item any restraint of trade attributable to such tying arrangements would obviously be insignificant at most." *Id. at 519*. It found that the railroad "possessed substantial economic power by virtue of its extensive land holdings which it used as leverage." Id.

Northern Pacific, which was written fifty years ago, is entirely consistent with the standards described earlier in this [*43] Opinion. As more cases have reached the appellate courts, the law regarding what constitutes "sufficient economic power to impose an appreciable restraint," *id. at 521*, has become better defined. While the precise amount remains an open question, it has become clear that possession of a 30 percent market share is the minimum sufficient by itself to confer market power. Although Northern Pacific did not undertake to define the precise market affected by the railroad's land holdings, or to compute the percentage of its holdings in that market, it nonetheless found the railroad to possess substantial power over a finite but infinitely valuable resource.

The plaintiffs next contend that market shares of less than 30 percent have been found sufficient to create market power in tying cases, citing *Rosebrough Monument Co. v. Mem. Park Cemetery Ass'n*, 666 F.2d 1130, 1143 \(8th Cir. 1981\), as finding that 22 percent was sufficient to invoke the per se rule against tying; *In re Visa Check/Mastermoney Antitrust Litig.*, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4965, 2003 WL 1712568, at \*4-5 \(E.D.N.Y. April 1, 2003\), as finding that 26 to 28 percent was sufficient to raise a triable issue on market power for a per se tying claim; and *United States v. Visa U.S.A., Inc.*, 163 F. Supp. 2d 322 at 363, [*44] as finding that a 26 percent market share established market power. As Rosebrough Monument predates Jefferson Parish, its conclusion that the defendants' combined 22 percent market share confers upon them a "unique economic advantage" has negligible force. *Rosebrough Monument*, 666 F.2d at 1143.

In addition, neither Visa Check nor Visa suggests that a 30 percent market share should not be the presumptive line for inferring market power. The Visa Check case centered on a claim by several of the nation's largest retailers that Visa and Mastercard "required stores accepting [their] credit cards to also accept their debit cards." *In re Visa Check/MasterMoney Antitrust Litig.*, 192 F.R.D. 68, 71 \(E.D.N.Y. 2000\). The Honorable John Gleeson denied the plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment on their *Section 1* per se tying claim. *Visa Check*, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4965, 2003 WL 1712568, at \*6. In doing so, Judge Gleeson observed that the tying product market could be defined "at its broadest" as the market for "general purpose credit and charge card services." *Visa Check*, 2003

<sup>21</sup> In denying the motion to dismiss the tying claim, this Court noted that the precise amount of market power necessary to prevail on a tying claim remains an open question, citing a footnote in Justice O'Connor's concurrence in Jefferson Parish in which she also described Northern Pacific as requiring "only a minimal showing of market power." *In re Wireless*, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13886, 2003 WL 21912603, at \*7.

U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4965, 2003 WL 1712568, at *3. At the same time, however, Judge [**45] Gleeson observed that the relevant evidence suggested "an even narrower product market" consisting of "general purpose credit card services alone." [*419] Id. Therefore, Judge Gleeson assessed MasterCard's share of two alternative markets: the broader market, in which MasterCard's share fluctuated between 26 to 28 percent over the relevant time period, and the more narrowly-defined market, in which it share "varied from between 33 to 36 percent." *Id. 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4965 , at JWLJ *4.*<sup>22</sup> Judge Gleeson was asked solely to decide whether those figures were sufficient to impose per se liability, and found that he could not, at that stage of the proceeding, conclude as a matter of law that "MasterCard has sufficient economic power to warrant application of the per se rule." Id. (citation omitted).

The Visa case, which does not involve a tying claim, is no more availing for the plaintiffs. In that case, [**46] the Honorable Barbara S. Jones determined that Visa and MasterCard had market power primarily on the basis of direct evidence demonstrating their "power to control prices or exclude competition" and their "ability to price discriminate." Visa, 163 F. Supp. 2d at 340 (citation omitted). Specifically, Judge Jones noted plaintiffs' evidentiary showing that they could not refuse to accept Visa and MasterCard "even in the face of significant price increases because the cards are such preferred payment methods that customers would choose not to shop at merchants who do not accept them." Id. Judge Jones further recognized that both defendants had "raised interchange rates charged to merchants" several times "without losing a single customer" and that they were able to charge "substantially different prices" to different categories of merchants because of customers' insistence on using their cards. Id. Moreover, with respect to the defendants' market share, Judge Jones found that together Visa and MasterCard controlled over 73 percent of the relevant market in terms of transactions and 85 percent in terms of cards issued, with Visa responsible for 47 percent and MasterCard [**47] responsible for 26 percent. Id. at 341. Judge Jones found that market power could be presumed in the presence of these numbers because there were "significant enough barriers to entry or expansion that the defendant can charge supracompetitive prices without loss of so many customers that the pricing becomes unprofitable." Id. The court did not assert that a 26 percent market share always equals market power but instead provided that market power may be presumed where, as in both Visa and MasterCard's cases, the firm has a "large share in a highly concentrated market with significant barriers to entry." Id. at 342.

The plaintiffs next assert that the wireless market is an oligopoly with six nationwide carriers during most of the class period, and that individual businesses in an oligopoly "may" in some circumstances have market power. The plaintiffs identify the following special circumstances as creating market power here: product differentiation, meaning the creation of products understood by consumers to be "distinct commodities;" the need to obtain FCC spectrum licensing, which presents an "absolute" barrier to new entrants into the wireless [**48] service market; and each defendant's control of its own retail handset network. The plaintiffs have not presented evidence to raise a question of fact as to whether any of these alleged factors has created market power for any one of the defendants.

If by product differentiation, the plaintiffs are referring to the efforts that each defendant has made to brand its product, then the plaintiffs have not shown as either [*420] a matter of law or fact that the creation of a brand has conferred market power on a defendant. HN14[] "A single branded product may, in rare cases, constitute its own relevant market." U.S. Anchor Mfg., Inc. v. Rule Indus., Inc., 7 F.3d 986, 998 (11th Cir. 1993) (citation omitted). "Entrenched buyer preferences for established brands" can also create significant barriers to entry. Rebel Oil Co., Inc. v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 51 F.3d 1421, 1439 (9th Cir. 1995). Yet the mere existence of a brand and brand identification in the marketplace are not synonymous with market power. See, e.g., Grappone, 858 F.2d at 797 (consumer preference for branded product alone cannot demonstrate market power). In general, where "interbrand [**49] competition exists . . . it provides a significant check on the exploitation of interbrand market power because of the ability of consumers to substitute a different brand of the same product." Cont'l T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania, Inc., 433 U.S. 36, 52 n.19, 53 L. Ed. 2d 568, 97 S. Ct. 2549.

The plaintiffs have failed to offer any evidence that branding has created market power for any of the defendants. Instead, they merely cite the testimony of defendants' expert, Jerry Hausman, who testified that products in the wireless services industry "are differentiated to some extent." The enormous amount of churn in this industry eviscerates the suggestion that consumers do not view these brands and the services underlying them as essentially interchangeable. The FCC found, in approving the Cingular/AT&T Wireless merger in 2004, that the defendants, along with non-parties that offer nationwide coverage "are all relatively close substitutes for each other in the eyes of consumers." AT&T/Cingular Order at P 147.

---

<sup>22</sup> Visa's share of the more broadly defined market was 43 to 47 percent, and was nearly 60 percent of the narrower market.

Holding an FCC license for a portion of the spectrum does not confer market power on any one of the defendants since each of them, as well as others not named here as defendants, have FCC licenses. [**50] Moreover, not only may licensees buy and sell spectrum with the FCC's consent, but to compete with the defendants, a seller of wireless services does not even need an FCC spectrum license, as the growth of the mobile virtual network operator<sup>23</sup> system has shown. As a result, no defendant is specially advantaged vis a vis its competitors in this industry because of spectrum licensing. To the extent that the plaintiffs analogize a spectrum license to a patent, that analogy is flawed. A patent confers advantages on one party vis a vis its competitors; here, each of the defendants has the same advantage of holding a spectrum license.

The fact that each defendant has or had a network of retail distributors of its service and approved telephones is not evidence of market power within the relevant market of wireless service. Since [**51] each defendant sells its service to the public in this way, no one defendant has any special advantage or power by its use of a retail network. To the extent that the plaintiffs use this factor as evidence of the anti-competitive effects of the tying practice that they assert exist within the tied market of handsets, that will be discussed below. In sum, it is unnecessary to decide if the wireless service market can be properly labeled an oligopoly.<sup>24</sup> The plaintiffs [*421] have not presented evidence to raise a question of fact that any of the features of this alleged oligopoly on which they place special emphasis has actually conferred market power on any one of the defendants.

[**52] In a related argument, the plaintiffs contend that the structure of the wireless services market, in particular the defendants' parallel actions, serves as evidence of their respective market power in the services market, citing Broadway Delivery Corp. v. United Parcel Serv. of Am., Inc., 651 F.2d 122, 129 (2d Cir. 1981). Broadway Delivery addressed the issue of market power in the context of a monopoly claim, not a tying claim. The portion of Broadway Delivery on which plaintiffs rely deals with whether a jury should have been charged that a defendant's share of less than fifty percent of a market automatically ruled out a finding of monopoly power under Section 2 of the Sherman Act. Id. at 127. Noting that HN15 market share data serves as "strong, perhaps presumptive, evidence of the presence or absence of market power," id. at 128 (citation omitted), the Broadway Delivery court nonetheless cautioned that "careful analysis" of market share, and the structure of the market, including the activities of the defendant and others within the market, was necessary to ascertain whether a defendant had monopoly power. Id. at 128-29. [**53] At no point did Broadway Delivery identify parallel actions of market participants as evidence that the defendant had market power. As already described, the structure of the wireless services market reflects intense competition with no single, dominant seller.

Turning more directly to the plaintiff's argument about parallel conduct, HN16 although liability may be imposed on the basis of conscious parallelism in certain antitrust contexts, see, e.g., Todd v. Exxon Corp., 275 F.3d 191, 199 (2d Cir. 2001) (horizontal price-fixing agreement), our Circuit's tying case law lends no support for an inference of market power to be drawn from defendants' parallel behavior. Indeed, unless the plaintiff has alleged a conspiracy, it is inappropriate to assess one defendant's market power by measuring "the cumulative power of all defendants practicing tying." 10 Philip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law P 1734e, at 49 (2d ed. 2004) [hereinafter Antitrust Law].

<sup>23</sup> A mobile virtual network operator orders handsets from a large handset manufacturer and resells network capacity leased at wholesale rates from a major wireless service provider.

<sup>24</sup> An oligopoly is defined as "control or domination of a market by a few large sellers, creating high prices and low output similar to those found in a monopoly." Black's Law Dictionary 1120 (8th ed. 2004). To the extent that the plaintiffs are using their reference to oligopoly to reposition their tying claim as a conspiracy claim, that effort fails. The plaintiffs abandoned their conspiracy claim long ago and it would prejudice the defendants at this late stage to allow a reformulation in this consolidated lawsuit of plaintiffs' legal theories.

As the Motion to Dismiss Opinion explained, having elected not to proceed on a theory of conspiracy in their Amended Complaint, the plaintiffs must demonstrate that each defendant individually has [**54] market power. In re Wireless, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13886, 2003 WL 21912603, at \*8. While the plaintiffs had originally brought a conspiracy claim in this lawsuit, they dropped that claim from their Amended Complaint. In re Wireless, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19977, 2004 WL 2244502, at \*6. The plaintiffs may not circumvent that history by framing defendants' allegedly parallel actions as evidence of their respective market power.

The plaintiffs next contend that market power exists because the defendants face a "downward sloping demand" curve, that is, that each of the defendants has the power to raise prices somewhat without losing all sales. HN17[] The test for market power is not whether a defendant can raise its prices somewhat, but whether the defendant has the power to control prices or exclude competition. See United States v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., 344 F.3d 229 at 239; CDC Techs., 186 F.3d at 81 (defining market power as "the ability to raise price significantly above the competitive level without losing all of one's business").

In a related argument, the plaintiffs assert that each of the defendants, even [*422] those with the smallest market share, has independent market power because each of them sets the price for [**55] its services above marginal cost.<sup>25</sup> While the plaintiffs assume that an estimate of marginal cost, made by an expert for the defendants<sup>26</sup> and based on operational and financial data provided by AIRtouch, applies to all defendants and at the same time overstates defendants' current marginal costs, they have offered no actual data on any one of the defendants' costs nor have they provided any expert analysis of the import of such costs to market power.<sup>27</sup> In fact, the defendants' expert, on whose estimate the plaintiffs rely for this argument, specifically testified that he did not undertake to determine the carriers' marginal costs for the purposes of this case.

[**56]

HN18[] In order to show market power from a defendant's practice of selling its products above marginal cost, a plaintiff must accurately measure price and all appropriate [**57] costs. See Menasha Corp. v. News Am. Mktg. In-Store, Inc., 354 F.3d 661, 665 \(7th Cir. 2004\) (rejecting plaintiff's claim that defendant consistently sold its product for more than marginal cost without evidence that the defendant obtained an unusually high return on capital). Moreover, the test for the existence of market power is the ability to control price or exclude competition, Visa, 344 F.3d at 239, not simply pricing a product above marginal cost when that price differential can be explained by the existence of economic realities entirely separate from the existence of market power, for instance, the presence of high fixed costs. See Eastman Kodak, 63 F.3d at 109 ("Certain deviations between marginal cost and price, such as those resulting from high fixed costs, are not evidence of market power.") Here, it is undisputed that the defendants' fixed costs include the transmission network, towers, and fiber optic cable. In such circumstances, marginal cost cannot serve as the "competitive benchmark;" rather, all market participants will price above marginal cost to cover fixed costs.

<sup>25</sup> Marginal cost is defined as "the additional cost incurred in producing one more unit of output." Black's Law Dictionary 372 (8th ed. 2004).

<sup>26</sup> In their opposition brief, the plaintiffs solely rely on testimony of defendants' expert Jerry Hausman in which he agreed that every defendant prices above marginal cost. Through their Rule 56.1 Statement, plaintiffs also note, however, that in a 2000 academic article, Hausman estimated the marginal cost of providing wireless services to be 5 cents per minute. They further note that at his deposition, Hausman acknowledged that "it's quite likely" that the marginal cost of service has declined since then.

<sup>27</sup> The plaintiffs' brief in opposition to this motion creates an argument based on the Lerner Index. Specifically, the plaintiffs note Hausman's expert report states, using data from a 2004 FCC report, that average revenue per minute, often used as a proxy for price, was 29 cents per minute in 1998 and 10 cents per minute in 2003. Using Hausman's academic estimate of marginal cost and these estimates of prices, the plaintiffs have computed a Lerner Index of .85 for 1998 and .5 for 2003. The plaintiffs, however, have presented no expert report regarding the significance of that Index in this case, and in particular its implications for a conclusion that any defendant had market power. See United States v. Eastman Kodak, 63 F.3d 95, 109 \(2d Cir. 1995\) (rejecting use of Lerner Index as a measure of market power where defendant is not the "seller of a differentiated product that sets prices independently of its rivals").

The plaintiffs contend that the existence of [**58] market power can be inferred from the fact that each defendant imposes burdensome terms on consumers, specifically, term contracts with early termination and activation fees. A defendant's use of such contracts does not create an inference supporting a finding of market power, since each of the defendants (as well as service [*423] providers who are not defendants) offer service through similar contracts.<sup>28</sup> Therefore, the use of term contracts cannot be said to exclude competition. Nor have plaintiffs alleged, much less demonstrated, that any defendant's use of term contracts, evidences an ability to control prices.

[**59] Finally, the plaintiffs contend that it is fair to infer the existence of market power from the fact that competition has been harmed in the handset market. Some courts have stated that market power may be proven through "direct evidence of anticompetitive effects. "Toys "R" Us, Inc. v. FTC, 221 F.3d 928, 937 (7th Cir. 2000)

(affirming FTC finding that company's vertical restraints violated the rule of reason under 15 U.S.C. § 5). In Toys "R" Us, the company's boycott succeeded in causing ten major toy manufacturers to reduce output of toys to warehouse clubs, which protected the company from having to lower its prices. Id. Even assuming that market power can be shown in a tying case through the inference created by providing direct evidence of anticompetitive effect, as will be discussed below, the plaintiffs have failed to provide any such direct evidence. Because the plaintiffs have been unable to show that any one of the defendants has market power in the wireless services industry, each of the defendants is entitled to summary judgment on the plaintiffs' claim that each of the defendants violated the Sherman Act by [**60] forcing consumers to purchase handsets to receive service.

II. Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment: Anticompetitive Effects

Defendants have also moved for summary judgment on the alternative ground that the plaintiffs have not shown that each defendant's alleged tying arrangements has an anticompetitive effect on the handset market. At the outset, the interrelationship between market power and anticompetitive effects merits some exposition.

Given that market power and anticompetitive effects serve as separate elements of a tying violation, courts are not always explicit about the interaction between these two concepts. Nevertheless, HN19↑ the Supreme Court has long recognized the interrelationship between market power and anticompetitive effects. Indeed, at the heart of the per se rule of tying is the intuition that where a seller has significant market power, one may "presume unreasonableness without the necessity of any analysis of the market context in which the [alleged tying] arrangement may be found." Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 9. As a consequence, where a defendant's market power is sufficiently great that its tie qualifies as a per se violation, [**61] a plaintiff is relieved of the separate burden of showing an anticompetitive effect from the tying in the tied product market. Conversely, the tying case law also reflects the understanding that where market power is not present, an alleged tying violation cannot be a threat to competition in the tied product market. As Justice O'Connor observed in her concurrence in Jefferson Parish, a "seller must have power in the tying product market. Absent such power, tying cannot conceivably have any adverse impact in the tied product market and can only be pro-competitive in the tying product market." Id. at 37 (O'Connor, J., concurring).

[*424] Even courts that have declined to demand expressly a showing of market power under the rule of reason understand the interplay between market power and anticompetitive effects. As the Third Circuit explained in Town Sound, in which the plaintiffs challenged the legality of tying autosound systems to the sale of Chrysler automobiles, even if we assumed that soon every automobile manufacturer will include an autosound system on every car, the most that we could conclude would be that a certain class of competitors (namely [**62] the autosound aftermarket dealers) might be doomed to competitive oblivion. But that would be no concern of the antitrust laws unless consumers were also hurt because of diminished competition. If the autosound aftermarket were to disappear, vigorous competition in the automobile market would remain. That competition would protect those consumers who care about autosound systems no less than it now protects consumers who care about other standard features, including the comfort of the front seats, the quality of the brakes, and the fuel efficiency of the engine.

<sup>28</sup> The defendants explain that term contracts help carriers recover customer acquisition costs and allow them to charge lower prices and to subsidize handsets in the hope that they will be able to recover the investment. There is no need to address the merits of this argument since the plaintiffs have failed to raise a question of fact that term contracts either create or reflect market power by any one defendant.

Town Sound, 959 F.2d at 494 n.40 (citation omitted). Put another way, the Town Sound court understood that in a tying product market characterized by competition, even if all market participants engage in packaged sales, such conduct cannot have actual anticompetitive effects in the tied product market. Thus, having been unable to show that any of the defendants has market power, it is not surprising that plaintiffs are also unable to show that the tying practice in which each defendant is alleged to have engaged has resulted in any anticompetitive effects in the handset market.

HN20 To demonstrate [**63] anticompetitive effects, a plaintiff must demonstrate that the tie "as it actually operates in the market" harmed competition in the tied product market. Jefferson Parish, 466 U.S. at 29. For a tie to create an anticompetitive effect there must be "a substantial threat that the tying seller will acquire market power in the tied product market. No such threat exists if the tied product market is occupied by many stable sellers who are not likely to be driven out by tying, or if entry barriers in the tied product market are low." Id. at 38 (O'Connor, J., concurring). "Speculation about anticompetitive effects is not enough." Roy B. Taylor Sales, Inc. v. Hollymatic Corp., 28 F.3d 1379, 1385 (5th Cir. 1994). At no time may "expert testimony rooted in hypothetical assumptions . . . substitute for actual market data." Virgin Airways, 257 F.3d at 264.

In their complaint, the plaintiffs allege that the defendants' alleged tying arrangements have driven numerous handset manufacturers from the market, have deterred entry into the handset market, and have had deleterious effects on the development of handset technology. In re Wireless, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13886, 2003 WL 21912603, ¶**641 at *9. The plaintiffs have not offered sufficient evidence from which a jury could find that any one of those phenomena has occurred.

The plaintiffs first contend in opposition to this motion that each defendant has foreclosed manufacturers from entering the handset market by leveraging "its control of its spectrum licenses and its wireless network to exercise gatekeeping control over a significant portion of the retail market for handsets." Ordinarily, if one were making a foreclosure argument, one would expect the plaintiffs to present a detailed picture of the history of the handset market in the United States, with the number of manufacturers in the market each year, and evidence of failed efforts to enter.<sup>29</sup> The plaintiffs have not done so, [*425] opting instead to rely entirely on sweeping generalizations and vague opinions rather than facts. For instance, citing the testimony of Kyocera's representative, who estimated that there are "somewhere between 50 and 100 manufacturers in the wireless handset space" worldwide, but that most of the defendants only "do business"<sup>30</sup> with between three to six manufacturers, the <sup>29</sup> The plaintiffs have devoted some attention to creating a historical picture of the handset market. For instance, to demonstrate how the handset market has changed since the evolution of digital service, the plaintiffs cite the testimony of Peter Skarzynski, a former employee of AT&T Wireless's consumer products division. According to Skarzynski, during his 1994 through 1997 tenure at AT&T, the consumer products division not only sold handsets to retailers such as Sears and Best Buy "without the involvement of the carrier," but such handsets "could be purchased by consumers and then activated with the service of a carrier of the consumer's choice." In a similar vein, the plaintiffs rely on the testimony of their expert, Robert Zicker, who stated that during the analog age, "the technologies were all compatible and an attempt to limit [a consumer's] source of handsets wouldn't be too effective" as the retailers had "a multitude of different places they could buy handsets from." Yet without any showing that manufacturers were precluded from the U.S. handset market as of the time that the defendants' alleged tying practices were imposed or since, such historical reflection has little relevance.

<sup>30</sup> While the plaintiffs repeatedly argue that a manufacturer must have a "business relationship" with a carrier in order to sell handsets in the U.S., they have failed to define precisely what such a business relationship entails. In some instances, the plaintiffs' conception of "doing business" seems to mean a carrier's purchasing a certain manufacturer's handsets. At other times, however, the plaintiffs suggest that a manufacturer's doing business with a carrier involves "working with carriers to put out a product that matches their requirements." At no point have the plaintiffs explicitly argued, much less proven, that any plaintiffs contend that the number of handset manufacturers operating [**65] in the United States is controlled and limited as a function of defendants' conduct. Yet Kyocera's representative also testified that a number of new manufacturers are entering the U.S. handset market not by selling to the carriers, but instead by selling through a distributor or by developing, manufacturing, and then selling its products "to somebody like Audiovox or Motorola or Nokia or Kyocera Wireless," which then sells the product under its own brand name. Rather than discouraging manufacturers to enter the handset market, Kyocera's representative further testified that where a new entrant has developed an interesting product, a wireless service provider may encourage it to "find one of [its] existing suppliers" to get the product on the market.

[**66]

The plaintiffs also cite the expert report of Nicholas Economides, an economics professor at New York University's Stern School of Business, who asserts that the carriers "require that all handset sales flow through the carrier's distribution system if they are to be used in the carrier's network, [**67]" and that "the manufacturers' only customers are the carriers." Economides's support for this argument, however, derives solely from the testimony of LG's representative, who confirmed that "all of LG's sales of GSM handsets in the United States are funneled through GSM carriers;"<sup>31</sup> from the testimony of Kyocera's representative, who credited the carriers with "putting our product out there;" and from that of a Samsung representative, who explained that Samsung had a commercial arrangement with a U.S. carrier [*426] before making any handset sales in the U.S. market and that he "didn't really know of any manufacturer who doesn't sell through carriers today." Such testimony hardly establishes, as Economides contends, that all handset sales flow through carriers' distribution systems.

[**68] Yet even if the plaintiffs could establish that all handset sales flow through the carriers' distribution systems,<sup>32</sup> the fact that the defendants are not handset manufacturers themselves but instead purchase handsets from others has "ameliorating implications." 10 Antitrust Law P1727e, at 310. As Professors Areeda and Hovenkamp have explained, using the example of an oil refiner that purchases tires and then resells them to its dealers, "the refiner who buys tires cannot acquire power for itself in the market for manufacturing tires. While the tie forecloses tire makers from selling to defendant's dealers, tire makers can compete as vigorously as ever in seeking the defendant's patronage." Id. So too can manufacturers compete vigorously in the U.S. handset market for the patronage of the carriers, even if the plaintiffs were able to show that the carriers' conduct prevents manufacturers from selling directly to retailers or other distributors.

[**69] More significantly, even if the plaintiffs could show that no manufacturer in the U.S. handset market has made direct-to-consumer sales since 1999, such evidence in or itself does not demonstrate that any manufacturer has been precluded from gaining entry to the handset market or that consumers have been adversely affected. See S. Card & Novelty, Inc. v. Lawson Mardon Label, Inc., 138 F.3d 869, 877 (11th Cir. 1998). Most manufacturers of consumer products, such as those sold in grocery, drug, or department stores, choose to sell their products through distribution channels. Handset manufacturers are no different. As LG's representative testified, while LG has never sold handsets directly to consumers either before or after 1998, "there's nothing that would stop" it from selling handsets directly to consumers in the United States. Rather, after considering the "resources and infrastructure" a direct sales-based business model would require, LG simply "chose[] not to support any type of [direct] handset sales." To find that such a choice is not a choice at all but instead proves an anticompetitive impact defies logic.

defendant's control over which handsets will be approved for use with its respective network has actually foreclosed manufacturers from the market for handset sales in the U.S.

<sup>31</sup> The same LG representative also testified that LG's entry into the market was "tough but not impossible" and that the packaged sales of handsets and service "helps," rather than hinders, LG's business because "you can't run the product without service. It has to run on a network."

<sup>32</sup> There is evidence that directly contradicts the plaintiffs' contention that all handset sales flow through the carriers' distribution system. For example, some manufacturers, such as Kyocera, do directly sell handsets through their website and are "more than happy to sell the phone without a [service] plan."

The plaintiffs' reliance on the April 16, 2002 edition [**70] of The Yankee Group Research Notes, a telecommunications-related publication to which defendants' expert Keith Mallinson contributed, is equally unavailing. According to the plaintiffs, Mallinson's piece, entitled "Mobile Phone Manufacturers Develop Brand and Diversify Distribution," establishes the gatekeeping role played by each defendant with respect to handset distribution. The plaintiffs have selectively quoted from this article. While Mallinson described the U.S. market for handsets as characterized by "carrier dominated distribution," he also argued that the emergence of CDMA and GSM as the dominant technologies increased manufacturers' market power vis a vis carriers and that handset vendors should "leverage their brands by reaching out directly to consumers" and "by partnering with third-party distributors." Even if, as Mallinson explained, "alternative channels [of distribution] are unlikely to take the lead in the United States," if manufacturers were truly being "held hostage" [*427] by the carriers, as the plaintiffs argue, such alternatives would not even be feasible.

The plaintiffs next argue that defendants' tying practices have resulted in increased handset prices. [**71] To support this contention, plaintiffs rely solely on Economides's report, which features a regression analysis that purports to show that the defendants' tying and locking of handsets inflated the average wholesale price of handsets between 1999 through 2003 relative to that of other, comparable consumer electronic goods.<sup>33</sup> The defendants have moved, pursuant to Rules 401, 402, and 702, Fed. R. Evid., for an order in limine to exclude Economides's report as unreliable. The defendants argue, inter alia, that Economides's report must be excluded because in conducting his regression analysis, he failed to consider or test for any alternative explanations for the inflation in handset prices. The defendants further argue that Economides's regression analysis, as well as his report as a whole, fails to address the effects of each defendant's alleged tying arrangements and instead impermissibly measures the aggregate effects of the defendants' practices.

[**72] HN21 [↑] Rule 702 of the Federal Rules of Evidence provides that expert testimony concerning technical or specialized knowledge is admissible to assist the trier of fact if "(1) the testimony is based upon sufficient facts or data, (2) the testimony is the product of reliable principles and methods, and (3) the witness has applied the principles and methods reliably to the facts of the case." Rule 702, Fed. R. Evid. HN22 [↑] A court has an obligation to act as a gatekeeper to ensure the "reliability and relevancy of expert testimony" presented to a jury. Kumho Tire Co. v. Carmichael, 526 U.S. 137, 152, 143 L. Ed. 2d 238, 119 S. Ct. 1167 (1999); see also Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, 509 U.S. 579, 594-95, 125 L. Ed. 2d 469, 113 S. Ct. 2786 (1993) (overarching subject of inquiry under Rule 702 is the scientific validity and thus the evidentiary relevance and reliability of the principles that underlie a proposed submission). Specifically, the court must determine that an expert "employs in the courtroom the same level of intellectual rigor that characterizes the practice of an expert in the relevant field." Kumho, 526 U.S. at 152. [**73]

HN23 [↑] Where an expert conducts a regression analysis and fails to incorporate major independent variables, such analysis may be excluded as irrelevant. In Bickerstaff, the Second Circuit affirmed a district court's exclusion of the Title VII plaintiff's expert's multiple regression analysis, which controlled for experience, rank, productivity, and discipline to conclude that a salary variance was attributable to discrimination, but did not control for such "nondiscriminatory causes" as teaching and service. Bickerstaff, 196 F.3d at 448-49. While noting that in general, an expert's "failure to include variables will affect the analysis' probativeness, not its admissibility," the Bickerstaff court determined that the analysis at issue was "so incomplete as to be inadmissible as irrelevant." Id. at 449 (citation omitted).

The defendants are correct that Economides's regression analysis is methodologically unsound and therefore may not be admitted pursuant to Rule 702. In performing his regression analysis, Economides used United States International [*428] Trade Commission ("USITC") data on the declared value of imported handsets as a measure of the average wholesale [**74] price of handsets in the U.S. and then performed linear regressions of this data on each of three Bureau of Labor Statistics (BLS) indices concerning other electronic devices, such as computers and electronic equipment, or component parts of handsets, such as semiconductors. At no point, however, did Economides introduce any independent variables into his analysis of the inflation of handset prices vis a vis the prices he predicted using the above-referenced BLS indices. In fact, Economides even testified that he "could not think of another explanation" for the inflation of handset prices other than the defendants' alleged tying and locking practices, which in turn allowed the carriers to impose what he characterized as "unwanted features" on consumers, a characterization on which he did not elaborate.

---

<sup>33</sup> Multiple regression analysis is a commonly accepted statistical tool used to examine "the effect of independent variables on a dependent variable." Bickerstaff v. Vassar Coll., 196 F.3d 435, 448 (2d Cir. 1999). The parties do not dispute that the retail and wholesale prices for digital handsets have declined annually since the year 2000. The plaintiffs argue, however, that the decline would have been greater but for tying.

The defendants point to two major developments that could potentially explain why the average wholesale price for wireless handsets exceed those for comparable consumer electronic products and/or their component parts: the shift from analog to digital technology and the related advances in handset features, including caller ID, email, and web browsers; and post-1999 improvements [**75] in handset quality, such as reduced size and weight, longer battery life, and greater spectral efficiency. Economides's failure to test for these obvious and significant alternative explanations renders Economides's analysis "essentially worthless." Tagatz v. Marquette Univ., 861 F.2d 1040, 1045 \(7th Cir. 1988\) (rejecting study that failed to control for variables for which one can control).

In addition, in his report, Economides explicitly states that his aim in performing his regression analysis was to determine "the effect, if any, of the tying and locking of handsets and services on the price for handsets sold in the United States." His resulting failure to consider "the varying business practices, and business results" of each defendant further strips his regression analysis of reliability, particularly given that the plaintiffs must prove that "each defendant's market power and tying arrangement had an anticompetitive impact on the handset market." In re Wireless, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13886, 2003 WL 21912603, at \*8. As a result, the regression analysis and the related portions of Economides's report must be excluded.

The plaintiffs do not defend the admissibility of Economides' [**76] analysis except to argue that the analysis should be admissible on the issue of damages, where they contend there is no legal requirement "to isolate and separately quantify" damages attributable to the various effects of defendants' alleged tying arrangements and contend.<sup>34</sup> Relying on New York v. Julius Nasso Concrete Corp., 202 F.3d 82 \(2d Cir. 2000\), they argue that in order to prove damages in an antitrust action, a plaintiff need only show "some relevant data from which the district court can make a reasonable estimated calculation of the harm suffered." Id. at 89. The Nasso case involved a claim of antitrust conspiracy and recognized that in such circumstances, there may be "a dearth of market information unaffected by the collusive action of the defendants." Id. at 88 (citation omitted). It is unnecessary to decide whether the Economides study would be admissible in proving damages in the con [*429] text of a conspiracy claim. It is inadmissible to prove the supposed anticompetitive effect from any one defendant's alleged tying practice.

[**77] Besides lack of proof, the plaintiffs' contention that the defendants' distribution practices have worked to inflate handset prices faces another insurmountable hurdle: it makes no economic sense. Since the defendants do not manufacture handsets, and compete with each other through offering handsets with service, it is against each defendant's self-interest to discourage competition among handset manufacturers and thereby to allow handset manufacturers to enrich themselves at a defendant's expense.

Lastly, the plaintiffs claim that defendants' alleged tying arrangements have distorted the development of handset technology by stifling some innovations while needlessly imposing others on consumers. On one hand, plaintiffs argue that as the "gatekeepers" of the handset market, defendants have impeded the development or incorporation of certain handset features, such as multi-carrier functionality, multiple SIM slots,<sup>35</sup> and Bluetooth technology.<sup>36</sup>

<sup>34</sup> Through a letter of May 31, 2005, the plaintiffs requested leave to file a sur-reply to the defendants' motion to exclude Economides's report, inter alia, on the ground that the defendants' reply "presented new arguments that plaintiffs have not had a fair opportunity to respond to." Because no arguments raised for the first time in defendants' reply have been relied upon with respect to the admissibility of Economides's regression analysis, the request to file a sur-reply is denied.

<sup>35</sup> A handset with multiple SIM slots would allow a consumer to switch between carriers.

On the other hand, they contend that the defendants have blocked efforts by manufacturers to offer consumers simpler handset models. The plaintiffs have offered no admissible evidence on the first point,<sup>37</sup> and limited, insufficient evidence [**78] on the latter.

The plaintiffs principally rely on two documents from one defendant, AT&T Wireless, regarding the alleged failure to offer basic handsets. In one undated document, AT&T Wireless observed that a more simplistic handset model "drives down costs," "provides higher battery life" and is "less likely to have performance problems resulting in fewer warranty return issues." These observations prove nothing with respect to whether AT&T's [**79] alleged tying arrangement has anticompetitive effects on the handset market. In the second document, dated February 17, 2004, AT&T Wireless comments that approving very basic handset models for use on its network may prevent it from driving technological innovations in handsets and may enable manufacturers to offer "features that enhance their brand yet may be detrimental to the carrier's revenue strategy." These two documents, taken together, do not create a question of fact as to whether AT&T has actually acted to stop manufacturers from offering simpler models or alternatives to consumers, or more to the point, stifled competition in the handset market. Given the competition within the wireless market, and AT&T's lack of market power, AT&T would not, of course, have the ability to do so unilaterally. In any event, the issue is not whether a defendant has impaired the distribution of a particular kind of product with its own service but whether it has impaired competition among handset manufacturers and within the handset market. These documents do not speak to that.

With respect to their argument that the defendants have "forced" certain handset features on "consumers who have [**80] no use for them," the plaintiffs first contend that [**430] there is no consumer demand for handset locks, citing Economides's report for the proposition that "since handset locks have negative value to the customer, there is no consumer demand for such a feature." In coming to this conclusion, Economides relied on three documents, which explain that the purpose of the locks is to control churn.<sup>38</sup>

The allegation that each of the defendants locks handsets sold for use on its respective network is perhaps the heart of the plaintiffs' case. [**81] The plaintiffs' principal concern is that the locks impede consumers from switching readily between carriers.<sup>39</sup> Of course, the defendants have utilized other practices to prevent churn too, such as one-year service contracts. As the statistics compiled by the FCC show, whatever attempts the defendants have made to address churn, those efforts have been to a significant degree futile. Moreover, the defendants' subsidization of handset costs, which they use to lure new customers, undercuts the degree to which a locking mechanism will dissuade a consumer from switching service providers.<sup>40</sup> In any event, and to reiterate, to show

<sup>36</sup> The plaintiffs define Bluetooth technology as "short-range wireless computer connectivity."

<sup>37</sup> The plaintiffs' attempt to demonstrate, through Economides's rebuttal report's citation to a January 2005 Wall Street Journal article, that Verizon Wireless has suppressed the introduction of Bluetooth technology, fails as well. Even assuming that the article were admissible, the plaintiffs have not shown that such conduct by Verizon impacted the handset market as a whole.

<sup>38</sup> The first, from June 1995, contains an AirTouch employee's analysis that handset locks "allow[] a carrier to control churn." The second, an undated AT&T Wireless document, similarly explains that AT&T locks handsets to "make[] it costly for the subscriber to switch to another carrier." The third document, a February 19, 2004 AT&T Wireless analysis, determines that if customers could obtain unlocked handsets, they "could replace the carrier without investment in a new device."

<sup>39</sup> The plaintiffs alternately argue that the defendants' tying arrangements allow them to lock handsets and that handset locks serve, by inhibiting the availability of unlocked handsets, to "reinforce the tie." For the reasons discussed above, the plaintiffs have not shown that a triable issue of fact exists as to whether handset locking creates an anticompetitive effect. The plaintiffs' second argument, that the defendants enforce their respective tying arrangements by locking handsets, reveals the fundamental deficiency of their tying claim. A defendant with market power in the tying product market needs no other aid to implement a tying arrangement successfully; rather, by virtue of its control over the tying product market, it is able to diminish competition in the tied product market and force consumers to accept a tying arrangement they would otherwise resist. The plaintiffs' argument, through their expert Robert Zicker, that the defendants were not successful in tying until locking was available underscores this basic point.

<sup>40</sup> As a matter of logic, the need for consumers to buy new handsets when they switch plans should increase competition in the handset market. Defendants contend and plaintiffs do not disagree that the defendants use their offers of handsets at the lowest anticompetitive effects in the handset market from a defendant's practice of tying the sale of service to the purchase of a locked handset, the plaintiffs must show that an individual defendant's practice has injured a company competing in the handset market, created barriers to entry into that market, or otherwise injured competition in the tied product market. They have not done so.

[**82]

Finally, the plaintiffs argue that by virtue of their tying arrangements, the carriers have forced consumers to purchase handsets with data features, such as Internet browsers. For this proposition, the plaintiffs first cite two AT&T Wireless documents, one from February 2004 that states that it "allows only data-capable devices" and another, undated document that includes an XHTML browser among AT&T Wireless's "unique specifications" for handsets. The plaintiffs then contrast this information with a December 2003 report by Forrester Research that asserts that [*431] only 9 percent of wireless [**83] users report using a "branded data service" and declares that "price remains the most important purchase influencer for mobile subscribers, while new handset features and operator services generally leave users cold."

Even assuming that plaintiffs could show with admissible evidence that consumers as a whole do not want to purchase handsets with data features, the plaintiffs' focus on these features as evidence of "reduced consumer choice adversely affecting the qualities of handsets available in the marketplace" is misguided. The plaintiffs have offered no legal support for the proposition that too much product innovation, as opposed to diminished quality, can show the actual adverse effect on competition needed to prevail under a rule of reason analysis. Just as significantly, the plaintiffs have presented no evidence as to how the inclusion of these features has created barriers to competition among handset manufacturers or in the handset market. For all of these reasons, defendants are also entitled to summary judgment on the plaintiffs' contention that each defendant's alleged tying arrangement has had an anticompetitive effect on the market for handsets in the United States.

[**84] Conclusion

For the reasons stated above, the defendants' motion for summary judgment is granted. The Clerk of Court shall close the following cases: 02 Civ. 2637 (DLC), 03 Civ. 1712 (DLC), 03 Civ. 1713 (DLC), 03 Civ. 1714 (DLC), and 03 Civ. 1715 (DLC).<sup>41</sup>

SO ORDERED:

Dated: New York, New York

September 2, 2005

DENISE COTE

United States District Judge

---

End of Document

---

possible prices to compete with each other. The increased sales of handsets that result from this practice and the incentive to use handset innovations as a draw to bring new customers to a new service provider foster competition in the tied product market.

<sup>41</sup> The parties have been ordered to file in the public record the bulk of their motion papers, which they initially filed under seal. The Court retains jurisdiction over that unsealing process.

Ariz. Cartridge Remanufacturers Ass'n v. Lexmark Int'l, Inc.

United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

March 17, 2005, Argued and Submitted, San Francisco, California ; August 30, 2005, Filed

No. 03-16987

Reporter

421 F.3d 981 *; 2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 18753 **; 77 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1995 ***

ARIZONA CARTRIDGE REMANUFACTURERS ASSOCIATION INC., an Arizona not-for-profit corporation, individually, and on behalf of its members and the general public, Plaintiff-Appellant, v. LEXMARK INTERNATIONAL INC., a Delaware corporation, Defendant-Appellee.

Prior History: [\[\*\*1\]](#) Appeal from the United States District Court for the Northern District of California. D.C. No. CV-01-04626-SBA/JL. Saundra B. Armstrong, District Judge, Presiding.

Ariz. Cartridge Remanufacturers Ass'n v. Lexmark Int'l, Inc., 290 F. Supp. 2d 1034, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20668 \(N.D. Cal., 2003\)

Core Terms

---

cartridge, consumers, patent, advertising, misleading, district court, remanufacturing, discount, unfair competition, post-sale, lock-out, package, printer, empty, deceptive, wholesalers, regular, unfair, terms, business practice, restrictions, purchasers, opening, percent, notice, reuse

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

HN1 Appellate Review, Standards of Review

The appellate court review the district court's grant of summary judgment de novo. The appellate court must determine, by viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party, whether there are any genuine issues of material fact and whether the district court correctly applied the relevant substantive law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > General Overview

Torts > ... > Proof > Custom > Business Customs

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > General Overview

421 F.3d 981, *981LÁ2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 18753, **1LÁ7 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1995, ***1995

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > False Advertising > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > False Advertising > State Regulation

**HN2** Consumer Protection, Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices

Two California laws provide broad consumer protection for misleading and unfair practices by businesses. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17500 makes it unlawful for a business to disseminate any statement which is untrue or misleading, and which is known, or which by the exercise of reasonable care should be known, to be untrue or misleading. In turn, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq., prohibits any unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business act or practice and unfair, deceptive, untrue or misleading advertising and any act prohibited by Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17500.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > False Advertising > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Injunctions > Grounds for Injunctions > General Overview

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > General Overview

**HN3** Consumer Protection, False Advertising

To state a cause of action under Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17500 for injunctive relief requires a showing that members of the public are likely to be deceived, but does not call for a showing of actual deception or confusion caused by misleading statements. The law encompasses not just false statements but those statements which may be accurate on some level, but will nonetheless tend to mislead or deceive. A perfectly true statement couched in such a manner that it is likely to mislead or deceive the consumer, such as by failure to disclose other relevant information, is actionable under these sections. The plaintiff has the burden of proving that the challenged advertising is false or misleading to a reasonable consumer.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > False Advertising > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Advertising > Elements of False Advertising

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Advertising > General Overview

**HN4** Consumer Protection, False Advertising

"Unfair competition" under Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 means conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition. Section 17200 is not limited to anticompetitive business practices targeted at rivals, but is equally directed toward the right of the public to protection from fraud and deceit, and permits courts to enjoin ongoing wrongful business conduct in whatever context such activity might occur. A violation of the false advertising law automatically gives rise to a violation of the unfair competition provision.

421 F.3d 981, *981LÁ2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 18753, **1LÁ7 U.S.P.Q.2D (BNA) 1995, ***1995

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Ownership & Transfer of Rights > General Overview

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Covenants not to Compete > Enforcement

Patent Law > Remedies > Equitable Relief > Injunctions

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Covenants not to Compete > General Overview

HN5 [down] Intellectual Property, Ownership & Transfer of Rights

A restriction on a patented good is permissible as long as it is found to be reasonably within the patent grant, i.e., that it relates to subject matter within the scope of the patent claims. A condition is impermissible where the patentee has ventured beyond the patent grant and into behavior having an anticompetitive effect not justifiable under the rule of reason.

Commercial Law (UCC) > ... > Subject Matter > Goods > General Overview

Commercial Law (UCC) > Sales (Article 2) > General Overview

Commercial Law (UCC) > Sales (Article 2) > Form, Formation & Readjustment > General Overview

Commercial Law (UCC) > Sales (Article 2) > Subject Matter > General Overview

HN6 [down] Subject Matter, Goods

See Cal. Com. Code § 2204\(1\).

Commercial Law (UCC) > Sales (Article 2) > Form, Formation & Readjustment > General Overview

HN7 [down] Sales (Article 2), Form, Formation & Readjustment

See Cal. Com. Code § 2204\(2\).

Contracts Law > Breach > Breach of Contract Actions > General Overview

HN8 [down] Breach, Breach of Contract Actions

Under California law, one may not sue upon a contract unless he is a party to that contract.

Counsel: Ronald S. Katz, Eugene L. Hahm, Manatt, Phelps & Phillips, LLP, for the plaintiff-appellant.

J. Thomas Rosch, James L. Day, Richard B. Ulmer Jr., Latham & Watkins, for the defendant-appellee.

Judges: Before: Sidney R. Thomas and Raymond C. Fisher, Circuit Judges, and James L. Robart, District Judge. *

Opinion by: Raymond C. Fisher

---

* The Honorable James L. Robart, United States District Judge for the Western District of Washington, sitting by designation.

Opinion

---

[***1995] [*983] FISHER, Circuit Judge:

Appellant Arizona Cartridge Remanufacturers Association ("ACRA"), an association of wholesalers that sell remanufactured printer cartridges, appeals the grant of summary judgment to cartridge-maker Lexmark on claims that Lexmark engaged in deceptive and unfair [***1996] business practices in violation of California law. The dispute arises from Lexmark's advertising of its "Prebate" program, under which it gives purchasers an up-front discount in exchange for their agreement to return the empty cartridge to Lexmark for remanufacturing -- a [**2] form of post-sale restriction on reuse. ACRA claims that Lexmark's advertising and promotional materials mislead customers into thinking the post-sale restriction is enforceable and that they actually receive a discounted price for the special cartridges. We agree with the district court that ACRA has not offered evidence that Lexmark's advertisements constitute deceptive or unfair business practices and affirm the grant of summary judgment in favor of Lexmark.

I.

Lexmark, spun off from IBM in 1991, makes and sells laser printers and toner (printer) cartridges. ACRA represents wholesalers that remanufacture emptied Lexmark printer cartridges for reuse. Before 1997, Lexmark did not compete against ACRA's members because it sold only new replacement printer cartridges. In 1997, however, Lexmark began to remanufacture its own cartridges and launched an aggressive new strategy to improve its position in the market for remanufacturing the used cartridges. Most notably, the company introduced its "Prebate" program -- a play on the word "rebate" -- which gives consumers an upfront discount on printer cartridges. The Prebate cartridges cost consumers on average 30 dollars (or 20 percent) [**3] less than a regular cartridge. In return, Lexmark requires the consumer to return the depleted cartridge to Lexmark or its agent.

The Prebate cartridge package sets forth the following license agreement on the outside of the package:

RETURN EMPTY CARTRIDGE TO LEXMARK FOR REMANUFACTURING AND RECYCLING

Please read before opening. Opening of this package or using the patented cartridge inside confirms your acceptance of the following license agreement. The patented cartridge is sold at a special price subject to a restriction that it may be used only once. Following this initial use, you agree to return the empty cartridge [*984] only to Lexmark for remanufacturing and recycling. If you don't accept these terms, return the unopened package to your point of purchase. A regular price cartridge without these terms is available <sup>1</sup> [**4] Consumers can opt to buy Lexmark cartridges without the Prebate post-sale restriction, but at the higher price. <sup>2</sup>

Lexmark asserts that it devised the Prebate program to boost its competitive position in the remanufacturing market, to preserve the quality of the product offered consumers and to be environmentally conscious by recycling used cartridges. Lexmark advertises the program in packaging, media and on the company's Web site. Id. It pays a fee to authorized resellers who collect and return empty cartridges.

---

<sup>1</sup> The packaging when the Prebate program was launched in 1997 contained slightly different language:

IMPORTANT! READ BEFORE OPENING. Opening this package or using the cartridge inside confirms your acceptance to the following license agreement. License Agreement: Patent cartridge inside sold subject to Single Use Only restriction. It is a violation of this agreement and/or it is unlawful to resell, reuse, refill or remanufacture. If you don't agree, return unopened package to point of purchase.

<sup>2</sup> According to Lexmark, its post-sale restriction on reusing the Prebate cartridges does not require consumers to return the cartridge at all; it only precludes giving the cartridge to another remanufacturer. The plain language of the contract does not clearly reflect this position. However, the distinction drawn by Lexmark is unnecessary to our resolution of the present case, which is not a direct challenge to the terms of the contract itself.

The program has been successful. The company estimates that 50 percent of the cartridges sold are returned as empty cartridges to Lexmark, and cartridge returns have increased by 300 percent since the implementation of the Prebate program. Additionally, [**5] from 1997 to 2001, Lexmark's cartridge sales in the United States increased by nearly 100 percent and its sale of printers that use Prebate cartridges increased by 60 percent.

ACRA filed this diversity action against Lexmark in federal district court, alleging that several of the company's statements regarding the terms and benefits associated with purchasing a Prebate cartridge are false and violate California's unfair competition laws. Most important for purposes of this appeal, ACRA argued that Lexmark deceptively suggests that the conditions placed on the outside of the Prebate package create an enforceable [***1997] agreement with consumers to return used cartridges. ACRA also contended that Lexmark misleads consumers by falsely promising that they will save money when purchasing Prebate cartridges, when in fact Lexmark cannot control the price charged by retailers. Finally, ACRA's complaint challenged Lexmark's use of a so-called "lock-out" chip as an unfair business practice.<sup>3</sup>

[**6] The district court concluded that Lexmark's Prebate program advertising is not deceptively false. Arizona Cartridge Remanufacturers Ass'n, Inc. v. Lexmark Int'l, Inc., 290 F. Supp. 2d 1034, 1049 \(N.D. Cal. 2003\). It found that the company could legally enforce the post-sale restriction under a Federal Circuit decision allowing patent holders to limit the use of their products after sale. Id. at 1042-45 (citing Mallinckrodt, Inc. v. Medipart, Inc., 976 F.2d 700, 708 \(Fed. Cir. 1992\)). The court further found that Lexmark's restriction created a valid agreement with consumers and that Lexmark's claim of discount pricing accurately reflects its sales practice. Id. at 1045-46. It also found that ACRA failed to establish that Lexmark's use of the lock-out chip amounts to unfair competition. Id. at 1049-50.

II.

HN1[↑] We review the district court's grant of summary judgment de novo. Delta Sav. Bank v. United States, 265 F.3d 1017, 1021 \(9th Cir. 2001\). We must determine, by "viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party, whether there are any genuine issues of material fact and whether [**7] the district court correctly applied the relevant substantive law." Id.

III.

Although this case involves our consideration of important questions of patent and contract law, at its core the dispute between Lexmark and ACRA reduces to state claims of unfair competition and misleading business practices related to Lexmark's advertising. The key issue here is whether Lexmark misleads consumers and engages in unfair competition when it advertises cartridges for sale at a reduced price but with restrictions on their use. ACRA sues under HN2[↑] two California laws that provide broad consumer protection for misleading and unfair practices by businesses. California Business and Professions Code § 17500 makes it unlawful for a business to disseminate any statement "which is untrue or misleading, and which is known, or which by the exercise of reasonable care should be known, to be untrue or misleading. . . ." In turn, California Business and Professions Code § 17200, et seq., prohibits "any unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business act or practice and unfair, deceptive, untrue or misleading advertising and any act prohibited by" § 17500.<sup>4</sup> HN3[↑] To state a cause of action

<sup>3</sup> The Sixth Circuit described the chip's functioning as a "secret handshake" between the printer and the chip in each cartridge. Lexmark Int'l v. Static Control, 387 F.3d 522, 530 \(6th Cir. 2004\) (addressing copyright infringement action against rival chip maker). "If the two values do not match each other, the printer returns an error message and will not operate, blocking consumers from using toner cartridges that Lexmark has not authorized." Id.

<sup>4</sup> California's Proposition 64, passed in November 2004, amended the statute to prohibit unaffected plaintiffs from bringing suit on behalf of the general public. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17204. Under this change, ACRA may lack standing to assert that Lexmark is deceiving consumers or engaging in unfair competitive practices that harm consumers. However, California courts are split on whether this requirement applies retroactively to cases that have not been fully adjudicated. Compare Bivens v. Corel Corp., 126 Cal. App. 4th 1392, 24 Cal.Rptr. 3d 847 \(Cal. Ct. App. 2005\) (finding plaintiff lacked standing because it was not affected), review granted, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 3, 110 P.3d 1218 (Cal. 2005), with Californians for Disability Rights v. Mervyn's, under § 17500 for injunctive relief requires a showing that members of the public are likely to be deceived, but does not call for a showing of "actual deception or confusion caused by misleading statements." Day v. AT & T Corp., 63 Cal. App. 4th 325, 74 Cal.Rptr.2d 55, 59 \(Cal. Ct. App. 1998\). The law encompasses not just false statements but those statements "which may be accurate on some level, but will nonetheless tend to mislead or deceive. . . . A perfectly true statement couched in such a manner that it is likely to mislead or deceive the consumer, such as by failure to disclose other relevant information, is actionable under these sections." Id. at 60. The plaintiff has the burden of proving that the challenged advertising is false or misleading to a reasonable consumer. [Nat'l Council Against \[\*\*986\] Health Fraud, Inc. v. King Bio \[\*\*\*1998\] Pharm., Inc., 107 Cal. App. 4th 1336, 133 Cal.Rptr.2d 207, 214 \(Cal. Ct. App. 2003\)](#).

[**9] HN4↑ "Unfair competition" under § 17200 "means conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition." Cel-Tech Communications, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Tel. Co., 20 Cal. 4th 163, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527, 544 \(Cal. 1999\). Section 17200 is not limited to anticompetitive business practices targeted at rivals, "but is equally directed toward the right of the public to protection from fraud and deceit," Comm. On Children's Television, Inc. v. Gen. Foods Corp., 35 Cal. 3d 197, 673 P.2d 660, 667, 197 Cal. Rptr. 783 \(Cal. 1983\) (internal quotation marks and emphasis omitted) (quoting Barquis v. Merchants Collection Ass'n, 7 Cal. 3d 94, 496 P.2d 817, 828, 101 Cal. Rptr. 745 \(Cal. 1972\)), and permits "courts to enjoin ongoing wrongful business conduct in whatever context such activity might occur," id. A violation of the false advertising law automatically gives rise to a violation of the unfair competition provision. Id. at 668.

ACRA argues [**10] that specific statements made by Lexmark in conjunction with its Prebate program -- offering cheaper cartridges that come with restrictions on their reuse -- violate §§ 17200 and 17500. We address these allegedly offending statements -- the focus of ACRA's appeal -- in turn.

A. Enforceability of Post-Sale Restriction

ACRA contends that Lexmark engages in false advertising and unfair competition by telling consumers they have a legal obligation to honor the post-sale restriction printed on the outside of the cartridge package, when in fact they are not legally compelled to do so. Under ACRA's theory, Lexmark cannot enforce the post-sale conditions and to suggest otherwise violates California's consumer protection laws. To satisfy its burden on summary judgment, ACRA essentially must show that Lexmark has no legal basis for the restriction featured in its advertising. We agree with the district court that ACRA has failed to make such a showing.

1. Patent Law

The district court found that Lexmark could condition the use of its patented Prebate cartridges by consumers under the principle articulated by the Federal Circuit in [Mallinckrodt, Inc. v. Medipart, Inc. \[\*\*11\]](#), which held that HN5↑ a restriction on a patented good is permissible as long as it is "found to be reasonably within the patent grant, i.e., that it relates to subject matter within the scope of the patent claims." 976 F.2d at 708. A condition is impermissible where "the patentee has ventured beyond the patent grant and into behavior having an anticompetitive effect not justifiable under the rule of reason." Id. (remanding for a determination of whether the patentee's single-use restriction on its medical device was reasonable and within the scope of its patent); see also Monsanto Co. v. McFarling, 302 F.3d 1291, 1298-99 \(Fed. Cir. 2002\) (upholding infringement injunction against farmer who purchased patented seeds under an agreement that the seeds be used for "planting a commercial crop only in a single season," and who then replanted the seeds); B. Braun Med., Inc. v. Abbott Laboratories, 124 F.3d 1419, 1426 \(Fed. Cir. 1997\) (concluding that although typically "an unconditional sale of a patented device exhausts the patentee's right to control the purchaser's [*987] use of the device thereafter," this does not hold true where the patentee [**12] specifically places restrictions on the sale of the item).

---

LLC, 126 Cal. App. 4th 386, 24 Cal.Rptr. 3d 301 \(Cal. Ct. App. 2005\) (finding the standing requirement to apply only prospectively), review granted, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 1, 110 P.3d 1216 \(Cal. 2005\). Because we affirm the district court's grant of summary judgment, we do not address the effect of Proposition 64 on ACRA's claim, if any.

Applying the Mallinckrodt principle, the district court determined that Lexmark imposed an enforceable condition on the Prebate printer cartridges because Lexmark's patent rights were not exhausted. Arizona Cartridge, 290 F. Supp. 2d at 1045. On appeal, ACRA does not challenge the district court's reliance on Mallinckrodt or the validity of the Federal Circuit's decision, nor does it argue that Lexmark is acting beyond the scope of its patent.<sup>5</sup> In fact, ACRA concedes that the otherwise unfettered use of a patented good can be constrained. [Blue Brief at 21]. But to do so, ACRA contends, the patent holder must have a valid contract with the consumers of its product. [***1999]

[**13] 2. Contract Law

ACRA thus asks us to conclude that Lexmark lacks a valid contract with consumers to limit the post-sale use of the cartridge. California law, adopting the relevant Uniform Commercial Code provisions, establishes that a HN6<sup>6</sup> "contract for sale of goods may be made in any manner sufficient to show agreement, including conduct by both parties which recognizes the existence of such a contract." Cal. Com. Code § 2204\(1\). Additionally, California law provides that an HN7<sup>7</sup> "agreement sufficient to constitute a contract for sale may be found even though the moment of its making is undetermined." Id. at § 2204\(2\).

We agree with the district court that Lexmark has presented sufficient unrebutted evidence to show that it has a facially valid contract with the consumers who buy and open its cartridges. Specifically, the language on the outside of the cartridge package specifies the terms under which a consumer may use the purchased item. The consumer can read the terms and conditions on the box before deciding whether to accept them or whether to opt for the non-Prebate cartridges that are sold without any restrictions.

The district court found that \*\*14 the ultimate purchasers of the cartridge -- consumers -- had notice of the restrictions on use and had a chance to reject the condition before opening the clearly marked cartridge container. Arizona Cartridge, 290 F. Supp. 2d at 1044-45. These findings support the conclusion that the consumer accepts the terms placed on usage of the Prebate cartridge by opening the box.<sup>6</sup>

\*\*15 In exchange for agreeing to the restricted use of the cartridge, consumers receive consideration in the form of the price discount. \*988<sup>7</sup> The district court explicitly found that "the Prebate is offered at a special price that reflects an exchange for a single-use condition." Arizona Cartridge, 290 F. Supp. 2d at 1045. ACRA argues that because Lexmark distributes its cartridges through wholesalers, it has no way to ensure that consumers actually receive the price discount, but offers no factual support for this contention. Lexmark presented evidence that market forces compel wholesalers to pass the discount on to consumers. A regional manager of one supplies retailer said it would be hard, albeit not impossible, for the wholesaler to skim the discount off as profit for itself by passing on only a portion of the discount from Lexmark to the consumer. But he said, "in a very competitive wholesale distribution market, there are too many competitors, really, to be able to do that." Furthermore, the Prebate notice printed on

<sup>5</sup> The Electronic Frontier Foundation, in its amicus brief, argues that Mallinckrodt was wrongly decided and urges us to reject explicitly the Federal Circuit's reasoning. However, ACRA has not challenged the district court's reliance on or application of Mallinckrodt. Thus, we need not pass on the merits of the Federal Circuit's decision for resolution of the case before us.

<sup>6</sup> This case is different from those instances in which a consumer lacks notice of the condition at the time of purchase. See, e.g., Step-Saver Data Sys. v. Wyse Tech., Inc., 939 F.2d 91, 105 \(3d Cir. 1991\) (treating box-top license as an additional term not incorporated into the parties' contract where the term's addition to the contract would materially alter the agreement and the consumer did not see license until after paying for product). Another variant involves "shrinkwrap licenses" on software, which impose restrictions that a consumer may discover only after opening and installing the software. See e.g., ProCD v. Zeidenberg, 86 F.3d 1447, 1452-53 \(7th Cir. 1996\) (holding that contract included license agreement terms that appeared on screen even though they came after user had purchased, opened and installed software).

<sup>7</sup> Lexmark represents that it has not taken legal action against any user for failing to return a cartridge to Lexmark because it "assumes customers will be honest and send cartridges back." To the extent that Lexmark fails to enforce its Prebate policy, a consumer receives the benefit of the bargain through the price reduction without necessarily having to carry through on its obligation to return the cartridges to Lexmark.

the cartridge informs consumers that they can purchase a regular cartridge without the restriction at the regular price; the notice specifically states [**16] that a "regular price cartridge without these terms is available." ACRA has failed to rebut this evidence to create a triable issue of fact.

ACRA's argument that no enforceable agreement exists because there is no privity of contract also fails. ACRA cites a California case stating "the general rule that Hn<sup>o</sup>+ one may not sue upon a contract unless he is a party to that contract." Watson v. Aced, 156 Cal. App. 2d 87, 91, 319 P.2d 83 (Cal. Ct. App. 1957). The privity requirement is met here, because the consumer is a party to the contract with Lexmark. As described above, the contract [**17] is formed when the final purchaser opens the cartridge box with notice of the restriction on reuse. ACRA contends, however, that the lack of privity is shown by Lexmark's inability to ensure that consumers will receive the price-reduction benefit of the Prebate program. We have already explained why ACRA has failed to show that consumers do not pay a reduced price. It does not matter that this price discount [***2000] results from distributors choosing to pass along their savings -- the consumer still receives consideration for agreeing to the restriction.

We hold that the contract on its face appears to be enforceable based on the district court's findings that consumers (1) have notice of the condition, (2) have a chance to reject the contract on that basis and (3) receive consideration in the form of a reduced price in exchange for the limits placed on reuse of the cartridge.<sup>8</sup> The contract permits Lexmark to restrict the use of its patented item and gives Lexmark a legal basis for asserting its ability to enforce its restriction. Therefore, ACRA has not raised a triable issue of fact that Lexmark's advertising statements as to its Prebate program are false, mislead or tend to deceive consumers [**18] or that they constitute a form of unfair competition. See Day, 63 Cal.Rptr.2d at 59-60.

B. Lexmark's Statements as to Price Reduction

ACRA contends that Lexmark's advertising is misleading in promising [*989] consumers a price reduction for buying a Prebate rather than a regular cartridge, because Lexmark cannot guarantee consumers will pay less for a Prebate cartridge. We have already rejected this argument. See supra Section III.A.2.

ACRA further alleges that Lexmark engages in deceptive advertising and unfair competition by suggesting that the price difference between Prebate and non-Prebate cartridges approximates the value of an empty cartridge. According to ACRA, Lexmark wants consumers to believe that the Prebate discount reflects the benefit that accrues to Lexmark by getting an empty cartridge back. We agree with the district court [**19] that nothing in the record supports ACRA's claim. Arizona Cartridge, 290 F. Supp. 2d at 1047.

C. Use of the Lock-Out Chip

ACRA argues that Lexmark's use of the lock-out chip, which prevents consumers from having their Prebate cartridges remanufactured by a different company, is anticompetitive and is intended to preclude competition in the after-market. The district court found ACRA's claim that the lock-out chip is a form of unfair competition to be unsupported by facts or legal authority, as do we. Id. at 1050. As discussed above, the district court relied on the Federal Circuit's Mallinckrodt decision to find that Lexmark could restrict the post-sale use of its patented cartridge. ACRA has not challenged the court's determination or alleged that Lexmark is acting beyond the scope of its patent in imposing a condition that it uses the lock-out chip to enforce. Additionally, ACRA has not attempted to show that the use of the lock-out chip -- even if designed to keep other companies from remanufacturing Prebate cartridges -- impermissibly exceeds the patent grant to produce anticompetitive effects.

In sum, ACRA has failed to raise a [**20] triable issue of fact as to whether Lexmark's restriction on the use of its patented cartridge is valid and, in turn, whether the lock-out chip is a proper mechanism to ensure compliance with the restriction. We affirm the district court's decision on this issue as well.

IV.

---

<sup>8</sup> Our holding here does not preclude challenges to the contract that a customer -- which, unlike ACRA, is a party to the contract -- could raise.

We AFFIRM the district court's grant of summary judgment to Lexmark.

---

End of Document

*In re Visa Check/Mastermoney Antitrust Litig.*

United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York

August 31, 2005, Decided

96 CV 5238 (JG)

Reporter

2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18693 *

IN RE VISA CHECK/MASTERMONEY ANTITRUST LITIGATION

Notice: [*1] FOR ELECTRONIC PUBLICATION ONLY

Subsequent History: Magistrate's recommendation at *In re Visa Check/Mastermoney Antitrust Litig., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 49257 \(E.D.N.Y., Nov. 2, 2005\)*

Prior History: *In re Visa Check/MasterMoney Antitrust Litig., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8729 \(E.D.N.Y., Apr. 27, 2004\)*

Disposition: Merchants' motion to enjoin Ratner v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., Case No. CV 05 555060 (Oh Ct. Common Pl. filed Feb. 17, 2005) denied.

Core Terms

---

Merchants, settlement, enjoin, purchasers, state court, proceedings, injunction, indirect, Consumers, anti trust law, federal court, parties, antitrust, tying arrangement, allegations, district court, settling, cases, class action, effectuate, damages, Courts, Writs, costs, deter, card

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Writs > All Writs Act

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Writs > General Overview

HN1 [▼] Writs, All Writs Act

See 28 U.S.C.S. § 1651\(a\).

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Anti-Injunction Act > Exceptions

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Anti-Injunction Act > General Overview

HN2 [down arrow] Anti-Injunction Act, Exceptions

See 28 U.S.C.S. § 2283.

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Anti-Injunction Act > Exceptions

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Anti-Injunction Act > General Overview

HN3 [down arrow] Anti-Injunction Act, Exceptions

The Anti-Injunction Act, 28 U.S.C.S. § 2283, creates a clear-cut prohibition qualified only by specifically defined exceptions. It is intended to forestall the inevitable friction between the state and federal courts that ensues from the injunction of state judicial proceedings by a federal court, yet the exceptions are designed to ensure the effectiveness and supremacy of federal law.

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Anti-Injunction Act > Exceptions

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Anti-Injunction Act > General Overview

HN4 [down arrow] Anti-Injunction Act, Exceptions

Both exceptions to the general prohibition of 28 U.S.C.S. § 2283 imply that some federal injunctive relief may be necessary to prevent a state court from so interfering with a federal court's consideration or disposition of a case as to seriously impair the federal court's flexibility and authority to decide that case.

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Anti-Injunction Act > General Overview

HN5 [down arrow] Federal & State Interrelationships, Anti-Injunction Act

The United States Supreme Court has repeatedly recognized the importance of federal courts exercising restraint when deciding whether to enjoin a state action. Since the statutory prohibition rests on the fundamental constitutional independence of the states and their courts, the exceptions should not be enlarged by loose statutory construction. Moreover, doubts as to the propriety of a federal injunction against state court proceedings should be resolved in favor of permitting the state courts to proceed in an orderly fashion to finally determine the controversy.

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Anti-Injunction Act > Exceptions

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Rem Actions > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > In Rem & Personal Jurisdiction > In Rem Actions > Quasi in Rem Actions

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Anti-Injunction Act > General Overview

**HN6** [down] Anti-Injunction Act, Exceptions

A court may enjoin state court proceedings where necessary in aid of its jurisdiction. 28 U.S.C.S. § 2283. It is well-settled that if an action is in rem or quasi-in-rem, the court first obtaining jurisdiction over the res could enjoin suits in other courts involving the same res. In its application, this authority is broader than its terms suggest. Courts have analogized both multidistrict proceedings and large class actions to in rem actions. The analogy is based in part on the limited resources of a defendant in a mass tort or securities case and the court's interest in both equitable treatment of plaintiffs and in the possible viability of corporate defendants.

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Anti-Injunction Act > Exceptions

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Anti-Injunction Act > General Overview

**HN7** [down] Anti-Injunction Act, Exceptions

Courts have found the 28 U.S.C.S. § 2283 basis for enjoining state court proceedings particularly attractive where a federal court is on the verge of settling a complex matter, and state court proceedings may undermine its ability to achieve that objective. Without the power to enjoin in that setting, defendants may be deterred from settling claims. For that reason, the imminence of settlement is an important factor in deciding whether to enjoin state court proceedings; the far-off possibility of settlement, standing alone, is insufficient. Similarly, even in the most complex of cases, a district court may not enjoin state proceedings simply because they interfere with the court's schedule.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Types of Contracts > Settlement Agreements

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Anti-Injunction Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Settlements > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Releases From Liability > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Settlement Agreements > Enforcement > General Overview

**HN8** [down] Types of Contracts, Settlement Agreements

The power to enjoin does not, however, disappear once the settlement of a case has been reached. Courts must sometimes undertake the herculean task of enforcing the terms of the class settlement agreement against the constant pressure of some settlement class members who, having obtained part of a loaf through the agreement, now pursue alternative avenues to obtain additional slices. In that setting as well, state proceedings may be enjoined, in whole or in part, to effectuate the terms of the settlement.

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Anti-Injunction Act > General Overview

**HN9** [down] Federal & State Interrelationships, Anti-Injunction Act

A federal district court may properly enjoin state court proceedings that seriously impair the court's flexibility and authority to decide a case.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

**HN10** [blue icon] Private Actions, Remedies

A plaintiff who reaps the reward of treble damages may be no less morally reprehensible than the defendant, but the law encourages his suit to further the overriding public policy in favor of competition. A more fastidious regard for the relative moral worth of the parties would only result in seriously undermining the usefulness of the private action as a bulwark of anti-trust enforcement. And permitting the plaintiff to recover a windfall gain does not encourage continued violations by those in his position since they remain fully subject to civil and criminal penalties for their own illegal conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

**HN11** [blue icon] Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

There is no federal policy against states imposing liability in addition to the liability imposed by federal antitrust law. In other words, indirect purchasers may properly sue the same defendants that have been found liable in federal court.

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > Collateral Estoppel

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Anti-Injunction Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Anti-Injunction Act > Exceptions

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Estoppel > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Preclusion of Judgments > Full Faith & Credit > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > Res Judicata

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Writs > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Writs > All Writs Act

**HN12** [blue icon] Estoppel, Collateral Estoppel

The relitigation exception to the All Writs Act, **28 U.S.C.S. § 1651**, allows a district court to grant an injunction to stay proceedings in state court "to protect or effectuate its judgments." **28 U.S.C.S. § 2283**. The exception precludes relitigation in state courts of issues previously presented to and determined by a federal court. It is founded in the well-recognized concepts of res judicata and collateral estoppel. An essential prerequisite for applying the relitigation exception is that the claims or issues which the federal injunction insulates from litigation in state proceedings actually have been decided by the federal court. This prerequisite is strict and narrow.

Counsel: ANKUR KAPOOR, ESQ., ROBERT L. BEGLEITER, ESQ., GORDON SCHNELL, ESQ., Constantine Cannon, New York, New York, Attorneys for Petitioners.

GORDON BALL, ESQ., Ball & Scott, Knoxville, Tennessee, Attorneys for Respondent.

ROBERT VIZAS, ESQ., ROBERT C. MASON, ESQ., Arnold & Porter LLP, San Francisco, California, Attorneys for Visa U.S.A., Inc.

Judges: JOHN GLEESON, U.S.D.J.

Opinion by: JOHN GLEESON

Opinion

---

MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

JOHN GLEESON, United States District Judge:

The plaintiff class in this action moves to enjoin Ratner v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., Case No. CV 05 555060 (Oh Ct. Common Pl. filed Feb. 17, 2005) ("Ratner"), a proceeding in an Ohio state court. They move pursuant to the All Writs Act, 28 U.S.C. § 1651, and their application implicates the Anti-Injunction Act, 28 U.S.C. § 2283. Ratner is an indirect purchaser antitrust action brought by a putative class of consumers (the "Consumers") against not only Visa U.S.A., Inc. ("Visa") and MasterCard [<sup>2</sup>] International Incorporated ("MasterCard") (the defendants in this case), but also against a putative class of Ohio merchants that is a subset of the nationwide plaintiff class in this case (the "Merchants"). The Merchants contend that the injunction is necessary in aid of my jurisdiction in this case. Alternatively, they argue that the injunction is necessary to protect and effectuate my judgment in this case. The Consumers argue that I cannot properly issue such an injunction under the Anti-Injunction Act. Oral argument was held on June 3, 2005. For the reasons set forth below, the Merchants' motion is denied.

BACKGROUND

The case before me is an antitrust action in which the Merchants, a class of approximately five million businesses of all sizes, throughout the United States, alleged, inter alia, that defendants Visa and MasterCard violated the Sherman Act. Specifically, the Merchants alleged that Visa and MasterCard used their considerable market power in the credit card market to force them, through "Honor All Cards" policies, to accept Visa and MasterCard debit cards as well. This alleged illegal tying arrangement required the Merchants to pay excessive interchange rates [<sup>3</sup>] (i.e., transaction costs) for the debit card purchases they were compelled to accept.

A jury was already empaneled and opening statements were about to commence when the parties settled. The settlements provided for, inter alia, a combined settlement fund exceeding $ 3 billion and injunctive relief valued conservatively at $ 25 billion. I assume familiarity with my decisions (a) approving the parties' settlement agreements, In re Visa Check/Mastermoney Antitrust Litigation, 297 F. Supp.2d 503 (E.D.N.Y. 2003), aff'd, Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Visa U.S.A., Inc., 396 F.3d 96 (2d Cir. 2005), cert. denied, Leonardo's Pizza by the Slice, Inc. v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., __ U.S. __, 161 L. Ed. 2d 1080, 125 S.Ct. 2277 (2005); (b) on the parties' motions for summary judgment, In re Visa Check/Mastermoney Antitrust Litigation, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4966, No. 96 CV 5238, 2003 WL 1712568 (E.D.N.Y. Apr. 1, 2003); and (c) certifying the class of Merchants, In re Visa Check/Mastermoney Antitrust Litigation, 192 F.R.D. 68 (E.D.N.Y. 2000), aff'd, 280 F.3d 124 (2d Cir. 2001). The following is a brief summary of the facts relevant [<sup>4</sup>] to the indirect purchaser suits that followed the antitrust litigation before me.

In late 2003, after the settlements in this case, approximately 34 indirect purchaser suits were filed in 19 states and the District of Columbia (Constantine Decl. dated March 28, 2005 ("Constantine Decl.") at P16.) Seven of those actions were filed by counsel for the Consumers here. (Id.) The cases were filed on behalf of state residents who made purchases from merchants who had tying arrangements with Visa and MasterCard. The defendants were Visa and MasterCard, and the allegations were substantially similar to those made by the Merchants in this case. (Id. at PP17-18.)

Ratner, which was filed on February 17, 2005 in Ohio, differs from most of the other indirect purchaser actions in that it seeks to pursue Ohio merchants as a defendant class as well as Visa and MasterCard. (See Constantine Decl., Ex. O. ("Ratner Compl.")) Rather than casting those merchants as simply victims of an illegal tying arrangement, the complaint alleges that they knowingly agreed to the tying arrangements for "business reasons" and passed on the costs to consumers. (Id. at PP90, 94, 98.)

The Merchants [*5] moved on March 29, 2005, to enjoin Ratner pursuant to the All Writs Act, 28 U.S.C. § 1651\(a\).

<sup>1</sup> The Consumers oppose the motion, arguing that Ratner does not fall under any of the applicable exceptions to the statutory bar to enjoining state actions found in the Anti-Injunction Act.

DISCUSSION

HN1 The All Writs Act authorizes federal courts to "issue all writs necessary or appropriate [*6] in aid of their respective jurisdictions and agreeable to the usages and principles of law." 28 U.S.C. § 1651\(a\). HN2 The Anti-Injunction Act limits this power when it comes to proceedings in state courts. Specifically, it provides as follows: "A court of the United States may not grant an injunction to stay proceedings in a State Court except as expressly authorized by Act of Congress, or where necessary in aid of its jurisdiction, or to protect or effectuate its judgments." 28 U.S.C. § 2283. In short, HN3 the statute creates a "clear-cut prohibition qualified only by specifically defined exceptions." Amalgamated Clothing Workers of Am. v. Richman Bros., 348 U.S. 511, 516, 99 L. Ed. 600, 75 S. Ct. 452, 71 Ohio Law Abs. 177 \(1955\). It is intended to "forestall[] the inevitable friction between the state and federal courts that ensues from the injunction of state judicial proceedings by a federal court," yet the exceptions "are designed to ensure the effectiveness and supremacy of federal law." Chick Kam Choo v. Exxon Corp., 486 U.S. 140, 146, 100 L. Ed. 2d 127, 108 S. Ct. 1684 \(1988\) (quotation marks omitted). As the Supreme Court explained in Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company v. Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, 398 U.S. 281, 26 L. Ed. 2d 234, 90 S. Ct. 1739 \(1970\). [*7]

HN4 Both exceptions to the general prohibition of § 2283 imply that some federal injunctive relief may be necessary to prevent a state court from so interfering with a federal court's consideration or disposition of a case as to seriously impair the federal court's flexibility and authority to decide that case.

Id. at 295.

HN5 The Supreme Court has repeatedly recognized the importance of federal courts exercising restraint when deciding whether to enjoin a state action. "Since the statutory prohibition . . . rests on the fundamental constitutional independence of the States and their courts, the exceptions should not be enlarged by loose statutory construction." Atl. Coast Line R.R. Co., 398 U.S. at 287; see also Amalgamated Clothing Workers, 348 U.S. at 516; Chick Kam Choo, 486 U.S. at 146; Ret. Sys. of Alabama v. J.P. Morgan Chase & Co., 386 F.3d 419, 425-26 \(2d Cir. 2004\). Moreover, "doubts as to the propriety of a federal injunction against state court proceedings should be resolved in favor of permitting the state courts to proceed in an orderly fashion to finally determine the controversy.

---

<sup>1</sup> Originally, the Merchants moved on March 24, 2005, to enjoin an action in Tennessee, Bennett v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., Case No. 24139 (Tenn. Ch. Ct. filed Feb. 17, 2005) ("Bennett II"). On March 29, 2005, they sought to enjoin Ratner as well. As the motions were virtually identical, I scheduled them for a joint oral argument. Oral argument was held on June 3, 2005. By letter dated June 20, 2005, the Merchants sought to withdraw their motion with respect to Bennett II. I granted that request on June 29, 2005. Accordingly, this decision addresses only the motion to enjoin Ratner.

[*8] " Vendo Co. v. Lektro-Vend Corp., 433 U.S. 623, 630, 53 L. Ed. 2d 1009, 97 S. Ct. 2881 (1977) (plurality opinion) (quoting Atl. Coast Line R.R. Co., 398 U.S. at 297).

The Merchants do not contend that an act of Congress authorizes the injunction they seek. However, they argue that both of the remaining exceptions to the Anti-Injunction Act apply. Those arguments are addressed below.

A. Necessary in Aid of Jurisdiction

HN6 A court may enjoin state court proceedings "where necessary in aid of its jurisdiction." 28 U.S.C. § 2283. It is well-settled that "if an action is in rem or quasi-in-rem[,] the court first obtaining jurisdiction over the res could enjoin suits in other courts involving the same res." Charles Alan Wright, Arthur R. Miller & Edward H. Cooper, Federal Practice and Procedure § 4221 (2d Ed. 2005); Vendo Co., 433 U.S. at 641; Mitchum v. Foster, 407 U.S. 225, 235-37, 32 L. Ed. 2d 705, 92 S. Ct. 2151 (1972); Standard Microsystems Corp. v. Texas Instruments Inc., 916 F.2d 58, 60 (2d Cir. 1990). In its application, this authority is broader than its terms suggest. Courts have analogized both multidistrict ("MDL") proceedings [*9] and large class actions to in rem actions. See In re Baldwin-United Corp., 770 F.2d 328, 337 (2d Cir. 1985) (securities class action was "so far advanced that it was the virtual equivalent of a res over which the district judge required full control"); In re Diet Drugs Prods. Liab. Litig., 369 F.3d 293, 306 (3d Cir. 2004); In re Diet Drugs, 282 F.3d 220, 235 n.12 (3d Cir. 2002); Battle v. Liberty Nat'l Life Ins. Co., 877 F.2d 877, 882 (11th Cir. 1989); In re Corrugated Container Antitrust Litig., 659 F.2d 1332, 1334-35 (5th Cir. 1981); but see Alton Box Bd. Co. v. Esprit de Corp., 682 F.2d 1267, 1272 (9th Cir. 1982) (upholding lower court's denial of injunction where indirect purchasers sued the same defendant that the direct purchaser sued in the federal action because "the analogy to the in rem cases is strained"). The analogy is based in part on the limited resources of a defendant in a mass tort or securities case and the court's interest in both equitable treatment of plaintiffs and in the possible viability of corporate defendants. See In re Diet Drugs, 369 F.3d at 296-97; [*10] In re Joint Eastern and Southern Dist. Asbestos Litig., 134 F.R.D. 32, 37-38 (E.D.N.Y. & S.D.N.Y. 1990).

HN7 Courts have found this basis for enjoining state court proceedings particularly attractive "where a federal court is on the verge of settling a complex matter, and state court proceedings may undermine its ability to achieve that objective." Standard Microsystems Corp., 916 F.2d at 60 (citing In re Baldwin, 770 F.2d at 337); see United States v. Int'l Bhd. of Teamsters, 907 F.2d 277, 281 (2d Cir. 1990). Without the power to enjoin in that setting, defendants may be deterred from settling claims. In re Prudential Ins. Co. of Am. Sales Practices Litig., 314 F.3d 99, 104-05 (3d Cir. 2002). For that reason, the imminence of settlement is an important factor in deciding whether to enjoin state court proceedings; the far-off possibility of settlement, standing alone, is insufficient. In re Gen. Motors Corp. Pick-Up Truck Fuel Tank Prod. Liab. Litig., 134 F.3d 133, 145 (3d Cir. 1998). Similarly, even in the most complex of cases, a district court may not enjoin state proceedings simply [*11] because they interfere with the court's schedule. Ret. Sys. of Alabama, 386 F.3d at 431.

HN8 The power to enjoin does not, however, disappear once the settlement of such a case has been reached. Courts must sometimes undertake "the herculean task of enforcing the terms of the class settlement agreement against the constant pressure of some settlement class members who, having obtained part of a loaf through the agreement, now pursue alternative avenues to obtain additional slices." In re Diet Drugs, 369 F.3d at 297. In that setting as well, state proceedings may be enjoined, in whole or in part, to effectuate the terms of the settlement. See id. at 306, 318 (district court has power to enjoin settling plaintiffs from seeking punitive damages in state court where release of such claims was a "central pillar" of federal settlement); In re Prudential Ins. Co., 314 F.3d at 104-05; Battle, 877 F.2d at 881.

The Merchants argue that Ratner threatens to interfere with this Court's jurisdiction over the distribution of the settlement fund by demanding a portion of the fund. That fund, they contend, is a [*12] res, the protection of which authorizes the injunction they seek. For their part, the Consumers contend that this is an in personam action, and that I cannot enjoin the state action simply because it adjudicates similar claims arising out of the same tying arrangements alleged in this case. I find that enjoining Ratner is not necessary in aid of my jurisdiction over this case.

First, Ratner is not an in rem action, either strictly speaking or in the broader sense contemplated by the cases described above. The Merchants' argument that it is an effort to levy upon the settlement fund itself is factually incorrect. The sole remedy sought is an in personam judgment against a subset of the merchant class in this case. (See Tr. at 11 (Counsel for Ratner stating that the Consumers "are seeking an in personam judgment against Wal-Mart, Wal-mart individually licensed and, hopefully, at some point in time, a class.") Indeed, depending on outcome of the Ratner plaintiffs' dubious intention to certify a defendant class of conspirators in the alleged tying arrangement, it may be an extremely small subset.

Second, the justifications described above for enjoining state court [*13] proceedings do not apply here.HN9↑ This Court may properly enjoin state court proceedings that "seriously impair the [] court's flexibility and authority to decide" a case. Atl. Coast Line R.R. Co., 398 U.S. at 295. And this is no doubt a large, complex federal class action. But Ratner does not raise the specter that the limited resources of a single defendant will be fought over in both state and federal courts, jeopardizing the equitable treatment of plaintiffs in state and federal court. Neither Visa nor MasterCard, the defendants in the case before me, has joined in the instant motion. The moving parties have not paid money to settle this case; they have received it.

Nor is this case "on the verge of settling," Standard Microsystems Corp., 916 F.2d at 60, and thus Ratner cannot deter the parties in the case before me from settling. In re Prudential Ins. Co., 314 F.3d at 104-05. To the contrary, the settlements are now final.

Though I may enjoin Ratner if that is necessary to enforce the terms of the settlements, Ratner does not impact the enforcement of the settlements. This is not a situation where some class [*14] members, after committing to an agreement in a federal class action, go to state court in an effort to subvert or improve upon the federal settlement. In the case before me, the Consumers who brought Ratner were not even parties.

In an analogous setting, the Ninth Circuit affirmed the district court's refusal to enjoin a state court action. In Alton Box Board Co., indirect purchasers brought suit against the manufacturers of corrugated containers -- the same manufacturers who were being sued in an ongoing MDL action -- approximately six months after certification of a federal class. The Ninth Circuit held that the "necessary in aid of its jurisdiction" exception did not apply, in part because the plaintiff in the state court action was "not a direct purchaser, had never been and [could not] be a member of the federal class, and had never been subject to the jurisdiction of the [MDL]."Alton Box, 682 F.2d at 1271.<sup>2</sup> As in Alton Box, the indirect purchasers here are too far removed from the federal antitrust case to warrant an injunction in aid of the federal court's jurisdiction.

[*15] The Merchants argue that I should enjoin Ratner because the Second Circuit has approved of enjoining a state court proceeding even where the plaintiffs in state court were not part of the litigation in federal court. They rely on In re Baldwin-United Corporation, which involved a consolidated, multi-district class action brought by approximately 100,000 holders of Baldwin securities against 26 broker-dealers. In re Baldwin, 770 F.2d at 331. The district court coordinated settlement talks resulting in 18 of the 26 defendants signing stipulations of settlement. However, numerous state attorneys general objected that the proposed settlement did not adequately compensate the plaintiffs. Id. at 333. After the district court preliminarily approved the settlement, the State of New York sent several of the defendants notices of intent to bring suit "seeking restitution for New York citizens" who held Baldwin securities. In re Baldwin, 770 F.2d at 333. The district court enjoined any such proceedings in aid of its jurisdiction, finding that they could jeopardize the 18 proposed settlements and the settlement of remaining claims. Id.

In affirming, [*16] the Second Circuit found that the states "desired to use the state proceedings to obtain additional money, over and above the settlement amounts, for distribution to members of the class in the consolidated federal actions." Id. at 333 n.1; see also id. at 337. The court noted that some states may have wished to pursue other remedies, such as injunctive relief and enforcement of state criminal and regulatory laws. *Id.* at 333. Those remedies, however, were not precluded by the injunction. *Id.* at 339.

<sup>2</sup> Another factor mentioned in the court's decision denying the injunction in Alton Box was that the district judge who denied the injunction was in the Northern District of California, but the district judge overseeing the MDL proceeding was in the Southern District of Texas. Thus, the Northern District of California had no "jurisdiction" to preserve. Alton Box, 682 F.2d at 1271.

As mentioned, the Merchants argue that In re Baldwin supports their motion because the court of appeals upheld a district court's decision to enjoin non-parties to a dispute -- the attorneys general -- in aid of its jurisdiction. I disagree. The principal rationale for upholding the injunction in In re Baldwin was that the enjoined claims would have sought damages for the benefit of the same plaintiffs who had brought the federal cases. That rationale does not apply in this case. The plaintiffs in Ratner are not parties to this case, and they could not have been parties even if they had tried. See *Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois*, 431 U.S. 720, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707, 97 S. Ct. 2061 \(1977\) [*17] (holding that only direct purchasers can recover under federal antitrust laws). Nor are the Ratner plaintiffs seeking damages from the same configuration of defendants as in the case before me. In short, the posture of the cases and the parties here is not analogous to those features of In re Baldwin.

Moreover, the mere fact that the Merchants obtained favorable settlements in this federal case does not insulate them (or some small subset of them) from antitrust claims arising out of the same events. In holding that antitrust defendants may not shirk liability under the federal antitrust laws by arguing that plaintiffs passed on (to parties below them in the distribution chain) the costs they seek to recover, the Supreme Court stated that **HN10**↑ the plaintiff who reaps the reward of treble damages may be no less morally reprehensible than the defendant, but the law encourages his suit to further the overriding public policy in favor of competition. A more fastidious regard for the relative moral worth of the parties would only result in seriously undermining the usefulness of the private action as a bulwark of anti-trust enforcement. And permitting the plaintiff to recover [*18] a windfall gain does not encourage continued violations by those in his position since they remain fully subject to civil and criminal penalties for their own illegal conduct.

*Perma Life Mufflers v. International Parts Corp.*, 392 U.S. 134, 139, 20 L. Ed. 2d 982, 88 S. Ct. 1981 (citation omitted). Thus, even prior to the Court's holding Illinois Brick that only direct purchasers can recover under federal antitrust laws, the Court recognized the possibility that antitrust laws did not limit recovery to innocent victims, and may even serve to reward wrongdoers. "The purposes of the antitrust laws are best served by insuring that the private action will be an ever-present threat to deter anyone contemplating business behavior in violation of the antitrust laws." *Perma Life Mufflers, Inc. v. Int'l Parts Corp.*, 392 U.S. 134, 139, 20 L. Ed. 2d 982, 88 S. Ct. 1981 \(1968\), modified, *Copperweld Corp. v. Independence Tube Corp.*, 467 U.S. 752, 81 L. Ed. 2d 628, 104 S. Ct. 2731 \(1984\) (overruling Perma Life to the extent that it acquiesced in intra-enterprise conspiracy doctrine under Section 1 of the Sherman Act).

After Illinois Brick foreclosed the ability of indirect purchasers to recover under the federal antitrust laws, the validity of indirect purchaser suits [*19] under state law was squarely addressed by the Court in *California v. ARC America Corp.*, 490 U.S. 93, 102, 104 L. Ed. 2d 86, 109 S. Ct. 1661 \(1989\). In that case, four states brought price-fixing claims against cement producers under both federal and state antitrust laws as direct purchasers and under state laws as indirect purchasers. In rejecting the defendants' claim that the state indirect purchaser laws were preempted, the Court held that these laws "are consistent with the broad purposes of the federal antitrust laws: deterring anticompetitive conduct and ensuring the compensation of victims of that conduct." *ARC Am. Corp., 490 U.S. at 102* (citing Illinois Brick Co., 431 U.S. at 746). As of 2002, 19 states and the District of Columbia had passed laws known as "Illinois Brick repealers," expressly allowing indirect purchasers to recover under the states' antitrust statutes. See Jonathon T. Tomlin & Dale J. Giali, Federalism and the Indirect Purchaser Mess, 11 Geo. Mason L. Rev. 157, 161-62 \(2002\). There is no question that the existence of such statutes complicates antitrust litigation, but that cost is incurred in furtherance of the broader [*20] goals of deterring anticompetitive conduct and compensating victims of that conduct.

Thus, **HN11**↑ there is no federal policy against states imposing liability in addition to the liability imposed by federal antitrust law. *Id. at 105.* In other words, indirect purchasers may properly sue the same defendants that have been found liable in federal court. If the Ratner plaintiffs may properly sue Visa and MasterCard in state court -- a proposition the Merchants do not dispute -- it follows that they may sue others who acted in concert with them. The Ratner plaintiffs allege that some of the Merchants did precisely that, that is, they knowingly agreed to contractual relationships with Visa and MasterCard that violated the antitrust laws and passed the resulting costs on to consumers. Whether that allegation has any merit is not for me to decide. If it does, there is no federal impediment to the Ratner plaintiffs seeking damages under Ohio law.

Finally, the Merchants argue that the principles discussed above allow indirect purchasers to sue only the principal antitrust violators (here, Visa and MasterCard) in state court, and do not permit claims against direct purchasers as well. [*21] But the Merchants fail to cite any authority for such a limitation or to articulate any reason why one would be warranted. The Consumers allege that some of the Merchants, as direct purchasers, are responsible for and have benefitted from illegal restraints of trade. If those allegations are true, and I express no opinion on the matter, then the Merchants are precisely the sort of culpable parties whose standing to be plaintiffs under the federal antitrust laws does not insulate them from other civil or criminal penalties if they participated in the illegal restraints of trade. See *Perma Life*, 392 U.S. at 139.

B. Necessary to Effectuate or Protect A Judgment

**HN12** [F] The relitigation exception to the All Writs Act allows a district court to grant an injunction to stay proceedings in state court "to protect or effectuate its judgments." 28 U.S.C. § 2283. The exception precludes relitigation in state courts of issues previously presented to and determined by a federal court. See *Chick Kam Choo*, 486 U.S. at 147; *Smith v. Woosley*, 399 F.3d 428, 433 \(2d Cir. 2005\). "It is founded in the well-recognized concepts [*22] of res judicata and collateral estoppel." *Chick Kam Choo*, 486 U.S. at 147. "An essential prerequisite for applying the relitigation exception is that the claims or issues which the federal injunction insulates from litigation in state proceedings actually have been decided by the federal court. . . This prerequisite is strict and narrow." *Id. at 148*.

The Merchants argue that the conspiracy claims in Ratner contradict my approval of the settlements. Specifically, they contend that the claims contradict my findings that the Merchants' claims were settled in good faith, at arm's length, and that there was no collusion. According to the Merchants, the Ratner plaintiffs are precluded from now alleging that the Ohio merchants had full knowledge of the tying arrangement and conspired to comply with it. I disagree.

First, the Merchants' argument oversimplifies the Consumers' allegations. The complaint in Ratner alleges that the tying arrangements were required by Visa and MasterCard. (Ratner Compl. at P2.) Some of the Ohio merchants<sup>3</sup> then passed along the cost "even after filing suit against Visa and MasterCard" (id. at P10) "in a successful [*23] effort to recoup" the "tax" on debit cards (id. at P12.). This, according to the Consumers, led to unjust enrichment and double recovery. (Id. at PP12-13.) The Consumers contend that the Merchants chose to accept the fees and tying arrangements in hopes of getting business that they otherwise would not get. (Id. at P98.) In other words, the Merchants acted "for business reasons" and then passed on the costs to consumers. (Id. at PP97-99.) My finding that there was no collusion when the case was settled is not inconsistent with those allegations.

Second, even if my findings in connection with settling the class action were inconsistent with the allegations in Ratner, [*24] I would not exercise my equitable power to enjoin parties who -- like the Ratner plaintiffs -- had no opportunity to challenge those findings. Neither the indirect purchasers nor anyone in privity or even allied in interest with them was heard in this case. Accordingly, they may not be properly bound by the factual findings it produced.

CONCLUSION

---

<sup>3</sup>The Consumers conceded at oral argument that they are not alleging knowing complicity by every merchant who accepted debit cards. "I think we would be hard-pressed to say that every, every merchant . . . was part of the conspiracy. But certainly, Wal-Mart was and they knew about it and they participated in it." (Tr. at 20.)

For the reasons stated above, the Merchants' motion to enjoin Ratner v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., Case No. CV 05 555060 (Oh Ct. Common Pl. filed Feb. 17, 2005) is denied. The Merchants shall inform the state court of this decision.

So Ordered.

JOHN GLEESON, U.S.D.J.

Dated: August 31, 2005

Brooklyn, New York

---

End of Document

Alaska Vill. Elec. Coop., Inc. v. Crowley Marine Servs.

United States District Court for the District of Alaska

September 2, 2005, Decided

Case No. A05-0210 CV (RRB)

Reporter

2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 39668 *; 2005-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P74,994

ALASKA VILLAGE ELECTRIC COOPERATIVE, INC.; INN ELECTRIC COOPERATIVE, INC.; KOTZEBUE ELECTRIC ASSOCIATION, INC.; NAKNEK ELECTRIC ASSOCIATION, INC.; CITY OF NOME D/B/A NOME JOINT UTILITY SYSTEM; NUSHAGAK ELECTRIC & TELEPHONE COOPERATIVE, INC.; and UNALAKLEET VALLEY ELECTRIC COOPERATIVE, INC., Plaintiffs, vs. CROWLEY MARINE SERVICES, INC.; CROWLEY MARITIME CORPORATION; YUKON FUEL COMPANY; NORTHLAND HOLDINGS, INC.; NORTHLAND VESSEL LEASING COMPANY, LLC; and YUTANA BARGE LINES, LLC, Defendants.

Core Terms

---

temporary restraining order, consent decree, state court, antitrust, injunction, anti trust law, proceedings, violates, fuel, court's jurisdiction, comment period, no necessity, take effect, documentation, authorities, effectuate, approving, economist, initiated, judgments, modified, supplier, merits, bulk

Counsel: [*1] For Alaska Village Electric Cooperative Incorporated, Inn Electric Cooperative Incorporated, Kotzebue Electric Association Incorporated, Naknek Electric Association Incorporated, City of Nome, Nushagak Electric & Telephone Cooperative Incorporated, Unalakleet Valley Electric Cooperative Incorporated, Plaintiffs: John A. Leman, Kemppel Huffman et al, Anchorage, AK; Paul J. Jones, Kemppel Huff & Ellis P.C., Anchorage, AK.

For Crowley Marine Service Incorporated, Defendant: Mark E. Ashburn, Ashburn & Mason, P.C., Anchorage, AK.

For Yukon Fuel Company, Northland Holdings Incorporated, Northland Vessel Leasing Company L.L.C, Yutana Barge Lines L.L.C., Defendants: Douglas J. Serdahely, Patton Boggs LLP, Anchorage, AK; Jeffrey A. Leon, Winston & Strawn L.L.P., Chicago, IL.

Judges: RALPH R. BEISTLINE, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: RALPH R. BEISTLINE

Opinion

---

ORDER DENYING MOTION FOR TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER

This is an action brought by Plaintiffs seeking to prevent the sale of one business to another that allegedly violates federal antitrust law.<sup>1</sup> Crowley Marine Services, Inc. ("Crowley"), a supplier of bulk fuel to Western Alaska, seeks to purchase Yukon Fuel Company [*2] ("Yukon"), a similar company.<sup>2</sup> Plaintiffs argue that the sale violates federal antitrust laws because its effect "may be substantially to lessen competition."<sup>3</sup>

---

<sup>1</sup> Clerk's Docket No. 2 at 3.

Before the Court reaches the merits of whether a temporary restraining order should be granted, the Court must consider whether it may be involved in this dispute at all.

Plaintiffs' Motion for Temporary Restraining Order is not the first instance where a court has considered the potential antitrust ramifications of this sale. In November of 2003, Plaintiffs filed an antitrust lawsuit in Alaska State Court to stop the sale. In March of 2004, the Alaska Attorney General initiated a formal investigation of the contemplated transaction. The State Court stayed its action until completion of this investigation. The Attorney General's investigation included interviewing people involved in large transportation services, retaining an antitrust economist [*3] to review relevant documents, meeting with the City of Bethel, the utility groups, and Plaintiffs, and consulting with antitrust attorneys in other states and federal authorities. As a result, the Attorney General determined that modifying the sale was necessary to avoid state anti-trust violations. Thus, at the end of the eight month investigation, a consent decree was reached that allowed the sale of Yukon to go forward as long as Crowley divested certain assets and provided other accommodations to Delta Western, another supplier of bulk fuel in western Alaska. The consent decree was then published and subjected to a public comment period. The State then initiated its own complaint in State Superior Court alleging that the sale would be an antitrust violation, but that its proposed consent decree would remedy the violation.

After the expiration of the comment period, the State Superior Court proceeded to have a hearing<sup>4</sup> where Plaintiffs presented their arguments, the Assistant Attorney General presented his comments, and expert economists were heard.<sup>5</sup> On August 25, 2005, State Superior Court Judge Ben Esch issued his opinion approving consent decree and allowing the sale to [*4] proceed. Judge Esch concluded that the sale was in the public interest. This Court has reviewed Judge Esch's opinion and found it thoughtful, thorough, and well-reasoned.

[*5] Plaintiffs now wish this Court to issue a temporary restraining order preventing the sale while it considers whether the sale, as modified by the consent decree, is a violation of federal antitrust law. In so doing, this Court would effectively prevent the judgment of the State Superior Court from taking effect. The Anti-Injunction Act, 28 U.S.C. § 2283, "precludes federal courts from enjoining state court actions unless (1) Congress has expressly authorized such relief by statute, (2) an injunction is necessary in aid of the court's jurisdiction, or (3) an injunction is necessary to protect or effectuate the court's judgments."<sup>6</sup> "In the interest of comity and federalism, these three exceptions must be strictly construed."<sup>7</sup> Therefore, "doubts as to the propriety of a federal injunction against state court proceedings should be resolved in favor of permitting the state courts to proceed in an orderly fashion to finally determine the controversy."<sup>8</sup> The Act applies to any stage of state proceedings, including judgments and

---

<sup>2</sup> Id.

<sup>3</sup> Id. (citing 15 U.S.C. § 18).

<sup>4</sup> While the court limited its review to determine whether the settlement was within the reaches of the public interest, it was not a rubber-stamp and the court considered: "(1) the degree to which the decree achieves the relief sought in the complaint; (2) the nature of the case, including the size of the defendant, the scope and complexity of the proposed settlement, and the importance of the case to the economy as a whole; (3) the quantity and quality of information available to the court on which to base an evaluation of the decree, including the competitive impact statement, public comment and government responses, and any pretrial discovery and trial evidence actually presented; (4) any prior or current history of attempts by the same parties to evade public scrutiny of alleged anti-competitive practices." Clerk's Docket No. 12 at Ex. A at 6.

<sup>5</sup> While Plaintiffs were not a party to the lawsuit, they were participants and were parties to a companion lawsuit that raised identical issues. Furthermore, the Attorney General provided them documentary evidence and they submitted formal objections to the court and participated in the hearing.

<sup>6</sup> Alton Box Board Co. v. Esprit de Corp., 682 F.2d 1267, 1270-71 (9th 1982) (quotations omitted).

<sup>7</sup> Id. at 1271.

appeals.<sup>9</sup> Additionally, "it makes no difference whether the injunction applies to the private litigants or is imposed directly on the [*6] State Court itself.<sup>10</sup>

Here, Plaintiffs move for a temporary restraining order that would preclude the State Court's decision approving the sale from taking effect. Thus, the Act applies to prohibit this Court from so acting, unless an exception to the Act applies, which does not appear to be the case here. First, there has been no statutory authorization by Congress for the relief sought by Plaintiffs. Second, such an order is not necessary to aid the Court's jurisdiction. Third, such an order is not necessary to protect or effectuate a judgment of the Federal District Court. Thus, it appears that this Court is likely barred from granting the relief requested [*7] by Plaintiffs.

Moreover, after having reviewed the briefs and documentation supplied by the parties, and noting the extensive nature of the investigation and litigation that led to the consent decree and subsequent State Court decision, and without even considering the issue of collateral estoppel, the Court concludes that Plaintiffs have not shown probable success on the merits or that there is a high degree of irreparable harm, which is critical to the issuance of a temporary restraining order.<sup>11</sup>

Therefore, the Court DENIES Plaintiffs' Motion for a Temporary Restraining Order.

This is not to say that Plaintiffs' complaint lacks merit or that Plaintiffs will ultimately fail. Indeed, although Defendants are not precluded from proceeding with the sales transaction, they do so with full knowledge of the pending litigation and its potential consequences.

ENTERED at Anchorage, Alaska, this 2nd [*8] day of September, 2005.

RALPH R. BEISTLINE

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

---

End of Document

<sup>8</sup> Id. (citation omitted).

<sup>9</sup> Hill v. Martin, 296 U.S. 393, 403, 56 S. Ct. 278, 80 L. Ed. 293 \(1935\).

<sup>10</sup> Alton Box Board Co. V Espirit de Corp., 682 F.2d 1267, 1271 \(9th Cir. 1982\).

<sup>11</sup> Earth Island Inst. V. United States Forest Service, 351 F.3d 1291, 1298 \(9th Cir. 2003\).

Creative Copier Servs. v. Xerox Corp.

United States District Court for the District of Connecticut

September 2, 2005, Decided

CIVIL ACTION NO. 3:01cv155 (SRU)

Reporter

2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19402 *; 2005-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P74,929

CREATIVE COPIER SERVICES, Plaintiff, v. XEROX CORPORATION, Defendant.

Prior History: Creative Copier Servs. v. Xerox Corp., 344 F. Supp. 2d 858, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23048 \(D. Conn., 2004\)

Core Terms

---

reasonable juror, limitations period, copiers, customers, summary judgment, machines, mitigate, argues, end-user, damages, entitled to summary judgment, light most favorable, accrued, summary judgment motion, undisputed, policies, independent violations, statute of limitations, affirmative defense, verification

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Motions for Summary Judgment > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Genuine Disputes

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Legal Entitlement

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Materiality of Facts

HN1 [] Summary Judgment, Evidentiary Considerations

Summary judgment is appropriate when the evidence demonstrates that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\). When ruling on a summary judgment motion, the court must construe the facts in the light most favorable to the non-moving party and must resolve all ambiguities and draw all reasonable inferences against the moving party. When faced with cross-motions for summary judgment, a court must consider the evidence differently depending on which motion is being addressed.

Civil Procedure > ... > Affirmative Defenses > Statute of Limitations > Revival

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Extensions & Revivals

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > US Department of Justice Actions > Criminal Actions > Sherman Act

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

HN2 Statute of Limitations, Revival

An action brought under the Sherman Act shall be forever barred unless commenced within four years after the cause of action accrued. 15 U.S.C.S. § 15b. Generally, a cause of action accrues and the statute begins to run when a defendant commits an act that injures a plaintiff's business. Although a separate cause of action accrues for each distinct violation that injures the plaintiff, not every act by an antitrust defendant is sufficient to restart the statute of limitations. Specifically, an act must (1) be a new and independent act that is not merely a reaffirmation of a previous act; and (2) it must inflict new and accumulating injury on the plaintiff. The actions cannot be merely the abatable but unabated inertial consequences of some pre-limitations action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Horizontal Refusals to Deal > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > General Overview

HN3 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Horizontal Refusals to Deal

In the "refusal to deal" context, whether a particular refusal is an independent act under the Sherman Act or is simply a reaffirmation of a prior refusal will typically turn on whether the initial refusal to deal is irrevocable, immutable, permanent and final. Consistent with that finality test, courts have found that the statute of limitations, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15b, does not run if, despite announcing a policy prior to the limitations period, the policy is not enforced until a period after the start of the limitations period.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Preclusion of Judgments > Law of the Case

HN4 Preclusion of Judgments, Law of the Case

Decisions that were made when a case was consolidated as part of a multi-district litigation, which were not findings of fact but were resolutions of motions for which the facts were assumed to be true for purposes of deciding the motions, the decisions are not binding on the parties or the court to which the case was subsequently transferred.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Statute of Limitations > Time Limitations

HN5 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

In general a cause of action does not accrue under the Sherman Act until the plaintiff is injured.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN6 Private Actions, Remedies

An antitrust plaintiff has a duty to mitigate damages.

Counsel: [*1] For Creative Copier Svc, Inc, Plaintiff: Elias A. Alexiades, New Haven, CT; James A. Hennefer, San Francisco, CA; Robert J. LaRocca, Kohn, Swift & Graf, Philadelphia, PA.

For Xerox Corp., Defendant: Frederick Brown, Orrick, Herrington & Sutcliffe, San Francisco, CA; Jon J. Nathan, Jonathan Ian Gleklen, Arnold & Porter - DC, Washington, DC; Robert P. Dolian, Cummings & Lockwood, Stamford, CT.

Judges: Stefan R. Underhill, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: Stefan R. Underhill

Opinion

---

RULING ON MOTIONS FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

Creative Copier Services ("CCS") sued Xerox Corporation ("Xerox") for attempted monopolization of the market for service of Xerox high-speed copiers in violation of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2. Xerox has moved for summary judgment on its affirmative defenses of statute of limitations and failure to mitigate damages, as well as for summary judgment against CCS's monopolization claim on the theory that CCS has failed to establish a relevant market. CCS has moved for summary judgment against Xerox's two affirmative defenses. Both parties' motions are denied.

I. Background

The following facts are not subject to any genuine dispute.

[*2] Xerox is in the business of manufacturing, selling, and servicing photocopy machines.

On April 17, 1984, Xerox established a new policy concerning the sale of replacement parts for its "10 Series" copiers. That policy stated in part:

The sale of parts which are unique to the 10 series products . . . will not be permitted to any third party, unless that third party is an end user purchaser . . . , or unless that third party is an authorized service dealer/retailer for those products under the Xerox reseller program.

(Xerox Ex. A)

In 1987, Xerox extended its parts policy to cover replacement parts for additional models of Xerox copiers. (Xerox Ex. E)

On June 1, 1989, Xerox issued a revised parts policy. The revised policy reiterated Xerox's policy of only selling parts to end-users and also established an "end-user verification" procedure, designed to ensure that Xerox did not "knowingly provide ISOs with parts, technical training, technical documentation, or other resources." (Xerox Ex. F)

As part of a 1994 consent decree, Xerox agreed to change its policy to allow ISOs to purchase replacement parts.

CCS is an independent service organization ("ISO") that services [*3] Xerox copiers.

II. Discussion

A. Standard of Review

HN1[] Summary judgment is appropriate when the evidence demonstrates that "there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\); see also Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 255-56, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202, 106 S. Ct. 2505 \(1986\). When ruling on a summary judgment motion, the court must construe the facts in the light most favorable to the non-moving party and must resolve all ambiguities and draw all reasonable inferences against the moving party. Anderson, 477 U.S. at 255. It follows that, when faced with cross-motions for summary judgment, a court must consider the evidence differently depending on which motion is being addressed.

B. Statute of Limitations HN2[] An action brought under the Sherman Act "shall be forever barred unless commenced within four years after the cause of action accrued." 15 U.S.C. § 15b. Generally, a cause of action accrues and the statute begins to run when a defendant commits an act that injures a plaintiff's business. [*4] "Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 401 U.S. 321, 338, 28 L. Ed. 2d 77, 91 S. Ct. 795 \(1971\)". Although a separate cause of action accrues for each distinct violation that injures the plaintiff, "not every act by an antitrust defendant is sufficient to restart the statute of limitations." Pace Industries v. Three Phoenix Co., 813 F.2d 234, 237 \(9th Cir. 1987\). Specifically, an act must (1) be a new and independent act that is not merely a reaffirmation of a previous act; and (2) it must inflict new and accumulating injury on the plaintiff. *Id. at 238*. The actions cannot be merely the "abatable but unabated inertial consequences of some pre-limitations action." In re Ciprofloxacin Hydrochloride Antitrust Litigation, 261 F. Supp. 2d 188, 229 \(E.D.N.Y. 2003\) (quoting AI George v. Envirotech Corp., 939 F.2d 1271 \(5th Cir. 1991\)).

HN3[] In the "refusal to deal" context, whether a particular refusal is an independent act or simply a "reaffirmation" of a prior refusal will typically turn on whether the "initial refusal to deal is irrevocable, immutable, permanent and final." 2 Philip Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, [*5] Antitrust Law P320 (2d ed. 2000). Consistent with that "finality" test, courts have found that the statute does not run if, despite announcing a policy prior to the limitations period, the policy is not enforced until a period after the start of the limitations period. DXS, Inc. v. Siemens Medical Systems, 100 F.3d 462 \(6th Cir. 1996\).

Both parties agree that the statute of limitations bars CCS from asserting any claims that accrued prior to March 23, 1988.

1. Xerox's Motion for Summary Judgment

Xerox argues that it is entitled to summary judgment<sup>1</sup> on its affirmative defense of statute of limitations on the grounds that: (1) it is undisputed that Xerox's parts policy was finalized no later than 1987, and therefore any subsequent actions taken were merely "reaffirmations" of that policy, not independent violations; and (2) even if Xerox's actions in the limitations period did constitute independent acts, there is no evidence that those actions inflicted any new injury on CCS. Construing the evidence in the light most favorable to CCS, I conclude summary judgment is inappropriate on either ground.

[*6] a. Independent Violation

Xerox argues it is undisputed that since 1984 -- and certainly since 1987 -- it has had a firm policy of not selling parts to ISOs, and its 1989 revision to the policy only changed the mechanism for enforcing that policy, not the policy itself. I agree that since 1984 Xerox has had a policy of not selling parts to ISOs. Nevertheless, I think reasonable jurors could find that from 1984 to 1989 that policy contained a fairly broad exception for ISOs who personally owned Xerox equipment, and it was not until 1989 that Xerox extended its refusal to deal to include those ISOs. In other words, jurors could reasonably find that prior to 1989 Xerox was generally willing to deal with an ISO if that ISO owned Xerox equipment, but after 1989 Xerox substantially limited the circumstances under which it would allow such equipment-owning ISOs to purchase parts. Several pieces of evidence permit such a finding.

First, the plain language of Xerox's two policies admits of this interpretation. The 1984 policy forbade sale of replacement parts subject to the following broad exception: "unless that third party is an end user purchaser." The 1989 policy, by contrast, restricted [*7] the definition of an end-user to only someone who used the copier "to make internal copies or to sell copies to the public or in a Facilities Management Operation." The policy went on to explain:

we will not sell . . . to an end-user if we have reason to believe that such resources will be used for purposes other than maintenance of the unit of equipment for which these resources are ordered. . . .

As a general rule, ISOs . . . are not considered to be eligible for sale of resources, including parts, on restricted products.

(Xerox Ex. F at 1) Thus, jurors could reasonably read the 1984 policy to mean that Xerox would deal with anyone who owned a Xerox machine regardless of whether that person was also an ISO, but read the 1989 policy to mean that Xerox would deal with anyone who owned a Xerox machine unless that person was also an ISO (except when the ISO could demonstrate very specific use requirements).

Second, the statements of CCS employees - at least when read in the light most favorable to CCS - also support a finding that Xerox did not, for the most part,<sup>2</sup> refuse to deal with enduser ISOs, such as CCS, prior to 1989, but did refuse to deal with them [*8] after 1989. William Dixon stated that in 1987 Xerox told him if he showed a serial number for a machine he owned he could order parts. (Dixon Aff. at 42) Similarly, Theodis Bethea, a CCS employee, testified that initially Xerox would allow orders so long as CCS could provide a serial number, and only later imposed stricter requirements. (Bethea Dep. at 15)

[*9] Alternatively, even if a jury concluded that Xerox's 1989 policy only restated the policy previously announced in 1984, there is sufficient evidence from which reasonable jurors could conclude that the policy was not seriously enforced until after the limitations period. As just noted, there is evidence that Xerox required only minimal

---

<sup>1</sup> Xerox's motion is only a motion for partial summary judgment. It does not, for example, address (a) CCS's claim that Xerox engaged in anti-competitive conduct other than "refusal to deal," or (b) CCS's claim that Xerox restarted its refusal to deal after the 1994 consent decree.

<sup>2</sup> Admittedly, there is some evidence that on occasion Xerox either reduced or rejected some CCS parts orders prior to 1989. (Xerox Ex. B; Dixon Dep. at 348-52) Construed in CCS's favor, that evidence only demonstrates that Xerox was not entirely willing to deal with end-user ISOs prior to 1989. It is, however, still consistent with a finding that, for the most part, Xerox was willing to deal with end-user ISOs prior to 1989, and, for the most part, was not willing to deal with them after 1989. (That is, of course, not the only inference that could be drawn from the evidence, but it is a reasonable one, which I must draw when deciding a motion for summary judgment.)

verification of copier ownership in order to allow orders. (Dixon Aff. at 42; Bethea Dep. at 15) Moreover, there is evidence that CCS was, in general, easily able to obtain needed parts prior to 1989 (Dixon Aff. PP35, 41, 44), as well as evidence that Xerox dramatically strengthened its enforcement techniques after 1989. Construed in the light most favorable to CCS, that evidence could reasonably be taken to indicate that, prior to the limitations period, Xerox's policy, at least as applied to CCS, was not strictly enforced and did not result in an actual refusal to deal.

Consequently, because jurors could reasonably conclude that Xerox's 1984 policy was not a complete refusal to deal, Xerox is not entitled to summary judgment on the ground that the 1989 policy was merely a "reaffirmation" of a prior refusal.

b. New Injury

Xerox argues that, even [*10] if its 1989 policy was an independent violation, there is no evidence that the policy caused any new injury to CCS. I disagree.

There are several pieces of evidence from which reasonable jurors could find that the 1989 policy caused a new injury to CCS's business. Dixon testified that the 1989 policy caused more harm to CCS than the previous policy. (Dixon Aff. P48) Several of CCS's clients testified that they did not experience any decline in CCS's ability to offer service until after 1989. (Payne Dep. at 17; Lewis Dep. at 21) CCS's expert, Jonathan Cunitz, opined that Xerox did not have ascertainable damages before 1990. (Cunitz Decl. P2)

Xerox's argues, however, that because it never conducted an "end-user verification" of CCS's equipment - a procedure provided for by the 1989 policy - there is no way the 1989 policy could have injured CCS. Although end-user verification was a significant part of the 1989 policy, there is evidence from which reasonable jurors could conclude that other changes introduced by the 1989 policy caused CCS harm. For example, Dixon stated that, starting in 1989, Xerox would delay orders in order to determine whether it needed to conduct verification and [*11] would require CCS to match ordered parts with specific machines. (Dixon Aff. PP44-45)

Accordingly, because there is evidence from which reasonable jurors could conclude that CCS received fresh injury from Xerox's 1989 policy, summary judgment on the ground that the 1989 policy did not cause any harm is inappropriate.

2. CCS's Motion for Summary Judgment

CCS argues that it is entitled to summary judgment against Xerox's affirmative defense of statute of limitations on two grounds: (1) that the record evidence compels a finding that Xerox engaged in independent violations within the limitation period; and (2) that the evidence compels a finding that CCS was not injured by any of Xerox's action until after the limitations period began. Viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to Xerox (because now CCS is the moving party), I conclude that neither finding is compelled.<sup>3</sup>

[*12] a. Independent Violation

Although I concluded above that reasonable jurors, viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to CCS, could find that the 1989 policy constituted an independent refusal to deal, that is not the same as concluding that the evidence compels such a finding. On the contrary, when the evidence is viewed in the light most favorable to Xerox, a very different finding is possible.

First, reasonable jurors could read the 1989 policy as merely restating the 1984 policy and providing additional mechanisms for enforcing that, unchanged, policy. Both policies forbade sales to ISOs and allowed sales to end users, and it would be quite reasonable to read the additional language contained in the 1989 policy as an elaboration, not an expansion, of the 1984 policy's restrictions.

---

<sup>3</sup>CCS also argues that the prior decision of the District of Kansas, when this case was consolidated as part of a multi-district litigation, settled the question whether the 1989 actions constituted an independent act. That argument has no merit. HN4↑ The Kansas decisions were not findings of fact, they were resolutions of motions, and the facts used by the court in deciding those motions were assumed true only for the purposes of those motions. They are, consequently, not binding on Xerox or this court.

Second, there is evidence that Xerox informed CCS as early as 1986 that it could only purchase parts for its machines if it actually needed the parts to service those machines. For example, in a letter dated October 10, 1986, Xerox informed CCS that it was reducing CCS's order to "those quantities deemed reasonable to support the machines our records indicate you personally own."<sup>4</sup> (Xerox [*13] Ex. B)

Third, although the evidence that CCS was able to obtain parts easily prior to 1989 could support a finding that Xerox did not refuse to deal before 1989, that evidence could merely reflect that CCS needed fewer parts before 1989 or that some Xerox employees were not diligent in enforcing Xerox's policies.

Accordingly, because reasonable jurors could find that Xerox's 1989 policy was not an independent refusal to deal but was only the further implementation of its prior refusal, CCS is not entitled to summary judgment on that ground.

b. Pre-Limitations Injury

CCS also argues that, even if Xerox's 1989 policy was [*14] not an independent refusal to deal, there is no evidence that CCS was injured prior to the start of the limitations period and therefore it is undisputed that CCS's cause of action did not accrue before the limitations period.

Although it is true that HN5 in general a cause of action does not accrue until the plaintiff is injured, there is plenty of evidence in this case that CCS was injured by Xerox's 1984 policy well before the start of the limitations period. CCS was forced to buy machines, at significant expense, in order to qualify as an end-user. (Dixon Aff. P37) CCS was forced to ask its customers to order parts on its behalf. (Dixon Aff. P41) One of CCS's employees was kicked out of a Xerox training class. (Dixon Aff. P40) CCS was forced to forgo an opportunity to expand its business into New York. (Dixon Tr. at 349)

In light of that evidence, reasonable jurors could find that CCS's injury accrued well before the start of the limitations period, making summary judgment against the statute of limitations defense inappropriate.

C. Mitigation of Damages

HN6 "An antitrust plaintiff has a duty to mitigate damages." Litton Systems, Inc. v. AT&T, 700 F.2d 785, 820 n.47 (2d Cir. 1980). [*15] Xerox argues that is entitled to summary judgment on this affirmative defense because it is undisputed that CCS could have, but did not, ask all its customers to order parts directly from Xerox. CCS argues that, on the contrary, it is entitled to summary judgment against this defense because it is undisputed that it took all reasonable steps to mitigate its damages.

There is some evidence that CCS was able to mitigate the effect of Xerox's policies by asking some of its customers to order parts. (Dixon Aff. PP35, 42) On the basis of that evidence, reasonable jurors could find that, had this been done with all customers, CCS might have significantly mitigated its damages. On the other hand, there is also evidence that it was not feasible for CCS to ask all of its customers to order parts because (a) some of its contracts required CCS to get the parts and (b) CCS's reputation would be harmed if its customers thought it could not obtain parts. (Dixon Aff. PP67-69) On the basis of that evidence, reasonable jurors could find that CCS could not have mitigated its damages more than it actually did.

In short, this a classic example of a disputed issue of material fact. Reasonable jurors [*16] could find that CCS could have mitigated its damages by asking more customers to order parts. Nevertheless, reasonable jurors could also find that this was not always a practical solution, and, where it was practical, CCS did get its customers to order parts. Consequently, neither party is entitled to summary judgment on the mitigation issue.

---

<sup>4</sup>The letter does not, however, establish conclusively that this was Xerox's policy as of 1986. There is evidence that Xerox subsequently relented and allowed CCS to order some of the requested parts. (Xerox Ex. D) Moreover, as explained above, supra n.2, the fact that on occasion Xerox reduced parts orders does not compel a conclusion that it had by then made a final refusal to deal.

D. Relevant Market

Xerox argues that in order to establish that the market for servicing Xerox high-speed copiers is the relevant market for antitrust purposes, CCS must establish that Xerox changed one or more of its policies regarding service of copiers after some customers had already purchased affected copiers. Xerox contends that CCS has not met that burden because "the undisputed facts show that Xerox has not changed its policies within the limitations period."

Even assuming that Xerox's statement of the law is correct, its assertions about the state of the record are not. As explained above, reasonable jurors could find that Xerox did change its policy within the limitations period and, consequently, reasonable jurors could find that customers who purchased copiers between 1984 and 1989 were unaware of the limitations that [*17] would be imposed on their ability to obtain ISO service. In other words, reasonable jurors could find that customers bought Xerox copiers at a time when it was reasonable for them to expect - either because of the exceptions in Xerox's 1984 policy or Xerox's failure to enforce that policy - that they could obtain low-cost, reliable, third-party service, only to later find - because of Xerox's 1989 change in policy or decision to start enforcing its earlier policy - that reliable service could not be obtained from those third-parties. Summary judgment on this ground is, therefore, unwarranted.

III. Conclusion

Xerox's motion for summary judgment (doc. # 76) is DENIED. CCS's motion for summary judgment (doc. # 88) is DENIED.

It is so ordered.

Dated at Bridgeport, Connecticut, this 2nd day of September 2005.

/s/ Stefan R. Underhill

United States District Judge

---

End of Document

Basic Med. Care Plus, Inc. v. N.C. Mut. Life Ins. Co.

United States District Court for the Middle District of North Carolina

September 6, 2005, Decided ; September 6, 2005, Filed

1:03CV00269

Reporter

2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 33033 *; 2005 WL 2205016

BASIC MEDICAL CARE PLUS, INC., Plaintiff, v. NORTH CAROLINA MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, Defendant.

Core Terms

---

Mutual, terminate, sales, counterclaims, unfair, premium, deceptive trade practices, summary judgment, lost profits, breach of contract, termination notice, matter of law, quarterly, damages, lawsuit, breach of contract claim, medical care, interpolation, competitor, annual, argues, anticipatory repudiation, target, partial summary judgment, summary judgment motion, insurance company, abuse of process, nominal damages, nonmoving party, memorandum

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

HN1[] Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

The summary judgment standard of review under Fed. R. Civ. P. 56 is well established. A party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law upon a showing that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). The material facts are those identified by controlling law as essential elements of claims asserted by the parties. A genuine issue as to such facts exists if the evidence forecast is sufficient for a reasonable trier of fact to find for the nonmoving party. No genuine issue of material fact exists if the nonmoving party fails to make a sufficient showing on an essential element of its case as to which it would have the burden of proof at trial.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

HN2[] Appellate Review, Standards of Review

In evaluating a forecast of evidence on summary judgment review, the court must view the facts and inferences reasonably to be drawn from them in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. When the moving party has carried its burden, the nonmoving party must come forward with evidence showing more than some "metaphysical doubt" that genuine and material factual issues exist. A mere scintilla of evidence is insufficient to circumvent summary judgment. Instead, the nonmoving party must convince the court that, upon the record taken as a whole, a rational trier of fact could find for the nonmoving party. Trial is unnecessary if the facts are undisputed, or if disputed, the dispute is of no consequence to the dispositive question.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Contracts Law > Breach > Anticipatory Repudiation

HN3 Breach, Anticipatory Repudiation

Repudiation is a positive statement by one party to the other party which indicates that the party will not or cannot substantially perform its contractual duties. A party to a contract repudiates his obligation under a contract when he expresses, by words or conduct, a positive, distinct, unequivocal and absolute refusal to perform. When a party repudiates its obligations under a contract before the time for performance under the contract, the repudiation becomes an anticipatory breach of the contract.

Contracts Law > ... > Sales of Goods > Breach, Excuse & Repudiation > General Overview

HN4 Sales of Goods, Breach, Excuse & Repudiation

The law in North Carolina is well-settled that if a party to the contract states that he cannot perform except on some condition which goes outside the terms of his contract then the statement will constitute a repudiation.

Contracts Law > Contract Interpretation > Ambiguities & Contra Proferentem

HN5 Contract Interpretation, Ambiguities & Contra Proferentem

When the language of a contract is plain and unambiguous then construction of the agreement is a matter of law for the court.

Contracts Law > ... > Estoppel > Equitable Estoppel > Elements of Equitable Estoppel

HN6 Equitable Estoppel, Elements of Equitable Estoppel

Equitable estoppel arises when a party by acts, representations, admissions, or by silence induces another to believe that certain facts exist, and such other person rightfully relies and acts upon that belief to his or her detriment.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Breach > Contracts Law > Breach

HN7 Consumer Protection, Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices

Under North Carolina law, "substantial aggravating circumstances" must accompany a breach of contract in order to give rise to an unfair or deceptive trade practice.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices

**HN8** Consumer Protection, Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices

The doctrines governing federal antitrust law apply to the North Carolina Unfair or Deceptive Trade Practices Act, N.C. Gen. Stat. § 75.1-1. A plaintiff may not be held liable under federal antitrust law for bringing an "objectively reasonable" lawsuit, regardless of the plaintiff's subjective intent in bringing the suit. A lawsuit is objectively reasonable if an objective litigant could conclude that the suit is reasonably calculated to elicit a favorable outcome.

Torts > Intentional Torts > Abuse of Process > Elements

**HN9** Abuse of Process, Elements

To establish a claim of abuse of process, a defendant must show that (1) a proceeding was initiated against it by the plaintiff or used by the plaintiff to achieve an ulterior purpose; and (2) once the proceeding was initiated, the plaintiff committed some willful act not proper in the regular prosecution of the proceeding. Where a defendant has made no attempt to show a willful or improper act by the plaintiff subsequent to the filing of the action, the defendant's counterclaim for abuse of process must be dismissed. Summary judgment is appropriate for a defendant where a plaintiff's allegations deal only with defendant's motives in filing the suit, rather than any abuse of the judicial system after the institution of the lawsuit.

Contracts Law > ... > Measurement of Damages > Foreseeable Damages > Lost Profits

**HN10** Foreseeable Damages, Lost Profits

The North Carolina Supreme Court has declined to adopt the "new business rule," a per se rule which would preclude lost profit damages for a new business with no established history of profitability. However, the Court has recognized that lost future profits are difficult for a new business to calculate and prove, and adopted the well-established principle of law that proof of damages of lost profits must be made with reasonable certainty.

Contracts Law > ... > Measurement of Damages > Foreseeable Damages > Lost Profits

Evidence > Types of Evidence > Testimony > Expert Witnesses

**HN11** Foreseeable Damages, Lost Profits

Under North Carolina caselaw, an expert opinion on lost profits based on his experience 30 years ago is wholly insufficient to support a claim for lost profits.

Contracts Law > ... > Measurement of Damages > Foreseeable Damages > Lost Profits

Evidence > Types of Evidence > Testimony > Expert Witnesses

**HN12** Foreseeable Damages, Lost Profits

The North Carolina courts have not allowed claims for lost profits where an expert's opinion is based solely on the claimant's own speculative business plan and not based on any independent research or data or any comparison to similar businesses.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Breach > Contracts Law > Breach

Contracts Law > ... > Damages > Measurement of Damages > Nominal Damages

HN13 [Contracts, Breach]

Where a plaintiff proves breach of contract he is entitled at least to nominal damages. When a prima facie case of breach of contract is made out, but there is no evidence upon which a jury could base a damage award, the injured party is still entitled to nominal damages for invasion of his legal rights.

Counsel: [*1] For BASIC MEDICAL CARE PLUS, INC., Plaintiff: AMIEL J. ROSSABI, JASON M. GOINS, FORMAN ROSSABI BLACK, P.A., GREENSBORO, NC; JOHN RUDY WALLACE, JOSEPH ALVAH NEWSOME, WALLACE CREECH & SARDA, L.L.P., RALEIGH, NC.

For NORTH CAROLINA MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, Defendant: JAMES W. VAUGHAN, ROBERT J. BURFORD, BURFORD & LEWIS, PLLC, DURHAM, NC.

For NORTH CAROLINA MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, Counter-Claimant: JAMES W. VAUGHAN, ROBERT J. BURFORD, BURFORD & LEWIS, PLLC, DURHAM, NC.

For BASIC MEDICAL CARE PLUS, INC., Counter-Defendant: AMIEL J. ROSSABI, FORMAN ROSSABI BLACK, P.A., GREENSBORO, NC; JOHN RUDY WALLACE, JOSEPH ALVAH NEWSOME, WALLACE CREECH & SARDA, L.L.P., RALEIGH, NC.

Judges: SHARP, Magistrate Judge.

Opinion by: P. Trevor Sharp

Opinion

---

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

SHARP, Magistrate Judge

This matter comes before the Court on (1) a motion by Defendant North Carolina Mutual Life Insurance Company ("NC Mutual") for summary judgment and for partial summary judgment (Pleading No. 23); and (2) a cross-motion by Plaintiff Basic Medical Care Plus, Inc. ("Basic Medical") for partial summary judgment (Pleading No. 25). The motions have been fully briefed, and the [*2] parties have been heard in oral argument. The motions are ready for a ruling.

I. Procedural History

On March 25, 2003, Plaintiff Basic Medical filed a complaint in this Court seeking damages against Defendant NC Mutual for breach of contract and unfair or deceptive trade practices in connection with the development of an insurance product called Basic Medical Care Plus. On May 30, 2003, Defendant NC Mutual filed an answer denying the material allegations in Plaintiff's complaint and asserting counterclaims of breach of contract, unfair or deceptive trade practices, and abuse of process against Plaintiff. Plaintiff filed a reply to the counterclaims on June 17, 2003. After a period of discovery, Defendant NC Mutual filed a motion for summary judgment and partial summary judgment, requesting the Court to grant summary judgment in its favor on its breach of contract and unfair or deceptive trade practices counterclaims and to dismiss all of Plaintiff's claims with prejudice. In turn, Plaintiff Basic Medical filed a cross-motion for partial summary judgment, urging the Court to grant summary judgment in Plaintiff's favor on its breach of contract claim and to dismiss all of Defendant's [*3] counterclaims with prejudice.

II. Statement of Facts

In May 1995, Henry "Hank" J. Miller ("Miller"), a resident of Tennessee and former insurance sales agent for the American Family Life Assurance Company ("AFLAC"), purchased a property and casualty insurance company called Vol-State Agency, Inc. ("Vol-State"). He has owned and operated the business since that time. (Pleading No. 26, Pl.'s Br. in Supp. of Mot. for Partial Summ. J., Ex. 1, Henry J. Miller Dep. at 9-11, 68, 79, 83.) In 1997, Miller began researching the creation of a new insurance product (the "Product") which would provide affordable, basic health insurance benefits to employees of small business owners who would not otherwise offer health coverage. Id. at 85, 97-98.

In April or May 2000, Miller solicited a consultant to assist him in finding an insurance company to underwrite the Product. Id. at 102-07, 110-12. The consultant introduced Miller to James Parrish, who was at that time the Executive Vice President of Defendant NC Mutual, a life insurance company headquartered in Durham, North Carolina. Id. at 111; Pl.'s Br. in Supp. of Mot. for Partial Summ. J., Ex. 2, James N. Parrish Dep. at 67. [*4] On September 20, 2000, Miller met with Parrish about the Product, and Parrish became Miller's contact person at NC Mutual regarding the Product. (Miller Dep. at 111; Parrish Dep. at 67, 76-77; Pl.'s Br. in Supp. of Mot. for Partial Summ. J., Ex. 3.)

Although NC Mutual had done very limited business in the field of health insurance, Miller persuaded representatives of NC Mutual that the Product could succeed, forecasting $ 25 million in sales within five years. (Pleading No. 34, Def.'s Br. in Supp. of Mot. for Summ. J. and for Partial Summ. J., Ex. L, Charles D. Watts, Jr. Dep. at 64; Ex. J, Henry J. Miller Dep. (Def.)<sup>1</sup> at 85, 137-38.) On or about November 3, 2000, Parrish called Miller to advise him that NC Mutual was "prepared to go forward" in bringing the Product to market. (Parrish Dep. at 90-95.) Miller sent Parrish a letter that same day to confirm the substance of their telephone conversation. (Pl.'s Br. in Supp. of Mot. for Partial Summ. J., Ex. 5.)

[*5] On approximately November 15, 2000, in anticipation of his retirement from NC Mutual, Parrish entered into an agreement with NC Mutual in which he agreed as follows:

Basic Medical Care Plus Plan: CONSULTANT shall develop a new product in the basic medical care area by July 1, 2001, for which he shall take the steps necessary to launch the product, provide the necessary management and operating services for the product as a self-contained unit including policy filing and follow-up, any licensing follow-up, daily operations, interfacing with the managing general agent and the third party administrator for that product, preparation of accounting entries and any other aspects of this product that the CONSULTANT and the COMPANY agree upon.

(Parrish Dep. at 97, 106, 108; Pl.'s Br. in Supp. of Mot. for Partial Summ. J., Ex. 6 at 2.) In late 2000 and early 2001, Parrish worked with the Actuarial Resources Corporation to develop and price an appropriate premium structure for the Product. (Pl.'s Br. in Supp. of Mot. for Partial Summ. J., Exs. 9-12.) On February 21, 2001, Miller and Parrish discussed the status of the Product and the terms of the Marketing Agreement to be signed [*6] by the parties. (Parrish Dep. at 148-51; Pl.'s Br. in Supp. of Mot. for Partial Summ. J., Ex. 13.) At the end of February 2001, Parrish retired from NC Mutual and continued to work on the Product pursuant to the terms of his Consultant Agreement. (Parrish Dep. at 100, 123-24.) On March 6, 2001, Parrish certified an Actuarial Memorandum for the Product, and on March 12, 2001, NC Mutual filed the necessary paperwork with the North Carolina Department of Insurance to ensure that the Product was approved for sale in North Carolina. (Parrish Dep. at 152; Pl.'s Br. in Supp. of Mot. for Partial Summ. J., Ex. 14; Def.'s Br. in Supp. of Mot. for Summ. J. and for Partial Summ. J., Ex. E.)

---

<sup>1</sup> The Court will cite to the portions of depositions attached to Plaintiff's briefs as, e.g., "Miller Dep. at 10." Citations to the portions of depositions attached to Defendant's briefs will appear as, e.g., "Miller Dep. (Def.) at 10."

On March 15, 2001, Miller sent a letter to Parrish asking for the status of the Marketing Agreement. (Parrish Dep. at 153-56; Pl.'s Br. in Supp. of Mot. for Partial Summ. J., Ex. 15.) Meanwhile, in March or April 2001, Miller incorporated and became president of Basic Medical Care Plus, Inc., a Tennessee corporation formed to market the Product in North Carolina and Tennessee. (Miller Dep. (Def.) at 112-13, 124-25, 148.) On May 16, 2001, Parrish faxed Miller a proposed Marketing Agreement, and Miller responded [*7] with his own suggestions about the agreement's terms. (Parrish Dep. at 157; Pl.'s Br. in Supp. of Mot. for Partial Summ. J., Ex. 16.) On July 17, 2001, the North Carolina Department of Insurance approved the Product for sale in North Carolina. (Def.'s Br. in Supp. of Mot. for Summ. J. and for Partial Summ. J., Ex. E at 191.) At approximately the same time, the Product was also approved for sale in Tennessee. (Def.'s Br. in Supp. of Mot. for Summ. J. and for Partial Summ. J., Ex. Q, Goldie Evans Dep. at 27.)

On July 18, 2001, Miller traveled from Tennessee to Durham to meet with representatives of NC Mutual to finalize the terms of the Marketing Agreement. Parrish had prepared a memorandum informing several of NC Mutual's representatives of the meeting with Miller. (Pl.'s Br. in Supp. of Mot. for Partial Summ. J., Ex. 19.) When Miller arrived in Durham, however, he was told that the President of NC Mutual, Bert Collins, was not available, and that the Marketing Agreement would have to be signed at a later date. (Pleading No. 1, Compl. P 18.)

Shortly thereafter, Parrish learned that certain representatives of NC Mutual were becoming reluctant to finalize the agreement that had been [*8] reached orally between Miller and Parrish. In a memorandum dated July 20, 2001, Parrish wrote to Collins as follows:

I was surprised to learn that you are now having reservations about this product. While still serving as Executive Vice President of NCM and at your urging, I worked with Hank Miller to bring this product to fruition as a source of new revenue for NCM. I made verbal commitments on several occasions that NCM wanted to move forward with the project. When Hank wanted to have NCM's commitment in writing, I developed a Marketing Agreement, . . . had it reviewed by Counsel, negotiated it with Hank Miller and committed to it verbally. I hope that you will go ahead and sign the agreement immediately.

...

As you know, I was never a proponent of health insurance but I feel good about the potential success of this venture.

...

. . . Because of the urgency that you felt for new premium sources, I pursued this project and recommend that you continue with it.

(Pl.'s Br. in Supp. of Mot. for Partial Summ. J., Ex. 20.) Parrish followed up the July 20, 2001 memorandum with a July 28, 2001 letter to Chuck Watts, Senior Vice President and General [*9] Counsel for NC Mutual, which provided as follows:

I do not agree with top management's refusal to sign the Marketing Agreement as negotiated in good faith with Miller. I believe that it is a mistake to take the steps that you are planning and do not wish to be associated with these efforts in any way. If the company does incur some liability as a result of the willful and intentional acts associated with [the] failure to continue with the project as agreed to with Hank Miller, please be advised that I would consider Section XII of the Consulting Agreement applicable and any monetary loss that I might suffer as a result of being drawn into the ill-advised course of action that top management has chosen will be borne by the Company.

Please notify Hank Miller that I am no longer associated with this project on Monday.

Id., Ex. 21.

Notwithstanding these areas of conflict, Collins and Miller finally executed the Marketing Agreement in late September 2001.<sup>2</sup> Id., Ex. 23. The Marketing Agreement named Basic Medical as NC Mutual's exclusive marketing

---

<sup>2</sup> Although the Marketing Agreement was signed by the parties some time in late September 2001, the agreement contained an effective date of April 1, 2001. The record provides no explanation for this discrepancy. (Pl.'s Br. in Supp. of Mot. for Partial Summ. J., Ex. 23.)

agent for the Product in North Carolina and Tennessee, and NC Mutual agreed to pay Basic Medical and its sales [*10] agents a commission for every policy of the Product sold in those states. Id. PP 1.1, 3.1. In return, the Marketing Agreement required Basic Medical to achieve the following yearly minimum premium sales levels:

2002	$ 1,000,000
2003	$ 1,500,000
2004	$ 2,000,000
2005	$ 2,500,000
Any year after 2005	$ 3,000,000

Id. P 3.2. The Marketing Agreement further provided that it could be terminated, among other reasons, (1) upon ninety days' written notice by either party if the agreement's minimum premium sales levels were not met; or (2) by NC Mutual upon NC Mutual's withdrawal of the Product from the market, provided that NC Mutual did not then market the Product anywhere in the United States during the following year. Id. PP 4.2, 5.1.1, 5.1.2.

[*11] After the execution of the Marketing Agreement, Miller worked towards fulfilling Basic Medical's contractual obligations by securing investors, recruiting agents and investing his own money. (Miller Dep. at 148, 160-68.) However, Miller was not able to devote a significant amount of time to these tasks in January, February, and March 2002, because his other company, Vol-State, was burdened with sharply increasing business demands following a change in Tennessee's insurance laws in January 2002. (Miller Dep. at 167-68; Pleading No. 37, Pl.'s Br. in Opp'n to Def.'s Mot. for Summ. J. and Partial Summ. J., Ex. 27, Henry J. Miller Aff. P 3; Miller Dep. (Def.) at 192; Pleading No. 31, Def.'s Br. in Opp'n to Pl.'s Mot. for Partial Summ. J., Ex. M, Miller Dep. Vol. II (Def.) at 60-61.) Also during this time, NC Mutual was undergoing a strategic planning process and examining its business organization and executive structure in anticipation of the retirement of Bert Collins and James Parrish. (Watts Dep. at 6-7.) As part of this process, NC Mutual reevaluated its decision to offer health insurance policies for sale, including the Product. As a result, NC Mutual carefully monitored Basic Medical's [*12] performance under the Marketing Agreement. (Def.'s Br. in Supp. of Mot. for Summ. J. and for Partial Summ. J., Ex. H, resp. to interrog. no. 5.)

On March 7, 2002, Watts called Miller and informed him that NC Mutual was dissatisfied with the progress that Miller had made towards the 2002 minimum premium sales requirement of $ 1,000,000.<sup>3</sup> [*14] (Def.'s Br. in Opp'n to Pl.'s Mot. for Partial Summ. J., Ex. A, Charles D. Watts, Jr. Aff. P 14; Miller Dep. (Def.) at 204) On March 11, 2002, Miller received a fax from Watts which provided in relevant part as follows:

Pursuant to our conversation last week, it appears to us, given the performance of the first quarter of this year, that there is very little chance that you would be able to meet the sales targets that are established in our agreement dated April 1, 2001, as amended. Under paragraph 5.1.1 either party may terminate the agreement "upon ninety (90) days prior written notice to the other if or when production requirements . . . are not met." While the production amounts are stated as annual goals, we believe that nothing in the agreement precludes our interpolating them into quarterly goals. Thus, since we believe that you will not [*13] have made any material progress toward to [sic] meeting [the] one quarter of the million dollar annual target by March 31, 2002, we are giving notice of termination to be effective June 1, 2002.

---

<sup>3</sup>The parties dispute the contents of the remainder of their conversation on March 7, 2002. Miller maintains that he advised Watts of the business demands on Vol-State and his temporary inability to devote more time to development of the Product. (Miller Aff. P 3; Miller Dep. at 168; Miller Dep. (Def.) at 192, 196; Miller Dep. Vol. II (Def.) at 63.) Watts denies that Miller mentioned this time commitment to Vol-State in any fashion. (Def.'s Br. in Opp'n to Pl.'s Mot. for Partial Summ. J., Ex. O, Charles D. Watts, Jr. Dep. Vol. II at 15.)

. . . We will continue to support you in any way that we can and if your performance begins to approach targeted levels before June 1, 2002 nothing could make us happier than to rescind this letter of termination.

(Pl.'s Br. in Supp. of Mot. for Partial Summ. J., Ex. 26.) Miller did not agree with Watts that the Marketing Agreement gave NC Mutual the right to "interpolate" the annual premium goals into quarterly goals.<sup>4</sup> (Miller Aff. P 5; Miller Dep. (Def.) at 196, 198, 204.) Miller felt that it "would have been inappropriate and irresponsible to continue to hire a sales force in light of the notice of termination." (Miller Aff. P 7.) Accordingly, Miller interpreted Watts' March 11th letter as a termination of the Marketing Agreement and held a meeting with his board of directors, which voted to cease all operations immediately. Id. P 4; Pl.'s Br. in Supp. of Mot. for Partial Summ. J., Ex. 25; Miller Dep. (Def.) at 152.).

Following the board's decision to cease all operations of Basic Medical, Miller took no further actions to market the Product or a similar health insurance policy to any other insurance companies. (Miller Dep. (Def.) at 205-08; Miller Dep. Vol. II (Def.) at 32-33.)

III. Summary Judgment Standard of Review

HN1[] The summary judgment standard of review under Rule 56 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure is well established. A party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law upon a showing that "there is no genuine issue as to any material fact." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\) [*15]. The material facts are those identified by controlling law as essential elements of claims asserted by the parties. A genuine issue as to such facts exists if the evidence forecast is sufficient for a reasonable trier of fact to find for the nonmoving party. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 \(1986\). No genuine issue of material fact exists if the nonmoving party fails to make a sufficient showing on an essential element of its case as to which it would have the burden of proof at trial. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322-23, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 \(1986\). HN2[] In evaluating a forecast of evidence on summary judgment review, the court must view the facts and inferences reasonably to be drawn from them in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. Anderson, 477 U.S. at 255.

When the moving party has carried its burden, the nonmoving party must come forward with evidence showing more than some "metaphysical doubt" that genuine and material factual issues exist. Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 586, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 \(1986\), cert. denied, 481 U.S. 1029, 107 S. Ct. 1955, 95 L. Ed. 2d 527 (1987). A mere scintilla of evidence [*16] is insufficient to circumvent summary judgment. Anderson, 477 U.S. at 252. Instead, the nonmoving party must convince the court that, upon the record taken as a whole, a rational trier of fact could find for the nonmoving party. Id. at 248-49. Trial is unnecessary if "the facts are undisputed, or if disputed, the dispute is of no consequence to the dispositive question." Mitchell v. Data General Corp., 12 F.3d 1310, 1315-16 \(4th Cir. 1993\).

IV. Discussion

A. The Breach of Contract Claims

Basic Medical moves for summary judgment on its breach of contract claim on the ground that NC Mutual's March 11th notice of termination constituted an anticipatory breach of the Marketing Agreement, citing Pitts v. Broyhill, 88 N.C. App. 651, 364 S.E.2d 738 \(1988\) and Tillis v. Calvine Cotton Mills, Inc., 251 N.C. 359, 111 S.E.2d 606 \(1959\). Basic Medical argues that NC Mutual's "interpolation" of the annual premium sales requirements into quarterly requirements was not supported by the "plain meaning" of the Marketing Agreement, and thus, that NC Mutual's

---

<sup>4</sup>The parties disagree whether Miller attempted to contact Watts about the March 11th letter. Miller maintains that he attempted to call an NC Mutual representative, Art Davis, and Watts at least twice, leaving messages that were not returned. (Miller Aff. P 6; Miller Dep. (Def.) at 152, 188-89, 204; Miller Dep. Vol. II (Def.) at 28.) Watts maintains that he always returns his calls, and that if Miller had called him, he would have been informed of the call and returned it. (Watts Dep. Vol. II at 14.)

attempt to terminate the agreement pursuant [*17] to these extra-contractual quarterly goals was an anticipatory breach.

In response, NC Mutual argues that (1) the elements of anticipatory breach have not been met;<sup>5</sup> (2) NC Mutual's interpolation of the annual premium goals into quarterly goals was a reasonable contract interpretation; (3) even if not reasonable, the interpolation into quarterly goals was at most an immaterial breach of the Marketing Agreement; (4) Basic Medical's breach of contract claim is barred by equitable estoppel; and (5) any breach of the Marketing Agreement by NC Mutual was excused by the doctrine of mutual mistake. The Court will address each of these arguments in turn.

[*18] HN3[] Repudiation is a positive statement by one party to the other party which indicates that the party will not or cannot substantially perform its contractual duties. Millis Constr. Co. v. Fairfield Sapphire Valley, Inc., 86 N.C. App. 506, 510, 358 S.E.2d 566, 569 (1987). A party to a contract repudiates his obligation under a contract when he expresses, by words or conduct, a "positive, distinct, unequivocal and absolute refusal to perform." Messer v. Laurel Hill Assoc., 93 N.C. App. 439, 443, 378 S.E.2d 220, 223 (1989)(quoting Edwards v. Proctor, 173 N.C. 41, 91 S.E. 584 (1917)); N.C. Pattern Jury Instr., Civil § 502.05 (2003). When a party repudiates its obligations under a contract before the time for performance under the contract, the repudiation becomes an anticipatory breach of the contract. Id.

Defendant NC Mutual argues that its March 11th notice of termination cannot be an anticipatory repudiation because it was not a "positive, distinct, unequivocal and absolute refusal to perform." See Messer, 93 N.C. App. at 443, 378 S.E.2d at 223. NC Mutual points out that its March 11th letter expressly conditioned [*19] termination of the Marketing Agreement upon Basic Medical's ability or inability to make "appreciable progress" towards the 2002 premium sales requirement:

If your performance begins to approach targeted levels before June 1, 2002 nothing could make us happier than to rescind this letter of termination . . . If by the beginning of June we have had no appreciable progress toward the goal, we will stand on this notice at that time as an effective basis to terminate our relationship under the contract.

(Def.'s Br. in Supp. of Mot. for Summ. J. and for Partial Summ. J., Ex. C.)

The Court finds that the "conditional" nature of the March 11th notice of termination does not shield it from constituting an anticipatory repudiation. The law in North Carolina is well-settled that "if a party to the contract states that he cannot perform except on some condition which goes outside the terms of his contract then the statement will constitute a repudiation." Millis Constr. Co. v. Fairfield Sapphire Valley, Inc., 86 N.C. App. 506, 511, 358 S.E.2d 566, 569 (1987)(emphasis added). In Millis Constr. Co., the plaintiff was an independent contractor who was performing [*20] framing work on residences on the defendant's land pursuant to a series of contracts. Id. at 506, 358 S.E.2d at 567. During the course of construction, the plaintiff informed the defendant that he was "belly up" and "busted," and that he did not have enough money to complete the job. Id. at 507-08, 358 S.E.2d at 567. The plaintiff then asked the defendant to release the retainage for one of the buildings before it was due under the contract. Id. at 508, 358 S.E.2d at 567-68. The Court of Appeals held that because the plaintiff stated that he would not perform except on a condition (release of retainage before it was due) that went outside the terms of the contract, the trial court erred in not instructing the jury on the issue of anticipatory repudiation. Id. at 511, 358 S.E.2d at 569.

In this case, the Court finds that NC Mutual's "interpolation" of the annual premium sales requirements into quarterly requirements was an unreasonable contract interpretation and was not supported by the plain language of the Marketing Agreement. The critical language of the Marketing Agreement provides as follows:

---

<sup>5</sup> NC Mutual also argues that the March 11th letter was not an anticipatory breach because NC Mutual possessed the right under the Marketing Agreement to withdraw the Product from the market and terminate the Marketing Agreement at any time and in its sole discretion. NC Mutual asserts that it would have withdrawn the Product if Basic Medical had challenged NC Mutual's right to send the March 11th letter. This argument fails. The Court will not adjudicate this matter on the basis of what NC Mutual might have done differently if it had the wisdom of hindsight.

3.2 As consideration [*21] for the fees being paid by NCM to BMCP hereinabove, BMCP shall provide to NCM at least the following minimum production amounts in the following calendar years: 2002, $ 1,000,000; 2003, $ 1,500,000; 2004, $ 2,000,000; and 2005, $ 2,500,000. After the year 2005, the minimum production target premium amounts shall be $ 3,000,000 per year. However, the amount received in excess of the minimum production premium as hereinabove scheduled shall be credited cumulatively forward to the following years for purposes of crediting minimum annual premium amounts. Notwithstanding the above, the target premium amount in any year after 2001 must be $ 1,000,000 or more.

(Defs.' Br. in Supp. of Mot. for Summ. J. and for Partial Summ. J., Ex. B § 3.2)(emphasis added). This language is clear and unambiguous - the premium sales requirements are based on "calendar years" - and nothing in this section, nor any other section of the Marketing Agreement, gave NC Mutual the right to "interpolate" these annual requirements into quarterly requirements. The Court finds that NC Mutual's interpretation of section 3.2 was unreasonable as a matter of law. See Whirlpool Corp. v. Dailey Constr., Inc., 110 N.C. App. 468, 471, 429 S.E.2d 748, 751 \(1993\) [*22] ("When the language of a contract is plain and unambiguous then construction of the agreement is a matter of law for the court.") Because NC Mutual's interpolation of the annual sales goals into quarterly goals was unreasonable, it follows as a matter of law that NC Mutual did not have the right to demand reasonable assurances of performance from Basic Medical based on these contrived, extra-contractual sales requirements. Under the authority of Millis Constr. Co., NC Mutual's extra-contractual demands amounted to an anticipatory repudiation of the Marketing Agreement.

NC Mutual argues that Millis Constr. Co. does not provide authority for this Court to grant summary judgment to Basic Medical on its breach of contract claim because the Court of Appeals at most found that the plaintiff's statements made the issue of anticipatory repudiation a jury question. This is an overly narrow reading of Millis Constr. Co. First, the Court notes that the Millis court's holding was largely due to the procedural posture of the case - the court was merely asked to rule whether the trial court erred by failing to instruct the jury on the issue of anticipatory breach and was not [*23] asked to decide whether the defendant had established a claim of anticipatory breach as a matter of law. Second, the plaintiff's statement, "that if [the defendant] would agree to release the retainge on building number 7 which was 99% complete [the plaintiff] would have enough money to pay labor," at most implied that the plaintiff would not perform unless he received the undue retainage. The plaintiff's statement was not an express refusal to perform except on an extra-contractual condition, and thus, the Court of Appeals properly left the issue for the jury to decide.

In contrast, in this case, the March 11th notice of termination unequivocally states that NC Mutual will terminate the Marketing Agreement if Basic Medical has not made "appreciable progress" towards the $ 500,000 in premium sales required by June 1, 2002, see Def.'s Br. in Supp. of Mot. for Summ. J. and for Partial Summ. J., Ex. C - a requirement which is clearly outside the terms of the Marketing Agreement. This places the March 11th notice of termination squarely within the doctrine of anticipatory repudiation. See Pittsburgh-Des Moines Steel Co. v. Brookhaven Manor Water Co., 532 F.2d 572 \(7th Cir. 1976\); [*24] Westinghouse Elec. Corp. v. CX Processing Labs., Inc., 523 F.2d 668 \(9th Cir. 1975\); Restatement (2d) of Contracts § 250 cmt. b (1981); Unif. Commercial Code § 2-610 cmt. 2 (2004); 4 A. Corbin, Contracts § 973 at 910 (1951).

NC Mutual nevertheless contends that even if the Court should find that NC Mutual breached the Marketing Agreement, as it has, the breach was immaterial, and thus, Basic Medical did not have the right to declare the Marketing Agreement at an end. This contention is without merit. The March 11th letter made it clear that NC Mutual expected Basic Medical's premium sales to "begin to approach targeted levels," i.e., $ 500,000, by June 1, 2002, or NC Mutual would terminate the Marketing Agreement effective June 1, 2002. (Defs.' Br. in Supp. of Mot. for Summ. J. and for Partial Summ. J., Ex. C.) The evidence before the Court is that Basic Medical had sold virtually HN4 [↑] no policies at the time of the March 11th letter. (Miller Dep. 167-68.) Thus, upon receiving this letter, Miller realized there was little chance of avoiding termination of the Marketing Agreement. (Miller Dep. (Def.) at [*25] 192-93, 196-98.) In addition, Miller believed that it would be unethical and futile to continue to attempt to recruit agents while under the cloud of probable termination. See Miller Aff. P 6. Thus, the March 11th letter directly resulted in Basic Medical immediately ceasing all operations. The Court finds as a matter of law that NC Mutual's March 11th letter was a material breach of the Marketing Agreement.

NC Mutual contends that Basic Medical's breach of contract claim is barred by the doctrine of equitable estoppel. More specifically, NC Mutual claims that Basic Medical "refused to contact (and refused to permit its attorneys to contact)" NC Mutual after receipt of the March 11th letter until specific performance of the Marketing Agreement was no longer possible, knowing that NC Mutual would interpret Basic Medical's silence as an acquiescence to the terms and conditions of the March 11th letter, and then brought this lawsuit claiming millions of dollars in lost profits. (Def.'s Br. in Opp'n to Pl.'s Mot. for Partial Summ. J. at 15)(emphasis in original).

NC Mutual's argument is meritless. HN5<sup>6</sup> "Equitable estoppel arises when a 'party by acts, representations, admissions, [*26] or by silence . . . induces another to believe that certain facts exist, and such other person rightfully relies and acts upon that belief to his or her detriment.'" State ex rel. Easley v. Rich Food Servs., Inc., 139 N.C. App. 691, 702, 535 S.E.2d 84, 91 \(2000\)(citation omitted). Contrary to NC Mutual's contention, Miller testified on deposition that he attempted to contact both Art Davis and Chuck Watts on at least two occasions following receipt of the March 11th letter, leaving messages each time that were not returned. (Miller Aff. P 6; Miller Dep. (Def.) at 152, 188-89, 204; Miller Dep. Vol. II (Def.) at 28.) When he did not receive a response, Miller and his board of directors determined that any further attempts to resolve the problems between Basic Medical and NC Mutual would be futile. (Pl.'s Br. in Supp. of Mot. for Partial Summ. J., Ex. 25; Miller Dep. (Def.) at 192-93, 196-98.) In contrast, there is simply no evidence in the record of a plan or actions on the part of Basic Medical to deceive NC Mutual regarding its intentions following the March 11th letter. Basic Medical had no duty to respond to NC Mutual's anticipatory repudiation and material breach, [*27] and NC Mutual cannot manufacture one out of the doctrine of equitable estoppel.

NC Mutual finally argues that if it did breach the Marketing Agreement, its breach was excused by the doctrine of mutual mistake, i.e., that Basic Medical mistakenly interpreted the March 11th letter as an absolute renunciation of the Marketing Agreement. Again, the Court finds no merit to NC Mutual's argument. It is clear from NC Mutual's own argument that the mistake alleged was not "mutual" but unilateral - according to NC Mutual's theory of the case, NC Mutual intended the March 11th letter to be a conditional notice of termination, and it was Basic Medical that misinterpreted the March 11th letter as an outright termination of the Marketing Agreement. The defense of mutual mistake fails as a matter of law.<sup>6</sup> [*28] Both parties have also moved for summary judgment on NC Mutual's counterclaim for breach of contract. NC Mutual bases its counterclaim on Basic Medical's failure to provide NC Mutual with reasonable assurances of performance and its "unreasonable" decision to cease all operations upon receipt of the March 11th letter. However, as the Court has discussed above, NC Mutual did not have the right to request reasonable assurances of performance on the basis of extra-contractual requirements. See Millis Constr. Co., 86 N.C. App. at 511, 358 S.E.2d at 569. It follows as a matter of law that Basic Medical's response (or lack of response) to the March 11th letter was not a breach of the Marketing Agreement, and NC Mutual's counterclaim for breach of contract must be dismissed.

B. The Unfair or Deceptive Trade Practices Claims

Basic Medical initially based its unfair or deceptive trade practices ("UDTP") claim on NC Mutual's alleged marketing of an insurance product (the "VMC policy") substantially similar to the Product at the approximate time that NC Mutual attempted to terminate the Marketing Agreement. (Compl. PP 27, 35; Miller Dep. (Def.) at 237.) In its brief [*29] in support of its motion for summary judgment on Basic Medical's UDTP claim, NC Mutual proffered evidence that the VMC policy was intended for sale to educational institutions in the State of Florida, was never approved for sale by the Florida Department of Insurance, and was abandoned by NC Mutual nine months before

---

<sup>6</sup> NC Mutual also argues that "insofar as BMCP contends that the Marketing Agreement limits or prohibits NCM from making a request for reasonable assurances as set forth in the March 11 letter, the Court should deem those parts of the Marketing Agreement . . . to be invalid for failure of the parties to reach a meeting of the minds, as the right to request reasonable assurances was an implied and understood material term of the agreement." (Def.'s Br. in Opp'n to Pl.'s Mot. for Partial Summ. J. at 16.) The Court disagrees. The general right to request reasonable assurances is not challenged by Basic Medical. Rather, it is the "right" to request reasonable assurances based on "interpolated" quarterly sales requirements that is challenged, and the Court finds that this supposed "right" was not "an implied and understood material term of the agreement."

the March 11th letter was sent to Basic Medical. (Def.'s Br. in Supp. of Mot. for Summ. J. and for Partial Summ. J., Exs. F, G; Ex. N, James N.Parrish Dep. (Def.) at 163-65, 170-71.)

In its brief in opposition to NC Mutual's motion for summary judgment, Basic Medical shifted its argument on its UDTP claim to the rather bald assertion that NC Mutual concocted an elaborate, four-part plan to terminate the Marketing Agreement by: (1) eliminating Parrish as NC Mutual's representative for the Product; (2) causing Charles Welch<sup>7</sup> to abandon his commitment to be Basic Medical's North Carolina State Manager; (3) ignoring or failing to cooperate with Miller by, among other things, denying knowledge of Miller's commitment to Vol-State from HN6; and (4) seizing the opportunity to terminate the Marketing Agreement while Miller was finishing up his work for Vol-State. [*30]

At the outset, the Court notes that Basic Medical's argument is based almost entirely upon speculation and appears to be a fanciful attempt to resuscitate its lifeless UDTP claim in the face of compelling evidence that Basic Medical's theories about the VMC policy were unfounded. Second, even if NC Mutual was contemplating terminating the Marketing Agreement, the Court notes that NC Mutual possessed the right to terminate the Agreement on a variety of grounds (as did Basic Medical), and that there is nothing inherently unfair or deceptive about a strategic business decision to terminate an agreement with another party.

The only apparent "wrongful" conduct by NC Mutual on the record before the Court is its "interpolation" of the annual premium sales requirements into quarterly requirements. However, HN7 under [*31] North Carolina law, "substantial aggravating circumstances" must accompany this breach of contract in order to give rise to an unfair or deceptive trade practice. See *Charlotte Commer. Group, Inc. v. Fleet Nat'l Bank \(In re Charlotte Commer. Group, Inc.\), 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5392, No. 1:02CV00343, 2003 WL 1790882, at \*3 \(M.D.N.C. Mar. 13, 2003\)*(unpublished opinion)(Bullock, J.) The Court finds no such circumstances present here. The Court finds that Basic Medical's UDTP claim must be dismissed.

Similarly, the Court finds that NC Mutual's UDTP counterclaim is subject to dismissal. NC Mutual essentially argues that Basic Medical's decision to litigate this matter rather than making any "meaningful effort" to resolve the issues raised by the March 11th notice of termination constitutes an unfair or deceptive trade practice. (Def.'s Br. in Opp'n to Pl.'s Mot. for Partial Summ. J. at 18-19.)

NC Mutual's argument is foreclosed by the North Carolina Court of Appeals' decision in *Reichhold Chemicals, Inc. v. Goel, 146 N.C. App. 137, 555 S.E.2d 281 \(2001\)*, disc. rev. denied, 356 N.C. 677, 577 S.E.2d 634 (2003). In Reichhold Chemicals, the employer filed a variety of claims against a former employee, [*32] including a claim misappropriation of trade secrets. *Id. at 141-42, 555 S.E.2d at 284*. To support its trade secrets claim, the employer obtained confidential documents from a competitor with whom the employee had a consulting agreement and filed a complaint with the Federal Bureau of Investigation ("FBI") regarding the alleged theft of its trade secrets. *Id. at 143, 555 S.E.2d at 285*. The documents and FBI investigation revealed that the employer's belief that the employee had misappropriated its trade secrets was unfounded. Id. Nevertheless, the employer terminated the employee and filed a lawsuit against the employee and the competitor. *Id. at 144, 555 S.E.2d at 286*. In response, the employee alleged numerous counterclaims, including a claim of unfair or deceptive trade practices. *Id. at 141, 555 S.E. 2d at 284*. The employee argued that his former employer's actions in filing the lawsuit, obtaining the competitor's documents, and filing a complaint with the FBI constituted unfair or deceptive trade practices. *Id. at 156-57, 555 S.E. 2d at 293*.

The Reichhold Chemicals court first held that [*33] HN8 the doctrines governing federal antitrust law announced in *Eastern R.R. Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 81 S. Ct. 523, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464 \(1961\)* and *Professional Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Indus., Inc., 508 U.S. 49, 113 S. Ct. 1920, 123 L. Ed. 2d 611 \(1993\)* applied to the North Carolina Unfair or Deceptive Trade Practices Act, N. C. Gen. Stat. § 75.1-1. *146 N.C. App. at 156, 555 S.E.2d at 293*. Under Noerr and Professional Real Estate Investors, a plaintiff may not be held liable under federal antitrust law for bringing an "objectively reasonable" lawsuit, regardless of the plaintiffs subjective intent in bringing the suit. Professional Real Estate Investors, 508 U.S. at 57, 113 S. Ct. at 1928, 123 L. Ed. 2d at 621. "A lawsuit is objectively reasonable if 'an objective litigant could conclude that the suit is reasonably calculated to elicit a favorable outcome.'" Reichhold Chemicals, 146 N.C. App. at 157, 555 S.E.2d at 293 (quoting Professional Real Estate Investors, 508 U.S. at 60, 113 S. Ct. at 1928, 123 L. Ed. 2d at 624). [*34] Accordingly, the Court of Appeals held that even though the employer filed its lawsuit for "no legitimate purpose," the suit against the competitor was not "utterly baseless" and was therefore "objectively reasonable." 146 N.C. App. at 157, 555 S.E.2d at 293.

---

<sup>7</sup> Charles Welch had been the Senior Vice President for Agency Operations at NC Mutual prior to accepting the position of North Carolina State Manager with Basic Medical in September, 2001. (Compl. P 20, Ex. B.)

Applying Reichhold Chemicals to the case at bar, the Court finds without hesitation that Basic Medical's lawsuit is objectively reasonable, especially since the Court has found an actual breach of contract by Defendant NC Mutual. To the extent that NC Mutual argues that its UDTP claim is based not just on this lawsuit but on Basic Medical's entire "course of conduct" following receipt of the March 11th notice of termination, see Def.'s Br. in Opp'n to Pl.'s Mot. for Partial Summ. J. at 18-19, the Court notes that Reichhold Chemicals once again forecloses this argument:

[The employee] suggests that [the employer's] activities preceding the filing of its suit against [the competitor], including acquiring confidential [competitor] documents and filing a complaint with the FBI, constitute an unfair trade practice independent of the suit against [the competitor]. However, there is no indication [*35] that [the employer] undertook those acts for any trade related purpose other than preparation for the suit against [the competitor]. We hold that those actions alone are insufficient to qualify as unfair trade practices under N.C.G.S. § 75-1.1

146 N.C. App. at 157, 555 S.E.2d at 293. Similarly, here, there is no indication that Basic Medical's actions following receipt of the March 11th notice of termination were for a "trade related purpose." Rather, it is apparent that Basic Medical was preparing for its lawsuit against NC Mutual. NC Mutual's counterclaim for unfair or deceptive trade practices must be dismissed.

C. The Abuse of Process Claim

In its third counterclaim against Basic Medical, NC Mutual once again argues that Basic Medical's decision to litigate this matter rather than to resolve the issues raised by the March 11th notice of termination constitutes an "abuse of process."

The Court finds this counterclaim to be baseless. HN9↑ To establish a claim of abuse of process, NC Mutual must show that (1) a proceeding was initiated against it by Basic Medical or used by Basic Medical to achieve an ulterior purpose; and (2) [*36] once the proceeding was initiated, Basic Medical committed some willful act not proper in the regular prosecution of the proceeding. Semones v. Southern Bell Tel. & Tel. Co., 106 N.C. App. 334, 341, 416 S.E.2d 909, 913 (1992). Because NC Mutual has made no attempt to show a willful or improper act by Basic Medical subsequent to the filing of this action, NC Mutual's counterclaim for abuse of process must be dismissed. See Edwards v. Advo Sys., Inc., 93 N.C. App. 154, 376 S.E.2d 765 (1989)(summary judgment affirmed for defendant where plaintiff's allegations dealt only with defendant's motives in filing the suit, rather than any abuse of the judicial system after the institution of the lawsuit).

D. Loss of Profit Damages

NC Mutual moves for summary judgment on the issue of Basic Medical's damages on the grounds that Basic Medical's only claimed damages are lost profits, and that Basic Medical's proffered evidence to support these highly speculative damages is insufficient as a matter of law, citing Olivetti Corp. v. Ames Bus. Sys., Inc., 319 N.C. 534, 356 S.E.2d 578 (1987). Accordingly, NC Mutual urges the Court [*37] to limit Basic Medical's recovery to nominal damages. Basic Medical responds that its three experts have sufficiently described its lost profit damages with "reasonable certainty," as required by North Carolina law.

After consideration of all of the relevant evidence, the Court concludes that Basic Medical's evidence of lost profits is too speculative to support a verdict and fails the "reasonable certainty" test as a matter of law. The starting point in the Court's analysis is the Olivetti decision of the North Carolina Supreme Court. In Olivetti, HN10↑ the Court declined to adopt the "new business rule," a per se rule which would preclude lost profit damages for a new business with no established history of profitability. Id. at 546, 356 S.E.2d at 585. However, the Court recognized that "lost future profits are difficult for a new business to calculate and prove," and adopted the "well-established principle of law that proof of damages [of lost profits] must be made with reasonable certainty." Id. (citing Weyerhaeuser Co. v. Godwin Bldg. Supply Co., Inc., 292 N.C. 557, 234 S.E.2d 605 \(1977\)).

Basic Medical has produced three expert [*38] reports in support of its claim for lost profits, none of which, either individually or cumulatively, meets the "reasonable certainty" standard. Plaintiff's first expert, Jay D. Wink, III, has been an insurance broker providing voluntary benefits and enrollment services to employers since 1988. (Pl.'s Br. in Opp'n to Def.'s Mot. for Summ. J. and Partial Summ. J., Ex. 29.) In his expert report, Wink opined that "Basic Medical Care was established to address a significant need in the market place" and that "Mr. Miller's previous experience enabled him to establish a sound sales strategy." Id. At most, this statement by Wink is a vague prediction that the Product might be profitable. However, Wink's opinion fails to address how much profit Basic Medical would have earned but for NC Mutual's breach, which is the critical damage issue in this case. In fact, Wink admitted that he lacked the ability to make any projections about what Basic Medical's actual sales would have been. (Def.'s Br. in Supp. of Mot. for Summ. J. and for Partial Summ. J., Ex. R, Jay D. Wink, III Dep. at 110-15.) ("I have no intention of going out and swagging some numbers.")

Plaintiff's second expert fares [*39] no better. Donald L. Larson is a Regional Sales Coordinator for AFLAC and has been with the company since December 1973. In his expert report, Larson opined as follows:

The Basic Medical Care Plus is a product that employers and their employees are asking for. I believe that a Basic Medical Care Plus sales person calling on the small business employer market as we did with the cancer insurance product in the middle and late nineteen-seventies could very conservatively establish the equivalent of twenty 15 employee new accounts in his/her first twelve months in the field. I believe that it would be realistic to project that each of those twenty new accounts would generate a minimum of $ 10,000 in new annualized premium or $ 200,000 in total new annualized premium.

15 employees X $ 700.00 Annualized Premium = $ 10,500 per new account

20 new accounts X $ 10,500 = $ 210,000

(Pl.'s Br. in Opp'n to Def.'s Mot. for Summ. J. and Partial Summ. J., Ex. 34)(emphasis added). The fundamental problem with Larson's opinion is that Larson relied on his experience with AFLAC 30 years ago to predict what Basic Medical would be able to achieve in 2002 and beyond. [*40] HN11↑ Under North Carolina caselaw, this is wholly insufficient to support a claim for lost profits. McNamara v. Wilmington Mall Realty Corp., 121 N.C. App. 400, 409, 466 S.E.2d 324, 330 \(1996\)(expert's testimony "too conjectural to support an award of lost profits" for small custom jewelry store where based on data from independent national jewelers); see also Olivetti, 319 N.C. at 548-49, 356 S.E.2d at 587. Furthermore, even if valid, Larson's opinion presents only one piece of the overall puzzle - Larson has opined about how many policies one Basic Medical sales person could sell. Missing from his opinion is (1) how many agents Basic Medical could hire and retain at any given time; and (2) any attempt to tie the predicted profits to calendar years. Finally, Larson admitted in his deposition that his projections were a "layman's estimate," and not based on any scientific or market data. (Def.'s Br. in Supp. of Mot. for Summ. J. and for Partial Summ. J., Ex. S, Don Larson Dep. at 43-47.)

Plaintiffs third expert, Christopher J. Ruhm, is the Jefferson-Pilot Excellence Professor of Economics at University of North Carolina at Greensboro. (Pl.'s Br. in [*41] Opp'n to Def.'s Mot. for Summ. J. and Partial Summ. J., Ex. 31.) In his expert report, Ruhm provided damages calculations for Basic Medical based upon two different "scenarios" or sets of assumptions. According to Ruhm, Basic Medical's lost profits were $ 3,873,673 under the first scenario and $ 1,178,468 under the second scenario. Id.

The Court finds that Ruhm's report is insufficient to support Basic Medical's claim for lost profits. In his expert report, Ruhm states, "In forming my opinions, I have reviewed the Plaintiff's responses to the defendant's first set of interrogatories and the additional information sent via electronic mail from [Defendant's counsel]." Id. First, the Court cannot evaluate the validity of Ruhm's opinions when one of the bases of his opinions is unidentified - the Court does not know what "additional information" Ruhm reviewed to form his opinions. Second, the other source on which Ruhm based his opinions was Basic Medical's own sales projections, which Miller admits were optimistic, unscientific estimates made at the time Basic Medical was formed. (Miller Dep. (Def.) at 136-38, 142-51.) HN12↑ The North Carolina courts have not allowed claims for lost [*42] profits where the expert's opinion is based solely on the claimant's own speculative business plan and not based on any independent research or data or any comparison to similar businesses. See *Old Well Water v. Collegiate Distrib., Inc., 2002 N.C. App. LEXIS 1939, No. COA01-981, 2002 WL 1315395 \(N.C. App. June 18, 2002\)* (unpublished opinion); *Iron Steamer, Ltd. v. Trinity Rest., Inc., 110 N.C. App. 843, 431 S.E.2d 767 \(1993\)*. Furthermore, Ruhm admitted in his deposition that he could not have created sales projections of his own without first conducting comprehensive market research, which Basic Medical did not ask him to do. (Def.'s Br. in Supp. of Mot. for Summ. J. and for Partial Summ. J., Ex. T, Christopher John Ruhm Dep. at 26-36.)

Because the Court has found that Plaintiff Basic Medical is entitled to summary judgment on its breach of contract claim, but now finds that Plaintiff Basic Medical's proffered evidence in support of its claims for lost profits (the only form of damages it seeks) is insufficient as a matter of law, the Court concludes that Basic Medical's recovery in this case must be limited to nominal damages.<sup>8</sup> *Robbins v. C. W. Myers Trading Post, Inc., 251 N.C. 663, 666, 111 S.E.2d 884, 886-87 \(1960\)* [*43] HN13↑ ("Where plaintiff proves breach of contract he is entitled at least to nominal damages."); *Catoe v. Helms Constr. & Concrete Co., 91 N.C. App. 492, 496-97, 372 S.E.2d 331, 335 \(1988\)* ("When a prima facie case of breach of contract is made out, but there is no evidence upon which a jury could base a damage award, the injured party is still entitled to nominal damages for invasion of his legal rights."); *Cole v. Sorie, 41 N.C. App. 485, 490, 255 S.E.2d 271, 274 \(1979\)*; *Gouger & Veno, Inc. v. Diamondhead Corp., 29 N.C. App. 366, 369, 224 S.E.2d 278, 280 \(1976\)*.

[*44] V. Conclusion

For the reasons stated above, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that Plaintiff Basic Medical's motion for partial summary judgment (Pleading No. 25) be GRANTED on its claim of breach of contract, and that NC Mutual be ordered to pay Basic Medical nominal damages of $ 1.00. IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that Basic Medical's motion for summary judgment (Pleading No. 25) on NC Mutual's counterclaims of breach of contract, unfair or deceptive trade practices and abuse of process be GRANTED, and that these counterclaims be dismissed with prejudice.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that Defendant NC Mutual's motion for partial summary judgment (Pleading No. 23) on its counterclaims for breach of contract and unfair or deceptive trade practices be DENIED. IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that NC Mutual's motion for summary judgment (Pleading No. 23) on Basic Medical's unfair or deceptive trade practices claim be GRANTED, and that this claim be dismissed with prejudice; and that NC Mutual's motion for summary judgment (Pleading No. 23) on Basic Medical's breach of contract claim be DENIED.

A separate judgment will be entered this day.

/s/ P. Trevor Sharp

United [*45] States Magistrate Judge

Date: September 6, 2005

---

<sup>8</sup> Because of the Court's holding limiting Basic Medical to nominal damages, the Court need not and does not reach NC Mutual's argument that Basic Medical failed to mitigate its damages. It is worth noting, however, that the evidence is uncontested that Basic Medical took no steps to mitigate damages, and its failure to mitigate would be a great obstacle to any substantial recovery by Basic Medical under any theory of lost profits.

JUDGMENT

For the reasons set forth in the Memorandum Opinion and Order filed contemporaneously with this Judgment,

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED AND ADJUDGED that Plaintiff Basic Medical Care Plus, Inc. be granted summary judgment on its breach of contract claim and recover from Defendant North Carolina Mutual Life Insurance Company nominal damages in the amount of $ 1.00. IT IS FURTHER ORDERED AND ADJUDGED that all remaining claims and counterclaims in this matter be, and the same hereby are dismissed with prejudice. The costs of the action follow the judgment in favor of Basic Medical.

/s/ P. Trevor Sharp

United States Magistrate Judge

Date: September 6, 2005

---

End of Document

Geneva Pharm. Tech. Corp. v. Barr Labs.

United States District Court for the Southern District of New York

September 6, 2005, Decided ; September 7, 2005, Filed

98 Civ. 861 (DLC), 99 Civ. 3607 (DLC)

Reporter

2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19069 *

GENEVA PHARMACEUTICALS TECHNOLOGY CORP. (as successor in interest to Invamed, Inc.), Plaintiff, -v- BARR LABORATORIES, INC., BRANTFORD CHEMICALS INC., BERNARD C. SHERMAN, APOTEX HOLDINGS INC., APOTEX INC., and SHERMAN DELAWARE, INC., Defendants. APOTHECON INC., Plaintiff, -v- BARR LABORATORIES, INC., BRANTFORD CHEMICALS INC., BERNARD C. SHERMAN, APOTEX HOLDINGS INC., APOTEX INC. and SHERMAN DELAWARE, INC., Defendants.

Prior History: Geneva Pharm. Tech. Corp. v. Barr Labs., Inc., 386 F.3d 485, 2004 U.S. App. LEXIS 21586 \(2d Cir. N.Y., 2004\)

Core Terms

---

warfarin, generic, sodium, relevant market, discovery, Plaintiffs', summary judgment, marketplace, brand, district court, sales, grant of summary judgment, parties, prices, clathrate, consumers, entrants, monopoly, tablets

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

HN1 [down arrow] Standards of Review, De Novo Review

An appellate court reviews a grant of summary judgment de novo to ensure the district court applied substantive antitrust law correctly. A grant of such relief is proper if there are no genuine issues of material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Upon reviewing the record, the appellate court draws all inferences and resolve all ambiguities in favor of the non-moving party.

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Remands

HN2 [down arrow] Appeals, Remands

It is an unaccustomed task for the district court to determine the scope of the remand. The guide for the performance of that delicate task is the doctrine known as the mandate rule, which dictates a careful examination of both the remand order itself and the broader spirit of the remand. The United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit has described the mandate rule as follows: The mandate rule compels compliance on remand with the dictates of the superior court and forecloses relitigation of issues expressly or impliedly decided by the appellate court. Likewise, where an issue was ripe for review at the time of an initial appeal but was nonetheless foregone, the mandate rule generally prohibits the district court from reopening the issue on remand unless the mandate can reasonably be understood as permitting it to do so. To determine whether an issue remains open for reconsideration on remand, the trial court should look to both the specific dictates of the remand order as well as the broader spirit of the mandate.

Civil Procedure > Discovery & Disclosure > General Overview

HN3 Civil Procedure, Discovery & Disclosure

When material events have occurred since the last discovery period, justice requires that the parties have an opportunity to develop those events through discovery.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > Sherman Act

HN4 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Cross-elasticity of demand exists if consumers would respond to a slight increase in the price of one product by switching to another product. Market performance subsequent to alleged attempt to monopolize is relevant to a claim under § 2 \(15 U.S.C.S. § 2\) of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN5 Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

In the context of a claim under the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1 et seq., the time period for analyzing the ability of a competitor to enter the marketplace is not tied to the date of a defendant's alleged unlawful conduct. Of course, some time may pass between the commencement of monopoly pricing and a firm's decision to enter. Estimating the time required for entry is itself very rough and should start with initial planning after one decides to enter. Potential entrants in a market must be considered in the relevant market analysis.

Counsel: [*1] For Plaintiff Geneva Pharmaceuticals Technology Corp. (as successor in interest to Invamed, Inc.): Wayne A. Cross, Michael J. Gallagher, White & Case LLP, New York, New York; Frederick R. Dettmer, Law Office of Frederick R. Dettmer, Pelham, New York; David S. Preminger, Rosen, Preminger & Bloom, New York, New York.

For Plaintiff Apothecon, Inc.: Harry Frischer, Colin A. Underwood, Proskauer Rose LLP, New York, New York.

For Defendant Barr Laboratories, Inc.: Kurt L. Schultz, Jay L. Levine, John J. Tully, Jr., Gregory C. Vamos, Winston & Strawn LLP, Chicago, Illinois.

For Defendant Brantford Chemicals, Inc.: Michael J. Gaertner, David G. Greene, John F. Kloecker, Lord, Bissell & Brook LLP, Chicago, Illinois.

Judges: DENISE COTE, United States District Judge

Opinion by: DENISE COTE

Opinion

---

OPINION AND ORDER

DENISE COTE, District Judge:

Defendants Barr Laboratories, Inc. ("Barr") and Brantford Chemicals Inc. ("Brantford") have moved to determine the scope of remand or, in the alternative, for relief from a judgment under Rule 60(b)(2), Fed. R. Civ. P., and for supplemental discovery and expert reports and to complete expert depositions. For the reasons stated on the record at a [*2] conference on August 23, 2005 and for the reasons set forth below, the motion to determine the scope of the remand is granted. In the light of that determination, the discovery motions are also granted.

BACKGROUND

This action was commenced on February 6, 1998, by the filing of a complaint by Geneva Pharmaceuticals Technology Corp., as successor to Invamed, Inc. ("Geneva") and Apothecon, Inc. ("Apothecon") (collectively, the "Plaintiffs") against Barr, Brantford, Bernard C. Sherman ("Sherman"), Apotex Holdings Inc., Apotex Inc. ("Apotex") and Sherman Delaware Inc. ("Sherman Delaware") (collectively, the "Defendants").

The complaint alleges violations of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Antitrust Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1 and 2 (2000), Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18 (2000), and state law relating to joint ventures, all arising out of the competition between manufacturers of generic warfarin sodium. After discovery, the Defendants moved for partial summary judgment, which was granted on May 10, 2002 (the "May 10 Opinion"). By its opinion of October 18, 2004, the Court of Appeals reversed the grant of summary judgment dismissing [*3] the Sherman Act Sections 1 and 2 claims, affirmed the dismissal of the Clayton Act claim and reversed the ruling that Apothecon lacked standing to sue (the "October 18 Opinion"). The May 10 and October 18 Opinions describe the parties and the factual background of the litigation, and familiarity with them is assumed.

The definition of the relevant warfarin sodium tablet market has been at issue throughout these proceedings. Geneva and Apothecon alleged two relevant markets in their complaints: "generic warfarin sodium and/or branded and generic warfarin sodium." In their motion for summary judgment, the Defendants argued in part that the Plaintiffs could not carry their burden of proving a relevant market of "generic warfarin sodium" and that Barr could not possibly possess monopoly power in a relevant market of "branded and generic warfarin sodium." Plaintiffs opposed Defendants' motion for summary judgment, asserting that the definition of the relevant market raised disputed issues of fact.

The May 10 Opinion rejected Plaintiffs' generics-only market definition, holding in relevant part that "the relevant product market is the combined group of generic and the branded warfarin sodium, [*4]" and concluding that Barr could not possibly hold monopoly power in this market. Accordingly, it dismissed Plaintiffs' Section 2 claims relating to the warfarin sodium market. Geneva Pharms. Tech. Corp. v. Barr Labs., Inc., 201 F. Supp. 2d 236, 271 (S.D.N.Y. 2002). The May 10 Opinion entered summary judgment against Plaintiffs on their other antitrust claims as well.

With respect to the relevant market definition, the Plaintiffs argued on appeal that "the District Court erred in disregarding the evidence and making a factual finding on relevant market that should have been reserved for the jury." In the October 18 Opinion, Geneva Pharms Tech. Corp. v. Barr Labs., Inc., 386 F.3d 485 (2d Cir. 2004), the Court of Appeals discussed the standard of review applied in summary judgment cases:

HN1 [↑] We review a grant of summary judgment de novo to ensure the district court applied substantive antitrust law correctly. A grant of such relief is proper if there are no genuine issues of material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Upon reviewing the record, we draw all inferences and resolve all ambiguities in favor of the [*5] non-moving party, here plaintiffs.

Id. at 495 (citation omitted).

Before analyzing the evidence, the Court of Appeals made the following statement:

The district court ruled that the entire warfarin sodium market, including Coumadin, was the appropriate market. It had noted the chemical equivalence between Coumadin and generics, found that customers and vendors viewed the products as competing, and concluded that generics took market share from Coumadin. We have performed our own analysis of the Brown Shoe factors and we conclude to the contrary that in this case generics alone constitute the relevant market.

Id. at 496. The Court of Appeals considered the evidence cited by Plaintiffs in support of their generics-only market definition and reviewed the Plaintiffs' evidence of Coumadin and Barr pricing, inelastic demand (i.e., consumer unwillingness to purchase generic warfarin sodium), different distribution chains, industry recognition and supply substitution. Id. at 496-99. After reviewing that evidence, it concluded: "We therefore hold that the relevant market for our purposes is the market for generic [*6] warfarin sodium tablets." Id. at 500.

The Court of Appeals proceeded to review the other elements of the Section 2 claims regarding warfarin sodium tablets and concluded that there is a question of material fact regarding Barr's monopoly power, id. at 501, and the willful acquisition or maintenance of monopoly power, id. at 504-05. It then remanded the case as follows:

Accordingly, for the foregoing reasons, we (1) reverse the grant of summary judgment dismissing all plaintiffs' claims brought pursuant to the Sherman Act §§ 1 and 2; (2) affirm the dismissal of the Clayton Act claim; and (3) reverse the ruling that plaintiff Apothecon lacks standing to sue. The case is remanded to the district court for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

Id. at 514.

The Defendants filed a motion for clarification or, in the alternative, petition for partial rehearing to clarify what the Court of Appeals intended with its "holding that the relevant market for our purposes is the market for generic warfarin sodium tablets." Id. at 500. Defendants asked the Court of Appeals to clarify its [*7] decision because:

While the posture of the case, the evidence before the Court, and the Opinion itself strongly suggest that the definition of the relevant market is reserved for trial, it is unclear whether this Court meant to (1) remand this case for trial on the issue of market definition or (2) rule as a matter of law that the relevant market is limited to generic warfarin sodium tablets and does not include the brand, Coumadin.

The Court of Appeals denied the Defendants' motion without explanation or opinion on December 16, 2004.

On August 9, 2005, these cases were transferred to this Court. At a conference on August 23, the Court advised the parties that the Defendants' motion to determine the scope of the remand was granted, that the issue of the market definition would be submitted to a jury, and set a schedule for the completion of discovery and a trial date of June 12, 2006. This Opinion explains in greater detail the reasons for that ruling on the Defendants' motions.

DISCUSSION

The Scope Of The Remand

HN2  It is an unaccustomed task for the district court to determine the scope of the remand. The guide for the performance of this delicate task [*8] is the doctrine known as the mandate rule, which dictates a careful examination of both the remand order itself and the "broader spirit" of the remand. The Second Circuit has described the mandate rule as follows:

The mandate rule compels compliance on remand with the dictates of the superior court and forecloses relitigation of issues expressly or impliedly decided by the appellate court. Likewise, where an issue was ripe for review at the time of an initial appeal but was nonetheless foregone, the mandate rule generally prohibits the district court from reopening the issue on remand unless the mandate can reasonably be understood as permitting it to do so.

To determine whether an issue remains open for reconsideration on remand, the trial court should look to both the specific dictates of the remand order as well as the broader spirit of the mandate.

United States v. Ben Zvi, 242 F.3d 89, 95 \(2d Cir. 2001\) (citation omitted) (emphasis in original). See also Landell v. Sorrell, 382 F.3d 91, 136 n.25 \(2d Cir. 2004\).

The task before the Court of Appeals was the propriety of the grant of summary judgment, construing all facts in [*9] favor of the Plaintiffs. Given the procedural posture of the appeal, by necessity, the Court of Appeals decided only the question of whether the facts supported summary judgment for the Defendants. According to the Court of Appeals, they did not. The remand therefore must be read to include fact-finding as to the market definition. Any other conclusion would constitute a grant of summary judgment in the Plaintiffs' favor by the Court of Appeals on a hotly contested issue. Since Plaintiffs never sought summary judgment on this or any aspect of their claims, such a result would be at odds with the standards customarily applied on appeal and specifically enunciated in the October 18 Opinion.

When the Court of Appeals has chosen to grant summary judgment, it has been explicit in doing so. See, e.g., Mut. Export Corp. v. Westpac Banking Corp., 983 F.2d 420, 424 \(2d Cir. 1993\) ("Accordingly, we reverse the judgment of the district court, with directions to grant Westpac's motion for summary judgment."); Vives v. City of New York, 393 F.3d 129, 133 \(2d Cir. 2004\) ("The cause is remanded to the District Court with instructions to enter summary judgment in [*10] favor of defendants . . . ."). There is no parallel explicit grant of summary judgment here.<sup>1</sup>

Reinforcing the conclusion that the issue of the market definition was remanded for trial is the repeated reference by the Court of Appeals to the standard of review it applied to the facts: "Upon reviewing the record, we draw all inferences and resolve all ambiguities in favor of the non-moving party, here plaintiffs." Geneva, 386 F.3d at 495. The Court of Appeals acknowledged that it examined the evidence "with these standards in mind." Id. "These [*11] standards," are the standards applied to determine if fact questions exist, not to resolve fact questions.

In the context of the task the Court of Appeals performed, that is, the reversal of a grant of summary judgment, its observations concerning the relevant market must be understood as recognition that the plaintiffs had sufficient evidence in the record to support a verdict, and therefore, to require a trial. This conclusion is reinforced by the acknowledgment of the Court of Appeals that key facts regarding market definition were in dispute. For example, the Court of Appeals cited the Plaintiffs' evidence that Barr allegedly dropped its prices when Geneva entered the market as evidence that supported a generics-only relevant market definition. Id. at 497; see also id. at 500. ("Barr's price was impacted much more by Geneva's entry than by Coumadin."). On the other hand, the Court of Appeals noted that direct evidence that Barr lowered prices in response to Geneva's entry was "at best ambiguous," id. at 500, and "somewhat inconclusive," id. at 509. Similarly, the Court of Appeals considered "supply substitution" [*12] in analyzing the relevant market, id. at 499, and "readily" dismissed the possibility that other generic manufacturers could enter the market because of "high barriers to entry resulting . . . from limited supply of clathrate." Id. Yet, when it actually surveyed the conflicting evidence regarding the availability of clathrate suppliers, the Court of Appeals ruled that there is "a factual dispute over the availability of clathrate." Id. at 504; see also id. at 502 (concluding that there was a factual dispute over whether ACIC/Brantford was the only supplier of available clathrate). Reading the Court of Appeal's analysis of relevant market in conjunction with its finding that key facts are <sup>1</sup> The cases cited by Plaintiffs highlight that the October 18 Opinion lacks any limiting instructions of the type included by the Appellate Court when it intends to restrict proceedings following remand. See Ginett v. Computer Task Group, Inc., 11 F.3d 359, 360-61 \(2d Cir. 1993\); Ginett v. Computer Task Group, Inc., 962 F.2d 1085, 1101 \(2d Cir. 1992\); Day v. Morgenthau, 909 F.2d 75, 78 \(2d Cir. 1990\).

---

"ambiguous," "inconclusive" and "disputed" leads ineluctably to the conclusion that the Court of Appeals sought to search for fact issues, not resolve them.

Based on the factors just discussed, the Defendants' motion to determine the scope of the remand is granted. Relying on both the specific dictates of the remand order and the broader spirit of the remand, it is abundantly clear that the Court of Appeals did not enter judgment in Plaintiffs' [*13] favor on the issue of the market definition. The trial will include the determination of the relevant market.

Additional Discovery

In a related application, Defendants seek to reopen discovery to explore marketplace conditions and other relevant events from the intervening months since discovery was closed. Based on the evidence submitted by the Defendants it appears that HN3[] material events have occurred since the last discovery period, which justice requires that the parties have an opportunity to develop through discovery. Several of the legal issues to which these more recent events are relevant are described here.

The Defendants have submitted new market evidence in support of their motion that is highly relevant to an analysis of the structure of the warfarin sodium market and the willingness of consumers to choose the generic over the brand drug. The data in the record before the Court of Appeals reflected 68% of all warfarin sodium sales going to Coumadin and 32% to the generics. After looking at the data regarding generic market penetration created by the record on appeal, the Court of Appeals "concluded" that Coumadin customers "clearly do not perceive generics to [*14] be a reasonable substitute for it." Geneva, 386 F.3d at 497. It would appear that the appellate court also concluded that the perceived consumer unwillingness to switch was a "trend" that would continue. See id. at 498.

The new data submitted on this motion shows virtually the opposite; 38% of warfarin sodium sales are of Coumadin while 62% are of generics. This new evidence strongly suggests that Coumadin customers have not remained loyal to Coumadin and are willing to switch to generic warfarin sodium, and that demand for the branded drug is not inelastic. Indeed, the new market data appears to indicate that the actual trend reflects a high willingness of consumers to switch. See AD/SAT, Div. of Skylight, Inc. v. Associated Press, 181 F.3d 216, 227 \(2d Cir. 1999\) HN4[] ("Cross-elasticity of demand exists if consumers would respond to a slight increase in the price of one product by switching to another product."). See also Lektro-Vend Corp. v. Vendo Co., 660 F.2d 255, 270-71 \(7th Cir. 1982\) (market performance subsequent to alleged attempt to monopolize is relevant to Section 2 claim); Nifty Foods Corp. v. Great Atl. & Pac. Tea Co., 614 F.2d 832, 841 \(2d Cir. 1980\) [*15] (dismissing Section 2 claim based on market share evidence subsequent to alleged conduct).

The Defendants have also presented new, relevant evidence regarding the barriers to entry. When analyzing the relevant market, the Court of Appeals found that there was no possibility of supply substitution:

We can readily dismiss potential substitution from all entities other than DuPont. We find evidence of particularly high barriers to entry resulting both from limited supply of clathrate and from the regulatory requirements to sell generics. We find no evidence that other generic pharmaceutical manufacturers could quickly and easily have entered the warfarin market if generic warfarin prices were raised substantially above marginal cost.

Geneva, 386 F.3d at 499. Taro had just entered the market at the time discovery was closed and had such a small share (3%) that it did not even rate a mention as an entrant to the marketplace.

The new market data shows that Taro has successfully penetrated the market, gaining 19% of overall warfarin sales and 31% of generic warfarin sales. USL Laboratories and Genpharm also have recently entered the marketplace.

The Plaintiffs [*16] have urged that the entry of USL Laboratories in 2003 and Genpharm in 2004 "can be easily dismissed as irrelevant" because their entry occurred "five or more years after Plaintiffs' entry and Defendants' unlawful conduct which delayed Plaintiffs' entry." HN5[] The time period for analyzing the ability of a competitor to enter the marketplace, however, is not tied to the date of a defendant's alleged unlawful conduct. "Of course, some time may pass between the commencement of monopoly pricing and a firm's decision to enter." Areeda & Hovenkamp, P 422b, at 77. "Estimating the time required for entry is itself very rough" and should start with "initial planning after one decides to enter." Id. Potential entrants in a market must be considered in the relevant market analysis. See United States v. Falstaff Brewing Corp., 410 U.S. 526, 532-34, 35 L. Ed. 2d 475, 93 S. Ct. 1096 \(1973\) (discussing the influence of potential entrants on existing competition in the relevant market). The entrance of USL Laboratories and Genpharm suggests that it may be appropriate to consider them as potential entrants prior to their actual entry date.

Furthermore, the Plaintiffs claim damages of up to $ 190.8 [*17] million, which would be trebled under the antitrust laws and, according to Plaintiffs, adjusted further for interest. The Plaintiffs base their damages calculation on lost warfarin sales from 1997 through 2010. Plaintiffs' expert reports previously were based on actual data through 1999 or 2000 and assumptions, projections, and hypotheses for subsequent years, which related to, inter alia, an assumed conversion rate of sales of the Coumadin brand to generics; assumed patterns of price increases of the Coumadin brand; assumed price and sales data at which Apothecon would sell its warfarin sodium product; and Apothecon's assumed success in the marketplace.

As discussed above, new companies have entered, the marketplace positions of competitors have changed, and new sales patterns have developed. In addition, Geneva has purchased Invamed and Apothecon's product rights to sell warfarin sodium. Invamed and Apothecon are out of the warfarin sodium business and the alleged Invamed/Apothecon joint venture (which is at the core of the damage calculations) has dissolved. BMS, the parent of Apothecon, has purchased the Coumadin brand. In addition, current IMS data shows that since July [*18] 2003 Geneva apparently has stopped actively selling warfarin sodium and currently has essentially a 0% market share. Publicly available data does not explain why Geneva exited this market. To evaluate damages, the parties are entitled to discovery regarding each of these events so that any damages award can be based on the firmest possible factual record.

As a final example, the conduct and success of new entrants (as well as Taro) is relevant to causation. For example, Defendants should be entitled to investigate whether Plaintiffs' lack of success in the marketplace was due to their own marketing and pricing decisions, and not due to Defendant's alleged anticompetitive conduct.

As these examples demonstrate, there has been a significant alteration in the marketplace while this case has been proceeding through summary judgment practice, an appeal, and motion practice on remand. Fairness requires that the parties have an opportunity to explore the new environment through discovery so that any verdict that a jury returns reflects as closely as possible the realities of the marketplace.

CONCLUSION

The trial on Plaintiffs' Section 2 claims should proceed on all issues, including [*19] relevant market definition. Discovery has been reopened to allow the parties to gather evidence for the entire relevant period up to and including the present.

SO ORDERED:

Dated: New York, New York

September 6, 2005

DENISE COTE

United States District Judge

Schermer v. State Farm Fire & Cas. Co.

Court of Appeals of Minnesota

September 6, 2005, Filed

A04-2054, A04-2088

Reporter

702 N.W.2d 898 *; 2005 Minn. App. LEXIS 742 **

Christopher P. Schermer, et al., on behalf of themselves and all other similarly situated, Appellants, vs. State Farm Fire and Casualty Company, et al., Respondents.

Subsequent History: Review granted by, Motion granted by Schermer v. State Farm Fire & Cas. Co., 2005 Minn. LEXIS 798 \(Minn., Dec. 13, 2005\)

Affirmed by Schermer v. State Farm Fire & Cas. Co., 2006 Minn. LEXIS 627 \(Minn., Sept. 14, 2006\)

Prior History: [**1] Hennepin County; Hon. John Q. McShane, Judge. District Court File No. 02-20839.

Disposition: Affirmed.

Core Terms

---

Farm, filed rate doctrine, rates, insurer, electrical system, argues, district court, private cause of action, homeowners, dwelling, summary judgment, differential, discriminatory, regulation, actuarial, premium, Unfair, charging, losses, alleged violation, violations, Practices, surcharge, revised, consent order, noncatastrophic, classification, ranches

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Industry Practices > Unfair Business Practices > Claims Investigations & Practices

Insurance Law > ... > Property Insurance > Homeowners Insurance > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Insurance Law > Claim, Contract & Practice Issues > Premiums > Excess Premiums

Insurance Law > Claim, Contract & Practice Issues > Premiums > Refunds

Insurance Law > Industry Practices > Rate Regulation > General Overview

Insurance Law > Industry Practices > Unfair Business Practices > General Overview

HN1 [down arrow] Unfair Business Practices, Claims Investigations & Practices

Minnesota law requires every homeowner insurer doing business in Minnesota to file its rates and rate revisions with the Minnesota Department of Commerce (DOC), and no rate is effective until it has been filed. Minn. Stat. § 70A.06, subd. 1 (2004). The DOC has the power to examine any insurer at any time and for any reason related to the enforcement of the insurance laws. Minn. Stat. § 60A.031, subd. 1 (2004). The DOC may initiate enforcement proceedings to remedy a violation of the applicable statutes. Minn. Stat. §§ 45.027, 60A.052, subd. 1 (2004). If, after a contested proceeding, the DOC determines that a rate violates Minnesota law, it shall order that the rate be discontinued and shall order the excess premium plus interest to be refunded to the policyholder from the date the proceeding was commenced. Minn. Stat. § 70A.11, subd. 1 (2004). Further, if the DOC determines that an insurer has charged illegal or improper rates, engaged in any fraudulent or misleading conduct during the filing process, or engaged in any other unfair trade practice, the commissioner may seek administrative remedies, including the revocation of an insurer's license and penalties. Minn. Stat. §§ 45.027, 60A.031, 60A.052 (2004).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Industry Practices > Unfair Business Practices > Claims Investigations & Practices

HN2 [down arrow] Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

Under the Unfair Claims Practices Act, no person shall engage in any trade practice which is defined in Minn. Stat. §§ 72A.17 to 72A.32 as or determined pursuant to Minn. Stat. §§ 72A.17 to 72A.32 to be an unfair method of competition or an unfair or deceptive act or practice in the business of insurance. Minn. Stat. § 72A.19, subd. 1 (2004).

Governments > Local Governments > Charters

Insurance Law > ... > Property Insurance > Homeowners Insurance > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Governments > Local Governments > Home Rule

Insurance Law > Industry Practices > Rate Regulation > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Industry Practices > Unfair Business Practices > Claims Investigations & Practices

Insurance Law > ... > Property Insurance > Coverage > General Overview

HN3 [down arrow] Local Governments, Charters

See Minn. Stat. § 72A.20, subd. 13 (2004).

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Industry Practices > Unfair Business Practices > Claims Investigations & Practices

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN4 Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

A private party does not have a cause of action against an insurer for a violation of Minn. Stat. § 72A.20 (2004) of the Unfair Claims Practices Act.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Industry Practices > Unfair Business Practices > Claims Investigations & Practices

Torts > ... > Prospective Advantage > Intentional Interference > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Prospective Advantage > General Overview

HN5 Public Enforcement, State Civil Actions

The Unfair Claims Practices Act does not create any private cause of action, regardless of how the claims are styled.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Industry Practices > Unfair Business Practices > Claims Investigations & Practices

Antitrust & Trade Law > Public Enforcement > State Civil Actions

HN6 Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

A litigant cannot directly sue under Minn. Stat. § 72A.20, subd. 13 (2004), or use an alleged violation of this statute to prove elements of a common law claim.

Insurance Law > Industry Practices > Rate Regulation > General Overview

HN7 Industry Practices, Rate Regulation

The filed rate doctrine forbids a regulated entity from charging rates for its services other than those properly filed with the appropriate federal regulatory authority. The doctrine holds that any filed rate--a rate that has been approved by the governing regulatory agency--is per se reasonable and unassailable in judicial proceedings brought by ratepayers. The filed rate doctrine applies to regulation by state agencies as well as federal. An appellate court has recognized the filed rate doctrine.

Syllabus

---

1. A private party does not have a cause of action for a violation of the Unfair Claims Practices Act, Minn. Stat. § 72A.20, subd. 13 (2004).

2. The filed rate doctrine bars suit against a regulated insurance company when the suit is based on an allegation that rates filed with the regulatory agency violate state law.

Counsel: Lawrence R. King, T. Joseph Snodgrass, Shawn M. Raiter, Larson & King, LLP, St. Paul, Minnesota; and Charles N. Nauen, Robert K. Shelquist, Lockridge Grindal Nauen P.L.L.P., Minneapolis, Minnesota; and Charles S. Zimmerman, J. Gordon Rudd, David M. Cialkowski, Zimmerman Reed, P.L.L.P., Minneapolis, Minnesota; and Rhett A. McSweeney, McSweeney & Fay, Minneapolis, Minnesota (for appellants).

Todd A. Noteboom, William L. Greene, Daniel Oberdorfer, Douglas R. Boettge, Monica L. Davies, Leonard, Street and Deinard, Professional Association, Minneapolis, Minnesota (for respondents).

Mike Hatch, Attorney General, Brian Dockendorf, Assistant Attorney General, St. Paul, Minnesota (for amicus State of Minnesota).

Sharon L. [**2] Van Dyck, Schwebel, Goetz & Sieben, P.A., Minneapolis, Minnesota; and

Jeffrey D. Bores, Chestnut & Cambronne, P.A., Minneapolis, Minnesota (for amicus Minnesota Trial Lawyers Association).

Judges: Considered and decided by Peterson, Presiding Judge; Minge, Judge; and Parker, Judge.

Opinion by: Edward J. Parker

Opinion

---

[*900] PARKER, Judge *

In this class action suit, appellants challenge the district court's grant of summary judgment in favor of respondent, arguing that the district court erred by (1) rejecting appellants' argument that respondents violated Minn. Stat. § 72A.20, subd. 13 (2004) as a matter of law; (2) holding that no private right of action exists under Minn. Stat. § 72A.20, subd. 13 (2004); and (3) holding that the filed rate doctrine bars appellants' claims. Because no private right of action exists under Minn. Stat. § 72A.20 , subd. 13 [**3] (2004), and because the filed rate doctrine bars appellants' claims, we affirm. Therefore, we need not address appellants' argument that respondents violated Minn. Stat. § 72A.20, subd. 13 (2004), as a matter of law.

FACTS

On May 8, 1997, respondent State Farm Fire and Casualty Company and State Farm General Insurance Company (State Farm) filed an initial version of a "Utilities Rating Plan" (URP) with the Department of Commerce (DOC) for homeowners and farm insurance policies. The URP had an effective date of June 15, 1997. It based a rate differential on the age of the oldest of the electrical, plumbing, and heating/cooling system. On May 22, 1997, the DOC notified State Farm that its filing had been reviewed and had to be amended to comply with Minn. Stat. § 72A.20, subd. 13. Pending that amendment, the filing was held in suspense. On June 5, 1997, State Farm submitted a revised URP. Under this revision, homeowners would be placed in different rate categories based on the age of the electrical system only. On June 10, 1997, the DOC informed State Farm that the URP required further amendment. Pending that amendment, [**4] the URP continued to be held in suspense. On June 27, 1997, State Farm submitted a further revision to the URP in response to this [*901] request. On July 18, 1997, the DOC again informed State Farm that further amendments were required to the URP and, pending those amendments, the filing would continue to be held in suspense. On July 23, 1997, the DOC accepted the URP for use effective August 1, 1997.

---

* Retired judge of the Minnesota Court of Appeals, serving by appointment pursuant to *Minn. Const. art. VI, § 10.*

The accepted URP placed insured homeowners in different rating categories based on the age of the electrical system. A home with a new system would be eligible for a discount from the base premium; a home with an older system would be subject to an additional charge over the base premium. State Farm used the age of the home as a surrogate for the age of the home's electrical system as part of the development of a rating plan that assigned rates based on the age of the homeowner's electrical system. At all times during this process, State Farm relied on its original actuarial exhibit that utilized all noncatastrophic losses (not just those related to electrical systems) as its support for the URP. Approximately one year later, in September 1998, State Farm filed a modified URP with the DOC. [**5] Under the revised URP, policyholders could more easily avoid the surcharge by making updates to their electrical system. The September 1998 filing also combined the three rating categories associated with the oldest electrical systems into a single 40-plus year category subject to a six-percent premium.

In January 2001, a private citizen filed a complaint with the DOC about State Farm's URP rating classification. In response to this complaint, the DOC began an investigation. The investigation took approximately 19 months and was led by Martin Fleischhacker. Fleischhacker reviewed the 1997 actuarial data that was supplied in support of the URP and found that the URP was based on the age of the primary structure, not the age of the electrical system. He also found that it did not include information demonstrating the risk of loss due to the age of the electrical system. He believed that when an insurer places homeowners in different rating categories based upon the age of a utility system, such as an electrical system, any differential in rates must be limited to differential in losses caused by or related to the age of that particular system. It was clear that the actuarial exhibits [**6] submitted by State Farm in 1997 indicated that the differentials in URP charges and discounts had been calculated using all noncatastrophic losses, not just those caused by aging electrical systems. Fleischhacker concluded that the URP violated Minn. Stat. § 72A.20, subd. 13.

State Farm disagreed with Fleischhacker's interpretation of the statute. In October 2002, Fleischhacker sent State Farm a letter attaching a "DRAFT: CEASE AND DESIST ORDER AND NOTICE OF RIGHT TO HEARING." The letter alleged that State Farm did not track and had no loss data to show that the age of the structure's electrical system affects the risk of loss. It alleged that State Farm tracked the age of the insured's dwelling and that its loss data were correlated with the age of the dwelling. Finally, it concluded that the URP was based on the age of the primary structure, which is prohibited by Minn. Stat. § 72A.20, subd. 13(b).

In December 2002, the DOC entered into a settlement with State Farm which was effectuated by a consent order. The order set forth the allegations of wrongdoing. It noted that State Farm denied those allegations. State Farm acknowledged [**7] that it had been advised of its right to a hearing and to appeal from any adverse determination after a hearing but expressly waived those rights. The consent order contained the following: "Both the Commissioner and Respondent agree that this Order represents an informal settlement [*902] and that there has been no hearing, findings of fact, or conclusions of law with respect to the allegations of the Commissioner." Under the terms of the consent order, State Farm agreed to discontinue the surcharge portion of the URP for one year while continuing to offer discounts. It retained the right to seek approval of the rates thereafter. It also agreed to reimburse the department $ 75,000 for its investigative costs.

Appellants Christopher Schermer, John Smith, Marjorie Smith, and Reverend Albert Gallmon, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated (the class), filed their first class action on December 6, 2002, within days of the announcement of the consent order. The class states that this lawsuit was "filed to force State Farm to pay the Class back for State Farm's violation of state law." The class sought a refund of all surcharges collected by State Farm from 1997-2002 under [**8] the URP. The surcharges totaled nearly $ 20,000,000. Due to procedural matters and court rulings, the operative complaint is the class's third amended class action complaint. The class alleged the following eight counts in this complaint:

Count 1: Rescission of Unlawful Contract Terms

702 N.W.2d 898, *902A 2005 Minn. App. LEXIS 742, **8

Count 2: Breach of Contract and Duty of Good Faith and Fair Dealing

Count 3: Violation of Prevention of Consumer Fraud Act Minn. Stat. § 325F.69, subd. 1 (as to the public)

Count 4: Violation of Prevention of Consumer Fraud Act Minn. Stat. § 325F.69, subd. 1 (as to the DOC and the Commissioner of Commerce)

Count 5: Unreasonable Restraint on Trade or Commerce in Violation of Minnesota Antitrust Law Minn. Stat. § 325D.53, subd. 2\(1\) to \(4\) and § 325D.03, subd. \(1\)\(1\)\(a\) Count 6: Violation of the Act Against Unfair

Discrimination and Competition Minn. Stat. § 325D.03 and § 325D.072 Count 7: Fraud by Nondisclosure

Count 8: Filed Rate Doctrine

Each count in the complaint was based on State Farm charging an allegedly improper rate, a rate that [\[\*\*9\]](#) was approved by the Commissioner of Commerce in 1997 and then subject to a consent order in 2002. In its third amended complaint, the class summarized their claim in a section entitled "Nature of Action":

This is a class action against Defendants State Farm Fire and Casualty Company and State Farm General Insurance Company (referred to collectively as "STATE FARM"), for redlining in Minnesota by dramatically charging higher premiums for homeowners and farm/ranch insurance for older homes, farms, ranches, buildings and other structures without actuarial support. STATE FARM is a homeowners and farm/ranch insurer who, under the moniker "Utilities Rating Plan" ("URP"), has systematically charged unfair and discriminatory premiums to Minnesotans living in older homes, farms and ranches to subsidize deep premium discounts for consumers living in new homes, farms and ranches. STATE FARM's URP was a transparent effort to redline and discriminate. STATE FARM's misconduct was and is in violation of state law.

(Emphasis added.)

In 2004, State Farm submitted a rate filing to the DOC in which it sought approval of the same URP filed and approved by the DOC in 1997 and 1998, [\[\*\*10\]](#) which is the same URP at issue in this litigation. As it did in 1997, State Farm used age-of-home data as a surrogate for the age of the electrical system. It also provided its actuarial support for the rate [\[\*903\]](#) differential based on all noncatastrophic losses. In its review, the DOC considered the actuarial data filed in support of the URP in light of the criticisms raised by Fleischhacker in 2002. There were differences of opinion among DOC staff members.

On April 9, 2004, the DOC approved State Farm's filing. In its approval, the DOC accepted the use of the age of the dwelling as a surrogate for the age of the utilities as well as the use of all noncatastrophic losses as actuarial support for the rate differential. According to one staff member of the department, the approval of State Farm's URP in 2004 reflected a return to the position of Minn. Stat. § 72A.20, subd. 13, that the DOC had followed until 2001.

Both parties moved the district court for summary judgment. On September 3, 2004, the district court denied the class's motion for partial summary judgment. The class sought summary judgment on the ground that as a matter of law State Farm's 1997-1998 URP [\[\*\*11\]](#) violates Minn. Stat. § 72A.20, subd. 13, because (1) the URP differential is based solely on the age of dwelling; and (2) the statute requires URP rate differentials to be calculated based on losses caused by the age of a home's electrical system, not all noncatastrophic losses. The district court held that there is a genuine issue of material fact with regard to the sole use of age of dwelling. But in response to the class's motion, the district court agreed with State Farm that because the class's claims are predicated on an alleged violation of Minn. Stat. § 72A.20, subd. 13, summary judgment in favor of State Farm is appropriate because there is no private cause of action for a violation of Minn. Stat. § 72A.20, subd. 13, pursuant to Morris v. Am. Family Mut. Ins. Co., 386 N.W.2d 233 \(Minn. 1986\). On this same date, the district court also granted State Farm's motion for summary judgment under the "filed rate doctrine." This appeal followed.

ISSUES

I. Does a private right of action exist under the Unfair Claims Practices Act, Minn. Stat. § 72A.20, subd. 13 [**12] (2004)?

II. Does the filed rate doctrine bar the class's claims?

ANALYSIS

On appeal from summary judgment, this court determines whether there are any genuine issues of material fact and whether the trial court erred in its application of the law. State by Cooper v. French, 460 N.W.2d 2, 4 (Minn. 1990).

I.

HN1[] Minnesota law requires every homeowner insurer doing business in Minnesota to file its rates and rate revisions with the DOC, and no rate is effective until it has been filed. Minn. Stat. § 70A.06, subd. 1 (2004). The DOC has the power to examine any insurer "at any time and for any reason related to the enforcement of the insurance laws." Minn. Stat. § 60A.031, subd. 1 (2004). The DOC may initiate enforcement proceedings to remedy a violation of the applicable statutes. Minn. Stat. §§ 45.027, 60A.052, subd. 1 (2004). If, after a contested proceeding, the DOC determines that a rate violates Minnesota law, it shall order that the rate be discontinued and "shall order the excess premium plus interest . . . to be refunded to the policyholder" from [**13] the date the proceeding was commenced. Minn. Stat. § 70A.11, subd. 1 (2004). Further, if the DOC determines that an insurer has charged illegal or improper rates, engaged in any fraudulent or misleading conduct during the filing process, or engaged in any other unfair [*904] trade practice, the commissioner may seek administrative remedies, including the revocation of an insurer's license and penalties. Minn. Stat. §§ 45.027, 60A.031, 60A.052 (2004).

HN2[] Under the Unfair Claims Practices Act (UCPA), no person shall engage in this state in any trade practice which is defined in sections 72A.17 to 72A.32 as or determined pursuant to sections 72A.17 to 72A.32 to be an unfair method of competition or an unfair or deceptive act or practice in the business of insurance. Minn. Stat. § 72A.19, subd. 1 (2004). Subdivision 13 of section 72A.20, entitled "Refusal to renew," prohibits the following trade practice:

HN3[] Refusing to renew, declining to offer or write, or charging differential rates for an equivalent amount of homeowner's insurance coverage, as defined by section [**14] 65A.27, for property located in a town or statutory or home rule charter city, in which the insurer offers to sell or writes homeowner's insurance, solely because:

....

(b) of the age of the primary structure sought to be insured.

Minn. Stat. § 72A.20, subd. 13(b) (2004). Subdivision 13 also contains a "safe harbor provision" stating:

This subdivision shall not prohibit the insurer from applying underwriting or rating standards which the insurer applies generally in all other locations in the state and which are not specifically prohibited by clauses (a) to (d). . . . Clause (b) shall not prohibit the use of rating standards based upon the age of the insured structure's plumbing, electrical, heating or cooling system or other part of the structure, the age of which affects the risk of loss.

The class argues that (1) it did not assert a private cause of action under Minn. Stat. § 72A.20, subd. 13, but instead requested that the district court rescind the surcharge terms of its respective contracts because these terms violated this statute; (2) the common law recognizes this distinction and affords the right [**15] to collect for discriminatory rate charges that violate a regulatory scheme; and (3) the legislature expressly intended to allow suits relating to subdivision 13 through the exception-to-immunity provision in Minn. Stat. § 65A.29, subd. 6 (2004).

State Farm argues that the class's claims fail as a matter of law because the Minnesota Supreme Court in Morris v. Am. Family Mut. Ins. Co., 386 N.W.2d 233 \(Minn. 1986\), held that there is no private cause of action for claims premised on an alleged violation of Minn. Stat. § 72A.20, subd. 13.

The court in Morris held that HN4 a private party does not have a cause of action against an insurer for a violation of the UCPA, Minn. Stat. § 72A.20. Morris, 386 N.W.2d at 238. In Morris, the first-party insured plaintiff sued her insurer for basic economic loss no-fault benefits arising out of an auto accident. Id. at 233, 237 n.7. The plaintiff sought to amend her complaint to add a count alleging that the insurer violated the UCPA. Id. at 233. The supreme court reasoned in Morris that the "comprehensive [\[\*\*16\]](#) scheme of administrative enforcement" under the UCPA is "more appropriate to investigating and regulating an insurer's general business practices." Id. at 237; see also LaBarre v. Credit Acceptance Corp., 175 F.3d 640, 643 \(8th Cir. 1999\) ("Minnesota law permits only administrative recourse for violations of § 72A.20 and . . . does not provide a private cause of action for violations of this provision.").

[\[\*905\]](#) The class's claims were predicated on an alleged violation of Minn. Stat. § 72A.20, subd. 13. The class claimed that State Farm's alleged breaches of contract violated this statute. Thus, the class sought to bring a private cause of action under the UCPA, which is barred by Morris.

Moreover, this court has rejected a plaintiff's attempt to use an alleged violation of the UCPA as an element of the plaintiff's common law claim for tortious interference with prospective relations. See Glass Serv. Co. v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 530 N.W.2d 867 \(Minn. App. 1995\), review denied (Minn. May 2, 1995). Relying on Morris, this court in Glass Serv. reiterated that HN5 the UCPA does not create [\[\*\*17\]](#) any "private cause of action," regardless of how the claims are styled. Id. at 872; cf. Olson v. Moorhead Country Club, 568 N.W.2d 871, 873 \(Minn. App. 1997\) (relying on Morris and Glass Serv. to hold that an employee did not have a private cause of action for conversion where his only alleged right arose under a statute that did not provide for a private cause of action), review denied (Minn. Oct. 31, 1997); see also Elder v. Allstate Ins. Co., 341 F. Supp. 2d 1095, 1100-02 \(D. Minn. 2004\) (citing Morris and the absence of a private cause of action under the UCPA to hold that a common law claim for negligence per se cannot be based on an insurer's alleged violation of the UCPA). Thus, the law is settled that HN6 a litigant cannot directly sue under Minn. Stat. § 72A.20, subd. 13, or use an alleged violation of this statute to prove elements of a common law claim.

Finally, the class argues that this court must recognize that the legislature expressly intended to allow litigation concerning violations of subdivision 13. The class cites Minn. Stat. § 65A.29, subd. 6, entitled [\[\*\*18\]](#) "Immunity of Insurer or commissioner," which provides:

There shall be no liability on the part of and no cause of action of any nature shall arise against the commissioner or against any insurer, its authorized representative, its agents, its employees or any firm, person or corporation furnishing to the insured information as to reasons for declination, nonrenewal, or cancellation, for any statement made by them in any written notice of declination, nonrenewal or cancellation, for the providing of information relating thereto, or for statements made or evidence submitted at any hearings or investigations conducted in connection therewith. This subdivision shall not apply to any action or proceeding arising under section 72A.20.

(Emphasis added.) According to the class, "by declaring an exception, [\[section 65A.29\]](#) permits litigation concerning violations of § 72A.20, subd. 13."

We reject the class's argument that this statute authorizes it to bring a suit against State Farm. While State Farm is not "immune" from liability under Minn. Stat. § 72A.20, subd. 13, because the DOC may bring an action against State Farm, the class may not [\[\*\*19\]](#) bring a private cause of action against State Farm.

Next, the class argues that the district court erred in granting summary judgment because the "filed rate" doctrine does not apply to bar its claims.

In Keogh v. Chicago & Nw. Ry. Co., 260 U.S. 156, 43 S. Ct. 47, 67 L. Ed. 183 (1922), Justice Brandeis set forth what has come to be known as "the filed rate doctrine." In Keogh, the plaintiff alleged that the defendant carrier conspired to fix rates for transporting freight, and that this conspiracy violated the Sherman Act. Id. at 160, 43 S. Ct. at 48. The plaintiff alleged that [*906] because he was forced to pay higher rates than he would have absent the conspiracy, he suffered damages to the extent of that difference in rates. Id. The Supreme Court dismissed the plaintiff's claim, holding that where the defendant charged a rate that had been filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission, "the rates were reasonable and non-discriminatory." Id. at 161, 43 S. Ct. at 49.

Thus, HNT [↑] the filed rate doctrine forbids "a regulated entity [from charging] rates for its services other than those properly filed with the appropriate [**20] federal regulatory authority." Ark. La. Gas Co. v. Hall, 453 U.S. 571, 577, 101 S. Ct. 2925, 2930, 69 L. Ed. 2d 856 (1981). The doctrine holds that any filed rate--a rate that has been approved by the governing regulatory agency--"is per se reasonable and unassailable in judicial proceedings brought by ratepayers." Wegoland Ltd. v. NYNEX Corp., 27 F.3d 17, 18 (2d Cir. 1994). The filed rate doctrine applies to regulation by state agencies as well as federal. H.J. Inc. v. Nw. Bell Tel. Co., 954 F.2d 485, 494 (8th Cir. 1992) (applying filed rate doctrine to Minnesota phone rates). This court has recognized the filed rate doctrine. See, e.g., G & T Trucking Co. v. GFI Am., Inc., 535 N.W.2d 658, 660-61 (Minn. App. 1995) (noting that the filed rate doctrine requires a regulated entity to prove its filed rate).

The district court held that the filed rate doctrine bars the class's claims and relied on the Wegoland decision. In Wegoland, the plaintiff class alleged that two telephone companies gave regulatory agencies and consumers misleading financial information to support the inflated rates they requested. [*21] Wegoland, Ltd. v. NYNEX Corp., 806 F. Supp. 1112, 1113 (S.D.N.Y. 1992), aff'd, 27 F.3d 17 (2d Cir. 1994). The plaintiffs alleged that companies purchased products at inflated prices, then used those prices to justify inflated rates which resulted in high profits. Id. The Second Circuit affirmed the district court's holding that the filed rate doctrine barred the plaintiff's claims and that no fraud exception to the doctrine exists. Wegoland, 27 F.3d at 21-22. The district court found that the facts in Wegoland are "exceedingly similar" to this case, in which the class alleges that State Farm gave the DOC misleading actuarial information in support of its surcharge. We affirm the district court's holding that the filed rate doctrine bars the class's claims.

The class argues that (1) the facts of this case do not warrant adoption of the filed rate doctrine; (2) the filed rate doctrine does not apply to insurance; (3) the filed rate doctrine does not apply to discriminatory insurance practices; (4) the filed rate doctrine does not apply because it conflicts with Minnesota common law; and (5) the filed rate doctrine cannot apply [**22] to the class's rental dwelling policy claims. State Farm argues that the filed rate doctrine applies in this case and that the exceptions the class cites are inapplicable. We address each of the claims.

The class first argues that the facts of this case do not warrant adoption of the filed rate doctrine because "while initially created to protect consumers, the filed rate doctrine has been used in recent times to victimize consumers." But here, applying the filed rate doctrine comports with the policies underlying the doctrine. Application of the filed rate doctrine (1) prevents the judiciary from "reconstituting the whole rate structure" of an industry; (2) avoids retroactive relief that would lead to discrimination in rates such that a victorious plaintiff would end up paying less than similarly situated nonsuing customers; and (3) avoids "undermining the congressional scheme of uniform rate regulation." Wegoland, 27 F.3d [*907] at 19 (quoting Keogh, 260 U.S. at 163-64, 43 S. Ct. at 49-50; Ark. La. Gas., 453 U.S. at 579, 101 S. Ct. at 2931). Additionally, the filed rate doctrine preserves the regulatory agency's authority to determine [**23] the reasonableness of an entity's filed rates. Id. at 21. We agree with the Wegoland court that "as compared with the expertise of regulating agencies, courts do not approach the same level of institutional competence to ascertain reasonable rates. . . . Courts are simply ill-suited to systematically second guess the regulators' decisions and overlay their own resolution." Id.

Here, State Farm complied with Minnesota law by filing its rates with the DOC and thus should not now be subject to retroactive rate revisions when it satisfied the regulatory agency--the DOC. Furthermore, it was only after the DOC completed its review and required changes to comply with the statute at issue that the DOC accepted the URP for use in Minnesota. Allowing the class to challenge retroactively the reasonableness of the DOC-approved URP would undermine Minnesota's statutory process.

Next, the class argues that the competitive and deregulated nature of the private insurance market and the absence of exclusive jurisdiction of the DOC do not support applying the filed rate doctrine in Minnesota. But the class lacks authority for its position that the filed rate doctrine is premised upon the [**24] exclusive jurisdiction of regulators. Our decision is consistent with other courts that have applied the filed rate doctrine to the insurance industry. See Kirksey v. Am. Bankers Ins. Co., 114 F. Supp. 2d 526, 529-30 (S.D. Miss. 2000); Allen v. State Farm Fire & Cas. Co., 59 F. Supp. 2d 1217, 1228-29 (S.D. Ala. 1999); Korte v. Allstate Ins. Co., 48 F. Supp. 2d 647, 650-52 (E.D. Tex. 1999); Morales v. Attorneys' Title Ins. Fund, Inc., 983 F. Supp. 1418, 1426-29 (S.D. Fla. 1997); Uniforce Temp. Pers., Inc. v. Nat'l Council on Comp. Ins., Inc., 892 F. Supp. 1503, 1511-12, 1512 n.11 (S.D. Fla. 1995), aff'd, 87 F.3d 1296 (11th Cir. 1996); Richardson v. Standard Guar. Ins. Co., 371 N.J. Super. 449, 853 A.2d 955, 962-64 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 2004); Horwitz v. Bankers Life & Cas. Co., 319 Ill. App. 3d 390, 745 N.E.2d 591, 604-05, 253 Ill. Dec. 468 (Ill. App. Ct. 2001); Am. Bankers' Ins. Co. v. Wells, 819 So. 2d 1196, 1204 (Miss. 2001); N.C. Steel, Inc. v. Nat'l Council on Comp. Ins., 347 N.C. 627, 496 S.E.2d 369, 372 (N.C. 1998); [**25] Byan v. Prudential Ins. Co., 242 A.D.2d 456, 662 N.Y.S.2d 44, 45 (N.Y. App. Div. 1997); Prentice v. Title Ins. Co., 176 Wis. 2d 714, 500 N.W.2d 658, 661-63 (Wis. 1993).

Next, the class argues that the filed rate doctrine does not apply to discriminatory insurance practices. The class argues that State Farm "cloaked its discriminatory intent behind a fictitiously named 'utilities' classification, when the classification was really an age of dwelling classification." The class cites Dehoyos v. Allstate Corp., 345 F.3d 290 (5th Cir. 2003), for the proposition that courts have allowed class action lawsuits seeking to restore premiums charged under discriminatory classifications to proceed. But the court in Dehoyos did not address the filed rate doctrine. Instead, the court addressed whether the McCarran-Ferguson Act preempted federal discrimination law. Id. at 293. Thus, we do not find persuasive the class's argument that there is a "discriminatory practice" exception to the filed rate doctrine.

Next, the class argues that the filed rate doctrine does not apply because it conflicts with Minnesota common law. The [**26] class cites Bell Lumber Co. v. Great N. Ry. Co., 135 Minn. 271, 160 N.W. 688 (1916), for the proposition that Minnesota law has long permitted a ratepayer to recover for illegal rate charges regardless of the existence of [**908] a regulatory scheme, in contradiction to the filed rate doctrine. Similarly, the class cites Sullivan v. Minneapolis & R. R. Ry. Co., 121 Minn. 488, 142 N.W. 3 (1913), arguing that a Minnesota rate regulation scheme did not impair the right of a ratepayer to recover under the common law for illegal, discriminatory rates.

The class's reliance on these two Minnesota cases is not persuasive because they predate the U.S. Supreme Court's decision in Keogh and because they do not involve challenges to the reasonableness or legality of rates properly filed with and approved by a regulatory agency. Furthermore, the Minnesota Supreme Court's decision in Morris confirms the policies embodied in the filed rate doctrine.

Finally, the class argues that if this court adopts the filed rate doctrine, remand is required for holders of rental dwelling policies (RDP). The class argues that the filed rate doctrine cannot apply to the class's [**27] RDP claims because an RDP is a policy form covering one- or two-family dwellings owned, but not occupied, by the policyholder. We disagree. The district court properly dismissed the class's RDP claims because Minn. Stat. § 72A.20, subd. 13, applies to "homeowners' insurance," and not rental dwellings. Thus, Minn. Stat. § 72A.20, subd. 13, does not cover RDP claims.

DECISION

702 N.W.2d 898, *908L<sup>2005</sup> Minn. App. LEXIS 742, **27

Because the class has no private cause of action under the Unfair Claims Practices Act, Minn. Stat. 72A.20, subd. 13 (2004), and because the filed rate doctrine bars the class's claims, the district court did not err by granting summary judgment in favor of State Farm.

Affirmed.

---

End of Document

Tritent Int'l Corp. v. Commonwealth

United States District Court for the Eastern District of Kentucky

September 8, 2005, Decided ; September 8, 2005, Filed

Civil Action No. 3:04-67-JMH

Reporter

2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20233 *; 2005-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P75,066

TRITENT INTERNATIONAL CORP.; DWI, LLC; and CIBAHIA TABACOS ESPECIAS LTDA, Plaintiffs, v.
COMMONWEALTH OF KENTUCKY, Defendant.

Subsequent History: Reconsideration denied by *Tritent Int'l Corp. v. Kentucky, 395 F. Supp. 2d 521, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24819 \(E.D. Ky., 2005\)*

Affirmed by *Tritent Int'l Corp. v. Ky., 2006 U.S. App. LEXIS 26911 \(6th Cir. Ky., Oct. 30, 2006\)*

Core Terms

---

Manufacturers, escrow, cigarette, preempted, Participating, preemption, hybrid, implementation of a statute, market share, anticompetitive, settlement, authorize, allegations, annual payment, anti trust law, Plaintiffs', cases, motion to dismiss, state statute, tobacco, prices, empowered, immunity, boycott, sellers, cartel, join

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Governments > Police Powers

Tax Law > State & Local Taxes > Alcohol & Tobacco Products > General Overview

HN1 [down arrow] Governments, Police Powers

The Escrow Statute, Ky. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 131.600-602, forces nonparticipating manufacturers (NPM) to either become subsequent participating manufacturers (SPMs), which would require paying to the state all money that would have been owed if the NPM had been an SPM from the beginning, or else to place a specified amount of money into escrow. The amount required to satisfy the second option is intended to approximate the amount being paid to the state by participating manufacturers, and is based on a flat fee per cigarette that will increase over time. The NPMs are entitled to receive interest from the escrow account, and the escrow accounts are set up as 25 year revolvers, with each year's escrow payment repaid to the NPM after being held for that period. *Ky. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 131.602\(2\).*

Governments > Police Powers

Tax Law > State & Local Taxes > Alcohol & Tobacco Products > General Overview

HN2 Governments, Police Powers

See Ky. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 131.602\(2\)\(b\).

Governments > Police Powers

Tax Law > ... > Alcohol & Tobacco Products > Tobacco Products Taxes > General Overview

Tax Law > Federal Excise Taxes > Alcohol, Firearm & Tobacco Taxes > General Overview

Tax Law > Federal Excise Taxes > Alcohol, Firearm & Tobacco Taxes > Tobacco & Tobacco Products

Tax Law > State & Local Taxes > Alcohol & Tobacco Products > General Overview

HN3 Governments, Police Powers

The Contraband Statute makes it illegal for distributors to place Kentucky tax stamps on cigarettes purchased from nonparticipating manufacturers who are not in compliance with the Escrow Statute. Ky. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 131.612. The Attorney General of Kentucky is required to maintain a list of compliant companies, and is empowered to de-list noncompliant companies. Ky. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 131.610.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

HN4 Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

A district court considering a motion to dismiss must assume that all allegations are true and dismiss the claim only if it is clear that no relief could be granted under any set of facts that could be proved consistent with the allegations. A Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion tests the sufficiency of the pleadings and is not a challenge to plaintiff's factual allegations. To survive a motion to dismiss under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\), a complaint must contain either direct or inferential allegations respecting all the material elements to sustain a recovery under some viable legal theory. Conclusory allegations or legal conclusions masquerading as factual conclusions will not suffice to prevent a motion to dismiss.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Federal Common Law > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN5 Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Two findings are required before state legislation can be preempted by the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1. First, a court must determine, as it would with all preemption claims, whether there is an irreconcilable conflict between state and federal law. Second, if such a conflict is found, a court must determine whether the legislation is protected under the doctrine of state action immunity, which will only be the case if the state "clearly articulates" its intention to displace competition and "actively supervises" the anticompetitive behavior. The preemption analysis is logically prior to the state action immunity analysis.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Federal Common Law > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN6 [down] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Preemption of state statutes is not to be found lightly. The Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, makes no mention of the state as such, and gives no hint that it was intended to restrain state action or official action directed by a state. A mere showing that a statute has anticompetitive effects will not lead to a finding of preemption. If an adverse effect on competition were, in and of itself, enough to render a state statute invalid, the States' power to engage in economic regulation would be effectively destroyed.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Federal Common Law > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

HN7 [down] Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

The standard for antitrust preemption is high: a state statute, when considered in the abstract, may be condemned under the antitrust laws only if it mandates or authorizes conduct that necessarily constitutes a violation of the antitrust laws in all cases, or if it places irresistible pressure on a private party to violate the antitrust laws in order to comply with the statute.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Federal & State Interrelationships > Federal Common Law > General Overview

Constitutional Law > Supremacy Clause > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN8 [down] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

A statute will not be preempted by the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 1, if it "does not explicitly authorize" the illegal conduct.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

HN9[ Regulated Practices, Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade

Hybrid restraints are to be found when state acts grant "private regulatory power" to private parties. When a hybrid restraint is found to conflict with federal antitrust law, the statute will only be immune from challenge if it meets the same two-part test as any other statute that is prima facie preempted. First, the challenged restraint must be one clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy; second, the policy must be actively supervised by the State itself.

Counsel: [*1] For Trident International Corp. An Illinois Corporation, DWI, LLC A Kentucky Corporation, Cibahla Tabacos Especias Ltda A Brazilian Corporation, Plaintiffs: David Foster Dobbins, Patterson, Belknap, Webb & Tyler LLP, New York, NY; Melinda G. Wilson, M.G. Wilson, PLLC, Lexington, KY; Walter Michael Luers, Patterson, Belknap, Webb & Tyler LLP - New York, New York, NY.

For Commonwealth of Kentucky Ex Rel Gregory D. Stumbo, Attorney General, in his official capacity - Gregory D. Stumbo, Defendant: James Michael Herrick, Assistant Attorney General, Frankfort, KY; Michael Plumley, Office of Attorney General - KY, Frankfort, KY.

Judges: Joseph M. Hood, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: Joseph M. Hood

Opinion

---

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

*** * * * *

This matter is before the Court on Defendant's motion to dismiss [Record No. 36]. Plaintiffs filed a response [Record No. 74] to which Defendant replied [Record No. 75]. This matter is now ripe for review.

FACTUAL BACKGROUND

In 1998, 46 states including Kentucky, collectively known as the "Settling States," entered into the Master Settlement Agreement ("MSA") with the four major cigarette companies, Philip Morris, Lorillard, [*2] Brown & Williamson, and R.J. Reynolds, collectively known as "Original Participating Manufacturers" ("OPMs"). The MSA allowed for other manufacturers to join the agreement, and more than forty cigarette companies have joined as "Subsequent Participating Manufacturers" ("SPMs"). Together, the OPMs and SPMs are known as "Participating Manufacturers."

Participating Manufacturers are required to make large annual payments to the Settling States in perpetuity to offset a portion of healthcare and other costs imposed on states by smoking-related diseases. For OPMs, the annual payment is determined by their relative market share compared to the other Participating Manufacturers. For SPMs, the annual payments are based on a flat rate per cigarette for each cigarette sold above a certain "grandfathered" amount, which is set at the higher of either the individual SPM's 1998 market share or 125% of the SPM's 1997 market share. In addition, Participating Manufacturers must adhere to certain other conditions, such as restrictions on advertising. In exchange for these commitments, the Settling States agreed to dismiss pending lawsuits and refrain from filing additional lawsuits against the Participating [*3] Manufacturers.

Although the four major cigarette companies are OPMs, and many other smaller cigarette companies have chosen to become SPMs, there are also many cigarette companies that have declined to join in the MSA. These companies are collectively known as "Nonparticipating Manufacturers" ("NPMs"). The Participating Manufacturers feared that they would lose market share to the NPMs, who would not be burdened by the large annual payments to be made by OPMs and SPMs, and therefore would be able to charge lower prices. Therefore, they included in the MSA the NPM Downward Adjustment, which decreases the OPMs' annual payments if they lose market share to NPMs. The MSA also included a provision that required the Settling States to pass escrow statutes, as described below, or face substantial reductions in the annual payment. These provisions made it in the Settling States' best interest to prevent a loss of market share to NPMs as well.

In 2000, Kentucky passed an Escrow Statute, as provided for in the MSA, designed to address the concern that NPMs would escape liability for smoking-related costs associated with their cigarettes. See KRS 131.600-602 [*4] (2004). HN1[] The statute forces NPMs to either become SPMs (which would require paying to the state all money that would have been owed if the NPM had been an SPM from the beginning), or else to place a specified amount of money into escrow. The amount required to satisfy the second option is intended to approximate the amount being paid to the state by Participating Manufacturers, and is based on a flat fee per cigarette that will increase over time. Currently the escrow amount is about 1.67 cents per cigarette, about $ 4 per carton. See KRS 131.602\(1\)\(b\). The NPMs are entitled to receive the interest from the escrow account, and the escrow accounts are set up as twenty-five year revolvers, with each year's escrow payment repaid to the NPM after being held for that period. See KRS 131.602\(2\).

In addition, the money can be removed from the escrow account in two other circumstances. First, the money can be taken out of escrow to pay any judgment or settlement to the state related to smoking-related costs. See KRS 131.602\(2\)\(a\). Second, under the Allocable Share Release ("ASR") provision, KRS 131.602\(2\)\(b\) [*5], the NPM can request that any amount the NPM paid into escrow that was in excess of what it would have been forced to pay to Kentucky if it had been an SPM be returned to them. The statute as originally enacted provided as follows:

To the extent that a tobacco product manufacturer establishes that the amount it was required to place into escrow in a particular year was greater than the state's allocable share of the total payments that such manufacturer would have been required to make in that year under the Master Settlement Agreement . . . had it been a participating manufacturer, the excess shall be released from escrow and revert back to such tobacco product manufacturer.

This statute was intended to equalize the amounts paid into escrow by NPMs and the amounts paid to the states by SPMs. If NPMs sold their products nationally, this indeed would be the case. However, for regional NPMs that only sold in a few states, the ASR allowed the NPMs to recover almost all of the money placed into escrow. For example, an NPM selling cigarettes only in Kentucky would pay the flat rate intended to be equivalent to that paid by an SPM selling the same number of cigarettes nationwide, [*6] but would be able to recover over 98% of that money since Kentucky's allocable share under the MSA is less than two percent. To correct this imbalance, in 2004 Kentucky enacted what Plaintiffs call the ASR Repeater, HB 97, amending KRS 131.602\(2\)\(b\) to read as follows:

HN2[] To the extent that a tobacco product manufacturer establishes that the amount it was required to place into escrow on account of units sold in the state in a particular year was greater than the master settlement agreement payments, as determined pursuant to section IX (I) of that agreement, including after final determination of all adjustments, that such manufacturer would have been required to make on account of such units sold had it been a participating manufacturer, the excess shall be released from escrow and revert back to such tobacco product manufacturer.

The ASR as amended returns funds from escrow back to the NPM based on the excess over not Kentucky's allocable share under the MSA, but rather the number of units actually sold in Kentucky.

To ensure that NPMs were forced to make the required escrow payments, Kentucky enacted a third statute, HN3[] the Contraband Statute, [*7] which makes it illegal for distributors to place Kentucky tax stamps on cigarettes purchased from NPMs who are not in compliance with the Escrow Statute. See KRS 131.612. The Attorney General of Kentucky is required to maintain a list of compliant companies, and is empowered to de-list noncompliant companies. See KRS 131.610.

Plaintiffs in their Amended Complaint describe five mechanisms by which the MSA and its implementing statutes create and sustain the cartel:<sup>1</sup>

- a. Keying the annual settlement payment of each Major to its relative Market Share for that year;
- b. Restricting the output of firms joining the MSA after it was executed [i.e. SPMs] . . . ;
- c. The mandate in the MSA requiring enactment by the Settling States of escrow statutes which force NPMs to make escrow payments to eliminate any "cost advantages" those NPMs would have by not joining the MSA;
- d. The "diligent" enforcement of these escrow statutes required of each Settling State by the MSA, e.g. enactment and enforcement of contraband statutes in 43 of the 46 Settling States preventing sales by NPMs not making escrow fund payments; [*8] and
- e. Enactment of the ASR Repealers in now at least 39 of the Settling States.

As a direct result of these conditions, the OPMs have been able to raise prices dramatically without losing any substantial share of the market. The wholesale price of a carton of premium cigarettes has increased from $ 19 to over $ 30 since the MSA, while the OPMs' market share has dropped only from 98% to approximately 90%. The total number of cigarettes sold domestically by the OPMs dropped twenty-five percent from 1999 to 2003, yet the OPMs' profits have increased.

OPMs have an incentive to not compete on price, since a gain in market share would lead to higher annual settlement payments. SPMs have an incentive to not compete in price, since any market share they gained would lead to their exceeding their grandfathered number of sales, which are exempt from annual payments. NPMs face the equivalent of a tax on their sales in the form of the flat fee [*9] per cigarette that must be placed in escrow; this fee prevents them from competing by lowering prices below what the Participating Manufacturers are able to charge.<sup>2</sup>

[*10] PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

Plaintiffs Trident International Corp. ("Trident"), DWI, LLC ("DWI"), and Cibahia Tabacos Especias Ltda. ("Cibahia") filed this action against the Commonwealth of Kentucky on September 23, 2004, alleging claims arising out of the MSA and ensuing legislation passed to implementing the agreement. Plaintiffs are, respectively, a cigarette importer, a cigarette wholesaler, and a cigarette manufacturer. None of the Plaintiffs are parties to the MSA, and none have become SPMs. Cibahia and the company through which Trident buys cigarettes have been de-listed from the Attorney General's list of manufacturers eligible to have their cigarettes sold in Kentucky.

Specifically, Plaintiffs allege that Kentucky's Escrow, Contraband, and ASR and ASR Repeater Statutes (collectively referred to as the "implementing statutes") are preempted by Section 1 of the Sherman Act, and that those statutes also violate Plaintiffs' right to due process, equal protection, and freedom of speech, as well as being prohibited by the Kentucky Constitution's prohibition of special legislation. Plaintiffs seek declaratory and injunctive relief.

<sup>1</sup> Citations to the various provisions of the MSA have been omitted

<sup>2</sup> Plaintiffs also allege many facts that are immaterial to the current motion. Plaintiffs assert that the MSA and its implementing statutes have been ineffective in reducing smoking and that a flat tax on cigarettes would be more effective, but the effectiveness of a state policy is irrelevant to the question of whether the state statute will be preempted. See Hoover v. Ronwin, 466 U.S. 558, 574, 80 L. Ed. 2d 590, 104 S. Ct. 1989 (1984) (noting that the Supreme Court has never "suggested . . . that a state action is exempt from antitrust liability only if the sovereign acted wisely"). Plaintiffs also devote substantial space to showing that the Settling States' motivations were purely directed toward raising revenue, and that in effect the Settling States entered into a conspiracy with the OPMs to violate the Sherman Act. However, a state's subjective motivations in enacting legislation are irrelevant to whether that legislation can be challenged under the antitrust laws, see Consol. Television Cable Serv., Inc. v. City of Frankfort, 857 F.2d 354, 362 (6th Cir. 1988), and there is no conspiracy exception to state action immunity. See Mich. Paytel Joint Venture v. City of Detroit, 287 F.3d 527, 535 (6th Cir. 2001).

Plaintiffs also seek to have a class comprising [*11] "all firms throughout the United States that purchase cigarettes made by manufacturers that do not make MSA settlement payments" certified pursuant to Federal Rules of Civil Procedure \("Rules"\) 23\(b\)\(2\) and 23\(b\)\(3\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

On February 25, 2005, Defendant filed a motion to dismiss the complaint pursuant to Rule 12\(b\)\(6\). In their response, Plaintiffs withdrew all of their claims except their Sherman Act claim.<sup>3</sup> Therefore, the Court need only address that claim.

[*12] STANDARD OF REVIEW

HN4 [↑] A district court considering a motion to dismiss must "assume that all allegations are true and dismiss the claim only if it is clear that no relief could be granted under any set of facts that could be proved consistent with the allegations." Golden v. City of Columbus, 404 F.3d 950, 959 \(6th Cir. 2005\) (internal quotation marks omitted). A Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion tests the sufficiency of the pleadings and is "not a challenge to the plaintiff's factual allegations." Id. at 958-59. However, "to survive a motion to dismiss under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\), a complaint must contain either direct or inferential allegations respecting all the material elements to sustain a recovery under some viable legal theory. Conclusory allegations or legal conclusions masquerading as factual conclusions will not suffice to prevent a motion to dismiss." Mezibov v. Allen, 411 F.3d 712, 716 \(6th Cir. 2005\) (internal citations omitted).

DISCUSSION

A. Plaintiffs' Antitrust Claim

Plaintiffs seek a declaratory judgment that Kentucky's implementing statutes are preempted by Section 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, [*13] and an order enjoining the enforcement of the same. In support, Plaintiffs claim that the statutes enacted pursuant to the MSA create an output cartel that is per se illegal under the Sherman Act, and for the purposes of this motion the illegal output cartel is presumed to exist. However, the interpretation of the implementing statutes is the type of "legal conclusion" on which the Court is not bound by Plaintiffs' assertions. See id.

B. Preemption Under Rice

HN5 [↑] Two findings are required before state legislation can be preempted by the Sherman Act. First, the Court must determine, as it would with all preemption claims, whether there is an irreconcilable conflict between state and federal law. See, e.g., Rice v. Norman Williams Co., 458 U.S. 654, 659, 73 L. Ed. 2d 1042, 102 S. Ct. 3294 \(1982\); McNeilus Truck and Mfg., Inc. v. Ohio ex rel Montgomery, 226 F.3d 429, 440 \(6th Cir. 2000\). Second, if such a conflict is found, the Court must determine whether the legislation is protected under the doctrine of state action immunity, which will only be the case if the state "clearly articulates" its intention to displace competition and "actively supervises" the anticompetitive [*14] behavior. See Freedom Holdings, Inc. v. Spitzer, 357 F.3d 205, 222 \(2004\), reh'g denied 363 F.3d 149 \(2d Cir. 2004\); see also Rice, 458 U.S. at 661 n.9 (finding it unnecessary to engage in the immunity analysis after holding that the state statute at issue was not preempted). Thus, the preemption analysis is logically prior to the state action immunity analysis.

<sup>3</sup> It is not entirely clear whether Plaintiffs have withdrawn their claim that the challenged statutes constitute special legislation under Section 59 of the Kentucky Constitution. In listing the claims being withdrawn, Plaintiffs only explicitly mentioned their federal constitutional claims, but they also cited the Fourth Count of their Amended Complaint, which was composed solely of the state constitutional claim, and Plaintiffs did not devote any space to defending that claim in their response to this motion. In any case, the challenged statutes are not prohibited special legislation since they are based on "a reasonable and natural distinction which relates to the purpose of the act," namely, the distinction between NPMs and Participating Manufacturers, and the legislation "applies equally to all in a class." St. Luke Hosp., Inc. v. Health Policy Bd., 913 S.W.2d 1, 3, 43 1 Ky. L. Summary 13 \(Ky. App. 1996\).

HN6 [↑] Preemption of state statutes is not to be found lightly. "The Sherman Act makes no mention of the state as such, and gives no hint that it was intended to restrain state action or official action directed by a state." Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 351, 87 L. Ed. 315, 63 S. Ct. 307 (1943). A mere showing that the statute has anticompetitive effects will not lead to a finding of preemption. See Rice, 458 U.S. at 659. "If an adverse effect on competition were, in and of itself, enough to render a state statute invalid, the States' power to engage in economic regulation would be effectively destroyed." Exxon Corp. v. Governor of Maryland, 437 U.S. 117, 133, 57 L. Ed. 2d 91, 98 S. Ct. 2207 (1978).

HN7 [↑] The standard for antitrust preemption is high:

[A] state statute, when considered [*15] in the abstract, may be condemned under the antitrust laws only if it mandates or authorizes conduct that necessarily constitutes a violation of the antitrust laws in all cases, or if it places irresistible pressure on a private party to violate the antitrust laws in order to comply with the statute.

Rice, 458 U.S. at 661; see also 324 Liquor Corp. v. Duffy, 479 U.S. 335, 345 n.8, 93 L. Ed. 2d 667, 107 S. Ct. 720 (1987) ("Our decisions reflect the principle that the federal antitrust laws preempt state laws authorizing or compelling private parties to engage in anticompetitive behavior."); McNeilus, 226 F.3d at 440-41 (applying Rice).

The Sixth Circuit recently had the opportunity to apply this standard to an Ohio statute in McNeilus Truck and Manufacturing, Inc. v. Ohio ex rel Montgomery, 226 F.3d 429, a case closely analogous to the instant case. In McNeilus, a seller of remanufactured trucks sought to enjoin an Ohio licensing statute that prevented sellers of new or manufactured vehicles from selling in Ohio unless they either operated their own repair department, or had binding contracts with a sufficient number of repair shops [*16] so that the sellers' customers would be able to have their vehicles serviced by someone authorized by the vehicle manufacturer to work on the vehicle without voiding the warranty. Id. at 434-35. The Plaintiff in McNeilus argued that the licensing statute facilitated a group boycott of independent sellers such as himself, and therefore that it should be preempted under Section 1 of the Sherman Act. Id. at 440-441. The district court granted summary judgment to the defendant on the Sherman Act preemption claim, and the Sixth Circuit affirmed that decision. Id.

Like the output cartel alleged in this case, the conduct alleged in McNeilus, a group boycott, was illegal per se. See id. at 441; see also Fashion Originators' Guild, Inc. v. FTC, 312 U.S. 457, 467-68, 85 L. Ed. 949, 61 S. Ct. 703, 32 F.T.C. 1856 (1941) (holding that group boycotts are illegal per se). Moreover, the Sixth Circuit accepted that the Ohio statute actually had created the anticompetitive effects complained of, finding that the statute "no doubt facilitates either coordinated action, if such there be, or else uncoordinated (though perhaps unconscious) parallel action by dealers [*17] in refusing to enter binding contracts." See McNeilus, 226 F.3d at 441. Despite finding that the statute facilitated a per se violation of the Sherman Act, the Sixth Circuit refused to enjoin the statute on antitrust grounds. "The statute does not explicitly authorize a boycott." Id. Since "the statute neither authorized nor required the dealers to engage in behavior proscribed by the federal antitrust laws," the Sixth Circuit found that there was no preemption, and suggested that it would have been more proper for the plaintiff to sue the dealers actually engaged in the boycott. Id.

Likewise, the challenged Kentucky statutes in this case neither mandate that anyone violate the federal antitrust laws in order to comply with the statutes, nor authorize anyone to do so.<sup>4</sup> Also like the statute at issue in McNeilus,

---

<sup>4</sup> Plaintiffs do not address the third prong of the Rice standard, "irresistible pressure," in either their Amended Complaint or their Response to the Motion to Dismiss. Reading Plaintiffs' allegations in the most favorable light, this Court cannot find that the Plaintiffs have alleged the existence of irresistible pressures. Plaintiffs' allegations demonstrate that the output cartel allows the participating manufacturers to extract suprareactive profits. This Court is unaware of any precedent suggesting that legislation facilitating anticompetitive conduct creates irresistible pressure to engage in such conduct, nor indeed is this Court aware of any case from the Supreme Court, the Sixth Circuit, or any other federal court actually finding preemption under the "irresistible pressure" standard in the absence of an explicit statutory mandate.

the Kentucky statutes can be presumed to facilitate conduct that is illegal per se, but this is not enough to support a finding of preemption. The statutes merely require cigarette manufacturers to pay certain amounts either to the state, for Participating Manufacturers, or into an interest-bearing escrow account, for NPMs; this is not [*18] equivalent to an explicit statutory mandate or authorization of a "contract, combination . . . or conspiracy, in restraint of trade" that would be prohibited by the Sherman Act. 15 U.S.C. § 1 \(2004\).

[*19] Other courts that have addressed substantially identical challenges to state tobacco legislation have found that the state statutes were not preempted by the Sherman Act. The District Court for the Northern District of California rejected one similar preemption claim:

The key allegation of plaintiff's Sherman Act claim is that the MSA creates an incentive for the manufacturer defendants to raise prices in parallel fashion, since a price increase by one OPM alone would increase market share for the others as well as for the SPMs, resulting in their having to make higher payments under the settlement. This scenario presents a "hypothetical" or "potential" conflict with the Sherman Act, but not the "irreconcilable" conflict required for preemption.

Sanders v. Lockyer, 365 F. Supp. 2d 1093, 1101 \(N.D. Cal. 2005\) (dismissing a challenge to California's statutes relating to NPMs); see also Xcaliber Int'l Ltd., LLC v. Edmondson, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 26705, No. 04-CV-0922-CVE-PJC \(N.D. Ok. May 20, 2005\) (granting summary judgment in favor of the Attorney General of Oklahoma and holding that the Oklahoma version of the ASR Repealer "cannot be said to enforce any market-sharing or price-fixing agreement [*20] among manufacturers, or any other private decision to restrain competition").<sup>5</sup>

Plaintiffs support their arguments by pointing to a series of decisions arising out of the litigation challenging a substantially identical set of statutes in New York.<sup>6</sup> See Freedom Holdings, Inc. v. Spitzer, 357 F.3d 205 \(2d Cir.\), reh'g denied 363 F.3d 149 \(2d Cir. 2004\), remanded to 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18296, 2004 WL 2035334 \(S.D.N.Y. Sept. 14, 2004\). The Second Circuit found that the plaintiffs in that case alleged sufficient facts suggesting that the statutes would be preempted to survive a motion to dismiss, see id. at 222-26, and on remand the district court granted a preliminary injunction against the enforcement of New York's version of the ASR Repealer, although it denied the injunction against the other implementing statutes. See [id., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18296, 2004 WL 2035334 at \*1. \[\*21\]](#) As support for the decision, the Second Circuit relied on the plaintiffs' allegations that the OPMs "have discretion to increase prices . . . assured that competitors will follow," that "the MSA empowers the tobacco companies to make anticompetitive decisions," and that the combination of the MSA and the implementing statutes "allows OPMs to set up supracompetitive prices." Id. at 225-26 (internal citations omitted).

[*22] This Court cannot find that the fact that the statutes at issue "empower," "allow," and give "discretion" to the OPMs is sufficient for preemption under Rice, which requires that the challenged statutes either mandate or authorize conduct that is in all cases illegal. Even read in the light most favorable to Plaintiffs, these allegations do not constitute the equivalent of a statutory mandate, and while the Second Circuit's reasoning might support a finding of authorization in the abstract, the Sixth Circuit's decision in McNeilus forecloses that possibility in this case. In McNeilus, there was no dispute that the challenged statute allowed (or empowered, or, if one prefers, gave discretion to) the dealers to engage in conduct that is per se illegal by boycotting independent sellers of remanufactured cars, but this was held insufficient to invalidate the statute. HN8 A statute will not be preempted if it "does not explicitly authorize" the illegal conduct. McNeilus, 226 F.3d at 441 (emphasis added).

<sup>5</sup> The Court notes that although Xcaliber is unreported, both parties devoted substantial space to it in their briefs.

<sup>6</sup> Plaintiffs also cite two decisions by the Third Circuit in passing, but do not rely heavily on them in their argument, which is probably just as well. In the first case, the Third Circuit affirmed the dismissal under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine (which was not raised in this case) of a suit brought by NPMs against Participating Manufacturers, and then went on to opine that if the case had not been dismissed under Noerr-Pennington, it would also not have been dismissed under the doctrine of state action immunity. A.D. Bedell Wholesale Co. v. Philip Morris, Inc., 263 F.3d 239 \(3d Cir. 2001\). In a subsequent case brought against the State of Pennsylvania seeking to enjoin the enforcement of its implementing statutes, the Third Circuit also dismissed the suit under Noerr-Pennington, and then added a discussion that cast considerable doubt on the logic of Bedell, suggesting that the court in Bedell had "unintentionally" found the absence of state action immunity for the state, although the court declined to actually overrule the prior opinion. Mariana v. Fisher, 338 F.3d 189, 203 \(3d Cir. 2003\).

The Second Circuit felt that it could "not dismiss a challenge to the [statutory] scheme on the grounds that it is not, as a matter of law, anticompetitive. [*23] . . . The complaint alleges such an effect and plaintiffs are entitled to attempt to prove it." Freedom Holdings, 363 F.3d at 154 (denying rehearing). Nor would this Court hold, as a matter of law, that the statutory scheme is not anticompetitive. However, an anticompetitive effect is not all that Plaintiffs must allege. See Rice, 458 U.S. at 659. To survive a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, Plaintiffs must allege facts supporting "all the material elements to sustain a recovery." Mezibov, 411 F.3d at 716. Plaintiffs must therefore allege the existence of an irreconcilable conflict between the implementing statutes and the Sherman Act, and to do so, those statutes must mandate or authorize conduct that would in all cases violate the Sherman Act. See Rice, 458 U.S. at 659. The implementing statutes clearly do not.

C. Plaintiffs' Hybrid Restraint Claim

Plaintiffs also argue that the statutes should be preempted as HNG hybrid restraints, which are to be found when state acts grant "private regulatory power" to private parties. 324 Liquor Corp., 479 U.S. at 345 n.8. The "private regulatory power" [*24] alleged by Plaintiffs is the power of the Participating Manufacturers to force their competitors to follow their price increases so as to avoid an increase in settlement or escrow payments. When a hybrid restraint is found to conflict with federal antitrust law, the statute will only be immune from challenge if it meets the same two-part Midcal test as any other statute that is prima facie preempted. See id. at 343-44 (applying the test developed in California Retail Liquor Dealers Ass'n v. Midcal Aluminum, Inc., 445 U.S. 97, 63 L. Ed. 2d 233, 100 S. Ct. 937 (1980)). "First, the challenged restraint must be one clearly articulated and affirmatively expressed as state policy; second, the policy must be actively supervised by the State itself." Midcal, 445 U.S. at 105 (internal quotation marks omitted). The Second Circuit in Freedom Holdings found that the MSA and its implementing statutes constituted a hybrid restraint, and also that they could not meet the Midcal standard since there was no active supervision of the private parties' price-setting. See Freedom Holdings, 357 F.3d at 226-32. This Court need not address the Midcal test, however, [*25] since the Court finds that the implementing statutes are not preempted under the Rice standard.

The concept of hybrid restraints is narrower than Plaintiffs would suggest. Plaintiffs seem to regard a finding of a hybrid restraint as a substitute for the preliminary preemption analysis required by Rice and McNeilus. It is not. Instead, it is simply a name for a type of regulatory scheme in which the state itself does not directly effectuate the anticompetitive restraint, but instead delegates some authority to others. A finding of a hybrid restraint answers a defendant's claim that there is no "contract, combination . . . or conspiracy in restraint of trade" of the type that would be prohibited by the Sherman Act, nothing more. See 324 Liquor Corp., 479 U.S. at 345 n.8.

In every case in which the Supreme Court has found a hybrid restraint preempted, the statute being challenged explicitly mandated or authorized illegal conduct, just as a non-hybrid restraint must in order to be preempted. Therefore, it is natural that there was no need in those cases to dwell on the initial preemption analysis required under Rice. In 324 Liquor Corp. and Midcal, the [*26] challenged statutes explicitly mandated resale price maintenance, which is illegal per se. Id. at 337-40; Midcal, 445 U.S. at 99-100. In Schwegmann Brothers, the challenged Louisiana statute mandated vertical price-fixing, which is illegal per se. Schwegmann Bros. v. Calvert Distillers Corp., 341 U.S. 384, 386-87, 95 L. Ed. 1035, 71 S. Ct. 745, 60 Ohio Law Abs. 81 (1951). In FTC v. Ticor Title Insurance Company, 504 U.S. 621, 119 L. Ed. 2d 410, 112 S. Ct. 2169 (1992), the challenged statutes explicitly authorized horizontal price-fixing by title insurance companies, which is illegal per se. See id. at 630.<sup>7</sup> The absence of a discussion of the Rice standard in these cases does not mean that the standard is not applicable to hybrid restraint cases; it simply means that it was not at issue.

---

<sup>7</sup> 324 Liquor Corp. is the only Supreme Court case to strike down a law using the term "hybrid restraint," and none of the other cases cited above actually use the term, but Plaintiffs and others have characterized the statutory schemes in those cases as "hybrid restraints," and the usage is consistent with the definition in 324 Liquor Corp. See, e.g. Rice, 458 U.S. at 665-66 (Stevens, J., concurring). The Sixth Circuit has never adopted the concept of a "hybrid restraint" for use in its analysis.

[*27] Characterizing the implementing statutes as a hybrid restraint does nothing to lessen the burden on Plaintiffs to allege facts that, if true, would be sufficient to show an irreconcilable conflict between the Sherman Act and the state statutes. The Second Circuit in Freedom Holdings held that the statute was preempted because it allowed and empowered private parties to form a cartel, and therefore moved on to the Midcal analysis. See Freedom Holdings, 357 F.3d at 223-26. However, as discussed in Part B, supra, this Court cannot find that the Kentucky statutes at issue either mandate or explicitly authorize conduct that would be in all cases illegal, which is the standard for any challenged restraint in the Sixth Circuit, hybrid or not. Therefore, there is no need to reach whether the statutes are hybrid restraints, or if the statutes would satisfy the Midcal test for state action immunity.

CONCLUSION

Accordingly, and for the foregoing reasons, IT IS ORDERED:

- (1) That Defendant's motion to dismiss Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint [Record No. 36] be, and the same hereby is, GRANTED;
- (2) That all of Plaintiffs' claims be, and the [*28] same hereby are, DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE.

This the 8th day of September, 2005.

Signed By:

Joseph M. Hood

United States District Judge

JUDGMENT

** * * * *

In accordance with the Order of even date and entered contemporaneously herewith,

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED:

- (1) That this action be, and the same hereby is, DISMISSED AND STRICKEN FROM THE ACTIVE DOCKET.
- (2) That all pending motions be, and the same hereby are, DENIED AS MOOT.
- (3) That all scheduled proceedings be, and the same hereby are, CONTINUED GENERALLY.
- (4) That this Order is FINAL AND APPEALABLE and THERE IS NO JUST CAUSE FOR DELAY.

This the 8th day of September, 2005.

Signed By:

Joseph M. Hood

United States District Judge

---

End of Document

Slattery v. Apple Comput., Inc.

United States District Court for the Northern District of California, San Jose Division

September 9, 2005, Decided; September 9, 2005, Filed

NO. C 05-00037 JW

Reporter

2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 50531 *; 2005 WL 2204981

Thomas William Slattery, individually, and on behalf of all others similarly situated, Plaintiff(s), v. Apple Computer, Inc., Defendant.

Subsequent History: Later proceeding at Slattery v. Apple Computer, Inc., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 32423 \(N.D. Cal., Nov. 15, 2005\)

Core Terms

---

music, digital, alleges, iTunes, files, iPod, online, players, hard drive, portable, antitrust, monopolization, monopoly, format, relevant market, consumer, music store, played, unjust enrichment, vendors, motion to dismiss, tying product, market power, tied product, legal sale, Cartwright Act, alteration, leveraging, possesses, unfair

Counsel: [*1] For Melanie Tucker, Plaintiff: Andrew S. Friedman, Elaine A. Ryan, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Bonnett Fairbourn Friedman & Balint, P.C, Phoenix, AZ; Michael D Braun, LEAD ATTORNEY, Braun Law Group, P.C., Los Angeles, CA; Todd David Carpenter, LEAD ATTORNEY, Carlson Lynch Sweet Kilpela & Carpenter LLP, San Diego, CA; Alexandra Senya Bernay, Jennifer N. Caringal, Robbins Geller Rudman and Dowd LLP, San Diego, CA; Bonny E. Sweeney, Hausfeld LLP, San Francisco, CA; Carmen Anthony Medici, Robbins Geller Rudman Dowd LLP, San Diego, CA; Francis Joseph Balint, Jr., Bonnett Fairbourn Friedman & Balint, PC, Phoenix, AZ; Gregory Weston, San Diego, CA; John J. Stoia, Jr., Patrick J. Coughlin, Steven M. Jodlowski, Thomas Robert Merrick, Robbins Geller Rudman & Dowd LLP, San Diego, CA; Paula R. Brown, Blood Hurst & O'Reardon LLP, San Diego, CA; Thomas J. Kennedy, Murray Frank LLP, New York, NY.

For Somtai Troy Charoensak, Plaintiff: Brian P. Murray, LEAD ATTORNEY, Glancy Prongay & Murray LLP, New York, NY; Elaine A. Ryan, LEAD ATTORNEY, Bonnett Fairbourn Friedman & Balint, P.C, Phoenix, AZ; Jacqueline Sailer, LEAD ATTORNEY, Murray, Frank & Sailer LLP, New York, NY; Michael D Braun, Michael D. Braun, LEAD ATTORNEYS, [*2] Braun Law Group, P.C., Los Angeles, CA; Roy Arie Katriel, LEAD ATTORNEY, The Katriel Law Firm, La Jolla, CA; Todd David Carpenter, LEAD ATTORNEY, Carlson Lynch Sweet Kilpela & Carpenter LLP, San Diego, CA; Alexandra Senya Bernay, Jennifer N. Caringal, Robbins Geller Rudman and Dowd LLP, San Diego, CA; Bonny E. Sweeney, Hausfeld LLP, San Francisco, CA; Carmen Anthony Medici, Robbins Geller Rudman Dowd LLP, San Diego, CA; Gregory Weston, San Diego, CA; Patrick J. Coughlin, Thomas Robert Merrick, Robbins Geller Rudman & Dowd LLP, San Diego, CA; Paula R. Brown, Blood Hurst & O'Reardon LLP, San Diego, CA; Thomas J. Kennedy, Murray Frank LLP, New York, NY.

For Mariana Rosen, individually and on behalf of all others similarly situated, Plaintiff: Andrew S. Friedman, Elaine A. Ryan, LEAD ATTORNEYS, Bonnett Fairbourn Friedman & Balint, P.C, Phoenix, AZ; Brian P. Murray, LEAD ATTORNEY, Glancy Prongay & Murray LLP, New York, NY; Jacqueline Sailer, LEAD ATTORNEY, Murray, Frank & Sailer LLP, New York, NY; Michael D Braun, LEAD ATTORNEY, Braun Law Group, P.C., Los Angeles, CA; Roy Arie Katriel, LEAD ATTORNEY, The Katriel Law Firm, La Jolla, CA; Todd David Carpenter, LEAD ATTORNEY, Carlson Lynch Sweet [*3] Kilpela & Carpenter LLP, San Diego, CA; Alexandra Senya Bernay, Jennifer N. Caringal, Robbins Geller Rudman and Dowd LLP, San Diego, CA; Bonny E. Sweeney, Hausfeld LLP, San Francisco, CA;

Carmen Anthony Medici, Robbins Geller Rudman Dowd LLP, San Diego, CA; Gregory Weston, San Diego, CA; Patrick J. Coughlin, Steven M. Jodlowski, Thomas Robert Merrick, Robbins Geller Rudman & Dowd LLP, San Diego, CA; Paula R. Brown, Blood Hurst & O'Reardon LLP, San Diego, CA; Thomas J. Kennedy, Murray Frank LLP, New York, NY.

For Thomas William Slattery, Individually, And on behalf of all others similarly situated, Plaintiff: Marc Lawrence Godino, Glancy Prongay & Murray LLP, Los Angeles, CA.

For Stacie Somers, Plaintiff: Michael D Braun, LEAD ATTORNEY, Braun Law Group, P.C., Los Angeles, CA; Aileen Haeggquist, Haeggquist & Eck, LLP, San Diego, CA; Helen I. Zeldes, Coast Law Group LLC, Encinitas, CA; Paula R. Brown, Blood Hurst & O'Reardon LLP, San Diego, CA.

For Apple Inc., Defendant: William A. Isaacson, LEAD ATTORNEY, PRO HAC VICE, Boies Schiller & Flexner, Washington, DC; Adam Richard Sand, Esq., Amir Q. Amiri, Caroline Nason Mitchell, Craig Ellsworth Stewart, David Craig Kiernan, Robert Allan Mittelstaedt, [*4] Tracy Strong, Jones Day, San Francisco, CA; Christopher G. Renner, Boies Schiller and Flexner LLP, Washington, DC; George A. Riley, O'Melveny & Myers LLP, San Francisco, CA; John F. Cove, Jr., Shearman & Sterling LLP, San Francisco, CA; Karen Leah Dunn, Martha Lea Goodman, PRO HAC VICE, Jonathan H Sherman, Boies, Schiller and Flexner LLP, Washington, DC; Kieran Paul Ringgenberg, SL Environmental Law Group, PC, San Francisco, CA; Maxwell Vaughn Pritt, Boies, Schiller and Flexner LLP, Oakland, CA; Meredith Richardson Dearborn, Boies Schiller Flexner LLP, Palo Alto, CA; Michael Tedder Scott, DLA PIPER LLP (US), San Francisco, CA; Suzanne Elizabeth Nero, Oakland, CA.

For Bloomberg L.P., The Associated Press, Cable News Network, Inc. (CNN), Intervenors: Thomas R. Burke, Davis Wright Tremaine LLP, San Francisco, CA.

Jeff Kowalski, Intervenor, Pro se, Hemlock, MI.

Edward Mitnick, Intervenor, Pro se, Bordentown, NJ.

Jimmy Jared Thiola, Intervenor, Pro se, Toms River, NJ.

Jonathan Riche, Intervenor, Pro se, Bellefonte, PA.

Lisa Tullis, Intervenor, Pro se, Wetumpka, AL.

Georgette Thornton, Intervenor, Pro se, Alto, GA.

Bethany Brittan, Intervenor, Pro se, Gatesville, TX.

Lisa Murphy, Intervenor, Pro [*5] se, Newport, AR.

Elizabeth Prior, Intervenor, Pro se, Jessup, MD.

Judges: JAMES WARE, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: JAMES WARE

Opinion

---

ORDER GRANTING IN PART, DENYING IN PART DEFENDANT'S MOTION TO DISMISS

I. INTRODUCTION

Plaintiff Thomas William Slattery ("Plaintiff") brings this action on behalf of himself and all other similarly situated to challenge alleged anticompetitive conduct by Defendant Apple Computer, Inc. ("Defendant"), relating to portable hard drive digital music players and legal online sales of digital music. On June 6, 2005, the Court heard arguments on Defendant's Motion to Dismiss the Complaint pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\). Having carefully considered the arguments of the parties and the papers submitted, this Court GRANTS in part and DENIES in part Defendant's Motion.

II. BACKGROUND

Plaintiff, alleges that at some undisclosed time, he purchased digital music from Defendant's iTunes online music store. (Compl. ¶¶ 9, 14.) The music was downloaded to the hard drive of his computer. He admits that he could play the purchased music on his computer and compact disc ("CD") player. (Compl. ¶¶ 39, 42.) However, the crux of Plaintiff's complaint is that if he wishes to directly play the downloaded music from iTunes [*6] on a portable hard drive digital music player, an iPod is the only product that can play the purchased songs. In this sense, Plaintiff claims he has been forced to buy an iPod. (Compl. ¶ 9.)

The Plaintiff alleges that there are two separate relevant markets pertinent to these claims. The first is the market for the legal online sale of digital music. (Compl. ¶ 11.) Plaintiff asserts that through its iTunes online music store, Defendant possesses monopoly market power in the legal online sale of digital music. (Compl. ¶¶ 20-21.) The second market is portable hard drive digital music players. (Compl. ¶ 11.) Plaintiff asserts that through its iPod product, Defendant possesses monopoly market power in the portable hard drive digital music players market.

The Plaintiff has pled a number of Claims that all relate to Defendant's alleged anticompetitive conduct. Primarily, the Plaintiff alleges that Defendant foreclosed iTunes digital music files from being played on any portable hard drive digital music player other than an iPod. Likewise, Defendant foreclosed digital music files downloaded from other online music vendors from being played on the iPod. The Complaint alleges that when it first [*7] launched iTunes, Defendant adopted an encoding format, called Advanced Audio Coding ("AAC"), for its digital music files. According to the Plaintiff, this format was an "open-source" format used by many competing vendors and players that would allow iTunes' music files to play on many different competing portable hard drive digital players. (Compl. ¶¶ 37-45.) Plaintiff alleges that to stifle competition, Defendant altered the AAC format by embedding within it a separate propriety code that prevents portable hard drive digital music players other than the iPod from playing iTunes music files, and that also prevents music files bought from online music vendors other than iTunes from being played on the iPod. (Compl. ¶¶ 26-27, 37-45.)

According to the Plaintiff, the net effect of Defendant's alteration of the AAC format into the "AAC Protected" format is that the user must purchase both the online digital music file and the portable hard drive digital music player from Defendant. (Compl. ¶ 41-43.) Likewise, due to the alteration of formats, an owner of Defendant's iPod who wishes to legally purchase online digital music files must purchase such files only from Defendant's iTunes to the [*8] exclusion of any other competing online music vendor. (Compl. ¶ 46.) Thus, but for the alteration, iTunes files would be readily playable on any number of competing portable hard drive digital music players other than the iPod, and owners of an iPod could play online digital music files purchased from any number of competing online music vendors other than Defendant's iTunes store. (Compl. ¶¶ 43, 46.)

In addition to Defendant's initial alteration of the AAC format into its proprietary protected format, Plaintiff alleges that on one occasion, Defendant took action to prevent a competitor from selling online digital music to customers. According to Plaintiff, when RealNetwork, a competing online vendor of digital music files, independently defeated Defendant's "AAC Protected" format and began selling music files that played on the iPod for 45 cents a song verses iTunes' price at 99 cents per song, Defendant immediately changed its software code so as to prevent RealNetwork's music files from being played on Defendant's iPod devices. RealNetwork's digital music files were being sold for less than the price of Defendant's iTunes music files. Thus, Plaintiff alleges that Defendant's actions [*9] prevented consumers of the iPod from accessing these competing, less expensive music files. (Compl. ¶¶ 46-50.)

III. STANDARDS

A complaint may be dismissed for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\). A claim may be dismissed as a matter of law for: "(1) lack of a cognizable legal theory or (2) insufficient facts under a cognizable legal theory." Robertson v. Dean Witter Reynolds, Co., 749 F.2d 530, 534 \(9th Cir. 1984\). "A complaint should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief." Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 \(1957\). The court "must presume all factual allegations of the complaint to be true and draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the nonmoving party." Usher v. City of Los Angeles, 828 F.2d 556, 561 \(9th Cir. 1987\). In determining the propriety of a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) dismissal, a court may not look beyond the complaint. Schneider v. California Dept. of Corrections, 151 F.3d 1194, 1197 \(9th Cir. 1998\) ("The focus of any Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) dismissal . . . is the complaint"). A court may dismiss a case without leave to amend if the Plaintiff is unable to cure the defect by amendment. Lopez v. Smith, 203 F.3d 1122, 1129 \(9th Cir. 2000\). To survive a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) motion, an antitrust complaint "need only allege sufficient facts from which the court can discern the elements of an injury resulting from an act forbidden by the antitrust laws." Newman v. Universal Pictures, 813 F.2d 1519, 1522 \(9th Cir. 1987\), cert. denied, 486 U.S. 1059, 108 S. Ct. 2831, 100 L. Ed. 2d 931 (1988); United States v. LSL Biotechnologies, 379 F.3d 672, 698 \(9th Cir. 2004\) (stating [*10] that notice pleading is the only requirement for an antitrust claim).

IV. DISCUSSION

Based on alleged anticompetitive behavior, Plaintiff charges Defendant with violating the Sherman Act, California's Cartwright Act, California's unfair competition law, common law monopolization, and common law unjust enrichment. Defendant now moves the Court to dismiss Plaintiff's Complaint under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\), for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted.

A. Illegal Tying Claims

In order to establish an illegal tying arrangement under 15 U.S.C. § 1, plaintiffs must show "three elements: (1) a tie between two separate products or services sold in relevant markets; (2) sufficient economic power in the tying product market to affect the tied market; and (3) an effect on a non-insubstantial volume of commerce in the tied product market." County of Tuolumne v. Sonora Cnty. Hosp., 236 F.3d 1148, 1157-58 \(9th Cir. 2001\). Implicit in these elements is the need of the seller of the tying product "to force the buyer into the purchase of the tied product that the buyer did not want at all, or might have preferred to purchase elsewhere on different terms." Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 12, 104 S. Ct. 1551, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2 \(1984\); Paladin Assocs., Inc. v. Montana Power Co., 328 F.3d 1145, 1159 \(2003\).

Plaintiff, in Claims I and II, alleges two federal antitrust tying claims against the Defendant. (Compl. 19:8-21:17.) Claim I alleges that the [*11] tying product is the legal sale of online digital music files, sold through its iTunes music store. (Compl. ¶ 63.) The tied product is the iPod. (Compl. ¶ 63.) Plaintiff alleges, if a consumer purchases digital music from Defendant's iTunes music store and chooses to purchase a portable hard drive digital music player in order to listen to the purchased digital music remotely, Defendant coerces the consumer to purchase its iPod. (Compl. ¶ 63.) Claim II alleges that the tying product is the iPod and the tied product is iTunes. (Compl. ¶ 70.) If a consumer purchases Defendant's iPod and chooses to purchase an online digital music file, Defendant coerces the consumer to purchase online digital music from its iTunes music store. (Compl. ¶ 70.)

In both Claims I and II, Plaintiff alleges that Defendant has market power in the tying product which is used to coerce the consumer to purchase the tied product. Both Claims include the same two allegedly separate products, the difference being the two products are switched as to which is the "tying" product and which is the "tied" product. It seems inconsistent to allege that a product is both a "tying" product and a "tied" product. However, for [*12] pleading purposes, the Court will allow the inconsistency to persist. At some appropriate point in the litigation, an election might be necessary.

Accepting Plaintiff's allegations as true, all elements of a tying claim are met. The Plaintiff alleges two relevant markets: the legal sale of online digital music files and portable hard drive digital music players in the geographic market of the United States. (Compl. ¶ 11.) The Plaintiff also alleges that Defendant possesses an 80 percent market share in the legal sale of online digital music files, and over a 90 percent market share in portable hard drive digital music players. (Compl. ¶¶ 20, 24.) This Court also finds that the tying would have an effect on a substantial volume of commerce. (Compl. ¶¶ 20.) The element of coercion is also adequately plead in Plaintiff's Complaint. (Compl. 19:8-21:17.) This Court finds that, at the pleading stage, Plaintiff has satisfied the burden of alleging Defendant has sufficient economic power in the tying markets to affect the tied markets.

The Defendant argues that a tying claim cannot be made because consumers can purchase either iTunes or the iPod separately. (Motion to Dismiss at 4:26-5:8.) However, [*13] the fact that Plaintiff can purchase the items separately does not dismiss a tying claim. Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 463, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1992). The Defendant further contends that both products are capable of functioning independently without a consumer purchasing both. (Motion to Dismiss at 5:9-19.) However, this argument ignores Plaintiff's allegations of the relevant markets. The alleged relevant markets, as this Court must limit itself to, are the legal sale of online digital music files and portable hard drive digital music players. (Compl. ¶ 11.) Plaintiff alleges that, within these relevant markets, the only legal digital music files capable of playing directly on an iPod are music files sold by Defendant's iTunes music store. (Compl. 19:8-21:17.) Further, the only portable hard drive digital music player capable of directly playing music from Defendant's iTunes music store is the iPod. (Compl. 19:8-21:17.) Although the alleged markets are narrowly defined by Plaintiff, this Court accepts these allegations as true for the purposes of this motion. Thus, as plead, Plaintiff alleges all of the elements of a tying claim to survive a motion to dismiss under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\).

B. Monopolization Claims

Plaintiff, in Claims III and IV, alleges that Defendant [*14] violated 15 U.S.C. § 2 by acquiring or maintaining monopoly market power. (Compl. at 21:18-23:10.) In order to state a claim for monopolization under 15 U.S.C. § 2, a plaintiff must show that: "(1) the defendant possesses monopoly power in the relevant market; (2) the defendant has willfully acquired or maintained that power; and (3) the defendant's conduct has caused antitrust injury." Cost Mgmt. Servs. v. Washington Natural Gas, 99 F.3d 937, 949 (9th Cir. 1996). Both Claims III and IV of Plaintiff's Complaint allege Defendant possesses monopoly market power in the legal sale of online digital music and portable hard drive digital music players, respectively. (Compl. ¶¶ 79, 84.) Further, the Plaintiff alleges facts which if proven could be found to suggest the conclusion that Defendant has willfully acquired or maintained that power. (Compl. ¶¶ 78, 83.) Finally, the Plaintiff alleges that an antitrust injury has resulted from Defendant's conduct. (Compl. ¶¶ 80, 85.) This Court finds that Plaintiff has sufficiently plead the elements for a claim of monopolization to survive a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) motion. Further, by satisfying the elements of a Sherman Act monopolization claim, the Plaintiff has adequately plead, in Claim X, a common law claim of monopolization.

C. Attempted Monopolization and Leveraging [*15] Claims

Plaintiff, in Claims V and VI, alleges that Defendant has violated 15 U.S.C. § 2 by leveraging its power in one market to attempt to establish a monopoly in another. (Compl. at 23:11-24:17.) The Ninth Circuit does not view leveraging of a monopoly as an independent claim under section 2 of the Sherman Act. Alaska Airlines, Inc. v. United Airlines, Inc., 948 F.2d 536, 546 (9th Cir. 1991). However, attempted monopolization may include allegations of monopoly leveraging. Id. at 549 ("If there is a dangerous probability that a monopoly will be created by leveraging conduct, then the conduct will be reached under the doctrine of attempted monopoly."). Therefore, in order to state a claim, Plaintiff must allege the elements of attempted monopolization. The elements include, "(1) a specific intent to monopolize a relevant market--i.e., an intent to control prices or destroy competition in a relevant market; (2) predatory or anticompetitive conduct designed to control prices or destroy competition; (3) a dangerous probability of success--i.e., a probability of achieving monopoly power in the relevant market; and (4) causal antitrust injury."

Paladin Assocs., 328 F.3d at n.22. This Court finds that Plaintiff has not adequately plead the elements of attempted monopolization. Therefore this Court [*16] dismisses Claims V and VI with leave to amend.

D. Cartwright Claim

Plaintiff, in Claim VII, alleges Defendant violated California state law under the Cartwright Act. (Compl. at 24:15-25.) "Because the Cartwright Act has objectives identical to the federal antitrust acts, the California courts look to cases construing the federal antitrust laws for guidance in interpreting the Cartwright Act." Vinci v. Waste Mgmt., Inc., 36 Cal. App. 4th 1811, 43 Cal. Rptr. 2d. 337, n.1 (Cal. Ct. App. 1995). Typically, if a plaintiff is capable of maintaining a Sherman Act claim, the plaintiff is capable of maintaining a similar Cartwright Act claim. However, the laws are distinct. Dimidowich v. Bell & Howell, 803 F.2d 1473, 1478 (9th Cir. 1986). In this instance, although Plaintiff uses overly broad language to allege a Cartwright Act violation, Plaintiff has incorporated the elements of the Sherman Act violation and thus, the Court will allow Claim VII to stand at the pleading stage of the litigation. (Compl. at 24:20-25.)

E. Unfair Competition Law Claim

Plaintiff, in Claim VIII, alleges that Defendant has violated California's unfair competition law. (Compl. at 25:1-17.) A claim under California Business & Professions Code section 17200 is far broader than a federal antitrust claim, and thus Defendant's conduct may constitute a violation of section 17200 even if not rising for some technical reason to an antitrust violation. [*17] Cel-Tech Comms., Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Tel. Co., 20 Cal. 4th 163, 187, 83 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 (1999). Section 17200 defines "unfair competition" as "any unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business act or practice." CAL. BUS. & PROF. CODE § 17200. The California Supreme Court has consistently recognized the sweeping nature of section 17200, stating: "When a plaintiff who claims to have suffered injury from a direct competitor's "unfair" act or practice invokes section 17200, the word "unfair" in that section means conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law." Cel-Tech, 20 Cal. 4th at 187. This Court finds that Plaintiff's pleading of a section 17200 violation is adequate to survive a motion to dismiss.

F. Plaintiff's Unjust Enrichment Claim Fails as a Matter of Law

Plaintiff, in Claim IX, alleges that Defendant has been unjustly enriched from the money and business given for purchases from iTunes or iPods. (Compl. ¶ 100.) Plaintiff further states that he is entitled to disgorgement of Defendant's ill-gotten gains. (Compl. ¶ 100.) Defendant argues that the unjust enrichment claim should be dismissed at a matter of law because Plaintiff has purchased a product in a transaction that creates a contract. (Motion to Dismiss at 17:24-25.) Under California law, an action for unjust enrichment is not possible where a contractual relationship exists between the two parties. Gerlinger v. Amazon.com, Inc., 311 F. Supp. 2d 838, 856 (N.D. Cal. 2004). By Plaintiff's [*18] own statements, a contract under California law is made when consumers purchase either an iPod or a music file from iTunes. See CAL. COM. CODE §§ 2106(1), 2204(1). Therefore, Plaintiff's common law unjust enrichment claim is dismissed as a matter of law with prejudice.

V. CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above, the Court DENIES Defendant's Motion to Dismiss First, Second, Third, Fourth, Seventh, Eighth, and Tenth Claims. The Court GRANTS Defendant's Motion to Dismiss Plaintiff's Fifth and Sixth Claims with leave to amend. This Court GRANTS Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Plaintiff's Ninth Claim with prejudice. To avoid confusion as the case proceeds, on or before October 11, 2005, Plaintiff shall file and serve an amended complaint which contains only the allowed claims, including those that the Court has granted leave to amend if Plaintiff wishes to amend. Defendant shall file a response to the amended complaint no later than 15 days following the filing and service of the amended complaint.

Dated: September 9, 2005

/s/ James Ware

JAMES WARE

United States District Judge

---

End of Document

Corey Airport Servs. v. City of Atlanta

United States District Court for the Northern District of Georgia, Atlanta Division

September 12, 2005, Decided; September 12, 2005, Filed

CIVIL ACTION NO. 1:04-CV-3243-CAP

Reporter

2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 62370 *

COREY AIRPORT SERVICES, INC., Plaintiff, v. THE CITY OF ATLANTA, et al., Defendants.

Subsequent History: Decision reached on appeal by Corey Airport Servs. v. City of Atlanta, 181 Fed. Appx. 908, 2006 U.S. App. LEXIS 13063 \(11th Cir. Ga., May 24, 2006\)

Motion granted by, in part, Motion denied by, in part Corey Airport Servs. v. City of Atlanta, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 116595 \(N.D. Ga., Feb. 20, 2007\)

Dismissed by Corey Airport Servs. v. City of Atlanta, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 116596 \(N.D. Ga., May 23, 2007\)

Motion granted by Corey Airport Servs. v. City of Atlanta, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 116597 \(N.D. Ga., June 22, 2007\)

Core Terms

---

discovery, motion to stay, interlocutory appeal, qualified immunity, certify, motion to amend, pretrial

Counsel: [*1] For Corey Airport Services, Inc., William E. Corey, Plaintiffs: Griffin B. Bell, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Fisher & Phillips, Atlanta, GA USA; Joseph Matthew Maguire, Jr., LEAD ATTORNEY, Parks Chesin & Walbert, P.C. -Atl, Atlanta, GA USA; Joshua Barrett Belinfante, LEAD ATTORNEY, Robbins Ross Alloy Belinfante Littlefield, LLC -Atl, Atlanta, GA USA; Mairen C. Kelly, LEAD ATTORNEY, Matthew Rudolph Simpson, Fisher & Phillips LLP-ATL, Atlanta, GA USA; Michael J. Bowers, LEAD ATTORNEY, Balch & Bingham LLP-Atl, Atlanta, GA USA; Darren W. Penn, Penn Law, LLC, Atlanta, GA USA; Jeffrey R. Harris, Harris Lowry Manton, LLP, Atlanta, GA USA.

For The City of Atlanta, Defendant: John Anderson Sensing, LEAD ATTORNEY, Cari K. Dawson, Christopher Allen Riley, Alston & Bird, LLP - Atl, Atlanta, GA USA; Michael P. Kenny, LEAD ATTORNEY, Wade Pearson Miller, Alston & Bird, Atlanta, GA USA; Erica L. Fenby, Alston & Bird, LLP, Atlanta, GA USA; Ryan Jay Lewis, InComm Division Counsel, Atlanta, GA USA.

For Shirley Franklin, Ben Decosta, Marlene Coleman, Kyle Mastin, Paul Meyer, Charles Chilly Ewing, Carolyn Chavis, Hubert Owens, Defendants: John Anderson Sensing, LEAD ATTORNEY, Cari K. Dawson, Christopher Allen Riley, [*2] Alston & Bird, LLP - Atl, Atlanta, GA USA; Michael P. Kenny, LEAD ATTORNEY, Wade Pearson Miller, Alston & Bird, Atlanta, GA USA; Ryan Jay Lewis, InComm Division Counsel, Atlanta, GA USA.

For Felicia Strong-Whitaker, Defendant: Michael P. Kenny, LEAD ATTORNEY, Wade Pearson Miller, Alston & Bird, Atlanta, GA USA; Cari K. Dawson, Christopher Allen Riley, Alston & Bird, LLP - Atl, Atlanta, GA USA.

For Carolyn Chavis, Hubert Owens, Richard Sapp, Toni Darden, Mario Diaz, Defendants: John Anderson Sensing, LEAD ATTORNEY, Cari K. Dawson, Christopher Allen Riley, Alston & Bird, LLP - Atl, Atlanta, GA USA; Michael P. Kenny, LEAD ATTORNEY, Wade Pearson Miller, Alston & Bird, Atlanta, GA USA; Ryan Jay Lewis, InComm Division Counsel, Atlanta, GA USA.

For Carole Dortch, in their individual capacities as officers and employees of the City of Atlanta, Defendant: Michael P. Kenny, LEAD ATTORNEY, Wade Pearson Miller, Alston & Bird, Atlanta, GA USA; Cari K. Dawson, Christopher Allen Riley, Alston & Bird, LLP - Atl, Atlanta, GA USA.

For Barbara Fouch, doing business as Creative Media Displays of Georgia, Defendant: Judson H. Simmons, LEAD ATTORNEY, Smith Gambrell & Russell, Atlanta, GA USA; Christopher Allen [*3] Riley, Alston & Bird, LLP - Atl, Atlanta, GA USA; Edward H. Wasmuth, Jr., William Parker Sanders, Smith Gambrell & Russell, LLP - GA, Atlanta, GA USA.

For Clear Channel Outdoor, Inc., doing business as Clear Channel Airports, Defendant: Damon J. Whitaker, LEAD ATTORNEY, Bryan Cave Leighton Paisner LLP - ATL, Atlanta, GA USA; Drew C. Ensign, Richard P. Bress, LEAD ATTORNEYS, PRO HAC VICE, Latham & Watkins-DC, Washington, DC USA; John Weldon Harbin, LEAD ATTORNEY, King & Spalding, Llp-Atl, Atlanta, GA USA; Mary Katherine Bates, LEAD ATTORNEY, King & Spalding Llp, Atlanta, GA USA; W. Ray Persons, LEAD ATTORNEY, King & Spalding LLP, Atlanta, GA USA; Christine A. Hopkinson, King & Spalding, Llp-Atl, Atlanta, GA USA; Christopher Allen Riley, Alston & Bird, LLP - Atl, Atlanta, GA USA; Michael David Flint, Schreeder Wheeler & Flint, LLP, Atlanta, GA USA; Shira Adler Crittendon, Shira Adler Crittendon, Attorney at Law, Chattanooga, TN USA.

For Clear Channel Airports of Georgia, Inc., formerly known as, Transportation Media, Inc. of Georgia, Defendant: Damon J. Whitaker, LEAD ATTORNEY, Bryan Cave Leighton Paisner LLP - ATL, Atlanta, GA USA; John Weldon Harbin, LEAD ATTORNEY, King & Spalding, Llp-Atl, [*4] Atlanta, GA USA; Mary Katherine Bates, LEAD ATTORNEY, King & Spalding Llp - Atl, Atlanta, GA USA; Christine A. Hopkinson, King & Spalding, Llp-Atl, Atlanta, GA USA; Christopher Allen Riley, Alston & Bird, LLP - Atl, Atlanta, GA USA; W. Ray Persons, King & Spalding LLP, Atlanta, GA USA.

For L. Lowry Mays, William S. Hart, Defendants: Damon J. Whitaker, LEAD ATTORNEY, Bryan Cave Leighton Paisner LLP - ATL, Atlanta, GA USA; John Weldon Harbin, LEAD ATTORNEY, King & Spalding, Llp-Atl, Atlanta, GA USA; Christine A. Hopkinson, King & Spalding, Llp-Atl, Atlanta, GA USA.

For James v. Riley, J. Michael Riley, Defendants: Damon J. Whitaker, LEAD ATTORNEY, Bryan Cave Leighton Paisner LLP - ATL, Atlanta, GA USA; John Weldon Harbin, LEAD ATTORNEY, King & Spalding, Llp-Atl, Atlanta, GA USA; W. Ray Persons, LEAD ATTORNEY, King & Spalding LLP, Atlanta, GA USA; Christine A. Hopkinson, King & Spalding, Llp-Atl, Atlanta, GA USA; Christopher Allen Riley, Alston & Bird, LLP - Atl, Atlanta, GA USA.

For Thomas M. O'Ryan, Defendant: Damon J. Whitaker, LEAD ATTORNEY, Bryan Cave Leighton Paisner LLP - ATL, Atlanta, GA USA; John Weldon Harbin, LEAD ATTORNEY, King & Spalding, Llp-Atl, Atlanta, GA USA.

For John G. [*5] Mcneany, Defendant: Damon J. Whitaker, LEAD ATTORNEY, Bryan Cave Leighton Paisner LLP - ATL, Atlanta, GA USA; John Weldon Harbin, LEAD ATTORNEY, King & Spalding, Llp-Atl, Atlanta, GA USA; W. Ray Persons, LEAD ATTORNEY, King & Spalding LLP, Atlanta, GA USA; Anthony L. Cochran, Smith, Gambrell & Russell, LLP, Atlanta, GA USA; Christine A. Hopkinson, King & Spalding, Llp-Atl, Atlanta, GA USA; Christopher Allen Riley, Alston & Bird, LLP - Atl, Atlanta, GA USA.

For Adam L. Smith, in their individual capacities as officers and employees of the City of Atlanta, Defendant: Christopher Allen Riley, Alston & Bird, LLP - Atl, Atlanta, GA USA; Michael P. Kenny, Alston & Bird, Atlanta, GA USA; Ryan Jay Lewis, InComm Division Counsel, Atlanta, GA USA.

Judges: CHARLES A. PANNELL, JR., United States District Judge.

Opinion by: CHARLES A. PANNELL, JR.

Opinion

---

ORDER

On July 12, 2005, the court entered an order ("July 12 Order") [Doc. No. 89] granting in part and denying in part various motions to dismiss filed by Clear Channel and several of its individual employees ("Clear Channel Defendants"), the City of Atlanta ("City"), and several individual employees of the City ("Atlanta City Defendants"). On July 15, the court entered an order [*6] ("July 15 Order") [Doc. No. 90] granting in part and denying in part defendant Barbara Fouch's motion to dismiss. This matter is now before the court on the following motions: (1) the City and the Atlanta City Defendants' motion to stay discovery [Doc. No. 104]; (2) the City's motion to amend the court's July 12 Order to add certification for interlocutory appeal [Doc. No. 106]; (3) the Clear Channel Defendants' motion for an amendment of the July 12 Order to certify the order for interlocutory appeal [Doc. No. 107]; (4) the Clear Channel Defendants' motion to stay litigation pending appeal [Doc. No. 108]; (5) Fouch's motion for amendment of the July 15 Order so as to certify the order for interlocutory appeal and also motion to stay litigation [Doc. No. 109]; and (6) Corey's request for a pretrial conference [Doc. No. 115].

I. The Motions To Amend [Doc. Nos. 106, 107, and 109]

In its motion [Doc. No. 106], the City seeks to have the court certify the following issue for interlocutory appeal: "Whether, under 42 U.S.C. § 1983, an unsuccessful bidder for a municipal contract is entitled to 'lost profits' when the municipality has wrongfully denied its bid." City's Brief at 9 [Doc. No. 106].

In their respective [*7] motions [Doc. Nos. 107 and 109], the Clear Channel Defendants and Fouch seek to have the court certify the following issues for interlocutory appeal:

1. Whether the Parker state action doctrine requires active state supervision of the alleged anticompetitive conduct to immunize private parties from liability for antitrust claims when a municipality is the effective decisionmaker;
2. Whether there is a conspiracy exception to either the Parker state action doctrine or Noerr-Pennington immunity from antitrust claims;
3. Whether Corey defined a relevant market cognizable in antitrust law; and
4. Whether the Noerr-Pennington doctrine immunizes private parties from liability for 42 U.S.C. § 1983 equal protection conspiracy claims.

Clear Channel Defendants Brief at 8 [Doc. No. 107]; Fouch's Brief at 8 [Doc. No. 109]. "Under 28 U.S.C. § 1292\(b\), the district court may certify an interlocutory order for appeal if the order (1) involves a controlling question of law, (2) as to which there is substantial ground for difference of opinion, and (3) an immediate appeal from the order may materially advance the ultimate termination of the litigation." Harris v. Luckey, 918 F.2d 888, 892 (11th Cir. 1990). In this case, the court finds that none of the issues presented by the defendants satisfy [*8] these three conditions. The court notes that, with regards to several of the issues presented, the defendants have misconstrued the plaintiff's complaint and the holding of the court in attempting to create a "substantial difference of opinion" where none exists. Accordingly, the court DENIES the City's motion to amend [Doc. No. 106]; DENIES the Clear Channel Defendants' motion to amend [Doc. No. 107]; and DENIES Fouch's motion to amend [Doc. No. 109].

II. The Motions to Stay Discovery [Doc. No. 104, 108, and 109] and Corey's Motion for a Pretrial Conference [Doc. No. 115]

In the July 12 Order, the court held that, at this early stage of the litigation, the Atlanta City Defendants were not entitled to qualified immunity. The Supreme Court has held "that a district court's denial of a claim of qualified immunity, to the extent that it turns on an issue of law, is an appealable 'final decision' within the meaning of 28 U.S.C. § 1291 notwithstanding the absence of a final judgment." Mitchell v. Forsyth, 472 U.S. 511, 526, 105 S. Ct. 2806, 2817, 86 L. Ed. 2d 411 (1985). In this case, the Atlanta City Defendants contend that the court's denial of their claims of qualified immunity turns on an issue of law, and, therefore, they have appealed. "The defense of sovereign or qualified immunity [<sup>*9</sup>] protects government officials not only from having to stand trial, but from having to bear the burdens attendant to litigation, including pretrial discovery. A district court, therefore, properly stays discovery pending appeal of a denial of immunity." Blinco v. Green Tree Servicing, LLC, 366 F.3d 1249, 1252 (11th Cir. 2004) (citations omitted).

In this case, the Atlanta City Defendants are currently appealing this court's denial of their claim to qualified immunity. The court holds that they are entitled to a stay in discovery pending the resolution of their appeal. Furthermore, the plaintiff's claims against the Atlanta City Defendants are inextricably intertwined with the claims against the City, the Clear Channel Defendants, and Fouch. Accordingly, the court will stay all discovery in this action pending the resolution of the Atlanta City Defendants' appeal. Corey argues that the court should not stay all discovery because the Atlanta City Defendants will ultimately be witnesses in this case even if the Eleventh Circuit determines that they are entitled to qualified immunity. Though this may be true, the court finds that it is prudent to stay all litigation in this case while the Atlanta City Defendants appeal so that the court can direct discovery in [<sup>*10</sup>] accordance with the holding of the Eleventh Circuit. Corey chose to sue the Atlanta City Defendants in their individual capacities, and those individuals have the right to appeal this court's denial of their claim to qualified immunity. The court, therefore, will not entertain Corey's complaints about undue delay. For this reason, the court GRANTS the City and the Atlanta City Defendants' motion to stay discovery [Doc. No. 104]; GRANTS the Clear Channel Defendants' motion to stay litigation pending appeal [Doc. No. 108]; and GRANTS Fouch's motion to stay litigation [Doc. No. 109]. Discovery in this case is hereby stayed pending the resolution of the Atlanta City Defendants' appeal.

As to Corey's motion for a pretrial conference [Doc. No. 115], the court finds that it is unnecessary at this point to have such a conference given the court's ruling above. Accordingly, the motion [Doc. No. 115] is DENIED.

Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, the court:

- (1) GRANTS the City and the Atlanta City Defendants' motion to stay discovery [Doc. No. 104];
- (2) DENIES the City's motion to amend the court's July 12 Order to add certification for interlocutory appeal [Doc. No. 106];
- (3) DENIES the Clear Channel [<sup>*11</sup>] Defendants' motion for an amendment of the July 12 Order to certify the order for interlocutory appeal [Doc. No. 107];
- (4) GRANTS the Clear Channel Defendants' motion to stay litigation pending appeal [Doc. No. 108];
- (5) DENIES in part and GRANTS in part Fouch's motion for amendment of the July 15 Order so as to certify that order for interlocutory appeal and motion to stay litigation [Doc. No. 109]; and
- (6) DENIES Corey's request for a pretrial conference [Doc. No. 115].

The Clerk of Court is directed to submit this file to the undersigned after the resolution of the Atlanta City Defendants' appeal to the Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeals.

SO ORDERED, this 12th day of September, 2005.

/s/ Charles A. Pannell, Jr.

CHARLES A. PANNELL, JR.

United States District Judge

K&R Nursing Servs. v. Genesis Health Ventures of Windsor, Inc.

Superior Court of Connecticut, Judicial District of Hartford At Hartford

September 13, 2005, Decided ; September 15, 2005, Filed

CV030830546S

Reporter

2005 Conn. Super. LEXIS 2473 *; 2005 WL 2497414

K&R Nursing Services, Inc. et al. v. Genesis Health Ventures of Windsor, Inc. dba Windsor Hall and Genesis Health Ventures of Bloomfield, Inc. et al.

Notice: [*1] THIS DECISION IS UNREPORTED AND MAY BE SUBJECT TO FURTHER APPELLATE REVIEW. COUNSEL IS CAUTIONED TO MAKE AN INDEPENDENT DETERMINATION OF THE STATUS OF THIS CASE.

Prior History: K&R Nursing Servs. v. Genesis Health Ventures of Windsor, Inc., 2005 Conn. Super. LEXIS 346 \(Conn. Super. Ct., Feb. 7, 2005\)

Core Terms

---

motion to strike, allegations, antitrust, monopolization, antitrust claim, plaintiffs', summary judgment motion, sufficient facts, anti trust law, defendants', memorandum, Pleadings, compete, survive, courts

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Strike > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

HN1[] Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim

On a motion to strike, a court must construe the facts in the complaint most favorably to the plaintiff. If facts provable in the complaint would support a cause of action, the motion to strike must be denied. Pleadings must be construed broadly and realistically, rather than narrowly and technically.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

Standing to assert an antitrust claim requires a showing that a plaintiff has been injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws. A two-part test exists for courts to determine whether there is antitrust standing: as a necessary first step, courts must determine whether a plaintiff suffered an antitrust injury. If the answer to that question is yes, that must then determine whether any of the other factors, largely relating to the directness and identifiability of the plaintiff's injury, prevent the plaintiff from being an efficient enforcer of the antitrust laws.

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > General Overview

HN3 Pleading & Practice, Pleadings

See Conn. Gen. Prac. Book, R. Super. Ct. § 10-1.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Motions to Strike > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements > General Overview

HN4 Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

No heightened pleading requirements apply in antitrust cases.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN5 Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

A plaintiff in an antitrust case is not required to allege, or prove, that it competes in precisely the same market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Acts & Mental States > Mens Rea > Specific Intent

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > State Regulation

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

HN6 Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

Monopolization under Conn. Gen. Stat. § 35-27 is adequately pled by alleging some conduct permitting an inference of specific intent to monopolize. The same conclusion applies to claims of attempted monopolization, as well as unlawful restraint of trade, Conn. Gen. Stat. § 35-28\(d\).

Judges: Douglas S. Lavine Judge, Superior Court.

Opinion by: Douglas S. Lavine

Opinion

---

DECISION ON MOTION TO STRIKE DATED APRIL 29, 2005

Pursuant to Practice Book Section 10-39 et seq., defendants moved on April 29, 2005, to strike Count Six of the plaintiffs' Substituted Revised Complaint. Subsequent to the filing of the motion to strike, plaintiff filed an Amended Substituted Revised Complaint, dated June 10, 2005. Defendants filed an objection to the motion strike on July 21, 2005, supported by a memorandum of law in opposition. On July 29, 2005, defendants filed a reply to plaintiff's objection.

This Court issued a memorandum of decision on a previous motion to strike setting out many of the essential facts as alleged in the complaint then pending. Knowledge of these facts is assumed.

In their April 29, 2005, Motion to Strike, defendants make two claims. First, they allege that the plaintiffs have failed to meet the minimum standing requirement for antitrust claims as a result of insufficient allegations of antitrust injury and [*2] participation in the same market. Second, they allege that plaintiffs have failed to allege sufficient facts to support the claims of monopolization and unfair restraint of trade.

Plaintiffs dispute these arguments, and argue that Count Six sufficiently sets out the claims they wish to assert. Some of defendants' arguments, plaintiffs contend, are more properly asserted at a later time in a motion for summary judgment.

The Court agrees with the plaintiffs and denies the motion to strike.

Standard on a Motion to Strike

HN1 [↑] On a motion to strike, the court "must construe the facts in the complaint most favorably to the plaintiff . . . If facts provable in the complaint would support a cause of action, the motion to strike must be denied." Faulkner v. United Technologies Corp., 240 Conn. 576, 693 A.2d 293 \(1997\). "Pleadings must be construed broadly and realistically, rather than narrowly and technically . . ." (citation omitted; internal quotation marks omitted), Gazo v. Stamford, 255 Conn. 245, 260, 765 A.2d 505 \(2001\).

Allegations of Antitrust Injury and Participation in the Same Market

Analysis of Count Six of the complaint persuades the [*3] Court that, for purposes of the pending motion to strike, plaintiffs have adequately alleged an antitrust claim. See, in particular, paragraphs 58 through 78. Assoc. General Contractors of Cal., Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 74 L. Ed. 2d 723, 103 S. Ct. 897 \(1983\). See also Continental Orthopedic Appliances v. Health Ins., 956 F. Supp. 367, 371 \(E.D.N.Y. 1997\).

HN2 [↑] Standing to assert an antitrust claim requires a showing that plaintiff has been "injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws." Wyatt Energy, Inc. v. Motiva Enterprises, LLC., 2002 Conn.Super LEXIS 3995 \(December 12, 2002, Hodgson, J.\) \(33 Conn. L. Rptr. 566\) See Balaklaw v. Lovell, 14 F.3d 793, 798 n.9 \(2d Cir. 1994\), which sets out a two-part test for courts to determine whether there is antitrust standing: "As a necessary first step, courts must determine whether the plaintiff suffered an antitrust injury. If the answer to that question is yes, that must then determine whether any of the other factors, largely relating to the directness and identifiability of the plaintiff's injury, prevent the [*4] plaintiff from being an efficient enforcer of the antitrust laws." Drawing all reasonable inferences in favor of plaintiffs, as the Court must, the Court concludes that plaintiffs have sufficiently alleged that K&R is a competitor or participant in the relevant market, see paragraphs 61 through 64 of Count Six, and that plaintiff has standing.

The Court concludes as well that K&R has sufficiently alleged an antitrust injury. See paragraphs 65 through 70 of Count Six. Defendants argue that plaintiffs' allegations lack sufficient facts to support the claim that the cost of care is going up, and the quality of care is going down, and note the differences between what is required in Federal practice and state practice. Section 10-1 of the Practice Book, "Fact pleading," provides as follows: HN3 [↑] "Each pleading shall contain a plain and concise statement of the material facts on which the pleader relies, but not of the evidence by which they are to be proved . . ." It is true that the plaintiffs' allegations in this regard are quite general, but as plaintiffs note, HN4 [↑] no heightened pleading requirements apply in antitrust cases. Todd v. Exxon Corp., 275 F.3d 191, 198 \(2d Cir. 2001\). [*5] The Court is persuaded that allegations are sufficient to survive the motion to strike, and that defendants will have ample opportunity through discovery--and then, if appropriate, a motion for summary judgment and/or trial--to explore and contest these allegations in detail.

Plaintiffs have also adequately alleged that K&R and defendants compete in substantially similar markets. The court is not persuaded that HN5 [↑] plaintiffs must allege, or prove, that they compete in precisely the same market. United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 393, 76 S. Ct. 994, 100 L. Ed. 1264 \(1956\); Pepsico, Inc. v. Coca-Cola, 315 F.3d 101, 105 \(2nd Cir. 2002\).

Finally, the Court concludes that K&R has adequately pleaded, for purpose of surviving the motion to strike, HN6 [↑] monopolization under Section 35-27, by alleging some conduct permitting an inference of specific intent to monopolize. Plumbers Local 598 v. Morris, 511 F. Supp. 1298, 1308 \(E.D.Wash. 1981\); Strobl v. New York Mercantile Exchange, 561 F. Supp. 379, 384 \(S.D.N.Y. 1983\). See also Broadway Delivery Corp. v. United Parcel Service of America, Inc., 651 F.2d 122, 128 [*6] (2d Cir.), cert. Denied, 454 U.S. 968, 70 L. Ed. 2d 384, 102 S. Ct. 512 (1981). The Court reaches the same conclusion with respect to the claims of attempted monopolization. Shea v. First Federal Savings & Loan Ass'n. of New Haven, 184 Conn. 285, 304, 439 A.2d 997 \(1981\), and unlawful restraint of trade, Section 35-28\(d\). See Ajello v. Hartford Federal Sav. & Loan Asso., 32 Conn.Supp. 198, 347 A.2d 113 \(Conn.Super. 1975\).

For all of these reasons, defendants' April 29, 2005, Motion to Strike is denied.

Douglas S. Lavine

Judge, Superior Court

---

End of Document

Lde Corp. v. Dyno Nobel

United States District Court for the District of Wyoming

September 13, 2005, Decided; September 13, 2005, Filed

Case No. 04-CV-0137-J

Reporter

2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 60985 *

LDE CORPORATION, Plaintiff, vs. DYNO NOBEL, INC., Defendant.

Prior History: LDE Corp. v. Dyno Nobel Inc., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 60983 \(D. Wyo., Aug. 8, 2005\)

Core Terms

---

patent, baseless, probable cause, immunity, patent infringement, antitrust, sham, summary judgment, infringement, prong, alleges, discovery, argues, underlying suit, Sherman Act, pre-filing, patentee, subjective motivation, matter of law, tort claim, parties, contractual relationship, summary judgment motion, district court, sham exception, instant case, bring suit, communications, pre-litigation, contacted

Counsel: [*1] For Lde Corporation, Plaintiff: Donald A Degnan, Timothy P Getzoff, LEAD ATTORNEYS, HOLLAND & HART, Boulder, CO USA; Joseph T Jaros, LEAD ATTORNEY, HOLLAND & HART, Denver, CO USA; Michael Daniel Smith, LEAD ATTORNEY, QUESTAR EXPLORATION AND PRODUCTION COMPANY, Cheyenne, WY USA.

For Dyno Nobel Inc, Defendant: David M Bennion, Francis M Wikstrom, Raymond J Etcheverry, LEAD ATTORNEYS, PARSONS BEHLE & LATIMER, Salt Lake City, UT USA; Rick A Thompson, LEAD ATTORNEY, HATHAWAY & KUNZ, Cheyenne, WY USA.

Judges: ALAN B. JOHNSON, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Opinion by: ALAN B. JOHNSON

Opinion

---

MEMORANDUM OPINION REGARDING DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

The above-entitled matter comes before the Court on defendant Dyno Nobel, Inc.'s Motion for Summary Judgment. The Court, having reviewed the motions and materials filed in support thereof and in opposition thereto, having heard oral argument, and being otherwise fully advised in the premises, FINDS and ORDERS as follows:

I. Factual Background

On October 24, 2002, Dyno Nobel, Inc. (the Defendant or Dyno), brought a civil action against LDE Corp. (Plaintiff or LDE) alleging that LDE had infringed Dyno's U.S. Patent No. 4,875,950 ('950 patent). The case was captioned Dyno Nobel, Inc. v. LDE Corp., No. 02-CV-199 [*2] (the patent litigation). On April 18, 2003, this Court held a

Markman hearing in the patent litigation. On August 27, 2003, this Court issued a Claim Construction Order. That Order was highly critical of Dyno's proposed construction of disputed claim terms and adopted, in large part, LDE's proposed constructions. On February 19, 2004, realizing the difficulty in maintaining its suit, Dyno entered into a stipulated judgment of non-infringement, which preserved Dyno's right to appeal.

Subsequently, on May 5, 2004, LDE filed a civil action against Dyno alleging two counts: (1) violation of § 2 of the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. § 2); and (2) intentional interference with contract and prospective contractual relations. LDE argues that Dyno's patent infringement case was frivolous, and was an attempt to monopolize the explosives market.

LDE alleges that its introduction of the "SoftLoad" explosive to the explosives market threatened Dyno's market share of explosive products marketed to mines in the U.S. market. LDE asserts that Dyno cooked up the patent infringement litigation in an attempt to forestall LDE from bringing Soft Load to the market before Dyno could offer a comparable product. In support of this [*3] allegation LDE recounts its successful test shot on April 11, 2002, of Soft Load at Peabody Energy's Black Thunder mine located near Gillette, Wyoming. LDE alleges that several Dyno employees witnessed the test blast, and in response drafted a confidential memorandum outlining their observations. LDE contends that this successful test was the catalyst for Dyno's patent infringement litigation.

LDE also alleges that Dyno intentionally contacted present and potential clients of LDE in an effort to discourage them from doing business with LDE in light of the then pending patent infringement litigation. LDE further alleges that Dyno contacted businesses with whom LDE had potential contractual relationships and a reasonable expectation of business advantages. LDE contends that due to Dyno's contacts, certain businesses stopped purchasing products from LDE, or did not continue, or enter into prospective, business relationships with LDE.

On July 7, 2004, this Court entered a final judgment in favor of LDE in the underlying patent infringement litigation, putting that case in a procedurally appealable posture. On that same day Dyno, served its notice of appeal in the patent litigation.

On July [*4] 30, 2004, Dyno moved for summary judgment of LDE's claims, or in the alternative, a stay pending the outcome of its appeal of the patent litigation. Dyno argues that LDE has failed to satisfy the first prong of the "sham" litigation test--specifically that there was no probable cause to bring the suit in the first place.

LDE asserts that Dyno's summary judgment motion is premature because discovery has not been completed and Dyno has not provided any discovery regarding the second prong of a sham litigation suit--specifically Dyno's subjective intent in bringing the patent litigation. LDE further claims that there are no facts in the record concerning the reasonableness of Dyno's patent litigation, specifically: (1) the extent of Dyno's pre-filing knowledge of the prosecution history and prior art; (2) the extent of Dyno's pre-filing knowledge of LDE's product; (3) the scope of Dyno's pre-filing testing of LDE's product; or (4) whether Dyno received information and documents from third parties concerning its patent and LDE's product before it filed suit against LDE.

On November 1, 2004, this Court entered an order which stayed the instant case pending resolution of Dyno Nobel's appeal [*5] in the Federal Circuit. Subsequently, the Federal Circuit dismissed the appeal, and on April 18, 2005 this Court ordered that the instant case be restored to the active docket. The Defendant's motion for summary judgment is now ripe for review.

II. Standard of Review

Summary judgment is proper when there is no genuine issue of material fact to be resolved at trial. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\); Nebraska v. Wyoming, 507 U.S. 584, 590, 113 S. Ct. 1689, 123 L. Ed. 2d 317 \(1993\). Thus, a district court may grant summary judgment "if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue of material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(c\); Nelson v. Geringer, 295 F.3d 1082, 1086 \(10th Cir. 2002\).

2002). "An issue of material fact is genuine where a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the party opposing summary judgment." Seymore v. Shawver & Sons, Inc., 111 F.3d 794, 797 (10th Cir. 1997).

In applying these standards, the district court will view the evidence in the light most favorable to the party opposing summary judgment. Jenkins v. Wood, 81 F.3d 988, 990 (10th Cir. 1996). The movant bears the initial burden of demonstrating the absence of evidence to support the non-moving party's claims. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 325, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986). When the non-moving party bears the burden of proof at trial, the burden then shifts to it to demonstrate the existence of an essential element [*6] of its case. Id. To carry this burden, the non-moving party must go beyond the pleadings and designate specific facts to show there is a genuine issue for trial. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 251, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986); Ford v. West, 222 F.3d 767, 774 (10th Cir. 2000). The mere existence of a scintilla of evidence in support of the non-moving party's position is insufficient to create a "genuine" issue of disputed fact. Lawmaster v. Ward, 125 F.3d 1341, 1347 (10th Cir. 1997).

III. Analysis

LDE's SHERMAN ACT CLAIM

LDE contends that Dyno has enlisted the courts, through the patent infringement litigation, to harass and stall the introduction of its SoftLoad product into the market. LDE argues that Dyno adopted objectively baseless and unreasonable interpretations of the claims in the '950 patent. LDE argues that Dyno's proposed interpretation of the '950 patent made the claims nonsensical, internally inconsistent and ignored the plain meaning of the words used in the claims. LDE relies heavily on this Court's Claim Construction, and its adoption of many of LDE's interpretations. LDE also points out that Dyno must have been aware all along that its interpretations were unreasonable and baseless, because Dyno did not appeal the findings in the Claim Construction. In essence, LDE claims that Dyno filed the patent infringement litigation in an effort to impose collateral, [*7] anti-competitive injury rather than to obtain justifiable legal remedy. Specifically, LDE claims that Dyno filed the infringement litigation in an effort to impose collateral, anti-competitive injury rather than a justifiable legal remedy. LDE argues that Dyno's behavior is a violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act.<sup>1</sup>

Dyno counters by arguing that it is immune from suit by virtue of the Noerr Pennington doctrine. Dyno further argues that the underlying suit was not objectively baseless.

A. The Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

The Noerr-Pennington immunity shields those who petition the government from antitrust liability. See Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127 (1961); accord Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 669, 85 S. Ct. 1585, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626 (1965). Although the Noer-Pennington doctrine was created to immunize petitioning of administrative and legislative officials, the Court extended the immunity to "the approach of citizens ... to [the] courts." California Motor Transport Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 510, 92 S. Ct. 609, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642 (1972); see also McGuire Oil Co. v. Mapco, Inc., 958 F.2d 1552, 1558-59 (11th Cir. 1992).

Under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, private citizens may exercise their First Amendment rights to petition the government with immunity from antitrust liability. See Baltimore Scrap Corp. v. David Joseph Co., 237 F.3d 394,

---

<sup>1</sup> Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, prohibits monopolization or attempts to monopolize: "Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a felony. . . ."

398 \(4th Cir. 2001\) (citing Noerr, 365 U.S. at 136-39 and Pennington, 381 U.S. at 669). The Noerr Court emphasized that it is "neither unusual nor illegal for people to seek action on laws in the hope that they may bring about an advantage to themselves and a disadvantage to their [*8] competitors . . ." Noerr, 365 U.S. at 139.

B. The Sham Exception

However, the Supreme Court suggested that the Noerr-Pennington immunity did not extend to "sham" activities. Noerr, 365 U.S. at 144.<sup>2</sup> The Court did not extend immunity to suits that were "mere sham to cover what is actually nothing more than an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor." Id. In the patent context, the Federal Circuit held:

A patentee who brings an infringement suit may be subject to antitrust liability for the anti-competitive effects of that suit if the alleged infringer (the antitrust plaintiff) proves . . . that the infringement suit was a mere sham to cover what is actually nothing more than an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor . . . .

Nobelpharma AB v. Implant Innovations, 141 F.3d 1059, 1068 \(Fed. Cir. 1998\)(citations omitted).

In the present case LDE alleges that Dyno instituted a sham litigation, and should not enjoy Noerr-Pennington immunity.

What the term "sham" meant was squarely addressed by the Supreme Court in Professional Real Estate Investors, Inc., v. Columbia Picture Industries, Inc.\(PRE\), 508 U.S. 49 \(1993\); see also Handgards, Inc. v. Ethicon, Inc., 601 F.2d 986 \(9th Cir. 1979\) (addressing sham litigation in the patent context), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 1025 (1980). In PRE, the Court announced a two part test to determine whether a litigant had approached the courts with a sham allegation [*9] holding:

First, the lawsuit must be objectively baseless in the sense that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect success on the merits. If an objective litigant could conclude that the suit is reasonably calculated to elicit a favorable outcome, the suit is immunized under Noerr, and an antitrust claim premised on the sham exception must fail. Only if challenged litigation is objectively meritless may a court examine the litigant's subjective motivation. Under this second part of our definition of sham, the court should focus on whether the baseless lawsuit conceals "an attempt to interfere directly with the business relationships of a competitor," through the "use [of] the governmental process -- as opposed to the outcome of that process -- as an anticompetitive weapon." This two-tiered process requires the plaintiff to disprove the challenged lawsuit's legal viability before the court will entertain evidence of the suit's economic viability. Of course, even a plaintiff who defeats the defendant's claim to Noerr immunity by demonstrating both the objective and the subjective components of a sham must still prove a substantive antitrust violation. Proof of a sham merely [*10] deprives the defendant of immunity; it does not relieve the plaintiff of the obligation to establish all other elements of his claim.

PRE, 508 U.S. at 60-61 (internal citations omitted).

Under Federal Circuit precedent, which governs "all antitrust claims premised on the bringing of a patent infringement suit," plaintiffs must first establish the objective prong of the sham definition by clear and convincing evidence. See Nobelpharma, 141 F.3d at 1069 and 1064. To establish that a lawsuit is objectively baseless, plaintiffs must prove that the purported sham litigation was "so baseless that no reasonable litigant could realistically expect to secure favorable relief." PRE, 508 U.S. at 62; see also Mitek Surgical Products, Inc. v. Arthrex, Inc., 21 F. Supp. 2d 1309, 1318 \(D. Utah 1998\). Furthermore, the Tenth Circuit has characterized the sham exception to Noerr-Pennington immunity as "narrow." See *Bright v. Moss Ambulance Service, Inc.*, 824 F.2d 819, 823 \(10th Cir. 1987\).

<sup>2</sup> There is also an exception to the Noerr-Pennington immunity for litigation based on patents that are procured by fraud. See Walker Process Inc. v. Food Machinery & Chemical Corp., 382 U.S. 172, 86 S. Ct. 347, 15 L. Ed. 2d 247 \(1965\). This exception does not apply to the instant case.

Refining the concept of the objective prong of the sham litigation test, the Court posited that the doctrine of probable cause should guide courts in their analysis, stating: "Probable cause to institute civil proceedings requires no more than a 'reasonable belief that there is a chance that [a] claim may be held valid upon adjudication.'" PRE, 508 U.S. at 63 (quoting *Hubbard v. Beatty & Hyde, Inc.*, 343 Mass. 258, 262, 178 N.E.2d 485 \(1961\)). The Court also held that, "because the absence of probable cause is an essential element of the tort, [*11] the existence of probable cause is an absolute defense." PRE, 508 U.S. at 63. If a suit is not objectively baseless, an antitrust defendant's subjective motivation for bringing suit is immaterial. *Nobelpharma*, 141 F.3d at 1072.

From the outset of our analysis we note that it is the province of the court to determine, as a matter of law, whether probable cause existed in Dyno's patent litigation. PRE, 508 U.S. at 63 (citations omitted); see also *Director General of Railroads v. Kastenbaum*, 263 U.S. 25, 28, 44 S. Ct. 52, 68 L. Ed. 146 \(1923\) ("The question is not whether [the defendant] thought the facts to constitute probable cause, but whether the court thinks they did."). Moreover, the objective prong underlying the probable cause determination is a legal question to be determined by the Court. See *McGuire Oil*, 958 F.2d at 1561 n.12 (quoting *Columbia Pictures Industries, Inc. v. Professional Real Estate Investors, Inc.*, 944 F.2d 1525, 1532 \(9th Cir. 1991\)); see also *In Re: Terazosin Hydrochloride Antitrust Litigation*, 335 F.Supp. 2d 1336, 1356 \(S.D. Fla. 2004\). Whether there was an objectively reasonable basis to bring suit is a proper determination at summary judgment.

1. The Temporal Aspect to Determining Probable Cause and Objective Baselessness: The Whole Record v. Date of Complaint

The parties, however, argue contrary positions regarding the appropriate temporal context in which to determine whether a plaintiff had the requisite probable cause to bring suit. LDE argues that a determination of probable cause should not encompass information discovered subsequent to the filing [*12] of the underlying Patent Litigation. LDE stakes out the position, both in its briefs and at oral argument, that the cutoff date for determining probable cause is the date of filing of the underlying patent litigation. Moreover, as discussed below, LDE petitions this Court for leave to engage in further discovery beyond that of the underlying Patent Litigation to determine the state of Dyno's knowledge at the time of filing. Dyno counters by arguing that this Court, at a minimum need only consult the record of the previously filed and decided Patent Litigation. Dyno contends that this Court need only consult the patent, the patent history and the alleged offending product to determine whether the underlying Patent Litigation was a sham. The answer lies somewhere in between.

a. In Re Relafen

In the intervening time between the stay and the Federal Circuit's dismissal of Dyno's appeal, the District of Massachusetts faced a similar case. In *In Re Relafen Antitrust Litigation*, 346 F.Supp. 2d 349 \(D. Mass. 2005\), the defendant asserted that all of plaintiffs' claims were barred by the Noerr-Pennington doctrine.<sup>3</sup> The court examined the doctrine, including the exceptions, commonly known as the sham exception and the Walker Process exception, to determine if [*13] the defendant's assertion possessed merit. LDE argues that Relafen held that an antitrust defendant's pre-filing knowledge was material to a determination of whether probable cause existed.

In Relafen, the court denied the defendant's motion for summary judgment, holding that "the facts tending to establish the existence or want of existence of probable cause were disputed." *Id. at 361* (citation omitted). The court cited the defendant's pre-filing knowledge at the time of filing. Id. The court went on to find that whether the defendant had the requisite probable cause became an issue that was best submitted to a jury. *Id. at 362*. The court ultimately declined to rule on the objective baselessness of the underlying suit as a matter of law. Id.

---

<sup>3</sup> Obviously this decision has no binding effect on this Court, and is consulted in an effort to flesh out a cogent analysis.

Here the underlying facts of the Patent Litigation are not in dispute. The patent, the patent history and the alleged infringing product were, and are, known quantities. Further, this Court's Markman analysis is also known--as are the arguments made during that process by both parties. In Relafen disputed facts remained undecided from the underlying infringement case specifically, whether the patent could have been anticipated. The unresolved question of fact remained [*14] namely, whether a chemist of ordinary skill could have anticipated the patented product from a published source. Relafen, 346 F.Supp. 2d at 354-55. This disputed fact became the key fact in determining whether the infringement case was objectively baseless. Here the underlying Patent Litigation rested on claim interpretation, not on the validity of the patent itself.

Moreover, in Relafen the court did not separate its analysis between objective baselessness and subjective baselessness. Instead, the court dodged the objective prong and delved into the disputed nature of the defendant's knowledge. This discussion by the Relafen court was, in the Court's opinion, premature and does not comport with the standards enunciated in PRE. For example, the Relafen court stated:

in light of the disputed factual issues, the parties had not established the existence or want of probable cause as matter of law. Nor had [the defendant], whose submissions and oral argument focused solely on the first, objective prong of the sham exception, made the necessary showing that there were no trialworthy issues with respect to the second, subjective prong.

In Re Relafen, 346 F.Supp. 2d at 364.

Such a statement is problematic on several levels. First, it is well established that [*15] the plaintiff in the antitrust action must prove the objective baselessness of the underlying suit. The Relafen court seemed to turn the burden on its head and place the burden of showing probable cause on the defendant.<sup>4</sup> Furthermore, the court did not examine, as a matter of law, the underlying suit and whether it was objectively baseless. Instead, the court subjected the defendant with the burden to show that there were no trialworthy issues "with respect to the second, subjective prong." Id. Whether or not there exists "trialworthy" issues regarding the subjective baselessness of the suit skips the first prong altogether.

Although it is true that the court in Relafen declined to rule as to whether there existed probable cause as a matter of law, it did not foreclose that argument altogether as suggested by the Plaintiff. In fact, the court noted that finding probable cause, and thus ruling on the objective baselessness of the underlying suit as a matter of law was "appropriate" as a "general matter," noting that the "specific circumstances . . . compelled a different conclusion." Relafen, 346 at 362. Those specific circumstances, as described by the court, regarded a disputed [*16] factual issue--namely the defendant's reliance on company scientists.<sup>5</sup> In the instant case, it cannot be said that there is a dispute over the predicate facts of the underlying legal proceeding. See PRE, 508 U.S. at 64. The instant case has been through a Markman hearing and an appeal--no issues of material fact remain at issue. LDE has failed to show that a material fact remains from the Patent Litigation that would effect a determination of whether there was probable cause to bring suit.

In essence, LDE's argument regarding the time probable cause should be determined is a red herring. What LDE really desires is to reopen the discovery in the underlying suit--a necessary byproduct of determining the objective <sup>4</sup> The Relafen court states: "a court may, in the course of resolving the underlying litigation, make findings tantamount to a finding that the [litigant's conduct] was objectively baseless, Judge Lindsay's findings were not clearly and convincingly of this sort. Judge Lindsay's findings did not, for example, describe conduct that was indefensible on its face. Rather, Judge Lindsay discredited SmithKline's claims only after the careful testing of trial." In Re Relafen, 346 F.Supp. 2d at 364. This seems to suggest that the trial court sitting for the underlying litigation must show, through its opinions and memorandum, that the suit is objectively baseless by clear and convincing evidence--or alternatively--that a plaintiff can rely on a trial court's findings in the underlying suit if they are clear and convincing. This too confuses what should be a straightforward analysis of the objective merits of the underlying patent litigation. An analysis which puts the burden squarely on the plaintiff.

<sup>5</sup> The defendant in Relafen relied heavily on the fact that it had survived summary judgment in the underlying patent infringement litigation to demonstrate that the suit was not objectively baseless. The court rejected their argument.

reasonableness at the time of filing. The real question is whether the underlying suit left disputed facts that would tend to establish, or not establish, probable cause. This then forms the basis for when a determination of probable cause should be made. Namely, probable cause is determined by the whole record below in the underlying case. See, e.g., Covad Comm. Co. et al. v. Bell Atlantic Corp. et al., 398 F.3d 666, 677, 365 U.S. App. D.C. 78 (D.C. Cir. 2005) (determining the PRE objective prong by examining the record of the underlying suit); C.R. Bard, 157 F.3d at 1369 (examining the "totality of evidence of sham litigation"); [*17] Amarel v. Connell, 102 F.3d 1494 (9th Cir. 1996) (examining the record of the underlying suits to determine objective baselessness).<sup>6</sup> Such an analysis keeps the objective prong objective by forcing the reviewing court to focus on the case and the suit, opposed to delving into a plaintiff's pre-filing knowledge and therefore its subjective motivations prematurely. With this in mind the Court now turns to the record of the Patent Litigation to determine whether LDE has shown by clear and convincing evidence that the underlying suit was objectively baseless.

C. Analysis of Dyno's Immunity Under *Noerr-Pennington

We find that LDE has not established, by clear and convincing evidence, that Dyno's underlying patent litigation, given the totality of the circumstances, was objectively baseless. See PRE, 508 U.S. at 61. Indeed, the record of the litigation below, clearly demonstrates otherwise.

The underlying Claim Construction Order, which favored LDE, was not as clear cut as LDE has alleged. But for the placement of a single comma in the specification, the Claim Construction Order may very well have fallen the other way. As this Court noted in the Claim Construction Order:

The Court's interpretation is supported by the principles of normal English language [*18] usage. When two adjectives precede a noun and the adjectives are not separated by a comma, the first adjective modifies the combined idea of the second adjective plus the noun. Thus, the noun in the phrase "fibrous vegetable protein additive" is "additive." "Fibrous vegetable protein" are adjectives that describe what type of additive is required. Furthermore, "additive," used as a noun, is defined as "a substance added in small amounts to something else to improve, strengthen, or otherwise alter it." Thus, according to the ordinary meaning of the words and the patentee's choice of phrasing, Claim 1 requires the use of "an additive," described as fibrous vegetable protein in nature; that is "added . . . to something else," here, the bulking agent.

Furthermore, a Claim Construction Order is a product of litigation that takes hundreds, if not thousands, of pages of briefs, memoranda and motions to determine. See Q-Pharma v. The Andrew Jergens Company, 360 F.3d 1295 (Fed. Cir. 2004) ("Claim interpretation is not always an exact science, and it is not unusual for parties to offer competing definitions of even the simplest claim language."). Legislation, sausage making and Claim Construction seem to share similar traits. For LDE to assert that the construction [*19] of the claim in the underlying patent litigation was clear from its face, and Dyno's interpretation per se baseless simply misstates the complexity of the Markman process. As long as the interpretations follow the standard canons of claim construction and are reasonably supported by intrinsic evidence, they are not baseless. See id.

Although not dispositive, the fact that Dyno did not engage in a pattern of litigation is relevant to the Court's decision. See PRE, 508 U.S. at 69-70 (Stevens, J. concurring); see also Colorado Petrol. Marketers Assn. v. Southland Corp., 476 F.Supp. 373 (D. Colo. 1979) ("pattern" of baseless suits unnecessary but probative). The Court notes that LDE only asserts that the Patent Litigation, which comprised but a single suit, violated the Sherman Antitrust Act. However, the Tenth Circuit has suggested that a single case, even if filed without probable cause and with anticompetitive intent, would not rise to the standard set by the Supreme Court in California Motor Transport. Hydra-Tech Corp. et al. v. Sundstrand Corp., 673 F.2d 1171, 1176-77 (10th Cir. 1982). The Court in Hydro-Tech indicated that to state a claim under Section Two of the Sherman Act the suit would have to rise to the category of an abuse of the judicial process, e.g. perjury, use of a patent obtained by fraud to exclude a competitor from the market, bribery, conspiracy with a licensing official, and a [*20] pattern of baseless, repetitive claims. Id. at n.6 (citing California Motor Trans., 404 U.S. at 508, 512-513). Indeed, it is difficult to find a single case that would apply the sham exception under these particular circumstances and facts.

---

<sup>6</sup> Even cases prior to PRE examined the whole record of the underlying suit to determine whether it was a sham. See, e.g., Coastal States Marketing, Inc. v. Hunt, 694 F.2d 1358, 1359 (5th Cir. 1983).

D. LDE's Rule 56\(f\) Petition

LDE argues that the court does not have enough evidence before it to make a finding of probable cause, insofar as the Dyno patent litigation is concerned. LDE also argues that Dyno's summary judgment motion is premature due to a lack of discovery on the issues. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 56\(f\). In its Rule 56\(f\) affidavit, LDE alleges that the following facts are essential to oppose Dyno's summary judgment motion:

(1) Dyno's pre-filing investigation (including the scope of its pre-filing claim interpretation and infringement analysis); (2) Dyno's knowledge of the prosecution history and prior art; (3) Dyno's knowledge of LDE's product; (4) Dyno's testing of LDE's product; (5) information and documents Dyno received from third parties concerning the patent and LDE's product; (6) admissions concerning Dyno's interpretation of its patent; (7) admissions concerning LDE's noninfringement of Dyno's patent; and (8) admissions concerning the scope of Dyno's patent.

A Rule 56\(f\) applicant is entitled to relief only if he or she shows, among [*21] other things, that the discovery would uncover specific facts which would preclude summary judgment. Maljack Prods. v. Goodtimes Home Video Corp., 81 F.3d 881, 888 \(9th Cir. 1996\); see also United States v. Smithfield Foods, Inc., 969 F. Supp. 975 \(E.D. Va. 1997\) (denying a Rule 56\(f\) motion because additional discovery would not be dispositive to court's granting of summary judgment).

In Q-Pharma, the Federal Circuit Court of Appeals was faced with a similar argument. In that case Q-Pharma brought a civil action against Jergens alleging patent infringement of its '373 patent. After discovery, Q-Pharma voluntarily dismissed its patent infringement claim. Jergens then brought several counter-claims, including allegations that Q-Pharma's suit violated the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. The district court granted summary judgment in favor of Q-Pharma on Jergens' Sherman Act claim. Jergens appealed the judgment alleging that the district court did not allow enough time for discovery, and that, on the merits, Q-Pharma's underlying patent infringement suit was baseless. The Federal Circuit affirmed the district court's ruling.

In affirming, the Federal Circuit found that there was enough evidence to support a finding that Q-Pharma had probable cause to bring the patent infringement suit. The Federal Circuit held: "a reasonable litigant could--based on the '373 patent, its prosecution [*22] history, and Jergens' advertising and labeling statements touting the therapeutic effects of the Curet (R) CoQ[10] lotion--expect to prevail on a claim alleging infringement." Q-Pharma, 360 F.3d at 1305. The court also affirmed the district court's decision not to allow more discovery, holding:

Jergens' proposed discovery would only have been relevant to Q-Pharma's subjective motivation and therefore would not have altered the court's determination--based on the patent, its prosecution history, and Jergens' advertising and labeling statements made in regard to the accused product--that Q-Pharma's infringement claim was not objectively baseless.

Id. at 1306 (emphasis added) (internal quotations omitted).

The Court finds the Federal Circuit's language in this case highly persuasive on several points. First, the Federal Circuit affirmed a finding of probable cause on the basis of the patent, its prosecution history, and the defendant's advertising and labeling statements. Nowhere in that list is Q-Pharma's subjective investigation into the actual merits of the suit, nor of the defendant's knowledge at the time of the suit. The Federal Circuit expressly turned down Jergen's invitation to dig deeper into the Q-Pharma's subjective [*23] intent to simply determine whether probable cause existed.

In the instant case, LDE, in its Rule 56\(f\) affidavit, complains that the court does not have enough evidence to make a finding in favor of Dyno. The Court disagrees. The evidence sought by LDE would only pertain to the subjective prong of the PRE test. Notably, LDE submits that the court needs: "Dyno's pre-filing investigation . . . Dyno's knowledge of prosecution history . . . prior art . . . LDE's product . . . Dyno's testing of LDE's product . . . information and documents Dyno received from third parties...[Dyno's] admissions concerning Dyno's interpretation of its patent . . . [Dyno's] admissions concerning LDE's noninfringement of Dyno's patent . . . [Dyno's] admissions concerning the scope of Dyno's patent." Each and every one of these requests regards Dyno's subjective motivation for bringing the underlying patent litigation. Evaluating Dyno's subjective motivation for bringing the patent litigation is only proper after a finding that the suit was objectively baseless. See PRE, 508 U.S. at 60 ("Only if challenged litigation is objectively meritless may a court examine the litigant's subjective motivation."). Additional evidence that would only [*24] be applicable to the subjective prong would be unhelpful in our analysis and would not defeat a finding of summary judgment in this case.

Moreover, Dyno, in its memorandum in support of its claim interpretation, attached to its motion for summary judgment as exhibit 2, discusses the reasons and analysis of the '950 patent at issue. There Dyno related the intrinsic evidence, the extrinsic evidence and the relevant prosecution history. We are persuaded that this conforms with the standard set out in Q-Pharma. Furthermore, here, unlike in Q-Pharma, this Court held a Markman hearing to determine the claim construction. Contrast that with Q-Pharma, where the plaintiff voluntarily dismissed before a Markman hearing was held. To establish that a suit is objectively baseless is, necessarily, a high hurdle. If this hurdle were not placed as high as it was, any patentee would be chilled from protecting her valuable patent rights—a situation that would render a patent monopoly illusory.

The Court notes that a patentee has a strong interest in preserving the monopoly rights granted through the patent statutes and regulations. So great is this interest that a patentee is within her rights to enforce that monopoly [*25] right to its outer fringes. It would be inconsistent to grant a patent monopoly, but hamstring the patentee by punishing enforcement actions. As the Federal Circuit observed:

Since the principal purpose of the patent system is to provide innovators with a property right upon which investment and other commercial commitments can be made, absent the PRE criteria the patentee must have the right of enforcement of a duly granted patent, unencumbered by punitive consequences should the patent's validity or infringement not survive litigation.

C.R. Bard, Inc. v. M3 Systems, Inc., 157 F.3d 1340, 1369 (Fed. Cir. 1998) (citation omitted). It is clear from the evidence presented that Dyno's underlying patent infringement suit was not objectively baseless, and thus should enjoy the protections provided by Noerr-Pennington.

LDE'S CLAIMS OF INTENTIONAL INTERFERENCE WITH CONTRACT AND PROSPECTIVE CONTRACTUAL RELATIONS

LDE also contends that Dyno intentionally interfered with prospective contractual relations and even interfered with existing contractual relations. LDE points out two specific instances where it alleges that Dyno's patent litigation intentionally and inappropriately interfered. LDE claims that discussions with Peabody Energy regarding the [*26] expansion of Soft Load into other mines in the U.S. tortuously interfered with its contracts. Additionally, LDE contends that a joint venture agreement with Wesco were similarly halted due to the Dyno patent litigation. LDE alleges that Dyno contacted these and other LDE customers and encouraged them not to do business with LDE. Based on these allegations, LDE has alleged the tort of intentional interference with contract and prospective contractual relations.

A determination whether LDE's tort claims survive summary judgment is less clear than the Sherman Act Claim. LDE claims that Dyno contacted businesses that LDE had contractual, and potential contractual, relationships with to relate that components and services offered by LDE infringed Dyno's '950 patent. LDE alleges that these contacts were tortious because the underlying claim of infringement was objectively baseless and no reasonable litigant could have expected success.

A. Cardtoons

One issue is whether the Noerr-Pennington immunity applies to LDE's claims which are not premised on the Sherman Act. In Cardtoons, L. C., v. Major League Baseball Players Association, 208 F.3d 885 (10th Cir. 2000), the Tenth Circuit held that the Noerr-Pennington [*27] immunity did not apply outside of the Sherman Act. Cardtoons, 208 F.3d at 893. In Cardtoons, the Major League Baseball Players Association (MLBPA) sent a letter with a thinly veiled threat of litigation to Champs, a baseball card printer. The letter referenced color parody drawings of active members of the MLBPA, produced by Cardtoons, that Champs had contracted to print and market. MLBPA threatened to sue over "violating the valuable property rights of MLBPA and the players." Id. at 886. Champs, upon receiving the "cease and desist" letter, informed Cardtoons that it intended to stop printing the cards. Cardtoons immediately filed suit against MLBPA for tortious interference with the Champs contract. After successful litigation which declared that Cardtoons had a First Amendment right to print the parody cards, it returned to district court to pursue damages -all of Cardtoons claims stemmed from the allegations contained in the letter MLBPA sent to Champs. MLBPA defended, claiming that it was immune from liability under Noerr-Pennington. The district court agreed and entered summary judgment in favor of MLBPA. The Tenth Circuit reversed en banc.<sup>7</sup>

The Tenth Circuit [*28] examined the underpinnings of the Noerr-Pennington immunity. The Cardtoons court held that the Noerr-Pennington immunity was based on two grounds, a statutory interpretation of the Sherman Act, and on the First Amendment right to petition. See Cardtoons, 208 F.3d at 888. The court held that outside of the Antitrust context, the first rationale does not apply. Similarly, the court found in the case of communications made between private individuals the second rationale does not hold, because no petition was made to the government, thus the First Amendment was not implicated.

The present case is highly distinguishable from Cardtoons. In this case, unlike Cardtoons, the threats of litigation were made pursuant to actual litigation-a distinction drawn by the Tenth Circuit itself in Cardtoons.<sup>8</sup> The Court cannot say that the threats made by Dyno were not concurrent with an actual petition to the government for redress, nor can the Court assert that the First Amendment right to petition was not implicated. Furthermore, the tort claims in the present case cannot be read independently of the antitrust claims. The two claims rely on whether the underlying patent litigation was objectively baseless. The Tenth Circuit also noted that pre-litigation threats in the antitrust [*29] context grant immunity "under a construction of the Sherman Act, not the right to petition." Id. at 892. In the instant case the Court is presented with pre-litigation threats that matured into a petition to the courts for redress, which spawned an action under the Sherman Act. Therefore, the limitations on the Noerr-Pennington immunity, discussed in Cardtoons, do not control the present case.

As the Court observed above regarding the intertwined character of the tort claim and the antitrust claim, the Court cannot discount the fact that the entire case is brought in the patent context. Therefore, the better analysis of LDE's

<sup>7</sup> A Tenth Circuit panel of judges affirmed the district court's finding. However, Judge Ebel, in a prescient dissent disagreed with the panel. Judge Ebel questioned whether it was appropriate to extend Noerr-Pennington immunity to purely private threats of litigation. Judge Ebel offered a three-part test to determine whether private litigation threats should receive immunity under Noerr-Pennington. Under that test a litigant seeking Noerr-Pennington immunity would have to show that the threat was: (1) made in good faith; (2) was objectively reasonable; and (3) was a "proximate prologue to actual or imminent litigation." 182 F.3d at 1142. In the present case, Dyno would be able to establish, under our ruling today, all three of these elements. First, there is a presumption that patent infringement litigation is brought in good faith. See C.R. Bard, Inc. v. M3 Systems, Inc., 157 F.3d 1340, 1369 (Fed. Cir. 1998) (citing Virtue v. Creamery Package Mfg. Co., 227 U.S. 37-38, 33 S. Ct. 202, 57 L. Ed. 393, 1913 Dec. Comm'r Pat. 519 (1913)). Such a presumption is only overcome by affirmative evidence of bad faith. Here there has been no showing by LDE that Dyno's Patent Litigation was brought in bad faith. Second, as discussed at length, this Court feels that the underlying patent litigation was not objectively baseless. The Court assumes that an objectively reasonable standard would be substantially similar. Third, the threats of litigation were a "proximate prologue to actual or imminent litigation."

<sup>8</sup> "We hold . . . that because there was no petition of the government in the present case, the issue of immunity collapses into the issue of state law liability." Cardtoons, 208 F.3d at 893.

tort claims, and Dyno's potential liability, comes from *Globetrotter Software Inc. v. Elan Computer Group, Inc.*, 362 F.3d 1367 \(Fed. Cir. 2004\).

B. Globetrotters

In Globetrotters, the defendant in a patent infringement case brought state-law tort counter-claims for tortious interference with prospective economic advantage and unfair competition against the plaintiff patentee. These claims were premised on the patentee's communications, via e-mail and letters, sent to the distributor of the defendant's allegedly infringing software. The Federal Circuit, held that the communications would be protected if they were made in good faith: "We have...adopted a similar [*30] standard [as the other circuits] for pre-litigation communications alleging patent infringement holding that bad faith is not supported when the information [contained in the pre-litigation communication] is objectively accurate." *Globetrotters*, 362 F.3d at 1377 (quoting *Golan v. Pingel Enter., Inc.*, 310 F.3d 1360, 1371 \(Fed. Cir. 2002\) (internal quotation marks omitted)). The court premised its holding on two rationales, namely, federal preemption and the *First Amendment* right to petition. *Globetrotters*, 362 F.3d at 1377. The court held as follows:

The federal patent laws preempt state laws that impose tort liability for a patentholder's good faith conduct in communications asserting infringement of its patent and warning about potential litigation. In addition, the same *First Amendment* policy reasons that justify the extension of Noerr immunity to pre-litigation conduct in the context of federal *antitrust law* apply equally in the context of state-law tort claims.

Id.

Thus, the Federal Circuit applied PRE's objectively baseless standard to pre-litigation communications alleging patent infringement. Id. Therefore, "a plaintiff claiming that a patent holder has engaged in a wrongful conduct by asserting claims of patent infringement must establish that the claims of infringement were objectively baseless." Id.

Here, as discussed above, the Court [*31] found that Dyno's claims of patent infringement were not objectively baseless and thus, LDE's tort claims, under the Globetrotter '$ standard, are properly dismissed.

The Court further notes that failure in the underlying case Patent Litigation, in a claim such as the one asserted by LDE, is not persuasive in a subsequent antitrust or tortious interference claim as the Supreme Court observed in PRE:

A winning lawsuit is by definition a reasonable effort at petitioning for redress and therefore not a sham. On the other hand, when the antitrust defendant has lost the underlying litigation, a court must resist the understandable temptation to engage in post hoc reasoning by concluding that an ultimately unsuccessful action must have been unreasonable or without foundation. The court must remember that even when the law or the facts appear questionable or unfavorable at the outset, a party may have an entirely reasonable ground for bringing suit.

PRE, 508 U.S. at 6 (internal quotations and citations omitted).

The Federal Circuit's ruling on Dyno's appeal in the patent infringement litigation does not, and should not, inform, or change, our decision in this case.

IV. Conclusion

Therefore, because Dyno had probable [*32] cause, meaning that it had an objectively reasonable belief in a chance of success to bring the underlying patent suit, the Court cannot say that this was a sham litigation. The Court further finds that the tort claims necessarily drop out because Dyno had a right to bring the underlying patent litigation. Thus, summary judgment should be granted for Dyno.

Dated this 13th day of September, 2005.

/s/ Alan B. Johnson

ALAN B. JOHNSON

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

ORDER GRANTING DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

For the reasons stated within this Court's Memorandum Opinion regarding defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment in the above-captioned matter, it is hereby

ORDERED that defendant Dyno Nobel's Motion for Summary Judgment shall be, and now is, GRANTED;

ORDERED that plaintiff LDE Corporation's Complaint in the above-captioned matter shall be, and now is, DISMISSED as to all claims with prejudice.

Dated this 13th day of September, 2005.

/s/ Alan B. Johnson

ALAN B. JOHNSON

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

---

End of Document

Texas v. Organon USA Inc. (In re Remeron End-Payor Antitrust Litig.)

United States District Court for the District of New Jersey

September 13, 2005, Decided ; September 13, 2005, Filed

Civil No. 02-2007 (FSH), Civil No. 04-5126 (FSH)

Reporter

2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 27011 *; 2005-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P74,966

IN RE: REMERON END-PAYOR ANTITRUST LITIGATION; STATES AND COMMONWEALTHS OF TEXAS, et al., Plaintiffs, v. ORGANON USA INC. AND AKZO NOBEL N.V., Defendants.

Prior History: In re Remeron Direct Purchaser Antitrust Litig., 367 F. Supp. 2d 675, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7193 \(D.N.J., 2005\)

Walgreen Co. v. Organon, Inc. \(In re Remeron Antitrust Litig.\), 335 F. Supp. 2d 522, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18364 \(D.N.J., 2004\)

Core Terms

---

settlement, notice, End-Payor, Plaintiffs', class member, class action, consumers, antitrust, attorney's fees, damages, Defendants', purchasers, settlement fund, Generic, parties, patent, settlement agreement, expenses, cases, listing, risks, incentive award, Manufacturers, attorney general, depositions, opt-out, Payors, mailed, costs, negotiations

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements

HN1 Class Actions, Prerequisites for Class Action

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 23, a court must engage in a two-step analysis in order to determine whether it should certify a class action for settlement purposes. First, the court must determine whether the plaintiffs have satisfied the prerequisites for maintaining a class action as set forth in Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(a\). If the plaintiffs can satisfy these prerequisites, the court must then determine whether the alternative requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(b\)\(2\) or 23\(b\)\(3\) are met. Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(a\), advisory committee's note.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements

HN2 Class Actions, Prerequisites for Class Action

Confronted with a request for settlement-only class certification, a district court need not inquire whether the case, if tried, would present intractable management problems, Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(b\)\(3\)\(D\), for the proposal is that there be no trial.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN3 Class Actions, Prerequisites for Class Action

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(a\) provides that class members may maintain a class action as representatives of a class if they show a court that: (1) the class members are so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable; (2) the action addresses questions of law or fact common to the class; (3) the claims or defenses of the class representatives are typical of the claims or defenses of the class; and (4) the class representative parties will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Judicial Discretion

HN4 Class Actions, Prerequisites for Class Action

Courts will ordinarily discharge the prerequisite of numerosity in a class action if a class is so large that joinder of all members is impracticable. The plaintiff need not precisely enumerate the potential size of the proposed class, nor is the plaintiff required to demonstrate that joinder would be impossible. Moreover, it is proper for the court to accept common sense assumptions in order to support a finding of numerosity.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN5 Class Actions, Prerequisites for Class Action

Numbers in excess of 40, particularly those exceeding 100 or 1,000 have sustained the numerosity requirement for a class action.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN6 Class Actions, Prerequisites for Class Action

The threshold commonality inquiry under Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(a\)\(2\) is whether there are any questions of fact or law that are common to the class. Commonality does not require an identity of claims or facts among class members. Rather, the commonality requirement will be satisfied if the named plaintiffs share at least one question of fact or law with the grievances of the prospective class. Even where individual facts and circumstances do become important to the resolution, class treatment is not precluded. The threshold of commonality is not high.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN7 [blue download icon] Regulated Practices, Private Actions

Antitrust actions often present common questions of law and fact, and are, therefore, frequently certified as class actions.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN8 [blue download icon] Class Actions, Prerequisites for Class Action

The United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit has set a low threshold for satisfying the typicality requirement holding that if the claims of the named plaintiffs and class members involve the same conduct by the defendant, typicality is established.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN9 [blue download icon] Class Actions, Prerequisites for Class Action

The typicality requirement for a class action does not mandate that all putative class members share identical claims. Plainly, there is nothing in Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(a\)\(3\) which requires named plaintiffs to be clones of each other or clones of other class members.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN10 [blue download icon] Class Actions, Prerequisites for Class Action

A requirement of Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(a\) is that the representative parties will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class. Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(a\)\(4\). The United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit has held that adequate representation depends on two factors: (i) the plaintiff's attorney must be qualified, experienced, and generally able to conduct the proposed litigation, and (ii) the plaintiff must not have interests antagonistic to those of the class.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN11 [blue download icon] Class Actions, Prerequisites for Class Action

Once the requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(a\) are met, Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(b\)\(3\) permits the maintenance of a class action if a court finds (1) that the questions of law or fact common to the members of the class predominate over any questions affecting only individual members, and (2) that a class action is superior to other available methods for the fair and efficient adjudication of the controversy.

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN12 [blue download icon] Class Actions, Prerequisites for Class Action

The Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(b\)\(3\) predominance inquiry tests whether proposed classes are sufficiently cohesive to warrant adjudication by representation.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN13 [ ] Regulated Practices, Private Actions

Antitrust actions involving common questions of liability for monopolization have frequently been held to predominate for the preliminary stage of class certification. The presence of individual questions does not mean that the common questions of law and fact do not predominate.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > Scope of Protection

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN14 [ ] Special Proceedings, Class Actions

To satisfy due process, notice to class members must be reasonably calculated under all the circumstances, to apprise interested parties of the pendency of an action and afford them an opportunity to present their objections.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > Scope of Protection

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN15 [ ] Special Proceedings, Class Actions

In Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(b\)\(3\) actions, class members must receive the best notice practicable under the circumstances.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Procedural Due Process > Scope of Protection

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

HN16 [ ] Special Proceedings, Class Actions

In a class action, for those whose names and addresses cannot be determined by reasonable efforts, notice by publication suffices under both Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(c\)\(2\) and under the Due Process Clause.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Medical Treatment > Patient Confidentiality > Medical Records Under HIPAA

**HN17** [blue icon] Patient Confidentiality, Medical Records Under HIPAA

The privacy of consumers who purchase prescription medication is protected under the provisions of the Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act of 1996 (HIPAA), 42 U.S.C.S. § 1320d-2. HIPAA protects protected health information from disclosure. "Protected health information" means individually identifiable health information that is maintained and/or transmitted in any form or medium. 45 C.F.R. § 160.103 \(2004\). Pharmacists are health care providers covered by the Act. Patient authorization is required for disclosure of protected health information. Improper disclosure may subject the provider to civil and/or criminal penalties. 42 U.S.C. §§ 1320d-5 and 1320d-6.

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Employees & Officials

Governments > State & Territorial Governments

Governments > Police Powers

**HN18** [blue icon] Settlements, Settlement Agreements

States, by their Attorneys General, have the authority to settle and release indirect purchaser claims in a parens patriae or other representative capacity. A state has a quasi-sovereign interest in the health and well being -- both physical and economic -- of its residents in general. That federal authority is supplemented by state statutory provisions and case law.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions

**HN19** [blue icon] Special Proceedings, Class Actions

All Attorneys' General have authority to represent consumers, depending on the state, in at least one of the following four ways: (1) parens patriae authority expressly conferred by the state legislature, (2) authority expressly conferred by the state legislature that is the functional equivalent of parens patriae authority, (3) judicially recognized authority to represent consumers, or (4) authority to proceed as a class representative of consumers pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 23.

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements > Validity of Agreements

**HN20** [blue icon] Settlements, Settlement Agreements

The United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit affords an initial presumption of fairness for a settlement if a court finds that: (1) the negotiations occurred at arm's length; (2) there was sufficient discovery; (3) the proponents of the settlement are experienced in similar litigation; and (4) only a small fraction of the class objected.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Employees & Officials

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Purchasers

HN21 [ ] Antitrust & Trade Law, Consumer Protection

The participation of State Attorneys General in a settlement furnishes extra assurance that consumers' interests are protected.

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements > Validity of Agreements

HN22 [ ] Settlement Agreements, Validity of Agreements

A class action may be settled under Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(e\) upon a judicial finding that the settlement is fair, reasonable, and adequate. Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(e\)\(1\)\(C\). Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(e\), a court must determine whether the settlement is within a range that responsible and experienced attorneys could accept considering all relevant risks and factors of litigation. The range recognizes the uncertainties of law and fact in any particular case and the concomitant risks and costs necessarily inherent in taking any litigation to completion.

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements

HN23 [ ] Settlements, Settlement Agreements

Because a settlement represents an exercise of judgment by the negotiating parties, cases have consistently held that the function of a court reviewing a settlement is neither to rewrite the settlement agreement reached by the parties nor to try the case by resolving issues left unresolved by the settlement. The temptation to convert a settlement hearing into a full trial on the merits must be resisted.

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements > Validity of Agreements

HN24 [ ] Settlement Agreements, Validity of Agreements

To determine whether a settlement is fair, reasonable and adequate under Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(e\), courts in the Third Circuit apply a nine-factor test. These factors are: (1) the complexity, expense, and likely duration of the litigation; (2) the reaction of the class to the settlement; (3) the stage of the proceedings and the amount of discovery completed; (4) the risks of establishing liability; (5) the risks of establishing damages; (6) the risks of maintaining the class action through the trial; (7) the ability of the defendants to withstand a greater judgment; (8) the range of reasonableness of the settlement fund in light of the best possible recovery; and (9) the range of reasonableness of the settlement fund to a possible recovery in light of all the attendant risks of litigation.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements

HN25 [ ] Special Proceedings, Class Actions

When providing notice of a proposed settlement to class action members, the law does not require that a charity that may receive left over funds be disclosed in the notice to the class.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements

HN26 [ ] Special Proceedings, Class Actions

Information regarding conditions that may terminate a class action settlement need not be detailed in the notice to the class.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements > Modification of Agreements

HN27 [ ] Special Proceedings, Class Actions

Minor modifications may be necessary to a proposed class action settlement agreement (indeed may be favorable to the class), and additional class notice is not always required because, e.g., of the cost of notice that would take recovered money from the class.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements > Validity of Agreements

HN28 [ ] Special Proceedings, Class Actions

The United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit has approved proposed class action settlement allocations based on expenditures rather than damages.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements > Validity of Agreements

HN29 [ ] Special Proceedings, Class Actions

In examining the stage of the litigation at which a proposed class action settlement is reached, the proper question for approval of a settlement is whether counsel had an adequate appreciation of the merits of the case before negotiating.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements > Validity of Agreements

HN30 [blue icon] Special Proceedings, Class Actions

The pursuit of early settlement is a tactic that merits encouragement; it is entirely appropriate to reward expeditious and efficient resolution of disputes. Early settlements benefit everyone involved in the process and everything that can be done to encourage such settlements, especially in complex class action cases, should be done.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements > Validity of Agreements

HN31 [blue icon] Special Proceedings, Class Actions

The risks of establishing liability and damages factors in a proposed class action settlement survey the potential risks and rewards of proceeding to litigation in order to weigh the likelihood of success against the benefits of an immediate settlement.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions

Civil Procedure > ... > Class Actions > Prerequisites for Class Action > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements > Validity of Agreements

HN32 [blue icon] Special Proceedings, Class Actions

Because the prospects for obtaining certification have a great impact on the range of recovery one can expect to reap from a class action, this factor in a proposed class action settlement measures the likelihood of obtaining and keeping a class certification if the action were to proceed to trial.

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements > Validity of Agreements

HN33 [blue icon] Settlements, Settlement Agreements

Many settlements are approved where a settling defendant has the ability to pay greater amounts.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements > Validity of Agreements

**HN34** [blue] Special Proceedings, Class Actions

A court evaluating a proposed class action settlement should consider whether the settlement represents a good value for a weak case or a poor value for a strong case. In the process, however, a court must avoid deciding or trying to decide the likely outcome of a trial on the merits.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements > Validity of Agreements

**HN35** [blue] Regulated Practices, Private Actions

To evaluate the propriety of an antitrust class action settlement's monetary component, a court should compare the settlement recovery to the estimated single damages. Although in certain circumstances a plaintiff class may recover treble damages if it prevails at trial, that result is far from certain.

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions

Civil Procedure > Special Proceedings > Class Actions > Judicial Discretion

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements

Civil Procedure > Settlements > Settlement Agreements > Validity of Agreements

**HN36** [blue] Special Proceedings, Class Actions

As with settlement agreements, courts consider whether distribution plans are fair, reasonable, and adequate. In evaluating the formula for apportioning a settlement fund, a court keeps in mind that district courts enjoy broad supervisory powers over the administration of class action settlements to allocate the proceeds among the claiming class members equitably.

Civil Procedure > ... > Costs & Attorney Fees > Attorney Fees & Expenses > Reasonable Fees

**HN37** [blue] Attorney Fees & Expenses, Reasonable Fees

The United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit has set forth with specificity the factors, known as the Gunter factors, that a court should consider in evaluating requested attorneys' fees in a common fund case. The Gunter factors need not be applied in a formulaic way, and their weight may vary on a case-by-case basis. The Gunter factors include (1) the size of the fund created and number of persons benefitting from the settlement, (2) the presence/absence of substantial objections to the fee, (3) the skill of Plaintiffs' counsel, (4) complexity and duration of the litigation, (5) the risk of nonpayment, (6) amount of time devoted to the litigation, and (7) awards in similar cases.

Civil Procedure > ... > Costs & Attorney Fees > Attorney Fees & Expenses > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Costs & Attorney Fees > Attorney Fees & Expenses > Reasonable Fees

HN38  Costs & Attorney Fees, Attorney Fees & Expenses

The courts do not hesitate to grant attorneys' fees despite the presence of objections when the rationale for awarding fees outweighs the objections.

Civil Procedure > ... > Costs & Attorney Fees > Attorney Fees & Expenses > Reasonable Fees

HN39  Attorney Fees & Expenses, Reasonable Fees

The absence of meaningful class member objection to a proposed counsel fee in a proposed class action settlement ordinarily supports the reasonableness of the request.

Civil Procedure > ... > Costs & Attorney Fees > Attorney Fees & Expenses > Reasonable Fees

HN40  Attorney Fees & Expenses, Reasonable Fees

The circumstances surrounding a difficult settlement increase the complexity of a case for a counsel fee.

Civil Procedure > ... > Costs & Attorney Fees > Attorney Fees & Expenses > Reasonable Fees

HN41  Attorney Fees & Expenses, Reasonable Fees

In comparing a requested attorney's fee award in a class action with amounts awarded in similar actions, a court's analysis is two-pronged. First, the court compares the actual award requested to other awards in comparable settlements. Second, the court ensures that the award is in line with what an attorney would have received if the fee was negotiated on the open market.

Civil Procedure > ... > Costs & Attorney Fees > Attorney Fees & Expenses > Reasonable Fees

HN42  Attorney Fees & Expenses, Reasonable Fees

A district court may not rely on a formulaic application of the appropriate range in awarding attorney's fees but must consider the relevant circumstances of the particular case. A comparison of awards in similar cases is only a factor in determining the appropriateness of a fee award. In considering this factor, a court notes the survey of fee awards that have occurred in similar cases.

Civil Procedure > ... > Costs & Attorney Fees > Attorney Fees & Expenses > Reasonable Fees

HN43  Attorney Fees & Expenses, Reasonable Fees

Courts within the Third Circuit often award attorney's fees of 25 percent to 33 percent of the recovery.

Civil Procedure > ... > Costs & Attorney Fees > Attorney Fees & Expenses > Reasonable Fees

HN44 [blue download icon] Attorney Fees & Expenses, Reasonable Fees

When deciding on appropriate attorney's fee levels in common-fund cases, courts must do their best to award counsel the market price for legal services, in light of the risk of nonpayment and the normal rate of compensation in the market at the time. The object is to give the lawyer what he would have gotten in the way of a fee in an arm's length negotiation. Consequently, courts should look to the private market when assessing the reasonableness of the percentage fee.

Civil Procedure > ... > Costs & Attorney Fees > Attorney Fees & Expenses > Reasonable Fees

HN45 [blue download icon] Attorney Fees & Expenses, Reasonable Fees

A one-third contingency fee for attorneys is generally standard in individual cases.

Civil Procedure > ... > Costs & Attorney Fees > Attorney Fees & Expenses > Reasonable Fees

HN46 [blue download icon] Attorney Fees & Expenses, Reasonable Fees

A lodestar crosscheck for attorney's fees is not a Gunter factor but is a suggested practice. When performing the lodestar crosscheck, the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit has recognized that multiples ranging from one to four are frequently awarded in common fund cases when the lodestar method is applied. The district courts may rely on summaries submitted by the attorneys and need not review actual billing records.

Civil Procedure > ... > Costs & Attorney Fees > Costs > General Overview

HN47 [blue download icon] Costs & Attorney Fees, Costs

Counsel in common fund cases is entitled to reimbursement of expenses that were adequately documented and reasonably and appropriately incurred in the prosecution of the case.

Counsel: [*1] For EON LABS, INC., Movant: FRANKLYN C. STEINBERG, III, STEINBERG LAW OFFICES, SOMERVILLE, NJ.

For GAYLE TAYLOR, Individually, and on behalf of herself and all others similarly situated, Plaintiff: LISA J. RODRIGUEZ, TRUJILLO RODRIGUEZ & RICHARDS, LLP, HADDONFIELD, NJ.

For CVS MERIDIAN, INC., RITE AID CORPORATION, Plaintiffs: MICHAEL LIEBERMAN, HANGLEY ARONCHICK SEGAL & PUDLIN, PHILADELPHIA, PA; LISA J. RODRIGUEZ, TRUJILLO RODRIGUEZ & RICHARDS, LLP, HADDONFIELD, NJ.

For ROBERT KAPELLA, Individually and o/b/o himself and all others similarly situated, Consol Plaintiff: LISA J. RODRIGUEZ, TRUJILLO RODRIGUEZ & RICHARDS, LLP, HADDONFIELD, NJ.

For ORGANON INC., AKZO NOBEL N.V., Defendants: KEVIN J. MCKENNA, JENNIFER A. HRADIL, GIBBONS, DEL DEO, DOLAN, GRIFFINGER & VECCHIONE, PC, NEWARK, NJ.

Judges: Honorable Faith S. Hochberg, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: Faith S. Hochberg

Opinion

OPINION

This matter is before the Court upon a settlement agreement between the manufacturers of the anti-depressant drug Remeron, Organon USA Inc. and Akzo Nobel N.V. (Defendants or Organon), and the end-payor purchasers of Remeron along with all Attorney Generals of the United States of America and territories. The settling parties seek (1) final approval of their class action settlement agreement and plan of distribution, (2) final certification of an end-payor settlement class pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 23, and (3) award of attorneys' fees to Plaintiffs' Counsel, reimbursement of litigation expenses, and incentive awards to named Plaintiffs. The Court preliminarily approved the settlement on January 25, 2005 after a preliminary fairness hearing on December 1, 2004. The final Fairness Hearing was conducted on June 28, 2005.

I. BACKGROUND*[*2] A. The Litigation*1. The Complaint

In 2002, end-payor purchasers of Remeron filed class action complaints against Defendants. Complaints were filed by United Food and Commercial Workers Local 56 Health & Welfare Fund, Board of Trustees of United Food and Commercial Workers Local 56 Health & Welfare Fund, Vista Healthplan, Inc., Gayle Taylor, Dianne Mason and Robert Kapella (End-Payor Plaintiffs or Plaintiffs). These complaints were followed by a Consolidated Class Action Complaint on September 11, 2002, and thereafter by an Amended Consolidated Class Action Complaint (Complaint) in In re Remeron End-Payor Antitrust Litigation, Master Docket No. 02-CV-2007 (D.N.J.), filed January 5, 2004.

The Complaint alleges violations of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, and violations of state antitrust and/or unfair competition statutes. It alleges that Defendants (a) obtained United States Patent No. 5,977,099 ('099 patent) through fraud on the United States Patent and Trademark Office (PTO), (b) improperly listed the 099 patent in the United States Food and Drug Administration's (FDA's) "Approved Therapeutic Equivalence Evaluations" (Orange Book) to preserve [*3] their monopoly, (c) improperly delayed the listing of that patent in the Orange Book to prolong their monopoly, and (d) thereafter improperly commenced lawsuits asserting sham claims of patent infringement under the Hatch-Waxman Act, 21 U.S.C. § 355, and the United States patent laws against generic drug companies (Generic Manufacturers), which sought permission to market generic versions of Organon's antidepressant drug, Remeron.

The Complaint alleges that Defendants took these several actions in order to forestall the market entry of FDA-approved generic versions of Remeron (i.e. generic mirtazapine). As a result, end-payor purchasers -- composed of Third-Party Payors (such as health benefit funds, HMOs, health insurers and hospitals), governmental entities, and individual consumers -- were allegedly required to purchase brand-name Remeron at monopoly prices instead of being able to purchase generic mirtazapine at a fraction of the price. Absent Defendants' illegal activities, it is alleged that patients would have been able to purchase lower-priced generic mirtazapine earlier, resulting in a savings of millions of dollars.

2. Extensive Discovery and Litigation [*4] Prior to Settlement

This litigation was complex and hotly contested from the outset, beginning with Defendants' initial unsuccessful efforts to obtain a stay from the Magistrate Judge. On December 18, 2002, this Court granted summary judgment in favor of certain Generic Manufacturers with respect to Organon's patent claims against them. Following that decision, class action complaints and individual complaints were filed by various direct purchasers of Remeron (Direct Purchasers), who are not a part of this litigation or settlement.

The Court then entered a case management Order on June 18, 2003, coordinating discovery in the End-Payor class actions, the Direct Purchaser cases, and the antitrust counterclaims filed by the Generic Manufacturers. Additional coordination and case management Orders were issued on July 16, 2003; August 11, 2003; and December 11, 2003, and several Orders regarding discovery were issued September 26, 2003; December 23, 2003; January 15, 2004; January 16, 2004; February 3, 2004; February 10, 2004; and February 13, 2004.

On December 3, 2003, the Court granted Defendants' motion to dismiss several antitrust counterclaims by Generic Manufacturers including [*5] the (a) allegation that the 099 patent had been improperly listed by Defendants in the FDA's Orange Book for anticompetitive reasons, and (b) allegation that the Defendants' patent litigation against the Generic Manufacturers was baseless and brought for anticompetitive purposes to prolong Defendants' monopoly.

Overall, discovery was extensive. Approximately 800,000 pages of documents and data were produced by Defendants and third parties. Documents produced included hundreds of thousands of pages relating to Defendants' various anti-generic strategies for Remeron; Defendants' internal patent planning and life cycle management strategy; Defendants' regulatory and Orange Book listing strategies; Defendants' clinical development files, which contained additional documentation regarding other regulatory exclusivity strategies for Remeron; Defendants' patent files, including file wrapper and patent prosecution history documentation; and numerous scientific and medical articles and other publications which impacted upon the issues of non-infringement and invalidity of the 099 patent. End-Payor Plaintiffs' briefs revealed extensive research into the various legal and regulatory issues [*6] in this case, including an analysis of various FDA regulations and the case law interpreting those regulations.

End-Payor Plaintiffs' counsel pressed Defendants on the adequacy of their document production at a hearing on December 19, 2003, through a Notice of Deposition of Corporate Defendants Pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 30(b)(6), and through a letter brief on February 2, 2004. They took depositions of numerous current or former employees of the Defendants. These included many high-level executives and employees, who were deposed on complicated and highly technical issues relating to Defendants' various legal, regulatory, marketing and other anti-generic strategies for Remeron. Plaintiffs also consulted heavily with counsel for the Direct Purchasers, counsel for the Generic Manufacturers, and the State Attorneys General. In all, over 50 depositions were taken.

The End-Payor Plaintiffs also provided extensive discovery, including Rule 26 Initial Disclosures on October 15, 2002, answers to interrogatories on September 8, 2003, supplemental voluminous document production, and deposition testimony by the two institutional End-Payor Plaintiff Class [*7] Representatives (Vista Healthplan, Inc. and United Food & Commercial Workers Local 56 Health & Welfare Fund). End-Payor Plaintiffs also engaged and met extensively with economic and other experts to develop support for theories of liability and to measure the monetary harm suffered by End-Payors of Remeron.

Defendants moved to dismiss or stay the End-Payor Plaintiffs' Consolidated Amended Complaint on November 14, 2002. End-Payor Plaintiffs filed a comprehensive Memorandum in Opposition to Defendants' Motion to Dismiss or Stay on January 17, 2003, and a Notice of Supplemental Authority in opposition on February 6, 2003, as well as a letter brief regarding subsequent authority on April 25, 2003, and a letter brief on further supplemental authority on June 3, 2003. Defendants filed their Reply Memorandum in Support of Motion to Dismiss or Stay on February 21, 2003, and filed a response to End-Payor Plaintiffs' April 25 letter brief on May 8, 2003, and a response to End-Payor Plaintiffs' June 3 letter brief on June 5, 2003.

Defendants opposed End-Payor Plaintiffs' motion for leave to file the End-Payor Plaintiffs' Consolidated Amended Complaint. End-Payor Plaintiffs filed an extensive [*8] Memorandum of Law in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Leave to Amend on November 18, 2003. After briefing and oral argument, the Court granted End-Payor Plaintiffs' motion for leave to amend on December 31, 2003. Following oral argument, Defendants' initial motion to dismiss was denied as moot in light of End-Payor Plaintiffs' Amended Consolidated Complaint, by Order dated January 15, 2004.

Defendants thereafter moved to dismiss End-Payor Plaintiffs' Amended Consolidated Class Action Complaint on January 20, 2004. End-Payor Plaintiffs moved to certify a nationwide class of End Payors, including consumers as well as public (non-federal) and private institutional End Payors, on October 27, 2003. End-Payor Plaintiffs filed a comprehensive Memorandum of Law in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification, together with a detailed and extensive Declaration from Harvard University health economist Professor Richard G. Frank in support of class certification. The Court had not issued a ruling on these two motions at the time of the proposed settlement.

As the End-Payor Plaintiffs were developing their case, the working group of State Attorneys General were conducting their own [*9] economic and factual investigation relating to the claims, underlying events, and conduct alleged by the End-Payor Plaintiffs and others. Beginning in March 2003, the Office of the Attorney General of Texas issued Civil Investigative Demands (CIDs) for documents and answers to written interrogatories to the Defendants and to third parties, including the Generic Manufacturers. A multi-state working group of State Attorneys General that was formed during the summer of 2003 conducted a targeted review of the 200 CD-ROMs of document images produced in response to the CIDs. The working group also reviewed transcripts of depositions and hearings from the patent litigation and the End-Payor and Direct Purchaser litigation. The State Attorneys General also researched and analyzed may legal and regulatory issues involving patents, the FDA and the Hatch-Waxman process. In addition, the State Attorneys General gathered data relating to purchases of Remeron from their state agencies, including their state Medicaid programs, as well as sales and pricing data from the Defendants and the Generic Manufacturers, and retained economists to analyze the data and create damages estimates. The State Attorneys [*10] General undertook extensive legal research and analysis and consulted with economic and intellectual property law experts regarding the theories of liability at issue in this case.

B. Mediation and Settlement

In December 2003, the parties began to explore the possibility of settlement with the working group of State Attorneys General. The settlement negotiations included a multi-day global settlement mediation before Judge Politan in January 2004. This was followed by a series of settlement discussions between Defendants' and End-Payor Plaintiffs' counsel in coordination with the working group of State Attorneys General. These discussions laid the groundwork, but settlement was not achieved until the end of a two-day settlement conference before this Court. The broad outlines of this agreement were discussed with the Court in chambers on February 18, 2004.

For the next half year, the End-Payor Plaintiffs and the States together engaged in further negotiations with Defendants to craft and finalize the detailed written settlement agreement. Other negotiations included crafting and finalizing the escrow agreement, the proposed preliminary approval order, the proposed final judgment, [*11] and the class notice of the proposed settlement. The working group of State Attorneys General, in conjunction with the Federal Trade Commission, engaged in many further negotiations with Defendants to draft and finalize the Stipulated Injunction. State Attorneys General who were not involved in the working group were later invited to join the settlement.

C. Preliminary Approval of the Settlement and Execution of the Notice Plan

On October 20, 2004, End-Payor Plaintiffs and the Plaintiff States filed their Memorandum in Support of End-Payor Plaintiffs' and States' Motion for Preliminary Approval of Proposed Settlement. Contemporaneous with the filing of that Memorandum, a Complaint including all of the 50 States, the District of Columbia, and all U.S. territories was filed with the Court, along with the fully executed settlement agreement.<sup>1</sup>

[*12] On November 17, 2004, the Court issued an Order requesting End-Payor Plaintiffs and Plaintiff States submit a brief addressing in further detail their proposed Notice Plan. On November 24, 2004, End-Payor Plaintiffs and Plaintiff States submitted a Supplemental Memorandum in Further Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Preliminary Approval that addressed the issues raised. On December 1, 2004, the Court held a hearing on the proposed preliminary approval of the settlement. At that hearing, the Court requested that the parties develop a proposed Plan of Distribution and include details regarding that plan in the notices, which the parties did. On January 14, 2005, the End-Payor Plaintiffs and Plaintiff States submitted a Second Supplemental Memorandum in Further Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Preliminary Approval, setting forth the proposed Plan of Distribution and revised notices. On January 24, 2005, the Court followed up with an e-mail to the parties seeking additional information regarding certain language in the proposed order and the notice. End-Payor Plaintiffs and Plaintiff States responded to the Court's questions by return e-mail and revised the long-form and summary notices [*13] in response to the Court's inquiries.

---

<sup>1</sup> States and Commonwealths of Texas, Florida, Oregon, et al. v. Organon USA Inc. and Akzo Nobel N. V., Civil Action No. 04-5126 (FSH) (Complaint filed Oct. 20, 2004).

On January 25, 2005, the Court entered an Order Conditionally Certifying Settlement Class, Preliminarily Approving Proposed Settlement, and Preliminarily Approving Representation of Attorneys General. In compliance with the settlement agreement and the Court's January 25, 2005 Order, Defendants paid $ 35 million into escrow on February 1, 2005.

Then the Notice Plan was carried out. The claims administrator, Complete Claim Solutions (CCS), mailed 13,431 notice packages to Third-Party Payor (TPP) class members. As of May 25, 2005, with the cooperation of the pharmacies, CCS had caused to be mailed 854,046 notice packets to potential consumer class members. The media consultant retained by CCS published the summary notice in national publications, such as Reader's Digest, Parade, USA Today and USA Weekend. To provide adequate coverage for class members residing in one of the United States Territories, the media consultant published summary notice in El Nuevo Dia, the Pacific Daily News and the Virgin Islands Daily News. The media consultant also published the summary notice in an industry periodical, National Underwriter, to reach TPP class [*14] members. Additionally, CCS contacted 22,643 physicians, and numerous mental health, senior and women's organizations soliciting their assistance in notifying their members of the settlement. CCS distributed Public Service Announcements (PSAs) to 1,000 radio stations. As of May 25, 2005, 60 radio stations reported airing the PSAs a total of 11,179 times. CCS designed and developed a website for potential class members to obtain information and for consumer class members to file a claim online; and CCS set up and operates a toll-free 800 telephone number to answer class members' questions. As of May 25, 2005, over 40,000 visits have been made to the website and nearly 30,000 calls have been made to the toll-free telephone number.

D. The Settlement Terms

A copy of the settlement agreement and its exhibits were filed with the Court on October 20, 2004 with the motion by End-Payor Plaintiffs and States for preliminary settlement approval.

1. Monetary Payments And Distributions

The settlement provides for settlement payments by Defendants in a total amount of up to Thirty-Six Million Dollars ($ 36,000,000.00) (Settlement Consideration) consisting of: (1) Thirty-Three Million [*15] Dollars ($ 33,000,000.00) that Defendants paid into an escrow account on February 1, 2005, plus any interest, dividends and other distributions and payments earned on that sum while in escrow (Settlement Fund); (2) Two Million Dollars ($ 2,000,000.00) that Defendants paid on February 1, 2005 into a separate escrow account to pay for costs and expenses of settlement class notice and future costs of settlement administration, plus any interest, dividends and other distributions and payments earned on that sum while in escrow (Notice Fund); and (3) up to One Million Dollars ($ 1,000,000.00) that the Defendants will pay to the States following the effective date of the settlement agreement for their reasonable attorneys' fees and expenses incurred in their investigations of Defendants relating to this matter and in connection with the approval and administration of this settlement.

a. The Settlement Fund

On February 1, 2005, Defendants deposited into escrow the sum of Thirty-Three Million Dollars ($ 33,000,000.00). This Settlement Fund may be used for purposes of distribution to the members of the settlement class and the Plaintiff States, payment of further notice or administrative [*16] costs in excess of the amount of the Notice Fund up to $ 500,000.00, and payment of End-Payor Plaintiffs' attorneys' fees and costs, and incentive awards for the class representatives.

Under the Plan of Distribution, the net settlement amount (the settlement fund less notice and claims administration costs, attorneys' fees, expenses, and incentive awards) will be allocated as follows: 32.8% to consumers, 16.5% to state governmental purchasers, and 50.7% to TPPs. End-Payor Plaintiffs' Co-Lead Counsel have applied to the Court for an attorneys' fees award from the Settlement Fund equal to $ 7.8 million (23.6% of the Settlement Fund) plus 23.6% of interest that has accrued on the Settlement Fund, as well as reimbursement of almost $ 500,000.00 in expenses (including expert fees and costs). Attorneys' fees and expenses will be distributed by End-Payor Plaintiffs' Co-Lead Counsel among the ten law firms that initiated and litigated these End Payor cases. In addition, End-Payor Plaintiffs seek an award of incentive awards to the Class Representatives in the amount of Seventy-Five Thousand Dollars ($ 75,000.00).

b. The Notice Fund

Defendants deposited into escrow a separate amount of Two [*17] Million Dollars ($ 2,000,000.00) used exclusively for the payment of notice and administrative fees and costs reasonably incurred for the purpose of providing notice of settlement to members of the settlement class, processing claims and administering the settlement, paying any taxes and tax expenses with respect to the escrow accounts, and paying reasonable fees and costs to the escrow agent.

c. Payment to State Attorneys General

After the effective date of the settlement agreement, Defendants will reimburse the Plaintiff States for their reasonable attorneys' fees and expenses incurred in connection with their investigations of Defendants relating to this matter, as well as their future reasonable attorneys' fees and expenses to be incurred in connection with settlement approval and administration. The aggregate amount of all such fees and expenses of all Plaintiff States that shall be reimbursable shall not exceed One Million Dollars ($ 1,000,000.00).

d. Any Unclaimed Money

Any amount in the Settlement Fund that remains after payment of all claims, Court-approved fees, costs, expenses, and incentive awards, and any supplemental distribution to settlement class members and Court-approved [*18] supplemental fees and costs, will be distributed to charitable organizations or state agencies that provide health or legal services to settlement class members, as recommended by End-Payor Plaintiffs' Co-Lead Counsel and/or State Liaison Counsel and approved by the Court.

2. Injunctive Relief

Defendants have agreed to an injunction prohibiting certain future conduct (Injunction), which will become effective when the settlement agreement becomes effective. The Injunction, which was negotiated by the Plaintiff States in conjunction with the Federal Trade Commission states, inter alia, that Defendants (a) "shall not seek, maintain, certify to, or take any other action in furtherance of, the listing or continued listing of any Patent in the Orange Book where the listing of such Patent in the Orange Book violates Applicable Law" and (b) "shall not" provide to the FDA "Listing Information that [is] false or misleading."

3. Release of Claims

Members of the settlement class (who have not made valid and timely elections to exclude themselves from the settlement class) release and discharge forever the Defendants from all claims which could have been asserted from the facts [*19] and circumstances giving rise to this case, from the beginning of time through January 25, 2005 (the date this Court preliminarily approved the Settlement Agreement).

II. ANALYSIS

A. Class Certification for Purposes of Settlement

In its Order preliminarily approving the settlement agreement, the Court conditionally certified the Settlement Class, defined in the settlement agreement as:

All End Payors (including any assignees of such End Payors) who purchased and/or paid all or part of the purchase price of Mirtazapine Products in the United States during the period beginning June 15, 2001 through January 25, 2005 (the date of the Preliminary Approval Order). Excluded from the Settlement Class are (i) Defendants and any of their subsidiaries and affiliates, (ii) all federal governmental entities, agencies and instrumentalities, and (iii) all wholesalers and retailers and all persons or entities that purchased Mirtazapine Products primarily for purposes of resale.

The Court also preliminarily approved the following as Class Representatives:

United Food and Commercial Workers Local 56 Health & Welfare Fund, and Board of Trustees of United Food and [*20] Commercial Workers Local 56 Health & Welfare Fund, a health benefit fund operated for the benefit of present and retired members of the union local and their families;

Vista Healthplan, Inc., a health maintenance organization that provides comprehensive healthcare benefits to its members; and Gayle Taylor, Dianne Mason, and Robert Kapella, all of whom are consumers who purchased Remeron during the Class Period.

HN1 Under Rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the Court must engage in a two-step analysis in order to determine whether it should certify a class action for settlement purposes. First, the Court must determine whether the End-Payor Plaintiffs and Plaintiff States have satisfied the prerequisites for maintaining a class action as set forth in Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(a\). If the End-Payor Plaintiffs and Plaintiff States can satisfy these prerequisites, the Court must then determine whether the alternative requirements of Rule 23\(b\)\(2\) or 23\(b\)\(3\) are met. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(a\) advisory committee's note. HN2 "Confronted with a request for [*21] settlement-only class certification, a district court need not inquire whether the case, if tried, would present intractable management problems, see Fed. Rule Civ. Proc. 23\(b\)\(3\)\(D\), for the proposal is that there be no trial." Amchem Prods., Inc. v. Windsor, 521 U.S. 591, 619, 117 S. Ct. 2231, 138 L. Ed. 2d 689 (1997).

1. The Requirements of Rule 23\(a\)

HN3 Rule 23\(a\) provides that class members may maintain a class action as representatives of a class if they show the court that:

- (a) the class members are so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable;
- (b) the action addresses questions of law or fact common to the class;
- (c) the claims or defenses of the class representatives are typical of the claims or defenses of the class; and
- (d) the class representative parties will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class.

a. Numerosity

HN4 Courts will ordinarily discharge the prerequisite of numerosity if the class is so large that "joinder of all members is impracticable." Hanlon v. Chrysler Corp., 150 F.3d 1011, 1019 (9th Cir. 1998). "The plaintiff need not precisely enumerate the potential size of the proposed [*22] class, nor is the plaintiff required to demonstrate that joinder would be impossible." Cannon v. Cherry Hill Toyota, Inc., 184 F.R.D. 540, 543 (D.N.J. 1999); accord Wachtel v. Guardian Life Ins. Co., 223 F.R.D. 196, 211 (D.N.J. 2004). Moreover, "it is proper for the court to accept common sense assumptions in order to support a finding of numerosity." Cumberland Farms, Inc. v. Browning-Ferris Indus., 120 F.R.D. 642, 646 (E.D. Pa. 1988) (citation omitted); accord In re Nasdaq Market-Makers Antitrust Litig., 169 F.R.D. 493, 509 (S.D.N.Y. 1996).

Here, the plaintiff class consists of End Payors, including consumers, who paid all or part of the price of Remeron in the United States during the class period. "There can be no serious question that joinder of all these parties, geographically dispersed throughout the United States, would be impracticable." In re Corrugated Container Antitrust Litig., 80 F.R.D. 244, 247 (S.D. Tex. 1978). Hundreds of thousands of class members have received notice and tens of thousands have filed proofs of claim across. The class thus easily fulfills the numerosity requirement. [*23] HN5 "Numbers in excess of forty, particularly those exceeding one hundred or one thousand have sustained the [ numerosity] requirement." Weiss v. York Hosp., 745 F.2d 786, 808 n.35 (3d Cir. 1984).

b. Commonality

HN6 The threshold commonality inquiry is whether there are any questions of fact or law that are common to the class. Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(a\)\(2\). "Commonality does not require an identity of claims or facts among class members." Newton v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., 259 F.3d 154, 183 (3d Cir. 2001). Rather, "the commonality requirement will be satisfied if the named plaintiffs share at least one question of fact or law with the grievances of the prospective class." "Even where individual facts and circumstances do become important to the resolution, class treatment is not precluded." Baby Neal for & by Kanter v. Casey, 43 F.3d 48, 57 (3d Cir. 1994). Id. at 57. "The threshold of commonality is not high." In re School Asbestos Litig., 789 F.2d 996, 1010 (3d Cir. 1986).

In this case, many common questions exist. They include, inter alia, (1) what is the relevant [*24] product market?; (2) did Defendants have market power in that market?; and (3) did Defendants unlawfully monopolize that market? HN7 Antitrust actions often present common questions of law and fact, and are, therefore, frequently certified as class actions. See, e.g., Transamerican Ref. Corp. v. Dravo Corp., 130 F.R.D. 70, 73 (S.D. Tex. 1990) (antitrust price-fixing claims and common law fraud); Cusick v. NVNederlandsche Combinatie Voor Chemische Industrie, 317 F. Supp. 1022, 1024 (E.D. Pa. 1970) (consumer class action charging monopolization). The commonality requirement is satisfied here.

c. Typicality

HN8 The Third Circuit has "set a low threshold for satisfying" the typicality requirement holding that "if the claims of the named plaintiffs and class members involve the same conduct by the defendant, typicality is established." Newton v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., 259 F.3d 154, 183-84 (3d Cir. 2001); accord Baby Neal v. Casey, 43 F.3d 48, 58 (3d Cir. 1994) (stating "cases challenging the same unlawful conduct which affects both the named plaintiffs and the putative class usually satisfy the typicality [*25] requirement").

HN9 The typicality requirement "does not mandate that all putative class members share identical claims." Newton, 259 F.3d at 184; see also Hassine v. Jeffes, 846 F.2d 169, 176-77 (3d Cir. 1988). Plainly, "there is nothing in Rule 23\(a\)\(3\) which requires named plaintiffs to be clones of each other or clones of other class members." Advocate Health Care v. Mylan Labs., Inc. \(In re Lorazepam & Clorazepate Antitrust Litig.\), 202 F.R.D. 12, 27 (D.D.C. 2001); accord In re Catfish Antitrust Litig., 826 F.Supp. 1019, 1036 (N.D. Miss. 1993).

In this case, the Class Representatives' and the class members' claims are identically predicated upon Defendants' alleged actions of improper listing and late listing of the 099 Patent in the Orange Book, fraud on the PTO, and filing of allegedly baseless patent infringement lawsuits against Generic Manufacturers. Thus, "there are no differences as to the type of relief sought or the theories of liability upon which plaintiffs will proceed." In re Corrugated Container Antitrust Litig., 80 F.R.D. 244 (S.D. Tex. 1978). The Class Representatives' claims and those of the class members arise from the same [*26] course of conduct. "Since the various claims alleged appear to stem from a single course of conduct . . . we cannot conclude that the district court abused its discretion in holding that the typicality requirement was met." Grasty v. Amalgamated Clothing and Textile Workers Union, 828 F.2d 123, 130 (3d Cir. 1987). Accordingly, the Class Representatives' claims are typical of those of the class members.

d. Adequacy of Representation

HN10 The final requirement of Rule 23\(a\) is that "the representative parties will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(a\)\(4\). The Third Circuit has held that "adequate representation depends on two factors: (i) the plaintiff's attorney must be qualified, experienced, and generally able to conduct the proposed litigation, and (ii) the plaintiff must not have interests antagonistic to those of the class." Hoxworth v. Blinder,

Robinson & Co., 980 F.2d 912, 923 (3d Cir. 1992); accord In re Warfarin Sodium Antitrust Litig., 391 F.3d 516, 532 (3d Cir. 2004); Wetzel v. Liberty Mutual Ins. Co., 508 F.2d 239, 247 (3d Cir. 1975). [*27]

As to the first factor, End-Payor Plaintiffs' counsel have successfully prosecuted numerous antitrust class actions. Plaintiffs' Co-Lead Counsel, Arthur M. Kaplan, is a graduate of the Harvard Law School (J.D., cum laude, 1970) and has been active in antitrust and other complex litigation. Mr. Kaplan was Co-Lead Counsel for plaintiffs in the In re Nasdaq Market-Makers Antitrust Litig., 187 F.R.D. 465 (S.D.N.Y. 1998), in which plaintiffs achieved settlements totaling $ 1.027 billion.<sup>2</sup> End-Payor Plaintiffs' Co-Lead Counsel Joseph H. Meltzer likewise is experienced. Mr. Meltzer is a graduate of the Temple University School of Law (J.D., cum laude) and has focused his practice exclusively on antitrust and complex class action litigation. In addition to prominent roles in prosecuting several major antitrust class actions to successful conclusions, including In re Sorbates Direct Purchaser Antitrust Litig., C98-4886 (N.D. Cal. 2001) (settlements exceeding $ 92 million), Mr. Meltzer was appointed Co-Lead Counsel in Ryan-House v. GlaxoSmithKline plc, C.A. 2:02cv442 (E.D. Va.), a pharmaceutical antitrust class action brought on behalf of end payors of the [*28] prescription medication Augmentin which recently settled for $ 29 million. End-Payor Plaintiffs' Acting Co-Lead Counsel Jeffrey S. Istvan is a 1992 graduate of the University of Virginia School of Law, where he was a Hardy Cross Dillard Scholar. Following a federal judicial clerkship, he has been active in antitrust and consumer class actions. Mr. Istvan was sole lead counsel in Parsky v. Wachovia Bank, N.A., 2001 WL 535786 (C.C.P. Phila. May 8, 2001), a consumer class action that recently settled for approximately than $ 23 million and worked on several large antitrust class actions, including In re Copper Antitrust Litig., M.D.L. No. 1303 (7th Cir. 2004) (appeal pending); In re Polypropylene Carpet Antitrust Litig., 93 F. Supp. 2d 1348 (N.D. Ga. 2000) (settlements totaling $ 50 million); and In re Commercial Explosives Antitrust Litig., 945 F. Supp. 1489 (D. Utah 1996) (settlements totaling $ 77 million).

[*29] The State Attorneys General, as counsel for the Plaintiff States, have considerable expertise in complex antitrust parens patriae and class action litigation. State Liaison Counsel Patricia A. Conners, Director of the Antitrust Division of the Florida Attorney General's Office and past Chair of the National Association of Attorneys General ("NAAG") Multistate Antitrust Task Force. She was an Assistant Attorney General in the Antitrust Division, working on such notable cases as Florida v. Borden, Inc., the 1989 school milk bid-rigging cases that resulted in a $ 36 million recovery for Florida school boards and Florida v. Abbott Laboratories, Inc., the first of the so-called Infant Formula cases, and the Disposable Contact Lens Litigation, which settled in 2002 for $ 80 million. She has practiced antitrust law exclusively since 1987. State Liaison Counsel Kim Van Winkle is an Assistant Attorney General in the Office of the Attorney General of Texas, where she has practiced antitrust law exclusively since 1998. Ms. Van Winkle graduated in 1997 with honors from the University of Texas School of Law, with a joint Master of Public Affairs degree from the Lyndon B. Johnson [*30] School of Public Affairs. She has participated in the investigation and litigation of numerous complex, multistate antitrust cases, including In re Buspirone Antitrust Litigation, No. 01-CV-1 1401, MDL 1413 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 7, 2003) (final approval granted for $ 100 million settlement of end-payor action alleging monopolization of drug markets through patent abuse). These attorneys are qualified, experienced, and have skillfully worked on this litigation.

The Class Representatives' interests are not antagonistic to those of the absent class members. The central issues in this case are critical to the claims of both groups. In proving these common issues, the Class Representatives further the absent class members' claims no less than their own. Cf. In re Cardizem CD Antitrust Litig., 218 F.R.D. 508, 518 (E.D. Mich. 2003) ("Each Class member . . . has a common interest in establishing that he, she, or it was financially injured by Defendants' conduct and in an aggregate damages computation"); In re Warfarin Sodium Antitrust Litig., 212 F.R.D. 231, 251 (D. Del. 2002), aff'd, 391 F.3d 516 (3d Cir. 2004) ("The named plaintiffs share [*31] a strong interest in establishing liability of defendant, seeking the same type of damages

---

<sup>2</sup> In In re Nasdaq Market-Makers Antitrust Litig., 187 F.R.D. at 474, the court in approving that settlement stated, "it is difficult to conceive of better representation than the parties to this action achieved." Likewise, in Advocate Health Care v. Mylan Labs. Inc. (In re Lorazepam & Clorazepate Antitrust Litig.), 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12344, 2003 WL 22037741, at *6 (D.D.C. June 16, 2003), in which Mr. Kaplan was co-counsel for the class of direct purchasers, the Court in approving settlement characterized counsel as "among the best and most experienced antitrust litigators in the country."

(compensation for overpayment) for the same type of injury (overpayment for warfarin sodium"). Further, "it is difficult to imagine a better representative of the retail consumers within a state than the state's attorney general." In re Antibiotic Antitrust Actions, 333 F. Supp. 278, 280 (S.D.N.Y. 1971); accord FTC v. Mylan Labs., Inc. (In re Lorazepam & Clorazepate Antitrust Litig.), 205 F.R.D. 369, 387 (D.D.C. 2002) (stating the plaintiff states "have evidenced a genuine interest in this litigation, and are qualified and experienced."). States, acting through their attorneys general, have frequently been held to be the "best representatives of the consumers residing within their jurisdictions." In re Ampicillin Antitrust Litig., 55 F.R.D. 269, 274 (D.D.C. 1972); see also West Virginia v. Chas Pfizer & Co., Inc., 440 F.2d 1079, 1089-91 (2d Cir. 1971). Thus, the adequacy requirement has been met.

2. The Requirements of Rule 23(b)(3)

HN11 [↑] Once the requirements of Rule 23(a) are met, Rule 23(b)(3) permits the maintenance of a class action if "the court [*32] finds [a] that the questions of law or fact common to the members of the class predominate over any questions affecting only individual members, and [b] that a class action is superior to other available methods for the fair and efficient adjudication of the controversy."

HN12 [↑] "The Rule 23(b)(3) predominance inquiry tests whether proposed classes are sufficiently cohesive to warrant adjudication by representation." Amchem Prods. v. Windsor, 521 U.S. 591, 623, 117 S. Ct. 2231, 138 L. Ed. 2d 689 (1997). As the Supreme Court has observed, "predominance is a test readily met in certain cases alleging . . . violations of the antitrust laws." Amchem, 521 U.S. at 625. In particular, HN13 [↑] "antitrust actions involving common questions of liability for monopolization . . . have frequently been held to predominate for the preliminary stage of class certification." Lorazepam & Clorazepate, 202 F.R.D. at 29. "The presence of individual questions . . . does not mean that the common questions of law and fact do not predominate." Eisenberg v. Gagnon, 766 F.2d 770, 786 (3d Cir. 1985).

a. Questions of Law and Fact Common to the Class Predominate

"As is true in many [*33] antitrust cases, the alleged violations of the antitrust laws at issue here respecting . . . monopolization relate solely to Defendants' conduct, and as such proof for these issues will not vary among class members." Lorazepam & Clorazepate, 202 F.R.D. at 29 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). As the Third Circuit held in In re Linerboard Antitrust Litig., 305 F.3d 145 (3d Cir. 2002), cert. denied, 538 U.S. 977, 123 S. Ct. 1786, 155 L. Ed. 2d 666 (2003) that "common issues . . . predominate here because the inquiry necessarily focuses on defendants' conduct, that is, what defendants did rather than what plaintiffs did." Id. at 163 (citation omitted); see also Warfarin Sodium, 391 F.3d at 528. "The common questions of law, the elements of the monopolization claim fully enumerated, . . . dwarf, rather than merely predominate over, any individual questions." Sollenbarger v. Mountain States Tel. and Tel. Co., 121 F.R.D. 417, 427 (D.N.M. 1988); see also Davis v. Southern Bell Tel. Co., 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20033, 1993 WL 593999, *7 (S.D. Fla. Dec. 23, 1993) ("The issues of antitrust violation, injury, and damages all turn [*34] on class-wide proof").

In this case, the claims of all class members arise from the same facts giving rise to the same legal claims, as discussed in the above sections on commonality and typicality. Accordingly, the predominance requirement is satisfied.

b. A Class Action is Superior to Other Available Methods

"In the case of consumers, the class members here have little interest in individually controlling the prosecution or defense of separate actions,' Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3)(A), because each consumer has a very small claim in relation to the cost of prosecuting a lawsuit." Warfarin Sodium, 212 F.R.D. at 251. Indeed, "where it is not economically feasible to obtain relief . . . aggrieved persons may be without any effective redress unless they employ the class action device." Deposit Guar. Nat'l Bank v. Roper, 445 U.S. 326, 339, 100 S. Ct. 1166, 63 L. Ed. 2d 427 (1980).

In contrast to the inefficiency of duplicative individual lawsuits, "the efficacy of resolving all plaintiffs' claims in a single proceeding is beyond discussion." Sollenbarger v. Mountain States Tel. and Tel. Co., 121 F.R.D. 417, 436

(D.N.M. 1988). "The [*35] class action mechanism offers substantial economies of time, effort and expense for the litigants as well as the Court." In re Terazosin Hydrochloride, 220 F.R.D. 672, 700 (S.D. Fl. 2004).

In this very expensive litigation involving hundreds of thousands documents, it would not have been economically feasible for many plaintiffs to seek individual redress. Judicial economy as well as fairness to Defendants makes the litigation of such claims in one action far more desirable than numerous separate actions litigating the same issues.

Because the End-Payor Plaintiffs and Plaintiff States have satisfied all of the requirements under Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a) and the requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3), this Court certifies the proposed class for purposes of this settlement.

B. The Notice of Settlement

The settlement class members are entitled to notice of the proposed settlement and an opportunity to be heard. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(e); Phillips Petroleum Co. v. Shutts, 472 U.S. 797, 105 S. Ct. 2965, 86 L. Ed. 2d 628 (1985).

The notice period in this case [*36] began on March 14, 2005, and continued for forty-five (45) calendar days until April 27, 2005. Under the settlement agreement and Preliminary Approval Order, settlement class members had that Notice Period of 45 days to submit any requests to opt-out of the class and until May 28, 2005 to submit objections.

1. Notice Plan

The Notice Plan consisted of multiple components designed to reach consumers through paid print and broadcast media through Public Service Announcements, earned media, and direct mailed notice (to the extent that information could be obtained) to purchasers of Remeron. The media plan provided an estimated reach of more than 90 percent, and frequency realized may have been as much as 2.5 times.<sup>3</sup>

[*37] a. Published Notice

Syndicated data, audited data and proprietary research from the National Mental Health Association and the National Foundation for Depressive Illness were reviewed to identify the media vehicles that would most effectively deliver the message to potential class members in the U.S. and its territories (specifically, Guam, U.S. Virgin Islands, and Puerto Rico). The resulting plan was that the summary notice (about 1 page) be placed in a combination of national Sunday Supplements, USA Today, and Reader's Digest to reach consumers, plus an insertion in National Underwriter to reach Third-Party Payors. The Notice Plan's consumer published media schedule was based upon techniques specifically designed for legal notification.

The long-form notice (several pages) provides detailed information about the proposed settlement, including a summary of the monetary and injunctive terms, the allocation percentages, the requested attorneys' fees, litigation costs and incentive awards, and detailed information on the terms of the releases. In addition, the long-form notice provides information about the fairness hearing date, and Settlement Class members' rights to [*38] object or opt out (and deadlines and procedures). Finally, the long-form notice included a Claim Form to be completed and returned by Class members. The Claim Form also is available on a dedicated website, www.RemeronSettlement.com, or by calling a toll-free 800 telephone number provided in the long-form notice and the summary notice.

b. Mailed Notice

---

<sup>3</sup> Measurement of the notice program is provided in terms of reach and frequency. Reach is the estimated percentage of a target audience reached through a specific media vehicle or combination of media vehicles. Frequency is the estimated average number of times an audience is exposed to advertising vehicles carrying the message.

Direct mail notices consisted of mailing the settlement notice packet (including the long-form notice and a Claim Form) to inform potential class members of their rights and how they could participate in the class action. This direct mail settlement notice packet was sent to all potential TPP class members included in CCS' proprietary TPP mailing database, which includes 13,431 TPPs (e.g., insurance companies, healthcare and welfare funds, self-insureds, etc.) and record keepers (e.g., third-party administrators and pharmacy benefit managers).

In addition, potential consumer class members were contacted by direct mail with the assistance of pharmacies and psychiatrists. Many potential class members were mailed a settlement notice packet by their pharmacy and/or psychiatrist. Twenty-six large national pharmacies participated in mailing [*39] settlement notice packets to their customers who purchased Remeron and mirtazapine during the claim period, including 14 of the top 25 drug chains, 6 of the top 7 mass merchant pharmacies, and 3 of the top 6 supermarket pharmacies. In all, more than 850,000 settlement notice packets were mailed to potential class members through this program. This direct mail program provided an opportunity to reach those class members who may have missed the summary notice in their newspapers.

c. News Media

CCS implemented a campaign to expand notice through free or "earned" media which included contacting consumer groups such as AARP, mental health groups such as the National Alliance for the Mentally Ill, National Federation for Depressive Illnesses, National Mental Health Association, National Community Pharmacists Association, and issuing a press release over Businesswire. The State Attorneys General have undertaken further efforts to expand notice through the news media. A number of Attorneys General issued press releases about the settlement, notice and claims process, including the toll-free telephone numbers and website address. These press releases were run in newspapers and broadcast on [*40] the radio.

d. Toll-Free Telephone Number

Complete Claims Solutions has obtained a toll-free telephone number that allows callers to request the notice of settlement and obtain a Claim Form. It also allows them to find out other information about the settlement. This number was included in the summary notice, the notice of settlement, and on the website, www.RemeronSettlement.com.

e. Internet Website

In addition to the media outlets described above, Complete Claims Solutions developed and maintains a website at www.RemeronSettlement.com, which can be accessed by the settlement class members. This website includes the summary notice and long-form notice and a Claim Form.

f. Results of Notice Effort

CCS received nearly 65,000 individual consumer claims and 1,156 TPP claims. In addition, over 40,000 visits have been made to the settlement website, and approximately 30,000 telephone calls have been made to the toll-free number.

2. The Notice Plan Meets the Requirements of Due Process

"In order HN14 to satisfy due process, notice to class members must be reasonably calculated under all the circumstances, to apprise interested parties of the pendency of the action and afford them an [*41] opportunity to present their objections." *In re AremisSoft Corp. Sec. Litig.*, 210 F.R.D. 109, 119 \(D.N.J. 2002\) (internal quotations and citation omitted). HN15 In *Rule 23\(b\)\(3\)* actions, "class members must receive the best notice practicable under the circumstances." *Id. at 119-20* (quoting *Fed. R. Civ. P. 23\(c\)\(2\)\(B\)*); see also *Varacallo v. Massachusetts Mut. Life Ins. Co.*, 226 F.R.D. 207, 225 \(D.N.J. 2005\).

The notice forms are similar to those successfully used in numerous other class settlements. See, e.g., *In re Toys "R" Us Antitrust Litig.*, 191 F.R.D. 347 \(E.D.N.Y. 2000\); *In re Linerboard Antitrust Litig.*, 321 F. Supp. 2d 619, 627

(E.D. Pa. 2004). This Court reviewed the summary notice and the long-form notice in detail and suggested several changes, which were made, prior to the preliminary approval of the settlement. The final product is clear and comprehensive, and is written in simple terminology. The notices "fairly, accurately, and neutrally describe the claims and parties in the litigation, the terms of the proposed settlement and the identity of persons [*42] entitled to participate in it," and apprise affected class members of their options with regard to the proposed settlement. Foe v. Cuomo, 700 F. Supp. 107, 113 (E.D.N.Y. 1988).

HN16 [↑] For those whose names and addresses cannot be determined by reasonable efforts, notice by publication suffices under both Rule 23(c)(2) and under the Due Process Clause. Carlough v. Amchem Products, Inc., 158 F.R.D. 314, 325 (E.D. Pa. 1993) (citing Mullane v. Central Hanover Bank & Trust Co., 339 U.S. 306, 317-18, 70 S. Ct. 652, 94 L. Ed. 865 (1950)). Under the circumstances of this case, where End-Payor Plaintiffs, Plaintiff States and Defendants have limited and/or incomplete access to the names or addresses of End-Payers who purchased Remeron during the Class Period,<sup>4</sup> the law requires reasonably feasible notice by publication coupled with such mailed notice. The plan is allocated $ 2 million for this task and for processing returned Claims Forms, spending over $ 750,000 on publication notice alone. The Notice Plan meets the requirements of due process.

[*43] C. Final Approval of Class Action Settlement

1. State Attorneys' General Authority to Settle All Consumer Claims

Plaintiff HN18 [↑] States, by their Attorneys General, have the authority to settle and release indirect purchaser claims in a parens patriae or other representative capacity. "A State has a quasi-sovereign interest in the health and well being -- both physical and economic -- of its residents in general." Alfred L. Snapp & Son, Inc. v. Puerto Rico, 458 U.S. 592, 607, 102 S. Ct. 3260, 73 L. Ed. 2d 995 (1982). That federal authority is supplemented by state statutory provisions and case law. HN19 [↑] All Attorneys' General have authority to represent consumers, depending on the state, in at least one of the following four ways: (1) parens patriae authority expressly conferred by the state legislature, (2) authority expressly conferred by the state legislature that is the functional equivalent of parens patriae authority, (3) judicially recognized authority to represent consumers, or (4) authority to proceed as a class representative of consumers pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 23. See, e.g., In re Lorazepam & Clorazepate Antitrust Litig. ("Lorazepam"), 205 F.R.D. at 386-87. [*44]

2. Settlements That Meet Certain Conditions Are Presumed Fair

HN20 [↑] The Third Circuit affords an initial presumption of fairness for a settlement "if the court finds that: (1) the negotiations occurred at arm's length; (2) there was sufficient discovery; (3) the proponents of the settlement are experienced in similar litigation; and (4) only a small fraction of the class objected." In re Cendant Corp. Litig., 264 F.3d 201, 233 n. 18 (3d Cir. 2001). As discussed in Part I above, this case has seen heated litigation between the parties and the review of hundreds of thousands of documents and dozens of depositions. The Plaintiffs' lawyers involved have a great deal of experience in antitrust litigations such as these, as discussed in Part II(A)(1)(d), and favor settlement. Defendants' Counsel, including Dean Ringel of Cahill, Gordon, & Reindel and Joseph Rebein of Shook, Hardy & Bacon, are prominent litigators from successful law firms and also favor settlement.

The Court is also satisfied with the qualifications of State Attorneys General who also favor settlement. Furthermore, HN21 [↑] "the participation of the State Attorneys General furnishes extra assurance that consumers' [*45] interests are protected." In re Toys "R" Us Antitrust Litig., 191 F.R.D. 347, 351 (E.D.N.Y. 2000); accord New York v. Reebok Int'l. Ltd., 96 F.3d 44, 48 (2d Cir. 1996) (noting that Attorneys General in parens actions are motivated by concern for the public interest); Wellman v. Dickinson, 497 F. Supp. 824, 830 (S.D.N.Y. 1980).

<sup>4</sup> HN17 [↑] The privacy of consumers who purchase prescription medication is protected under the provisions of the Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act of 1996 (HIPAA), Public Law 104-91. 42 U.S.C. § 1320d-2. HIPAA protects "protected health information" from disclosure. "Protected health information" means individually identifiable health information that is maintained and/or transmitted in any form or medium. 45 C.F.R. § 160.103 (2004). Pharmacists are health care providers covered by the act. Patient authorization is required for disclosure of "protected health information." Improper disclosure may subject the provider to civil and/or criminal penalties. 42 U.S.C. § 1320d-5 and 6. Thus, End-Payor Plaintiffs and Plaintiff States were unable to obtain a list of potential class members for a direct mail campaign and instead had to rely on pharmacies and psychiatrists to forward notices to their customers and patients.

Finally, there have been few objectors to the settlement, as discussed in Part II(C)(4)(b). This Court determines that an initial presumption of fairness attaches, although such finding is not dispositive.

3. Standard for Court Approval of Settlement

HN22[]

A class action may be settled under Rule 23(e) upon a judicial finding that the settlement is "fair, reasonable, and adequate." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(e)(1)(C). Under Rule 23(e), this Court must determine whether the settlement is within a range that responsible and experienced attorneys could accept considering all relevant risks and factors of litigation. See Walsh v. Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Co., 96 F.R.D. 632, 642 (D.N.J. 1983). The range "recognizes the uncertainties of law and fact in any [*46] particular case and the concomitant risks and costs necessarily inherent in taking any litigation to completion." Newman v. Stein, 464 F.2d 689, 693 (2d Cir. 1972).

HN23[]

Because a settlement represents an exercise of judgment by the negotiating parties, cases have consistently held that the function of a court reviewing a settlement is neither to rewrite the settlement agreement reached by the parties nor to try the case by resolving issues left unresolved by the settlement. Bryan v. Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co., 494 F.2d 799, 801 (3d Cir. 1974); Bullock v. Administrator of Kircher's Estate, 84 F.R.D. 1, 4 (D.N.J. 1979). "The temptation to convert a settlement hearing into a full trial on the merits must be resisted." Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Bolger, 2 F.3d 1304, 1315 (3d Cir. 1993).

HN24[]

To determine whether the settlement is fair, reasonable and adequate under Rule 23(e), courts in the Third Circuit apply the nine-factor test enunciated in Girsh v. Jepson, 521 F.2d 153, 157 (3d Cir. 1975), and recently reaffirmed in Warfarin Sodium, 391 F.3d at 534-35. These factors are:

- (a) The complexity, [*47] expense, and likely duration of the litigation;
- (b) the reaction of the class to the settlement;
- (c) the stage of the proceedings and the amount of discovery completed;
- (d) the risks of establishing liability;
- (e) the risks of establishing damages;
- (f) the risks of maintaining the class action through the trial;
- (g) the ability of the defendants to withstand a greater judgment;
- (h) the range of reasonableness of the settlement fund in light of the best possible recovery; and

- (i) the range of reasonableness of the settlement fund to a possible recovery in light of all the attendant risks of litigation.

Id. (quoting Girsh, 521 F.2d at 156-57).<sup>5</sup>

[*48] 4. Evaluation of the Settlement Under Applicable Standards

a. The Complexity, Expense and Likely Duration of the Litigation

By reaching a favorable settlement prior to dispositive motions or trial, the End-Payor Plaintiffs and Plaintiff States avoided significant expense and delay, and ensured recovery. An "antitrust action is arguably the most complex action to prosecute." In re Linerboard Antitrust Litig., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10532, 2004 WL 1221350, at *10 (E.D. Pa. June 2, 2004) (citations omitted); see also Nichols v. Smithkline Beecham Corp., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7061, 2005 WL 950616, at *12 (E.D. Pa. Apr. 22, 2005) (same). This litigation involves complicated patent, regulatory, and antitrust laws, including interpretation of provisions of the Hatch Waxman Act and their application to antitrust law.

<sup>5</sup> When evaluating settlements in parens patriae actions brought by state Attorneys General under either the Clayton Act or comparable state laws, courts have generally utilized the standards used to analyze private class action settlements under Rule 23. See, e.g., In re Toys "R" Us Antitrust Litig., 191 F.R.D. at 352; New York by Vacco v. Reebok Int'l., 903 F. Supp. 532, 535 (S.D.N.Y. 1995); In re Minolta Camera Prod. Antitrust Litig., 668 F. Supp. 456 (D. Md. 1987).

Although the End-Payor Plaintiffs have conducted a substantial amount of discovery, significant additional work would be necessary if this case proceeded beyond the current 12b6 and class certification stages. First, expert witness reports and depositions would need to be undertaken. Then, summary judgment motions would need to be resolved. In the Direct Purchaser case, which recently came to [*49] a preliminary settlement, thousands of pages of materials were filed with this Court on summary judgment issues such as market definition, market power, and improper / late listing in the FDA Orange Book. These issues would most likely come up again in the End-Payor Plaintiffs' litigation.

Furthermore, a trial on the merits of the action would entail considerable expense: Market definition alone would require dozens of hours of testimony at this stage. Finally, trial would likely not end the litigation, given the right to appeal. This factor weighs in favor of the settlement. See In re Linerboard Antitrust Litig., 292 F. Supp. 2d 631, 642 (E.D. Pa. 2003) (noting that the "protracted nature of class action antitrust litigation means that any recovery would be delayed for several years," and thus settlement's "substantial and immediate benefits" to class members favors settlement approval); Slomovics v. All for a Dollar, Inc., 906 F. Supp. 146, 149 (E.D.N.Y. 1995) (where litigation is potentially lengthy and will result in great expense, settlement is in the best interest of the class members).

b. The Reaction Of The Settlement Group

As described [*50] above in Part II(B)(1)(b), CCS sent out 13,431 notices to third-party payors, and caused the mailing of more than 850,000 notices to potential consumer class members across the country. In addition, CCS developed and maintained a website and a toll-free telephone "hotline" to provide information about the settlement and arranged for publication of the summary notice over a period of approximately six weeks in selected publications throughout the country.

In response, no TPP excluded itself from the settlement,<sup>6</sup> and about 70 individual consumers timely submitted Requests for Exclusion. Given that the TPP portion of the class is made up largely of sophisticated managed care companies, the fact that not one of them wishes to exclude itself is strong evidence of a positive reaction to the settlement. Equally strong evidence is the very low number of consumer opt-outs relative to the hundreds of the thousands notified and the tens of thousands who submitted claims forms.

[*51] Also relevant is the number of objections. Eight individuals and two TPPs filed objections.<sup>7</sup> [*52] This Court has considered all of the objectors' written submissions<sup>8</sup> and the three oral arguments that were made at the Fairness Hearing. The non-monetary objections that have been filed are the following: (1) the name of the charity that would receive left over funds has not been disclosed, (2) Rider A, a confidential attachment to the settlement agreement containing provisions regarding the number of opt-outs that would lead to termination of the settlement, was not disclosed, (3) consumer information should have been subpoenaed from the ten largest retail pharmacies

<sup>6</sup> Five TPPs did initially opt out, but they soon entered into an agreement with the parties to request that the Court permit them to rescind their notices of exclusion. That agreement is reflected in a Memorandum of Understanding filed with the Court that guaranteed $ 450,000 more to the Settlement Fund, instead of going to Plaintiffs' Attorneys' Fees. The Court granted the request.

<sup>7</sup> Two objections were filed on behalf of TPPs, Health Care Service Corporation and certain Blue Cross entities; and eight were filed by consumers, Eugene Clasby, Roberta Geha, Rhonda Marcus, Nadine Street, William L. Bedford, Susan Ruth Hall, Dot K. Kensinger, and Robert L. Kensinger. The objections by the latter five individuals were filed by the same attorney, Stephen Tsai, who spoke at the Fairness Hearing.

<sup>8</sup> As some objection points are entirely unsupported, too vague to comprehend, or clearly without merit, the Court only writes on those objections that require some explanation.

and those consumers should have received direct payments without having to file Claims Forms, and (4) the settlement should not contain a boilerplate provision that allows for modification of the settlement without notice to the class, despite agreement by the settling parties and Court approval, and (5) 30 days after the 45-day notice period was an insufficient amount of time to object to the settlement and the 45-day notice period was an insufficient amount of time to opt-out of the settlement.

These objections are considered in turn. First, HN25 when providing notice, the law does not require that the charity that may receive left over funds be disclosed in notice to the class. See *Mangone v. First USA Bank, 206 F.R.D. 222, 230 \(S.D. Ill. 2001\)* ("Courts have broad discretion in distributing unclaimed class funds, and where the parties agree on the distribution of unclaimed class funds, the court should defer to that method of distribution.") (citing *Wilson v. Southwest Airlines, Inc., 880 F.2d 807, 815-16 \(5th Cir. 1989\)* (where parties agree to distribution of unclaimed class fund, and agreed distribution is equitable, court will defer to such agreement)). More importantly, this objection is moot as the claims administrator has advised that there are no surplus funds because of the high response to the notice.

Second, Courts have held that HN26 information regarding conditions that [*53] may terminate a settlement need not be detailed in the notice to the class. See *In re Warfarin Sodium Antitrust Litig., 212 F.R.D. 231, 253 \(D. Del. 2002\)* (stating that notice did not need to include details on "the confidential opt-out' threshold beyond which defendant reserved the right to withdraw from the settlement"). The Court, the Attorneys General, and Class Counsel know the contents of Rider A and agreed to its sealing in the interest of consummating the settlement. The Rider has no legitimate bearing on a class member's decision to opt-out of the settlement, object, or file a claims form.

Third, the suggested subpoenas of the top 10 retail pharmacies is unnecessary given that 14 of the top 25 pharmacy chains, 3 of the top 6 supermarket, and 6 of the top 7 mass merchant retailers voluntarily participated in searching their databases for Remeron purchasers and sending notices with Claims Forms to them. This process led to 800,000 notices being sent and nearly 65,000 consumer claims being filed. As to the objector's additional suggestion to automatically distribute money to those who purchased Remeron through a top 10 pharmacy, this Court will not favor one [*54] group of class members over another. See, e.g., *In re Diet Drugs Prods. Liab. Litig., 93 Fed. Appx. 338, 343 \(3d Cir. 2004\)* ("a class action settlement cannot arbitrarily prefer one group of plaintiffs over another -- because such a rule would be inimical to the very principles of class advocacy"). In addition, there are practical problems with the suggestion, including those associated with blindly sending checks to addresses that may be outdated.

Fourth, the boilerplate provision that allows for modification of the settlement without notice to class is satisfactory and necessary. The class is protected from adverse modifications by Rule 23 and the requirements of due process, regardless of what the provision says, and the Court is charged with enforcing these protections. HN27 Minor modifications may be necessary to a settlement agreement (indeed may be favorable to the class), and additional class notice is not always required because, e.g., of the cost of notice that would take recovered money from the class. See *In re Prudential Ins. Co. of Am. Sales Practices Litig., 962 F. Supp. 450, 473 n.10* ("Class members need not be informed of the [amendment [*55] to the settlement agreement] because the [settlement] is only more valuable with these changes"). In this case, the adjustment that was made to the settlement that favored the class, after notice went out, was followed by additional notice and by opportunity for any opt-outs to return to the class in order to partake in the additional recovery.<sup>9</sup>

Fifth, 30 days after a 45-day notice period is a sufficient amount of time to object to the settlement. This Court suggested this deadline to Plaintiffs' Counsel shortly after the preliminary fairness hearing. Many district courts have set a similar deadline in antitrust class action settlements. In *In re Augmentin Antitrust Litig.* (Case No. 02-CV-442, E.D. Va.), Judge Morgan approved a forty-five day notice period and set the opt-out and objection deadline two weeks from the close of the notice period. In *In re Buspirone Antitrust Litig.* (Case No. 01-CV-7951-JGK, S.D.N.Y),

---

<sup>9</sup> See supra note 6.

Judge Koeltl set the opt-out and objection deadline forty-five [*56] days after the notice date. And in In re Lorazepam & Clorazepate Antitrust Litig. (Case No. 99-276-TFH/JMF, D.D.C.), Judge Hogan also set the objection deadline forty-five days after the notice date. Indeed, the objector Health Care Service Corporation, submitted its objection on May 16, 2005, two weeks before the May 28, 2005 objection deadline, thus revealing the adequacy of the objection period.

As to the opt-out deadline, this Court passes no judgment because the issue is moot. Of over 800,000 notices only two objections were made stating insufficient time to opt-out during the 45-day notice period. On the other hand, at least 65,000 class members chose not to opt-out, as evidenced by their filing of claims forms. At the Fairness Hearing, both objectors on this issue took the opportunity to be heard. Counsel to Health Care Service Corporation informed the Court at the Fairness Hearing that, despite objecting, the company did not wish to opt-out. Counsel to Nadine Street, the other objector in this regard, also spoke at the Fairness Hearing. Rather than expressing a desire to opt-out of the settlement, the lawyer requested additional time to forge an objection to Plaintiffs' [*57] motion for attorneys' fees, which the Court granted, as discussed in Part II(E)(1)(b). Thus, the issue is moot.

Six additional objection points were made pertaining to the class's compensation. They are the following: (1) one group in the class (TPPs or individual consumers) is getting more than its fair share than the other group, (2) the Plan of Distribution's reliance on "expenditures" rather than "damages" is inappropriate and unfairly benefits TPPs, (3) claim rates of the TPPs or individual consumers should not be considered in distributing monies between the two groups, (4) money should "spill over" from the individual consumers' allocation to the TPPs' allocation before any money is made available for a cy pres distribution, (5) the individual consumers are not receiving sufficient compensation, and (6) class members from states whose antitrust laws do not provide for the recovery of damages to indirect purchasers should not receive compensation.

These objections are also considered in turn. First, both the TPP group and the individual consumer group make the same argument that the other group is getting more than it should. Two (of two) TPP objectors contend that they [*58] are entitled to more than the Plan of Distribution's dedicated 50.7%, while at the same time five (of seven) individual consumers contend that the individuals are entitled to more than the Plan of Distribution's dedicated 32.8%. As discussed in Part II(D), the Court finds the Plan of Distribution to be fair. These conflicting objections are without merit.<sup>10</sup>

Second, the reasons put forth as to why reliance on "expenditures" would be inappropriate is inapplicable here. The objector, Eugene Clasby, is concerned that damages based on the end-payors [*59] "expenditures" would be skewed in favor of TPPs because such a measurement would not discount for co-payments paid by individual consumers or for certain rebates received by TPPs. However, the "expenditures" data used in this case in fact does factor in these offsets. Furthermore, HN28<sup>11</sup> the Third Circuit has approved settlement allocations based on expenditures rather than damages, see *In re Warfarin Sodium Antitrust Litig.*, 391 F.3d at 539, and this precise objection by Eugene Clasby was overruled in *Nichols v. SmithKline Beecham Corp.*, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7061, 2005 WL 950616, \*18 \(E.D. Pa. Apr. 22, 2005\).

Third, claim rates were not a factor in determining the Plan of Distribution's distribution percentages. The allocation is based on each group's expenditures. That TPPs might be more likely to claim their damages did not give them a higher percentage of the Settlement Fund.

Fourth, the issue of "spill over" from individual consumers to TPPs prior to any cy pres distribution is moot. The claims administrator has reported that consumer claims already exceed the amount available to them by a very wide margin, thus no funds remain for a cy pres distribution or a transfer [*60] to the TPPs.

---

<sup>10</sup> Several objectors also objected that they did not have access to the economic reports that were the basis of the Plan of Distribution, and objector Eugene Clasby made a motion to this effect. As a result, the Court ordered that End-Payor Plaintiffs make this underlying information available prior to the Fairness Hearing, which they did. The objection was not pursued at the Fairness Hearing and one TPP objector, the Blue Cross entities, withdrew its relevant objections.

Fifth, the individual consumers are receiving adequate compensation. They are receiving an estimated $ 8.1 million in the aggregate which, based on the estimated number of claims filed, will result in each claiming consumer receiving approximately 34 cents for every dollar spent on Remeron. Discounting for litigation risk, cost, and delay, as discussed in Part I and Part II(C)(4), this Court cannot find that such a recovery is inadequate.

Sixth, class members from states whose antitrust laws do not provide for the recovery of charges to indirect purchasers should still receive compensation if the parties agreed to it. An important part of a settlement like this one is that Defendants achieve "total peace," thus all potential plaintiffs must be compensated in order to preclude future litigation attempts and allow such a settlement to consummate. See In re Chicken Antitrust Litig., 669 F.2d 228, 238 (5th Cir. 1982). Furthermore, Plaintiffs are being compensated not just for state antitrust law violations but also for the common law claim of unjust enrichment. These two objectors, both represented by Stephen Tsai, provide no legal authority for their position [*61] nor do they at all consider that the Settlement Fund would likely have been much smaller if end-payors from certain states were barred from compensation (assuming the settlement would still have been consummated at all). The objection is without merit.

c. The Stage of the Proceedings and the Amount of Discovery Completed

HN29 [↑] In examining the stage of the litigation at which a settlement was reached, the proper question is "whether counsel had an adequate appreciation of the merits of the case before negotiating." Warfarin Sodium, 391 F.3d at 537. Under this standard, End-Payor Plaintiffs and the Plaintiff States were clearly in a position to make the necessary risk assessments in the context of settlement negotiations. As discussed in Part I, End-Payor Plaintiffs conducted an extensive economic and factual investigation, including review hundreds of thousands of pages of documents and data produced by Defendants and third parties, taking depositions of many current or former employees of the Defendants, and consultation with counsel for the Direct Purchasers, counsel for the Generic Manufacturers, the State Attorneys General, and others.

The Office of the Attorney General [*62] of Texas also began an investigation into Defendants' alleged Remeron monopoly maintenance practices in March 2003, and a multi-state working group was formed in July 2003 with several other State Attorneys General to pursue that investigation. The investigation included issuance of Civil Investigative Demands to Defendants and third parties, and review of documents produced. In cooperation with the Federal Trade Commission, the Plaintiff States conducted interviews of experts, potential experts, and potential witnesses. The Plaintiff States reviewed and analyzed thousands of documents from the Defendants' voluminous production, and read numerous deposition and hearing transcripts.

HN30 [↑] "The pursuit of early settlement is a tactic that merits encouragement; it is entirely appropriate to reward expeditious and efficient resolution of disputes." In re Vitamins Antitrust Litig., 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21963, 1999 WL 1335318, at *4 (D.D.C. Nov. 23, 1999). "Early settlements benefit everyone involved in the process and everything that can be done to encourage such settlements, especially in complex class action cases, should be done." In re M.D.C. Holdings Sec. Litigation, 1990 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15488, 1990 WL 454747, at *7 (S.D. Cal. Aug. 30, 1990) [*63]. Given the extensive amount of time devoted to this case, End-Payor Plaintiffs and Plaintiff States have obtained sufficient information to adequately evaluate the merits of their claims.

d & e. The Risks of Establishing Liability and Damages

HN31 [↑] These two factors "survey the potential risks and rewards of proceeding to litigation in order to weigh the likelihood of success against the benefits of an immediate settlement." Warfarin Sodium, 391 F.3d at 537. End-Payor Plaintiffs and the Plaintiff States initially proceeded against Defendants on four theories of antitrust liability: (1) Fraud on the PTO in connection with the prosecution and obtaining of the 099 patent; (2) wrongful listing of the 099 patent in the Orange Book; (3) sham patent litigation against generic competitors based on the 099 patent; and (4) late listing of the 099 patent.

This Court issued a series of rulings that limited the possibility of Plaintiffs achieving ultimate success on the merits. First, regarding the Generic Manufacturers' claims against Organon, the Court on December 3, 2003 dismissed those antitrust claims that were based on the theory that the 099 Patent [*64] was improperly listed in the Orange Book. The Court held that "the then existing statute and regulation, 21 U.S.C. §§ 355\(b\)\(1\) and \(c\)\(2\) and 21 C.F.R. § 314.53\(b\), gave Organon a reasonable basis for listing in the Orange Book." Organon Inc. v. Mylan Pharms., Inc., 293 F. Supp. 2d 453, 459 \(D.N.J. 2003\). The Court also dismissed the allegations that Organon initiated sham patent infringement lawsuits against the Generic Manufacturers, ruling that Organon's infringement theory was reasonable, in large part because of the existence at the time of three district court decisions allowing such claims against Generic Manufacturers.

Although these rulings were made in the litigation involving the Generic Manufacturers, this Court applied those rulings to the Direct Purchaser litigation (and, by inference, to this litigation) under the doctrine of collateral estoppel or the doctrine of law of the case. Walgreen Co. v. Organon, Inc. \(In re Remeron Antitrust Litig.\), 335 F. Supp. 2d 522, 526, n.4 \(D.N.J. 2004\). This Court also dismissed the Direct Purchasers' antitrust claims based on fraud on the PTO in that Opinion.

As a result of [*65] these rulings, the late listing claim is, for practical purposes, the only remaining claim in End-Payor Plaintiffs' and the Plaintiff States' case.<sup>11</sup> Without this settlement, this final claim would need to survive summary judgment, where the definition of the relevant antitrust market would be the dominant threshold issue. In the Direct Purchaser case, this Court denied the Direct Purchaser class's motion for summary judgment regarding their proposed antitrust market definition and whether the Defendants had monopoly power in that market. In re Remeron Direct Purchaser Antitrust Litig., 367 F.Supp.2d 675 \(D.N.J. 2005\). This Court held that the "direct evidence" the plaintiffs put forth was, on its own, insufficient to establish monopoly power. Thus, unless End-Payor Plaintiffs could perhaps put forth more convincing direct evidence than that of the Direct Purchaser plaintiffs, End-Payor Plaintiffs would need to use the traditional market definition approach in order to demonstrate monopoly power, thus increasing the risk of losing of merits and significantly increasing the amount of discovery and expert analysis needed.

[*66] Finally, trial itself would be risky to Plaintiffs on their one surviving claim. See e.g., In re Brand Name Prescription Drugs Antitrust Litig., 186 F.3d 781, 785 \(7th Cir. 1999\) (plaintiff class suffered directed verdict after eight weeks of trial); United States Football League v. Nat'l Football League, 644 F.Supp. 1040 \(S.D. N.Y. 1986\), aff'd, 842 F.2d 1335 \(2d Cir. 1988\) (antitrust jury awarded $ 1.00 in nominal damages to successful plaintiffs). These risks of proving liability and damages weigh in favor of approving this settlement.

f. Risks of Maintaining Class Action Status Through Trial

HN32 [↑] "Because the prospects for obtaining certification have a great impact on the range of recovery one can expect to reap from the [class] action, this factor measures the likelihood of obtaining and keeping a class certification if the action were to proceed to trial." Warfarin Sodium, 391 F.3d at 537 (internal quotes and citation omitted). The End-Payor Plaintiffs moved for class certification on October 27, 2003. As a result of the settlement discussions that began shortly thereafter, the Defendants' response to the class [*67] certification motion was extended to April 12, 2004. The Defendants never filed their response, as the settlement had been tentatively reached by the time their response was due. Consequently, the record does not reflect vigorous opposition, but class certification throughout trial is not guaranteed. This factor neither favors nor disfavors settlement.

g. Defendants' Ability to Withstand a Greater Judgment

The parties do not contend that Defendants could not withstand a larger judgment. However, HN33 [↑] many settlements have been approved where a settling defendant has had the ability to pay greater amounts. See, e.g., Warfarin Sodium, 391 F.3d at 538 ("The fact that DuPont could afford to pay more does not mean that it is obligated to pay any more than what the . . . class members are entitled to under the theories of liability that existed at the time the settlement was reached."); Young Soon Oh v. AT & T Corp., 225 F.R.D. 142, 150-51 \(D.N.J. 2004\); In re Linerboard Antitrust Litig., 321 F. Supp. 2d 619, 632 \(E.D. Pa. 2004\); Erie County Retirees Assoc. v. County of Erie,

---

<sup>11</sup> To the extent End-Payor Plaintiffs and the Plaintiff States would advance an "overall scheme" claim, finding such a scheme would likely be predicated upon proving the late listing claim.

Pennsylvania, 192 F. Supp. 2d 369, 376 \(W.D. Pa. 2002\); [\[\*68\] Lazy Oil Co. v. Witco Corp., 95 F. Supp. 2d 290, 318 \(W.D. Pa. 1997\)](#). This factor does not favor nor disfavor settlement.

h & i. The range of reasonableness of the settlement fund in light of the best possible recovery and all the attendant risks of litigation.

HN34 [↑] A court evaluating a proposed class action settlement should also consider "whether the settlement represents a good value for a weak case or a poor value for a strong case." Warfarin Sodium, 391 F.3d at 538; Girsh, 521 F.2d at 157 (court must examine the range of reasonableness of the settlement fund to a possible recovery in light of all the attendant risks of litigation); see also Hammon v. Barry, 752 F. Supp. 1087, 1095 \(D.D.C. 1990\) (court must "evaluate the strengths and weaknesses of class members' claims within the framework of their likelihood of establishing liability and damages at trial"). In the process, however, a court must "avoid deciding or trying to decide the likely outcome of a trial on the merits." In re National Student Marketing Litigation, 68 F.R.D. 151, 155 \(D.D.C. 1974\).

Continued litigation of this lawsuit would require further [\[\*69\]](#) decisions by the Court on (a) End-Payor Plaintiffs' pending class certification motion, (b) Defendants' pending motion to dismiss the End-Payor Plaintiffs' Amended Consolidated Complaint, (c) future summary judgment motions, and (d) at trial.

(i) Estimated Damages

On the basis of estimates by End-Payor Plaintiffs' expert economists, the maximum antitrust single damages totaled $ 109,704,738.00. Economists retained by the Plaintiff States reached a similar estimate of antitrust single damages for settlement purposes. These estimates likely overstate the amount of damages that would be available to Plaintiffs absent this settlement, because they were compiled before the Court issued its decisions that effectively limited End-Payor Plaintiffs' and Plaintiff States' claims to only a late listing claim. This claim has a shorter period of antitrust injury than some of the others.

(ii) Comparison of the Settlement Amount to Estimated Damages and Weighed Against the Risks of Non-Recovery

In order HN35 [↑] to evaluate the propriety of an antitrust class action settlement's monetary component, a court should compare the settlement recovery to the estimated single damages. In re Ampicillin Antitrust Litigation, 82 F.R.D. 652, 654 \(D.D.C. 1979\) [\[\*70\]](#) (citing Detroit v. Grinnell Corp., 495 F.2d 448 \(2d Cir. 1974\)). Although in certain circumstances a plaintiff class may recover treble damages if it prevails at trial, that result is far from certain. Moreover, in the present case, End-Payor Plaintiffs and Plaintiff States represent consumers pursuant to state laws that provide for varying levels of recovery -- some provide only for recovery of equitable relief, and many do not provide for recovery of treble damages.

As the Second Circuit emphasized in Detroit v. Grinnell Corp, 495 F.2d at 455, an antitrust class action settlement may be approved even if the settlement amounts to a small percentage of the single damages sought, if the settlement is reasonable relative to other factors, such as the risk of no recovery. "In fact there is no reason, at least in theory, why satisfactory settlement could not amount to a hundredth or even a thousandth part of a single percent of the potential recovery." Id.

Relative to maximum estimated damages of $ 109,704,738, the Settlement Consideration represents about one-third of single damages, quite a substantial recovery, especially given that three of the [\[\*71\]](#) initial four theories of antitrust liability can no longer be advanced. This recovery must, of course, be weighed against the substantial risks of continued litigation, including future risks at summary judgment and trial. The Court is satisfied that the settlement agreement accounts for the risks inherent in this complex litigation and provides appropriate relief in light of these risks.

j. Conclusion

Given this Court's analysis, the Court concludes that the nine-factor test utilized by the Third Circuit is satisfied. The settlement is fair, adequate, and reasonable under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23\(e\).

D. Approval Of The Plan of Distribution

HN36 [↑] "As with settlement agreements, courts consider whether distribution plans are fair, reasonable, and adequate." FTC v. Mylan Labs., Inc. (In re Lorazepam & Clorazepate Antitrust Litig.), 205 F.R.D. 369, 381 (D.D.C. 2002); see also In re Vitamins Antitrust Litig., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8931, 2000 WL 1737867, at *6 (D.D.C. Mar. 31, 2000). "In evaluating the formula for apportioning the settlement fund, the Court keeps in mind that district courts enjoy broad supervisory powers over the administration of class [*72] action settlements to allocate the proceeds among the claiming class members equitably." Hammon v. Barry, 752 F. Supp. 1087, 1095 (D.D.C. 1990) (internal quotation marks and citations omitted); accord In re "Agent Orange" Prod. Liability Litig., 818 F.2d 179, 181 (2d Cir. 1987).

At the Court's request, End-Payor Plaintiffs' Co-Lead Counsel and State Liaison Counsel jointly proposed a Plan of Distribution to the Court. As described in the long form notice, the Plan of Distribution is as follows:

32.8% of the Net Settlement Fund will be allocated to consumers ("Consumer Fund"), 16.5% of the Net Settlement Fund will be allocated to state governmental purchasers ("State Fund"), and 50.7% of the Net Settlement Fund will be allocated to Third-Party Payors ("TPP Fund"). Consumers who submit valid claims will receive a pro rata share of the Consumer Fund based on the amount he or she paid for Mirtazapine Products during the Class Period, and on how many other consumers file valid claims, and the amount they paid for Mirtazapine Products during the Class Period. Third-Party Payors who submit valid claims will receive a pro rata share of the [*73] TPP Fund based on the amount paid by that entity for Mirtazapine Products during the Class Period and on how many other Third-Party Payors file valid claims, and the amount they paid for Mirtazapine Products during the Class Period. The maximum payment to any Class Member may be limited to 100% of the amount that Class Member paid for Mirtazapine Products during the Class Period.

This distribution plan was based on Plaintiffs' expert economists' findings, using data produced by defendants and the Plaintiff States, as well as CMS statistics and data from other reliable sources. These calculations were performed in anticipation of the mediation of this case, and they were used in the mediation and submitted to the Court confidentially during the mediation.

Kim Van Winkle, Liaison Counsel for the Plaintiff States, informed the Court by affidavit and orally at the Fairness Hearing that she reviewed the proposed allocation on behalf of consumers and the Plaintiff States and concluded it is fair, reasonable and adequate for consumers and Plaintiff States. Similarly, Kevin Love, counsel for Vista Healthplan Inc., informed the Court that he reviewed the proposed allocation, and also concluded [*74] that it is fair, reasonable and adequate for TPPs. Mr. Love retained and consulted with a separate expert economist for TPPs only in reaching his conclusion.

As the Plan of Distribution appears fair based on the experts' calculations, and all three groups of Plaintiffs including the Attorneys General support it, and the few related objections that have been made were overruled in Part II(C)(4)(b), this Court gives the plan final approval.

E. Plaintiffs' Motion for Award of Attorneys' Fees, Interest, Reimbursement of Expenses, and Incentive Awards.

Class Counsel request that the Court award attorney fees in the amount of $ 7.8 million plus interest accrued on that amount since it has been held in escrow. The $ 7.8 million requested fee represents 23.6% of the $ 33 million Settlement Fund.<sup>12</sup> Class Counsel also request recovery of reasonable litigation expenses and incentive awards to named Plaintiffs.

---

<sup>12</sup> Class Counsel initially indicated they would request up to 25% of the Settlement Fund, as indicated in the notice that was sent to the class. They later reduced that number by providing $ 450,000 more to the class in order to prevent the terms of Rider A from terminating, as described in footnote 6.

[*75] 1. Attorneys' Fees and Interest

This Court first finds that the percentage of fund method is the proper method for compensating Plaintiffs' Counsel in this common fund case. See, e.g., Krell v. Prudential Ins. Co. of Am. (In re Prudential Ins. Co. Am. Sales Practice Litig. Agent Actions), 148 F.3d 283, 333 (3d Cir. 1998) (stating "the percentage of recovery method is generally favored in cases involving a common fund, and is designed to award fees from the fund in a manner that rewards counsel for success and penalizes it for failure"); Welch & Forbes, Inc. v. Cendant Corp. (In re Cendant Corp. Prides Litig.), 243 F.3d 722, 734 (3d Cir. 2001) (stating "the percentage-of-recovery method has long been used in this Circuit in common-fund cases").

HN37 [↑] The Third Circuit set forth with specificity the factors that a court should consider in evaluating such requested attorneys' fees in Gunter v. Ridgewood Energy Corp., 223 F.3d 190, 195 (3d Cir. 2000) (overturning a decision that reduced a requested fee of 25% of the recovered fund to 18%). The Gunter factors "need not be applied in a formulaic way, and their weight may vary on a case-by-case basis." Oh v. AT & T Corp., 225 F.R.D. 142, 146 (D.N.J. 2004) [*76] (citing Gunter, 223 F.3d at 195). The Gunter factors include (a) the size of the fund created and number of persons benefitting from the settlement, (b) the presence/absence of substantial objections to the fee, (c) the skill of Plaintiffs' counsel, (d) complexity and duration of the litigation, (e) the risk of nonpayment, (f) amount of time devoted to the litigation, (g) awards in similar cases. See Gunter, 223 F.3d at 195; In re Aremissoft Corp. Sec. Litig., 210 F.R.D. 109, 129 (D.N.J. 2002).

a. The size of the fund created and the number of persons benefitted by the settlement

Pursuant to the parties' settlement agreement, the class will obtain an immediate and certain benefit of $ 33 million plus accrued interest, less attorneys fees, expenses and incentive award payments as awarded by the Court. Over 65,000 individuals and entities will receive significant financial benefit, without having to go through the time, expense, and risk of continued litigation.

b. The presence or absence of substantial objections to the request for fees

In response to the Notice Plan, only one TPP and seven individual consumers objected to the [*77] payment of the requested attorneys' fees. Of the seven individuals, four are represented by the same counsel and filed near verbatim statements.<sup>13</sup> The presence of a handful of objections does not mean that the requested fee should be denied. Cf. In re Lloyd's American Trust Fund Litig., 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22663, 2002 WL 31663577, *3, *38 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 26, 2002) (approving fee request of 28% of settlement fund, even though 18% of class members filed objections to the settlement on one or more grounds); In re Auto. Refinishing Paint Antitrust Litig., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 29162 (E.D. Pa. Oct. 13, 2004) (stating that, where nearly 60,000 notices sent out and only three objections were received, the vast majority of the class members had no objection, which counseled in favor of a 32% fee award).

The single TPP objection was filed by Health Care Service Corporation. In its papers, it objected that 30 [*78] days after the close of the 45-day Notice Period was an insufficient amount of time to file its objections and that Class Counsel do not deserve their fee request. These objections were made without any legal support and were made in a total of three sentences. The TPP's objections are overruled. 30 days after the close of the 45-day Notice Period is a sufficient amount of time to forge an objection, as discussed in Part II(C)(4)(b). Further, Plaintiffs' Counsel did provide support in the record for their time spent litigating case and their contribution to the litigation process has been explained throughout this Opinion.

Objector Nadine Street initially objected that the (a) distribution to Plaintiffs' Counsel should be reduced to 15%, and that (b) Ms. Street did not have sufficient information to further support its objection because the deadline for filing objections coincided with Plaintiffs' deadline for filing its motion for attorneys' fees. As a result, at the Fairness Hearing, the Court granted an extension of time to file objections regarding attorneys' fees so that End-Payor Plaintiffs' brief in support of attorneys' fees could be more fully considered by objectors.

<sup>13</sup> These are the objections of Dot K. Kensigner, William L. Bedford III, Susan Ruth Hall, and Robert L. Kensinger, represented by Stephen Tsai.

Only [*79] Ms. Street took this opportunity, filing a second objection which further explained her claim that only a 15% distribution to Plaintiffs' Counsel was warranted. The bases were essentially that several law firms were not necessary to litigate Plaintiffs' claims and that Plaintiffs' papers in favor of their fee request were deficient. Based on the complexity of this case as explained in Part I and Part II(C)(4), and based on the supporting documentation in favor of granting Plaintiffs' attorney fees request, this Court finds Ms. Streets's objections to be without merit.<sup>14</sup>

[*80] The nearly identical objections of Dot K. Kensinger, William L. Bedford III, Susan Ruth Hall, and Robert L. Kensinger claimed that Class Counsel should not be allowed a percentage of the $ 33 million Settlement Fund that was created but rather such fund should first be discounted by the 16.5% portion going to the State Attorneys General. The objections state that the State Attorneys General "are already being paid $ 1 million in fees for their recovery of the 16.5% that is being paid to the states."

The Court understands the thrust of the objection; however, Plaintiffs' Counsel were largely responsible for creating a $ 35 million benefit for the class ($ 33 million Settlement Fund and $ 2 million Notice Fund). Class Counsel took the lead in creating that fund for the states. The States Attorneys General have not objected to Class Counsel's fees and have endorsed the settlement. The objection is without merit.

The remaining objectors are Rhonda Marcus and Robert Geha. Both of them take issue with the percentage of recovery counsel requests but provide little substantiation of why the percentage is excessive. In light of the consideration of the below factors that consider Plaintiffs' [*81] Counsel fee award, these two objections are also without merit. HN38↑ The courts do not hesitate to grant attorneys' fees despite the presence of objections when the rationale for awarding fees outweighs the objections. See e.g., Nichols v. Smithkline Beecham Corp., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7061, 2005 WL 950616, at *21 (E.D. Pa. Apr. 22, 2005) (awarding 30% fee despite six substantive objections to settlement, three of which mentioned attorneys' fees); Oh, 225 F.R.D. at 152 (awarding fee despite three objections); In re Rite Aid Corp. Sec. Litig., 396 F.3d 294, 305 (3d Cir. 2005) (affirming district court's finding that only two objections weighed in favor of awarding fee); Varacallo, 226 F.R.D. at 251 (awarding fee despite almost 50 objections in large class case).

HN39↑ The absence of meaningful class member objection to the proposed fee ordinarily supports the reasonableness of the request. See In re Rite Aid Corp. Secs. Litig., 146 F. Supp. 2d 706, 735 (E.D. Pa. 2001); In re Orthopedic Bone Screw Prods. Liab. Litig., 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15980, 2000 WL 1622741, at *6 (E.D. Pa. 2000). Further, a working group of State Attorneys General, who worked alongside Class Counsel, [*82] have concluded that the proposed settlement terms, including Class Counsel's request for attorneys' fees, is fair and appropriate.

c. The skill of Plaintiffs' counsel

This settlement was achieved by Class Counsel who include some of the preeminent antitrust firms in the country with decades of experience in prosecuting and trying complex actions, as described in Part II(A)(1)(d). Class Counsel have considerable experience in FDA regulatory matters through other generic drug litigations. The settlement result achieved is a reflection of counsel's skill and expertise. See In re Warfarin Sodium Antitrust Litig., 212 F.R.D. 231, 261 (D. Del. 2002) (class counsel "showed their effectiveness through the favorable cash settlement they were able to obtain"); see also In re Ikon Office Solutions, Inc. Sec. Litig., 194 F.R.D. 166, 194 (E.D. Pa. 2000) (awarding 30% fee and stating "the most significant factor in this case is the quality of representation, as measured by the quality of the result achieved, the difficulties faced, the speed and efficiency of the recovery, the standing, experience and expertise of the counsel, the skill and professionalism with [*83] which counsel prosecuted the case and the performance and quality of opposing counsel").

---

<sup>14</sup> Ms. Street also objected to the agreement between the litigating parties and five TPPs that initially opted out of the settlement which stated that, inter alia, Defendants would advance up to $ 500,000 if they rescinded their notices of exclusion. By Order dated June 24, 2005, this Court rejected that part of the agreement, and the five TPPs were afforded absolutely no special treatment in exchange for returning to the class. Thus, Ms. Street's objection as to this point had been resolved before the objection was filed. See also supra notes 6 and 9 and accompanying text.

d. The complexity and duration of the litigation

"As to the complexity of the case, an antitrust class action is arguably the most complex action to prosecute." In re Linerboard Antitrust Litig., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10532, 2004 WL 1221350, at *10 (E.D. Pa. June 2, 2004) (quoting In re Motorsports Merchandise Antitrust Litig., 112 F. Supp. 2d 1329, 1337 (N.D. Ga. 2000)). This matter is extremely complicated, involving the patent, regulatory and antitrust laws, including interpretation of complex provisions of the Hatch Waxman Act, as discussed throughout this Opinion.

The discovery process in this case was difficult. Class Counsel (i) reviewed over 800,000 million documents, (ii) for a time, held regular lengthy conference calls with Defendants that resulted in contentious debate and multiple motions to compel, which were briefed and argued before the Court, and (iii) participated in over fifty depositions, most of which were technical and complicated covering subjects such as Orange Book listing protocol and the science relating to the chemical composition of mirtazapine products.

[*84] Further, HN40[] the circumstances surrounding a difficult settlement increase the complexity of a case. Cf. Reinhart v. Lucent Techs., Inc. (In re Lucent Techs., Inc., Sec. Litig.), 327 F. Supp. 2d 426, 434 (D.N.J. 2004). Here, they were lengthy and difficult. Class Counsel coordinated the settlement on behalf of End-Payor Plaintiffs and among 56 states and territories. Class Counsel also dealt with the negotiation of opt-out members. Class Counsel's ability to successfully navigate these hurdles enabled the settlement to come to fruition.

e. The risk of nonpayment

The instant case was presented with significant obstacles since its filing. If the settlement is not consummated, class members may very well receive nothing. End-Payor Plaintiffs and the Plaintiff States proceeded against Defendants on four theories of liability: (1) Fraud on the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office ("PTO") in connection with the prosecution and obtaining of the 099 patent; (2) wrongful listing of the 099 patent in the Orange Book; (3) sham patent litigation against generic competitors based on the 099 patent; and (4) late listing of the 099 patent. As described in Part II(C)(4), three of these claims face dismissal by [*85] this Court due to dismissals of such claims in the Generic Manufacturer and Direct Purchaser cases. The Plaintiffs would most likely have been left with their late listing claim and would still have to defeat summary judgment and win at trial. Accordingly, risk of non-payment in this case weigh heavily in favor of approving the requested fee.

f. The amount of time devoted to the litigation

Plaintiffs' counsel have spent over 12,000 combined hours in prosecuting this case on behalf of the class. The complexity of this action required a significant amount of work by a number of attorneys. Class Counsel performed investigations, filed complaints, fought motions to dismiss, filed briefing in support of class certification, participated in extensive and contentious discovery including the review of hundreds of thousands of documents and the conduct of dozens of depositions. Class Counsel's "efforts in posturing this case for trial . . . played a role in spurring the settlement, [and] produced a substantial payout to the class." In re Newbridge Networks Sec. Litig., 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23238, *11 (D.D.C. Oct. 22, 1998).

Moreover, counsel worked for the class to finalize [*86] the settlement, to oversee claims administration, and will have to work on any future appellate issues. Work was allocated in this case between several law firms.

g. Awards in similar cases

HN41[] In comparing the award in this action with amounts awarded in similar actions, a court's analysis is two-pronged. First, the court compares the actual award requested to other awards in comparable settlements. Second, the court ensures that the award is in line with what an attorney would have received if the fee was negotiated on the open market.

(i) The fee requested here is similar or lower to fees awarded in comparable settlements

HN42 [↑] "A district court may not rely on a formulaic application of the appropriate range in awarding fees but must consider the relevant circumstances of the particular case." Welch & Forbes, Inc. v. Cendant Corp. (In re Cendant Corp. Prides Litig.), 243 F.3d 722, 736 (3d Cir. 2001). A comparison of awards in similar cases is only a factor in determining the appropriateness of a fee award. See Gunter, 223 F.3d at 195. In considering this factor, the Court notes the survey of fee awards that have occurred in similar cases. See, e.g., In re Rite Aid Corp. Sec. Litig., 396 F.3d 294, 306-07 (3d Cir. 2005) [*87] (review of 289 settlements demonstrates "average attorney's fees percentage [of] 31.71%" with a median value that "turns out to be one-third"); Cullen v. Whitman Medical Corp., 197 F.R.D. 136, 150 (E.D. Pa. 2000) ("the award of one-third of the fund for attorneys' fees is consistent with fee awards in a number of recent decisions within this district"); Varacallo v. Mass. Mut. Life. Ins. Co., 226 F.R.D. 207, 249 (D.N.J. 2005) ("Many courts, including several in the Third Circuit, have considered 25% to be the standard "benchmark" figure for attorney fee awards in class action lawsuits, with adjustments up or down for significant case-specific factors")); In re Linerboard Antitrust Litig., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10532, 2004 WL 1221350 at *14 ("The above figures are in accord with a recent Federal Judicial Center study that found that in federal class actions generally median attorney fee awards were in the range of 27 to 30 percent.").

HN43 [↑] Courts within the Third Circuit often award fees of 25% to 33% of the recovery. See, e.g., In re Linerboard Antitrust Litig., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10532, 2004 WL 1221350 (E.D. Pa. 2004) (approving 30% fee of a $ 202 million settlement in [*88] an antitrust class action); Nichols v. SmithKline Beecham Corp., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7061, 2005 WL 950616 (E.D. Pa. 2005) (approving 30% fee of the $ 65 million settlement in similar pharmaceutical antitrust action); In re ATI Technologies Inc. Sec. Litig., 2003 U. S. Dist. LEXIS 7062 (E.D. Pa. Apr. 28, 2003) (awarding 30% of fund); In re Cell Pathways, Inc., 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18359 (E.D. Pa. Sept. 24, 2002) ("A thirty percent fee is very comparable to awards in similar cases, providing further support for approval of the fee petition"); Blackman v. O'Brien Envtl. Energy, Inc., 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7160 (E.D. Pa. May 11, 1999) (35% fee awarded). The percentage fee requested in this case (23.6% of the fund) is consistent with other cases.

Moreover, Class Counsel's fee request compares favorably to fees awarded in similar pharmaceutical antitrust actions. See House v. GlaxoSmithKline PLC, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 33711, No. 2:02cv442 (E.D. Va. Jan. 10, 2005) (awarding a fee of 25% of the $ 29 million indirect purchaser [*89] settlement fund); In re Relafen Antitrust Litig., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 28801, Master File No. 01-12239-WGY, Order and Final Judgment (D. Mass. April 9, 2004) (awarding fees of 33 1/3% of $ 175 million of settlement fund).

(ii) The fee requested here is consistent with a privately negotiated contingent fee in the marketplace

HN44 [↑] "When deciding on appropriate fee levels in common-fund cases, courts must do their best to award counsel the market price for legal services, in light of the risk of nonpayment and the normal rate of compensation in the market at the time." In re Synthroid Marketing Litig., 264 F.3d 712, 718 (7th Cir. 2001). "The object . . . is to give the lawyer what he would have gotten in the way of a fee in an arm's length negotiation." In re Continental Illinois Sec. Litig., 962 F.2d 566, 572 (7th Cir. 1992).

Consequently, courts should look to the private market when assessing the reasonableness of the percentage fee. See In re RJR Nabisco Sec. Litig., 1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12702, MDL No. 818, 1992 WL 210138, *7 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 24, 1992) ("What should govern [fee] awards is . . . what the market pays in similar cases"). HN45 [↑] A one-third contingency fee is generally standard [*90] in individual cases. See, e.g., In re Copley Pharm., Inc., 1 F. Supp. 2d 1407, 1412 (D. Wyo. 1998); see also In re Aetna Sec. Litig., 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 68 (E.D. Pa. Jan. 4, 2001) ("thirty percent is in line with what is routinely privately negotiated in contingency fee tort litigation"). The requested fee award of 23.6% is below that general standard.

h. Lodestar Cross-check

HN46 [↑] A lodestar cross-check is not a Gunter factor but is a "suggested practice." Welch & Forbes, Inc. v. Cendant Corp. (In re Cendant Corp. Prides Litig.), 243 F.3d at 735 (3d Cir. 2001). When performing the lodestar cross-check, the Third Circuit has recognized that "multiples ranging from one to four are frequently awarded in common fund cases when the lodestar method is applied." Krell v. Prudential Ins. Co. of Am. \(In re Prudential Ins. Co. Am. Sales Practice Litig. Agent Actions\), 148 F.3d at 341 (quoting 3 Herbert Newberg & Albert Conte, Newberg on Class Actions, § 14.03 at 14-5 (3d ed. 1992)). "The district courts may rely on summaries submitted by the attorneys and need not review actual billing records." In re Rite Aid Corp. Sec. Litig., 396 F.3d at 306-07 (footnote omitted).

The record demonstrates that Class [*91] Counsel's lodestar in this case is $ 4,506,294.25, resulting in a multiplier of 1.73. An examination of recently approved multipliers reveals that the multiplier requested here is on the low end of the spectrum. See, e.g., Nichols v. SmithKline Beecham Corp., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7061, 2005 WL 950616, \*24 \(E.D. Pa. Apr. 22, 2005\) (approving multiplier of 3.15); In re Linerboard Antitrust Litig., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10532, 2004 WL 1221350, \*4 \(E.D. Pa. June 2, 2004\) (approving a 2.66 multiplier); Weiss v. Mercedes-Benz of N. Am., Inc., 899 F. Supp. 1297, 1304 \(D.N.J.\), aff'd, 66 F.3d 314 \(3d Cir. 1995\) (approving a 9.3 multiplier); In re Rite Aid Corp. Secs. Litig., 146 F. Supp. 2d 706, 736 \(E.D. Pa. 2001\) (multiple of over 6). This lodestar cross check corroborates the result of the percentage of fund method.

i. Conclusion

Taking into consideration the above factors, this Court awards Plaintiffs' Counsel $ 7.8 million of the Settlement Fund, plus 23.6% of the accrued interest on the Settlement Fund.

2. Reimbursement of Reasonable Expenses

In addition to their request for Attorneys' fees, Plaintiffs' Counsel seek reimbursement of $ 494,683.73 in [*92] expenses. HN47 [↑] "Counsel in common fund cases is entitled to reimbursement of expenses that were adequately documented and reasonably and appropriately incurred in the prosecution of the case." In re Cendant Corp., 232 F. Supp. 2d 327, 343 \(D.N.J. 2002\) (quoting In re Safety Components Int'l, Inc., 166 F. Supp. 2d 72, 104 \(D.N.J. 2001\); Abrams v. Lightolier, Inc., 50 F.3d 1204, 1225 \(3d Cir. 1995\)).

Upon review of the affidavits submitted in support of this request, the Court finds the requested amount to be fair and reasonable. Plaintiffs' Counsel's expenses reflect costs expended for purposes of prosecuting this litigation, including substantial fees for experts; substantial costs associated with creating and maintaining an electronic document database; travel and lodging expenses; copying costs; and the costs of deposition transcripts. Reimbursement of similar expenses is routinely permitted. See e.g., Oh v. AT & T Corp., 225 F.R.D. 142, 154 \(D.N.J. 2004\) (finding the following expenses to be reasonable: "(1) travel and lodging, (2) local meetings and transportation, (3) depositions, (4) photocopies, (5) messengers and [*93] express services, (6) telephone and fax, (7) Lexis/Westlaw legal research, (8) filing, (10) postage, (11) the cost of hiring a mediator, and (12) NJ Client Protection Fund relating to pro hac vice").

3. Incentive Awards to Named Plaintiffs

Finally, Plaintiffs' Counsel request the approval of $ 75,000 in incentive awards to the five Class Representatives. They seek $ 30,000 for each of the two TPPs and $ 5,000 for each of three individual consumers. "Like the attorneys in this case, the class representatives have conferred benefits on all other class members and they deserve to be compensated accordingly." In re Linerboard Antitrust Litig., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10532, 2004 WL 1221350 at \*18 (citation omitted). In the instant action, the Class Representatives, spent a significant amount of their own time and expense litigating these cases for the benefit of the absent members of the settlement class, and as is recognized by a multitude of courts, their efforts should not go unrecognized. See e.g., FTC v. Mylan Labs., Inc. \(In re Lorazepam & Clorazepate Antitrust Litig.\), 205 F.R.D. 369, 400 \(D.D.C. 2002\) ("Incentive awards are not uncommon in class action litigation and particularly where . . . [*94] . a common fund has been created for the benefit of the entire class. . . . In fact, courts routinely approve incentive awards to compensate named plaintiffs for the services they provided and the risks they incurred during the course of the class action litigation") (internal quotations and citation omitted).

In the detailed notice sent to Class members, Class Counsel indicated they would seek incentive awards in an amount not to exceed $ 100,000.00. No class members objected. The amounts requested are similar to amounts awarded in similar settlements. See e.g., *Nichols, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7061, 2005 WL 950616 at \*24* (approving $ 5,000 to each third-party payor named plaintiff, $ 2,500 to each consumer named plaintiff); *In re Linerboard Antitrust Litig., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10532, 2004 WL 1221350, \*18 \(E.D. Pa. 2004\)* (approving $ 25,000 to each representative of the classes). The named Plaintiffs complied with all reasonable demands and provided significant assistance to counsel in the prosecution of this case. The requested incentive awards are both appropriate and reasonable.

III. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, (a) End-Payor Plaintiffs' and Plaintiff States' motion for final [*95] approval of settlement, and (b) Class Counsel for End-Payor Plaintiffs' motion for attorneys' fees of $ 7.8 million (plus accrued interest), litigation expenses, and incentive award to Class Representatives are granted.

September 13, 2005

Faith S. Hochberg

Hon. Faith S. Hochberg, U.S.D.J.

---

End of Document

Harrison Aire, Inc. v. Aerostar Int'l

United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit

March 7, 2005, Argued ; September 16, 2005, Filed

Nos. 04-2904 & 04-3052

Reporter

423 F.3d 374 *; 2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 19903 **; 2005-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P74,930

HARRISON AIRE, INC., Appellant in No. 04-2904, v. AEROSTAR INTERNATIONAL, INC.; RAVEN INDUSTRIES, INC., Appellants in No. 04-3052.

Subsequent History: US Supreme Court certiorari denied by Harrison Aire v. Aerostar Int'l, 2006 U.S. LEXIS 2263 \(U.S., Mar. 20, 2006\)

Prior History: [\[\*\*1\]](#) On Appeal from the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania. D.C. Civil Action No. 02-cv-01258. (Honorable Michael M. Bayson).

Harrison Aire, Inc. v. Aerostar Int'l, Inc., 316 F. Supp. 2d 186, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8431 \(E.D. Pa., 2004\)

Core Terms

---

fabric, aftermarket, balloon, Aire, replacement, customers, monopoly power, pricing, antitrust, summary judgment, manufacturers, manual, monopolization, lifecycle, consumers, costs, supracompetitive, competitors, repair, relevant market, third-party, barriers, ride, maintenance manual, replacement part, anti trust law, hot air, allegations, monopolist, purchasing

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

Civil Procedure > ... > Jurisdiction > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Appellate Review > Standards of Review

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Appellate Jurisdiction > Final Judgment Rule

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > General Overview

HN1  Standards of Review, De Novo Review

The appellate court's summary judgment standard of review is plenary. The appellate court draws all reasonable inferences in favor of the non-moving party.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Attempts to Monopolize > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Summary Judgment > Evidentiary Considerations

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Opposing Materials > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

**HN2** Monopolies & Monopolization, Attempts to Monopolize

Antitrust law limits the range of permissible inferences that can be drawn from ambiguous evidence. To avoid deterring pro-competitive behavior, certain inferences may not be drawn from circumstantial evidence in an antitrust case. To survive a motion for summary judgment, an antitrust plaintiff must produce economically plausible evidence supporting the elements of its claim. If the plaintiff's theory is economically senseless, no reasonable jury could find in its favor, and summary judgment should be granted.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Evidence > Admissibility > Circumstantial & Direct Evidence

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Monopoly Power

**HN3** Antitrust & Trade Law, Sherman Act

Under § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, monopolization consists of: (1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident. Monopoly power is defined as the power to control prices or exclude competition. More precisely, it is the power to charge a price higher than the competitive price without inducing so rapid and great an expansion of output from competing firms as to make the supracompetitive price untenable. Monopoly power can be demonstrated with either direct evidence of supracompetitive pricing and high barriers to entry or with structural evidence of a monopolized market. Because direct proof is only rarely available, courts more typically examine market structure in search of circumstantial evidence of monopoly power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

HN4 [down arrow] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

Competitive markets are characterized by both price and quality competition, and a firm's comparatively high price may simply reflect a superior product. Therefore, when dealing with a heterogeneous product or service, a reasonable finder of fact cannot infer monopoly power just from higher prices.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Evidence > Inferences & Presumptions > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

HN5 [down arrow] Regulated Practices, Market Definition

In a typical case under § 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 2, monopoly power is inferred from a firm's possession of a dominant share of a relevant market that is protected by entry barriers. Plaintiffs relying on market share as a proxy for monopoly power must plead and produce evidence of a relevant product market, of the alleged monopolist's dominant share of that market, and of high barriers to entry. Additional factors are relevant in the aftermarket context. Aftermarket monopolization cases require a more comprehensive analysis because market share data standing alone is not necessarily a reliable proxy for monopoly power.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN6 [down arrow] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

In broad terms, the United States Supreme Court's decision in Kodak stands for the proposition that market reality is the touchstone of antitrust analysis. Where the plaintiff comes forward with concrete evidence of a monopolized market, the defendant bears a substantial burden in showing that it is entitled to summary judgment. On the more specific issue of aftermarket monopolization, Kodak held that primary market competition does not necessarily preclude monopoly power in the relevant aftermarket where a unilateral policy change targets "locked-in" customers. But Kodak does not transform every firm with a dominant share of the relevant aftermarket into a monopolist. To create a triable question of aftermarket monopoly power, the plaintiff must produce hard evidence dissociating the competitive situation in the aftermarket from activities occurring in the primary market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Market Definition > Relevant Market > Product Market Definition

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Market Definition > Relevant Market

HN7 [down arrow] Monopolies & Monopolization, Actual Monopolization

In considering the effect of primary market competition on aftermarket behavior, courts address at the outset the relevant market definition. Some courts have viewed the primary and aftermarket as comprising a single relevant product market. But this may not always be the case. Relevant market definition is a function of reasonably available product substitutes. Products are included in a single relevant market when they have the ability--actual or potential--to take significant amounts of business away from each other. The proper inquiry focuses on the existence of monopoly power, that is, whether competition in the equipment market will significantly restrain power in the service and parts market. One important consideration is whether a unilateral change in aftermarket policy exploits locked-in customers. However, an "aftermarket policy change" is not the sine qua non of a Kodak claim. An aftermarket policy change is an important consideration, but only one of several relevant factors.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Tying Arrangements > General Overview

HN8 Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Tying Arrangements

Tying is defined as selling one good (the tying product) on the condition that the buyer also purchase another, separate good (the tied product). The antitrust concern over tying arrangements is limited to those situations in which the seller can exploit its power in the market for the tying product to force buyers to purchase the tied product when they otherwise would not. Tying requires "appreciable economic power" in the tying product market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

HN9 Private Actions, Remedies

In Brunswick, the United States Supreme Court held that the antitrust laws protect consumers, not competitors, and that antitrust plaintiffs must show a causal connection between the defendant's anti-competitive conduct and injury to consumers. Injury to competitors does not suffice.

Counsel: JOHN K. WESTON, ESQUIRE (ARGUED), JULIE C. PARKER, ESQUIRE, Sacks, Weston, Smolinsky, Albert & Luber, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, Attorneys for Appellant/Cross-Appellee, Harrison Aire, Inc.

JEFFREY A. OSHIN, ESQUIRE (ARGUED), Hardin, Kundla, McKeon, Poletto & Polifroni, Springfield, New Jersey, Attorney for Appellees/Cross-Appellants, Aerostar International, Inc. and Raven Industries, Inc.

Judges: Before: SCIRICA, Chief Judge, ROTH and BECKER, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: SCIRICA

Opinion

---

[*377] OPINION OF THE COURT

SCIRICA, Chief Judge.

In this antitrust action, we address allegations of unlawful monopolization and tying in the aftermarket for replacement hot air balloon fabric. The District Court granted defendants' motion for summary judgment, finding no triable issue of monopoly power in the relevant product market. We will affirm.

I.

Harrison Aire, a hot air balloon ride operator, alleges antitrust violations by Raven Industries and its balloon-manufacturing subsidiary, Aerostar International. Consistent with our standard [**2] of review on summary judgment, we recount the facts in the light most favorable to the non-moving party, appellant Harrison Aire.

Terry Harrison, the sole owner and proprietor of Harrison Aire, is an FAA-licensed pilot and aircraft mechanic. After a twenty-three year career at Eastern Airlines, he retired in 1973 to launch the Harrison Aire enterprise from an airstrip in central New Jersey. The company owns and operates several hot air balloons which it charters for recreational day trips over the New Jersey countryside. Since the mid 1990s, the business has suffered cash-flow problems. Harrison Aire blames its losses, in part, on the prohibitive expense of replacement balloon fabric, which it contends is a result of Raven/Aerostar's monopolization of the relevant balloon fabric aftermarket.

Raven Industries is a diversified manufacturing company based in Sioux Falls, South Dakota. From the 1970s through 1986, it manufactured hot air balloons and replacement balloon fabric. In 1986, Raven [*378] formed Aerostar International as a wholly-owned subsidiary to take over its balloon business. Aerostar International manufactures and sells hot air balloons in a market of at least five competitors [**3] and also produces and sells replacement balloon fabric.

Hot air balloons are regulated from cradle to grave by the Federal Aviation Administration. The FAA certifies balloon design and manufacturing standards, 14 C.F.R. § 21.11-53, requires the manufacturer to provide a maintenance manual along with its aircraft, id. § 21.50, reviews the content of the manual, id. § 31.82, and certifies replacement part designs for airworthiness, id. 21.303. The FAA's "maintenance manual" and "replacement part" regulations bear on this appeal.

Balloon manufacturers are required to provide their customers with a balloon maintenance manual, known as an "ICA" (Instructions for Continued Airworthiness), which sets forth recommended and required maintenance procedures. The manual is in two parts. The first, known as the "FAA accepted" section, establishes manufacturer-recommended but not FAA-required protocols. The second, known as the "Airworthiness Limitation Section," establishes FAA requirements affecting flight safety.

Regulations also govern the manufacture and sale of replacement balloon parts, including replacement fabric. All replacement parts must be "of such a quality" that [**4] the repaired balloon is "at least equal to its original or properly altered condition." 14 C.F.R. § 43.13\(b\). The FAA authorizes third-party manufacturers to sell aftermarket parts, including replacement fabric, provided they first obtain FAA certification that the product is equal to or better than the original. Id. § 21.303.

Replacement fabric extends the service life of a hot air balloon. The top half of the balloon "envelope"--the material encapsulating the hot air--tends to deteriorate more rapidly than the bottom half. By replacing top-half fabric after 300 to 500 hours of use, balloon owners are able to extend the aircraft's service life for an additional 200 to 300 hours. Generally, it is more economical to replace fabric in this manner than to purchase an entirely new envelope. Harrison Aire followed this practice in maintaining its fleet of Raven/Aerostar balloons.

Harrison Aire purchased its first Raven balloon in 1978. The parties' dispute over fabric replacement began shortly thereafter. According to Terry Harrison, Raven advised him that he could not purchase replacement fabric from other manufacturers because installation of third-party [**5] fabric would render the balloon unairworthy. In 1982, Raven revised its balloon maintenance manuals to make this policy explicit, warning Raven balloon owners that "only fabric which has been tested and approved according to Raven factory standards may be used for repair of Raven envelopes. Failure to comply with this requirement constitutes a departure from type design and renders the balloon unairworthy." This language appeared in the FAA-approved, rather than the FAA-required, section of Raven maintenance manuals. Reading the manual in the light most favorable to Harrison Aire, it warned that only Raven-brand fabric should be used in Raven balloons.

Terry Harrison repeatedly complained to Raven, believing its insertion of the "warning" into the balloon manual transformed the fabric policy into an FAA requirement that legally barred him from obtaining cheaper fabric elsewhere. On several occasions between 1982 and 1986, Harrison confronted Raven representatives [*379] about the manual language, but was told that no other aftermarket product was equal to or better than Raven fabric, and that only Raven fabric was consistent with airworthiness standards. Harrison understood this as a representation [**6] that he was required to purchase Raven fabric in order to comply with the FAA's "equal to or better" standard for replacement parts. Harrison Aire contends that from 1978 to 1986, Raven misled the company into believing the purchase of Raven fabric was mandated by law, when in fact it was merely recommended by the manufacturer.

In February 1986, Raven Industries formed Aerostar International to take over its hot air balloon business. Aerostar continued Raven's balloon operation essentially uninterrupted, and became the new focus of Harrison Aire's campaign to purchase fabric from third-party sources. Shortly after Aerostar was incorporated, Harrison registered several complaints with Aerostar about "being forced" to use Raven/Aerostar fabric. Nevertheless, despite its understanding that Aerostar balloons required Aerostar replacement fabric, Harrison Aire purchased a "big ride" Aerostar balloon in 1986 that is the subject of this litigation.

By 1995, Harrison Aire's "big ride" Aerostar balloon required a major fabric replacement. By this time, two other manufacturers had received FAA approval to produce aftermarket fabric for Aerostar balloons. See 14 C.F.R. § 21.303 [**7] (authorizing the manufacture of replacement balloon parts upon receipt of a "Parts Manufacturer Approval" from the FAA). Harrison investigated one of the approved sellers, Custom Nine Designs, but decided against purchasing their fabric because of concerns that it lacked quality. Harrison never contacted the other approved supplier, Head Balloons. Viewing Aerostar-brand fabric as its only option and as prohibitively expensive, Harrison Aire retired the "big ride" balloon in 1996 rather than repairing it.

Harrison eventually realized that installation of third-party fabric was legally permissible. In July 2000, following an administrative proceeding between the FAA and a third-party balloon repair service, an Administrative Law Judge concluded the fabric "warning" found in Aerostar's maintenance manual was not legally binding. In re Braden's Balloons Aloft, Inc., FAA No. CP99SWO037 (July 26, 2000). Harrison contends the Braden's decision provided him notice, for the first time, that his company was not required to purchase Aerostar-brand fabric.

In March 2002, Harrison Aire filed suit in federal court, alleging, inter alia, antitrust injury arising from Raven/Aerostar's [**8] monopolization of the aftermarket for replacement Aerostar balloon fabric and from the unlawful tying of Aerostar-brand fabric to Aerostar balloons. But for Raven/Aerostar's allegedly misleading and exclusionary aftermarket fabric policy, Harrison Aire contends that its "big ride" balloon would have been repaired in 1996 and still operational. The District Court granted summary judgment to defendants, holding they lacked sufficient market power in the relevant product market. Harrison Aire, Inc. v. Aerostar Int'l, Inc., 316 F. Supp. 2d 186 (E.D. Pa. 2004).<sup>1</sup>

[**9] [*380] II.

The District Court had jurisdiction under the federal antitrust laws, 15 U.S.C. § 15 (providing cause of action and treble damage remedy), and 28 U.S.C. § 1331. We have jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1291. HN1↑ Our summary judgment standard of review is plenary. In re Flat Glass Antitrust Litig., 385 F.3d 350, 357 (3d Cir. 2004) (drawing all reasonable inferences in favor of the non-moving party).

Significantly, however, HN2↑ "antitrust law" limits the range of permissible inferences" that can be drawn "from ambiguous evidence." Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 588, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 (1986); see also Monsanto Co. v. Spray-Rite Serv. Corp., 465 U.S. 752, 764, 79 L. Ed. 2d 775, 104 S.

---

<sup>1</sup> Harrison Aire's complaint included both federal antitrust counts and supplemental claims under state law. On May 3, 2004, the District Court granted Raven/Aerostar's motion for summary judgment in part, dismissing the antitrust counts and ordering trial on the state law counts. The parties then stipulated to final judgment with prejudice against Harrison Aire on the surviving claims, in order to facilitate an immediate appeal on the antitrust issues. Accordingly, the state law claims are not at issue and our analysis is confined to the federal antitrust claims.

Ct. 1464 (1984). To avoid deterring pro-competitive behavior, "certain inferences may not be drawn from circumstantial evidence in an antitrust case." In re Flat Glass Antitrust Litig., 385 F.3d at 357 (quoting Intervest, Inc. v. Bloomberg, L.P., 340 F.3d 144, 160 (3d Cir. 2003)).

To survive a motion for summary judgment, an antitrust [**10] plaintiff must produce economically plausible evidence supporting the elements of its claim. See Matsushita, 475 U.S. at 588; Ideal Dairy Farms v. John Labatt, Ltd., 90 F.3d 737, 748-50 (3d Cir. 1996) (applying Matsushita in section 2 action); Zenith Radio Corp. v. Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co., 513 F. Supp. 1100, 1140 (E.D. Pa. 1981) ("It is now settled that summary judgment is appropriate in those antitrust cases where plaintiffs, after having engaged in extensive discovery, fail to produce 'significant probative evidence' in support of the allegations in their complaint.") (citations omitted). "If the plaintiff's theory is economically senseless, no reasonable jury could find in its favor, and summary judgment should be granted." Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Tech. Servs., Inc., 504 U.S. 451, 468-69, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 (1992).

III.

We begin with Harrison Aire's monopolization claim. HN3 [↑] Under section 2 of the Sherman Act, monopolization consists of: "(1) the possession of monopoly power in the relevant market and (2) the willful acquisition or maintenance of that power as distinguished from growth or development [**11] as a consequence of a superior product, business acumen, or historic accident." United States v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 570-71, 16 L. Ed. 2d 778, 86 S. Ct. 1698 (1966); see also 15 U.S.C. § 2; LePage's, Inc. v. 3M, 324 F.3d 141 (3d Cir. 2003) (en banc) (reviewing section 2 case law and explaining the "willful acquisition or maintenance" element).

Monopoly power is defined as "the power to control prices or exclude competition." United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 351 U.S. 377, 391, 100 L. Ed. 1264, 76 S. Ct. 994 (1956). More precisely, it is "the power to charge a price higher than the competitive price without inducing so rapid and great an expansion of output from competing firms as to make the supracompetitive price untenable." Am. Academic Suppliers, Inc. v. Beckley-Cardy, Inc., 922 F.2d 1317, 1319 (7th Cir. 1991); see also United States v. Dentsply Int'l Inc., 399 F.3d 181, 189 (3d Cir. 2005) (emphasizing a monopolist's power "to maintain market share") (emphasis in original) (quoting United States v. Syufy Enters., 903 F.2d 659, 665-66 (9th Cir. 1990)).

[*381] Monopoly [**12] power can be demonstrated with either direct evidence of supracompetitive pricing and high barriers to entry, see Rebel Oil Co. v. Atl. Richfield Co., 51 F.3d 1421, 1434 (9th Cir. 1995), or with structural evidence of a monopolized market. Because "direct proof is only rarely available, courts more typically examine market structure in search of circumstantial evidence of monopoly power." United States v. Microsoft, 346 U.S. App. D.C. 330, 253 F.3d 34, 51 (D.C. Cir. 2001) (en banc) (citations omitted).

A.

Harrison Aire contends Aerostar charged supracompetitive prices for its fabric, based on the uncontested fact that Aerostar's fabric is more expensive than that of its aftermarket competitors. But this alone does not support a reasonable inference of monopoly power. HN4 [↑] Competitive markets are characterized by both price and quality competition, and a firm's comparatively high price may simply reflect a superior product. Blue Cross & Blue Shield United v. Marshfield Clinic, 65 F.3d 1406, 1412 (7th Cir. 1995) ("Generally you must pay more for higher quality."). Therefore, "when dealing with a heterogeneous product or service . [**13] . . . a reasonable finder of fact cannot infer monopoly power just from higher prices." Id. at 1411-12.

Here, the record is clear that balloon fabric is a heterogeneous product. Fabric is sold in various weaves and grades, of differing strength and durability. The record demonstrates that Aerostar fabric is of comparatively high quality. Although Harrison considered purchasing fabric from one of Aerostar's aftermarket competitors, Custom Nine Designs, he rejected the product because Custom Nine "didn't prove to me that it wasn't a bogus part." Furthermore, Custom Nine's president acknowledged that Aerostar's "diamond weave" fabric was a superior aftermarket product to his own. Because it is undisputed that balloon fabric, and particularly Aerostar fabric, is differentiated by composition and quality, Aerostar's comparatively high price does not, by itself, support a reasonable inference of monopoly power.

B.

Turning to Harrison Aire's circumstantial evidence of monopoly power, we note the structural indicators of a monopolized market. HNS ↑ In a typical section 2 case, monopoly power is "inferred from a firm's possession of a dominant share of a relevant market that \*\*14 is protected by entry barriers." Microsoft, 253 F.3d at 51; see also Fineman v. Armstrong World Indus., 980 F.2d 171, 201-03 (3d Cir. 1992) (explaining market share analysis). Plaintiffs relying on market share as a proxy for monopoly power must plead and produce evidence of a relevant product market, of the alleged monopolist's dominant share of that market, and of high barriers to entry. Queen City Pizza, Inc. v. Domino's Pizza, Inc., 124 F.3d 430, 436 \(3d Cir. 1997\) (market definition); Fineman, 980 F.2d at 201-03 (3d Cir. 1992) (market share); Microsoft, 253 F.3d at 82 (barriers to entry).

Additional factors are relevant in the aftermarket context. Aftermarket monopolization cases require a more comprehensive analysis, because market share data standing alone is not necessarily a reliable proxy for monopoly power. SMS Syst. Maint. Servs. Inc. v. Digital Equip. Corp., 188 F.3d 11, 16 \(1st Cir. 1999\). Many firms supply unique and/or proprietary aftermarket parts and services for their primary market products. As a result, they "can be expected to have a very high percentage" \*\*15 share of the relevant aftermarket. Id. But high aftermarket share is not necessarily indicative of monopoly [\[\*382\]](#) power--i.e., the power to charge and maintain a supracompetitive price--because aftermarket behavior generally is disciplined by competition in the primary product market. If the primary market is competitive, a firm exploiting its aftermarket customers ordinarily is engaged in a short-run game--for when buyers evaluate the "lifecycle" cost of the product, the cost of the product over its full service life, they will shop elsewhere. Eventually, the aftermarket "monopolist" lacks customers to exploit. See Parts & Elec. Motors, Inc. v. Sterling Elec., Inc., 866 F.2d 228, 236 (7th Cir. 1988) (Posner, J., dissenting) (describing the exploitation of aftermarket customers as a "suicidal" business practice); SMS, 188 F.3d at 16 ("firms concerned with the long term cannot afford to bite the hands that feed them").

This portrayal is conventional antitrust theory. See 2A Philip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law P 564b, at 322-28 (2d ed. 2002). But as explained in Kodak, it "may not accurately explain the behavior of the primary \*\*16 and derivative markets for complex durable goods" where "significant information and switching costs" sever the usual link between the primary market and the aftermarket. 504 U.S. at 473. Information costs are barriers that prevent primary market consumers from evaluating the lifecycle costs of a product. Id. at 473-74. For primary market competition to discipline aftermarket behavior, consumers require information on, among other things, the expected cost, quality and availability of aftermarket products such as parts and service. Perfect information is not required for the primary market to check the aftermarket. See Jefferson Parish Hosp. Dist. No. 2 v. Hyde, 466 U.S. 2, 27, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2, 104 S. Ct. 1551 \(1984\) (holding, in tying case, that imperfect information does not necessarily "generate the kind of monopoly power that justifies condemnation"); SMS, 188 F.3d at 19 n.3 ("perfect information about the aftermarket is not required"). But sometimes lifecycle pricing information is particularly difficult or impossible for primary market customers to acquire, as in the case of a unilateral change in aftermarket policy targeting "locked \*\*17 in" customers. Kodak involved this type of market failure. See Queen City Pizza, 124 F.3d at 440 ("The Kodak case arose out of concerns about unilateral changes in Kodak's parts and repairs policies.")

Kodak involved a primary market for photocopiers and an aftermarket for Kodak parts and service. The primary market was competitive. But Kodak controlled nearly 100% of the parts aftermarket, and 80% to 95% of the service market. 504 U.S. at 480. Historically, Kodak's customers had been able to obtain copier repair service from independent service organizations that charged "substantially" less than Kodak. 504 U.S. at 457. Later, however, after customers were locked in to Kodak copiers, Kodak changed its aftermarket policy to sell replacement parts only to those customers who also purchased Kodak service or who repaired their own machines. Id. at 458. This policy change led to higher aftermarket prices. Id. at 465. In other words, Kodak used its power in the replacement parts market to "squeeze the independent service providers out of the repair market and to force copier purchasers to obtain service [**18] directly from Kodak, at higher cost." Queen City Pizza, 124 F.3d at 440.

The Supreme Court held the independent service organizations' tying and monopolization claims against Kodak could not be dismissed on summary judgment following truncated discovery. Kodak, 1\*3831 504 U.S. at 486. On the key question of monopoly power in the parts and services aftermarket, the Court cited evidence of (1) supracompetitive pricing, id. at 469; (2) Kodak's dominant share of the relevant aftermarket, id. at 480; (3) significant information costs that prevented lifecycle pricing by primary market customers, id. at 475; and (4) high "switching costs" that served to "lock in" Kodak's aftermarket customers, id. at 477. Together, this evidence supported a reasonable inference of monopoly power in the relevant aftermarket, precluding summary judgment.

HN6 In broad terms, Kodak stands for the proposition that market reality is the touchstone of antitrust analysis. Where the plaintiff comes forward with concrete evidence of a monopolized market, the defendant "bears a substantial burden in showing that it is entitled [**19] to summary judgment." 504 U.S. at 469. On the more specific issue of aftermarket monopolization, Kodak held that primary market competition does not necessarily preclude monopoly power in the relevant aftermarket where a unilateral policy change targets "locked-in" customers.

But Kodak does not transform every firm with a dominant share of the relevant aftermarket into a monopolist. To create a triable question of aftermarket monopoly power, the plaintiff must produce "hard evidence dissociating the competitive situation in the aftermarket from activities occurring in the primary market." SMS, 188 F.3d at 17 \(1st Cir. 1999\).

HN7 In considering the effect of primary market competition on aftermarket behavior, we address at the outset the relevant market definition. Some courts have viewed the primary and aftermarket as comprising a single relevant product market. See id.; PSI Repair Servs., Inc. v. Honeywell, Inc., 104 F.3d 811, 820 \(6th Cir. 1997\). But this may not always be the case. Relevant market definition is a function of reasonably available product substitutes. Du Pont, 351 U.S. at 395 \(1956\). Products [**20] are included in a single relevant market when they "have the ability--actual or potential--to take significant amounts of business away from each other." Allen-Myland, Inc. v. IBM Corp., 33 F.3d 194, 206 \(3d Cir. 1994\) (quoting SmithKline Corp. v. Eli Lilly & Co., 575 F.2d 1056, 1063 \(3d Cir. 1978\)); see also Rothery Storage & Van Co. v. Atlas Van Lines, Inc., 253 U.S. App. D.C. 142, 792 F.2d 210, 218 \(D.C. Cir. 1986\). Under this framework, we believe the relevant market here is that for replacement fabric for Aerostar balloons. The primary balloon market is distinct from the fabric aftermarket because fabric is a complement to, not a substitute for, the primary good. Nevertheless, these complementary products are linked by consumer demand such that competition in the foremarket may discipline behavior in the aftermarket. The proper inquiry, then, focuses on the existence of monopoly power, i.e., "whether competition in the equipment market will significantly restrain power in the service and parts market." Kodak, 504 U.S. at 470 n.15.

One important consideration is whether a unilateral change in aftermarket policy [**21] exploits locked-in customers. Queen City Pizza, 124 F.3d at 440 \(3d Cir. 1997\); SMS, 188 F.3d at 19 \(1st Cir. 1999\); Alcatel USA, Inc. v. DGI Techs., Inc., 166 F.3d 772, 783 \(5th Cir. 1999\); PSI, 104 F.3d at 820 \(6th Cir. 1997\). As the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit has explained: "The Court did not doubt in Kodak that if spare parts had been bundled with Kodak's copiers from the outset, or Kodak had informed customers about its policies before they [*384] bought its machines, purchasers could have shopped around for competitive lifecycle prices. The material dispute that called for a trial was whether the change in policy enabled Kodak to extract supra-competitive prices from customers who had already purchased its machines." Digital Equip. Corp. v. Uniq Digital Tech., Inc., 73 F.3d 756, 763 \(7th Cir. 1996\); accord SMS, 188 F.3d at 17-19 \(1st Cir. 1999\); PSI, 104 F.3d at 820 \(6th Cir. 1997\).

We emphasize, however, that an "aftermarket policy change" is not the sine qua non of a Kodak claim. An aftermarket policy change is an important consideration, [**22] but only one of several relevant factors. As noted, the Kodak plaintiffs came forward with evidence of (1) supracompetitive pricing, (2) Kodak's dominant share of the relevant aftermarket, (3) significant information costs that prevented lifecycle pricing, and (4) high "switching costs" that served to "lock in" Kodak's aftermarket customers.

Here, in contrast, Harrison Aire has failed to meet its burden of dissociating competition in the primary market from conditions in the aftermarket. It is undisputed that the primary balloon market is competitive. And unlike the plaintiffs in Kodak, Harrison Aire has failed to produce evidence of supracompetitive pricing, of dominant aftermarket share, of information costs preventing lifecycle pricing, or of a change in aftermarket policy targeting locked-in customers. Together, these evidentiary failures compel summary judgment for the defendant.

Harrison Aire purchased its first Raven balloon in 1978. From that time on, Terry Harrison believed that Raven required him to use Raven-brand replacement fabric. Harrison repeatedly complained about this policy. From 1982, when Raven first published its allegedly exclusionary "warning" about \*\*23 third-party replacement fabric, and continuing through 1986, when Raven formed Aerostar, Terry Harrison on several occasions confronted Raven representatives about their restrictive fabric policy. Similarly, immediately after Aerostar's incorporation in February, 1986, Harrison registered several complaints about "being forced" to buy Aerostar fabric. Yet knowing Raven/Aerostar's restrictive fabric policy, Harrison Aire entered the competitive primary market in 1986 to purchase the "big ride" Aerostar balloon that is the subject of this lawsuit.

The transparency of Raven/Aerostar's aftermarket fabric policy, and Harrison Aire's undisputed knowledge of it, cuts strongly against an inference of monopoly power. SMS is instructive on this point. Like Harrison Aire, the plaintiffs in SMS produced some evidence of switching costs, 188 F.3d at 20, but failed to come forward with sufficient evidence of supracompetitive pricing, id. at 24, and significant information barriers to lifecycle pricing, id. at 18-19, to survive summary judgment on the issue of monopoly power. In affirming summary judgment for the defendant, the court in SMS [\[\*\*24\]](#) engaged in a comprehensive analysis under the relevant Kodak factors. In particular, SMS emphasized the transparency of the defendant's aftermarket policy, explaining that readily available aftermarket information allows reasonably diligent primary market customers to engage in lifecycle pricing. Id. at 18-19. This, in turn, checks aftermarket monopolization. See id. at 19 ("The transparency of [defendant's] allegedly monopolistic policy represents a salient departure from the Kodak scenario.").

Raven/Aerostar's aftermarket policy was transparent and known to Harrison Aire at all relevant times. Neither information costs nor a unilateral change in aftermarket policy prevented Harrison Aire from shopping for competitive lifecycle balloon [\[\*385\]](#) prices when it purchased the "big ride" balloon at issue in 1986. Furthermore, after full discovery, Harrison Aire has not produced other evidence dissociating competitive conditions in the primary balloon market from conditions in the aftermarket for replacement fabric. The record here is clear that Harrison Aire got precisely the balloon and the aftermarket fabric that it bargained for in the competitive [\[\*\*25\]](#) primary market.

Lacking any evidence of significant information barriers to lifecycle pricing, or any other evidence dissociating competitive conditions in the primary market and the aftermarket, summary judgment is proper on Harrison Aire's monopolization claim.

IV.

Harrison Aire also alleges unlawful tying under section 1. The claim lacks merit. HN8 "Tying is defined as selling one good (the tying product) on the condition that the buyer also purchase another, separate good (the tied product)." Town Sound & Custom Tops, Inc. v. Chrysler Motors Corp., 959 F.2d 468, 475 \(3d Cir. 1992\) (en banc). "The antitrust concern over tying arrangements is limited to those situations in which the seller can exploit its power in the market for the tying product to force buyers to purchase the tied product when they otherwise would not." Queen City Pizza, 124 F.3d at 442-43 (quoting Town Sound, 959 F.2d at 475); see also Microsoft, 253 F.3d at 84. Tying requires "appreciable economic power" in the tying product market. Kodak, 504 U.S. at 464; Brokerage Concepts v. U.S. Healthcare, Inc., 140 F.3d 494, 516-17 \(3d Cir. 1998\). [\[\*\*26\]](#)

Harrison Aire contends Raven/Aerostar unlawfully tied its hot air balloons (the tying product) to its replacement fabric (the tied product), but fails to produce any evidence of appreciable market power in the tying product market. As noted, it is undisputed that the primary market for hot air balloons is competitive. Absent this essential element, we will affirm summary judgment on the tying claim.

V.

As an alternative holding, the District Court concluded Harrison Aire failed to properly allege antitrust injury under Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701, 97 S. Ct. 690 (1977). This was error. HN9 [↑] Brunswick held the antitrust laws protect consumers, not competitors, and that antitrust plaintiffs must show a causal connection between the defendant's anti-competitive conduct and injury to consumers. Id. at 488-89. Injury to competitors does not suffice. Here, Harrison Aire is a consumer of balloon fabric, and it claims antitrust injury in the form of business losses caused by high fabric prices, which in turn allegedly were caused by Raven/Aerostar's exclusionary conduct in the relevant fabric market. This type of injury--prohibitively [**27] high consumer prices resulting from allegedly monopolistic behavior--is the type the antitrust laws are designed to redress. See Town Sound, 959 F.2d at 486 (3d Cir. 1992) (en banc) (explaining antitrust injury); U.S. Gypsum Co. v. Ind. Gas Co., 350 F.3d 623, 626-28 (7th Cir. 2003) (same).

The District Court concluded that "any injuries that Plaintiff suffered would have come from Defendants' misrepresentations, not from any market power, abuse of market power or other anti-competitive conduct." 316 F. Supp. 2d at 224. But these purported misrepresentations are alleged to have had an anticompetitive effect in the aftermarket--namely the exclusion of more efficient competitors. Harrison Aire alleges that Aerostar used misleading [*386] manual language, and the imprimatur of FAA acceptance, to consolidate its position in the fabric aftermarket. This, in turn, allegedly prevented Harrison and consumers like him from purchasing lower-cost fabric from Aerostar's competitors. These allegations satisfy the antitrust injury requirement.

The District Court found antitrust injury lacking because the manual "did not forbid Plaintiff from purchasing other [**28] manufacturers' fabric and that a reasonable investigation on this point by Plaintiff would have disclosed . . . that Plaintiff could buy replacement fabric from anyone who manufactured [it] to the FAA standards." Id. at 217. In other words, the District Court held that no injury to consumers could be shown because no jury could find that Harrison Aire reasonably relied on the manual.

It is true that further investigation by Harrison Aire might have revealed that Aerostar's replacement-fabric instructions were not legally binding. But the record is not clear that Harrison Aire's reliance on the manual was unreasonable. Indeed, it appears that the FAA, like Harrison Aire, viewed Aerostar's manual as restricting the use of non-Aerostar fabric in Aerostar balloons. Not until the Braden's decision in 2000 did the FAA recognize the Aerostar manual as non-binding. Since the FAA itself interpreted Aerostar's manual as restricting the use of third-party fabric, the reasonableness of Harrison Aire's reliance on that manual presents a jury question. A jury could have found that Harrison reasonably believed that Aerostar's manuals prevented him from buying lower-priced [**29] fabric from competitors. Because this alleged exclusion of competitors, to the detriment of consumers, is the sort of harm the antitrust laws are intended to prevent, summary judgment was improper on the issue of antitrust injury. While we hold Harrison Aire's antitrust claims ultimately fail for lack of monopoly/market power in the relevant market, they are not defective for failure to allege antitrust injury.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth, we will affirm the judgment of the District Court.

Pelfresne v. Village of Lindenhurst

United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division

September 16, 2005, Decided ; September 16, 2005, Filed

No. 03 C 6905

Reporter

2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23094 *; 2005-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P74,945

C. PELFRESNE, Trustee Under Illinois Land Trust No. 25, Dated May 29, 1998, Plaintiff, v. VILLAGE OF LINDENHURST, an Illinois municipal corporation, et al., Defendants.

Subsequent History: Sanctions disallowed by Pelfresne v. Vill. of Lindenhurst, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 46586 \(N.D. Ill., June 26, 2007\)

Prior History: Pelfresne v. Vill. of Lindenhurst, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14176 \(N.D. Ill., July 23, 2004\)

Core Terms

---

relocation, Defendants', immunity, motion to dismiss, Sherman Act, third party, annexation, property right, Municipal, LaSalle, removal, plaintiff's claim, unjust enrichment, tortious interference, declaratory, consumers, malicious, ordinance, frontage, alleges, vacate, restraint of trade, malicious injury, anticompetitive, authorization, entities, cable, civil conspiracy, cause of action, real estate

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > Failure to State Claims

HN1[ Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim]

The purpose of a motion to dismiss is to test the sufficiency of the plaintiff's complaint, not to decide its merits. A motion to dismiss will be granted only if it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which entitles him to relief. In reviewing a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, the court accepts as true all factual allegations in the plaintiff's complaint and draws all reasonable inferences in his favor.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Declaratory Judgments > General Overview

HN2[ Judgments, Declaratory Judgments]

The purposes of declaratory judgments are to clarify and settle the legal relations at issue and to terminate and afford relief from uncertainty, insecurity, and controversy giving rise to the proceeding. Where the substantive suit would resolve the issues raised by the declaratory judgment action, the declaratory judgment action serves no useful purpose because the controversy has ripened and the anticipation and uncertainty of litigation are alleviated.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Conspiracy to Monopolize > Sherman Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Sherman Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Per Se Rule & Rule of Reason > Per Se Violations

HN3 Sherman Act, Remedies

To state a claim for relief under § 1 of the Sherman Act, plaintiff must allege either that the contract, combination, or conspiracy resulted in a per se violation of the Sherman Act or that it unreasonably restrained competition in a relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Right to Petition Immunity

Labor & Employment Law > Collective Bargaining & Labor Relations > Unfair Labor Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > General Overview

HN4 Noerr-Pennington Doctrine, Right to Petition Immunity

Under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, parties may petition the government for official action favorable to their interests without fear of suit, even if the result of the petition, if granted, might harm the interests of others.

Governments > Local Governments > Claims By & Against

HN5 Local Governments, Claims By & Against

Parker immunity would not protect local governments directly, but recognized that such immunity does apply where a municipality's restriction of competition is an authorized implementation of state policy. For the immunity to apply, however, there must be a clear articulation of a state policy to authorize anticompetitive conduct by the municipality. This requirement is satisfied if suppression of competition is the foreseeable result of what the state authorizes.

Administrative Law > Agency Rulemaking > State Proceedings

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Transportation Law > Bridges & Roads > Billboards

HN6 Agency Rulemaking, State Proceedings

To be sure, state law authorizes only agency decisions that are substantively and procedurally correct. Errors of fact, law, or judgment by the agency are not authorized. In order to prevent Parker from undermining the very interests of federalism it is designed to protect, it is necessary to adopt a concept of authority broader than what is applied to determine the legality of the municipality's action under state law.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Real Property Law > Zoning > Annexation

Governments > Local Governments > Boundaries

Governments > Local Governments > Ordinances & Regulations

HN7 Zoning, Annexation

See 65 Ill. Comp. Stat. 5/11-15.1-1.

Governments > Local Governments > Ordinances & Regulations

Transportation Law > Bridges & Roads > Abandonment & Vacation

HN8 Local Governments, Ordinances & Regulations

See 65 Ill. Comp. Stat. 5/11-91-1.

Governments > Local Governments > Claims By & Against

Healthcare Law > Healthcare Litigation > Antitrust Actions > Facilities

Healthcare Law > Business Administration & Organization > Covenants not to Compete > General Overview

HN9 Local Governments, Claims By & Against

To be sure, a municipality is not automatically beyond the reach of antitrust laws merely by virtue of a state delegation of authority. As with other zoning ordinances, however, the Illinois statute authorizing the removal and relocation of roads has the foreseeable result of placing landowners at an economic disadvantage in connection with the development of their property.

Contracts Law > Remedies > Equitable Relief > General Overview

HN10 Remedies, Equitable Relief

To establish that the retention of a benefit conferred upon defendants by a third-party constitutes an unjust enrichment, a plaintiff must show that (1) the benefit should have been given to the plaintiff, but the third party mistakenly gave it to the defendant instead; (2) the defendant procured the benefit from the third party through some type of wrongful conduct, or (3) the plaintiff for some other reason had a better claim to the benefit than the defendant.

Torts > ... > Commercial Interference > Prospective Advantage > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > General Overview

Torts > Business Torts > Commercial Interference > General Overview

HN11 [blue download icon] Commercial Interference, Prospective Advantage

To state a tortious interference claim, a plaintiff must allege (1) a reasonable expectation of entering into a valid business relationship; (2) defendants' knowledge of that expectancy; (3) purposeful or intentional interference by defendants that prevents the plaintiff's legitimate expectancy from ripening into a valid business relationship; and (4) damages to the plaintiff resulting from the interference. Numerous Illinois cases have stated that a plaintiff states a cause of action only if he alleges a business expectancy with a specific third party as well as action by the defendant directed towards that third party.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Complaints > Requirements for Complaint

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

HN12 [blue download icon] Complaints, Requirements for Complaint

Under the federal rule of notice pleading, all the rules require is a short and plain statement of the claim that will give the defendant fair notice of what the plaintiff's claim is and the grounds upon which it rests.

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

HN13 [blue download icon] Pleadings, Rule Application & Interpretation

The Federal Rules do not require that a complaint allege the specific third party or class of third parties with whom the plaintiff claims to have had a valid business expectancy. As the court explained, a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) motion cannot be used to dismiss a complaint on the ground that it does not include information that Fed. R. Civ. P. 8 does not require it to contain.

Torts > Premises & Property Liability > General Overview

HN14 [blue download icon] Torts, Premises & Property Liability

Pendleton does not affirmatively recognize a claim for malicious injury to property. It recognizes the general principle of law that every man has the right to dispose of his own labor or capital according to his own will.

Governments > State & Territorial Governments > Claims By & Against

Torts > Public Entity Liability > Immunities > General Overview

Torts > ... > Concerted Action > Civil Conspiracy > General Overview

Torts > ... > Concerted Action > Civil Conspiracy > Defenses

Torts > Public Entity Liability > Liability > General Overview

HN15 [blue] State & Territorial Governments, Claims By & Against

The Tort Immunity Act is designed to protect local public entities from liability arising out of the operations of government. Under the Act, a public entity is not liable for an injury caused by adopting or failing to adopt an enactment or by failing to enforce any law. 745 Ill. Comp. Stat. 10/2-103. In addition, a public entity is not liable for an injury caused by the issuance, denial, suspension or revocation of, or by the failure or refusal to issue, deny, suspend or revoke, any permit, license, certificate, approval, order or similar authorization where the entity or its employee is authorized by enactment to determine whether or not such authorization should be issued, denied, suspended or revoked. Public employees are similarly immune from liability for such actions under §§ 2-205 and 2-206. 745 Ill. Comp. Stat. 10/2-205, 2-206.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > Immunity

Torts > Public Entity Liability > Immunities > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > General Overview

HN16 [blue] Affirmative Defenses, Immunity

Immunity under the Tort Immunity Act constitutes an affirmative defense that cannot be disposed of on a motion to dismiss. Though this is generally true, the exception occurs where the allegations of the complaint itself set forth everything necessary to satisfy the affirmative defense.

Governments > Local Governments > Boundaries

Torts > Public Entity Liability > Immunities > General Overview

HN17 [blue] Local Governments, Boundaries

The Tort Immunity Act expressly extends immunity to injuries caused by the refusal to deny any approval or other similar authorization. 745 Ill. Comp. Stat. 10/2-104.

Counsel: [*1] For Charles Pelfresne, Trustee under Illinois Land Trust No. 25, dated May 29, 1998, Plaintiff: Bradley Paul Nelson, William Butler Berndt, Schopf & Weiss, Chicago, IL.

For Vlg of Lindenhurst, an Illinois municipal corporation, Ken Czyzewicz, an individual, Mark Federman, an individual, Mary McCarthy, an individual, Fred Messmer, an individual, Carl Norlin, an individual, Barbara Stout, an individual, Pam Dunham, an individual, Carol Zerba, James B Stevens, an individual, Defendants: Paul P. Phillips, Soffietti, Johnson, Teegen, Phillips & Schwartz, Ltd., Fox Lake, IL; William W. Kurnik, Basileios John Foutris, Knight, Hoppe, Kurnik & Knight, LLC, Des Plaines, IL.

For Zale Equities, Inc., an Illinois corporation, Zale Equities, LLC, an Illinois limited liability company, Zale Group, Inc., an Illinois corporation, Defendants: Martin Stuart Korey, Stone, Pogrund, Korey & Spagat, Chicago, IL.

For Nature's Ridge-Lindenhurst, LLC, an Illinois limited liability company, Leon Joffe, an individual, Defendants: Martin Stuart Korey, James P. Ziegler, Stone, Pogrund, Korey & Spagat, Chicago, IL.

For Paul Baumunk, an individual, Defendant: William W. Kurnik, Basileios John Foutris, [*2] Knight, Hoppe, Kurnik & Knight, LLC, Des Plaines, IL.

For KB Home, a Delaware corporation, KB Home Illinois, Inc., a Delaware corporation, Gordon White, an individual, Defendants: Martin Stuart Korey, Dean J Lurie, Stone, Pogrund, Korey & Spagat, Chicago, IL.

Judges: Judge Rebecca R. Pallmeyer.

Opinion by: REBECCA R. PALLMEYER

Opinion

---

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

This dispute arises from the removal and relocation of a 1,000-foot portion of road that was situated along the edge of property owned by Plaintiff C. Pelfresne in the Village of Lindenhurst, Illinois. The Village approved a petition by other local property owners to remove and relocate the road in connection with a plan to create a single-family development and an adjacent 3.45-acre commercial development. As a result, Plaintiff lost access to the road and filed this lawsuit on September 30, 2003 seeking declaratory and injunctive relief and compensation for the loss of his property value. Plaintiff initially asserted claims of restraint of trade, trespass, private nuisance, and civil conspiracy against the following Defendants: real estate developers Nature's Ridge-Lindenhurst, LLC, Zale Equities, Inc., Zale Equities, [*3] LLC, Zale Group, Inc., and Leon Joffe (collectively, the "Zale Defendants"); LaSalle Bank National Association ("LaSalle"); and the Village, Village Trustees Ken Czyzewicz, Mark Federman, Mary McCarthy, Fred Messmer, Carl Norlin, Barbara Stout, Pat Dunham, and Carol Zerba, Village President Paul Baumunk, and Village Administrator James Stevens (collectively, the "Village Defendants").

The Zale Defendants and the Village Defendants filed separate motions to dismiss the complaint, which the court granted in part and denied in part on July 23, 2004. Pelfresne v. Village of Lindenhurst, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14176, No. 03 C 6905, 2004 WL 1660812 \(N.D. Ill. July 23, 2004\). On September 7, 2004, Plaintiff filed an Amended Complaint seeking to remedy the deficiencies in the original complaint, and adding real estate development companies KB Home and KB Home Illinois, Inc. (collectively, the "KB Defendants"), and Gordon White as Defendants. The Zale and KB Defendants and the Village Defendants again move for dismissal of the Amended Complaint on a number of grounds. For the reasons set forth below, the Zale and KB Defendants' motion is granted in part and denied in part, and the Village Defendants' motion [*4] is granted.

BACKGROUND

The facts of this case as set forth in the court's July 23, 2004 Memorandum Opinion and Order are largely repeated in the Amended Complaint. See Pelfresne, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14176, 2004 WL 1660812, at \*1-5. This opinion assumes the reader's familiarity with the earlier decision and recites the relevant facts here only briefly.

A. The Parties

Plaintiff is a Michigan-based real estate developer who owns a Trust holding approximately 100 acres of land located on what was formerly the northeast corner of Savage Road and Grass Lake Road in unincorporated Lake County, Illinois. (Cmplt. PP 1,2.)<sup>1</sup> Prior to its removal, Savage Road ran east-west and intersected Grass Lake Road, which runs northwest-southeast, at approximately a 45-degree angle. (Ex. A to Cmplt.)

---

<sup>1</sup> The Amended Complaint is cited as "Cmplt. P ___. As noted earlier, the court is uncertain of the relationship, if any, among Plaintiff "C. Pelfresne" and other Pelfresnes who have filed similar complaints involving other Illinois municipalities.

[*5] The Village is an Illinois municipal corporation located in Lake County, Illinois. Defendant Paul Baumunk is a citizen and resident of Illinois who served as President of the Village from April 1999 through April 2003. (Cmplt. PP 3, 12.) Defendants Ken Czyzewicz, Mark Federman, Mary McCarthy, Fred Messmer, Carl Norlin, Barbara Stout, Pat Dunham, and Carol Zerba (collectively, the "Village Trustees") are current or former Trustees of the Village. All are residents and citizens of Illinois. (Id. P 13.) Defendant James B. Stevens is also a resident and citizen of Illinois who serves as Village Administrator. (Id. P 14.)

Defendant Zale Equities, LLC ("Zale LLC") conducted real estate development and related activities as an Illinois limited liability company until it was involuntarily dissolved on October 31, 2002. Prior to its dissolution, Zale LLC's principal place of business was in Lake County, Illinois, and its former members - Edward Zale, Roberta Zale, Amy Joffe, Melissa Norris, and Leon Joffe - are all citizens of Illinois.<sup>2</sup> (Id. P 5.) Defendants Zale Equities, Inc. and Zale Group, Inc. were Illinois real estate development corporations with principal places of [*6] business in Lake County, Illinois. Zale Equities was involuntarily dissolved on September 2, 2003, and Zale Group was involuntarily dissolved on November 1, 2000.<sup>3</sup> (Id. PP 4, 6.) Defendant Zale Enterprises, Inc., an Illinois corporation with its principal place of business in Lake County, Illinois, conducts real estate development and related activities in Lake and Cook Counties in Illinois. (Id. P 7.)

Defendant Nature's Ridge-Lindenhurst, LLC ("NRL") is in the business of owning, developing, and marketing real estate in Lindenhurst, Illinois. NRL is an Illinois limited liability company with its principal place of business in Lake County, and its members - Edward Zale, Roberta Zale, Amy Joffe, Melissa Norris, and Leon Joffe - are all citizens of Illinois. (Id. P 8.) Defendant LaSalle Bank [*7] National Association is a national banking association with its principal place of business in Chicago, Illinois. (Id. P 9.) Defendant Leon Joffe, a resident and citizen of Illinois, is in the business of developing and marketing real estate in Lake and Cook Counties "through Zale Equities, Zale LLC, Zale Group, Zale Enterprises, NRL, [LaSalle], and other entities." (Id. P 10.)

Defendants KB Home and KB Home Illinois, Inc. are Delaware corporations with their principal places of business in Los Angeles, California. The KB Defendants conduct real estate and related activities in, among other places, Lake County, Illinois. (Id. P 15, 16.) On or about September 5, 2003, the KB Defendants acquired the assets of the Zale Defendants. (Id. P 36.) Gordon White is in the business of developing and marketing real estate in Lake and Cook Counties "through Zale Equities, Zale LLC, Zale Group, Zale Enterprises, NRL, [LaSalle], KB Home, KB Illinois, and other entities." He is a citizen and resident of Illinois. (Id. P 11.)

B. The Savage Road Dispute

At some point prior to April 19, 2000, either the Zale Defendants or LaSalle purchased or contracted to purchase [*8] approximately 80 acres of land then located at the southeast corner of Savage Road and Grass Lake Road in unincorporated Lake County, Illinois. On an unspecified date, LaSalle became owner in fee simple title of that property, "with one or more of the . . . Zale Defendants owning the beneficial interest." (Id. PP 9, 19.) LaSalle and the Zale Defendants intended to develop the property as a single-family development to be known as "Nature's Ridge," with a 3.45-acre commercial development in the northeast corner of the property (collectively, "Nature's Ridge"). To that end, "one or more of the [LaSalle or the] Zale Defendants had filed petitions and other documents with the Village . . . to annex the Nature's Ridge property under the terms of a proposed annexation agreement." The proposed agreement required the Village to rezone the Nature's Ridge property for the planned residential and commercial purposes. (Id. PP 21, 22.) It also called for the removal of Savage Road from its 45-degree intersection with Grass Lake Road to a point at least 1,000 feet east of that intersection, and replacing it with a section of road that curved south to form a 90-degree T-shaped intersection [*9] with Grass Lake Road. (Id. P 27.) (See Map, attached as Exhibit A.) See also Pelfresne, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14176, 2004 WL 1660812, at \*1.

---

<sup>2</sup> The Complaint does not provide an explanation for the involuntary dissolution.

<sup>3</sup> Again, the Complaint does not explain why these companies were voluntarily dissolved or who initiated those proceedings.

On April 19, 2000, the Village Plan Commission held a hearing regarding the proposed development plan. (Id. P 23.) Sometime thereafter, over objection from an attorney for the Trust (owned by Plaintiff), the Village and the Village Trustees approved both the rezoning and the relocation of Savage Road. (Id. PP 25, 27.) In late 2002, "one or more of [the LaSalle or] Zale Defendants" effected the plan described above, and Plaintiff, whose property abutted Savage Road prior to its relocation, lost all access to that road. (Id. P 29.) Plaintiff claims that Defendants sought unsuccessfully to purchase his property sometime "in the past," and that they removed the road to "drive down the value of Plaintiff's property in the hope that they can some day purchase the property for less and in retaliation for Plaintiff's refusal to sell to these defendants." (Id. PP 31, 32.)

C. The Complaint

On September 30, 2003, Plaintiff filed suit against the Zale Defendants, LaSalle, and the Village Defendants. Count I alleged that all Defendants [*10] failed to take any of the steps required by § 11-91-1 of the Illinois Municipal Code, 65 ILCS 5/11-91-1, including public notice, a public hearing, passage of a Village ordinance by three-fourths vote of the Village Board of Trustees, or payment of just compensation to landowners who lost frontage onto Savage Road. Pelfresne, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14176, 2004 WL 1660812, at \*2. Plaintiff sought a declaration pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 2201 that the Village did not properly vacate Savage Road, that Plaintiff has a right of access to Savage Road in its original location, that the Village Defendants improperly consented to the unlawful removal of Savage Road, that the Zale Defendants were without authority to remove Savage Road, and that the Village Defendants were without authority to vacate Savage Road. Id. Plaintiff also sought a preliminary and permanent injunction under FED. R. CIV. P. 65 requiring Defendants to restore Savage Road to its previous condition and location, and prohibiting further development along the relocated portion of Savage Road. Id.

Count II, titled "Inverse Condemnation," asserted that by closing the road, the Village Defendants damaged Plaintiff's [*11] property for public use without just compensation as required by Article I, § 15 of the Illinois Constitution. According to Plaintiff, "the value of his property has substantially depreciated in fair cash market value" in an amount greater than $ 75,000 as a result of the roadway's removal. [2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14176, \[WL\] at \*3](#). In Count III, asserted only against the Village, Plaintiff sought reimbursement under 65 ILCS 5/11-9-1 for the depreciation in the fair market value of his property, and for the deprivation of his access to and frontage on Savage Road. Id.

In Count IV, Plaintiff alleged that all Defendants violated § 1 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1, as they "agreed, combined, and conspired" to annex the Nature's Ridge property and to relocate Savage Road in restraint of trade and commerce in the Lindenhurst area real estate market beginning in early 2000. Count V alleged that all Defendants willfully, wantonly, and knowingly entered into an agreement to remove and relocate Savage Road without following the procedures set forth in 65 ILCS 5/11-91-1, et seq., and that each Defendant "committed one or more tortious acts in furtherance of the conspiracy, including but [*12] not limited to trespass, private nuisance, and restraint of trade and commerce." Id. Count VI asserted that Defendants' "improper removal of Savage Road interfered with [Plaintiff's] property right in and use of the access to Savage Road and constitutes an unlawful trespass," resulting in substantial loss in the property's value. Finally, Plaintiff alleged in Count VII that Defendants' "improper removal of Savage Road has eliminated [Plaintiff's] right of access to and frontage on Savage Road and has therefore caused an unreasonable interference with the use and enjoyment of [Plaintiff's] property." Id. Notably, Plaintiff did not allege a claim for the taking of his property without just compensation, perhaps because Plaintiff has not yet exhausted his state procedural remedies. See Sprint Spectrum L.P. v. City of Carmel, 361 F.3d 998, 1003-04 \(7th Cir. 2004\) ("a property owner must exhaust all available state remedies for compensation prior to bringing a taking claim to federal court.")<sup>4</sup>

---

<sup>4</sup>The court understands that at least some Defendants may be willing to compensate Plaintiff for the diminution in value of his property as a result of the relocation of Savage Road. Yet Plaintiff has been puzzlingly reluctant to disclose the results of an appraisal to ascertain the amount of that loss.

[*13] D. The July 23, 2004 Opinion

The Zale Defendants and the Village Defendants separately moved to dismiss the complaint for lack of standing and failure to state a claim. In its July 23, 2004 Memorandum Opinion and Order, the court first determined that Plaintiff has standing to sue for relief based on his allegation that his property value has declined. The court noted, however, that "if during the discovery process Defendants can demonstrate that the fair market value of Plaintiff's property has not decreased, . . . the court will entertain motions to dismiss pursuant to Rule 12\(b\)\(1\), as well as for sanctions against Plaintiff." [2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14176, \[WL\] at \*6](#).

The court next upheld Plaintiff's claim for declaratory relief in Count I, but dismissed his claim for injunctive relief due to his failure to satisfy the court that his alleged injuries could not be compensated with money damages. [2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14176, \[WL\] at \*7-9](#). With respect to Count II alleging "Inverse Condemnation," the court held that Plaintiff stated a valid claim for damage under Article I, § 15 of the Illinois Constitution, again based on his allegation that his property value has substantially depreciated. Plaintiff could not, however, [*14] assert that claim against any of the individual Village Defendants. [2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14176, \[WL\] at \*10-11](#).

The court rejected the Village Defendants' argument for dismissing Count III on the grounds that Plaintiff has an easement for "ingress and egress of farm implement vehicles and supporting vehicles." In the court's view, there was a question of fact as to whether the easement provided Plaintiff with adequate substitute access to Savage Road. [2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14176, \[WL\] at \*12](#). The court, however, dismissed Plaintiff's Sherman Act claim without prejudice: Plaintiff's assertions that his own property value had decreased but that the Lemont real estate market generally had increased were inconsistent and, in the court's view, defeated the allegation that Defendants' actions had anticompetitive effects. [2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14176, \[WL\] at \*14](#). The court also dismissed Counts VI and VII for failure to allege any physical invasion of property as required to state claims for trespass and private nuisance. [2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14176, \[WL\] at \*14-16](#). Having dismissed Plaintiff's underlying tort claims (trespass, private nuisance, and restraint of trade and commerce), the court dismissed Plaintiff's civil conspiracy claim (Count V) as well. [2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14176, \[WL\] at \*16](#) (citing Fritz v. Johnston, 209 Ill. 2d 302, 317, 807 N.E.2d 461, 470, 282 Ill. Dec. 837 \(2004\) [*15] (requiring that conspirators commit a tortious or unlawful act in furtherance of the conspiracy)).

E. The Amended Complaint

On September 3, 2004, Plaintiff filed an Amended Complaint seeking to remedy the deficiencies identified in the original complaint, and adding the KB Defendants and Gordon White as Defendants. Once again, Plaintiff's most logical claim - unlawful taking - appears nowhere in the Complaint. Nor has he provided any information as to the amount by which his property has been devalued by the relocation of Savage Road. Plaintiff instead advances the following theories of relief.

Count I seeks declaratory relief for Defendants' failure to take any of the steps required by § 11-91-1 of the Illinois Municipal Code, 65 ILCS 5/11-91-1, including public notice, a public hearing, passage of a Village ordinance by three-fourths vote of the Village Board of Trustees, or payment of just compensation to landowners who lost frontage onto Savage Road. (Cmplt. PP 35, 40.) Count II charges the Village with violating Article I, § 15 of the Illinois Constitution by taking Plaintiff's property without just compensation. (Id. P 42.) In Count III, Plaintiff seeks damages [*16] from the Village under 65 ILCS 5/11-9-1 for the depreciation in the fair market value of his property, and for the deprivation of his access to and frontage on Savage Road. (Id. PP 48-52.)

Count IV asserts that Defendants violated § 1 of the Sherman Act by conspiring to "unreasonably restrain[] competition for the sale and development of real estate" in the Lemont area and to preclude Plaintiff and other developers "from fully competing with the Zale Defendants and the KB Defendants for the sale and development of medium to high-density mixed-use property." (Id. P 59, 62.) These actions, Plaintiff claims, have restricted competition and limited consumer choice in the Lemont area, and have "caused or reasonably will cause increased prices for purchasers and consumers of both residential and commercial real estate in the relevant market." (Id. PP 64, 65.)

In Count V. Plaintiff alleges that the Zale and KB Defendants have been unjustly enriched by the relocation of Savage Road. (Id. PP 70-72.) Count VI charges the Zale Defendants, the KB Defendants, Joffe, and White with tortious interference with Plaintiff's prospective economic advantage "from the eventual [*17] development and sale of [his] property." (Id. P 74.) Count VII alleges that the Zale Defendants, Joffe, and White "willfully, maliciously, intentionally, and unlawfully interfered with and impaired Plaintiff's property right by unlawfully removing Savage Road and relocating it onto the Zale Defendants' property." (Id. P 81.) Count VII further alleges that the KB Defendants "willfully, maliciously, and intentionally aided, abetted, and assisted with the interference with and impairment of Plaintiff's property rights by acting to cement and retaining the Zale Defendants' and KB Defendants' exclusive access to and control over the relocated portion of Savage Road and its frontage." (Id. P 82.) Finally, Count VIII charges all Defendants with civil conspiracy. (Id. PP 86-89.)

The Zale and KB Defendants have moved to dismiss all claims against them, and the Village Defendants seek dismissal of Counts I, IV, and VIII. The court has diversity jurisdiction over this matter pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1332 and considers each motion below.

DISCUSSION

HN1 [↑] The purpose of a motion to dismiss is to test the sufficiency of the plaintiff's complaint, not [*18] to decide its merits. Gibson v. City of chicago, 910 F.2d 1510, 1520 \(7th Cir. 1990\). A motion to dismiss will be granted only "if it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts 'in support of his claim which entitles him to relief.' Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S. Ct. 99 \(1957\). In reviewing a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, the court accepts as true all factual allegations in the plaintiff's complaint and draws all reasonable inferences in his favor. Franzoni v. Hartmarx Corp., 300 F.3d 767, 770 \(7th Cir. 2002\).

The Zale, KB, and Village Defendants all move to dismiss Count I as duplicative of Count III. The Village Defendants also claim that they are immune from liability under the Sherman Act (Count IV) pursuant to Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 352, 87 L. Ed. 315, 63 S. Ct. 307 \(1943\), and that they are absolutely immune from liability for civil conspiracy (Count VIII) under the Illinois Tort Immunity Act, 745 ILCS 10/1-101 et seq. The Zale and KB Defendants insist that there is no public injury to support Plaintiff's Sherman Act claim, and that Plaintiff has not properly alleged claims for unjust enrichment, [*19] tortious interference, malicious injury to property, or civil conspiracy.

I. Count I

In Count I of the Amended Complaint, Plaintiff seeks a declaration pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 2201 that the Village did not properly vacate Savage Road, that Plaintiff has a right of access to Savage Road in its original location, that the Village Defendants improperly consented to the unlawful removal of Savage Road, that the Zale and KB Defendants were without authority to remove Savage Road, and that the Village Defendants were without authority to vacate Savage Road. (Cmplt. P 40.) The Zale, KB, and Village Defendants all insist that this claim is duplicative of Count III, which seeks money damages from the Village under 65 ILCS 5/11-91-1 for the property damage caused by the relocation of Savage Road. (Zale/KB Mem., at 2; Village Mem., at 7 <sup>5</sup> (citing Green Bay Packaging, Inc. v. Hoganson & Assocs., Inc., 362 F. Supp. 78, 82 \(N.D. Ill. 1973\) (striking as duplicative two counterclaims alleging breach of an oral contract where the complaint sought declaratory relief as to the contractual rights of the parties).)

---

<sup>5</sup> The Zale Defendants' and KB Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Plaintiff's Amended Complaint is cited as "Zale/KB Mem., at _____. The Memorandum of Village of Lindenhurst Defendants in Support of their Motion to Dismiss Counts I, IV, and VIII of the Amended Complaint is cited as "Village Mem., at _____. "

[*20] HN2 "The purposes of declaratory judgments are to 'clarify[] and settle the legal relations at issue' and to 'terminate and afford relief from uncertainty, insecurity, and controversy giving rise to the proceeding.'" Amari v. Radio Spirits, Inc., 219 F. Supp. 2d 942, 944 (N.D. Ill. 2002) (quoting Tempco Elec. Heater Corp. v. Omega Eng'g, Inc., 819 F.2d 746, 749 (7th Cir. 1987)). "Where the substantive suit would resolve the issues raised by the declaratory judgment action, the declaratory judgment action 'serve[s] no useful purpose' because the controversy has 'ripened' and the anticipation and uncertainty of litigation are alleviated." Id. In this case, Plaintiff has filed a lawsuit seeking damages caused by Defendants' unlawful relocation of a portion of Savage Road. Plaintiff thus has no need for a declaratory judgment establishing the same unlawful conduct. See Dixie Gas & Food, Inc. v. Shell Oil Co., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12010, No. 03 C 8210, 2005 WL 1273273, at *7 (N.D. Ill. May 25, 2005) ("the process for determination on the merits is underway in this suit, and the additional declaratory judgment action requested by plaintiffs is redundant.")

Plaintiff [*21] disagrees that the relief requested in Count I is "entirely duplicative" of the relief requested in other counts, noting that he seeks "a declaration that he has a right of access to 650 feet of frontage on Savage Road in its original location, and that the Village Defendants are without authority to vacate Savage Road." (Pl. Resp., at 13-14.)<sup>6</sup> As Defendants note, however, the court already rejected Plaintiff's claim for injunctive relief requiring the relocation of Savage Road to its original location. (Zale/KB Reply, at 6.)<sup>7</sup> Pelfresne, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14176, 2004 WL 1660812, at *8-9. Defendants' motion to dismiss Count I as duplicative is granted.<sup>8</sup>

[*22] II. Count IV

Defendants next argue that Plaintiff's Sherman Act claim once again fails because he has alleged neither a personal nor a public injury. The Village Defendants also claim immunity from liability under Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 87 L. Ed. 315, 63 S. Ct. 307 (1943).

A. The Zale and KB Defendants

HN3 To state a claim for relief under § 1, Plaintiff must allege "either that the contract, combination, or conspiracy resulted in a per se violation of the Sherman Act or that it unreasonably restrained competition in a relevant market." MCM Partners, Inc. v. Andrews-Bartlett & ASSOCS., Inc., 62 F.3d 967, 976 (7th Cir. 1995) (citations omitted). As noted, the court previously dismissed Plaintiff's Sherman Act claim for failure to sufficiently allege anticompetitive effects. Specifically, Plaintiff's repeated assertion that his property value had decreased was inconsistent with his claim in Count IV that consumers were being injured by the fact that prices in the Lindenhurst real estate market had increased. Pelfresne, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14176, 2004 WL 1660812, at *14. Plaintiff contends that the Amended Complaint now alleges at least three types of injury to [*23] competition: (1) a reduction in supply or output; (2) increased prices; and (3) a reduction in the quality and quantity of consumer choice. (Pl. Resp., at 3.) Plaintiff's theory is as follows: The Lindenhurst market "is characterized by a small and continually shrinking supply of remaining undeveloped properties with the potential for development as medium to high-density mixed-use developments, and a relatively strong and growing demand for such property." (Cmplt. P 55.) The relocation of Savage Road has "removed" Plaintiff's property from the market for medium to high-density mixed-use development because the property is no longer at an intersection and no longer has any frontage on, or

---

<sup>6</sup> Plaintiff C. Pelfresne's Response to Defendants' Motions to Dismiss is cited as "Pl. Resp., at ____."

<sup>7</sup> The Zale and KB Defendants' Reply in Support of the Zale and KB Defendants' Motion to Dismiss the Plaintiff's Amended Complaint is cited as "Zale/KB Reply, at ____."

<sup>8</sup> Plaintiff notes that this court previously upheld his claim for declaratory judgment. (Pl. Resp., at 13.) See Pelfresne, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14176, 2004 WL 1660812, at *7-8. In addressing the previous motions to dismiss, however, the court was asked to consider only whether Plaintiff had sufficiently alleged a violation of state law and an injury in fact, and not whether the declaratory judgment and the damages claims were duplicative.

useful access to, Savage Road. (Pl. Resp., at 4.) In Plaintiff's view, this has resulted in an output restriction - i.e., a reduction in the supply of property in the relevant market. "Output restrictions are classic per se violations which personify the law of supply because product scarcity causes consumers to pay inflated prices to satisfy demand. Unlike pure supply and demand, competitors use output restrictions to inflate profit by thwarting competition by intentionally limiting product availability. [*24] " United States v. Andreas, 39 F. Supp. 2d 1048, 1059 \(N.D. Ill. 1998\).

With the reduction in supply of property that may be developed as medium to high-density mixed-use developments, Plaintiff argues, the price to consumers for such property will increase, and the quality and quantity of their property choices will decrease. (Pl. Resp., at 5-6 (citing MCM Partners, 62 F.3d at 972 (antitrust claim stated where defendants' conduct allegedly eliminated plaintiff from the market, securing defendants a "virtual monopoly" and allowing them to charge higher rates for rental equipment); Davis v. First Nat'l Bank of Westville, 868 F.2d 206, 208 (7th Cir. 1989).) Under this theory, Plaintiff insists, the allegations that the value of his property, which cannot be used for medium to high-density mixed-use developments, has decreased while the price for properties that may be used for medium to high-density mixed-use developments has increased are entirely consistent. (Pl. Resp., at 5.)

The Zale and KB Defendants do not specifically respond to any of these arguments, claiming instead that Plaintiff's theory is flawed because he does not allege any personal [*25] injury from the Sherman Act violation. According to Defendants, "the alleged injured class are consumer/developers wishing to develop property in the Lindenhurst area," and Plaintiff does not claim to be one of those consumer/developers. (Zale/KB Reply, at 2 (citing Metro Cable Co. v. CATV of Rockford, Inc., 516 F.2d 220 \(7th Cir. 1975\).) In Metro Cable, the plaintiff applied for but did not receive a franchise from the City of Rockford, Illinois to construct and operate a cable television transmission system. 516 F.2d at 222. The plaintiff sued the company that did obtain the franchise (CATV), its affiliate, and four individuals associated with those companies, alleging that they organized CATV in part to induce the city's mayor and an alderman to oppose the plaintiff's current and future franchise applications. Id. at 222-24. The plaintiff argued that this violated the Sherman Act because the defendants formed a plan to block any cable television in Rockford that would compete with their station (WCEE-TV), and organized CATV to secure what was in effect an exclusive franchise "to delay building cable facilities in order to postpone [*26] the day when WCEE-TV would have competition from cable television." Id. at 232-33.

The court found that the part of the plan consisting of inducing the city council to grant CATV a franchise and deny one to the plaintiff did not fall within the Sherman Act, noting that the Noerr-Pennington doctrine protects concerted efforts to induce government to take lawful action. Id. at 227, 233 (citing United Mine Workers of America v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 670, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626, 85 S. Ct. 1585 \(1965\) (noting that Eastern Railroad Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464, 81 S. Ct. 523 \(1961\), "shields from the Sherman Act a concerted effort to influence public officials regardless of intent of purpose.")) The only injured parties in Metro Cable were those "who suffered injury by reason of the delay in establishing a cable television system in Rockford, for example, a distant television station which could only reach Rockford consumers through cable television facilities." Id. at 233.

The Zale and KB Defendants appear to be arguing, somewhat obliquely, that they cannot be liable under § 1 of the Sherman Act by virtue of the Noerr-Pennington [*27] doctrine. HN4 Under that doctrine, "parties may petition the government for official action favorable to their interests without fear of suit, even if the result of the petition, if granted, might harm the interests of others." Tarpley v. Keistler, 188 F.3d 788, 794 \(7th Cir. 1999\). See also Greater Rockford Energy and Tech. Corp. v. Shell Oil Co., 998 F.2d 391, 397 \(7th Cir. 1993\) ("lobbying that would arguably restrain trade is protected political activity and does not violate the antitrust laws.") That is precisely what Plaintiff has alleged here.

Plaintiff claims that the Zale Defendants conspired with the Village Defendants "to annex the Nature's Ridge property and to remove and relocate Savage Road in restraint of trade and commerce in the market for the sale and development of prime medium to high-density mixed use real estate." (Cmplt. P 57.) Plaintiff also claims that after acquiring the assets of the Zale Defendants, the KB Defendants induced and agreed with the Village Defendants to have the Village approve an ordinance purporting to vacate the removed section of Savage Road and took other affirmative steps to ensure the KB Defendants' [*28] continual improper and unlawful access to that frontage, to the exclusion of Plaintiff and other landowners.

(Id. P 58.) The Zale and KB Defendants had a right to petition the Village to annex Nature's Ridge and to relocate Savage Road, even though those actions ultimately harmed Plaintiff's interests. Tarpley, 188 F.3d at 794; In re Brand Name Prescription Drugs Antitrust Litig., 186 F.3d 781, 788-89 (7th Cir. 1999) (the Noerr-Pennington doctrine "exempts from antitrust law collusive efforts to obtain governmental protection against the winds of competition.") Notably, there is nothing to suggest that the Zale and KB Defendants' "activities [were] not genuinely aimed at procuring favorable government action." City of Columbia v. Omni Outdoor Advertising, Inc., 499 U.S. 365, 380, 113 L. Ed. 2d 382, 111 S. Ct. 1344 (1991) ("A classic example [of the sham exception] is the filing of frivolous objections to the license application of a competitor, with no expectation of achieving denial of the license but simply in order to impose expense and delay.") The Zale and KB Defendants' motion to dismiss Count IV is granted.

B. The Village Defendants

[*29] The Village Defendants argue that they are immune from liability under the Sherman Act because their actions in annexing Nature's Ridge and approving the relocation of Savage Road are "authorized implementation[s] of state policy." (Village Mem., at 3 (quoting City of Columbia, 499 U.S. at 371.)) In City of Columbia, the plaintiff objected to a Columbia, South Carolina ordinance restricting the size, location, and spacing of billboards within the city. The ordinance "obviously benefitted" a favored local company, Columbia Outdoor Advertising, Inc. ("COA"), which "already had its billboards in place," and "severely hindered" the plaintiff's ability to compete. 499 U.S. at 368. The plaintiff filed suit against the City and COA alleging, in part, that the ordinance was the result of "an anticompetitive conspiracy between city officials and COA" in violation of § 1 of the Sherman Act. Id. at 369. Reversing a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, the Supreme Court first noted its decision in Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 87 L. Ed. 315, 63 S. Ct. 307 (1943) that the Sherman Act does "not apply to anticompetitive restraints imposed by the States 'as [*30] an act of government.'" Id. at 370 (quoting Parker, 317 U.S. at 352). The Court confirmed that HNS [↑] Parker immunity would not protect local governments directly, but recognized that such immunity does apply where "a municipality's restriction of competition [is] an authorized implementation of state policy." Id. (citing Town of Hallie v. City of Eau Claire, 471 U.S. 34, 38, 85 L. Ed. 2d 24, 105 S. Ct. 1713 (1985)). For the immunity to apply, however, there must be a "clear articulation of a state policy to authorize anticompetitive conduct' by the municipality." Id. at 372 (quoting Hallie, 471 U.S. at 40). This requirement is satisfied "if suppression of competition is the 'foreseeable result' of what the state authorizes." Id. (quoting Hallie, 471 U.S. at 42).

Applying these principles to the Columbia ordinance, the Court held that "no more is needed to establish, for Parker purposes, the city's authority to regulate than its unquestioned zoning power over the size, location, and spacing of billboards." Id. The Court further determined that the very purpose of zoning regulation is to displace unfettered [*31] business freedom in a manner that regularly has the effect of preventing normal acts of competition, particularly on the part of new entrants. A municipal ordinance restricting the size, location, and spacing of billboards (surely a common form of zoning) necessarily protects existing billboards against some competition from newcomers.

Id. at 373. As for the plaintiff's invocation of a "conspiracy exception" to Parker immunity, the Court reaffirmed its "rejection of any interpretation of the Sherman Act that would allow plaintiffs to look behind the actions of state sovereigns to base their claims on 'perceived conspiracies to restrain trade.'" Id. at 379 (quoting Hoover v. Ronwin, 466 U.S. 558, 580, 80 L. Ed. 2d 590, 104 S. Ct. 1989 (1984)). The Court therefore found the City immune from liability.

The Village Defendants argue that the Village's authority to enter into annexation agreements (such as the annexation of Nature's Ridge) and to regulate land use, lot size, roads, and other matters necessary for the public health, safety, and welfare (such as the relocation of Savage Road) is established by state law as set forth in the Illinois Municipal Code, 65 ILCS 5/11-15.1-1, 5/11-15.1-2\(b\), [\[\*32\] \(f\), 5/11-91-1](#).<sup>9</sup> (Village Mem., at 4.) Plaintiff insists that the Village's actions were not authorized by state policy because the Village allowed the Zale and KB Defendants to "remove and relocate Savage Road for Zale's benefit, without following the requirements of state law mandating prior notice and a prior hearing before a road is vacated." (Pl. Resp., at 6.) As the Village Defendants point out, however, the Supreme Court rejected just such an argument in City of Columbia, where it stated:

HN6 "To be sure, state law 'authorizes' only agency decisions that are substantively and procedurally correct. Errors of fact, law, or judgment by the agency are not 'authorized.' .... We ... believe, [however], that in order to prevent Parker from undermining the very interests of federalism it is designed to protect, it is necessary to adopt a concept of authority broader than what is applied to determine the legality of the municipality's action under state law. .... It suffices for the present to conclude that here no more is needed to establish, for Parker purposes, the city's authority to regulate than its unquestioned zoning power over the size, location, and spacing [\[\*33\]](#) of billboards.

499 U.S. at 371-72 (quoting P. Areeda & H. Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law P 212.3b, at 145 (Supp. 1989)). As in City of Columbia, the Village has unquestioned authority to annex property and relocate roads, which suffices as authority for purposes of Parker immunity.

[\[\*34\]](#) Plaintiff argues that Parker immunity nonetheless does not apply here because § 11-91-1 "has nothing to do with displacing competition in favor of regulation." (Pl. Resp., at 7.) Noting the statute's language that "the relief to the public from further burden and responsibility of maintaining any street or alley, or part thereof, constitutes a public use or public interest authorizing the vacation," Plaintiff contends that 65 ILCS 5/11-91-1 simply grants authority to municipalities to vacate roads . . . to relieve the burden on a municipality to maintain the road" and "is not aimed at replacing competition with regulation." (Id. at 8.) The problem with this argument is that an anticompetitive effect need only be the "foreseeable result," and not the stated aim or purpose of the statute. As the Supreme Court explained in City of Columbia,

We have rejected the contention that this requirement [authorization of anticompetitive conduct] can be met only if the delegating statute explicitly permits the displacement of competition . . . It is enough, we have held, if suppression of competition is the "foreseeable result" of what the statute authorizes.

[\[\*35\] 499 U.S. at 372-73](#) (quoting Hallie, 471 U.S. at 41-42).

HN9 To be sure, a municipality is not automatically beyond the reach of antitrust laws merely by virtue of a state delegation of authority. (Pl. Resp., at 8 (citing Lancaster Community Hosp. v. Antelope Valley Hosp. Dist., 940 F.2d 397, 400 \(9th Cir. 1991\)) ("The courts must assure themselves that the subordinate [entity] acts in accord with the state's wishes when it contravenes the federal antitrust laws."): Surgical Care Ctr. of Hammond, L.C. v. Hospital Serv. Dist. No. 1 of Tangipahoa Parish, 171 F.3d 231, 235 \(5th Cir. 1999\) (finding that "it is not the foreseeable

<sup>9</sup> Section 11-15.1-1 provides that "the corporate authorities of any municipality may enter into an annexation agreement with one or more of the owners of record of land in unincorporated territory." 65 ILCS 5/11-15.1-1. Section 11-15.1-2 states that an annexation agreement may HN7 provide for:

(b) The continuation in effect, or amendment, or continuation in effect as amended, of any ordinance relating to subdivision controls, zoning, official plan, and building, housing and related restrictions ....

* * *

(f) Any other matter not inconsistent with the provisions of this Code, nor forbidden by law.

65 ILCS 5/11-15.1-2\(b\), \(f\). Section 11-91-1 HN8 provides:

Whenever the corporate authorities of any municipality, whether incorporated by special act or under any general law, determine that the public interest will be subserved by vacating any street or alley, or part thereof, within their jurisdiction in any incorporated area, they may vacate that street or alley, or part thereof, by an ordinance.

result of allowing a hospital service district to form joint ventures that it will engage in anticompetitive conduct.".) As with other zoning ordinances, however, the Illinois statute authorizing the removal and relocation of roads has the foreseeable result of placing landowners at an economic disadvantage in connection with the development of their property. The Village Defendants are immune from liability under the Sherman Act and their motion to dismiss Count IV is granted.

III. Count V

[*36] The Zale and KB Defendants argue that Plaintiff cannot maintain his unjust enrichment claim because he fails to allege that he performed any services for Defendants. Citing Oncology Therapeutics Network Joint Venture, L.P. v. Olympia Fields Internal Medicine Assocs., S.C., 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8073, No. 01 C 2079, 2003 WL 21087954 (N.D. Ill. May 13, 2003), Defendants contend that the elements of an unjust enrichment claim include: (1) Plaintiff performed services; (2) the benefit of those services was conferred upon Defendants; and (3) it is unjust for Defendants to retain the benefit without compensating Plaintiff. *2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8073, [WL] at *5*. Plaintiff insists that an unjust enrichment claim requires only a showing that (1) Defendants have unjustly retained a benefit to Plaintiff's detriment; and (2) Defendants' retention of the benefit violates the fundamental principles of justice, equity, and good conscience. (Pl. Resp., at 9 (citing HPI Health Care Servs., Inc. v. Mt. Vernon Hosp., Inc., 131 Ill. 2d 145, 160, 545 N.E.2d 672, 679, 137 Ill. Dec. 19 (1989).)

The court agrees that Plaintiff need not have performed any services for Defendants in order to state a claim for unjust enrichment. The Oncology [*37] Therapeutics court suggests such a requirement, but the case it relied on, First Nat'l Bank of Springfield v. Malpractice Research, Inc., 179 Ill. 2d 353, 688 N.E.2d 1179, 228 Ill. Dec. 202 (1997), addressed the elements of a claim for quantum meruit, not unjust enrichment. Id. at 365, 688 N.E.2d at 1185. What is clear is that Plaintiff must establish that he furnished some benefit to Defendants "under circumstances which would make it unjust for [Defendants] to retain the benefit without paying." Hayes Mechanical, Inc. v. First Indus., L.P., 351 Ill. App. 3d 1, 9, 812 N.E.2d 419, 285 Ill. Dec. 599, 351 Ill. App. 3d 1, 812 N.E.2d 419, 426, 285 Ill. Dec. 599 (1st Dist. 2004). Plaintiff may seek to recover a benefit that he gave directly to Defendants, or one which was transferred to Defendants by a third party. State Farm General Ins. Co. v. Stewart, 288 Ill. App. 3d 678, 691, 681 N.E.2d 625, 633, 224 Ill. Dec. 310 (1st Dist. 1997). HN10 [↑] To establish that the retention of a benefit conferred upon Defendants by a third-party constitutes an unjust enrichment, Plaintiff must show that "(1) the benefit should have been given to the plaintiff, but the third party mistakenly gave it to the defendant instead; (2) the defendant [*38] procured the benefit from the third party through some type of wrongful conduct, or (3) the plaintiff for some other reason had a better claim to the benefit than the defendant." Id., 681 N.E.2d at 633-34. See also HPI Health Care Servs., Inc., 131 Ill. 2d at 161-62, 545 N.E.2d at 679.

In this case, Plaintiff does not allege that he directly gave Defendants the benefit of the use of Savage Road. Rather, he suggests that the Zale and KB Defendants received that benefit from the Village, "as the relocation of Savage Road increased the value of the Zale Defendants' and the KB Defendants' property." (Cmplt. P 70.) Plaintiff does not, however, indicate which of the three State Farm elements supports his unjust enrichment claim. Plaintiff certainly cannot claim that the benefit "should have been given" to him, as he already had the use of Savage Road prior to its removal and relocation. Nor is there any evidence that the relocation was a "mistake." See National Am. Ins. Co. v. Indiana Lumbermens Mut. Ins. Co., 221 F.3d 1339 (Table) (7th Cir. 2000) (to establish a "mistake," "a plaintiff must point to some unintentional act arising from [*39] ignorance, surprise, or misplaced confidence.") To the contrary, the Village both knew about and approved of the relocation, which resulted in Savage Road's meeting Grass Lake Road at a right (and safer) angle.

Plaintiff does allege that the Zale and KB Defendants procured the relocation from the Village "through some type of wrongful conduct" -- namely, they conspired to relocate Savage Road to reduce competition and "intentionally drive down the value of Plaintiff's property." (Id. PP 32-34.) To the extent the court has dismissed Plaintiff's Sherman Act claims, however, he has not sufficiently alleged that the Zale and KB Defendants engaged in wrongful conduct in order to secure the relocation of Savage Road from the Village. That leaves the theory that Plaintiff had a better claim to the road than the Zale or KB Defendants. Aside from arguing that the value of his property decreased and that Defendants did not follow proper procedures in relocating Savage Road, however, Plaintiff offers nothing to suggest that his claim to the use of Savage Road was somehow superior to that of Defendants, or that the Village had a duty to maintain the road in its original location. Absent such [*40] a showing, Plaintiff cannot maintain a claim for unjust enrichment.

V. Count VI

The Zale and KB Defendants next contend that Plaintiff's claim for tortious interference with prospective economic advantage fails because he does not identify any third party with which he had a reasonable business expectancy. (Zale/KB Mem., at 5.) HN11[] To state a tortious interference claim, Plaintiff must allege (1) a reasonable expectation of entering into a valid business relationship; (2) Defendants' knowledge of that expectancy; (3) purposeful or intentional interference by Defendants that prevents Plaintiff's legitimate expectancy from ripening into a valid business relationship; and (4) damages to Plaintiff resulting from the interference. *Associated Underwriters of Am. Agency, Inc. v. McCarthy*, 356 Ill. App. 3d 1010, 1020, 826 N.E.2d 1160, 1169, 292 Ill. Dec. 724 \(1st Dist. 2005\). Numerous Illinois cases have stated that "[a] plaintiff states a cause of action only if he alleges a business expectancy with a specific third party as well as action by the defendant directed towards that third party." Id. See also *Solaia Technology, LLC v. Specialty Pub. Co.*, 357 Ill. App. 3d 1, 826 N.E.2d 1208, 292 Ill. Dec. 772 \(1st Dist. 2005\)[*41] (collecting cases) (affirming dismissal of tortious interference claim where the plaintiffs failed to allege that "specific third parties actually contemplated entering into a business relationship with plaintiffs.") (emphasis in original).

Plaintiff argues that such specificity is not required to state a claim in federal court, which follows a liberal notice pleading standard. See *Kyle v. Morton High Sch.*, 144 F.3d 448, 454 \(7th Cir. 1998\) HN12[] ("Under the federal rule of notice pleading, 'all the Rules require is a short and plain statement of the claim that will give the defendant fair notice of what the plaintiff's claim is and the grounds upon which it rests.') (internal quotations omitted). In *Cook v. Winfrey*, 141 F.3d 322 \(7th Cir. 1998\), for example, the plaintiff wanted to sell the tabloid press his story about how national celebrity Oprah Winfrey had used cocaine while they were involved in a romantic relationship. Id. at 324. When Winfrey preempted him by revealing the drug abuse herself on her nationally syndicated television program, the plaintiff charged Winfrey with, among other things, tortiously interfering with his [*42] "ability to enter into contracts or business relationships with third parties interested in purchasing the rights to publication of his experiences." Id. at 324, 328.

The district court dismissed the claim because the plaintiff "did not name any particular third party with whom he had a reasonable expectation of a business relationship, or toward whom Winfrey directed her interfering actions." Id. at 327-28. The Seventh Circuit reversed, however, holding that HN13[] "the Federal Rules do not require that [a] complaint allege the specific third party or class of third parties with whom [the plaintiff] claims to have had a valid business expectancy." Id. at 328. As the court explained, "[a] Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion cannot be used to dismiss a complaint on the ground that it does not include information that Rule 8 does not require it to contain." Id. See also *Kim v. Kim*, 360 F. Supp. 2d 897, 905 \(N.D. Ill. 2005\).

In this case, Plaintiff alleges that he "had a reasonable expectation of entering into a valid business relationship for the development [and sale] of [his] property." (Cmplt. P 74.) The Zale and KB Defendants [*43] argue that this does not suffice to allege that Defendants "acted toward a third party," perhaps because Plaintiff incorrectly identifies the Village Defendants as those third parties. (Zale/KB Reply, at 5; Pl. Resp., at 10.) In fact, Plaintiff's claimed expectation of entering into a business relationship with persons interested in purchasing and developing his property is adequate to allege a claim for tortious interference with prospective economic advantage. (Cmplt. PP 74, 76 (alleging that Defendants "purposely and intentionally interfered with Plaintiff's business expectancy).) The Zale and KB Defendants' motion to dismiss Count VI is denied.

V. Count VII

In Count VII, Plaintiff alleges that the Zale and KB Defendants aided and abetted the "impairment of Plaintiff's property rights." The Zale and KB Defendants urge the court to dismiss Count VII on the grounds that Illinois does not recognize a claim for malicious injury to property rights. (Zale/KB Mem., at 6 (citing Shields Enterprises, Inc. v. First Chicago Corp., 1987 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9378, No. 86 C 10213, 1987 WL 18356 (N.D. Ill. Oct. 7, 1987).) The plaintiff in Shields Enterprises sought to pursue a malicious injury [*44] to property rights action, relying on two cases that only vaguely referred to such a tort: Doremus v. Hennessy, 176 Ill. 608, 52 N.E. 924 (1898), and Robinson v. Lull, 145 F. Supp. 134 (N.D. Ill. 1956). In Doremus, defendants, who performed services for the plaintiff's laundry business, conspired to put her out of business unless she raised her prices. Recognizing a cause of action in these circumstances, the court stated, in dicta, the following general principle of law:

Every man has a right, under the law, as between himself and others, to full freedom in disposing of his own labor or capital according to his own will, and any one who invades that right without lawful cause or justification commits a legal wrong; and, if followed by an injury caused in consequence thereof, the one whose right is thus invaded has a legal ground of action for such wrong.

176 Ill. at 615, 52 N.E. at 926.

In Robinson, defendants expelled plaintiff, a physician, from a local medical society on false charges, thereby destroying his practice. The court described the plaintiff's resulting complaint as "stating a cause of action in tort, [*45] alleging an intentional and wrongful invasion of plaintiff's right to establish and conduct a lawful business." 145 F. Supp. at 138. The Robinson court noted, however, that the complaint was inartfully drafted and that the action was actually based on an alleged violation of the medical society's by-laws. Id. After reviewing these two cases, the Shields Enterprises court (which did not describe the facts of the cases before it) dismissed the plaintiff's malicious injury to property claim, explaining that "this Court cannot say with any certainty that the Illinois Supreme Court would find that a cause of action existed here based on an unclear 1956 federal district court case and on dicta expounded in 1898." 1987 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9378, 1987 WL 18356, at *4.

Plaintiff maintains that a number of other Illinois Appellate Courts have in fact recognized a cause of action for malicious injury to property. In Pendleton v. Time, Inc., 339 Ill. App. 188, 89 N.E.2d 435 (1st Dist. 1949), the plaintiff was an artist who painted the first portrait of Harry S. Truman before he became the President of the United States. After Truman became President, Time published a portrait [*46] of Truman painted by artist Jay Wesley Jacobs, falsely characterizing the painting as the first portrait for which Truman had ever sat. Id. at 190-93. 89 N.E.2d at 436-37. The plaintiff sued Time, alleging that he "lost all benefit and advantage accruing to him by reason of his having made and executed the first portrait of said Harry S. Truman," and that he "was further made to appear as stating an untruth in his prior statements of and concerning his having made the first portrait of the said Harry S. Truman." Id. at 193, 89 N.E.2d at 437. The court found that the plaintiff had alleged a property right in the value attained in painting the "first" portrait of Truman, and that there must be a remedy afforded for the willful, malicious, and intentional injury to that property right. Id. at 194-95, 89 N.E.2d at 438.

Contrary to Plaintiff's suggestion, HN14[] Pendleton does not affirmatively recognize a claim for malicious injury to property. As with Doremus, Pendleton recognizes the general principle of law that every man has the right to dispose of his own labor or capital according to his own will. Nor is Plaintiff's [*47] reliance on Renard v. Columbia Broad. Sys., Inc., 126 Ill. App. 3d 563, 467 N.E.2d 1090, 82 Ill. Dec. 17 (1st Dist. 1984), helpful; that case merely noted that the trial court had dismissed the plaintiff's cause of action for malicious injury to property rights, and on appeal addressed only the plaintiff's claim for libel. Id. at 566, 467 N.E.2d at 1093. In Nemanich v. Long Grove Country Club Estates, Inc., 119 Ill. App. 2d 169, 255 N.E.2d 466 (2d Dist. 1970), the court noted the case of Ammons v. Jet Credit Sales, Inc., 34 Ill. App. 2d 456, 181 N.E. 2d 601 (1st Dist. 1962), in which the court "expressed favor with a count based on malicious and wrongful impairment of property in that the plaintiff's employment was jeopardized and credit impaired as a result of the defendant's action [making a garnishment demand on the plaintiff's employer] but affirmed the trial court on the basis that the demand was void on its face and not actionable." Id. at 175-76, 255 N.E.2d at 469. The Nemanich court stated that "the tort of malicious and wrongful impairment of property, like any other tort, must be based on the commission of a civil [*48] wrong," but dismissed the claim for failure to allege that the defendants had committed any such wrong. Id. at 176, 255 N.E.2d at 469.

The court does not believe that any of these cases supports Plaintiff's claim for malicious impairment of property rights, and has serious doubts as to the validity of any such claim under Illinois law. As the Shields Enterprises court noted, "one must go back over thirty years to find even the briefest mention of the issue in Illinois . . ." 1987 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9378, 1987 WL 18356, at \*4. Even assuming such a tort did exist, moreover, there is nothing to suggest that Defendants committed a civil wrong necessary to support the claim. The Zale and KB Defendants' motion to dismiss Count VII is granted.

VI. Count VIII

The Zale and KB Defendants finally contend that Plaintiff has no cause of action for civil conspiracy because he cannot maintain any of his three underlying tort claims (restraint of trade under the Sherman Act, tortious interference with prospective economic advantage, or malicious injury to property rights). (Zale/KB Mem., at 6.) In light of the court's determination that Plaintiff has in fact stated a claim for tortious interference [\*49] with prospective economic advantage, the Zale and KB Defendants' motion to dismiss Count VIII on this basis is denied.

The Village Defendants insist that the civil conspiracy claim against them must nonetheless be dismissed because they are immune from suit under the Illinois Tort Immunity Act, 745 ILCS 10/1-101 et seq. HN15<sup>10</sup> The Tort Immunity Act is designed to "protect local public entities from liability arising out of the operations of government." Mazin v. Chicago White Sox, Ltd., 358 Ill. App. 3d 856, 832 N.E.2d 827, 832, 295 Ill. Dec. 377 \(1st Dist. 2005\). Under the Act, a public entity is not liable "for an injury caused by adopting or failing to adopt an enactment or by failing to enforce any law." 745 ILCS 10/2-103. In addition, a public entity is not liable for an injury caused by the issuance, denial, suspension or revocation of, or by the failure or refusal to issue, deny, suspend or revoke, any permit, license, certificate, approval, order or similar authorization where the entity or its employee is authorized by enactment to determine whether or not such authorization should be issued, denied, suspended or revoked.

745 ILCS 10/2-104. Public employees are similarly immune from [\*50] liability for such actions under §§ 2-205 and 2-206. 745 ILCS 10/2-205, 2-206.

The Village Defendants argue that Plaintiff's damages "are all an integral part of and arise out of the annexation of the Zale property," including the relocation of Savage Road. (Village Mem., at 6.) According to the Village Defendants, those acts "arise out of the issuance of an 'approval' within the meaning of Section 2-104 and Section 2-206 of the Act" -- i.e., the Village's approval of the annexation plan. (Id.; Village Reply, at 6.)<sup>10</sup> Plaintiff first responds that HN16<sup>10</sup> immunity under the Act constitutes an affirmative defense that cannot be disposed of on a motion to dismiss. (Pl. Resp., at 12.) Though this is generally true, "the exception occurs where . . . the allegations of the complaint itself set forth everything necessary to satisfy the affirmative defense . . ." United States v. Lewis, 411 F.3d 838, 842 \(7th Cir. 2005\).

[\*51] Plaintiff next argues that nothing in the Tort Immunity Act covers the conduct or damages occasioned when "the Village Defendants agreed to allow a private developer, Zale, to unlawfully remove Savage Road." (Pl. Resp., at 12.) In Plaintiff's view, such an allegation does not amount to a claim of injury either by the "issuance" of any "permit, license, certificate, approval, order or similar authorization," or by "the adoption of, or failure to adopt, an enactment." (Id.) The Illinois Supreme Court rejected a similar argument in Village of Bloomingdale v. CDG Enterprises, Inc., 196 Ill. 2d 484, 752 N.E.2d 1090, 256 Ill. Dec. 848 \(2001\). In that case, CDG Enterprises petitioned the Village of Bloomingdale to rezone property CDG had contracted to purchase. The Village denied the petition, allegedly to further its own plan to develop an adjacent parcel as a golf course. When the Village sued to recover for the services it rendered in reviewing CDG's petition, CDG counterclaimed, alleging tortious interference with business expectancy. Id. at 485-86, 752 N.E.2d at 1093-94. Reversing dismissal of that claim, the appellate court characterized it as a challenge to the [\*52] "corrupt misuse of the Village's power to steal away the expected benefits of [CDG's] plans to develop the property." Id., 752 N.E.2d at 1099. In other words, the "gravamen" of CDG's claim was the "Village's theft of [CDG's] opportunity." Id. The Illinois Supreme Court reversed that determination, however, noting that "the Village's denial of CDG's rezoning petition is precisely what the legislature intended to immunize such entities from." Id. The court was not persuaded by CDG's argument that "it really challenges the process by which the Village denied its petition, not the mere fact that it was denied." Id. As the court explained, whether the Village denied the petition through an "abuse of official process and power," through "corrupt and malicious misuse of power," or for "corrupt or malicious motives," as CDG claims, is wholly immaterial to CDG's claim in tort . . . because section 2-104 contains no reference to intent whatsoever and . . . it certainly does not contain an exception for "willful and wanton misconduct" or "corrupt or malicious motives."

---

<sup>10</sup> The Reply Memorandum of Village of Lindenhurst Defendants in Support of their Motion to Dismiss the Plaintiff's Amended Complaint is cited as "Village Reply, at ___. "

*Id.* at 495-96, 752 N.E.2d at 1099.

In this case, the Village's [*53] decision to approve the annexation agreement, including the relocation of Savage Road, is exactly the type of action the Tort Immunity Act is designed to protect. Plaintiff offers nothing to suggest that approving an annexation agreement is a ministerial, as opposed to discretionary task. Indeed, HN17[] the Act expressly extends immunity to injuries caused by the refusal to deny any approval or other similar authorization. 745 ILCS 10/2-104. See Village of Bloomingdale, 196 Ill. 2d at 497, 752 N.E.2d at 1100 ("section 2-104 plainly grants immunity for injury caused by the 'denial [of] any permit' and is, therefore, controlling.") (emphasis in original). See also Kevin's Towing, Inc. v. Thomas, 351 Ill. App. 3d 540, 545, 814 N.E.2d 1003, 1008, 286 Ill. Dec. 777 \(2d Dist. 2004\) (immunity does not require showing that the public authority acted in good faith). The Village Defendants' motion to dismiss Count VIII is granted.<sup>11</sup>

[*54] CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, the Zale and KB Defendants' motion to dismiss (Docket No. 38) is granted with respect to Counts I, IV, V, and VII, but denied with respect to Counts VI and VIII. The Village Defendants' motion to dismiss Counts I, IV, and VIII (Docket No. 34) is granted.

ENTER:

REBECCA R. PALLMEYER

United States District Judge

Dated: September 16, 2005

---

End of Document

<sup>11</sup> Having determined that the Village Defendants are immune from liability under the Tort Immunity Act, the court need not address whether they are also entitled to legislative immunity. (Village Mem., at 7.) See Biblia Abierta v. Banks, 129 F.3d 899, 903 \(7th Cir. 1997\) ("The doctrine of absolute legislative immunity recognizes that when acting collectively to pursue a view of the public good through legislation, legislators must be free to represent their constituents 'without fear of outside interference' that would result in private lawsuits.")

Strawflower Elecs., Inc. v. Radioshack Corp.

United States District Court for the Northern District of California

September 20, 2005, Decided ; September 20, 2005, Filed

No. C-05-0747 MMC

Reporter

2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 45205 *; 2005 WL 2290314

STRAWFLOWER ELECTRONICS, INC., Plaintiff, v. RADIOSHACK CORPORATION, Defendant.

Prior History: [*1] (Docket No. 40).

Strawflower Elecs., Inc. v. RadioShack Corp., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 49444 \(N.D. Cal., June 3, 2005\)

Core Terms

---

products, alleges, motion to dismiss, antitrust claim, non-RadioShack-branded, trademark, fiduciary duty, parties, market power, tied product, argues, Sherman Act, buy, confidential relationship, declaratory judgment, claim for relief, antitrust, quotation, seller, anti trust law, termination, franchise, claim for breach, joint venture, Clayton Act, losses, buyer, fiduciary relationship, tying arrangement, cause of action

Counsel: For Strawflower Electronics Inc., Plaintiff: Jeffrey L. Fillerup, LEAD ATTORNEY, Luce Forward Hamilton & Scripps LLP, San Francisco, CA.

For RadioShack Corporation, Defendant: Paul D. Nelson, LEAD ATTORNEY, Duane Morris, LLP, San Francisco, CA, Ray L. Wong, LEAD ATTORNEY, Duane Morris LLP, San Francisco, Ca.

For RadioShack Corporation, Counter-claimant: Paul D. Nelson, LEAD ATTORNEY, Duane Morris, LLP, San Francisco, CA, Ray L. Wong, LEAD ATTORNEY, Duane Morris LLP, San Francisco, Ca.

For Strawflower Electronics Inc., Counter-defendant: Jeffrey L. Fillerup, LEAD ATTORNEY, Luce Forward Hamilton & Scripps LLP, San Francisco, CA.

Judges: MAXINE M. CHESNEY, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: MAXINE M. CHESNEY

Opinion

---

ORDER GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART DEFENDANT'S MOTION TO DISMISS; VACATING HEARING.

Before the Court is defendant RadioShack Corporation's ("RadioShack") motion, filed August 18, 2005, to dismiss the second through sixth causes of action asserted against it in plaintiff Strawflower Electronics, Inc.'s ("Strawflower") Second Amended Complaint. Strawflower has filed opposition to the motion, to which RadioShack has replied. Having [*2] considered the papers filed in support of and in opposition to the motion, the Court finds the motion appropriate for resolution without oral argument, see Civil L.R. 7-1\(b\), and hereby VACATES the September 23, 2005 hearing on the matter. For the reasons set forth below, RadioShack's motion to dismiss is GRANTED in part and DENIED in part.

BACKGROUND

Strawflower alleges that, in December 1979, it entered into a contract with RadioShack ("Contract"), by which RadioShack authorized Strawflower to sell RadioShack products and to use the RadioShack name in the operation of a retail store in Half Moon Bay, California. (See Second Amended Complaint ("SAC") 16.) According to Strawflower, it opened the Half Moon Bay store in December 1979, and used the RadioShack name and sold RadioShack products for approximately 25 years. (See id. 18.) Strawflower alleges that, pursuant to the Contract terms, RadioShack was permitted to terminate the Contract only if "(1) [Strawflower] fail[ed] to purchase from [RadioShack] a minimum of $ 10,000 worth of merchandise, at [Strawflower]'s cost ... in any one year ... OR (2) [Strawflower] fail[ed] to reasonably serve [its] [*3] market area with products reasonably expected to be carried by RADIO SHACK Authorized Sales Centers in locations of similar market size." ( See id. P 9.)

According to Strawflower, RadioShack, prior to and during 2004, sought to terminate the Contract by invoking both grounds for termination set forth in the Contract; Strawflower opposed termination, contending that it purchased in excess of $ 10,000 worth of merchandise every year, and that it had "reasonably served" its market area. ( See id. P 10.) Strawflower alleges that when it asked RadioShack to explain the factual basis for its claim that cause existed to terminate the Contract, RadioShack refused to respond, provided inconsistent grounds for termination of the Contract, or provided grounds for termination that are not set forth in the Contract; thereafter, on or about January 17, 2005, RadioShack sent Strawflower a letter stating that RadioShack was terminating the Contract "for cause," effective February 17, 2005. ( See id. P 11.)

Strawflower further alleges that, within the past four years, RadioShack implemented a new policy that required Strawflower to buy non-RadioShack-branded products directly from RadioShack, [*4] rather than from independent distributors. ( See id. P 40.) According to Strawflower, the policy required Strawflower to buy a certain percentage of both non-RadioShack-branded products and RadioShack-branded products from RadioShack, or face termination of the Contract. ( See id.) In implementing this policy, RadioShack, according to Strawflower, conditioned Strawflower's ability to buy and sell RadioShack-branded products, and Strawflower's right to use the RadioShack name, on Strawflower's buying non-RadioShack-branded products from RadioShack, instead of from independent distributors who sold the same products at lower cost. ( See id. P 46.) Strawflower contends this policy is harmful to competition and harmful to consumers because it precluded Strawflower from buying the non-RadioShack-branded products at the lowest price, and forced Strawflower to sell at higher prices to consumers. ( See id. P 48.)

Strawflower asserts seven causes of action against RadioShack: (1) breach of contract; (2) a claim for a declaratory judgment that RadioShack breached the Contract and that Strawflower did not breach the Contract; (3) a claim for a declaratory judgment that the Contract [*5] created a franchise relationship between Strawflower and RadioShack, pursuant to the California Franchise Relations Act ("CFRA") (California Business and Professions Act § 20000 et seq.) and California Franchise Investment Law ("CFIL") (California Corporations Code § 31000 et seq.); (4) breach of fiduciary duty; (5) illegal tying in violation of § 3 of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. § 14) and § 1 of the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. § 1); (6) illegal tying in violation of the Cartwright Act (California Business and Professions Code § 16727 et seq.); and (7) unfair competition in violation of California Business and Professions Code § 17200.

RadioShack now moves to dismiss the second through sixth causes of action for failure to state a claim, pursuant to Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. RadioShack does not move to dismiss the first cause of action, for breach of contract, or the seventh cause of action, for unfair competition in violation of § 17200.

LEGAL STANDARD

A motion to dismiss under Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) cannot be granted unless "it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set [*6] of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief." See Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 78 S. Ct. 99, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80 \(1957\). Dismissal can be based on the lack of a cognizable legal theory or the absence of sufficient facts alleged under a cognizable legal theory. See Balistreri v. Pacifica Police Dept., 901 F.2d 696, 699 \(9th Cir. 1990\).

Generally, a district court, in ruling on a Rule 12\(b\)\(6\) motion, may not consider any material beyond the pleadings. See Hal Roach Studios, Inc. v. Richard Feiner And Co., Inc., 896 F.2d 1542, 1555 n. 19 \(9th Cir. 1990\). Material that is properly submitted as part of the complaint, however, may be considered. See id. Documents whose contents are alleged in the complaint, and whose authenticity no party questions, but which are not physically attached to the pleading, also may be considered. See Branch v. Tunnell, 14 F.3d 449, 454 \(9th Cir. 1994\). In addition, the Court may consider any document "the authenticity of which is not contested, and upon which the plaintiffs complaint necessarily relies," regardless of whether the document is referred to in the complaint. [*7] See Parrino v. FHP, Inc., 146 F.3d 699, 706 \(9th Cir. 1998\). Finally, the Court may consider matters that are subject to judicial notice. See Mack v. South Bay Beer Distributors, Inc., 798 F.2d 1279, 1282 \(9th Cir. 1986\).

In analyzing a motion to dismiss, the Court must accept as true all material allegations in the complaint, and construe them in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. See NL Industries, Inc. v. Kaplan, 792 F.2d 896, 898 \(9th Cir. 1986\). The Court may disregard factual allegations if such allegations are contradicted by the facts established by reference to exhibits attached to the complaint. See Durning v. First Boston Corp., 815 F.2d 1265, 1267 \(9th Cir. 1987\). Conclusory allegations, unsupported by the facts alleged, need not be accepted as true. See Holden v. Hagopian, 978 F.2d 1115, 1121 \(9th Cir. 1992\).

DISCUSSION

A. Breach of Fiduciary Duty

RadioShack argues that Strawflower's claim for breach of fiduciary duty is subject to dismissal because that there is no fiduciary relationship between the parties as a matter of law. Strawflower alleges that a [*8] fiduciary relationship existed between it and RadioShack because they were "business partners and/or joint venturers," ( see SAC P 30), and because "RadioShack insisted, demanded and required that Strawflower provide RadioShack with confidential business information, which RadioShack claimed it would then use for the joint benefit of Strawflower and RadioShack." ( See id. P 31.)

1. Business Partners

By statute, a fiduciary relationship exists among partners in a business partnership. See Cal. Corp. Code § 16404. "A partnership is defined by statute ... as an association of two or more persons to carry on as co-owners a business for profit." See Persson v. Smart Inventions, Inc., 125 Cal. App. 4th 1141, 1157, 23 Cal. Rptr. 3d 335 \(2005\) (citing Cal. Corp. Code § 16202\(a\)) (emphasis added).

Defendants argue that the lack of a partnership is clear from the face of the Contract, which states that the RadioShack store at issue is owned and operated solely by Strawflower. As defendants note, the Contract expressly provides: "The management, operation and ownership of the store are acknowledged to be solely under the control of [Strawflower]." ( See Fillerup [*9] Decl. in Support of Plaintiffs Motion For Leave to File Second Amended Complaint, Ex. A-1 ("Contract") § III.)<sup>1</sup> The Contract also identifies the store as "owned" by Strawflower,

---

<sup>1</sup> Although the Second Amended Complaint states that the Contract is attached thereto, it is not attached to the copy of the Second Amended Complaint that was filed with the Court. It was, however, attached to the copy of the Second Amended see id. § I.A), and further provides that Strawflower may not use the RadioShack trademark "unless it is clearly indicated that the store is owned and operated by [Strawflower]." ( See id. § I.D). Strawflower also agreed "not to do anything that would imply or indicate" that RadioShack "in any manner, either directly or indirectly owns, controls, [or] operates" Strawflower or its store. ( See id.) Although Strawflower correctly notes that the existence of a partnership is a question of fact, see, e.g., Persson, 125 Cal. App. 4th at 1157, Strawflower fails to allege or argue any facts that would support a finding that RadioShack is a co-owner of Strawflower's RadioShack store.

[*10] Accordingly, the Court will GRANT defendants' motion to dismiss Strawflower's claim for breach of fiduciary duty to the extent it is based on fiduciary duties created by a partnership.

2. Joint Venture

A fiduciary relationship exists among parties to a joint venture. See Oakland Raiders v. National Football League, 131 Cal. App. 4th 621, 632, 32 Cal. Rptr. 3d 266 (2005). "A joint venture, of necessity, 'requires an agreement under which the parties have (1) a joint interest in a common business, (2) an understanding that profits and losses will be shared, and (3) a right to joint control.'" See id. at 637-38 (citing Ramirez v. Long Beach Unified School Dist., 105 Cal. App. 4th 182, 193, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 128 (2002)).

Defendants argue that Strawflower's claim for breach of fiduciary duty is subject to dismissal, to the extent it is based on duties created by a joint venture, because there is no allegation that the parties intended to share in the profits and losses incurred in the operation of Strawflower's RadioShack store, and no allegation that the parties intended to share control of the operation of the store. The Court need not reach the issue of control, as the [*11] Contract does not provide for the sharing of profits and losses, and Strawflower neither alleges nor argues that the parties otherwise agreed to share profits and losses incurred in the operation of Strawflower's store. Rather, Strawflower argues that an agreement to share profits and losses is not a prerequisite to finding the existence of a joint venture. As noted above, however, the California Court of Appeal has held that "an understanding that profits and losses will be shared" is a requirement of a joint venture. See id.

Accordingly, the Court will GRANT defendants' motion to dismiss Strawflower's claim for breach of fiduciary duty to the extent it is based on fiduciary duties created by a joint venture.<sup>2</sup>

[*12] 3. Confidential Relationship

As noted, Strawflower also alleges that a fiduciary relationship was created between it and RadioShack because "RadioShack insisted, demanded and required that Strawflower provide RadioShack with confidential business information, which RadioShack claimed it would then use for the joint benefit of Strawflower and RadioShack." (See SAC 131.) Strawflower alleges that said confidential information included "customer information, sales information, and marketing information," which Strawflower states it would not have provided to RadioShack "but for the fiduciary duty that existed." (See id.) Strawflower alleges that RadioShack "used such confidential information for its Complaint Strawflower submitted to the Court in connection with its motion for leave to file the Second Amended Complaint. In any event, the Court may consider the Contract in ruling on the instant motion to dismiss, regardless of whether it is attached to the Complaint. See Branch v. Tunnell, 14 F.3d at 454.

<sup>2</sup> Although Strawflower does not allege in its complaint that a fiduciary relationship arose as a result of a franchisor-franchisee relationship between RadioShack and Strawflower, the Court notes that Strawflower does suggest in its opposition that such a duty exists. (See Opp. at 22-23.) The Ninth Circuit repeatedly has held, however, that a fiduciary relationship is not created by a franchisor-franchisee relationship. See, e.g., Boat & Motor Mart v. Sea Ray Boats, Inc., 825 F.2d 1285, 1292 (9th Cir. 1987) (holding "[t]he relation between a franchisor and a franchisee is not that of a fiduciary to a beneficiary" and that "[t]he California Franchise Relations Act has not imposed additional fiduciary duties on the franchisor"); Walker v. KFC Corp., 728 F.2d 1215, 1221 n.5 (9th Cir. 1984) (holding California legislature, in enacting Franchise Investment Law, did not intend to impose fiduciary duty on franchisors).

own benefit and not for the joint benefit of RadioShack and Strawflower." (See id. P 32.) RadioShack argues that Strawflower's breach of fiduciary duty claim is subject to dismissal, to the extent it is based on a confidential relationship between the parties, because Strawflower has not alleged a relationship of the type that gives rise to a fiduciary duty.

"[O]ne standing in a confidential or fiduciary relationship with another is subject to liability to the other [*13] for harm resulting from a breach of duty imposed by the relation." See Richelle L. v. Roman Catholic Archbishop, 106 Cal. App. 4th 257, 273, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 601 (2003) (internal quotation and citation omitted). The term "confidential relationship" refers to "an unequal partnership between parties in which one surrenders to the other some degree of control because of the trust and confidence he reposes in the other." See id. at 272 n.6. "A confidential relationship cannot be imposed on an individual, but must be voluntarily accepted" and "is not created simply by the receipt of confidential information." See id. The "essential elements" of a "confidential relation that gives rise to a fiduciary duty" are: "1) [t]he vulnerability of one party to the other which 2) results in the empowerment of the stronger party by the weaker which 3) empowerment has been solicited or accepted by the stronger party and 4) prevents the weaker party from effectively protecting itself." See id. at 272 (internal quotation and citation omitted). "The vulnerability that is the necessary predicate of a confidential relation, and which the law treats as absolutely essential, [*14] usually arises from advanced age, youth, lack of education, weakness of mind, grief, sickness or some other incapacity." Id. at 273 (internal quotation and citation omitted).

In Persson v. Smart Inventions, Inc., a case involving negotiations over the buyout of one 50% shareholder in a corporation by the other 50% shareholder, in which the selling party contended key information was withheld by the other party, the California Court of Appeal held that a confidential relationship giving rise to a fiduciary duty was not created "during arms-length business negotiations between the parties," finding the requisite "vulnerability" lacking in such relationship. See Persson, 125 Cal. App. 4th at 1146, 1162. Defendants argue that the instant transaction likewise was an arms-length business transaction in which no "confidential relationship" arose.

Strawflower does not allege any facts in its Second Amended Complaint to suggest that it suffered from the requisite "vulnerability." Moreover, in its opposition, Strawflower does not argue that it could amend the complaint to do so.

Accordingly, the Court will GRANT defendants' motion to dismiss Strawflower's [*15] claim for breach of fiduciary duty to the extent it is based on fiduciary duties created by a confidential relationship. As Strawflower has failed to adequately allege any basis for a fiduciary relationship between the parties, Strawflower's claim for breach of fiduciary duty will be dismissed in its entirety.

B. Antitrust Claims

RadioShack moves to dismiss Strawflower's claims for unlawful tying, brought under the Clayton Act, Sherman Act, and Cartwright Act (collectively, "antitrust claims"), on two separate grounds. First, RadioShack argues that the Court has already dismissed these claims with prejudice. Second, RadioShack argues that the antitrust claims, on their merits, fail to state a claim.

1. Prior Dismissal

In Strawflower's First Amended Complaint, it asserted causes of action under the Clayton Act, Sherman Act, and Cartwright Act, for unlawful tying. Although the claims were not clearly pleaded, Strawflower, in opposition to RadioShack's motion to dismiss the antitrust claims asserted in the First Amended Complaint, clarified that its antitrust claims were based on "an illegal tying arrangement in which RadioShack's sale of RadioShack branded products [*16] is tied to Strawflower's continued use of the RadioShack name." (See Order Granting in Part and Denying in Part Motion to Dismiss, filed June 3, 2005, at 5.) The Court granted RadioShack's motion to dismiss the antitrust claims, with prejudice, holding that, under the facts alleged, the RadioShack trademark could not be considered a separate product for purposes of a tying claim. (See id. at 6-7.)

In its Second Amended Complaint, Strawflower asserts a new theory in support of its antitrust claims.<sup>3</sup> Rather than contending that RadioShack violated the antitrust laws by tying the sale of RadioShack-branded products to the use of the RadioShack name, Strawflower now contends that RadioShack violated the antitrust laws by (1) tying Strawflower's purchase of RadioShack-branded products to Strawflower's purchase of non-RadioShack-branded products; and (2) tying Strawflower's use of the RadioShack name to the sale of non-RadioShack-branded products. (See SAC PP 49-50.)

[*17] The Court previously dismissed Strawflower's antitrust claims, with prejudice, based on the theory then asserted. As Strawflower now asserts a new theory in support of its antitrust claims, the Court's prior dismissal does not preclude Strawflower from asserting its antitrust claims, as currently pleaded.

2. Tying - Legal Standard

The Supreme Court has held, with respect to the definition of tying, that "the standards used by the [Sherman Act and Clayton Act] are the same." See *Jefferson Parish Hospital District No. 2 v. Hyde*, 466 U.S. 2, 23 n.39, 104 S. Ct. 1551, 80 L. Ed. 2d 2 \(1984\). Federal decisions interpreting the Sherman Act and Clayton Act with respect to tying likewise are applicable to tying claims brought under the California Cartwright Act, as the sections of the Cartwright Act addressing tying were modeled after the Sherman and Clayton Acts. See *Hamro v. Shell Oil Co.*, 674 F.2d 784, 786 \(9th Cir. 1982\). Accordingly, and because the parties treat the antitrust claims interchangeably, the Court will analyze together all three antitrust claims asserted by Strawflower.

"A tying arrangement is an agreement by a party to sell one product but only [*18] on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different (or tied) product, or at least agrees that he will not purchase that product from any other supplier." *Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Services, Inc.*, 504 U.S. 451, 461, 112 S. Ct. 2072, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265 \(1992\) (internal quotation and citation omitted). The Supreme Court has held that "[s]uch an arrangement violates § 1 of the Sherman Act if the seller has appreciable economic power in the tying market and if the arrangement affects a substantial volume of commerce in the tied market." See id. "The essential characteristic of an invalid tying arrangement lies in the seller's exploitation of its control over the tying product to force the buyer into the purchase of a tied product that the buyer either did not want at all, or might have preferred to purchase elsewhere on different terms." *Id. at 464 n.9* (internal quotation and citation omitted). "When such 'forcing' is present, competition on the merits in the market for the tied item is restrained and the Sherman Act is violated." Id.; see also *Paladin Associates, Inc. v. Montana Power Co.*, 328 F.3d 1145, 1159 \(9th Cir. 2003\) (holding [*19] elements of tying claim are: "(1) that there exist two distinct products or services in different markets whose sales are tied together; (2) that the seller possesses appreciable economic power in the tying product market sufficient to coerce acceptance of the tied market; and (3) that the tying arrangement affects a not insubstantial volume of commerce in the tied product market") (internal quotation and citation omitted).

3. Separate Products

As noted, Strawflower alleges that RadioShack engaged in unlawful tying by conditioning Strawflower's ability to purchase RadioShack-branded products and to use the RadioShack trademark (the tying products) on its purchase of non-RadioShack-branded products from RadioShack (the tied products).<sup>4</sup> (See SAC PP 49-50.)

---

<sup>3</sup>Contrary to RadioShack's argument, the doctrine of res judicata is inapplicable, particularly in light of the Court's order of July 26, 2005, granting Strawflower leave to amend.

<sup>4</sup>Strawflower defines the term "RadioShack-branded product" to mean "a product with a label and packaging bearing the name 'RadioShack.'" (See SAC P 37.) By contrast, a "non-RadioShack-branded product" is "a product not produced by RadioShack and bearing some name other than RadioShack on the label and packaging, for instance, Hewlett-Packard, Lexmark, or Eveready." (See id.)

[*20] RadioShack's first argument in support of dismissal is that Strawflower's new allegations, as a legal matter, fare no better than those previously dismissed by the Court. Strawflower previously argued that RadioShack unlawfully tied the use of its trademark to Strawflower's sale of RadioShack-branded products; in other words, that RadioShack permitted Strawflower to use the RadioShack name only if Strawflower sold certain RadioShack products. The Court dismissed Strawflower's antitrust claims, as based on that theory, because the Ninth Circuit has held that, under such circumstances, a trademark may not be considered a separate product for purposes of a tying claim.

As discussed in this Court's previous order of dismissal, the Ninth Circuit, in Krehl v. Baskin-Robbins Ice Cream Co., 664 F.2d 1348 (9th Cir. 1982), rejected the plaintiff's argument therein that Baskin-Robbins' policy of conditioning the grant of a franchise upon the purchase of ice cream exclusively from Baskin-Robbins constituted an unlawful tying of the Baskin-Robbins trademark to the ice cream products the plaintiff was compelled to purchase, in violation of the Sherman Act. See id. at 1352-54. [*21] The Ninth Circuit held that in "a distribution type" franchise, such as that employed by Baskin-Robbins, "the franchised outlets serve merely as conduits through which the trademarked goods of the franchisor flow to the ultimate consumer" and the trademark in a distribution franchise "serves merely as a representation of the end product marketed by the system." See id. at 1353-54. As the Ninth Circuit observed, "[b]ecause the prohibition of tying arrangements is designed to strike solely at the use of a dominant desired product to compel the purchase of a second undesired commodity," there can be no claim for unlawful tying "where the trademark serves only to identify the allegedly tied product." See id. at 1354; see also Hamro v. Shell Oil Co., 674 F.2d at 786-87 (rejecting plaintiffs claim that Shell engaged in unlawful tying in violation of Cartwright Act by authorizing plaintiff to use Shell's trademark at his service station only if he purchased Shell gasoline; holding "as a matter of law the Shell trademark and Shell gasoline are not separate and distinct products"). Consequently, this Court found that any requirement that [*22] Strawflower purchase RadioShack-branded products in order to use the RadioShack trademark fell squarely within the holdings of Krehl and Hamro and did not state a claim for unlawful tying in violation of the antitrust laws. (See Order Granting in Part and Denying in Part Motion to Dismiss, filed June 3, 2005, at 5-8.)

In the instant complaint, Strawflower alleges that RadioShack is tying Strawflower's ability to sell RadioShack-branded products and its use of the RadioShack trademark to the purchase of non-RadioShack-branded products from RadioShack. (See SAC PP 49-50.) Contrary to RadioShack's argument, these allegations differ materially from the allegations in the First Amended Complaint. First, Strawflower's current allegation that RadioShack conditioned Strawflower's access to RadioShack-branded products on its purchase of non-RadioShack-branded products raises a classic tying claim. See Eastman Kodak, 504 U.S. at 461 (defining "tying arrangement" as "an agreement by one party to sell one product only on the condition that the buyer also purchases a different (or tied) product, or at least agrees that he will not purchase that product from any [*23] other supplier"). Additionally, as currently pleaded, the RadioShack trademark is not being used to identify the allegedly tied product and, consequently, the trademark may be considered to be a separate product for purposes of a tying claim. See Krehl, 664 F.2d at 1352 (noting that "under certain circumstances, a trademark may be sufficiently unrelated to the alleged tied product to warrant treatment as a separate item"); see also Siegel v. Chicken Delight, Inc., 448 F.2d 43 (9th Cir. 1971) (finding unlawful tying in violation of Sherman Act where chicken franchise conditioned use of trademark on purchase of cooking equipment, packaging supplies, and mixes that were not manufactured by franchisor).<sup>5</sup>

---

<sup>5</sup> Because the RadioShack trademark cannot be said to identify products sold in RadioShack stores "bearing some name other than RadioShack on the label and packaging, for instance, Hewlett-Packard, Lexmark, or Eveready," ( see id.), the instant case is distinguishable from cases cited by RadioShack in which the product at issue was manufactured by a third party, but sold under the defendant's trademark, not under the trademark of the manufacturer. See, e.g., Krehl, 664 F.2d at 1354 n.14 (ice cream sold under Baskin-Robbins trademark but not manufactured by Baskin-Robbins); Power Test Petroleum Distributors, Inc. v. Calcu Gas, 754 F.2d 91, 98 (2nd Cir. 1985) (gasoline sold under PowerTest trademark but not manufactured by PowerTest); Jack Walters & Sons Corp. v. Morton Building, Inc., 737 F.2d 698, 704 (7th Cir. 1984) (prefabricated building sold under Morton trademark although all components not manufactured by Morton).

[*24] Accordingly, the Court rejects RadioShack's argument that the legal issues presented by Strawflower's current allegations are indistinguishable as a legal matter from those presented by the allegations in its prior complaint.

4. Purchase of Allegedly Tied Products

RadioShack further argues that the antitrust claims are subject to dismissal because Strawflower fails to allege that it purchased any of the allegedly tied products. Strawflower alleges that during the first twenty years after the Contract was executed, it purchased non-RadioShack-branded products only from independent distributors. (See SAC 139.) Thereafter, Strawflower alleges, RadioShack implemented a policy requiring Strawflower to buy non-RadioShack-branded products only from RadioShack. (See id. P 40.) Strawflower alleges that RadioShack terminated the Contract "based upon RadioShack's claim that Strawflower has not complied with the policy." (See id. P 47.) As RadioShack points out, Strawflower does not allege that it, in fact, purchased any non-RadioShack-branded products from RadioShack.

The Ninth Circuit has stated that an "essential" element of a tying claim is "proof that the seller [*25] coerced a buyer to purchase the tied product." See Paladin Associates v. Montana Power Co., 328 F.3d at 1159 (emphasis in original). In Paladin, the Ninth Circuit further noted that "mere sales pressure" does not constitute evidence of the requisite coercion. See id. at 1160. Because Paladin did not involve a plaintiff who refused to purchase the tied product, the Ninth Circuit did not address whether evidence of acts that could be described as attempted coercion were sufficient to state a tying claim. Other circuits, however, have held that no tying claim can be stated where the plaintiff refused to purchase the tied product. See, e.g., Famous Brands, Inc. v. David Sherman Corp., 814 F.2d 517, 523 (8th Cir. 1987) (citing Unijax, Inc. v. Champion Int'l, Inc., 683 F.2d 678, 685 (2nd Cir. 1982)) ("Actual coercion by the seller that in fact forces the buyer to purchase the tied product is an indispensable element of a tying violation.")). Additionally, a leading antitrust treatise concurs that "an express tying contract that is proposed to buyers but rejected by them does not constitute a tie" and that "the [*26] mere termination or rejection of a dealer or customer who refuses to comply with a tie" is not unlawful tying. See Areeda, Elhauge, and Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law, §§ 1753a, 1753f (2d ed. 2004).

In its opposition, Strawflower states that it did purchase non-RadioShack-brand products from RadioShack, although it did not purchase enough of the products to satisfy RadioShack. (See Opp. at 11; see also Fillerup Decl. Ex. A (Mackintosh Decl. P 11.) In reply, RadioShack argues that Strawflower's purchase of some non-RadioShack products from RadioShack is not sufficient to support an antitrust claim if Strawflower did not purchase the percentage of such products required by RadioShack. This argument was not addressed in RadioShack's opening brief, however, and Strawflower has not had an opportunity to respond to it.

Accordingly, the Court will GRANT RadioShack's motion to dismiss Strawflower's antitrust claims, for failure to allege actual purchase, but will afford Strawflower leave to amend its antitrust claims to allege that it purchased non-RadioShack-branded products from RadioShack. Thereafter, if RadioShack still wishes to move to dismiss based on the argument raised [*27] in its reply, it may do so.

5. Market Power

As an additional ground for dismissal of the antitrust claims, RadioShack argues that Strawflower has failed to adequately allege that RadioShack possesses the requisite market power with respect to any of the alleged tying products. As noted, Strawflower alleges the tying products are RadioShack-branded products and the RadioShack trademark. (See SAC PP 49-50.)

The Ninth Circuit has held that an essential element of a tying claim is "that the seller possesses appreciable economic power in the tying product market sufficient to coerce acceptance of the tied market." See Paladin Associates, Inc. v. Montana Power Co., 328 F.3d at 1159. "Market power is the power to force a purchaser to do something that he would not do in a competitive market." See Eastman Kodak, 504 U.S. at 464 (internal quotation and citation omitted). "The existence of such power ordinarily is inferred from the seller's possession of a predominant share of the market." See id.

Strawflower does not allege that RadioShack has a predominant share of the market for any of the products alleged to be RadioShack-branded products, [*28] including "batteries, ionizers, power supplies, toys, and massagers." See SAC P 49.) Rather, Strawflower alleges it "spent the past 25 years and substantial time and money in developing the RadioShack name and the market for RadioShack products," that this investment "locked Strawflower into a relationship with RadioShack," and that "RadioShack took advantage of Strawflower's locked-in position" by initiating a new policy requiring Strawflower to purchase non-RadioShack-branded products only from RadioShack. ( See SAC P 51.)

Plaintiffs rely on Eastman Kodak, in which the Supreme Court addressed this "lock-in" theory of market power. In Eastman Kodak, the issue was whether Eastman Kodak had unlawfully tied the sale of service for Kodak copying machines to the sale of parts for such machines. See *id. at 459*. Eastman Kodak argued that because it lacked market power in the market for the machines themselves, it could not be found to have market power in the "aftermarket" for service and parts for the machines, as a matter of law. See *id. at 456*. The Supreme Court rejected the argument. The Supreme Court first noted that plaintiffs had submitted [*29] evidence that Kodak did in fact have market power in the parts market. See *id. at 464-65*. Consequently, the Supreme Court held, Kodak could not demonstrate it was entitled to summary judgment unless it showed that despite such evidence, "an inference of market power [was] unreasonable." See *id. at 469*. The Supreme Court observed that Kodak's theory, "that lack of power in the equipment market necessarily precludes power in the aftermarket," rested on the assumption that if Kodak raised its prices for parts and service above competitive levels, customers would stop buying Kodak equipment. See *id. at 469-70*. The Supreme Court found, however, that "[i]f the cost of switching is high, consumers who already have purchased the equipment, and thus are 'locked in,' will tolerate some level of service-price increases before changing equipment brands" and, consequently, "a seller profitably could maintain supracompetitive prices in the aftermarket if the switching costs were high relative to the increase in service prices, and the number of locked-in customers were high relative to the number of new purchasers." See *id. at 475*. [*30] Because the plaintiffs presented evidence that switching costs for Kodak equipment owners were very high, the Supreme Court concluded "a question of fact" existed as to "whether information costs and switching costs foil the simple assumption that the equipment and service markets act as pure complements to each other." See *id. at 477*. Eastman Kodak thus suggests that a plaintiff may prove market power by showing such plaintiff was economically "locked in" to a business relationship with the defendant. See also Subsolutions, Inc. v. Doctor's Associates, Inc., *62 F. Supp. 2d 616, 625-26 \(D. Conn. 1999\)* (holding plaintiff adequately alleged market power by reference to Eastman Kodak lock-in theory).

In relying on the Eastman Kodak "lock-in" theory to prove the defendant has the requisite market power, a plaintiff still must allege, however, that the challenged activity affected a substantial portion of the relevant market. See Universal Avionics Systems Corp. v. Rockwell Int'l Corp., *184 F. Supp. 2d 947, 955 \(D. Ariz. 2001\)* (holding challenged conduct must affect "substantial number of customers"); see also Areeda, [*31] Elhauge and Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law, § 1740a (2d ed. 2004) (same). In Eastman Kodak, the challenged conduct affected all customers who owned Kodak photocopiers and all independent servicing organizations who serviced Kodak photocopiers; in Subsolutions, the challenged conduct affected all Subway franchisees. See Eastman Kodak, *504 U.S. at 458, 477*; see Subsolutions, *62 F. Supp. 2d at 620*. Here, by contrast, Strawflower does not allege that the challenged RadioShack policy applied to all RadioShack stores, but, rather, alleges that "RadioShack implemented a policy that required Strawflower to buy non-RadioShack-branded products directly from RadioShack." (See SAC 140 (emphasis added).)

Accordingly, the Court will GRANT RadioShack's motion to dismiss Strawflower's antitrust claims, for failure to adequately allege market power. The Court will, however, afford Strawflower leave to amend.

6. Antitrust Injury

RadioShack's final argument in support of dismissal of the antitrust claims is that Strawflower lacks standing to assert such claims because it has failed to allege that it suffered antitrust injury.

A suit for violation [*32] of the Clayton Act or the Sherman Act may be brought by "any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws[]." See 15 U.S.C. § 15.<sup>6</sup> A plaintiff, however, "must prove the existence of antitrust injury, which is to say injury of the type the antitrust laws were intended to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful." See Atlantic Richfield Co. v. USA Petroleum Co., 495 U.S. 328, 334, 110 S. Ct. 1884, 109 L. Ed. 2d 333 \(1990\) (internal quotation and citation omitted; emphasis in original). "[I]njury, although causally related to an antitrust violation, nevertheless will not qualify as 'antitrust injury' unless it is attributable to an anti-competitive aspect of the practice under scrutiny, since it is inimical to the antitrust laws to award damages for losses stemming from continued competition." Id. (internal quotations and citations omitted). "Where the defendant's conduct harms the plaintiff without adversely affecting competition generally, there is no antitrust injury." See Paladin, 328 F.3d at 1158.

[*33] Here, Strawflower expressly alleges that RadioShack's requirement that Strawflower purchase non-RadioShack-branded products only from RadioShack harmed competition because, according to Strawflower, "it precluded Strawflower from buying non-RadioShack-branded products at lower prices and on better terms from sellers other than RadioShack, and it forced Strawflower to sell at higher prices to consumers." (See SAC P 48.) RadioShack argues that Strawflower nonetheless cannot show it suffered antitrust injury because it has not alleged that it was coerced into buying undesired products from RadioShack. As noted above, Strawflower states in its opposition that it did purchase such products from RadioShack, and the Court will afford Strawflower leave to amend the complaint to so allege.

Accordingly, the Court will GRANT RadioShack's motion to dismiss Strawflower's antitrust claims, for failure to allege antitrust injury, with leave to amend.

C. Declaratory Relief Claims

RadioShack moves to dismiss or strike both of Strawflower's claims for declaratory relief on the ground that such claims are duplicative of Strawflower's other claims.

By statute, the Court "may," but is [*34] not required to, "declare the rights and other legal relations of any interested party seeking such declaration, whether or not further relief is or could be sought." See 28 U.S.C. § 2201\(a\); see also Wilton v. Seven Falls Co., 515 U.S. 277, 282, 115 S. Ct. 2137, 132 L. Ed. 2d 214 \(1995\) (noting courts' discretion to entertain claim for declaratory judgment). Rule 57 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure provides that "[t]he existence of another adequate remedy does not preclude a judgment for declaratory relief in cases where it is appropriate." See Fed. R. Civ. Proc. 57. The Supreme Court has held, however, that a court has the discretion to dismiss a claim for declaratory relief if "a declaratory judgment would serve no useful purpose." See Wilton, 515 U.S. at 288.

1. Second Claim For Relief

---

<sup>6</sup>The Cartwright Act similarly confers standing on "any person who is injured in his or her business or property by reason of anything forbidden or declared unlawful by [the Cartwright Act], regardless whether such injured person deals directly or indirectly with the defendant." See In re Napster, Inc. Copyright Litigation, 354 F. Supp. 2d 1113, 1125 \(N.D. Cal. 2005\) (citing, Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 16750\(a\).) As Strawflower correctly notes, the definition of "antitrust injury" under California law is less restrictive than the federal standard, in that California law expressly confers antitrust standing on persons who are injured indirectly by the defendant's anticompetitive conduct. See id. As Strawflower alleges that it was injured directly by RadioShack, however, the difference appears immaterial for purposes of the instant motion, and no party argues to the contrary.

Strawflower seeks, in its second claim for relief, a judgment declaring that RadioShack breached the Contract, declaring that Strawflower did not breach the Contract, and declaring any further relief arising out of the Contract that is "necessary, just and/or proper." (See SAC P 18.) This claim, as defendants correctly note, [*35] is entirely duplicative of Strawflower's cause of action for breach of contract. As a separate claim for a declaratory judgment on the issue serves "no useful purpose" in the instant litigation, the Court will GRANT defendants' motion to dismiss the second claim for relief.

2. Third Claim For Relief

Strawflower seeks, in its third claim for relief, a declaratory judgment that the parties had a franchisor-franchisee relationship within the meaning of the CFIL and CFRA and that, consequently, RadioShack was subject to all the duties and obligations of a franchisor under those statutes. (See SAC P 27.) Strawflower further alleges that RadioShack "failed to comply with a franchisor's obligations in connection with termination of a franchise." (See id. P 25.)

RadioShack argues that the third claim for relief should be dismissed as duplicative of Strawflower's claim for unfair competition in violation of § 17200. Strawflower alleges that RadioShack engaged in unfair competition in violation of § 17200 by violating the CFIL and CFRA, as well as by violating the Clayton Act, Sherman Act, and the Cartwright Act. (See id. PP 58-59.) Because Strawflower has alleged multiple [*36] bases for liability under § 17200, it is conceivable the Court could find that RadioShack engaged in unfair competition without reaching the merits of Strawflower's claim under the CFIL and CFRA. Consequently, Strawflower's claim for a declaratory judgment that the parties had a franchisor-franchisee relationship within the meaning of the CFIL and CFRA and that, consequently, RadioShack was subject to all the duties and obligations of a franchisor under those statutes, ( see SAC P 27), is not necessarily duplicative of Strawflower's § 17200 claim.

Accordingly, the Court will DENY RadioShack's motion to dismiss the third claim for relief.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above, RadioShack's motion to dismiss is hereby GRANTED in part and DENIED in part, as follows:

1. The motion to dismiss Strawflower's claim for breach of fiduciary duty is GRANTED, and said claim is DISMISSED with prejudice.
2. The motion to dismiss Strawflower's antitrust claims is GRANTED, with leave to amend.
3. The motion to dismiss Strawflower's second claim for relief, for a declaratory judgment, is GRANTED.
4. The motion to dismiss Strawflower's third claim for relief, for a declaratory [*37] judgment, is DENIED.
5. Strawflower may file a Third Amended Complaint within 21 days of the date of this order. If Strawflower fails to timely file a Third Amended Complaint, all claims that have been dismissed with leave to amend will be dismissed with prejudice.

This order terminates Docket No. 40.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Dated: September 20, 2005

MAXINE M. CHESNEY

United States District Judge

---

End of Document

Flying Eagle Espresso, Inc. v. Host Int'l, Inc.

United States District Court for the Western District of Washington

September 21, 2005, Decided ; September 22, 2005, Filed

NO. C04-1551P

Reporter

2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 37679 *; 2005 WL 2318827

FLYING EAGLE ESPRESSO, INC., Plaintiff(s), v. HOST INTERNATIONAL INC., et al., Defendant(s).

Prior History: Flying Eagle Espresso, Inc. v. Host Int'l Inc., 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 54837 \(W.D. Wash., Jan. 19, 2005\)

Core Terms

---

summary judgment, cause of action, unionization, lease, concessionaires, airport, violations, renewal, allegations, anti-trust, Harmony, material fact, negotiating, state actor, conspiracy, employees, sublease, parties, courts, civil conspiracy, produce evidence, exemption, accomplish, regulated, coercion, rights, solicitation, sublessees, disputed, communications

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

HN1 [] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

Summary judgment is not warranted if a material issue of fact exists for trial.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

HN2 [] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

On a motion for summary judgment, the underlying facts are viewed in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > Appropriateness

HN3 [] Entitlement as Matter of Law, Appropriateness

Summary judgment will not lie if the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Absence of Essential Element

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Movant Persuasion & Proof

HN4 Burdens of Proof, Absence of Essential Element

A party moving for summary judgment has the burden to show initially the absence of a genuine issue concerning any material fact. This can be done by either producing evidence negating an essential element of plaintiff's claim or by showing that plaintiff does not have enough evidence of an essential element to carry its ultimate burden at trial.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Burdens of Proof > Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

HN5 Burdens of Proof, Nonmovant Persuasion & Proof

On a motion for summary judgment, once the moving party has met its initial burden, the burden shifts to the nonmoving party to establish the existence of an issue of fact regarding an element essential to that party's case, and on which that party will bear the burden of proof at trial. To discharge this burden, the nonmoving party cannot rely on its pleadings, but instead must have evidence showing that there is a genuine issue for trial.

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

HN6 Summary Judgment, Entitlement as Matter of Law

At the summary judgment stage, the judge's function is not to weigh the evidence but to determine whether there is a genuine issue for trial.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN7 Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

In interpreting the Washington Consumer Protection Act, state courts are to look to federal precedent for guidance, but it is not controlling.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN8 Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

The directive to be "guided by" federal law in interpreting the Washington Consumer Protection Act does not mean that state courts are bound to follow it. But neither are state courts free to ignore it, and indeed in practice Washington courts have uniformly followed federal precedent in matters described under the Consumer Protection Act. Any departure from federal law must be for a reason rooted in Washington statutes or case law and not in the general policy arguments a court would weigh if the issue came before it as a matter of first impression.

Civil Procedure > Preliminary Considerations > Federal & State Interrelationships > Erie Doctrine

HN9 Federal & State Interrelationships, Erie Doctrine

When interpreting state law, federal courts are bound by decisions of the state's highest court. In the absence of such a decision, a federal court must predict how the highest state court would decide the issue.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN10 Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

The Washington Consumer Protection Act is patterned after federal law, and Wash. Rev. Code § 19.86.920 anticipates that state courts will be guided by federal court interpretation of federal antitrust law. Section 19.86.920 also commands that the regulatory scheme be liberally construed that its beneficial purposes may be served. However, this admonition does not mean that state courts are bound to follow federal law. A departure from following the federal precedent of the state actor immunity doctrine must have a firm foundation in state authority.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN11 Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Wash. Rev. Code § 19.86.170 states that the provisions of the Washington Consumer Protection Act, including its anti-trust provisions, do not apply to actions or transactions permitted by any other regulatory body or officer acting under statutory authority of the state.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Scope

Governments > Legislation > Interpretation

HN12 Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

In delineating the application of Wash. Rev. Code § 19.86.170, Washington courts have taken the approach that "liberal construction" is a command that the coverage of an act's provisions in fact be liberally construed and that its exceptions be narrowly confined. As a result, Washington courts have carefully scrutinized both the "action or transaction" involved and the permission required to qualify for exemption under in § 19.86.170.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Scope

**HN13** [blue icon] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

The Washington Supreme Court has articulated a narrow interpretation of the phrase "action or transaction" in Wash. Rev. Code § 19.86.170 such that a generally regulated practice does not automatically receive exemption from claims under the Washington Consumer Protection Act. If a particular practice found to be unfair or deceptive is not regulated, even though the business is regulated generally, it would appear to be the legislative intent that the provisions of the act should apply.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Parker State Action Doctrine > Scope

**HN14** [blue icon] Exemptions & Immunities, Parker State Action Doctrine

Washington courts making an "exemption" analysis under Wash. Rev. Code § 19.86.170 have closely analyzed the activity at issue for specific permission and narrowly construed that permission in order to avoid conflict with the "liberal construction" intent of the Washington legislature. As a result, "permission" necessitates overt affirmative action to permit the activity by the entity involved in the complaint. Washington takes a very limited approach to its application of the exemption for activities permitted by most agencies.

Transportation Law > Air & Space Transportation > Airports > General Overview

**HN15** [blue icon] Air & Space Transportation, Airports

Wash. Rev. Code § 14.08.120 permits a municipality to confer the privileges of concession of supplying upon its airports goods, commodities, things, services and facilities, § 14.08.120\(4\), and to sell or lease any property, real or personal, acquired for airport purposes and belonging to the municipality, which, in the judgment of its governing body, may not be required for aircraft landings, aircraft takeoffs, or related aeronautic purposes, in accordance with the laws of the state, § 14.08.120\(5\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > Monopoly Power

**HN16** [blue icon] Actual Monopolization, Monopoly Power

An anti-trust plaintiff has the burden to prove possession of monopoly power in a relevant market.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Sherman Act

**HN17** [blue icon] Private Actions, Sherman Act

To establish an anti-trust claim, it is not enough to claim that the plaintiff's own operations were injured; the antitrust laws were enacted for the protection of competition, not competitors.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

**HN18** [blue icon] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

To prevail in a private action under the Washington Consumer Protection Act, a plaintiff must establish five distinct elements: (1) an unfair or deceptive act or practice; (2) occurring in trade or commerce; (3) public interest impact; (4) injury to plaintiff in his or her business or property; and (5) causation. The plaintiff must satisfy all five elements in order to prevail; in the summary judgment context, a plaintiff has the burden to establish, at a minimum, the existence of disputed issues of material fact regarding each of the elements of its cause of action.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

HN19 [L] Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices, State Regulation

Ordinarily, a breach of a private contract affecting no one but the parties to the contract is not an act or practice affecting the public interest for purposes of the Washington Consumer Protection Act. A complainant can refashion a private dispute into one with an impact on the public by: (1) a "per se" showing of the violation of a statute with a specific legislative declaration of public interest; or (2) a showing that additional plaintiffs have been or will be impacted in a similar manner. The factors that need to be proven in this regard include: (1) were the alleged acts committed in the course of defendant's business? (2) did defendant advertise to the public in general? (3) did defendant actively solicit the plaintiff, indicating potential solicitation of others? and (4) did plaintiff and defendant occupy unequal bargaining positions? While no one factor is dispositive and it is not necessary that all of them be established, the plaintiff is required to establish sufficient indicia of effect on public interest from which a trier of fact could reasonably find public interest impact.

Torts > ... > Concerted Action > Civil Conspiracy > Elements

HN20 [L] Civil Conspiracy, Elements

The establishment of a civil conspiracy requires a plaintiff to demonstrate two elements: (1) that two or more parties combined to accomplish an unlawful purpose or combined to accomplish a lawful purpose by unlawful means, and (2) the conspirators entered into an agreement to accomplish the conspiracy.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Scope

HN21 [L] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

The Noerr-Pennington doctrine provides First Amendment protection to lobbying and legislative activities regardless of the party's subjective goal or interest.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Exemptions & Immunities > Noerr-Pennington Doctrine > Scope

HN22 [L] Exemptions & Immunities, Noerr-Pennington Doctrine

The protection of the Noerr-Pennington doctrine has been extended to unions.

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Unfair Labor Practices > Union Violations > Secondary Activities

HN23 [L] Union Violations, Secondary Activities

A "hot cargo agreement" is an agreement between a union and a secondary (union) employer to boycott the goods or services of a primary (non-union) business.

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Unfair Labor Practices > Union Violations > Secondary Activities

HN24 [↓] Union Violations, Secondary Activities

The two-part test for a lawful work-preservation clause requires proof that: (1) the object of the clause is preservation of work traditionally performed by the union, and (2) the contracting employer has the power to give the employees the work at issue (the "right of control" test).

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Unfair Labor Practices > Union Violations > Secondary Activities

HN25 [↓] Union Violations, Secondary Activities

29 U.S.C.S. § 158(b)(4)(B) bars unions from forcing or requiring any person to cease doing business with any other person.

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Unfair Labor Practices > Union Violations > Secondary Activities

HN26 [↓] Union Violations, Secondary Activities

29 U.S.C.S. § 158(e) defines as an unfair labor practice any contract or agreement, express or implied between a union and an employer to cease doing business with any other person.

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Unfair Labor Practices > Union Violations > Secondary Activities

HN27 [↓] Union Violations, Secondary Activities

Both 29 U.S.C.S. § 159(b)(4)(B) and 29 U.S.C.S. § 158(e) are aimed at the practice of "secondary boycotts," whereby a union can apply pressure on one (non-union) employer through the union's relationship with another (union) employer. Violations of § 158(b)(4) cover a wide range of actions but require some proof of coercion, while § 158(e) is aimed at "hot cargo agreements" wherein a union and employer enter into an agreement that the employer will not do business with a second employer whom the union considers to be unfair to organized labor.

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Unfair Labor Practices > Union Violations > Secondary Activities

HN28 [↓] Union Violations, Secondary Activities

The term "coerce" extends to any form of economic pressure of a compelling or restraining nature.

Torts > ... > Business Relationships > Intentional Interference > Elements

HN29 [↓] Intentional Interference, Elements

There are five elements to establishing a cause of action for tortious interference with a business expectancy: (1) a valid contract or business expectancy; (2) of which the defendant had knowledge; (3) an intentional interference inducing or causing a breach of the contract or expectancy; (4) existence of an improper motive or use of an improper means in the interference; (5) resulting in damages.

Torts > ... > Business Relationships > Intentional Interference > Elements

**HN30** [L] Intentional Interference, Elements

A valid business expectancy includes any prospective contractual or business relationship that would be of pecuniary value.

Civil Rights Law > ... > Section 1983 Actions > Elements > General Overview

**HN31** [L] Section 1983 Actions, Elements

The elements of a 42 U.S.C.S. § 1983 claim are: (1) the conduct complained of was committed by a person acting under color of state law; and (2) the conduct deprived a person of rights, privileges, or immunities secured by the Constitution or laws of the United States.

Civil Rights Law > ... > Elements > Color of State Law > Joint Ventures

**HN32** [L] Color of State Law, Joint Ventures

The "state actor" component of a 42 U.S.C.S. § 1983 claim can be established by showing that a private person conspired with a local governmental official.

Civil Rights Law > ... > Elements > Color of State Law > Joint Ventures

**HN33** [L] Color of State Law, Joint Ventures

A defendant's knowledge of and participation in a conspiracy may be inferred from circumstantial evidence from evidence of the defendant's actions.

Labor & Employment Law > ... > Unfair Labor Practices > Union Violations > Secondary Activities

**HN34** [L] Union Violations, Secondary Activities

Congress has given parties with allegations of violations of 29 U.S.C.S. § 158\(b\)\(4\) the right to sue a union for damages in any district court of the United States. 29 U.S.C.S. § 187\(b\).

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Unfair Labor Practices > Employer Violations > Interference With Protected Activities

Civil Rights Law > ... > Section 1983 Actions > Scope > Government Actions

HN35 [blue icon] Employer Violations, Interference With Protected Activities

The National Labor Relations Act does not preclude a 42 U.S.C.S. § 1983 action arising from government interference with federally-protected labor rights.

Civil Rights Law > ... > Elements > Color of State Law > Joint Ventures

HN36 [blue icon] Color of State Law, Joint Ventures

Private parties may be liable under 42 U.S.C.S. § 1983 when they join with government entities to interfere with federally-protected rights.

Civil Rights Law > ... > Section 1983 Actions > Elements > Protected Rights

HN37 [blue icon] Elements, Protected Rights

In a 42 U.S.C.S. § 1983 suit, the burden is on the defendant to establish that § 1983 protection has been withdrawn for violation of a particular federal right.

Counsel: [*1] For Flying Eagle Espresso Inc, Plaintiff: Andrew J. Kinstler, Phillip D. Noble, HELSELL FETTERMAN LLP, SEATTLE, WA; Larry Setchell, HELSELL FETTERMAN LLP (SEA), SEATTLE, WA.

For Host International Inc, Defendant: Brendan Thomas Mangan, HELLER EHRMAN LLP, SEATTLE, WA; Mary Helen Medina, HOST MARRIOTT SERVICES HOST, LEGAL DEPARTMENT, BETHESDA, MD; Molly A Terwilliger, HELLER EHRMAN LLP (WA), SEATTLE, WA.

For Unite Here Local 8, formerly known as, Hotel Employees And Restaurant, Employees Union Local No 8, Defendant: J Thomas Bowen, Kristin L Martin, Michael T Anderson, Richard G McCracken, DAVIS COWELL & BOWE, SAN FRANCISCO, CA; Terrance M Costello, Dmitri Iglitzin, SCHWERIN CAMPBELL BARNARD, LLP, SEATTLE, WA.

For Port of Seattle, Defendant: Robert Leslie Christie, CHRISTIE LAW GROUP PLLC, SEATTLE, WA; Craig R Watson, PORT OF SEATTLE, SEATTLE, WA.

For Host International Inc, Counter Claimant: Brendan Thomas Mangan, HELLER EHRMAN LLP, SEATTLE, WA; Molly A Terwilliger, HELLER EHRMAN LLP (WA), SEATTLE, WA.

For Host International Inc, Counter Claimant: Molly A Terwilliger, HELLER EHRMAN LLP (WA), SEATTLE, WA.

Judges: Marsha J. Pechman, United States District Judge.

Opinion by: Marsha J. Pechman

Opinion

---

ORDER ON MOTIONS FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

The above-entitled Court, having received and reviewed the motions of all three Defendants for summary judgment in this matter, all the pleadings filed in response to said motions, and all exhibits and declarations attached thereto, and having heard oral argument thereon, makes the following ruling:

[*2] IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that summary judgment will be GRANTED to all Defendants on the following causes of action:

1. Violations of the Washington anti-trust statutes (RCW 19.86.030, 19.86.040)
2. Violations of the Washington Consumer Protection Act (RCW 19.86.020)

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that summary judgment will be DENIED on the following causes of action:

1. Civil conspiracy under Washington state law (as to all Defendants)
2. Violations of 42 U.S.C. § 1983 (as to all Defendants)
3. Violations of the National Labor Relations Act, 29 U.S.C. §§ 158\(b\)\(4\) and \(e\) (as to Defendant Hotel Employees and Restaurant Employees Union Local No. 8 only)
4. Allegations of tortious interference with a business [*3] expectancy (as to Defendants the Port of Seattle and Hotel Employees and Restaurant Employees Union Local No. 8 only).

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that summary judgment as to the cause of action against Defendant the Port of Seattle for contempt of court will be DENIED; however, Plaintiff is ordered to move the Court for an order of referral of the civil contempt cause of action to the Honorable Barbara J. Rothstein of this district for a determination of whether she wishes to retain jurisdiction over such claim.

Background

By virtue of a long-term lease and concession agreement with the Defendant Port of Seattle ("the Port"), Defendant Host International ("Host") had the right to sublease concession space within the Seatac Airport. The Port was obligated by law to make a certain percentage of concession space available for "disadvantaged business enterprises" ("DBEs") and in 1994 Plaintiff Flying Eagle Espresso ("FEE") won out over several hundred other DBE applicants to open a retail coffee kiosk in the baggage claim area of the airport. Like the rest of the DBEs at the time, FEE employed non-union labor (although the business offered no benefit plan, FEE paid a higher [*4] per-hour wage than the union rate). Elmer Decl., P 9.

Host's lease was set to expire at the end of 2004. The collective bargaining agreement ("CBA") that Defendant Hotel Employees and Restaurant Employees Union Local No. 8 ("HERE") was negotiating with Host prior to the expiration of Host's lease with the Port contained a provision (Article 2.01) with language aimed at non-union shops within the facility:

No work customarily performed by employees covered by this Agreement shall be performed under any sublease, subcontract, or other agreement unless the terms of any lease, contract or other agreement specifically state that (a) all such work shall be performed only by members of the bargaining unit covered by this Agreement and (b) the Employer shall at all times hold and exercise full control of the terms and conditions of employment of all such employees pursuant to the terms of this Agreement. CBA, Article 2.01<sup>1</sup>

[*5] The CBA was approved and executed in November 2002.

On October 31, 2002, the Port and HERE entered into a Memorandum of Understanding (the "MOU") describing a 3-tier concession structure which included an Exhibit A entitled "Position on Labor Harmony for Concessions." That exhibit's "General Statement" declared:

The Port of Seattle values and requires Labor Harmony among all of the vendors operating at the Airport. To this end, it will be the responsibility of concessionaires to furnish labor that can work in harmony with all other labor employed at the Airport and to propose and implement a Labor Harmony plan. This requirement is a material element of the concessionaire lease agreements (the "Contracts"). Failure by a concessionaire or any of its sublessees to comply with this requirement will be deemed a breach of the contract, which will subject the Concessionaire to termination of the Contract with the Port.<sup>2</sup>

---

<sup>1</sup> Plaintiff makes much of the fact that, in the discussions leading up to the approval of the CBA, HERE notated a draft of the document with the language "Proposal to Apply to Current DBE's" appended to this section. Pltf Exh. 25, p. UNION 000241. The union makes much of the fact that the proposed language was ultimately withdrawn and does not appear in the final language.

[*6] In June 2003, the Port and Host entered into a new lease (which also contained reference to "labor harmony" and required Port approval of any sublease).

The Port had previously run into difficulty for requiring a third-party tenant to use union labor. An injunction issued by Judge Barbara J. Rothstein of this district in CityIce v. Port of Seattle (C99-1647BJR, Dkt. No. 29) prohibited the Port from engaging in "any conduct that interferes, either by the Port's actions or inactions, with the exercise of the federally protected rights of . . . third parties using Port facilities to assign work to their own employees . . ." It is this order that is the basis of Plaintiff's assertion that the Port is liable for civil contempt of court.

Shortly after these agreements were in place, Plaintiff's owner Jean Elmer ("Elmer") was informed on at least two occasions by Linda LaCombe ("LaCombe"), the Port's retail manager at the facility, that she would have to unionize in order to continue at SeaTac. Elmer Decl. P 9, Pltf. Exh.'s 59, 66. Later testimony by LaCombe indicated that both her position (vis-a-vis the requirements for renewal) and her communications to Elmer were reviewed and [*7] approved by her superiors. Pltf. Exh. 70.

Elmer polled her employees and was told that they did not wish to join a union. Elmer Decl. P 8. Throughout much of 2003, Elmer received communications, oral and written, from officials for the Port and Host to the effect that she would be required to join the union and that she would have to submit a Labor Harmony Plan (approved by the union) before her sublease would be renewed. Internal communications between representatives of the Defendants indicate that the Port and Host had discussed the issue and agreed that "all facilities covered by the HMS Host contract must be covered by collective bargaining." Pltf. Exh. 73.

On August 27, 2003, Host employee Robert van Snik sent Elmer a Letter of Intent ("LOI") offering to renew her sublease conditioned on the Port's approval of the sublease and FEE's submission of a Labor Harmony Plan. She was encouraged to "meet with representatives of HERE Local 8 to . . . assist you in developing your plan." Van Snik's letter stated that FEE's Labor Harmony Plan ("LHP") "is to contain a statement as to whether HERE Local 8 is in agreement with your plan." Pltf. Exh. 42. Within ten days, Plaintiff responded [*8] with inquiries about the LHP and whether it meant she had to unionize. Pltf. Exh. 43. Twenty-five days later, Mr. Van Snik of Host responded, but his response included no information about the LHP or the unionization requirement. Instead, Elmer was advised that FEE would have to relocate if they wished to renew their airport lease. Pltf. Exh. 44. Defendants do not controvert Plaintiff's allegation that the nature and substance of the LHP were never explained to her. Elmer Decl. P 15.

In the wake of these exchanges, Elmer alleges that she tried to meet with union officials to discuss the LHP requirement. Elmer Decl. P 13, Pltf. Exh's 49, 52, 55. She was unsuccessful in this attempt until November 13, 2003, when she met with Rick Sawyer of HERE ("Sawyer"). She alleges (and HERE does not deny) that Sawyer said he knew nothing about Host's LHP requirement and had no intention of getting involved in negotiations between FEE and Host on the issue.<sup>3</sup> Elmer Decl. P 13. Accepting his representations, Elmer concluded that there was no requirement that FEE become unionized to continue on at SeaTac and left a voicemail to that effect with Port officials. Pltf. Exh. 93.

[*9] FEE submitted a Letter of Intent on November 7, 2003. Pltf. Exh. 55. However, having had no success obtaining a meeting with a union representative to that point, the LOI did not contain the LHP Host had indicated was required. Following submission of the November 2003 LOI, FEE made attempts to submit a draft of a LHP to

---

<sup>2</sup> The Port's and HERE's position is that this provision applied only to Tier II tenants (a category which not include FEE).

<sup>3</sup> Sawyer testified that he was unaware of the LHP provision and believed the union had no role in approving sublessees' labor harmony plans. Noble Decl. F, Sawyer Dep., pp. 128-132.

Host (Pltf. Exh's 85, 86). On December 19, 2003, van Snik sent a letter to Elmer terminating their negotiations and indicating Host's intent to seek another candidate to fulfill their DBE requirement. Pltf Exh. 87. The termination was confirmed in a letter to FEE's attorneys several days later. Pltf Exh. 88.

Plaintiff did eventually send a finalized version of their LHP (unapproved by HERE and indicating FEE's intent to remain non-union) to Host in January of the following year, but negotiations had completely broken down by that point. Plaintiff alleges that every other DBE in the airport submitted a LHP which indicated (usually in a single paragraph) their intent to adopt the CBA (Pltf Exh's 95 -- 101), and that every one of those requests for renewal was granted.

Summary Judgment Standard

HN1 Summary judgment is not warranted if a material issue of [*10] fact exists for trial. Warren v. City of Carlsbad, 58 F.3d 439, 441 (9th Cir. 1995), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 1171, 116 S. Ct. 1261, 134 L. Ed. 2d 209 (1996).

HN2 The underlying facts are viewed in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion. Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 587, 106 S. Ct. 1348, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538 (1986). HN3"Summary judgment will not lie if . . . the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party." Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986).

HN4 The party moving for summary judgment has the burden to show initially the absence of a genuine issue concerning any material fact. Adickes v. S.H. Kress & Co., 398 U.S. 144, 159, 90 S. Ct. 1598, 26 L. Ed. 2d 142 (1970). This can be done by either producing evidence negating an essential element of plaintiff's claim, or by showing that plaintiff does not have enough evidence of an essential element to carry its ultimate burden at trial. Nissan Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Fritz Companies, Inc., 210 F.3d 1099, 1103 (9th Cir. 2000).

HN5 Once the moving party has met its initial burden, the burden shifts to the nonmoving party to establish the existence [*11] of an issue of fact regarding an element essential to that party's case, and on which that party will bear the burden of proof at trial. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323-24, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986). To discharge this burden, the nonmoving party cannot rely on its pleadings, but instead must have evidence showing that there is a genuine issue for trial. Id. at 324. Additionally, HN6 "at the summary judgment stage the judge's function is not . . . to weigh the evidence . . . but to determine whether there is a genuine issue for trial." Liberty Lobby, 477 U.S. at 249.

Discussion

The first two causes of action (§§ 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act) in Plaintiff's Second Amended Complaint have been previously dismissed upon motion of Defendants (Dkt. No. 31) and will not be discussed further. This opinion will first address the causes of action upon which summary judgment will be granted.

The Court GRANTS summary judgment on:

§§ 3 and 4 of the Washington Consumer Protection Act/Anti-Trust (Fourth and Fifth Causes of Action)

The Court's dismissal of Plaintiff's Sherman Act federal anti-trust claims was premised on a finding [*12] of "state actor" immunity for all defendants under the circumstances presented by this litigation. See Town of Hallie v. City of Eau Claire, 471 U.S. 34, 38, 44, 105 S. Ct. 1713, 85 L. Ed. 2d 24 (1985); Lorrie's Travel & Tours, Inc. v. SFO Airporter, Inc. 753 F.2d 790, 793 (9th Cir. 1985); Snake River Valley Electric Association v. Pacificorp., 357 F.3d 1042, 1047-48 (9th Cir. 2004). Defendants argue that "[s]tate actor immunity bars Flying Eagle from asserting antitrust claims under state law to the same extent that it bars such claims under the Sherman Act." Port's 1st Motion, p. 13.

The argument is made that the Washington legislature intended that the Consumer Protection Act ("CPA") be interpreted along the guidelines set up by the federal courts for corresponding federal statutes (State v. Black, 100 Wn.2d 793, 799, 676 P.2d 963 (1984)); since §§ 3 and 4 of the CPA are the state equivalent of the Sherman Act, Defendants claim the same protection afforded them under applicable federal precedents. However, the case law indicates that the HN7 state courts are to look to federal precedent for "guidance," (Id.), not that federal precedent is controlling. [*13]

HN8 The directive to be "guided by" federal law does not mean that we are bound to follow it. But neither are we free to ignore it, and indeed in practice Washington courts have uniformly followed federal precedent in matters described under the Consumer Protection Act.

***

Any departure from federal law . . . must be for a reason rooted in our own statutes or case law and not in the general policy arguments this court would weigh if the issue came before us as a matter of first impression.

*Blewett v. Abbott Laboratories, et al., 86 Wash.App. 782, 787-88, 938 P.2d 842 \(1997\).*

*Assurance Co. of America v. Wall & Assoc's, LLC of Olympia, 379 F.3d 557 \(9th Cir. 2004\)* provides some further insight regarding how this Court should proceed regarding the application of the state actor doctrine to Washington anti-trust law: HN9 "[W]hen interpreting state law, federal courts are bound by decisions of the state's highest court. In the absence of such a decision, a federal court must predict how the highest state court would decide the issue . . ." Id. at 560. Therefore, we look to Washington state law for guidance.

HN10 The Washington CPA is [*14] patterned after federal law and the legislature anticipated that state courts would be guided by federal court interpretation of federal antitrust law. RCW 19.86.920. See, *State v. Black, supra*. This statute also commands that the regulatory scheme "be liberally construed that its beneficial purposes may be served." RCW 19.86.920. However, as noted above, this admonition does not mean that state courts are bound to follow federal law. See *Blewett v. Abbott Laboratories, supra*. As the *Blewett* court indicated, a departure from following the federal precedent of the state actor immunity doctrine must have a firm foundation in state authority.

The closest Washington state corollary to the state actor immunity doctrine appears in the exemption section of the CPA which governs state action or state regulated entities. HN11 The pertinent language states that the CPA laws, including the anti-trust provisions, do not apply to "actions or transactions permitted by any other regulatory body or officer acting under statutory authority of this state." RCW 19.86.170. [*15] <sup>4</sup> This appears to be the Washington codification of the state actor doctrine.

HN12 In delineating the application of this exception, Washington courts have taken the approach that "[l]iberal construction' is a command that the coverage of an act's provisions in fact be liberally construed and that its exceptions be narrowly confined." *Vogt v. Seattle-First National Bank, 117 Wn.2d 541, 552, 817 P.2d 1365 \(1991\)* (en banc). As a result, Washington courts have carefully scrutinized both the "action or transaction" involved and the permission required to qualify for [*16] exemption under RCW 19.86.170.

In *Dick v. Attorney General \(83 Wn.2d 684, 521 P.2d 702 \(1974\)\)* HN13 the Court articulated a narrow interpretation of "action or transaction" such that a generally regulated practice does not automatically receive exemption from CPA claims. Id. at 688. "If a particular practice found to be unfair or deceptive is not regulated, even though the business is regulated generally, it would appear to be the legislative intent that the provisions of the act should apply." Id. Although *Dick* analyzed an older version of the exemption section of the CPA, more recent cases likewise uphold the narrow interpretation of activity defined in the case. See *Vogt, 117 Wn.2d at 551*. HN14 Washington courts making an "exemption" analysis have closely analyzed the activity at issue for specific permission and narrowly construed that permission in order to avoid conflict with the "liberal construction" intent of the Washington legislature. As a result, "permission" necessitates overt affirmative action to permit the activity by

---

<sup>4</sup> The statute states that the CPA does not apply to "actions and transactions otherwise permitted, prohibited or regulated under laws administered by the insurance commissioner of this state, the Washington utilities and transportation commission, the federal power commission." The narrower "actions or transactions permitted" language applies only to "any other regulating body or authority." RCW 19.86.170.

the entity involved in the complaint. Vogt, Id. at 552. Washington [*17] takes a very limited approach to its application of the exemption for activities permitted by most agencies.

As the parties' briefing indicates, there are no Washington cases directly on point. The reasoning and ruling of Robinson v. Avis Rent A Car Systems, Inc. \(106 Wn.App. 104, 22 P.3d 818 \(2001\)\) provides the closest analogous example, all the more so considering that it involved the Port's relationship with car rental dealerships at the airport. The Port charged rental car companies a concession fee for leasing space at the airport. The concession agreement originally prevented rental car companies from charging customers a separate fee to cover this expense. In order to recoup the expense, the car companies included the fee within the total charge quoted to the customer. When the Port decided not to enforce the provision preventing the charging of the separate fee, the rental companies began "unbundling" or separating the concession fee from the basic rental rate. Customers brought suit alleging that the additional concession fee was not quoted to them when making their reservations and the additional, separate charge was unfair or deceptive.

Several aspects of Robinson [*18] apply to the case at hand and suggest that Washington courts would not find state actor immunity applicable to Defendants' actions here. First, both cases involve oversight activity by the Port. Robinson identifies the Port as a "regulatory body" as defined by RCW 19.86.170. Since the Port occupies the same landlord authority over Host as over Avis, the Port would qualify as a "regulatory body" within the meaning of the statute for this case.

The Robinson court also examined the powers granted to the Port as a regulating body for evidence of specific statutory authority permitting the activities of the rental car agencies. The opinion defined what must be demonstrated for specific permission: "[I]t is not enough to show that the Port . . . permitted' unbundling . . . [t]he car rental companies must also show that unbundling is within the statutory authority' of the Port to permit." Robinson, 106 Wn.App. at 110-113, 22 P.3d at 822. The court found no authority in the Port's enabling statutes to permit the complained-of activities of the defendant car companies. RCW 14.08.120\(6\) gives the Port the authority to "determine [*19] the charges or rental for the use of any properties under its control and the charges for any services or accommodations, and the terms and conditions under which such properties may be used." Id. at 823 (citing RCW 14.08.120\(6\)). The Robinson court's reading of this statute concluded that "this statute neither expressly nor impliedly grants to the Port the power to permit unbundling for purposes of exemption under the CPA." Id. At 823.

This Court's order dismissing the Sherman Act claims focuses on two other sections of HN15 14.08.120 permitting the Port to confer the privileges of concession of supplying upon its airports goods, commodities, things, services and facilities . . . (RCW 14.08.120\(4\)) and . . . to sell or lease any property, real or personal, acquired for airport purposes and belonging to the municipality, which in the judgment of its governing body, may not be required for aircraft landings, aircraft takeoffs, or related aeronautic purposes, in accordance with the laws of this state. RCW 14.08.120\(5\)

Dkt. No. 31, Order on Motion To Dismiss, [*20] pp. 4-5.

Similar to the provision allowing for rental car companies, this grant of authority allows the Port to lease to concessionaires like Host. However, it does not appear to give any authority for regulating subtenants of those concessionaires by requiring things like LHPs. Given Washington's narrow application of the exemption, the fact that the statute does not expressly or impliedly allow the Port to permit a lessee to require that subtenants have a LHP (regardless of what that document consists of) is highly significant. Since the statute does not contain specific language discussing the Port's regulation of subtenants of concessionaires, the "overt affirmative action to permit the activity by the entity involved" required for exemption under RCW 19.86.170 is missing. Vogt, 117 Wn.2d at 552. This suggests that the Washington courts would not find state actor immunity for the Port or the other defendants in this case.

As discussed in this Court's previous Order, the Ninth Circuit has been increasingly willing to broaden the state actor exemption. (Order, supra at 4-5). The federal precedents indicated that the structure of [*21] concession leasing at the airport was a reasonable consequence of the Port's authorizing statute. Id. at 5. However, Washington courts require a specific grant of permission for the discrete transaction or action involved. Concession leasing structure in general may be regulated under the Port statutes, but this general regulation is not adequate for exemption under the CPA.

This case fits the situation described in Dick v. Attorney General, where "a particular practice found to be unfair or deceptive is not regulated, even though the business is regulated generally." 83 Wn.2d at 684. Based on a finding that the Washington courts have spoken on the issue of state actor immunity by announcing tests far stricter than the federal precedents applying state actor immunity, this Court is not inclined to allow dismissal of the state antitrust claims based only on the prior dismissal of the Sherman Act claims.

However, even with a finding that "state actor immunity" will not be extended to these Defendants for the allegations of violating the Washington anti-trust statutes, Defendants are nevertheless entitled to summary judgment on these causes of action. [HN16\[!\[\]\(6672efaf27c0e6cf66ff97afab598eec_img.jpg\)\]](#) Plaintiff [*22] has the burden to prove possession of monopoly power in a relevant market. High Technology Careers v. San Jose Mercury News, 996 F.2d 987, 989-90 \(9th Cir. 1993\). What is fatal to FEE's anti-trust allegations is its failure to offer proof of what the relevant market is (in terms of geography or product) over which they allege Defendants are exercising a monopoly. They argue that the definition of the requisite geographic market is a fact issue and contend (without citation to any evidence) that "SeaTac is a self-contained geographic market" and that "the logical geographic market is the SeaTac site." Plaintiff's 1st Response, p. 40. The case law cited in support of their argument (International Boxing Club v. United States, 358 U.S. 242, 79 S. Ct. 245, 3 L. Ed. 2d 270 \(1959\)) is not helpful: the Supreme Court in International Boxing found a "separate, identifiable market" based on "detailed findings" (Id. at 250-51) which are completely absent from Plaintiff's pleadings.

At oral argument, Plaintiff argued that the "market" which they were claiming had been monopolized by Defendants' activities was not the airport concessions market (generally) or coffee retail [*23] service (specifically) but rather the "labor market" represented (presumably) by all the jobs available within the airport. Plaintiff's complaint makes no mention of the "labor market" as the intended object of the anti-trust allegations. Their reply brief does make mention of an attempt to "monopolize the provision of labor in the concessions market at SeaTac" (Pltf's 1st Reply, p. 39), but neither the Court nor Defendants read this to mean that Plaintiff's complaint was aimed at the monopolization of a "labor market." In any event, the deficiency in Plaintiff's proof is unaffected by this contention -- whether monopolization of coffee stands or labor markets is the object of the complaint, Plaintiff has still failed to proffer the requisite proof of a "separate, identifiable market."

Plaintiff's anti-trust claims also suffer from a failure of proof of injury to competition. Intergraph Corp. v. Intel Corp., 195 F.3d 1346, 1354 \(Fed.Cir. 1999\). [HN17\[!\[\]\(f8871c62756c32ab96ba4c6a49ad0985_img.jpg\)\]](#) It is not enough to claim that FEE's own operations were injured; "[t]he antitrust laws were enacted for the protection of competition, not competitors," Id., quoting Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo-Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 488, 97 S. Ct. 690, 50 L. Ed. 2d 701 \(1977\). [*24] Plaintiff has provided no evidence, in the form of declarations, expert testimony or statistics, that Defendants' alleged activities have injured competition. The fact that the rest of the DBEs signed renewed leases after submitting pro-union LHPs may be probative on the issue of mandatory unionization, but it falls short of proof of actual injury for anti-trust purposes (nor does Plaintiff present any statutory authority that mandatory unionization is "injury per se"). Based on these findings, summary judgment will be GRANTED on Plaintiff's state anti-trust law claims.

The Court also GRANTS summary judgment on:

§ 2 of the Washington Consumer Protection Act (Sixth Cause of Action)

[HN18\[!\[\]\(c8d9c0db15dc120aef115cfd42f41f18_img.jpg\)\]](#) To prevail in a private Consumer Protection Act action, a plaintiff must establish five distinct elements: (1) an unfair or deceptive act or practice; (2) occurring in trade or commerce; (3) public interest impact; (4) injury to plaintiff in his or her business or property; and (5) causation.

Hangman Ridge Training Stables, Inc. v. Safco Title Ins. Co., 105 Wn.2d 778, 780, 719 P.2d 531 (1986). Plaintiff must satisfy all five elements in order to prevail; in the summary [*25] judgment context, a plaintiff has the burden to establish, at a minimum, the existence of disputed issues of material fact regarding each of the elements of its cause of action. Celotex, supra at 323-24. Plaintiff's CPA cause of action in this case is vulnerable to summary judgment because they have not established any facts supporting the existence of a "public interest impact" as regards any of the defendants.

Despite Plaintiff's attempts to characterize its circumstances in a different light, the Court finds that the facts in this case constitute a private contractual dispute. HN19[ "Ordinarily, a breach of a private contract affecting no one but the parties to the contract is not an act or practice affecting the public interest." Id. at 790. A complainant can refashion a private dispute into one with an impact on the public by (1) a "per se" showing of the violation of a statute with a specific legislative declaration of public interest (not alleged here) or (2) a showing that additional plaintiffs have been or will be impacted in a similar manner. The factors which need to be proven in this regard include:

- (1) Were the alleged acts committed in the [*26] course of defendant's business?
- (2) Did defendant advertise to the public in general?
- (3) Did defendant actively solicit this particular plaintiff, indicating potential solicitation of others?
- (4) Did plaintiff and defendant occupy unequal bargaining positions?

While no one factor is dispositive and it is not necessary that all of them be established, FEE is required to establish sufficient "indicia of effect on public interest from which a trier of fact could reasonably find public interest impact." Id. at 790-91.

Plaintiff's evidence regarding HERE and the Port is simply non-existent with respect to three of the four factors. Neither the union nor the municipal governmental body advertise to the public in general, nor is there any proof that they solicited this particular plaintiff for anything. Since FEE was therefore not in a bargaining posture with either entity, there is no element of "unequal bargaining positions."

The CPA claim as regards Defendant Host presents somewhat different issues. Plaintiff certainly makes the case that the alleged acts were committed in the course of Host's business as a master concessionaire at the airport; that it was [*27] actively solicited by Host (as evidenced by the presentation to FEE of the August 27, 2003 LOI, Pltf Exh. 42); and (viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to Plaintiff) that the parties did not occupy equal bargaining positions (Host, as an international corporation, being possessed of far greater resources to bring to the bargaining/ negotiating process than a single-stand coffee retailer like FEE).

But there is no evidence that Host advertised "to the public in general" and indeed no evidence that they even solicited the replacement DBE who took over the sublease formerly held by Plaintiff. FEE concedes that Defendants "may" not have advertised to the general public, but states conclusorily that Host did solicit new tenants for SeaTac space. While the Court may imagine that new applicants for vacant subleases found out about their availability somehow, this is no substitute for the requirement that a nonmovant in a summary judgment action produce evidence showing that there is a genuine issue for trial. Plaintiffs provide no proof of this solicitation, nor do they provide any case authority for the larger issue of whether the solicitation of a few DBEs constitutes the [*28] kind of "advertising to the public in general" which goes to the heart of the "public impact" issue.

In the final analysis, Plaintiff has not borne its burden of establishing genuine disputes of material fact tending to establish that its private contract dispute with Defendant Host has any public interest or public impact whatsoever. All Defendants are entitled to summary judgment dismissing the CPA § 2 claims against them.

The opinion now turns to those causes of action upon which summary judgment will not be granted.

Summary judgment will be DENIED on:

Civil Conspiracy under State Law (Seventh Cause of Action)

HN20 [+] The establishment of a civil conspiracy among these defendants requires Plaintiff to demonstrate two elements: (1) that two or more parties combined to accomplish an unlawful purpose or combined to accomplish a lawful purpose by unlawful means, and (2) the conspirators entered into an agreement to accomplish the conspiracy. Newton Ins. Agency & Brokerage, Inc. v. Caledonian Ins. Group, Inc., 114 Wn.App. 151, 160, 52 P.3d 30 \(2002\).

None of the defendants disputes that requiring FEE to unionize as a condition of the renewal of their lease at SeaTac [*29] is legally impermissible. If Plaintiff succeeds in establishing the existence of genuine disputes of material fact concerning each of the two prongs of the civil conspiracy proof as regards each of these Defendants, they are entitled to a denial of summary judgment on this cause of action. The Court finds that Plaintiff has carried this burden.

Plaintiff's proof regarding these two prongs falls into two general categories: first, the documented agreements between Defendants -- the MOU (between the Port and HERE) and the CBA (between Host and HERE); second, the evidentiary proof of the conduct and communications between representatives of each defense entity, both amongst themselves and with Elmer. This opinion will examine them each in turn.

1. Documented Agreements Supporting Plaintiff's Theory of Conspiracy

A. Memorandum of Understanding

The MOU is a multi-part document, two parts of which are at issue in this lawsuit. There is a "Memorandum of Understanding" which describes a three-tiered system of concessions within the airport. There is no dispute that, as described in the agreement, FEE was to be a "Tier I" concessionaire. The other part of the MOU which is [*30] relevant to this case is Exhibit A to the Memorandum (which is labeled "Position on Labor Harmony for Concession") -- specifically, the "General Statement" which has been quoted supra and admonishes that "failure by a concessionaire or any of its sublessees" to implement a LHP will be deemed a breach of contract. Pltf Exh. 29, UNION002460.

Both of the parties to the MOU argue strenuously that Exhibit A is inapplicable to Tier I concessionaires, including Plaintiff. At the very least, the document is unclear in this regard. In the portion of the memorandum describing Tier II concessionaires, the following language appears: "See 2., below, for provisions related to Labor and Worker Retention that will be included in the solicitation for and selection of these concessionaires." Paragraph 2 states, in relevant part: "The Port will solicit qualifications of interested parties, and choose, the two Tier II prime concessionaires through Request for Qualifications ("RFQ") . . . These RFQs will be governed by the Position on Labor Harmony for Concessions (Exhibit A) . . ." Id. at UNION002458-59.

This Court finds, as a matter of law, that the MOU and specifically Exhibit A, "Position [*31] on Labor Harmony" could be applied to Tier I as well as Tier II concessionaires. The language quoted above from Paragraphs 1 and 2 of the memorandum does not, as Defendants argue, clearly and unequivocally indicate that Exhibit A applied exclusively to Tier II concessionaires; it can only be read as indicating that Tier II concessionaires were to be included in the "labor harmony" requirements of Exhibit A which, by its own language, applied to "all vendors operating at the airport." (Emphasis supplied.) The Court notes the following factors in reaching this conclusion: the labeling of the provision at issue as a "General Statement," the use of the phrase "all vendors," the language admonishing against "[f]ailure by a concessionaire or any of its sublessees" and the complete absence of any language indicating that the provisions contained in the "General Statement" were to be restricted to Tier II concessionaires only.

HERE claims, as regards the MOU, the protection of HN21 [+] the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, which provides First Amendment protection to lobbying and legislative activities regardless of the party's subjective goal or interest.

Eastern R. Presidents' Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127, 137-38, 81 S. Ct. 523, 5 L. Ed. 2d 464 (1961); [*32] United Mine Workers v. Pennington, 381 U.S. 657, 669-72, 85 S. Ct. 1585, 14 L. Ed. 2d 626 (1965).

HN22 [↑] That protection was extended to unions in Franchise Realty Interstate Corp. v. San Francisco Local Joint Executive Board of Culinary Workers, 542 F.2d 1076 (9th Cir. 1976), cert. denied, 430 U.S. 940, 97 S. Ct. 1571, 51 L. Ed. 2d 787 (1977). As long as FEE is unable to produce evidence of any acts of unlawful economic coercion, the union argues that their lobbying and persuasion efforts are afforded constitutional sanction.

In evaluating HERE's claim, the Court does not have to view the MOU in isolation. In addition to lobbying for a "labor harmony" requirement in its agreement with the Port, the union was also negotiating for language in its CBA which mandated that the Tier I concessionaires (such as Host) require all their sublessees whose businesses involved work "customarily performed" by the union to employ union labor. Noerr-Pennington has never been upheld as a shield to protect from liability a union defendant who lobbies a governmental body to support concessionaires in a requirement to unionize third-party subcontractors; especially with a court injunction already in place prohibiting such activity.

[*33] Nor is the Court required to ignore the fact that Plaintiff has produced evidence that seven other DBEs submitted the "labor harmony plans" called for in the MOU (and in the Port's lease with Host) which consisted of nothing more than a single paragraph agreeing to adopt the CBA and accept union representation for their workers. Pltf Exh's 95-101. It is circumstantial evidence of exactly what Plaintiff is claiming -- that the cost of receiving a renewed sublease at the airport was unionization -- and if Plaintiff's claim is ultimately upheld the union's activities will be outside the shield of Noerr-Pennington. A jury is entitled to consider whether that evidence tends to establish the existence of an agreement to achieve an unlawful purpose.

The union produces no case authority limiting the definition of "coercion" to actual strikes, boycotts or violence. Plaintiff has produced circumstantial evidence that the union was willing to increase the pressure on the other parties in order to accomplish what it desired; e.g., statements by union officials concerning "a campaign of escalating actions" (Noble Decl. E, Nelson Dep., p. 36; Exh. 119) and "a lot more coming" (Noble Decl. [*34] J, Wise Dep., pp. 15 20; Exh. 6) create genuine issues of fact regarding the existence of coercion in the union's conduct.

Furthermore, if it is ultimately found that the MOU violated the CityIce injunction, there will be no question of a need to produce evidence of "economic coercion:" the CityIce injunction (1) already prohibited the Port from doing what FEE alleges the MOU accomplished (thus making it illegal per se) and (2) was based on a finding by Judge Rothstein that HERE had "committed an illegal secondary boycott," not that it had engaged in "economic coercion."

HERE replies that it is not required to predict whether the results of its lobbying will be judicially upheld to invoke the protections of Noerr-Pennington. Subscription Television, Inc. v. So.Cal. Theatre Owners Ass'n, 576 F.2d 230, 233-34 (9th Cir. 1978). Since it genuinely sought a legitimate result through governmental action, the union argues, it is shielded. This is not a persuasive position: the union did not simply seek "work preservation" as a general concept; it specifically lobbied for the particular language of the MOU, and (as one of the other parties in the CityIce [*35] litigation) it can be held responsible if it knowingly trespassed the constraints established by the court's order in that case. If the MOU is found to be an illegal attempt to mandate third-party unionization as a condition of lease renewal, HERE should not be shielded from the consequences of seeking such a result. To the extent that the defendant union seeks summary judgment as a matter of law concerning its part in the creation of the MOU, that motion is denied.

B. Collective Bargaining Agreement

The crucial provision in this document is Article 2.01 and its requirement that "no work customarily performed by employees covered by this Agreement" will be contracted out under sublease unless those employees are likewise covered by the CBA. HERE argues that Plaintiff misreads Article 2.01: (1) it was intended to apply only to "new" Host sublessees. and (2) the union never sought to enforce it against anyone, including FEE. The union points to the lack of proof that 2.01 was ever cited to coerce or persuade Host not to renew FEE's lease.

The union's arguments in this regard are not persuasive. Concerning the intended objective of Article 2.01, there is nothing in the language [*36] that differentiates between "current" and "new" subleases. Furthermore, as a renewing tenant, Plaintiff was negotiating a "new" sublease with Host. Viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to Plaintiff, the fact that all the DBEs except FEE filed labor harmony plans indicating their agreement to unionize tends to prove that all the renewing sublessees were treated as "new" tenants. Furthermore, if the CBA is ultimately found to represent a "hot cargo" agreement in violation of § 8\(e\) of the NLRA<sup>5</sup>, it will be illegal regardless of whether either party to the agreement attempted to enforce it. See Teamsters Local 728 \(Brown Transport Corp., 140 N.L.R.B. 1436, 1437, 52 LLRM 1258 \(1963\)\).

Regarding the union's "lack of coercion" argument: if coercion had been applied (as Plaintiff contends) [*37] its effects were felt when Host informed FEE that they would have to obtain union approval for a LHP which Plaintiff seeks to prove was simply a disguised requirement of mandatory unionization. As discussed in the MOU analysis supra, FEE has produced evidence of statements by union officials suggesting repercussions would ensue if these agreements were not adopted. A jury could reasonably infer the existence of coercion from these statements.

The union takes the further position that the CBA is valid because they had a right to preserve work for the union which had traditionally been performed by union labor, such as coffee service. HN24[↑] The two-part test for a lawful work-preservation clause (set out in NLRB v. Int'l Longshoremens Assoc., 447 U.S. 490, 504, 100 S. Ct. 2305, 65 L. Ed. 2d 289 \(1980\) (a/k/a ILA)) requires proof that (1) the object of the clause is preservation of work traditionally performed by the union and (2) the contracting employer has the power to give the employees the work at issue (the "right of control" test).<sup>6</sup> This situation, according to HERE, meets both those criteria. Plaintiff has not disputed that, at some point in the past, retail coffee service was the exclusive [*38] domain of the union -- ILA says that the focus is on the "lost work" of the union and that they have a right to recapture that work. Id. at 507-508. The fact that no union worker ever worked out of FEE's particular location is irrelevant -- it is the kind of work historically performed by union labor and that is what matters in a "work preservation" analysis. Id.

The union has not convinced this Court, however, that their agreement satisfies the "right to control" part of the ILA test. The Supreme Court stated in that case that "if the contracting employer [*39] has no power to assign the work, it is reasonable to infer that the agreement has a secondary objective, that is, to influence whoever does have such power over the work." 447 U.S. at 504-05. Since Host (the contracting employer) had no power to assign the work of FEE's employees, a jury would be free to draw the inference that the intent of the "work preservation clause" was in fact to satisfy other union objectives; i.e., to influence the non-union DBEs. HERE's response to this argument is that Host's right to renew FEE's lease is sufficient to satisfy the "right of control" test. HERE attempts to analogize to the ILA situation, but the situations in fact appear to be different in one crucial respect: the agreements in the ILA cases were directly with the contractors who controlled the container work, while the CBA at issue here requires Host to impose the agreement on subcontracting employers who had no part in negotiating the original agreement. It is a critical distinction and goes to the heart of the inquiry regarding whether the purpose of the agreement was "to satisfy union objectives elsewhere" (Id. at 504), thus crossing the boundary [*40] into unlawful activity. Plaintiff has raised sufficient questions of material fact regarding the existence of a "secondary objective" underlying the CBA to permit that question to go to a jury.

Although Defendants are not entitled to summary judgment as a matter of law on the basis of either the MOU or the CBA, ultimately, as Plaintiff points out, the civil conspiracy case does not stand or fall on these documents alone. Even though the agreements themselves may be found to have lawful ends, if they are proved to have been used for unlawful purposes, or if Defendants engaged in other activities which were themselves outside the bounds of permissible conduct in the context of labor and lease negotiation, Defendants may still be found to have conspired against Plaintiff. The Court finds, as discussed below, that Plaintiff has also raised genuine disputes of material fact in regards to Defendants' conduct which entitle them to survive summary judgment on their conspiracy cause of action.

<sup>5</sup> HN23[↑] A "hot cargo agreement" is an agreement between a union and a secondary (union) employer to boycott the goods or services of a primary (non-union) business; it is discussed in greater depth infra.

<sup>6</sup> The ILA cases involved a situation where a new technology -- the use of stackable shipping containers -- had obviated the need for the traditionally union-performed service of loading and unloading cargo from ships. The Supreme Court upheld the right of the union to recapture through CBAs the work lost through the advent of the containers, even though container loading/unloading had never been performed by union labor.

2. Defendants' Conduct Supporting Plaintiff's Theory of Conspiracy

Plaintiff has raised disputed issues of material fact regarding whether the conduct of Defendants during the time period [*41] in question evidences (1) a combination "to accomplish an unlawful purpose or . . . to accomplish a lawful purpose by unlawful means and (2) "an agreement to accomplish the conspiracy. Newton, supra.

Again, the parties are not in dispute regarding the impermissibility of forcing FEE to unionize as a condition of receiving a lease renewal at the airport. Yet communications from officials from each of the defendants, viewed in the light most favorable to Plaintiff, could lead a reasonable jury to conclude that this was in fact the goal of Defendants and that they had agreed amongst each other to accomplish that goal.

The Court will not review the voluminous submissions by the parties in their entirety, but will instead focus on representative pieces of evidence which suffice to create issues of material fact on the key elements of Plaintiff's case which are challenged by Defendants' summary judgment motions. First are the written statements by the Port's airport retail manager, Linda LaCombe ("LaCombe") to her superiors and then to Elmer. In March of 2003, LaCombe wrote an e-mail stating:

I met with Jean Elmer, Flying Eagle Espresso, this morning. She was told by Host [*42] that, per the new labor Agreement, she would need to become a union represented business . . . I believe this is all true according to the Labor Agreement that Host has currently.

Pltf Exh. 63.

Two months later, she communicated not only the Port's understanding of the CBA to Elmer, but also the fact that the Port had discussed both the new lease and the labor agreement with representatives of Defendant Host:

I have gone over the specifics of the new lease with Host and their new contract with H.E.R.E. I understand that Pat Hedges and Art Spring [of Host] have also taken you through the contract and its requirements. It states in the Labor Agreement that any subtenant of Host must be unionized. It further states that any business/subtenant operating as a non-union shop, under this agreement, violates the contract between Host and H.E.R.E. Host has met with their attorney and there is no negotiating on this point.

Pltf Exh. 66. LaCombe closes the letter by indicating that "[t]he Port supports the contract between Host and H.E.R.E." Id. LaCombe repeated the Port's position to Elmer almost verbatim in another letter dated June 12, 2003, including that [*43] "Host has met with their attorney and there is no negotiating on this point. The Port is unaware of anything illegal in the Host Lease agreement with H.E.R.E." Pltf Exh. 59.

In fact, it would have been illegal for Host and the union to agree to force subcontractors to unionize as a condition of having their leases renewed. Plaintiff succeeds, by virtue of this evidence, in creating a disputed material factual issue regarding the Port's participation in and support of a plan to accomplish mandatory unionization of subcontractors. In its briefing, the Port has done its best to distance itself from LaCombe's statements and portray them as the opinion or mistaken belief of a lone employee. But again Plaintiff produces documentary evidence which, viewed in a favorable light to FEE, suggests that this position was endorsed by her superiors. From a May 23, 2003 LaCombe e-mail to Mr. Reis and Mr. Natarajan of the Port:

She [Elmer] really must become a union member. I completely understand [Elmer]'s reluctance to do so. However, it was made very clear by the Commissioners that they value the fair and positive treatment of our employees here at Sea Tac. Currently, [Elmer] [*44] does not pay any benefits vacations, etc. for her employees.

Pltf Exh. 70 (emphasis supplied). Both LaCombe and her direct manager, Mr. Natarajan, testified at deposition that her communications were vetted by not only her superiors but the Port's attorneys as well. Noble Decl. C, LaCombe Dep., pp. 36-41; Noble Decl. D, Natarajan Dep., pp. 37-39.

Regarding Defendant Host, it is likewise the finding of this Court that the evidence produced by Plaintiff is sufficient to create material issues of disputed fact regarding Host's participation in a civil conspiracy to force a third-party subcontractor to accept a CBA they did not negotiate. It was Host's Letter of Intent to FEE which first advised Plaintiff that a LHP approved by the union was a prerequisite to obtaining a new lease at the airport (a requirement that was at least partially responsible for the delay in finalizing a lease renewal which was cited by Host in terminating negotiations with Plaintiff). Since Host was not even a party to the MOU which established the labor harmony requirement, this alone is evidence from which a jury could conclude there had been a meeting of the minds between these defendants as to the [*45] necessity of Plaintiff adopting the CBA between Host and HERE.

Additionally, there is evidence that representatives of both of the other defendants had been told that Host supported mandatory unionization for subcontractors. LaCombe's correspondence on behalf of the Port has been thoroughly discussed supra. Plaintiff also produced evidence that representations had been made to the union by Host that they would work toward the unionization of the DBEs.<sup>7</sup> Plaintiff has satisfied its burden of raising disputed issues of material fact regarding proof of the elements of a civil conspiracy involving Defendant Host.

Finally, the union contests FEE's proof of a "conspiracy" between HERE, Host [*46] and the Port. Their argument concerning the CBA has already been analyzed supra. As discussed above, the Court will not declare Article 2.01 of the CBA a legally-protected "work preservation clause" as a matter of law. FEE has produced sufficient facts to permit the issue of whether 2.01 was understood by the defendants to require subcontractor unionization to go to a jury.

HERE also maintains that no evidence supports Plaintiff's contention that the MOU was part of some larger conspiracy between these three entities and that Plaintiff has submitted no evidence of other communications between all the defendants (much less any agreements between them) concerning FEE's attempts to renew its lease. But it has already been established as a matter of law that Exhibit A of the MOU (with its mandatory LHP requirement) could be applied to Tier I concessionaires such as Plaintiff; indeed, it is apparent that Defendant Host did apply such a requirement, as reflected in its communications to FEE through the LOI.<sup>8</sup>

[*47] The union argues that, even if a LHP was a prerequisite to lease renewal, it was not synonymous with "mandatory unionization" and that the elements of the plan, listed at the end of Exhibit A, support this position. This argument is greatly weakened, however, by apparent contradiction represented by union president Sawyer (who signed the MOU containing the LHP requirement) telling Elmer that he was unaware of any LHP requirement (Elmer Decl. P 13) and didn't consider it "appropriate" to discuss with her. Noble Decl. F, Sawyer Dep. p. 129. Although Elmer reported immediately after this meeting that she now believed there was no unionization requirement (Decl. of Natarajan, P 14, Exh. F), she later came to believe that in fact Sawyer had been deceptive in his responses to her. The Court does not weigh evidence at this stage of the proceedings, but it is appropriate to determine if Plaintiff has established a genuine issue for trial, and the inconsistency between Sawyer's participation

---

<sup>7</sup> From contemporaneous notes taken by a union official during negotiations between Host and HERE, union official Sawyer is quoted as saying "Art [Spring, of Host] made commitment that attorneys would work together to develop language that would bind all HMS and DBEs to be unionized." Noble Decl. E, p.36, Pltf Exh. 119.

<sup>8</sup> The August 27, 2003 LOI from Host to FEE stated:

Host is prepared to offer you the opportunity to continue operation of a coffee concession . . . subject to the execution of a new sublease agreement for your location, which sublease will include the following terms and conditions:

***

. A Labor Harmony Plan. . . . Your Labor Harmony Plan is to contain a statement as to whether HERE Local 8 is in agreement with your plan. Pltf Exh. 42, HOST0000138.

in the drafting of the MOU and his representations to Elmer could lead a jury to infer the existence of an agreement to freeze FEE out of the re-leasing process based on Plaintiff's resistance to unionizing.

[*48] Proof of a conspiracy will rarely be achieved through direct evidence, and Plaintiff is entitled to establish its case circumstantially. Gilbrook v. Westminster, 177 F.3d 839, 856-57 (9th Cir. 1999). The circumstances established by Plaintiff's evidence are that HERE and the Port entered into a MOU which required the submission of LHPs by the sublessees of any concessionaire at the facility; that Host and HERE entered into a CBA which required Host to sublease out work "customarily performed" by union labor only to employers covered by the agreement; and that Host then told Plaintiff it would not receive a new lease unless it submitted a union-approved LHP.

The point is not that Plaintiff has produced enough evidence to win a summary judgment motion of its own or to prevail at trial. FEE's burden in responding to these summary judgment motions is to produce evidence sufficient to raise a genuine dispute of material fact. A jury hearing this evidence (and the evidence of the other statements by representatives of defendants regarding mandatory unionization) could reasonably infer that there had been a meeting of the minds between all three Defendants that all sublessees [*49] would have to agree to join the union and that the vehicle for accomplishing that agreement would be the LHP. The Court must view the evidence produced in the light most favorable to Plaintiff, and the evidence produced suffices to create disputed material issues of proof on the civil conspiracy cause of action. On that basis, summary judgment must be DENIED.

The Court also DENIES summary judgment as to:

Unfair Labor Practices (Third Cause of Action)

This cause of action is directed only against the union and alleges violations of two sections of the National Labor Relations Act ("NLRA"), 29 U.S.C. § 158 et seq.: HN25 [↑] § 8(b)(4)(ii)(B), which bars unions from "forcing or requiring any person . . . to cease doing business with any other person; and HN26 [↑] § 8(e), which defines as an unfair labor practice "any contract or agreement, express or implied" between a union and an employer "to cease doing business with any other person." HN27 [↑] Both of these provisions are aimed at the practice of "secondary boycotts," whereby a union can apply pressure on one (non-union) employer through the union's relationship with another (union) employer. Violations of 8(b)(4) cover [*50] a wide range of actions but require some proof of coercion (Shepard v. NLRB, 459 U.S. 344, 351, 103 S. Ct. 665, 74 L. Ed. 2d 523 (1983)), while 8(e) is aimed at "hot cargo agreements" wherein a union and employer enter into an agreement that the employer will not do business with a second employer whom the union considers to be unfair to organized labor. Betal Environmental Corp. v. Local Union No. 78, 123 F. Supp. 2d 156, 158, fn. 2 (S.D.N.Y. 2000) (citations omitted).

The union's arguments regarding "work preservation clauses" and the Noerr-Pennington doctrine appear to be addressed to both its alleged participation in the conspiracy to violate Plaintiff's federal rights and its alleged violations of the NLRA. The Court's analysis of those arguments supra will not be repeated here, but that analysis requires denial of the union's summary judgement motion as it applies to the 8(b)(4) and 8(e) claims as well.

The union makes the additional argument, aimed at FEE's 8(b)(4) claim, that there is no evidence of "coercion" to sustain that violation. But HN28 [↑] the term "coerce" extends to "any form of economic pressure of a compelling or restraining nature" (Association of General Contractors of Calif., Inc. v. NLRB, 514 F.2d 433, 438-39 (9th Cir. 1975)) [*51] and the MOU contains unmistakable language that "[f]ailure by a concessionaire or any of its sublessees" to implement a LHP "will be deemed a breach of the Contract, which will subject the Concessionaire to termination of the Contract with the Port." Pltf Exh. 29, UNION 002460. A jury could reasonably infer, from this and other evidence produced by FEE, that this constituted "economic pressure of a compelling . . . nature." Further, statements by union officials regarding a "campaign of escalating actions" and "a lot more coming" also combine to create a genuine issue for trial regarding the existence of "coercion" in the union's statements and actions.

The union's request for summary judgment of dismissal of the claims of NLRA violations will be denied.

Summary judgment will likewise be DENIED regarding:

Tortious Interference With Business Expectancy (Eighth Cause of Action)

Plaintiff alleges this cause of action against the Port and HERE. HN29[] There are five elements to establishing this cause of action: (1) a valid contract or business expectancy; (2) of which the Port and HERE had knowledge; (3) an intentional interference inducing or causing a breach of the contract [*52] or expectancy; (4) existence of an improper motive or use of an improper means in the interference; (5) resulting in damages. Leingang v. Pierce Co. Med Bureau, Inc., 131 Wn.2d 133, 157, 930 P.2d 288 (1997).

Plaintiff has brought forward evidence sufficient to create genuine disputes of material fact on all of these elements and is entitled to go forward with this claim. HN30[] "A valid business expectancy includes any prospective contractual or business relationship that would be of pecuniary value." Newton Insurance Agency & Brokerage, Inc. v. Caledonian Insurance Group, Inc., 114 Wn. App. 151, 158, 52 P.3d 30 (2002). Certainly FEE's negotiations with Host regarding renewal of its lease constituted a "prospective contractual or business relationship," and neither the Port nor HERE have disputed that they were aware that the negotiations were taking place and that Plaintiff was seeking a new lease to continue its business at the airport.

The existence of "intentional interference inducing or causing a breach of . . . the expectancy" arising out of "an improper motive or use of an improper means" parallels Plaintiff's allegations regarding the existence of a conspiracy. The analysis [*53] of Defendants' motions for summary judgment on the conspiracy cause of action also suffices regarding their request for dismissal of this claim. Sufficient evidence has been adduced to create genuine issues of material fact regarding whether the Port and HERE interfered for an improper motive or using improper means with FEE's business expectancy in a new airport lease. Neither of those defendants has challenged the adequacy of Plaintiff's pleading of damages arising out of these facts.

The motion for summary judgment on Plaintiff's eighth cause of action will be DENIED.

Finally, the Court DENIES summary judgment on:

42 U.S.C. § 1983/Violation of Plaintiff's Federally Protected NLRA Rights (Ninth Cause of Action)

All Defendants have sought dismissal of this cause of action, which was added by amendment rather late in the case. For reasons largely explored under the analysis of the summary judgment motions on the civil conspiracy claim, this portion of the motion will be denied as to all Defendants as well.

HN31[] The elements of a § 1983 claim are: (1) that the conduct complained of was committed by a person acting under color of state law; [*54] and (2) that the conduct deprived a person of rights, privileges, or immunities secured by the Constitution or laws of the United States.

Johnson v. Hawe, 388 F.3d 676, 681 (9th Cir. 2004) (quoting Alford v. Haner, 333 F.3d 972, 975-76 (9th Cir. 2003)). HN32[] The "state actor" component can be established by showing that a private person conspired with a local governmental official. See, e.g., Adickes v. Kress & Co., 398 U.S. 144, 90 S. Ct. 1598, 26 L. Ed. 2d 142 (1970).

The Port satisfies the "state actor" requirement by virtue of being a municipal governmental entity. For the same reasons that neither of the private defendants are entitled to summary judgment on Plaintiff's civil conspiracy cause of action, the Court finds that Plaintiff has sufficiently established disputed issues of material fact regarding whether Host and HERE conspired with the Port to satisfy this element of its § 1983 claim for summary judgment purposes. HN33[] "A defendant's knowledge of and participation in a conspiracy may be inferred from circumstantial evidence from evidence of the defendant's actions." Gilbrook v. City of Westminster, 177 F.3d 839, 856-57 (9th Cir. 1999). [*55]

Regarding the deprivation of "rights . . . secured by the Constitution or laws of the United States" required for proof of the second element of § 1983, the Court finds that, as regards Plaintiff, those rights are represented by the protections afforded under the NLRA. Plaintiff has a right to operate free from "hot cargo" agreements and any other activities or conspiracies aimed at conditioning its continued operation on involuntary unionization, and, under certain circumstances (which have been found here), § 1983 represents a bulwark against that kind of activity.

Defendants reiterate many of their previous arguments regarding the legality of the MOU and the CBA and the lack of other circumstantial evidence demonstrating their intent to trespass on FEE's federally-protected rights under the NLRA. The analysis of those arguments will not be repeated here; for the same reasons this Court found that Plaintiff has established the existence of genuine issues for trial on the allegations of civil conspiracy to violate its rights, Plaintiff has also shown that disputed issues of material fact remain concerning its allegations of § 1983 violations. Even if the documents at the heart [*56] of this case are ultimately found to either not apply to Plaintiff or not to contain explicit or implicit unionization requirements for airport sublessees, there remains sufficient evidence of oral and written statements by representatives of all defendants to create genuine factual disputes regarding whether these Defendants supported the forced, illegal unionization of this Plaintiff.

The union, however, does approach its summary judgment request on this claim from a different angle. To the extent that the § 1983 claim is premised on the illegality of the CBA between Host and the union, HERE argues the NLRA preempts use of any other remedy, except in very limited circumstances which HERE alleges are not present. HERE claims that Plaintiff's claims regarding the CBA are premised exclusively on § 8\(e\) of the NLRA (HERE's § 1983 Motion, p. 7) and cites case law that 8\(e\) allegations are outside a federal court's Taft-Hartley Act jurisdiction. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe RR v. Teamsters Local 70, 511 F.2d 1193, 1195 \(9th Cir. 1975\). Thus, the argument concludes, the sole remedy is a claim with the National Labor Relations Board ("NLRB").

The union does not entirely [*57] ignore the fact that Plaintiff has also alleged § 8\(b\)\(4\) violations against them (which is one of the exceptions to exclusive NLRA jurisdiction), but tries to argue that the fact that Plaintiff was not a party to the CBA means they cannot assert an 8\(b\)\(4\) violation as regards that agreement. It is not a compelling argument -- the case they cite in support of it (Betal Environmental Corp. v. Local No. 78, 123 F. Supp. 2d 156 \(S.D.N.Y. 2000\)) was also dependent on a finding that the Plaintiff there had presented no evidence that it had been forced or required to unionize. That is hardly the case here -- as pointed out previously, there are many areas of disputed material fact regarding the issue of mandatory unionization

The union claims further preemption in the form of the exclusivity of § 303 of the Labor Management Relations (Taft-Hartley) Act, 29 U.S.C. § 187. They cite Teamsters v. Morton, 377 U.S. 252, 258-60, 84 S. Ct. 1253, 12 L. Ed. 2d 280 \(1964\) for the holding that the congressional intent behind § 303 bars any non-NLRA remedies. They argue by analogy that the case law which prohibits punitive damages, attorneys' fees (Summit Valley Industries v. Carpenters Local 112, 456 U.S. 717, 723-24, 102 S. Ct. 2112, 72 L. Ed. 2d 511 \(1982\)) [*58] and § 1985 violations (Amoco Oil Co. v. Electrical Workers Local 99, 536 F.Supp. 1203, 1217-19 \(D.R.I. 1982\)) also acts to bar relief under § 1983.

The Court finds none of the union's "exclusivity" arguments persuasive. Plaintiff's claims against them are premised on violations of 8\(b\)\(4\) as well as 8\(e\) and as such are exempt from the exclusive jurisdiction of the NLRB. HN34[<sup>1</sup>] Congress gave parties with allegations of 8\(b\)\(4\) violations the right to sue a union for damages "in any district court of the United States." 29 U.S.C. § 187\(b\). Plaintiff cites Supreme Court case law which holds that HN35[<sup>1</sup>] the NLRA does not preclude a § 1983 action arising from government interference with federally-protected labor rights. Golden State Transit Corp. v. City of Los Angeles, 493 U.S. 103, 108-09, 110 S. Ct. 444, 107 L. Ed. 2d 420 \(1989\). Further, HN36[<sup>1</sup>] private parties may be liable under § 1983 when they join with government entities to interfere with federally-protected rights. Dennis v. Sparks, 449 U.S. 24, 27-29, 101 S. Ct. 183, 66 L. Ed. 2d 185 \(1980\).

Golden State, supra, also holds that HN37[<sup>1</sup>] the burden is on the union to establish that § 1983 protection has been withdrawn for [*59] violation of a particular federal right. 493 U.S. at 107. None of the union's cases involve a holding that § 303 is the exclusive remedy which pre-empts § 1983 in cases where 8\(b\)\(4\) violations are alleged. A recent District Court opinion from this circuit states:

[S]ection 303 has scant legislative history. The little historical guidance that does exist fails to indicate any Congressional intent that sections 8(b)(4) and 303 be the exclusive remedy for persons injured by secondary labor activities.

Sutter Health v. UNITE HERE, F. Supp. 2d , 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20892, 2005 WL 1925910, *5 (E.D.Cal. Aug. 10, 2005).

It is the finding of this Court that Plaintiff has established sufficient disputed facts regarding violations of its rights under § 1983 to withstand summary judgment on that cause of action. None of Defendants' arguments that they are entitled to summary judgment as a matter of law has succeeded in persuading the Court that a jury should not hear and decide this matter.

As regards Plaintiff's final cause of action:

Contempt of Court (Tenth Cause of Action)

This allegation is made against the Port only and concerns [*60] Plaintiff's assertion that the Port's activities in the circumstances at issue in this case violate the terms of the injunction issued by Judge Rothstein in Citylce, supra. The Order and Consent which contain the injunction state:

Court's Continuing Jurisdiction to Adjudicate Any Disputes Regarding This Consent Judgment. The Court hereby RETAINS JURISDICTION over the parties for the purposes of deciding any disputes or issues regarding the interpretation or application of, or compliance with, this Consent Judgment. Any such disputes or issues must be adjudicated in this Court, and only in this Court. Consent and Order, p. 5.

Defendant's motion for summary judgment on this claim will be DENIED at this stage of the proceeding to permit a referral of this claim to Judge Rothstein to permit her to determine whether she wishes to retain jurisdiction over this particular dispute concerning the application of the injunction.

Conclusion

Summary judgment will be GRANTED on Plaintiff's claims of violations of the Washington anti-trust laws and Consumer Protection Act. Summary judgment will be DENIED as to the following causes of action, which remain active [*61] in the case:

- . Civil conspiracy under Washington state law (as to all Defendants)
- . Violations of 42 U.S.C. § 1983 (as to all Defendants)
- . Violations of the National Labor Relations Act, 29 U.S.C. §§ 158(b)(4) and (e) (as to Defendant HERE only)
- . Allegations of tortious interference with a business expectancy (as to Defendants the Port of Seattle and HERE only).

Plaintiff's cause of action for contempt against the Port will be referred to Judge Barbara J. Rothstein for a determination of whether she wishes to retain jurisdiction over this particular application of her previous order.

The clerk is directed to provide copies of this order to all counsel of record.

Dated: September 21, 2005

Marsha J. Pechman

United States District Judge

Howard Hess Dental Labs. Inc. v. Dentsply Int'l, Inc.

United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit

April 7, 2005, Argued ; September 21, 2005, Filed

No. 04-1979, No. 04-1980

Reporter

424 F.3d 363 *; 2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 20228 **; 2005-2 Trade Cas. (CCH) P74,934

HOWARD HESS DENTAL LABORATORIES INCORPORATED; PHILIP GUTTIEREZ, * d/b/a Dentures Plus, on behalf of themselves and all other similarly situated, Appellants v. DENTSPLY INTERNATIONAL, INC.; JERSEY DENTAL LABORATORIES, f/k/a Howard Hess Dental Laboratories Incorporated; PHILIP GUTTIEREZ, * d/b/a Dentures Plus, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated, Appellants v. DENTSPLY INTERNATIONAL, INC.; A. LEVENTHAL & SONS, INC.; ACCUBITE DENTAL LAB, INC.; ADDIUM DENTAL PRODUCTS; ARNOLD DENTAL SUPPLY COMPANY; ATLANTA DENTAL SUPPLY COMPANY; BENCO DENTAL COMPANY; BURKHART DENTAL SUPPLY COMPANY; DARBY DENTAL LABORATORY SUPPLY CO., INC.; DENTAL SUPPLIES AND EQUIPMENT, INC.; EDENTALDIRECT.COM, INC., as successor to Crutcher Dental, Inc.; HENDON DENTAL SUPPLY, INC.; HENRY SCHEIN, INC., and its affiliates including, without limitation, Zahn Dental Co., Inc.; IOWA DENTAL SUPPLY CO.; JAHN DENTAL SUPPLY COMPANY; JB DENTAL SUPPLY CO., INC.; JOHNSON & LUND CO., INC.; KENTUCKY DENTAL SUPPLY COMPANY, INC. a/k/a KDSC Liquidation Corp.; MARCUS DENTAL SUPPLY CO; MIDWAY DENTAL SUPPLY INC.; MOHAWK DENTAL CO., INC.; NASHVILLE DENTAL, INC.; NOWAK DENTAL SUPPLIES, INC.; PATTERSON DENTAL COMPANY, its subsidiaries, predecessors, successors, assigns, affiliates and related companies; PEARSON DENTAL SUPPLIES, INC.; RYKER DENTAL OF KENTUCKY, INC.; THOMPSON DENTAL COMPANY

Subsequent History: As Amended, October 4, 2005.

As Amended, December 1, 2005.

Amended by Howard Hess Dental Labs., Inc. v. Dentsply Int'l, Inc., 2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 21445 \(3d Cir. Del., Oct. 4, 2005\)

US Supreme Court certiorari denied by Jersey Dental Labs. v. Dentsply Int'l, Inc., 547 U.S. 1163, 126 S. Ct. 2320, 164 L. Ed. 2d 839, 2006 U.S. LEXIS 4170 (May 30, 2006)

Transferred by Nowak Dental Supplies v. Dentsply Int'l, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 144008 \(M.D. Pa., Aug. 4, 2008\)

Prior History: [**1] On Appeal from the United States District Court for the District of Delaware. (D.C. Civil Action Nos. 99-cv-00255 / 01-cv-00267). District Judge: Honorable Sue L. Robinson.

Jersey Dental Labs. v. Dentsply Int'l, Inc., 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17018 \(D. Del., Aug. 27, 2002\)

Core Terms

---

dealers, purchasers, overcharge, damages, co-conspirator, conspiracy, lost profits, indirect, teeth, antitrust, Dental, recover damages, anti trust law, duplicative, involvement, labs, drop, exclusive-dealing, competitors', manufacturer,

---

* Amended per Clerk's Order dated 4/30/04

price-fixing, middlemen, conspired, seller, resale price, Plaintiffs', decreasing, parties, shipped, measure of damages

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Private Actions > Prioritizing Resources & Organization for Intellectual Property Act

HN1 [down arrow] Private Actions, Purchasers

See 15 U.S.C.S. § 15\(a\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > Remedies > Damages

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > Direct Purchasers

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > Indirect Purchasers

Civil Procedure > ... > Justiciability > Standing > General Overview

HN2 [down arrow] Standing, Clayton Act

Direct purchasers are the only parties "injured" in a manner that permits them to recover damages under § 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15\(a\). Indirect purchaser plaintiffs do not have statutory standing to recover damages under § 15\(a\).

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Appellate Jurisdiction > Certified Questions

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Appellate Jurisdiction > Interlocutory Orders

HN3 [down arrow] Appellate Jurisdiction, Certified Questions

In a 28 U.S.C.S. § 1292\(b\) appeal, the appellate court's review is not limited to the specific question certified by the district court. The appellate court may consider all grounds which might require a reversal of the order appealed from. It may address any issue fairly included within the certified order because it is the order that is appealable, and not the controlling question identified by the district court.

Civil Procedure > Judgments > Relief From Judgments > Altering & Amending Judgments

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Leave of Court

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

HN4 Relief From Judgments, Altering & Amending Judgments

Where the district court has based its decision to deny leave to amend on a legal conclusion that the amended pleading would not withstand a motion to dismiss, the appellate court reviews such a decision de novo.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > Direct Purchasers

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

HN5 Purchasers, Direct Purchasers

The general rule is that only direct purchasers from antitrust violators may recover damages in antitrust suits.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Standing > Clayton Act

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

HN6 Standing, Clayton Act

Courts have rejected attempts to invoke a coconspirator exception to the bar on indirect purchaser standing under § 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15\(a\) when the plaintiffs have not named the coconspirators immediately upstream as defendants.

Contracts Law > Third Parties > Beneficiaries > Claims & Enforcement

Contracts Law > Third Parties > Beneficiaries > General Overview

Contracts Law > ... > Beneficiaries > Types of Third Party Beneficiaries > General Overview

Contracts Law > ... > Beneficiaries > Types of Third Party Beneficiaries > Intended Beneficiaries

HN7 Beneficiaries, Claims & Enforcement

Only intended beneficiaries of a contract made between two or more other parties have enforceable rights under the contract.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN8 Private Actions, Purchasers

The United States Supreme Court has rejected the assertion that the absence of a particular Illinois Brick concern in an individual case would remove its bar on an indirect purchaser claim under § 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15\(a\).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > Direct Purchasers

Mergers & Acquisitions Law > Antitrust > Interlocking Directorates

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

HN9 Purchasers, Direct Purchasers

The "control exception" to Illinois Brick "might" permit an indirect purchaser to sue an initial seller under § 4 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C.S. § 15\(a\), when the initial seller owns or controls the direct purchaser. The United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit has applied the control exception only when the initial seller owns the direct purchaser. Courts that have extended the control exception beyond a parent-subsidiary relationship still require relationships involving such functional economic or other unity between the direct purchaser and either the defendant or the indirect purchaser that there effectively has been only one sale. Modes of control that might qualify for the control exception include interlocking directorates, minority stock ownership, loan agreements that subject the wholesalers to the manufacturers' operating control, or trust agreements.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Damages > Consequential Damages > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Monopolies & Monopolization > Actual Monopolization > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Seller's Damages & Remedies > Limitation & Modification > General Overview

HN10 [ ] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing

When antitrust violators cause prices to increase through monopolization, a price-fixing conspiracy, or exclusionary conduct, the harm they cause members of the distribution chain comes in two ways: (1) overcharges paid for goods actually purchased; and (2) lost profits resulting from the lost opportunity to buy and resell a greater volume of goods.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Damages > Consequential Damages > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Types of Commercial Transactions > Sales of Goods > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Sales of Goods > Remedies > General Overview

HN11 [ ] Private Actions, Remedies

When antitrust plaintiffs claim that anticompetitive behavior caused prices to increase, two measures of damages can theoretically be used: (1) the overcharge (i.e., the difference between the price paid for goods actually purchased and the price that would have been paid absent the illegal conduct), or (2) lost profits (i.e., the overcharge paid minus the overcharge passed on for goods actually purchased and resold, plus lost profits from the lost opportunity to buy and resell a greater volume of goods). A court might potentially use a lost profits measure of damages, as the United States Supreme Court has not explicitly held that any particular measure of damages is required or precluded. However, the standard method of measuring damages in price enhancement cases is overcharge, not lost profits.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN12 [ ] Private Actions, Remedies

Lost profits damages are disfavored in antitrust actions, at least in part because they are more difficult to prove than overcharge damages. Furthermore, overcharge damages, unlike lost profits, may induce antitrust plaintiffs to make arguments that will protect rather than injure consumers.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > Indirect Purchasers

HN13 [ ] Private Actions, Remedies

If a cartel sells to an intermediate purchaser who resells to another, both purchasers are likely to lose profits as a result of the price fix, but under the Illinois Brick rule, the second intermediate purchaser, or the indirect purchaser from the cartel, cannot recover damages.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > Elements

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN14 [blue icon] Private Actions, Purchasers*

The United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit has expressly refused to adopt a coconspirator exception to the antitrust law Illinois Brick rule when the alleged co-conspirators immediately upstream have not been joined.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

Contracts Law > Defenses > Illegal Bargains

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

HN15 [blue icon] Private Actions, Purchasers*

Illinois Brick does not limit suits by consumers against a manufacturer who illegally contracted with its dealers to set the latter's resale price. There is no problem of duplication or apportionment, because the consumer is the only party who has paid any overcharge. The court simply computes the retail price that would have prevailed absent the illegal contract fixing the price. Lost profits damages for the intermediary and overcharge damages for the consumer are not in any way duplicative; they are both losses caused by the unlawful resale price maintenance.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing > General Overview

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Inchoate Crimes > Conspiracy > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > Resale Price Maintenance

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

HN16 [blue icon] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Exclusive & Reciprocal Dealing*

There is, in addition to a co-conspirator exception for resale price maintenance (RPM, i.e., vertical price-fixing) conspiracies, a co-conspirator exception for non-RPM conspiracies, such as exclusive-dealing or price-fixing at the manufacturer level (the general co-conspirator exception). The United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit holds that such an exception would only exist in circumstances where the middlemen would be barred from bringing a claim against their former co-conspirator--the manufacturer--because their involvement in the conspiracy was "truly complete" (i.e., if the middlemen would be barred from suing by the complete involvement defense of a manufacturer).

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Vertical Restraints > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Summary Judgment > Entitlement as Matter of Law > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade > Cartels & Horizontal Restraints > General Overview

HN17 [ ] Price Fixing & Restraints of Trade, Vertical Restraints

Summary judgment for a defendant is proper, even if there is some evidence of an antitrust violation, if the plaintiff's theory of violation makes no economic sense.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Clayton Act > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > Indirect Purchasers

HN18 [ ] Private Actions, Remedies

An antitrust plaintiff (whether he be a direct or an indirect purchaser) is only entitled to recover "threefold the damages by him sustained." 15 U.S.C.S. § 15\(a\). Therefore, to the extent that the middleman retained (i.e., did not pass on to the indirect purchaser) a portion of any overcharge imposed upon him, the damages actually sustained by the indirect purchaser would be reduced by that amount.

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

HN19 [ ] Remedies, Damages

Injured parties cannot be penalized and left without recourse because measurement of their damages is difficult.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > Direct Purchasers

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Remedies > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Private Actions > Purchasers > General Overview

HN20 [ ] Purchasers, Direct Purchasers

The United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit is unwilling to hold that if initial sellers and "completely involved" direct purchasers conspire, then no plaintiff outside the conspiracy may sue the initial seller for damages in an antitrust case.

Counsel: Thomas A. Dubbs, Esquire (Argued), Richard T. Joffe, Esquire, Goodkind, Labaton, Rudoff & Sucharow, New York, NY; Pamela S. Tikellis, Esquire, Robert J. Kriner, Jr. Esquire, Chimicles & Tikellis, LLP, Wilmington, DE, Counsel for Appellants.

Margaret M. Zwisler, Esquire (Argued), Eric J. McCarthy, Esquire, Charles R. Price, Esquire, Latham & Watkins LLP, Washington, D.C.; Richard A. Ripley, Esquire, Bingham McCutchen LLP, Washington, D.C.; Brian M. Addison, Esquire, Dentsply International, Inc., York, PA; W. Harding Drane, Jr., Esquire, Potter Anderson & Corroon LLP, Wilmington, DE; C. Scott Reese, Esquire, Cooch & Taylor, Wilmington, DE; James J. Maron, Esquire, Maron Marvel & Wilks, P.A., Wilmington, DE, Counsel for Appellees.

Judges: Before: BARRY, AMBRO and GREENBERG, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by: AMBRO

Opinion

---

[*366] OPINION OF THE COURT

AMBRO, Circuit Judge

We consider consolidated appeals involving the same parties in two antitrust suits, Howard Hess Dental Laboratories, Inc. v. Dentsply International, Inc. ("Hess [*2]") and Jersey Dental Laboratories v. Dentsply International, Inc. ("Jersey Dental").<sup>1</sup> Plaintiffs are dental laboratories who have brought these antitrust class actions on behalf of themselves and a class of similarly situated labs. Defendant Dentsply International, Inc. ("Dentsply") markets artificial teeth used by the dental labs to make dentures. Plaintiffs allege, among other things, an exclusive-dealing conspiracy and a retail price-fixing conspiracy among Dentsply and its dealer-middlemen.

The District Court denied Plaintiffs standing to recover damages in both suits based primarily on Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707, 97 S. Ct. 2061 (1977), which held that indirect purchaser plaintiffs do not have statutory standing to recover damages for "passed-on" overcharges.<sup>2</sup> We hold that Plaintiffs may not recover damages in Hess (a) under the "co-conspirator" exception to Illinois [*3] Brick, (b) under the "control" exception to Illinois Brick, (c) under a non-overcharge theory of damages, or (d) for "drop shipments." While Plaintiffs may not recover damages under either the control exception or a lost profits theory in Jersey Dental, they do have statutory standing under the co-conspirator exception to pursue an action for overcharge damages (including for drop shipped teeth) caused by the alleged retail price-fixing conspiracy, although not for the alleged exclusive-dealing conspiracy.

[**4] Background

Plaintiffs allege the following in one or both of the complaints.

[*367] (1) Manufacturers of artificial teeth need to distribute through dealers in order to compete effectively. Dealers are the primary source of distribution to dental labs, which use the teeth to produce dentures. Dentsply uses a network of authorized dealers.

---

<sup>1</sup> Hess Dental changed its name to "Jersey Dental" during the period between the two suits.

<sup>2</sup> Section 4 of the Clayton Act provides that HN1 "any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws . . . shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained." 15 U.S.C. § 15(a) (emphasis added). Illinois Brick determined that HN2 direct purchasers are the only parties "injured" in a manner that permits them to recover damages. 431 U.S. at 729, 735. It thus held that indirect purchaser plaintiffs do not have statutory standing to recover damages under Section 4 of the Clayton Act. Id.

(2) Plaintiffs have purchased Dentsply's teeth both indirectly through Dentsply's dealers and directly through "drop shipping." Drop shipping occurs when a dealer does not have certain teeth in stock or cannot fulfill a lab's order for some other reason and asks Dentsply to ship the teeth directly to a lab. When teeth are drop shipped, the dealer never has physical custody of them, but it does bill the lab for the teeth, collect payments from the lab, and pay Dentsply.

(3) Dentsply has foreclosed its competitors' access to dealers by explicitly agreeing with some dealers that they will not carry certain competing brands of teeth and by inducing other dealers not to carry those competing brands of teeth. Pursuant to its written policy called "Dealer Criterion Number 6," Dentsply threatens to terminate, and does terminate, dealers that add to their [**5] inventory teeth made by Dentsply's competitors. Thus, unless Dentsply's dealers were already selling another manufacturer's teeth before Dentsply imposed its exclusive-dealing policies, its dealers cannot sell other manufacturers' teeth unless they give up the opportunity to continue to sell Dentsply's teeth. No rational dealer would be likely to make such a switch because, given Dentsply's monopoly position (it has a 75-80% market share on a revenue basis), losing the ability to sell Dentsply's teeth would hurt a dealer more than gaining the ability to sell Dentsply's competitors' teeth would help a dealer. By explicitly agreeing with some dealers that they will not carry certain competing brands of teeth and by enacting Dealer Criterion Number 6, Dentsply has foreclosed its rivals' access to adequate channels of distribution, and competition has been restricted. This has caused Dentsply's market share to increase, the price of Dentsply's and other manufacturers' teeth to increase, and the availability of rival teeth to decrease.

(4) Furthermore, by agreement among Dentsply and its dealers, Dentsply sets the dealers' resale prices. It distributes a list of "suggested" prices for [**6] its dealers to charge dental labs. Before a dealer can charge a lower price, Dentsply must approve this "price deviation." Price deviations have been granted only when a lab has been buying, or is thinking of buying, a competitor's teeth because they are being sold for less than those of Dentsply. In those instances, Dentsply negotiates with the lab to allow it to buy teeth from the dealer at a price below Dentsply's suggested price. The dealer then agrees to the price negotiated by Dentsply.

(5) Dentsply's foreclosing of its competitors' access to dealers and setting of the dealers' resale prices have caused Plaintiffs to purchase Dentsply's teeth at artificially high prices and lose profits from unrealized sales of Dentsply's competitors' teeth.

Procedural History

In 1999, Plaintiffs filed the Hess suit against Dentsply alleging conspiracy to monopolize, attempt to monopolize, and maintenance of monopoly in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. § 2, and restraint of trade in violation of Section 3 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 14. Plaintiffs asked for both damages and an injunction. Dentsply moved for summary [**7] judgment, claiming that Plaintiffs lacked standing under Illinois Brick. The District Court granted Dentsply's motion on Plaintiffs' damages claims. The [*368] Court reasoned that: (1) a co-conspirator exception to Illinois Brick did not apply because Plaintiffs had not joined Dentsply's dealers as codefendants; (2) the control exception to Illinois Brick did not apply because Dentsply does not own its dealers; (3) Plaintiffs could not recover on a non-overcharge theory of damages because they had not articulated any such theory; and (4) Plaintiffs could not recover for drop shipments because they had specifically alleged that they were not direct purchasers, and even if they had alleged they were direct purchasers, they were indirect purchasers of drop shipments.

In 2001, Plaintiffs filed the Jersey Dental suit, this time naming as Dentsply's co-defendants twenty-six of its then twenty-eight authorized dealers. Plaintiffs made substantially the same allegations as they did in Hess with one key addition: they claimed they were not only indirect purchasers but also direct purchasers. As in Hess, Plaintiffs asked for both damages and an injunction. Dentsply moved under [**8] Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(6\) to dismiss the claims for damages, citing Illinois Brick. The District Court granted the motion. The Court reasoned that: (1) Plaintiffs could not recover under a coconspirator exception to Illinois Brick because the suit still implicated Illinois Brick's policy concerns; (2) in Hess it had already rejected Plaintiffs' argument that they could recover under the control exception to Illinois Brick; (3) Plaintiffs could not recover damages for lost profits because their complaint sought only overcharge damages and because, as Plaintiffs were indirect purchasers, Illinois Brick would bar recovery of lost profits anyway; and (4) in Hess it had already rejected Plaintiffs' argument that they could recover for drop shipped teeth.

Plaintiffs then moved for leave to amend their complaint. Among the proposed additions to the complaint were allegations that "the Dealer Defendants agree with Dentsply and and with each other" to abide by suggested retail prices and that "the prices at which the Dealer Defendants sell to dental laboratories are controlled by Dentsply and agreed to by the [**9] Dealer Defendants." The District Court denied leave to amend because the amended pleading would not withstand a motion to dismiss.

It reasoned that: (1) the co-conspirator exception to Illinois Brick did not apply because the dealers could still sue Dentsply; (2) the control exception to Illinois Brick did not apply because the dealers were not subsidiaries of Dentsply; and (3) Illinois Brick barred recovery of lost profits damages because Plaintiffs were indirect purchasers.

Plaintiffs moved pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1292\(b\) for certification of appealability of the orders dismissing the damage claims in Hess and Jersey Dental and the order denying their motion for leave to amend in Jersey Dental. The District Court granted these motions and certified the following question:

Whether, under the circumstances here, application of *Illinois Brick*, 431 U.S. 720, 52 L. Ed. 2d 707, 97 S. Ct. 2061 \(1977\), McCarthy v. Recordex Service, Inc., 80 F.3d 842 \(3d Cir. 1996\), or other Third Circuit opinions dealing with Illinois Brick, prevents Plaintiffs from being able to recover damages against Dentsply International, [**10] Inc.

Plaintiffs then petitioned our Court for permission to appeal, pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1292\(b\), the three orders certified by the District Court. We granted the petition and consolidated the appeals. HN3<sup>1</sup> In a Section 1292\(b\) appeal, our review is not limited to the specific question certified by the District Court. We may "consider all grounds which might require a reversal of the order appealed from." [*Merican, Inc. \[\*369\] v. Caterpillar Tractor Co.*, 713 F.2d 958, 962 n.7 \(3d Cir. 1983\)](#). We "may address any issue fairly included within the certified order because it is the order that is appealable, and not the controlling question identified by the District Court." *Yamaha Motor Corp., U.S.A. v. Calhoun*, 516 U.S. 199, 205, 116 S. Ct. 619, 133 L. Ed. 2d 578 \(1996\) (emphasis in original) (internal quotation marks omitted).<sup>3</sup>

[[**11] Standard of Review

As the Hess order partially granted Dentsply's motion for summary judgment, our review is de novo. *Mass. Sch. of Law at Andover, Inc. v. ABA*, 107 F.3d 1026, 1032 \(3d Cir. 1997\). The first Jersey Dental order granted Dentsply's motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim. Review of this order also merits de novo review. *Worldcom, Inc. v. Graphnet, Inc.*, 343 F.3d 651, 653 \(3d Cir. 2003\). The second Jersey Dental order denied Plaintiffs' motion for leave to amend the complaint on the ground that "the proposed amended complaint would not survive a motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12 \(b\)\(6\)." Dist. Ct. Mem. Ord. at 7 (Aug. 27, 2002). HN4<sup>2</sup> Where, as here, "the District Court has based its decision to deny leave to amend on a legal conclusion that the amended pleading would not withstand a motion to dismiss, we review such a decision de novo." *Ziegler v. IBP Hog Mkt., Inc.*, 249 F.3d 509, 518 \(6th Cir. 2001\). Thus we review all three orders de novo.

Discussion

---

<sup>3</sup> We note that the Government has also sued Dentsply for alleged antitrust violations. See *United States v. Dentsply Int'l, Inc.*, 399 F.3d 181 \(3d Cir. 2005\). There we reversed the District Court's judgment in favor of Dentsply and granted injunctive relief. In so doing, we determined that Dentsply had monopoly power (i.e., the power to exclude competitors) and that its exclusionary practices, particularly Dealer Criterion Number 6, had an anticompetitive effect. *Id. at 188-97*.

Illinois Brick lays many of the markers for our decision. In that case, [\[\*\*12\]](#) the Supreme Court established HN5 the general rule that only direct purchasers from antitrust violators may recover damages in antitrust suits. The plaintiffs alleged that concrete block manufacturers conspired to fix the prices at which concrete blocks were sold to masonry contractors. They in turn "passed on" overcharges to the general contractors, who then passed them on to the plaintiffs, who had purchased buildings made from the concrete block. The plaintiffs, therefore, were "indirect purchasers" of concrete block, which "passee[d]" through two separate levels in the chain of distribution before reaching them. 431 U.S. at 726.

Before the Court was whether the indirect purchaser plaintiffs could use this pass-on theory to state a damages claim against the alleged antitrust violators upstream. It had previously held that an antitrust defendant could not argue that a plaintiff who had purchased a product directly from the defendant was not injured because it had passed on the illegal overcharge to its own customers. Hanover Shoe, Inc. v. United Shoe Mach. Corp., 392 U.S. 481, 494, 20 L. Ed. 2d 1231, 88 S. Ct. 2224 \(1968\). To maintain consistency, the Court held in [\[\*\*13\]](#) Illinois Brick that direct purchasers are the only parties "injured" in a manner that permits them to recover damages. 431 U.S. at 729, 735. The indirect purchaser plaintiffs were thus ineligible to recover damages for the passed-on overcharges.

The Court gave three policy reasons for its holding: (1) a risk of duplicative liability for defendants and potentially inconsistent adjudications could arise if courts permitted both direct and indirect purchasers [\[\*370\]](#) to sue defendants for the same overcharge; (2) the evidentiary complexities and uncertainties involved in ascertaining the portion of the overcharge that the direct purchasers had passed on to the various levels of indirect purchasers would place too great a burden on the courts; and (3) permitting direct and indirect purchasers to sue only for the amount of the overcharge they themselves absorbed and did not pass on would cause inefficient enforcement of the antitrust laws by diluting the ultimate recovery and thus decreasing the direct purchasers' incentive to sue. Id. at 730-35 & nn.11-12, 737 & n.18, 740-43 & nn. 23, 27, 745.

I. May Plaintiffs recover damages in Hess ?

a. May [\[\*\*14\]](#) Plaintiffs recover damages in Hess under a co-conspirator exception to Illinois Brick ?

Although the Hess complaint alleged that Dentsply's dealers conspired with Dentsply by agreeing to the exclusive-dealing arrangements, Plaintiffs did not name any of the dealers as co-defendants. HN6 We have rejected attempts to invoke a coconspirator exception to Illinois Brick's bar on indirect purchaser standing when plaintiffs have not named the coconspirators immediately upstream as defendants. See McCarthy v. Recordex Serv., Inc., 80 F.3d 842, 854 \(3d Cir. 1996\); Link v. Mercedes-Benz, 788 F.2d 918, 933 \(3d Cir. 1986\).

In Link, for example, Mercedes car owners sued Mercedes-Benz for allegedly requiring dealers to purchase parts exclusively from it. 788 F.2d at 929. Plaintiffs had purchased parts from the dealers, whom they named as co-conspirators but not as defendants. Plaintiffs claimed that Illinois Brick did not bar their vertical conspiracy claims because "the intervening parties in the distribution process [were] co-conspirators." Id. at 931.

We concluded that, unless the dealers were joined as [\[\*\*15\]](#) parties, plaintiffs' suit implicated the policy concerns of Illinois Brick and was barred. We explained that if a jury found that Mercedes and its dealers were co-conspirators, but the dealers were not parties to the suit, that determination would not have any collateral estoppel effect in a subsequent suit by a dealer against Mercedes. Id. at 932. Therefore, because the dealers were not named as defendants, the risk of duplicative liability identified in Illinois Brick remained. Similarly in Hess, because the dealers may also sue Dentsply, the risk of duplicative liability looms.

Plaintiffs attempt to distinguish Hess from Link by pointing to stipulations they entered into with most of Dentsply's dealers. As part of Plaintiffs' opposition to Dentsply's motion for summary judgment in Hess, they executed stipulations with twenty-two of Dentsply's dealers. In each stipulation, the dealer agrees "to release [Dentsply] from any and all claims for antitrust violations" set forth in the complaints in Hess or United States v. Dentsply (the Government's suit against Dentsply), and Plaintiffs agree to "refrain[] from filing suit" against [\[\*\*16\]](#) that dealer for the same antitrust violations. The parties to each stipulation agree that "Dentsply is a third party beneficiary of this stipulation" and that the stipulation "may be specifically enforced by the parties hereto or by Dentsply." Plaintiffs' expert calculated that the group of dealers who executed these stipulations "represents approximately 95% of the gross sales" of Dentsply's artificial teeth. Plaintiffs argue that the stipulations give Dentsply a safe harbor from dealer suits, thus eliminating the risk of duplicative liability.

[*371] Many problems attend Plaintiffs' argument. First, while in the stipulations Plaintiffs expressly agree not to sue the dealers, they did sue the dealers in Jersey Dental. Thus, the stipulations are likely unenforceable by Plaintiffs or Dentsply.<sup>4</sup>

[**17] Furthermore, in Kansas v. Utilicorp United, Inc., 497 U.S. 199, 111 L. Ed. 2d 169, 110 S. Ct. 2807 (1990), HN8 the Supreme Court rejected the assertion that the absence of a particular Illinois Brick concern in an individual case would remove its bar on an indirect purchaser claim. Id. at 217. "Even assuming that any economic assumptions underlying the Illinois Brick rule might be disproved in a specific case, we think it an unwarranted and counterproductive exercise to litigate a series of exceptions." Id. Thus, Plaintiffs would not necessarily have standing even if the stipulations did eliminate Illinois Brick's duplicative liability concern.

In addition, in Merican the indirect purchasers argued that there was no danger of duplicative recovery because the direct purchaser had executed an affidavit that said it had not suffered injury from the policy that was alleged to violate the antitrust laws. 713 F.2d at 968. We nevertheless held that plaintiffs were barred from seeking damages under Illinois Brick, recognizing the remaining potential of a direct purchaser suit. Id. at 968-69; see also Dickson v. Microsoft Corp., 309 F.3d 193, 215 (4th Cir. 2002) [**18] (applying Illinois Brick despite argument that "there is no danger of duplicative recovery because the [direct purchasers] apparently have elected not to sue [the defendant].") (internal quotation marks omitted)).

As our Court has expressly refused to adopt a coconspirator exception to Illinois Brick absent the joinder as defendants of the alleged co-conspirators immediately upstream, Plaintiffs in Hess lack standing to pursue claims for monetary relief. Before the applicability of that exception may be considered, the dealers must be joined.

b. May Plaintiffs recover damages in Hess under the control exception to Illinois Brick ?

HN9 The "control exception" to Illinois Brick "might" permit an indirect purchaser to sue an initial seller when the initial seller "own[s] or control[s]" the direct purchaser. Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at 736 n.16. In Hess, Plaintiffs argued that they come within this exception because "Dentsply exerts virtual control over its . . . dealers." Dist. Ct. Mem. Op. at 30 (March 30, 2001).

We have applied the control exception only when the initial seller owned the direct purchaser. See In re Sugar Indus. Antitrust Litig., 579 F.2d 13, 18-19 & n.8 (3d Cir. 1978) [**19] (holding that, in certain circumstances, the "first noncontrolled purchaser" has standing to sue when it has purchased from a subsidiary of the violator); see also Mid-West-Paper Prods. Co., v. Continental Group, Inc., 596 F.2d 573, 589 (3d Cir. 1979) (indicating that control exception may apply "when the parent dominates [*372] and controls the subsidiary to such an extent that the subsidiary is deemed to be an agent of the parent."). But Dentsply does not own any interest in its dealers.

Courts that have extended the control exception beyond a parent-subsidiary relationship still require "relationships involving such functional economic or other unity between the direct purchaser and either the defendant or the indirect purchaser that there effectively has been only one sale." Jewish Hospital Asso. v. Stewart Mechanical Enterprises, Inc., 628 F.2d 971, 975 (6th Cir. 1980); see also Fisher v. Wattles, 639 F. Supp. 7, 9 (M.D. Pa. 1985) (to fall within the control exception, plaintiffs must show "such significant control" that the two companies are "virtually the same entity"). Modes of control that might qualify for the control exception include "interlocking [**20]

<sup>4</sup> Even if Plaintiffs had not sued the dealers, Dentsply may not be able to enforce the stipulations in any event. The stipulations state that "Dentsply is a third party beneficiary of this stipulation" and that the stipulations "may be specifically enforced by the parties hereto or by Dentsply." However, HN7 "only intended beneficiaries of a contract made between two or more other parties have enforceable rights under the contract." 13 Williston on Contracts § 37:8, at 67 (Richard A. Lord ed., 4th ed. 2000) (citing Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 302). In this case, the contracting parties arguably did not intend that Dentsply benefit from the stipulations, as their purpose was to allow Plaintiffs to sue Dentsply.

directories, minority stock ownership, loan agreements that subject the wholesalers to the manufacturers' operating control, [or] trust agreements."

In re Brand Name Prescription Drugs Antitrust Litig., 123 F.3d 599, 605 (7th Cir. 1997) (Posner, J.). Plaintiffs in Hess, however, do not allege that Dentsply exerts any of these modes of control over its dealers.

Furthermore, even assuming that Dentsply does exert some degree of control over its dealers, Illinois Brick's policy reasons for denying standing remain. Nothing about Dentsply's "control" over its dealers would prevent the dealers from suing Dentsply, thus creating a risk of duplicative liability for Dentsply and potentially inconsistent judgments. Also, if Plaintiffs wanted to recover overcharge damages, they would still have to demonstrate the portion of the overcharge dealers had passed on to them, leaving intact the evidentiary complexities and uncertainties of concern in Illinois Brick. Moreover, permitting Plaintiffs to sue for damages could potentially lead to inefficient enforcement of the antitrust laws, because the ultimate recovery for the dealers would be diluted (assuming that, [**21] rather than the dealers being permitted to recover the entire overcharge, it was apportioned among the dealers and the labs), thereby decreasing the dealers' incentive to sue.

In sum, Plaintiffs do not come within the control exception because Dentsply does not own any interest in its dealers and no functional unity exists among them and Dentsply. Notwithstanding whatever lesser degree of control Dentsply may exert over its dealers, Illinois Brick's policy reasons for denying standing apply.

c. May Plaintiffs recover non-overcharge damages in Hess ?

In their opposition to summary judgment in Hess, Plaintiffs argued that, even if Illinois Brick barred them from proving overcharge damages, they might still be able to present a non-overcharge theory of damages after further discovery. The District Court rejected this claim "because the Hess plaintiffs have failed to articulate any theory of damages that would be anything other than overcharges." Dist. Ct. Mem. Op. at 31 (March 30, 2001). We agree, and thus Plaintiffs' claim was properly dismissed at summary judgment.

D. May Plaintiffs recover damages based on drop shipments in Hess ?

Plaintiffs in [**22] Hess claimed that, for teeth drop shipped directly from Dentsply to the labs, they were direct purchasers not subject to Illinois Brick. However, the Hess complaint limited the plaintiff class to "all dental laboratory purchasers of any Dentsply products who purchased such products through Dentsply Dealers." (emphasis added). Plaintiffs cannot avoid Illinois Brick by claiming they were direct purchasers of drop shipments when their [*373] complaint specifically alleges that they did not directly purchase from Dentsply.

Furthermore, the fact that some of the teeth are drop shipped directly from Dentsply to Plaintiffs does not affect the economic substance of the transaction. That is, the dealers still make the sale to Plaintiffs and Dentsply makes the sale to the dealers. Plaintiffs pay the dealers their usual price, the dealers take their profit, and then the dealers pay Dentsply. See Dist. Ct. Mem. Op. at 29 (March 30, 2001). While it is true that the dealers do not take physical possession of the teeth, this is nothing but a formal difference from the typical transactions. Thus, even as to teeth drop shipped directly from Dentsply to the labs, Plaintiffs are indirect [**23] purchasers potentially subject to Illinois Brick.

II. May Plaintiffs recover damages in Jersey Dental ?

a. May Plaintiffs recover lost profits damages caused by their lost opportunities to purchase and resell Dentsply's competitors' products?

Plaintiffs argue that, even if they do not have standing to recover damages for overcharges they paid to dealers for Dentsply's teeth, they have standing to recover lost profits damages caused by their lost opportunities to purchase and resell products of Dentsply's competitors.<sup>5</sup> Plaintiffs allege that, as a result of Dentsply's exclusive-dealing, its competitors are denied adequate access to a necessary means of distribution--the dealers. Thus Dentsply's competitors' products are not available. Plaintiffs are theoretically correct that, "but for [Dentsply's] exclusion of more efficient rivals, purchasers would have shifted at least some of their business to the rivals." ABA Section of Antitrust Law, Proving Antitrust Damages: Legal and Economic Issues 194 (1996).

[**24] HN10 When antitrust violators cause prices to increase through monopolization, a price-fixing conspiracy, or exclusionary conduct, the harm they cause members of the distribution chain comes in two forms: (1) overcharges paid for goods actually purchased;<sup>6</sup> and (2) lost profits resulting from the lost opportunity to buy and resell a greater volume of goods. Jeffrey L. Harrison, The Lost Profits Measure of Damages in Price Enhancement Cases, 64 Minn. L. Rev. 751, 753, 770-72 [*374] (1980) ("The gross overcharge measure [of damages] ignores the impact that the enhanced price has had on the volume of the final good eventually produced."); see also ABA Section of Antitrust Law, supra, at 195 ("It is the fundamental law of demand that as the price of a product increases the amount purchased decreases. A collusive price increase, therefore, will result in a reduction of the quantity of the good purchased.").

[**25] Thus, as some scholars see it, HN11 when antitrust plaintiffs claim that anticompetitive behavior caused prices to increase, two measures of damages could theoretically be used: (1) the overcharge (i.e., the difference between the price paid for goods actually purchased and the price that would have been paid absent the illegal conduct), or (2) lost profits (i.e., the overcharge paid minus the overcharge passed on for goods actually purchased and resold, plus lost profits from the lost opportunity to buy and resell a greater volume of goods). See 2 Phillip E. Areeda, Herbert Hovenkamp & Roger D. Blair, Antitrust Law P 394, at 521 (2d ed. 2000).<sup>7</sup>

A court might potentially use a lost profits measure of damages, as "the Supreme Court has not explicitly held that any particular measure of damages is required [**26] or precluded." ABA Section of Antitrust Law, supra, at 184 (citing Thomsen v. Cayser, 243 U.S. 66, 61 L. Ed. 597, 37 S. Ct. 353 (1917)); see also Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at 733 n.13, 743 n.27 (observing that even if the pass-on defense were permitted and "the defendant show[ed] that as a result of the overcharge the direct purchaser increased its price by the full amount of the overcharge, the direct purchaser m[ight] still claim injury from a reduction in the volume of its sales caused by its higher prices").

However, the standard method of measuring damages in price enhancement cases is overcharge, not lost profits. See ABA Section of Antitrust Law, supra, at 172 ("The typical measure of damages is the difference between the actual price and the presumed competitive price multiplied by the quantity purchased. This was the calculation that the Supreme Court approved in Chattanooga Foundry & Pipe Works v. Atlanta, 203 U.S. 390, 396, 51 L. Ed. 241, 27 S. Ct. 65 (1906)."); id. at 193-94 (Where "a group of suppliers conspires to drive a more efficient competitor out

<sup>5</sup> If Dentsply's exclusionary conduct enabled it to raise its prices, thereby reducing (at least in theory) the demand for its own products, Plaintiffs might also have claimed lost profits damages caused by their lost opportunities to purchase and resell Dentsply's products. However, we would reject such a claim for the same reasons we reject Plaintiffs' claim for lost profits damages caused by their lost opportunities to purchase and resell Dentsply's competitors' products.

<sup>6</sup> Members of the distribution chain usually mitigate this harm by passing on some of the overcharge to their buyers. However, much of this harm is not actually avoided, but rather takes the form of the second type of harm--lost profits from the lost opportunity to buy and resell a greater volume of goods. This is because, as members of the distribution chain pass on the overcharge (i.e., raise their prices), their volume of sales theoretically decreases.

Like the second type of harm, the overcharge paid minus the overcharge passed on for goods actually purchased and resold are a form of "lost profits." The overcharge paid minus the overcharge passed on for goods actually purchased and resold is one component of the loss an antitrust violation causes to the bottom line (i.e., the profits) of members of the distribution chain. However, because Illinois Brick precludes indirect purchasers from recovering overcharge damages, Plaintiffs do not seek in their lost profits claim the component of their lost profits that includes the overcharge paid minus the overcharge passed on for teeth they actually purchased and resold.

<sup>7</sup> We note that Professor Areeda, who gained recognition for his scholarly work in antitrust law, is deceased, and that the treatise is now the responsibility principally of Professor Hovenkamp.

of the market or, equivalently, prevent a more efficient [**27] supplier from entering the market," the excluded supplier (competitor) "would have a claim for antitrust damages based on lost profits" and "purchasers from the conspirators would also have antitrust claims because they pay higher prices as a result of the exclusionary practice." The purchasers' damages would be based on the overcharge they paid measured by "the difference between the price actually paid and the price that would have been paid absent collusion, multiplied by the quantity."); 2 Areeda et al., supra, P 394b, at 529 (observing that "in spite of the (arguably) theoretical superiority of lost profits as a measure of damages in a price-enhancement case, nearly all plaintiffs claim damages on the basis of an overcharge calculation"); Harrison, supra, at 755-56 ("When the specific activity at issue [is] price enhancement, courts consistently allow[] recoveries based on the gross overcharge instead of lost profits." (footnote omitted)).

HN12 [+] "Lost" profits damages are disfavored, at least in part because they are more difficult [*375] to prove than overcharge damages. See ABA Section of Antitrust Law, supra, at 171 ("The overcharge measure has the virtues of conceptual simplicity [**28] . . . and relative ease of calculation."); Roger D. Blair & William H. Page, "Speculative" Antitrust Damages, 70 Wash. L. Rev. 423, 433-34 (1995) ("Overcharge damages . . . were recognized by the Supreme Court [in Chattanooga Foundry] primarily because of the difficulty of proving lost profits in price-fixing cases. Rather than require the complex netting associated with lost profits, and thus practically deny recovery, the Court permitted plaintiffs to prove damages by showing a price enhancement."); Harrison, supra, at 756 ("The advantage to plaintiffs of using a gross overcharge measure is that it is less speculative and therefore easier to prove than lost profits.").

Furthermore, overcharge damages, unlike lost profits, may induce antitrust plaintiffs to make arguments that will protect rather than injure consumers. See Frank H. Easterbrook, Treble What?, 55 Antitrust L.J. 95, 96-97, 100-01 (1986). Judge Easterbrook argues that the overcharge to consumers, not lost profits, "should be the basis of all [antitrust] damages." Id. at 101. He reasons that the lure of damages for lost profits induces firms to [**29] make arguments that will injure rather than protect consumers. Profits get lost primarily from hard competition or from the elimination of monopoly. . . . The more competitive the market, the more profits are 'lost.' . . . [Because] it is hard to tell competition apart from exclusion, [] we must be wary of remedies that give the victims of hard competition a strong incentive to sue.

Id. at 100-01.

But most importantly, Plaintiffs may not recover lost profits damages because they are indirect purchasers. The District Court concluded that "the intermediate dental dealers suffer the direct harm from any lost opportunity to sell a greater volume of Dentsply products or to sell competitive product lines and profit therefrom. Any harm suffered by plaintiffs remains indirect." Dist Ct. Mem. Op. at 24 n.9 (Dec. 19, 2001). We agree.

Even commentators who advocate for indirect purchaser standing and a lost profits measure of damages admit that their position is currently precluded by Supreme Court case law. As Professor Harrison concedes in his article arguing for indirect purchaser standing and a lost profits measure of damages, "the Illinois Brick decision [**30] seems absolutely to foreclose the possibility of indirect-purchaser standing in price enhancement suits," even if the indirect purchaser plaintiffs seek lost profits as opposed to overcharge damages. See Harrison, supra, at 777; see also Illinois Brick, 431 U.S. at 746 ("In elevating direct purchasers to a preferred position as private attorneys general, [our case law] denies recovery to those indirect purchasers who may have been actually injured by antitrust violations.").

Harrison also acknowledges that the legal precedents and policy arguments relied on by the [Hanover Shoe] Court in rejecting the pass-on defense do not support even the theoretical appropriateness of the lost profits measure. In addition, the Court hinted that it was actually rejecting the very notion that damages should be apportioned among various layers of buyers and sellers. . . . To the extent that the apportionment process has been rejected by the Court, it would be inappropriate to infer that the lost profits measure has received even implicit approval.

Id. at 764-65 (footnotes omitted) (citing *Hanover Shoe, 392 U.S. at [*376] 489-90 & n.8, 494*, ). [**31] Similarly, while Professors Areeda, Hovenkamp and Blair argue that "the correct solution is to permit damages actions based on lost profits to all intermediaries," they concede that their position "is at variance with the case law." 2 Areeda et al., supra, P 346a, at 359-60. Finally, the ABA's Antitrust Section recognizes that HN13[] "if a cartel sells to an intermediate purchaser who resells to another, both purchasers are likely to lose profits as a result of the price fix," but concedes that "under the Illinois Brick rule, the second intermediate purchaser, or the indirect purchaser from the cartel, cannot recover damages." ABA Section of Antitrust Law, supra, at 183-84.

If we were to hold that indirect purchaser plaintiffs could recover lost profits from their decreased volume of purchases and resales, we would be implying (1) that past indirect purchaser plaintiffs who have been denied standing based on Illinois Brick could have recovered if only they had framed their claim as one for lost profits rather than for overcharge damages, and (2) that the Illinois Brick Court--which was concerned with simplifying and controlling the costs of antitrust litigation and with conserving [**32] judicial resources--really meant that indirect purchasers do have standing to sue, but for lost profits rather than overcharge damages. We find both of these propositions untenable.

For all of these reasons, we hold that Plaintiffs do not have statutory standing to recover lost profits damages caused by their lost opportunities to purchase and resell Dentsply's competitors' products.

b. May Plaintiffs recover damages caused by the alleged retail price-fixing conspiracy in Jersey Dental under a co conspirator exception to Illinois Brick ?

In Jersey Dental, Plaintiffs claim that they come within the "co-conspirator exception" to Illinois Brick because their purchases from Dentsply's dealers were made from members of a retail price-fixing conspiracy. Other circuit courts have adopted a co-conspirator exception to Illinois Brick that applies in retail price-fixing cases. See Arizona v. Shamrock Foods Co., 729 F.2d 1208, 1211-12 (9th Cir. 1984) (holding that purchasers from down-stream conspirators may sue up-stream conspirators for damages and noting that "numerous other courts have found Illinois Brick inapplicable to claims against remote [**33] sellers when the plaintiffs allege that the sellers conspired with intermediates in the distribution chain to fix the price at which the plaintiffs purchased"); Paper Sys. Inc. v. Nippon Paper Indus. Co., 281 F.3d 629, 631-32 (7th Cir. 2002) (Easterbrook, J.) (holding that Illinois Brick does not bar suits for damages by plaintiffs against an initial seller when it is alleged to have conspired in violation of the antitrust laws with the seller directly upstream from plaintiffs); Prescription Drugs, 123 F.3d at 604 (same); see also Fontana Aviation, Inc. v. Cessna Aircraft Co., 617 F.2d 478, 481 (7th Cir. 1980) (approving co-conspirator exception in dicta).

Our Court has not explicitly adopted a co-conspirator exception to Illinois Brick. In McCarthy, we neither adopted nor rejected the exception because it was inapplicable to the case, but we did explain its "nature": "In order to fall within the exception, plaintiffs here would have to allege that the intermediaries immediately upstream . . . colluded with the defendants to overcharge plaintiffs . . . . Moreover, plaintiffs would be obliged to join the [intermediaries] [**34] as defendants . . . ." 80 F.3d at 855 (emphasis omitted). In our case, Plaintiffs allege that they made purchases from Dentsply's dealers (the intermediaries immediately upstream from Plaintiffs) [*377] and that Dentsply and its dealers are co-conspirators. In addition, in Jersey Dental Plaintiffs sued not only Dentsply, but also joined as defendants twenty-six of Dentsply's then twenty-eight authorized dealers.<sup>8</sup> Thus, under McCarthy, Plaintiffs potentially qualify for the co-conspirator exception.

Furthermore, Professors Areeda, Hovenkamp, and Blair approve of the co-conspirator exception. They explain that

---

<sup>8</sup> Plaintiffs may not recover from Dentsply for teeth purchased from the two non-joined dealers under a coconspirator exception to Illinois Brick because, as previously mentioned, HN14[] our Court has expressly refused to adopt a coconspirator exception when the alleged co-conspirators immediately upstream have not been joined.

HN15 [↑] Illinois Brick does not limit suits by consumers against [**35] a manufacturer who illegally contracted with its dealers to set the latter's resale price. . . . There is no problem of duplication or apportionment, because the consumer is the only party who has paid any overcharge. . . .

The court simply computes the retail price that would have prevailed absent the illegal contract fixing that price. Further emphasizing that Illinois Brick does not apply is that a dealer challenging resale price maintenance imposed upon itself would not base its damages on an "overcharge" at all. Its action is not based on a higher product price to itself, but rather on the constraint on its resale price; its damages would be for lost profits resulting from the reduced volume of sales. As that case illustrates, lost profits damages for the intermediary and overcharge damages for the consumer are not in any way duplicative; they are both losses caused by the unlawful resale price maintenance.

2 Areeda et al., supra, P 346h, at 369-70 (footnote omitted).

In fact, a recent supplement to their treatise analyzed Jersey Dental and concluded that the District Court "incorrectly refus[ed] to apply a co-conspirator exception to Illinois Brick. . ." 2 Areeda et al., supra, P [**36] 346a, at 88 n.1 (2003 Supp.). It reasoned that, to the extent that Dentsply imposed resale price maintenance <sup>9</sup> on its dealers, they might have their own damage action against the supplier, but if so, it would be an action for lost profits, not for an overcharge; the dealer's injury would accrue from the profits lost by . . . lost output resulting from being required to sell at the maintained price; as a result, there was nothing to pass on . . .

Id. <sup>10</sup>

[**37] Not only are overcharge pass-on calculations not a concern, the other two Illinois Brick policy justifications are also inapplicable to Plaintiffs' price-fixing conspiracy claim. First, there is no risk of duplicative liability or potentially inconsistent judgments because Plaintiffs and Dentsply's dealers would not be suing for the same injury. To the extent that Dentsply imposed resale price maintenance on the dealers, the dealers' claim against Dentsply would be for lost profits, not for an overcharge.<sup>11</sup> Lost profits would be [*378] caused by lost output, which in turn is caused by resale price maintenance. 2 Areeda et al., supra, P 346a, at 88 n.1 (2003 Supp.). Second, permitting Plaintiffs to sue would not cause inefficient enforcement of the antitrust laws by diluting the ultimate recovery and thus decreasing direct purchasers' incentive to sue. Dealers would still recover the same amount on their hypothetical lost profits claim even if Plaintiffs recovered on their separate price-fixing claim.

[**38] Finally, we have found no precedent holding that plaintiffs, who purchase from dealers who are part of a price-fixing conspiracy with the initial seller, may not recover damages from the initial seller.

In this context, we hold that Plaintiffs in Jersey Dental have statutory standing to recover damages from Dentsply for its alleged price-fixing conspiracy with its dealers.

c. May Plaintiffs recover damages caused by the alleged exclusive-dealing conspiracy in Jersey Dental under a co conspirator exception to Illinois Brick ?

---

<sup>9</sup> "Resale price maintenance"--the term used by Areeda et al.--is simply another way of describing the vertical price fixing in which Plaintiffs allege Dentsply and its dealers engaged. In resale price maintenance, the initial seller dictates the dealers' resale price.

<sup>10</sup> In fact, Areeda implies that even the alleged exclusive-dealing could not have caused the dealers to be overcharged. 2 Areeda et al., supra, P 346a, at 88 n.1 (2003 Supp.). This appears to be incorrect, for if the exclusive-dealing led to exclusion of Dentsply's competitors, Dentsply may have been able to overcharge its dealers.

<sup>11</sup> We are, of course, not saying that the dealers could prevail on any particular claim. Rather, we merely point out that if the dealers proved that Dentsply imposed resale price maintenance on them, their measure of damages would be based on the lost profits from their decreased volume of purchases and resales. This lost profits harm is different from, and thus not duplicative of, the overcharge harm that any resale price maintenance would have caused Plaintiffs.

In Jersey Dental, Plaintiffs also claim that they come within the "co-conspirator exception" to Illinois Brick because their purchases from Dentsply's dealers were made from members of an exclusive-dealing conspiracy. Thus, we must decide whether HN16 there is--in addition to a co-conspirator exception for RPM (resale price maintenance, i.e., vertical price-fixing) conspiracies--a co-conspirator exception for non-RPM conspiracies, such as exclusive-dealing or price-fixing at the manufacturer level ("the general co-conspirator exception").<sup>12</sup> We hold that such [\[\*379\]](#) an exception would only exist in circumstances where the middlemen would [\[\*\*39\]](#) be barred from bringing a claim against their former co-conspirator--the manufacturer--because their involvement in the conspiracy was "truly complete" (i.e., if the middlemen would be barred from suing by the "complete involvement defense" of a manufacturer). See *Perma Life Mufflers, Inc. v. Int'l Parts Corp.*, 392 U.S. 134, 140, 20 L. Ed. 2d 982, 88 S. Ct. 1981 \(1968\) (expressly "not decid[ing] . . . whether . . . truly complete involvement and participation in a monopolistic scheme could ever be a basis . . . for barring a plaintiff's cause of action").

[**40] 1. Why we adopt a "limited" general co-conspirator exception.

If there is a general co-conspirator exception, why do we limit it? To begin, we examine whether Illinois Brick's policy justifications suggest we should adopt (1) a general coconspirator exception that would permit indirect purchaser standing when the middlemen conspired with the manufacturers even if the middlemen were not barred by the complete involvement defense from suing their former coconspirator--the manufacturer (the "unlimited exception")--or (2) an exception that would permit indirect purchaser standing only if the middlemen were barred by the complete involvement defense from suing the manufacturer (the "limited exception").<sup>13</sup>

<sup>12</sup> We recognize that one might ask why would it not always be unprofitable for a direct purchaser to join such a non-RPM conspiracy and effectively agree to be overcharged (as input costs increase, profits decrease). Further, if economics predicts that such overcharge conspiracies will never arise, why consider adopting an exception for them?

As an initial matter, because Jersey Dental is at the *Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12\(b\)\(6\)* stage, we must take as true Plaintiffs' allegations that Dentsply and its dealers have conspired to fix, and have fixed, the prices that dealers charge Plaintiffs and that there was an exclusive-dealing conspiracy between Dentsply and its dealers to exclude Dentsply's competitors. We may not dismiss Plaintiffs' claims because we determine the alleged facts likely did not occur.

In fact, however, we can imagine how the exclusive-dealing conspiracy, in combination with the RPM conspiracy, could have been profitable to the dealers. As previously mentioned, it would presumably not have been profitable for the dealers to have joined a conspiracy in which they were overcharged (the exclusive-dealing conspiracy). However, the dealers might have joined such a conspiracy if they were compensated in some fashion. Plaintiffs argue that Dentsply conspired to fix the prices that its dealers charge. This is effectively a horizontal price fixing conspiracy at the dealer level (which could presumably be profitable to the dealers) that is policed by Dentsply. Thus, the RPM conspiracy could be the mechanism by which Dentsply compensates its dealers in exchange for the dealers' agreement (1) not to deal with Dentsply's competitors and (2) thus to be overcharged by Dentsply.

In addition, in Prescription Drugs Judge Posner rejected a similar argument that it would not have made sense economically for the wholesalers in that case to have joined what was arguably a horizontal price-fixing conspiracy at the manufacturer level. 123 F.3d at 614. He explained that "the theory is that the wholesalers were the manufacturers' cats-paws. There is nothing new about the idea that a cartel might 'hire' a customer to help police the cartel." Id. He also implied that, because drug wholesalers appeared to be "an endangered commercial species" and the manufacturers could have cut them out altogether and sold directly to buying groups for pharmacies, it was in the wholesalers' self-interest to join the conspiracy. Id.

Finally, HN17 "summary judgment for a defendant is proper, even if there is some evidence of an antitrust violation, if plaintiff's theory of violation makes no economic sense." *Prescription Drugs*, 123 F.3d at 614 (citing *Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp.*, 475 U.S. 574, 587, 89 L. Ed. 2d 538, 106 S. Ct. 1348 \(1986\); *Eastman Kodak Co. v. Image Technical Services, Inc.*, 504 U.S. 451, 467-69, 119 L. Ed. 2d 265, 112 S. Ct. 2072 \(1992\)). Thus, there is already a mechanism in place for courts to dismiss before trial claims of a conspiracy that would make no economic sense.

<sup>13</sup> The Seventh Circuit is the only Court of Appeals to engage head-on the general co-conspirator exception, and it has adopted it. See *Paper Systems*, 281 F.3d at 631-32 ("The right to sue middlemen that joined the conspiracy is sometimes referred to as a

[**41] Illinois Brick's first policy concern--the risk of duplicative liability--cuts against the unlimited exception, but in favor of the limited exception. For example, imagine the dealers had already sued and recovered overcharges from Dentsply for the exclusive-dealing conspiracy. If there was an unlimited exception, presumably nothing would stop the labs from then suing Dentsply to recover the duplicative portion of the overcharge that the dealers had passed on to them. Even under the conditions of this case (with the labs suing first and the dealers joined), duplicative recovery is a possibility. If the labs prove Dentsply engaged in an exclusive-dealing conspiracy with the dealers, the dealers could potentially sue Dentsply for duplicative damages the conspiracy caused them. See Link, 788 F.2d at 932 n.12 (analyzing an alleged conspiracy analogous to our case and noting that, even if the dealers [*380] were joined and were co-conspirators, they could still potentially sue the manufacturer for overcharges caused by the exclusive-dealing conspiracy). However, under the limited exception, the risk of duplicative liability is alleviated because that exception is only applicable [**42] if the middlemen are barred from recovery.

Illinois Brick's second policy concern--avoiding the need to ascertain the portion of an overcharge that was passed on--cuts against both exceptions. Unlike vertical conspiracies involving RPM, other vertical conspiracies are designed to distort the wholesale market for a particular good. For example, assume that Dentsply and its dealers only engaged in an exclusive-dealing conspiracy. The effect of that conspiracy would be to deny Dentsply's competitors access to its authorized dealers. The absence of competition for these dealers' business would allow Dentsply to charge its dealers a supra-competitive price at wholesale. This overcharge would then be passed on (at least in part) to the dealers' customers, the dental laboratories. The damages that the laboratories could recover from Dentsply would thus be the treble portion of the overcharge that the dealers passed on to them.<sup>14</sup> [**43] Thus both exceptions, which apply to conspiracies that attack the wholesale market, potentially create the problems of apportionment that underlie Illinois Brick.<sup>15</sup> co-conspirator 'exception' to Illinois Brick, but it would be better to recognize that Hanover Shoe and Illinois Brick allocate to the first non-conspirator in the distribution chain the right to collect 100 of the damages."); Prescription Drugs, 123 F.3d at 604; Fontana Aviation, 617 F.2d at 481. However, we do not discern an explanation by the Court why it did so or an explicit delineation of the exception's scope (i.e., whether it is unlimited or limited).

<sup>14</sup> Because Section 4 of the Clayton Act provides for damages of treble the amount a plaintiff is injured, presumably indirect purchaser plaintiffs would only be permitted to recover treble the amount of the manufacturer's overcharge that the direct purchasers passed on to them and would not be able to recover the portion of the manufacturer's overcharge that the direct purchasers absorbed because the indirect purchasers would not have been injured by that portion. See 15 U.S.C. § 15\(a\) (Section 4 of the Clayton Act provides that "any person who shall be injured in his business or property by reason of anything forbidden in the antitrust laws . . . shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained.")) (emphasis added). But see Paper Systems, 281 F.3d at 631-32 ("The right to sue middlemen that joined the conspiracy is sometimes referred to as a co-conspirator "exception" to Illinois Brick, but it would be better to recognize that Hanover Shoe and Illinois Brick allocate to the first non-conspirator in the distribution chain the right to collect 100 of the damages.")) (emphasis added); cf. Hanover Shoe, 392 U.S. at 494 (holding that an antitrust defendant could not argue that a plaintiff who had purchased a product directly from the defendant was not injured because it had passed on the illegal overcharge to its own customers, thus creating a regime under which plaintiffs can arguably recover more than "threefold the damages by him sustained"). Of course, if under the limited exception (where direct purchasers are barred from recovering) indirect purchaser plaintiffs were allowed to recover the entire overcharge that the manufacturers imposed on the direct purchasers (even though the direct purchasers absorbed some of that overcharge and did not pass on that absorbed portion to the indirect purchasers), then the portion of the overcharge that was passed on from the direct purchasers to the indirect purchasers would not need to be ascertained and Illinois Brick's second policy justification would cut in favor of the limited exception.

<sup>15</sup> Technically speaking, there would be no need to "apportion" damages between direct and indirect purchasers under the limited exception. This is because, as we have explained, the limited exception would only permit indirect purchaser standing in circumstances where the direct purchaser would be barred from bringing suit against the manufacturer. As such, there would be no need to apportion any damages to the direct purchasing middleman.

Nevertheless, even under the limited exception, the finder of fact would be required to ascertain the amount of the overcharge that had been passed on by the middleman. After all, HN18 an antitrust plaintiff (whether he be a direct or an indirect purchaser) is only entitled to recover "threefold the damages by him sustained." 15 U.S.C. § 15\(a\) (emphasis added). Therefore, to the extent that the middleman retained (i.e., did not pass on to the indirect purchaser) a portion of any overcharge imposed upon him, the damages actually sustained by the indirect purchaser would be reduced by that amount.

[*381] Illinois Brick's third policy [**44] concern--risk of inefficient enforcement of the antitrust laws because the ultimate recovery for the dealers would be diluted, thereby decreasing the dealers' incentive to sue--cuts against the unlimited exception, but in favor of the limited exception. Under the unlimited exception, when middlemen were not completely involved, their recovery would be diluted and their incentive to sue would decrease (assuming that, rather than the middlemen being permitted to recover the entire overcharge, it was apportioned among the middlemen and the indirect purchasers). However, under the limited exception, when middlemen were not completely involved, their recovery would not be diluted and their incentive to sue would not decrease. As the indirect purchasers would not have standing in this instance, no recovery by them could dilute the middlemen's recovery.

Thus, all three of the Illinois Brick policy justifications argue against adopting the unlimited exception, while the first and the third favor adopting the limited exception and only the second (the desire to avoid ascertaining the portion of an overcharge that was passed on) cuts against it. Further, while it is true that adopting the [**45] limited exception creates the need to ascertain the portion of an overcharge that was passed on, we think the alternative, adopting no general co-conspirator exception, is less desirable. Cf. In re Lower Lake Erie Iron Ore Antitrust Litig., 998 F.2d 1144, 1169 (3d Cir. 1993) ("While complex apportionment problems are implicated here, we do not hold that litigation must be avoided solely because it might be difficult to ascertain damages. HN19 [↑] Injured parties cannot be penalized and left without recourse because measurement of their damages is difficult."). The Illinois Brick Court was concerned with promoting "the longstanding policy of encouraging vigorous private enforcement of the antitrust laws." 431 U.S. at 745. HN20 [↑] We are unwilling to hold that if initial sellers and "completely involved" direct purchasers conspire, then no plaintiff outside the conspiracy may sue the initial seller for damages.

2. Is there a "complete involvement" defense?

We hold that a general co-conspirator exception would only exist if the complete involvement defense barred the middlemen from bringing a claim against their former coconspirator--the manufacturer. However, [**46] our Court has not decided whether the complete involvement defense even exists. We thus examine this question.

In Perma Life, the Supreme Court held that "the doctrine of in pari delicto. . . is not to be recognized as a defense to an antitrust action." 392 U.S. at 140.<sup>16</sup> But as previously mentioned, the Court expressly did "not decide . . . whether . . . truly complete involvement and participation in a monopolistic scheme could ever be a basis . . . for barring a plaintiff's cause of action." Id. Further, in concurrences, five members of the Perma Life Court favored barring suit by antitrust plaintiffs who were involved in a conspiracy at a high enough level.<sup>17</sup>

[**47] [*382] Further, every Court of Appeals that has decided the issue has held that antitrust plaintiffs who were involved in a conspiracy at a requisite level are barred from suing. See, e.g., Sullivan v. National Football League, 34 F.3d 1091, 1107 (1st Cir. 1994); Columbia Nitrogen Corp. v. Royster Co., 451 F.2d 3, 16 (4th Cir. 1971); Gen. Leaseways, Inc. v. Nat'l Truck Leasing Ass'n, 830 F.2d 716, 720-23 (7th Cir. 1987); Javelin Corp. v. Uniroyal, Inc., 546 F.2d 276, 279 (9th Cir. 1976). But cf. Greene v. Gen. Foods Corp., 517 F.2d 635, 646-47 (5th Cir. 1975) ("seriously question[ing]" whether antitrust plaintiffs should ever be barred from suing because of their "unclean

<sup>16</sup> The Court explained that, "although in pari delicto literally means 'of equal fault,' the doctrine has been applied . . . in a wide variety of situations in which a plaintiff seeking damages or equitable relief is himself involved in some of the same sort of wrong doing." Perma Life, 392 U.S. at 138.

<sup>17</sup> See Perma Life, 392 U.S. at 146 (White, J., concurring) ("I would deny recovery where plaintiff and defendant bear substantially equal responsibility for injury resulting to one of [the co-conspirators] . . . ."); id. at 147 (Fortas, J., concurring) (Suit should be barred when "the fault of the parties is reasonably within the same scale."); id. at 149 (Marshall, J., concurring) ("I would hold that where a defendant in a private antitrust suit can show that the plaintiff actively participated in the formation and implementation of an illegal scheme, and is substantially equally at fault, the plaintiff should be barred from imposing liability on the defendant."); id. at 153 (Harlan, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part) (Stewart, J., joining) ("Properly used[, in pari delicto] refers to a defense that should be permitted in antitrust cases.").

hands"). In Link, our Court recognized that co-conspirators who were completely involved in a conspiracy might be barred from suing. 788 F.2d at 932. However, we did not decide the issue because we concluded that the co-conspirators in that case were not completely involved in the conspiracy. Id.

We recognize that the weight of authority favors barring suit by antitrust plaintiffs who were involved in a conspiracy at a high enough [\[\*\*48\]](#) level. We also recognize, however, the strong policy argument in favor of allowing suits by co-conspirators even when their involvement in a conspiracy was large. The Ninth Circuit has recognized that "the formulation of the 'complete involvement' defense reflects a somewhat uneasy balance between the compelling policy of enforcement of the antitrust laws and the natural desire of any court to recognize the equities as between parties." THI-Hawaii, Inc. v. First Commerce Fin. Corp., 627 F.2d 991, 995 \(9th Cir. 1980\). It is notable, however, that, while the courts who have adopted the complete involvement defense have struck the "enforcement/equities balance" in favor of equities, the Supreme Court in the holdings of Illinois Brick and Perma Life struck the balance in favor of enforcement.

In Illinois Brick, the Court conclude[d] that the legislative purpose in creating a group of private attorneys general to enforce the antitrust laws under § 4 [of the Clayton Act] is better served by holding direct purchasers to be injured to the full extent of the overcharge paid by them than by attempting to apportion the overcharge among all that may [\[\*\*49\]](#) have absorbed a part of it.

431 U.S. at 746 (citation and internal quotation marks omitted). Thus the Illinois Brick Court made the balancing decision to deny (some might argue inequitably<sup>18</sup>) injured indirect purchasers standing to recover while granting direct purchasers the windfall of the entire overcharge [\[\*383\]](#) in order to further efficient antitrust law enforcement.

In Perma Life, the Court believed that allowing the in pari delicto defense in an antitrust action would "threaten the effectiveness of the private action as a vital means for [\[\*\*50\]](#) enforcing . . . antitrust policy." 392 U.S. at 136. It noted that it had "often indicated the inappropriateness of invoking broad common-law barriers to relief where a private suit serves important public purposes." Id. at 138. It concluded that the plaintiff who reaps the reward of treble damages may be no less morally reprehensible than the defendant, but the law encourages his suit to further the overriding public policy in favor of competition. A more fastidious regard for the relative moral worth of the parties would only result in seriously undermining the usefulness of the private action as a bulwark of antitrust enforcement.

Id. at 139 (emphases added). Thus, the Court chose to allow the inequity of letting plaintiffs, though as "morally reprehensible" as defendants, sue in order to foster antitrust law enforcement.

We further point out that a rule prohibiting antitrust plaintiffs who were completely involved in a conspiracy to sue co-conspirators need not be absolute and could be crafted to maximize antitrust enforcement and cartel instability. For example, the law might allow the first, but only the first, [\[\*\*51\]](#) completely involved co-conspirator the right to sue its fellow coconspirators. This would give each co-conspirator incentive to be the first to defect from a cartel and enforce the antitrust laws because (1) each would want to be the one and only coconspirator to gain the right to recover treble damages and (2) each would be afraid that if it did not defect, another would, and it would then be liable for treble damages. Under such a rule, the incentive to defect and cartel instability would increase, and cartel breakdown and failure should become more common. Further, if potential co-conspirators knew their potential cartel had a decreased chance of succeeding, they would be less likely to form a cartel in the first place.

<sup>18</sup> See 2 Areeda et al., supra, P 346k, at 378 ("The obvious difficulty with denying damages for consumers buying from an intermediary is that they are injured, often more than the intermediary, who may also be injured but for whom the entire overcharge is a windfall. The indirect purchaser rule awards greatly overcompensate intermediaries and greatly undercompensate consumers in the name of efficiency in the administration of the antitrust laws.").

Regardless, as we will explain, it turns out that we need not resolve whether there is a complete involvement defense to antitrust actions in order to determine whether Plaintiffs come within a general co-conspirator exception.

3. Could Plaintiffs come within a general co-conspirator exception?

If there is a general co-conspirator exception, it would only apply if the middlemen were barred from bringing a claim against their former co-conspirator--the manufacturer--because [**52] their involvement in the conspiracy was "truly complete." However, in our case, Plaintiffs could not qualify for such an exception because the District Court concluded, and Plaintiffs have conceded, that the dealers' involvement in the alleged conspiracy with Dentsply was not "truly complete." The District Court concluded that there was "no way to construe the facts alleged such that the dental dealers could be considered 'substantially equal' participants in the alleged conspiracy . . . or that their participation was 'voluntary in any meaningful sense.'" Dist Ct. Mem. Op. at 20-21 (Dec. 19, 2001) (citation omitted). Further, Plaintiffs acknowledged in their brief that they "have not based any part of [their] appeal on any argument that the dealers' involvement was 'substantially equal' to Dentsply's." Appellants' Reply Br. at 23 n.16. Thus, Plaintiffs may not recover damages caused by the exclusive-dealing conspiracy under [*384] a general co-conspirator exception to Illinois Brick.

Conclusion

We thus hold that Plaintiffs may not recover damages in Hess (a) under the "co-conspirator" exception to Illinois Brick, (b) under the "control" exception to Illinois Brick, [**53] (c) under a non-overcharge theory of damages, or (d) for "drop shipments." In Jersey Dental, however, while Plaintiffs may not recover damages under the control exception or under a lost profits theory, they do have statutory standing under the co-conspirator exception to pursue an action for overcharge damages (including for drop shipped teeth) caused by the alleged retail price-fixing conspiracy, although not for the alleged exclusive-dealing conspiracy.<sup>19</sup>

[**54]

---

End of Document

---

<sup>19</sup> Plaintiffs also allege in Jersey Dental that--as to teeth Dentsply drop shipped to them--they were direct purchasers not subject to Illinois Brick. Further, the Jersey Dental complaint does not have the Hess complaint's defect, as it specifically alleges that Plaintiffs were direct purchasers. As we hold that the Jersey Dental Plaintiffs have standing to recover damages from Dentsply for its alleged price-fixing conspiracy with its dealers under the co-conspirator exception to Illinois Brick, Plaintiffs may potentially recover on the drop-shipped teeth under that theory.

Finally, as in Hess, Plaintiffs in Jersey Dental do not come within the control exception to Illinois Brick because, as already noted, Dentsply does not own any interest in its dealers, there is no functional unity among Dentsply and its dealers, and all of Illinois Brick's policy reasons for denying standing apply.

PSN III., Inc. v. Ivoclar Vivadent, Inc.

United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division

September 21, 2005, Decided ; September 21, 2005, Filed

No. 04 C 7232

Reporter

2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21044 *; 2005 WL 2347209

PSN ILLINOIS, INC., Plaintiff, v. IVOCLAR VIVADENT, INC.; DENTSPLY INTERNATIONAL, INC.; DEN-MAT CORPORATION; MICRO DENTAL LABORATORIES; NATIONAL DENTEX CORPORATION; and KNIGHT DENTAL STUDIO, INC., Defendants. IVOCLAR VIVADENT, INC., Counterclaimant and Third Party Plaintiff, v. PSN ILLINOIS, INC., Counterclaimant-defendant, and GERALD G. MCLAUGHLIN, Third-Party Defendant.

Subsequent History: Summary judgment denied by PSN III., Inc. v. Ivoclar Vivadent, Inc., 398 F. Supp. 2d 902, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23494 \(N.D. Ill., Oct. 10, 2005\)

Core Terms

---

counterclaim, unfair competition, patent, infringement, patent misuse, alleges, deceptive trade practices, motion to dismiss, filing of the lawsuit, marketplace, damages, lawsuit, argues, trade practice, instant case, customers, bad faith, litigation privilege, inequitable conduct, patent infringement, invalidity, porcelain, asserts, fails

LexisNexis® Headnotes

---

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > ... > Responses > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss

HN1[ Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim]

For the purposes of a motion to dismiss, the court accepts all well-pleaded allegations as true and draws all reasonable inferences in favor of the plaintiff.

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrsers & Objections > Motions to Dismiss > Failure to State Claim

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Rule Application & Interpretation

Civil Procedure > Dismissal > Involuntary Dismissals > Failure to State Claims

HN2[ Motions to Dismiss, Failure to State Claim]

In ruling on a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, the court considers whether relief is possible under any set of facts that could be established consistent with the allegations. A complaint should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless there is no doubt that the plaintiff cannot prove a set of facts that would entitle her to relief based on her claim. The purpose of a motion to dismiss is to test the sufficiency of the complaint, not to decide its merits.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Counterclaims > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Leave of Court

HN3 Pleadings, Counterclaims

See Fed . R. Civ. P. 15\(a\).

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Crossclaims > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Counterclaims > General Overview

HN4 Pleadings, Crossclaims

Pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 8\(c\), a counterclaim is clearly a pleading.

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > Leave of Court

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Amendment of Pleadings > General Overview

HN5 Amendment of Pleadings, Leave of Court

The decision to grant a Fed . R. Civ. P. 15\(a\) motion for leave to file an amended pleading is a matter purely within the sound discretion of the district court and shall be freely given when justice so requires.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Infringement Actions > Defenses > Misuse

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Counterclaims > General Overview

Patent Law > Remedies > Declaratory Judgments

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Intellectual Property > Misuse of Rights > Patent Misuse Defense

Civil Procedure > ... > Defenses, Demurrers & Objections > Affirmative Defenses > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Pleadings > Crossclaims > General Overview

Civil Procedure > ... > Declaratory Judgments > Federal Declaratory Judgments > General Overview

Civil Procedure > Remedies > Damages > Monetary Damages

Patent Law > Jurisdiction & Review > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Appeals

Patent Law > Remedies > General Overview

Patent Law > Remedies > Damages > General Overview

HN6 [] Defenses, Misuse

The United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit (Federal Circuit) has held that patent misuse cannot be brought as a claim for damages because it is an affirmative defense. The Federal Circuit has held that monetary damages may not be awarded under a declaratory judgment counterclaim based on patent misuse because patent misuse simply renders the patent unenforceable. In other words, the defense of patent misuse may not be converted to an affirmative claim for damages simply by restyling it as a declaratory judgment counterclaim. Other courts have dismissed counterclaims for patent misuse.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Effect of Inequitable Conduct

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Trade Dress Protection > General Overview

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Patent Law > ... > Inequitable Conduct > Effect, Materiality & Scienter > General Overview

Patent Law > Jurisdiction & Review > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Appeals

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Advertising > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Designation of Origin > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Designation of Origin > Elements of False Designation of Origin

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Lanham Act > General Overview

HN7 [] Inequitable Conduct, Effect of Inequitable Conduct

Section 43(a) (15 U.S.C.S. § 1125\(a\)) of the Lanham Act prohibits false designations of origin or false or misleading descriptions of goods or services that are likely to cause confusion. The United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit has held that obtaining a patent through inequitable conduct does not constitute a violation of 15 U.S.C.S. § 1125\(a\) and that the established remedy for inequitable conduct is unenforceability of the patent.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Patent Law > Jurisdiction & Review > Subject Matter Jurisdiction > Appeals

Patent Law > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Effect of Inequitable Conduct

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Unfair Competition > Federal Unfair Competition Law > General Overview

HN8 [] Inequitable Conduct, Anticompetitive Conduct

The United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit (Federal Circuit) has noted that there are adequate remedies to deal with inequitable conduct in the patent context when it is found. Resort to federal unfair competition law is not one of them. The Federal Circuit has held that the remedy under federal law available to a defendant who is made the subject of an infringement suit, when the defendant alleges that the suit is based on a patent procured through inequitable conduct in dealing with the United States Patent & Trademark Office, is the traditional remedy of having the patent adjudge unenforceable, or perhaps, in appropriate circumstances, holding the patentee liable for an antitrust violation.

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Effect of Inequitable Conduct

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Trade Dress Protection > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Defenses > Inequitable Conduct > Anticompetitive Conduct

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Advertising > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Designation of Origin > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Designation of Origin > Elements of False Designation of Origin

HN9 [] Inequitable Conduct, Effect of Inequitable Conduct

The United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit has held that false, marketplace statements of infringement, if made in bad faith, are damaging to competition and are not the type of statements protected by the patent laws and can be reached by section 43(a) (15 U.S.C.S. § 1125\(a\)) of the Lanham Act.

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > Trade Dress Protection > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Advertising > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Designation of Origin > General Overview

Business & Corporate Compliance > ... > Federal Unfair Competition Law > False Designation of Origin > Elements of False Designation of Origin

HN10 [] Patent Law, Infringement Actions

The United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit has noted that the initiation of an infringement suit is clearly not covered by the text of section 43(a) (15 U.S.C.S. § 1125\(a\)) of the Lanham Act, while a communication to the customers of the accused infringer, in certain circumstances, may be.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Torts > Intentional Torts > Malicious Prosecution > General Overview

**HN11** Regulated Practices, Trade Practices & Unfair Competition

Under Illinois law, the only causes of action that can arise from the wrongful filing of a lawsuit are malicious prosecution and abuse of process. Courts applying Illinois law have repeatedly dismissed unfair competition claims based on the allegedly improper use of litigation as a means of competition.

Torts > ... > Defenses > Privileges > Absolute Privileges

Torts > Vicarious Liability > Partners > General Overview

**HN12** Privileges, Absolute Privileges

The absolute litigation privilege affords immunity to attorneys (and other participants in the judicial process) from tort liability arising out of statements made in connection with litigation.

Evidence > Burdens of Proof > General Overview

Patent Law > US Patent & Trademark Office Proceedings > General Overview

Trademark Law > ... > Unfair Competition > Federal Unfair Competition Law > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

**HN13** Evidence, Burdens of Proof

Allegations that a defendant's conduct before the U.S. Patent & Trademark Office was intended to interfere with the plaintiff's expected business relationships with third parties is required to state a claim for unfair competition under Illinois common law.

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Scope

**HN14** Consumer Protection, Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices

The Illinois Uniform Deceptive Trade Practices Act, 815 Ill. Comp. Stat. 510/2, is violated when, in the course of his or her business, vocation, or occupation a person disparages the goods, services, or business of another by false or misleading representations of fact. 815 Ill. Comp. Stat. 510/2.

Antitrust & Trade Law > ... > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > State Regulation > Scope

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > Infringing Acts > Intent & Knowledge

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > General Overview

Antitrust & Trade Law > Consumer Protection > Deceptive & Unfair Trade Practices > State Regulation

Antitrust & Trade Law > Regulated Practices > Trade Practices & Unfair Competition > General Overview

Patent Law > Infringement Actions > General Overview

HN15 [+] Trade Practices & Unfair Competition, State Regulation

The United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois (Northern District of Illinois) has held that a bad faith assertion of patent infringement to a competitor's customer constitutes a violation of the Illinois Uniform Deceptive Trade Practices Act (Illinois Trade Practices Act), 815 Ill. Comp. Stat. 510/2. Importantly, however, this holding concerns a defendant's threats of infringement suits and statements to consumers, competitors, and others that the plaintiff is infringing, which are not statements made in the judicial or administrative process. The Northern District of Illinois has further held that bad faith assertions of patent infringement are intended to be actionable under the Illinois Trade Practices Act, but only based on marketplace statements to potential customers about the existence of a patent infringement lawsuit, not based on the filing of the lawsuit itself.

Counsel: [*1] For PSN Illinois, LLC, Plaintiff: Michael P. Mazza, John Michael Michalik, Lawrence E Thompson, Michael P. Mazza, LLC, Glen Ellyn, IL; David J. Fish, Robert L Dawidiuk, Shawn Michael Collins, Collins Law Firm P.C., Naperville, IL.

For Ivoclar Vivadent Inc, Defendant: Kenneth Paul Taube, Robin Korman Powers, Rothschild, Barry & Myers, P.C., Chicago, IL; Steven M Bauer, David J. Cerveny, Jeremy P. Oczeck, Proskauer Rose, LLP, Boston, MA; Craig J. Conte, Joseph M. Noto, Robert B. Calihan, Nixon Peabody LLP, Rochester, NY.

For Dentsply International, Inc., Defendant: Harvey Freedenberg, Carmen S Santa Maria, Shawn K Leppo, McNees Wallace & Nurick, LLC, Harrisburg, PA; Dean A. Monco, F. William McLaughlin, Wood, Phillips, VanSanteren, Hoffman & Ertel, Chicago, IL.

For Dental Arts Laboratory, Inc., Defendant: Alan L. Barry, Heather Ann Boice, Bell, Boyd & Lloyd LLC, Chicago, IL.

For Den-Mat Corporation, Defendant: Timothy J. Vezeau, Julie Phyllis Setren, Michael Adam Dorfman, Katten Muchin Zavis Rosenman, Chicago, IL; John W. Ryan, Mark M. Supko, Crowell & Moring LLP, Washington, DC.

For Micro Dental Labs, Defendant: Edward Anthony Mas, II, Robert Anthony Surrette, McAndrews, [*2] Held & Malloy, P.C., Chicago, IL; David J. Cerveny, Jeremy P. Oczeck, Steven M Bauer, Proskauer Rose, LLP, Boston, MA; John David Silk, Kenneth P. Taube, Robin Korman Powers, Rothschild, Barry & Myers, P.C., Chicago, IL; Mark S Freeman, Peter B Moores, Choate, Hall & Stewart, Boston, MA.

For National Dentex Corporation, Defendant: David M. Allen, Rachel T. Nguyen, Schuyler, Roche & Zwirner, Chicago, IL; Gary W Smith, Posternak Blanstein & Lund, LLP, Boston, MA.

For Knight Dental Studio, Defendant: John H Rains, William F. Russell, John H. Raines III, P.A., Tampa, FL; David J. Cerveny, Jeremy P. Oczeck, Steven M Bauer, Proskauer Rose, LLP, Boston, MA; Robert Stanley Beiser, Vedder, Price, Kaufman & Kammholz, P.C., Chicago, IL.

For Sentage Corporation, doing business as Dental Services Group, Defendant: Cole M. Fauver, Robins, Kaplan, Miller & Ciresi, Minneapolis, MN; Edward William Gleason, Thomas Bernard Keegan, Keegan, Laterza, Lofgren & Gleason P.C., Chicago, IL.

For Arrowhead Dental Laboratories Inc., Defendant: Mark M. Bettilyon, Rick B. Hoggard, Ray Quinney & Nebeker P.C., Salt Lake City, UT; Peter J. Meyer, Gardner Carton & Douglas LLP, Chicago, IL.

For [*3] Trident Dental Labs, Inc., Defendant: Michael J. Boxerman, Marcus, Perres & Boxerman, LLP, Chicago, IL.

For James R. Glidewell Dental Ceramics, Inc., doing business as Glidewell Laboratories, Counter Claimant: Bradford P. Lyerla, Rashmi Vibha Gupta, Marshall, Gerstein & Borun, Chicago, IL.

For Ivoclar Vivadent Inc, Counter Claimant: Kenneth Paul Taube, Robin Korman Powers, Rothschild, Barry & Myers, P.C., Chicago, IL; Robert B. Calihan, Nixon Peabody LLP, Rochester, NY.

For PSN Illinois, LLC, Counter Defendant: Michael P. Mazza, John Michael Michalik, Lawrence E Thompson, Michael P. Mazza, LLC, Glen Ellyn, IL.

For Pentron Laboratory Technologies, LLC, Counter Claimant: Edward J. Lesniak, Kristin Joan Lemmon, Burke, Warren, MacKay & Serritella, P.C., Chicago, IL; Barry Kramer, David J Silva, Edward & Angell LLP, Stamford, CT.

For Dentsply International, Inc., Counter Claimant: Harvey Freedenberg, Carmen S Santa Maria, Shawn K Leppo, McNees Wallace & Nurick, LLC, Harrisburg, PA; Dean A. Monco, F. William McLaughlin, Wood, Phillips, VanSanten, Hoffman & Ertel, Chicago, IL.

For Micro Dental Labs, Counter Claimant: Edward Anthony Mas, II, Robert Anthony Surrette, [*4] McAndrews, Held & Malloy, P.C., Chicago, IL; Mark S Freeman, Choate, Hall & Stewart, Boston, MA.

Judges: Judge Robert W. Gettleman.

Opinion by: Robert W. Gettleman

Opinion

---

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

Plaintiff PSN Illinois, Inc. ("PSN") filed a complaint against fourteen defendants <sup>1</sup> on November 10, 2004, alleging infringement of patent number 4,579,530 ("530 patent") entitled "Fabrication of Porcelain Restorations." The '530 patent claims methods for making dental porcelain veneers. On December 6, 2004, Ivoclar filed its answer and counterclaim against PSN seeking a declaratory judgment of patent invalidity. On June 9, 2005, PSN filed an amended complaint. On July 7, 2005, defendant Ivoclar Vivadent, Inc. ("Ivoclar") filed an answer to the amended complaint, including a two-count amended counterclaim against PSN and Dr. Gerald G. McLaughlin ("McLaughlin"), the named inventor of the '530 patent. Count I of the amended counterclaim seeks a declaration of noninfringement, invalidity, and unenforceability. Count II alleges patent misuse, unfair competition, and deceptive trade practices. PSN has moved pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\) to strike [*5] and dismiss Count II of Ivoclar's counterclaim and third party complaint against McLaughlin. For the reasons discussed below, the court denies in part and grants in part PSN's motion to strike and grants PSN's motion to dismiss.

FACTS

2

---

<sup>1</sup> Eight of the original defendants are no longer parties to the instant action.

The following is a brief recitation of facts necessary for the adjudication of PSN's motion to dismiss Count II of Ivoclar's counterclaim only.

PSN is an Illinois corporation, and the owner of the '530 patent, Ivoclar is a Delaware corporation [*6] that manufactures materials used to fabricate porcelain veneer restorations, including those sold under the "Empress" trade name. The '530 patent was issued April 1, 1986. Reexamination Certificate BI 4,579,530 was issued 11, 1989. The '530 patent expired November 21, 2004.

In its answer and amended counterclaim Ivoclar alleges on information and belief that the method of fabricating porcelain veneer restorations claimed in the '530 patent was developed in whole or in substantial part by Roger Sigler ("Sigler") and/or others associated with Myron's Dental Laboratories ("Myron's") in late 1982 or early 1983.

McLaughlin filed applications for the '530 patent with the United States Patent and Trademark Office ("PTO") on November 21, 1984, and the patent was issued on April 1, 1986. Ivoclar alleges on information and belief that McLaughlin knew at the time he filed the applications for the '530 patent that he was not the sole inventor of the porcelain veneer restorations, and that the method was being used commercially more than a year prior to the filing of his patent application, Ivoclar also alleges that on August 12, 1988, McLaughlin, as president of Yukiyo, Ltd. ("Yukiyo"), PSN's [*7] predecessor-in-interest and assignee of the '530 patent, filed a verified statement with the PTO falsely claiming small entity status.<sup>3</sup>

On October 11, 2004, PSN filed a certificate of correction with the PTO on behalf of McLaughlin seeking to correct claim 1 of the '530 patent. The PTO denied the request for a certificate of correction on December 2, 2004. On November 2, 2004, PSN acquired the entire right, title and interest in and to the '530 patent from McLaughlin and Yukiyo. On November 9, 2004, PSN filed its complaint in the instant action.

LEGAL STANDARD

HN2 In ruling on a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, the court considers "whether relief is possible under any set of facts that could be established consistent with the allegations." Bartholet v. Reishauer A.G., 953 F.2d 1073, 1078 (7th Cir. 1992). [*8] A complaint should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless there is no doubt that the plaintiff cannot prove a set of facts that would entitle her to relief based on her claim. Pressalite Corp. v. Matsushita Elec. Corp. of Am., 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5600, 2003 WL 1811530, at *2 (N.D.Ill. Apr. 4, 2003). The purpose of a motion to dismiss is to test the sufficiency of the complaint, not to decide its merits. See Gibson v. City of Chicago, 910 F.2d 1510, 1520 (7th Cir. 1990).

DISCUSSION

Ivoclar's amended counterclaim is asserted against PSN and McLaughlin, and seeks dismissal of PSN's claims, a declaration of non-infringement and patent invalidity, and damages. Count II of Ivoclar's amended counterclaim asserts a claim for "patent misuse, unfair competition, and deceptive trade practices." In addition to lumping three distinct causes of action into a single count. Count II does not reference a particular law or statute. PSN argues that Count II should be dismissed because patent misuse is an affirmative defense, not a counterclaim, and because Ivoclar has failed to state a claim for unfair competition or deceptive trade practices.

---

<sup>2</sup> HN1 For the purposes of a motion to dismiss, the court accepts all well-pleaded allegations as true and draws all reasonable inferences in favor of the plaintiff. Travel All Over the World, Inc. v. Kingdom of Saudi Arabia, 73 F.3d 1423, 1428 (7th Cir. 1996).

<sup>3</sup> For the purposes of charging reduced fees to patent holders, the PTO rules define a "small entity" as a small business concern, independent inventor, or non-profit organization. 37 C.F.R. § 1.9(f).

I. Motion [*9] to strike amended counterclaim and third party complaint

PSN asserts that under Fed. R. Civ. P. 15\(a\), Ivoclar was required to obtain leave to amend its counterclaim because PSN had filed a responsive pleading, its reply to Ivoclar's counterclaim, on December 20, 2004. Rule 15\(a\) provides, HN3[] "A party may amend the party's pleading once as a matter of course at any time before a responsive pleading is served.... Otherwise, a party may amend the party's pleading only by leave of court or by written consent of the adverse party; and leave shall be freely given when justice so requires." Ivoclar responds that leave was not required because Rule 15's reference to "pleadings" does not apply to a counterclaim.<sup>4</sup>

HN5[] The decision to grant a Rule 15\(a\) motion for leave to file an amended pleading is a matter "purely within the sound discretion of [*10] the district court" and shall be freely given when justice so requires. J.D. Marshall Int'l, Inc. v. Redstart, Inc., 935 F.2d 815, 819 (7th Cir. 1991); Fed. R. Civ. P. 15\(a\). PSN does not argue that it was prejudiced by the amended counterclaim or that it was made for an improper purpose. Accordingly, although the better practice would have been for Ivoclar to seek leave to file, the court grants Ivoclar leave to file its amended counterclaim instanter, and denies PSN's motion to strike the amended counterclaim.

PSN also argues that Ivoclar required leave under Rule 14 to add McLaughlin as a party to the lawsuit, and that his addition on July 7, 2005, was untimely because expert reports are due September 30, 2005. In addition, PSN asserts that McLaughlin is not a proper party because he is not the owner of the '530 patent, and that Ivoclar's claims against him for allegedly participating in the lawsuit, including by signing interrogatories and being designated as a witness, are frivolous.

In the instant case, Ivoclar refers to McLaughlin in the amended counterclaim as a "third party defendant," but in its response Ivoclar argues [*11] that Rule 14 does not apply because it seeks damages from McLaughlin for independent wrongs. Indeed, a proper third party complaint under Rule 14 would allege that if Ivoclar loses, McLaughlin is responsible for all or part of Ivoclar's liability to PSN. Because this is not what Ivoclar claims, McLaughlin cannot be added as a third party defendant. In addition, as discussed below, because Count II of the counterclaim (the only count alleging a claim against McLaughlin) fails to state a claim, the court dismisses McLaughlin from this action.

II. Patent misuse

HN6[] The Federal Circuit held in B. Braun Medical v. Abbott Lab., 124 F.3d 1419, 1427 (Fed. Cir. 1997), that patent misuse could not be brought as a claim for damages because it is an affirmative defense. The Braun court held that monetary damages may not be awarded under a declaratory judgment counterclaim based on patent misuse "because patent misuse simply renders the patent unenforceable.... In other words, the defense of patent misuse may not be converted to an affirmative claim for damages simply by restyling it as a declaratory judgement counterclaim." 124 F.3d at 1428. Other [*12] courts have relied on Braun to dismiss counterclaims for patent misuse. See, e.g., Bernhardt L.L.C. v. Collezione Europa USA, Inc., 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13832, 2002 WL 1602447, at *2 (M.D.N.C. July 3, 2002); see also, Depuy Inc. v. Zimmer Holdings, Inc., 343 F. Supp. 2d 675, 684 n. 4 ("patent misuse is an affirmative defense, not a counterclaim") (citing Braun).

In the instant case, as in Braun, Ivoclar's counterclaim repeats its affirmative defenses and seeks declaratory relief and damages, Ivoclar devotes one paragraph only in its response to its patent misuse counterclaim, and appears to concede that it is not viable. Accordingly, the court grants PSN's motion to dismiss Count II of Ivoclar's amended counterclaim to the extent that it attempts to state a claim for patent misuse.

III. Unfair competition

---

<sup>4</sup> Ivoclar is wrong. See, e.g., HN4[] Fed. R. Civ. P. 8\(c\). A counterclaim is clearly a pleading.

Count II of Ivoclar's amended counterclaim does not identify a statutory basis for its unfair competition claim, but Ivoclar clarifies in its response to the motion to dismiss that it brings the claim under § 43(a) of the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1125\(a\)\(1\), and under Illinois statutory and common law. Ivoclar's claims are based [*13] on: (1) PSN's lawsuits against Ivoclar and its customers, consumers of Ivoclar's Empress ingots; and (2) PSN's alleged misrepresentations to the PTO. PSN argues that neither the filing of a patent infringement lawsuit nor inequitable conduct before the PTO can form the basis of an unfair competition claim under any federal or state law. For the reasons stated below, the court agrees that Ivoclar has failed to state a claim for unfair competition.

HN7 [↑] Section 43\(a\) of the Lanham Act prohibits false designations of origin or false or misleading descriptions of goods or services that are likely to cause confusion. The Federal Circuit has held that obtaining a patent through inequitable conduct does not constitute a violation of § 43\(a\) and that "the established remedy for inequitable conduct is unenforceability of the patent." Pro-Mold and Tool Company, Inc. v. Great Lakes Plastics, Inc., 75 F.3d 1568, 1575 \(Fed. Cir. 1996\) (affirming dismissal of the defendant's counterclaim for unfair competition). As here, the defendant in Pro-Mold counterclaimed for unfair competition alleging that the plaintiff violated federal antitrust law by filing an infringement suit on a patent [*14] it knew was invalid. Id. at 1571. Specifically, the defendant in Pro-Mold alleged that the plaintiff's failure to disclose prior art and a joint inventor to the PTO constituted unfair competition. Id.

HN8 [↑] The Pro-Mold court noted that "there are adequate remedies to deal with inequitable conduct when it is found. Resort to federal unfair competition law is not one of them." Id. at 1575. The Federal Circuit affirmed this holding in Zenith Electronics Corp. v. Exzec, Inc., 182 F.3d 1340 \(Fed. Cir. 1999\). "Pro-Mold tells us that the remedy under federal law available to a defendant who is made the subject of an infringement suit, when the defendant alleges that the suit is based on a patent procured through inequitable conduct in dealing with the Patent Office, is the traditional remedy of having the patent adjudge unenforceable, or perhaps, in appropriate circumstances, holding the patentee liable for an antitrust violation." Id. at 1349. Pro-Mold and Zenith are on all fours with the instant case, and preclude Ivoclar federal unfair competition claim based on PSN's alleged misrepresentations to the [*15] PTO.

PSN argues that the filing of a lawsuit also cannot form the basis of a § 43\(a\) claim. Ivoclar responds that it alleges bad faith, and that HN9 [↑] the Federal Circuit held in Zenith that false, marketplace statements of infringement, "if made in bad faith, are damaging to competition and are not the type of statements protected by the patent laws... [and] can be reached by § 43\(a\)." Zenith, 182 F.3d at 1354. In the instant case, Ivoclar alleges that PSN filed lawsuits against Ivoclar's customers in an attempt to coerce settlement, collect damages, and interfere with Ivoclar's business even though PSN knew that the '530 patent was invalid. Ivoclar has thus alleged that PSN acted in bad faith by filing the lawsuits. Ivoclar does not, however, allege that PSN made any marketplace statements outside of the litigation context.

The Zenith court specifically distinguished the facts before it from those in Pro-Mold and another unfair competition case, Concrete Unlimited Inc. v. Cementcraft, Inc., 776 F.2d 1537 \(Fed. Cir. 1985\). Pro-Mold and Concrete Unlimited dealt with threats of and actual infringement suits. In contrast, Zenith [*16] dealt with marketplace misconduct, in which the counter-plaintiff alleged that the counter-defendant misrepresented the scope of its patent to the counter-plaintiff's potential customers, and falsely stated that the counter-plaintiff was infringing. The Zenith court noted, "The gravamen of [the defendant's] claim is marketplace misconduct, not abuse of the administrative and judicial process." 182 F.3d at 1349. HN10 [↑] The Zenith court also noted that "the initiation of an infringement suit is clearly not covered by the text of § 43\(a\), while a communication to the customers of the accused infringer, in certain circumstances, may be." Id.

In the instant case, the gravamen of Ivoclar's counterclaim is abuse of the judicial process, Ivoclar's response brief fails to acknowledge the Zenith court's distinction between litigation and marketplace statements, and does not address the fact that § 43\(a\) does not apply to the filing of a lawsuit. For example, Ivoclar cites Mitsubishi Electric Corp. v. IMS Technology, Inc., 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15350, 1997 WL 630187, at \*8 \(N.D.Ill. Sept. 30, 1997\), in which the court held that allegations of bad faith infringement letters, which [*17] are specifically limited by the Lanham Act, stated a federal claim of unfair competition. In the instant case, Ivoclar does not allege infringement letters or other marketplace conduct, nor does Ivoclar argue that the filing of a lawsuit is equivalent to a marketplace statement. Accordingly, Ivoclar has failed to allege a § 43\(a\) violation.

Ivoclar argues that it has sufficiently alleged a claim for unfair competition under the Illinois Consumer Fraud and Deceptive Trade Practices Act ("Trade Practices Act"), 815 ILCS 505/2, and Illinois common law. PSN argues that the filing of lawsuits cannot form the basis of an Illinois unfair competition claim, and that its statements in the course of litigation are protected by the litigation privilege.

HN11[] Under Illinois law, the only causes of action that can arise from the wrongful filing of a lawsuit are malicious prosecution and abuse of process. Havoco of America, Ltd. v. Holloway 702 F.2d 643, 646 (7th Cir. 1983). Courts applying Illinois law have repeatedly dismissed unfair competition claims based on the allegedly improper use of litigation as a means of competition. See, e.g., Knoll Pharmas. Co. v. Teva Pharmas. USA, Inc., 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12999, 2001 WL 1001117, [*18] at *2 (N.D.Ill. Aug. 24, 2001); WorldCom, Inc. v. Transcend Allegiance, Inc., 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2693, 1998 WL 111636, at *2 (N.D.Ill. Mar. 6, 1998); Harris Custom Builders, Inc. v. Hoffmeyer, 834 F. Supp. 256, 262 (N.D.Ill. 1993). In Doe v. Maywood Hous. Auth., 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13451, 1994 WL 521050, at *7 (N.D.Ill. Sept. 22, 1994), Judge Grady dismissed an unfair competition counterclaim and issued a rule to show cause against the lawyer who filed it, noting that "a reasonable prefiling inquiry into the law would have informed [the attorney] that his counterclaim in tort sounded in malicious prosecution, and that the tort of malicious prosecution required him to plead that the underlying case was terminated in his clients' favor." Ivoclar fails to cite an Illinois case in which an unfair competition claim was successfully based on the defendant's improper use of litigation as a means of competition.<sup>5</sup> [*19] PSN argues that even if litigation against customers of a competitor could form the basis of an unfair competition claim, any statements made during the course of litigation, including allegations of infringement, are protected by the litigation privilege. HN12[] The "absolute litigation privilege affords immunity to attorneys (and other participants in the judicial process) from tort liability arising out of statements made in connection with litigation." Steffes v. Stepan Co., 144 F.3d 1070, 1074 (7th Cir. 1998); see also, Wilton Partners III, LLC v. Gallagher, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21899, 2003 WL 22880834, at* 1 (N.D. Ill. Dec. 5, 2003) (absolute litigation privilege precludes claims based upon filing of an allegedly "baseless lawsuit" and serving a third party subpoena). Ivoclar does not address this issue. Ivoclar has failed, therefore, to state an Illinois claim for unfair competition based on PSN's filing of lawsuits.

Ivoclar also alleges that it has stated an Illinois unfair competition claim based on PSN's alleged misrepresentations to the PTO. Ivoclar fails, however, to HN13[] allege that PSN's conduct before the PTO was intended to interfere with Ivoclar's expected business relationships [*20] with third parties, as required to state a claim for unfair competition under Illinois common law. See Zenith Elecs. Corp. v. ExZec, Inc., 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6066, 1997 WL 223067, at *6 (N.D.Ill. Mar. 27, 1997) (elements of common law unfair competition claim).

Accordingly, the court grants PSN's motion to dismiss Count II of Ivoclar's amended counterclaim to the extent that it attempts to state an unfair competition claim under either state or federal law.

IV. Deceptive trade practices

Ivoclar clarifies in its response to the motion to dismiss that it brings its deceptive trade practices claim under the Illinois Uniform Deceptive Trade Practices Act ("Illinois Trade Practices Act"), 815 ILCS 510/2. HN14[] The Illinois Trade Practices Act is violated when, "in the course of his or her business, vocation, or occupation" a person "disparages the goods, services, or business of another by false or misleading representations of fact." 815 ILCS 510/2.

---

<sup>5</sup> Concrete Unlimited, 776 F.2d 1537 (Fed. Cir. 1985) and Dow Chemical Co. Exxon Corp., 139 F.3d 1470 (Fed. Cir. 1998), cited by Ivoclar in support of its argument that its state unfair competition claims are not preempted by federal law, addressed marketplace conduct only.

Ivoclar relies on *Mitsubishi, 1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15350, 1997 WL 630187 \(N.D. Ill. Sept. 30, 1997\)*, in support of its argument. HN15[] The Mitsubishi court held that a "bad faith assertion" of patent [*21] infringement to a competitor's customer constituted a violation of the Illinois Trade Practices Act. *1997 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15350, WL at \*7*. Importantly, however, as discussed above, the Mitsubishi court was concerned with the defendant's threats of infringement suits and statements to consumers, competitors, and others that the plaintiff was infringing; these were not statements made in the judicial or administrative process. Ivoclar also cites *Herman Miller, Inc. v. Teknion Furniture Sys., 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8585, 1996 WL 341541, at \*3 \(N.D.Ill. Jun. 20, 1996\)*, in which the court held that "bad faith assertions of patent infringement were intended to be actionable under the [Illinois Trade Practices Act]." The deceptive trade practices counterclaim in Herman Miller, however, was based on marketplace statements to potential customers about the existence of a patent infringement lawsuit, not the filing of the lawsuit itself.

In the instant case, Ivoclar does not allege that PSN made any disparaging comments outside of the litigation or administrative contexts. In fact, the only public statements that Ivoclar alleges PSN made regarding the Empress products is that they do not infringe, which clearly [*22] cannot be considered disparaging. Ivoclar fails, as it did regarding its unfair competition claim, to cite a single Illinois case in which a claim was successfully asserted on the ground that the filing of a lawsuit constituted a deceptive trade practice. Under Illinois law, as discussed above, alleged false statements of fact in judicial pleadings may form the basis of a malicious prosecution or abuse of process claim only. Ivoclar asserts neither type of claim. In addition, the litigation privilege also precludes Ivoclar's deceptive trade practices claim based on statements made in the course of litigation. Even if statements made in the administrative context could form the basis for a claim under the Illinois Trade Practices Act, Ivoclar fails to allege that PSN's misrepresentations to the PTO disparaged Ivoclar or its products in any way.

Accordingly, the court grants PSN's motion to dismiss Count II of Ivoclar's amended counterclaim to the extent that it attempts to state a claim under the Illinois Trade Practices Act.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, the court denies counter-defendant PSN's motion to strike Count II of the amended counterclaim, and dismisses McLaughlin [*23] from the action. The court grants PSN's motion to dismiss Count II of counter-plaintiff Ivoclar's amended counterclaim.

ENTER: September 21, 2005

Robert W. Gettleman

United States District Judge